NEW SOUTH WALES.

DEPARTMENT OF THE COLONIAL STOREKEEPER.
(RETURN IN REFERENCE TO.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be Printed, 15 January, 1861.

RETURN to an Order made by the Honorable the Legislative Assembly of New South Wales, dated 23 October, 1860, That there be laid upon the Table of this House,—

“ Copies of all Minutes, Reports, Letters, and all other Documents having reference to the Investigations which have lately taken place at the instance of the Government into the Department of the Colonial Storekeeper ; also, Copies of all Minutes and Decisions of the Executive Council in relation to the same subject.”

(Mr. A. Campbell.)

DEPARTMENT OF THE COLONIAL STOREKEEPER.

UNDER SECRETARY TO THE TREASURY to AUDITOR GENERAL, IMMIGRATION AGENT, AND REGISTRAR GENERAL.

The Treasury, New South Wales,
31 January, 1860.

GENTLEMEN,

The Government having reason to believe, from information they have received, that large quantities of stores on account of the Public Service have, at various times, been tendered for and supplied by Mr. Buchanan and the late Chief Clerk of the Colonial Storekeeper's Department, Mr. John Weston, under the assumed names of "James Staunton," and "Staunton & Co.," I am directed by the Treasurer to request that you will form yourselves into a Board of Inquiry, for the purpose of investigating all matters relating to the charges in question.

I am also to inform you, that, pending your Report, the Colonial Storekeeper is placed under suspension.

I have, &c.,
HENRY LANE,
Under Secretary.

UNDER SECRETARY TO THE TREASURY to COLONIAL STOREKEEPER.

The Treasury, New South Wales,
31 January, 1860.

SIR,

The Government having reason to believe, from information received, that large quantities of stores on account of the Public Service have, at various times, been tendered for and supplied by you and Mr. John Weston, under the assumed names of "James Staunton," and "Staunton & Co.," I am directed to acquaint you that the Treasurer has requested the undernamed officers to form themselves into a Board of Inquiry, for the purpose of investigating all matters relating to the charges in question, viz. :—

Auditor General,
Agent for Immigration,
Registrar General;

and that pending this investigation you are suspended from the office of Colonial Storekeeper.

I have, &c.,
HENRY LANE,
Under Secretary.

UNDER SECRETARY TO THE TREASURY to COLONIAL STOREKEEPER.

The Treasury, New South Wales,
2 February, 1860.

SIR,

In reply to your letter of yesterday's date, protesting against the nomination of the Auditor General as a Member of the Board appointed to investigate the charges brought against you, for the reason that his impartiality would be necessarily affected by the ill-feeling which, you state, exists between you, I am directed to inform you that the Honorable the Treasurer feels convinced, from his long knowledge of Captain Mayne, that he will conduct the inquiry in an impartial manner, and that no other feeling than a correct sense of the duty imposed upon him will influence his decision in the investigation.

I have, &c.,
HENRY LANE,
Under Secretary.

COLONIAL STOREKEEPER to COLONIAL TREASURER.

Sydney, 27 March, 1860.

SIR,

As you have had placed in your hands the Report of the Board who inquired into the charges brought against me, I beg to request you will afford me the opportunity of replying to, and commenting upon, the deductions and inferences they may have chosen to make; such opportunity to be allowed me previous to the Government's taking the matter into consideration, and finally giving a decision.

I ground this claim upon simple justice, but I am not without other pleas to advance in its support :—

1st. The grossly degrading and unwarrantable treatment—such in fact as is reserved for malefactors only—to which I was subjected by the late Treasurer, his advisers, and agents, preliminary to this inquiry, and before a scintilla of evidence had been taken to support a prima facie case.

2nd.

2nd. The active participation of this Board (or rather a majority) by act and deed, counsel and voice, in such unprecedented proceedings, thereby prejudging me, and leaving themselves no option but to take up the inquiry with a foregone determination to make out a case, were it only to shroud their own discreditable actings in the dust of my condemnation.

3rd. The Star Chamber method of prosecuting the inquiry—witnesses getting the Board's support in their refusals to answer questions addressed them on my behalf—whilst leading questions, questions as to belief, opinion, thoughts, and suspicions, were indulged in ad libitum by the Chairman, in defiance of protest to the contrary.

4th. At the last day's sitting, when the Board broke up, the question as to further proceedings was left still an open one—so great was the anxiety and intense the caution of the Chairman to hedge himself in a perfect forest of safeguards.

No intimation was made whether the charges were considered supported in whole or in part by evidence, nor was expression given to any desire to have aught that might be held dubious explained if possible. Clearly in a matter of this grave import to me, and to which the Government had cruelly given a significance and character which it is now palpable the information they possessed did not warrant, I was not called on to volunteer either evidence or statements (though I in fact did both), but rather to leave the charges to be proved by those behind the scenes who instigated them. And, moreover, as the Board's functions were the fourfold yet conjoint ones of judge, jury, prosecuting counsel, and detective in charge of case, I maintain that justice requires I should be allowed the privilege of my answer accompanying their conclusions, and of both being at one and the same time considered by the Court of last instance—the Government.

I have, &c.,
JNO. BUCHANAN,
C. S.

PROCEEDINGS of the Executive Council, on the 5th April, 1860, with respect to the Report of a Board appointed to inquire into certain alleged irregularities in the Department of the Colonial Storekeeper.

Minute No. 60-17. Confirmed, 16 April, 1860.

HIS Excellency the Governor General next lays before the Council the Report of a Board appointed to inquire into the following charges, which have been brought under the notice of the Honorable the Colonial Treasurer and the Government, viz. :—That large quantities of stores on account of the public service have, at various times, been tendered for and supplied by Mr. Buchanan, the Colonial Storekeeper, and Mr. Weston, the late Chief Clerk in his Department, under the assumed names of "James Staunton" and "James Staunton & Co."

2. The Board, which consisted of the Auditor General, the Immigration Agent, and the Registrar General, report that, unsatisfactory and inconclusive as is the evidence which they have taken in their inquiry, it has left no doubt in their minds that stores on account of the public service have, under the name of "James Staunton," been tendered for and supplied by Mr. J. Weston, while holding the office of Chief Clerk in the Colonial Storekeeper's Department; and that although it has failed to establish complicity or connivance on the part of Mr. Buchanan with those acts of Mr. Weston, yet that it has produced in their minds grave suspicions of such complicity or connivance on his part.

3. The Board state the grounds upon which they are led to this latter conclusion, and close their Report by drawing attention to the extremely loose and unsatisfactory practice which the evidence of some of the subordinate officers of the department shews to have been pursued with regard to—1st, the notification of the acceptance of tenders; 2nd, the proper record of receipts of stores from persons supplying them; and 3rd, the adoption of reliable means for checking accounts of stores supplied.

4. Apart from this special allusion to the want of proper supervision and arrangement, and without permitting their minds to be biassed by the Report of the Board in reference to those matters which at present give rise to suspicion only, the Council see ample reason to believe that the department generally is in a thoroughly disorganized state; and that there is full ground for questioning, at all events, Mr. Buchanan's efficiency in the management of his department. Convinced, therefore, of the necessity for further investigation, they advise that a full and searching inquiry be at once instituted into the general management of the business connected with the Colonial Store; and bearing in mind the lengthened period during which Mr. Buchanan has been in the public service, and the confidence which has hitherto been reposed to him, it is with much regret that they feel constrained further to advise that, pending the result of such investigation, Mr. Buchanan remain under suspense.

Acting Clerk of the Council.

PRESENT:—

The Auditor General. | The Immigration Agent.
The Registrar General.

The Board having met (Mr. Buchanan being present), their intention of examining Mr. Buchanan himself, in the first instance, being intimated to him, and he claiming to have the evidence of witnesses taken down literally, the Board, after consultation, decide on having the attendance of a Short-hand Writer, and adjourn their proceedings until Eleven o’clock, a.m., to-morrow, the 3rd instant.

W. C. MAYNE, Auditor General.
H. H. BROWNE, Immigration Agent.
CHRIS. ROLLESTON, Registrar General.

The desire of the Treasurer, conveyed in the letter hereto appended, marked A, having been communicated to the Board in Mr. Buchanan’s presence, and he being referred to for information as to where the document required was to be found, pointed out the press where it was deposited. The seals on that press having been broken by the Board, the Schedule of Tenders sought by the Treasurer, together with the two original tenders, was found therein, and enclosed by the Board to the Treasurer.

W. C. MAYNE, Auditor General.
H. H. BROWNE, Immigration Agent.
CHRIS. ROLLESTON, Registrar General.

The Treasury, New South Wales,
2 February, 1860.

My Dear Sir,

The Treasurer desires to see the Schedule of Tenders for the supply of the five hundred reams of paper (one hundred of which were obtained from Sands and Kenny), and begs that so soon as you have access to the store papers, and found the document referred to, you will, if the Board consent, forward it to him (at the Assembly) for inspection by himself and the Attorney General.

CAPTAIN MAYNE.

Most truly yours,

HENRY LANE.

P.S.—I enclose, for your perusal, the Treasurer’s Report of the case to the Governor General, and His Excellency’s Minute thereon.

H. L.

Please return the paper to-morrow.

Read at Board in Mr. Buchanan’s presence, 2nd February, 1860.

HENRY LANE, Esq.,

Sydney, 1 February, 1860.

Under Secretary, Treasury.

Sir,

Referring to your letter of this morning’s date, I beg to enter my protest against the Auditor General’s appearing as a Member of the Board of Inquiry to investigate the charges brought against me. The ill-feeling existing for a very long time past between us—the fact of which is notorious to many persons—leaves no question but that he cannot possess that essential attribute for his position—impartiality.

I have no objection to any other Officer in the Public Service filling his place.

I have, &c.,

JNO. BUCHANAN.

From my long knowledge of Captain Mayne, I am satisfied that he will conduct the Inquiry in an impartial manner, and no other feeling than a correct sense of the duty imposed upon him will influence his decision in the investigation.

AUDITOR GENERAL to UNDER SECRETARY TO THE TREASURY.

Audit Office, Sydney,

SIR,

I have the honor to forward herewith, for the information of the Honorable the Treasurer, the Report of the Board of Inquiry constituted to investigate charges affecting the Colonial Storekeeper; together with the Evidence taken by them.

I have, &c.,

W. C. MAYNE, A.G.

1860.

INQUIRY INTO THE CONDUCT OF THE COLONIAL STOREKEEPER'S DEPARTMENT.

REPORT.

THE Board appointed to investigate charges that large quantities of stores on account of the Public Service had, at various times, been tendered for and supplied by Mr. Buchanan and the late Chief Clerk of the Colonial Storekeeper's Department, Mr. John Weston, under the assumed names of "James Staunton" and "Staunton and Co," have taken, and have carefully considered the Evidence, which, with the several Appendices, is attached hereto. to pages 12.

2. Unsatisfactory, illogical, and inconclusive in much (even in parts contradictory), as that evidence is, it has left no doubt on the minds of the Board, that stores on account of the Public Service have, under the name of "James Staunton," been tendered for and supplied by Mr. John Weston, while holding the appointment of Chief Clerk in the Colonial Storekeeper's Department.

3. That Evidence, in the opinion of the Board, has not established complicity or connivance on the part of Mr. Buchanan with those acts of Mr. Weston; but it has produced in the minds of the Board grave suspicions of such complicity or connivance on his part.

4. Prominent among the grounds for those suspicions (grounds not removed or weakened by any evidence directly adduced, or by any elicited in cross-examination, on behalf of Mr. Buchanan) are—

1st. The resemblance in handwriting between the signatures "James Staunton," affixed to the tenders and accounts, and Mr. Buchanan's writing—a resemblance particularly observable in the Christian name. Comparison between the letters "a-m-e-s" in the word "names," in the fifth line of Mr. Buchanan's Minute on the note to him from the Under Secretary of the Treasury, with the same letters in "James" in those signatures, the Board consider strikingly to exhibit this. Appendix No. 2.

2nd. The refusal of Mr. Weston (on alleged grounds which were distinctly contradicted) to attend and give evidence, when it was obviously in his power—if he had written the signatures "James Staunton," affixed to the tenders and accounts, and shewing the resemblance referred to—to have proved that he did so, by writing in the presence of the Board that signature. Appendix No. 13.
Mr. E. Jones—
Further evidence

3rd. The calling for tenders in a way which was calculated to, and which actually did, deter leading members of the trade from competing to supply stationery. Appendix No. 14.
Mr. Sand's Evidence—Questions
to 232.

5. As regards the first of these grounds, the Board, while stating the suspicion produced (and abiding) in their own minds, consider it right to point attention to the uncertainty which must ever attach to conclusions based on resemblance of handwriting; since such resemblance in a fictitious signature may be the result of design (though in this particular case, what object could have been contemplated in introducing resemblance to Mr. Buchanan's writing is not apparent to the Board); and they feel bound to direct notice to the whole of that part of the Evidence which goes to raise an inference that the signature "James Staunton" may have been written by Mr. Weston, who would appear to have been practising writing that name. Mr. M'Nabb's
Evidence—32 to 35, 111 to 140.

Mr. A. Jones'
Evidence—Questions 134 and 135,
182 to 185, 298 to
297, 325 to 328.

6. The Evidence, the Board have to observe, is presented in the most disadvantageous and least satisfactory light possible; in parts, indeed, it is barely intelligible to any but those by whom it was given or taken;—this has resulted from the demand urged by Mr. Buchanan that the Evidence should be rendered verbatim; a demand with which, in the circumstances, and urged as it was, the Board deemed it expedient not to refuse compliance.

Evidence of
Mr. A. Campbell,
Mr. Garnett, Mr.
Jenkins.

7. Before concluding their Report, the Board would draw attention to the extremely loose and unsatisfactory practice which the Evidence shews has been pursued in the Department, with regard to notifications of the acceptance of tenders, to proper record of receipt of stores from persons supplying, and to adoption of reliable means for effective checking of accounts for stores supplied.

20 March, 1860.

W. C. MAYNE,
Auditor General.

H. H. BROWNE,
Immigration Agent.

CHRIS. ROLLESTON,
Registrar General.

My dear Buchanan,
 Before submitting this, allow me to ask why Sands and Co. will not supply the remaining 400 reams at the price tendered, 8½d., instead of 1s., as recommended by you.

Most truly yours,
 HENRY LANE.

They have not got it to offer. Mr. Sands tells me the price he names is less than English cost to us, and he gives it so low because he is desirous, I believe, to clear out his stock for the Victorian Government, whose contract he no longer holds.—J.B.

Sydney.

Sydney, 27 December, 1859.

Sir, We beg to state that we are willing to supply one hundred reams blue wove double foolscap—weight, 28 lbs. per ream—at the rate of eight-pence half-penny per lb. (8½d.), or nineteen shillings and ten-pence (19s. 10d.) per ream.
The six cases containing the above quantity, to be charged, in addition, ten shillings and sixpence (10s. 6d.) each.

We have forwarded a sample of the paper to the Colonial Storekeeper as required.

The Honorable the Colonial Treasurer.

We have, &c.,

The Colonial Storekeeper, Sydney.

Sir,

I beg to offer through you to the Government of New South Wales certain necessaries for light houses, as named at the other side, at the prices given against the items.

The whole of the articles are of the very first quality, having been imported from the best house in London, and suit the lights in New South Wales as well as in Victoria.

I likewise take the liberty of enclosing for your inspection several drawings of light apparatus upon a change of system differing somewhat from Fresnel's, and also one of the light that will shortly be exhibited upon Wilson's Promontory in this Colony, which you will perceive is by parabolic reflectors, the plan that no doubt will ultimately prevail.

I remain, &c.,

JAMES DONALD.

Declared before me, at Custom House,
Sydney, this 18th January, 1860.

W. CATHCART STILL,
Landing Surveyor.

J. H. MADDOCKS.

Sydney, 24 January, 1860.

Sir,
I have the honor to request permission to amend the manifest of my ship "Walter Hood," from London, as regards the following parcel of goods, which in the hurry of business was omitted at the time of reporting:—

O in diamond no over, 52/56—five (5) cases drapery.

I have the honor to remain, Sir,

Your obedient Servant,

JAMES DONALD.

To W. A. Duncan, Esq.,
Collector of H. M. Customs.
Manifest amended,
J. H. MADDOCKS.

Sydney, 21 January, 1860.

Sir,
I have the honor to request permission to amend the Manifest of the "Walter Wood," from London, under my command, for one Dog Cart, which was inadvertently omitted from the Manifest of the above ship, but without any intention of defrauding Her Majesty's Revenue.

I have the honor to remain, Sir,

Your obedient Servant,

JAMES DONALD, Master.

To W. A. Duncan, Esq.,
Collector of H. M. Customs.
Manifest amended,
J. H. MADDOCKS.

Custom House, Sydney,
10 February, 1860.

Sir,
I have the honor to request permission to amend the report of the "Walter Hood," under my command, for 180 Cart Boxes, which were omitted from the Manifest of the above ship, there being no Bill of Lading for the same, therefore there could be no intention of defrauding Her Majesty's Revenue.

I have the honor to remain, Sir,

Your obedient Servant,

JAMES DONALD, Master.

To W. A. Duncan, Esq.,
Collector of H. M. Customs.
J. H. MADDOCKS.

Sydney, 21 January, 1860.

Sir,
I have the honor to request permission to be allowed to discharge the "Walter Hood," from London, under my command, from 6 a.m. to 4 p.m., and also to be allowed to break out from 4 to 6 p.m., and I hereby guarantee to pay the usual expenses incident to such an indulgence.

I have the honor to remain, Sir,

Your obedient Servant,

JAMES DONALD, Master.

To the Collector of
H. M. Customs.
Allowed,—W. A. D.

Sydney, 30 January, 1860.

Sir,
I have the honor to request permission to extend the hours of discharge of my ship "Walter Hood" until 6 p.m., as the cargo now remaining on board consists almost entirely of dead weight. I hereby guarantee the payment of all customary charges for such indulgence, and am, Sir,

Your obedient Servant,

JAMES DONALD.

To W. A. Duncan, Esq.,
Allowed,—W. A. D.

Custom House, Sydney,
2 February, 1860.

Port of Sydney.

Sir,
I have the honor to request permission to be allowed to take on board ballast to stiffen the "Walter Hood," before her inward cargo is discharged, otherwise the discharge would be stopped from the cause of the ship not being able to stand upright without such ballast.

I have the honor to remain, Sir,

Your obedient Servant,

JAMES DONALD.

To W. A. Duncan, Esq.,
Collector of H. M. Customs.
Allowed,—WM. LEWELLIN, pro Collector.
No objection,—S. M. M.

No. 11.

*The Treasury, New South Wales,
26th February, 1859.*

TENDERS FOR CHINA (OR TEIL-NUT) OIL.

NOTICE is hereby given, that Tenders will be received at this Office till noon of Tuesday, the 8th March next, from persons willing to provide and deliver into the Government Store—

5,000 gallons China (or Teil-nut) oil.

Offers to be marked on the cover "Tender for Oil;" and none will be entertained for quantities less than 500 gallons.

No separate charge will be allowed for packages; their cost must be blended with the price asked for the oil.

Plain mention must be made of the time within which it will be engaged to deliver the supply tendered for.

If possible, a sample not less than two gallons of the same oil which it is proposed to supply, should be left at the Colonial Store.

If a sample cannot be so left beforehand, it is to be understood in the event of a contract being entered into, that the oil will be subject to the test of actual burning at the Light-houses, and in every case be accepted only upon that trial proving satisfactory.

At the option of the Government, security for the due execution of the contract will be taken to the full amount of the Tender or Tenders accepted.

Rt. CAMPBELL.

SCHEDULE of TENDERS received in pursuance of Notice dated 25th February, 1859, published in the Government Gazette and opened in the presence of the undersigned, for supplying CHINA (or Teil-Nut) Oil, required for the Public Service:—

| DESCRIPTION AND QUANTITY REQUIRED. | NAME OF TENDERER. | QUANTITY OFFERED. | RATE PER GALLON. | REMARKS. |
| Oil, China (or Teil-Nut) 5,000 gallons. | William Harbottle | Gallons. 5,000 | 5s. 9d. | 2,500 gallons to be at once delivered, the remainder at any time within 12 months at option, or when required for the Public Service. |
| | Griffiths, Fanning & Co. | 2,000 | 5s. 6d. | Ex "Atalanta." |
| | James Wilson | 1,000 | 6s. 1½d. | Deliverable within 3 weeks. |

Sydney, 8 March, 1859.

The Tender of Mr. WILLIAM HARBOTTLE, for the supply of 2,500 gallons, deliverable at once, is recommended to be accepted.

The Tender of GRIFFITHS, FANNING, & Co. is likewise recommended for acceptance, being the lowest.

JNO. BUCHANAN.
HENRY LANE.

Approved,—
CHARLES COWPER.
9 March.

In all, three tenders. No. 1.—3 March, 1859.—J. B. H. L.

*Oil and Color Stores, next the Post Office,
Sydney, 8 March, 1859.*

Sir,

In accordance with Treasury Notice of 26th ult., I hereby tender to supply the Government with 5,000 gallons China (or Teil Nut) Oil, at 5s. 9d. per gallon, of which about one-half, say 2,500 gallons, can be at once delivered as per sample sent to the Colonial Stores, which is without exception the finest sample ever imported into the Colony; the residue to be delivered any time within twelve months at the option of the undersigned, or when required for the Public Service.

In the event of this tender being accepted, it would be deemed a favor to be allowed to substitute Colza Oil (a more expensive article) at the same price, should the China or Teil Nut Oil not be obtainable by the contractor.

The Honorable
The Colonial Treasurer.

I remain, Sir,
Your obedient servant,
WM. HARBOTTLE.

No. 2.—8 March, 1859.—J. B. H. L.

Sydney, March 2, 1859.

Sir,

In reply to the notice issued in yesterday's number of the Gazette, we tender to supply the undermentioned quantity of China Oil, ex "Atalanta," viz:—

200 (two hundred cases) or, such portion as may be landed in merchantable condition; and in the event of the whole being so landed, containing say, (2,000) two thousand gallons in all.

The price at the rate of 5s. 6d. per gallon, which includes all charge for delivery.

To the Honorable
The Colonial Treasurer.

We have the honor to be, Sir,
Your most obedient servant,
GRIFFITHS, FANNING, & CO.

Tender to supply, say, two thousand gallons China Oil, at the price of five shillings and sixpence per gallon.

No. 3.—8 March, 1859.—J. B. H. L.

TENDER FOR CHINA OIL.

Sydney, March 8, 1859.

I do hereby tender to supply the undermentioned articles, upon the terms expressed in the Treasury Notice, dated 26 February, and to deliver the same into the Government Store within three weeks after receipt of notification of the acceptance of this offer. Except where otherwise expressed, the stores to correspond in pattern and quality with the samples on view at the Colonial Store: As witness my hand, this eighth day of March, 1859.

In all, three Tenders. No. 1. 10 Jan., 1860.—J. B. H. L.

TERMS AND CONDITIONS of the Contract proposed to be entered into by STAUNTON AND Co., for the supply of Paper, &c., in such quantities as may be ordered for the Public Service by the Colonial Storekeeper, from time to time, during the period from 10 January, to 31 March, 1860. (vide Advertisement in the Government Gazette, dated the Treasury, Sydney, 31 December, 1859.)

- I. The Contract to commence on the 10th January, and to continue until the 31st March, 1860.
- II. The Contractor to supply the articles specified in the accompanying Schedule, at the prices affixed by him against the respective items, in the proportion ordered from him, and within such time as may be allowed for the completion of the order.
- III. The articles must be equal in every respect to the patterns or samples deposited in the Colonial Store, and in cases where articles are required of which patterns or samples may not have been so deposited, such articles to be of a thoroughly good and serviceable quality, and subject to special approval.
- IV. All articles must be delivered at the Government Store at the expense of the Contractor, and it is to be clearly understood, that an inspection will be there made, and if the supplies be held by the Storekeeper to be inferior, defective in quality, different from pattern, or otherwise objectionable, he is to be entitled forthwith to reject the same, without the Contractor being entitled to object to, or appeal from such decision, to any party or quarter whatever; and articles so rejected are to be removed within three days after the Contractor is required so to do, without any allowance being made to him for such rejected articles.
- V.

- V. If the Contractor neglect or refuse to supply the articles contracted for, or fail to deliver the quantities ordered within the time specified, the Storekeeper is to have power to purchase in any way he may think best, a supply of similar articles to meet the deficiency, and to charge the Contractor with the excess of price, if there be any, that may have been paid for such articles, over and above the price fixed in the Contract; such excess to be either stopped or abated from any money payable to the Contractor under this or any other Contract, or it may be demanded of him to be paid within fourteen days to the Colonial Storekeeper, and in default of payment shall be recoverable with costs of suit.
- VI. A repetition of the neglect or irregularity referred to in clause V., to confer the right on the Government of instantly terminating the Contract, upon giving notice to that effect.
- VII. In the event of any article of a description not to be purchased in the market being supplied by a Contractor and found inferior to sample, the Storekeeper may accept the same, provided the Contractor make such an abatement from the contract price as the Storekeeper may think equivalent to the difference between the value of the sample and that of the supply delivered.
- VIII. It is also to be understood, that all and every sum of money, which may be at any time payable by the Contractor under this Contract, shall not be deemed or considered by way of penalty, but be considered as stipulated or ascertained damages, and shall be paid whether any damage shall or shall not have been sustained by Her Majesty or by the Public Service.
- IX. Payment on account of supplies delivered, to be made either monthly or quarterly, at the option of the Storekeeper, after invoices have been rendered in a complete state by the Contractor.
- X. The Contractor if so required, to bring forward either one or two sufficient sureties (as may be held sufficient) to enter into a Bond with him, to the amount of £
- XI. The Contract to be declared void, at the option of Her Majesty's Government, should the Contractor, or any person employed by him pay, or offer to pay, a gratuity, or reward, to any person under the employ of the Government, for anything to be done by such person concerning the execution of the Contract.

TENDER.

We, the undersigned, do hereby agree and bind ourselves to provide, and deliver into the Colonial Store the articles enumerated in the list or Schedule hereunto annexed, signed by us, and to which we have affixed prices; and do hereby agree to abide by and fulfil the terms and conditions above-mentioned.

Dated the Ninth day of January, 1860.

NEW SOUTH WALES.

MINUTES OF EVIDENCE.

FRIDAY, 3 FEBRUARY, 1860.

Present:—

WILLIAM COLBURN MAYNE, Esq., IN THE CHAIR.

Mr. H. H. BROWNE,

Mr. C. ROLLESTON.

Mr. Robert Palmer Abbott was present to conduct the case for the Colonial Storekeeper, on the application of Mr. Buchanan, and with the consent of the Board.

Mr. John Buchanan called in and examined:—

1. By the Chairman: Mr. Buchanan, this Board is appointed in consequence of the Government having reason to believe, from information they have received, that large quantities of stores on account of the public service have at various times been tendered for and supplied by Mr. Buchanan and the late chief clerk of the Colonial Storekeeper's Department, Mr. John Weston, under the assumed names of James Staunton and Staunton and Co. You are the Colonial Storekeeper? I am the Colonial Storekeeper.
2. And have held that appointment from what date? Several years; I think it was in 1845; I forget the exact date.
3. Will you state to the Board the regular and usual course under which supplies on account of the public service are obtained from Home or on the spot? From Home by indents on England; on the spot by tender and contract.
4. Those indents prepared by whom? In some cases by myself; in other cases by the various departments.
5. And by whom forwarded to the contractors at Home? The Treasury generally.
6. How are the quantities to be included in these indents arrived at—by whom are they decided? So far as concerns myself it is generally left to myself optional what quantity shall be included: that must be judged of by the probable want of the service and the capacity of the stores to contain them.
7. And on the spot you say by notices calling for tenders? By public notices calling for tenders, published in the Government Gazette and in the newspapers.
8. And those tenders are how dealt with? Opened at the Treasury.
9. By a Board? By a Board.
10. Are you a member of that Board? Yes; and the Secretary to the Treasury is the other member.
11. Are bonds generally taken in the case of contracts? Not as a rule; never in cases of supplies being delivered immediately; occasionally in time contracts they are.
12. When a decision is arrived at as to the tender to be accepted, how is communication made with the tenderer? Usually by a formal notice; occasionally by a formal notice apprising him of the fact, or by an order sent for the goods.
13. Do you mean a public notice or a written one? A mere written memorandum, I may term it, apprising him of the fact that his tender is accepted.
14. Do the tenderers give you an address to enable you to send them notice? Occasionally.
15. In cases where they do not, how is it done? Very frequently the Post Office is given as an address.
16. The Post Office? Yes.
17. Will you state to the Board what is the course pursued with reference the receipt of the supplies thus contracted for? They are delivered at the store upon the order sent for them.
18. Who takes delivery of the goods? The person in charge of the stores,—the foreman of the storehouse.
19. And who signs the receipt? He usually signs the drayman's receipt; in fact, always, I imagine.

Mr. John
Buchanan.

Mr. John
Buchanan.
3 Feb., 1860.

20. And is that the receipt to the contractor? That is not an official receipt, because the stores may be subsequently rejected. It is a mere acknowledgment of a load having been delivered.
21. Without any knowledge of what the goods are? No, he has a full knowledge, but it does not express approval of the quality.
22. Are the packages opened? They may be delivered in packages, or loose. In the case of packages, they are subsequently opened.
23. I am confining myself to the receipt of the drayman: the foreman of the stores gives a receipt for certain packages; or, if opened, for the goods? That is the course.
24. Who gives the official receipt? The official receipt?—The stores are, subsequent to delivery, inspected, and any defects, if there be such, are brought to my knowledge.
25. And by whom are they inspected? In the first instance, by the foreman of the stores, who looks over them, and if he detects any defects, or divergencies from pattern or sample, it is brought to my knowledge, and then I look at the goods personally.
26. If the foreman of the stores does not bring any matter under your notice? By no means,—I occasionally look at them under any circumstances.
27. But as a general rule? Not as an invariable rule.
28. I wish to have the whole practice fully before the Board. But in any case where the foreman sees it necessary to bring goods under your notice, you then yourself inspect? Certainly.
29. Is there any person who acts with you? No.
30. You act alone? Yes. By the by, I may as well state that the conditions of contract provide that my inspection shall be the final one.
31. Without any reference or appeal? Without any reference or appeal.
32. Have you generally any intercourse with the contractors or the agents of contractors in these matters? Very rarely so. It is an object I have always specially avoided.
33. Has the foreman of the stores come personally in contact with either the contractors or their agents? He seldom or never saw a contractor's face in this building, under any circumstances whatever. It is his servants who are generally present here.
34. Does the foreman of stores make a formal entry of goods received? He keeps a record of the matter.
35. But does that record shew the marks of the packages? No, I do not imagine that it does. It is confined, I imagine, merely to the description of the items. The marks on the packages are of no moment.
36. Who is the present foreman of stores? David Moores. He has been so for this last two months.
37. And who was previously? Mr. Jenkins.
38. How long did Mr. Jenkins hold the office? I cannot charge my memory with that; but for some three or four years.
39. Can you recall to mind who was foreman of stores at the end of 1857, and the beginning of 1858? Mr. Jenkins.
40. Mr. Jenkins? Yes.
41. In June 1858, was Mr. Jenkins there? Yes, I have no doubt he was.
42. Have you in your possession a schedule of tender, and the original tender by James Staunton to supply certain articles of clothing which I find set forth in an account of July 1858? (Appendix B.) I have no doubt it is among the rest of those schedules which are in that press. (Documents produced from press.) Those are the schedules, (handing them to the Chairman. Appendix No. 1.) and with them the original tenders in each case complete.
43. The goods tendered for under this tender were supplied? Certainly, or they would never have been paid for.
44. To whom was the notice addressed of the acceptance of this tender? To the tenderer, I presume.
45. And in what way? In the ordinary way, by printed notice.
46. Is there any record of it? None whatever.
47. Or how was it addressed? No.
48. Who is the clerk to discharge this duty? Indiscriminately.
49. And you are not in a position to inform the Board by which of the clerks the notice was addressed? No, certainly not.
50. Does not one more generally than another address these tender notices? The tenders—the schedules were prepared by the senior clerk, and it is left with him to take the steps.
51. Who was the senior clerk? Mr. Weston.
52. Are you in a position to afford the Board any information as to who the successful tenderer in this instance was? That is shewn in the schedule.
53. As to his personal identity? No.
54. Have you ever seen James Staunton? I have not.
55. Have you ever had any communication with him in writing? None whatever.
56. Or message through any Officer in your department? None whatever. As a rule, I am ignorant of the persons—of half the contractors who deal with this department; and still, further, as I have already repeated, the contractors, personally, seldom or never appear in this place.
57. How was payment made for those goods to James Staunton? By cheque, I presume—yes, certainly.
58. And by whom was that cheque paid? Mr. Weston, in whose hands all payments rested. I never, by any chance, made a payment to any person. Invariably, and without any exception whatever, I never made a payment in this department or drew a cheque. When in

in opposition to me, and in defiance of my protest, the Government insisted in trusting public moneys, and sending them here to be paid, they coupled it with an instruction that there was to be one Officer in the department in whose hands the cheque-book was to be placed, and who should draw cheques, and that regulation I strictly and literally followed out.

Mr. John
Buchanan.

3 Feb, 1860.

59. Then you are not in a position to afford the Board any information as to how the cheque was disposed of? I cannot say in that individual case how the cheque was disposed of; I may tell them generally, but how, in any particular case, I cannot undertake to say; I know the general practice, which can of course be verified by an appeal to persons in town. When we get the accounts from contractors, to suit their convenience the accounts are examined; when it is convenient to pay it, or convenient to themselves, the cheques are sent round.

60. Sent by whom? By a messenger.

61. Who is the messenger generally employed? The messenger for the time being. That of course is fluctuating, as I have no special messenger attached to this department.

62. What receipt does the messenger bring back? The document or voucher—the Government voucher. That is the general rule, but there are exceptions to that practice.

63. Then do I understand this to be the course: that after you have signed the cheque you leave it in the chief clerk's possession? I leave it in his possession. He is the paymaster.

64. Then he gives it to the messenger to take round to the persons to whom payment is to be made? That is the usual course.

65. Taking with him, I conclude, the——? The Government document. That is the general practice.

66. And gets to that Government document the receipt of the person to whom he hands the cheque? Yes.

67. Then can you inform the Board who was the messenger of the department about this time? Certainly not. As I have already told you this department is not allowed a permanent messenger.

68. Will you give to the Board the names of the men who have acted as messengers during the last three years? A man of the name of Short at the present moment is acting; another of the name of Gleeson was acting, and has left the department. I cannot charge my memory with others. Other men may have been employed. I cannot say whether they have or have not.

69. In reference to this particular account (Appendix B.) that I have been examining, I observe the witness is John Weston? Yes.

70. If the cheque for this had been sent by a messenger would Mr. Weston have been a witness? I do not know whether Mr. Weston invariably signed those vouchers; the fact of his having handed over the cheque, that is, we know, usually looked upon as formality more than absolute need.

71. You are aware that he can neither be the witness of the signature, nor the payment, if it is done in the way you have detailed to the Board? That, I can only explain is the usual course. It is the simplest thing in the world to get a witness to any payment of the Government, and it was probably considered more satisfactory to have the paymaster's name to that signature than that of a man who possibly would be unable to write at all.

72. But following the course you have detailed to the Board, he really is not a witness in any such cases to the signature when payment is made? I cannot exactly explain that, I have no doubt the absolute payment is a fact. As to who witnessed it, I dare say it has been treated as a matter of not very great moment.

73. Then you cannot in this instance state whether Mr. Weston was himself the payer of this cheque? Certainly I cannot.

74. I think you stated that you were not aware that you had ever seen James Staunton? I do not say "I am not aware," but I "know" I have not.

75. You have never seen James Staunton? I have not.

76. You have never seen any person write the signature of James Staunton? No, I never see the signatures of any of the contractors written.

77. These vouchers, I observe, are signed by yourself and Mr. Jenkins? Yes.

78. And the signature to the certificate? That is the preparatory step to a cheque being drawn. I sign when I am satisfied of the quality. I do not always check the numbers, because that would be a troublesome operation; but when I am satisfied of the quality, and the foreman of the stores signs respecting the quantity, I sign, on the faith of his having accurately counted them, and the cheque is then at full liberty to be drawn.

79. And then, after the acquittances have been signed, into whose possession do they come? Mr. Weston's, until he forwards them, monthly, to the Audit Office.

80. Do you ever see them again? I doubt it; I may, by chance, but not as a rule.

81. The same questions, and the same answers, I suppose, would apply as regards the particular vouchers I have before me here, (Appendices W. X. Y.) all in the names of James Staunton, and all witnessed by John Weston: the answers given as regards the first apply equally to these—that in none of those instances have you seen James Staunton write, and that you know nothing further than you have stated with reference to the first? I know nothing beyond it.

82. I have here, dated 23rd December, 1859, an account (Appendix U.) amounting to £338 6s, for goods supplied by Staunton and Co.: is the Tender applying to this account forthcoming? I think you took it away yesterday.

83. The one taken away yesterday was with reference to stationery? What is that?

84. Double foolscap, 251 reams? That is the tender you took away yesterday. (Appendix No. 2.)

85. That is a tender of Staunton and Co.: of that firm did you, at the time of the tender, or do you now, possess any knowledge? Oh! yes, I know who it is quite well.

86.

Mr. John
Buchanan.

3 Feb., 1860.

86. Will you state it to the Board? That is Mr. John Weston.
87. Was Mr. Weston at that date an officer of the department? No.
88. How long had he ceased to be? Two months, or a month.
89. He had, then, a month ceased to be an officer of the department? Yes.
90. Is that the same Mr. John Weston whose name appears as a witness to the several payments we have been referring to? Undoubtedly; there is but one.
91. At the time the tender was put in, were you aware that Mr. Weston was the tenderer? I was subsequently.
92. I ask you—"at the time"? No.
93. When did you become aware of the fact? Either the same or the following day.
94. Of the tender being—? Being his.
95. Do you mean the same or the following day of the tender being accepted? Being delivered at the Treasury, or rather—being opened at the Treasury.
96. Will you state to the Board how that fact came to your knowledge? He himself acquainted me with the fact.
97. That he was Staunton & Co.? He made a point to call and know the result of his tender.
98. Did he then state who his partner was? He did not.
99. Did he give you any information connected with the——? Yes, he told me distinctly it was his intention to tender for anything and everything the Government might require.
100. Did he when leaving the department, give any reason for retiring from the Public Service? Indirectly he gave me reason to suppose that that was his object then.
101. That he proposed to go into business? Yes.
102. Did he then give you any intimation as to the name of the firm? No, he did not.
103. And at the time he made you aware that he was representing the firm of Staunton and Co., and in fact was one of the firm, did he in any way connect it with the previous tenders? In no way whatever.
104. He made no allusion to them? Never, in any shape.
105. Never explained who Staunton was? No: who Staunton was, in the multiplicity of tenders that came before me, or who any particular individual was—was not a matter which troubled my memory. My effort has been to see that I get the stores properly delivered, and get them of good quality. I vouch for those facts.
106. But he did not, in explaining to you what was his then position, and what he was about to do—allude in any way to previous transactions? In no way whatever. In fact, as far as tenders are concerned, it is by no means an unusual occurrence in this department to see fictitious tenders sent in—tenders without date—tenders without name even, and tenders with reference to which my suspicions are often excited as to the makers of them.
107. Do you in these cases take any steps? By no means; my duty I think is, to obtain stores of good quality and proper quantity, and not to pursue those suspicions.
108. But if any suspicious circumstance occurred? I should pursue it.
109. Would you bring it to the knowledge of the Secretary to the Treasury, who forms part of the Board with you? If it were of that aggravated nature that I thought it necessary to do so. We all know, at least I know, that there have been stores supplied for the Public Departments—articles supplied for the Public Departments by gentlemen holding positions in the Legislative Assembly, and that those accounts have passed the Audit Office unquestioned.
110. The name appearing as——? The name even appearing as such.
111. As a Member of the Legislative Assembly? Yes.
112. On the account? Yes.
113. As a Member? Not as a Member of the Legislative Assembly of course; but the notice of the Audit Office must be attracted to that fact as well as my own. I made the payment and the Audit Office has passed it.
114. And under contract? I did not make the arrangement myself, therefore I cannot say. I was the medium of payment, not the person who made the contract.
115. But if it was a contract you would not have seen the tender? No, not by any means. You will be aware that there are purchases made for the Public Service of which I am the mere means of making payment, I have nothing to do with the goods, I never see them; the bills come to me for payment, and I pay them on the certificate of the party to whom they are supplied and who receives them; that might be classed as a suspicious circumstance, but it is one which I should not think of pursuing nor would pursue. I have no doubt the goods were supplied honestly and fairly—I have not the least question. I do not intend to impute anything else, but I say, the fact of their being supplied is a suspicious circumstance, quite as suspicious as that I do not know some unknown person who supplies goods. I only look to his articles to see that they are of good quality, that a sufficient quantity is delivered, and that no more than are delivered are paid for; the source whence they are derived is a matter of the most secondary importance.
116. Mr. Weston then, in apprising you that he was Staunton and Co.—did he convey to you that there was a person of the name of Staunton,—that there was an actual firm of the name of Staunton and Co.; or, that he was merely carrying on himself, individually, under the assumed name? As well as I recollect, his exact words were that that was his trade name.
117. That that was his trade name? That that was his trade name. When leaving my department, as I already said, he intimated to me that it was his intention—that he saw the possibility of doing some good for himself, by taking to that mode of life which no one has yet taken up, that is—a special contractor for the Government; there is no one here in these Colonies yet that has taken to that particular trade; it is well known to exist in London,—there is a certain class of people there who invariably do it, but that class does not exist here.

118. If you had any reason to suppose that an officer of your own department was the tenderer and supplier of goods, would you consider that a fact and circumstance which it was your duty to — ? Certainly, I should reprehend and prevent it.

Mr. John
Buchanan.

119. And would you consider it your duty to bring it under the notice of the authorities? I have no doubt I should do it. 3 Feb., 1860.

120. And no circumstance ever attracted your attention, nor—I collect from what you have stated—was it in any way within your knowledge that Mr. Weston, while an officer of the department, did supply, under the name of Staunton, any goods? It did not come under my knowledge.

121. Or under any other name? Or under any other name.

122. Can you state to the Board whether, during the period Staunton did supply goods on the public account, he did so to a large or a small extent? Perhaps large in amount, though not spread over any length of time. The transactions were few, as well as my memory serves me.

123. Can you recal when James Staunton first became a contractor? I cannot.

124. Do you remember the exact date of Mr. Weston's resignation? It was about a month previously to this tender. I may add, perhaps, that it had been his desire to resign for some time previous even to that; but, as he was, undoubtedly, the best accountant in the public service—a man extremely efficient—thoroughly acquainted with his work here, and the routine of other offices in which he had served—I was most loath to loose him; and, at my urgent solicitation—requesting him to stop and arrange the accounts of the year—he did stop a few months longer.

125. It is the duty of the officer charged with marking out the cheques to initial them, is it not? Yes, I think that is the case.

126. And it was Mr. Weston's duty as long as — ? As long as he was in charge of the payments.

127. It was his duty to initial every cheque before you signed it? Certainly.

128. And has that been done since Mr. Weston left the Department by the officer who succeeded him? I cannot charge my memory with the positive fact, but I am convinced myself that it must have been done; if not, it has been an inadvertent omission.

129. I observe here, in one case, a cheque (Appendix No. 3) drawn in favor of James King, in February, 1858,—a period when Mr. Weston was, I believe, in the department—not initialled? It may occur; there may be an inadvertent omission. As a rule, I am confident it has been observed, though I cannot say in all cases.

130. I am also aware that a cheque (Appendix No. 4) recently given for a considerable amount (cheques handed to witness);—in whose handwriting are the bodies of the cheques? This is Mr. Weston's, I imagine.

131. The one recently given? The one recently given (Appendix No. 4) is, I believe, in Mr. Campbell's handwriting.

132. And is not initialled? Through inadvertence.

133. But had he instructions? By no means.

134. But as to the initialling of them—when he took charge? No special instructions. I think, on the cheques, as well as my memory serves me, it is stated that that is to be attended to.

135. There is a space for it in the cheque printed? With these cheques, the mode usually observed is, I think,—Saturday is the usual day on which payments are made, and those cheques will be brought to me on Friday. A number of them come ready to sign, and hand out, and distribute. I may have signed a cheque, not noticing that it is not initialled—as I have.

136. But you have stated — ? It would be an inadvertent omission.

137. By Mr. Abbott: You say, that generally you inspected these goods yourself? Generally,—in fact, I may say, in most cases.

138. Before they were paid for you approved of them? I approved, myself, of the quality, and satisfied myself of the quantity delivered.

139. By the Chairman: There is here, Mr. Buchanan, a letter (Appendix No. 5), in fact, offering to supply certain articles, which appears to be an unusual course. There is no schedule, no tender with it—no acceptance except your own upon it. Can you explain the circumstances under which it occurred? That is by no means an unusual fact. Let me look at it.

140. It is by James Staunton? Those were special articles, for which it would be useless to call for tenders, from the simple fact that they were not to be obtained in the market.

141. This letter, I observe, is dated Melbourne? Yes.

142. How was the tenderer communicated with in that case? Written to.

143. To Melbourne? Yes.

144. Have you any recollection whether this was a matter of emergency—of pressing importance? It was a matter of emergency in this respect: those matters are such as we have never been able to procure for the lighthouse service here—many of them; and the prices of those we had contracts for were always at rates considerably in excess of those prices—considerably in excess.

145. Can you recal whether this letter actually came to you from Melbourne? The letters were always opened by Mr. Weston—invariably. It was the practice for the messenger usually to place the letters on his table.

146. Can you recal to mind anything connected with these particular goods—whether they came from Melbourne? They came and were actually delivered.

147. How did they come from Melbourne? That I have no doubt they did. Yes; I have no doubt they came from Melbourne,—I did not see the delivery itself, therefore I cannot speak speaking positively. When I say "the delivery," I was not present, of course, at the delivery over the ship's side, therefore I cannot say that they did. I know that they were delivered here, for I examined them specially, and I recollect, what is more, there is a reference in that letter to the fact (or my memory deceives me) of the Wilson's Promontory Lighthouse, then in course of construction. A drawing was sent to me of that lighthouse, and with that drawing there was other information, stating that the reflecting system of lighthouses had, under experiments conducted by Professor Faraday, set aside the refracting—that the catoptric system had set aside the dioptric system. That fact I distinctly recollect stating to Captain Browne at the time. It was stated that the drawing was more explicit than the letter. I also shewed the drawing to Mr. Crook. It stated that the reflecting system would do away with the refracting. You have [addressing Captain Browne] some indistinct recollection of my mentioning the subject to that effect.

Mr. John
Buchanan.
3 Feb., 1860.

Captain Browne: Yes; but I do not recollect seeing any drawing in reference to the matter.

148. By the Chairman: Did it at all attract your notice that this was the same person tendering from Melbourne, who had previously been tendering from Sydney? It may have done. All I was anxious to do was, to get a class of stores useful for the Public Service, which we had never before had here for that special service.

149. Did anything attract your attention so as to make you ask who Staunton was—whether it was the same man? I presumed he was a man engaged in Melbourne. I may have surmised that he was a man engaged in something of that kind even in Melbourne.

150. It is evidently the same signature as the other, but from a different place and for different stores? That would not attract my attention.

151. By Mr. Browne: Do not those things come out with lamps? When a lighthouse is first erected; but we have nothing of the sort.

152. By Mr. Abbott: Do you recollect having inspected these goods supplied by Staunton and Company generally? I have a distinct recollection of the fact.

153. The whole of them? Yes.

154. All the goods supplied by Staunton and Company, or James Staunton? I have no doubt of the whole of them. My attention was directed to them from their very great superiority to anything we have ever seen here.

155. Did you always find them superior? Always superior.

156. To the same kind of goods——? Supplied by other individuals, and always lower in price.

157. When tenders were sent in they were placed before a Board—of whom did that Board consist? Of myself and the Secretary to the Treasury.

158. Had he the same means of knowing whose the tenders were that you had? Equally; it was equally open to him to question who the parties were as to myself.

159. And had he the same opportunities of inspection? No, he was not present on the inspection.

160. But on the opening of the tenders? On the opening of the tenders he had exactly the same opportunity of knowing who the parties were.

161. You say there was a Government regulation that one officer in this department should have charge of the cash? There is.

162. How long is it since that regulation was introduced? Ever since the system of making advances to the Public Service for payments and disbursements has been in existence.

163. Ever since Mr. Weston——? Yes; ever since the payments have been made by this department.

164. And was that part of Mr. Weston's duty all the time? Distinctly his duty—specially.

165. He drew the cheques, and sent them to you for signature? He drew the cheques, and usually handed them to me for signature.

166. And you returned them to him? And I returned them to him for delivery to the parties for whom they were intended.

167. And it was his duty to procure proper vouchers? It was.

168. I think you have stated that you had no knowledge whatever of Mr. Weston's having anything to do with the firm of Staunton and Co? None whatever——

169. Until after he had left the department? No.

170. So that you could have had nothing to do with it yourself? Nothing.

171. And there were never any goods paid for to Staunton and Company that were not delivered? Certainly not either in his or any other case.

MINUTES OF EVIDENCE.

Mr. John Williams Jenkins called in and examined:—

Mr. J. W. Jenkins.
3 Feb., 1860.

1. By the Chairman : You are foreman of stores? I was, until November last.
2. From what date? I scarcely recollect the date.
3. But generally you can say? I think I was about two years there.
4. Two years up to November last? Yes.
5. Will you inform the Board of the nature of your duties as foreman of stores? I had the receiving of all goods, to see that they were stowed away in the store, and to get them out on the floor according to requisition, to be inspected by the store clerk,—to attend to the packing, and prepare them for delivery.
6. When stores are delivered what is your first duty? Delivered from the stores?
7. No, to the stores? To take them into the stores and unpack them, if necessary; if not, to see them stored away ready for use.
8. Do you give any receipt to the person issuing them? Yes, on official orders, but not on general contracts—only on the order. There is a printed form which I generally sign in the margin, and which is checked in the book.
9. To the person who delivers the goods do you give any receipt acknowledging how you received the packages of goods into the store? In some cases, but not in all.
10. How do you satisfy yourself that stores come from the party that is entitled to deliver them? I do not think that that is any part of my duty. Very often I do not know the name of the parties.
11. Would you receive any goods which any drayman said were to come there? He would bring some sort of bill with him to say that it was intended for the Colonial Storekeeper's Department, and I should receive it. If I did not know anything about it I should ask Mr. Buchanan or the chief clerk.
12. How do you gain the knowledge of the persons who are to deliver stores? In tenders, or anything of that kind, where supplies are sent in—
13. Are you given any instructions as to who are the contractors? Sometimes I shall be told what things will come in—that certain stores are expected.
14. On their being delivered to you, you sometimes do and sometimes do not give a receipt to the drayman? If I am asked for a receipt I always give it.
15. But merely a general receipt stating a certain number of packages? It is generally entered in the book. I see it is written off in that book. I am asked whether all things have been received, and I take a memorandum and give an answer.
16. When do you enter in your book the goods you receive? I do not enter that; that is entered in a book in the office, and not the foreman's of the warehouse.
17. What sort of a book do you keep that enables them to be entered in the office? I do not keep any book. The printed form—
18. A drayman comes to you with a certain set of packages of goods,—what document does he bring you with them? A regular dray-note sometimes.
19. Do you mean the dray-note of the firm supplying the goods? A shipping-note, or papers in some instances from the wharf.
20. What becomes of the note? It is left here.
21. Do you give the drayman anything to shew that he has delivered his goods? Generally.
22. You do? Generally.
23. Very well, that dray or shipping note left here—what do you do with it? They are nearly all kept—filed.
24. You say that you open the packages and examine the goods? Yes.
25. How do you make the office here aware of what goods have been received, that they may be entered in the books of the department? I have to take it down to them before it is settled.
26. You take a list down? Yes; I am told in some cases to receive a certain quantity of goods; I see that I do receive them and take an account of it to the office.
27. Do you get that instruction in writing? No.
28. How? Mr. Buchanan sometimes tells me of a certain quantity of goods to be received into the store. I see that I do receive it; if not, I take a memorandum down of what I do actually receive.
29. We will suppose 400 jackets and 500 pairs of trousers and 200 waistcoats? They would be in bales. I should receive so many bales purporting to be that.
30. Do you open all the packages? You could not open them all.
31. You merely keep them as such? They are supposed to be that and are stowed away as containing that number.
32. Is the contractor paid before they are examined? I suppose so. I have not anything to do with the accounts in any way.
33. By Mr. Buchanan : Am I to understand you to say that no examination takes place of these bales to see either the quality of the articles or that the quantity is delivered—that no test is applied by anyone to see that they correspond with the sample and that they are fit and proper for the public service? There is always an examination of one or two or three bales if the receipt of goods is large. They are always examined and compared with the samples.
34. By the Chairman : We will suppose a bale is stated on the outside to contain 200 jackets,—are the jackets counted? When we issue them.
35. Not before? No; sometimes we issue the whole bale as it is.
36. Then there is no absolute check upon the quantity being what it is stated to be? In an original package.
37. By Mr. Buchanan : Is it the practice to examine the bale that is opened and to test the quality

Mr. J. W.
Jenkins.
3 Feb., 1860.

quality of the goods—is it the practice to count them or is it not? It is always the practice to count them—to examine the quantity and compare them with the quality.

38. By the Chairman: That is as to the sample? And the number also. We suppose the others are the same.

39. You take it for granted, after the examination of one of the packages, that the others are correct? Yes.

40. Having then got in a certain number of bales, how do you communicate to the office here what has been received? Sometimes I am asked if those things are received.

41. In what way do you enter in a book these things? There is an order-book kept.

42. Have you a store-book? No.

43. Then how do the things get into the store? There is an invoice-book and a general purchase-book kept. The foreman has nothing to do with it.

44. Then, as I understand it, the foreman of the stores states to the clerk what the goods received are? Yes, verbally.

45. Verbally? Yes; and then it is entered into a book.

46. By Mr. Buchanan: And the foreman subsequently certifies to the fact on the bill itself as to quantities? Yes.

47. By the Chairman: Then, in fact, I am to understand it thus: there are certain goods delivered, you examine certain of the packages among the whole number in order to find that they are what they purport to be, and you then verbally communicate to a clerk in here that certain goods have been received? Yes; I certify to the receipt of them—the quantity stated on these forms.

48. You certify that certain goods which are charged for have been received? Yes.

49. How do you remember—how are you in a position to certify? By the orders, an order being entered into a book.

50. Was that order in your possession? In the office.

51. How do you speak from the order? I am told that a certain quantity of goods will come in, and I take it as near as possible.

52. Is this the way: an order is sent from this office to a contractor to supply certain articles,—do you see that order before it goes to the contractor? No.

53. The contractor sends certain goods, and you say that after testing them in a certain way you verbally communicate to a clerk in the office that such goods have been received? Yes; and the signature, as I said before, is put on this printed form of order.

54. Whose signature—I asked you whether you saw the order? The order is returned with the goods; I then mark "received" upon the margin; if the whole of the goods are not received, I mark what I have received.

55. Then the order comes to you? Yes.

56. And you compare the goods received with the order? Yes.

57. And you mark on it that they are received? Yes; or what quantity.

58. Then you do give not a verbal but a written memorandum to the clerk of what you received? Yes.

59. In the year 1858, in June and July, 1858, and subsequently, you were foreman of the stores? Yes.

60. And at that time it would be your duty to receive goods in the way you have stated? Yes.

61. Can you recal to mind goods being supplied by a person of the name of James Staunton about that time? There were so many different people—contractors. It scarcely came under my notice to notice anything particular, but to receive the goods.

62. If particular goods were stated to you do you think you would be in a position to recal any of them? I may. I may recollect the names of contractors.

63. I see here, (Appendix W) in September, 1858, there were 2,250 shirts;—do you remember a large number of shirts being delivered by any contractor in that way? I recollect that.

64. Can you recal the contractor who supplied those goods? Do you mean the name?

65. Yes? Staunton.

66. You can recal that delivery? Yes.

67. By Staunton? By the dray. Do you mean personally?

68. No; by being delivered from Staunton? Yes.

69. Can you recal how those goods were delivered? By dray; always by drays.

70. By a drayman that you know anything of? No; there are so many strange draymen.

71. Was there any ship-note or dray-note brought with those goods? No, not in the case of contractors—receiving goods from one particular person extending over a series of deliveries.

72. Do you in any way become acquainted with the supplier, or know anything of him? No.

73. Don't you get any knowledge whatever of what the person is? Unless I know in time, such as Thompson, Symonds, and Sheriff, and those who supply in that way.

74. The things are not generally delivered by one particular drayman, or man in the employment of the various establishments, so that you could connect him with the business? Sheriff, the stationer, generally sends one man down with the goods.

75. Is it not so with all establishments that supply you,—do you not find that they usually send the same men? No; I have seen different men several times.

76. By Mr. Buchanan: You say that Thompson and Symonds, and Sheriff, and others in town occasionally deliver stores here? Yes.

77. Did you ever see the absolute members of those firms in these stores? No, Sir.

78. Have you ever seen Mr. Sheriff here, for instance? No.

79. Have you ever seen Messrs. Thompson or Symonds here? No, Sir.
80. Is it the rule, or is it not the rule, that contractors in town visit the stores personally; or is it the rule for them to send their agents and servants? Their agents and servants.
81. By the Chairman: Then I understand that you have not any recollection of these deliveries by Staunton? No.
82. As connected with the person of Staunton? No, I could not.
83. Did you ever hear of Staunton as a contractor? I have lately.
84. Within what period do you call lately? Since Mr. Weston has resigned.
85. When did you first hear of Staunton? I heard the name with the first delivery of goods, as a contractor.
86. But when did you hear of the name in any way that particularly attracted your attention? Since Mr. Weston has resigned.
87. How soon after? The last delivery of the paper—stationery.
88. What did you then hear? I heard that Mr. Weston was tendering in the name of Staunton.
89. You heard that Mr. Weston was tendering in the name of Staunton? Yes.
90. Did that in any way attract your attention or excite your curiosity? No.
91. Did it raise any idea in your mind in connection with Mr. Staunton who had previously tendered? Yes, it would naturally occur to me that it was the same person throughout. I may have had that opinion.
92. In fact, had you that opinion? No.
93. No such idea suggested itself? It was not until this proceeding that I ever thought of it.
94. You did not? I did not.
95. Did Mr. Weston in any way interfere with, or go out of the ordinary course with reference to any of these deliveries by Staunton, while he was an officer of the department? Not to my knowledge.
96. But had you any knowledge whatever of Mr. Weston's being in any way connected with the tenders, or with the supplying of these goods? Not until Mr. Weston resigned.
97. In no way whatever? In no way whatever.
98. Since your attention has been attracted to it in any way, have you made any inquiries as to who Staunton is? No; I have heard it reported who Staunton is.
99. Reported what? That there is a firm of Staunton and Company in London.
100. That there is a firm? That there is a firm, and that the same firm supplied the houses in Sydney; so I heard this morning.
101. Did you ever hear whether any member of that firm was in Sydney? No.
102. Or in Melbourne? No.
103. Have you ever seen the writing of James Staunton, or what purports to be his writing? In the accounts I dare say I have seen it.
104. What accounts? I sign as to the delivery or receipt of goods—not as to the prices.
105. But when do you sign the accounts? Whenever they are brought to me.
106. And in what state are they generally when they are brought to you? There are a great many together.
107. Is yours the first signature attached to them, or Mr. Buchanan's? I think mine is the first.
108. And have they, when brought to you in that way, the signatures generally, or in any case of the contractor to them? Yes, I should think so, always.
109. Have the signature of the contractor at that period? Yes, always.
110. Are you clear upon that point? I could not say, because I have only to notice on the face of the account that these goods are what have been received.
111. Yes, exactly, I understand thoroughly, you certify by your signature that what is set forth in the account has been received in quantity? Yes.
112. You do that to satisfy Mr. Buchanan before he signs the certificate? Yes.
113. But how would the name of the contractor be then to the account? I do not know that they always are. I said I could not speak positively.
114. But you say you have seen the name of James Staunton? In some cases the accounts will be three or four together. Some of the contractors will sign just above my name—just under where it is ruled off in the printed form, and I sign just underneath, and of course it will attract my attention. In reading the articles down I should check them and find something I am concerned with.
115. Will you look at the signature of James Staunton there and say whether you have ever seen that signature? No, I do not recognise it in particular.
116. But you say you have seen James Staunton's signature? Yes, I have seen it in some of the accounts.
117. Will you look at some of these accounts and see whether you have seen it? I could not say [having examined the documents. Appendix F. W. X. Y.] that it is any of these, or that it is not one of these.
118. By Mr. Browne: Not his signature, do you say? I may have noticed it, but I do not know that it is in any one of these particular forms.
119. By the Chairman: And you have seen his signature to accounts? Yes.
120. And at that period, when coming to you to be signed, has Mr. Weston's signature been to them as a witness? That I cannot say positively.
121. Who brings you these accounts? Mr. Weston.
122. Mr. Weston? Yes.
123. But you state distinctly that you have seen James Staunton's name to such accounts as these when brought to you to sign? Yes.
124. And before Mr. Buchanan had signed? Yes, I recollect seeing it.

Mr. J. W. Jenkins.

3 Feb., 1860.

- Mr. J. W. Jenkins.
3 Feb., 1860.
125. When you are about to sign these accounts what have you that enables you to check these quantities? The receipt-book—the order.
126. Is that brought to you? I go to it.
127. And you satisfy yourself before signing that you have marked those goods as received on the order? Yes.
128. If you find, on examining the goods in the way you have stated, anything that attracts attention, what is the course you adopt? I go to Mr. Buchanan directly and inform him.
129. Inform him? Inform him.
130. But in case there is nothing that attracts your attention, you simply mark upon the order whether they have been received or not? Yes; I generally ask Mr. Buchanan to look at the goods.
131. In all cases? Nearly in all cases, unless it is a very small thing—an audit in detail or in an audit of any particular sample; the things are more or less exhibited, and I tell Mr. Buchanan that they are waiting.
132. And what is Mr. Buchanan's usual course? To examine them and see that everything is as good as the sample.
133. That is the usual course—Mr. Buchanan examines the goods and compares them with the samples? Yes.
134. Have you any knowledge as to whether there is any person of the name of Staunton in partnership with Mr. Weston? I believe he represents the firm, Sir, that is all.
135. Represents what firm? The Staunton's firm.
136. But have you any knowledge as to whether there is any such person as James Staunton, or as Staunton? No, excepting from report. It is said that there is such a firm as Staunton and Company.
137. Have you any distinct information as to the nature of their business and where their residence in London is? No.
138. By Mr. Browne: Was it not the practice to import from England, through the Government, a large portion of the stores, consisting of stationery and other things? Yes.
139. Has that system been discontinued? I do not know; we still receive goods from England through George A. Lloyd and Company.
140. Have the goods received in that manner decreased latterly, or have they continued to about the same extent as formerly existed? I should think they have decreased.
141. Then, latterly goods have been obtained more from contractors in town than used formerly to be the case? Yes; that has been the case, so far as I recollect, since the Colonial Mercantile Agency was instituted.
142. Things are very slow in coming out? Very slow, and often of very unsuitable quality.
143. Then latterly that class of goods has ceased to be imported? Not altogether.
144. But has the item of stationery been much reduced? No, Sir.
145. Have you gone into the town for any considerable amount of stationery lately? That would not come under my notice. The largest quantity of stationery was the last contract in December, that has just been supplied.
146. How was that contract provided—was it from the town, or by direct importation to the Government? From the town, by tender.
147. By tender? Yes.
148. Then in the item of stationery a less quantity comes out from England under original indent than was formerly the case? Not as yet. I said no large quantity had been tendered for until this last one; this last quantity is the largest quantity I have seen on tender—I mean supplied by contractor.
149. Are you consulted as to the quantity of stores remaining in your hands before an indent of stores is sent in by the Storekeeper? I generally report that we are getting short of certain descriptions of goods when such is the case.
150. Could you tax your memory whether you were short of any of these particular articles [a document handed to witness containing an offer from James Staunton to supply certain lighthouse requisites, and dated Melbourne, September 14th, 1858]? I do not think we had anything of the kind in stock.
151. You were quite out of them? We generally used to get them in small quantities whenever we could. We used to get a case of glasses at a time; sometimes they would be returned as unfit.
152. And you really were, at the time this was accepted, out of these stores? Completely out.
153. Who was the last tender for stationery taken by? Staunton and Company.
154. Was it an extensive one? I can hardly say the quantity, but it was pretty large.
155. Pretty large? There was some double foolscap—a good many reams of double foolscap—I forget the exact number.
156. Are you short of that description of goods in the store? Yes, very short of double foolscap; we could not get it at all.
157. And you are really in want of the goods that have now been tendered for? Yes, and urging for them, and a number of reams of foolscap, imperial, and super-royal, the most part of which has been issued to the printer.
158. Do you know how these goods came in? By dray into the yard.
159. Do you know whether they came from a vessel or from a store? No.
160. You do not know? No.
161. They merely came by dray? Yes.
162. Loose or in original packages? In original packages.
163. By the Chairman: Was there any address on the packages? No address, merely the initials and a diamond.

164. Do you know what the initials were? It was J in a triangle and S outside, to the best of my recollection.

165. By Mr. Browne: Are there not some of the cases in the yard now? I think there are.

166. By the Chairman: Is there any mark on them to shew how they were obtained—how they came from London? No, we never kept that on the cases.

167. No shipper's mark? No, I did not notice any shipper's mark on the cases. I have never seen the shipper's mark on any of the cases.

168. By Mr. Browne: What is the brand on them—Waterloo Mills, or something of that kind, is it not? On the paper?

169. Yes? On the last, Waterloo and Sons.

The Chairman: That is a large printing and stationery house in London.

170. By Mr. Browne: And J.S. in a triangle? There is in the yard one of the cases—the last came in—it has on it J.S. in a triangle.

171. By the Chairman: Not J.S. and Co.? No; merely J.S.

172. By Mr. Abbott: Have you any knowledge of business other than your experience here? No.

173. That is as to the receipt of large packages? No.

174. Do you know what the practice of mercantile houses is as to the receipt of large invoices,—do they open their packages? I should think not.

175. Do you know anything of the practice? I have seen packages stowed away in large houses and going away on the dray. I have seen, too, packages sent from the wharf to the bullock team and sent up the country.

176. There is then no chance of inspection? No.

177. As to the draymen by whom these things were brought here, were they not generally licensed draymen? I suppose they were all licensed draymen.

178. The draymen anyone can find on the stand? Yes.

179. How seldom do some of the draymen come here a second time? Very seldom; at least, I see so many, that I do not notice them all.

180. You said, I think, that you fancied you recollected some of the goods supplied by Staunton and Company—that you recollected the particular times they were supplied? I think I recollect.

181. Could you say whether the same man ever brought the things a second time? No, I could not.

182. You say that you believe there is such a firm as Staunton and Company in London? Yes, I heard it this morning.

183. They may have an agent here for all you know? Yes.

184. Now, as to the accounts to which you said you saw signatures, Mr. Jenkins,—do you recollect what these signatures meant—were they the accounts receipt or merely the heading of the accounts? I think in the case I mentioned, it must be at the foot of the receipts.

185. In that case the account was receipted before the money was paid? Yes.

186. Did you ever see it before? No. I believe I understand that is the course.

187. What is that? That the accounts are signed before they are paid. Several times I have seen it. It is the custom sometimes to send in the accounts signed.

188. As to this last tender for the supply of stationery,—do you recollect whether there were other tenders than that from James Staunton? Yes, in that case I saw other entries in the book.

189. There were other tenders? Yes.

190. Several others? Yes.

191. Can you recollect whether stores were taken on this occasion from the other people tendering as well as from Staunton and Company? Yes, I recollect some foolscap received from Sharwood at the same time.

192. Although his tender was not accepted for the whole? His tender was declined.

193. Still he supplied some? Yes, some double foolscap.

194. Under Mr. Buchanan's order, do you recollect? Under Mr. Buchanan's order.

195. Do you recollect at the same time a tender being sent in by Messrs. M'Nab and Company? Yes, M'Nab, I think, was one of the tenderers.

196. For the same goods for which Staunton tendered? Some tendered for a certain portion and some for another.

197. Do you recollect whether M'Nab tendered for any of the goods tendered for by Staunton? Yes, of single foolscap, a large quantity was supplied by M'Nab and Company.

198. Do you recollect whether they tendered at a lower rate than Staunton and Co? No, Staunton and Co's tender being lower, was recommended for acceptance through the Treasury.

199. For this particular foolscap? For the whole.

200. But for this particular foolscap supplied by M'Nab and Company? Yes.

201. How was it that M'Nab supplied it instead, was it by Mr. Buchanan's orders? I suppose it was; he told me that some paper would come in from M'Nab's, and I received it—single foolscap.

202. Although Staunton and Co. tendered at the same time? Although Staunton and Company had tendered for the whole.

Mr. J. W.
Jenkins.
3 Feb., 1860.

Mr. Archibald Campbell called in and examined:—

Mr. A.
Campbell.
3 Feb., 1860.

1. By the Chairman: What is the position you hold in this office? First clerk.
2. How long have you held that position? Two months.
3. Having succeeded—? Mr. Weston.
4. Will you state to the Board what is the nature of your duties? General supervision over the other clerks; looking over all the accounts, and paying them—writing out the cheques, that is.
5. Have you anything to do with the orders for stores, or entries of the stores received? No, only to see that the invoices are properly entered—invoices of goods from Home, and to see that prices are put to them.
6. And who is the gentleman to whom the foreman of the stores communicates the goods he has received for entry? They are entered in the books, and come under my cognizance.
7. Who is the gentleman that keeps those books, to whom the foreman communicates what he receives? It is not a definite duty for one particular clerk, they are entered by several—Mr. McDonell enters some, Mr. Garnett would enter some, and Mr. Wise would enter some.
8. These gentlemen would be more in a position to inform the Board as to the way the information comes to them, and what they did with it? Yes.
9. The principal responsibility you have is as to payment, I apprehend? Yes.
10. What is the course pursued with reference to the payment of contractors and suppliers of goods? The voucher must first be signed—I must first have proof that the goods are received, by the voucher of the store clerk; he signs the voucher certifying that the goods are actually received, and then the account is checked in the office, by the orders and by the contract prices; after all that is gone through, the goods having all been received correctly, payment is made.
11. In what way is payment made? Generally personally, or sent by a trustworthy messenger.
12. In what form? By cheque.
13. Who prepares the cheques? I do.
14. For Mr. Buchanan's signature? Yes.
15. Do you initial those cheques? No, I have not done it hitherto, for I did not know it was necessary; it was only yesterday that Mr. Lane said it was necessary for me to initial them.
16. You received no instructions? No. I initial all the butts of the cheques.
17. But not the cheque itself? No.
18. You are now aware that that is required? Yes.
19. Then the cheque, having been sent to Mr. Buchanan, comes back to you? Yes.
20. How do you deal with the payment? I either hand it to the party (perhaps in waiting) or send it by a trustworthy messenger; some are sent by post, then the cheques are crossed.
21. How do you get the receipt for the cheques? Sometimes they are signed when the account comes in, and then they sign the receipt.
22. The acquittance is signed? Yes.
23. When the account comes in? Yes.
24. Before it has Mr. Buchanan's signature, or Mr. Jenkin's signature? Yes.
25. But you say it is sometimes paid personally, and sometimes sent by a trustworthy messenger? Yes.
26. In these cases does the messenger take the documents with him, and bring them back to you? Always, if they have not been previously signed.
27. But if they have been signed? He merely takes the cheques and sometimes gets a temporary receipt from them; but not in every case.
28. Then you have no check upon the messenger paying the money? The cheque is crossed and marked "Bank."
29. In all cases? In all cases.
30. Every cheque you pay is marked "Bank"? Every cheque not delivered personally is marked "Bank."
31. Would cheques so marked not be paid by the bank if drawn on, except through another bank? I believe not; they would certainly not do it in the case of Government cheques.
32. Was it an instruction to you to cross all cheques? From my predecessor, for caution.
33. Mr. Weston? Yes.
34. He told you that was —? That that was the practice.
35. Will you look at these cheques (cheques handed to witness)—are those cheques crossed? No, Sir; but that is not in my time.
36. Have they been paid through a bank? It appears not.
37. Then in such cases, if those were sent by a messenger, the office would have no voucher that the cheque had passed to the proper person? Unless the person sent asked for a temporary receipt, as they sometimes do.
38. Is that an invariable practice? With persons we do not know; with persons with whom we have had extensive dealings we would not ask it.
39. It does not appear to have been an invariable practice, for I find several cheques uncrossed? They may have been delivered to the parties; in that case they are never crossed, except at their own request.
40. By Mr. Rolleston: If they are sent by post, are they crossed? Always.
41. By the Chairman: During the period you have been in the office, has it come under your knowledge, during the years 1858 and 1859, that goods were supplied to the Government by a person named James Staunton? I have heard the name, and I have seen the name in the books.
42. Have you seen the signature of James Staunton? I have seen the signature of Staunton and Co., but I cannot say positively that I have seen the signature of James Staunton. Before I took Mr. Weston's place, I had nothing whatever to do with the contracts.

43. It did not come before you — contractors bills of any kind? No, not at all.
44. Have you ever heard any mention of who Staunton was? Never.
45. Have you no knowledge yourself? No, I have no knowledge. I have heard more these last two days than ever I heard.
46. Your attention was never in any way directed to the existence of the person? No question about it.
47. Since you have held your present appointment there has been a tender from Staunton and Co? There has.
48. An account, also, I see, of the 23rd December (Appendix W.), for £333 6s., which bears their acquittance? Yes.
49. And your own name as witness? Yes, I recollect that account.
50. Who was it signed Staunton and Co? It was handed to me signed.
51. By whom? Mr. Weston.
52. Mr. Weston handed it to you signed? Yes.
53. And you signed it as witnessing—what? The time the payment was made.
54. Had you no conversation with Mr. Weston at the time he handed you that account? Not the slightest; he never spoke to me on the subject at all.
55. You made the payment direct to him? Yes.
56. You wrote the cheque and handed it to him (A. No. 4)? Yes; I believe he is acting for the firm.
57. Was that cheque crossed? I think that one was, but I cannot say positively.
58. Were you on anything of terms of intimacy with Mr. Weston when you were in the department together? Merely from being together; I was not intimate with him.
59. When did you first become aware that he was carrying on the business of tendering and supplying? Since he resigned,—and even then I was not certain; I only believed he was acting for the firm.
60. Have you ever seen him sign Staunton and Co? Never.
61. Have you any idea of whose writing that signature is (Appendix W.)? [Witness looks at signature.] I could not say positively.
62. Have you any impression as to whose writing it is? No; it bears some resemblance to his own, but I could not say.
63. To whose own? To Mr. Weston's own—very slight.
64. Are these accounts generally written by the suppliers themselves,—the bodies filled up by the persons themselves? Not as a general rule; they sometimes send informal accounts, and they are copied in the office very frequently.
65. As these accounts are? Yes.
66. Those have all been filled-in in the office (Appendices B. W. X.)? Yes; about one-half of our accounts are.
67. In whose handwriting are these? That is Mr. Weston's handwriting.
68. Would it be usual for a chief clerk in the office to do that? He very often does; I often do it myself.
69. That is what I want to ask? It does not fall to him from his office, but others might be busy, and he would write it off.
70. You are aware, I presume, of the object of the present inquiry? I do not know the full object of it, there are so many reports; I have not heard officially.
71. The present inquiry is instituted on account of the Government having reason to believe, from information they have received, that large quantities of stores on account of the public service, have at various times been tendered for and supplied by Mr. Buchanan and the late chief clerk of the Colonial Storekeeper's Department, Mr. John Weston, under the assumed names of James Staunton, and Staunton and Co. Can you afford the Board any information or light upon that charge? Not the slightest.
72. You have no knowledge in reference to it at all? Not the slightest, one way or the other.

Mr. A.
Campbell.
3 Feb., 1860.

Mr. William Macdonell called in and examined:—

1. By the Chairman: What position do you hold in the office, Mr. Macdonell? I am a clerk of the third class.
2. How long have you held that position? Since November.
3. Last November? Yes.
4. What was the position you previously held? Fourth or fifth class clerk, I think; I forget now—we were all of the third class, nominally.
5. Was that originally your appointment? One of the third class clerks.
6. That was your original appointment? Yes.
7. Had you at any time charge of the stores? Yes, I was foreman of the stores.
8. Was that your first appointment? Yes.
9. Then your original appointment was foreman of the stores? Yes.
10. Up to what date did you hold that appointment? About 1856, I think, I was taken into the office.
11. What is the nature of the duties you had to perform as fourth or third class clerk since you have been brought into the office? Copying of accounts, issues from issue book, usual clerical work, entering letters, taking out invoices, purchasing in the town goods where they are not tendered for, or where the tenders were not satisfactory, or where they were ordered on the face of the tender to be bought by private purchase.

Mr. William
Macdonell.
3 Feb., 1860.

Mr. William
Macdonell.

3 Feb., 1860.

12. Was it any part of your duty to prepare the orders upon contractors for supplies? No.
13. Whose duty was that? The orders are always prepared by Mr. Garnett.
14. Is it any part of your duty to receive from the foreman of stores a statement of goods received? No.
15. With that part you have nothing to do? No, I have nothing to do with that.
16. Have you anything to do with the checking or payment of accounts? Now, I have; I check accounts to see that they are accurate as to their total, and if so, I pass them on to the chief clerk who has to pay them.
17. The chief clerk? Yes.
18. And how long has that been a duty attached to you? Since November.
19. November last? I formally entered on it then, but I previously acted for Mr. Jones while he was away,—perhaps as early as September.
20. But previous to that you had nothing to do with the checking of accounts? No, I may have assisted sometimes, when there was a press of work.
21. Did contractors' accounts in any way come before you? In assisting Mr. Jones they would come before me.
22. Did a case come before your notice of goods supplied by James Staunton during the years 1858 and 1859? I have only a recollection of one invoice at the end of 1859; I can scarcely say what it was, but I have a recollection of seeing an invoice.
23. Of James Staunton? Of James Staunton.
24. That is the first and only one you recollect? That is the only one I have any recollection of coming before me.
25. Have you any recollection of what the nature of the supply was? I cannot recollect at this present moment; so many accounts pass through my hands that I cannot recollect it. I recollect the name very well. I had simply to check the invoice.
26. Could you, out of these (Appendices U. V. W. X. Y.), select the one your memory bears? I think that is it (Appendix U.).
27. That you will observe is Staunton and Co.? That is the one I allude to—Staunton and Co.
28. James Staunton? I do not know anything about.
29. You have no recollection of having seen the supplies of James Staunton? No.
30. Have you heard of Staunton as a contractor? I have in the office heard of his being a contractor.
31. Previous to Staunton and Co.? I have never been able to separate them; I have always heard of Staunton. I have heard of Staunton as a person supplying goods.
32. Extending over any period—have you heard the name for any period? Perhaps for twelve months during that period.
33. During twelve months? I am not sure about it. It was a matter of no interest to me.
34. You have heard the name mentioned as a contractor? I have heard of goods supplied by him.
35. By a man named Staunton? Yes.
36. Was that previous to Mr. Weston having ceased to belong to the department? Yes.
37. Have you any reason to know or believe that there was or was not an actually existing James Staunton? None at all. I believe there was a person of that name.
38. You believe there is? Yes, I believe there is a firm of that name.
39. Of James Staunton? I do not know whether it is James Staunton or Staunton & Co. I have not been able to separate them.
30. You say that you believe there is a firm of Staunton and Co.? Yes.
41. In Sydney? No. You asked me whether there was a firm; I believe there is a firm of Staunton and Co.
42. Do you know where existing? In London.
43. Have they any representative in Sydney? I am not aware.
44. This inquiry has been instituted, the Government having reason to believe, from information they have received, that large quantities of stores on account of the public service have at various times been tendered for and supplied by Mr. Buchanan and the late chief clerk to the Colonial Storekeeper's Department, Mr. John Weston, under the assumed names of James Staunton and Staunton and Co. Can you afford the Board any information respecting this charge, or that will tend to throw any light upon it? None at all. I am totally unacquainted with it.
45. You do not know yourself that what has been stated, either is or is not a fact? I do not know. It has not come within my knowledge at all.
46. Do you know who signed "Staunton & Co." (Appendix W.)? I do not.
47. Do you recognise the signature? I never saw it before that I am aware of.
48. Does it strike you as being like the writing of any person you know? I should say it was the same writing as that in the body of the invoice, but I could not swear to it.
49. But the writing in the body of the invoice? That occurs to me to be Mr. Weston's handwriting.
50. And you imagine the whole is written by Mr. Weston, signature and body? I think the one looks like the other.
51. Do you know who received payment of that? No.
52. It has not come before you? It has not come before me.
53. Have you ever heard it asserted, while Mr. Weston belonged to the department, that he was supplying goods for the public service? I never heard the assertion made.

SATURDAY, 4 FEBRUARY, 1860.

Present:—

WILLIAM COLBURN MAYNE, ESQ., IN THE CHAIR.

Mr. H. H. BROWNE,

Mr. C. ROLLESTON.

Mr. R. P. Abbott was in attendance to conduct the inquiry for Mr. Buchanan.

Mr. Henry Garnett called in and examined:—

1. By the Chairman: What office do you hold in the Colonial Storekeeper's Department?
At the present time that of second clerk.
2. And you were previously—? Third clerk.
3. Will you state to the Board what is the nature of your duties in the office here? I draw out contracts, and write letters, and make orders, and check accounts, and do any sort of duties that are required.
4. Writing out the orders on contractors—does that fall to you as a duty? Yes.
5. Addressing the intimation of the acceptance of tenders—does that fall to your duty? Yes.
6. In what form do you generally notify the acceptance of tenders? There is a printed form of letter, and several blanks to be filled up.
7. And this you address to whatever address is given by the contractor? Yes.
8. Do you recollect the fact of any tenders of James Staunton, in 1858, having been accepted? I do not know whether there were any so far back as 1858; there were some in 1859.
9. Well, in 1859? Yes.
10. About what period do you recollect any? At different periods.
11. Did you address the notice of acceptance of those tenders? Oh! yes.
12. What address did you put upon them? "Post Office."
13. Was it stated on the tender that that was to be the address? No.
14. How did you obtain that? I asked Mr. Buchanan whether there was any address upon the tender, and he said no, I might address it to the Post Office.
15. You write the orders also? Yes.
16. How did you address the orders for any goods to Mr. Staunton? Well, in the same way, I should think.
17. I wish you to recall, accurately, whether it was a fact that you did so address to the Post Office? Any I made, I fancy, I addressed to the Post Office.
18. That is your clear impression? That is my clear impression.
19. That any letter addressed to Mr. Staunton would have been addressed to the Post Office? Would have been addressed to the Post Office.
20. Can you recall whether any of the goods required from Staunton were urgently and immediately required? No, I do not know that any of them were. There may have been serge, and things of that kind, urgently required.
21. And in those cases were they addressed to the Post Office? Yes, I fancy so.
22. And would you conceive that to be the most expeditious way of a letter reaching a person, that it should be addressed to the Post Office? Yes, if that was the person's address in Sydney.
23. Have you ever seen James Staunton? No, never.
24. Have you ever seen any accounts in his name? I think I have.
25. Accounts for payment? Yes; but then I have nothing to do with the accounts. I think I have seen—I am sure I have seen an account.
26. I thought I understood you to say that it was your duty to check accounts? Not all accounts.
27. Some? Yes.
28. Have you ever checked any accounts of Staunton? No, I have never checked any.
29. But you think you have seen some? I think I have seen some on Mr. Weston's desk.
30. Will you look at these accounts (Appendices V, W, X, Y, handed to Witness) and say whether any of these have come under your notice? No, I could not say.
31. Is that a signature you have seen? Yes.
32. And where have you seen it? On the foot of accounts.
33. On the foot of accounts? Yes.
34. You knew that tenders were accepted in the name of James Staunton? Oh! yes, the tenders were entered—the schedules of tenders were entered.
35. Have you seen the tenders themselves—do they come under your notice? Yes, in the schedules of tenders the tenders are put.
36. Is that a part of your duties, making out the schedules? I enter the schedules.
37. And then the tenders come under your notice? Yes.
38. Have you seen the name of James Staunton to any tenders? Yes, I think so.
39. Is that a signature (Appendix No. 5. Document handed to Witness) you have seen before? Yes, I have seen that before.
40. How was the acceptance of that tender addressed, do you recollect? I do not know. I did not write any acceptance I think for that.
41. It did not come to you in any way to write or dispatch? It came to me,—I have registered it; and then it went to the Treasury, I think.
42. How was the acceptance of the tender notified, can you recall? Mr. Weston appears to have notified that. I have entered it, I think.
43. From any initials do you believe that Mr. Weston notified the acceptance of the tender? Well, I do not know, he may have.

Mr. Henry
Garnett.

4 Feb., 1860.

- Mr. Henry Garnett.
4 Feb., 1860.
44. I see pencil marks here? I fancy he would notify it.
45. Do you observe where the tender is dated from? Melbourne.
46. In that case the notification could not be addressed to the Post Office here could it? No; the letter-book would shew whether a letter has been written to Melbourne.
47. Would shew in all cases where a notification had been sent? No, in that case. If I had written a letter it would have been entered.
48. Written by you, or by anybody else in the office? I think so. Mr. Weston might have sent a letter without entering it.
49. Would that be unusual, and contrary to the regular custom? Yes; I fancy it would.
50. Do you know where the letter-book is in which these are recorded? Yes.
51. Is it in the next room? Yes. Will you tell me the date of that, please?
52. The date of the letter is the 14th; it was apparently received on the 21st September. From looking at the different marks upon it you will perhaps be able to tell where you will be able to find the entry in the letter-book? [Witness referred to book, and found therein no record of a notification of the acceptance of the tender in question having been written.]
53. There is no record of a notification of acceptance of that tender having been written? No; there might be in the contract book.
54. Can you refer to that? Yes. [Witness referred to contract book.] Nothing appears on that.
55. There is no record then in the office of any notification of acceptance having been sent to James Staunton as regards that particular tender? As regards that particular tender.
56. In the ordinary course it would fall within your duty to have done so? Yes.
57. But it was not handed to you in that particular case to do so? I suppose not.
58. But I wish you to recollect the fact as clearly as you can: I do not want you to state anything you cannot state distinctly, but whatever you can state distinctly to do so? Well, if it had come to me, and I had acted upon it, it would have appeared.
59. Is there anything on that which shews that it was handed to Mr. Weston to notify? Well, Mr. Weston's handwriting.
60. Can you inform the Board what it is on that? "May be accepted, as the prices are all lower than is usually paid." Then it appears to have gone to Mr. Weston.
61. What makes it appear to you? Because it is handed back to me then. "Mr. G." is in the handwriting of Mr. Weston. Most probably Mr. Weston himself answered or accepted the tender.
62. Conveyed the notification of its acceptance? Yes.
63. That is what you collect from what appears upon that? From what appears upon it.
64. By Mr. Rolleston: And substantiated from the fact that there is no record in the letter-book or this book according to your usual custom? Yes.
65. By the Chairman: Have you ever addressed any communication to James Staunton otherwise than through the Post Office? No, I do not think I have; I had no other address.
66. You said you had seen the tenders—will you look at that (Appendix No. G.)? Well, I copy most of the schedules. Yes, I have seen that; most probably I have entered it in the book.
67. Would you look at the tender itself—that I have just handed to you; do you know in whose handwriting the body is? No.
68. Will you look at that tender, and say whether it is one you have ever seen? I do not know whether I have seen that or not.
69. But these printed forms—are the articles in the body of the tender filled in by the tenderer or in the office? Sometimes in the office, sometimes by the tenderer.
70. Was that filled in in the office? In the office.
71. Whose writing is that? That is Mr. Weston's writing.
72. There are other tenders of the same; will you look at those and see by whom the bodies are filled in? They all appear to have been filled in by Mr. Weston.
73. Have you anything to do with the payment—are you in any way brought into contact—? No.
74. You know nothing of the course usually adopted? I know that accounts are rendered and paid, and receipts obtained.
75. But you do not know the exact form—the exact course adopted in payment—of your own knowledge? No.
76. Have Staunton's tenders ever been the subject of comment or conversation among the gentlemen in the office? Well, yes, they have.
77. And touching what points? Well, we did not know who Staunton was.
78. That was a subject of comment in the office? Yes.
79. When were those remarks first made, can you recollect? I think it was Mr. Jones first made the remark that he did not know who Staunton was.
80. And was there any endeavour made to ascertain who he was in any way? Well, no, I do not think there was.
81. Was it a subject of comment more than once—that fact? Oh! yes, we have talked about it.
82. Was there an idea in the office and was that idea given expression to, that there was no such person? Well, yes, I think we expressed as much.
83. Then, in fact, was it also an idea in the office that there was any particular person known to the office that represented and was in fact Staunton? Well, I always thought that Mr. Weston had something to do with it.
84. That Mr. Weston had something to do with Staunton? Yes.
85. Do I understand you that in fact Mr. Weston was Staunton—was representing Staunton? Was representing Staunton.

86. How representing him—do you mean representing him as an authorised agent, or do you mean the impression on your mind was that the name of Staunton was a name assumed by Weston, he being in fact the tenderer and supplier? I do not think my impressions ought to be part of my evidence, Captain Mayne.

Mr. Henry Garnett.

4 Feb., 1860.

The Chairman: Yes, in an inquiry of this kind it is highly necessary they should, Mr. Garnett. We are not bound by the rules of legal evidence in a preliminary inquiry of this nature. What you state can only go for what it is worth; but you are I conceive decidedly bound, as an officer in the public service, to state fairly and impartially what your impressions were by anything that was going on in the department to which you belong. You are only doing justice to the public and justice to the officer affected by the charge.

Mr. Abbott: I think the stating of impressions by Mr. Garnett and other witnesses, unless they told Mr. Buchanan at the time what those impressions were, would not tend to exculpate Mr. Buchanan or clear up the matter at all.

The Chairman: These impressions appear to have been produced by conversations in the office among the gentlemen there. Whatever is taken down here can only go for what it is worth. They are impressions distinctly. I have asked the question in reference to "impressions," but if there are facts and circumstances occurring in a department which produce impressions and lead to conversations and remarks in that office—in an inquiry of this kind they are not only fairly admissible but absolutely essential.

Mr. Abbott: No doubt, if the inquiry was into the conduct not of any particular person, but of the office generally.

The Chairman: It is a charge that affects Mr. Buchanan and Mr. Weston.

Mr. Abbott: But in a charge against Mr. Buchanan I cannot, with respect, see how Mr. Garnett's impression can affect Mr. Buchanan, when he did not state them at the time.

The Chairman: We have not reached that point yet.

Mr. Abbott: I know I cannot say, or make objections—I would not be permitted, as in Court, but I should have commenced by asking Mr. Garnett that if he made his impressions known to Mr. Buchanan.

The Chairman: I have not the slightest objection to ask the question. At the same time I shall pursue the inquiry and press him to answer the question I formerly proposed.

Mr. Abbott: I can only make that objection.

The Chairman: I have not the slightest objection to its being recorded, not the slightest—it is quite right.

87. By the Chairman: I must repeat the question: How representing him—do you mean that the impression on your mind was that the name of Staunton was a name assumed by Mr. Weston, he being in fact the tenderer and supplier? Well, I fancy the name was assumed.

88. As to the latter part of the question—he being the tenderer and supplier? That I do not know anything about; I do not know who supplied.

89. You wrote the orders? Yes.

90. Addressed to James Staunton? Yes.

91. And the impression on your mind was that James Staunton was John Weston? Was a fictitious person.

92. A fictitious person, Mr. Weston being the real supplier? Yes.

93. Then your addressing these orders to Staunton—the goods being supplied—and believing James Staunton to be John Weston—what is the inevitable conclusion? Well, I do not see any inevitable conclusion.

94. You observe—you address an order under this accepted tender to James Staunton? Yes.

95. You state that the impression on your mind is that Staunton is an assumed name? Yes.

96. A name assumed by Mr. Weston? Yes.

97. The goods stated in your order addressed to James Staunton are supplied? Yes.

98. Then by whom were they supplied? Well, I suppose by Mr. Weston.

99. That was the drift of the question, to get a plain answer. Was this a matter of current and ordinary comment in the office—was it repeatedly alluded to? We have sometimes spoken of it; we have avoided it as much as possible, I think.

100. Then who did you believe the person to be who signed the name of James Staunton to the tenders and to the receipt? I thought Mr. Weston did.

101. Had this been a matter of comment in the office previous to that tender being received and accepted? I do not know.

102. You can observe the date of this one (Appendix No. 5.)? That is rather an old one.

103. September, 1858? Yes.

104. You cannot recollect whether it had been a matter of comment in the office,—whether there had been an impression in the office that Mr. Weston was supplying under the name of James Staunton when this tender was received and accepted? No, I cannot.

105. Have you heard what is the charge that is the subject of investigation by the Board? I have heard a great many charges.

106. The Government having reason to believe, from information they have received, that large quantities of stores on account of the public service have at various times been tendered for and supplied by Mr. Buchanan and the late chief clerk of the Colonial Storekeeper's Department, Mr. John Weston, under the assumed names of James Staunton and Staunton and Co.; that is the charge—of goods having been supplied by Mr. Buchanan and Mr. Weston, under the assumed names of James Staunton and Staunton and Co.; now are you in possession of anything that you have not stated to the Board that will enable you to throw any light, or to inform the Board of any matter connected with and bearing on the charge? No.

107. Nothing beyond what you have stated as matter of conversation and of impression in the

Mr. Henry
Garnett.

4 Feb., 1860.

the office? Yes; that is the only thing. The tenders all came in, you know, in a regular manner.

108. With whom was this a matter of conversation and comment in the office,—with all the clerks, or only with particular ones? I think with most of them.

109. With most of the clerks in the office it has been a matter of comment and conversation? Yes.

110. Was it ever mentioned by any one to Mr. Weston himself? Well, I think Mr. Jones did one day.

111. Mr. Jones? Yes.

112. Is Mr. Jones now in the office? No.

113. Were you present when it was done? Yes; there was a little dispute, and Mr. Jones said there was a lot of things coming into the office which no one knew anything about.

114. Did he directly tax Mr. Weston with this? No.

115. Only implying? Implying—a sort of muttering.

116. Did Mr. Weston hear it? Well, I do not know.

117. From the way it was spoken, and the position they were in relatively to the others in the office and to yourself who did hear it,—do you think Mr. Weston heard it? I dare say he did.

118. Did he make any comment? No, he merely said Jones was always making some foolish remark.

119. Did Mr. Weston report Mr. Jones having said so to Mr. Buchanan? Not that I am aware of.

120. Did you yourself ever mention to Mr. Buchanan the impression on your mind of anything that had passed in reference to this supposition in the office—that it was an assumed name, and that Mr. Weston was, in fact, tendering? No.

121. In any of the comments that passed in the office respecting this, was Mr. Buchanan's name introduced as connected with this matter? Well, he was supposed to know about it.

122. That was the impression in the office? Yes.

123. That he knew? That he knew who Staunton was.

124. That he knew that Mr. Weston was supplying under the name of Staunton? Yes.

125. Have you any knowledge of the delivery of the goods after the orders? No.

126. The foreman of the stores does not bring you the order? No; he marks "Received" on it and delivers it back.

127. Does he bring it back when the stores are received? The orders generally come in in support of the accounts.

128. And they are not brought in before every entry, are they? They are brought in to be marked "Received," in the order book.

129. Was that a part of your duty? No.

130. Who was the clerk whose duty that was? I think it was Mr. Jenkins.

131. He is foreman of stores, is he not? Yes, he brings the orders down and marks them off in the book.

132. He, himself? Yes, latterly he gave them to Mr. Wise, I think.

133. Has the delivery of those stores by James Staunton come under your knowledge in any way—the time of delivery? No.

134. You are not able to state to the Board how soon after the dispatch of any notification of acceptance of a tender addressed to the Post Office the order was complied with? No.

135. Will the order itself with the note on it of receipt, state the date of receipt in every case? No; it is just marked "Received," and the date is put opposite the articles in the order book.

136. But that is put? Yes.

137. And is that the date of receipt that is put? The date of receipt.

138. What becomes of the order itself? It is left with the contractor.

139. The order is? Yes.

140. But it comes back to the office? It comes back to the office in support of the accounts.

141. And what is done with it,—is it filed in the office? I do not know really; that is all done in the account branch.

142. Who are the gentlemen in charge of the account branch? Mr. Campbell now; Mr. Weston was.

143. Can you refer to the order book to see with reference to the deliveries by Staunton? Yes. (Order Book produced.)

144. Would you go back to 1858,—trousers, jackets, and waistcoats tendered for? The 16th June. They are merely marked received.

145. There is no date? No.

146. Would the order itself shew the date? No; I do not suppose it would. It is only marked "Received" generally.

147. Is there no record kept of the dates on which goods are received? Yes, generally they are marked.

148. But it is not in that case? It is not in this case.

149. Now, will you refer to the tenders of the 22nd June, 1858? What is that for?

150. Mr. Staunton's tender is for blue or brown serge, check aprons, cotton shirts, men's stockings, flannel waistcoats, felt hats, women's shifts, and men's cotton socks? They were not all accepted from him.

151. The things accepted from James Staunton were shirts? And serge.

152. And serge? Yes; they are both marked "Received," but there is no date.

153. By Mr. Rolleston: In whose handwriting? I think it is Mr. Jenkins'.

154. By the Chairman: And in the other cases about the same time are the dates given? For Staunton? 155.

155. No, of others? Yes.
156. The dates of receipt from others are entered? Yes; it might not be in every case, you know; sometimes they are only marked received.
157. Will you refer to one of the 22nd November, 1858, in which Staunton's tender for linen sheets is accepted? It is not marked "Received" at all.
158. Not marked as received? No.
159. Was there an order sent? Yes; it is omitted to be marked "Received."
160. I see here, 9th December, 1858, there is an account for 1,600 strong linen sheets, at 4s. 3d. each,—is there any proof of the receipt of those into the store? The entry in the general issue book. They would not be ordered for any particular service, and they would be entered in a book kept for things ordered for general issue.
161. Yes; but would they not, in the usual course, be entered in that book as received? Well, they ought to be, properly speaking; but there are a great many cases where things are missed. No, the sheets are not marked.
162. They are not marked as received? No.
163. You say that it would fall to Mr. Campbell, the dealing with those orders after they were returned? Yes.
164. Previously, to Mr. Weston? Yes.
165. Is it the practice for the foreman of stores to bring in, immediately after taking over the goods, the order? Yes; he generally walks to the office and marks them off.
166. Marks them off in the book himself? Yes; but there are times when he cannot come down with everything, and then I suppose he will have to trust to memory when he is much hurried.
167. But would he not, in the usual course, bring the order with him to enter? Yes; but in a simple case, where he would be likely to remember, I think he would let the order go without marking it "Received." If he were hurried, and only received one or two things, which he fancied he would remember, I think he would let the order go.
168. Go where? Back with the man who brings it. The order is brought with the goods when delivered, and then it is taken back by—
169. By the drayman or person delivering the goods? By the person delivering.
170. And he sometimes trusting to his memory to enter it here? Yes; it is what I would do myself.
171. And then, when the account is sent in by the individual, he sends the order with it,—is that the course? That is the course. Sometimes they do not, and there is great trouble from their not doing so.
172. Is there anything else you can inform the Board of that will throw any light upon the subject of this inquiry? No, I think not.
173. You do not recollect anything but what you have already stated to the Board? No.
174. By Mr. Browne: You say that Mr. Jones, when alluding to the existence or non-existence of James Staunton as a tenderer, complained that a lot of goods were coming into the stores which nobody knew anything about,—what did he mean by that? I suppose he alluded to Staunton.
175. But did he mean that stores were coming in that had not been tendered for? Oh! no, I should not think so; because stores did not come in that were not tendered for.
176. He merely meant as applicable to a person whom they knew nothing about—is that it? Yes.
177. By Mr. Abbott: Do you recollect, Mr. Garnett, at what period Mr. Staunton's contracts were made the subject of conversation in the office first? Well, no; the first thing was Mr. Jones, I think—
178. Mr. Jones? Yes; he called attention to the fact of there being no such person as Staunton—at least never having seen Staunton—
179. Called your attention to it? Yes.
180. Do you know whether Mr. Jones and Mr. Weston were on good terms during the time Mr. Weston was in the office? Sometimes they were, and sometimes they were not. Mr. Jones was a very hasty-tempered fellow, and at the least thing said to him he used to fire up.
181. He was in an inferior position to Mr. Weston? Yes.
182. Under Mr. Weston's orders? Yes.
183. Do you recollect when he first spoke whether it was after any firing up? No, I do not.
184. Whether it was after any anger between them? No, he was so constantly getting angry with Mr. Weston about something or other.
185. Was he particularly under Mr. Weston's orders? Yes, particularly.
186. More so than any other clerk in the office? Yes; he had more of Mr. Weston's work to do.
187. Employed by Mr. Weston? Yes.
188. Did you ever hear any of these conversations, or any of those remarks, expressed in Mr. Buchanan's presence? No, never.
189. Never so that he could hear anything of it? Oh! no.
190. Did you ever mention your suspicions to him? No, never.
191. Do you know whether Mr. Jones did or not? I do not know.
192. Do you believe that he did? It would be impossible for me to say.
193. You cannot say whether he did or not? No.
194. Is Mr. Jones in the office now? No; he is up at Moreton Bay, I think.
195. Did he leave the office on good terms with Mr. Buchanan? With Mr. Buchanan?
196. Yes? Yes, as far as I am aware.
197. You were speaking of having addressed notices intimating the acceptance of tenders to Staunton and Co., to the Post Office? Yes.

Mr. Henry
Garnett.
4 Feb., 1860.

- Mr. Henry Garnett.
4 Feb., 1860.
198. Do you not, in the course of your duty, often address letters to other persons at the Post Office? Sometimes.
199. In fact you addressed them to any address they gave you? To any address that was given.
200. Did not tenders sometimes come into the office without giving any address at all? Yes, I think so.
201. They were very often very irregular? Yes; tenders have come in that I did not know where to address to.
202. Have you not had tenders come in even without the name of the tenderer attached to them? Well, I do not call to mind an instance just now.
203. The order book, you say, is not kept by any person in particular, is it—the book in which the orders are marked? No.
204. Is it kept by any person in the office in particular? No, I do not think it is. I think Mr. Jenkins—
205. The foreman? The foreman, marks off most of the orders. I have marked off orders in it myself; he has come to me and told me to mark off orders.
206. Sometimes he does it himself, and sometimes he asks one of the clerks? Sometimes I might be using it, and he would tell me to remember and write off such and such things, in which case I would put "Received."
207. If you thought of it? Yes.
208. Do you know anything as to the delivery of goods? Nothing.
209. Do you know whether there was ever any rumour in the office as to whether James Staunton's goods had been delivered or not? Had not been delivered?
210. Yes; any doubt as to the delivery? No, never any doubt.
211. Then the remarks were merely as to the identity of the person? Merely as to the identity of the person.
212. Have you any reason to suppose, Mr. Garnett, that those goods tendered for by James Staunton have not been all delivered? No.
213. None whatever? No.
214. You never heard anything to that effect? Oh! no. I would be safe to have heard of it if there were.
215. You would be sure to have heard it? Yes.
216. Then, although the foreman or the clerks may neglect to enter in the order book the orders themselves must be marked before payments are made,—the orders must be marked by the foreman as having received the goods, and those orders sent in with the accounts before the accounts will be paid? Well, in some cases I think the accounts have been paid without the orders. I used to hear Mr. Jones complaining,—I think it was about Thompson, Symonds not sending in the orders with the accounts. It made it more difficult to check the account. He can always tell whether the goods have been received—the foreman of a warehouse can.
217. That is the regular course—payments are not made unless the orders are sent in marked? I fancy if they were marked off in the book, although the orders were not sent in, the accounts would be paid.
218. But there must be one or the other—either the order marked or marked off in the book? I think so; the accountant will see that the things are delivered before they are paid for.
219. That was the way you checked—either by the book or by the orders themselves? Yes.
220. Did Mr. Weston ever enter in that book—have you seen in any of those entries to-day his handwriting? No.
221. That book is not supposed to have been regularly kept,—you do not consider it as having been regularly kept? How do you mean?
222. You do not consider every order for goods supplied —? Written off as supplied—
223. Yes; not regularly? There are a great many I think not written off now, but then they would be written off on the orders.
224. By Mr. Rolleston: Did you mean entered in the book? Written off as received.
225. By Mr. Abbott: He says they must receive the order marked as received, or else it must be marked in the book as received.—Those notes of receipt of the goods were not regularly made? They appear —
226. You have seen to-day several omissions? Yes. It does not much matter, because the articles we know from the issues whether they have been received or not.
227. But that would be late you know? Yes.
228. And was the impression in the office that every order was noted as the goods having been received under it—that the book was kept up entirely, or was it the opinion that it was left undone in some cases? It was the opinion that it was left in some cases. I have heard Mr. Jones checking the accounts, inquiring as to things being left unchecked as received, and then they are marked off if they have been received.
229. Afterwards? Yes.
230. And you have sufficient check on the mistakes in the book by the orders themselves? Yes.
231. Do you consider, now, Mr. Garnett that that book is a perfect record of the receipts entered in it or supposed to be entered in it—a complete record of goods received in the stores? No, I do not think it is.
232. Is it usual in all cases to record the acceptance of tenders? To record?
233. To record the acceptance of tenders, or to keep a record of the letters notifying the acceptance of any particular tender? No. I generally, when I enter them, just write out the notifications to the different people—at least address the printed notifications and send them off the same day.

234. Without keeping any record at all? Without keeping any record at all. I sometimes mark "Parties informed," and the date, in the contract book. I may have missed it sometimes.
235. You do not generally do it, or it is not considered to be an absolute duty? No; it is only latterly that I have begun to put "Parties informed," just for my own information.
236. For your own information? Yes.
237. So that, in fact, you do not consider that the fact of James Staunton or Staunton and Co's contracts—or the acceptance of them not having been notified—you would not take any particular notice of the fact? No.
238. No more than any other? Not more than any other.
239. Whose duty was it, during Mr. Weston's time, to make payments? Mr. Weston.
240. His own peculiar duty? Yes.
241. And no other clerk in the office had anything to do with it? I do not think so. Mr. Jones used to prepare accounts for payment.
242. By Mr. Weston's direction? Yes.
243. Mr. Weston used to make the payments and send the cheques? I do not know. He used to get Mr. Buchanan to sign them, and then either to take them direct or send them.
244. Since Mr. Weston left the office did you hear him say anything about his connection with Staunton and Co., or James Staunton? No.
245. Have you heard anything more about it since? I have heard that he is James Staunton since, but not from him.
246. Have you ever heard it stated in the office—have you ever heard it said, that he told anyone in the office so? Oh, no; I have not been at the office lately, I have been ill.
247. How long have you been away? Three weeks.
248. Then for all Mr. Buchanan might know of the matter, half the tenders might be sent here under fictitious names? Well, they might.
249. Unless they are known people—people known in Sydney? Of course he would know their names.
250. And all the others might be fictitious names? Yes.
251. Giving any address they liked? Any address—it does not matter what they call themselves, I suppose, so long as they send in the things good.
252. Can you recollect, Mr. Garnett, whether it was usual for the contractors themselves ever to come here, or merely their servants? Well, some of them came here I think, and some the money was sent to.
253. But there was no rule at all? No rule.
254. The money was paid to anyone who appeared to be properly authorised? Yes.
255. They had to produce the vouchers? Yes.
256. Do you recollect whether you have ever seen Thompson and Symonds, and Sheriff, and other contractors well known in Sydney here at all? Mr. Thompson, I have seen down here; Mr. Sheriff, I do not think I have ever seen here.
257. And Mr. Sheriff has often contracted? At least we have purchased a good many things; I do not know if he contracted much.
258. He has often supplied the stores? Yes, often.
259. And Hawley and Company have, I think? Yes; young Holdsworth has been down here about business.
260. He is employed by them? I do not know that he has ever come for money.
261. You know nothing personally as to the delivery of the goods at the stores at all? Nothing personally.
262. By the Chairman: With reference to your reply to Mr. Abbott—you have given evidence that it is the usual practice to record these notifications of acceptance? Not the notifications; the letters written are usually entered.
263. You drew a distinction between letters and printed notifications? Yes.
264. And you now mean to explain that it is not usual to record in the letter book the dispatch of notifications? No.
265. Is there any record made? No; I write out as soon as I get the schedule to enter.
266. Write out what? The notifications; it is necessary to let the people know.
267. Is there any record kept in the office to that effect—of notifications being given? In some cases. The notifications for all the yearly contracts are entered.
268. Is it the general practice to make such a record? No, it is not. I generally put "Parties informed" at the foot of contracts—latterly.
269. Is that latterly only? Yes.
270. Is that the usual course? The usual course.
271. How long has that been the course? I do it only to see that I have done it.
272. How long has it been the practice? Some months.
273. As far back as the beginning of the year 1859? I do not know that it has.
274. Or in 1858? I think it must be on the tender I have put it.
275. On the tenders themselves? Yes.
276. But there is no established practice as regards that? Oh! no, none.
277. You say that this is not a complete record? I do not think it is.
278. You do not consider that as a complete record? No; I think there are things ordered for the general service that do not appear in it sometimes.
279. Will you look at the several headings filled in, and inform the Board whether it does not appear to have been a complete record? Yes, it is intended to be, I suppose.
280. And is it a complete record of all that is entered in that book? How do you mean?
281. Are all the several particulars filled in—if you will read the headings? Yes, I think so.
282. And what is entered in the book, fulfils what it was intended to fulfil? Yes.

Mr. Henry Garnett.

4 Feb., 1860.

- Mr. Henry Garnett.
4 Feb., 1860.
283. Is it a complete record of what is inserted in the book—of each separate transaction entered? Yes, I fancy so, as far as it goes.
284. Generally speaking it is a complete record; in some instances it is not? Yes.
285. Are there in that book recorded any of the transactions to which I have been calling your attention as regards Staunton's tenders and supplies? The orders are entered there.
286. The orders? Yes.
287. And the receipt? Yes.
288. And the date? Not the date.
289. As regards others is it generally so? Here is one which is ticked off and not marked received.
290. And no date? Yes. Here is another for a pair of telescopes; it is ticked off, but there is no date. There is bark for a pilot at Port Macquarie; we have marked it received because we have got the account.
291. But there is no date? No date.
292. Is that ordinarily the case or otherwise—is the date in the majority of instances given? In the majority of instances it is in.
293. You have stated, Mr. Garnett, that the account is checked when sent in either by the book or by the order itself? Yes, I believe that is the usual course; I do not know exactly.
294. And who checks it? Either Mr. Jones, or Mr. McDonell, or Mr. Weston.
295. Then they would be in a position to say, as regards these particular accounts which are not marked as received, whether the order book shewed that they had been received and the accounts had been checked by that order? If they recollect it. I should think Mr. Weston's accounts will shew.
296. How will it shew that it was checked? I suppose that whoever checks it initials it.
297. But that would not shew how he checked it? No.
298. It is to connect what you say with the absence of note or record of receipt;—if the order was not received, you said it would be checked by the entry in the book? Or if not by Mr. Jenkins' knowledge of the goods having been received.
299. Merely from memory? I should think so. I do not know what the usual course of checking accounts is.
300. By Mr. Abbott: The checking you refer to as being made by that book is as to whether the goods have been received or not? Yes.
301. You merely speak as to the receipt of the goods? Merely as to the receipt of the goods.

Mr. Edmund Jones called in to be examined:—

Mr. Abbott: I think I ought to object to Mr. Jones being examined, he having been in hearing of the evidence of the previous witness. I not know whether he is the Mr. Jones referred to.

The Chairman: He is not the Mr. Jones referred to. I will put it to the Board whether they agree with me or with you. I am of opinion that Mr. Jones is a perfectly eligible witness.

Mr. Abbott: My objection is this,—in all Courts of law we never allow one witness to listen to the statement of another.

The Chairman: That depends upon whether they are ordered out of Court or not.

Mr. Abbott: I should not think of taking that liberty here; I could demand it there; I could not do so here, because I did not know whether Mr. Jones was to be a witness or not.

The Chairman: My own opinion is that there can be no objection. I shall put the question to the Board that Mr. Jones be examined.

Question put and passed, and Mr. Jones' examination proceeded with.

- Mr. E. Jones.
4 Feb., 1860.
1. By the Chairman: You are in the Customs Department? At present I am.
2. Holding what position? That of first landing waiter.
3. How long have you been in the Customs Department? Eight months.
4. You were previously in the Audit Office, at the head of the examining branch? Yes, I was examining clerk.
5. And in that position the accounts of the Colonial Storekeeper's department came under your notice? Yes.
6. Will you explain to the Board the nature of your present duties in the Customs? The duties of a landing waiter are fixed to be—the attending to the discharge of all goods landed from a ship; the examination, the searching of them; and, as a protection to the revenue of the country, to weigh all goods that require weighing for the purpose of revenue; to gauge spirits; to measure spirits.
7. In the discharge of those duties, did the cargo or any portion of the cargo of the "Walter Hood" come under your observation? I was appointed landing waiter to that ship.
8. Landing waiter to the ship? Yes, she is under my charge now.
9. Can you state to the Board whether there were any cases landed from that vessel consigned to James Staunton? There were thirty-nine, if I remember rightly—thirty-nine cases of paper.
10. And consigned to James Staunton? To James Staunton.
11. Not Staunton and Co.? I do not remember now whether it was "James" Staunton. I know it is "J." Staunton. I can speak positively to "J. Staunton," but I cannot say positively whether it was James.

12. It was not Staunton and Co.? It was not Staunton and Co. If you could just allow me two or three minutes I could get you the entry from which they were passed at Campbell's wharf. The landing waiter is in charge, if you will despatch one of the messengers. (Messenger sent for entry.) If I remember rightly the entry is in Mr. Weston's handwriting. Mr. E. Jones.
4 Feb., 1860.

Mr. Abbott: We have not come to anything about Mr. Weston yet.

The Chairman: There is no objection to the witness giving information in connection with the question put to him previously.

Witness: If the entry were passed by a Custom House Agent I should have said it.

13. By the Chairman: That was the question I was about to put to you next—by whom the entry was passed? I have the examination of all the entries, that is part of my duties.

14. Can you state by whom the entry was passed? By Mr. Weston, for Mr. Staunton.

15. For Mr. Staunton, not for Staunton and Co.? I think not; however, the entry will be here presently.

16. Have you any knowledge of what became of those cases? Yes, they were delivered from the wharf.

17. Where? They were delivered to one of the draymen.

18. And where were they taken to, do you know? They were taken into this yard, and brought into this yard.

19. From the wharf? From the wharf.

20. Being addressed to James Staunton, not Colonial Storekeeper, or "Stores"? The cases were landed. My attention was drawn to the fact of them when the entry was passed, and I observed when the goods were landed that they came to this department.

21. Have you any knowledge by whose direction they were brought here? No.

22. It has not come under your knowledge? No; we have nothing to do with the delivery of them.

23. Do you know who employed the draymen? I cannot say.

24. Do you know what drayman it was? I do not know the name of the carter, but the drays belonged to a man of the name of Murphy; he is a licensed drayman attached to the Customs.

25. Was there more than one load? There must have been twenty loads—eighteen, perhaps.

26. Loads? Yes; there were thirty-nine cases.

27. They must have been large cases? I should take them to be very weighty from the fact of seeing the men loading the dray. It would take four or five men to lift them on the dray, with a pair of pulleys.

Mr. Abbott: It would save the time of the Board if Mr. Weston were examined; he would state the whole matter.

The Chairman: It is open to Mr. Buchanan to save time—

Mr. Abbott: It would save time. Mr. Weston is prepared to confess all this—that he had his goods consigned to himself.

The Chairman: Is he prepared to confess what is in this letter?

Mr. Abbott: Certainly not.

The Chairman: At a future stage of the proceedings it will be open to Mr. Buchanan to call Mr. Weston.

Mr. Buchanan: I tell the Board in clear and distinct terms, Mr. Weston has assured me that he is prepared to appear before them at their call, and state all he knows of this transaction.

The Chairman: I have simply to observe, that the Board will call all evidence they may think necessary themselves; and they will be prepared to hear all evidence that Mr. Buchanan, or Mr. Abbott for him, may wish to call.

28. By the Chairman: Did this name you saw on the entry, "J. Staunton,"—to whom these were consigned—recall to your recollection having ever seen those accounts in connection with the Colonial Storekeeper's Department, when you were in the Audit Office? It did.

29. In what way? In the examination of accounts and the recording of accepted tenders—that had been accepted through this department—it was part of my duty, as examining clerk in the Audit Office, to keep a record of all contracts that came under my notice. The notices of contracts issued in the Gazette I had copies of, and whenever the accounts came before me for examination, I referred to these notices to know whether a contract were ever called for. If I found that a notice had been inserted in the Government Gazette calling for tenders, and that no tender accompanied the account, I immediately asked for it.

30. In the case of the accounts in which you had seen Staunton's name, had you seen the tenders—had they been furnished, and had you sent for them? No, I think not—not the original tenders.

31. Had they been called for? The question respecting original tenders being filed in the Audit Office of all stores, was settled some time ago—I dare say before you were in the office—that they should all be recorded in the Colonial Storekeeper's Department, and certified copies furnished in satisfaction of the accounts.

32. Were certified copies furnished? In some cases I found, in the examination of the accounts of the Colonial Storekeeper's Department, the greatest difficulty in getting information respecting tenders.

33. Is that the book to which you allude as making the entries of the contracts [book produced]? This is the contract book; but there were many contract papers in the Audit Office apart from those—they were kept as a record. You will see here the manner in which I notified for our own information the parties who had accepted tenders, and the articles. That is my own writing. These are the notices I refer to, that I took out of the Government Gazette, calling for particular tenders; and when the tenders were sent to the Audit Office for information and registration, I took a note in this way.

Mr. E. Jones. 34. Will you look at these accounts (Appendices V. W. X. Y.), and see whether they are accounts in the name of James Staunton, which have come under your observation? These are accounts that I have seen; I do not know that these are the original accounts.

4 Feb., 1860.

35. Seeing the name on these packages, and seeing these packages come to the Colonial Stores, did it connect itself in your mind in any way with those accounts? Immediately it occurred to me that such a person as J. Staunton, or James Staunton had contracted largely for the supply of stores during a short time previous to my leaving the Audit Office, during the year 1858.

36. Was there anything when these accounts were under your observation, or any other accounts of James Staunton, that attracted your attention in any particular way to them? Not particularly, further than this,—that the name of James Staunton then appeared to me a name that I had never heard before in business, and in so large a way as the accounts shewed.

37. Was there anything in connection with the signature to the acquittance of those accounts that had in any way attracted your attention? Well, perhaps—I cannot say, Sir; I had better not answer that question, if you will allow me.

38. If there is anything that did attract your attention? Of course the natural conclusion would be, why I did not bring it under notice at the time. It did not occur to me then that there was a suspicion, but afterwards—

39. I asked expressly—at the time of the examination? Not at the time of the examination.

40. Did anything subsequently come to your knowledge or hearing that did recall those signatures, and attract attention to them—that revived the memory of them in your mind and roused attention?

Mr. Abbott: Excuse me interrupting you, but perhaps you will record my objection again to the admission of hearsay evidence?

The Chairman: Anything that you wish to be placed on record, shall be placed on record.

The question (39) having been read to witness, he replied: Being responsible for the examination of these accounts, immediately I saw this entry a few days since—a fortnight or three weeks ago—it then occurred to me, the signatures to these accounts. A suspicion broke upon my mind—merely a suspicion.

41. And what was the nature of that suspicion which suggested itself to you with reference to the signatures you had seen? That they were not bonâ fide signatures.

42. Then whose signature did you believe it to be; did you believe it to be the signature of any particular person—any particular individual; or, to use a more correct form in putting the question, did you suspect? I did suspect that it was in a handwriting that I had seen before.

43. And whose handwriting did you suspect it to be? I suspected it to bear a close resemblance to Mr. Buchanan's handwriting.

44. Looking now at those signatures, Mr. Jones, that are to these accounts, and looking to the signatures to the tenders which I shall place before you, will you state what is the suspicion which exists in your mind in respect to them: having the signatures before you again, and looking at them, do you still entertain the suspicion that suggested itself to your mind on seeing the goods landed from the "Walter Hood" and come into the Colonial Store? This signature was prominently in my mind when I saw the goods. (Appendices Nos. 1, 5, 6.) The signatures you have placed before me bear a very close resemblance to the signatures to the accounts.

45. Is there any one in particular of these signatures that you think more confirmatory of that suspicion than another? There is a signature to that letter (Appendix No. 5) which appears to me to differ from the letter itself.

46. To that one? The signature to that letter appears very different to the body of the letter.

47. But that is not the point to which I was directing your attention—it is if there was any one signature more than another which raises that suspicion in your mind, that you consider confirmatory of that suspicion? I should not like to speak of my suspicions.

48. I shew you this: you state that the signatures have raised suspicions in your mind, and I shew you them to ask if there is any one which, more than another, raises a suspicion? There is not.

49. But there does, as I understand you, appear to be a distinct similarity in the writing to Mr. Buchanan's? That is my suspicion. [Witness here handed to the Chairman the "entry" to which he had previously referred (Appendix No. 7), together with a certified copy of the ship's manifest.] James Staunton is the consignee.

50. Consigned to James Staunton, and the entry is passed by John Weston for J. Staunton, not Staunton and Co.? Distinctly for J. Staunton.

51. The matter this Board has been appointed to inquire into, Mr. Jones, is that large quantities of stores on account of the public service have, from information which the Government have received, been tendered for and supplied at various times by Mr. Buchanan and the late chief clerk of the Colonial Storekeeper's Department, Mr. John Weston, under the assumed names of James Staunton, and Staunton and Co. Have any circumstances come to your knowledge, or been stated to you, having a bearing upon this, and which will throw any light upon the charge, that you can state to the Board? I have, on one or two occasions, heard a suspicion respecting the supplies to this department.

52. What was the nature of that suspicion? The nature of that suspicion was that Mr. Staunton—James Staunton—was not in existence, at any rate in Sydney, supplying these stores. I have heard—I will state plainly—I have heard my brother speak of the doubts he had of the existence of such a person as Staunton.

52. Your brother was a clerk in this department? He was a clerk in this department. Mr. E. Jones.
53. And he has stated his doubts as to the existence of James Staunton who is said to be the tenderer and supplier of goods? Yes. 4 Feb., 1860.
54. Did he state to you who he believed was tendering for and supplying those goods in the name of Staunton? I cannot say that he did. I cannot remember now; of course living in the house with my brother I have had many conversations with him upon the subject of the Government Service—the Public Service generally.
55. Did he ever state to you what was believed in the office to be the fact as regarded this? He asked my advice once, I remember (it is now eighteen months or two years ago—I cannot state distinctly as to the time) whether, as he was in the habit of witnessing the payments made in the department (he used to sign as witness) he could conscientiously refuse to certify to any account he never saw paid, where he did not actually see the money paid; and on one occasion when an account was presented to him, he said, "I did not see that money paid, and I am not going to sign this receipt."
56. By Mr. Abbott: As a witness, did you say? As a witness to the payment.
57. He only told you he had said so? He only told me.
58. By the Chairman: He asked your advice upon the point, and stated this fact to you? Yes.
59. Did he mention to whom the payment was made? He did.
60. To whom was it made? To James Staunton.
61. That he, being called upon to sign his name as witness to a payment to James Staunton, refused to do so, as he had not seen the payment made to James Staunton? Not having seen the payment made to James Staunton.
62. What was the result of his having so refused? I do not know; the account was signed, I suppose, by somebody else.
63. Did he inform you what was said in answer to his refusal? There was nothing said; it was taken away from him.
64. Did he tell you who it was applied to him for his signature, and to whom he gave the refusal? I think it was Mr. Weston.
65. Did he on that occasion express his belief distinctly that the payment was not made to Mr. Staunton, or that there was no such person as Staunton for it to be paid to? I do not remember. I think from the knowledge I have of my brother's disposition that he would have said it at once.
66. You think it is likely that he did say so? Yes, very likely.
67. And what advice did you give him on the subject? I told him of course never to sign an account as witness to the payment unless he could go and swear at any time that he actually did witness that payment.
68. But you cannot recall whether he did on that occasion expressly tell you that he believed there was no such person as James Staunton to receive the money? I do not remember now; he may have done so.
69. Has this matter lately assumed any importance and gravity in your mind more than it did at the time? Much more so, as I have already mentioned, from the fact of this entry. It recalled many circumstances to my mind, many things which my brother had remarked casually to me, but which I cannot now remember, in reference to the fact of there being no such person as Staunton in existence.
70. But at the time he made this statement, and asked your advice, did it not appear to you a matter of considerable gravity and importance as affecting the public service? I certainly should have told him at the time (I am fully impressed with the idea) that he should not certify or sign any account that he could not distinctly give evidence to the fact of his having seen paid.
71. But did the matter, as it was then mentioned to you, raise in your mind the suspicion and impression that there were fraudulent transactions going on in the public service as regards the supply of goods? Yes, on that occasion, or subsequently; I cannot say now.
72. Subsequently it did? Subsequently it did.
73. What was the subsequent occasion? I cannot remember now; but the fact of the name of Staunton appearing so many times as a successful tenderer, naturally tended to confirm the suspicion which I had, that there was no such person as Staunton here. I had made enquiries—at least I have heard that there was no such person as James Staunton in existence.
74. Can you recall the period, or about the period referred to in your last answer—that subsequent period when your suspicions became strong? I do not remember now.
75. Was it while you were in the Audit Department? It must have been shortly before I left the Audit Department—in examining the accounts of 1858.
76. Did you make any report of that suspicion, Mr. Jones, either to the Chief Clerk or to myself? I did not.
77. When a matter of suspicion connected with the bona fides of accounts presented itself to your mind, would it not have been your duty to have done so? If I had had any reason to ground my suspicion upon a fact, I would have done so immediately.
78. Then do I understand you to mean by that, you had no tangible, or what you regarded as a solid, ground to bring forward your suspicions? Yes.
79. That they were simply suspicions? That they were merely suspicions.
80. What is your brother's disposition—is he of a very hasty and irritable disposition? Yes, sir, he is.
81. Had he ever, previous to making that statement to you—of having been called upon by Mr. Weston to attach his signature as a witness—had he ever, previous to that, led you to imagine that he felt himself aggrieved in any way by Mr. Weston—that there was any ill-feeling existing between them? No.

- Mr. H. Jones. 82. At the time he mentioned to you this fact of his refusing to sign as a witness to payment, did he say anything to you respecting the signature and the acquittance? No, sir.
- 4 Feb., 1860. 83. Did he say anything as to who could have signed, since there was no such person as Staunton—who signed for Staunton? I do not remember him saying so.
84. Did he mention to you whether on that occasion of his refusal, he made any report of the circumstance to Mr. Buchanan? I do not think he did; he did not tell me that he had made any report.
85. Did he state to you whether any suspicion of there being no such person as Staunton in existence, and Mr. Weston being in fact the person who had assumed the name of Staunton—did he mention such a suspicion existing in the department as a matter of comment? No. I may mention that for many months past my brother and I have not lived together; he used to live with me in the house—he in conjunction with myself supported the house, but from a little personal and private disagreement he left, and I had very little intercourse with him afterwards.
86. Did he make any comment as to how the notification of the acceptance of tenders was made to James Staunton? No, sir; I do not remember; I do not think he ever did.
87. Was there any other account excepting the name of Staunton connected with the Colonial Storekeeper's Department that came under your notice and attracted your attention in any way, and raised suspicions of the same nature as those which you mention you entertained? There was one I think I recall to my recollection which I have heard my brother say was from a tenderer of the department.
88. Have those accounts come under your notice previously? [Accounts handed to witness.] (Appendices Nos. 8, 9, 10.) Yes; they have passed during the time I was examining clerk of the Audit Office.
89. The name in which those accounts are, and the acquittance——? James King; that is a name I have heard my brother speak of.
90. In what way? As being a contractor for supplies to the department.
91. Merely speaking of him in the ordinary way as being a contractor, or as there being any suspicious circumstances? As being a doubt in his mind.
92. Whether there was any such person? Whether there was any such person.
93. Did he tell you who he believed was supplying in the name of James King? No; I do not remember now that he did.
94. Is the signature one that you know anything of yourself beyond seeing it to those accounts, or is it one that you have entertained a suspicion about from what your brother has said, or from any other cause: is there anything in the signature itself that has raised any suspicion in your mind? No, sir; I should take that handwriting in the body of the account to be Mr. Weston's. (Appendix No. 10.)
95. But not in his usual hand? Not his usual handwriting.
96. It is not an uncommon thing for the bodies of these accounts to be filled up in the Colonial Storekeeper's Department? That is one in Mr. Weston's handwriting. (Appendix No. 9.)
97. That is his ordinary handwriting? Yes.
98. But this [voucher 226] (Appendix No. 10) is not in Mr. Weston's ordinary handwriting? No.
99. Were there any other goods landed from the "Walter Hood" consigned to James Staunton besides those which have come under your own knowledge? No.
100. Are you aware whether there are now, or have lately been in the Argyle Store, goods stored in that name? No, sir.
101. Where is your brother now? At Moreton Bay.
102. Is he in the public service? No.
103. Is he engaged in private business? Yes; he is endeavoring to make an agency down there. He has been trying to get an appointment, at least he has an application in for a Government appointment.
104. Being aware of the nature of this charge, Mr. Jones, is there any other information or light you can afford the Board with reference to it, in addition to what you have already stated? No; I have stated all that from the fact which has now come under my notice within the last three weeks that my impression has been; or that my suspicion and my brother's suspicions are now confirmed, that James Staunton was not a bonâ fide person supplying stores to this department.
105. And that consequently the signature put forward as his, could not be a genuine signature? Is not a genuine signature.
106. Cross-examined by Mr. Abbott: Do you remember how many packages were brought into this yard? Well, no, I did not count them all.
107. How did you know they were brought into this place at all? Because I saw several loads of them come.
108. Where were they landed? At Campbell's Wharf.
109. But you could not see into this yard from Campbell's Wharf, could you? I could see whether a dray turned into this yard or not from the adjoining street.
110. And you saw it turn into here? I saw it turn into here.
111. Did you take any particular trouble to see where they did go to? I took that trouble; for I walked from where the ship was discharging to the end of Campbell's Wharf, at the end of this street.
112. To see where the goods were taken to? Yes.
113. And you also took some trouble to find out who owned the dray? There was no trouble there; I simply asked a question, and it was answered—it fact I saw it on the dray, I think; I believe it is on the dray.

114. What was your duty when in the Auditor General's Office, Mr. Jones—the auditing ^{Mr. E. Jones} of accounts, I think? The examination of accounts.
115. And the Colonial Storekeeper's accounts, as well as others, came under your inspection? Yes, passed through my hands for examination. ^{4 Feb., 1860.}
116. At the time you were in the Auditor General's Office, was it then that your brother spoke to you of his suspicions? It was at one time whilst there.
117. You never made any report of it? No, I did not; because I had no grounds for doing so.
118. But you had sufficient ground to suspect there was something improper going on? That would not be sufficient to make a charge against a department.
119. You had sufficient grounds to create suspicion? Yes, in my own mind.
120. And you never mentioned these suspicions to anyone in your own department—never reported them? I did not report them officially.
121. Did you not consider it your duty to do so? No; if I had, I should have done so. If I had had, as I say, any good grounds—any reason which I could have adduced in support of my suspicions, I should have done so, as I have now done.
122. Did you tell your brother that it was his duty to speak of your suspicions when he asked your advice? No.
123. Did you ever have any opportunity of seeing Mr. Buchanan's handwriting, beyond his signature to accounts? I have frequently seen his handwriting in official letters.
124. Official letters? Yes, official letters; I saw his handwriting very frequently while I was in the Audit Office.
125. Is he in the habit of writing letters himself, or are they written by the clerks? I have seen letters in the handwriting of Mr. Buchanan, and also in the handwriting of others in the office.
126. Have you ever seen him writing? No; I cannot say that I have seen him writing.
127. And those letters that you suspect to be in his handwriting you could not state positively were his? Not positively, but I have seen his handwriting.
128. Which you believe to be—? Believe to be, to the best of my knowledge.
129. You know the signature very well? The handwriting as being different to any one else's, and the handwriting bearing a resemblance to the signature; I have seen the recommendations of tenders, written in Mr. Buchanan's own handwriting, come direct from him to the Audit Office.
130. Which you believe to be his handwriting? Which I believe to be his handwriting.
131. But never having seen his writing, you could not state positively that these letters were written by him? I could not say positively that they were his own—that I saw him writing them.
132. You could not swear positively that they were his writing, not having seen him write? I should say, to the best of my knowledge and belief, that they were his writing.
133. If it were necessary to swear it, you would not swear that it was his writing? I cannot recall to my recollection any circumstances where I have seen Mr. Buchanan writing.
134. And you believe, from the knowledge of Mr. Buchanan's writing obtained in that way, that the signature, "James Staunton," was written by him? I do not believe it; I had a suspicion that it was.
135. When did that suspicion occur to you? It has occurred to me since I discovered the goods coming to this department in the name of J. Staunton.
136. But you could not keep these signatures in your mind without seeing them again for so long a time—eight or nine months at least? Yes; the suspicion which I had at the time I was in the Audit Office—I had a suspicion then, I may tell you, from an impression made upon me—was partly confirmed, as I thought, from the fact of these goods coming direct to this department for James Staunton.
137. Now, did not the suspicion that that signature was in Mr. Buchanan's handwriting first occur to you after the goods had come out by the "Walter Hood"? No.
138. The suspicion that the signature was Mr. Buchanan's? No; I think I entertained the suspicion before that.
139. You think you entertained it before? Yes; before that.
140. These accounts in James Staunton's name, that had come under your notice in the Auditor General's Office, were all regular and correct? They were very well prepared accounts.
141. There was nothing particular about them any more than other accounts? They were very well prepared accounts.
142. They were quite as regular? They were well prepared; but I will state that in the examination of the Colonial Storekeeper's accounts I used to have a great deal of trouble in getting information to enable me to certify to the passing of them.
143. In all cases? No; in many cases.
144. In Mr. Staunton's particularly? Oh! no; not in Staunton's.
145. Do you know Mr. Weston's handwriting well, Mr. Jones? I think I should be able to tell it from any other handwriting that I know.
146. You have seen it so frequently? I have seen it very often.
147. Now, on looking at these accounts [Appendices V, W, X, Y,] will you be prepared to say that the name, James Staunton, is not in the same handwriting as that in the entry? I do not think they are the same handwriting—they are not alike, in my opinion.
148. Would you say that these accounts are not signed in Mr. Weston's handwriting? They are not like Mr. Weston's handwriting; they are not his usual handwriting.
149. You stated just now that you had reported this circumstance to the Government? What?

Mr. E. Jones. 150. That you had made this report of your suspicions now? No; I make the statement now.

4 Feb., 1860.

151. You said you had been the means of bringing this inquiry before the Government? No, I did not; I said I make my suspicions known to this Board now.

152. Have you, in fact, made a report of these matters to the Government?

The Chairman: That is a question upon which I shall take the opinion of the Board, as to the propriety of its being allowed to be put to any witness; in my opinion it is a question which ought not to be put to any witness.

Mr. Abbott: Where witnesses are asked all manner of questions—and where evidence is taken as fully as possible—and where much is got from a witness in the shape of information collected by him—whether he knows anything about it personally—or whether it is the result of mere hearsay out of doors, I think I am quite at liberty, without stating beforehand my intention, to ask Mr. Jones any question; I think I ought to be allowed to do so in justice to the accused.

The Chairman: I object to any question of the kind being put; I always objected to such a question being put in Courts of Justice. I have frequently been supported by the Judge, and seen the Judge support the same ground of objection.

Mr. Abbott: It is quite evident the Board know what Mr. Jones's evidence is to be.

[The Chairman repeated his objection, which was confirmed by the Board.]

Mr. Abbott: I think I am quite justified in asking the question.

Mr. Browne: The witness may fairly refuse to answer it.

Mr. Abbott: In a Court of Justice we say what we like and what we think; but I do not think any witness who comes here, and who is asked and allowed to give his suspicions, what he hears from everybody, what common report says; a witness, too, who has clearly and distinctly stated that he has made inquiries; that he has seen the goods and followed them to the doors—which is no part of his duty—

Witness: It is a part of my duty.

Mr. Abbott: He has stated that he has made inquiries—that he has followed these things about—and has collected information for nobody knows how long; it is brought here then ready, and Mr. Jones has got his story by heart; he has no doubt been comparing notes with somebody, and it has been all settled beforehand what his evidence is to be; it is well known—

The Chairman: But even assuming all that, what is there in the conduct of every legal business—the lawyer has his brief, and knows the case perfectly well.

Mr. Abbott: If a witness goes into a witness box with a story very “pat,” it is very soon asked who told him.

The Chairman: Your question was, whether Mr. Jones had been the informer in this case; that is a question I object to—it is a question you would not be justified in putting to any witness—it is a question I should object to in any case.

153. By Mr. Abbott: Have you ever spoken of this matter before to anyone, Mr. Jones—before coming here have you spoken on the subject to any other person? I have.

154. To whom? I decline to state that—at least I will appeal to the Board, to know whether I am bound to answer it.

The Chairman: I think Mr. Jones is not bound, if he objects, to answer that question.

Mr. Abbott: It has been insisted that the other witnesses must state even what their suspicions, or the suspicions of other people were.

The Chairman: Those suspicions having been given expression to.

Mr. Abbott: And what the ideas of other people were; there has been every latitude allowed to them; I am merely here on sufferance—

The Chairman: I leave it to Mr. Jones' own discretion whether he will answer your question; he declines to do it, and I say he is justified in so doing.

155. By Mr. Abbott: Has any statement ever been taken from you in writing, Mr. Jones? That, of course, I decline to answer.

156. You will not answer that, either? With the sanction of the Board, I will not.

Mr. Browne: It is a matter for your own discretion.

Witness: I can safely state that I have made no statement in writing.

Mr. Abbott: Oh! no, you have not written anything; that is not what I asked you; I don't care about that part of it.

157. You stated in your examination by the Chairman that you have made inquiries about this matter? Yes.

158. Will you state when? I have asked lately, since this entry was passed, whether such person as Staunton is known; I may also state that I have heard others ask the same question.

159. Only just answer my question, that is quite enough, if you won't answer what I do want. You never made inquiries before you saw this entry passed by Mr. Weston? No, I do not think I ever did; I have asked in a casual way who was Staunton; I asked, when the tenders were in for acceptance, whether there was a person in business of that name.

160. Did you ever get any satisfactory information? No, I did not.

161. Have you ever been connected with business men, Mr. Jones, in any way except through the office? No.

162. Not with the business part of the community, at all? Not in a business way; that is, I had not been in any mercantile office or agent's office.

163. And had not been connected with them—you never had to do business with them on your own account; might there not be hundreds of people in business here in a large way of whom you would hear nothing? I do not think so; there might be, certainly, many persons in business of whom I know nothing.

164. Might there not be innumerable people of whom you never see or hear anything, except ^{Mr. E. Jones.} as they might chance to come in your accounts? There may be.
165. Are you and Mr. Weston on good terms? Yes; at least I was speaking to him the ^{4 Feb., 1860.} day, I think, on which he passed his entry at the Custom House.
166. Talked to him in a friendly way? Yes, in a friendly way.
167. Had you known him for some time? Yes; I have known him by sight for many years.
168. Not personally? Personally I have known him for some years; I knew him by sight, perhaps ten years ago.
169. I suppose you have had repeated opportunities of seeing him and speaking to him? Oh! yes, frequent.
170. Do you know Mr. Buchanan personally? I have spoken to Mr. Buchanan.
171. You have spoken to him? Yes.
Mr. Buchanan: I think once, Mr. Jones?
Witness: More than once, I think.
172. By Mr. Abbott: Was that during the time you were in the Auditor General's Office? Yes; and I will just state the occasions, if you will allow me.
173. It is not necessary? On one occasion Mr. Buchanan solicited my appointment to this office as accountant.
174. By Mr. Buchanan: I solicited your appointment? Yes.
Mr. Buchanan: I deny it.
The Chairman: There will be full opportunity at the proper time for explaining.
Witness: On another occasion I saw Mr. Buchanan in the Audit Office, on the subject of my brother's appointment to this office. Those two occasions I can call to recollection positively.
175. By Mr. Abbott: Was that the brother who was here? The brother who was here.
176. Did you ever ask Mr. Buchanan or Mr. Weston any question about Staunton and Co.? No.
177. Since you had this suspicion about it? No.
178. Did you never mention the subject to them at all? No.
179. Though you have repeatedly spoken to Mr. Weston? Yes.
180. And did not you know at the time that if there was any irregularity going on, Mr. Weston should know of it, as accountant in this office? Yes; he ought to have known it, if there was any irregularity going on.
181. And you never thought it necessary to ask him any question about it? No, I did not.
182. On the day that he passed this entry did you say anything to him about it? Not about these goods; I do not think I saw him after the passing of the entry.
183. But at the time he passed the entry? He passed the entry at the Custom House; I was down at Campbell's Wharf.
184. Did you see him on that day? Yes, he left me on that day to go to the Custom House—the "Walter Hood" was hauling alongside the wharf. He saw me there, and came up to speak to me; we were speaking together, and I asked him what he was doing, and he said "he was acting as agent for a friend in England." I then asked him "if he had any goods in the 'Walter Hood'?" he said, "Oh! yes, a few packages." I then said, "Are they consigned to you" (because I had previously had the manifest, and looked down it, and did not see the name of Weston)? and he replied, "oh! no, they are consigned to me as agent."
185. Did he mention the name of Staunton at all—did he say what the goods were? No, he did not.
186. When he left you on that occasion, did you know that these were the goods referred to? No.
187. Have you ever seen him since? I do not think I have spoken to him since.
188. You have never said anything to him about it—never asked him any questions? I do not think I have ever seen him since; certainly he never came to me to make any inquiry whether the goods had been landed.
189. You could not say whether those goods sent here, were sent under contract or not for the supplying of them? I cannot tell.
190. They might have been for all you know? Yes, they may have been.
191. By the Chairman: If I recollect rightly, what was read [a portion of the evidence having been read by the shorthand writer] it is taken down that you did not state your suspicions officially? Yes.
192. Did you state them at the period you were in the Audit Office to anyone unofficially? I mentioned it to one there.
193. I ask you the question, whether you stated it to the Chief Clerk or to myself? Not to you. I mentioned it to one gentleman in the office to whom I could speak; that is the only occasion I have spoken of it to any person.
194. You stated in answer to a question by Mr. Abbott, that you have had conversation respecting these matters with some one? Yes.
195. Have you had any conversation with me upon the subject? No, sir, not any.
196. Or mentioned it in any way whatever to any member of the Board? No.
Mr. Abbott: I hope the Board will not think I intended to imply anything of the kind.
The Chairman: I have no such suspicion.
197. You did not mention it to any member of the Board? Not to any member of the Board.
198. Mr. Abbott: Perhaps Mr. Jones will tell us who he did mention the matter to? I have declined already.
199. Who you mentioned it to in the Audit Office? I will not answer that either.
200. Is he in the Audit Office now? That I decline to say.

Mr. Archibald Campbell called in and further examined:—

Mr. A. Campbell.

4 Feb., 1860.

1. By the Chairman: The orders for supplies addressed to contractors in regular course are returned by the contractors with the accounts: are they filed in the office? Generally; they do not always come back with the accounts.
2. But all that do come back are filed? Yes.
3. Can you produce the orders to contractors in 1858 and 1859? I do not think we have kept them so far back; they are considered quite useless when they have been executed.
4. What is the latest date you can produce? They are not at all regular; half the accounts come in without the orders. Our order-book is the check.
5. But we find that the order book does not state the receipt sometimes? It should.
6. But it does not? In some cases.
7. In some cases it states the receipts, and in others, without stating the receipt, it does not state the date? The date is not stated in all cases.
8. The Board were desirous of seeing the orders themselves. In the case of deliveries from James Staunton, where are the orders? I do not keep the orders.
9. Who does? Some other gentleman.
10. Are these orders kept, or are they not? Not as a general rule; as soon as the account is vouched for by the storekeeper's signature, the order is considered perfectly useless; they are not wilfully destroyed, but there is no care taken of them afterwards.
11. And can you state whether there are not any of the orders addressed for supplies to Staunton, and which have come back to the office, and which are now producible? I cannot. I think since my time I have paid two accounts to the name of Staunton, and those were vouched for by the foreman. Previous to that I had nothing whatever to do with it; my attention was confined strictly to the issuing.
12. Are there a considerable number of these orders in your possession as documents? I think there are, but I cannot say; they never came under my cognizance.
13. We had better have what there are of them, and let them be examined? I could find them.
14. By Mr. Rolleston: Where can you find them? I cannot exactly say till I look at the presses—they are in different presses.
15. By the Chairman: Will you look to this form of orders, and say whether they afford information as to the date of the receipt of goods? No, sir.
16. And no orders do? I think not.
17. And therefore will not supply the date of a receipt in case of its omission? No; but the "issue" might shew.
18. What is the issue? It might give you the approximate—the issue of the goods in question might give you an approximate to the date they were received.
19. Being merely the date of issue? Yes.
20. Have you the actual issue-book? Yes. [Book produced.]
21. Folio 535 of order-book, referring to James Staunton's supplies is shown to witness, and he is called upon to state, if he can, from the issue-book, the date of receipt of the several orders therein mentioned—that being omitted in the order-book? The order of James Staunton for sheets, dated 6th December, was supplied before the 21st of the same month. The shirts upon Mr. Staunton's tender, ordered on the 27th August, must have been received by the 3rd September—an issue of 750. The goods ordered on the 17th June, must have been supplied previous to the 1st July. The order of James Staunton of July 1st, for serge, must have been supplied previous to July 12th.
22. Can you by that book shew, when Mr. Staunton's tender of the 14th September for lighthouse requisites was issued? I might; it would be all in small details. Glass shades, 48, must have been supplied previous to the 20th November, 1858.

[The Board adjourned till a future day, of which due notice would be given.]

FRIDAY, 17 FEBRUARY, 1860.

Present:—

WILLIAM COLBURN MAYNE, ESQ., IN THE CHAIR.

MR. H. H. BROWNE,

MR. C. ROLLESTON.

Mr. Buchanan and Mr. Abbott (his Attorney) were in attendance.

Mr. Alfred Raymond Jones called in and examined:—

Mr. A. B. Jones.

17 Feb., 1860.

1. By the Chairman: You were, I believe, a clerk in the Colonial Storekeeper's Department? Yes.
2. For what period? Upwards of five years.
3. Upwards of five years? Yes.
4. How long is it since you——? On the 1st August, 1854.
5. You joined it? Yes.
6. When did you leave? On the last day of August, 1859.
7. What were the particular duties you had to perform in the office? Principally the checking of accounts, and the entering of accounts, and making up for the Auditor General's Department. Principally checking contractors' accounts.

Mr. A. R. Jones.
17 Feb., 1860.

- 8. In the discharge of those duties, did the tenders for contracts and the accounts for supplies under contract come under your notice? Yes; very much indeed.
- 9. Have you a recollection in the years 1857, 1858, or 1859, of any contractor of the name of Staunton, whose accounts came before you? I can recollect as far back as 1858 and 1859, but not 1857.
- 10. In 1858 and 1859, did the tenders of that contractor, as well as his accounts, come under your observation? Not of that contractor; I do not think I ever had any of that person's contracts under my notice.
- 11. Had you any of the accounts of James Staunton under your notice? No, I believe not; I had them generally after they were paid.
- 12. But did they come under your notice in any way? After they were paid they did—not before; not to check. They were not given into my hands before they were paid.
- 13. Then what was the duty you had to perform in reference to them, when they came into your hands? I had principally the checking of them; and seeing that those goods were delivered into the store, and marking them off in the order-book.
- 14. Was that usually done after payment? No; I always did it before payment.
- 15. But as regards the accounts of this particular contractor—they only came to you to check after payment? They never came to check at all in some instances; they were given to me in the monthly accounts, to put up for the Audit Office.
- 16. Had they been checked? Not by me; I may have checked a few of them some time or other.
- 17. Did the accounts bear the usual marks of examination and checking by an officer of the department? Not that I am aware of.
- 18. Then if I understand you rightly all the accounts of James Staunton, which have come under your knowledge, only came under your knowledge after they had been paid? After they had been paid.
- 19. Were they complete in every respect as to certificate and acquittance when they came before you? No, they were not complete; they wanted witnesses.
- 20. When they came before you after payment? After payment I refused to witness them at a certain time, because I had not seen the money paid, and I did not know who Staunton was.
- 21. How do you mean? I refused to witness.
- 22. Were you asked to do so? Yes.
- 23. By whom? By Mr. Weston, the chief clerk.
- 24. Did this occur with reference to any accounts except those of James Staunton—were you asked by Mr. Weston ever to witness payments you had not seen made of other accounts than those of James Staunton? Yes, and sometimes I have signed them knowing that they have been paid. But Mr. Weston generally signed them himself, or some one else in the office when I was not here.
- 25. Then why, having done so with regard to other accounts, did you feel a difficulty and refuse in the case of James Staunton's accounts? I did, indeed.
- 26. But why did you? Because I did not think it my duty to sign my name as a witness to accounts I had not seen paid.
- 27. But I understand you to say that you have signed other accounts? Yes, where I have known the contractors and that the payments had actually been made.
- 28. But how did you know it if you had not seen the payments made? Because I have chequed the accounts and told the parties to come down for the cheques and had the cheques in my possession.
- 29. How did you get possession of these cheques? Mr. Weston left the accounts for them to sign.
- 30. Were there any other cheques left in the same way—were not Staunton's accounts ever treated in the same way as those others? Never, sir.
- 31. Did you ever see the cheques for payment to James Staunton? I never saw one. I saw the butts of the cheques when I have been tearing them out for the Audit Office. I had to send them up with the monthly accounts.
- 32. Then what was it first attracted your attention to the accounts of James Staunton? Staunton being a new contractor, and never seeing him in the office, and the first account that came before my notice. I think James King was the first contractor of that name that I never saw. James King was the first that came under my notice.
- 33. The first instance that came under your notice of a contractor supplying whom you never saw at the office was a Mr. King? Nobody in the office knew him. I asked a few questions at the time. It was publicly mentioned in the office.
- 34. That this was a person contracting who was never seen at the office? Not to my knowledge.
- 35. Did you ever see those accounts of James King's? Yes.
- 36. By whom was the payment witnessed? I cannot say.
- 37. Were you ever asked to witness them? I do not know.
- 38. Did you ever witness them? I cannot say.
- 39. Have you seen King's accounts? Yes.
- 40. Have you ever seen those accounts (handed to witness—Appendices Nos. 8, 9, 10,) or any of them before? Yes, I have seen them. I have seen this account; it is in my own writing.
- 41. Is the body of the account (No. 8) in your own writing? Yes, in my own writing.
- 42. Did you ever see the cheques for payment of these accounts? No, never.
- 43. Whose writing is that in pencil (No. 8), do you know? No, I do not know; I think that is written by somebody in the Audit Office.

Mr. A. R.
Jones.
17 Feb., 1860.

44. And you tell me it was a matter of observation in the office, in the case of King, that the contractor was never seen at the office? It was, at the time. I remarked it in the office making out that account (Mr. Jenkins and the whole of the clerks, I wished them to be present). I asked them what kind of goods they were of which he brought samples down, and Mr. Jenkins said at the time they were very much like Government clothing, and so they were; the clothing was similar to the Government pattern, buttons and everything else.
45. Then what was the idea in your mind respecting these things when you made the observation? I had a suspicion that there was somebody connected with the department that had been getting these goods from England on their own account.
46. Did you mention this suspicion to any of the persons in the office? Yes, to the whole of them.
47. To the whole of the clerks? Yes, except Mr. Weston.
48. Had you a suspicion then that Mr. Weston was the person? No, the suspicion I entertained was that it was Mr. M'Donell. I asked him publicly if it was him, and he denied it.
49. Then as regards this it was a matter of discussion in the office—the supplies being furnished by a person under the name of James King, and whom you believed to be some person connected with the office, having a suspicion that that person was Mr. M'Donell? I did at the time suspect Mr. M'Donell.
50. Did this suspicion, and any of the conversation and rumours respecting that matter come in any way to Mr. Buchanan's knowledge? Not that I am aware of.
51. You never spoke to Mr. Buchanan yourself in reference to the subject? No, I never did.
52. Who has witnessed these accounts? (Appendices Nos. 8, 9, 10.) Mr. Weston.
53. Is that Mr. Weston's writing? [Account handed to witness.] Yes.
54. His usual style of writing? Yes.
55. Will you look at the four accounts I now hand you in the name of James Staunton, (Appendices V, W, X, Y,) and say if you have seen them, or any of them, before—if they have ever been under your notice? Yes; I have seen all these.
56. You have seen all these accounts? Yes.
57. Then as regards James Staunton, had you an impression or suspicion the same as you had with reference to James King? Yes, I had the same suspicion that it was the one party; and another person of the name of Wilson. Wilson was another unknown contractor to my knowledge.
58. These accounts, if I remember rightly what you say, always came to you after payment? After payment; they ought to have come to me before payment, for me to check them.
59. But never did so? In some instances they may have come before my notice, but very seldom. I have only remarked them when I have seen the accounts, in putting them up before they were sent to the Auditor General.
60. Through whom would they come to you in the usual course? In the usual course from Mr. Weston.
61. And what signatures would they have when they came to you in the usual course? In some instances my name would have been there as a witness, and I should have had a check mark.
62. But I want to understand, in the first place, would they come to you with Mr. Buchanan's certificate, and with Mr. Jenkins' counter-signature when they were in the usual course first given to you to check? No; I generally brought them in for Mr. Buchanan's signature.
63. And would they generally bear your initials or counter-signature in any way, to satisfy Mr. Buchanan that they had been checked? No.
64. You generally brought them yourself? I generally brought them. Sometimes Mr. Weston has brought them into this room for Mr. Buchanan to sign.
65. And was there anything that vouched to Mr. Buchanan in any way, for these having gone through a proper examination and checking before they were brought to him for signature? No; Mr. Buchanan always signed them in the usual course of office.
66. But I want to know what was the usual course of office—Used the accounts, when being checked before signature, to be brought to Mr. Buchanan by any person, or in any way, so as to vouch to him for their correctness before he affixed his signature to the certificate? In the first place I generally checked the accounts before payment was made; Mr. Buchanan would perhaps never see those accounts. He would sign the check, of course, thinking all was correct when they were all brought to him at the end of the month to send to the Audit office. That was the only time, in my opinion, he had seen the accounts.
67. To sign the certificate? Yes, that all the articles had been supplied, and that they conformed to the samples.
68. And who brought them in that way to Mr. Buchanan? Generally myself or Mr. Weston.
69. After payment? After payment.
70. Were they then always duly acquitted by the persons who had received payment? Yes, oh yes.
71. Were they duly witnessed? As far as I was concerned they were witnessed, where I saw the signature; it was all I had to look to.
72. Should you, in bringing any of these accounts to Mr. Buchanan in the course you tell me was the usual one—should you have looked to see whether they were duly acquitted and witnessed? Yes, I had done all that before I brought them to Mr. Buchanan.
73. Did you ever bring any of these accounts to Mr. Buchanan? (Appendices V, W, X, Y.) Yes.

74. These four? Well, I cannot say particularly, but I think I brought the whole of them.
75. To Mr. Buchanan? To Mr. Buchanan, to be signed at the end of the month; that is, while I was preparing them for the Audit office.

Mr. A. R. Jones.

76. Were they witnessed when you brought them? I think so; oh yes, they were always witnessed. If the signature of the witness was not here, I should have taken it to Mr. Weston to witness; I never brought them to Mr. Buchanan until they were finished.

17 Feb., 1860.

77. Was it in any of these accounts that Mr. Weston asked you to sign as a witness to the payment, and which you refused to do? I cannot say to the particular accounts, but it was some of Staunton's accounts.

78. And can you state whether the accounts you refused to sign as a witness to the payment you yourself brought afterwards to Mr. Buchanan? Yes, I believe I did bring them afterwards to Mr. Buchanan.

79. And had they then a witness' signature when you brought them? Yes.

80. And did you mention to Mr. Buchanan anything respecting that witness' signature after you had been asked to sign as a witness? Nothing; but it was publicly known in the office at the time that I had refused to sign as a witness.

81. How do you speak of publicly—how do you mean? Amongst the clerks generally.

82. Had Mr. Weston made any report of your refusal? No.

83. Then who paid the money to Mr. Staunton? I believe Mr. Weston wrote out the cheques himself and got Mr. Buchanan's signature. I never saw the cheque or anything else; I saw nothing but the butts of the cheques.

84. Was it usual for accounts to be brought with the cheques at the time Mr. Buchanan was signing them? No.

85. Then on whose faith, or under what checks, did Mr. Buchanan sign? On the faith of the chief clerk.

86. The chief clerk filled in a cheque and brought it to Mr. Buchanan simply to sign? Yes.

87. Without any bill or account with it? Without any account.

88. When you refused to sign as a witness to that payment, did you give any reason beyond the mere fact of not having seen the payment yourself? Yes; I made the remark in the office, that I did not know who these contractors were, that they were unknown contractors; and the month before I sent in my resignation, I was snubbed several times. I was made very uncomfortable, through remarking these things, by Mr. Weston.

89. By whom? By Mr. Weston.

90. What did Mr. Weston say to you with reference to it? That it was no business of mine, that I had nothing to do with unknown contractors. It was said publicly in the office. I told Mr. Weston he could go and report me to Mr. Buchanan. I had made up my mind after that to leave the office.

91. Then in every case where you took in Staunton's accounts to Mr. Buchanan at the end of the month to sign, they had "James Staunton" signed to the acquittance? Yes.

92. Was it the impression and belief in the office that there was no such person as James Staunton? It was.

93. And that it was a person in the office supplying these things in that name? Somebody connected with the department.

94. And had you any impression on your mind as to who that person was? I had.

95. Who was it that you believed to be the person? When I asked Mr. McDonell, and he denied it, I fancied it must be Mr. Weston and Mr. Buchanan.

96. And why did you fancy that Mr. Buchanan was concerned in the matter? Because Mr. Buchanan would never have written out a cheque for an amount like that, without he had known what it was for, and to whom it was to be paid.

97. Then was it not Mr. Buchanan's general habit to do as you have been explaining to me—to sign cheques without having an account before him? It was; but if it was a large amount, he would ask who it was for, and what articles that were purchased.

98. And as regards Mr. Staunton's accounts, when you took them to him, although for such amounts as from £240 to £943, was that usual precautionary question asked by Mr. Buchanan? He generally asked me when I brought him a cheque to sign, what were the articles. He could see the name who the cheque was for, but he asked what goods were supplied for this money.

99. When the cheque was brought? When he was signing the cheque.

100. But, as I believe you stated, you never took him the cheques to sign for Staunton? No.

101. And he could not have asked you the question? He never asked me the question.

102. Then you are not in a position to say that he did not ask such a question from whoever did take him the cheques? No, I am not.

103. But to go back to what you said a minute since—you said, when Mr. McDonell gave the positive denial, you then had the impression made upon your mind that it was Mr. Weston and Mr. Buchanan? Yes.

104. You then went on—in answer to my question, why you believed Mr. Buchanan to be connected with the business—to say, that he would not have signed cheques for such an amount as this without asking with reference to the goods for which they were drawn? Exactly.

105. But you did not present these cheques, and you tell me you are not able to say whether Mr. Buchanan did ask this question from whoever presented the cheques? Mr. Weston generally presented the cheques. I do not know what conversation he had with Mr. Buchanan at the time.

106. Then, you must see that the impression could not have been made on your mind that Mr. Buchanan was concerned in this matter from his not asking this question, since you are not

Mr. A. R.
Jones.

17 Feb., 1860.

not aware whether he did ask it or not? I am not aware whether he asked the question from Mr. Weston, but I never heard it mentioned from any person else.

107. But you tell me you never took up these cheques of James Staunton? No.

108. You cannot have an impression upon your mind from a circumstance that did not come under your knowledge. That is what I want to ascertain from you—what it was in fact that produced on your mind the impression of Mr. Buchanan's complicity? I had an impression—it was only a suspicion.

109. Suspicions arise, but generally they arise from something — ? The working of the accounts generally—Staunton's accounts.

110. Will you explain to the Board what it was connected with those accounts? In the first place, the accounts never came to me in the usual form, as they always did from other contractors. I never had the checking of the accounts; I never had the payment or saw a payment made.

111. Did you ever give expression to those suspicions in the office, in any of the conversations that appear to have taken place? Oh yes; very often it was publicly talked of in the department.

112. That Mr. Buchanan had any connection with this matter? No, sir, it was only a suspicion; we only suspected it to be the case.

113. But was the suspicion one that was expressed in words? Yes.

114. And by whom? By Mr. Garnett and myself, and Mr. Jenkins and Mr. McDonell; Mr. Campbell generally was silent when anything of this was mentioned.

115. Then I understand you to state to the Board, that this suspicion that Mr. Buchanan was a party to the supplying of these goods to the Government under the name of James Staunton—he himself and Mr. Weston being in fact the suppliers—was entertained in the office, and was a matter of discussion and conversation among all the clerks in the office? It was, except Mr. Campbell, who generally remained silent when the matter was brought forward.

116. Was Mr. Campbell in hearing of the expression of this suspicion? Oh yes.

117. Was Mr. Weston? Mr. Weston was in the next room, with his door open; he may have heard it, but he never let us know that he did hear it.

118. What is your belief of the fact whether it could have escaped his hearing or not? Well, if his door was shut he could not hear.

119. But you say the door was open? When it was open he might have heard.

120. And, in fact, what is your belief? That he did not hear.

121. Your belief is that he did not hear? Until I challenged him publicly—until I said that I did not know who these unknown contractors were; but I do not think he knew anything about the talk in the office about James Staunton.

122. About Mr. Buchanan being concerned in the business, is that what you mean? About Mr. Buchanan and himself being concerned. I believe he never was in hearing of the conversation of the clerks about these unknown contractors.

123. Have you any reason to believe that Mr. Buchanan was within hearing of the expression of such suspicions in the office, or of such conversations? Well, I cannot say. It was Mr. Weston's place, if he did hear anything, to tell Mr. Buchanan; and I challenged him publicly, and he ought to have reported it to Mr. Buchanan at the time.

124. But that is the only thing which would lead you to suppose that Mr. Buchanan might have heard it—because it was Mr. Weston's duty to bring it to his knowledge? Exactly.

125. When you brought these accounts to Mr. Buchanan to sign (Appendices V, W, X, Y) had they all that signature, "James Staunton," to them? I cannot exactly say. I brought the whole of these accounts, but I may have brought some of them at different times, before they were sent to the Audit Office, for Mr. Buchanan's signature.

126. All the accounts? I may not have sent all the accounts.

127. But all the accounts you did bring to Mr. Buchanan for James Staunton, had they James Staunton's signature to them? Yes.

128. The same signature as to these? Yes.

129. Then who did you believe signed that name—James Staunton—believing, as you tell me, that Mr. Weston and Mr. Buchanan were the parties who were supplying? I should have believed it was Mr. Buchanan's signature.

130. Will you point to anything in those signatures that would lead you to form that idea? No, there is nothing particular that I could point out. But it was our impression at the time, or my impression, that it was Mr. Buchanan's signature. There is nothing particular, only this is written with a quill pen, and I never knew Mr. Weston to write with a quill.

131. Then, I infer from what you say, that, having on your mind the impression that Mr. Weston and Mr. Buchanan were furnishing supplies under the name of James Staunton, and inferring from the fact that Mr. Weston never used a quill pen, and that it must have been one or the other—Mr. Weston or Mr. Buchanan—that signed the name of James Staunton; it was Mr. Buchanan who signed it because he did use a quill pen? I thought so.

132. That is the process of reasoning which led you to the conclusion? It was.

133. Is there any similarity in writing, in colour of ink, in any particular form of letters, which leads you to believe that that "James Staunton" was written by him? There does seem to be a similarity of the ink that has been used.

134. Was that a matter of discussion in the office? It was a matter of discussion—the signature.

135. The signature? Yes, because I pointed particularly to the signature. I had a sheet of cartridge paper on my desk and I had seen the name of Staunton written on that cartridge paper in about a dozen different places, and the letter "S," practised distinctly. I shewed it to Mr. Garnett and the other clerks at the time.

136. Do you mean the capital "S"? The capital S. If I had not seen these accounts now, and you had asked me what the letter was I could have marked it out in pencil.
137. Did that ever come under your notice (Appendix No. 5.)? No, I never saw that.
138. Will you look at the signature "James Staunton" to that? Yes; the signatures are very much alike.
139. Is the signature written with the same ink that the body of that is written with? No.
140. Will you look to the minute of approval upon it—by whom is that written? That is written by Mr. Buchanan.
141. Will you look at the signature "James Staunton," and look at that at the same time, and say whether there is or is not a similarity in writing? No, I cannot see the similarity.
142. Do you observe any similarity or identity of ink? The ink of the signature seems to be blacker than Mr. Buchanan's ink.
143. Then you consider it not to be written with the same ink? It may have been written with the same ink, but more of it.
144. Will you look to the signature of that tender (Appendix No. 1.)? That resembles those signatures—the writing is different.
145. Is there anything in that? Yes; this writing seems to me like Mr. Weston's writing.
146. The writing of the signature or the body? The writing of the body.
147. Whose writing do you imagine the signature to be? Well, I cannot say whose writing it is, but the party who wrote this, in my opinion, wrote the whole of the other signatures.
148. And your belief is, as you have already explained, from a particular process of reasoning, that these signatures were written by Mr. Buchanan? Yes; I have never seen that document in the office.
149. And if I recall rightly what you said, the fact of that signature was a matter of discussion and conversation in the office? Not these particular signatures.
150. The signature of James Staunton to accounts for supplies furnished—the suspicion of that signature being made by Mr. Buchanan was a matter of conversation in the office as well as other suspicions? By myself and Mr. Garnett.
151. By yourself and Mr. Garnett—and by anyone else? No, I believe not.
152. Was it usual with Mr. Buchanan, when you brought him accounts for a large sum in the way you have described, at the end of the month, for him to ask you any questions, or take any means to satisfy himself respecting them? None at all.
153. Where had this sheet of cartridge paper you alluded to as having observed on it the name of James Staunton, if I recollect rightly—where had it come from? It had been lying on my desk.
154. Was it always lying, day by day, upon your desk? Yes, until it got very dirty, and then I threw it away. I generally had a sheet of cartridge paper under me to keep my paper clean, and to check accounts on.
155. Then would it have been while on your desk that it had got these several signatures? Yes.
156. And by whom could they have been made there? I do not know who they could have been made by, but I fancy Mr. Weston may have been sitting at my desk at the time I was absent one afternoon. In the morning I discovered the signatures, and I shewed them to Mr. Garnett in the office.
157. Then your impression from that would be that Mr. Weston was practising — ? To write the signature.
158. To write the signature of James Staunton? Yes.
159. Was that before or after you had seen other signatures of James Staunton? Before.
160. Before you had seen others? Yes.
161. Then, would not that have gone to raise an impression in your mind that it was Mr. Weston who had written this signature? No, at the time I did not think so. I thought it was Mr. Buchanan's writing—the signature "James Staunton." I thought so at the time, although I thought Mr. Weston had been practising the signature on my sheet of cartridge.
162. What was it made you think so—what raised that impression in your mind? I fancied he had been sitting at my desk.
163. That Mr. Weston had been? Yes.
164. What raised the impression on your mind, notwithstanding, that it was Mr. Buchanan? Something peculiar in the style of writing. I thought it was Mr. Buchanan's writing.
165. And when you mentioned this to Mr. Garnett, what did he say? Well, I do not know the exact words he mentioned; but he fancied himself that Mr. Weston had been practising this signature on my desk.
166. Yes; but with reference to your mentioning the suspicion you had that it was Mr. Buchanan that wrote the signature to the acquittances? I cannot say what Mr. Garnett said at the time.
167. Was there any other circumstance, beyond what you have mentioned, that attracted your attention to Mr. Staunton's dealings in any way, or to the dealings in this name of Staunton? Yes; there was a great deal that attracted my notice. In the first place, the orders never went through the usual course they otherwise would; they would have been sent away by the messenger. I recollect Mr. Garnett asking Mr. Buchanan what he should do with the orders for James Staunton, and Mr. Buchanan told him to put them in the post.
168. Which was an unusual course? Which was an unusual course. If the party lived in the town of Sydney, a messenger would have delivered them after four o'clock.
169. And how were those orders addressed, do you know? I cannot say.
170. Was there anything in connection with furnishing the supplies that in any way attracted your attention or raised your suspicions? Yes. I fancied the supplies came in before

Mr. A. R.
Jones.

17 Feb., 1860.

Mr. A. R.
Jones.
17 Feb., 1860.

before the contracts had been called for, in some of the articles. I fancied the supplies have been in the stores before the contracts were called for.

171. What made you think so? I have seen bales of clothing that I am almost certain were not Government Stores.

172. Can you mention any particular instance—the marks of the packages, or any particular instance? No, I could not.

173. But you believe that there were packages of goods in the store, not being Government stores, and from which these contracts of James Staunton's were supplied? Exactly. I know in one particular case where goods were called for; there were tenders called for some clothing at one particular time, and David Jones' tenders were accepted; but I know there was clothing in the store of Staunton's at the time, and after David Jones supplied his there were others from this Staunton's used, and we paid Staunton according to his contract. It was not the lowest tender—David Jones' was the lowest; but there was a lot of stores purchased from James Staunton at the same time.

174. Not under contract? Those stores, I fancy, had been in the store when the tenders were called for.

175. But do you know it as a fact whether they were or not? I will not state it as a fact.

176. You will merely state that you believe it to be so? Yes; and other things led to suspicion. It was generally by large amounts, and stores used every year which were tendered for. Mr. Buchanan would always have written Home, as he had the indents to make out. I fancied these goods were got out by somebody in the department, knowing that they would be required.

177. Then that would go to the belief being on your mind that the indents were made purposely short? When the indents went home to England, it is my opinion that somebody connected with the department saw those indents and the items left out—principally clothing—and sent Home on their own account, and got them out, and tendered to the Government.

178. And some of these you believe were actually received in the store, and on hand to meet the supply? Exactly.

179. When fresh contracts were called for? Yes.

180. Would the books shew the receipt of all goods into the store? They ought to shew it.

181. And the storekeeper would be in a position to give satisfactory testimony as to such circumstances as you mention? That the goods—

182. Of there being goods in the store not the property of Government, and from these goods, after contracts being accepted, there being supplies issued? That there had been supplies issued before the contracts were accepted.

183. Before the contracts were actually accepted? Yes; I fancied the stores had been issued or were issued. In one particular item of shirts—I believe David Jones had a contract for shirts, as may be ordered from time to time at 2s. 5d. each. Mr. Staunton's tender was 32s. per dozen; and I believe the shirts were in the store, and used from Staunton.

184. And paid for at the higher price? At 32s. a dozen, after fresh tenders had been called.

185. Then did James Staunton obtain the contract at 32s. after fresh tenders? Yes, at 32 or 34s.

186. And during that time the shirts previously in the store were issued? Those shirts which had been previously in the store, to the best of my belief.

187. Was there anything connected with the instantaneous or particularly rapid supply of stores on a tender being accepted, that attracted your attention with reference to James Staunton's dealings? Yes, there was a particular contract in regard to those catoptric lamps; I believe they are in the store now, and have never been issued. I believe it was an item purchased, and never wanted—not wanted at the time they were tendered for. There has been some of the glasses issued previously to my leaving the department, and some of the wicks, but I believe most of the other things are in the store, if they have not been issued since I have been absent; I have been six months away.

188. Did anything connected with the arrival of these goods to the store come under your notice in any way? No, sir; I never saw the goods in the store. I neither saw the goods nor the tender—I had seen a copy of the tender entered in the contract book.

189. Do you observe where that tender is dated from? I see it is dated from Melbourne.

190. Did it come within your knowledge whether the goods came from Melbourne or not? I do not know; if they had, I think I should have had to pay a charge for cartage, and perhaps freight.

191. Is it the fact that there was no such charge paid? I never knew of a case of anything coming from Melbourne.

192. But why, if the contractor was bound to deliver them, should there be any charge for cartage or freight, no matter where they come from? It never came under my notice.

193. Why should there be any such charge—he is to deliver the goods? There should not have been a charge in that case; but it never came under my knowledge—I never knew of anything coming from Melbourne.

194. But, nevertheless, under such a contract as this the goods may have been delivered without any charge for cartage in the usual course? Exactly; without my knowing anything about it.

195. The charge which the Board is inquiring into is that which you must have collected from some of the questions—that goods were supplied under contract, the tenders being in the name of James Staunton, and were paid for, and the acquittances given in the name of James Staunton, it being supposed that Mr. Weston and Mr. Buchanan were the parties really supplying? That was the impression in the office.

196. That is the charge which has been committed to the Board to inquire into? Exactly.

197. Is there anything bearing upon that charge, or calculated to throw any light upon it in any way beyond what you have already stated, that you can inform the Board of? There was another contract in the name of James Wilson that we thought were all one; the three tenders, I fancied, were all from one party.

Mr. A. B.
Jones.

17 Feb., 1860.

198. About what period was that, can you recollect? I think it was after King's tender.

199. By Captain Browne: After what? After King's.

200. By the Chairman: Then it must have been in 1859? It was in 1858, sir; I do not think the tender was accepted; it was a tender for China oil for the lighthouse—six thousand gallons.

201. You think the tender was not accepted, although there was a tender put in? There was a tender put in from James Wilson.

202. Was that a matter which was a subject of observation and comment in the office? It was at the time.

203. Does this tender book contain only the accepted tenders? No, it contains the whole of the tenders—the schedule of tenders.

204. Then it ought, of course, to contain a mention of this of Mr. Wilson's—was it one of the annual contracts? No, it was not an annual contract.

205. What was it led you to suspect that contract? Not seeing this party, or knowing anything about him; I generally, directly or indirectly, had something to do with the contractors.

206. Was it usual for the contractors to come to the office—to be seen at the office? Yes, in most cases.

207. Did they generally come in contact with Mr. Buchanan in any way when they came to the office? Yes.

208. I see here there is a tender of James Wilson for one thousand gallons of China oil at six shillings and three-halfpence, but the tender not accepted; also, at the same date, a tender from the same person—a tender for clothing; is that the one to which you allude? That is the one.

209. I did not catch your answer to the question—was it usual for the contractors who came to the office to come in contact with Mr. Buchanan? With Mr. Buchanan or the clerks.

210. And is there under the last general question I put to you anything else that you can state to the Board, tending to throw any light or having any bearing on the subject of the inquiry which I have stated to you? Nothing.

211. Nothing in addition? Nothing.

212. By Mr. Rolleston: Were you on good terms with Mr. Weston and Mr. Buchanan? With the whole of the clerks.

213. And with the head of the Department? I never had an angry word from Mr. Buchanan; he always treated me with the greatest kindness.

214. And the same with Mr. Weston? And the same with Mr. Weston. I had several angry words with him at times, but it was over before the day was out.

215. By the Chairman: These suspicions, as they first arose in your mind—did you mention them to any one out of the office? I mentioned it in one case to my brother, about witnessing accounts. I asked him if I was justified in signing accounts as a witness where I had not seen them paid; and I told him of the circumstance. I was made very uncomfortable at the time with Mr. Weston, through not signing my name as a witness. It is nearly eighteen months since—fully, and I have not spoken a dozen words to my brother since. I have not mentioned a word to any person in the Colonies about the working of the department, or anything connected with the department, except contractors, in the usual course of office.

216. Was it on your own notion—your leaving the department? Yes.

217. Your own act entirely? My own act entirely.

218. But had this matter any connection with your seeking to leave the office? Yes. I was very uncomfortable through this affair, through having suspicions that this was the case. I felt it very uncomfortable, and the last few months in the office I hardly had anything to occupy my time with. It was very miserable indeed; my health was suffering from being confined, and I had nothing to do.

219. Why was it you had nothing to do during that period any more than previously? There was a great deal to do previously, but lately I have not had near so much work to do; one thing, I had no entering of tenders—Mr. Weston generally entered all the tenders himself lately; if you look at the contract book you will find tenders have lately been entered by other persons, and not by me.

220. Do you connect that fact with anything that preceded it? I used to mention it to Mr. Garnett that Mr. Weston entered the contracts himself, and did not ask me. I used to feel very unhappy about it.

221. When did that take place, with reference to your refusing to sign as a witness? About twelve months previously.

222. Previously? From six to twelve months after I had refused to sign.

223. Mr. Weston commenced to do what had previously been a duty devolving upon you? Exactly. This is the only letter which throws any light upon the matter. I got this in Brisbane, on Saturday, from Mr. McDonell, and he challenges me with being the informer in this affair:—

Dear Jones,

Sydney, 5 February, 1860.

Before we do any more business together, I want you to answer a question or two.

Did you furnish particulars purporting to be private conversations between yourself and your fellow-clerks, as well as your own suspicions, regarding a certain firm of Staunton and Co., to your brother, for the purpose of grounding an information against the Storekeeper's Department?

It

Mr. A. R.
Jones.

17 Feb., 1860.

It is highly necessary I should know this:—Firstly, because that information has led to the suspension of Mr. Buchanan, to the turning out of all the clerks, and the men, and to the sealing up of all books and papers, including our private letters, cheque books, and private property of all description. Secondly, because the reports all over the town are of such a degrading, disgraceful nature, as utterly to prevent us getting a living if we should be dismissed.

It is so amazing to us, when we consider what any informer can have to complain of Mr. Buchanan, of whom it may be said, a more honest and better man there is not in the Government service, that we can scarcely believe it, unless when we see ourselves, waiting like criminals, to be examined, on the Circular Quay outside of our office gates every day.

The charge against Mr. B. is utterly false, as it happens, and Mr. Weston is prepared to prove it so. I am prepared to prove the existence of a bona fide firm of Staunton & Co., in London, yet this mischievous and malicious report has had the effect of injuring the whole of us past remedy, I fear.

Under these circumstances, if you are the party who has cooked up this story, and retailed private conversations (pretty evidence against the head of a department) of your fellow-clerks, you must see, looking only at my position, my character blackened, and my situation already applied for, you must see that all connexion should cease between us.

Send me a distinct answer to this letter.

Meanwhile, as I do not wish to condemn without a hearing, your interests shall not suffer, as I will get Hamburger, of New Pitt-street, to ship the lead (white and black point) which I have bought for you at 32/- and 34/- respectively, half-a-ton of white, and 2 cwt. black, payment to be made at the end of the month.

If you appoint, or prefer any other agent to Hamburger, let me know to whom I am to transfer your business.

Yours,

J. M'DONELL.

A. R. Jones,
Brisbane.

224. The latter part of that refers to matters of purchasing goods for you? For myself.

225. There is a question I would put on the commencement of this: he says "before we have any more business together,"—have you been connected with him in business? He is a friend I had written to from Brisbane to purchase me a few articles, for which I had sent him up the money.

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 20, 1860.

Present:—

WILLIAM COLBOURN MAYNE, ESQ., IN THE CHAIR.

MR. H. H. BROWNE, | MR. C. ROLLESTON.

Mr. Buchanan and his Attorney, Mr. Abbott, were also in attendance.

Mr. Alfred Raymond Jones called in and further examined:—

Mr. A. R.
Jones.

20 Feb., 1860.

226. By Mr. Abbott: Mr. Jones, you stated, I think, that your reason for leaving the office was because you had nothing to do? No, I beg your pardon, I left on account of my health. My health was injured through the confinement, and the nature of my duties, and the annoyance I had been put to with Mr. Weston lately.

227. Then it was not because your work was taken away from you? No, it was not.

228. You and Mr. Weston then were not on very good terms when you left the office? We were on very good terms nearly always, and Mr. Weston was so far on good terms with me that he came to see me off on the steamer. We were not on good terms when I mentioned about these unknown contractors. That is the reason he got vexed with me.

229. Now, were there no private reasons for your leaving Sydney, Mr. Jones? None at all.

230. And is it not a fact that Mr. Weston was your greatest friend in the office? No; he was not a great friend to me any more than any other clerk in the office.

231. Did you not make a confidant of him as regards your private affairs? No more so than Mr. M'Donell.

232. Then up to the time you went away you had your usual work the same as you always had? In nearly all cases, except with regard to the entering of tenders and seeing original tenders—scheduling them.

233. You first suspected King's account, you said, I think, Mr. Jones? Yes.

234. Did you accuse Mr. M'Donell of being the person tendering? No, I did not.

235. Are you sure you did not? Certain.

236. Do you know whether those goods mentioned in Staunton's account were supplied here? No, I do not.

237. They may or may not have been? They may or may not have been; but where I saw that they had been issued in the issue book, I used to price them, and put Staunton's name against them.

238. But if you recollect, you stated in your examination that these goods were delivered before the tenders were actually called for? I said I suspected that some of the goods in some cases were delivered—not every tender. In some cases of tender I fancied that those goods had been in store before tenders were called for.

239. But you do not fancy things without having reason for it? I suspected that. I happened to see bales of goods in the store, and afterwards I fancied they had been opened as Staunton's goods.

240. But may those bales you saw not have been goods supplied previously under former tenders? They may or may not; but I suspected they were Staunton's.

241. But they may have been supplied by Staunton previously, may they not? No, I think not.

242. But have you any reason for saying they were not? The reason I stated was, that I had seen the bales, and knew that they had come in from Staunton's, and that they were not new tenders called for. Mr. A. E. Jones.
243. But you did not know whether they were or not? Not at the time; but I saw the tenders previously, or since. 20 Feb., 1860.
244. They may have come under previous contracts for all you know? Well, they may have come under previous contracts, but some time after the contracts were called.
245. In the nature of your duties, were you in a position to know anything that was going on in the store, except by accident? Yes, the nature of my duties brought me in contact with all the other clerks of the departments, and the stores generally.
246. The goods in the store? I had the stock book in my own charge.
247. What do you call the stock book? All goods entered in the store—goods of all descriptions.
248. But, in connection with the goods themselves, could you obtain any knowledge? Only what I could see.
249. Then you only had to do with the accounts, not with the goods themselves? Only with the accounts; but, when Mr. Campbell was absent, I sometimes took his work, or Mr. Jenkins', and, during their absence, I marked all goods that came into the stores, "received."
250. Did not you accuse Mr. McDonell of being the person tendering under the name of Staunton? I asked him if such was the case; I asked him, in a jocular manner, if he was not Staunton.
251. And he denied it? And he denied it.
252. Then I think you said that you suspected Mr. Weston and Mr. Buchanan were the persons? I did suspect; I suspected from the first time I saw the goods in the store, on account of their being according to the Government patterns—similar to Government stores.
253. And as good as any you had seen here? As good as I had seen Government stores; I fancied it must be somebody connected with this department, or somebody in England, that had been acting as an agent, or sending these goods on his own account.
254. You thought it might have been some one who had supplied similar goods before? No.
255. Is that it? No; I never thought of such a thing.
256. Then what about an agent? Before Mr. G. A. Lloyd was appointed agent, we had a Colonial agent in England, and I fancied they must have come out from him; they may or may not.
257. Did you ever mention any of your suspicions to Mr. Buchanan? Never.
258. In any way? No, never.
259. Have you any reason to believe that it was ever mentioned to him by anyone in the office? No, without Mr. Weston had mentioned it to Mr. Buchanan; but not by any other clerks in the office.
260. Not by anyone, excepting Mr. Weston did? Yes; I do not think any of the other clerks mentioned it.
261. Now, so far as the book-keeping generally and the payments are concerned, were they not altogether under the control of yourself and Mr. Weston? Not the book-keeping, only the accounts.
262. Well, that is the book-keeping, I should think? No; Mr. Weston posted the accounts in his books; I never looked into his books.
263. But Mr. Weston, and you under him—had you not the control of the account books altogether? No, I had not; Mr. Weston had them under his own lock and key.
264. I say, between you and Mr. Weston? I had only the examining and preparing of the accounts for Mr. Weston to pay them.
265. You acted under Mr. Weston's orders? I acted under Mr. Weston's orders.
266. And the books themselves were entirely under his control? Entirely under his control—that is, the book-keeping branch, the ledger, the journal, and cash books.
267. You said that, on one occasion, you refused to witness some account for Mr. Weston—to put your name as a witness to the payment? Exactly.
268. How are those payments generally made to contractors? How are they made?
269. Yes? In most cases contractors call down and get the money here, at other times we send them out by a messenger, and at other times I have gone with them myself.
270. Were they never sent through the post? No, I think not; without it was one or two accounts, I do not think there was ever any sent through the post; we paid some country accounts, but I think we paid them into the bank here.
271. Well, were those accounts always witnessed by the person taking the cheques? No.
272. Not always? I have witnessed accounts where I have sent a messenger out, with the cheques; I have witnessed them myself.
273. Then you guaranteed the payment by the messenger? Yes, and when the messenger was removed, and we had another messenger, I would not trust him; I took them out myself.
274. And you refused to witness those that Mr. Weston gave you? Yes, in some cases; there have been accounts sent back from the Audit Office where the witness was left out, (a mistake of my own) and I have signed them.
275. Do you think that on the occasion you spoke to Mr. Weston about mysterious contractors he heard what you said? Perfectly well; he was very vexed with me about it, and told me to mind my own business.
276. Are you quite sure he heard you? Yes.
277. Did you speak in an audible voice? Yes, if you will call the clerks I'll be bound they won't deny it; they all heard me.
278. If anyone said that you spoke in a muttering voice, and that it is improbable Mr. Weston

Mr. A. R.
Jones.

20 Feb., 1860.

Weston heard you, they are wrong? I spoke it out plain; I am certain Mr. Garnett heard it, and he will vouch for the statement.

279. If Mr. Garnett said you only muttered it, would he be incorrect? Well, I should think he hadn't his ears open; he spoke about it afterwards.

280. If Mr. Garnett said you only said it in a muttering tone of voice, would he be wrong? Mr. Garnett may be afraid to speak out, and say what I really did say.

281. You do not say what Mr. Garnett says is incorrect? I will not say that, but he must have heard me; Mr. Weston heard me, and I am certain Mr. Garnett must have heard it, and the other clerks in the office. That was in the month of July last, and on the first day of August I sent in my resignation; I know I should have been uncomfortable if I had staid longer in the office.

282. But you had been previously for some time? I had been previously.

283. Now, is it not a fact that you asked Mr. Weston's advice as to your going away and leaving Sydney—that you told him all your circumstances? I have certainly told him my circumstances.

284. And asked his advice? And told Mr. Buchanan myself.

285. And before you resigned, did you not tell Mr. Weston, and ask his advice? No; Mr. Weston knew nothing about it until after I had sent in my resignation.

286. What reason did you give to Mr. Buchanan for leaving, Mr. Jones? I did not tell Mr. Buchanan that I was uncomfortable in the office; I told him it was the state of my health that inclined me to leave the office. Not only that, I had money I had saved, and I thought I should try a new Colony and do better for myself.

287. Now, from the time of your leaving the office to the last moment of going away, you were on very good terms with Mr. Weston, were you not? Yes, because my disposition and Mr. Weston's were about the same; we could not bear enmity against each other. If I had a few words with Mr. Weston, it was all over very soon. I told Mr. Weston at the time I spoke to him about these contractors, to go and report me, but he said he would not.

288. And I suppose you had often had, as you say, rows before there was anything said about the contractors? Oh, yes, we often had a few words at different times; Mr. Weston had a very queer temper, he was either too good or very bad.

289. But you have not the best temper in the world yourself, Mr. Jones? No, I have not—I am very hasty.

290. You mentioned in your evidence a circumstance, as to the name of Staunton having been written on paper during your absence one day? Exactly.

291. Where was that paper lying on that day? On my desk.

292. In what room did you sit? In the public room—the large room.

293. With all the other clerks? With all the other clerks.

294. What reason had you for saying that it was Mr. Weston who had written that name, more than anyone else in the place? I said I suspected Mr. Weston had been practising the name.

295. Why? Because I saw the writing on the desk.

296. But why suspect him more than anybody else? I do not know the reason why, but I did.

297. You had no reason? I asked the other clerks at the time, the next morning; of course they did not do it, and they said at once it was Mr. Weston that did it.

298. Did you ask them all? I shewed it to them all, certainly, to look at it.

299. You had no actual reason, but a mere suspicion—you have no reason for it? My suspicions were never confirmed; it is only my suspicion, and the way I have seen things going on in the office.

300. Did you consider it a very improper thing, this tendering by persons in the office? I did indeed, and I thought it an improper proceeding to take Government moneys at any time without doing the work for it; I used to feel annoyed at every little thing I saw done in the office.

301. But you did not consider any of the little things you saw of sufficient consequence to report or mention to Mr. Buchanan? No, of course not; because my suspicions were always unfounded, especially these contracts, that I would never go to Mr. Buchanan, and I should never have mentioned the subject at all, only I asked my brother's advice about some things and this affair; but as for saying anything to my brother or anybody else since, I have never mentioned a word about the working of the department, good or bad, for eighteen months, except in the office publicly.

302. During those eighteen months, have there not been more of those contracts entered into in Staunton's name than in any other period? Than the last two years; I do not think there were any previously.

303. Not before the last two years? I think the first name that I had a suspicion about was James King, then James Wilson, and the next was Staunton; and I fancied and spoke publicly to the clerks; I said, I fancied that the three were all one. And if that tender of Wilson's were produced now, I dare say the signature would be similar to Staunton's signature. I have never seen it.

304. Have you seen your brother since your return to Sydney, Mr. Jones? Yes.

305. Did you have any communication from him while in Brisbane? Not a word, nor from anybody connected with him.

306. Has he been talking to you about this inquiry since your return? Since my return.

307. You have been talking to him? Yes; I am living with mother now.

308. In the same house? Yes; I took up my abode in Cunningham's Hotel, and remained there one day, but my mother asked me to go and stay there, and I did.

309. Did he tell you that he had given evidence before this Board? He never told me a word about it.

310. What was the conversation then? I had no conversation about the department with him. Mr. A. R. Jones.
311. I understood you to say you had been speaking about this inquiry to him? Oh, no; I had been talking to him; but, previously to my being examined here, I never spoke to him upon the subject. 20 Feb., 1860.
312. Of this inquiry? Yes.
313. By the Chairman: Before your examination, on Friday last, you had no conversation with your brother touching this inquiry? No, sir.
314. By Mr. Abbott: Was it not for the purpose of this inquiry that you came from Brisbane? Mr. Lane wrote me a letter to come up; I will shew it you.
- Mr. Abbott:* I don't want it.
315. By the Chairman: You stated in answer to Mr. Abbott, that the books were under Mr. Weston's control? Exactly.
316. Were they open to Mr. Buchanan's inspection, and subject to his control? Yes, sir.
317. You said, in answer to a question in immediate connection with the matter of practising a signature on the paper on your desk, that your suspicion had not been confirmed? Not with regard to Mr. Staunton.
318. You are then, subsequently, asked as to your suspicion being confirmed; it was not quite clear whether that question referred to your general suspicion as to the matter of contracts, or as to this particular matter of the signature having been practised by Mr. Weston; but you have stated that the clerks admitted to you that it was Mr. Weston's writing—that it must have been Mr. Weston's writing—would that have confirmed, or did it confirm your own suspicion that it was Mr. Weston's? It did confirm my suspicion, or partly confirm my suspicion, that he had written the name; but it did not confirm my suspicion that Mr. Weston was James Staunton, and had signed the vouchers as James Staunton.
319. Did the fact in any way alter your suspicion as to who did sign the vouchers in the name of James Staunton? Yes, it did; I fancy that Mr. Weston did not write it as it is written on those vouchers.
320. What you saw on that sheet of paper? On that sheet of paper.
321. You have stated, in answer to a question from Mr. Abbott, that you did not think these matters of sufficient importance to report them to Mr. Buchanan? Exactly.
322. Did you not consider these matters of very considerable gravity—officers of a department belonging to the Government supplying public stores? I knew it was contrary to the Government regulations; but I never knew who the particular parties were.
323. But am I to consider that you did not deem it of sufficient importance, or that you did not consider yourself called upon to report? I did not consider them of sufficient importance; my suspicions were never confirmed that it was done with the consent or knowledge of the Colonial Storekeeper.
324. What period was this tender you speak of, of Wilson's, sent in? I believe it was in 1858.
325. I find one, James Wilson, of the 8th March, 1859—those tenders of Wilson's which you refer to, have they come under your notice—have you ever seen them? I believe not.
326. You believe you have never seen them? No.
327. Have you ever seen the signature, James Wilson? No, never; at least, I think not.
328. Will you look at the signatures of these tenders, and say whether you have ever seen that signature before? No, I think I have never seen that.
329. Then what was it raised your suspicion with regard to Wilson? Because this Wilson was another contractor I had never seen, and none of the clerks had.
330. That was you sole — ? That was my suspicion.
331. Did it come under your notice how the payment was made to Wilson for any contract? I am not sure that his tenders were accepted.
332. Those tenders were not? It was not accepted for oil; I do not know whether it was accepted for clothing.
333. Will that entry enable you to say whether the tender for clothing was accepted or not? No, I cannot say.
334. That entry does not afford the information whether it was accepted or not? No, sir, it does not afford the information.
335. By Mr. Abbott: Was it not that fact, Mr. Jones—the fact that you did not see the contractor here—which led you to suspect Staunton's accounts too? Yes.
336. As well as the others? The same as the others; I suspected Wilson was the same man that signed the name of King. Now I am almost certain that signature is the same as Staunton's; if you will examine that signature you will find——
337. But it was that fact which led you to suspect them all? That is the fact; I had never seen them, nor had any of the clerks of the office seen them, directly or indirectly.
338. Now were there not several houses well known in Sydney whose principals were never seen here contracting? Not to my knowledge. I do not think there are any contractors in Sydney whose principals, or some one belonging to them, I should not have seen.
339. Here? In the office.
340. Or somebody belonging to their house? Or somebody belonging to them.
341. And anyone coming here and saying they represented a particular house you would not suspect, but take it for granted that it was so? If any came here and said he represented such a place I dare say I should have known them. I was born in Australia, and I know nearly everybody here.
342. The majority of people in business here were not born here, and have not been long here? No, they were not.

Mr. A. R.
Jones.
20 Feb., 1860.

343. And for that reason you think you ought to know the whole of them? No; I never saw the name of James Wilson as an importer, nor Staunton, nor King.
344. Did you ever have any other means of knowing anything about business people, except as you got the information here? Yes; all my lifetime I have been connected some way or other in business.
345. By the Chairman: You have said, in answer to a question from Mr. Abbott, that it was not seeing James Staunton, or Wilson, or King, here that led you to suspect that those were not the names of bonâ fide contractors? Exactly.
346. In Mr. Staunton's instance—though that led you in the first place to suspect, were there, or were there not, circumstances which afterwards confirmed the first suspicion? Yes, my suspicions were confirmed so far that I suspected it was somebody in the office, but I do not know who; I thought it could not have been done without the knowledge or consent of Mr. Buchanan.
347. You have, in fact, stated in your first examination circumstances connected with payments and other things — - ? Which led me to believe ———
348. Which led you to suspect, as well as the first fact of not seeing them? Exactly.
349. By Mr. Abbott: When you were about resigning, Mr. Jones, you took your resignation to Mr. Buchanan, I think? Yes.
350. Will you tell us what he did with it, or how he acted? He told me I was very foolish in sending in a resignation, and asked me to apply for leave of absence for a month, or whatever time I required.
351. Did he say he would recommend it? He did; he said he would recommend me for leave of absence, and I applied for three months leave of absence, and Mr. Buchanan gave me leave to go. This was on the first day of the month; on the last I went on board the steamer at night, and went down; I had been under Dr. Hobbs' attendance three months after I arrived, and I wrote up my resignation.
352. But had you not tendered your resignation on an occasion previous to that—and did not Mr. Buchanan tear it up and advise you to stay? Yes.
353. Did you never write a second resignation? No, not in Sydney; when I was in Moreton Bay I did.
354. Did not Mr. Buchanan destroy your resignation, so as to prevent your going, and induce you to stay? He wished me to stay; Mr. Buchanan did not wish me to leave the office.
355. And he did all in his power to induce you to stay? He did. Mr. Buchanan was very kind to me indeed; but when I found I was under Dr. Hobbs' advice down there, and could not come back, I resigned my situation.
356. Before the expiration of three months you resigned? I resigned.
357. The clothing that you say was supplied by Staunton & Co.—do you know, as a fact, whether that same kind of clothing had ever been supplied by anyone else in Sydney? No, I do not.
358. Do you know whether that kind of clothing was ever included in the indents sent home, or was it imported by the Government? Yes.
359. Do you recollect what particular time? For the three years previously I had been in the office, especially shirts; we always imported shirts from England; but the shirts we bought from Staunton were not like the English shirts, but some of the jackets, I believe, were; Staunton's were rather better than the Government pattern.
360. They were rather better? Yes, a person could see at a glance that somebody who knew the Government samples had got them out; nobody would risk these things without knowing that they were wanted by the Government. They are articles which are never sold anywhere else.
361. And for the three years previously they had been imported by the Government? By the Government.
362. And the clothing entirely? We have tendered for all other articles of clothing, and purchased them from Messrs. Thompson and Symonds for the last five years—other clothing.
363. But of a similar kind? No; I never saw a similar kind of clothing come from any other house in Sydney.
364. But shirts? There is very little deviation in shirts; the shirts we use are the common shirts—bush shirts.
365. The clothing had often been tendered for in Sydney? Yes, in small quantities; but I never saw any large amounts of clothing at all until I saw Staunton and King's name.
366. Do you recollect stores having been sent back by the different establishments as not being in a proper condition for use? Yes.
367. I suppose that was a thing not at all, unfrequent? No.
368. It was common enough? It is not very common; but several times we have had them sent back, especially stationery.
369. In that case you must advertise for tenders? No. Mr. Buchanan used to write to the Treasury about these goods. If they were Government goods they had to take them; but when they were sent back to contractors, they had to send in return better articles.
370. But if imported by the Government ———? They must keep them in the store.
371. Then they must be supplied by private parties? They must have Government goods, or none at all.
372. But what is to be done with them? If they did not take them, they must be put back into the store.
373. How were the establishments supplied? I do not know. They used to purchase themselves if they wanted anything we had not got.
374. Are they allowed to do so? They used to do it.
375. With Government funds? With Government funds; but where they have exceeded the contract price, I believe they are always surcharged. Mr.

Mr. Buchanan here proceeded to put a question to the witness.

The Chairman suggested that, as Mr. Buchanan had placed the matter in the hands of his attorney, Mr. Abbott should conduct the examination for him.

Mr. A. R. Jones.

Mr. Buchanan: I wish to put a question of which Mr. Abbott can have no knowledge whatever. 20 Feb., 1860.

The Chairman: You can put the question in writing. I shall take the sense of the Board upon the matter. It will be recollected that I counselled Mr. Buchanan that if he placed the examination in the hands of his attorney, it must be left in his hands. I will take the sense of the Board, whether they are prepared to allow both Mr. Abbott and Mr. Buchanan to conduct the examination. I can see no difficulty in Mr. Buchanan placing any question he may desire to have put in Mr. Abbott's hands in writing.

Mr. Buchanan: It has been stated two or three times by Captain Mayne, that his desire is merely to elicit the truth, and that in attempting to arrive at that he is not bound by any strict rules.

Captain Mayne: I did not say that I was not bound by any strict rules; I said, by strict rules of evidence.

Mr. Buchanan: By strict rules of evidence. As there are two or three points in the evidence of this witness which Mr. Abbott does not clearly apprehend, I wish to put them myself, and claim the right to do so. If the Board refuse it, well and good.

Mr. Abbott: So far as I am concerned, I am quite in the hands of the Board. I do not say that there is anything I do not understand. If I get food for cross-examination, I will make use of it; if I do not, I cannot ask a question that I know nothing about.

Captain Browne: It is always usual where solicitors are employed to hear the solicitor, and it is so much better. We only get irregular by deviating from that rule. I can see no difficulty in Mr. Buchanan asking the question. If he will write it, and put it into the hands of the Chairman, he will put it himself, I have no doubt. I do not think you can well put a question, Mr. Buchanan, having a solicitor to defend you; write it, and pass it to the Chairman, and I have no doubt he will put it for you.

Mr. Rolleston: It will be much better for Mr. Abbott to conduct the examination all through, unless it is a point which he absolutely cannot understand and follow up.

Captain Browne: Perhaps we may not be able to understand it if Mr. Abbott is not able to understand it.

The Chairman: If Mr. Abbott himself makes the application on behalf of his client, that he should, as a matter of convenience, and to forward his interests, put the questions himself;—if Mr. Abbott states that he cannot understand them, or put them in a way Mr. Buchanan wishes, I shall be happy to entertain the question.

Mr. Abbott: I cannot say that I have any question to ask in that way. I have not seen any matter yet that I do not understand, and I cannot make the application.

The Chairman: You had better confer with your client upon the point.

Mr. Abbott: I have nothing further to ask.

The Chairman: Do I understand that you have conferred with your client, and that there are no more questions to be put?

Mr. Abbott: Not by me.

The Chairman: Have you any application to make on Mr. Buchanan's behalf, in putting the questions?

Mr. Abbott: I have none whatever.

The Chairman: Am I to understand that there are no further questions to be put to this witness?

Mr. Abbott: I have no further questions.

The Chairman: Mr. Buchanan does not instruct you to put any further questions?

Mr. Abbott: Well, I have no other to put; he has expressed his desire.

The Chairman: Have you, after conference with Mr. Buchanan, found that you are not in a position to put the questions he wishes to put?

Mr. Abbott: I cannot ascertain that I have anything to ask him further.

The Chairman: On Mr. Buchanan's behalf?

Mr. Abbott: On Mr. Buchanan's behalf.

The Chairman: Are you satisfied with having conducted the examination as far as it is in your power, to elicit the truth?

Mr. Abbott: Yes; I objected before, and I hope the Board will take observation with reference to the manner in which the evidence has been taken with regard to the legal rules of evidence. There have been leading questions put; and it is not as if a witness were on oath. They cannot help, if a witness is so inclined, (I do not accuse any one)—if he is disposed towards Mr. Buchanan in a friendly way—he could see very well what was wanted from him. As to whether it is right or wrong in an inquiry of this kind, I cannot say; but it certainly is not according to the rules of legal evidence.

The Chairman: We do not know anything about the rules of legal evidence here; but I am not aware of the questions being generally leading questions; on the contrary, I have guarded against them.

Mr. Abbott: I think if my protest is taken notice of, the questions will speak for themselves.

The Chairman: There they are, of course, to speak for themselves; but, at present, what I desire to know is, if there is anything further you, on behalf of your client, would seek or desire—is there anything that can facilitate your examination—that can in any way tend to elicit what is the object of the Board—the real truth?

Mr. Abbott: I have nothing further to ask.

The Chairman: And it is not your client's desire to have any further questions put?

Mr. Abbott: I do not know that it is quite right to question me further. I have no further questions to ask. I act on my client's instructions.

John Williams Jenkins called in and further examined:—

- Mr. J. W. Jenkins.
20 Feb., 1860.
1. By the Chairman: It is your duty, Mr. Jenkins, to receive all goods into the store that are sent to it either from contractors or importers? Yes.
 2. Have you ever received into the store goods at the time they were delivered not belonging to a contractor? No.
 3. You have never had such goods in the store? No, I never recollect any such thing.
 4. Have you ever had packages of goods belonging to Staunton—James Staunton—not furnished under a subsisting contract? Not that I am aware of; I never knew anything to be there that was not tendered for.
 5. Must you have been aware of it had they been there? I should think so. I generally knew when the tenders were opened, and I received the goods accordingly afterwards.
 6. But when you say you think so, could they—the question is, could they have been there? Not without my knowledge.
 7. They could not have been there without your knowledge? No.
 8. Have you ever had in store goods belonging to James Staunton in excess of what were tendered for? I may have had in a few numbers, if the packages were whole.
 9. There may have been a few in number? If there was more in a bale than the exact quantity of the tender: it may have happened in that way.
 10. And in such cases what is done with the excess? I think it is kept.
 11. It is kept in the store? It is kept in the store.
 12. Then when a definite quantity of an article is called for and there is a quantity in excess sent in, is it the practice to keep that and pay for it? If it is kept in the store I suppose it will be paid for. It would be only in small quantity.
 13. Have you ever known goods in excess of a tender belonging to James Staunton subsequently issued in satisfaction of another contract? No.
 14. Were there ever shirts that had been supplied by James Staunton issued when there was a subsisting contract of David Jones for shirts at a lower price? I have no recollection of such a thing.
 15. By Mr. Browne: Are there any goods belonging to James Staunton now in the store that are not covered by a contract? I think not.
 16. You think not? I do not think there are any. They are all under contract we have; I never knew anything to come in without.
 17. Understand me: are there now in the store goods that are in excess of any contract? I could scarcely tell you without looking at the numbers, without knowing what numbers came in. When I said articles may have been received in excess I think I said it would be just a few, where the whole quantity would be in a bale. A bale may be 250, or something like that, and the contract may not require 250 to make up the number; in that case the bale would be received and not broken. The whole package would be sent in.
 18. I asked you whether there is any similar instance now in existence—of goods of James Staunton now in the store? No, I do not think there are any. I am not certain that there has been any. There may have been. I have known instances where they would not break a bale.
 19. By Mr. Rolleston: Would not those that were over be sent back? No; Mr. McNab will never break a package. We have to take the whole package.
 20. By Mr. Browne: It is a custom of merchants not to break a package? Yes. They send a sample down.
 21. Then do you pay for the excess at the contract price? At contract prices.
 22. By Mr. Rolleston: And that excess goes to satisfy any future contract or demand? Any future demand: we only tender when we run short.
 23. By Mr. Abbott: There are other persons in Sydney who supply clothing under contract to the stores beside James Staunton? Yes.
 24. Will you name some of them? Mr. Chisholm, they have supplied clothing—Thompson, Symonds. I do not recollect any more. There was a man at Parramatta (I forget the name) supplied some shirts at one time. Mr. Buchanan may recollect his name; he lived in Parramatta.
 25. By Mr. Buchanan: Mr. Hellman you mean? Hellman, that is the name.
 26. By Mr. Abbott: Thompson, Symonds' business—is that known as David Jones'? Yes—David Jones'.
 27. By Mr. Rolleston: You say that you never knew of any goods, except such as were for contracts actually called for, being admitted into the store? No; small articles were ordered without contracting for them.
 28. To supply current demands from the departments? Yes; small articles of stationery, and so on—anything not worth tendering for.
 29. By Mr. Abbott: Do you recollect the quality of the clothing supplied by James Staunton? Yes.
 30. Was it generally good or bad? Always good—much better than I have seen in the country.
 31. Much better than that supplied by any of the contractors? Much better. I never knew of any complaints being made about them, but there have always been complaints of the others.
 32. There have been complaints about the clothing supplied by other contractors? Chisholm, and Thompson, Symonds—of both of them we had to complain, and in some cases reject some of the things they sent in.
 33. Have they ever been returned to you from the different establishments? In one case some trousers, supplied by Thompson, Symonds, were returned.
 34. Do you recollect how they were replaced or how they were disposed of? I think Thompson, Symonds had to make fresh as near as I recollect. I cannot state positively.

35. Was not that particular kind of clothing always obtained in the Colony—always in Sydney, and not imported from home? Which? Mr. J. W. Jenkins.
36. This clothing, supplied by James Staunton, was that ever imported or obtained here in the Colony? Always imported, that class of goods, with the exception of woollen jackets and trousers. Shirts, we have purchased in Sydney, but never as good. 20 Feb., 1860.
37. Never as good? We could not get the sort. We could not get anything to compare with the sample.
38. As supplied by Staunton? As supplied by Staunton.
39. By the Chairman: What was the particular kind of clothing supplied by Staunton? Woollen trousers, frocks and trousers, shirts, striped cotton shirts, and woollen jackets.
40. What description of jackets? A sort of hip-jackets.
41. For what service? For general service—lunatic asylums generally.
42. Was there anything distinctive about them? No, nothing—jackets the same as others.
43. Any particular kind of button? There was a black horn button.
44. Was there anything particular on it—anything by which it could be distinguished? No; I cannot say that I ever took particular notice of the buttons.
45. Have you any of that clothing in the store now? No.
46. None of those jackets? No.
47. Is it a plain horn button? A plain horn button with a round top.
48. And nothing on it; no device—no lettering? I cannot say. I do not think I ever took notice.
49. Was there any part of the police clothing ever supplied by James Staunton? No.
50. For no branch of the police or gold guards, or gold force? No sir.

The Board adjourned until eleven o'clock to-morrow.

TUESDAY, 21 FEBRUARY, 1860.

Present:—

W. C. MAYNE, Esq., IN THE CHAIR.

MR. H. H. BROWNE, | MR. C. ROLLESTON.

Mr. Buchanan and Mr. Abbott were also present.

The transcript of previous evidence was read over to those by whom that evidence had been given; after which the Board adjourned until eleven o'clock to-morrow.

WEDNESDAY, 22 FEBRUARY, 1860.

Present:—

W. C. MAYNE, Esq., IN THE CHAIR.

MR. C. ROLLESTON, | MR. H. H. BROWNE.

Mr. Buchanan and Mr. Abbott were also in attendance.

Mr. Edmund Jones and Mr. A. R. Jones were present to hear their evidence read over to them.

At the request of Mr. Abbott, Mr. A. R. Jones withdrew while the evidence of Mr. E. Jones was read.

Mr. Abbott made an application to the Board to have appended to the evidence the entry to which Mr. Jones repeatedly referred in his examination.

The Chairman said he could not, of course, over-rule the Custom House, but that he would give every facility in his power for the obtainment of the document, and if procured it should be appended to the evidence. (Appendix No. 7.)

The evidence of Mr. A. R. Jones was then read, after which—

The Chairman, addressing Mr. Abbott, said—The Board, having reference to what was stated by Mr. Buchanan—(that Mr. Weston had distinctly stated and assured him that he was prepared to appear before the Board at their call, and to state all he knew of the transaction)—yesterday decided on calling Mr. Weston, and communicated with the Treasury for the purpose of his attendance being requested. I have received the result of the call on the part of the Board from the Treasury. The Secretary to the Treasury writes—

*The Treasury, New South Wales,
22 February, 1860.*

My Dear Sir,

I addressed an official letter to Mr. Weston, [Appendix M., 13] requesting his attendance at the Board. I enclose the reply from that gentleman (just received).

Respectfully, &c.,
HENRY LANE.

The

Mr. E. Jones.

The letter enclosed is as follows:—

22 Feb., 1860.

Sir,

Balmain, 21 February, 1860.

I have to acknowledge your communication of this date, conveying the desire of the Board investigating accounts for stores supplied the Public Service under the names of James Staunton and Staunton and Co., that I should attend before them at 12 to-morrow. It appears to me that the Government, in adopting towards a public department the degrading course of subjecting it to police surveillance, ought to possess information something beyond the mere belief of sneaking, lying, and cowardly informers. Taking this view the Government must depend, inasmuch as I am concerned, upon its own agents in furtherance of this matter.

I have, &c.,
JOHN WESTON.H. Lane, Esq.,
Under Secretary, Treasury.

It is evident from Mr. Weston's answer, that he declines to appear and give evidence before the Board in the way they were led to believe he was prepared to do.

Mr. Abbott: It is the only conclusion which can be arrived at. But I may state, that Mr. Weston told me, at the commencement of this inquiry, that he was at any time prepared to give evidence if required.

The Chairman: So I would collect from what was stated during the proceedings.

Mr. Abbott: He told me so himself; and I also knew of his refusal to attend, although I requested him to do so. He stated as his reason for not attending that Mr. Jones had gone to the Argyle Stores, where some goods belonging to him are stored, and demanded them as having been taken from the Colonial Stores; and in that way he considered the Government had treated him as if he was a criminal, and had taken goods in an improper manner.

Mr. Browne: Which Mr. Jones?

Mr. Abbott: Mr. Edmund Jones. Therefore he did not consider he would be safe, or that he would be right, in attending here to give evidence in the matter. That fact had come to his knowledge since he told me he was ready to give evidence.

The Chairman: Referring to what Mr. Abbott has now stated, I wish to take the opinion of the Board as to having Mr. Jones' evidence upon that matter.

The Board decided upon the further examination of Mr. Jones.

Mr Edmund Jones called in and further examined:—

1. By the Chairman: The Board have found it necessary to send for you, in consequence of a certain statement which has been made. Mr. Abbott has stated to the Board that Mr. Weston (who had originally promised to attend and give evidence before the Board) has stated as his reason for declining (which he has positively done) that you went to the Argyle Stores and demanded goods belonging to him there, as having been removed from the Colonial Stores—is that correct? If Mr. Weston has stated so, it is positively false. I never made any inquiry directly or indirectly.

The Chairman: I believe I have correctly stated to Mr. Jones what was stated to you?

Mr. Abbott: Oh! yes.

2. By Mr. Abbott: Did you go to the Argyle Stores about this matter at all, Mr. Jones? No, never.

3. Did you ever make any inquiries from any of the storekeepers—from any one—in reference to the matter there? No.

4. You never spoke to them on the subject? No.

5. You never spoke to anyone who had charge of goods belonging to Mr. Weston about them? No, I never spoke to any person having charge of the Argyle Stores.

6. Nor to any person having charge of goods belonging to Mr. Weston there? Nor to any person having charge of goods belonging to Mr. Weston.

7. Or anything that had been removed from the Colonial Stores by him? I have not spoken to any person about anything connected with Mr. Weston's goods.

8. Did you answer that question with respect to any goods removed from the Colonial Stores by him? I was not aware that any goods were ever removed, and I have never spoken to anybody on the subject. I will state this now, if you have done, Mr. Abbott: One evening I was walking into town and I met the locker who is at the Argyle Stores, and he said "Do you know anything about the Colonial Storekeeper's Department?" "Oh, yes," I said, "I believe there is some inquiry going on;" and Mr. Eldershaw, who is the locker, there said, "Mr. Weston was up at the stores to-day, and I was bantering him about the inquiry." He said his going up there was to inquire about a case of goods.

9. By the Chairman: Is that all? That is all I know. I, of course, did not consider it at all necessary to —

10. By Mr. Abbott: You made no further remark? No. Another gentleman joined; he came up and spoke in reference to the matter. But I distinctly state that I have made no inquiry of any person connected with the Argyle Stores, as to Mr. Weston having any goods there at any time.

Witness withdrew.

The Chairman: The Board do not propose to call at present further evidence; but they reserve to themselves the right to do so at a future stage of the proceedings, if they see reason to do so. Should they call further evidence, opportunity will of course be afforded to cross-examine under such evidence, and to adduce any desired in rebuttal of it. The Board, I have no doubt, are prepared to consult the convenience of Mr. Buchanan and Mr. Abbott, in naming a future day for hearing anything Mr. Abbott has to state or any evidence he proposes to adduce.

Mr.

Mr. Abbott: I would ask the Board to appoint a day which would be convenient to them to take any evidence that may be produced by Mr. Buchanan.

The Chairman: I have just consulted with the Board, who express their desire to consult your convenience. Will you name a day? We will meet your views, as far as it is in the power of the Board to do so.

Mr. Abbott suggested Monday, and the Board adjourned until eleven o'clock on Monday next.

THURSDAY, 1 MARCH, 1860.

Present:—

W. C. MAYNE, ESQ., IN THE CHAIR.

MR. W. C. MAYNE,

MR. H. H. BROWNE.

Mr. Abbott and Mr. Buchanan were also in attendance.

At the request of Mr. Abbott the Chairman communicated with Mr. Lane, the Secretary to the Treasury, with a view to his examination before the Board. At a subsequent stage of the proceedings Mr. Lane's reply was received—that he could not attend to-day or to-morrow, but would do so on any future day, upon due notice being given him.

The Chairman, addressing Mr. Abbott, said:—Before you commence the proceedings on behalf of Mr. Buchanan, the Board desire to place on the proceedings the tender which I hold in my hand (Appendix No. 2), and the recommendations connected with it, in a case where Staunton & Co. tendered for and were recommended to supply a certain number of reams of paper. Connected with that, I also wish to have placed upon the record of the proceedings the note addressed by Mr. Lane to Mr. Buchanan, and Mr. Buchanan's minute upon it. The schedule shews that Sands and Kenny tendered for one hundred reams of double foolscap, at eight-pence halfpenny per pound, with ten shillings and sixpence per case in addition. Staunton & Co. tendered for five hundred reams, at one shilling and two-pence per pound. The recommendation upon that is:—"Messrs. Sands and Kenny's tender recommended for acceptance. As the quantities they offer, it is stated, must be sent for to Melbourne, and a supply being required here at once, it is further recommended that the Storekeeper being empowered to treat for the purchase of enough for immediate wants, at a rate not exceeding one shilling per pound.

" Treasury, 20th December, 1859.

" JNO. BUCHANAN.

" HENRY LANE."

" Approved—

" S. S.

" December 22nd, 1859."

But on the 21st, previous to that approval, this note was addressed by Mr. Lane to Mr. Buchanan:—

My dear Buchanan,

Before submitting this, allow me to ask why Sands & Co. will not supply the remaining four hundred reams at the price tendered, eight-pence halfpenny, instead of one shilling, as recommended by you.

" Most truly yours,

" HENRY LANE."

On this Mr. Buchanan writes:—"They have not got it to offer. Mr. Sands tells me the price he names is less than English cost to us, and he gives it so low because he is desirous, I believe, to clear out his stock for the Victorian Government, whose contract he no longer holds.—J.B." The Board also will place on record, and draw your attention before you commence your case, to a recommendation connected with tenders of James Wilson, whose name has been referred to in these proceedings. The recommendations are here written and signed by John Buchanan and Henry Lane. Messrs. Thompson, Symonds and Co. tendered for trousers at nine shillings per pair, (Appendix No. 12) and James Wilson at thirteen shillings. The recommendation is:—"The tender of Mr. James Wilson (No. 2) although the higher, is recommended for acceptance as conforming to the Government pattern, the sample submitted by Thompson and Co. being of a very inferior sloop quality." In the same schedule the tender of Thompson, Symonds, and Co. for coarse linen shifts is three shillings; that of James Wilson being three shillings and three-pence. The recommendation is:—"The tender of Mr. James Wilson (No. 2) conforming to Government pattern is recommended to be accepted—the sample at the lower rate submitted by Thompson and Co. being inferior and of calico."

The Honorable David Jones, Esq., called in by Mr. Abbott and examined:—

1. By Mr. Abbott: Your name is, I believe, David Jones? David Jones.
2. You have been for a long time in business as a draper in Sydney? Yes, for about twenty-five years.
3. And during that time have you on different occasions supplied the Government stores with goods of different kinds? Yes, for many years.
4. Can you state, from recollection, what was the form in which tenders were made and accepted? Well, for many years, during the time Mr. Thomson and Mr. Riddell held the office of Colonial Secretary, articles were supplied by contract as they were required. I believe

The Hon. D. Jones, Esq.

1 Mar., 1860.

The Hon.
D. Jones, Esq.

- believe my house supplied most of the things that were tendered for. More recently yearly contracts were issued. I think that from first to last I have served the Colonial Store-keeper's Department by yearly contract for five or seven years; for many years, at any rate.
5. From year to year you have supplied them? Yes, from year to year; the contracts being, of course, renewed annually.
 6. For different kinds of goods? Yes, for goods of different kinds.
 7. Do you recollect how the accounts were settled during the time you supplied? By the usual warrants. We were supplied at the Colonial Stores with printed forms which we filled up.
 8. Forms of account? Yes, in duplicate.
 9. And you filled them up? Yes, we filled them up.
 10. Should you know that form, do you think, if you saw it again? I think I should.
 11. Is that similar to the form of which you speak? [Form handed to witness.] It is something of this kind. I cannot swear that it is exactly the same.
 12. At the foot of that you will see a printed form of receipt? Oh, yes; the receipt is exactly similar to those attached to the forms to which I have referred. I do not know that I ever received money myself, but the clerk did, and then I might have seen the accounts.
 13. But do you recollect, with reference to any of these accounts sent in, whether the receipts were signed beforehand? I do not think they were.
 14. You do not know? I do not recollect anything of the kind.
 15. For instance, when that form of account was filled up, would the receipt be signed and sent on with the account? The receipt was not given until the money was received at the Treasury. I never heard that there was any irregularity in a single instance. I would not positively swear, because for nearly ten years I have not engaged much in business. My impression is that the receipt was not signed. The money was got from the Treasury, was it not?
 16. No, the accounts were paid here? Oh, paid here, were they?—I do not recollect ever coming down here for the money.
 17. They used to be paid at the Treasury, but for some years past they have been paid here? Oh! indeed! my impression was that they were always paid at the Treasury; I recollect that we had a great deal of trouble in getting the money sometimes for two or three months together.
 18. That was some years ago? Yes; I know perfectly well that we used to hunt them from this office to the Auditor General's Office, and so on. I have been three months without the money.
 19. That was during the time payment was made at the Treasury? I think the money was received at the Treasury at that time. I do not recollect signing this receipt before payment, but I would not positively swear I did not. I assume it was perfectly regular. I know I have served the Government for sixteen or seventeen years, and in no instance do I recollect any complaint of irregularity. I have often complained of delay.
 20. You have often complained of delay in payment? Yes. An idea has just struck me that there used to be more printing in the old forms than in the one you have shewn to me. It was a printed form, at any rate. I recollect now that there was some difficulty in connection with those forms, in consequence of it being necessary to state for what part of the country the goods were supplied, and (at one time) for what department. The fact is, I am speaking more of the state of things which existed fourteen or fifteen years ago than of the present time.
 21. But having had dealings with the Government for so long a period, would you think it extraordinary to send in to a Government establishment a form with the receipt for payment signed before you actually got the money? Not if it were a regulation of the Government. I do not say that I would volunteer anything of that kind. If I were requested to do so I should make inquiry whether it was contrary to the regular rule of office. I do not think I would do it upon the mere ipse dixit of anyone, or unless I thought it was a regulation of the department.
 22. If it gave you less trouble in obtaining payment, would you do it? Well, if it were in this way—if a party were to say "Well, Mr. So-and-so is not in the way; you had better put your name to the receipt"—I might perhaps do it.
 23. You would not think there was any risk in signing it? Not in a case of that kind. I believe that was really the case too—that in an instance of that kind it has been done.
 24. But as to sending in the accounts received? I do not know whether I would.
 25. You would not consider that there was any risk in doing so? I do not know. I could not say whether there would be any risk or not. If it had been a rule I would have done it; if it had not been a rule, I do not see why I should have done it. To the best of my knowledge I saw no irregularity to complain of, nor am I aware that douceurs were ever received by any one connected with the department. I contracted pretty largely—four or five thousand a year—and I never gave a sixpence, except at one time, which I recollect very well. I mention it because it was an exception to the rule. There was a large sum of money due and I wanted to get it. The account, however, was three times sent back as being informal, and I said I wished one of the clerks in the office would fill up the forms, and I would give him £5 for doing so—that was not the head of the department. I wish to mention this because it was an exceptional case.
 26. How long is that ago? About fourteen years ago. I am not sure whether it was in the time of Mr. Buchanan. It was done simply to expedite the payment.
 27. You do not recollect to whom you spoke on that occasion? No.
 28. It was not to Mr. Buchanan? Well really I cannot say; but it is a matter of little consequence, I imagine, because the money was given merely for value received.

- 29. During all the time you were contractor here, was it your habit to come to the Colonial Stores on business yourself? Yes; I came here several times to view various kinds of goods when I was not a contractor.
- 30. Did you ever, during all that time, have reason to find fault, on the ground that favor was shewn to any contractor more than yourself? Not the least.
- 31. Never? Not the least.
- 32. You never had anything to complain of in that way? No, certainly not.
- 33. Were you in the habit of receiving payment yourself, Mr. Jones? I do not think so; I do not recollect having received payment.
- 34. Do you recollect ever receiving a single payment here—at this place? I do not think I did. I might have received a payment; but, if I did, I have no recollection of it whatever.
- 29. Did the same person always come from your establishment for money—and do you recollect how it was received? No; the same person did not always come.
- 30. Do you recollect whether the money was not very often sent to you? Not often. It may have been sent sometimes.
- 31. And you always had confidence in the department, and the way in which it was conducted? I certainly had. I saw nothing to warrant me in coming to a different conclusion.
- 32. By the Chairman: Have you, during late years, Mr. Jones, taken an active part in the business of your establishment? No; not for the last ten years.
- 33. Not for the last ten years? No.
- 34. And what you have been speaking about occurred previous to the last ten years? Yes. I may have been here once or twice since, but I do not think I have upon any business whatever.
- 35. You said, Mr. Jones, that while you were supplying the Government you used yourself to come to the Colonial Stores? Yes, in the early part of the time.
- 36. On those occasions, or on several of them, had you interviews with Mr. Buchanan? Yes; oh yes.
- 37. On those occasions did Mr. Buchanan ever tell you that your coming yourself to the department was needless? No.
- 38. He said nothing to dissuade you, nor pointed out that it was unnecessary? Oh dear, no.
- 39. By Mr. Abbott: Although you say you did not take an active part in your business, you would know what was going on? I could not say that.
- 40. Generally speaking? No.
- 41. You have been interested in the business? Yes.
- 42. As a principal? Yes; but I did not take the least part in it. I have occasionally heard how it was going on; but I could not say personally what transpired. I only knew what was told me by my partners.
- 43. You were sufficiently interested to make inquiries? Yes.
- 44. And to hear what was going on? Yes, of course.

The Hon.
D. Jones, Esq.
1 Mar., 1860.

Mr. Joseph Burdekin Holdsworth called in and examined:—

- 1. By Mr. Abbott: You are an ironmonger, I think? Yes.
- 2. And are now in business on your own account? I am.
- 3. Were you formerly connected with Hawley & Company? Yes, I was a partner of the firm of Hawley & Co.
- 4. Until lately? Until the 31st March last.
- 5. And how many years were you connected with them previously? With Hawley & Co.?
- 6. Yes—a great many years? Yes; in fact Hawley was not out here when I was connected with him. I carried on the business all the time—about thirteen years.
- 7. Thirteen years? Yes.
- 8. During that time have Hawley and Company, and yourself since, been in the habit of supplying goods to the Government? Yes.
- 9. Under contract? Yes, under contract.
- 10. Will you state the way in which you got the contracts? By tender.
- 11. By tender? Yes.
- 12. And on the contracts being entered into, you sent the goods here to the Colonial Stores? Yes. We have supplied other goods not under contract—things which have been sent up on requisition.
- 13. Requisition from this office to you? Yes, the same as from the Colonial Architect's Office and others.
- 14. Was that a thing of frequent occurrence? Yes.
- 15. You have managed Hawley and Co's. business for the last thirteen years or so? Yes.
- 16. And during that time have you been in the habit of coming to this office about these contracts? I was never down myself but once.
- 17. You were never here but once? No.
- 18. Had you the sole management of that business? Yes; I think that is about two years ago.
- 19. How did you obtain payment? We used to make out the accounts on the forms, and send them down.
- 20. Just look at that form? Yes; that is the style of form—(Appendix O, No 14.) We used to make out the accounts and send them down to see if they were correct. If they were correct they used to come up again, and I used to sign them and then get the cheque.

Mr. J. B.
Holdsworth.
1 Mar., 1860.

- Mr. J. B. Holdsworth.
1 Mar., 1900.
21. Have you not on some occasions sent down the blank form to be filled up here? Sometimes when it was in duplicate we have done so.
22. But have they not been filled up here in consequence of some difficulty in the form? Sometimes they have been wrong, and then they have altered them themselves.
23. And have you not often sent them with the receipt signed before the forms were filled up at all? No, I do not recollect sending them down signed in blank.
24. Is not that your writing? (Form marked O, with signature, handed to witness.) Yes; but I do not recollect it.
25. That is signed by you? I am almost sure it is—yes, that is right.
26. Do you recollect when that was signed? I have not the slightest idea. I have no recollection of signing it.
27. During the time you have been contracting for the supply of goods to the stores, have you ever had reason to find fault with the manner in which the business was conducted? Not the slightest.
28. Did you have any reason to think that more favor was shewn to one contractor than to another? Not that I am aware of. The fact is, these tenders which we used to send in, were generally split up. I suppose we were the lowest. On very many occasions we only got small portions.
29. But there was nothing to lead you to believe that others were more favored? No; I have not any idea that such has been the case.
30. Did you or any of the members of the firm of Hawley and Co., ever receive payment yourselves—actually at your own hands? No; I have received cheques at my office.
31. Sent to you? I will not be sure whether the clerk has not sometimes come down to get them; but, generally, they have been sent up. I would sign, and the messenger would bring the cheque up. At other times, the clerk has been down and got payment.
32. Then in the case of the cheques being sent to you, would not your accounts be here, signed, at the time, before the cheques were sent to you? Oh yes, the accounts. We would make the accounts out and send them down, and then they would come up to be signed; and after they were sent back, the cheque would come.
33. The accounts would be here before the cheque would be sent? Yes.
34. Have you any personal acquaintance with Mr. Buchanan? I believe I saw him once here, the only time I was down, about two years ago. I know nothing of him further. I do not think I have seen Mr. Buchanan this last twelve months.
35. By the Chairman: You say that some of your clerks used to come down here on some occasions? They came down here to receive the cheque for the account sometimes.
36. Was it known by the department that the clerk who came down here belonged to you? He used to bring the accounts down. The clerk, that made the accounts out, brought them down, and when they were correct, he would get them for my signature, and bring them down again; but, latterly, I think, the accounts have been sent down when the cheques have been sent up.
37. And signed? Signed.
38. Then I understand you that lately the practice has been for the messenger of this department to bring you up the cheque in payment of the account, and to obtain your signature to the account at the time? I think the signature has been to the accounts before the messenger has brought them up. The accounts come up, and I sign them and send them down, and the messenger afterwards brings the cheque up.
39. I think you stated just now, that recently the accounts have been brought at the same times as the cheques? No; I said the accounts were sent down. [At the request of the Chairman the shorthand writer read the evidence previously given upon this point, and witness explained.] The accounts have been sent down signed, and the cheques have been afterwards sent up. There might have been instances, as far as I recollect, where the cheques have been sent up, and the accounts have been signed at the time.
40. Is that your signature [to form marked O]? Yes.
41. Can you recall any circumstance connected with it? No. I have no recollection of it, unless it be that the clerk has got it to recopy the account. I have not the slightest recollection of having signed one in blank.
42. But was not the usual course for the clerk to come down and see that the account was correct, and then to bring it back for your signature, before you signed? Yes; but I say I cannot recollect how that got signed, unless it was for some purpose such as I have mentioned, or where there has been some hurry in the account.

Mr. Buchanan here, with the consent of the Board, made the following explanation in reference to a portion of the evidence given by Mr. D. Jones:—What Mr. Jones states is perfectly true. He did send me a note. He had a large sum of money, as he states, to receive; but at that time, owing to the mode in which the accounts had to be classed, so as to charge certain specific sums to certain specific votes, and the impossibility of the accounts being prepared in the proper official shape in his own house, he sent the blank accounts to me, with a note enclosing this sum, and stating that he should be very happy to pay it if I would suffer one of my clerks to prepare the accounts; and I let them do it in their own time. That I suffered, on that occasion. As he states, it is now fourteen or fifteen years ago. At that time the payments were not made through this office. The accounts had to be left here to be audited first, and then go to the Treasury before payment was made.

[The Board adjourned until Eleven o'clock on Tuesday next.]

TUESDAY,

TUESDAY, 6 MARCH, 1860.

Present:—

W. C. MAYNE, ESQ., IN THE CHAIR.

MR. W. C. MAYNE, | MR. H. H. BROWNE.

Mr. Buchanan and Mr. Abbott were also present.

Mr. Abbott: There is a tender by James Staunton since the date of the last one noticed by you, that I would like to have put in evidence. It is the last one. (Tender referred to produced.)

The Chairman: This is by Staunton and Co? Yes, it is the latest. It is the last tender in that name. (The tender and schedule marked P and Q respectively were put in evidence—Appendix No. 15.)

Mr. Abbott: Messrs. Sonds and Kenny have tendered for the goods mentioned in this schedule; but not for any further double foolscap beyond the 100 reams included in their first tender. (Tender referred to put in and marked R—Appendix No. 2.)

Mr. Abbott expressed his desire to examine Mr. Wells, Accountant to the Treasury.

The Chairman communicated with Mr. Wells, with a view to his examination before the Board, in accordance with the desire of Mr. Abbott.

Henry Lane, Esq., called in and examined:—

1. By the Chairman: Mr. Abbott has expressed a wish to have Mr. Wells' evidence. He thinks it would save time if Mr. Wells were sent for during your examination—do you think he will be able to attend before you return? Yes; I think he will be able.

Henry Lane, Esq.
6 Mar., 1860.

2. By sending for him now he will be able to attend at once? Yes. (Sent for.)

3. By Mr. Abbott: What is your name, Mr. Lane? Henry Lane.

4. You are Secretary to the Treasury, I believe? Yes.

5. Are you one of the Board appointed to open tenders for the supply of goods to the Colonial Stores? Yes.

6. And I think you have a separate key of the tender box? I have.

7. Can you tell the Board what is the method of dealing with tenders when they are received—they are received at the Treasury, are they not? Yes; they are received at the Treasury and deposited in a box, of which I hold one key.

8. And the box is in your possession? In my possession.

9. Will you tell us the way in which these tenders were disposed of, Mr. Lane? At the time appointed the Board assemble; the box is opened; the tenders are taken from the box, and then, as opened, the contents are entered in a book kept for the purpose. When I say the contents, I mean that an abstract is made.

10. Of all the tenders received? Of all the tenders received. These tenders are numbered and initialed by the members of the Board. The abstracts of the tenders in the book are also signed by the members of the Board. In the case of stores the tenders were handed to the Colonial Storekeeper, for the purpose of being scheduled; his receipt being given to me for them.

11. Who are the other members of the Board? In the case of stores for this department, the Board consisted of myself and the Colonial Storekeeper only.

Mr. Abbott: I should like Mr. Lane to see those particular tenders of James Staunton and Staunton and Co. that have been given in evidence (The documents were handed to witness—Appendix, No. 1, 2, 5, 6, and 15.)

Mr. Lane: All these tenders have been opened and dealt with in the manner I have described.

12. By Mr. Abbott: You identify them as having passed through your hands? Yes.

13. They bear your initial, I believe? They bear my initials and my signature to the schedule.

14. Will you have the kindness to look at the signatures of James Staunton and Staunton and Co. to those documents? I see in three cases the name of James Staunton; and in two, those of Staunton and Co.

15. Will you look at the signatures to those accounts, Mr. Lane? (Accounts handed to witness—Appendix, V, W, X, Y, U.) It has been stated here that the signatures to those accounts and tenders were in the handwriting of Mr. Buchanan; do you believe that they are in Mr. Buchanan's handwriting? There is a similarity.

16. Do you think there is sufficient similarity to warrant you in saying that those accounts and tenders were signed by Mr. Buchanan? I should hesitate to say so.

17. Did the similarity ever strike you before—Did it ever occur to you before? It never occurred to me; but I have seen the accounts before.

18. But did the similarity ever occur to you before? My attention was drawn to it.

19. By whom? I do not feel at liberty to state.

20. But at the time those tenders passed through your hands as one of the members of the Board you had no suspicion? No.

21. And you would not say who pointed out the similarity to you? No.

22. You knew Mr. Buchanan's handwriting—have known it for many years? Yes.

23. Do you know Mr. Edmund Jones, Mr. Lane? Yes.

24. And his brother Alfred Jones, who was in the office? Very slightly. Edmund I knew, he having been in the office with me—in the Audit Office.

- Henry Lane, Esq.
6 Mar., 1860.
25. Were you in the Audit Office with him at the time his brother was here? I must have been for some portion of the time.
 26. Did Mr. Jones, during the time you were in the Audit Office, ever mention to you any suspicion he had with regard to the Colonial Storekeeper's department? No.
 27. Has he since? I would decline answering that question, if you please.
 28. Well, can you tell me whether it was not Mr. Edmund Jones who gave the Government information which led to this inquiry? No, I decline to answer the question.
 29. Do you know Mrs. Jones—the mother of Edmund Jones? Yes.
 30. Do you recollect the time Mr. Alfred Jones left this office? Yes.
 31. Did Mrs. Jones at that time make any application to you to get a younger son into his place? Yes, she did. It is by that means I know her—she having applied several times to me.
 32. She importuned you very much about it—she was very frequently with you? Yes, she was frequently with me; but I cannot term it importunity.
 33. Did you assist her views in any way? I think I promised that I would write to Mr. Buchanan about the lad. I really forget now whether I did so or not. I think I spoke to him.
 34. Do you know why he did not get the situation? I really do not.
 35. And you have not seen Mrs. Jones since, I suppose? Not since, that I recollect.
 36. Did she ever tell you that she had had a promise from any person in power, of this situation? I do not recollect.
 37. Do you know anything of her character? Not at all.
 38. Did she ever, to you, express any dissatisfaction with yourself or Mr. Buchanan—did she ever complain to you of Mr. Buchanan or yourself not having done what you could for her? No, she never expressed herself so to me.
 39. How long have you been a member of the Board for the opening of tenders, Mr. Lane? Since the year '57—since my appointment as Secretary to the Treasury.
 40. During that time do you recollect any tenders coming in there—fictitious tenders—either in name or otherwise? Never, that I know of.
 41. No circumstances connected with them which have led you to believe that they were fictitious tenders? Certainly not.
 42. None of them? None.
 43. The tenders were not generally regularly filled up and sent in, were they? I think so. There were some on a printed form such as this, and others in manuscript. If they were informal we would reject them.
 44. In your position as Secretary to the Treasury, has it come to your knowledge on what information the Government acted in this matter? Yes.
 45. Will you state what the information was? I am not at liberty to do so.
 46. Nor what its nature was? I am not at liberty to communicate it.
 47. Will you state whether there is anything beyond what is stated in the instructions to the Board contained in the letter? I would rather that you did not press these inquiries further.
 48. You know it is very necessary that Mr. Buchanan should have any information he can get on the subject, as the Government have had from the other parties examined previously. They gave all the evidence they have been asked for—and must do so, in fact.—It is rather hard on the other side, that if any person in the Government employment is asked a question he will not give the information he possesses? I am willing to give all I can.
 49. Except what you do not wish to give? I am not at liberty to communicate some.
 50. Will you say, Mr. Lane, whether there were any instructions given to the Board further than appeared by this written document or by the letter? Are there any further instructions?
 51. Yes; any instructions further than those written? I am not aware of any other.
 52. Do you know by whose orders the papers and documents in this office were all locked up and sealed? Yes; by order of the Government.
 53. Will you say whether, in your opinion, the information given was of such a nature as to warrant the suspension of an officer so long in the public service as Mr. Buchanan? I would rather not give an opinion upon the subject.
 54. Can you say whether it is a usual course without previous inquiry? I have not known an instance. In fact, I have known no charge similar to this, excepting on one occasion, when there was a charge brought against the then Government Printer. I believe a course somewhat similar to that lately pursued was adopted.
 55. And you would not say whether you consider the charge preferred in that written document sufficient to warrant the course taken here? I would rather you did not press that. I would rather not give an opinion on the matter at all.
 56. Did you ever know a case where a public department was put into the hands of the police in a similar instance? No, I do not recollect.
 57. In any case, did you ever hear of such a thing in your connection with the Government service? I do not recollect hearing of an instance of the kind.
 58. Can you say what led to the withdrawal of the police from this place? No, I cannot.
 59. You took some part in this proceeding yourself, did you not, Mr. Lane? No.
 60. Did you not come down here? Yes; the Treasurer wished me to come down.
 61. The Treasurer wished you to do so? Yes.
 62. Will you say what you did, Mr. Lane? I assisted in sealing up.
 63. The sealing up? I sealed up a portion.
 64. Of the cupboards and drawers? Yes.
 65. By the Treasurer's orders, I think you say? Yes; I was directed to come down by the Treasurer.

66. You were instructed to come and assist in carrying out the directions given to the Board—is that it? Yes.
67. Did those orders extend to private papers? The orders, I believe, were to seal up all papers.
68. In the office? Yes.
69. Did you consider that those orders extended to papers the private property of the clerks in the office, people connected with the department? I thought the orders were that all papers should be sealed up.
70. You consider that they extended to the private property of gentlemen connected with the department? Yes; if within the public presses or drawers.
71. But all furniture in Government offices belongs to the Government, don't it? I suppose so.
72. Do you know whether any of those papers were removed from the offices? I do not.
73. At the time of the sealing up of these presses and drawers, was there anyone connected with this department present? Connected with this department?
74. With this department? Yes; all the gentlemen of the department were here.
75. They were present during the time? Yes.
76. Do you know when it is the intention to return these papers—the private property of Mr. Buchanan and the clerks? I do not.
77. Do you know if these drawers or presses have been opened since? I understood not.
78. Did you say you could not tell the Board why the police had been removed? Yes.
79. Do you know whether there is any more serious charge to be brought against Mr. Buchanan? I am not aware.
80. Now, Mr. Lane, if there is anything further to be charged against Mr. Buchanan, do you think that the letter written by the Government conveying instructions to the Board is sufficient to warrant the placing of police in charge of this department? I would rather not give an opinion at all upon the course pursued by the Government in the matter.
81. And you refuse to say on whose information these proceedings were taken? Yes.
82. And you cannot produce and will give to me, for Mr. Buchanan, no further information respecting the charge made? No.
83. Or the grounds for that charge? No.
84. Nor by whom they were supplied? No.
85. Can you say whether it was by the Treasurer's order that the members of the Board proceeded with their own hands to fasten up all the presses and drawers and tables in this office? Yes.
86. Papers, public or private—all papers? All papers, I suppose.
87. Do you know whether it was also by his directions that every person employed in the department was turned into the street—told to leave the place? They were not suspended, as I understand. The stores were closed, but their services were retained.
88. But they were not admitted into the stores? No; but they were not suspended or dismissed.
89. That course was taken by order of the Treasurer? The stores being closed, they could not be admitted.
90. And the clerks put out? Yes.
91. And the premises were placed in the hands of the detective police? Of the police, so I understood.
92. By the Chairman: You have stated in answer to questions respecting those signatures of Staunton's to the tenders and to the accounts, that there is a similarity to Mr. Buchanan's writing? Yes.
93. Is that similarity a strong and striking one? It appears to me to be a striking similarity.
94. Will you point out to the Board the particular parts of those signatures, if there be such parts, that strike you as particularly strong in similarity to the particular signatures themselves, both in the tenders and in the accounts? The "m-c-s" of the "James" are like those usually employed by Mr. Buchanan in writing.
95. Now, as to particular signatures among all these—will you look through them, and see if there is any one that strikes you particularly strongly? These three of the accounts, and these three of the tenders.
96. Will you have the kindness to mark those particular accounts, so that they may be recognizable? [Witness marked upon them, in pencil, the word "similar," and "H. L." See Appendices No. 1 (S), No. 6 (B), and W, X, Y.]
97. And you have marked the tenders also? Yes.
98. You are not prepared to say that that signature was written by Mr. Buchanan? No.
99. What is the impression that the similarity of the writing has made upon your mind with respect to it? I should hesitate in stating the impression. The writing is certainly very similar; and after the information given to me, the impression on my mind would be that the signatures were written by Mr. Buchanan.
100. You have been asked several questions with respect to placing police at the stores on their being closed—do you know the object for which the police were placed at the stores? I understood at the time that, as you had sealed up all the property in the stores, it was considered advisable that there should be some one here for the protection of that property, as well as to prevent, perhaps, any communication between the contents of the office and persons connected with the department.
101. By Mr. Browne: Is there any similarity in the signature of Staunton and Co. now attached to that late tender (Appendix No. 2) to that of the "James Staunton" you have just now been describing? Between this signature of Staunton and Co. and that of James Staunton?
102. Yes, of James Staunton? No.

Henry Lane,
Esq.
6 Mar., 1860.

- Henry Lane, Esq.
6 Mar., 1860.
103. You do not see any similarity? I do not perceive it.
 104. Do you know Mr. Weston's hand-writing? Yes.
 105. Have you ever seen him write? I know his hand-writing.
 106. Does that signature (Staunton and Co.) bear any resemblance to his hand-writing? Yes.
 107. Does that signature of "James Staunton" bear a like resemblance? No; it does not strike me so.
 108. By Mr. Abbott: I think you said, Mr. Lane, that the "m-e-s" in the word "James" was the portion most like Mr. Buchanan's writing? Yes.
 109. Those letters do not occur in "Staunton & Co."? No; they do not.
 110. And do you think that the signature "Staunton and Co." is like Mr. Buchanan's writing, too? No.
 111. You do not think it is? No.
 112. Nor the "Staunton"—you do not think that is like? No.
 113. Did you know, before coming here, that Mr. Weston had left this department? Yes, I was aware that he had left it. I knew it at the time.
 114. Did you know that that tender was made since he left the department? I shall know from the date.
 115. Did not that go through your hands? Yes; I want to see the date of it (witness looks at date). Yes; he had left the department when this was received.
 116. Don't you know, from information you have received since he left the department, that he has been tendering—that he has tendered for the supply of goods, and has supplied them to the Government? I did not know.
 117. Have you ever heard? I did not hear of it up to the day that Mr. Buchanan was before the Treasurer. On that day I heard of it.
 118. Since then have you heard? Since then I have heard.
 119. Under the name of Staunton? And Company.
 120. Now, don't you think, Mr. Lane, that the fact of having that knowledge would lead you to be impressed with the idea that that was Mr. Weston's writing more than anything else? The—
 121. The fact of being impressed with the knowledge that Mr. Weston had tendered? It might have done—that fact being impressed upon my mind.
 122. It is very probable it would have that effect? Yes.
 123. And having that knowledge, you would almost say it was his writing without comparing his writing with it at all? It would have directed my attention more carefully to it, I think.
 124. You would not have considered it so necessary to compare the writing, having that knowledge beforehand? I think that would have directed my attention more closely to it, would it not?
 125. I think if you knew that Staunton & Co. were tendering, and that Mr. Weston represented that firm, you would not want to compare the handwriting —.
- Mr. Abbott, (addressing the Chairman):* I should like Mr. Lane to see the tender in Mr. Wilson's name (tender handed to Witness). [Appendix, No. 11 and 12.]
126. By Mr. Abbott: Mr. Lane, it is also said that that signature is in Mr. Buchanan's handwriting: do you see the similarity there? No.
 127. You don't think there is any? I do not think so.
 128. Your attention was never called to that before? My attention was never called to it before.
 129. And you do not think it like? It does not strike me as being so at all.

Mr. John Wells called in and examined:—

- Mr. J. Wells.
6 Mar., 1860.
1. By Mr. Abbott: What are you, Mr. Wells? Accountant in the Treasury.
 2. How long have you been in the Treasury—a long time? I am in my three-and-twentieth year now.
 3. Do you know anything of the supply of goods to the Colonial Stores—the plan of tendering for them by persons generally? I merely know that they are supplied by tender usually.
 4. And do you happen to know whether goods are ever bought privately by the Colonial Storekeeper or anyone in the department without advertising for tenders? I am not aware as a positive fact, but I believe so.
 5. That such has been done? That such has been done.
 6. Now, did you ever supply any goods or anything to the Colonial Stores in that way? No, I never supplied any goods; I never had any goods to supply.
 7. You never supplied any article? No, I did not.
 8. Did you ever procure the sale to the Government of anything belonging to another person? Yes, I think I did some short time ago.
 9. Will you just state to the Board the circumstance, if you please? I think it was a rifle pistol a friend of mine had to dispose of, and it was purchased, I think, privately, by the Colonial Storekeeper.
 10. Who was it purchased by? The Colonial Storekeeper, I presume.
 11. Do you know who received payment for that? I received payment for my friend.
 12. From whom? From Mr. Weston; at least, the cheque was sent up to the Treasury. Therefore I do not know by whose authority it was sent up to me.
 13. Then why do you say it was from Mr. Weston? Because it was through Mr. Weston. I first spoke to him about the sale of the article.
 14. And you concluded it was through him the cheque came? Yes.

15. Then why do you mention the Storekeeper's name? I presume the Colonial Storekeeper is the person who pays all those things. Mr. J. Wells.
16. But you said the sale was effected through him—now you say it was through Mr. Weston? C Mar., 1860.
It was through the department. I presume the Storekeeper is the head of the department.
17. Then only as head of the department, you presume, he knew something of it? Yes, exactly.
18. But you arranged the sale with Mr. Weston, and supposed you received the cheque through him? Yes. I asked Mr. Weston if the Colonial Storekeeper could take this article, and he said, Yes—he dare say there would be some wanted soon, and he dare say he could. When that took place Mr. Weston informed me of the fact that he could take it, and I sent it to him.
19. But, for all you know, Mr. Buchanan knew nothing of it beyond signing the cheque? Yes, merely signing the cheque.
20. You never had any communication with him about it? No, not any.
21. By the Chairman: How did the circumstance arise of your applying to the Storekeeper's Department to take this pistol, or to see whether they would take it? Because I was fully aware that these were articles which were very frequently required.
22. Was not the article saleable in the usual way to any person in the trade? Oh! I dare say it might have been. It was a very excellent one. It was sold very much under its value.
23. What was the price obtained? I think it was seven pounds, as far as I recollect now; and it cost ten guineas in London, and was nearly new.
24. Had it been endeavored to be disposed of in any other way? Not that I am aware of.
25. Was it of a particular pattern? It was a very good one. I do not think it was a Dean. It was—I forget the name of it now, but I know it was a very good one.
26. And it was sold considerably under its prime cost? Considerably under the prime cost in London, and it was purchased, as my friend informed me, with twenty others. He gave ten guineas each for them.
27. In what condition was it—how long had it been in use? It was in excellent condition. It had been in use but a short time. I saw it myself, and it was in excellent condition. There was a case with it, and all the appliances.
28. You yourself and not your friend spoke to Mr. Weston on the subject? I spoke to him myself.

Mr. Abbott informed the Board that he had no further evidence to take.

The Chairman: The Board propose on a future day, in the appointment of which they will be willing to consult your convenience, to call for the evidence of Mr. Sands, with reference to the matter of his tender and the report upon it.

Thursday having been agreed upon, the Board adjourned until that day at eleven o'clock, in the event of Mr. Sands being able to attend.

THURSDAY, 8 MARCH, 1860.

Present:—

W. C. MAYNE, Esq., IN THE CHAIR.

MR. W. C. MAYNE, | MR. C. ROLLESTON.

Mr. Abbott and Mr. Buchanan were also in attendance.

Mr. John Sands called in and examined:—

1. By the Chairman: You are one of the firm of Sands and Kenny? Yes. Mr. J. Sands.
2. Carrying on the business of stationers in George-street? Yes. C Mar., 1860.
3. And you have been in the habit of tendering for and supplying stationery to the Colonial Stores? Yes; we have done so several times.
4. Will you look to the notice calling for tenders (Appendix No. 2)? Yes; I remember it perfectly well.
5. Do you recollect tendering under that notice? Yes; for one hundred reams.
6. Is that the tender? Yes.
7. Do you observe the condition—that this is required to be supplied within a certain time? Yes; I am aware of it.
8. And, so tendering, were you prepared to supply the paper? We had the paper in Melbourne, and, of course, by telegraphing, we could get it back. We did supply it within the specified time.
9. You only tendered for one hundred reams—the quantity called for being five hundred? Yes.
10. Were you not in possession of any larger quantity? No; we were not then.
11. You tendered at the rate of eightpence halfpenny per pound? Yes.
12. You previously, I believe, had been supplying the Victorian Government? Yes; the price we were getting was sevenpence halfpenny or sevenpence three-eighths, I think.
13. From the Victorian Government? Yes, for the same description of paper; but that was by getting thousands of reams at a time.

- Mr. J. Sands. 14. Did the rate at which you supplied the Victorian Government leave a margin of profit to the firm? Well, sevenpence halfpenny leaving a profit in Melbourne, eightpence halfpenny would leave a profit here.
- 8 Mar., 1860. 15. I was asking you with reference to Melbourne? Yes.
16. And, of course, the price at which you further tendered would leave a higher margin of profit? Yes.
17. Had you any communication with Mr. Buchanan respecting that tender otherwise than through your written application? Not before the tender was accepted. I think, either the same day or the day after, I called upon him to mention the fact that we only tendered for one hundred reams, and wished to know if the balance was filled up, so that, having more coming forward in Melbourne, we could put in a further tender. It was not likely, however, finding paper was so scarce, that I should have put it in at eightpence halfpenny—perhaps I should have required a higher price.
18. But, previous to the acceptance of the tender, had you any communication with Mr. Buchanan? No, I had not. It happened to be only the evening before I put in the tender that I observed the advertisement.
19. But between the period of putting in the tender and receiving notice of its acceptance, had you any communication with Mr. Buchanan? No. I received a quarter of an hour after the tender was sent in a requisition for the goods.
20. Subsequently had you any communication? Subsequently I saw him and informed him that we had more coming forward in Melbourne, and I wished to know whether the five hundred reams had been filled up by other tenderers.
21. Within what period had you that interview? Either the same day or the day after, I will not be certain. It was probably the same afternoon.
22. As the intimation of acceptance? Yes.
23. You then asked Mr. Buchanan whether the other quantity had been taken up? Yes.
24. Did you state to Mr. Buchanan that you were in possession of a supply if it had not been? No; I told him it was coming forward. I think it was in the "Lincolnshire."
25. By Mr. Buchanan: In what? In the "Lincolnshire."
26. That is, in a ship? It was not at hand.
27. By the Chairman: Had you any communication with Mr. Buchanan respecting your not having any larger quantity than one hundred reams to offer? A few days prior to that—a fortnight or three weeks—they telegraphed up to me from Melbourne that they had five hundred reams in stock; but in the interim they had sold four hundred reams. I think I mentioned that to Mr. Buchanan as a reason we could not supply the whole quantity required.
28. By Mr. Abbott: Was that prior to the tender? No, after.
29. Prior to the tender you had been apprised that you had five hundred reams? Yes.
30. By the Chairman: But it was prior to your making of the tender for one hundred reams that you received the intimation that they had been sold? I did not know until the tender was advertised. I telegraphed down, presuming we had five hundred reams; but the reply was that there was only one hundred.
31. And when you telegraphed you found there were only one hundred reams? Yes.
32. Did you communicate that fact to Mr. Buchanan that that was the reason you only tendered for one hundred? Yes; I have not the slightest doubt.
33. Had you any communication with Mr. Buchanan as to the reason of your tendering at so low a rate as eight-pence halfpenny? No, I think not. I should not have thought it necessary to give Mr. Buchanan any particular reason for supplying the paper at eight-pence halfpenny. But if I had known that it was so scarce, perhaps I should have charged a higher price. Under ordinary circumstances, I should not think eight-pence halfpenny an out-of-the-way price—certainly not a low price.
34. The price at which you tendered was not in fact a low price? Not particularly low. I should have no objection to supply the Government at seven-pence halfpenny for all they wanted.
35. Had you ceased to hold the contract for supplying the Victorian Government at that time? Yes—one contract. One contract we still hold. It is divided into two portions; one is a contract for papers only, and the other is for the sundry goods. The former contract is for one specific quantity; that is, we do not hold a stock to supply it. We import five hundred or five thousand reams, and they go to the stores at once; we never keep it in stock.
36. Then you had a contract at the time binding you to furnish the Victorian Government? That contract does not at all apply to this double foolscap now in question. That contract was for specific quantities, deliverable on a certain day. This paper of course was not any part or parcel of that. It was such as we kept for ordinary printing purposes.
37. By Mr. Rolleston: What description of paper? Double foolscap.
38. By the Chairman: Can you recall whether you had any communication with Mr. Buchanan, or gave him any reason for having tendered at the rate of eight-pence halfpenny for those hundred reams? No, decidedly not: I do not see what reason I could have assigned for it. It is not as if it were a useless paper. Foolscap is always in requisition.
39. Did you ever state to Mr. Buchanan that you gave it so low because you were desirous of clearing out your stock for the Victorian Government, whose contract you no longer held? Oh, no; decidedly not.
40. To your knowledge, did any of your firm, or any person on your behalf, give that information to Mr. Buchanan? Not to my knowledge; certainly not. I did not, because I had no reason for doing so. We were not bound by any contract to supply it, and as it was a thing of every-day use there would be no great anxiety to part with it at that price.
41. I ask you that question because I have before me a reason assigned by Mr. Buchanan, in answer

- answer to a communication from the Treasury. I will, in the first place, read you the recommendation given with reference to these tenders, and then a subsequent communication, which will explain to you the reason of the questions I have put, and perhaps recall something to your memory if such a matter did occur. (The Chairman here read the recommendation, Mr. Lane's letter, and Mr. Buchanan's minute.—Vide introduction to proceedings of March 1st)? That is not certainly the case. The very fact of our having at one time proffered to supply the paper at seven-pence halfpenny per pound — (I have in my pocket, I think, the list of January 8th—Appendix No. 16.) That was in answer to a letter I had from Mr. Lane, requesting to know the probable prices at which I could supply these goods.
42. Was that at the period of this tender? No, prior to it. So that to imagine that double foolscap cost eight-pence halfpenny in England, when we proffered to supply it here at seven-pence halfpenny — That is January, 1859, in answer to a letter I received from Mr. Lane. (List produced.)
43. That is twelve months previously? Yes. Here you see three thousand reams of double foolscap at seven-pence farthing per pound, subject to exchange at par.
44. By Mr. Rolleston: And seven-pence farthing per pound left you a margin of profit? We made a profit out of it. So that eight-pence halfpenny was not to be considered a low price. If I had known it had been scarce I would have had a larger price, no doubt about it.
45. By the Chairman: But you never assigned to Mr. Buchanan as a reason—you never stated to him that you gave it so low because you were clearing out your stock? No; I did not think it at all necessary to make any excuse for parting with it at that price.
46. Then what should you consider one shilling per pound as a price? I should not think it much if I happened to be the only holder. Of course I should then get as much as I could. But still it is a high price, no doubt about it. It leaves a very large margin of profit.
47. By Mr. Rolleston: You would take advantage of the market? Yes.
48. By the Chairman: But the price you name, eight-pence halfpenny, is distinctly not less than English cost with the usual charges added? Well, I can give any amount of security for the fulfilment of a contract according to the prices in that document. That, I think, will be sufficient proof that seven-pence farthing does pay.
49. Will you put this document in, so that it may be appended to the evidence? I have no objection. (Appendix No 16.) Mr. Lane has the original document. (Document put in, and marked S.)
50. Have you, during the last three years, been frequently a tenderer and supplier to the Colonial Government? Yes, I have tendered several times.
51. Have you generally been a successful tenderer? Well, I think so, perhaps with the exception of two or three times. Few people had some of those goods which were generally advertised for, and I have supplied them as a matter of necessity. Few other people would, perhaps, come into competition with us. Having a house down at Melbourne as well, we could supply when, perhaps, other people could not.
52. In the course of your business with the Colonial Store, and in your tendering and supplying, have you found any want of facility or any difficulties thrown in your way? None whatever.
53. Have you had any reason to complain of the way in which your tenders were dealt with in any respect? No, none. If a tender were not accepted, that I suppose would be the end of it.
54. Have you ever had reason to suppose that there was any favoritism shewn in the acceptance of tenders or in dealing with tenders? No, I have not.
55. This Board has been ordered to make inquiries, in consequence of the Government having reason to believe, from information they have received, that large quantities of stores, on account of the public service, have at various times been tendered for and supplied by Mr. Buchanan and the late Chief Clerk of the Colonial Storekeeper's Department, Mr. John Weston, under the assumed names of James Staunton and Staunton & Co.—Is there any matter within your knowledge, or any information which you can afford the Board with reference to that charge, Mr. Sands? No, there is not.
56. By Mr. Rolleston: Did you ever hear of such a firm as Staunton and Company, or James Staunton? No.
57. Do you know anybody in business of that name in London? I certainly do not; I know of none of that name.
58. You know most of the large paper dealers and stationers? Yes; I have had very large transactions with them.
59. Did you ever know that Mr. Weston was tendering or supplying? No, I never imagined such a thing.
60. By Mr. Abbott: Do you recollect the date of the advertisement for tenders under which you supplied the one hundred reams? No, I do not; but that was the document.
61. The 15th December, 1859? Yes.
62. Under that you supplied one hundred reams of double foolscap? Yes.
63. Did not Mr. Buchanan communicate with you immediately on the acceptance of that tender? I received the requisition immediately for supplying it—within half-an-hour.
64. Immediately? Within a very short time.
65. Was your tender to supply one hundred reams, or the whole? No; one hundred reams only.
66. Do you recollect tenders having been advertised for subsequently to that—soon after that—for some kind of paper? Yes, without quantities.
67. Without quantities? Yes; and to supply what paper might be required during the period of five or six months—such paper as might be required up to March.

- Mr. J. Sands. 68. March or April was it? Yes; I then sent in tenders for some portions of them. I put them at a high price because I did not want particularly to part with them.
- 8 Mar., 1860. 69. You did not want to ———? For some of the descriptions of goods—the double foolscap I did not tender for at all.
70. The same kind of goods that you supplied under the previous tender? Yes. If you had that tender I could point out at once. It was only for cartridge papers and lithographic papers. I did not tender for the others. There was no definite quantities asked for.
71. Do you recollect whether that was the date of the advertisement—the 31st December? I should think it was very likely about that period.
72. Is that it? (Shewn to witness—Appendix No. 15.) Yes, that is the one. The reason I did not tender there for the double foolscap, or any of those things was, there being no definite quantities given. They might have wanted five hundred reams or five thousand reams, and I could not bind myself to supply any indefinite quantity. These being papers of which it was likely they would want but a comparatively small quantity, I tender for the supplying of them. Seeing that they tendered for five hundred reams double foolscap, I thought it possible they might want a thousand reams or two before the expiration of the year.
73. And you sent in no tender at all on that occasion for the double foolscap? No.
74. You did for the other kind of paper? Yes.
75. Did not the same difficulties exist with reference to the other kinds of paper? No; comparatively small quantities are consumed, while very large quantities of the other papers are consumed.
76. Of the double foolscap? Of the double foolscap.
77. And you took the chance? The stock we had here, and in Melbourne, was certainly quite equal to supply all that I tendered for. The prices are high——
78. Those prices are high? There is no doubt of it.
79. As high as the one shilling and two-pence for the ———? No, it is not quite equal to that.
80. As much as one shilling? Oh, those are hand-made papers.
81. But are they in proportion equal to the charge of one shilling? No. I think some of those papers are nearly two shillings per lb.; but there is a great difference between hand-made paper and double foolscap.
82. At the time of this advertisement, the 31st December, had you this double foolscap in stock in any quantity? I had some down at Melbourne.
83. I understood you that you had only one hundred reams left? Are you speaking of the last or the first.
84. I am speaking of the second. I understand that the one hundred reams cleared out your stock? Yes; but there was a quantity coming on in the "Lincolnshire."
85. In a vessel to arrive? Yes.
86. But you had it not in stock? Are you speaking of the first.
87. No; the second? I do not know whether she has arrived or not. It is not likely that she will bring more than five hundred or one thousand reams, and I would not, with a stock like that, tender to supply at a fixed price an indefinite quantity of paper.
88. Is it not a fact that when any kind of paper or any other description of goods is scarce in the market, the price is high in proportion to the scarcity? Certainly, I think that is always the case, without anybody gets into the same position that I did. I did not know that paper was so scarce, or I should have charged a higher price for it.
89. Do you recollect after the 31st December seeing Mr. Buchanan and speaking to him about the advertisement, Mr. Sands? I think I did. Yes, I think I came down.
90. Do you recollect what was the——? I think it was to ask him particularly the probable quantities likely to be wanted of these goods.
91. He met you in George-street I think, close by your own place? Yes; and I think at the time I pointed out to him the absurdity of whoever constructed that advertisement—the manner in which it was put in—the impossibility of anybody tendering under those conditions.
92. Can you state what passed between you, Mr. Sands, with regard to this matter? It is impossible to tell what the conversation might have turned on. That was the subject matter of the conversation, I know—that and trying to elucidate the probable quantities of each of those descriptions of papers likely to be used during the period. I think that was the tenor of the conversation; I fancy so.
93. Can you say whether Mr. Buchanan suggested to you the propriety of your limiting your offer to any particular quantity that you could furnish? I cannot say that I do remember; but it is possible he might.
94. He might have done so? Yes; but I really cannot charge my mind as to the fact. It is very likely that he might have given some definite quantities to be tendered for.
95. Do you recollect whether he did not tell you that, so far as it was in his power, he would take all the paper you collected in that way, to prevent your being burdened by more than you wanted in your trade? No, I do not remember it.
96. Do you recollect whether there was anything to that effect? I think not.
97. Can you state positively whether it was so or not? I should say, decidedly, that there was no suggestion of the sort—decidedly.
98. In the event of yours being the lowest tender? No; decidedly not. There was no proposition of the sort.
99. Not a proposition, but that he would do what he could to take it off your hands, not that he would do it? There was no such proposition or suggestion.
100. There was no proposition of the kind? I am quite sure. In ordinary conversation it might have passed—some suggestion of the sort; but, really, I am perfectly well aware that after after the lapse of two or three months the ordinary points of conversation slip through your mind. Mr. J. Sands.

101. Would you go so far as this: if Mr. Buchanan states positively that it was so, would you contradict him? I would not like to do it; but it is one of those things which would have been likely to have impressed itself on my mind had the statement been made. 8 Mar., 1860.

102. Do you recollect suggesting the probability of your being left with a large stock of goods on your hands which you would not require? It would be impossible for me to be, in that case. Where was I to get a large quantity from? The period was so short that you could not have made yourself the possessor of a large quantity. The difficulty would be, if you bound yourself by any tender to have bought the goods, and certainly not the fear of being overburdened with them.

103. The difficulty of getting them? Yes, than the probability of having too many.

104. The probability of having to pay too high a price? The probability, too, that I should have had to pay a very high price to obtain the goods from other people if bound by some fixed tender, which, of course, would have been known immediately in the trade. They would have said, "Sands and Kenny must have it, and my price is so much;" or, "the Government must have it," and I should be surcharged with the difference.

105. And for that reason you would not tender? For that reason I did not tender.

106. At the time you had this conversation with Mr. Buchanan, you were aware that this double foolscap was scarce in the market? Of course I was.

107. Very scarce? I was certainly aware that it was very scarce then, but not before.

108. You were not aware of the fact when you sent in the tender for the one hundred reams? No.

109. Did it not seem probable at the time that it was so scarce that the Government would have to come to you for this stock you had in the "Lincolnshire," and give you your price for it? Oh! no. There are too many vessels arriving to hold on anything of that sort with the probability of success.

110. But the same probability would apply in both cases—either that if you took the contract you would have to pay a high price—? Of course it is a probability.

111. Or that the Government would have to come to you? But I do not see the point of your question.

112. Why not—if this double foolscap was very scarce, and you had a large stock to arrive? But at no time did I say to Mr. Buchanan that I would supply the balance at eight-pence half-penny.

113. I did not think you would when you found it very scarce? I should then look for a higher price.

114. But you had a large stock to arrive? Yes; I am speaking of it. Though I had supplied the one hundred reams, I certainly should not have supplied the other four hundred at the same price.

115. But did it not appear probable to you that they would have to come to you for this stock which was coming in the "Lincolnshire"? I do not know. Gilchrist Watt, McNab, and lots of those people, have it in by from fifty to five hundred reams at a time, and it might be filled up.

116. But if that stock had happened to come here just at the time, you could have got for it any price you liked? I should have got as much as I could for it, I can tell you. If I am not mistaken, the principal matter of conversation at the time I met Mr. Buchanan was relative to a letter I had addressed to the Colonial Treasury, and which I conceive had been handed over to Mr. Buchanan for his report. I think that was the principal point of our conversation.

117. Do you recollect what was the subject of the letter? It was relative to a suggestion as to the importation of stationery generally.

118. That paper you handed in, Mr. Sands, is a tender and list of prices? It is not exactly a tender; it is replying to a letter I received from Mr. Lane, giving the probable prices at which we could tender.

119. For any particular period? A definite quantity to be delivered at a fixed period—ten or twelve months, perhaps—at one fixed period. And those are the prices at which we are supplying the Victorian Government.

120. But when any one of the articles mentioned in that list became scarce, you would not supply them at that price? If I were bound by a contract.

121. At the price named in the schedule if you were not bound by a contract? I do not know. The usual arrangement in Victoria is, that a sufficient quantity for a year's supply is imported in one lot and handed over to the Colonial Storekeeper, or whoever it may be, and then you get your draft. On delivery you receive the money. Those are the terms on which we had it down in Melbourne. There is no keeping the goods in store and supplying them in detail; of course, that would never do at those prices.

122. But if you had an order from the Government, or from anyone else, for the supply of a lot of any kind of paper, you would not supply it at that price? No, decidedly not.

123. It would be according to the scarcity of the article in the market, or the demand and supply? As I pointed out to you before, it is only by making a perfectly wholesale transaction of the thing that it could be done at those prices. If the things come into my store, and I have to retail them out three or four, or five reams at a time, I get as much for them as I can; that is the simple fact, and consequently, when I put a tender in for those papers I did not care whether I got it or not. If I had got it I should have got a very large price.

124. There is one item tendered for here by you—superfine laid imperial, inside, 72 lbs. weight per ream, £7 10s.—that is your price? Yes, that is the price we tendered for.

125. Was not that a high price? It is a monstrous price—no doubt about it.

- Mr. J. Sands. 126. Do you recollect, on or about the same time, what you supplied the Victorian Government for? Well, if I am not mistaken, our price then was either 1s. 1d., or it might have been 1s. or 1s. 0½d. per pound; but I cannot exactly charge my memory.
- 9 Mar., 1860. 127. That would be under £4 a ream? Yes. There is another thing—you will observe that at the prices attached we supplied the Victorian Government. By referring to any of the Port Phillip Gazettes you will see the tenders advertized, and the schedule of prices. So that if you have any doubt about the list of prices I have given in, you can see in the Gazette that the last tender accepted was still under our last one.
128. I have no sort of doubt about it. I only want to ask you the charge there and here, and what is the difference? Yes. The difference is this—there you have got a specific order. The position in which I should have been placed here would have been very different. You might have sent to me for ten reams of imperial, for instance, and at the present moment in Sydney I do not believe you could buy ten reams of imperial at any price you like to put upon it.
129. At that time? At this or that, or any time—hand-made imperial. I do not think you could buy ten reams of hand-made imperial at any price you might like to give for it.
130. Did you at any time, Mr. Sands, take instructions from any Government officer, other than Mr. Buchanan, for the supply of paper and general stationery? Well, I think, generally speaking, the requisitions were sent down. There were no particular instructions beyond that. We have certainly supplied, I think, to the Surveyor General's Office, and some of those people, when a requisition has come from them, I think, but I will not be quite positive. Oh! I think not. I think the requisition has always come through Mr. Buchanan. You are speaking of that, I presume?
131. Yes. Did you on any occasion send specially to Melbourne for articles required? Oh! yes, several times.
132. For which you had orders other than through Mr. Buchanan? Yes, I think so. On one occasion a lot of lithographic paper for the Surveyor General's Office—for maps. That one, at any rate, particularly recurs to my mind.
133. Lithographic paper did you say? Yes.
134. How were the prices for that—were they high at the time? I had a good price for it, no doubt. I forget now, but I think it was eighteen-pence per lb.
135. Is that a high price? It is a pretty good price. I dare say one shilling would have paid me.
136. One shilling per pound would have paid you, and you got one shilling and sixpence? Yes. It was one of those things which had to be got elsewhere. I dare say they charged me about one shilling a pound for it. It is only just another thing which bears out the letter I addressed to the Colonial Office here. The departments get badly supplied, and most expensively supplied, with goods not adapted to their use.
137. The Colonial Stores? Yes; when out of their own goods they have to throw themselves on the mercy of the trade here—and, I was going to say, that they were fleeced.
138. And they are fleeced on all sides? If they lay themselves open for it.
139. By the trade? It is impossible for Mr. Buchanan, or anyone else, to write out indents begining from an anchor and going down to a steel pen—I cannot do it in a stationer's shop,—and consequently they must occasionally run very short of many things during the twelve months, and when they do they will find that people do not keep stock for the Government without getting paid for it.
140. They make them pay for it? They are bound to do so.
141. I think I understood you to say that some portion of the contract you had with the Victorian Government you had given up, or lost at the end of last year? The last year's contract we lost. Some one else, I forget now the person's name (Cook, I think) got the tender last year, at a very small reduction under our prices. I do not think we were more than about £3 out in about £7,000.
142. Francis Cook, was that the name of the person? Yes; but he did not get the tender for the odd matters—the subsidiary small things.
143. But did he for the substantial part? Yes.
144. Was this double foolscap part of it? Of course it would be.
145. That was the larger portion of it? Yes, that would be a large item.
146. Cauldwell, was that the name of another contractor—Do you recollect him getting any of the Victorian contracts? That I think was not the last year; I think it was the year before that.
147. And Franklin and Company? Yes, they had the contract for the hand-made papers only; not for the machine-made papers.
148. Then it is quite possible that it could have come to Mr. Buchanan's knowledge that you had lost these contracts, although you did not tell him? Of course. It is very likely I did tell him that we had not got the contract.
149. I think you stated, in your examination-in-chief, that you did not tell him? I did say that I did not tell him, as a reason for selling the paper at eight-pence halfpenny per pound.
150. You state now that it is very likely you told him? I might have told him that we had not got the contract; but I should certainly not have assigned that as a reason for selling a number of reams of double foolscap at eight-pence halfpenny.
151. But you thought you would have had five hundred reams? Or a thousand reams.
152. If it had been the case that you had had a large stock, in consequence of the loss of these contracts? Oh! we could not, in consequence of the way in which the contract was got out; you could not be left with a residue. We imported a specific quantity to meet the contracts. But these five hundred reams we had in stock were altogether independent of any supply the Government might want.

153. Do you recollect whether, several months before the 15th December, you had spoken to Mr. Buchanan about that particular paper—five hundred reams? It is very likely I have. I was down at Melbourne, and I think I brought up some samples of foolscap.
154. And you think it likely that you shewed the samples to Mr. Buchanan? Yes, it is likely; I think it is almost sure that I did so.
155. And you told him you had that quantity? Yes.
156. And, between that period and the 15th December, they had sold four hundred of the five hundred reams? Yes; they must have done.
157. Do you recollect at what price you offered it to him then? No; I could not say. I do not know that I offered it at any price. I think I shewed him the kind of paper we were supplying, and the price—
158. You do not recollect what the price was? No; I think that year we were supplying at seven-pence halfpenny; but I will not be certain. But whether I offered it at any price to Mr. Buchanan I do not know. I think I shewed it him more as a sample of the description of paper we were supplying at the time. That is my impression.
159. But does not the price of that paper depend upon its quality? The same as all papers do.
160. All papers do? Yes.
161. And of double foolscap some portions are superior to others—it is of different kinds? Yes; some kinds are better than others, and of course there is a difference in the price.
162. There are different kinds? Yes; but I never saw double foolscap worth more than eight-pence per pound.
163. Unless when it was scarce? I am speaking of its worth—of its invoice cost.
164. Not what it is worth here? No; it is worth here what you can get for it.
165. By the Chairman: Does not the weight generally fix the quality of the paper? No; for instance, there is some hand-made paper, seven pounds to the ream, worth three shillings per pound.
166. Then double foolscap, 24 lbs., would fix the quality of that foolscap? No, not its quality. You might have the same quality of paper 24 lbs. or 28 lbs., the same description of pulp and coloring matter. The one would be a little thicker than the other, but they would both be of the same quality.
167. Would it fix its thickness? The weight and quality govern the value.
168. The weight? The weight.
169. And eight-pence halfpenny is a price which will leave a profit upon the actual cost in England and all charges? Yes.
170. It is not less than English cost, or what it ought to cost the Government? No, decidedly not. I could give any security for supplying at the rate stated in the paper I have put in; seven-pence halfpenny or seven-pence farthing does leave a margin of profit.
171. Then you did not state that eight-pence halfpenny was a low price? No, I cannot see that I could have made such a statement.
172. And you did not assign the loss of the contract? I did not assign that as a reason for such a price.
173. Had you a large stock to arrive in the "Lincolnshire"? Five hundred reams.
174. Do you consider that a large stock? Well, it is a large stock for stationers to keep, because it is a paper that is not very much used. I do not suppose at any time you could buy one hundred reams in Sydney, except at M'Nab's and other places, where they have been gradually accumulating or bought with the idea of waiting for a chance of selling to the Government.
175. You have stated that your reason for not tendering under the notice of the 31st December was, the quantities not being defined? Yes.
176. And you charged a high price for what you tendered for? Yes.
177. Were you induced to charge that high price from the fact of the quantities not being defined? That was one of the principal reasons, because, had I been run out of my own stock, and compelled to go to Piddington's or Sheriff's, or some other of the stationers, for the goods required, they would know that I was bound to supply, at a fixed price, and would make me pay. But I was independent of that position. We had a good stock of those papers at Melbourne, and a good stock here. They are not papers that we import for ordinary sale or use, but more for bookbinding.
178. Then if it had been suggested to you to tender for a definite portion—a part—would not that have removed your objection? Well, I wished them to give me some definite quantity. Without I had had some rough idea of the quantity, I would not have tendered.
179. I am referring to the double foolscap. Would a suggestion to make a tender for a definite quantity have removed the objection? Well, it would. It has been asked whether Mr. Buchanan did not make that suggestion; I certainly cannot charge my mind.
180. Such a suggestion would have tended to remove your objection? No doubt about it.
181. Did you make the tender after your conversation with Mr. Buchanan for supplying the double foolscap? Yes.
182. To supply double foolscap? Oh! no, I did not. I never tendered to supply double foolscap: my tender was certainly subsequent to my conversation with Mr. Buchanan.
183. And after such a conversation as that referred to, and the suggestion that you should tender for a definite quantity, and that everything would be done to take any excess off your hands, what would be the natural inference? I think it would have induced me to tender for some definite quantity.
184. Did you do so? I certainly did not.
185. Such a notice as that, leaving the quantities undefined, does it give an advantage to any person who must have a knowledge of the quantity, or pretty nearly the quantity, likely to

Mr. J. Sands.
8 Mar., 1860.

Mr. J. Sands. bo required, over the trade generally? Most decidedly. Any one knowing those quantities could put a tender in with confidence. For instance, if I knew you must have "fifty reams of imperial flat, forty pounds weight," I might be able to put it down at two shillings per pound, and "two reams of blue laid, sixteen pounds," I might afford at one shilling, although it might be a more valuable paper than the other.

8 Mar., 1860.

186. Would such an advertisement as that, in fact, operate to deter the trade generally, not possessing the peculiar knowledge, from coming into competition? It would most decidedly do so. Everyone knows how the tenders are doctored by that means, where you have got a positive knowledge. I know of a most delightful instance, where an eight-quire book was tendered for at ten shillings and sixpence, and a six-quire book at twenty-one shillings. The real fact was that the eight-quire book never was used, and consequently made the tender add up most beautifully.

187. By Mr. Abbott: If a very large quantity were required by the Government, and tenders were invited for that quantity, would it not raise the price at once? I do not think so.

188. Not amongst people knowing the stock in town? No, I do not see it at all.

189. Do you know whether or not Government contracts are generally for an indefinite quantity during the year when they are advertised for? It is not so down at Melbourne; there definite quantities are advertised for.

190. But not here? No, there is nothing of the sort.

191. Is it an invariable rule at Melbourne? It has been for the last four years, I think. They first commenced the system by calling for tenders at the rate per cent. on English cost you would import their goods for, and afterwards at specific prices on the cost. Some tendered at sixteen and some at ten per cent., and so on.

192. Did you ever hold a contract for indefinite supplies during the last two or three years? Yes.

193. At Melbourne? Not of any leading goods, such as papers, but simply office materials, such as sealing-wax, pens, inkstands, and the ordinary little things stationers deal in. Those are open contracts.

194. Indefinite supplies? Indefinite supplies.

195. Do you recollect holding a contract within the last year or two for the Melbourne Government, for an indefinite supply of something more than sealing-wax? Well, yes, of those infinitive articles; but all those large things, such as double foolscap papers, account-book papers, book-binding materials, were kept separate from that indefinite tender.

196. And can you state whether or not it is the general practice in Melbourne to have contracts for certain quantities, or for an indefinite supply? For positive quantities.

197. By Mr. Buchanan: Everything? Not everything. I can assure you it is not everything. They have another tender altogether, which I hold now, for supplying little things which are required for the different offices.

198. Will you have the kindness to look at that—(Appendix No. 17.) You will see there is a list of goods to be supplied by you? The qualities, not the quantities.

199. There are no definite quantities? No definite quantities. It is as I have said—we are bound as to price, but we are not bound as to quantity for them. In the other portion (I do not know whether you will find it here or not) you will find the tender for double foolscap and some of those things of which definite quantities are ordered, or I am very much mistaken. I have not looked over this. Was it in the tenders for the main items of stationery?

200. You will see a list of papers as long as my arm in your contract? In ours?

201. Yes, contract 691? There is no double foolscap in this. We are speaking of double foolscap and demy generally. I am speaking of the large items. These are small compared with four thousand reams of double foolscap.

201. By Mr. Abbott: There are no definite quantities given in that schedule? No, but I say there is another one in which definite quantities are given.

202. There was no hesitation in tendering in that case? No, because we know pretty well the quantities which will be consumed, having done business with them for so many years past. In here you will find none of those larger items of papers—not one.

203. But in that schedule there is no definite quantity stated? No; but you will find another schedule. That is not in this Gazette—it will be somewhere else—where they do give a definite quantity. I do not know whether it is in this Gazette or not. I think Mr. Buchanan will know that they tendered several times for definite quantities of papers.

204. By Mr. Buchanan: I admit that they did so tender, and that they use both practices—that is all I wish to elicit? I stated long ago that there were two systems of tenders.

205. Here is a contract embracing 150 items at least—that is something more than sealing-wax and inkstands? Bless my life, I cannot exactly take the list and go through it. I am speaking of miscellaneous goods.

206. By Mr. Abbott: But is there not in this schedule paper of all kinds? If you can find a sheet of double foolscap, I cannot.

207. Of all kinds? There is no imperial.

208. Imperial—imperial drawing paper? Well, read just above it.

209. Hand-made, 45 lbs., £2 10s.—I presume, 45 lbs.—Is it book imperial? That is 72 lbs. It may be lithographic imperial for all I know. It certainly is not book paper.

210. But can you say what the exceptions are to those items that are undefined? Double foolscap, foolscap, royal, imperial, demy, medium, and most likely hand-made foolscap. Perhaps you will allow me to read that. You are confusing yourself about the description of those things, I think. Imperial, 45 lbs. Everybody knows that is not imperial for account-book manufacturing. You cannot tell me a line there—

211. By Mr. Buchanan: You said royal and demy were not there. They are both there, and

- and foolscap is there? Yes; but you know as well as I do that when I allude to foolscap it is not foolscap for the Gazette purposes. Mr. J. Sands.
212. I am speaking of single foolscap? That does not alter the fact that the larger items are contracted for in definite quantities. (Contract No. 691, Victoria Government Gazette, put in at the request of Mr. Abbott—Appendix No. 17.) 8 Mar., 1860.
213. By Mr. Abbott: Is this foolscap mentioned here, 15 lbs. per ream, better than the double foolscap or inferior to it? Very much superior, of course; most likely it is blue laid paper—I do not know whether it is described as blue laid.
214. It is not described as laid paper—foolscap, 15 lbs. per ream? Are you sure it is not hand-made.
215. It is not described as hand-made? But the paper just above—
216. Drawing imperial, per quire; drawing—per dozen pieces, 1s. 6d.; foolscap, 15 lbs. per ream? What is the price at which it is quoted?
217. Seventeen shillings and sixpence? That is hand-made foolscap. Mr. Buchanan must be perfectly well aware that no machine-made foolscap is worth that.
218. By Mr. Buchanan: I am satisfied it would not be the manufacturing price, but I am by no means sure you would not ask that price if you could get it? That is a different thing altogether. But with reference to that particular tender, no persons with their eyes open would tender for 17s. 6d., knowing that there were other contractors who would shave each other as low as they possibly could.
219. It is so described there? It may be a misprint for all I know.
220. Here is hand-made foolscap, 17 lbs., will you look at the price? Where is it?
221. Three lines below? £1 5s., 17 lbs. The other is 15 lbs. Well, perhaps it might have been a bad sample sent in. One might have been of better quality than the other.
222. It all depends on the quality? There is all the difference in the world between a machine-made paper and a hand-made paper. 17 lb. foolscap is charged 21s; that, if I mistake not, is 18s 3d. at Home. There might have been samples supplied, which for all I know, account for the difference.
223. The inference is that one is machine-made and the other hand-made? It is utterly impossible; and I am sure you or any one writing it out would never be so stupid as to put 15 lbs. foolscap at 17s 6d., and expect to get a tender where half a dozen as keen fellows as you would find anywhere are competing.
224. But there is a difference of 2 lbs. in the weight of the paper; that is all that is described here? I think you will admit that two samples of hand-made paper—one may be worth 1s. and another 1s. 6d.
225. But as far as we see from the printed tender, there are two samples of paper—one 17 lbs. and the other 15 lbs.—and the difference in price is 7s. 6d. a-ream;—is not the inference that one is inferior to the other? Inferior in weight and quality.
226. There is only 2 lbs. difference in weight? That cannot create more than a difference of 2s. 6d. in the price.
227. Then there is 5s. difference in quality? Yes; and that will never account for the difference between hand-made paper and machine-made paper.
228. What will account for it? Perhaps they do not use any of that 15 lbs. You perfectly well know how these things are doctored up—how they can be doctored up—how some of those items are altered. You know how you tender year after year for many of them without having one in your place, and never use one. Of all that list of goods tendered for, I'll be bound that there is not a requisition for one-third during the year.
229. By Mr. Rolleston: I wanted to ask you, Mr. Sands, if the paper tendered for under this notice of the 31st December, 1859, is of a similar description to that to which your attention has been called by Mr. Abbott—blue wove single foolscap, 13 and 14 lbs. weight? No. I should presume from the price that it is hand-made paper. There is a vast deal of difference. There are no hand-made papers here. I should presume that the superfine laid imperials, inside, would be hand-made, and the laid super-royals. They are not described as such. You might put them as hand-made or machine-made papers, with a difference of about 6d. per lb.
230. Is it unusual to advertise for tenders for this description of paper without giving definite quantities? But if definite quantities were given, it should certainly be advertised whether it is to be machine-made or hand-made, seeing the difference in the margin of price.
231. Then a tender of that kind being invited was calculated, you say, to deter the trade from tendering? I think so. I should not like to get a tender of that sort.
232. And would therefore throw it into the hands of any person who might be acquainted with the quantities likely to be required? Yes; it would place all other tenderers who had the means of knowing the positive quantities at an enormous advantage over everyone else—no doubt about that.

Mr. Francis M'Nab called in and examined:—

1. By Mr. Abbott: You are carrying on business in Sydney, Mr. M'Nab? Yes.
2. Have you, at different periods, supplied goods to the Colonial Storekeeper's department? Yes, for some time, occasionally.
3. During some years? Yes, for some years, less or more.
4. Sometimes by private purchase and sometimes under public tender—very rarely under tender. I do not know that we have had a tender at all.
5. Generally under an order sent to you? Generally under an order sent to us for the goods.
6. Who generally transacts your business with the Colonial Stores for you? Whoever happens

Mr. F. M'Nab.
8 Mar., 1860.

Mr. F. M'Nab. happens to be in. We have supplied the Stores with paper at various times, and if the young man is not in I am generally there myself. One or other of us attends to it.

8 Mar., 1860. 7. I think you are agents for Cowan and Co., the great stationers? Yes, we are; we have been for some time.

8. Do you recollect, on the 15th December last, tenders having been invited for the supply of five hundred reams of double-foolscap? I recollect it.

9. Did you tender on that occasion? We did not. It was rather indefinite, and on that account we did not. There was no quantity mentioned.

10. On this occasion I speak of, there are five hundred reams? I do not think we tendered.

11. There were five hundred reams? We had not so many in stock. We did not tender.

12. You recollect that particular advertisement? I recollect one of the advertisements. I recollect going to the Chamber of Commerce to look at one of the advertisements. It was indefinite, and we did not think any more of it; but I do not think we tendered for any of them. We had, I think, some conversation with the Colonial Treasurer about that time, or previously, in reference to tendering for all the paper he required. We gave him an estimate, I think, of what we could supply certain classes of paper at.

13. At that time you furnished the Treasurer with information as to the prices? Yes, we did. We gave him a letter, and an estimate along with it.

14. Was double foolscap one of the items? It was. There were several items; in fact, I believe all the papers they required. We got a list of them. We were asked what we could supply them at per ream, and we gave the Treasurer an estimate at per pound for them. I suppose there might have been fifteen or twenty various kinds of papers.

15. Do you recollect, on the occasion of that advertisement for tenders, whether a form of tender was sent to you from this office? It was.

16. At that time? Sometime about that period. I could not be particular as to the day. Sometime about the end of the year.

17. Do you recollect whether that was sent after being asked for it or whether you made an application? I think we might have made an application for it in some shape or other. I think so. My impression is that we might have applied for it, but I cannot be certain, because Mr. M'Cormack applies sometimes without consulting me.

18. Who is Mr. M'Cormack? He is corresponding clerk.

19. Do you recollect on a second occasion—about the end of December—a tender being invited for foolscap? I do recollect it.

20. For other kinds of paper? For other kinds of paper.

21. Did you tender on that occasion? We did not tender on that occasion.

22. Can you say why? I think there was no quantity specified at that time, and we did not care about tendering for an indefinite quantity. It was for a short period.

23. For a short period? Yes, I think it was for a short period.

24. Would that have been an objection if it had been for any length of time? If it had been for any length of time we might have tendered, and taken some trouble about the matter.

25. You would not consider that an objection? On the contrary the longer the time the better we should have prepared. If it had gone over a series of years we could have done it. But at the particular time I do not think we were very full of double foolscap.

26. You do not think you had any quantity? I do not think we had much of it about that time. It is a thing we do not keep perhaps more than a couple of hundred reams of at a time.

27. Do you recollect a purchase of Mr. Buchanan from you of single foolscap about that time—after the 31st December? Some time in January?

28. Sometime in January? Yes.

29. Do you recollect if that was one of the items included in the second advertisement? I think it was. I think there was some single foolscap advertised for.

30. Can you state the date particularly, Mr. M'Nab? I think it was the 18th of January; at least it is entered in our books on the 18th, and I have no doubt it was the 18th.

31. Do you recollect what the quantity was? I think there were about a couple of hundred reams altogether.

32. About 200 reams? Yes.

33. And the particulars do you recollect? The prices are,—The best fines and superfines from 9½d. to about 11½d. or 11¾d.

34. From 9½d. to 11¾d.? About that; 11½d. to 11¾d. were our current prices for them. our current prices for superfines were 11½d. and cases charged, or about 1s. and no cases charged.

35. What are the current prices here, Mr. M'Nab, for this foolscap? Our price invariably for superfine is 1s. per lb., and cases charged for the best superfines; and the others from 10½d. to 11d.

36. And the prices are according to the quality? The prices are according to the quality.

37. You will see under the head of Staunton & Co. a column of figures? Yes.

38. Can you state to the Board whether the prices stated there (Appendix No. 15) are higher or lower than those paid to you by Mr. Buchanan? These prices are higher than paid by Mr. Buchanan—ours are nearly 20 per cent. under that.

39. Yours were? Nearly 20 per cent. less than that. 14 lbs. we charge, for fines, ten shillings and nine-pence—they charge, if fine, fourteen shillings; for 15 lbs. we charge eleven shillings and nine-pence—this is charged seventeen shillings for 16 lbs.

40. Nearly 20 per cent. less than was charged by Staunton & Co.? Fully 20 per cent., some of them. I should say they are more in some instances. We should charge for yellow wove, of good ordinary quality, 25 per cent. less.

41. For the yellow wove? Yes.
42. There was some of that bought from you, I believe? Yes.
43. At the same time as the other papers—at nearly 25 per cent. less than Staunton & Co.? Mr. F. M'Nab.
Mar., 1860. Yes, for the yellow wove; but for the cream wove—considerably better quality than ordinary yellow wove—ours is very nearly 20 per cent. less, two-pence three-farthings is the difference in one shilling and three-pence.
44. At the time you sold the paper to Mr. Buchanan, had you heard anything of Staunton and Co.'s contract? No, I did not know anything at all about it.
45. When, afterwards, did you hear that they had contracted? I never heard of it until I saw something in the papers about the Colonial Stores being closed.
46. Would you have sold that paper to anyone at the same price, in the same quantities? To any man that I should be sure of. Of course when we are sure of getting paid we do not put so much on for risk. We should not have sold them for less to any man if he had paid us cash down on the spot.
47. Then by purchasing from you there was nearly 25 per cent. saved on that contract of Staunton & Co.? On these particular articles; I did not look at the others. [Tender handed to witness.]
48. Those that were purchased from you? There is exactly the difference between nine-pence three-farthings and ten-pence which we charged, and thirteen-pence—that is the difference. It averages from 20 to 25 per cent. as near as possible. I look at this article particularly because I know it better by its description.
49. By Mr. Rolleston: That yellow wove? Yes, and this blue wove. There is exactly the difference between nine-pence three-farthings and thirteen-pence. These articles I know better by their description; unless extremely common, the quality does not vary so much as it does in very fine paper. Common yellow wove we could put in at eight-pence halfpenny, but we have none on hand at present.
50. By Mr. Abbott: Look under the head "Sands and Kenny"? Yellow wove, £1 6s.: Is that for yellow wove, 16 lbs.?
51. The same items were tendered for by both parties? If ordinary yellow wove, it is an extravagant price.
52. That you consider an—? It is outrageous altogether. I should have thought it would have been double foolscap at that price.
53. You see it is the same item? It is outrageous altogether.
54. It is very much higher than Staunton and Company? £1 6s., and 17s. The common yellow wove; the commonest paper could be put in at about—we offered, in fact, to supply it for something about 8s. 6d. to 9s., for 12 lb. paper, to the Treasury.
55. In the list sent to the Treasury? Yes.
56. And how much have Sands and Kenny charged? We offered to put in 12 lb. paper at 7s 8d., or less, free on board.
57. And what is Sands and Kenny's price? £1 6s. for a 16 lb. paper.
58. What would your price be for that? We should say 8½d. to 9d. for a very good ordinary paper; about 8½d. per lb.,—10s. 8d. to 12s. per ream at this rate.
59. And they have charged how much? £1 6s.
60. They have tendered for that? Yes. Yellow wove paper, 12 lbs. weight, we offered at 7s. 8d. free on board, I think, or at a lower price free in London on board. An extreme good price for that would be 10s., or something thereabout.
61. Did you look at the other charges there? I did not. (Witness refers again to Tender.) This blue laid imperial, is that to be hand-made paper?
62. By Mr. Buchanan: Hand-made paper? Best hand-made paper is worth here about 1s. 4d. to 1s. 6d. per lb.
63. 1s. 4d. per lb.? Yes.
64. By Mr. Abbott: What is their charge? £7 10s. for 72 lbs. I should be glad to get £5 for it, £2 10s. less; but these are very extravagant altogether.
65. They are all extravagant? Yes, outrageous altogether.
66. Then, Mr. M'Nab, if the Government had contracted with Staunton and Co. for the supply of that foolscap paper at the prices mentioned here, they would have had to pay a higher price; but by purchasing from you, Mr. Buchanan made a saving of 25 per cent.? I should say so, varying from 20 to 25 per cent.; the difference between 9¾d. and 13d.—about 22½ per cent.
67. And he did purchase that paper from you? Yes.
68. Will you have the kindness to look at that schedule (Appendix No. 2); double foolscap is an item there? This, under the head of Sands and Kenny, is very reasonable; not out of the way, 8½d. for good ordinary paper.
69. Do you recollect the state of the market with regard to that double foolscap?—
70. By Mr. Buchanan: Do you see the whole of it, the quantities offered for? Oh! I beg your pardon—100 reams.
71. By Mr. Abbott: It was for five hundred reams, and he offers to supply only one hundred? I do not think the price is out of the way.
72. Which price? 8½d. per pound for double foolscap is a very reasonable price.
73. But do you recollect at that time whether this double foolscap was scarce or not—had you a stock of it? This is in December.
74. Yes? I do not think we had any in stock.
75. You would be almost as sure to have a good supply as anyone in the market? I think so. I think we sold out sometime between September and November. We sold three or four hundred reams, and we do not generally keep over a stock of two hundred or three hundred and fifty reams.

- Mr. F. M'Nab. 76. But you generally have as large a stock as any in Sydney? We have a very large stock.
- 5 Mar., 1860. 77. As large as any one in Sydney? We very seldom have less than £12,000 or £15,000 worth of paper of one kind or another.
78. Would you consider at that time, taking into consideration the scarcity of the paper, that 1s. per pound was a high price? No, I should not.
79. Or an extravagant price? No. If I had had it, knowing that it was wanted, I would have held it for 1s. per pound.
80. You would not have given it? No; I would keep it for a rise, if I thought I could get more. I know it was extremely scarce at the time.
81. At that time? Yes; we had many applications for it from parties in town, and we could not supply them. I think Sands and Kenny applied to us once or twice.
82. For some? Yes.
83. Would they have purchased from you at 1s.? If it had been of the best quality we would not let them have it for less. They have frequently purchased paper at 1s. per pound—they may have paid us 1s. per pound for double foolscap.
84. Under ordinary circumstances? Under ordinary circumstances, and never less than 11d. and 11½d. for good quality.
85. Never less? I do not think they have; we have to keep them a long time.
86. You would not let them have it for less than that at any time? No.
87. In times of scarcity you would take advantage of the increased demand? Undoubtedly.
88. You would take advantage of the Government or of anyone else? When we have it here it is not as if we had a certain market for it. If we take an order for a certain quantity of paper we have a certain market for it, and we put it in as low as possible; but if we bring it out here, we do not part with it at a mere nominal profit; we must have something to cover the expenses.
89. Can you say what the invoice price of that is at Home? It depends on the quality very much.
90. There are several qualities of it? Yes; there are several qualities.
91. The best? Will cost at Home now—I think our last quotations was from ten-pence halfpenny to eleven-pence halfpenny.
92. The best double foolscap? Yes, the best blue laid is eleven-pence halfpenny.
93. That is the cost at Home? That is the cost at Home, at the mills. There is a drawback of three-halfpence a-pound on it, but then there are all expenses to add.
94. Now, importing that yourself, without having, as you say, an actual order for it, what would you consider a fair profit on it? We do not sell it under one shilling.
95. And it costs you eleven-pence halfpenny at Home? We get three-half-pence drawback, and it costs us then ten-pence. It is very bare. We have to charge cases.
96. You would not charge less than one shilling? No; we could get a lower quality—a common quality.
97. By Mr. Buchanan: Will you look at the quality of that (Victorian Contract, 691), [Appendix No. 17]? It is a very fair paper.
98. It has been wetted? Yes. It seems to me as good and hard a paper as this (Blank sheet, marked T.), [Appendix No. 18.]
99. By Mr. Abbott: You never have sold paper as good as that in Sydney for eight-pence halfpenny? No.
100. A person having a large stock on hand of anything of that kind would be induced to sell at a lower price, to get rid of it? If it were lying heavy on his hands he would sell as low as possible.
101. For instance, if you had got in a supply to meet a contract, and lost that contract, you would sell as low as cost price, or probably even below cost price? I should sell for as much as I could get. Unfortunately we have goods in that position at the present time, at a loss of twenty-five per cent.
102. On the invoice? On the cost here.
103. By the Chairman: Is eight-pence halfpenny per pound for double foolscap, 24 lbs. weight, less than it can be imported for here? The weight makes no consequence if it is at per pound.
104. The ordinary quality—such quality as that (Sheet marked T.), [Appendix No. 18], eight-pence half-penny is less than it can be imported to this Colony for? I should say so. They could not supply it at eight-pence halfpenny at present. I am sure they could not.
105. Of these articles what were the principal ones purchased from you? These three articles.
106. Would you mention them? Blue wove foolscap, (yellow wove we did not supply), blue laid, and cream laid. The cream laid we supplied of a higher quality than the other.
107. In what quantities were these purchased from you? About eighty reams of blue wove, forty-eight of blue laid, and about eighty reams of cream laid.
108. Which you say was of a superior quality to that stated? Under this description. It is superior to what comes under the description of yellow wove—better finished. It is impossible to say what the quality of this is without seeing it, but our cream woves are as much under the price of this as I have mentioned.
109. Then all these which you supplied were in fact from 20 to 25 per cent. under the contract prices in that schedule? They were. The nearest approach is our best superfine machine-made papers. They come close up to 11½d., and these are close up to 13d.
110. I am speaking of what you supplied: did you supply that? I did; but I do not know whether these are the best superfines. If they are superfines they are still very high. If fines there is a difference of 25 per cent.

111. Was that the notice of tender which you went to the Exchange to look at? (Appendix Mr. F. M. Nab. No. 15.) That was one of them I think.

112. At that particular date? You see there are no quantities mentioned here, and we ⁸ Mar., 1860. could not put ourselves in a position to supply an indefinite quantity which might be a thousand reams or only twenty.

113. Then did the quantity being undefined prevent you from putting in a tender? It would have done. We rarely tender for those things; but if they had said they wanted a thousand reams of single foolscap and five hundred reams of double foolscap, we should have put in a sample and a tender.

114. Then you regard the quantities being left undefined as operating against taking the tender on the lowest terms? I would not take it at all.

115. The quantity being undefined would naturally operate to deter persons in the trade from tendering as low as they would otherwise have done? I do not know that it would, if they chose to tender for what they had in stock.

116. But the tender is indefinite? I might send in a tender for what I have in stock, then I might do it as low as I would do it for a greater quantity.

117. If you had part of this in stock? But the advertisement does not say how much was wanted: of course I should be bound to supply what was wanted if I obtained the tender.

118. That is what I say; therefore I asked you the question: the advertisement being for undefined quantities, was it calculated to deter the trade from tendering? I should not think of tendering.

119. You would not tender in such a case? No.

120. Is it unlikely that the same reason which would operate to deter you would also operate to deter others? I should think so; but they might take the trouble to ascertain whether a tender for any definite quantity would be accepted; I did not do it.

121. If persons tendered for such quantities, would it be unnatural that they should make their price higher than usual? They might not.

122. But if they did? The trade may have known at the time that the thing could not be had in the other Colonies.

123. I am speaking of all these things, and not simply of double foolscap. You said that one of these tenders was under the other? I say so still.

124. You say you can supply those things under that tender? I did do so.

125. You did do so? Yes.

126. Then you said that the indefiniteness of the quantity operated to deter you from tendering? I did not tender at all.

127. It did operate? I would not tender for an indefinite quantity; because, as far as I am able to understand, I might be called upon to supply them, and failing to do so, they might be bought of anyone at any price, and I must pay the difference.

128. Is it unnatural, then, that those who did tender, taking this point into consideration, would put on high prices? Not if they tender for what they have in stock, and not for an indefinite quantity.

129. You can refer to them? There are no quantities mentioned here.

130. No quantities? No; they would make themselves safe if they could.

131. Therefore it is not an unreasonable presumption that, tendering in this way, they would place very high prices upon such articles? If they did not know the quantities required.

132. But the quantity is not known in this instance—it is indefinite? It is natural.

133. But you consider that any knowledge of the quantity required would tend to—? I got a copy from the Treasury of the quantity wanted all the year round.

134. I am referring to this particular case, which is merely for indefinite quantities for a definite and short period? Yes. Upon the information I had from the Treasury before, if I had had four hundred reams of double-foolscap, or three hundred, or perhaps even less, in stock, with my other stock, I should not have been deterred from sending in an application for that tender.

135. Although the quantity is indefinite? Although the quantity is indefinite, because I know the quantity ultimately required in the year.

136. You would take your risk? I would take my risk.

137. But not having it you did not tender? Not having it, and having none come forward, I did not.

138. Then the same reasons may have operated with others? Undoubtedly.

139. And, consequently, to meet the risks they may have put on high prices? I could supply them with two or three thousand reams of single foolscap if they wanted them. Some of the trade knew that we had rarely less than from one to two thousand reams.

140. Then the fact is, that the putting forth of this tender without any defined quantities, operated to the disadvantage of the Government to the extent of 20 or 25 per cent.? Upon this article of double foolscap I think it would, because it was well known that there was little or none in the market. But in the article of single foolscap I do not think it ought. I dare say now in Sydney you could pick up several thousand reams of single foolscap.

141. You furnished a list of prices at which you would supply the Treasury? I did.

142. Were those prices what you would supply, or what you would merely import at? What I would import at. I gave two prices—what I would deliver here at, and what I would put on board free in London at, the Government afterwards taking all the risk.

143. Were those quantities definite or indefinite? Definite quantities consigned to me. Of course if I undertook to supply them with two or three thousand reams here in the course of the year, I should take care to have a good stock always in reserve.

Mr. F. McNab. 144. But the prices you named to the Treasury were for definite quantities? For definite quantities of each article—that is, that they give me a definite quantity, than which they would require no less; but as much more as they liked we would supply them at the same rate.

8 Mar., 1860.

145. By Mr. Abbott: Tenders having been called for for a definite quantity of that double foolscap without success, would you consider that there was anything extraordinary in advertising for a tender for an indefinite quantity—trying an experiment? I do not think so at all; it might induce parties to tender for what they had.

146. In the first tender, a definite quantity? Yes; the probability would be that anyone holding the quantity would tender.

147. Anyone holding five hundred reams would have tendered of course at the time? Yes.

148. By the Chairman: Would not the presumption be that at least five hundred reams would be required? I say, any one holding five hundred reams.

149. Would not that be a greater inducement to tender for the first tender? It would be.

150. By Mr. Abbott: If you had had anything like that quantity of double foolscap you would have tendered, I think I understood you to say? Yes, I might have tendered.

151. Under the second? With the information I had from the Treasury, I might have tendered and taken the risk of what would come forward.

DEPARTMENT OF THE COLONIAL STOREKEEPER.

SECOND INQUIRY.

SECOND INQUIRY.

UNDER SECRETARY TO THE TREASURY to CLERK OF THE LEGISLATIVE COUNCIL.

The Treasury, New South Wales,
23 April, 1860.

SIR,

The inquiry which has already taken place into the Department of the Colonial Storekeeper has satisfied the Government that further investigation is necessary. It has, therefore, been determined to cause a full and searching examination to be made into the general management of that department, in order that authentic data may be obtained as to the extent to which these irregularities have been carried, the existence of which, in some degree, is manifest.

I have, therefore, the honor, by direction of the Treasurer, to request that you will be good enough to undertake this inquiry, in which it is proposed that you should be associated with Deputy Assistant Commissary General Wrentmore and Captain Scott. These gentlemen will be requested to place themselves in communication with you.

The Report, accompanied by the Evidence, which has been already made, will be forwarded to you; and, while the Treasurer does not consider it necessary to limit the scope of the investigation, he trusts that yourself and colleagues will be prepared to report fully upon the manner in which the department generally has been managed, upon the duties of the several officers of the department, and how far those duties have, or have not, been honestly and efficiently performed.

I have, &c.,
HENRY LANE,
Under Secretary.

UNDER SECRETARY TO THE TREASURY to CAPTAIN SCOTT.

The Treasury, New South Wales,

SIR,

The Government being satisfied that further investigation into the Department of the Colonial Storekeeper is necessary, it has been determined to cause a full and searching examination to be made into the general management of that department, in order that authentic data may be obtained as to the extent to which the irregularities have been carried, the existence of which, in some degree, is manifest.

I have, therefore, the honor, by direction of the Treasurer, to request that you will be good enough to undertake this inquiry, in which it is proposed that you should be associated with R. O'Connor, Esq., the Clerk of the Legislative Council, as Chairman, and Deputy Assistant Commissary General Wrentmore.

I am further instructed to request that you will place yourself in communication with Mr. O'Connor on the subject, to whom the Report of the late Board, accompanied by the Evidence which has already been taken, will be forwarded.

I have, &c.,
HENRY LANE,
Under Secretary.

SIR,

The Government being satisfied, from the evidence taken by the recent Board, that further investigation into the Department of the Colonial Storekeeper is necessary, it has been determined to cause a full and searching examination into the general management of that Department.

I am therefore directed by the Honorable the Treasurer to inform you, that the gentlemen named in the margin have been appointed a Board of Inquiry for that purpose, and to request that you will lend all the assistance in your power to the Board which may be considered necessary towards effecting the object in view.

I have, &c.,

DEPUTY

DEPUTY ASSISTANT COMMISSARY GENERAL to UNDER SECRETARY TO THE TREASURY.

*Commissariat, Sydney,
24 April, 1860.*

SIR,

In acknowledging the receipt of your letter of yesterday's date, requesting, on the part of the Honorable the Treasurer, that I should, in conjunction with Mr. O'Connor and Captain Scott, undertake an inquiry into the general management of the Colonial Storekeeper's Department, I have the honor to state that, with every disposition to assist the Colonial Government in this inquiry, it will be impossible for me to undertake this duty without neglecting, to a very serious extent, my own legitimate duties; and that, on this account, I am reluctantly compelled to decline the request of the Honorable the Treasurer.

Incidentally, I may remark, that I should feel it to be my duty to protest against being made a member of a Board of which it is proposed that a civilian be made the Chairman.

I have, &c.,
GEORGE J. WRENTMORE,
D. A. C. G.

UNDER SECRETARY TO THE TREASURY to ACTING COLONIAL STOREKEEPER.

*The Treasury, New South Wales,
30 April, 1860.*

SIR,

Referring to the 2nd paragraph of my letter of the 24th instant, apprising you that R. O'Connor, Esq., G. J. Wrentmore, Esq., and Captain Scott, had been appointed a Board for the purpose of inquiring into the general management of the Colonial Storekeeper's Department, I am now directed to inform you that Paymaster Olivey, of the 12th Regiment, has been substituted for Mr. Wrentmore, that gentleman having been compelled to decline undertaking the duty.

MY DEAR SIR,

I return you many thanks for the kind suggestion in your note of to-day. I assure you the fact of my not having written to the Colonial Storekeeper, in reference to the appointment of the Board of which you are the Chairman, was quite overlooked.

I have now, however, written to Mr. Buchanan, apprising him of your appointment, and of the nature of the inquiry about to be instituted; also, requesting him to attend when summoned, and give all the information in his power.

SIR,

The Executive Council having carefully considered the Report of the Board appointed to inquire into certain charges made against you, have come to the conclusion that further investigation is necessary into the general management of the Colonial Storekeeper's Department.

I am, therefore, directed to inform you, that the gentlemen named in the margin have been appointed a Board for that purpose, and to request that you will attend, when summoned, and furnish the Board with such information as it may be in your power to give.

COLONIAL STOREKEEPER to COLONIAL TREASURER.

Monday, 7 May, 1860.

SIR,

I annex copy of a note addressed me by Mr. O'Connor, the Clerk of the Legislative Council, informing me that a second Board of Inquiry into the Department of the Colonial Storekeeper had been appointed; that the said Board resolved to meet this day at 11; and that my attendance was requested.

This intimation only reached my hands after the hour of meeting had passed. Entertaining a desire to avoid the appearance even of discourtesy to the Members, I appeared as early as possible, and explained my reasons for declining to be examined by them at present. They specially touch upon the mode of procedure adopted by the Treasury, and, in consequence, I beg to submit the few following observations for your information:—

The fourth month has commenced since this inquiry was initiated. Two months have elapsed since the first Board finished its business, and, as I supposed, closed the inquiry.

About seven weeks have run their course since I applied, both in writing and verbally, to be furnished with a copy of the Board's report, and to this hour I have not been honored with any reply to my requests, beyond the promise that they should be "brought before the Cabinet."

Manifesting, as these circumstances do, the desire to protract this matter, and keep everything in suspense, I had formed the opinion that the intention was held of ignoring my existence altogether, and of quietly setting me aside. While slumbering on this idea, I am awoken by Mr. O'Connor's note in a manner, as I conceive, rather rudely and suddenly, though I attribute no blame to him. Reflection came to my aid, and I clearly saw how consistent the course pursued was with the tactics that ordinarily govern the Treasury. In past times its studied and scrupulous avoidance of committing anything to paper, except under indefeasible necessity and compulsion; its shrinking from responsibilities proper to its office, and its general desire to settle nothing except by word of mouth, had all been the subject subject of remark, and been pointed to by me as a source of danger to every department it controlled. Why then I should expect the open straightforward course to be followed of acquainting me, at least as early as the public press, that a second Board had been named, and what the objects of the second inquiry would be, I can explain merely by reference to the blindness with which all are afflicted in matters concerning themselves.

The open and avowed accusation of the Treasury was, that I had, expressing it briefly, been guilty of official irregularity. By its acts, however, as is well known, it impugned—I write the words with suppressed rage—my honesty.

Cloaked and attempted to be suppressed as this imputation was when it had been quietly and silently ascertained that grounds for its existence there were none, I had imagined its remembrance would at least suffice to induce more candour and plain dealing in future. The lesson appears to be lost; and I therefore appeal to you, sir, as the responsible head of that branch of the public service to which I am attached, to learn whether this second Board is constituted under your orders?

What its functions are?

Whether I am still to consider myself suspended?

Whether, under the investigation already made, I was condemned or not?

And, finally, once more to apply for a copy of the report of the first Board.

I have, &c.,

JNO. BUCHANAN.

CHAIRMAN OF THE BOARD to COLONIAL STOREKEEPER.

Legislative Council Office,
4 May, 1860.

SIR,

I have the honor to inform you that Capt. Scott, Capt. Olivey, of the 12th Regiment, and myself, have been appointed a Board to make further inquiry into the Department of the Colonial Storekeeper, and that the Board have resolved to meet at the Colonial Storekeeper's Office on Monday next, the 7th instant, at 11 o'clock, A.M., for the purpose of proceeding with such inquiry.

And I have to request that you will favor the Board with your attendance at that place and time, in order to your being examined upon the matters involved in such inquiry.

I have, &c.,

R. O'CONNOR,

Chairman of the Board.

COLONIAL STOREKEEPER to COLONIAL TREASURER.

8 May, 1860.

SIR,

I beg to acknowledge Mr. Under Secretary Lane's letter of yesterday, (P. O. 544,) received under cover, bearing to-day's date.

It conveys the first authentic and official intelligence I have received in regard to the charges preferred against me on the 30th January last.

I learn from it that the Executive Council have come to the conclusion that "further investigation is necessary into the general management of the Colonial Storekeeper's Department"; that with this object in view another Board had been appointed, and that I am requested "to furnish the Board with such information as it may be in my power to give." I find the aid of this brief and indefinite communication of little service to me in my effort to divine what my position is in regard to the new inquiry, and I therefore earnestly press for answers at your earliest convenience, to the queries at the end of my letter of yesterday, as I hope such replies will make the occult meaning hid in Mr. Lane's communication, clear.

I have, &c.,

JNO. BUCHANAN.

UNDER SECRETARY TO THE TREASURY to COLONIAL STOREKEEPER.

The Treasury, New South Wales,
15 May, 1860.

SIR,

In consequence of the illness of the Under Secretary, your letters of the 7th and 8th instant were only yesterday submitted to the Honorable the Treasurer. I am now directed by him to enclose, for your information, a copy of the Report of the Board appointed to inquire into the charges brought against you, and also to acquaint you with the decision of the Executive Council thereon, which is, in substance, as follows:—

That, without reference to those matters which at present give rise to suspicion only, they see ample reason to believe that the department generally is in a thoroughly disorganized state, and that there are good grounds for questioning, at all events, your efficiency in its management. They therefore advised that "a full and searching inquiry be at once instituted into the general management of the business connected with the Colonial Store," and expressed their regret that, considering the lengthened period during which you have been in the public service, and the confidence hitherto reposed in you, they felt constrained to advise that, pending the result of such inquiry, you should remain under suspense.

As

As the Board which has been appointed under this recommendation cannot satisfactorily perform the duty intrusted to them, unless you give such information as may be considered necessary to enable them to arrive at a decision; and, as it is obviously your duty to afford all the assistance in your power, during an investigation into the state of the department, I am directed to request that you will facilitate the operations of the Board as much as possible, and give your attendance at any time when called on by them.

I have, &c.,
HENRY LANE,
Under Secretary.

UNDER SECRETARY TO THE TREASURY to CLERK OF THE LEGISLATIVE COUNCIL.

The Treasury, New South Wales,
21 May, 1860.

SIR,

I do myself the honor to inform you, that, in compliance with the request contained in your note of the 11th instant, I was directed by the Honorable the Treasurer to forward to Mr. Buchanan a copy of the Report, made by the late Board of Inquiry into the Colonial Storekeeper's Department, as also to communicate to him the decision of the Executive Council on the subject, and, at the same time, to advise him that, as the present Board cannot satisfactorily perform the duty intrusted to them, unless they receive from him all information considered necessary, and as, moreover, it is obviously incumbent on him to render all the assistance in his power, during an investigation into the state of that department, he is expected to facilitate the operations of the Board as much as possible.

Mr. Buchanan was instructed accordingly on the 15th of the present month, and requested to give his attendance at any time when called on by the Board.

I have, &c.,
HENRY LANE,
Under Secretary.

COLONIAL STOREKEEPER to COLONIAL TREASURER.

Sydney, 31 March, 1860.

SIR,

At the termination, respectively, of the months of March and April, I applied to Mr. Campbell, who is at present in charge of my department, for payment of my salary, but was informed in reply he had been instructed to withhold it.

The amount due for the first complete month of my suspension—February—I duly received. I purposed at the time at once drawing your attention to the subject, and inquiring what were the circumstances, or difference of views of the present Government from those of the preceding Government, that called for the imposition of this additional penalty? But, on reconsideration, deemed it as well to let the question await the report of the Board then sitting.

In matters of this kind there are three courses that can be taken—suspension from office; suspension from salary; and suspension from both office and salary. The terms of your Under Secretary's letter of the 31st January last, places me in the first position. I do not think, therefore, it would have been surprising had I at once sought to learn why I was brought under the operation of the third. Now, however, that the Board have brought up their Report (with which it will be my duty yet to deal), I cannot longer hesitate to prefer, with even greater reason, my claim to salary up to this date.

Although compulsorily removed from duty, special care has been taken in written terms not to relinquish a command over my services. It is therefore mere folly to say, as I understand has been said, that my time is my own. Obviously in the case of men destitute of the means of living, suspension without limitation or definition of meaning, might, in inquiries, protracted as this has been, become a potent engine of oppression, injustice, and even ruin. Except by their own act, and the consequent forfeiture of all claims, they could not disrobe themselves of their badges of official servitude, and, without doing so, they are debarred seeking, with any hope of success, the means of existence beyond the pale of the service.

The burden, annoyance, and (worst feature of all) the lingering suspense of an inquiry, already spread over four months, and that, in the shape into which it has now resolved itself, may last four more, are tortures enough, I should have thought, to gratify the heart of a Busiris; to add to them pecuniary loss and embarrassment is a refinement to which I cannot suppose the Government desire to lend themselves. On this ground, therefore, I seek relief from this penalty, as well as on the principle that the mention of one degree of suspension implies the exclusion of every other degree.

I have, &c.,
JNO. BUCHANAN.

*The Treasury, New South Wales,
7 June, 1860.*

SIR,

In acknowledging the receipt of your letter of the 31st March (May?), I am directed by the Honorable the Treasurer to inform you, that it appears to be the invariable rule of the service not to pay salary to an officer during his suspension.

He desires me to add that it is expected that the inquiry into the Storekeeper's Department will be very shortly brought to a close.

I have, &c.,

HENRY LANE,

Under Secretary.

COLONIAL STOREKEEPER to COLONIAL TREASURER.

Sydney, 15 June, 1860.

SIR,

I have the honor to acknowledge Mr. Under Secretary Lane's letter of the 7th instant, informing me, in reply to mine of the 31st ultimo, "that it appears to be the invariable rule of the service not to pay salary to an officer during his suspension."

I am not prepared to contravene this assertion; but I presume it has reference merely to cases in which the facts are of an ordinary character, and the suspension brief. I hold that I possess a moral claim (perhaps even a legal one) to my salary up to the period, viz., 15 May, when the result of the first Board's labors and the decision of the Government thereon were communicated to me; I, therefore, beg to request that you will be good enough to take into consideration the distinction in my case from ordinary ones, that an investigation has been held and closed; and though I remain suspended (why—is not very clear), pending a second inquiry on new grounds and before a fresh Board, that circumstance I conceive ought not to be suffered to militate against and strip me of an antecedent claim.

I have, &c.,

JNO. BUCHANAN.

COLONIAL STOREKEEPER to COLONIAL TREASURER.

St. Leonard's, 16 July, 1860.

SIR,

In the concluding sentences of the first paragraph of the Report of the Board of Inquiry into the management of the Colonial Store, a suggestion is thrown out that I should place in your hands a statement of my private banking account.

It is to be regretted that the Board did not make me aware of this desire of theirs, as I presume the intention was really entertained of making known what such a statement might shew. I cannot, however, avail myself of the offer, inasmuch as since the year 1843 I have had no banking account.

I am now, however, in a position to state that Mr. Weston, whose private concerns at the London Chartered Bank have already been partially submitted to the Board's inspection, will offer no obstacle to further re-search into them at the hands of the Board; and, at my urgent request, he has consented that this re-search, to be complete, shall embrace the entire period within which his account has been open—the debit as well as the credit side.

I have, &c.,

JNO. BUCHANAN.

PROCEEDINGS of the Executive Council on the 31st July, 1860, with reference to the Report of the Board of Inquiry into the conduct of the Colonial Storekeeper's Department.

Minute 60-33. Confirmed 7 August, 1860.

REFERRING to the proceedings on the 5th April last, when the Council had under consideration the Report of a Board appointed to investigate certain alleged irregularities in the Department of the Colonial Storekeeper, and in consequence of that investigation being incomplete and inconclusive, advised that a fuller and more searching inquiry should be instituted into the general management of the department,—His Excellency the Governor General now lays before the Council the Report of a Board which was appointed, in pursuance of the above recommendation, to fulfil the duty in question, with instructions “to make further inquiry into the manner in which the Colonial Storekeeper's Department generally has been managed—the duties of the several officers of the department—and how far those duties have, or have not, been honestly and efficiently performed.”

The evidence taken by the Board in investigating these several matters accompanies this Report, as does also the Report, with its appended evidence of the previous Board.

All these documents have, for some days past, been in the possession and under the consideration of the majority of the Members, and the Council having now again carefully considered the two Reports in connection with the facts disclosed by the evidence, express their entire concurrence in the views recorded by the Honorable the Colonial Treasurer in a Minute indorsed upon the last Report; and adopting the recommendation with which that Minute concludes, they advise that Mr. Buchanan, the Colonial Storekeeper, be now called upon to shew cause why he should not be dismissed from the public service, by reason of the various derelictions of duty held to be proven against him by the Minute of the Treasurer.

Clerk of the Council.

MANAGEMENT OF THE COLONIAL STOREKEEPER'S DEPARTMENT.

REPORT.

THE Board, appointed to make further inquiry into the manner in which the Colonial Storekeeper's Department generally has been managed, the duties of the several officers of the Department, and how far those duties have or have not been honestly and efficiently performed, have the honor to Report as follows :—

1. The first occupation of the Board was, to make themselves acquainted with the proceedings of those who had gone before them ; and, in order to disengage their own inquiry from the matters involved in the previous investigation, they consider it expedient at once to state that, upon a most careful consideration of those proceedings, and a most minute examination of the several documents connected therewith, they arrived at the conclusion that the signature "James Staunton" is, in every instance, in the handwriting of the late Chief Clerk. They regret, however, that they cannot, with equal confidence, acquit the Colonial Storekeeper of all knowledge of the practices of his late Chief Clerk, seeing that the dates involved in the transaction per "Walter Hood," shew a fitting in of the two orders for stationery from England, which wears an appearance of contrivance they cannot overlook ; although, with a view to overcome this difficulty, they endeavored to trace the parties who cashed the several cheques in favor of "James Staunton" and "Staunton and Co.," but without success, except only in the case of the crossed cheques, which were, in the aggregate, for smaller amounts than the uncrossed cheques, and which were all, without exception, paid into the London Chartered Bank to the credit of the late Chief Clerk. The uncrossed cheques having been paid over the counter, and, consequently, no note taken of the person who presented them, the Board are thus deprived of the satisfaction they would have felt could they have reported that, up to the point of cashing the cheques, at all events, the Colonial Storekeeper stood acquitted of all pecuniary interest in the practices of his late Chief Clerk, and to that extent of all reasonable ground for the suspicion that he could have been in any way cognizant of those practices, which suspicion is in no way weakened by consideration of the circumstances that James Staunton's first tender came from "Melbourne," and was altogether uncalled for by advertisement or otherwise,—a circumstance which, on occasion of his subsequent tenders from "Sydney," might reasonably have been expected to produce in the mind of a vigilant and careful officer at the head of so important a department, a spirit of inquiry that might have led to the detection of the deception before acceptance of the second tender ; and that when his late Chief Clerk openly avowed, after quitting the service, that "Staunton & Co." was his own "trading name," the Colonial Storekeeper did not himself immediately make known that avowal to the Minister at the head of his department. But even as it is, there is yet one other means by which the Colonial Storekeeper may relieve himself of this suspicion to the extent the Board desired, and that is, by requesting his bankers to furnish the Colonial Treasurer with a detailed statement of his private account with them on every day included in the period within which those deceptions were practised by his late Chief Clerk.

Objects for which Colonial Store was established.

2. The objects the Government had in view in the establishment of a Colonial Store Department are set out in the following extract from Sir Richard Bourke's financial Minute for the year 1838, laid upon the Table of the then Legislative Council, on 4th July, 1837:—

“ A new appointment is proposed on the Civil Establishment, which has had its rise in the difficulty experienced in supplying the Colonial Departments with stores, since their custody has been transferred from the Commissariat to the Officers of Ordnance. The latter have found their time too fully occupied in the performance of their proper duty—the supply of the Military and Convict Departments—to enable them to take charge of the Colonial, nor is it the duty of the Commissariat to provide means of conveying stores to the latter. The whole duty, therefore, including the supply of the Police and Gaol Establishments has devolved on Colonial Officers since the 1st July, 1835. An attempt was made to dispense with the appointment of Storekeeper by directing each department to supply itself; but after some experience of this arrangement it was found expensive and inefficient. The consumption of stores was excessive, the articles received from the contractors were not properly surveyed, and their delivery was irregular. Most of these inconveniences will, it is hoped, be overcome by the proposed establishment, which is taken on as low a scale as the service will permit.”

The results attained will be seen by the evidence hereto appended, and the Board are free to confess that they fall far short of the objects for which the department was established. Much of this failure, however, is fairly attributable to the want of sufficient and appropriate accommodation in the buildings appropriated for purposes of the Colonial Store; and few of the improvements in its management which the Board will presently have the honor to suggest can be effected until new stores have been built, on a plan and scale suited to the daily increasing necessities and operations of the department.

Results attained.

Dissatisfaction of Colonial Storekeeper from his appointment to that office. Consequences thereof.

3. It is obvious, from the Colonial Storekeeper's evidence, that there has existed some feeling of dissatisfaction on his part from the period of his appointment to that office in 1845, and this may reasonably be supposed to account for many of the defects in the management of the department, to which the Board will shortly have to advert, as well as for the little importance the Colonial Storekeeper is inclined to attach to any one of the considerations for which the department was instituted, or to the necessity for even the most ordinary precaution in the disbursement of the public moneys placed at his disposal for paying for the stores. He considers that, in some shape or other, there must at all times be Colonial Stores, and, inferentially, that no faultiness in management can interfere with this necessity. The Board, however, are inclined to the opinion that the management may be so faulty, the store accommodation so insufficient and unsuitable, and the expense of the agency so great, that it might be for the best interests of the Colony to dispense with a Colonial Store Department in any form, and to leave it to the departments and services to supply themselves upon some well devised system of ultimate accurate accounting to the Treasury, and they are far from saying that that time has not even now arrived.

Present accommodation for stores in Colonial Stores proper.

4. The present Colonial Stores consist of one narrow building, with one floor, and a loft above the ground floor, situate between the Commissariat Stores and Campbell's Wharf. At the western end of the ground floor of this building are the offices; and when it is considered that these lean on the east line of George-street, and lie several feet below the traffic level of that street, it will not be matter of surprise to learn that they are dark, damp, and wholly unsuited to the uses of offices, although the Chief Clerk occupies one in which a humane gaoler would hesitate to lodge a criminal. The eastern end of the ground floor affords store-room for a few heavy unbroken packages. The floor above, running the entire length of the building, is occupied by broken packages, and unpacked stores, and is also used for packing and unpacking, although the space is altogether inadequate for the purpose. The loft is used for stowage of a few light cases. A large portion of the whole packages are stowed in Mr. Henry Moore's Stores, and are, of course, chargeable with store rent, cartage, and labor. Another considerable portion of them is stowed in one of the Commissariat Stores, and, from want of space on the ground floor, heavy portions of two field batteries and other heavy stores are stowed in the upper floor of this building, and are pressing out the walls so much, that, if not shortly looked to, the whole, it is feared, will come down with a rush that will probably involve much loss and mischief. The gunpowder is stowed in stores on Goat Island; and even there, although every thing is kept in good order, the space is altogether inadequate. The magazines are full, notwithstanding that the supply they contain would not extend beyond a very limited demand, and the Board did not fail by the merest possible accident, and to which, indeed, there is even a material door invitingly opening to a boat, whose bow might touch the step-ladder by which it is reached, whilst two-thirds of her length would be covered by the traffic surface of the Circular Quay; and whilst the system of promotion, which the evidence shews to obtain in the Department is well calculated to further the interests of the service under a proper method of accounting, the Board are bound to say that, in the absence of all check upon remains, the system is one equally well calculated to shield and perpetuate these practices, should the subordinates, into whose hands virtually the whole practical working of the Department has been thrown, be unhappily at any time other than the most sternly honest of their class. And as regards one other object the Government had in establishing the Colonial Stores, namely, to substitute regularity for irregularity in the delivery of stores, the Board consider that the circumstance of two-thirds of the supplies for 1859 being purchased in the Colony shows that, even in this respect the Colonial Store has failed of its object, if it is to be supposed that purchases in the Colony are made only to meet emergencies.

6. The Board now come to the system of calling for and dealing with tenders for stores. They see nothing to complain of in calling for tenders to cover time in those cases where the supplies from Home are not expected to arrive, so as to meet the demands of the service, though the cases in which this mode is resorted to ought to be exceptional and very rare indeed, consistently with a due watchfulness on the part of the Colonial Storekeeper. But the system of dealing with the tenders themselves is, in their opinion, very loose and objectionable, and liable to great abuse, should an inclination exist to profit by the opportunities offered by its defects. To protect the service against the recurrence of frauds, delays, or other injuries, the Board are disposed to think that in all cases whatsoever, tenderers ought to be known to the Board who open their tenders, for even where sureties are required, the consideration of the loss and vexation likely to be occasioned to the public service by any probable default on the part of the contractor ought, in the opinion of the Board, in many cases, to be thought of higher moment than the sufficiency of his security; and where no sureties are required, it would seem to be absolutely indispensable to protect the service against loss, that the tenderers should be known to the Board who open their tenders, otherwise wrong parties might be paid, and tenders might be accepted from persons under the name of C. D. who, under that of A. B., had in a former contract acted in such a manner as to render them wholly ineligible as tenderers were: their real names and circumstances known to the Board; and also, as had been seen, from officers in the Colonial Storekeeper's Department, who might place themselves in competition with bonâ fide tradesmen, in a way that would be altogether unfair, if from no other consideration than that of the better information they would have on all the matters which are generally taken into account by an intending tenderer. The Board should consist of three officers, severally bound to do their duty with all vigilance and care; the Colonial Storekeeper ought not to be one of the three, but if he made himself acquainted, as the Board think he might reasonably be expected to do, with current market prices, he might be present and afford valuable information on that head, so as to enable the Board even to reject or recommend the rejection of all the tenders, in the event of any combination among the tenderers to exact prices unreasonably beyond current rates in the open market. The acceptance of tenders should, as now, rest with the Colonial Treasurer, but it should be the duty of the Board, after hearing what the Colonial Storekeeper had to say, to note their opinion upon the schedule to be submitted to him, and this schedule should be made out in the presence of and be signed by the Board, and immediately forwarded under seal to the Treasurer, who would furnish the Colonial Storekeeper with a copy of the accepted tender, because, in many cases, the tender accepted would differ unavoidably from the advertisement calling for tenders, and this is all the Colonial Storekeeper ought to have to do with the tenders; but it should be his duty to see that the stores, when supplied, are in accordance with the tender both as to quantity and quality; and, if not, to return them to the tenderer, reporting the circumstance to the Colonial Treasurer, and leaving it to the tenderer, if dissatisfied, to institute a survey and such other proceedings as his interests might dictate.

fail to observe that packages containing gunpowder in tins occupied at least twice the space occupied by bulk gunpowder of equal weight. The Board would remark that the expediency of making immediate provision for a much larger supply of this article is suggested as necessary, even for purposes of progress in time of peace, by the enormous quantities expended upon the daily extending lines of Railway, to say nothing of the large quantities that might be required for purposes of defence at any time; and they consider that the safety of all the magazines would be best consulted, if those which may be erected, from time to time hereafter, were placed at such distances from each other that an explosion in one would not, as now, almost necessarily involve the blowing up of the whole. The Board noticed that whilst the old military magazine is constructed on the principles observed in the erection of similar buildings elsewhere, the new or Colonial magazines (which are quite close to it and to each other) are of a very much lighter structure, and are covered, one with slate and another with iron, as if the architect desired to diminish the shock of an explosion, in proportion to the diminished capacity to resist a foe or an accident which he gave to the roofs of these magazines, and thereby, doubtless, to lessen the danger to those who in Sydney and Balmain dwell in their immediate neighborhood. The Board consider it but right to observe here, that by abandoning the present jetty, and throwing a platform over the cut originally intended as the landing-place, and using that for purposes of unshipping and shipping gunpowder, much time and labor would be saved, and much damage to packages and risk to the magazines in these operations might be avoided. In a yard to the south of the Colonial Stores are strewed about many gun-carriages, and in a small ruin at the upper end of this yard are stowed a number of iron bedsteads, &c. This is the nature and extent of the accommodation provided for the Colonial Stores, and the officers in charge of them; and, as they have already said, the Board are free to admit that its inadequacy affords much excuse for defects in management.

Yard and small ruin, south of Colonial Stores.

5. The leading objects in the establishment of the Colonial Stores were, as stated in the extract from Sir Richard Bourke's financial minute already quoted, to check excessive consumption, and to have the articles properly surveyed; but the Board find that no check whatever is opposed to excessive consumption, except in a few instances where the Colonial Storekeeper feels he can interpose with impunity, whilst, practically, the survey of the stores is left in the hands of the most subordinate and least responsible officers in the department, the Colonial Storekeeper being called in only as referee when the foreman and fourth or junior clerk cannot themselves agree whether the stores are or are not according to pattern. Two other objects have subsequently presented themselves as being at least equally desirable in the maintenance of the Colonial Stores,—the acquisition of stores at the lowest cost consistent with the highest quality required, and the right accounting for the receipt, issue, and remains of these stores. That there is an absence of vigilance in looking to the wants of the service, so as to anticipate demands by supplies from England, whence, to use the Colonial Storekeeper's own words, stores can be obtained at a cost that would save importers' profits, is evidenced by the circumstance that in the year 1859 the purchases at Home did not exceed one-third of the total purchases for the year through the intervention of the Colonial Stores. And here the Board may observe that if the right system of accounting for stores by the ordinary store ledger in use in the Ordnance Department had been in operation in the Colonial Stores, this could not possibly have happened, for the actual consumption of each previous year would be distinctly before the Colonial Storekeeper, and would suggest to him the time for ordering his supplies, as well as the quantities and patterns to order. And this brings the Board to the consideration of the loose and altogether unsatisfactory mode by which the stores are accounted for. When goods come into store, the filed invoices or tradesmen's bills, in original or duplicate, form the record of Receipts; and when goods are issued from the store, the requisitions, and probably the receipts of the departments and services supplied are filed, and form the record of Issues; but there is no record whatever of remains; in other words, there is no ledger in which the receipts and issues are set off against each other, so as to give the balance in remains, which is so desirable in all store accounting, as well for the protection of the officers in charge as of the public service. Without this store ledger so kept, and half-yearly or yearly checked by actual stock-taking under a Board of Examiners, peculation to any conceivable extent may be constantly taking place, under a slight amount of management on the part of those engaged in it, without the prospect of detection, except department, might well have interposed to save him from a burthen and responsibility which do not attach to analogous officers in the Imperial Service; but as the duty did devolve upon him, in common with all other Heads of Departments, the Board cannot understand how he could consider the regulation which requires the intervention of clerks, so far only as to fill in and enter the cheques drawn by Heads of Departments, in any other light than as a salutary check and safeguard, instituted as well for his own protection as for that of the Government; and they have no excuse to offer for the indifference to the public interests which has characterized his payments by uncrossed as well as crossed cheques, for large amounts, sent by messengers to persons who, according to his own evidence, were as likely to be unknown as known to himself or his department.

by

though inexcusable for indifference to the interests of the service when that duty did devolve upon him.

8. From the absence of all system of reliably accounting for the receipts, issues, and remains of stores, the singularly loose manner in which payments for stores have been made (the Colonial Storekeeper avowing that he never saw a payment made), and the extraordinary circumstance that though sureties may not be required it has not been thought necessary or even desirable to know the persons who supply the public wants in stores, it is obvious to the Board that the audit of stores is impossible, whilst that of payments for stores may be altogether illusory. There is no check whatever on speculation to any conceivable extent, except that furnished by the integrity of the officers and servants employed in and about the stores, aided, as that may be, by considerations of the uselessness of portions of the stores for any other than the purposes of Government. And, as the Board have no ground, so neither have they any desire, to say one word in disparagement of the perfect integrity of the officers and servants of the department; but they consider it is not too much to say, that the most reliable business men are precisely those who gladly accept and supply the most efficacious checks upon their own transactions; and therefore they expect that their suggestions in this direction will be accepted by the officers and servants of the department in the good faith and inoffensive spirit in which they are made. The only means by which the Government could ascertain, with certainty, the losses they have sustained (if they have sustained any), would be by a process so expensive, that no results they could obtain under it would warrant the outlay. They would have to begin at the beginning, some time anterior even to 1837, setting off the issues against the receipts, and finally striking a balance of remains. And whatever discrepancy might be found to exist between those remains and the stores then actually on hand, would represent the extent of loss to be accounted for. And if any loss were found to have been sustained, then would arise another question;—by whom ought it to be accounted for, in the circumstances of change to which the department has been unavoidably subjected since its establishment.

In absence of right system of accounting, audit of stores impossible, whilst audit of payments for stores may be altogether illusory.

No ascertain extent to which speculation may have been carried, except at a cost disproportionate to the possible result.

9. The present staff of the department would be amply sufficient to conduct its business on right principles, and does not fall short of its requirements even now that the want of system opposes itself at every point to economy in labor; and this want of system is not inaptly illustrated in the evidence given by the several officers of the department as to their duties, in which they singularly differ, not only from each other, but also from themselves. Nevertheless, in the view that they are called upon merely to do that which comes to hand to be done, and are not in any way responsible for the absence or presence of system in the conduct of the business of the department, the Board are bound to say that, in their several positions, they seem to have performed the duties coming to them as well as could be reasonably expected under the circumstances.

Staff of department need not be increased to conduct its business on right principles.

Officers perform duties as well as can be expected in absence of such principles.

10. The Board now come to treat of the expense of maintaining the department in its present unsatisfactory state. It appears from the evidence of the Colonial Storekeeper, that £90,000 may be taken to be the money value of stores under his charge at any given moment; that these stores are all paid for; that a great portion of them are stowed in private stores, at considerable expense for rent, carriage, and labor; that the working expenses of the department, in salaries and contingencies, amount to about £4,000; and that the value of the stores issued in the course of the year 1859, did not exceed £40,000. Now, leaving out of the account losses, by deterioration or otherwise howsoever, and taking the data here presented, and computing interest on the £90,000 at the rate borne by Debentures, namely, six per cent., it seems to the Board that these items shew an expense, in the maintenance of the department in its present state, greatly in excess of any saving in importers' profits upon the imported stores, of the value of £14,000, included in the £40,000 worth of stores issued in the year 1859.

Expense of maintaining department in present unsatisfactory state.

Three modes suggested by which the wants of the service might be more reasonably and more efficiently supplied, under a right system of accounting.

1st. Abolishment of stores and leaving departments and services to supply themselves.

2nd. To distribute the stores to the several departments.

3rd. The maintenance of Colonial Stores on the principles observed in the establishment of Imperial Stores, with the necessary provision in buildings, &c., for the working thereof.

11. Looking then to the absolute inefficiency of the department in its present state—the unlimited scope for speculation afforded by the manner in which its business is now conducted—and the disproportionate expense of maintaining it, even in this state—the Board are of opinion that some one of the three following suggestions might, under the circumstances, be found worthy the serious consideration of Government :—

1st.—To abolish the Colonial Stores altogether, and leave it to the several departments and services to supply themselves, under some well-devised system of ultimate accounting to a Store Audit Branch of the Auditor General's Department.

2nd.—With a similar provision for ultimate accounting, to distribute the stores to the several departments and services in manner following, or on any other similar principle the Government might prefer, viz. :—

- (1.) Military Stores to the Artillery Depôt at Dawes' Point.
- (2.) Naval Stores to Naval Depôt on Garden Island, or elsewhere.
- (3.) Light House Stores to Depôt connected with Harbor Master's Department.
- (4.) Stationery to Depôt connected with Government Printing Establishment.
- (5.) Police clothing and arms to Depôt connected with Central Police Establishment in Sydney.
- (6.) Penal clothing to Depôt connected with Penal Establishment at Cockatoo Island; and
- (7.) Gaol clothing to Central Depôt at Darlinghurst Gaol.

3rd.—The maintenance of Colonial Stores on the principles observed in the establishment of Imperial Stores. The adoption of the last suggestion would comprehend all the advantages Sir Richard Bourke expected from the establishment of the Colonial Stores in 1837, and would be in exact accordance with the conclusions arrived at by the Board, after mature consideration of the present and prospective requirements of the Colony in this most important particular; but it would involve the necessity for the erection of entirely new buildings, to the full as capacious as, and by far more suitable for their purposes than, the present Commissariat Stores, with room to add as the requirements of the Colony increased. The adoption of the second suggestion would also involve the necessity for the erection of some few buildings, though of a much smaller character; but it would have this recommendation, that in every case the stores would, without expense, be protected by, and be near to, those who are to use the bulk of them, whilst, in the opinion of the Board, they could be received, issued, and accounted for on the Ordnance principle, without any increase in the present departmental expenditure, notwithstanding that the establishment of a separate Store Audit Office, as a branch of the Auditor General's Department, would be necessary to the right working of any of the systems suggested. All requisitions for stores should come to this office in duplicate, and should shew the receipts, the issues, remains, and requirements of the departments in appropriate columns; one copy of the requisition should be forwarded to the department in charge of the stores required, to govern their issue, whilst the other should be filed in the office, to be employed as the legitimate check upon the departments issuing and the departments receiving; and in no case should the parties charged with the custody and issue of the stores be burdened with payments for them, but they should be required to keep a book or file of prices, separate from the store ledger, to enable them to put the proper values upon the stores they supply upon such requisitions. There may appear something like complication in all this, but if the Store Audit Office were headed by an officer accustomed to the use of the store ledger on the Ordnance principle, the whole would soon be reduced to a practice simple, clear, and effective, and therefore satisfactory to all within the sphere of its operation.

Colonial Agency in England.
Salaried Agent.
Mercantile Agent.

12. The Board are strongly inclined to the opinion entertained by the Colonial Storekeeper, that a paid agency at Home would in all respects serve the interests of the Colony better than an ordinary commercial agency, because by the former the Government could procure the stores required by any means that might to them seem of most advantage to to the public service, and could rely upon the personal intervention of their agent in securing the goods according to pattern, and at the more reasonable rates generally prevailing under competition, whilst of the latter they could scarce expect anything out of the ordinary mercantile course in shipping to order, and yet, under appearance of economy in the agency, might be subject, indirectly, to allowances for discount, or other remissions on the private ventures of their mercantile agent, which might be equivalent to a much larger commission than they would be inclined to pay were they at all aware of its amount.

13. In conclusion, the Board invite a careful perusal of the Evidence appended, as Conclusion, offering their best excuse, if they have erred in passing from the province of comment to that of suggestion, which lay, it may be, beyond the limits of their commission.

APPENDIX.

MINUTE of Colonial Treasurer.

Governor General and Executive Council,
E. C. W. 30 July, 1860.

The Colonial Storekeeper's Department has now been the subject of two several investigations.

The first Board was appointed for the purpose of investigating charges "that large quantities of stores on account of the public service had, at various times, been tendered for and supplied by Mr. Buchanan and the late Chief Clerk of the Colonial Storekeeper's Department, Mr. John Weston, under the assumed names of "James Staunton," and "Staunton and Co." That investigation appearing to be incomplete and inconclusive in various points, the Executive Council by Minute, dated 5th April last, ordered that a fuller inquiry should take place. A second Board was therefore appointed, "to make further inquiry into the manner in which the Colonial Storekeeper's Department generally has been managed, the duties of the several officers of the Department, and how far those duties have or have not been honestly and efficiently performed."

After a careful perusal of the two several Reports, and the accompanying documents and evidence, I have no hesitation in stating it as my opinion that grave charges have been most conclusively proved against the general administration of the Colonial Store Department. It is proved beyond all question, that large quantities of stores on account of the public service had been tendered for and supplied by Mr. John Weston, under a feigned name, while holding the office of Chief Clerk in the Colonial Storekeeper's Department. It is also, to my mind, established, that this was done with the knowledge of Mr. Buchanan, the Colonial Storekeeper. But even if I were to assume that Mr. Buchanan was ignorant of these transactions, his conduct would be scarcely less culpable, for there must then have been an absence altogether of the most ordinary vigilance in the discharge of his duties, or he could not have failed to discover proceedings so questionable, and so apparent, that they formed the common topic of observation amongst the subordinates of the department. No direct proof was elicited by either Board, that Mr. Buchanan derived any pecuniary advantage from these transactions, but considerable doubt may be expressed, whether as regards these supplies, the interest of the public service was not made subservient to that of Mr. Weston. It is proved that goods were bought from "Staunton" (Weston), without calling for tenders, and apparently without any necessity. In some instances, it appears that no record of receipt of goods from this party was made in the books at the store, a reliance for checking the receipt being placed, as one witness remarked, upon "memory." The evidence of another witness goes to prove, that it was his particular duty to check and examine all accounts of contractors previous to payment, but that the accounts for goods supplied by this particular contractor, "Staunton" (Weston), were only brought to him for examination after they had been paid, and in many cases were never examined at all. No one in the department appears able to throw any light upon how, or when, this contractor received payment, as the clerk above referred to states that payments to this individual were not witnessed, as required by the ordinary regulations. That such proceedings as these were permitted—Mr. Buchanan, I conceive, should be held responsible. But in many respects, as disclosed in evidence, the Colonial Storekeeper appears altogether to have ignored the duties which must have devolved upon him, in common with all other heads of departments. So far as the disbursement of an amount exceeding £30,000 per annum was concerned, Mr. Buchanan considered himself altogether absolved from the slightest responsibility in a pecuniary sense, transferring it entirely to Mr. Weston, the late Chief Clerk, on no more sufficient grounds than a regulation of the Government, that the chief, or some other clerk in each department, should prepare and initial all cheques for payment of money. It will scarcely be admitted that a responsibility for practices, which, in the language of one of the reports, left the Board “no excuse to offer for the indifference to the public interests which has characterized his (Mr. Buchanan’s) payments”—which was exhibited in the absence “of the most ordinary precautions in the disbursement of the public moneys placed at his disposal for the payment of stores”—can be thus lightly evaded. In respect of the business of the department generally, the evidence shews that there was little, if any, check on excessive consumption, and that the survey of stores supplied, was left in the hands of the most subordinate and least responsible officers in the department, upon whom indeed the whole practical working of the establishment appears to have been thrown. It may be instanced, as exhibiting a want of forethought in anticipating demands in the Colony by supplies from England, that in the year 1859 the sum for goods purchased in England amounted to £13,970, while for the same period the sum for goods purchased in the Colony amounted to £25,263; thus proving that in perhaps one of its most important duties, the department has altogether proved wanting. It might be difficult, or perhaps impossible, to prove that supplies were intentionally ordered from England short of the known wants of the public service, yet the fact here exhibited, when viewed in connection with the practice of the late Chief Clerk, Mr. Weston, to import goods from England, with the object of supplying contracts called for in the Colony cannot but leave room for grave suspicion that such was the case. That the Colonial Store Department, conducted as it has been by Mr. Buchanan, has entirely failed to accomplish any of the objects for which it was originally created, is clearly established. The second Board has made certain recommendations, respecting arrangements for the future, which will require to be very seriously considered. To them my attention shall be given immediately. But considering the long period during which Mr. Buchanan has been suspended, and the equitable grounds which demand that he should, without further delay, be informed of the decision of the Government regarding himself, I recommend that he should be at once called upon to shew cause why he should not be dismissed from the public service. Unless an explanation can be afforded more satisfactory than I can, after the evidence adduced, consider possible, it would, as far as I can at present judge, appear to be impossible to retain him in his present position, or in any other where fidelity and the usual qualifications for the Head of a Department are essential.

NEW SOUTH WALES.

COLONIAL STOREKEEPER'S DEPARTMENT.

MINUTES OF EVIDENCE.

MONDAY, 7 MAY, 1860.

Present:—

R. O'CONNOR, ESQ., IN THE CHAIR.

CAPTAIN SCOTT,

CAPTAIN OLIVEY.

Mr. John Buchanan, Colonial Storekeeper, being present,—

The Chairman said: Mr. Buchanan, before making any statement yourself, perhaps you will have the kindness to allow me to read to you this letter, addressed to me by the Under Secretary to the Treasury, and the Minutes of our Proceedings up to this point; and at that point I must stop to hear what you have to state.

The Chairman read the letters appointing the Board, and also the Minutes of its Proceedings, shewing that, up to the present time, no step had been taken at which it was necessary for Mr. Buchanan to be present. These are our proceedings up to this point, and, in pursuance of them, we are come here to-day to prosecute our inquiry—in the first instance, as a matter of course, by examining yourself. Are you prepared to be examined?

Mr. Buchanan: It is necessary that I should make a slight statement in connection with this matter. I received your note this morning, after the hour at which the Board was appointed to meet, and it is the first official intimation I have had of any kind in reference to this matter. I am not aware, although I have applied for the information both verbally and in writing, what is the result of the former inquiry. I have not been furnished with a copy of the Report, and I have had no intimation from the Treasury apprising me of this second Board being appointed. I have received no intimation whatever in reference to it, and I consider that, from proper respect to me and to the office I have held, the Government ought to have afforded me that intimation. If they choose to proceed ex parte of course they have the power to do so. I cannot dispute it. I am powerless; but, certainly, proper respect to myself will teach me not to appear before this Board for examination until I receive that information. I am quite willing to appear before the Board when I have received this intimation from the head of the department—that is, the Colonial Treasurer.

The Chairman: In reference, first, to the note addressed to you, Mr. Buchanan, I had it posted by a special messenger on Friday evening, and it must have been here yesterday. That you have only received it to-day is no fault of the Board. But, with reference to the other matter, we, of course, are not in a position to compel you to give evidence. If you decline until you have been apprised of the result of the late inquiry, we have simply to report to the Government. Am I to understand that you do decline?

Mr. Buchanan: Most decidedly, until I have been apprised by the Government of this Board having been constituted, and, also, of the result of the late inquiry.

The Chairman: May I ask, have you any objection to the Board itself?

Mr. Buchanan: Not the slightest—quite the contrary.

The Chairman: You simply require —

Mr. Buchanan: To be informed officially with regard to the constitution of the Board, and the object of its inquiry. With reference to the note, I may mention that the post-mark shews it to have been posted on the day mentioned; but, as I am a suspended officer, it is not my business to be here. If it had been my duty to be here, of course I should have been at my post, and the letter would have reached me; but, as it was not, I was away at my own residence across the water.

The Board then deliberated, and adjourned till a future day.

FRIDAY,

FRIDAY, 11 MAY, 1860.

Present:—

R. O'CONNOR, Esq., IN THE CHAIR.

CAPTAIN SCOTT,

CAPTAIN OLIVEY.

Mr. Buchanan was in attendance.

The Chairman said: That after the rising of the Board on Monday, 7th, he communicated with the Under Secretary to the Treasury, with a view of placing before the Government Mr. Buchanan's reasons for declining then to be examined, and that on the following day he received a reply thanking him for the information, and stating that the omission to inform Mr. Buchanan in reference to the appointment of the Board, &c., was an oversight; also, that he had written to Mr. Buchanan informing him of the meeting of the Board.

The Letters having been read—

The Chairman: Do I understand, Mr. Buchanan, that you are now willing that we should proceed with your examination?

Mr. Buchanan: Perhaps it would be desirable that I should make a few observations in reference to the course I have thought it proper to take since the Board last met; and with the permission of the Board I should wish to read the correspondence which has taken place between myself and the Government. I duly received your note summoning me here in accordance with what you have stated. After the Board separated on Monday last, I wrote this letter to the Treasurer. [Letter read.] Having read that letter I beg to hand in a copy.

The Chairman: The Board will receive a copy of the letter as a matter of course, but it will be for them, by and bye, to consider whether it shall appear on the Minutes or not. I mention this because I desire that there should be no misunderstanding on your part.

Mr. Buchanan: After addressing that letter I received a further communication, which I will now read. It reached me on Tuesday morning, the 8th instant. [Letter read.] On the receipt of that letter I thought it necessary to write a further one. [Letter read.] I am now ready to proceed with the investigation in the terms of the notification that has been sent to me.

The Chairman: I do not know that there is any material difference between the terms of the note sent to you and the terms of our appointment. The Board, of course, will be governed by the terms of its own appointment; that would be its authority for action; it would be its limit—its definition—its bounds. It says here: "The Report, accompanied by the evidence, will be forwarded to you; and while the Treasurer does not consider it necessary to limit the scope of the investigation, he trusts that yourself and colleagues will be prepared to report fully upon the manner in which the department generally has been managed; upon the duties of the several officers of the department, and how far those duties have or have not been honestly and efficiently performed." You see that there is, in point of fact, a wide scope given to us. We have the previous evidence before us, and it becomes part of our business to look into it. As I read to you—we have looked into it. We are, therefore, not in any way restricted in this inquiry; on the contrary it is very extensive.

Mr. Buchanan: It cannot be more discursive than as stated in my letter—an inquiry into the general management of the department. I desire that no misapprehension may prevail. All I am anxious to understand is, the relation in which I stand towards this new Board. Am I, or am I not, held by the Board as still open to the charges which were formerly arrayed against me? Are they trying me on those charges, or are they not? If they are, I deny their authority. I am quite willing to afford every information consistent with the inquiry as intimated to me; but I am not prepared to appear here longer as an accused person. The interpretation I place upon that letter is that the Government have abandoned those charges. If the Board concur with me in that interpretation I am ready to proceed; if not, I must decline until I am further instructed by the Government.

The Chairman: You will perceive by the examination how far the Board have considered it necessary to proceed. They think it would do you best justice, and also that it would do best justice to the Government, who are acting for the public in this matter, really to carry out the instructions contained in this letter, that is, to make a thorough and searching inquiry into the department.

Mr. Buchanan: I should have not the slightest objection to that; but I wish clearly to understand the relation in which I stand to the Government. Am I here as the head of the department, or do I stand here as an accused officer? That, at present, is doubtful. No effort has been omitted on my part to arrive at a proper view. I have put those queries, which directly bear upon the matter, but have received no answer.

The Chairman: The Board have come to no decision in reference to the matter. They commenced this inquiry with perfectly clear and unbiassed minds, having no impression either one way or the other.

Mr. Buchanan: Do not misunderstand me—I did not impute anything to the Board.

The Chairman: I am aware of that. The Board have only one desire—to carry out instructions which they believe, if fully carried out, will be satisfactory to all parties concerned. They simply desire to do justice in the matter.

Mr.

Mr. Buchanan : I have only to express my concurrence in that also ; but to me it is of the greatest importance to know the position in which I stand.

The Chairman : In every one of the letters that have been addressed to us you are termed " Colonial Storekeeper " ; and if there had been anything in the nature of suspension we might know that in some way, but we are not bound by it in these instructions. We deal with you as Colonial Storekeeper. Even though you should have been suspended (if that be the case), still you would be the Colonial Storekeeper, and as such we should deal with you.

Mr. Buchanan : I think it is stated in Mr. Lane's letter that it had been " forgotten " to communicate with me in reference to this matter ?

The Chairman : It states—" I assure you that the fact of my not having written to " the Colonial Storekeeper in reference to the appointment of the Board was quite overlooked." It is an omission.

Mr. Buchanan : I will now beg to read two other letters to the Board—they were not addressed to me. [Witness read two letters referring to the appointment of the Board, and bearing date respectively April 24 and April 30.] I put in these copies, and leave it to be judged whether it was forgotten or not.

By the Chairman : In point of fact, the letters were addressed to the Chief Clerk, and no letter was addressed to you until the receipt of my letter ? Yes.

The Chairman : That being so we shall proceed to carry out our instructions, so far as we possibly can, under the firm conviction that it will be for the advantage of all parties. As we go along, if there be any question to which you take exception, it will be in your discretion to answer it, or not, and you can give your reasons at the time ; but it would be a difficult matter for us just now to state exactly every question we shall ask.

Mr. Buchanan : I can understand that. But the desire I have is to know whether I stand here as an accused person or not. I cannot gather it from the correspondence. Every effort I have made to determine that point has failed. By that information my future course will be determined.

The Chairman : I cannot, from our own instructions, gather that you appear before us as an accused person. The only thing you see here is this—" in order that authentic data " may be obtained as to the extent to which these irregularities have been carried, the " existence of which, in some degree, is manifest"—and I need not tell you that this paragraph neither ought to have nor has weight or influence with us. We have nothing to do with it.

Mr. Buchanan : No.

The Chairman : I could not say that there is no kind of accusation. There is here an inferential accusation of irregularity, but whether we affirm that there is or is not irregularity will depend upon our own investigation. We are not in any way bound by this, nor will we accept it in any way. We do not allow any one to come to conclusions for us ; we will come to our own conclusions on our own evidence, taken in accordance with the terms of our instructions, to inquire into " the general management of the department, the duties of its officers, " and how far those duties have or have not been honestly and efficiently performed."

Mr. Buchanan : Then the inquiry takes this shape—the Board is not appointed for my trial.

The Chairman : I cannot understand it in that way. Here are our instructions. (Instructions read.) Our duty, therefore, is one of inquiry into the particular matters stated in those few lines—" the management of the department, the duties of its officers, and " whether those duties have or have not been honestly and efficiently performed." That is the whole affair. Therefore, it is clear that this is a Board to make an investigation into those matters as if they had not been inquired into before. Well, now, shall we consider that all the preliminaries are arranged, Mr. Buchanan.

Mr. Buchanan : It seems to me that the Board are very much in my own position. There is a lingering doubt as to the position which I occupy. Although the Board are not cognizant of my suspension, I am aware of it ; and I have not at this moment been relieved from the charges under which I was placed. If I were only satisfied that the Government had abandoned them, I should be quite ready to proceed or to do anything in my power ; but, until I know that the categorical charges levelled at my head have been dealt with in some way, I do not see that I can proceed. It appears to me as if the Government had done this :—that they made certain charges against me, and that after those charges have been investigated by a Board, and it has been found that they cannot be supported, there is an attempt made to shift the ground.

The Chairman : We do not know anything about that.

Mr. Buchanan : I am perfectly cognizant of that ; but, of course, I must be aware of it. If they will only pronounce a decision, and tell me that they abandon the charges, I am prepared to afford the Board every information that I can concerning the department.

The Chairman : We are in no way in a position to enforce anything upon the Government. On the last occasion, when you declined to give evidence, we thought the objection reasonable enough ; and, as you saw, we communicated with the Under Secretary. The consequence was, you were put in possession of the information that we had been appointed a Board, and also of the nature of the inquiry we were to make. This inquiry is a new inquiry altogether, and has no reference to the former inquiry. We are bound by the four corners of our instructions. We cannot compel you to give evidence, but if you refuse we shall not therefore consider that we have no functions, but go on with the examination of other parties. It remains then for you to determine whether you will give evidence or not. Of course it would be impertinent in me to offer you any suggestion. As I said before, we shall not consider your refusal as interfering with our functions, but go on with the examination of other officers of the department.

Mr.

Mr. Buchanan : I think that will be the better course, as the Government have left me in doubt as to what my position is. As I cannot get answers from the Government to plain questions I must decline.

The Chairman : It is a matter for your own consideration.

Mr. Buchanan : The information given to me does not even accord with your instructions. The ingenuous course has not even been pursued of apprising me of the extent or nature of the inquiry committed to the Board.

The Chairman : It states that there is to be an inquiry into the "general management" of the department; and, as you said yourself, perhaps in the term "general management" the other matters might very well be considered as included. An inquiry into the "general management" would naturally, to business minds, include everything stated in the subsequent part of the letter to me. Therefore, substantially, you are apprised of the nature of this inquiry, and with previous inquiries we have nothing to do. It is for you to judge whether you will go on or not. Whatever we may think, we are not in a position to give you advice in reference to the matter. You must act entirely on your own discretion; perhaps you would take a few minutes to consider of it, because it is a matter of some consequence.

Mr. Buchanan : No; I think there can be no question. An inquiry into the general management of the department can be conducted without my presence in any way. I am not the head of the department at the present moment, and the inquiry can proceed without my presence or interference, especially as I have received no communication relieving me from the accusations brought against me.

The Chairman : But, as it would be an inquiry into the management of a department, naturally, the chief officer would be the right authority from whom to seek information in the first instance; and his information would naturally be considered superior to that to be derived from anybody else. Therefore, I think it is a mistake for you to suppose that your information would be of no service. It would be of most essential service. Still, if you decline to give us that information it will not stop the inquiry. We will endeavor to carry out our instructions to the best of our ability and power under the circumstances.

Mr. Buchanan : The Board will clearly understand why I decline;—it is simply because of the uncertainty of my position in the matter, and the impossibility of eliciting from the Government what that position is. If the Government will determine that for me I am quite anxious to afford every information it is in my power to give, and am prepared to do so without delay. But until this has been done I should be taking a course unjust to myself in this investigation. There is involved in this matter not only an inquiry into those charges, but my own character. My own character has been involved by the public acts of the Government in reference to the late charges, and I call upon them to pronounce a decision upon that matter. If they choose to perpetrate an injustice, let them do it. I am powerless in the matter. I can only protest against it at the proper moment and in the proper way.

The Chairman : I might, perhaps, make this remark;—it seems by the letter addressed to us from the Treasury that the Government, so far as they are cognizant of the previous evidence, are of opinion that some irregularities seem to have existed, but that they have not made up their mind whether they do in reality exist or not, and desire further investigation to come to an ultimate conclusion upon the matter. Therefore they say that this second inquiry is necessary, as a continuation of the first, in order to put them in a position to judge positively whether there have or have not been those irregularities which seemed to exist. I do not understand from this letter of mine that they take it that there is anything proved; they say it is manifest to a certain extent, and they desire this further inquiry to convince them one way or the other.

Mr. Buchanan : Then am I to understand that you consider the present Board appointed to continue the labors of the former one?

The Chairman : No.

Mr. Buchanan : I think you used the word.

The Chairman : I was connecting the result of our labors with the Government, and then the Government with the result of the labors of the previous Board. I keep our inquiry separate; but when it goes to the Government they will be in possession of the result of the two inquiries, and be in a position to judge from the two. But so far as our own inquiry is concerned, we should act as if it were perfectly separate from the other.

Mr. Buchanan : In that case my course is clear. I stand accused, and shall give nothing further. Distinct accusations were made against me; they were investigated by three officers in the public service (I was not even allowed the right to challenge one of those officers—I protested against his sitting on personal grounds, but the Government still maintained him in his position); those officers pursued the investigation in the most inquisitorial style; they reported, and I presume the inquiry is closed. It is not competent that a man should be tried twice.

The Chairman : Then you persist in declining?

Mr. Buchanan : Most certainly I shall now, Mr. O'Connor, that being the case.

The Chairman : Of course we cannot make any suggestion, we must accept your refusal to be examined as absolute, so far, and consult what course we shall take—whether we shall proceed with the examination of others to-day or not.

Mr. Buchanan withdrew.

TUESDAY,

TUESDAY, 22 MAY, 1860.

Present:—

R. O'CONNOR, Esq., IN THE CHAIR.

CAPTAIN SCOTT,

CAPTAIN OLIVEY.

John Buchanan, Esq., Colonial Storekeeper, called in and examined:—

The Chairman having read the minutes of the last meeting and the correspondence which had since taken place. J. Buchanan,
Esq.
22 May, 1860.

Mr. Buchanan said: I received an answer on the 16th (dated the 15th—from the Treasury) to my letters of the 7th and 8th instant, transmitting to me a copy of the report of the former Board, and also an extract from a minute of the Executive Council, which I will read:—"They, therefore, advise that a full and searching inquiry be at once instituted into the general management of the business connected with the management of the "Colonial Store." Those are the exact words used, and I am perfectly prepared to go on with this inquiry.

1. By the Chairman: I notice the point on which you dwell—"into the management." Those are the exact words used. Of course, in proceeding with the inquiry, it will be for you to take exception to any question to which you may object. We may differ as to whether it relates to the general management or not; but, at all events, the question will be put down, and your answer or your refusal to answer will also be recorded.

Mr. Buchanan: The question in reference to the matter involved in the former inquiry is not at the present moment in a satisfactory state, but I am unwilling to trouble the Board about that. The battle on that question must be fought between me and the Government; it must be fought in the House, and there I am determined to take it.

2. You are Colonial Storekeeper, Mr. Buchanan? Yes; or, I may say that I have been. I am hardly in a position to say whether I am at this present moment or not.

3. How long have you filled that office? Since the 1st January, 1845. I may add that although that is the date from which I took charge of the department, my service in it dates from the year 1839. It perhaps may not be a matter of much moment, but as it is the first opportunity I have had of placing it upon record, I desire now to state that I took charge of this office from a gentleman who formerly filled the conjoint offices of Ordnance Storekeeper and Colonial Storekeeper. He resigned in 1844, in consequence of the contumelious treatment he received at that time.

4. I do not think we ought to go into that matter; our inquiry ought to be divested as much as possible of feeling of any kind? I am speaking of the past only.

5. You spoke of the contumelious way in which some other officer had been treated—that cannot affect your standing? It has a considerable bearing upon this matter. The feeling which led to the contumelious treatment of this officer years ago has existed from that day to this in reference to the department. It was on account of the treatment he received at the hands of the Legislative Council of that day that he resigned. I do not blink the question. He was one of the most efficient officers the Government ever had in the public service; but he has now retired to private life. I feel under considerable obligations to him, and I now wish to place it upon record. I succeeded him. I was appointed by Sir George Gipps to fill this office when the Government were in considerable embarrassment as to who should fill it, and I accepted the appointment at a less salary than I received as a clerk in the department, and held it for three years at that rate. I had to do the duty with one clerk only where four had been previously allowed. Such were the circumstances in which I was placed at the commencement of my charge of this department.

6. I think it will be better to divest this inquiry of any statements of this kind, because they clearly can have nothing to do with the management of the department now. I should like to divest it of anything which pertains to feeling, and go at once into the simple matter of business. You supply the departments and services of the Government with the stores they require? That is a portion of the duties I am called upon to perform.

7. You know their wants by requisition? Yes; that is the way in which I am made acquainted with what they absolutely require.

8. Do you comply with their requisitions in full, or do you exercise any discretion in the matter? The practice for many years—in fact from the commencement of the department, was, that all stores should be submitted to the Government for approval. If the Colonial Storekeeper saw in those demands anything unusual or extravagant, it was his duty to point it out to the Government, and leave it to their discretion whether the requisition should be complied with or not. He had not the power himself of refusing. He had the power to recommend but not to refuse. When Mr. Donaldson came into office—not as Premier, but as Colonial Treasurer—the practice was discontinued. It had been usual to submit the demands, previous to the introduction of Responsible Government, to the Governor, and of late years to the proper minister. Mr. Donaldson considered that the duty was one which he was scarcely called upon to perform, and on one occasion one of my clerks who had taken a number of demands up to him for approval, returned with a message to me to the effect that it was unnecessary for the future that those demands should be submitted. Since that day they have not been submitted. I have no record of that fact. It is not the custom of the Treasury to commit anything to writing if they can avoid it. Although it is a very important change, I have no record of it beyond the word of the clerk who received the instruction and mentioned it to me. I mentioned the matter to the Secretary to the Treasury, who said it was the case. I have never considered myself in a position to attempt to reduce the demands of superior officers unless those demands were notoriously extravagant.

There

J. Buchanan, Esq.
22 May, 1860.

There have been instances in which extraordinary expenses have been involved, in which I have made such reductions. I may mention one noted instance in reference to the fitting up of the Artillery Barracks. The demand was so excessive that I felt it my duty to draw attention to it and not act upon it, without special instructions. This is all that occurs to me at the present moment.

9. Previously then to the discretion being put into your hands, in the way you speak of, you did not, in point of fact, exercise any discretion in regard to the issue of supplies upon requisition? I did not; the Government exercised it; but in many instances alterations have been made in consequence of remarks from this office. I may add that Sir George Gipps invariably went over the demands himself, and there are in my office records to this day of the cuttings and carvings, and clippings to which he subjected all those applications—in his own handwriting.

10. Since that period you have exercised a discretion in some cases? Yes.

11. That discretion being exercised by calling the attention of the Government to any requisition which you considered excessive? Yes; in that way.

12. But have you, in any instance, exercised that discretion directly, by supplying a smaller quantity than that specified in the requisition? I may have done it in reference to some minor matter, but I do not recollect having done so. Since the requisitions have not been submitted to the Ministers, if I felt any doubt as to the extravagance of a demand, and if it were an important office, I should submit it to the Government. The duty is so delicate and so dangerous for one to exercise that I have been very cautious about it.

13. Upon the whole have there been many requisitions much in excess of the requirements of departments? I cannot pretend to divine what the requirements of a department may be. I may have my own opinions upon those matters, but I am not in a position to state positively.

14. What means have you of judging of the wants of departments better than their heads, who sign the requisitions? Of course my means of forming a judgment cannot be better than those of the heads of the departments; I do not for a moment presume that they are; but my experience teaches me this—that the heads of departments very often are not responsible for the demands sent in. In the pressure of other business they sign the requisitions, possibly pro formâ, and the demand is virtually that of the clerks. I have frequently suspected that to be the case. My suspicions may have been wrong sometimes—I am not infallible—but I am satisfied that in other cases I have acted quite correctly, and that my suspicions have been well founded.

15. But if the heads of the departments performed their duty in this matter—which it is supposed and expected they would perform—there would be no room for any curtailment of requisitions? True; but the heads of departments, as a general rule, look upon the question of obtaining stores as a minor matter, and not as the special object of their department. The duty, therefore, frequently falls into the hands of the clerks.

16. But a serious question is involved in the consideration of an application for a larger amount of stores than is really required by a department? Many officers really do not know what they require, especially officers newly appointed; they really have no conception of what they do want.

17. That is an exceptional case, it must be so, they can only ascertain from experience,—but I am not speaking of exceptional cases? You are speaking of old established officers?

18. Yes? I find that many officers are unable to name even what they require. They have some conception of what it is they want, but as to giving it a name or defining the quantities, it is out of their power; they come here actually for us to prepare their demands, which we are frequently in the habit of doing.

19. You must refer to the new departments of which you spoke? My observations may, perhaps, apply more particularly to country districts than to fixed establishments in town. The requirements of fixed establishments in town are of very little consequence; most of their demands are confined to stationery—a few sheets of paper, or pens and ink, and things of that kind, which everybody is versed in; but it becomes a different matter where stores are required which need a technical knowledge.

20. Now, looking at the difference between the demand as by requisition and the supply, do you think there is much saved in that way to the public? In what way?

21. By a supply short of the requisition? I do not think there is. I do not by any means found upon that circumstance any idea of the worth of the department at all. I do not attach the slightest importance to it.

22. You obtain the means of supplying these requisitions by calling for tenders through the Government Gazette? By calling for tenders through the Government Gazette—that is one of the modes. We also obtain stores from England; we also make private purchases;—those are two other modes.

23. When you obtain stores from England, you make, I suppose, the Treasury acquainted with the fact that you need those supplies to meet the public wants? In reference to such stores as are obtained from England by this office, the indents, as you would term them—the demands, as I term them in the office—are sent to the Treasury to be forwarded to England. They are not forwarded direct from this Office, but from the Treasury.

24. And in regard to the supplies that you purchase privately in the Colony without calling for tender—these, I imagine, are to supply immediate and urgent wants? Yes, generally that is the case; that power has always been vested in the department.

25. Now, supposing the heads of the departments to do their duty in this matter, and supposing those who have charge of new departments to understand anything whatever of the matters of which they are put in charge—could not their wants be supplied as promptly, as cheaply, and with articles as good, by men in the trade as by this department? In certain certain cases they might be, but there are certain other cases in which they could not be supplied at all, and with some of the most material items. J. Buchanan, Esq.

26. Would you be kind enough to mention a few of those material items? I would simply ask the Board to consider in what way the police could be supplied with arms and ammunition by private trade? How could they be furnished except from a Government depôt? 22 May, 1860.

27. You consider then that it is absolutely necessary there should be always on hand a large stock of certain articles to meet the demand? I am convinced that no Government can exist without it. I do not see any Government in the world that can do it. Even in this Colony, although this department has nominally existed for only twenty-five years it has actually existed from the earliest days of the history of the Colony. Before there was a Colonial Storekeeper's Department there was an Ordnance. When the Ordnance came out here in 1835 they would not continue to do the duty, and Sir Richard Bourke found it necessary then to establish the Colonial Storekeeper's Department. Previous to 1835 it had been done by the Commissariat Store branch, which had existed since the foundation of the Colony; so that although the name had not existed, the department, in fact, existed, and must exist. This department may be swept away, and all the employés may be dispensed with, but you will not get rid of the department. It will exist in some shape. It will only be a change in name and not in fact. The supplies of the Government differ so materially from what is required in private life that the Government must, despite all efforts to the contrary, maintain a depôt somewhere, and in somebody's charge.

28. But as regards ordinary stores—we will say stationery, provisions, clothes? Provisions are not an item.

29. Well, stationery, and clothing, and ironmongery generally—these might be supplied by individuals in the trade; but as regards arms and munitions of war generally you think it would be absolutely necessary for the Government to have a store? Yes; but it is not only arms and ammunition. We will take the case of clothing alone. There would be no possibility of providing the clothing required by this Colony if we did not have a public depôt. It differs so much from what is used in private life. You could not go and buy police clothing in any Jew's slop-shop—you cannot pick it up at the corner of any street. You could not even buy it at any price you chose to name. You could not even get the material of which it is made. You could not in England—if you were in London. My knowledge of the state of things there proves to me the impossibility there would be, with all the immense appliances of England,—without the aid of the large army clothiers, it would be impossible for the country to equip ten thousand men. It is a special duty to supply clothing alone, but it falls into a few hands—it is engrossed by Abbott & Co., Dolman & Co., and other large houses in London.

30. There is no doubt about that; but you are aware that there is a Central Police Office here, with an Inspector General, and a considerable staff;—might not the Police Department supply itself with clothing from these very houses at Home in the same way that a regiment supplies itself with clothing? But a regiment does not supply itself with clothing.

31. They get the clothing? From a public depôt. The system is changed now. Formerly the Colonels used to be allowed the "off-reekonings," and they used to provide the clothing, but now that system is abolished.

32. I thoroughly comprehend the system; the army clothiers keep a store in point of fact with the regiment, and they are paid according as the clothing is used? Yes.

33. Now, considering the large staff we have here in Sydney at head quarters, and the orderly manner in which police matters are regulated in this country, do you see any difficulty in the police supplying themselves with clothing from those large establishments at Home something on the same principle as the army? But the army does not supply itself.

34. Well, we will not say "as the army"—but is it not possible for the Police Department to supply itself from those large establishments through a Colonial Agent—letting the Superintendent of Police, or some other officer, have charge; and might not each department in like manner be supplied with whatever might be required? But the departments are too numerous and insignificant in New South Wales for any clothier to undertake that business.

35. But take the clothing of the police alone, it would not be difficult, I imagine, to find persons willing to supply it? Yes; but when we talk of the clothier supplying it in that way, we must remember the insignificant fractions into which the police are split up.

36. That would not effect the matter, because the Superintendent knows the whole body throughout the Colony, and would provide for the whole body. It would be for him to deal with the minutiae, not the clothier? But even the entire body is not equal to a battalion.

37. That would not affect the question: could not the police be supplied in that way? I am satisfied of this, that if you choose to pay for it you may get anything done in London. You will find men in London who will enter into any arrangement you wish if you will only pay them. As to how far it would be economical is a matter in reference to which I have great doubts.

38. Might not the same be said of arms and ammunition; as the police are the parties who use these arms, might not they be supplied in the same way, and the supplies placed under the same superintendence? They might be certainly; but I am not aware that it is a correct inference that because the police use the arms, the Central Police Office is the proper place in which a permanent depôt should be maintained. We do not find that because in the hands of a regiment warlike weapons are placed, therefore, it is in their hands that the depôts are placed. We never find that in England or elsewhere.

39. For the very protection of the arms and clothing does it not strike you that the Police Department would be more secure? How do you mean secure? Secure from what?

40. I speak of the protection of the arms;—for instance, suppose arms were required on a sudden emergency? Yes.

- J. Buchanan,
Esq.
22 May, 1860.
41. They would be more likely to fall into rightful hands under the control of the police than if they were kept here with perhaps only one civilian in charge? You mean secure from being taken?
42. Yes? That is a question which concerns the Government. I confess that I have never seen any public store left in a condition like this. Here are military stores in an utterly unprotected state; but for that I am not responsible. The Government might prevent it by placing a proper guard over them. They can only do that by putting police in charge.
43. By Captain Scott: Police, armed with swords, are placed in charge of Woolwich Arsenal and Dockyard? Yes; there has been a dockyard police for many years.
44. At Woolwich? Oh! yes.
45. By the Chairman: In your advertisements calling for tenders, do you always specify the quantity and the quality? By no means. In fact, as a general rule, I may state that in our contracts, not only with this department, but also with every other department of the Government, quantities are seldom or never mentioned.
46. As a general rule? As a general rule. They are taken for a period. All the provision contracts, for instance, are taken for periods extending over three, six, or twelve months, as the case may be, the agreement being to supply all the Government may require during the period. That is invariably the case with provision contracts, and it is also the case with the great bulk of the stores.
47. Does that include stationery? It used to include stationery when we obtained it in the country.
48. Here? Here. I mean when we got stationery exclusively in the country.
49. When tenders are sent in upon your advertisement, to whom are they addressed, and by whom are they opened? They are sent in to the Treasury, and they are opened at the Treasury in the presence of a Board.
50. Consisting of whom? The Under Secretary and myself generally. There is occasionally a third officer.
51. Has that Board consisted of those two officers for any length of time? About three years I think I may state. It has always existed in fact; but the tenders have only been opened at the Treasury since we have had Responsible Government. Previously, the tenders were opened at the Colonial Secretary's Office, and in those days I was one of the Board, with Mr. Thomson.
52. When the tenders are opened they are then put into schedule? They are initialled at the Treasury by the members of the Board, and then placed in a schedule—that is, there is an abstract forwarded of them.
53. Does each member of the Board initial each tender? Yes.
54. By whom are the tenders then put into schedule? By myself; in this office, if they are tenders which concern this department. After being placed in schedule, a recommendation is put upon them signed by the members of the Board, and the whole of the papers—that is, the original tenders—are submitted to the Minister for his approval. Occasionally, he differs from the recommendations of the Board; though that is not of frequent occurrence, I have known it to be done.
55. When the tenders are in schedule, and are remitted to the Treasury, do they accompany the schedule? Always; the whole of the papers.
56. So that they have there again the means of comparing the tenders with the schedule? Invariably. That is a rule I never knew to be departed from.
57. It would not be possible, then, under the system now adopted (the initialling of the tenders, their return with the schedule, and the re-examination by the Board), for any person upon whom the duty might devolve of putting these tenders into schedule, to substitute a tender which had not passed the Board for one which had? It would be a simple impossibility. Possibly if I shew the Board a schedule they will see better what I mean. [Schedule produced.]
58. By Captain Olivey: Are the tenders numbered when they are issued, and do the numbers correspond with the schedule? In all cases. They are numbered consecutively.
59. By the Chairman: When the tenders go for approval they are then accompanied by an extract from the Government Gazette, containing the advertisement calling for tenders? A printed extract.
60. And the schedule contains recommendations for the guidance of the Minister? Yes. I have known instances in which those recommendations have not been accepted by the Minister,—where he has seen reason to differ from us, and they have had to be modified; but those instances are very rare indeed.
61. And the tender that is accepted obtains, in fact, the final approval of the Minister? Yes.
62. But before he gives this approval he has the whole of those documents under review before him? He invariably has the whole of those documents in his possession. There is no hurried conclusion arrived at, for occasionally a lapse of two or three days takes place before a conclusion is come to.
63. Setting aside the difficulty of mentioning quantities, do you contemplate that any advantages can accrue to the Government from the omission? It is sometimes simply impossible to mention quantities. I should be always inclined, if it were possible, to name a specific quantity, but I know of no Government that has the power to do so. I know what the practice of the English Government is, and I can produce undeniable evidence to shew that the course pursued in England is similar to the practice I have adopted here. I copied it from the English system, with which I was acquainted before I came to this Colony.
64. What means have you of judging of the reasonableness of a tender as to price? Nothing, except that general knowledge which a man acquires from long experience, and seeing the articles articles in which he deals; judging what they were in past times, and watching the state of the markets.

65. Without, perhaps, addressing yourself particularly to the matter, you necessarily become acquainted with the state of the markets? Yes, with some.

66. And with the different firms in the trade, and so on? With their names. There is so much formality attached to Government business, and it is of so different a character to that which prevails in private life, that there are certain houses which seem to devote themselves to that class of business; and those men generally take it up.

67. How do you communicate to tenderers the acceptance or rejection of their tenders? By a printed memorandum; perhaps I had better give the Board one. [Memorandum produced.]

68. Do you send that printed memorandum to those whose tenders are rejected, as well as to those whose tenders are accepted? You see there is a blank left—"I do myself the honor to acquaint you, that your tender dated [blank] has been [blank] 'accepted' or 'declined,' " as the case may be.

69. And how do you send these—through the post? By the post, or by the messenger; sometimes when the stores are urgently required we do not send them at all, but we send a man with an order for the goods, and that is taken as a notification of the acceptance of the tender.

70. But what have you to say to those whose tenders are declined? We send notices of declination.

71. You do that invariably? Yes, that rule has not always prevailed. It is only with this department that it prevails at all,—other departments of the public service give no notice to tenderers whose tenders are not accepted. At Melbourne, it is distinctly stated that notice will only be given to those parties whose tenders are accepted.

72. In a large establishment that would be a convenient mode, and there would then be no reason to complain? I thought it was better to do so, because we frequently had personal inquiries after the fate of tenders; and the tenderers seemed to think that there was a want of courtesy in the department.

73. Then of course you have known the address of the tenderers? When it has been given to us.

74. Now in the case of scheduling tenders, is it not a question with the Board who and what the tenderers are—whether they will be able to carry out their contracts if their tenders be accepted? I am sorry to say that the Government looks to nothing but to cheapness. In this contract system there are two agencies at work—the one trying to "do" the other; it is a contest between the Government and the contractor—each trying to drive the hardest bargain.

75. Are we to understand that the Board would schedule and recommend to the Minister for acceptance a tender from a person utterly unknown? I am satisfied that they do not trouble their heads about it in any way.

76. That is the Government? Yes.

77. But in regard to yourself, tenders are put into schedule here, and the recommendation emanates from this office which is supposed to guide, and which, as we have already heard, in a great majority of cases, actually does guide the Minister? Yes.

78. Well, you would not give that recommendation in the case of a tenderer utterly unknown—without a habitation or a name? The fact is, I act under certain rules in these matters. The understood rule with the Government is, that the lowest tender is to be accepted.

79. But is there not this other understanding—that the tenderers should be known as persons likely to carry out the contract;—would it not be a consideration for yourself, not to place the Government in the position of accepting a tender from a person altogether unknown, and who might fail in supplying the goods, and therefore put the Government in a most extraordinary position at any moment? I know of no case of the kind having occurred.

80. But such a case is possible? It is possible; but if we received a tender from any person who had failed to perform a previous contract, we of course should not recommend its acceptance without bringing that fact under notice. If a man does not satisfactorily perform one contract, however, that is no bar to the Government taking his tenders again into favorable consideration. I have known the Government to take that step in defiance of recommendations to the contrary.

81. Do you never take bonds? Yes; for time contracts. For all contracts extending over a period we take bonds. For contracts where the goods are delivered instantly, or within a brief period, and for certain specific items, we do not take bonds. If the contract be executed at once, the bond is a farce. There is no necessity for it whatever. We never have taken it.

82. Excepting in time contracts? Excepting in time contracts.

83. Samples are sent to you, I suppose? We usually fix our own samples. On that the entire superstructure must be raised. It must be a question of quality. Wherever we can do it we fix our own samples, and require tenderers to tender according to our patterns. If you reflect for a moment you will see how this simplifies the matter. If we suffered each individual to send in patterns of his own, there would be a difference of quality and cost, and it would be difficult to determine who was the lowest in reality. But if you set up one pattern, the only thing is who will supply it at the lowest price. It is very desirable, too, that the Government should if possible adhere to one settled pattern.

84. That seems feasible and reasonable enough, and indeed practically throughout the departments, in detail, it is carried out. For the little things they require to have done by contract they shew a pattern, and the work must be according to it; and if this be advantageous,

J. Buchanan, Esq. tagueous, I believe it will be much more so on a larger scale? We do so as far as it is possible to do it.

23 May, 1860. 85. Well, then, the goods are supplied up to the standard of a pattern exhibited by yourself By ourselves generally. We do receive stores occasionally according to contractor's patterns, but in that case we call upon them first to submit patterns. There are instances of both modes of proceeding.

86. But the usual course is, that you yourselves insist upon compliance with the pattern exhibited here? Yes; we insist upon compliance with the Government Store patterns.

87. When the goods are supplied do you personally inspect them for quality, and count, weigh, or measure them for quantity? The storemen examine them as to quantity by opening packages, or if not too large they positively count every article received. If they come in English packages, and the quantity be large—neither our room nor convenience for packing being very great—we do not unpack all, but only a part, and from the correctness of the quantity absolutely tested we assume the rest to be correct. As to quality they are gone over minutely in the store. I myself subsequently see the articles, and if they correspond I certify to the fact. That duty is one which peculiarly devolves upon me, and one for which I am more responsible perhaps than any person in the office.

88. You testify that the quality of the goods supplied is equal to the quality of the pattern submitted? Yes.

89. And this test is by you carried to the extent of an examination of a portion of the goods for quantity? Yes.

90. You cannot carry it beyond that? No; occasionally it extends to every thing that is delivered.

91. You only examine a convenient portion for quantity, and you can therefore only examine that tested portion for quality also,—how do you ascertain subsequently whether the remainder is in accordance with the pattern, or correct as to quantity? We have never had any question of it being otherwise; such a thing has never arisen. I do not see how it is possible to arise. No one can know what particular packages will be examined. If goods come in in packages those packages usually contain even quantities. Take an instance—a thousand articles are to be delivered; they may be packed in five bales of two hundred each;—that would be the usual mode. We should take one, or perhaps two, of those five bales indiscriminately, and if we found them correct we should assume the whole five to be correct. It is not known which will be taken for examination. That is a matter which I do not determine. It is determined by the people in the store. They take them at haphazard. Such a thing has never occurred since the department existed of a dispute as to quantity arising.

92. Subsequently you would not be in a position to state absolutely that the remaining bales or cases turned out exactly in quantity and quality equal to those first tested? No one could do that.

93. And yet subsequently those bales and cases are opened and their contents distributed? Oh! if they are opened subsequently in the store they are counted, but if they go away in whole packages afterwards they are not. If they are subsequently opened in the store it is seen that both quantity and quality are correct.

94. And you have had no case in which you have subsequently found the bales or cases to contain articles either inferior in quality or less in quantity than you had imagined in the first instance? No; I have never known of such an instance. In fact, it is hard'y ever known in mercantile life. If I saw a bale of goods come in here, packed in this country, I would not accept that without opening it. In England there are sworn packers, and a mistake very rarely occurs. Goods supplied in the Colony, if not in English packages are frequently sent in loose, and then we examine every thing. When I spoke of goods coming in in packages, I meant English packages, which are as obvious to a man as noon from midnight.

95. What record do you keep of the stores received, issued, and on hand? The record of stores received is of course the voucher, on which the payment is made,—of that we keep a record in the office, and we also send a similar record to the Auditor General's Department. That record is signed by myself and a party in the store. We keep one copy for our own information, and send the other copy to the Auditor General.

96. Do you enter the quantities received into any books? We note the receipt of the goods in the order book, but the true record is, of course, the voucher.

97. Then as to the issues what record have you? We keep a record of the issues in the issue book. We have two books. We term them the country issue book and the town issue book. We divide it into two for the sake of convenience.

98. Are these kept in such a fashion as that you could, at stated periods of the year, like other persons in business, take stock? We can take stock the same as other persons do.

99. So as to produce a balance? No person in town does take stock so as to produce a balance of quantities. Such a thing is utterly unknown in private life. The stock-taking of a mercantile firm is this: the merchant counts the goods that he has left, and values them so that he may arrive at an idea of what he is worth. He fixes some market value upon the goods which he thinks they would be likely to fetch. There is no mercantile house in town that keeps a record of every issue it makes. He puts down the issues as cash; but he keeps no record of the quantities sold. He sees that he has so much in his till, and he keeps his record by his cash and not by quantities sold.

100. The record of quantity is kept by his storekeeper? A record of the packages but not of quantities.

101. If you speak of a merchant all his receipts and issues will be packages? Yes.

102. And a regular account is kept—if any package be opened he can tell the balance? You are wrong.

103. I know it from personal experience? I never found a mercantile man do it yet. I J. Buchanan, discussed the matter with Mr. Donaldson. I was shewing him how the Ordnance system ^{Esq.}
worked, and other things connected with the question, and he said it was impossible to do so. ^{22 May, 1860.}
And not only would it be inoperative, but it would involve the necessity for such a large staff as would frighten the people. It is a question of considerable magnitude, and one that has been very much and very keenly debated in England. There are only two systems which the Government can pursue. They must either keep an account by values or by quantities. They have unfortunately here tried both systems at the same time—a sort of combination of the two.
104. I do not see what business a department of this description has with accounts of values at all, because that matter is settled by the acceptance of tenders and the receipt of the goods? You are right that far. That is the system adopted in England. There they have dissociated values from quantities. For instance, take the Military Storekeeper here, or at any station, he does not know the value of his stores. He does not know what they cost, and has no conception of what they are worth. But you cannot adopt that system here, on account of the manner in which the votes of Parliament are taken. They would not adopt the clear system adopted in England. Often as I have represented it to the Government they find it impossible.
105. Then in fact you do not take stock? We do, occasionally; we have taken stock two or three times, but in a way which, for my own part, I look upon as utterly valueless.
106. Would you describe the system you adopted in taking stock? They professed to see everything, and to count everything; but really it was in a way which led me to differ as to their correctness. Different persons have different views; and the Board who took stock determined how it should be taken; but, as I happen to have seen stock-taking, and know how it should be done, I do not think the mode adopted was likely to lead to any accurate result.
107. You mean that the Board took stock? Yes.
108. Which Board? Captain Mayne and his colleagues.
109. You have been in the habit of taking stock previously to that? Never.
110. And have never subsequently taken stock? No. How on earth is it possible to take stock with the system pursued here—the issues going on at the same time, and no account being taken of them?—With the stores we have, stock-taking in this department would take three months, and work cannot be suspended during that time.
111. You think it is impossible to take stock with your present staff? With the present staff, and the limited room we have.
112. With the present staff and accommodation of the department it is impossible to take stock? Simply impossible; and when I suggested the other day that you should view the stores, it was principally that you might become acquainted with that fact. I am sure a glance at the stores will put that fact plainly before you.
113. Then the goods received you mark "Received" in the order book, and the goods issued you put down in the issue book, and you do not take stock? Periodically —
114. Periodically? No.
115. Then for the "remains" you must trust wholly to the integrity of those you have about you? We trust in a considerable degree to their integrity—we must do so; but we have certain checks. One great check exists in this fact—that the stores kept for the public service are utterly worthless elsewhere. Nine-tenths of them are utterly useless to any one else.
116. Why? They are not of a character to be of service.
117. Blankets are blankets? Yes; but they have a great brand upon them.
118. There are shirts and trousers? But of what use would a convict's shirt be to a man?—
he would not go out branded as a felon, and that would brand him as such. True we have police trousers—that perhaps might be an item, but a policeman's coat would be no good.
119. Are there no other items of value which might pass current without detection? There are a few things. Of course, when I spoke in the way I did, I alluded to the great bulk of things. The goods are within an enclosure, it is true, and all the people here leave at a certain hour; but it is possible that there might be some little peculation, although I do not believe it for a moment, for all the officers I have here are men who have been here for a number of years. I recollect quite well half a dozen howitzers slipping off from the wharf at Woolwich; and as they happened to be brass, they were very soon made away with about London. It can be done.
120. You say that all the persons employed in this department leave at one hour? Yes.
121. And come at one hour? Yes.
122. Do they leave anybody behind in charge of the premises? Yes, the watchman.
123. The watchman? Yes; the place is locked up and left in his charge.
124. Is he sworn in as a constable? No, he is not.
125. Is he a young or an aged man? He is a middle-aged man.
126. Have you employed him for a long time? Not a very long time, but for these eighteen months, I think. The man who preceded him we had for years, but we changed him. The miserable remuneration allowed is hardly enough to induce any man to accept the office.
127. Have you many stores except this? Do you mean buildings?
128. Yes? This is the only building in the immediate charge of the people connected with this department. We have stores at the Commissariat, but that is not under our charge.
We have goods deposited in Moore's Store, but that is a private warehouse. The Magazine at Goat Island is for the most part filled with stores belonging to us.
129. But this, in point of fact, is the only store under your charge, and for which you are immediately

J. Buchanan, Esq., immediately responsible? Yes; this we may consider the issuing store; we keep here a sort of small dépôt, containing everything likely to be immediately required.

130. How do you pay the contractors and tenderers? By cheque.

22 May, 1860. 131. Invariably? Invariably by cheque. Petty disbursements, from a few shillings to a couple of pounds, we pay in cash; but we seldom or ever go beyond that amount.

132. Now supposing a payment did not reach the rightful hands, would not the Government still be responsible for the amount? Well, I presume they would. I know of nothing to the contrary.

133. If, from want of sufficient caution or care on the part of this department, a payment did not reach the rightful hands, would not the Government be still responsible for the amount? I presume they would; I know of nothing to exempt the Government from the responsibility, excepting it be placed on the shoulders of the officer who caused the default.

134. With that knowledge, it would behove the parties entrusted with these payments to be very cautious that they made them to the right persons? Certainly. The payments, I may add, under Government regulations, are not in my hands in any shape or way. When that duty was cast on this department, contrary to my wish and representation, an officer was sent here to whom that duty was entrusted. He was to fill the office of accountant to this department, and the regulation—I think printed even in the cheque book itself—was that the book should remain in his exclusive possession. He was to initial the cheques, and my duty was to sign them. He was to make the payments; that has always been the case; I have never yet made a payment to a contractor; although nominally responsible for payments, as head of the department, the responsibility rested with the paymaster of the department, for that was what he was.

135. You consider then that your duty ceases with your signature to the cheque? I do not consider that it ceases—I do not say that; but I do consider that the interest of the paymaster, as he was called, would be sufficient to lead him to take proper means to protect himself, because, if an error occurred, it might fall eventually upon him. He was an officer of nearly equal standing in the public service to myself.

136. Would you not consider it necessary, in order to satisfy yourself or the paymaster of the rightful payment of money, that you should have some knowledge of the identity of the person who tendered? Well, it is not an unusual thing to have tenders sent in here by persons of whom we know nothing. I have positive knowledge of the fact that there are persons tendering who are not supplying the goods. I have known instances where tenders have been sent here under fictitious names by parties whom we know, and to whom we did not send orders for the goods. Members of Council, for instance, have obtained others to tender for them.

137. Well, if their tenders were accepted, and they supplied the goods, at that time you did not know anything about it, I suppose? I knew this—I knew of my own knowledge that it was all fudge and false; to say that the real name appeared on the tenders was not true; but I have been obliged to accept it as true. They were the lowest, and nominally they supplied the goods; but I knew as a fact that they did not do it—they were merely the puppets set up for the purpose.

138. But whoever these persons were who were set up as puppets, their identity was known? Their identity was known. I never saw them.

139. But they were known? They were known I suppose by the accountant that dealt with them. I never saw them and did not wish to see them. In fact one rule always governed me in these matters: If I got the goods at the price they were offered, and if I got them of good quality, I considered my duty done. I cared nothing whence they came or who supplied them, as a matter of fact. It would not do for me to trouble my head about matters of that kind.

140. Without any consideration as to whether those parties were able to supply the goods? Utterly regardless of that. If, mind you, an instance had occurred in which they had failed once to fulfil their engagements, I should have had some plea to proceed upon; but there never was an instance of the sort.

141. You say the payments were always made by cheque, except they were of very small amount? Yes.

142. And for the protection of the Government you say the paymaster must ascertain for himself the identity of the tenderer with the person receiving the payment;—that you consider to be a necessary precaution? If I were paymaster I should clearly know to whom I was going to pay the money, for my own protection.

143. Are you quite sure that you are not under some mistake in regard to the Government placing the duty and responsibility of payment on this gentleman you speak of? I am quite satisfied upon that point. It is quite clear.

144. Of course when this change took place it was made upon some authority from the Government? It seemed to be a general change which took place at that time.

145. But it would not take place unless you had some written instructions to that effect? As I told you before I think the instructions are contained in the cheque books issued by the Government at that time. The Government—as I have long complained—make changes without putting them on record. I should be loath to say that they made no change because they had not put it in writing, because my experience is the opposite of that.

146. But unless you had some written authority even now to lay your hands on, would you not be responsible if you had made this change? For what?

147. If you had made the payments through the paymaster instead of taking the responsibility on yourself? I am satisfied that I can turn to the cheque book and shew the facts I have stated.

148. I have already asked you the question whether, in your own case, you would think it necessary necessary to have a knowledge of the individual who came for payment; to know, in point of fact, that he was the party whose tender was received and accepted? Yes, if I were charged with that duty I should certainly satisfy myself that I was paying the proper person.

149. In regard to the witnessing of payments: if you take no part in the payments perhaps you may not be acquainted with the system by which they are witnessed? I have a general knowledge, but I never saw a payment even made. I know, as a fact, that they require to be witnessed, and that they are generally witnessed by one of the clerks in my department. I sign the printed certificate of the accounts. They are usually signed by me when I see that they have been duly witnessed and duly paid. Those signatures appear on the vouchers when they come to me at the end of the month.

150. But the witness to a payment ought to be in a position to swear to the identity of the individual to whom he made the payment as well as to the fact of the payment? That is the generally understood rule, but it is a very loose one throughout the Government service. The witnessing of payments is a matter attended to with little care. It is looked upon more as a form than anything else. Even in the Treasury itself I have been called upon to witness payments of money which never came into my possession at all, and have done it as a matter of form to clear their books; but I never had the cheques in my hand.

151. However, the party who really did make the payment must of necessity have made himself acquainted with the identity of the person to whom he made the payment, and must have convinced himself that that person was the party who tendered, whose tender was accepted, and who supplied the goods? Certainly.

152. In all that you had nothing to do,—you left it with the paymaster? The entire cash transactions of the department are in the hands of two clerks,—the senior clerk of the establishment, or paymaster, and one to assist him. I never interfered with them in any shape or way since the initiation of the system.

153. So that in point of fact, this question of the identity of the tenderer with the party who received the payment never came under your observation? Never came under my observation. In fact, I never see the individuals who supply the goods themselves; the parties who supply them I never see, except by the merest accident. I do not think it desirable that an officer in my position should see them.

154. What should you consider to be the amount of payments in the course of the year through this department? Cash payments?

155. Cash payments for goods supplied? I could not distinguish in a moment the amount of cash payments for goods supplied, but I can give you correctly the absolute payments including salaries. They amount to £30,211 13s. 6d. I find that the salaries amount to £3,055 8s. 10d.

156. Might not the large amount of payments annually made through this department, suggest to you that you had something to do beyond merely signing the cheques? Yes; I conceive that I have. I consider that the graver portion of the duties rests upon me—to see that nothing is paid for but what is absolutely received, correct in quantity and quality.

157. But still, when you consider that payments wrongly made would involve the Government in repayment, what then as to the identity of the parties? The officer who made that wrong payment would jeopardise his employment, and also render himself liable to be called on to refund the money.

158. You think then that the officer who enters the cheque would be responsible, and not yourself? I certainly do.

159. You hold that you have no responsibility whatever in a pecuniary sense? Not the slightest.

160. I have put to you generally certain questions as to parties receiving payment; now I put to you one in relation to a particular individual;—did James Staunton, or his known agent, call at your office for payment? I cannot tell you.

161. You cannot say? I cannot say.

162. There were only two ways in which he could have been paid—either by his calling here or by the payment being sent to his place of business? Those are the only two ways in which I conceive the matter could be done. I do not know any other possible mode. I may state that there are instances in which parties never come here for their money—in which the cheques are sent to them. They send their documents here ready signed—complete in every shape; and if on examination they are found to be correct, at the convenience of the department a cheque is sent to them for the amount.

163. But still, in such cases you would know that the parties were rightfully applying for this money—that they were really the parties who had tendered? No doubt that would be the case; and I may add, although I cannot state it as a fact, that I feel sure it has been a general rule with the accountant to cross his cheques—which of itself is a protection.

164. To a certain extent? To a certain extent.

165. When payments are sent by cheque they would be witnessed? They would be witnessed.

166. By the party who took the cheque or by the clerk here? Well, from the evidence given here by one of the clerks of the department (I am speaking more from the impression that made upon my mind than from my own knowledge) it appears that he occasionally certified them instead of the messenger. Sometimes the messenger could not write, and it was considered more satisfactory that the clerk should certify them than the messenger.

167. This person (James Staunton) supplied some articles for light-houses? Yes.

168. There were no tenders called for those things? No.

169. No advertisement was published? No.

170. And he sent his tender from Melbourne? Yes, an offer.

171. How then did he become acquainted with the wants of the Government in regard to these

J. Buchanan,
Esq.
22 May, 1860.

J. Buchanan, these matters? From the simple fact, I presume, that we have light-houses here, and that supplies must be required,—that is all. But the supplies for light-houses are, you know, of a very peculiar character. You cannot pick them up anywhere. Accompanying that offer were plans of the Wilson's Promontory Light-house, at that time in course of erection.

Esq.
22 May, 1860.

172. But there was no advertisement calling for tenders? No; but we had been in the habit of purchasing the best articles we could get of that character here, and as those offered were very much cheaper and very much better I accepted the offer.

173. He might have supposed, perhaps, that you had not been so well supplied,—it was a venture his offering these things? It was a venture. It is not unfrequent. I am called upon weekly by persons travelling for different firms—by travellers as they are termed—who bring their books of samples with them. They say—“We have got an invoice of so and so, “is there anything you are likely to want?”

174. Previous to this tender for light-house requisites, I think this same individual had tendered and his tender had been accepted for other goods? No, I do not think it.

175. That was the first? That was the first, to the best of my recollection.

176. Are you quite sure? To the best of my recollection; in fact, I am almost confident it was.

177. So that, in point of fact, previously to this there had been no question as to who or what this individual was? No; I am satisfied of it. That was the very first.

178. And his making this tender then was a simple venture on his own account? No.

179. It was not induced by any advertisement? We had called for tenders for the supply of certain items at various times, but that was in pursuance of no advertisement. There must have been purchased for years past certain items of that category.

180. The tenders he made were for articles such as you had previously been in the habit of obtaining for the light-houses? Yes, somewhat similar. (Witness here exhibited several glass cylinders, some of which were contracted near the base for the purpose of “biting” the flame.)

181. Now during the occupation of yourself and the various officers of the department about your business, might you not be called away—to visit some of the public offices for instance? I am away at the various stores frequently.

182. Do you think, under any circumstances, it is possible for a case or cases to be taken away from this place without your knowledge? Of course it is possible; but it would not be possible unless by the connivance of several people. It would not be practicable if less than three or four people were concerned in the matter.

183. Were it done there must be more than one individual concerned? There must be several—the men in the store, the foreman of the store, and some clerk in the office. It could not be done otherwise.

184. That is during the time the premises are open? Yes.

185. And after they are closed? I am speaking of during the time they are open.

186. Yes, but after they are closed? Then there is the protection of the watchman. The keys are all taken away when the premises are locked up.

187. Who takes possession of the keys? The keys are locked up in a box with patent locks, and that box is locked in a press.

188. Well, then, as there is so much difficulty about the removing of one or more cases without the cognizance of more than one, what say you to the placing here of some forty-three or thirty-eight cases? Forty-three or forty-eight cases placed here!

189. Could that take place—the placing here of thirty-eight cases—in this yard, without the cognizance of any of the officers of the department? I do not believe it. In the yard!

190. On your premises here? I do not believe it.

191. It was stated in evidence that a number of packages, to the extent of thirty-eight, I think, were placed in this yard; that was stated by a party examined? Do you mean examined on the last inquiry?

192. Yes? When they speak of those cases being brought here, they mean properly delivered in accordance with orders for the supply of the Government.

193. Then those thirty-eight cases were in compliance with an order?—

194. Those thirty-eight cases of stationery were in compliance with an order of the Government? They were perfect packages—English packed.

195. Landed from England? Yes.

196. By the “Walter Hood”? Yes; of course there was full knowledge of that fact.

197. There was full knowledge of that fact, and this department took official possession? It was in compliance with an order.

198. In compliance with an order? Exactly.

199. This was not a case in which you would call for tenders, of course? It was a matter in which we did call for tenders, and in reference to which tenders had been formally accepted by the Government.

200. And the tender accepted was that of James Staunton? No; Staunton and Co.

201. That was the tender accepted? That was the tender accepted.

202. And what time elapsed between the acceptance of the tender and the supply of the goods? I cannot give it accurately at the present moment, but I can ascertain it.

203. If you please? (Clerk instructed to ascertain dates.)

204. Were you aware then, Mr. Buchanan, that the goods were brought here directly they were landed from the ship? I do not know whence they came. All I know was, that they were delivered in here. We do at times get them direct from the ship. McNab and others, who supply the Government, occasionally deliver to us from the ship, and occasionally from the store. We like to get goods if we can in original packages. There is an advantage in receiving them that way, because we get a good package for packing other goods in. I may add, add, with reference to that tender, that we had a pressing demand for that special paper, which was wanted for the Council printing. We had searched Sydney through, and the Melbourne market had also been searched everywhere. Every scrap of paper that could be bought for that purpose we had purchased. We took that contract too for the shortest possible time—to the 31st March only—because I anticipated that by that time our own English supplies would arrive, and they did arrive about the 24th or 25th of that month, by the "Lloyds," I think, or some ship that came in about that time. At any rate they came in before the 31st, shewing how accurately we had framed our contract. There is another circumstance which I may state. You well remember that the sittings of the House were last year unusually protracted, such as we have never before known. That circumstance alone occasioned a greater consumption of paper than had been previously known.

J. Buchanan,
Esq.
22 May, 1860.

205. Now with regard to these light-house supplies;—they were not obtained in pursuance of any tender advertised for; you purchased them from this Mr. Staunton. You must have had reason to suppose that the public service would be benefited in some way by dealing with him privately rather than by calling for tenders? I judged so from the circumstance of the price at which he offered them being lower than that at which it had been possible to obtain them before.

206. From that circumstance you thought it unnecessary to call for tenders? For that reason. I considered I was doing the best for the public service.

207. Now having purchased them you must have paid for them;—how did you pay for them? By cheque.

208. How did you remit the cheque? The accountant must answer you that question.

209. You could not answer it yourself in any way? No. I signed the cheque; but, as I said before, I have nothing to do with the transmission of cheques by post, or the handing of them direct to the individuals. I participate in neither mode at any time. In a large department like this it is clear that confidence must be reposed somewhere. With the duties that devolve upon me—a class of duties utterly beyond my office—it is quite possible to perceive that I must have some one to assist me in some branch of it.

210. Still these payments were made to a person of whose existence you knew nothing—a person at a distance,—and no tenders were called for, so that persons here, on the spot, and who might be known, might have a chance of tendering? In that individual case tenders were not called for. I say that my reason for taking these goods was that they were extremely suitable for us. Many of them were of a character which we had never before found it possible to obtain. [Memorandum in reference to paper supplied sent in by Clerk. Vide page 36.]

211. I see here 500 reams of double foolscap, 22nd December—that, I suppose, would be the date of the order? Yes, or of the tenders.

212. Now, was that tender made in pursuance of advertisement? Yes, by advertisement in the public papers, and in the Government Gazette.

213. You would be able to point out that by and bye? I think you must have those papers in your possession.

214. Then there is "different sorts of paper tendered for, at so much per pound," 11th January, 1860—that is the date of the tender, I suppose? Yes.

215. If I understand this paper aright, the 500 reams of double foolscap were tendered for on the 22nd December, 1859, and supplied on the 23rd December, 1859, and the different sorts of paper, at so much per pound, were tendered for on the 11th January, 1860, and supplied on the 16th January, 1860? Yes.

216. An individual of the name of King, too, supplied stationery, or stores of some kind? Yes.

217. Did you know anything personally of him, or some person representing him? I may state what our usual mode is when we are calling for tenders. I have already said that we adopt a sample; those samples are invariably kept in this room; I never suffer them to go out, and persons inquiring about the tenders come here to see the samples. That is the only opportunity I have of seeing individuals concerned in these contracts. Scores of persons come in here of whom I never hear a word after; they look at the samples, think they can do no business with us and go away. There are others that I do see again. It is very rare for the heads of mesentile houses to come here; they generally send their officers.

218. Then you have no knowledge of this James King? I meet these people in town frequently, but who they are or what their names are I do not know; I know that they have tendered, but that is all.

219. Are you in a position to say that you know anything of how or where this James King was paid? No; I do not know how any of them were paid.

220. Did it ever strike you that there was any resemblance in the handwriting of certain documents subscribed by Staunton and Staunton & Co., and the handwriting of any officer in your own department? No, it did not. That is a question involved at this present moment, as you well know.

221. The signatures of Staunton and Staunton & Co. appear often, but I now refer particularly to the signature of James Staunton, because in the signature of Staunton & Co. there is no attempt to disguise the fact that it is not a genuine signature; every one differs in some point from the rest, shewing that it is not a genuine signature? You are giving that as your own conviction.

222. You say you were not so struck with it? I never saw two of the signatures together to compare one with the other.

223. But still there are some of those papers—one in particular—to which the name of Staunton is subscribed, which contains a mass of writing in the upper part of it. That writing struck me as being obviously close in its resemblance to the writing of an officer in your

J. Buchanan, Esq. your department. Now, you having been in the department so long with the officer I refer to, it would be singular that the resemblance of the handwriting should not strike you? I should like to see the papers. I do not know to what papers you are referring, and until I see them I can make no observation in reference to the matter.

22 May, 1860.

224. It never struck you that the signature "Staunton," or any writing in a paper signed "Staunton," had a strong resemblance to the handwriting of any officer in your department? It never did; in fact I have no hesitation in saying that they state that I signed "Staunton."

225. I do not state that? I know this length was gone to; I know that a high officer of the Colonial Treasury—whom I have proved in this room to have been guilty of fictitious tendering—was produced to the editor of the Empire to influence him,—to say that he was satisfied that "Staunton" was my signature; that officer, mind you, I convicted in this room, by his own admission, of supplying goods under a false name to this department.

226. I put to you a simple question not involving that point at all. I think it will be well if you will confine your answer to that "Yes" or "No," and not introduce matter entirely wide of our present inquiry? I admit it is wide.

227. The question I put to you, and to which I expect your answer, was this: whether at any time it had occurred to you that there was a striking resemblance between certain writings subscribed "Staunton," and the handwriting of an officer in your department? It did not, when you say James Staunton. When you say Staunton & Co., I knew very well who was doing it in that case, because then the matter had been avowed to me openly.

228. When the tenders came from Staunton & Co.? I knew then, because the matter had been avowed to me.

229. When these tenders came from Staunton & Co., had the tenderer in question a position in this department? He had not.

230. How long had he ceased? He had left here some two months. His intention had been to have left long previously to that.

231. And what period of time elapsed from the last tender of James Staunton to the first tender of Staunton & Co.? I think ten or eleven months,—about that time.

232. It was stated by some of the witnesses examined on the former inquiry, that the call for tenders was so constructed as to deter respectable persons from tendering; the objection taken appeared to be the absence of quantity? I am very glad you have given me an opportunity of referring to that portion of the Report. If I am blameable for that, the Government throughout their entire system are blameable for it. I have already stated that three-fourths of the supplies are obtained on that system. Quantities are rarely named. The exception is to name quantities. In time contracts we never name quantities, and the great bulk of our contracts are of that character. It may, with just as good reason, be said that those contracts are called for with a view of throwing them into the hands of certain parties. I will produce the contract book of the present year, and the Board will see for themselves whether what I have stated is correct or not. These are tenders for 1860. The very first that is entered is Schedule of Tenders received in pursuance of notice for supplying ship chandlery, &c., for the public service for 1860. That is a time contract. Here are the items; the prices are named, but no quantity is given in any case. Here follows exactly the same thing with the coal contract. It is the same with the supply of oars and paddles, coopers' work, boots and shoes. No quantities are named. There is a tender for foolscap, however, and in that case a specific quantity was named—500 reams of blue wove foolscap.

233. You did not put that into a time contract because you knew you had written Home for supplies, which were expected to arrive within a certain time? Yes, and they did arrive within that time. Here is a contract for one of the Orphan Schools. The quantities are named. We use both systems as circumstances may dictate, but for the great bulk of the contracts no quantities are given. It is precisely the same with last year's contracts. It has been the practice of the department as long as I remember it, and in the case of provisions the Government never do otherwise.

234. What staff have you, Mr. Buchanan? I have four clerks, Mr. O'Connor, the same as the department was blessed with in 1838.

235. Will you state their positions? Do you mean their classification?

236. Their positions, not going into details, but generally what duties they have to perform? There is the chief clerk, who also performs the duties of accountant and paymaster; he has one to assist him. The second clerk is usually in charge of the store; we term him the store clerk. The third clerk has generally charge of the miscellaneous business. The fourth clerk enters the letters and performs any ordinary work which may require to be done.

237. It would be convenient if we had the names of the clerks? At the present moment Mr. Campbell is senior clerk, Mr. Garnett second clerk, Mr. McDonald third, and Mr. Jenkins fourth clerk.

238. We have heard occasionally in the matter of payments what you consider not to be your duty; would you now state briefly what you do consider to be your duties as Colonial Storekeeper? The general supervision of the department; and since an examiner of stores has been refused to me (not by the Government—for it has been on the Estimates three or four different times) I have felt it my duty to watch that portion of the business of the department, because on that depends the quality of the supplies and the fairness of the payments made. I have entrusted no one with that duty. But independent of that I have always looked upon it that my special duty was the general supervision of the department. I may add also that whatever correspondence there is is done by myself. That is a thing which I never entrust to any other person.

239. By Captain Scott: Are there many parties tendering who neither give address nor name? I would not say that there are many, but we have occasionally instances of it.

240. I ask that question because it was stated by Mr. Lane that there were not any, or if J. Buchanan, Esq., there were any that their tenders had been rejected? Mr. Lane is quite wrong there.

241. How would you address them if they gave no name or address? We have had them without name; in that case we cannot address them at all. It has arisen possibly from some little lapsus, but we have received them without name. The fact is on record at the Treasury. 22 May, 1860.

242. But they are not accepted? We cannot accept them without a name.

243. Because I see from the evidence of one of the clerks, that tenders were sent to the Post Office? Yes, we have the Post Office sometimes given as an address.

244. For instance—if a thousand reams of paper were received, and one hundred of them were damaged, have you any means in such cases of securing yourselves against loss? We should not accept the hundred reams that were damaged.

245. But supposing you did not find it out until after payment was made? Such a thing could not occur. Something would be shewn on the case itself if they came in original packages; and if they came in loose reams, we should detect those which were damaged at a glance of the eye.

246. But you have no means of recovering loss in case it should occur. Do you not think it would be of advantage to the Government if an obligation were entered into by the contractor to pay for damaged goods? Damaged goods have no right to be taken by the public service.

247. But supposing they were overlooked? They ought not to be overlooked;—we have never had an instance.

248. Would it not also be an improvement in the public service if contractors were paid in the office? Do you mean if they were obliged to attend personally?

249. Or by a recognised agent? Well, I do not know; I think mercantile men would object to it.

250. I ask the question because it has been proved by former evidence that large sums of money—cheques uncrossed—were sent by messengers, without any protection to the public service. A messenger with a cheque of four or five hundred pounds might put it into his own pocket instead of taking it to the contractor? I may have missed that evidence, but I was under the impression that cheques were always crossed when they were sent by a messenger.

251. Cheques to a large extent were sent uncrossed, with the signature of Mr. Weston witnessing the receipt? I was not aware of that.

252. If a contractor, having accepted a time contract, refused to carry it out at the rate agreed upon, have you any means of redress? We take bonds in cases of time contracts.

253. Why was no entry made in the letter or contract book of the acceptance of the Melbourne contract? It is entered in the contract book. It was exhibited to the Board. [Entry referred to.]

254. I think it was explained why Staunton's contract was taken at one shilling and two-pence per pound, while Kenny's was only eightpence halfpenny? Why, it was taken at one shilling. The value of paper is determined by its weight. The price is at per pound, but that price will, of course, again depend upon the quality—the nature of the rag of which paper is made, &c.

255. I suppose you examine the books regularly? Oh! yes, and I watch the issues too. As far as money is concerned, we have accounted regularly every month with the Audit Office. If there were aught going on wrong there our tether would soon be shortened, we should be pulled up at once by the Auditor General; and I am bound to say this, he always managed to keep his accounts square without any difficulty.

256. By the Chairman: I should be glad if you would state for what objects you imagine the Government instituted your department? For the supervision of stores required for the public service; specially for that purpose, and to take charge of such stores as it confides to its care. That is the express purpose for which it was instituted, as laid down in Sir Richard Bourke's Minute.

257. And, with reference to a former question of mine, you expressed your belief that that object can be best attained by the maintenance of this store? The Government must maintain a store of some character; the question is, whether it would not be better for them at once to maintain it in a state of efficiency, in which it has never yet been. The fluctuations to which this department has been subject have been such as must almost necessarily ruin, disorganise, and destroy any department.

258. Do you believe that the system now in operation in this store will be found the best for securing to the public service the benefits contemplated in the institution of your department? The system now in operation?

259. Yes? By no means. I have no hesitation in saying so. I have repeatedly expressed my opinion.

260. The system requires change? It requires amendment—considerable amendment; but that amendment can never be effected without an extension of means.

261. Would the amendment you contemplate involve a large expenditure? Greater than I have ever found the Government likely to wish to incur. I can recommend no better system than that which the experience of ages has proved—that is, the system of the Ordnance. I can recommend no improvement upon that.

262. But you would recommend the adoption of a system analogous to that? Yes—based upon that. It must be borne in mind, that there is a considerable distinction between this department and that of an ordinary store department in the Ordnance service. There, all the goods that come to them have been passed from the depôts at home. They receive little or nothing from the contractors. That work has all to be done here. This department, in a very small

J. Buchanan, Esq., small way of course, resembles those immense depôts at Woolwich and the Tower, and Weeden, rather than the small outstations, because we have functions analogous to those exercised at all those places to perform. [The Board here inspected the account books of the department.]

22 May, 1860.

263. Having inspected your books of receipt and issue, we do not find that you have anywhere a book shewing your "remains?" There is no book that would shew that. The only book that would do that is the store ledger proper,—a book that has never been kept in this department, nor is it possible to be kept in a department where they are compelled by the Government to mix up values with quantities.

264. The proper system for keeping an account of stores, I take it, is one which would shew in columns whole packages as whole packages, and broken packages as broken packages—shewing in detail the contents of such broken packages. According to this system you would set out all your receipts and all your issues, and at the foot of the columns would be shewn all your "remains"—in point of fact, after the system of the Ordnance? I see no improvement which can be made upon the Ordnance system. That system has not been in force here. Not only has it not been in force, but it was specially condemned by Mr. Donaldson, who thought it unnecessary when on a Committee of inquiry here.

265. In such a system quantities alone should appear; values and quantities cannot consistently appear simultaneously in such a system? They cannot. I do not see any possible way in which they can be introduced, without unnecessarily complicating the account.

266. By a separate and distinct book, in which different values of things should be set out—if you have three, or four, or five values for the same thing, you might strike an average value, which would answer all the purpose? Yes, which would answer all the purposes. That would serve for the purpose of valuing the stock at any time, but it could be of no other service than I see.

267. Then if you desired to check the public departments, and see that they obtained from you no more than their vote, this system of average might be applied? Yes.

268. And without introducing it at all in your store book, the check might be effectively used? Yes. If it be necessary to do it at all it should be done as a perfect and settled system. It should be known that an account of values was to be kept, though kept separate from the account of quantities.

269. You do not think, then, that any better system can be adopted here than that in use by the Ordnance? That has ever been my opinion. I have previously expressed it before a Committee of the House, and I do not shrink from it now. Every day's experience only confirms me in it.

270. That system would involve labor, but is very simple? It would involve labor and attention, but it is simple and clear.

271. And would enable you at any time to ascertain the quantity of stores you have on hand? At any time, provided there were also sufficient accommodation afforded me to classify the stores in my possession.

272. With such a system you could take stock periodically, which is now impossible? I could with such a system take stock periodically, and test the accuracy of the book entries by positive inspection of the stock itself, in the same way that a merchant tests the accuracy of his books by counting his cash.

273. Now, as the system is simple, and merely laborious, it would not require any very large addition to the clerical staff of the department? The keeping of a store ledger would occupy one clerk alone in this department. If he did the work well, it would fully occupy his time. In addition to that there would be the preparation of vouchers of receipt and vouchers of issue, from which the postings must be made. The very lowest number would be two additional clerks. I think I am putting it too low in saying that two clerks of issue only would be required.

274. But as it would be a change in your present system it would produce a change in the duties of your present officers? I do not think it would make much difference. I do not say that no portion of the present system would be abolished, but it appears to me that it would be rather an addition than the adoption of a more improved system—merely correcting defects which exist at the present moment.

275. In fact it would enable you to give some result to the system already in operation? That is, in a few brief words, what the effect would be. We have the material existing at this present time for the system, but we cannot carry it to a result because we have not the means.

276. You have two out of three conditions, and you want a third, which would be the adoption of this plan? Yes.

277. You think it would require at least two in addition to your present staff? At least two clerks; we derive stores from so many places, and in each case there must be a voucher prepared. We could not receive a quire of paper into the store without a voucher and a signature.

278. With that system you could check the whole of the departments, and you yourself could be effectually checked? No doubt, under that system; and without it I have no hesitation in saying that nobody can keep a check over this department.

MONDAY, 4 JUNE, 1860.

Present:—

R. O'CONNOR, Esq., IN THE CHAIR.

CAPTAIN SCOTT,

CAPTAIN OLIVEY.

John Buchanan, Esq., called in and further examined:—

1. By the Chairman: On looking over the evidence you gave at the last meeting, I find J. Buchanan, Esq. that a few additional questions are necessary to complete it.
2. The payments of your department during the last twelve months amount to about £34,000, including salaries? Yes.
3. What is the amount voted for 1860, for salaries and contingencies for your department? The amount voted for the services and contingencies of this department, for the present year, is £3,965.
4. Can you state the value of the stores on hand at this moment, or generally? The actual value of the stores on hand at this present moment I should estimate at £90,000. That is, of course, not their exact value, but I think it is not far from the truth.
5. Are those stores actually paid for at this moment? A vote of £25 000 has been taken during the present Session; and when that sum has been handed over to the Imperial Government, the whole will have been paid for.
6. As a general rule, I suppose we may take it for granted that all the stores in your keeping are paid for? As a general rule.
7. What should you imagine to be the amount of loss in the year, from damaged or unserviceable goods—there must be something of that kind? It is very trifling indeed. All stores that have to remain in the dépôt for any length of time must be subject to deterioration. The positive loss is not great; and in an establishment of this kind, where patterns are apt to vary, I think loss is more likely to arise from that circumstance than any other.
8. If you find goods—either from the length of time they have been in the store, or from any other circumstance—so far deteriorated as to be actually unserviceable, how do you dispose of them? They are brought forward for survey, and sold.
9. And the proceeds, of course, go into the Treasury? Yes, but they are very trifling.
10. Can you state the amount of stores purchased annually at Home and in the Colony, distinguishing the amounts? During the year 1859 the amount purchased at Home was £13,970, and the amount purchased in the Colony was £25,263.
11. Is there any difference between the cost of stores imported direct from England and the cost of stores purchased on the spot? There is no question about that. It is clear that by importing stores from England, the importer's profit must be saved. But there is no possibility that I see, of instituting a fair comparison between the stores purchased in England and the stores purchased in the Colony, inasmuch as the quality, the character and the make of the goods, and many other things, tend to create a difference which cannot be estimated in the money amount. They are not, in fact, the same articles, though they may bear the same name. They differ in quality, and in many other essential particulars. I can only repeat that it is obvious that by importing from England the importer's profits are saved to the Colony. I may as well draw attention to the fact that for many years this was our practice; in fact, importation of stores from England was first suggested by me. But we had then the benefit of the Imperial Departments, to whom we resorted in order to obtain supplies. We had the benefit of their large establishments, of their enormous contracts, and of their examiners; but all that has been stripped away from us under the new system of importing through a commercial agent, and we now have to depend upon one man's judgment in England, and he really and truly exercises no judgment at all. He purchases articles which he never sees and has them packed and sent to this Colony, trusting entirely to the integrity and name of the house with which he deals. In many cases I admit that there is an advantage in that system, but as a rule the practice with the Government is that competition shall exist in reference to all those things. Here it is rigidly exacted; but there, where the bulk of the stores are supplied, they trust all to one man uncontrolled by any one. The step was taken at the time when Mr. Donaldson was Colonial Treasurer. The idea was that a mercantile man would have a notion of what were the natures of Government stores; but there is nothing more fallacious. Government stores differ so materially from other goods that mercantile men have no conception of them. I may state to the Board that since that time, owing to what I am aware was the trouble occasioned at the War Office and the Admiralty by our Colonial Agency, they have sent out despatches from Home, stating that unless we accepted the exact articles that are in use for the Army and the British services at Home they can no longer purchase for us.
12. Had the change which previously took place—that is, the transferring the selection of these things from the Imperial Government to the Colonial Agent at Home—anything to do, think you, with the production of this despatch;—I mean to say has the time arrived when the Imperial Government would have withdrawn from us in any case this assistance which we formerly received? I do not. I can, of course, only give an opinion upon this point; but I know something of what has been going on behind the scenes at the War Office and at the Admiralty in reference to these matters. There is no official record to the effect that it was the trouble which caused them to decline; but the fact of their having declined is patent, and the exact reason for it, I, of course, can only state from private information I have obtained.
13. But, in fact, we had ceased to require their assistance before they said they could no longer

4 June, 1860.

J. Buchanan, Esq. longer assist us? We always had a Colonial Agent, Mr. Barnard. He invariably went to the British Departments. I am speaking exclusively of the stores imported for the service of this department.

4 June, 1860.

14. I am speaking exclusively of that? In fact, in the demands sent Home by me we used to indicate the sources from which they were to be obtained, and Mr. Barnard there obtained them. In many cases they were objected to, but still I think that very uniformity of pattern, and the advantage of having the goods tested by their examiners in England, were sufficient to counter-balance those objections.

15. But, as a matter of opinion, it seems that in any case, at this period at all events, we should have lost that assistance we had previously received from the Imperial Government? I do not for a moment anticipate we should have lost it.

16. And you think the change is in consequence of our having, in the first instance, departed from their patterns? That is my idea. The introduction of new patterns gives additional trouble.

17. They would not accept our patterns of course? We must accept what they have.

18. Now from your long experience of the wants of the service, ought you not to be able so to anticipate demands that the purchases in the Colony should be very small indeed? It could be done to a very great extent. It is entirely impossible, with the vast variety of stores we have, that everything can be anticipated, but the great bulk of the stores can be. But that again must be dependent upon the amount of space and accommodation I have, to receive those stores, when they arrive.

19. But to what extent do you think you do anticipate the wants of the service so as to prevent the purchases in the country being large? I feel unable to give any definite proportion.

20. You have stated generally, that the difference between the cost of stores purchased in England and the cost of stores purchased in the Colony, is the profit of the importer? That would be the difference. The Government importing for itself has been a matter of very gradual growth. It commenced with stationery, extended itself to clothing when the British Establishments were broken up, and embraced police clothing and appointments as the commencement of an attempt to reduce the constabulary to order and uniformity. These three divisions comprehend a large proportion of the imports, and no reliable data exist for a comparison between the cost of such items here and in the Mother Country.

21. But the amount expended in the purchase of stores at Home and in the Colony is about £39,000? Yes.

22. And as £25,263 of that have been expended in the purchase of stores in the Colony, the extent to which you anticipate your wants by ordering supplies from England, is about one-third of the entire supply? It would appear so from these figures; but it would be delusive to take that as correct, because stores are imported by other services, without my intervention at all. Although they eventually come to this department they are imported direct by other departments. The demands are sent through the Treasury without any intimation to me, consequently I am in the dark as to how I should provide in many cases.

23. But in those cases where the intervention of this department is not sought, and of course is not considered necessary, the fact of the expenditure would not be touched,—we are dealing with matters that come directly under it? Yes; and of the £25,000 expended in the Colony it must be recollected that a large proportion is required for services for which this department cannot provide. It merely provides for them when set in motion by those departments. I do not feel bound otherwise to provide for them, inasmuch as I do not know their wants. I may take for instance the Engineer for Harbor Improvements;—that officer obtains large votes from the Government to carry on certain works; but he occasionally seeks the aid of this department to supply him with stores. It would be impossible for me to anticipate what his wants would be in any year.

24. He is a new officer,—his department is a new department, and the difficulty would therefore be of recent date? Yes, but his case would also be the case of others. We are occasionally called upon by the Colonial Architect.

25. Then of this £25,000, what proportion do you think you might have anticipated? I could probably anticipate one-half if we had room to receive the goods.

26. If you had room to receive them? Yes; but inasmuch as this store is that with which the Government started twenty-three or twenty-four years ago, it is impossible to get everything from England.

27. Then the extent to which you can anticipate supplies required in the Colony by ordering them from Home is regulated to a considerable extent by the consideration of the space you have for the goods? To a considerable extent by a consideration of the space I have for the goods and the means that I have to attend to them, and by the trouble that attends the keeping of the accounts.

28. Has the system of keeping accounts been very much complicated by any changes which have taken place in the Audit Department lately? Exceedingly complicated. If the Audit Department proceeded from year to year upon a settled system one might adapt one-self to it; but the fact is, it is in a state of constant fluctuation.

29. That is to say, after having kept your accounts in a certain mode and carried items to certain accounts for a particular period, you are suddenly called upon to keep your accounts in a different form, and to carry those items to a different account for another period? Yes; at one time I was called upon to receive payment for stores issued from this department, and notwithstanding my protest against that responsibility being cast upon me it was persisted in. Like a shopkeeper, I had to call upon the various departments to hand over to me the money value of the stores they drew, and I had to account. At each step too a voucher was involved, greatly increasing the number of accounts and throwing a responsibility upon my

my shoulders which I protested against being saddled with. That I fortunately got rid of by inducing the Government to take a general vote for stores and that was the origin of the general vote instead of the distributed vote. When the Government were induced to take that step, I included in the general vote as many services as I could, and the consequence was, I was no longer called upon to obtain repayment from those departments for the stores received from this.

J. Buchanan,
Esq.
4 June, 1860.

30. The circumstance that you keep no money values would in itself I suppose be almost an insuperable obstacle to your complying with any such request with any amount of accuracy? But we do keep money values, and in that lies the intricacy of the accounts as well as the trouble attending them. In fact the system of the department—so far as it may be termed a system—is based upon accounting by money values.

31. However, you have got rid of that now? Only partially. So far as the departments borne upon the general vote are concerned we no longer recover; but so far as other departments not borne on the general vote are concerned, we must still recover.

32. Has the Audit Office been satisfied with the current accounts you have rendered, or have you had any demands to reproduce your accounts over any particular periods? I have never had a demand to reproduce my accounts over any period. No such demand has ever been urged.

33. Perhaps you may have misunderstood the question. Are you not now called upon to make up a list of the expenditure, in detail, showing contingencies, since the establishment of Responsible Government? Such a return may have been applied for since this inquiry commenced; but, as at this present moment I am not acting as head of the department, I have no personal knowledge of it.

34. Do the weapons you have in store consist chiefly of small arms, or have you any large supply of heavy ordnance? We have but one piece of heavy ordnance in store; we have field pieces, but of course the great bulk of the articles are small arms. I may also state that the armaments upon the batteries are a portion of the stores of this department.

35. They are a portion of the Colonial stores under a different charge? Yes.

36. Do you supply the gaols with prison clothing or only Cockatoo Island; or, what other penal establishments? The whole of the establishments throughout the country.

37. The whole of the penal establishments? All the penal establishments throughout the Colony. Prison clothing is also supplied by the Government at the gaols.

38. And Cockatoo Island? And Cockatoo Island.

39. Is there any other penal establishment? None other than those.

40. Cockatoo Island and the gaols would include the whole penal establishments of the Colony? Yes.

41. Now, in the absence of any care in reference to the identity of tenderers, might not any officer of your department, from a knowledge of circumstances which could not be known to bona fide tradesmen and tenderers, secure to himself a monopoly to the extent of his means and credit? I do not see that he could secure a monopoly, because the tenders are invariably advertised in the Government Gazette, and in the newspapers, invariably.

42. Still one cannot help feeling that a person in the very heart of your own official confidence might obtain many advantages over an outsider? That is undeniable, but I do not see what is to prevent it; and how am I to prevent any clerk in my department communicating those advantages to any person out of doors? I do not see by what possibility it can be prevented. The advantage which a person in that position has, appears to me to be this: his knowledge of the exact times when we may require certain goods; but, so far as any other advantage is concerned, under the system which the Government adopt of advertising in the Government Gazette and in the newspapers, and accepting the lowest tender, I do not see what advantage he has over others.

43. Now directly in connection with that question, we come back to a few questions in reference to those cases by the "Walter Hood." But, in the first place, it would be desirable to ascertain the exact date when the former chief clerk left the department? He left on the 30th November, 1859.

44. When were the cases by the "Walter Hood" received here (we do not enter upon the discussion as to whether they were by the "Walter Hood" or not, but take it for granted for the present)? The first was received on the 24th January, 1860. Previously to that, there had been contracts for the same description of paper, called for and accepted in the Colony; but this by the "Walter Hood" arrived at the date I mention.

45. Were those cases marked "Staunton and Co.," or "Staunton"? They were marked neither. I may give the mark they bore; probably——

46. Yes? The mark they bore was, in accordance with mercantile practice, not a name, but J. S. in a triangle.

47. When were the tenders called for? Shortly previous to the 24th January—possibly a week or ten days prior to that date.

48. When was Staunton's or Staunton and Co's. tender accepted for that particular quantity? In the middle of January, 1860.

49. When were the packages or any portion of them issued from this department? Instantly.

50. And when did you receive your next supply from Home? A few days previous to the end of March, 1860.

51. Is there any possibility of ascertaining the quantity of that particular description of paper then actually in store, and the quantity that was immediately expected from England? I may state that it was all one kind of paper, and that there was at that moment not a single ream of that kind of paper in store. We purchased every sheet of that paper from everybody in town, where it was possible to purchase it in Sydney. The reason why our stock of that kind of paper ran short was that the Session of Parliament extended over nearly twelve months

J. Buchanan, months instead of six months. I may also state that supplies of that particular paper were expected to arrive here by the beginning of April. That contract of Staunton's referred to was a time contract taken up to the end of March, and a few days before the termination of that period the supplies anticipated actually arrived—I think by the "Lloyds." A further supply was received by the "George Marshall," which came in subsequently, and is now lying alongside the Quay.

4 June, 1860.

52. The signature "James Staunton" must have come under your observation occasionally? Yes; occasionally it came under my observation during the time the tenders were opened at the Treasury.

53. And, of course, as often as he tendered it came under your observation? Yes, with a mass of other papers. I may state that up to this present moment I have had no opportunities of comparing these signatures in any way. I have seen them singly, but I have never seen them yet together—that is, any number of them together.

54. I thought that the tenders after being done with were lodged with you here? After they are approved of at the Treasury they are lodged here, or rather with the chief clerk. I think in my previous examination I described the system under which tenders are opened.

55. Do you not think there is such an amount of difference in the several signatures of "Staunton" as ought to have created suspicion in the mind of an ordinarily observant officer at the head of this department? I never saw them except singly, and up to the present moment I have never had an opportunity of comparing one with another.

56. Though they would be all returned to this department, and all be actually here together, yet they would be in the charge of the chief clerk? I received them from the Treasury myself, and handed them to him in the usual course to act upon; but the comparison of one signature with another was a thing I never instituted.

APPENDIX.

Sydney, 26 June, 1860.

Sir,

I beg permission to enclose to you the papers below mentioned, and to request you will favor me by submitting them to the Board, and permitting them to be annexed as appendices to my evidence.

1. Letter dated June, 1855, addressed to Mr. Secretary Riddell, proposing the transfer of certain duties of the Store Department to the Inspector General of Police, the Sheriff, and the Deputy Ordnance Storekeeper, with a view to the diminishing of the annual charge for the department, and the dispensing with the services of the Colonial Storekeeper; also, the reply of the then Inspector General of Police (Capt. Mayne) deprecating this alteration as far as he was concerned.

2. Blank cover report, dated 18th March, 1859, relative to consolidation of votes for stationery, stores, &c.

3. Blank cover report, 11th April, 1859, on the question of expense involved in the purchase of stores in the Colony, as compared with importation direct from England.

4. Blank cover report, 22nd August, 1859, on Messrs. Sands and Kenny's proposal that the supplies of stationery for the Government be procured in the Colony.

I have, &c.,

JNO. BUCHANAN.

R. O'Connor, Esq.,
Chairman, Board of Inquiry,
Storekeeper's Department.

*Colonial Storekeeper's Office,
Sydney, — June, 1855.*

Sir,

I have had the honor to receive your letter, No. 100, of the 14th ultimo, calling for a report upon the working of my department, with any suggestion by which the same may be simplified, either by transference of a portion of the duty to other offices, or by any alteration of system that may be expedient.

2. In reply, I beg leave to submit for His Excellency's consideration the following changes, the tendency of which would certainly be considerably to lessen its business, and thus avoid, in the only feasible way, the dissatisfaction and complaints that are every year expressed in Council at the growth of the office.

3. It will be unnecessary for me to recapitulate the numerous objections urged against the annual vote for its maintenance, the attempt to demonstrate its utter inutility, or the circumstance that for many years it owed its existence almost solely to the influence of your predecessor, and to the pledges he so frequently and unhesitatingly gave of its being essential to the convenience of the Government. These, Sir, are facts with which you are acquainted, and, with your permission, I will leave them to be explained to His Excellency by yourself. I proceed, therefore, at once to name the alterations I conceive it would be advisable to effect:—

1. That the clothing and other stores for the entire Police Force of the Colony, be placed in charge of, and issued under the direct orders of, the Inspector General of Police. The check which it may be presumed this department affords upon the expenditure for this service in reality exists only in name. A power of that kind can only be used beneficially by some one possessing an intimate acquaintance with the details of the several branches of that service; and as the principle of centralization was avowedly had in view in the appointment of an Inspector General of Police, the transference to his care of everything relating to the arming, clothing, and equipping of the Force under his orders, would seem a natural though tardy investiture with functions that from the first should have pertained exclusively to him.

2. That the arrangements requisite for providing and issuing the clothing and other supplies J. Buchanan, Esq. needed by prisoners confined in the gaols, and at the penal establishments, be placed under the Sheriff's supervision.

This alteration might facilitate any measure that may be pending as regards the employment of parties serving sentences of imprisonment. Prison clothing is now furnished ready for immediate wear, and every other article also in a state for instant use. 4 June, 1860.

The embarrassment attendant on the possession of surplus labor at the Gaol, employment for which can be but rarely had, might perhaps be diminished were it engaged in the making of the clothing and any other stores of easy manufacture, as well for prisoners employed on the public works as for gaol use.

3. That the mining and trading licenses for the Gold Fields be issued to the respective Commissioners, from either the Colonial Treasurer's or the Audit Office. As a check upon the revenue collected by those officers, a monthly return is given of the blank licenses furnished to them. This check would be more perfect and complete, were it imperative on the Commissioners to obtain their licenses from that department to which they have to account for their collections.

Every information on the subject would then be centred in the office most immediately concerned, and be at hand for instant reference. From the present system no advantage arises except relief from the responsibility and work (now dwindled to small proportions) that attend the counting, recording, and transmission of the blank forms monthly.

4. That the Postage Stamp Books imported for the Inspector of Stamps be placed in the Postmaster General's custody, and issued by him from time to time under the same regulations as have been laid down for my guidance. As in the case of the Gold Licenses, the Stamp Books are not accounted for or dealt with in the way that ordinary stores would be. Both are treated as special items, and subject to exceptional rules; and it being deemed inexpedient to leave in the Inspector's hands a power of unlimited creation of stamps, the peculiar paper used in their manufacture can only be had from this department.

Of the issues so made record is kept, and the Auditor General acquainted therewith. I conceive, however, that the check might be as effectually exercised by the Postmaster General as by myself, and perhaps more conveniently. The objection that the control would be merely departmental and not an independent one, cannot be urged, as the Stamp Department, so far from being an integral branch of the Post Office, is virtually a separate department, though transacting business in the same building.

5. That the coals for the departments located in Sydney be provided under an annual contract, to be made through the medium of the Audit Office, in like manner as it arranges for every other Commissariat supply, and for fuel itself, in every district except Sydney.

During the continuance of the Australian Agricultural Company's monopoly, it was not expedient that the matter should be subject to the usual rule; but every reason to treat it as an exception was removed when the Company's privileges were abolished.

6. That the Orderlies attached to the Commissioners beyond the settled districts be granted a money allowance in lieu of the bedding, clothing, and barrack utensils now furnished them at the public expense in kind.

While the Commissioners were specially charged with the peace and good order of their respective districts, and a comparatively strong body of Border Police, almost wholly composed of convicts, was maintained under their direction, it was essential that their supplies should be provided by the Government. There are few districts now in which the employment of more than two men is sanctioned; but the trouble arising out of the issues for this small number would be but little greater were fifty allowed; and as the effectual discharge of the Commissioners' duties may no longer demand that the most trivial wants of their men should be looked after by a Government department, the substitution of a money payment would be a relief, and not operate disadvantageously to the service.

1. As a considerable reduction of duty would ensue were effect given to those changes, a reduction to the extent of one-half might, under such circumstances, be made in the clerical establishment of my office, and a diminution also, though not of like extent, in the expenditure of the same branch.

5. The only additional suggestion I have to offer is one that immediately concerns myself. It has long been apparent to me, that my department, and the closely analogous one of the Deputy Ordnance Storekeeper, each possesses certain facilities and appliances for the conduct of its separate duties, of which the other is devoid; and that, were both departments placed under one head, the united duties, in many instances, might be more efficiently and economically discharged.

It could not be expected that the British Government would consent to a Colonial officer's being entrusted with those duties that it may be anticipated will always remain exclusively Imperial. My removal from office is, therefore, what I have accustomed myself to regard as the certain effect of any conjunction of this kind. The idea is not a novel one, it being merely the revival of the system actually in existence from 1839 till 1845, the Ordnance Storekeeper of that period having been the incumbent of both offices.

To one palpable advantage I would draw particular attention. While the Colonial Government has been compelled to pay large sums for the rental of hired warehouses in divers parts of the city, extensive and commodious storehouses, under the custody of the Ordnance, have been lying vacant, or but very partially occupied, the use of which the Colony has been refused, I believe, but is called on, nevertheless, to defray the cost of the repairs and maintenance in good order; the objection which exists to the occupancy of any part of these buildings by this department might not, perhaps, have the same weight were an officer subject to the Ordnance authorities at its head. A saving of the vote for £6,000, taken last Session for the erection of a new Colonial Store, would result from the adoption of this arrangement, the practicability of which, for this reason alone, appears to me worthy of consideration.

In conclusion, I beg to annex a statement exhibiting the cost of this department as compared with a sufficiently strong establishment for conducting the amalgamated duties, under the modifications suggested in this letter.

I have, &c.,

JNO. BUCHANAN.

(No. 162.)

*Colonial Secretary's Office,
Sydney, 21 August, 1855.*

Sir,

With reference to the 3rd paragraph of your letter of the — June last, No. 65, suggesting that the clothing and other stores for the entire Police Force of the Colony be placed in charge of, and issued under the direct orders of the Inspector General of Police, I am directed by the Governor General to transmit to you the enclosed copy of the report which has been received from that officer on that subject, and to inform you that His Excellency agrees with the opinion expressed by the Inspector General of Police on the subject.

I have, &c.,
(for the Colonial Secretary,)
W. ELYARD.

The Colonial Storekeeper.

[Enclosure.]

*Office of Inspector General of Police,
Sydney, 26 June, 1855.*

Sir,

In reply to your letter of yesterday, No. 55-193, calling for my report on the suggestion made by the Colonial Storekeeper, that the clothing, and other stores, for the entire Police Force of the Colony, be placed in my charge, and issued under my direct orders, I do myself the honor to state, for the information of His Excellency the Governor General, that while I have not the slightest objection to such charge and duty being devolved on me, doing so will involve the necessity of having a storekeeper and store attached to the department, and if not increasing, will not, I conceive, in the slightest degree reduce expenditure.

2. The duties of storekeeper and packer might be discharged by an intelligent man, borne on the strength of the Sydney Police as a sergeant; but so long as a Colonial Storekeeper's Department is maintained for purposes other than police (and I do not think it can, without detriment to the public service, be dispensed with), I consider that the receipt, issue, and transport of police clothing and stores can be best and, as regards space, time, labor, and expense, most economically conducted by that department.

3. There must always be, as a part of police stores, a considerable quantity of ammunition, which it would be highly unsafe to keep in any building suitable for this office, and which if lodged in the Magazine would be so remote from the store for other police supplies, as to involve loss of time and labor in removing it to pack with other issues.

I have, &c.,
W. C. MAYNE,
Inspector General of Police.

The Honorable The Colonial Secretary.

(No. 177.)

*Colonial Secretary's Office,
Sydney, 7 September, 1855.*

Sir,

With reference to the paragraph of your letter of the — June last, in which you suggest that the orderlies attached to the Commissioners of Crown Lands beyond the Settled Districts should receive a money allowance in lieu of clothing, bedding, and barrack utensils now furnished to them in kind, I am directed by His Excellency the Governor General to transmit to you a copy of a letter from the Chief Commissioner of Crown Lands on the subject, and to state that that officer's objections to the course recommended by you, are too strong to admit of refutation.

I have, &c.,
(for the Colonial Secretary,)
W. ELYARD.

The Colonial Storekeeper.

Crown Lands Office,
Sydney, 23 August, 1855.J. Buchanan,
Esq.

4 June, 1860.

Sir,

Referring to your letter of the 21st instant, requiring the report called for by your letter of the 25th June last, No. 259, on the subject of a suggestion of the Colonial Storekeeper that the orderlies attached to the Commissioners beyond the Settled Districts should receive a money allowance in lieu of clothing, I have the honor to state that the delay in transmitting my report has been occasioned by the necessity for referring the subject to the District Commissioners; the majority of the reports have now been received, and I am enabled to state that strong objections exist to an acquiescence with the proposal of the Storekeeper.

1st.—The utter impossibility of obtaining clothing by purchase in a large portion of the Districts cannot be doubted.

2nd.—The necessity for the orderlies appearing in uniform seems to be unquestionable.

3rd.—If supplied with money in lieu of clothing it would become the interest of the orderlies to spend as little of the allowance as possible, which would lead to a disgraceful appearance, and tend to destroy the discipline, which it is most desirable to keep up.

Under other considerations also, I cannot recommend the propositions of the Colonial Storekeeper; but I do not see why the clothing and stores required should not form one issue annually in place of two, and on a reference to the Colonial Storekeeper that gentlemen states (see herewith) that next to a money allowance such a course would be the best to pursue, and that the 1st of December would be the most convenient time to be fixed for the issue of the clothing and stores of every description; I see no objection to this arrangement.

I have, &c.,

GEO. BARNEY,
Chief Commissioner of Crown Lands.The Honorable
The Colonial Secretary.B. C. Report relative to Vote taken in Bulk for Stationery, Stores, &c.

THE consolidation in one vote of the numerous petty sums formerly taken up to cover the cost of stationery and stores, was proposed with the express object of reducing work, and I feel confident will secure it, as well for the Treasury and Audit Offices as for this department, instead of adding to the labor of any of them.

Though the plan has neither the merit of originality, nor was suggested as a new discovery, it has the important recommendation of being what experience elsewhere has proved to be the most efficient and satisfactory system of providing for similar charges.

In all possible cases, the Imperial Government strive by consolidating votes to prevent unnecessary and troublesome complications in their accounts. In an especial degree has this been their method of securing some uniform and settled mode of surveillance over the disbursements for stationery, stores, transport, provisions, and forage. Since the introduction of the revised system of framing the British Estimates, no other method than that of taking votes in globo for each of these heads of service, has been allowed, and I have never heard anything to occasion doubt as to its working smoothly and efficiently. By such consolidation the control and payment of the expenditure are vested in the hands of settled and unchanging departments, and one well-known result has been to relieve the public orator of every difficulty and delay in obtaining discharge of his just claims.

With in my own hearing sufferers have cited this promptitude as carried out in this Colony, as an exemplar, after experience of the uncertainty and discomfort which pursuit (sometimes it has been said proving even vain) of trivial claims from the door of one public department to that of another.

I cannot see either the necessity of splitting the gross vote of £37,300 into the fragments taken up for 1858, or its possibility. Such division would certainly involve application for supplementary appropriations.

1st. For services that this year exceeds the estimate of 1858.

2nd. For those new ones not existing in that year, while I hope to be able, if the vote be left intact, to make it sufficient for all, and avoid going again to Parliament.

Moreover, I conceive, while this vote is kept in one sum, it might be properly made the source out of which should be defrayed the remittances to the Commercial Agent—an advantage that would be lost by subdividing it.

I beg, therefore, to submit that the plan initiated in the taking of an aggregate vote be allowed fair trial: even though it conflict with the system of securing to each department in a cumbrous way, a knowledge of its own expenditure, by constituting it its own paymaster. And that this department be not stripped of responsibility for this vote, in order to fritter it away and confer it in a hundred diverse directions.

B. C. Report as to Comparative Expense of procuring Stores in the Colony or from England.

SEVERAL circumstances tend to prevent the preparation of such a Return as would give, at a glance, a comparative view of the difference in purchase money, between stores bought in the Colony and imported from England, without being delusive and calculated to mislead.

Purchases are seldom made under the two systems, on like conditions; the quality of material, character of manufacture and pattern even of articles bearing the same designation, usually differ in points having an important bearing upon the price; and as it is essential to the drawing of a fair opinion from figures alone, that these elements should be the same, no comparison worthy of consideration can be embodied in a Return.

Moreover the general practice is, not to buy in the Colony stores of the same nature as are usually procured from England. Departure from this rule occurs at times when stock runs short; and it is then generally found necessary to alter the patterns to suit what the Colony can provide.

The Government importing for itself has been a matter of very gradual growth. It commenced with stationery—extended itself to convict clothing, when the British establishments were broken up—and embraced police clothing and appointments, as the commencement of an attempt to reduce the constabulary to order and uniformity. These three divisions comprehended a large proportion of the imports, and no reliable data exist for a comparison between the cost of such items here and in the Mother Country, inasmuch as no continuous or definite effort has yet been made to enlist mercantile enterprise in their introduction.

My opinion is that a defence of the Government continuing to act as its own importer, instead of suffering its wants to be supplied by the trade of the country, should be based on the intelligible reason that importers' charges and profits are thereby saved. The truth of this presumption appears to me unquestionable; but I must admit its force has been weakened by the old practice of confining purchases to the great public departments in England, whose rule it is, and of which we had the advantage to subject such matters to the test of competition, followed by competent inspection—being now departed from.

Under Mr. Donaldson's plan, everything depends on the judgment and decision of a single individual—an anomaly rendered the more striking by the Government's enforcing, and daily extending, the principle of leaving nothing discretionary to their own officers, who are under immediate observation, while in transactions of infinitely greater moment, conducted at a distance, no means of supervision are provided.

The Secretary to the Treasury.

JOHN BUCHANAN.

B.C.—11 April, 1859.

B. C. Report on proposal of Messrs. Sands & Kenny, that the Government procure such Stationery, &c., as is requisite by Tenders in the Colony. Dated 5 January, 1859.

Though the English regulations respecting stationery issues had been in most particulars tacitly adopted in this Colony several years previously, it was so recently only as 1852, that express orders were given me from the Colonial Secretary's Department to confine my demands on England for this supply to such qualities as were approved by the Home Government throughout the British Services, and were enumerated in a printed list sent me for my guidance.

Since that period, therefore, purchases have been wholly confined to the Stationery Office, London, a department controlled by Mr. John Ramsay McCulloch, whose improvements and changes, all tending towards a reduction of an enormous expenditure for stationery and printing, have met with repeated and strong encomiums from Committees of the House of Commons.

So long as the Stationery Office standards of pattern and quality continued to be adhered to, I feared neither economy nor improvement in quality would be likely to attend purchases made through any other medium. The high intelligence, energy, and extensive commercial knowledge of the chief of that department, the great facilities that the large expenditure he supervises (exceeding £500,000 annually) affords him, and the efficient aid and appliances for a rigid inspection placed at his command, all forbade me feeling any hope of deriving advantage by taking the comparatively trifling supplies needed for this Colony out of the operation of his extensive contracts, on behalf of the British Government, merely to substitute in lieu the agency of some mercantile house, which, however energetic and upright, would not be able to exercise any effectual personal supervision, and which must perforce adopt in place of public contract as a test of price, and inspection by sample as a test of quality, mere naked reliance upon the good repute and probity of the manufacturers or tradesmen it might employ. The experience I have since gained under the system of a Commercial Agency has converted what was before merely a doubt in my mind—though a grave one—into a certainty, admitting of proof.

Comparison of the articles imported under this plan, and their cost, have made clear that a positive disadvantage has accrued, for where prices have approached to those the Colony had been accustomed to pay, the quality is inferior; and, on the contrary, articles found better, prove always to have been paid for at prices (in some cases greatly) beyond the Stationery Office rates. Whether it may not now be desirable that the old patterns should be laid aside, and an improved quality of stationery introduced for general use, is a question to be decided by authority superior to mine. It will require a little consideration, for if determined on a certain increase of expenditure will have to be met, arising out of the augmented costliness, and a possible still further increase, having its origin in a greater consumption. At present the appearance of Government articles of stationery is in most cases palpable to the eye, but in proportion to their loss of this distinctive character, and assimilation to the ordinary items procurable at stationers' shops, the greater will be the difficulty of holding consumption in check. Objection is being constantly taken to some item or other of the stationery furnished from this department. The unsubstantial character of some at least of those complaints, and the uselessness of attempting to consult every individual taste is made plain when, as not unfrequently happens, that which is condemned by one individual calls explicit approval from some other. These diversities of opinion are to be met only by holding a large stock of various qualities and various patterns. And further, by conceding to each department, and perhaps even to each member, liberty to choose and reject at pleasure. This course, however well it may answer while in limited operation in private life, obviously cannot be permitted in the public service. If the present standard be finally condemned as too inferior, and I do not affect to deny that they are of low quality, though I think fully good enough, save for a few special purposes that can be easily met by especial arrangements, it will, of course, be requisite to determine on new patterns. Then would be the proper time to consider how far Messrs. Sands & Kenny's proposition is a desirable one to adopt. While I have yet seen no reason to believe that either a better or cheaper mode can be devised than that of procuring from the Stationery Office the great bulk of what is used here, I should prefer trying what the trade of the Colony, on proper and full notice, could do, though such an alteration would occasion considerable additional labor to my department, and demand an increase both of room and of aid, to having resort to a London firm, upon whose operations it is illusory to suppose any proper check can be maintained at this distance.

Archibald Campbell, Esq., called in and examined :—

A. Campbell,
Esq.

4 June, 1860.

1. By the Chairman: You are Chief Clerk in this department? Yes.
2. How long have you filled that office? Since 1st December, 1859.
3. Will you be kind enough to describe to the Board your duties in as detailed a manner as you can? My duties are, a general supervision, and, in particular, the management of all the cash—the paying of accounts.
4. What are we to understand by general supervision? A general supervision over the other clerks.
5. And in any degree over the stores? Yes, I am supposed to have a supervision over the stores; and especially now.
6. I refer to the ordinary working of the department? Not so much so; but it is my duty to look at things where questions arise concerning them.
7. You are called upon to perform certain cash duties in that way? Yes.
8. And how has the duty of making cash payments devolved upon you? From my predecessor, he always performed that duty.
9. Did you see your predecessor in the office when you took charge here? Yes.
10. And he acquainted you with what your duties would be? Yes.
11. And amongst these he stated would be the duty of making cash payments? Yes; he shewed me the greater part of my work before he left the office.

12. Who do you consider to be responsible for the payments, in the event of a wrong payment being made? It would come upon me, I think.
13. Are there any written instructions, or is there any document on record in your department which divests the Colonial Storekeeper of that responsibility, and vests it in the chief clerk of the department? I should think not; I have never seen it.
14. You have never seen it? No; but I think it is in this way;—the head of the department would be held responsible to the Treasury; but if a mistake occurred, it would be sure to come from my mistake, and therefore the responsibility would come from him to me.
15. In these matters, the Government would always look to the principal officer? Yes.
16. And that principal officer would be left to his own remedy if he were not himself to blame; so that, in point of fact, the question is, who stands responsible to the Government? The Colonial Storekeeper stands responsible to the Government, I should say, but that is in words only; because, after all, the responsibility would devolve upon the subordinate.
17. Well, in the case of payments made, do you assure yourself always that the parties receiving payments are the persons really entitled to receive them? Yes.
18. How are you enabled thus to assure yourself? You cannot do it always. It is by their bringing the account; but sometimes accounts are sent in ready signed, and the party bringing them in is paid; sometimes a note is sent, requesting you to pay the party.
19. Would you pay the party who brought a signed account, even if you knew nothing of him, merely because he brought it? No, not if I knew nothing of him; I know almost everybody to whom we make payments.
20. Then, in point of fact, you do know the parties to whom you make payments? Yes.
21. Shall we say in every case? I must know something to satisfy my own mind in every case.
22. But what is the system—do they come here for payment, or send here for payment? Just about as much of one as the other. Parties who have dealt with this office for any length of time almost invariably send for payment. They send their accounts in ready signed, in some instances, although they are not requested to do so.
23. They are old customers? Yes.
24. Then how as to other parties? They come themselves, and generally sign in my presence.
25. Then there are two ways by which payments are made:—One is by parties who have a long knowledge of the department sending in their accounts signed; these parties, perhaps, being well known in the office;—the other is, by strangers, or comparative strangers, coming themselves? Yes; or sending a written order for payment. Then, again, there are payments made to parties in the country. In this case we have nothing to do but to send the cheque.
26. But in cases where written orders are sent, you have some knowledge that these orders are genuine? Yes.
27. How do you assure yourself of that? I have never received a written order yet from any one where I did not know the writing of the signature; but I have not had very long experience.
28. When payments are made in either way, how are they witnessed? They are witnessed by me generally; or the account comes in, and the cheque is pinned on to the account and sent with it for signature. A messenger takes it, where it is not already signed. Sometimes it is witnessed in the office where it is paid. If it is any house of business in town they generally witness it here.
29. Does not that suppose a third method of payment—where the account is not paid here, you say you pin a cheque on to the account and send it by the messenger—here is a third system, where you send to parties? Yes, that is a different system. It is generally done at their own request. It is those persons who have not had much dealing with the office. They do not send their accounts in signed, but they request that when their account is payable it may be sent to them. It arises generally from this:—I draw cheques near the end of the month, for payment of certain accounts, and leave these cheques untouched in the cheque book, excepting the parties call. The month comes to a termination, and some of them do not call at all; then I am obliged to send out the cheques to balance my account for the Audit Office. I must get these vouchers back, to send to the Audit Office by the first of the month. If I could help it I would never send cheques out.
30. Is it necessary that you should draw cheques before parties require the money? As soon as the account is audited I draw the cheque.
31. The labor of drawing a cheque is not much, but the risk of keeping a drawn cheque is something? Where they are sent out they are always crossed.
32. But as they lie here in your office? They are always locked up.
33. These cheques would be for large amounts sometimes? They very seldom leave large amounts uncalled for, for any length of time.
34. You seem to say that you send out cheques chiefly in the case of persons who are comparative strangers to the department? No, I do not send them out to them chiefly, only where requested to do so. As I said before, towards the end of the month, when I require the vouchers back again, I usually tell them to call on a certain day, and they come here to sign the receipt.
35. Would it not suggest itself to you as being more necessary to require those who are comparative strangers to the department to attend personally than those who are known in the office? These are the parties I generally request to attend; it is persons who do not understand, or, perhaps, who do not trust the Government sufficiently to send in their accounts ready signed, that I send out to occasionally; they may be no more strangers to me than the others who send in their accounts signed.

A. Campbell,
Esq.
June, 1860.

- A. Campbell, Esq.
4 June, 1860.
36. But do you anticipate that you would have any difficulty whatever in enforcing a rule by which all parties should be compelled to come here for payment, either in person or by their known agents? I tried to do that a few months ago. I expected people in towards the end of the month, and I drew out several cheques, but they did not come, so I sent them; in two or three cases I received a note from the parties, requesting that I would send their account.
37. But again I ask you, why the necessity of drawing these cheques before they are applied for? Under the present circumstances of the department I have to go up to the Treasury to get every cheque signed; the consequence is, that if I only drew out a cheque when it was applied for, I might be kept half my time running up and down to the Treasury in order to get Mr. Lane to sign the cheques, so I generally keep the accounts until there are two or three, or more, that I wish to pay at once; I draw them out, and make one journey of it.
38. Now, having explained that, we will go back, if you please, to the ordinary working of the department;—what is there to prevent the adoption of a system which would compel parties who supply stores to call here themselves, or send their known agents for payments? I do not see any objection to that or any difficulty, but I have not the power to do it of my own accord. I made an attempt, as I said before, to keep the cheques until the people called personally, but I could not do it of myself.
39. It takes but a short time to draw a cheque, and when it is drawn, on the application of the party or his known agent, there would be no risk; and if the head of the department were, as doubtless he would be, present to perform his duties, the cheque might be signed without delay? When Mr. Buchanan was here I never drew out a cheque at all unless it was to go immediately into the hands of the parties; I never drew it until five minutes before it was either sent away or handed to the person in waiting.
40. But you do not think there would be any obstacle opposed by tenderers to a system which would compel them either personally, or by a known agent, to come here for payment? I think not; it is a system I should prefer very much myself.
41. Now, in regard to payments made to parties to whom you send cheques, how are they witnessed? I have to witness most of them myself.
42. Even though you do not actually see the payment made? No, I do not actually see them.
43. Then if you were placed in a witness-box to-morrow, and a question arose whether your messenger paid the cheque to the right party, you are not in a position to swear either to the identity of the person to whom payment was made, or to the fact of the payment? I receive accounts sometimes ready signed and witnessed, especially from the country, and I am obliged to pay them.
44. Do you take any precaution in reference to the cheques you send out, so that in case of accident they should not be made available to improper parties? I cross all cheques sent out of the office, and mark them "Bank."
45. Without exception? Without exception.
46. Since you came to the department, then, there have been no payments made in which you have been concerned, to parties of whom you have not known something, as being either bonâ fide tenderers, or the agents of those tenderers? No; no parties that I have not known something of.
47. That is, that they had a right to the payments you made? In some instances I could bring no proof that they had, although I have felt morally certain that they were the parties.
48. That they were the parties ———? To whom the payments should be made.
49. Now, in this case, how did it happen that you were without this proof that they were the parties entitled to payment? I do not recollect particular cases to bring it to my mind, but in looking over my list of payments some might occur to me.
50. Then your duties consist, you say, of a general supervision, and of making all the cash payments of the department? Yes, and the returns for the Audit Office.
51. Are you the accountant and cashier of the department? Yes.
52. Do your duties extend beyond that, in any way? I have to answer a great many letters, a good deal of the correspondence has to go through me.
53. As chief clerk? As chief clerk.
54. That would possibly be the more important part of the correspondence? Yes.
55. But there must be a large amount of correspondence of a minor character that you would leave to somebody else? Yes; there is one gentleman whose particular duty it is to attend to that correspondence.
56. But you take upon yourself the more important part? Yes.
57. Does what you have stated comprise the whole of your duty? It is impossible to define my duties fully, they are so various, and you cannot separate one person's duties from the duties of another, particularly in this department; we all do different things, sometimes there is a great rush of work, and then each person does a little of everything.
58. Do you ever superintend the opening of packages received from tenderers, or the issue of stores to other departments and services? No; not in my present situation.
59. You never exercise that superintendence? No; that is done by the store clerk and foreman.
60. And you have nothing to do with it at all? No; unless in case of question, and then the store clerk would naturally come to me because he could not decide.
61. Do you think that any packages or stores could issue from this department without your knowledge, or do you feel in any way bound to observe these things? They could not go through the regular course without my knowledge.
62. But I am speaking of an irregular issue of stores? Yes, they could go then; the very fact of their being irregular would prevent my knowing of it; I could not watch every dray load.

63. I do not think that is meeting my question in the spirit in which I put it? I hardly understand it. A. Campbell,
Esq.
64. It is necessary that the question should be put in order to shew what amount of surveillance there exists—what is there to prevent a warehouseman, if he did not happen to be trustworthy, loading a cart and sending away supplies? There must be too many concerned in it. June, 1860.
65. You deny that you would be concerned in it, and perhaps other gentlemen might do the same; but the thing is this, whether, whilst you are in the office, this might not be done without your knowledge? I think not; it would require too deep a plan to be carried through.
66. Have you any duties, Mr. Campbell, other than those you have named to the Board? There are a great many nameless duties, which I can scarcely specify.
67. We know that in a public department you cannot go into minutiae, but generally the duties are divided into sections;—you have nothing to do with keeping any account of stores, or anything of that kind? Yes.
68. What account do you keep? A quarterly statement is always sent in to the Audit Office of all stores issued, and the same is copied into the books here;—the invoices are kept as well.
69. But there is nothing in the form of a return as to stores received? The invoices themselves shew the stores received.
70. You do not make any return? No regular return.
71. Do these invoices come back to you again? Copies are sent to the Audit Office—we keep the originals.
72. You render these returns as accountant to the department? Yes.
73. And these returns have, in point of fact, nothing whatever to do with any account of receipts, issues, and remains of stores? No.
74. Can you charge your memory with any other duties that you are called upon to perform in this department beyond those you have already mentioned? No; I cannot recollect any as chief clerk; of course you do not mean as I am at present.
75. No; I mean in the ordinary working of the department? No; my experience was so short that I cannot exactly recollect what would devolve upon me, and what upon the Colonial Storekeeper; I only acted during one month as chief clerk.
76. Is there any method of checking the books kept by yourself and the accounts rendered to the Audit Office? The Audit Office checks them.
77. But they check them from the figures before them—with them it is merely whether two and two make four? They have all the information—the invoices received, and the account of the stock; and they have the quarterly returns of the issues to deduct from that—I presume, therefore, they could exercise a check.
78. Who makes these quarterly returns of issues? They come from me afterwards; I do not do the clerical work.
79. Who is charged with the responsibility? I have the responsibility of it.
80. Then, officially speaking, you make the quarterly returns? Yes, in that way.
81. Then you are checked in that direction by yourself—that is to say, the means you supply the Audit Office to check you, are data made up by yourself, these quarterly returns? They are not all thus made up, because the stock is not made up by me.
82. I am speaking of the issues? Yes, the issues; there are vouchers for every issue, and the return is made up from those.
83. There are vouchers for the issues? Yes.
84. And these vouchers, then, would check your return? Yes.
85. Then you think the Audit Office has a perfect check? Yes, as perfect as it can be.
86. Now suppose there should be fictitious tenderers, fictitious receipts, and fictitious payments, and suppose also the only means the Audit Office had of checking these emanated from the same hand in this department—inasmuch as they would derive all their sources of information from you—what check would there be? There are the vouchers in the office, which may be referred to if any doubt exists in reference to the matter.
87. Now, do these vouchers come into the hand of the chief clerk alone? No, they go all through the office.
88. But still there is no knowledge of the identity of the parties tendering, or of anything about them? No, I do not think it necessary for me to know it in every case; I always presume that that is known by the Board who open the tenders.
89. But suppose the parties were wholly unknown by handwriting, by name, by abode, by their place of business, or by anything else, what check would there be? Check to what: to the goods being actually received?
90. Yes, that there was an actual receipt and an actual payment? The payment is not made until the goods are received and actually certified to by the store clerk, who has to certify to their receipt before I pay for anything.
91. Then there is a check to that extent? Yes, and the foreman's certificate has to be appended to the voucher as well.
92. The foreman; that is the man who actually issues the goods? The man who actually receives them into the stores, and assists in the issues;—the store clerk issues.
93. Does the system of accounting in the Audit Office seem to you to be easy and explicit—is it more complicated than one which would be employed in mercantile business? I think not; I do not think it is more complicated, except that all the vouchers require more signatures. There must be more routine in the Government service than in mercantile offices; but the general system, I think, is much the same.
94. You do not think you are called upon to account to the Audit Office in a more complicated

A. Campbell, Esq.
4 June, 1860. cated form than would be necessary in a private establishment conducting a business to the extent to which you conduct business here? Oh! yes, there is a good deal more work in sending in monthly statements and quarterly returns. I have not much knowledge of mercantile routine; I never was in a merchant's office; but I think from the general system that it is much the same, although perhaps rather more complicated in its working; there are a great many more documents required than I should think would be required by a merchant.

95. Have you ever given any attention to the present system of furnishing accounts to the Audit Office;—whether an equally effective, and, at the same time, a clearer and simpler form of check than is now adopted, might not be kept upon the department? Yes, I think it might be simplified a little; I was advised at the Treasury to keep merely a ledger, and post from the other books, without journalising—that saved a good deal of trouble, and would be equally effective.

96. You keep merely a day-book and a ledger? Yes, the issue-book is the day-book; there is the cash, of course.

97. Then you simply knock off one check upon yourself by setting aside the intermediate book? That is the suggestion of the accountant at the Treasury, that a ledger would be sufficient, because the other books stand for themselves.

George Joseph Wrentmore, Esq., Deputy-Assistant Commissary General, called in and examined:—

G. J. Wrentmore, Esq.
4 June, 1860. 1. By the Chairman: There are some points on which the Board would be happy to receive some information from you in reference to the mode of conducting business at the Commissariat. Do the Commissariat call for tenders when they require stores, which it is necessary to procure here? Always, except in very trifling cases.

2. In calling for tenders do they invariably insert the quantities required, or do they sometimes ask parties to supply for a given number of months, or for a year, as the case may be, without stating the quantities? The principal contracts are taken for twelve months.

3. Time contracts? Yes.

4. Are the stores paid for immediately they are delivered into the storekeeper's charge? We do not receive anything into store.

5. You do not receive them? No.

6. But you pay —? The contractors monthly. The troops are supplied directly by the contractors, and we settle with them. We have no stores at all.

7. In the acceptance of tenders is it any consideration with you whether you have or have not some knowledge of the tenderers? Most decidedly.

8. It is a condition of acceptance, that you know the tenderer? That we know the tenderer and the sureties.

9. Then in every such case you take a bond? In all important contracts—in all the annual contracts.

10. Then of course when you make your payments you know that you are making them to the parties who have actually supplied the goods? Yes; we take no signatures but the principals.

11. And how are the payments witnessed? They are witnessed by one of the clerks in our office.

12. Who would be in a condition to swear to the identity of the party receiving the payment, as well as to the fact of the payment having been made? Certainly to the fact of the payment having been made; but I cannot say exactly that he would be in a position to swear to the identity of the person receiving payment, because sometimes vouchers are sent in with the signatures of the parties, and payment is then made to persons in the establishment of the contractor.

13. Would you be content with the signature of the person who had witnessed before the payment was made, or would you still have some officer in your department to witness the payment? It is an invariable rule for an officer to witness the payment.

14. You never send cheques but you insist upon the parties calling at the pay department for payment? It is very seldom indeed that we send cheques, except to pensioners. The parties, either themselves or by their agents, always attend at the office for payment, and receive their cheques there.

15. There is, I believe, a Commissariat Storekeeper? There is the store.

16. But is there not an officer called the Commissariat Storekeeper? Yes; that is not his proper designation. He is an assistant clerk, who has charge of the stores and acts as storekeeper.

17. But is there no such appointment? No such appointment at all; he does the duty of storekeeper.

18. Has there never been a Commissariat Storekeeper in this country—an officer holding that appointment? There are in the department storekeepers, but they are of very inferior grade. They rank only with non-commissioned officers.

19. By Mr. Buchanan: I think they are more in the character of storeholders? Yes; an officer has generally charge of the stores.

20. By the Chairman: Then there is some person of responsibility—in the rank or grade of an officer—charged with the actual custody of these stores? There is, always.

21. And he is personally responsible for the stores? He is personally responsible.

22. And is he charged—no matter what assistance he may have—with keeping store accounts in

- in which the receipts, the issues, and the remains are shewn? Yes, these are kept by the officer in charge of the stores.
23. And that officer is held really and personally responsible? Decidedly.
24. And in all receipts of stores I suppose he personally inspects them to see that the quantities are correct? Yes, that is part of our instructions; but all stores that are specially purchased—that is, not in the annual contracts—are surveyed by a board of officers before they are accepted. Salt meat, for instance.
25. Could you say whether there are any intervals in the year, or during a given number of years, in which the officer charged with the stores is called upon by regulation or otherwise, accurately to test his remains by the actual amount of stores in the store—to take stock, in fact? No; I do not think there is in our service any regulation of that kind; but I am not quite certain in reference to the matter.
26. But he is bound to shew his remains and for them he would be responsible? Certainly. He has to furnish a monthly statement of remains which he declares to (the officer in charge of the stores) in addition to an abstract of the receipts and issues, which he also declares to. He has to furnish the account of the remains in store on the last day of every month.
27. Then, inferentially, we may conclude that an officer who makes a declaration of that kind—tantamount to an oath—would in some way convince himself that he was correct? No doubt it is his duty to do so.
28. In the case of stores purchased here and goods which go into the Commissariat Stores, I suppose there is some officer charged with the responsibility of seeing that the articles supplied come up to the pattern? Yes; but the stores of the Commissariat are confined principally to provisions. It is the military storekeeper who has the supplying of other stores to the army.
29. Have you any means of judging, just roughly, what would be the value of the stores at this moment in the Commissariat buildings? The stores in the Commissariat are naval stores altogether, and are under the authority of the naval officer commanding on the station. We have no military stores of any sort; but I suppose your question is general—
30. General? I should say that the Commissariat Officer certainly would be able to ascertain the value of stores, because he is furnished with invoices in the case of stores from England, and of course he knows the value of stores purchased on the spot, because they are paid for through the Commissariat.
31. I suppose, too, he might ascertain the annual value of the issues from the stores? Oh! yes; there would be no difficulty about that.
32. What would be the actual expense to the Imperial Government of conducting that establishment by its officers? That depends altogether upon the extent and strength of the station. There is no rule about that in our service.
33. I suppose it is customary with the Commissariat to anticipate its wants by orders from Home? In some stations, but on this station we get nothing from Home except provisions for the navy—salt pork and rum; but stations nearer England are supplied from Home,—Malta, for instance.
34. Who is the officer from whom we could get this information? The Assistant Military Storekeeper, Mr. Wilkinson.
35. The main point was, who had charge of the stores in the Commissariat? My answer is not quite correct, because the senior Commissariat Officer at the station is actually responsible to the Home Authorities.
36. By Mr. Buchanan: Was it not the case that the officer actually responsible to the British Government for the stores in the Commissariat was in Melbourne? Yes, it is true.
37. And the officer really in charge of them was here? It is true.
38. So that there was a chain of responsibility extending from the Commissariat Officer here to the officer in Melbourne, who was Mr. Coxworthy, was nominally responsible to the British Government, while the actual responsibility was vested in the officer here? Yes.
39. By the Chairman: That arises from the head station being at Melbourne and not here? Yes; that has only been the case since the head quarters have been removed from Sydney. Hobart Town has its head quarters, so has New Zealand, and Adelaide also; in fact, all the Colonies have, except New South Wales. This is merely what they call a sub station.

G. J. Wrenmore, Esq.

4 June, 1860.

Henry Lane, Esquire, called in and examined:—

1. By the Chairman: You are Under Secretary to the Treasury, Mr. Lane? Yes.
2. You are also a member of the Board appointed to open tenders for the supply of stores? Yes.
3. Will you state the process of calling for tenders, of opening tenders, of scheduling tenders, and of finally accepting tenders? We call for tenders, on the motion of the Colonial Storekeeper, if stores are required; we insert the notice in the Government Gazette, and call attention to the announcement by advertisements in the daily papers.
4. Then you receive the tenders? Then we receive the tenders.
5. To whom are they addressed? The Treasury. They are deposited in a box, secured by two locks of different construction; one of the keys is held by me, and one by Mr. Buchanan, the Colonial Storekeeper.
6. Where does the box lie? In the Treasury.
7. And on a given day the Board meet, and unlock this box and open the tenders? They meet, and open the tenders.
8. Does the Board comprise any members beyond the Colonial Storekeeper and yourself? Occasionally it does.

Henry Lane, Esq.

4 June, 1860.

- Henry Lane, Esq.
4 June, 1860.
9. But generally it consists of only you two? It usually consists of the Colonial Storekeeper and myself.
10. Well then Mr. Lane, after opening the tenders what do you do? We have a book, for the purpose of making a note of them—what we call “scheduling” them.
11. And where is that book kept? It is kept by me. In that book we make an abstract of the particulars—the date—the name; we give in fact a report of our proceedings.
12. But then the tenders are scheduled in some form afterwards, are they not? Yes, this book is a record of our proceedings; it contains the schedule we make of them then, but there is another schedule afterwards submitted.
13. When this strong box is opened, and the tenders are opened, does each member of the Board mark his initial upon each tender? Yes.
14. And then subsequently the particulars—not entering into minute, are entered in this book? Yes.
15. And then after that the tenders are scheduled in official form? Yes, they are afterwards scheduled in official form.
16. Where are they scheduled in this official form? I will explain: the Colonial Storekeeper has nothing to do with a portion of the tenders opened in the Treasury. As regards the tenders for provisions (the annual supplies), I deal with them; if they are for stores, clothing, shoes, or anything of that kind, where the tender is initiated from his department, they are given to the Colonial Storekeeper, on taking his receipt.
17. But still in all cases the tenders are initialled by the members of the Board present? In every case.
18. And they are entered into this minute book? Yes.
19. Well then, in the case of those tenders which affect the Colonial Storekeeper only, it is left to him to make out the form of schedule? Yes.
20. When they are thus made out, to whom is the schedule submitted, and who is it that pronounces acceptance or otherwise? The Treasurer.
21. There are suggestions I believe, recommendations of the Board—is it usual for you to unite in a recommendation with Mr. Buchanan in reference to Colonial stores—or does his recommendation stand singly? I usually join with him.
22. And then the Treasurer finally accepts the tender? On our recommendation.
23. Now as the schedule is submitted to the Treasurer, so also I suppose are the tenders Always.
24. With these initial marks upon them? Invariably.
25. And he has an opportunity of judging of the perfect genuineness of the tenders? Yes.
26. Have you any means of judging of the reasonableness or otherwise of tenders? I have not.
27. You feel yourself bound to accept the lowest tender? That has been the rule.
28. Would you accept a tender from a party who was unknown? I scarcely know how I would act in that case.
29. But, as a member of the Board, the two sitting together, and the tenders having been opened, the question might naturally arise, “who is this man”? Yes.
30. Is it not a condition in the acceptance of tenders that you should know something of the tenderer?—that you should know that he has a habitation and a name—an existence? I should suppose so. But I take the Colonial Storekeeper’s receipt for the tenders when taken away by him, and I then depend upon him as the officer in charge of them.
31. Upon his recommendation? Upon his recommendation.
32. According to the system you have adopted, would it be possible, when the tenders had left you, to substitute a tender which had not come before the Board for one which had received the initials of the Board? Not excepting the initials were forged.
33. If that were done? If that that were done—yes. There might be a substitution then, but there would be all the risk of forgery connected with it.
34. Then in opening the tenders with the Colonial Storekeeper, so far as he is concerned, do you never ask who this man is and who that man is, and so on; or are the tenders simply opened and the whole thing left to the Colonial Storekeeper? I have asked Mr. Buchanan occasionally.
35. Did the tender of a person of the name of of James Staunton ever challenge you? No.
36. That is not one of the cases you asked about? No.
37. Now, in regard to these stores, is it required by the Government that the Colonial Storekeeper should anticipate the wants of the service in such a way as to be enabled to supply them as nearly as possible from England? Yes.
38. And that, in fact, the purchases in the Colony should be merely to cover unforeseen emergencies? Yes.
39. Is there any instruction to the Colonial Storekeeper to that effect, that he is to anticipate his wants by securing supplies from England? I am not certain.
40. How could the Board ascertain that the Colonial Storekeeper has received authoritative instructions to anticipate the wants of the Colony at all times, so far as in him lay? I have little doubt of the existence of those instructions, but I am not prepared just now to give them in. I shall inquire, and submit them if I find them.
41. You have no doubt then that there does exist an instruction, or some some instructions, to the effect that the Colonial Storekeeper shall be so far foreseeing as to supply, as much as possible, from Home the wants of the Colony? That is my opinion.
42. When did the change take place in reference to the payments for stores supplied to this department; that is to say, when was the Colonial Storekeeper called upon to pay instead of the Treasurer? Many years ago, on the introduction of the system of advances.
43. Is that within the advent of Responsible Government? No; it was previously to that. The last instructions given were in the year 1853.

44. And from that period up to this time, the Colonial Storekeeper has been required to make all payments for stores supplied? I think so.
45. Are there any written instructions to the Colonial Storekeeper in regard to these payments? Yes.
46. Could you produce them Mr. Lane? I produce the original of the circular instructions, and also a certified copy. (Original circular read, and certified copy handed in, vide Appendix A.)
47. Was that circular sent only to the departments therein enumerated? I should assume so. It was not sent from the Treasury. There was an enclosure to the letter of the 17th June, (vide Appendix B) I have also the Instructions to Officers on receiving and accounting for advances made on the public service, (vide Appendix C.)
48. This circular I think had reference to the salaries and contingencies of departments; but at that same time was the Colonial Storekeeper called upon to pay for the goods supplied into the stores for the public service? I think so.
49. Your understanding of that circular is, that the advances being made to the head of the department only—that the money being paid to his public account only—he alone was the responsible party? He only.
50. That the function of the clerk who is to draw the cheques and put his initial to the butt, commenced and ceased with that? Yes.
51. He had no responsibility beyond that? None whatever.
52. Was there anything beyond a mere precautionary check, in requiring a clerk of that kind to fill up the cheque? That was the object—as a precaution—that the head of the department should not himself draw cheques and issue them as he thought fit. It ensured to us that an account was kept, and that there was a second party privy to the filling of the cheque.
53. In regard to the other stores and supplies, the tenders for which you open—have you anything to do with payment in any way? I have, now.
54. You have said that some knowledge of the tenderer ought to be a condition of the acceptance of his tender? Yes.
55. Well, suppose a person unknown were to tender in the department in which you are interested now, and suppose his tender was accepted, and the goods were actually supplied—would you send payment after this individual that you did not know, or would you insist upon his coming to you? Most certainly I should insist upon his coming to me.
56. Do you know of any payments having been witnessed by parties who actually did not see the payment made? I am not aware.
57. Are you aware whether there is any head of a department in the entire service who holds himself irresponsible for payments under this present system? I am satisfied there is not.—Allow me to correct that statement?—There is one exception made in the case of the Government Printer. Frauds had been detected some years ago, and the management of the payments and the credits opened was taken from the printer and given to an accountant specially appointed. He has had to enter into a bond for that purpose. That is the only exception I know.
58. But that is a special case? That is a special case.
59. And there is a provision made to relieve the department, and to fasten the responsibility upon this accountant? Yes.
60. This circular you produce is the only written instruction extant, in regard to the regulation of these payments? That is all I have traced as yet.
61. Do you imagine that there is anything in the nature of an instruction on the butts of the first cheques issued under these instructions? I cannot recollect the first instructions given. This circular has reference to a preceding instruction, but I cannot trace it in the Audit Office. In the Treasury we have no record.
62. Are you aware what check there is in the Audit Office upon the accounts of the Colonial Storekeeper? He has to send in the cash accounts, the butts of cheques issued, and all the vouchers.
63. If there were fictitious tenderers might there not also be fictitious goods and fictitious payments? I suppose there might.
64. And that would be rendered, perhaps, more facile by the fact that there never has been stocktaking, and there never can be a balance shewn of remains, as the balance of receipts and issues? I have not seen a balance of receipts and issues.
65. And you have not seen any remains as the balance between the receipts and issues? I have not seen any.
66. Not since the first establishment of the stores? Allow me to correct myself. There was once a published list of stock, so far as my memory serves me.
67. A published list of stock? Yes.
68. On hand? Yes.
69. That did not take up the receipts and issues over the whole period that preceded? No, it was merely the stock in hand at the time.
70. In such a case as that of which I have spoken what check would you have at the Audit Office or anywhere else? That I do not know.
71. What do the Government expect of the Colonial Storekeeper—that the whole of the goods removed should be accounted for by setting the issues against the receipts and shewing the remains? Yes.
72. Do the Government really expect that? The Government expect that. The Colonial Storekeeper cannot really keep his account without it.
73. Have they called upon him to do this? He got instructions at the time I have referred to, when the list was published. It was to be kept periodically.

Henry Lane,
Esq.

4 June, 1860.

Henry Lane, Esq. 74. And it did show the balance of remains? Yes.

4 June, 1860. 75. As it is, what do you accept as the vouchers to pass the accounts of the Colonial Storekeeper for all payments? I shall have to refer you to the Audit Office for that. The Treasury has nothing more to do than to open the credit. The Audit Office follows the Treasury. I am happy to give you any information I can afford, but I think it will be advisable to refer you to the Audit Office for information of this kind.

76. Well, there are no other instructions relating to these public payments than those you have produced to the Board? Those are all I can trace.

77. Have those returns that are expected been made by the Colonial Storekeeper? I cannot safely answer that question.

By Mr. Buchanan: Mr. Lane states, I think in one of his answers, that it is not the practice of the Board to accept tenders from parties unknown—are you aware whether, in the case of provision contracts, that rule is carried out? I am satisfied of it.

Then you fancy that in every case the Board knows who it is that tenders for provisions? If they do not know the individual himself, they must know of the respectability of the parties who enter into bond.

Mr. Buchanan: I am a member of the Provision Board, and have been the longest upon it, perhaps—fifteen years; and do you mean to assert that I am aware of who all the parties are that have made contracts for provisions—that I have had a personal knowledge of them? I make no assertion of that kind.

The Chairman: Mr. Lane is called upon only to give his opinion, and not to assert what you know.

Mr. Buchanan: But does Mr. Lane state that he knows all the parties who make these contracts for provisions?

By Mr. Buchanan: Do you? I do not. I do not know a party tendering from Armidale, for instance; but the Board know of the parties who enter into the bond. They take care that inquiries are made.

By whom? If there be any doubt they refer.

To whom? To the Bench, usually.

Then, in that case, the responsibility rests with the Bench, and not with the Board? I really do not know whether I should answer these questions.

78. By the Chairman: The Board being here, at Sydney, and the tenderer being at a distance, all you can do, and all that can be expected of the Board here, is to use its best efforts to inquire all that is necessary to be known of the tenderers? Mr. Buchanan: I am a member of the Board —

The Chairman: They write to the Bench? Witness: They refer in special cases.

Mr. Buchanan: There is no instance on record in which any question of the identity of a tenderer was ever referred to the Bench. Witness: I shall give you an instance. The last time — Mr. Buchanan: That is subsequent to this matter.

79. By the Chairman: In addition to that instance could you give any instance anterior to it? I am quite satisfied that I could, but I cannot give it just now. I fear that I have not made myself clearly understood. In reference to the stores, I left all to Mr. Buchanan, depending upon his integrity; but with regard to the tenders for provisions there was a more formal Board—sureties had to be obtained, and an engagement made to deliver a bond. The course pursued was altogether different.

80. You do not suppose, Mr. Lane, that any officer in the public service would feel it to be a slur upon his honor or integrity that his official transactions should be surrounded by as many checks and securities as possible? No, certainly not.

81. You would perhaps think that the more irreproachable the officer the more he would desire these checks? Yes.

82. Then do you not think it unsafe for a Board, as a Board, to abandon any portion of its duties, instead of as a whole doing its business to leave a large section of it to one individual? I find it now.

83. In regard to the goods obtained from England, how are they sent for—through whom? Mr. Buchanan submits indents.

84. To the Treasury? To the Treasury.

85. And these indents are forwarded to you? By us to the commercial agent in England. Mr. Buchanan submits them in duplicate, and they are sent in duplicate. I regret to find that no records of these indents have been kept in the Colonial Storekeeper's Department.

86. The record should have been kept here? Yes.

87. There is, I suppose, a particular description of the goods required sent home with the indents. When these are supplied directly from home, and under the regulations which now subsist, do you imagine that the Government are supplied to any very great extent cheaper than they would be were they to be supplied by resident tradesmen here? Mr. Buchanan has been called upon to report again and again, and he has always persisted in the statement that it is a far more economical system to get them from Home.

88. We have it in evidence that the value of the stores and goods on hand at this moment, or it may be at any moment is about ninety thousand pounds, calculating the interest on that by the rate of interest borne by government debentures (6 per cent), it would give between five and six thousand pounds interest per annum? Yes, at the rate we get now.

89. The expenses of the department—salaries and contingencies—amount to somewhere about £4,000? Between £4,000 and £5,000.

90. That makes an annual expenditure of nearly £10,000? Yes.

91. Exclusive of any loss or other charges there might be. And the actual issues are about £32,000? Yes, between £30,000 and £40,000.

92. Now, would you take your pencil and see what rate per cent. that is. £10,000 upon between £30,000 and £40,000.

93. I said that we had it in evidence that the value of the stock in store was about £90,000, and that all this was paid for? Yes; I will make up any computation you wish from my own figures. Henry Lane,
Esq.
94. What I want to put to you is this:—What do you consider the charge to be per cent. for superintending this issue of £32,000? I will submit it to you afterwards. Would you allow me to ask you previously from whom you got the value of the stock in hand. 4 June, 1860.
95. From the best authority I should think—the Colonial Storekeeper. Will you be kind enough to state (for you were in a position to know this exactly) what was the intention of the Government in establishing the Colonial Store—what good did it propose to derive to the public service from its establishment? I believe the great object was economy, and at the same time facility of getting articles which the Government could not in those days get in the colony.
96. And perhaps, too, something in reference to the quality of the things—uniformity? I think so. If you allow me to refer you to the Report of a Select Committee, I think that question is fully entered into.
97. As regards economy and facility—has the institution carried out the intention of the Government in those respects? That I cannot say, but we always understood that it was more economical, and had the other advantages intended.
98. You have understood that? Yes.
99. But cannot say it of your own knowledge? I cannot.
100. You have had to deal with accounts for stores and goods of various kinds outside this department? Yes.
101. Have you had any greater difficulty in dealing with this than you have had in dealing with other departments? I cannot give an opinion about that. My duties were solely confined to the opening of tenders; but as regards the supply and the subsequent operations, I am not in a position to state.
102. Do you think there is in the public services any officer in a position to state that? The most likely public officer is the Auditor General.
103. But he deals with figures. He cannot know in reality anything about these things except from the figures submitted to him? Well, I really cannot suggest any other officer, except it be the examiner of stores.
104. But there is no such officer here? There is not now?
105. No? There used to be a foreman of stores.

Mr. Buchanan: The examiner of stores was repeatedly struck off the estimates—time after time.

The Chairman: Then I think as far as your personal knowledge goes we have obtained from you all the information you can give us.

106. By Mr. Buchanan: You stated that one of the advantages expected from the department when it was formed was that stores might be obtained from England which could not then be obtained in the Colony? That is my opinion.

107. That is merely your idea? It is merely my opinion.

108. You do not know as a fact whether we did get anything from England in those days or whether we did not—when the department was first founded? I understood so.

109. That we were in the habit of getting things from England? Yes.

110. If I state the fact that for many years afterwards we did not, you are not prepared to dispute it? I cannot dispute it. All these questions I could answer if allowed to submit the information afterwards.

The Chairman said that if at any other time witness had information valuable to the inquiry, and would communicate that fact to the Board, they would examine him further. This he thought would be the best plan for all parties.

APPENDIX A.

*Colonial Secretary's Office,
Sydney, 17 June, 1853.*

Sir,

I have had the honor to receive and to submit to the Governor General your letter of the 5th April last, No. 2-5, in which you suggest that an alteration should be made in the mode of preparing and accounting for advances or imposts on the Public Service.

2. According to the existing rule every public officer receiving an advance, is required, not only to account for his expenditure within a certain period, but to repay the unexpended balance into the Colonial Treasury,—and you recommend that this rule should be no longer maintained, but that the Colonial Treasurer should take from the recipient of the advance, in every case, an obligation to account quarterly, in the manner directed, and to repay the unexpended balance at any time when specially called upon to do so, but not otherwise.

3. His Excellency having approved of the adoption of your recommendation I have the honor to inform you that a circular, of which I enclose a copy, has been addressed to the officers named in the accompanying list, conveying to them instructions, as annexed to the circular, for their future guidance, for receiving and accounting for any advances that may be made to them on the public service.

4. The form of warrant submitted by you for the issue of the advances from the Colonial Treasury, and also the form of account current to be rendered by officers receiving advances within fourteen days after the expiration of each quarter, are approved by the Governor General.

5. You will observe, on reference to the concluding paragraph of the instructions, that the forms of account current are to be furnished to the several officers from your department.

I have, &c.,
(for the Colonial Secretary.)
W. ELYARD, JUN.

The Honorable
The Auditor General.

APPENDIX B.

ENCLOSURE to Colonial Secretary's letter of 17th June, 1853, No. 53.

Colonial Secretary's Office,
Sydney, 26 May, 1853.

Sir,

I am directed by His Excellency the Governor General to inform you, that instead of the present mode of accounting for advances or imprests made for the public service, the following course is to be adopted for the future, viz:—

Every officer receiving an advance will sign a receipt at the Colonial Treasury, containing an obligation to furnish to the Auditor General, within fourteen days after the expiration of each quarter, until the amount of the advance shall have been expended and accounted for in full, or repaid into the Treasury, a quarterly account current, supported by satisfactory vouchers as regards the payments for which credit is taken, and by a certificate from the manager as respects the balance of cash in the bank in which his account is kept; and also containing a further obligation to repay into the Treasury, at any time when required, the then unexpended balance in hand.

2. I am further directed to annex, for your information and guidance, a copy of the general instructions, which, in accordance with this arrangement, are to be strictly observed by officers in receiving and accounting for advances or imprests on the public service.

I have, &c.,

APPENDIX C.

INSTRUCTIONS for Officers in Receiving and Accounting for Advances made on the Public Service.

(1.) Every officer receiving an advance or imprest of larger amount than £20, shall open a separate account under the head of "Public Advance Account," at a bank in which no other account is kept in his name. The amount of the advance will be paid direct from the Treasury to the bank, and placed to the officer's advance account.

(2.) All payments exceeding £1 must be made by cheques on the advance account at the bank; and in order that they may be provided with cash in hand for petty payments of less amount, officers can draw cheques in their own favor for any requisite sum not exceeding £3 at one time.

(3.) No head of a department, or officer, should himself prepare the cheques on his advance account; an official cheque book should be kept by one of the clerks, whose duty it should be to prepare the cheques according to instructions, to enter the particulars on the butts, and in such books as may be necessary; and after initialling them himself, to submit them to the head of the department for signature.

(4.) Every officer will be required to forward the bank pass-book for his public account when called upon so to do by the Auditor General, whose duty it will be to inspect the pass books periodically.

(5.) The account current, the form of which will be furnished by the Auditor General, is to be rendered within fourteen days after the expiration of each quarter, but the transmission of the several vouchers for payments is not to be delayed until the end of the quarter. These vouchers should be placed in abstract, and forwarded to the Audit Office monthly, or oftener, so that their examination may be proceeded with in that office, and the audit of the greater portion of them completed before the receipt of the account current, in which credit for them will be taken.

Henry Garnett, Esq., called in and examined:—

H. Garnett,
Esq.

4 June, 1860.

1. What position do you hold in this department? That of second clerk, at present.
2. How long have you held that appointment? Since 1st December last year.
3. December, 1859? Yes.
4. Would you be kind enough to mention what your duties are? Well, they are of a very miscellaneous character—writing letters, checking accounts, and —
5. Are you what is understood to be the corresponding clerk of the department? Well, as far as there is a corresponding clerk, I am.
6. The more important part of the correspondence is drafted? Yes.
7. By the chief clerk? By Mr. Buchanan.
8. By Mr. Buchanan? Yes, generally. Letters relative to goods are sometimes drafted by the accountant.

H. Garnett, Esq.
June, 1860.

- 9. And the general correspondence of the department would be drafted by you? Yes.
- 10. Do you draft simply, and leave it to somebody else to copy? No, I copy it also.
- 11. You may be said, then, to be the corresponding clerk of the department? Yes.
- 12. Beyond this correspondence, what other part of the duties of the department falls to your share? Well, there are all manner of things to be done in this department—you are not confined to any one branch.
- 13. That is the case in every department? Generally, I have to make out all the orders on contractors.
- 14. Every department has its business in sections, and you can state generally the sections of business which devolve upon you? I make all orders.
- 15. What do you mean by that? Orders on contractors upon the requisitions we get. Perhaps there are not all the goods in the store; and consequently a certain proportion of them will have to be purchased from contractors, or others, if there is no contract for the articles.
- 16. Are there many goods obtained in that way from contractors, without contract? From contractors, without contract?
- 17. Yes? There are miscellaneous articles for which no contract is taken.
- 18. Then you go to some one of your old contractors to purchase? Not always. We go to persons who supply such articles. Take tinware, for instance: there is no contract for articles of tinware, and we generally get them from Mr. Robinson's. They are not of sufficient importance to call for tenders.
- 19. But you never deal in that way in any material matter for any large supply? Very seldom. I dare say it may be done sometimes, when there is a pressure.
- 20. You mean, if the things are required immediately, and there is no existing contract to provide them? Yes.
- 21. You then make out orders for these goods? Yes.
- 22. These also would be counterparts of your requisitions? As far as the articles ordered go they would be. The requisitions contain a great many articles, perhaps, that we have got in store, and also some few that we have not;—in those cases we order only those we have not got in store.
- 23. Can you tell readily what articles you have in store when you get requisitions? No; they are generally marked by the foreman of the stores.
- 24. You know nothing about it? Well, I do from making out the orders. I have a tolerably good idea of what is in the store.
- 25. You have a notion of what the report of the foreman to you is? Yes.
- 26. But of your own knowledge, you do not know whether they are in store or not? No.
- 27. You say that goods are not obtained in that way to any great extent, but only in cases of pressing emergency—I mean without contract? Well, I think there have been a good many supplied in that way. If our supply falls short during the year—that is, if there is an unusual demand for one thing for which we had made no extra provision, and we therefore have a deficiency, we naturally purchase it.
- 28. That is, when your anticipation does not cover your actual wants? That I cannot say; I know that there are wants—
- 29. Not supplied by anticipation? I do not know about anticipation; Mr. Buchanan may have anticipated them.
- 30. But if you have not got the goods, you have to go out for them? Yes.
- 31. What other duties devolve upon you besides making out these orders? The gold license and the postage stamp books.
- 32. The gold licenses? Yes, they are issued from this department.
- 33. You mean the forms? Yes.
- 34. And the postage stamp books? Yes, they are counted here.
- 35. They would pass as money, and be considered almost as valuable as money? When they are printed, yes; but not when they leave us. They are printed at the Government Printer's, under the superintendence of the Inspector of Stamps, as he is called; we only issue the blank books,—it is a check.
- 36. You count the leaves in each book? We count the leaves in each book, and put in each a certificate, and make a Return to the Auditor General of the number issued every month.
- 37. Are the licenses in books also? Yes.
- 38. Would it not save a good deal of trouble if both the licenses and stamps were regularly folio'd? Then I should think they would want to be checked to see that none of them were absent.
- 39. They would require to be checked, no doubt, but that check would remain with the parties receiving them; they would not sign a receipt unless they looked over them to see that they had the proper quantity? But suppose they got more than the proper quantity?
- 40. You are supposing an unusual thing? The postage stamp books are made in England, the license books are made here.
- 41. In England it is not likely that they would make mistakes in these matters? They are to be made in books of one hundred and fifty, but very often they are not of that number.
- 42. Then you do find mistakes frequently, and therefore a check is necessary? Yes; the persons binding the book, I should think, would not be very particular,—the leaves are not like bank notes.
- 43. I am certainly very much astonished to find that you do detect mistakes? I can shew you my books, and you will see that I have a mistake nearly every month.
- 44. What are the numbers of these pages of stamps, and also of the licenses you issue? They are very trifling now compared with what they used to be; I dare say, on an average, I used to

- H. Garnett, Esq.
4 June, 1860.
- to issue about thirty to thirty-five books of postage stamps, each of one hundred and fifty leaves, a month, and two or three thousand miners' licenses.
45. And you have simply to count the leaves? Simply to count the leaves and put in a certificate; but that is a very trifling part of my duty indeed. (Postage stamp book produced.)
46. Do you get these out from Home just as they are? Yes.
- Mr. Buchanan:* Except when we have even fallen short of these.
47. By the Chairman: And can you get them here? Yes, but not with the watermark; we have to use ordinary paper.
48. Do not other duties, beyond what you have described, fall upon you? Well, I have to write out all sorts of documents; I have to write out issues of stock for the Audit Department sometimes, or to help in doing it, and different things of that sort.
49. Not properly pertaining to your own business? Well, it does, so far as I am a clerk in the office.
50. Have you anything to do with the actual issues from the store? Nothing.
51. Nothing whatever? No.
52. The orders are given to the warehouseman, or the proper officer, and he takes the things away, and sends them wherever you desire to send them? Yes, but he is checked by a clerk in the office; he "gets the things out," as it is technically called; he places the things on the floor, and they are called over by a clerk in the department, and entered and packed.
53. Who is that clerk—is he an extra one? No, he is Mr. Jenkins.
54. Was he formerly warehouseman himself? He was formerly warehouseman.
55. You have now enumerated all your duties—I do not mean in detail, but generally—the large sections of your duty? Yes.
56. Are you of opinion that any stores to a considerable extent, or to any extent, might be supplied from the warehouse here without the knowledge of any of the officers? Without their knowledge?
57. Yes; I do not mean supplied on regular requisition, but might they not find their way irregularly out of the store? Well, if there was a conspiracy it might be done.
58. It would require a conspiracy? I think so—of all the storemen and warehousemen, the checking clerk, and Mr. Buchanan, and, in fact, of every one, because the clerks are constantly going into the store, and if they saw anything of the sort they would naturally inquire where the things were going; I often inquire that myself about things leaving the store, although it is not in my department at all.
59. There is no rule by which packages leaving the store should, at the last moment, come under the review or inspection of any officer of the department? They are always given to the carter with the way-bill; the carter takes them away, and the packages are marked; we take the dimensions of the packages if they are going by a vessel, and if not, they are weighed for the carriers; they are always packed in this store, and taken away from the door there.
60. You have no concern with the payments, I suppose? No.
61. None whatever? No.
62. You do not interfere with the accounts at all? Well, I very often check accounts, if they are given to me, to see that the calculations are right.
63. Beyond that you have no functions? No.
64. You stated in reply to a previous question, that your duty in regard to the issuing of gold licenses and postage stamps is considerably less than it used to be, but you did not mention, nor, indeed, did I ask you, how the diminution took place;—would you be kind enough to state, as briefly as you can, how this arises? Formerly there were six or seven descriptions of licenses issued monthly, but now the monthly licenses have been abolished, and there are only two descriptions of licenses issued annually—the "miner's right" has taken the place of the monthly license.
65. Now as to the postage stamps? I think the postage stamps must have increased—we issue books of different sizes from that. (Book produced.)

William McDonell, Esq., called in and examined:—

- W. McDonell, Esq.
4 June, 1860.
1. By the Chairman: What post do you occupy in this department? That of third clerk.
2. Have you been long in that position? I have only been in the position of third clerk for three or four months.
3. But you were in the department before then? Yes.
4. How long have you been in the department altogether? Since October, 1853.
5. Would you be kind enough to state what are the duties of your present office? I check the accounts as they come in, make purchases, and do other out-door business, prepare bills of lading, pass Custom House entries, and generally assist in the office work.
6. You may be said then to be the out-door clerk? Yes, I think so; those duties generally fall to my lot.
7. You say you check accounts? Yes.
8. Then you pass them to the accountant? Yes.
9. Are you concerned in any way in the payment of these accounts when they come in? Not at all.
10. It is no part of your duty? No.
11. You are never called upon to witness payments? No, I am not; if I should have to do it it would be when officiating for the chief clerk and accountant, when he was out.

12. All accounts, then, it would seem, are subject to even more than two checks;—you check them when they come in, Mr. Garnett occasionally checks them, and the accountant himself I suppose, before passing them would also check them? Yes.
13. Do you think it possible, under the present system, that any account should pass your check and the other checks, and be paid for goods that were not actually received into the store? I do not think it possible.
14. You do not think it possible? I have no hesitation in saying so; I do not think it is at all possible.
15. You generally know the parties who send in the accounts? Yes.
16. Can you say invariably? No, I cannot say invariably, because a tenderer may send in his account for his tender by a person whom I do not know at all.
17. Then it would not be unprecedented if a person were to tender who should be wholly unknown here? Not at all.
18. How then can you, or any one else, make sure that the transaction is bonâ fide? The tenderer comes into the office, for instance, during the transaction, after his tender is accepted.
19. But suppose you had it in evidence that he does not, that he was unknown altogether? Well, I do not know that such a case has occurred; it is hardly possible, I think, for a party to supply goods, and to receive the money, and yet be totally unknown; there must be some clue that he is the party justly entitled to receive the money.
20. But after all it is merely what you imagine, you have no certain knowledge of it? I think such a case never occurred; I have no knowledge of such a thing, and it has never occurred to me to consider the question whether it be possible.
21. This has occurred: a person has tendered, his tender has been accepted, the goods have been supplied, the party has been paid, and yet he has been utterly and wholly unknown to any in the department? Yes.
22. Wholly and utterly unknown to any in the department? The tenderer has?
23. Yes; so that he may present himself and say, I am the man who tendered—and who is to tell whether he is or not,—would that circumstance in any way modify your opinion that it would be impossible to pay an account for goods that did not come here? Not in the least; I think in reference to the goods it is certain.
24. You are quite sure the goods must come, although you do not know the party? Yes, I am quite sure, otherwise there must be a combination of all persons in the department to defraud the Government. Even then, I do not see how it is possible, from the number of checks and documents which pass through the hands of the clerk.
25. These accounts then, that come to the accountant, must and do pass through several other hands besides his? Yes.
26. And is it absolutely necessary that all accounts for goods supplied to the stores should come to you for check before the accounts are sent into the accountant? Yes, that is the course at present—they come to me in the first instance.
27. How long as that practice prevailed? It is at present the practice with me. I succeeded Mr. Jones in the performance of that duty; it was his duty too.
28. Did you follow a plan you found already in existence, or is this a method you introduced? It is about the same plan as that which before existed; we check the invoices that come in by the order book, which shew that the goods have been received; we check the prices by the contract book, if it be a contract, to shew that the prices are correct; I then pass it on to the accountant.
29. Then, and not until then, the goods are passed? Not until then.
30. So that the goods must be here, and be true and real? They must be here, or I could not pass the account.
31. But you found that that was a system which was in operation during the time Mr. Jones was in your office? Yes.
32. Could you say how long Mr. Jones held that appointment? Nearly the whole time he was here, I think. I am not responsible for Mr. Jones, whether he did it right or wrong; I take the system I received from him; I have followed it, and find it to be a correct one.
33. Then the system is not invented by you, but continued by you from Mr. Jones,—is not that so? Yes.
34. Then now the question is—how long did Mr. Jones perform these particular duties? In that case I think I may safely say from the time he entered the office.
35. Which would be, how long? That was in 1854, I think; he then joined Mr. Weston in matters of account, and has been engaged, I think, ever since.
36. So that if there were anything absolutely wrong between the receipts and payments for goods he must have known it, and of course it would be his duty to have brought it under the notice of the Colonial Storekeeper? Yes. He must have found it, as I find it, extremely easy; if the goods are not entered I stop the account for payment.
37. And you have nothing to do with the payments? No.
38. Or the witnessing of payments? No, unless I am unexpectedly called upon.
39. Are there not other duties devolving upon you? None, except those I have named. I keep the Ordnance book and other such books.
40. Does the accountant examine the invoice book, the order book, and the accounts after you? No; it is unnecessary that he should do so; he does it at times to make himself sure, but it is supposed that I have gone through them.
41. That is your special duty? I have taken that duty on myself since Mr. Jones left.

W. McDonell,
Esq.
4 June, 1860.

Mr. John Williams Jenkins, called in and examined :—

Mr. J. W.
Jenkins.
4 June, 1866.

1. By the Chairman: How long have you been in this department? About seven years.
2. How long have you been in your present position in the department? About seven months.
3. What position did you hold in the department previously? That of foreman of the warehouse.
4. And did you hold that position during the whole of the time you had been in the department—with the exception of these seven months? No, not the whole of the time; for about two years I was in the store.
5. First then, you were two years storeman? Yes.
6. And how many years were you foreman? For the remainder of the time I was foreman of the warehouse—I was nearly five years foreman.
7. And you have been about four months fourth clerk in this department? Yes.
8. What do your duties consist of now, as fourth clerk? I have to issue goods—to check them as they lay on the floor of the store—to enter them in the issue book, and make receipts to send to the different departments, and also to write letters of advice.
9. And this check, as the goods lay on the floor, is performed by you, and by no other person in the department? The foreman of stores checks them first, and I check them afterwards, before they are packed.
10. The foreman gets them out, but it is you, in point of fact, who check them, and the foreman of stores checks them also? Not after me.
11. So that you and the foreman of stores alone take the goods out, check them, and pack them? The storeman, under the foreman, gets them out.
12. Are these all the duties you have to perform? These principally, I have some other smaller things to do.
13. Now could any amount of goods be taken from the store without the cognizance of the clerks and officers of the department? No, I think not; I am myself continually in the store, backwards and forwards.
14. Have you anything to do with the accounts? No.
15. You could not tell, if certain payments were made for goods, whether those goods reached the store or not? No, I could not tell that.
16. And you could make sure that no goods could go out without your knowledge? No goods could go out without my knowing.
17. Now from your experience in your former position, will you state what course is taken when contractors supply goods to the store here—I mean what course is taken to check them for quantity and for quality? For quantity—if in small quantities, they will be counted over; if in large quantities, the packages would be taken as packages; that is the general system.
18. Suppose you had ten packages? If they were original packages we should open one of the ten, and if it contained the number it purported to contain, we should take it for granted that the number contained in the remaining packages was correct.
19. And you would judge by this one package as to the correctness of the whole, both in reference to quality and to quantity? Yes, one out of ten.
20. If, at any subsequent period of the history of these ten packages, whole packages were required to be sent away, would you send them away without opening them? Yes, as they were received.
21. Have you ever had any complaints of inferior quality or insufficient quantity? Never; I never knew of one since I have been here.
22. Then in case a portion of a package might be required you would have to open it, and when you open any of these cases at any subsequent period, what then do you do? Count the contents.
23. But how could you test them as to pattern, seeing that a great lapse of time may have taken place since the goods were supplied? The broken package would be opened at once when received.
24. Yes, we started by your stating that you opened one out of ten—that of course you would see on the spot, and you would at once subject the goods to the test; but if, six or eight months after, you had occasion to break another of these packages, your pattern might not be at hand, or might wear a different appearance; and when you open these packages six or eight months afterwards, do you count the goods again? Yes, we always count them. If you take half the packages, you count probably the remainder, and see that they agree again. The patterns are always the same, the samples being kept with the seals on them; they very seldom vary.
25. Then if you have to open a second case after these ten, six months after, the rule is to count the contents of the case and to test the quality of the goods therein contained by the pattern? I do not know that it would be the rule to check the numbers again, although I have done it myself; the quality would be checked in every case opened.
26. Do you find that the packages turn out generally very correct? Very correct.
27. And does that refer as well to the packages made up in this country as to those you receive from home? Most original packages are as they are sent from England—I mean the original packages we receive in the country.
28. Even if you get them here? Even if we get them here. Any packages made up here would be considered loose goods, and counted.
29. What system have you here, when you open bales and cases, of keeping the same description of goods pretty well together, and so on? They are always stacked together, goods of a certain description.
30. They are stacked together according to their description? Yes.
31. Do you make any distinction subordinate to that with reference to any variations in price? Yes.

32. Suppose you had two lots of shirts at two different prices, would you mix them indiscriminately, or keep them separate? They would have a different mark.

33. You mark each quality of shirt? Yes, and there is a book kept.

34. Then when you make the issues you are enabled to state the positive value or cost to the Government of each article you supply to every department? Yes. Where we have the same description of goods from two contractors, they would be kept separate, and entered separate, even to the last one; if fifty articles were supplied, twenty-five from one contractor and twenty-five from another, there would be a separate entry made.

35. Even though there would be no difference in price? Yes.

Mr. Buchanan here explained that that could not be done in the case of oil and other goods supplied to the department, and that the answer must be taken as a modified answer.

36. Are these stores, which may be considered the retail or packing stores, sound and dry? Pretty well; no damage takes place.

37. You do not find the goods to perish at all from damp? No; moth is the cause of the greatest destruction.

38. Do you think a little moving about, and a little peppering occasionally, would remedy this? They get it every twelve months. It is from the packages being kept open so long that some goods are damaged.

39. Have you much mischief done by moths, especially to the woollen things? Not much, considering the quantity of goods I have. They are always packed in brown paper, and if packages are re-packed they are packed in brown paper as soon as possible.

40. Are you aware of any complaints being made that goods were moth-eaten? Yes. recollect two complaints in reference to goods received direct from England, and which were not opened here at all.

41. Have you drays and horses, and so on, attached to the department, or how do you send away the goods? That is contracted for.

42. Do you ever employ any drays other than the contract drays? If the contractor has not any drays on the stand, and I am in immediate want of one, I take a drayman from the stand, and the contractor would pay him.

43. The contractor would pay him in such a case? Yes.

44. Well, who will he pay—the man you employ, or will you pay him, and he refuse the money to the department? He will pay the man we employ.

45. You would not, in any case, pay the man yourself? No, not a stranger.

46. You would send in to the contractor? Yes.

47. If that system were well observed, would it not be an additional check upon any surreptitious issue of goods from the store, if such a check were needed? Unless the contractor chose to be a rogue, of course it would be.

48. I did not mean that;—if you adhere to the practice of only employing the drays of the contractor, or if you did employ any other, of sending the drayman to the contractor for payment, to the extent of any large quantity of goods, would not that be a check against any attempt of the kind? Yes.

49. Is the store sufficiently large for the purpose of getting out these things to be convenient for readily complying with demands which may come in upon you? No, it is not large enough.

50. You cannot keep open as many goods as you ought to keep open at a time? We have not room to pack.

51. When are the goods most damaged by moths—when they are kept packed or unpacked? By being unpacked. We have to sort them in sizes, and before we have finished we often find them attacked with moth.

52. Then, to a certain extent, the want of space is rather an advantage, because so long as the bales are packed (so far as woollens are concerned) they are better preserved from moths? We have to open a great quantity of clothing, and sort it, and clothing is all issued in sizes.

Mr. Buchanan: Issues of that kind are made in such minute quantities, from four to a dozen articles perhaps, and then when they are prepared we must wait not only until we can obtain a conveyance for them, but also until we can get a sufficient quantity of other stores to make up a dray load. We cannot send away half-a-dozen suits of policemen's clothing to Dubbo or Wellington, but we must wait until we can get enough for a load in that direction.

53. When they require clothing or any supplies in the out-lying districts, you are unable to supply them immediately, because their demands would not amount to a dray load, and you have to wait until in the same direction there are other demands which would make up the necessary quantity? Yes; we should send the whole of one road away at a time;—we should take, for instance, the Southern Road, and get all the goods packed for that, and so with the Western and Northern.

54. Do you think that you require very much larger space for the proper accommodation of the Colonial stores here—I mean in regard to this building—for opening and sorting goods? Yes; we should require a very much larger space if we were to keep the whole of the goods in one store.

55. But that would not so much matter if in a second store you had only whole packages, and brought them here to open them as you wanted them; it saves some expense in carriage no doubt; but, in your experience, what is the additional accommodation you think would be necessary to enable the Colonial Storekeeper to carry out the objects of the department properly, in regard to the storage of goods, the packing, the keeping of them separate, and so on? I should think if we had all the stores together, a building of the same size as the Commissariat Stores would not be too large.

56. That is an immense building? But it would not be too large if we had all the Ordnance goods,

Mr. J. W.
Jenkins.

4 June, 1860.

- Mr. J. W. Jenkins. goods, and everything put together as they should be, instead of being higgledy-piggledy. If a field battery, for instance, were put up ready for use it would require a very large space; these things are now stowed away in different parts of the store.
- 4 June, 1860. 57. How large is the other building that you have—is it much larger than this? Moore's Store—I can scarcely tell you how large it is.
58. Have you as many large packages in that store as you have in this? More; we have all the whole packages there; we never break any packages in that store.
59. Still, you have some unbroken packages here—all the unbroken packages are here, are they not? Yes.
60. Would there be any difficulty in keeping a book which would shew the receipts and issues and remains of stores? I think it would be troublesome.
61. It would be troublesome, no doubt, but would there be any difficulty in reference to the matter; trouble and difficulty are two very different things? I do not think there would be any difficulty, but we should require more clerks than we have at present, if the same forms were continued as now exist.
62. Could you at any time come to an exact balance between the receipts and issues, so as to say there ought to be so many remains, and that there are so many remains in the store? Yes; purchases of goods we have brought very close, nearly always; I do not in any instance know that we have had any mistakes in the balance, there is the same check with one as with the other; if we find large quantities of contractor's goods turn out correct in reference to the receipts and issues, I should think the others will do the same.
63. You think there would be no difficulty about that, but that it would be merely a matter of extra clerical labor? I do not think there would be any difficulty attending it, but we have taken stock of small quantities of goods, and we always found them correct.
64. That is in a short time after? Yes; five or six months after.
65. But, as time rolls on, the means of this check will be out of your reach? Yes.
66. Many other goods will have come in? Yes.
67. So that no true remains can ever have been taken? No.
68. And yet there is no difficulty about it, it would only require extra clerical labor? No.
69. To balance everything without some sort of book such as you mention, you would have to take stock of everything every time you wanted to check the articles; but when you have taken stock, you must set your issues against the receipts, and deduct the one from the other in order to get your remains? We can take stock a second time, and by comparing the second stock with what has been received and what has been issued since, we can get a balance.
70. That might give it to you, but that is a labor which your department could not undertake, nor could it be taken by any other department unless a book were kept for the express purpose. Are there any suggestions in regard to the custody of the stores, and to their preservation from deterioration by moths, or otherwise, that you would wish to offer to the Board? No, I do not think there is.
71. You have been enabled promptly to supply demands? Not at all times; not of all descriptions; we have had to wait occasionally for some things.
72. That is merely because you did not get them? Yes; they were not in store.
73. But, to the extent you are supplied with goods, you are unable to supply them with promptness? Yes.
74. You have sufficient space and hands for that? Oh, yes.
75. Do you think the supply is any more prompt than it would be if any tradesman in the city were to undertake the work? I think we could do it much quicker.
76. And do you think you take any greater degree of care in the packing or in the shipping of these goods, or take any greater precaution in order that they may reach their destination properly, than would be taken by persons in private business? No, I do think we take any greater care.
77. But you take at least as much care? We take as much care as possible to insure their safe arrival.
78. Now, when you pack up things that are to be sent off, for instance, by drays, to some of the outlying districts, those drays come here, I suppose? Yes.
79. And you see that the packages are properly packed, so as to prevent the goods from perishing from exposure to the weather, and so on? Yes.
80. Do you cover them with tarpaulins? That would be the drayman's duty to find tarpaulins for his dray.
81. But suppose he did not do that, would you have no duty in the matter; would it not devolve upon you to see that he did so before he started? I should think not.
82. But goods might perish for the want of this? They are at his risk the moment they are on his dray; he signs to deliver them in good condition as he receives them.
83. Is the issue of clothing regulated by particular periods of the year, that is, is there an annual, a half-yearly, or monthly issue. It is an annual issue of clothing, although we are issuing clothing all the year for extra men.
84. In small quantities? Yes.
85. But for the whole of the force the issue is annual? Annual.
86. One suit or two suits? One coat, two pairs of trousers, two pairs of boots, a hat, and every second year a great coat and cape.

Mr. Buchanan explained that considerable difficulty was felt in consequence of the delay of the Parliamentary votes; that the clothing was to be issued annually, while the votes were only taken from month to month; and that it was impossible for him to split up a coat into twelve parts, and to issue only one-twelfth of a coat; the clothing, therefore, had to be furnished before the supplies were granted.

87. How do you manage in reference to goods that are sent by sea? They are packed in secure cases, and sent down by a dray to the ship.
89. Does any person from this department superintend the shipping of goods? No; they are delivered to the drayman here, and he brings back a receipt signed by the mate or agent for the vessel.
89. He invariably brings a receipt here? Yes.
90. Do you keep any books in your present position? Yes.
91. What are they? I keep two issue books and a receipt book, and a small package book.
92. What are the two issue books? In them are entered everything issued from the store.
93. But why do you keep two? This is rendered necessary by the division of stationery and stores by the separate vote.
94. You say you keep two issue books and a receipt book? Yes.
95. And some other book? Yes; a small book that I keep for the measurement of all packages that go away by dray.
96. Are these books ever inspected by anybody? The chief clerk inspects them now and then.
97. It is in these books that you put down a check upon the foreman; when he puts the goods out upon the floor you go in and see them, and put down in your issue book all the goods there? According to the requisition sent in; I copy the requisition into the book.
98. And that copy of the requisition is, in fact, your issue book? The receipt tallies with the book.
99. Now when you were foreman did you keep any account of the receipts and issues at all? No.
100. And is there any account of the receipts and issues kept by the foreman now? No.
101. He has nothing to do but to unpack and pack? Nothing but to unpack and pack.
102. He keeps no accounts whatever? Nothing but the receipt of packages received from contractors or from ships.
103. No account beyond that? No account beyond that.
104. What does he do with this account of packages—does he copy it in a book? Yes; it is a check in the office.
105. Do the orders to the foreman come from one person alone, or do they come from various officers and clerks in the department? Sometimes from the chief clerk, and sometimes from me.
106. They do not come from one officer alone? No, not from one officer alone.
107. Are there many officers who have to do with getting orders for goods? No, only the chief clerk and myself.
108. You do not think that any other officer gives those orders? No; except in case of emergency.
109. Whose duty do you consider it to be more particularly? Mine.
110. Yours? Yes.
111. Why does the chief clerk interfere with them occasionally? He may do it, instead of it being done through me. I may not be present.
112. But if you were to keep a proper check upon the foreman, should not the order necessarily pass through you? Yes, that would be the only check.
113. Well, then, do goods actually go out at any time, without your knowing it at all after the goods are gone? Not if I am in the store.
114. Yes, but there are cases in which the chief clerk gives orders for goods, you say? That would be when I am not present.
115. And in the same way, these goods would be sent away while you were out? Probably.
116. There is no rule to prevent goods being sent out without your being present? They would have to be checked by me, unless I was away for any long period.
117. Suppose you were away an hour, or two hours? Oh, no, they could not go out without my knowing it then.
118. Well, suppose you were away for half a day? Orders then might be given, and I should not know it until I came back.
119. But you would not have absolutely checked the things? If they had left before I returned.
120. Have there been any instances of that kind? Not that I am aware of.
121. Would you be inclined to say that there have not been? I could not swear that there have not been instances of the kind.
122. It is not a case of swearing; I want merely the preponderance of your belief the one way or the other? I do not think there have.
123. Then, no goods—according to the system established, and according to the ordinary usage of the department—could really go out without having been subjected to your inspection and check? No.
124. By Mr. Buchanan: What is the document upon which the foreman gathers the goods together upon the floor of the store? The requisition.
125. The original requisition? The original requisition.
126. And that document afterwards comes into your hands, and you see it and check the goods by that? Yes, I check the goods by that requisition.
127. And tick off in red ink the items that have been absolutely sent away? Yes.
128. And then, in case these goods are sent up the country, you prepare receipts and send them up, advising the parties of their transmission, and requesting that the receipts might be returned? Yes, the dates of the receipts are kept in the book.
129. If the chief clerk gave the order, it would be merely to expedite the packing? Yes, in case I am absent.

Mr. J. W. Jenkins.

June, 1860.

- Mr. J. W. Jenkins.
 4 June, 1860. 130. By the Chairman: You take receipts from the drayman, in the case of goods being sent by drays; and in the case of goods sent by ship, you take the receipts of the chief officer? Yes.
131. What are the receipts from the parties to whom you send the goods, and which receipts you get back again? A list in detail of all articles sent. A way bill is sent by the dray to a ship when the goods are shipped, and the drayman taking a load away would sign a bill.
132. Then, whether you send the goods by dray or by ship, you send a list to the parties, shewing all the things in detail; and that list those parties return to you, as an acknowledgment for their receipt? As an acknowledgment.
133. And would they reach you, or the Colonial Storekeeper? They would come under cover to the Colonial Storekeeper.
134. Would he give them to you to file? He would hand them to me, and I should enter the receipt of them.
135. They would come properly into your hands as foreman? As issuing clerk.
136. So that you would be in a position to know whether the goods that left the store did or did not really reach the parties? Yes.
137. By Mr. Buchanan: What is the nature of the receipt given by the drayman—is it a receipt for articles or for packages? A receipt for packages.
138. What is the nature of the receipt given by the mates of vessels, for articles or for packages? For packages.

TUESDAY, 5 JUNE, 1860.

Present:—

R. O'CONNOR, Esq., IN THE CHAIR.

CAPTAIN SCOTT, | CAPTAIN OLIVEY.

David Moores called in and examined:—

- D. Moores.
 5 June, 1860. 1. By the Chairman: What position do you hold in this department? I am the foreman of the storehouse.
2. And does your charge extend to the stores within any other building but this? No, I have nothing to do with any stores except those that come here.
3. How long have you been in your present position? Only since last January.
4. Were you in this department before in any other capacity? Yes, I was a laborer; I was in the habit of addressing packages; that was my employment for twelve or thirteen years.
5. In this department? Yes.
6. You were storeman, in fact? Yes.
7. How many storemen have you under you now? I have only three at present.
8. Is that a lesser number than you used to have? Well, we are shorthanded at present.
9. It is a lesser number than you have been accustomed to have? Yes.
10. Is there any reason for that reduction beyond accident? I do not know what is the reason of it; it gives me a little extra labor; it causes me to take home the little writing that I have to do, and I am obliged to work just the same as the other men during the day.
11. Is there any less provision for storemen on the estimates than their used to be? I am not able to answer that question.
12. Then the shortness in the number of storemen is not a permanent thing, but accidental? It is not permanent; I expect more help almost every day. Sometimes we have to make extra hours in consequence of being shorthanded.
13. What do you consider your full complement? Well, I am certainly one short at present.
14. Four, then, you consider to be your full complement? I have seen the time when we could not get through with four, and extra men have been employed.
15. Yes, but those things will happen everywhere: for the general run of business, four would be ample, would they not? Yes, that is the number we have been in the habit of employing.
16. You are charged personally with the receipt of all the stores that come here, and with the issue of all the stores that leave this department? I keep an account of all the stores that come in.
17. That is, in whole packages—in bulk? Yes, in bulk.
18. When they come in in bulk, they come in, I suppose, in pursuance of tenders accepted? Sometimes they come in bales, and sometimes in cases.
19. But, I say, they come in here to satisfy tenders? Yes; I receive them in small quantities sometimes.
20. When they come in in bulk in that way, what is done with them immediately they arrive? When I first receive them I generally get a ticket with them, which I enter in a book.
21. From whom do you get the ticket? From the drayman who brings them.
22. That is made out by the person who sent the goods? Yes, if they come from a ship they are made out by the landing clerk.
23. What then do you do? I enter it into a rough sort of a book.

24. But you try, I suppose, whether the cases and bales correspond with the numbers on the ticket? I have nothing to do with the contents of the cases, Mr. Jenkins sees to that.
25. I am speaking of the number of cases and bales, not of their contents: what is the use of a ticket to you unless you ascertain that the proper number of cases and bales are on the dray? I take notice that I have the full complement. Mr. Jenkins asks me if I have got the proper number, and I look them over.
26. Then you do not count the cases and bales until asked by Mr. Jenkins—not when they arrive at the store door? Yes, he tells me how many I have to receive, and I take notice.
27. Does not the ticket tell you? If he has a hundred to bring he only brings a portion of them at once, and the quantity he brings at once is on this ticket.
28. In point of fact, the ticket shews correctly the number of cases on the dray? Yes, if I did not receive them I should not sign the ticket.
29. Then this ticket is a duplicate? Yes.
30. Apparently, you sign one of the copies? Yes, and give it to the drayman, and one I keep.
31. You would not sign that without satisfying yourself that all the bales were on the dray, and were delivered to you? No, because if I did, and they were not on the dray, I should expect to have to pay for them.
32. The Board require mere naked facts without any reasons, because, of course, if you signed and they were not there, there would be an amount of responsibility attached to you if you signed for what you did not receive. Well, then, having got in these cases, or bales, what do you do with them? I take them into the store and pile them up in the most convenient place I can find until I am ordered to open them.
33. And how long, generally, is it from the time these cases or bales are stored to the time you are ordered to open them? There is no accounting for that; I got three cases last night which, as soon as they were put on the platform here, were opened, and to-day the contents will be sent away to the Printing Office.
34. But what turns out to be the fact in actual practice when you do open these cases—is it immediately previous to the goods being wanted to be sent away? Yes, and then I have to give an account of what these packages contain inside.
35. But you only open them at that particular time when you are directed to open them, and with a view to sending the goods away? I never open them until I am ordered in any case whatever.
36. When you do open them who is present besides yourself? Generally the man in the store, and also Mr. Jenkins, who sees that there is the number of goods or articles in the cases or bales that there ought to be.
37. He sees that? Yes, and I am there at the same time.
38. Now, does he see that in regard to every case and every bale that comes into the store? Yes, I fetch him up if he is not there, and hand these things over to see that they are all correct.
39. But I am asking you if you open, and if he inspects and counts the contents of every bale and every case that comes into the store? There are bales of blankets that I know contain a certain number; they are sent away without being opened; they are not required to be opened.
40. Well, then, you say that you do not open these cases until you are ordered to do so by Mr. Jenkins? No, I never open them without somebody else's authority besides my own.
41. And when you do open them Mr. Jenkins is present to ascertain that they are correct? If he is not present I leave the things there until he comes and looks at them.
42. But you do not consider yourself responsible for the quantities when you do open them? I sometimes have not the list of those things, and that is the reason I have to get Mr. Jenkins.
43. Then only Mr. Jenkins and yourself are present when these cases are opened? Oh! yes, the men in the store are present also.
44. I am not speaking of the men in the store, but of the officers of the department? The clerks do not meddle with the store.
45. Is the Colonial Storekeeper present when you open them? I have seen him present, and he has ordered me to open them too—you mean Mr. Buchanan?
46. Yes; is his presence casual, or is it the usual course for him to be present? He has often come and said, "David, open this case or bale," and such I have done.
47. And after you have opened the case or the bale, upon the order of the Colonial Storekeeper, how long have the contents remained in the store before they were issued? Some of them have remained in the store perhaps for years, and some have not remained in long.
48. Then, in that case, the bale or case would not be opened in order to get goods out to send them away immediately? If they were required they would.
49. But they would not be opened unless they were required? Oh! no, they would not be opened until they were ordered.
50. Well, then, when you do open them upon the order of the Colonial Storekeeper, and in his presence, what is done then, are the goods counted? Oh! yes, they are counted.
51. And by whom? I might be running too far; I have seen Mr. Buchanan order a case to be opened, and fetch the chief clerk, here now, and a gentleman of the name of Mr. McKenny, to count these things over.
52. I thought Mr. Jenkins was the person? This was a gentleman who was here sometime ago; Mr. Jenkins does his work now.
53. It is always a clerk who counts the quantities of goods in the bales? I get the requisition and then I get out the goods and count them, and when I have done this I fetch Mr. Jenkins to see if my count is correct.

D. Moores.

5 June, 1800.

- D. Moores. 54. That is with regard to the issues? Yes.
55. I am speaking of the receipts. When the cases are opened you say that some clerk is brought up to see that the contents are in accordance with the tender? Yes, Mr. Jenkins.
56. Then in the case where you have opened bales of goods by the direction of the Colonial Storekeeper? Yes, he has been fetched up.
57. When you have opened cases by the direction of Mr. Jenkins, and when the Colonial Storekeeper was not present, who tested the quality of the goods—that is to say, who tried whether the goods in the case or bale were equal to the pattern? Mr. Jenkins could always certify as to whether they were correct or not, because he had the papers.
58. He certified as to quantity, but did he also certify as to quality? He did.
59. Having spoken of the receipts of goods, we will now refer to the issues. When these cases or bales are opened there is actually a test to see that they contain the quantities they purport to contain, and there must also be a test to see that the goods in them are according to sample,—now who performs that test? Are you speaking of the goods tendered for?
60. Yes, the goods tendered for, and actually brought into the store and delivered to you—such as need to be opened, you do not open all of them you know? When the goods come in, the sample is brought up and put alongside them, to see that they are as good as the pattern.
61. What officer applies that test? Both Mr. Jenkins and I; if I see that they are inferior to the samples, I mention it; in some cases where I have mentioned it, the goods have been returned.
62. The Colonial Storekeeper himself does not apply the test? I have seen him look at them.
63. To whom have you mentioned this usually? To Mr. Jenkins and Mr. Buchanan, and he has ordered me to send the goods back again.
64. And where goods have been sent back, have you received other goods of a better description from the same parties in return? Yes, I have.
65. What authority have you for issuing goods out of this department? Well, Sir, Mr. Jenkins gives me the requisition, and according to that requisition I get them out and tick them off with black lead pencil, and then when I have got them out as correct as I can, I fetch Mr. Jenkins and he ticks them over after me. They are handed over again; he calls every article over and I pass it, and he ticks off every article in red ink.
66. And then what do you do? It is certified at the top of the requisition where they are for, and I make out a label. The goods are packed, and according to that label the cases or bales are addressed.
67. There are different values attached to the same description of goods—that is to say, you may have three kinds of blankets, trousers, coats, or jackets. When you pack up goods in that way, upon requisition, do you fix upon them the price, or do you denote in any way the prices of the goods sent away? It states dress trousers or undress trousers in the requisition, and they are got out accordingly. In the same way with jackets.
68. I do not desire to confine myself to jackets and trousers alone, but, looking at the whole of the stores, everything has cost something, and the price must be known, and the department that gets a thing ought to be charged with the price—how is that ascertained? I do not know anything about that.
69. You have the requisitions? Yes, but I do not know the price of these articles. There is a price marked on these orders, but that is not my business.
70. Are you aware whether it is put by Mr. Jenkins? I do not know which of the gentlemen it is performed that duty.
71. But is it performed? Yes; the price of all things tendered for is marked beside the articles in black lead. Every article that I receive, tendered for, I put "Rd." opposite to it, and bring it down to the office, and they tick it off in the book.
72. When you are complying with the requisition and get out these goods, could you tell that the goods you are selecting to send away belong to this, that, or the other invoice? Could you say this pair of trousers came from this person, and cost so much? No, I cannot tell that. I do not pretend to meddle with things of that sort. I do not know where they come from. Sometimes goods come from England. But if they happened to come from the contractor I would know where they came from without the requisition at all.
73. It is necessary to put down the cost of the stores supplied to the different departments, and therefore it is necessary to know the prices of the things you pack away. If you yourself take no note of the prices who does take a note of them? I never take any note of the prices; I never was ordered to do so.
74. But you do not pack things away before shewing them to Mr. Jenkins? No, never, if he is not here I fetch another clerk.
75. And that other clerk has all the invoices, and can ascertain the value of things? He takes it out of my charge. I let him see what I am sending away.
76. You know simply about the packing? That is all.
77. You never pack away any goods unless you have the requisition in your hand—is that it? Yes, some things I do; but I get a written order.
78. You never pack any away upon a verbal order? No; I get a written order. For instance, a constable comes and wants a single suit of clothes. I get a memorandum, and when the man has got the suit of clothes I see that he comes down and signs the book for the clothes he takes away.
79. The constable comes direct to you from where? Mr. Jenkins will give me a written order what to give this man—a portion of his clothing perhaps.
80. Then the man presents himself at the office before he comes to you? Yes. I send him down if he comes to me first.

81. I suppose they are sent here by some responsible officer of the Police? Oh! yes—D. Moores.
 "Captain M'Levic" I often see at the bottom of the note. Mr. Black sometimes comes with them. 5 June, 1860.
82. Yes—but there is always the authority of some responsible officer of the Police for the issue of these goods? Yes, there is always some initial at the bottom.
83. You never, on any occasion, pack away goods, except upon a written order? No, I never pack any goods away without proper authority from the office.
84. You said a written order? Without a written order; I would not know what to get out without a written order.
85. Well, after you have packed away the goods, and they are boxed up in cases or bales, is it left to you to see that they are put on carts and sent away up the country, or to ships, or under whose superintendence is that done? I will throw a light upon that subject, if you think proper. When I have packed them I make a memorandum of how many packages there are to go to such a place. I take that memorandum down to Mr. Jenkins, to make out the "conveyance" of those goods. He gives me the "conveyance," and I look to see that it contains as many packages as I have to send away.
86. Now, is it possible, Mr. Moores, for goods to be packed and sent away without the knowledge of any of the clerks of the department? Well, I could not well do such a thing—some of the men in the store would see me.
87. Do not make it a personal matter—there is no such idea upon the brain of any member of the Board; I simply ask you the question? After these things are put on the floor to be packed, I see that they are done in a creditable manner. If it were done I should check them. It would be a mistake. But they could not do it. I am generally walking about to see them packed, and, in fact, I help also to pack them. I cannot see how such a thing could be done without the clerks and the men in the store were all concerned.
88. So many persons must observe what is going on in the store that it would be utterly impossible to pack and cart things away without proper authority? Nothing is sent away without being addressed. They would not bring it down until it is addressed.
89. Down where? The men would not bring it out of the store and put it on the dray unless they saw the address stating where it was going to.
90. What drays do you employ? We employ a person of the name of Murphy; and if we cannot get Murphy, when things are urgent we get another dray.
91. Do you not contract for the carriage of goods? I do not know anything about that.
92. You have told me the number of storemen you have? Three only at present. One is very seldom in the store; he is made a messenger of. He is rarely in the store unless there is some heavy lift and we cannot do without him.
93. He is very frequently employed as messenger? He is indeed. I am very sorry to say I have often to ask Mr. Jenkins to give me a lift with packages, and somebody else that I could mention. I have sometimes asked the drayman to give me a lift. We have had packages of ten hundred weight, and that is a great lift for two men.
94. Then you do not think that any of your storemen should be employed as messengers? Sometimes they are made use of.
95. Well, looking at the general run of business in the department, do you not think that one of the storemen might occasionally be employed as messenger without any detriment to the business in the store?—No doubt there will be occasions when you require all the hands you can get, but in the general run of business could not one man be employed as messenger without any detriment to the issuing of stores? I do not think he could. When a little powder is required I make myself useful, and bring it over in my own boat. I could not spare one of the men out of the store. Something must go behind if they do take him away.
96. Then in point of fact you do not think it right that any of the storemen should be employed as messengers? Well, if they are, some of the work must be neglected.
97. They cannot be so employed without detriment to their own proper work? They cannot.
98. Now in regard to goods supplied, that is, goods coming into the store,—when they are opened there is a test of quality—to see that they are according to pattern? That is, the goods on contract—yes.
99. Who supplies that test, and sees that the goods supplied are in exact accordance with the pattern? I look at them, and Mr. Jenkins and Mr. Buchanan have looked at them, and when they have not been according to pattern they have ordered me to send them back.
100. You say that Mr. Buchanan has looked at them? Yes.
101. That is occasionally? When he has come up into the store.
102. But is it a regular practice with Mr. Buchanan? To see that they are according to sample?
103. Yes, a constant practice? Yes—anything from a contractor; he used to get the sample and see whether they were as good as the sample.
104. Does he do that on every occasion without omission? To the best of my knowledge he does. I have seen some things, such as flour; he has taken very great notice to see whether it was according to sample or not.
105. But you look at them sometimes and make complaints? Yes, if I see that they are not as good as the sample.
106. To whom do you complain? To Mr. Jenkins and Mr. Buchanan, to see whether they are to be returned.
107. And Mr. Jenkins looks at them, and if he does not find them according to pattern—? He sends them back.
108. He does not make any complaints then? He sends them back.

D. Moores. 109. On his own responsibility? Yes; I do not like to send them back.

110. What occasion would there be for making complaint if the head of your department were present himself for the purpose of submitting these things to the test? He might not see the defects, and I might. He might not be taking particular notice, and I might say, "These things are not according to sample," and he would say "Send them all back again." I have known a large sample of shoes to be sent back again, because one or two pairs were not according to sample.

111. You made this complaint to him, he standing by your side as the goods were opened? He has not been standing exactly by my side; I have taken them down to his office.

Mr. Buchanan: My supervision is a general supervision; but it is the duty of witness to test each pair, and it would depend on the number of objectionable pairs whether I rejected the whole or only those pairs which were not according to sample. The men in the store serve as viewers, Mr. Jenkins as inspector, and myself as the head.

Percival Wilkinson, Esq., Assistant Military Storekeeper, called in and examined:—

P. Wilkinson,
Esq.

5 June, 1860.

1. By the Chairman: Do you ever receive stores upon tender in this Colony? We have done formerly.

2. When you received stores in that way, I suppose you used to call for tenders by advertisement? Yes, by different advertisements.

3. Did these advertisements usually contain a description of the qualities and quantities of the goods you required, or were the advertisements for time contracts? They stated quantities, but the goods were generally accepted by sample.

4. When the goods came in, whose duty was it to apply the test of the sample to them? In our case the Commissariat Officer, myself, and generally the Clerk of Works.

5. Did you consider it necessary to open the packages and count them, and ascertain that they contained throughout the right quantities, and were in accordance with the pattern? No, I do not think we did; we examined the articles generally with the samples.

6. But suppose a bale or case were to come in containing two or three hundred pairs of trousers or anything of that kind? Those we should open certainly, coming from a private person.

7. When the goods came into the store, and were so tested for quantity and quality, in whom would lie the charge and responsibility of their safe custody? The responsibility would lie with the storekeeper.

8. With yourself? It would now lie with myself, but formerly with the storekeeper; I was then the second officer of the department.

9. And, notwithstanding that, you would have several hands under you to carry out your duties, still the responsibility you would feel would be with yourself? There is no doubt about that. That my own Board would hold me responsible there is no question.

10. Have you not some system of accounting by which you shew in one broad sheet as it were the receipts, the issues, and the remains of stores? Yes; we have a store ledger.

11. But it shews these three things? It shews the receipts and issues.

12. And the remains? And the remains—the account is balanced annually.

13. You do balance the account annually? Yes.

14. And you ascertain from actual stock-taking that the goods in the store correspond with the remains on your broad sheet? There has not been a stock-taking at this station since 1850.

15. But that is the rule of the service? Yes, and it is again coming into operation under new arrangements—an annual stock-taking.

16. And that annual stock-taking would test the accuracy of the figures given as remains? Not altogether, because the officer who is appointed to take the stock is not supposed to tally, count, or measure every article; he only selects what he thinks proper here and there. But what is called a "remain" is the result of an actual counting and weighing; the officer appointed is then supposed to see everything.

17. I believe a declaration is made as to the accuracy of these balances whenever they take place? Not upon my annual ledger. I merely sign the ledger; of course it is sent to England, and undergoes an examination in the office in London.

18. Then you do not make any declaration to the office in London that the remains shewn are correct? No.

19. No declaration whatever? No; it is simply a document I sign.

20. We had it in evidence from Mr. Wrentmore that some declaration was made, but it might be by a different department? I am aware that there is a declaration in reference to cash always, but not with reference to stores.

21. Do you find that woollen goods are much deteriorated and damaged by moth? No doubt of it.

22. Is the damage considerable? Very considerable; and particularly when bales are open.

23. And I suppose there are no means of preventing that? I am not aware of any; it has been tried for years, but no means have been discovered.

24. Not even with the large space you have? No; we cannot effect it. I find that in the barrack stores, and everywhere else, woollen goods are affected—indeed I have had great coats from England so affected, and have discovered it on opening the bales. In my own regiment there was a survey upon the last great coats we had, and they had never been opened before.

25. When you become aware that any of your woollen goods are damaged in this way, you do not attempt to issue them,—you put them on one side, do you not? They are put on one side for survey. P. Wilkinson,
Esq.
26. And when surveyed they are condemned, and perhaps sold? Sold or sent to England. 5 June, 1860.
I send the greater portion of all old woollen articles to England,—the bedding for instance.
27. Could you at this moment state what is about the value of all the stores under your charge? No, I could not.
28. Not even a rough guess? No, not even a rough guess.
29. Could you state the value of your annual issues for some time past—or how much your issues would amount to in twelve months? I could not. The value of imperial stores is not generally known by me—a storekeeper is not supposed to have that information; it is kept locked up in England. The information I have gleaned in reference to the price of military stores has been obtained from the bills of lading, of goods which have come out for the Colonial Government,—there the articles are priced.
30. It would seem to be the practice—? It is. Some years ago I know that a captain in the navy applied to the Board for the price of certain military stores, in order to charge them against the gunners. That information was given, but with the intimation that it was not usual to afford it to outstations.
31. You consider then that for the protection of goods, and especially woollens, it is better to keep them as long as possible in whole packages? Yes, I should say so.
32. And do you consider that in getting supplies from Home, or from the Colony, it is safe to rely as a test of the quantity and quality upon one or two packages out of many? With regard to the stores received from England, we always take them as numbered, unless we want to stow them away. I should have no hesitation in taking any number of bales of blankets or woollen articles as they were numbered.
33. But stores received in the Colony? I should not receive a bale of goods packed in the Colony without counting; I never have done.
34. In fact then you have not been called upon to form an opinion whether you would or not be satisfied with a single bale out of a number, if packed in this Colony? No; I have never been placed in that position. Of course we had at one time to buy a great number of shoes and a great quantity of clothing. The shoes came in loose and were tallied. Most of the things came in in that way.
35. What amount of clerical labor is employed in your store department proper? I have one clerk, but that is very inadequate I must say.
36. There is I suppose a foreman of stores? Yes, and I have two laborers.
37. Have you found that a foreman and two laborers are sufficient to perform the manual part of the work? I have found them generally sufficient; but there are times when I am obliged to have the assistance of military labor.
38. Do you find the space, at present at your command, very considerably in excess of your requirements,—do your stores occupy the whole of those buildings? The whole.
39. You have some method of judging I suppose of the quantity of stores under the charge of the Colonial Storekeeper? No, I have not. I know that he has a very large charge, and I believe they are distributed.
40. Do you feel yourself in a position to say whether—looking at them in bulk—he has as large a quantity of stores as you have now in the Commissariat? I should think he has, quite as large. I could not answer positively, because I have no knowledge beyond this building. I believe there is a large quantity of stores in another building.
41. And yet you say the space you have is not more than enough for your purpose? For my purpose it certainly is not.
42. It would not admit of the setting apart of any portion of it? Not at present.
43. There is a place where gunpowder is kept, and must be kept,—now what would you say as to the desirability of lodging the firearms and police clothing in a central department under the superintendence of the Inspector General of Police;—would they be as likely to be secure there as they are here? That would depend entirely upon the accommodation you had for it.
44. Supposing a place were built for arms and clothing—that you had proper accommodation—as regards the fitness of the custody and security of the things,—what would you think of such an arrangement? It would be an arrangement quite at variance with the rules of our service.
45. You have one dépôt? We have one dépôt.
46. And all arms and branches of the service derive their supplies from that point? All pass through me. Even the clothing of the regiment now passes through my hands. It is sent to me.
47. Have you much difficulty in despatching your stores either by dray to inland towns or by ship to places more remote? No, when I want conveyance I apply to the Commissariat. They find me conveyance both by land and water.
48. And that is done I suppose by tender? No; they have their own carts, and if they require extra conveyance they hire at town rates.
49. When stores are sent by drays or by vessels, as the case may be, how do you ascertain that the goods have safely arrived at their destination? If they are sent by water there is generally a bill of lading sent, and of course the officer to whom the stores are sent would certify upon that bill of lading whether they were delivered or not.
50. That is in regard to stores conveyed by water. Now as to stores conveyed by drays,—I suppose you get way-bills or something of that kind? Mine is simply town conveyance; therefore there is no occasion for anything of the sort. It is done generally by people employed by the Commissariat—their own laborers.

P. Wilkinson, Esq. 51. Then as to the receipts of goods and also as to the issues,—do you personally superintend the opening of cases and the repacking, when you issue them? No.

52. Who superintends that? The foreman.

5 June, 1860. 53. But still you hold yourself responsible? I hold myself responsible, but it would be utterly impossible that an officer at the head of the department could do it. I never knew it done.

54. You do not personally superintend those matters, but you hold yourself responsible? Not to the extent of seeing things packed and so forth. I give the orders and very frequently see that the things are there, but I do not see them packed. You must depend upon the people about you for something.

55. But when you issue you do ascertain that the quantities to be issued are on the spot? Yes.

56. And you also ascertain that the quantities which come to you on tenders or otherwise, are actually received? Yes.

57. You make yourself personally cognizant of the fact? I satisfy myself that it is the case.

58. Have you any money payments to make at your department? Yes, we have a few, but they are very trifling. By a recent regulation the payment of my establishment is in the hands of the Commissariat. There is a general paymaster; but I do make payments on account of the Colony.

59. Do you pay by cheque or in cash? By cheque in most cases—in almost every case.

60. Do you ascertain that the parties to whom payments are made are really and truly the parties entitled to receive the payments,—have you some knowledge of them? Yes, I am always satisfied that they are the parties.

61. Do you make them come to you or do you send payment to them? I very frequently take the money to them, but the general rule is, that they come to the office. I do it for the sake of convenience, because sometimes small sums are allowed to run on for a long time; people do not trouble themselves about them.

62. In those cases where you send the money you know who the parties are, their places of business, and all about them? Yes.

63. How is the actual payment then made witnessed? The bulk of the payments are witnessed by the barrack sergeant.

64. But suppose you send payment—when the parties call upon you there would be no difficulty—whoever paid the money I suppose would witness? It very rarely occurs that I do send money in that way, but I have occasionally sent money by the messenger, and then he witnesses the payment.

65. Do you cross your cheques when you send them in that way by a messenger, or do you take any pains in reference to that matter? I do not recollect that I ever gave the messenger a cheque to take. The sums sent have generally been so small that I have paid them in cash.

66. Mere petty amounts? Petty amounts.

67. Then the rule is, in reference to sums of any consequence, that the parties should call on you for payment? Should come to the office, as a general rule; but you must deviate sometimes, on account of the difficulty of getting people to come for small sums.

68. Supposing that your department called for tenders for any particular supplies, would it receive, or in any way recognise a tender from a person who was wholly unknown? Why in a case of that sort they would apply for his sureties. It is very possible that people may tender whom I have never seen before, and of whose character I know nothing.

69. But still in such a case you would apply for the sureties of those parties? Yes, in cases where sureties were taken. It would depend very much upon that.

70. The sureties, of course, must be known? Yes, they must be known.

71. Is it an invariable rule to take sureties for goods supplied in that way, or is it only an occasional rule governed by the amount of supplies? I am not aware that in my department sureties have been taken for goods supplied in that way. What I allude to are standing contracts, and not simple tenders;—time contracts.

72. By Mr. Buchanan: I think you have known this department for a great many years? I have.

73. Probably you will state, as near as you can, the number of years you have known this department? I think I may take it up from the year 1838. Mr. Rogers—

74. You recollect Mr. Rogers being in charge of this department? I do.

75. He filled the office of Ordnance Storekeeper also? He did.

76. Do you recollect anything of the circumstances that led to his resignation of the appointment of Colonial Storekeeper? Why, my impression is that it was owing to some parliamentary affair—some Council affair.

77. Are you aware what at that day was the strength of the staff of the department? No, I could not say whether it was three or four.

78. If I give you the names you will probably recollect them: I was chief clerk of the department, Mr. Sharp was also a clerk, Mr. Taylor was a clerk, and there was also Mr. McKenny? Yes.

79. Do you recollect that that was in 1844—the period of Mr. Rogers' resignation? Yes.

80. Do you recollect the establishment being then reduced to one clerk? I do not recollect it.

81. Are you aware whether at that day, and with that establishment, it was the practice of this department to keep a store ledger? I am not aware that it was a practice.

82. Have you any impression whether it was so or not? No, I have no impression that it was. I do not remember. I could not say whether Mr. Rogers introduced such a thing or not. I had no connection with it.

3 The keeping of a store account in the Ordnance Service, or the War Department, as it may may now be termed, extends not only to the store branch, but to every other service that receives or draws stores from the public? The store ledger? P. Wilkinson,

Esq.

84. They keep a store account? Yes.

85. For instance, every regiment, every ship of war, every individual who draws stores from the War Department, is required to account to the store department for those goods,—is that the case? Yes; I can speak particularly as to the navy and artillery. The gunner is obliged to pass his accounts annually with the Home department.

5 June, 1860.

86. So that the system is one of general application there, and does not apply merely to the store department? No.

87. Is there not an office in London instituted specially for the checking of accounts? I do not know how it is now; but there was, under the late system, a store examiner's branch. There was a store accountant and a store examiner, and I imagine the same system exists now, because there is a branch called the store department.

88. And under that system every officer receiving stores had to account in detail for every item? Yes.

89. So that in fact the Government never lost sight of their goods into whose hands soever they might pass? No, I should say not generally. I allude particularly to those branches.

90. They do not lose sight of it in any case? No.

91. Do you consider that such a system can be worked either easily or cheaply in this colony? No, I think it would be a very difficult matter to work it here.

92. By the Chairman: Difficult in so far as it is difficult to induce any person to undertake labor to which he has not been accustomed? Yes.

93. But in its own nature do you see anything difficult in it? You must have a head department.

94. No doubt that is really necessary? And then every branch would necessarily be in correspondence with that department.

95. But suppose there existed an account department—a check department, independently of the principal store department,—all accounts of stores would come for audit into this account branch, to which all the departments and services would be required to make their returns. This branch being possessed of the quantities that come out of the main depôt, would see that the quantities given by the different departments were so far correct. The department would also have an account of their issues and remains, and the means of check would thus be in its own hands. Now if these stores were distributed over the entire service, do you think it would fall heavily on any part to render to this check department an account of receipts, issues, and remains during the twelve months? It would be rather a difficult thing to arrange, I think.

96. By Mr. Buchanan: Do you conceive that one or two clerks would be sufficient for such a system? I do not think they would.

97. Do you think half-a-dozen would be sufficient? It would be a very serious matter.

98. This [book produced] is a register of the various demands which were made upon this department during the course of 1859—the mere list as they were received from time to time? Of requisitions?

99. Of requisitions—1179 in the course of the year. Do you from your experience (which is extensive) in keeping store accounts, think it would be a trifling matter to keep a store account in which the whole issue is embodied? I recollect that at Portsmouth it was the duty of two clerks solely to keep the store ledger, and, looking at the number of requisitions in that book, I should certainly say that there were not more at Portsmouth than here.

100. By the Chairman: And did the stores which would be carried to account in such a book as that at Portsmouth range over as great a variety as the stores of which the Colonial Storekeeper here has charge? With the exception of clothing.

101. There was no clothing? At that time there was no clothing in the charge of the Ordnance Storekeeper, but the other stores were very extensive; they were all warlike stores. That was not the head station, but merely a branch for Portsmouth and the adjoining counties, where there were no Ordnance stations, but principally for navy and army purposes. They have corresponding establishments at all the large ports in England—Plymouth, for instance, and Chatham; Woolwich is an enormous principal department.

102. Then the amount of stores, judging from the requisitions you see before you, dealt with at Portsmouth, would not be greater, though it might be as great? I cannot judge by looking at the number. As to the quantities of articles I can give no opinion, but the work, if vouchers are made for these, must be very heavy. It would be according to our system, because they are made in triplicate.

103. Are there any particular periods of the year to which officers are restricted in making their requisitions, or are they permitted to make their requisitions as they feel their wants, at any period of the year? When the Convict Department was under the Ordnance Department, they were made by quarterly requisitions; but now that is not adhered to, and the things are issued as required. The different services make their applications as they want the articles. For instance, a man of war could not make a quarterly requisition. As soon as the ships come in they send in their requisitions to replace stores.

104. By Mr. Buchanan: When you speak of Portsmouth, am I correct in stating that you are not troubled there with the receipts of stores from contractors in any shape, or but very rarely? Very rarely—for mere trifling things only—things which can be purchased cheaper on the spot than they can be sent from London.

105. But compared with the bulk of the stores, those purchased are insignificant? They are very trifling; probably they would not amount to more than £50 in a year.

106. Then at Portsmouth, I think I am correct in saying that your great supplies were derived from the main depôts at Woolwich and the Tower? Yes.

- P. Wilkinson, Esq.
5 June, 1860.
107. And that they came to you generally in bulk? In bulk.
108. And consequently on the receipt side of your store account your entries would be small compared with your issues on the issue side? Oh! no. If you mean that we post the receipts in bulk, that is not the case. We posted in detail.
109. But although you posted in detail, that detail was compressed, inasmuch as you had not many receipts of that sort compared with your issues. No.
110. But in a department like this, where we are deriving stores from all sources, do you consider there is any analogy between the two? No, I do not think there is. I can see clearly the difficulty.
111. We must have surveys upon the stores and vouchers for them, and they arrive from so many people; that of itself increases the vouchers and the work? Yes.
112. By the Chairman: In the event of the opening of any portion of the stores that would come in bulk at Portsmouth, I suppose the bulk portion of the book would get credit for the packages opened, and you would debit yourself with the amount in detail as found in the package? We debit ourselves with the articles as detailed in the bill of lading. We take no account of the bales. It is considered with regard to stores received from England that you may take the account as correct instead of opening the packages. Therefore, if I have one hundred bales of blankets, of fifty in a bale, I debit myself with the total number of blankets.
113. And do not put down the bales at all? Do not open the bales until they are wanted. If, on opening the bale, I find a deficiency, it is always allowed upon reporting that such a bale was deficient so much; but an error of that kind is of very rare occurrence.
114. By Mr. Buchanan: Under the Ordnance system the value of stores is a matter with which the out-stations do not deal at all, I understand? No.
115. They are not required to furnish accounts of that character? No.
116. If, in addition to keeping a store ledger—involving the issues of this service, and involving receipts both from England and the Colony from numerous individuals—this department should also be required to keep an account of the values,—do you think it possible that that can be done with the present assistance of the department—that assistance being four clerks only? No, I think not.
117. When the Ordnance Department in this Colony was at its maximum, what was the assistance then allowed? A storekeeper, a deputy storekeeper, and five clerks.
118. And could you, during any single year in which the whole of that number of officers were employed, furnish this Board with a statement of the number of requisitions received during any twelve months?—would it be possible to do it? I dare say I could do it, but it would be very much within the space of that I am quite certain, because a majority of the requisitions at that time were quarterly.
119. In this case the bulk of them are yearly? Yes.
120. By the Chairman: You had to deal with the entire convict establishments of the Colony? We had at that time.
- Mr. Buchanan*: With which I have now to deal, for they were transferred to the Colony.
121. By the Chairman: Had you to deal with the convict establishments in Van Diemen's Land at the same time? No.
122. Only those in this Colony? Only those in this Colony.
123. And did your dealings with the military extend to other Colonies, or was it confined to the military of this Colony? Merely to this Colony, then including Melbourne and Queensland.
124. To this Colony as it then stood? To this Colony as it then stood. We had three regiments; their head quarters were at Sydney, Parramatta, and Windsor.
125. I suppose your memory will not serve you to state at this moment the number of convicts still chargeable upon the Commissariat? No.

William Colburn Mayne, Esq., called in and examined:—

- W. C. Mayne, Esq.
5 June, 1860.
1. By the Chairman: You are Auditor General? Yes.
2. The Board desire some information as to the system of auditing accounts from the Colonial Storekeeper's Department. It would seem that all goods supplied for the public service to the Colonial Stores are paid for now by the Colonial Storekeeper's Department? Latterly they have been reverting to the old system.
3. Then that is a reversion to a system which formerly subsisted? Yes; what I mean is that there was a system by which the departments themselves paid the value of the stores issued to them. These amounts were recovered from them by the Colonial Storekeeper's Department; they had, in fact, their own store votes to expend, but that has been altered.
4. Calling upon the Colonial Storekeeper to pay the tradesmen is a practice wholly new, is it not? Directly it is. Previous to my having anything to do with the Audit Department payments were made through the Audit Office on the Treasury.
5. Now, when is the Colonial Storekeeper called upon to make returns of his disbursements for the public service? He furnishes monthly to the Audit Office a statement of his drafts against the bank credit established in his favor.
6. And what vouchers does he send you in support of those statements? He sends us bills of the goods purchased from the parties, and states the department for which they are purchased—vouchers in the ordinary shape.

7. That would seem almost to shew that goods were supplied by tradesmen only as they were actually required by departments? That I am not in a position to say.
8. The Colonial Storekeeper then furnishes bills of account from the tradesmen supplying stores for the public service? Yes; vouchers in support of his drafts.
9. Have you any means of knowing the fact of the existence or non-existence of the tradesman whose name is upon the head of a bill or account? Many of the tradesmen we know, of course; but there may be cases of parties supplying of whom we know nothing whatever.
10. That you know is a matter of accident and not of necessity? Not of necessity.
11. Have you anything to do with calling for tenders, Captain Mayne? Nothing whatever.
12. Your duty is confined simply to the auditing of accounts? Yes, after disbursement.
13. Suppose the case of a fictitious tenderer, fictitious goods, and fictitious accounts—and looking to the circumstance that the knowledge of the identity of the person whose name is at the bill head is a matter of accident and not of necessity in your department—what chance have you of detection? At present we have no means of detecting it, because we have not the receipt for the goods stated to be furnished to the department. If we had this we should know that the goods were not fictitious, and that the department had received what it was stated had been procured for them.
14. In the absence of all store books shewing the receipts, issues, and remains, how can you tell at any moment whether goods are actually required for the public service or not? I cannot possibly tell that. It forms no part of our duty.
15. You deal simply with the figures as they come before you? Simply with accounts after disbursement.
16. And your duty begins and ends with the attestation that two and two make four—the verifying of that? The verifying that the amount stated to be expended is supported by the ordinary, usual, and proper vouchers. That those vouchers might be fictitious or forged there is no doubt; in the same way as a cheque presented to a bank may be forged.
17. And you have no means of ascertaining that? We have no means of detecting whether those vouchers are forged vouchers or not.
18. The departments themselves make no return whatever of the stores? Not to us. Under the system to which I alluded, when the departments paid to the Colonial Storekeeper's department for all stores furnished to them, there was a check, because of course they would only pay for that which they had received.
19. Have you any knowledge of the system of advertising for tenders, and of the receipt, inspection, and scheduling of tenders? I have a knowledge of it, but not officially. It forms no part of my official duties.
20. Not now, in any way? No. The only tenders in which I am officially concerned are those received for the conveyance of Post Office Mails. I form one of the Board who open, examine, and consider those tenders.
21. Would the Board consider itself warranted in entertaining a tender for such a service, for instance, from any person who was not known? Certainly, if the necessary securities were forthcoming.
22. If the necessary securities were forthcoming? Yes. As regards Post Office tenderers, I may state the fact, that I myself hardly ever do know anything about the people. The Postmaster General, too, has frequently known nothing whatever of the persons tendering.
23. But in every instance you have security? We have always attached to the tenders the signatures of parties stating that they are willing to become sureties.
24. And these sureties must, at all events, be known to the Postmaster? Certainly not. I do not imagine that they are in the least degree known to him. I can vouch for it myself.
25. Would the Postmaster General, or yourself, or any public officer concerned, accept bonds from parties of whom they knew nothing? The person that takes the bonds has to look to the bonâ fides of the transaction—the Board cannot. These sureties are taken all over the country. Some are taken in Sydney, by the Crown Solicitor. He assures himself that they are proper parties. In the country, I think they are taken before the Benches of Magistrates.
26. Still the duty devolves upon some one in the public service, of ascertaining that the persons who offer themselves as bondsmen are good and true men, and worth the money? No doubt, the responsibility rests on some one; for instance, as I say, I believe it rests on the Benches of Magistrates, in the country districts.
27. So that it does not matter how the duty may be distributed,—there is an ultimate ascertaining of the fact that the party will really perform the duty or pay the penalty? I presume so. The duty is properly performed by those who take security; and payments are withheld from contractors until those sureties are completed.
28. Have you any discretion in questioning the Colonial Storekeeper's accounts for the public service.—For instance,—he sends to you certain accounts amounting to £30,000, for stores required for the public service. Upon the face of the accounts the stores have been received, and all the formula required by the public account office is observed. Have you any functions beyond simply checking the accounts? Can you check them as to whether the goods were received and for what purpose? If I had any reason to doubt the integrity of the officer making the statement, I of course could refer to the Government, and request that a board of survey might be instituted to ascertain the fact.
29. That I fancy would be the duty of any public officer who happened to know of another that a certain public account submitted by him was not genuine;—that does not pertain solely to any office? I think it may be looked upon as pertaining to the Audit Office—as being in connection with the duty of audit—more strongly than to any other.
30. But if you have reason to suspect (of course I am not supposing that there is any reason for

W. C. Mayne,
Esq.
5 June, 1860.

W. C. Mayne, Esq. for it), there is no function to question these accounts in any way? Not unless, as I say, there is reason to feel dissatisfied with the usual formal and regular voucher supplied.

31. You would question them for informality of voucher, and that is all? No doubt.

5 June, 1860. 32. Or inaccuracy of calculation? Yes.

33. But you do not question them as to the necessity of the supplies? No, certainly not. That does not pertain to me at all.

34. Is there any more efficient system of checks than at present subsists which suggests itself to you? I think, decidedly, that we ought to have the receipt of the department, or individuals who receive the goods from the Colonial Storekeeper, to vouch for the fact of their having reached their destination. That is a link which is most essential, but which we have not.

35. Is there any other check absent from the present system which you think would be serviceable were it applied? I suppose you are aware of the recommendations of the Committee of the old Council. They recommended a regular system of stock-taking, and the keeping account of stock.

36. Yes, we have gone into that subject somewhat? That being carefully and fully kept up, and with a more regular furnishing to us of statements of issues, supported as I say by the receipts of the parties to whom the goods are delivered; and also, a more regular furnishing us with the actual tenders themselves where the goods are supplied under tender.

37. I thought as a matter of course that it would form part of your record to have the tenders? We have repeatedly to call for them, but they have not been as regularly and promptly supplied as I could have wished.

38. The tender would certify to you the accuracy or otherwise of the prices charged? Those are things we do call for, but they have not been as promptly and regularly furnished to us as is desirable.

39. A prompt compliance with this, however, seems absolutely necessary to the auditing of accounts? It would be one additional facility to a proper and sufficient audit.

40. The account we speak of here is one shewing receipts, issues, and remains; and these remains to be tested once a year by actual stock-taking. But it would seem that at some period or other the Colonial Storekeeper was required to keep not only these things in detail, but also a sort of head of values; for instance, if there were three descriptions of blankets there would be three columns of value instead of one? It would require accounts in very great detail.

41. What advantage, proportionate to the increased expense, do you propose to result from any such system as that? But if I recollect the recommendation it was that they should be at fixed rates, which I imagine was intended to approach to something like an average. It was not intended that the actual cost of each description of foolscap paper, for instance, should be shewn. There might be so many reams at 10½d., so many at 11½d., and so many at 1s. per lb.; but I understood, if I remember rightly, that the meaning and intention of the recommendation was that there should be a fixed rate assumed.

42. Suppose we were to divest this account book of receipts, issues, and remains of stores of all consideration as to price, and have a separate book for prices in which the items would be set down alphabetically, the great labor of that would be getting out the first book. It might be printed in alphabetical order. There might be subdivisions of stores (provisions you have none, I think) and clothing, and these again might be subdivided. Each of these subdivisions would have in detail all the articles on the left, and then there would be a number of columns with the prices on the right, at the end of which you might have one large column to give an average of all these, if you desired an average, to take stock or for any other ordinary purpose. If you wanted to be more particular in detail, you would only have to turn up your price book to get the exact price without encumbering the store book. But do you think there would be any advantage to the public service proportionate to the expense of keeping such a book as that; because I see that that is the only way in which prices can be dealt with here? I do not think, in matters of account, that you can pay too dearly for strict accuracy, and I believe the system you indicate is in some degree, only with a total division of departments, that pursued in England, where I believe the store department has nothing to do with values or prices. They deal with them simply as material; but there is another department which deals with prices and with distribution. I speak with diffidence, because I do not know the system sufficiently well to speak with confidence in reference to the matter.

43. It is necessary that there should be some knowledge of, and accounting for, prices in the Colonial Storekeeper's department in order to know the different prices of goods supplied to different departments? It is absolutely necessary.

44. It could not be supplied by any other department? No.

45. So that there must be some account of the values here? I cannot conceive how it could be dispensed with, and particularly so long as you have the votes taken in detail for departments.

46. Certainly an average price would not come up to your requirement of perfect accuracy? It would not come up to it for strict and perfect accuracy, no doubt.

47. Because some of the departments would be supplied with articles of the first quality at a price chargeable only on articles of the worst quality? Yes, and beside that the prices must vary with the varying market.

48. Then, in fact, to come to a perfectly accurate state of accounts in regard to the stores issued for different departments an average will not do; you must have some book such as I have described—a price book? No doubt, if you want strict accuracy.

49. Then again, do you think there is sufficient advantage to be derived to the public service from the keeping of this price book to warrant the expense which would have to be incurred?

I doubt that. I think the system of taking fixed rates—that is, rates fixed from day to day as closely and accurately as circumstances will admit—will meet all the absolute and needful requirements of the service. W. O. Mayne,
Esq.

50. The Storekeeper keeps a record of all the invoices of goods he gets. Now, with a proper store book, proper marks, and the goods properly stowed away according to description, the proper officer would have no difficulty when a number of stores are packed away in stating the cost upon each, knowing whence the goods were supplied; so that without keeping any account whatever, except the mere filing of the invoices, he might obtain the desired result? I should suppose all the goods are entered in a receipt book. 5 June, 1860.
51. Yes? Would it not be the simplest way in that book to add the fixed values which you placed upon the goods.
52. The fixed value takes you back again to the average value? I know it does.
53. And that, whilst it gives the semblance of accuracy is, in fact, when investigated, thoroughly inaccurate in every part? Then I think you have no choice between that and the elaborate system.
54. Do you know if it is expected by the Government that the Colonial Storekeeper shall so far anticipate the wants of the service, by supplies from England, as to render it unnecessary that large quantities of goods should be obtained in the Colony? I should consider it to be the duty of the Colonial Storekeeper so far to exercise foresight as to provide in whatever way is best for the public service, whether the goods are obtained from England or in the Colony. If they are to be procured more advantageously from England, I think it is his duty to exercise the necessary foresight, and to procure the supplies in sufficient time to meet the demand.
55. From your official position you must be thoroughly acquainted with all the departments in the country;—are their requirements of so changing a nature that this foresight may not be exercised to a very large extent in regard to the service? I should think it might be exercised to a very large extent, but there are unquestionably sudden calls for which no foresight could provide.
56. But new departments are not frequently established, and when they are, they do not often require supplies to any great extent at the outset? I consider not; but such a circumstance as a gold discovery, or a large gold development, would defy all foresight. I do not think there would be much difficulty as to the ordinary extension of departments.
57. You think then that the experience in the requirements of the service as regards stores obtained from England, ought by this time to enable the proper officer to anticipate the wants of departments to a very large extent? I should think so.
58. Supposing the proper officer did anticipate those wants to a very large extent, do you think there would be much saving—bearing in mind that those goods which are brought out from Home, in anticipation of the wants of the Colony, are promptly paid for, and that therefore we lose the interest on the entire amount during the period they remain in store—do you think, notwithstanding this circumstance, that it would be advantageous to the Colony to import long beforehand? The impression on my mind is, that goods can be procured more cheaply from Home than they generally can be obtained here, taking all these circumstances into account.
59. And of better quality, perhaps? I should think so. Police clothing, and articles of that kind, with which I have had particularly to do, I have no doubt can be obtained from England of better quality, and at a considerably cheaper rate.
60. Do you see any great objection to the transfer of the arms and police clothing to the charge of the central department of Police—under the control of the Inspector General—of course some preparation would be necessary? It would involve the necessity of a store-keeping branch at the Police Department; you would require a store and a storekeeper for it.
61. Have not the Police already charge of a number of stand of arms that they do not use every day? I imagine not. They had no large quantity when I had charge of the Police, and there was no place available as a store for police clothing, arms, ammunition, and all such matters.
62. The ammunition would be kept elsewhere? Of course.
63. It must be—so that we will confine ourselves to small arms? There was no place available for either arms or clothing at the time the Police were under my charge.
64. I am aware that there is no place just now, but if in the future that were to be the system, of course accommodation would be provided. Do you see anything objectionable in the principle? No, I do not.
65. Do you not think that where the Police are congregated in large numbers there is a better protection for the arms and clothing than here? But that is assuming that the Police are congregated in large numbers, which unfortunately is not the case.
66. I am speaking of the central establishment? If there were a Police Barrack I quite admit that it would be a safer and a better plan.
67. And then in regard to the prison clothing; there is, I believe, but one penal establishment—Cockatoo Island. For the security of the prisoners there must always be a guard of soldiery or constabulary, and that guard, without the addition of a man, could, I suppose, protect all the prison clothing? They could protect it certainly, but some assistance would be necessary for the receipt and distribution of stores.
68. And they could be distributed to all the gaols and penal places from this? The transport to the gaols would be the only difficulty in connection with that—the making of proper arrangements for the transport.
69. But an arrangement might be made? Doubtless it might—a similar arrangement to that which the Colonial Storekeeper has been in the habit of making.
70. In transferring these various stores to central positions, where you would have the advantages

W. C. Mayne, Esq.
5 June, 1860.

advantages which I am supposing that centralization would afford—do you not think that each section might supply itself with the particular stores in its charge from Home, as cheaply as the service supplies itself under the present system? I see nothing to prevent it by proper arrangement. I do not see that any additional cost would be involved in so doing. The cost of freight and insurance would arise whether goods were obtained through one department or another.

71. But setting aside the expenditure which may be incurred for freight and insurance and store room—would the expense of receiving and issuing these goods exceed the expense incurred at the present time for the entire Storekeeper's Department? I should think not. As regards the police especially, I think there might be a very economical system carried on, because the men and non-commissioned officers of the police would be the persons entrusted with the charge of the receipts and issues, and their services could be obtained at a lower rate than they could exclusive of the police service.

72. Supposing a distribution of that kind were to take place, what about the public accounting for them; does it occur to you that it would rather facilitate the accounting than increase the difficulty? I think it would rather facilitate the accounting.

73. Looking at it in that aspect—the necessity of accounting for public property—you see no objection to it? No.

74. But on the contrary, you think it might facilitate the accounting? As regards such stores as those you have alluded to I think so; and I think you may also add to them the stationery—that is, a great mass of the stationery; for instance, that consumed by the printing establishment.

75. I did not enumerate that, although it was part of the system. There might be a central dépôt for stationery at the Government Printing Office? Yes. The only difficulty I contemplate regarding it, is in reference to the distribution of stationery to the country districts.

76. Those men are all conversant with the different descriptions of stationery. They would stow them away in different compartments, and when requisitions came in from different parts of the Colony they might hand them to the storeman? What I meant was the difficulty of transport—of actual conveyance.

77. Then the custody of stores being distributed in this way, the accounting would be easier and the checks would be greater? I consider so.

78. And the expense you consider would be greater? No, I consider that it would not be greater.

79. Is there any other improvement that you could suggest in regard to the system of accounting for these public stores? All those obtained from home I think should be paid for by the bank or by the agent of the Government at Home. A paid agent of the Government resident in London would in my opinion be more advantageous to the public than a mercantile agent. I think that all the stores procured from Home should be procured as much as possible under contract, and tenders should be called for by public notice. The payments should be made by the bank agency at Home on the production of the invoices and bills of lading. I may point out that by allowing departments to supply themselves you would lose one check—a loose system of purchasing on the spot might arise.

80. No doubt, unless it were checked by regulation? There must be a very close check kept, or a loose and expensive system might arise.

81. It would be possible I think to construct a form of requisition which should shew the receipts, issues, and remains, and at the foot of that, again, the quantities required, so that every time a department requisitioned, it would in point of fact check itself? But the requisition ought to go before a Minister, for his approval.

82. You perceive the bearing of what I said—that the receipts, issues, and remains being shewn on the requisition itself, and then, below, the quantities (under the proper columns) required for the next quarter being also shewn—that would be a check in itself? Yes, but all such checks require to be carefully looked at; I merely throw out that as one of the things which has struck me whenever the point has been mooted.

83. How are the payments made at present for stores obtained from England? They were made by the mercantile agent.

84. They are not made by the Colonial Storekeeper here? No.

85. They were made on the spot at Home? By the agent, out of advances made to him from the Treasury; and these advances used to be adjusted in the Treasury by the Colonial Storekeeper, when he recovered from the departments.

86. So that the Colonial Storekeeper makes payment only for stores supplied in the Colony? I imagine that such is the case.

87. Well then, when the Colonial Storekeeper states a particular sum as his payments in the year, that will not shew the whole payments for stores, because of the payments made at Home? That depends upon whether the accounts are finally adjusted. If at the time the statement were made, he had recovered from the different departments and paid those amounts into the Treasury, it would represent the whole of the payments; or, if as under the existing system where I believe he disburses the whole, or at least the greater part of the store votes, he pays back to the Treasury out of the store votes what has been expended by the agent at Home, of course it shews the whole of the payments.

Mr. Buchanan: As far as regards the stores at Home, I have nothing at all to do with them.

The Chairman: And they are not represented in the store vote.

Mr. Buchanan: That matter is entirely in the hands of the Treasury. I do not know how the remittances are made, or out of what fund they are made; it may come out of the store vote or any other fund, but I really do not know.

The

The Chairman : But when these goods come here, and are opened, and issued, you then charge the departments with them? W. C. Mayne,
Esq.

Mr. Buchanan : Yes; and then when Captain Mayne said I used to recover payment from them, that payment would be a receipt of money. 5 June, 1860.

The Chairman : It would appear first as a receipt, and as a disbursement afterwards?

Mr. Buchanan : Yes, but not as a disbursement made by me.

The Chairman : In regard to the stores obtained from Home, I suppose the Storekeeper is supplied with the invoices, so that he can give the prices of the goods supplied to the different departments. He would of course have to make some calculations, and add freight and insurance, and other matters of that kind; whether there is such a thing or not, I do not know?

Mr. Buchanan : There is both.

88. By the Chairman : Is there any other suggestions you would like to make, Captain Mayne, as regards the check, and audit of accounts? I think not, beyond what I have already stated to you.

Henry Drax Bloxham, Esq., examined:—

1. By the Chairman : The Board have been to the Australian Joint Stock Bank, and I, as Chairman, exhibited these cross cheques to the Manager there, and he himself stated, and that statement was corroborated by the gentleman who paid the cheques, that these several cheques, which are crossed, were presented to the Bank for payment by the London Chartered Bank; and it occurs to the Board, that when these cheques were put into the Bank for collection, they must have been passed to the credit of some account, and the Board will therefore feel obliged if you will favor them with the particulars of each cheque, and to what account it was credited? Is this likely to become the subject of a legal investigation? H.D. Bloxham
Esq.
5 June, 1860.

2. Well, as far as our knowledge goes, I should say not? I ask this question because, if it were carried into Court, I should prefer the clerk to make the marks on the cheques instead of myself, as I might not be spared to give evidence.

The Chairman : As far as I can judge, I do not see any likelihood of it.

Captain Scott : I do not see any chance of it.

Mr. Bloxham : This cheque was paid into the credit of John Weston, on the 14th of December, 1858,—£140 (marked No. 1 by the shorthand writer.)

3. By the Chairman : Have all these cheques been through the Australian Joint Stock Bank? This one (a cheque not crossed) has not passed through our Bank, it was paid in cash at the Australian Joint Stock Bank.

4. None but the crossed cheques were paid through your Bank—all the rest were paid in cash over the counter? This is the Colonial Storekeeper's cheque, paid into the credit of some account on the 6th of October.

5. To whose credit? To John Weston's,—£271 17s. 6d. (cheque, marked No. 2). All the cross cheques came through us.

6. Yes, all of them? Here is a cross cheque, which we suppose must have been paid by the Bank upon which it is drawn. The proceeds might have been paid in here, but that cheque has not passed through our Bank; we have £37 down here, which was paid in notes and gold. It is possible that it was paid over the counter by the Australian Joint Stock Bank, but that cheque has not been passed through our Bank,—£37 (marked No. 3). This cheque was paid into the credit of John Weston, on the 10th of July, 1858,—£350 (marked No. 4). These cheques, uncrossed, were paid by the Australian Joint Stock Bank; some were paid in gold and notes, and one in £10 notes. This cheque was paid into the credit of John Weston, on the 3rd December, 1859,—£338 6s. (marked No. 5).

The Chairman : Thank you, that is all the information we require.

CORRESPONDENCE.

UNDER SECRETARY TO THE TREASURY to COLONIAL STOREKEEPER.

The Treasury, New South Wales,
9 August, 1860.

SIR,

Referring to my letter of the 15th May last, enclosing a copy of the Report of the Board appointed to inquire into the charges brought against you, viz. :—" That large quantities of stores, on account of the Public Service, had, at various times, been tendered for and supplied by the Colonial Storekeeper and the late chief clerk, Mr. John Weston, under the assumed names of 'James Staunton' and 'Staunton and Co. ;' " and also acquainting you that the Executive Council had thereon advised that " a full and searching inquiry should be instituted into the general management of the business connected with ' the Colonial Store ;' "—I am now directed to inform you that the Report of a Board appointed to make this further Inquiry was laid by His Excellency the Governor General before the Executive Council.

I am to forward to you a copy of this Report, and of the decision arrived at by the Council ; and, in accordance with that decision, I am instructed to call upon you to shew cause why you should not be dismissed from the Public Service, by reason of the various derelictions of duty held to be proven against you by the Minute of the Treasurer indorsed upon it.

A copy of the Minute is also enclosed.

I have, &c.,
HENRY LANE,
Under Secretary.

UNDER SECRETARY TO THE TREASURY to AUDITOR GENERAL, IMMIGRATION AGENT, AND REGISTRAR GENERAL.

The Treasury, New South Wales,
10 August, 1860.

GENTLEMEN,

Referring to my letter of 31st January last, in which you were requested to form a Board for the purpose of investigating certain charges made against the Colonial Storekeeper (Mr. Buchanan), and to your Report thereon, I am directed to inform you that the whole of the documents relative to the Inquiry were submitted by the Governor General to the Executive Council.

After deliberation, the Council advised that a further Inquiry should be instituted into the general management of the business connected with the Colonial Store. The Report of the Board appointed for this purpose having been received, and the investigation being now considered as closed, I am instructed to convey to you the thanks of the Treasurer for the able manner in which the portion assigned to you was conducted.

I have, &c.,

SIR,

In reference to my letters of the 23rd and 30th of April last, on the subject of the further investigation into the general management of the Department of the Colonial Storekeeper, and to your letter of the 17th ultimo, forwarding the Report of the Board thereon, I am directed to inform you that the Report, together with the evidence taken by the Board, was submitted by His Excellency the Governor General to the Executive Council.

The investigation being now considered as closed, the Treasurer instructs me to convey to yourself and colleagues his thanks for the able manner in which you have conducted the Inquiry.

I have, &c.,

UNDER SECRETARY TO THE TREASURY to COLONIAL STOREKEEPER.

The Treasury, New South Wales,
20 August, 1860.

SIR,

I am directed to inform you that your letter of the 16th July last, having been referred for the opinion of the Chairman of the late Board of Inquiry into the general management of the Storekeeper's Department, has been this day returned, with his statement that he considers an examination of Mr. Weston's banking account would throw no further light upon the transactions which formed the subject of Inquiry.

I have, &c.,
HENRY LANE,

COLONIAL STOREKEEPER to COLONIAL TREASURER.

22 August, 1860.

SIR,

Being now fully prepared to produce parole and documentary evidence in full rebuttal of some, and explanation of all the conclusions, assumptions, and inferences set forth in the Report of the late Board of Inquiry into the management of the Colonial Store, I beg to request that the Board may be directed to re-assemble for the purpose of receiving such evidence, and of hearing my counter-statement in opposition to their ex parte Report. I use the words "ex parte" advisedly, because they are clearly descriptive of the circumstances under which the Report has been presented. When they first assembled, I received from them, in answer to my preliminary inquiry, the reply that they did not consider my position to be that of a person called on to answer or rebut a charge. This view of my relationship to them is further supported and confirmed by the concluding paragraph of Mr. Under Secretary Lane's letter to myself of the 15th May, which reads thus,—“It is obviously your duty to afford all the assistance in your power;” and further on it requests I “will facilitate the operations of the Board as much as possible.” These are not calls to which an accused person could be expected to respond, especially as they were made after, and in consequence of, my direct refusal to attend the Board without some definition of my position, and some intelligence as to the result of the first Report, both points on which the dogged silence of the Treasury left me no other means of getting any information. Attending therefore, as I did, on this second Board, not in a capacity adverse to the inquiry, but merely to furnish such information as they asked for, and to answer whatever questions they put, I neither had nor sought the right of cross-examination, or of producing evidence. Being devoid of the power of divination, I could, moreover, neither anticipate nor foresee, in the absence of the slightest expression of opinion by the Board (two of whom were wholly mute), what points were likely to require elucidation. I submit, therefore, that I have an incontestable claim, now that the charge first brought against me is virtually abandoned, and to which alone I have hitherto paid any attention—and the new derelictions to search for and eliminate, which were the objects of the second Board's appointment, are at length put in shape—to be allowed the opportunity of meeting them, and that such opportunity should not be limited to a written reply, but should comprehend viva voce evidence as well.

I have, &c.,
JNO. BUCHANAN.

UNDER SECRETARY TO THE TREASURY to COLONIAL STOREKEEPER.

The Treasury, New South Wales,
22 August, 1860.

SIR,

With reference to your letter of this day's date, in which you request that the Board appointed in the month of April last, for the purpose of inquiring into the general management of the Colonial Storekeeper's Department, may be instructed to re-assemble for the purpose of receiving evidence, which, you state, you are now fully prepared to produce in refutation of the conclusions arrived at by them, as set forth in their Report, I am directed by the Treasurer to state, that, as you have had the fullest opportunity of knowing what was done, both by the Board in question, and by that which preceded it—having been examined by each, and present at all their meetings—it is not considered necessary to revive the Board, which, having reported, is virtually defunct.

I am, however, to inform you, that, as you have been called upon to shew cause why you should not be removed from the public service, any statements or documents which you may furnish in answer to that call, will be carefully considered before any decision is arrived at.

I have, &c.,
HENRY LANE,
Under Secretary.

COLONIAL

COLONIAL STOREKEEPER to COLONIAL TREASURER.

25 August, 1860.

SIR,

I beg to re-direct your attention to my letters of the 31st May and 15th June last, in which I made application for my salary during the period of my suspension, and more particularly urged my claim for its immediate settlement, at least up to the date—15th May—at which was conveyed to me the decision on the Report of the Board who investigated the charge brought against me on the 31st January last. I do not desire to recapitulate the arguments I made use of in those communications, but must observe, whatever their worth at the time, they have acquired much additional force by the long delay there has since been.

The expectation expressed in Mr. Under Secretary Lane's letter of the 7th June, of the inquiry being shortly brought to a close, has not been realised; and I submit that, being as I am in no degree responsible for this unprecedented delay, the minutest fractional measure of justice demands that the question of salary should not longer either await or be held dependent on the decision to be yet pronounced whether I am to remain in the public service or otherwise.

I hope this matter will meet your early attention, and that the determination of the Government, whether it be a refusal or a grant of my claim, will be conveyed to me in clear and unmistakable terms.

I have, &c.,
JNO. BUCHANAN.

COLONIAL STOREKEEPER to COLONIAL TREASURER.

27 August, 1860.

SIR,

I have to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 22nd instant, apprising me that it is not considered necessary to reassemble the Board of Inquiry into the general management of the Colonial Store, to receive, as I had requested, my refutations and explanations, by oral and documentary evidence, of the conclusions set forth in their Report.

The allegation that I have had the fullest opportunity of knowing what was done, both by the Board in question and by the one which preceded it, while indisputable in the sense of a statement of a mere fact, is incorrect, if, under the words used, the meaning is intended to be conveyed that I had the opportunity of defence against charges before the second Board, and did not avail myself of it. Reference to the records of the opening sittings of the Board will confirm this statement.

The proceedings and objects of the two Boards have been so irregularly, and I must add, unfairly mingled, although different in kind and degree, that I feel I must briefly relate the circumstances connected with the case if I desire it to be clearly understood.

On the 31st January last, I was called on to answer a specific written charge, before a Board of Officers named by the Government. Their investigation failed to substantiate the charge; the Government gave an opinion that the Report was incomplete and inconclusive. Whether so or not, blame could not be attached to me.

In April a second Board, differently composed, took up a new and altogether distinct inquiry into the general management of the department. Their instructions were of the widest and most discursive character.

However, knowing themselves to be engaged only in an investigation to discover prima facie grounds for future charges (which grounds, if discovered, would be embodied in a Report), they of course promptly replied to a clear and distinct inquiry I addressed them at the outset, that I was "not under accusation," and therefore not on my defence.

Knowing now for the first time the nature of the new charges I am required to meet, I have sought the opportunity of bringing forward evidence on my behalf, and have asked for this Board as the tribunal to receive it. I complain of the refusal of this request, but I do not object to submit such evidence, both personal and documentary, for consideration by any properly constituted tribunal. On the contrary, relying on the good faith, honesty, and singlemindedness of the assurance given in the concluding paragraph of Mr. Under Secretary Lane's letter, that whatever evidence I can furnish "will be most carefully considered before a decision is given," and believing in the existence of no desire to stifle defence of any kind, I now apply for information whether it will be convenient for the Executive Council, and when, to receive the oral and documentary testimony I have before said I am prepared to produce?

I have, &c.,
JNO. BUCHANAN.

UNDER SECRETARY TO THE TREASURY to COLONIAL STOREKEEPER.

The Treasury, New South Wales,
29 August, 1860.

SIR,

I am directed by the Treasurer to acknowledge the receipt of your letters of the 25th and 27th instant, and to inform you that the question of payment of salary, for the period of your suspension from office, will be considered at the time when your case shall be brought before the Executive Council for final decision.

I

I am at the same time to refer you to the letter from this Office of the 9th instant, No. 882, conveying to you the resolution of the Executive Council, that you should be called upon to shew cause why you should not be dismissed from the Public Service, and to request your immediate attention to the same.

I have, &c.,
HENRY LANE,
Under Secretary.

COLONIAL STOREKEEPER to COLONIAL TREASURER.

31 August, 1860.

SIR,

As the last paragraph of Mr. Under Secretary Lane's letter of the 29th instant leaves me in doubt whether or not the opportunity will be allowed me of rebutting, by parole evidence (as well as written), the charges of faulty management now preferred against me, I beg, as a final effort to obtain such opportunity (which I have not before had), to state categorically some of the reasons why I hold that this request should be conceded, viz. :—

1. Because the inquiry before the second Board started with the express declaration that I was not under accusation. The Board's Minutes will confirm this assertion.
2. Because, having (in answer to my inquiry) been clearly apprised of the Board's opinion that I was not present to meet charges, I was thereby virtually denuded of the rights and privileges to which an accused person has ever been held, under British rule, to be entitled, viz. :—

The right of knowing his accuser.

The right of being acquainted of the charges alleged against him.

The right of cross-examination and of producing evidence.

3. Because the defects of system and management, responsibility for which I could not anticipate, and did not, until the appearance of the Board's Report, know would be held to attach to me, are in general such as the Government were fully cognizant of, and they have been either expressly or indirectly sanctioned, for some of the following reasons, viz. :—

The slight consequence the Legislature, even up to a late date (re-acting upon the Executive), was inclined to put upon the department.

The repeated refusals to grant proper assistance.

The casting upon the same individuals duties essentially antagonistic, and which ought to have been discharged by separate persons.

1. Because (taking the more salient points only of the Report), I am prepared to shew—

That the applying a check upon consumption never rested with me, and was beyond my power effectually to exercise.

That the duty lapsed through the Treasurer for the time being—Mr. Donaldson—refusing to allow of its discharge at the Treasury any longer—such refusal being unaccompanied by any instruction to me to assume the power thus abandoned, even were that possible.

That the system of survey condemned by the Board is in express conformity with written instructions from the Government. The inference, that the practical working of the department has thereby been thrown in the hands of juniors by myself, consequently, is untenable.

That the mode of accounting for stores by quantity (or the Ordnance plan) has never been the custom either before or during my tenure of office.

On the contrary, to account by value has been the Government order, framed upon considerations of which the Board have yet heard nothing.

That the whole of the supplies for the public service have never been exclusively obtained from England, and that no instruction is extant by which I was at any time directed so to procure them; consequently, there has been no failure of forethought in this respect, inasmuch as more has been imported than there is room properly to house.

That the alleged failure in one of the results expected to be secured by the establishment of a Colonial Store, viz., regularity in the delivery of stores, does not exist. Sir R. Bourke had in view regularity in delivery by contractors, not by importation. That this must be the case is palpable, when I state that it was not until many years after he had left, that anything whatever was purchased out of the Colony.

I am prepared to offer explanations on other points, but desiring to confine this letter within reasonable limits, I do not urge them, in the hope that sufficient cause is herein shewn why I should be permitted to produce, before some tribunal, evidence, both written and personal, in refutation of charges that had taken no shape, and had not even been communicated to me, before your Minute and the Board's Report were placed in my hands.

I have, &c.,
JNO. BUCHANAN.

UNDER SECRETARY TO THE TREASURY to COLONIAL STOREKEEPER.

*The Treasury, New South Wales,
4 September, 1860.*

SIR,

In reply to your letter of the 31st of last month, I am directed to request that you will comply with the instructions contained in the Minute of the Executive Council. The Government will then be in a position to decide upon the course proper to be taken in your case.

I am also to point out, that if these instructions be not complied with without further delay, it will become the Treasurer's duty to submit to the Governor General and Executive Council whether a decision should not at once be arrived at, as it is necessary for the public interests that the Department should not be suffered to remain any longer in the state of disorganization disclosed by the recent investigations.

I have, &c.,
HENRY LANE,
Under Secretary.

COLONIAL STOREKEEPER to COLONIAL TREASURER.

15 September, 1860.

SIR,

The Report of the Board of Inquiry into the Colonial Storekeeper's Department having been printed, I beg to ask to be favored with a second copy of it. This would save me the trouble and delay of copying a lengthy document. My answer to it is now finished, and will be sent in immediately I can make a fair copy—probably not later than to-morrow.

I have, &c.,
JNO. BUCHANAN.

UNDER SECRETARY TO THE TREASURY to COLONIAL STOREKEEPER.

*The Treasury, New South Wales,
17 September, 1860.*

SIR,

In compliance with the request contained in your letter of the 15th instant (received this day), I am directed to enclose, herewith, a second copy of the Report of the Board of Inquiry into the conduct of the Colonial Storekeeper's Department.

I have, &c.,
HENRY LANE,
Under Secretary.

COLONIAL STOREKEEPER to COLONIAL TREASURER.

20 September, 1860.

SIR,

The tenor of the correspondence I have had the honor of holding with you since the receipt of your Under Secretary's letter of the 9th ultimo, (P. O. 882) puts past doubt the inflexible determination (tacit though it merely be) to prevent me submitting to the Executive Council, or even to any Board or tribunal whatever, the oral and documentary evidence I wished to bring forward in answer to your call to shew cause why I should not be dismissed from the Public Service.

I shall not venture to inquire whether this determination has its origin in the false position in which, by your Minute of the 28th July, the Government are placed. That injustice has been done me I distinctly assert; and, in proof of the assertion, I refer once more to the facts of the case.

Until the appearance of the Report of the Board of Inquiry into the management of the Colonial Store, and of your Minute, one charge only (that contained in Mr. Under Secretary Lane's letter of the 31st January) had been preferred against me. Both Boards failed to obtain evidence of any kind to support it; and the second Board plainly telling me my relationship to them was not that of an accused person. I confidently ask whether the construction is not a strained one, by which it is implied in your letter of the 22nd August, (941-445) that because I knew what the second Board did, therefore I must be aware what charges would be eliminated from the evidence adduced; even before they were warmed into life by the breath of the Treasury. The various derelictions brought forth in this way are (I quote the exact phrassology of the Minute of the Executive Council) "held to be proven by the Minute of the Treasurer," and this without my having had the opportunity of knowing, much less of answering, any of them.

It being predetermined that the observations of the Board on defects of system are to be construed as proven charges; that no opportunity of meeting them shall be allowed except by a simple written statement—a limitation that serves, whether intentionally or not, to stifle full defence; and the penalty being already virtually declared, I maintain that but a scant measure of justice is afforded in thus confining me to ground narrowed so ungenerously, and unnecessarily for any public interest.

I proceed now to reply to the Report (oral evidence, be it remembered, being debarred me), section by section, as numbered by the last Board.

1. The opening sentences of the said Report deal with the question who wrote the signature "James Staunton;" and this inquiry, it is avowed, the Board took up with the express motive of disengaging their own proceedings from the previous investigation. On the question of the signature, an opinion is given directly the reverse of that of the first Board. The support this diversity of judgment yields to the complaint I made of the unjust imputation (unjust, because unsupported by evidence) attempted to be fastened on me, with the motive, as I believe, of affording excuse for the initiatory steps of this inquiry, I, of course, feel as satisfactory.

Having traced the crossed cheques to Mr. Weston's account at the London Chartered Bank (and, what is omitted to be mentioned, to the same account the only one of the uncrossed, respecting which a question was asked of the Manager), the Board make a suggestion of means whereby they consider I might absolve myself from the suspicion (for to that only does it extend) of connection with the uncrossed cheques. In matters of this nature, I hold that the utmost candour and plain dealing ought to be the rule; that the nursing of suspicions, affording no glimpse of them to the person most interested in their avowal, and yet afterwards bringing them to the light in the shape of innuendo in a Report, is a tortuous and unworthy course.

Since the year 1843 I have never indulged in the luxury of a banking account; consequently the Board's suggestion that I should furnish a statement of it is thrown away, and the propriety of making a voluntary offer could not of itself occur to my mind.

Immediately I learned what was desired, I offered the only evidence possible to be procured, viz.—that which a thorough investigation of Mr. Weston's private account from its commencement, might afford. He gave permission for this examination, as I stated in my letter to you of the 16th August, and, coupling this circumstance with the partial examination made without his consent, and, therefore, surreptitiously, I feel at a loss clearly to understand the motive for rejecting an open straightforward offer.

As regards the supply of paper tendered under the cognomen of "Staunton and Co.," and delivered ex "Walter Flood," I have to state that the necessity of purchasing was unexpected, and arose out of two circumstances, neither of which could have been foreseen, and, therefore, was beyond my control.

The unprecedented length of the last Session of Parliament, and the consequent increased consumption of paper for printing, was one. The other was the delay that occurred at the Treasury in despatching to England my demand for paper, pending the inquiries in town, instituted under your directions, and the calculations made to test the advantage supposed to exist either in buying the supply on the spot, or of importing through merchants instead of through the Commercial Agent. This knowledge I do not derive from an official source, for I was not even apprised of the inquiries being carried on, and much less took part in them. They are spoken of by Mr. McNab in his evidence before the first Board. Their effect was, that the supply of paper which failed in January would, with a less consumption, have lasted till March, in which month the Government's own stock for the year arrived from England; or, by the earlier transmission of the demand Home, the supply would have come out sooner. Under either of these events, purchases would not have been necessary; and the "appearance of contrivance," which the transaction is considered to wear, would have been useless. Inasmuch, however, as, since January last, it has been found impossible to satisfy, either in Sydney or Melbourne, the private demand for this particular kind of paper, Mr. Weston's importation may, despite the opinion of a Board not accustomed to weigh the reasons that govern trading transactions, have been a legitimate speculation, devoid of any eye to the public wants. Be that as it may—being the second in position in the department—his opportunity of knowing what those wants were was not so meagre as to need assistance of mine.

2. On this section I have little to observe, except to add that, small as the store accommodation was in 1837, its extent has since been curtailed, and is less at this moment than at any time previous, notwithstanding the enormously increased necessities of the service. No blame can be attached to me for omitting to represent this state of things. The notice of every Government was drawn to it without effect. Once, indeed, I did succeed in getting a vote for new storehouses; but when the proposal of spending the money was mooted, the intention was frustrated by the revival of an old suggestion to obtain the Commissariat premises in Lower George-street, and the vote lapsed.

It is now eleven years since the propriety of appropriating these buildings to meet the even then urgent want of a proper and commodious store was first discussed. The question has been the subject of reports and letters innumerable, from Boards, Heads of Departments, and Officers of all Services,—Military, Naval, Ordnance, Commissariat, and Colonial. Settlement is as far in the distance now as ever, for there has always been a disinclination to deal boldly with it. Mr. Donaldson's ardour in the cause, burning as it appeared when in opposition, was effectually quenched by a glimpse of the difficulties surrounding it. Mr. Campbell gave a look at the pile of papers in which the matter is embedded, and thought it best not to disentomb it. Nothing was done then or since.

3. I find myself under some difficulty in furnishing any answer to the observations in this section. I am not conscious of having expressed myself in any part of my evidence as feeling dissatisfaction from the period of my appointment in 1845. The dissatisfaction I gave vent to was at the gross and unwarrantable treatment with which this inquiry was initiated, and for a time was conducted. When I took charge, on the 1st January, 1845, all the assistance that could be given me was one clerk, instead of the four which both my predecessors had been allowed. Its inadequacy was so great that, to enable me barely to keep

keep open the doors of the department, I had to procure additional assistance, without expense to the Government. A second clerk was at length paid for by the public. My opinion was often expressed in writing, as well as verbally, that to abolish the department at once would prove the only cure for the unsatisfactory condition in which it was maintained. At length, in 1852, through the impossibility of the preparation of certain accounts connected with the expenditure for stores continuing to rest with the Audit Office, which had taken the duty in Mr. Lithgow's time, as one of the expedients to afford me aid; and with the prospect of the payments for stores and the accounts they would involve being also cast on me, the clerical staff was at last made up to the number originally granted in 1837—some sixteen years before. I resisted as long as I could having aught to do with the public money, to touch which I had an instinctive horror. I sought to have an Audit Office Clerk appointed to manage the new duty; this was overruled, and Mr. Weston was appointed from another department over the heads of the clerks in my office—for I declined recommending any of them—and he took his place next to myself. To his hands all payments, and the entire cash transactions and accounts were committed—the second additional clerk being allowed to assist him. He became in reality, and was acknowledged to be, the de facto accountant and paymaster of the Department, and soon gave proofs of his efficiency. That I unduly and improperly threw on his shoulders a trust that I should have personally discharged, I deny; it was impossible that I could, under any circumstances, assume it—and, as the Government were well aware, I never did undertake it. Moreover, the system upon which I acted is precisely analogous to what exists at the Post Office, the Government Printing Office, the Railway Department, and the Treasury. In the whole of these, payments are made by some individual other than the head, who has no immediate personal concern with them. This division of duty is both necessary and inevitable. Had I taken away any cheque—ever made the payments myself—or departed at any time from a course of proceeding that has been uniform and consistent from the very commencement—I might have been fairly open to the remark, that I was inclined to attach “little importance to the most ordinary precaution for the disbursement of public moneys placed at my disposal for paying for the stores.” The change made at this time was hazardous and retrogressive—it shifted a responsibility from departments peculiarly constituted to bear the burden, into others less able; and I find myself describing it, in connection with a subsequent order to obtain payment in cash for whatever stores I issued to any department, as “sowing the public money broadcast.”

5. When I first read this section, I was somewhat startled to find in what prominent relief the Board have brought out several defects of system, and, by implication, laid the responsibility at my door solely. A little closer inquiry might have changed materially for the better the appearance of many things that are held to be proven faults of mine—have shown that a full share of blame justly rests elsewhere than with me—have saved me the necessity of exhibiting the superficial character of the Board's inquiry—and have left less apparent that some of the more important of their conclusions are based upon supposition and erroneous ideas, instead of upon evidence, and a thorough knowledge of the subject dealt with.

Inefficient check upon consumption of Stores:—

In the original instructions for the Storekeeper's guidance, it was ordered, in clear and distinct words, that all requisitions for stores were to be submitted for the Governor's approval. The shape in which this approval was conveyed was by the Governor's signature to each separate application. Sanction in this way continued to be afforded throughout the entire tenure of office of Sir R. Bourke and Sir Geo. Gipps—the latter especially watched most closely all requisitions; evidence of his attention yet remains in his own handwriting; in fact, he pruned and reduced them in a style that would astound the officials of these days. When Sir C. Fitzroy arrived, the duty was assumed by Mr. Deas Thomson, who likewise dealt with them in a very rigid manner; every demand, however trivial, passing under his review.

With the advent of Responsible Government the duty became the Treasurer's, and for a time was discharged by him; eventually it was handed over to the Under Secretary. He commenced with a high hand, soon found himself in dispute with Benches and others, who resisted his use of the pruning knife; and I surmise (for I cannot of course give it as fact) that, perceiving the prospective discomfort and annoyance of the position, took steps quietly to vacate it.

A batch of requisitions having, as usual, been sent by me to the Treasury for approval, they were packed back in the state they left me, with intimation that I was to send no more there. This instruction, given verbally by the then Treasurer (Mr. Donaldson) to one of my clerks, became thenceforward, without scratch of pen to justify or support me, my only authority for any issues I might make. That the instruction was not given to myself personally I now hold fortunate, though at the time I felt somewhat aggrieved at it. Evidence in consequence exists of the manner in which so important a change was effected, and that is of much value.

This business being thus summarily thrown on my shoulders, I soon found that neither my position nor my power enabled me sternly to discharge it; for, unfortunately, the very services needing the most rigid scrutiny were precisely those that were too strong for me; and my decision could not be final. The barrier, however, that this department has always been to inordinate demands, is one of the principal reasons for its unpopular character. That its check may not be so effectual as in past days I freely admit, but I have little apprehension that blame for this will, by those who are unprejudiced, impartial, and inclined to allow fair weight to the abandonment I have spoken of, be held to attach to me.

Inefficient

Inefficient survey:—

The Board say, that "practically the survey of the stores is left in the hands of the most subordinate and least responsible officers of the department;" that I am "called in only as referee when the foreman and fourth or junior clerk cannot themselves agree whether the stores are or are not according to pattern." Put in this bold shape, without a word of explanation how this mode of survey arose, or whether a different plan was possible, both points on which material information could have been afforded had a single pertinent question respecting them been asked, and the implication being that the practice is most reprehensible, and that I am responsible for its adoption, I could not expect a fuller illustration either of the general fallacies that pervade the report, or, on the other hand, the failure to acquire any certain knowledge or comprehension of the business of the department than is conveyed in the few words quoted above.

It is necessary to revert to the origin of the department to get a clear view of this matter. Sir R. Boucke, by Minute dated in March, 1837, ordered the appointment of a Clerk of Works from the Royal Engineer's Department (Mr. Browne) to act in the Storekeeper's Department as "Examiner of Stores." This officer did duty in that capacity till 1843, when, through the disallowance of his salary of £50 a year, he ceased further attendance; and no provision for the duty was made till 1846. By that time I had succeeded in getting the vote restored. The successor in the Royal Engineer's Department (Mr. Hanley) to the former Clerk of Works was then appointed Examiner. After serving a year or two, the vote was a second time struck off, and the officer ceased, as before, to attend. Once more the vote was restored, and another Engineer Clerk of Works—the gentleman being Mr. Coles, at present in the Colonial Architect's Department—was named for the post. He held it one year only, when the allowance was again lost, and this time in company with that for the messenger, and other petty reductions.

After this I discontinued further agitation for a paid independent Examiner—the repugnance to allow one had become chronic; but the question arose what should be done in the absence of an officer of this character. To assemble every day a Board of Officers to hold surveys on stores was deemed an impracticable and onerous plan. The Government at last adopted a suggestion of the Auditor General, and ordered the foreman of store-house to do duty as Examiner, and to sign all certificates of surveys. Such is the history of this the most subordinate officer's connection with the duty. Deeming it inexpedient to leave the business entirely in his hands, by a departmental regulation I caused the store clerk also to join in the survey, and reserved to myself the final passing of all stores. At this time the store clerk was Mr. Campbell, who happened to stand second in rotation (the first being the accountant, Mr. Weston), and he continued so to act without intermission till nearly the end of last year, consequently I had no higher officer to appoint; and the innuendo as to the employment in this branch of the work of "the most subordinate and least responsible officers" is pointless. This subject might, I think, be safely left without further remark. For the information, however, of any one who may read this statement, and from acquaintance with the English system of checks be qualified to judge how far I had attempted to introduce corresponding observances here, I may add that the storehousemen acted as "Viewers," the foreman and the store clerk as "Inspectors," and myself as "Superintendent." No single individual could by any effort pass through his hands the many thousands of items that are annually received. A better or more effective disposition of the means at my command was impossible; and without adopting the English plan in its entirety, and keeping up at a heavy cost a separate "Inspection Branch," there is but little hope of improvement. Whatever its defects, I claim for it superiority to any system in vogue elsewhere in the Colony.

Absence of forethought to anticipate wants of the service:—

This dereliction is considered to be evidenced by the fact that the purchases at Home were only one-third of the total purchases during 1859.

I will not stop to comment on the proportion given, for that is of minor import, but the Board themselves, I conceive, furnish in their remarks contained in the preceding section (No. 4) a strong antidote to this allegation. Their own observations prove that a much greater quantity of stores has been imported than there was room properly to house. I ask then what would have been the condition of things, and whether I would not have been exposed to a charge of improvidence, had the whole of the supplies for the public service been drawn from England (assuming for a moment that to be possible), instead of a third only? Are not the difficulties growing out of the admitted want of commodious store accommodation, space for packing, and enough manual labor even sufficient to excuse this dereliction, were it one at all? That it is not mine, sir, you must be well aware, for I cannot think that the recollection of my memorandums of the 11th April and 22nd August, 1859, the substance of which you reproduced at an early subsequent date in a speech in Parliament, has vanished. I informed you in the first of these papers that the only class of stores which I held orders to import regularly was stationery. If you were then of opinion I ought to have imported everything, may I be permitted to remark, no such order was given. Even the limited order that existed was practically modified, and its fulfilment somewhat shifted from me, by the late custom of the Treasury to send requisitions to England unknown to me (and therefore clashing with my demands), for fancy stationery for certain departments, because the supplies I procured from the Stationery Office, being of the homely quality used by all the British Departments, was not deemed good enough for particular services here.

On my own motion, I have been accustomed to procure regularly from England—latterly I confess with some misgivings—clothing for the police and for convicts, arms, ammunition, accoutrements, and a few special items, for the reason that I had experienced the difficulty of procuring them of proper quality in the Colony. By doing this much I evoked a considerable amount of odium and opposition. That members even of the Government itself were not disposed to look favorably upon the plan, partially only as it was in operation. I refer for proof to the Herald of the 4th February, 1859, and to the reports it gives of speeches made by yourself and your honorable colleague, Mr. Cowper. (Extract appended.) It is unquestionable that the importations actually made surpassed my means properly to store and attend to. I deny the existence of any instruction, implied or direct, by which purchase was ordered to be confined to England, and challenge its production. I appeal to any person whose experience qualifies him to judge, for an opinion, whether it is possible for the knowledge to be centered in any single individual that would be requisite to keep a store of so general and widely varied a character efficiently supplied beforehand with everything required for the public service. Nothing I have hitherto said has any reference to financial considerations. I now add that the Government failed even to provide funds for importations. That, I presume, can scarcely be set down as a dereliction for which I am amenable. I reported on the want of such means; suggested a course by which alone could the difficulty be properly met; and pointed out in unmistakable terms the illegality of the practice in force.

I am aware that by some subtle plan of book-keeping, afterwards introduced, it was held that this difficulty had been surmounted. However, if annual pre-appropriation by Parliament, out of the Consolidated Revenue, be not a delusion, I think the application of unvoted moneys from that fund, as remittances Home—to cover which votes may or may not be granted twelve or fifteen months subsequently—is a clear misappropriation, whether disbursed for stores, for salaries, or for any other purpose, however apparently expedient. In the case of stores, the plea of sudden emergency even is not available.

Unsatisfactory mode of accounting for stores:—

The system in operation is characterised as loose, and altogether unsatisfactory. Deferring for a moment opinion on that question, the condemnation, I may at once observe, brings within its scope a Committee of Council, upon whose recommendation it was adopted. The system of accounting by quantity is the plan followed by the British Government; it demands great care and attention, is tedious and laborious, but simple and accurate; its use in England is facilitated by the discarding of all reference to the value and cost of the stores comprehended in the account. Indeed, information on these points is not possessed by or considered necessary for store officers; and the great votes of the Imperial Parliament are shaped so as to avoid any necessity of this sort. No attempt is made to determine the exact money expenditure for stores by any particular ship, regiment, or department. Analogous to the accurate book accounts kept by tradesmen against their customers, an account only of the stores received and issued is substituted. An account in this shape is one which mercantile men never keep. Every officer who draws stores has to account to the Central Store Office in London for each article of such supplies. The minuteness of detail, trouble, and expense of this system are inconceivable, except by those who have witnessed it in operation. Nevertheless it is the only one by which the exact disposition of every item of the public property can be traced.

When an issue is made the store officer reports it, and credits himself in his ledger. The officer who draws the stores also reports, and charges himself in his account. Vouchers of delivery and receipt are interchanged in each case. Comparison at the central check office proves the correspondence of the charge and discharge. The exact reverse of this operation occurs when the storekeeper receives goods. Sight is never lost of stores, into whose hands soever they may go. With every change of officers a formal transfer of property is made, and inventories pass. These are sent to the check office, are there tested with the records, and entries made against the proper individual. In this Colony issues from the stores are treated as final. No question or inquiry thereafter arises about them. These circumstances were all brought under Mr. Donaldson's notice, a store ledger brought forward, and its working explained. Taking into consideration the impossibility, in this Colony, while votes are split into such fragmentary sums—of dispensing with vote accounts for stores—the wide area over which issues are spread—and the constantly shifting condition of circumstances and of officers, he deemed it most consonant with the present requirements of the Colony to have an attempt made to keep a store account by the means of fixed and unvarying values. Stores were to be received and issued at a uniform price, irrespective of actual cost; and the balance struck between the aggregate amount of receipts and aggregate amount of issues would form the remain. In conformity with this plan I have proceeded of late years. The Board say it is "loose and unsatisfactory." Be its defects what they may, having been adopted under competent authority, I plead irresponsibility.

System of promotion:—

One rule has always governed me in this matter. As the guardian to some extent of the interests of those serving under me, whatever influence I possessed has at all times been used to promote from the lower branches of the department to the better posts when opportunity served. I have advanced thereby neither friend, connexion, nor acquaintance; for all alike were perfect strangers on their first entry.

As to the possibility of petty peculation, it is in some degree inseparable from every establishment in which either money, securities, stores, or portable property of any kind forms the charge; and no system of accounting has ever yet been found effectual to guard against it. We have witnessed its perpetration to a considerable extent more than once even in the Treasury of the country; although that is a proved fact, it would be grossly unjust and unpardonable to breathe the insinuation of its continued existence there. Why then then should the possibility of a practice, that at the utmost could prevail only to a trifling extent, be covertly whispered against my unfortunate subordinates upon mere conjecture? At this part of the report the hypothesis is again advanced, that the practical working of the department has been thrown upon subordinates. This time no specific instance or custom is adduced as evidencing what is meant; and I have, therefore, only a shadow to contend with. If the allegation be merely a rechauffée of the one produced in an earlier passage, I have shewn that I hold written authority from the Government for what is condemned; if new, its indefinite nature leaves open to me only the general but unequivocal contradiction of there being any evidence to support it.

Evidence of irregularity in furnishing supplies:—

It is considered to be shewn that the department has failed to substitute regularity for irregularity in the delivery of stores, by the circumstance that two-thirds (the proportion is open to question, but I pass that by) of the supplies for 1859 having been purchased in the Colony. This assumption is evidently founded on the idea that the regularity referred to in Sir Richard Bourke's Minute as a leading object in instituting the department was regularity of importation from England. The setting forth of elicited facts, rather than the hazarding of crude and hastily formed conclusions, unsupported by evidence, and so unsubstantial as to require to be qualified by an "if," would have been a fairer course to have pursued. Sir Richard Bourke never contemplated the possibility even of importation from the Mother Country by the Department; regularity in delivery by contractors was the object he desired to secure. It was not until very many years after his departure that any purchases were made out of the Colony—not in fact before the latter part of Sir Geo. Gipps's administration, and then but to a very limited extent. Purchase in the Colony has always been the rule—importation (for the reasons, and in the cases I have cited) the exception. The assumed failure is a vision altogether unsupported by evidence.

6. I pass this section over, it refers to future arrangements, and, therefore, demands no observation of mine, as I have only to deal with the past.

7. The substance of the regulation made at the time the payments were cast upon mine (in common with other departments) is not stated in full. The intervention of clerks was not confined to the filling in and entering only of cheques. Orders in my case at least were given for all cheques to be initialled by, and for the cheque book itself to remain constantly in the custody of, a clerk to be deputed for the purpose. Seeing, therefore, as I have already described, that the first clerk had been promoted to that grade from another office, expressly to take charge of and conduct the cash accounts, the duty clearly appertained to him. The Board say the regulation was instituted as well for my protection as for that of the Government. I take leave to dissent from the assertion. Protection for the public interest alone was in view, and that I think was sufficient. To guard against the possibility of the officer who might sign cheques misappropriating them, was, doubtless, the object of the rule. Its observance, both in spirit and letter, has been mine. Beyond appending my name at their foot, after satisfying myself they had been properly drawn, I left the matter in the hands of the proper officer, with whose responsibility I could not interfere without cause. By himself, or the clerk under him, were all payments made and witnessed. In no single instance was the duty ever performed by me. By doing so, the well understood intention to interpose a barrier to so objectionable a practice would have been violated, and, without doubt, have drawn down reprehension. The not doing so is held equally blameable. Either horn of a dilemma serves to impale. However, so well understood was the custom, that the new accountant, when unexpectedly questioned by the Board, at once avowed the descent of this responsibility to himself.

The observation as to payments by uncrossed as well as crossed cheques may be met with the reply that many persons will not, for obvious reasons, accept a crossed cheque. No certain or invariable rule on the matter ever prevailed. The determination either way was settled by the circumstances of the moment.

8. Nothing not met by the answers to preceding sections is advanced by the Board in this one, it is therefore passed over without comment.

9. The consideration whether the staff of the department is adequate, or the reverse, depends wholly on the meaning intended by the words "right principles;" if the precise construction be that the detailed account of quantities after the Ordnance plan should be followed, I reply that the only evidence taken on the point, disproves the assertion that the aid was sufficient under such a system. At the Board's own invitation, a gentleman, Mr. Wilkinson, who has been engaged all his life in working that system, stated in answer to the questions addressed him, that at a large English Station, with less demands to meet, and certainly with no greater variety of stores on hand, two clerks were engaged on the store ledger alone. Four is the number allowed here, one-half of whom are employed on the cash accounts; if the remaining two were employed on a ledger none would remain for the other numerous undescribed general duties.

10. The apparent difference in the evidence given by the officers of the department is to be explained thus:—

The duties admitted of a very obvious and clear division. One branch took the accounts and money transactions, half of the staff being assigned to that business. Neither of the clerks who had been engaged in it were examined before the second Board, owing to both having vacated their appointments. The other half took the store branch. These gentlemen, however, spoke and gave evidence in a dual capacity, referring, when the questions demanded it, to their work in the branch they had been formerly engaged on, and then answering in like manner questions touching duty in their present branch. This circumstance has been forgotten, or else never caught up. It affords, however, the only explanation of of the otherwise unintelligible quality of their evidence in differing "not only from each other but also from themselves."

11. The expense of maintaining the department is next treated of, and some curious calculations of its cost are produced, at the root of which lie the most transparent fallacies. The vote for salaries and contingencies is quoted at £4,000. There is nothing positively false in the figures, but inasmuch as they comprehend such sums as £1,000 for land and water transport, £500 for rental of warehouse, £100 packing expenses—all of them charges not possible to be avoided under any system, the unfairness of the impression sought to be conveyed is undeniable. Let the character of this impression be what it may, the succeeding idea is pre-eminently absurd. Because the value of the stores in dépôt is estimated at £90,000, interest on this sum at 6 per cent. (one per cent. by the way above the Debenture rate) is set down as an item in the maintenance of the department. Of the value quoted, one-half is for warlike stores proper, without a dépôt of which not a gun could be fired, or a man armed. And here for a moment I will stop and lay claim to some credit for forethought in this matter if denied me in others. On my representation to Sir C. Fitz Roy this dépôt was formed; the nature, quality, and proportion of stores were settled in full detail by myself. Their utility is best proved by the heavy call on them for service at New Zealand, owing to the entire absence of munitions of a proper description in the military store. But I never anticipated the interest of the outlay being treated as an item of my department's expense, or brought forward as an instance of the extravagant working of it, instead of as the price the country must pay for the material means of defence. The remaining moiety, to a large amount, is composed of goods which the department merely holds (in transit, I may describe it) for other services—not for issue in detail. Why it should be held liable to interest on their cost is inconceivable.

In the remaining paragraphs nothing occurs calling for observation of mine. They are confined to recommendations with which I have no present concern. Those points in the Report that possess personal interest, through the assertions they set out, have been answered. It would have been less embarrassing, and less troublesome to me, to have cleared them up by visa voce evidence.

The refusal to reassemble the Board has compelled me to commit to writing observations that might have been fuller and clearer, had they been made orally. The aspect of discontent, which it will be considered they wear, might also have been softened. That I feel such, I avow; and the feeling has its root,—not in the manner in which evidence was taken, or even in its nature, but in the fact of its being left so uncertain and incomplete, as to permit the Board only to "see through a glass darkly."

I have, &c.,
JNO. BUCHANAN.

EXTRACT from Sydney Morning Herald of 4th February, 1859.

Mr. Weekes did not see the object of honorable members starting up, one after another, and objecting to items without giving a reason for opposition. There was one great objection, indeed, with respect to the manner in which stationery was supplied. The supply was not open to contract, but was drawn from England, and the very worst quality was always furnished. He would like to see the supply of stationery, and all other supplies, open to competition in the Colony.

Mr. Cooper explained that a large proportion of this sum was to meet the cost of printing, and the business had, in this respect, so increased of late, that it was no surprise that the sum was large. With respect to the objection taken by Mr. Weekes, he might say that he himself had long since turned his attention to the subject, and he would be glad to see all Colonial supplies open to public competition.

Mr. Weekes complained of the practice of applying to England for everything they wanted; while, if they looked to the sister Colony of Victoria, they would find that all Government supplies was open to the public competition of the Colonists. He might remark that even the Government Domain gates had been imported from England, while they had foundries in the city capable of turning out as good work as any that could be procured from the mother country.

Mr. Cooper explained that it was his desire to leave everything open to public competition that could be furnished here. With respect to the sum of £4,084, he was willing to withdraw it from the estimate.

COLONIAL STOREKEEPER to COLONIAL TREASURER.

21 September, 1860.

SIR,

A copy of your Minute of the 28th July having been transmitted to me, attached to the Report on my department, with the view, I presume, of making me aware of the charges that you have deduced out of the Board's observations, I proceed to reply, believing an answer is required. I rest, however, under a very great disadvantage, in consequence of the opinion which, though being one of my judges, and having before you only the imperfect data for judgment that one side of the case affords, you have expressed (may I be permitted to say, prematurely) that defence is not, in your belief, possible.

2. The Minute states that, to your mind, grave charges against the general administration of the Colonial Store Department have been most conclusively proved. May I venture to inquire what these charges were; and when were they communicated to me? Certainly I never received intimation of any charges of this kind. It may possibly be meant that charges indirectly spring out of the observations made by the Board. I have acted on this idea; and in another letter, of yesterday's date, answered those observations, as fully as the confinement to a written statement will allow. While this answer cannot serve to recall a foregone condemnation, I hope it will be allowed fair weight in averting its effects.

3. The Minute holds it has been established that I had knowledge of Mr. Weston's being engaged in tendering for the public supplies under a feigned name. The only accusation I have yet been called on to rebut is, that such supplies were tendered for by myself in conjunction with Mr. Weston. The deliverance of the Board to whom the inquiry was remitted reads thus:—"The evidence has not established complicity or connivance, on the part of Mr. Buchanan, with those acts of Mr. Weston." Suspicion is then expressed (though very dubiously), because four letters' "a-m-c-s," are thought to bear some resemblance to my handwriting. The second Board deal with this suspicion, and say the handwriting is not mine. Taking the opinion on this untenable suspicion, in conjunction with the otherwise clear deliverance given by the Board appointed to try the special charge, acquittal has, I maintain, in reality been pronounced. Moreover, in acquitting me of complicity or connivance terms which comprehend knowledge—I am relieved of the latter implication also.

4. My ignorance of the transactions being assumed, escape is nevertheless barred, because I am held "scarcely less culpable" for not discovering them, as their occurrence "formed the common topic of conversation among the subordinates of the department."

Mr. Jones' is the only evidence on this point. He is a brother of the person who was secretly instrumental in getting the charge preferred. His family, I believe, consider (without truth) that I was the obstacle to another brother's appointment to the department. A promise of this kind, their mother informed me, had been given her by your honorable colleague, Mr. Cowper. By reason of a sudden change of Ministry it could not be redeemed. The failure of success with the new Minister, I understand, is laid at my door, and a grievance is thereby established. Mr. Jones speaks of one occasion only when he commented on these irregularities; and his utterances are described as uncertain. However, whether clear or indistinct, he confesses they did not occur in my hearing, and that neither then nor at any other time did he make any report to me.

4. In reference to the doubt that "may be expressed whether, as regards these supplies, the interest of the public service was not made subservient to that of Mr. Weston," I should have been glad to have had the nature of the subservience clearly stated. On the first and only occasion, a private tender, dated from Melbourne, of certain stores—all at prices much lower than it had ever been possible to purchase for before, and some of the articles of a kind that could never previously be procured—was accepted, under those special circumstances, and the articles were constantly in request, instead of there being "apparently no necessity for them."

5. The next allegation is, that "in some instances, it appears, no record of receipt of goods was made in the books at the store." If not, the record was duly kept in the office immediately adjoining, and that was the proper place. This record is a notation of the date of receipt opposite the item mentioned in the book copy of the order given for it. The witness referred to (Mr. Garnett) says this note may (he does not speak positively), at times, have been made from "memory," for the pressure of numerous simultaneous deliveries might have prevented its being made, in every case, on the instant. I see no evil or ill arising out of this. The articles were present to confirm "memory"—even though the "order" itself, from which the note on the office copy would ordinarily be made, had, to prevent delay probably, been given back to the contractor or his servant. The first Board had this matter under notice, saw by examples how the method worked, and found no fault with its operation.

6. The evidence of another witness (Mr. Jones), the clerk formerly belonging to the accountant's branch, discloses dissatisfaction, because he considered his particular duty (how the duty became his to the exclusion of all besides he does not explain) had been interfered with, in accounts having been checked and examined by the accountant himself. If, as is asserted, "Staunton's" bills were, in several cases, not examined at all, the circumstance can easily be put to the proof. The accounts are all attached to the report of the first Board, and with them will be found all the schedules, original tenders, and other documents. Not having the means of examination myself, I would ask those who can make it, are not the computations correct? Do not the prices correspond with the public tenders approved by the Government? These questions, I assert, can be answered only in the affirmative. Where, then, is the truth, what the object, of this witness's assertion that these accounts "were never examined at all?" The Auditor General had them before him, in his capacity as such, and again as Chairman of the first Board; the fair inference is, that, if faulty, he would have long since said so. Again, as respects the witnessing of the payment: if the regulation has not been complied with, the vouchers will shew the neglect on their face. Unless this observance had been attended to, the documents could not have passed review at the Audit Office, and would infallibly have been sent back.

Seeing that these proceedings were all in the ordinary regular course—that means were carefully taken, by the aid of agents, to prevent easy detection of deception—that utter failure has attended the resolute efforts, in various quarters, to fix me with complicity—I have no reason to attempt to shelter myself by the repudiation of fair responsibility.

7. I have endeavored, in my answer to the Report of the second Board, to explain the grounds upon which I hold myself absolved from practical responsibility for the payments. It must be unnecessary to repeat them. I will only add that Mr. Weston's nomination as chief clerk and accountant had that express object in view. If not to relieve me of this responsibility, in the same way as the heads in other departments similarly circumstanced, no reason can be assigned for introducing him as senior clerk into a department with the old duties of which he had no acquaintance, acquaintance, and was less able to discharge than those clerks previously belonging to it, over whose heads he took precedence.

8. I mark one omission of moment in a quotation made from the second Report. The Board are precise in describing the indifference they consider to have prevailed in regard to payments; their words are—"by uncrossed as well as crossed cheques." There can be no reason to stray from this exact meaning, and having already explained why the practice is inevitable, it is needless I should say more.

9. I cannot perceive what further precautions could have been taken in the disbursement of the public moneys than has prevailed. The Board say I ought never to have been burdened with the payments. I demurred to their imposition as long as possible. Unless I had taken on myself to make them personally, in violation of the regulation, and of the practice in all departments where, as in mine, they are numerous, greater care could not have been used. A condemnation of the system is easily uttered, but I cannot suffer it to be supposed that a single instance is adduced of any ill that has really happened. There is no creditor pressing on the Government claims unsatisfied by the department! There has never been any complaint by contractors of delay or difficulty in obtaining payment! There is no arrear! There are no moneys unaccounted for! These are results which do not support the imputation of absence of vigilance, and they offer a fair counterpoise to an imaginary undescribed want of precaution.

10. Repetition must be needless of the refutations given in my letter of yesterday's date, of my supposed short-comings in respect to "excessive consumption," "survey of stores," "working of the department," "importation from England." That misapprehension prevails on all these subjects is manifest, and it would not have arisen, had the second Board's functions been less desultory, and my position in relation to them been defined.

11. I now find myself at the end of twenty-one years' service, passed under every Government without a complaint of any kind—during which time the great and sudden fluctuations in the department often placed me in trying positions—arraigned on a serious charge, the first breath of which reaches me in the shape of instant suspension. No preliminary inquiry made—no accuser produced—no prima facie grounds for the harsh and unprecedented proceeding assigned—police are placed in charge of the public store—the premises shut—all books and papers, private as well as public, seized, taped, and sealed up; like precaution taken even with the outer doors of the building. These proceedings are not only superintended, but are carried out, by the proper hands of the officers composing the very Board named to try the accusation. With the bias that this active participation always creates, and sitting as prosecutors as well as judges, their power of directing evidence to any wished for end was immense—its unfair exercise I complained of. Their Report being produced, its gravamen lies in the enunciation of a "suspicion."

A second Board is named. They are not hampered by having a specific accusation to deal with. Unlimited powers of inquiry are theirs. Bounds, they are expressly told, are not set them; but as accusations have to be searched for, none could be remitted for inquiry. Proceeding with the investigation, they strike from under the first Board the grounds of suspicion which had been adduced. Comments made by them under these peculiar circumstances on general matters become the foundation for charges of defective administration. Repeated but ineffectual efforts are made by me to be permitted the opportunity of meeting the said charges, before the Board—before the Executive Council—before any tribunal whatever. I strive to discover the principle on which this refusal is made, and fail. Moreover, I have been subjected to the stoppage of the whole of my salary for nearly eight months; I have represented the hardship of this position without avail.

If, sir, all these degrading, oppressive, and unjust measures meet your approval, and are adopted as your own, I trust, nevertheless, that if circumstances ever make you a victim, you will meet with treatment more in accordance with the spirit of British justice.

I have, &c.,

JNO. BUCHANAN.

PROCEEDINGS of the Executive Council, on the 1st October, 1860, relative to certain charges preferred against Mr. John Buchanan, Colonial Storekeeper.

Minute No. 60-42. Confirmed 11th October, 1860.

REFERRING to the proceedings on the 31st July last, when the Council advised that Mr. John Buchanan, the Colonial Storekeeper, should be called upon to shew cause why he should not be dismissed from the Public Service, by reason of certain derelictions of duty charged against him in a Minute endorsed by the Colonial Treasurer upon the Report of the Board which has recently inquired into the general management of the Department, His Excellency the Governor General lays before the Council two letters from Mr. Buchanan having reference to the matter, and dated respectively the 20th and 21st of September.

In the first of these letters Mr. Buchanan notices, section by section, the Report of the Board in so far as it affects himself, and in the second deals with the Minute of the Honorable the Treasurer, which, as above stated, contains the charges he was called upon to answer.

In

In this latter letter Mr. Buchanan expresses some doubt as to what the charges are, and when they were communicated to him, but nevertheless in either one letter or the other he comments upon and replies to the several accusations set forth in the Minute of the Treasurer; and the Council having carefully considered the explanations offered by him in reference to each, regret that they can only regard them as altogether unsatisfactory, and as failing completely to relieve him either of the imputation of having been cognizant of the improper practices of the late chief clerk, and to that extent a participator in them, or of the charges of gross neglect of duty, and maladministration of the important department of which he was the head.

Under these circumstances the Council, agreeing with the Honorable the Treasurer that it is impossible to retain Mr. Buchanan in his present position, or in any other where fidelity and the usual qualifications of the Head of a Department are essential, advise that he be now dismissed from the Public Service.

EDWARD C. MEREWETHER,

Clerk of the Council.

W. C. MAYNE,
Auditor General.

The first part of the paper is devoted to a study of the asymptotic behavior of the solutions of the system
 (1) as $t \rightarrow \infty$. It is shown that the solutions tend to zero as $t \rightarrow \infty$ if and only if the matrix A is stable.

In the second part of the paper, the problem of the asymptotic stability of the solutions of the system (1) is considered. It is shown that the system (1) is asymptotically stable if and only if the matrix A is stable and the matrix B is nonsingular.

The third part of the paper is devoted to a study of the asymptotic behavior of the solutions of the system (1) as $t \rightarrow \infty$. It is shown that the solutions tend to zero as $t \rightarrow \infty$ if and only if the matrix A is stable.

In the fourth part of the paper, the problem of the asymptotic stability of the solutions of the system (1) is considered. It is shown that the system (1) is asymptotically stable if and only if the matrix A is stable and the matrix B is nonsingular.

The fifth part of the paper is devoted to a study of the asymptotic behavior of the solutions of the system (1) as $t \rightarrow \infty$. It is shown that the solutions tend to zero as $t \rightarrow \infty$ if and only if the matrix A is stable.

MINUTES OF EVIDENCE

TAKEN BEFORE

THE SELECT COMMITTEE

ON THE

COLONIAL BANK OF AUSTRALASIA
INCORPORATION BILL.

TUESDAY, 5 FEBRUARY, 1861.

Present:—

| | | |
|-------------|--|-------------|
| Mr. BLAKE, | | MR. PARKES, |
| Mr. MORRIS, | | MR. SMART. |

ISIDORE J. BLAKE, ESQ., IN THE CHAIR.

William Alexander Tolmie, Esq., called in and examined:—

1. By the Chairman: You reside at Geelong? Yes.
2. You are connected with the Colonial Bank of Australasia, a Bill to incorporate which in this Colony, is now before this Committee? I am Manager of the branch at Geelong.
3. Do you produce the Deed of Settlement? I produce an attested copy of the original Deed of Settlement. (Witness produced the same.)
4. What is the date of it? 4th February, 1856.
5. By whom is it signed? On this attested copy there are copies of the signatures of the following gentlemen, as the first Board of Directors,—John O'Shannassy, Donald Kennedy, William Abercrombie, William Kerr, Samuel Magnus, Patrick Phelan.
6. Do you produce also a copy of the Act of Incorporation of the Company? This is a copy of the Victorian Act of Incorporation. (Witness produced the same.)
7. Will you give the title? It is "An Act to Incorporate the Proprietors of a certain Banking Company to be called the Colonial Bank of Australasia, and for other purposes." (Assented to 19th March, 1856.)
8. Is there a Board of Directors in Melbourne, in pursuance of the Deed? Yes.
9. Is the Bank carrying on business in Victoria? Yes.
10. In what parts of Victoria are there offices? There is a head office in Melbourne, and branches at Geelong, Ballarat, Sandhurst, Castlemaine, Kyneton, and Kilmore.
11. By Mr. Parkes: Is there any other branch besides those you have named? No.
12. None out of the Colony of Victoria? None out of Victoria.
13. There is not one in South Australia? No.
14. You have established agencies out of the Colony? Correspondents simply.
15. You are in full trade as a Banking Company? Yes.
16. By the Chairman: Do you know that it is the intention of the Directors to establish branches in this Colony? It is their intention to do so.
17. Has there been any resolution of the Directors to that purport? There was a resolution passed on or about the 24th or 26th of October, a copy of which I have not got; I was present at the Board at the time.

W. A. Tolmie,
Esq.

5 Feb., 1861.

W. A. Tolmie, Esq. 18. Can you state what the general effect of the resolution was? The general effect of the resolution was that it was desirable to open branches in New South Wales, leaving for future consideration, after we should have obtained the Act now before the Committee, the localities where it was desirable to fix them; there was no discussion at all as to localities.

5 Feb., 1861.

19. I suppose it was settled there was to be a main branch in Sydney? I should think, if a branch were opened at all it would be in Sydney, but there was no resolution passed as to any particular branch.

20. By Mr. Smart: Was there any resolution of the Board to apply to the Sydney Government for an Act of Incorporation? I have no copy of the resolution, but there was one passed.

21. Is the petition for the Bill signed by the Directors of the Company? It is.

22. I suppose you do considerable business on the Sydney side of the Murray with the squatters and other residents there? Yes, we do.

23. Does the Bank transact a large business in Victoria? Yes, it carries on a large business in Victoria. The following figures, taken from the Fourth Half-yearly Report, will give the Committee some idea of the amount of business done by the Bank:—

BALANCE SHEET OF THE COLONIAL BANK OF AUSTRALASIA,

| Dr. | For the Half-Year ending 29th September, 1860. | Cr. | |
|-------------------------------|------------------------------------------------|--------------------------------|----------------|
| To Capital Account | £312,500 0 0 | By Coin and Bullion | £316,097 3 1 |
| .. Notes in Circulation | 112,158 0 0 | .. Bills Receivable and other | 954,948 14 2 |
| .. Bills in Circulation | 3,351 9 10 | .. Advances | 50,798 17 9 |
| .. Deposits | 866,568 17 11 | .. Due from other Banks | 42,589 2 9 |
| .. Due to other Banks | 5,906 17 8 | .. Bank Premises | 2,204 11 9 |
| .. Reserve Fund | 40,000 0 0 | .. Policies of Insurance | 3,208 0 1 |
| .. Profit and Loss | 29,358 4 2 | | |
| | £1,369,886 9 7 | | £1,369,846 9 7 |

Our present reserve is £42,500.

24. By the Chairman: I find this statement in the preamble of the Bill:—"And whereas it was by the said indenture or deed of settlement agreed that the capital of the Company should consist of One million pounds to be contributed in one hundred thousand shares of ten pounds each"—has that been carried out? It has not been all called up; we have a paid-up capital of £312,500.

25. By Mr. Smart: Is all the capital subscribed for? No.

26. What amount is subscribed for? There are 62,500 £10 shares, representing £625,000, subscribed for, of which £312,500 has been paid up.

27. Can you say what proportion of that capital is held in New South Wales? We have large investments in New South Wales.

28. By the Chairman: You have investments of capital in New South Wales? Yes; we discount the bills of residents in New South Wales, and consequently have investments of capital in it.

29. I presume one of the objects of this Bill is to enable you to invest in landed and other securities in New South Wales? We do not seek to invest in landed securities unless we are compelled, except for the purposes of our own business.

30. You cannot say how much of the capital is held in New South Wales? No, but a large proportion of it is invested there, I know.

31. By Mr. Parkes: Will you state the reasons which render it desirable for you to seek this enactment—why is it desirable, as is said in the preamble of the Bill, "that the said Company should have and enjoy the same rights and privileges within the said Colony of New South Wales as the said Company is entitled to under the said Act of the Parliament of Victoria"? The rights and privileges which we seek are nothing but what the other banks enjoy.

32. True, but there must be a reason for your seeking them? The reason is that it is our intention to carry on business in New South Wales, and we seek to carry it on on the same terms as other Banks.

33. It would facilitate your operations to obtain this Act? I believe it will; without it we cannot carry on our operations in New South Wales as we desire to do.

34. You are in fact placed at a disadvantage unless you get this Act? Yes.

35. By the Chairman: Banking business is so mixed up in the two Colonies that you are not placed in the same advantageous position for the transaction of business generally as you would be if your Bank had the same privileges in both Colonies? Just so.

36. By Mr. Parkes: If you get this Act you will establish a branch in this Colony immediately? I presume we shall; it is the intention of the Directors to do so.

37. As far as your knowledge extends, you feel every confidence that they will do that? Yes.

38. Can you state, of your own knowledge, that the establishment of this branch is delayed only for want of this Act, or, in other words, that the Bank is in a position at once to establish a branch here as soon as they get the Act? I am not in a position to state that exactly; I have merely the resolution of the Directors to go by, in which they state that it is desirable, and I presume they intend to do so.

39. Do you not know, from your intercourse with other officers of the Bank, whether there is any anxiety or settled decision to establish a branch here? A decision was arrived at long ago to establish a branch in New South Wales whenever an Act was obtained; we have sought it sometime.

Eyre G. Ellis, Esquire, examined:—

40. By the Chairman: You are solicitor in this Colony for the Colonial Bank of Australasia? Yes.
41. By Mr. Parkes: There was a petition presented to the Legislative Assembly for leave to introduce the Bill, a copy of which is before you? There was.
42. Do you know who signed that petition? I forwarded the petition to the Manager at Melbourne, with instructions to get it signed by three of the Directors.
43. Do you remember the names of the Directors who signed it? Mr. O'Shanassy was one, and from my knowledge of his hand-writing I have no doubt it was signed by him.
44. The other two signatures were those of Directors? So the Manager states in his letter to me.
45. You had some personal intercourse with Mr. O'Shanassy? He came up here, and instructed me in the first instance to take the necessary steps to proceed with the Bill.
46. He is the Governor of the Bank? Yes.
47. In the course of his intercourse with you did he ever state more than once, the anxiety and bonâ fide intention of the Directors of the Bank to establish a branch here? He appeared to be very anxious to do so. One object was to have the usual powers of suing and being sued.
48. How many days was Mr. O'Shanassy here? I think he was here a week or a fortnight; he was on his way to Morceton Bay, and he returned here afterwards.
49. Did you see him more than once? Several times; and by his directions I communicated with the Manager in Melbourne.
50. And you gathered, I think you say, from his intercourse with you, that they were very solicitous of obtaining this Act for the purpose of establishing a branch Bank here? Yes.

E. G. Ellis,
Esq.
5 Feb., 1861.

William Alexander Tolmie, Esquire, recalled and further examined:—

51. By Mr. Smart: Did I not understand you to say that a large amount of the stock of your Bank was held by proprietors in New South Wales? No; I think there is only one of our shareholders residing in New South Wales. I intended to say that we have investments in New South Wales.
52. By Mr. Parkes: What you mean is, that there are a large amount of the ordinary securities of the Bank held in New South Wales? Yes.
53. By Mr. Smart: Why is it desirable to establish a register of shareholders in New South Wales? The probability is that many persons in New South Wales will take up shares.
54. You anticipate that if you get this Bill there will be a considerable number of shareholders in New South Wales, and therefore it is desirable they should be registered? Yes.

SECRETARY OF STATE to OFFICER ADMINISTERING THE GOVERNMENT.

NEW SOUTH WALES.

No. 7.

Downing-street,

13 January, 1861.

SIR,

I transmit to you for your information, a copy of a Report from the Master ^{8th Nov., 1860.} of the Mint, with copy of its enclosure, relative to the weight and fineness of the Gold Coins struck at the Sydney Branch of the Royal Mint, during the Quarters ended the 31st March and 30th June, 1860.

I have, &c.,

NEWCASTLE.

[Enclosure.]

Royal Mint,

8 November, 1860.

Sir,

I have the honor to acquaint you, for the information of the Lords Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury, that the following Returns have been duly received from the Deputy Master of the Sydney Branch of the Royal Mint, in conformity with the Order in Council of the 19th August, 1853:—

Six Monthly Returns, shewing the transactions in Bullion of the Sydney Branch of the Royal Mint, for January to June, 1860, both inclusive.

The coin issued to the public during these six months is as follows:—

| | SOVEREIGNS. | HALF-SOVEREIGNS. | TOTAL. |
|------------------|-------------|------------------|-----------|
| | ONS. | ONS. | ONS. |
| In January | 36,980-53 | | |
| February | 37,247-85 | | |
| March | 30,311-15 | | |
| April | 7,701-96 | 20,024-65 | 27,726-61 |
| May | 35,206-28 | | |
| June | 46,871-37 | | |

Amount charged for Coinage—Nil.

Two Returns of Waste in Coinage of Gold at the Sydney Branch of the Royal Mint, for the Quarters ending 31st March and 30th June, 1860.

Two Duplicate Returns made by the Board of Verification to the Colonial Secretary, reporting on the state of the Bullion in the Mint on the 2nd April and 2nd July, 1860.

I have also to request you to submit to their Lordships my Report, enclosed (being the Fifteenth), on the weight and fineness of the Coins produced at the Sydney Branch of the Royal Mint, during the six months, January to June, 1860, inclusive, and transmitted by the Deputy Master for examination, in accordance with the provisions of Her Majesty's Order in Council above referred to.

A copy of the aforesaid Report will be forwarded to the Deputy Master at Sydney for his information.

G. A. Hamilton, Esq.

[Sub-Enclosure.]

FIFTEENTH REPORT, addressed to the Lords Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury by the Master of the Mint, on the Weight and Fineness of Gold Coins struck at the Sydney Branch of the Royal Mint, and transmitted by the Deputy Master for examination, in accordance with the provisions of Her Majesty's Order in Council of the 19th August, 1853.

Pieces taken without preference by the Colonial Secretary, at the deliveries of the Sydney Mint.

During the Quarter ending 31st March, 1860 :—

| Denomination of Coin. | No. of Pieces. | Total Weight. Ounces. | Average Weight of a Piece in Ounces. | Average Proportion of Gold in 1,000 parts. |
|-----------------------|----------------|-----------------------|--------------------------------------|--------------------------------------------|
| Sovereigns | 117 | 30.056 | 0.25688 | 916.83 |

During the Quarter ending 30th June, 1860 :—

NEW SOUTH WALES.

TIMBER OF NEW SOUTH WALES AND QUEENSLAND.
(ITS ELASTICITY AND STRENGTH.)

Presented to both Houses of Parliament, by Command.

REPORT of further Experiments conducted at the Sydney Branch of the Royal Mint, to determine the Strength and Elasticity of Colonial Timber.Royal Mint, Sydney, 6 February, 1861.

HAVING concluded a series of experiments undertaken with a view of testing the strength and elasticity of the Timber of New South Wales, including the district now known as Queensland, I submit, in the following paper, the results obtained, with some particulars in explanation.

The experiments were undertaken at the request of His Excellency Sir William Denison, R. E., Governor General of the Colony, and a sum set apart from the Parliamentary vote for Railway purposes to meet expenses. The District Road Surveyors in the Colony and others who were likely to give assistance, were requested to procure and transmit suitable specimens to the Royal Mint, Sydney, where the experiments were conducted under the superintendence, as to details, of Mr. Trickett, an officer of the Mint Staff.

The object proposed was to determine the power of each description of timber to bear a transverse strain, and, for this purpose, the weights it could bear, firstly, without destruction of its elasticity, and secondly, without breaking, were severally noticed. From these results, the constants S and E, representing the strength and elasticity of each kind of timber, have been determined on the principles laid down in Barlow's work on "Materials and Construction." Whenever possible, four specimens of each kind of timber were tested, and the mean of the four results used in determining the value of the constants.

The experiments were conducted as follows:—The timber, which usually consisted of a beam 2' × 2' in scantling, and five feet in length, was placed horizontally on supports four feet apart, and consisting of iron trestle-heads firmly fixed, and secured from collapsing by stays. The ends of the beam were left free. The weights were applied to the centre by means of a scale suspended from an iron staple adjusted half way between the supports. Commencing with a weight of 6 cwt., an addition of half a cwt. was made at the end of every half hour until 9 cwt. had been applied, when the interval between each successive application was extended to one hour. At the end of each interval, the beam was relieved of its weight by means of a screw-jack, which raised the scale in which the weights rested, and after the addition of half a cwt., the weight was brought to bear, by gently lowering the scale, by the means by which it had been raised. As soon as it was noticed that the beam on being relieved did not return to its horizontal position, the weight in the scale, and the deflection of the beam at that weight*, were recorded as those at which the elasticity had become impaired, and used as the necessary factors for determining the value of E. After this, successive additions were made of half a cwt. at the intervals and in the manner already mentioned, until the beam broke; the breaking weight, or that less by half a cwt. if the beam broke within one minute of the weight being applied, being taken to determine the value of the constant S.

The screw-jack employed was found convenient for many purposes. Being fitted on the top with a horizontal table, it served to raise and lower the scale containing the weights, and thus to apply to the beam the desired pressure without jerk; it admitted of such an adjustment of the table as to prevent (on the fracture of the beam) the fall of the scale through unnecessary space, and the damage to the scale often so occasioned; and it allowed the scale to be attached to a fresh beam without removing the whole of the weights.

Eighty-seven specimens of wood have been thus tested, the results being given in the table attached to this paper. Of these twenty-six are from the south, comprising nineteen collected by Mr. Moggridge, near Berrima, and seven by Mr. Adams, near Albury. Eight have been collected by Mr. Dawson from the Western Districts, near Bowenfels; eleven by Mr. Collett and Mr. Wood, from the Northern Districts of Singleton, Murrurundi, and Armidale; four are specimens of timber used in the construction of Mudgee Bridge; and thirty-eight are from the Colony of Queensland, collected by Mr. Burrowes and Mr. Hill.

The Queensland specimens transmitted to me, besides being the most numerous, were accompanied by the flower and fruit, and a block of wood cut from the heart of each description of tree. This has permitted of the addition to each variety of its botanical name, kindly furnished by Mr. Charles Moore, Director of the Botanic Gardens. It has also admitted of slabs sufficient to shew the character of the wood being cut from each block, and deposited with the leaf and fruit of each variety in the Australian Museum.

The other specimens have attached to them the names usually given to them by the sawyers of each district, and such botanical names as an examination of their structure, and their local designations, appear to justify. In many cases these may be incorrect, as the data for this determination were insufficient.

The circumstances under which these experiments have been conducted suggest, that the resultant values of E and S, given in the accompanying table, are less than those which would have been obtained from similar experiments in England. The specimens tested here had the disadvantage of being fresh cut, whereas most of those tested in England, as shewn in Barlow's work, were of seasoned material. Here also, each specimen has been submitted to a more severe trial than is usual, by having been kept under strain for many consecutive half-hours. Therefore, while the strength and elasticity of many of the woods shew them, in these particulars to be superior to the Ash, the Oak, and the best woods of Great Britain, the constants representing these qualities may be safely relied on in calculating, by Barlow's formula, the dimensions of timber for any purpose to which wood is applicable.

E. W. WARD,
Deputy Master.

* The deflection at any particular weight was indicated on a dial fixed above the beam, and having a pointer connected by a simple arrangement with the iron staple to which the scale was attached.

LOSS OF GOLD SENT BY ESCORT.

(PETITION FROM SAMUEL ROBINSON.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be Printed, 11 April, 1861.

To the Honorable the Legislative Assembly of New South Wales, in Parliament assembled.

The Humble Petition of the undersigned,—

RESPECTFULLY SHEWETH :—

That, on the seventeenth day of August, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and fifty-seven (17th August, 1857), Richard Hull, agent to your Petitioner, duly deposited with Whittingdale Johnson, Esq., the Gold Commissioner at Stony Creek, fifty-one ounces (51 ozs.) of Gold, for transmission to your Petitioner. And your Petitioner respectfully submits, that, through culpable neglect and inexcusable carelessness on the part of certain Public Servants, in whose charge the Gold was, your Petitioner has been put to serious inconvenience, and has also sustained a serious loss in the matter. Your Petitioner respectfully begs to state further circumstances in connection with the loss. On the arrival of the Escort at "Orange," the bag which had contained the Gold was found to be empty, and, after collecting all the Gold from the saddle-bags, it is shown that there were exactly twenty-one ounces short of the quantity that was deposited with the Commissioner, and that, on examining the saddle-bags, a hole was discovered in the compartment in which the small gold bag was conveyed from Stony Creek.

Your Petitioner, therefore, humbly prays that your Honorable House will take the premises into your favourable consideration. And your Petitioner, as in duty bound, will ever pray.

NEW SOUTH WALES.

THE CHINESE.

(PETITION FOR PROTECTION TO, AT LAMBING FLAT.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be Printed, 14 March, 1861.

To the Honorable the Legislative Assembly of New South Wales, in Parliament assembled.

The humble Petition of the undersigned Inhabitants of Sydney,—

SHEWETH:—

That the Chinese have been induced, in common with others, at great personal expense and loss of time, to emigrate to New South Wales, and risk the exercise of their skill and labour at the Gold Fields of this Colony, in the hope that their honesty and persevering industry might be rewarded by a share of that success which has rendered the Gold Fields of this Colony so renowned all over the world.

That since their arrival they have given implicit obedience to the laws of the land, and have faithfully observed the regulations in force at the diggings, and in all other respects have submitted to and observed the laws of the country.

That in their dealings with every member of the community, the Chinese have been upright, and have honestly and faithfully performed all contracts and agreements entered into by them, and can safely say that, whilst contributing in an equal proportion to the revenue of the Colony, they have caused no trouble or expense to the legal tribunals of the country, in their civil or criminal jurisdiction.

That, under every hardship and privation in a foreign country, the Chinese have consoled themselves with the conviction that they might safely rely upon the good faith of the Government of this Colony, and have felt secure that the legal protection of the British Constitution and British power was guaranteed to their honest industry, and the enjoyment of the fruit of that industry.

That your Petitioners deeply regret to state to your Honorable House, that the sad experience of the past year has proved that such expectations, from whatever cause, have not been realized, but that, without provocation, or the shadow of offence of any kind, either of a public or of a private nature, the Chinese have been repeatedly subjected to the grossest violence and outrage; their persons insulted, their clothes torn off their backs, their tails ignominiously cut off (the greatest offence that can be offered to a Chinaman), their gold claims seized and violently forced from them, their personal property plundered and robbed, their tents burned, their stores forced, and they themselves forcibly driven (like cattle) off the diggings. This treatment your Petitioners felt to be the more unjustifiable, inasmuch as they, the Chinese, were the first who discovered Lambing Flat Diggings.

After the first outrage the Chinese one and all moved six miles further off, and found another diggings, at which they worked with equal success till they were again beset on all sides by an armed band of lawless diggers, and again the same acts of cruelty and oppression, but with more enormity than before, were perpetrated upon them.

That having felt bound, in common justice to the Chinese, humbly to state this much to your Honorable House, your Petitioners would beg to add, that the violence and outrage that have of late been perpetrated upon the Chinese they in no manner attribute to the Government, or those in public authority, because your Petitioners know and feel that such lawless acts were perpetrated in violation and open defiance both of the Government and the Laws of the Country.

Your Petitioners would also beg to state, that many of the Chinese, who have been thus subjected to persecution and outrage, are British subjects, from Hong Kong, and that on the successful labours of those men are now depending for subsistence their wives, families, and friends. That consequently those Chinese at the Lambing Flat, who are British subjects, are on an equality with Her Majesty's European subjects in this Colony, and their persons and property entitled to the like privileges and protection. And those Chinese in this Colony who are not British subjects are (your Petitioners respectfully submit) entitled by the laws of Nature, of Nations, and of Religion, to that protection of British law and British rule, which is the just pride and boast of Englishmen, wherever dawn the light and liberty of the British Constitution.

Your Petitioners therefore humbly pray, that your Honorable House will take the premises into your favourable consideration, and take such measures as will secure protection to their persons and property.

And your Petitioners, as in duty bound, will ever pray, &c.

ALLEGED AGGRESSION ON A CHINESE GOLD DIGGER AT LAMBING FLAT.

(PETITION OF SU SAN LING DOH.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be Printed, 26 March, 1861.

Sydney, 12th March, 1861.

To the Legislative Assembly.

On the 22nd day of December, 1860, I went on to Lambing Flat; I went to the Commissioner, and asked him if Chinamen would be allowed to dig on those diggings, and he said "Ycs." I had a Miner's Right from the Snowy River. I accordingly commenced work on the 25th January. The Europeans posted notices on the diggings, stating that, on the 27th, if the Chinamen would not clear out by that date, they would drive them away. I asked the Europeans for three days to remove my goods, bought at Walker's Store in Braidwood, and partly not paid for, which they would not grant me. I then asked for one day, and was refused. On the 27 I was drove off with the rest of my countrymen. I asked policemen to look after my goods. Early on the 28th I went on to the diggings again; I found about 20 or 30 Europeans and one woman by my tent, my goods all gone, and my tent burning; my goods amounted in value to £300 (three hundred pounds sterling). I have got a brother named Simons San Ling, who is a married man, and has a wife and three children still on Lambing Flat; they are totally unprovided for.

So I humbly beg the Legislative Assembly will take this Petition into your consideration, and you will oblige much

Your obedient servant,

SU SAN LING DOH.

ALLEGED AGGRESSION ON A CHINESE GOLD DIGGER AT LAMBING FLAT.

(PETITION OF MUN GAIM.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be Printed, 9 April, 1861.

To the Honorable the Speaker and the other Members of the Legislative Assembly of the Colony of New South Wales, in Parliament assembled.

The humble and respectful Petition of Mun Gaim, a Chinaman, now of Sydney, in the said Colony of New South Wales,—

SHewETH:—

That your Petitioner was born at Hong Kong, in China, is unacquainted with the English language, and came over from San Francisco to this Colony in the ship "Europa," in the year one thousand eight hundred and fifty-eight, with the intention of working at the gold fields.

That your Petitioner, by great exertions and unwearied industry, saved a small sum of money, with which he purchased and forwarded goods to the diggings at Lambing Flat—erected his tent and established a store on the said diggings.

That, only five days after the establishment of the said store, the European diggers at Lambing Flat aforesaid, illegally, and by force, drove your Petitioner and other Chinese from the said diggings to a distance of five miles, and burnt the tent of your Petitioner, together with the goods therein, consisting of Chinese silks and crape, and other Chinese and European productions;—your Petitioner not being able to save anything.

That the property of your Petitioner, to the value of five hundred pounds, was so burnt and destroyed by the said diggers.

That your Petitioner, since his arrival here, has conducted himself peaceably, and has not committed any offence against the laws of the Colony.

Your Petitioner, therefore, humbly prays that your Honorable House may take the premises into your favourable consideration, and grant him such redress as, in the wisdom of your Honorable House, may seem meet.

And your Petitioner, as in duty bound, will ever pray.

ALLEGED AGGRESSIONS ON CHINAMEN AT LAMBING FLAT.

(CERTAIN CHINESE GOLD MINERS.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be Printed, 24 April, 1861.

To the Honorable the Speaker and Members of the Legislative Assembly of New South Wales, in Parliament assembled.

The humble Petition of Hu Foo and Kylong, for themselves and the other sufferers named in the schedule written in the body of this Petition, and also of the undersigned Chinamen, now in Sydney,—

SH EWETH :—

That on the 19th day of February, 1861, your Petitioners, with several others of their countrymen, were residing at the Lambing Flat Diggings, in this Colony, and were peaceably and quietly prosecuting their various avocations as gold miners and store-keepers, in accordance with the Government licenses held respectively by them.

That on the said 19th day of February an armed band of European and other diggers did riotously and tumultuously assemble together at the said Lambing Flat Diggings, to the great disturbance of the public peace, and did then and there with force pull down, demolish, and maliciously destroy the tents, stores, fixtures, machinery, tools, goods, and other personal property and valuables belonging to the said Chinese; the destruction of which property was part of the same riotous transaction, and done at the same time and place.

The value of the said property thus destroyed your Petitioners beg to set opposite the names of the following sufferers :—

That your Petitioners are prepared to establish their interest in the said property ; that the offence was committed at the time and place as already stated ; your Petitioners are also prepared to submit themselves to the strictest examination for the purpose of enabling the Government to arrive at a just conclusion.

That the Government licenses issued to and paid for by your Petitioners, whether as miners or storekeepers, entitled them, your Petitioners respectfully submit, not only to the quiet enjoyment of personal security, personal liberty, and the right to the peaceable possession of personal property, but also (to some extent) to a temporary interest in the soil ; and that so great an imperfection cannot exist in the British law as not to provide for violence and outrage committed against such recognized rights, one of the principal maxims of the British Constitution being " that there is no injury without a remedy."

That the consequence of the late outrage of the 19th February last has been to place your Petitioners in a state of destitution, and to deprive them of their tools, implements, and machinery, so that they are now unable to go to work to procure subsistence and shelter.

Your Petitioners therefore humbly pray that your Honorable House will be graciously pleased to consider the premises, and take such steps as you may deem expedient and just.

And your Petitioners, as in duty bound, will ever pray, &c.

ALLEGED AGGRESSION ON CHINESE AT LAMBING FLAT.
(PETITION FROM KEW LOONG POW.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be Printed, 6 May, 1861.

To the Honorable the Speaker and Members of the Legislative Assembly of New South Wales, in Parliament assembled.

The humble Petition of Kew Loong Pow, Storekeeper,—

SHWETH:—

That, about December, 1860, I, the undersigned Kew Loong Pow, Tong Hap Store, was a licensed Storekeeper at the Lambing Flat Diggings, and I was peaceably and quietly prosecuting my business there as a storekeeper till the 27th of that month, when I was driven from the said diggings with the rest of my countrymen; my property, consisting of general provisions, &c., was destroyed, amounting in value to about (£350) eight hundred and fifty pounds.

I am, in consequence, left destitute, and without the means of providing a living either for myself or infant son.

I therefore humbly pray that your Honorable House will be graciously pleased to consider the premises, and take such steps as you may deem expedient and just.

And your Petitioner, as in duty bound, will ever pray, &c.

COMMISSIONER IN CHARGE, SOUTHERN GOLD FIELDS, to SECRETARY FOR LANDS.

Gold Commissioner's Office,Goulburn, 21 April, 1861.

SIR,

I do myself the honor to return herewith the Petition of Su Sang* Sing† Doh ^{* Or San.} ^{† Or Ling.} (a copy of which I have kept). I made inquiries for the Petitioner when at Lambing Flat, but he was not there. I therefore gave instructions to a detective officer, who has been for some time stationed at Lambing Flat, to make every inquiry into the matter. This officer reports:—"Simon Sang* Sing,† brother of complainant in this matter, gave me a list of stores " which were destroyed, and, upon inquiry, I have been credibly informed that they had not " Five pounds worth of any description of goods in the tent. My informant states that " these Chinese frequently purchased from him small quantities of sundry things of the same " nature as those which they say they had in their tent; and that he had seen them in as " indifferent circumstances as any of the other Chinese."

I return to Lambing Flat on Thursday, and shall still more thoroughly investigate this claim; and in the mean time I have written to Mr. Walker, of Braidwood, for a list of the goods stated to have been purchased at his store. I wish to be most particular in this, the first application, in order to prevent other Chinese from attempting to impose claims for which there may not be any foundation.

I have, &c.,

KIANDRA GOLD FIELDS.

No. 1.

COMMISSIONER CLOETE to SECRETARY FOR LANDS.

*Gold Commissioner's Office,
23 January, 1860.*

SIR,

I do myself the honor to report to you that a new Gold Field has been discovered at "Kiandra," or "Gibson's Plains"; and that already between three hundred and four hundred miners are there at work. This field is situated about twenty miles from Meragle, and about fifty miles from "Tumberumba." Its proximity to the Victoria boundary is likely to cause a "rush" from the neighbouring Gold Fields in that Colony; and I would therefore again beg to bring under your notice the urgent necessity that exists for placing Mr. James Innes Lynch, Sub Gold Commissioner, in the Commission of the Peace, as, unless this is done, I shall be unable to provide that authority and protection so necessary on a newly opened Gold Field.

2. I would further state, that, independently of the official requirements of this case, I consider Mr. J. I. Lynch to be a gentleman in every way fitted for appointment to the Magistracy.

I have, &c.,
P. L. CLOETE,
Commissioner in charge, Southern Gold Fields.

Sydney, 27 January, 1860.*

SIR,

With reference to your letter of the 23rd instant, reporting the discovery of a new Gold Field at Kiandra, or Gibson's Plains, and that already large numbers of persons were congregated there, I am directed to inform you that the Inspector General of Police has telegraphed to-day to Mr. Zouch, with a view to the detaching thither of adequate police protection.

2. I am at the same time to state that the appointment of Mr. Sub-Commissioner Lynch to the Commission of the Peace has been recommended, and will, in all probability, be made next Monday.

I have, &c.,
MICHL. FITZPATRICK.

*Gold Commissioner's Office,
Goulburn, 27 January, 1860.*

SIR,

With reference to the newly discovered Gold Field at Gibson's Plains, on the Snowy River, I do myself the honor to inform you that Assistant Gold Commissioner Lynch, from Adelong, proceeds there immediately. I have directed Mr. Lynch to take with him all the available Police from Adelong and Tumberumba, and I have arranged with the Superintendent of the Mounted Patrol for their temporary replacement.

2. I have requested Mr. Lynch to send me a full report as early as possible, especially describing the locality, in order that this Gold Field may be proclaimed. Should this officer's report be favourable I would myself proceed there, in order to make more permanent provision, and also to arrange for the establishment of a branch escort.

3. Sub Gold Commissioner Lynch could relieve the Assistant Commissioner (whose presence is required at Adelong) so soon as he shall have received magisterial powers.

I have, &c.,
P. L. CLOETE,
Commissioner in charge, Southern Gold Fields.

COMMISSIONER CLOETE to SECRETARY FOR LANDS.

*Gold Commissioner's Office,
Goulburn, 5 February, 1860.*

SIR,

A telegram was sent to me last night, from Mr. Lockhart, the Commissioner of Crown Lands at the Tumut, which informs me that he had received a despatch from Mr. Lynch, the Assistant Gold Commissioner, from Kiandra. The rush still continued, and was successful.

2. I have forwarded to Mr. Lynch (1,000) one thousand Miner's Rights, and would now recommend that this gold field be proclaimed; it may be described as Kiandra, or Gibson's Plains, together with all streams flowing therefrom. The Surveyor General will, doubtless, from the more accurate plans in his office, be able to furnish you with a true description of the locality; in the meantime I have the honor to forward a tracing of the locality which I have received from Mr. Assistant Commissioner Lynch. (See Appendix.)

3. I would advise that, in the gazetting of Sub-Commissioner Lynch to the Magistracy, a Delinus Potestatem might be issued to Robert Blossie Lynch, Assistant Gold Commissioner, in order that no time may be lost in the swearing in of Mr. J. Innes Lynch. I would further submit that this gentleman should not be made to bear the charge of this process, which the emergencies of the service alone renders so necessary.

I have, &c.,
P. L. CLOETE,
Commissioner in charge, Southern Gold Fields.

The Acting Surveyor General is requested to report. Blank Cover.

No. 5.

Acting Surveyor General's Report.

"GIANDARA Plain," which is doubtless that called "Kiandra," is on the head of the Snowy, not the Murrumbidgee River, as shewn on Mr. Lynch's sketch.

As the sources of the Murrumbidgee River immediately adjoin those of the Snowy River, I have thought it advisable to embrace them in the description for proclamation.

It will be necessary to name the Gold Field; and I presume that the name of Giandara may be given to it.

Kiandra is no doubt a corruption of the original name.

PROCLAMATION.

By His Excellency SIR WILLIAM THOMAS DENISON, Knight Commander of the Most Honorable Order of the Bath, Governor General in and over all Her Majesty's Colonies of New South Wales, Tasmania, Victoria, South Australia, and Western Australia, and Captain General and Governor-in-Chief of the Territory of New South Wales and its Dependencies, and Vice-Admiral of the same, &c., &c., &c.

IN pursuance of the power vested in me in this behalf, I, SIR WILLIAM THOMAS DENISON, Knight, the Governor General aforesaid, do hereby proclaim that the following shall be deemed a Gold Field, within the meaning and for the purposes of the Act of Council 20 Vic., No. 29, intituled, "An Act to amend the Laws relating to the Gold Fields," that is to say,—The Gold Field on Crown Lands at and in the vicinity of Giandara, or Gibson's Plains, and on the sources of the Snowy and Murrumbidgee Rivers, to be called "The Kiandra Gold Field."

Given under my Hand and Seal, at Government House, Sydney, this tenth day of February, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty, and in the twenty-third year of Her Majesty's Reign.

SIR,

With reference to your letter of the 5th instant, No. 27, I am now directed to draw your attention to the proclamation, in the Government Gazette of the 10th instant, of the Kiandra Gold Field.

2. I am at the same time to inform you, that in accordance with the recommendation contained in the latter part of your communication, the Prothonotary of the Supreme Court has been written to respecting the issue, without delay, to Assistant Gold Commissioner Lynch, of a Writ of Dedimus Potestatem, for the purpose of enabling him to administer the usual oaths as a Magistrate to Sub-Commissioner Lynch, a notice of whose appointment to the magistracy appeared also in the Government Gazette of the 10th instant.

3. I am to add, that any expenses chargeable with respect to the issue of this Writ can be charged to your public account.

No. 8.

COMMISSIONER CLOETE to UNDER SECRETARY FOR LANDS.

*Gold Commissioner's Office,
Goulburn, 15 February, 1860.*

SIR,

I do myself the honor to inform you that I have this day received a report from Assistant Gold Commissioner Lynch, dated Snowy River, February 5th, to the following effect:—

2. About fifteen hundred miners were there collected, chiefly on the eastern branch of the Snowy River; the claims were extremely rich, yielding in many instances from forty to fifty pounds per week per man, and in most cases not less than seven pounds per man for the six working days. Wages of hired men, of whom there were very few, as miners, about five pounds per week. The stripping was of a light character and the sinking shallow.

3. Mr. Lynch reports the mining population to be most orderly; and expected in a week to have settled all claims and permits. This officer further expresses his opinion that a very extensive Gold Field exists both in the eastern and western waters of the Great Dividing Range, viz., at the head of the Murrumbidgee River, Tantaagro Creek, Snowy River, and Eccambene.*

4. The present diggings can only be worked from the 1st December to the end of March; for the rest of the year the place is uninhabitable and unapproachable, owing to the heavy snow drifts.

5. With reference to the establishment of a permanent camp, on which I had requested to be informed, Mr. Lynch states that the nearest suitable spot for that purpose would be "Russell's Station," twelve miles from "Kiandra" on the way to Cooma. Taking also into consideration the advanced period of the season, I have not thought it necessary to make any provision, further than that already established, until the next spring.

6. Provisions and mining tools were as yet scarce, but large supplies are daily being sent from all parts. The price of meat of good quality was four-pence per pound; flour (which is very scarce) nine-pence per pound.

7. As the diggings at Kiandra will most probably cease, for the present, by the end of next month, I do not conceive that there is any necessity for my immediately proceeding there.

I have, &c.,
P. L. CLOETE,
Commissioner in charge, Southern Gold Fields.

* Capable of affording employment for about thirty thousand miners.

2. I am at the same time to inform you, that the Secretary for Lands concurs with you in opinion, that it will not be necessary to make any further provision as regards Quarters, &c., than that already established, until next spring.

*Department for Lands,
Sydney, 3 March, 1860.*

SIR,

It has been suggested to Government that it will be very desirable to keep up a line of communication for the return of diggers from the Snowy River Gold Fields; and I am directed by the Secretary for Lands to inform you, that, with this view, the sum of one hundred pounds has been placed to the credit of Mr. Henry Hall, for the repair of the road alluded to in the enclosed communication, which is a copy of the one addressed by him on the subject to the Chief Secretary.

£100.
24 February,
1860.

2. I am therefore to request, that you will turn your immediate attention to this question, and report what other steps you think necessary, in order to insure an available egress from these diggings during the winter.

3. I am further desired to invite your opinion as to the erection of a Punt, in the locality recommended by Mr. Hall, on the Murrumbidgee.

I have, &c.,

MICHL. FITZPATRICK.

(Enclosure in No. 10.)

*Charmwood, Gininderra,
24 February, 1860.*

Sir,

I have the honor to call the attention of Her Majesty's Government to the necessity of opening a road for the return of persons from the Kiandra Diggings, on the setting in of bad weather, as, from the number of persons who have gone up very ill provided, and the scarcity of supplies on the diggings, if a road is not opened for their return, there must be a fearful loss of life.

Having held the station of Yaouh, about twenty miles below the diggings, for above twenty-five years, I am well able to form a correct opinion as to the state of that part of the country in the winter season. I have seen the snow on Yaouh, in the month of April, two feet deep; and after heavy snow, the rivers are for some time flooded and impassable.

The Bredbow and Umeralla Rivers, on the Maneroo Road, and Lob's Hole, on the Tumut, prevent any person passing. About twenty-five years ago, after Mr. Ward lost three hundred head of the late Mr. Palmer's cattle (which were smothered in the snow), a few miles from Gibson's Plain, he made several unsuccessful attempts to get down the country for rations, by Maneroo, and failed; he then, with the assistance of the blacks, came down the Table Land and Long Plains, crossing near the source of the Coodradigbee, at Brindibulla, and following down the ridge, between the Cottar and Coodradigbee Rivers, to the Murrumbidgee, where the blacks brought them over in a canoe. This road, I am quite satisfied, can be used at any season of the year, provided a punt was placed on that river. Mr. Bushby and my stock-keeper came down the line immediately after the late heavy rains, and were only two days from the Gold Field to the river. This road would also be more than sixty miles nearer, either from Sydney, Goulburn, Yass, or Queanbeyan, than the one by Cooma; and the parties who came down it state a very passable dry road could be made for about £100. Mr. Murray (the Speaker) used this road for his drays for some years, as far as the Long Plain, after which, there is no difficulty. There is a very good place for a punt on the Murrumbidgee, near where the dividing line of the Yass and Queanbeyan police districts joins the river, with a dry road to the bank on either side.

If I can afford the Government any further information, it will give me pleasure to do so.

I have, &c.,

HENRY HALL.

The Colonial Secretary.

Braidwood, G.P.O.

Denison, Esq.
Sir,

Being desirous to lay before you a plan to keep the road open to the Snowy River, and feeling confident that it can be done before a month would elapse, at a cost of £300, which would be but little in comparison to the profit of opening up the district to Tumut. The plan would be a reversed telegraph without wire; that is to say, instead of placing the posts on the highest ground, they would require to be placed on the lowest ground, and all the posts to be one height from the road; then they would always gauge the depth of the snow. Whenever it would be necessary to cross a creek on a bush bridge, there would require an additional precaution; that is to say, a post on either side of the bridge, viz:—

At other parts of the road less dangerous, it would only require a cross-piece bolted transverse, in this manner:—

the name being over the road, indicating always the side on which the traveller should be. Five posts per mile, forty miles, makes 200 posts, at £1 per post; divided in four working parties of ten miles each; each working party to compose a smith, a carpenter, and four labourers.

If these suggestions be of your approval, I shall be glad to make one of the carpenters.

Your much obliged and obedient servant,
JOSEPH CARTER,
Carpenter,
Braidwood, General Post Office.

N.B.—The remaining hundred would be to cover incidentals, such as bridges and bullock labour.

No. 17.

COMMISSIONER CLOETE to SECRETARY FOR LANDS.

*Gold Commissioner's Office,
Goulburn, 24 March, 1860.*

SIR,

I do myself the honor to report my return here this afternoon from Kiandra. I had written a report from Gundagai, but finding that this day's post from here would reach you as soon, I did not send it from there.

2. The present diggings are chiefly situated on the "Encumbene," a tributary to the "Snowy River," and contained, when I left, a population of about five thousand persons. The daily numerous arrivals from Victoria will, however, soon increase that number to probably eight thousand.

3. From the most authentic information to be procured, I find that after the beginning of April the weather is likely to become very unsettled, and falls of snow may be expected, and that by the month of May the Gold Fields at Kiandra may almost to a certainty be considered closed.

Many

Many people propose wintering there, but the first appearance of snow will, I think, drive them away, as they are, for the most part, most inadequately provided, and are taking but little precaution against the well known severity of the winter. One large and substantially built public-house has been erected, capable of affording shelter to about one hundred persons, and the proprietor is busily laying in large supplies. The majority, or, at all events, a considerable number of the miners, will winter at and about Russell's Station, twelve miles from Kiandra, and the rest at Adelong and Tumberumba.

4. Of the richness and extent of this Gold Field I have little doubt, and although the near approach of winter has prevented miners from attempting to prospect far from the present diggings and principal thoroughfares, yet on the table land, and falls of the rivers, payable yields of gold have in several places been found.

The richest claims yet opened were those first taken, and from them gold in large quantities have been obtained; some of the accounts would almost seem fabulous, and I therefore give you merely a few statements made to me by miners on whom I could rely. One party of three, whose claims were not in the first opened and rich ground, had obtained at an average two ounces per day per man. Another party had made as much as twenty ^{20oz.} pounds per day each. Another, whose claims also were not in the richest ground, had averaged twenty pounds each per week since they had been at work. A man whom I had ^{£20.} known in the Western District complained of only earning two pounds a day. The surface ^{£2.} diggings are also rich, and will, when water is brought on, yield largely. I did not think, however, for the present, that it would be advisable to grant water right for sluicing purposes on this ground, as the sludge would greatly incommode, if not stop the work of those in the creek. Several large nuggets have been found. The following nuggets were in the Commissioner's Camp when I left:—One of 93oz. 18dwts.; one of 23oz. 13dwts.; one of about 160oz.; one of 62oz., sent to Braidwood; and six smaller ones, weighing together about 180oz.

A considerable quantity of gold goes by way of Cooma and Braidwood. No one ought to think of leaving for these Gold Fields this season. The summer being too far advanced for the prospecting and opening of new ground, many of the late arrivals are doing nothing; from all accounts the plains will not be approachable after the winter until about the middle of October next.

5. I have informed the Commissioners that no date could be fixed for their departure, but that they were to be prepared to leave on the first approach of the snow. I would station a Sub-Commissioner at "Russell's," where a police force of at least five mounted men ^(s.) should also be placed. Mr. Gouldebury, who leaves on Monday next, will proceed by Cooma and Russell's; so that the repairs required for the road could be decided on with the Cooma Bench, and arrangements made for a building at Russell's, subject to your approval. I propose, after arranging my office detail, which will take me about a week, to return to Kiandra, via Cooma, so as to see the required arrangements carried out.

The population of Adelong will much increase during the winter; and as the quartz claims there will not be again registered, the number of miners will not much diminish during the next summer. I would submit to you the following arrangements, viz.:—that an Assistant and one Sub-Gold Commissioner take charge of Adelong; and that an Assistant and two Sub-Commissioners take the Kiandra Gold Fields, during the winter; the latter officers could be at Tumberumba and Russell's, supervising any new fields that may be opened on the falls of the rivers, and thus be ready at the commencement of the next spring to concentrate at Kiandra. As one of the Sub-Commissioners would probably be a new appointment, he would, during the winter, be able to gain that knowledge of his duties so necessary for his efficiency at Kiandra next spring. I propose to take charge myself of this Gold Field when it shall be re-opened, for such time as may be necessary to arrange the stationing and general duties of the Commissioners.

6. I did not notice at Kiandra more disorder than is observable on every newly discovered Gold Field. Sly grog selling is certainly carried on to a great extent; but I did not think it advisable to interfere when it was impossible entirely to check. When public-houses are established, this illicit selling will of course be put a stop to.

7. The present police force at Kiandra consists of twelve men; for the next season ¹² there should be no less than thirty; of these, ten could be dismounted. A Station is being ^{30.} formed on the road between Kiandra and Tumut, which will be of great service, both as a Patrol Station and a halting place for the Escort.

8. Although not strictly a matter connected with my department, I would beg, in conclusion, to express an opinion that the appointment of a Police Magistrate at Tumut would be of great advantage.

I have, &c.,

P. L. CLOETE,
Commissioner in charge, Southern Gold Fields.

SIR,

I do myself the honor to report to you the discovery of a new Gold Field, situated in Gibson's Plains, or "Kiandra," about fifty miles north-east of Tumberumba, with steep mountain ranges and the Tumut River intervening, at the foot of a portion of the Snowy Mountains, and about forty miles south-east of Tumut, but over a mountain and severe country.

2. I do myself the honor to forward Mr. Sub Gold Commissioner Lynch's report of yesterday's duty. The description given of the country by that officer, I would suggest, is and can be only the description of others, as he has not visited it. I should pronounce it impossible to admit of many living there in the winter months, being difficult of access for supplies, supplies, even by pack horse, and severe as Tumberumba is, it is trifling as compared with what Gibson's Plains must be.

3. I have the honor to very particularly urge upon your attention the 5th paragraph of Mr. Sub Gold Commissioner Lynch's letter, more particularly as if this portion of the Gold Fields be found steady, remunerative, that it will be, from its physical characteristics, a second "Omeo," that refugium of Victorian and New South Wales criminals.

4. I have further the honor to report that all necessary steps within my power have been taken to grant claims and adjust disputes between the miners prospecting and mining all about the part of the country indicated.

SIR,

I have made arrangements that the police force at Adelong shall be reinforced. I have therefore the honor to request that, as soon as possible after your arrival at the Gibson's Plains Gold Field, you will report to me the actual state of that digging, at the same time giving me such a description of its locality, describing the watersheds, &c., in order that it may be proclaimed. Should your report indicate a probability of this Gold Field lasting, I shall myself visit it, in order to make arrangements for the stations of a Commissioner there, and also providing for Escorts.

2. I have again urged on the Honorable the Secretary for Lands, the necessity for placing Sub Gold Commissioner Lynch in the Commission of the Peace. It would be advisable for you, in the first instance, to remain at Gibson's Plains whilst the rush continues. When Mr. Lynch is gazetted, he can relieve you until permanent provision can be made.

SIR,

I do myself the honor of again addressing you on the subject of that recently opened portion of the country auriferously under my charge; I allude to Gibson's Plains, ^{Gibson's Plains or Kiandra.} or Kiandra, at the foot of the Snowy River, or head of the Marrumbidgee stream.

2. I am induced to this, finding that, from the most reliable information, an exodus is taking place from all other Gold Fields even into Victoria, all bound for the locality indicated, being about forty-eight (48) miles south-east of Tumut, and about fifty (50) north-east and by east of Tumberumba.

3. I further find that it will be necessary for me to proceed to the scene, and I have therefore arranged for the sending up for Mr. Lynch to accompany me on the journey. I am also compelled to draw every available man from every station in my charge, to do duty as a police force, and intend starting on Monday, the 30th instant.

4. I will forward, either from there or on my return, a full report on all subjects pertinent. I believe the population to be about seven hundred persons, many of them of very indifferent character.

5. I have the honor to forward Mr. J. Innes Lynch's report, which I request may ^{this report never returned.} be returned.

D. M. G. C. O., 29 January, 1860.

SIR,

I have the honor to acknowledge receipt of your letter dated 26th instant.

2. I do myself the honor to report that the population of Gibson's Plains, or Kiandra, is still daily increasing. I start thence at daylight to-morrow with a sergeant and four men. I have no reason for apprehending anything like disturbance or disorder.

3. I do myself the honor to forward you a small rough sketch, or tracing, which will, added to my previous information, give an idea of its locality. It is a very difficult country to be approached by heavy supplies, and under no circumstances can it be considered other than a summer diggings, as after the month of May snow storms prevail to such an extent extent that human life would not be safe: thus from the end of November to May it might be practicable.

4. I do myself the honor to report that I see no present necessity demanding your presence. I have registered many of the Adelong claims, and under that protection the holders will return reinforced by an accession of capital.

5. I will with all possible dispatch forward you a detailed report from the spot.

6. I would further desire to state that supplies will best reach this Gold Field by Cooma.

I have, &c.,

ASSISTANT COMMISSIONER LYNCH to COMMISSIONER CLOETE.

District of Maneroo,

Camp, Snowy River, 5 February, 1860.

SIR,

I do myself the honor to report my arrival on this Gold Field on the 1st instant, accompanied by Mr. Sub-Commissioner James I. Lynch, and a staff of police consisting of one sergeant and four men.

District
Maneroo.

2. That I find the waters on which the miners are congregated to be the eastern branch of the Snowy River, rising from springs about four miles south-east of my camp, and debouching into the Eucambene River, being about six miles in a southerly direction from the head of the Murrumbidgee River, with the great dividing range between.

£40 to £50.
£7.

3. That there are now on this Gold Field about fifteen hundred men as miners, all, more or less, able-bodied men, scattered over the river for a distance of about twelve miles; that the claims are extremely rich, and yield in many instances from forty to fifty pounds per week per man, and I have reason to believe in most instances not less than seven pounds per man for the six working days. Wages of hired men, of whom there are very few, as miners, from four to five pounds per week.

30 feet bed.
30 by 30 bank.

4. From the light character of the strippings and the shallow sinkings I have deemed it expedient, under the XXV. Clause of the Regulations, to divide the claims into bed and bank ones, giving thirty feet in length on the course of the river from bank to bank in one case, and thirty by thirty on bank areas, which I am happy in being able to report gives amongst the miners in the aggregate entire satisfaction, and that at these measurements Permits are being rapidly issued, and the innumerable instances of disputes, arising out of ground taken up in excess of all regulations or probable allowances on the part of the Government, being adjusted.

5. I am most happy in being able to report that I have found the population most orderly, considering its cosmopolitan character, and ready to yield to laws and regulations. I fully trust by the end of the ensuing week to have made all the grants, and placed the mining population in a sound working condition.

6. I would now do myself the honor to report, that I have every reason to believe, from facts with which I am surrounded and from my own observations, that this and the surrounding country abounds in gold, and that most extensive Gold Fields are but dawning on New South Wales, to prove the truth of data long since affirmed by the Rev. W. B. Clarke, as a geologist of unquestionable attainments, both in the eastern and western waters of the great dividing range, which would be the head of the Murrumbidgee River, Tantangra Creek, and the Snowy River and Eucambene.

7. As relates to this particular spot, I regret that I am not in a situation to report other than that it can only be viewed as a summer diggings, say from 1st December to the extreme end of March, before or after which it is unapproachable and uninhabitable, from snow and its heavy drifts rendering it, by the statements of the oldest surrounding inhabitants, impossible to establish anything nearer than twelve miles, where human life would be safe, which would be at or about a point known as Russell's Station, in a line of country between my present camp and Cooma, in a south-easterly direction.

8. Under these considerations, and the very advanced period of the present season, I feel it incumbent on me to refrain from suggesting or recommending to the Government the establishment of any special staff for duty here, whilst I am quite of opinion that next season it will be in every way requisite to afford a resident Commissioner, armed with magisterial powers, and aided by ample police protection, under properly organized arrangements of accommodation for both himself and men, when a proper auriferous survey of the country should be made and published, believing, as I do, that there is a payable area for from twenty-five to thirty thousand miners.

9. From the sudden rush which has taken place hither, I regret to state that those now congregated are very indifferently supplied either with food or tools, although I believe that the best possible arrangements are being made for both by storekeepers of enterprise, both on the Cooma and Tumut side, the former affording a good road until within twelve miles, from whence pack horses and mules are being used. There are two stores already established; one by the indicators, Messrs. Pollock, the other by Mr. Chippendale, who retails meat of good character at fourpence per pound, and flour at ninepence per pound, but the latter very difficult to obtain.

10. On the whole, I believe that this season, if the miners do not rashly attempt staying into too advanced a period, will be successfully passed over, and as the land is not leased leased or in the occupation of any squatter, I will take another opportunity of forwarding boundaries for proclamation, to be published, rendering the country around a proclaimed gold field.

11. Labouring as I do under very considerable difficulty in forwarding any despatch, I trust that any delay in this reaching you for the information of the Executive, may be pardoned, while

I have, &c.,

R. LYNCH,
A. G. C.

No. 6.

HERE in the Correspondence occurs a break, and for the following reasons:—

About the end of February, 1860, Mr. Assistant Commissioner Lynch addressed a despatch to Mr. Commissioner Cloete, pointing out in detail all that he considered necessary to meet the exigencies of the still growing population, and the probable difficulties of the coming winter, suggesting snow posts and many other matters. This letter was sent to Mr. Cloete, but at the time of its being posted at Tumut, that gentleman had left Goulburn for Tumut and Kiandra, and obtained from Mr. Crown Lands Commissioner Lockhart, in the absence, at Kiandra, of Mr. Lynch, the rough copy ere it had been entered in the letter book, he (Mr. Cloete) promising to return it on its being carefully perused. This has never been done, consequently no record of the document exists in this office, Mr. Cloete having both the copy addressed and posted to him, as also the original.

No. 7.

ASSISTANT COMMISSIONER LYNCH to COMMISSIONER CLOETE.

D. M. G. C. O., 23 March, 1860.

SIR,

I do myself the honor to report my departure from Kiandra Gold Field on the 19th instant, with the escort, bearing gold as in margin, and at that time leaving Mr. Lynch ^{5,160 oz. 11 dwts.} in charge, with a prisoner—George Walker—committed to take his trial, charged with robbery ^{5 grs.} from the person of William Thorpe in broad day, and opposite and in sight of the Government camp, at that time leaving, as a police force, Sergeant Gibson, Trooper Morris, and three dismounted men, with a daily increasing criminal population, as well as a general one.

2. On the following morning Mr. Sub-Commissioner Lynch felt it necessary to despatch two men, Levi and Conway, to escort him to Tumut, under which abridged force two delinquents being, on Wednesday, the 21st instant, about 8 in the evening, arrested by the mob, they proceeded to execute Lynch law upon them, some exclaiming "hang them"—others, "cut their ears off;" and ultimately shaving their heads, during which process, and ^{About 100 persons.} with some difficulty, they were rescued by the few remaining police, their lives being preserved.

3. As a result, the more respectable portion of the population have called and had a meeting, forming themselves into a Vigilance Committee, many, I am informed, taking up the duty of special constables.

4. Under such a state of matters I have deemed it my duty to order every available man in the police force out to Kiandra, and to proceed there again myself in the morning.

5. I further deem it my duty to urge upon you the necessity of recommending immediately the appointment of a Police Magistrate for duty at Kiandra, as the criminal business has so materially increased as to render it impossible the combined duties can be performed in anything like efficiency by the Gold Commissioner. In short, larceny and robbery from the person are rife, and of daily as well as nightly occurrence, requiring and urgently demanding not only such an officer, but a considerable accession of police force, both mounted and dismounted.

6. I would also desire to report that from the continued fine weather persons are now fully determined on remaining, if not the entire winter, at least far into the season, and talk of memorializing the Government for police, all the year, in which case volunteers would have to be drawn should the Government yield to the request.

7. I beg finally to impress on your attention that such is the rapid accession of bad characters from Victoria, since your departure, that I cannot answer for what turn crime may take, if not met by proper means for its repression, and an immediate raid made against them.

I have, &c.,

R. LYNCH, A.G.C.

No. 8.

ASSISTANT COMMISSIONER LYNCH to COMMISSIONER CLOETE.

D. M. G. C. O., 7 April, 1860.

SIR,

I do myself the honor to report the condition of the Kiandra Gold Field up to the 31st March in this year.

2. I first do myself the honor to report my return from Kiandra on the 2nd instant, arriving with the escort here on the evening of the 3rd. At this time the miners were quiet, there being about three thousand on Kiandra, and as many more in several rushes, particularly one now known as "Scott's Creek" about nine miles south-west of the present Government camp.

3. There are also about one thousand people at and about the head of the Tumut River, and the remainder in scattered positions.

4. There are now numbers leaving Kiandra, some to winter at Adelong and Tumberumba, where again both myself and Mr. Sub-Commissioner Lynch's presence are respectively required; others to seek winter quarters in a more hospitable climate, and to be contiguous to the Snowy River Gold Fields in the early part of the next ensuing season, when a very large population may be expected, and arrangements officially and efficiently made in due time for their reception.

5. I would strongly and immediately recommend that the following arrangements be made for the formation of a Town and Village Reserves on this extension, where already formed under past surveys, on the road between Tumut and the Kiandra Gold Field:—

Blowering.
Talbingo.

1. A small reserve at or about Blowering, ten miles from Tumut.
2. A similar one in the One Mile Reserve at Talbingo, now a one mile reserve, which is twenty-two miles from Tumut, and twelve from Blowering.
3. At Yarrangobilly again, thirty-four from Tumut, and fifteen from Talbingo, there being nothing again between Yarrangobilly and the Snowy River, a distance of twenty-two miles, unless solitary houses of accommodation were encouraged and licensed at suitable spots on the Long Plain, a distance of fifteen miles from the Camp.

Yarrangobilly.

6. I would, on the road between Cooma and the Gold Field of Kiandra, also strongly recommend the following:—

Cubmurra.

1. At Cubmurra, the stations of Mr. Russell, one of the eight years' leases which expired on the 1st of January, 1860, I would certainly suggest a township being laid off, and every encouragement given to storekeepers and traders, as also to licensed publicans for inns.

Adaminaby.

2. At Adaminaby I would recommend a very extensive reserve being made of the vast plain existing, thus affording some of the finest land in the Colony for farms and arable purposes.

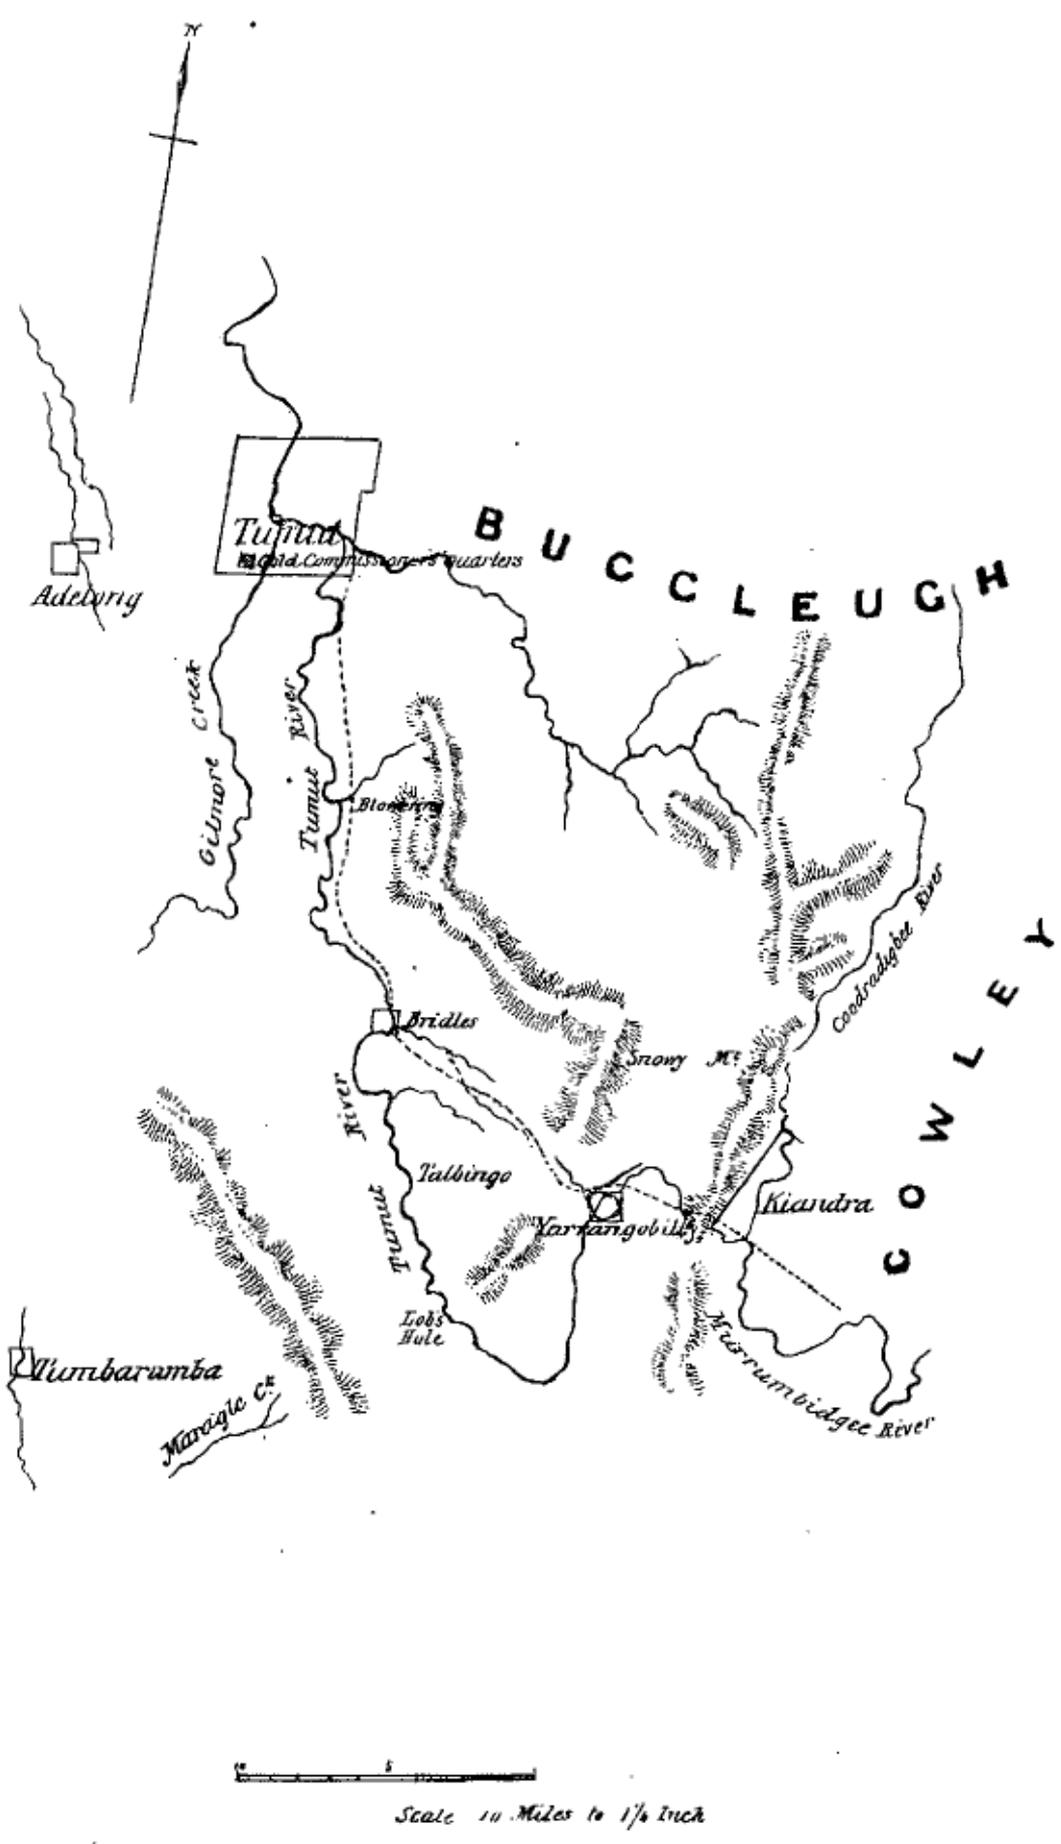

7. I have now every reason for thinking that a large proportion of the population will endeavour to winter at and about Kiandra, and that the entire country, between Tumut and that place, as also on the other side, will be prospected, and extensive fields for mining enterprise opened up by the opening of the season 1860 and 1861.

I have, &c.,

R. LYNCH, A. G. C.

NEW SOUTH WALES.

AUSTRALIAN MUSEUM.

(REPORT FROM TRUSTEES.)

Presented to both Houses of Parliament, by Command.

REPORT OF THE TRUSTEES OF THE AUSTRALIAN MUSEUM, FOR THE YEAR ENDING 31 DECEMBER, 1860.

To HIS EXCELLENCY THE GOVERNOR GENERAL,
&c., &c., &c.

1. The Trustees of the Australian Museum have the honor to submit to your Excellency this their Seventh Annual Report.

2. The Museum has been open to the public daily, during the past year, and has been visited by 11,800 persons.

3. The Trustees have continued to foster a system of exchange with the leading foreign Museums, and to lay the foundation for an extended and continuous interchange of specimens from different parts of the globe. The importance and economy of this mode of enriching the collection of any Museum is sufficiently evident, but is calculated to be doubly advantageous in a country like New South Wales, the natural history of which is by no means fully investigated, or efficiently represented in many European and other Museums of long standing.

4. In exchange for specimens previously forwarded, the Trustees have received the following from foreign Museums, during the past year:—

From the Royal and Public Museum at Copenhagen:—84 species of crustacea; 47 species of echinodermata; 391 species of mollusks; and 70 specimens of ancient Scandinavian weapons, tools, and utensils, indicating a period prior to the discovery of iron in those regions.

From the South African Museum, Cape Town:—42 skins and 2 skulls of mammals, (32 species); and 200 skins of birds, (103 species.)

From the Museum of Natural History at Hamburg:—50 specimens of African reptiles.

From the Museum at Santiago de Chili:—58 skins of large birds, and 76 species of mollusks.

5. Numerous donations have been received during the year, a list of which, with the names of the donors, is appended. (Appendix No. 2.)

6. Some valuable donations of books have been added to the library, amongst which are 22 vols. of the Catalogue Raisonné of the Hunterian Museum, presented by the Council of the Royal College of Surgeons of England, containing much information, and numerous plates of the highest scientific value.

7. The whole of the books selected and purchased by Professor Owen, George Macleay, Esq., and Dr. Bennett, for the Museum, have been received. This collection consists of 382 volumes of great value and interest. A list of them is appended. (Appendix No. 3.)

8. The Trustees have to acknowledge a liberal grant from the Legislature to secure the services of a gentleman, as Curator, possessed of the scientific knowledge necessary for the classification and arrangement of the continually increasing collection of specimens. They placed the selection of this gentleman in the hands of Professor Owen and George Macleay, Esq., who secured the services of S. R. Pittard, Esq., a gentleman highly recommended, and possessing considerable scientific reputation. Mr. Pittard arrived in the early part of last year, and immediately entered upon his duties.

9. With the object of rendering the Museum as much as possible a centre of education in the science of natural history, the arrangement with Mr. Pittard included the delivery of such lectures connected with this branch of study as the Trustees might from time to time deem desirable. In pursuance of this plan a highly interesting and instructive course of lectures on Zoology has been delivered in the Board Room of the Museum, and was attended by as many persons as could be provided for—indeed it was necessary to stop the issue of tickets of admission in consequence of the limited accommodation at the command of the Trustees. As soon as the classification and arrangement of the specimens in the Museum are sufficiently advanced, it is intended to resume the system of giving periodical courses of lectures on suitable subjects.

10. A Sub-Curator of considerable practical experience in natural history has also been appointed, who takes an active part in the general duties of the institution.

11. Two experienced taxidermists have been occupied during the year in preparing, preserving, and mounting specimens.

12. Besides numerous specimens of the class Reptilia, Mr. Krefft, the Sub-Curator, has collected about 2,000 insects, including 300 species.

13. It is interesting to observe that a limited, but increasing, number of young men habitually visit the Museum, as persevering students in the branches of science illustrated by its collections.

14. It is with the deepest regret that the Trustees have to record the resignation of the late Governor General, His Excellency Sir W. T. Denison, K.C.B., as an elective Trustee, to whose indefatigable exertions and truly scientific mind the Australian Museum has been and must always remain under the deepest obligations. The Trustees have also to record the resignation of Alfred Denison, Esq., and Professor Smith as elective Trustees of the Museum, and the election of John Hay, Esq., and George Bennett, Esq., M.D.

15. A collection consisting of 38 specimens of Australian Woods, received from the Deputy Master of the Mint, has been placed in the Museum, together with specimens of the leaves, flowers, and seeds of the trees. It is intended to enlarge this collection as soon as possible.

16. The Legislature having placed the sum of £200 in the hands of the Trustees for the purchase of ores, minerals, and fossils, they have ordered a collection of numerous specimens, which, it is anticipated, will form a complete educational series.

17. Whilst using their best endeavours to enlarge the collections for the Museum as much as possible on the principle of exchange, the Trustees do not fail to purchase such specimens from time to time as appear desirable.

18. The urgent requirements for additional buildings and space for the rapidly increasing and valuable collections of the Museum have been brought under the notice of Government in the Reports for the years 1857, 1858, and 1859. We have only now to state that the experience of the past year has rendered these requirements painfully evident. A rapidly increasing Museum should always possess a large space for the immediate and efficient arrangement of newly acquired specimens; but this is more especially felt when large acquisition arrive from other Museums, a considerable porportion of which could at once be catalogued and exhibited, if the necessary space existed.

19. As an illustration of the necessity for such increased accommodation, we may this year again mention, that the Museum is possessed of a most valuable collection of geological casts, presented by the Trustees of the British Museum, which are necessarily stowed away in the underground collars, and are daily suffering from damp, while the public are deprived of the benefit to be derived from their exhibition.

20. Appendix No. 1 contains an abstract of the receipts and payments of the Trustees, on behalf of the Museum, for the year ending December 31, 1860.

21. Appendix No. 2 contains a list of the various donations during the same year with the names of the donors.

22. Appendix No. 3 contains a list of books purchased for the Museum Library.

23. Appendix No. 4 is a condensed statement of the specimens which cannot be exhibited for want of space.

24. The Trustees have the honor to submit this their Report for the year one thousand eight hundred and sixty, and in testimony thereof have caused their corporate seal to be hereunto affixed this twenty-eight day of February, one thousand eight hundred and sixty-one.

(L.S.) E. DEAS THOMSON,

Chairman.

By Order of the Trustees,

S. R. PITTARD,

Secretary.

APPENDIX No. 4.

CONDENSED STATEMENT of Specimens in the Australian Museum which cannot be exhibited for want of space.

Five large packing cases of casts of fossils in the British Museum, presented by the Trustees of the British Museum.

A large collection of ores and minerals from the Peel River Land and Mineral Company's estate, collected and arranged by Mr. F. Odenheimer.

The collections of minerals sent in with the reports of the Examiner of Coal Fields dated June 3rd and August 3rd, 1856.

Three hundred and one specimens of Australian minerals collected by the late Mr. Stutchbury.

Sixty-five specimens of Canadian minerals.

A collection of fossils and minerals from Nova Scotia.

A collection of fossils from Maria Island, Tasmania.

A collection of tertiary fossils from Sicily.

A large number of fossils and minerals presented singly and in small lots by numerous donors.

The skeleton of a spermaceti whale, two skeletons of other species of whales, and skeletons of tiger, bear, elephant, and reindeer.

A collection of five hundred and twenty-two zoological specimens sent in exchange by the Royal and Public Museum of Copenhagen.

A very large collection of conchological specimens.

Fifty specimens of Canadian timbers.

Models of bridges.

A collection of ancient weapons, tools, and utensils, made of flint or stone, and found in Denmark, Sweden, and Norway, indicating a period when the use of iron was unknown in Europe.

NEW SOUTH WALES.

OBSERVATORY AT SYDNEY.

(THIRD REPORT.)

Presented to both Houses of Parliament, by Command.

MINUTE of the Proceedings of the Observatory Board, at a Meeting held at the Observatory, on the 13th December, 1860.Present:—

HIS EXCELLENCY THE GOVERNOR GENERAL, President, in the Chair.

THE HONORABLE THE COLONIAL SECRETARY.

THE Astronomer's Third Annual Report on the state and progress of the Observatory having been read, the Board express their satisfaction at the nature and quantity of the work carried on during the past year, as shewn in the Report.

The Board consider and approve the plan suggested by the Astronomer for giving warning of approaching gales by Telegraphic communication between the Australian Ports.

The Board also approve a proposal to remove the Meteorological Instruments to the Telegraph Stations, but defer the consideration of the question of the appointment of an Assistant Computer until after the arrival of a large Equatorial Telescope, both of which subjects are adverted to in the Report.

The Board recommend that the Report and the Minutes of their Proceedings be laid before the Government, with a recommendation that they be printed, and then adjourn sine die.

W. DENISON.

THIRD ANNUAL REPORT ON THE SYDNEY OBSERVATORY.

THE Report which I am now enabled to make on the state and progress of the Observatory is far more satisfactory to myself than either of its predecessors.

The amount of work produced during the last year will well bear comparison with that done in any other Observatory; and the quality of the results, though not of the highest order, are yet as accurate as can be obtained with an instrument made many years since by one maker, and repaired and altered by another.

The observations made during the latter half of the year 1859 have been fully reduced, and their results printed and distributed.

The whole number of Transit Observations made and reduced during that period was 1,654, of which the results of 1,172 have been printed: those which were employed only for the determination of local mean time having been omitted.

The determination of the Latitude of the Observatory may be considered correct within one-tenth of a second.

The determination of the Longitude is less satisfactory, owing to the well-known defective character of the Lunar Tables, as given in the Nautical Almanac.

Not having received the Greenwich Observations for 1859, I am unable to correct the results, but have reason to believe that the resulting Longitude is correct within one second of time.

The number of observations with the Transit Circle, made this year, is 2,704, nearly all of which have been reduced, and a great portion of the results are ready for the press. The number of observations has been limited only by the computing power of the establishment, as I adhere to the rule of not making more observations than can be reduced to an useful and intelligible form.

The Meteorological work has been continued as before.

Although two of the twelve Stations are now supported by the Government of Queensland, their reports are sent to me monthly, and I have thought it desirable to reduce and publish the results, together with those from the Stations in this Colony.

PERSONAL ESTABLISHMENT:

This remains the same as last year, with the exception of the diminution in the number of Meteorological Observers before alluded to.

There are now nine paid Meteorological Observers—the gentleman who formerly gave his services gratuitously having accepted the usual salary.

BUILDINGS.

No alteration has been made in the Buildings since the last Report, and all are in good order.

The erection of a Meridian mark on the North Shore, for which £100 has been voted, has not yet been accomplished; the Meridian line has been cleared, and a temporary mark erected on the ground given by the Hon. A. Berry for that purpose. In consequence, however, of the number of trees on private property, which interfere with the line of sight, and which it may not always be practicable to keep down, it is found necessary to set the mark at a greater elevation than was at first contemplated; so that the sum voted is insufficient for the purpose. During the delay caused by this circumstance the temporary mark can be made use of, and has already proved of some service.

LIBRARY.

The collection of books has been increased by a donation from the Royal Astronomical Society of the whole of its publications to 1858 inclusive; volumes of observations have also been received from the Observatories at Greenwich, Oxford, Armagh, Santiago, and St. Helena; and a few books have been purchased with the small sum voted for that purpose.

In consequence of the expensive character of Astronomical Works, I have found it necessary to apply to the Government for an increase of the vote for books from £20 to £30.

INSTRUMENTS.

The old Parramatta Instruments are still in the Observatory, but are not used, with the exception of the small Equatorial. They might, however, be of some value to amateurs, and I have obtained authority to sell them should an opportunity offer; but no steps have yet been taken towards effecting a sale.

A new Clock, by Frodsham, has lately been received from England, purchased by the Astronomer Royal for £70, and appears to be a first-rate instrument. It is now in use, but the process of regulation and compensation not being completed, I am unable, as yet, to speak confidently of its quality.

The

The Transit Circle is in constant use, and proves to be a good instrument, though not of the highest order; the nature and extent of its defects will be found fully discussed in the volume of observations.

The small Equatorial has been considerably improved by Mr. Tornaghi, and may be regarded as a good portable instrument, though not adapted to observations of great delicacy; it has been supplied with a ring-micrometer for comet observations.

The large Equatorial Telescope, ordered of Messrs Mertz, of Munich, should by this time be completed; but as the makers are not bound to any particular time, it may not be ready for some months.

The Government has recently sanctioned the expenditure of £75, for the purchase of two instruments of the best construction, for the determination of the Magnetic elements. The instruments were ordered by the last mail, and may be expected to arrive in September or October next. They can be mounted at very little expense in the Transit Room, in the space now occupied by the old Parramatta Transit instrument.

The Zenith Micrometer has been lent to the Government of Victoria, to be employed in the trigonometrical survey, which is now being carried on, and is found to be a servicable instrument.

WORK OF THE OBSERVATORY.

This is of the same nature as indicated in my last Report.

The observations of southern stars are confined almost entirely to those within 10° north and south of the zenith, and as far as the 7th magnitude, of which a very large portion have now been observed, and their mean places determined.

The observations of the moon and moon-culminating stars are continued whenever practicable.

Although a very small proportion of the nights throughout the year have been favorable for observing, I have found no difficulty in making a sufficient number of observations to afford full employment to the Computer and myself. The large comet which appeared this year was observed as often as possible. 146 comparative determinations of the comet's position were obtained, and the results sent to the Royal Astronomical Society.

The approximate orbit, calculated from these results, agrees very well with the more accurate determinations, based on a more extensive series of observations, made at the Observatories of Europe and America.

Since the last Report was read, an attempt has been made to form a class of amateur Astronomers: it has proved, I am sorry to say, altogether unsuccessful; for, although a number of persons can always be found willing to attend lectures on Astronomy, I have not succeeded in finding one who would take sufficient pains to master the subject, so as to follow it up for his own pleasure, or to render any service to Astronomical science.

A series of daily observations of the temperature of the sea water has been carried on for the last eight months; observations of the rise and fall of the tide have been commenced with the co-operation of the Harbour Master; and monthly returns are received from the various pilot stations, of the time of commencement and termination of such gales as may occur. This latter arrangement originated in a proposal, which I recently made to the Government, to establish a system of telegraphic communication between the different Australian ports, whereby warning of the commencement of a gale may be immediately conveyed from the point at which it is first felt to the shipping of the other ports.

I have also made an attempt to induce the masters or owners of the iron steamers trading from this port to adopt the necessary measures for determining the errors of their compasses, and offered to superintend the operation myself; but, as yet, no one has availed himself of the offer.

PROPOSED ALTERATIONS.

In conclusion, I beg to invite the attention of the Board to this important question.

Having ascertained that a sum of money was to be placed on the Estimates for the purchase of Meteorological instruments for the Telegraph Stations, most of which are in towns where Meteorological Observatories are already established, I proposed that the instruments now in use should be transferred to the Telegraph Stations, where the observations could be made with, perhaps, greater accuracy and regularity than under the present system. In this way the sum proposed for new instruments would be saved, and there would also be a saving of £200 per annum, being the amount voted for the salaries of Meteorological Observers. This latter sum might properly be applied to the payment of an Assistant Computer.

By the arrangement which I have now proposed, whilst no additional expenditure would be incurred, the value of the Meteorological results would be probably increased; a great addition would be made to the working power of the Observatory; a great amount of mere routine work would be taken off my hands; and I should have time to apply myself to such studies and investigations as more properly belong to the director of a national Observatory.

My proposal, so far as relates to the removal of the Meteorological Observatories, has been favorably received; but, as yet, I have received no instructions on the subject.

NEW SOUTH WALES.

EXHIBITION OF INDUSTRY OF ALL NATIONS IN 1862.

(PROVISION FOR ADEQUATE REPRESENTATION OF NEW SOUTH WALES.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be Printed, 6 February, 1861.

JOHN FRAS. KEMPT,

Administrator of the Government.

Message No. 3.

In the Speech with which the Governor General opened the present Session of Parliament, the attention of the Legislature was invited to the propriety of making provision for the adequate representation of New South Wales at the Exhibition of the Industry of all Nations, to be held in London during the ensuing year.

In accordance with the provisions of the 54th Clause of the Constitution Act, the Administrator of the Government now recommends to the Legislative Assembly the appropriation of a sum of £3,000 to enable the Government to take measures for carrying out the object in question.

INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITION OF 1862.

(INFORMATION RESPECTING.)

*Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be Printed, 19 February, 1861.LETTER from Edward Hamilton, Esquire, to the Colonial Secretary, communicating information respecting the International Exhibition contemplated to be held in London in 1862.*5, Cannon-street, London, E. C., 26 December, 1860.

SIR,

Though I have not been officially instructed to make any inquiries respecting the International Exhibition which it is contemplated to open in London in 1862, I have within the last few days obtained information which will be interesting to your Government, and I take this early opportunity of bringing it under your notice, as the interval is not more than sufficient for collecting and sending to this country the contributions which the Colony of New South Wales may be able or disposed to furnish.

At present the Commission, as you will see from the accompanying printed letter, is not duly constituted. Five gentlemen, of whom Lord Granville, the President of the Council, is one, have been nominated by the Council of the Society of Arts as Trustees for deciding on the character of the building and for conducting the financial and other arrangements; and, preparatory to the issue of a charter of incorporation, they are meeting from day to day discussing and determining upon all preliminary matters. An admirable site, covering about twenty acres of land at South Kensington, has been offered by the Commissioners of the Exhibition of 1851, and has been accepted by the Trustees. It forms part of the estate purchased by the Commissioners some few years ago, about a mile from Hyde Park Corner. This estate is to be appropriated to horticultural purposes, and the extensive buildings required are already far advanced towards completion. It is intended to connect the Exhibition building with the Metropolitan Railway, by which all the metropolitan lines will be brought into communication with each other, and thus facilities of access, far beyond those which existed in 1851, will be afforded to the public.

Various plans for the building have already been submitted to the Trustees, but no decision has yet been come to, except on one point, that a small portion of it, covering about an acre of land, will be of a permanent character.

I am informed that the Trustees are most anxious that the Australian Colonies and New Zealand should be more adequately represented than they were on the previous occasion, when the number of exhibitors did not much exceed one hundred, and that as much room will be allotted to them as is consistent with a comparatively limited space, and the immense mass of articles which the different countries of the World will send for exhibition.

I was also informed—

- 1.—That the rules of the Exhibition of 1851, as published in the Illustrated Catalogue (4 volumes), will be generally observed, with the following important exceptions:—that wines and pictures of living, or at any rate very recent, artists will be admitted; and that in all cases prices may be attached.
- 2.—That no application will be made to the Government for Custom House facilities, it being considered more for the advantage of the exhibitors that the moderate duties now leviable should be paid, than that an opening should be afforded for any interference by the Custom House authorities in the building.
- 3.—That only one Representative from each Country or Colony will be recognized by the Commissioners in London.

In reply to my inquiries as to the class of products which were likely to attract the greatest interest and to be of the highest value, I was referred to the specification given in the enclosed extract from the Gardener's Chronicle of December 1st, 1860, a paper of high authority and repute on questions of this kind, but having taken down some notes of the observations of my informant, I beg to offer the following very imperfect summary:—

- 1.—Oils, Mineral and Vegetable: All fatty substances; liquids from timber. It was mentioned that within a recent period, the Americans have extracted a valuable oil, and a valuable gas, from the sap of a certain description of fir. Samples from pitch wells.
- 2.—Woods: If for building purposes the samples should be the largest square obtainable, with a statement only of the length of trunk. "A whole gum tree is not required." If for cabinet work, the samples should be cubes, averaging about nine inches.
- 3.—Leather: Particularly any new material which may serve as a substitute for hides. The Americans have exhibited excellent leather made from the skin of the porpoise.
- 4.—Manures: Especially all varieties of koproliite.
- 5.—Grains: Not only wheat and maize, but all useful seeds.
- 6.—Fibres: Those for paper-making not to be sent in a raw state, but broken down, that is, reduced to what is technically called "half staff." Fibres for cordage to be sent in the rough.
- 7.—Furs: Both raw and dressed.
- 8.—Tanning and Dyes: In which products it is generally supposed that Australia is very rich.
- 9.—Bird-skins and Plumage: Especially those of aquatic birds. As an instance of the demand for these skins it was mentioned that the present price of the Grebe skin is about twelve guineas per yard, of very narrow width. The bird itself should be sent with the specimens. All varieties of down.
- 10.—Corals.
- 11.—Ores of all kinds. Some steel from New Zealand has lately attracted much attention.
- 12.—Wool.
- 13.—Wines.
- 14.—Coal.

The foregoing enumeration is not offered as complete, but it will be of value as a guide to those who have the leisure and knowledge required for collecting specimens in a country still so imperfectly known as Australia.

From one of the enclosed extracts it will be observed that a guarantee fund of £366,800 has already been subscribed. It may therefore be assumed as certain that the Exhibition of 1862 will be opened at the time named, viz., the 1st of May in that year, and it is confidently expected that its success will be more marked and its results more generally useful even than those of the Great Exhibition of 1851.

In conclusion I beg to say that I shall lose no opportunity of obtaining further information on this important subject. As soon as the Commission is organized and their rules and regulations are in print, I have no doubt that it will be in my power to send you much valuable matter.

It is hardly necessary for me to remind you that all packages from the Australian Colonies, intended for the Exhibition, ought to be shipped so as to arrive in London not later than the first week in March, 1862.

I have, &c.,
EDW. HAMILTON.

INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITION OF 1862.—The correspondence between the Commissioners for the Exhibition of 1851, the Society of Arts, and the Trustees for conducting the Exhibition of 1862 has been brought to a satisfactory conclusion, as will be seen by the accompanying letter, addressed to the Secretary of the Society of Arts. This correspondence has had relation to the site for the building, the provision of the necessary funds, the incorporation of the trustees by the authority of the Crown, and their relations with the Commissioners for the Exhibition of 1851:—

"London, Nov. 22, 1860.

Sir,—We have to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of yesterday, enclosing the copy of a communication from Her Majesty's Commissioners for the Exhibition of 1851 to the Council of the Society of Arts, in which the Commissioners express their general approval of the object which the Society has in view in organizing the Exhibition of 1862, and their willingness to render such support and assistance to the undertaking as may be consistent with their position as a chartered body, and with the powers conferred upon them by their charter of incorporation. Under these circumstances we have to request that you will intimate to the Council of the Society of Arts our willingness to accept the trust which the Council and the guarantors have in so flattering a manner expressed a wish to repose in us, on the understanding that the Council will forthwith take measures for giving legal effect to the guarantee, and for obtaining a charter of incorporation satisfactory to us.—We have the honor to be, Sir, your obedient servants,

"GRANVILLE.
"CHANDOS.
"THOMAS BARING.
"C. WENTWORTH DILEK.
"THOMAS FAIRBAIRN."

The guarantee list includes 662 persons, and the sum guaranteed now amounts to £366,800. The Commissioners for the Exhibition of 1851 have granted a site for the building on their estate at South Kensington.

[Enclosure

[Enclosure 2.]

THE preliminary difficulties in regard to the International Exhibition of 1862 may at length be said to be overcome. The guarantee fund exceeds £366,000, and the arrangements already completed include the appropriation of a part of the South Kensington estate (vested in the Commissioners for the Exhibition of 1851) as the site of the buildings connected with the Exhibition of 1862. There is, as Sir Thomas Phillipps stated, in his address to the Society of Arts last week, every reason to believe that the projected Exhibition will elicit even more valuable results than were achieved by its great predecessor. The extension of commerce during the interval, the progress of invention, the increase of population and wealth, the increased means of locomotion, the spread of education, and increased knowledge of and love for art will, as he pointed out, all contribute to swell the numbers of visitors and spectators—and most of these influences will contribute also to the fulness and value of the collection which is to attract them. We cannot doubt that among those thus drawn by objects of immediate service to their several interests, agriculturists will be largely represented.

If during the next ten years we receive such a spur to the progress of agriculture as has been given during the past by the exhibition of (let us specify only) the reaping machine in the Crystal Palace of 1851, the gathering of 1862 (for which provision in the negotiations of the Society of Arts has already been made) will see us forward on our road to perfect and economical cultivation by an even longer stride than has been accomplished since the first great International show. That particular item in the agricultural departments of the Exhibition, though probably originating in this country, was contributed by American exhibitors; and it is to Colonial and Foreign exhibitors that we must again look for the special lessons which, without knowing what they may turn out to be, we confidently expect. The annual pictures of agricultural progress in our own country given at the great meetings of our agricultural societies must be presumed to be so far perfect that it can be but one year's progress that is shown by any exhibition of home agricultural produce or machinery; but the Colonial contributions which we may expect will represent and no doubt astonish us with illustrations of the increased skill and knowledge which have been attained during the eleven years which will then have elapsed since 1851.

Though we cannot anticipate the lessons or the contributions to our wealth as well as our intelligence which such illustrations must afford, yet it is certain that a collection of the natural products of climates similar to our own must be of direct use to us as agriculturists. Let us hope that the same energy which was so signally displayed both at home and abroad in 1851 may be exerted now. If such collections are of use to us they will necessarily be of use to those who send them. That is of course the only motive we can urge upon our readers either here or in the colonies; but public spirit and philanthropy needing no stimulant from us will doubtless also urge them to exertion.

Our Colonial authorities then may well be called upon to bestir themselves, on their own account as well as ours, to send complete collections of all their raw produce. Anything actually employed as manure or likely to be serviceable in that way—all grains and other useful seeds—plants used either for human food, or as food for cattle, with their ripened products—woods adapted for building, or for cabinet work—fibres—mineral and vegetable oils and other fatty substances—hides, wools, and furs—drugs, tanning substances, dyes—anything in short likely to satisfy a want, or even to create a desire, by which therefore a commerce may spring up serviceable to the industries, or contributive to the comforts of either the Colony or the Mother Country—all such things claim place in an International Industrial Exhibition. There was, in the Crystal Palace of 1851, many an illustration of what goodwill and intelligence could do towards collections of such a kind as this. The Canadian department of the Exhibition, and especially the collection from Trinidad, sent home by Lord Harris, the then Governor, proved how, by a comparatively small outlay, well expended, suites of specimens of the very highest commercial interest and scientific value may be gathered, arranged, and transmitted.

It is, of course, in the agricultural relations of such collections that we are specially interested, and the Exhibition of 1851 shewed in several instances that it is important we should know not only the agricultural products which are obtainable elsewhere, but also the means by which those products are there obtained. The machinery and processes of Colonial agriculture ought to be illustrated, and our own manufacturers and farmers would thus derive many a useful hint. Manures, seeds, and machines, are among the means of agriculture; and there ought, in the Exhibition of 1862, for the information of our English agriculturists, to be specimens of all the natural granoses of the world—samples of all the grains, wheat, barley, oats, and pulse of all the climates which produce them, and a collection of all the agricultural machinery anyhow connected with their production.

And English agriculturists, upon the other hand, with all who provide the means of English agriculture—the manure manufacturer, the seedsman, and the machine maker—will on their part be prepared with full illustrations of the present status of English farm management for the instruction not more of their colonial visitors than of one another. Minerals, vegetables, animals—the produce of our quarries, pits, and mines—of our plough lands and our pastures—of our cattle stalls, sheep folds, and dairies, ought all to meet the eye. The way in which such a series of home specimens is to be obtained, and the particulars of which the collection should consist, may be discussed at leisure, but the Colonial collections require long time both for their formation and transmission, and it is, therefore, necessary thus early to call upon the leading men of our several Colonies, and on all who influence public opinion there, to take such measures as may result in a fair representation of their natural products and their several industries at the Great International Exhibition some sixteen or seventeen months hence.

INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITION OF 1862.

(DESPATCH RESPECTING.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be Printed, 26 April, 1861.

THE SECRETARY OF STATE to GOVERNOR SIR JOHN YOUNG, BART.

*Downing-street,
1 February, 1861.*

SIR,

I transmit to you a copy of a letter from the Promoters and proposed Trustees of the Exhibition of Works of Industry and Art of all Nations, to be holden in London, in the year 1862.

You will see that these gentlemen are desirous to learn from what Colonies articles will be sent for exhibition, and also to be put in communication with such persons or bodies in each Colony as are likely to command the confidence of those who may become exhibitors.

It is, I am sure, unnecessary for me to urge upon you the adoption of any means in your power for furthering the important object in view, and I shall be glad to learn that the Colony under your Government is prepared to become a contributor to this undertaking.

The general conditions of the Exhibition will be made known to you as soon as they are completed.

I have, &c.,
NEWCASTLE.

[Enclosure.]

London, 18 January, 1861.

My Lord Duke,

I am directed by Earl Granville to intimate to your Grace that the promoters of the Exhibition of the Works of Industry and Art of all Nations, which it is proposed to hold in the year 1862, are about to apply to Her Majesty for a Charter of Incorporation, by which certain Trustees, to whom the management of the Exhibition has been confided, may be vested with the powers requisite for effectually carrying out the projected undertaking.

The names of the Trustees are as follows:—

THE EARL GRANVILLE, K.G., Lord President of the Council,
THE MARQUIS OF CHANDOS,
THOMAS BARING, ESQ., M.P.,
C. WENTWORTH DILKE, ESQ.,
THOMAS FAIRBAIRN, ESQ.

The Trustees have every reason to believe that the application for a Charter will be favourably entertained; but, as some short interval must necessarily elapse before the usual preliminary formalities can be complied with, they are anxious that no time should be lost in giving notice of the intended Exhibition to the distant Colonies of the Empire.

I am, therefore, directed to request that your Grace will do the Trustees the favour to take the necessary steps for making known to the various Colonial possessions and dependencies of the Crown, that the Exhibition will open on Thursday, the 1st of May, 1862, and that the Trustees are very desirous to learn from what Colonies articles will be sent for exhibition, and also to be put in communication with such persons or bodies, in each Colony, as are likely to command the confidence of those who may become exhibitors.

The Exhibition will be held in London, on a convenient site, which has been placed at the disposal of the Trustees by the Royal Commissioners for the Exhibition of 1851, in the immediate vicinity of the ground occupied in 1851, by permission of Her Majesty, on the occasion of the first International Exhibition.

The general conditions of the Exhibition, and the terms on which exhibitors will be invited to take part in it, will shortly be published, and the Trustees will at once communicate them to your Grace.

In the meantime I am to state that the Exhibition, in its leading features, will closely resemble that of 1851—pictures, however, being added on this occasion—and that such preparations as can be made, in anticipation of more detailed information, may proceed upon this understanding.

As the demands for space, however, will, in all probability, be very much in excess of what it will be possible to provide, so that quality and not quantity will have mainly to be looked to in deciding upon the articles to be admitted, the Trustees hope that the greatest care will be exercised in selecting good specimens of the industry and art of each Colony, and more especially of its natural productions.

As your Grace will readily understand that, so soon as proper channels of correspondence have been opened, the Trustees will have many matters to which to draw the attention of the Colonies which are likely to take an interest in the undertaking, they venture very earnestly to request that the earliest opportunity may be taken for making known the substance of the present communication to the various Colonial authorities.

The Duke of Newcastle, K.G.,
&c., &c., &c.I have, &c.,
F. R. SANDFORD.

NEW INVENTION IN LOCOMOTION.

(PETITION FROM EDWARD BELL.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be Printed, 26 February, 1861.

To the Honorable the Legislative Assembly of New South Wales, in Parliament assembled.

The humble Petition of Edward Bell, of Sydney, Civil Engineer, Member of the Institute of Civil Engineers,—

HUMBLY SHEWETH:—

That your Petitioner is the Inventor of certain improvements in Railways, and in Locomotion on the same, which, if put into operation in this Colony, will, he believes, be the means of saving very large sums of the Public Money, and will greatly facilitate the progress of Railway Communication throughout the Colony.

That your Petitioner is prepared to shew to your Honorable House that Railways may be constructed and worked by Steam-power in this Colony cheaper than Tramways by Horse-power; that they shall be in every respect as permanent and useful as the Railways now in operation in the Colony; that the same Carriages and Rolling Stock as are now in use on the present Lines in the Colony can be adopted on the Lines proposed by your Petitioner, except the Engines, which are much heavier than those which under his system will be required to perform an equal amount of work; that the material of which the lines projected by your Petitioner are to be composed is chiefly the Hardwood of this Colony; and that the quantity of Iron to be used in them will not exceed one-seventh part of the weight of that used on the Lines now in operation.

That your Petitioner observes in the Fourth Report of the late Commissioner for Railways (Captain Martindale, R.E.), that the lines projected, and for which plans and estimates have been prepared in the Railway Department, are as follows, viz.:—From Penrith to Bathurst at a cost exceeding £26,000 (Twenty-six thousand pounds) per mile; from Picton to Goulburn at a cost of nearly £19,000 (Nineteen thousand pounds) per mile; and from Singleton to Muswellbrook at a cost of nearly Seventeen thousand pounds per mile.

That by the system projected by your Petitioner the cost of the line from Penrith to Bathurst, for example, worked by Locomotive power, would not exceed Two thousand pounds per mile, or, about One pound per lineal yard, exclusive of Bridges; the facility of ascending and descending gradients of one in seven or eight with Engines drawing about three times their own weight enabling your Petitioner to dispense with the very heavy earthworks and other expensive operations, which, under the present system are unavoidable, in order to procure a practicable working gradient throughout the country; and by the rapidity with which lines on his principle can be constructed, a further considerable saving will accrue to the Colony at large.

Your Petitioner therefore humbly prays that your Honorable House, before coming to any decision on the subject either of Railway Extension on the present system, or of Tramways, will be pleased to satisfy itself of the practicability and economy of the system of Locomotion projected by your Petitioner.

And your Petitioner, as in duty bound, will ever pray.

Sydney, 20th February, 1861.

SECRETARY OF STATE to GOVERNOR GENERAL.

(No. 87.)

Downing-street,
12 October, 1860.

SIR,

I am directed by the Secretary of State to acknowledge the receipt of your Despatch, No. 79, of the 21st July last, respecting the arrangements which have been entered into with the Peninsular and Oriental Company for the conveyance of the Mails between this country and Australia, and I am to inform you that the whole subject will not fail to receive the careful consideration of Her Majesty's Government.

Colonial Secretary's Office,
New South Wales,
Sydney, 19 October, 1860.

SIR,

I have the honor to inform you, that in order to cover any expenses which you may incur for Postage, and Parliamentary and other papers of interest to the Colony, or bearing on the question of the Steam Postal Service between the United Kingdom and Australia, I have requested the Colonial Treasurer to forward, by the present mail, instructions for a credit of £50, in your favor, with the Oriental Bank in London, the Financial Agents of the Colony.

I have, &c.,
CHARLES COWPER.

SIR,

With reference to my former letters respecting the Steam Postal Service, I have the honor to transmit, for your information, a copy of the Speech with which His Excellency the Governor General opened the Session of Parliament on the 25th ultimo, with copies of the Addresses of both Houses in answer thereto.

2. You will perceive that in the fourth paragraph of the Speech special allusion is made to the beneficial effect produced by your representations to Her Majesty's Government upon the subject.

I have, &c.,

5, Cannon-street, London,
25 October, 1860.

SIR,

I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your Despatch, dated the 21st August, 1860.

It is most satisfactory to me to receive your assurance that my protest against the terms of the Steam Postal Contract, by which no provision was made for carrying on the English Mails beyond Melbourne, has met with the approval of your Government. In this case the necessity for interference appeared to me so urgent that I did not hesitate to incur the responsibility of acting beyond the scope of my authority; but I am so satisfied of the inexpediency and the danger of making unauthorized representations of the wishes and interests of the Colonists, that I shall carefully keep within the limit of my present instructions, until they are enlarged by the Colonial Government.

Since the arrival of the present Mail I have seen Mr. Stephenson, of the Treasury, and have requested him to communicate with me before any change in the present arrangement is agreed to, whether at the instance of the Peninsular and Oriental Company, or of one of the Colonial Governments. He has promised to do so; and I will take care that the interests of New South Wales do not suffer from misapprehension on the part of the Lords of the Treasury, as on the previous occasion.

SIR,

It affords me much gratification to inform you that an Address has been presented to the Governor General from the Legislative Assembly in this Colony, requesting His Excellency to communicate to you the thanks unanimously voted to you by the House for your valuable services with reference to the Steam Postal arrangements between the Australian Colonies and England; and, in compliance with the wish of the Assembly, His Excellency has commanded me to transmit to you by the present opportunity a copy of this Address.

2. I have the pleasure to add that the Legislative Council have also passed Resolutions to the same effect which will be communicated to you direct by the President in accordance with the desire expressed to him by that House.

SIR,

I have the honor to acknowledge your letter of the 20th September, 1860, enclosing an Extract from the Proceedings of the Honorable the Executive Council of New South Wales, on which occasion you were authorized to communicate to me the thanks of the Government for having procured a modification of the Postal Contract which was concluded in the month of May of this year, between the Lords Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury and the Peninsular and Oriental Company.

I beg that you will, on my behalf, express to His Excellency the Governor General, and the Honorable Members of the Council, my acknowledgments for the marked honor conferred upon me, and that you will assure them of the gratification I have derived from such a flattering recognition of the service which I was fortunately able to render to the Government and the people of New South Wales.

SIR,

I have the honor to acknowledge your letter of the 21st September, 1860, in which I am informed of your approval of my reply to the Secretary of the Treasury, dated 2nd July, of this year.

I am informed, on authority, that no further modification of the existing arrangement is at present under consideration; and, as the objection raised by the Governor of Victoria is confined to one point only, viz., the liability of his Government to contribute any portion of the £15,000 agreed to be paid for extending the services from Melbourne to Sydney, and this point has been conceded by the Government of New South Wales, I think that there is no reason to apprehend any change to disturb a contract which, though costly, appears to work satisfactorily to all the parties interested.

Any further communications with which I may be honored will receive my prompt attention.

26 December, 1860.

SIR,

I have the honor to acknowledge your Despatches, dated October, 1860, one covering a letter of credit for (£50) fifty pounds. The expenditure of this money will be duly accounted for.

I have nothing of a definite character to communicate with reference to the Steam Postal Service, and as all the Colonies acquiesce in the present temporary arrangement, it is very probable that the subject will not be taken up at the Treasury until matters more pressing are disposed of. I am informed that the Government of Victoria assent to the present contract under which Sydney continues, as it has been heretofore, the terminus of the Service, but they object to pay any part of the additional subsidy required for carrying the Mails beyond Melbourne. This objection is, however, immaterial, for I find that your Government has liberally adopted the scheme propounded by the Governor General, by which it is proposed that no Colony shall pay for any part of the Service from which she derives no benefit. As to the claims of South Australia, I think it probable that the Treasury will adopt the arrangement recently introduced, of forwarding the Mails to Adelaide by a branch steamer from King George's Sound. And it appears to me that this is the only way by which the claims of that Colony can be reconciled with the exigencies of the Service; for it would imperil the punctual delivery of the whole Australian Mail, if the Mail boat were allowed to deviate from the direct course by touching at Kangaroo Island, and the Contractors, both in their own interest and in that of the public, object to revert to a route which was found to increase materially the difficulties of navigation. On the other hand, it can hardly be expected that South Australia would consent to the loss of the advantages she possesses from her geographical position, by having her Mail sent on to Melbourne.

EDWARD HAMILTON, ESQ., to THE COLONIAL SECRETARY.

5, Cannon-street, London, E.C.,

26 January, 1861.

SIR,

I have nothing to report with respect to the settlement of the Postal Service between this country and Australia.

The Despatches embodying the views of the several Colonies have been referred by the Treasury to the Postmaster General, and his report and opinion on the scheme which has been agreed to as satisfactory by the Governments of New South Wales, Victoria, and South Australia, will be sent into the Treasury in the course of a few days. It is therefore probable that an official intimation of the decision of the Lords Commissioners will be forwarded to the Colonies by the next Mail; but as Parliament will then be in Session, the subject may be postponed for a time under the pressure of more urgent matters. In the meanwhile it is satisfactory to know that no alteration of the present system is under contemplation; and it appears to me that, having at length discovered a practical solution of a long standing difficulty, the Lords Commissioners will hesitate to disturb an arrangement which satisfies all claims.

The only objection to it is the extra cost to the Home Government of the branch service between King George's Sound and Adelaide; but it is not likely that this will be allowed to countervail the many advantages which the present mode of conducting the service has secured for all the Colonies.

I have, &c.,

EDWD. HAMILTON.

1861.

PETITION OF MRS. MARY JONES.

REPORT.

THE SELECT COMMITTEE of the Legislative Assembly, appointed on the 29th January last, "to inquire into and report upon the Petition of Mrs. Mary Jones, presented to the Legislative Assembly on the 24th January, 1860, with power to send for persons and papers," and to whom, at the same time, were referred "the Proceedings of, and Minutes of Evidence taken before, the Select Committee appointed in each of the two Sessions of the late Parliament," have agreed to the following Report:—

Your Committee having considered the Evidence hereunto appended, and also carefully considered all the circumstances surrounding this case, find,—

- (1.) That the Petitioner's late husband, Mr. J. H. Jones, had the Contract for the Conveyance of the Mails between Sydney and Melbourne during the year 1851, at the following rates, viz. :—

|--------------------------------------|-------|
| 1st. From Sydney to Goulburn | £800 |
| 2nd. From Goulburn to Yass | 400 |
| 3rd. From Yass to Albury... .. | 1,000 |
| 4th. From Albury to Melbourne | 1,000 |

- (2.) That, on the two latter Contracts, the Contractor appears to have sustained a loss in consequence of the severe drought and bush fires in the Southern Districts, destroying all the feed and causing hay and corn to rise to an enormous price.
- (3.) The rush to the Gold Fields about the same period increased the difficulties of the Contractor.

2. Your Committee are of opinion that the Petitioner has a fair claim for relief from this Government, on account of the Contract from Yass to Albury, from having sustained a loss exceeding five hundred pounds during the year, and a loss exceeding five hundred pounds from Albury to Melbourne up to the 30th June, the period of separation.

3. The Contractor having received payment from the Government of Victoria from the 1st July, the Petitioner appears to have no claim on this Government for loss after that date.

ROBT. STEWART,
Chairman.

NEW SOUTH WALES.

MINUTES OF EVIDENCE

TAKEN BEFORE

THE SELECT COMMITTEE

ON THE

PETITION OF MRS. MARY JONES.

TUESDAY, 24 APRIL, 1860.

Present:—

Mr. CLOSE,
Mr. HART,MR. LYONS,
MR. WILD.

W. V. WILD, ESQ., IN THE CHAIR.

The Honorable Edward Deas Thomson, Esq., C.B., M.L.C., examined:—

1. By the Chairman: You were Colonial Secretary of this Colony in 1851? I was.
2. Will you be kind enough to look at the petition signed by Mrs Mary Jones, and say whether you remember the circumstances of the contract which is mentioned there? At this distance of time I have a very indistinct recollection of the matter, nearly nine years having elapsed since it occurred. I have some recollection, however, of a claim of this kind having been preferred to the Government.
3. Does your recollection enable you to state whether Mrs. Jones' petition correctly lays down the circumstances of the case? I have no recollection of the circumstances stated in the petition; and certainly the allegation of her having waited on me, and having received an assurance such as she adverts to, I have not the slightest recollection of. I can only say it would be very different to my ordinary caution and practice in matters of the kind.
4. To what particular allegation do you refer? I allude to the paragraph in which she states that she waited on me on behalf of her husband "for the purpose of throwing up the contract, and forfeiting the four months' mail money then due; and then shewed me, from her husband's books and accounts, that he had already incurred a loss of £1,500; and that I thereupon stated to her, that if her said husband would give the required security, and continue the said contract, any loss he might sustain would be made good by the Government at the end of the term for which the said contract was taken." I have no recollection of that circumstance.
5. I suppose she may have called upon you, although the circumstances attending the interview were not as she has stated? Very possibly; indeed, it is very probable she did. I was in the habit of seeing a great number of persons every day, and it is quite impossible for me now to say whom I saw and whom I did not see. I think it extremely probable I did see Mrs. Jones, but not that I made any such promise as she alleges.
6. Do you recollect Mr. Jones himself calling upon you in reference to this contract, which, as you may recollect, was a contract to convey the mails from Sydney to Albury? I think he did call upon me. I have seen him on several occasions with reference to contracts; and it is very likely I saw him with reference to the particular contract adverted to in this petition.
7. Do you recollect whether, at the time alluded to in the petition, the usual bonds had been entered into for the fulfilment of the contract, or do you recollect any conversations you may have had with any of the parties, with reference to their not having been entered into? I do not. That is a detail that would not come under my notice as Colonial Secretary.

The Hon. E.
D. Thomson,
Esq., C.B.,

The Hon. E.

24 April, 1860.

Secretary. Instructions were always given to the Civil Crown Solicitor to see that bonds and contracts were entered into; and there was a general rule that the Auditor General should not pass the accounts unless he was in possession of duly signed bonds and contracts.

8. Under whose notice, in the then state of the departments, would such matters come? I think the Auditor General, and also the department to which the matter related. As this related to a postal contract, it would be between the Auditor General's and the Post Office departments.

9. Another paragraph of the petition says,—“that the said Colonial Secretary” (meaning yourself) “thereupon stated to your Petitioner, that if her said husband would give the required security and continue the said contract, any loss your Petitioner's said husband might sustain would be made good by the Government at the end of the term for which the said contract was taken.” Have you any recollection of that circumstance? I have not. In fact, I think—having referred to some of the official papers on the subject—that that statement is not borne out. There was an investigation into the claim, and it was disallowed. There is a very long report upon the subject (to which I would call the attention of the Committee) in a letter from the Auditor General to the Colonial Secretary, dated 17th February, 1853, upon which there is the Colonial Secretary's Register Number 53-1694. The case is fully set forth therein, and there are accompanying documents which form the data which enabled the Auditor General to report. The contract, I believe, was originally from Sydney to Melbourne; the only portion of the claim entertained by the Government, or investigated by the Government, was that relating to the contract from Yass to Albury. At that time the separation between New South Wales and Victoria had taken place, and the contractor was referred to the Government of Victoria for any claim he might have for the contract between Albury and Melbourne. There was some limitation also as to the terms upon which the Government were willing to entertain the claim. There had been some very extensive bush fires in the Southern Districts that had raised the price of forage. It was determined to entertain no claim for loss except on the item of forage. The contractor was accordingly required to send in documents in proof of his claim. Having done so, it will be seen by the Auditor General's report, already referred to, that he entirely failed to shew that he had sustained any loss on that account. He claimed a loss upon forage alone of £1,910, but it was shewn on the contrary that the forage had cost him less by £8 than what he had originally calculated.

10. Less than he had originally contracted for? No; what he calculated as the price he could purchase it at. When he sent in his contract he estimated the cost of forage at £140; by the documents he produced, he shewed he had purchased it at £131 5s., or £8 15s. less than his original estimate.

11. I will now call your attention to the sixth paragraph of the petition, which says, “That your Petitioner, under the circumstances above set forth, in or about the month of April, or early in the month of May, in the said year, waited on the then Colonial Secretary, The Hon. E. Deas Thomson, on behalf of her said husband, for the purpose of throwing up the said contract, and forfeiting the four months' mail money then due, and then shewed to the said E. Deas Thomson, from her husband's books and accounts, that he had already incurred a loss of about £1,500 (one thousand five hundred pounds).” Have you any recollection of the circumstances set out in that clause? I have not.

12. You will observe that Mrs. Jones, in her petition, alludes to “forfeiting four months' mail money then due”—that four months would mean the first four months of the contract? No doubt.

13. Now you have no recollection that at that time none of the usual bonds had been entered into? As I have already stated, that was a matter of detail that would not come under my notice.

14. Would the Committee be more likely to obtain that information from any other office than that of the Colonial Secretary? I think either the Post Office, or the Auditor General's Office. I think the bonds and contracts are kept as vouchers by the Auditor General; and I have no doubt they could be produced to the Committee. (Vide Appendix A.)

15. Are you aware whether Mr. Jones, or, since his death, his wife, ever received any recompense for any loss by carrying out this contract? I am not. Upon the report of the Auditor General, which I have already alluded to, I find the following Minute in the hand of the late Governor, Sir Charles Fitz Roy:—“Under this report Mr. Jones does not appear to be entitled to claim any compensation from this Government, and should be informed accordingly.” He was so apprised, it appears, on the 5th March, 1853, and I do not find that he appealed against that decision.

16. By Mr. Lyons: This claim then was investigated during the time you held office? It was.

17. And that is the report? That was the report made to the Government. It was a report called for by a letter which I addressed to the Auditor General on the 7th January, 1853.

18. By Mr. Hart: Can you state whether any compensation was made to contractors who preferred claims under similar circumstances? I am disposed to think there were some cases in which compensation was given, but I cannot call them immediately to recollection. That was in consequence of the change of circumstances and change of prices arising out of the gold discovery.

19. Did the Government adhere literally to the letter of the contracts, or did they deal with the contractors according to the equity of the case? As a general rule we considered that the contractors were bound by the terms of their contracts—that we were not at liberty to depart from them; otherwise it would be unfair to those who had competed with them; but there are instances in which, I believe, in consequence of circumstances having arisen which which could not be foreseen or guarded against, the claims of contractors to compensation for loss have been entertained; or at all events, a remission of the penalties incurred for non-performance of the contract has been allowed.

20. By the Chairman: In consequence of the state of things produced by the gold discovery? Not exclusively on that account. There were other cases which were deemed equally deserving of consideration; such for instance as those in which, from bush fires, storms, and floods, and circumstances beyond the control of the contractor, and which could not be calculated upon when the contract was entered into, it was found impossible to comply with the stipulated conditions. In all such cases it was considered right and proper that the Government should take a liberal view of the claims of individuals. If I had thought it likely such a question would be put, I would have looked out some of the cases.

21. By Mr. Close: Can you say whether any other mail contractor about that time obtained compensation? I do not recollect any. That was the principal mail contract—by far the most extensive.

22. By Mr. Hart: Having read the report of the Auditor General, can you say whether he took into consideration the increased traffic from the discovery of the Southern Gold Fields, which may have counterbalanced any loss the contractor might sustain? I do not find in the report any reference to a consideration of that kind.

23. By the Chairman: Is it not the case that the Southern Gold Fields were not discovered till two or three years afterwards? I think they were discovered during that year, both the gold fields of Victoria, and what we call the Southern Gold Fields in this Colony. But that is a matter easily ascertained. My strong impression is that the Southern Gold Fields were discovered in 1851. I mean Major's Creek and Bell's Creek, near Braidwood. It probably was the latter part of 1851.

24. It would be usual, of course, for a person entering into a contract of this kind to enter into the bonds at the commencement of the contract? Yes; the general rule was that the bonds and contracts should be entered into at once. At all events, it was a general rule that the Auditor General should not make the first payment until the bonds and contract had been duly executed.

25. You have stated, I think, that you have no recollection that the bonds and contract were not entered into in this instance? I do not know whether they were or not. It would be a very unusual circumstance if they were not.

26. By Mr. Hart: Was it in your power in the then state of the Government to make this alleged promise to the petitioner? Well, of course it would depend upon the Governor General to carry it out; but I never knew a case, in which I made a promise, that it was not fulfilled.

27. It would not be requisite to bring it under the notice of the Executive Government? No, it was a departmental matter, which I arranged. But I can scarcely conceive that such a circumstance arose as that alleged, because it would be so contrary to my usual practice to make such a promise. All I probably said was that the case would be investigated. It was investigated; and it was found on investigation, at the time, that there was no ground for compensation.

28. By Mr. Lyons: The claim investigated was the claim of the husband? Yes; that is the only claim Mrs. Jones has now; it is, I presume, as the representative of her husband that she makes this claim.

29. Was she aware of the decision arrived at? That I cannot tell.

APPENDIX A.

It may be explained, that the non-execution of the bonds and contract would not affect the equity of the case, for the contractor would of course be bound by his tender; whilst, as a general rule, in all advertisements calling for tenders, it was a stipulated condition that each should be accompanied by a memorandum signed by the proposed sureties, undertaking, in the event of its acceptance, to execute a bond in the requisite amount as security for the due fulfilment of the contract. I have no reason to suppose that the usual course was not followed in this case; but the fact can be readily ascertained by reference to the Office of the Colonial Secretary or Auditor General.

THURSDAY, 10 MAY, 1860.

Present:—

MR. CLEMENTS, | MR. HAMILTON,
MR. LYONS.

W. V. WILD, ESQ., IN THE CHAIR.

Mrs. Mary Jones called in and examined:—

30. By the Chairman: You are the widow of the late Joseph Henry Jones, of Bargo? Yes. Mrs. M. Jones.

31. And you still reside at Bargo? Yes.

32. In 1851, had your husband any contract with the Government? Yes.

33. Of what nature was that contract? The contract was, to convey the mails from this Post Office to the Melbourne Post Office, right through the line. 10 May, 1860.

34. Will you be good enough to tell the Committee how long that contract continued, and what circumstances determined it? It commenced in 1851. Mr. Jones put on coaches, and laid out, I daresay, from £8,000 to £10,000, and he sold the wreck of it for £1,600, or a little more. 35.

Mrs. M. Jones. 35. When did the sale take place,—how long after the commencement of the contract? I think it was perhaps the end of the second year, but I have the bills. He had to take bills for two and three years even for that small sum.

10 May, 1860.

36. What caused the wreck of the property? The wreck of the coaches and horses, they were not of much use after twelve months.

37. The Committee are anxious to know the exact circumstances of the case—what were the causes of the loss you state you sustained? The commencement was the bush fires, which burned away all the food of the horses, burned stacks of hay.

38. When did these fires take place? In 1851; they burned all the grass away, burned the stacks, destroyed everything; consequently there was no food left for the mail horses. Mr. Jones had to purchase hay at a very great price, wherever he could get it. He had to get the sanction of the Government for the squatters to sell what little they had, and he had to get carriers at an enormous price, because the horses had no food.

39. What caused this enormous price in the employment of carriers? Because they had no food for their own cattle, in consequence of the bush fires.

40. Were there any other circumstances which operated against the fulfilment of the contract? Yes; the commencement of the gold fields.

41. That was in May, 1851? In April, or the commencement of May. It commenced in the middle part of the way on the Albury side—there were pieces of the contract that Mr. Jones let to men; all these men, when the gold commenced, of course left his contract, rushed away to the gold fields, and left him to do as he could.

42. Went away to the diggings? Yes; then Mr. Jones was on the line himself. Sir Charles Nicholson happened to be going on some business to Melbourne, met my husband on the line, and saw what trouble and expense he had been put to through other sub-contractors. Of course they took their own horses away, and then he had to purchase horses where he could, at great prices, and some he had to hire.

43. You mentioned the name of Sir Charles Nicholson,—do you know whether he is aware of any of the circumstances that operated against the performance of this contract? He was aware of almost all of the circumstances.

44. Perhaps the Committee might derive some information from him? He is aware of the principal circumstances, although it is now some nine years since.

45. Did not the diggings break out as well to the southward as to the westward, and if so did not that operate to your advantage? They broke out, but of course the people all left this side; therefore we had not the Sydney end to assist with the other end. They all ran away; there was no traffic; they went to the Turon.

46. Over what time was this contract to extend? Twelve months only.

47. Had your husband signed the bonds? No, he had not up to this time. I think it was about four months after.

48. Would that be in May? In May.

49. Did anything take place between Mr. Jones and the Government, in reference to signing these bonds? Mr. Jones, when he came home from replacing these small pieces of the contract, what with the anxiety and fatigue, was laid up in bed, and given over by the doctor—Dr. Sherwin. I was afraid, from the fires and other mishaps at the other end, that all the property of my family would be lost, and I could not shew my husband any letters, by order of the doctor; so I had to leave him and come up to Sydney, for the purpose of giving up the mail contract. I saw Sir Charles Nicholson—

50. Your husband, you say, was dangerously ill at this time? Yes.

51. Did he recover from that illness? Yes. I saw Sir Charles Nicholson, who, I believe, was named as one of the bondsmen.

52. One of your bondsmen? Yes, his name was set down. When the application goes in there are two bondsmen named, and Sir Charles Nicholson had promised to be one of the bondsmen. Of course I saw him, and I told him how the line was situated, and how Mr. Jones was, and everything about it, as he was a friend of mine; and Mr. Lachlan Macalister was there present. I said I wanted to go and give up the mails.

53. Was Mr. Macalister the other bondsman? He was the other bondsman. Sir Charles Nicholson said,—“Mr. Macalister will go with you to introduce you to the Colonial Secretary.”

54. Who was the Colonial Secretary at that time? Mr. Deas Thomson. He said he was on the line with Mr. Jones, and saw the state of the country.

55. Who said this? Sir Charles Nicholson. He said if he had all the money of this country he could not finish this out.

56. Was this conversation with you? Yes.

57. Confine yourself to the communication that took place between you and the Government? I went to Mr. Deas Thomson, and told him I was come to give up the mails and contract. He said, “You must do it,” or something to that effect.

58. By Mr. Clements: You must perform the contract? Yes. I told him, No, there was no obligation.

59. By the Chairman: What did you mean by no obligation? The bonds were not signed, and we would throw it up. We had already lost—and I took the account to shew it—£1,500 for the first quarter, and the mail money.

60. By Mr. Lyons: £1,500 was the actual loss for the first quarter? Yes. He then spoke very kindly to me, and said if I could manage to do it the Governor and Council would consider favorably on the matter, and that for all unforeseen events Mr. Jones would be remunerated, I think he said £72 per cent.—seventy something.

61. By Mr. Clements: Seventy per cent. upon the contract, or upon the losses? Upon the losses. I said it was impossible for it to be done; that all our money was expended, and that that I had lent Mr. Jones money,—money that he had been working for for years, and what would become of my family if I expended all that. He said, “Oh, try and do it, and there is no doubt but what you will be compensated.”

Mrs. M. Jones.

10 May, 1860.

62. By the Chairman: Before going further I would ask you whether in talking of compensation the Colonial Secretary alluded to any particular events for which you should be compensated. Did he specify what the unforeseen events might be? “For all unforeseen events.”

63. He did not specify any? No; worse followed after this quarter.

64. If I understand you the gold fields had broken out? Yes; they had commenced.

65. Had you any further conversation with the Colonial Secretary? I said the gold had commenced, and that the men had run away from their contracts,—the pieces that Mr. Jones had let.

66. By Mr. Clements: You refer to the sub-contractors? Yes, and Mr. Jones had to buy horses at a great rate to replace these men.

67. By the Chairman: Do you recollect whether anything further passed between you and the Colonial Secretary in reference to compensation? No further than as to the state of the country. I said all the men were running away from this line, which they were, and the Sydney coachman who drove me to his place begged and prayed of me to give up the contract. He said, “You will be all ruined.”

68. By Mr. Clements: Who begged you to give it up? The coachman at the Sydney end—Armfield.

69. By the Chairman: Is Armfield still alive? Yes.

70. Was anything said about signing these bonds at this time? Yes; he begged of me to have them signed. I then said, “I would consider about it,” and then I went to Sir Charles Nicholson; I mentioned to him what had taken place, and he said, “I never knew Mr. Thomson to forfeit his word.”

71. Did he say that in reference to the promise of compensation? In reference to the promise he said, “You can do as you like, but mind it is at the risk of all you have, and at the risk of your bondsmen to.”

72. What determination did you arrive at? After consideration of what he had mentioned to me, of course I had faith in the Colonial Secretary. He said, “If you can, do it.” I said I would have to borrow money and to expend all my family’s money, but I said if I gave it up, when Mr. Jones came round, if ever he did, he would be very angry. After Sir Charles Nicholson spoke to me in that way I considered about it, and went to him again. I then said, I had made up my mind to have the bond signed, and then he said, “Have you got any friends?” I said, “I do not know, I have not tried.” He said, “Go round and see if you have any friends to sign the bond with Mr. Macalister, and if you cannot find anyone to sign with him, if you determine to have it done, at the risk of all I have got I will sign with him for Mr. Jones.” I went to Mr. William Long, and explained that Mr. Jones was at death’s door, and that I did not expect to see him alive again. I said that he would have to do the contract if anything happened to him, for I could not manage it. He said, “I will do it for you. I know nothing about coaches and horses; but as much money as you require, if you do require it, you can have it.” He went and signed the bond.

73. Mr. Long then became your bondsman? Yes, with Mr. Lachlan Macalister.

74. This contract, bearing your signature and the signatures of your bondsmen, lasted till the beginning of 1852? Yes. About the time of the signature of the bond a petition was drawn up for compensation for what we had already lost during the first quarter. Sir Charles Nicholson signed that, and a number of the Members of Council who were in Sydney, and I was promised that the signatures of the remainder, who were in the country, should be got. However, I did not wait for that. Sir Charles Nicholson directed me to take it to the Governor himself at Government House, Parramatta. Armfield drove me there. It was the day after Governor Fitz Roy was made Governor General. I sent in a message by the steward that I wished to see him; but he brought out word that the Governor could not see me, but that anything I left would be attended to; that he was busy writing despatches. I then sent in another message, and he replied that it was impossible to see me, but that I could send in what I had. I did so, and he said it should be attended to. I met his son upon the road, the Private Secretary, and he assured me that it should be attended to, and asked me to stop at the . . . I said I could not do so, that Mr. Jones was lying in a dangerous state, and that I must get home as soon as I could. He said, “If that is the case, get home as quick as you can, and I will see it attended to.” Some time after this the accounts were ordered to be sent in to the Auditor General.

75. The accounts relating to this loss before May? Yes, and they were sent in, I think, all that could be collected.

76. How did the contract go on after May—successfully or otherwise? It went on worse than during the first quarter.

77. Tell us, as briefly as you can, the history of the remainder of the contract? The fires first, and then the floods came, and then the gold rush, which continued rapidly, and drew the men away all down the line.

78. Although no doubt the breaking out of the gold would injure you by inducing your men to leave, would it not benefit you by increasing the number of your passengers? Not at all, for we could not carry any. The horses from want of food in consequence of the fires could carry very little, and then from the floods it was impossible to get along with the mails. They had to take pack-horses to carry the mails.

79. You directed all your energies to the conveyance of the mails? Yes; but of course, the mail money would not pay the men’s wages at the best of times.

Mrs. M. Jones. 80. What loss, at a rough estimate, for we shall get more minute details from documentary evidence, do you suppose was sustained on the whole contract? I go from the first calculation, that is all I can go upon; but I know the expenses were a great deal more after the first quarter.

10 May, 1860,

81. You base your calculation upon the loss of £1,500 in the first quarter? Yes.

82. By Mr. Hamilton: How long did you hold the contract? Twelve months.

83. By the Chairman: Were the losses of the succeeding quarters equal to those of the first? They were more.

84. By Mr. Hamilton: Then you put down the loss at more than £6,000? Yes, it was more; but all I have to go by is the first quarter.

85. By the Chairman: In consequence of these losses, and of the promises made by the Colonial Secretary, did either you or your husband make application for compensation at the termination of the contract? Yes, I did myself. I had an interview with the Colonial Secretary, Mr. Thomson, after the contract was performed, and he said he was not aware but that Mr. Jones was remunerated.

86. How long after the termination of the contract was this? I cannot say; some months perhaps after the contract was performed. I said, "My family are suffering for your 'promise.'" He said, "Do not blame me, because I thought Mr. Jones was remunerated"—which I could bring to his own recollection.

87. By Mr. Clements: Did he lead you to believe that he supposed the Government had remunerated him? Yes. I said, "My family are suffering in consequence of Mr. Jones 'having no means of paying me my money back again'—the money I had given him to assist him in carrying on the contract after, by my own fault, I had got the bond signed. These are the words he made use of when I asked him what course I was to take. He said, 'Tell Mr. Jones to write to the Postmaster General, and it will come through his hands to me, and I will see it carried out.'"

88. Did Mr. Jones write? I cannot say; when he was in his own business I never interfered with him.

89. Do you know whether your husband made a formal application or not? I think he did, but I do not know. My own doings I can speak of.

90. Can you explain how it is that you have allowed eight or nine years to elapse without pressing your case? Mr. Jones was taken ill with sudden attacks, and I had to attend to him, and to other matters, which took up most of my time. He was precarious in his way when he had these attacks.

91. You mean that latterly Mr. Jones suffered from fits of temporary insanity? Yes; he took up the whole of my attention, and I left other business as well as that. After that Mr. Thomson left the Colony, and I had no one to apply to.

92. Mr. Thomson had left the Colony? Yes, two or three years afterwards; and I had no one to apply to, as he was the person who knew all about it, and then the country was not in the state it is now. I asked advice about it of the Government officers and others, and they said they did not think it was of any use applying. It was in that way I was put off from time to time. They said it was of no use applying, I should only have the trouble and get nothing.

93. What induced you to make the application now? I understood that other persons had made applications and got compensation, and I know I am a sufferer. I am perfectly penniless now, where I ought to have £10,000 in the Bank.

94. You never have received any compensation from the Government? I have never received any compensation. It has never been before any Committee or Council.

95. By Mr. Clements: In consequence of the faith you had in the late Colonial Secretary, Mr. Deas Thomson, you were induced to go on with this contract? Yes, I went to him to give up the contract.

96. By Mr. Hamilton: You went to him and said you must give up the contract at the end of the quarter? Yes, immediately.

97. That you had lost £1,500 already, and he said, "continue it, and I will see you are paid"? Yes; he said if I could manage to go through it, and continue it, of course the Governor and Council would consider favorably of it, and I was to have this per centage upon all unforeseen events; and all these were unforeseen events.

98. And that these promises induced you to continue the contract? Yes.

99. By the Chairman: Is that the bond to which you allude (handing a paper to witness)? Yes, it is signed by Mr. William Long and Mr. Lachlan Macalister.

100. By Mr. Lyons: You say when you first undertook this contract you expended £10,000? Yes, it must have cost that to lay on coaches and horses from post to post.

101. And the contract lasted only one year? Yes.

102. How long after the contract commenced did the sub-contractors throw up their part of the performance? About three months I think.

103. Even with their assistance, and with everything going on regularly, you lost £1,500? Yes; because the fires began early in February, which raised the price of forage.

104. The Government would have nothing to do with that? That was an unforeseen event; they were such fires as have never been known before or since.

105. At the termination of the contract all these horses, carts, carriages, &c., were sold? Yes.

106. That which cost you £10,000 sold for £1,600? Yes; and then I had to take bills at two and three years for that; for they were not of much use after twelve months, through fire, water, and floods.

107. By Mr. Clements: There is always a great loss upon coaching material? Yes; and having it for only one year we could not make up our loss. If we had had it for three years, in the next two years we might have got something back again.

- Mr. Edward Armfield.
17 May, 1860.
134. How long did that state of things continue? It continued a long time. I know I came into town myself to buy grass hay of Mr. Campbell, for which I paid £30 a ton.
135. How long did this mode of sending hay along the road continue? It lasted four or five months.
136. Was that moderate or excessively expensive? Excessively expensive I should say.
137. What would be the cost of sending a ton of hay in this way—cut up and packed in woolpacks—at a rough estimate? That would depend upon the station it was taken from—and the parties would have to agree to take it along the road and leave some here and some there, as it was wanted.
138. Without speaking of the transit, what would be the expense of cutting up the hay and putting it into woolpacks? To cut up the hay into chaff it would be necessary to hire men. There was none of this machinery at work at that time, and therefore it would take longer to do it. I know it has cost him as much as £60 or £70 a ton to deliver it along the road from Yass.
139. I think you said your piece of road extended only from Sydney to Campbelltown? Yes.
140. Did you drive the whole way yourself? No, to Liverpool.
141. Were you in the habit of going up the road yourself? Yes, as far as Berrima and Goulburn.
142. Had you an opportunity at the breaking out of the gold fields of seeing the difficulties thrown in the way of the performance of the contract? The breaking out of the gold fields caused all the men to go to the Turon and to Ophir, and caused a great deal of difficulty, as much as the bad state of the country, for forage. I know that the men ran away, and left the horses to the mercy of the world, and in some cases took the horses away with them.
143. I suppose you can give no idea of the loss sustained by occurrences of that kind? No.
144. How long did this state of things continue? Four or five months.
145. Did not the gold fields afterwards break out in the south? Yes, at Braidwood.
146. Had not that a beneficial effect on the contract? The only beneficial effect was, that Mr. Jones slightly recovered his losses from here to Goulburn; for there was no traffic along the road, people went across from Bathurst. I know that although I was driving myself, I did not clear my own expenses from here to Campbelltown.
147. You say it was a common thing for the drivers to run away? Yes, and the ostlers too; I knew several who did so.
148. For the whole length of the road? On different parts of the road from Gundagai on the Albury road.
149. What course did Mr. Jones take under those circumstances? He managed to do the best he could. Sometimes when a man got to the end of a stage he would find the men gone and the horses too, and he had to drive a double stage. I know I had to send away my seasoned horses to the Port Phillip road, and buy horses for myself in town.
150. For how many months in the year did forage remain at this high price, or did it remain the whole year? The whole year on the Albury road. He did get a little hay here and there at the commencement which was not so high; but there was a failure in the crops.
151. What wages were demanded by the drivers after the breaking out of the gold fields? I was paying, myself, about £1 a week at first; he was paying some of his coachmen £8 a month, and he had to raise them to £15.
152. Was there any great change in the price of horses? Here there was a rise through the gold diggings, but it was not so particular; but we could not get seasoned horses for mailing without we paid a price for them, especially if we wanted them in a hurry.
153. What was the state of the roads in 1851? Very bad, especially beyond Berrima.
154. Was that from any particular cause? Only from the wet; the horses had a great cutting up, even on the Goulburn road.
155. Did this sub-contract of yours extend through the whole year 1851? Yes.
156. Did you lose or gain by the contract? I should have lost, only through the Braidwood diggings; only mine was a small piece, and I drove the mail myself.
157. Was yours the best part of the road? Yes; it is always the best part from Sydney to Campbelltown.
158. By Mr. Lyons: Were you sub-contractor, under Mr. Jones? Yes; I did it from Sydney to Campbelltown.
159. By Mr. Clements: You took it from him? Yes.
160. It is the usual practice for a general contractor to let off portions of the line? Yes.
161. By Mr. Lyons: Did he let off any other portion of the road in the same manner? No; he could not get anyone to take them—he would have been very glad if he could.
162. You have been a contractor for many years? Yes, I have had mail contracts myself.
163. Any loss that was sustained on the line upon which you drove would have fallen upon you, I presume, and not upon Mr. Jones? It fell upon him as well as upon me.
164. Not if you were the sub-contractor? I found half the expenses and he found half, and whatever losses or gains there were we divided.
165. Then you were not, properly speaking, a sub-contractor? On these pieces of road—it was not a great deal he let in that way—he found half the horses and shared half the losses or gains; but there was no loss on this end of the road, even if we had got no mail money; for there is always plenty of traffic at this end, independently of the Goulburn traffic.
166. By Mr. Hamilton: Was it during the time you have referred to that you raised the fares? I am not positive—it is so long ago.
167. By Mr. Lyons: Was that petition you have spoken of numerously signed by Members of the Legislature? It was signed by a great number—by Mr. Wentworth, Mr. Hill, Sir Daniel Cooper, and I think Mr. Cowper and Mr. Macarthur.

168. By the Chairman: Had these gentlemen full knowledge of the circumstances? I know Mr. Hill and Sir Daniel Cooper had. Mr. Edward Armfield.
169. What became of that petition? It went to Sir Charles Fitz Roy. I drove Mrs. Jones up to Parramatta, and we met Mr. Fitz Roy, who was something under his father, and he promised faithfully the thing should be attended to immediately. 17 May, 1860.
170. I suppose he merely said it should be attended to? Yes.
171. By Mr. Lyons: This hay which you bought of Mr. Campbell at £30 a ton, was it to provide hay for Sydney? No, it was at Tarcutta. I had an order upon his superintendent (Mr. ———), and Mr. Jones had to find parties to remove it.
172. That was Mr. George Campbell? I am not certain which of the Campbells.
173. By Mr. Clements: When you make a contract, is it not usual in the early part of the year to purchase your supply? There was none to purchase that year.
174. Then Mr. Jones, or any other contractor, I presume, would tender according to the high price of forage? No, he tendered in the spirit of opposition, like any other contractor. He had never had this long line of country before; and having got it, he was a very determined man, and was resolved to carry it through.
175. Have mail contractors any option to throw up their contracts, by giving notice before the end of their term? They have not. They can only throw it up before the bond is signed.
176. If they commence working must they carry the contract through? If there is no bond signed they can throw up the contract, but then they have to forfeit all the money they have earned. In this case no bond was signed by Mr. Jones; but Mr. Jones being an old contractor, because he would not throw dirt in the face of Sir Charles Nicholson and Mr. Macalister, who had given their word for him, was determined not to throw up the contract. He would rather have lost everything he had than be licked at it.
177. By Mr. Lyons: What do you suppose was the value of his plant when he commenced his contract? It cost a great deal of money. I had to get a lot of machines and send them to Port Phillip, but I could not form an idea of the cost.
178. Could you not give some idea what the carriages and horses were worth? It would take a good many horses.
179. By the Chairman: It has been given in evidence that the plant was sold, at the end of the contract, for £1,600? Yes, it was, to Forster.
180. Would that be a great loss, or would it be more than the value? That would be a great loss, and I will tell you for why,—the horses were scattered all over the country, some here and some there, and Mr. Jones would not have got a shilling for half the horses if he had not sold them to Forster; so that he was obliged to sell them to him.
181. Why could he not have sold his horses to another person? Because this man was mailing on the Port Phillip road, and Mr. Jones would never have received half the horses—some were turned out here and some there, and Mr. Jones did not know where many of them were. This man turned nasty with Mr. Jones, and, if Mr. Jones had not sold them to him, he never would have got half his horses.
182. By Mr. Lyons: You think they were sacrificed? Yes.
183. By Mr. Clements: There is always a great loss in the sale of coaching plant at the end of a contract? Yes, in coaches; but horses, if they have not been knocked about, often bring a better price than was paid for them.
184. By Mr. Lyons: Do you think Mr. Jones' plant cost £10,000? I should think it did not cost much less.
185. By the Chairman: Then the selling it at £1,600 was a vast sacrifice? Yes.
186. Supposing the season of which we have been speaking had been similar to an average season in every respect, what would have been the diminution in the value of the plant at the end of twelve months, at a rough estimate, supposing it cost £10,000? If another contractor had got the contract from Government, and wanted the plant to go on with, I consider the whole plant would have been worth £8,000 or £9,000.
187. By Mr. Clements: That is, supposing it to have been sold under favorable circumstances? Yes.
188. By Mr. Hamilton: How long do you consider one of those coaches will last? It depends upon circumstances—in a great measure upon the state of the roads—sometimes they are upset and smashed to pieces.
189. How long, under ordinary circumstances? Four or five years.
190. By Mr. Lyons: If in the hands of a careful driver? Yes.
191. By Mr. Clements: Supposing a coach to be taken good care of, and to run four years, and supposing it to cost £120 at first, what would it be worth at the end of four years? I should say it would be worth £40 or £50.
192. By the Chairman: Was the greater part of Mr. Jones' plant new or old? New. All his coaches were new. He had not a coach to go mailing without having it made.
193. By Mr. Clements: Is it your opinion that Mr. Jones at first took the contract at too low a price in the spirit of opposition? Mr. Jones had no idea of the Port Phillip road at the time he took it. He was a great coaching man, and he wanted to take it; and when he had gone up the road and found what he had to contend with, he could have thrown it up then.
194. By Mr. Lyons: Were you very intimate with Mr. Jones? Yes.
195. Did he ever mention to you that he had an interview with Mr. Deas Thomson concerning this contract? He said he had an interview with someone.
196. By the Chairman: Did Mr. Jones become insane? Yes, he became actually insane.
197. By Mr. Clements: Through the losses he sustained by this contract? Yes; I know he sacrificed all the funds he had in the bank, because some of his cheques came into my hands that were dishonored, and these continual losses drove him stupid.

- Mr. Edward Armfield. 198. Was he previously a very correct man in his dealings? Yes.
199. You think anxiety and disappointment were the causes of his derangement? Yes, disappointment about his losses caused him to go this way.
- 17 May, 1860. 200. By Mr. Lyons: How long after he commenced his contract did his difficulties begin? Not till the gold diggings commenced; then all his troubles came on. First his men ran away; then there was no forage for his horses, and his horses were starved; what forage was got the men would take away and sell it.
201. You do not know how long after the contract commenced these difficulties presented themselves? Not very long.
202. At what time were these dishonored cheques flying about? I do not know. I know at this time these cheques were sent along the line of road to pay Mr. Jones' debts.
203. You do not know at what time of the year they fell into your hands? That was before the petition. I think that was the cause of the petition going in.
204. By the Chairman: Would that have been about May? I think it was. He had every obstacle pitched in his road by these people who got these dishonored cheques; many of them had been coaching on the line, and wanted to put everything in his way. They got them sent up to Sydney, and I got hold of several and paid cash for them, for I knew Mr. Jones would not have a cheque dishonored for the world.
205. By Mr. Lyons: How did he manage to carry on his contract for the remaining six months when he was in such difficulties? Through the Braidwood diggings giving him a little help, and I suppose he borrowed money.
206. By the Chairman: Do you know anything about his circumstances when this contract was completed at the end of 1851? I heard that he was a great sufferer, and that he had lost a deal of money by the contract, and I know he was in great difficulties when he had to finish it.

Present:—

MR. CLEMENTS, | MR. HART,
MR. HAMILTON.

W. V. WILD, ESQ., IN THE CHAIR.

Sir Charles Nicholson, Bart., called in and examined:—

207. By the Chairman: Will you be kind enough to look at the petition of Mrs. Mary Jones, and say whether you have any recollection as to the circumstances of the contract mentioned therein? My recollection as to those circumstances is somewhat indefinite, and by no means clear; but I have an impression that substantially the allegations contained in the petition, as to the great difficulty of carrying out contracts at that particular period, are true; and I have also an impression that, in consideration of the great difficulty for the time being, some sort of conditional promise was made to Mrs. Jones or her husband that, if he carried out the contract, the Government would be disposed to take into account the very exceptional circumstances under which he fulfilled his engagement, with the view, I presume, of compensating him for any loss that he might encounter in carrying it out. I believe there was a combination of circumstances at that time which rendered the fulfilment of the contract an affair of very great difficulty; as, in addition to the gold discovery, there was, if I recollect aright, an unfavorable season—providence being dear and wages very high. What brings the circumstances to my recollection is this:—That Mr. Jones, on undertaking the contract, asked me to become security for him, as I had been security for him for some years before; but I declined on this occasion, anticipating and expressing my opinion that his efforts to carry out this contract would be attended with his ruin. He asked me frequently to sign the bond, which it is my impression I declined doing. Seeing that the man really did carry out his contract; whether he did so under the impression or belief that he would be compensated for any loss he might encounter beyond the original loss I cannot say. The matter has almost escaped from my recollection.
208. Is it your impression, from any statements that Mr. Jones made to you, that he was under the belief that he would be compensated? Well, my impression is of a very general nature. I think he was led by the Government to believe that they would take a liberal view of his case, or deal with him in a liberal spirit. That is my impression; but I cannot quote any specific conversation on the subject.
209. Are you aware whether at that time (the discovery of the gold fields) any Government contractors met with special indulgences? No, I am not. I believe Jones always carried out his contracts in a very spirited way, and took great pride in the manner in which he fulfilled his engagements.
210. By Mr. Hart: In the petition, Sir Charles, it is stated that, by reason of Mr. Jones' exertions to carry out this contract, he became subject to such bodily and mental disease as totally incapacitated him from further attendance on the performance of the contract after the 4th of April of that year? I cannot say anything in denial or confirmation of that statement. I lost sight of him for a considerable time after he took the contract.
211. By Mr. Clements: You were not brought into contact with him after this? No. I had been used to meet him in my journeys up and down the country. My general impression is, that he was encouraged by Government to carry out the contract.
212. By Mr. Hart: It states in the petition, that the gold discovery was made in February? Yes, there appears to be a mistake in that matter. The contracts were taken from the 1st of January.
213. By Mr. Clements: From your general recollection of the circumstances at the time, you think he was induced by the Government to carry on the contract? Yes; I think he took great pride in carrying out his contract.

Sir Charles
Nicholson,
Bart.

| Mr. HART, | | MR. MORRICE, |
| Mr. MATE. | | |

ROBERT STEWART, ESQUIRE, IN THE CHAIR.

Mr. John Sheehan called in and examined:—

- Mr. John Sheehan.
6 Feb., 1861.
214. By the Chairman: You have been a mail contractor? Yes, for various periods.
215. Do you know anything of the circumstances under which Mr. Jones' mail contracts were carried on in the year 1851? Yes.
216. After the commencement of the year was there any considerable alteration in the price of forage? Yes, it rose very much, from £6 a ton to £60.
217. Great difficulties then would have to be encountered during that year that could not have been contemplated, or by possibility foreseen, at the period of contracting? Yes, they could not have been foreseen when the contract was taken in October, 1850.
218. By Mr. Mate: Do you know what was the amount of the contract for the previous year, 1850, on the line that Mr. Jones contracted to work in 1851? I do not know.
219. By the Chairman: Supposing the bonds for that contract not to have been completed in April or the beginning of May in the year 1851, and that it had been thrown up by the person carrying it out, would it have cost the Government a considerable sum beyond that contracted for? Much more; indeed I do not think they could have got anybody to take it, on account of the state of the country then.
220. You think it was a great advantage to have the person then on the line continue it? No doubt about it. I have known the late Mr. Jones, in that year, to be obliged to cut hay at Yass and pack it in woolpacks and send it to Albury, because no hay could be got there at any price; and I have been with him here in Sydney when he has bought corn here and sent it round to Melbourne, to bring it up by the Melbourne Road.
221. One portion of this petition states, that "in or about the month of April, or early in the month of May, in the said year," the petitioner "waited on the then Colonial Secretary, the Honorable E. Deas Thomson, on behalf of her said husband, for the purpose of throwing up the said contract, and forfeiting the four months' mail-money then due"—do you think the contractor would have been in pocket by throwing up the contract at that time in preference to going on with it? Decidedly he would. I have known several of his horses to die —
222. Then you think that his completing the contract gave an advantage to the Government? No doubt of it, for I do not think anybody else would have taken it.
223. By Mr. Hart: Had you any mail contracts at this time? Yes.
224. Did they prove remunerative to you in that year? No, they did not.
225. Did you make any application to the Government for compensation? No.
226. Why not? Because I did not think I would get anything.
227. Do mail contracts always prove remunerative to the contractors, or are they sometimes expected to suffer a loss? That all depends upon the figure they get for their contracts, like any other speculation.
228. In the event of circumstances arising, such as floods, fires, or other things of that kind, are the Government expected to reimburse the contractors, or do they make it up to them by not imposing the penalties the Government would otherwise be entitled to impose? That is for delay in delivering the mails?
229. Yes? Through floods they do not, but anything else they do.
230. Are you aware of any contractor who received compensation for loss sustained on a mail contract in the year 1851? No.
231. Are you aware whether there was any increased traffic from Melbourne to our own gold fields by reason of their discovery at that time? Yes.
232. Would not that be a source of additional profit to the contractor? No; because his horses were not able to bring passengers on account of the scarcity of forage; he may have brought a solitary passenger occasionally.
233. Then Mr. Jones was not likely to derive any profit from that source? No, not that year.
234. Did the contractor for the subsequent year derive any profit from that source? That is more than I can tell you.
235. Can you state whether Mr. Jones did sustain any loss? Yes, I am positive he did.
236. To what amount—can you give the Committee any idea? I could not say the amount; but I am sure he suffered a very heavy loss.
237. By Mr. Mate: Had you any interest or share in the contract that year? Yes.
238. You were a sub-contractor under Mr. Jones? Yes, from Yass to Gundagai.
239. And you performed your contract? Yes.

240. By the Chairman: Are you aware whether Mr. Jones had serious inconveniences to contend with, in consequence of his men absenting themselves in some instances? Yes.
241. In consequence of the discovery of gold? In consequence of the discovery of gold; most of the people in the Southern district felt that.
242. By Mr. Cunneen: There were other sub-contractors besides you? Yes.
243. Are you aware that many of these threw up their contracts? All but one and myself.
244. You think they did so because they found that, on account of the altered circumstances of the Colony, it did not pay them to continue their contracts? Yes; and the scarcity of forage—they could not get forage.
245. And you think, as a natural consequence, that, as it did not pay these persons, it was equally likely Mr. Jones would sustain a loss? I am sure it did not pay Jones.
246. You think, in fact, that they gave it up in order to throw the loss off their shoulders on to Mr. Jones? Yes. I had it from Yass to Gundagai, and Spencer had it from Gundagai to Tarcutta, and we were the only two that kept it.
247. By Mr. Mate: Then Jones' losses must have occurred from Tarcutta to Melbourne? Yes.
248. By the Chairman: And at this end, should you suppose? No.
249. By Mr. Cunneen: Had he all the line at this end let to sub-contractors? No; he did this end himself.
250. Then he might have had a loss himself, on that which he held in his own hands—the Sydney end? I do not think he lost on the Sydney end, but he could not have gained much, for his contract was very low that year.
251. By Mr. Hart: Do you think his contract between Sydney and Tarcutta paid him? I think it paid him between Sydney and Yass; he had nothing to do then with the road from Yass to Tarcutta; I have just told you Spencer and I had it.
252. Both of you performed your contracts? Yes.
253. Perhaps at a loss to yourselves? I do not say I lost any money by it, but I think Spencer did; I would have lost considerably, were it not that, in time, I went and bought a lot of hay at the Fish River.
254. That view then bears out the statement in the evidence of Mr. E. Deas Thomson, that Mr. Jones's loss was between Albury and Melbourne, and that he was referred to the Government of Victoria for any claim he might have for any contract between those places—you believe that was the case? I do.
255. By Mr. Lewis: Are you aware that these changes in circumstances extended to other roads in the Colony? Not that year.
256. It was confined to the Southern Road? Yes.
257. By the Chairman: There were three causes, fire —? Yes, fire in Melbourne.
258. The discovery of gold, and floods? Yes.
259. By Mr. Hart: The contract, I presume, was taken without reference to any of these things? Yes, of course.
260. By Mr. Cunneen: Are you aware of the difference in the rate of wages after the discovery of the gold fields? Yes.
261. What do you think was the difference in the rate of wages, between what it was when he took the contract and what it was from the time the gold was discovered? It was trebled in that year of the gold discovery.
262. You think it rose 200 per cent.? It did indeed, and carriage equally so.
263. By Mr. Mate: When did that rise commence? About the middle of 1851.
264. By the Chairman: It is given in evidence before the Committee that £1,500 was lost between the beginning of the year, and the beginning of April—should you think that if that proportion was lost in the first three months of the year, it would not have exceeded that amount during the remaining portion of the year? Of course it would.
265. There must have been a clear loss beyond that? Yes.
266. By Mr. Lewis: Do you mean to say that all these distressing circumstances came upon him at once in the middle of 1851? Yes.
267. He did not lose anything before that? He was losing from the very beginning.
268. By the Chairman: The fire in Melbourne was in February, 1851? Yes.
269. By Mr. Lewis: What were the extraordinary difficulties he fell into—in the evidence it is stated that he lost £1,500 in the beginning of April, and you say the distressing circumstances befell him in the middle of 1851? I should think his difficulties increased; he was losing from the very time he began the contract.
270. But he lost more in the latter part of the year? Yes.
271. By Mr. Cunneen: I suppose you look at it in this way—that after the discovery of gold and the rise in markets, the price of horses, conveyances, and wages, increased very much? Yes.
272. By the Chairman: The fires in 1851 commenced about February? Yes.
273. Then the rush to the gold diggings about May? About May, I think.
274. And then followed floods? Yes.
275. All contributing to the losses of the contractor? Yes; on the Billabong Creek there were two of his horses drowned, in consequence of the flood.
276. By Mr. Cunneen: You have sometimes yourself tendered for performing contracts? Yes.
277. When doing so, would you make known to the Government, in your tender, the calculations you might make before taking the contract, as to the cost of horses, forage, and so on? It is not at all likely.
278. It is stated here, by Mr. Deas Thomson, that he is aware of what Mr. Jones estimated the hay would cost him—you, in tendering, would not give such information? No; but perhaps Mr. Jones gave it afterwards. He did not give it when he was tendering; it is not at all likely.

Mr. John Sheehan.

6 Feb., 1861.

- Mr. John Sheehan.
6 Feb., 1861.
279. It is contrary to the usage of contractors to let anybody know what the contract will cost themselves? Yes.
280. By the Chairman: If the contract was taken for £2,300 all through, do you think that estimate of £1,500 loss on the first quarter would be likely to be carried out? Yes.
281. You think that is not at all an unreasonable amount to be supposed requisite? No, I am sure it is not.
282. There would be considerable loss on the value of the horses, in consequence of the scarcity of feed, and the want of proper attention to them after the desertion of the men? Yes, of course; many of the horses died for want of forage.
283. And at the end of the contract the value of the horse stock would be very much depreciated in consequence of the deficiency of feed and attention? Yes.
284. That would also form an item of loss to the contractor that he would not be likely to take into account when tendering? Yes.
285. By Mr. Lewis: Are you aware whether Mr. Jones had any promises by officials of the Government, that any losses he might sustain would be made good? I am not aware.
286. By Mr. Morrice: Are you aware that many of his horses died? Yes, a great many; I purchased over thirty horses in Yass for him, and sent them up the road to keep him going.
287. By Mr. Cunneen: Had he to pay a much higher price for the horses that he purchased, to supply the place of those that died, than he would have had to pay when he tendered? Yes, much more.
288. You think any reasonable man could not have foreseen that that would be the case? It was not at all likely.
289. By Mr. Morrice: Did the other horses lose much in value from the drought and bad treatment? Yes.
290. By the Chairman: If you had been the contractor at that period, and your bonds were not signed at the beginning of April, would you have willingly entered into the necessary security to complete the contract? I would have thrown it up; very few men in the Colony would have continued it.
291. If you had a promise from the Government? That would be quite a different thing of course.
292. By Mr. Lewis: Did you say you bought thirty horses for Jones at this time? Yes.
293. And did he lose that number of horses from the particular circumstances that have been mentioned? More than thirty.
294. By Mr. Morrice: Have you any recollection what you might have given per head for these horses? From £20 to £30 each.

ROBERT STEWART, ESQUIRE, IN THE CHAIR.

William Elyard, Esq., called in and examined:—

- W. Elyard, Esq.
12 Feb., 1861.
295. By the Chairman: The Committee are anxious to have the document referred to in Mr. E. Deas Thomson's evidence—No. 53-1694? That is the registered number of the document.
296. Do you produce it? Yes, I have brought it, together with the papers on which it is founded. (Vide Appendix A.)
297. Can you inform the Committee on what data that report is founded? The report is from the Auditor General, respecting the claim of Mr. Joseph Henry Jones to compensation for losses alleged to have been sustained by him on his contract for the conveyance of mails between Yass and Albury, and Albury and Melbourne, in the year 1851, and is founded on documents alluded to in it, and correspondence between Mr. Jones and the Postmaster General and Auditor General on the subject. He preferred this claim in consequence of the difference in the price of forage arising from the particular circumstances of the Colony at the time, but more especially, I believe, from there having been bush fires in the Southern Districts and on the Port Phillip side, which, he stated, obliged him to resort to other places for his supplies. I may perhaps mention, in the first instance, that the claim arising for the service between Albury and Melbourne was not entertained by this Government, and that Mr. Jones was referred with respect to it to the Government of Melbourne; and the report, therefore, refers more particularly to the claim for losses between Yass and Albury.
298. Can you inform the Committee whether the contract between Mr. Jones and the Government was for a mail right through? I suppose the contract was made prior to the separation of Port Phillip, and if so it would probably be for the mail right through; but I have not the contract, which will be either in the Audit Office or in the Post Office.
299. If that were the case, would not the Government here carry out the contract, after separation had taken place, and look to the Government of Victoria for their portion of the mail money? I think, in that case, some arrangement would be made with the authorities in Victoria for charging the portion between Albury and Melbourne on the revenue of Victoria.

300. Was the contract completed by this Government paying Mr. Jones the amount of the contract money for the whole line? I cannot inform the Committee on that point, because it is a matter of account which can only be ascertained by reference to the documents in the Auditor General's Office.

W. Hyland,
Esq.
12 Feb., 1861.

301. Would you think it likely they would throw a portion of the contract on the Government of Victoria? The revenues of Port Phillip were kept at Melbourne, and very likely the portion of the contract that appertained to that district would be paid for from those revenues on the spot.

302. Would it be paid for through this Government, or direct to the contractor by the Victorian Government? I do not see anything in the papers which I have to enable me to state this—it will be shewn by the accounts. It would no doubt form a charge on the Port Phillip revenues.

303. Would it be paid through the Government of New South Wales—the contractor would not be bound to look to the Government of Victoria? I am not sure. The contractor might be paid, prior to separation, at Sydney; but I do not know whether by arrangement the portion for the service between Albury and Melbourne would be drawn direct from the Treasury at the latter, or from the Treasury here, and then recovered from Port Phillip.* I rather think it will be found to have been paid direct from the revenue of Port Phillip.

304. I suppose there were not many cases where contracts were entered into which separation divided in this way? No; because most of the contracts being for services in the Port Phillip District were contracted for and paid for on the spot. I find, with reference to this point, that the contractor sent in an account, or statement, professing to shew the actual cost of forage for horses conveying the mails from Melbourne to Albury, and from Albury to Yass, distinguishing the expense on each line, and shewing the rate at which the same articles were to be obtained previous to the year 1851; this statement being headed "from Melbourne to Albury," and "from Albury to Yass," giving the amount of loss between Melbourne and Albury at £2,190, and between Albury and Yass, £1,910; so that Mr. Jones adopted the principle himself of dividing the claim for compensation between Victoria and New South Wales. (Vide Appendix B.) In a letter dated Colonial Secretary's Office, 12th July, 1851, in which reference is made to his application for assistance to carry out his contracts, on the grounds I have before stated, there is the following passage:—"Under the Postmaster General's report, it appears to His Excellency that it will be just, so far to relieve you, as to make you a fair allowance for your proved losses on your contracts from Yass to Albury in this Colony, and from Albury to Melbourne in Victoria, in consideration of the unforeseen scarcity and consequent high price of forage." Mr. Jones was at the same time called on to prove, through the Postmaster General, the amount of his losses. The statement referred to appears to have been furnished in consequence.

305. Can you inform the Committee on what ground or data it is stated in the report, although the contractor claimed £1,910 for loss on one portion of the line, that his expenses for forage were in reality £8 less than he estimated when he took the contract? It appears to have been founded on two documents accompanying the report. The first is a certificate of the sale, on the 30th November, 1851, by John Cooper to Mr. Jones, of from 15 to 20 tons of hay at £2 10s. a ton, to be delivered at the Gunning stables during the year 1851. The second is a memorandum of agreement made on the 10th December, 1850, between Mr. Jones and Robert Plumb for the delivery of 50 tons of hay between the 10th of December, 1850, and the 25th December, 1851, at £1 12s. 6d. These documents appeared, as stated by the Auditor General, to shew that the 70 tons of hay were supplied to Mr. Jones under contracts, for the sum of £131 5s., and that the actual cost was thus less by £8 than his own original estimate (£140) instead of exceeding it by £1,610, as represented in his statement.

306. Do the documents before you shew whether those agreements were completed by the parties? No; but the Auditor General appears to have assumed that they were in coming to the conclusion he did. The documents do not shew that the agreement to supply the hay was fulfilled.

307. There does not appear to be anything to prove the completion of the contract? Not in these documents. They do not, however, prove that it was not completed, excepting so far as this is done by the statement forwarded by Mr. Jones.

308. Are you aware whether any contractor, during that year, did receive compensation for losses sustained in consequence of the unforeseen circumstances which affected contractors in that year? Some were permitted to resign their contracts at different dates, from May, 1851, in consequence of the altered state of the Colony, and others were allowed a certain compensation, viz.:—75 per cent. on their actual proved losses; but this was only on the articles of bread and flour.

309. By Mr. Malt: They were not mail contracts? No; contracts for provisions.

310. By the Chairman: Is there anything in that correspondence to shew that Mr. Jones was referred to the Government of Victoria for any compensation to which he might be entitled for the loss between Albury and Melbourne? I do not find by these papers that at the time of his being called upon to send in these separate accounts, he was distinctly referred to the Melbourne Government, excepting that the Auditor General states that he was informed to this effect. The correspondence seems to shew that it was intended to deal with his claim in this way. The correspondence with the Victoria Government also bears out this view. Mr. Jones must, I think, have understood that for any compensation for the Melbourne end of the line, or between that place and Albury, he would have to look to the Government of Victoria.

APPENDIX.

* I have ascertained from the Audit Office that payment for the line between Albury and Melbourne was not made by the Treasury in Sydney.

APPENDIX.

A.

Audit Office,
Sydney, 17 February, 1858.

Sir,

In accordance with the request contained in your letter of the 7th January last, No. 12, I do myself the honor to return herewith, the papers respecting Mr. Jones' claim to compensation for losses alleged to have been sustained by him in the performance of his mail contract for 1851.

I also forward the statements submitted by Mr. Jones to my predecessor in support of his claim, and other correspondence with this office and the Postmaster General.

2. I find that my predecessor has not recorded his opinion on the subject, but I have reason to believe that it was unfavorable to any allowance being made to Mr. Jones; and on examination of the documents submitted by Mr. Jones in support of his statement of losses, I have also come to the conclusion that he has not made out any case for compensation under the decision of His Excellency the Governor General, as to the terms on which it might be allowed.

3. The claim, on account of losses sustained by Mr. Jones between Albury and Melbourne, was not entertained by this Government, but was referred to that of Victoria. Mr. Jones was so informed, and it was also intimated to him that the Government could see no ground on which to entertain any claim for compensation as respects the performance of any other portion of his contract in this Colony than that from Yass to Albury.

It was further determined that the occurrence of the bush fires in the Southern Districts was the only circumstance which the Government could consider as a ground for exempting him in any measure from his ordinary liability as a contractor, and that the item of forage was the only article on account of which an allowance for loss could be made.

Mr. Jones was required to send to the Auditor General statements of his consumption of forage between Yass and Albury, of the price which he actually paid for it, and the price at which he could reasonably have expected to obtain it, when he sent in his tender.

4. In his first letter, addressed to the late Auditor General, in pursuance of the communication referred to, Mr. Jones does not give any detailed account of the consumption or forage for the horses employed in the conveyance of mails from Yass to Albury in the first half-year of 1851, but submits the following statement of the gross quantity, and its cost:—

| | £ | s. | d. |
|---------------------------------------------------------------------|---------------|----------|----------|
| 70 tons of hay, at £25 per ton | 1,750 | 0 | 0 |
| 600 bushels of maize, at 6s. per bushel, in Yass | 180 | 0 | 0 |
| Carriage of the above to the various stations, at 7s. per bushel .. | 210 | 0 | 0 |
| | £2,140 | 0 | 0 |

5. He further states that these articles could have been obtained at the end of 1850 at the following prices:—

| | | | |
|-----------------------------------------------|-------------|----------|----------|
| 70 tons of hay, at £2 per ton | £140 | 0 | 0 |
| 600 bushels of maize, at 3s. per bushel | 90 | 0 | 0 |
| | £230 | 0 | 0 |

making an actual loss in the six months of £1,910.

6. In proof of this statement of loss, Mr. Jones subsequently furnished to this office certain receipts, bills, and other documents "tending," as he stated in an accompanying letter, "to prove a part of the losses sustained by him;" but of these the five undermentioned documents only have reference to the alleged loss in the purchase of forage for the mail coach horses between Yass and Albury. The remainder relate to the Victoria contract.

7. The first document is a Memorandum of sale on 30th November, 1850, by John Cooper to Mr. Jones of fifteen to twenty tons of hay, at £3 10s. a ton, to be delivered at the Gunning stables during the year 1851.

8. The second document is a Memorandum of agreement made on the 10th December, 1850, between Mr. Jones and Robt. Plumb, for the delivery of fifty tons of hay between December, 1851, at £1 12s. 6d. per ton.

9. From these two documents, it would appear that the 70 tons of hay were supplied to Mr. Jones under contracts, for the sum of £131 5s., and that the actual cost was thus less by £8 than his own original estimate (£140), instead of exceeding it by £1,610, as represented in his statement. Mr. Jones may be able to afford further explanation, but the vouchers produced by him shew the above result.

10. In support of his statement of the cost of corn and the carriage of forage, the only vouchers produced by Mr. Jones are the following:—

| | | | |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|------------|----------|----------|
| 11th September, 1851.—Receipt of J. Green for the carriage of hay and maize from Yass to Mullingrandra, near Albury, 4 tons 2 cwt. 3 qrs., at £15 10s. per ton .. | £62 | 0 | 0 |
| 14th June, 1851.—Receipt of J. Cass for payment by J. Jones for carriage of hay, Ten Mile Creek, Billy Bong, 3 tons 18 cwt. 2 qrs., at 6s. per cwt. | 23 | 11 | 0 |

FRANCIS L. S. MERKWEITLER.

The Colonial Secretary.

Gunning, 30 November, 1850.

I have this day sold to Mr. R. Mallyon, agent for Mr. J. H. Jones, fifteen to twenty tons of good sound oat hay, to be delivered to the mail horse keeper at Gunning, in such quantities as he may require, not less than one ton at the time, at two pounds ten shillings sterling per ton; the above hay to be delivered at the Gunning stables, during the year of one thousand eight hundred and fifty-one.

JOHN COOPER.

MEMORANDUM of an agreement made and entered into this tenth day of December, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and fifty, between Mr. Joseph Henry Jones, West Bargo, of the one part, and Robert Plumb, of Brisbane Meadow, of the other part, whereby the said Robert Plumb doth agree to deliver unto Mr. John Wade, of the "Golden Fleece," Marulan, for the aforesaid Mr. Joseph Henry Jones, fifty tons (50 tons) of good oat hay, the same to be delivered between this date and the 25th December, 1851, for which the said Mr. Joseph Henry Jones doth agree to pay to the aforesaid R. Plumb £1 12s. 6d. (one pound twelve shillings and sixpence) to be paid for on the delivery of each load.

JOSEPH M. JONES.

William Muir, Esquire, called in and examined:—

- 311. By the Chairman: You are from the Auditor General's Department? Yes.
- 312. Do you produce any documents having reference to the claim of Mr. Joseph Henry Jones for compensation for loss on a mail contract? The only documents I have are the receipts for the payments.
- 313. Can you inform the Committee, from those vouchers, whether Mr. Jones received payment for his contract for the whole distance between Sydney and Melbourne from this Government? He received payment up to the 30th June for the whole distance between Sydney and Melbourne, from this Government, and from the 1st of July he was paid by the Victorian Government for that portion between Albury and Melbourne.
- 314. That part of the line was not paid for through this Government beyond that period? Not beyond the 30th June.
- 315. It appears that the Auditor General made a report on this subject—I suppose nothing you have before you shews on what evidence that report was made? There is nothing here. The report was made to the Colonial Secretary, and the whole of the documents were sent to him at the time with that report.
- 316. The distance between Sydney and Melbourne appears to have been divided into several separate contracts, the whole of which were taken by Mr. Jones, and the sum total was £3,200—can you say what proportion of that sum was paid by this Government? £2,700 were paid by this Government, leaving £500 for the half-year from Albury to Melbourne.

W. Muir,
Esq.
12 Feb., 1861.

Thomas

Thomas Kingsmill Abbot, Esq., called in and examined:—

- T. K. Abbot, Esq.
12 Feb., 1861.
317. By the Chairman: What is your office? I am Secretary to the Post Office.
318. Do you produce any documents having reference to the contract between Joseph Henry Jones and the Government, for carrying the mails to Melbourne in the year 1851? I produced some in May last year on the subject.
319. Can you inform the Committee whether any arrangements were made with the mail contractors of that period—were you in the department then? I was in the department, but not connected with this particular duty. The arrangements that then prevailed I think still continue. Contracts were taken on the same terms.
320. Are you aware whether, at that particular period, any compensation was made to contractors, in any way, to meet the difficulties of their position? No, I am not aware of a single instance.
321. By Mr. Cunneen: If there were allowances made to any contractors, would it be likely to come before your particular department? Yes, it would. There is a correspondence here, in which Mr. Merewether, the then Postmaster General, was called upon to report on this particular case, and he has given his opinion on the subject in his report. I have a copy of the report here.
322. By the Chairman: Will you be kind enough to read the letter? (The witness read the same. Vide Appendix A.) There is a further report from the Postmaster General, transmitting a letter from Mr. Jones to the Colonial Secretary, on which he again reported. (Witness read the same. Vide Appendix B.) Then there is a third report, on a letter from the Colonial Secretary on the same subject. (Witness read the same. Vide Appendix C.)
323. That letter is for further inquiry? Yes. The correspondence relating to the subject is in the Colonial Secretary's Office. These are copies from the letter book.
324. By Mr. Mate: I understand that the contract was for £1,000 from Yass to Albury, in 1851—do you know what it was in the following year? £900.
325. By the Chairman: Are you aware of any difference that had arisen to account for the reduction? No, I am not aware. The bush fires in the southern districts would appear to have been the cause of the losses that Mr. Jones stated he sustained; but the effects of those fires might not have been felt in the following year.
326. His claim was, in fact, grounded on casualties of the season, the effects of which were not likely to be continued in the following year? Yes.
327. By Mr. Mate: As those fires did not occur before his contract was taken, of course he could not take them into account in making his tender? No.
328. By Mr. Parkes: Have you seen the petition of Mrs. Mary Jones, which the Committee are appointed to inquire into? Yes; I have it before me.
329. The causes of loss mentioned there, are connected with the gold discovery? The losses by fire are mentioned too.
330. At all events the gold discovery is chiefly dwelt upon? Mr. Merewether appears to say that so far as the gold discovery was concerned, Mr. Jones' claims ought not to be allowed.
331. By the Chairman: The month of February is alluded to in the petition—that is earlier than the gold discovery—that was the month when the bush fires occurred in Victoria? I am not aware; but the first correspondence on the subject appears to have taken place in April.
332. Are you aware whether the bonds were signed at that time? The contract was entered into, according to the usual practice, in the previous year.
333. But the bonds were not signed then? No; they were afterwards signed.
334. Some correspondence had taken place previously to the signing of the bonds? I am not aware. On or about the month of April Mrs. Jones states in her petition that the bonds were not signed.
335. You are not able to say whether that is correct or not? No. The correspondence shews that some communications had been received in the month of April.
336. It is possible, I presume, that the arrangements Mrs. Jones speaks of in her petition, could have been made with the Colonial Secretary, without any correspondence between that department and the Post Office? Quite.
337. At that time it would be in his power to make any arrangements, without reference to the Post Office authorities? Quite. At the present moment any arrangement of the kind requires the sanction of the Minister for Finance and Trade.
338. By Mr. Cunneen: Any promises the Colonial Secretary might make to Mrs. Jones, the Post Office authorities might not be aware of? They would not, unless they were communicated in writing. It might have been verbally communicated to Mr. Merewether, but the records of the office do not shew it.
339. You know nothing of the matter beyond the documentary evidence that comes before you as Secretary to the Post Office? Nothing more.
340. By the Chairman: It is stated in the petition that if the contract had been thrown up in May, not more than £300 would have been lost, which was then in the hands of the Government—are you aware whether the payments were made monthly? The payments were made quarterly; for the quarter ending with June Mr. Jones was paid on the 16th August in full, and for the quarter ending September on the 22nd October, with the exception of that portion from Albury to Melbourne, which was paid for by the Victorian Government, separation having taken place about that period, July, 1851.
341. By Mr. Mate: Are you aware that Mr. Jones sublet any portion of the contract between Sydney and Albury? He did not sublet it with the sanction of the Post Office; if he had there would have been a separate bond and contract with the party to whom he let it.

342. By the Chairman: Mr. Jones was responsible? Yes, right through; and the payments were made to him. T. K. Abbot, Esq.
343. The sub-contracts were private arrangements between him and the other parties? Yes.
344. By Mr. Cunneen: If Mr. Jones had thrown up the contract, and refused to enter into the bonds, after three months had expired, do you think the Post Office authorities would have been able to get other persons to undertake the contract? No doubt they would; but the question is whether they could have got a person to carry it out for the same sum. At the same time it is right to say that he could not have thrown his contract up, because his tender was a legal document, binding him and his sureties. 12 Feb., 1861.
345. By the Chairman: Are you aware that at that date sureties did not become parties to the contract until they had signed the bond? No, I am not. The tender itself will shew whether they had signed it or not. Now it is indispensably necessary that they should do so, and the Crown Law Officers have decided that the sureties signing the tender are bound to carry out the contract if the contractor fails to do so.
346. By Mr. Cunneen: I suppose after they enter into the usual bond? They all sign the tender, and that is held to be binding, even if the bond be not signed.
347. But that was not so at this period? I cannot speak of that period.
348. It appears from the evidence that it was not decided who were to be the sureties for three months after the contract had been commenced? Were not sureties named in the tender?
349. Sir Charles Nicholson was named in the tender, but he had some objection, and did not enter into the bond? The tender should have been signed by the sureties, according to the present practice.
350. By Mr. Dalgleish: I presume that had not other suitable bondsmen presented themselves the Post Office would have had a claim upon the parties signing the original tender? It would have had a claim upon the contractor, but the sureties, as it appears, not having signed the tender or the bond, of course it could have had no claim upon them.
351. If they had signed the tender you would have had a claim upon them equally as if they had signed the bond? Yes, no doubt.
352. By the Chairman: At that period if the bond had not been signed by the sureties the only party liable to the Government was the contractor? That is all.
353. By Mr. Dalgleish: Had the contractor at this time refused to carry out his contract the Government would have had a remedy against him to the full extent of his means? Yes, to the extent of any additional sum they might have been compelled to pay if they had had to call for fresh tenders.
354. The sureties were not liable at that time until they had signed the bond? It appears not.
355. Then, although the Government were not secured to the same extent as they would be under the present system, yet as far as Jones was personally concerned he was bound to the full extent of his means? Yes, exactly. It is optional with the Board, who open the tenders, whether or not they will accept a tender not signed by sureties. If they consider that the tenderer himself has means to meet the penalty, that is, double the amount of the contract, they may accept it.
356. By Mr. Mate: There is nothing in the office to shew that Mr. Jones came to the Post Office and said he would throw up the contract if not allowed compensation? Nothing more than the Postmaster General's report to the effect that he should not be allowed to do so.
357. Was any compensation allowed to any mail contractor for losses during the year 1851? I am not aware of any.
358. By the Chairman: There were no others on the Southern Road? Jones had the main line, but there were contractors for branch lines to Braidwood, Marulan, Bungonia, and other places.
359. You are not aware whether any of these had compensation given them? I am not aware.
360. You cannot say they had not? I cannot.
361. By Mr. Morrice: Was Mr. Jones fined at all during the year? In one instance he was fined £25, but under the circumstances the Postmaster General recommended that the fine should be remitted, and it was remitted by the Colonial Secretary.
362. By Mr. Dalgleish: Were there any other main lines at that time? Yes, the Northern and Western.
363. Are you aware whether any compensation was allowed to contractors on either of those lines? I am not aware of any compensation to any contractor.
364. By the Chairman: Have you the letter stating the grounds on which the fine you have spoken of, was remitted? No, but if it is of importance I can send a copy.
365. There must have been some grounds? There must have been some sufficient grounds for it.
366. Is that the only case in which fines were remitted during the year? That is the only case with regard to Mr. Jones.
367. With that exception he carried the mails through? Yes; I find the full amount of his contract was paid without any deduction.
368. He was paid up to the end of June? For the whole line; and from the 1st of July the Victorian Government took their portion.
369. The Post Office department here would have nothing to do with any irregularity at that end? Nothing whatever.

T. K. Abbot,
Esq.

APPENDIX.

A.

General Post Office,
1 July, 1861.

Sir,

I have the honor to return herewith the Memorial of Mr. J. H. Jones, contractor for the conveyance of the Mails between Sydney and Melbourne, praying for some additional remuneration, or that he may be released from his contract.

2. And in pursuance of the Governor General's directions, that I should report thereon, I beg leave to state that Mr. Jones has four contracts for conveyance of the Mails from Sydney to Melbourne during the present year, which are for the distances and at the rates undermentioned:—

- 1.—From Sydney to Goulburn, at £800.
- 2.—From Goulburn to Yass, at £400.
- 3.—From Yass to Albury, at £1,000.
- 4.—From Albury to Melbourne, at £1,000.

3. On the two first of these contracts there is no reason to suppose that Mr. Jones has sustained any loss; and even if he has, there appears to be no grounds on which he could, with any fair claim to consideration, apply to the Government for relief.

4. On the two last-mentioned contracts, and especially on that from Albury to Melbourne, I have reason to believe that owing to the scarcity of forage in the Port Phillip District, and in the southern part of this District, Mr. Jones has sustained considerable loss.

5. I cannot find any instance in which a mail contractor has been permitted to give up his contract, or to receive an additional allowance for its continued performance, in consequence of its having become to him a losing concern, and the establishment of any precedent for such a course should, as far as possible, be avoided; on the other hand, it would probably much raise the rate of contracts, if contractors did not feel that should the calculations on which their tenders were based, be altogether thrown out by a casualty which no human foresight could anticipate, they would not receive from the Government a fair consideration of their position under the altered circumstances.

6. In Mr. Jones' Petition, two such casualties are referred to, viz., the gold discovery and the extensive bush fires in the Port Phillip District.

7. I cannot perceive that the former of these casualties can have affected Mr. Jones to any sufficient extent, to make it a ground for relaxing the conditions of his contract in any manner. In so far as the rise in the price of forage for the horses used by him for the conveyance of the Mails between Yass and Port Phillip, may be attributed to the bush fires in that district, he may perhaps be considered to have a fair claim for some relief from this Government, on account of his contract from Yass to Albury; and from the Government of the Colony of Victoria, on account of his contract from Albury to Melbourne.

8. Mr. Jones could not, without great inconvenience to the public, be released from his obligation to carry the Mails in the manner provided in his contract during the remainder of the present year; and the only relief which he can receive must, therefore, be by an additional payment, either in the shape of an allowance proportioned to his proved losses, such as has been made I understand in the case of the provision contractors, on a per centage increase on the rate fixed by the contracts.

I have, &c.,
F. L. S. M.

The Colonial Secretary.

B.

General Post Office,
2 August, 1861.

Sir,

I do myself the honor to forward a letter which has been addressed to me by Mr. J. H. Jones, in pursuance of your letter to him, dated the 12th ultimo, forwarding statements of the losses he alleges he has sustained by his contract for the conveyance of the Mails between Yass and Albury, and Albury and Melbourne; and, in accordance with Mr. Jones' request, I submit them for the purpose of being laid before His Excellency the Governor General.

2. It appears to me, however, that the only items of expenditure in these statements which are entitled to consideration, are those under the head "forage," amounting to the undermentioned sums:—

|---------------------------|---------|
| Yass to Albury | £2,140. |
| Albury to Melbourne | £2,425. |

3. The Auditor General would, I presume, consider it necessary that these statements should be supported by sufficient vouchers; if so, Mr. Jones might be called upon to forward such accounts as may be required, and to shew what, according to the then prices, the same forage would have cost when he sent in his tenders. The difference between that estimated cost and the amount actually expended would, I conceive, be the sum which, under His Excellency's decision, Mr. Jones should receive on this account.

I have, &c.,
F. L. S. M.

The Colonial Secretary.

C.

General Post Office,
28 August, 1861.

Sir,

Having, in pursuance of your letter of the 12th instant, No. 51, requested Mr. Jones to furnish statements of the losses he alleges he has sustained by his contract for the conveyance of the Mails,—

2. I do myself the honor to enclose copies of two communications which I have received from him, in which he states, that for the forage used by his mail horses, on the road between Yass and Albury, during the first six months of the present year, he paid £2,140, and that according to the prices current when he took the contract he expected to pay for the same quantity of forage the sum of £230.

3. I would, therefore, recommend that Mr. Jones should be required to satisfy the Auditor General, by the production of sufficient vouchers, that the quantity of forage mentioned in his statement was consumed, and that the sum stated was paid for it.

4. In the meantime I will write to the Postmasters at Yass, Gundagai, Tarcutta, and Albury, to ascertain whether at the end of the year 1860, when the contract was taken, Mr. Jones could have obtained at their current prices, or could reasonably have expected to obtain, forage at the rates stated in his letter, viz., £2 per ton for hay, and 3s. per bushel for corn.

5. With respect to Mr. Jones' statement of losses by his contract between Melbourne and Albury, I would recommend that the Lieutenant-Governor of Victoria should be requested to take a similar course, to ascertain the anticipated and actual expenditure for forage used by him between those places.

6. This statement in respect to this portion of his alleged losses is, that he expected to have to pay only £235, and that he paid £2,425.

I have, &c.,
F. L. S. M.

The Colonial Secretary.

William

William Cummings, Esq., M.P., examined:—

370. By the Chairman: This Committee have understood that you have been a contractor, supplying the public service about the years 1850 and 1851? Yes, before 1851 I had been contracting for several years.

W. Cummings
Esq., M.P.

12 Feb., 1861.

371. Has it been the usual practice with the Government, in any case where unforeseen circumstances have varied the price of articles, to make any compensation to contractors for losses sustained in consequence? I cannot say whether it has been the usual practice of the Government or not; but I know, on one occasion, some short time before the discovery of gold, we had a very bad season, and I had then a contract for the supply of rations and forage between the Weatherboard and Bathurst; there were then numerous iron gangs upon the road about Blackheath. It was a very bad season, and, on account of the drought and bush fires, provisions of every kind, and especially forage, rose to a very high price after the tenders were accepted.

372. Did the Government make you any allowance in consequence of these circumstances? I had some correspondence with the Government relative to the unexpected rise in provisions and forage, and as I saw I should sustain severe loss by carrying out the contracts I had made up my mind to allow the Government to enforce payment of my bond, as the least of two evils, unless some compensation was allowed.

373. By Mr. Parkes: When was that? I cannot positively say, but I believe it was in 1849; it was a short time before the discovery of gold; it was the same drought that continued until September of the year that the gold was discovered in May. I think it was in May at Ophir, and in June on the Turon. The same drought continued in the Western District till after the discovery of gold.

374. By the Chairman: Then in your case you would have found it to your advantage to throw up the contract? I proffered to do so by giving notice to the then Colonial Secretary, Mr. Deas Thomson.

375. By Mr. Parkes: What did he say in reply? A long correspondence took place between me and Mr. Deas Thomson, and he held out some promises, but I did not think they were binding; and no certain promise of compensation being made to me I wrote a letter to Mr. Deas Thomson giving him notice that the Government should be prepared to issue rations on a certain day, as I would not issue them after that day, unless the Government guaranteed that I should get compensation for any loss I might be put to. A few days before my notice expired I received a letter from Mr. Deas Thomson guaranteeing to compensate me, and I continued the contracts to the end, and the Government compensated me.

376. To what amount? I do not recollect the amount, but they allowed me a fair compensation above the price that the same articles were at in the market at the date of my contract.

377. Were you satisfied with the compensation? I was perfectly satisfied.

378. By the Chairman: You were induced to continue the contract on that account? Yes, on the receipt of Mr. Deas Thomson's letter that I would get reasonable and just compensation.

379. You felt perfectly confident that letter was sufficient? Yes, the last letter was, I considered, a guarantee. I had received other letters, but I did not consider them binding, therefore I did not feel satisfied; they were only vague promises that the Government would take the matter into consideration.

380. You do not recollect the amount of compensation you received? I do not.

381. Would it amount to 75 per cent. of the amount of loss? I cannot state the actual amount; all I know is that I felt perfectly satisfied.

382. You would have thrown up the contract unless you had been guaranteed compensation? That was my determination; I gave notice to that effect.

383. What was the amount of your bond? £1,000.

384. You would have lost that if you had not continued the contract? I would have risked it, if the Government thought proper to enforce it. I would not have continued the contract without a bonâ fide promise.

385. By ceasing to issue provisions in accordance with the contract would you not have been liable to the extent of £1,000? Yes, I would, no doubt.

386. Are you aware whether any other contractors received compensation about that time on account of the circumstances that caused the rise in the prices? Several of the contractors wrote to me requesting me to press my case.

387. Are you aware whether any others did obtain compensation? Yes, I think they did; I think I can mention one in particular, Mr. William Nicholson, of Greenhills. I believe all the contractors received compensation at that time, but I cannot state it as a matter of fact.

388. By Mr. Dalgleish: In what year was this? In 1849 or 1850.

389. It was not in 1851—you can be sure of that? I believe it was in 1850. I think by applying to Mr. Lane, in the Colonial Treasurer's Office, the Chairman would obtain all necessary information.

390. By Mr. Cunneen: I suppose you would have expected the Government to make you the same allowance in whatever year this had happened—whether in 1851 or any other year? Yes; it was from the pressure of circumstances that I sought compensation.

391. The date had nothing to do with it? No; it was on account of the unexpected rise which took place in consequence of the drought and bush fires.

392. By the Chairman: These circumstances would fall with peculiar force on mail contractors at that period? I had nothing to do with mail contracts; all I can say is that forage, corn, and hay rose to a high price unexpectedly.

393. By Mr. Dalgleish: Your contract was for the supply of these articles? Yes, of these and other articles.

FRIDAY,

FRIDAY, 15 MARCH, 1861.

Present:—

MR. CUNNEEN,
MR. DALGLEISH,
MR. HART,MR. LEWIS,
MR. MATE,
MR. MORRICE.

ROBERT STEWART, ESQ., IN THE CHAIR.

Mr. Henry Middleton called in and examined:—

Mr. Henry
Middleton.
15 Mar., 1861.

394. By the Chairman: We have called upon you in reference to a petition of Mrs. Mary Jones asking compensation for losses sustained in carrying out a mail contract in the year 1851? I remember it well.

395. Had you an opportunity at that period of knowing something of the character of the mail line to Melbourne? I had been running it for ten years before, but that year I happened to lose it, and Mr. Jones got it.

396. You had an opportunity at the time of knowing the circumstances of the line of road? Yes.

397. Was there any change after the period of taking the contract in October or November, 1850—was there any considerable change in the price of fodder—of hay and corn? Yes, there was a great rise in 1851.

398. To what extent did prices rise—were they double? Above double.

399. Was that change brought about by circumstances that would not be likely to be taken into account by a person contracting? Yes; it was not to be foreseen. There was a great fire and a great drought, and there was not a bit of feed to be got after you passed Bowning till you got to Melbourne.

400. In fact the feed had to be carried there to supply the horses? Yes, I had an opportunity of seeing Mr. Jones with four or five teams loading forage to take up there.

401. Would you think it likely that £25 a ton would have to be paid for forage, or that it would cost that to get it up to the stations along that line of road? I do not think we could hardly get it up there for that sum.

402. Then if £25 has been named as the cost, you think it could not have been supplied below that? No, it could not, the carriage would almost come to that; it was £1 a hundred-weight.

403. Would you say that 10s. a bushel for maize would be above the price at which it could be supplied? I did not buy any that year, but I do not think it could.

404. If £25 a ton for hay, and 10s. a bushel for maize, are the prices named as the cost during the earlier part of that year, you do not think it is beyond the price at which they were purchased? I am certain it is not beyond Bowning, the other side of Yass. On this side there was a pretty good season, but that had nothing to do with the contract.

405. Can you inform the Committee what were the prices of hay and corn in October of the previous year, about the time these contracts were taken? I always paid £4 a ton. I had the contract the year before; but the diggings broke out in 1851.

406. This could not have been foreseen in the year you had your contract? No; if I could have foreseen it I would have made plenty of money.

407. Do you think the contractor would have been safe if the prices on which he had calculated had continued? He would not have got anything by it; for, at the time, he offered me 65 miles at the contract price, and I said, "No, I cannot do it." It was not worth my while to do it, even when hay was sold at £4 a ton.

408. Was the following season more favourable for the supply? No. The next year I got the contract, and what with floods and one thing or other, I lost money by it. I lost by my labor and horses above £200 for that 65 miles—that was the next year.

409. By Mr. Morrice: Did you calculate upon a higher rate than Mr. Jones did? No, about the same; but still I knew we could not get anything by it, but there was a little bit of ill-feeling that caused us to take it at that price.

410. By the Chairman: It was not likely a contractor could take into account the extreme destruction caused by fire along the road? That was impossible.

411. By Mr. Morrice: What part of the road had you? My brother, Mr. Green, and I, had it to Melbourne. I used to run from Yass to Gundagai.

412. Was the country very much burnt up? Yes.

413. By bush fires? Yes, and drought.

414. By Mr. Mate: You are not aware of the prices of forage any distance further than where your own contract extended? No, not for 1851 or 1852; but I have from Melbourne to Albury, in 1853 and 1854; the country was divided in 1852.

415. At the time Mr. Jones had it, it was divided? Yes.

416. By Mr. Morrice: Were you aware that Mr. Jones applied to the Government for authority to purchase from the squatters fodder for his horses? No; but I believe he applied to the Government for leave to give up the contract, and Mr. Green sent word he would take it off his hands if he could not do it.

417. By the Chairman: Are you aware whether the Government held out any encouragement to him, or made any promise to him to meet any of the expenses? Not that I am aware of. I know he applied for it.

418. If he did not get any additional amount he must have been a considerable loser? Yes.

419. To the extent of some thousands of pounds? He must.

420. If £1,500 is stated to have been the loss for the first quarter, do you think that is not an over-estimate? I know he lost a good many horses that year.

421. Would that be brought about by the scarcity of the feed? Yes. I think I heard him say he had eleven or twelve dead in one waterhole.
422. In the early part of the season the want of water was a great evil? Yes; the horses got bogged in trying to get water.
423. By Mr. Morrice: You mean that the horses were so weak for want of food that they could not get out? Yes; they could not get water, and in scrambling to get into it they stuck in the mud, and could not get out.
424. From want of food were any of the horses incapable of doing the work? They could take no passengers, they could only get the mail on; it stopped all passenger traffic.
425. By the Chairman: In addition to the extra price of fodder and the loss of horses, he had also to sustain loss from his inability to take passengers, in consequence of his horses being weak from want of food? Yes.
426. By Mr. Morrice: When the contract was taken did he calculate a great deal on the passengers? All on the passengers, the trifle of mail money was nothing.
427. By Mr. Mate: Did the scarcity of forage exist throughout the whole year? Yes; the whole of 1851, and the greater part of next year.
428. By the Chairman: It commenced with the great fires on the Melbourne side? Yes. After the floods there was a little bit of a spring of grass at Gundagai and round about there, but that was a mere nothing.
429. By Mr. Morrice: This drought commenced principally about Yass? Yes; from here to Yass you could not complain, but it was beyond Yass the difficulty arose.
430. By the Chairman: You are living out of business now? Yes; I had to give it up in 1854, when I lost my sight on the Melbourne side.
431. By Mr. Cunneen: In tendering for the conveyance of mails, you look to what you receive from carrying passengers as the great source of profit and income? Yes; the mail money alone would be a mere nothing.
432. You consider that Mr. Jones, in consequence of not being able to carry passengers, in 1851, lost that great source of income? Yes; I do not know how he stood it altogether.
433. Do you consider that a man, in a year, when he could carry passengers, would do better if he carried the mail for nothing, than he would do with the mail allowance when he could not carry passengers? Yes; I have known parties offer to carry the mail for nothing in order to keep others off the road.
434. Do you think that was Mr. Jones' case that year? Yes; he depended upon his passengers; the mail money was a mere nothing—not enough to pay the mailmen.
435. By Mr. Mate: Are we to understand from you that Mr. Jones did not take passengers through the whole year? No; I think he did the greater part of the first three months, but he had to stop it—at least that is what I was told.
436. You do not know of your own knowledge? I heard it from his own lips at the time when he went through to stop it.
437. By the Chairman: You, as an old contractor, thought it probable his statement was correct? Yes; I thought it would ruin him. I could hear it from other people—from the mailmen.
438. By Mr. Cunneen: Generally after the country is burned and there is rain, it is a profitable season? Yes.
439. I suppose there was a good deal of feed in 1852? Pretty fair.
440. You could carry a great many more passengers than Mr. Jones carried in 1851? For two months we could not get a bit of fodder, and we could not get a horse shod; we had to run them barefoot on horseback from Yass to Gundagai.
441. What was the reason you could not get them shod? The floods—that was the year of the great flood at Gundagai, when so many lives were lost.
442. By Mr. Hart: How long were you a mail contractor? As mail contractor and subcontractor, about seventeen years.
443. Has any instance occurred within your knowledge where Government has made compensation to a contractor, by reason of his contract being a losing concern? I believe it has been done, but I cannot say for a fact.
444. You do not know yourself? They never found any fault with me, and I never had any occasion to do so; my biggest loss was at the time of the flood in 1852.
445. Is it your opinion that Mr. Jones took this contract at an unusually low sum, for the purpose of driving others off the road in 1850? I cannot say; I know he drove us off; we had to lay on our oars for a year.
446. Can you state what was the price of forage at Yass and Albury in 1850? Yes, I should say £3 and £4 a ton for hay.
447. And what the price of maize? About 4s.
448. By Mr. Hart: If Mr. Jones has stated that he purchased hay at £2 a ton, do you consider that an erroneous statement? He might have purchased it at that in some parts; I have purchased it in Yass at £2 a ton, in very good seasons.
449. I am speaking now of the end of 1850, or the beginning of 1851? I do not think he could.
450. By Mr. Morrice: Do you mean, delivered where you required? At my stations.
451. Could you not have purchased at £2 at the stack? I have had it delivered at £2 in good seasons.
452. But I mean in that year—if you could have it delivered where you required at £3, could you not purchase it without being delivered at £2? I do not think you could, because the people have waggons and teams, and would rather deliver it.
453. By the Chairman: Is it generally an advantage to buy it delivered to the contractors? Yes.

- Mr. Henry Middleton.
15 Mar., 1861.
454. By Mr. Morrice: Might not Mr. Jones be able to buy it at £2 without being delivered? He might; but it would not have answered my purpose, because I did not keep bullocks or horses for the purpose. I think that season Mr. Jones had to buy teams of his own to ake forage up to the different stages, as far as Albury.
455. By the Chairman: That would be an extra outlay beyond anything he could possibly calculate upon when tendering? It would be.
456. By Mr. Lewis: You calculate that Mr. Jones must have been a great loser by this contract? Yes.
457. Through unavoidable circumstances? Yes, and quite unforeseen.
458. By Mr. Dalgleish: Had the circumstances been the reverse, had prices fallen, do you think Government would have had any claim for compensation from Mr. Jones? No.
459. If they had claimed it could they have obtained it in any way? He took it at prices below which there could not be any fall.
460. He used his own discretion? Yes.
461. Is it usual for contractors to claim compensation for any loss after having sent in tenders which have been open to public competition? We never did, and I have never known it done.
462. By the Chairman: Having a knowledge of mail carrying for seventeen years, have you ever known a season when so many and such unforeseen casualties have overtaken a mail contractor? No.
463. By Mr. Cunneen: Have you ever known a case in which it has arisen that Government have promised that in the event of the contract being carried out they would compensate for any loss? No.
464. If the Government had promised compensation to you when you were a contractor would you have expected them to have kept faith? Yes. In Melbourne they promised if it were a bad season they would allow us some compensation, and we got £300 or £400 for its being a bad season.

Mr. Patrick Ryan called in and examined:—

- Mr. P. Ryan.
15 Mar., 1861.
465. By the Chairman: In 1851 you were in business on the Southern Road? Yes, on the southern line beyond Yass, at a place called Bogalong.
466. This Committee has been appointed to inquire into the petition of Mrs. Mary Jones, the widow of the late Joseph Henry Jones, mail contractor, praying compensation for losses said to have been sustained by him in carrying out a contract in the year 1851,—have you the opportunity of knowing the circumstances of that contract? I know very little about it.
467. Have you any recollection of the prices of hay and corn along the Southern Road from Yass? That very year, 1851, was the only one in which I bought hay.
468. What price did you pay for it? £27 a ton.
469. Was that very much in advance of the prices previously paid? Yes; in fact, I never bought any before, but it was a great deal in advance of any I had known to be bought previous to that.
470. By Mr. Mate: Are you aware of the prices of hay and corn in 1851 between Tarcutta and Melbourne? No.

Mr. James Grosvenor called in and examined:—

- Mr. James Grosvenor.
15 Mar., 1861.
471. By the Chairman: You reside in Goulburn, I believe? In Yass.
472. This Committee has been appointed to inquire into the petition of Mrs. Mary Jones in reference to a mail contract carried out by her late husband, Mr. Joseph Henry Jones, during the year 1851, do you know anything in reference to that? I know it was a very scarce year for I was sending some up to Albury that year.
473. What do you mean by a scarce year? A scarce year for feed, for hay and corn.
474. By Mr. Hart: Do you know anything of the contract itself? All I know is that forage rose to an enormous height by fire and drought.
475. By Mr. Lewis: Do you know whether Mr. Jones had a contract that year? I believe he had to the best of my knowledge.
476. By Mr. Hart: Are you a mail contractor? I am not.
477. Have you ever had any contracts? I have had horses staying with me for a year. When Mr. Middleton had the contract, the year following Mr. Jones, I often had his horses with me.
478. By Mr. Mate: Do you recollect about the value of horses in 1851, such horses as they would buy to run these mail carts? Horses ran up to £30 or £35. I know I bought some of Mr. Barber, on the Ovens. Corn, oats, and hay ran up very high. Hay was a very scarce thing from Yass to Albury. Very few used to grow it.
479. By Mr. Hart: Was it necessary that horses carrying the mail should be fed upon hay? Yes, they have plenty of work to do, and they would be of very little use without hay and corn.
480. Are there not any paddocks on the road to turn them into? Yes, there are paddocks but it is bad usage to turn a mail horse into a paddock.
481. By the Chairman: Suppose they had not hay would they be of much use for mail and passenger carrying? They would not. The gold breaking out that year made everything so dear.
482. By Mr. Morrice: You did not hear of Mr. Jones getting any promise from Government? I am not aware of anything of that kind.

Colonial Secretary's Office,
Auckland, 26 December, 1859.

Sir,

I have the honor, by the direction of Mr. Stafford, to acknowledge the receipt of your letter to His Excellency the Governor, of the 6th July last, with its enclosures, on the subject of the proposed Telegraphic Communication between England and Australia via India.

In reply, I am to inform you that the Government of New Zealand regards the projected establishment of such communication favorably, and would be prepared to propose a contribution on the part part of that Colony to such a work, it being borne in mind that the amount of liability to devolve on that account on New Zealand would be governed by the circumstance, whether or not the Telegraphic Line were carried to its coasts. In the latter case, although the Colony would undoubtedly benefit if the line terminated at Sydney, its contribution could not be so large as it might be fairly required to be in the former case.

The mode of determining the respective contributions is a question for the consideration of the Governments concerned, and this Government cannot finally decide in the matter until the details of your scheme are fully known, especially as it is understood that some alterations of your original proposition are contemplated.

No. 3.

F. GISBORNE, ESQ., to COLONIAL SECRETARY.

Sydney, 6 February, 1860.

SIR,

The Legislative Assembly having, on your motion, passed certain Resolutions, authorizing the Government to subsidise a Telegraphic Line to East Java, I will state for your information the further steps I am about to take to realize the undertaking I have had the honor to submit to the several Governments of Australia.

The Resolutions just passed are based upon the assumption, that a subsidy not exceeding £35,000 per annum will be required to enable the necessary capital to be raised in England, and empower the Government to pledge this Colony to contribute £9,625 per annum, or 27½ per cent. of the total amount.

The first condition annexed to any grant by the Government of this Colony is, that the Government of Victoria shall make arrangements with the Company for the residue over and above the annual subsidy of this Colony, necessary for the carrying out of the work.

The obligation, therefore, to obtain the contribution required from the Colony of Victoria would appear to be thrown upon the promoters of the line.

I, therefore, purpose leaving immediately for Melbourne.

I would further direct your attention to the third condition, which provides that the whole work shall be completed in three years from the 2nd instant.

As the line may take as long as two years in constructing, one year is left to the promoters to complete their negotiations with Victoria, to raise the capital, and to let the contract in England.

Much can be done with respect to raising the capital and letting the contract, even before the conclusion of any negotiation with Victoria; much time will thus be gained, and the period within which this great project may be realized materially shortened.

I trust, therefore, that you will put me in a position to state to the promoters, by the next mail, that, on the Government of Victoria making the arrangements alluded to in the first condition, the Government of New South Wales will be prepared to enter into an arrangement with them on the basis of the Resolutions.

I have had the honor of communicating to you a letter addressed to me; dated London, 16th November, 1859, and signed by the principal promoters of the line, undertaking to use their best efforts to carry it out upon the terms which may be agreed upon between me and the Australian Governments. An intimation from you like that I have asked for will place the promoters in the position at once to set about fulfilling their promise. I would also observe, that I have been six months in Sydney conducting this negotiation without having, as yet, received any answer from the Government.

I have, &c.,

No. 58.—On motion of Mr. Forster, Thursday, 2nd February, 1860. Votes, No. 54.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.

To His Excellency Sir William Thomas Denison, Knight Commander of the Most Honorable Order of the Bath, Governor General in and over all Her Majesty's Colonies of New South Wales, Tasmania, Victoria, South Australia, and Western Australia, and Captain General and Governor-in-Chief of the Territory of New South Wales and its Dependencies, and Vice-Admiral of the same.

May it please your Excellency:—

We, Her Majesty's loyal and dutiful subjects, the Members of the Legislative Assembly of New South Wales, in Parliament assembled, beg to communicate to your Excellency the following Resolutions, adopted to-day by this House:—

1. "That this House is of opinion that the Government of this Colony should be authorized to grant a subsidy not exceeding £9,025 per annum, for a term not exceeding twenty-one years, to any Company, of the stability of which satisfactory assurance shall be given, to induce such Company to construct and maintain a Telegraphic Line from this Colony to East Java, upon the following conditions, that is to say:—
 - (1.) "That the Government of Victoria shall make arrangements with such Company, by subsidy or otherwise, for the residue over and above the annual subsidy of this Colony, necessary for the carrying out of the work.
 - (2.) "That the period, within which the first call of the subscribed capital of the Company shall be made, shall be limited to twelve calendar months, from the date of the concurrence of the Colony of Victoria in the preceding condition.
 - (3.) "That the whole work shall be completed, and in effective operation, within three years from the present date—subject, however, to such extension of the time, to meet possible contingencies, as may hereafter be agreed upon.
 - (4.) "That the proposed subsidy shall be proportionally payable on the capital of the Company as paid up.
 - (5.) "That the payment of the said subsidy shall be conditional on the maintenance of the line in effective working order, and that no payment shall be made until the line is completed.
 - (6.) "That no tariff of charges shall be established without the concurrence of this Colony.
 - (7.) "That, in the event of the net profits of the Company exceeding in any year the rate of ten per cent. per annum, such excess shall be ratably applied to reduce the respective contributions of this Colony and of Victoria."
2. "That steps be taken without delay to communicate with, and settle the proportionate contributions of, the other Colonies, in aid of the respective contributions of New South Wales and Victoria."

Speaker.

No. 5.

F. GISBORNE, ESQ., to COLONIAL SECRETARY.

Sydney, 9 February, 1860.

SIR,

Referring to your letter to me of the 8th instant, and to the enclosed Resolutions, I would beg to be informed upon one material point, which is not accurately determined, namely:—From what point on the northern boundary of this Colony it is the desire of the Government that the land line shall commence, connecting the Telegraph System of New South Wales with the proposed submarine line from Moreton Bay to East Java.

As this land line will involve additional expense on the Company, outside the estimated outlay of £720,000 for the submarine line, which outlay formed the basis for the calculation of the subsidy, I trust the nearest practicable point of the frontier to Moreton Bay will be selected.

I would, however, urge upon you, sir, to spare the Company any additional expense, and the difficulties that may possibly attend the management of a land line by an English Company, and, if possible, to rest satisfied with what will notoriously soon be done, namely, the construction by the Government of Queensland of a Telegraph Line from Brisbane to meet the New South Wales Line now in course of construction towards the Queensland frontier.

If

If New South Wales sets the example of insisting upon having a Telegraph Line to Java, independent of any Colonial management, the other Southern Colonies may insist upon the same thing, and thus stifle the undertaking; besides, that principle cannot be carried out beyond Java.

A separate wire for through messages to and from Java, commencing at Moreton Bay and terminating at Adelaide, will probably answer all purposes.

I have, &c.,
F. GISBORNE.

2. You will observe that the Resolutions make it a condition that the concurrence of the Colony of Victoria to such an extent as may be necessary for carrying out the proposed work, shall be obtained, and I have accordingly to request that you will be good enough to inform this Government of any arrangements which may be made in consequence by the Government of Victoria.

3. The Resolutions have been communicated by me to the Governments of New Zealand and Queensland, with a view to ascertain their willingness to co-operate in the proposal.

THE UNDER SECRETARY to F. GISBORNE, ESQ.

*Colonial Secretary's Office,
Sydney, 10 February, 1860.*

SIR,

I am directed by the Colonial Secretary to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of yesterday's date, requesting information as to the point on the northern boundary of this Colony at which the land line to connect the Telegraphic System of New South Wales with the proposed submarine line to East Java is to commence, and to inform you, that in the event of this Government consenting to the commencement of the submarine line at Brisbane, it would be essential that the Government of Queensland, or the contracting Company, should guarantee the continuance of the overland line from the frontier of this Colony to Brisbane.

I have, &c.,
W. FLYARD.

No. 10.

F. W. GISBORNE, ESQ., to GOVERNOR GENERAL.

Sydney, 10 February, 1860.

SIR,

A difficulty of great moment has arisen in the effective prosecution of the proposed Submarine Telegraph from Moreton Bay to East Java, in consequence of the form in which the first Resolution, subsidising the undertaking, was ultimately passed by the Legislative Assembly.

The first Resolution states that the subsidy shall be granted "to induce such Company to construct and maintain a Telegraphic Line from this Colony to East Java."

This leaves the terminus of the submarine portion of the line undetermined.

The Government have informed me that they have not determined that point, but in case they fix upon Moreton Bay, they have it in their option either to stipulate that the Company shall connect the submarine line with the New South Wales northern frontier by a land line, or to see that the Government of Queensland do so.

This position of the question assumes great importance and significance, when it is borne in mind that in this Colony there are many who desire that the submarine portion of the line shall terminate at Shoal Bay; that in Queensland many desire to see it terminate at Broad Sound, or rather Gulf Carpentaria, or even Port Essington; and that in South Australia there is a strong desire to see it terminate at Cambridge Gulf.

The advocates of these several termini of course desire to have the submarine line continued overland to New South Wales, or, in the case of Cambridge Gulf, to South Australia.

It is contended, in each case, that the overland line will be cheaper than the submarine cable; but it is admitted that one main object is to get police stations established, say every 30 miles, to protect the line, and at the same time to form nuclei for population to settle about.

Thus several hundred thousands of pounds will be spent in exploring and settling unknown and waste country.

Your

Your Excellency is so thoroughly acquainted with the objects of this movement for an overland line, and with its effect on the question of an immediate establishment of Telegraphic Communication with England, that I will only indicate the position of the question so as to make myself understood.

Unless the terminus of the submarine line is now and at once settled, it will be hopeless to conclude the negotiation with Victoria during the present Session, or to complete the line within the three years provided for in the Resolutions.

Moreton Bay was fixed upon because, up to that point, land lines are as good as provided for.

If Broad Sound be fixed upon, the intermediate land line will have to be paid for by Queensland, and your Excellency will easily judge whether that Colony will be in a position to do so within the next two years.

To any more northerly terminus the same objection applies, besides the extreme difficulty, if not impossibility, of executing or maintaining the line.

As regards Shoal Bay, which will increase the length of the submarine line, I wish to observe, that the subsidy was carefully calculated to provide for a line only as far as Moreton Bay, and that it is perfectly unnecessary to extend it south of that point, as land lines are in course of construction towards it.

If each Colony is to stipulate that the Telegraph shall be brought to its door, and existing lines through other Colonies made no use of, vastly increased and unnecessary expense will be incurred, and the Colonies not accommodated by the extension will refuse to contribute to it.

I would further earnestly ask your Excellency to consider, whether an English Company will not meet with great difficulty in managing a long land line in this country?

I believe all the lines of Telegraph are in the hands of Government.

Many causes of delay and intricacy in this great question will be avoided, if a few points, which I believe are essential at present, be constantly borne in mind; for instance, to leave to the Company the submarine portion, and to Queensland the land portion of the line; to bring the submarine line to the point up to which a land line can without dispute be completed by Queensland within the next two years; and not to ignore the existence of land lines by bringing the submarine cable south of any point they are likely to reach.

I think, sir, under all the circumstances, it is not an unreasonable request on my part to ask the Government to come to an immediate decision upon the point at which the submarine line shall terminate. This question has been actively discussed in every Colony for the last seven months, and the Resolutions just passed will be rendered inoperative, unless an immediate decision be come to.

I will ask your Excellency's good offices for the solution of this preliminary question. The decision of this Colony will, I believe, be acquiesced in by the other Colonies.

I have, &c.,

F. GISBORNE.

No. 11.

F. GISBORNE, ESQ., to COLONIAL SECRETARY.

Sydney, 10 February, 1860.

SIR,

I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of this day. You inform me that the Government have not yet determined that Moreton Bay, near Brisbane, shall be the starting point of the proposed Submarine Line of Telegraph to Java.

I feel it my duty to point out to you, that no action can possibly be taken, either by the promoters in England, or by me with the Victorian Government, to obtain that co-operation which the Resolutions cast upon us to obtain, until the important question as to which shall be the terminus of the submarine portion of the line is settled.

You are well aware, sir, that Shoal Bay, Moreton Bay, Broad Sound, Gulf Carpentaria, Port Essington, and Cambridge Gulf, have all their strenuous advocates as proper termini for the submarine portion of the line.

You will, I trust, also bear in mind, that three years is the time limited for concluding all the negotiations and completing the line. The Parliamentary Session at Melbourne is not expected to last much longer, and if my negotiation is not concluded there during the present Session, I do not see the least likelihood of the time provided for in the Resolutions being kept to. Indeed, undue delay always throws discredit upon such undertakings and discourages the promoters.

Moreton Bay is selected, because land lines actually determined upon are in progress to that point. But I do not now intend to enter upon a comparison of the different proposed termini, but merely to state that, in the opinion of the promoters, Moreton Bay is the most convenient point, to urge upon you to adopt it, and at any rate to communicate to me your decision at your earliest convenience.

I would again urge upon you that difficulties may attend the management of a long land line by an English Company.

No estimate can be formed of the outlay, or of the amount of financial assistance to be asked of Victoria, until the length of the submarine line, and, if the Company is to undertake it, of the land portion of the line, is determined upon.

2. The Colonial Secretary desires me to state in reply, that the Government of this Colony are willing that the line should be understood to commence at Brisbane, simply as the basis of calculation for a future contract with an approved Company, provided the continuance of the overland line from the frontier of New South Wales to that place is guaranteed.

SIR,

I have had the honor to receive, and to submit to His Excellency the Governor, in Council, your letter of the 10th instant, transmitting a copy of Resolutions passed by the Legislative Assembly of New South Wales, with reference to a proposal that a subsidy should be granted for the construction and maintenance of a line of Electric Telegraph to East Java, and apprising me of the communication which you had made upon the subject to Mr. F. Gisborne, by whom the proposal has been brought forward.

2. I have now the honor, by direction of His Excellency, and under the advice of the Executive Council, to inform you that the Government of this Colony will lend its willing co-operation in a project which promises results so important to the whole of the Australian Colonies, and that the earliest opportunity will be taken of bringing the subject under the favorable notice of the Legislature of Queensland.

3. It will, without doubt, be the most convenient arrangement to leave, as you propose, to your Government the details of such negotiations as may be necessary for completing the arrangement with any Company, of approved stability, to whom the undertaking may be committed; but I am to state, that the Government of Queensland, while availing themselves of your proposal on this head, must of course be understood as reserving to themselves the right of ratifying any arrangement which may be made before its conditions can be held to be binding upon this Colony.

4. I have here to state, that local information and experience in this Colony point to an overland line of Telegraph from Brisbane to the Gulf of Carpentaria, as the plan which would be the most practicable of any that have been suggested, while it would be attended with largely increased collateral advantages. This Government would much prefer the adoption of such a line; but I beg to be understood that this is meant as a suggestion, and not as essential to the concurrence of Queensland in any plan that may eventually be decided upon, and that will secure the objects which are common to all the Colonies of the Australian Group.

5. With reference to your further inquiry, as to whether the Government of Queensland, in the event of the construction of a submarine line commencing at Brisbane, would guarantee the continuance within the required time of the overland line from the northern frontier of New South Wales, I am to state, that the subject will be submitted for the favorable consideration of the Legislature. In the meantime, as it will, of course, be an object that the work while in progress should be under proper scientific supervision (which is not readily available here at present), and as it will be one not alone for the benefit of this Colony, I beg to inquire whether the Government of New South Wales would be prepared to undertake the construction of the line—it being, of course, understood that the expenditure will be defrayed by this Colony?

I have, &c.,

ROBERT G. N. HERBERT.

COLONIAL SECRETARY, VICTORIA, to COLONIAL SECRETARY, NEW SOUTH WALES.

*Victoria,
Chief Secretary's Office,
Melbourne, 29 February, 1860.*

SIR,

In reference to your Despatch of the 10th instant, I have the honor to state, that the whole subject of European and Australian Telegraphic Communication having been submitted by the Honorable the Postmaster General of Victoria to the Government, it has been decided, after mature deliberation, to be essential that accurate information should be obtained obtained as to the tariff of charges for the transmission of messages through the line of Telegraph proposed to be established.

It is therefore considered requisite that the Government should be supplied with the actual charges now levied for through messages at the stations already opened on the proposed route from Australia to Europe, the charges it is proposed to levy for similar messages over the lines in process of construction and over those contemplated, whether under the control of the British Government or Foreign powers, and also the proposed tariff for the transmission of messages over the submarine line from Moreton Bay to Java, and over the land line from Albury to Moreton Bay.

It is deemed absolutely necessary that it should be ascertained what will be the actual cost for the transmission of messages from Victoria to Great Britain, as upon that must rest the probability of any profit being derived from the undertaking, as well as of any adequate advantage resulting from the expenditure of so large an annual sum as it would appear this Colony is expected to contribute in the event of its being decided to adopt the scheme in question.

I have further to state, that it has been determined, in the event of the concurrence of the Government of this Colony being given to the scheme, the guarantee of the subsidy required from New South Wales and Victoria respectively should, in the first instance and throughout, be a joint and equal one, and that the actual payments of each should be in proportion to the use made of the Telegraph by each Colony.

I have, &c.,
WILLIAM NICHOLSON.

COLONIAL SECRETARY, NEW ZEALAND, to COLONIAL SECRETARY, NEW SOUTH WALES.

*New Zealand,
Colonial Secretary's Office,
Auckland, 19 March, 1860.*

SIR,

I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 10th ultimo, transmitting a copy of Resolutions passed by the Legislative Assembly of New South Wales, respecting a subsidy for the construction and maintenance of a Telegraphic Line to East Java, and inquiring whether the Government of New Zealand will co-operate in the way suggested, and, if so, whether it would be disposed to leave with the Government of New South Wales the details of such negotiations as may be necessary for completing the arrangements.

This Government fully recognizes the importance of the projected Telegraphic Communication between Europe and Australia, both as a means for the present of greatly accelerating communication between England and New Zealand, and especially as offering an almost certain guarantee, if successfully established, that complete Telegraphic Communication would at an early period be secured to this country.

The Government will accordingly submit the subject to the consideration of the Legislature, with a view to provision being made, in the meantime, for a contribution on the part of New Zealand towards any subsidy paid on account of the proposed communication, so long as it is maintained. The amount, however, which this Colony may be expected to contribute in the first instance, will manifestly be governed by the circumstance to which I have before referred, viz., whether the Telegraphic Line is carried to its coasts, or terminated in Australia. In the latter case, although the Colony would undoubtedly be benefited, its contribution cannot be so large as it might fairly be required to be in the former case.

I have every confidence that the Government of New South Wales will take all necessary precautions in negotiating the details of the project in question, which is especially a matter for its consideration.

I have, &c.,
E. W. STAFFORD.

CHIEF SECRETARY, VICTORIA, to COLONIAL SECRETARY, NEW SOUTH WALES.

*Victoria,
Chief Secretary's Office,
Melbourne, June, 1860.*

SIR,

I have the honor to bring under your notice the enclosed copy of an Address from the Legislative Assembly of Victoria to His Excellency Sir Henry Barkly, submitting certain Resolutions of the House on the subject of the establishment of Telegraphic Communication with India and Europe, and I am to invite the concurrence of the Government of New South Wales in the views expressed therein.

One or two points in these Resolutions may seem to require some explanation. In the first place, as regards the lowest tender, which it is affirmed should be accepted—what is intended to be conveyed is, the lowest which shall be satisfactory to the Electricians who may be appointed to consider the tenders; and with reference to the limit of Thirteen thousand pounds, fixed for the liability of this Colony, I would observe, it is intended to cover the liabilities of the Colonies of Tasmania, South Australia, Western Australia, and Queensland, upon the basis of the proportions contributed to the postal subsidy, and in the event of such proportions being subscribed by the Colonies enumerated, such contributions are to be applied in reduction of the liability of Victoria as one of the chief contracting parties.

Should any of the matters referred to in these Resolutions not meet the concurrence of your Government, I have to request that you will be good enough to communicate its views upon the subsidy generally as early as convenient, as it is desirable they should be known prior to the Resolutions being forwarded to the Home Government.

I have, &c.,
WILLIAM NICHOLSON.

[Enclosure in No. 16.]

To His Excellency Sir Henry Barkly, Knight Commander of the Most Honorable Order of the Bath, Captain General and Governor-in-Chief of the Colony of Victoria, and Vice-Admiral of the same, &c., &c., &c.

MAY IT PLEASE YOUR EXCELLENCY:—

We, Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Members of the Legislative Assembly of Victoria, in Parliament assembled, beg respectfully to forward to your Excellency the following Resolutions, agreed to by the Assembly:—

1. That in the opinion of this House it is desirable that Telegraphic Communication should be established with India and Europe.
2. That the Government of this Colony be authorized to grant a conjunction with the Imperial Government, and with all or any of the Australian Colonies, an annual subsidy, not exceeding in the whole £35,000, for a term not exceeding twenty-one years, to any Company, of whose stability satisfactory assurance shall be given, to induce such Company to construct and maintain a Line of Telegraph which shall connect this Colony with any portion of the Indian and European Telegraph Lines at present in working, or that may hereafter be constructed, upon the following conditions:—
 1. That such Company shall, within two years after a contract has been entered into, construct such Line of Telegraph, unless prevented by war or the dangers or accidents of the seas, and afterwards maintain it in working order at its own expense.
 2. That the proposed subsidy shall be proportionately payable on the capital of the Company actually paid up and expended, and shall not exceed five per cent on such capital. And the contract for the manufacture and laying of the cable shall be open to public tender, and the lowest tender accepted, the satisfactory nature of which competent Electricians in England shall determine.
 3. That no payment of such subsidy shall be made until the Line of Telegraph to be constructed has been in working order for three consecutive months, and such payments shall be made ratably only for the period during which the line so constructed is open for the transmission of messages.
 4. If such line shall be closed, unless by reason of war, or shall not be in a state of efficiency for the transmission of messages for any eighteen consecutive months, then the contract with such Company shall be void.
 5. That a tariff of charges for the transmission of messages over such line shall be agreed to by the several contracting Governments and the Company before any contract is entered into, and such tariff shall not afterwards be altered without the concurrence of such Governments.
 6. That in the event of the net profits of the Company exceeding in any year the rate of ten per cent. per annum, inclusive of the subsidy, such excess shall be ratably applied to reduce the respective contributions of the contracting Governments.
3. That the proportion of the entire annual subsidy to be granted as the contribution of this Colony shall not exceed the sum of £13,000 in any one year.
4. That in any agreement which may be entered into with any other Colony for the purpose of making up the amount of subsidy required, it shall be an express stipulation that the actual annual payments of such Colony, and of this Colony, shall be in proportion to the value of the messages transmitted by each along the line in every year.
5. That upon the completion of the preliminary arrangements for a contract in terms of the foregoing Resolutions, a Bill be brought in for the purpose of authorizing the annual expenditure required.
6. That these Resolutions shall be in force only for two years, and shall be forthwith published in the United Kingdom.

Speaker.

No. 17.

F. GISBORNE, ESQUIRE, to GOVERNOR GENERAL.

17 June, 1860,
Melbourne.

SIR,

I have the honor to enclose the Resolutions passed by the Legislative Assembly of Victoria, granting a subsidy towards the establishment of Telegraphic Communication with England.

The first condition annexed to the corresponding Resolutions of New South Wales was, that the Government of Victoria should grant the residue of the subsidy required for the undertaking over the amount voted by New South Wales.

The Legislature of Victoria having, however, decided that the Home Government should be asked to contribute, a smaller amount was voted here than would otherwise have been the case.

The basis upon which both sets of Resolutions proceed is, that £35,000 a year will be required to enable the necessary capital to be raised in England. Of that amount New South Wales has granted 27½ per cent., or £9,625; Victoria, £13,000; Tasmania has promised a contribution contribution which I understood is likely to amount to £4,000 a year. These different sums leave a deficit of £8,375 to be provided for.

In case, however, the Home Government contribute, the basis of the New South Wales Resolutions would in strictness reduce the amount named in them to $27\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. of the whole subsidy, less the amount contributed by the Home Government; but I trust this will not be insisted on, even should the case arise. Moreover, the contribution of New South Wales covers the shares of Queensland and New Zealand, that of Victoria only represents her own share.

The deficit of £8,375 must be ultimately provided for by South Australia and the Home Government, which has not yet been applied to.

Should, however, a mutual understanding be come to at once by all the Colonies to provide amongst themselves the whole subsidy, leaving the actual payments of each to be determined in every year by the value or number of its messages, one or two Colonies might then safely undertake the contract with the Company for the entire amount.

In that case the contracting Colonies would have to appoint agents in London to put themselves into communication with an approved Company. Each side would appoint engineers to decide upon the class of cable, tenders would then be called for, and the whole outlay and capital being thus fixed, the agents should have power to enter into a provisional agreement, undertaking to give the Company a certain subsidy on certain conditions, if by a day named the whole amount of capital was subscribed for, and a certain per centage of it paid up.

Such was the course adopted by the Imperial Government in the case of the Red Sea and Indian Line.

I can see no necessity for delay, considering the small amount still unprovided for, if the machinery of an Intercolonial agreement be adopted at once.

Now that all the lines between Java and England are either completed or in rapid progress, and Telegraphic Communication is brought within 1,000 miles of the northern coast of Australia, I trust no delay will take place in extending them to the Colonies.

I have, &c.,

F. GISBORNE.

SIR,

Reverting to the concluding paragraph of Mr. Herbert's letter to the Honorable the Colonial Secretary, of the 17th February last, in which he stated that the subject of the continuance of the Electric Telegraph from the northern frontier of New South Wales would be submitted for the favorable consideration of the Legislature of this Colony, I am now directed to state, for the information of your Government, that the necessary provision has now been made for the construction of a Line of Telegraph from Brisbane to the boundary of this Colony, and that the work will be entered upon without loss of time.

I am therefore to request that you will be good enough to move Mr. Cowper to cause a reply to be made to Mr. Herbert's inquiry, as to whether the Government of New South Wales would be prepared to undertake supervision of the construction of the line, it being understood that the expenditure will be defrayed by this Colony.

SIR,

With reference to previous correspondence on the subject of the establishment of Telegraphic Communication between Europe and Australia, and more especially with regard to Mr. F. Gisborne's recent mission to Australia as Agent for the Promoters of a scheme viâ Java and Moreton Bay, I have the honor to inform you that the Lords Commissioners of the Treasury have intimated to me their inability to co-operate with the Governments of Australia to establish the proposed communication.

Their Lordships further stated that, as the chance of such an undertaking being successfully carried out was at present so uncertain, they would not feel themselves justified in applying to Parliament to add to the various liabilities which Her Majesty's Government have already incurred in respect of lines of Telegraph which, it was supposed, could easily be established, but which have, as yet, resulted only in failures, owing to the unforeseen difficulties which have attended the maintenance and laying of submarine cables.

PROPOSED EXTENSION OF GREAT NORTHERN RAILWAY.
(FROM MAITLAND TO MORPETH.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be Printed, 18 January, 1861.

To the Honorable the Legislative Assembly of New South Wales, in Parliament assembled.
The Memorial of the undersigned Inhabitants of East Maitland and its vicinity,—

HUMBLY SHEWETH:—

That your Memorialists observe a Petition has been presented to your Honorable House, praying your favorable consideration of a proposal for extending a branch of the Great Northern Railway to the Town of Morpeth.

That your Memorialists believe surveys have been made, and that one, extending from the Government Wharf, Morpeth, to the Station at East Maitland, was proposed to be adopted, but that since a deviation has been made, and the line made to avoid the township of East Maitland, notwithstanding the deviation is estimated at a cost of upwards of three thousand pounds beyond the cost of the proper line.

That many of your Petitioners signed the said Petition on the faith of the survey, and they deprecate the use of their Petition to support any deviation from the plan on faith of which their signatures were obtained.

That your Memorialists deem it right to apprise your Honorable House that they entertain very great doubts whether the proposed line will be advantageous, for the following reasons:—

- 1st. The proposed terminus at Morpeth, near the Government Wharf, is subject to flood, and is contiguous to the wharf of the Australian Steam Navigation Company, which has been abandoned by the Company since the floods of 1857, at which period there was from nine to twelve feet water over the spot.
- 2nd. The proposed terminus is about a mile from the wharves, and as the only gain to the Government will be the carriage of goods brought by the steamers, the double carriage by drays will militate much against the success of the undertaking. It would be very inconvenient to cart goods for one mile to the Morpeth Station, and then, after carriage by train of about two or three miles, to re-cart the goods from the line to the merchants' stores.
- 3rd. That, unless the line be taken to a spot where tramroads may be laid down to the steamer's wharf, no remunerative return for the outlay will come to the Government if the present proposed line and terminus be adopted; this will be found out when too late, for there cannot possibly be any continuation of the present proposed line without taking the river frontages from many proprietors (some of whom promoters of this plan), and building the line for the most part on piers, and such work would be ruinously costly.
- 4th. That the line from the proposed Morpeth Station towards Maitland is mostly far under flood level, and the attempted deviation crosses the flood course by a viaduct, alone estimated at £3,000, and joins the line at Pitnacree; whereas by keeping on the high road to the present station, the flood course would not be crossed, and liability to damage by flood and the cost of the viaduct would be avoided. Moreover, this line runs parallel and close adjoining to the high road, whereby frequent accidents would probably be occasioned; and passing, as it does, through the lands of numerous proprietors, many crossings will be required.
- 5th. That your Memorialists respectfully submit whatever line is eventually adopted, it should be so connected with the Great Northern Line as to make the present station at East Maitland available, and that the Town of East Maitland should not be passed by.

2 PROPOSED EXTENSION OF GREAT NORTHERN RAILWAY—PETITION.

6th. That your Memorialists believe your Honorable House should not hastily adopt the proposed plan, but should, by Committee, ascertain the best and most economical route, as your Memorialists are of opinion a line which has not, they believe, been surveyed, would prove to be the most desirable. Such line should commence near the river, contiguous to the wharves of the two Companies, and should proceed along the margin of the low land (all bush land) joining the Great Northern Line on or near the Town Reserve. This line would not pass over any private lands (excepting that of Mr. Close, who, it is understood, will make no claim for compensation), and would insure all the coal traffic, which, both for the steamers and for export, is very considerable; the East Maitland coal mines being celebrated for the extent of the field and quality of coal, the steamers at Morpeth having been supplied from this source for fifteen years. Moreover, it would commence from or near the river by the Company's Wharves, trams could be laid down by the Companies and by all other proprietors if they pleased; but it would then be a private and personal work for the improvement of their property, and not a work forced on the Government by necessity. This line, your Petitioners believe, would be shorter, far less expensive, and far more remunerative than the contemplated line.

7th. The promoters of the present plans have, we believe, in the date forwarded to the Government, based all their computations of probable profit on the proceeds of the carriage of the goods brought by the steamers, and we would warn your Honorable House that this profit must fail unless the line is taken near the wharves and stores of the Companies.

Your Memorialists, therefore, humbly pray that your Honorable House will take into consideration the matters referred to, and will, before any sums be voted for a branch railway to Morpeth, cause a survey to be made of the route before mentioned, and will cause special inquiry to be made whether any line will be remunerative unless it be made closely to approach the wharves of the Steam Companies, and will take such other action in the premises as to your Honorable House may seem meet.

And your Petitioners, as in duty bound, will ever pray, &c.

[Here follow 498 Signatures.]

HENRY WILLIAM DUDLEY.

(PETITION.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be Printed, 12 February, 1861.

To the Honorable the Members of the Legislative Assembly, in Parliament assembled.

The humble Petition of Henry William Dudley, of the Refreshment Room, Sydney Railway Station,—

SHEWETH :—

That your Petitioner considering himself, under the circumstances hereinafter stated, to have been unfairly and oppressively dealt with, is advised that he can obtain no redress otherwise than by Petition to your Honorable House.

That, on or about the first day of November, one thousand eight hundred and fifty-five, your Petitioner applied to the then Manager of the Great Southern Railway, Mr. Terry, to rent a room at the Sydney Terminus, as a Refreshment Room.

That, after waiting on Mr. Terry nearly every day for three months, your Petitioner, finding the summer season passing away, and being unable to obtain a reply, applied to the then Commissioners of Railways on the subject.

That the said Commissioners approved of the application, and agreed to rent to your Petitioner the room now occupied by him at the Sydney Station for three months certain, at the rent of two pounds per week; your Petitioner to fit up the said room with his own fixtures at his own expense, and at the expiration of that three months to become a tenant thereof from year to year, with a promise that your Petitioner was not to be turned out in favor of any person whomsoever, so long as the said room and the business thereof should be conducted in a respectable manner; and it was part of the contract that your Petitioner's wife was to act as female searcher in case of necessity, or to attend on any female in case of sickness at the Station.

That the terms on which the holding was arranged will be found in your Petitioner's letter to the said Commissioners, dated in February, 1856, and that on the first day of March, one thousand eight hundred and fifty-six, your Petitioner entered into occupation of the said room in pursuance of that letter, and on the terms therein stated.

That your Petitioner found the accommodation of the room insufficient to meet the requirements of the public, especially as no fire-stove was allowed on the Railway premises, and the public wanted hot tea and coffee, and your Petitioner consequently applied for and obtained permission from the said Commissioners to erect a tent on the waste ground belonging to the Station, and the rent paid by your Petitioner was then fixed at six pounds ten shillings per month.

That in March, one thousand eight hundred and fifty-seven, the said tent having been blown down, and on two occasions narrowly escaped destruction by sparks from the engines, your Petitioner obtained permission to erect an iron house, quite as much for the convenience of the public as of your Petitioner, at a ground rent of sixteen shillings and eight-pence per month, until the Commissioners should require the ground for Railway purposes; and the then engineer, Mr. Brady, pointed out the exact site of such building to your Petitioner, being a portion of ground near the Chippondale Gate, not likely to be required for Railway purposes for many years; and Captain Mann, then one of the said Commissioners, promised your Petitioner that the Refreshment Room should be fresh papered and painted before the ensuing spring, and gave orders to that effect to the said Mr. Brady in your Petitioner's presence; but although in the ensuing September a storm so much damaged the Station, especially over the Refreshment Room, that your Petitioner's property was continually injured by rain, no steps were taken to perform this promise, or to repair these damages, in spite of your Petitioner's remonstrances, and to his great loss and injury.

That, shortly after this, Captain Martindale became the virtual Manager of the Railway, and in October, one thousand eight hundred and fifty-seven, an advertisement appeared calling for Tenders for renting the Refreshment Room, although your Petitioner held the same as a tenant from year to year, and had received no notice to quit, whether sufficient or insufficient.

That your Petitioner had expended about one hundred and fifty pounds in manner aforesaid on the premises, and accordingly had two interviews with Captain Martindale on the subject, and afterwards with Mr. Rae, to whom the said Captain Martindale referred me, giving them notice of your Petitioner's position, and claiming his rights, and protesting against the injustice contemplated. These remonstrances were of no avail, and in December, one thousand eight hundred and fifty-seven, your Petitioner received notice to quit, on the first January, one thousand eight hundred and fifty-eight, then next ensuing, to a person of the name of Gale, who was not even willing, in case of your Petitioner's abandoning his rights, to purchase your Petitioner's stock and fixtures at a fair or at any valuation, and your Petitioner refused to give up possession.

That, during the first fortnight of January, one thousand eight hundred and fifty-eight, your Petitioner was exposed to all sorts of threats and annoyances from the Railway authorities, trying to make your Petitioner give up possession. On the fourteenth of that month, the Commissioners sent for your Petitioner and admitted his right to remain until legal notice could be given, but stated that they wanted to commence fresh plans from the new year, that the threats and annoyances aforesaid were not with the Commissioners' sanction, and held out that the traffic would largely increase with the extension to Campbelltown; and, in fact, induced your Petitioner to consent to pay the rent offered by Gale, namely, one hundred and twenty pounds per annum, allowing out of it ten pounds per annum for the services of your Petitioner's wife in attending to the Ladies' Waiting Room. That agreement is dated thirteenth January, one thousand eight hundred and fifty-eight, for one year certain, at one hundred and ten pounds per annum, and Mrs. Dudley's services as aforesaid, considered equivalent to ten pounds more, and ten pounds eight shillings per annum ground rent for the ground held by your Petitioner. But in making to your Petitioner the statements that induced your Petitioner to consent to this arrangement, the said Commissioners concealed from your Petitioner the intended heavy increase of fares, which, if your Petitioner had known, he would never have consented thereto, and which has in fact so diminished the traffic as to prove in the highest degree injurious to your Petitioner, inasmuch that your Petitioner's receipts for the twelve months following that increase was less than for twelve months before by the sum of one hundred and seventy-eight pounds five shillings and two-pence, although in the latter period an additional twelve miles of rail have been open to the public.

That, in not more than a month after this agreement was signed, the said Commissioners actually leased the same ground, for which your Petitioner was and is paying ground rent, to Messrs. Scott and Jolly, for a timber yard, who are now, as well as your Petitioner, paying rent for the same, and allowed a six-foot fence to be put up within three feet of the said iron house, all round it, and one foot only in the top for air, until your Petitioner himself cut down another foot thereof.

That your Petitioner has made complaint on these points to the Commissioner, without redress, and has also applied for a reduction of rent, and to have the said Refreshment Room papered and painted, of which it stands much in need, nothing having been done to it since the said storm; to all which the reply given to your Petitioner is, that the Commissioner could not accede to my request.

That, moreover, since the extension to Campbelltown, the Gentlemen's Waiting Room has been converted into a Parcel Office, so that passengers waiting are obliged to wait in the room rented by your Petitioner, to which it is not fitted, and which is an inconvenience to your Petitioner and to his customers, and which ought not to be imposed upon your Petitioner, paying a rent for the said room four times greater than that paid by a stall-holder in the George-street Markets.

That, on the seventh day of December, one thousand eight hundred and fifty-eight, your Petitioner, at the request of a number of very influential gentlemen, and supported by a memorial of recommendation more numerous and respectably signed than anything of the kind ever done in Sydney, applied for a General License for the said Refreshment Room; and your Petitioner refers to the Memorial presented to His Excellency the Governor General and the Executive Council, on the fifth January, one thousand eight hundred and fifty-nine, for a Special License for the same purpose, as evidence of the extraordinary support afforded by the highest classes to this application, such Memorial being signed by Members of all the Legislative Bodies, by gentlemen of high station familiar with the management of such matters in England and on the Continent of Europe, by Magistrates, Ministers of Religion, and others, who had known your Petitioner for twenty years past and upwards.

That, on your Petitioner's said application, the said Mr. Rae appeared on behalf of the Commissioner, and took it upon him to inform the Bench that it would be of no use to grant your Petitioner a license, as your Petitioner should not rent the Refreshment Room after the end of the year; and a notice appeared, as before, calling for tenders to rent the Sydney Refreshment Room, but no such notice relative to the room at Parramatta until a day or two afterwards, when the Commissioners had seen, upon reflection, the position in which they had placed themselves; and, upon your Petitioner applying to the Commissioner to know whether, if the Refreshment Room were let to a third party, any arrangement was to be made about the building erected by your Petitioner, your Petitioner was told in reply that, in that case, your Petitioner must pull it down.

That

That your Petitioner applied for the ordinary Confectioner's License, on the twenty-second December, one thousand eight hundred and fifty-eight, when one of the Magistrates stated that it was no use to grant it, as the Commissioner would not let your Petitioner continue in the Refreshment Room after the end of the year.

That, in consequence, your Petitioner was compelled, though at a loss, to tender the same rent as before.

That it abundantly appears from the foregoing statement that the Commissioner now keeps your Petitioner in this position, that either he must pay an exorbitant rent, at a loss, or lose the benefit of his investment and connection, contrary to the understanding on which that investment was originally made; and your Petitioner will be obliged to abandon the said Refreshment Room, and to lose the benefit of such investment and connection, unless some redress be afforded to him, being unable to pay the present rent while the present rate of fares is maintained.

Your Petitioner, therefore, humbly prays, that your Petitioner's case may be so dealt with by your Honorable House, that the Commissioner of Railways may be instructed to grant to your Petitioner a lease for a term of years, at a reasonable rate, subject to your Petitioner's good management of the said Refreshment Room, or that such other redress may be afforded to your Petitioner as to your Honorable House may seem meet.

And your Petitioner shall ever pray, &c., &c., &c.

Dated this eighth day of October, in the } year of our Lord, one thousand eight } hundred and fifty-nine. }

(PETITION.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be Printed, 9 April, 1861.

To the Honorable the Members of the Legislative Assembly, in Parliament assembled.

The humble Petition of William Dixon, late timekeeper in the Locomotive Department of the Great Southern Railway,—

SHEWETH :—

That your Petitioner, considering himself, under the circumstances herein-after stated, to have been unfairly and oppressively dealt with, is advised that he can obtain no redress otherwise than by Petition to your Honorable House.

That your Petitioner held the situation of timekeeper for a period of four years up to the 3rd of September last past, on the morning of which day Mr. Thomas, the assistant engineer and locomotive superintendent, suspended your Petitioner, because your Petitioner was not there on the Sunday.

That your Petitioner was told by Mr. Thomas to take charge of the works, and look after the men until Mr. Scott came from Newcastle to take charge, as foreman, in place of Mr. Twiss, who had resigned.

That your Petitioner did take charge of the works on the 1st day of September last past, and looked after the same, and your Petitioner did not leave the works the whole day, it being the Champion Race Day; your Petitioner did see the last train, the 6-45, out to Parramatta, and, before the men left, your Petitioner gave one of the engine drivers (namely, John Cobb) orders to attend and shunt the last train in from Campbelltown, and also to attend and get her ready for the first train out on the Sunday morning; and your Petitioner also gave one of the engine fitters (namely, John Cahill) instructions to go on with and get No. 5 engine ready by Monday morning, so that she might go out with the ballast train, and, if anything occurred on the Sunday the 2nd of September as aforesaid, to let your Petitioner know immediately; but no information was given to your Petitioner of anything occurring until the evening, when your Petitioner heard that the fire bars of No. 8 had dropped, and that the train had been delayed about one hour and twenty minutes between Liverpool and Campbelltown, a thing your Petitioner had no control over; but Mr. Thomas thought as there had been an accident on the line on the 1st of September, and this happened on the 2nd, that it would be a good opportunity to suspend your Petitioner, as Mr. Thomas had got a friend and shipmate waiting for your Petitioner's situation, although your Petitioner had nothing to do with the matter; Mr. Thomas, being locomotive superintendent, ought to have taken the fault to himself, and not suspended your Petitioner as an excuse for not being there on the Sunday, your Petitioner being timekeeper and not locomotive foreman.

That your Petitioner called on Monday the 10th of September last past to see Mr. Thomas, and ask him if your Petitioner was still under suspension, and he told your Petitioner he was, and that he had sent a report respecting your Petitioner in to Captain Martindale, and that he had not received an answer; and as your Petitioner knew that Mr. Thomas was one of the captain's favourites, your Petitioner would be discharged, as Mr. Thomas had immediately after your Petitioner's suspension put his friend into your Petitioner's situation; and, as your Petitioner did not wish to be discharged, your Petitioner immediately sent in his resignation to Captain Martindale in a letter dated the 10th of September last past.

That your Petitioner called at the works on the 14th of September last past, being pay day; your Petitioner saw Mr. Thomas in the yard, and asked him whether there would be any pay that afternoon, and he would not answer your Petitioner, but walked on; and your Petitioner followed him up the stairs and asked him for a character, and he turned round upon your Petitioner and told your Petitioner that he would throw your Petitioner over the balusters if your Petitioner dared to follow him, which your Petitioner did not; for after such behaviour, and knowing Mr. Thomas' violent temper, your Petitioner returned down again.

That your Petitioner not having been able to get a settlement of wages which your Petitioner was entitled to up to his resignation, your Petitioner wrote to Captain Martindale respecting the same in a letter dated the 3rd day of October last past.

That your Petitioner called at the office of Minister for Works on the 22nd day of October last past, and saw Mr. Moody, the chief clerk, for your Petitioner's wages, but could not get them, but was to call again; and Mr. Moody told your Petitioner that Mr. Thomas only wanted to get rid of your Petitioner, and now he had done so, he would do anything for your Petitioner.

That your Petitioner wrote to Captain Martindale on the 29th day of October last past, to know if there would be any objection to your Petitioner being employed again in the Government service, and your Petitioner received a letter on the 30th, favourable to your Petitioner's application.

That your Petitioner having received the letter from Captain Martindale of the 30th of October last past, your Petitioner wrote to the Minister of Works (Mr. Arnold) requesting him to look into your Petitioner's case, and, if he thought your Petitioner worthy of such, either to reinstate your Petitioner in his old situation, or put your Petitioner into another, and which letter is dated the 17th of November last past.

That your Petitioner, not receiving any answer to the said letter of the 17th of November last past, your Petitioner waited upon Mr. Arnold at the Office of Works on the 28th day of November, and, as your Petitioner was explaining to him the general behaviour of Mr. Thomas towards your Petitioner, Captain Martindale entered the room, who, knowing your Petitioner, immediately pointed to some minute, and said that he had made that inquiry for his own information. Mr. Arnold did not seem to take much notice of it, but the captain forced it on Mr. Arnold's notice; so much so, that at last Mr. Arnold told your Petitioner that he could not then remove the timekeeper, as he was then in your Petitioner's place, and there was no fault against him. Your Petitioner told Mr. Arnold that he did not want him to remove the man, but to give your Petitioner another situation, if he pleased. Your Petitioner told Mr. Arnold that Mr. Whitton would give your Petitioner a character during the time he was under him, and your Petitioner immediately turned round to the captain, and asked him if there was any fault against your Petitioner during the time your Petitioner had been under him, or in his department, and he said certainly not—he never had any fault against your Petitioner; and your Petitioner also told Mr. Arnold that he had seen Mr. Whitton, and he had told your Petitioner that he had not then any vacancy, but that he would not forget your Petitioner; and Mr. Arnold replied, that, if Mr. Whitton had a situation to put your Petitioner into, he should not object to your Petitioner fulfilling it.

That your Petitioner waited for a considerable time (to wit) till the 21st day of January, 1861, and then waited upon Mr. Rae, the Commissioner, to put your Petitioner into some situation, if he then had a vacancy; but he told your Petitioner that he had not then any vacancy, but that your Petitioner was to write to him, and he should not then forget your Petitioner, who wrote a letter to Mr. Rae on the 24th day of January, 1861.

That your Petitioner, in answer to the above-mentioned letter, received a reply on the 5th day of February, 1861, from Mr. Rae, informing your Petitioner that his services would not be required by the Government.

That your Petitioner has written and made application for a situation under Government, but through Captain Martindale and Mr. Thomas, the locomotive superintendent, is prevented from being again employed, by the falsehoods that have been reported against the character of your Petitioner.

That your Petitioner humbly prays that your Petitioner's case may be so dealt with as your Honorable House may think fit, or that such redress may be afforded to your Petitioner as to your Honorable House may seem meet.

And your Petitioner shall ever pray, &c., &c., &c.

WILLIAM DIXON.

MINMI AND HEXHAM RAILWAY ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

REPORT.

THE SELECT COMMITTEE of the Legislative Assembly, for whose consideration and report was referred on the 12th February last, the "Minmi and Hexham Railway Act Amendment Bill," and to whom was also referred on the 13th February, "a Petition from Henry Burton Bradley, of Sydney, in the Colony of New South Wales, Solicitor, against the passing of the said Bill, so far as it may affect certain private interests therein set forth, and praying to be heard by himself, his Counsel, or Agent, against the said Bill,"—beg leave to report to your Honorable House:—

That they have examined the Solicitor for the Bill* and other Witnesses† named in the margin (whose respective evidence will be found appended hereto), and that the Preamble, as verbally amended,‡ having been proved to the satisfaction of your Committee, they considered the Clauses and the Schedule of the Bill, and deemed it expedient to introduce the new Clause and other Amendments shewn in the accompanying Schedule thereof.

* Mr. F. Burton.
† Mr. W. Cork, Mr. A. Brown, Mr. H. B. Bradley.
‡ Vide Schedule of Amendments.

New Clause 19. Vide page 8.

The Petitioner, Mr. H. B. Bradley, duly appeared before your Committee in support of his Petition, but the private interests confided to that gentleman have been since accommodated with those of the Promoters in respect of the lands proposed to be taken, by an amendment of Clause 4, securing a minimum amount of compensation, and particularly by an alteration in the Schedule to the Bill affecting two other lots of land, instead of four out of the five lots therein described; the lands so affected being contiguous to, and part of the same Estate with those originally applied for, and held by your Committee to be within the import of the notice formerly given by the parties.

And your Committee now beg to lay before your Honorable House, the Bill as amended by them.

HENRY PARKES,

Chairman.

*Legislative Assembly Chamber,
Sydney, 21 March, 1861.*

PROCEEDINGS OF THE COMMITTEE.

FRIDAY, 22 FEBRUARY, 1861.

MEMBERS PRESENT:—

Mr. Laycock, | Mr. Parkes,
Mr. J. T. Ryan.

H. Parkes, Esq., called to the Chair.

Printed copies of the Minmi and Hexham Railway Act Amendment Bill, before the Committee.

Original Petition from Henry Burton Bradley, of Sydney, in the Colony of New South Wales, Solicitor, against the passing of the said Bill, so far as it may affect certain private interests therein set forth, and praying to be heard by himself, his Counsel, or Agent, against the said Bill, referred to the Committee,—produced.

Parties called in:—

Solicitor for the Bill, Mr. E. Burton.Petitioner against the Bill, Mr. H. B. Bradley, Solicitor, as Agent and Attorney of Wm. Dougal Christie, Esq., absent from the Colony.Promoters, Minmi and Hexham Railway Company, by Mr. Alexander Brown.Surveyor to Company, Mr W. Cork.Petition against the Bill,—read,

When Mr. H. B. Bradley signified his appearance in support of the same.

Mr. E. Burton, Solicitor, then stated the course proposed to be pursued in proving the case for the Promoters.Solicitor produced Original Deed of Conveyance from Messrs. J. Eales and J. Christian (the Promoters of the Company's Act of 1854) to Messrs. J. and A. Brown, now constituting the Company applying for this Bill.

(Vide again, Mr. Burton's evidence.)

Mr. W. Cork, Surveyor, examined by Mr. Burton.

Witness produced two plans in reference to the site of land required by the Promoters.

The same handed in, and severally marked A and B.

Witness cross-examined by Mr. Bradley, Petitioner.

And, in cross-examination, a question having been put to witness relative to the estimated advantage derivable from the possession of the lands applied for,—

And the witness being unable to furnish the information, but undertaking to answer approximately if a future opportunity occurred,—

Mr. Bradley preferred a request to the Committee that his cross-examination might be allowed to proceed upon this point, at another sitting.

Request to be afterwards considered.

Cross-examination of the witness having been resumed, and Mr. Bradley inquiring whether the Promoters had not encroached upon the lands sought by this Bill,—

Solicitor for the Bill objected to the relevancy of the matter so introduced, referring same for decision.

The Chairman ruled that the matter of this interrogation not appearing in the Petition, the cross-examination should be confined to the grounds of opposition set forth therein.

Petitioner (Mr. Bradley) acquiesced, but explained the view under which the evidence about to have been elicited was relevant to the question at issue, and bound up with the objections stated in his Petition.

Witness cross-examined further, re-examined by Mr. Burton, and examined by the Committee.

Mr. E. Burton, Solicitor, examined.Witness (again) produced Deed above referred to.Mr. A. Brown, representing the Company, examined.

And the case for the Promoters closing,—

And Committee proceeding to deliberate upon the request of Mr. Bradley for permission to cross-examine Mr. Cork on a subsequent day, in reference to the approximate amount of pecuniary advantage which the Promoters would obtain under the Bill,—

Petitioner consented to seek the information required, by examining Mr. Brown.

Whereupon, Mr. A. Brown cross-examined by Mr. Bradley, and further by Committee; but witness being unprepared to furnish a direct reply in the above particular, the further cross-examination of Mr. Cork remained for consideration.

Mr. H. B. Bradley, Solicitor (Petitioner on behalf of W. D. Christie, Esq.), examined, in support of the allegation that "there are no persons in this Colony competent " to sell and convey the said land so as to make a good title thereto."

And Committee requiring to deliberate,—

Room cleared.

Committee

Committee deliberated respecting the further cross-examination of Mr. Cork, desired by Mr. Bradley, and Resolved :—

That the Petitioner may require the attendance of Mr. Cork at the next meeting, for the purpose of the further cross-examination requested of the Committee. Parties called in and informed accordingly.

[Adjourned till Friday, 1st instant, at Eleven o'clock.]

FRIDAY, 1 MARCH, 1861.

MEMBERS PRESENT :—

Mr. Parkes, | Mr. Allen.

The several parties and witnesses in attendance.

A Quorum of Members not being present within one hour of the time to which Committee adjourned, the meeting this day lapsed.

TUESDAY, 5 MARCH, 1861.

MEMBERS PRESENT :—

H. Parkes, Esq., in the Chair.

Mr. Allen, | Mr. Walsh.

Committee met pursuant to summons.

Parties called in :—

Solicitor for the Bill, Mr. E. Burton.

Petitioner against the Bill, Mr. H. B. Bradley, Solicitor, as Agent and Attorney of Wm. Dougal Christie, Esq., absent from the Colony.

Promoters, Minmi and Hexham Railway Company, by Mr. Alexander Brown.

Surveyor to Company, Mr. W. Cork.

Mr. W. Cork, Surveyor, attending in pursuance of Resolution communicated at the previous sitting, further cross-examined by the Petitioner (Mr. Bradley).

And the Petitioner proceeding,—

Solicitor for the Bill submitted, that, consistently with rule, it was not open to the Petitioner to cross-examine witness otherwise than upon the single point specially reserved at the former sitting.

When—the Petitioner having been heard—

Witness examined again by the Solicitor for the Bill, and further by Committee.

Committee desiring to deliberate,—

Room cleared.

Committee deliberated.

Preamble considered, and verbal amendment therein agreed to. (Vide Schedule of Amendments.)

Motion made (Chairman) and Question,—That the Preamble, as amended, stand part of the Bill,—agreed to.

[Adjourned till Thursday, 7th instant, at Eleven o'clock.]

THURSDAY, 7 MARCH, 1861.

MEMBERS PRESENT :—

H. Parkes, Esq., in the Chair.

Mr. Allen, | Mr. Laycock,
Mr. Dickson, | Mr. J. T. Ryan.

Parties called in :—

Solicitor for the Bill, Mr. E. Burton.

Petitioner against the Bill, Mr. H. B. Bradley, Solicitor, as Agent and Attorney of Wm. Dougal Christie, Esq., absent from the Colony.

Promoters, Minmi and Hexham Railway Company, by Mr. Alexander Brown.

The Chairman informed the parties that, prior to the last adjournment, Committee had resolved the Question upon the Preamble in the affirmative.

Petitioner (Mr. Bradley), being then requested to indicate those portions of the Bill to which he desired to offer opposition, stated that it would be his duty to stand upon the grounds alleged in the Petition before the Committee, and oppose, with small exception, the several clauses in succession.

Committee so desiring,—

Room cleared.

Deliberation ensuing in respect to the locus standi of Petitioner, and the proper mode of procedure,—

Committee Resolved :—

- (1.) That the position of the Petitioner, as representing private interests exclusively, be strictly confined, in addressing the Committee, to matters within the scope of the allegations of his Petition.
- (2.) That in proceeding with the several clauses in succession, the Committee will first hear the Solicitor for the Bill, then the Petitioner, to whom the former will reply, if needful, the room being afterwards cleared during the decision of the Committee.

Parties

Parties called in, and severally acquainted to the above effect.

Solicitor for the Bill then heard on Clause 1.

Petitioner, in answer thereupon, made reference to the Preamble, as not containing any allegation of the desirability of vesting the lands described in the Schedule in the manner proposed by the Clause.

The Chairman explained, that in this matter the Preamble might be held to adopt that of the original Act.

And Petitioner requesting the same might be recorded,—

Clerk directed accordingly.

After which Petitioner, in proceeding, objected to the Clause as enacting the existing Schedule.

When Solicitor for the Bill being heard, disclaimed both the fact and the intention of thus anticipating a decision upon the contents of the Schedule.

Petitioner, pursuing the objection, submitted that the acceptance of the Clause would be equivalent to settling the Schedule without an opportunity of producing evidence against it—

And the Chairman excepting thereto, as being in the nature of a reflection upon the Committee,—

The same withdrawn.

Solicitor for the Bill further heard.

Petitioner further heard.

And thereafter, Mr. Brown, on part of the promoters, offering to produce a plan shewing the relative eligibility of the lands suggested by the Petitioner for the extension of the Company's works,—

The Chairman stated that it would be more regular to possess the Committee on behalf of the Promoters, through the Solicitor for the Bill.

The Chairman inquired of the Petitioner when he would be prepared with the evidence desired to be brought before the Committee.

And in answer to a further question, Mr. Bradley (Petitioner) replying that it would be impracticable to do so on the morrow, and inconvenient within the next fortnight, Committee desiring,—

Room cleared.

Committee then deliberated in reference to Clause 1, whether to proceed therewith, or to wait the further evidence proposed by Mr. Bradley.

It was Resolved:—

That the evidence already before the Committee is sufficient to enable a proper decision upon Clause 1, but that the Committee are prepared to take further evidence, at the instance of the Petitioner, prior to arriving at any determination in regard to the Schedule therein referred to.

Clause 1 then read, and agreed to without amendment.

Parties called in and informed of the prior Resolution and subsequent agreement to Clause 1.

When the Solicitor for the Bill and the Petitioner severally intimated that during the deliberation of the Committee an arrangement had been effected by which the interests of the Promoters and the Petitioner were mutually satisfied; and that at the next meeting the parties would be able to furnish copies of the necessary amendments in the Bill.

[Adjourned till Tuesday, 12th instant, at Eleven o'clock.]

TUESDAY, 12 MARCH, 1861.

MEMBER PRESENT:—

Mr. Parkes.

Parties in attendance, viz.:—

Solicitor for the Bill, Mr. E. Burton.

Agent for Petitioner against the Bill, Mr. Robertson.

A Quorum of Members not being present within one hour of the time to which Committee adjourned, the meeting this day lapsed.

THURSDAY, 21 MARCH, 1861.

MEMBERS PRESENT:—

H. Parkes, Esq., in the Chair.

Mr. Allen,

Mr. C. Cowper, junr.

Committee met pursuant to summons.

Parties called in.

Solicitor for the Bill, Mr. E. Burton.

Agent for Petitioner against the Bill, Mr. Robertson.

In the absence of Mr. Bradley, the Petitioner, Mr. Robertson permitted to appear as Agent for that gentleman.

Solicitor

Solicitor for the Bill handed in copies of the Clause, as mutually agreed upon by the parties interested, proposed to be substituted for original Clause 4; also, of new Clause (20) proposed to follow Clause 19, and descriptions of other lands to be taken in lieu of certain of those described in the Schedule.

Clause 2 then read, and agreed to without amendment.

Clause 3 read, on motion of Mr. Allen amended and blank supplied (Vide Schedule of Amendments), and agreed to.

Clause 4 read and negatived, with a view to the substitution of new Clause submitted by the Solicitor for the Bill.

Proposed Clause, as amended by consent, then read and agreed to without amendment. (Vide Schedule.)

Clause 5 read, on motion of Mr. C. Cowper, junr., amended (Vide Schedule), and agreed to.

Clauses 6 and 7 severally read and agreed to without amendment.

Clause 8 read, on motion of Mr. Allen, amended (Vide Schedule), and agreed to.

Clause 9 read, amended (Vide Schedule), and agreed to.

Clauses 10 to 19, severally read and agreed to without amendment.

Clause 20 read, on motion of Mr. C. Cowper, junr., amended (Vide Schedule), and agreed to.

Clause 21 read, amended, (Vide Schedule) and agreed to.

Schedule then read.

And Mr. C. Cowper, junr., moving to amend the same, in order to substitute the descriptions of other lands, lots 1 and 2, as arranged between the parties, in lieu of the four descriptions first stated therein,—

Committee considered the force of the Standing Orders 60 and 69, in reference to the proposed Amendment.

It was Resolved:—

That, in the opinion of this Committee, the amendment proposed in the Schedule will not be foreign to the import of the Notice alluded to in Sections 60 and 69 of the Standing Orders; the lands affected thereunder, being contiguous to, and part of the same estate with those described in the Schedule, and in regard to which the requisite notice has been duly given by the Promoters of the Bill.

Whereupon Schedule amended on motion of Mr. C. Cowper, junr. (Vide Schedule of Amendments.)

New Clause, solicited by the parties, to stand Clause 20, then read, agreed to without amendment, and ordered to stand Clause 20 of the Bill. (Vide Schedule.)

On motion of Mr. Allen, Chairman requested to report the amended Bill to the House, with a special notice of the Amendment made in the Schedule thereto.

MINUTES OF EVIDENCE

TAKEN BEFORE THE

SELECT COMMITTEE

ON THE

MINMI & HEXHAM RAILWAY ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

FRIDAY, 22 FEBRUARY, 1861.

Present:—

MR. LAYCOCK, | MR. J. T. RYAN,
 | MR. PARKES.

HENRY PARKES, ESQ., IN THE CHAIR.

Present for Parties:—

Edmund Burton, Esq., Solicitor for the Promoters of the Bill.
H. Burton Bradley, Esq., Petitioner against the Bill.

Mr. William Cork called in and examined:—

1. By Mr. Burton: Do you produce a plan, prepared by yourself, of the land mentioned in the schedule to this Bill? I do. (Witness produced a plan, marked A.) Mr. W. Cork.
2. Have you compared the descriptions in the schedule to this Bill with the lots coloured green on that plan? Yes. 22 Feb., 1861.
3. Are they the same? Yes.
4. I observe that the description in the schedule is divided into five lots—lot No. 1, 1 A, 2, 2 A, and 3? Yes, they were divided afterwards on account of the road passing between them.
5. The road passes between lots No. 1 and No. 1 A in the schedule? It does.
6. And also between lots No. 2 and No. 2 A in the schedule? Yes.
7. Lot No. 1 on the plan then includes lots No. 1 and No. 1 A in the schedule, the road running between? Yes.
8. And a similar remark applies to lots No. 2 and No. 2 A in the schedule, and lot No. 2 in the plan? Yes.
9. Can you say of whose grant these lands are part? Part of the land belonging to William Dougall Christie.
10. The land is in the occupation of himself, his agents or servants? It is let, all of it.
11. You know nothing of the title to the land—you do not know anything about the deeds? No.
12. But this is part of what is occupied as Mr. Christie's land?
13. Is it part of Sparkes' grant? Yes.
14. Will you look at this plan (plan produced, marked B), who prepared it? I prepared it.
15. Does that also shew, on a reduced scale, the lots in the schedule? Yes, the same as in the other plan, with the exception of their being numbered 1 A and 2 A to divide them.
16. According to the schedule? Yes.
17. Does this plan also indicate any soundings? Yes, soundings in the river there.

- Mr. W. Cork. 18. Who took those soundings? I did.
19. Are they correct? They are correct.
- 22 Feb., 1861. 20. Do they shew the depth of the river near the two banks, and also in the centre of the river? Yes, the centre soundings are about the centre of the river; the outer and centre soundings are as near as possible where the figures are placed with respect to the river.
21. They are intended to shew the depth of the river at the different places marked? Yes.
22. And they do so correctly? Yes.
23. Cross-examined by Mr. Bradley: Will you be good enough to state the frontage to the river occupied by Messrs. Brown at present with their coal establishment? About 200 feet—three chains.
24. Will you state the length of the additional frontage to the river proposed to be taken by those two portions of land No. 1 A and No. 2 A? Six chains eighty links, or about 450 feet.
25. These dimensions being added together would give a length of river frontage of how much? About 650 feet.
26. In what manner are the colliery operations, so far as the shipping of coal is concerned, carried on at this establishment at present? At the shoots?
27. At the shoots? We have not sufficient wharfage accommodation.
28. I am asking in what manner are the shipping operations carried on—how do you ship your coals? By a shoot the same as they do at Newcastle.
29. How many shoots have you? Only two.
30. How many shoots are made use of by any of the other coal companies shipping at Newcastle? The Australian Agricultural Company have five, and the Coal and Copper Company four shoots.
31. What is the description or class of vessels loading at these places respectively, at Newcastle and at Hexham, at the promoters' establishment? We have vessels of from 30 tons up to 200 tons loading up there.
32. At Hexham? Yes, at the shoots; and at Newcastle they have them from 30 to, I suppose, 600 tons.
33. Is the extent of frontage required by the promoters of the Bill calculated with reference to the size of the vessels intended to be employed there? Yes, it is calculated to be suitable for the vessels to stand end on to each other.
34. Without rigging-in their flying jibbooms or any other abatement of their pretensions? If they were as large as some that load at Newcastle they would have to take in their booms.
35. Do you know the extent of frontage of the coal shoots at Newcastle? The Copper Company have about 700 feet; I do not know how much the A. A. Company have, but it is not much less I think.
36. Is there any immediate prospect of the quantity of land proposed to be taken being required for the purposes of the trade of these collieries? It is required now.
37. The present trade requires the additional space? Yes, vessels lie there a great deal longer than they ought to do for want of accommodation to load them.
38. Are you acquainted with the colliery operations—the extent of the trade? Yes.
39. How many tons of coal have been shipped from that place in the different years since the opening of the mines? I cannot state by the year.
40. Can you state the increase in the quantity of coal shipped? Twelve months ago we used to ship perhaps at most 400 tons a week, and lately as much as 1,800 tons, sometimes 1,900, and even more than that—nearly 2,000 tons.
41. By Mr. Ryan: In one week? Yes.
42. By Mr. Bradley: What advantage do you suppose the promoters of the Bill would derive from taking this land of Mr. Christie's? They would send away more coal than they now do, for vessels would then go up that otherwise would not, when they have to lie there so long to be loaded.
43. Can you estimate the advantage in money to the promoters of the Bill? No.
44. Will you be prepared to do so on a future day, if we have an adjournment. Of course such estimates of prospective advantages must be subject to some little doubt, but I suppose you can arrive at an approximate notion of the advantage to be derived by the promoters of the Bill from taking this land of Mr. Christie's? Yes.
45. Will you turn to the plan B and look at the portion marked No. 2 A—are you acquainted with the locality? Yes.
46. Do you know the position of the Hexham Inn, sometimes called the Red House, or Hexham Hotel? Yes.
47. That is upon Mr. Christie's property—so far as repute goes? Yes.
48. Will you be kind enough to state to the Committee whether the Hexham Hotel is not situated immediately opposite to the piece of land marked No. 2 A, on the other side of the road, but immediately opposite, so that the prolongation of the frontage of the house would run down to the river at No. 2 A? It is just on the southern boundary of No. 2 A—I believe it would.
49. Is that inn at present in full trade apparently as a country inn? Yes, but that trade depends all upon the shipping at the shoots; if there were no vessels at Hexham there would be very little trade.
50. Will you look at the portion marked No. 2, and say how that is at present occupied? At the present time there is a house upon it where one of our men lives.
51. On No. 2? No. 2 A.
52. I am speaking of No. 2, how is that at present occupied? It is not occupied.
53. Is it not part of Mr. Chapman, the tenant's, garden attached to the inn? Yes, it is part of that. I mean not occupied with buildings.

54. Have not the colliery operations of the promoters extended and encroached beyond the land belonging to them to the extent of about ten feet? No, I think not.
55. Are you aware that the estates of Mr. Christie in the vicinity of these colliery operations are occupied by a large body of tenantry? I am aware that there are a few tenants.
56. You are not aware that there are something like thirty or forty tenants on these estates? There might be, but I do not know it.
57. Do you know the extent of these estates? No.
58. Are you aware of there being coal on these estates? No.
59. Can the purposes of the promoters of the Bill be answered by any alteration of the land proposed to be taken instead of these pieces which you have selected as being convenient for yourselves? They could be, no doubt, but not so well as by obtaining these pieces which have been selected.
60. Is it essential to your convenience to take the only piece of land which we have in front of the hotel, where we might make a wharf, either now or at some future time, for the steamers to stop at—I think that is called 2 A—would it not answer your purpose just as well, or nearly as well, supposing I am willing to consent on certain terms, and to shorten the labours of the Committee, to your having a portion of land on the other side of your line? Yes, I think it would.
61. Instead of No. 2 A? Yes.
62. And No. 2? If we did not get 2 A we should not require 2 at all.
63. You think it would answer the purpose of the promoters to take the land they require on one side of the line instead of the other? I think it would.
64. Have you formed any opinion as to the value of the land? No.
65. Re-examined by Mr. Burton: If the promoters gave up 2 and 2 A they would require more land beyond 1 A and 1? Yes, to the north-west of it.
66. I also understood you to say that Mr. Christie's property has a great deal of deep water frontage besides that proposed to be taken by the Bill? Yes; it is all deep water as far as the land runs up the river. I do not know whether it is so down the river; I do not know how far the land extends that way.
67. By Mr. Ryan: Is not this (pointing to the plan) the line running from Newcastle to Maitland? Yes, the dray road.
68. This is the land occupied by the shoots? This coloured brown is the land occupied at present; the green portions are those we want.
69. By the Chairman: Are you employed by the Company? Yes.
70. As surveyor to the Company? Yes.
71. Can you give the Committee any facts to prove that further land is absolutely required for the trading purposes of the Company—to shew that they could not do without it? It would be impossible for us to increase our trade without it.
72. Has the trade of the Company arrived at that stage when it would be limited if you did not extend your land further? Yes.
73. And the exigencies of your trade now demand this further extension of the river frontage? Yes.
74. As I understood you in a former part of your evidence, it is to enable a larger number of vessels to take in coal at a time, or larger vessels, or both? Both larger vessels and a greater number of them. Vessels always require a certain time to trim, and they will not leave till they are properly trimmed. That often detains the waggons there longer than they otherwise would be.

Edmund Burton, Esq., Solicitor for the Bill, examined:—

75. By the Chairman: You produce the deed of settlement of this Company, I believe? Not the deed of settlement. The partnership is a private partnership between two gentlemen, who of course do form a Company, although only a Company of two. The deed which I produce (deed produced) is the deed of conveyance from Messrs. John Eales and John Christian, the promoters of the former Act, to Messrs. James and Alexander Brown, the promoters of this Bill, shewing that they are entitled to stand in the position which the Legislature assigned to Eales and Christian before.
76. That is the conveyance? Yes. These words of the conveyance are the most essential part:—"He the said John Eales doth grant bargain sell alien release and confirm and she the said Jane the wife of the said John Eales doth remise release and for ever quit claim and he the said John Christian at the request and by the direction of the said John Eales testified by his executing these presents doth grant bargain sell alien release and confirm unto the said James Brown and Alexander Brown and their heirs all and singular the lands tenements and hereditaments described in Schedule A to these presents which is the first schedule hereto and also all and singular the lands tenements and hereditaments described in Schedule D to these presents which is the fourth schedule hereto and all the legal equitable beneficial and other estate right title and interest whatsoever of them the said John Eales and John Christian and each of them under or by virtue of the said Act."

Mr. W. Cork.
22 Feb., 1861.

E. Burton,
Esq.
22 Feb., 1861.

Alexander Brown, Esq., called in and examined:—

- A. Brown, Esq.
22 Feb., 1861.
77. By Mr. Burton: You are one of the promoters of the present Bill? Yes.
78. And one of the owners of the Miami and Hexham Railway? Yes.
79. Have you land enough for the purposes of the railway? Not sufficient.
80. You require more land in the vicinity of the railway? Yes, adjoining it.
81. Will you explain to the Committee what land you require? We require that which is marked on the plan A, before the Committee, No. 1, No. 2, and No. 3; but that is not in accordance with the schedule, as you will see.
82. It is the same land as that mentioned in the schedule, only that the schedule describes it in five lots instead of three? Yes.
83. The road divides two of the three lots, and, therefore, it was thought more accurate to describe it in five lots? Yes.
84. Why is this land required? Our trade, which was very limited at first, has gradually extended itself, and the class of vessels that come up the river is also larger, on account of the flats having been deepened; and we find that vessels are detained there sometimes for a whole week, there being only two wharves to load at, and many vessels that would otherwise come up do not come up: in fact, because we have not that accommodation that we ought to have for the purpose of carrying on our trade in a proper manner; so that our trade is still very limited, to what it might be, for the want of that wharfage accommodation that we ought to have.
85. By the Chairman: Do you mean that the natural growth of your trade is impeded? Yes, the growth of our trade is impeded for want of accommodation.
86. By Mr. Ryan: Then if that adjacent land was added to your property you would place down five shoots? If we get that land we shall establish four or five shoots.
87. In lieu of two? In lieu of two.
88. By Mr. Burton: With regard to lot 3, will you explain why that is required? Lot 3 is required to connect these 50 acres with the railway. At present we cannot connect it, because we cannot sweep in a curve, from the crossing of the Great Northern Line; to do so we would have to get another Act of Parliament (which would be a very doubtful question), to make a second crossing to cross the Great Northern Line, in order to get into it; and the only other way to get into the 50 acres is to sweep a curve round, to enable a locomotive engine to run round it.
89. The 50 acres you speak of are the property of yourself and your brother, the other promoter of this Bill? Yes.
90. Marked on plan A as "J. and A. Brown's land"? Yes.
91. I understand, then, that it is essential to your interests to be enabled to make a curve from your railway on to your 50 acres? Yes.
92. And that you cannot do that without having lot 3? We cannot do that without having lot 3.
93. You would otherwise be driven to seek another crossing over the Great Northern Railway? Yes, which would not be granted; they would not grant us two crossings.
94. Then you consider all the land you have asked for as essentially necessary to the well-being of your railway? Yes, it is all necessary—indeed we have asked as little as we could possibly put up with; if we had asked for any less, it would have cramped our operations still.
95. By Mr. Ryan: Is that farm land—the 50 acres? Yes, it is a farm.
96. There is no coal on that land? No, there is no coal on all this land here (pointing to the plan), indeed it is a large swamp at the back.
97. By Mr. Burton: Does the prosperity of the district depend upon the advancement of your works? Very materially. It is the works that has given an impetus to the development of the district; indeed it is only the works that makes this property here valuable.
98. By the Chairman: How many men do you employ? I think about 200 miners—perhaps 250 men altogether.
99. By Mr. Burton: Does the trade of the inn spoken of by the last witness depend upon the prosperity and advancement of your works? Quite so; the more trade there is at our shoots the more custom they will naturally have.
100. Is the value of Mr. Christie's estate increased by your works? I should say the value of this portion is very materially increased.
101. That is the portion near —? Near the public-house. It is hardly possible to increase the value of the other because it is mostly a swamp.
102. That is the back land? The back land.
103. Do I understand that the value of some part of Mr. Christie's estate will be greatly increased by your getting this further land and applying it to railway purposes? No doubt, as our operations extend, and the trade becomes greater, the greater will be the value of all the land surrounding these wharves; it is a natural result.
104. You are prepared, then, without hesitation, to say absolutely that more land in the vicinity is required for the purposes of your railway? Quite so.
105. And that you have not asked for any more than is actually requisite? No more than is actually requisite.
106. Could some modification be made? Instead of what is mentioned here as No. 2, we might take land on the north-west of No. 1, so as to have it all in one block, to make up the same quantity.
107. By the Chairman: What were the reasons for seeking to obtain land on each side of your present frontage? Because it would be more easy to branch out from the existing main trunk lines.
108. If you enlarged your river wharfage by taking this additional land, would the result be that that you would employ more men in your operations? We would employ more men as our operations would be increased.

109. By Mr. Laycock: Is this track used exclusively by you? It is a public line, but it is used exclusively by us at present, because there are no other mines up here but our own.

110. By the Chairman: How long have you been carrying on these works? It is now about two years since we purchased from Mr. Eales.

111. Can you give us any estimate, in a few words, of the amount of your trade when you first took them? About 400 tons a week at first.

112. What is it now? I cannot say exactly the average, but some weeks it is 1,500, 1,600, 1,700 tons a week—sometimes 1,900;—we have gone nearly to 2,000 tons a week.

113. Have you arrived at this increase by a gradual process? By a gradual process.

114. Has the trade ever been less than it was when you took the mine—has it ever dwindled below what it was at the time of your taking it? No, it has gradually increased.

115. There has been a steady increase throughout the two years? Yes. But when we were doing 1,700 or 1,800 tons a week we found ourselves very much inconvenienced, and the result was that some vessels that had to wait so long would not come back.

116. Can you state positively that the extent of your coal mines is such as to increase your trade and go on increasing for some years? I may say they are inexhaustible.

117. Do you mean really inexhaustible? It would take centuries before they are worked out.

118. Do you state that from any actual calculation? It is all a coal field there together, admitting 10,000 tons in the acre, and the coal field extends from there to Lake Macquarie—not our own land, of course; we have a thousand acres of our own land, which is practically inexhaustible.

119. By Mr. Bradley: Do you anticipate a large pecuniary advantage to the promoters of this Bill from the increase of trade to be obtained by means of your getting this land of Mr. Christie's? There is no doubt there will be a pecuniary advantage, but I could not say what that pecuniary advantage may be; it would be a matter of consideration; it might be affected also by keen opposition coming in the way. I am not prepared to say about that.

120. Will you be prepared another time? It is such a difficult question that I really could not say.

121. By Mr. Ryan: It would depend upon how the operations were managed? Just so, a good deal depends upon the management.

122. By Mr. Laycock: Other parties are entitled to use the line if they think proper? Yes, it is a public line.

123. And you are prepared to give up this portion (pointing to the map) if it is objected to, and get it on the other side? Yes, although it is not so convenient for us.

A. Brown,
Esq.

22 Feb., 1861.

Henry Burton Bradley, Esq., Petitioner against the Bill, examined:—

124. By the Chairman: You represent the proprietor of the land which is required under this Bill? I do.

125. What is the name of the proprietor? William Dougall Christie.

126. Where is he at present? He is at present Her Majesty's Consul at Rio.

127. There is no person in the Colony, I believe, possessing sufficient authority to sell the land in question? There is no person in the Colony possessing authority to sell the land.

128. You admit that part of the preamble which alleges that, which alleges that there are no persons in the Colony capable of conveying that land? I do.

H. B. Bradley,
Esq.

22 Feb., 1861.

TUESDAY, 5 MARCH, 1861.

Present:—

Mr. ALLEN, | Mr. WALSH.

HENRY PARKES, ESQ., IN THE CHAIR.

Mr. Burton appeared as Solicitor on behalf of the Promoters of the Bill.

Mr. Burton Bradley appeared as Solicitor and Petitioner against the Bill.

Mr. William Cork again called in and further examined:—

129. By Mr. Bradley: (Handing plan B to the witness) That is drawn to scale is it not? Mr. W. Cork. Yes.

130. Have you estimated the pecuniary advantages to be derived by the promoters of the Bill from the acquisition of the land sought to be taken under the schedule of this Act? Yes, as nearly as I can.

131. What is the amount at which you arrive? The way I reckoned it was this—

132. Will you be good enough to answer my question in the first instance, and explain the mode afterwards? The difference we make 30s. per annum. The proportion of the value of these lands that we are applying for now would give to Mr. Christie 30s. per annum as his proportion of the extra profit to be derived from that land—

133. My question, if you will excuse my recalling your attention to it, was, had you estimated the pecuniary advantage to be derived by the promoters of this Bill from the acquisition

5 Mar., 1861.

- Mr. W. Cork. acquisition of Mr. Christie's land sought to be obtained—you say, yes, I have—I then say, what is the amount at which you have arrived? £30 per week.
- 5 Mar., 1861. 134. You estimate that as the advantage to be gained by Mr. Brown from the acquisition of Mr. Christie's land? Yes.
135. Have you, in the course of your calculation, been able to assign any limit to the period at which the profit of £30 per week would accrue? No.
136. Then is it probable that the additional profit of £30 a week to the promoters of the Bill would be received by them during a long course of years, assuming the continuance of their works? Yes.
137. Are you acquainted with the character and extent of the seam or seams of coal now being worked by the promoters? Yes, to some extent.
138. Are you able to form an opinion of the extent of the coal fields under their control? It is about a thousand acres.
139. During how many years might that coal seam be worked without exhaustion, assuming that the increase of the business of Messrs. Brown should be such as to give them three or four times the production which they at present bring to market? I have not calculated that.
140. Is it probable that that coal field under their control could be worked out in fifty years? I should say not.
141. Will you look upon the plan, and be good enough to state the width of the parcels of land proposed to be taken, measured from the northern extreme of lot 1 to the southern extreme of lot 2, upon the Newcastle and Maitland road? About 8 chains 75 links—about 9 chains it may be.
142. In what manner would the entire of the works proposed to be erected by the promoter upon these lands cross the Newcastle and Maitland road, during that space of 9 chains, or thereabouts? They would cross over the road by bridges.
143. There would be bridges carried over the roads? Yes, the whole of the roads.
144. How many bridges? I think we should make one bridge do.
145. For the fire shoots? The present shoots are run on a level with the road.
146. Is it intended that the shoots to be erected, or any of them, should run level with the road? No, they would run over the road.
147. How would they be carried—you said at first by bridges, afterwards by one bridge? I think by one bridge.
148. What would be the width of that bridge? About 12 feet.
149. And the height of it, clear of the traffic of the road, in the centre of the arch? 16 feet, I believe, is the height.
150. The span across the road would be—how much? One chain, I believe.
151. Do you know the width of the road at that place? The width is a chain, I believe, all along this line of road—it is a Government road.
152. What would be the height of the spring of the arch? 16 feet, I believe.
153. And at the centre? I think we should carry it on a level.
154. You would carry it on timber? Yes.
155. Can you now define where that bridge would be erected—on which of these portions of land? It would be on the road opposite No. 1 and No. 1 A, connecting the two.
156. Is the road which in your evidence has been termed the Newcastle and Maitland road at that point the public highway? I believe it is.
157. By the Chairman: When you spoke of the increased profit to Messrs. Brown being £30 a week, did you mean that that profit would be derived upon the investment of greater capital, and the further extension of their business, which the possession of this particular land would enable them to carry out? Yes.
158. That is, the profit would arise from the extension of their business, the employment of more men, and the investment of more capital, which they would be able to do if they had the land? Yes, that is what I mean.
159. The profit would not arise merely from the possession of this land, nor from the possession of this land at all, except to the extent that it would enable them to extend their legitimate business? Just so.
160. By Mr. Burton: I understand that you meant to say that the profit would arise, not from this piece of land solely, but from this piece of land plus the capital which is invested by the Messrs. Brown at present, and plus such capital as they may invest in addition? Yes.
161. And by the labour of their present and additional men, and the continuance of their own enterprise? Yes, that is what I mean.
162. Have you any idea how much capital is already invested in these works? About £100,000.
163. By the Chairman: How do you know that? That is what I am informed by the promoters of the Bill.
164. By Mr. Burton: Have you made any estimate of the value of the land sought to be taken by the Bill? Yes.
165. How much have you valued it at? About £30 an acre.
166. That would come to, altogether, how much, with the land in the schedule? About £135.
167. You spoke of 30s. per annum being the correct portion of profit to attribute to the new land? Yes.
168. How much do you consider 30s. per annum for ever worth? About £15.
169. That would be calculating money to produce 10 per cent.? Yes.
170. In calculating the proportion of the new lands share of the profit at 30s. per annum, or £15 gross, you have proportioned the total profit according to the total capital, that is to say, say, the capital already invested, the capital probably to be invested by the Messrs. Brown, Mr. W. Cork, and the £135 the value of this new land? Yes.

171. And you have given the £135 its share? Yes.

Mr. W. Cork.
5 Mar., 1861.

172. The promoters rent some land adjoining this new land? Yes, they do.

173. At what rate do they rent it? £1 an acre.

174. Has Mr. Christie any similar land under lease? Yes.

175. What rent is paid to him for it? I believe somewhere about a pound an acre is the rent to be paid.

176. What would the value of this new land be if we were to cease our works, and not to run our line any longer? I do not think it would be worth anything more than £1 an acre, even if they could get that. There is not a sufficient quantity there to make it worth settling upon.

177. By Mr. Walsh: Supposing it were not severed from the main block? The main block is all a swamp. There are some few small settlers, but the land is all swampy at the back.

178. By Mr. Barton: Supposing we were not to pay the owner of this land a penny for it, would he be a gainer or a loser by our taking this piece of land and using it as we shall probably use it? A gainer, I should say.

179. By the Chairman: Do you think he would say so? I do not know what he would say.

180. By Mr. Allen: With respect to the value of this land, you think, if I understand you aright, that the total value of the land would be created by the consequent population that would settle in that neighbourhood on account of the coal works? Yes.

181. And without that it would have but a nominal value? Yes.

182. Will the taking away of this portion of land injure the remaining portion? I should say not in any respect; it would benefit it though.

183. In what way? Because no one would settle there otherwise—if any one does settle there it will be on account of the shipping that will be brought there.

184. You propose to take away a portion of the frontage of the river? Yes; but there is plenty of land there.

185. You propose to carry a twelve-foot bridge over the road? Yes.

186. Will the width of the bridge cause no injury whatever to the road over which it will pass? None whatever.

NEW SOUTH WALES.

MINUTES OF EVIDENCE

TAKEN BEFORE

THE SELECT COMMITTEE

ON THE

MORPETH AND MAITLAND RAILWAY COMPANY'S BILL.

THURSDAY, 25 APRIL, 1861.

Present:—

MR. BUCHANAN,
MR. PARKES,MR. HOSKINS,
MR. MORRIS.

HENRY PARKES, ESQ., IN THE CHAIR.

Thomas Icton, Esq., appearing for the Promoters of the Bill, examined:—

1. By the Chairman: You are a solicitor of the Supreme Court? I am.
2. You are engaged professionally as solicitor, on the part of certain gentlemen who are desirous of forming themselves into a Company, to be called "The Maitland and Morpeth Railway Company"? I am.
3. You are acting on their behalf in the prosecution of this matter before the House? I am.
4. Will you be good enough to state what steps have been taken by these gentlemen in the matter—whether any deed has been drawn up, or whether anything has been done? No deed has been drawn up. The propositions for governing the Company are contained in the Bill now before the Committee. The Company is at present no more than an association of persons, who have in writing engaged to take a certain number of shares in the Company, so soon as it shall have been incorporated by Parliament.
5. Do you happen to know how the Company originated? I was not present on the occasion of its origination.
6. Do you know whether it originated in a public meeting? I am not aware.
7. Can you inform the Committee of the mode in which its affairs are at present conducted? Yes; they are managed by a body called a Provisional Committee.
8. And who has communicated with you in the matter—who has instructed you in the steps you have taken? The Provisional Directors—Mr. B. Lee, jun., Mr. S. S. Dickson, and the other gentlemen named. I have received my instructions from them through their Secretary, Mr. MacAuliffe.
9. These gentlemen, I presume, were acting on behalf of the Provisional Committee? Yes; they have instructed their solicitor, Mr. Mullen, of Maitland, for whom I am agent in Sydney.
10. Has this Bill been drawn up by you? It has.
11. At the instance of the Provisional Committee? Yes.
12. And you have been instructed to act for them in the matter of this application to Parliament, to pass this Bill into law? Yes; that is the object for which I have been engaged by them.
13. By Mr. Hoskins: What is the proposed capital of this Company? £25,000.
14. And how much of that has been paid up, up to the present time? None whatever, at this moment. All that has been done has been to receive a written engagement to pay up, whenever called upon, £1 per share on all the shares allotted to them.

T. Icton,
Esq.

25 April, 1861.

- T. Iceton,
Esq.
25 April, 1861.
15. Then nothing at all has yet been done by the Company; no works commenced, or call made? No; for if this Bill does not pass into law there will be no occasion for the capital of the Company to be called in.
16. Are you not aware that it is customary in England, whenever a Joint Stock Company is projected, to make a call of so much per share, before any application is made to Parliament for an Act of Incorporation? Yes. There are, I am aware, regulations and provisions under which only can Joint Stock Companies in England be formed. By those the proportion of capital that shall be paid up before a Bill shall pass Parliament, is fixed; but these provisions do not apply to this Colony, nor have they ever been acted upon in the formation of Joint Stock Companies here.
17. Was there not a portion of the capital paid up in the case of the Hunter River Railway Company? No; there was no part of the capital of the Company paid up, but there was a deposit of 2s. 6d. per share made for the purpose only of paying preliminary expenses.
18. By the Chairman: I believe that you have been many years practising your profession in this Colony? Yes; upwards of twenty years.
19. I presume then that you know most of the names mentioned in the first clause of the Bill? With one or two exceptions I know them all.
20. Do you know whether or not they are substantial men? Yes; I believe they are.
21. Some of them are reputed to be very rich? They are.

Mr. Arthur John Whalley called in and examined.

- Mr. A. J.
Whalley.
25 April, 1861.
22. By the Chairman: You are a Civil Engineer? I am.
23. How long have you been in the Colony? Only a few months. I came here from India.
24. Where did you obtain a knowledge of your profession? In England, previous to going to India.
25. Under whom? Under several gentlemen in England.
26. Can you mention some of them? One was Mr. Longridge, a gentleman who is now Consulting Engineer to the Eastern Bengal Railway in India.
27. How long were you employed in India? Two years.
28. On railways? Yes.
29. You have been employed by the Maitland and Morpeth Railway Company as their engineer? I have.
30. When were you engaged by this Company? I was requested, about three weeks ago, to make a report to the Company upon the relative advantages of the various lines that had been proposed for connecting Maitland and Morpeth. I went down there, and made a personal inspection of the different lines, and, at the request of the Provisional Committee, made a report to them on the subject.
31. What were the particular instructions you received, and what did you do in consequence of receiving those instructions? I went over the various lines that had been projected between Maitland and Morpeth.
32. For the purpose of discovering by which line Morpeth might best be connected with East Maitland? Yes.
33. Your instructions were then to do this? Exactly.
34. And having made this examination you reported to the Company that which you conceived to be the best? I did; offering them such suggestions as my experience enabled me to do.
35. Have you made any survey of the ground between Maitland and Morpeth? No. I have not had time to do that. All I could do was to go over the lines as laid down by other surveyors, and then make a comparison between them.
36. Have you looked at the Bill now before the Committee? No. I have not had a copy of it.
37. Have you read the advertisements that have appeared in the newspapers relative to the intention of this Company to apply for an Act of Incorporation? I have.
38. And you are acquainted with the line there described as that which the Company proposes to adopt? Yes. It is the line as shewn upon the Government plan, to which I was very kindly afforded access.
39. Then the line advertised by this Company is the line that the Government had intended to carry out? It is. I have not been able to finish my copy of the plan, as my time, which has been very short, has been so fully taken up; but I now produce a copy of the Government plan. This plan stops at the Queen's Wharf; but I have made sections for an extension through the town of Morpeth, as indicated by the pencil line on this plan. Owing to the short notice I have received I have not been able to make copies of those sections to lay before the Committee.
40. The line now shewn on this plan is the line as described in the Company's advertisement? It is.
41. What, in your opinion as a professional man, will be the cost of constructing the line as here projected? My opinion is that it may be done for £16,000 or £17,000.
42. Have you gone carefully into the calculation of all the necessary expenses before arriving at this opinion? I have made an approximate estimate of the cost of the work, which would have been laid before you to-day had I received longer notice. As I said before I have only been some three weeks engaged by the Company, and during that time I have had so much to do that I have been unable to make out a proper approximate estimate to lay before the Committee. So far as I am able to say, from the Government plans plans and sections before me, I should imagine that the cost would be between £16,000 and £17,000.

Mr. A. J. Whalley.

25 April, 1861.

43. When will your own plans and sections be finished? I cannot say, for I have not had time to make any survey of my own; but by a personal inspection of the various lines proposed, and by comparing the sections, I am convinced that a better line than this shewn on the Government plan, could not be found in that part of the country.

44. There are no engineering difficulties, I believe, on the line? None whatever. The earth works are very light, and the gradients exceedingly easy; the heaviest gradient on the line is only 1 in 1450.

45. What is the exact distance that the line will have to run? From Maitland to Morpeth the distance 2 miles and 47 chains, 7 chains over 2 miles and a half.

46. By Mr. Hoskins: You say you have not made yourself an exact inspection of the line? Yes, I have made a close inspection of all the lines proposed; but I have not myself taken a survey of the line.

47. Then your calculation of the expense is merely a rough estimate? No; they are exact. As I recommended to the Company the adoption of this line, I made my calculations from the quantity of earthwork shewn in the Government sections.

48. I understand you to say, then, that you have satisfied yourself solely by a careful and correct inspection of the lines proposed by others? Yes. I inspected them very closely. I did not make a survey myself, but I looked very carefully over the lines that had been previously surveyed, for the purpose of bringing in the line to the south of Morpeth. I made a comparison between these different lines, and finding the Government line the best in every respect, I recommended its adoption to the Company.

49. I understand you to say, then, that by this inspection of the various lines, you have made yourself sufficiently acquainted with the country between Maitland and Morpeth, to decide upon the line that the rails ought to follow—so that now you will be able to proceed with your survey at once? Certainly; but if this line be adopted, all that will be required will be to make a correct plan of the line. The line I now produce before the Committee is merely a preliminary survey.

50. And this preliminary survey has been made by the Government? It has.

51. By Mr. Morris: Have you had any experience hitherto in the construction of railways? Yes; I had charge of the construction of two miles of the East Bengal Railway, in addition to the charge and maintenance of 68 miles of the working line. To shew the extensive character of this line, I may mention that at Runnegund, near where I lived, there was a changing station, with accommodation for forty locomotives.

52. By Mr. Hoskins: Then are we to consider that you have been permanently engaged by the Maitland and Morpeth Railway Company as their engineer? I have reason to expect that I shall receive that appointment.

53. By Mr. Buchanan: Do you know anything of the goods traffic that there is likely to be on this line? No; that is hardly a question that has come within my observation. I have been such a short time in the Colony—only three months—and so short a time in that neighbourhood, that I can hardly be expected to have formed any opinion on that point, not having had opportunities for observation.

54. By Mr. Hoskins: You have been over the whole of the proposed line? I have been over the whole of all the lines that have been proposed.

55. It runs, I believe, through a very thinly populated neighbourhood? Yes; between Maitland and Morpeth the population is very scattered, except in the immediate neighbourhood of the two towns. From what I see of the country—but of course, as a stranger, my opinion on this point has not much value—I should say that the population around the two towns was very considerable.

56. The proposed line of railway will have to cross several public highways? Only in passing through the town of Morpeth; and this is one advantage that the Government plan possesses over the two others. You will observe by this plan that the only place at which the line encroaches on existing roads is at the 1 mile 15 chains from the Pitnaeroc crossing; and there I propose to make a divergence of the roadway itself, throwing it back, and enabling the line to come between the roadway and the lagoon.

57. At that point then you propose to divert the main road? Yes.

58. But for what reason? Because now the roadway comes down so close upon the lagoon, as not to allow room for the line to run between the two without ballasting the lagoon. It will be less expense to divert the road than to make a foundation for the rails, in the lagoon. At the 2 miles 30 chains the line touches the road again; and here also, I propose to divert the roadway, but in both these cases the diversion will be an advantage rather than a drawback to the traffic on the road.

59. Are these the only two places at which the line touches the roadway? Yes; those are the only two, except in going through the town of Morpeth, when the line will have to cross proclaimed streets at one or two points.

60. You will, of course, see that proper provision is made at all these crossings, for the security of human life? Most assuredly; every care will be taken in this respect. The line will have to cross Northumberland-street, Robert-street, and George-street; and I had hoped to have been able to shew the Committee the cross-sections at these places, shewing the present inclination of the roadway, and that which it would have when the line crosses them, but my time has been so short that I have not been able to prepare them.

61. By Mr. Buchanan: The landed proprietors in the neighbourhood of the line are all, I believe, favourable to its construction? I believe so. There are one or two that I cannot say anything about, but all the rest of the land through which the line passes, has been a free grant from the proprietors to the Company.

Mr. A. J.
Whalley.

25 April, 1861.

62. By Mr. Hoskins: You propose to have level crossings over these streets? Yes.
63. Are they not likely to be attended with danger? No; the streets we cross are very little used. This street—Northumberland-street—is of no use to the public. The only person who makes use of it is Mr. Taylor, who goes that way to the back entrance of his premises. His roadway will not be at all interfered with by making this crossing.
64. You do not anticipate any opposition to the line on the part of any of the landed proprietors, through whose property it passes? No, not at all, though some of them may ask to be compensated for the land taken by the Company. The greater part, however, have given the land necessary for the line.
65. Do you anticipate any opposition from the residents in the town of Morpeth? No; because in passing through the town the inclination of the land is so great that the traffic cannot be injured by the line crossing the cross streets; and then, from the nature of the land, being mostly rock, nothing more than the bare width of the line need be taken out, and so very little inconvenience would be caused.
66. By Mr. Buchanan: No objection has been raised anywhere to the enterprise? No, I have heard of none.
67. By Mr. Hoskins: Explain to the Committee more fully where and how you propose to make the divergence in the main road? The first place is at the 1 mile 15 chains, where I propose to turn the roadway about a chain further to the south than it now is. Then again at the 2 miles and 70 chains I propose to divert the roadway.
68. At what exact spot? At the house occupied by Mrs. Martin, on the property of Mr. Close.
69. By the Chairman: I believe the line, as at present laid out, takes off a part of the building? It goes right through the house.
70. By Mr. Hoskins: Then you propose to divert the roadway, because by so doing you will avoid damaging or interfering with this property of Mrs. Martin? I am not sure as to whom it belongs. According to the book of reference attached to the Government plan, the property was shewn at that time to belong to Mr. Close. Since I have been up there, I have been informed that it belongs to Mrs. Martin. By making the divergence I have described all trouble will be avoided, as the building will not be interfered with, whereas now the line runs right through the house. At the same time the divergence will be a great benefit to the road itself, as the curve will be much easier, and a great improvement will be effected.
71. Do you know whether the parties residing here are aware that you intend to divert the roadway from the front of their properties? That I do not know, but of course this has not yet been decided upon, and I merely suggest the line I have marked here as the probable limit to which it will be carried back. At the same time the roadway need not be carried so far back as this, as all we shall require will be to carry it back far enough to admit of the line passing alongside the roadway, and between it and the property.
72. By the Chairman: And the road itself would be improved, by avoiding the present ugly bend it now has at this spot? Yes, it would certainly be improved rather than otherwise.
73. By Mr. Hoskins: Where does this road communicate with? It is the main road between Maitland and Morpeth.
74. Have the Company given notice to the trustees of the deviations they intend to make? No. No notice has yet been given, because, as yet, it is but a suggestion. It has not yet been decided upon that the deviation shall be made.
75. By the Chairman: It is the main road between Morpeth and Maitland? It is.
76. And is, therefore, in the hands of the Government? That I cannot say.
77. What is the extent of the alterations that you propose to make to the streets of Morpeth, in carrying your crossings over them? In the case of Northumberland-street, some cutting will be required; but, owing to the declivity of the street being so steep, it will always be of very little use for traffic. The only use it now has is, that it serves as an approach to the back part of Mr. Taylor's bonded store. He is the only person that uses it, but his approach is in no way damaged by the line crossing the street. The inclination of Robert and George streets is such that very little alteration will be required in them. Robert-street we propose to cross upon its present level.
78. Will these crossings in any way impede the cross traffic? No, very little, if at all. In Northumberland-street there is no traffic; Robert-street would be crossed on the present level; and with regard to George-street, though there would be a slight alteration, yet it would be an improvement, because the line would cross on an embankment.
79. With regard to the junction with Pitnacree Station, I would ask you whether you consider it expedient to adopt this in preference to a junction at some other point than the present station? By going by the other lines it will be necessary to cross two roads, one of which is a main road; and as level crossings, especially over main roads, are always objectionable and inconvenient, I came to the conclusion that the Pitnacree junction was the more favourable of the two. Level crossings over public roads always cause great inconvenience, besides the addition to the expense of the line, by having to maintain gates and watchmen.
80. By Mr. Hoskins: You have gone over the whole of the ground? I have.
81. Do you contemplate that the line will have to cross the lagoon? No, we shall not have to cross the lagoon, and that is the use of the diversion of the road that I propose. By this we are enabled to avoid the lagoon. There is not room now to pass between the road and the lagoon, and we therefore divert the road, in order to avoid the expense of making ground across the lagoon, or of having to go round it.
82. Then the railway, according to your plan, will take the place of the road? Yes, and the road will be made further back.

83. You will require to make viaducts on the line? Yes, of course, and I propose to make a liberal allowance all along the line for the storm water, because I believe that they have found the culverts on the Great Northern line utterly insufficient to carry off the storm water. They have not been made wide enough, and the consequence is that the water gathers, and has been found to gradually eat away the foot of the bank.

84. What description of culverts do you intend to make? Just simple timber culverts, without flooring them. They are not required for foot traffic, and I, therefore, intend to have nothing more than the mere timbers to carry the rails. Such culverts as these may be constructed very inexpensively. The piling would be the most expensive part of the timber, the rest would be a very small consideration, because it would be given by neighbouring proprietors as a free gift.

85. I believe there is a great deal of swampy ground on this line? There is.

86. And in the event of the ground being rotten where you have to drive the piles, will you think it necessary to make a concrete on which to abut the piles? Certainly, if the ground is rotten, or if there is not a sufficient depth of soil in which to bed them.

87. Would you recommend that the piles should be sheathed with zinc? Yes, perhaps it would be better to sheath them down to a certain depth. I am not able, of course, to speak as to the merit of the different kinds of timber here, I, therefore, do not know whether or not ironbark suffers from the white ant.

88. We have had before the House at different times various opinions as to the best mode of staying piles in a viaduct or culvert, what is your opinion on the point; or rather how do you propose to stay your piles, by longitudinal or by cross braces? The kind of thing I propose is merely to place on the piles the timber necessary for carrying the rails, and these timbers would of themselves be braces.

89. By Mr. Buchanan: The viaducts on this line are of no great magnitude? No; but I would not have any stint of culverts on the line, because the land falls in all directions towards one side of the line, and there must in wet weather be a very considerable body of water for which it will be necessary to secure numerous outlets.

90. By the Chairman: You say you have not looked into the Bill? I have not.

91. If you look at clauses 105 and 106 you will find that due provision is there made for the erection of bridges? I perceive that it is so. But there is not on the line any road of the kind described in the first section of the first of these two clauses.

92. But suppose there should be, you see that even for that due provision has been made? Yes, certainly; but, of course, all these matters will be very carefully attended to in the construction of the line.

James Campbell, Esq., called in and examined:—

93. By the Chairman: You are a merchant of this city? I am.

94. And are a member of the firm of Keele, Campbell, and Co? I am.

95. You formerly carried on business in Morpeth? I did, for a number of years.

96. During how long a period? Altogether about 13 or 14 years.

97. You are acquainted then with Morpeth? I am perfectly.

98. And with the country around it? Yes, for miles round in every direction.

99. When you resided at Morpeth were you in the habit of travelling much about the neighbourhood? Yes, I have travelled over the country for thirty miles round Morpeth.

100. You have then a pretty perfect knowledge of the country within a radius of thirty miles of Morpeth? I have.

101. And from the extensive business you so long carried on in Morpeth, you have, I presume, an accurate acquaintance with all the commercial relations of that town? I have.

102. You are aware that a number of gentlemen of that neighbourhood have applied to Parliament, by petition, for an Act to incorporate a Company to be called the Maitland and Morpeth Railway Company, the object of that Company being to construct and work a railway between the port of Morpeth and the town of Maitland? I am aware that such is the case.

103. Are you a shareholder in that Company? I am.

104. To what extent? To the extent of a hundred shares.

105. The petitioners allege in the preamble of the Bill, which they seek to pass into law, that the construction of a railway would be of great public advantage; or in the words of the Bill, that "it would be of great public advantage that a line of railway should be constructed and maintained between the town of Morpeth, in the Colony of New South Wales, and the town of Maitland, in the same Colony, for the more regular and expeditious conveyance of the important and increasing commerce of the said places, and for facilitating communication between the north-western interior of the said Colony and the port of Morpeth"—now is it your opinion that the allegation contained in the words I have read is correct? Most certainly.

106. Can you give the Committee any evidence in proof of its correctness? Yes. I consider that the formation of this line of railway will be a direct advantage to something like 20,000 inhabitants, including those of Maitland and Morpeth, and the neighbourhood between and around the two places. There are the Paterson, the Williams, and a portion of the Lower Hunter, all directly interested in the establishment of this line. Besides this, I am in a position to state almost with certainty that if this line is opened, it will open up a very large coal trade between Morpeth and Sydney, a trade which at the present time Morpeth does not possess to any extent worth mentioning. I know that there are some very rich seams of coal at Black Creek, at Anvil Creek, and upwards, and that one seam in particular, thirty

J. Campbell,
Esq.

J. Campbell, Esq. thirty feet deep, has been discovered, a more extensive seam than any in the Colony; besides the coals are of the finest description, those found on Captain Russell's land being of the very best description of Cannel coal.

25 April, 1861. 107. Do you know what the present population of Morpeth is? The population of the town itself is not so very large, but it has a very rich and populous district around it.

108. Can you give a guess as to the present population of the town? I should say it was about 2,000.

109. The district on the other side of the River Hunter is, I believe, of a very fertile and productive character? Yes. It is one of the most populous agricultural districts that I know of in the Colony, and at the same time is, without exception, the most fertile. The whole valley of the Paterson, and from Raymond Terrace upwards to the valley of The Williams, and that valley itself, consist of the richest alluvial soil, and they are all consequently very closely populated.

110. Can you state of your own knowledge, acquired in the exercise of your calling as a merchant, whether the producers of the Paterson, and the other localities round about Morpeth, send much of their produce upwards towards the interior of the country? If there were facilities for doing so, I have no doubt but that a large quantity of produce would find its way upwards, because hay, maize, and potatoes are often very high at Singleton and Muswellbrook, when they are selling at a very cheap rate in Morpeth and Maitland.

111. What difference in the price of any one article have you known to exist in the two places? I believe there has been a difference of as much as £6 per ton in the two places, on the price of hay only.

112. What was the quotation for hay at that time in Morpeth? From £3 10s. to £4 per ton; whilst at Singleton it was selling at £10.

113. And does the same difference of price rule in regard to the various other articles of produce? A great deal depends upon the season. If dry weather prevails, the crops upwards are almost sure to be a failure, and in that case they are dependant entirely upon the Lower Hunter for their supplies of produce. In moist seasons, however, there is not so much difference in the supply, and, consequently, not so much difference in price between the two places.

114. Do you possess any statistics shewing the produce of the neighbourhood round about Morpeth, and which may naturally be considered as belonging to it, as the centre of population? There were some statistics made out, at very great trouble and expense, by some of the persons interested in the district, and they were published, a short time back, in the Herald newspaper. I believe those statistics could be obtained, or, at all events, they could be seen in the file of the Herald. These statistics shewed that the downward produce to Sydney, from the country above the flats on the Hunter, amounted in the year to something like £1,500,000; and that they were going on increasing very rapidly in extent.

115. Then the annual value of the exports was £1,500,000? Yes; that was the value exported during the year from all the country above the flats on the Hunter, including, of course, the Williams and the Paterson with the Hunter.

116. You scarcely understand the tenor of the question I put to you—let me now ask you, whether, previous to any line of railway between Maitland and Morpeth being in contemplation, the settlers round about Morpeth were accustomed to send much produce upwards towards the interior? No; they only sent produce up beyond Maitland in dry seasons, when the difference in price would pay dealers to do so. I have, very frequently, known dealers to purchase produce in Maitland and Morpeth, and take it up to Singleton or Muswellbrook.

117. At all events Morpeth and its neighbourhood would supply the two Maitlands pretty liberally, even if the season were such that supplies were not wanted higher up? Yes; some of the produce reached Maitland; but then there is a very good agricultural district round Maitland as well as round Morpeth, and a great part of their supplies are drawn from there.

118. Then Maitland is not dependant for its supplies upon Morpeth, or, through Morpeth, upon the Paterson and the other districts you have named? No, it has its own neighbourhood from which it is supplied; and then a good deal of produce reaches it from the Paterson direct, as the people of that district can deliver goods as readily and as cheaply in Maitland as they can in Morpeth.

119. During the time you carried on business in Morpeth, had you an opportunity of judging what were the commercial relations between the two towns, and what commercial intercourse existed between them? Do you mean what direct business there was between the two places?

120. No;—I mean rather what amount of commercial business was done by Morpeth with Maitland, and through Maitland with the country above? The trade of Morpeth itself is confined to a mere local business. The Committee are no doubt aware that in all small towns a very great deal of local jealousy exists, especially between towns so near together as Maitland and Morpeth. The consequence of this is, that there is really very little direct trade between the two. Another reason for this is, that both places derive their supplies from the same source—Sydney.

121. But it is more particularly with regard to the trade with the country up above Maitland, carried on through Morpeth, that I would have your opinion. Is there any such trade carried on with the interior from Morpeth, as the port and head of navigation? Yes; there is a large traffic that must go through Maitland to the northern and the north-western districts. We ourselves send goods by way of Morpeth and Maitland, as high up as the Macquarie, Wellington, and Dubbo. The last place is exclusively supplied through Morpeth.

122. How many customers had your firm alone, in the supply of whom you had to send goods goods from Morpeth through Maitland? I had a large number of squatters on the Macquarie and Castlereagh, who were customers of mine; but as I found that this business did not answer me, I have given it up for some time past. But though I have done so, somebody must do the business—some one must supply them—and, wherever the source of supply, the goods themselves must pass through Morpeth and Maitland. We have, however, still a number of customers at Dubbo and Coolah, all of whom we supply from Morpeth by way of Maitland.

J. Campbell,
Esq.
25 April, 1861.

123. Then you think that this railroad will be of great public advantage, not simply on account of its affording a regular means of communication between Maitland and Morpeth, but by reason of its affording an increased means of communication with the Colony at large? I do; and I can give you an instance of the value of the Western Road from Maitland, as a means of communication with the Western Districts? I travelled over that road this time twelve months, and I found it superior to any country road in the Colony. It is comparatively level the whole way, and in crossing the dividing range the slope is so gentle that you hardly know when you are on the top of the rise. The consequence is, that carriage by this road is very much lower than on any other.

124. What is the rate of carriage on that road? From Maitland to Mudgee it ranges from 12s. to 14s. and 16s. We recently sent goods from Morpeth to Guntawang for 7s. 6d. per cwt.

125. Do you think then that the farmers in the neighbourhood of Morpeth would have a greater trade with the Western Gold Fields if they had this railway constructed, to connect them with the Great Northern Railway? I would not say that, as there is a good deal of produce now grown upon the Western Gold Fields. In so far as the farmers round about Morpeth are concerned, I do not think it would increase their trade, because now the supplies of the Western Gold Fields are chiefly raised amongst themselves.

126. But in regard to finding a market for their surplus produce would they not, to some extent, have a new market opened to them in the western interior, if this means of communication were provided? No doubt they would, to some extent. They would find a market on the Castlereagh, the Macquarie, and even on the Bogan, for some of their produce, such as flour and maize.

127. What is the chief produce of the district around Morpeth? Wheat, maize, potatoes, onions, hay—principally lucerne hay—and some little tobacco, though the latter is not grown now to anything like the extent that it used to be formerly.

128. There is very little tobacco grown now? Very little, as compared with what was grown ten or twelve years ago.

129. Are you aware, of your own knowledge, that a number of gentlemen have associated themselves together, in order to construct a line of railway between Maitland and Morpeth? I am.

130. Do you know Mr. Benjamin Lee, junior? I do.

131. Is he a man of reputed good position in society? He is.

132. And a man of substance—of wealth? He is.

133. Do you know Mr. S. S. Dickson? I do.

134. Does he occupy a good position in the mercantile community? Most assuredly.

135. And is also reputed to be a man of wealth? He is.

136. Do you know Mr. John Eales? I do.

137. Is he a man of reputed substance? Undoubtedly.

138. He would be able to pay up his shares if called upon to do so? Certainly.

139. Do you know Mr. James Taylor? I do.

140. Is he also a man well-known in commercial circles? Yes, for the last fifteen years.

141. He carries on an extensive business in Morpeth, I believe? He does.

142. Do you know Mr. Louis Wolfe Levy? I do.

143. Of what firm is he a member? The firm of David Cohen and Co.

144. Is he a man of known means? Yes, their firm does one of the largest businesses in Maitland.

145. Do you know Mr. Alexander Dodds? I do.

146. Is he reputed to be a man of wealth and property? He is.

147. Do you know Mr. James Brand Ritchie Robertson? I do.

148. Is he also a man of reputed substance? Yes, he is a large landed proprietor there.

149. Do you know Mr. Enoch Coberoft, Mr. Thomas Cadall, Mr. Charles E. Jaques, Mr. John Scott, Mr. William Henry Mullen, Mr. J. E. Wolfe, Captain Close, Mr. Alexander Browne Portus, Mr. Andrew Liddell, Mr. Isaac Gorrick, Mr. Robert Strachan, Mr. Octavius E. Middleton, Mr. P. O'Keefe, Mr. W. Lipscomb, Mr. D. Moffitt, and Mr. Duncan Sim? Yes, I know them all.

150. Are they all men of respectability and of reputed substance? I believe so.

151. At all events, they will be able to pay their shares if called upon to do so? I should say so.

152. Do you know what is the proposed capital of the Company? Yes, £25,000.

153. Are you aware what amount of this proposed capital has been already subscribed for? According to the last report I received from Morpeth, about a fortnight ago, £15,000 had been subscribed; and since then I have sent up an application for 100 shares more. Two gentlemen, friends of mine, desired me to take up fifty shares each for them. This is upwards of a week ago, and I have no doubt but that many more shares have since been taken up.

154. Generally speaking, do you know the parties who have bound themselves to subscribe the capital of this Company? I cannot speak with regard to any except those whose names appear in the published list, all of whom I know, because I have not seen the list of shareholders.

J. Campbell, Esq. shareholders. There may be a few small shareholders that I do not know; but with the bulk of them, who are men interested in the district, I must be acquainted. However, as I said, I have not seen the list, and cannot therefore speak with certainty.

25 April, 1861.

155. As a business man are you able to say, from your knowledge of the shareholders, whether the calls on the shares will be met? I have no doubt about the matter.

156. They will be met? Certainly.

157. If the whole of the capital were called in at once, would it be met? Most certainly. It is my opinion that to three-fourths of the shareholders it would be no object if the whole capital were called in to-morrow.

158. Do you, as a colonist interested in the welfare of the Colony at large, as well as in that of the district referred to, consider it advisable to pass this Bill into law—on public grounds, and leaving all mere local advantage out of the question? I do; for I believe that this line will confer a direct personal advantage upon about 20,000 people; and this altogether apart from the facility the line would give for sending produce into the interior from the port, as well as for sending exports from the interior to the port.

159. Is it not a fact that the town of Morpeth occupies a most eligible situation for the residence of a large population, being placed on a gradually rising ground, in the centre of an extensive and fertile district, and at the head of the natural navigation of a noble river? I consider it to be the best site for a town that there is upon the Hunter.

160. Is it not a fact, also, that by the employment of the public revenue in the construction of the Great Northern Railway an impediment has been created to the natural progress of the town, and that, notwithstanding its many and great advantages, it has been thrown from the natural increase of prosperity which it ought to have enjoyed, by the employment of the public revenue having operated against that increase—has not this been the effect? Yes, that is the effect that was naturally to have been anticipated from the construction of the Newcastle line; but the facilities for the shipment of goods which Morpeth enjoys has hitherto preserved the town from any serious injury. The result is that up to the present time the railway has not done so much injury to Morpeth as it would have done, had it extended further into the interior. When the line is carried beyond Singleton, no doubt its effect upon Morpeth will be much more decisive than it has yet been; but up to the present time it has always been considered as cheap to carry the goods to Morpeth and ship them thence by the steamer, as to send them by rail to Newcastle. The reason for this is that the goods trade of the river helps to fill up the steamers in the dull seasons of the year, and, consequently, until very recently the freight for goods by the steamers has been the same from Morpeth as from Newcastle.

161. Is that in consequence of the competition between the two places for the goods traffic? No. There can be no competition in this respect, as Newcastle has not and never had any goods traffic.

162. But to the extent greater or less, has not the effect been that the railway to Newcastle constructed with the public money has caused an artificial drawback to what should have been the steadily increasing prosperity of Morpeth? There can be no doubt about that. And not only as Morpeth suffered, but the two Maitlands also. All these places have felt the ill effects of the line.

163. But more particularly with regard to Morpeth? No doubt that has suffered the most.

164. Have the town and district of Morpeth had that fair field for their legitimate operations in extending the various branches of industry, that all places are supposed to have under a British Government, and that they would have had, if this railway to Newcastle had not been constructed? Not at all.

165. You consider then that giving them the right to construct this proposed railway between Maitland and Morpeth the Parliament will only be given to the latter that fair field of operation that the construction of the Great Northern line deprived it of? Certainly I do.

166. And you are of opinion that the impediment or obstacle in the way of the natural advance of Morpeth in prosperity has been entirely of an artificial character, and has been caused by the outlay of the public money? I have not the slightest hesitation in saying so.

167. By Mr. Hoskins: But you are doubtless aware that whenever a railway has been conducted past a town that had been previously prosperous, the consequence has been that the prosperity of the town has been not only temporarily, but permanently injured? Yes, such has been pretty generally the case.

168. Therefore in making this railway, the Government had not to study the interest of any particular locality, but solely to keep in view the benefits that were to be conferred upon the large number of persons who are resident in the Northern District? Do you mean in making the Northern Railway?

169. Yes? I think then in regard to that, that they only studied the people of Newcastle.

170. Surely if the people of Morpeth thought this, they might have done something to prevent it—did they protest against the line? No, I believe they did not; but it was hardly to be expected that they should do so, seeing the great apathy that exists every where in the Colony upon all public matters.

171. You are aware that it was constructed by the Government? Yes, but it was got up by a private Company.

172. Yes, but in pursuance of a determination come to by Parliament, that all railways should be in the hands of the Government, this line was taken out of the hands of the Company, and was constructed by the Government? That is all very well; but I happen to know that this railway was got up in the first instance as a private job. The meeting at which the Company was formed was not a public meeting, but was called by private circular sent round to the different parties who were to have a share in it. They started with a capital capital of £400,000, and all the shares were soon taken up; but only on the understanding and on this condition only was the Company formed, that they should get a guarantee from the Government of £5 per cent. interest on the first £100,000 paid up. With this condition the Government would not agree, but they gave a guarantee of £4 per cent.; with this the shareholders were satisfied, for they made a very good job of it, as they had money lying idle, for which they could not get more than £2½ per cent. from the Banks.

J. Campbell,
Esq.
25 April, 1861.

173. But is not the construction of this line in strict conformity with the public policy; adopted by the Legislature, that the Government alone should have the power of making railways in New South Wales? Yes; but that policy was not adopted by the Legislature until after this Company job had been consummated; and as to the policy subsequently adopted, I may say, if I am not considered indiscreet in doing so, that some little jobs can be perpetrated even by a Legislature.

174. Do you know, as a matter of fact, that the gentlemen whose names are mentioned in the Bill are actual shareholders in this proposed Company? I only know it from having been informed that they are so, and some of them are shareholders to a large amount too.

175. You have not seen their signatures to that effect? No, I have not seen their application, but I have no doubt about their being shareholders.

176. Have you yet paid any instalment on your shares? No. Three-fourths of the shares must be applied for before any call can be made; and the last I heard was that about £15,000 out of the £25,000 had been applied for. Since then I have sent in applications from two gentlemen for 50 shares each, and no doubt other applications have been sent in from other parties, though I have not yet heard to what extent.

177. Are you prepared to pay up an instalment of your shares before the Company commences operations? Yes, to-morrow if it is asked for.

178. And would you pay up all if it were considered necessary? I would.

179. Assuming that the Company should in the construction of this line exceed its present proposed capital, are you prepared to pay more than you have now subscribed for? Yes, double the amount if required.

180. Or to the extent of whatever the cost of construction may be? Yes.

181. Have you ever heard it bruited abroad that all this Company intended to do was to construct the line, and then to sell it to Government so soon as they got it into working order? No, I have not. I have never heard anything of the kind hinted.

182. You have told the Committee that you anticipate a great traffic on this proposed line in the conveyance of hay and vegetables from Morpeth to Singleton? I have.

183. You do not propose to carry this line to Singleton? No; only to Maitland.

184. Then how do you propose to convey this hay and these vegetable to Singleton? By rail.

185. By the Government line, I suppose? Yes. I presume that some arrangements will be made by the Company for the use of the Government line.

186. You fancy then that some arrangement will be made by which you will be allowed to run your trucks upon the Government line? Yes, I believe that is what is intended.

187. And suppose the Government should not assent to this arrangement, is your line likely to be a paying speculation? I see no possible reason why the Government should not assent to such an arrangement, they construct railways for the benefit of the community at large, and it is equally an advantage to the community to have their goods carried, whether they be in our trucks, or in the trucks of the Government. Besides, I can hardly imagine that the Government would construct a railway and then shut off traffic from it.

188. Then do you not think that if you are allowed to work your trucks on the Government line, you will, in effect, be diverting the trade that would otherwise come through Newcastle? I do not see how we can very well divert from Newcastle that which it has not got.

189. When the line is extended to the north, will not goods be shipped from Sydney, put from the steamer on to the trucks at Newcastle, and then carried thence by rail direct to Singleton, there to be put on drays and taken to its destination? That may be the case to some extent, but I do not think the effect of the rail will be felt until the line has got a good bit beyond Singleton.

190. Let me ask you, if you think it will pay to shift goods from the steamer on to your trucks at Morpeth, and then to take them on to Maitland and to shift them from your trucks on to those of the Government line? No, certainly not, and that is the very object we have in making an arrangement with the Government for our trucks to travel on their line, so that the goods may be taken from the vessel at Morpeth and then not shifted again until they reach their destination.

191. Under such an arrangement, the further the line was carried to the northward, the more would the traffic be diverted from Newcastle? As I said before, you cannot divert from Newcastle that which it has not got; but there is this consideration, that if you do not permit this arrangement to be made, you will actually divert from Morpeth the goods traffic which it actually at present possesses.

192. Will not the effect of establishing your line under such an arrangement as you have suggested be, that the mercantile houses, in Maitland, will lose the greater part of their up-country custom, as the goods intended for the interior will be transhipped direct for their destination, either at Newcastle or Morpeth, and will not rest in Maitland at all? No, I think not. I am under the impression that the Maitland storekeepers are masters of the situation, and that the squatters in the interior are so bound up with them, that the trade cannot be diverted from them.

193. You have spoken of the trade between Morpeth and the towns of Singleton and Muswellbrook as being likely to be increased by the formation of this line? I have; but those remarks are only applicable to dry seasons, for in good or moist seasons those localities can supply themselves.

- J. Campbell, Esq.
25 April, 1861.
194. You have also alluded to some statistics that had been compiled, and which had appeared in the Herald? I did.
195. They shewed the exports from the district, for the year, to have been a million and a half? Yes.
196. Now, let me ask you, if a very large proportion of that amount was not the value of produce brought down from the interior, above Maitland? A portion of it was.
197. But was not a very large proportion of it from the interior? No, not a large proportion; the largest share was contributed by the lower districts. One vessel might have easily taken away all the wool sent down from the interior, in that year. If I remember rightly, there were not more than 14,000 bales, that year, shipped from Morpeth.
198. Let me ask you if you do not think it would be preferable that the produce of the interior should be taken direct from Singleton to Newcastle, and there shipped, rather than to have it shifted, at Maitland, on to the Morpeth trucks, and then to be shipped, and to suffer the tedious river navigation between Morpeth and Newcastle? I cannot say what effect the two hours' river passage in the steamer is likely to have upon produce, but this I know, that if by arrangements, the Company can make goods be delivered cheaper in Morpeth than they can be in Newcastle, and that the freight to Sydney is the same from Morpeth as from Newcastle, shippers will soon find it out, and Morpeth will be the recognized port of shipment.
199. Then the reason why Morpeth will be so, is really that no freight is actually charged for goods carried by steamer between Morpeth and Newcastle? It is not exactly that, because the steamers must go up the river, and if they stop to unload at Newcastle they are delayed, whilst they are still burning coal, so that they might as well be progressing; and on that account it is much better for the steamers that they should take the goods on with them.
200. Is there not a very much superior haven at Newcastle to what there is at Morpeth? Yes, for a different class of vessels. Newcastle is a port for large sized vessels, that could not get up to Morpeth.
201. Supposing the Great Northern Railway to be completed into the far interior, would there not be every likelihood of a direct trade springing up between the Northern Districts and Newcastle, and even, ultimately, between England and Newcastle? Before you can get any direct trade between England and Newcastle, you will have to get monied men, capable of carrying on an import trade, to settle there. It does not seem probable at present.
202. There is no reason why it should not be so, or that monied men should not see the advantage of taking up a position there? No; there is no reason except this—that this particular class of trade has now been for years concentrated in Sydney; and it is always difficult, when so many interests are involved, to break up old associations of this kind.
203. Then, again, this trade that you speak of as likely to start up between Morpeth and the districts of the north and north-west, appears to me to be extremely problematical; for as the railway extends into the interior, so long as Newcastle is the terminus, so long will the traffic from these interior districts be diverted from Morpeth and Maitland to the town at which the line ends? I do not think so; at all events, not if this line of ours is constructed. We shall always have an advantage over Newcastle, because there the goods must always be twice shifted. There is no store to receive them, and when they are landed from the steamers, the probability is, if it is late in the day, that they will have to be carted to a private store to be warehoused, and then carted back and put on the trucks. But even if this is not so, they will have to lie on the wharf till the trucks are ready, and then they will have to be again shifted on to the railway trucks.
204. You are now alluding to the import trade? Yes, to the goods brought from Sydney, and intended for the interior. They would have to be transhipped twice at Newcastle, because there is no store to receive them, neither is there room to erect one. Now, where we are there is no difficulty in the matter, because the train will start from where the steamers terminate their voyage, and then the goods will be placed at once from the steamer's hold on to the trucks of the Company. And then if an arrangement can be made with the Government there is no doubt that as the line extends, the more goods will be sent by rail.
205. Goods sent from Sydney would not be delayed in Maitland? I presume not; that is to say, goods sent from Sydney direct to parties in the interior. Goods intended for the interior, but consigned to Maitland, would of course stop there.
206. Then you think that if this proposed railway is not made every extension of the Great Northern line will tend to injure Morpeth? I do, most assuredly.
207. And the only benefits that would accrue from the making of this proposed line, that is, the only practical benefits would be enjoyed by the inhabitants of Morpeth? No. The greatest practical benefits would be conferred upon the squatters and storekeepers of the far interior, who would be enabled to ship their produce and receive their supplies to and from Morpeth at a cheaper rate than from Newcastle.
208. But assuming that goods can be sent direct from Sydney to Newcastle; that they can there be placed on the railway trucks and sent direct to the interior, must not that be an advantage to the shipper as compared with sending them to Morpeth? I do not see what gain there would be to the shipper unless you assume that the Government will carry the goods between Newcastle and Morpeth for nothing, and that is hardly likely. The steamer charge between Sydney and Morpeth being the same as between Sydney and Newcastle, the shipper by sending to Morpeth must save the seventeen miles of railway carriage. It is not probable that the Government will charge the same price for delivering goods at Newcastle as for delivering them at Morpeth, 17 miles short. The result is that the shipper will will save the cost of carriage for 17 miles, at so much per ton per mile, according to the established charge. J. Campbell, Esq.

209. Then it is your opinion that if the Maitland and Morpeth line is opened all the goods traffic will pass by way of Morpeth? I hope so. 25 April, 1861.

210. You do not under any circumstances anticipate much goods traffic on the Newcastle line? Not much.

211. And when this line is opened there will be still less? I think so.

212. Then the best thing that can be done will be to take up the rails on the Newcastle line and sell them? My opinion is of course of very little weight; but it is certainly my impression that if the line had started at Morpeth, and the 17 miles now existing between there and Newcastle had been run into the interior, it would have been better for the country.

213. Do you anticipate much local traffic between Maitland and Morpeth? Yes, there is already a large traffic between the two.

214. None of the passenger traffic between Sydney and Maitland will pass through Morpeth? Yes; a good deal of the morning traffic would, because it is anything but comfortable to have to get up out of bed in the morning and have to loiter about Newcastle waiting for the train or the steamer.

215. Then in fact the result of opening this line would be that the passenger as well as the goods traffic would be taken off the Northern line? Not all of it. It would not materially interfere with the passenger traffic, except in the morning; and then, if you had moved men established in business at Newcastle, who would lay on ships of their own, there would soon be a goods traffic start up on the line. But until Newcastle possesses an export trade, and men of capital, not only with the means but with the ability to direct that trade, there will never be much goods traffic there.

216. I cannot conceive why you should imagine that Newcastle, with so much more natural advantages as a haven than Morpeth, would never be able to compete with the former in the goods traffic—its capabilities are very much greater than those of Morpeth can ever be? Newcastle has certainly great capabilities for an export trade, that must be admitted; but then you must remember that it will be a very difficult thing to take that trade away from Sydney, where it has been established for so many years. It is always difficult to take away from any place the trade it already has, as to do so requires to break up old business connections, and to form new ones. Another thing that will always operate against any such an attempt is that the squatters in the interior are now so intimately connected and mixed up with the Sydney firms that all their produce must of necessity pass through Sydney merchants' hands.

217. By Mr. Buchanan: From your observations I gather that you regard as a reckless piece of extravagance the formation of a line of railway, to run along the banks of a navigable river? I do.

218. And that upon no grounds was such an expenditure of the public money to be justified? I think not.

219. And that if the line had been commenced at the head of the river navigation, for the same expenditure that has been made the line would have now been carried for some twenty miles further into the interior? Most certainly.

220. Are you aware of the existence of very rich and extensive coal mines in the vicinity of Black Creek? I am aware of it only from information I have received on the subject. I have not actually visited them.

221. And, in the event of this line being opened, an outlet will be found for the produce of these coal mines, as well as of those at Anvil Creek? Yes. I have no doubt but a very large quantity will be sent to Sydney; and I am sure they will be in great demand there from their very superior quality; they are of the best kind of what is called Cannel coal.

222. If this line be completed, the establishment of a large and extensive coal trade between Morpeth and Sydney will be the result? Upon this point I can only give you what I was myself told on Saturday last by a gentleman who is connected with the mines at the Four-Mile Creek, in which he is very largely interested. He was asked to take some shares in this Company, and he said he would not, as he was not going to aid in the establishment of a Company to injure himself, because the opening of this line would bring about such an opposition in the coal trade that would assuredly destroy all his interest in the trade.

223. Are you aware that there is already a very considerable coal trade now carrying on between Morpeth and Sydney? Yes, there is a pretty good trade of the kind; the steamers alone consume a very large quantity.

224. Is it not the case that many coming to load coal at Newcastle, and being unable to get under the shoots there, proceed up to Morpeth to get their cargo, in order not to be delayed? Yes, the smaller class of vessels often do so.

225. The coals thus taken aboard by these vessels, as well as those supplied to the steamers have to be carted down to the wharf by drays? Yes; they are all taken down by horse and cart.

226. And at a very considerable cost? Yes; I have known as much as 12s. per ton paid for carting coal from the pit to Morpeth Wharf.

227. This high price of carriage must necessarily tend to impede the trade? No doubt of it; it is all but a complete check to it. Capt. Russell's mine, which had been opened, has been closed for some time past in consequence of the cost of carriage.

228. Then the establishment of this line of railway would give greatly increased facilities to the coal trade of the district? It must of necessity do so, when, as I tell you, as much as 12s. per ton has been paid for carriage. I have myself known that price to have been paid.

229. Notwithstanding the drawback of the line of railway between Newcastle and Maitland, there

J. Campbell, Esq. there is still a good goods traffic between Morpeth and the interior? Yes; almost the entire traffic goes that way.

230. With this traffic, then, the Newcastle line has not as yet interfered? Not at all.

25 April, 1861. 231. So that if this be the effect whilst goods have to be transported to and from Morpeth by drays, the traffic will be increased rather than diminished, by the additional facilities given to it? That will certainly be the case.

232. You know the port of Newcastle? I do.

233. Is it a port that is difficult of access? It is; to large sailing vessels it is very difficult.

234. And to small vessels also? Yes, but more particularly to large ones; in fact, you cannot get into the port except the wind is blowing in a particular direction; and in southerly winds it is exceedingly dangerous to attempt to enter.

235. It is not then in the slightest degree probable that, with all these dangers and difficulties connected with it, and with such a noble and safe harbour as that of Sydney to compete with, any great trade between England and Newcastle direct will ever exist? No, never. Merchants will always prefer Sydney as their port, on account of its being so much safer for their vessels, and so much more convenient for the landing of their goods. And as to the squatters; even if there were no other considerations to lead them to send their produce to Sydney, they would always prefer to do so, rather than risk the danger of losing it by shipping at Newcastle.

236. In fact, the whole course of business since the establishment of the Colony, as well as the many advantages of Sydney as a port, have tended to centralize the whole trade of the Colony in Sydney, in such a way that it will be many years before Newcastle has any large trade of its own, except in coals? It will never have a large trade, until it has merchants of its own doing a direct import business with England.

237. Of course you are of opinion, that between flourishing towns, such as Maitland and Morpeth, a large passenger traffic on the proposed line is to be anticipated? Yes; even between the two towns there will be a large traffic.

238. Then, as a mere commercial speculation, you believe that this proposed railway will be a most paying and most lucrative concern? I do.

239. And will be of great advantage not merely to the district, but to the public generally? That is my opinion.

240. By Mr. Hoskins: And where is this great passenger traffic to come from? There is a large population in these towns alone. West Maitland, I suppose, contains as many as 5,000 inhabitants; East Maitland numbers a population of about 2,000; and Morpeth has about the same number. These numbers are independent of the population of the surrounding districts; but, taking them also into account, we have certainly a sufficient population wherewith to create a passenger traffic, more particularly when people had the advantage of rapidity and cheapness in travelling. There is a very large passenger traffic now between Maitland and Morpeth, and yet the fare charged is half-a-crown. Now this will most certainly be increased when people can go backwards and forwards for threepence.

241. You are alluding now to the mere local traffic? Yes.

242. Do you happen to know how much of the capital of this Company has been subscribed for, or to what amount applications for shares have been made by persons resident in the locality? I believe I can tell you, at a rough guess, what amount of shares have been taken up in Sydney.

243. How much? There have been shares representing £4,000 taken up in Sydney. The rest of the capital subscribed has been found by residents of the Hunter District.

244. You spoke just now of the many dangers and difficulties to be encountered by sailing vessels in entering the port of Newcastle; now, are not these remarks equally applicable to vessels coming to Morpeth, seeing that they also have to enter the port of Newcastle? Just the same; but it must be remembered that these remarks do not apply to steam vessels the same as to sailing vessels.

245. Then the trade of Morpeth is mainly dependant upon the steam vessels? Yes, for the quickness and regularity of their passages have completely driven all the sailing vessels out of the trade, and there are no sailing vessels come up to Morpeth now, except some few of the smaller class of colliers.

246. But how is it with regard to the time employed in the river passage—are not sailing vessels and even the steamers often delayed for two, three, and four hours by sticking on the flats? No, not now. There has been no delay of this kind for the last twelve months—ever since the dredge has been in the river. The steamers and small sailing vessels can now go up the river at all times without any fear of the flats.

247. By Mr. Buchanan: There are six large steamers, I believe, now trading between Morpeth and Sydney? Only five, I think, at the present moment.

248. However, these steamers are always crowded with passengers at every trip, besides which, they are well freighted with goods, even to having their decks loaded? Yes, they are very well patronised.

249. There are also several omnibusses plying between Maitland and Morpeth for the convenience of passengers? Not recently; I do not believe that there are now more than two omnibusses at the most now plying between the two towns.

250. These are constantly filled with passengers at every trip of the steamer? Well, I cannot speak as to that, because I have not been there for the last twelve months, and, consequently, I cannot speak from my own knowledge.

251. But from the experience you have had of the passenger traffic, acquired during your long residence and intimate acquaintance with the district, you are enabled to say that it will form no inconsiderable item in the revenue of the proposed Company? I look upon it as very likely that it will be so.

Mr. Philip John Cohen called in and examined :—

252. By the Chairman: You are an old resident in the Colony, I believe, Mr. Cohen? Yes; for the last thirty years.

253. For a considerable number of years you have been connected with the traffic of the Hunter River District? Yes, for the last ten years.

254. What situation did you first fill in regard to that trade? I was a clerk to the Hunter River Steam Navigation Company.

255. And you continued with that Company until it merged into the Australasian Steam Navigation Company? I did.

256. Since then you have removed to the employment of the Hunter River New Steam Navigation Company? Yes; I am now Manager of that Company.

257. From the nature of the avocations you have followed, you are well acquainted with the details of the Hunter River trade? Yes; for, besides my employment in the two Companies, I resided in the district for fourteen years.

258. Was that prior to your connection with these two Companies? Yes.

259. Are you aware that certain gentlemen have petitioned the Assembly for an Act to incorporate a Company, to be called "The Maitland and Morpeth Railway Company"? I am.

260. Have you seen the Bill which these persons require to be passed into law? I have not.

261. In the Preamble of the Bill it is alleged that "it would be of great public advantage that a line of Railway should be constructed and maintained between the town of Morpeth in the Colony of New South Wales and the town of Maitland in the said Colony for the more regular and expeditious conveyance of the important and increasing commerce of the said places." Now, from your knowledge of the district, acquired by long residence, and by the peculiar nature of your business, do you believe that the construction of this line will be a great public advantage? I have not the slightest doubt about it. It most certainly would.

262. Why do you think this? Because a railway between Maitland and Morpeth will tend to improve the trade of the district generally. Even now all the goods coming from Sydney find their way to Morpeth; and all the cultivation produce from the Hunter, from the neighbourhood of Morpeth, from the Paterson, and from the Williams, all comes to Morpeth, and goes thence by steam to Sydney. This is the case now, though carriage is troublesome and expensive, and it would be still more so if carriage were made easy and inexpensive. There is no doubt also that if communication with the interior were opened up, not only would the trade of Morpeth be improved but the value of land in its neighbourhood, and the cultivation of the land now occupied would be equally improved in consequence of the new markets that would be opened.

263. How do you arrive at this conclusion? From this fact, that some ten or twelve years ago there was but very little land in cultivation round about Morpeth; but when the gold fields sprang up, an impetus was given to industry, a new market was opened, and every acre of land was soon occupied and in an active state of cultivation.

264. Sydney is, I believe, the chief city whence the supplies for the whole of the northern districts are drawn? Yes, and the only one.

265. And these goods once shipped in Sydney on the Hunter River steamers are carried right up to the head of navigation, without being landed at Newcastle? Yes; they are never landed at Newcastle unless intended for consumption there.

266. Then all the goods coming from Sydney, except the few that are required for the supply of Newcastle itself, do as a matter of fact come to Morpeth? Yes, the whole of the goods required for the Northern Districts, above Hexham, are landed in Morpeth, and go through Morpeth to their destination.

267. That is as far as the import trade is concerned—now do you receive on your steamers none of the produce from the interior at Newcastle, after being brought down by railway? No, I do not suppose we get £1 a week for freight of goods brought down by railway.

268. Manifestly then it would be of advantage, in so far as this portion of the trade is concerned, that there should be some ready means of communication between Maitland and Morpeth? It would be a very great advantage to the inhabitants, and not only to them but to the Northern Railway also, for our line would serve the purpose of a feeder to that line.

269. Do you happen to know anything of the amount of traffic that passes through Morpeth? Yes, I can, as far as our Company are concerned, tell you the amount of traffic through the town.

270. Have you any statistics on the subject? I have a few rough notes of the amount of freight received by our Company. From these I find that last year we brought in our steamers to Sydney 7,093 bales of wool, all of which were shipped at Morpeth: a large quantity of hides, tallow, skins, and of all kinds of live stock, including poultry, pigs, geese, calves, and sheep. In fact, as far as live stock are concerned, I believe that the Sydney market is mainly supplied from the Hunter River District.

271. That has been the traffic from Morpeth to Sydney,—what has been the traffic the other way? The freight we have received for goods sent from Sydney to Morpeth, or what we call our export trade, amounted last year, to £9,801 12s. 8d., which would give about 14,800 tons.

272. During that time, what amount of wool was received on board the steamers, at Newcastle? None.

273. What other produce? Nothing; all that we have received from Newcastle, on our return voyages to Sydney, has been a few hides.

274. There are then no exports from Newcastle? None that we carry. The export trade is exclusively confined to coal.

Mr. P. J.
Cohen.

25 April, 1861.

- Mr. P. J. Cohen.
25 April, 1861.
275. And now, with regard to the passenger traffic? The passenger traffic, both ways, during the year 1860, brought in a revenue to the Company of £10,423. During the first three months of the present year our revenue from the same source has been £3,350.
276. Can you give us any idea of the number of passengers conveyed? I cannot give you the exact number; but they average about 400 a week, from Sydney to Morpeth. I may mention, however, that a part of the passengers land at Newcastle, and go on by train to Maitland. The cabin passengers generally take this route.
277. Have you any means of distinguishing those that land at Newcastle from those that go on to Morpeth? Not the exact number; but I should think that about two-thirds of the passengers land at Newcastle.
278. Can you give the Committee any information in regard to the number of passengers that leave Morpeth and Newcastle for Sydney? There is about an equal number each way—to and from Sydney.
279. Then, the numbers that leave and the numbers that arrive being about equal, does the same proportion you have just mentioned, in regard to the arrivals, hold good with respect to the departures; that is, do two-thirds of those who go from the Hunter take the steamer at Newcastle? Yes, that is about the average.
280. Do you know anything of the produce of the districts round about Morpeth? I do.
281. Take the Paterson, for example, what are its products? Vegetable produce, poultry, and eggs.
282. Speaking from your own knowledge acquired during your long residence in that part of the country, can you say whether much of the produce of the country around Morpeth finds its way upwards; that is, instead of coming to Sydney, goes in the opposite direction? Yes, a portion of the produce goes to Maitland. It goes either there or to Morpeth. There are farms all over the country that lies between Morpeth and Maitland.
283. That is not what I mean. Take the Paterson for instance: does any large portion of its produce go to Maitland or to the districts above Maitland? No; very little goes in that direction, for it mostly all comes down to Sydney.
284. Is there much commercial traffic between the two towns of Morpeth and Maitland? Yes; there is a very great traffic between the two places. All the goods for the Upper Hunter have to go by that way.
285. What I mean is, is there any traffic between the two towns? Yes; there is the conveyance of all the goods for the Maitland storekeepers. They all come through Morpeth.
286. You do not understand my meaning. I wish to know if there is any business transacted between the merchants of Morpeth and those of Maitland? Not much.
287. And with regard to the districts beyond Maitland? All their supplies are received through Morpeth.
288. Beyond Maitland then, and for the whole distance up the country, the trade is very considerable? The whole business of the interior, both in sending supplies and receiving produce, is transacted through Morpeth.
289. Then, speaking generally, do you think it would be for the convenience and advantage of the great bulk of the colonists resident in these districts, that this line should be constructed? Yes, most undoubtedly; and it would do more, for it would very largely increase the present exports. If this line were formed we should have several new coal mines opened, which cannot be worked now on account of the cost of carriage. I need not say that this would form a very valuable branch of trade, and would greatly benefit the district; and to shew the demand that exists I may mention that our Company consume 600 tons of coal a month, the whole of which are taken from Morpeth; and the old Company takes about the same. This coal is now supplied to us at the same price as at Newcastle, but with railway carriage it could be delivered in Morpeth at about 6s. per ton.
290. You are a shareholder in this Company? I am.
291. To what extent? Only to the extent of £100—twenty shares.
292. Do you know many of the shareholders in this Company? I do.
293. Do you know the persons named in the first clause of this Bill:—Mr. Benjamin Lee, junr., Mr. S. S. Dickson, Mr. John Eales, Mr. James Taylor, Mr. Lewis Wolfe Levy, Mr. Alexander Dodds, Mr. J. B. R. Robertson, Mr. Coberoft, Mr. Thomas Cadall, Mr. C. E. Jaques, Mr. J. Scott, Mr. W. H. Mullen, Mr. J. E. Wolfe, Captain Close, Mr. A. B. Portus, Mr. A. Liddell, Mr. J. Gorrick, Mr. R. Strachan, Mr. O. E. Middleton, Mr. P. O'Keefe, Mr. W. Lipscomb, Mr. D. Moffitt, and Mr. D. Sim? Yes, I know them all.
294. You are acquainted with all these persons whose names I have enumerated? Yes.
295. And can you say from the knowledge you have of them, whether they are all men of reputed substance and respectability? Yes, I believe them to be so.
296. And that as men of business they will be ready to meet the calls upon the shares, whenever they are made? Yes, undoubtedly.
297. Even if the capital should all be called up at once? Yes, I am sure they would.
298. In so far as your knowledge of the persons who have subscribed for shares extends, are they persons of good standing socially and commercially? All those whose names have been read are so. They are either settlers or traders, or gentlemen having a large interest in the district.
299. You have no doubt then about the perfect bonâ fides of the Company? Not the slightest.
300. What is the proposed amount of the capital of the Company? £25,000.
301. And what amount of this has been subscribed for up to the present time? Mr. Lee told me last week that upwards of £17,000 had been subscribed.
302. He is Chairman of the Company, I believe? He is.
303. And, therefore, likely to be well informed upon the subject? Yes.

304. Do you then consider that it would be advisable for the Parliament to grant this Act that has been petitioned for? I do; for I think they will be doing an injustice to the country if they do not pass it.

Mr. P. J.
Cohen.

25 April, 1861.

305. Do you ever pay any attention to the proceedings of Parliament? Sometimes.

306. You read the newspapers in which those proceedings are published to the country? I do occasionally whenever any matter of great interest is under discussion.

307. Do you know from having read those proceedings that the Minister for Public Works came down to the House and asked Parliament to vote a large sum of money, in order to construct this very line of railway upon Government account? I do.

308. Did you take notice of the proceedings upon that occasion? I did.

309. And what was the reason given for refusing this vote, as you gathered it from those proceedings? When the vote was opposed, the Government then stated, that if the money was not granted, the line would be sure to be taken up by private enterprise.

310. What answer was made to this? It was said, "Then let private enterprise do it"; that this was a mere branch line, and that the Government ought not to meddle with any but main lines.

311. Was not the principal reason given rather this—that branch lines should be left to private enterprise, and that this particular line was more especially a fitting object for the exercise of private enterprise? Yes; that was one of the reasons—and that the House did not wish the Government to deviate from the main line of road.

312. By Mr. Hoskins: You say you know all the gentlemen whose names are enumerated in the first clause of the Bill? I do.

313. Are they all shareholders in the Hunter River New Steam Navigation Company? Not all of them; some of them are. Mr. Lee and Mr. O'Keeffe are shareholders in the H. R. N. S. N. Company.

314. Are not the majority of them shareholders in that Company? Mr. Eales is not, Mr. Dodds is not, Mr. Cobercroft is not, Mr. Cadall is not, Mr. Jaques is not. No, I do not think the majority are shareholders in that Company.

315. Do you know whether the majority of them are not owners of property in Morpeth? I do not think they are. Mr. Taylor, Mr. Dickson, Captain Close, and Mr. Portus, are the only four amongst them, who, to my knowledge, possess property in Morpeth.

316. You have already said that you are a shareholder in this Company? I have.

317. In the event of the Company having to expend upon the construction of this line more money than they have subscribed, would you be willing to pay any increased call upon your shares that may be required? Yes, quite willing.

318. Have you looked through the different clauses of this Bill? I have not. I have not seen it until now.

319. You are not then aware whether it contains a provision, under which the Company anticipate being able to ask the Government for a grant of public money? I am not aware that it does so, nor do I know that such a question has ever been mooted.

320. You expect that this line will prove a feeder to the Great Northern line; but how do you anticipate that such a result as this will be brought about? Because, without this line, the railway will carry no goods upwards; for all the goods destined for localities between Singleton and Maitland will go from Morpeth by cart.

321. Then your railway will, in effect, only bring to the Northern line the traffic that it has had hitherto, or rather, I should say, the traffic that it would have were all the goods forwarded by rail from Newcastle? It would have that, and all the traffic that now goes from Morpeth to Maitland, and through Maitland to the interior.

322. But that is traffic that the line ought now to have, by way of Newcastle? It is traffic that the Northern line will never have, if this proposed line is not made.

323. By the course which you propose, you will actually be diverting traffic from Newcastle? There is no traffic there to divert.

324. But if this line be refused, when the Northern line reaches Singleton, will not the goods which are now taken to Morpeth, and thence, through Maitland, into the interior, be landed from the steamers at Newcastle, placed on the railway trucks there, and carried up direct to Singleton? No, I think not, and for this reason, that if goods are landed in Newcastle, there is no place to put them in. They must, therefore, be carted away and stored in warehouses, to wait the departure of the goods train; they will then have to be carted from the warehouse to the train, and put into the trucks. Now all this must cause great trouble and expense, from the numerous shiftings that the goods will have to undergo. Besides this, the port is not at all adapted to anything like a large shipping trade; the wharves are narrow and inconvenient, and the channel is an exceedingly dangerous one.

325. I cannot understand how all this shifting will be required, since the railway now comes down to the wharf, and the goods can be taken at once from the steamer and placed upon the railway trucks? Yes, that is the wharf where the steamers at present lay; but it is exceedingly small and inconvenient, and we are not going to be kept there.

326. Would it not be a convenience to consumers in the interior, if they could get their goods with only one transshipment; that is, that they should be taken from off the steamer on to the railway trucks, and then carried direct up to their destination? No doubt it would; but you cannot do that at Newcastle.

327. Why not—there are precisely the same conveniences for so doing at Newcastle as there are at Morpeth? No; the goods are sure to be more knocked about in landing at Newcastle. The goods are now taken out of the steamer and put upon the railway trucks; but then they have to wait for the departure of the train, and have to be carted away to some store for safety—there being no stores at the station in which they can be put.

328. That, however, is a matter that can soon be remedied by the Government erecting a store

Mr. P. J.
Cohen.

store at the station, and then, if there are the same conveniences at Newcastle as now exist at Morpeth for the landing and security of goods, will it not be to the advantage of the shipper for the interior to send his goods there? I do not think that you will ever succeed in getting the same conveniences at Newcastle as we have at Morpeth, for the wharf there is open and incommodious, and so placed that no stores can be erected on it. We are now very much cramped up for room there, even with the small traffic we have; and the water too is very shallow where our boats now have to lay.

329. Have you any objection to state the reason why your Company now carry goods up the Hunter, between Newcastle and Morpeth, for nothing—for that is really the effect of your making the same charge for goods landed at Morpeth as for those left at Newcastle? I have no objection whatever to tell you the reason. It is because it is a very great source of delay for the steamer to stop and land any great quantity of goods at Newcastle. We must go up to Morpeth, and it is very immaterial to us whether we carry the goods we have on board a few miles further or not; in fact we had rather take them on than have to be delayed. Besides this, in taking the goods out at Newcastle we have not only the delay, but the same amount of labour, and infinitely more trouble than if we landed them at Morpeth.

330. That then is the only consideration that has led your Company to carry goods for nothing between Newcastle and Morpeth? Yes, that is all; but then we do not now carry goods for nothing between Morpeth and Newcastle, as, for some time back, we have landed goods cheaper at Newcastle than at Morpeth. At the same time, we had very much sooner land them at Morpeth even at the same price, on account of the extra detention and trouble we are put to.

331. There is not now a very extensive local traffic between Morpeth and Maitland? You mean the exclusive traffic between the two towns?

332. Yes, a passenger traffic of residents? No, there is not much of that traffic at present; but when this railway is made I anticipate a great increase in this particular. Many persons will go backward and forward when they can do so quickly and cheaply.

333. By Mr. Buchanan: You have been asked whether the gentlemen whose names appear in the first clause of this Bill are men of substance,—now tell me whether in your opinion the names there published do not represent capital to the extent of a quarter of a million sterling? Oh, yes, very much more than that; there are two or three names there that would represent that amount.

334. The goods traffic from Morpeth upwards to the interior is of a very extensive and important character? It is.

335. And that all goes up now upon drays? Yes.

336. Have you seen many sailing vessels loading at Morpeth? No, not many. It does not pay them to come there now at the price freights are going.

337. Between the two Companies there are now six steamers plying between Morpeth and Sydney? Five only now, one has recently been taken off.

338. There were six until very recently? Yes.

339. And these have always been crammed full of passengers, both on the upwards and downwards trips, besides having a deck load in addition? Yes, they are always well filled.

340. If the river were cleaned properly with the dredge, would not vessels of any size be able to come up and load at Morpeth. There are only, I believe, some two or three places that prevent them from doing so at present? Yes, a channel might be made for them, if it was worth their while to come up.

341. Might they not be induced to come up to take in a loading of coal? No doubt they might.

342. Have you heard of the late discoveries of very extensive and valuable coal mines in the district above Morpeth? Yes, I have known for some years that there were such mines, but owing to the cost of carriage they have not been worked.

343. And some of the coal produced from these mines is even better than that found at Newcastle? Yes, in many cases it is. Captain Russell's coal was very much better. There is also plenty of very fine coal at Black Creek.

344. And in the event of this proposed line of railway being constructed, it would afford facilities for a large traffic in coal between Morpeth and Sydney? Yes, and from the prices charged for coal at Newcastle very much to the advantage of the Sydney people, for they will be supplied from Morpeth at a much cheaper rate.

345. Have you not seen a very large number of live stock coming down the road to be shipped at Morpeth for Sydney? Yes, daily.

346. Would not this form a very considerable item in the revenue of the proposed railway? Yes, it is now a very important branch of the traffic now existing between Sydney and Morpeth.

347. Every steamer that leaves Morpeth takes a large quantity of live stock on board? Yes, almost every trip our boats bring down about a hundred and fifty sheep each.

348. The steamers are never delayed now by being stuck upon the flats? No, there has been no case of the kind for the last fifteen or twenty months. The channel is quite clear now.

349. Have you noticed the existence of any considerable traffic in hay between Morpeth and Maitland? Yes, there is a very large quantity comes down to Morpeth for shipment.

350. Then, in the event of this railway being established, this traffic would also go to swell the returns of the Company? Yes, and would tend to add to the supply forwarded by cheapening the cost of conveyance.

351. Have you seen notices put up in Morpeth advertising for drays as wanted for the carriage of goods thence up into the interior? Yes, repeatedly; all the trade with the interior is carried on through Morpeth.

352. Then, of course, from all this, you can have no hesitation in saying that this railway will will prove a very lucrative concern, and that there is every prospect that it will pay the subscribers a handsome per centage on their outlay? That is my impression, and it is on that account that I have taken shares in it.

Mr. P. J.
Cohen.

353. The large population of the districts which surround Maitland and Morpeth will alone furnish a passenger traffic for the line that will be very considerable? Yes, because very many persons will travel between the two places, when they can go cheaply and quickly, who now never think of going at the rate they have to pay.

25 April, 1861.

354. What is the fare charged now between the the two places? I believe it is half-a-crown.

355. By Mr. Hoskins: Presuming that this proposed line is not made, will there not be an increased goods traffic on the Newcastle line, so soon as the Northern Railway reaches Singleton? No, I think not; there may be a small increase, but not to any extent.

356. Not as the line gets further into the interior? No, I think not.

357. And why? Because parties in the interior are so bound up and interested in the merchants and storekeepers of Maitland and Sydney, that even if the harbour of Newcastle presented infinitely greater facilities for the shipment and debarkation of goods than it now has, and even if the accommodation of the Northern line was all that could be wished, these persons would never allow their produce to come down to Newcastle, and to be shipped off direct. As things are, however, they know well that it is much better for them to send their produce to Morpeth for shipment, because it does not get knocked about in the way it does at Newcastle.

358. But, even at Morpeth, the goods will have to be transhipped twice? No; not if we have the railway, because the line will come right down to our landing stage; the goods will be put into our stores, and thence on to the steamer. Now, if goods go to Newcastle, they have to be taken off the railway trucks, and then carried by drays into some of the stores in town; they have then to be taken from the stores by drays down to the wharf to be shipped by the steamers. Now, it is evident that all this shifting must not only increase the cost of carriage, but must also tend to injure the goods.

359. By Mr. Buchanan: Were you connected with the H. R. S. N. Company before the Great Northern Railway was constructed? No, I was not.

360. Can you, however, say whether the opening of that line has made any perceptible difference in the amount of goods carried between Morpeth and Newcastle by your Company now, as compared with what they carried prior to the construction of the line? It has made a difference in our passenger traffic, but not in our goods traffic.

361. It has not injured the goods traffic? Not in the least; it has had rather a contrary effect, for we have increased our goods traffic since then by something like £200 per month.

362. It has not decreased the quantity of goods sent from Morpeth? Not at all. The line is never used for the conveyance of goods.

HENRY PARKES, ESQUIRE, IN THE CHAIR.

John Whitton, Esq., called in and examined:—

363. By the Chairman: You are Engineer-in-Chief for Railways in this Colony? I am.
364. Perhaps you are aware that certain gentlemen have applied to Parliament for a Bill to incorporate a Company who have in contemplation the construction of a railway between Morpeth and Maitland? I am.

J. Whitton,
Esq.

26 April, 1861.

365. You have a copy of the Bill before you? I have.

366. Have you looked through the clauses with regard to the construction of bridges? Yes, so far as the clauses are concerned, but I have had no opportunity of reading the Bill through until this morning.

367. You are acquainted with the line of country through which it is intended to carry the railway? Yes, I laid down the line.

368. Does the projected line come into contact with Government works of any description? No, it does not, except the Pitnacree crossing.

369. Are you acquainted with the town of Morpeth? I have been there two or three times.

370. Do you know the streets to be intersected by the proposed line of railway; it crosses two or three streets I believe? I think there are none intersected by the present line, the extension down to the wharves might have to pass through the streets; but I believe the present line only extends as far as the Queen's Wharf.

371. Are you acquainted with the streets which the extension would cross? If you mean the extension to the wharves, yes.

372. It is proposed, Mr. Whitton, to carry out this extension across Northumberland-street, Robert-street, and George-street, but it is stated that there is little traffic in these streets, in fact, that they are scarcely used, and that it will in no way interfere with what traffic may pass down these streets. Are you acquainted with the localities, and can you say whether

- J. Whitton, Esq.
26 April, 1861.
- whether it would interfere with the traffic in these streets? It would, I think, be better, if it did not cross either of these streets, there is no necessity for it. A better line might be carried down the north side of Steamer-street, running on a level with the New Hunter River Company's wharf, and the wharf of the A. S. N. Company, so that goods brought by or to the steamers, might be transferred without cranes at all. I think it would be difficult to bring the line in the way proposed. I think it should be carried along by the houses on the north side of Steamer-street, and be continued along the River Hunter at the bottom of Northumberland-street, in front of Portus' Mill, on the river side, and at the bottom of Robert-street sheds might then be erected on a level with the wharves of the Hunter River Steam Packet Company, and also on a level with the wharf of the A. S. N. Company, so that goods might be transferred from the rail to the steamer, or from the steamer to the rail without the necessity for cartage. If the present line were to be carried out, goods would have to be carried by carts about 200 yards; but an objection may be raised to the proposal I have stated by saying that the rails, if on the same level as the present wharves, would be below the level of the floods. My idea, however, was to have large warehouses erected at the Queen's Wharf for storing the goods above the reach of the floods, in which the goods might be stored as soon as they were landed.
373. Suppose the line were carried out as projected—crossing these streets—would it cause any injury that would be a strong objection to it on behalf of any portion of the public? I do not think so. There must be very little traffic in these streets.
374. That traffic would not be impeded in any way? Well, level crossings in streets are generally objectionable; but I do not think there is sufficient traffic in these streets to justify an abandonment of the proposal to take the line across them or to incur an increased expenditure in construction.
375. Would you be good enough to look to the clauses of the Bill from 105 to 107—you have read those clauses? Yes.
376. Is the provision sufficient for the purpose intended? Quite sufficient.
377. Do you know any objection on public grounds, or on the ground of interference with the right of highways or with regard to any public work? No, I do not know of any. There will be a slight diversion of the Morpeth Road, but I do not see any objection on that account. It would, indeed, be improving that road.
378. The diversion of that road near Mrs. Martin's house would be an improvement? Yes, both the diversion would be an improvement on the road.
379. By Mr. Buchanan: There are no engineering difficulties in the way? None whatever.
380. The line of country is almost a dead level? Yes.
381. I believe the landed proprietors have no objection to the line? I think not.
382. It does not interfere in any way with any public works? No. The landowners had no objection whatever when I was engaged in laying down the proposed line there.

Patrick MacAuliffe, Esq., called in and examined:—

- P. MacAuliffe, Esq.
26 April, 1861.
383. By the Chairman: You are a resident in the town of Morpeth? I am.
384. You are aware that certain gentlemen have petitioned the Legislative Assembly for an Act to incorporate a Company to construct a railway from Maitland to Morpeth? I am, sir.
385. You have a copy of the Bill before you? I have a copy of the Bill.
386. Do you know all the gentlemen whose names are in the first clause of this Bill? Yes, I know them all.
387. Are they persons of reputed property and respectable standing? They are.
388. You can state that of your own knowledge? Of my own knowledge.
389. What is the proposed capital of this Company? £25,000.
390. Can you state what proportion of that capital has been subscribed? Yes, there has been subscribed £17,325.
391. Have you a list of the shareholders? Yes.
392. Have you any objection to hand in this list, to be appended to your evidence? No. (Vide Appendix A.) We have a few more applications on the way, but they did not reach me in time to include them among the others. By these the capital will be considerably increased.
393. You have looked over the names of all the persons mentioned in the Bill as shareholders, I imagine? Yes, I have.
394. Speaking generally, do you, of your own knowledge, as a resident in the district and as a commercial man, believe the whole of these shareholders will be prepared to meet their calls? I am certain of it, from my own knowledge.
395. Suppose the capital were called up at once, would the call be met? They have the means of meeting it.
396. It is stated in the preamble of this Bill that it would be of great public advantage to construct this proposed line of railway—are you of opinion that it would be of great public advantage? Yes, I am.
397. You are the Secretary of the Provisional Committee? I am.
398. In what way would it be of public advantage? On account of the extensive intercourse and large amount of business transacted in the district; and also on account of the great agricultural and mineral resources of the district. There are two sections of coal, almost new, which, when facilities for transport are obtained, might form a valuable export from the Colony, which, again, would call for extensive shipment. One of these I will take the liberty to name, that is the Four Mile Creek Coal, which is brought into Morpeth at an an expense for cartage of 5s. or 6s. a ton, and being sold in the township at about 12s. 6d., there is a charge of about 45 per cent. for carriage. About 1,400 tons are brought into Morpeth monthly, for use in the town, and for the purposes of steamers.

P. MacAuliffe,
Esq.

26 April, 1861.

399. This is independent of the exports proper from Morpeth? Yes.

400. Where is Four Mile Creek situated? About six miles from Morpeth.

401. In what direction? Perhaps about south-west of Morpeth, or west-south-west. Indeed I am not certain that it is not north-west.

402. Is the agricultural district around Morpeth that portion which might be considered as belonging to the town, that being its head quarters—very productive? Very; it is a splendid alluvial soil.

403. It is also populously occupied? Very; every inch almost is cultivated.

404. What is the character of the produce of that district? Wheat, grain, and all descriptions of hay.

405. Can you enumerate the heads of produce? I am prepared to do so if I shall not detain the Committee too long. I have returns that will shew it. I would enumerate products as proper to the district—hay, wheat, flour, maize, barley, oats, potatoes, onions, eggs, butter, cheese, poultry, hams, bacon, pork, horses, pigs, cattle, sheep, colonial wine, oranges, and other fruit, tobacco, coal, pumpkins, and vegetables generally, honey, sheepskins, timber, bark, soap, &c., &c.

406. Where do these settlers generally find a market for their produce? Sydney is the principal market.

407. Do you think they find any market in Maitland, or the country beyond that? They do to some extent. There is a large intercourse by drays between Morpeth and Maitland.

408. Is there not some traffic up through Maitland to the Western Gold Fields by way of Mudgee? Yes.

409. If the Northern Railway is carried on to Singleton, do you suppose the agricultural district around Morpeth would find a market in that direction for its produce, its cheese, its butter, its hay, and so forth? I feel certain that it would, and to a large extent.

410. Has it done so hitherto? No; the difficulty and expense of transport has been so great that the communication is cut off in a great degree.

411. Do you know what the population of the town of Morpeth is? I am not prepared to speak of the population of the town of Morpeth; but I believe I speak officially when I say 4,000 is the population of Morpeth and the country immediately around—say for a mile and a half around it. It is a thickly populated agricultural country, being all producers of one sort or another.

412. Do you know whether the traffic between Sydney and the northern districts above Maitland comes by way of Newcastle or Maitland, or by way of Morpeth? Yes, by way of Morpeth.

413. I believe the whole of the imported goods are shipped by steamers at Sydney for that district? Yes.

414. Is there any import trade to Newcastle? I believe there is none. It was attempted on one occasion, but it failed, and there is none there now.

415. The whole of the imported goods coming from Sydney for the supply of the interior districts come by way of Morpeth? Yes, for all the interior.

416. The whole of this goods traffic continues to Morpeth? Passes through Morpeth.

417. To the head of navigation as formerly? Yes, carried up there.

418. Is there much intercourse between the towns of Morpeth and Maitland, which is natural and peculiar to the towns, and arising out of their own communities? I would say a great deal. The traffic passing through the toll-bar there is very large indeed—enormous. Perhaps it would not be irregular in me to reply more fully to the question about coals.

419. You are at liberty to state any facts with reference to the advantages mentioned in the preamble of this Bill, wherein it is stated that this railway is required for the more regular and expeditious conveyance of the important and increasing commerce of the said places, and for facilitating communication between the north-western interior and the port of Morpeth; and also that certain persons are willing to establish a Joint Stock Company for the purpose of constructing a railway? I would recite one important fact, as bearing upon the productiveness of this part of the Colony, with regard to an article not yet brought into play in consequence of the difficulty and expense of carriage. I refer particularly to the Cannel coal, which has not hitherto been exported from the Colony. It is found in great quantities in seams thirty feet thick at Black Creek. Cannel coal at Home is generally used for gas and household purposes. It was found on the Great Northern line, and it could be brought down to Morpeth by the proposed line in any quantities, and at so cheap a rate as to at once make it available for consumption. As a public advantage I may speak positively that the demand for such an article would be almost unlimited. There are a variety of other productions. There is lime-stone which would come to Morpeth now but for the want of means of carriage.

420. Is that all you desire to say on that subject? With regard to the passenger traffic I am prepared to say that with the facilities that would be afforded by the proposed railway the convenience would be immense to the district.

421. By Mr. Hoskins: Are the persons whose names you see mentioned in the first clause of this Bill shareholders in the Company? Not all of them. Mr. Benjamin Lee (the Chairman) is, Mr. Dickson is, Mr. John Eales is, Mr. James Taylor is, Mr. Wolfe is, Mr. Levy is an intended shareholder, he has signified his intention to send in an application; Mr. Alexander Dodds will send in his application in a day or two, having stated that he would; Mr. James B. R. Robertson is, Mr. Coberoff is another, Mr. Cadall is, Mr. Jaques is, Mr. John Scott is not, Mr. William Henry Mullen is another, Mr. J. E. Wolfe, Captain Close,

P. MacAuliffe, Esq. Close, and Mr. Alexander Browne, are shareholders; Mr. Portus is, Mr. Liddell is not, Mr. Isaac Gorrick is a shareholder, Mr. Middleton is, Mr. Keeffe is, Mr. Lipscomb is, and I believe Mr. Moffit Duncan Sim is a shareholder.

26 April, 1861.

422. Is all the scrip allotted? Not yet.

423. Is any of the capital paid up? There has been no call made yet.

424. Are you not aware that it is the custom of Joint Stock Companies, prior to their incorporation, to have a certain amount of capital called up? I am not aware of the practice in this Colony.

425. You are aware it is the practice in England? As a matter of practice, I do.

426. Do you not know that it is compulsory in England? I believe it is, but I really do not know of my own knowledge. I have in my hand the legal documents, in which the several parties engage to pay up the capital as required.

427. Are you a shareholder in this Company? I am not, but I hope to be.

428. Do you believe, that in the event of more than £25,000 being required to complete the line, the shareholders are in a position to pay it up? Yes.

429. You say the construction of this line would be a great benefit to the public generally, and facilitate the transport of goods between the north-west interior and Morpeth? Yes.

430. Would it not be a benefit to Morpeth alone? No, the benefit would be felt all over the Colony, because in this district many articles of export are produced, and there are sundry other articles which it would evoke and bring into play.

431. Do you think it would be any benefit to, or cheapen the conveyance of, imported goods to the north-western interior? I do.

432. Will you state how you arrived at that conclusion? We can do it more cheaply at Morpeth on account of the river navigation, and we have greater natural facilities there. We have certain productions in the district of Morpeth that no districts near it have. I may instance Newcastle; it is a non-producing district with regard to cereals and other agricultural products, whilst in Morpeth we produce all these, and could supply them more cheaply to the north-west interior if we had the means of conveyance facilitated.

433. That is not the question. Can imported goods be conveyed to the north-west interior more cheaply by Morpeth than by Newcastle? Yes. I assume the fact that the freight to Morpeth is quite as cheap as to Newcastle, and the length of this proposed line would cut off some 16 or 18 miles.

434. You assume that the Steam Packet Companies will, when this line is constructed, charge no more for goods they convey to Morpeth than for those they take to Newcastle? I believe it would be to their interest. They have nothing but coal to ship from Newcastle, so that it would be to the interest of the steamers to go to Morpeth without additional charge.

435. Are you not aware that many of the shareholders of this proposed Railway Company are shareholders in the local Steam Companies? Some of them are.

436. And many are largely interested as owners of land in the district? Some of them are; but the shareholders are not confined to Morpeth.

437. Do you not think that if goods for the interior were unloaded at Newcastle, and sheds erected there from which they could be transferred to the trucks, they could be more expeditiously conveyed, and quite as cheaply as by way of Morpeth? I am sure they would not. The steamers plying to Morpeth could beat out all competition of steamers plying to Newcastle, that is, taking freight into account. They take nothing except coals from Newcastle; but all those articles the produce of the district of Morpeth could either be shipped for export or sent into the interior from Morpeth.

438. But these goods would have to be transhipped from your trucks to the Government trucks at Maitland, on the Government line? I do not assume that they would. We could have the same gauge, and an arrangement about rolling stock, as in the case of two Companies at Home; the gauge being the same on each others lines. That is a mere matter of arrangement.

439. When they make these arrangements, I believe it is generally for the benefit of the Company already in existence? I think it would be a mutual benefit.

440. You depend upon the Government allowing this line to join theirs, so that the Company can run their trucks upon it from Morpeth, to the ruin of their line from Newcastle? I assume that, for the public good, they would.

441. The inevitable result will be to make the Newcastle line valueless? I think it will only be required for coal, and the ordinary intermediate traffic. You must recollect that collieries are fast rising along that line, which will naturally increase its usefulness. It is a very productive line in itself.

442. By the Chairman: Did you ever hear of the English Government controlling, or interfering in any way, to prevent people from carrying their goods in any manner or way they thought proper? Never.

443. Is it not the English policy to let people carry on their business in what way they thought best, according to their own judgment? They do.

444. Suppose the construction of a railway, by private enterprise, had the effect of making a Government railway useless, so as even to cause the rails to be taken up, and the line abandoned, would it be an injury to the public good, so far as traffic is concerned. If the Government line did not afford greater facilities for the trade of the country, would it be of any value when one with superior advantages was brought into existence? By no means. They allow the natural channels of trade to follow their course with every facility that can be obtained. I know, from my own knowledge, that at Home—having resided in England for some years—that where lines exist in the country, the Companies are pledged to permit other lines to communicate with them, although the directors should be unwilling that a junction should be made.

445. There are no Government lines at Home, so that there is no analogy between the relative positions of railways there and these here? No.
446. Suppose the Government here were to expend half a million of money foolishly in constructing a railway, without any regard to the convenience of trade and passenger traffic, would it not be contrary to English policy to divert the natural means of traffic, in order to support an artificial means of traffic? Quite contrary.
447. And if it was wrong to the public in the first instance—that is, in the construction of such artificial means—would it not be also wrong to continue it? They would consider the evil enlarged by its continuance.
448. If people sent their goods to Morpeth instead of to Newcastle, would it not be an entire misapplication of public revenue to take means to prevent them doing so? I think an opinion upon that point would be very decided indeed.
449. By Mr. Hoskins: You say you have resided for some years in England; do you not know, then, that on the inauguration of the railway system, the Government refused to allow large carriers, such as Pickford's and other Companies, to carry their goods over the line? I believe there was some narrow feeling about the canals, and their competition with railways; but the Government extinguished the quarrel.
450. Are you not aware that, in England, the Railway Companies refused to allow carriers to convey their goods upon their lines, as carriers for others? As you mention Pickford's, I may say they run their goods along the railway line; they have a large station at Liverpool on their own account.
451. But you are aware that these disputes did take place—that the Railway Companies did refuse to allow them to use their lines? I do not clearly recollect it.
452. As you do not recollect this, I would ask you, did you never hear of the Midland Railway Company, with a line running to Bristol and Gloucester, refusing to allow the Great Western Company to run carriages on their line from Gloucester to Cheltenham? I do not wish to say I am aware of it, but I believe the matter is correct.
453. Are you a resident at Newcastle? I was for many years; I have left there now.
454. You recollect the inception of that Newcastle Railway? I do.
455. Was it not considered a public benefit to have it constructed? Yes.
456. Do you consider it consistent with the public policy of Government, that, after constructing a railway that would benefit you, they should allow a competing line to make it worthless? If I lived in Newcastle I should, perhaps, look upon it in a different way.
457. It is then a matter of two rival townships? I think there is a principle of general benefit involved.
458. I have not yet heard how the colonists generally, will benefit by this proposed line of railway? I fancy then you were not in the room at the commencement of my evidence.
459. You think it will afford great facilities for the conveyance of agricultural produce to the north-west interior, from Morpeth? Yes; we could have supplied them with hay sometime ago if we had had the carriage. I have mentioned coals as a product of the district, but in this we should not compete with Newcastle. Cannel coal is a new article here, and then we have lime-stone. There will, no doubt, be that reciprocity in exchange, which must exist to make the line beneficial.
460. You expect that there will be a great demand for this Cannel coal and lime-stone, for shipment? For Cannel coal an unlimited demand.
461. Do you not think it could be exported with equal facility and cheapness from Newcastle? It has never yet been evoked by the Newcastle line on account of the expense of the carriage, and we should be doing service to the State by making this product available if we could afford that facility which Newcastle can not.
462. What are the greater natural facilities possessed by Morpeth—do you mean for loading? No, its proximity to the produce.
463. You expect this coal would be conveyed from Morpeth by sailing vessels? Yes.
464. You do not however suppose that they would be so generous as the Steam Companies have been to convey the coal for nothing between Morpeth and Newcastle? It would not come into competition with Newcastle at all.
465. You do not clearly understand me. You say the expense of transit is much less from Morpeth than from Newcastle, because the Steam Companies convey goods for nothing by the river between these two places. But would not coals be charged for down the river? You must recollect that the steamers can get a back lading from Morpeth, whereas from Newcastle they could take nothing but coals. Besides we could get coals at Morpeth, which they cannot get at Newcastle, and for which kind of article there will be a great demand.
466. You say this coal is found at Black Creek. Could it not be brought as cheaply from Newcastle as from Morpeth? You will find a difference of about 3s. a ton for carriage.
467. Do you not know that the Railway Companies in England make reductions in the rates with regard to heavy goods of that kind; I believe too the Government here make the price as low as possible? You would have to take them down eighteen miles for nothing to compete with Morpeth.
468. Are there not greater facilities for loading vessels at Newcastle than there are at Morpeth? Steam cranes have been erected recently, and it is so if you take that into account. But I do not know of greater facilities in any other way.
469. Cannot they load more vessels at the same time? Perhaps with their recent wharfage arrangements they might, but with an increase of trade such as would accrue, as a result of greater facilities of communication, we could afford all these advantages.
470. Is there not more water frontage at Newcastle than at Morpeth? Not so much larger, as you may imagine.
471. By Mr. Arnold: There is more available water frontage at Newcastle? I think not.

- P. MacAniff, Esq.
26 April, 1861.
472. By Mr. Hoskins: Do you not think that more could be made available if the districts required it? Yes, that could be done in either case.
473. Is not the river very narrow at Morpeth? Yes, but the frontage is very extensive.
474. Do not difficulties present themselves with reference to the loading and unloading of steamers at Morpeth which would be avoided if the goods were landed at the wharf at Newcastle, whence they could be taken to the interior at once, or they might erect sheds for storing goods discharged from the steamers? Do you speak of physical difficulty.
475. Yes? There is no physical difficulty at Morpeth, you have only to get the goods.
476. By Mr. Arnold: Perhaps you would explain more clearly the circumstance by stating that the water frontage at Newcastle is the property of the Government? It is true to a certain extent that there is a large water frontage, but after all you find a miserable wharf about the width of this room, the rest being used for coals.
477. The whole of the land between the railway and the wharf is railway property? Yes.
478. By Mr. Hoskins: Even then sheds might be erected for storing goods? Yes.
479. Is it not a fact that the reason why nearly all the trade of the interior is taken to Maitland and Morpeth is in consequence of the goods being carried by steamers from Newcastle to Morpeth for nothing? It is a leading question, and I would answer it in this manner,—that really there is no back freight from Newcastle, and it is, therefore, to the interest of the steamers to go to Morpeth where they can get it.
480. By Mr. Arnold: Do the steamers take goods from Newcastle to Morpeth for nothing? I am not aware that they do.
481. By Mr. Hoskins: Are not goods conveyed from Sydney to Morpeth for the same cost as from Sydney to Newcastle? I am not prepared to say as I do not know. I have heard so, but I have not inquired.
482. By Mr. Arnold: Goods from England would come as cheaply to Sydney as to the Heads, would they not? I should think so.
483. By Mr. Buchanan: You know all the persons whose names are mentioned in the Bill? I do.
484. Do you think they represent a capital of half a million of money? Well, I would double that.
485. They represent a capital of a million? Yes, I think I may say that with the utmost confidence.
486. Since the proposition was started they have not had time to draw up deeds or anything of that description? Not yet.
487. But I believe the shareholders have signed a paper, binding themselves to pay up the amount of their shares when called upon? I have put in a share list in evidence, and here I have their legally drawn undertakings to pay up when called upon.
488. Valuable beds of coal, I believe, have recently been discovered at Black Creek, which are very extensive? Yes.
489. That coal, you say, comes in large quantities by dray? From Four Mile Creek?
490. Not from Black Creek? No.
491. In the event of this railway being constructed you expect a large coal trade, by exporting this valuable coal at Black Creek? A very large trade indeed.
492. Have you not frequently seen advertisements, at stores in Morpeth, for teams, which are wanted to go up the country from the stores? Yes.
493. And you have seen them leave daily? Yes, laden with goods for the country.
494. Are you aware that the prices of produce at Singleton are nearly double those at Morpeth? I know they are considerably higher.
495. The settlers at Morpeth could not transfer their goods to Singleton by means of the present conveyance? Not so well or so extensively as if we had a railway.
496. Do you presume that there will be a very large increase in the amount of goods sent up to Singleton when the railway is completed? Yes, a very large increase indeed.
497. Have you seen large quantities of hay and other produce at Maitland sent to Morpeth to be shipped from there? Yes, very large quantities.
498. The railway would also give an impetus to this trade? Yes.
499. Have you seen a dozen sailing craft loading at Morpeth at one time? I have seen them going up the river two or three at a time.
500. You are aware that there are six large steamers plying between Sydney and Morpeth? I am.
501. Do they not take a full cargo and a large deck on nearly every trip? Yes.
502. Do you know a large sailing vessel, called the "Dart," belonging to Mr. King, of 200 tons, I believe? I have heard of her.
503. You know that vessels even now load with coals at Morpeth, rather than at Newcastle? Yes.
504. It attracts trade even now, notwithstanding the deficiency in the means of carriage and communication? The cost of the carriage of coal is 45 per cent. upon its value. The price in Maitland is 12s. a ton, and the carriage is about 6s. a ton.
505. A large quantity of live stock is exported from Morpeth to Sydney—sheep, horses, pigs, poultry, &c.,—which would create a considerable traffic on the railway? Yes; that is very important.
506. Do you know the amount of rental paid by the lessee of the toll-bar between Maitland and Morpeth? I have heard the figure, but I cannot recollect it at the present moment. I believe it is a very large rental.
507. This proves that there is a large traffic of passengers between the two places? Yes, a very large traffic.

508. You would anticipate on the construction of this line a larger amount of profit from the passenger traffic? The increase would be very large indeed. It is extensive now.
509. The landed proprietors of the district are so favourable to the construction of this line of railway as to be promoters of the design? Nearly all, with one trifling exception where money is the principal object. P. MacAuliffe,
Esq.
26 April, 1861.
510. I believe Mr. Close, who is one of the largest proprietors has given the land required for this railway for nothing? Yes, and has become a shareholder.
511. You have been a resident at Newcastle? Yes.
512. From the close vicinity of that port to Sydney you do not anticipate any great trade between Newcastle and England especially when such an advantageous port as Sydney is so near? I think not. Sydney has many advantages which Newcastle does not possess.
513. At the port of Newcastle there is a bar which makes access dangerous? Yes.
514. It is said that you can only get in in one state of the wind? During the winds prevailing for a considerable period of the year it is difficult to get in.
515. So that you anticipate no great trade between England and Newcastle? I should almost think not, with the advantages that Sydney possesses. I do not think Newcastle could deprive her of any of that preference to which she is physically entitled.
516. You believe there is a full mile or perhaps more of water frontage where wharfs could be constructed at Morpeth, and where vessels could lie at greater convenience than at Newcastle? Yes, I believe that is a fact.
517. Notwithstanding that a large sum of money voted by Parliament has been expended in the improvement of that port, vessels are frequently driven from their moorings and great loss thereby incurred? Yes.
518. And at Morpeth you are free from all this? Yes.
519. Are any of the steamers stopped on the flats now? No. The bar and lower part of the river have been cleared, and I expect the upper part will be shortly, so that such stoppages will be entirely avoided.
520. You are aware that according to the Act of Parliament the Newcastle Railway Company are bound to allow the use of the line and rails to Companies who might construct communicating lines? I believe there is a clause in the Act which provides that such communication shall be allowed, or encouraging communication with other lines.
521. That is the state of matters in England? Yes, they encourage communication in every possible way. I do not say that the allowance of communication with branch lines is compulsory, as I cannot speak of my own knowledge on that point.
522. You consider, that, if this line was constructed, it would be of immense benefit to upwards of thirty thousand people residing in that district? I think it would, without exaggeration. The Hunter, the Williams, and the Paterson, are all connected with the head of the navigation, but are almost shut out from the Northern line for want of communication. I think, that, if facilities were afforded for this communication, it would be of immense benefit.
523. You are aware also that, notwithstanding the expense of this railway from Newcastle to Maitland, it has never interfered with the immense traffic which comes to Morpeth? It never has done so. That is a notorious fact.
524. So that the proposed line of railway would be a great advantage, not only to the settlers in the vicinity of Morpeth, but to those wool growers who ship at Morpeth their produce from the interior? The benefits of such a communication in that way also would be very considerable.
525. Are you aware how many thousand pounds worth, or how many bales of wool, have been shipped from Morpeth this season? I cannot say how much has been shipped during this season.
526. You know, from your own observation, that the quantity is immense? Yes.
527. While the number of bales brought down by means of the slow carriage by drays is very great, on the construction of this railway there would be greater inducements to increase? No doubt of it.
528. By Mr. Arnold: They now send down all that they have? Yes.
529. By Mr. Buchanan: You consider that such a facility as this railway would afford for communication would be a vast public benefit, not only to the people of Morpeth, but to Sydney, as well as to up-country dealers, squatters, and all those who now get goods up by drays? I think it would be felt in both places.
530. By Mr. Hoskins: Have any other persons than those whose names are upon this paper (share list) applied for shares? I am not aware of any parties who have applied, whose names are not on that paper. The engagements indicated on that list are supported by the documents I hold in my hand.

Mr.

Mr. Benjamin Lee, the younger, called in and examined:—

531. By the Chairman: You are one of the petitioners to the Legislative Assembly for this Act of incorporation? I am. Mr. B. Lec.
532. You attended here, I believe, with a view to give evidence before this Committee upon the Morpeth and Maitland Railway Company's Bill? That was my object in being here. 26 April, 1861.
533. You were in the room when Mr. Whitton, the Engineer-in-Chief of Railways, was examined? I was.
534. You heard that gentleman's evidence as to the advisableness of carrying the proposed extension of this line alongside the water to the Hunter River and A. S. N. Companies' wharves, instead of carrying the line as projected by your engineer? Yes.
535. You have expressed a desire to give evidence with reference to that matter? Yes.
536. The Committee is prepared to hear what you desire to say? The line proposed by Mr. Whitton would, on the score of cost, be altogether out of consideration. It would be nearly a series of piling from the proposed terminus to the point at the Queen's Wharf, and, as a matter of course, very expensive. There would be nearly three-quarters of a mile of piles. I believe that even the line would not be so advantageous to the persons through whose property it runs as the one proposed by Mr. Whalley.
537. By Mr. Morris: Would the owners of land through which the line proposed by Mr. Whitton would pass object to the line so passing? I am not aware that any objection has been offered by those parties. I believe they offered to give land for the construction of the railway, whatever the direction it might take through their lands.
538. Are you not aware that the A. S. N. Company objected to it? I have not heard anything to that effect.
539. Would the expensiveness of that line be so great if you run it merely upon the ground level and not upon piles? That would constitute the expense.
540. What would be the objection to the ground level? It would be necessary that a certain portion of the line should be upon piles by the route Mr. Whitton recommends, on account of the bend of the river.
541. By Mr. Buchanan: Would £50,000 cover the expense of Mr. Whitton's proposal? I have not calculated the amount, but I know it would be enormous.
542. By Mr. Morris: Would you have to purchase a larger quantity of land for the line proposed by Mr. Whitton than for that projected by your own engineer? We should.
543. By Mr. Buchanan: Would not Mr. Whitton's line take away all the water frontage from the proprietors of land lying along the margin of the river? Yes, and be thus cutting off the facilities for making wharves.
544. By Mr. Rusden: Would not the level of Mr. Whitton's line require some gradient different from that of the line proposed by your engineer? No doubt of it.
545. It would be upon a considerably lower level than that proposed by Mr. Whalley? Yes.
546. By Mr. Buchanan: Then this proposal by Mr. Whitton would deprive the owners of land on the edge of the river of the power to construct wharves on the waterside? The line would trench upon the river so closely as to necessitate piling; in fact, many of the piles would be in the river.
547. You are aware, Mr. Lee, that a construction of a similar description is going on at Newcastle? I am.
548. A similar construction would be required at Morpeth, if Mr. Whitton's plan was to be enforced? Of course a similar work perhaps not to the same extent. Where it was requisite to carry the piles, they would to a great extent be in the river, and thus take off the frontage there.
549. Are you aware that the Newcastle people have stopped the work on account of the dreadful expense? I am not.
550. You estimate the cost of the line proposed by your own engineer at £25,000, I think, to carry it through the town of Morpeth? Yes. We consider that that sum will be amply sufficient.
551. According to your own judgment, if Mr. Whitton's proposal were admitted, would £60,000 be sufficient? I think I may safely say it would take £40,000, at the very least.
552. The proposal of your engineer would not interfere with the main road through Morpeth? No, it does not trench upon that road in any way.
553. Of course this proposal of your engineer will take the line upon solid and mostly firm ground, which will make the construction not only cheaper but safer than if it were carried out upon piles? It would be upon stone chiefly. It would be much cheaper. The action of the insect called the cobra, upon piles, is very destructive to the wood; sometimes, even where they are covered with zinc or other metal, the Company have been obliged to take up and replace some of the piles of the wharf, on that account.
554. Are you of opinion, that if Mr. Whitton's plan was adopted, there would not only be a most extravagant outlay in the first instance, but a constant requirement for expenditure afterwards? No doubt, because if the cobra enters the wood it will occasion the destruction of the pile, which will have to be replaced at a fresh expense.
555. On the Newcastle line, I believe, a large portion of the piles have been wholly destroyed by cobra, and that the line has had to be filled up at those places with ballast? So I believe.

Arthur John Whalley, Esq., called in and examined:—

556. By the Chairman: You have a tracing of the proposed railway, I believe? Yes, sir. A. J. Whalley,
Esq.
557. It is a tracing you have made from the Government plans, and also shews the extension into the town of Morpeth, as proposed by the Company? Yes; into the town of Morpeth, from the Queen's Wharf. 26 April, 1861.
558. Can you hand that plan into the Committee? Yes; I do so. (Plan marked A handed in.)

Legislative Assembly.

NEW SOUTH WALES.

GAOL AND COURT HOUSE RESERVE, MAITLAND.

(RAILWAY OBSTRUCTION TO.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be Printed, 14 March, 1861.

To the Honorable the Legislative Assembly of the Colony of New South Wales.

The Petition of the Inhabitants of the Township of Maitland and its vicinity,—

HUMBLY SHEWETH:—

That your Petitioners are owners or occupiers of land at Maitland, or in its immediate vicinity, such land in Maitland having been purchased by grantees of the Crown under a certain recognized official plan, a copy whereof is hereunto annexed.

That at the time the line of Railway was first surveyed, and before any line was determined on, your Petitioners memorialized the authorities for the time being, praying that the line might be so conducted through their town as to leave the inhabitants access to their reserve for Gaol and Court House; and in reply to such Memorial the authorities assured Petitioners that the subject of their Memorial should receive due attention.

That, relying on such assurances, your Petitioners took no steps pending the construction of the Railway further to insist on their claims, but were grieved to find such claims and assurances were entirely ignored; for notwithstanding the completion of a new Court House on the spot marked A on the plan, the public are deprived all access to it by William-street and Bank-street, and have to make a circuit of half a mile before they can reach the Court House, which was designed to be a convenience and ornament to the principal street of the town.

That your Memorialists have made sundry efforts to relieve themselves from this inconvenience as regards the filling up of the street at Bank-street. They succeeded in getting a sum voted by your Honorable House for the removal of the embankment across that street, and for erecting the Railway on piers; but notwithstanding the vote was passed, the money has not been provided, nor the work done; and as regards access to William-street, your Petitioners to the number of upwards of 300, petitioned H. B. Martindale, Esquire, the then Chief Commissioner of the Railway Department, to have a level crossing made to the Court House; but no notice was taken thereof, and hence the people are compelled to climb over the railway fences in order to reach the Court House. It is said that the Bench of Magistrates have also applied for means of access for the public, and that their application has met with no consideration; and it is known that many inhabitants have personally represented this public grievance to persons in authority, but without avail.

That your Petitioners submit that the streets of a recognized Government Township ought not to be blocked up, and the property of the townsmen injured without sufficient cause, and they submit there was not nor is sufficient cause for maintaining the present obstruction.

2 GAOL AND COURT HOUSE RESERVE, MAITLAND.—PETITION.

obstruction. At the time the embankment at Bank-street was constructed, the attention of the authorities was drawn to the serious inconvenience which would arise from blocking up the road, and throwing back the drainage along the street, and which has since caused the partial submersion of premises in blocks 35 and 15, and the obstruction to the drainage of the principal part of the town; but notwithstanding this the work was insisted on, though by voting money for the alteration, admission is made of its impropriety. In the same manner, at William-street, the Station House has been built on the very street the people prayed might be kept clear, and which prayer the Government assured them should be attended to.

That your Petitioners have therefore no resource but to come with their grievances before your Honorable House, and to pray your Honorable House may be pleased to grant such relief to your Petitioners as to your Honorable House may seem meet.

And your Petitioners, as in duty bound, will ever pray.

Legislative Assembly.

NEW SOUTH WALES.

PYRMONT RAILWAY TERMINUS.

(DIRECTORS OF PYRMONT BRIDGE COMPANY.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be Printed, 6 May, 1861.

To the Honorable the Legislative Assembly of New South Wales, in Parliament assembled.

The humble Petition of the Directors of the Pyrmont Bridge Company,—

SHEWETH:—

That the Pyrmont Bridge Company was formed with the sanction of the Legislature, in order to connect with the centre of Sydney, by an improved and shortened route, the localities on the western side of Darling Harbour.

That an important element in the calculations of the promoters of the undertaking was the traffic to and from the Pyrmont Railway Terminus.

That the works of the Company have been completed in a very efficient manner, and at a large cost, but that up to the present time the undertaking has been quite unremunerative, in consequence, in a great measure, of the non-completion of the aforesaid Terminus, to which the Colony had been committed by a heavy expenditure.

That your Petitioners have had much correspondence with the Government on the subject of that Terminus, being most anxious to see it completed.

That though they felt the hardship, particularly in the circumstances of the Company, of incurring expenditure towards carrying out a Government work, they even proposed, in order to have the Terminus completed in the manner best calculated to promote the convenience of the public, that the Company should perform a material portion of the work.

That, after discovering the Company could not legally do this, they on its behalf offered to contribute a considerable sum by money towards the completion of the work, but without effect.

That your Petitioners conceive, that for the considerations submitted, they have special reasons for respectfully urging on your Honorable House that on the grounds of consistency and good faith, as well as of public utility, it is most fitting that the Pyrmont Railway Terminus and relative works should, with as little delay as possible, be completed and made available for the public.

And they therefore pray that your Honorable House will take such measures as may seem best adapted to effect that object.

And your Petitioners will ever pray, &c., &c., &c.

Legislative Assembly.

NEW SOUTH WALES.

RAILWAY TERMINUS AT PYRMONT

(INHABITANTS OF SYDNEY AND NEIGHBOURHOOD.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be Printed, 10 May, 1861.

To the Honorable the Legislative Assembly of New South Wales, in Parliament assembled.

The humble Petition of the undersigned Inhabitants of Sydney and its neighbourhood,—

SHEWETH:—

That the Pyrmont Railway Terminus was an important feature in the original design of the Great Southern and Western Railways, that is, of the Railways connecting the Metropolis with the Interior of the Colony.

That, therefore, your Petitioners feel peculiarly aggrieved at having for many years been deprived of the convenience which its completion would secure to them, and to the public generally.

That the construction of this Terminus with its associated Wharf, by enabling railway trucks and other carriages to come alongside the harbour, will greatly promote the easy and economical transit of the imports and exports of the Colony.

That the large sum of money already laid out on the Darling Harbour Line is at present so much of the public funds uselessly expended, or wasted, and must remain so until the aforesaid Terminus is completed and in operation.

That this line was laid down and constructed as it at present exists, long before the constitution of the Pyrmont Bridge Company, and your Petitioners respectfully submit ought, in justice to all concerned, to be completed without reference to any arrangement with that Company, such as has been alluded to in Parliament.

That the completion of the Pyrmont Terminus will bring a large population within an easy walking distance of the Railway, thereby materially relieving the pressure of the traffic along the existing lines of access thereto.

That while that Terminus will afford very important accommodation to the goods and passenger traffic of the Southern and Western Railways at the present time, the growth of the city will cause the said Terminus to occupy a more and more central position as time passes on.

With reference, therefore, to the past, the present, and the future, your Petitioners pray that your Honorable House will, without delay, take such steps as may appear best calculated to lead to the speedy completion of the aforesaid most important public work.

And your Petitioners will ever pray, &c.

PITT-STREET TRAMWAY BILL.

(PROPRIETORS, HOUSEHOLDERS, &c., OF PITT-STREET AND VICINITY.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be Printed, 21 February, 1861.

The Honorable the Legislative Assembly.

The humble Petition of the Proprietors of Property, Householders, and others, residing in Pitt-street, and adjoining streets, Sydney,—

RESPECTFULLY SHEWETH :—

That they have long felt the great inconvenience of the Railway Terminus being so far distant from the business part of the town, and also experienced great loss from the high rates of cartage and damage to goods from frequent removal.

We, the undersigned Petitioners, seeing that a Bill to authorize the making a Tram-road down Pitt-street from the present Railway Terminus to the Circular Quay, has been laid before your Honorable House, to remedy this present great inconvenience and loss, respectfully request that you will be pleased to pass the same into a law.

And your Petitioners will ever pray.

SOUTH HEAD ROADS TRUST ACCOUNTS FOR 1859.

Audit Office, 2 October, 1860.

There is an error of £50 in the addition of each of the half-yearly statements, by which it would appear that the Balance against the Commissioners on the 31st December is £598 12s. 6d. instead of £698 12s. 6d.

The Secretary to the Commissioners of the South Head Roads Trust.

W. C. MAYNE,
Auditor General.

Mr. Langley's salary—£50 each half-year—omitted to be charged in schedule.

GERARD PHILLIPS,
Secretary to Commissioners.
3 October, 1860.

Waterloo Warehouse, Sydney, 3 October, 1860.

Sir,—Herewith I have the honor to return to you, the Commissioners of the South Head Roads Trust Accounts for the year 1859.

The error pointed out by your Memo. of yesterday's date, arose through the omitting to enter in each return the salary of Mr. Langley, the Commissioners' Surveyor, viz.:—£50 for each half-year.

The returns are always made up from the Commissioners' Cash Book, and as this had been carefully gone over and balanced, and found to agree with the Vouchers, I carelessly omitted to add up the Abstract before sending it in or I should have found the mistake out.

The accounts as now returned, with the words Surveyor's salary, 6 months at £3 6s. 8d., £50, added to each return, are correct.

Regretting that this mistake should have been made,—

I have &c.,
GERARD PHILLIPS,
Secretary to Commissioners South Head Roads Trust.

W. C. Mayne, Esquire, Auditor General.
