60. The Officer Commanding Volunteer Force at an Official Inspection in any year shall have power to direct the withholding of a Certificate of Efficiency, at the end of that year, from any individual Volunteer, in any case in which he considers it proper to do so, on account of the want of proficiency in drill or instruction of that Volunteer.

To pass inspection, all Volunteers will be required to satisfy the Inspecting Officer in the drills and exercises peculiar to the branch of the Force to which they belong.

61. By the term "Recruit," used upon the annexed form of Certificate, is meant a Volunteer who has never been returned as an efficient in an annual return of the Corps.

By the term "Corps" is meant a Troop, Battery, or Company.

By a "Battery or Company Parade" is meant an assembly of the Corps in uniform under arms for exercise, whereat not less than 20 of the enrolled members are present, exclusive of Commissioned Officers.

By a "Gun Drill" is meant an assembly of the Corps whereat not less than the number required to form a full gun detachment are present.

By a "Battalion Parade" is meant an assembly of two or more Corps for exercise as a Battalion or Brigade.

62. For the purposes of efficiency, the duration of Parades shall be at least three-quarters of an hour; but should the Corps, having assembled in sufficient numbers, be dismissed from inclement weather before the three-quarters of an hour be passed, such Parade may be returned under the authority of the Officer Commanding Volunteer Force. No Commanding Officer shall return in any month more than four Parades for drill, and no other Parade shall be recognized for the purposes of efficiency, unless such Parade has been approved by the Officer Commanding Volunteer Force.

63. Forms used in this order, or in or upon the following forms of Certificate, have the same meaning as they have when used in the Volunteer Act.

COURTS OF INQUIRY.

64. A Court of Inquiry is to be considered as a Board, of which the Officer Commanding the Volunteer Force may make use, to assist him in arriving at a correct conclusion on any subject on which it may be expedient for him to institute an inquiry.

65. If it is found necessary to cause the conduct of an Officer to be investigated by a Court of Inquiry, the Governor can alone convene the Court, which, in such a case, must be composed of Officers of the Volunteer Force.

66. The duties of a Court of Inquiry depend on the instructions which the convening authority may think proper to give. It may either be employed merely in collecting and arranging evidence, or it may, in addition, be directed to give an opinion as to the facts established by that evidence; but it has no power to pronounce any judgment as to the course to be taken by the convening authority in dealing with those facts. When facts connected with the conduct of an individual are submitted to the investigation of a Court of Inquiry, it is necessary that the instructions for the guidance of the Court should be sufficiently specific, as regards matter, names, dates, and places, to convey clearly to the Court the nature of the subject into which it is appointed to inquire, and also to enable the person whose conduct is called in question to know what he has to answer.

67. It rests with the authority who orders the assembly of a Court of Inquiry to decide whether it shall be open or close. All evidence taken by a Court of Inquiry is to be recorded, as nearly as possible, in the words of the witness, and in the order in which it is received. The proceedings, when closed, are to be signed by the President and Members, after which they are to be forwarded by the President to the convening authority.

68. A Court of Inquiry may be re-assembled as often as the superior authority may deem necessary, and on every occasion of its meeting it is competent to receive and record new evidence.

DECLARATION.

A.

To be made by President and Members of the Court.

I, A. B., do declare, upon my honor, that I will duly and impartially inquire into the matters to be brought before this Court; and I further declare upon my honor, that I will not, on any account, or at any time, disclose or discover my own vote or opinion, or that of any particular Member of the Court, unless required to do so by competent authority.

B.

To be made by Witnesses before the Court.

I, C. D., do hereby declare, on my honor, that the evidence I shall give on the matters now before this Court shall be the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth.

RULES.

69. The rules of every Volunteer Corps, under the sanction of the Governor, are notwithstanding such sanction, allowed and confirmed only so far as they are in accordance with, or are not repugnant to, the provisions of the Volunteer Act, 1867, and the tenor of these Regulations.

70. No Corps shall impose, by rule, a subscription of more than one shilling per week.

ADMINISTRATIVE ORGANIZATION.

71. The object of this administrative organization is to unite separate Corps under a common head, to secure uniformity of drill among them, to afford them the advantage of instruction and assistance of a Regimental Staff (in addition to the Permanent Staff); but it is not intended to interfere with their constitution or financial arrangements, with the operation of their respective rules, or with the powers specially conferred on their Commanding Officers by the Volunteer Act and Regulations.

72. Subject to the powers conferred by the law upon the Commanding Officers of each Corps, the Field Officer commanding an Administrative Regiment will have the general charge of the drill and instruction of the several Corps under his command.

He will inspect them from time to time, and will take notice of, and if necessary report, any infraction of the provisions of the law, or of the orders of the Officer Commanding Volunteer Force, relating to the use of the arms, the regulations about clothing, distinctive marks of rank, discipline, &c. He will also be responsible that uniformity in drill is preserved throughout the Force under his command then present at the drill or parade of any of the Corps. He will invariably be in command.

73. No Officer of a Corps forming part of an Administrative Regiment has any authority over the other Corps of which it is composed, in consequence of their administrative union; but whenever the several Corps, or any number of them, meet together for drill, the Senior Officer present assumes the command, and during the temporary absence of the Field Officer Commanding an Administrative Regiment, the command will devolve on the next Senior Officer present.

74. An Administrative Regiment cannot have rules, having legal force under Act of Parliament, distinct from those of the several Corps of which it is composed.

CLOTHING AND ACCOUTREMENTS.

75. Uniforms will be supplied on the requisitions of Commanding Officers of Corps, the cost of which will be deducted in the annual account.

76. Gold lace is not to be worn by Volunteer Corps.

77. The distinction in uniform and appointments, which are prescribed in Her Majesty's Regulations, to denote the rank of the wearer, are to be strictly observed by Volunteers of the various grades, as far as they are applicable to the Volunteer Force. In this respect the regulations for the Army are to be taken as a guide.

78. Commissioned Officers and Sergeants, when supplied with them, alone are permitted to wear side-arms when off duty, and these only the authorized weapons of their respective ranks.

79. The undress uniform of Officers and Members must be strictly in accordance with the authorized pattern.

STORES.

80. All arms issued to a Volunteer Corps, remain the property of the Government, and the Commanding Officer for the time being is held responsible for their being at all times in a serviceable state, and for their being returned into store when required, in good condition, fair wear and tear excepted.

81. Great attention should be paid to the proper cleaning and care of arms entrusted to Volunteers; and Commanding Officers are to point out to those under their command, that the barrel of the rifle is so delicately finished, that should rust be permitted to accumulate inside, it must inevitably destroy the integrity of the grooves, and consequently impair the accuracy of the weapon.

82. The establishment of Officers and Non-commissioned Officers for a Volunteer Corps, is amply sufficient to ensure a proper supervision of the arms, consistently with other occupations. Neglect of duty must therefore always exist in a Corps where the arms are in bad order.

83. The locks of the rifles when in use should be taken to pieces and thoroughly cleaned and oiled, at least once in every three months, by duly qualified persons.

84. The rifle should invariably be cleaned immediately after use.

85. Volunteers must not, under any circumstance, tamper with their rifles, or use other than the authorized ammunition; and any rifles which, on inspection, may be found to have had their locks, or any other parts, improperly altered or damaged, will be at once returned into store, and repaired at the expense of the Corps.

86. As the Commanding Officer is responsible for the condition of the arms issued to his Corps, it will be his duty to withdraw permission to Volunteers to keep their arms at their own houses, whenever such Volunteers fail to keep their arms in proper order, and the same to be deposited, after drill, in armouries, or places set apart for that purpose. In any case in which the arms are neglected, the discretionary power granted to the Commanding Officer, in this respect, will be withdrawn.

87. The repairs of all arms forwarded by Commanding Officers will be executed in the manner and to the extent laid down in the Queen's Regulations for the repair of Arms in possession of the Regular Army. In the case of the repair of a barrel, or supply of a new barrel, the complete arm, with its bayonet, should be sent in.

88. Commanding Officers are to forward to head quarters any Government arms in the possession of their Corps requiring repairs, accompanied by a certificate of cause and extent of damage. The cost of repairing arms, if damaged wilfully or by neglect or want of due precaution, together with transmission to and fro, will be charged to the Corps.

AMMUNITION.

89. Ammunition may be issued at the discretion of the Officer Commanding the Volunteer Force, but in no case is the annual allowance per Corps, for ball ammunition, to exceed the following proportions:—

Distribution.	Number of Rounds.			Remarks.
	Ball.	Blank.	Caps.
Artillery, for Guns.
Per Battery { Shot	100	{ 30	} For practice.
{ Shell	25
„ Sub-division { Shot	60	{ 20
{ Shell	15
For Small Arms.
Recruits.....	70	10	98	For musketry instruction.
Light Horse, Engineers, Mounted Rifles, and Rifles—
Recruits.....	110	20	163	Ditto.
Efficients	90	60	165	Ditto and practice.

90. Every Corps is required to provide a secure place for the custody of its small arm ammunition.

91. When ammunition is provided by Government for the use of a Corps, careful arrangements should be made by the Commanding Officer for its conveyance from the Railway Station, port, or place to which it may have been transmitted.

92. The Commanding Officer of a Volunteer Corps is responsible to the Officer Commanding Volunteer Force for all stores which are supplied by Government for the use of the Corps.

93. Targets and mooring tackle are supplied to Artillery Corps.

94. The hire of boats to place and remove the Targets is also allowed.

95. All surplus stores—such as empty powder-barrels, metal-lined cases, metal cylinders, empty bursters, &c.—are to be forwarded to the Superintendent of Military Stores at Head Quarters, by the cheapest and most direct conveyance.

GUN DRILL AND PRACTICE OF ARTILLERY VOLUNTEERS.

96. No gun practice of Artillery Volunteers is to be carried on except under the superintendence of an Officer of the Permanent Staff, unless a relaxation of this rule has been specially sanctioned by the Officer Commanding Volunteer Force.

97. Neither Volunteers not at exercise, nor other spectators, are to be allowed to congregate round barrels or cases containing powder, which are being issued.

98. Bands of music must be prohibited from playing, either inside or in the immediate vicinity of Batteries, during gun practice.

99. Whether in firing with or without shot, saturated cartridges are not to be used; they spoil ranges, and are apt to leave embers in the gun.

100. The practice of firing blank cartridges against time leads to the waste of powder, engenders loose habits, and is very dangerous; it is therefore forbidden.

101. Sword bayonets are not to be used by Artillerymen engaged at gun drill or moving powder.

102. No smoking is on any account to be allowed in the vicinity of gun carriages or waggons in which ammunition is being conveyed.

103. In all cases in which blank ammunition is fired from Batteries in use by Volunteers, which consist of less than four guns, the intervals between the firing are, under no circumstances, to be less than 20 seconds, and especial care is to be taken in such cases in sponging out the gun, and serving the vent, with the view of obviating, as far as possible, any chance of accident.

104. Magazines are to be kept strictly clean, and free from all gravel, sand, or grit; and no iron, light, lucifer match, or anything likely to cause combustion is to be permitted therein, nor is any one to enter a magazine with articles of a combustible nature on his person.

105. No smoking or fire is to be permitted near a magazine.

106. In moving powder-barrels about a magazine, all friction is to be avoided as much as possible, and care to be taken that no powder is spilled on the floor, on which an old rug or blanket is to be placed; and all persons employed in a magazine must either wear list slippers or remove their boots or shoes. The magazine floor must be carefully swept after each transaction.

107. When a magazine is open for airing during fine weather, some one must be in charge on the spot, to warn persons from approaching it except on duty.

108. Cases or barrels are not to be opened, either inside a magazine or immediately outside the door. When brought out to supply batteries in action, they are to be deposited in rear and to windward thereof, and to be placed under proper guard.

MUSKETRY INSTRUCTION.

109. The course of instruction for Volunteers is as follows:—

Recruits, Second, and Third Class men—

Position drill until dismissed.

60 rounds, individual firing.

10 rounds, volleys.

10 rounds, independent.

10 rounds, skirmishing.

1st Class men—The above practice, without position drill.

BADGES FOR GOOD SHOOTING.

110. With a view to stimulate individual exertion, and to reward the proficiency of Volunteers in the use and management of the rifle, a system of Badges has been adopted, and the following rules for the award thereof are to be strictly adhered to:—

1st. To the best shot of a Battalion—A Badge of cross muskets and crown above and below, worked in silver on scarlet cloth ground.

2nd. To the best shot of a Corps—A Badge of cross muskets and crown above, worked in silver on scarlet cloth ground.

3rd. To certain of the first class shots—(to be styled "Marksmen")—A Badge of cross muskets, worked in silver on scarlet cloth ground.

The Badges referred to under 1st, 2nd, and 3rd head, are to be worn on the left arm, immediately above the point of the cuff, and retained for the period of one year from date of issue.

PRECAUTIONS AT RIFLE PRACTICE.

111. In order to provide for the safety of the public, indiscriminate private practice at Volunteer Rifle Ranges is not to be permitted. All practice should be so regulated as to ensure the presence of an Officer or Non-commissioned Officer on all occasions when firing is going on. The Officer or Non-commissioned Officer in charge of the firing party will be held responsible for enforcing strict regularity and discipline.

112. None but experienced persons are to be employed as markers at rifle ranges. The responsibility of employing boys in that capacity at private practice must rest with the members of the force.

113. The Officer or Non-commissioned Officer in charge of the firing point will see that the special rules and regulations of Rifle Ranges are carried out, provided they be not inconsistent with the above.

CORRESPONDENCE.

114. All official correspondence from Volunteer Corps is to proceed from the Officer Commanding, or to pass through him.

115. When a corps forms part of an Administrative Regiment, the official correspondence of the Officer Commanding the corps is to pass through the Field Officer Commanding.

116. Applications for leave of absence, returns, reports, and correspondence on military subjects, are to be addressed to the Brigade Adjutant.

117. Applications for leave of absence for Officers beyond one month, must be made to the Officer Commanding Volunteer Force, at the same time detailing the Officer in performance of duties during such absence.

118. Officers are to specify, under their signature, their rank and designation of the Corps to which they belong.

119. The Paymaster may correspond direct with the Treasury and Audit Office on any matters connected with his financial duties.

122. The issue in each year of these allowances will be based upon the number of efficient shown in the annual returns and nominal roll of efficient and non-efficient.

123. These allowances are to provide Corps with uniforms; but should a surplus remain after deductions of cost of uniform and incidental expenses for that year, the same to be handed over to Officers commanding Corps, and to be applied to general fund of such Corps.

124. No claim to these allowances shall be admitted at the commencement of any year, if the number of "efficient" in any Corps be below the minimum establishment shown in the tabular forms of these Regulations; and the services of such Corps shall be liable to be dispensed with.

125. After the receipt and examination of the annual returns, showing the number of Volunteers in each Corps for whom allowance will be admissible, the Officer Commanding Volunteer Force will receive authority from the Colonial Secretary to draw upon the Treasury such sums of money as may be required from time to time.

The command of the Brigade or Battalion, while drilling, will devolve upon the Senior Officer present.

131. It may, however, be necessary, with a view to the instruction of the Corps, or for the purpose of affording instruction to the Brigade or Battalion, that a Staff Officer should be appointed by the Officer Commanding the Volunteer Force. Such an Officer, when appointed, will superintend the movements, but will not, unless specially ordered, take the command.

132. Volunteer Corps are not to assemble under arms for any purpose unconnected with military drill or rifle practice except with the approval of the Governor, granted on the recommendation of the Officer Commanding the Volunteer Force.

133. When Volunteers belonging to one or more Corps are brought together under arms at rifle shooting matches or other occasions, the Senior Officer present in uniform is to be considered in command of all the Volunteers on the ground; and although his position in this respect does not involve any authority for his interference in the arrangements of the meeting, yet he is held responsible for the due maintenance of order and discipline among the Volunteers under arms.

134. No Member of the Force is to be buried with military honors, except by the express desire of his friends, notified to the Officer commanding the Volunteer Force.

19 November, 1863.

Sir,

I have the commands of His Royal Highness the Field Marshal Commanding-in-Chief to acquaint you that the Non-commissioned Officer and two Gunners named in the margin have been placed under orders to proceed to Sydney for the purpose of acting as Armstrong Gun Drill Instructors to the local Artillery, and will embark for their destination on the 26th instant, on board the "Highflyer."

I am to add that these men will continue to belong to their present Brigade.

MAJOR-GENERAL CHUTE to HIS EXCELLENCY THE GOVERNOR.

Head Quarters,
Melbourne, — August, 1870.

MY LORD,

Royal Artillery,
2nd Brigade.
Gunner Robert
M'Combe.

In reply to your Excellency's letter of the 29th ultimo, with enclosure relative to the soldier named in the margin, I have the honor to inform your Lordship that, as the Troops are about to be withdrawn from Australia, the gunner in question can only be allowed to remain as Instructor to the Volunteers in New South Wales, on the terms of the despatch from the Colonial Office, dated 19th May last, which would involve the Colony being responsible for the entire cost of the pay, allowances, and clothing of this soldier, thus relieving the Imperial Government of any expense while so employed.

I shall feel obliged if your Excellency would be good enough to inform me by telegram whether your Government is desirous of retaining Gunner M'Combe on those terms, so as to allow of my having sufficient time to give the necessary orders regarding his retention or otherwise.

I have, &c.,
T. CHUTE,
Major-General.

Perhaps Mr. Cowper will enable me to send a telegram in reply to-day.—B., 9/8/70.

Recommended that M'Combe be retained under the conditions named.—C.C., 10 Aug.

SIR,

In reply to your letter of the — August, 1870, I have informed you already by telegram that my Government are willing to retain the services of Gunner Robert M'Combe, 2nd Brigade, Royal Artillery, as a Volunteer Artillery Drill Instructor, under Earl Granville's despatch to me of 19th May, on the terms laid down in your letter, viz., that the Colony shall be responsible for the entire cost of the pay, allowances, and clothing of this soldier, thus relieving the Imperial Government of any expense whilst so employed.

LIEUTENANT-COLONEL RICHARDSON to THE COLONIAL SECRETARY.

Volunteer Brigade Office,
Sydney, 12 August, 1870.

SIR,

I have the honor to submit and recommend for your favourable consideration, an application from Lieutenant Hopkins, Royal Artillery, to be retained for the purpose of doing duty on the Volunteer permanent Staff, and have to state, with reference to the same, that I always considered the appointment of an Artillery Officer an urgent requirement, as expressed in my letter to His Excellency the Governor in March, 1868, as also on subsequent occasions to the Honorable Colonial Secretary.

I have no hesitation in stating I have not been able to do justice to the Artillery Branch of the Force, for the reason that I have had no officer to exercise a competent supervision of the various drills; and the recent large increase to the Force, numbering now over 3,000, has also more than doubled the duties of the department, rendering such an appointment necessary.

In conclusion, I beg to draw your attention to the terms of a late Despatch from the Imperial authorities, dated Downing-street, 19th May, 1870, from which I anticipate there will be no difficulty in retaining the above officer as long as it suits the interest of the Colony; and therefore trust that means may be placed in my hands for effecting a greater degree of efficiency in the Force under my command.

I have, &c.,
JOHN S. RICHARDSON, Lt.-Col.,
Commanding Volunteer Force.

1st. That I should be permitted to retain my rank in the Royal Artillery.

2nd. That my pay should be at least £300 per annum, with the same allowances which I have at present, viz., quarters, or an allowance in lieu, fuel, light, and rations.

3rd. That in the event of the Home Government disallowing my service here, or the Colonial Government no longer requiring it, I should receive the same amount of passage money as that to which I am at present entitled.

THE OFFICER COMMANDING VOLUNTEERS TO MR. BAMFORD.

Volunteer Brigade Office,
Sydney, 1 April, 1868.

SIR, In accordance with desire expressed in your letter of the 30th ultimo, I have the honor to state, for the information of yourself and gentlemen signing the requisition, preferring offer of service for formation of another battery of Volunteer Artillery, that, as a preliminary step, I have submitted the same to the Honorable the Colonial Secretary.

I feel it, however, right to inform you that, until the batteries at present in existence have completed their full strength, and provision for contingent expenses in raising a new Corps authorized by the Government, that your offer of service must remain in abeyance.

I have, &c.,
J. S. RICHARDSON,
Lieut.-Col. Com. Vol. Force.

No. 3.

THE OFFICER COMMANDING VOLUNTEERS TO THE COLONIAL SECRETARY.

Volunteer Brigade Office,
Sydney, 1 April, 1868.

SIR, I have the honor, in accordance with desire expressed in accompanying copy of a letter, to state, for your information, that I have received an application signed by sixty-six (66) residents of Sydney and suburbs, preferring the offer of their services for the formation of another battery of Volunteer Artillery at Head Quarters.

With reference to this and other applications of a similar nature, I have to draw your attention to the following facts:—

- 1st. The present batteries have not yet completed their full strength.
- 2nd. There is no provision on the Estimates for any further increase to the Volunteer Force.
- 3rd. The permanent staff is even now inadequate to the requirements of the present force.

Under

Under these circumstances I cannot recommend these applications, unless you are prepared to authorize the contingent expenditure. Should, however, such be the case, I shall esteem it a favour by information of the same, in order that the necessary preliminary arrangements may be made prior to these offers of service being submitted to His Excellency the Governor.

I have, &c.,

Lieut.-Col. Commanding Volunteer Force.

To His Royal Highness ALFRED ERNEST ALBERT, Duke of Edinburgh, Earl of Kent, Earl of Ulster, Duke of Saxony, Prince of Saxe Coburg Gotha, K.G.

MAY IT PLEASE YOUR ROYAL HIGHNESS,—

We, the undersigned, residents in Sydney and suburbs, desire to offer our sincere congratulations on the auspicious occasion of your Royal Highness' recovery; and feeling anxious to celebrate permanently so joyful an event in some manner likely to meet with the approval of your Royal Highness, have petitioned His Excellency the Governor to accept us as a Battery of Volunteer Artillery.

We solicit with the utmost respect that, taking into consideration the circumstances which occasioned this battery to be enrolled, your Royal Highness will be graciously pleased to direct that it be called "Prince Alfred's Own," and that it wear on the collar of its uniform your Royal Highness' initials "A.E.A.," or such other device or motto as to your Royal Highness may seem fit.

Colonial Secretary's Office,
Sydney, 16 April, 1868.

SIR,

I am directed to acknowledge the receipt of an address signed by you and sixty-five other residents in Sydney and its suburbs, requesting that you and they may be enrolled as another battery of Volunteer Artillery, under the designation of "Prince Alfred's Own," and to state, in reply, that the Colonial Secretary spoke to the Duke of Edinburgh, on the morning of his embarkation, on the subject; and that in the event of the Corps being formed, and subject to the approval of the Government, he would authorize it to assume the designation in question.

2. I am to add, that the enrolment of such a battery would receive consideration hereafter, but that an objection appears to exist to the formation of new batteries while those at present existing are short of the required number of members.

SIR,

I have the honor to refer you to a letter from your office (68-681), dated 16th April, 1868, and especially to its concluding paragraph. The objection therein alluded to has been continually alleged against us until now, but existing circumstances rendering it (according to my idea) probable that the Volunteer Act will require augmentation, I beg to submit the case of (proposed) "Prince Alfred's Own" Battery, now during 2½ years in abeyance, to your favourable consideration, trusting the length of time it has been enrolled may obtain for it "priority" of acceptance over any other battery or batteries which may be formed hereafter.

2. Should the augmentation I anticipate be actually directed to take place, I beg very respectfully that "Prince Alfred's Own" may be honored with your countenance and support.

2. I have the further honor of making known to you that I have this day sent in to the Officer Commanding Volunteer Force, an official request for his recommendation to acceptance by the Government of "Prince Alfred's Own" as one of the two new batteries required.

1. I have the honor to point out that letter from your office (70-575), 8th November, 1870, purporting to be a reply to my communication of the 29th ultimo, is in fact no reply to it at all.

2. In that letter (29th ultimo) I ask whether you are willing to recommend acceptance by the Government of the battery I represent (Prince Alfred's Own).

3. In the same letter I further ask (in case you still decline to receive Prince Alfred's Own Battery) to be favoured with a statement of the grounds on which we are to be ignored and passed over.

Bromley Cottage, Cameron-street, near Post Office,
St. Mark's, 14 November, 1870.

SIR,

1. I have the honor to bring to your notice that, unless present enrolment of a new No. 8 Battery, V.A., be countermanded, pending a final decision relative to the prior claims of the old No. 8., or "Prince Alfred's Own," to your recommendation for its acceptance by Government, a manifest injustice will be done to the latter battery, more especially as your intention to grant such recommendation has been distinctly implied in your letters to me on this subject.

2. On the foregoing grounds, as representative of "Prince Alfred's Own" Battery, V.A., I respectfully but firmly protest against the enrolment of a new No. 8 Battery.

3. Moreover, regarding the probability that the claim to acceptance by Government of "Prince Alfred's Own" battery will be ultimately recognized, I feel it to be my duty, in the interest of each member of that battery, further to protest against the arbitrary appointment of any officer to No. 8 (which would be the number of "Prince Alfred's Own") Battery, in contravention of the provisions of the Volunteer Act of 1867, and contrary to all previous practice.

4. I beg to observe that I found my second protest on paragraph 1, section 9, page 4, of the Act above cited, which expressly grants permission "that any Volunteer Corps may recommend to the Governor any enrolled members thereof to be officers of such corps of a rank not higher than Captain of a Troop, Battery, or Company.

I have, &c.,

MEMORIAL.

To His Excellency the Right Honorable SOMERSET RICHARD, Earl of Belmore, a Member of Her Majesty's Most Honorable Privy Council in Ireland, Governor and Commander-in-Chief of the Colony of New South Wales, and Vice-Admiral of the same.

The humble Petition of the undersigned residents of Sydney and suburbs,—

SHOWETH:—

That we, the undersigned, having enrolled our names in No. 8 or "Prince Alfred's Own" Battery, Volunteer Artillery, which received that designation at the hands of His Royal Highness Prince Alfred, two and a half years ago, and the services of which the Officer Commanding the Volunteer Force has admitted his intention to recommend to the acceptance of Government,—humbly represent to your Excellency that the enrolment of a new No. 8 has been officially notified by the Officer Commanding the Volunteer Force, whereby the original No. 8 or "Prince Alfred's Own" Battery would be unjustly excluded.

We beg further most respectfully to represent to your Excellency—

- 1st. That such action on the part of the Officer Commanding the Volunteer Force—rejecting a battery which His Royal Highness Prince Alfred was graciously pleased to accept—is an act of discourtesy towards His Royal Highness as well as to your Petitioners.
- 2nd. That such action is opposed to the whole tenor of that officer's letters on the subject of "Prince Alfred's Own" Battery.
- 3rd. That no moral objection can be urged against "Prince Alfred's Own" Battery, or it is evident that the Officer commanding the Volunteer Force could not have extended to it any hope of his recommendation, and would have stated such as a reason for not recommending it.

The claim of No. 8 or "Prince Alfred's Own" Battery to priority of acceptance over any new one, on the ground of its longer enrolment, being shortly to form the subject of a parliamentary investigation,—your Petitioners therefore pray that your Excellency, in your capacity of Commander-in-Chief of the Colony of New South Wales, will be pleased to direct that further steps towards forming a new No. 8 Battery be discontinued, until such parliamentary investigation has been concluded, and a final decision whether "Prince Alfred's Own" Battery ought to be accepted by Government has been arrived at.

And your Petitioners, as in duty bound, will ever pray, &c., &c.

THE PRINCIPAL UNDER SECRETARY to LIEUT.-COLONEL RICHARDSON.

Sydney, 12 December, 1870.

SIR,

I am directed by the Colonial Secretary to refer to you, for your observations, the accompanying petition from certain residents of Sydney and its suburbs, praying that further steps towards forming a new No. 8 Battery of Volunteer Artillery be discontinued, until the conclusion of a parliamentary investigation, and final decision whether Prince Alfred's Own Battery should be accepted by the Government.

2. I am at the same time to state that Mr. Cowper was not aware of the correspondence which took place respecting the formation of this battery (as recorded in this office) when H.R.H. Prince Alfred was leaving the Colony on his first visit. Something like a promise—rather implied than otherwise—was apparently made in reference to the enrolling of a battery of Artillery under the designation above given. Perhaps you can suggest some mode of reconciling matters.

3. The Colonial Secretary cannot, I am directed to add, approve of the tone of the petition, more especially the threat to appeal to Parliament.

I have, &c.,

No. 17.

LIEUT.-COLONEL RICHARDSON to THE COLONIAL SECRETARY.

Volunteer Brigade Office,
Sydney, 24 December, 1870.

SIR,

I have the honor to acknowledge your letter of the 12th instant, No. 70/9784, requesting my report on the enclosed petition, having reference to the proffer of services of certain residents of Sydney, represented by Mr. Bamford as desirous of forming a corps, to be called the "Prince Alfred's Own" Battery of Volunteer Artillery.

I have to state in connection therewith that, some two years ago, the offer was received, but not then entertained, in consequence of the existing batteries being incomplete. On the receipt of the authority for the formation of two new batteries, viz., Nos. 8 and 9, I caused an advertisement to appear in the daily papers, to the effect that persons desirous of enrolment should apply to this office, to which I expected those persons represented as desirous of joining the force would respond. In reply to letters subsequently received, I informed Mr. Bamford that the services of the persons he represented would be accepted on application to either Capt. Wells or M'Donald, commanding Nos. 8 and 9 Batteries respectively, or wholly in the former battery if desired. This I imagined would have met the requirements of the case. I however admit that it would have been better to have communicated with Mr. Bamford prior to advertising for the enrolment of members. This was inadvertence on my part, and in no way intended to ignore, what Mr. Bamford seems to consider, the claims of the body he represents.

To aid matters, I would suggest that the services of the persons referred to be accepted as No. 8 Battery or "Prince Alfred's Own," retaining Capt. Wells, of the battery which has already commenced formation, as commanding officer.

Mr. Parkes' memo. on the correspondence, enclosed for my information, having reference to the application to His Royal Highness the Duke of Edinburgh, requesting permission for the proposed battery to be designated "Prince Alfred's Own," I now see for the first time.

I have, &c.,

J. S. RICHARDSON,

I beg leave also to enclose copies of two letters from Mr. Bamford to myself, together with copies of my replies thereto, which were inadvertently overlooked when forwarding the correspondence which accompanied my letter of the 1st February last.

Volunteer Artillery Office,
Sydney, 14 April, 1868.

SIR,

In reply to your letter (No. 1) of this date, requesting me to call a special general meeting of the Volunteer Artillery Force, for the purpose of ascertaining if any objection existed among the members to a new Battery being formed, under the title of No. 8 or "Prince Alfred's Own," I beg to say that I can hardly comply with your request, feeling that such a course would be superfluous. Convinced as I am that the Force generally would receive the proposed addition to their strength with the utmost satisfaction, I would recommend you to see the various Officers commanding Batteries on the subject, and will be glad to learn the result.

I have the honor, in acknowledging the receipt of your letter dated 14th instant (number and subject as per margin), to inform you that I have complied with your advice, and enclose copy of a document from which you will perceive the result to have been favourable to the proposed Battery (No. 8 or "Prince Alfred's Own.")

2. I shall be happy, if you desire it, to submit the original document for your perusal, but must not part with it, since it may possibly be required by a Member of the Legislature, who has undertaken to bring the whole matter connected with the Battery before Parliament, should circumstances render it advisable.

3. I have to request you will be so good as to co-operate with me in this matter, in your official capacity of Officer Commanding V.A., unless you see any valid cause to the contrary; and, with great respect, beg to suggest as a first step, that you will as early as possible place yourself in communication with the Honorable Colonial Secretary.

28 June, 1870.

DEAR SIR,

Since the time when the attempt was made to take the life of H.R.H. the Duke of Edinburgh, I have had enrolled a number of good men desirous to be received into the Volunteer Artillery as a new Battery; but the Colonel commanding the Volunteer Forces has required them to remain in abeyance, in every communication on the subject which I have received from him. Such being the case, I deemed it unadvisable to trouble him until time had been allowed for the obstacles in our way to be cleared off. It is now more than twelve months since I wrote to the Officer Commanding Volunteer Forces on the above subject; and I would beg of you (if you see no objection) to re-open the matter for me with that gentleman, by ascertaining whether he will permit me now to address him officially with a view to his recommendation of the Battery.

Yours, &c.,
J. B. BAMFORD.

Would Colonel Richardson kindly furnish me with such information as will enable me to reply to Mr. Bamford on the subject embraced in this letter.—P. L. C. S., Major Comg. V. A., 30/6/70.

This must stand over until the Government has decided on the Force to be employed for the defence of the Colony consequent on the withdrawal of the Troops.—J. S. R., Lt.-Col., 11/7/70.

MY DEAR MAJOR,

Will you oblige me by ascertaining whether Colonel Richardson, in the event of an augmentation of Volunteer Artillery being decided on, will be disposed to recommend the proposed No. 8 for acceptance, on my making official application to him to that effect. You remember, possibly, that in reply to your last communication to him on this subject, the Colonel stated the Battery (8) would have to stand over until a plan of defence had been decided on by Government. I may mention that my reason for referring to you again is, that I feel perfectly convinced no plan of defence can be decided on which does not call for an addition to the Artillery.

With apologies for troubling you,
I am, &c.,
J. B. BAMFORD.

2. I beg to inform you that notice of a motion for the production of such papers is to be found in No. 57 of the printed Minutes of Parliament, and was given by the Member for Canterbury, who, before leaving the Colony, confided the remainder of the affair in question to another Member of the House, who intends proceeding with it as soon as the Government is settled.

1. I have the honor to inquire—having been officially informed that the existing Batteries Volunteer Artillery are now complete—whether the proposed new Battery (regarding which I received a letter from your office dated 1st April last) will be recommended for acceptance.

2. I may mention that Mr. Parkes was favourable, and was merely awaiting the filling up of your old Batteries in order to obtain your recommendation.

3. If you will favour me with a reply at as early a date as possible, it will greatly oblige the members of the proposed new Battery.

Volunteer Brigade Office,
Sydney, 2 October, 1868.

SIR,

I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 29th ultimo, and to state in reply, that although the existing Batteries are now nearly completed as to actual numbers, I anticipate there will be a great reduction for non-attendance. I think it therefore undesirable to recommend any increase to this branch of the Force until after the receipt of the annual return (due 31 December next) showing the state of efficiency in the present Batteries, and by which I must be guided before I can venture to recommend this increase.

In conclusion, I have to add, that at the beginning of the ensuing year I hope to return a more favourable reply to your communication.

SIR,

I have the honor to beg your attention to the concluding paragraph of your letter, stamped 68/306, and dated 2nd October, 1868, and to request, in my own name and those of the members composing the proposed Battery to which that paragraph relates, that you will be kind enough to inform us whether the same will now receive your sanction.

We trust to have the benefit of your support now, both because we have been held in abeyance for so long a time, and also on the ground that so many bodies of Volunteers of more recent formation than our own have been favoured with it.

Volunteer Brigade Office,
Sydney, 11 May, 1869.

SIR,

I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your communication of the 27th ult., and to state that I am of opinion, judging from the small number of efficient as returned on the 31st December last, by the Head Quarter Batteries of Volunteer Artillery, as compared with the actual strength, that the time has hardly yet arrived for any accession to that branch of the Force, nor should I feel justified in recommending it until I see greater improvements.

In the latter portion of your letter you request my support, as the services of Volunteer Corps of more recent formation have been accepted; but I must point out that, with the exception of the Highland Corps, all the others have been enrolled in the country districts, which, for various reasons, it was thought desirable to encourage.

In conclusion, it would be as well if you could make it convenient to call upon me to discuss the matter.

Brigade Office,
Sydney, 3 April, 1871.

MY LORD,

I have the honor to forward the accompanying correspondence, which has arisen in reference to a complaint by Captain Deane, No. 2 Battery, Volunteer Artillery, against Captain Hopkins, of the Permanent Staff, and as my ruling has not satisfied the former officer, and in accordance with his request, I beg to submit the matter for your consideration.

I have particularly to draw your Lordship's attention to the first portion of the correspondence, on which I based the decision conveyed by my memorandum of the 27th February last, when it will appear that Captain Deane, in the first place, in an offensive and improper manner, preferred a charge (the truth of which he was personally ignorant of), unsupported by evidence, against the Staff, which in my opinion was rebutted by the evidence of Captain Hopkins and the instructors.

I have, &c.,

J. S. RICHARDSON, Lieut.-Colonel,
Commanding Volunteer Force.

Captain Deane to Captain Hopkins.

75, Elizabeth-street,
16 February, 1871.

Sir,

I have the honor to inform you that last Monday evening, being the second Monday in the month, pursuant to the circular Brigade Order I had a detachment of ten members for garrison gun drill, and there was no drill instructor present in attendance. May I inquire the reason of this neglect?

I have, &c.,

WILLIAM DEANE,
Captain, No. 2 Battery.

Captain Deane is requested to state at what time he attended with his squad on Monday night.—S. HOPKINS, Lt., R.A., Capt. & Bde.-Adj., Vol. Arty., 16/2/71. To be returned. Captain Deane has not stated he was in attendance, but that he had a detachment at the time appointed, who waited from 7.30 to 8.15 p.m.—WILLIAM DEANE, Captain, No. 2 Battery. Captain Deane is informed that Captain Hopkins and three instructors were present on Monday night,—the former with one instructor from 7.30 to 8.30 p.m., and two instructors till 8.10 p.m. Captain Deane's detachment must have kept carefully away from the usual place of parade, as they were not seen by any of the Staff. Captain Deane is requested for the future to be more careful in making groundless charges of neglect, which are so easily disproved.—S. HOPKINS, Lt., R.A., Capt. & Bde.-Adj., Vol. Arty., 17/2/71. To be returned. Forwarded for Captain Deane's information.—P.L.C.S., Major, Com. V.A., 21/2/71. To be returned. Returned.—P.L.C.S., Major, Com. V.A., 21/2/71. True copy.—S. HOPKINS, Lt., R.A., Capt. & Bde.-Adj., V.A.

Captain Deane to Major Shepherd.

75, Elizabeth-street,
20 February, 1871.

Sir,

I have the honor to return a letter of mine to Captain Hopkins, dated 16th February instant, on which he has endorsed a memorandum, dated 17th February instant, conveying, without authority, a reprimand to me, his senior officer.

I have also the honor thereupon to request that you will desire Captain Hopkins to acknowledge his error in this matter by applying forthwith for permission to withdraw the same.

I have, &c.,

WILLIAM DEANE,
Captain, No. 2 Battery.

Forwarded for Col. Richardson's information.—P.L.C.S., Major, Com. V.A., 21/2/71. There appears to me to have been errors on both sides; and in the first place I must point out that Captain Hopkins is not responsible to Captain Deane, and therefore the tone of the latter portion of his letter, together with the incorrect nature of the charge, was unauthorized and calculated to irritate the officer to whom it was addressed. Captain Hopkins had no right to reply in the shape of a reprimand, and he will be instructed to avoid this for the future. The proper course for Captain Deane would have been simply to have reported through the Field Officer Commanding Artillery Brigade the want of attendance on the part of the drill instructor.—J.S.R., Lieut.-Col., 27/2/71, B.C. To be returned. Forwarded for Captain Deane's information.—P.L.C.S., Major, Com. V.A., 28/2/71. To be returned. True copy.—S. HOPKINS, Lt., R.A., Capt. & Bde.-Adj., V.A.

Captain Deane to Major Shepherd.

75, Elizabeth-street,
21 February, 1871.

Sir,

I send you herewith copy of a letter written by me to the Brigade Adjutant, Volunteer Artillery, dated 16th February instant, together with copies of three memoranda thereon endorsed.

My object in bringing this matter under your observation is, to complain of the very unfair manner in which the case referred to has been dealt with, and the very improper and offensive remarks and insinuations which have been indulged in, in disposing of it, tending, if permitted to go unnoticed and unchecked, materially to interfere with the effective drilling of the men, and the efficiency of the corps generally, and to prevent, in other cases, officers, who wish to be treated as gentlemen, and to avoid unmerited snubbing, from discharging their duty in reporting cases of neglect on the part of the Staff, when it shall become known that such cases are disposed of in such a way behind their backs, and their complaints dismissed with contumely and insult, intimating a policy that no complaints of neglect against the Staff will be entertained.

The facts of the case are as follows:—By the Brigade Order circular of the present month, the No. 2 Battery have garrison gun drills on the second and fourth Mondays, at 7.30 p.m. There are also officers and non-commissioned officers' drills under the new system, ordered for Mondays and Thursdays at the same time, under threat of examination for officers, and reduction for non-commissioned officers, who do not attend, so that the gunners have no officers or non-commissioned officers to look after them on their drill nights. On the Monday night referred to in my letter of the 16th instant, I was present at the officers and non-commissioned officers' drill, which fell in at 7.30, and at once marched to the Outer Domain, accompanied, I may here remark, by the Brigade Adjutant and Serjeant-Major M'Garvie, so that the former can have had no personal knowledge of what may have been taking place elsewhere, that is to say, when the drilling of my men should have been going on. On the 15th (the day on which I wrote the letter to the Brigade Adjutant) I received from one of the gunners a letter containing the following paragraph:—"I was up on Monday night also for garrison drill, being the second Monday of the month, but there was no one to drill us. As there were ten gunners up, I believe we are entitled to a mark for drill, which I hope you will see we get credit for." Feeling naturally aggrieved that my men were being neglected whilst all my non-commissioned officers were compelled to attend the new drill under the threat of reduction, I at once wrote and complained of this neglect, and subsequently, in reply to the first memorandum endorsed, to be more certain of my reply, wrote to the gunner who complained, asking for the information required, and immediately replied thereto by memorandum—that the squad was there from 7.30 to 8.15; thus I submit, so far as I am personally concerned, my complaint, even if it were groundless, is perfectly justified and proper. But to my surprise and indignation, having heard nothing further from the Brigade Office, not being informed by what process a decision has been arrived at, nor asked to give any explanation on any adverse testimony or information which may have been received, or to produce any evidence of the truth of the complaint,—nor am I aware, nor do I believe, that any evidence or information of its untruth was obtained,—or that the the charge was groundless or unfounded (the whole squad on the contrary, being, as I believe, prepared to substantiate the charge), I am astonished by receiving the memorandum of the 17th, not that the case has been heard or disposed of—for it does not appear by the memorandum that such is the case even now—but an insinuation that “the men must have kept carefully away from the usual place of parade,”—an insinuation thrown out, it appears to me, with a view to shut the matter up and save further trouble; an insinuation that should have been a charge upon which myself and the squad should have been called upon to answer, and have been punished for if true. Such insinuation, Sir, can have but one meaning, as the men can have no end to serve in being there and hiding from the drill sergeants, nor I in abetting them in so unlawful a proceeding; and that the meaning intended to be conveyed by that insinuation appears to me to be that the whole thing is a lie, and that I knew it was so when I put it forward, and that the men were not there at all; and I look to you, Sir, to protect your officers from such base and unwarrantable insinuations.

Am I, Sir, because the letter I have written may have given the Brigade Adjutant a little trouble, to submit to be branded as a liar and an abettor in a conspiracy to deceive the Brigade Office;—I, who have lived all my life in this country, been before the country, and for the last thirty years held many positions of trust and confidence without anyone having the power, or right, or daring to say one word to my discredit?—am I, I say, now to quietly submit to this vile inuendo, and to have all the years of my life swept away with this crushing charge hanging over my head to save your subordinate a little trouble? No Sir, I cannot submit to it; and if I do not get your protection I will look for it elsewhere.

What have I to gain in being a volunteer beyond discharging my duty as a citizen, that I should submit to such groundless and false insinuations; and, in addition to the many vexatious calls which are made upon my time in discharging my duties as such, have still to have the further trouble cast upon me of devoting valuable time to protect my honor from false aspersions, in such faithful discharge of such duties.

I trust therefore that you will see that I am put right in this matter, and that this insinuation may be ordered to be removed.

I regret that a matter in itself so small and so easily disposed of, if properly operated upon, should have assumed a phase of so much importance, and cast upon you the trouble of perusing so lengthy a letter as the present; but the case has been made so by an attempt to deal with it improperly, and has become to me and my men one of principle and character.

I have, &c.,

WILLIAM DEANE,
Captain, No. 2 Battery, V.A.

Forwarded for the consideration of the Officer Commanding the Volunteer Force.—P. L. C. SHEPHERD, Major, Commanding V.A., B.C., 27/2/71. True copy.—S. HOPKINS, Lt., R.A., Capt. & Brigade Adj., V.A.

Captain Deane to Captain Hopkins.

75, Elizabeth-street,
16 February, 1871.

Sir,

I have the honor to inform you, that last Monday evening, being the second Monday in the month, pursuant to the circular Brigade Order I had a detachment of ten members for garrison gun drill, and there was no drill instructor in attendance. May I inquire the reason of this neglect?

I have, &c.,

WILLIAM DEANE,
Captain, No. 2 Battery.

Captain Deane is requested to state at what time he attended with his squad on Monday night.—S. HOPKINS, Lieut., Roy. Artillery, Captain and Brigade Adjutant, Vol. Artillery. Captain Deane has not stated he was in attendance, but that he had a detachment at the time appointed, who waited from 7:30 to 8:15 p.m.—WILLIAM DEANE, Captain, No. 2 Battery. Captain Deane is informed that Captain Hopkins and three instructors were present on Monday night,—the former with one instructor from 7:30 to 8:30 p.m., and two instructors till 8:10 p.m. Captain Deane's detachment must have kept carefully away from the usual place of parade, as they were not seen by any of the staff. Captain Deane is requested for the future to be more careful in making groundless charges of neglect, which are so easily disproved.—S. HOPKINS, Lieut., Royal Artillery, Captain and Brigade Adjutant, Vol. Artillery, 17/2/71. To be returned. Sir,

I have this morning received a memorandum of Colonel Richardson's, dated 27/2/71, endorsed upon my letter of 20th ultimo. I regret that the Colonel Commanding Volunteer Force has no greater regard for the honor of his officers than to suggest that I should put up with and pass over so gross an insult as the one offered to me by the Brigade Adjutant; I did hope that good taste would have suggested to the Brigade Adjutant the only way I saw out of the difficulty, when he discovered, which he must have done, that he had overstepped his duty, namely, that of withdrawing the offensive memorandum, and apologizing for having sent it; or that, at least, the Colonel would have pointed out to him this course; but since he has not thought fit to do so, and the question is one of principle and character, I have no alternative but to request that a Court of Inquiry be at once held upon the conduct of Captain Hopkins, in having, without authority, administered to me, his superior officer, a reprimand; and also in having made false and scandalous insinuations in writing against me, implying that I had made a false charge of neglect of duty against the Staff, and had written to the Brigade Adjutant untruthfully, and had abetted a squad of my men in a conspiracy to deceive the Colonel Commanding Volunteer Force.

I have, &c.,

WILLIAM DEANE,

Captain, No. 2 Battery, V.A.

Letters and endorsements returned herewith.

Brigade Office,
Sydney, 8 March, 1871.

Sir,

Since my memorandum of the 27th ultimo, on the subject of Captain Deane's complaint against Captain Hopkins, I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of letters, dated respectively the 21st and 27th ultimo, and 1st instant (with copies of correspondence before noted), on which I beg to offer the following remarks:—

Captain Deane seems to ignore the fact that in the first place he is the aggressor in making an assertion that no drill instructor was present, which by evidence is shown to be incorrect; this, coupled with an authoritative demand to know the reason of such neglect, was a position Captain Deane had no right to assume; the mere fact of this, however, was no excuse for the improper nature of the remarks by Captain Hopkins, and for which he has been reprimanded. My memorandum of the 27th ultimo, somewhat to the above effect, should have been sufficient to have closed this disagreement.

I was therefore surprised to receive further letters, viewing, in my opinion, Captain Hopkins' remarks in an exaggerated light, together with a request for a Court of Inquiry on that officer.

I, however, do not consider it necessary to cause the conduct of Captain Hopkins to be investigated by a Court of Inquiry, having arrived at what I believe to be a correct estimate of the same without the aid of such Inquiry.

With a view of bringing this unpleasantness to a termination, I would suggest, for the consideration of Captain Deane, the justice of withdrawing in the first instance his letter of the 16th ultimo, addressed to Captain Hopkins, whereupon that officer will withdraw the memorandum which has given the offence, together with a statement of what was intended to be conveyed in said memorandum; this I trust will be the course pursued; but if Captain Deane wishes the matter to go further, I shall be prepared to submit the same for the decision of a higher authority.

Having now provisionally dealt with Captain Deane's complaint in a manner which I conceive does equal justice to both parties, I have to refer to that portion of Captain Deane's letter of the 1st instant, which stigmatises my conduct as follows:—"I regret that the Colonel Commanding Volunteer Force has no greater regard for the honor of his officers, &c., &c." I cannot see that I have merited such language from a subordinate officer, and am therefore not prepared to submit. Captain Deane will accordingly be pleased to withdraw the expression, otherwise I have no option but to bring it to the notice of His Excellency the Governor.

I have, &c.,

J. S. RICHARDSON, Lieut.-Col.,

Commanding Volunteer Force.

Sydney, 9 March, 1871.

Sir,

I have the honor, in reply to the last paragraph of Colonel Richardson's letter to you, of yesterday's date (71/138), to at once and unhesitatingly withdraw the expression complained of in my letter of the 1st instant, and any other expression in this unpleasant correspondence which he may consider to be in the least personally offensive or improper; but in carrying on a correspondence of this description I might have been excused a little warmth of expression, as it became almost impossible, labouring, as I feel I do, under an imputation against my veracity and my character, both as a gentleman and a Volunteer Officer, not to feel otherwise than strongly, and to express myself accordingly; and, smarting under what appeared to me unmerited correction in the faithful discharge of my duty, I may have given expression, improperly, to a feeling engendered in my mind from a fancied shielding of Captain Hopkins from the consequences of his unauthorized conduct,—that being merely a volunteer I was to be thrown over.

I will reply to the other portion of Colonel Richardson's letter in due course, but it seemed to me to be due to Colonel Richardson that I should without a moment's hesitation disclaim the least intention of making use of any expression that might be disagreeable to him.

Sir,

Before replying fully to Colonel Richardson's letter of 8th instant, I have the honor to apply for a copy of the evidence therein referred to, wherein my assertion that no drill instructor was present is, as in the said letter is stated, "shown to be incorrect."

I make this application on the ground that being a party interested the opportunity of being present when the evidence was taken was not accorded to me.

Sir,

I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of Captain Deane's letters of the 9th and 10th instant, and with reference to the latter to say, that having dealt with the case as submitted by him, and further pointed out the course I should wish pursued, I cannot consent to re-open the matter, except under the alternative of referring it to a higher authority; but I may mention, for Captain Deane's information, that Captain Hopkins's assertion, that the instructors were present, is borne out by the instructors themselves.

Sir,

I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of Colonel Richardson's letter to you of 16th instant (71/154), herewith returned, and in reply to say, that, having as I believe I had, a right to do, complained by letter of 16th ultimo of the non-attendance on Monday evening, 13th ultimo, of a drill instructor for my men, pursuant to the circular Brigade Order of 31 January last,—and having for so doing, by memorandum, dated 17/2/71, endorsed on my said letter, been reprimanded without authority by Captain Hopkins, Brigade Adjutant, V.A., a subordinate officer, who also upon the occasion indulged in uncalled for observations reflecting upon my veracity and my character as a gentleman and Volunteer Officer,—having, by letter dated 20th ultimo, requested Captain Hopkins to withdraw such reprimand, which he failed to do, and by letter of 21st ultimo, complained of the offensive observations in his memorandum,—having, by Colonel Richardson's memorandum of 27/2/71, gathered that the only course that officer intended to pursue was to request that Captain Hopkins should not repeat the offence,—having therefore, from a feeling that Captain Hopkins' offence merited more serious consideration, by letter of 1st instant requested that a Court of Inquiry be held upon his conduct, which the Colonel by letters of 8th instant refused on the ground that by evidence I was shown to be the aggressor in making an incorrect assertion that no drill instructor was present, and upon the strength of such alleged evidence suggested an arrangement of the matter untenable, as any evidence that was given tending to show my assertion was incorrect was one sided, as I was not accorded the opportunity of being present, or of rebutting it by other evidence, which I could readily have done,—and having, by letter dated 10th instant, applied for a copy of the evidence referred to for my information, Colonel Richardson having in reply to such very reasonable requests, by the letter now under acknowledgment, refused to re-open the matter, when it appears clearly by his letter of 8th instant that the case was not closed but merely a suggestion thrown out for my consideration upon erroneous premises, and that the so called refusal to re-open the matter became, in effect, a refusal to supply me with a copy of this evidence which had been taken behind my back, except under the alternative of referring the case to a higher authority. I have no other course open to me, however I might have desired an amicable arrangement of the matter on fair and reasonable grounds, than to adopt the alternative, and to request that the case be forwarded to such higher authority for adjustment; and in order to avoid any further complications, I have further to request that the whole of the correspondence be forwarded with the case, and that a copy of any statement accompanying it may be forwarded to me that I may have the opportunity of correcting anything which may appear to me to be erroneous, or sending in a counter-statement, as I may see fit.

Captain Hopkins to Lieut.-Colonel Richardson.

Volunteer Brigade Office,
3 April, 1871.

Sir,

With reference to Captain Deane's correspondence on the subject of my memo. on his letter of the 16th February, I think it due to myself to request that you will be kind enough to forward a few remarks from me.

In the first place the words of my memo. only convey that that officer was careless and hasty in making such a charge against me, on grounds of which, as he himself admits, he had no personal knowledge; and it is only by gross and wilful exaggeration and distortion they can be supposed to bear the meaning which he attaches to them.

Secondly,—Captain Deane had no right whatever to address me at all, much less in such an insolent manner, as I am not responsible to him or any other subordinate for the correct discharge of my duty, but to you alone as chief of the Staff. I have nothing whatever to do with Captain Deane, except when he forms part of a squad handed over to me for drill, and then I am responsible that he does his work correctly and in an orderly manner; and therefore I consider that the course adopted by him, in writing the letter which has been the cause of all this annoyance, is irregular and uncalled for, both in itself and in the tone of his accusation, which is not, as he says, a complaint but a direct charge.

The

The memo. referred to was written by me in a moment of irritation, caused by the receipt of the above letter when you were absent from the office, while this officer, who is so extremely sensitive with regard to his own feelings, after mature deliberation allows himself in his letters the most extreme license in the numerous remarks he makes with regard to my veracity and character.

I have hitherto refrained from addressing you, Sir, on this subject, as I consider that your decision was just in imputing blame to both parties, and one in which I perfectly acquiesced.

Captain Deane, however, not deferring to your opinion as his Commanding Officer, appears from the whole tenor of his correspondence to wish to constitute himself judge as well as accuser, more particularly in his letter of the 22nd ultimo, in which he throws a doubt on your assertion of having taken evidence in the matter, by the words "Upon the strength of such alleged evidence," referring evidently to your letter of the 16th ultimo; and further, without having submitted for your consideration the testimony he states he can produce, demands that the evidence of the instructors be laid before him for his decision on the matter, and also in the last paragraph of his letter of the 22nd ultimo, that any statement forwarded by you in connection with this correspondence should be submitted to him for correction, thereby ignoring your position as his Commanding Officer, and implying a doubt both of my veracity in making, and of your discretion in forwarding, such statement.

These remarks would perhaps hardly be necessary, as Captain Deane's letters themselves fully bear out what I have written on the subject, were it not that I have heard that this officer has discussed this matter with the non-commissioned officers and men of his Battery, a proceeding contrary to the usages of the service and most prejudicial to discipline. But for the risk of misconstruction I should not have considered Captain Deane's tirades worth noticing.

GOVERNOR THE EARL OF BELMORE to LIEUT.-COLONEL RICHARDSON.

Government House,
6 April, 1871.

SIR,

I have the honor to acknowledge your letter of the 3rd instant, forwarding correspondence which has arisen in reference to a complaint by Captain Deane, No. 2 Battery, Volunteer Artillery, against Captain Hopkins, of the Permanent Staff.

I approve of your ruling, as shown in your memorandum of the 27th February, which I confirm.

With a view to prevent the recurrence in future of such an irregularity as has taken place, I have to direct you to issue a General Order, that on no account is an officer commanding a battalion, or battery, or company, who may have complaints to make against any of the officers of the permanent staff under your orders, to address such officer in official communication directly, but either to make his complaint, if commanding a battalion, to the Officer Commanding Volunteers; or, if commanding a battery or company, to that officer, through the officer commanding his brigade or battalion, as the case may be.

I return the enclosures to your letter. The second paragraph of Captain Hopkins' letter of 3rd April may be communicated to Captain Deane.

CAPTAIN DEANE TO MAJOR SHEPHERD.

75, Elizabeth-street, 13 April, 1871.

SIR,

I have the honor, in reference to Colonel Richardson's letter to you of the 11th instant (71-225), received yesterday and returned herewith, to apply for a copy of the letter, dated 3rd instant, sent by Colonel Richardson to His Excellency the Governor, together with a list of the correspondence enclosed; also a copy of the letter of Captain Hopkins of same date, sent therewith; and at the same time to observe that it seems to me it would only have been an act of fairness to have granted me the same privilege of a perusal of Colonel Richardson's letter before it was sent in, and the opportunity of writing therewith, as appears to have been accorded to Captain Hopkins.

No. 6.

CAPTAIN HOPKINS TO MAJOR SHEPHERD.

Brigade Office,
Sydney, 14 April, 1871.

SIR,

I have the honor, by direction, to acknowledge receipt of Captain Deane's letter of the 13th instant, and to state in reply that the case to which the correspondence alluded to refers, having been submitted to His Excellency the Governor, and by his decision closed, with directions to communicate to Captain Deane such portion of Captain Hopkins' letter as His Excellency deemed fit, precludes the Officer Commanding Volunteer Force acceding to Captain Deane's request; besides which, the Officer Commanding does not admit the right of any subordinate to be supplied with copies of correspondence emanating from himself.

The Officer Commanding also desires me to express his regret that Captain Deane should have permitted himself to imply, by the request contained in his letter, a doubt as to the justice of His Excellency's decision.

I have further to add that you will be good enough to inform that officer that all the correspondence in the case was laid before the Governor, and point out to him that his request for a list of the letters forwarded can only be construed, by the Officer Commanding, as doubting his honorable action in the matter; and indeed the greater portion of Captain Deane's correspondence, including his two letters of yesterday's date, mark an absence, on the part of that officer, of the proper subordination to constituted authority which should exist throughout the Volunteer Force.

I have, &c.,

S. HOPKINS, Lieut., R.A.,
Captain and Brigade Adjutant, Vol. Artillery.

THE COLONIAL TREASURER to HIS EXCELLENCY THE GOVERNOR.

The Treasury, New South Wales,
27 January, 1870.

MY LORD,

Being informed that the Imperial Government have granted to the Colony of Victoria the privilege of using the Imperial die in the coining of sovereigns and half-sovereigns in the Branch of the Royal Mint recently established at Melbourne, I do myself the honor of requesting that your Excellency will have the goodness to communicate to the Right Honorable the Secretary of State for the Colonies the hope that that concession may be likewise granted to the Branch Mint in this Colony, and that Her Majesty the Queen may be advised to graciously accord the same; as also such further rights and privileges, not already enjoyed, which it may have been deemed advisable to confer upon the branch establishment in the sister Colony.

MY LORD,

I have the honor to enclose a letter from the Colonial Treasurer, expressing a hope that Her Majesty may be advised graciously to confer upon the Branch Royal Mint of this Colony such privileges—particularly of using the Imperial die in the coining of sovereigns and half-sovereigns—which it does not at present enjoy, but which it is understood have lately been conceded to the Melbourne Branch.

MY LORD,

I forwarded to the Lords Commissioners of the Treasury a copy of your Lordship's despatch, No. 14, of 28th January, requesting that the same privileges may be conferred upon the Branch Royal Mint at Sydney as are conceded to the Melbourne Branch; and I enclose for your information a copy of a letter which has been received upon the subject from their Lordships' department.

[Enclosure.]

Mr. Stansfeld to Sir F. Rogers.

Treasury Chambers,
3 May, 1870.

Sir,

The Lords Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury have had before them the despatch from the Governor of New South Wales, transmitted in Mr. Herbert's letter of 30th March last, requesting that the same privileges may be conferred upon the Branch Royal Mint at Sydney as are conceded to the Melbourne Branch.

Their Lordships direct me to observe in reply that, as no special privileges were granted to the Colony of Victoria by Her Majesty's Order in Council of 10th August, 1869, establishing a Branch of the Royal Mint at Melbourne, they presume that this application may be taken to refer only to the design of the coins to be issued from the Sydney Branch, which now have a separate design, while those struck at Melbourne bear the same design as the coins of the realm.

My Lords see no reason why coins struck at the Sydney Mint should not bear the same design as those issued from the Mints in London and at Melbourne; and they will therefore be willing to submit to Her Majesty an Order in Council, giving effect to the wishes of the Government of New South Wales in this respect.

I am, &c.,
JAMES STANSFELD.

Downing-street,

MY LORD,

With reference to my predecessor's despatch, No. 40, of 6th May last, I transmit to your Lordship, for your information, a copy of a letter from the Lords Commissioners of the Treasury, enclosing a correspondence with the Deputy Master of the Mint, on the subject of the coins struck at the Branch Mint at Sydney and the management of the Mint. 18 August, 1870.

Sir,

I am directed by the Lords Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury to transmit to you herewith the enclosed copy of a Report from the Deputy Master of the Mint, dated the 30th ultimo, on the subject of the coins struck at the Branch Mint at Sydney and with reference to the management of that Mint, and also a copy of the reply, of this day's date, which has been addressed to Mr. Fremantle; and I am to request that you will move the Earl of Kimberley to cause this correspondence to be transmitted to the Governor of New South Wales.

I am, &c.,
R. R. W. LINGEN.

Mr. Lingen to Deputy Master of the Mint.

[Immediate.]

Treasury Chambers,
18 August, 1870.

Sir,

I am commanded by the Lords Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury to state, with reference to your report of the 30th ultimo, that my Lords concur with you in opinion that steps should be taken for assimilating the design of the coins struck at the Sydney Branch Mint to that of the Realm, and that they will give directions for the preparation of the necessary Order in Council for this purpose.

As regards the future appointments of the officers of the Branch Mints, it will be desirable that you should call the attention of the Deputy Masters of the Mints, at Melbourne and Sydney, to the provision in the Coinage Act, 1870, which vests all these appointments in the Treasury.

My Lords see no reason for including a reference to these appointments, or to the matters of administration, in an Order in Council; these being subjects for regulation by the Treasury, under the powers given by the Act.

Whenever occasion arises for any alteration in existing regulations under the Orders in Council relative to the Branch Mints of Melbourne and Sydney respectively, it will be your duty to make a recommendation to this Board, in order that new or amended regulations may be issued.

My Lords will be willing to consider any recommendation made by the Governor and the Deputy Master, at Sydney and Melbourne, with regard to the appointments which have hitherto been made by the Governor on the nomination of the Deputy Master; but they consider that, as has been recently decided with regard to the Branch Mint at Melbourne, the appointment of the Assayers should be made by warrant of this Board.

My Lords approve of the mint-marks as proposed for the coins to be issued from the Branch Mints at Sydney and Melbourne.

I am, &c.,
R. R. W. LINGEN.

Mr. Fremantle to Secretary to Treasury.

Royal Mint,
30 July, 1870.

Sir,

With reference to Mr. Stansfeld's letter of the 3rd of May, forwarding to me a copy of a letter addressed, by the direction of the Lords Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury, to the Colonial Office, to the effect that their Lordships will be willing to submit to Her Majesty an Order in Council assimilating the design of the gold coins struck at Sydney to that of the coins of the Realm,—I am directed by the Master of the Mint to suggest whether there should not be embodied in the Order to be thus issued general regulations for the management of the Sydney Branch of the Royal Mint. I am to observe that the Coinage Act 1870 (33 Vict., cap. 10) enacts that the Treasury may from time to time appoint Deputy Masters and other officers and persons for the purpose of carrying on the business of the Mint in the United Kingdom or elsewhere (sec. 15); whereas previously to the passing of the Act only the four superior officers of the Sydney Mint were appointed by their Lordships, the remainder being nominated by the Governor of New South Wales, from the recommendation of the Deputy Master. I am also to observe that, since the date of the Order in Council creating the Sydney Mint, and fixing its establishment and the duties of the officers, the appointment of Superintendent of the Bullion Office has been consolidated with that of Deputy Master.

I am to recommend therefore that these changes should be officially recognized, either in the new Order in Council to be issued, or in a communication to be addressed by the Master of the Mint to Mr. Elouis.

With reference to the appointment of officers, I am to suggest whether their Lordships may not be pleased to authorize the Master of the Mint to intimate to Mr. Elouis that, although the Coinage Act vests the selection in them, they will nevertheless be willing to receive the recommendations of the Governor and Deputy Master for any vacancies which may arise among the appointments to which nominations have hitherto been made by the Governor, on recommendation of the Deputy Master.

Steps have already been taken for the preparation of the required number of dies for the coins to be struck at the Sydney Mint during the year 1871; and I am to propose that for the future these coins should bear as a mint-mark the letter S on their reverse, immediately above the rose, at the foot of the design. The proposal to adopt as a mint-mark the letter M, in the same position on the coin, has been approved by Colonel Ward, for the coins to be issued from the Melbourne Mint; and should their Lordships be pleased to signify their approval, the dies, both for Sydney and Melbourne, can be prepared accordingly, and transmitted to Australia in time for use at the beginning of the year.

I am to add that a mint-mark would appear to be necessary, to indicate the origin of the coins issued from Colonial Mints; but that, as it forms no part of the design, no reference should be made to it in the Order in Council.

I have, &c.,
C. W. FREMANTLE.

(DESPATCH.)

Presented to both Houses of Parliament, by Command.

THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR THE COLONIES TO HIS EXCELLENCY THE GOVERNOR.
(New South Wales—No. 37.)

Downing-street,
14 April, 1870.

MY LORD,

I transmit to you for your information a copy of a letter addressed to the Treasury, by the Deputy Master of the Mint, with a Report on the Gold Coins struck at the Sydney Branch of the Royal Mint during the year 1869.

I have, &c.,

[Enclosures.]

Mr. Fremantle to The Secretary to the Treasury.

Royal Mint,
1 April, 1870.

Sir, In conformity with the instructions from the Lords Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury, communicated to me in Sir Charles Trevelyan's letter of the 9th November, 1855, I have now to submit an account of the weight and fineness, as ascertained here, of gold coins struck at the Sydney Branch of the Royal Mint, and sent home by the Governor of New South Wales, during the year 1869.

These coins were conveyed from Australia in closed packets, bearing the seal of the Colonial Treasurer, and were received by me under cover of letters from the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury of the 5th of March, 1869, and later dates.

My last Report on the Governor's pieces was dated 20th of April, 1869.

I am, &c.,
O. W. FREMANTLE.

No. 1.

THE COLONIAL ARCHITECT TO THE UNDER SECRETARY FOR PUBLIC WORKS.

Department of Public Works,
Colonial Architect's Office,
Sydney, 19 January, 1870.

SIR,

I do myself the honor to forward herewith an account furnished by Mr. W. Stoddart, for work performed by him at the Sydney Mint.

2. Mr. Stoddart had a contract for repairs and alterations at this building amounting to £1,167 10s., which has been paid. A further sum of £196 10s. for constructing annealing furnace, has also been paid, as well as £99 5s. for repairing entrance gates, &c. In addition to these items, the account contains charges for further works amounting to £1,614 9s. 1d. These works were performed by Mr. Stoddart without instructions from this Department, and without any supervision by any officer of it, and I am therefore unable to certify either as to the quality of the work or the correctness of the charges. Mr. Stoddart alleges that the works referred to were executed in pursuance of orders given him by the Deputy Master of the Mint, of which however I have no knowledge.

I have, &c.,

JAMES BARNET,
Colonial Architect.

Forward to Treasurer.—J.S., 21/1/70.

Deputy Master of the Mint, for his report.—S.S., 24/1/70.

Mr. Stoddart's allegation that I gave him orders to execute any work is simply untrue. I never gave him any orders; on the contrary, I thought it right on more than one occasion to caution him that he must look for his orders entirely to the Colonial Architect.—C. ELouis, R. Mint, 27/1/70.

The Under Secretary for Public Works.—B.C., 4/2/70, H.L.

Forward copy of Colonial Architect's letter, and Mr. Elouis' report, to Mr. Stoddart, for his information.—J.R., 4/2/70.

No. 2.

THE UNDER SECRETARY FOR PUBLIC WORKS TO MR. W. STODDART.

Department of Public Works,
Sydney, 4 February, 1870.

SIR,

I am directed to forward, for your information, the enclosed copies of letters* from the Colonial Architect and the Deputy Master of the Mint, respecting your claim for work performed by you at the Mint Buildings. * Vide No. 1.

JOHN RAE.

No. 3.

MR. W. STODDART TO THE UNDER SECRETARY FOR PUBLIC WORKS.

150, Burton-street, Darlinghurst,
7 February, 1870.

SIR,

In answer to yours dated February 4th, respecting my account, Royal Mint, and two copies of letters from the Colonial Architect and Deputy Master of the Mint,—I do myself the honor, in reply, to state that the Colonial Architect is correct, so far as contracts and payments are concerned; but I believe will admit further that I did in several instances wait upon him with tenders for works, as pointed out by the Deputy Master, before proceeding with the work; that I stopped the works at once he gave me notice so to do, although some important but inexpensive part was incomplete, and that since which one of the officers of his department has measured up the whole of the works.

In answer to the Deputy Master of the Mint saying that my allegation respecting him (the Deputy Master) giving me orders was simply untrue, but that, on the contrary, cautioned me to look for orders entirely from the Colonial Architect, &c., I beg most respectfully but firmly to state that the way he directed me to perform the works I took for orders, otherwise I should not have done it; as, for instance, did the Deputy Master not inform me that he had got the Colonial Treasurer to minute some papers, amounting in the aggregate to between six and seven hundred pounds, before I would commence some works which he (the Deputy Master) wished me to do? and I think that he will not deny but that he chose the carpet for his own rooms, also the papers, and requested there should be more blinds than I was at first prepared to put, as well as that he did on several occasions direct the men in my employ to commence and perform several jobs of work to his pleasure.

I am, &c.,

WILLIAM STODDART.

Colonial Architect, in the first instance, for report. B.C., 8/2/70.—J.R.

No. 4.

THE COLONIAL ARCHITECT TO THE UNDER SECRETARY FOR PUBLIC WORKS.

Department of Public Works,
Colonial Architect's Office,
Sydney, 14 March, 1870.

SIR,

With reference to the enclosed further communication from Mr. W. Stoddart, relative to his claim for work performed by him at the Sydney Mint, forwarded to me under B.C., on 8th ultimo,—

2. I do myself the honor to state that Mr. Stoddart did, on one occasion, bring to me a bundle of tenders for work at the Mint. The tenders were not in any way called for by me, and I told Mr. Stoddart at the time that I could not entertain them; and I found upon inquiry that the works to which they referred were at the time being proceeded with, without any order from me. I may add that, on many occasions, Mr. Stoddart was warned that any works performed by him without orders from this office would not be paid for.

3. As regards the measurement of the work alluded to by Mr. Stoddart, I have to state that when the account was received the Clerk of Works was requested to report; and in order to enable him to do so, and to distinguish the works performed under the contract, and by regular instructions from this office, it was necessary for him to measure the whole of what was charged for.

I am, &c.,

JAMES BARNET,
Colonial Architect.

As there is no doubt the work was done, can my Honorable Colleague the Colonial Treasurer do anything to forward a settlement of this matter?—J.S., 21/3/70.

No. 5.

MINUTE OF COLONIAL TREASURER.

MR. STODDART has again called upon me respecting his claim. It is a matter that ought to be settled. I cannot conceive that he can have carried out this work without instructions and directions from some officer connected with the Public Service. I shall now be glad if the Deputy Master of the Mint will inform me if he considers the extra work to have been necessary for the operations of the Mint, preservation of the buildings, &c., &c. The work seems to me to have been of large extent, and, if unauthorized, ought to have attracted attention. Was any officer from the Colonial Architect's Office supervising? I certainly had no knowledge that any such work was going on, but if the Government have the benefit of the work, payment must be made. Can this be done out of the Mint appropriation?—S.S., 25/5/70.

Deputy Master of Mint, 25/5/70, H.L.

No. 6.

MINUTE OF DEPUTY MASTER OF THE MINT.

Royal Mint, Sydney,
31 May, 1870.

IN reply to the Minute of the Honorable the Treasurer, dated 25th instant, I have no hesitation in saying that, so far as I could judge, all the work was necessary—indeed more work would appear to be advisable for the preservation and proper maintenance of the buildings, which had fallen into a very ruinous condition. I am not in a position however to form an opinion as to what portion of the work might be considered "extra"; for example, when the new process of refining was introduced it became necessary to make certain alterations in the melting house. I saw the Colonial Architect on the subject, and afterwards, sent him a formal requisition and plan. Mr. Stoddart afterwards came to the Mint with this plan in his hand and did the work accordingly. I had nothing more to do with the work than to introduce Mr. Stoddart to the officer in charge of the melting house, in order that he might be admitted to the department. I observe that this work, costing £226, is classed as done by "order of the Deputy Master," and therefore I presume "extra."

Whether Mr. Stoddart's claim might be paid out of Mint appropriations depends, I imagine, upon the interpretation of the Sydney Mint Act of 1865. If the work might be classed as a Mint contingency it might perhaps be so paid for. There has been a large saving on the annual appropriations, and a portion might perhaps be made available for settling Mr. Stoddart's account.

In his letter of 7th February, 1870, Mr. Stoddart says that the way in which I directed him to perform the works he took for orders. The refutation of this assertion will be found in the former part of the same letter, where he states that the Colonial Architect will admit that he waited upon the Colonial Architect with tenders for work, as pointed out by the Deputy Master, before proceeding with the work, and that he stopped the works at once when the Colonial Architect gave him notice to do so, although some important parts were incomplete.

The Honorable the Treasurer will probably remember that six or eight months ago he did me the honor to consult me as to the availability of the saving on Mint appropriations for the payment of work done at the Mint, for which the Colonial Architect had no funds. When Mr. Stoddart was subsequently lamenting that he could get no money, I told him that I had had an opportunity of mentioning to the Treasurer a source from which I hoped he might be paid. I am surprised to see the construction Mr. Stoddart has put upon a simple intimation to him of my own opinion that the difficulties in the way of his payment would probably be removed.

The

The carpet in the Deputy Master's room had been down for fifteen years, and was in rags. I made the usual requisition to the Colonial Architect for a new carpet, and some patterns were afterwards sent to the Mint for my choice. The papers for the walls were submitted by the contractor to the officers in charge of each room, who were requested to choose the pattern to be used. Finally, I did not direct the men in Mr. Stoddart's employ to perform jobs of work to my pleasure; indeed I have the best reason for knowing that directions from me would not be received, for when certain office fixtures had been temporarily removed, and I requested that they should be replaced, the men working on the spot refused to replace them, and I had to make my own people do the contractor's work.

MINUTE OF COLONIAL TREASURER.

SECRETARY for Public Works.—This matter had better now be referred to the Colonial Architect, who will please state whether the "extra work" charged for has been performed; whether he considers it was necessary, and also if he considers the charges reasonable. The amount appears to me large, particularly as the Deputy Master of the Mint reports that further repairs are still required.—S.S., 1/6/70.

Colonial Architect, for report.—B.C., 3/6/70, J.R.

No. 8.

COLONIAL ARCHITECT'S REPORT.

IN order to comply with the requirements of the Honorable the Treasurer's Minute, it was necessary to have the whole of the work performed by Mr. Stoddart without authority examined and measured. This has been done by two officers of this branch. From the fact of no supervision having been exercised during its performance, the time which has elapsed, and there being little but Mr. Stoddart's statements for a guide, it has been extremely difficult to identify the work charged for, or to fix its real value. With every care and explanation, it was impossible to accept the account furnished by Mr. Stoddart as a correct description of what appeared to have been done, or reasonable in its charges; it became necessary therefore to prepare a fresh statement from the measurements and valuations of the Clerks of Works. This which is embodied in the accompanying vouchers approximates, as nearly as possible, to what seems to be the real quantities and description of work done, and allows full prices for it, although it is less on the whole by £167 9s. 11d. than the sum charged by Mr. Stoddart. Had the works been performed under the annual contracts, or tendered for in the usual way, their cost would have been much less than the amount allowed. The works appear to have been necessary, but none were so urgent but that they could have been deferred until the usual authority was obtained. I have had vouchers prepared in the ordinary form, and forward them herewith; upon them is stated the votes to which the expense appears chargeable.

20th July, 1870.

Colonial Architect.

SYDNEY BRANCH ROYAL MINT.

(DESPATCH RESPECTING ACCOUNTS OF.)

Presented to both Houses of Parliament, by Command.

THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR THE COLONIES TO GOVERNOR THE EARL OF BELMORE.

(No. 106.)

Downing-street, 30 December, 1870.

MY LORD,

I transmit to you for your information a copy of a Minute of the Board of Treasury, relating 24 Dec., 1870. to the Branches of the Royal Mint at Sydney and Melbourne.

I have, &c.,

ROBERT G. W. HERBERT.

(For the EARL OF KIMBERLEY.)

[Enclosure.]

Treasury Minute, dated 24 December, 1870.

MY Lords read a letter from the Colonial Office, dated 15th October last, forwarding a copy of a despatch from the Governor of Victoria, with enclosures, respecting the mode to be adopted of accounting for the expenditure of the sum or sums, not exceeding in the whole in any year the sum of £20,000, payable to Her Majesty under the 3rd section of the Act No. 307 of the Colonial Legislature of Victoria, out of the Consolidated Revenue of that Colony, for defraying the salaries, contingencies, retiring and other allowances and expenses, connected with the establishment of the Branch of the Royal Mint at Melbourne.

My Lords refer to a Minute of a former Board of Treasury, dated 13th May, 1868, dealing with a similar question in relation to the accounts of the expenditure of the annuity payable by the Colony of New South Wales for the support of the Branch Mint at Sydney, in which it is stated that their Lordships are of opinion that the accounts of the Sydney Mint come within the meaning of the 33rd section of the Exchequer and Audit Act of 1866, and should be audited at the Exchequer and Audit Office in the same manner as other accounts of expenditure of imperial moneys, and in which directions are given for the audit of such accounts accordingly.

They also refer to their minute of 2nd August last, prescribing that the annual estimates of the expenditure of the Sydney Mint should be submitted for approval to the Master of the Royal Mint and to this Board.

My Lords have before them a report from the Deputy Master of the Mint, dated 17th ultimo, recommending that a uniform system of control and regulation should be adopted in reference to the estimates and accounts of the Sydney and Melbourne Branches of the Royal Mint; and that as the system in force in New South Wales appears to be founded on a correct principle, and to work satisfactorily, it should be applied also to Victoria.

My Lords concur in the recommendation of the Deputy Master of the Royal Mint, and are pleased to direct that the Deputy Master of the Branch Mint at Melbourne shall annually prepare an estimate of the probable expenditure out of the Mint annuity of £20,000, payable under the Victoria Act No. 307, during the then next succeeding year, ending 31st December; and after the same has been approved by the Governor of Victoria, shall forward it to the Deputy Master of the Royal Mint for submission to this Board.

Their Lordships are further pleased, by virtue of the powers conferred upon them by the 33rd section of the Act 29 and 30 Vict., c. 39, to direct that the Deputy Master of the Melbourne Mint shall forward to the Comptroller and Auditor General in this country quarterly accounts, with vouchers, of the expenditure out of the above-mentioned Mint annuity, and that such accounts shall be submitted, at the Exchequer and Audit Office, to an examination and audit similar in all respects to that which the accounts of the Branch Mint at Sydney now undergo.

With regard to the manner in which the annuity of £20,000 shall be placed at the disposal of the Deputy Master of the Melbourne Mint, my Lords are of opinion that, in accordance with the 4th section of the Victoria Act above quoted, the Colonial Treasurer should, under warrant from the Governor, transfer, in each month, to the Chief Officer of the Control Department of the War Office, at Melbourne, one-twelfth part of such annuity, viz., £1,666 13s. 4d., and that the Deputy Master or other officer of the Mint, appointed to act on his behalf, should draw upon the Control Department for the current expenses of the Mint Establishment, by means of drafts to be countersigned by the Governor.

My Lords proceed to consider the mode in which it will be proper to dispose of any surplus of the annuities which may, after the examination of the accounts of the Branch Mints at Sydney and Melbourne, be found to remain unexpended at the expiration of the year.

Under the arrangement in force at Sydney, as prescribed by the Treasury Minute of 13th May, 1868, any surplus of the Mint annuity of £15,000 payable by the Government of New South Wales, remaining in hand at the close of the year, is transferred to a Deposit Fund available for meeting future expenses of the Branch Mint.

N.S.W. Act 23
Vic., No. 3, dated
21 April, 1865.
Victoria Act 31
Vic., No. 307,
dated 6 Sept.,
1867.

My Lords, however, upon further consideration of the terms of the Act "making permanent provision" for the Branch Mints at Sydney and Melbourne respectively, are of opinion that a due regard for the interests of those establishments is not incompatible with the following arrangement, which, while it may be more agreeable to the Colonies in question, is also likely on the whole to involve less complication of accounts.

They accordingly direct that, in lieu of the arrangement hitherto practised in New South Wales, the unexpended annual surplus of the Mint annuity of £15,000 at Sydney, and of the Mint annuity of £20,000 at Melbourne, according to a certificate to be given by the Comptroller and Auditor General, shall be annually repaid by the officers of the Control Department of the War Office to the Treasurers of New South Wales and Victoria respectively; and they desire that, in the case of the Branch Mint at Sydney, this decision shall be retrospective, and that any sums already accumulating on account of that Mint as a Deposit Fund shall be forthwith transferred to the Colonial Government.

Desire the Paymaster General to transfer the sum of £7,959 12s. 8d., now standing at the credit of a Deposit Fund of the New South Wales Royal Mint Account, to the Agent of the Colony of New South Wales.

Acquaint the Agent of the Colony of New South Wales.

GAOLS.

(DESPATCH AND PAPERS RESPECTING PRISON DISCIPLINE.)

Presented to both Houses of Parliament, by Command.

THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR THE COLONIES TO THE OFFICER ADMINISTERING THE GOVERNMENT OF NEW SOUTH WALES.

(Circular.)

Downing-street,
28 June, 1869.

MY LORD,

I have the honor to transmit to you, for your information, copies of a Circular Despatch on the subject of prison discipline, which I have this day addressed to the Governors of those of Her Majesty's Colonies in which the Government is not responsible to the local Legislature.

I have, &c.,
GRANVILLE.

[Enclosure to foregoing.]

(Circular.)

Downing-street,
28 June, 1869.

SIR,

I enclose, for your information, copies of a paper presented to Parliament by Her Majesty's command, in continuation of papers presented in 1867, and containing further correspondence respecting the discipline and management of prisons in Her Majesty's Colonial possessions. This paper, though presented in July, 1868, has only now been issued in a printed form.

My predecessors have communicated to the Governors of Colonies, since 1863, a large amount of information respecting the management and discipline of prisons: 1st. The volumes of evidence, with the report of the Penal Servitude Commission of that year; 2nd. The evidence, with the report of the Committee of the House of Lords on prison discipline in the same year; and 3rd. The digest, prepared under the direction of the Secretary of State for the Colonies in 1867, exhibiting the state of the prisons in Her Majesty's Colonial possessions, and the system of management and discipline in use in each of them, so far as the Secretary of State had succeeded in obtaining from their respective Governors the information which had been called for in 1865.

The correspondence in 1867 and 1868, between the Secretary of State and the Governors of Colonies, now sent, will make you acquainted with the progress which has been made in the improvement of Colonial prisons and prison discipline in those years, with the difficulties which have been encountered, with the measures which have been taken, more or less successfully in one Colony or another, to overcome them, with the views taken by different Governors of the applicability or inapplicability of various provisions to local circumstances, and with the conclusions arrived at by Her Majesty's Government in reference to those views.

You will thus have before you, in addition to the results of English and Foreign inquiry and experience hitherto brought to your knowledge, a large amount of Colonial inquiry and experience, showing to what extent the leading principles of prison discipline established here, after long and laborious investigations, should or should not, in the opinion of Her Majesty's Government, yield to local circumstance, or be varied to meet varieties of race; and I trust that the more you enlarge your knowledge of this important subject, and the more you perceive in what particulars authentic opinion is general and concurrent, the less you will be disposed to allow local difficulties or individual and isolated views of a contrary tenor to prevail against approved principles. There are some difficulties which, especially in the smaller Colonies, may no doubt be regarded as insurmountable, but in most cases the degree to which difficulties are permitted to defeat improvements will depend upon the degree to which their importance to the public welfare is appreciated, and the measure of energy and resolution with which they are met.

I have, &c.,
GRANVILLE.

MINUTE OF HIS EXCELLENCY THE GOVERNOR.

Prison discipline, and matters connected therewith.

A DESPATCH on the subject of prison discipline was some time ago referred to the Honorable the Colonial Secretary, and is now awaiting the return of Mr. Sheriff Maclean from England, in order that he may report upon it.

2. This despatch, with its enclosure, advocates, with a view to prevent the recurrence of commitments of the same prisoners,—

(1.) Penal discipline in gaols.

(2.) A certain amount of separate treatment.

3. With regard to penal discipline, it does not at present exist in the Colony. I therefore leave that branch of the subject for the Sheriff's report.

4. But with regard to the question of separate treatment in this Colony, I have given a certain amount of consideration to it, and I have had the advantage of discussing it with the Rev. Mr. Hassall, the Church of England Chaplain, and with Mr. Small, the Governor of Berrima Gaol. I have also paid several visits to the gaol during the last two years, and have had an opportunity of becoming acquainted with its arrangements.

5. On the whole there can, I think, be no doubt that the system has been productive of great good. Mr. Hassall has reason to believe that in many instances men who have been in separate treatment have become reformed characters, and continued to be such after their removal from this gaol, and that such reformation was not to have been expected had these men been mixed with other prisoners in one of the ordinary gaols. Their stay at Berrima has, under present regulations, varied from five to a maximum of twelve months.

6. What I now wish to draw the Colonial Secretary's attention to, in connection with the despatch before referred to, is how the present system can be in any way improved, and how it can be beneficially extended.

7. There are four points which I shall advert to, viz. :—

1st. The absence of any structural provision at Berrima Gaol for enabling prisoners undergoing separate treatment to attend divine service, without breaking through the system.

2nd. The extension of the separate system to sentences of from one to five years.

3rd. The modification of the present system in the case of aboriginal prisoners.

4th. The after treatment of juvenile criminals who may have come under the system.

8. My attention was drawn to the first head—the absence of any provision to enable prisoners undergoing separate treatment to attend divine service—by the remarks of the Rev. Mr. M'Guinn, the Roman Catholic Chaplain, on the occasion of my first visit to Berrima, in April, 1868, in company of the then Colonial Secretary, Mr. Parkes. I understand that Mr. Small did on some occasion make a plan or drawing of a gallery, which could be erected in the present room now used as a chapel for prisoners in the B division. Such a gallery could, I believe, be arranged so that whilst each prisoner in the A division could see and be seen by the officiating Chaplain, he could not see his fellow-prisoners, and thus no interruption of the separate treatment of prisoners would be rendered necessary. There are two Chaplains of different denominations, so that probably the erection of a gallery fitted for the size of the room in question would at no great cost allow of every prisoner attending divine service, if not every Sunday, at least frequently. By placing the prisoners in the B division immediately under the gallery, they would not be seen by those in the A division above them.

9. With regard to the 2nd head—the extension of the separate system to sentences varying from one to five years—I would suggest that such extension would be advisable, but that it should be applied somewhat differently from what it is in the cases of the longer sentences of five years and upwards. I would not make it an additional element of punishment necessarily, but in cases of good conduct I would rather on the other hand make it, under further remission regulations, the means of shortening sentences.

10. At present where a prisoner's conduct is good, and no former conviction is recorded against him, he is entitled, if serving a sentence exceeding one, but of less than five years, to a remission of $\frac{1}{4}$. I would extend the separate system to sentences of one year and upwards as far as five years. I would make a prisoner if sentenced to from one to anything under three years serve for two months in separate treatment; if sentenced to from three to anything under five years, I would make him serve for four months.

11. The remission, in addition to what he might earn under the present regulations, should depend upon a prisoner's conduct during this time of separate treatment. If his conduct was reported as "good," he should be entitled to a remission of one month for each month served; if "very good," to two months for each month served. Power should be reserved to the Governor to refuse any remission in the event of subsequent "very bad" conduct in gaol.

12. Of course this would involve some accommodation being provided suitable for carrying out the system in addition to what Berrima Gaol can now afford. I have reason to think that the present staff at Berrima is adequate to the supervision and management of a much larger number of prisoners than there is present accommodation for. If that be so, and if the walls of the three wings of the gaol would bear the weight of an additional story, that would be apparently the cheapest way of adding to the accommodation there.

13. I understand that at no distant period new gaols are likely to be built at Goulburn and Bathurst. In that case a portion of those gaols could be adapted to the system—the plans of the gaols being made accordingly.

14. If before such additional accommodation were provided, the means did not exist of bringing the extended system which I propose into operation in its entirety, it could be at first confined to sentences of (say) three, or even four years and upwards. It should be remembered, however, that the period of separate treatment being comparatively short, prisoners would pass out into the B division quicker than they do at present.

15. The advantages to be gained would, it appears to me, be these :—A much larger proportion of prisoners would be brought under the beneficial effect of the separate system, recommitments would probably be lessened, and the cost to the Colony for the maintenance of its prisoners would be diminished in consequence of the shortening that might be expected of many terms of imprisonment.

16. It is necessary to bear in mind, however, that a prisoner sentenced to a term exceeding twelve months, but something less than fifteen months, would under this plan become entitled to more remission than if sentenced to twelve months only, as in the latter case he would not be entitled to any remission under the existing regulations.

17. The third head I have to advert to is with regard to some modification of the system in the case of the aborigines. It has been pointed out to me that (generally) these men are incapable of learning the trades of tailoring or shoemaking at which the other separate system prisoners are employed. Its rules do not allow of their being taught to read or write, and so consequently the time of the aborigines is passed in utter idleness, with no occupation whatever, beyond, of course, the short period of exercise.

18. It would seem advisable that either the period of separate treatment for this class of prisoners should be much curtailed, or that the system should in their case be so far modified as to allow of their attending school, or of their being put to some occupation of which they might be capable.

19. In the fourth place I wish to draw attention to the after treatment of the younger prisoners serving long sentences, who often evidently having received much benefit at Berrima, are removed to one of the larger gaols, where they mix with all sorts of prisoners, and where the good they have received is soon effaced.

20. Should the extension of the separate system, which I have in view be carried out, it would not probably be possible to retain them in the B division at Berrima Gaol, but it seems to me that some one of the country prisons, such as Port Macquarie, might usefully be set apart for the reception of youths under twenty-one years of age, on their leaving Berrima. Such prison might be conducted more on the principles of a reformatory than as a gaol; and it might also be well to apply the additional remission regulations to sentences which would be served in such gaol, which I have suggested for prisoners with the shorter sentences who might be brought under separate treatment.

21. It is quite possible that what I have here suggested is capable of improvement and beneficial modification. I have not suggested the abrogation of the existing regulations for remissions, but on the contrary I would extend them still further. I am told that sentences are now heavier than formerly, and I think that in many instances, such as the very common one of cattle-stealing, they are much heavier than they would be in Ireland. The circumstances of the Colony may, no doubt, demand a heavier punishment for that class of offence than would be necessary elsewhere; but what I propose is a severer punishment of shorter duration in cases of good conduct in gaol, for a lighter one of longer duration.

22. It has been brought to my notice that it is a peculiar hardship, particularly on a prisoner's friends, that no letters are allowed under the separate system to be written by prisoners as in other gaols. Perhaps a relaxation to the extent of a single letter at the end of three months might be granted as a favour.

23. Since the foregoing was written I have heard that an aboriginal prisoner has, whilst undergoing separate treatment in Berrima Gaol, become insane. This shows, I think, the necessity of some modification of the system in the case of this class of prisoners being taken into consideration. Indeed it is a question whether in the case of all the longer sentences some curtailment of separate treatment would not be desirable on this ground alone, viz., the effect the system may have upon the sanity of the prisoners; or at any rate whether the terms are not too long to be served all at one time.

BELMORE.

MINUTE OF THE SHERIFF.

I HAVE given a most careful attention to the accompanying Minute of His Excellency upon the subject of prison discipline, with the despatch of the Right Honorable the Secretary of State, under date 28th June, 1869, and correspondence therewith.

My report of this date deals with many of the larger questions raised in His Excellency's Minute, in the light of the information gathered by me while in England; and this Minute may be almost regarded as forming a portion of that Report, although I place it separately, in order to treat apart from general views certain specific suggestions.

The subject is stated by His Excellency under two heads:—

1st. Penal discipline in gaols.

2nd. A certain amount of separate treatment.

By my Report above mentioned it will be seen that discipline in gaols, which may be taken to mean treatment of prisoners under the shorter sentences, is made up of penal labour and separate treatment. These questions are fully treated of in my Report, and I do not need further to write of them here than to observe that they are both essential to satisfactory administration; and that of the various forms of penal labour the tread-wheel is by far the best, while the crank is again very superior to shot-drill. It would only be in our very small gaols, where there might be no facilities for erecting a wheel, and having regard to the cost of cell cranks—some £25 each—that under any circumstances would I recommend shot-drill. I am aware that the opinion did prevail in England that the fact of a prisoner knowing that no result whatever was produced from his labour made him feel the punishment more acutely; but the testimony of all the gentlemen with whom I was in communication went to show that in many cases the effect was a hardening of the mind of the prisoner; and on the whole it is preferred that the work, however severe, should have some object.

With regard to His Excellency's suggestion that the separate system should be extended to sentences of one year and upwards, instead of five years and upwards as at present, I have to observe that any extension of that system is highly desirable. By existing arrangements, that which may be termed the convict class are provided for in this respect. The principle operating in England is to apply greater severity of treatment in proportion to the shortness of the sentence. I take this principle to be the correct one, and in that view, as prisons become prepared, would sooner commence the application of the treatment as it were from below, and bring the longer sentences gradually into its operation.

Before

Before building arrangements for carrying out any design now determined upon could be completed, it is hoped that some legislation may be had, if only for the purpose of dividing the gaol and convict classes at two years. This would throw the three years men into the course of treatment now applied to the five years, which in that case would have, as regards separate treatment, to be amended to a uniform period, probably of nine months as in England. Excepting for the long-sentenced men there would be too much difficulty in the way of transit and otherwise in working the separate treatment for periods in a gaol, as Berrima, set apart for the purpose, and it must await the ordinary gaols becoming prepared for its adoption.

As to increasing the period of remission in consideration of separate treatment, it may be mentioned that no remission whatever is allowed in England for sentences not exceeding two years; and although I would not quite go the length of denying remission altogether, I would be more disposed to curtail than to lengthen the periods.

All future gaol buildings and extensions should be made with a view to separation, as suggested by His Excellency for the contemplated new gaols at Bathurst and Goulburn.

With respect to arranging for public worship at Berrima Gaol, I think there will not be any great difficulty, as the prisoners there confined are, with a few exceptions, far more amenable to discipline and authority than were those formerly confined there.

In many of the English separate treatment prisons the dividing of prisoners into boxes out of sight of each other has been given up, officers interspersed among them being considered sufficient; and if there is a difficulty in arranging a gallery as proposed it may be dispensed with. I will see to the matter on my first visit to Berrima Gaol.

The application of the separate system to aborigines does not seem to be productive of any benefit, but the reverse; and as they are an entirely exceptional class, I think that it would be well to place them at once in the B division at Parramatta Gaol. It does not appear to me that a new regulation is necessary to accomplishing this alteration, which can be done immediately that I receive instructions to that effect.

The passing of the younger prisoners from the A division in Berrima Gaol to some gaol where they would not be associated with old offenders, and so lose much of the benefit gained at Berrima, is an object most highly desirable to attain. It is mentioned as so desirable in my Minute dated 11th April, 1867, with the correspondence between Sir John Young, Mr. Parkes, and myself, upon the subject of prison discipline.

When the workshops may be completed at Maitland Gaol a portion of that gaol may be set apart for the purpose. The description of prisoners now referred to are young men, say from sixteen to twenty-five, who are under a first conviction. Whenever there may be a proper public works prison it would be unnecessary to use a distinct prison for the object above stated, as separations would be practically provided. From what I know of this class of young men, I do not think that treatment as if in a reformatory would be suitable to them.

I entirely concur in the proposition put forward by His Excellency, that when the means of carrying out shorter sentences with greater severity may be provided, such sentences would be more effective, reformatory, and economical than the longer sentences now awarded to certain offences. The same opinion is forcibly expressed by Sir John Young in the correspondence above mentioned.

As to permitting prisoners in separate treatment to correspond every three months with their friends, I do not think that it would be well to make any alteration in the existing rule. The allowing more or less, or no communication with friends, is an element important in the treatment of prisoners, and the less privilege they have at first, the more means of advancement by stages is left. I have reason further to believe that the complete seclusion attained in Berrima Gaol has had a most wholesome effect on the criminal class outside, and those verging upon that class. In England no communication is allowed until three months after leaving Pentonville Prison.

With reference to the question as to whether the periods to be served by the longer-sentenced prisoners in separate treatment should not be curtailed in order to avoid any risk of inducing insanity, I may again observe that the uniform period in England is nine months; that this period has not been found to be too long, and that the few prisoners here who have to serve longer are most carefully watched by the Surgeon, who has authority to take them out of such treatment if he have the slightest ground to apprehend bad effects.

(DESPATCH REFERRING TO SHERIFF'S REPORT ON PRISON DISCIPLINE.)

Presented to both Houses of Parliament, by Command.

THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR THE COLONIES to GOVERNOR THE EARL OF BELMORE.

(No. 10.)

Downing-street,

27 January, 1871.

MY LORD,

I have received your Lordship's Despatch, No. 145, of the 21st of September, enclosing a Report by Mr. Sheriff Maclean of the result of his inquiries into the management and discipline of Prisons in the United Kingdom.

I have read with much interest Mr. Maclean's very useful and able Report of the 4th August, 1870, which seems to me worthy of the best consideration of the Government of New South Wales; and I am also glad to observe the interest you yourself are taking in the subject, as evidenced by your full and clear Minute of the 1st March, 1870.

I observe that Mr. Maclean recommends that, as in England, punishments should be divided into punishments of imprisonment and penal servitude—the latter term to include all punishments of more than two years duration. With reference to this proposal, in which I concur, it may be as well to point out that in this country, by the Act of Parliament 27 and 28 Vict., cap. 47, the minimum period of penal servitude is five years. The minimum was formerly three years, but a sentence of three years penal servitude, with the incident of nine months remission, which in effect reduced it to a sentence of two years and three months, was found by experience to be a less severe punishment than a sentence of two years imprisonment under the separate system, as now enforced in the County and Borough prisons, being more severe than a penal servitude sentence, during all but the first nine months of which a prisoner is employed on public works in association with other convicts; and the Commission, over which Lord Grey presided, recommended the change which Parliament has since approved.

In the last paragraph but one of his Report, Mr. Maclean, adverting to an observation of yours, states that in England a prisoner is not allowed communication with his friends till three months after leaving Pentonville. Mr. Maclean has been misinformed. Such communication is allowed after the prisoner has been six months in Pentonville; that is, three months before and not after he leaves it.

The Report of Lord Grey's Commission, to which I have alluded, was duly communicated to your Government by the late Duke of Newcastle in his Circular Despatch of the 19th of October, 1863.

I have, &c.,

(REPORT OF SHERIFF ON WORKING OF PRISON ESTABLISHMENTS IN THE UNITED KINGDOM.)

Presented to both Houses of Parliament, by Command.

THE SHERIFF AND ACTING INSPECTOR OF PRISONS TO THE COLONIAL SECRETARY.

Sheriff's Office,
Prison Branch,
Sydney, 4 August, 1870.

SIR,

I do myself the honor to report the results of my examination into the management and working of the Prison Establishments in the United Kingdom, with which I was charged, on the occasion of my recent visit to England.

Through the introduction of His Excellency to the Colonial Office, I was afforded every facility for obtaining the information desired for the purposes of my mission; and I received most cordial assistance from the officers at the head of the prison departments, as well as from those in charge of the respective establishments. I had further the very great advantage of becoming acquainted with Captain Du Cane, R.E., the Surveyor General of the Prisons in England, and Chairman of Directors of Convict Prisons; the Directors of Convict Prisons, and the Inspectors General of Prisons in Ireland; and with the Right Honorable Sir Walter Crofton, who, although now retired from active service, is regarded as the first authority in Europe upon prison matters.

With all these gentlemen I have conferred; and my communications with them have resulted in a confirmation and extension of the views put forward by myself, in the Reports that I have had occasion from time to time to address to the Government.

With respect to the value of a careful observation of the working of the prisons of England—and here I do not quite include those of Ireland and Scotland—I have good authority for stating that the system of that country is admitted to be far superior to that of any other. I was myself preceded in my examination by Commissioners from Russia, Prussia, Italy, and Belgium. The prison arrangements of France are in a defective condition, while the United States have condemned their system, which had earned an unmerited reputation, and are now seeking information in England.

With a view to avoid needless visits to establishments wherein similar information only was to be gathered, those which it would be desirable to inspect were indicated to me at the Home Office, and I accordingly visited the prisons below enumerated.

I made most searching inquiries into the management in detail of all these establishments, and have brought with me a mass of information, both administrative and statistical, which it would serve no purpose to embody in this Report, but which will become available when I submit specific recommendations for carrying out such improvements as may become practicable in this Colony.

From whatever point of view the prison administration of the United Kingdom is regarded, the principle of isolation, as carried out by separation in its various modifications, is found to lie at the root of its advantages; and these are admitted by all authorities to comprehend a more effective discipline, a more deterring punishment, and a larger measure of reformation, than could be reached by any other means. The "penal servitude" prisoner, after serving an uniform period of nine months in close separate treatment, analogous to that carried out at Berrima Gaol, is advanced to the Public Works, where, although his work may be performed in association, he is through his whole term of service permitted no conversation other than as concerns the work on hand. It is striking to witness criminals passing through years of such a discipline. But the good effects are apparent, and well established. Communication with one another being prohibited, a stop is put during imprisonment to corrupting influences; and seclusion, the essence of imprisonment, is secured, thus entirely doing away with what may be termed the social intercourse of prison life, which is unavoidable where criminals are associated in cells and at messes, and which is not without its solace to the large majority of that class of persons. The deterring effects are unquestionable, and every stimulus to reformation is offered, as the prisoner by his daily conduct and exertions works his way to small advantages—great in his eyes—and thereby acquires a habit of self-control, until he obtains his license, when he still remains under police supervision. I am assured by prison officers of intelligence that large numbers of prisoners, whether from dread of again undergoing such an ordeal of punishment, or by reason of reformed habits, do not return to the prisons, and disappear from among the criminal class. The foregoing remarks have reference chiefly to the convict prisons, which being in the hands of the Government have the great advantage of being conducted with complete uniformity, under the direction of a central office in either of the three Kingdoms.

The discipline and arrangements of these establishments, especially in England, are not to be surpassed. But the same remarks are in some degree applicable to the county and borough prisons of the more advanced class. These, which are used for prisoners serving sentences not exceeding two years, are in some instances, by the pressure of the authority vested in the Secretary of State under the Prisons Act, and in others through the exertions of County Magistrates or other gentlemen having a local control, brought under the operation of the system laid down for such prisons, which, having reference to the comparatively short periods to be served, aims at even a more strict separation, and a more severely deterrent penal labour. This penal labour consists for the first portion of the sentence—usually three months—of work on the tread-wheel, by cranks, and by shot-drill, and serves also as a means, by the alternative of being sent back thereto, for enforcing the lesser labour of the customary industrial occupations of a gaol, such as mat-making, shoe-making, tailoring, and the like. In viewing the severity of the penal labour thus enforced, and the strictness of the other treatment necessarily accompanying the separate system, one is strongly impressed with the idea that the prison is fulfilling its main object of deterring from crime, and that the lessons there learned save many from risking a repetition of their teachings, while all who are sufficiently long confined leave with the knowledge of some craft by which a living may be secured. I am of opinion that a sentence of two years, carried out in the manner described, is in every way more effective for its objects than would be a sentence of five years under the conditions necessarily obtaining in this Colony at the present time.

The question of productive returns from prison labour is one of great importance, and the practical difficulties in this respect have perhaps been less overcome even in England than many of the other difficulties surrounding criminal treatment. There is a strong tendency in the public mind to value results in production labour beyond any other in prison management. This is an error generally shared in by those who have not entered fully into the subject. The first object should be repression of crime; and any sacrifice of the discipline and treatment conducive to that object is condemned by all authorities. Were productive labour to have the primary consideration, the proper course would be to turn prisoners in effect into manufactories, farm the labour, and allow every stimulus in indulgences, mitigations of sentences, and rewards. Such was the system of the United States, if indeed that can be called a system which was merely the general tendency of the management of the many establishments conducted much by the view of each separate officer, without any central directing authority, the absence of which is deplored in a most able treatise on prison discipline by the Commissioners of the Prison Association of New York, men of eminent attainments, being a Report to the Legislature of that State. The Commissioners strongly condemn the mode of management mentioned, which is being abandoned.

Nevertheless every exertion should be made to lessen the cost of the establishments by the returns from prison labour; and the conditions most needful to this end are the massing of prisoners in large prisons, and the introduction of the most improved and effective machinery for the various occupations that the circumstances of the country may render the most profitable. Great efforts are made by the officers in charge of the principal English prisons to show successful labour returns, yet the results are disappointing. The average cost of a prisoner, beyond the profit for his labour, may be taken at from £16 to £25 a year. The County Gaol of Wakefield, having an average of 1,200 prisoners, makes about the best returns; that for 1868 amounted to £4,524, against an expenditure of £21,518, leaving the annual cost of each prisoner, after deducting the profits for his labour, at £16.

The utilization of labour is very much dependent upon the nature of the work required by the State to be performed. Under arrangements for guarding not specially expensive, any able-bodied prisoner, either here or at home, engaged in works, as extension of prison buildings, excavations, or other operations for docks or fortifications, ought to return by his labour value equal to the cost for his maintenance. So in respect to the large public works prisons in England, the labour of convicts is estimated at balancing their their cost; but this can only be fairly reckoned as an equivalent for the expenditure of the State where the works are needed for the purposes of the country, and have not been undertaken for the object of employing the convict labour. That condition being secured, the establishment of a public works prison is, in a financial point of view, obviously the most advantageous mode of applying prison labour, and such a prison affords also a desirable means of treatment for long-sentenced prisoners; their retention in a "close prison," which ought properly to be appropriated for sentences not exceeding two years, and in separate treatment, being in many respects objectionable. But it is essential that the idea of barracks and dormitories, the cheap mode of construction for such a prison, should be set aside, as the benefits derived would be far outweighed by the evils to the system of prison administration that would necessarily follow the inevitable admixture and general intercourse among the men. A public works prison should be as completely arranged for separation in cells for the purposes of sleeping and messing as a gaol. The work projected should afford a prospect of continuance for at least from twelve to fifteen years. The buildings need not necessarily be so complete or costly as those for a permanent gaol. The portions to be occupied by the prisoners may be constructed of brick, or of brick with iron divisions available for removal, while many of the attached buildings, such as offices, store rooms, and lavatories, could for economy be constructed of wood. In these views I am quite borne out by Captain Du Cane, with whom I have repeatedly conferred upon the subject.

Having regard to the great want in this Colony of sufficient separate accommodation, and the consequent impossibility of establishing the exact and clock-like discipline obtaining in the English prisons, it struck me as a matter for congratulation that, in our administrations, we have been able to approach so nearly as we have done to that of the United Kingdom. Comparing our regulations and arrangements for dietary, record of conduct, system of remission, employment of labour in our larger gaols, and general treatment, and allowing for the disadvantages of inferior means, I am indisposed to admit an inferiority. When our means may become greater, we shall indeed have over the county and borough prisons the advantage of working a uniform system by a central authority. When in such locally controlled prisons, the supervision is indifferent or uninstructed, the prison is inferior, and there is a great variation in the efficiency of establishments even in the same immediate neighbourhood; while the aggregate cost to the country, arising from the subdivision of the sources of support and arrangements for management, is far greater than it would be under a centralized system. It is admitted that however objectionable centralization may be in some branches of public administration, it is almost essential to good prison management. Even in the United States it is advocated for that purpose; it is sought partly to be worked in England by the authority of the Secretary of State; is in operation in Scotland under the Prison Act of that country, and is proposed in the Bill now approved by two successive Governments for Ireland, although that Bill has not yet been presented to Parliament.

The two most exceptionally noticeable features of prison management which came under my observation are the intermediate convict establishment at Lusk, in Ireland, and the Hants County Prison at Winchester, the latter in relation to the mode of treatment of short-sentenced prisoners.

Lusk is simply a farming establishment situated in the neighbourhood of Dublin, and under the name of a prison is used as a means of inducing to good conduct; and, this latter being considered as its chief merit, of gradually preparing the prisoner for the more extended liberty allowed by his license, which is in effect on ticket-of-leave. The prisoner may attain entrance to Lusk according to the length of his sentence, on a scale of from six months to one year, and four months previous to becoming eligible for a license. The prisoner on arrival at Lusk finds himself—with the exception of being locked up in the general dormitory at night, and prohibited from leaving the grounds unless with an officer—simply as a farm servant, or carpenter, or shoemaker, as the case may be, about the place. He wears ordinary clothing, and is allowed 2s. 6d. a week, 2s. of which is retained for him until his liberation on license, and 6d. he is allowed to spend on tobacco or such little other indulgences as he may desire. The farm comprises about 170 acres, and some sixty convicts are usually employed thereon. The buildings are of wood, and inexpensive; the officers employed, six in all. The establishment pays its own cost. The public are glad to have the well-trained servants from Lusk. Misbehaviour or attempt to escape are almost unknown, and altogether the experiment has proved to be a complete success, and great value is attached to its results by the Irish prison authorities.

There are several causes of impediment to the formation of a similar establishment in the Colony which I am not prepared to say can be overcome. In connection with the expiration periods of long sentences, it did however occur to me that some combination of the intermediate and license system might, with modifications, be found practicable, perhaps in application to some public work. Sir Walter Crofton, the author of the intermediate plan, thought that such a combination might with favourable circumstances advantageously be made. It is a subject, however, that will require a most careful consideration, and I have mentioned it here chiefly as an aim not to be lost sight of. The intermediate mode of treatment would be equally applicable before an unconditional release as in this Colony; as, before obtaining a license or ticket-of-leave, a process of gradual remission that, although it answers at home, has been found, for many causes, entirely to fail in its objects both here and in Victoria.

The Winchester Gaol, as others of its class, is for the serving of sentences not exceeding two years, and the remarkable feature in the management of the prison is the application to this class of offenders of the mark system with classification thereunder which has been found so valuable in the case of long sentences, and which it was deemed almost impossible to apply to short sentences. This most important change in ordinary gaol administration has been brought about mainly by the exertions of Sir Walter Crofton, who resides at Winchester, warmly assisted by one of the first statesmen of the day—Lord Carnarvon. So much have the authorities of the Home Office been impressed with the advantages of the system, that Sir W. Crofton had been engaged on a mission to the county and borough prisons in England with a view to its general extension. It is not necessary here further to describe the system than to say that it is one of hard, but progressively less irksome labour, with small advantages gained by an amended system of marks throughout the sentences, and its effects are most markedly deterrent and also reformatory. Whenever this Colony may have one prison, or even a material portion of a prison, available for the treatment in separation of short-sentenced prisoners, the data which I have obtained will admit of the system being adopted.

The

The main objects to be brought about in the further progress of the prison administration of the Colony are:—

- 1st. The means of separation both at night and at meals of all prisoners.
- 2nd. The placing in different establishments all prisoners of different classes, so as to avoid the imprisonment together, as at Darlinghurst and partly at Parramatta Gaol, of prisoners under sentences varying from twenty-four hours to fifteen or even more years.
- 3rd. The introduction of deterrent penal labour for all prisoners serving the shorter sentences, say not exceeding two years.
- 4th. The utilization of prison labour to the utmost practicable extent, in the case of long-sentenced prisoners, probably on public works, and in that of the shorter-sentenced by providing the best suited machinery for all profitable productive employments.
- 5th. The introduction of a system of photography, for the assistance of the police and prison authorities in identification—a most material aid to the suppression of crime.

Important improvements in the detail treatment of the prisoners would of course accompany the extended facilities which would be afforded.

The means of separation and distribution may be attained in several ways: by the erection of a public works prison capable of containing all prisoners sentenced to periods exceeding two years, after they may have passed through their separate treatment in Berrima Gaol; thus relieving the existing gaols of probably some 550 prisoners, less invalids and special cases for which gaols are more suitable.

There would be ample time, before the completion of the building, for legislation providing for all sentences beyond the period stated, namely, two years, to be to “penal servitude,” with a view to the prisoner being sent to the proposed public works prison. If this alone would not be sufficient, the erection of a distinct female general prison in the neighbourhood of Sydney would afford at Darlinghurst the further cell room required. But for the carrying out of this plan it is necessary that the conditions stated in a previous portion of this letter as essential to the satisfactory establishment of a public works prison be capable of fulfilment. Should they not be so capable of fulfilment, the requisite additional accommodation should be sought in either the building of a second large general prison near Sydney, or of large prisons at Bathurst and Goulburn, and an extension of those at Parramatta and Maitland.

The introduction of deterrent penal labour and the profitable utilization of prison labour are questions entirely of the cost for machinery and of the buildings needed for workshops, together with internal arrangements of buildings or extension of walls to secure the required areas for sites for machinery and for the workshops. Upon these subjects I placed myself in communication with Mr. C. J. Appleby, C.E., one of a firm of eminent engineers, and who has taken a great interest in the question of applying prison labour theoretically, as may be seen by the accompanying paper read by him before the British Association of Norwich, and practically in the supplying of some of the latest and most effective machinery now in use in the English prisons. I enclose a copy of Mr. Appleby's letter to myself, from which may be gathered an approximate idea of the cost of procuring the machinery now most in use in England. There are other industries to which prison labour, by an expenditure of capital, might most profitably be employed; for instance, cloth-weaving.

My experience here, and information acquired at home, lead me quite to agree with Mr. Appleby's general opinions; and I especially concur with him that the tread-wheel, which could be introduced into all our principal prisons, is the best form known of penal labour, and that mechanical aid is the only way of making the labour profitable. Until I know what the Government may be disposed to do towards carrying out my views as above put forward, I shall not be in a position to submit specific proposals upon the more important subjects mentioned. For instance, the establishing of a public works prison is dependent upon considerations outside of my department, and the alternative proposals are again dependent upon the acceptance or rejection of that proposal. It will be necessary, also, to know what prisons or extensions of prisons are to be made before recommendations can be offered as to the machinery to be constructed.

It cannot be too forcibly reiterated that well-devised building arrangements are the first necessity for a successful prison system. Now I am constantly met from defects in this respect by insurmountable difficulties, both with regard to discipline and labour, and it is obvious that the annual votes for the purpose are quite inadequate to accomplishing the objects which this Report has in view. An effective prison system would be productive of more benefit to the State in the future than at the present time; and I do not think that I go beyond my province in urging that it is an object that may fairly be in a measure thrown upon a loan fund; and that a considerable grant from that fund, in the first instance say for £100,000, be sought. For a prison in connection with public works, it would certainly be quite as legitimate a charge as the public works (of which it is really a part) themselves; and it is to be borne in mind that the expenditure would only be gradual, while that made for machinery, and to enable machinery to be used, would in its reproductive effects far more than repay the interest accruing. Extension or erection of buildings at the same time forms a valuable means of carrying out sentences to hard labour.

It may be well here to state that I can see no prospect of doing anything really effective with the lesser gaols. I refer to those of a smaller capacity than Bathurst and Goulburn—which should be regarded more as houses of detention, in connection with the Courts—beyond keeping a strict order and discipline. Even, however, for the ordinary requirements of gaol duties, it is very necessary that alterations and improvements in these gaols, which have frequently been asked for, and for which renewed applications will be made, should be carried out without delay.

A system of photography may be established without any great expense or difficulty, and it is my intention shortly to submit a recommendation for its commencement. A prison officer in each establishment where it may be introduced can be taught to take the photographs for a trifling sum, and then a small allowance—it is 10d. at home—made for each photograph. Beyond the cost mentioned of the materials, there need be no further expense.

My Report of the 20th March, 1869, describes the then general condition of the prisons in this Colony, in which there has been no material change.

C. J. Appleby, Esq., London, to The Sheriff of New South Wales.

Emerson-street, Southwark,
London, 28 January, 1870.

Dear Sir,

I have thought a good deal of our conversation relative to prison machinery since I last had the pleasure of seeing you, and I find it will be quite impossible to give you estimates which shall be absolutely correct, but I think the subjoined figures will in most cases represent the maximum cost, and that the results obtained ought not to be less than stated.

Firstly, taking the cost of tread-wheel machinery, including the wheel-shafts, with gun-metal bottom bearings, wheel-rings, and tread-boards, all fitted with bolts and nuts, together with the gear necessary for transmitting motion to the governor and to any other machinery, and including a Siemens' patent power-absorbing governor of ample power, is about as follows:—

For 50 men (in all) about £9 per man.

For more than 50 men, about £8 5s. per man.

I do not give the price without governors, because as I have already explained, an efficient governor which will never allow the mill to run above or below a fixed speed is an element of the utmost importance.

I find that in large mills about thirty to forty men are a convenient maximum number to have on one length, and that for easy supervision it is better to have two stories of wheels than to stretch them out a long length on the ground floor; it therefore follows that for small mills I should prefer having a smaller number than that indicated above on one line of wheels.

I now come to an estimate of the cost of the machinery which has been profitably employed in prison labour, the motive power being the tread-wheels, and the gear for driving the machinery being included in the general estimate of the cost of the tread-wheel.

Pumping machinery.

A set of good three-throw pumps with head gear and well-plate adapted to wells 40 to 60 feet deep, and capable of forcing water to a height of say 100 feet for water supply all over the buildings, would be worth about £100. This machinery would require at least thirty men on the wheels. If a complete duplicate set of pumping machinery is required, the cost would be about £200. If two sets of pumps, either set to be worked from one head gear, the cost would be about £165.

Power-looms for fibre matting or coir yarn.

I cannot do better than describe the machinery at Walton Gaol. This consists of—

One 8-4 loom (8 quarter yards wide).

One 6-4 "

Two 5-4 "

Two 4-4 "

Six looms.

To work these looms profitably four bobbin-winding machines are required, and the cost of the whole of the machinery, including a number of small things required in such establishments, is £880. The space required is about 38 feet long and 14 feet wide, all on the ground floor, the building lighted from top.

The number of hands employed in the weaving shed is usually sixteen to twenty according to the number of machines at work, and each loom turns out about 3 square yards of matting per hour, which is about four times as much as is usually produced in the hand looms; and this quantity could be easily increased if the looms were run at a higher speed. The quality of the matting manufactured in these looms is far superior to that made in the hand looms; the work being so much more even and regular.

This work is found far more profitable than mat-making. The mat-dressing machine is worked by power taken from the tread-wheels. The cost of the machine is £50.

Flour-mill and baking.

A set of machinery for grinding corn and preparing flour, including bread-making machinery, and all the ironwork for the ovens for baking the bread, would be worth about £600.

The building should be about 40 feet long, and about 20 feet wide, with basement, and two stories above. The number of hands employed in the mill and bakery would be about ten to twelve, and you should reckon for about 100 men on the wheels. Such a set of machinery would easily supply bread for 1,000 inmates.

I do not go into the cost of a biscuit bakery, because much depends on the kind of biscuit to be made that the matter should be gone into specially.

Clothes-washing machinery.

A set of clothes-washing machinery to wash for 500 to 1,000 inmates, according to the hours worked and the number of pieces allowed to each inmate, including a patent washing machine, a centrifugal drier, a dash wheel for rinsing, patent mangle, ironwork for hot-air drying closet, ironing stoves, steam boiler, with all connections, driving gear, strap, &c., would be worth about £450. This would employ about twenty hands in the laundry, and about fifty men on the tread-wheel.

Careful observation has shown that clothes are washed by properly arranged machinery far better than by hand, and that they last 15 to 25 per cent. longer—some say 30 per cent.

Cranks for cells.

So far as I am aware there is no machine of this kind which is really effective. The conditions required appear to me, that each machine shall register the exact number of revolutions made, and that the power required for each revolution shall be invariable when once fixed, but capable of adjustment to the strength of the convict. I believe no machine exists which at all fulfils these conditions, but I hope before long to inform you that one has been brought to perfection.

I think it will be very difficult to arrange any machine of this kind which will utilize this form of convict labour.

I think I have answered your inquiries in such a manner that you will be able to use the information as occasion may require, and I shall always be glad to supplement it by special information on any subject, if you require greater detail, or to confer with any one you may appoint here to consider special arrangements of machinery.

You may find some difficulty in estimating the cost of machinery delivered in Sydney, including packing, freight, and shipping charges, and I fear it will be next to impossible to give you any accurate data; but my impression is that in the majority of cases, if you add about 15 per cent. to the cost price in England you will not be far wrong.

I have been unable to get a proper copy of the paper I read before the British Association, but my printer promises me rough uncorrected proof sheets in time for this mail; and I will take care that a perfect copy is sent to you by next mail. In the meantime perhaps the rough copy will answer your purpose.

I also send you a rough tracing of the mill and shed at Walton Gaol, and I think the same general arrangement could easily be modified for mills for a smaller number of convicts.

The Leicester Gaol which we fitted has only twelve stalls, but with Martin's arrangement they work eighteen convicts. I do not send a tracing of these small mills, because they do not admit of as good an arrangement as the larger mills; and I apprehend in your Colony starting de novo, you will aim at massing your convicts, so as to obtain the maximum of profitable labour with the minimum cost of supervision—a matter of more importance than many people imagine, and one which from the nature of our laws we cannot regulate altogether as we please.

I am, &c.,
C. J. APPLEBY.

On Mechanism for utilizing and regulating Convict Labour: a Paper read before the British Association at Norwich, by C. J. Appleby of London, M.I.M.E. and Assoc. Inst. C.E.

THE profitable employment of convict labour has long been a subject which has engaged the attention of prison authorities in this and other countries, and the instances are extremely rare in which, without the aid of machinery, the value of the work produced by a given number of convicts has been equal to the cost of their maintenance.

This arises from a variety of causes, such as the small amount of work done by convicts generally, the indifference of some, and the inaptitude of others, for any sustained effort, mental or physical; but the principal difficulty experienced is the ever-varying conditions of such labour, both as regards the number of hands available, and the absence of previous training for any particular trade or occupation. Those who have been brought up to any trade—such as that of a tailor, shoemaker, baker, &c.—are of course employed in their respective trades; and those convicts undergoing long sentences who have previously followed no specific occupation are usually taught one, and their labour is thus eventually made more or less profitable, and a means is provided for their earning a living by honest industry when their term of imprisonment has expired.

In other cases, as at Dartmoor, the convicts are largely employed in farming and gardening operations, at Portland on the breakwater works and quarrying, and at Chatham they have been extensively employed in the excavations for the Chatham Yard extension works, now in course of construction, and more recently in making the greater part of the bricks used on those works. These works were under the direction of that very able officer Mr. William Scamp, the late Deputy-director of Works, who for many years gave great attention to the utilization of convict labour.

Finding, however, that unaided by mechanical contrivances, the amount of work done by the convicts was so small that it would be cheaper to employ free labour in the ordinary way, the writer was requested to design and construct machinery which would at the same time assist the men and be a sort of check upon the quantity of work done. This machinery consisted of steam lifts which raised the barrows filled with earth in the excavations, and deposited them on the surface ready for another gang of men to wheel them away. The machinery made a certain number of lifts per hour, and the result of this mode of working was, that if a man failed to do his proper proportion of work it was immediately and unerringly detected.

As the excavations were being completed, a large number of bricks were required for the dock walls, &c., and (the earth excavated being suitable for the purpose) the experience gained in the application of machinery on a small scale being highly favourable, it led to the adoption of the most approved brick-making machines, each driven by its own steam-engine; and the economical working result is even more favourable than that obtained in the excavations, as many as 60,000 bricks per day having been made, and the whole of the operations from first to last carried out by convict labour.

These however are exceptional circumstances, and the situations where convicts can be employed in out-door operations will always be confined within narrow limits. Any paper on this subject would therefore be incomplete if it did not deal with the appliances necessary for the purposes indicated in the prisons of our large cities and towns.

Up to a comparatively recent period the "hard labour" sentence was usually carried out by making the men go through a certain amount of unproductive labour, such as shot-drill, or more commonly, turning a line, or lines, of cranks of about 14 in. radius, connected together, and subjected to the pressure of a friction brake; but this gave a most unsatisfactory result, inasmuch as it was impossible for the warder to tell whether each man was giving out his due proportion of work on the crank, and this frequently led to the men being punished, no doubt often unjustly, and these machines are now practically obsolete.

The tread-wheel then became more generally adopted, but until recently the power developed was rarely employed for any useful purpose, because working the tread-wheel is a punishment which cannot be extended beyond certain limits clearly defined by Act of Parliament,* and the result in any but the largest prisons is, great irregularity in the number of men employed throughout the day and at different times of the day.

The conditions to be dealt with are, therefore, to accomplish the maximum amount of useful work to the extent of the minimum amount of labour which can be depended upon throughout the day; and for this purpose it is necessary that any excess of power developed by the fluctuations in the number of men employed at various times should be instantly and automatically absorbed; an uniform motion of the wheels being equally necessary for the quality of the work produced and for the safety of the convicts.

Under these conditions the prisoner's labour is reduced to a constant amount, due to the weight of his body; and assuming the speed of the tread-wheels to be uniform, there can evidently be no variation in the amount of work performed, or distress occasioned by sudden fluctuations in the speed of the whole.

Various methods have been devised for accomplishing the objects indicated. In some cases an ordinary friction-brake has been regulated by the warder in charge. This is an inexpensive arrangement; but as its efficiency depends entirely upon the eye and the hand of the man in charge, the variations in the pressure are necessarily very wide; and sometimes the prisoners will be distressed by the wheel "running away," and at others by having to work under too much pressure; or in some cases the friction-brake strap is actuated by the ordinary ball governors. Another arrangement is similar to a wind-mill working on a vertical or horizontal axis, the sails being fitted with louvres which are opened or closed by means of the ordinary ball governors.

The latter description of governor works well within certain narrow limits; but it is cumbersome, exceedingly expensive, and requires some attention to maintain it in good working order.

One of the most recently constructed tread-mills is that erected at Walton, near Liverpool, by the Corporation of Liverpool, from the designs of their own Architect, the general arrangement of the machinery having been designed by Mr. William Fairbairn, of Manchester, the Consulting Engineer to the Corporation; and the details of construction were carried out by the writer.

In describing this mill, it is proposed to give—

- 1st. A general description of tread-wheels and the power developed.
- 2nd. The method of utilizing the power.
- 3rd. The mode of governing the speed of the machinery, and,
- 4th. The practical working results obtained.

Description of mill.—The general arrangement, as will be seen from the drawings exhibited, provides for six lines of wheels, each line capable of accommodating thirty-six men, or, supposing each wheel were full, 216 men in all. Four of these lines are in the galleries and two on the ground-floor, space being left for two more lines on the ground-floor if required; but this space is now occupied by the "good conduct men," who are allowed to work in association—that is, not isolated from each other.

The six lines of wheels are connected together by suitable gearing fixed in the central passage between the two mill-houses, to which the convicts are not allowed access. Each line of wheels consists of 36 strong cast-iron shafts of double T section, thickened out to a round section at four points to receive the four wheel rings. These rings are each 6 ft. 6 in. diameter, and are furnished with 32 brackets, to which the footboards are attached. The shafts are connected together by double socket couplings, and the centre of these couplings form the bearings, which run in gun-metal journals supported on cast-iron standards spaced 12 ft. 6 in. apart from centre to centre.

The tread-wheels being 6 ft. 6 in. diameter, the circumference is about 20 ft., and as they are speeded to make one and a half revolution per minute, each convict must make 48 steps, which is equal to about 30 ft. rise per minute, and thus produce a useful effect due to raising the weight of his own body 30 ft. high per minute.

In the centre of each division of the wheel-house is a raised platform approached by steps at one end, for the use of the attendants; one warder thus obtains a full view of every man both in the galleries and ground-floor of that division. These galleries are in electric communication with the central hall of the prison, for the purpose of summoning assistance in case of any outbreak, and thus enabling the number of warders and consequent cost of attendance to be reduced to a minimum. This system of electric communication is also carried to the rope-walk, weaving-shed, &c. The whole of these buildings are admirably ventilated, and are supplied with steam heating apparatus.

Taking the average weight of the men at 8 stone = 112 lbs., we obtain the following result: 112 lbs. \times 30 ft. = 3,360 foot-pounds \times 216 men = 725,760 foot-pounds, or $\frac{725,760}{33,000}$ = about 22 horse power.

But

* Prison Act, 1865, 28 and 29 Vict. cap. 126, sec. 19.

But although the wheels are capable of accommodating 216 men, one-third of the number usually rest whilst the remaining two-thirds are on the wheels, so that practically the working number is reduced to a maximum of 150 men, giving an effective result of 504,000 foot pounds, or nearly 16 horse power. Owing however to fluctuations in the number of prisoners, there may not at times be more than seventy men at work on the tread-wheel, when of course the power developed will be decreased in direct proportion to the number of men employed.

Utilization of power.—The power developed is used for weaving cocoa-nut fibre matting, working mat-dressing machines, and pumping the whole of the water for the prison and officers' quarters.

A weaving shed, running the whole length of No. 1 Mill House, is supplied with six power-loom for weaving cocoa-nut fibre matting, with the accessory machines for winding bobbins, &c., made by Lieming & Co., of Bradford. The power to drive this machinery is conveyed from the tread-mill by a line of shaft in the central passage, with the gear necessary to increase the speed from $1\frac{1}{2}$ revolution of the tread-wheel to 50 revolutions per minute in the weaving-shed, which is the speed required for working the power-loom.

Another line of shaft conveys the power to the mat-dressing house, and to the well-house for driving two sets of deep well-pumps.

Governing the speed of machinery.—None of the appliances shortly mentioned in the foregoing description appeared to the writer to be sufficiently reliable to govern the speed of the machinery when the power applied fluctuated between such wide limits; and as it was necessary that, whether the greater or lesser, or any intermediate number of men were employed, or even when none of the machinery is in operation, as will sometimes occur, one uniform speed should be maintained, and any surplus power should be instantly and automatically absorbed, he decided to use the Siemens' cup governor. As this beautiful invention has been described, and the theory of its action fully developed, in a paper read by Mr. C. W. Siemens before the Royal Society (April, 1865), and published in their Philosophical Transactions, it will be unnecessary to enter into the theory of the apparatus, or to do more than describe its application for the purpose under consideration.

A cylindrical vessel, 5 ft. 8 in. high and 4 ft. 10 in. diameter, containing about 12 in. of water, forms the outer casing, and to it are fixed a number of vanes, as shown in the diagram No. 3. Inside the vessel, and dipping into the water, is a parabolical cup hung on a central vertical spindle; on the outside of this cup are a number of vanes, spaced to come between the vanes on the outer casing.

Siemens' Power-absorbing Governor.

A rotatory motion of about 80 revolutions per minute is imparted to the cup; and so long as the velocity of rotation does not exceed 79·2 revolutions per minute, the water in the casing will rise inside the cup to nearly the brim without overflowing, and the only retarding influence produced consists in the friction of the lower edge of the cup slipping through the water, and amounting to much less than one man's power.

So soon, however, as the speed of the cup in the smallest degree exceeds 79·2 revolutions per minute, the water will immediately overflow, which overflow will continue, inasmuch as the same water will evidently be raised continuously from the reservoir below, and returned to it after being acted upon by the series of rotating and stationary vanes already described.

The quantity of water thus mechanically acted upon being large, the power absorbed is also very considerable, and rises with the slightest increase in the velocity of the cup to more than 30 horse-power, and this power may be increased or diminished to almost any extent by simply increasing or diminishing the depth of water in the outer casing.

This governor was put to work on the 1st of May last, and has been in constant use ever since with such satisfactory results that, whether the number of men on the wheel is the minimum of 70 or the maximum of 216, there is no appreciable variation in the speed of the tread-wheels.

In the official trials conducted by Mr. Fairbairn the whole of the machinery was put to the most severe tests to which it could ever be subjected. In the first instance forty men were ordered on the wheel, working the governor only; the number was then suddenly increased to 216, still driving the governor only, without the slightest perceptible increase of speed; the whole of the machinery was then thrown on full work, in addition to the governor, and still there was no appreciable variation in the speed of the mill. A number of other tests were then made, which it will be unnecessary to describe.

From the results obtained in the instances under consideration, there can be no doubt that where great regularity of speed is required and a frequently varying load, the Siemens' governor can be most advantageously employed; and this has induced Mr. Fairbairn to adopt a governor precisely similar to that at Walton Gaol for the new gaol at Manchester.

Working results.—The average number of prisoners of both sexes and classes at Walton Gaol is about 900, and the daily allowance of water for each prisoner is six gallons. In addition to this there are forty-six houses occupied by the officers of the prison; and previously to the machinery described being in operation, the whole of the water supply for them and for the laundries was pumped from a well 80 ft. deep, and distributed to the large storage tanks in various parts of the buildings. For this purpose a steam-engine was continuously employed, but it is now used only on Sundays, when the prisoners do not work on the tread-mill; the whole of this work being done by convicts, whereby a saving of the cost of fuel, oil, attention, &c., is effected, and even the expenditure on Sundays will be probably avoided by increasing the capacity of the storage tanks.

In addition to this, the power looms are driven by the tread-mill, each loom producing three square yards of matting per hour, of a quality* certainly not inferior to that previously produced by hand. The same power is also applied to working the mat-dressing machines, and there is still a large surplus. It is now under consideration in what manner this power may be most advantageously employed; and as it is sufficient to work flour-mills and bread-making machinery to provide for the wants of the gaol, the value of the labour hitherto entirely lost evidently becomes a matter worthy of serious attention.

There can be no doubt that both in prisons and workhouses a proper arrangement of machinery for rope and twine making, pumping, bread-making, and laundry operations would often turn an annual loss into some profit.

The machinery has been made, and the arrangements described in the foregoing remarks have been for the most part carried out by the firm of which the writer is a member.

The whole of the large range of buildings forming the Liverpool Borough Gaol having been recently constructed, the most improved appliances and arrangements have been adopted by Mr. Robson, the Architect to the Corporation; and under the able management of Captain Veitch, R.N., the Governor of the Gaol, the organization and discipline is of the highest order.

* This is now very much better than that made by hand; the convicts turn it out better than at first.—C.J.A.

GAOLS.

(RETURN OF LABOUR PERFORMED BY PRISONERS DURING THE HALF-YEAR ENDED 30 JUNE, 1870.)

Presented to both Houses of Parliament, by Command.

THE SHERIFF TO THE PRINCIPAL UNDER SECRETARY.

Sheriff's Office, Prison Branch,
Sydney, 4 October, 1870.

SIR,

Referring to a conversation with the Honorable the Colonial Secretary, I do myself the honor to enclose a return showing the results of prison labour in the organized-labour Gaols of the Colony, for the half-year ended 30th June, 1870. It will be seen that the labour on manufactures and buildings reaches in value the annual rate of £13,985, while the value of the labour for the internal requirements of these prisons, computed at 1s. 6d. a day for each prisoner so employed, being on cleaning, cooking, washing, baking, attendance on sick, and desultory working, amounts to £8,470, making a total of £22,456. This latter item of £8,470 is not exhibited as a profitable return; but being as it were for the servant staff of large establishments, it is shown in such prison returns as accounting, with ineffectives from physical and other causes—prisoners awaiting trial, and under sentence but not to labour—for the apparent discrepancies between the number of prisoners confined and the number employed in actively remunerative labour.

It may further be remarked, that the profits on manufacturing industries are lessened by the system of obtaining all material under the conditions of general Government contracts. When the workshops may be further extended and more mechanical aid introduced, I would propose the substitution of a system (with sufficient checks) under which the officers in charge of the establishments should be enabled to take advantage of the markets for procuring materials as would be done in private establishments.

At the present time, excepting in the prisons included in the return, there are no workshops or other means of turning the labour of the prisoners to account. In these prisons there are now 1,167 prisoners. The annual cost per head is £42 10s. 4d.; therefore, deducting the labour value, the net cost to the Colony is £23 5s. 4d. each. My report on the English prisons shows the average net cost at home to be from £16 to £25; but for the prisoners here sentenced to hard labour the cost in excess of profit amounts only to £20 10s.; and it has to be remembered that, from various causes, especially the higher rates of salaries to the lesser officers, the cost for the maintenance of prisoners in this Colony considerably exceeds that at home.

I have, &c.,
HAROLD MACLEAN,
Sheriff.

Police Department,
Inspector General's Office,
Sydney, 15th May, 1871.

JNO. McLERIE,

1870.

NEW SOUTH WALES.

POLICE.

(REVISED RULES.)

Presented to both Houses of Parliament, pursuant to Act 25 Vict., No. 16, sec. 6.

Colonial Secretary's Office,
Sydney, 30th September, 1870.

HIS Excellency the Governor, with the advice of the Executive Council, has been pleased to establish, under the Police Regulation Act of 1862, the following Revised Rules for the general management and discipline of the Members of the Police Force of the Colony.

CHARLES COWPER.

DISTRIBUTION.

1. For Police purposes every District will consist of one or more Police Districts as established by law, or of such subdivisions of the same as may be determined from time to time.
2. The Police will be distributed at various Police Stations throughout every District.
3. The officer in charge of Police, as well as every individual policeman appointed to any division or subdivision, under whatever designation, will be held specially responsible for the peace, good order, and security of such portion thereof as may be committed to his charge, as well as for the general performance of other Police duties.
4. The Dépôt or Head Quarters of the Police will be in Sydney, under the immediate supervision of the Inspector General.
5. The Police Force will be divided into the following grades, viz.:—

	Inspector General.
	Superintendents.
Officers	Inspectors.
	Sub-Inspectors.
	Sergeants.
	Constables.

6. The Police will also be divided into Mounted, Foot, Water Police, and Detectives.

GENERAL RULES.

7. The engagement of every Member of the Force will be for one year, and thereafter until legally discharged.
8. Three months' notice will be required from any Member of the Force who wishes to leave the Force, in default of which, in addition to any other penalty imposed by law, any pay due will be forfeited.
9. Every Member of the Force will be required to devote his whole time and energies to the service, and will be held responsible for obedience to all lawful orders and conformity to all regulations.
10. Every Member of the Force will be presumed to know his duty in every case and in the absence of orders or instructions will be held responsible for the due performance thereof, and in case of failure or neglect will be liable to punishment or dismissal.

11. The attention of the Police will be specially directed, in the first instance, to the prevention of crime; but whenever there is any reason to believe crime has been committed, its detection and the apprehension or punishment of the perpetrators and their accomplices or agents will, as a matter of course, be the duty of every Member of the Force wherever stationed or in whatever rank or position.

12. Every Member of the Force will co-operate with and afford whatever assistance may be in his power to other Members of the Force in all its various branches.

13. Members of the Force will be liable to dismissal for disobedience, neglect, or omission of duty, incompetency, disrespect to any person in authority, insolent or indecorous behaviour, or any misconduct punishable by law, in addition to such other legal penalty as may be incurred thereby.

14. With reference to religious observances, it is expected that the Officers will do all they can to facilitate the attendance of the men under their command at the places of worship to which they respectively belong, and that particular attention shall be paid to the proper observance of the Sabbath day.

15. Every Member of the Force will obey the orders of any single Magistrate or Bench of Magistrates.

16. The Police will constantly report to the nearest Police Magistrate or Bench of Magistrates the results of the issue of summonses or warrants, and the steps taken from time to time for the purpose of giving effect to Magisterial proceedings.

17. Members of the Force, when they have cases to bring before the Bench, will be instructed by their superior Officers how to obtain evidence, so as to present the necessary particulars to the Magistrates as clearly and intelligibly as possible. Officers will also frequently attend the Police Court, to see that their instructions are carried into effect.

18. When prisoners are remanded from one Bench of Magistrates to another, full particulars of the case, the reasons why the prisoner has been remanded, with any other information capable of being furnished, will be forwarded to the Member of the Force in charge of the Station to which the prisoner is remanded.

19. When Members of the Force are subpoenaed as witnesses in civil cases, the parties who subpoena them will be liable for their expenses.

20. Any Member of the Force who may arrest an individual committed or bound for trial at Assizes or Quarter Sessions will be considered a witness in the case, whether summoned or not.

21. Every Member of the Force will studiously observe neutrality in political matters.

22. No Member of the Force will be permitted to derive any pecuniary profit or advantage from any public contract, or from any purchase made by himself or others on behalf of the Government.

23. Every Member of the Force will avoid placing himself under pecuniary obligations to any person whatsoever.

24. No Member of the Force will, upon any occasion, or under any pretence whatever, take any money or gratuity from any person without the express permission of the Inspector General.

25. No Member of the Force will leave his District, Station, or Division without permission, unless in the necessary course and performance of Police duties.

26. In the absence of any Member of the Force from his District, Station, or post, his duties and responsibilities will specially devolve upon the senior Officer or constable next in rank.

27. Members of the Force, whether Officers or men, on their arrival in Sydney, whether on duty or leave of absence, will report themselves at the Depot.

28. Every Member of the Force will endeavour, by every lawful means in his power, to make himself acquainted with the local features and peculiarities of the District or Division where he may be stationed, and with the names and characters of the inhabitants thereof.

29. Every Member of the Force will make the arrival of suspicious characters, or the occurrence of extraordinary circumstances within his District or Division, in so far as they have come under his special cognizance, the subject of special report to his superior Officer.

30. Members of the Force in charge of Stations will be careful that Police duties are always impartially divided among the men.

31. Every Member of the Force in charge of a Station will be specially responsible for the conduct, appearance, and discipline of the Constables under him, and for the state of the arms, ammunition, accoutrements, and other public property committed to his charge.

32. Every Member of the Force in charge of a Station will keep a roster of the duties performed by himself and the Constables under him, and will report without delay any instance of irregularity, neglect of duty, or breach of discipline.

33. Half-pay only will be allowed to Members of the Force in hospital; but should they be suffering from the effects of their own misconduct, the whole of their pay will be stopped. Where no hospital or medical accommodation is afforded, they will have to provide themselves with medical attendance and medicines; but in cases where their illness has arisen from wounds or injuries received in the performance of their duty, a special report of the circumstance will be made to the Inspector General.

34. Members of the Force in uniform, whether on duty or not, are prohibited from smoking in the streets of towns or in public places.

35. Any Member of the Force suspended from duty, although not performing any Police duty, will remain within the limits of the Station to which he belongs, unless under orders to the contrary, and will not be entitled to salary for the time he remains suspended, unless by special authority from the Inspector General.

36. In addition to special rewards to which Members of the Force may be entitled, under the authority of the Government, from the Police Reward Fund, for bravery or other meritorious conduct displayed in the performance of duty, whatever sums may be from time to time offered, whether by the Government or private individuals, for the apprehension of notorious offenders, the recovery of lost property, &c., &c., will be equally open to all subordinate Members of the Force, as well as to persons who have given information or assistance, and will be divided among the various claimants in proportion to the relative value of their respective services; but no Officer of Police, unless by special authority, will participate in any reward, whatever part he may have taken, or however instrumental he may have been in effecting the object for which it was offered.

37. An inventory in duplicate of all property found in the possession of a prisoner at the time of his arrest, and which the Police may be justified in seizing and retaining, will be drawn up and signed by the Constable making the arrest, and countersigned by the Inspector or other Officer in charge of Police. The prisoner will also be invited to sign it.

38. Property seized will remain in the custody of the Police until the prisoner on whom it has been found, shall have been either discharged or convicted or found guilty, and will be kept at the place of trial previous to the time appointed for trial, so that it may be accessible either for purposes of identification or returned to the prisoner if discharged, or delivered with a copy of the inventory to the Sheriff or Gaoler if the prisoner be convicted.

39. Property necessary for purposes of identification will remain as much as possible in the hands of the same Constable or Officer, so as to avoid complicating or embarrassing the question of identity.

40. If a prisoner be discharged, the property found on him will be restored to him, with the exception of such portions as may be necessary to be retained as proofs in future proceedings, or proved to belong to another person who will obtain possession on indemnifying the Police Officer against any proceedings of the prisoner.

41. If a prisoner be convicted of felony or misdemeanor entailing forfeiture, all property found in his possession or belonging to him will be confiscated; except such as may be identified as stolen property. The remainder will be delivered to the Sheriff for the purpose of being sold, and the proceeds paid into the Treasury unless the Government should otherwise direct.

42. If a prisoner be convicted of a misdemeanor not punishable with forfeiture, the property found in his possession and seized by the Police will be delivered to the Sheriff or Gaoler, to be held at the disposal of the prisoner, subject to Gaol Regulations.

43. In cases of summary conviction, a similar course will be pursued before and after conviction as before and after trial.

44. A record will be kept of money or other property which may come into the possession of the Police in any other way than by forfeiture or seizure; and should there be any doubt respecting its disposal, it will be forwarded, together with a report of the circumstances, to Head Quarters, with a view to its being disposed of by competent authority.

OFFICERS.

45. The Inspector General of Police will be held specially responsible for the peace and good order of, and for the security of life and property throughout the Colony, and in general for the discipline, obedience, and organization of the Police.

46. The Inspector General will furnish the Government with periodical reports of the general state of the Police Force, its numerical strength, distribution, and general efficiency, the increase or diminution of crime, the formation of new Stations, and such other information as may be necessary.

47. The Officer in charge of Police in any District will be held responsible for the peace and good order of the same; for the safety of life and property therein; and for the discipline, obedience, and organization of the Force under him.

48. He will, as far as lies in his power, act in accordance with the wishes of the Bench, for which purpose he will frequently communicate personally with the Magistrates, to ascertain whether their lawful orders are duly carried out by the Members of the Force, and whether they are active, diligent, and efficient in the prevention of crime or the pursuit of criminals, and orderly, respectful, and steady in their conduct.

49. Every Officer of Police in charge of a District will use his own discretion in regard to accompanying the Police under him in the pursuit of offenders, and in the performance of other Police duties requiring change of place. His most important duties will be those of superintendence and inspection, and in general it will be sufficient for him to enforce obedience to orders issued by himself or by any lawful authority.

50. No Officer of Police in the Commission of the Peace will act judicially unless in concert with one or more of the local Magistrates, and then only in cases of emergency, where his assistance may be urgently required, nor will any such Officer act as a Magistrate in any case wherein a Member of the Police has any direct interest or is one of the parties.

51. Every Officer of Police will take such opportunities of drilling the Police under his charge as do not interfere with their Police duties, also exercising them in the use of fire-arms.

52. Every Police Officer will pay strict and constant attention to economy, and whenever he sees any means of reducing the expense and promoting the utility of the Force in the locality within his charge, will communicate his views to the Head of his Department.

53. On the receipt of an order for the discharge or dismissal of any Member of the Force, the Officer in charge will order the party in to Head Quarters, taking care that all his arms, accoutrements, &c., are returned in good condition, and will arrange payment of such salary as may be due.

54. On the discharge or dismissal of any man from the Force, his "Defaulter's Sheet" will be forwarded to the Office of the Inspector General, to be there filed for reference; and on the application, written or personal, of any one who has been discharged, a printed certificate of character will be made out, in accordance with his sheet, signed by the Inspector General, and furnished to him. No other certificates of character or service will be given to parties leaving the Force, and none to those who have been dismissed or who have served less than twelve months.

55. On the transference of any Sergeant or Constable from one District to another, his "Defaulter's Sheet," together with his register in proper form, detailing his name, description, date up to which paid, &c., &c., will be sent under cover to the Officer in charge of the District to which the party is transferred.

56. An Officer in charge of Police will neither himself follow any trade or business nor suffer his men to do so.

SERGEANTS AND CONSTABLES.

57. Applications for enrolment in the Police must be made in writing to the Inspector General.

58. Every Member of the Force below the rank of Sub-inspector will in each District or Sub-district be distinguished by a letter and number; the letter indicating the particular District, and the number the man wearing it.

59. No Constable will be promoted to the rank of Sergeant who cannot frame or write with facility an official letter or report.

60. Any Constable who habitually quarrels with his comrades will be liable to punishment or dismissal.

61. Every Constable will report to a Sergeant or superior officer any circumstance which, however remotely, may appear to affect the public peace or safety, or the character of the Force.

62. Every person taken into custody without warrant (unless detained for the mere purpose of ascertaining his name or address) will be forthwith taken to the nearest Watch-house.

63. When a Constable on duty takes any one into custody, he should, as soon as possible, give notice to another Constable, so that his place may be supplied while he is taking the party to the Watch-house, and will return to his duty as soon as possible; or he may, when not himself required as a witness on the charge, deliver his prisoner to the Sergeant or Watch-house keeper, and immediately return to his duty; but it is generally most advisable that he should accompany the party to the Watch-house, in order to substantiate the charge.

64. No Constable will search a prisoner by himself, but in all cases will take him to the nearest Watch-house or Police Quarters, and in the presence of the Watch-house keeper or a Sergeant will take from such prisoner all property in his possession. Before confining the prisoner in the Watch-house the property so taken will be given to the Watch-house keeper, and entered by him in the "Charge Book," which will be signed by the prisoner if he be willing, but if not by the Sergeant or Watch-house keeper and the apprehending Constable.

65. No Constable will leave his station while on duty, unless under circumstances already mentioned, or in case of great emergency; nor will he enter any house, except in the execution of his duty.

66. On no pretence will any Constable frequent public-houses, except in the execution of his duty.

67. If a Constable observe anything in the street or highway likely to produce danger or public inconvenience, or anything which seems to him irregular and offensive, he will either remove it or report it to his superior Officer.

68. A Constable will not, when on duty, enter into conversation with any person whatever, except on matters relative to his duty; but will immediately give his name and number if asked.

COMPLAINTS—MISCONDUCT—PUNISHMENTS.

69. In every case of neglect or failure of duty by a subordinate, the Officer responsible will deal with the matter according to law or regulation, or at his discretion, as may be requisite, making a record of every important occurrence of the kind, and reporting the same, with as little delay as possible, to the Inspector General.

70. No Officer will inflict on any Member of the Force, above the rank of Constable, any punishment greater than a reprimand, but in cases which require a more severe punishment will await the decision of the Inspector General.

71. An Officer in charge of a District may inflict a fine not exceeding three pounds.

72. Any other Officers may inflict a fine not exceeding one pound.

73. All punishments, however, awarded by subordinate Officers, will be subject to the approval of the Inspector General.

74. Cases of breach of Police discipline or regulations, insubordination, or disputes between Members of the Force, will be dealt with by an Officer of Police. Offences against the public, or where Magistrates have clear jurisdiction, will be always submitted to a local Magistrate or Bench of Magistrates unconnected with the Force.

75. On a Constable's misconducting himself, the particulars of the case, with his name, description, &c., will be entered in a "Defaulter's Sheet," which will accompany him should he be transferred to any other District. On a Constable who has never misconducted himself being transferred, a "Defaulter's Sheet," containing his name and description only, will be forwarded with him.

76. Every Officer in charge of a District will report, in writing, as early as possible, any complaint by or against any Member of the Force, which it has been considered necessary to refer to a Bench of Magistrates for adjudication, and will also, if necessary, suspend the individual against whom a complaint has been made, awaiting the decision of the Inspector General, but in no case will he dismiss or discharge any Member of the Force without due authority.

77. Appeal may be made by any Member of the Police against the order or decision of an Officer; but if the objection prove frivolous, the person appealing will be liable to punishment.

78. Every complaint will be made, in the first instance, to the Officer in charge of a District, who, if necessary, will forward it to the Inspector General.

79. In forwarding complaints, Officers will accompany them by such statements as they may consider necessary, having reference to such complaint.

80. Members of the Force may at any time make any representation they please to the Inspector General; provided the complaint be in writing, respectfully worded, and forwarded through the regular channel.

81. As a general rule, any petition signed by numbers, or combinations for any purpose, will subject the parties to punishment or dismissal.

CORRESPONDENCE, REPORTS, RETURNS, RECORDS.

82. All communications from Officers in charge of Districts, intended to be brought under the notice of the Government or the Head of any Department, will be made through the Inspector General.

83. Every Officer of Police in charge of a District will report his movements and proceedings from time to time, and if compelled to leave his District or Station, upon necessary duty, will not fail to inform the Inspector General of the same.

84. All special or extraordinary acts or proceedings, or instances of the unusual exercise of authority, in cases of emergency, will require to be specially reported with as little delay as possible.

85. On offences being committed, a report of the case, on the printed form of Criminal Offence Report, will be promptly transmitted to the Inspector General, the District Head Quarters, and any Police Stations on the route supposed to be taken by the offenders or where the co-operation of the Force is necessary.

86. When offenders are apprehended, or further information respecting suspected parties or cases is obtained, a report of the same should be made in a similar manner.

87. From these reports the Police Gazette will be compiled each week in the Detective Office, containing particulars of offences committed, warrants issued, descriptions of stolen horses and cattle, and all other matter of Police interest. A copy of the Gazette will be sent to every Station in the Colony.

88. Merely local and petty cases need not be reported in the manner pointed out; but it is of the utmost importance that the information given in the reports should be accurate in every particular, and that the descriptions of offenders should be as clear and minute as obtainable.

89. Intelligence of importance, relating to serious offences committed, involving public peace or order, or the safety of life or property, will, when practicable, be communicated by Electric Telegraph.

90. All correspondence and reports will be expressed in clear and concise terms, and written in a neat and legible hand on foolscap paper, with one-third margin.

91. Reports from subordinate Members of the Force should be drawn up in the third person, according to the following form:—

"Police Station,

"Constable (or Sergeant, &c., as the case may be) No. 18 reports

92. In forwarding returns, they will not require to be accompanied by any communication, unless it may be necessary to give some explanation or information respecting them.

93. In referring to communications previously received from head quarters, not only the date of such communications, but also the numbers and letters which they may have borne, if any, will require to be specified; and when any communication is forwarded with a minute, the party receiving it will, after noting and attending to it, return it without delay to the person by whom it was forwarded.

94. On the transference, retirement, or removal from the service of any Officer, all public records, books, including files of the Police Gazette, or other documents, the property of the public, in that Officer's possession, will be handed over to his successor.

95. Every Officer of Police will be held responsible for a careful scrutiny of all statements, reports, returns, accounts, and vouchers connected with the Force under him, which will be supported and authenticated by his certificate of correctness.

96. Officers of Police in charge of Districts, will furnish to the Inspector General, on the 1st of each month, a General Monthly Report of their proceedings, the state of the District, crime, &c., &c.

97. The following books will be kept at the Head Quarters of every Police Station:—

District Order Book, to contain copies of all other orders.

Letter and Minute Book.

Warrant and Summons Book.

Registry of Horses.

Miscellaneous Property Book.

Store Book.

Occurrence Book.

98. The following books will be kept at Police Stations :—
Order Book, into which all orders received from the Superintendent are to be copied ; and the following returns furnished :—

Weekly Duty Return, to be compiled in the proper form from the Occurrence Book.

Weekly Forage Return.

99. Every Officer will keep a correct registry of all furniture and other Government property under his charge ; and in the event of being transferred to another Station will obtain a receipt for the same from the Officer relieving him.

100. Letters and reports from any District for transmission to the Inspector General's Office, will be forwarded through the Officer in charge of the District, except in case of any outrage, serious breach of the peace, or matter of an urgent nature, which the Officer in charge of a Station or Division will report direct to the Inspector General.

101. With the exception of Officers in charge of Districts, each of whom will be allowed the services of a Member of the Force as a Clerk, all Members of the Force will make out their reports in their own handwriting, and, except when in charge of Districts and important Stations, will supply themselves with stationery.

CONVEYANCE OF LETTERS AND DESPATCHES.

102. When it is absolutely necessary to send a letter or other document from one part of the country to another by despatch, it will be sent by a Mounted Constable to the next Police Station, to be handed over to the Officer in charge there, when the Constable will return to the Station from which he started ; and the Officer to whom the letter was delivered will, in like manner, forward it to the next Station, and it will thus be forwarded to its destination without any Constable being taken further than from his own Station to the next.

103. When a despatch is forwarded from Station to Station, it will be accompanied by written instructions, called a "Route," which will specify the time of starting, the rate per mile at which the despatch will travel, and whether it will be conveyed by night. The time of arrival and departure of such despatch from each Station will be entered in the "Route" by the Officer in charge of the Station, who will also make such remarks as he may consider advisable as to the condition in which the man and horse arrived. This "Route" will be carefully preserved, in case of its being necessary to refer thereto.

104. No Officer will forward a despatch by means of a Mounted Constable, unless in a case so urgent as to require a more speedy delivery than could otherwise be obtained ; and every such despatch will be indorsed "Urgent," and have the name of the writer written on its cover ; and every Officer so forwarding a despatch will be held responsible for sufficient cause to justify his having done so. If the line of Stations be not specified, the Officer in charge of each Station where the despatch arrives, will use his discretion in forwarding it by the best possible line of road.

105. Weekly Reports, Returns, &c., when not sent by post, will, for the most part, be forwarded to Head Quarters by the usual patrols, and not by special messengers.

Every Constable will provide himself with a box according to the regulated pattern, a pair of sheets, three blankets, a rug, a bed-tick, a pillow-case, blacking brushes, a memorandum book, and a hold-all containing brushes, comb, razors, &c., and a sufficient supply of underclothing. The Sergeants will be held responsible that the underclothing is changed sufficiently often for cleanliness. Clean straw for filling the bed-ticks and pillow-cases will be supplied by the Government once per quarter. The regulation box is the only baggage which will be conveyed for Sergeants and Constables, from one Station to another, at the expense of the Government.

112. In addition to the above, every Mounted Constable will be supplied by Government with military and bush spurs, horse-brush, water-brush, curry-comb, mane-comb, hoof-pick, and sponge.

"I certify that on paying the men of this Station I carefully examined all the articles mentioned in their certificates, and find that they were all in good and serviceable order."

117. Any Member of the Force losing or defacing a certificate will be charged 1s. for a new one, and will be presumed to have been provided with every article mentioned in it.

118. Any Member of the Force leaving the service, and taking with him any of the articles supplied him by the Government will be prosecuted for felony.

119. In case of any articles supplied by the Government being lost or damaged through intention or neglect, the cost of the articles lost, or the damage, will be charged against the individual to whom they were supplied in proportion to their original cost, and will require to be paid for before other articles can be supplied.

120. When any Sergeant or Constable receives his discharge, or is dismissed from the Police Force, the Officer in charge of the District will see that his arms, accoutrements, or any other Government property in his possession, are returned to store in a clean and proper state, and not used till his successor is appointed. On the back of his parchment certificate it should be stated in what condition the arms, &c., issued to him were returned, and his certificate should then be forwarded to Head Quarters, whence a new one will be supplied for his successor.

121. Every Constable will be supplied with twenty rounds of ammunition, and in the event of the quantity being unaccounted for at any time the amount of 6d. for every missing cartridge will be deducted from his pay; and in applying for more, it will require to be stated in writing how and when what had been previously issued was expended.

123. No Constable will load or discharge his firearms unless ordered to do so by his superior Officer, or in case of emergency.

124. Every Mounted Constable will be held strictly responsible for the state of the saddlery in his charge; and any breakages or damage done to any articles supplied by the Government, unless satisfactorily accounted for, will be repaired at his expense.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

125. An Officer applying for leave of absence will submit the name of the Member of the Force who will act for him, and such Member of the Force will be held responsible for the correct discharge of that Officer's duties during his absence.

126. Leave of absence granted to an Officer of the Force will not be extended, except in case of urgent necessity, which must be clearly shown by the Officer applying. In the event of illness being the plea for an extension of leave, a medical certificate must accompany the application.

127. Sergeants and Constables will be allowed leave of absence, according to the following scale:—

"For any period not exceeding fourteen days, on full pay; above fourteen, and not exceeding twenty-one days, on half-pay; and for any period exceeding twenty-one days, without pay."

128. Officers in charge of Districts will occasionally grant leave of absence for periods not exceeding seven days, but not beyond the boundary of their respective Districts. They will give to the party obtaining leave a certificate of the fact, on one of the printed forms supplied for the purpose, carefully preserving the counterfoil for reference.

129. Applications for leave of absence for more than seven days must, in every case, be submitted for the approval of the Inspector General.

130. Members of the Force obtaining leave will not take with them any part of their arms or appointments, or any Government horse, and will report themselves to the Senior Officer of the Force at or near whose Station they may be residing while on leave.

131. In every application for leave of absence, it must be stated at what periods, and for what length of time, the applicant had previously obtained leave of absence.

132. Members of the Force when on leave will be subject to every order, rule, and regulation of the Force, and will be liable to be called on to act, and to the consequences of any breach of discipline or good order, as if they were serving at their proper Stations.

133. All Members of the Force, whether Officers or otherwise, will report all cases of misconduct on the part of men on leave of absence, whether such misconduct may have been witnessed by them or reported to them by others.

REQUISITIONS.

134. Requisitions for Stores, Stationery, &c., will be forwarded to the Inspector General.

135. In every case requisitions will be signed by the Officer or Sergeant in charge of the Station where the supplies are required, and countersigned by the Officer in charge of the District; and no requisition whatever will be attended to, unless it contains particulars of former supply, how disposed of, and the quantity and condition of stock on hand.

136. For the purpose of providing for the supply of forage to Mounted Constables at a distance from any Police Station, or procuring conveyance for Constables or prisoners, and other services of the kind, a Requisition Book will be given to each Member of the Force in charge of a station, who, in case of any supplies or services of this nature being required, will fill up one of the forms, and give it to the party making the supply or performing the service, stating on the back of the requisition the amount of the charge.

137. On a requisition so completed being presented to the Inspector General, attached to the Government form of account and duly certified, payment will be made; but should it appear that a requisition has been given for any supply that was not required for the Public Service, or for any supplies for Constables, such as meals, beds, &c., which should be borne by the usual sum allowed them as night allowance, the amount will be deducted from the pay of the Officer signing the requisition.

138. In making these requisitions full particulars will be entered in the counterfoil of the book, which will be carefully preserved for reference.

139. Every Officer in charge of Police will be held responsible for the good repair of all buildings and premises occupied by the Force under him.

BARRACKS, STABLES, &c.

140. All damages will require to be promptly reported to the proper Officer; and when occurring through carelessness or negligence, the party in charge at the time will be responsible unless it can be shown through whose carelessness or negligence the damage has occurred.

141. A list of all articles, the property of the Government, will be hung up in each room, and the Officer, Sergeant, or Constable in charge of the Station will be held responsible for the articles mentioned therein; and in the event of such Officer, Sergeant, or Constable being removed, the party relieving him will take care that the articles correspond with the list, and are in such condition as stated in the list—if not, the circumstance will be reported to the Superintendent of the District.

142. If a Member of the Force report himself, from illness, unfit for parade or duty, the Officer in charge will note the circumstance in his Occurrence Book.

143. An immediate report will be made of any man who absents himself from any parade or duty (unless in case of illness), or from quarters at night.

144. No man will leave his barrack without acquainting the Sergeant or Constable on duty where he is to be found, or go from his Station any greater distance than a quarter of a mile without permission, or absent himself under such authority for more than two hours at one time.

145. Except when on duty, no greater number than one-half the Force at a Station will leave their quarters or the immediate vicinity.

146. No poultry, cows, horses, goats, pigs, or other animals shall be kept by the Police without permission.

147. The Police will keep every part of their barrack, its approaches, passages, and yards, clean and in good order.

148. The windows of Police buildings will be kept clean, opened whenever the weather will admit, and instantly repaired whenever required, at the cost of the Member of the Force chargeable with the damage.

149. If an Officer on inspection find any article of bedding requiring to be washed, he will order it to be washed at the expense of the person using it.

150. The following rules in regard to hours will, where practicable, be observed at all Police Stations in the Colony. All Constables, with the exception of those who have been employed on night duty, will rise in the morning not later than half-past 5 in the summer and half-past 6 in the winter; they will dress and have their bedding neatly folded during the next half-hour, and the rooms swept and set in order immediately afterwards.

151. The hours for breakfast will be 8 in the summer and half-past 8 in the winter; for dinner, half-past 1 in the summer and 1 in the winter; and for tea or supper, half-past 6 in the summer and 6 in the winter. At half-past 9 such men as have not leave or are not on duty will go to bed, and all lights and fires, except such as are authorized to be kept up during the night, will be extinguished by 10 o'clock.

152. The Mounted Constables will attend morning stable parade at 6 in the summer and 7 in the winter.

153. After stable parade, horses will be taken to water; and on returning should be properly groomed, and receive the regulated allowance of food; this, when water is in the neighbourhood, will not occupy more than one hour. At noon such horses as may not be on duty will be again watered and fed. The hours for evening stables will be half-past 4 in winter and 5 in summer, when the horses will be taken to water, and on returning be properly cleaned, fed, and bedded down for the night, every man's saddle and bridle being properly cleaned and carefully placed away on the saddle rack.

154. When an Officer is at a Station he will attend stable parade to see that the men groom their horses properly.

155. Regularity of hours will always be observed when it does not interfere with the performance of Police duties.

156. During summer, no fire will be allowed in any of the apartments, except the cook-house or kitchen.

157. Whenever possible, the Police will supply themselves with wood and water, but otherwise the Officer in charge will make the most advantageous arrangement in his power, having due regard to economy, where no contracts exist.

158. Relatives of Members of the Force, but more particularly discharged Constables or other persons not connected with the establishment, will not be allowed to sleep in barracks, and no person, except on public business, will be allowed to frequent Police premises.

159. Any person who has been dismissed from the Force will not be allowed to enter Police quarters on any excuse whatsoever; nor will any Member of the Force associate with such person, if the offence for which he was dismissed was of a disgraceful nature.

160. Smoking in the sleeping rooms of the barracks, and card-playing and every other species of gambling will not be permitted.

161. Officers in charge of Districts will pay particular attention to the establishment of messes, and take all necessary steps for forming and adapting them to the requirements of the Police under their charge, and for so managing them that Constables from other Stations, who may be passing on duty, may obtain their meals at a moderate cost, even if somewhat in excess of the rate charged to Members of the mess.

162. Regularity of hours (whenever possible), cleanliness, proper costume, and correct behaviour at meals will be strictly observed. In all matters relating to the expense and quality of food the minority must give way to the majority, but the Officer or Sergeant will be held responsible for the quality and quantity of the food.

163. No Member of the Force will be permitted, from penuriousness or any other cause, to subsist habitually on food, the quantity or quality of which is insufficient or deleterious.

164. Every article in a barrack room, when not in use, will have its appointed place. Provisions will not be exposed to view, nor mess utensils left lying about or dirty.

165. The Officer in charge of a Station will take charge of the private effects of any Constable who dies thereat, and make a careful inventory of such effects in the presence of a subscribing witness, and transmit a true copy of such inventory to the Officer in charge of his Division, who will again transmit the same, with all necessary information on the subject, to the Inspector General, with a view to the proper disposal of such private effects, in accordance with the Police Regulation Act.

HORSES AND FORAGE.

166. Horses will in general be purchased for the Force by the Inspector General, or by some Officer appointed by him, and the horses so procured will whenever practicable be examined by a veterinary surgeon, and their soundness, age, and general fitness for service certified before payment is made.

167. Police horses may when necessary be turned out to graze, and relieved from work for a time by order of an Officer in charge of a District; and horses unfit for service will be from time to time examined by some person or persons duly appointed for that purpose, and disposed of according to their recommendation.

168. When any horse, from disease or injuries received, becomes totally useless, a report of the circumstance will be forwarded to the Inspector General, who will give orders for its disposal; but in the event of a limb being fractured, or any other such injury, the Officer in charge will kill it on the spot, forwarding a report in the usual manner.

169. In the event of authority being given for the purchase of horses in remote Districts, the certificate will be signed by two Officers.

170. Every Member of the Mounted Police will be furnished with a horse, branded with the crown and the letter and number of the District to which it belongs, and will be held responsible for its treatment and general condition. Any Member of the Force, either ill-treating or permitting to be ill-treated, or neglecting any horse under his charge will, in addition to such other punishment as may be inflicted upon him, be dismissed and ordered to return to Foot Police duty, or in extreme cases dismissed.

171. No Member of the Foot Police will be mounted, nor any Mounted Constable dismissed, without authority from the Inspector General.

172. Each Officer in charge of a District or Sub-district will keep a register of the horses under his charge, in which their age, height, distinctive marks, brands, letters, and numbers will be carefully entered, and on no occasion will horses belonging to one District be ridden or otherwise used by the Officers or men of another.

173. A register will be kept by every Officer in charge of a Station of the horses in his charge, for which he will be responsible to the Officer in charge of the District, who in like manner will be responsible to the Inspector General.

174. Officers in charge of Districts will see that every horse under them, as well as its rider, has a fair share of work; and will not allow some horses to be petted and kept idle in the stables, while others are injured by severe usage or neglect; nor horses, unless when sick, to be kept clothed in stables.

175. All Members of the Mounted Force will be particular to see that the saddles are carefully fitted to the horses' backs; and the Officers in charge of Districts will hold the men accountable for horses in their charge having sore backs or saddle-galls (which in most cases are caused by hard riding or inattention in not seeing that the saddles are properly fitted), as well as for any other diseases which could have been prevented by attention. No excuse will be received for a horse being rendered unserviceable from the above causes, unless it can be satisfactorily proved that some accidental and unlooked-for circumstance has rendered it necessary that the horse should be so used; and unless the cause can be traced to some other source than neglect, the Constable to whom the horse was told off will be charged for the forage of the animal while unfit for use, in addition to such other punishment as may be awarded.

176. No horse will travel at a pace exceeding five miles per hour, unless in cases of emergency, such as the pursuit of offenders, &c., where it is apparent that speed is absolutely necessary.

177. The pace of an escort will not in general exceed four miles per hour; and in all cases every opportunity will be taken by the Mounted Force to spare their horses as much as possible. Any Constable violating this rule will be subject to punishment or dismissal.

178. No Police horse will on any consideration be used in harness, unless it be ordered for Government purposes by competent authority, nor will any Member of the Force use his horse unless in the execution of his duty.

179. Any Officer who may particularly wish to use a private instead of a Government horse in the discharge of his duty, will forward to the Inspector General in the usual manner an application to that effect, accompanied by a certificate, signed by the Superintendent of the District, that the animal in question is in every respect suited for the service; but he will not be allowed to make use of any Government horse in addition to his own private horse unless in case of emergency, when it will require to be shown that his own was injured in the service or otherwise unfit for duty, nor will he be allowed to make use of the horse so kept at the public expense in harness or for private purposes, or to dispose of it without the sanction of the Inspector General.

180. Officers will not make use of horses under their charge, nor Police horses be ridden, unless under special authority, by any other person than a Member of the Force.

181. When a report is made by a Constable or other Member of the Force, of the bad state or condition of his horse, the Officer in charge of the District will direct immediate inquiry to be made.

182. Draught horses will be frequently inspected by the Officer in charge of the Station to which they belong, as well as by the Officer in charge of the District; they will require to be driven steadily, never on any account more than four miles per hour, and their collars and harness kept in proper repair, and so fitted as not to chafe or injure the horses.

183. In the event of any Police horse being sold, it will be disposed of by public auction in such a manner as the Inspector General may direct, but prior to the sale will be branded with the "condemned" brand, together with a private mark, for the purpose of preventing fraud.

184. A greater number of horses will be allowed in every District than are in actual use, that those requiring it may occasionally have rest; but should the number of Mounted Force in a District be reduced, the Officer in charge will cause the supernumerary horses to be turned out into the nearest Police paddock until he has received instructions as to their disposal; and should he be instructed to send them to the depot, he will send with them, addressed to the Officer in charge, a return, giving the names of the horses, their brands, colour, age, &c. Should additional horses be required in a District, an application to that effect will require to be forwarded to the Inspector General.

185. Members of the Force in charge of Stations will give due notice to local contractors, stating the supplies of forage needed, in accordance with the terms of contract.

186. When forage is delivered at any Station by a contractor, the net weight will require to be ascertained, and the receipt signed for that quantity for which the Officer in charge, who signs the receipt, will, in his issues, be held responsible.

187. If a Station, be under the charge of a subordinate Member of the Force, he will permit no one but himself to issue forage; at large Stations one Constable only will be authorized to issue.

188. When a fresh supply of forage is received at a Station it will not be issued until the old stock is consumed.

189. The Police at every Station will exert themselves to insure the supplies being stored in such a manner as to prevent any injury through the effects of weather or other causes, as, should any damage or loss occur, the strictest investigation will be made, and the party who, from negligence or other fault, allowed the same to take place, will be held personally responsible.

190. At out-stations, where the stores are kept in a tent or any insecure building, the Police on the Station will erect a strong fence to prevent any damage by cattle, &c.

191. No forage will on any account be issued from Police stores to any person whatever without special authority; and in every instance where forage is issued for any other than Police service, a requisition will require to be obtained from the party requiring the same, which must be attached to the Weekly Forage Return, in which also care will be taken to insert particulars of the amount of forage drawn, the Officer's name, and on what duty engaged.

The regulation scale of a ration of forage will be:—

8	lbs. of maize or oats
4	" bran
12	" hay

192. Forage Returns will require to be entered day by day, and the draft copy filed at the end of each week, thus obviating the necessity for keeping forage books (unless under special directions). One other copy of the returns only will be forwarded to Head Quarters, for transmission to the Office of the Inspector General.

193. The Officer by whom the correctness of returns has been certified, will be held responsible for any errors therein causing public loss or damage.

194. At every Station where grass can be found, the Officer in charge will turn out the horses on duty to graze, issuing them only half rations, or such other allowance as may be necessary, due regard being had to their being kept in serviceable condition; and whenever possible Police horses will be kept without forage.

195. Police horses will not be foraged or stabled at hotels oftener than is absolutely necessary; in cases where it is unavoidable, a requisition in the printed form for the purpose will be given by the Officer in charge, and every horse will be groomed by its rider as at a Police Station.

196. No disputed horses or cattle will be foraged by the Police, unless the parties claiming pay beforehand the regulation price, but otherwise the cattle will be turned into a paddock or handed over to one of the claimants on his giving a sufficient guarantee for the animal's production when required. But in the event of its being necessary to retain an animal in the possession of the Police, as in a case of felony, when there would probably be danger of its being abstracted by the friends of the accused, half the usual ration of forage will be allowed for such animal.

197. On the charge of any Station being transferred from one Member of the Force to another, the forage in store will be weighed, receipts given for the actual weight, and any deficiency or surplus noted in the Weekly Forage Returns.

198. If any Constable absent from his Station draw more than one ration per diem for his horse, en route, he will be charged with the amount overdrawn.

ESCORTS.

199. Police in charge of an Escort will be held specially responsible for the safety and security of Prisoners or Property committed to their charge, and on taking custody of the same will give a receipt specifying that precautions have been duly taken for that purpose.

200. Having received their charge properly secured, it will be the duty of an Escort to guard against such security being diminished or impaired; for this purpose they will frequently and closely inspect the handcuffs, chains, &c., placed on the prisoners, and the fastenings of doors, windows, &c., of any place of confinement. They will also inspect the locks, seals, or other means by which property is secured. Neither by day or by night will an Escort separate from or lose sight of their charge.

201. Escorts will not stop during the night at public-houses, when it can be possibly avoided, but when absolutely necessary an agreement must be made with the proprietor of the house for the use of a room and for meals to be supplied to prisoners on the most moderate terms.

202. Police on Escort will neither drink nor allow the prisoners in their charge to drink any fermented or spirituous liquors whatever; but will place the prisoners in the most secure and private room obtainable, and adopt all proper and necessary precautions against escape.

203. Escorts with prisoners or property in charge will not call or halt at public-houses during the day; but the necessary provisions and refreshments will be procured at, and taken with them, from the place stopped at on the previous night.

204. While on march prisoners will be kept in the centre of the party, and not allowed to separate or straggle, the rate of marching being regulated according to the powers of the prisoners if on foot, and if in carts according to the pace at which the vehicles can conveniently proceed. Neither acquaintances of the prisoners nor other persons will be allowed to mix with or accompany the Escort.

205. The arms of an Escort will invariably be loaded, kept as dry as possible, and in a state for instant use. In escorting females, lunatics, or persons charged with trifling misdemeanors, Escorts will not require to be provided with firearms.

206. Everything belonging to prisoners under Escort will be made up into separate sealed packages, each marked with the name of the prisoner and the amount, and these separate parcels (with a list) enclosed in a strong sealed cover with a memorandum delivered to the Officer in charge, his acknowledgment and signature being taken to a duplicate retained. The memorandum and the sealed parcel will be handed with the seal unbroken, to the person into whose charge the prisoners are delivered, a receipt being taken for the same.

207. The Officer in charge of a party on Escort duty, will always march in the rear of such Escort, and enforce strict attention to duty on the part of the Police, who will not be allowed to straggle under any pretence.

208. Every Officer before taking charge of prisoners will cause them to be searched in his presence, and examine his authority for their custody.

209. Every Officer taking charge of gold, specie, or other treasure, or Government parcels, will take care that the same are duly entered in the way-bill, and obtain a receipt for them from the party to whom the articles are delivered.

210. Where practicable, after having given up charge of property, or prisoners entrusted to them, Police composing an Escort will return to their Stations by twos, starting at different hours, and where convenient by different roads, the Officer in charge of the Escort forming one of the last party, so that he may be able to check any irregularity that may take place.

211. Any Constable accompanying a Judge when on Circuit, or any other Government Officer, as an Orderly, will be relieved at each Station, so as to avoid as much as possible taking any Constable to a distance from his Station, or into another District.

212. No Officer of Police will under any circumstances be accompanied by a Constable as Orderly. When an Officer has to perform any duty in which his personal safety is endangered, he will take with him one or more Constables as the necessity of the case may require; but under such circumstances the Constable or Constables will precede instead of following him, as the attendance of Constables on Officers as a mark of honour will not be permitted.

213. Patrols will not travel on stated nights or at particular hours, but at irregular periods will visit suspected places, and observe suspicious houses and persons.

214. Patrols will not confine their attention to the main lines of road only, but will occasionally proceed through the bush, calling at houses to obtain information.

215. Constables on patrol will not smoke, separate, talk loudly, or enter public-houses, except in performance of duty.

DUTIES AT A WATCH-HOUSE.

216. A Constable on duty at a Station-house will on no account quit it during his time of duty.

217. Such Constables will receive charges against prisoners, will ascertain their nature, and when satisfied of their propriety, will cause the name of each prisoner to be entered with the particulars of his offence in a book kept for the purpose, to be called the "Charge Book."

218. A Constable may admit to bail persons charged during the night with any petty misdemeanor, such as a trifling assault, or mischief, or other petty misdemeanor; and persons charged with drunkenness may, when they become sober, be admitted to bail, as in other cases of petty misdemeanor.

219. A person against whom a charge for assault attended by cutting and wounding has been received, or for felonies or aggravated misdemeanors will, when such charges have been received and entered in the "Charge Book," be detained in custody at the Watch-house until taken before a Magistrate for examination; and no prisoner will be detained in the custody of the Police after he has been once brought before a Magistrate to answer the charge preferred against him, without a warrant for his detention.

220. A person apprehended on warrant for an offence not indictable should only be admitted to bail with the sanction of the Magistrate by whom the warrant was signed, or, in his absence, by an Officer of Police. In all cases of persons being taken into custody for indictable offences, whether by warrant or otherwise, they will not be discharged on bail until they have been brought before and bail ordered by a Bench.

221. When a party is accused of having committed a felony or a misdemeanor (as the case may be), and there is reasonable ground for preferring the complaint, inquiry as to the facts will be made only of the person who prefers the complaint (who does so on his own responsibility), and not of other persons, although they may be cognizant of the facts; but in a subsequent stage of the proceedings before a Magistrate, such persons may be heard as witnesses. For this purpose their names and addresses, if they are in attendance at the Watch-house, should be entered in the "Charge Book."

222. If a complainant, after having given a person into custody on a criminal charge, refuses to sign the entry in the "Charge Book," and the charge has been made in the first instance to a Constable, the Constable will, if he has seen the offence committed, enter and sign the charge himself, and the complainant may be summoned to substantiate it. The Sergeant on duty, or Watch-house keeper will, for this purpose, always ascertain the name and address of the complainant before making any inquiry of him. If the Constable be himself unable to establish the charge, and the complainant refuse to support it, the party accused will not be detained, save in case of a serious offence, and when there are grounds to suppose the prisoner guilty, notwithstanding the prosecutor's refusal.

223. If the complaint in the first instance be not made by a third person, but by a Constable on his own view, the charge will be received, entered in the "Charge Book," and submitted to a Magistrate; but if it turn out, upon the statement of the Constable, that in point of fact there are not reasonable grounds for suspecting the offence to have been committed by the party accused, he will be discharged, and the case fully reported.

224. A description of property brought to a Constable on duty at a Watch-house, whether taken from persons apprehended or otherwise, will immediately be entered in the "Charge Book," and the several articles marked, so that they may be afterwards known. Such property should be taken by the Watch-house keeper himself from the party bringing it, and not allowed out of his sight until marked in the manner directed; it should then be locked up, or if required as evidence given back to the charge of the Constable who took possession of them.

225. As a confession from a prisoner in custody on a charge of felony, to be admissible as evidence against himself, must be free and voluntary, that is, must not be extracted by any sort of threat or violence, or obtained by any direct or implied promises, the Police, in receiving a confession which a prisoner may be desirous of making, should warn him that it may be used against him. In such cases the Constable will endeavour to fix in his memory any conversation immediately preceding the confession, so as to be able to prove it in connection with the detailed confession.

226. The daily ration allowed by Government to prisoners in Solitary Cells or Watch-houses will be 24 ounces of third quality bread, or 20 ounces of the same quality flour; and to prisoners in transitu, awaiting trial, or under committal, 12 ounces of bread, third quality, 12 ounces of maize meal, 4 ounces of fresh meat, 8 ounces of vegetables, half an ounce of salt, half an ounce of soap. In cases where maize meal or vegetables cannot be obtained, 12 ounces will be added to the allowance of flour, and 12 ounces to the allowance of fresh meat. The Officers in charge of Police at Stations, where there are Lock-ups and where no Government contract exists, will call for tenders, according to the above scale, and transmit such tenders as they may receive, to the Inspector General's Office, in the usual manner. As soon as the acceptance of any tender has been notified, rations may be ordered by the Officer in charge, and an account forwarded to the Inspector General's Office for payment through the regular channel.

227. When it is necessary for prisoners in confinement to have other refreshments than are provided by Government, no beer or spirits will be admitted into the cells, but only tea or coffee, with such eatables as are usually given in those cases; but this will not be permitted without the sanction of an Officer.

228. Prisoners in the Watch-house will require to be frequently visited, and immediate attention given to any case requiring assistance or medical aid.

SYDNEY.

229. The Sydney Police will consist of several Sub-divisions, with a Senior-sergeant in charge of each, and to each Sub-division will be intrusted a certain portion of the City and Suburbs.

230. Each Sub-division will be subdivided into sections, each under the immediate charge of a Sergeant; and the sections will be divided into beats, for the safety of which Constables on duty will be held responsible.

231. The hours for duty will be as follows:—

The day duty will commence at 6 A.M. and continue till 10 P.M., for which purpose half the available force will be told off, and divided into two reliefs, taking street duty four hours at a time.

The first relief will go on duty at 6 A.M. and remain till 10 A.M.

The second will go on duty at 10 A.M. and remain till 2 P.M.

The first will go on duty at 2 P.M. and remain till 6 P.M. The second will go on duty at 6 P.M. and remain till 10 P.M.

232. During the intervening four hours between duties, one-half of the men relieved will remain in the barracks, and the other half will be allowed to go home, but will be ready to return at least a quarter of an hour before their tour of duty commences; the half who go away in the morning will remain in the evening, thus giving to each man twelve hours duty, eight of which he will be on beat by four hours at a time.

233. The night duty will commence at 10 P.M., and continue from that hour until 6 o'clock the next morning, a Sergeant taking charge of each Section.

234. Two men from each Sub-division will be told off for Station-house reserve, which will be taken in turn by all.

235. The night and day duties will change every month.

236. The Sergeant in charge of a Sub-division will both day and night visit every part of his Division; will see that the Sergeants and Constables are alert and understand their duties properly; and that the men in reserve both by day and by night are prepared to turn out at a moment's notice.

237. Every Constable will move regularly through his beat, so that any person requiring assistance, by remaining in the same spot for any length of time, may meet a Constable. This regularity of movement will not however prevent his remaining at any particular place, if his presence there be necessary for the due performance of his duty, to observe the conduct of any suspected person, or for any other good reason, but he will be required to satisfy his Sergeant or superior Officer that there was a sufficient cause for such apparent irregularity.

238. Constables will attend at appointed times to report to the Chief or Senior-constable anything requiring notice.

239. If at any time a Constable require immediate assistance and cannot in any other way obtain it, he will sound his whistle, but this is to be done as seldom as possible, and always reported afterwards.

240. Married Constables will lodge as near as possible to the Sub-division to which they are attached, and all Members of the Force (whether on duty or not) will be prepared to turn out in all such emergencies as fires, accidents of any kind, disturbances, &c.

241. Sergeants in charge of Sub-divisions will take their turn of day and night duty, but will not be required to visit the guard-room or barracks of any other Sub-division than their own.

242. Every Sergeant in charge of a Sub-division will occasionally visit every part thereof at uncertain hours during the day and night; and when on duty, will attend the Court and visit the Watch-houses at least once during the day and once after midnight.

243. Every Sergeant in charge of a Sub-division will be responsible for and will take immediate charge of the Lock-up situated in that Division.

244. On any alarm of fire, the Police (including those who are off duty) will turn out and render every aid in their power which circumstances may demand.

245. Where there are Fire Brigades established, the duty of the Police will be simply to preserve order, protect life and property, and to procure a free scope for the exertions of the firemen and the parties more immediately interested; and with this view they will clear the street or ground in the immediate vicinity of the fire of all persons not usefully employed, taking care that all adjoining streets, as far as may be practicable, are kept clear of obstructions by crowds, or carriages, waggons, carts, &c., that the engines may not be delayed.

246. Every assistance possible will be given by the Police for the removal of property, conformably with the wishes of the proprietors; and if desired, such property will be conveyed to the nearest Police Station for protection.

247. The Police will collect upon the spot all the information they can obtain relative to the cause of fire, which, together with the circumstances attending it, will be reported fully, as soon as may be, to the Officer in charge.

DETECTIVES.

248. Detectives will be selected from the ordinary Police Force, and after having been employed on trial as supernumeraries, during which time they will receive the pay of Ordinary Constables, and reported favourably of by the Officer in charge, will be promoted to the rank of a second-class Detective Constable, with pay at the rate of 2s. per day increase on that of an Ordinary Constable, and in due course if recommended for zeal and efficiency will be further advanced to the rank of a first-class Detective, with pay of 3s. per day in excess of that of an Ordinary Constable. The rank of a first-class Detective will be equivalent to that of a Sergeant in the Preventive Police.

249. Nevertheless, candidates who from previous habits, experience, or other reasons, may appear to be particularly adapted for Detective duties, will be taken on as supernumeraries without having served in the Police, and after due trial promoted in the usual manner.

250. Detective Constables will correspond directly with the Inspector General, but will otherwise be under the orders of the Officer of Police in charge of the District, Station, or Division, where such Detectives may be on duty.

WATER POLICE.

251. The duties particularly devolving upon the Water Police, will be to protect and maintain order among the shipping; to enforce port regulations; to supervise the transshipment of powder; to examine and muster the passengers and crews of vessels in the intercolonial trade, with a view to prevent the escape of criminals; to supervise the ballast lighters, watermen, lights in harbour, &c.; to serve summonses, execute warrants, and other legal processes on parties afloat; to convey prisoners to and from vessels, &c., &c.

252. Every Constable in the Water Police will be on duty twelve hours in the twenty-four, and attend the Police Court when required.

253. All signals from vessels for Police assistance will be registered in the Occurrence Book, as well as the vessel's name, the hour by night or day when made, and the hour when the signal is answered.

254. In the event of a fire occurring on shore, or in the harbour, all the available Force in the Water Police will proceed immediately to the spot, in readiness to render such assistance as may be necessary, either in extinguishing the fire or in saving and protecting property. Should the fire occur on shipboard, the guard-boat on duty will lose no time in warning the nearest vessel to the burning ship of its dangerous position and at the same time send immediate notice to the Harbour Master.

MR.

MR. D. FLYNN to THE INSPECTOR GENERAL OF POLICE.

Carcoar, 1 July, 1870.

SIR,

Having contracted to supply the police here with candles at 11s. per quarter, they, in place of candles, have ordered at the store kerosene in my name, and above the amount agreed on (see enclosed bill for six quarters), the balance of which they refuse to refund. Before taking any further steps in the matter, I think it right to inform you, requesting that you will cause justice to be done without further trouble. I may further state, on yesterday Sergeant Merrin sent Constable Hickey requesting me to sign last quarter's voucher, at 7d. per lb. for candles, when the cost price was only 6d.; this being after he refused to make good the difference of our accounts.

2. A police horse died in the Carcoar police stables about twelve months ago, which I agreed to draw away for 10s. by Constable Brady's orders, and the police agreed to pay that amount by forwarding a voucher for the same. This they have not done, and I have not yet been paid.

I am, &c.,

D. FLYNN.

We have detained this a week, thinking Sergeant Merrin would pay the balance. The reason he has taken the contract from me is for asking the balance he overdrew in the stores.

Referred to Supt. Lydiard. I should not be troubled with matters of this kind. 12th July, 1870.
JNO. McLERIE, I.G.P.

What is the meaning of this?—C. J. P. LYDIARD, Supt. 14-7-70.
Sergeant Merrin.

Police Station, Carcoar,
17 July, 1870.

MEMO. with reference to the attached complaint and claim made by Daniel Flynn.

SERGEANT Merrin, No. 687, reports, on the 1st of January, 1869, he gave him, Flynn, the contract of supplying firewood to the police station and lock-up here, at the rate of 10s. per load. During the last three months he did not perform it satisfactorily, and he was notified to discontinue. He had nothing to do with the supplying of candles. The allowance was always purchased by the Sergeant at Mr. Hilliar's store, at cost price, and entered as police account, payable quarterly. On the 9th of April last a tin of oil, containing 4 gallons, was got in lieu of candles. The allowance for station and lock-up for quarter would be only 3 gallons, as entered on voucher in Flynn's account. The balance was paid by the Sergeant to Mr. Hilliar at the end of the quarter as usual. As the fuel and light are entered on the one voucher, Flynn has to refund the amount for candles to the Sergeant or Mr. Hilliar when he gets paid his account. The last items mentioned on the attached account, namely, February 21st, 1 gallon of oil, candles 1s. 3d., were never ordered or received by the police, and are not entered in the police account, but are in Flynn's private account with Mr. Hilliar. If there is any mistake at all, it rests between Mr. Hilliar and Flynn. The Sergeant has nothing whatever to do with the matter; he can certify the police account is paid up all correct with Mr. Hilliar, who can certify the same.

With reference to Flynn drawing away a dead police horse from the police stable about twelve months ago, he has never made a claim for doing so before now. The Sergeant made no arrangement with him; he was not on the station that day; but he did not consider it any compliment for Flynn to draw it away, as he was in the barrack-yard at the time with a load of wood; it did not occupy him more than ten minutes. He now puts in a claim for 10s., which the Sergeant refuses to forward unless he reduces it to 5s., which is sufficient for his trouble.

Flynn is a very troublesome man, and is never easy only when he is at variance with some person in the town; he is noted for such behaviour as this. He is the last man in the district the Sergeant would have employed, but it so happened he could not at the time get any other person to draw in the wood. He can neither read nor write, and cannot be made understand about his account with Mr. Hilliar.

J. MERRIN,

Sergeant.

P.S.—The account attached and forwarded by Flynn is not a true copy as given to him by Hilliar.

J.M.

MR. D. FLYNN to THE INSPECTOR GENERAL OF POLICE.

Carcoar, 7 August, 1870.

SIR,

I had an occasion to write to you about the overdrawing of Sergeant Merrin, of which he has not settled yet. I owed him 5s. which he asked me for and paid him, and at the same time he promised to pay me the 10s. for drawing away the horse out of the Government stables, and he has not paid yet. I hope you will see justice done before I take any further steps into it. I request an answer to the letter I sent you in the 1st of July.

I am, &c.,

DANIEL FLYNN.

I.G.P., 11th August, 1870.

Re Daniel Flynn's complaint against Sergeant Merrin, Carcoar.
Supt. Lydiard, 11/8/70.—J. McL., I.G.P.

Police

Police Station, Carcoar,
18 August, 1870.

SERGEANT Merrin, No. 687, reports, with reference to the attached complaint, he cannot understand what motive Flynn has for making such untruthful reports against him; the only reason the Sergeant can assign is simply because he took the contract from him of supplying the firewood to the Police Station, as he did not perform it satisfactory. The Sergeant is in no way indebted or under any obligation to him whatever.

With respect to Flynn drawing away the dead horse from Government stables, he never made a claim for so doing until the 1st of last month. The Sergeant has asked him three times since to sign a voucher for 5s., which is the scale allowed for this work—it did not occupy him one hour. He has refused to sign the voucher for this amount; he claims 10s., and states that he must have that amount or none; he also states that he is intended to give Sergeant Merrin all the trouble he possibly can about the matter; he never promised him 10s. Flynn is a very contrary and troublesome man; the Sergeant would not have employed him, but he could not possibly get any other person at the time to draw in the wood.

The Sergeant is very sorry that the Inspector General of Police should be troubled with such truthless and unnecessary complaints against him.

J. MERRIN,
Sergeant.

MR. D. FLYNN TO THE INSPECTOR GENERAL OF POLICE.

Carcoar, 1 September, 1870.

SIR,

I have the honor to again refer to my letter of the 1st July, 1870, respecting police contracts, and to beg most respectfully that you will supply me with a copy of Mr. Sergeant Merrin's report on the same, for the following reasons:—

Because the person complained of in that letter was Mr. Merrin himself, and his report on the same is not likely to be either impartial or just.

Because Mr. Sergeant Merrin informed me, by writing that letter I had lost all future police contracts, although I have fulfilled all past contracts, without any complaint, and to the satisfaction of Sergeant Merrin himself. I therefore submit most respectfully that I am entitled to a copy of Mr. Merrin's letter or report without further trouble, as I am at a pecuniary loss by his statements.

I have, &c.,
D. FLYNN.

Supt. Lydiard will, I trust, attend to this troublesome matter at once.—J. McL., I.G.P.—6/9/70.

THE INSPECTOR GENERAL OF POLICE TO THE OFFICER IN CHARGE OF POLICE, BATHURST.

[Immediate.]

Police Department,
Inspector General's Office,
Sydney, 15 October, 1870.

I HAVE several times referred complaints from Mr. Flynn to the Superintendent of Police, Bathurst, but have not been informed that the matter has been attended to.

The above question in Parliament is the result.

I must receive by post on Tuesday morning complete particulars to enable me to reply, with explanation of delay in reporting.

JNO. McLERIE,
I.G.P.

Police Department, Bathurst Station,
16 October, 1870.

Re Daniel Flynn's complaints against Sergeant Merrin, of Carcoar Station.

MEMO.—These papers were purposely delayed by the Superintendent, in order that he might personally inquire into the complaints on his first visit to Carcoar, but through absence on more important duty the matter had to stand over.

Mr. Flynn is in error in supposing that he holds a contract for the supply of fuel and light (contracts are only entered into for the lock-up gaols). These items are always obtained from whoever will supply, at the cheapest rates.

The Superintendent allows officers in charge of stations to purchase the firewood and candles from any person they can get the best and cheapest article from.

It will be seen from Sergeant Merrin's report of 18th August why he discontinued purchasing from Flynn. No account for the burial of the horse has ever been rendered to this office. Sergeant Merrin will be in Bathurst on Tuesday next, when I will see him upon the matter.

Respecting the charge for the kerosene, the Sergeant denies being indebted; if he is, Flynn has his remedy by summoning him for the amount in dispute.

THOS. GARVIN, S.S.
(For and in absence of Superintendent.)

THE

THE INSPECTOR GENERAL OF POLICE TO THE SUPERINTENDENT OF POLICE, BATHURST.

Police Department, Inspector General's Office,
Sydney, 17 October, 1870.

I AM exceedingly vexed with this matter, and blame Sergeant Merrin principally for the annoyance occasioned.

If Flynn is such a litigious fellow, and so ignorant, why were any transactions entered into with him at all, especially when the articles were drawn from a storekeeper, and the accounts likely to become confused? Sergeant Merrin had no authority to enter into any contract; he was merely to purchase as cheaply as possible, from time to time.

He should have made a bargain with Flynn as to the charge for removing the dead horse, and should not have allowed private and Government supplies to be mixed in one account.

Sergeant Merrin will forthwith settle all accounts, as he should have done in the first instance, instead of subjecting this department to parliamentary investigation respecting a matter which, however trifling, bears the appearance of irregularity.

This to remain over for Mr. Lydiard to see on his return.

JNO. McLERIE,
I.G.P.

Police Station, Bathurst,
20 October, 1870.

SERGEANT Merrin, No. 687, reports that the only account due to Flynn is for removing the dead horse from the police stables. The Sergeant has asked him, on three occasions, to sign a voucher for payment, allowing him 5s.; he declined to sign a voucher, stating that he should have 10s. or none; and he has now been paid the amount of his claim. The Sergeant was not on the station when the horse died; if he had he should have made a bargain with Flynn, but he was under the impression that he would charge nothing, as he made no claim for nine months afterwards.

The Sergeant can assure the Superintendent of Police that what Flynn has stated as to his being indebted to him in the sum of £1 9s., as an overdrawn account in the store, is all false. Mr. Hilliar, the storekeeper, can certify to this, if the Superintendent would be good enough to refer to him.

The Sergeant was wrong in stating that he made a contract with Flynn; what he means is that he merely agreed with him to bring in firewood to the police station, at the rate of 10s. per load, to be paid quarterly. The last three loads of wood brought in by him would not make one good one; then the Sergeant informed him, that unless he brought in better loads in future, that he would have no more from him. Flynn then informed him that he would apply for the contract to Sydney, and that he would have it in spite of him: this is the ill-feeling that he has towards the Sergeant.

The Sergeant also admits that he was wrong in employing Flynn in the first instance, knowing the character he was, but it was impossible to get any other person at the time.

J. MERRIN,
Sergeant.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.

NEW SOUTH WALES.

IMMIGRATION.

(CORRESPONDENCE RESPECTING INTRODUCTION OF FEMALE DOMESTIC SERVANTS.)

*Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be Printed, 11 August, 1870.*THE PRINCIPAL UNDER SECRETARY TO THE SECRETARY TO HER MAJESTY'S EMIGRATION COMMISSIONERS, WESTMINSTER.Colonial Secretary's Office,
Sydney, 17 May, 1870.

SIR,

A balance of about £11,000 voted for Immigration purposes remaining at the disposal of this Government, which it is desired to apply, without loss of time, to the introduction of a supply of suitable female domestic servants of healthy constitution and good character, I am directed by the Colonial Secretary to request that you will make known to Her Majesty's Emigration Commissioners that this Government is desirous of availing itself of their valuable services in the accomplishment of the object in view.

2. The Commissioners are invited to have the goodness to cause the necessary arrangements to be made for obtaining and forwarding such a number of single females, of the description desired, as the funds at present at disposal will provide for. A balance of £1,700 remains in the hands of the Commissioners for immediate purposes. A letter of credit for £3,000 will be forwarded by the next mail; others will follow.

3. The particular class of servants to be sent out is that of persons who have been accustomed to domestic service, of ages varying from 20 to 35 years, and who would be subject to the approval of the Commissioners.

4. It is considered desirable, for the promotion of discipline and good order on board the ships during the voyage, that passages should be allowed, to the usual extent, to married couples unaccompanied by very young children.

5. The Surgeon-Superintendent, as well as the Matron of each ship, should be appointed from the staff of officers employed by the Commissioners; and they will be paid, as heretofore, in accordance with their previous experience in the management of emigrants during a long voyage.

6. It would be advisable to send about two hundred single women in each ship, and to allow a period of not less than two months to elapse between the sailing of the ships by which the emigrants proceed.

7. On their arrival in Sydney, the immigrants will be received at the Immigration Dépôt, whence they will be permitted to hire as house servants to eligible employers; and the wages which they may expect to receive range from £16 to £20 per annum.

8. The urgent desire shown to relieve England of her redundant population by emigration will no doubt induce the Societies established in London to assist emigration cordially to contribute towards the payment of passages of the emigrants whom we desire to obtain; and it is hoped that the Commissioners will urgently apply to such Societies for contributions for this purpose.

9. It should be expressly borne in mind by the emigrants that food and house accommodation are provided in addition to money wages—that railways extending to Bathurst, Goulburn, and Musclebrook afford easy means of reaching situations in which they may be engaged—that they may rely upon being furnished with information upon every subject of interest—and that every proper attention will be paid to them, so as to facilitate their speedy employment and comfortable settlement.

10. In conclusion, I am desired to say that Captain Mayne, the Government Agent of this Colony in London, has been requested to place at the disposal of the Commissioners any information in his possession, and to render any assistance of which they may desire to avail themselves, so as to secure to the Colony a supply of industrious female domestic servants of good character.

I have, &c.,
HENRY HALLORAN.

THE COLONIAL SECRETARY to THE COLONIAL AGENT, LONDON.

Colonial Secretary's Office,
Sydney, 17 May, 1870.

SIR,

17 May, 1870.

The accompanying copy of a letter to Her Majesty's Emigration Commissioners will explain to you that it is the intention of this Government to apply, through their instrumentality, the balance of Votes for Immigration, amounting to about £11,000, to the introduction of such number of single female domestic servants as it may be equal to.

2. You will also observe that I have informed the Commissioners that you will render any information or assistance that they may desire in the selection of such suitable emigrants as are therein referred to; and I need hardly say that I feel a full assurance of such co-operation being cordially afforded. Few can know better than yourself, from your long colonial experience, the class of servants that would be most prized by respectable employers in this Colony, or the certainty which presents itself to such servants of good employment, with the comfortable prospect of being able to make provision for themselves in after days.

3. I trust that this knowledge will be of avail in securing for this Colony such emigrants as will justify the expenditure readily made for the purpose, and lead to the further voting of funds for renewed emigration on a scale equal to the demands of the Colony.

I have, &c.,
CHARLES COWPER.

THE PRINCIPAL UNDER SECRETARY to THE SECRETARY to HER MAJESTY'S LAND AND EMIGRATION COMMISSIONERS, WESTMINSTER.

Colonial Secretary's Office,
Sydney, 15 June, 1870.

SIR,

Referring to my letter of the 17th ultimo, I am now directed by the Colonial Secretary to transmit herewith a letter of credit upon the Bank of New South Wales, London, for the sum of £3,000 in favor of Her Majesty's Land and Emigration Commissioners.

I have, &c.,

THE PRINCIPAL UNDER SECRETARY to THE SECRETARY to HER MAJESTY'S LAND AND EMIGRATION COMMISSIONERS, WESTMINSTER.

Sydney, 9 August, 1870.

SIR,

£1,500.

Referring to my letter of the 15th June last, I am now directed by the Colonial Secretary to transmit herewith a letter of credit on the Bank of New South Wales, London, for a further sum of fifteen hundred pounds, in favour of Her Majesty's Land and Emigration Commissioners, for the purpose of assisting the introduction of female immigrants to this Colony.

2. With this sum, I am to add, and with the funds already in their hands, it is expected that the Commissioners will be able to charter two vessels for the service in question.

I have, &c.,
HENRY HALLORAN.

EMIGRATION.

(REPORT FROM SIR CLINTON MURDOCH, K.C.M.G., TO SIR FREDERIC ROGERS, BART., K.C.M.G.)

Presented to both Houses of Parliament, by Command.

COPY OF REPORT FROM SIR CLINTON MURDOCH, K.C.M.G., TO SIR FREDERIC ROGERS, BART., K.C.M.G.

Emigration Board,
5 August, 1870.

SIR,

I have to acknowledge your letter of the 29th ultimo, enclosing despatches from the Governors of the Cape of Good Hope, Queensland, and New South Wales on the subject of Emigration; and, in obedience to the direction contained in your letter, I have the honor to submit the following Report for the consideration of the Earl of Kimberley.

2. On the 14th February, 1870, in consequence of the discussions at that time in progress on the subject of emigration as a relief to destitution, Earl Granville addressed a circular despatch to the Governors of the Colonies to which emigrants are in the habit of proceeding, requesting them to report for what number of emigrants, and of what description, each Colony offered an opening, the probable wages they would earn, the prospects for married men with families, and whether any pecuniary assistance would be granted, either towards passages or towards forwarding the people to places where they could get work. The despatches enclosed in your letter are answers to these inquiries.

3. The answer from the Cape of Good Hope is conclusive. The Governor says, there is no steady demand for European labour in the Colony; that the farmers prefer native labour; and that some years ago very great inconvenience was caused by the presence of the labourers who had been introduced for the construction of the railway and other works, and who were left in a state of destitution. There is clearly no opening for emigrants from the United Kingdom in the Cape.

4. The Governor of Queensland says, that for some years past the immigration into that Colony has, in his opinion, been rather in excess of the demand for labour; that unless the arrival of immigrants be accompanied by the arrival of capitalists ready to employ them, disappointment will follow; that the modern system of enclosing pastoral lands has reduced the demand for shepherds, and that the one class much in demand are female domestic servants. The only way in which the Colony could be made available for immigrants from the United Kingdom is, he thinks, either by a loan for public works, to be raised by the Colony with the guarantee of the Home Treasury, or by an advance from the Home Government, or an association of the expenses of settling immigrants on land. It is superfluous to observe that, so far as the Imperial Treasury is concerned, neither of these expedients is admissible.

5. In a subsequent despatch the Governor transmitted a Report from the Immigration Agent of the Colony, who recapitulates the facilities offered by the Immigration Act to immigrants able to pay, either themselves or through their friends, a portion of their passage, and willing to enter into indentures to pay the balance after one or two years. The agent calculates that the Colony could absorb, in all, 6,000 immigrants a year; and assumes that 4,000 of these would pay the whole or a considerable part of their passage-money, leaving not more than 2,000 as immigrants under indenture—to be reduced as the full-paying passengers increase. Married couples with young children would, he says, find a difficulty in obtaining employment. The classes most in demand are farmers, farm-labourers, and female domestic servants. Wages for mechanics are about £40 a year; for labourers and shepherds, about £25; for married couples, willing to make themselves useful, £35 to £40; for female servants, according to qualification, from £13 to £26, in all cases with board and lodging. Depot accommodation is, he says, provided for immigrants on their first arrival, and assistance is given them to reach the places where their labour is in demand, but no assistance would be given towards the expense of passage.

6. The Governor of New South Wales transmits the substance of a series of Reports which he had obtained from residents in the several districts of the Colony, generally Members of the Legislature, or Magistrates. The opinions of these gentlemen vary very much, many of them being of opinion that at the present rate of wages no additional labourers could find employment; others considering that there is still a large opening for immigrants of the labouring class. Thus, on the one hand, Mr. Bawden, M.L.A. for the river Clarence district, says that, in that district, at present wages, the supply of labour is equal to the demand; although if wages were lower 500 more men could find employment. Mr. Merewether, Superintendent of the Australian Agricultural Company, says that the rules of the Trades Unions affect the amount of employment, but that a limited number of artisans might find places. The Director of the Botanical Gardens, Sydney, says the supply of labour is about equal to the demand. Mr. Osborne, the Member for the Illawarra district, says the number of labourers at present in the district is sufficient for its wants. In the New England district there is, it is said, no difficulty in obtaining labour at present wages, but there would be an opening for more labourers if wages were reduced. In the Mudgee district, Mr. Cox, M.L.C., says, first-rate farm labourers can find employment, but there is no demand for any others. Mr. Smith, J.P., residing in Carcoar, says, that at £30 a year agricultural labourers would be engaged with an increasing demand in proportion proportion to the reduction of wages. Mr. Rossi, J.P., in the Goulburn district, says that in consequence of the high rate of wages cultivation is diminishing. And Mr. Thompson, J.P., of the Walla Walla district, says that the farmers are ruined by over-production—that agricultural labourers could not find employment in that district, the labour market being fully supplied, and that the system of fencing runs has extinguished the demand for shepherds.

7. On the other hand, the Colonial Secretary says there is a strong and almost universal desire for a renewal of immigration, and that almost any number of a good description of immigrants could find employment if they did not arrive too rapidly. Mr. Lord, M.L.A. for Balranald, Bogan, and Gwydir, says that at least 10,000 immigrants could be absorbed in those districts within twelve months, which would cause a reduction in wages. Mr. Nowlan, M.L.A. for the Maitland district, is of opinion that that district could absorb about 150 labourers annually. Mr. Merewether, already quoted, thinks from 300 to 500 coal-miners and a few mechanics could every year find employment at Newcastle. The Mayor of Sydney says employment might be found for a large number of "good industrious labourers" (the italics are his). As to the county of Cumberland, Mr. Hassall says that female servants are much wanted, and a moderate number of country servants would find employment; probably one ship every two months would meet the demand. Mr. Bell, M.L.A. for the Upper Hunter district, thinks employment could be found for 100 or 200 immigrant labourers and 50 to 100 shepherds, if sent up in batches of 20 to 30 at a time. In the Bathurst district, Mr. Joseph West, described as a large agriculturist, says that 1,000 agricultural labourers would find employment; Dr. Machattie says 500; Mr. McIntosh, 300 to 400; and Mr. Oakes, 300. Lastly,—Mr. Fallon, M.L.A. for Albury, says there is a considerable demand in that district for skilled vine-dressers, and 1,000 persons could find employment there.

8. But before Lord Granville's despatch arrived in New South Wales the question of immigration had attracted the notice of the Legislature, and a Committee of the House of Assembly had been appointed to inquire into it. The Committee examined nine witnesses, all of them belonging to the class of employers of labour, and adopted a Report to the effect that there was a prevailing desire for the revival of immigration; that an immigration agent to act as Agent-General for the Colony ought to be appointed in this country; that the Colony should contribute a portion of the passage-money; and that inducements in the shape of land orders should be offered to "the yeomanry of the Mother-country." The Committee further prepared and submitted to the House a draft of the necessary Bill to carry out these views.

9. These proceedings were at once met by a strong opposition on the part of the labouring class. On the 20th April—eight days after the date of the Committee's Report—a meeting was held at Wallsend, at which resolutions were passed, denouncing the proposed Bill, and declaring that the introduction of additional labourers was uncalled for by the circumstances of the Colony, would lower the condition of the labouring class without any corresponding extension of Colonial industries, and could only be attended with disastrous consequences. Deputations were also appointed to wait on the Colonial Secretary to represent to him the large number of persons in distress and unable to obtain employment, said to be 2,000 in Sydney alone.

10. The real state of affairs in New South Wales is obvious enough. Wages are at present so high (vide Appendix) that the amount of capital in the Colony available for the purchase of labour is not more than sufficient to pay the existing labourers. The introduction of fresh labourers would, for a time at least, reduce the rate of wages, and this the labouring classes are determined to resist. On the other hand, employers are cramped in their operations by the want of additional hands, and unless the want can be supplied the progress of the Colony will be arrested. A determined struggle is therefore continually going on between employers and employed—the one desiring to apply a portion of the public revenue to the introduction of immigrants, the other determined to prevent it. Hitherto the Trades Unions organization and the numerical preponderance of the labouring class at the poll have enabled them to carry the day. How long this will be the case it is impossible to foresee. Probably, as the wealth of the Colony increases and more men rise from the condition of labourers to be employers of labour, the result may be reversed. But it is clear that a defeat of the labouring class, whenever it happens, would be but temporary, as the immigrants which that defeat introduced would at once recruit its ranks. The result must be a succession of alternate successes and defeats on the part of each, which unfortunately there is no mediating authority to control or compose. In the present instance the labouring class have been so far successful that the Bill prepared by the Committee was not proceeded with during the past session.

11. Besides the despatches from the Colonies above enumerated, a despatch has been recently received from South Australia, which, though not written in answer to Lord Granville's circular, contains in fact a reply to it. In this despatch the Governor says, that it is not proposed at present to adopt any measure to encourage immigration into that Colony, there being a number of persons out of employ there, and the chief industries being depressed by a succession of bad seasons. Under these circumstances the Government and Parliament have thought it unwise to add artificially to the labouring class.

12. From the other Australian Colonies and New Zealand no answers have been received; but it may be taken for granted, that neither Western Australia nor Tasmania are in a position to give any assistance towards immigration. Nor is there reason to expect any active assistance at present from New Zealand. The Colony of Victoria, through its agent, Mr. Verdon, continues to give free passages to female domestic servants, and passages on moderate payments to a certain number of agricultural labourers, mechanics, and artisans. It also affords facilities to persons in the Colony to introduce their friends and relations by means of passage warrants.

13. In a Report, dated 15th June, I have stated the inquiries I made personally on the subject on my recent visit to Canada. It will make this Report more complete, and may be convenient to recapitulate here very briefly the result of those inquiries.

14. Upper Canada, after an apathy of several years, has at last awakened to the importance of encouraging immigration. It has accordingly appointed agents for that purpose in the three divisions of the United Kingdom and on the Continent, and has established a scheme for ascertaining the number and description of labourers required in each district, and for forwarding emigrants accordingly from Quebec, Montreal, and Toronto. It is calculated that Upper Canada could absorb from 30,000 to 40,000 immigrants of a good description annually; but I was informed by the Immigration Agent at Toronto that the demand for the present year had, in his opinion, been injuriously affected by the indifferent description of some of the immigrants of 1869—a fact which it is very important to bear in mind. There is nothing more certain than that the introduction into Canada of men of bad character, or confirmed idle or dissolute habits, would be strongly resented, and would probably lead to a resistance to immigration generally. It is calculated that well-conducted industrious immigrants can earn in Canada, on an average, one dollar a day throughout the year, provided they are willing in the winter to turn their hands to such work as the climate will allow. New immigrants, unless possessed of capital, are not calculated for settlement on wild land, the clearing of which requires special skill and knowledge.

15. In Lower Canada the demand for immigrants is comparatively small,—the French Canadian population being generally sufficient for the cultivation of their own lands. The only district in which emigrants from the United Kingdom would be likely to find employment is the eastern townships, and even there not to any great extent.

16. In Nova Scotia and New Brunswick there is ordinarily but little opening for immigrant labour. The construction, however, of the intercolonial railway will create a demand for labourers during the next year or two, though to what extent I am at present unable to say.

I have, &c.,

T. W. C. MURDOCH.

THE AUDITOR GENERAL TO THE UNDER SECRETARY FOR FINANCE AND TRADE.

Audit Office, Sydney,
22 October, 1869.

SIR,

With reference to my letter of 28th ultimo, forwarding an Account Current showing the state of the Loans Account at 31st October, 1868, I have the honor to inform you that in the preparation of that account information was obtained in regard to the expenditure under Loans Appropriation Acts and the Balances unexpended which I have put into the form of a Return, showing—

1. The specific Appropriations under each Loan Act from the commencement in 1854.
2. The net expenditure under each Vote.
3. Expenditure out of special credits to those Votes.
4. The Balances written off, or proposed to be written off; and
5. The Balances retained for issue at 31st December, 1868.

As I consider this Return would form a valuable permanent record, I propose, with the concurrence of the Honorable the Colonial Treasurer, to have it printed, with the view to its being laid before Parliament.

I have, &c.,
CHRIS. ROLLESTON.

MINUTE PAPER.

Treasury, New South Wales,
25 October, 1869.

As the Honorable the Treasurer has already laid a statement before the Assembly, showing the position of the Loans Account at the 30th September last, it would I am afraid only tend to confuse matters were the statements of the Auditor General, which are only brought up to the 31st December, 1868, also submitted, the more especially as in one of those statements he proposes to show the balances written off or proposed to be written off, which might be found not to agree with the appropriations proposed in the Treasurer's Statements to be dealt with in a similar manner.

I would therefore suggest that the Auditor General be requested either to bring his statements up to the 30th September of the present year, or, which I think would be the preferable course, delay submitting any further Loans' Accounts to the Assembly until the close of the year, up to which date the additional information, which he considers desirable as a permanent record, might be brought. Before that time the authority of the Governor in Council will be obtained for writing off the appropriations not required, as shown in the statement with the Ways and Means papers of the present Session of Parliament.

GEORGE LAYTON,
Accountant.

Auditor General.—S.S., 27/10/69.

I think the best course will be to extend the period of the proposed account to 31st December 1869.—C.R., 28/10/69.

Approved, and inform Auditor General.—S.S., 29/10/69.

Auditor General.—H.L., 29/10/69.

I am desired by the Colonial Treasurer to request that you will urge upon Mr. Larnach's attention the necessity for prompt realization of the issue of £407,100, should the state of the money market continue in as favourable a position as it was at the date of last advices.

I have, &c.,

(S. 294.)

The Treasury, New South Wales,
6 October, 1870.

SIR,

I have the honor to hand you herewith, for transmission to your Managing Director in London, Debentures of this Government, of the nominal value of £407,100 of the following numbers and denominations, viz. :—

Issued under Act 34 Vict. No. 2 :—

Series L 3, of £100 each—
Nos. 8,383 to 9,953 = 1,571	£157,100
Series M 3, of £500 each—
Nos. 1,271 to 1,570 = 300	150,000
Series N 3, of £1,000 each—
Nos. 353 to 452 = 100	100,000
	£407,100

The Debentures will be delivered to you by the Accountant to this office, Mr. George Layton, to whom you will have the goodness to give an acknowledgment of receipt of same.

A Letter of Instructions, with respect to the disposal of the securities, will be addressed to you in time for the out-going mail, by which opportunity the Debentures must be transmitted.

I have, &c.,
HENRY LANE.

THE UNDER SECRETARY FOR FINANCE AND TRADE to THE GENERAL MANAGER, BANK OF NEW SOUTH WALES.

The Treasury, New South Wales,
6 October, 1870.

SIR,

Referring to my letter, S. 294, of this date, handing you Debentures to the nominal value of £407,100, for transmission to England by the out-going mail of this month, I now do myself the honor, by direction of the Honorable the Treasurer, to inform you that these Debentures are issued in accordance with an Act of Parliament (34 Victoria, No. 2) passed this Session to enable the Government to raise a loan for public works and other purposes.

I am also directed to hand you two copies of that Act, duly verified and sealed, for the purpose of being forwarded with these securities to your Managing Director in London.

It will be observed that these Debentures are dated 1st October, 1870, and that interest commences from that date only. The first coupon therefore is a quarterly one, for the sum of £1 5s., which, if the Debentures are not sold during the present year, will require to be cut off and returned to this Department.

In forwarding this issue to London, Mr. Samuel desires me to request that you will have the goodness to impress upon Mr. Larnach the necessity for an early negotiation of this Loan, many of the works for which the money is required being now in progress, and others about to be commenced. As the payments already made in anticipation of this Loan, and which amount to nearly £80,000, have been temporarily made from other Loans, it is desirable to have the amount re-couped at as early a date as possible.

Another reason why it is desirable that this Loan should be negotiated at once, is, that £100,000 of the amount authorized to be raised is to be applied towards paying off Railway Debentures, issued under 18 Victoria No. 40, falling due 1st January, 1871, to that extent.

Notwithstanding there is an urgent necessity, as above shown, for placing these Debentures at once upon the London market, the Treasurer does not press for their sale should the state of that market be unfavourable at the time of their arrival, or should the price likely to be realized entail a heavy loss to the Colony. In the absence of information regarding the present state of the war and the future prospects of the money market, and having pointed out the necessities of the Government with respect to this Loan, Mr. Samuel feels that he cannot do otherwise than leave the matter entirely in the hands of Mr. Larnach, in whose ability and judgment he has the greatest confidence.

In conclusion, I am desired to state that for obvious reasons Mr. Samuel considers it undesirable to name a minimum price for this issue, but he hopes that your London Director will succeed in negotiating it at a rate not much below par. In any circumstances he feels confident Mr. Larnach will do his best for the interests of the Colony.

I have, &c.,
HENRY LANE.

THE UNDER SECRETARY FOR FINANCE AND TRADE to THE GENERAL MANAGER, BANK OF NEW SOUTH WALES.

The Treasury, New South Wales,
6 October, 1870.

SIR,

Adverting to my letter of the 14th June last (with which were handed to you £450,000 Debentures for transmission to London), in which instructions were given to negotiate only such an amount as would realize a net sum of £322,709 12s. 6d., and to my subsequent letter of the 7th ultimo, wherein it was stated that in consequence of the Government having since decided upon carrying out certain works of defence it would be necessary to raise a further sum of £40,727 10s. 7d., or, in all, £363,437 3s. 1d., on these securities,—

I now do myself the honor to request that you will inform your London Director that it is the express desire of the Honorable the Treasurer that in the event of these Debentures still remaining unsold when your instructions in this matter reach England, no larger amount should be raised thereon than the last-mentioned sum, viz., £363,437 3s. 1d.

Should Mr. Larnach however have, for the purpose of effecting an advantageous sale, disposed of the whole of this issue, he should be requested to short-raise on the Debentures placed in your hands this day an amount equal to that over-raised on the issue of £450,000.

I have, &c.,
HENRY LANE.

No. 1.

THE UNDER SECRETARY FOR FINANCE AND TRADE TO THE GENERAL MANAGER OF THE BANK OF NEW SOUTH WALES, SYDNEY.

The Treasury, New South Wales,
24 February, 1870.

SIR,

It would appear from representations which have been made to the Colonial Treasurer, as also from complaints made by holders concerned, that the Committee of the London Stock Exchange refuse, under existing regulations, to quote in their official list, any Loan issued by this Colony, which has been in part or wholly negotiated here, and which had not therefore been publicly negotiated in London, by tender, contract, or otherwise.

Mr. Samuel conceives that the only reason the Committee have in refusing to quote such debentures in their list is that, if the course indicated were not insisted upon, they would be unable to keep themselves informed of the full extent of the liabilities of Governments desiring to have their securities recognized and dealt with on the Stock Exchange.

To meet this difficulty with respect to the bonds of this Colony, a considerable portion of which were negotiated here, and have been and are being from time to time forwarded to London, under the impression that holders can readily dispose of them in that market, the Committee of the Stock Exchange will, Mr. Samuel has been led to believe, consent to quote the whole of the securities of this Government in their list, provided they be furnished with a duly certified Statement of the present Debt of the Colony, together with copies of the several Acts of Parliament under which the respective Loans have been issued.

I am accordingly desired to hand you, for transmission to your Managing Director in London by the outgoing mail of this month, two copies of the "Statement of the particulars of the Public Debt of the Colony of New South Wales, on 31st December, 1869" (as submitted to Parliament on the 17th instant), duly signed and sealed by the Colonial Treasurer (Mr. Samuel), and certified as correct by the Auditor General; together with copies in duplicate of the different Acts authorizing the several Loans detailed in the Statement, verified by His Excellency the Governor.

Mr. Samuel trusts that the documents will prove sufficient to induce the Committee of the Stock Exchange to remedy the inconvenience and difficulty which are felt in regard to the debentures of our Colony not, in the first instance, offered for sale in the London market; and I have been instructed, in that hope, to request that you will be good enough to move Mr. Larnach to take such steps as may be necessary to the placing of the documents named officially before the Committee.

I am to add, further, that the Treasurer is informed that debentures sold in England require the indorsement or stamp of the Financial Agents. By charging a small fee, this might be carried out with respect to all debentures negotiated in this Colony, but transmitted privately to London, by means of a notice to holders, in the newspapers. Of course this would be in the event of the Stock Exchange assenting to the foregoing proposition.

I am, in conclusion, to state that Mr. Samuel would be glad to be favoured with Mr. Larnach's report upon the subject, with the least possible delay.

I have, &c.,
HENRY LANE.

NOTE.—The Statement herein referred to is a copy of that printed with Estimates of Ways and Means for year 1870, (vide pages 26 and 27.)

No. 2.

THE MANAGING DIRECTOR, BANK OF NEW SOUTH WALES, LONDON, to THE SECRETARY, STOCK EXCHANGE.

Bank of New South Wales,
London, 30 April, 1870.

SIR,

It has been represented to me by the Government of New South Wales, that a portion of the debentures of that Colony are not admitted to an official quotation in the London Stock Exchange lists, and that dealings in those debentures are not recognized by your Committee, thereby rendering them very unsaleable in this market, and causing great inconvenience and loss to the holders.

I am anxious to remove, if possible, any anomaly affecting the position of those debentures with your Committee, and to obtain a general quotation and recognition of all dealings in them upon this market. I would therefore request of you to bring my application before your Committee at the first possible opportunity, and to ask of them to give it their favourable consideration.

That your Committee may be informed of the total indebtedness of the Colony, I enclose for their satisfaction a Statement forwarded to me by the Government, of the Public Debt at the 31st December last, as submitted to the Colonial Parliament on the 17th February, duly signed and sealed by the Honorable the Treasurer, and certified as correct by the Auditor General, with the Acts of the Colonial Legislature authorising the Loans, and a certificate from His Excellency Lord Belmore, Governor and Commander-in-Chief of the Colony, that these are the Acts referred to in the Statement.

I hope the Statement, with the information your Committee possess, will be sufficient to enable them to accede to my application; but any further information at my command that will be required I will be happy to supply.

No difficulty need be entertained as to the non-verification of the debentures, as should your Committee require it, I am prepared on behalf of this Bank, as the Financial Agents of the Government in the Colony and in this country, to place upon them the stamp of the Bank, as appended hereto, denoting such agency.

Awaiting the favour of your early communication,—

I am, &c.,
D. LARNACH,
Managing Director.

No. 3.

THE SECRETARY, STOCK EXCHANGE, to THE MANAGING DIRECTOR, BANK OF NEW SOUTH WALES, LONDON.

London Stock Exchange,
10 May, 1870.

DEAR SIR,

I have looked over your letter of the 30th April and accompanying documents, relative to the Public Debt of the Colony of New South Wales, but you will, I am sure, pardon me for saying that I do not think the application specific enough. I would suggest that, after ascertaining what are already quoted in our list (and I enclose a copy for this purpose), you should then detail precisely the further issues you wish inserted therein. Of course you will understand that, after all, I guarantee nothing; but I simply wish to place the matter clearly before the Stock Exchange Committee.

Awaiting your reply,
M. SLAUGHTER,
Secretary.

No. 4.

THE MANAGING DIRECTOR, BANK OF NEW SOUTH WALES, LONDON, to THE SECRETARY, STOCK EXCHANGE.

Bank of New South Wales,
London, E.C., 11 May, 1870.

SIR,

I have to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of yesterday's date, wherein you inform me that you had looked over my letter of the 30th ultimo, relative to the Public Debt of the Colony of New South Wales, but that you do not think my application for an official quotation specific enough, and suggesting that, after ascertaining what debentures are already quoted in your list (a copy of which you did me the favour to enclose), I should then detail precisely the further issues I wish inserted therein.

On

On examining the Statement of the Public Debt of the Colony, I find I cannot detail precisely, but can only in a general way mention the issues of the New South Wales Government Debentures not already inserted in your list; and my desire is more to obtain from your Committee a general quotation for those in your list than that each issue should be separately and specially inserted therein, which in my opinion would tend to much confusion and give unnecessary trouble.

I find there are already four different quotations in your list. The first is for debentures due from 1871 to 6, the second for those due from 1888 to 96, and the third and fourth each represent separate Loans. The amounts stated in the first and fourth agree with the statement of indebtedness; the third states the amount as £850,000, but £300,000 has been drawn and paid off, which reduces it to £550,000, and with this exception no alteration is necessary in any of these; but the second gives the amount as £3,671,800, which is £2,297,200 under that in the Statement, which also shows that £303,700 falls due in 1897-9 and £240,830 interminables, or payable only at the option of the Government in or after 1882. It appears therefore that the indebtedness of the Colony is £2,841,730 in excess of the amount quoted in your list. Of this sum there is not less than from £1,200,000 to £1,300,000 held in the Colony at the present time, but as changes in the place of payment are being made from time to time, from Sydney to London and vice versa, I would commend to your attention the desirability of your Committee granting a quotation for the full amount of the debentures as shown in the Statement of indebtedness (which I again enclose to you), which will obviate any difficulty in dealings upon a transference.

I would submit for consideration that, in making the alteration to accord with the before-mentioned amounts, that of the second quotation in your list should be augmented by the sum I desire to be included falling due between 1888 to 96 and 1897 and 9, and the time extended from 1888 to 96 to 1888 to 97, and that a new quotation should be granted for the interminables, or those payable at the option of the Government in 1882 or afterwards, which would embrace the whole, as shown in the vidimus of the various Loans, which I annex herewith.

I trust that from the full information now supplied, and verified by the several documents placed in your possession, that you will be able clearly to place the matter before the Committee, and that you will succeed in inducing them to comply with my request, to which, I quite understand you are in no way committed, or in asking for this further information that you in any way guarantee it.

Again urging this matter upon you, and waiting your early reply,—

I am, &c.,

THE SECRETARY, BANK OF NEW SOUTH WALES, SYDNEY, to THE UNDER SECRETARY FOR FINANCE AND TRADE.

Bank of New South Wales,
Sydney, 7 September, 1870.

SIR,

The following is an extract from our London letter of 15th July last, viz.:—"I have not been able to make any progress with the Committee of the Stock Exchange for the quotations in their list of your Government Debentures—they have been too much occupied with the quotations for the new Foreign Loans. I enclose copy of the letter from the Secretary, and shall be glad if you can obtain from the Treasury a statement of how and when the various Loans have been placed upon the market, both here and with you, which, as the holidays are at hand, may reach us in time to place before the Committee ere they give a decision."

On third page is copy of the letter referred to.

I have, &c.,
CHAS. M. PALMER,
Assistant Secretary.

[Enclosure in No. 5.]

The Secretary of the London Stock Exchange to The Managing Director of the Bank of New South Wales, London.

London Stock Exchange,
Railways Department, 7 June, 1870.

Dear Sir,

On Thursday last the Stock Exchange Committee gave a good deal of attention to your letters of 30th April and 11th May. The result of the discussion was in effect that it seemed unnecessary to quote the £240,830 interminable debentures, that the third line in our list should be reduced to £550,000, and that you should be asked to furnish me with certain particulars respecting the difference between the £6,172,700, given in your vidimus, and the sum of £3,671,000, already officially quoted. Could you therefore exhibit a short statement showing the Acts, &c., under which the excess was authorized, the due dates and redemption, features (if any) attached to the bonds in question, and the circumstances (viz., time and place, whether by public tender or otherwise) under which they were originally disposed of? I shall be glad to receive your reply as soon as convenient,—

And am, &c.,

M. SLAUGHTER,
Secretary.

No. 6.

THE UNDER SECRETARY FOR FINANCE AND TRADE TO THE GENERAL MANAGER, BANK OF NEW SOUTH
WALES, SYDNEY.The Treasury, New South Wales,
7 September, 1870.

SIR,

I do myself the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of this date, giving an extract from your London letter of the 15th July last, relative to the negotiations between your Managing Director in London and the Committee of the Stock Exchange, for having all the outstanding debentures of this Colony quoted in the official list of that institution.

In reply, I am directed to inform you, that the information required by the Committee of the Stock Exchange cannot be prepared in time for transmission by this mail, but that it will be made up and handed to you before the departure of the next.

I am however desired by the Treasurer to state, that he did not anticipate any difficulty in obtaining the quotations sought, after the Committee had been furnished with the several documents enclosed in my letter of the 24th February last, which were not only certified to by the Auditor General, but signed and sealed by His Excellency the Earl of Belmore, Governor of the Colony.

I have &c.,

HENRY LANE.

No. 7.

THE UNDER SECRETARY FOR FINANCE AND TRADE TO THE GENERAL MANAGER, BANK OF NEW SOUTH
WALES, SYDNEY.The Treasury, New South Wales,
Sydney, 7 October, 1870.

SIR,

Referring to my letter of the 7th ultimo, in reply to yours of same date, in which you give an extract from your London letter of the 15th July last, and a copy of the enclosure therein referred to,—I now do myself the honor to hand you, for transmission to your London Director, by this mail, a Statement of such additional particulars of the Public Debt of the Colony as can readily be compiled from the records of the Treasury.

In the absence, however, of a copy of the particulars of the Debentures quoted in the official list of the Stock Exchange, forwarded to your London Director in Mr. Slaughter's letter of the 10th May last, it is found impossible to make up exactly the difference between the £6,172,700 given in Mr. Larnach's vidimus and the £3,671,000 already officially quoted.

Mr. Samuel, however, trusts that the enclosed document, together with those forwarded in my letter of the 24th February last, will satisfy the Stock Exchange Committee, and induce them to quote the Debentures of this Colony in their official list, in the manner indicated in Mr. Larnach's letter of the 11th May, to their Secretary.

I am to add, that the vidimus of the various Loans, as prepared by Mr. Larnach, and enclosed in his letter to Mr. Slaughter, meets with the entire approval of the Treasurer.

I have, &c.,

HENRY LANE.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.
NEW SOUTH WALES.

PROPOSED RETRENCHMENT IN THE CIVIL SERVICE.

(PETITION—CERTAIN PERSONS EMPLOYED IN THE CIVIL SERVICE.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be Printed, 17 February, 1871.

To the Honorable the Legislative Assembly of New South Wales, in Parliament assembled.

The Petition of the undersigned persons employed in the Civil Service of the Colony,—

HUMBLY SHOWETH:—

1. That your Petitioners view with much anxiety the proposed scheme of percentage deductions from the salaries of your Petitioners, as shown by the Estimates submitted to your Honorable House.

2. That your Petitioners desire respectfully to represent to your Honorable House the great hardship to which the adoption of the said scheme would subject your Petitioners.

3. That the parliamentary and other inquiries which have been made upon the subject tend to show that generally the rates of remuneration at which the Civil Servants are paid are relatively less than those received by persons engaged in other avocations, and that therefore the proposed deductions cannot be regarded as supported upon the ground that the present rates are in excess of the value of services rendered; consequently, that any such deduction would be in effect a tax upon your Petitioners as one class of the community.

4. That your Petitioners are already subject to the burdens of existing taxation in the same proportion as the rest of the community, and recognize their liability so to contribute to any additional taxation that the exigencies of the Colony may require.

5. That there is nothing in the position of your Petitioners, as a class, which justifies their being called upon to bear any special deduction from their means; but, on the contrary, that they find themselves already placed at a great disadvantage, in respect of their incomes, as compared with persons occupying corresponding positions in the community.

6. That some of your Petitioners have abandoned promising prospects, or rejected lucrative positions, in order to accept appointments in the Public Service, and that others have chosen that Service for their pursuit, thus shutting themselves out from other avocations affording larger rewards to success; the inducement being the permanency of employment and certainty as to the rate of remuneration ever attaching to the Public Service under Her Majesty's Government.

7. That your Petitioners thus relying upon the certainty of their incomes, have made their arrangements accordingly; and any deduction, therefore, would embarrass them more seriously than would a corresponding loss embarrass those whose incomes are affected by the fluctuations of business.

8. That if the deduction from salaries be proposed on the ground of a temporary depression in the condition of the Colony, your Petitioners would represent that, by the very nature of their position, they are precluded from sharing in the advantage of increased prosperity; as it seems to them to be impossible, without abandoning the principles of the understood compact between the Crown and its servants, to adjust their incomes according to the prosperity or depression of the times.

9. That apart from the personal claims and interests of your Petitioners, it may be urged that the success of the public institutions of all countries is to a very material extent dependent upon the character, capacity, and tone of the public officers; and that the adoption of any measure calculated to make the Service of the Colony unattractive to men of superior qualifications could not but be prejudicial to the public interest.

10. That those of your Petitioners to whom the proposed deduction would be so discouraging as to induce them to seek employment elsewhere would, in most instances, do so at a great disadvantage, or perhaps be altogether debarred from obtaining such employment, by reason of their having to compete with men who have bestowed that time and energy upon their special pursuits which your Petitioners have exclusively devoted to the Public Service, and of their having to undertake duties dissimilar to those a knowledge of which they have already acquired.

11. That while it is not within the province of your Petitioners to question the necessity of economizing the expenditure of the Public Service, nor to suggest the mode by which this could be most fairly effected, they would respectfully urge that the scheme proposed is not calculated to effect the object in view with justice to your Petitioners or with advantage to the Public Service.

12. That your Petitioners would respectfully remind your Honorable House of the serious difficulties and evils which have resulted in the matter of the Superannuation Act, from the manner in which interests so large and complicated as those affecting the Public Service have been dealt with.

And most earnestly pray—

That your Honorable House will not assent to any scheme of Retrenchment in the Public Service without a full consideration of its equity in regard to the adjustment of remuneration for services performed, and of its probable effect upon the different classes of Civil Servants.

And your Petitioners, as in duty bound, will ever pray, &c.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.

NEW SOUTH WALES.

RETRENCHMENT IN THE PUBLIC SERVICE.

(PETITION—SIGNED BY WILLIAM BROOKES, AS CHAIRMAN OF A PUBLIC MEETING.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be Printed, 28 February, 1871.

To the Honorable the Legislative Assembly of New South Wales, in Parliament assembled.

The humble Petition of the Inhabitants of the City of Sydney and Suburbs, assembled in the Masonic Hall, on Monday, the twentieth day of February, one thousand eight hundred and seventy-one,—

RESPECTFULLY SHOWETH:—

That, in the opinion of this Meeting, the reduction made by the Government in the wages of mechanics and labourers at present employed in the Public Service of this Colony is unjust, inequitable, and impolitic.

That whilst the reductions will operate with unjust severity upon the employés and their families, the inevitable effect, on the other hand, on the price of labour in general will be most disastrous, and tend to lower both the character of workmen and the revenue of the Colony.

That having no faith in the proposed scheme as a sound and eligible measure of retrenchment, this meeting expresses its unqualified disapproval of the same.

That the foregoing resolutions be embodied in a Petition and presented to the Assembly, signed by the Chairman on behalf of this Meeting.

And therefore, your Petitioners, from the foregoing premises, most earnestly pray that your Honorable House will reject any measure which may tend to diminish the wages of labour lower than the rates previously given.

And your Petitioners, as in duty bound, will ever pray, &c.

WILLIAM BROOKES,
Chairman.

GOVERNMENT EMPLOYÉS.

(PETITION—CERTAIN INHABITANTS OF THE CITY OF NEWCASTLE AND SUBURBS.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be Printed, 25 April, 1871.

To the Honorable the Legislative Assembly of New South Wales, in Parliament assembled.

The Petition of the undersigned Inhabitants of the City of Newcastle and suburbs,—

HUMBLY SHOWETH:—

That your Petitioners have heard with alarm and regret of the reductions made by the Government in the wages and salaries of persons employed in the Public Service, and more especially of those mechanics and labourers engaged in the Public Works Department.

Your Petitioners whilst assured that these reductions will operate with undue severity on the said employés and their families, are equally certain of the inevitable and injurious effect that will be produced upon the wages of labour in general, whilst the disastrous policy thus initiated must have a tendency to lower the character as well as the revenue of the Colony.

For these and other reasons your Petitioners earnestly pray that your Honorable House will see fit not to give its Legislative sanction to the proceedings of the Government in this behalf.

And your Petitioners, as in duty bound, will ever pray.

EMPLOYÉS ON BOARD STEAM DREDGE "HUNTER."
(PETITION.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be Printed, 14 March, 1871.

To the Honorable the Legislative Assembly of the Colony of New South Wales, in Parliament assembled.

The humble Petition of the undersigned Employés on board Her Majesty's Steam Dredge "Hunter," stationed at Newcastle,—

HUMBLY SHOWETH:—

That your Petitioners compose the staff employed in the service of H.M. Steam Dredge "Hunter," stationed at Newcastle—being mate, blacksmith, carpenters, engine-stoker, engine-driver, hammerman, coxswain, seaman, and cook,—in all eleven.

Taylor; and, after a careful consideration of the evidence, submit the following recommendations:—

"First.—That the establishment of the Government Printing Office be abolished, and the office and plant leased for a fixed period (say seven years) to one or more contractors, and the work performed upon a schedule of prices, in accordance with the system adopted in London.

"Second.—That the system of appointing apprentices to the permanent staff without some proof that the young men so appointed are first-class compositors is unjust to the really efficient workman, and ought to be discontinued; vacancies on the permanent staff being filled up by the selection of the most efficient and useful hands in the trade.

"Third.—That with the view to economy, the compositors should be employed upon piece-work rather than on time.

"Fourth.—That the recent practice of keeping the type standing used in preparing the Electoral Rolls has not been shown to be economical, and ought to be discontinued.

"Fifth.—That the number of readers and overseers is larger than necessary, and might be reduced with advantage to the public.

"Sixth.—That the practice of keeping apprentices after they have served their time in the capacity of improvers should be discontinued."

5. I think some one has addressed a communication to you, on the part of the Parliament, requesting you to bring certain returns of the expense of your establishment for the last few years? Yes, the summons requiring my attendance here contained a direction to that effect.
6. Do you produce those returns? Yes; but I would wish to remark that the time allowed for the preparation of the return has been so short that I have not been able to have such a full one as I should consider satisfactory. It has been prepared in my office, and as I have not had time to check I am not able to vouch for it as I might otherwise have done. It may be correct or not.
7. The return has been made up from the Estimates, I presume? No; the Accountant of the Printing Office has made it up hurriedly from the Treasury Books.
8. How far do they date back? At the year 1856, and is brought down to the 30th June, 1870.
9. Do you hand in that return? I do. (Vide Appendix A 1.)
10. How many hands have you employed in your office at the present time? The total number employed there this day is 162 persons. (Vide Appendix A 2.)
11. That includes the total number of persons employed in all capacities? Yes, every one.
12. From yourself down to the youngest errand-boy? Yes.
13. Could you state to the Committee the plan upon which your office is divided into branches or departments,—into how many departments is the office divided, and what is the particular kind of work carried on by each department? The division into branches has been made mainly for our own convenience. These may be called—the Parliamentary, the Gazette, and Job Printing, the Bookbinding, Ruling, &c.; and there are special branches, such as are not usually found connected with ordinary printing offices, as the making of Stamps, the Railway Ticket Printing, Photo-lithography and Lithographic Printing, Stereotyping, and Publishing. Then we class the Accounts, the Records, and the Carpenter, as special.

T. Richards,
Esq.

21 Sept., 1870.

14. What do you employ a carpenter for? He is not exactly a carpenter—he is a printer's joiner.
15. Are those which you have mentioned the various departments known to you in your office? Yes, these are the departmental divisions we have made for the more convenient carrying on of business.
16. Many of these belong to the trade of printing proper? Yes.
17. And others do not? No.
18. And in order to secure a proper division of labour you have formed your establishment into these various departments? Precisely.
19. Is there an overseer to each of these departments, or one person specially placed in charge of it? In the composing branch there is an overseer in charge of the night-staff, a sub-overseer for the general Parliamentary work, a job-printing sub-overseer, and a sub-overseer in charge of Bills. In the book-binding branch there is a foreman and a sub-overseer. The press and machine room is in charge of a foreman, as also the stamp branch and the railway ticket printing. There are others in charge, such as the photo-lithographer and the stereotyper, but without the usual designation of overseer or sub-overseer.
20. The Gazette department,—is that under an overseer or a sub-overseer? No. The Gazette sub-overseer has now charge of the main composing room, including the Gazette.
21. There is no special overseer for it? No; but a compositor known in the trade as a clicker makes up the matter. His position however is not equal to that of a sub-overseer, either as regards authority or pay.
22. Then the bookbinding branch,—is there an overseer over that? Yes, there is an overseer and a sub-overseer to this branch.
23. This is a branch altogether distinct, I presume, from what is generally known as printing? Yes, quite distinct.
24. And has no connection with it in any way? No, scarcely any.
25. Then the stamp department,—is that a branch of the printing business? No, it is quite distinct from it; it is entirely different from ordinary letter-press printing.
26. And requires, I presume, to be under the special direction of some person well acquainted with it? Yes.
27. Then you have a railway ticket department,—is not that a branch of printing? No, it is a special kind of printing, done altogether in a different way from ordinary printing.
28. What is the difference? Different machinery altogether is employed.
29. In what way—what is the effect of this machinery? It would be very difficult to describe the effect of the machinery, unless you had it before you as I gave my description.
30. Then as to the photographic and lithographic printing? I have hardly organized this branch yet to my satisfaction, although I have had considerable trouble in bringing it to its present state; in a short time I expect to make it exceedingly useful.
31. To what do you apply it? Principally to the reduction of plans and illustrations. The illustrations in the book of Patents are being done in this way, and the plans connected with the Water Commission Inquiry were nearly all photo-lithographed.
32. Will you endeavour to describe it so as to give the Committee some idea of the object of this particular style of printing? It is a combination of the two processes of photography and lithography, and its effect is to save the trouble and cost of lithographic drafting in the reproduction of maps, plans, &c. One great advantage is, that no matter what may be the size of the plan, you can reduce it to the size you require. It is much more rapid than the ordinary process, and is in every way an advantage.
33. You can also multiply copies to any extent? Yes, to any extent.
34. The plan was introduced, I believe, from Victoria? Yes. We had information both from England and Victoria. The process was discovered simultaneously in Victoria and in England. Our operator, Mr. Sharkey, is a very clever hand at the work, and he has made several improvements in the process, by which he can far excel anything that has yet been seen here.
35. So that in this respect you consider that you stand first on the list? Yes; nothing that we know of has yet been done equal to our specimens, either in point of excellence or the rapidity with which they can be produced.
36. To what extent do you carry on the printer's joinery work? To the extent of one man's labour—one man only is employed.
37. I presume that the statement of these divisions in your establishment would give pretty clearly the different character of the various kinds of work you can carry on in your office? It would.
38. Thus you can execute all kinds of printing—letter-press printing? Yes, of every kind.
39. All kinds of bookbinding? Yes.
40. And photographing? Yes.
41. Or rather I should say photo-lithography? We do both photo-lithography and the ordinary lithographic printing.
42. And stereotyping? Yes.
43. Have you a foundry for the purpose? Yes.
44. You cast your own plates? Yes, we make our own plates, and now even some of our own type.
45. Then altogether yours is a very complete office? It is tending that way. It is not what I should call a complete office, but I am trying to make it one.
46. It is more complete than it was seven years ago? Yes.
47. Or even than it was three years ago? It is.
48. In fact you are now in such a position that you could get out any kind of work? At present the office is more adapted for rapid printing than for very fine work. However, the alterations we have lately made, with some others in contemplation, will enable us to get out any kind of work that may be required.
49. With regard to the number of persons employed in your establishment,—how many of the 162 are efficient compositors? We have altogether fifty compositors.
50. Just fifty? Exactly that number.
51. Are they what is termed on the establishment, or are they paid by the thousand? All but thirteen are paid either regular wages or fixed salaries. The thirteen are paid by the thousand.
52. What are the men who are on the establishment paid? They are not paid at a uniform rate.
53. Are some more efficient than others? Some of them are undoubtedly more efficient than others; but it is not that exactly which has determined their rate of pay.

54. How is that;—is not the different rate of wages determined by the different stages of competency of the workmen? No; the rates as they now stand have not been determined in that way.
55. Perhaps you will be good enough to explain how it is that some men have higher wages than others, and upon what principle it is that you give some men one rate of wages and some another? There are eight compositors in the office who get £200 a year each. All these are men who have been a long time in the establishment, and some of them are employed in superior capacities.
56. How are they paid—monthly? Yes. They hold their situations by appointment from the Governor and Executive Council.
57. In that case they are entitled to superannuate? They ought to be so entitled, but the Government have suspended the operation of the Act in their case, and consequently they do not come under it.
58. That accounts for eight out of the fifty. What are the others paid? There are eleven who are paid £180 a year, and eight who receive £150 a year.
59. Are these paid monthly? Yes.
60. And appointed by the Governor and Executive Council? Yes. Nearly all those at yearly salaries have been appointed by the Governor and Executive Council.
61. What are the rest paid? There are ten who receive 8s. per diem, and thirteen, as I have said, who are paid piece-work, at the rate of 1s. per thousand, and 1s. 3d. an hour when "on time."
62. Is that the rate current in other large establishments in the city? I believe it is slightly under the price paid by the Herald newspaper office.
63. You think that the proprietors of the Herald newspaper pay more than 1s. per thousand? Yes; I think about a halfpenny a thousand more; but I will not be sure about that. I do not speak from actual knowledge, but my impression is that they pay more.
64. Have you any apprentices? Yes. We have forty-three boys and four girls.
65. Are the boys all apprenticed to the trade of a compositor? No. The boys are distributed over the various branches of the establishment—some to the composing, some to the bookbinding, and one to the stereotyping; one is employed as a lithographic draftsman, one as an assistant photo-lithographer, one as an assistant photographer, and two learning lithographic printing; some in the publishing-room, and some in the machine-room;—in fact they are employed in all the various branches of the work.
66. How many are there apprenticed to the business of a compositor? I cannot tell you without going through the list of names. They are not grouped as "apprentices," but are scattered throughout the various branches. There are seven improvers in the composing-room.
67. I do not know what you mean by improvers;—what are they? They occupy a position between that of an apprentice and a journeyman. When a young man has finished his apprenticeship, he is continued as an improver until a vacancy occurs when he can be placed on the staff.
68. There are fifty compositors;—how many are employed as machinists and pressmen—in working the press and machines, and what are they paid? One is paid £200 a year.
69. Is that the highest rate? Except the overseer, it is.
70. What does the overseer receive? £275 a year. He is also storekeeper.
71. What are the others paid? There are three at £180 a year.
72. Are they appointed by the Governor and the Executive Council? Yes, most of those with salaries are so appointed.
73. What others? There are four others at £150 a year, and four at 8s. per diem; and there is also an engine-keeper at £150 a year.
74. What does the overseer of the bookbinding establishment receive? £300 a year.
75. And the sub-overseer? £230 a year.
76. Then the overseer of the photographic branch—what is he paid? £275 a year.
77. And in the stereotyping branch what are the wages paid? 10s. per diem.
78. Is there no pay higher than that in that branch? No. There are two others in this branch, one at 8s. per diem, and an apprentice at 4s. per diem.
79. What is paid to the printer's joiner? £180 a year.
80. Have you any persons employed in your establishment as "grass hands," I think they are called—men who are only taken on occasionally? I have one who has been taken on in that way. He is a bookbinder.
81. What I mean is, men who are taken on occasionally to meet an exigency of business—some sudden influx of work? The man I allude to was so taken on, but being an exceptionally good hand he has been continuously employed, so that he may be said to be regularly on the establishment now. We do take on occasional hands in the printing branch.
82. That is what I mean;—have you no compositors who are only occasionally employed? I have already stated that we have thirteen who are paid by the piece.
83. And these are only occasionally employed? Yes; they are principally taken on to meet the exigencies of the sessional work.
84. When there is anything to do they are taken on, and they are discharged when there is not? They are not discharged; they remain idle, or seek a job elsewhere.
85. And the 162 which you have given as the number of your employés includes these? It does.
86. Perhaps you will give the Committee a statement, to append to your evidence, of the distribution of the apprentices over the several departments, and how they are paid? I will do so. (Vide Appendix A 3.)
87. Mr. Samuel. The apprentices are paid by a graduated scale? They are.
88. The pay being increased according to the length of service? Yes.
89. Chairman. You have a publishing department attached to your office? Yes.
90. That, I presume, is in its character like any other publishing department, where papers are published and kept for sale? Somewhat the same.
91. Where an office is kept open to the public for the sale of Government and parliamentary papers—the Gazette, petitions, and so forth? Yes. The Publisher attends to the working of the branch, and the Sale Clerk to the sale of papers.
92. Is there much demand from the outside public for the papers issued from your office? There is a considerable demand for some of the papers. Some of the Acts of Parliament, for instance, are extensively purchased.
93. Persons come and apply to your office for them? Yes.
94. Could you give the Committee any idea of the demand for these papers by reference to the sales? The sales last year realized £1,073.

- T. Richards, Esq.
21 Sept., 1870.
95. Were these mostly sold in single copies to persons applying for them, or were they sold wholesale to sell again? Mostly in single copies.
96. Not wholesale? No. A few booksellers and country newspaper proprietors take copies, but the demands from these sources are not large.
97. Has your attention been turned to the disposal of the papers which you print at different times—as to what becomes of them? No, not particularly.
98. Take any Parliamentary paper—a Bill for instance—you print so many, I presume, for distribution amongst Members of Parliament and officials? Yes.
99. How many in addition to these do you print for sale and distribution amongst the public—take any Bill before Parliament now—the Customs Bill, or the Lunacy Bill—how many would you print of either of these in addition to the number you would require for Members of Parliament and for official circulation? Bills form rather an exceptional case, as they are printed in their various stages. Of a Bill for first or second reading we should print 350 copies.
100. You make no provision for sales? A small number only; usually about 80. Of some Bills we provide a larger number—from 100 to 150.
101. Are these generally sold? Not as a rule. It depends entirely upon the interest which attaches to the subject. If it is a Bill of special interest then we print a larger number in order to meet the demand. But I may add, with regard to Bills, that we keep the type standing, so that if an extraordinary demand should arise we can easily add to our stock.
102. But taking Acts of Parliament of average interest, how many do you print in addition to what you require for official purposes? It depends entirely upon the demand for them. For instance, we have printed no less than 13,000 copies of the present Land Laws. Of the Gold Fields Act a very large number has been sold. There is a constant demand for these two Acts. Then again, the Education Act has had a very large sale. Such Acts as these have to be reprinted from time to time for stock.
103. I do not allude to Bills of this kind, but to those of average interest; take the Bills I have mentioned—the Lunacy Bill for instance? Yes. That is a subject of great interest, and we should probably print a hundred copies extra in anticipation of the demand; then as the type is standing more could be printed if they were required.
104. And will you, in your opinion, find a ready sale for these hundred copies? Such a Bill I should imagine is of interest enough to insure that number being sold.
105. With regard to reports—take for instance that of Dr. Manning on the Lunatic Asylums—what demand do you find for them? Not a very great demand. I cannot say exactly how many were sold.
106. Take any other similar reports—reports on the Gold Fields? There is usually a fair demand for them, but not a very large one. The papers, whether Acts or reports, which sell best are those in which a numerous class of the community is interested.
107. Have you ever formed any opinion as to whether works of a more permanent character and of greater interest than those usually issued from your office, would not be more generally sold if they were printed and published by the Government at a cheap rate? I have no doubt but that works of a useful character would find a considerable sale.
108. You have not however had your attention drawn to the subject sufficiently to allow of your giving an opinion fully on the matter? I have not.
109. At the same time you think that the Government Printing Office might be used more beneficially to the public in many respects? That is rather a wide question, but I have no doubt that it might be so used, just as most other departments could be made more useful.
- *110. Do you think that the printing required for Parliamentary purposes and for the Government Departments could be done by contract more economically than by your department? I do not think it could.
111. You are aware that the Government printing is done in England under a system of contract? You can hardly call it a system of contract, because the main element of a contract—competition—is wanting. It is certainly not a contract in the sense of the term such as I understand it.
112. Still it is done by a private firm and not by a Government department? It is done by several firms. I think the Government printing is divided amongst five different printing firms.
113. How are the contracts for the Parliamentary printing taken? It is as I said hardly a contract, but rather a specific arrangement between the Parliament or the Government and the printers. I am not very well informed as to the details, but I am aware that Eyre & Spottiswoode, the Parliamentary Printers, have the work upon a specific arrangement, based upon a scale of prices.
114. Was there not a regular contract under which this firm had the Parliamentary printing for a given number of years? That was the case. When their contract terminated, another arrangement was made, based upon a revision of prices. I cannot exactly say what it was, but Eyre & Spottiswoode are looked upon as having to some extent a vested interest in the Parliamentary printing, and the Government do not disturb them in it, although there is probably an occasional readjustment of the scale of charges.
115. But there is nothing in the arrangement with Eyre & Spottiswoode that would preclude any other firm from offering to do the work at a less price than that now charged by them? Certainly there is nothing to preclude them from offering if they were invited to do so; but they could scarcely offer if they were not invited, and the invitation is not given.
116. Mr. Samuel.] With the present staff you have, could you not undertake an increased quantity of work? At the present time our permanent staff is fully occupied; our temporary staff is not so, though we have some few things slightly in arrear.
117. You said that in your opinion your office might be used more beneficially for the public than it now is—can you say in what way? By the publication of works of more general interest than those now issued from it. My idea is that the publication of an Australian Geography ought to be undertaken by the Government. It is a work very much wanted indeed, for people here really know little or nothing of the country in which they live, and have no means of acquiring information about it.
118. Not only that, but works of a similar character ought in your opinion to be undertaken by the Government? I think so.
119. Mr. Forster.] What do you mean by railway tickets? The passenger tickets which you buy when you go by train.

120. How do you account for the progressive expense of your establishment since 1856? I account for it by the new services which have been undertaken by the establishment since then. T. Richards, Esq.
121. As shown in your return, there was a large increase in 1857 over 1856? That is because in 1856 the bookbinding branch was established, and in the same year the postage stamp printing was added to the Department. 21 Sept., 1870.
122. Then since 1856 new branches of your business have been continuously added? Yes. The object has been to concentrate all matters of printing and kindred subjects into one department, and this has been gradually done up to the present time.
123. And you think that this accumulation of numerous minor branches under the one establishment is on the whole economical? I think so, most undoubtedly.
124. In this way the expense of supervision is reduced? Yes, and we are enabled to obtain a better organization; and nothing is more productive of economy in printing matters than organization on a large scale.
125. Do you do all the binding for the Government Departments? Yes.
126. Is there anything done in the way of bookbinding at the Gaol that you could make use of? They do a little binding there.
127. They have not done any for you? Not for us.
128. Do you think you might economize by having the binding, or a portion of it at all events, done at the Gaol? I do not think that much can be saved by either binding or printing upon a small scale anywhere.
129. Do they do any printing at the Gaol? They do not.
130. Do you think that anything might be done to utilize the binding work at the Gaol? *No; I have already objected to having the work done there. The question was submitted to me some time ago, and I then, in a report on the subject, gave my reasons for the opinion I entertained. That report has been published and laid before Parliament.
131. As a rule, do you give higher or lower wages than the large printing establishments in the city? In some cases we give higher wages.
132. In your opinion is this higher rate of wages justified by the superior character or qualifications of the workmen? Yes; they are good men who have been a long time in the establishment, and have acquired an experience of the work of the office, which is worth a great deal.
133. Do you think they would be able to get the same rate of wages elsewhere, supposing they were to leave the Government Office? I think not. Those who are paid at the highest rate certainly would not.
134. Then if they left the Government Printing Office their qualifications are not such as to ensure them the same rate of wages elsewhere? I doubt if they would be able to get employment at all just now in Sydney.
135. I am alluding to the rate of wages? If men had to apply for work when the town is full, some impecunious proprietor would be sure to take advantage of their position, and to grind them down in wages as far as he could.
136. I do not ask you so much about the possibility of getting employment as about whether they would be able to get the same rate of wages they now receive. Are their qualifications such as to ensure them that amount? They would find it difficult to obtain employment at all in the printing business just now, and consequently it is still less likely that they would obtain the same wages they are now getting.
137. In that case do you think that the time has arrived or may shortly arrive when we may make a reduction of wages? I do not think that it would be wise to do so.
138. By your rule it would seem to be never wise to reduce wages? Not in the way you intimate, but we make reductions whenever the opportunity offers. Thus, when a vacancy occurs amongst the men, the new hand fills it at the rate of wages then current in town. There has however been a round reduction throughout the office since the gold discovery.
139. Then by acting on this principle—engaging men at the current rate of wages—is this rate always a reduction of wages? It has the effect of reducing the average rate of wages paid throughout the office.
140. Does it not rather show that you adopt a standard rate of wages higher than is paid by other offices in town? I think not; it certainly is not so at the time of the man's engagement, because, as I say, the rate is fixed at that current in town at the time. As men work for years in the office they get accustomed to the style of work and consequently their services become more valuable, and in some instances an increase of pay is granted on this ground. On that account I do not like to disturb good men by reducing their wages, but whenever a vacancy occurs it is filled up at the current rate.
141. That then is the only way in which you ever make a reduction? No; once we made a reduction of wages all round.
142. When was that? It happened in this way:—The Minister of the day stated that he had come to the determination of putting the Government Printing Office upon the same footing as the other Government Departments, and that he would take the patronage into his own hands, the same as was done in other branches of the Service. To secure this, the men were to be regularly appointed by the Governor and Executive Council, and were to receive fixed yearly salaries. These men were then receiving some £4 a week, some £3 12s. and some £3 a week; but in order to carry out the new arrangements, the salaries were made even sums, and fixed at £200, £180, and £150 a year, so that instead of £4 a week they got £200 a year, and so on.
143. Were you in the office when the gold discovery took place? I was.
144. Were you at the head of it at that time? No.
145. However you recollect the circumstance? I do.
146. Were the wages raised at that time in consequence of the gold discovery? Yes.
147. The wages were raised throughout the whole office? Yes.
148. Now that the effects of that discovery have passed away, has there been a reduction corresponding with the increase which then took place? The wages were not raised at that time in the Government office so much as in other establishments, and on the whole the wages have been greatly reduced since.
149. Has it happened that any of your officers have, through the accumulation of the various new branches to your department, had a greater quantity of work allotted to them than they had previously, whilst they still retain the same salary? Yes; all these different branches have added very much to the labour as well as to the responsibility of those who are engaged in supervising the work. Their responsibility has been greatly increased without any corresponding increase of salary. In fact all the salaries have been reduced, from the highest to the lowest.

* NOTE (on revision):—This is altogether wrong. I said something like it in reference to printing, but not about bookbinding.

- T. Richards, Esq.
21 Sept., 1870.
150. But has there been a corresponding increase of work? There has; and besides this, some of them now do superior kinds of work to any previously undertaken.
151. And have they more than they can do? Yes, and that is the reason why the extra hands are employed.
152. Is that the case with yourself? It is to a great extent. I have quite as much as I can look after.
153. And is it the case with those immediately under you? It is; the responsibility has been increased throughout.
154. You consider then that the addition of all these new branches has cast a large amount of additional responsibility upon you? I do; and as an evidence of it I may mention that I am now personally responsible for the printing and issuing of stamps to the extent of something like £114,000 a year, as well as for the conduct of a large department, employing 162 hands, and embracing the branches I have enumerated.
155. Do you give security? Yes, I give security. There are two officers of the department who give security.
156. Who is the other? The Accountant.
157. Do you give security to a large amount? Yes.
158. You have said that the Government had suspended the operation of the law in regard to certain officers who were entitled to claim under the Superannuation Act—Would not the more correct account of that matter be that these persons had not become entitled to be admitted? I do not think that the Government have the power to refuse to admit them.
159. How is it then that they have not been admitted, if that is the case? Because the Government will not take the deduction from the salaries which the Act says must be paid, *in order to entitle officers to claim under it.
160. If the law were properly carried out would they not necessarily be admitted? The Government will not take the deduction.
161. But has there been a distinct refusal to make the deduction? None has reached me, but still nothing decisive has been done. I think the men on salaries are entitled to claim under the Act, but as the Government have not taken the deduction the matter remains in abeyance.
162. What class of papers issued from your office are the least saleable or the least remunerative? Petitions are the least saleable; nobody ever buys them.
163. Can you suggest any mode of reducing the expense of printing petitions? Yes, I have already made a representation on the subject. The whole plan of dealing with petitions seems to be unnecessarily expensive. First of all they are printed in extenso, then a weekly abstract of them is printed, and at the end of the Session a general summary is also printed.
164. What was the conclusion at which you arrived? My proposal with regard to petitions is, that they should, in the first instance, be printed in full and separately, and such number of copies struck off as may be required for use in that form. In the copies for the sessional volumes I would insert only the body of the petition (i.e., omitting the head and tail), and print the matter continuously in the order in which the petitions are presented, without regard to subject. I would discontinue the "weekly abstract" as a permanent document, and give the same information in the memo. which is issued with the proofs. I would also reduce the "general summary" to a "summary of petitions received but not printed." Having the petition itself, and a copious index in the volume, the "weekly abstract" and the "general summary" must be superfluous.
165. In what form was this suggestion of yours placed before the officers of the House? I addressed a letter to the Treasury.
166. And was it laid before Parliament by the Treasurer? No, I think not. I do not see it included amongst the papers on Retrenchment in the Treasury Departments, laid on the Table.
167. Then has any action been taken on it? Yes. It was referred by the Treasurer to the Speaker of the Assembly and to the President of the Council.
168. Has it been acted upon in any way? I do not know what decision has been come to by the Speaker, but the arrangement was objected to by the President of the Upper House.
169. Do you sell any number of the Votes and Proceedings of Parliament? Only very few indeed.
170. Can you mention any class of work issued from your office which actually pays its expenses—Acts of Parliament you have said pay for themselves? Yes, on the whole.
171. Are there any others? I cannot call to mind any just at this moment.
172. Perhaps you would furnish a return showing the works issued from your office which have the greatest sale? I will do so. (Vide Appendix A 4.)
173. Mr. Piddington.] What proportion of your compositors are employed upon night-work? The supernumerary hands do the night-work.
174. And these you pay at the rate of 1s. per thousand? Yes.
175. How many nights during the year are they employed? It depends upon the sittings of the House. They attend at the Printing Office every night when the House is sitting.
176. Can you give the Committee any idea of the number of nights they are employed during the year? I could tell by looking at the Votes and Proceedings; they attend as many nights as the House sits.
177. Can you give us any information as to the number of hours they are employed nightly, on the average? The hours vary very much, according to the length of the sittings of the House. If the House sits till 12 o'clock, then the men are kept till 2 or 3 before they leave. They are generally kept two or three hours after the rising of the House. As to the average number of hours I cannot tell you without reference to the office books.
178. Then of your fifty compositors, it is the lowest class, or the men who are paid the least, whom you employ on night-work? It depends in a great measure upon the surplus work we have on hand; what cannot be done during the day we employ the supernumerary hands upon at night.
179. My questions were directed to the class of men employed, not on day, but on night work? The supernumerary hands do the night-work.
180. Are any of the men who receive £200 a year employed on night-work? Only occasionally.
181. They are not frequently employed? Not very frequently.

182.

* NOTE (on revision):—The words from "in order" to the end of the sentence have been added by the Reporter—I did not use them; they in fact entirely destroy my point.

182. Can you say on how many occasions during the present year they have been employed on night-work? I cannot, without reference. T. Richards, Esq.
183. You cannot charge your memory with the number of times? Not at the moment.
184. Of the eleven who are paid £180 a year, how many have been employed on night-work? They are not so employed unless they are on overtime. 21 Sept., 1870.
185. Is this overtime in addition to their yearly salary? Yes.
186. Have any of the eight at £150 a year been employed on night-work? Not unless they are on overtime.
187. Then which is the class of your regularly paid compositors which you employ upon night-work? We never employ our regular hands upon night-work, unless upon an emergency, and then they are paid overtime. I object, as a rule, to overtime, and it is to prevent it that the supernumerary hands are employed.
188. So that of your eight compositors who receive £200 a year, of the eleven who receive £180, of the eight at £150, of the ten at 8s. a day, and of thirteen who are paid 1s. per thousand, it is the last, or the men who are paid least, who perform all the night-work? The supernumerary hands do the night-work.
189. And the higher paid men are not, as a rule, called upon to do the night-work? I do not think you ought to say they are higher paid. I do not consider that the men at 1s. per thousand on the "piece" are lower paid, on the average, than those on the establishment.
190. I allude to them in this way because of the scale of remuneration you have mentioned; but as you object to that way of putting it, I allude to those who receive £200 a year, £180 a year, £150 a year, and 8s. a day, and I ask you if you employ them at night-work or not? I employ them at night only in cases of emergency.
191. So that as a rule it is the thirteen at 1s. per thousand who have to do the night-work? Yes.
192. Are you aware of the system adopted by the English Parliament—the system under which they print the Votes and Proceedings of the House of Commons? In what respect?
193. In respect to those in charge of the Parliamentary printing and who undertake to do the work? I cannot say that I am.
194. Are you aware whether any establishments, similar to that of which you are the head, exists in England for the printing of the Votes and Proceedings, Reports, and other Parliamentary documents? There is no similar establishment in England, I believe.
195. Then I understand you to say that you are not aware of any establishment in England similar to that which exists here? I am not aware that the Government maintain any printing establishment of their own in England.
196. Can you inform the Committee what plan is adopted in England for printing the Parliamentary documents? It is done by private firms under some arrangement which the officers of Parliament or the Government make with them; but I am not able to say what are the precise particulars of that arrangement.
197. You are not aware of the mode by which the Parliamentary printing is done by Eyre & Spottiswoode—whether it is by contract or not? Eyre and Spottiswoode have a kind of fixed contract for some of the Parliamentary work.
198. What is your explanation of that term you have used—what do you mean by a fixed contract? I mean that it is a fixed contract as distinguished from a competitive one.
199. Are you sure that it is not competitive? The last report I read upon the subject led me to that conclusion. Mr. McCulloch, the late Comptroller of the Stationery Office, mentions the matter in his evidence before a Committee of the House of Commons, and from his remarks I gather that the present system is not competitive. Mr. McCulloch expressed himself very much against the competitive contract system for job printing, and recommended its discontinuance.
200. You are aware, however, that there is no office in England like our Government Printing Office? Not under the control of the Government.
201. You have stated that the Government Printing Office here is not perfect? Of course it is not perfect. I do not think that any printing office can be absolutely perfect.
202. Still, however, you think that it is tending towards perfection? Yes, it is improving.
203. What is it that you require to bring your office nearer to perfection than it now is? I should like to have more machinery and more type, and also to develop the process of photo-lithography fully. We have already some very complete machinery, but lately many labour-saving machines have been invented, and a large establishment like ours ought to be furnished with them.
204. With respect to the existing demand upon your establishment by the Government and the Parliament, have you not machinery and type sufficient to meet all your wants? Yes, certainly; but my theory is to keep standing matter, so as to be able to furnish anything that frequently recurs at a short notice, without the trouble and expense of resetting. We have not enough type to enable us to do this to the extent it might be done with advantage. Great economy has already been effected in this way, but still a good deal more might be done.
205. Have you not sufficient type to meet all the demands upon your office? We can meet all demands, but with more type we could economize more.
206. Chairman.] In speaking of machines, do you allude to Hoe's printing machine? No, that is hardly suitable for our work. I would mention specially an American machine known as Bullock's machine, which prints from a continuous roll of paper and not from sheets, thus saving a great deal of labour and trouble. Now that a Paper Company is at work in the Colony, we could easily procure paper suitable for such a machine, and of the size required.
207. Mr. Piddington.] What kind of works do you think should be printed at the Government Printing Office and at the expense of the Colony, in addition to the Australian Geography? I think we are very deficient of maps of different parts of the Colony.
208. But confining our attention first to letter-press printing;—what works do you think should be undertaken? Works upon Natural History might be undertaken.
209. The Natural History of Europe? No, of this country. That I conceive would be a suitable kind of work.
210. Anything else? Yes, I think the Statistics of the Colony might be put into a popular form, so as to render them more interesting to the general reader.
211. You mean the Statistics issued by the Registrar General? Yes.
212. The same information as is now given, I suppose, only put into a better form? Yes.

- T. Richards, Esq. 213. But are there any other works like those on Geography and Natural History, which you think the Government ought to undertake? None occur to me just at the moment. I really have not thought much about the matter.
- 21 Sept., 1870. 214. However it is your opinion that the Government Printing Office should publish works on Geography and Natural History? Yes.
215. Upon what ground? Because I do not think that any private firm could undertake such a work with any prospect of its paying them; and, because I do not think that the public should be left without works of this kind, simply because private firms cannot take the risk of publishing them.
216. Is there not an Australian Geography of which Sir Thomas Mitchell was the compiler;—is not that sufficient? I am not aware that such a work was ever published. I certainly never saw it, and if it has been published it is altogether obsolete now.
217. Then you think that if the Government do not publish a Geography of Australia, the public of the Colony will know nothing of the country in which they live? The majority of the people will remain in ignorance of it until such a work is published, for it is only by reading they can learn anything about it.
218. Then you believe that any information which it is desirable the public should have, ought to be furnished at the expense of the Government? Only upon really important matters, and only so long as private firms have not sufficient enterprise or encouragement to supply the want.
219. For the present then you limit the operations of the Government Printing Office to the production of a Geography and a Natural History of Australia? Yes.
220. With the understanding that a time will come when you will be able to take a more extended view? Yes; when I see that more are required, I would extend my views in that direction.
221. Then as a matter of fact there would be no limit to the works you would publish at the cost of the country? If I thought they would do good I would certainly not limit them.
222. Do you think it to be the duty of the Government to step in and, at the expense of the State, print books merely because nobody else will do it? It might not be advisable for the Government to step in upon ordinary occasions, but where there is a total absence of something which is imperatively required, it is better that the Government should do it than that it should be left undone.
223. Are you quite sure that there is this total absence of information in these two respects? Yes, quite sure.
224. What description of Natural History would you publish? The Flora and Fauna, and other branches.
225. The Flora and Fauna of what part of the world? Those of New South Wales.
226. You would limit them to those of New South Wales? Yes.
227. So that any general information on Natural History is not to be given by the Government Printing Office—it is not to publish for the information of the people anything about the Natural History of Europe, or Asia, or America, or of the World, but only of New South Wales? There are books already published which give all the necessary information relating to other countries. On the Natural History of New South Wales comparatively little has been written.
228. Then you would limit your views to a production of a Natural History of New South Wales? Yes.
229. And I presume you would make the same limit with regard to the Geography? I would.
230. To what do you apply the process of photo-lithography? Principally to maps and plans, or other drawings, illustrating Parliamentary reports. Such illustrations, for instance, as you see in the book of Patents can now be photo-lithographed.
231. Mr. Samuel.] You do not execute the plans and maps of the Lands Office by this process? We have done a little for the Survey Office.
232. How do they get it done? By the old style of lithographing.
233. Mr. Fiddington.] With reference to your expenses, and to the opinion you have given that your printing expenses were slightly under those of the Herald,—when you say that, do you include the whole amount paid to the fifty compositors? I am aware that the gross sum paid by the Herald is more than we pay.
234. You say that the gross amount paid by the Herald is more than that paid in your establishment. Taking the salaries of £200 a year downwards, which you pay, do you intend your answer to apply to all these salaries, and to say that with them the rate you pay is slightly under that paid by the Herald? My answer had reference only to the rate paid to the men on piece-work.
235. And not to the whole of the compositors employed? No, not to the whole of them.
236. With reference to those who are paid £200 a year, £180 a year, and £150 a year—are they paid below or above the ordinary rate paid to men engaged upon press-work? Taking the average, they are rather below the ordinary rate.
237. What was the total amount of the expenditure of your department in 1869? £21,426. That amount included the purchase of some machinery.
238. Yet if the Government were to take advantage of the establishment now under your control, and were to put the work now done there up to public competition, to be executed by contract, do you not think that they could get an offer to do the work at less than £20,000 a year? I have no doubt they might obtain such an offer, but I doubt very much if they would gain anything by accepting it.
239. On what grounds do you form that opinion? I come to that opinion because I believe it to be quite possible for a Government to manage an office of this kind better than any contractor would be likely to do, as a contractor would have his own interest and nothing else in view; and next, because I do not think it would be advisable to place such a large and valuable plant in the hands of a contractor, whose object would be to make as much as he could of his contract, without regard to the injury he might be doing to the plant.
240. Then your main objection to a system of contract is that it would be placing a large and valuable plant in the hands of a contractor, whose only object would be to make money out of it? Yes, that is one of my reasons.
241. Could not conditions be inserted in the contract so as to secure proper care and attention being given to the plant? Yes, but they would be useless.
242. Why so? Because they could not be carried out.
243. Could there not be a condition for a periodical stock-taking and inspection? You would never be able to carry out any conditions in such a way as to ensure proper care of the plant. At least that is my opinion.

244. On what grounds do you come to this opinion? It is a very natural opinion, and one which would suggest itself to any person at all acquainted with life. By giving this plant to a contractor you place him in a position in which his whole idea will be to make as much money as possible during the term of his contract with the least expense to himself. Contractors are not usually the most patriotic people, their object being always to make as much as they can for themselves—not to economize for the good of the public. Then as you say there might be conditions to ensure due care and attention to the plant, but any person who has had any experience of this sort of thing must know that in spite of all the conditions that can be made, when the time comes for settling the matter the Government is sure to be victimized. That has been the experience everywhere, in England and elsewhere—it is always the Government that suffers. And then if a Government is at all capable of performing executive functions, it must be capable of managing such an office as this, which in my opinion is peculiarly a function of the Government.
245. Then you think that it is one of the peculiar provinces of the executive duty to manage a Government Printing Office? I think so; and the experience of the World proves it.
246. Does not the experience of the World prove the contrary—Where is there a Government Printing Office in England or in America? In Washington there is one of the largest Government Printing Establishments in the World. They adopted the plan of taking the work into their own hands, after having tried the system of contract for a number of years. In Paris, in Vienna, in fact in most of the Capitals of Europe there are Government Printing Offices; and I am very much astonished that there is not one in England. My surprise is that they have not yet discovered how expensive the present system of doing the work is to the Government. If the Government had an office of their own they would have done the work far cheaper than it is now done. In fact by their arrangements they have enabled Eyre & Spottiswoode not only to make a large fortune, but also to become possessed of a large and valuable plant. Thus, in reality, it is the Government who, by the high rate they have paid, have purchased the plant, and yet they have not got it under their control.
247. I think you said a short time back that you did not know what was paid for the work under the arrangement with Messrs. Eyre & Spottiswoode? I know the basis of the arrangement, but I do not know the details.
248. Then how do you know that the prices they charge are so high as to enable them to accumulate fortunes, and to obtain a large plant? Because I know that they have been engaged in the Parliamentary work for years past, and that during that time they have made a fortune, and have got possession of an enormous plant. These could only have been acquired out of the profits of their work.
249. I cannot see that—I do not see how this shows that they have acquired either the fortune or the plant out of the work done for the Government? If they have been engaged exclusively in Parliamentary work for a number of years, and during those years have accumulated a fortune, and purchased a large plant, the natural inference is that they have done both out of the profits of the Parliamentary work.
250. But have they been exclusively engaged upon Parliamentary work? So I have been informed—Parliamentary and Government work.
251. Do you not know that Eyre & Spottiswoode print and publish on their own account? I do not think they do much in that way.
252. Do you not know that they are large general printers, and that they have been so for years past? Apart from that I judge from the prices paid. I have tested the cost of some of their work, and find that the English Government pay higher for their printing than we do here, although the wages in England are much lower than they are here.
253. Do you know the plan adopted in England for printing the Post Office stamps? Yes. That is a separate department, carried on at Somerset House.
254. Do you know the particulars of this establishment? I have seen something of them, and have read the details of the estimate of the department. There is an officer at the head of it, under the title of Comptroller. Then there are the workmen and the usual staff. It costs about £28,000 a year.
255. That, however, is specially a Government establishment? Yes, it is a special department.
256. What is the class of bookbinding you perform in your office? Work of all sorts.
257. Have you much of what we may call the superior kinds of binding? Yes. At present we are principally engaged upon work of that kind for the Free Public Library. We have recently rebound a portion of the volumes of the "Encyclopédie Méthodique," for that institution; and the binding is of a very superior kind.
258. Is the great bulk of the work of a superior or of an inferior character? It is not generally a very high class of work. The great bulk of the work is for the Government Offices, and for them the binding is generally in rough sheep or calf; but we do a little of the superior kinds of work, and just now we are doing a good deal.
259. The bulk however is not of a high class—the general run being sometimes like what we see in the Votes and Proceedings? Yes, but there is always work of the superior kind going on. We do a good deal for the Library for instance, and if the Committee will inspect the work they will see that it is of a very superior kind.
260. I am not alluding to these occasional jobs, but to the bulk of the work—is it mere ordinary binding, or work of a superior character? If you call superior work work of a highly finished character, then the bulk of our work is not of that kind.
261. Binding in Morocco or Russia, or material of that class, is what I call a superior character of binding? The greater number bound in our office are books for official purposes, and these are never bound elegantly, although they are always bound strongly.
262. You pay the overseer of the bookbinding branch £300 a year? Yes.
263. How many men has he under him? There are nine journeymen under him; but he has also a great number of youths as apprentices.
264. How many readers do you employ? Four.
265. What are their salaries? The highest salary is £210 a year, the next is £200, and the third £150. The fourth receives 7s. a day; he is a sort of improver—an intelligent young man—who is in training for the first vacancy which may occur.
266. Will you furnish the Committee with a return showing the classification of the total number of men and boys employed on your establishment? I will do so.
267. Classified as you yourself classify them for business purposes? I will.

- T. Richards, Esq. 268. You spoke of type-founding—Do you consider a type-foundry to be an essential branch of a Government Printing Office? I think it would be a great advantage if we had appliances for founding our own type.
- 21 Sept., 1870. 269. Mr. Samuel. Would a type-foundry be a costly addition to the office? No, it would not.
270. What would be about the cost? The foundry and appliances would not cost more than £150 to set it up. There would, of course, be an expense from time to time in getting punches and matrices; but the result would be a very great convenience to the office, and highly advantageous in an economic point of view.
271. You say that your officers who have a fixed salary are not engaged upon night-work—What hours do they work during the day? They come at half-past 8 in the morning and leave at 6 in the evening. Those are the hours for all the men on the establishment, except the Accountant and his assistant.
272. Are they all fully employed during those hours? The printers are all fully employed during the time they are in the office.
273. Chairman. With regard to the works which you would suggest should be printed at the Government Printing Office on account of their being useful or profitable to the public, would not a hand-book on the mineral resources of the Colony be likely to sell well, if published in a readable form and at a reasonable rate? Yes, I think so.
274. If a book of that kind were compiled by persons thoroughly qualified to perform the work, would it not pay for publication? Yes, I think it would; in fact I have no doubt it would.
275. Could you give a rough estimate of what sale would pay for a work of that kind? I could not, for it would depend entirely upon the class of work it would be, and the style in which it would be got up.
276. Not got up in a costly manner, but in a plain presentable form? It is entirely a matter of calculation, and I could not say what sale would pay until I had all the figures of cost, &c., before me.
277. Do you think that a thousand copies of such a work would sell? Yes, if the price were not too high.
278. And would not the circulation of a thousand copies of such a work do a great deal of good, in affording information upon every head of our mining resources, to those persons interested in their development? Yes, I think so.
279. Then with regard to what you said about having the Statistics of the Colony in a more popular form—Suppose there were issued from your office a year-book of facts, giving all the information obtainable with regard to the Colony and its resources and people? Yes, that is precisely my idea. I proposed something of the kind to the Government not very long ago.
280. Such a work as we see published in other parts of the world—there is a year-book of facts issued by Canada, which is a very complete thing of its kind, and has been of great service to the Dominion? Yes; and I have long thought that something of the kind was absolutely necessary, because as the Statistics are now issued a person cannot get any particular information he may require without a good deal of research; and unless he is very much interested on the points he would not take the trouble of hunting it out.
281. Do you think that, apart from the circulation in this Colony, such a book would sell in London? Well I doubt about its selling there; but it would be well worth while to distribute such a work free to all parts of the world for the sake of disseminating information concerning the Colony.
282. Do you think that a hand-book of the Laws of the Colony would sell? No, I think not. A compendious edition of the Statutes in force would though.
283. Is there at the present time a Geography of New South Wales that is considered a satisfactory work? I think not; I know of none.
284. Such a work, if properly got up, would sell to schools? Yes, I have no doubt it would; and besides this we ought to have a dictionary of names. There ought certainly to be something done to determine the correct manner of spelling the names of places in this Colony. Now every one spells these names according to his fancy, and with no settled rule; and the sooner this is put an end to the better.
285. With respect to useless printing—you have instanced petitions as one class of this kind of work—Do you think that useless printing is confined to petitions, and by “useless” I mean printing that is of no practical use? Very much of the Parliamentary printing appears to me to be compulsory.
286. Can you suggest any means by which this amount of printing can be limited, or by which the cost could be in some way reduced? I could suggest many things as to the way in which these matters might be managed, in order to secure greater economy; but with regard to limiting them I do not see how that is to be done, since the matter rests entirely with the Parliament.
287. Have you any objection to append to your evidence a memo. of such suggestions as you think it desirable to make? I will do so. (Vote Appendix A. 5.)
288. Mr. Piddington. You think that a thousand copies of a book upon the minerals of the Colony would be sold? Yes, I think that number would be sold.
289. Do you give that opinion without any reference to the price? No, I stated that the price must be a reasonable one.
290. At what price would 1,000 copies sell? The price must of course depend upon the character of the book and the cost of getting it up.
291. Taking all that into consideration, what price would be required in order to sell 1,000 copies? I can hardly say.
292. Suppose it were published at 5s.? That is about the price which I should imagine it could be got out at.
293. Of course it could be illustrated? Yes, I should imagine so; such a work would require to be illustrated.
294. And could it be published at 5s.? Yes, that is the price I had fixed in my mind.
295. With the illustrations it could be produced at 5s.? Yes, I could produce a good book at that price.
296. And produce it so as to yield a profit? If not a profit there would be no loss; and that in my opinion is all the Government should require.
297. Then you think the Government ought not to look for a profit in anything they do? They ought to be satisfied, if it is a public matter, that they suffer no loss.
298. And you think there would be no loss if the work on minerals were issued at 5s.? I think not; but I have made no calculations to guide me.
299. In fact it is just a mere off-hand opinion? Exactly.
300. I think you said that something ought to be done with regard to fixing the spelling of the names of places? Yes, it is necessary that something should be done in the matter, and I think that a dictionary of names should be published, so as definitely to settle the spelling.
- 301.

301. Published by the Government? Yes.

302. With an Act of Parliament making it compulsory on the public to spell all the names in the way laid down in the Government Dictionary? No, I do not think an Act of Parliament would be necessary, because I think that the public would only be too glad to avail themselves of the chance of having the spelling settled.

303. And you consider that the public are so anxious to have the matter settled that they would abide by even a Government Dictionary? One thing is certain, that the Government officials would abide by it, and by degrees the public would soon do the same.

304. The example set by the Government officials would be such as to lead the community at large to adopt it? As far as the uniform spelling of names is concerned I think it would be so.

305. Mr. Forster.] On what principle would you select the class of works to be published by the Government? I would lay down no rule, but deal with every work upon its merits; I would make no absolute selection, but if a work of any kind were calculated to do good to the Colony then I should advise the Government to print and circulate it.

306. Would you recommend that every work which could be printed without a loss should be published by the Government? Certainly not.

307. Do you recollect a pamphlet which was published some few months back, with information respecting Howe's Island? I do.

308. Were many of those sold? Not very many.

309. A copy of it was laid on the Table of the House I believe? It was.

FRIDAY, 23 SEPTEMBER, 1870.

Present:—

THE HON. CHARLES COWPER,
C.M.G.,
MR. WILLIAM FORSTER,

MR. GARRETT,
COMMANDER ONSLOW,
MR. SAMUEL.

HENRY PARKES, Esq., IN THE CHAIR.

The Committee proceeded to the Government Printing Office.

Thomas Richards, Esq., Government Printer, was examined:—

310. Chairman.] What are the duties of the Computer? He computes the earnings, checks the bills of the extra hands, and makes computations and returns with reference to the work generally.

311. At what time do the compositors of the establishment come to work in the morning? At half-past 8 o'clock.

312. And what is the hour at which they leave in the evening? At 6 o'clock.

313. Mr. Samuel.] What is the difference between the duty of the Overseer and Superintendent? The Overseer has charge of the night-staff during the sitting of the Parliament, and in the recess he comes and does whatever he can.

314. And the Superintendent? He distributes the work, and attends generally to the letter-press branches.

315. Chairman.] He has charge over the whole office? Yes, over the letter-press branches, subject of course to my direction.

316. And in your absence he attends to all the duties of the establishment? Yes, takes charge of the place.

317. Mr. Samuel.] You have Mr. Henry as Accountant and Mr. Levinge as Clerk—Are both these officers necessary? I do not think that a first class accountant is necessary for the simple duty of collecting the revenue, which is comparatively small.

318. He is a good officer—Mr. Henry? He is a very clever accountant, and fit for much higher work than that of simply taking advertisements and accounting for them.

319. And if he were provided for elsewhere you could do without him? Yes.

320. And the efficiency of the clerical department would not be impaired? Not in the least. Mr. Henry is himself sensible that the work he is doing is not adequate to his ability.

321. Mr. Levinge could do the work as well as it can be done by two? I do not know that I should propose that arrangement, but with the rest of the staff I could still manage.

322. Mr. Hawksley is still here? Yes, he is in the sale-room.

323. One good officer could do the work now done by the Accountant and Clerk? Yes.

324. All these officers, I think you have said, are anxious to go on the Superannuation Fund? They are not on, and they are anxious to be put on.

325. Why can they not make provision by insuring their own lives, or by some arrangement among themselves? They have been waiting in the hope that they would be brought under the Superannuation Act.

326. They all know that the Fund is bankrupt? Since the Fund was originated two or three have died without having made any provision for life insurance, and they have consequently left their families destitute.

327. Their application to be placed on the Fund has always been refused? It has been held in abeyance.

328. Mr. Cowper.] I understood that it had been refused on the ground that they were not in the receipt of yearly salaries, but were paid weekly wages, or by piece-work? They were in the receipt of wages and not of salaries, but the Minister of the day placed them on salary for the express purpose of bringing them under the operation of the Superannuation Act.

329. Mr. Samuel.] Was it not refused some time ago on the ground that it was no use adding claims upon the Fund, as the Fund was not able to meet existing claims upon it? There was an objection that the Fund was not solvent, but it was represented that the Act would be amended.

330. Chairman.] What is the view of the men themselves—do they think that they have been aggrieved by not being placed on the Fund? In the first instance I advised them not to seek to come under the Fund; but they have repeatedly urged me to represent that they were desirous of being brought under the provisions of the Act. They pressed so hard for it that I made the recommendation.

T. Richards, 331. Mr. Samuel.] They feel that they are placed at a disadvantage as compared with other officers in the Public Service? Quite so. Some of them are under it and some not. This makes the position of the latter the more unsatisfactory.

23 Sept., 1870. 332. Commander Onslow.] What comes under the term "Job Printing"? Printing for the Government Departments.

333. Not for the Parliament? Yes. Some job printing is done for the Parliamentary Departments.

334. You never pay compositors increased salaries from length of service alone? No; we have them at fixed rates.

335. Then you increase the payment for length of service? We have fixed rates—£150, £180, and £200, per annum. A man might come on at £150, and, if a very good workman, might be promoted to the grade receiving £180 or £200.

336. Do you keep copies of everything that you strike off? File copies, we do.

THE Committee then proceeded to inspect the various departments of the establishment, and the following information was communicated by the Government Printer:—

The composing-rooms are arranged so as to facilitate the various branches of work required to be done; and the proofs required are so numerous that one person is solely and constantly employed in pulling them.

The fount-room is in charge of a compositor, who is paid a salary of £200 a year, whose duty it is to keep all the store type in order, and to have it readily available for any pressure of work which may arise. It is his duty to account for all the type received into the office, to issue the sorts to the compositors as they may be required, and to take charge of the matter for distribution as it comes from the press-room.

In the bill-room are kept in type all Bills laid before Parliament, from the time of their initiation until they are passed into law, or are otherwise disposed of by the Legislature. In this room also the Electoral Rolls of the Colony are kept in type; and by this arrangement a saving of £5,000 a year has been effected in the printing of these rolls; that is to say, £5,000, which was formerly voted every year for this purpose, has now been struck out of the Colonial Secretary's "Miscellaneous" Estimate, and the amount saved. The pages of type in this room are—Bills, 598; Electoral Rolls, 1,784; Brands Directory, 454; other matter, 801; making a total of 3,637 pages. In this and the composing-rooms I have introduced a small carriage, which I have invented for facilitating the movement of heavy chases of type. The contrivance is a very simple one, but it helps to keep the forms intact, and is useful in other respects.

In the machine-room there are two double-cylinder perfecting machines, a single-cylinder job machine, and several hand-presses. The new steam lithographic machine is equal in power to twenty hand-presses, and the work done by it is in point of excellence quite equal to anything done by hand. It is very economical in the printing of plans reduced by photography, some of which are now being worked on the machine. In this department I have introduced an improved method of cleansing the type. The ordinary custom in printing offices has been to take the forms outside, and to wash them there; but I have obviated the necessity of that by the introduction of a bath, placed at one end of the machine-room, near the lift by which the forms are raised to the composing-room. It is only right to mention that the bath was constructed under the superintendence of Mr. Potter. The idea was mine, and he carried it out. After the forms are brushed and shut in the bath, the ley, which is placed in a reservoir above the bath, is turned on; and, descending through the bath, falls into a receptacle below. A tramway is laid for moving the heavy forms to and from the bath. In this branch also a great improvement has been effected in the numbering of debentures, &c. In consequence of the pressure for the rapid production of this work, the old system of printing each number by rotary wheels was found too slow, and I therefore gave my attention to the discovery of some better method. I have now introduced a system of logotypes, by means of which the numbering of debentures has been expedited to such an extent that as much work can now be done with more ease in one day as it formerly took a fortnight to produce. Mr. Chapman, the Foreman of the Press-room, has invented a machine by which he can rule and perforate simultaneously with printing on the cylinder machines, but the invention is not yet sufficiently perfected to be brought into general use.

In the store-room are kept paper, ink, treacle, turpentine, and other commodities used in the establishment. This very responsible department is under the charge of the foreman of the machine-room.

In the paper-wetting-room one person is entirely employed in the preparation of paper for the pressmen, and in attending to the small engine which is placed here for the purpose of working the machinery in the upper rooms of the building. Machines have been introduced in the Colony, by means of which paper-wetting can be more expeditiously and economically done than by hand labour. I think that we could get one of these machines made in the Colony.

The stereotyping and the electrotyping department is under the charge of a highly skilled mechanic, who has a perfect understanding of electrotyping, stereotyping, punch-making, type-founding, galley-making, and indeed of all mechanical appliances required in the office. Mr. Stockman is capable of repairing the machinery of the establishment. [The Committee were shown the different processes carried on in this department.] The practice of stereotyping has been found very economical. The other special processes are, as regards this office, in their initiation, but enough has been done to show what can be accomplished by them in connection with a large printing establishment.

The printing of railway tickets is carried on by means of very ingenious and delicate machines, which perform the dual operation of printing and numbering the tickets simultaneously. The blank tickets are placed in a tube above the machine, and simply by the turning of the wheel they receive the impression of the type and the number, and are discharged into another tube at the side of the machine, the whole operation being carried on at the rate of about eighty tickets per minute. After the tickets are printed, they are passed through the counting-machine, which detects any error in the numbering of the tickets, should an error have been made. The number of tickets required for the railways is so great that the ordinary process of printing would not be adequate to supplying them. The railway ticket-printing machines introduced into this office are the most perfect appliances of the kind yet discovered.

In

In the bookbinding and ruling departments we produce all the work required by the Government Establishments, and the Parliament, and also rebind many volumes for the Free Public Library.

I have had a return prepared, for the information of the Committee, of the work done in the bookbinding branch during the present year. (Vide Appendix A 6.)

The work of the office, when completed, passes into the publishing branch, for delivery to the various Government Departments, Parliamentary Offices, Benches of Magistrates, and other officers in the country. The Publisher's duty is also to keep the printed documents in good order, and to have them accessible whenever required.

The sale-room is principally for the convenience of the public, and it is the duty of the clerk in charge of it to give information respecting various matters, and to guide the public to the finding of any particular document which they may require. The Sale Clerk also compiles the Gazette Index, and does other clerical work.

Owing to the heavy personal responsibility under which I am placed in respect to the stamp branch, I have taken every possible precaution to obtain security. The room itself is kept constantly locked up, and is under my personal charge as Inspector of Stamps. Every press is fitted with an indicator, which records every impression taken from a stamp plate; and the paper on which the stamps are printed is water-marked, and issued by the Clerk in charge of the Government Stores to me, upon requisition approved by the Under Secretary for Finance and Trade. I furnish the Audit Office with a declaration of the number printed and issued each month to the Postmaster General. I also furnish a similar return to the Treasury for information. Formerly the plates from which the stamps are printed were made in England, at a cost of £100 each; but I have recently had the dies sent out, and as all the appliances necessary for electrotyping and mounting are here, we shall be enabled shortly, without adding much to the annual expense of the department, to make our own plates, and thus to effect a saving of £100 on each renewal. I have had a return prepared, showing the number and value of stamps printed and issued during the period from 1857 to 1869 inclusive. (Vide Appendix A 7.)

The photo-lithographic printing branch is in charge of Mr. Sharkey, who has made improvements on all other known processes of the kind, and the Government have recognized his invention by giving him a substantial gratuity. By this process we can rapidly reproduce, on a small scale, plans of patents and other large diagrams; and the result is, that labour, printing and binding, paper and other material, are largely economized.

A description of the process, and the history of its introduction here, is appended hereto.

The work of the establishment has been increasing year by year, and every department of the office is now over-crowded as regards space. In 1856 printing was supplied to forty-two departments of the Government, and last year (1869) the list of departments to which we supplied printing included seventy-two.

"PHOTO-LITHOGRAPHY.—In the eastern gallery of the Exhibition building, and at the end, near the organ, there hang two pictures, which most visitors have probably passed with little notice, taking them to be merely steel engravings, but which are really among the most noteworthy objects in the whole exhibition. One picture is entitled 'Byron's Dream,' engraved by J. T. Willmore, from a painting by C. L. Eastlake; the other has no title, but it is an engraving after Titian, by Andeloni. It represents two angels adoring the infant Saviour lying on his mother's knees. A more than usually inquisitive observer may notice that each picture bears upon it these words: 'Photo-lithographed at the Government Printing Office.' Therein lies the great interest of these productions. A reference to the catalogue of the Exhibition will give the further information that they were executed by Mr. John Sharkey, and we venture now to call attention to them as amongst the finest specimens of the photo-lithographic art ever turned out. Photo-lithography in different forms has been practised for a number of years; one of the most practically useful of the different processes was invented simultaneously in England and in Melbourne in 1859—in England by officers of the Ordnance Survey Department, under Colonel Sir Henry James, and in Melbourne by Mr. Osburne, then employed under Professor Neumayer at the Observatory. Mr. Osburne took out a patent for his invention in Victoria in 1860, and the Government there paid him £1,000 for the right to use it; they also paid £200 to Mr. M'Hutchison, who worked with Mr. Osburne, and who had been instrumental in perfecting the operations; and this gentleman now holds the patent for New South Wales. The process has been in constant use in Victoria for the last ten years, and has greatly cheapened the production of maps, plans, mechanical drawings, and such like. Beautiful specimens of the Victorian work are to be seen at the Exhibition, exhibited by Mr. John Noone, who now carries on Osburne's process. In this process the drawing to be copied is first photographed on glass in the usual manner. From the negative a print is then taken on paper prepared in a peculiar way which need not here be described. It is fully set forth in the specification of the patent. The print is then covered with a thin film of greasy ink. It is next floated a minute or two on hot water, then laid on a glass plate, and the superfluous ink washed off with a sponge. It is found that the ink adheres permanently to those parts that had been affected by the light through the negative, while it comes freely away from the parts not so affected, leaving thus a reproduction of the original drawing. This operation requires great care and delicacy of touch. As soon as the paper is dry it is ready to be transferred to a lithographic stone, and printed off in the usual manner. A few years ago Mr. Richards, the Government Printer here, was sent down to Melbourne to visit the printing department there, with a view of introducing improvements in Sydney. He was struck with the facilities offered by photo-lithography for the reproduction of plans, &c., and on his return he requested Mr. Sharkey (then employed as a copper-plate printer in the office) to take the matter up. After experimenting a year or two, Mr. Sharkey succeeded in producing a process differing in this important particular from Osburne's, that no ink is applied to the photo-print, but this print, on being taken from the negative, is laid without further manipulation on a stone and passed through the press. The paper being moistened on the back with a sponge and water is then peeled off, leaving a faint impression of the drawing on the stone. A thin ink of a peculiar character is then rubbed into the stone, which absorbs it only in those parts corresponding to the lines of the drawing; and the superfluous ink being then washed off, the stone is ready to be inked and printed from as in the ordinary process of lithography. Within a few minutes after the photo-print is taken, a proof can be drawn from the stone. Mr. Sharkey has thus the credit of inventing a new process of photo-lithography, more speedy than the old, requiring less manipulation of the photo-print, and apparently capable of reproducing finer work. The Government, on the report of a Board appointed to investigate the matter, has given Mr. Sharkey a sum of money for the use of his process, and the Agricultural Society has made him the honorable award of a silver medal, 'on account of the originality, utility, and excellence' of his invention. The first great work done by this process in the Government Printing Office was the reproduction of the plans of the Sydney Water Commission. Much work of a similar character has been executed since, and it is now being applied to the reproduction of the drawings accompanying specifications of patents in this Colony, published from time to time in accordance with a resolution of the Legislative Assembly. Mr. Sharkey has been encouraged and assisted by the Government Printer to experiment further and improve his process, and it has now attained to an extraordinary pitch of delicacy and beauty. It can copy effectively, and reduce any engraving, drawing, or lithograph, where the work consists of distinct lines or dots, but cannot at present produce good results from photographs of natural objects, or from drawings where the shading is continuous, and not broken up into lines. The processes used in Melbourne and in England are equally at fault in this kind of work, or even more so. It is hoped that these particulars will serve to draw attention to the gems of photo-lithographic art turned out from the Government Printing Office, and now on view at the Exhibition, and will show how well-merited has been the award of a silver medal to Mr. Sharkey."

TUESDAY, 27 SEPTEMBER, 1870.

Present:—

COMMANDER ONSLOW, R.N., | MR. PIDDINGTON,
MR. WINDEYER.

HENRY PARKES, ESQ., IN THE CHAIR.

Mr. Charles Potter called in and examined:—

- Mr. C. Potter. 337. Chairman.] What is the office you hold in the Government Printing Office? The office of Superintendent.
- 27 Sept., 1870. 338. That is the designation of your office? Yes.
339. What are supposed to be your duties generally speaking? To receive all the work, to distribute it to the various branches, and to follow it up until it is completed. I am also responsible for the custody of the material, and that it is kept in proper order.
340. Your duties extend over the same ground as the duties of the Government Printer himself? Not exactly; my duties are more with detail than his.
341. That is not exactly what I mean. Is there any part of the office which is exempt from your supervision? No part, with the exception of the stamp-room. When the Government Printer is there he takes the personal superintendence of that. In his absence I do so.
342. In case of the absence of the Government Printer, would the direction of the office devolve upon you? Yes.
343. Entirely? Entirely.
344. What part of the office have you most to do with? The general printing—the letter-press.
345. How long have you been connected with the printing office? Since 1851.
346. In what capacity did you enter? As a compositor, and making up the Gazette; afterwards I was Foreman of the Press-room; and from there I got my present appointment.
347. According to a return printed since this Committee first sat, and which no doubt you have seen, the greater part of the compositors are on what is called the establishment, I believe? Yes.
348. £200 a year is the highest salary? There are eight, I think, on £200 a year; they are men who have been a long time in the office.
349. That is a little under £4 a week; that is a little in excess of the establishment wages given to compositors in large private offices? I think it is somewhat in excess.
350. Do you know what is the rate given on the establishment in private offices? I do not; I think it is somewhere about £3 10s. or £3 12s. a week in the most respectable places. The Herald Office, I suppose, is the only place that can be put in comparison with ours.
351. There are some men on piece-work, I believe? Yes, fourteen.
352. But they are not constantly employed? No, only during the Session of Parliament.
353. What is the rate of pay per thousand? 1s.
354. Do you know what the rate per thousand is at the Herald Office? I think it is a shilling and a halfpenny.
355. I suppose the Herald gives the highest price? Yes, I believe so.
356. Do you know whether it gives a higher price than the other newspapers? I have heard so.
357. Those of your compositors who are receiving £200 a year have been in the office some time? Yes.
358. They are very reliable men? Yes, very good men; they have become conversant with all the work of the place, and are really very valuable men; and I think they stood by the Government during the gold excitement.
359. What offices have you been in before you came to the Government Printing Office? Only where I served my time, at Mr. Trood's, in King-street.
360. Did you come to the Government Printing Office soon after your time expired? No, I was in business for myself. Mrs. Trood was left a widow, and I conducted the business for a couple of years.
361. Commander Onslow.] Printing? Yes.
362. Chairman.] You have not had a great deal of experience in other offices? No.
363. And that experience has been confined to Sydney? Yes.
364. Could you give the Committee any opinion as to whether the hands in the establishment do as much work as the hands generally in printing offices? No doubt of it; they do more, I should say. We have found, when we have had strange hands come into the office, that they have not done so much as our old hands.
365. You think they do as much work for their money as printers in private establishments? I am sure of it. If their work was calculated at a shilling per thousand, it would be found that they earn a great deal more than they get.
366. Do you think the necessary work of the Government could be done more economically by private contract? I do not think so. I have thought over the matter, and I do not see how it could.
367. Who is the Publisher? Mr. Lynch.
368. What are his special duties? His duties are the despatching of all work after it has been printed; sending it out to its destination.
369. Can you describe the round of his duties for a day—What time does he come there in the morning? Half-past 8.
370. What does he do first of all? During the Session he sees to despatching the Proof Votes and Minutes. He has charge of all the departmental forms.
371. We do not get at what he does at present;—having charge of the departmental forms might mean that the forms lie on a shelf, and that he simply sits in his chair doing nothing? He has a great deal of booking to do.
372. What I want you to do is to place before the Committee some idea of the work he has to do? It is rather a difficult matter to put it in a tangible shape. He takes charge of all the printed papers, and sees to their being despatched; and he sends everything to the post that has to be posted—some twelve thousand letters and parcels in the course of the year have to be sent away. All these things have to be kept account of. He receives all the work after it has been printed.
373. Receives and issues all the publications? Yes, every document that has been printed goes to him.
374. Who delivers these documents to him? The Foreman of the Press-room; and, if it is a job that has been bound, the Binder.

375. Does the Foreman of the Press-room keep an account of them? Yes, he takes an account of all the work he prints. Mr. C. Potter.
376. All the perfect work he delivers to the Publisher? Yes. 27 Sept., 1870.
377. Does the Publisher take an account to check his? I do not think he checks his account.
378. For example, supposing a pamphlet was printed at the Government Printing Office—I noticed the other day that you are now printing a pamphlet on the Culture of the Silkworm—supposing 5,000 copies were ordered to be printed, would the Publisher have them counted to ascertain that there were 5,000? Yes.
379. Does he keep an account of them as they go out of the publishing department, so that at this time next year he could show how many had gone out and how many remained in stock? Yes.
380. And so of every publication? Yes.
381. Would that apply to the Gazette? Yes.
382. Or to any Bill? Yes. Documents from the Publisher are generally supplied on requisition; or the Publisher issues them on a printed order from the Government Printer or myself.
383. Are the men in the printing department, on the whole, a good set of men—sober, steady, and reliable? Yes, taking them as a body.
384. I suppose you have the pick of the trade, taking all circumstances into account—the permanency and regularity of payment, and the value of the situations? No doubt of it. There are a great number of applications—many, I dare say, from persons at present employed in newspaper offices, who would perhaps be glad to escape the night-work.
385. What is the arrangement for conducting the operations of the office in relation to the Legislative Assembly—the Votes and Proceedings I mean? To get them printed by morning?
386. Yes; what provision is made for that purpose? Some years ago a certain number of the permanent staff used to come back at night, but that was found to be very inconvenient, and interfered with the daily work. We then got a certain number of men on the piece as supernumeraries, and we have these as a night staff at present. We perhaps have ten of these back as long as it is necessary; they stay until the Proceedings are put in type; and the pressmen come early next morning, and print them off, so that they may be sent out by 8 or half-past 8 o'clock.
387. At what time do the pressmen come for that purpose? Half-past 5 or 6 o'clock.
388. How many copies are printed? 175, I think.
389. How are they disposed of? I suppose there is a copy sent to each Member of Parliament, and the same number of copies sent to the Assembly office? There are a number of covers sent from the Assembly office, and copies are put in these covers, and sent according to directions.
390. Do you think the office is conducted with strict economy in regard to material, and also type, in all respects? I think so.
391. You do not see any opening for improvement? No. I know it has been the endeavour of the present Government Printer to economize as much as possible. We have always that in view, and have done many things to that end,—printing closer, widening the measure of the pages, and so on.
392. With regard to economy in the use of type;—is your supply of type sufficiently large to keep all matter standing which it is necessary to keep standing? We have a great quantity of type, but it is not large enough.
393. In the case of the Electoral Rolls—they are kept standing? Yes; between 1,700 and 1,800 pages of type.
394. They are kept in type from year to year? Yes.
395. Do you know what was the amount of type bought specially for that purpose? I could not say at a venture.
396. What amount of expenditure in labour is saved by keeping the Electoral Rolls in type, as compared with the cost of printing them anew every year? I should think perhaps 75 per cent. on printing the revised lists; not quite so much in printing the unrevised lists, because there are more alterations.
397. That is, where £1,000 are spent now, £4,000 would be spent if they were not kept in type? Yes.
398. Is there much other work where money can be saved by keeping matter in type? I think the Blue Book might be kept in type. I dare say £150 a year might be saved in that.
399. There is not much alteration in the Blue Book from year to year? Not a great deal.
400. Could you give the Committee any idea of the cost of the composition of the Blue Book—I believe that is the correct term—the setting of it? I think about £225.
401. The cost of the compositors' work, setting the Blue Book in type? It would cast up to that in value if it had to be paid for by piece-work.
402. What do you suppose would be the cost of correcting it, if it stood in type? I dare say it would be reduced something more than 50 per cent.
403. Would that apply to the Statistical Register? No; it would not be so advantageous to keep that in type. Some portions relating to fees we do keep in type—about forty pages.
404. Is care taken in the office to keep up any particular part of a given publication which can be retained in type? Yes.
405. In the superintendence of the office attention is always paid to that consideration? Yes; we take care, in the case of documents of any importance, to ascertain whether an extra number of copies will be required, before distributing the type.
406. In the return before alluded to, there is a person named Alfred Stockman down as stereotyper;—does his employment come under your notice? Yes.
407. He seems to be a very clever man? Very; a man who can make himself handy anywhere.
408. Electrotyping, I think it is called? Electrotyping, stereotyping, cutting blocks—almost anything.
409. Do you not think he has a very low rate of remuneration, as compared with other people? Very low.
410. Ten shillings a day, I believe? Yes.
411. From your knowledge of the trade, if that man now left you could you supply his place? Not by one man; we could get the work done as it was done before. I think the man is underpaid.
412. He does the whole of the electrotyping and stereotyping in the office? He has two assistants.
413. But he really conducts the whole of that branch of the work? Yes.
414. The cost of that department is £334 6s., according to this return? Yes.

Mr. C. Potter. 415. Have you had any opportunity of judging of artisans of his character, employed in the way in which he is employed? No; except casually meeting with them—getting work done from time to time. I cannot say I have had much experience of them.

27 Sept., 1870.

416. You could not give any opinion as to the relative value of that man from what you have seen in other places? No.

417. Mr. Windeyer.] Do you consider it advantageous to keep up this system of staff compositors, as prizes in the office, as it were—as objects of ambition in the office? Yes, I think some of them should be paid on a high scale; it has a good effect upon the general staff.

418. From what body is this composing branch on the staff recruited, supposing a vacancy to occur? Generally from the apprentices.

419. Is it always from the apprentices? Not always. There are a great number of apprentices in the office.

420. Is that the rule in the office? It is not the rule, but it happens so mostly.

421. Is it the invariable practice in the office? Yes.

422. Then in point of fact the apprentices have the preference over any extra hands who may be in the office? I do not think there is any preference shown.

423. You say it is the invariable rule to appoint to this department from the apprentices;—does not that in point of fact amount to a preference? Perhaps I was wrong in saying it was the invariable rule, but it mostly happens so. There is no rule about the matter at all—no regulation to that effect.

424. Without there being any regulation, is it the fact that the promotions are so made? Yes.

425. Then in point of fact, an apprentice, as an apprentice, has a better chance of appointment than an extra hand? Yes, I think so.

426. Do you think that a desirable state of things? I think the apprentices should have the preference.

427. Why? Because they are more likely to know the routine of the office—the work.

428. A man may be a first-class workman, say a new comer with large experience of London offices—is he not likely to be just as good a servant to the Government, on this staff, as an apprentice who is promoted merely because he has been an apprentice? Yes, if promoted just because he has been an apprentice; but the inference is that an apprentice in the office would know more about the particular style of work than a strange man.

429. Is there anything peculiar in the style of work? Yes, there is a peculiarity.

430. Anything that a trained compositor could not do? He would have to get a little experience.

431. What is the peculiarity in the style of work which makes it more difficult to a trained man from a London office than to an apprentice in the office here? It is difficult to point it out.

432. Can you not give us an instance? I cannot say I can give a case in point.

433. Are the whole of these twenty-six persons spoken of here on the permanent staff? Yes.

434. Can you tell me when the last five were appointed, at £125 a year? I could not just now. There is another consideration; these are all journeymen, and they only get 8s. a day. You would not get a first-rate man, a stranger in the office, at the price. There are ten of these men who only get 8s. a day.

435. Can you tell me when the two last at £150 were appointed to that branch? No, I could not give the date without reference.

436. Were these two last apprentices in the office? Yes. All these have been apprentices in the office.

437. The whole twenty-six? I thought you said the two last. No, not the whole twenty-six.

438. How many of these twenty-six were apprentices in the office? Fifteen of them. With the exception of No. 15, from No. 10 down to No. 26.

439. Who was No. 16? He was an apprentice.

440. Who is the excepted one? Patrick Martin.

441. What was he? I believe he originally came from Tasmania.

442. Was he ever on the extra staff? Yes.

443. Can you point to anybody else on that list who was ever on the extra staff? No other on this list.

444. Then, in point of fact, it appears now that it has been the invariable rule, with that one exception, to have appointed from the apprentices, and never from the extra staff? Yes, all these were apprentices.

445. Then it appears, as a matter of fact, with but one exception, that no one has ever been appointed from the extra staff? No, not amongst that number. There are some compositors over on the other side, I think you will find. There is one named Hollingworth; he was once on the supernumerary staff.

446. I am speaking of these twenty-six. Do not the extra staff do the same style of work as these twenty-six? Yes, occasionally. Their principal work is on the night staff, doing the Votes and Proceedings; but if there is any surplus work in the day they get it.

447. What is the difference between the class of work that the twenty-six do and the work done by the extra staff? No difference but that the one class are employed in doing the Votes and Proceedings, and the other in doing any other work.

448. What is the difference between any other work and the work done by those who do the night-work—the Votes and Proceedings? No real difference in point of skill required.

449. Then is it not quite clear that a man on the extra staff who knows his duties as a compositor must be quite as well qualified, after having been in the office for a certain time, to do the same work as these twenty-six—as the apprentice who is promoted? There are two or three there who would never be qualified.

450. Is it not quite clear that a good workman who has been in the office some time must be quite as well qualified as one of these twenty-six to do the same class of work? Yes, no doubt he will become qualified by experience to do any work that is done in the office.

451. Then in point of fact you do not adhere to the reason you just now gave as a good reason why apprentices should be preferred to first-class workmen amongst the extra hands? I consider a lad who has been brought up in the place has, if anything, a preference over a stranger.

452. Simply because he has been brought up there? Yes, if qualified otherwise.

453. Then, as a matter of fact, you give up the reason which you put forward before as a good reason for promoting apprentices over extra hands, however good? I am not aware what the reason was.

454. You stated just now that the difference in the style of work made the apprentices educated in the office better qualified than these extra hands—it now turns out that the extra hands do exactly the same class of work as the twenty-six. I understand you now to say that there is no real difference in the class of work they do. Is it not quite clear that first-class workmen amongst the extra hands are quite as well able to do the work as apprentices brought up in the office? Yes, after some experience. What I meant to say was that apprentices were to be preferred as workmen to strangers, because they have a knowledge of the work to be done. Mr. C. Potter.

27 Sept., 1870.

455. Can you see any reason why there should not be the same inducement held out to first-class workmen, going into the Government Printing Office as extra hands, to obtain one of these permanent situations? No, I do not see why a first-class man, if he is wanted, should not be taken upon the staff.

456. What does a first-class hand among the extra hands earn, as an average, monthly, throughout the year? They are not employed throughout the year; only during the Session, and perhaps a little while afterwards. Some of the best of them earn £12, £13, £14, or £15 a month—one or two of them.

457. Which two are these? Mason is a very smart compositor—a very quick hand; Baigent is equally good; O'Connor is very fair, and so is Trumper.

458. Do you not think it is a thing calculated to give dissatisfaction, if men trained in their business, men of experience, see mere lads who have been apprentices appointed to these prize situations amongst the twenty-six, when they themselves may have been longer in the office? Men like Mason in full work can earn £15 a month; but a lad just come out of his time will only get 8s. a day, or £2 8s. a week. One of these men would not like to take that rate of wages for the sake of getting a permanent situation. It would not be advantageous to the Government to pay one of these men £180 a year when they can get an apprentice just out of his time for £2 8s. a week.

459. You are assuming that there is no other way of arranging it than the present way—Do you not think that the system of itself is calculated to give dissatisfaction? I do not see why it should. If a private employer had an apprentice whose time was just expiring, and he could retain that apprentice at £2 8s. a week, he would not like to give another man £3 12s. There are many of these men that we do not require at all; there are too many on the supernumerary staff. They are thrust on the department, and we give them what work is going.

460. How many are not required? We could do without the half of them; many of them are inferior workmen.

461. Mr. Piddington.] There are two classes of compositors employed in the Government Printing Office, are there not? Yes.

462. They are divided into compositors who are on the establishment, and compositors who are called supernumeraries? Yes.

463. How many are employed altogether? I could not say just now how many compositors there are. I think there are fifty-seven in the composing branch—apprentices and compositors.

464. Out of that number how many are paid by day-work, or by fixed rate of wages or salary? All but fourteen.

465. What rate of wages do you pay per week to compositors on the staff? They are paid every month, by salaries; some of them £200 a year—eight, I think; thirteen, I think, at £180; some at £150; and some at 8s. a day.

466. I suppose those at 8s. a day are the smaller number as compared with those paid by the month? Yes, some eight or ten of them, I think.

467. Are the compositors on the staff selected because they have been proved to be first-class compositors? Yes; they are men who have been a long time in the establishment.

468. How is the efficiency of these compositors on the staff ascertained? By the amount of work they do, and their general capabilities. It is not always the fastest compositor that is really the best. A lad twelve months in the trade, if he is a smart lad, will pick up as many types as a man who has been twenty years at it.

469. I do not fix that as my idea of a first-class compositor; I take it with regard to his general efficiency. You say their efficiency is proved by the work they do. Is that test of efficiency entirely derived from the work they do in the Government Printing Office? Yes. I must correct myself there. They have not been kept on only on account of their superior abilities; that is not the only reason.

470. What are the other reasons? As I said before, they are men who have been a long time in the service of the Government, and they stood by the Government during the gold excitement.

471. Have all these men been in the service of the Government since the discovery of gold? Yes, all those with the higher salaries.

472. How many? Eight, I think, at £200.

473. All these eight have been in the service of the Government since 1851? Yes.

474. As compositors? Yes, I think so.

475. You do not include their term of service as apprentices? No. Many of these men came from England.

476. How many of the men of the next class have been in the service of the Government since 1851? The date of their first appointment is on the return.

477. Chairman.] You yourself came as a compositor in the first instance? Yes.

478. Mr. Windeyer.] How do you reconcile the answer you have just given to Mr. Piddington—that compositors are always chosen by reason of their superior efficiency—with the fact that for a long time past they appear to have been invariably appointed from the ranks of the apprentices? I did not say that was the sole reason; I corrected myself.

479. Mr. Piddington.] Is the work in the Government Printing Office so peculiar in its character that an ordinary compositor could not perform it? No.

480. Is it the practice in large printing offices to pay the compositors by piece-work? I think in most large printing offices it is; they pay a portion of them by piece-work, and a portion of them by day-work. There is a good deal of work that cannot be paid for by the piece.

481. I ask you whether, from your knowledge, it is the practice in large printing offices to pay the compositors by piece-work? As far as I have heard, a portion of the staff is paid by piece-work and a portion by day-work. I have had no experience of other large printing offices myself.

482. Where has your experience been derived? In the present office I am in.

483. No other? No other large establishment.

484. Is there anything in the nature of the work carried on in the Government Printing Office to make it impossible to apply the same system there, of paying by piece-work, as is done in large printing and jobbing offices? I have never heard of an office where all the work is done by piece-work.

Mr. C. Potter. 485. I do not ask you that question. I will put it again. Is there anything in the nature of the work performed by the Government Printing Office to make the practice that exists in large jobbing offices inapplicable there—that is, paying by piece-work? It would be a very unprofitable system to do all the work by the piece.

486. On what account? The men would earn a great deal more than they get by day-work.

487. Do you mean to say the men employed by day-work do as much as men would do who are employed on piece-work? I think so.

488. And on that account that it would not be economical to the Government to pay them by piece-work? I do not think so.

489. How do you account for the practice existing almost universally in large printing offices? I do not think it does exist—not to have wholly piece-work done.

490. To a great extent? To a great extent, I believe, it does.

491. You say you have had no experience of large offices? No.

492. How can you tell then what is done? Only by hearsay and reading.

493. Do you know the system adopted, with regard to the payment of compositors, in the office of Eyre, Spottiswoode, & Co., in London? No.

494. Do you know the system adopted in Hansard's establishment, or Clowes' establishment? No.

495. Are you aware whether these are large printing offices or not? Yes, I know they are.

496. Do I gather from you that you are of opinion that the present system of paying the major part of the compositors by fixed salary is more economical than paying them by piece-work? Yes, much more so.

497. Is it your opinion that piece-work, with regard to composition, is unprofitable as compared with day-work? I think so.

498. Commander Onslow.] Who appoints to the supernumerary staff? I think it lies with the Treasurer.

499. Do all appointments lie with him? Yes.

500. None with the Government Printer? No.

501. If an apprentice was as good as an extra hand he would get the preference? They have never been put into juxta-position in that way. There has been no case where any claim has been made by an extra hand against an apprentice.

502. Have you ever known a case where an apprentice, who was an indifferent compositor, got the preference over an extra hand who was a good one? I do not know of a case.

503. Mr. Windeyer.] Do you mean to say that all this number, from No. 10 to No. 26, are equally good as compositors with the best of the extra staff? No, I should not like to say that.

504. Do you not know as a matter of fact that some of them are inferior? Yes, they may be inferior to the best of the extra staff.

505. Commander Onslow.] Are any of them inferior as compositors, or are they all up to their work? I should say as a fact that they all earn their money.

506. Is the art of composition or type-setting a merely mechanical art? No, it cannot be called a merely mechanical art.

507. Chairman.] Is it not the fact that it is so mechanical that the compositor often does not know what he is setting up? I think I have heard of an instance of that.

508. Commander Onslow.] Do you think a man may be a very good compositor indeed, and yet a stupid man on any other subjects? It is a rare case where a stupid man is a good compositor.

509. Still a person might be skilful with his hands although stupid? I do not think so.

510. Do you think it advisable to give increased pay for long service? I think so; I think it acts as an inducement to the men.

511. To persons who are mere compositors—who have only to use their hands;—I am not speaking of brain work? Yes, I think it is.

512. Do you know any private establishment that does so? No, I cannot say that I do.

513. They simply pay for work done? Yes.

514. Have the wages of these men been lowered since the gold discovery, or has there been any great reduction in their pay? None of these men's wages that were in the office at the time of the gold discovery have been lowered, not that I am aware of.

515. Has the rate of wages been lowered since, generally? Yes; in fact we have several journeymen at 8s. a day.

516. Is there ever a slack time during the recess? Of late years we have had very little slack time. There may be a fortnight or three weeks. We generally take advantage of that to clear the office.

517. Would there be any difficulty in getting an increased number of hands if there was a sudden press of work? No difficulty at all.

518. Mr. Piddington.] Are the journeymen at 8s. a day first-class compositors? I should call the majority of them first-class compositors; they might rank as that.

519. Have you not stated that the wages of 8s. a day are not sufficient remuneration for a first-class compositor? No.

520. Commander Onslow.] Are there fixed hours of work, or, if there is a press of work, are the men kept on till it is done? There are fixed hours for the day-staff, and if they are required to work overtime they do so.

521. Are they paid for working overtime? Yes.

522. Do all the compositors, taking them together, do an equal amount of work—are there some so superior to the others that they do much more work—is there any marked difference in the work done? There is a difference—there may be a marked difference.

523. And yet they get the same pay? I do not say among those who get the same pay.

524. Is there any marked difference in the work of those who get the same pay? I could not say there is any marked difference.

525. At what rate are they paid for working extra? 1s. 6d. per hour for overtime; that includes everything.

526. There may be three or four men working extra time, and one may set up twice as much type as another? The Government get the advantage of that.

527. How are the night-staff paid—by time? Sometimes by time, sometimes by the piece, according to the nature of the work.

528. What is the night-work generally? The night-staff come at 6 o'clock.

Mr. C. Potter.

27 Sept., 1870.

529. What work have they got to do? The Votes and Proceedings.

530. Why should they be paid by the piece at one time and by time at another? Sometimes they are employed in correcting proofs. The men have to be there whether there is sufficient work in the Votes and Proceedings or not, and to fill up their time they are perhaps employed in composing something else on the piece, or correcting proofs. If correcting proofs, they get 1s. 3d. per hour. As soon as the Votes and Proceedings are put in type and ready to be sent to press, they are dismissed.

531. I did not understand your former answer. You said a certain number of men were obliged to be there at night—that they had to work a certain time—that there might be little or much to do—and that if not sufficiently occupied with the Votes and Proceedings they are employed at other work? They have to remain till the House rises, and there may not be sufficient copy sent from the House, and to fill up their time they have other work to do.

532. Is anything reduced from their wages for the Superannuation Fund? No. They have requested many times, I believe, to be brought under the Superannuation Act, but their request has not been acceded to.

533. Do none of the persons mentioned in this list contribute to the Superannuation Fund? Only the Government Printer, myself, the Overseer, the Accountant, and his Assistant, the Foreman of Bookbinders, and the Railway Ticket Printers.

534. How long have these officers been paying to the Superannuation Fund? Since it was started.

535. You have stated that a great many of these men who are getting high salaries now were in the Government employ during the gold fever? Yes.

536. And they remained with the Government? Yes.

537. Did they get any increase of wages? It was increased to the amount they now get; there has been no increase since.

538. They have been getting the same rate of pay for the last ten or eleven years? Yes.

539. Mr. Windeyer. What is there to prevent a first-class hand amongst the supernumerary compositors being promoted to these situations at £180 a year; and these lads, instead of getting 8s. a day, being put in a position to earn what you consider the much superior wages of a first-class extra hand? I think that if those who are now getting 8s. a day, as I understand you, were put on the piece, it would be a considerable loss to the Government.

540. That is not answering my question? I hardly understand you.

541. I was asking you before whether it was not likely to cause a feeling of dissatisfaction amongst first-class workmen, that apprentices should invariably be preferred before them in getting these permanent situations. Your answer to that was, in effect, that a first-class workman would not thank you for putting him in the position of simply earning 8s. a day. I now ask you what there is to prevent a first-class extra workman, if a vacancy takes place in a situation at £180 a year, being promoted to that situation, and an apprentice being put in the position of an extra workman, to earn what he could? The rule in the Service generally is to put the next man into a vacancy.

542. Commander Onslow. Whether fit for it or not? No.

543. Mr. Windeyer. Simply because he has been an apprentice? I should think that if a vacancy occurred at £180 a year, the first man of those getting £150, if he were competent, should be the man to get it. That is the rule in the Service generally.

544. Why should he not get it by going through the class of extra hands? These extra hands are engaged as supernumeraries.

545. Then in point of fact it comes to this,—that there is no process by which a first-class workman coming to this country, and getting employment in the Government Printing Office, can be promoted to one of these situations? Not without the arrangements are altered. These men are employed as supernumeraries, and the half of them are not required. We could do without the whole of them for that matter.

546. Mr. Piddington. Are you aware what has been the practice in the Government Printing Office in Melbourne with respect to the engagement of compositors? I think it has been left to the Government Printer there; I think he has the engagement of them.

547. I do not mean as to their nomination. I want to know whether you are aware whether the practice in the Government Printing Office at Melbourne has been to select the best compositors that could be obtained, as contrasted with the practice in the Government Printing Office in Sydney? I cannot tell.

548. Mr. Windeyer. Do you know why an exception was made in the case of Patrick Martin; why he was promoted from the extra workmen amongst all these apprentices, and he alone? I do not recollect the circumstances now. He is a very good workman, and a very useful man. He assists in what we call the distribution. We find him a very careful steady man.

549. I want to know what the reason existing then was? I do not know. I have nothing to do with the appointment of the hands, and the reasons are very often not made known to me.

550. Chairman. You do not know anything about the manner in which the men are paid in Melbourne? I do not; I believe there are some on the piece and some on the staff.

551. You are not aware that there are over fifty men on the establishment. You do not know anything about it? No.

552. You have not read the reports of the recent inquiry? I read an abstract of the report in one of the newspapers.

553. Is it not a fact that there is a great difference in the expertness and general rapidity with which they can set letters between compositors? Yes.

554. Will not one man do 50 per cent. more work than another, and yet they will both be good workmen? I do not think there is so great a difference as 50 per cent. There is a difference; but a man may not set up so much, and yet be a better workman.

555. Is it not a fact that two men of equal character and intelligence, both turning out work equally good, will nevertheless show this difference, that one will set type more rapidly than another? Yes, there is that difference.

556. Is it a fact that the rates of remuneration on the establishment in a printing office are regulated by the average rate at which compositors set matter,—not by extra quickness, but by the average rate? Yes; if you were to regulate the wages to form a scale, you would certainly take the average earnings, not the earnings of individuals.

Mr.

Mr. John Stephen Lynch called in and examined:—

Mr. J. S.
Lynch.

27 Sept., 1870.

557. Chairman.] You are Publisher in the Government Printing Office? Yes.
558. How long have you held that situation? Since January, 1863.
559. Did you fill any other situation in the Government Printing Office before you received the appointment of Publisher? I have been in the office since 1851.
560. What appointment did you hold? I went there as an apprentice.
561. To the business of compositor? No, to the press and machine work. I had a desire to be a compositor, but I was not employed in that way.
562. What are your specific duties as Publisher? To see to the distribution of all the papers that are printed. I receive them from the press-room and distribute them—the work for binding to the binder, and the papers to the various Government offices or individuals entitled to receive them in town and country.
563. What property have you under your charge; all publications I presume? Yes.
564. Anything else? Postage stamps to the value of £300 or £400 a year.
565. You have all printed documents of every description under your charge? Yes.
566. Do you take an account of all sales to the public? I keep an account myself, but the Sale Clerk keeps an account of all sales.
567. You keep an account of the disposal of every paper that is published? Yes.
568. Do we understand that all copies of any given publication go out of the office through the Sale Clerk—that none go direct from you? All the free copies go direct from me.
569. All those that are sold to the general public go through the Sale Clerk? They come from me first to him.
570. Would your books account for every publication and the disposal of it at any given time? Yes, every document.
571. Take the Statistical Register for the year 1867 for example; could you show at once where every copy had gone? Not at once; I could in about two or three hours.
572. How many copies of the Statistical Register are published? 1,100 and odd; I could not tell exactly now.
573. They are sent where—the official copies? The Registrar General has so many supplied, the Council and Assembly so many, and the different Government Departments so many.
574. Are they sent to any particular officers under the Government; Clerks of Petty Sessions for instance? No, they are only supplied on requisition.
575. Are they supplied on requisition, as a matter of course? The requisition comes first to the Government Printer, and if his signature is to it I supply it; if not, I do not.
576. I suppose they are all supplied through the Ministerial Heads of Departments? No, they are not.
577. Who are they sent to then. Could the Inspector General of Police, for instance, get them—If a requisition came from the Inspector General of Police for ten copies of the Statistical Register, would they be supplied? I do not think we would supply so many.
578. If it came for two? Yes.
579. And so of any other department? Yes.
580. But you could ascertain where they all went? Yes.
581. Suppose a Minister sends for a copy, do you take an account of that? Yes.
582. Could you tell whether a Minister, say the Treasurer, received one or twenty copies? Yes, I could tell how many went to the Treasury.
583. And this applies to all other publications in the same way as to the Statistical Register? Yes.
584. You could account for all other publications in the same manner? Yes, even those given to the Government Printer himself.
585. Some rather costly works are published in the Government Printing Office;—I suppose the Statistical Register is as costly as any? No; the Return of Patents is the most costly that has been issued.
586. What has become of that? It is lying on the shelves.
587. Have you ever sold any copies to the public? We may have sold one or two; certainly not half a dozen.
588. How many copies of that were published? Six hundred and odd,—the usual Assembly number.
589. What is the usual Assembly number? Different numbers of different documents.
590. Does that apply to all documents; for example, to petitions, to Bills, to returns of correspondence relating to any particular locality? The number?
591. Yes? Yes; there is very little difference; 580 is the usual number of such papers.
592. Mr. A. B. moves for copies of correspondence between the Government and the Bench of Magistrates at C. or D.—Is the same number of that publication issued as of the Statistical Register? No, not so many.
593. Is the usual Assembly number issued? Yes, from 500 to 700. 270 go to the Assembly alone.
594. Is that exclusive of the copies bound up in the Votes and Proceedings? Yes; 170 are kept for the Votes and Proceedings, and 270 are sent to the Assembly for distribution.
595. How many are retained? About 110 or 120 for stock.
596. What becomes of that stock? Of late years the Government Printer has ordered twenty-five to be put by, and the remainder put on the shelves for the use of the public, and for requisitions.
597. You know the class of publications I am alluding to now—returns of local significance simply—returns affecting some local case—it may be at Parramatta, or it may be at Bathurst. There are a great number of these cases? Yes.
598. Do the general public apply for the purchase of copies of these? At times there are none sold at all, and sometimes there may be half a dozen sold.
599. What is the rule, as far as you can judge—do they lie on the shelves, as a rule? They do. I have often wondered that people interested in these things have not asked for them.
600. There was a specimen of the aboriginal language, called, I think, Kamilaroi, published—I think it was written by the Rev. Mr. Ridley—Were copies of that asked for by the general public? There were a few sold, but there were not many printed.
601. There was a little book published by the Rev. W. B. Clarke on gold mines, was there not, at one time? That was a long time ago.
602. You do not remember anything of that? No.
603. Dr. Manning's Report on Lunatic Asylums,—has that been asked for by the general public? No,

Mr. J. S.
Lynch.

27 Sept., 1870.

604. Are the Education Reports asked for at all? They go off better than anything in the Parliamentary line.
605. The Water Commissioners' Report,—is there any demand for that? No, that has not sold.
606. Not at all? No. There may be one copy.
607. Commander Onslow.] What would be the price of it? I cannot say just now.
608. Mr. Windeyer.] What reports have sold most during this year? The Council of Education Reports.
609. Chairman.] Do not the Land Acts sell well? Yes, we are constantly selling the Land Acts.
610. Does the Police Act sell? No.
611. And the Masters and Servants Act, I suppose? Yes, a good many are sold; also the Impounding Act and the Schools Act.
612. Could you describe to the Committee the routine of your day's duties, beginning with what you do when you come there in the morning? I have first to see that all the hands in the publishing-room are at their duty, and to report those that are not at work—
613. How many hands are in the publishing-room? Ten; mostly apprentices.
614. What are their duties? I hand over all requisitions, after I get them from the Government Printer, to the assistant publisher, to get them out of the shelves, properly counted, wrapped up, addressed, and sent to the post; he does that with the assistance of a boy.
615. What do they do—these apprentices in the publishing-room? They are constantly running messages. There are six there now. There were twenty hands in the publishing-room when I first took charge of it.
616. There was a reprint of Mr. Fraser's Report on the Schools of America—Were any copies sold? No.
617. They are a dead loss? Yes. A fine large book it is too; 12s. 6d. each copy, I think.
618. Have you charge of paper or anything of that kind, besides the completed printed papers? No.
619. How do you receive the postage stamps you spoke of? I make a requisition on the Accountant, and get it signed by the Government Printer; upon that I get what stamps I want for the month from him.
620. Then you account for them in the ordinary way of business? I use them for everything I have to send by post all through the month, and I have to send a return to the Government Printer of the disposal of them.
621. You merely have the postage stamps for the use of the office? Yes.
622. How are the postage stamps sold to the public? I am not aware; they are sent to the Post Office I think.
623. With regard to stamps issued under the Stamp Act, do they go to the Stamp Office? I suppose so; they do not come through me at all.
624. Mr. Piddington.] You say that you distribute the free copies of printed papers to the Public Offices and to the Assembly? I call them free when they are issued on requisition.
625. Although you are Publisher, you do not sell to the public? I do not myself sell to the public; the documents pass from me to the Sale Clerk.
626. The Sale Clerk is Publisher as far as the public are concerned? Yes, he would probably be so regarded in a private establishment.
627. Do you think you could not discharge the duties of Sale Clerk, and not only be Publisher with regard to free copies but Publisher with regard to copies sold? I think I would have too much to do; I do not think I could do the other work satisfactorily, because there would be too many people in at times when I would be engaged in getting copies for the public departments.
628. Did I not understand you to say there were ten hands in your department? Yes; most of them are boys in the first years of apprenticeship—three men and six or seven boys.
629. Could you not, with the assistance of three men and six or seven boys, publish all the printed matter that the Government Printing Office prints? Yes, we do.
630. You say you do not publish practically anything the public ask for, but only those papers supplied by requisition free? All papers, whether issued free or sold, come through me.
631. But not directly to the public through you? Not directly to the public from me; but all the papers sold to the public go through me to the Sale Clerk, and I am often referred to by the Sale Clerk when anything special is asked for. For instance, if a person were to come to the Sale Clerk and ask for some Acts on a certain subject, perhaps he hardly knows what he wants, and the Sale Clerk is sometimes puzzled, and comes to me.
632. As he is obliged to refer to you, do you not think you are the party who ought to take the responsibility of publishing everything issued to the public? As I said before, if I had more assistance I could do it.
633. Do you mean assistance with regard to men and boys in your department? Men, not boys; I cannot depend on the boys; we are constantly looking after them and correcting their mistakes.
634. Does it not seem to be a rather round-about way that the Publisher of the Government Printing Office should not issue what the public require? I could do it, no doubt; but it is a sort of check on me, I believe.
635. What is your salary? £240 a year.
636. What is the salary of the Sale Clerk? £200, I think.
637. What is his name? Mr. Hawksley.
638. Do you think you could undertake the responsibility of publishing all matter if you had more assistance? Yes.
639. Is there any peculiar advantage in the division of the publishing department on the plan now adopted? No, except that it acts as a check in money matters.
640. Could not some plan be adopted for the purpose of securing a check, and yet the entire publishing duty be comprised under your authority? I do not think so. There could be no check upon the Publisher except the Sale Clerk; I could sell what I liked.
641. You think there are no means of establishing a check, except by the appointment of a distinct officer, who is called the Sale Clerk? No, I do not think there is.
642. Mr. Windeyer.] Could you not do it by any system of taking stock? No; there are thousands of documents; we should never get to the end of it. It might be done once or twice, but it could not be continued.
643. Chairman.] You must have a large warehouse for these documents? Very large.
644. Mr. Piddington.] Do you keep any books by which are shown the distribution of papers published at the Government Printing Office? Yes, every copy is accounted for.

Mr. J. S.
Lynch.
27 Sept., 1870.

645. Do you ever take stock? No.
646. If you never take stock, how do you know copies may not be sold out of the stock that it is impossible to trace;—Would it not be possible, if you never take stock, for copies of the various publications to be sold without your knowing it? No.
647. Commander Onslow.] Would they be missed if they were taken away? I think they would—anything of any value, that is; a copy of a petition would not.
648. Mr. Piddington.] How many copies did you publish of Fraser's Report on the Public School System of America? I could not tell.
649. Could you not tell within 50 or 100? About 600.
650. How many have you sold? Not half a dozen.
651. How could you ascertain whether the 594 are on the shelves, if you never take stock? I do. I could answer it in five minutes. I am often asked by the Government Printer how many copies of a certain paper are in stock, and I can give it at once.
652. Then you occasionally take an account of a particular publication? Yes, often.
653. But with regard to the whole of the publications, it is not the practice to take stock? No.
654. Does that arise from there being an idea that they are not of much value? I do not think so.
655. If they were of a large money value do you not think the practice would be to take stock? Yes.
656. Where does all the unpublished matter go to—papers that are not sold? It is still kept in the publishing-room.
657. How many tons do you think you have there? I could not tell you. They lie on the shelves, old Gazettes and other old papers, till they get mouldy.
658. Do I understand that all the printed matter published since the establishment of the printing office, and not sold or issued free, is still kept in the printing office? It is; it is continually being wanted; we cannot tell the day when a requisition will come from one of the Ministerial Departments for all papers on a certain subject.
659. You think it would be impossible to combine the duty of Publisher with that of Sales Clerk? I think a check is needed; I do not think it could be applied by taking stock.
660. Mr. Windeyer.] What books do you keep? A country ledger and a town ledger; every paper that is printed for the Assembly I enter in a book for the Assembly, and the same for the Council; and I also keep a book for miscellaneous papers.
661. Mr. Piddington.] Is the paper used in the Government Printing Office cheap or costly? Lately they have been using cheaper paper for the Gazette.
662. They do not use so expensive a paper now as they did? Not for postmasters and poundkeepers.
663. Is it practicable to use cheaper paper, sufficiently good in quality, rather than the paper now used? It may do for country distribution, but not for town.
664. You think the quality of the paper is not more expensive than is requisite? That I could not tell.
665. Could you not form any opinion, you being the Publisher—you know the paper now used is inferior to what has been used? For part of the publication it is.
666. Do you think the public interest has been served by the alteration in the quality of the paper and its cost? Yes, I think it has.
667. Could a further saving be made by the application of that change to other publications,—by using a cheaper class of paper? There is not much printed on the best paper.
668. Commander Onslow.] To whom do you distribute free copies? All the Government Offices—Lands Office, Treasury, and so on.
669. Do you do this by authority of any one, or on application? The application comes first to the Government Printer, who gives me authority to supply what is asked for.
670. Have you the power yourself to give a copy of anything? No.
671. Are you in the habit of sending free copies to Schools of Art and different libraries? No. All Schools of Art are supplied with the Gazette only.
672. Free? Yes; and Municipal Councils also.
673. Are they supplied with these works you have been publishing? No, except on application.
674. You do not mean that any Government officer could get a copy of any of these works he wanted? No.
675. How many free copies of any work are distributed? Very few free copies of any work we have been speaking of—such papers as the Schools Report or Lunatic Asylums Report. The copies distributed free are mostly Assembly and Council papers.
676. Of small value? Of small value.
677. What are the Sale Clerk's duties? All letters received from the post relating to documents that are sold are sent to him; he makes a requisition on me for them, and I give them to him, and give the price on a docket, the butt of which he keeps. After the sales of the day he delivers the money he has received to the Accountant, and the Accountant sends to me for my book, to know what papers have gone from me for sale during the day, and he compares my book with the Sale Clerk's money.
678. Have you any branch office for the sale of documents? No.
679. I do not understand what you mean by letters? All letters coming to the Government Printer enclosing stamps &c., in payment for printed papers required by parties in the country; for instance, the Publicans' Act.
680. Have you any idea of the value of the documents sold weekly or quarterly? No.
681. You do not know the amount of revenue derived from the sale of publications? It must be over £1,000 a year—documents sold over the counter.
682. The Sale Clerk's duty is simply to attend to the selling of these papers? He has that and other things to do; for instance, he has the whole Index of the Gazette to compile.
683. Have any frauds to your knowledge ever taken place in the office? Not in mine.
684. In the printing office generally? Yes.
685. Lately? No.
686. To any great extent? Some time ago some one in the account branch, during the late Accountant's time, was found to be short in his accounts.
687. I suppose there is really nothing of any value that it would pay to steal, amongst these publications? No. There are £3 or £4 worth sold some days; perhaps £15 or £20 worth even on other days.
688. As a rule no one would steal the publications themselves? No. We have had parcels of Gazettes stolen from the passage.
- 689.

689. Is there any of the old stock which might be advantageously disposed of? Nothing can be done with the old stock, except to sell it for waste paper.
690. You said it was necessary to keep it? It may be asked for once in three months.
691. How many copies do you keep? Sixty or seventy of some papers; one or two hundred of others.
692. Would not a dozen be enough? A dozen would be too many of some papers; for instance, the Petitions about State Aid were all printed,—five or six hundred of each,—and they were nearly all alike.
693. Do you not think it would be a good thing to have a clearing-out of all this rubbish? Yes, it would.
694. Would it be more expensive to do that than to let it remain as it is. It would all depend upon what papers would be likely to be required by the Ministers; very often they send very heavy requisitions for all sorts of Assembly papers.
695. Who has the appointment of people in the office? I do not know.
696. Is it in your power to recommend any one in your branch for good work or ability? No.
697. You have nothing to do with that? No.
698. If a man is inattentive to his work do you make a report? Yes; but the principal reporting I have had to do referred to the boys.
699. You have not known any one to be appointed who is unfit for his work? No.

Mr. J. S.
Lynch.

TUESDAY, 4 OCTOBER, 1870.

Present:—

MR. ALLEN,

MR. PIDDINGTON.

HENRY PARKES, Esq., IN THE CHAIR.

Samuel Bennett, Esq., called in and examined:—

700. Chairman.] You are the proprietor of a large general printing office? Not a large general printing office; a large printing office; I print very little except in connection with newspapers.
701. You print three newspapers? Yes.
702. I understood you did jobbing too? On a very limited scale.
703. This Committee is appointed to inquire into the working of the Government Printing Office, and perhaps you can give the Committee information as to the rates of wages ruling in Sydney now. What does a good compositor, on what is called the establishment, obtain? From £2 10s.* to £3 a week; £3 5s. some; £3 7s. 6d. are the highest wages that I pay.†
704. Could you command the best hands at £3 7s. 6d.? I have no difficulty in getting those that I want.
705. Compositors to whom you pay these rates are, in your judgment, good hands? The best. I only pay one man £3 7s. 6d.
706. How many men might you have on your establishment? About seventy people altogether.
707. I mean on what is called the establishment, at weekly wages? Not more than eight, I think.
708. What are the lowest rates you pay—establishment wages to journeymen compositors? I think the lowest rate that I pay for journeymen compositors is £2 10s.‡ But I must explain that these men that I am speaking of on the establishment are not employed picking up types; they are making up, and things of that kind. I do not employ any compositors at a weekly rate of wages picking up types.
709. They are compositors, but are not employed in composition? Of course they do a small portion of that between whiles, if anything requires it in the office; but as a rule, they are employed not in picking up types, but in arranging matter, making-up, and so on.
710. They are employed to do anything that has to be done in connection with printing, and they are placed on the establishment because they are competent to do anything? Yes; and as a rule they are very superior hands.
711. If required to set type they can set it, and if required to do anything else in relation to the printing business they can do it? That is it.
712. Then your establishment wages are from £2 10s. to £3 7s. 6d.? £3 7s. 6d. to one; £3 5s. the next; £3 3s.; £3, and so on.
713. All of your staff employed, as a rule, in setting type, are paid by the thousand? Yes.
714. How much per thousand? Ten-pence; by time, 1s. 3d. per hour.
715. We have a return here of the hands employed in the Government Printing Office, and I see that some of them are employed at a fixed salary of £200 per annum. Do you consider that a fair rate? That is a higher rate than is ruling in the Colonies at present; but I do not think it is a high rate, looking at how good men in the Government Service are generally paid.
716. It has been explained by the Government Printer that these salaries of £200 per annum are only given to men who have proved themselves, in all respects, competent, trustworthy, and meritorious men, by length of service? Quite so. I do not think it too high, considering that a Government establishment could not take advantage of the changes in the labour market in the way that a private establishment would. I do not consider it an excessive rate of wages for the class of men, by any means.
717. Have you had your attention at any time turned to the question, which has often been raised in the Legislature and other places, as to whether it would be more economical to have the public printing done by contract or not? I am certain that as a matter of pounds, shillings, and pence—if we look at nothing else—it would be very much more economical to have it done at a schedule of prices by contract; but whether that would be a judicious step in other respects I cannot undertake to say. There might be many reasons which would make it desirable that the Government should maintain a printing office.
718. It is the case in the other Colonies, I believe? It is. I do not see how, without some printing office, either a small one or a large one, the printing for the Government is to be carried on. A small one might do if the great mass of the work were given out by contract; but I do not see how you could do without some Government establishment.
719. That is for printing confidential matter? Yes.

S. Bennett,
Esq.

4 Oct., 1870.

720.

* NOTE (on revision):—This should be £2 15s.

† NOTE (on revision):—The men on the piece often earn much higher wages—£4 to £4 5s.

‡ Revised:—£2 15s.

S. Bennett,
Esq.

4 Oct., 1870.

720. And for printing under emergency, as well as under special direction, where there would be constant communication between a department and the printing office? Quite so. And in many cases, even where the matter is not confidential, things are put into type, I should suppose, before it is desirable that the public should know anything about them.

721. In connection with any proposal for doing the Government printing by contract, do you not think there would be great risk, if the expensive plant of the Government Printing Office were leased to private persons? There would be risk. That would have to be looked after very carefully.

722. Would it not be almost sure to be more or less injured in a way in which, if it were private property, it would not suffer? Looking at the general results in such cases, one would think so. You mean beyond reasonable wear and tear?

723. Any person leasing that machinery and plant would scarcely take the same care of it as he would of his own? No; unless he were bound to do so under very severe penalties, and were under very strict supervision.

724. Has your attention been directed to the extent to which the Government Printing Offices in Canada and the United States are used for printing valuable information relating to the resources and capabilities of those countries? I am not aware about Canada, but I know the Printing Office of the United States is made very useful in that way. I have seen many works that have been published there.

725. Do you think the Government Printing Office of this Colony might be made beneficial by being directed more to the issue of works of a permanent character, relating to the resources and capabilities of the country—a book on the mineral resources of the country, for instance? I think it could be; but whether that kind of work could be done as cheaply as by private persons is, I think, a question. If the Government Printing Office is not so economically conducted as private establishments, the Government had better employ a private establishment to do such work as that; unless they should take this view,—that having, at certain times, the plant and staff not fully employed, there might be opportunities of doing it without loss to the Government.

726. Might not a large part of the printing which is done now be, without any injury to anybody, omitted? I think so. I am not aware of the number of papers they print for the Council and Assembly, but I think they print duplicates of everything, a very large number for both Houses. In many things I think economy could be practised.

727. Is it not within your knowledge that returns are very often printed, which are somewhat expensive on account of their bulk, but which only relate to local matters having no special general interest, and which no one reads? Yes, there are things notoriously so. There was the case of Mrs. Bentley, one of those extraordinary cases in which the Government printed a volume of seven or eight hundred pages. There are many other instances.

728. What I wished to get at was whether you had thought on the subject at all, and were prepared to give any opinion whether the printing office might not be more judiciously employed in printing works of general interest? I have not turned my attention to that point. I have always regarded it in this way,—that if the Government wanted any printed works brought out, of the kind you mention, they could get them done cheaper by getting them printed by tender, supposing they had not an establishment which was idle or partly idle during part of the year. As the Government has a printing office in existence, which during a considerable portion of the year probably has hardly enough work to keep it going, perhaps it might be cheaper to get such works printed at their own office than by tender.

729. What do you pay your machinist—you have a machinist, I presume? £3 5s. per week.

730. Is that the highest rate you pay? That is the highest rate in the machine-room.

731. Have you an assistant machinist? There are four or five men in the machine-room. These are the men that lay on and so on, paid from £2 5s. to £3 5s. per week.

732. Is there any special foreman over your printing department, as distinguished from the composing department? No, I do that myself. I may say that perhaps the wages I pay and the general management of my establishment are hardly a fair criterion for others, because I am there from morning till late at night, and superintend everything myself. Not being there, I should have to pay very much higher wages to some men to look after the work that I now do myself. You are aware that there are men that are very good men if you keep an eye over them, who would not be quite so efficient without good superintendence. If I were not there so much myself, I should have to pay more expensive salaries to overseers.

733. Mr. Piddington.] What description of Government work do you think could not be entrusted to a contractor, supposing that system were established here? I think it could be entrusted to a contractor. I do not mean to say it could not be entrusted to him; but I doubt whether a Government would like to have Bills, for instance, which they are preparing, put in type at the contractor's office, long before the public knew anything about them. I should think they would rather have some establishment of their own, where they could be set up until their form was finally decided upon.

734. Supposing the printing now done at the Government Printing Office were performed by a contractor, would there be anything in that circumstance to prevent the contractor exercising his discretion in keeping the matter secret, if called upon to do so? The contractor himself personally do you mean?

735. Or those in his employ? As a rule there is a sort of freemasonry amongst printers, as to not saying anything about matters going on in the office. There is no peculiar difficulty at all events, although, as you know, it must be in the hands of a great number of men.

736. Is there, in your opinion, any more effective security for confidence in the circumstance that the men employed by the Government Printing Office are now paid by the Government, than would exist if the men were employed by a private contractor? I should think there would be more danger, on the whole, with a private contractor than with people permanently employed by the Government, because there are constant changes in private printing offices. Men come in for a week or two, and you have not that knowledge of the men and that claim on their reticence and consideration which there would be where they are employed permanently at good wages.

737. Supposing one of the conditions imposed upon the contractor would be that he was not to perform any other work than the Government work, would that risk exist then? Not to so great an extent.

738. Would there be any difference in the possibility of securing confidence in the one case more than in the other, supposing the Government Printer, being a contractor, was restricted from doing general work for the public? Do I understand you to mean that the Government Printer should be made the contractor with his present staff?

739. With any staff he might employ, but with his business restricted to work ordered by the Government or the Legislature? I do not think there would.

740. If the rule in the Government Printing Office is to appoint apprentices to the establishment simply because they have been apprenticed, and not on the ground of their efficiency as compositors, do you think that a sound rule? It is a rule, where apprentices have served their time, to take them on at the end of the time, and then to treat them, after they go on as workmen, much the same as other workmen would be treated.

S. Bennett,
Esq.

4 Oct., 1870.

741. Supposing you had to employ an additional number of men, and you were applied to by a first-class compositor who had not been on your establishment, and at the same time you happened to have an apprentice just out of his time, would you or would you not make the selection of the additional hand on the ground of efficiency simply? I should give the apprentice the preference certainly.

742. Supposing he was not equal in ability to the other applicant? Yes, I would. Having served his time with me I should consider myself bound to give him a chance.

743. Chairman.] Is it not a rule in nearly all establishments to employ the apprentices if they can in any capacity? Quite so.

744. Mr. Piddington.] Then in the event of your having work to give, you would not be guided by the efficiency of the applicant, but by some other reason? In the case of an apprentice who had served his time with me, I should certainly not think of discharging him to take on another man; I should give him the preference.

745. Supposing the apprentice was not equal to the discharge of the duties you required him to discharge as a compositor? There are all grades of compositors. It is rather difficult to answer that question.

746. Are you aware that it is the rule in the Government Printing Office to appoint to the establishment, at salaries varying from £150 to £240, the apprentices? No, I know very little of the working of the Government Printing Office. What you state to me now is quite new. Will you allow me to explain that in taking on an apprentice when out of his time, I should exercise my judgment whether I should put him on the establishment at weekly wages, or whether I should put him on his lines, to earn his wages at so much per thousand.

747. That is just the point on which I wish to have an answer. Supposing that in the Government Printing Office there are fifty compositors on the establishment, paid by monthly salaries, varying from £150 to £240 a year, and supposing that there are in the same office ten or eleven hands, called supernumerary hands, chiefly employed at piece-work; if one or more of these supernumerary hands happened to be a first-class compositor, and one of the apprentices in the printing office happened to be on the eve of completing his apprenticeship, and the question was whether the first-class compositor should be placed on the establishment, or the inferior hand, who had just completed his apprenticeship—would you approve of a system which would give the preference to the apprentice? I should act in this way:—If the apprentice just out of his time were an indifferent workman, I would put him on at so much per thousand. If I wanted a man on the establishment, I should take on the best man in the office who had been on the lines previously.

748. In employing any new hand, would you not, as a general rule, be guided by the efficiency of the parties employed in connection with an establishment such as the Government Printing Office? You mean in competition with an apprentice?

749. On an establishment where the wages are paid monthly? Decidedly; that is the principal element one would look at in selecting men at weekly or monthly wages. I would not put an apprentice upon the establishment unless he was very efficient. But I do not make this difference in my office, because those men that work on their lines are just as permanently employed as the others. Supernumeraries are what are called grass hands, who come to assist merely when the office is busy.

750. In the Government Printing Office there are eleven or twelve extra hands, who are compositors, and some of whom are good compositors, and in the same office there are thirty or forty hands on the establishment. Supposing you were Government Printer, I would ask whether, in making your selection, upon having additional work to perform, and more hands being required, you would select the best compositor on account of his efficiency, or an apprentice who happened to be inferior? I would, in such a case, put the apprentice in the position in which the man was that I took on the establishment. What I wish you to understand is that, other things being equal, except ability, I should keep the apprentice at per thousand, to earn as much as he could. I mean that I would continue to give him employment, not necessarily that I would put him on the establishment at the higher rate of wages. You see the Government Printing Office is so different from a private printing office that the technicalities do not apply. For the establishment I should decidedly select an efficient hand.

751. If the practice in the Government Printing Office is to give the preference to apprentices, whether they are first-class compositors or not, would you consider that a sound system? No, I would not; quite the reverse. You understand the distinction I draw between discharging an apprentice, when out of his time, and taking on a more efficient man, at piece-work.

752. You could dispose of the apprentice on piece-work? Yes, that is what I mean, in stating that I should not take on a stranger to the prejudice of an apprentice. I should provide for the apprentice on piece-work. The difference in the earnings of men at piece-work is something monstrous.

753. Have you any objection to explain to the Committee how vacancies which occur among your framers are filled, and from what source? There are always a few men—we may call them supernumeraries—say half a dozen—that come on whenever they are wanted. That I have nothing to do with myself. The men who are framers put these men into their frames, supposing they are not objectionable on the ground of being drunkards or otherwise. The father of the chapel would come to me and ask, would I have any objection to so and so coming on at grass; I say no; and he takes his frame in rotation.

754. Are these supernumeraries persons just out of their apprenticeship? No, persons coming from other Colonies, perhaps, who have no settled employment.

755. Men whom you would assume to be quite equal to discharge the duty of good compositors? Quite so. They are men who are perhaps not so steady as other men—men who will not remain long enough to get a frame in any place—a wandering class of compositors.

756. They would be appointed on account of their expertness? Yes. They take their chance of getting employment, according to the time they have been in the office. I do not interfere with it at all; I find it best to let the compositors manage it among themselves.

757. Do you conceive it necessary that the reader should be a compositor, and if so, would you select him from your best workmen? Yes, I very much prefer a reader who is a compositor; in fact, it is difficult to get on with a reader who is not a compositor. The best workmen will not take the place of reader, because they can earn more at piece-work.

S. Bennett,
Esq.

4 Oct., 1870.

758. Supposing that there was a change of practice at the Government Printing Office, and the Government advertised the building and plant to be used by some contractor, under stringent conditions with regard to the stock and plant and the use of it, do you think that, under such circumstances, a contract could be taken that would be more beneficial to the public in a pecuniary point of view than the present system? It is my impression that it could; but I have not gone into any calculation that would justify me in giving a reliable opinion. Looking at the fact that Government work is generally paid for at a much higher rate than private people can do it for, the Government Printing Establishment has always struck me as one of the most economically conducted departments; but comparing it with private establishments, it is not.

759. Are you acquainted with the system under which the printing for the Houses of Parliament at home is contracted for? No.

760. Chairman.] Are you aware that all the postage stamps are printed at the Government Printing Office? Yes.

761. It is absolutely necessary to have an establishment for printing the postage stamps and duty stamps? Yes, I could not conceive the doing without some establishment of the kind.

762. You are aware of the peculiar character of the printing required for the Government Railways—that railway tickets, for example, are not printed by the ordinary process of letter-press printing, but by a process invented for the purpose? I am not particularly acquainted with it; I merely looked at it in going through the Government Printing Office on one occasion some time since.

763. I merely wanted to ascertain whether you thought that under any circumstances that branch of the establishment could be conducted by contract? I have not given the subject any consideration.

764. Mr. Piddington.] Are you aware that until very lately, railways in England have been the property of private Companies? Yes; they are so still.

765. In what way is the printing for these railways carried out—is it not by contract? I have no knowledge.

766. If the railways of England are not under the superintendence of the Government, is it likely that private Companies would not contract for the work? Private Companies would no doubt contract for the work.

767. As private Companies must print railway tickets in England, in the same way as the Government prints them here,—if private Companies let their work by contract, could not the Government do the same with their railway tickets? I have not expressed any opinion opposite to that.

768. But I think you have expressed an opinion that with regard to printing Post Office Stamps, a Government establishment should still be maintained? I think it would be better.

Francis Cunningham, Esq., called in and examined:—

F. Cunningham,
Esq.

4 Oct., 1870.

769. Chairman.] You are proprietor of a large printing office in Sydney? Yes.

770. Is your office the largest of the kind in Sydney, away from the newspaper offices? I think so.

771. How many hands do you employ—have you any objection to state? Not the least. About forty or thereabouts; sometimes more.

772. Yours is a general jobbing office? Yes.

773. Including book-work, printing one or two newspapers, commercial printing, fancy cards—in fact, nearly every description of printing? Every description of it.

774. You will necessarily have a number of compositors on what is called the establishment? Yes.

775. And you have some on piece-work? Not at present.

776. Is it the practice of a general printing office, rendered necessary by the exigencies of the business, to have a portion of the compositors always on the establishment? It is generally so. It must be so, from the various nature of the work to be done.

777. Would it not impose serious impediments to the working of the office, if the whole of the compositors in a jobbing office were on piece-work, at per thousand? It would.

778. They frequently require to be changed from one work to the other? Yes. It could not be managed well.

779. What is the highest rate you pay to compositors on the establishment? £2 10s. per week.

780. That is the highest? That is the highest.

781. Have you any compositors employed because they are compositors, but who nevertheless are not actually setting letter, but are engaged in other occupations relating to general printing? No; except the overseer.

782. Have you any compositors on piece-work? Not at present.

783. None whatever? None whatever.

784. The whole of your compositors are on the establishment? Yes.

785. And the highest rate you give them is £2 10s. per week? Yes.

786. This Committee, as you are probably aware, is appointed to inquire into the working of the Government Printing Office. It has been given in evidence that some of the compositors in the Government Printing Office, who are on the establishment, are paid at the rate of £200 a year—Do you consider that a high rate of wages? I could not afford to pay it.

787. I think it ought to be explained that these salaries are limited apparently to four compositors, and it is stated by the Government Printer that they are only paid as a reward for long and steady service, to those hands who have been in the office a long time, and who, in addition to their competency as compositors, have commended themselves to the establishment by their steadiness and trustworthiness and general good qualities—Does any principle of that kind obtain in your establishment? No, nothing of that kind. We can get plenty of hands glad to get work at £2 10s.

788. You print by machinery of course? Yes.

789. How many machines have you? Four.

790. You know the machines used in the Government Printing Office for ordinary printing? Yes, I have one similar.

791.

791. You have a machine equal in its capability to the machines generally used in the Government Printing Office? Yes.
792. Are your machines worked by steam? Yes.
793. Have you a machinist in charge? I do not keep any one in charge. I have a young man who has served his time and acquired a knowledge of the machines there.
794. What is the highest rate you pay to a machinist? I may say this young man had served his time with me, and had left, but offered his services to come back for the express purpose of acquiring a knowledge of working the machines. He had served his time to working a hand-press, and in consideration of getting a knowledge of working machines, he offered his services at something like 30s. a week.
795. What are you paying him now? £2 5s.
796. £2 5s. is the highest rate of wages you pay in connection with your machinery? Yes.
797. How many persons are under him? There are three machines continually going. The four machines are not always going. There are two hands at each machine—two hands at the machine he works himself at; he simply attends to the furnace and boiler and engine, and sees that they are carefully kept.
798. Are you acquainted with the letter-press work of the Government Printing Office? I have seen it often.
799. Is your office capable of turning out work equal to it? Yes, I have no hesitation in saying so.
800. Could you print a book as well as the Government Printing Office? I think so.
801. Could you print fancy work as well? I think so; in fact I have no doubt of it.
802. How many apprentices are there out of the forty persons in your employ? I think we have something like thirteen journeymen, and the remainder are apprentices; a good many of them upon their last year, some of them on their third and fourth years. There are thirteen journeymen besides my partner.
803. Have you got as many as twenty-seven apprentices at different stages? *Yes, I dare say we have; not indented apprentices.
804. Do you do any bookbinding in your establishment? Yes.
805. Does the number forty include those employed in bookbinding? Yes.
806. They would have to be deducted from the apprentices? Yes; one journeyman and I think four apprentices are employed bookbinding.
807. What do you pay the journeyman bookbinder? £2 10s.
808. I see by a return before me that in the bookbinding branch of the Government Printing Office there is a foreman and also a sub-overseer, and that the foreman receives £300 a year, nearly £6 a week—is that fair wages? I could not afford to pay it. I may tell you the reason why. The competition runs so very high here in printing and bookbinding that it is impossible for me or anybody else to pay these salaries.
809. Should you consider £200 a year high wages for a bookbinder? To one man as the head of the establishment do you mean?
810. The head is the foreman, at £300, then there is the sub-overseer at £230, then a bookbinder at £200, and three others at £180 each? Before I answer that question, might I ask how many are in the book-binding department.
811. Nineteen, with apprentices, or altogether, with girls and women, twenty-six—seven girls? If I had as many as that I should pay one overseer £4 a week, but I should make him do the overseeing entirely.
812. Have you ever thought on the question which has been raised sometimes of putting the Government printing out—inviting tenders for it to be done by contract? Yes, I have conversed with one and another about the matter some time ago, not latterly.
813. Do you think it could be done by contract without any inconvenience to the Public Service? I think the principal portion of the work might be done by contract, without any inconvenience to the Public Service.
814. Such work as the Gazette, for instance? Yes.
815. Do you think it could be done cheaper? I do.
816. Materially cheaper? Well, I think my statement of the wages I pay myself would lead you to the inference that it could be done cheaper.
817. Mr. Piddington.] May I ask if the compositors employed by you are all paid at one rate? No, we pay them from £2 5s. to £2 10s.
818. You have a considerable number of apprentices? Yes.
819. If you required to add to your establishment, from an influx of new work—supposing there were a demand upon you for double the work you are now possessed of—would you give a preference to a competent compositor or to one of these apprentices? We generally give it to a journeyman. If it is a work of any magnitude we give it to a journeyman, and he takes the management of it.
820. If it were necessary for you to employ new hands, you would proceed upon the principle of selecting the best compositor you could obtain? Yes.
821. If the rule in the Government Printing Office is rather the opposite to that, namely, to employ apprentices, without reference to their efficiency as compositors, and to reject first-class compositors, do you consider that a good rule? By no means.
822. Might not the present plant and building used as the Government Printing Office be let, upon conditions intended to secure the property of the Government, to any printer who contracted to do the printing—Supposing there were a change of system, and we no longer had a Government Printing Office, what I want to know is whether you think the present plant and building could be utilized by being let on conditions to any contractor who would undertake to print the work required by the Government? Yes, I think so; I do not see any difficulty. I think you would find contractors to undertake the work.
823. Are you of opinion that such persons could find good responsible sureties for the safety and condition of the plant placed under their charge? I can merely speak for myself in that matter.
824. I am merely putting it in the abstract. Do you think it is not likely that any person offering to contract would be able to find sureties for the safety of the property entrusted to him? I do not think there would be any doubt about it.
825. Some doubt has been expressed upon the point whether some of the Government work might not be of a confidential character. I would like to ask whether, supposing you yourself happened to be the successful successful tenderer, you could not secure the privacy of any documents the Government wished to keep private, until they gave you permission to issue them? I think so. I may tell you we have a document of the kind ourselves to print for the Trade Protection Society, which is not supposed to emanate at all, and I have never heard that it has done so, though I have printed it for some considerable time now. In the same way other documents could be managed.

* NOTE (on revision):—The twenty-seven consist of apprentices, improvers, machine-boys, press-boys, and girls in connection with the binding department.

826. That publication is essentially of a confidential nature? Yes.

827. Are not Joint Stock Companies' reports very often confidential until they are made known to the shareholders? Yes.

828. Is there any difficulty in maintaining strict privacy in regard to documents of that description? I do not think so. You cannot, of course, prevent the compositors who are setting up the matter, or the machine-men, from becoming acquainted with them; but it is an understood rule that matters of that kind are held sacred.

829. Is there any reason why there should be a greater amount of confidence in a printing office controlled by the Government than in the office of a contractor contracting with the Government? I do not think so.

THURSDAY, 27 OCTOBER, 1870.

Present:—

MR. ALLEN,

MR. SAMUEL,

MR. WILSON.

WILLIAM R. PIDDINGTON, Esq., IN THE CHAIR.

Mr. Francis Campbell Brewer examined:—

Mr. F. C.
Brewer.

27 Oct., 1870.

830. Chairman.] Are you a practical printer? I am.

831. Where are you employed, and in what capacity? At the Herald Office. I am Sub-editor, and Superintendent of a portion of the mechanical department.

832. How many compositors are there employed in the Herald Office? I think about sixty.

833. How many of those are what you would term permanent hands? We have a rule of the office that all persons employed are considered permanent.

834. Then you consider that the entire body of compositors is permanently employed? Yes. There is a distinction made between some, but that has no reference to permanency.

835. In the case of a vacancy in the staff of compositors, from what source would you recruit;—for instance, if half a dozen left you, would you engage the best compositors in the market, or would you resort to apprentices? The Messrs. Fairfax would engage compositors.

836. The best you could find? The best class of compositors they could find.

837. You would not transfer any apprentices you might happen to have to the position of the vacant frames? Not until they had served their apprenticeship. The apprentices work at the business, of course, but they are not considered as journeymen—they do not take the places of journeymen.

838. In the event of there being a vacancy for six compositors in the Herald Office, would you resort to apprentices (supposing there were some of them unemployed) to fill up the position of first-class compositors? That is a question I can hardly answer, because there are no unemployed apprentices under any circumstances.

839. Would you promote apprentices? No, we should not do that.

840. You would go into the market for the purpose of supplying the vacancy in your establishment? We should.

841. Do you know how many apprentices you have? Five I think.

842. How many readers have you? There are four altogether.

843. Have you any one in the office now as a computer? We have one who checks the work—he is the only computer in the office.

844. Is checking the work his sole duty? No, he is a reader as well.

845. Is he a first-class compositor? Yes.

846. I presume that in the Herald Office piece-work is the rule? Yes, all piece-work.

847. Are all the Herald compositors paid at one rate? All.

848. What is the rate given to compositors? 13d. a thousand.

849. You do not employ time-hands? Yes, we have some time-hands, but they have some little position above an ordinary compositor.

850. Have they any peculiar duty to perform? Yes.

851. Will you describe what it is? The hands who make up the paper, for instance—who make up the columns—they are on weekly wages the same as the readers.

852. Their duties require considerable care? Peculiar care, and a special faculty for it.

853. Are those the men who are sometimes known in the trade as stone-hands? No, they are called makers-up; there is no particular distinction between stone-hands and compositors, because compositors are supposed to do the work at the stone; they are called clickers at Home.

854. How much per hour do you pay these special men? They are paid by the week.

855. How much by the week? I do not know whether I can give the Committee that information without inquiring of my employer.

856. With regard to these particular hands—if in the morning what you call pie should be found upon the imposing-stone, would a compositor be required to put it into case in his own time? There is a particular rule for the distribution of pie: all the pie gathered together in one day is distributed all round; each man has a small share of it, and has to distribute it, as it would be exceedingly difficult to discover who makes the pie. By this means we establish a sort of police, and one watches the other.

857. You do not concentrate that duty in the hands of a few out of the whole number? No, unless a man is seen to make a large quantity of pie, and then he is forced to distribute it; but the usual accumulation is, in the morning, divided among all the compositors.

858. Is it, in your opinion, necessary that a reader in a printing office should be a compositor? I do not think it is, though he should be, to a certain extent, acquainted with the business. No doubt a compositor who is competent to read makes the best reader.

Mr. F. C.
Brewer.

859. If you had two applicants for the position of a reader—one a first-class compositor and the other not—to which would you give the preference? Supposing both to be equal as readers, I should take the compositor.

27 Oct., 1870.

860. Can you say whether you employ a compositor to look over the fount-room? That is done by one of the time-hands. We have not a very large fount-room.

861. As a rule, what is your opinion with regard to the comparative advantage of piece over time work? Piece-work always ensures getting value for money; that is, if you can apply the principle to the kind of work. When a man is working on time you have no check upon the work; and it was found, when the principle of piece was introduced, the men did a great deal more work in less time than under the other system.

862. Then it is far more economical, in your opinion, to employ compositors on the piece system than on time, when they can be so employed? I think so. Another advantage is, that they do not require so much watching.

863. Have you heard any complaints of the conduct of overseers in the Government Printing Office towards the men? Yes; I have heard, on two or three occasions, some slight complaints.

864. Have you, on any occasion, heard complaints of a similar nature with regard to the overseers in your own employment, as respects the men? No, there have been no complaints that I am aware of.

865. Have you ever heard of any reports of a demoralizing character with regard to the Government Printing Office, such as gambling, betting on horse-racing—? I have not heard of any gambling, but I have heard there has been some betting between some persons in the office—between compositors and some persons in authority; but I believe betting is practised more or less in almost every establishment,—I believe it is in our own; but I am sure that if Mr. Fairfax knew that any of his overseers betted with the men he would speak to them about it.

866. Have you heard of this practice of betting between some of the overseers in the Government Printing Office and the men? Yes, I have heard it.

867. What do you think of the proposal to carry on the printing at the Government Printing Office on the principle of public contract, as other work is done for the Government? I am not a job printer, though I have learnt the business, and am therefore hardly competent to give an opinion about it; but it appears to me that the work done at the Government Printing Office is so very complicated that it would require a special establishment to do it all. No doubt a great deal of the work might be done by contract cheaper than now, but whether it would be done so well, or whether it would be so convenient as at present, I could not say; my own impression is that it would not.

868. What portion of the work that is now printed at the Government Printing Office could not be printed by a contractor? I think it could all be printed by a contractor, but I do not think it would be done with such convenience, or so well; for instance, the Votes and Proceedings might be printed—

869. When you say it would not be done with such convenience, what particular work do you allude to? Such work as the brands, for instance, and work of that kind—very heavy work.

870. You allude to brands on stock as being of a peculiar character? Yes, of very peculiar character; and other work, such as reports with plans, I think could not be done so cheaply by contract, or not more cheaply than by the Government Office.

871. Do you think it possible, in order to take advantage of the cheaper system of doing work by contract than by day-work, that the Government Printing Office might be let to a contractor who should be placed in the position of Government Printer? Of course it could be let to any contractor the Government would accept.

872. In such a case, supposing the plant were let, do you think it impossible a contractor could be found to give good and sufficient security to the Government for the safety of the plant? I do not know; I could not say.

873. I ask you whether you think it is impossible a contractor could be found? I could not say whether it is impossible or not. I do not know whether a contractor could be found who could give security for such valuable plant.

874. Are you of opinion that a contractor in Sydney could not be found? No, I am not.

875. If a competent printer could be found to enter into a contract of that description, do you not think it would be more economical to the public than the present system of day-work? If he took the whole office, yes; but not if the work were let out piecemeal, and only a portion were done in the office.

876. Are you aware that there are upwards of twenty compositors on what is called the establishment in the Government Printing Office? I do not know the number.

877. It appears on a return from the office that there are so many employed, at salaries varying from £150 a year to £240—sub-overseer £240—Do you not think that an expensive system as compared with the system of piece-work? Some of these hands who receive the higher rates of wages perform duties that could not be done by the piecers. I apprehend they are sub-overseers.

878. No; out of the number I mention there appear to be one sub-overseer, one computer, and the rest rank as compositors. If it be the rule in the Government Printing Office that compositors should be paid at yearly wages, varying from £150 to £240 a year, would you consider that the most economical mode of engaging compositors as compared with piece-work? It is a rather difficult question to answer, because I do not know the work these persons have to do.

879. You are acquainted with the work connected with the parliamentary printing—the Votes and Proceedings, Reports from Select Committees, Government Gazette, and so on? I think straight-away matter such as the Votes and Proceedings, and so forth, might be more economically done by contract; but in many parliamentary papers many corrections are made, which would all have to be paid for. Every separate correction would be charged.

880. Do you think there are a larger number of corrections in ordinary parliamentary printing than in other printing? I think so; in what I have seen.

881. Mr. Samuel. Have you visited the Government Printing Office? I have on one or two occasions.

882. Recently? No; I have not been in the office since Mr. Sharkey introduced his photo-lithography; I went to see that about seven or eight months ago I think.

883. You have spoken of having heard complaints of the conduct of overseers towards the men—Do you remember

Mr. F. C.
Brewer.

27 Oct., 1870.

remember what the nature of those complaints was? I have heard that some of the overseers spoke very roughly—not in the way I think persons in authority ought to address those under them.

884. Am I to infer that you considered their conduct was overbearing or rude? I should prefer the term rude to overbearing.

885. I think you said that men who are employed by time require more looking after than when employed on piece-work? Yes, I think so, unless there is a system of check similar to that of piece-work—which I think exists in the Government Printing Office.

886. Is it not possible that complaints may be made by men, of harshness against an overseer who takes only the proper steps for the maintenance of discipline? Yes, no doubt that is possible; but the persons who have spoken to me about it—I have not asked for the information—have said that the overseers are in the habit of swearing at the men; and I think there could be no mistake about that being harsh and improper conduct towards men like compositors, who are supposed to have some sense of proper self-respect.

887. Did you hear the names of those individuals who used this language? No, I did not.

888. You have had experience of the management of a large establishment? Yes, for twenty years.

889. Have you ever heard, where persons having the management of an establishment, in the exercise of their duty have had to complain of the conduct of the men, that their treatment has been represented as harsh, although it may have been no more than was necessary for the maintenance of discipline? Yes.

890. You have spoken of betting between the men and the overseers—Will you tell us the nature of those bets—was the betting of such a character as to demoralize the establishment in any way? I have understood the betting has been principally on horse-racing. I must confess that in my opinion an overseer should not bet with the men over whom he is placed; I think it is a very bad principle.

891. Have you heard the names of the overseers who did this? I have, but I should not like to mention them.

892. Are they on the establishment now? I believe so.

893. Are the men also who betted with them? That I could not say. I did not hear who the persons were who betted with the overseers.

894. Was this betting going on during the working hours? That I cannot say. I am not aware whether the bets were made in the office at all.

895. Is not the social position of the overseer and of the compositor under him much about the same? Yes, outside the office; of course inside the office there is a distinction.

896. Would you consider that if they met in their own house, or in some hotel, and betted together after working hours, that would be a matter that you in your establishment ought to take notice of? I think Mr. Fairfax would do so. Of course I am merely expressing my opinion.

897. You said if a person could be got to lease the working of the Government Printing Office, the work might be more economically done than it is at present? I think probably it would be.

898. What difference would there be in letting the whole of the Government Printing Office in that way, from having the work done by contract at other establishments? I do not think the whole work could be done by any establishment in Sydney; they would want special plant for Government work. Of course a portion of the work, such as the Votes and Proceedings, might be done, but the more complicated work would require special plant.

899. Do you think it would be advisable for the Government to give over their valuable plant to a contractor, under any security they could obtain? If they were covered by a good security I do not see that the Government could lose by it, although the plant might be damaged.

900. Could any security be taken to prevent plant leased for a limited time being overworked? No. Of course if it were leased out there would be no check against the working of the material, for whosoever might lease it would work it as much or as little as he liked.

901. Do you know of any reason why Government should not secure the very best management, and the highest class of labour? No.

902. There is nothing you know of to prevent it? No.

903. Supposing that to be possible, do you not think they could do the work as well, and as economically, as any other establishment? Yes, I think they should; of course I do not say whether it is so or not.

904. You decline to tell us what person in authority betted with his men? I do not wish to mention the name.

905. The complaint against the overseers was that they used language—you think, from what you heard—was of a character that ought not to have been used by persons in authority to those under them? Yes. I know if the overseers in the Herald Office used such language as I have been told was used in the Government Printing Office, we should stop it directly.

906. It was mere hearsay? Mere hearsay.

907. Is there any jealousy of the men in the Government Printing Office, on the part of men in the same calling, as to the men having a better position there than in other offices? I am not aware of any jealousy, more than the ordinary jealousy with reference to all large establishments where there are some situations that are better than others.

908. Is not the Government Printing Office considered a better place to get into than any other office? Yes, I think the Government Printing Office is considered one of the best places to be permanently employed in.

909. Chairman.] On what ground do you suppose it is generally considered that the Government Printing Office is the best place for a printer to be employed in? Because the hours are more regular, and the salary is better than in other jobbing offices. I am not speaking now of a newspaper office. Of course in the Herald Office our work is always at night; at the Government Printing Office it is nearly all day-work, and the hours are much more regular than they can possibly be in a newspaper office. It is always looked upon as a respectable establishment by the trade outside.

910. Mr. Samuel.] You said a great deal of the work in the Government Printing Office was of a special character? Yes.

911. And that it was work that could be better performed there than in any other establishment? I think it can be more satisfactorily performed there than in the ordinary jobbing offices in the Colony. I think any person taking the Government work would require the Government plant to do a good deal of it.

912. Chairman.] I think you stated your opinion that the system of piece-work, in the calling of a printer, is the most economical mode of employment? Yes, I think it is.

913. If the system established in the Government Printing Office is not that of piece-work, but of time-work, would not that fact induce you to consider that the Government Printing Office is established on a principle not so economical as it would be if it were on the principle of piece-work? That is if we could apply the principle of piece-work to all the work done in the office, which I think we scarcely can. For instance, there is tabular matter, which by the rules of printers is paid for double. If that were done by piece-work it would come to more than if it were done by time, but simple work would be done more cheaply by piece than by time.

Mr. F. C.
Brewer.

27 Oct., 1870.

914. With respect to tabular matter, could not a special agreement be made between the contractor and compositors if necessary? Yes, of course, if the compositors were willing to take a less price than what they usually consider themselves entitled to.

915. Are you not aware that the great bulk of the printing is not tabular matter? Yes, but I am also aware that there is a great mass of tabular matter.

916. Mr. Samuel. In a newspaper office is not the entire staff employed with one object—the getting out of the paper? Yes.

917. In a general office the men are employed on all sorts of work? In a jobbing office, or a book office as it is called, they are; and the Government Office is a book office, where all kinds of work are done.

918. Are not men liable in an office like the Government Printing Office to be taken suddenly from one kind of work and put upon another? Yes.

919. Would not that create a difficulty in employing men on piece-work? I think not, if a scale of prices were fixed.

920. But there is a great variety of work in an office like the Government Printing Office—such as imposing forms? That could not be paid for on piece. In book offices the stone-hands or clickers are paid on time.

921. Do you think that the work could be better done by piece-work in the Government Printing Office than by time? I do not think it could be better done; some of it, perhaps, may be more cheaply done. Of course I am speaking only from my own experience in a newspaper office.

922. Have you well considered the work done at the Government Printing Office, and the nature of that work? I know the work pretty well.

923. And you give that reply knowing what the work is? Yes.

924. You do not think the work could be entirely done by piece-work? No; I think a great deal of the work must be done on time—that it would be more expensive to do it by piece-work.

925. Mr. Wilson. With regard to the question asked as to the overseers betting with the men at a public-house after work—Do you think the men can have the same respect for their overseers if they are in the habit of betting on horse-racing, winning or losing money with them, as they otherwise would have? I think not.

926. You think it would have the effect of destroying the proper tone and authority of these men over the compositors? That is my impression.

Mr. David Mason examined:—

927. Chairman. Are you a practical printer? I am.

Mr. D. Mason.

928. Where did you serve your apprenticeship? In Messrs. Mackenzie, White, & Co's. Office, Glasgow.

929. Is that a large establishment? They usually employed about 100 compositors, and had about seven or eight machines at work, and did all their binding.

27 Oct., 1870.

930. Have you had any other experience in other large establishments? I worked in one of the largest printing houses in Ireland, at Sims, Macintyre, & Co's., Belfast. I have worked also on the Liverpool Mercury, the House of Commons' Printing Office, London, the London Times, the Argus in Melbourne, and in the Government Printing Office in Melbourne.

931. Are you at present employed in the Government Printing Office in this city? I was until last night, when I was rather astonished to receive, without any previous complaint, or opportunity of defending myself, the paper which I now hand in containing my dismissal. (The witness handed in the same. Vide Appendix B.)

932. In this letter there are charges of insubordination and disrespectful behaviour towards the Superintendent and some other officers of the department, "more particularly since the appointment of the Select Committee to inquire into" its working. Are you aware of any such circumstances, especially since the appointment of this Select Committee? I have never been informed of a single act, either one way or other; there has not been a single charge made to me of any description.

933. Then you deny these charges of insubordination or disrespectful behaviour to the officers of the department? Yes, totally.

934. Either since the appointment of this Committee or prior to it? Either prior or since.

935. This is the first time you have been informed of any charges of the kind having ever been preferred against you? Yes.

936. This document is dated yesterday? I received it last night, some hours after I was directed to be here.

937. How long have you been in the Government Printing Office? About four years and three months. I was appointed on the 13th August, 1866.

938. And you have never been suspended for improper behaviour since? Once, while I was idle, Mr. Richards sent Mr. Adams to me for having taken part in a municipal election. It was when Messrs. Raphael, Josephson, and Andrews, stood for Bourke Ward; it was either two or three years ago. Previous to this—the year before—Mr. Moore and Mr. Buchan Thomson contested the election. Mr. Moore asked me could I come away and assist him in the election; I told him I could not at that time, as there was then work in the Government Printing Office, and I always objected to take any part in elections while there was work to be done there. Sometimes I have been as long as three or four months without having any work there, and I may have then taken part in municipal elections, but at this time I refused. Mr. Bell told Mr. Moore he would get permission for me from Mr. Richards, who was his son-in-law, as he was interested in Mr. Moore's election. He did so, and I was allowed permission to go for a month or six weeks if I wanted.

Mr. D. Mason. 939. Who gave you permission? Mr. Richards. I mention this to show that one year he gives me permission, and the next year he condemns me for doing the same thing.

27 Oct., 1870. 940. Is that the only case of insubordination alleged against you? There was the case of pie that took place on the 20th August. I will give the particulars—

941. Is that a case of alleged insubordination? There was no insubordination; I simply refused to do what I considered I had no right to do without being paid for it.

The witness proceeded to relate the circumstances of this case, when Mr. Samuel objected to the Committee entering upon the matter, as being beside the object of the inquiry.

The witness withdrew.

Committee deliberated.

Mr. Samuel withdrew his objection.

The witness was again called in, and in substance stated as follows:—

A quantity of pie was left upon the distributing stone, part of which I was required by Mr. D'Arrietta to distribute, although it was not mine. This I objected to do unless I was paid for it, and appealed to Mr. Richards, who said—"You must obey the directions of the overseer, whether they are just or unjust." I then stated the circumstances to Mr. Richards, and he said he would take them into consideration—

942. These are the only two cases of complaint you know of? I went to Mr. Richards on the Tuesday—having lost, for no fault of mine, a day and a half's work—and asked him the result of his consideration. He then, in a peremptory and tyrannical manner, said the best way to end the matter was for me to send in my resignation. I refused to do so; and he then rang the bell and called in Mr. Potter to go into the composing room and get a full report of the case, clearly showing that he had never asked for the report before.

943. Did you resign? I did not.

944. This took place in August last? Yes, on the 20th, and on the 23rd I saw Mr. Richards.

945. You have since been employed in the Government Printing Office until yesterday? No, not till yesterday. We have had another gratuitous insult heaped upon us. Ever since I have been there, we—that is the supernumerary staff—have always done the Votes and Proceedings at night, besides any other business there might be for us to do during the day. This has been the practice for the last four years. Last Tuesday night we were told we were not to come to the office for a week, and Mr. D'Arrietta said it was because private work was going on. Since then it has been said that Mr. D'Arrietta had no right to say so. Now I have worked on the Tariffs, the Estimates, and other important papers. I even assisted to set up Sir William Manning's opinion in reference to the Report of the Committee of Elections and Qualifications in Mr. Dean's case; and the other evening when Mr. Samuel sent for four copies of the Estimates, and persons were sent all over the town to get the men to attend to it, I lifted about fifty forms, and did work more fit for a labourer than a compositor, and pulled these four copies—

946. You mean to say that you have faithfully discharged your duties, and have in some cases been employed in matters supposed to be confidential, up to the present time? Yes; the other night I assisted to set up Sir William Manning's opinion on Dean's case; how then can there be any charge of dishonesty?

Mr. Samuel said the Government Printer had never made any charge of dishonesty or want of confidence against Mr. Mason, or of anything affecting his personal honor.

947. On Tuesday last the supernumerary hands were told they would not be required for a week? Yes, they were sent away in a manner unprecedented, either in the time of Mr. Samuel's or of Mr. Martin's administration. I never blamed the Treasurer for a moment. I knew a wrong statement had been made to him, but I was sure that a time would come when I should have an opportunity of vindicating myself, as I am not without friends in Sydney.

948. Have you heard any reason given for that suspension? That is the only reason I have heard,—Mr. D'Arrietta said there was private work going on. On Monday morning we went again, and offered our services to the overseer in charge. Mr. Potter came out, and said—"There will be no work yet for you, and you need not come here until you are sent for." "Indeed," I said, "what is the reason for that?" He said—"There is some investigation going on, and until that is over you will not be required." I asked whether there were any charges against me. He said he did not know. I said—"If there are any of them against me, I think it is only honest they should be given to me." I then went away, and did not again go to the office. I afterwards learned that some of the men who had been suspended had been treated in a very different way from myself; they were told to go in and see Mr. Richards, and were required to make a statement that they had had nothing to do with a question asked by Mr. Wilson in the House, with reference to the department. He said—"If you write that, I want to take it to the Colonial Treasurer." All who signed that statement are again at work.

949. And that statement was a denial of having any connection with the question put by Mr. Wilson to the Treasurer in the Legislative Assembly? Yes; and Mr. Richards told Mr. Trumper, one of the supernumerary staff, that he could not trust certain members of the supernumerary staff; that he himself was among the number, and the reason he said so was that he had seen him caballing with me on Hyde Park. That does not look as if he exonerated me.

950. Mr. Samuel.] I said no charge had been made to me affecting your honesty? That I could not be trusted.

951. Mr. Wilson.] How many men were suspended of the supernumerary staff? Thirteen. One was sick.

952. You say a number have since been employed? Nine; on their writing a statement to the Government Printer to the effect that they had nothing to do with the questions put by you.

953. Were you asked anything about that? I was not; I never had the opportunity of refuting the statement.

954. Have any of the other men who have not been reinstated had the opportunity of refuting the statement? I am not aware. I did not go to see Mr. Richards on the last affair. He had previously told me never to come any more to him with any complaints.

955. Since the appointment of this Committee have any other charges of insubordination been made against you? I am not aware of any.

956. Chairman.] What is your opinion of the system of management in—? I may state, before you proceed, as my character has been rather roughly handled, and as it has been stated about town that I have been suspended because I was not to be trusted with the Tariff, that during the last seven years I have been in Sydney, and before I went into the Government Printing Office I had an office of my own—I have been a master master printer. That my character, either at Home or ever since I have been in this country, either in Melbourne or here, has been unassailable, and has never been assailed. With regard to ability, I challenge the best man in the Government Printing Office to come along side me in any branch of my business. I have had to put up with a great deal of annoyance from the men who have been over us, who knew nothing of the piece system, but who were glad to get information from me and others; and as soon as they had learned a little, ignored the whole of the rules—not rules made by a Trade Association, such as the Unions, but rules made by half masters and half delegates sent by different houses in the trade, when I think Mr. Hansard—the grandfather of the present Mr. Hansard—was in the Chair. By these rules the rights of masters and men were decided; and it was my insisting upon the observance of these rules that has often brought me into collision with the overseers, because they did not know the working of the piece system.

957. With regard to the system of management of the Government Printing Office, have you formed any opinion with respect to it? Yes; the system of management in the Government Printing Office in Sydney is very faulty. We seldom see the Government Printer in our room; we may perhaps see him walk through once a day,* but he never comes to see what we are doing; he has never come to me during the four years and three months I have been there. Mr. Hansard's Superintendent is always in the office himself, and knows what every man is doing, and he never passes them without seeing how they are getting on.

958. How many persons are employed as overseers? There are six overseers in the composing branch.

959. Do you think all these overseers are necessary? They are not only unnecessary, but they keep the work back, for what one orders another countermands. I have several times got orders from the chief overseer, Mr. Adams, to go on with a certain style of work at night, and have been ordered in the morning by a sub-overseer to change it.

960. You are of opinion that the number of overseers employed in the office is unnecessarily large? Quite unnecessary. In Mr. Hansard's office, where the work done for Parliament amounted to about £70,000 in a year, there are only two overseers, besides Mr. Hansard's Superintendent.

TUESDAY, 1 NOVEMBER, 1870.

Present:—

MR. COWPER,

MR. WILSON.

CAPTAIN ONSLOW, R.N.,

WILLIAM R. PIDDINGTON, ESQ., IN THE CHAIR.

Mr. David Mason called in and further examined:—

961. Chairman.] If you recollect, on the occasion when you were last before the Committee, I inquired whether all the overseers employed in the Government Printing Office were necessary; and if not, how many would be. I am not sure whether you completed your answer to that question? I answered it in part. There are at the present time six overseers in the composing room; but in all the large offices that I have worked in—some of the largest in England, Ireland, and Scotland—they have never had more than two, with double the quantity of men. The offices of the morning papers are of course a little different, because one man could not stop up night after night, the long hours they have to work. They usually commence at 6 o'clock at night, and very often go on till 5 or 6 next morning. That, for six nights a week, would be too much. In the Argus office, we had the Superintendent, Mr. George, something the same as the Government Printer here, and two overseers, Mr. May and Mr. Jack, and they took alternate nights, but they did the whole of the overseeing themselves. There was only one gentleman in charge at a time, and they not only took the whole charge of the office and gave out copy, but when the copy was all out made up the paper. Now the overseers at the Government Printing Office here are non-working overseers, barring one, and he is not gazetted as an overseer at all, though he does an overseer's duty. I think you will find a Mr. Newman among the £200 a year men; he is really overseer of the Government Gazette, although not gazetted as such; Mr. D'Arrietta is gazetted as sub-overseer of the Government Gazette. Mr. Thrum, in the Bill room, is overseer of one man and a boy.

962. Mr. Wilson.] Does he work himself? I have very seldom seen him work in the four years and three months I have been there; almost not at all. If the Superintendent took his proper place, as he does in the Government Printing Office in Melbourne, with his desk in the middle of the composing room, I should say that two sub-overseers would be amply sufficient for all the requirements of the Government Printing Office, and one of them to take the night-shift alternate weeks when Parliament is sitting, as they do in Melbourne.

963. Chairman.] Are the overseers and the men on good terms, generally speaking? They are on pretty good terms with the permanent staff, although they seem to treat the supernumerary staff as a nuisance in the office. In fact I have been told so by an overseer, that we were a nuisance.

964. Did he state the reason why? I asked him the question, and he said he was not speaking to me, but I was at the stone at the time he said it. It was Mr. D'Arrietta who said so.

965. Are you aware of any betting transactions between the overseers and the young men in the office during business hours? It is quite a common practice during the time of the races—drawing sweepstakes, and betting on the Melbourne Cup and Sydney Cup, &c.

966. During the hours of business? Yes. It is well known that Mr. D'Arrietta has bets with a good many of the young men; and in money-lending Mr. D'Arrietta and Mr. J. W. Stewart are a kind of company; and Mr. George Kellick, the pay clerk, collects the money for them, deducting it from the wages on pay day, in pursuance of orders which he shows when he is going to pay them.

967. Captain Onslow.] What position does Mr. J. W. Stewart hold? He holds a permanent frame in the Gazette; I think he has £180 a year.

968. Chairman.] I asked with regard to the betting transactions? That is all I know about the betting transactions. I do not know how they arrange about the payment for them.

969. Do you say that Mr. D'Arrietta and Mr. Stewart are in the habit of lending money to the men? Yes, on usury.

Mr. D. Mason.

1 Nov., 1870.

970.

* NOTE (on revision):—Week.

Mr. D. Mason. 970. They do not lend without charging interest? Not that I have heard of.

971. You say Mr. Kellick deducts the money so lent, with interest, at the time they are paid? Yes.

1 Nov., 1870. 972. Do the overseers assume more authority in the discharge of their duties than is necessary, in your opinion? Yes, they assume more authority than ever I have known from masters in other offices.

973. Is that assumption of authority unnecessary, in your opinion, for the proper discipline of the office? Quite unnecessary.

974. Can you tell us of any case? I have heard Mr. Thomas Adams call a man, in business hours, in the office, a liar, and assert it over and over again, on two several occasions. I have heard him do so, and I do not think I ever heard a master make use of such an expression to a journeyman compositor before. I heard Mr. Adams call Mr. Taylor a liar, and I heard him call Mr. Banks a liar also, about two years intervening between the two cases.

975. Are the members of the permanent staff all competent compositors? Very far from it; many of them do not earn the money they receive, and could not do it if they were put to it. The copy is picked, which I can prove, because on one occasion Mr. Fairweather objected to some copy that Mr. D'Arrietta had given him, saying he had had some solid copy before, and would not be able to make his average on it. Mr. D'Arrietta immediately called him back, took the copy from him, and gave it to me.

976. Captain Onslow.] What do you mean by picked copy? Copy where there are no lines broken—solid or full lines, and table-work takes a longer time to do; but sometimes we get a table that can be done so easily that you can earn in three hours as much as an equal journeyman with yourself could earn in a whole day on solid copy.

977. Chairman.] I think you say that, according to your judgment, the compositors of the permanent staff are not all competent workmen? They are not; very far from it, many of them.

978. Can you give the Committee any idea of the proportion of compositors on the staff that you would not consider competent first-class compositors—Would you say one-fourth of them were not first-class compositors? I should be safely within the mark by saying one-half of them are not.

979. You are of opinion that one-half of the compositors on the permanent staff are not first-class compositors? If you will allow me that paper for a moment. (List of persons employed in the Government Printing Office handed to witness.) This is altered from what it used to be. I cannot tell by this who are full journeymen and who are not. I know there is a paper with the improvers and journeymen classified.

980. You have some recollection of the class of men employed in the Government Printing Office, have you not? Yes.

981. From your recollection, are you of opinion that the whole of them are competent first-class compositors, or what proportion? I can safely say one-fourth at all events; I think a good deal more; one-fourth at least.

982. With regard to the supernumeraries, are they, in your opinion, competent workmen? There are four at least out of the fourteen that I am quite certain would not get £1 a week in any office in Sydney.

983. Out of the fourteen on the supernumerary staff, four are not competent men? Yes. Many a month when I have earned £16 and £18 they have not earned £8, and some not £6, with the same opportunities as I have had.

984. What number of readers are employed in the office? I believe there are six down as readers. There are four here, but I believe there is another who is not on this list, a gentleman lately come into the office as clerk and reader.

985. Do you think the number of readers employed is necessary? The number of readers on the Herald—and they do a great deal more composition—

986. Confine yourself to the Government Printing Office. Do you think the number of readers there necessary? I think they are excessive.

987. How many readers would be sufficient? I should think two might do it, but three at most.

988. Captain Onslow.] How many are there? Six, I think.

989. Chairman.] Have you ever known that private work has been done in the office? The Civil Service Musical Society's circulars and cards are done in the office; and one evening when I went into the fount-room for some letter required for some parliamentary work at night, in looking for it I fell across three galleys of the Leisure Hour. I do not know what it might be used for; it might be for some Government purpose. But the Civil Service Musical Society get their cards and circulars done there.

990. Are you aware whether they are charged for? That I do not know.

991. Do you approve of a system of piece-work in the office in lieu of time-work? It would be much better, because the overseers then could be easily done away with. In piece-work a man needs no over-looker; he is his own over-looker; what he earns he gets, and if he does not earn it he does not get it. There are many other advantages in piece-work offices. Apprentices come out much better journeymen. There is not this Government stroke; because if you see a man on day-work talking to another his hands are still, but if he is on piece-work his hands are going. It would do away with this picking copy, and with all espionage which is carried out in the Government Printing Office more than I ever saw in any office. The work would be better and more expeditiously done.

992. Could all the work that is now printed in the Government Printing Office be printed by piece-work? I would not advise that open forms with headings on the top and long rules down, such as the large railway tables, should be done by piece-work; because the charge would be very heavy. The plan usually adopted in large offices is to keep four thoroughly competent men on the establishment, and all the rest on piece-work. These men are kept to do all open forms. I have no hesitation in saying that there are many forms done in the Government Printing Office that I could make £5 a day at.

993. Do I understand you to say that, with the exception of a small proportion of the work, the great bulk of the work could be done in the Government Printing Office by the piece? Yes, and with a great saving.

994. What is the system of apprenticeship established in the Government Printing Office? It is the most faulty that ever I have yet met with, either in the Home Country or in the Colonies. Once they get to be the length of apprentices, the Government, by the rule that is adopted in the office, has to keep them so long as they are able to work, and find them employment with good wages, in preference to all others. Let a man come a stranger to the office, with the greatest ability that can be fetched from England, with Mr. Richards' management he cannot possibly get on to the permanent staff, so long as there is any boy to go on before him.

995. For how long are these apprentices engaged? They just go on till they are provided for, when a Mr. D. Mason. vacancy falls out.

996. Do I understand you to say that the apprentices in the Government Printing Office are under no indentures, and are not bound for any fixed period of time? Many of them have not been. I did hear they were going to do something of the sort within the last few months; but previously they had no indentures, and some of them were apprentices for ten or twelve years. Now the longest time allowed in England is seven years. I know one at the present time that had only one year to serve, for he was an apprentice of my own when I gave up business, and he had only one year to serve on his indentures, and he is an apprentice still, and that is six years ago.

997. Then there is no definite period of time known as a term of apprenticeship in the Government Printing Office? Not that I am aware of.

998. Do these apprentices receive a graduated rate of wages during the time they are apprentices? I believe they have a rise every year.

999. Is there any system adopted of testing their efficiency as compositors during the term of their apprenticeship? Not that I have ever seen. I believe, within the last eight or ten months, when there was some talk before of a Committee being likely to be fetched on the Printing Office, Mr. Richards gave orders for a system of an average to be kept up. But you cannot possibly do it with them, for there are men on the Gazette, and many a time they lift matter which they have corrected by a few insertions, and altering dates, and so on, that would be equal to a man's day's work; and this is put down to their average—a thing that they have not been half an hour on.

1000. What is the system of apprenticeship—Is it one whereby the apprentice remains an apprentice until there is room for him on the establishment? Yes, that is it; until there is a vacancy, and then whether he has ability or not he goes on. I have known one gentleman to be in the office for over ten years, and he is still on the supernumerary staff, and he is a first-class workman; and I dare say there must have been a dozen vacancies during the time. I have known six or eight promotions this year.

1001. Then according to your experience, the rule in the Government Printing Office is to appoint apprentices to positions in the Government Printing Office when there is a vacancy, quite irrespective of their ability? Yes; men of far greater ability on the supernumerary staff have to give way to allow these boys to go on the staff.

1002. What do you think of the proposal to submit the Government printing to contract? It would be a much better plan—it would do away with all this corruption. I can only state what one gentleman connected in printing said to me last week,—that if the Government printing were put out to contract there would be a great saving; and he is a gentleman who pays a hundred pounds a week wages.

1003. What is your own opinion? My opinion is the same,—that it would be much more cheaply done; almost, I would venture to say, at one-half it costs them; and it would do away with this bed of corruption—you cannot call it anything else—the Government Printing Office; because masters, if they had the contract to do the work, would study their own interests by giving it to men of ability to do.

1004. You are aware that there is a very large plant of type and other valuable property in the Government Printing Office: how would you propose to apply this system of contract in reference to utilizing this plant? It could be done in different ways. The plant and the office could be let by tender, the tenderers giving a sufficient bond for the proper maintenance of the plant, and for the rent of the office and what not; and the Government could appoint men from time to time to examine if the office was kept up to the mark, in renewing type when worn and so on; reasonable wear and tear of course excepted. If this system was adopted, I am quite positive the Government would save at least 25 per cent. if not more. And it could be easily done, taking a sufficient bond over the plant.

1005. Do you think the work could be as well done under a contract of the nature you describe as it is now? I think so. They have done the Statutes, and I have heard a great deal of talk about these Statutes done at the Government Printing Office; but I have compared them with the Statutes done at Mr. Cunningham's; and, in my opinion, as a practical printer, Mr. Cunningham's book is infinitely superior in workmanship to the one done at the Government Printing Office.

1006. Then you are of opinion that as good work could be turned out under a system of contract applied to the Government Printing Office as is now performed there under the present system? I am, and for this reason:—The Government work in London is done by contract under a patent by Mr. Hansard; it has been in the family for years; and I am sure that to take up the work done by that firm for the Houses of Parliament, no practical printer at least will say they are one whit behind any work I have ever seen done here. In fact, I think the other way. It is carried out there, and with success.

1007. Mr. Wilson. Are you aware that, on the 21st October, I put certain questions to the Colonial Treasurer, with regard to the suspension of certain supernumerary men in the Government Printing Office? Yes.

1008. Are you aware how many of these men were suspended? There were thirteen suspended; one was sick; there were fourteen on the staff.

1009. Was any reason given for the suspension of these men? Mr. D'Arrietta gave a reason that there was some private work being done in the office, but it was afterwards stated that he had no right to do so by Mr. Richards.

1010. For how long were they suspended? For a week.

1011. You have stated already that you never knew an instance of men being suspended in that way before? Never.

1012. At the end of the week did these supernumerary men go to work? I can only speak for several that went at the same time as I did.

1013. Did you go to work at the end of the week? I did not. I went to the office, and Mr. Potter told me some investigation was going on, and when I was wanted I would be sent for.

1014. Investigation about what? He would not tell me.

1015. Were any charges brought against these men that you are aware of? Not one.

1016. Did you ever get any intimation, either from the Government Printer or from the Colonial Treasurer's Office, that there were certain charges made against you which were being investigated? I never heard of it.

1017. And you did not hear of any charges against the other twelve men that were being investigated? No.

1018. Were any questions asked you as to whether you gave any information to enable me to ask these questions?

Mr. D. Mason. questions? It was not asked me; it was asked of others. Mr. Richards asked them if they knew anything about it—if they had had any hand in it in any way, and if not to send him a written statement to that effect; and all those that have sent this written statement have been again employed; and those who have not, myself and another, have for the first time the charges against us and our dismissal, all on the one sheet of paper.

1 Nov., 1870.

1019. Who was the other person? Mr. Banks.

1020. You have already stated that there were no charges you were aware of, for insubordination or anything else, hanging over your head? Not one that I have ever heard of, directly or indirectly.

1021. Is it your impression that unless these parties had signed this paper, stating that they had given no information, they would not have been employed? Yes, because one of them would not do it till last Friday, and he has now done it, and is employed.

1022. How many men have not signed that paper? Two besides myself and Mr. Banks.

Mr. Wilson here said: I do not know, Mr. Chairman, whether it is right for me to state that no person in connection with the Government Printing Office gave me information to enable me to ask those questions.

The witness: I might state that they were also asked if they knew of my having anything to do in getting this Select Committee appointed.

1023. Mr. Wilson.] Who was asked that question? Mr. Baigent for one, Mr. Trumper for another.

1024. Asked by whom? The Government Printer.

1025. Whether they were aware whether you had had any hand in getting this Committee appointed? Yes; or themselves.

1026. I think you have already produced a letter from Mr. Parkes, stating that you had no hand or part in it in any way whatever? I waited on Mr. Parkes to ask him to be kind enough to send a letter to the Committee to that effect, and he told me he would do so.

1027. During the four years and a quarter that you have stated you have been on the supernumerary staff, have you made application to be appointed on the permanent staff? Not once. There has been an application made for me, and I was called in and lectured well, for my friends presuming that they could get me on the staff through any other means than the Government Printer himself; and I was told that I would never get on unless through himself. At the same time I knew that on an application from Mr. Baigent being sent in, on the death of Mr. McKern a few years ago, he applied, as the first on the list of the supernumerary staff, for the vacancy. Mr. Potter read him a minute on the turned-up corner of his application,—“It is not the intention of the Government Printer at any time to put forward any of the supernumerary staff to the permanent staff. Signed—T. RICHARDS.”

1028. You have stated that certain members of the supernumerary staff are not, you think, competent compositors? Not at all competent; very far from it.

1029. Are any of them thoroughly competent workmen? Yes, there are some members of the supernumerary staff equal in ability to any one in the office, as printers; and they have been there for some years.

1030. The supernumerary staff do not work full time? No; we work according to the pressure on the office; sometimes we are three months at a time idle.

1031. Have you ever heard the overseers swearing at the men in the office? I have heard Mr. Thrum, many times.

1032. Is such conduct as that generally allowed in other printing offices? No; not only swearing, but talking very obscene language in the room, in the presence of several of them.

1033. Is Mr. Thrum a sub-overseer? He is.

1034. Do the men make remarks upon the impropriety of such conduct? No.

1035. Captain Onslow.] What are the duties of the overseers? The duty of an overseer is to give out the copy, see that the work is properly done, and keep order in the office.

1036. They do no manual labour themselves? Not in this office; they do not have a frame to work at; they might go to the stone and do any little thing.

1037. Is it usual for the overseers here to do any manual work themselves? Not usual.

1038. You have stated that there are six overseers, and that that is four too many? Yes, in the composing branch.

1039. Is it their duty to keep silence? Yes.

1040. Is silence generally kept? It is medium.

1041. I ask because you have before stated that there is a good deal of talking in the way of betting and borrowing money? Yes.

1042. You reaffirm that? I reaffirm that there is betting and money-lending going on during business hours.

1043. Is there as much silence kept in the Government Printing Office, as a rule, as in any private establishment? I think there is more talking, a good deal.

1044. How do you account for that—by its being day-work instead of piece-work? That is one reason.

1045. Are there any rules posted up in the room for the guidance of the men, enjoining silence? Not that I am aware of.

1046. No rules whatever? No rules.

1047. When a man enters as a supernumerary, is there any agreement besides the pay? No. I entered before this piece-work was adopted at all; piece-work has been adopted since I have been there.

1048. You know of no printed or written rules enjoining on the men what to do? No.

1049. And you have stated that there is a great deal of money-lending by Mr. Stewart and Mr. D'Arrietta? I did not say a great deal; I said they were in the habit of money-lending.

1050. How do you know this? I have heard the men talking about it themselves, that they have lent money to.

1051. Is there any harm in people lending money—Do they tout for borrowers, or do people in want of money come to them? No, there is no harm in it; but when a man gets deep in debt to an overseer I think the overseer loses his authority so far over that man, because it is not likely he would take any means to discharge him and lose his money.

1052. Do you know if any of the men are deeply in debt to Mr. D'Arrietta and Mr. Stewart? I do not know whether there are any now; I know several that have been.

1053. What do you call deeply in debt—to what extent are these men indebted? I know one case where Mr. D. Mason.
they bought up one man's debts between them, and I think they amounted to somewhere about £20; I could not say the amount. 1 Nov., 1870.

1054. Who bought them up? Mr. D'Arrietta and Mr. Stewart.

1055. Debts owing outside the office? Outside and inside. They acted as his agents, and cleared his debts for him.

1056. Do you think these two men show any favouritism to the people in their debt? I think so.

1057. Can you instance any of the names of the men who are in their debt, or who have borrowed money from them? I can. Duffy, Cain, Henry Winnett, and Richard Taylor.

1058. Do you know the rate of interest that they charge? No.

1059. You have stated that the pay-clerk is in the habit of deducting a portion of their pay, and paying it to these overseers? I saw it once myself. I was in the room when he did it; he did not get it, but he attempted to do it.

1060. This was one occasion only? Yes. Whether he was successful I cannot say.

1061. You have given us to understand that it was a common practice? I have heard it was a common practice. No other case came under my observation.

1062. What was the name of that man? Taylor.

1063. You have stated that a man named Adams, who is an overseer, called Taylor a liar, and Banks a liar? Yes, in the presence of the men.

1064. What had Taylor and Banks been saying? There were some types found on the bulk, one night when Parliament was sitting, that ought not to have been there, and Mr. Adams first abused Mr. Proctor about it, a gentleman now a reporter on the Herald, and afterwards he found out, or thought he found out, that it was Mr. Taylor, and he then accused Mr. Taylor of it. Taylor said they did not belong to him, and he then and there called him a liar. Taylor said—"Well, there must be one of us telling a lie, but, it is not me." Other words followed. On the other occasion it was Mr. Banks.

1065. Are the men generally disrespectful to the overseers? No.

1066. Any one in particular? Not that I am aware of. They are more respectful to the overseers than the overseers are to them. For I think that in all other offices I have worked at there were no overseers but what would think it worth while to put a prefix to any journeyman compositor's name. It is rarely done in the Government Printing Office here. I never anywhere else saw an overseer receive any work from a journeyman without receiving it respectfully and thanking him when he got it; but it is not so in the Government Printing Office here. It is only the respect due from one man to another.

1067. You have stated that there is a great deal of favouritism in the way of giving picked copy to certain individuals? A great deal.

1068. And by picked copy you mean that which has many short lines and blanks? Copy that you can make double the wages on that you can on solid copy, when working with equal ability and speed.

1069. In piece-work is the same amount of money given for a sheet of this picked copy as for solid matter? Just the same; you take your chance of getting a solid piece or another piece. In the Government Printing Office here it is not allowed. I have seen picked copy given out in this way in many instances. In my own case, when work has been given out, such as the Schools Report, if the copy that should have come to my turn happened to be copy a man could make well on, it has been quietly put on one side, and I would get the next. My complaint is that copy is given out of turn. It never occurs in any other printing office, because the copy is put up in "takes," and I have never seen the overseer take the trouble to find out who was next for copy; rotation is followed, and the speedy men go up again soonest. The overseer does not know who is going up for copy next. "Takes" of copy amount to about fifteen or sixteen lines in a newspaper office.

1070. What quantity of matter is given to the compositors in the Government Printing Office at one time—here are eight pages of the Votes and Proceedings, how many men would this be given to? The Votes and Proceedings will run from as small as four lines to as high as sixty. I have seen one man go up and get a take of four lines, and I have gone up behind him and got a take of sixty lines, showing that there is no management at all in giving out the copy.

1071. Was this done through inadvertence, or from favouritism? I could not say.

1072. What do you think? I consider it was given through incompetency—that he did not know what he was doing.

1073. Who did this? Mr. Adams.

1074. Was this paid for by piece-work? Piece-work.

1075. Would the man who had the four lines get as much as you? No, he would get a mere nothing. It gave me the opportunity of earning half-a-crown an hour, while he would finish his four lines in a few minutes, and would then have to go on at 1s. 3d. a hour, if there was not any more copy to give out. This is the principal complaint I have ever made in the office,—of the injustice of keeping me on time-work. It is a well-known fact, and admitted in the office, that I am fast; and I have been told over and over again, when I have complained about being kept on time, I had to take the idle time with the other men; but when there was work I did not get a fair chance, because I was generally called on time—this last Session, every other week. I actually went in and showed the Superintendent two weeks that I kept count of. Mr. O'Connor took alternate weeks with me. He is not so fast, and does not make the same amount of money on the piece. I kept account of two weeks of our work—he on piece-work and I on this stone-work, with a certain degree of responsibility on my shoulders. Stone-work is usually paid more—a pound a week extra I have known given in the Government Printing Office, Melbourne, to men able to take stone-work.

1076. Did you ever make a complaint to the Government Printer? I made one to the Superintendent. The Government Printer before that told me never to come to him with any more complaints, when the affair about the pie happened, that has been spoken of before.

1077. Did you ask the Superintendent to forward your complaint? I asked him to lay the complaint before the Government Printer.

1078. Do you know whether it was forwarded? I am not aware.

1079. What answer did you get? He asked me what I would suggest doing.

1080. Did you ever make a complaint to the Government Printer, as to the unfairness in giving out copy? I did not.

1081.

- Mr. D. Mason. 1081. Is it often the case to your knowledge that copy is so unequally given out—one man getting ten lines and another sixty? Very often.
- 1 Nov., 1870. 1082. Now, as regards piece and day work—You say you have complained repeatedly that you were kept more on time than the others? Yes, and the reason I got for that was that the others were incapable of doing it; to which I replied—“Then because I possess more ability I am punished for it; in fact you are giving a premium to incompetency.” I have the papers now that I showed to the Superintendent.
1083. How much more money do you think you could have made? I kept two weeks, and Mr. O'Connor made 12s. 6d. more on piece than I did on time, and he worked two hours less time; but the next week I went on piece, and I made £1 7s. more than him, and I worked less time than he did—showing the unfairness. I was losing on an average £1 a week by this work, and had to take a certain amount of responsibility on my shoulders as well. I was told distinctly several times by Mr. Adams the others were not capable of doing it, and that that was the reason I was kept at it.
1084. You have said you are a fast compositor? I am generally reckoned so.
1085. Are there any others there who could work as well as yourself? There are none that could beat me.
1086. Are they kept back in the same way? No, they have their yearly salary.
1087. Are none of the permanent staff ever paid piece-work? No, not that I am aware of.
1088. In private offices is it the custom to pay for picked work the same as solid work? Just the same; so much per thousand letters. In reckoning it up we count to the full length of the measure, whether the lines are long or short. Quads, as they are called, put in to fill up the blank spaces are of course easier to lift than letters. I might state that I have drawn attention on several occasions to the rates paid for tabular work in the Government Printing Office in Sydney. In London, the rules made by a Society of masters and men together—not a Union only, but a Society of equal parts of masters and men, who met to agree to the rules for the printing trade generally. Perhaps I had better show you —
1089. I will ask you some other questions first. Have you ever borrowed money from Mr. D'Arrietta or Mr. Steward? No.
1090. Have you ever betted with them? No.
1091. You stated that you do not know whether the cards printed for the Civil Service Musical Society were paid for or not? No. If they were paid for it would be unjust to the trade outside, putting the Government Office in competition with them.
1092. You stated that some of these apprentices had been ten years so? I would not state the exact time.
1093. But it is a much longer time than usual? Yes, much longer.
1094. Are any of these apprentices getting more pay than the supernumerary staff—what is the utmost pay an apprentice can get? I am not aware.
1095. Do you know if their pay increases for length of servitude—do they get more pay after they have served eight years than they do after they have served seven? I do not know the rate of payments at all. We have no less than four rates of wages amongst the journeymen there; a thing that never takes place in any other printing office I have ever been in.
1096. I understand you to state that an apprentice, however incompetent, would secure a place on the permanent staff in preference to a supernumerary, however competent? Yes, that was the rule.
1097. Have you ever known a vacancy filled up by a supernumerary in preference to an apprentice? Not one.
1098. Are there many on the supernumerary staff superior to the apprentices? I should say equal to the best journeymen in the office.
1099. Are there any workers on the supernumerary staff who are inferior to the best apprentices? The apprentices. I do not know who they are; I hardly know which of them are out of their time. There are some of them old enough to have served their apprenticeship twice over. There is a system of improvers there that I never heard of before. When out of their apprenticeship they put them down as improvers.
1100. Chairman.] The same persons as have been apprenticed? Yes.
1101. Captain Onslow.] What does that mean? I do not know. In other offices, if an apprentice when he has served his apprenticeship is not capable, he is dismissed as incompetent, at the end of seven years.
1102. You state that there are some men on the permanent staff who are incompetent? I do.
1103. You have stated that favouritism is shown in giving picked copy—Is it shown in any other way? That is about the principal way they could show it. If they get this “fat” copy, they can do what they like all day long, and make equally as much as those who are digging into it all day. With plenty of the copy they could do as much in two hours as I could do with solid copy in eight hours and a half.
1104. Have you known men on the permanent staff to remain idle when there was other work to do? I have seen them often idling their time away; it is quite a common occurrence. They are not so industrious as they would be if they were on piece-work, and had to earn their living instead of having it secured to them.
1105. You said you were in favour of the printing work being done by contract. Do you think that if it were taken by contract important matters could be kept secret? Yes, certainly. There is a sort of free-masonry amongst compositors and printers in general, that whatever is done in the office is never carried out. I never heard of a case in England but one, and that was done by a young lad in the Times office, who carried out a very valuable telegram and gave it to another paper. I have never heard of any other case in my thirty-three years' experience. I did hear of a case that occurred in this office here, and the man was dismissed for it, but he is now back again.
1106. What proportion of the men at present employed in the Government Printing Office have been apprentices there? I do not know.
1107. Chairman.] You wished to give some information to the Committee with regard to some practice in the London offices? It is with reference to tabular work. We do not get fair play on piece-work, we only get 1s. per thousand; in London we were paid 10½d., and where there was a table of four columns with headings, in London we would get double for it. I have spoken of this injustice several times, not only to the Government Printer, but to the Superintendent.
1108. Do I understand you to say that in London tabular matter is paid for at a higher rate than in the Government Printing Office here? Yes; that is, what we would get paid in London double for we only get one and a half for in the Government Printing Office here. And I have been told by the Government Printer and the Superintendent that they would not be guided by any rules. Now, they never had any experience experience in piece-work. I have worked most of my time on piece-work—the greater part of the time Mr. D. Mason. I have been in the trade; and still they put themselves up as knowing more than a man that has worked pretty near all his life on it, and also against the London rules made by half masters and half men. Mr. Hansard, I believe, was the Chairman at the time of making the rules; and the rules have worked so well that they have been, I think, somewhere about fifty years in work. The Scottish Typographical Society say that anything they do not exactly agree on shall be referred to the London rules. 1 Nov., 1870.

1109. You mean to say the Government Printing Office do not adopt the London rules? They will adopt no rules, only to suit their own purpose. If the rules are on our side they will have nothing to do with them, but if they can prove their case by the rules they will fetch them to you. There is no good in showing the rules on our side.

1110. The rules in London applicable to piece-work cannot be applicable in the Government Printing Office to such an extent, on account of the greater number of the compositors not being paid by piece-work? They are just as applicable to those that are.

1111. The great bulk of the compositors in the Government Printing Office here are not paid by piece-work? No.

1112. Therefore the rules applicable in London are not so applicable in the Sydney office? Just the same to those that are on piece-work.

1113. Captain Onslow. You stated that all the parliamentary work in England is done by contract? It is done under a patent by Mr. Hansard. About £70,000 I know was their bill one year to the House of Commons, and it is all done by piece-work.

1114. Would you, at piece-work, get more than any compositor on the permanent staff? I would get equally as much, with fair play.

1115. The people on the permanent staff are paid permanent wages—Could you make the rate of their wages on piece-work? I have many a time made more. I will read you my earnings for four months only this year. It is an average of £16 for the four months. I have made over £20 a month in that office. Nobody else on the supernumerary staff has ever reached that in the office. £18, £16; and many a time men who are now on the supernumerary staff, when I have made as high as £18, have not had £10, some not £6, with the same opportunities as I have had—thereby proving that they cannot be competent.

Mr. Richard Augustine Taylor called in and examined:—

1116. Chairman. You are a compositor, I believe? Yes.

1117. Where did you serve your apprenticeship? I served three years and a half in the Government Printing Office, and the remainder in the office of the Sydney Morning Herald.

1118. What has been your experience in large printing offices? I have never been in any but large offices during twenty-seven years. I was several years with Mr. Parkes, on the old Empire, as reader and sub-overseer; I managed the Goulburn Herald for five years; and I had a newspaper of my own for nearly five years, the Maneroo Mercury. I have been since employed in the Government Printing Office until lately.

1119. Do you know anything of the management of the Government Printing Office? Yes.

1120. Mr. Wilson. You are not employed in the Government Printing Office now? No; I am reader for the Empire and Town and Country Journal.

1121. Chairman. You have acquired your knowledge of the establishment from working in the Government Printing Office? Partly by personal observation during my employment there.

1122. What is your opinion of the system of management in the Government Printing Office? I think it is very extravagantly and faultily managed.

1123. Do you know how many persons are employed as overseers? I do not know the exact number, but I know they are very much in each other's way generally. In the composing-room those regularly down on the Blue Book as overseers, I believe, are four; but there are two others who also do duty as overseers, altogether clear of the actual work of composing, holding positions set down in the list as compositors, but they do not work as compositors; they receive additional salary for some trifling duties they perform as assistant overseers.

1124. You think all these overseers are not necessary? Certainly not.

1125. Can you suggest to the Committee any improvement on the present system that would have the effect of securing a reduction in the cost, without interfering with the efficiency of the office? I think a reduction of at least two overseers might be made, and I think that by having one uniform scale of wages, or the principal portion of the work being done on the piece, a very large saving, of at least 20 per cent., might be effected. There is a very vicious and unsatisfactory system of payment at present. There are four or five scales of wages, and the younger men have no inducement to be industrious, because there is no hope of their ever reaching the higher scale—that is the understanding, I believe; whilst some of them are quite as efficient—superior workmen, I believe—to those getting £200 a year. They have never any hope of getting forward. Then there are a large number of supernumeraries in the office, who are, as a rule, superior to the generality of the permanent staff. I speak from experience as a practical printer; and I hold the Government Printer's own certificate that I am one. (Certificate produced and read.)

1126. Is it your opinion that the system established in the Government Printing Office, of paying compositors by the month or year, and not by the piece, is an expensive system to the country? I am certain it is; because the permanent hands do not work as diligently as they would be compelled to do if paid by the piece.

1127. Are you acquainted with the names of the compositors and their qualifications, on what is called the establishment, in the Government Printing Office? Yes; large quantities of their work came under my notice when I discharged the duty of reader; and I think there is no better way of judging of a man's qualifications qualifications than by his work; and I found that the majority of the staff did not or could not turn out a sufficient quantity of work for the salary paid, nor was what they did do as well done as it should have been had they been efficient workmen.

1128. Do you consider that, as a rule, the compositors on the establishment of the Government Printing Office are men you would call first-class compositors? Not all of them. There are some excellent workmen, some as good as any men in the trade; but a very large number are very inefficient hands—men who ought never to have been put into the business by their parents or friends; they are absolutely ignorant, and a person ought to be intelligent to be a compositor.

1129. Would it, in your opinion, be a salutary change if the compositors were selected on account of their qualifications, and employed on a system of piece-work rather than time-work? I am certainly of that opinion.

1130. Would such a change be productive of a considerable reduction of expense to the country? I think so.

1131. Do you know whether this system of paying men by time is in existence in the Victorian Government Printing Office? No, I have no knowledge personally of the working of the Victorian Government Printing Office.

1132. Have you formed any opinion with respect to the practicability of performing the work carried on at the Government Printing Office by contract? I think it would effect a large saving to have it done by contract, if the present establishment could be made use of; not to break up the establishment, because there is an immense quantity of type that I look upon as being valueless there—no man who had to make a living out of the material would keep so large a quantity lying idle as is kept there.

1133. Do you think it practicable to let the plant to some practical printer by tender? I think so; because he would have the choice of the best men on the present establishment, and could command the best workmen from among the outside trade, weeding out a large number of those incompetents who now swell out the pay abstract of the present establishment without giving an equivalent return for their salaries. I maintain that the Government Printing Office, even as at present conducted, and in the improved manner I am quite sure it would be by a respectable contractor, should and could command the best ability in the Colony.

1134. Do you think a contractor might be found to give the Government good security for the safety and proper care of the plant? No doubt of it.

1135. There would be no difficulty in imposing conditions that might be carried out, do you think? I think not.

1136. Do you know of any objectionable conduct on the part of the overseers to the men in any way? I have observed a very large amount of unnecessary domineering insolence on the part of the overseers. I have suffered from it myself, and have complained on one or two occasions, although I am not in the habit of complaining, being rather disposed to right myself in a summary manner, after my own fashion, if I am subjected to petty annoyance. I once or twice complained to the Government Printer of the principal overseer, Mr. Adams, of his rudeness and vulgarity towards me, and more than once calling me a liar. Mr. Richards told me I ought to make some allowance for his infirm health. I told the Government Printer that I had done so, but that he was so insulting, and grossly personal and coarse in his speech and action, that I found it hard to control myself at times. However, I curbed my temper; but very soon after, Mr. Adams again insulted me, by telling me I was about to rob the Government of an hour. I have never in my experience been so insulted by petty insolence, and by having difficulties thrown in my way, as I have been in the Government Printing Office.*

1137. Do you allude to any other overseers? Mr. D'Arrietta.

1138. Can you mention any particular case? I remember an instance where I had been working as a compositor, and my assistance being required in the reading-room, I was removed there; and when I left the composing-room there was some type which I had set up, and which of course it was my duty to have returned to the cases again, had I had time. In the hurry to go to the reading-room, where I was urgently required, I had to leave this type behind me as it was, but I secured it as well as possible by putting it on a galley and leaving it on the top of my frame, tied securely, where it was open to everybody to see, and there was no danger of its being broken. Some time afterwards some member of the permanent staff, I believe, removed this type to a place beneath the frame, and then in the course of time some of the jobbing hands upset the type, and made it into what is called pie. There was not a very great deal of it. It laid there for a considerable time, as I was very busy, and knew nothing of it. It was at last discovered by some of the men. Mr. D'Arrietta charged me with having put it on the floor. I told him I had not put it there, but had left it secured, and I showed him the cord with which it had been tied. He said—"It is all damned nonsense; you know all about it, and ought to chuck it in." I said—"If you give it me in the same condition as I left it in, or even set it up as ordinary pie, I will distribute it." These supernumerary hands are supplied with a time-check, when working by the hour, in which the overseer fixes the time you commence; and when you leave, you fill up the number of hours, and the overseer signs the check. On this occasion Mr. D'Arrietta came to me, and said—"Are you going to put that type in?" I said—"Not in that state"; and he then snatched the time-check from off my desk, and said—"You can go about your business." Previously to this, Mr. D'Arrietta endeavoured to force me to distribute type that had been composed by a man who had died in the service. I refused to do that, and I was told I would be suspended. On the occasion first referred to, two young men (supernumeraries) came up and said—"If Mr. D'Arrietta lets you go back, and gives you your time-check, we will put the pie in"; and on those conditions I went back to my work.

1139. Have you any knowledge of any practices that may be called demoralizing practices existing in the office? A great many. I know a system of gambling is carried on there, betting on every conceivable venture that

* ADDED (on revision):—On another occasion I was instructed by the Government Printer to be very careful in reading the Votes and Minutes of Parliament; to cross-read them, or go over them twice before sending them to press. Mr. Adams, who was always extremely anxious to rush off as soon as the House adjourned, came into the reading-closet whilst I was engaged with the second reading, and inquired what I was about. I told him; whereupon he snatched, in the rudest manner, the sheet from under my hands, saying—"They don't require cross-reading; it's only humbug, to make an extra hour for yourself; I won't see the Government robbed." I remonstrated with him, and told him I was obeying Mr. Richards's orders. He replied—"You're a liar." This took place in the presence of two or three parties.

that can be thought of. During my time there lately, it prevailed to a most wonderful extent. Eight years ago, when I was in the office, before I went to Maneroo,* I was there in 1867, and remained till the latter end of 1868, when I went away for thirteen weeks, and returned, and was there till May, 1869. A large portion of my time I was in the reading-room. Every morning after the office was opened and the hands arrived, particularly just preceding the Randwick Races, there was a comparison of books in one of the boxes of the reading department (Ironsides's). A large number of the young fellows would come in and report that Tim Whiffler or Fenella, or some other of the horses engaged in the then coming meeting, had had a good gallop, or had gone wrong—"up a tree" was the usual expression. On one occasion, just preceding one Randwick Races, I complained to Mr. D'Arrietta about these fellows talking about horses; and when horses were not in the way, it was rifle-shooting, cricketing, or boating. I said—"Here these fellows are again, Mr. D'Arrietta." He said—"What do you fellows want here? be off"; when one of them inside Ironsides's box called out—"Here, Derry, come and draw"; and Mr. D'Arrietta went into the room and drew a sweepstakes, in which shillings or half-crowns were subscribed together, and certain horses drawn for.

Mr. R. A.
Taylor.
1 Nov., 1870.

1140. Did this practice prevail extensively among the younger men? Yes; one young fellow named Mallarky was the only one whom I never saw engaged in it. When any of the lads were sent out with messages, they used to be asked to drop round by Tattersall's and see what was going on there, and the news could be brought up. Mr. D'Arrietta knew it all; he gave the boys leave to go and inquire. When the news arrived, he would walk away from his stand or desk down to the frame of some of the permanent hands, where four would be at work near each other, and they would all leave off work, and converse together for five or ten minutes at a time on racing matters.

1141. These were men paid by time? Yes.

1142. Then, according to your experience, you state that Mr. D'Arrietta has encouraged this practice of betting in the office among the young men? He is the principal author and promoter of it. He makes a book. They begin with sixpences and shillings among the juniors, and go up to as much as several pounds. I remember I picked up a memorandum-book belonging to a young man named Bushelle. There was no name attached to it, but I opened it to find out who it belonged to, and read a record of a number of bets. One was a double event,—I think it was "Fireworks and Fenella, 50 to 2; D'Arrietta." I hung the book up in a certain place, and noticed who took it down, and it was young Bushelle. I said to him—"You have a good thing there." "Yes," he said, "I think Derry" (that is the name they familiarly give Mr. D'Arrietta in their betting circle) "will catch it this time." However I afterwards heard "Derry" did not catch it, but that he won some £60. He told me himself that he divided with young Fairweather—£25 apiece.

1143. Is there any other person in authority in the Government Printing Office who encourages betting? I do not think so; but it is a common thing. Mr. Potter has frequently come in and disturbed this nest of young betting men, and ordered them to their work in the large room.

1144. I want to know whether any other person in authority encourages this system of betting? No. It is scarcely possible, with proper supervision, for either the Government Printer or the Superintendent to be unaware of the fact.

1145. Have you any reason to believe that Mr. Richards is aware of this practice being carried on? No reason except this, that it has been done openly; and if proper supervision were exercised by Mr. Richards in the interests of the public, whose servant he really is, it must have come to his ears. He must be aware that lots of these young men are in the habit of giving I.O.U.'s on the Cashier, and that they are honored. Of course I do not say that he openly knows what they are for. The matter is managed in this way:—When Mr. D'Arrietta has won a pound or two from one of his betting associates, and the loser is unable to pay on the ensuing 1st of the month, D'Arrietta lends him the amount which is returned to him as payment of the bet—he taking his victim's order on the Cashier for the payment of the money and a little interest—say 5s. in the £ for a month.

1146. Do you mean to say that Mr. D'Arrietta has lent these young men money with the view of paying gambling debts arising from betting? That is my impression, but I could not swear it. I know there are young men who have been paying interest to Mr. D'Arrietta for years.† I know there are two parties now—I have not spoken to them since I left the office—but it has come to my knowledge that two of these young men have become possessed of land grants through length of service in the Volunteer Corps, and that these land grants are not their property now, but have passed to Mr. D'Arrietta or J. W. Steward, another usurer, who works in the office.‡

1147. Have these two young men been in the habit of betting? Yes, continually.

1148. And do you attribute their loss of their land orders to the habit of betting? I do. That is a thing I think brings about a very large amount of demoralization. If I want to borrow money, it is no business of my master's where I borrow it; but I do not think it is at all a proper thing that an overseer in the establishment, who has to report on the conduct of the men and their ability, should lend them money, because if these men misbehave themselves, or are incompetent, or seek promotion, he is not in a position to do his duty and report them in their true character, for fear they should be dismissed and he should lose his money.

1149. He would be likely to overlook their misconduct in consequence of the obligation they were under to him? Yes; he would, I fancy, reason thus,—This fellow owes me £5 or £10, and if he is dismissed I shall lose my money.

1150. Are you aware how paper and material are at present obtained for the use of the Government Printing Office? I believe by tender, in the Colony. That seems to be a great mistake. Perhaps the Government Printer

* INSERTED (on revision):—betting was practised in a small way; but on my return, three years ago, it was quite an institution—every man and boy engaging in the most open manner by drawing sweeps and laying wagers; and the "school" was headed by Mr. D'Arrietta in a large way, and for the lesser wagers by Mr. Ironsides, one of the readers, whose closet was commonly designated "Little Tattersall's." I have seen as many as half a dozen young fellows at a time there, drawing, and talking over the performances and chances of the various horses; and they were an intolerable nuisance to me, as no work could be proceeded with while they were conversing. These young men had no business in that part of the house at all, especially during working hours.

† ADDED (on revision):—And a young man named Canny (who is now dead) told me he had paid to some one in the office—and I know he used to pay Mr. D'Arrietta money—as much as £18 10s. as interest on £10, and at that time he had not paid off the principal.

‡ ADDED (on revision):—These grants, I learn, are now the property of a large merchant in the city, whose name I can give, if necessary.

Mr. R. A.
Taylor.

1 Nov., 1870.

Printer is not so much to blame for that; but I think he ought to suggest that the Government are in a better position to enter the London market than any trader.*

1151. You think the Government Printing Office, as large consumers of paper and other printing material, should transmit their orders direct to England? Yes. The merchant who contracts to supply the Government must have a profit, and that profit might and ought to go to the Government. The same with printing material generally. The man who sells Figgins's type here in Sydney is almost dependent upon the Government Printing Office for his trade; and yet I have reason to know that a private firm can buy a small quantity at times as cheap or cheaper than the Government who purchase tons.

1152. With regard to the system of apprentices in the Government Printing Office, is the system similar in that office to the practice in other printing offices? I never knew of such a practice before as having so large a number of youths learning a trade without being indentured; nor, when a regular period having been served, of young men going on as what is somewhat fastidiously called by the Government Printer "improvers."

1153. Is there any fixed period of time for the apprentices to serve in the Government Printing Office? I am not aware that there is. I believe very few of them are actually under indentures.

1154. Are they termed apprentices, and kept at work as apprentices for an indefinite period of time? Yes, I believe so. The Government Printer is at liberty to turn them adrift when he chooses, or keep them as long as he likes.

1155. From what source does the establishment of compositors become recruited in case of a new hand being required upon the establishment? As far as my experience serves me, from the apprentices—not in the order of seniority, but just as they are reported by the overseers as deserving; and here again an opportunity presents itself which just shows you that the overseer must have a chance of forwarding his favourites; it lies entirely in his hands. I venture to say the Government Printer himself knows very little more about the internal working of that office, or the qualifications of the employes, than any of you gentlemen. He is entirely dependent upon his overseers. He does not exercise the direct personal supervision necessary for the management of such a large staff. He scarcely ever visited the work-rooms during my time in the place, and certainly never examined for himself the work of any of his apprentices or improvers, or whatever they are. In the Herald Office there are more actual journeymen at frame every night and every day at one time than in the Government Printing Office, and they are overlooked by one man; that is, although there are two overseers, but one is in charge at a time—they take day and night about. I have seen four overseers in one room at the Government Printing Office—Mr. Potter, Mr. Adams, Mr. D'Arrietta, and Mr. Thrum, and in the adjoining room Mr. Buchanan also, but he does not interfere with the general work in the big room, unless one of the other overseers wants to go out to judge distances, or to shoot, or to see the races, cricketing, boating, or something of that kind.

1156. Have you ever known or heard of a large printing office where the vacancies among the compositors are invariably filled up from among the apprentices? No. The practice in the Herald Office, so far as I have learned, has been this:—When I was an apprentice I was given to understand that I would have every opportunity of learning the trade, and that if I had acquired a knowledge of my business, when out of my time I would be employed as a journeyman if a vacancy was in the way; if not, I would have to go about my business. That was the understanding that Mr. Fairfax gave me. Fortunately when I did come out of my time there was a vacancy, and I was taken on as a journeyman. I know on the Herald the rule has been to place apprentices on the supernumerary staff, and let them have the preference, but that rule has been abolished, and they have to go to the bottom of the list, and the other supernumeraries go before them, so that they have no preference.†

1157. Which, in your opinion, is most likely to secure an efficient staff—the practice of going into the market for a first-class compositor, or the practice, existing now in the Government Printing Office, of appointing an apprentice? If ability only is to be taken into consideration you should go into the market; but I certainly think some consideration should be given to a young man who has served his time in the office—that he should have the opportunity of getting a position in it if he has become deserving of it.

1158. Other things being equal, you think an apprentice should have the preference over a stranger? Yes.

1159. But supposing the apprentice to be an inferior hand, do you think he should be appointed in preference to a first-class compositor? No, I should send him about his business. There is no use trying, after five or seven years have been served, to "improve" a young man, except in that sense in which all are learners to the end—the march of improvement.

1160. Is that the rule now in the Government Printing Office? No, the rule is to keep them on at a lower salary than journeymen,—thus degrading them, or making them feel inferior to others who they know they are superior to. Many of the young men have been ten years there. Seven years is ample time. A lad ought to learn quite enough in three years to be what the masters call "fat",—that is, that they shall have become so smart at plain type-setting as to earn for the master much more than he pays them; which is looked upon as a return as it were for the time and trouble expended upon their tuition in the first rudiments of the business.

1161. Mr. Wilson.] With regard to allowing tenderers to have the use of the plant in the Government Printing Office, do you think any sufficient check could be put upon them to prevent the deterioration of some of the peculiar plant in that office, such as the plant used under the Brands Act? Certainly; the contractor would enter into a bond to return it in the same order in which he found it, reasonable wear and tear only excepted; just the same as if I entered into a bond with you to rent a house for twelve months, and to give it up at the expiration of that term in the same condition as it was in when I entered upon it.

1162. Is it not difficult, under certain circumstances, or with regard to peculiar type, such as the figures used for brands, and so on? I think that is only a very small matter. It would be easy to have them recast.

* ADDED (on revision):—The paper used for printing generally is, to my idea, far too costly. For years past the heaviest kind of quadruple foolscap, and of course the dearest, has been used to print the Gazette upon; and it is well known where the bulk of Gazettes generally find a resting-place—certainly very few are bound up or preserved. A paper quite good enough for the large majority of the public printing could be had for four or five shillings a ream less than is now paid for that used. This, where so much is required, and where a great deal of waste takes place, as it does with proofs in the G.P.O., would effect a considerable saving in that one article alone.

† NOTE (on revision):—I have since been informed that the apprentices are again placed at the top of the list.

recast. No doubt the matrices are to be found; and if not, the contractor could be compelled to have them recut, if his bond were a good bond. There is another matter in the Government Printing Office to which I wish to call attention. The Electoral Roll is kept standing. That is an immense waste of type. It is looked upon as being a great saving; but the fact is, I believe, that it was a little hobby of a late Colonial Secretary and the Government Printer between them. But I do not think that, if the work were given out now, it would cost any more for the number of copies printed than it does on the present plan, taking into account the cost of producing the rolls every year, and making the ordinary corrections, reading, revising, &c. Considering the large quantity of type that has to be kept idle as it were, the large sum of money that type represents, and the interest upon that money, and also that a room has been built specially to keep it in, with large racks and wooden galleys—the whole costing something like £3,000 or £4,000—I am certain that the saving is represented by a cypher. If the interest on all this outlay is taken into consideration, and added to what it actually costs now to print these rolls, I believe the town trade could produce them cheaper and quite as well as they are now produced at the Government Printing Office. There are tons of type lying idle with that alone. When type gets into form a very large amount of it fills up a small space.

Mr. R. A.
Taylor.
Nov., 1870.

1163. You mentioned that another party in the office besides Mr. D'Arrietta was in the habit of lending money—I may state that it has been given in evidence that a person of the name of Stewart does so? He is not in authority. He is the man to whom I refer. In my own case, not for betting purposes, I had a loan from Mr. D'Arrietta, but not directly. I asked him for the loan of £5 on one occasion. We had been old friends and fellow-apprentices, and there had been many transactions between us in former years. He did not like to ask me directly for interest, on account of our old acquaintance, I suppose, and therefore he said he had not got the money, though I knew he had; but he said he could get it for me from another person, if I would pay £6 for the £5, and give an order on Mr. Kellick for the money to be paid at £2 a month.

1164. £6 for £5 in three months? Yes. I paid the first £2, and when the second £2 came due I had only 36s. 6d. earned. I had left the office then, and was idle when I went to draw my 36s. 6d. Mr. D'Arrietta came to me and asked if he was to have my money. I said—"Certainly not; I cannot pay £2 with 36s. 6d." He said I was a very mean fellow; and Mr. Kellick said he would stop it—that I had no business to give orders if I did not intend paying them. I said—"If you do, I will get your master to give you an order to give it me." Mr. D'Arrietta was in the habit of drawing one man's cheque, I know, regularly every month, because I have seen him go to my desk on pay-day and place in an envelope a portion of this man's money, some £12 odd (his salary was £16 13s. 4d.), and tell the person he gave it to to give it to such a one's wife, not to him. I asked this person about it, and he said, yes, he owed D'Arrietta some money, and D'Arrietta used to collect his cheque. It is quite notorious that Mr. D'Arrietta goes about the office and collects in this way on pay-day, carrying a large chamois-leather bag to hold his collections, betting debts, or loans. These are things that took place when I was there, and they had been prevailing for some two years. They may have been abolished since, because I have spoken about the matter, and it has become pretty open, and consequently things are done more secretly now. With reference to the competency of the overseers, I wish to notice one man who holds the position of Overseer of Bills, Mr. George Thrum. I cannot imagine what is the need of having an overseer for that duty specially.

1165. Captain Onslow. With two men under him? When it is necessary to employ a good number of men on that work, Mr. Thrum is a nonentity—he has no power. Mr. D'Arrietta is the overseer, and he is a very good one; but he supplies the place of Mr. Adams and countermands his orders, so that the men would not really know Mr. Adams for an overseer at times, if it were not for his insolence.*

1166. Chairman. Have you any other remarks to make? I was going to say that Mr. Thrum possesses no peculiar ability, and there is no reason why the young man who works under him could not take his work. It is a sinecure to keep Mr. Thrum in that position; nothing better than a sinecure for all he does; he scarcely gets off his seat all day, but reads books and newspapers, when, if he were competent, he might read or revise occasionally. Mr. D'Arrietta could do it all. With regard to Mr. Adams, his is a sinecure also. He comes there at night;† but if I had the management, I should have the night-work done alternately by two sub-overseers. I venture to say Mr. Brewer will tell you one overseer at a time does all the work at the Herald Office.‡

1167. Captain Onslow. You were some time in the Herald Office? Yes.

1168. Was there no betting going on there? Yes, openly amongst men, not boys; just as they might do it in the public streets.§

1169. Would Mr. Fairfax have allowed it if he had known it? I do not think he would interfere amongst men. Some of his best reporters have been book-makers. The Government Printing Office, I may say, has been put to a wrong use, in a small way, in doing work that is strictly not work for the Government. I refer to the work done for the Civil Service Musical Society. I do not see that the public ought to be called upon to pay for the work done for the Civil Service Musical Society. If a number of gentlemen choose to associate themselves together in that way, I do not see why their work should be done for nothing by the Government.

1170. What work is done? All their programmes, tickets, and circulars. It may not be a large amount of work, but it is expensive work, and may open the way to any amount of malpractices. I remember, too, that some binding was done for a gentleman who was once a Member of Parliament—books not belonging to the Parliamentary Library I should take it.

* ADDED (on revision):—But in Mr. Thrum's case, when there is any quantity of work on Bills Mr. D'Arrietta takes the copy from him and gives it out to the hands, and generally overseers its production. As a rule, there are three men employed to do the work that might easily be performed by one. For instance, one of the overseers should look after the fount-room and check the quantity of work,—the latter duty being now done by a computer, at £200 a year. I could do all this work myself.

† ADDED (on revision):—For which he receives £1, and the work performed on the average does not amount to £4 by all hands under him. This is during Session, when his time averages six hours for four nights of the week. He attends in the day-time during the recess, but if there is any work going on he is in the way—he is no use whatever. He is not educationally qualified to read or revise, and has given repeated evidence of his incompetency.

‡ ADDED (on revision):—And this shows the advantage and saving of the piece-work system; for all the overseer has to do is to place the copy in a heap, and say to the first man what type it is to be set in; he has no further trouble until it is out of the compositors' hands. Every man on the piece does his best to get a large quantity of work done, as upon that depends the amount he will have to receive. Every man at piece-work is to a great extent his own overseer, requiring but trifling instructions from those in authority. Therefore, fewer overseers are needed.

§ ADDED (on revision):—But the men were piece-hands, and lost no time; but the Government Office hands are paid for time-work or no work, so they can afford to knock off to make up their books.

- Mr. R. A. Taylor. 1171. Have you reason to suppose that books were bound for any one not connected with the Government? Yes, I know it. A small hand-cart full.
1172. Do you know whom they were for? Yes; Mr. John Lucas. I opened the books and saw his name in them. I did not observe what they treated of.
1173. Chairman.] Were the books of a private character? They were not the ordinary parliamentary works, but small books, octavo works; some of them were history, voyages and travels, &c.
1174. Captain Onslow.] Do you think the scale of payment in the Government Office affects the trade outside? No, I do not think it is any guide. It is an unfair system to pay four or five rates of wages. I think the office could be filled with an infinitely better staff than it is now, with a reduced number, who upon piece-work would turn out more and better work.
1175. You have stated that young and skilful compositors are very often kept back? Yes.*
1176. Have you known cases of these young and skilful men leaving the Government employment? No, they cannot see any opportunity of bettering themselves. There have been so many failures in small printing offices, starting newspapers, and so on, that work is not easily obtained.
1177. Your object in leaving was to better yourself? Just so. I did not feel comfortable there, so I left, and went idle in fact.
1178. You were saying that there are many people who are compositors are quite unfit for their office—that it requires men of good education—Is it not a merely mechanical employment? Not by any means.
1179. I have heard of men putting up type without knowing what they were doing? They were machines, not men; like some of the men imported from India by Mr. Parkes for the old Empire. They have one now in the Government Printing Office at £200; and I venture to say that, if the work was given him without sorting it at 1s. a thousand, in forty-seven hours he would not earn forty-seven shillings, and distribute his type.†
1180. Do these men make mistakes? Yes, they are stupid—they make gross blunders; only a few of them are competent workmen.
1181. Chairman.] Are you speaking of the men known as Eurasians? Yes. There is one in the Government Printing Office now, named Twigg; he came here with the first lot of Eurasians, sent out by Judge Burton as an experiment. This man some time back was unwell, and wished to go to Madras to see his country; he was granted leave of absence, which I see no objection to; but he got £50 to enable him to go to Madras, and his situation left open for him.
1182. Had he done anything to entitle him to this? On the contrary, he is an inefficient workman. He is very regular in his attendance, but physically he is unable to stand the exertion which would enable him in the course of a month to earn half what he is paid if the work were not picked for him.
1183. Mr. Couper.] Do you say he was imported by Mr. Parkes? No, he was sent out by Judge Burton with others, as an experiment. Mr. Parkes imported twenty-four more afterwards. One of those that came first, named M'Dicken, was a very fast compositor, and was in the employ of Mr. Parkes, who thought he was going to get a whole lot of M'Dickens.
1184. Captain Onslow.] You have stated that the hours of the men at work in the Government Printing Office were lighter than the hours in other offices? Yes, much lighter; and so they should be the more competent, so as to get out a larger quantity of work.
1185. Does that refer to all the year round? All the year round. Their hours of work are from half-past 8 till 6 for five days of the week, and until 1 o'clock on Saturday—forty-seven hours in all; and then they have many holidays and odd hours, for all of which they are paid; and if they work beyond that, they get well paid for overtime.
1186. You think the rate of pay in the Government Printing Office is higher than usual? Yes. I am now working from seventy to eighty hours a week for £3. That is very nearly double as many hours as these men work; and several hours of that at night, usually eight hours for six nights a week. I have to read and revise the whole of the Empire, and the greater portion of the Town and Country Journal.
1187. Did you make any complaints to the Government Printer, when you were there, of the gambling, or the conduct of the sub-overseers? No, I did not.‡
1188. Somebody called you a liar—did you complain of that? Yes.
1189. Did you get any satisfaction? Only what I told you,—that I should make some allowance for Mr. Adams's infirm health.
1190. Was the Government Printer prompt to redress grievances? Not among the class I belonged to. He never did redress one single grievance that I am aware of. In one case, in which I was concerned, a job was spoiled which had been a joint work, in its final stages, between a member of the permanent staff and myself. I had read the proofs of a job for the Treasury, in which the headings of several pages and the lines in the first column were alike. On having the matter placed before me for revision, I found that the proof containing the matter for what I took to be the third page had no mark in it; so I passed it on one side and initialled the form for press; Mr. Potter (the Superintendent) and Mr. Chapman (overseer) being at my elbow urging me to act speedily. It turned out afterwards that the compositor, in putting in the type, had put the matter belonging to the ninth page into the third page; and when revising it, which I did hurriedly, having been told by Mr. Potter that it was wanted urgently, I did not observe this. After the form had been worked off it was found that the matter belonging to the ninth page was missing from its proper place, but the mistake was not discovered till the full number (fifty sheets) had been worked off. I was called on for an explanation; and Mr. Richards ordered, by minute, that Mr. Dutton and myself should pay the cost of the job that was spoiled. I said I was perfectly content to pay, because that was the only way to bring about more care. The sum was 10s. 6d., which we were to pay between us, according to the first minute; but Mr. Dutton, being a permanent hand, and assuming more right to speak

* ADDED (on revision):—Some few. I may mention Mr. Baigent, a most amiable young man, very intelligent and skilful in his trade; he served some portion of his time in the office, and has been kept on the supernumerary staff for many years. He was dismissed some time ago upon Mr. Adams's report, for some trifling matter, in which the overseer was the leading delinquent, but he had the ear of the Government Printer, and young Baigent had to go to the right-about.

† ADDED (on revision):—I may explain that the way work is valued on piece is, that if in four hours I compose as many thousands of type as would come to 5s. at 1s. per thousand, I must deduct one-fourth that sum for distribution, so that my actual earnings if I do not distribute the type would only be 3s. 9d. This is of course merely comparative.

‡ ADDED (on revision):—I was not an overseer—only a supernumerary—and had not the ear of Mr. Richards. Besides, I don't approve of tattling; and should not now have called attention to it, but from a sense of duty to the public to expose abuses in any branch of the Public Service.

Mr. R. A. Taylor.
1 Nov., 1870.

speak to the Government Printer than myself, went in to Mr. Richards and had some conversation with him; and the result was that Mr. Richards reversed his original decision, and sent out another ultimatum, in which he ordered "Taylor to be fined two-thirds and Dutton one-third." I thought that was not fair, and I spoke to Mr. Potter about it. He said—"If you have any appeal to make, you had better see the Government Printer about it." I said it was such a trumpety affair that I would bear with it. That was one reason why I left the place; I was so disgusted and so annoyed that such a thing should be done.

1191. Do you know if the pay-clerk has authority to pay any person except the person to whom the money is due? I do not know. I know he does it.

1192. Were you examined here at your own request, or were you summoned? I was summoned; but it is as well to state that I have long since desired to have the working of this office inquired into, and this Committee does not at all satisfy me. It somewhat took the wind out of my sails when I saw the notice in the paper; for I was desirous of having the investigation conducted by practical men like Mr. Fairfax, Mr. Richard Jones, and Mr. J. K. Heydon, all of whom have been long engaged in the printing business, and are thoroughly practical printers, and understand the technicalities of the profession.

1193. I may say I have been struck with the similarity between your evidence and that of Mr. Mason. Have you had any conference with Mr. Mason on this subject? I have been every day with Mr. Mason since the Committee was appointed. We have had no consultation as to what I know about the office; there has been no such thing as comparing notes between Mr. Mason and myself; because I hold myself as possessed of information he could not possibly acquire. My position in the Government Printing Office was entirely different from his. I had the opportunity of seeing the work the men turned out, the quantity they performed, and how their average was obtained. The work was not fairly given out.*

1194. Do you know whether any favouritism is shown by the overseers to the workmen? Yes, decidedly; I could give numerous cases. When I worked in the office there was a large English work reprinted there—the Report of the Commission on Capital Punishment—in which there was a large quantity of what we call "fat"—that is, work which a good tradesman could make high wages upon, but which many of the permanent staff could not cast off or set at all if given to them in manuscript. Tabular matter being more intricate takes a greater amount of time, and by an arrangement in the trade it is paid extra for. I have known instances in which the solid portion of the work has been given to the piece-hands, and the tabular matter put on one side and given to the house-hands, who have been told how to set it, and thereby had their average swelled; and I have been called upon to do work in connection with the same job which these establishment hands ought to have done—that is, the dirty slavish work, such as putting it into form.

1195. Do you think the Government Printer was aware of this? I cannot judge whether he was aware of it or not, but he ought to have been; it was complained of frequently.

1196. Did any of the supernumerary hands complain? I believe two did. I myself complained to Mr. Potter; I did not think it necessary to go to Mr. Richards always.

1197. Was any notice taken of your complaint? Not the slightest. Mr. Potter laughed, and said—"Oh, you are always complaining; you want everything fat. You made so much last month; you need not grumble." I did complain that this man Steward, Toby Bushelle, and others, had a large average through this favouritism, to blind the Treasurer or those who have to see to these matters.† The average is not made up fairly. Every compositor should return his types to case; and if it takes him two hours to set them up, half an hour, or one-fourth, should be deducted for the restoration of them; so that if a man is composing for forty hours a week, he should have ten hours to distribute his type. It has frequently occurred that a large quantity of type has been lying about on the frames of the regular hands, and when the extra hands have been waiting for the Votes and Proceedings we have been sent to distribute this type or to compose from copy belonging to the regular staff; and this has been entered to them, and charged to their credit, though we have done the work and have been paid for it.

1198. Chairman. Do I understand you to say that the men on the establishment were paid for work they did not do? They got credit for it in their average; they get their salary whether they do sufficient work or not; but if called upon to learn whether Mr. Jones or Mr. Brown did a fair quantity of work during the past month, the computer can show what these men are supposed to have done during the month; and he shows that a certain document or part of one has been his work, whereas I have done two-thirds of it and been paid for it.

1199. Captain Onslow. You have stated that favouritism is shown to the permanent hands, to the prejudice of the supernumeraries—Have you ever known the reverse? Never. I trust I am a little above such meanness; but I do think that if such favouritism were shown I had a right to expect it, having been so long on familiar terms with those in the office. I think they might have stretched a point to give me a little favouritism, but they never did. In fact, Mr. Adams, with whom I have been on intimate visiting terms, going to his house to tea, and corresponding with him frequently, has done more to thwart me in the prosecution of my duties than any one I ever had to do with; and Mr. D'Arrietta has also caused me a deal of unnecessary obstruction and annoyance.

1200. Do you think this encourages a system of subserviency? No doubt of it.

1201. And the most subservient people are generally shown the most favour to? Yes.

1202. Do you know where the Government buy their type? They buy it here in Sydney from a printer's broker carrying on business as Sharwood & Co. Some of the type has been obtained from the Australian Type Foundry.

* ADDED (on revision):—I claim to come to the consideration of this inquiry as independently, and as free from bias or petty feeling, as any of you gentlemen. I take my stand upon higher grounds—those of assisting, if possible, in a matter that I do understand, to bring about, at one and the same time, a saving of expenditure in this department, and a more efficient working thereof. I have nothing to gain or lose, for under no circumstances do I intend to work in the Government Printing Office whilst I can obtain private employment. There I am free: in the Government Service I was a serf to men unqualified mentally to speak to me.

† ADDED (on revision):—In fact the whole family of the Stewards—there are three in the office, who are paid, I think, something like £560 between them—have had any quantity of preference shown them, to enable them to show well in the totals at the close of the month. I have no hesitation in stating that, as a practical man, having a full knowledge of the ability of those of whom I speak, that I can find two young men, clever and intelligent—I refer to C. Scott (who was my assistant years ago) and Henry M'Kern—who, if given the same description of work as the Stewards, could earn more from month to month than these three very useless incumbents. I would stake my own reputation, as one qualified to pass an opinion, as to the correctness of this assertion. The Stewards do not fairly earn between them £300 a year.

- Mr. R. A. Taylor. 1203. Do you think an excessive price has been given for it? I think the Government could buy in the home market equally as well as Sharwood's firm, and they would save the profit.
1204. Do you think an excessive price has been paid? No; but I think the Government ought to have the discount.
1205. Is it bought by contract? By contract, I believe. I do not suppose the Government pay more than the schedule prices in the specimen book of Figgins & Co., but then I say that a large buyer like the Government ought to have some advantage. These are the prices they sell at to a small buyer, and the Government should have the drawback on large quantities, and they would have if they went into the home market first hand.
1206. Mr. Couper.] Do you remember in what year it was that Mr. Lucas had the binding work done to which you have alluded? It was about two years and a half ago; I am not sure, but I think quite that.

1 Nov., 1870.

FRIDAY, 4 NOVEMBER, 1870.

Present:—

CAPTAIN ONSLOW, R.N.,

MR. WILSON,

MR. WINDEYER.

WILLIAM R. PIDDINGTON, ESQ., IN THE CHAIR.

Mr. Joseph Cook called in and examined:—

Mr. Joseph Cook.

4 Nov., 1870.

1207. Chairman.] Have you any knowledge of the system of management adopted at the Government Printing Office? None.
1208. Mr. Wilson.] You are a printer? Yes.
1209. Chairman.] Do you think it would be advisable to submit the Government Printing Office to tender? I have scarcely thought of it; I can hardly tell. I have often thought the better way would be for the Government to call for tenders for the work; but I never thought of the Government tendering the office.
1210. What I want to know is, whether, in connection with the work being performed by public contract, the Government Printing Office might be let by the Government to persons so contracting, under conditions providing for the security of the type? That of course might be done.
1211. Do you see any difficulty in the way of a contract based upon the letting of the plant in the Government Printing Office? I doubt whether a sufficiently large firm here would undertake to lease the whole of the Government Office.
1212. You are of opinion that there are no master printers in Sydney who would be sufficiently responsible to undertake a contract of that description, including the letting of the Government Printing Office, type, and plant, as a part of the contract? I should like to have given that a thought before being asked for an opinion. I fancy no one could be found to do it.
1213. Have you given any consideration to the question whether the printing of the Government Printing Office could be best carried out by a system of public contract or not? I have always thought that, ever since I have been in business, now upwards of twenty years in the Colony.
1214. Are you of opinion that the public interest would be benefited by the work being done under a public contract? I think it would be a very great saving.
1215. You say you have no knowledge of the management of the Government Printing Office? No, I have not been in it for many years—I dare say sixteen years.
1216. Are you of opinion that there are responsible master printers in Sydney who would, if invited by the Government, tender for the Government printing? I do not know whether they would or not. There are sufficient offices to do it.
1217. Do you think there is any probability, if such a course were taken by the Government, that there would be any master printers to tender to perform the work? I think so.
1218. Mr. Windeyer.] What do you base your opinion upon that the work would be done more cheaply by contract than it is at present? I can hardly state why, but I believe it would be done cheaper by contract—very much cheaper. I think the expense of the office would be reduced very considerably by giving work out. The Government would not be supporting a large staff and a large establishment.
1219. Mr. Wilson.] You are aware there are some works of a peculiar character that are done at the Government Printing Office; for instance, the Brands Gazettes that are published. In the case of any one contracting to do the work, would not that plant necessarily have to be handed over to the contractor? No, he could purchase that specially.
1220. Would not that be incurring a great and unnecessary expense when the Government has the plant already? In such a case it would be better to have that saved, because that is of a peculiar nature.
1221. Do you not think that if the Government were making up their mind to do the work by contract, seeing that they have such a large building in their own hands, it would be better to have it as part of the contract that the contractor should take the building and plant? It would be better; but I fancy no one would be inclined to go into such a large undertaking, having already their own establishments.
1222. A contractor would require to have very large premises, convenient to the Houses of Parliament, to carry out the work, therefore it would be an advantage to him to have the use of the Government building? My opinion has been that it would be better to divide the Government work into different sections, and have each branch of it separately tendered for.
1223. Do you not think the Government might get themselves into a difficulty if they had a good contractor to do one part of the work and the rest not carried out in an efficient and proper manner? Why more so than with any other Government contracts?

Mr.

Mr. Samuel Hawker Banks called in and examined:—

1224. Chairman.] Have you been long connected with the printing business? Twenty-seven years last month.

Mr. S. H.
Banks.

1225. Where did you serve your time? Part of it at the Government Printing Office in Sydney, and the remainder with Mr. Richard Jones, on the Maitland Mercury.*

4 Nov., 1870.

1226. Have you worked in many offices? Yes, in all the best offices in the country.

1227. Will you state where? Being desirous of travel, I went from the Maitland Mercury to the Argus Office in Melbourne; from the Argus to the Register in Adelaide; from the Register to the Government Printing Office there; from the Government Printing Office back to the Argus again; from thence to the Herald and Age; then to Tasmania to the Cornwall Chronicle, where I was for eighteen months a reporter and compositor; thence back again to the Argus; thence to Messrs. Goodhugh & Hough's (now Fergusson and Moore's) establishment in Melbourne; from thence to the Government Printing Office in Melbourne, where I remained nine years and ten months.

1228. In what capacity were you employed in the Government Printing Office in Adelaide? I had sole charge of the parliamentary and jobbing departments.

1229. Can you give the Committee any information with regard to the mode of conducting the Government Printing Office at Adelaide? The Government Printer, Mr. Cox, conducted his establishment on the most economical principles. He did all the overseer's work himself. He was constantly in the office, and he entrusted the various departments to what you may term principals; they were not overseers, but they were responsible men; as, for instance, I could not call myself an overseer, because I had no authority, but I had the responsibility under Mr. Cox. I had to work myself, sometimes very hard. The idea of the office was economy, combined with practical excellence.

1230. With respect to the Government Printing Office in Adelaide, was it the practice to select the best compositors when additional work required additional hands? Yes. As an instance, when I left the Government Printing Office to go to the diggings, very much against Mr. Cox's wishes, he said—"I shall want a man in your place, and I will give you the privilege of going round and selecting that man." I did so, and the man is still with him. That is ever since the year 1851. The man is still, I believe, in my position.

1231. With regard to the Government Printing Office in Melbourne, are you acquainted with the practice there on the part of the Government Printer—Is it the practice there to appoint apprentices to the position of compositors, irrespective of any other consideration? No; the practice in the Government Printing Office in Melbourne is simply this:—They take on an apprentice as often as one comes out of his time only; so that there would be always about three apprentices,—one pretty well on, one coming out or just on the eve of it, and another preparing. But when Mr. Ferres wanted additional hands for any great job he sent out for these men, most of whom he knew, and many of whom had been there before; and at the conclusion of the job, if he wanted any additional hands for his staff, he would select one perhaps, or it might be two, from this body, numbering as high as forty men on an occasional job, and from that forty he perhaps would choose two for the permanent staff. The time I was selected—it was after many trials—I think I was backwards and forwards five or six times on various jobs before an opportunity offered or I became permanent. I think I was one of two who were selected at that time, and a period of nearly three years elapsed before he augmented the staff further.

1232. It was the practice of the Government Printer in Melbourne to recruit his establishment from the best men he could find in the trade? Yes, and from the apprentices when they were out of their time, if they were competent; if they were not competent they were dismissed. I knew three who went away one after the other.

1233. What is the system of work adopted in large newspaper offices, such as the Argus and other papers, with respect to piece-work? It is all piece-work, and the mode is very simple. One overseer under the Superintendent is quite sufficient. The copy is taken up to a certain time, and the men go right on with their work. No talking, nor anything else. They know perfectly well what to do. When the copy is all out and the proofs corrected, the men go quietly away. There is no humbug or unnecessary work in a piece-office. There no apprentices are employed. The Superintendent takes one night and the overseer the other, and they give out all copy; the overseer of the night answers all questions, and in fact acts as a sort of sub-editor during the time the work is going on. If there is any complication in the copy, for instance, he says—Be good enough to set it in such a style, and it is done inalterably.

1234. Are you of opinion that the plan adopted in the Government Printing Office in Sydney, of what they call establishment hands and supernumeraries, has worked with advantage to the Country? No, I do not think it is an advantage at all.†

1235. What change would you consider a beneficial change with respect to that practice? I would either do away with the supernumerary staff entirely, or put them all on the piece. The double system does not act well. It leaves a great deal of room for favouritism and the employment of unfair means. As for instance, the supernumerary staff, to which I previously belonged, never got fair copy. The copy given to us was of the very worst and most lean description, and very little of that. But the house-hands had all the copy picked for them. (The witness further explained his meaning by reference to a sheet of the Votes and Proceedings.)

1236. Then you are of opinion that this system of establishment hands and supernumeraries gives birth to a system of unfair treatment of the men so employed together? I am. I saw an instance recently. One of the time-hands went up for copy, and Mr. D'Arrietta gave him some copy. Said he—"Do you think I can make my average on that?" "Oh, well, give it me back," said Mr. D'Arrietta; and he gave it to Mr. Mason, who made good money on it. It was fair copy.

1237. With reference to the comparative economy of the two systems, I wish to know whether, from your experience, you think the system of paying some of the men in the Government Printing Office monthly, as establishment hands, is more advantageous to the Government than if they, or men of a similar class, were employed on piece-work as a rule? The question requires some little circuit in the answer, because if you were

* ADDED (on revision):—I left the Government Printing Office (at the time Mr. W. J. Rowe was put away by the Government) because the morale of the office was beneath what I had been used to, and there was no likelihood of my ever learning there more than I already knew.

† ADDED (on revision):—After the first Progress Report of the Royal Commission in Melbourne, Mr. Ferres, under pressure, tried the double system, and employed a piece-staff for the Victorian Hansard; but he told me (while on a visit recently) that it could not be worked, and he had been obliged to abandon the system as impracticable.

Mr. S. H.
Banks.

4 Nov., 1870.

were to put the whole establishment on monthly or weekly payments, I should advocate a system of clickership, as in Melbourne. The Superintendent was always at his desk in the office, or if he was not there a sub-overseer was there. If he had a piece of work of eight or nine pages, more or less, perhaps he would call to me by name. I would go to his desk and take his copy. Perhaps I should say—Is this in a hurry, sir? because if it were wanted in a hurry I should require assistance. If he said no, it would be the average time, or what was considered fair time for one to do it in; but if he wanted it in a hurry I would say—Would you give me assistance? and he would send me four or five men, as the case might be; but he did not come to any of these four or five men and ask them to be responsible, but to me.

1238. Are you alluding to piece-work or time-work? Common time-work.

1239. What I wish to know is,—from your experience of the trade, do you think, if piece-work were the rule, that rule would work as efficiently and more economically than the present system of placing printers on the establishment at a yearly rate of wages? I believe more so, as good workmen always prefer piece-work, as do employers also, if they study their own interest; but the Government would require some little protection in the way of very open matter. The English rules provide even for those cases very equitably between employer and employed. There would be no trouble in overlooking, because piece-men would overlook themselves, and it would secure silence and encourage smartness, because the amount of the men's earnings would depend upon the quantity of their work, and it would be to their interest to get their work done as speedily and well as possible.*

1240. You are aware that sometimes there is a very considerable amount of tabular matter to be set up—Is it not the practice of the trade to pay for tabular matter higher than for ordinary composition? Yes, it is paid for at one and a half, one and a third, or double, according to form, and even then some of the Government tables would not pay; they would no more than pay if paid treble. Some of the tables in the Blue Book give a man all he can do to earn money on them, to do them well.

1241. As a rule, is it your opinion that printed matter could be set up more economically by a system of piece-work than by day-work? As a general rule it could.

1242. What is the test of the efficiency of the establishment hands in the Sydney Office—how is their efficiency as compositors ascertained, when they are on the establishment? I do not think there is any system there at all. A boy once taken into the office is there for life; his place is assured to him; work is no test at all.

1243. Captain Onslow.] Whatever his qualification? Whatever his qualification. There are some men there whom I would not employ to-morrow if I were a master. I say it in all kindness too. I bring no feeling with me in regard to my evidence.

1244. Chairman.] I gather, from what you have stated, that the piece-hands in the office are not fairly treated by the overseers? They are not; and they are very disrespectfully treated too. They do not exchange those courtesies which should exist in the office.

1245. Who generally composes what is known as the parliamentary work in the office—the staff-hands or the piece-hands? The supernumerary staff. I understand you to mean the Votes and Proceedings.

1246. Yes? The supernumerary staff at night.

1247. Are the supernumeraries fully employed on parliamentary work at night? No; sometimes they are not half employed; sometimes they are waiting for hours till the House rises. If there is a long debate, the men are put on time, and while on time they are doing house-work, of course; though I have known instances of their getting other copy on piece, such as evidence, &c.

1248. There seems a peculiarity in the mode of conducting this office in Sydney, and I would wish to know whether the work done by the piece-hands as day-work is placed to the credit of the house-hands? Do I understand you to ask whether, if the house-hands are employed at night on time-work, the work they do goes to the credit of the house or of individual members?

1249. No; I wish to know, if the piece-hands are employed on time-work, while waiting for parliamentary copy, whether the work they do is placed to the credit of the house-hands? If Mr. Adams, the overseer, tells me to go on time, perhaps he gives me a proof belonging to one of the house-hands, and of course my correcting it saves that man labour in the morning, and gives him the opportunity to make a better average, as allowing him more time for composition.

1250. Is it correct to say that work performed by the piece-hands is sometimes placed to the credit of the establishment hands when they really do not do it? It would be correct to say so. The other night, perhaps a month ago, I set about three sticks of matter for one of the house-hands. I was on time, and was told by Mr. Adams to go and take up the copy. It was some work on Patents. When I came in the morning one of the house-hands who works opposite to me said to me—"Why did you not take up my copy?" I said it was immaterial to me whose copy it was I worked on. He said—"I wish to goodness you had set mine for me; I want a bit of fat now and then." This is the clearest proof I can give you that they occasionally and often get the benefit of our night-work. At other times we have been put on distribution, and told to go and put certain type into Mr. so-and-so's case. Common sense will dictate that if a man gets his cases filled for him he can do a great deal more work, which shows to his advantage.

1251. Then I understand that you composed certain matter for which you were paid by time, but that somebody else on the establishment was given credit for that as his work? Not for my composition alone, but for my distribution of his types or correction of his proofs; in one case (that of the work on Patents) for composition, in my own recent experience.

1252. Each compositor, whether on the establishment or a supernumerary, has a frame to himself? Yes. That is usual in all offices, in order that he may be found readily; it is quite necessary.

1253. Are what are called house-proofs ever given to be corrected by piece-hands at night? They are, very often, as I have previously explained. It very often appeared to me as if the proofs were kept on purpose for us—they were so dirty.

1254. What is known as the average, as applied to the house-hands? Suppose a man gets £16 a month, the average expected of him will be £4 worth of work a week, and in order to arrive at that they carefully preserve everything to his credit; and if at the end of the month they cannot make up this £4 a week, or £16 a month, he has not come up to his average. According to regular practice, such a man's average ought to be something over that per month, or else the Government is getting nothing out of his labour. He is receiving £16 a month, and he does not make it. He should have his average made just as a piece-hand would have his earnings, clear of everything; because if we were allowed time for correction, distribution, &c., we should do very well indeed.

* ADDED (on revision):—I have no hesitation in saying that if the Government work were given to contract to-morrow the contractor would adopt the "clicker" system as the most just to the men and himself.

Mr. S. H.
Banks.

4. Nov., 1870.

1255. As I understand you, certain compositors in the Government Printing Office employed as time-hands are yet expected to make up, by some calculation of their work, an average equal to the amount of the time-wages so paid to them? Yes; and if they do that they give ample satisfaction, whereas their work should be more valuable.

1257. Then they are actually paid, as a matter of fact, without any reference to the value of the work they perform? Without any reference whatever. And they make up this average by a system of so much time distribution, so much time correcting. Every piece-hand has to do these things for himself. These are our drawbacks. We get paid for nothing but what shows, whereas these men get credit for what does not show.

1258. Then they get credit for a fictitious amount of work? They do, most decidedly.*

1259. Have you noticed any difference in the treatment of the overseers to the men in the Government Printing Office, as compared with other offices? A very great deal. In all the other offices where I have worked, I have been treated, and naturally looked to be treated, as a gentleman, in the exchange of courtesies.

1260. Have you observed any difference in the treatment of the supernumerary hands, as compared with the hands on the establishment? Yes. In a printing office conducted like the Government Printing Office one can easily arrive at a conclusion, because the house-hands seem to be all hobnobbing with each other; but not so with us, for I have often heard the overseers express themselves that we were an (adjective) nuisance in the place—that we were not wanted at all.

1261. To what do you attribute the apparent prejudice against the piece or supernumerary hands? My own private judgment on the matter has been long since arrived at. I think their system is so cosy and so comfortable that they look upon us as interlopers, who might possibly see and hear too much. It is a close borough.

1262. Then you think the peculiar system of paying compositors by time, without reference to the work they do, creates an unjust advantage in their favour, which they wish to continue without interference from without? Without molestation; that is just it.

1263. What is your opinion of the work performed by the establishment hands as a rule? I think it inferior; their rule-work especially I should characterize as indifferently done; it is old-fashioned and slovenly.

1264. Do you consider the overseers well qualified as overseers? Not as a rule. I speak of the overseers, not mentioning the Government Printer and the Superintendent. I should estimate Mr. Buchanan, the overseer of the jobbing room, as a thorough good workman and a gentleman at all points; he is a kind gentleman and a thorough printer. Mr. D'Arrietta is, I believe, a very good workman, but rather brusque in his manner. The others I have not much opinion of.

1265. Do you recollect how many overseers are employed in the Melbourne Argus Office? Mr. George was Superintendent; he had a great deal of charge; I will not reckon him at all. Mr. May and Mr. Jack took alternate nights and alternate Sundays. Two overseers over about forty-five compositors, and about 100 men altogether in the establishment.

1266. Are you of opinion that overseers in the Government Printing Office are in excess? If they are necessary here, there must have been a sad want of overseers where I have been elsewhere. In the Government Printing Office at Melbourne we had only two overseers, and a much larger establishment. Mr. Ferres did his own work as Government Printer; here it is delegated to some one else.

1267. In Adelaide —? Mr. Cox, as I have previously explained, employed none. He may now.

1268. Have you any recollection how many compositors were employed at Adelaide? I think some twenty-five or twenty-six.

1269. And no overseer? No, only the system I have told you of; I was held responsible for my work, and another gentleman for his, and so on.

1270. Do you consider the system in the Government Printing Office with respect to the readers is a good system? No, I do not. They have no system. If you take a piece of copy from the overseer, it might look rather complicated. You say—Is there any particular way of setting this? and he would say—You had better ask the reader. You have then to find out which reader is likely to read it, for their name is legion, and they have all different systems. If one reads it, it will be so-and-so, but if another reads it, it will be different. One will have certain words commenced with capitals, another will have them in ordinary type; and there is a variety of things of that kind which give the compositor more or less trouble to correct his proof, accordingly as he sets up in the style that pleases the reader or otherwise.

1271. I understand you to mean by want of system, that one reader takes one view of the necessity for correction, and another reader takes another? Yes, and acts upon it: there is no appeal.

1272. Captain Onslow.] This is independently of grammatical or literal errors, but simply as regards style? Yes.

1273. Chairman.] Could not the Government Printer easily direct that some uniform system should be carried out? The Government Printer might do a good deal to benefit the office if he liked; that is, if he knew what to do.

1274. Is it not quite practicable to adopt a uniform system, if he exercised his authority? Yes, very easy. Once establish a good system and it works itself like a clock; wind it up, and away it goes. In Melbourne and other good offices we keep nothing up (that is, with a capital letter) but names of persons and places.

1275. Were you acquainted with the Government Printer in Sydney previous to your present employment in the office? Yes; he came to the office as a boy while I was serving a portion of my time there. I taught him the first rudiments of his business.

1276. Captain Onslow.] Are you speaking of Mr. Richards? Yes. I am about two years his senior. I knew them all. I knew Mr. Adams; he was out of his time. Mr. D'Arrietta came about the same time as Mr. Richards. Mr. Thrum was nearly out of his time when I went to the office.

* ADDED (on revision):—I desire to add that this extreme case is not universal, because some of the house-hands are good fair workmen, and worth their money in any office; but they are in minority.

Mr. S. H.
Banks.
4 Nov., 1870.

1277. Chairman.] Do you think the piece-staff in the Government Printing Office is composed of good workmen, and men of general experience? I should think there are six or seven good workmen of general experience; because they have been out in the world, and they have got experience and are very good workmen; but generally speaking the staff is indifferent. Perhaps you might class them as one-half, or to be liberal, one-third indifferent men.

1278. Have the best class of supernumeraries any chance of becoming permanent hands? Never. The ultimatum has gone forth. Mr. Richards told me so himself when I came from Melbourne.

1279. Is not that exclusion of the supernumeraries from the establishment—whether first-class compositors or not—prejudicial to the interests of the public? Most decidedly. It bars the office to the best and most competent men, and it encourages a system of—what shall I say—Well, we have got it among ourselves, and we will keep it among ourselves.

1280. A system of monopoly? Perfect monopoly; it is against the individuals themselves, if they only knew, because they never become competent; and it is against the interests of the Government, because their work never approaches the standard of excellence. The system is wrong to the permanent staff, to the Government, and to the supernumerary staff; wrong decidedly—rotten.

1281. What is the general rule in printing offices where apprentices are taken, when the apprentices have finished their time? They are sent away instantaneously if they are not capable. I knew three instances myself in Melbourne. If they are competent men they are retained in their places.

1282. Are there any persons employed in the Government Printing Office known as improvers? It is a new-fangled term to me; I do not understand it exactly. There are persons of that designation employed there.

1283. I presume from your answer that the persons called improvers in the Government Printing Office are not known in printing offices generally? No. I believe the term is known in tailoring and shoe-making, but not in printing. It is unnecessary, because if a man cannot do his work, let him go. It is an injustice to everybody to keep him; an injustice to me, who pretend to be a good workman; an injustice to the Government; an injustice to everybody.

1284. Was any work called confidential work done in the Melbourne office while you were there? There was a little: the examination papers for the University and the Volunteer Force, and sometimes other little matters; but it was not general. The work was principally the ordinary parliamentary work, which of course every educated printer knows very well should not be taken out of the office. It is a sort of free-masonry among printers. You might put me to the torture and I would not tell you what took place in the office. I have been trained to that.

1285. Do you recollect, in your experience in the Government Printing Office in Melbourne, whether on any occasion confidential matter was sent to the office, in reference to proposed alterations in the Victorian Tariff, or work of that character? Always.

1286. Was that confidential work entrusted to the men employed at the Government Printing Office? Yes; I have had it myself, just as ordinary work. I was on the parliamentary work entirely when I was in that office, nearly ten years.

1287. You are not aware of any violation of the confidence reposed in the compositors there? No; no one ever dreamt of it.

1288. Captain Onslow.] Had you to make any declaration? No; it was understood. If I had divulged anything I should have lost my honor, let alone my situation, and I value the former more. I should have been pointed at and socially damned.

1289. Chairman.] No separate staff was employed for work of a confidential nature? Not for parliamentary work. I wish to exclude the other—the University and Volunteer examination papers.

1290. These confidential papers were entrusted to the compositors indiscriminately—they were all considered worthy of trust? Sometimes Mr. Baker would take two men from one part of the house, sometimes from another.

1291. There was no division of the composing staff? No, they never set men against men like that.

1292. What was the practice in the Melbourne Printing Office with regard to the Victorian Electoral Lists—was the matter kept standing from year to year? No, it was distributed every year.

1293. What is your opinion of the practice prevailing here—is it a saving, or the contrary? I have thought over this question somewhat. The rolls which have come under my notice for correction could have been as cheaply reset as altered, the alterations being so numerous, and the good matter remaining being so trifling. Then the cost for superintendence and reading is the same for the altered roll as for new composition. If the roll were set every year, as in the Government Office at Melbourne, less material would be required. No printer would think of blocking his material thus from year to year, unless the alterations were very light indeed; but the way for the Committee to arrive at correct conclusions on the subject would be in asking for a return showing—1. The cost of type, racks, galleys, and furniture, &c., &c., now in possession of the Government for the purpose of the Electoral Rolls; together with the annual interest thereon. 2. The entire value of last year's roll now in type. 3. The cost of last year's roll, for composition, correction, overseeing, reading, &c. The difference would show the profit or loss to the Government. It must also be borne in mind that the alterations will increase in number every year, by the deaths of elder electors, and new qualifications of those coming of age and arriving in the Colony; thus increasing the charges for alteration, almost amounting in a short time to an entirely new roll.*

1294. Captain Onslow.] Is it not old type that is kept set? It is a colonial type. They replenish it with new type, more or less, every year; the new is run among the old, and it comes out in a nice state; half the letters show, and half do not.

* ADDED (on revision):—But I think I could submit a plan by which the electorate system could be made, if not to produce a revenue, at least to pay its own expenses.

Mr. S. H.
Banks.

4 Nov., 1870.

1296. Do you think the present type and plant in possession of the Government at the Printing Office could be made useful, in the event of the work being done by public contract, through some conditions with the person contracting? Yes, there are two or three methods by which the Government could arrive at that. They could either sell the material, and of course the person taking the contract would be likely to buy it; or they could lease the premises and plant, subject to proper supervision, with a clause in the agreement insisting that the plant should be kept in the same condition, so that if the Government at any time felt disposed to change their tactics with regard to the contract, they would have everything in the same order as when they gave it up.*

1297. Do you see any difficulty in the plan you have last mentioned being carried out, so as to secure fair treatment, and fair wear and tear to the plant so let to the contractor? No difficulty whatever. Periodical stock-taking would insure all that—by a practical man of course; he could tell the condition of the type, either in case or out of case. I think the saving to the Government would be from fifteen to twenty-five per cent., in the absolute cost of labour, &c.

1298. Do you think the present Sydney Printing Office a suitable office? It is the worst constructed office I was ever in; nothing but doors, staircases, passages, and little bits of rooms. You can go and hide away, and do any mortal thing you like. A printing office should be as broad and open as possible, so that the Superintendent could sit in it and see from end to end.

1299. Are there many divisions and departments and rooms in the Government Printing Office in Sydney? There seem to be nothing else. I call it a rabbit-warren myself; and there have been some buildings lately added which make matters much worse.

1300. What do you think of the system prevailing of taking apprentices in the Government Printing Office—is it any benefit to the public? I think it is a great loss to them; it was a curse in the old time, and it is no better now. The Government have no business to be producers or competitors of labour; I think it is unjust to the trade. In fact, you might say it is as unjust for the Government to do their work in the way of printing as it would be for them to do their own bridge-building, or anything else; and no one questions the propriety of a contract in any other Government work. When on the piece, I am myself a contractor with the Government in a small way—so much for so much. There is no reason why one department of the Government should not be as well carried out by a contractor as another, save and except direct revenue—producing departments such as the Customs, Post, Telegraph, Railways, &c. But the apprentice system is decidedly wrong; they never think of apprentices in the Herald or other large newspaper offices.

1301. Were you on the supernumerary staff of the Government Printing Office? I was until recently, when I received my quietus. On Wednesday, 19th October, Mr. Richards came to me in the office, and told me he should not require me in the office till the following Monday. On Monday 24th, I went as desired, was told by Mr. Potter there was no work, and was supplied with a form to make out my bill upon. Requested by him to leave the office as soon as possible. He seemed ill-tempered and anxious for my departure. His words were, after walking round after me as if watching me very closely—"Have you much to do? Be good enough to go as soon as possible." I replied—"I have nearly finished." I then went in to see Mr. Richards for explanation; was told there were charges against me; asked what they were; these Mr. Richards read to me, and asked for my written refutation. I denied them all orally, and said I would write an answer to them, if supplied with a copy of them. This was refused. I received my discharge on Wednesday evening, 26th October. As far as I remember, the following was the substance of the charges against me. Having been seen on Hyde Park talking to Messrs. Mason and Taylor.—This I confessed, as being at liberty to speak to whom I chose; and these were both old friends; Mr. Taylor was my fellow-apprentice.

1302. Mason and Taylor are two printers who have given evidence before this Committee? Yes. He then charged me with having an independent bearing in the office.—I believe I replied that I did not consider my position, though a piece-hand, one of serfdom; and that I had never been taught nor expected to be, anywhere else, anything beneath a man. Finding fault with one of the readers.—This I confessed, and I will explain how it was. The parliamentary reader at night is not one of the most experienced of workmen, and he has been in the habit of altering commas and semicolons, &c., and I denied his right to alter my copy; I knew more about it than he, and I would not allow it. Smiling at one of the overseers.—This, I told Mr. Richards, was in good humour. He said—"No, it was sneering; it was my usual satirical style." Let that go for what it is worth. Telling some one that when the Committee had concluded its labours I would not give a pound for the Government Printership.—This I denied, but I said at the same time that I might not be willing to give much more now. Having been instrumental in getting the Committee.—I denied that solemnly. Supplying Mr. Wilson with the questions.—That I also denied. Jeering one of the permanent staff.—I denied that. We were told on the Tuesday night before this Wednesday that the office was closed, and we were not wanted. Mr. Gooch, one of the supernumerary staff, was going in. I do not know that I interfered at all, but somebody said to him—"It is no use your going up, because the office is closed; you cannot get in; you are not wanted." He rushed off, and somebody made some playful remark about it. Mr. Richards laid this against me as a crime of mine, and I denied it entirely. This is an exact copy of my discharge. (Handed in and read. Vide Appendix C.)

1303. Captain Onslow. Were these charges given to you in writing? No, I asked for them, and they were refused me.

1304. They were read to you? Yes.

1305. And you now give the substance of them from recollection? Yes.

1306. You refuted them on the spot? Yes.

1307. Chairman. Have you ever heard of a system of espionage in the Government Printing Office? Yes, it is very general; scarcely a word you can utter but what is conveyed to head-quarters. Mr. Richards is like the Chief of the Inquisition; he sits in his room away from all, but he knows of every curl of the lip and every glance of the eye. How did he know I smiled at the overseers? Bless my soul! Some of their conduct I could scarcely help smiling at.

1308. Do you consider this system of espionage likely to be conducive to the proper working of the office? I know of nothing more scandalous than to set man against man in that way. Every man is suspicious

* ADDED (on revision):—It is less the amount of money spent than the fact of its being ill-spent. There cannot be a doubt that both the quantity and cost of the Government printing will in time increase; but, as I take it, the object desired by the Government is the greatest amount of work in the best manner, at the lowest possible cost.

Mr. S. H.
Banks.

4 Nov., 1870.

suspicious of his fellows. Men have come to my frame and complained of other men, and complained of the system; they thought themselves pretty secure with me perhaps; they might not have gone so readily to others; but it is a crying shame all through the office; I never knew of such a thing in any other printing office.

1309. Have you ever heard of it in any other printing office? Never in my life.

1310. You think it is productive of injury to the men and injury to the Public Service? I do. It converts the Government Printer, who should be a kind gentlemanly supervisor, into a perfect monster—a man to be dreaded and feared.

1311. Do you think the Government Printer acts upon reports conveyed to him in the manner you have mentioned? I do, for reports are asked for; pieces of paper come out with the corner turned down, "Mr. so-and-so, report," "Mr. so-and-so, report," and so it goes round to about ten, and by and by the poor unfortunate victim has to answer all these charges. Why, they are worse than the burden on the back of Christian going through the Slough of Despond.*

1312. I think you have stated that in your opinion a system of contract would be a saving to the Government of from fifteen to twenty-five per cent.? Yes.

1313. And you think that confidence could be secured as well under a system of contract as under a system of a Government establishment? Quite so; because at the very worst, if the Government were to say to the contractor—This is a very important matter, this I charge you particularly with, the contractor might say to the Government—Well, I will take especial care of this as you desire it, and would do so accordingly. I do not know whether it has been mentioned to you or not, but some little time ago, Mr. Richards and I had a few words, and these words I referred to in our late interview, just before he gave me my quietus, as denying me common justice. The question was this:—We were working one night very hard. Half-past 10 o'clock is the usual time for supper. When half-past 10 came we went up and there was no more copy, so I said we had better go to supper then, as it was likely to be a late night. As we were in the act of going to wash our hands, the overseer said "Copy," and we went back immediately to the frames. I got my copy, and I worked at it till ten minutes to 12, and went up again, but got no more. I then said—"I think I shall go now and get a glass of beer to wash my supper down; the 'Blue Bell' will close in ten minutes." I went, got a glass of beer, ate my supper on the way, finished coming back, and was absent only seven minutes. In the interim a messenger from the House had arrived; and when I came back, thinking I should get some more copy, I went to the desk. Mr. Adams said—"No more copy for you; make out your docket"; and I made out my docket and went away, as did Mr. Clements, who went with me to supper, and on returning received a similar order. I felt somewhat aggrieved, and went and asked Mr. Richards about this, next morning. I said—"I have come not to make a complaint to you, but to ask you for an explanation. Do you allow time for supper or not?" He said—"Yes, certainly I do." I said—"How much?" "Half an hour," he said. "Will you allow me, Mr. Richards, to state a case?" "Yes, certainly," he said; and I stated the case as I have stated it to you. The next day, and the next, and the next, passed off; but one day Mr. Potter said to me—"Mr. Banks, I want you." He had a paper doubled back, on which was a memo. from Mr. Richards, to the effect that Mr. Adams should instantly have discharged Mr. Clements and myself. When I had read this, Mr. Potter said—"I do not think I should have shown you that; this is what I should have shown you:—"Let Mr. Banks and Mr. Clements be severely reprimanded; and if it occurs again (this is softer—the other was peremptory) if it occurs again, let them be dismissed." I said—"Mr. Potter, this does not refer to me; I know the relative positions of overseers and journeymen, and I think a statement like this is tending to do me a great deal of injury. I want you to explain to Mr. Richards (at that moment Mr. Richards opened his door) I want you to explain that I made no complaint at all, and this view of things is rather hurtful to me. In fact," I said, "it does not refer to me—I am not the offender." Mr. Adams's report of course was read to me. I forgot to mention that; and also, that Mr. Potter was anxious to shield himself from my blame. Next night I went up for copy. Mr. Adams looked down at me; he said—"You told a lie." I rather smiled that off; I did not know what he referred to. He repeated—"You told a lie." "What about, Mr. Adams?" said I. "You told a lie," he said again. "I presume," said I, "you are referring to the report to Mr. Richards. I beg you to understand that I made no complaint, and if a lie was told I am not the utterer of it." This was in front of all my companions.†

1314. Captain Onslow.] How long ago was this? About three months. I had to put up with this quietly; there was no appeal. I never heard of such a thing in my life. If he had called me a liar in the Argus Office he would have been fined a pound. The rule of that office was that any man provoking another to a breach of the peace should be fined a pound, and if he failed to pay he was dismissed. But this overseer here was allowed to do this, and his infirmity of temper was supposed to be an excuse for the violation of a social law.

1315. Has any change, to your knowledge, taken place in the management of the office since this Committee was appointed? Yes, there has been a great deal of making out of forms and hobnobbing, and a good deal of mystery going on. People's names have been changed about from one list to the other, to my own knowledge.

1316. As regards the distribution of "fat" and "lean"? The piece-hands have had such summary treatment that they could not say anything; they have been excluded from the office.

1317. How long is it since the supernumerary hands were suspended? I think I mentioned Wednesday, 19 October.

1318. Were any other hands taken on? No; eight or nine have gone back since, after signing a paper the contents of which I am not aware of. I was asked to sign, and I simply gave a negative to all these charges I have enumerated.

1319. How long were these supernumerary hands out of the office—ten days or a week? Between those numbers, perhaps; but I think they have gone back one by one, as they have written their statements, up to within about a week.

1320.

* ADDED (on revision):—Every well-regulated printing office is governed by what we call a "Chapel," presided over by the "Father." All minor disputes are settled, and beyond appeal, by this self-constituted body; and respectable employers know the value of this ruling power, and respect it. In this office there is a Chapel, but the most solemn matter ever discussed or decided is where they shall go on a holiday for a pic-nic, and what they shall pay for tickets. In all other matters, Mr. Richards is the Chapel, Father, and all.

† ADDED (on revision):—I should be glad if the Committee would obtain and read this extraordinary document to which I have referred—Mr. Adams's report and Mr. Richards's memoranda thereon.

Mr. S. H.
Banks.

4 Nov., 1870.

1320. But no other hands have been taken on in the meantime? None.*
1321. Do you think there will be any arrears of work? I cannot say about that. There is one thing I was going say to the Committee. It came under the question about the extra officers of the establishment. Here, in Sydney, they have got a fount-room-keeper and a stoneman. Now in Melbourne, with a very much larger office, the fount-room is kept, and the distribution, stone, and all that, done by the fount-room-keeper; and further than that, he imposed all the stereotype forms. He had these under his charge, so that he was really a useful man; thus giving one man quite enough to do, but not too much; in place of dividing the labour among three or four, and thus burdening the department with useless expense.
1322. Are there many of the people employed in the Government Printing Office enrolled in the Volunteers? Yes, a great number; in fact I believe that is one of the principal qualifications for favour; it opens the door to a great many things—permanent staff, and all that sort of thing.
1323. Are any of the supernumerary hands in the Volunteers at all? Two, I think, Messrs. Jones and Goggin.
1324. You have stated that there is a great deal of talk during work-hours? Yes, a great deal.†
1325. Is one of the chief items of conversation as regards the Volunteers? Yes; shooting, and betting about races, and things of that kind.
1326. Have any of these people been requested to enter the Volunteers—has any interest been made to induce them to do so? I have been solicited, as an old Melbourne Volunteer of twelve years standing, to do so, about a dozen times. When are you going to join us? was the cry. It seemed to be one of the roads to favour, and therefore I objected.‡
1327. Do any of these men even go out to any work connected with the Volunteers, in office-hours? Yes, every Monday and Thursday afternoon there is a detachment for shooting. A Volunteer funeral is a godsend. If anything is going on among the Volunteers, half the men go at one time, half at another. We never enjoyed these privileges in Melbourne. Mr. Ferres always said—"If you want to go Volunteering you must do it in your own time."
1328. Could any return be made showing the amount of time spent on Volunteering in office-hours? You might get the return, but not much faith could be placed in it. I do not know whether they keep any regular record of that description. Monday afternoons you can rely upon their being away, overseers and all.
1329. Is any additional work thrown upon the supernumerary staff by these people going out to Volunteer duties? I do not know; but this I know, they give us as little as possible. They only give us work when they are truly and heartily ashamed of themselves. They want to do away with us. They only make use of us when they absolutely want us. We are always being hurried:—Now then, have you not done that copy yet? come, come, bear a hand, hurry up. I never hear anything of this kind with the others. We are nice little playthings for them.
1330. Who admits the apprentices? Mr. Richards, I presume.
1331. Do they undergo any preliminary examination? I am not aware.§
1332. Mr. Wilson.] In Mr. Richards's letter, dated 25th October, 1870, in which he informs you that your services will be no longer required, he states that your disrespectful behaviour towards officers of the department has in several instances come under his own observation—Did he tell you in what this disrespectful behaviour consisted, that had come under his own observation? No; I have not seen Mr. Richards since I got this; but when I had an interview with him I said I hardly expected such treatment from an old friend. He said—"You have not deserved fair treatment; you have got your hand into this Committee, and you are going to give evidence inimical to me." I said—"I am not aware whether I am going to give evidence at all, and if I do give evidence I am entirely in the hands of the gentlemen composing the Committee, and cannot tell what questions they will ask me; and whatever they ask me I will tell the truth."
1333. You will remark that Mr. Richards does not complain of disrespectful behaviour towards himself, but of your disrespectful behaviour towards the officers of the department, which has come under his own observation? I never gave any cause for such a remark. Only Mr. Adams, with whom I had some words, can say anything against me.||
1334. You look upon this statement more as an excuse for getting rid of you than anything else? Yes.
1335. Have you ever heard the overseers use insulting language to the men employed in the department? Yes, I have; I have heard language which is not usual among overseers in a printing office.
1336. Can you give us instances? Yes, I have heard very curious orders given, not calculated to maintain that discipline and respect which should exist between the parties.
1337. Has it come under your own observation that any of the overseers have made bets with the men on horse-racing? Yes, freely; and drawing sweepstakes and things. It was never a subject of comment by me.
1338. Have you ever known instances of overseers lending money to persons in the office? I cannot say I have known a case of the sort; but I have seen a good deal of money-changing on pay-day. Pay-day seems to be the only day on which the Government is acknowledged or has any authority there.
1339. You informed Mr. Richards that you had no hand in getting this Committee? Most emphatically.
1340. I may tell you what I have told this Committee before, that I got my information from no person connected with the printing office. Have you ever heard of any complaints being made to the Treasurer with regard to the supernumerary hands? Never.

1341.

* ADDED (on revision):—But a certain number of the permanent staff had to go back at night, at 1/6 and 2/- per hour, to perform that work for which we were paid 1/3; and all this paid for as overtime, and in addition to their usual daily work.

† ADDED (on revision):—The place is like a Bedlam sometimes. The noise has often given me a headache. A printing office should be very quiet, so that attention might not be diverted from the subject before the workman, whose duties require concentration of thought.

‡ ADDED (on revision):—Mr. Richards only recently appointed a proof-puller from the piece-staff to the house-staff, without any special qualification for the work, and in direct contravention to his (Mr. Richards's) imperious and often expressed resolve. This person at once became a member of No. 5 Company, and voted I believe that very week for Mr. D'Arrietta to be an Ensign. I cannot blame the young man for accepting the office then vacant, but what can be thought of the head of a department who makes a law one day only to break it the next.

§ ADDED (on revision):—But they should do, and their intelligence and aptitude made the tests. If that system were carried out more strictly, we should have better printers than we have now—more like what they used to be considered—as printing is not all mechanical.

|| ADDED (on revision):—If my behaviour had ever been of the character so described, why was not complaint lodged and the matter investigated before the appointment of this Committee, if it was anything but an excuse to say something against me?

- Mr. S. H. Banks.
4 Nov., 1870.
1341. Did you ever hear of any complaints, as stated by Mr. Samuel in his answers to me, that he was dealing with certain complaints? I never heard of any.
1342. Will you give me the names of some of the supernumerary hands who were asked to sign that paper with regard to these questions? I do not know what paper they were asked to sign, but I know they have all signed papers.
1343. You were asked to sign a paper? Yes.
1344. Could you give me the names of other parties that were asked to sign papers, and have been restored to their office? Messrs. Leake, Jones, and O'Connor are of them—I saw two of them signing; Mr. Clements sent a paper also.
1345. There has been a supernumerary hand giving evidence here who has been dismissed altogether, Mr. Mason. Are you aware whether Mr. Mason is an efficient printer? I believe he is, very.
1346. He is what you call a good hand? Yes; I worked with him at Melbourne a little while, and he was so spoken of.
1347. Are there many hands inferior to Mr. Mason in the employment of the Government now? I do not know any superior.
1348. Of course there are many inferior? Yes. Mr. Mason is a thorough good printer.
1349. Have you ever seen anything disrespectful in Mr. Mason's conduct with regard to these overseers? No. Mr. Mason is a very good man in an office; he minds his work. In fact any man who has been properly trained in a printing office knows what he is about; he is not a child. The proper way to treat overseers is to keep them in their proper places, pay them due respect, and do your work. But doing work is not required there; sycophancy, toadyism, all kinds of things. No man of any spirit could submit to it.*
1350. Have you known that some very particular work that was sent to the Exhibition was done by Mr. Mason—that he was selected to do it at the Government Printing Office? I did not know that the Government Printer had sent any printing work to the Exhibition.† Mr. Mason is usually employed alternately with somebody else to do the stone-work at night; most unprofitable, badly paid labour.

ADDENDUM.

THERE is a matter to which I desire to call the attention of the Committee, as involving to some extent that system of economy held to be so desirable in all Government departments. Large printing houses like the Government Printing Office will depend mainly for their work on the sittings of Parliament; and consequently, during recess there will be little or nothing to do beyond common departmental work. To keep the whole of the staff at this period is to imply a loss to the Government; and to reduce the number of the staff to the requirements of the recess must involve those of its members sent away in a direct loss of time unless employed elsewhere—at all times doubtful. The way this difficulty was surmounted in the Melbourne office was by sending the men away in turns so many days in the week—say two or three, and extending the system through the whole office. By this arrangement there was a division of loss as well as of labour, and the Government was not charged for work not performed. In the Sydney office there is no diminution of the staff during the recess—that favour being reserved for the piece-hands, who, even in session time, are but very indifferently employed. In a recess of long duration I need not more than allude to the positive loss Government must sustain where no provision is made to relieve the office of its superabundant labour during those periods of slackness so frequently occurring; and question that management which permits it.

TUESDAY, 8 NOVEMBER, 1870.

Present:—

MR. ALLEN,	MR. SAMUEL,
CAPTAIN ONSLOW, R.N.,	MR. WILSON,
MR. WINDEYER.

WILLIAM R. PIDDINGTON, Esq., IN THE CHAIR.

Mr. William Henry Levey examined:—

- Mr. W. H. Levey.
8 Nov., 1870.
1351. Chairman. Are you a compositor? I am.
1352. Where did you serve your time? I served my time at Mr. Moyes', Castle-street, Leicester-square, London, where I worked until his death in 1832; I went then to Mr. Harrison's, who did the work of the London Gazette and the Foreign Office work; from thence I went to and was one Session at Mr. Nicholls', the printer of the Votes and Proceedings of the House of Commons; then I worked for twelve months at the Pitt Press, Cambridge; thence I went to the House of Commons Printing Office—Messrs. Hansard's, where I remained a period of ten years, till I left for these Colonies.
1353. Was that the last situation you occupied before you left for the Colonies? It was.
1354. Where are you now employed? At Messrs. Gibbs, Shallard, & Co's.
1355. Mr. Windeyer. About how long have you been employed there? About four years.
1356. Chairman. Have you ever worked in the Government Printing Office here? Yes; I was there about three years, under Mr. Hanson's management.
1357. Can you inform the Committee of any difference in the mode of carrying on the work in the Government Printing Office in Sydney as compared with the system adopted in performing the work of the House of Commons? The system is utterly different. In the performance of the House of Commons business, the work is done entirely by piece-work, and it is worked under a system of companionship, as it is termed; that is to say, so many men engaged in the establishment are fixed by the overseer as a companionship,

* ADDED (on revision):—I firmly believe that in this office, as a supernumerary at least, the fact of a man being a good workman and an intelligent one is against his chances of employment; they want none such there, fearing they might detect too many of their own shortcomings. The premium is rather given to incompetency, as is clearly illustrated by the late action of the Government Printer in the matter of the dismissals.

† ADDED (on revision):—He sent, I believe, some stereotype plates to Paris, and these were cast by Mr. Mason. I was told of this circumstance when I first went to the office.

companionship, and the members of this companionship select from among themselves a clicker, one whom they consider the most competent; the work for the compositors is given out to him, and he is supposed to superintend the workmen, and to do the best he can for the companionship; he is paid by the compositors; he gets his share of the time engaged while the work is being done, and is paid out of the total amount received by the companionship. He is not paid by the house at all, and is removable by the companionship if he does not do his duty, or if he attempts any undue influence or interference with the working of the establishment. In such a case the matter is brought before a Chapel or meeting of the companionship, and if any failure of duty is proved he is dismissed and some one else is appointed in his place. The overseer might interfere if any one were appointed whom he considered not at all qualified for his position, or whose antecedents were not desirable, but in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred the overseer will accede to the companionship's appointment.

Mr. W. H.
Levey.

8 Nov., 1870.

1358. This is the mode of arrangement among the compositors themselves who obtain work from the Parliamentary Printers in London? Yes.

1359. Who is the Parliamentary Printer? There are several. Mr. Harrison, who does the Gazette and Foreign Office work, Mr. Nicholls, who prints the Votes and Proceedings, Messrs. Spottiswoode, who do the work of the House of Lords, and Messrs. Hansard, who do all the work of the House of Commons, the Reports of Committees, private Bills, and so on. There are two or three minor establishments that do the work for the general departments; one of these is rather a large one, and does the work for the Post Office. These are all done by contract, and each contractor possesses his own plant, and the Government have no part or parcel in the property used for the performance of the work; but the contractors have a security for the continuance of the contract, to protect their outlay of capital; and the contracts are, I think, renewed every seven years.

1360. These various agreements, between the master printers and the British Government and authorities, are renewed every seven years? I am not quite positive whether for seven or ten years; I think it is seven.

1361. I gather from you that there is no establishment in London similar in its nature to the Government Printing Office in Sydney for the performance of similar work? Not at all; the whole of the Government work is done by contract. Where the parties fail in the performance of their contracts, the work is given out again to other parties, who give certain security for its performance, and receive certain security for the return of their outlay.

1362. What is your opinion of piece-work as compared with day-work for such printing as is done at the Government Printing Office? I think the plan adopted in Hansard's office—and a similar plan is adopted in others, with various modifications—is by far the best in every sense of the word: it is piece-work.

1363. That is to say, the system of piece-work prevails in all the offices where the parliamentary work is done? There is no establishment work—no fixed rate of wages—what a man can earn, that he is paid, according to his ability. In a companionship, if a man can do full time he gets full wages; if a quarter less, he is paid a quarter less; if a third less, he is paid one-third less. Each man is paid according to what the work produces. Mr. Hansard, or Mr. Nicholls, or their respective overseers, give certain work to their clickers; and whatever this produces, whether £20 or £60, is thrown into hours, as it is called. A man is supposed to do so much work per hour, and if one compositor is a full-time man, he receives a full share; if a three-quarter time man, he receives a three-quarter share, the clicker's time being the criterion of the full share.

1364. Mr. Windeyer. Did the clicker fix the amount to be paid to each member of the companionship? No; it depended upon the quantity of work done when it was thrown into hours; whatever the work produced was divided accordingly.

1365. Chairman. However the clicker distributed the work, was not the payment dependent upon the amount of work actually performed by the compositor? Whatever amount is earned by the companionship is thrown into hours; that is to say, so much is allotted for each hour's work. If plain work, so many lines are considered an hour's work, including distribution and correction, and a compositor is required to produce so many lines for so many hours. Whenever the clicker receives the work from the overseer, whatever it amounts to, or whatever it may be, he (as we call it) puts on the line, and from that time the work commences. When this is finished, his time finishes also.

1366. Who determines the payment to be distributed to each of these men in what you call the companionship? There is no decision as to the amount to be paid; it is paid according to scale.

1367. Who decides the amount of work done by each? As the clicker gives out the work, he has a book in which he enters the name of the party to whom he gives it; and when the clicker makes up the matter he counts the number of lines. At the end of the work he checks the total number of lines with the private accounts of the compositors, and if there is any difference they have to give proof that they are correct.

1368. Is it not the clicker who substantially ascertains the amount of payment due to each man, according to a sort of scale? Yes.

1369. Is that scale applied uniformly to the work of all the men in the companionship? It is applied to the work of all men in the trade in London,—so much per thousand. Parliamentary work is 1d. per thousand more than book-work, and book-work is 3d. a thousand less than daily newspaper work, or was.

1370. Is the clicker a sort of temporary overseer appointed by members of the printing trade in a companionship for the time being? He is virtually overseer, that is to say, of the work that passes under his hands; he possesses no authority over any of the men.

1371. Practically does not he decide in the case of work done? No, he has no power of decision at all; he is simply appointed by the companionship to give out and keep an account of the work. If he had given out so many lines of table-work and fixed it at so many hours, if the compositor felt aggrieved and thought he had fixed it too highly, he could appeal to the companionship, and they, for their own interests' sake, will see that it is not fixed too high.

1372. What duty has the clicker to perform? He makes up the matter, gives out the copy, looks after the work from the overseer, and if he has not enough to employ him in this way, he takes his stick and sets, the same as the rest. It is his interest as well as his duty to do all he can to make the bill as much as possible, as the more the companionship earn, the more they have to divide among them.

1373. Independently of this duty on the part of the clicker, the whole of the parliamentary work in London is done by piece-work? Entirely. I do not know a single exception in any office. The only exception

Mr. W. H.
Levey.

8 Nov., 1870.

exception I remember was in the case of printing some private despatches for the Government. In this case, some half-dozen men were sent from Mr. Harrison's, in St. Martin's-lane, to the Foreign Office, to print some special despatch. They were locked up during the time. I do not know whether they were actually sworn to secrecy, but they were all picked men. These were not paid by the line, but by the job; and they received a large amount to secure their secrecy.

1374. That was an exceptional case? That was an exceptional case; indeed the only case of the kind I knew during the course of my experience in parliamentary work.

1375. When you were employed at Hansard's, were you employed during the recess of Parliament? If there were work to do we were; if not, we had the opportunity, if we could get a job in the trade, of doing so. It was understood that directly we were required we must go back.

1376. If you had no work during the recess at Hansard's, of course you were permitted to obtain work in other quarters? If we could. There were a certain number in Hansard's office, about forty, who were called sessional hands; that is to say, at the end of the Session the establishment was thinned as it was called, so as to keep sufficient work in hand to maintain an efficient staff, and to enable them to make a living; but it was not always this could be done, and I have myself been out on a job of work two or three times during the ten years I was there.

1377. Mr. Windeyer.] Upon what principle was that "thinning" carried out? The last hands taken on were the first required to leave, unless it were a very exceptional case, some very superior workman, who might perhaps be retained; but generally speaking, from the nature of the work done in the office, there was very little difference in the amount earned in the Session, as they were generally superior workmen and could perform the best work.

1378. Chairman.] In those cases, when the compositors had no more work in consequence of the expiry of the Session they were dismissed, and when Parliament resumed its duties they were recalled? They all on application returned to Hansard's, and were only too glad to come back. Of course there were exceptions—some went into the country and some emigrated—but generally I met the same faces year after year.

1379. Do you think this system of discharging the men at the close of a Session is calculated to impair their efficiency as a parliamentary staff? Not in the least. Of course the clickers never left—that was an understood thing.

1380. They were employed by Mr. Hansard upon other work? No; they just stood in precisely the same position all the year round. They had this advantage over the other men, that they always had full time.

1381. Whether on full work or not? No, only on full time for whatever work was done in the companionship. The way in which the companionships work requires good workmen, to make full time continually; and of course it is an advantage, for they get very high wages during the sitting of Parliament. I have averaged £2 15s. a week during the Session.

1382. Do you say that the clickers are employed without reference to any parliamentary work there may be to do? No, they are not employed at all except in connection with a companionship.

1383. Mr. Windeyer.] Are the clickers compositors? Yes, they are compositors chosen by the companionships, and are generally the best hands, the most expeditious in setting up,—indeed it is a sine quâ non, as they can make the bill pay better.

1384. Will you explain what you mean by "making the bill pay better"? If a clicker is expeditious, and can keep his companionship fully employed, and gets plenty of work, and his full share of table-work, he will make the bill pay better than a more indifferent person.

1385. How can a clicker control the nature of the copy given to him? He cannot control it in the least. The overseer gives out the copy, but as a general principle he divides it as equally as possible—fat and lean, a fair proportion of each. Of course there are instances where there are heavy table returns, and it is not desirable to cut it; but in such cases, if given to one companionship, some other advantage is next given to another. We had a return once of 350 table pages, which occupied three months, but we did not get any more table-work for six months.

1386. Chairman.] After all, this system of companionship and overseeing by clickers is merely a subordinate arrangement in the printing office of Mr. Hansard? Quite.

1387. The overseers do not dictate the clickers? They have no power whatever.

1388. This is a matter of mutual arrangement among the compositors? Among the compositors. They do all the work by companionships, and the work is made thereby comparatively light on the overseers; indeed, in the large establishment of Hansard there is only one overseer besides the Superintendent.

1389. Mr. Windeyer.] How many men do they employ? During the Session, 130; and during the recess, eighty or ninety.

1390. Chairman.] That is only one branch of the Government or Parliamentary printing? Quite so.

1391. Do you know anything of the terms of agreement between the English Government and Mr. Hansard relative to the printing? We kept two books in the companionship, one the Trade-book and the other the House-book. In the House-book was entered all the orders made by the House of Commons; in the Trade-book, any private work that might be done independently of the House, such as the Law List or private Bills. I believe it was paid for at so much per cent. —

1392. What was paid? The parliamentary work, I think, was paid for at the rate of a certain percentage upon the wages paid to the men; ten per cent. for wear and tear, ten per cent. for house-rent and so forth, and ten per cent. for interest of capital; or about thirty per cent. upon the compositors' wages.

1393. Ten per cent. for wear and tear could bear no relation to the compositors' wages? That was put on as compensation to Messrs. Hansard; it was supposed that ten per cent. was wasted in wear and tear.

1394. That makes a total profit of thirty per cent. upon the amount of money paid? The amount of money paid to the compositors in all the departments.

1395. Does Mr. Hansard perform any work besides printing for the Parliament and for Government? Only the Law List (he prints that annually) and private Bills; nothing in the shape of book-work or jobbing.

1396. Then practically he does very little besides print for the Parliament? I am perfectly justified in saying he does nothing.

1397. Do you know Mr. Hansard's practice with regard to apprentices? He has no apprentices.

1398. How many overseers has he? One at press and one at case, and the general Superintendent, Mr. Whitmore.

1399. Do you know how many overseers are employed in Sydney at the Government Printing Office? During the short period I was there, in Mr. Richards' time, there were five or six.

1400.

1400. From your knowledge of the number of compositors employed at the Government Printing Office, do you think the overseers are more numerous than they should be? I think it is simply ridiculous.
1401. You think the number too large? It is quite absurd altogether; there is no such thing in any other office. It is even worse than in the Government Printing Office in Melbourne, and that is a larger office than this.
1402. Are you acquainted with the men composing the permanent staff of the Government Printing Office? Some of them. A good many who were there when I was are still there; I think nearly all, excepting two or three who have died.
1403. What is your opinion of their general ability as first-class workmen? When I went in there at first, I found two classes, one receiving £4, and the other £3 12s. a week wages. All work was done on the establishment; there was no piece-work at all. I thought of course, from my London experience, that those who received £4 a week were superior workmen to the others; but I soon discovered, with one or two exceptions, that those who were receiving the highest wages were the most incompetent workmen, and that any chance of getting £4 a week in consequence of superior experience or ability was out of the question.
1404. When were you there? From 1855 to 1858. I worked under Mr. Hanson, and I worked there twice for about three months after Mr. Richards obtained the appointment. The last time I was there was in 1864.
1405. With reference to the present permanent staff, as far as you know them, do you consider them first-class compositors? I believe the majority of them would not earn more or very little more than half of what they now receive, elsewhere. There are two or three exceptions.
1406. Do you think it would be an advisable change for the interest of the public, to submit the work to public contract? I believe the Government would save 25 per cent., if it were done under proper stipulations for the due performance of the work, similar to those entered into with the Government at Home.
1407. What stipulations do you mean? The contractors should be restricted to the employment of efficient men; there should be no undue proportion of boy-labour; following the precedent of English houses in this respect, where boys are not employed; and, as the due performance of the work would necessarily involve a large outlay, the party taking the contract should be insured its continuance for five years. The work should be divided into two contracts; the Gazette and general or jobbing work should be in one, and the parliamentary work in another. The work should not be given out in small contracts, lest the parties taking them should not perform them efficiently.
1408. Do you see any difficulty in the way of using the present material—the presses, type, and other plant—belonging to the Government in the Printing Office, by letting it to a contractor under proper security? If the entire plant were leased out and the entire work, and a contractor were placed in a somewhat similar position in relation to it as if it were his own, but was responsible to the Government for it, he might conduct it at a much less cost. He would not keep up a number of unnecessary and ridiculous officers and clerks. In the House of Commons Printing Office there is only one clerk, who checks the bills of the workmen and keeps the accounts. The number of readers in the office is absurd. There are six readers here, at higher salaries than they can get anywhere else, for thirty or forty men, while at Hansard's there were only six readers for 180 men.
1409. Captain Onslow. Do the men always get consecutive work from the clickers,—that is to say, supposing a man to have a certain number of lines, would he be given ten lines in one part of a page, and then a few lines lower down in the same page, or would his work run on consecutively? No; the copy would be placed before the clicker on his table or bank, and as any party came up for copy he would take it.
1410. It is always consecutive? Yes; each one as he goes up receives the copy in order.
1411. There is no picking of copy? No, it would not be tolerated.
1412. During the three years you were in the Government Printing Office, was there any such thing as picking copy? We were all on the establishment—there was no piece-work under Mr. Hanson. From what I saw of the Government Printing Office, both under Mr. Hanson and Mr. Richards, I consider Mr. Hanson's management vastly superior to Mr. Richards's.
1413. When you were there under Mr. Richards's management, were you on the staff? I was paid so much per hour. It was a new system to me altogether—one I never heard of before. We were on and off one hour, two hours, or three hours at a time. There was no regular system.
1414. Is there any printing office where you have been in which a similar system was pursued to that adopted here? I know of no such system.
1415. What is an improver? There is no such person known in the business.
1416. Have you ever heard the term used? I never heard it before.
1417. What do you mean by "before"? I have heard of its having being introduced into the Government Printing Office here, but I never heard it before I came here. When a man has served five or seven years he is supposed to be a competent workman, and if not he is not worth frame-room.
1418. You have stated that in Mr. Hansard's office apprentices are not taken—Are they generally taken in other offices in London? Not to an undue extent, excepting in small jobbing offices in London, where, as in similar places here in Sydney, nearly all are boys. It is an ascertained fact by practical printers that in large establishments boy-labour is a loss. It is very well in small establishments where they take little jobbing and do it cheaply; but where there is a good business, boys waste more than they are worth.
1419. During the short time you were employed in the Government Printing Office under Mr. Richards, did you observe any favouritism? It seemed to me that the office was degenerating into a system of espionage. It was conducted on the most flagrant principles; in fact on very different principles from those followed when it was under Mr. Hanson.
1420. Was there any favouritism—were picked people given fat and others lean? I was on only as a night hand, and could not say what was done in the day.
1421. Are you aware that the Electoral Rolls are now kept standing? I have heard so. I think that is a dead loss, as there is so much capital sunk; for when the Roll has to be printed again it has to be pulled to pieces, and it would take nearly as long to put it into new form as to set it up from the beginning to the end. If you take into account the amount of capital sunk, and the injury to the type, it is a dead loss.
1422. Mr. Windeyer. Is it an injury to the type to keep it standing? Yes, it gets corroded.
1423. Do you know anything of the system in the Government Office by which apprentices become members of the staff in preference to those other workmen who are taken on by piece? I do not know anything of that except by hearsay.

Mr. W. H.
Levey.

8 Nov., 1870.

Mr. W. H.
Levey.

8 Nov., 1870.

1424. You know by repute the system that exists there? Yes.
1425. Have you known any such system in any other office you have been in? In all the offices I have been in, and in all the large offices at Home, the men stand on a perfect equality; the only difference being in their relative ability. I know of no such system of classification as is adopted here. If you get work in an office, and are a competent hand, you take the same chance as any one else.
1426. You do not know of any such system anywhere else? I do not; I never heard of it before.
1427. Do you think it is one calculated to give Government the services of the best workmen in the office? I think the reverse. Under the present system I would not work as an outside or supernumerary. I would sooner leave the Colony.
1428. Will you give the reason? Because I consider the whole system is unjust. A man's ability is no criterion of success; he may have both experience and ability, but these will not be the passage to success. If he is a good shot, or can sing a good song, and does not possess the qualifications of a good printer, he is more likely to succeed.
1429. Mr. Samuel.] I think you said you had not been in the Government Printing Office since 1864? Yes.
1430. You have said you think it probable if the Government did their work by contract they would effect a saving of 25 per cent.? Yes.
1431. When you say that, do you mean by giving out the work to contractors, or by leasing the Government Printing Office and plant to a contractor? I have said by giving it in two contracts.
1432. Do you mean by giving the Government plant up to the contractors, or by doing the work entirely out of the establishment? I think if it were given to contractors the plant could be advantageously disposed of, as the contractors could not do without it, and they must obtain it either from the Government or from some other source, to enable them to do the work.
1433. Then your idea of giving out the work in this way would involve the breaking up of the Government Printing Establishment entirely? Yes.
1434. You are not of opinion that the Government Establishment might be leased with advantage? I think it might, under some stipulations. The question is, whether those known to be competent to do the work would take the lease. Perhaps some aspiring individual, who was incompetent to perform the work might be willing to take the lease, and thus we should jump from the frying-pan into the fire.
1435. Would there not be danger of the plant being destroyed by the persons who entered upon the lease taking all the work they could out of the material during the time of their occupancy? It would be necessary to have a stipulation to protect fair wear and tear of the plant.
1436. Do you think it would be possible to have any stipulation that would bind persons to use the property as if it were their own? It would be very difficult.
1437. Mr. Windeyer.] They might be bound to do only public work with it? Yes, and that the plant should be kept up to the proper mark, allowing for fair wear and tear.
1438. Mr. Samuel.] I suppose the whole of the plant possessed by Mr. Hansard is his private property? Entirely his personal property, and sworn to before a Committee of the House of Commons as worth £100,000.
1439. When you speak of a contractor being restricted to the employment of proper men, will you say how that can be accomplished? I would require that it should not be contracted for by persons who employed cheap or boy labour, who would do the work in a slovenly way, and not with expedition or quality. Persons might send in a very low tender for the mere sake of getting the contract, who would not be able to carry it on at all; but if an understanding were entered into that the contractor should be liable to penalty for failure, that would necessitate his employing competent persons to do the work.
1440. You have spoken of the management under Mr. Hanson as being better than that under Mr. Richards? Yes.
1441. Have you been in the Government Printing Office recently? Not since 1864.
1442. You have not been in the office? I have been in the office.
1443. Have you been over it recently? No.
1444. Have you made yourself perfectly acquainted with the way in which it is managed? I have several intimate friends who are there, and when we meet together we talk of the way things are going on in the different establishments, and the mode of conducting the work and so forth.
1445. You have told us that you would on no account take service in the Government Printing Office? Not as a supernumerary.
1446. You would not mind being one of the permanent staff? I should not care much for it. I would just as soon be in another office.*
1447. You would not consider it objectionable? I should not consider it objectionable.
1448. Mr. Windeyer.] Or any other sinecure? Or any other sinecure.
1449. Mr. Samuel.] Would you consider it a sinecure? I should get more money for less work.
1450. Would you object to get more money for less work? No, I do not say so.
1451. You say you would not care about holding one of these positions in the Government Printing Office which involves permanent and fixed pay? No—I beg pardon—I said as a supernumerary.
1452. I understood you to say you did not care for either one or other? I said I would not go as a supernumerary, and I should not care much about any situation there under the present system of management.
1453. Is it within your knowledge that there are a number of good workmen who are anxious to get into the Government Printing Office? Not that I am aware of.
1454. Are there any good workmen there? Decidedly there are some.
1455. Any number? I do not know the supernumeraries there; they are nearly all strangers to me.
1456. I am speaking of the regular staff? I know only seven or eight of them.
1457. Among them are there good workmen? Yes, two or three I consider first-rate hands.
1458. Do you think these men overpaid? Those who are good workmen, according to the current rate of wages, are not overpaid. At the same rate they could earn the same amount of money elsewhere.
1459. Is not the work in the Government Printing Office of a special character? Yes.
1460. Different from that of an ordinary jobbing office? Yes.
1461. Different also from that of a newspaper office? Yes, decidedly.
1462. Does it require workmen who shall give their special attention to particular work? I know that at Home,

* Revised:—Where I am now employed.

Home, in Hansard's, we considered that it took a man one Session before he was thoroughly conversant with the work.

Mr. W. H. Levey.

8 Nov., 1870

1463. Then they require a training for this special work? I think so, unless it is plain work such as minutes of evidence; but for tabular work a training is necessary.

1464. For the ordinary work of such an establishment as the Government Printing Office, special training is necessary? Yes, but a competent workman would get into it in five or six months.*

1465. Would it do to change them constantly? I think not.

1466. What is the system you refer to which is so objectionable, and which you have never known to be adopted anywhere else? The system of classification of the men at various rates of wages.

1467. You prefer piece-work to time-work? Decidedly, in an establishment like that.

1468. Is there not some work performed in the Government Printing Office that could not be done by piece? Yes, jobbing-work is always done by the establishment everywhere. All but jobbing-work could be done by piece-work.

1469. Supposing there were not full work for a man on piece-work, how could you employ him part on piece and part on time? If he were working in companionship, he would be employed as long as the time was on; when the work necessitated that to be stopped he would of course stop too; he would be idle for want of work, as the whole companionship would be, and of course earning nothing.

1470. Do you object to the system of apprentices? I think when they are in an undue proportion they are a loss instead of an advantage. In a Government or Parliamentary Office, where the work is generally wanted in a hurry, they stand in the way, and are useless at those periods when those who are able to do the work are required to work the hardest. In the time of the grandfather of the present Mr. Hansard, Mr. Hansard had some dispute with the trade, and he took a number of boys as apprentices. The consequence of this act was that he nearly lost his contract; and in his will he urged it upon his successors that no apprentices should be taken by the firm again so long as they held the House of Commons' contract. He found them not only a nuisance, but they nearly cost him the value of his plant.

1471. I suppose there is a feeling of jealousy in the trade about the number of printers being increased by the taking of apprentices? It does not affect me particularly. There is a jealousy in this way, that there are a number of young men being brought up to the trade for whom there is no employment when they have served their time; and I do not think the Government should inundate the trade with boys, although private establishments may. In Messrs. Gibbs & Shallard's establishment there are only two apprentices, excepting the machine boys, who are not compositors at all.

1472. Chairman. Supposing all the work performed at the Government Printing Office were represented by the figures 100, what proportion would be piece and what jobbing work? I should say about 75 per cent. would be piece and 25 jobbing.

1473. In other words, three-fourths of all the work would be piece and one-fourth jobbing? Perhaps a greater proportion would be piece.

1474. There is no more special work in the Government Printing Office for parliamentary purposes than you had in Hansard's printing office? Except in the jobbing department, and that is given in a different contract. The jobbing is done under a separate contract.

1475. Mr. Samuel. Does Hansard do both? No, nothing but the House of Commons' work. Nicholls has the Votes and Proceedings.

1476. Chairman. We understand the Votes to be part of the parliamentary printing? That is done by a different establishment in London.

1477. In London, Hansard prints the Reports of Committees, evidence, and so forth, but does not do the Votes and Proceedings? No, they are done by Nicholls, of Parliament-street, under a separate contract altogether.

Mr. James Zeddin Jones examined:—

1478. Chairman. Are you a compositor? Yes.

1479. Where did you serve your apprenticeship? At Mr. Joseph Cook's.

1480. The printer in George-street? Yes.

1481. Have you had any experience in a large printing office? No, in none but the office in which I served my time, and in the Government Printing Office.

1482. Is Mr. Cook's a large printing office? No.

1483. Does he employ a considerable number of compositors? Very few; the work is mostly done by boys.

1484. How long have you been employed in the Government Printing Office, and in what capacity? I have been employed between three and four years, and always as a compositor of the supernumerary staff.

1485. Are you employed there now? Yes.

1486. Were you one of those who were suspended a short time ago? Yes.

1487. Were you aware of any reason for your suspension? No, there was no reason given.

1488. Nor have you heard of any? No, I cannot say—Yes, I have heard a reason since that there was some private work in the office, and they were afraid to trust us, or something of that kind.

1489. When you are on time at night waiting for copy from the Superintendent, do you take up work in progress by the permanent staff? Sometimes; very rarely.

1490. Do the permanent staff, in a case like that, charge for what you do? Yes, I believe it is put to their credit.

1491. Will you explain how the permanent staff charge for work that you perform? At the end of the day they deliver a sort of docket of the quantity of work done by them, and of course what we have done of their work the night before is charged along with it.

1492. I do not see how that follows of course. I want you to explain that. Do these people on the establishment pass to their credit work done by those who are not on the establishment? Yes.

1493. What is the reason of that? I do not know of any reason for it.

1494. Did you ever know a system of that kind to prevail anywhere else? No.

1495. Mr. Windeyer. Do you get paid for it? Yes.

Mr. J. Z. Jones.

8 Nov., 1870.

- Mr. J. Z. Jones.
8 Nov., 1870.
1496. Then you are paid as a supernumerary for the performance of work which is credited to some one on the permanent staff, who does not do it? Yes. Suppose a compositor on the permanent staff has to set up a page, and has done about half of it, one of the supernumeraries, while waiting for copy, may set up the remainder, or a portion of it.
1497. You are paid for the part you compose? Yes, but it all goes into the average of the establishment.
1498. Captain Onslow.] It makes the average of the establishment hands appear more than it ought? Yes.*
1499. Mr. Samuel.] Am I to infer from this that the permanent hands do not in fact do a proper day's work, but that the work done by the supernumeraries forms part of the work that should be done by them? It merely helps to make their day's work appear larger.
1500. Chairman.] Is not this system of making up the work of the compositors on the establishment simply a scheme adopted with the view of making the work done by the compositors on the establishment appear larger than the work he really does perform? I am not aware of that.
1501. Do you know the object of this system? The object of the system of average is, to put the men as it were, one against the other, and to induce them to work hard.
1502. But what inducement can it be to the establishment hands to work hard, if the composing you do and are paid for is placed to their credit? They all think, perhaps, they have the same chance of having it done; and the overseer, when he puts us to the work, does not inquire whose it is.
1503. In fact the men of the establishment get credit for work they do not do? Yes, sometimes.
1504. Mr. Wilson.] Does not the overseer know who the frame belongs to? Yes, but I do not think he takes notice whose it is.
1505. Mr. Samuel.] I wish you would explain more clearly how the permanent hand gains an advantage from this work? It gives him the advantage of being considered a fast workman.
1506. Suppose you had been engaged in doing a lot of work during the night, do you mean to say that in the morning it would be put down to some one else? Yes, when it occurs in the way I have said.
1507. Mr. Windeyer.] When did this system originate? It came into existence long before I went there. I believe it has been ever since there has been a supernumerary staff.
1508. Chairman.] Is there any difference made by the overseers in their treatment of the permanent and supernumerary staffs? No, I do not know that there is.
1509. Have you had any reason to complain of any unfair treatment of the overseers? No, I cannot say that I have.
1510. Captain Onslow.] Have you ever known copy to be picked? The copy is picked, and the fat is given to the permanent hands—those who are paid by time; and the lean or solid is given to those who are paid by piece. The best paying work is given to those who are paid by time.
1511. Are you a Volunteer? Yes.
1512. Are there many Volunteers in the office? Yes, a great number.
1513. Do any of the Volunteers go out to drill in office hours at all? Yes.
1514. Are a certain number excused every week for drill? Yes. It used to be every week, but I think there has been an alteration lately—it is now once a month; they get from 3 in the afternoon to practice rifle-shooting.
1515. Are they paid for the time they are away? Yes, I think so.
1516. Are the supernumerary hands paid for the time they are out? No, they do not venture to go.
1517. It is only the permanent hands who are paid? Yes; the others could not expect to be paid.
1518. The supernumerary hands are not on at this hour? No, the supernumerary hands are not generally supposed to be in the office in the afternoon at all; they are supposed to be taking rest to prepare them for the night-work.
1519. Does much betting go on in the work-room? No, not more than in other printing offices.
1520. Mr. Wilson.] Are you aware of the circumstance of overseers in the printing office betting with the men? I have never seen anything of it.
1521. Being at work at night as a supernumerary hand, you have not had an opportunity of seeing it? No.
1522. I suppose you are aware that about the 20th of October, there were certain questions put to the Treasurer, with respect to the suspension of the supernumerary staff at the printing office? Yes.
1523. And that it was stated there were certain complaints against these men at that time—Were there any complaints against you? Not that I was aware of.
1524. You have since been employed in the Government Printing Office? Yes.
1525. Were you asked to sign any written document or statement,—that you had nothing to do with prompting these questions? Yes, I was asked to write whether I had anything to do with placing the questions on the Paper.
1526. Who asked you? Mr. Richards.
1527. Was that made a condition of your being received back to the office as a supernumerary hand? I do not think it was.
1528. Are you aware whether any of the supernumerary staff refused to sign that paper? I have heard so from my brother supernumeraries.
1529. Have they been employed since? No.
1530. Was there anything else in the statement beyond that? Yes, there was something going on with respect to this Committee; there was supposed to be some conspiracy among the supernumerary hands for the purpose of breaking up the office.
1531. In what way? Some of the supernumerary hands thought it would be much better for the trade if the work were given out to contract. This I know only by hearsay.
1532. There was something in this paper with regard to this Committee also? Yes.
1533. Whether you had any hand in getting this Committee appointed? Yes.
1534. You had no hand in getting this Committee appointed, or in giving information with reference to these questions? No.
1535. You are not aware of any complaints having been made against you at the time of your suspension? No.
1536. Mr. Windeyer.] Did you see the paper you were asked to sign? I wrote the statement myself.

1537.

* NOTE (on revision):—I do not think it occurs often enough to make any material difference in a month's work.

Mr. J. Z.
Jones.

8 Nov., 1870.

1537. Was the statement dictated to you? No, not at all.
1538. Was the substance prescribed? No.
1539. What were you asked to write? To write a statement denying having anything to do with the questions; also, with having anything to do with the dissatisfied members of the staff.
1540. What do you mean by having anything to do with the dissatisfied members of the staff? I was asked to deny being dissatisfied with the working of the establishment.
1541. Did you write this? Yes.
1542. Did you sign it? Yes.
1543. Was it in a book or on a piece of paper? On a piece of note-paper.
1544. Was it kept by Mr. Richards? I believe so.
1545. How did it come about that you were asked to write this? I do not know how it was. After the week had elapsed, I went to Mr. Richards and reported myself, and he asked me to write this statement.
1546. There was nothing else said? Nothing else.
1547. You were never made aware of any charge against you when you were suspended? No.
1548. Were you aware of any private work being done? No.
1549. You have heard this reason stated since, but you never heard it before? Mr. Richards has told me since.
1550. Did he say what it was? No.
1551. How would private work being in the office cause your suspension? I do not understand.
1552. Have you ever known any private work before that to cause the suspension of a large number of workmen or of any number? No.
1553. In this document you were asked to sign was any reference made to this Committee? I think not. I think I have a rough copy of it here. (The witness produced the same.)
1554. Chairman.] Is that a copy of the statement you have alluded to? Yes, it is the rough draft from which I took the copy I gave to Mr. Richards. (The witness read the same as follows:—
- “As one of the supernumerary staff, I desire to state that I have not identified myself with any dissatisfied members of the said staff; and I have frequently expressed my opinion that the course pursued by those members of the staff was not the proper one in case of any grievance. With regard to the questions asked in the Legislative Assembly, I may state that I knew nothing of them until they appeared in the Sydney Morning Herald. I have at other times been absent from the office for more than a week at a time when there has been no work for me; the only thing unusual in this case being that it never occurred before during the Session of Parliament.”
1555. Mr. Windeyer. Was it in consequence of a suggestion made to you at the time of this interview with Mr. Richards that you said this—“I have at other times been absent from the office for more than a week at a time when there has been no work for me”? Yes, he asked me the question, and through his asking me the question I suppose I wrote that.
1556. Did you gather from his conversation with you that you were desired to put it in writing? I cannot say that I gathered directly from him that he desired me to put it in writing.
1557. How came he to ask you if you had ever before been absent from the office for more than a week? He asked me if there was anything unusual in it; he would not have it that it was a suspension at all.
1558. Were you ever suspended at all? Not suspended; I was told it was not likely there would be any work for a certain time.
1559. Was this the same kind of information you received that you had received before when there was no work; if so, why do you call this a suspension and the other not? Because that is the name it has got from the others.
1560. From what you saw of the work at the time, and from what you have seen since, did it appear to you that there was not sufficient work to keep the fourteen men employed? There seemed to be just the same amount of work as usual.
1561. In what terms were you asked to write this statement and sign it? I do not know that there were any terms given.
1562. You say you went and reported yourself as having returned to the office—What took place upon that—what did Mr. Richards say to you then? He said there were certain dissatisfied members of the staff, and he wanted to know if I was identified with them in any way. I said no, and he asked me if I would write a statement to that effect.
1563. There must have been something more than that—You say Mr. Richards wished to have these things expressed in writing? Mr. Richards did not tell me what to write.
1564. How came you to say this—it does not seem natural that you should have so expressed yourself without having been asked a question: “I have frequently expressed my opinion that the course pursued by the members of the staff was not the proper one in case of any grievance”? Because I considered it was not the proper course.
1565. Mr. Samuel.] Had there been any grumbling or any causes of dissatisfaction on any previous occasions? I do not remember, except as to the scarcity of work.
1566. Mr. Windeyer.] Was it in consequence of a question from Mr. Richards you put that in? No.
1567. Does it come to this,—that you considered it necessary in order to get taken back to the office that you should write something of this kind? I considered it necessary for my own character.
1568. I do not mean that particular part of it, but the whole of it—why did you write and sign a document of that kind merely upon your reporting yourself after having been suspended? I was requested to do so by the Government Printer; he wished to be satisfied, for some reason or other. It is possible enough that he did intend not to have any of the staff who were dissatisfied back again, but he did not say so.
1569. Mr. Samuel.] Had there not been acts of insubordination for some time previous—quarrels between the supernumerary and regular hands? No.
1570. Was there not a case where, when one of the hands left the office, he was hooted by the other men? No.
1571. If that has been reported to me, would you say the report is untrue? Yes, decidedly untrue, as far as I know.
1572. Captain Onslow.] Not to your knowledge? Not to my knowledge.
1573. Mr. Samuel.] Has there been any dissatisfaction? The dissatisfaction among the supernumerary staff has arisen from the fact that there has been no advancement in the office.

Mr. J. Z.
Jones.
8 Nov., 1870.

1574. Has there been any expressed dissatisfaction? Only upon that head.

1575. You would not have written this letter solely upon your own motion unless there had been some previous grievance? The only grievance I know of is that the supernumerary staff has no opportunity of advancement.

1576. Has that been openly expressed in such a manner as to amount to something like insubordination? No, the great fault has been that it has never been, to my knowledge, expressed to the Government Printer.

1577. Is it not within your knowledge that certain members of the supernumerary staff have carried on a system of agitation in the office? Not that I am aware of; I have seen nothing of the kind.

1578. Might it have gone on without your knowledge? Possibly, but I think it has not.

1579. Chairman.] What do you mean by the "course pursued by those members of the staff"? I heard that certain members of the staff had gone to Members of Parliament with their grievances before going to Mr. Richards. I have merely heard this —

1580. Mr. Samuel.] You need not be afraid to speak out. I should like you to say exactly what you think. There is not a Member of the Committee, myself included, who desires to screen a single person in the department. I am only anxious as its head that the truth should come out, not only in justice to Mr. Richards but to yourselves. It has been stated to me that certain proceedings have taken place in the Government Printing Office amounting almost if not quite to insubordination on the part of some of the men, and that two, Mr. Mason and Mr. Banks, have been refused employment? There are four of the supernumerary staff away from the office.

1581. We now want to arrive at the truth as to whether anything had taken place before the occasion referred to which led to these men being distrusted? I am not aware of anything.

1582. Did they openly express dissatisfaction with the management of the establishment, or as to their collective or individual treatment? Only in that instance, that the supernumerary staff (and I consider myself among the number) ought to have some advantage—that the trade principle should be carried out.

1583. You never heard of threats being held out by any members of the supernumerary staff with regard to the Government Printer and his management,—that unless some steps were taken by him they would seek redress elsewhere—from Parliament? No.

1584. You never heard the Government Printer threatened in that way? No.

1585. Did you write this paper voluntarily, from your own belief and conviction? Yes.

1586. Would you have written it if Mr. Richards had not required it? Yes.

1587. Captain Onslow.] Did any other supernumerary hands who were taken on again after suspension write similar letters? All those who have been restored have written some statement.

1588. Similar to that? I cannot say.

1589. Did you consult with them? No.

1590. Mr. Samuel.] When you say you were suspended, you simply mean that it was intimated to you that you were not to be employed? We were told there was no employment for us that week.

1591. You never heard of any complaint being made to any Member of the Government in any way about the way in which you were treated? No.

1592. Did you or any of you make any formal complaint to the Government Printer? No complaint was made that I was interested in.

1593. How did this dissatisfaction show itself? Only in the fact that one of the members of the staff had his name on the Memo. as a witness to give evidence before this Committee.

1594. Mr. Wilson.] Whose name was it? Mr. Mason's.

1595. Chairman.] That was the cause of dissatisfaction, so far as you knew,—that the name of one of the supernumerary staff appeared on the Memorandum of the Assembly, as a witness to be examined before this Committee? That is the first evidence I had of dissatisfaction.

1596. Mr. Samuel.] Was there not any dissatisfaction shown previous to your being unemployed on the last occasion? Only in the way I have said.

1597. You were dissatisfied that you were not more employed—Did that apply to this particular occasion, or to previous occasions? To previous occasions.

1598. Before this suspension took place the men felt that they were not well treated? They felt they did not earn sufficient to support themselves.

1599. That was before the last refusal to employ them took place? Yes.

1600. If there was that dissatisfaction it must have shown itself in some way? —

1601. Captain Onslow.] Was it shown by talking so that the overseers might hear? They might have talked loud enough.

1602. Mr. Samuel.] Is it within your knowledge that any supernumerary, or whether all as a body were so dissatisfied as to express their dissatisfaction within the hearing of the overseers or Superintendent? No.

1603. Are you able to say whether any individual member expressed his dissatisfaction? Yes, I have heard Mr. Mason say they were not treated as journeymen printers should be; but I have not had sufficient experience to know whether it was the truth or not.

1604. Mr. Wilson.] Did he state that to one of the overseers? Yes.

1605. Did he state it in a respectful way? Yes.

1606. Captain Onslow.] Who were the dissatisfied people in the Government Printing Office? I do not know; I am ignorant of them now.

1607. You have stated there were some dissatisfied people? Yes.

1608. Was the dissatisfaction shown by the supernumerary or by the permanent hands? By the supernumerary hands.

1609. Do you think they were generally dissatisfied? They were dissatisfied that they had not fuller employment.

1610. Was it known that there was no more work to give them? No, I do not think it was.

1611. Was any dissatisfaction shown among the supernumerary hands when this Committee was appointed, to your knowledge? Not more than at other times.

1612. Mr. Samuel.] Was there much talk about this Committee in the establishment? No, I have not heard it.

1613. Chairman.] Has there been any dissatisfaction except with reference to the classification of time-hands and piece-hands? No.

1614. Then it is simply with reference to the system pursued in the Government Printing Office of time-hands and piece-hands that this dissatisfaction has arisen? The supernumeraries are not dissatisfied at working upon piece—they would all prefer working upon piece—but they are dissatisfied at not getting more work.

1615. Would there not be more piece-work if there were no time-hands or very few time-hands employed? I do not know that it would make much difference to us.

1616. Mr. Windeyer.] Is one of the causes of dissatisfaction the promotion to the permanent staff from apprentices? Yes.

1617. Is it to your interest that this should be the practice? Certainly not.

1618. Do you think this system is calculated to give the Government the best workmen? No, I do not.

1619. Mr. Wilson.] Are Mr. Mason and Mr. Banks good workmen? Yes.

1620. Are there many better workmen than those two in the Government Printing Office? No, I do not think so.

1621. Are there many inferior to them? I do not know sufficient of them to be able to say.

Mr. J. Z.
Jones.

8 Nov., 1870.

FRIDAY, 11 NOVEMBER, 1870.

Present:—

CAPTAIN ONSLOW, R.N.,
MR. WILSON,

MR. PIDDINGTON,
MR. WISDOM.

THE HON. JOHN BOWIE WILSON, ESQ., IN THE CHAIR.

Mr. Samuel Leake called in and examined:—

1622. Chairman.] You are in the Government Printing Office? Yes, on the supernumerary staff.

1623. How long have you been there? A little over twelve months.

1624. Where did you serve your apprenticeship? With Mr. J. C. White, on the Bathurst Free Press.

1625. Have you ever been in any other offices in Sydney? Yes, I worked at Mr. Cunningham's for about two years.

1626. And in the Government Printing Office for about one year? Yes.

1627. Are you one of the men that were suspended a short time ago for a week? Yes, I was away for a week, but I do not know that I was suspended.

1628. Why were you away? I was away at a picnic on the day they were all told to stop away, and on the way to the office the next morning I met one of the permanent hands, and from him I heard we were to stop away.

1629. Did you hear of any reason why you were to stop away? No, I was not given any reason. When I went on Monday morning, I was told there were some charges brought against the men, and that we were to abstain from work until these charges were investigated.

1630. Charges against what men? I asked Mr. Richards whether there were any against me, and he said no; but he did not say against whom there were charges.

1631. You were taken back at the end of a week? Yes.

1632. Did Mr. Richards ask you to sign any paper before you were taken back? Yes.

1633. Have you a copy of that paper? No.

1634. Can you tell us the purport of it? It was something to this effect:—I beg to state that I was in no way connected with the question that was asked in the Legislative Assembly, concerning the supernumerary staff being suspended.

1635. Did you understand that if you had not signed that paper or made that acknowledgment you would not have been received back into the office? I was not given to understand that.

1636. Did Mr. Richards give you any reason for asking you to write that paper? No, he gave no reason.

1637. He told you what you were to write? No. I asked if there was any charge against me individually. He said no, only as to having had something to do with the question asked in the House. I told him I had nothing to do with it, and he asked me to write a statement to that effect; and then I was sent for the next morning to come to work.

1638. Then you understood, from Mr. Richards talking of having given information with regard to these questions as a charge, that it was looked upon by him as something wrong? Yes, I understood that.

1639. Have you ever seen or heard of any betting going on in the Government Printing Office? No, I cannot say that I have.

1640. Have you ever heard any offensive language used by any of the overseers towards the men at work in the department? No, I do not recollect ever having heard any.

1641. Do you recollect ever hearing one of the overseers tell another party that he was a liar, or had told a lie? No. I have heard him deny things that have been said; but I never heard him say plainly that a man was a liar. I have heard him say, when one of the hands has said so-and-so, that it was not true, but never directly that he was a liar.

1642. How long is it since you finished your apprenticeship? I finished my time on 28th April, 1867.

1643. Captain Onslow.] How long were you an apprentice? Five years.

1644. Would you have any difficulty in getting employment in Sydney if you were dismissed from the Government Printing Office? I do not think so. At certain times of the year perhaps, there would be difficulty, but at the present time I think there is likelihood of plenty of work for compositors.

1645. If you were to absent yourself for two or three days from the Government Printing Office, thinking there was no work, would they take you on again, unless you accounted for your being absent? I do not know.

1646. Do you go every day? No, not every day. I must go there every evening at 6 o'clock when Parliament is sitting; but it is not necessary I should go every morning.

Mr. S. Leake.

11 Nov., 1870.

1647.

- Mr. S. Leake. 1647. Are there any evenings when you are told you will not be required at all, when there is no House? Yes; I have gone at 6 o'clock on several occasions, and have been told there was nothing to do, the Votes and Proceedings having been all done.
- 11 Nov., 1870. 1648. Do you think there is any difference between the treatment of the supernumerary staff and that of the permanent hands? Yes, I think there is a great deal of difference.
1649. In what way? I do not think we are treated so respectfully as the permanent hands.
1650. What do you mean by respectfully? I can hardly explain myself, but I know we are not treated in the same way. In one way, we do not get the same copy; the best copy is all picked out for the permanent hands.
1651. Is that always the case? Yes, always the case.
1652. You always get the lean? Yes, we never get anything else if they can possibly avoid it.
1653. Is that a general remark? Yes.
1654. Has any complaint ever been made—have you ever made any complaint? No, I have not made any complaint.
1655. Why have you not done so? I have not been long in the office, and have not had experience at piece-work. I never worked piece-work till I came to this office; and while there were other men there of much greater experience I did not like to take upon myself to complain.
1656. Have you ever been set to work at another person's frame? Yes.
1657. Often? At night-time when the overseer has had nothing to give out, and the Votes and Proceedings have not come down, he has sent us to the permanent hands' frames.
1658. Were you paid by piece-work then? No, by time for that.
1659. Have you noticed any difference in the treatment of the supernumerary hands since this Committee has been asked for? I think they have been rather mild with us since.
1660. Have they ceased to give picked copy? For the last week or so we have had very good copy; in fact this last week I have had better copy than I have had since I have been in the office.
1661. You have gained more money? Yes.
1662. Do you consider yourself a smart compositor? Yes, I do; I have never seen any one yet that I thought smarter than myself. I have seen men that have had more experience in the trade, but I consider myself quite as fast as any man I ever saw.
1663. As fast as Mason? Yes.
1664. Do you consider that a lad who has been twelve months in a printing office can pick up type as fast as he can at any time subsequently. No, decidedly not. I consider that after a lad has been three or four years in the trade he is as fast as ever he will be, but not when he has been there twelve months; he would not be very fast when he has only been there twelve months.
1665. Are you a Volunteer? No, I am not.
1666. Chairman.] With regard to the question asked you as to your being set to time-work on the frames of the permanent hands, are you aware whether the work which is done by you on these occasions is placed to their credit? No, I am not aware; the probability is that it is; but I could not say positively that it was.
1667. Mr. Wisdom.] You say that when Mr. Richards asked you to sign some paper, that you were not one of those who were concerned in the question put in Parliament about the supernumerary hands—Did he give you to understand that unless you signed it you would not be taken back? No, he did not.
1668. Did you think so? Yes, I thought so.
1669. That you would not be taken back unless you signed? Yes.
1670. Captain Onslow.] Did the supernumerary hands have any meeting or conference about their being suspended? No, not that I am aware of. I attended no meeting.
1671. Mr. Piddington.] Have you heard the term "average" used in the Government Printing Office? Yes.
1672. Can you explain what the term "average" means in the Printing Office? I suppose it is meant that they are always to do somewhere about the same work.
1673. You are not able to say whether the permanent hands have taken credit for the matter which the supernumerary hands have set upon their frames? No, I could not say they have; but I believe they do.
1674. Were you paid for the matter you set up at the frame of a permanent hand? Yes, as time-work. Three or four times a day I have been taken from piece-work and set upon time-work. In fact, I believe the general practice has been, when there has been any fat copy, to give it to us on time.

Mr. Patrick O'Connor called in and examined:—

- Mr. P. 1675. Chairman.] You are employed at the Government Printing Office? Yes.
- O'Connor. 1676. In what capacity? As a compositor.
- 11 Nov., 1870. 1677. Are you one of the permanent hands or a supernumerary? A supernumerary.
1678. How long have you been employed in the Government Printing Office? For nearly five years.
1679. Did you serve your apprenticeship there? No, at Mr. Cunninghame's.
1680. Have you been in any other large printing establishment in this city or elsewhere? No, only in the two places, Mr. Cunninghame's and the Government Printing Office.
1681. Are you one of the hands that, a short time ago, somewhere about the beginning of October, were suspended or put off work? Yes.
1682. How long were you off work? A week.
1683. Who intimated to you that you were not to work during that period? The overseer.
1684. Did he give you any reason for it? When I went upstairs to resume, he told me there was some secret work being done.
1685. Do you know what that secret work was connected with? No.
1686. I suppose the reason of his requesting you not to come to the office for a week was that he thought this secret work would be safer from being divulged provided you were away? I suppose so.
1687. Did you ever know of such a step as that being taken before, during the five years you have been there? No.
1688. You have always been trusted before? Yes.
- 1689.

Mr. P.
O'Connor.

11 Nov., 1870.

1689. As a supernumerary hand, are you, as a rule, satisfied with the treatment you receive in the office, or is there any difference in the treatment shown to the supernumerary hands and that shown to the permanent hands? Yes, a deal of difference.
1690. In what way? We do not get any work without it is extra work.
1691. Do you get a fair share of the fat and lean? Lately I have.
1692. I am talking of generally during the five years you have been there? No.
1693. How long is it since this system of giving you more lean than fat has been improved? A couple of years.
1694. It has been more equally distributed for the last two years? I have not had so much fat for the last two years.
1695. Have you been getting more fat, for instance, since this Committee sat? I have got a good deal the last week or two.
1696. Was anything said to you, when you went back to the office at the end of the week, and asked to be re-employed? I went to see Mr. Richards; he asked me if I had anything to do with the question that was asked in the House.
1697. What did you say to Mr. Richards? I said no.
1698. Did anything further pass? He asked me if I would make a written statement that I had nothing to do with it.
1699. Did he state to you whether there were any charges against you or not? No.
1700. It has been stated by Mr. Samuel that there were charges against some of the men—Were there any charges against you? Not that I know of.
1701. Did anything else pass between you and Mr. Richards at that time— You wrote this statement? Yes.
1702. What was the purport of it? I wrote just this:—"I beg leave to state that I had nothing to do with the questions asked in the Assembly."
1703. Was it your impression that your being received back into the office depended upon your making that statement? Yes.
1704. Captain Onslow. Do you know whether the question about having anything to do with the questions asked in the House was put by the Government Printer to all the extra hands? All that went to see him.
1705. Did any of them refuse to answer him? I do not know.
1706. Mr. Piddington. Did the Government Printer make any remark whatever upon the appointment of the Select Committee of the Legislative Assembly for the purpose of inquiring into the Government Printing Office? No.
1707. Do you know what the term "average" is applied to in the Government Printing Office? I suppose it means whether you are a good hand or not.
1708. Have you ever heard the term used by compositors on what is called the establishment? I have only heard them talking about keeping up their average for the month.
1709. What do you understand by the term "keeping up their average"? Whether they earn their wages.
1710. Are these men you now speak of paid by piece-work? No.
1711. How are they paid? So much a month.
1712. Do they not receive their salaries independently of the actual amount of work they perform? Yes.
1713. Then what do you understand by the term "average" as used by them? I do not know.
1714. You do not understand it? No.
1715. Chairman. Are you ever set to work at a frame belonging to one of the permanent staff? I have been some nights, when there has been no copy.
1716. Are you aware whether the work you do in that way is placed to the average of the permanent staff? I think it is.
1717. Captain Onslow. Do you think there has been any difference in the treatment of the supernumerary hands since this Committee has been appointed? No, I do not think there has been much difference.
1718. Chairman. Did you not say that within the last few weeks you have been getting better copy? There has been a great deal more work.
1719. Are you not getting better copy now than you used to get when the House was sitting before? Yes, I have had somewhat better copy latterly.
1720. Mr. Piddington. Did you ever hear the term "average" used at Mr. Cunningham's? No.

WEDNESDAY, 16 NOVEMBER, 1870.

Present:—

CAPTAIN ONSLOW, R.N., | MR. WILSON,
MR. WISDOM.

WILLIAM R. PIDDINGTON, ESQ., IN THE CHAIR.

Mr. Thomas Adams called in and examined:—

Mr. T. Adams.

16 Nov., 1870.

1721. Chairman. Are you a compositor? Yes.
1722. Where did you serve your time? At the Government Printing Office.
1723. Have you had any experience of any other office on piece-work? No.
1724. What is your position in the Government Printing Office? Overseer.
1725. What are the special qualifications for your office? Being a good workman, and knowing the routine of the business in the office.
1726. Have you had any knowledge of the business in any other place than the Government Printing Office? No, except the first two years of my apprenticeship at the old Gazette Office. I was transferred from there to the Government Printing Office.

Mr. T. Adams. 1727. The Gazette formerly published by Mr. Howe? Yes.

1728. Have you entire control of the composing branch in the Government Printing Office? Yes, with the exception of Mr. Potter—of course he has control of me. Through him I get copy to give out, and I have to look after it till it is done—myself and Mr. D'Arrietta, who is my assistant. When I am on night-work Mr. D'Arrietta takes my place in the day.

1729. You are the superior officer, and you discharge all the duties of controlling the men employed there? Yes.

1730. Including the men on the establishment as well as the supernumeraries? Yes.

1731. Is there any overseer of the Gazette? Mr. D'Arrietta is considered the overseer of the Gazette, and he always gives out the Gazette copy; but there is a man, Mr. Newman, who makes up the Gazette, who is not an overseer—he is merely taken from the permanent staff and placed to make up the Gazette, and to work also.

1732. Has he any special control over the Gazette and the men who compose it? Not the slightest.

1733. Are you satisfied with the proficiency, as first-class compositors, of all the men employed on the permanent staff? Yes.

1734. Have you never occasion to find fault with any of them? Not with regard to their work; but I had occasion to find fault with the quantity of work done by some of the permanent staff, and I immediately brought it under the notice of the Government Printer; that was eight or nine years ago.

1735. They did not compose sufficient matter, in your estimation? They did not.

1736. Have you any reason to complain of the inefficiency of any of the supernumerary staff? Yes, some of them are very inefficient in every way I consider. I have been greatly put about by their inefficiency, and have been kept at night frequently two or three hours longer than I ought to have been. In fact if I had the permanent hands I would get away two or three hours sooner than I do.

1737. Who are the men you complain of? Mr. Stone, Mr. Crowe, and Mr. Goggin.

1738. Are these three the persons you complain of principally? Yes; the others are fair workmen.

1739. Have these men been dismissed in consequence of your objection to them? No.

1740. They are still retained, although you consider them inefficient? Yes.

1741. How do you account for that? I do not know.

1742. Have you complained to your superior? I have.

1743. To whom? Mr. Richards.

1744. And notwithstanding your having complained to Mr. Richards, they are still retained in the service of the Government? Yes; but as they only get paid what they earn, it is no loss to the Government.

1745. What is your test of efficiency with regard to a first-class compositor? The quantity he can do in a certain time, and his general ability in taking up work as it comes, both tabular and other matter.

1746. When you say general ability, do you mean accuracy or rapidity of composition? I do not look so much to rapidity, as long as he is a good workman and can do his work in a proper manner.

1747. Do you mean accurately when you say in a proper manner? Yes.

1748. How are you employed when Parliament is not sitting? I am in the office and have charge in the day-time. I am at the office every day except when I have been at work the previous night.

1749. Do you ever compose yourself? I do; I generally set up title-pages and things of that sort, but I do not take a frame.

1750. Are you fully employed when Parliament is not sitting? Yes.

1751. In composing? Yes, and distributing matter.

1752. I ask whether you are fully employed in composing when Parliament is not sitting? I do not compose, except when there is a title-page to set up, and I take it myself rather than give it out to another. I am quite sufficiently occupied in giving out copy and looking after the men, without composing.

1753. Your business consists in looking after the men and giving out copy? Yes.

1754. Does that occupy your entire time when Parliament is not sitting? Yes, and very frequently another's time as well as my own; for very often when a paper comes in to be corrected I have to give it to a sub-overseer to get it done.

1755. How many overseers are employed in the composing branch, including yourself? Four.

1756. How many compositors are there? I really could not tell you exactly without I had the list.

1757. Can you say pretty nearly—are there 100? Not compositors.

1758. Are there fifty? Not more than fifty; about fifty.

1759. Do you consider four overseers necessary to fifty compositors? I do, the way they are distributed, because there are two rooms separate altogether; there is the jobbing room, that is separate, the overseer there has sufficient to do; he has to enter all the requisitions from the different departments for all forms, to take charge of them and give them out; he has eight hands, I think, under him. He has to keep an account of the forms that are printed, when they are received into the office, and when they go to press.

1760. You do not think any arrangement could be made within the office that would enable the Government Printer to dispense with some of these overseers? I do not.

1761. Have you ever heard of any person in the office lending money to the compositors? I have heard of its being done, but it is never done in my presence, nor in the office to my knowledge. If I saw it done in the office I would stop it immediately. What is done outside the office is no business of mine.

1762. Who have you heard of lending money? Mr. Steward, and it is said that Mr. D'Arrietta lends money.

1763. Have you heard of any one else? No.

1764. Have you ever heard of any betting transactions taking place in the Government Printing Office? No, not in the office. It may be outside, but it is not done inside.

1765. Are the men employed on piece-work treated in the same manner as the men employed on the permanent staff? I believe they are; I cannot see any difference made.

1766. Are any of the men employed in the office members of the Volunteer Corps? Yes.

1767. Are they allowed time for practice at shooting and so forth? They are occasionally.

1768. That time is paid for by the Government, is it? Yes.

1769. How often in the course of twelve months are the Volunteers in the office allowed to leave it at the expense of the Government? About once a week; one day in the week.

1770. One day in the week the members of the Volunteer Corps are allowed to leave? Not all of them at one time; only a certain number at one time.

1771. How many? Not more than five or six out of the whole establishment; not more than three from any one branch.

Mr. T. Adams.

16 Nov., 1870!

1772. About six are allowed to leave at one time? Yes.
1773. How many members of the Volunteer Corps altogether belong to the office? I could not say.
1774. Are any of the overseers members of the Volunteer Corps? Yes.
1775. How many of them? Two.
1776. Are they allowed to leave in the same way as the men? Yes.
1777. For how long a period on one day in the week are they allowed to leave? From 3 o'clock in the afternoon.
1778. In the case of holidays are the men on the permanent staff paid? Yes.
1779. Is the same practice applied to the men called supernumeraries, employed by piece-work? No.
1780. What is the meaning of the term "improver"? That I cannot tell you.
1781. Have you heard it used? Yes, it is used, and it is down in the list.
1782. I want you to explain what the meaning of it is? I do not know. When the apprentices are out of their time they are put on the list as improvers; they are not put on the permanent staff, and they do not get men's wages.
1783. How many are now known by the term "improvers"? I could not tell you without I had the list; I could point them out if I had the list.
1784. Here is the list (handed to witness)? I only see four here.
1785. What page are you looking at? The second page.
1786. If you look to the third page will you not see another there under the head of the bookbinding branch? That is a branch I have very little to do with.
1787. Do you not see it there? Yes.
1788. Under the head of "Paper-ruling," on the same page, do you not see another? Yes.
1789. That makes six, does it not? Yes, in the whole establishment. I was confining myself to the composing branch.
1790. What are they paid a year? They are paid 8s. a day, I believe.
1791. No, I think not? From 7s. to 8s. a day.
1792. It is better to be particular. You ought to know? I know those under my own immediate control.
1793. Who are they that are under your immediate control? David Hunter, Charles Williams, Michael Cullen, William Carroll, and Patrick Hinchy.
1794. Are they paid 8s. a day? No; 7s.
1795. They are all paid 7s. a day? Yes.
1796. Do you consider these men, who are neither apprentices nor compositors, worth 7s. a day? Yes; in fact I consider them worth journeymen's wages, the greater part of them.
1797. How is it they are not classed as compositors? It is wished to keep the establishment down to a certain number on the higher wages, and until there is a vacancy others are not put on. When a vacancy occurs one of these is put on.
1798. They occupy an intermediate position between compositors and apprentices? Yes.
1799. They are supposed to be better than apprentices, and not quite so good as compositors? Some are as good as any compositors.
1800. How is it they are not classed among the compositors? I do not know. That is the Government Printer's business.
1801. Can you understand it? No, I cannot understand it in any other way than I have already explained.
1802. You say you have had no experience of any other office except the old Gazette and the Government Printing Office? No.
1803. Have you ever heard that in any other printing office "improvers" are known? No.
1804. Have you any reason to believe that they are known? No.
1805. You say you were employed in the Government Printing Office originally as an apprentice? Yes.
1806. Were you transferred from the imperfect position of apprentice to the intermediate position of improver? No. In fact, I had charge of the jobbing-room before I was out of my apprenticeship.
1807. Did that arise from your being considered a good compositor? I suppose so; if I was not I do not suppose I would have got charge of a branch of the department which was a very particular one, there being a good deal of rule-work.
1808. As you were not classed among the improvers, and you say it was in consequence of your efficiency, is it not natural to suppose that the present improvers are not good compositors? No, I do not think so. There were not so many men there then. If the Government Printer does not think he can afford to pay such a number of men the higher wages he keeps them on till there is a vacancy.
1809. Might it not be possible to dismiss some of these intermediate individuals, if they were not so proficient as to be termed first-class compositors? I do not know any of them that are not proficient. I say any young man who serves his time in our office cannot be an inferior workman, if he pays any attention at all to his trade.
1810. Do they all pay attention to their business? I believe they do. There have been some who have gone away.
1811. You assert that all the men now employed on the establishment at the Government Printing Office, including improvers, are first-class compositors? I do.
1812. But some who are supernumeraries are not so? No.
1813. Then it is only among the supernumeraries that you find inefficient compositors? Yes; and they may be inefficient in this way,—that they are not well up to our work from want of experience in the office.
1814. Does the mere circumstance of a man being apprenticed in the Government Printing Office necessarily make him a first-class compositor? If he pays proper attention to his work.
1815. I have asked do they all pay proper attention? Yes, generally.
1816. Then the mere fact of being apprenticed in the Government Printing Office ensures a man being a first-class compositor when he is out of his time? Yes, I think so.
1817. How is the permanent staff employed during the recess of Parliament? In getting out the Electoral Lists, and on work left by the Parliament after the Session is over; also on correspondence, statistics, and reports that have to be laid before Parliament when they meet again.
1818. Are they always fully employed? Yes, always.
1819. Have you ever heard the term "average" used in the Government Printing Office? Yes.

- Mr. T. Adams. 1820. Will you explain what is meant by the term "average"? The term "average" was used when the Government Printer thought it would be advisable to keep an account of the men's earnings. That was done in order to keep them up to the standard, that they should not be loitering, and that they should do a regular share of work—in fact that they should earn what they got. If they earn their average wages they are looked upon as doing their business.
1821. How long has this system of average been in existence? About eight or nine years—about eight years.
1822. What is the standard upon which this average is calculated? We take their settings and calculate it up.
1823. What is the standard of their settings? I do not understand the question.
1824. You say that the object of the average is to keep the men up to some standard of work? If a man gets £15 a month, his work should show that he has earned it.
1825. I want to know the standard on which you calculate the work—What is the amount of setting that will form the average, in the estimation of the man who judges of the average? It will all depend upon the price. A man is allowed so much a thousand, and if he gets 15s. a day, and sets fifteen or sixteen thousand, he is considered to earn his money.
1826. Then you calculate the average by a standard, which standard is so much per thousand for the work done? Yes.
1827. What is the amount paid per thousand? 1s. is the amount allowed now.
1828. Is not that an arbitrary standard? No.
1829. Do you mean to say the men on the establishment are paid by piece-work? No; the account is only kept to show that they do their work.
1830. Is not the standard, as applied to the account, an arbitrary one? No, I do not think so.
1831. Are they paid 1s. a thousand? No, they get nothing extra, no matter how much they set. If they set 50,000 they get no more than if they set 15,000.
1832. And they get an equal amount of pay if they do not set 15,000? If they do not set what they ought, they are immediately called upon to explain how it is; and if it occurs again they are reduced, or perhaps dismissed.
1833. I thought the men on the establishment were paid by time? So they are.
1834. Do all the men on the establishment maintain this standard that you call the average? Yes, I think so.
1835. Although you do not pay them by piece-work they maintain this standard, and receive only at the rate they would receive if they were paid by piece-work—is that the case? No, they earn more than their pay. If they were paid for what they set they would earn a great deal more than they receive.
1836. In all cases? In all cases, I believe.
1837. At the rate of 1s. per thousand? Yes.
1838. That statement applies to all the men on the establishment? Yes.
1839. Have you ever heard of a man on the establishment not making his average? Yes, it has happened, because he has lost time.
1840. In that case would he be dismissed at once? No, he is reprimanded.
1841. Only reprimanded? Only reprimanded; but if found not up to the mark again, he is disgraced.
1842. Have you ever heard of men employed as supernumeraries composing matter which is carried to the credit of the men on the establishment? It has occurred very rarely. When there has been nothing else to give out, I have put supernumeraries on to work at the other men's frames; but these men have to correct their work, and if a man lifts a line for correction he claims it as his property.
1843. Do I understand you to say that men paid by piece-work have composed matter, which matter has been carried to the credit of men on the establishment, who are paid by time? Yes.
1844. Is not that a very convenient way of making up the average? I do not think they gain anything by it. They have frequently complained to me about it, that they would sooner their copy would not be touched. But it has been done to keep the other men on; they must be employed at something.
1845. Is it necessary, with a view to keep the supernumeraries on, that what they do should be carried to the credit of other men, to improve their average? No, but we had nothing else to give them at the time. If the men at whose frames the work is done have to correct and distribute that matter, it is theirs.
1846. I ask you, in reference to your answer that this practice is necessary in order to keep on the supernumeraries, whether that necessity entails the further necessity of carrying the work composed by the supernumeraries to the credit of the men on the establishment, who do not perform the work? It necessitates it in this way, that it would be very difficult to deduct what they have set. If it happened to be on tabular work, and they set two or three columns of figures in the centre of a table, the other man comes next morning and finishes that, it would be almost impossible to deduct these two or three columns without a great deal of trouble.
1847. Would that difficulty be equally felt in respect to ordinary matter? No.
1848. Still I want to know why it is necessary to carry to the credit of a compositor on the establishment certain composition which he does not perform? It is not necessary to do it.
1849. Then why is it done? That lies with some of the compositors. If they have to correct and distribute it they claim it as a right, but they get no extra pay for it.
1850. Is not this system of carrying to the credit of a compositor, who does not compose the matter, work that is done by persons on piece-work, intended to support the system of putting all the men on time-work in the establishment? No.
1851. You do not see any connection between average, as known in the Government Printing Office, and time-work? No.
1852. Can you tell me how the vacancies on the permanent staff are filled up? They are filled up from what are termed the improvers. For instance, if a man resigns a place of £150 a year, or dies, that place is filled up by one of the improvers on 7s. or 8s. a day, and always the first out of his time, if he is competent.
1853. The principle of seniority as affecting the improvers is applied when there is a vacancy in the establishment? Yes, it is taken together with ability.
1854. I think you have said you have had no experience of any large printing office except the Government Printing Office? No, only just being through.
1855. Did you ever hear of this system being established in any other large printing office? I believe it is done in the Melbourne Government Printing Office. 1856.

1856. You believe improvers exist in the Melbourne Government Printing Office? No, I thought you Mr. T. Adams. were speaking of supernumeraries. No, I do not know of it in any other place, and never heard of it.
1857. Have you ever heard that in large printing offices in London, when an additional number of 16 Nov., 1870. compositors is required, the employer chooses the best men he can get? Yes, I should say he would.
1858. Would you not consider that a sound system on which any printing office should be established? Yes.
1859. How do you account for its not prevailing in the Government Printing Office? It does.
1860. I understood you to say that the rule was to transfer improvers to vacancies? Yes; but the improver is efficient in every way.
1861. What I want to know is, whether the Government Printer goes to the trade generally for the best compositors he can get when a vacancy occurs? He never goes out of the office.
1862. Have you ever heard any complaints from men on piece-work of unfair treatment in reference to work? Yes, I have.
1863. What was the nature of their complaint, and how has it been dealt with? They say they do not get a fair share of the copy given out.
1864. Is that statement of theirs well-founded? I do not think so.
1865. You think they do receive as fair a share of copy as they have a right to demand? They do, so far as my knowledge goes; they always receive it as far as I am concerned; I never made any difference with any man.
1866. Do you take a man off piece-work and put him on time, sometimes for a few minutes only? I do; I cannot avoid it. If a Bill comes down from the House, for instance, to be altered in a hurry, I am bound to take the best man, the man I think can do it with the least delay; I have to get it done at once and send it up to the House.
1867. Captain Onslow. Do you generally select for this work supernumerary hands? I have no others at night.
1868. Mr. Wilson. Do you generally select the best workmen among the supernumerary hands? Yes.
1869. To that extent it is a disadvantage to be a good workman? I do not think so.
1870. He cannot make as much wages on time as on piece work? No; but it is not likely that in the exercise of my duty I could study the convenience of a particular compositor, or delay a thing for two hours, when I think I can have it done in one.
1871. Chairman. When piece and house hands are engaged on one kind of work, are you in the habit of picking the copy, giving all the "lean" portions to the piece-hands? No; I have very little to do at all in giving copy to general and piece hands together. I am not there much at that time.
1872. How many readers are there? Four.
1873. Are they all first-class compositors? No, they are not all compositors; only two are compositors. When I say four, I mean four permanent readers; but there is one on the night-staff as reader who is only employed as a supernumerary, Mr. Gooch; he is a compositor.
1874. Would it not be an advantage if all the readers were good compositors? It might be.
1875. Have they a uniform system of correction among themselves? Yes, they generally consult each other when any matter is being read; if one is in doubt about a thing, he consults the others.
1876. They have one uniform system? Yes.
1877. Captain Onslow. Is there any arbitrary rule about large capitals and small capitals on which the readers differ? I do not think so; they decide among themselves.
1878. Chairman. Do you know, or do you not, whether one system prevails among the readers? I believe it does. There are two parliamentary readers, one reader for the jobbing work, and one for the Gazette; but when there is anything wanted in a hurry, they assist each other.
1879. Is there an overseer in the Bill room? Yes, a sub-overseer, Mr. Thrum.
1880. Are there more than one man and a boy employed there under him? That is all that are in the room; but if Mr. Thrum gets more work than they can do, he comes out to me or Mr. D'Arrietta, and we send him men to do it. He has charge of all the Bills and the Electoral Lists.
1881. Practically is there more than one man and a boy employed under him? No.
1882. Can you, from your experience in the Government Printing Office, offer any suggestions to the Committee, as to means by which the expenses of the office could be reduced? No, I could not do so.
1883. The business is carried on at the lowest cost to the public service, in your opinion? I believe so; I do not believe there is a shilling wasted.
1884. Is there no possibility of any reduction whatever? There might be.
1885. In your opinion, is it possible to conduct the printing office on a more economical plan, in any way whatever, or to any extent whatever? I do not know of anything I could suggest.
1886. Is the stereotype room under your charge? No, none of the places are under my charge except the parliamentary composing-room; but if I go about and see anything wrong it is my duty to call the attention of those placed over it, and if it is not corrected it is my business to report it.
1887. You are the third officer in point of rank, are you not? Yes.
1888. You are the principal overseer? Yes.
1889. Do not your duties cover all the establishment? In a measure they do; but these places being away from me it is impossible for me to be everywhere. I go through them very frequently, and if I see anything going on that I disapprove of I call the attention of the person in charge to it.
1890. Do you consider you can efficiently carry out your duties as overseer over the whole establishment? No, not by myself, without others under me.
1891. Do you do so as principal overseer? Yes, as far as practicable.
1892. Have you ever heard of any one having private work done at the office for themselves? Never.
1893. Have you never heard of a door-plate being done for any one? No, not from Government material.
1894. You have not heard of it? Mr. D'Arrietta has made a door-plate for himself; he cut the letters out of brass, and put them on a plate of sheet lead, but that has not been done in the office time.
1895. At home? No, at the office, in his dinner-hours.
1896. But never during public time? No.
1897. Nor any one else that you know of? No.
1898. Have you heard of any dispute between Mr. D'Arrietta and one of the late supernumerary compositors, Mr. Mason, in relation to some pie? I have heard of it.

Mr. T. Adams. 1899. Do you know anything about the particulars? No, nothing more than what I have heard.

1900. What have you heard? I heard some pie was found upon one of the stones in the morning, and 16 Nov., 1870. Mr. D'Arrietta accused the night-staff of leaving it there; he gave it to them to distribute between them when I was not at the office.

1901. You have no opinion as to whether it was left by the night-staff or not? No. Very frequently lines have been put away that I knew belonged to some of them. They have been in the habit of putting their lines away rather than distribute them. It has been found on the bulks over and over again.

1902. Have you ever in your intercourse with any of the compositors stigmatized them as liars? No, I have not pointedly. If the Committee will listen to me, I will explain how I am accused of calling a man a liar. There was one occasion that I went to the bulk and found some lines of matter that had just been put away. I knew the distribution had been given out and laid on the frames. I accused Mr. Trumper of it, because I saw him coming away from the bulk two minutes previous. I first said it was Mr. Trumper's; he said it was not. When I looked down the matter and read it, I said—"I beg your pardon Mr. Trumper; I will take it all back; I see it is Mr. Taylor's." With that, Taylor said it was not, and I said it was. I said—"Dick, there is no use telling a lie about it, because I know it is yours." He said—"One of us must be telling a lie, and I know it is not me." With that I went into the reading-room, and brought his proof out with his name marked on it; and it was his. "Now," says I, "who is telling the lie?" He dropped it then; he could not deny it was his matter, but he denied putting it there. If that is calling a man a liar, then I will plead guilty.

1903. Have you never applied that term to any one else? No.

1904. Captain Onslow. Have you read the evidence? I have heard it read.

1905. Have you read Mr. Mason's evidence:—"I have heard Mr. Thomas Adams call a man, in business hours, in the office, a liar, and assert it over and over again, on two several occasions. I have heard him do so; and I do not think I ever heard a master make use of such an expression to a journeyman compositor before. I heard Mr. Adams call Mr. Taylor a liar, and I heard him call Mr. Banks a liar also; about two years intervening between the two cases."—In reference to that statement, have you ever called Mr. Banks a liar? I will explain that too. Last Session, one night, when the House copy came down to be set, I had all the copy in; and it is usual, about half-past 10, to let the men out for refreshment. Mr. Banks and Mr. Clements came up and asked if they were not to go out to refresh; I said no, we had all the copy in, and we would be finished in an hour. With that Mr. Banks and Mr. Clements walked back to their frames, put on their coats, and went away. They stayed away half an hour, and by the time they came back I had given out the copy. I said to them—"There is no more copy, and if there was you do not deserve it." Mr. Banks went next morning to Mr. Richards and made a complaint that I had refused to give him copy. Mr. Richards left a memorandum asking me for an explanation. The next evening Mr. Banks came to my desk, and said, in a very offensive manner—"I suppose you will give me copy to-night." I said—"I will, if you are civil, and the next time you go to Mr. Richards I hope you will tell the truth." He said—"I have told the truth." I said—"You have not; you have told him I had copy and would not give it to you, which is not true."

1906. Chairman. Is that your explanation in reference to the statement made by Mr. Banks? Yes.

1907. You did not repeat "you are a liar," or "you have told a lie"? I did not; I merely said he did not tell the truth, and he said he did.

1908. Captain Onslow. You have stated that if any of the permanent staff did not come up to the average, he would be either reduced or dismissed? Yes.

1909. Have there been any such cases—have any stoppages been made in their pay? Not to my knowledge; there may have been.*

1910. Do you ever recommend any one for promotion, for ability and good conduct? Yes.

1911. Has any notice been taken of your recommendation? I do not know.

1912. Would you not know if any one in the office was promoted? Yes.

1913. How long have you been in the office? Twenty-nine years.

1914. Within the last few years, since Mr. Richards has been at the head of the office, have any of the permanent hands left? I do not recollect any. Some have died.

1915. Do you think the permanent hands are better off generally than they would be if they were in a private office? Yes, any man is better off who has a permanent situation.

1916. Is any instruction given to apprentices, or are they allowed to acquire knowledge as they can? They are instructed by the men in whose frames they are put, and by the overseers.

1917. You stated that the extra hands are sometimes employed setting up copy during the night. Have the permanent hands got to do more work for this extra work? Their work may be done perhaps an hour sooner the next day.

1918. Does it lighten their labour? No, not the least; they have to come up for copy again as soon as the work is finished that they have in hand.

1919. Mr. Wilson. Does it not make them appear on the books of the office as more efficient hands? No, I do not think so; the little that is done in that way is so very trifling that I do not believe in any one month it would make a difference of 5s. to any of them in their average.

1920. Captain Onslow. How many men were dismissed the other day? I do not know whether they were dismissed or suspended.

1921. How many were suspended? I do not know. The night staff were told not to come for a time. I had nothing at all to do with it.

1922. There were fourteen extra hands—they were all told not to come for a week—several of these have since been taken on—Who have not been employed since? Four.

1923. What are their names? Mr. Banks, Mr. Trumper, Mr. Mason, and Mr. Grogan.

1924. What are the qualifications of Mr. Mason as a compositor? He is a very good compositor.

1925. What are the qualifications of Mr. Banks as a compositor? He is not a good compositor, not in general; in fact whether it is his inability or his laziness I do not know, but he is very dilatory.

1926. What are the qualifications of Mr. Trumper? He is a very fair compositor.

1927. And Mr. Grogan? Mr. Grogan is pretty fair.

1928.

* NOTE (on revision):—Since answering this question, I recollect a case of one being disrated and put on the supernumerary list.

† NOTE (on revision):—I understood this question to apply to the extra hands, some of whom I have recommended.

Mr. T. Adams.

16 Nov., 1870.

1928. You do not know whether these men have been dismissed or suspended? I do not.
1929. Do you know whether Mr. Mason has been dismissed? I have heard so.
1930. Do you know whether he has done anything worthy of dismissal, in the way of insubordination, or insolence, or neglect of duty? I have heard so; in fact he has given insolence to myself several times.
1931. Have you complained of it? I have mentioned it to Mr. Potter. In fact, nearly all these hands are inclined to be troublesome unless the copy suits them: they say they cannot earn wages on it.
1932. You have denied ever picking the copy? I have never picked copy for any one.
1933. Do you know whether any of the other overseers have been in the habit of picking the copy? Not that I know of. They may keep tables back for the permanent staff in preference to the piece-hands.
1934. Have any of the extra hands ever complained? Yes.
1935. Have they complained to you? No.
1936. Mr. Wilson.] Will you be kind enough to tell the Committee what were the particular charges you made against Mr. Mason to Mr. Potter? His general insolence, and refusing to go on time when I wanted him.
1937. Did you make these charges in writing? No. In fact Mr. Richards reprimanded me for not doing so in the cases of Mr. Banks and Mr. Clements; he said if I had reported them they would have been instantly dismissed.
1938. You said Mr. Mason complained of your putting him on time—Did you put him on time oftener than others? Not oftener than I did any of those capable of doing the work I wanted done.
1939. That is to say, you have some supernumeraries who are not capable? Yes, I say the men I have named were not capable. As to Mr. Banks, I have had to take a simple memorandum out of his hands because he would not or could not do it.
1940. You say Mr. Mason was put oftener on time-work than some of the other hands? Yes, oftener than those I have named.
1941. Could he make as much money on time as on piece work? I do not suppose he could.
1942. Then under such circumstances he would have some little ground for grumbling if his efficiency was to be made a reason for putting him on time, and so preventing him from earning as much money as he otherwise would do? Mr. Mason never complained before this Session.
1943. Were there any other subjects of complaint against Mr. Mason? No, I have no other complaint to make against Mr. Mason; only that he has made statements which I know to be utterly untrue.
1944. Statements to whom? To several people out of doors.
1945. Do you take notice of all these things that happen out of doors? Mr. Mason himself takes notice of them. I believe he complains that he has been charged with being the cause of bringing about this inquiry, and wishes some of the Members to exonerate him. Now he has told me over and over again that he was the actual person that did bring it about—that he was the principal mover in it, and that he had been with Mr. Piddington several times.
1946. Mr. Piddington did not move for this Committee? We were always under the impression that he would be the person who would move for it.
1947. Captain Onslow.] Was there any talk in the office about the Committee being appointed before it was moved for? Yes, twelve months before. Both Mason and Taylor boasted about it all through the town, that a Committee was to be appointed on their account. Mr. Mason claims the credit for himself, and Mr. Taylor for himself.
1948. Mr. Wilson.] Have you seen a letter from Mr. Parkes to the effect that Mr. Mason had nothing to do with the appointment of this Committee? No.
1949. Do you make any other charges against Mr. Mason? Nothing more than I have said,—that he has been insubordinate on several occasions.
1950. And this insubordination arose from his complaining of being put on time? Yes, and also getting copy that he did not like. He has also refused to correct his proofs at night.
1951. You have stated that four of the supernumeraries have not been taken on again—Are the other ten who are at work now all as good workmen as these four? No, I have already named three who are not good workmen.
1952. Are you aware that when these supernumeraries were employed again, they were requested by Mr. Richards to sign a declaration that they had had nothing to do with the questions that were asked in the Assembly respecting their suspension? Nothing more than I have heard.
1953. Had you anything to do with that? No. That night when I came Mr. Richards told me he would not want me, that he would get the Votes done by the permanent staff; he did not tell me why; he said he would give me a night off, as I had had a very heavy week the week before.
1954. Is it a fact that Mr. Mason was put on some particular work that was wanted for the Exhibition? Not to my knowledge. That may have been stereotype work. I know he was put on stereotype work while the others were walking about.
1955. I suppose that would be because he was an efficient workman? I believe he showed that he was not efficient in that case, for he spoiled several plates; at least I have heard it said; I do not know it for a fact myself.
1956. Who is the keeper of the fount-room? Mr. M'Cracken.
1957. What are his duties? He has to keep an account of all the types that come in, give cases out, and see that they are returned in proper order.
1958. Is he ever engaged at case-work himself? Yes, sometimes.
1959. Is he often employed in that way? Not very frequently.
1960. We have it in evidence that there were certain galleys of work seen in the fount-room in a cupboard, part of it poetry and part prose—Do you know whose work that was? No, I do not. The Government Printer may be able to answer that question.
1961. Do you know anything about printing done for the Civil Service Musical Society? I have seen their cards and circulars in the office, but I do not know under what circumstances they were done.
1962. Are you aware of any private bookbinding having been done in the office? No.
1963. You have stated that Mr. D'Arrietta made a door-plate for himself in the office at dinner-hour—Did he bring his own material? I believe so; I do not know where he got the brass, but it did not belong to the office.
1964. Did you ever hear of any dog-collars or door-numbers being made in the stereotype room? No, I never heard of a dog-collar, but I have made a door-number myself.

Mr. T. Adams. 1965. Did you make it in the office? Yes.

1966. Out of what material? Out of brass.

16 Nov., 1870. 1967. To whom did the brass belong? To myself.

1968. You brought it there with you? Yes.

1969. And I think you have stated that you are not aware of any of the overseers having work for themselves done in the office? Not that I am aware of.

1970. You have stated that the system of average has been in operation for the last eight years? Yes.

1971. Was it not stopped for some time? No, not to my knowledge.

1972. Has it been in constant operation for the last eight years? Yes, I think so.

1973. Are any of the fourteen supernumeraries that were suspended altogether more efficient workmen than any of the permanent hands in the office? No; there is an apprentice in the office that will work with any of them. All those on the permanent staff are equal in ability with any person on the supernumerary list.

1974. Have you ever heard of any swearing or bad language in the office by the overseers to the men? No; I know it could not be said of me.

1975. You have stated that you have heard that Mr. D'Arrietta lends money to the men in the office? Yes.

1976. As far as you know, that is done out of office hours? Yes.

1977. Do you think it is proper, under any circumstances, for an overseer to lend money to the hands employed under him? I do not approve of it myself.

1978. Do you think he can act with as much impartiality to the men who owe him money as to the men who do not? No, I do not think so.

1979. Have you heard much betting going on the office? No, not in the office.

1980. Did you ever hear of Mr. D'Arrietta betting with the hands, on horse-racing, in or out of the office? I have heard of it.

1981. I should think you do not approve of that? No, not in any way, with anybody.

1982. In answer to a question put to Mr. Samuel some time ago, in the House, he stated that there were charges against some of the supernumerary hands—Were those charges made by you? No.

1983. Who was in a position to make these charges, if it was done without your knowledge? The other overseer.

1984. Does he work at night? No, he works in the day.

1985. Who is that other overseer? Mr. D'Arrietta has the principal control of the parliamentary compositors when I am away in the day-time.

Mr. Walter D'Arrietta called in and examined:—

Mr. W. 1986. Chairman.] You are a compositor? Yes.

D'Arrietta. 1987. Where might you have served your time? In the Government Printing Office, Sydney.

16 Nov., 1870. 1988. Have you been employed since then in any other office? No; I have been continuously employed at the Government Printing Office.

1989. Then your entire experience of the trade has been derived from your being employed in the Government Printing Office as an apprentice and otherwise? Yes.

1990. What position do you now hold? Sub-overseer.

1991. What class of men are more properly under your control, or does your position as overseer embrace the whole of the men? No, I have charge of the large composing room during the sitting of the House, while the overseer is employed on night-work; and altogether of about fifty-nine hands.

1992. Are these fifty-nine hands all of them compositors? Not all; about fifty are compositors.

1993. How many on the establishment are under your control, and how many on piece-work? About forty on the establishment, and thirteen or fourteen on piece-work; I include the six readers—three readers and their assistants.

1994. Are you the overseer of the Gazette? I have charge of the Gazette; I receive and give out the copy, and am responsible that it is all composed, read, and corrected, in time for publication.

1995. Is there no other overseer on the Gazette but yourself? None but myself.

1996. Do you know Mr. Newman? Yes, he is maker up of the Gazette.

1997. But he does not discharge the duties of overseer? No.

1998. What are the special qualifications, in your opinion, that an overseer in the office ought to possess? First of all, he should be a good compositor, firm, and impartial, have some business tact, and be able to maintain the discipline of the office.

1999. Are you the only overseer employed there? No; I am only sub-overseer.

2000. Do you consider these qualifications you have described as necessary qualifications for an overseer, to be possessed by the other gentlemen who are overseers, from Mr. Adams downwards? I think so.

2001. During the time you have been an overseer, have you ever had occasion to complain of the work of the permanent staff, or any portion of them? I have never had occasion to report on the work done. There may be some little matters of detail on which I have found fault, but they have been immediately remedied.

2002. You have never had occasion to complain of the men on the permanent staff, I think you say? Not that I can recollect.

2003. Are you of opinion that all the men on the permanent staff are first-class compositors? Yes, I believe they are all first-class compositors.

2004. Do you believe one man is as good as another among them as a compositor? I would not say they were all equal in qualifications, but taking them as a body I should recommend them as first-class compositors.

2005. Have they all attained a standard of efficiency, in your opinion, as compositors? In my opinion, they are all above the average as compositors.

2006. Do you form that opinion from any standard in your own mind? I have seen others employed in the establishment—men from different offices—and from my knowledge of their work I draw that conclusion.

2007.

Mr. W.
D'Arrietta.
16 Nov., 1870.

2007. Do I understand you rightly that you compare one compositor in the Government Printing Office with another, and so form your opinion of their efficiency as first-class compositors? No; I compare the men as a body with others that I have seen.
2008. Where? Employed in our own establishment.
2009. Well, I ask whether the compositors on the permanent staff are all first-class compositors? They are.
2010. Are they all equally efficient as compositors, one with the other? I cannot say they are all equally efficient; one may be a little better than another.
2011. Are you of opinion that there is very little difference indeed between the ability of one compositor as compared with another on the establishment? There is some difference, but not a great deal.
2012. Then all the men on the establishment approach one another very closely with regard to their qualifications, do they? There is not a great deal of difference between them.
2013. How many do you say are employed in the composing branch as compositors, on the establishment? Do you mean including the jobbing-room?
2014. I allude to compositors on the establishment—how many are there employed as compositors on the establishment? I could hardly answer that question.
2015. You think about forty are employed as compositors on the establishment? Forty, I think, is the number.
2016. Out of the forty compositors on the establishment, you are of opinion that they differ very little in qualification as first-class compositors? I would beg to represent that the forty include the improvers, and I would not say that all the improvers are as good as the other compositors.
2017. Exclude the improvers from consideration altogether—Are you of opinion that all the rest of the compositors on the establishment are equal one with the other, as first-class compositors? I did not say they were equal to one another; I said they approach one another very closely.
2018. Are you of opinion that they are nearly equal to one another? I will not say nearly; I say they approach one another very closely.
2019. How many of the forty are, in your opinion, really first-class compositors, and how many are below the standard of first-class compositors? I should say all that are rated as compositors are first-class hands.
2020. How many are rated as compositors? I could not say.
2021. From your experience in the office, do you not know how many are rated as compositors? I think there are about thirty rated as compositors.
2022. You think thirty out of forty are first-class compositors? I do.

WEDNESDAY, 29 MARCH, 1871.

Present:—

CAPTAIN ONSLOW,

MR. SAMUEL.

WILLIAM R. PIDDINGTON, ESQ., IN THE CHAIR.

Mr. Walter D'Arrietta called in and further examined:—

2023. Chairman.] Have you ever had to complain of the work of any member or members of the supernumerary staff? Yes, frequently.
2024. What are the occasions—can you charge your recollection? I cannot remember them now, but I have frequently had occasion to call the men up and show them the forms, and make them alter the composition.
2025. You cannot recollect any specific case? I cannot recollect any particular case.
2026. Have you ever been connected with betting transactions? Not at all in the office.
2027. Not in any way in the office? Not in any way in the office. While you are on the subject, I may as well mention that certain charges have been made against me of betting with Mr. Ironside, one of the readers, comparing books and so on. I beg to hand in a declaration from a young man who was assistant with Mr. Ironside, and who was scarcely ever out of the box during the time the person who has made these charges was in the office. It is a declaration denying the statement. (Handed in.)
2028. Do you deny having any betting transactions with any one in the office? I deny it totally.
2029. Is there any difference in your treatment of the supernumerary staff as compared with the permanent staff? Not that I am aware of.
2030. Are you allowed time for attending Volunteer parades and practice? It was usual at one time to allow perhaps one or two hours on a Monday afternoon, when the work would permit, to attend rifle practice, but never that I can recollect for parades,—they always take place on Saturday, when we give our own time.
2031. Is it the practice to allow persons to absent themselves from the office on any occasion for practice? I have explained that it was usual when the work would permit.
2032. I think you said it was formerly the case—I want to know whether it is now the case? No, it is not now.
2033. Can you define the meaning of the term “improver”? An improver is a person who has served his apprenticeship, and is waiting for a position as a compositor.
2034. Is it not the rule in printing offices generally, that when an apprentice to the business of printing or composing is out of his time, he is considered capable of taking any work connected with composing? It is usual; but I believe in our establishment there is not sufficient money to take these hands as compositors, so they are kept on as improvers.
2035. You think that is a custom peculiar to your establishment? My experience in the outside trade is rather limited, but I believe there are such persons in the printing office in Melbourne.
2036. Is it the practice in printing offices generally to recognize people called improvers? I think not.
2037. Have you many of these improvers? Six.

Mr. W.
D'Arrietta.
29 Mar., 1871.

Mr. W.
D'Arrietta.

29 Mar., 1871.

2038. Is it from the class of improvers that you recruit your staff of permanent compositors? If they are in every way efficient it has been the practice, with one or two exceptions.
2039. Do I understand that it is from the class of improvers that you recruit your staff, as a general rule?
2040. As a general rule.
2040. Do you think that is the best course open to the office of securing first-class compositors? I think so.
2041. Did I not understand you to describe an improver as a person who is not always a first-class compositor, but holding an intermediate stage between an apprentice and a first-class workman? Waiting for a position as a compositor, I think I said.
2042. Do you consider that all these improvers are first-class compositors as soon as they have reached the term of their apprenticeship? I would not say all.
2043. Would not the office have a better chance of securing first-class compositors if it was the practice of the office to go into the market for the aid they require? No; I think the young men that have served their time in the establishment are better up to the work and more useful in the establishment.
2044. But if a vacancy occurred on the establishment, and you went into the general market for a workman, is it not more likely that in that general market you would find a better man than in your small class of improvers? There are not many good hands out of employment.
2045. You think the limited body of improvers would afford the public a better chance of obtaining first-class compositors than if the practice was to go into the public market for a recruit? I think they would be more useful on the establishment.
2046. Would they be better workmen? They ought to be as good.
2047. But would they be—would they, in your opinion, be as good as a first-class compositor out of the open market? They would be as good as any available hands we could get, I believe.
2048. You were brought up in this office? Yes.
2049. You have had no experience of the management of other printing offices? I have had very little experience of them. I have been in all the large offices in Sydney and Melbourne, but I have not paid particular attention —
2050. Which are the large offices in Sydney or Melbourne that you have been in? The Herald Office and all the Melbourne offices.
2051. Captain Onslow.] Employed? No.
2052. Chairman.] Have you been employed in any of these large printing offices besides the Government Printing Office? No.
2053. Were you one of the improvers? No.
2054. Then you did not go through the intermediate stage of improvement? No.
2055. Were you transferred at once from the position of apprentice to the establishment? As soon as I was out of my time I was placed on journeyman's wages.
2056. On the establishment? On the establishment. Things were very different then to what they are now.
2057. You did not require to go through the process of improving? No, I did not.
2058. Is it the fact that the majority of the men in your office are those who have served their time there? A great number have. I could not say without looking over the list carefully whether the majority have served their time there.
2059. Has it not been the practice to recruit the establishment from the class of persons who have served their time there? Yes.
2060. And yet you cannot say whether the majority of persons in the office are persons who have served their time there? (Witness looked over the list of persons on the establishment.) Yes, the majority have served their time in the office.*
2061. How is the permanent staff employed during the recess of Parliament? We have always plenty of work to keep us going, such as library catalogues, pamphlets, electoral lists, brand registers, and so forth.
2062. What pamphlets do you allude to? We have had lately the Exhibition pamphlet and several large pamphlets.
2063. Work not necessarily connected with parliamentary business? Yes.
2064. Contingent or accidental work? Yes—not printed by order of Parliament.
2065. Mr. Samuel.] The Government Gazette? The Gazette is printed by a separate staff, continuously going.
2066. Chairman.] Then the employment of the permanent staff depends to a great extent upon accidental work that the Government may order or not? Yes, it depends greatly upon the work the Government may order. There is always sufficient to keep us going. If there is nothing to compose, there is plenty to keep us at work perhaps for weeks, with what has accumulated during the Session.
2067. With regard to piece-hands—when piece-hands are employed on time is it not usual to be very precise with the docks? Yes.
2068. Is that a usage peculiar to your establishment? Certainly not. A person would not be allowed time that did not work. They get the exact time.
2070. Is not that rather unfair behaviour to the piece-hand, when you interrupt his composition? Hardly, I think; he can resume his copy directly afterwards.
2071. In cases where piece-hands and what you call house-hands are engaged on one kind of work, do you pick the copy, giving what are called the leaner portions to the piece-hands? Certainly not.
2072. Do you know whether the overseers edit the copy before giving it out for composition? The overseer, when he receives the copy, looks over it carefully to see the type it is to be set in, and anything else that may occur to him.
2073. Do you not think he ought to take particular pains with regard to the composition—is it not the duty of an overseer to do it? He has to give instructions as to how it has to be set, in what type, and in what manner.

* NOTE (on revision) :—In looking over the list more carefully, I find that the majority have not served their time in the office.

Mr. W.
D'Arrietta.

29 Mar., 1871.

2074. Are your readers all practical printers? Not all.
2075. Would it be desirable they should be, in order to qualify them for marking the compositors' work? Certainly a reader would be better able to fulfil his duties were he a practical compositor.
2076. Is there any uniform system adopted by the readers in the office? Yes, I believe so.
2077. Who is the overseer when the House is not sitting? Mr. Adams.
2078. How many overseers have you in the composing branch, including the principal? Four.
2079. Do you consider four necessary in that office? Yes; the rooms are divided, and it is necessary there should be some person in charge.
2080. Is it because there is a division in the building, or that the work to be done requires the four overseers? Both combined.
2081. Partly the amount of work and partly the division of the building—is that it? Yes.
2082. Can you offer any suggestion to the Committee that might enable the expenses of this establishment to be reduced at all? No, I consider the establishment is worked most economically; there is not anything I could suggest to curtail the expenditure.
2083. Is the stereotype room under your charge? Not at all.
2084. Are you aware if any work for private individuals is ever done in that room? I am not aware that any such thing has occurred.
2085. You never had any work done for yourself in that establishment? No, I have not.
2086. You do not know of any other person who has? No.
2087. Captain Onslow.] Are there many Volunteers in the Government Printing Office who have got their land orders? I think about a dozen. While on the subject, I might as well mention to the Committee that I have been charged with being implicated in the purchase of two land orders —
2088. Chairman.] Who has charged you? A Mr. Taylor. I now produce documentary evidence to show that at the time these land orders were disposed of I did not even know of the transaction. I hand in a declaration to that effect from the three principals, which I desire to be appended to my evidence. (Handed in.)
2089. Captain Onslow.] Do you know if any of the overseers or principals in the Government Printing Office have purchased or in any way become possessed of the land orders of their juniors? No, not any cases that I am aware of.
2090. Is there any place in the Government Printing Office which is called Tattersall's? Only in the imagination of one of the witnesses; I have never heard the term applied before.
2091. Do you know if any of the overseers or sub-overseers have been in the habit of lending money to their juniors in the office? No, I am not aware that any such thing has occurred. That charge has been made against me —
2092. Have you read the evidence? I have partly read the evidence. That charge has been made against me, and I beg to hand in a refutation of it in the shape of a letter I have received from the Father of the Chapel, enclosing a declaration from every one in the establishment over whom I have the slightest control. (Declaration handed in. Vide Appendix D.)
2093. Has any change taken place in the working of the office since the appointment of this Committee? None whatever, that I am aware of.
2094. Mr. Samuel.] It has been stated to the Committee that time-work done by the supernumerary staff is credited to those employed permanently, to make up what is called the average. Will you explain how that is? This has been mentioned by several of the witnesses, but I may perhaps explain to the Committee that it is a thing hardly worth noticing. When that statement was made, the total earnings on time of the piece-hands amounted to about 480 hours, and that divided amongst all the compositors employed would not have made a difference of a shilling per month each. That is the whole of the time that was made, including the time they may have been on the house-hands' work.
2095. Captain Onslow.] It has been stated by several of the witnesses, supernumerary hands, that since the appointment of this Committee they have got more "fat" than before—that the copy used to be picked—Is there any truth in that? There is no truth in it.
2096. Do you believe that the supernumerary hands were in any way under the impression that they were unfairly treated—was that impression prevalent among them? I cannot say that I thought so.
2097. Did they ever complain to you? No. I believe they all understood they were there as supernumerary hands, and only to receive such work as could not be done by the house-hands.
2099. Was it in this way,—that a night man did certain work at a particular frame, and a permanent man came to that frame in the morning and got credit for that work? No; the night-staff had frames and cases of their own, and the house-hands had frames too—separate frames; and the overseer, to give them something to do, as they were obliged to be employed the whole of the time they were there at night, told them to go on with the copy at certain frames. But instead of this little bit being a gain, it was more often a loss to the man at whose frame it was set, on account of the trouble of correcting it.
2100. It was only in cases of that kind where the house-hands got credit for what the piece-men had done? Only in the case I have mentioned. It was merely a temporary arrangement, and very often a loss to the compositor whose copy they took up.
2101. Was it done with the design to make it appear that the permanent men were earning more than they really were? Not at all; it was merely to give these men employment,—that they should not be idle.
2102. Do you recollect the occasion when Mason's and a number of other men's services were dispensed with? Yes.
2103. Were these men, or Mason, at the time guilty of any acts which you would consider calculated in any way to impair the discipline of the department? Mr. Mason is a man who is most insolent in his language and bearing, not only to his companions, but to the overseers, the Superintendent, and even the Government Printer; more particularly so since the appointment of this Committee.

Mr. W.
D'Arrietta.

29 Mar., 1871.

2104. You are now speaking of his general bearing, but I want to know whether you recollect the circumstance of their services being dispensed with about October last, I think? Yes, I remember the circumstance.
2105. Is it within your knowledge that on that occasion, and former occasions, Mason was leading a party in the printing office? It is not within my knowledge that he was; it was reported that he was.
2106. You do not know that he had been guilty of any acts of insubordination? I know he had been guilty of several.
2107. You are aware that his services were dispensed with by my order, as Treasurer? Yes.
2108. Has he been since returned to the establishment? He has.
2109. What position does he occupy there now? On the supernumerary staff,—the position he formerly held.
2110. Has Banks gone back? No.
2111. What other men have been sent back whose services were dispensed with at that time? Only Mr. Mason.
2112. Out of the whole of that number Mr. Mason is the only one sent back? I think Banks and Mason were the only ones who received notice.
2113. No, there were several who received notice at that time? Mr. Trumper was another.
2114. It has been stated that you have been in the habit of lending money to the men, and you have put in a declaration in which that statement is denied. Did you and a Mr. Steward ever buy up any man's debts, which amounted to somewhere about £20? No, I did not.
2115. If that statement has been made here, is it true or is it not? It is false.
2116. Are you impressed at all with the idea that there is any jealousy on the part of the men employed on piece-work, with reference to the men permanently employed? I dare say a little jealousy does exist, but it has never particularly shown itself, excepting in the case of Mr. Mason.
2117. Does any political feeling prevail in the Government Printing Office—is any partisanship shown there? It is understood that Mr. Mason's political influence has restored him to his position.
2118. Are there rules laid down for the preservation of order and discipline in the department? Yes, there are certain printed rules which these men work by.
2119. With regard to their conduct in the department, is there a rule as to the manner in which a man shall conduct himself, and in the event of any misconduct he will be dismissed? No, there is no such rule as that; the overseers are supposed to keep order and discipline in the office.
2120. Is Mr. Mason in your branch? Yes, at times.
2121. Was he at the time of his removal or suspension in October last? Yes, I believe he was.
2122. Did you complain of him at all? The fact was he did not give me a chance—he complained of me first; that was in reference to some "pie."
2123. That was on a former occasion: I refer to the last occasion? No, I did not complain of him on the last occasion.
2124. How was it Mr. Richards complained to me? I believe complaints had been made by the overseer and by the Superintendent, Mr. Potter.
2125. Do you consider that the effect of sending Mr. Mason back to the department has been in any way injurious to the discipline of the department? Yes, I should think it very injurious that a man who conducts himself as Mr. Mason does should be forced on the establishment and kept in his position.
2126. Captain Onslow.] How does he misconduct himself? He is most insolent in his language and bearing to the Superintendent, and continually threatening with this Committee.
2127. Since he has been back? No later than within this day or two; not once, but frequently.
2128. Chairman.] What is the nature of his insubordinate and insolent conduct? He supposes he should hold a different position to what he does; and when copy is short, and he is not supplied, he makes a report to the Superintendent, and does not do it in a becoming manner—he does so in an insolent manner.
2129. Do you speak of your own knowledge? What I have been told by the Superintendent.
2130. You do not speak of your own knowledge? I have heard him using very high words.
2131. You cannot state anything of your own knowledge, on the part of Mr. Mason, insolent or insubordinate? Nothing further than what I have stated.
2132. That is not within your own knowledge? It is within my own knowledge that I have heard the remarks.
2133. Have you observed it yourself? Yes.
2134. Can you mention a case? I did not hear the exact language, but I heard him speaking in very high words with the Superintendent, threatening to bring it before this Committee.
2135. Then you have heard the language; you just now said you did not hear the language—now you say you have heard it? I heard it indistinctly; not to tell the exact words.
2136. Then how can you say he threatened to bring it before this Committee? Because the Superintendent told me so.
2137. What have you heard yourself from Mr. Mason that was either insolent or insubordinate? I have heard him speak in a disrespectful manner to the Superintendent; I could not repeat the exact words, but it was within my hearing.
2138. Can you describe his manner? He was speaking in a loud tone.
2139. Do you call a loud tone a manner—was it the tone of his voice that you call manner? His general bearing.
2140. Was he within your observation—could you see him? Yes, I could see him.
2141. And you say you could not hear distinctly what he said? I could not hear distinctly what he said, owing to the noise of the work going on in the room at the time.
2142. Then it was his manner, as presented to your view from a distance, I presume? Not from any great distance; I was within two or three yards of him.
2143. Did you not say he spoke in a high voice? Yes.
2144. If you were within two or three yards, and he spoke in a high voice, how was it you could not hear what he said? I went away, so that I should not be present.
2145. Then how can you speak of his manner? I saw him when he first went there. This occurred on several occasions.
2146. Can you point out any particular case of insubordinate language on the part of Mr. Mason? Not to myself.

2147. Did you hear him use insolent language to any one else? I have heard him speaking in an insolent manner to the Superintendent; I cannot repeat the words.

Mr. W.
D'Arrietta.

2148. If you cannot repeat the words, how do you acquire the knowledge that his manner was insolent? The pitch of his voice.

29 Mar., 1871.

2149. Your supposition that his manner was insolent was derived from the high tone he used in speaking? Yes, and the fact that I was told so by the Superintendent.

2150. I am not speaking of what you were told; you said you could not hear what he said—I want to know what you could see? I could hear the pitch of his voice and see the manner in which he addressed Mr. Potter.

2151. Mr. Samuel.] Mr. Mason was under you occasionally—you have a knowledge of the man? Yes, of course I have.

2152. Has he ever set at defiance your orders in any way? Yes, certainly he has; he has put on his coat and walked off, and would not do what I have set him to do.

2153. Captain Onslow.] Before his dismissal? Yes, some time previous.

2154. Since his restoration has he been insolent in any way to you? No, I cannot say he has been insolent to me.

2155. If he had spoken to you in the manner in which he spoke to the Superintendent, would you have complained? Certainly I should.

2156. Do you know whether any complaint has been made to Mr. Richards, or any one in authority, as to Mason's conduct? I am not aware.

2157. Mr. Samuel.] How long is it since he was sent back to the office? I think about six weeks; I am not certain as to the date.

2158. Chairman.] Can you charge your recollection with how many hands were on the supernumerary staff in October last? About fourteen.

2159. And I suppose they continue about the same number now? There are thirteen piece-hands.

2160. The number has not varied? Not a great deal. Before leaving the Committee I desire to refute one statement that has been made by a Mr. Taylor, to the effect that he has seen me receiving money belonging to a person named Duffy, and deducting a certain sum from it, and then sending the remainder to his wife. I beg to hand in a statement from Mr. Duffy, certifying that the money was drawn by me and paid over to his wife, without any deduction whatever. (Handed in.)

WEDNESDAY, 5 APRIL, 1871.

Present :—

CAPTAIN ONSLOW, R.N., | MR. SAMUEL,
MR. WINDEYER.

WILLIAM R. PIDDINGTON, ESQ., IN THE CHAIR.

Thomas Richards, Esq., Government Printer, called in and further examined :—

2161. Chairman.] I do not know whether you are aware that the Legislative Assembly have referred to this Committee certain questions which I will read to you. The questions were put apparently on the 22nd February, 1871, and on the 9th March of that year. The first questions were asked by Mr. Greville, on the 22nd February, as follows :—

T. Richards,
Esq.

5 April, 1871.

(2.) Printing for Council of Education :—Mr. Greville asked the Colonial Treasurer, pursuant to Notice No. 2,—

(1.) Has the attention of the Government been drawn to the circumstance that the tender of the Government Printer for printing for the Council of Education was £552 18s. 2d., or 95 per cent. advance on the accepted tender of Messrs. J. Sands & Co., which was for £283 10s. 10d.?

(2.) Is it the intention of the Government to resort more extensively than hitherto to the practice of getting printing for the Public Service done by the tender and contract system, in preference to getting it done at the Government Printing Office?

Mr. Lord answered,—

(1.) The Government Printer never tendered for the Printing for the Council of Education; though in a return recently presented to the Assembly it is erroneously stated that he did. In 1867, immediately after the Council of Education was established, a large quantity of urgent printing was done for it in the Government Printing Office. Mr. Sands' contract is only for a small portion, and commenced in 1870. No comparison of prices can therefore be made without going into the whole matter. The figures quoted in the return in question as the Government Printer's charges are much in excess of the cost of the work—they are in fact incorrect.

(2.) It is not at present intended to extend the contract system for printing; because it is believed that the appliances at the command of the Government Printer enable him to perform work as well and as reasonably as it could be done by tender, if not more so.

Then the other questions were put on the 9th March by Mr. Greville, to the Colonial Treasurer :—

(1.) Printing for the Council of Education :—Mr. Greville asked the Colonial Treasurer, pursuant to Notice No. 1,—

(1.) How came the various items, making a total of £552 18s. 2d., alleged to have been the amount of a tender made by the Government Printer for certain work specified, to be placed in a Return ordered by this Assembly to be printed on the 15th November last?

(2.) By whom were the figures furnished, and upon whose authority?

(3.) What are the particulars of the error which is said to exist in regard to this sum; when was it discovered, and what is the total amount?

(4.) How was the overcharge, admitted by the Government Printer to have been made, adjusted, and when; and, if it was "allowed for in the final settlement with the Council by reductions from other accounts," from what other accounts was the overcharge deducted?

Mr.

T. Richards,
Esq.

5 April, 1871.

Mr. Lord answered,—Questions 1 and 2 are answered by the Secretary to the Council of Education, and 3 and 4 by the Government Printer. They are to the following effect:—

(1.) When tenders were invited for Printing for the Council of Education, a schedule was drawn up showing the rates to be charged by each person tendering. The rates previously charged by the Government Printer were then placed in an additional column, with a view to a comparison of the prices formerly paid and the prices offered in the tenders. The Government Printer did not furnish a tender then, or at any other time.

(2.) The figures were furnished by the Secretary of the Council of Education, from vouchers in the office.

(3.) The figures £552 18s. 2d. represent an estimate on the basis of the rates originally charged by the Government Printer. Their inaccuracy arises from some of these rates being excessive. The overcharge was discovered, perhaps eighteen months or two years ago, but there is no record of the precise date. The actual cost of the work in question was £314 9s. 1d.

(4.) The overcharge was allowed for by writing off the sum of £123 6s. 7d. from the amount to the debit of the Council of Education. The last account was rendered on the 10th September, 1870. The whole amount charged to the Council of Education for work done at the Government Printing Office was paid into the Colonial Treasury, partly by transfers from the Vote for Public Instruction to the Vote for Stores and Stationery, and the Vote for Printing and Bookbinding, respectively, and partly by direct payments to Revenue.

These are the questions referred by the Assembly to this Committee, and if you can throw any light upon them we shall be glad to hear you? I think the answers to the questions as they stand convey nearly all the information I can give.

2162. It seems to me, so far as I can comprehend the first question, that there was a tender, or there was supposed to be a tender, from the Government Printer, for printing for the Council of Education, for the sum of £552 18s. 2d.—Is that correct? No; I never tendered for the work of the Council of Education. It was done for the Council of Education on the order of the Government; and some time after it was done I was instructed to charge it to the Vote for Public Instruction. Consequently we had to go back to endeavour to discover what the cost really was, and in computing it the mistake alluded to in the answers given by Mr. Lord was made in that particular portion of the work which was subsequently put out to tender, and which Mr. Sands contracted for.

2165. I wish to ascertain, if I can, what was the work that you proposed to charge £552 18s. 2d. for, as compared with the work that Sands & Co. executed or tendered for, for £283 10s. 10d., and the actual cost of which appears to have been £314 9s. 1d. I want, if I can, to ascertain whether the sum of £552 18s. 2d. represents certain work done by the Government Printer for the Council of Education, which is said to be an advance on Sands & Co.'s tender, which tender amounted to £283 10s. 10d.? I have no doubt that the sum of £552 18s. 2d. represents the charge for it, although I do not recognize that particular amount in any accounts that I furnished. I have no doubt that, computed upon the rates furnished by me, it is correct. But it is only for a portion of the work that was done for the Council at the time.

2166. In Mr. Greville's first question he speaks of the tender of Messrs. Sands & Co., for £283 10s. 10d.—Is that for work of a similar description to the work you speak of as having been performed for the Council? That I cannot say. I cannot say what description of work Mr. Sands tendered for, because I have not seen the specification nor the samples upon which he tendered. It was for a number of books, and I think they bear the same titles as those we printed.

2167. Then you are not in a position to furnish the Committee with any information that will enable the Committee to form an opinion upon the amount you charged for your work and the sum that Sands & Co. charged for theirs? I cannot furnish any information as to Sands & Co.'s tender or contract; I can only speak of the work that was done in the Government Printing Office.*

2168. Have you read the questions put by Mr. Greville? I have not read them recently; I read them at the time they were put.

2169. Perhaps you will have the goodness to read them now, and refresh your recollection? Yes.

2170. Can you give the Committee any information with reference to what is stated in reply 3 on March 9th? "The figures, £552 18s. 2d., represent an estimate on the basis of the rates originally charged by the Government Printer. Their inaccuracy arises from some of these rates being excessive. * * * The actual cost of the work in question was £314 9s. 1d." Can you give any information as to any inaccuracy which arose? The actual cost of the work to the Government for labour and materials was £314 9s. 1d. —

2171. Are you now speaking of work done by the Government Printer? Yes. Of course a charge of £552 18s. 2d. was rather excessive for work which cost only £314 9s. 1d.

2172. How do you account for that estimate as compared with the actual cost? It was an overcharge.†

* ADDED (on revision):—No fair comparison can be instituted without a practical examination of the work done by both parties; as the prices of paper, bookbinding, and all other materials used, are as various as those of any other business. For instance, if I may contrast small things with great, take the construction of a mile of a railway in two separate localities, and in different years: How would it be possible to estimate the comparative cost, without examination of the materials used, and due regard to the conditions under which the work was performed in each case? The respective charges, without these particulars, would give but a bare idea.

† ADDED (on revision):—I do not in the least desire to shift my responsibility in this matter, but I may be permitted to state that these charges were furnished to the Accountant by the heads of the various mechanical branches. When the accounts were submitted to me for signature I could not, of course, unless I undertook the task of doing the work over again, give them more than a cursory examination. I knew what the charges for similar work had been in former years, under the old Boards of Education, and seeing that ours were very much lower, I passed them.

2175. Have you any estimate, showing how the sum of £552 18s. 2d. was made up? I have got the rates that were charged. I will explain the way in which we charge for work. The only way in which I can reply is by telling you how the charge was made. 5 April, 1871.

2176. How was this sum of £552 18s. 2d. arrived at? I do not know really. It was made up in the office of the Council of Education. It was not in any account furnished by me, so far as I can find. Supposing we made 2,000 books at a certain rate, and they, for the purpose of comparison with this tender, computed the cost of 1,000 books, I have no doubt it would be correct in that way. This paper contains all the items for which Mr. Sands tendered.

2178. And you do not dispute that these calculations were correctly founded on your previous charges? No.

2180. Mr. Windeyer.] Who discovered the overcharge? I discovered it myself—at least my attention was drawn to it by one of the printers in the town, who had been looking at the rates, I suppose, for the purpose of tendering. He mentioned it to me, and I immediately went through the books myself to see how it occurred, and I saw we had overcharged in particular items.

2181. Chairman.] Was this sum of £552 18s. 2d. actually charged to the Council? I have no doubt that amount was charged. I did not furnish a bill to that amount, but I have no doubt it was charged.

2182. Was the amount charged between the two departments—the Printing Office and the Council of Education? Yes.

2183. You say labour and materials only were actually charged for in the sum of £314 9s. 1d.—Is it the habit in your office to charge for anything beyond labour and materials? We have a scale. I may explain that we had never done anything of this kind before; this is the first time we have been called upon to make out an account of the value of the work for other departments. We always kept an account, but in a rough-and-ready way—so much for a page of pica, long primer, brevier, &c. It was owing to that system, I believe, that these overcharges occurred. Since then, whenever a charge has to be made, I take more care to see that it is not excessive.

2184. In cases where you work for departments of the Government, do you charge anything beyond the cost of labour and material? The scale we have fixed includes something more.

2186. I do not ask what you do to satisfy yourself, but what the Government Printing Office charge for what they do for other departments. You say only labour and material was charged for—I want to know whether you are in the habit of charging anything beyond labour and material for any work done for any department of the Government, and, if you do charge anything beyond labour and material, what is the amount you charge? We charge what it costs us —*.

2187. On what basis do you form your calculations of cost? That depends upon the nature of the work.

2188. What I want to ascertain is, whether you charge anything beyond the cost of labour and materials, and, if you do, what is the amount you charge? As a rule, we do not charge public departments for their printing. The only cases are the Brands Registration, printing under the Sheep Diseases and a few other Acts, and, specially, under the Census Act; and in these cases we take particular account of what the expense is, and charge accordingly; but I cannot tell you exactly now what percentage is added to the actual cost.

2189. You say you are not in the habit of charging the Government departments specifically for work done in the Government Printing Office? No; charging a Government department is quite an exceptional case, and commenced with the Council of Education. We have never done so before, or very rarely.

2190. On what ground do you charge 50 per cent. on the cost of labour, to cover incidental expenses? It is merely an arbitrary estimate. It does not matter what our charge is so long as we know the basis of it, for the purpose for which we value.

2191. You do not regard it as of material consequence whether you fix an arbitrary sum for the cost of labour, or whether you do not? This has been done upon a scale; but I do not think it is of any importance for the purpose for which we make these valuations.

2192. Then for what object is the scale framed? Only that I, as the head of the department, may be informed whether the department is earning its money or not. I have a return made whenever I like to call for it.

2193. I want to know what standard you adopt, with a view of ascertaining this desirable information? The charge is calculated at the rate of 1s. per thousand ens, with 50 per cent. added for all other expenses.

2194. That is just the point I want to come to,—on what ground you arbitrarily fix an addition of 50 per cent. on the actual cost of the work? I say it does not matter whether we fix 50, or 40, or 30 per cent., for the purpose we fix it for.

2195. Then why fix it at all? Because there are other expenses connected with printing besides the mere compositors' wages.

* Revised:—With 10 per cent. added.

- T. Richards, Esq. 2196. What are those other expenses to which you allude? Reading, correcting, publishing, correcting authors' proofs, fuel, light, rent, wear and tear of plant, interest of capital, superintendence, and so on.
2197. Is it the practice of the Government Printing Office to do much work that may be called irregular work, or work out of the usual routine of the office? No.*
- 5 April, 1871. 2198. Then this scale of calculation is really of very little use as between the Government Printing Office and the public, who are called upon to pay the expenses of the establishment? It is not intended for the public.
2199. Is it of use in any way whatever as between the Government Printing Office and the public? Yes.
2200. In what way? Any system which is calculated to keep a department up to its work, is, of course, of use to the public, who pay for that department.
2201. In what way does this arbitrary calculation keep the printers up to their work? A calculation of the value of the work I think stimulates the people at the head of the branches to make a good show. I may state that this is not an official system; it is purely my own.
2202. Mr. Samuel. That is the way in which you arrive at the value of the work done? That is the ordinary way in which we arrive at the value of the work done. It is simply for my own information.
2203. Chairman. In what way would you apply the information this calculation gives you with a view to stimulate the work of the compositors in your office? The system I adopt, generally, is to check every person in the place to see that he is doing his duty; and I think when that check is kept over men or over branches it necessarily stimulates them to exertion; those who are not disposed to exert themselves fairly will know there is a check upon them—that of keeping these accounts.
2204. Supposing a compositor does not come up to your standard of industry, would you dismiss him? It is not in my power to dismiss him.
2205. Do I understand you to say you have no power either of dismissing or employing compositors? None whatever.
2206. Then the result of all this calculation would be of no use as regards the interest of the public? Yes, it is.
2207. In what way? By keeping the men up to their work.
2208. I want to ask you how you would apply this system of moral compulsion or control if you have no power of dismissal? In the event of a vacancy falling in, the person next in seniority would naturally expect to get it; but if, upon examination of the average of his earnings, I found he was not up to the mark I would not recommend him; I should go to the next man to see if he had done so, and to the next, and so on; so that I would be sure of getting a man, at all events, reasonably industrious.
2209. You would have to wait till a vacancy arose? It would be better, no doubt, if I had more power.
2210. I am not asking what would be better—Would you have to wait for a vacancy? For that purpose, of course.
2211. You could not apply this stimulus until a vacancy arose? Of course it induces a good deal of emulation amongst the men.
2212. I am asking you a question—Could you or could you not apply this stimulus until a vacancy arose? The stimulus is always existing.
2213. I want to know how it is applied? It is applied practically when a vacancy does fall in.
2214. Now I want to know how, when a vacancy falls in, you apply it? I examine the book to see whether a man is industrious before recommending him for promotion.
2215. How does a vacancy arise? By resignation, dismissal, or death.
2216. Then you have to wait for a death or resignation before you can apply this stimulus you rely upon? No, the stimulus is always going on.
2217. I want to know how it is always going on—in what way is it supposed to effect the object you have in view? The men being aware of this record being kept exert themselves not to fall behind in what they call their averages.
2218. You have used the term average —? I do not adopt the term; I say it does not explain the system.
2219. I want to know now what is your standard of calculating the work of a compositor in your establishment, that is, whether he comes up to your opinion of what he ought to be, or whether he falls short of your opinion of what he ought to be? If a man earns the money he receives I think he is fully up to his work.
2220. No one would dispute that—that is not an answer to my question? The examination is somewhat difficult; the questions are new to me.
2221. Perhaps they are, but in order that the Committee may form an opinion they are questions that ought to be answered, if they can be answered. I want to know on what basis or standard you calculate the work of a man on the establishment of the Government Printing Office, as a compositor, and how it is you form your judgment whether he comes up to your standard, however you arrive at it, or whether he falls short of it? There is a certain rate per thousand paid to men on the piece, and we calculate the earnings of the permanent hands by the same rate.
2222. Mr. Samuel. I suppose you have had some experience of what workmen ought to do? Yes.
2223. And you are guided by your own knowledge? Yes, of course.
2224. Chairman. You spoke of some moral result arising from a rule or practice in the office—What I want to ascertain is, how that result is practically arrived at. What is your standard of comparison in respect of the work performed by a compositor in your office, that would lead you to consider that that individual compositor was doing his duty to the department or not? I am satisfied if he does his best.†
2225. How do you arrive at that opinion? By personal observation, by the reports of overseers, and by this system of checking the work.
2226. With respect to the system of checking the work, what is that system? A calculation of the number of thousand letters a compositor sets up, or an equivalent in other work. Of course the system is

* NOTE (on revision):—It has been stated by Mr. Mason that he discovered two or three columns of the Leisure Hour set up in the Fount-room,—and by Mr. Richard Augustine Taylor, that he saw in course of delivery a whole cartload of books, which had been bound for a Member of the Assembly. Both these statements are untrue. The latter, which amounts to a charge of gross corruption against a Member of Parliament and myself, has not even the semblance of truth.

† ADDED (on revision):—His comparative merit, ascertained by record and observation, would of course strongly influence me in making any recommendation either in his favour or against him.

is applied throughout the office. Allowance is made for the time that compositors are not setting up matter; the value of everything they do is entered in a book. T. Richards, Esq.

2227. Your check is founded upon the number of thousand ens a compositor composes? Yes, on the piece prices. 5 April, 1871.

2228. The work is paid for at 1s. per thousand ens? Yes, that is the rate at which the piece-hands are paid, and the work of the house-hands is calculated at the same rate. I should like to be able to explain the origin of the system.

2229. That you can do afterwards? It might facilitate the examination.

2230. How many thousand ens do you fix upon as the proper amount of work to be performed by compositors as a day's work? I could not fix that. The compositors in our place are not continuously employed on straight-forward work; they may be changed about from one kind of work to another a dozen or twenty times a day.

2231. Then how is this standard applied—I am at a loss to understand? It is very difficult to explain these technical matters to anybody but a printer; but if you will allow me to explain the origin of the system, I think I shall throw some light upon it.

2232. What is the system you are about to explain? This so-called average system. I may start by saying that a good deal of odium has been cast upon me in reference to it. It has been alleged that I have introduced this system for the purpose of enabling the permanent hands to aggrandize themselves at the expense of the piece-hands. I think the late Honorable Treasurer was almost led to believe that; and Sir James Martin has told me that he also gave some credit to it. The fact of the matter is, that all my predecessors in the office of Government Printer had complete control of the department,—they employed and dismissed the men; but when I was appointed, the Colonial Secretary, Mr. Cowper, stated in the Minute he sent to the Executive Council that these large powers of patronage had been allowed to the Government Printers previously by accident, and that it was no longer necessary to continue them to the future occupant of the office, and therefore he withdrew all that from me, with the exception of the power of dismissing the wages-paid portion of the staff.

2233. Do I understand that all previous Government Printers were allowed to dismiss them as they chose? Yes, all excepting those on salaries, and there were only a few on salaries in those days: the Government Printer himself, the Superintendent, and the Accountant. This was in the year 1859. Of course this change of system made the management very much more difficult for me than it had been for any previous Government Printer. The men, as a rule, were undoubtedly good and industrious men; but, as in all large establishments, there were some idlers, and there is nothing more infectious than idleness. I had not been very long in charge before I discovered that many of the men were not doing their duty —

2234. Captain Onslow. May I ask how long after you took office you discovered that? I commenced the checking system in 1861; I was appointed in 1859; and it was wholly and solely for the purpose of counteracting the evil I have spoken of that this system of keeping an account of the men's earnings was established by me. It has been continued as well as I could do it ever since. There are some breaks in it. I was assured by the overseers, shortly after it was introduced, that it had had a wonderfully good effect,—that those who were very much disposed to spend a portion of their time in the yard, or unnecessarily in other branches of the establishment to which their business led them, attended to their work more assiduously afterwards. The system is not confined to compositors; every branch in the office is checked in the same way, as well as it can be done.

2235. Overseers and all? The overseers are the checking officers. I do not say it is a perfect check, or that it will reveal an accurate statement of the men's work; that would be almost impossible to arrive at without further expense. They never see it themselves; they only know it is kept against them. I was not instructed to do it; I did it for the purpose I have stated, and because I believed it was my duty to make the department as active and effective as possible. The necessity for doing anything of the kind of course does not arise in a private office, because there the master can deal with a man who idles in a summary way; that is his check. I am in the position of a Government Officer who has to find employment for a great number of men and keep them employed, without the power of dispensing with any I may think not up to the mark, or even unnecessary.

2236. Chairman. Is that the whole of your explanation? That is the story of the origin of this system of checking the men's work. I may mention further that, when I introduced it, it was very odious to some of the men to whom it applied; and, as far as I am concerned, I should not object to its being dispensed with, and nobody would be more glad than the men themselves—those at least who do not like a check upon them. Of course I deny that it has been used for the purpose alleged of advancing one man's interest, or one class of men's interest, against another.

2238. In what way is this proposed system of average brought to bear practically upon the men, if you have not the power of discharging them? The men naturally desire to keep up to the mark when they know they are being checked. If I found a man was really unworthy altogether, by reason of his failure to do a proper amount of work, I should bring his conduct under the notice of the Minister, and he probably would be dismissed upon my report.

2239. Is it your practice, where the men are not influenced by proper motives, to bring their conduct under the consideration of the Minister of your department? I have done so only, I think, in two cases. Two men were disgraced because of their failing to keep up a fair average.

2240. What is the nature of this average—I believe you keep a book called the average book? The term was not used by me. I believe it is known by the name of the average book.

2241. How is this average made up? In the usual way that averages are made up.

2242. I want to know in what way this particular average is made up by you or by somebody who keeps this book? If a man works so many days in a month, and each day's earnings are added up and divided by the number of days, you thus get the daily average.

T. Richards, Esq. 2243. I want to know in what way you form an average of each day's earnings? In the best way we can. If the man is composing we count so many thousand ens; but he may be shifted frequently from one kind of work to another, and it may be difficult to keep an account.*

6 April, 1871. 2244. Have you had any experience of the practice of large printing offices, exclusive of the Government Printing Office? I am perfectly conversant with the management of every description of printing office.†

2245. From your knowledge of the management of every description of office, are you aware that this system of average prevails in any other large printing office? I do not believe it does: I believe it is an improvement peculiar to the Government Printing Office—a great improvement on the conduct of printing offices situated as the Government Printing Office is situated.

2246. I am asking whether you are acquainted with the practice of printing offices generally, and you say that you are—Now I again ask you whether this practice is known in printing offices generally? They have an equivalent for it. In a newspaper office there is no necessity to keep an average, because the men are paid exactly for what they do, and the nature of the work is totally different. In a jobbing office the master has an equivalent in the power he has of dealing with a man who fails to come up to his idea of what he ought to do. If I had the power of dismissing the men, I should at once discontinue to keep this record of their work.‡

2247. Do you consider that the working of the printing office would be more efficient if you had the power of dismissing and engaging men? I do not attach much importance to the power of engaging them. Leaving the power of dismissal in the hands of the Government Printer I think was very wise, as far as the wages-paid portion of the hands was concerned.§

2248. Would it not be also desirable that the Government Printer should have the power of dismissing all compositors, whether distinguished by being paid by wages or in any other way? Of course it would be impossible to give the Government Printer the power of dismissing anybody appointed by the Governor and Executive Council.||

2249. Are the compositors appointed by the Governor and Executive Council? A great many of them are.

2250. Supposing the compositors engaged in the Government Printing Office were appointed on the authority of the Government Printer, and he had the power of dismissing them, would that give him a control equal to what exists in private establishments? Undoubtedly.

2251. If you had that power, would you continue this system of average? I do not think I would. I might do it on the ground that I might be charged with partiality in dealing with the men; but what induced me to commence it was the absence of that power of dealing with the men. (Book referred to as the Average Book produced.)

2252. I think you cannot explain how the average is made up exactly, but you say it is made up in the best way you can? There is great difficulty in keeping the account when the men are shifted about from one kind of work to another, as they must be in the Government Printing Office; but the overseers keep it as accurately as they can.

2253. Do you think this system can be relied upon as an absolute proof of the work the men do? No, I do not. I have had to keep it with such help as I could get. For instance, when first kept it was kept by a gentleman who was incapacitated from doing any other duty. I would not rely upon it even now as an infallible record, but it is perfectly reliable for comparison of the ability of the various workmen.

2254. You view it as an approximation to what you consider a better system? Yes.

2255. Captain Onslow. Is this average book only for the supernumeraries, or for the establishment hands as well? It is for the persons on the establishment only; the supernumeraries are paid by the piece.

2256. I see (referring to the Average Book) by time it is 1s. 6d. an hour? Yes, the person who gets 1s. 6d. an hour has a corresponding rate of pay. It would not be fair to put a man on time and value his work at a lower rate per hour than we are actually paying him.

2257. Is this for over-time? Time is not over-time; if it is over-time it will be so expressed.

2258. Could any of your overseers or yourself, by looking at that book, determine or ascertain which was the better and which the worse workman? Not by itself; but it would give you a very good idea. I could tell; the book would be a good guide to me, with the knowledge I have of the men myself. The book might show small earnings, but there might be a very strong reason why it is so, and a reason that should not militate against the man's interest. For the use of the Government Printer or his officers the book is of undoubted advantage.

2259. The overseers would be able to understand it? The Superintendent and overseers would. It is never shown to anybody else; it is a book kept for my own use.

2260. You say the workmen are stimulated—Are they allowed to consult this average-book? Never.

2261. Then how are they stimulated? By the knowledge of its being kept.

2262. You say you are in the habit of changing men from one kind of work to another, twenty or thirty times a day—would not that tend to confuse the work? That is an extreme case. If it could be avoided it would be better. The frequent changing about arises in this way:—Supposing it is just at the time the

House

* ADDED (on revision):—The system is this:—When composing, the quantity of composition is cast up and computed; when on time, each man is furnished with a check, with the precise time of beginning filled in by the overseer of the branch. The compositor himself fills in the time of finishing, and immediately hands it to the overseer, who initials and files it, if correct. The system itself is perfectly sound, and might be made perfectly accurate, even to the value of a minute; but to do so would involve additional, and in my opinion, needless, expense.

† ADDED (on revision):—The management of the Letter-press Department forms only a portion of my duties: I have practically two departments. In 1856, the Stamp Department, which then did about a tenth of the business it does now, had a separate head and staff.

‡ NOTE (on revision):—I wish to modify this answer thus:—If I were in the position of a private printer I would not trouble myself to keep a record of the men's earnings; but, on reflection, I am more than ever assured of the propriety of doing so as Government Printer, because, while it enables me to distinguish the man of positive ability from the charlatan, it in a great measure protects me from the proof, if not from the suspicion, of capriciousness and partiality.

§ NOTE (on revision):—I am no advocate for vesting the public patronage in the permanent heads of departments, but I am a stickler for discipline in every grade. As regards dismissals, I admit that if some system were introduced by which fair and full inquiry could be made in each case, the Minister, as a rule, is likely to be the most unprejudiced judge.

|| NOTE (on revision):—The supernumerary hands should be completely under the control of the Government Printer, so that he might take them on in times of pressure, and dispense with them in times of slackness.

House is about to meet, and the Ministers are busy preparing what is generally called their Budget, the Treasurer has a number of measures, the Colonial Secretary has a number of measures, and other Ministers have a number of measures in preparation; perhaps we have all our men engaged upon the work of one department, and the Treasurer sends for me in the course of the day and tells me to have such a thing done by a certain time; then I must remove all the men engaged upon other work, to go on with what the Treasurer desires to have done; and I may have to change them again and again.

T. Richards,
Esq.
5 April, 1871.

2263. As a rule, you keep them to consecutive work if possible? That of course, is a great advantage. What I have mentioned is one of the difficulties we have to contend with in an office like ours. If the work were diffused evenly over the year, instead of coming in in gluts as it does, of course it would make a great difference.

2264. In Appendix 5 you have offered some suggestions for reducing the expense of the Government Printing Office—have you reconsidered it since you last appeared before this Committee, and are you prepared to confirm it? Yes, I am still of the same opinion.

2265. You are still of opinion that £17,000 may be saved for the year? No; for a period corresponding with that which has expired since the introduction of Responsible Government.

2266. What would that be in the year? £17,000, divided by fourteen.

2267. You think your estimate is correct? Yes, it was made out very carefully under my direction; I am certain the amount is not exaggerated.

2268. Are all your readers compositors? No.

2269. Do you think it would be an improvement if they were? I do—most decidedly.

2270. How did they come to be appointed? Two of them were appointed not only without my recommendation but against it; they were appointed at a time when I thought it was not necessary they should be appointed.

2271. Were they not fit to be readers, or not necessary? Nobody is fit for a reader unless he has a technical knowledge of printing.

2272. You do not quite take me—Did you require the number of readers at the time? I did not.

2273. Were they also unfit for their duties? They were when they came, but they are not now.

2274. What are their names, and who appointed them? Mr. Spruson is the name of one of them; he is a well-educated and intelligent gentleman, and is very well qualified now.*

2275. Who appointed them? Mr. Eagar.

2276. Just turn to question 807 and following questions in Mr. Cunningham's examination, as to the wages paid to journeymen bookbinders by him and the wages paid by the Government—Have you any remarks to make? I do not think Mr. Cunningham does any bookbinding properly so called; he may do.

2277. You do not think your journeymen bookbinders are too highly paid? Not the best of them; there are some there who are too highly paid—some effete men.

2278. You mean too old—worn out? Yes.

2279. Have they been long in the service? Very long. There is only one in that position, in the Book-binding Branch, a poor fellow stricken with ill-health.

2280. You see the difference—the Government pay £6 a week,† and Mr. Cunningham pays £2 10s.? I have a bookbinder now who is in receipt of £3 a week, and the recent retrenchment has cut him down to £2 17s., but he will not stay. You cannot get a really good bookbinder under £3 10s. or £4. Of course there is a great difference in the qualifications of men.

2281. Mr. Thrum is overseer in the Bill-room? Yes.

2282. And he oversees one man and a boy? One man and a boy ordinarily,‡ but he oversees an immense quantity of matter—Electoral Lists, Brands Registers, and so on; and when the Bill work is going on he has charge of that particular work, and the same with the Electoral Lists, and other work.

2283. It frequently happens that Bills are not passed—Do you keep them in type if they are likely to be brought forward next Session? Yes, we judge of that. At the end of this Session I shall submit all Bills to the Minister, and ask what shall be kept standing.

2284. I have noticed that the Roads Bill has been introduced two or three times, but not passed; several amendments have been made in Committee, but it seems the Bill is reprinted without any of the amendments made Session after Session—that you have nothing to do with? No. I would make this remark with reference to Mr. Cunningham's statement,—that it is a mistake to suppose that employing cheap labour, or underpaying good labour, conduces to economy.

2285. You will see, at question 1320, Mr. Banks's evidence, that a number of men were suspended or dismissed some time ago, and you see that a note on revision says that the permanent staff had to go back at night, at 1s. 6d. and 2s. an hour, to perform work for which the supernumeraries were paid 1s. 3d.? That is simply untrue.

2286. There has been something said about the Volunteers in the Printing Office—have you heard that any of their land-orders have fallen into the hands of the overseers? I did hear it, and I made inquiry about it, and it was contradicted. It was said that Mr. D'Arrietta bought one or two, and I questioned him about it, and he denied it; the parties who it was said had sold to him denied it also.

2287. Are the apprentices under indentures? A great number are; not all.

2288. Why is there any difference? I do not venture to indenture an apprentice until I am quite satisfied he is suitable; therefore they go on for two or three years, and some even serve the whole of their time and receive indentures at the end of it.§

2289.

* NOTE (on revision) :—It is only just to Mr. Spruson to say, that his high educational qualifications and great industry have enabled him to make up for every deficiency in regard to printing specialities. I mention his case not in a carping spirit, but in defence of myself against the criticisms of some of the witnesses. As a rule, I think the position of reader should be regarded as a step in promotion for the intelligent compositor.

† NOTE (on revision) :—The overseer of the Bookbinding Branch receives £285 a year. The highest rate paid to bookbinders now is £190 a year.

‡ NOTE (on revision) :—The boy referred to is over twenty-one years of age. The fact of two hands only being constantly kept in the Bill Room under Mr. Thrum, is to be attributed to the confidential responsibility that attaches to this branch; it does not convey any idea of Mr. Thrum's position, who often has thirty or forty hands under him for weeks at a time. Moreover, Mr. Thrum is a working overseer, who, in addition to having charge of the room, when not otherwise engaged, works at his frame as a compositor.

§ NOTE (on revision) :—I may mention that a system of competitive examinations for apprenticeship, and of apprentices for promotion to the higher branches, has been in operation for about two years past with great advantage.

- T. Richards, Esq. 2289. You would not give them indentures unless you saw they were worth it? No.*
2290. You have read Mr. Mason's evidence? Yes.
2291. Mr. Mason was dismissed on your recommendation? Yes.
- 5 April, 1871. 2292. He has since been reinstated? Yes.
2293. By whom? By the Government.
2294. And Executive Council? Not by the Executive Council—by the Treasurer; he has gone back to his old position.
2295. Mr. D'Arrietta, I think, states that he has been insolent. Has any complaint been made to you, since his reinstatement, of his having shown insolence? Yes, verbal complaints have been made.
2296. Have you reported that? No. Mr. Potter complained two or three times to me of Mr. Mason's conduct to him, and I requested him to put the case in writing, because I make it a rule not to take action in any complaint not in writing, unless the occurrence comes under my own observation. He requested that I would not press him to do so, as he did not want to have any more rows.†
2297. Mr. Mason states that he has known one man to get a take of four lines, while he has gone up behind him and got a take of sixty lines, showing that there is no management at all? It is possible, but I think he exaggerates when he says sixty lines. But it is easy to explain. Persons accustomed to newspaper work get it in even takes because the writers and reporters adopt a uniform size of paper for their MSS.; but in our case there may be a notice of motion of four lines, or there may be a long notice of motion written on both sides so that it cannot be cut. One, therefore, might get four lines and another sixty, because you cannot divide the sixty. It is owing to the character of the MSS. that comes from the House, which, as every Member must know, is very irregular as printers' copy.‡
2298. You will see at question 1027, it is stated that in answer to an application from Mr. Baigent you said, "It is not the intention of the Government Printer at any time to put forward any of the supernumerary staff to the permanent staff"? I have here an exact copy of the minute I wrote upon that occasion. Mr. Mason's statement bears no resemblance at all to the reply I gave—not the slightest. I will read the reply I gave to Mr. Baigent, and I will beg the Committee to compare it with Mr. Mason's extract from the note-book he was accustomed to keep. Mr. Baigent, when he first came to the office, requested me to take him on as an improver; he had been working somewhere in town, and he said the work had not given him opportunity to perfect himself. I was unwilling to increase the staff, and I made it a condition that when he had finished his term as an improver he should have no claim for permanent employment. He however went on to the supernumerary staff, and when the vacancy fell in he made application for the appointment. My minute was as follows:—"When Mr. Baigent first joined the office it was in the capacity of a turnover apprentice, and with the distinct understanding that he would have no claim for employment as a journeyman on the permanent staff after completion of his indentures. It is quite true that about two years ago I promised Mr. Baigent that he should be the first of the supernumerary hands to be transferred to the permanent staff. Since then, however, the piece system has been introduced, and I have no present intention of recommending any addition to the number of compositors on the fixed establishment." Now that is a very different minute to that which Mr. Mason attributes to me, and which he extracted from his note-book.
2300. Do you think these men would exchange positions with the supernumerary staff? There is not sufficient work for the supernumerary staff; but if they could get sufficient work, I do not think it would be to their advantage to go on the establishment.§
2301. You are a Major of Volunteers? Yes.
2302. Are any privileges allowed to men in the Printing Office who volunteer? Yes.
2303. Will you state what they are? The only privilege allowed is, that they are permitted to go away, in slack times, on Monday afternoons, at 4 o'clock, to rifle practice, instead of leaving at 6 o'clock.
2304. Every Monday afternoon? Yes.
2305. And they lose nothing? No.
2306. Do you know if there are any other Government Offices where a similar privilege is allowed? In all other Government Offices they leave at 4. I started with the principle of making the men make up the time; but the Minister objected to it, and told me the Government recognized no difference between wages-paid people and people on salaries.||
2307. Do you know whether it is the case in other Colonies? It was so when I was in Melbourne, on a visit.
2308. How many men in the Government Printing Office have joined the Volunteers? I could not say exactly, but I should think there are fifteen or sixteen belonging to various Companies.
2309. All of these go out once a week? Not once a week throughout the year, but on special occasions; for instance, when the Rifle Matches are coming on. The Government give three days for these matches; and the men appeal to me, saying that they give a good deal of their own time to volunteering, and they would be at a great disadvantage as compared with other competitors unless allowed some time for preparatory practice.

* NOTE (on revision) :—I have known boys, though well conducted before, fall into a state of mischievous indolence soon after being indentured, in the belief, I suppose, that their indentures gave them a fixity which could not be disturbed without a great deal of trouble.

† NOTE (on revision) :—Mr. Potter's complaint was, that Mr. Mason was constantly endeavouring to intimidate him in reference to this Committee.

‡ NOTE (on revision) :—Economy to a very considerable extent might be effected by having a regulation respecting Returns which are presented to the House and printed. In England, the authorities have directed that the MSS. of all matter intended for printing shall be written on one side of the paper, and it is said that the alteration is the means of saving thousands of pounds per annum. There is no doubt that the form in which MS. is prepared is of great importance to the printer. I have known instances where it has actually been recopied with advantage before putting it into the hands of the compositors.

§ NOTE (on revision) :—The piece system was introduced in January, 1867, upon my recommendation. It has been very effective in keeping down the expense of the department.

|| NOTE (on revision) :—This was on the occasion of the first International Cricket Match. I was denounced in the public Press for objecting to close the office, unconditionally, for three whole days, at a time when the office was teeming with work, and was rebuked by the Minister as well.

T. Richards,
Esq.

5 April, 1871.

2310. You state that they get out at 4: was it ever at 3? Occasionally at 3.

2311. In this Average Book, I see the earnings of a man named O'Loughlin set down as follows:—For January, £10 19s. 6d.; for February, £11 4s.; for March, £10 13s.; while the earnings of the next man, Mr. M'Kern, are—for January, £20 16s.; for February, £18 16s. 6d.; for March, £19 12s. 6d.; being very nearly double O'Loughlin's—Are they paid the same? Mr. M'Kern gets more than Mr. O'Loughlin; the former receives 10s. a day, the latter 8s.

2312. How do you account for the difference in their work? That is a very common thing. The difference between the capabilities of compositors is astonishing. Mr. M'Kern happens to be an exceptionally industrious hand—there are very few like him; it is however possible that during these three months he may have had more favourable copy than O'Loughlin. There is no doubt he is a more advanced workman than O'Loughlin. It is by no means uncommon for one man to be much better than another in point of speed, but speed only does not make the really good compositor.

2313. Mr. Samuel. Before Mr. Mason was returned to the Government Printing Office, were you consulted? Yes.

2314. Who spoke to you? Mr. Lord, the Treasurer.

2315. What was the result? I objected most strongly to Mr. Mason's restoration, but Mr. Lord said he had inquired into it—I think he said he had consulted the Chairman of this Committee—and he had come to the conclusion that Mr. Mason had been wrongfully dismissed, and the Government would reinstate him. I then said that I had resisted as long as I could, but that if Mr. Mason came back I should receive him as if he were an utter stranger to me.

2316. Were you asked what were your objections to having him back? I stated them.

2317. At the time you recommended Mr. Mason's removal from the Office to me, was he guilty of any acts of insubordination? Yes.

2318. Will you state what those acts of insubordination were? The particular case of which I complained was brought under my notice by the Superintendent.

2319. Captain Onslow. Did you give the rates of wages of these men I asked you about—I think you must have made a mistake; the rates of wages are the same? They have been altered since the date of the return you are referring to—Mr. M'Kern has recently been promoted. The book shows the earnings for the first three months of this year.

2320. The reference to the book was; but they are down at the same rate of wages, 8s.? Mr. M'Kern was appointed in December last at £150; Mr. O'Loughlin is now at 7s. 6d. a day.

2321. Mr. Samuel. I was asking about the acts of insubordination charged against Mr. Mason? I will read the minutes that passed on the occasion. (Read and handed in. Vide Appendix E.) This complaint was made, I may state, two days before Mr. Wilson gave notice of certain questions in reference to the alleged suspension of the supernumerary hands, and my minute refers to these questions.

2322. Were these papers brought under the notice of the present Treasurer? I brought them under his notice myself.

2323. And in spite of your protest to the contrary, Mr. Mason was sent back? Yes.

2324. With regard to this Average Book; this, you say, is kept entirely for your own guidance? Quite so.

2325. With a view to ascertain the efficiency of the men employed? Yes, and to keep a check upon them.

2326. If you found a man really inefficient and not doing his work properly, would you consider it your duty to recommend his removal or his being disgraced? I would recommend his being put upon the piece; that is the first step.

2327. Have you ever acted in that way? Yes, in two cases; those of a man named Nolan and a man named Jones.

2328. Captain Onslow. Was that the Mr. Jones who gave evidence here? No, a different person.

2329. Mr. Samuel. Was your recommendation acted upon? Yes.

2330. Then, in fact, you have adopted this plan to guide you in ascertaining whether the men were doing their work properly? Quite so.

2331. They know that you keep this check? They do.

2332. And you think the knowledge of that fact stimulates them to work? Yes. After I introduced it the overseers informed me that they believed it made £500 a year difference.

2333. In fact, the knowledge by the men that there is a check upon them induces them to work more efficiently than if there was no check? Yes. I may say that some of them do not like the check.

2334. Chairman. With reference to your minute with regard to the alleged insubordination on the part of Mr. Mason and Mr. Banks, were either of these men guilty of insubordinate conduct towards yourself? Yes.

2335. What was the nature of it? In this case of the "pie," Mr. Mason appealed to me with reference to the dispute between himself and Mr. D'Arrietta. I said to Mr. Mason—"Do not wrangle with the overseer; put in the pie, and include the charge in your bill. If it is right you should be paid for it, you shall be paid; if it is not right you should be paid for it, you shall not be paid." Mr. Mason went away and did not return immediately; he did not in fact come to me for a week; I thought he was going on with his work. When he came again he told me the same story over again about the "pie," and I then called Mr. Potter and asked him to make a formal inquiry into the matter, and the result was that we came to the conclusion that Mr. D'Arrietta was quite right and Mr. Mason wrong. However, a Member of Parliament called upon me in reference to the case, and I explained to him that there was no intention of injuring Mr. Mason,—that I simply desired that he should obey the overseer's orders and not quarrel with him. After this, Mr. Mason informed me that he had been round and had seen yourself, Mr. Windeyer, Sir James Martin, and Mr. Parkes, and they all advised him not to put in the pie,* and he did not care a button whether I dismissed him or not,—that he was assured his position was as safe as my own,—that if I dismissed him to-day he would come back to-morrow, and in a better position. That statement rather startled me, and I thought it my duty to take action in the matter; but as I had just before passed my word to the gentleman who had called upon me, I advised Mr. Mason to go on quietly with his work and not to quarrel with the overseers.

2336. Did Mr. Banks commit any act of insubordination to yourself? His manner was very offensive, but his only overt act was that mentioned in my minute, except after the complaint was made. He came to my office, and he has given a version of what took place, not one word of which is true.

* NOTE (on revision):—I quote Mr. Mason's words. I do not, nor ever did, believe him.

- T. Richards, Esq. 2337. Was Mr. Banks guilty of insubordination to yourself? Yes; his manner was offensive and insubordinate.
- 5 April, 1871. 2338. Was there anything more than manner,—were any words used? Only the words referred to. I repeated the words to him, and he said,—“I did not say so, but I have no hesitation in saying so now.” That is, that the Government Printership would not be worth a pound after this inquiry was over. I complain of his having said so in office hours before the men more than anything; I doubt whether I would have taken much notice of it otherwise.
2339. Have you any proof? Yes, Mr. Potter proved this before he made the complaint. It was quite proved.
2340. Captain Onslow.] There was a new Tariff drawn up in 1866—Were any of the supernumerary hands dismissed then? No supernumerary hand was ever employed on what we call confidential work. The precautions we take are not in consequence of any suspicion of the men themselves, but rather that they should be protected.
2341. Do you think a more efficient check could be maintained or established than this system of average? I do not know of any.
2342. It is the best you can devise? Yes.
2343. May I ask who makes up the average? A person called the computer.
2344. The same man always? If possible, the same man always.
2345. Do you think Mr. Mason's reappointment likely in any way to prejudice your authority? I do not think it will much. It is bad, of course, to have a man who has insubordinate tendencies.
2346. Mr. Samuel.] Do you not think it is calculated to impair the efficiency of a department, if the employés are sent back after you have once recommended their dismissal? I do, unless it is done as an act of grace.
2347. Was this done as an act of grace? Scarcely, I think.
2348. Is it not calculated in some way to affect your authority in the department? It is reasonable to suppose it would. It is certain that Mr. Mason's conduct has kept the department in an unhealthy state of excitement.
2349. Captain Onslow.] I suppose all the employés have read this evidence? I think not; if they have done so they have done it surreptitiously.
2350. I see in a “note on revision” to question 97, Mr. Mason states that you were in the habit of going through the office only once a week? It is quite untrue.*
2351. Is there any truth in the statement that you gave leave to assist in municipal elections in favour of one person? That bears falsehood on the face of it. How is it possible for Mr. Mason to know what transpired between Mr. Bell and myself?

* NOTE (on revision):—At the time of Mr. Mason's quarrel about the pie, I was, by permission of the Minister, relieved from the ordinary routine of duty, in consequence of ill health induced by a very sad accident in my family. If Mr. Mason's statement has reference to any other period it is ridiculously false.

Year.	Expenditure of Department.	Revenue of Department.	REMARKS. In this column is shown the Branches added to the Establishment, and also the new Departments or Services for which work has been executed.

1870	{ To 30 June 9,457 }	Estimated at 3,500	Hunter River Floods Commission. Law Reform Commission. Gold Fields Inquiry Commission. Preparatory Printing for Census, 1871.

The principal causes of the progressive increase in the expense of the Department, as shown above, are as follows :—(1.) The tacking on to it of additional Branches. (2.) The printing required for the new Departments created from time to time. (3.) The constantly augmenting business of the Country—such as the establishment of new Post Offices, Benches of Magistrates, Land Agencies, Police Stations, &c., and Railway and Telegraph Extensions. (4.) Government Gazette,—increase in bulk and number of copies printed for distribution. (5.) New Forms, &c. arising out of Legislation,—for instance, the Brands Act, Real Property Act, Audit Act, &c. In fact every Act of Parliament involving administrative changes is productive of fresh printing; and though the Establishment is growing yearly, its expense is not increasing relatively to the additional work performed.

It will be seen that the Revenue Collections in 1869 amounted to more than three times those of 1856.

SUGGESTIONS by the Government Printer, for reducing Expense of Parliamentary Printing.

In offering suggestions for reducing the expense of the Parliamentary Printing, I would point out that the great bulk of it is compulsory, inasmuch as it is rendered necessary either by force of law, or by Parliamentary custom.

The first class of papers to which this remark applies consists of those presented to Parliament by Command of His Excellency the Governor; of those laid on the Table by Ministers—such as Estimates, Ways and Means, Bills, &c., and the papers relating thereto; and of the Annual Papers printed for the information of Members of Parliament and the public—such as the Statistical Register, the Blue Book, the Registrar General's Report on Vital Statistics, &c. It would not, I conceive, be deemed advisable to stop or limit the publication of any of these.

The second class consists of the numerous papers arising out of the Business of the House—such as Reports of the Standing Orders and Library Committees, and of the Committee of Elections and Qualifications; the Votes and Proceedings; Reports of Divisions in Committee of the Whole; Indexes, Sessional Abstracts, &c.; Proof Papers for early distribution; Circulars and Forms for use in the Parliamentary Departments; and Bookbinding for the Parliamentary Offices and Library.

The third class consists of those printed at the instance of Members generally, namely, Returns to Addresses and Orders, Reports and Evidence of Select Committees, Petitions, &c. This is the only class that is generally regarded as capable of limitation; but practically it would scarcely admit of any, since it is very improbable that the House would restrict Members in the privilege now enjoyed by them of obtaining leave for the printing of such papers as they may deem requisite, with a view to obtaining redress of grievances, or of throwing light upon any subject under consideration, or upon the action of the Government.

As these three classes of papers embrace almost the whole of the Parliamentary Printing, it would appear that there is not a very wide field for reduction.

A suggestion has frequently been made that there should be a Printing Committee; and it is possible that such a body might be able to effect some reduction by preventing the re-publication of information already extant, and in other ways. Another suggestion commonly made is, that Abstracts only of papers might be printed; but in all probability the preparation of these Abstracts would cost more than the printing of the matter in extenso.

These are all matters, however, for the consideration of Honorable Members themselves; it is more immediately my province to suggest such alterations in the mode of conducting the printing, as may lead to further condensation of the "matter" and to economy in labour and material. To these subjects accordingly I have directed my particular attention, and as the result I beg to submit the following proposals:—

1.—VOTES AND PROCEEDINGS OF THE ASSEMBLY, AND MINUTES OF THE COUNCIL.

Omitting Notice Paper in copies for binding, but including it in the "Proofs" and "Revises" for daily use. At present, Notices of Motion are repeated in the "final print" until disposed of; this causes an unnecessary consumption of paper, and enlargement of the Sessional volumes. The proposed alteration would assimilate the practice here to that of the English Parliament.

A paper showing "Notices of Motion undischarged at the termination of the Session" might be published, so as to make the record complete.

2.—PETITIONS.

Printing Petitions continuously, instead of separately, for sessional volumes. The effect of this would be that, instead of each Petition occupying two or more pages of paper, five or six might be got into the same space, thus saving paper, labour, and binding.

3.—WEEKLY ABSTRACT, AND GENERAL SUMMARY OF PETITIONS.

Issuing Abstracts of Petitions received with the proof papers only, dispensing with the "General Summary," and printing a Summary of Petitions received but not printed.

4.—SESSIONAL VOLUMES.

By the foregoing alterations the bulk, and consequently the expense of binding sessional volumes would be greatly reduced. (See Estimate below.)

5.—BILLS.

Printing Bills "close" instead of "open" or "clumped." The spaces or clumps inserted between the lines of Bills were introduced, I believe, in consequence of the hand-writing of a gentleman who formerly held the position of Clerk of the Assembly being unusually large. As a proof that these spaces are not absolutely necessary, it may be mentioned that they are not used in England, or in any of the other Colonies; and even here, Bills which have passed through one House are sent to the other House in a solid form, and no inconvenience appears to result from it.

6.—STORING PARLIAMENTARY PAPERS.

Having only one place for storing Parliamentary Papers; and reducing the number of copies printed, except in special cases. At present Papers are stored both in the Parliamentary Offices, and at the Government Printing Office. By having only one dépôt, the number of almost every document might be reduced by at least 25 per cent., and a great saving of presswork, paper, &c., effected.

7.—LATER DELIVERY OF PROOF PAPERS.

Delivering the "Proof Papers" at say 10 a.m. instead of 8 a.m. In order to insure delivery of the Proof Papers at so early an hour as 8 a.m., it is necessary to employ a Night Staff, at a cost of not less than £500 a year. By having the delivery later as suggested, the Ordinary Staff could do the work in the morning, and thus save nearly the whole of this expense.

8.—CERTAIN ANNUAL PAPERS.

There are three papers printed annually, viz., "The Blue Book," "The Statistical Register," and "Abstracts of the Public Accounts of the Colony," the matter of which is permanently available to such an extent that, if the type were kept standing, a saving might be effected in the composition, of about 80 per cent. on the Blue Book, 50 per cent. on the Statistical Register, and 40 per cent. on the Abstracts of the Public Accounts.

The following is an Estimate of the effect of these proposed alterations during a period equal to that which has expired since the introduction of Responsible Government:—

Rumours having reached me of certain statements being made to the effect that you are in the habit of lending money "at interest" to your subordinates, and that the term "usurer" has been applied to you,—I have deemed it my duty to clear you from what I believe to be a "gross calumny," affecting not only yourself but those who come immediately under your supervision.

With this in view, I beg to forward you the accompanying paper, which is signed by every one, without exception, to whom the accusation could possibly refer, and which will prove such statements to be as utterly without foundation as many others made by the same individuals.

DISMISSAL OF MESSRS. BANKS AND MASON.

Improper conduct of some of the supernumerary hands—Superintendent's report.

I FEEL it my duty to draw your attention to the following circumstances:—I was informed by Mr. Bloomfield that Mr. Banks, one of the supernumerary compositors, made use of language in the composing-room, on the 8th instant, in the hearing of Mr. Drewe, which, if not insubordinate, is at least very disrespectful. The words were "That after this Inquiry he would not give £1 for the Government Printership." Mr. Drewe has to me confirmed Mr. Bloomfield's statement.

I was also informed by Mr. McCarthy, the proof-puller, that when he left the office for tea last night he was hooted at by some of the supernumerary hands who were congregated in the street near the office.

Since the appointment of the Select Committee to inquire into the working of the office, some among the supernumerary hands—I have been told—have shown a disposition to be insubordinate, and have become somewhat offensive in their bearing towards the overseers, and to many of the journeymen on the permanent staff. Mason and Banks have been most prominent in this respect.

As such conduct is likely to affect injuriously the good order of the office, I think it right you should be informed of it. The Government Printer.

C.P., 19 Oct., 1870.

Questions asked by Mr. Wilson in the Legislative Assembly, on 21st October, 1870, with Replies to same, furnished by the Government Printer to the Honorable the Treasurer.

- (1.) Government Printing Office Supernumerary Staff:—Mr. Wilson asked the Colonial Treasurer, pursuant to Notice, No. 1,—
- (1.) Is it a fact that the Government Printer has suspended fourteen men, being the whole of the Supernumerary Staff of the Office, for a week, without any notice?
 - (2.) Is there any precedent for such a proceeding?
 - (3.) In the absence of such Staff, who print the Votes and Proceedings of this House?
 - (4.) Will those so employed be paid on piece, or time work; if time, how much per hour?
 - (5.) What was the price per hour paid to the Supernumerary Staff?
 - (6.) Will the House hands so employed work on the following day?

Replies:—

- (1.) It is not the fact.
- (2.) There was no suspension. It would not be necessary, under any circumstances, to suspend Supernumerary hands, as their engagement is from day to day. There were, however, special reasons why some of these hands should not be employed during the present week. There are numerous precedents for the course taken.
- (3.) The Establishment hands.
- (4.) By overtime—Two-thirds of the number at 1s. per hour; one-third at 1s. 6d.
- (5.) 1s. 3d. per hour for ordinary time; for overtime they would be entitled to the highest rate.
- (6.) Yes.

Memorandum by Government Printer.

ALTHOUGH I have answered these questions briefly but strictly in accordance with facts, there are certain circumstances connected with the case which I deem it necessary to explain, and others which I have to report for the information of the Honorable the Treasurer.

The supernumerary or "grass" hands are not employed continuously, but only from day to day for occasional work, as their title implies. Such persons are attached to all large printing offices. They may be called upon any day in case of emergency and perhaps not be required again for a fortnight. This is a thing which has actually occurred here very frequently, and which has never before been objected to by any one.

On this particular occasion, however, there was a special reason why the supernumerary staff should not have been called upon.

Since the appointment of the Committee to inquire into the working of this department, the supernumerary staff (or a considerable number of them) have shown a highly insubordinate spirit towards the officers. In fact, they have formed themselves into a cabal under the ringleadership of two of their number—Messrs. Mason and Banks. These two men have been heard to express themselves in the most offensive and insubordinate manner in the office and during the office hours; and they are in the habit (in conjunction with a man named Taylor, who was formerly employed in the department) of waylaying the men on their way to and from work, and endeavouring to intimidate them with reference to the Select Committee.

The misconduct of these men and their partisans culminated on Tuesday last in their congregating in the vicinity of the office and hooting a pressman named McCarthy (formerly one of themselves, but who was recently promoted to the permanent staff), because he was unwilling to join in their cabal.

As the printing of the Financial Papers commenced on Tuesday, and it was necessary to work at night as well as day on them, and they were of the most confidential character, I considered that they could not be entrusted to men who had assumed so hostile an attitude towards the department and its officers and employes, and that it would not be safe to put them in hand even while these men were on the premises. I therefore directed they should be informed they would not be required again till sent for—that in the meantime their work should be done by the house-hands.

Attached hereto is a report by the Superintendent, bearing out what has fallen under my own observation, or come to my knowledge otherwise, in reference to the conduct of these men.

On a view of the whole of the circumstances, I have arrived at the conclusion that the continuance of either Mr. Mason or Mr. Banks in the department would be subversive of all discipline, and I therefore deem it my duty to recommend that they be dismissed.

The Under Secretary for Finance and Trade.

THOS. RICHARDS,
Government Printer,
21 Oct., 1870.

Minute by the Honorable the Treasurer.

HAVING regard to the necessity for proper discipline in this department, and the importance of supporting the authority of the Government Printer in its management, I approve of Messrs. Banks and Mason not being re-employed.—S.S., 24/10/70.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.
NEW SOUTH WALES.

HENRY FITZGERALD.
(PETITION.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be Printed, 19 October, 1870.

To the Honorable the Legislative Assembly of New South Wales, in Parliament assembled.

The Petition of Henry Fitzgerald, formerly Foreman of Works on Cockatoo Island,—

HUMBLY SHOWETH:—

That your Petitioner entered the Public Service, as Foreman of Works on Cockatoo Island, on the 2nd of February, 1854, at (7s.) seven shillings per day, with house, rations, and fuel, with the express understanding that the salary for which he engaged fully entitled him to the benefit of the Act of Council which granted, in May, 1852, a temporary increase of salary to all officers whose pay was from one to three hundred per annum, £100 of an increase.

That your Petitioner was induced to resign his former occupation on the island as Sergeant of Police, and enter the Public Works Department, in order to become entitled to the gold increase which he was promised by Captain Mann, as Engineer-in-Chief, on the day of his appointment, and which he knew every officer in the department to receive, excepting Mr. Kelleher, both those who joined before and after him.

That your Petitioner made several applications, both verbal and written, for the increase he was entitled to, namely, £33 6s. 8d., which was granted by a vote of Parliament but was overruled by some authority and kept from him, and as your Petitioner believes given to another officer in the same department residing on the island, in addition to the "third" he was already in receipt of, and added to his former pay as a standing salary as long as he remained in the department.

That subsequently your Petitioner was informed that the increase of (15d.) fifteen-pence per day was allowed him, but on going to sign the Abstracts found that (5d.) five-pence per day was all that appeared in the column set apart for the gold increase; and being told that the remaining 2s. 3d. was stopped for coal, &c., which your Petitioner was supplied with the same as every other officer at and from the date of his appointment, your Petitioner declined to sign the Abstracts for so small a portion of the increase he was entitled to in common with the other officers of the establishment.

That your Petitioner also complains that out of a salary of £146, voted for him by your Honorable House in 1858, he received only £136 17s. 6d.

That your Petitioner respectfully requested that the head of his department would be pleased to forward a statement of the grievances he laboured under to the Honorable John Robertson, who was then Minister for Lands and Works, but did not succeed in having his request complied with; and that had your Petitioner been given his right of the gold increase, it would have materially improved his superannuation allowance.

That your Petitioner being disconnected with the Government Service by reason of the establishment having been broken up, is now at liberty to make an appeal to your Honorable House, and entertains an humble hope that his long neglected rights may be found of sufficient importance to induce your Honorable House to take his case into notice.

And your Petitioner therefore prays your Honorable House to take the above matter into consideration, and afford him such relief in the premises as to your Honorable House seem fit.

And in duty bound your Petitioner will ever pray, &c.

(PETITION.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be Printed, 19 October, 1870.

To the Honorable the Legislative Assembly of New South Wales, in Parliament assembled.

The Petition of John Kelleher, formerly Foreman of Works on Cockatoo Island,—

HUMBLY SHOWETH :—

That your Petitioner entered the Public Service, as Foreman of Works on Cockatoo Island, on the 27th day of January, 1854, at 7s. per day, with house, rations, and fuel, believing that the salary for which he engaged fully entitled him to the benefit of the Act of Parliament which granted, in May, 1852, a temporary increase to all officers whose salaries were from £100 to £300 per annum, £100 of an increase, and which he knew every officer to receive excepting Mr. Fitzgerald.

That your Petitioner made several applications, both verbal and written, for that portion of the increase to which he considered himself entitled to, namely, £33 6s. 8d. per annum, but was overruled by some authority and kept from him, and, as your Petitioner believes, given to another officer residing on the island, in addition to the third he was already in the receipt of, and which was added to his former pay as a standing salary as long as he remained in the department.

That subsequently your Petitioner was informed that the increase of 15 pence per day was allowed him, but on going to sign the Abstracts found that 5 pence per day was all that appeared in the column set apart for the gold increase; and being told that the remaining $\frac{2}{3}$ was stopped for coal, &c., which your Petitioner was supplied with (the same as every other officer) at and from the date of his appointment, your Petitioner declined to sign the Abstracts for so small a portion of the increase he was entitled to in common with other officers of the establishment.

That your Petitioner also complains that out of a salary of £164, voted for him by your Honorable House in 1858, he received only £154 17s. 6d.

That your Petitioner respectfully requested that the head of his department would be pleased to forward a statement of the grievances he laboured under to the Honorable John Robertson, who was the Minister for Lands and Works, but did not succeed in having his request complied with; and that had your Petitioner been given his right of the gold increase, it would have materially improved his superannuation allowance.

That your Petitioner being disconnected with the Government Service by reason of the establishment having been broken up, is now at liberty to make an appeal to your Honorable House, and entertains an humble hope that his long neglected rights may be found of sufficient importance to induce your Honorable House to take his case into notice. And your Petitioner therefore prays your Honorable House to take the above matter into consideration, and afford him such relief in the premises as your Honorable House deem fit.

And in duty bound your Petitioner will ever pray.

THE SUPERANNUATION FUND COMMISSIONERS TO THE COLONIAL SECRETARY.

30 April, 1866.

SIR,

*See enclosure to
No. 2.

Referring to our letter of the 19th ultimo* in relation to the state and prospects of the Superannuation Fund, we do ourselves the honor to suggest, as a preliminary to the contemplated amendment of the Superannuation Act of 1864, that the services of a professional Actuary should be engaged to ascertain with certainty the amount which will be necessary to provide for the accrued claims of the old Civil Servants prior to the passing of the Act; and also what scale of pensions the present rate of deduction from salaries will permanently secure to the contributor.

2. With the view of assisting the Actuary in the calculations which this inquiry will involve, we further take leave to suggest that circulars should be addressed to the Heads of Departments and other Officers in the Service, requiring them to send in without delay, returns showing the ages and periods of service of themselves and the officers employed under them.

Until this step is taken, we are afraid that the doubts and uncertainty which now surround the question will not be moved.

We have, &c.,

M. FITZPATRICK,
E. O. MORIARTY,
Superannuation Fund Commissioners.

No. 2.

THE SUPERANNUATION FUND COMMISSIONERS TO THE COLONIAL SECRETARY.

24 July, 1867.

SIR,

In our letter of 30th April, 1866, we suggested the expediency of employing a professional Actuary, to report upon the state and prospects of the Superannuation Fund created by the Act of 1864, and of the allowances promised thereunder; and, in your letter of the 29th November, the necessary authority was conveyed to us to adopt that course.

2. The collection of the statistics on which to base any such report, unfortunately and unavoidably involved considerable delay, so much so that it was not until near the close of the year that we were enabled to place proper returns in the hands of Mr. Robert Thomson, the gentleman chosen for this duty; and it is only within the last few days that we have been in possession of his report, and of a supplemental statement, which we deemed it necessary to call for.

3. We hasten to place in your hands this report and supplement, from which it will be at once apparent that the worst apprehensions expressed by us in our letter of the 19th March, 1866, and by the Civil Service generally, in their petition to Parliament, in April, 1865, are more than realized. We are now brought face to face with the facts—(1) That the gratuities alone, granted under the 7th and 10th clauses of the Act, have already practically absorbed the entire parliamentary grant in aid, which, it must be presumed, was regarded at the time as the present value of the accrued claims of the entire Service; (2) That the pensions already granted and claimable will, in all probability, by the close of the current year, exceed the deductions from salaries and pensions; and, (3) That, in the Actuary's report, we are informed that there is a probability that in eighteen months' time the Superannuation Fund will have been entirely exhausted,—a calamity which, as we ventured to state in our letter of March, 1866, we feel assured neither the Government nor the Parliament can regard with complacency.

4. As Commissioners of the Superannuation Fund, our duty in this matter may perhaps be regarded as ending here. But we feel we are, to some extent, in the position of representatives of the entire Civil Service, and we therefore make no apology for urging on the earnest attention of the Government the petition from the Service generally, already alluded to. The prayer of that petition, as regards the all-important matter of funds, was to the effect that the whole deductions from salaries and pensions, at the present maximum rate, should be credited to the General Revenue; and that all pensions or gratuities promised by the Act should be made claims on that Revenue. Whether or not the Government will accept Mr. Thomson's suggestion, and fund these deductions for a number of years, is not perhaps for us to suggest.

5. In the confident hope that the Government and Parliament will grant the prayer of the petition, on this and the other points stated therein, some of which are of great interest (although not of the absorbing importance of the solvency of the Fund), we take leave to enclose a proposed Bill,* which was adopted unanimously at a public meeting of the Civil Service last year; and a copy of which was, at the time, placed in the hands of the Honorable the Premier, by a Committee appointed for that purpose, of which we had the honor to be members.

We have, &c.,

CHRIS. ROLLESTON.
M. FITZPATRICK.
E. O. MORIARTY.

[Enclosure 1 in No. 2.]

Mr. R. Thomson to The Superannuation Fund Commissioners.

Sydney, 1 July, 1867.

Gentlemen,

Pursuant to instructions contained in your letter of Dec. 3, 1866, I have investigated the "State and prospects of the Superannuation Fund," and I have the honor to report as follows:—

2. I received the most voluminous portion of the returns necessary for the purpose before the close of the year; and, in answer to requisitions for additional information, supplementary returns from time to time thereafter—one of the most important only within the last few days.

3. The Superannuation Act of 1864 appears to have been brought into operation on Oct. 1, 1864. The following is an abstract of the Account, from that date to Dec. 31 last:—

RECEIPTS.

Grant from Government	£10,000 0 0
Deductions from salaries, 1864	£2,368 11 8
" " 1865	9,837 16 3
" " 1866	10,415 18 6
	£22,622 6 5
Less refunds, &c., 1865	£1 10 0
" " 1866	5 14 3
	7 14 3
Interest, 1865	599 13 4
" 1866	511 4 7
	1,110 17 11
Less, 1864	127 16 8
	983 1 3
Total Receipts	£33,598 3 5

EXPENDITURE.

Pensions, 1864	£1,203 19 2
" 1865	3,727 13 0
" 1866	7,006 5 5
	11,937 17 7
Allowances:—
Clause 7, 1865	793 6 4
" " 1866	166 13 4
Clause 10, 1864	1,260 0 0
" " 1865	5,073 6 8
" " 1866	2,302 1 8
	9,595 8 0
	21,533 5 7

1866.—Dec. 31.—Total Balance on hand £12,064 17 10

4. The Gratuities (allowances under clauses 7 and 10 of the Act) have thus alone already absorbed within £404 12s. of the amount granted by Government.

5. The Pensions, which at the close of the year 1866 amounted to an annual charge of about £8,000, will in all probability, before the current year is past, exceed the total deductions from both salaries and pensions.

It will be no matter of surprise to find, within eighteen months from this date, that pensions paid and allowances made will have swept away the whole of the above nominal balance (£12,064 17s. 10d.), as well as the greater portion of the amounts received from deductions from both salaries and pensions. Little or no funds will remain available for payment of pensions or allowances under clauses 7 and 10.

6. From this view alone, the vital necessity of immediate and decisive action in order to avert certain and speedy ruin to all retired officers depending on their pensions, as well as to avoid the flagrant injustice of taxing heavily several hundred Government officers for benefits which they can never realize, is rendered apparent.

7. But the utter hopelessness of the case will be seen hereinafter.

8. The main series of returns embodies details regarding the age, length of service, and salaries, of 840 officers.

These I have classified as follows:—

	Number of Officers.	Aggregate Ages.	Aggregate Service. Years.	Amount of Salaries.
Age under 25	113	2,401	371·25	16381·
25 and not 30	101	2,748	510·50	21962·625
30 and not 35	116	3,745	843·	28254·525
35 and not 40	136	5,012	1213·50	42277·775
40 and not 45	110	4,610	970·	33192·775
45 and not 50	100	4,697	1213·	36337·750
50 and not 55	66	3,429	703·	19748·
55 and upwards	98	5,830	1214·50	34622·
	840	32,472	7038·75	232776·450

From

* Copy of a petition to His Excellency the Governor-in-Chief, adopted at a general meeting of the Civil Service in connection with this Bill, and presented to His Excellency towards the latter end of 1866, is also enclosed.

From the foregoing the following averages were derived :—

	Age.	Service.	Salary.
Under 25	21-25	3-285	145.
25 and not 30	27-21	5-055	217-452
30 and not 35	32-28	7-270	243-573
35 and not 40	36-85	8-920	310-866
40 and not 45	41-91	8-820	301-750
45 and not 50	46-97	12-130	363-377
50 and not 55	52	10-650	299-213
55 and upwards	59-50	12-392	353-292

And, as a general average of the whole : age, 39-75 years ; service, 8-565 years ; and salary, £279-315.

9. On December 31st last, there were 22 pensioners on the Fund, the net present values of whose pensions amounted to £70,983. (Schedule A annexed.)

10. At the same date, there were not less than 118 officers whose age and period of service would enable them to become pensioners at any time. The present value of their deferred pensions, after deducting the full value of their contributions to the Fund, amounts to the sum of £199,712. But, besides this, there is a liability in each case to a payment under clause 10 to their representatives, which, at an estimate of 10 per cent., swells this item to the large sum of £219,683. (Annexed Schedule B.)

11. Provision must therefore be made, from some source, for liabilities the aggregate present value of which is not less than £290,000.

12. Assuming that such provision be made, and that therefore, under no circumstances, the deductions from officers' salaries shall be applied to meeting claims arising from services rendered antecedent to the adjustment of the Fund, I come now to the consideration of the sufficiency of the deduction of 4 per cent. to continue permanently to afford the pensions and allowances specified in the Act ; and, after much careful study, I am forced to the opinion that, sooner or later, these will have to be reduced. Although about 4-3 per cent., judging from past analogy, would seem to be about a sufficient deduction, I would not advise its being made less than 5 per cent. Among other reasons, the following has great weight with me : that if the Fund were once placed on a perfectly safe basis, a very appreciable influence will be exercised in making officers who have been from ten to fifteen years in the Service, desire to continue in it ; so that, while the demands on the Fund will be considerably increased, a principal source of profit will be still more reduced. Those, in fact, who will retire from the Service, will be those only who have been but a short time in it, and who, during that period, have enjoyed only small salaries, and from whom, therefore, the Fund has gained small benefit.

13. I am inclined to think that, if the Bill to amend the present Act were framed so that all claims for pensions or allowances which have hitherto arisen, or may arise during the next ten years, should be permanently provided for out of the Consolidated Revenue, and that all deductions from salaries already made, and to be made during the same period, should be funded at 6 per cent., compound interest, without any deduction whatever.* In that case, the solvency of the Fund would be rendered certain.

14. Of course, the amount of such grant in aid would be an annually increasing sum, during these years ; although, distributed in this way, it would not be felt so keenly as if a sum approaching £300,000 were asked for at once.

15. My calculations have been based on the Carlisle mortality table, which, in the absence of reliable colonial statistics, I regard to be the best for the purpose ; and I have assumed money to be worth 6 per cent. interest. The extensive experience of the local Life Assurance Office shows that, among its carefully selected lives, the mortality is considerably less than that of the Carlisle experience. Probably that of the Government Service, as a whole, will prove in like manner to be, although not so much so, likewise somewhat smaller. If so, while the comparatively small demands on the Fund, at death, will be lower than the expectation, the latter ones for pensions will be augmented.

16. Under any circumstances, or whatever means may be taken to secure the solvency of the Fund, I most respectfully urge the great value of keeping its accounts in a perfectly separate form, and according to a proper system, so that not only its position may be ascertained periodically, but that also the Government may gradually become possessed of a mass of statistics of inestimable value.

17. It will afford me pleasure to give any assistance in my power in carrying out the views I have expressed, or in facilitating those of the Commissioners and the Government with reference to the Superannuation Fund.

I have, &c.,
ROBERT THOMSON.

SCHEDULE B.

MEMORANDUM of present values of deferred pensions, exigible according to the terms of the Act, allowing in every instance the full value of the deduction of 4 per cent. in reduction of the vested interest of the officer, but irrespective of the value of the interest of representatives, which may be estimated at about 10 per cent. additional.

N.B.—I did not think it necessary to go through the case of every officer separately who could become a claimant on the Fund at present; but my calculations embrace fifty-three instances, the value of which amounts to about 70 per cent. of the total value of this liability. The numbers are inserted for the purpose of personal reference to the working in my rough books.

R. Thomson, Esq., to C. Rolleston, Esq.

Sydney, 16 July, 1867.

Dear Sir,

In reply to your letter of 9th instant, I have the honor to submit to the Superannuation Fund Commissioners the following further report:—

First question.—What rate of deduction from salaries would be required to guarantee the pensions and gratuities provided by the Act of 1864?

Assuming that a deduction of 5 per cent., as recommended in clause 12 of my report of July 1st instant, were adopted as a basis for the permanent Fund, there must be added to this charge a further annual sum of about £17,400 (= 6 per cent. interest on £290,000, the deficiency shown in the 11th clause). If the Service were to continue at its present numerical and financial strength, the permanent deductions from salaries and pensions would require to be not less than 12½ per cent. But the numerical and financial force of the Service is increasing from year to year.* It is not an unsafe supposition that the Service will continue to obtain some slight increase during future years. I am therefore prepared to suggest that a permanent deduction of not more than 12 per cent. will be found sufficient to meet all claims arising under the circumstances of the above question.

Second question.—What scale of retiring allowances will the present rate of deductions from salaries justify?

The answer to this is a corollary to the former. If it be admitted that a permanent deduction of 12 per cent. is sufficient to enable the Fund to meet the claims as they may arise in terms of the Act of 1864, it follows that a deduction of 4 per cent., as heretofore exacted, will produce about one-third of the pensions and allowances hitherto granted. In this view of the case, all pensions would have to be reduced to about one-third of their present amount; and the other allowances provided by the Act would have to be granted on a similarly reduced scale.

Third question.—Supposing the Government agree to pay all pensions and gratuities for ten years, and to fund the deductions for that period, how would the account stand at the end of it?

This question is one which can only be answered in very general terms. But referring to the 13th paragraph of my report, in a foot-note to which I estimated the accumulated fund arising under the conditions specified, from the contributions of a staff of the same strength as at present, to amount, at the end of ten years, to £197,000, I am inclined to think that the then remaining liability of the Government for then existing pensions may be estimated as approximating £200,000.

I am, &c.,
ROBERT THOMSON.

[Enclosure 2 in No. 2.]

The Superannuation Fund Commissioners to The Colonial Secretary.

Audit Office,
Sydney, 19 March, 1866.

Sir,

We deem it to be our duty to invite the immediate and earnest attention of the Government to the present state of the Superannuation Fund created by the Act of 1864.

1. You are doubtless aware that, prior to the passing of that Act, it was the practice of the Government of this Colony to grant superannuation allowances to its Civil Servants, according to the scale adopted under the Imperial Act 4 and 5 Gul. 4, No. 24; and these allowances were provided for by Parliament out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund, without requiring any contribution whatever from the Civil Servants.

2. This arrangement—obviously one highly advantageous to the office-holder—was, however, coupled with the disadvantage that, from the absence of local legislation, each individual case had to be submitted to Parliament.

3. In the Bill which was introduced in the Session of 1864, occasion was taken, whilst promising a higher scale of allowances than that sanctioned by the Imperial Act, to cast upon the officers themselves the burden of providing the fund out of which these allowances were to be met. The change thus effected was one of unmixed advantage to the public funds; as, after making provision for existing claims, those funds would ever after be freed from all claims of the kind.

4. The Act itself was passed somewhat hurriedly, and was not, we fear, preceded by that full inquiry which the nature of the transaction demanded. The rates of allowance provided, or perhaps we should say promised by the Act, were unusually liberal,—more so, perhaps, than we should be disposed to recommend, if the question were now an open one; but as the rate of deduction from salaries was also unusually high, this was a matter in which the public funds were not greatly interested.

* The salaries which would have been subject to deduction in 1864 may be estimated at about £236,000; those for 1865, about £246,000; and those for 1866, about £260,000.

5. It remained only to compound with the Civil Service for casting on the future Superannuation Fund, to be sustained by deductions from salaries, the burden of all existing claims, which but for the existence of that Fund, would have to be met out of the public chest.

6. The justice of this compound in principle was not denied by Parliament, and the mode taken to effect it was the making of a Grant in Aid, to the extent of £10,000.

Copy herewith.

7. We know not how this sum was arrived at, or whether it was based on any or what calculations; but the Act had scarcely passed into law, when it became evident that the Rest Fund, or Grant in Aid, was wholly insufficient to extinguish those claims of old servants of the Crown which had accrued at the time of the passing of the Act; and the result was, that the Civil Servants addressed a petition to both Houses of Legislature, in the month of April, 1865, drawing attention to the apprehended insufficiency of the Fund, and praying for an amendment of the law.

8. We ourselves had little doubt from the first of the inadequacy of the Fund; but, so long as there was a prospect of the matter being taken up in Parliament, we did not deem it necessary to make any formal communication to the Government. As, however, it has been intimated to one of us that there is no probability of the Bill introduced by the late Chief Secretary being proceeded with during the present Session, we must not longer refrain from placing before the Government the real state of the case.

9. As already stated, the sum of £10,000 was granted out of the Consolidated Revenue to meet the claims of old servants of the Crown, whose age and service rendered it probable that they would, if living, become annuitants of the Fund, or otherwise that their representatives would claim the gratuities sanctioned by the Act. Of the sum so granted, more than a moiety has been exhausted to meet three cases of gratuities under the 10th clause that occurred last year, namely:—

Mr. Samuel North, late Water Police Magistrate	£1,470
Mr. Geo. R. Uhr, late Sheriff	1,245
Mr. W. Elyard, late Under Secretary	2,733
In all	£5,448

And this irrespective of gratuities for smaller amounts.

10. Here we find three officers, whose joint contributions to the Fund amounted to £17 14s. 4d. only, taking at once more than one-half the sum which Parliament voted as a presumed equivalent for the ripened and ripening claims of the entire Service, anterior to the passing of the Act.

11. Again, taking the accounts of the past year as our guide, we find that the annual deductions from the salaries of the Civil Servants amount to £9,837 16s. 3d., whilst the pensions already granted under the Act, up to the end of the year, amounted to the large sum of £5,409; in addition to which, further pensions to the extent of upwards of £2,000 have been recommended to be granted since the commencement of the present year—making in round numbers a charge of £7,500, irrespective of the claims to gratuities under clauses 7 and 10 of the Act, which may be expected to come in during the course of the year.

12. The total admitted claims to gratuities during 1865 amounted to £5,866; and it is quite possible (though, we trust, not probable) that the claims to gratuities during 1866 may amount to as much. But the figures above quoted will show that, unless the Rest Fund of £8,000 held in Treasury Bills is invaded, we have only £2,237 to meet those demands.

We therefore entertain serious apprehensions that, unless speedy assistance is extended, the Rest Fund will soon be absorbed, and the Superannuation Fund declared bankrupt.

The Civil Servants have already been taxed to the utmost extent the law allows, viz., four per cent.; a deduction to which, so far as we are informed, no other Service in the world is subjected. From this source, therefore, it is impossible to look for any increased income.

13. Under these urgent circumstances, we confidently appeal to the Government and the Parliament to subsidize the Fund, by a further grant of £10,000.

14. In making this request, we must not be understood as implying that this sum, added to the original grant, will be a fair equivalent for the claims of old public servants accrued to the time of the passing of the Act; but we trust that, if this subsidy be granted, the Superannuation Fund will be rendered solvent for perhaps three or four years longer, by which time it may partially have regained its elasticity; and thus will be averted from past annuitants and future claimants on the Fund a calamity which, we feel assured, neither the Government nor the Parliament could regard with complacency.

15. Before the next Session, we trust to be permitted to address you on the subject of the needful amendment in the present law.

We have, &c.,

C. ROLLESTON,
M. FITZPATRICK,
E. O. MORIARTY,
Superannuation Fund Commissioners.

[Enclosure 3 in No. 2.]

To the Honorable the Legislative Assembly of New South Wales, in Parliament assembled.

The Petition of the undersigned persons employed in the Civil Service of the Colony,—
Humbly sheweth:—

And firstly, with respect to the "Superannuation Act of 1864,"—

1. That after full inquiry, and such calculation as the nature of the case admits of, your Petitioners have reason to apprehend that the "Superannuation Fund" created by that Act may prove inadequate to provide the retiring and other allowances promised by it.

2. That this suggested inadequacy of the Fund arises (or will arise) from the extent of the immediate and proximate claims to superannuation of old officers of the Government, which claims had accrued at the time of the passing of the Act.

3. That, according to the regulations of the Government in force prior to the passing of the Act, all such claims would have been satisfied out of the public funds, without any deduction whatever from salaries.

4. That it is not equitable that a Superannuation Fund, to be sustained by deductions from salaries, should be burdened with claims or portions of claims which accrued before the passing of the Act, under a wholly different system.

5. That, according to calculations made by competent actuaries, the £10,000 granted in aid of the Superannuation Fund, and which sum it is believed was intended to cover the claims to superannuation accruing before the passing of the Act, falls short of the present value of those claims.

6. That there should be any question as to the adequacy of a Fund to which Civil Officers now contribute so largely, and from which they trust to derive support in old age, is in every way to be deprecated.

7. That having regard to the essential relief which the public finances (formerly wholly chargeable with superannuation allowances) now derive, and will continue to derive, from the very heavy deduction from salaries, it is only fair and reasonable that the deficiency, if there should hereafter be any deficiency, in the Superannuation Fund, should be met out of public revenues.

8. That, with this view, all sums accruing from deductions from salaries under the Act 27 Victoria, No. 11, should be credited to the Consolidated Revenue, and all allowances promised by the Act should be chargeable on and payable from the Consolidated Revenue, without any limitation whatsoever.

9. That, on abolition of office, the holder ought to receive a like pension or retiring allowance as officers retiring on the grounds of infirmity of mind or body, irrespective of any further compensation that may be recommended by the Governor, as by the Act provided.

And

And secondly, with regard to the Bill now before your Honorable House, proposed to be intitled the "Superannuation Act of 1865," your Petitioners further humbly represent that this measure is not acceptable to those Civil Servants whose interests are proposed to be affected by it, for the following reasons:—

1. Because it makes no provision for the widows and children of deceased officers (an advantage conferred by the existing law), and thus casts upon the Country and Parliament the necessity of dealing individually, and perhaps arbitrarily, with claims which cannot well be ignored.
2. Because the amount of superannuation allowance is calculated on the basis of the average salary of the recipient during the whole term of service, thus reproducing and fastening upon him all the disadvantages of want of opportunity, neglect, or it may be, injustice, incident to the earlier period of his career; whilst a sufficient guarantee against abuse in this regard would be afforded by adhering to the practice of the Imperial Government, which is, to calculate superannuation allowances on the average salary received during the last three years of the officer's service.
3. Because the power proposed to be conferred on the Government, by the 8th clause—arbitrarily to increase or diminish allowances from the Superannuation Fund—would be in violation of the rights of all contributors to that Fund.
4. Because this Bill, in common with the existing law, affords no guarantee that the several allowances promised by it will be paid, in case of any failure of the Superannuation Fund.

Your Petitioners therefore humbly pray that, for the foregoing reasons, the Bill now before your Honorable House may not pass into law, but that the existing law may receive such other consideration in the premises as to your Honorable House may seem meet.

[Enclosure 5 in No. 2.]

To the Right Honorable SIR JOHN YOUNG, Baronet, Knight Commander of the Most Honorable Order of the Bath, Knight Grand Cross of the Most Distinguished Order of St. Michael and St. George, Captain General and Governor-in-Chief of the Colony of New South Wales, and Vice-Admiral of the same.

The Petition of the Civil Servants of the Crown, in New South Wales, in Public Meeting assembled,—
Humbly sheweth:—

1. That in the year 1864 an Act was passed by the Legislature of this Colony (27 Victoria, No. 11), to provide a Superannuation Fund, and to regulate the granting of retiring and other allowances in respect of public services.

2. That this enactment authorized the granting of a certain scale of pensions to officers in the Civil Service, who by reason of infirmity of mind or body were incapable of further performing the duties of their office, and in certain other cases; as well as a scale of gratuities to the widows and families of those who might die in the service, or within a limited time after their retirement from it.

3. That the granting of such pensions or gratuities was guaranteed so long only as there might be moneys available out of the fund by the said Act created, or the sum reserved under Schedule B of the Constitution Act.

4. That, towards the creation of such Fund, there was voted by Parliament a grant in aid of ten thousand pounds; and, towards its sustentation, it was enacted that there should be made an annual deduction from the salaries of all officers brought under its provisions, of such sum, not exceeding 4 per centum, as the Governor with the advice of the Executive Council should from time to time direct.

5. That prior to the passing of this Act, superannuation allowances were granted to the Civil Servants of the Crown, according to the scale sanctioned by the Imperial Act 4 and 5 Gul. IV, No. 24, and the allowances so sanctioned were made a charge on the sum reserved to Her Majesty for this express purpose, under the Constitution Act, 17 Vict., No. 41, Schedule B, or when that sum was exhausted, were specially voted by Parliament, and made chargeable on the public funds.

6. That the arrangement sanctioned by Imperial Law and local practice was one in the highest degree advantageous to persons in the Civil Service of this Colony, who were not subjected to any deduction whatever from their salaries.

7. But, inasmuch as the pensions claimable under this system had the absolute guarantee of law so long only as the Reserve in the Constitution Act was not exceeded, and it very soon was so exceeded, it became desirable, if not necessary, to legislate further in the matter.

8. That the Act of 1864 no doubt sanctions the granting of a more liberal scale of pensions than that authorized by the Imperial Act, and also includes the granting of gratuities to the families of deceased officers—a privilege not conceded by the latter; but, at the same time, the burden of providing a fund to satisfy the allowances so sanctioned was, for the first time, cast upon the officers themselves.

9. That the change thus effected in the matter of pensions was one highly advantageous to the public funds, which were thereby relieved from all claims of the kind for services accruing thereafter, and were chargeable only with those claims which had accrued at the time of the passing of the Act.

10. That Parliament recognized the justice of providing for these accrued claims, so far as to vote the sum of £10,000, as already stated, towards the establishment of the Fund out of which they were to be met.

11. That the Act was passed somewhat hurriedly, and without any computation by competent actuaries, or indeed, so far as publicly transpired, without any computation at all, of the actual present value of such accrued claims.

12. That, from the nature of the case, the Civil Servants whose pecuniary interests were thus dealt with, were not parties to the valuation placed by Parliament, of its own authority, on the accrued claims of old servants, and they cannot, therefore, be equitably bound by such valuation.

13. That, according to computations made by competent authorities shortly after the passing of the Act, the £10,000 granted by Parliament fell very far short of the value of the accrued claims at the time of its passing; and the experience of the last two years leaves no room to doubt that, owing to this circumstance, the Superannuation Fund created by the Act will prove inadequate to provide the pensions and gratuities promised by it.

14. That it is not equitable that a Superannuation Fund created, or at least sustained, by deductions from the salaries of the Civil Servants, should be burdened with claims which accrued wholly or partially under an entirely different state of law.

15. That it is greatly to be deprecated that there should be any doubt or question as to the adequacy of a fund to which Civil Officers now contribute so largely, and from which they trust to derive support in old age.

16. That it is not possible, and not fair if it were possible, to supplement the Superannuation Fund by an increased rate of deduction,—the present maximum rate being, it is believed, the highest sanctioned in any portion of the British Dominions.

17. That in the neighbouring Colonies of Victoria and Queensland—formerly portions of the undivided Colony of New South Wales—a liberal scale of pensions is secured to the Civil Servants; the maximum deduction in the one case (Queensland) being limited to two pounds per centum per annum, and in the other case (Victoria) no deduction whatever being demanded; whilst in the case of the general Civil Service of Great Britain, the deduction originally fixed at two per cent. has been for some years wholly abandoned.

18. That having regard to the essential relief which the public finances of this Colony (formerly wholly chargeable with superannuation allowances) derive from the present law, which casts the burden on the officers themselves, it is only fair that the deficiency in the Superannuation Fund (if there be any deficiency) arising from the cause already stated, should be met out of the public revenues; and that with this view, as well as to place beyond doubt the due payment of all pensions and other allowances promised under the Act, it is expedient that all allowances promised under the Act, or any amendment of it, should be chargeable on, and payable from, the Consolidated Revenue.

19. Your Petitioners, therefore, humbly pray that, for the foregoing reasons, your Excellency will cause measures to be taken to amend the Act 27 Victoria, No. 11, so that,—

(1.) The existing Superannuation Fund shall be transferred, and all future deductions from salaries credited to the Consolidated Revenue; and that all allowances sanctioned by this Act or any amendment of it shall be charged upon the Consolidated Revenue, without any limitation whatever.

20. And your Excellency's Petitioners further pray that the said Act may also be amended in the following particulars, viz. :—

(2.) That the amount of superannuation, or other allowance or gratuity, to be granted to any officer or to his family, shall be computed on his average salary for the three years last preceding his retirement or death, as the case may be.

(3.) That on the abolition of any office, or the removal of any officer for purposes of economy, or for facilitating departmental arrangements, such officer shall receive a like pension or allowance as an officer of the like Service retiring on the ground of infirmity of mind or body, irrespectively of any further compensation that may in special cases be recommended to Parliament by the Governor, as at present provided.

And your Petitioners will ever pray.

C. ROLLESTON, ESQ., to THE PRINCIPAL UNDER SECRETARY.

Audit Office,
2 August, 1867.

MY DEAR SIR,

Will you be kind enough to place the accompanying letter, from Mr. Thomson, on the subject of the Superannuation Fund, with the other papers, for Mr. Parkes' information.

Faithfully yours,
CHRIS. ROLLESTON.

[Enclosure in No. 3.]

Mr. R. Thomson to C. Rolleston, Esq.
Superannuation Fund Investigation.

84, New Pitt-street,
Sydney, 30 July, 1867.

Dear Sir,

When I last saw you, after I had sent you my replies to the questions put in your letter of 9th instant, you asked me to give you a written explanation of what seemed to be an anomaly between the tenor of the 11th and 13th clauses of my report and that of the last paragraph of my letter of 16th instant.

The supposed anomaly appears to be this:—I state, in clause 11 of my report, that, in order to place the Superannuation Fund in a solvent state, an amount equal to a sum of £290,000 must be provided; and, in clause 13, I suggest a plan for meeting the difficulty of providing for this large liability, without involving the immediate appropriation of so large an amount. On the other hand, in the last clause of my letter to you of 16th instant, I express an opinion that the value of the remaining liability of the Government, ten years hence, according to my plan, will still, after payment of pensions and gratuities to an amount considerably exceeding £174,000, approach £200,000.

In other words, you wish me to explain how £290,000 minus upwards of £174,000, may be regarded as equal to £200,000.

In reply, I will deal with the subject in a twofold way:—

First—as a mere matter of interest on money. According to the rough view, £290,000 being worth £17,400 per annum, in perpetuity, they produce at the end of ten years a total expenditure of £174,000; deducting which from £290,000, there remain £116,000, instead of £200,000 which I state as approximating the remaining liability ten years hence. The question then is: What is the present value of £200,000, payable ten years hence? And the answer is £111,680.

Second—I now take the expectation of human life into account. It is an axiom that, the longer one lives, the longer he is likely to live. In explanation (according to the Carlisle experience):—

At age 40, the expectation of life is	...	27-61 years
50, instead of 17-61 years, it is	...	21-11 "
60, " 11-11 "	...	14-34 "
70, " 4-34 "	...	9-18 "
80, " negative "	...	5-51 "

Looking at the subject in this way, it may be now readily understood how, ten years hence, the then remaining liability to the survivors of the existing pensioners may be expected to amount to not less than £51,000. Yet, as is shown in my report, these pensions (on twenty-two lives) amount to £7,955 per annum, the value, at the present time, of which is £70,983; and, during the ten years, it is not impossible that a sum of £79,550 may actually be paid, while the probability is, that the pensions which will really be paid will amount to fully £60,000.

A very little consideration of the foregoing statements will also enable it to be understood how it is quite possible that, with the combined action of compound interest and the progress of life, the value, ten years hence, of the remaining interests of a large number of then surviving pensioners may amount to fully £200,000, notwithstanding that, at the present time, the value of all such claims may be only £290,000; and that, in these ten years, a large proportion of the last-mentioned sum may have been distributed in pensions and gratuities.

I may be permitted to add that, large as the apparent surplus of invested funds must grow to, according to my propositions, still ALL will be required to meet the claims present and future, notwithstanding the probability of many officers never becoming in any way claimants on the Fund. Those who fancy that, as long as there is a sum of money at credit, and revenue coming in from month to month during any particular term of a few months, sufficient to maintain the credit at or about par, therefore the Fund is solvent, think without knowledge. The very essence of life assurance is the continually augmenting investment of Funds, from day to day, to meet the claims which, if they do not arise this year, must come sooner or later. Still more so (throwing altogether out of consideration the amount requisite to provide the gratuities payable under the existing Act),—when the objects are the securing of deferred annuities, it becomes incumbent that a very large sum be invested, somehow, from some source or other, in order that the grantor of the deferred annuity (in this case either the Civil Service or the Government, or both) may be in a position to keep faith with the recipient of the annuity (in this case, the officer retiring under the provisions of the Act).

I am, &c.,
ROBERT THOMSON.

THE SUPERANNUATION FUND COMMISSIONERS TO THE PRINCIPAL UNDER SECRETARY.

17 October, 1867.

SIR,

Having received a communication from the Treasury, informing us of an overdraft of £982 13s. 2d. on the Civil Service Superannuation Fund Account, and stating that there is no probability of this overdraft being covered by contributions under the existing Act, and calling upon us to realize part of the £10,000 investment in debentures lodged at the credit of that Fund,—we consider it our duty to request the attention of the Honorable the Colonial Secretary to our letter of 24th July last.

2. The reports of the Actuary appointed to investigate the state and prospects of the Fund, which accompanied that letter, clearly show that the Fund cannot stand unless largely supplemented; and the conclusions at which, after careful investigation, he arrived, appear to be approaching their fulfilment. We deem it therefore incumbent upon us to urge again upon the Government the serious consideration of this question.

It is unnecessary for us to reiterate the arguments made use of in our former letter to show the necessity for some early action, in order to avert the catastrophe which the Actuary's figures clearly prove to be certain, and which this early encroachment upon the Reserve Fund shows to be imminent.

THE SUPERANNUATION FUND COMMISSIONERS TO THE PRINCIPAL UNDER SECRETARY.

12 November, 1868.

SIR,

Adverting to our letters of the 24th July and 17th October, 1867,—the former transmitting Actuary's Report on the state and prospects of the Civil Service Superannuation Fund,—we deem it our duty to invite the attention of the Honorable the Colonial Secretary thereto, and to state that a further call has been made upon us to realize to the extent of £3,000 upon the debentures held by the Treasury to the credit of the Fund.

It may be desirable to add, with the view of arresting the early attention of the Government to the subject, that the claims upon the Fund for pensions already assigned exceed the income by £2,000 a year or thereabouts, and that in addition to "pensions," there are claims to "gratuities to officers or to their relations" constantly arising, the extent and value of which cannot be foreseen nor estimated.

We have, &c.,

E. O. MORIARTY,

THE SUPERANNUATION FUND COMMISSIONERS TO THE PRINCIPAL UNDER SECRETARY.

5 March, 1869.

SIR,

Adverting to our letter of 12th November last, and previous correspondence, we do ourselves the honor again to invite the attention of the Government to the state of the Civil Service Superannuation Fund.

We are led to recur to the question at this time in consequence of a further call having been made by the Treasury for the realization of £2,000 of the debentures still held to the credit of the Fund. This call reduces the amount at the credit of the Fund to £4,300; and as the claims for pensions (exclusive of gratuities) exceed the income by upwards of £2,000 a year, the bankruptcy of the Fund is brought within appreciable limits, and the necessity for the early consideration of the question is made more abundantly manifest.

THE SUPERANNUATION FUND COMMISSIONERS TO THE PRINCIPAL UNDER SECRETARY.

Sydney, 29 July, 1870.

SIR,

In view of the fact that the balance at credit of the Superannuation Fund on the 30th ultimo was reduced to £3,551 17s. 6d., we deem it our duty to invite the attention of the Honorable the Colonial Secretary to the necessity for amending the Act of 1864 in the coming Session.

It is hardly probable that Parliament will vote another £10,000 this year towards supplementing the deductions from salaries; and past experience justifies the expectation that under the present law nothing less will suffice to maintain the solvency of the Fund for another year.

It has been suggested to us that, with a view to the equitable settlement of the question, it is necessary to ascertain the value of the accrued claims of the Civil Servants at the date of the passing of the Act of 1864; and we beg to submit the suggestion for the consideration of the Government.

We have, &c.,

E. O. MORIARTY,

No. 1.

THE INSPECTOR GENERAL OF POLICE TO THE PRINCIPAL UNDER SECRETARY.

Police Department,
Inspector General's Office,
Sydney, 31 January, 1866.

SIR,

The Police Reward and Superannuation Funds not being at the present time in a satisfactory state, owing to the very heavy charges upon them, I consider it necessary to address the following observations, for the consideration of the Government, in order that matters may be placed on a better footing.

The two Funds, though distinct in their object, are both for the general benefit of members of the Police Force; and the Government is empowered, under the 31st section of the Police Regulation Act (25 Vic. No. 16), to transfer portion of either of the Funds to the other of them: it will therefore be convenient to treat the Funds as a whole in considering their present position.

The accompanying statement (marked A) will serve to show, with sufficient accuracy for the purpose, the annual income and expenditure of the Funds at the present time. It is obvious therefrom that in the event of any diminution in the receipts, from a decrease in the number of subscribers or in the miscellaneous collections, or increase in the expenditure (which may be anticipated), by a greater number of members of the Force becoming a charge upon the Pension List than it is relieved by deaths, the receipts would then be inadequate to cover the charges, and the invested funds would have to be realized to meet current expenditure. Then, in a short time, the accumulated funds would be extinguished, and there would be no provision to meet the engagements incurred under the Act.

The large amount appropriated for the payment of gratuities and pensions has been occasioned by the number of members of the Force certified by the Medical Board to be unfit for further service when the new system came into operation, and by the superannuation of police incapacitated from performing their duties by injuries received in the execution of duty, and in making provision for widows and orphans of men who lost their lives in the service.

It should be here prominently pointed out that the service of nearly all the present pensioners has been calculated for periods prior to the establishment of the Fund in 1850 (by 14 Vict. No. 38); section 28 of which guarantees that any sum required to carry out its objects beyond the contributions by the police, &c., shall be made good from the general Revenue. It therefore follows, as the accumulated funds amount to £27,000 only, and the interest about £1,300 per annum, that a large sum would be required from the general Revenue to cover the liabilities already sanctioned; not to take into consideration the engagements to men still serving who were in the Force before the Act (above referred to) was passed, and who may be expected to claim pensions partly in respect of such service.

If it be understood that, in the event of the alternative I have pointed to occurring (i.e. the extinction of the Funds and insufficiency of the income to meet the expenditure) the Government would be under a legal obligation to make up the deficiency, so far as it was occasioned for service prior to 1850, probably no further action is called for at present.

If,

If, on the other hand, it is considered that steps should be taken to put the Fund in a more self-supporting and solvent position, I can only make the following suggestions:—

That a short Bill be introduced into Parliament for the amendment of the 19th to the 22nd sections (inclusive) of the Police Regulation Act (25 Vic. No. 16), in the following respects:—

1. To increase the amount of deduction from the pay of each member of the Police Force to 4 per cent., which will assimilate the contribution to that paid by other persons in the Civil Service to the General Superannuation Fund.
2. To fix the minimum period of service, for which pensions may be granted to persons hereafter appointed to the Police, at twenty years instead of fifteen, as at present, the former being, I understand, now fixed in the London Metropolitan Police Force.
3. It is also, I think, a point worthy of consideration—as the present pensions represent a larger sum than the accumulated funds to which the recipients contributed, rendering a larger subscription necessary in future—whether they should not submit to the extra deduction of 2 per cent. upon the amount of their pensions during, say, the next ten years,—a similar deduction to be made from new pensions granted hereafter, during the unexpired portion of the same period (ten years).

Requesting that this subject may be brought as early as possible under the notice of the Honorable the Colonial Secretary,—

I have, &c.,

JNO. McLERIE,
Inspector General of Police.

THE INSPECTOR GENERAL OF POLICE TO THE PRINCIPAL UNDER SECRETARY.

Police Department,
Inspector General's Office,
Sydney, 8 August, 1866.

SIR,

Having been apprised by the Under Secretary for Finance and Trade that there was, on the 31st of July last, a cash overdraft against the Police Superannuation Fund of £8,753 18s. 8d., and a cash balance in favour of the Police Reward Fund of £8,286 13s. 7d., I have the honor to request that the authority of the Governor in Council may be obtained, under the 31st sec. of the 25th of Vict., No. 16, for the transfer of £7,500 from the available balance of the Reward Fund, towards the reduction of the overdraft upon the Superannuation Fund. The income of the Reward Fund being in excess of the expenditure, but the reverse being the case as regards the Superannuation Fund.

A request has been made by the Treasury that a portion of the invested funds (debentures) may be at once realized to clear off the deficiency, thus showing the necessity for immediate action being taken upon the letter from this office, dated the 31st January last, No. 66-40.

SIR,

I do myself the honor to submit copy of letter conveying to me the directions of the Hon. the Treasurer, that a portion of the Police Superannuation Fund debentures may be realized to clear off a cash overdraft of £1,788 4s. 1d.

In requesting that I may receive instructions from the Honorable the Colonial Secretary, as to the course to be pursued, I beg to recall attention to my letters on the subject of these Police Funds, dated respectively, the 31st of January, 66-40, and 8th of August, 66-263 of last year.

As a matter of course, under present arrangements and charges, if portions of the invested funds be realized from time to time to meet current payments, in a very short time the whole of the accumulated funds would be extinguished.

The Treasury, New South Wales,
20 September, 1867.

Sir,

Referring to your letter of 29th August, 1866, in reply to mine of 6th idem, respecting the Police Reward and Superannuation Funds, I have the honor to inform you that the combined cash overdraft on these Funds, on the 31st ultimo, amounted to the sum of £1,788 4s. 1d., made up as follows, viz. :—

	£	s.	d.
Police Superannuation Fund—

As it is evident from the large increase which has taken place in the cash overdraft on the Superannuation Fund Account, since the matter was last under consideration, that the contributions are by no means equal to the charges on the Fund, it becomes absolutely necessary that part of the debenture investment should be converted into cash, in order to cover the present cash overdraft, and meet future claims on the Fund in excess of the receipts.

I am therefore directed to request that you will have the goodness to call a meeting of the members constituting the Superannuation Fund Board, with a view to immediate steps being taken for the realization of from four to five thousand pounds of these debentures.

DEAR SIR,

Forgive my trespassing on your time, which is so fully occupied with business of more importance than the matters regarding which I now address you, chiefly on personal grounds.

Soon after the commencement of the present Session of Parliament, I noticed that a question regarding the position of the Police Superannuation Fund was asked, and that you replied to the effect that it was the intention of the Government to cause an investigation into its position and prospects to be initiated during the present Session. Such being the case, I respectfully offer my services in conducting the investigation; and if they be accepted, I will at once furnish a list of the particulars which should be supplied, in order that the work may be performed in a thoroughly satisfactory manner.

In such investigations, the first step should be to appoint the officer to conduct them, and on his requisition to furnish the proper details. Had this course been adopted with reference to the Civil Service Superannuation Fund investigation, the labour I had to perform would have been greatly reduced, whilst a considerable expense to the Departments in furnishing additional returns would have been saved, and much delay in completing my report been prevented.

I would also respectfully offer my services to the Government for the performance, at any time, of any special duties not incompatible with my private business as an actuary and accountant.

JOHN McLERIE,
Inspector General of Police.

Accountant, 22, H.L. This reply is not satisfactory. The Inspector General should be requested to bring the subject of the overdraft again under the notice of the Hon. the Chief Secretary, and obtain the necessary authority for disposing of £3,000 debentures.—J.T., 26. Accountant, for further report.—G.E., 17/4/68. Nothing has been done since date of my last report. The overdraft is now £2,684 16s. 1d. I should recommend a direct reference to the Hon. the Chief Secretary.—J.T., 27/4/68. Submitted.—27, H.L. The Hon. the Colonial Secretary. The market being favourable, debentures should be sold to cover the "Police Reward and Superannuation Fund" overdraft.—G.E., 29/4/68. The Under Sec., Col. Sec's. With reference to your letter of the 19th February last, to the Under Secretary for Finance and Trade, respecting the overdraft on the Police Reward and Superannuation Funds, amounting to £2,684 16s. 1d., I am directed to inform you that as the market is stated by the Colonial Treasurer to be now favourable, the Colonial Secretary approves of debentures being sold to cover the overdraft in question.

No. 13.

THE INSPECTOR GENERAL OF POLICE TO THE PRINCIPAL UNDER SECRETARY.

Police Department,
Inspector General's Office,
Sydney, 21 July, 1868.

Sir,

Adverting to my former reports, referred to in the margin, respecting the present state of the Police Reward and Superannuation Funds, I now do myself the honor to report that I have obtained the consent of every member of the Police Force to an increased deduction of 3 per cent. (from 2 per cent.), whereby an additional income of about £1,100 per annum will be secured to the Superannuation Fund. The deduction I propose to commence from the 1st instant.

Since the receipt of your letter of the 22nd May last (No. 68/2176), directing the sale of debentures to realize a sum sufficient to clear off the overdraft of £2,684 16s. 1d., I have received a letter from the Treasury (copy annexed), instructing me to sell £4,000 worth of debentures; but I have not yet acted upon this, pending the Hon. the Colonial Secretary's directions after considering this report.

I append a statement (A) showing, roughly, the estimated revenue and expenditure of the Funds (as a whole), with the increased deduction, and I have every reason to hope that there will not be any deficiency in future.

On the 30th ultimo, I understand the balance in the Treasury against the Funds was reduced to about £1,800; and although the quarter's pensions were falling due, some gratuities had recently been paid, and the half-year's interest (£661) had not been drawn, so that I trust it will not be considered requisite to realize more than £2,000 of the invested funds to clear off the present deficit.

I suggest the desirability of passing a short enactment through Parliament, legalizing the increased deduction, and recommend that the opportunity be taken to alter the terms of superannuation, shown in the memorandum (B), which also sets forth the reasons for the same being considered desirable. By these means the stability of the Funds would be in future assured.

Perhaps I may be again permitted to remind the Hon. the Colonial Secretary, however, that the majority of the pensions at present chargeable are granted for services prior to the institution of the Fund, and before any contribution was made to the same by members of the Force; and that, by the 28th sec. of the 14th Vict. No. 38, if the income of the Fund proved inadequate to meet the charges authorized upon it, the balance deficient was to form a charge upon the Revenue of the Colony.

Sir,

I have the honor to inform you that the Honorable the Treasurer has approved of your disposing of debentures to the extent of £4,000, to cover the overdrafts on the Police Reward and Superannuation Funds, amounting, on the 20th April last, to £2,684 16s. 1d., and to meet future claims thereon; and I have to request that you will employ Messrs. Lennan & Cape, the Government Brokers, to effect the said sale.

I have to add, that the present half-year's interest, payable 1 July proximo, had better be drawn before the sale of the debentures.

Amendment in terms of enactment suggested.	Remarks.
Increased deduction not exceeding 4 per cent. to be authorized.	Though it would probably never be required to increase the amount beyond 3 per cent., it would be a safe precaution to authorize a subscription equal to that fixed by the Civil Service Superannuation Acts.
Pensions to persons joining the Police Force hereafter not to be granted for less than 20 years service, except for men disabled by wounds from earning a livelihood. The rates to be as under:— 20 years service, $\frac{1}{2}$ of pay calculated on average of previous 3 years salary or pay. For every full year after $\frac{1}{4}$ up to 40 years service, full pay.	20 years is the minimum term for a pension in the London Metropolitan Police, and I think a sufficiently adequate provision, as all newly appointed men are under 30 years of age. At present a pension may commence after 15 years service. Too short a term, and the rate half-pay too liberal, especially when compared with the gratuity rates. The conditions dividing into periods of five years are, I consider, unjust, as a man who may have served 19 years receives the same pension only as a man with 15 years service.
Owing to some mistake, the fractions specified in the Police Regulation Act fixing the present rates of pensions are not in rateable progression:— 15 years..... $\frac{1}{3}$ 20 " $\frac{1}{2}$ 25 " $\frac{2}{3}$ instead of $\frac{1}{2}$ 30 " $\frac{3}{4}$ This should be corrected as regards the rate of service of 25 years.

CIRCULAR MEMORANDUM to Police Pensioners.

Police Department, Inspector General's Office,
Sydney, 30 July, 1869.

THE Inspector General of Police thinks it necessary to draw the attention of Police Pensioners generally to the fact that the revenue of the Police Superannuation Fund has been found inadequate to meet the heavy demands upon it for the liberal pensions now payable. Upon this being made known to all members of the Force, they voluntarily, and without exception, consented to make an additional contribution of 1 per cent. of their pay, in order that the Fund might be freed from embarrassment which might interfere with the payment of the pensions already granted.

This

This having been carried into effect during the past year, and the arrangement being one in which the present Pensioners are more closely interested even than the Police, the Inspector General thinks it only reasonable that they should contribute their quota towards placing the Fund in a more satisfactory position, and suggests accordingly that they be asked to notify their consent to a deduction from their pensions, at the rate of 2 per cent. per annum.

The Inspector General will therefore be glad to receive the subjoined consent, duly signed, at an early date.

JOHN McLERIE,
Inspector General of Police.

Police Pensioner,

I hereby consent to a deduction, at the rate of 2 per cent., being made from the Pension payable to me from the Police Superannuation Fund, to take effect from the 1st July, 1869.

MR. JOHN BYRON.

(PETITION.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be Printed, 24 November, 1870.

To the Honorable the Legislative Assembly of New South Wales, in Parliament assembled.

The humble Petition of John Byron, of Cockatoo Island,—

RESPECTFULLY SHOWETH :—

That your Petitioner having served many years with credit in the British Army, joined the police of this Colony for some time, when he was appointed an overseer on Cockatoo Island, early in the year 1852, which situation he filled with satisfaction to the Government for 8½ years, when he was promoted to be principal warder in the year 1860, at a salary of £180 a year, the duties of which he faithfully discharged, as well as the duties of prison storekeeper and of assistant Superintendent till the abolition of the establishment in December, 1869,—no person ever having assisted him during that period in mustering the prisoners on the several occasions of each day.

That your Petitioner, being just 18 years in the Government service, and 62 years of age, considered that he was entitled to a yearly pension out of the Superannuation Fund, to which he had been paying in, as well as the three late foremen of the island, Wm. Cahill, John Kelleher, and Henry Fitzgerald, the two latter of whom were only fifteen years in the service altogether, and whose claim to a pension was not under as strong circumstances as the claim of your Petitioner.

That your Petitioner applied to the Government for a yearly pension, and in reply was informed that his length of service did not entitle him to a pension under the Superannuation Act—and that he was granted £135 as compensation for the length of his service.

That under these circumstances your Petitioner humbly begs leave to submit the claim of the three late foremen, who have been granted a pension each from the Superannuation Fund, to your notice, with the humble hope that your Honorable House will be graciously pleased to take his case into your impartial consideration.

That Wm. Cahill entered the service in December, 1851, two months prior to your Petitioner, and was eighteen years in the service, and is sixty years of age, and granted £120 a year.

That John Kelleher entered the service in the year 1854, was only fifteen years in the service, is sixty years of age, and granted £82 a year.

That Henry Fitzgerald entered the service also in 1854, was only fifteen years in the service, only about fifty years of age, and granted a pension of £82 a year.

And your Petitioner humbly prays that your Honorable House will be graciously pleased to take his case into your kind consideration and grant him such relief as your Honorable House may deem meet.

Your Petitioner, as in duty bound, will ever pray.

No. 1.

MR. EDWARD LOWTHER to THE HONORABLE THE COLONIAL TREASURER.

Sydney, 189, Sussex-street,
28 May, 1870.

SIR,

I have the honor to lay before you, for the information of the Government, the following statement having reference to the treatment I have received at the hands of Mr. Duncan, the Collector of Customs. The facts they detail I am in a position to prove. And I leave it to yourself, and to your colleagues to say, on public grounds alone, if such obstruction to trade, and injuries inflicted upon individuals engaged in commercial pursuits—inflicted by an officer of the Government at his will and caprice, without any cause or provocation whatever—is not highly detrimental to the commerce of the port, and destructive of the best interests of the city and Colony.

On the evening preceding Good Friday, a coasting schooner, the "Helena," arrived from Warnambool with a cargo of wheat and potatoes, consigned to me. The cargo being perishable, it was necessary it should be landed without a moment's delay. Accompanied by Mr. W. Pritchard, J.P., I therefore waited upon the Collector of Customs at his house, to ask permission for four hours' overtime to land the cargo that night, or whatever portion of it it was most desirable should be removed at once. I detailed the circumstances to Mr. Duncan, pointed out to him that must be caused if he refused, great delay and loss; mentioned that the market was very bare of potatoes, and for this reason alone it was most necessary they should be landed, and asked the permission of four hours to land them, expressing a willingness to pay the Custom House Officer for his extra services during the operation of landing, and mentioned that the officer on board had offered to undertake the duty. I also mentioned that the Revenue could not by any possibility suffer by the extension to me of this privilege, as there was not a single dutiable article on board the "Helena." The Collector without hesitation refused to grant me the favour I asked, said "I must be childish to expect it," and that "he had not an officer in the Customs to whom he would entrust to land a cargo of potatoes after dark." To this assertion I ventured to dissent, stating I was sorry to hear him express that opinion, as I had a very different one of his officers. Nevertheless he was determined in his refusal, and I had to abide by his ultimatum. The next day was Good Friday, then came Saturday (only half a day to work), then Sunday, and then Easter Monday. All this time the potatoes were sweating in the "Helena," and on the Tuesday, on opening the hold, it was found they were for the most part rotten. Thus the consignor, by the delay in landing, had to lose upwards of £100. But I can scarcely trust myself to express to you my astonishment and indignation at witnessing on Easter Monday, whilst the potatoes were rotting in the hold of the "Helena," a schooner lying at the Market Wharf, with her crew actively engaged in the discharge of a precisely similar cargo. I may also state that when I asked permission to land the "Helena's" potatoes, they were worth from £6 to £7 a ton, and very few to be had. Betwixt that and Easter Monday no less than four cargoes arrived, and brought down the market to £3 per ton, thus greatly aggravating the loss of my constituent.

However, not being desirous to trouble the Government with complaints, I submitted to all this loss and inconvenience, until a repetition of obstruction of a very aggravated character just sustained, compels me now most unwillingly to address you. This morning I was very busily engaged loading my ship, the "Prince of Wales," for Fiji Islands, and was most anxious to prepare to take in cattle and horses on Monday morning. The deck was covered with timber and cargo, which it was absolutely necessary should be at once placed in the hold, not only as a matter of precaution but to avoid danger to the ship. This might have been accomplished by my men in about three hours. Having been made aware that the Collector of Customs had given the agents of the "Nereus"—a ship lying almost alongside mine, on board which there is a large quantity of dutiable goods—permission to continue discharging until 5 o'clock p.m., I sent my shipping agent, Mr. Harpur, to the Collector of Customs, to ask him to allow me three hours, so that I might be enabled to put the timber and cargo below hatches before they were sealed up by the officer who was in charge of my ship. My application was met by a refusal. Upon this, accompanied by a gentleman to whom I have entrusted an important charge in connection with the cargo, I waited upon you, and repeated the small favour I had to ask. You received us most courteously, gave me a letter to Mr. Duncan, asking him to consider the position in which I was placed, and to extend the privilege to me he had conceded to the owners of the "Nereus." With the same gentleman (Mr. Murray) I at once called upon the Collector of Customs, had an interview with him at his office, most respectfully handed to him your note. On perusing it, he broke into a violent fit of temper; said "it was the most disgraceful thing he had ever heard of in his life that I should have ventured to appeal from his decision to a Minister, and with many expressions of disgust and resentment, refused to grant me the favour I asked, which he admitted he had conceded to the "Nereus." We left him with assurances of our heartfelt desire not to disturb his equanimity, and a multiplicity of expressed hopes that we had been not only respectful, but humble and submissive to him.

I may add, with reference to Mr. Duncan's refusal to grant me permission to work overtime in the discharge of my ships, that on Tuesday last, being Her Majesty's Birthday, that functionary allowed the owners of the Dutch ship "Cornelis Gips" to have their hatches off all day, that they might take in cargo, the ship at the time having some 3,000 cases of gin on board. This was a privilege acted on, I conceive to have been most disrespectful to Her Majesty, in honor of whom a general holiday had been proclaimed—a privilege I would never have thought of asking for. I am also in a position to prove several instances lately where Mr. Duncan has permitted the owners of ships in which there were bonded goods to work overtime.

Finally,

Finally, I would state that if it is the law that certain hours are only allowed for the discharge or loading of merchant ships, I am willing to abide by it, but I certainly cannot consent to be bound by the letter of the law if Mr. Duncan at his caprice can stretch it for any individual he may be graciously pleased to favour.

I have, &c.,
E. LOWTHER.

MEMORANDUM OF THE COLONIAL TREASURER.

Collector of Customs, for report.—S. S., 30/5/70.

No. 2.

THE COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS TO THE UNDER SECRETARY FOR FINANCE AND TRADE.

Custom House, Sydney,
31 May, 1870.

SIR,

I had already seen Mr. Lowther's letter in the columns of the "Empire," but as it appeared to me to furnish its own refutation I took no notice of it.

Mr. Lowther has no ground of complaint whatever. By an order of the Governor and Executive Council the business of this office terminates on Saturday at 1 o'clock. On nearly every Saturday I have a number of applications to work after 1. If I granted one of these without a strong reason (such as the necessity of stiffening the ship to prevent danger) it would be impossible to refuse any, without exposing myself to complaints like that of Mr. Lowther.

All vessels would therefore work on Saturday afternoon, and the order of the Government would be a dead letter. The very cases quoted against me by Mr. Lowther prove the impossibility of making any exceptions (save on the ground of safety to property), if the Saturday half-holiday is to be continued, which continuation is however a matter of perfect indifference to me. These cases have however nothing parallel with his. In the case of the "Nereus," it was represented to me that the Government particularly required a quantity of railway iron which lay on board, and this I thought a sufficient reason for granting the request.

In the case of the "Cornelis Gips," it is untrue that the "hatches were off all day" or even one minute on the Queen's Birthday. I gave them a conditional permission to take in ballast, in case the vessel should be in danger of upsetting, as was feared, but the danger did not arise, and the hatches were not unsealed.

Upon a similar representation I should have granted a similar permission to work on Sunday without any hesitation.

With respect to the previous case of the "Helena" which Mr. Lowther wrongly describes as a "coasting schooner," the application made to me at my house in the evening (and of course long after the landing waiters had gone to their homes) was that the vessel should be allowed to discharge all night.

This I told him was beyond my power, as no sea-going vessel can lawfully be discharged at night.

The case of another vessel which, he says, he found discharging potatoes on Easter Monday is in no way parallel. Had he applied to work on Easter Monday, or even on Good Friday, and not at night, on the previous Thursday, I might have taken the responsibility of allowing it under the circumstances.

As to the statement that there was nothing dutiable on board, it would be very dangerous to assume such a fact in the case of a vessel discharging at night. I have known a vessel ostensibly laden with potatoes to contain under them several tierces of tobacco, and the fact was not discovered till it was too late to deal with it. It ought to be enough for Mr. Lowther to know that it is illegal to discharge cargo at night.

I omitted to state that when Mr. Lowther's agent applied to me for permission to work on Saturday he gave no reason whatever for granting the request, but on the contrary agreed with me that it ought not to be granted. I certainly did therefore feel indignant that Mr. Lowther should trouble the Treasurer about this trumpery matter, in which he had not a shadow of a ground of complaint.

From the charges of "caprice" and "partiality" which have been levelled against me, I hope it is not necessary for me to defend myself. If I have not by this time established for myself a character for discrimination and impartiality, it is not worth while now, even if it were possible, to alter a course with which my conscience is perfectly satisfied.

I have, &c.,
W. A. DUNCAN,
Collector of Customs.

No. 3.

MINUTE OF THE COLONIAL TREASURER.

The Treasury, New South Wales,
Sydney, 15 June, 1870.

HAVING received from the Collector of Customs his explanation of the circumstances upon which Mr. Lowther has grounded his letter of complaint against that officer, I consider the explanation so far satisfactory as to convince me that the course pursued by Mr. Duncan, in both the instances complained of by Mr. Lowther, was strictly in accordance with the Customs' Laws and Regulations.

The practice, I am informed is, not to permit sailing vessels to discharge any cargo after office hours on Saturday. I find that Mr. Lowther is correct, however, in stating that the ship "Nereus" was allowed to do so; but this exception to the rule, upon which Mr. Lowther founds a personal grievance, was made at the instance of the Department of Public Works, and to facilitate delivery of a quantity of material urgently required for the Government Railways.

It

It is stated to me that Mr. Lowther is wrongly informed also, with reference to the case of the Dutch ship "Cornelis Gips," which vessel he has represented as having been permitted to work, with open hatches, on Her Majesty's Birthday. Although it is true that permission was given to the vessel to take on board some "stiffening" on that day, the hatches were not taken off, nor did she receive or discharge any cargo.

Mr. Lowther's loss by the delay in discharge of the cargo ex "Helena," to which his most serious complaint refers, is a matter of regret to me; and, in order that similar hardship may be prevented in future, I have instructed the Collector of Customs to grant to all vessels arriving with perishable lading (such as fruit, potatoes, &c.), as much license as possible, so that their cargoes may be landed without delay. I have further intimated my desire that every facility should be afforded to masters and owners of vessels by his department, consistent with—and no vexatious restriction imposed upon the trade of the port not indispensable to—that due and efficient protection of the Customs' Revenue which it is the Collector's responsible and difficult duty at all times to maintain.

Let Mr. Lowther be informed in terms of this Minute.

SAUL SAMUEL.

No. 4.

THE UNDER SECRETARY FOR FINANCE AND TRADE TO MR. E. LOWTHER.

The Treasury, New South Wales,
16 June, 1870.

SIR,

I am desired by the Colonial Treasurer to state, with reference and in reply to your letter of 28th ultimo, that he has received the Collector of Customs' explanation of the circumstances upon which your complaint against that officer is founded, and that he considers that explanation so far satisfactory as to convince him that the course pursued by Mr. Duncan, in both the instances complained of by you, was strictly in accordance with the Customs' laws and regulations.

The practice, the Treasurer is informed, is not to permit sailing vessels to receive or discharge cargo after office hours on Saturday. Mr. Samuel has learnt, however, that you are correct in stating that the ship "Nereus" was allowed to do the latter; but this exception to the rule, upon which you found a personal grievance, was made, I am to state, at the instance of the Department of Public Works, and to facilitate delivery of a quantity of material urgently required for the Government Railways.

It is stated to the Treasurer, further, that you are wrongly informed with reference to the case of the Dutch ship "Cornelis Gips," which vessel you represent as having been permitted to work with open hatches on Her Majesty's Birthday. Although it is true that permission was given to the vessel to take on board some "stiffening" on that day, yet the hatches were not taken off, nor did she receive or discharge any cargo.

I am to add that your loss by the delay in discharge of the cargo ex "Helena," to which the most serious complaint refers, is a matter of regret to the Colonial Treasurer; and in order that similar hardship may be prevented in future, Mr. Samuel has instructed the Collector of Customs to grant to all vessels arriving with perishable lading (such as fruit, potatoes, &c.) as much license as possible, so that their cargoes may be landed without delay. Mr. Samuel has also intimated his desire that every facility should be afforded to masters and owners of vessels by the Customs' Department, consistent with, and that no vexatious restriction be imposed upon the trade of the port not indispensable to, that due and efficient protection of the Customs' Revenue which it is the Collector's responsible and difficult duty at all times to maintain.

In terms of my letter of 30th ultimo, I have submitted to the Colonial Treasurer the request of your letter of 17th idem, for a copy of the Collector of Customs' report upon the complaints preferred by you against that officer.

I am directed by Mr. Samuel to inform you, in reply, that the Treasury letter of 16th ultimo acquaints you with the substance of Mr. Duncan's explanation, and that it is not usual to accede to an application of the kind. I regret therefore that I am unable to comply with your request.

Sydney, 17 June, 1870.

SIR,

On the 28th ultimo I addressed a letter to the Honorable the Colonial Treasurer, and yesterday I received a reply thereto, in which the Under Secretary for Finance and Trade says—"Mr. Samuel has learned that you are correct in stating that the ship 'Nereus' was allowed to discharge cargo after hours on Saturday, but the exception to the rule upon which you found personal grievance was made, I am to state, at the instance of the Department of Public Works, and to facilitate delivery of a quantity of material urgently required for the Government Railways." Will you be good enough to inform me—

1. Did you get permission to have cargo landed after hours from the ship "Nereus" on the occasion referred to?
2. If so, were the goods of a perishable nature, and when did you commence removing the same from the wharf after being landed?

I am certain you will comply with my request, as I am entitled to the information asked for, and cannot reply to the letter addressed to me, above referred to, without it.

An early answer will oblige.

MINUTE OF THE COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS, IN REPLY.

I have no knowledge of the person who came with the Master of the "Nereus" to represent the Railway Department, and it never occurred to me to question his authority or ask his name. As Mr. Adams, Custom House Agent, was present, I have asked him for any information he might be able to give on the subject. His letter, herewith, perfectly agrees with my own recollection of the matter.

Mr. R. Adams to The Collector of Customs.

Customs, Sydney,

Sir,

I remember you refusing permission for the "Nereus" to work overtime on a Saturday afternoon, some little time since, and the Captain then going away and bringing back with him some gentleman representing the Railway Department, who stated that the railway iron was wanted specially. To the best of my recollection a written memo. to the same effect was shown either to you or me at the time, but as I cannot find it on my memorandum file, I may be mistaken in that respect, but am quite certain as to the verbal statement—and that upon that ground you granted the overtime permit.

MEMORANDUM OF THE CHIEF CLERK, RAILWAY DEPARTMENT.

Ship "Nereus."

Mr. Fielding, the Storekeeper, on being referred to, on the 22nd June last, as to what he knew in reference to the ship "Nereus" being allowed by the Collector of Customs to discharge railway iron on Saturday afternoon, the 28th May last, replied that he "knew nothing of the matter," and Mr. Lowther, on whose application the inquiry was made, was so informed.

The Collector having again subsequently stated that some person from this Department did wait upon him in reference to this matter, I sent for Henry Campion, Railway Shipping Clerk, who is employed under Mr. Fielding, and have obtained from him the following statement:—

"On Saturday, the 28th May last, Mr. Smith, the agent of the 'Nereus,' sent for me, and asked if there would be any objection on my part to attend to the discharge of the railway iron from the 'Nereus' if he obtained permission from Mr. Duncan to discharge it on that afternoon. The representation was that the ship was in a dangerous position, being much out of trim, and it was necessary to take out the iron at once, and put in coal.

"I accompanied Mr. Smith to the Collector for the purpose of informing Mr. Duncan that if he granted Mr. Smith's application there would be no objection on the part of the Department to receive the iron. Mr. Duncan asked me if the iron was urgently required by the Department; I replied that it was not, that the application was made more for the benefit of the ship than for the Department, but that if permission were granted there would be no objection to receive the goods.

"Permission being granted, I sent my assistant Robert Heard to receive the goods, and he was paid half a day for overtime. I verbally informed the Storekeeper of the nature of the case, and on my certificate Mr. Fielding paid the amount due to Heard for overtime."

If Campion's statement is correct, it is impossible to understand how Mr. Fielding could say that he knew nothing of the matter; and even if the circumstance had escaped his memory, he should not have given the answer he did without making full inquiry of those employed under him.

Mr. Fielding to explain.—J.S., 29/8/70.

EXPLANATION OF MR. FIELDING, THE STOREKEEPER.

At the time the rails in question were being discharged there was a large amount of business in imports on hand, so that when the matter was referred to me in June last the circumstance escaped my memory. I may state that Campion merely asked me if I had any objection to have the goods landed on this Saturday afternoon, and I replied that I had not, but that tally should be kept if discharged. I was not aware that any special permission was given by the Collector of Customs, but simply thought that the rails were to be discharged in the usual way.—E.F., 1/9/70.

MINUTE OF THE SECRETARY FOR PUBLIC WORKS.

Mr. Fielding's conduct in this matter is deserving of the severest censure. He must have seen, from the letter forwarded to him for report, that the reply he made to the inquiry put to him was a direct contradiction of a statement made by the Treasury Department on the authority of the Collector of Customs; and he should have been careful to have exhausted every means of ascertaining the particulars of the case, and not have replied in the careless and inconsiderate manner he did.

Mr. Fielding is severely reprimanded, and warned that if he continues to perform his duties with such an utter want of diligence and zeal he cannot be retained in his appointment.

THE COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS.

No. 1.

MAJOR-GENERAL CHUTE, MELBOURNE, to HIS EXCELLENCY THE GOVERNOR, NEW SOUTH WALES.

Head Quarters, Melbourne,
12 April, 1870.

MY LORD,

I have the honor to forward to your Excellency copies of certain correspondence connected with a report which has been made to me by Captain Wray, 2/18 Royal Irish—through his Commanding Officer—at my recent inspection of the Battalion, relative to an insult of a serious nature offered to him by Mr. Duncan, Collector of Customs, on the occasion of his presenting a requisition, on the 8th ultimo, for wine and brandy required for the use of the officers' mess of the Regiment to which he belongs.

It is indeed with much regret that I have to bring this matter under your Excellency's notice, but still at the same time, as an officer of Her Majesty's Army under my command has been insulted, I am convinced that your Lordship will concur with me in the necessity of Mr. Duncan being called on to make an ample apology for the offensive remarks made by him to Captain Wray.

I share in the regret expressed by Captain Wray that, although on serious provocation, he should have so far forgotten himself as to have made use of the language he did to Mr. Duncan when leaving the room.

I have, &c.,
T. CHUTE,
Major-General.

[First Enclosure in No. 1.]

Major Bishopp to The Commandant, Sydney.

Victoria Barracks,
Sydney, 12 March, 1870.

Sir,

I have the honor to return Captain Wray's two letters about the treatment he received from Mr. Duncan, and to state that the matter cannot be allowed to rest without being thoroughly investigated, unless you order that it should do so. Article of War No. 99 states distinctly the course to be pursued by officers whose conduct and character have been impugned; and therefore having forwarded Capt. Wray's letters, I have the honor to leave the matter in your hands.

I have, &c.,
R. P. BISHOPP, Major,
Commanding 2/18th Regiment.

[Second Enclosure in No. 1.]

Major Bishopp to The Commandant, Sydney.

Victoria Barracks,
Sydney, 8 March, 1870.

Sir,

I have the honor to forward the two accompanying letters from Captain Wray, 2/18th Regiment, who is President of the Mess, and was acting under my authority. I hope you will use your utmost endeavours to have the matter thoroughly investigated, and should Captain Wray's statements be found correct, that you will take measures to obtain redress for him.

I have, &c.,
R. P. BISHOPP, Major,
Commanding 2/18th Regiment.

[Third Enclosure in No. 1.]

Captain Wray to The Officer Commanding 2nd Battalion 18th Regiment (Royal Irish), Sydney.

Sydney, N.S. Wales,
7 March, 1870.

Sir,

I have the honor to report the conduct pursued towards me by Mr. Duncan, Collector of Customs. I attended this day at the Custom House for the purpose of making declarations for the passing of wines, &c., for the use of the officers, 2nd Battalion 18th Regiment. My not being aware at the time that requisitions signed by you were necessary, I asked Mr. Duncan to receive my declaration and that I would send the requisition; he entered into a quantity of irrelevant matter, and behaved to me in such a rude manner that I left his office.

I have, &c.,
THOS. C. WRAY, Captain, 2/18th Regiment,
President of the Mess Committee.

[Fourth Enclosure in No. 1.]

Captain Wray to The Officer Commanding 2nd Battalion, 18th (Royal Irish), Sydney.

Sydney, N. S. Wales,
8 March, 1870.

Sir,

I yesterday forwarded to you a letter complaining of the conduct of Mr. Duncan, Collector of Customs. I this day attended at his office with the requisitions for wines, &c., required for the use of the officers' mess; some of these Mr. Duncan signed, but when he came to one applying for brandy, he inquired of me how long it would take to consume this quantity (ten cases). I said "I did not know." He told me "I ought." I declined holding any conversation with him after his treatment of me on the previous day. His reply was, "that he had not treated me improperly, but that he would have been perfectly justified in using harsher language to me, as I had endeavoured to pass entries in the long-room without his knowledge." This I denied, as I had seen Mr. Duncan, both before and after the circumstance which he (Mr. Duncan) alluded to; and further said that whoever had stated this had said what was untrue. Mr. Duncan repeated his assertion, and I mine. He eventually called me a liar, and repeated this offensive term. I regret that in leaving the room I so far forgot myself as to say to him—"You are an infernal scoundrel to use such language to me."

I have, &c.,
THOS. C. WRAY, Captain, 2/18th Regiment,
President of Mess Committee.

No. 2.

THE COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS TO THE UNDER SECRETARY FOR FINANCE AND TRADE.

Custom House, Sydney,
28 April, 1870.

SIR,

In replying to the charge brought against me by Captain Wray, I shall have to show that he was wantonly the aggressor, and as it will be necessary to use plain terms with regard to him, I wish to state, in limine, that I make no complaint of the solemn action taken by his superior officers, who have done what I suppose any high military officers must have done in such circumstances; and I feel equally certain that the high civil authorities will feel in like manner bound to protect their officer in the discharge of a necessary, and sometimes all but impossible duty.

I may state that I drew up at the time, for the Honorable Treasurer's information, a statement of what occurred between Captain Wray and myself, but my indignation having cooled before it was finished, I did not think it necessary to waste further time about the quarrel. The greater part of what Captain Wray states is in substance, if not literally, true; but he has suppressed nearly the whole of the provocation given by him, and my defence will be simply to supply the matter suppressed, and give an exact account of what took place.

My recollection may fail in some trifling particulars, but I shall write exactly as if I were giving evidence on oath, and I have documents under his hand to prove what I consider the most blamable part of Captain Wray's conduct.

On the 7th March, Captain Wray, then a perfect stranger to me, appeared in my office, in plain clothes, and tendered two free entries for a cask of sherry and 3 cases of whiskey, for the mess of the 18th Regiment, of which he described himself as the "President." I consider his appearance in that garb as irregular—it was certainly unprecedented; but I had no doubt that he was what he described himself to be, and I asked him for the necessary requisition from the Commanding Officer. He said he did not know that a requisition was necessary. I informed him of the frauds that had been committed in stores obtained for the previous detachment, and the necessary regulations that had been made to prevent a repetition of them. This information he received with a somewhat haughty and insolent air, which merited a rebuke, but of which I took no notice at that time. I merely told him that I could not pass his entries without a requisition; but that to save him trouble I would take his declarations then, and he could send the requisition afterwards, when the entries would be passed.

This was my suggestion, not his, as he incorrectly asserts. I accordingly took the two declarations, placed the entries in my drawer, and he left, as I understood, to get the requisition. In this, however, I was mistaken, for not long afterwards, on the same day, one of the long-room clerks brought me two other entries for 10 cases brandy and 5 cases Moselle (which papers I still possess, bearing Captain Wray's signature), and informed me that he was attempting to pass them through, contrary to the regulations above mentioned.

This clerk, Mr. Mactaggart, further informed me that when he referred him to me, Captain Wray and his agent both stated that they had already obtained my consent; an absolute falsehood, as I had not only refused to pass the wine and whiskey, but up to this time had never even heard of the brandy and Moselle.

At this most dishonorable and ungentlemanlike conduct, I certainly expressed some indignation on occasion of Captain Wray's attempt to pass a fifth and sixth entry the same day for tobacco and cigars; but I am sure it was in a very suppressed tone, and not one tithe of what I felt, and what any honorable man must have felt under the circumstances. I am perfectly certain I did not on that first day use a single offensive expression to Captain Wray.

On the following day, Captain Wray again came to my office and presented requisitions for the six entries referred to, all of which I went on to pass until we came to the ten cases brandy and five cases of Moselle, attempted to be passed surreptitiously on the previous day; and as I considered—as I still consider—thirteen cases of spirits, in addition to a large quantity of wine, an extravagant issue at one time to a mere handful of officers, and an abuse of their privilege, I asked him how long that supply was intended to last, to which he declined to give any answer, adding with a most offensive tone that in consequence of what I had said about the frauds in connection with the 14th Regiment he declined to have any conversation with me. I answered that I had said nothing that could reasonably offend him, but that his conduct in the long-room yesterday in attempting to pass two entries by imposing on a clerk, after I myself had declined to pass two others, would have warranted me in using very severe terms.

He said—"It is a confounded lie." I said—"Do you mean to say that you did not attempt to pass two entries in the long-room after I had refused two others here?" He exclaimed again—"It is a confounded lie." I then became excited, on being given the lie a second time, and, as he states, returned the compliment. Captain Wray's account of his own part of this conversation is quite untrue. I made the statement of my own knowledge after due inquiry, and the lie was twice given directly to myself, without reference to any third person, before I uttered an angry word; and though his conduct was provoking throughout, this was the only offensive word I used to Captain Wray during the three interviews I had with him.

The moment the word was uttered, he rushed round the end of the table with the intention, as I supposed, of striking me, but immediately drew back, and left the room, exclaiming—"You are an infernal scoundrel." Before closing the door he, holding it in his hand, turned round and repeated a second time "You are an infernal scoundrel." To these expressions I made no reply.

I do not seek to justify the expression used by me. It would have been better if, when Captain Wray gave me the lie, even a second time, I had remained silent, as I did when he twice called me "an infernal scoundrel," but I do not pretend to have always full command of temper on such occasions, and all I ask is, that those who are to judge of this matter will place themselves in my position, and ask themselves what they would, or rather might have done, under similar provocation.

I return the documents, and have to request that you will lay them, together with this letter, before the Honorable the Colonial Treasurer.

I have, &c.,

W. A. DUNCAN,
Collector of Customs.

MINUTE OF THE COLONIAL TREASURER ON THE FOREGOING LETTER.

COLONIAL SECRETARY,—

This is a most unpleasant matter, and the statements of these gentlemen, being contradictory, make it most puzzling to judge who was the first to offend. I have had an interview with Mr. Duncan, and he assures me that he was not the aggressor, and was greatly provoked to use the language he did. It is clear that both gentlemen used intemperate language, which I have no doubt they regret now. Under the circumstances, mutual apologies would seem to me to meet the difficulties of the case. Mr. Duncan is willing. If Captain Wray will withdraw all the offensive language used to him, he will adopt the same course with regard to the offensive language addressed by him to Captain Wray. I trust this mode of settling this unpleasant difference will be assented to.—S.S., 19 May, /70.

MINUTE THEREON OF THE COLONIAL SECRETARY.

A MUTUAL withdrawal, simultaneously, of the intemperate and offensive words, seems the fairest solution of the matter. Neither party can be considered free from blame.—C.C., 19 May.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.

NEW SOUTH WALES.

MR. GEORGE RICHARD DIBBS.

(PETITION.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be Printed, 6 September, 1870.

To the Honorable the Legislative Assembly of New South Wales, in Parliament assembled.

The Petition of George Richard Dibbs, of Sydney, Merchant and Ship-owner,—

RESPECTFULLY SHOWETH:—

1. That the City and Port of Sydney are largely dependent upon the importation from Europe and other countries of goods which are afterwards distributed through this Colony.

2. That various drawbacks, arising from distance and other inevitable causes, exist, to impede the supply of remote parts from Sydney, and such parts draw large portions of their imported goods from Melbourne, to the loss of the City and Port of Sydney.

3. That the due and impartial administration of the laws regulating the duties of Customs at the Port of Sydney is essentially necessary to the safe conduct of the adventures of merchants importing; and the undue and partial administration of the same laws tends to discourage enterprise, and to drive trade into other channels, to the damage of the best interests of the said city and port.

4. That your Petitioner is a merchant and ship-owner resident and trading at Sydney, and an importer of dutiable goods.

5. That your Petitioner, having occasion to visit England, purchased there, in the month of March last, through the firm of W. and J. Lockett, of No. 12, King-street, Liverpool, 356 tons of salt, comprising the descriptions known as rock salt, common salt, and stoved salt, and a quantity of shooks and casks, at the prices shown in Messrs. Lockett's invoice in your Petitioner's possession, that is to say:—

						£	s.	d.
Exclusive)	256 tons common salt, at 4s. 6d. per ton, less 2½	56	3	3
of bags)	25½ tons stoved do., at 7s. 6d. do. do.	9	6	3
	75 tons rock do., at 5s. 6d. do. do.	20	0	6
	16 empty casks	21	4	0

6. That your Petitioner shipped the said goods with other articles in your Petitioner's ship, the "Clara Hargraves," for Sydney; and upon their arrival in July last your Petitioner proceeded to pass entry for his goods at the Custom House, through his agent, Mr. Marshall Bayley, valuing said goods for duty at the true cost of such goods at the place whence imported, with 10 per cent. added thereto, as required by law.

7. That on the eleventh July such entry, with the usual declaration of value, was passed at the Custom House, and the landing of the goods was proceeded with in the ordinary way.

8. That on the fifteenth July, after a considerable portion of said goods had been landed, it was notified by Landing-waiter Reed to your Petitioner that it appeared to him, on view and examination of such goods, that they were not valued for duty according to the true price and value thereof, and your Petitioner was required to declare on oath, before the Collector of Customs—"What is the true invoice price and current value of said goods at the port of shipment."

9. That on said fifteenth July the Collector of Customs sent for your Petitioner's agent, Mr. Bayley, and, in reference to the declaration of value referred to in paragraph 7, charged Mr. Bayley with having made a false declaration as to the value of the salt; and although Mr. Bayley stated that he had seen your Petitioner's invoice, and was satisfied of its genuine character, the Collector behaved with extreme violence to Mr. Bayley, asserted that your Petitioner's invoice (which up to that time he had not seen) was false, stated he would not believe your Petitioner on oath, and suspended Mr. Bayley from the performance of his duties, although acting only as agent, and having disclosed the name of his principal.

10. That your Petitioner, in obedience to Landing-waiter Reed's notice of fifteenth July, attended at the Custom House on the sixteenth July, and produced to the Collector of Customs the original invoices of said goods, which Mr. Duncan, without examination, threw back to your Petitioner, and asserted to be false on the face of them. On this your Petitioner left the Collector's office.

11. That on the twentieth instant your Petitioner received a letter from the Collector, stating that, by order of the Colonial Treasurer, he was directed to call upon your Petitioner to produce the invoices, and furnish proof of the correctness of the prices at which the goods were entered.

12. That your Petitioner, on the twenty-first July, in company with Mr. Bayley, his Customs' agent, produced and tendered to the Collector the original invoices of said goods (being those referred to in paragraph 5), and declared upon oath that the prices therein stated "were the true invoice price and the current value of the said goods at the port of shipment."

13. That your Petitioner, notwithstanding his having thus verified the correctness of his invoices, was prohibited from removal of his goods from the wharf where landed, from the twenty-first July until the 2nd August, during which time eight hundred pounds (£800) worth of his goods were left exposed on the wharf, to the inclemency of the weather, and your Petitioner suffered serious injury from such detention and from loss of market.

14. That on the second August, after your Petitioner had brought the matter before the Colonial Treasurer, the Collector of Customs informed your Petitioner that, having reason to believe that the goods were undervalued, and not being satisfied with the proofs adduced in support thereof (such proofs being the production of the genuine invoices verified by your Petitioner's oath), he had had samples of the goods valued by competent persons, and he called upon your Petitioner to pay additional duty to the amount of (£35 14s.) thirty-five pounds fourteen shillings.

15. That the goods by such valuers were valued at the prices following, viz. :—

356 tons salt, at a lump sum of £801, equal to 39s. 1d. per ton, exclusive of bags.

133 tons shooks, at a lump sum of £332 10s., equal to 50s. per ton.

16 empty water casks, at a lump sum of £48, equal to 130s. per ton.

While the true cost to your Petitioner at Liverpool, as shewn by genuine invoices, verified on oath, was as follows :—

	£	s.	d.
256 tons coarse salt...	56	3	3	} Exclusive of bags.
75 „ rock salt ...	20	0	6
25½ „ stoved salt ...	9	6	3

16. That your Petitioner, having instituted enquiries, arrived at the conclusion that he was the object of some caprice of the Collector, who had treated his goods and his evidence in a different manner from those of other importers. Nevertheless, on 21st August, in order to escape further loss and damage, he paid such extra duty under protest, and was then permitted to remove his goods.

17. That your Petitioner, being aggrieved by the whole course of conduct pursued by the Collector of Customs, in refusing in the first instance to receive genuine invoices—in the second, in discrediting your Petitioner's oath, without just reason, and finally, after subjecting him to serious loss, by twelve days detention of his goods, and in compelling him to pay duty thereon at their local value, contrary to law, which provides that such duty shall be paid on the value at the place whence imported, unless there be a clear intention to defraud the Revenue, and under this accumulation of wrongs, aggravated by numerous instances of personal abuse and slander, on the part of Mr. Duncan,—appealed on the 11th instant to the Honorable the Colonial Treasurer for redress of his grievances, and for enquiry into the conduct and actings of the Collector.

18. That in such appeal to the Colonial Treasurer your Petitioner charged the Collector of Customs with maladministration of the law and of his office, and adduced three several instances of importations similar to those of your Petitioner, in which that officer had dealt with importers in an entirely different manner, and collected different duties.

19. That your Petitioner submitted to the Colonial Treasurer the following proof, in support of this charge, obtained from the public records in the Customs Department :—

1st. On 23rd May, 1870, Messrs. Scott, Henderson, & Co. paid duty on 3,300 sacks salt, ex "Medea," from Liverpool, at value of 5s. 6d. per ton, without bags.

2nd. On 25th May, 1870, Messrs. Willis, Merry, & Co. paid duty on 100 tons salt, ex "Medea," from Liverpool, at value 5s. 6d. per ton, without bags.

3rd. On 25th May, 1870, Messrs. Learmonth, Dickinson, & Co. paid duty on 50 tons common salt, at 4s. 6d. per ton, without bags.

In these cases the ordinary declaration of value was taken. These importers were not put on their oaths, and their invoices were not questioned.

20. That your Petitioner, after his appeal had been before the Colonial Treasurer for a period of fifteen days, was informed on the 26th August that the Treasurer had arrived at the conclusion that Mr. Duncan had not been guilty of maladministration, either of the law or of his office.

21. That by reason of the premises your Petitioner is injured, in addition to the other causes of loss and damage above set forth, by having been compelled, under colour of law, to pay duty at a rate nine times as great as that charged to other importers, or that the revenue is damaged under the partial administration of the Collector by one-ninth part only of the duty chargeable being charged to others with whom your Petitioner has to compete in the ultimate disposal of his merchandize.

Your Petitioner therefore humbly prays that your Honorable House will be pleased to make such enquiry into the premises as to your Honorable House may seem meet, and that the Customs' laws may have a due and impartial administration; and that your Petitioner may have such relief in the premises as may be just.

And your Petitioner will ever pray.

Memo.

SIR,

Campbell's Wharf,

15/7/70.

I have called upon Mr. Dibbs to declare to the value of his goods ex "Clara Hargraves," from Liverpool. He values common salt at 4s. 4d. per ton, stoved do. at 7s. 6d., and rock do. 5s. 4d. I am informed by that the bonâ fide value of common salt at Liverpool is from 8s. to 9s. per ton.

Refuse to deliver, and issue post.—W.A.D.

MR. M. BAYLEY to THE SECRETARY FOR FINANCE AND TRADE.

Sydney, July 15, 1870.

SIR,

I have the honor to lay the following statement before you, and to request your early interference in removing a prohibition that the Collector of Customs has placed upon any further declarations of mine being taken at the Customs.

As agent for Mr. Dibbs, I passed an entry for salt ex the "Clara Hargraves." The invoice was handed to me, and I took that value, adding the 10 per cent. in the usual way. This, I presume, was considered an undervaluation. The Collector sent for me, and the following conversation ensued:—

"The Collector.—What do you mean by valuing salt at such a price as on this entry?

Mr. B.—It is the value as appeared by the invoice.

The C.—I don't believe it.

Mr. B.—Do you mean you don't believe I have seen the invoice?

The C.—No; I mean I don't believe the invoice is a true one.

Mr. B.—The invoice exhibited to me I believe to be a perfectly true one, and I have no doubt

Mr. Dibbs, the importer, would take his oath to its correctness if necessary.

The C.—I would not believe him on his oath."

After some further words, he said my declaration was false. I replied that I would not allow that to be said. The declaration was perfectly true, and in accordance with the invoice value of the salt. He then instructed Mr. Mactaggart not to take any further declarations from me.

The above are the facts of the case, and I feel it quite unnecessary to make any further remarks. Begging you will give the matter your earliest consideration,—

I have, &c.,
M. BAYLEY.

THIS statement is substantially correct, except where it says that I said "I would not believe him on his oath." What I said was, that even if Mr. Dibbs were to swear that the salt cost only 4s. 6d. per ton, I would not believe him. My object in suspending Mr. Bayley's license, was to convince him and other agents that they must be held personally responsible for the truth of the declarations they make. It appears to me that Mr. Bayley has forfeited the penalty of his bond, and also that imposed by the 55th section of the Act 9 Vic. No. 15; but as he has appealed to the Honorable the Treasurer, I have withdrawn his suspension pending any action that Mr. Samuel may think advisable.—W.A.D. 18/7/70.

MINUTE OF COLONIAL TREASURER.

The Treasury, New South Wales,
Sydney, 20 July, 1870.

THE Collector of Customs should call upon Mr. Dibbs to produce the invoices, and furnish proof that the low prices at which the salt was entered were the cost prices. If the Collector is not satisfied with the evidence he should avail himself of the Customs' laws, and have the goods valued. The Customs' Agents are bound by their bonds to protect the Revenue; and it is their duty, before making a declaration of the value of goods, to satisfy themselves as far as possible whether such valuation is arrived at from genuine invoices. I am not prepared to express any decided opinion upon this matter until the result of further inquiry is made known to me. I approve the course pursued by the Collector in restoring Mr. Bayley, pending any action I may determine upon.

No. 9.

THE COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS TO THE UNDER SECRETARY FOR FINANCE AND TRADE.

Custom House, Sydney,
22 July, 1870.

SIR,

* Vide No. 8.

* Vide No. 10.

I do myself the honor to state, for the information of the Honorable the Colonial Treasurer, that I have called upon Mr. Dibbs, in accordance with the accompanying Minute,* to prove by oath the value of his goods ex "Clara Hargraves." The invoices produced by him correspond with his entries, with the trifling exception mentioned in his affidavit annexed,* and with a further exception of £45 9s. 5d. deducted for alleged commission, which, being a part of the cost of the goods, ought not to be allowed; and which, as he was himself on the spot, is hardly likely to have been paid by him.

There is a deduction for discount on the various articles, in some cases of 30 per cent., which, as the amount was drawn for through the bank, seems questionable. I have ascertained that the amount drawn for exceeded the amount of the invoice, but how much I cannot say.

In addition to the very low price at which the salt particularly was entered, it should be mentioned that the bags were not paid for at all when the entry was first passed, and an invoice was afterwards produced in which the bags were not charged.

A separate invoice has since been produced for the bags. As this is the first time that I have seen an invoice in which the bags were not included with the salt in a distinct line, the circumstance naturally confirmed the suspicions raised by the low price of the salt itself, and I cannot affirm that my suspicions are wholly removed by the proofs produced by Mr. Dibbs.

If the Treasurer think it necessary to proceed further in the matter, it will be necessary to appoint sworn valuers.

I have, &c.,

W. A. DUNCAN,

Collector of Customs.

MINUTE OF THE COLONIAL TREASURER.

Does Mr. Duncan recommend the appointment of sworn valuers? I am willing to support him in any course that may be considered advisable for the proper protection of the Revenue.—S.S., 26/7/70.

MINUTE OF THE COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS.

I think this is a case in which it would be proper to appoint sworn valuers, for I cannot bring myself to the conclusion that the full duty has been paid on the salt and one or two other articles in the entry.—W.A.D.

MINUTE OF THE COLONIAL TREASURER.

I adopt the recommendation of the Collector of Customs, that sworn valuers should be appointed. He will please suggest the names of gentlemen qualified to act, for my approval.—S.S., 26/7/70.

MINUTE OF THE COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS.

Mr. Richard Harnett and Mr. Thomas Strickland are willing to act as valuers.—W.A.D., 29/7/70.

MINUTE OF THE COLONIAL TREASURER.

I approve. Let the appointments be made; having, as I conceive, no other alternative, the Collector being the proper officer to elect whether valuers shall be appointed. The appointment of the gentlemen named by Mr. Duncan recommended to His Excellency the Governor.—S.S., 29/7/70.

MINUTE OF HIS EXCELLENCY THE GOVERNOR.

2 August, 1870.

SIR,

I have the honor to lay before you copy of a letter addressed by me to the Collector of Customs, respecting certain goods imported by me in the "Clara Hargrave" from Liverpool, in reply to which Mr. Duncan writes to say "that the value of the goods is now being ascertained in the manner prescribed by law, and the result will be communicated to me without delay."

I also beg to call your attention to a letter from the Collector to me of date 20th July, and my reply of the 21st, as per copies enclosed; on which latter date I attended at the Custom House, presented invoices, and made affidavit as to correctness, &c.

Twelve days have now elapsed, and I am suffering loss by the detention of my goods, and the goods themselves are depreciating daily in condition. I have therefore to beg your interference to order the delivery of the goods to be made, or that some action may be taken, as the indefinite character of the Collector's reply, with the waste of time which has already taken place, leaves me in doubt when I shall be permitted to remove my property, and is entailing on me serious inconvenience.

I have, &c.,

MINUTE OF THE COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS.

Mr. Dibbs has already been furnished with the result of the valuation referred to, and his goods will be delivered the moment the duty is paid. There has been no unnecessary delay or detention on my part.—W.A.D., 3/8/70.

SIR,

With reference to the post-note issued to you to pay additional duty on the salt and other articles recently imported by you ex the "Clara Hargrave," the Treasurer, to whom you have appealed in the matter, has directed me to call upon you to produce the invoices and furnish proof of the correctness of the prices at which the goods were entered.

Mr. George R. Dibbs to The Collector of Customs.

127, Pitt-street,
Sydney, 21 July, 1870.

SIR,

In reply to your letter of 20th instant, I beg to state—

1. The post-note you refer to has not been left with me, nor with my agent Mr. Bayley.
2. You state I have appealed to the Treasurer. Such is not the fact.
3. Acting under directions from the Treasurer, you call on me to produce invoices and furnish proof of the correctness of the prices, &c. Allow me to record the circumstance that I waited on you for that purpose on Saturday last, when you threw back the invoices I tendered, with the remark that it was a false document, &c.

I shall be prepared to meet the directions conveyed to you by the Treasurer, and again produce the invoice and make affidavit as to its genuineness.

I remain, &c.,

GEORGE R. DIBBS.

Mr. George R. Dibbs to The Collector of Customs.

127, Pitt-street,
Sydney, 1 August, 1870.

SIR,

On the 21st ultimo, in response to your request, contained in a letter of the 20th, I waited on you, in company with Mr. Bayley, and tendered the invoices of my goods per "Clara Hargrave" from Liverpool, and verified their accuracy and correctness on oath.

The law so far having been complied with, I had a reasonable right to expect that delivery would be permitted in due course, and I have waited patiently since for notice from your department to this effect.

On

On Saturday I sent to the landing-waiter at Campbell's Wharf, who informed me that my property is still detained. I have therefore to request that you will inform me, at your earliest convenience, on what grounds such detention is permitted; and I take the liberty of expressing surprise at the delay in giving a release to, or in your taking further action in regard to, the goods in question.

I need hardly call your attention to the damage and loss which I am sustaining by such unusual conduct on the part of your department.

SIR,

I have the honor to state, for the information of the Honorable the Colonial Treasurer, that I have had the salt, shooks and casks, entered by Mr. G. R. and I have called upon Mr. Dibbs to pay on the additional value of £714 1s., amounting to £35 14s.

These being the articles on which the suspicion of undervaluation arose, samples of the other goods passed by Mr. Dibbs were not detained, and they do not consequently enter into the valuation.

Referring to my letter of the 1st instant, respecting the goods landed from the "Clara Hargrave" from Liverpool, I have the honor to enclose you copy of a letter, dated 2nd instant, received from the Collector of Customs, and of my reply thereto, dated 3rd instant, to which I respectfully invite your attention.

Mr. Duncan's action not only causes me pecuniary loss, but it involves an impeachment of my veracity; and therefore, before addressing you with ample proof of the legitimacy of my invoices—before making any further comment on the unusual course taken by the Collector under the garb of legal sanction—before proving the absurdly gross character of some of the valuations, even on Sydney prices—I desire to be informed of the reasons Mr. Duncan possesses, and which induced him in the first instance to believe my goods were undervalued, and for refusing to accept my oath as true, when tendered in support of the correctness of my invoices and entry.

There is therefore a balance of duty to be paid on these goods amounting to £35 14s., which, to prevent the expense of warehousing the goods now held on the wharf, I have to request you will pay without delay.

Collector of Customs.

[Second Enclosure to No. 15.]

Mr. George R. Dibbs to the Collector of Customs.

127, Pitt-street,
Sydney, 3 August, 1870.

Sir,

I am in receipt of your letter of 2nd instant, in reference to the goods imported by me in the "Clara Hargrave," from Liverpool.

You state that having reason to believe that a portion of the goods entered on the 11th and 12th ultimo were undervalued, and not being satisfied with the proofs adduced in support of my valuation, you had the samples valued by competent persons; and as a result of such local valuation, as opposed to the value entered by me from invoice first cost, you call upon me to pay the sum of £35 14s. extra duty.

I am pleased to find that at length, after the delay and inconvenience I have been put to, and which I have already made the subject of complaint, there is some prospect of my obtaining possession of my goods; and it is refreshing to know that under the present administration of the Customs' laws, importers are liable to have property worth over £700 detained on a wharf for thirteen days, exposed to damage and deterioration, to the inclemency of the weather, to loss by falling markets, to vexatious delays, and to the cost of wharf rent, &c., while the law is being strained beyond its utmost to enforce payment of the sum of £35.

That the position you have assumed, with regard to my shipment per "Clara Hargrave" may be fairly understood, I find it necessary to go back to Saturday the 16th ultimo. On that day I waited on you, in obedience to a notice received from the landing-waiter at Campbell's Wharf, which requested me "to appear before the Collector, and to declare, on oath, what is the true invoice price of the shipment, &c."

On presenting myself before you with the intimation that I was prepared to show you the invoices, and to verify their accuracy on oath, you asked me "Did I really mean to say that the salt cost only what it had been entered at"; to which I replied that I was present for the purpose of proving the correctness of my invoices, from the facts contained in which the entries had been made, and of verifying the statement by oath if required.

I then handed the invoice to you, which you threw back in a contemptuous manner, remarking it was a false document, and that you were so satisfied on the point that you would, by calling in valuers, make me pay duty on the salt on a value of £4 per ton, as the Sydney value, under a power which you stated the law gave you.

It was at this juncture that you addressed me those offensive observations respecting a boat landed from the "Clara Hargrave," which, with your illegal seizure thereof, form the subject of a separate correspondence.

I doubted your power "legally" to do what you threatened, and took the liberty of reproving you for the remarks you had made in connection with the invoice, without any attempt on your part to substantiate the charges; and I referred to the unjustifiable remark you had made on the previous evening to Mr. Bayley, in connection with the same matter—"that you would not believe me on my oath"; and I said you were not permitted by the law to be a judge in such matters; and, as your conduct was so insulting, and your language and allusions so continuously offensive, I retired from your room.

On the 21st July I waited on you again, as in the meantime you had been directed by the Treasurer to ask me to produce my invoices, and to furnish proof of their correctness, which I did by producing them, and by making affidavit before you. You then allow twelve days to pass, during which time my property is exposed in the manner before described, and to-day give me the first intimation that my imports had been valued on their Sydney value.

You have thus attempted to enforce the threat you made on the 16th July with regard to the salt; and, as you had already committed yourself to a foregone conclusion respecting my veracity, in your libellous statement to Mr. Bayley—for which I will seek redress in another shape—you try to justify yourself by making me a victim under the penal portion of the 22nd clause of the 9th Victoria, No. 15, and to make me pay duty which can only be demanded under circumstances where (beyond doubt) it appears to the Collector "that such articles have been found invoiced below the real and true value at the place from whence such articles were imported; and in the present case, as you have demanded my oath, you can only take the extreme step that portion of the Act gives, in justification of the foregone conclusion referred to.

Under these circumstances, as I feel it to be useless to offer you further evidence as to the genuineness of my invoices, by the testimony of other importers, I content myself with placing on record the facts in connection with your proceedings in this matter, and have instructed Mr. Bayley to pay the amount of your demand under protest, reserving to myself the privilege of seeking redress and justice from other channels, where feeling and bias and temper have no weight in considering the rights of the questions involved.

I remain, &c.,

GEORGE R. DIBBS.

MINUTE OF THE COLONIAL TREASURER.

As Mr. Dibbs has expressed his intention, in his letter to the Collector of Customs, to take legal proceedings in connection with these matters, say I consider it undesirable to continue this correspondence.—S.S., 5/8/70.

THE UNDER SECRETARY FOR FINANCE AND TRADE TO MR. GEORGE R. DIBBS.

The Treasury, New South Wales,

SIR,

I have the honor to acknowledge receipt of your letter of 4th instant, addressed to the Colonial Treasurer, enclosing copies of letters from and to the Collector of Customs, respecting the value for ad valorem duty of your goods ex "Clara Hargraves."

I am desired to state, in reply, and with reference to previous communications, that as in the letter to the Collector of Customs, before referred to, you have expressed an intention of taking legal proceedings in connection with the differences between the Collector and yourself, the Treasurer considers it undesirable that the correspondence should be continued.

I have, &c.,

HENRY LANE.

No. 17.

MR. GEORGE R. DIBBS TO THE COLONIAL TREASURER.

127, Pitt-street,
Sydney, 8 August, 1870.

SIR,

I have the honor to acknowledge receipt of your letter of 6th instant.

You inform me "that, as in my letter to the Collector of the 3rd instant, I had expressed an intention of taking legal proceedings in connection with my differences with him, you considered it undesirable that the correspondence should be continued."

My differences with the present head of the Customs Department are three-fold.

1st. As Mr. Duncan, he has been guilty of a gross slander upon my character.

2nd. As an official servant of the public, during my interview with him respecting the value of the cargo per "Clara Hargraves," he has been guilty of grossly insulting conduct apart from the slander.

3rd. As Collector of H. M. Customs, the head of the most important branch of the Public Service, I charge him with maladministration of the law and of his office.

With regard to the first difference, I am seeking redress in another shape, as already intimated. My solicitor has written to Mr. Duncan demanding an apology, which if he fail to give in due course, an action in the Supreme Court will follow.

I therefore beg to state that, in the adjustment of this personal difference, I need not the intervention of the higher officers of the Crown.

Respecting the second difference, it is clearly the duty of the responsible Minister under whose control the Customs Department is placed, to take notice of serious charges of insulting conduct made against his subordinates. In the boat correspondence just concluded, I received an assurance from you, that "it was your anxious wish that officers should observe in their intercourse with the public the rules of courtesy, and that you were prepared to insist on these rules being adhered to." I was gratified on receiving this assurance, but your letter now under reply—permit me respectfully to observe—hardly sustains your determination in this particular. As I do not wish our correspondence terminated by appearing too earnest in urging the impropriety of Mr. Duncan's conduct on the notice of his superior, I will now withdraw this difference from the cognizance of the Government.

The third difference is, however, one which cannot be disposed of so lightly, neither can a correspondence involving issues so important to the public at large as those which surround the present case, be abruptly terminated. I therefore respectfully submit that, while waiving my right to ask from the Government an inquiry into Mr. Duncan's personal offence, I have a claim to be heard in support of the serious charge preferred in this correspondence.

The particulars of my difference with Mr. Duncan respecting the value for duty of the goods ex "Clara Hargraves" are so fully detailed in my letter to the Collector of the 3rd instant, copy of which is already before you, that I will not recapitulate them here. It is sufficient to say, that the proper officer of the Customs, having doubted the value of my goods as entered on the 11th and 12th ultimo, I complied with the law, and verified the accuracy of my invoices, by oath before the Collector. I stood then, as I conceive, by law entitled on the one hand to receive my goods in due course, or on the other hand, became liable to the penalties for making a false oath, if such had been made.

By the 22nd clause of the 9th Victoria, No. 15, it is enacted, inter alia, "that if upon view and examination of such articles by the proper officer of the Customs, it shall appear to him that the said articles are not valued according to the true price and value thereof, and according to the true intent and meaning of this Act, then and in such case, the importer or his known agent shall be required to declare on oath before the Collector or other principal officer of Customs, what is the invoice price of such articles, and that he verily believes such invoice price is the correct value of the articles at the place from whence the said articles were imported; and such invoice price, with the addition of ten pounds per centum thereon, shall be deemed to be the value of the articles in lieu of the value so declared by the importer or his known agent, and upon which the duties due thereon shall be charged and paid."

By the 8th clause of the same Act, it is enacted that any person convicted of making a false oath or affirmation shall be deemed guilty of perjury, and shall be liable to the pains and penalties to which persons are liable for wilful and corrupt perjury.

By the concluding portion of clause 22 it is further provided, "that if it shall appear to the Collector or other proper officer that such articles have been found invoiced below the real and true value thereof at the place from whence the same were imported, or if the invoice price is not known, the articles shall in such case be re-examined by two competent persons"; in other words, valuers are called in, and duty becomes chargeable on the local value. Thus on my reading of the law, as a matter of reason and common sense, it appears to me, that if an importer refuse to verify his invoice on oath when called upon by the Collector, and so declines to bring himself within the pains and penalties of the 8th clause, or if the invoice price is not known, "then if it shall appear to the Collector," of course upon due inquiry, that such goods have been undervalued, he may on the prima facie case thus raised—that an attempt has been made to enter goods below their current value at the place from whence imported,—call in valuers, and charge duty on the local value of such articles.

Assuming however that my view of the law may be open to question, and that the Collector was justified in proceeding to local valuation after I had verified my invoices upon oath, I desire to bring prominently under the notice of the Government the fact that I am in a position to prove, by incontrovertible evidence, that even under his own reading of the law, Mr. Duncan has administered its provisions in my case differently from his actings in other similar cases, by reason of which my property has been exposed for thirteen days to injury from the weather, the delivery of goods sold impeded, the market for a portion of my goods lost, my time wasted in an anxious and protracted correspondence, and finally myself plundered by an act of extortion of some £35, under colour of a claim for post duty.

Under those circumstances I would respectfully ask whether you, as responsible Minister in charge of the Department of Finance, are prepared and willing to receive the proofs of maladministration to which I have adverted, and which I am ready to submit to you; or whether, in terms of your letter of 6th instant, you still consider it undesirable that this correspondence should be continued.

I have, &c.,

The Treasury,
9 August, 1870.

ACKNOWLEDGE receipt of Mr. Dibbs' letter of 8th in reply to Treasury letter of 6th instant, respecting the differences between the Collector of Customs and himself, as to the value for ad valorem duty of certain goods per "Clara Hargraves," from Liverpool.

Mr. Dibbs states that the differences referred to are threefold, and whilst waiving the first and second complaints, yet urges upon my notice the third, in which he charges the Collector with "maladministration of the law and of his office."

Inform Mr. Dibbs, in reply, that so far as such charge is based on the construction of the statute, upon a full consideration of the facts as disclosed by the correspondence, I am of opinion that the Collector of Customs did not exceed the powers conferred upon him by the Customs Act (9 Victoria, No. 15, sec. 22), and that I therefore regard his view of that section as erroneous. Remark further that I feel assured that he will, upon a careful reading of the section, see that the course adopted by the Collector is not necessarily any reflection upon the reliability of his oath.

In reference to Mr. Dibbs' charge that Mr. Duncan has, in his case, administered the provisions of the law "differently from his actings in other similar cases," by reason of which he has sustained the injuries stated in his letter, acquaint him that I am quite willing to accede to his request "to receive the proofs of maladministration."

THE UNDER SECRETARY FOR FINANCE AND TRADE TO MR. GEORGE R. DIBBS.

The Treasury, New South Wales,

SIR,

I have the honor to acknowledge receipt of your letter of 8th, in reply to mine of 6th instant, respecting the differences between the Collector of Customs and yourself, as to the value for ad valorem duty of certain goods per "Clara Hargraves," from Liverpool.

You state that the differences referred to are threefold, and whilst waiving the first and second complaints, yet urge upon the notice of the Colonial Treasurer the third, in which you charge the Collector with "maladministration of the law and of his office."

So far as such charge is based on the construction of the statute, I am directed to inform you that, upon a full consideration of the facts as disclosed by the correspondence, the Treasurer is of opinion that the Collector of Customs did not exceed the powers conferred upon him by the Customs Act (9 Victoria, No. 15, sec. 22), and Mr. Samuel therefore regards your view of that section as erroneous. I am desired to remark, further, that Mr. Samuel feels assured that you will upon a careful reading of the section, see that the course adopted by the Collector is not necessarily any reflection upon the reliability of your oath.

In reference to your charge that Mr. Duncan has, in your case, administered the provisions of the law "differently from his actings in other similar cases," by reason of which you have sustained the injuries stated in your letter, I am to acquaint you that the Treasurer is quite willing to accede to your request "to receive the proofs of maladministration."

MR. GEORGE R. DIBBS to THE COLONIAL TREASURER.

127, Pitt-street,
Sydney, 11 August, 1870.

SIR,

SIR, I have the honor to acknowledge receipt of your letter of the 9th instant (in reply to mine of 8th idem), wherein you express your willingness to receive the proofs which I am prepared to offer of Mr. Duncan's maladministration of the law and of his office.

The maladministration complained of, so far as it affects me, arises chiefly in connection with the valuation for duty of a parcel of salt, ex "Clara Hargraves" from Liverpool.

I will point out in the first place the actings of Mr. Duncan in reference to salt imported by other merchants of this city, at a point of time nearly coincident with my own importation.

No. 1.

On the 23rd May, 1870 (see document A annexed), Messrs. Scott, Henderson, & Co. obtained a sight entry to examine an importation of 3,300 sacks of salt, ex "Medea," from Liverpool. Approximate duty thereon, £10 18s. 8d., is approved in the margin by Mr. Duncan, in his own handwriting. On perfecting the entry, the salt is passed on the ordinary declaration at a value of 5s. 6d. per ton, exclusive of bags; the amount of such duty (with that on the sacks, which are valued separately) being £10 9s. 3d., involving a refund of 9s. 5d. The 10 per cent. addition to cost "at place whence imported" (as required by law) does not appear on the entry.

No. 2.

On the 25th May, 1870, Messrs. Willis, Merry, & Co. pass entry for 100 tons common salt, ex "Medea," from Liverpool (see paper B annexed), at value on the ordinary declaration, exclusive of bags, of 5s. 6d. per ton—aggregating £27 10s., duty being £1 7s. 6d. The addition of 10 per cent. addition to the cost "at place whence imported," as required by law, does not appear on the entry. On the entry is the following memorandum:—"On interview, Collector satisfied with this value.—J.F."

No. 3.

On the 25th May, 1870, Messrs. Learmonth, Dickinson, & Co. pass entry for 50 tons (ex "Cairnmore," from Liverpool) common salt at 4s. 6d. per ton, exclusive of bags, 50 tons rock salt at 8s. per ton, on the ordinary declaration—the aggregate value for duty being £31 5s., to which 10 per cent. is added as required by law. (See paper C annexed.)

Now as to my own case.

During the latter part of 1869 I visited England for business purposes, and purchased, through the well-known and long-established firm of Messrs. W. & J. Lockett, of 12 King-street, Liverpool, for cash, less a discount, certain goods, which arrived here in the "Clara Hargrave." Included in these were 356 tons salt. On the 11th and 12th July I entered this salt, through my agent Mr. M. Bayley, at the following values, on the ordinary declaration, being the exact cost to me of such salt at the place "whence imported," viz.:—

	£	s.	d.
--	---	----	----

exclusive of bags	256 tons common salt, at 4/6 per ton, less 2½ per cent. ...	56	3	3
	25½ " stoved " " 7/6 " " " " ...	9	6	3
	75 " rock " " 5/6 " " " " ...	20	0	6

with the addition of 10 per cent., as required by law. (See paper D annexed.)

At this point of the business, permit me to inquire what prima facie doubt could possibly arise in the mind of Mr. Duncan to justify his questioning these values. He had already, in the month of May preceding, passed salt on the entries of three other importers, at the values respectively of 4/6 and 5/6 per ton, for common salt, exclusive of bags, and had thereby not merely acquired a knowledge of the value of the article at the place "whence imported," but had fixed that value, by three separate and deliberate acts, as the lawful basis for the duty.

Vide paper E.

To proceed, then. Mr. Duncan questioned my valuations, and demanded the production of the original invoice. The original invoice was produced. Doubting the genuineness of the invoice, Mr. Duncan then required that I should declare, upon oath, the correctness of the invoice, and that the price of the salt "was the current value of that article at the place whence imported." I complied with this demand, and made oath accordingly. Not content with this solemn act, which brought me, if acting malâ fide, within the pains and penalties of perjury, Mr. Duncan appointed valuers, under whose examination and report, I presume, I have been compelled (under protest) to pay duty on the whole of my salt, without discrimination as to quality, at the value of £1 19s. 1d. per ton, exclusive of bags!!!

Now, sir, I ask you seriously to consider the facts thus briefly narrated. On the one hand, the mercantile firms in the cases now brought under your notice were not required to make other than the usual declaration of value; their declaration of such value was not questioned—they were not put on their oaths! On the other hand, Mr. Duncan (antecedently to his non-reception of my entries) was fully cognizant, as the three cases show, of the price of salt in the market where purchased, and had determined such value as the basis for duty. Why then, I ask again, was a different course of acting adopted towards me? Is the Collector, by law, entitled to act capriciously, and to make fish of one importer and flesh of another?

Reserving, for the present, my complaint as to the undue valuation, by the Collector's authority, of other portions of my goods, and further comment on the injury I have sustained, I would for the present remark that, having shown three separate cases, with proofs annexed, in which Mr. Duncan has administered the provisions of the law "differently from his actings in other similar cases," I respectfully submit that my charge of "maladministration of the law and of his office" is sufficiently proved to demand an immediate refund of the duty overcharged on my salt, and an inquiry into Mr. Duncan's conduct in connection therewith.

MR. GEORGE R. DIBBS TO THE UNDER SECRETARY FOR FINANCE AND TRADE.

127, Pitt-street, Sydney,
19 August, 1870.

SIR,

On the 12th instant I had the honor to address a letter to the Honorable the Treasurer, averring my charges of maladministration against the Collector of Customs, and requesting a refund of the over-charge on my goods per the "Clara Hargrave," and an inquiry into Mr. Duncan's conduct in connection therewith.

I have not yet been favoured with any acknowledgment of the letter referred to, and I will be glad to know at the earliest date the course which the Treasurer has decided to take in the matter.

SIR,

I have the honor to acknowledge receipt of your letter of to-day's date, with respect to charges preferred by you against the Collector of Customs.

I am desired by the Colonial Treasurer to inform you, in reply, that reference has been made to the Collector upon the subject of your complaint.

When the report of that officer is received, the matter will be duly considered, and the Treasurer's decision communicated to you.

No. 23.

THE COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS TO THE UNDER SECRETARY FOR FINANCE AND TRADE.

Custom House, Sydney,
18 August, 1870.

SIR,

I am inclined to think that the proper answer to a charge of "maladministration of the law and of his office" against the Collector of Customs would be a criminal action in the Supreme Court against his accuser. I however proceed, for the information of the Honorable the Colonial Treasurer, to notice Mr. Dibbs's charges, and there will I think be no great difficulty in disposing of them. Enclosures herewith.

1. Mr. Dibbs, before entering upon his own grievance, quotes three instances of what he calls my "actings" with respect to salt imported by other persons. Now it is quite certain that large quantities of goods have been from time to time entered here below their value, notwithstanding my utmost vigilance; and that even in cases in which goods have been detained on the ground of undervaluation, I have sometimes been imposed on by the statements of importers. This admission would be made by every Collector who has had the misfortune to collect ad valorem duties.

If, therefore, I had allowed the different firms cited by Mr. Dibbs to pass improper entries, it would be no proof of maladministration; far less would it furnish any reason for allowing him to perpetrate a still greater offence; but it is not true that I committed the errors attributed to me by Mr. Dibbs.

2. With respect to the case of Messrs. Scott, Henderson, & Co., whose salt was entered at 5s. 6d. per ton exclusive of the bags, which were valued at £137 10s., I would ask what that has in common with the case of Mr. Dibbs, who entered his salt at 4s. 6d. per ton with nothing for the bags? On examining their invoice (copy herewith, "A"), it appears that the salt cost 5s. per ton at the works, and £45 for carriage to Liverpool. This last sum ought clearly to have been added to the value, as it is a portion of the cost of the salt at the port of shipment; but the invoice was not then called for, and it appears from the statement of Mr. Fraser, the landing-waiter, that the value was queried at the time, and that it having been represented to me that the "Medea" had arrived disabled, and that the cargo was immensely damaged (a vast number of the bags being wholly washed out), I was satisfied to take the value as declared. I had a perfect right to do this under the 26th section of the General Customs Act. As to what Mr. Dibbs states about the alleged omission of the 10 per cent., this is an attack upon Messrs. Scott, Henderson, & Co., not on me, and they answer it by producing proof that it was added, although not shown on the entry, where the law does not require it to be shown, and where in my often expressed opinion it ought never to be shown. What the law requires is a declaration of the value of the goods "at the port of importation in the said Colony." The addition of 10 per cent. to the invoice price may or may not be afterwards taken as representing the colonial value. It will be seen that Messrs. Scott, Henderson, & Co. (vide letter C) admit their error in omitting the river freight, which is clearly as much a part of the value of the salt at "the port of shipment" as the 5s. per ton paid at the works.

3. Messrs. Willis & Co.'s salt was by the same ship, and they claimed and were allowed to enter at the same rate (vide their letter D), and for the same reason; although I believe their loss did not turn out so great as that of the other firm. I had quite forgotten the circumstances of their entry; but finding a memorandum on it of my approval, with the initials of the landing-waiter, Mr. Fraser, I called upon that officer to explain, and his answer (herewith—E) at once reminded me of the fact. I treated the two firms precisely alike, as the papers produced by Mr. Dibbs prove. Messrs. Willis & Co. paid on the bags, valued at £41, in addition to the 5s. 6d. per ton, adding the 10 per cent., but omitting the river freight. Mr. Dibbs paid nothing on his bags, nothing on the river freight, and only at the rate of 4s. 6d. per ton, including the 10 per cent. Is there any parallel between his case and either of the above?

4. The case of Messrs. Learmonth & Dickinson is quite different from the other two, and I must confess that a mistake was committed in this instance; but I had as little to do with it as Mr. Dibbs himself—having heard nothing of it till the salt was delivered and the ship had left the port. No one can imagine that it is possible for me even to look at all entries, far less to examine them, and it was only after the ship was discharged and gone, and after Mr. Dibbs' case had arisen, that I accidentally heard of it. I have since seen the invoice, and I find that, as in the other two cases, the cost of the river transmission, amounting to 3s. per ton, had been erroneously omitted. Mr. Dickinson, like Messrs. Scott, Henderson, & Co., has promised in future to include this item. It appears that the acting landing-waiter, Mr. Paschen, observed the low price of the salt, and called the attention of Mr. Berney, the landing-surveyor, to it, who directed him to write to the importers, but gave no directions to detain the salt; and neither Mr. Berney nor Mr. Paschen brought the matter under my notice, nor have I been able to obtain from either any intelligible report of the case. In what way then can I be charged with maladministration in a matter which never was brought under my notice till after the ship had been discharged and had left the port?

5. I come now to Mr. Dibbs' own case. The first intimation I had of it was a statement from one of the tide-surveyors, that he had found a small steam-boat on Mr. Dibbs' vessel, which the captain represented as belonging to the ship, and therefore not liable to duty; but that knowing the contrary, he had ordered the tide-waiter to detain the boat till the duty was paid (vide letters F and G). Shortly afterwards Mr. Dibbs and Mr. Bayley came into my office and represented that the boat had been used by him as a pleasure-boat in England, and was intended to be used by him as a pleasure-boat here, and that it ought to be admitted free, on the same principle that used furniture and other private effects are admitted free. I demurred to this; but as he argued the case well, and the Chief Clerk, who came into the room during the discussion, agreed with him, I allowed myself to be persuaded, and gave direction to accept a free entry (vide letter H). Mr. Dibbs had hardly left the Custom House when it flashed to my recollection that he had only made a flying trip to England, and could hardly therefore have used a pleasure-boat there; and on further inquiry I was informed that it was not intended for his personal use here, but had been purchased for his brother at the Commercial Bank. I again saw Mr. Dibbs, and expressing some indignation at the way he had deceived me, demanded the duty on the boat, which, as I had accepted a free entry, he declined to pay, admitting however that the boat was for his brother; and a good deal of idle correspondence took place on the subject. In order to bring the matter to a termination, I sent Mr. Jones to Mr. T. A. Dibbs to request him, as the boat was his, to pay the duty. Mr. T. A. Dibbs was very polite, but repudiated the transaction, stating however that it was brought out as a present for his son (vide letter I). I therefore detained the boat, and after an immense amount of trouble and annoyance, Mr. Dibbs, the importer, paid the duty.

While this was going on, it was brought to my notice that Mr. Dibbs had passed an entry for a quantity of merchandise by the same vessel, a good deal of which was allowed to pass unquestioned; but the rest being manifestly undervalued, Mr. Dibbs was called upon to prove his values or pay additional duty. Mr. Bayley, his agent, appeared, and stated that he had seen the invoice, and that Mr. Dibbs was prepared to swear to the values. I said I hoped not, because I would not believe him even if he did swear that the current price of salt at Liverpool was 4s. 6d. per ton. This was meant partly as a caution and partly as an expression of my belief that Mr. Dibbs would not swear to his values. He did however swear to them, with the exception of one item for empty casks, which he had declared at £4, and which duly appointed valuers afterwards swore were worth £48!

The copy of his entry produced by Mr. Dibbs shows that he declared the Liverpool value of his common salt to be about 4s. 4½d. per ton, which, at the rate of river carriage, &c., shown upon every genuine invoice, would make the price at the salt-works to be about 1s. 4d. per ton. Could Mr. Dibbs expect me to believe in the truth of an invoice from which the item of 8s. per ton was carefully omitted—in which also the price of the bags, which is usually more than the price of the salt, was also omitted? I had indeed no doubt, and I have now no doubt, that the invoice produced was not a genuine one, but drawn up for the express purpose of enabling Mr. Dibbs to enter his salt at a fraction of its real value; and believing this I did exactly what the 22nd section of the Act 9 Vic., No. 15, requires me to do in such case. I had the salt, shooks, and casks valued by sworn valuers, by which the Revenue has very properly gained £35 14s. 1d.; and although Mr. Dibbs is naturally irritated at the failure of his plans, I do not think that any honorable man who reads this letter and accompanying papers will say that he has been even sufficiently mulcted, or that I have been guilty of any maladministration in his case.

Messrs. Scott, Henderson, & Co., to The Collector of Customs.

Sydney, 16 August, 1870.

Sir,

We have the honor to own receipt of your letter of even date, having reference to the entry of salt imported by us in the "Medea," from Liverpool.

On looking into the facts we find that sight entries were first passed, 23–25 May.

Anticipating that by reason of sea-water damage, the full quantity shipped would not be landed.

That completing entry was passed on the 9th June, when, as will be seen from accompanying copies of that document and the invoice forwarded us by consignors, duty was paid both on bags and salt, fully 10 per cent. being added to cost of each, although in our letter to you of 25th May we had protested against the duty being exacted upon packages.

The

The statement of the party complaining that no entry had been admitted without such 10 per cent. being added is therefore manifestly untrue.

That being unaccustomed, when about to prepare entries, to look minutely at the charges portion of an invoice, it was not until to-day perceived either by our clerk or ourselves, that one of the items charged in this particular invoice consisted of 3s. per ton river freight (we presume from the salt-works to Liverpool) which should properly have been taken into account when paying duty.

Having rendered account sales to the shippers, we shall be unable to recover from them any further sum we may now disburse for duty. Should you however consider we ought to pay ad valorem duty on the omitted item pointed out, be good enough to intimate the same, and we will at once hand a cheque for the amount.

We have, &c.,

Messrs. Willis, Lloyd, & Co., to The Collector of Customs.

Sydney, 16 August, 1870.

Sir,

In answer to your letter of this date, with reference to value for duty at which we passed an entry for salt by the "Medea" from Liverpool, we find on reference to copy of entry 25 May, that it was passed as 100 tons common salt, contained in 1,100 bags, value £27 10s., duty £1 7s. 6d. This value included 10 per cent. on cost of the article, and should have been expressed so as to show—

100 tons cost, 5s.	£25	0	0
Add 10 per cent.	2	10	0
							£27	10	0

We are not aware that any communication passed with yourself in reference to this shipment. We directed our clerk to pass at same value for duty as other salt. Say 300 tons was passed, and this was as above stated on cost at 5s. and 10 per cent. added. Our entry was imperfectly worded, but 10 per cent was included in the value.

Yours truly,
WILLIS, LLOYD, & CO.

Enclosed I forward a note addressed to me by Mr. Tide-waiter Gerahty, which will show you the action I took in the matter. I may mention that, in a conversation with Capt. Stammerjohn on the subject, he stated that he was prepared to make a declaration before you that she was a part of the ship's fit-out. I gave him a caution as to what he said about her, when he repeated over and over again the statement given above, adding that he would make that declaration before any one. The steps subsequently taken, by your instructions, for the due protection of the Revenue it will be unnecessary for me to refer to here.

Sir,

Referring to your inquiries of this day respecting a steam-boat belonging to the barque "Clara Hargrave," of which vessel I was in charge, I have the honor to state that you drew my attention to the boat, which was alongside the ship directly we commenced unloading, and gave me orders not to allow her to be removed without previously receiving an entry. I at once informed Capt. Stammerjohn, who replied that no entry was required, as the boat belonged to the ship. Subsequently I received an entry from the landing-waiter when she was taken away.

Custom House, Sydney,

I was present during a discussion between the Collector, Mr. Dibbs, and Mr. Bayley, respecting the admission of a pleasure steam-boat free of duty. In the conversation I asked Mr. Dibbs whether he had used the boat himself in England, and, as far as my recollection serves me, he stated that he had done so on the river Mersey, and brought it here for his own use. Upon this I observed to Mr. Duncan that it was merely a question whether the boat could be admitted free in the same way as we admit a buggy the personal property of a person who had used it in another place, it being the intention of the law to admit passengers' baggage free of ad valorem duties.

Memo.

As requested, I called upon Mr. T. A. Dibbs at the Commercial Bank, on the morning of Saturday, the 16th ultimo, and conveyed to him the Collector's message, which was to the following effect:—

That the Collector had been informed that the boat entered by his brother, a few days previously, was the property of Mr. T. A. Dibbs, and therefore should not have been allowed to pass without payment of duty; that the Collector was desirous to have the duty paid without resorting to the extreme measure of seizing the boat, but that if the duty was not paid on Monday, he would feel it his duty to detain her.

Mr.

Mr. Dibbs' reply, to the best of my recollection, was—"Make my compliments to the Collector, and say I have nothing whatever to do with the boat—he may seize her or do whatever he pleases with her; I will not pay the duty. My brother George is the person to look to."

In course of the conversation, Mr. Dibbs told me, first, that the boat was not his, though he knew his brother had brought her out for him, and afterwards explained why his brother purchased her. When Mr. George Dibbs was leaving the Colony he promised to buy a toy steamboat for Mr. T. A. Dibbs' son, and in one of his letters Mr. George Dibbs said that he had not forgotten the promise to his nephew, and had bought a "real live" steamer instead of the toy.

Sydney, 20 August, 1870.

SIR,

I have the honor to acknowledge receipt of your letter of yesterday's date, in which you inform me "that reference has been made to the Collector upon the subject of my complaint, and that when the report of that officer is received, the matter will be duly considered, and the Treasurer's decision communicated to me."

If I am to understand from this that it is the intention of the Honorable the Treasurer to decide the weighty charge which I have preferred against a public servant, of maladministration of the law and of his office, upon the mere "report" of the party accused, I must respectfully demur to that course of procedure. Such report, I apprehend, cannot properly be received as conclusive in the face of a specific charge, supported by documentary evidence, and I would submit that the statements made on both sides should be accessible to the parties concerned.

I have therefore respectfully to request that Mr. Duncan's report may be forwarded to me for perusal and comment, before the case can be considered as ripe for the Treasurer's decision.

SIR,

I have the honor to request that you will be good enough to invite the attention of the Honorable the Treasurer to the delay which has occurred, since I made my charge of maladministration against the Collector of Customs, and sought redress at Mr. Samuel's hands.

I would remind you, that I preferred my charge against Mr. Duncan in writing on the 12th instant; but receiving no acknowledgment of my letter, I wrote on the 19th instant, bringing under your notice that circumstance; when you informed me, in reply to the latter communication, "that reference had been made to the Collector upon the subject of my complaint. When the report of that officer is received, the matter will be duly considered, and the Treasurer's decision communicated to me." On being thus made aware of Mr. Samuel's course of action, I wrote you on the following day, requesting to be favoured with Mr. Duncan's report for perusal and comment, so that a complete case might be presented for the Treasurer's decision.

Not hearing from you in answer to this letter, I addressed you again on the 24th instant, informing you that I had received no acknowledgment of my said letter of 20th instant, and requesting to know if Mr. Duncan's report had reached the Treasurer; and asking when I might expect to receive it.

Fourteen days having elapsed since my charge was first submitted to the Treasurer, I feel that I am now entitled to ask that no further delay should be permitted to take place in bringing this matter to a position for settlement.

In reply to your letter of this day's date, and with reference to previous correspondence, I am desired to inform you that, the Colonial Treasurer having considered the evidence adduced in support of the charge you have brought against the Collector of Customs, has arrived at the conclusion that Mr. Duncan has not been guilty of maladministration either "of the law" or "of his office."

MR. GEORGE R. DIBBS TO THE UNDER SECRETARY FOR FINANCE AND TRADE.

127, Pitt-street,
Sydney, 29 August, 1870.

SIR,

I have the honor to acknowledge receipt of your letter of 26th instant, in which you inform me that the Honorable the Treasurer, "having considered the evidence adduced in support of the charge brought against the Collector of Customs, has arrived at the conclusion that Mr. Duncan has not been guilty of maladministration either of the law or of his office."

I desire, at the earliest possible moment, to place on record my dissent from this conclusion, as altogether at variance with the merits of the case.

In my communication of the 11th instant (withholding for the moment other causes of complaint) I preferred against the Collector of Customs a charge of maladministration of the law and of his office, supported by the unimpeachable testimony of public documents from the records of the Customs' Department. The charge thus supported was submitted to the Treasurer, as sufficiently proved to justify an immediate refund of the duty overcharged on my salt, and (looking beyond my private grievance) as of sufficient importance to the commercial public to demand a searching inquiry into the arbitrary and capricious, and, as I am advised, the illegal actings of Mr. Duncan.

Now, sir, permit me to ask what has been the conduct of the Honorable the Treasurer—viewing him as the primary Court of Appeal—throughout the whole of this matter?

Prior to my preferring my charge against Mr. Duncan in connection with the salt ex "Clara Hargrave," I had repeatedly brought under Mr. Samuel's notice instances of grossly insulting conduct on the part of Mr. Duncan towards me, and failed to obtain at his hands that protection, redress, or satisfaction which, as a citizen engaged in the conduct of my business, it was my right to expect from a responsible Minister at the head of the department; and it was only on my consenting to waive, for the time being, the further prosecution of these complaints, that I was permitted to bring before the Treasurer the more serious charges as embodied in my letter of the 11th instant. In point of fact it was intimated to me, in your letter of the 6th instant, that the Treasurer considered it desirable that the correspondence (that is, the complaints) should be discontinued.

Having however succeeded in convincing the Treasurer that on public grounds my case should be entertained, and having recorded a charge of maladministration against Mr. Duncan, Mr. Samuel then intimated his willingness to receive the proofs in support of the charge.

The charge itself, as you are aware, with the relative proofs, is embodied in my letter of the 11th instant, which remained without the courtesy of an official acknowledgment, until I addressed you on the 19th instant, when you informed me, "that reference had been made to the Collector on the subject, and that when that officer's report was received the matter would be duly considered, and the Treasurer's decision communicated." On the 20th instant I replied to this letter, protesting against the charge being decided upon the ex parte statement of the accused, and pointing out that the case would not be ripe for decision until I had the opportunity of rebutting, if necessary, the allegations (if any) of Mr. Duncan in defence. This letter remained unanswered until the 26th instant; in the meantime your attention had been twice called to the delay.

That reply is now before me, and I desire to point out that the Treasurer appears to have abandoned the course of proceeding intimated to me in your letter of 19th instant, as I was then informed that Mr. Duncan's report was to be an element in the consideration of the case. May I ask if such report has been received—if it has been considered—and if it has influenced Mr. Samuel in arriving at the extraordinary conclusion which you notify to me? If such be the case, then the conclusion has been arrived at unfairly, and on testimony which I have had no opportunity of rebutting. If, on the other hand, the case has been considered simply with reference to the sufficiency or insufficiency of the proof adduced in support of my charge, I would then ask—having regard to Mr. Samuel's position as a responsible Minister, and in a matter where public interests are concerned—on what ground has he failed to call for further evidence, which, were the case not thus summarily disposed of, I should have been enabled if called upon to furnish.

Seeing

Seeing then that my appeal to the Hon. the Treasurer has been dealt with in an obvious spirit, rather to screen Mr. Duncan from the consequences of his improper conduct than to act fairly and impartially between that officer and the public,—and seeing further that, as regards my individual wrong, I have had no restitution of money of which I am defrauded—and, as regards the public wrong, no efficient or impartial inquiry has been instituted into Mr. Duncan's conduct,—I have now to intimate to you that it is my intention to appeal to Parliament for that redress which the Treasurer has failed to afford me.

Mr. George R. Dibbs to The Collector of Customs.

127, Pitt-street,
Sydney, 18 July, 1870.

Sir,

This morning I received a post-note, signed G. R. Hill, pro Collector of Customs, requesting me to pay the sum of two pounds ten shillings as duty on a boat landed from the barque "Clara Hargrave," from Liverpool, and passed by warrant 1349, 12th July.

During my interview with you on Saturday, respecting the salt entered by the "Clara Hargrave," you intimated that you had been deceived and humbugged by me, and that I had misrepresented to you the facts concerning the boat in question, otherwise you would not have consented to admit her free of duty; and that you had in consequence given instructions to one of the officials of your department to seize her; and you also made other offensive insinuations—that I was trying to defraud the Revenue, &c.

I objected to and protested against your addressing such observations to me, as uncalled for and untrue as regard the facts, and as being unworthy of your position, and beyond the authority of your office to make; and you subsequently stated you supposed you had misunderstood my explanation, and so had consented to pass the boat, and that if the amount now claimed were not paid, you would have to pay it from your own pocket.

It is not my wish, as already conveyed to you visa voce, that you should be a sufferer by an error; but protesting, as I still do, against your language and insinuations, I have now to state that I shall be prepared to pay the amount required by the post-note, on receiving your retraction of the offensive allegations referred to.

I am, &c.,
GEORGE R. DIBBS.

Sir,

I have just been informed that a small steam-boat landed from the barque "Clara Hargrave," Liverpool, under an entry passed 12th instant, and admitted by your orders duty free, has been seized by an officer of your department.

I beg to be informed if such seizure has been made by your orders.

Sir,

I received instructions this morning from Mr. Jones, landing-surveyor, to tell the officer on the "Clara Hargrave" to detain the small steamer alongside until the duty was paid. The officer was informed accordingly, and he tells me that the captain of the "Clara Hargrave" has taken away the boat against his orders.

I am sorry to find the boat has been seized. I am clearly of opinion she ought not to have been, and must be given up. If she came as cargo she ought to pay duty, as I do not find that boats imported are exempt, though it does appear to me an anomaly that vessels sailing here should be exempt from duty, whilst those carried on a ship's deck should not be.—S.S., 21/7/70.

MINUTE OF THE COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS.

The Treasurer has been misinformed as to the seizure of the boat. We detain goods every day for security of the duty—the Queen's Warehouse is often full of them—but these are in no sense seizures, though they are sometimes confounded with such.

In mentioning the distinction between boats and ships, Mr. Samuel has not adverted to the fact that our Legislature has no power to tax "British registered ships," which are free wherever the British flag floats, wherever their owners may be resident. Boats have no such privilege, and are not exempted by our tariff. W.A.D., 22/7/70.

The boat has not been "illegally seized," nor seized at all. Mr. Bayley's declaration deceived the Chief Clerk, who initialled the entry; and the statements made to myself by Mr. Dibbs, which I afterwards discovered to be incorrect, deceived me in the first instance. I told him so, and demanded the duty, which he promised to pay, but has not yet paid. The boat will be delivered when the duty is paid.—W.A.D., 22/7/70.

SIR,

I have the honor to acknowledge receipt of your letter of 20th instant, upon the subject of the alleged seizure of a boat ex "Clara Hargraves" from Liverpool, for ad valorem duty.

The Collector of Customs, to whom the same was referred, reports that the boat was not "seized," but that delivery of same is withheld until the duty be paid.

I am also to state that, as boats are not exempt from duty, such duty must be paid in the case brought under notice.

MR. GEORGE R. DIBBS TO THE COLONIAL TREASURER.

SIR,

I have to acknowledge receipt of your letter of 23rd instant, respecting the boat landed from the "Clara Hargrave," in which you inform me that the Collector of Customs, to whom my letter had been referred, had reported "that the boat had not been seized, but that delivery is withheld until the duty be paid."

I fear the facts noted in my letters to the Collector, and of which I enclosed copies in mine to you of 20th, have escaped your observation. They are—

1. The boat was admitted free of duty by order of the Collector, and in terms of the entry, copy of which I have laid before you.
2. Under that entry the boat was delivered to me.
3. The boat was in my possession for a week, her machinery and boiler had been removed, sent up town, repaired, cleaned, and replaced in the boat.
4. The boat had been used by me the day previous to seizure, and, as a matter of convenience, remoored alongside the ship.

I

I contend therefore, that delivery having once been made, and that beyond question of doubt, no person, be he Collector or other grade of Customs' official, has a right to seize, or—to use the Collector's expression—to "withhold for duty."

The concluding paragraph of your letter intimates that boats are not exempt, and that the duty must, in the case brought under notice, be paid.

In my letter to the Collector I have already expressed my willingness to pay the amount claimed "subsequent to delivery," but I declined doing so until I receive a retraction of the offensive and unjustifiable expressions which he had addressed to me.

I repeat that I am still willing to pay the duty; but I demand, before doing so, that the Collector be compelled by you, as his superior, to retract the expressions I have alluded to; otherwise, the payment by me of the £2 10s. would be an acknowledgment that I had been guilty or was capable of the conduct Mr. Duncan alleges.

I am advised that the Collector's action is palpably so devoid of reason and untenable as a matter of law that I have a legal remedy against him, or that I should adopt a similar course to that pursued by him, and remove the boat from his custody; but I decline to take any steps pending my appeal to the head of his department.

I am informed that the machinery of the boat has suffered some damage from neglect and exposure. I respectfully beg to give notice that I shall expect the boat returned in the like good order as on the day possession was taken by Mr. Duncan's orders.

HAVING perused the papers in this case, I find that the Collector of Customs does not deny that, in the first instance, he admitted the boat without payment of duty. This, he states, was done under representations which he afterwards found to be incorrect. It does not, however, bar the right of the Crown, whose claim remains good, and I trust that Mr. Dibbs will pay the duty without further delay. I regret that Mr. Dibbs feels that offensive language was addressed to him by the Collector, during an interview between them on the subject. If he continue to feel aggrieved Mr. Dibbs should make this a separate charge, in order that it may be dealt with upon its merits. I cannot admit it as a plea for delaying payment of the duty.

SIR,

I have the honor to acknowledge receipt of your letter of yesterday's date, in reply to mine of 23rd instant.

The Treasurer desires me to inform you that he has perused the papers in the case adverted to therein, and finds that the Collector of Customs does not deny that the boat was admitted, in the first instance, without payment of duty. Mr. Duncan reports that this was done under representations which were afterwards found to be incorrect.

I am to state that such delivery does not bar the right of the Crown, whose claim remains good, and Mr. Samuel trusts that the duty will be paid without further delay.

The Treasurer regrets that you should feel that offensive language was addressed to you by the Collector, during an interview on the subject. If you continue to feel aggrieved, a separate charge should be made, in order that it may be dealt with upon its merits. I am to point out that any such charge cannot be admitted as a plea for delaying payment of the duty.

SIR,

I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of 26th instant, from which I find—1. An admission that the boat ex "Clara Hargrave" was landed free of duty, in the first instance, but it was done under representations found afterwards to be incorrect. 2. Also admitted that delivery of the boat had been made, but you consider such delivery does not bar the right of the Crown. 3. That if I still continue to feel aggrieved, I should make Mr. Duncan's language the subject of a special charge.

1. In reply, I beg to be informed in what Mr. Duncan considers my representations to be incorrect, and to say that the statements made by me are embodied in the declaration in the entry. If Mr. Duncan subsequently conceived that declaration to be incorrect, he should have called upon me for further explanation; and then failing being satisfied, he had his remedy for false declaration, if such were proved.

2. Delivery having been made under a legal warrant, the right of the Government "to withhold for duty" ceased. The right of the Crown to seize never existed, because no attempt to smuggle or land dutiable goods, without warrant or duty, was made. The amount subsequently claimed for duty has never been refused, although the right to enforce it in the manner attempted by the Collector, and in his unsupported allegation of misrepresentation, opposed to a solemn declaration, is denied.

3. I decline to make Mr. Duncan's offensive language the subject of special charge, having already twice by letter called your attention to it; but I respectfully assert that no public officer, however zealous he may be in the discharge of his duties, should be permitted to grossly insult persons with whom he is coming in daily contact, without inquiry or rebuke from his superiors.

The answer to this letter should, in my opinion, be a demand for the immediate payment of the duty on the boat. I am not certain of the exact expressions used by me of which Mr. D. complains, but I am certain that they were, under the circumstances, a very moderate protest against the incorrect representations made by him with a view to evade the payment of duty on the boat. 1st. He instructed the master of the "Clara Hargraves" to claim it as a boat belonging to the ship. 2nd. When this failed, he represented it as a part of his personal effects; that he had used it as a pleasure-boat in England, and intended so to use it here. 3rd. He afterwards admitted to me that the boat was purchased for his brother at the Commercial Bank; thus contradicting both the previous statements; and as his brother (when called upon by me to pay the duty) repudiated the transaction, Mr. D. now states, 4thly, that he brought it out as a present to his nephew. Only one of these statements can be the truth.—W.A.D., 28/7/70.

ACKNOWLEDGE receipt of Mr. Dibbs' letter of 27th instant, in reply to Treasury letter of previous day, with respect to the boat imported by him per "Clara Hargraves," from Liverpool.

Mr. Dibbs requests to be informed in what the Collector of Customs considers his representations to have been incorrect; observes that the statements made by him are embodied in the declaration on the face of the entry; and submits that Mr. Duncan should have called upon him for further explanation, and had his remedy for "false declaration" if such were proved.

State, in reply, that the entry for the boat was received as free of duty, under the representation that it was part of personal effects, and intended for Mr. Dibbs' own use. This, I am informed, he afterwards admitted to be incorrect. It has not been stated by Mr. Duncan that the declaration was "false," but that upon Mr. Dibbs' own showing, subsequently to the declaration, the boat is clearly liable to duty. Boats imported as cargo pay ad valorem duty; and it is to enforce such payment that the boat which forms the subject of this correspondence is detained.

With reference to his complaint of discourtesy on the part of the Collector of Customs, inform Mr. Dibbs that Mr. Duncan states that he regarded, at the time, the observations he addressed to him as a moderate protest against his representations, which Mr. Duncan considered to be incorrect. I am anxious that every officer under my control should observe the rules of courtesy in his intercourse with the public, and am prepared to insist upon those rules being observed. I regret that Mr. Dibbs should feel that he has cause to complain in this respect. I hope, however, that to prevent further unpleasantness in this matter, he will pay the trifling duty involved.

MR. GEORGE R. DIBBS TO THE COLONIAL TREASURER.

127, Pitt-street,
Sydney, 1 August, 1870.

SIR,

I have the honor to acknowledge receipt of your letter of 29th ultimo. 1. You state—I presume, on the report of the Collector—that the entry for the boat ex "Clara Hargrave" was received free of duty under the representation that it was part of personal effects, and intended for my own use. 2. That you are informed—I presume, again by the Collector—I afterwards admitted it (the representation) to be incorrect. 3. That on my own showing subsequently to declaration, the boat is clearly liable to duty. 4. That Mr. Duncan states he regarded at the time the observations he addressed to me "as a moderate protest" against my representations, which he conceived to be incorrect.

1. In reply, I beg to enclose a statement of the conversation, which took place at the time when the representations were made, verified by Mr. Bayley (Customs' Agent), who, with Mr. Llewellyn, was present in the Collector's room. The declaration on the entry so clearly embraced the substance of the representation, that Mr. Llewellyn, a few minutes after, indorsed with red ink the declaration and entry "Admitted duty free." If the declaration made did not tally with representation, why were the entry and declaration admitted, and the boat ordered to be delivered on the authority of the warrant so created? It therefore follows, and is as clearly proved, that the entry contains in brief language the representation made to the Collector.

2. I deny most emphatically that I afterwards admitted my representation to be incorrect—such a statement is tantamount to saying I admitted being a party to a false declaration. I beg to observe that in this particular you have been grossly misinformed.

3. An unfair interpretation is sought to be placed upon my words, when you aver that in "my own showing subsequently to declaration the boat is liable to duty." To save the Collector from being surcharged the amount which he stated he would have to pay from his own pocket, and in response to his "ad misericordiam," appeal subsequent to delivery, I offered to pay the amount claimed; but I gave my reasons for refusing to pay on demand or by force what I could only be asked as a favour, to save Mr. Duncan from personal loss. I did this without admitting that the boat in question came within the meaning of the Act as cargo.

4. I accept Mr. Duncan's statement that "he considers the observations he addressed to me as a 'moderate protest' against my representations which he conceived to be incorrect," as a retraction of what I conceive to be very offensive expressions; and I would remark, for his benefit, that he should endeavour in his official intercourse with the public still further to moderate his protests on the one hand, as the means possibly of preventing, on the other hand, a retaliation of a "moderate protest," which might be construed into a breach of the peace or a provoked personal assault.

In conclusion, I may be permitted to express my deep regret at the annoyance which I feel this lengthy correspondence must have caused you, and to suggest, as a method of terminating it, that, as misrepresentation to the Collector is denied, and the contrary clearly established—as delivery on a legal warrant is proved beyond doubt—as a manifest desire on my part has been repeatedly evinced to pay to the Revenue the £2 10s., whether legally due or not—as it follows, therefore, the withholding or detaining of the boat on the grounds conceived by the Collector is illegal—that Mr. Duncan restore the boat to the position and condition she was in at the date of his taking possession, and I will pay the amount claimed under the post-note in due course.

GEORGE R. DIBBS.

[Enclosure.]

MEMO. respecting the boat landed ex the "Clara Hargrave," Liverpool.

THE landing-waiter at Campbell's Wharf requiring an entry for the boat before he would permit her removal, in company with Mr. Bayley I waited on the Collector of Customs.

Mr. Llewellyn came to the Collector's room almost immediately after our entrance.

Mr. Bayley explained to Mr. Duncan that I had, while in Liverpool, purchased a small open boat having an engine and screw in her; that the boat was second-hand; that I had used her in the Mersey; that she was intended as a gift, and not imported for sale or barter; and asked if, under these circumstances, the Collector would sanction the boat to be admitted free of duty.

Mr. Llewellyn thought that as private carriages and pianos, furniture, &c., which had been in use, were allowed, under the head of "personal luggage," to pass duty free, the boat in question might also be admitted.

Mr. Duncan at first demurred to this, but subsequently, after making a few remarks on the difficulty of administering the law owing to the antagonistic views held by different Ministers, consented to pass the boat duty free, on Mr. Bayley making a declaration on the entry embodying what had been said.

GEORGE R. DIBBS.

The foregoing is a true and correct version of the conversation which took place in the Collector's room, on the occasion referred to herein.

THE COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS to THE UNDER SECRETARY FOR FINANCE AND TRADE.

Custom House, Sydney,
18 August, 1870.

SIR,

I am inclined to think that the proper answer to a charge of "maladministration of the law and of his office" against the Collector of Customs would be a criminal action in the Supreme Court against his accuser. I however proceed, for the information of the Honorable the Colonial Treasurer, to notice Mr. Dibbs's charges, and there will I think be no great difficulty in disposing of them. Enclosures herewith.

1. Mr. Dibbs, before entering upon his own grievance, quotes three instances of what he calls my "actings" with respect to salt imported by other persons. Now it is quite certain that large quantities of goods have been from time to time entered here below their value, notwithstanding my utmost vigilance; and that even in cases in which goods have been detained on the ground of undervaluation, I have sometimes been imposed on by the statements of importers. This admission would be made by every Collector who has had the misfortune to collect ad valorem duties.

If, therefore, I had allowed the different firms cited by Mr. Dibbs to pass improper entries, it would be no proof of maladministration; far less would it furnish any reason for allowing him to perpetrate a still greater offence; but it is not true that I committed the errors attributed to me by Mr. Dibbs.

2. With respect to the case of Messrs. Scott, Henderson, & Co., whose salt was entered at 5s. 6d. per ton exclusive of the bags, which were valued at £137 10s., I would ask what that has in common with the case of Mr. Dibbs, who entered his salt at 4s. 6d. per ton with nothing for the bags? On examining their invoice (copy herewith, "A"), it appears that the salt cost 5s. per ton at the works, and £45 for carriage to Liverpool. This last sum ought clearly to have been added to the value, as it is a portion of the cost of the salt at the port of shipment; but the invoice was not then called for, and it appears from the statement of Mr. Fraser, the landing-waiter, that the value was queried at the time, and that it having been represented to me that the "Medea" had arrived disabled, and that the cargo was immensely damaged (a vast number of the bags being wholly washed out), I was satisfied to take the value as declared. I had a perfect right to do this under the 26th section of the General Customs Act. As to what Mr. Dibbs states about the alleged omission of the 10 per cent., this is an attack upon Messrs. Scott, Henderson, & Co., not on me, and they answer it by producing proof that it was added, although not shown on the entry, where where the law does not require it to be shown, and where in my often expressed opinion it ought never to be shown. What the law requires is a declaration of the value of the goods "at the port of importation in the said Colony." The addition of 10 per cent. to the invoice price may or may not be afterwards taken as representing the colonial value. It will be seen that Messrs. Scott, Henderson, & Co. (vide letter C) admit their error in omitting the river freight, which is clearly as much a part of the value of the salt at "the port of shipment" as the 5s. per ton paid at the works.

3. Messrs. Willis & Co's. salt was by the same ship, and they claimed and were allowed to enter at the same rate (vide their letter D), and for the same reason; although I believe their loss did not turn out so great as that of the other firm. I had quite forgotten the circumstances of their entry; but finding a memorandum on it of my approval, with the initials of the landing-waiter, Mr. Fraser, I called upon that officer to explain, and his answer (herewith—E) at once reminded me of the fact. I treated the two firms precisely alike, as the papers produced by Mr. Dibbs prove. Messrs. Willis & Co. paid on the bags, valued at £41, in addition to the 5s. 6d. per ton, adding the 10 per cent., but omitting the river freight. Mr. Dibbs paid nothing on his bags, nothing on the river freight, and only at the rate of 4s. 6d. per ton, including the 10 per cent. Is there any parallel between his case and either of the above?

4. The case of Messrs. Learmonth & Dickinson is quite different from the other two, and I must confess that a mistake was committed in this instance; but I had as little to do with it as Mr. Dibbs himself—having heard nothing of it till the salt was delivered and the ship had left the port. No one can imagine that it is possible for me even to look at all entries, far less to examine them, and it was only after the ship was discharged and gone, and after Mr. Dibbs' case had arisen, that I accidentally heard of it. I have since seen the invoice, and I find that, as in the other two cases, the cost of the river transmission, amounting to 3s. per ton, had been erroneously omitted. Mr. Dickinson, like Messrs. Scott, Henderson, & Co., has promised in future to include this item. It appears that the acting landing-waiter, Mr. Paschen, observed the low price of the salt, and called the attention of Mr. Berney, the landing-surveyor, to it, who directed him to write to the importers, but gave no directions to detain the salt; and neither Mr. Berney nor Mr. Paschen brought the matter under my notice, nor have I been able to obtain from either any intelligible report of the case. In what way then can I be charged with maladministration in a matter which never was brought under my notice till after the ship had been discharged and had left the port?

5. I come now to Mr. Dibbs' own case. The first intimation I had of it was a statement from one of the tide-surveyors, that he had found a small steam-boat on Mr. Dibbs' vessel, which the captain represented as belonging to the ship, and therefore not liable to duty; but that knowing the contrary, he had ordered the tide-waiter to detain the boat till the duty was paid (vide letters F and G). Shortly afterwards Mr. Dibbs and Mr. Bayley came into my office and represented that the boat had been used by him as a pleasure-boat in England, and was intended to be used by him as a pleasure-boat here, and that it ought to be admitted free, on the same principle that used furniture and other private effects are admitted free. I demurred to this; but as he argued the case well, and the Chief Clerk, who came into the room during the discussion, agreed with him, I allowed myself to be persuaded, and gave direction to accept a free entry (vide letter H). Mr. Dibbs had hardly left the Custom House when it flashed to my recollection that he had only made a flying trip to England, and could hardly therefore have used a pleasure-boat there; and on further inquiry I was informed that it was not intended for his personal use here, but had been purchased for his brother at the Commercial Bank. I again saw Mr. Dibbs, and expressing some indignation at the way he had deceived me, demanded the duty on the boat, which, as I had accepted a free entry, he declined to pay, admitting however that the boat was for his brother; and a good deal of idle correspondence took place on the subject. In order to bring the matter to a termination, I sent Mr. Jones to Mr. T. A. Dibbs to request him, as the boat was his, to pay the duty. Mr. T. A. Dibbs was very polite, but repudiated the transaction, stating however that it was brought out as a present for his son (vide letter I). I therefore detained the boat, and after an immense amount of trouble and annoyance, Mr. Dibbs, the importer, paid the duty.

While this was going on, it was brought to my notice that Mr. Dibbs had passed an entry for a quantity of merchandise by the same vessel, a good deal of which was allowed to pass unquestioned; but the rest being manifestly undervalued, Mr. Dibbs was called upon to prove his values or pay additional duty. Mr. Bayley, his agent, appeared, and stated that he had seen the invoice, and that Mr. Dibbs was prepared to swear to the values. I said I hoped not, because I would not believe him even if he did swear that the current price of salt at Liverpool was 4s. 6d. per ton. This was meant partly as a caution and partly as an expression of my belief that Mr. Dibbs would not swear to his values. He did however swear to them, with the exception of one item for empty casks, which he had declared at £4, and which duly appointed valuers afterwards swore were worth £48!

The copy of his entry produced by Mr. Dibbs shows that he declared the Liverpool value of his common salt to be about 4s. 4½d. per ton, which, at the rate of river carriage, &c., shown upon every genuine invoice, would make the price at the salt-works to be about 1s. 4d. per ton. Could Mr. Dibbs expect me to believe in the truth of an invoice from which the item of 3s. per ton was carefully omitted—in which also the price of the bags, which is usually more than the price of the salt, was also omitted? I had indeed no doubt, and I have now no doubt, that the invoice produced was not a genuine one, but drawn up for the express purpose of enabling Mr. Dibbs to enter his salt at a fraction of its real value; and believing this I did exactly what the 22nd section of the Act 9 Vic., No. 15, requires me to do in such case. I had the salt, shooks, and casks valued by sworn valuers, by which the Revenue has very properly gained £35 14s. 1d.; and although Mr. Dibbs is naturally irritated at the failure of his plans, I do not think that any honorable man who reads this letter and accompanying papers will say that he has been even sufficiently mulcted, or that I have been guilty of any maladministration in his case.

Messrs. Scott, Henderson, & Co., to The Collector of Customs.

Sydney, 16 August, 1870.

Sir,

We have the honor to own receipt of your letter of even date, having reference to the entry of salt imported by us in the "Medea," from Liverpool.

On looking into the facts we find that eight entries were first passed, 23–25 May.

Anticipating that by reason of sea-water damage, the full quantity shipped would not be landed.

That completing entry was passed on the 9th June, when, as will be seen from accompanying copies of that document and the invoice forwarded us by consignors, duty was paid both on bags and salt, fully 10 per cent. being added to cost of each, although in our letter to you of 25th May we had protested against the duty being exacted upon packages.

The statement of the party complaining that no entry had been admitted without such 10 per cent. being added is therefore manifestly untrue.

That being unaccustomed, when about to prepare entries, to look minutely at the charges portion of an invoice, it was not until to-day perceived either by our clerk or ourselves, that one of the items charged in this particular invoice consisted of 3s. per ton river freight (we presume from the salt-works to Liverpool) which should properly have been taken into account when paying duty.

Having rendered account sales to the shippers, we shall be unable to recover from them any further sum we may now disburse for duty. Should you however consider we ought to pay ad valorem duty on the omitted item pointed out, be good enough to intimate the same, and we will at once hand a cheque for the amount.

We have, &c.,

Messrs. Willis, Lloyd, & Co., to The Collector of Customs.

Sydney, 16 August, 1870.

Sir,

In answer to your letter of this date, with reference to value for duty at which we passed an entry for salt by the "Medea" from Liverpool, we find on reference to copy of entry 25 May, that it was passed as 100 tons common salt, contained in 1,100 bags, value £27 10s., duty £1 7s. 6d. This value included 10 per cent. on cost of the article, and should have been expressed so as to show—

Add 10 per cent. ...	2	10	0
	£27	10	0

We are not aware that any communication passed with yourself in reference to this shipment. We directed our clerk to pass at same value for duty as other salt. Say 300 tons was passed, and this was as above stated on cost at 5s. and 10 per cent. added. Our entry was imperfectly worded, but 10 per cent was included in the value.

Yours truly,

WILLIS, LLOYD, & CO.

Sir,

Enclosed I forward a note addressed to me by Mr. Tide-waiter Gerahty, which will show you the action I took in the matter. I may mention that, in a conversation with Capt. Stammerjohn on the subject, he stated that he was prepared to make a declaration before you that she was a part of the ship's fit-out. I gave him a caution as to what he said about her, when he repeated over and over again the statement given above, adding that he would make that declaration before any one. The steps subsequently taken, by your instructions, for the due protection of the Revenue it will be unnecessary for me to refer to here.

Sir,

Referring to your inquiries of this day respecting a steam-boat belonging to the barque "Clara Hargrave," of which vessel I was in charge, I have the honor to state that you drew my attention to the boat, which was alongside the ship directly we commenced unloading, and gave me orders not to allow her to be removed without previously receiving an entry. I at once informed Capt. Stammerjohn, who replied that no entry was required, as the boat belonged to the ship. Subsequently I received an entry from the landing-waiter when she was taken away.

Custom House, Sydney,

18 August, 1870.

I was present during a discussion between the Collector, Mr. Dibbs, and Mr. Bayley, respecting the admission of a pleasure steam-boat free of duty. In the conversation I asked Mr. Dibbs whether he had used the boat himself in England, and, as far as my recollection serves me, he stated that he had done so on the river Mersey, and brought it here for his own use. Upon this I observed to Mr. Duncan that it was merely a question whether the boat could be admitted free in the same way as we admit a buggy the personal property of a person who had used it in another place, it being the intention of the law to admit passengers' baggage free of ad valorem duties.

Re boat ex "Clara Hargrave."

Memo.

As requested, I called upon Mr. T. A. Dibbs at the Commercial Bank, on the morning of Saturday, the 16th ultimo, and conveyed to him the Collector's message, which was to the following effect:—

That the Collector had been informed that the boat entered by his brother, a few days previously, was the property of Mr. T. A. Dibbs, and therefore should not have been allowed to pass without payment of duty; that the Collector was desirous to have the duty paid without resorting to the extreme measure of seizing the boat, but that if the duty was not paid on Monday, he would feel it his duty to detain her.

Mr. Dibbs' reply, to the best of my recollection, was—"Make my compliments to the Collector, and say I have nothing whatever to do with the boat—he may seize her or do whatever he pleases with her; I will not pay the duty. My brother George is the person to look to."

In course of the conversation, Mr. Dibbs told me, first, that the boat was not his, though he knew his brother had brought her out for him, and afterwards explained why his brother purchased her. When Mr. George Dibbs was leaving the Colony he promised to buy a toy steamboat for Mr. T. A. Dibbs' son, and in one of his letters Mr. George Dibbs said that he had not forgotten the promise to his nephew, and had bought a "real live" steamer instead of the toy.

MR. BAYLEY'S BOND AS CUSTOM HOUSE AGENT.

Know all men, by these presents, that Marshall Bayley, of Sydney, in the Colony of New South Wales, Agent, and Thomas Marius Worthington, of Sydney aforesaid, merchant, are held and firmly bound unto Her Most Excellent Majesty Victoria, the first in the sum of two hundred pounds of lawful money of Great Britain, to be paid to Her said Majesty, Her Heirs and Successors, for which payment, to be well and truly made, we bind ourselves, and each and every of us, jointly and severally, for and in the whole, our heirs, executors, and administrators, and every of them, firmly by these presents.

Sealed with our seals, dated this twenty-third day of February, one thousand eight hundred and fifty-four.

WHEREAS the above-named Marshall Bayley hath this day applied for a license under the hands of the Collector of Her Majesty's Customs, to act as an Agent in transacting all business at the Custom House, relating to the entrance and clearance of any ship, or of any goods, or of any baggage, under a certain Act of the Governor in Council passed in the ninth year of Her present Majesty Queen Victoria, intituled "An Act for the General Regulation of the Customs in New South Wales and its Dependencies": Now the conditions of the above written obligations are such, that if the said Marshall Bayley shall not do or suffer to be done any act whereby the Revenue of the Customs in this Colony may be defrauded, or whereby any law, rule, order, or regulation regarding the same may be evaded, nor act incorruptly or unfaithfully in the discharge of any business that may be intrusted to him as a Custom House Agent as aforesaid, and shall deliver up the said license when called upon to do so by the Collector or other principal officer, then this obligation to be void, otherwise to be and to remain in full force and virtue.

M. BAYLEY.

THOS. M. WORTHINGTON.

Signed, sealed, and delivered, by the within-named Marshall Bayley and Thomas Marius Worthington, in the presence of,—

MR. M. BAYLEY TO THE COLONIAL TREASURER.

Sydney, 15 July, 1870.

SIR,

I have the honor to lay the following statement before you, and to request your early interference in removing a prohibition that the Collector of Customs has placed upon any further declarations of mine being taken at the Customs.

As

As Agent for Mr. Dibbs, I passed an entry for salt, ex the "Clara Hargraves." The invoice was handed to me, and I took that value, adding the 10 per cent. in the usual way. This, I presume, was considered an under-valuation. The Collector sent for me, and the following conversation ensued:—

"The Collector.—What do you mean by valuing salt at such a price as on this entry?

Mr. B.—It is the value as appeared by the invoice.

The C.—I don't believe it.

Mr. B.—Do you mean you don't believe I have seen the invoice?

The C.—No; I mean I don't believe the invoice is a true one.

Mr. B.—The invoice exhibited to me I believe to be a perfectly true one, and I have no doubt

Mr. Dibbs, the importer, would take his oath to its correctness if necessary.

The C.—I would not believe him on his oath."

After some further words, he said my declaration was false. I replied that I would not allow that to be said. The declaration was perfectly true, and in accordance with the invoice value of the salt. He then instructed Mr. Mactaggart not to take any further declarations from me.

The above are the facts of the case, and I feel it quite unnecessary to make any further remarks. Begging you will give the matter your earliest consideration,—

I have, &c.,
M. BAYLEY.

MINUTE OF THE COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS.

THIS statement is substantially correct, except where it says that I said "I would not believe him on his oath." What I said was, that even if Mr. Dibbs were to swear that the salt cost only 4s. 6d. per ton, I would not believe him. My object in suspending Mr. Bayley's license was to convince him and other Agents that they must be held personally responsible for the truth of the declarations they make. It appears to me that Mr. Bayley has forfeited the penalty of his bond, and also that imposed by the 55th section of the Act 9 Vic., No. 15; but as he has appealed to the Honorable the Treasurer, I have withdrawn his suspension pending any action that Mr. Samuel may think advisable.—W.A.D., 18/7/70.

No. 4.

MR. M. BAYLEY TO THE COLONIAL TREASURER.

Sydney, 18 July, 1870.

SIR,

I find the Collector of Customs has not confined himself alone to the refusal of my declarations, but has prohibited any entries being received when tendered by me. This has caused a complete stoppage to my business, and is very detrimental to my position as Custom House Agent, and, I would submit, most unjustifiable.

I have the honor to request your early attention to and adjudication upon these extreme measures.

I have, &c.,
M. BAYLEY.

No. 5.

MINUTE OF THE COLONIAL TREASURER.

The Treasury, New South Wales,
Sydney, 20 July, 1870.

THE Collector of Customs should call upon Mr. Dibbs to produce the invoices and furnish proof that the low prices at which the salt was entered were the cost prices. If the Collector is not satisfied with the evidence, he should avail himself of the provisions of the Customs' laws and have the goods valued. The Customs' Agents are bound by their bonds to protect the Revenue, and it is their duty before making a declaration of the value of goods to satisfy themselves as far as possible whether such valuation is arrived at from genuine invoices.

I am not prepared to express any decided opinion upon this matter until the result of further inquiry is made known to me. I approve the course pursued by the Collector in restoring Mr. Bayley pending any action I may determine upon.

SAUL SAMUEL.

No. 6.

THE COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS TO THE UNDER SECRETARY FOR FINANCE AND TRADE.

Custom House, Sydney,
20 August, 1870.

SIR,

I have the honor to request that the attention of the Honorable the Colonial Treasurer may be directed to a letter in yesterday's Herald from Mr. Bayley, Custom House Agent, in which he gives me the lie in the most offensive terms, with respect to the information given to the Treasurer by me in answer to Mr. Wilson's questions,—also, to my reply in this morning's Herald.

In proof of the existence of the regulation to which I referred, I forward herewith forty applications under it from merchants and Agents, including Mr. Bayley himself. A further search could, I dare say, very largely increase the number. I also forward a note from the Chief Clerk, attesting the fact that such an order was issued; also, notes from Messrs. C. Warburton and S. Burke, who both held the temporary office of jerquer's assistant at different periods previous to Mr. Keating, in which they testify to to the practice in their time, and consequently to the falsehood of Mr. Keating's defence and Mr. Bayley's audacious statement. In addition to this, are notes from Mr. Kelly and Mr. Small, who, though the former was not in the long-room and the latter not in the department at the date of the order, both testify to the practice, namely, that no document was allowed to go out of the custody of the proper clerk without my express permission.

As it is impossible that any man of honor could hold my position, if a person whose very existence as a Custom House Agent depends upon the Collector's license could be permitted to act under him, except on the most ample apology for his misconduct, not only in assisting Mr. Dibbs by such questionable means to prosecute a charge of maladministration against the head of the department, but in afterwards committing the outrage of accusing me publicly of falsehood, I have called upon Mr. Bayley, in terms of his bond, to deliver up his license to be cancelled, at the same time intimating to him that, as my only object is to maintain the efficacy of the law and regulations and due subordination in the office, if he will make an ample apology for his misconduct, and promise good conduct for the future, I will, on his giving a new bond, with a proper surety (the present being valueless), renew his license.

I have, &c.,

W. A. DUNCAN,
Collector of Customs.

In reply to your note of this morning, asking if I remembered your having issued an order to prevent Agents and others from copying public documents, or taking them out of the office without your permission, I beg to inform you that I have no recollection of having seen a written order to that effect, but that the usual practice was, when Agents or others required any special information, your permission was always asked for.

I have also to inform you, that on Monday last, Mr. Bayley's clerk, Mr. Mackintosh, applied to me for permission to copy the outward transire of the "Clara Hargraves" for Newcastle, of the 10th August, which I refused until your permission was first obtained.

Sir,

Having been called on to state the practice with reference to ships' documents under my charge, I beg to state I never saw any order prohibiting the public having access to them* for purposes of information connected with the business of this department, but that, to the best of my belief, it has been the invariable practice to disallow any copies of them to be taken for any purposes whatever without the previous permission of the Collector being obtained.

I do not remember handing Mr. Bayley any ships' documents on the 15th instant; but if I did so, it was certainly under the impression that he required them for current business, and most decidedly not for the purpose of allowing him to make any memorandum or copies of same.

THE COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS TO THE UNDER SECRETARY FOR FINANCE AND TRADE.

Custom House, Sydney,
22 August, 1870.

SIR,

Referring to my letter of the 20th instant, in which I draw the attention of the Honorable the Treasurer to the conduct of Mr. Bayley, Custom House Agent, in publicly giving me the lie in the Morning Herald,—in which letter I prove superabundantly the truth of my statement which he denies, and state that I have called upon him, in terms of his bond, to deliver up his license, but promise to renew the same upon his apologizing and giving a sufficient bond,—I have now to request that the attention of Mr. Samuel be directed to Mr. Bayley's letter in this morning's Herald, in which, while he is compelled to shift his ground and admit that I prove my case by implication, he renews his insult.

I

I enclose also Mr. Bayley's reply to my letter of the 20th, which he treats with contempt, and sets me at utter defiance.

On the 1st December, 1853, my predecessor, Colonel Gibbes, cancelled the license of the late Mr. Adam Wilson, because he presumed to write a letter direct to the then Colonial Secretary complaining of something the Collector had done. This was perhaps too severe an exercise of the power conferred on him by law; but I think I cannot be held to be wrong, after Mr. Bayley's conduct in passing Mr. Dibbs' entries—after he has assisted in procuring, clandestinely, copies of documents to enable Mr. Dibbs to support a false charge of maladministration against the Collector of Customs—after he has publicly and groundlessly given the lie to the Collector in a public newspaper; repeated the offence a second time in a qualified form—and after he has refused to deliver up his license when required, in terms of the condition of his bond, the penalty of which is thereby forfeited; in a word, after he has, in his letter of this date, set the authority of the Collector at absolute defiance,—I cannot be wrong in most respectfully requesting, under the 60th section of the Act 9 Vic. No. 15, the concurrence of His Excellency the Governor in my revocation of Mr. Bayley's license.

I need hardly point out the utter impossibility of preserving any order or subordination in a large department like this, if an Agent who owes his existence as such to the Collector's license can be permitted to trample on that officer's authority in the way in which Mr. Bayley has recently done.

If it were necessary to multiply proofs of the existence of the order which Mr. Bayley contests, I have them at hand; but even if there had been no such order, the utter indecency of Mr. Bayley's proceeding would surely condemn him in the estimation of every gentleman.

Supposing there is no order forbidding copies of papers to be given out of the Treasury, the impropriety of the act would be manifest on the face of it. And what would Mr. Samuel think of any person holding a license from him, who, under cover of that license, should obtain from a supernumerary clerk in the Treasury, papers for the purpose of maintaining a charge, however ridiculous, of maladministration against the Minister? Yet there is no real difference between the two cases.

Of late years, insubordination in this department has been so much encouraged, and the insolence of certain officers, and Agents, and Agents' clerks has become in consequence so intolerable, that unless the most decisive steps are taken to remove all doubt as to the Collector's power and authority over every person connected with the Customs, neither I, nor any person other than a Minister of the Crown who will be able to maintain his own authority, can administer the Customs with satisfaction either to himself or the public. My humble opinion is that it should be forthwith made a ministerial office, as it is in most of the other Colonies.

I have, &c.,
W. A. DUNCAN,
Collector of Customs.

[Enclosure to No. 7.]

Mr. M. Bayley to The Collector of Customs.

Sydney, 22 August, 1870.

Sir,

I have to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 20th instant, to which I proceed to reply.

I deny in the first place your allegation "that punishment has been inflicted upon me for recent misconduct." I deny emphatically that I have been guilty of any misconduct, or that I have committed any irregularities in my position as Custom House Agent. It is true however that, some short time ago, you attempted an act of injustice and oppression towards me, which being set right by the order of the Honorable the Colonial Treasurer, it is unnecessary for me further to advert to.

In the second place, while acknowledging all due respect for, and obedience to, the Customs' laws and regulations, I deny altogether your authority to interfere with my right to communicate with a public journal, when it becomes necessary to refute a misstatement made by you to the Treasurer in respect to myself, and used by you to the injury of a third party,—such misstatement being uttered in Parliament and circulated by the Press.

I decline, in the third place, to deliver up my license to be cancelled. If I can be proved guilty of any wrong-doing, the law points out the mode by which I may be punished, and by the law I stand.

I desire to say, in the next place, that if an apology be necessary in this matter, it is due from yourself to me, for the ungentlemanly and insulting letter which you have thought proper to address to me.

Finally, as you intimate to me for the first time that a new bond may be necessary, from the insufficiency of my present security, I beg to name the following gentlemen as substituted sureties,—Mr. William Laidley and Mr. George R. Dibbs, merchants.

I have, &c.,
M. BAYLEY.

No. 8.

MINUTE OF THE COLONIAL TREASURER.

The Treasury, New South Wales
6 September, 1870.

On the 15th July last, Mr. Marshall Bayley waited upon me, and represented that he, as Agent for Mr. G. R. Dibbs, having passed an entry for salt, &c., ex "Clara Hargraves," Mr. Duncan had charged him with making a false declaration of the value of the goods, had applied unnecessarily offensive language to him in consequence, and had instructed the Customs' clerks not to take any further declaration from him (Mr. Bayley).

Mr. Duncan being called upon by me, explained that he had virtually suspended Mr. Bayley, for the reason stated; and further, that he was of opinion that Mr. Bayley had forfeited the penalty of his bond, and also that imposed by the 55th section of 9 Vict., No. 15.

As, however, Mr. Bayley had appealed to me in the matter, Mr. Duncan withdrew the suspension of the license, pending such appeal.

I then directed the Collector to ascertain the value of the goods, in the manner prescribed by the Customs' laws.

On the 20th ultimo, Mr. Duncan drew my attention to a letter published in the S. M. Herald, written by Mr. Bayley, in which contradiction was given to certain statements furnished by the Collector, in reply to questions put to me in the Legislative Assembly. These statements had reference to the existence of a regulation in the Custom House that no papers should be copied without the Collector's permission. Mr. Duncan also reported to me that he had called upon Mr. Bayley to deliver up his license to be cancelled.

This letter was followed by another from the Collector, calling attention to a second letter in the Herald from Mr. Bayley, and enclosing that gentleman's refusal to surrender his license. Mr. Duncan thereupon requested that Mr. Bayley's license might be revoked.

As the circumstances of this dispute between the Collector and the Agent are of great importance, involving not only the character for veracity of the gentlemen concerned, but also, if the Collector's recommendation should be carried out, the cancellation of Mr. Bayley's license as Custom House Agent, and the consequent ruin of his business, I have decided to submit the whole subject for the consideration of a Board consisting of a superior officer of Government and two mercantile gentlemen of repute and experience.

Write accordingly, to Arthur T. Holroyd, Esq., Master-in-Equity,—the Hon. Henry Moore, M.L.C.,—and S. A. Joseph, Esq. (Mr. Holroyd to act as Chairman.)

Briefly explain the object of the communication, and request that they will, by means of witnesses and papers, thoroughly investigate the cause and matter of dispute, and report to me the result of their inquiry, forwarding at same time any recommendations likely to arrange the existing differences, and to obviate their recurrence for the future.

As the case of Mr. Elijah Keating (removed from the position of assistant to the jerquer) is in some measure connected with that of Mr. Bayley, and results from the dispute of that gentleman with Mr. Duncan,—let the papers (Mr. Keating's complaint, and Mr. Duncan's reply) be also referred to the Board named, with a request that they may form the subject of similar inquiry and report.

THE UNDER SECRETARY FOR FINANCE AND TRADE to A. T. HOLROYD, Esq.

The Treasury, New South Wales,
Sydney, 7 September, 1870.

SIR,

I have the honor to inform you that the Colonial Treasurer has appointed you to form, with the Honorable Henry Moore and S. A. Joseph, Esquires, a Board to inquire into the circumstances and report as to the merits of a dispute between the Collector of Customs and Mr. Marshall Bayley, Custom House Agent.

As it is proposed that you should act as Chairman of the Board, I am desired by Mr. Samuel to state, for their information, the following facts.

On the 15th July last, Mr. Marshall Bayley waited upon the Treasurer, and represented that he, as Agent for Mr. G. R. Dibbs, having passed an entry for salt, &c., ex "Clara Hargraves," Mr. Duncan had charged him with making a false declaration of the value of the goods, had applied unnecessarily offensive language to him in consequence, and had instructed the Customs' clerks not to take any further declaration from him (Mr. Bayley).

Mr. Duncan being called upon by the Treasurer, explained that he had virtually suspended Mr. Bayley, for the reason stated; and further, that he was of opinion that Mr. Bayley had forfeited the penalty of his bond, and also that imposed by the 55th section of 9 Vic. No. 15.

As, however, Mr. Bayley had appealed to Mr. Samuel in the matter, Mr. Duncan withdrew the suspension of the license, pending such appeal. The Treasurer then directed the Collector to ascertain the value of the goods, in the manner prescribed by the Customs' laws.

On the 20th ultimo, Mr. Duncan drew Mr. Samuel's attention to a letter published in the Sydney Morning Herald, written by Mr. Bayley, in which contradiction was given to certain statements furnished by the Collector in reply to questions put in the Legislative Assembly. These statements had reference to the existence of a regulation in the Custom House that no papers should be copied without the Collector's permission. Mr. Duncan also reported to the Treasurer that he had called upon Mr. Bayley to deliver up his license to be cancelled. This letter was followed by another from the Collector, calling attention to a second letter in the Herald, from Mr. Bayley, and enclosing that gentleman's refusal to surrender his license. Mr. Duncan thereupon requested that Mr. Bayley's license might be revoked.

As the circumstances of this dispute between the Collector and the Agent are of great importance, involving not only the character for veracity of the gentlemen concerned, but also (if the Collector's recommendation should be carried out) the cancellation of Mr. Bayley's license as Custom House Agent, and the consequent ruin of his business,—the Treasurer decided to submit the whole subject for the consideration of a Board.

Having thus explained the object of your appointment, I have now to request that the Board will, by means of witnesses and papers, thoroughly investigate the cause and matter of dispute, and report the result of their inquiry, forwarding at the same time any recommendation likely to arrange the existing differences, and to obviate their recurrence for the future.

As the case of Mr. Elijah Keating (removed from the position of assistant to the jerquer) is in some measure connected with that of Mr. Bayley, and results from the dispute of that gentleman with Mr. Duncan, I have also to hand you the papers in that case (Mr. Keating's complaint and Mr. Duncan's reply), with a request that they may form the subject of similar inquiry and report.

I have, &c.,

No. 17.

MR. M. BAYLEY to THE UNDER SECRETARY FOR FINANCE AND TRADE.

Sydney, 14 September, 1870.

SIR,

I have the honor to acknowledge receipt of your letter of the 12th instant; and, in reply to the first portion thereof, I would remark that the Honorable Treasurer is evidently under a misapprehension in supposing that I have "preferred charges of a serious character, through the public Press, against the Collector of Customs."

This misapprehension probably arises from the circumstance of my denial, through the Herald, of the truth of certain statements of Mr. Duncan's in relation to myself, made public through the same channel. In so doing I exercised the common right of a free citizen publicly attacked; and as I am satisfied with this public denial, and the subsequent action of the Legislature, I decline to be placed in the position of Mr. Duncan's prosecutor.

With respect to the other portion of your letter, I now learn for the first time, and with much surprise, that Mr. Duncan has preferred charges against me of so serious a character as to lead him to recommend the withdrawal of my license, and which the Treasurer, without having informed me of those charges and affording me an opportunity of explanation, also appears to consider of so much importance as to justify the appointment of a special Board of Inquiry.

Before submitting in this matter to the adjudication of the proposed Board, I claim the right of every accused person to know distinctly, and in precise terms, that of which he is accused; and I again respectfully request to be furnished with a copy of Mr. Duncan's charges, as preferred to the Colonial Treasurer.

MINUTE OF THE COLONIAL TREASURER.

The Treasury, New South Wales,
Sydney, 14 September, 1870.

ACKNOWLEDGE receipt of Mr. Bayley's letter of to-day's date, upon the subject of the dispute between that gentleman and the Collector of Customs, in which it is stated that I am under a misapprehension in supposing that he preferred charges of a serious character, through the public Press, against the Collector of Customs.

Draw Mr. Bayley's attention, in reply, to a letter, bearing his signature, which appeared in the Sydney Morning Herald of 19th ultimo, upon the subject of access to certain Custom House documents, in which letter he characterizes statements made by the Collector, and read by me in the Legislative Assembly, as "totally at variance with fact, and altogether intemperate in character."

Whatever may be Mr. Bayley's view of the force of such language, inform him that the Treasurer (in common, as I feel assured, with the public generally) could not but consider it as conveying a charge against Mr. Duncan of the most serious character,—that of a deliberate attempt on his part to mislead his official superior, and, through him, one of the branches of the Legislature. Made as the charge was, in the columns of a public newspaper, and by a gentleman in Mr. Bayley's position, it was injurious alike to the officer concerned, and to the efficiency of the important department in his charge. In justice, therefore, to all parties, and in the interest of the Public Service, I was unable to rest satisfied, as Mr. Bayley would seem to desire, that there should be no trial of the veracity of statements and counter-statements which had been made to assume the form of public charges.

In conveying the foregoing as my view of the case, express the hope that Mr. Bayley will not interpose any further obstacle in the way of the proposed inquiry. State that if he persist in declining the attempt to justify, before the Board appointed, the imputation under which the Collector now rests at his hands, and, by taking that course, deprive Mr. Duncan of a fair opportunity of vindicating himself, I will be compelled to regard the grave charge made by him (Mr. Bayley) as without foundation.

Add, with reference to the remaining portion of Mr. Bayley's letter, that, in view of the Collector's demand that he should deliver up his license as a Custom House Agent, for cancellation, and of his refusal so to do, I am at a loss to understand the surprise he expresses at the fact that the Collector's recommendation of such cancellation has been remitted to the Board for their report. Remark further, that I am somewhat astonished that he felt at liberty to state that he has now learnt, for the first time, that the charges preferred by the Collector of Customs are of so serious a character as to have led that officer to advise the withdrawal of his license, when, by letter of 20th ultimo, the Collector, in stating the same to Mr. Bayley, required him to deliver up the said license; promising to renew it only on receipt of an apology, and a sufficient bond. This demand Mr. Bayley has not complied with, and, as I am informed, has treated with contempt. The charge made against him, as then clearly conveyed, is, that he has wrongfully accused the Collector of Customs of making false statements. Let Mr. Bayley be informed accordingly.

SAUL SAMUEL.

THE UNDER SECRETARY FOR FINANCE AND TRADE to MR. M. BAYLEY.

Treasury, New South Wales,
14 September, 1870.

SIR,

I have the honor to acknowledge receipt of your letter of this day's date, in reply to mine of 12th instant, and in which you state that the Colonial Treasurer is under a misapprehension in supposing that you have preferred charges of a serious character, through the public Press, against the Collector of Customs.

I am, in reply, to draw your attention to a letter, bearing your signature, which appeared in the Sydney Morning Herald of 19th ultimo, upon the subject of access to certain Custom House documents, in which letter you characterize statements made by the Collector, and read by Mr. Samuel in the Legislative Assembly, as "totally at variance with fact, and altogether intemperate in character."

Whatever may be your view of the force of such language, the Colonial Treasurer (in common, as he feels assured, with the public generally) could not but consider it as conveying a charge against Mr. Duncan of the most serious character,—that of a deliberate attempt, on his part, to mislead his official superior, and through him, one of the branches of the Legislature. Made as this charge was, in the columns of a public newspaper, and by a gentleman in your position, it was injurious alike to the officer concerned, and to the efficiency of the important department in his charge. In justice, therefore, to all parties, and in the interest of the Public Service, Mr. Samuel was unable to rest satisfied, as you would seem to desire, that there should be no trial of the veracity of statements and counter-statements which had been made to assume the form of public charges.

This being the view taken by the Treasurer, I am to trust that you will not interpose any further obstacle in the way of the proposed inquiry. Should you persist in declining the attempt to justify, before the Board appointed, the imputation under which the Collector now rests at your hands, and, by taking that course, deprive Mr. Duncan of a fair opportunity of vindicating himself, the Colonial Treasurer will be compelled to regard the grave charge made by you as without foundation.

With reference to the remaining portion of your letter, I have to inform you, that, in view of the Collector's demand that you should deliver up your license as a Custom House Agent, for cancellation, and of your refusal so to do, Mr. Samuel is at a loss to understand the surprise you express at the fact that the Collector's recommendation of such cancellation has been remitted to the Board for their report.

I am to remark further, that the Treasurer is somewhat astonished that you felt at liberty to state that you now learn for the first time that the charges preferred by the Collector of Customs are of so serious a character as to have led that officer to advise the withdrawal of your license, when, by letter of 20th ultimo, the Collector, in stating the same to you, required you to deliver up the said license, promising to renew it only on receipt of an apology, and a sufficient bond. The charge made against you, as then clearly conveyed is, that you have wrongfully accused the Collector of Customs of making false statements.

No. 20.

MR. M. BAYLEY to THE UNDER SECRETARY FOR FINANCE AND TRADE.

Sydney, 17 September, 1870.

SIR,

I have the honor to acknowledge receipt of your letter of the 14th instant, in reply to mine of like date, in which I respectfully requested, for the second time, to be furnished with a copy of a charge or charges, as preferred against me by the Collector of Customs, to the Honorable the Colonial Treasurer.

I regret to find, from your letter, that the Treasurer has not acceded to my request, and that he still appears to labour under misapprehension as to the nature of my position towards Mr. Duncan, in assuming that I have preferred grave charges against that officer through the public Press. I therefore conceive it to be necessary, for my own justification, to place upon record the facts of the case, as regards certain public statements made by the Collector, and my public denial of them, so far as they concern myself.

The statements which called for my denial were contained in an answer made by the Treasurer to certain questions put by Dr. Wilson, in the Assembly, on the 17th ultimo, and were published by the Herald on the following morning. It was alleged in that answer, among other things, that an order existed under which access to any documents without the Collector's express permission was refused to Custom House Agents; that I obtained documents in a clandestine manner; and that I had asked the Chief Clerk and Mr. Kelly for those documents, and had been refused. These statements, if true and left uncontradicted, were clearly damaging to my character and position; and as I had no means of rebutting them in the Assembly, where first made, I denied them on the first opportunity thereafter, through the channel open to every citizen—that is, a public newspaper—by my letter of the 18th ultimo, to which you refer.

Now on this state of facts it must be evident that so far from having made serious charges in the public Press against the Collector of Customs, Mr. Duncan was himself the aggressor, having made charges against me where I had no means of answering them, and that my action was solely one of self-defence. I was at the time, and am still, perfectly satisfied with this denial, followed as it was by the action of the Assembly in expunging the whole of Mr. Duncan's statement from its records; and I am content to leave the matter as it stands in the hands of the public. If, however, the Treasurer considers it desirable, on the important grounds stated by you, to direct an inquiry into the truth or falsehood of the respective statements and counter-statements of Mr. Duncan and myself, I am prepared to submit the proofs on which my statements are based; but I am advised that, for my own protection, the proper course for me to adopt is to reserve those proofs until I am put on my defence in respect of Mr. Duncan's charges against me; and I therefore trust that the Honorable the Treasurer will not, at this stage of the business, consider the statements to be without foundation, from the mere circumstance of my respectfully declining to appear as Mr. Duncan's prosecutor.

With reference to the other portion of your letter, relating to charges which in your communication of the 12th instant you state that Mr. Duncan has preferred against me, accompanied with a recommendation that my license as a Custom House Agent should be withdrawn, I again respectfully request, for the third time, that I may be furnished with a copy of those charges in their entirety, and of the recommendation, in the terms in which they were submitted by Mr. Duncan to the Treasurer. The serious character of this recommendation, which at present I can only regard as the suggestion of my condemnation without the benefit of a trial (the effect of which would be to deprive me of my bread), coupled with the fact of the Treasurer having declined to carry out such recommendation, pending inquiry, leads me to the conviction that the Treasurer is incapable of the injustice of condemning me unheard, and in ignorance of the precise character of the charges brought against me.

Until, therefore, I am furnished with those charges in detail, as preferred to the Treasurer, with the accompanying recommendation, so as to admit of my defence being prepared, I find myself compelled to refrain from communicating with the Chairman of the Board.

ACKNOWLEDGE receipt of Mr. Bayley's letter of 17th instant.

In reply to his repeated refusal to communicate with the Chairman of the proposed Board of Inquiry, upon the plea that he has not been made acquainted in detail with the charges preferred against him, point out to Mr. Bayley that the request of former Treasury letters—that he should place himself in communication with Mr. Holroyd, who is in possession of all the papers in the case—was made in that intention. Say it did not then seem necessary to explain that the primary object of any such communication would be the information in question.

SIR,

I have the honor to acknowledge receipt of your letter of 17th instant, with further reference to the subject of the inquiry, ordered by the Colonial Treasurer, into the merits of the differences between the Collector of Customs and yourself.

In reply to your repeated refusal to communicate with the Chairman of the proposed Board, upon the plea that you have not been made acquainted in detail with the charges preferred against you by the Collector, I have to point out that the request of my former letters,—that you should place yourself in communication with Mr. Holroyd, who, as you were informed, is in possession of all the papers in the case—was made in that intention. It did not then seem necessary to explain that the primary object of any such communication would be the information in question.

SIR,

I have the honor to acknowledge receipt of your letter of the 19th instant, which conveys to me, in distinct terms, the Honorable the Treasurer's refusal to inform me of the charges preferred against me by the Collector of Customs, after my repeated applications for such information.

Under these circumstances I feel it to be useless to contend further with the Treasurer, and, under duress, seek from the Chairman of the proposed Board that knowledge of the charges preferred to the Treasurer against me which I conceive it is my right to obtain from the responsible Minister.

In being thus forced into communication with the Chairman, I beg to enter my respectful protest against this course of action being construed into an acknowledgment of the jurisdiction of the Board, or waiver of any legal rights which I may possess.

I have, &c.,

Forward to the Board with other papers. There has been no such refusal as that stated by Mr. Bayley, as will appear from the correspondence.—S.S., 21/9/70.

No. 24.

MR. M. BAYLEY TO THE UNDER SECRETARY FOR FINANCE AND TRADE.

Sydney, 23 September, 1870.

SIR,

Referring to my communication of the 22nd instant, I have the honor to inform you that, as directed by the Hon. the Colonial Treasurer, I applied yesterday, by letter to the Chairman of the proposed Board of Inquiry, for a copy of the charges as preferred by the Collector of Customs to the Treasurer against me, which charges I learn from you have been referred by Mr. Samuel to the Board together with all the papers in the case.

I regret to be obliged to state that the Board informs me that it does not deem it requisite to furnish me with those charges, on the ground that they are contained in documents of which it assumes I am necessarily in possession.

Under these circumstances I desire, as a last resort, to call your attention to the extraordinary and unprecedented course which has been adopted towards me, while acting simply in defence of my position and character. I am told in the first instance (without any previous action on my part contemplating such a result) that a Board is appointed to inquire into disputes between the Collector of Customs and myself, and on this meagre information I am asked to place myself in communication with its Chairman. Being entirely ignorant of disputes requiring such intervention, I next apply to know what these disputes are, and whether I am to appear before the Board as plaintiff or defendant. You inform me in answer that on the one hand I have preferred charges against Mr. Duncan, which constitutes me plaintiff so far as that officer is concerned; and, on the other hand, that Mr. Duncan has preferred charges against me to the Treasurer, with a recommendation for the withdrawal of my license, placing me in the latter case upon my trial, on an issue so serious to me as the possible loss of my means of subsistence. My next step is to inform you that I prefer no charges against Mr. Duncan, and that I respectfully decline to be forced into the position of his prosecutor; while, as regards myself, I ask on common principles of justice to be furnished with a copy in detail of the charges preferred against me, in reference to which I am to be placed on my trial. As you are aware, I have thrice applied to you unsuccessfully for these charges, and when at last I find it useless further to contend with the Treasurer with the view of obtaining them, I obey his directions, and seek the information from the Chairman of the proposed Board. I am then met with a positive refusal from the Board to furnish the information, and after a fortnight of anxiety and laborious correspondence, I find myself left at exactly the same point from which I started.

I have further to state that the Board, while declining to furnish me with the information you had directed me to obtain from its Chairman, requests my attendance on Tuesday next, "to give evidence touching the matter under notice"—but I am at a loss to understand what matter is alluded to. I have already declined to be Mr. Duncan's prosecutor; and if the matter be Mr. Duncan's charges against me, permit me to ask how can I, the accused person, be called upon to appear in the character of witness? With still less show of reason can I be called upon to appear before a tribunal which withholds from me a knowledge of the charges on which it assumes to adjudicate.

Having thus exhausted every means in my power to obtain a knowledge of that of which I am accused, and having failed to obtain such knowledge either from the Treasurer, or the Chairman of the proposed Board to whom I was referred, can it be supposed that I am acting disrespectfully to the Treasurer, or that I am desirous to evade enquiry into my acts and conduct as a Custom House Agent, if I positively decline, as I now do, to submit myself to the adjudication of any Board or Tribunal without the ordinary protection which the law of our country affords to the commonest criminal, that is to say, a distinct, precise, and intelligible statement of the charges in respect of which I am to be put upon my trial?

No. 25.

MINUTE OF THE COLONIAL TREASURER.

The Treasury, New South Wales,
Sydney, 23 September, 1870.

ACKNOWLEDGE receipt of Mr. Bayley's letter of to-day's date. Inform him I can quite understand that the Board, from a perusal of the papers, decide that he is already fully acquainted with the subject matter of their inquiry. Whilst from the first-stage of the proceedings I could have no other opinion,—in referring Mr. Bayley to them for the information of which he professes to be in ignorance, it was my desire to overcome that gentleman's evident and strong reluctance to assist in a full investigation of the differences between the Collector and himself.

I am still unable to admit Mr. Bayley's plea of ignorance of the charges which it will be the duty of the Board to investigate, which amounts, practically, to an asserted ignorance of the very differences to which Mr. Bayley has been a party. In the first place, it was Mr. Bayley himself who personally appealed to me against the suspension of his license by the Collector for an alleged false entry, for ad valorem duty, of certain goods per "Clara Hargraves," from Liverpool, made by him as Custom House Agent for Mr. G. R. Dibbs; and it was upon that personal appeal that his license was restored by the Collector, pending an inquiry. If further proof were wanting upon this point, it is furnished by the Collector's letter to Mr. Bayley of 20th July, in which that decision is so expressed. Secondly, there is with the papers Mr. Bayley's acknowledgment of receipt of Collector's letter of 20th August, in which he is called upon by Mr. Duncan to surrender his license for cancellation, upon the ground of a charge made in the public Press, falsely impugning the veracity of a report made by that officer, and read by me in Parliament. The first was held by the Collector to be the cause for suspension of Mr. Bayley's license, and the second the added offence which called for its summary cancellation. It would, therefore, be affectation on Mr. Bayley's part to maintain ignorance of these facts; and yet they are the only subjects of reference to the Board in the form of charges against him.

Chairman.*

I regret to observe, further, that Mr. Bayley, in his letters upon this subject, writes as though he were the object of a Treasury prosecution, and I, seeking to convict him by pressing for his appearance before the Board of Inquiry. This is quite the reverse of the fact. So much so, that, instead of forwarding for His Excellency's concurrence the Collector's revocation of Mr. Bayley's license, as in law perhaps I should have done, I determined to take the responsibility of waiving the Collector's recommendation; although it was represented to me as made to secure the discipline and proper conduct of the department, and for the protection of the Revenue. I declined to sanction any step that should expose Mr. Bayley to the loss of his business as a Custom House Agent, without giving him the fullest opportunity of justification on each and every point of difference between the head of the department and himself. In appointing a Board, constituted of gentlemen of high character and impartiality, to inquire into the circumstances, and report, for my information, as to the merits of the case, I conceived I had adopted the course most likely to protect Mr. Bayley from the possibility of injustice. It is, therefore, a matter of some surprise and regret to me, that that gentleman has come to regard the action taken by myself as, in some way or other, intended to be prejudicial to his interests. Any such view of the course I have found it to be my duty to take in this matter is a most mistaken one.

With reference to the charge made, on the other hand, by Mr. Bayley against the Collector, I cannot allow the former, by declining to justify the same, to prevent inquiry as to its truthfulness; nor can I sympathize with Mr. Bayley in his resolve to adopt a line of conduct with respect to the accusation which, in equally avoiding a justification of the charge or an honorable withdrawal of it, deprives the accused person of an opportunity of vindication. The same principle of justice which prevented my acceptance, without due inquiry, of Mr. Duncan's charges against Mr. Bayley, prevents me from accepting Mr. Bayley's charge against Mr. Duncan without the same inquiry. And even if Mr. Bayley persist in his refusal to attempt to justify the public imputation under which the Collector suffers at his hands, I am unable, for the important reasons stated in a former Minute, to allow the same to pass without a searching investigation. If on no other ground,—in justice to Mr. Keating, and in view of his complaint of degradation,—it is necessary that the charge should be taken up.

Convey the substance of this Minute to Mr. Bayley, and close the correspondence with the hope that he will not deny himself the benefit of personal attendance upon the inquiry.

SAUL SAMUEL.

No. 26.

THE UNDER SECRETARY FOR FINANCE AND TRADE TO MR. M. BAYLEY.

The Treasury, New South Wales,
24 September, 1870.

SIR,

I have the honor to acknowledge receipt of your letter of yesterday's date.

I am directed by the Colonial Treasurer to inform you, in reply, that he can quite understand that the Board of Inquiry, from a perusal of the papers, decide that you are already fully acquainted with the subject matter of their inquiry. Whilst from the first stage of the proceedings Mr. Samuel could have no other opinion,—in referring you to them for the information of which you profess to be in ignorance, it was his desire to overcome your evident and strong reluctance to assist in a full investigation of the differences between the Collector and yourself.

The Treasurer is still unable to admit your plea of ignorance of the charges which it will be the duty of the Board to investigate, which amounts, practically, to an asserted ignorance of the very differences to which you have been a principal party. In the first place, it was yourself who personally appealed to the Treasurer against the suspension of your license by the Collector, for an alleged false entry, for ad valorem duty, of certain goods per "Clara Hargraves," from Liverpool, made by you as Custom House Agent for Mr. G. R. Dibbs; and it was upon that personal appeal that your license was restored by the Collector, pending an inquiry. If further proof were wanting upon this point, it is furnished by the Collector's letter to you of 20th July, in which that decision is so expressed. Secondly, there is with the papers your acknowledgment of receipt of Collector's letter of 20th August, in which you are called upon by Mr. Duncan to surrender your license for cancellation, upon the ground of a charge made in the public Press, falsely impugning the veracity of a report made by that officer, and read by Mr. Samuel in Parliament. The first was held by the Collector to be the cause for suspension of your license, and the second the added offence which called for its summary cancellation. It would, therefore, be affectation on your part to maintain ignorance of these facts; and yet they are the only subjects of reference to the Board in the form of charges against you.

The Treasurer regrets to observe, further, that, in your letters upon this subject, you write as though you were the object of a Treasury prosecution, and as if he were seeking for your conviction, by pressing for your attendance before the Board of Inquiry. This, I am to assure you, is quite the reverse of the fact. So much so, that, instead of forwarding for His Excellency's concurrence the Collector's revocation of your license, as in law perhaps he should have done, Mr. Samuel determined to take the responsibility of waiving the Collector's recommendation, although represented to him by that responsible officer as made to secure the discipline and proper conduct of the department, and for the protection of the Revenue. The Treasurer declined to sanction any step that should expose you to the loss of your business as a Custom House Agent, without giving you the fullest opportunity of justification on each and every point of difference between the head of the department and yourself. In appointing a Board, constituted of gentlemen of high character and impartiality, to inquire into the circumstances, and report for his information as to the merits of the case, the Treasurer conceived that he had adopted the course most likely to protect you from the possibility of injustice. It is therefore a matter of some surprise and regret that you have come to regard the action taken by Mr. Samuel as, in some way or other, intended to be prejudicial to your interests. Any such view of the course the Treasurer has found it his duty to take in this matter is a most mistaken one.

With reference, on the other hand, to the charge made by you against the Collector of Customs, Mr. Samuel cannot allow you, by declining to attempt to justify the charge, to prevent inquiry as to its truthfulness; nor can he sympathize with you in your resolve to adopt a line of conduct with respect to the accusation, which, in equally avoiding a justification of the charge or an honorable withdrawal of it, would deprive the accused person of an opportunity of vindication. The same principle of justice which prevented the Treasurer from accepting, without due inquiry, Mr. Duncan's charges against you, precludes him from acceptance of your charge against Mr. Duncan, without the same inquiry. And even if you persist in your refusal to come forward and justify the imputation under which the Collector suffers at your hands, Mr. Samuel is unable, for the important reasons stated in a former letter, to allow the same to pass without a searching investigation. If upon no other ground,—in justice to Mr. Keating, and in view of his complaint of degradation, it is necessary that the charge should be taken up.

I am to close the correspondence in the hope that you will not deny yourself the benefit of a personal attendance upon the inquiry.

No. 27.

MR. M. BAYLEY TO THE UNDER SECRETARY FOR FINANCE AND TRADE.

Sydney, 26 September, 1870.

SIR,

I have the honor to acknowledge receipt of your favour of the 24th instant; and, as I gather from the closing paragraph that this correspondence is now to be closed, it becomes my duty to place on record what I conceive to be the erroneous position taken up by the Honorable the Treasurer towards me in reference to the matters at issue.

I must, in the first place, respectfully take exception to the Treasurer's expression of opinion that I am "fully acquainted with the subject matter of the proposed Board of Inquiry," and that my "plea of ignorance of the charges which it will be the duty of the Board to investigate," is inconsistent with my personal knowledge of the facts of the case, as contained in the correspondence between the Treasurer, the Collector of Customs, and myself. My answer to this is—first, that, as the accused party, it is not my business to extract from the correspondence referred to matters of inference that may tend to my own inculpation ; second, that it is the business of the prosecutor (whoever he may be), who seeks to put me on my trial, to frame the indictment in precise and specific terms ; and third, that your present statement, that the charges against me are to be gathered from the correspondence, is inconsistent with your previous statement, as conveyed to me in your letter of the 12th instant. The statement I allude to is in these terms :—“ Mr. Duncan has also preferred charges against you, and has recommended the withdrawal of your license as a Custom House Agent.” Of the nature of these charges I am entirely ignorant ; I have been furnished with no copy of them, notwithstanding that I have repeatedly applied for such copy, both to the Treasurer and, at his request, to the Board of Inquiry. And in the face of these facts it is idle to allege (whether as an expression of opinion or otherwise) that I affect or pretend an “ ignorance ” of the charges referred to.

I must, in the second place, respectfully object to the Treasurer’s assumption that I regard myself as the “ object of a Treasury prosecution,” and that “ I write as if the Treasurer were seeking my conviction by pressing for my attendance before the Board of Inquiry.” I would observe, with reference to the charges referred to in your letter of the 12th instant, that I have throughout considered the Collector of Customs the prosecutor, and the Treasurer as the responsible judge ; and whether the jurisdiction remain with the Treasurer, or be delegated to a Board, the question of prosecutorship is immaterial, while my right to know the charges against me remains vital and intact. I would further observe on this subject, and in reference to the Treasurer’s remarks on his not having forwarded Mr. Duncan’s recommendation to cancel my license for His Excellency’s concurrence, that I cannot conceive any other course open to the Treasurer, as it would manifestly be a great injustice to endorse that recommendation on the ex parte statement of the Collector without furnishing me with a copy of those charges, and of that recommendation, and without hearing me in my defence.

I have to state, in the third place, that throughout this correspondence I have never questioned the right of the Treasurer to appoint a Board, nor have I expressed a doubt of the high character and impartiality of the gentlemen composing the Board, nor have I refused to accept its adjudication, provided always, that as a condition precedent, I be furnished with a copy of the charges, which your letter of the 12th instant informs me have a tangible and specific existence, and have been preferred against me. And without this ordinary protection to an accused person it would be most “ prejudicial ” to my interests to submit myself to the proposed adjudication.

I must finally take exception to the imputation sought to be established against me in the concluding paragraph of your letter, viz., of avoiding an opportunity “ to justify ” what you are pleased to term my charges against Mr. Duncan, or of “ honorably withdrawing them.” As fully rebutting this imputation, permit me to refer you to my letter of the 17th instant, in which I say :—“ If, however, the Treasurer considers it desirable, on the important grounds stated by you, to direct an inquiry into the truth or falsehood of the respective statements and counter-statements of Mr. Duncan and myself, I am prepared to submit the proofs on which my statements are based ; but I am advised, for my own protection, the proper course for me to adopt is to reserve those proofs until I am put on my defence in respect of Mr. Duncan’s charges against me.”

I have, &c.,

MINUTE OF THE COLONIAL TREASURER.

(Mr. Bayley’s letter of 26th instant.)

In this letter Mr. Bayley repeats the alleged ground of his refusal to communicate with the Board of Inquiry, in the following words—“ Of the nature of these charges I am entirely ignorant.”

This assertion is made not only in opposition to the proofs of his full and previous knowledge detailed in my last Minute upon the subject, but also in the face of a recapitulation of the charges, in express terms, in the Treasury letter to which Mr. Bayley is replying, and of my assurance, as conveyed therein, that they “ are the only subjects of reference to the Board in the form of charges against him.” I desire, therefore, to place the true fact of the case on record.

In view of the course pursued by Mr. Bayley throughout, of his strange reluctance to assist in eliciting the merits of the differences at issue, and absolute refusal, upon an obvious pretext, to meet the Board of Inquiry at all, I am unable to attach weight to the concluding paragraph of his letter.

No. 30.

MR. ELIJAH KEATING to THE UNDER SECRETARY FOR FINANCE AND TRADE.

Sydney, 24 August, 1870.

SIR,

I respectfully beg to lay before you, for the information of the Honorable the Colonial Treasurer, a complaint that I have to make against W. A. Duncan, Esq., Collector of Customs.

On the 17th instant the Collector disrated me from the position I held as Assistant to the Jerquer in the Long-room, to the office of Extra Tidewaiter.

I have had no opportunity of defending myself against any charge of misdemeanor, neither has misconduct been attributed to me.

In the usual course of my business, I was asked by Mr. Bayley, a Custom House Agent, for a certain ship's papers, which (in the absence of any known order to the contrary existing in the Custom House) I gave to him.

I did not know for what purpose the papers were required by Mr. Bayley.

When asked by the Collector of Customs if I handed such papers to Mr. Bayley, I at once admitted it, and did not attempt to deny it, but stated that it had been the custom with other officers, my predecessors and superiors, and I thought I was only performing my duty by so doing.

Other officers of the department have frequently handed papers to the Customs' Agents and other persons when required in the usual course of business.

I beg to enclose copies of my appointments to the Customs,—1st, under date bearing 17th January, 1868; the 2nd, under date bearing 25th September, 1868.

I have never acted as Extra Tidewaiter.

I respectfully request that the Honorable the Treasurer will be pleased to institute an inquiry into the matter herein complained of, and that I may be reinstated to the position from which I have been so summarily removed.

I have, &c.,

ELIJAH KEATING.

No. 31.

THE COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS to THE UNDER SECRETARY FOR FINANCE AND TRADE.

Custom House, Sydney,
26 August, 1870.

SIR,

I do myself the honor to forward, for the information of the Honorable the Colonial Treasurer, Vide No. 30. a letter from Mr. Elijah Keating, Extra Tidewaiter, complaining of his having been removed by me from his position as temporary Assistant to the Jerquer, without any charge of misconduct having been made against him, and without having had any opportunity of defending himself. Enclosures herewith.

The charge of misconduct was made on two distinct days, and Mr. Keating was allowed to make any defence he pleased, and to call in evidence whom he pleased. He did call Mr. Burke, his predecessor, in evidence, but his witness testified against him (see his statement at Treasury).

On the first day Mr. Keating was asked, in the presence of the Chief Clerk, Mr. Kelly, Mr. Small, and Mr. Mactaggart, if he furnished certain papers to Mr. Dibbs or Mr. Bayley. He denied it, as all the others had previously done (vide their statements A, B, C, D, herewith). Up to the morning of the second day my suspicions were fixed on a wholly different person, as can be proved by several witnesses. Yet Mr. Keating has the effrontery to say—"When asked by the Collector of Customs if I handed such papers to Mr. Bayley, I at once admitted it, and did not attempt to deny it." Surely this alone is sufficient to stamp the character of this man. It was on the second day, and only when he saw that I had proof before me of the fact, that he admitted it; and if he had even then expressed sorrow for what he had done, nothing beyond a slight reprimand would have followed; but he maintained that he had done nothing wrong, asserted that the late Jerquer, Mr. Jenkins, always did so, and had commanded him to do so; and that Mr. Burke who preceded him in the office would testify to the fact. Mr. Burke was immediately sent for and contradicted his statement. I knew for certain that this statement was untrue, as Mr. Jenkins had constantly sent to me when applications of the kind were made; and further, when he was leaving the office he handed over to the chief messenger a number of applications for permission to inspect documents, which, forty in number, are now at the Treasury.

I

I send herewith fifty-two more, making ninety-two in all, and I believe that there are twice as many more still in the office. The attempt to deny the existence of the regulation and practice, in the face of these documents, and in the face of the statements of the chief clerk and other clerks forwarded in a previous letter to the Treasury, is something indescribable.

It has been stated in a paper which I have seen at the Treasury, and I think it was stated by Mr. Wilson in the Assembly, that Mr. Jenkins was prepared to support Mr. Keating's statement of the practice. I was a little surprised at this, and requested one of the officers to see Mr. Jenkins and ascertain the fact. I enclose a report (E) from Mr. Russell of a conversation held with Mr. Jenkins, in which he emphatically denied that it was his practice while jerquer to allow ships' papers to be examined, except for drawback, and that only when the drawback clerk's copies were at the binder. This is the simple truth. Yet Mr. Keating asserted, and now asserts that "it had been the custom with other officers, his predecessors and superiors," to grant free access to such papers. If this were the fact, how is it that, while Mr. Keating was so accommodating on the occasion referred to, Mr. Kelly, an old established clerk, refused a paper to the same parties? (Vide his statement in a previous letter.) How is it that his superior officer, Mr. Small, the moment he understood what was going on, rushed into the chief clerk's office and reported the matter? Could all this be without any meaning?

The fact is that Mr. Keating, a mere supernumerary, not on the staff of the department, presumed to do what none of these old and permanent officers would have dared to do, and what never has been done by any other to my knowledge.

When, therefore, he states that "other officers of the department have frequently handed papers to the Customs' Agents and other persons when required," I answer: they all deny it; the ninety-two applications forwarded with this and my previous letter disprove it; and even if any one else had so misconducted himself, it would be no excuse for him. The rule, though it has somehow disappeared, was known to every person in the office; also the exception was known with respect to drawbacks, and the special privilege granted on public grounds to the newspapers and the Chamber of Commerce. A similar exception in favour of wharfingers has been applied for and refused a dozen times, as being a purely private object. The drawback clerk, Mr. Rucker, reminds me of what I had forgotten, that the order originally included the entries in his possession, but on complaints being made of the inconvenience of passing drawback entries, I relaxed it in that particular, and as stated, I also yielded to similar applications from the Press and the Chamber of Commerce.

But supposing no order had existed, was it for a person in Mr. Keating's position to give any papers out of his possession without reference to any of his superior officers? And was it possible for me to consent to his remaining in that position, not only after the fact, but after his denial of it in the first instance—after his boldly defending the act when he could no longer deny it—after his denial of the existence of a rule which he could not possibly be ignorant of, as a somewhat similar one issued by my predecessor was still hanging in the room—and after his false imputation upon a gentleman no longer in the department, which offence he now aggravates by making a general charge against other officers?

With respect to the copies of his appointments which he furnishes, they are quite of a piece with his other statements. The first was, on the face of it, merely temporary, during the absence of Mr. Christison, and lapsed on that officer's return. The second was a flagrant act of oppression against his predecessor, Mr. Stephen Burke (vide my letter of the 12th January, 1869); but in any case his position was only that of a tide-waiter temporarily, and during good conduct, employed to assist the jerquer.

Mr. Eagar never had the power to make a permanent appointment of a clerk payable from the extra Tide-list. No other Minister has ever interfered with these small departmental details, and no discipline is, in my opinion, practicable with such interference.

I have confined these remarks to the statements made in Mr. Keating's letter, but I shall be happy to furnish the Honorable Treasurer with any other information on the subject which he may require.

I have, &c.,

Referring to your letter of the 7th of September last, I have the honor to forward the Report of the Board of Inquiry upon the subjects therein alluded to, together with all the papers and evidence connected with the investigation;—

And have, &c.,
ARTHUR T. HOLROYD,
Chairman.

[Enclosure.]

REPORT OF THE BOARD OF INQUIRY.

THE Board appointed by the Honorable the Finance Minister to inquire into the circumstances and report as to the merits of a dispute between the Collector of Customs and Mr. Marshall Bayley, Custom House Agent, and, by means of witnesses and papers, to thoroughly investigate the cause and matter of such dispute, and to forward, with the result of their inquiry, any recommendation likely to arrange existing differences and to obviate their recurrence,—and, further, to inquire into and report upon a complaint preferred by Mr. Keating against the Collector of Customs (arising out of the dispute between Mr. Duncan and Mr. Bayley),—have the honor to submit the following Report:—

*Mr. Bayley's case.*1. As to the entry for salt:—

Upon the question as to the value of salt at Liverpool (the port of shipment in this case, see Mr. Dibbs' affidavit, herewith), the Board have had the fullest evidence from merchants in this city of high standing (named in the margin) who have had business transactions in salt, &c., with Liverpool firms for many years past. Their testimony proves clearly and incontestably that 4s. 4½d. per ton is not the value of salt at Liverpool, but that it may be its prime cost at the works in Cheshire, to which must be added the river freight (about 3s. per ton) for placing the salt at the port of Liverpool, and the value of the bags, amounting in all to 15s. or 16s. per ton.

The Board are therefore of opinion that, in the entry passed by Mr. Bayley, as Agent for Mr. Dibbs, the salt was decidedly undervalued; and further, that, as a Custom House Agent of long standing and experience, Mr. Bayley should have known that the price declared by him was not the true value of the salt at the port of shipment.

Mr. Dibbs was invited to attend and produce the original invoice, but he declined to do so; and the Board have therefore been deprived of evidence as to the real character of this document, and as to the correctness of Mr. Bayley's statement that his entry was passed in accordance with such invoice.

2. As to the manner in which Mr. Bayley obtained extracts from certain Customs' documents; and as to the object for which such extracts were required:—

The Board, after a patient inquiry into this branch of the subject, and from the evidence of nearly all the leading Custom House Agents, and of many Custom House Officers, have arrived at the opinion that Mr. Bayley's conduct is culpable, and deserving of censure at the hands of the Government,—

1. In applying for these ships' papers as though he required them for current Custom House business, and so misleading the clerks from whom he obtained them.
2. In making extracts therefrom to assist in preferring a charge against the head of the Customs' Department, from whom he held his license as a Custom House Agent.

3. As to the charges made by Mr. Bayley against the Collector of Customs, in the public Press:—

The Board cannot but view Mr. Bayley's action, in accusing the head of his department, in a public journal, of having made a report totally at variance with fact, as insubordinate, and calculated to disturb the discipline so essential to the satisfactory administration of a large department like the Customs; more especially as Mr. Bayley had applied to the Treasurer for redress in the matter, and should have awaited the result of such appeal.

The Board have not had the benefit of Mr. Bayley's testimony, except as a witness for Mr. Keating, as he objected to attend; they have therefore had no opportunity of considering the proofs upon which he asserts his statements against the Collector of Customs were based.

It is much to be regretted that Mr. Bayley did not see fit to adopt the suggestion of the Collector of Customs, and offer the apology required from him.

Mr. Keating's case.

It would appear from the evidence in this case that it has been the custom in the Jerquer's department for the Jerquer or his assistant to hand ships' papers to Custom House Agents and others, on application, without reference to any higher authority, and without asking for what purpose the documents were required, on the supposition that they were only wanted for transacting ordinary Custom House business, such as perfecting entries, or obtaining particulars for drawbacks. Although this has been the practice, the evidence of many of the Custom House Officers shows that there was an understood rule against copying Customs' documents.

The Board do not think that Mr. Keating committed more than an act of ignorance or indiscretion in handing ships' papers to Mr. Bayley, since there is no proof that he knew the purpose for which they were required; nor is there any conclusive evidence that, when charged with having given them, he denied that he had done so.

The Board consider, therefore, that the temporary displacement of Mr. Keating from the position of Jerquer's assistant is a sufficient punishment for the offence, and they accordingly recommend his reinstatement with a caution.

With a view to prevent the recurrence of such circumstances as have arisen in the two cases under investigation, the Board recommend that a clear and distinct order should be posted in the Long-room, and in the Custom House Agents' room, defining to whom application is to be made for permission to have access to Customs' documents, and in what cases the authority of the Collector will be necessary.

Custom House Officers also should, on appointment to any office, be made acquainted, in writing, with their duties, so that, in future, ignorance will be no plea for the commission of an error.

George R. APPENDIX B.

(Evidence taken before the Board.)

Robert Rome, of the firm of Lorimer, Marwood, & Rome:—I cannot produce any invoices of the price of Liverpool salt shipped during present year; I believe the price at works to be 4/6 to 5/6 per ton; and river freight to be 4/- to 5/- per ton; last shipment I had was from Liverpool, in February, 1868—invoice, coarse salt, 14/6 per ton; in 1867 we had salt invoiced at 12/6; in 1866 we had salt invoiced at 13/6; believes Liverpool quotations to be from 4/6 to 5/6 per ton, with river freight added, 4/- to 5/- per ton; I have been thirteen years a merchant in trade between the Colonies and Liverpool; there are different qualities of salt known as Liverpool coarse salt; have had a special invoice at 14/- per ton; do not know whether salt is bought free on board or exclusive of river freight; stored salt would be about 3/- per ton more than the above; rock-salt would be about 4/6 per ton at the works.

R. ROME.

21 September.

Mr. Joshua Richmond Young, of the firm of Young & Lark:—I have not done anything lately in salt; last invoice was dated Liverpool, May, 1869; salt, free on board, was 12/- per ton; in February, 1869, salt was invoiced to me at 10/- per ton, exclusive of the bags; I have no information as to the price of salt delivered on board during the present year; stored salt, free on board, in May, 1869, was invoiced at 15/6 per ton, and rock-salt, about the same time, at 10/6 per ton; I always buy at the works, and supply my own bags.

J. R. YOUNG.

21 September.

Joseph Scaife Willis, of the firm of Willis, Lloyd, & Co.:—We have had one shipment of salt in 1869, in the "Medea"; the original cost of this salt, as per invoice produced, is 5/- per ton, river freight 3/- per ton; I believe this to be the charge from the works to the port of Liverpool; the charge of 35/5 is a customary shipping charge at the port of Liverpool. The "Medea" arrived in the month of May, 1870. I produce abstract from price current in European Mail,* where common salt is quoted at 5/6 on 3rd December, 1869; ditto 5/6 on 31st December, 1869; ditto 5/- on 25th March, 1870. Invoices of salt that I have received have been made out in the manner of the one produced, showing the cost of the salt at the works and the river freight added. The fluctuations of the price of salt are as follows, so far as my experience goes; the lowest was 4/- per ton in 1864, the highest was 5/- per ton in 1869. The above data refer to what is commonly called coarse salt; we have received no rock salt since 1865, price then was 6/6 per ton; we have received stoved salt in 1864 and 5, price 7/- and 7/6 per ton respectively.

Andrew Blowers Smith, of the firm of Smith Brothers:—I produce invoice of salt shipped in April, 1870; have several others, but all of the same price; at the works 5s. 3d. per ton, less 2½ per cent. discount; the river freight, 3s. per ton, is the charge for bringing the salt from the works to the ship's side; the cost of salt, without bags, on board ship, is 9s. 1d. per ton; including bags, 16s. 4d. per ton, as per invoice; I have been about thirty-five years engaged in transacting business with Liverpool; some years ago the price of salt was as low as 4s. per ton; the practice is to invoice the salt at the works, and add the river freight; rock salt costs at the works 5s. 6d. per ton; the river freight is the same as for common salt; stoved salt, at the works, is 11s. 3d. per ton; this quotation refers to the best description of stoved salt; the custom in Liverpool is to purchase the salt as at the works, the river freight being a distinct charge for conveyance of the salt from the works to the ship's side; there are no salt works at which a ship could load; W. & J. Lockett, of King-street, Liverpool, are general merchants, principally in wines and spirits, and are the agents for J. & F. Martell.

Boulton

Boulton Molineux (Scott, Henderson, & Co.) :—We have had a shipment of salt by the “Medea,” which arrived in May, 1870; I produce an invoice of salt, in which the salt is invoiced at 5s. per ton; I observe now a fact to which my attention was not called until some time in August, that among the charges is an item of river freight, 3s. per ton; and with respect to such discovery, I now hand in a letter addressed by my firm to the Collector of Customs, on the 16th August; I am of the opinion that there are not different qualities of the salt known as coarse Liverpool salt; can give no information as to the price of rock or stoved salt shipped from Liverpool.

B. MOLINEUX.
23 September.

Messrs. Scott, Henderson, & Co., to The Collector of Customs.

Sydney, 16 August, 1870.

Sir,

We have the honor to own receipt of your letter of even date, having reference to the entry of salt imported by us in the “Medea,” from Liverpool.

On looking into the facts, we find that eight entries were passed 23/25 May, anticipating that, by reason of sea water damage, the full quantity shipped would not be landed.

That completing entry was passed on the 9th June, when, as will be seen from accompanying copies of that document, and the invoice forwarded us by consignors, duty was paid both on bags and salt, fully 10 per cent. being added to cost of each, although in our letter to you of 25th May we had protested against the duty being exacted upon packages. The statement of the party, complaining that our entry had been admitted without such 10 per cent. being added, is therefore manifestly untrue.

That being unaccustomed, when about to prepare entries, to look minutely at the charges portion of an invoice, it was not until to-day perceived, either by our clerk or ourselves, that one of the items charged in this particular invoice consisted of 3/- per ton river freight (we presume from the salt-works to Liverpool), which should properly have been taken into account when paying duty.

Having rendered account sales to the shippers, we shall be unable to receive from them any further sum we may now disburse for duty. Should you however consider we ought to pay ad valorem duty on the omitted item pointed out, be good enough to intimate the same and we will at once hand a cheque for the amount.

We have, &c.,

SCOTT, HENDERSON, & CO.

William Bayly :—I am the clerk of Messrs. Learmonth, Dickinson, & Co., and am in the habit of passing their ad valorem entries; our invoices of Liverpool coarse salt show the cost to be at the works 4/6 per ton, with river freight 3/- from the works to Liverpool, making in all 7/6; this is the lowest; we have had other salt invoiced at 9/6, including river freight; this was during the present year. Purchased 10th February, 1870: on 25th May last, invoice was valued at 4/6 per ton, and river freight 3/-. Purchased 23rd February, 1870: on 24th June, exactly the same as on previous date. Purchased 12th April: on 10th August, exactly the same as on previous date. Purchased 19th May, 1870: on 1st September, the invoice in this instance was 9/6 per ton, which must have included the river freight; the firm were not aware in the first two shipments above-named, that duty was to be paid on the river freight, but paid it on the last two shipments when called upon to do so by the Collector of Customs; I am now aware that the river freight forms part of the cost of the salt at Liverpool; can give no information as to cost of stoved salt.

We had a shipment of rock salt invoiced at 8/- on the 1st of September last.

WM. BAYLY.
23 September.

William Augustine Duncan, Collector of Customs says :—My attention was called to a deficiency in payment of the duty on some salt imported by Mr. Dibbs, and for which an entry had been passed by Mr. M. Bayley, on the 12th July; after this date I had an interview with Mr. Bayley, and when the salt had been valued the deficiency was paid; I arrived at the knowledge of the deficiency by working out the invoiced price of the salt; an entry of this kind should have the value of the bags in a separate line; passed in a single line, as the entry under notice, the cost should have included river freight, bags, &c., and would have amounted to 15/- or 16/- per ton; the affidavit of value sworn by Mr. Dibbs, before me, on 21st July last, states that the value of goods passed ex “Clara Hargraves” to be £1,204 19s. 8d.; that includes the entry for the salt, and another entry for casks and shooks. The affidavit speaks of the value of the goods at Liverpool, and includes the 256 tons of salt. If the salt were shipped at Liverpool, as stated in the affidavit, the value of the bags and the river freight should have been included. Mr. Bayley entered 16 large water-casks at £4; these 16 casks were afterwards sworn to be worth £48.

I am not in the habit of seeing all the declarations made on account of ad valorem duties; this particular one was brought under my notice by [Mr. Landing-waiter Reid; he first called my attention to the absence of any mention about the bags, and afterwards to the low value of the salt; up to this time it had never been brought under my notice that salt had been passed at such a low value; since, it has transpired that salt had been passed in two previous instances at 4s. 6d. per ton, but with 8½d. each for the bags; had my attention been called to these two instances at the time of passing the entries, I should have treated them in just the same way; on the occasion of this entry being brought under my notice, I sent for Mr. Bayley and remonstrated with him, although I cannot swear to the exact words which passed; my minute on Mr. Bayley's letter of the 15th July, 1870, is substantially correct; I certainly did say that I considered Mr. Bayley's declaration a false one; I virtually suspended Mr. Bayley's license for a few hours, by directing the clerks not to receive any further declarations from him; but on his (Mr. B.'s) applying to the Treasurer I withdrew the suspension, because Mr. Bayley having appealed to the Treasurer, I considered it expedient to leave the matter in his hands.

W. A. DUNCAN.
27 September.

Mr. Keating's case.

William Augustine Duncan says :—The papers handed by Mr. Keating to Messrs. Dibbs and Bayley were, an entry for salt, by Messrs. Learmonth, Dickinson, another for salt by Messrs. Willis and Lloyd, and a third for salt by Scott, Henderson, & Co.; these papers were in the possession of Mr. Keating, and were handed by him to Mr. Bayley or Mr. Dibbs; it is customary for merchants and agents to apply for access to drawback papers, but such application is made to the drawback clerk, and not to the jerquer or his assistant; there was an order hanging in the Long-room at the time these papers were handed to Mr. Dibbs or Mr. Bayley, forbidding this practice, signed by Colonel Gibbes; I had issued a more stringent order, order, in writing, some ten years ago, but it has disappeared; I first knew of the copies having been made from seeing the copies themselves, which were sent to me for report by the Treasurer; I had a knowledge that certain documents had been copied, although I did not know what actual papers they were; the information contained in the papers copied could not have been obtained from the drawback clerk, but the price of salt could have been so obtained; I do not object to any information connected with the working of the department being given, but I do object to a clerk parting with papers placed in his custody, without reference to the head of the department; I would not have disrated Mr. Keating for handing the papers to Mr. Dibbs or Mr. Bayley, but I did so on account of his persistent denial of the act, and his subsequent attempted justification of it; my only object in the course I have pursued with regard to Mr. Bayley and Mr. Keating was to secure the preservation of discipline in the proper working of the department.

W. A. DUNCAN.

27 September.

William Norman Llewellyn, Chief Clerk in the Customs:—I recollect a meeting of several clerks in the Collector's rooms, among whom was Mr. Keating, when the Collector questioned them as to whether they had handed any papers to Mr. Dibbs or Mr. Bayley; I did not hear Mr. Keating admit having done so, nor, so far as I recollect, did I hear him deny it; a merchant or his clerk, or a Custom House Agent, is allowed to have access to ships' papers, and entries, for the purpose of completing any necessary business with the Custom House; the proper officers to apply to for permission to see such papers are the drawback clerk, or jerquer; no person is allowed to take a copy of a lengthy document without permission of the Collector; he may make extracts to enable him to pass his entries, or perform any necessary business with the Custom House; the Collector of Customs gave a verbal order in 1859, that no extracts were to be made from official documents without his permission; I have no recollection of seeing on a wall any written order of Mr. Duncan's forbidding access to official documents, nor can I find any such order in the order-book.

W. N. LLEWELLIN.

28 September.

Richard Kelly, Clearing and Export Clerk in the Customs Department:—I remember being summoned into Mr. Duncan's room respecting Mr. Keating's matter; I have no recollection at all of Mr. Keating's having admitted giving up any papers to Mr. Bayley or Mr. Dibbs. I was asked by Mr. Bayley's clerk for permission to copy the outward clearance of the "Clara Hargraves," but I refused, knowing that it was contrary to the rules of the department to allow him to do so without the Collector's permission; I never saw a written order forbidding copies of official documents to be made; at the time I left the room on the occasion of the meeting before referred to, I believe it had not been found out who had given the papers to Mr. Bayley; to the best of my belief Mr. Keating was present at the meeting.

RICHD. KELLY.

28 September.

Robert Small, Jerquer in the Customs Department:—I recollect a meeting of several clerks in Mr. Duncan's room respecting Mr. Keating's matter; Mr. Keating was present; when Mr. Keating entered the room the Collector asked him if he had been giving out any papers; I did not hear Mr. Keating's reply; I never allow papers to be copied—I never give out papers to be copied, because it is an understood rule that no papers are to be copied without permission of the collector; it is the custom in my department for access to papers to be obtained through me; I generally inquire for what purpose a paper is required; Mr. Keating has been with me since January last.

R. SMALL.

28 September.

Malcolm Mactaggart, Computer of duty in the Long-room:—I recollect Mr. Keating being present at a meeting in the Collector's room; I do not recollect that Mr. Keating either admitted or denied having given out certain papers to be copied while I was in the room.

M. MACTAGGART.

28th September.

Stephen Richard Burke, temporary Clerk in the Long-room:—I was nine months assistant to the late Jerquer; the practice was to apply to Mr. Jenkins for permission to copy or inspect papers; no papers were given out by me; I always referred to Mr. Jenkins for authority.

STEPHEN R. BURKE.

28th September.

Christopher Warburton, Locker in the Customs:—Have been in this position three or four months; was about two years assistant to Mr. Jenkins, the late Jerquer; sometimes ships' papers were required to perfect entries; in such cases they were given without the permission of the Collector; but if application were made to copy papers, reference was made to the Collector when application was made for papers; I always asked for what purpose it was required.

C. Warburton.

28th September.

Henry M'Crea, of George M'Crea & Co., Custom House Agents:—Thirteen years a Custom House Agent; it is sometimes necessary for me in the course of my business to apply for inspection of papers; I have always stated the object for which I required papers; I have twice had occasion to apply for permission to extract something from documents in the Record-room; I then applied to the Collector of Customs; I never had occasion to copy a document, and am not aware whether there was any order prohibiting access to papers.

HY. M'CREA.

28th September.

George

George Wall, Custom House Agent, of the firm of Metcalfe, Powell, & Wall :—It occurs in the course of my business that I have to apply for papers in the custody of the Customs.

I apply for entries to Mr. Rucker, Drawback Clerk, and for ships' papers to the Jerquer ; it is the custom of these officers to allow access to the respective papers at once for reference ; I have applied for permission to copy papers ; I go to the Collector if I want to copy documents.

GEORGE WALL.

Robert Adams, Custom House Agent for nineteen years :—I am continually obliged to apply for the inspection of papers in the hands of the Customs Department ; the officers to whom I generally apply are the Drawback Clerk and the Jerquer ; for copying a ship's papers and manifest which have been put away a written application is necessary, but for reference to ordinary papers none is necessary ; I have never had occasion to take copies of documents in the possession of the Jerquers.

R. ADAMS.

Elijah Keating, late Jerquer's Assistant (up to 17 August), now Extra Tide-waiter :—I recollect being called into the Collector's room about 11th August ; the first thing when I entered the room, Mr. Duncan said how dare I usurp either his chair or his office ; I replied that I had not done either ; he held up some documents : he asked me how dare I give out ship's papers without authority ; I replied that I had done so ever since I came into the department ; he asked me if I knew of an order against it ; I said I was not aware of any ; the Collector then asked the other clerks if they were aware of any order forbidding the exhibition of such documents ; Mr. Llewellyn said he was not aware of any order prohibiting the exhibition of these documents ; I don't recollect what Mr. Mactaggart said ; Mr. Small said he did not know of any order ; Mr. Kelly said the same ; Mr. Duncan said nothing further to me. I was one year and eleven months Assistant to the Jerquer—part of that time under Mr. Jenkins, part under Mr. Small. I remember Mr. Dibbs and Mr. Bayley coming to the Custom House about the 10th or 11th August, when the latter asked me to let him see the "Medea's" papers ; Mr. Bayley did not state for what purpose he wanted them ; I gave them to him ; he asked me for no other papers ; he took his extracts, and it was not my business to inquire what he wanted with them ; Mr. Small was present ; I should have objected to Mr. Bayley taking the papers out of the room ; he said nothing about perfecting any entries ; I did not consult with Mr. Small about giving the papers, but Mr. Small knew Mr. Bayley had the papers, for he must have heard them asked for.

It is not usual, when applications are made for ship's papers in the Jerquer's department, without stating for what they are required, to refer to the superior officer for permission to give them ; Mr. Bayley did not state for what purpose they were required ; I have never, during the time I have been Jerquer's Assistant, applied to my superior officer for permission to give papers to Custom House Agents who applied for them ; I know that papers in possession of the first messenger cannot be seen without a written order from the Collector, but I have never seen an order by Mr. Duncan to exhibit papers in the custody of the Jerquer's department ; after Mr. Bayley had returned me the "Medea's" papers, he asked Mr. Small for another ship's papers, either the "Compadre," or "Cairnsmore," which Mr. Small gave him without demur ; Mr. Bayley got his information from them, and handed them back ; Mr. Burke was Jerquer's Assistant under Mr. Jenkins immediately before I was.

E. KEATING.

30 September.

John Bros, Custom House Agent :—I have frequently, in the course of my business, to apply for papers in the Jerquer's department, for inspection ; I applied either to the Jerquer or his assistant ; I have had occasion to refer to Mr. Duncan under peculiar circumstances, for permission to see papers ; the Jerquer and his assistant sit so close to one another that both must hear what the other says ; I have been a Custom House Agent and clerk to C. H. A., 18 years ; I never heard of any order prohibiting documents being copied without permission of the Collector ; there was an order, signed by Col. Gibbs, directing Custom House Agents not to help themselves to papers, but to refer to the proper clerks for the information they required ; I have had papers from Mr. Burke, late Jerquer's Assistant ; by copying, I mean making extracts for my business in connection with the Custom House.

JNO. BROS.

30 September.

Louis Buchanan, Import Clerk, Custom House :—When application is made to me, by a Custom House Agent, to see a warrant for the purpose of taking the number I allow them to do so ; in most of these cases it is for the purpose of obtaining drawbacks ; if a Custom House Agent were to ask for a warrant I would give it him without asking why he wanted it—that is if he mentioned a warrant of a certain date ; I would take down that warrant and let him look at it.

LOUIS BUCHANAN.

30 Sept.

Marshall Bayley, Custom House Agent for about sixteen years :—I have been in the habit of referring to the Jerquer and his assistant for papers for inspection ; I apply to the Jerquer and his assistant indifferently ; they sit close together, and both can hear an application when made, unless otherwise engaged ; I have always obtained ships' papers, when in the Jerquer's department, from the Jerquer or his assistant, as a matter of course, only requiring a written order when in the Record-room ; I have never seen an order forbidding the exhibition of papers without authority, either in Long-room or the Agents' room ; I applied some time since, in company with Mr. Dibbs, for the "Medea's" papers ; I asked, I think, Mr. Keating for these papers ; I asked Mr. Small for the papers of another ship ; when I asked for both papers Mr. Small was quite near enough to hear me on both occasions ; Mr. Small handed me one ship's papers, and did not make any objection when I asked Mr. Keating for the "Medea's" papers ; neither Mr. Keating nor Mr. Small asked me for what purpose I required the papers.

M. BAYLEY.

George

George Richard Dibbs, merchant in Sydney:—In July last I accompanied Mr. Bayley to the Custom House, for the purpose of seeing the "Medea's" papers; Mr. Bayley asked Mr. Keating if he would oblige him with the "Medea's" papers; did not state for what purpose he wanted them; Mr. Keating handed him the papers without remark; Mr. Bayley asked Mr. Small, about ten minutes afterwards, for some other ship's paper; Mr. Bayley and myself both made some extracts from the "Medea's" papers, on a desk in the room; it was in the power of Mr. Small and Mr. Keating to notice that we were making extracts from the papers; I think the papers were handed by Mr. Keating, as a matter of course, without reference to Mr. Small; Mr. Small did not ask for what purpose the ship's papers required of him were wanted for; he gave the papers without raising any objection.

GEORGE R. DIBBS.
30 Sept.

George Packer, Collector of the Dues on the Circular Quay:—I frequently apply for papers in the Jerquer's department; I apply to the Jerquer or his assistant; no one ever asked me for what purpose I required papers, nor did I ever state why I wanted them; I have never made application to the Collector for permission to see papers in the Jerquer's department; I always used to have access to papers in the time of Mr. Jenkins and Mr. Burke.

GEO. PACKER.
30 Sept.

Edward Aleyn Braham, Clerk to H. S. Bird, Circular Quay:—I am in the habit of applying to the Jerquer's department in the Custom House for ships' manifests, landing and tide-waiter's books, with import entries; I apply to the Jerquer or his assistant for them; I have never been refused; the Assistant Jerquer has been in the habit of handing me the papers in question, without reference to any one; I have never been asked why I wanted these papers.

E. A. BRAHAM.
30th September.

Robert Small re-examined:—Recollects the time that Mr. Bayley and Mr. Dibbs had some Customs papers; I did not hear them asked for; I saw them with some papers, and I asked Mr. Keating if he had given them out, and what they were doing with them; Mr. Keating then got up from his desk, and looking across to where Mr. Dibbs and Mr. Bayley were, said—"I think they are copying them"; I then went in to the Chief Clerk, and told him that I had heard of some dispute likely to arise between the Collector and Mr. Dibbs, and that I did not like to see Mr. Dibbs with the papers; Mr. Llewellyn then said—"I give you orders to deliver out no more papers without my order, or that of the Collector"; Mr. Keating admitted having given out the "Medea's" papers; I do not recollect that Mr. Dibbs or Mr. Bayley asked me for any papers at that particular time, nor have I any recollection of having given them any papers; I do not remember Mr. Dibbs or Mr. Bayley asking for the papers of the "Compadre" or "Cairnsmore"; I positively assert that I did not give out any papers to Mr. Dibbs or Mr. Bayley after seeing the papers in Mr. Bayley's hands, on the occasion of my going to the Chief Clerk; I do not recollect giving any papers to Mr. Dibbs or Mr. Bayley from the morning of this day until I went to the Chief Clerk, as I before stated; in the majority of cases, where applications were made to Mr. Keating for papers, he gave them without reference to me; I have never had occasion to reprimand Mr. Keating for giving out papers improperly.

MINUTE OF THE COLONIAL TREASURER.

1 November, 1870.

Inquiry into dispute between the Collector of Customs and Mr. Bayley, and the case of Mr. Keating.

I HAVE perused the Report of the Board appointed to inquire into the circumstances connected with the dispute between Mr. Bayley and the Collector of Customs, together with the evidence appended thereto.

As I am given to understand, however, that Mr. Bayley has retired from business as a Custom House Agent, it is unnecessary to deal with the finding of the Board so far as that gentleman is concerned.

With regard to Mr. Keating, I concur with the recommendation that he may be reinstated, with a caution.

Clarence River, 18 January, 1869.

SIR,

I have the honor to inform you that upon the 14th instant a cyclone passed over the station, doing great destruction to the Government and adjoining property; the Church at Lawrence, which was a new building, was blown to the ground.

The Government boat-shed was blown down with great violence and completely smashed; also, two pair of paddles, and a mast and sprit. The boat was blown clean off the ways into the river, and again blown upon the beach, but has only received a severe shaking, which has caused her to leak, so that she is quite unfit for service.

The Customs' building has also received considerable damage,—the chimney being blown down, damaging the roof and guttering; a great quantity of shingles were blown off the roof, which has caused it to leak very much; and the building is left in a very dilapidated state.

I beg leave to request that proper steps may be taken to make the necessary repairs good before the rainy season, which is now coming on, commences.

I have, &c.,
C. B. DOBBIN,
Landing-waiter.

MEMORANDUM OF THE SUB-COLLECTOR.

Forwarded to the Collector of Customs.—C.G.

MINUTE OF THE COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS.

Before recommending anything to be done to these buildings I should wish to have a special report from the Sub-Collector. It appears to me that this station at Lawrence costs a great deal more money than it is worth; and as I shall be called upon shortly to suggest retrenchment, I should wish to have a full report from Mr. Grant as to the necessity, or otherwise, of keeping up two stations on the Clarence; and the course that would be necessary in the event of one being abolished.—W.A.D., 25/1/69.

No. 2.

THE SUB-COLLECTOR, GRAFTON, to THE COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS.

Custom House, Grafton,
1 February, 1869.

SIR,

In reply to your minute of the 25th ultimo, on Mr. Dobbin's application for repairs to the Customs' buildings at Lawrence, in which you call on me to report as to the necessity, or otherwise, of keeping up two stations on the Clarence, and the course that would be necessary in the event of one being abolished,—I do myself the honor to submit my impressions on these matters.

I see no sufficient reason for maintaining the station at Lawrence. As a preventive service it is almost useless, situated 25 miles from the Heads, with a look-out in a direction opposite to that in which vessels arrive, it leaves the Lower Clarence wholly unprotected against attempts on the revenue, and this is just the portion of the river most favourable to such attempts. Vessel after vessel might come into those waters and leave them without the knowledge of an officer stationed at Lawrence; and for the same reasons he could not efficiently supervise the legitimate trade between his station and the Heads. There cannot however be a doubt as to the necessity of a second officer of Customs at the Clarence, and that he should be stationed at the Heads.

I have, &c.,
CHAS. GRANT,
Sub-Collector.

THE COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS to THE SUB-COLLECTOR, GRAFTON.

Custom House, Sydney,
10 February, 1869.

SIR,

With reference to Mr. Dobbin's letter to you of the 18th ultimo, and your report of the 1st instant, on the subject of the station at Lawrence, I am quite of your opinion that the officer at that station should be removed to the mouth of the river; and having submitted the matter to the Honorable the Colonial Treasurer, Mr. Samuel, after consulting with the Honorable the Premier, also approves of the change.

You

You will therefore, at your earliest convenience, proceed to the Heads, and fix the proper site of the new station. In this you will exercise your best judgment, having in view, on the one hand, the convenience of the officer, and on the other, and chiefly, the object for which the station is established,—namely, the protection of the Revenue. I presume there is plenty of Crown Land still available; but, as some may have been sold, you will take care not to trespass on any private property. When you have determined the site, you will direct that all the serviceable materials of the buildings at Lawrence be removed thither—that the boatmen, as before, be employed in re-erecting them; and upon receiving a requisition for nails, and any other necessary articles not procurable on the spot, the Colonial Architect will be instructed to furnish them. I need hardly add that, as there will be at present no revenue from this station, no unnecessary expense must be incurred.

It will be understood that the officer and boatmen are not entitled to quarters, and that the Government merely assists them (in consequence of there being no available dwellings for them to rent) to erect suitable places for themselves.

I have, &c.,
W. A. DUNCAN,
Collector of Customs.

No. 4.

THE COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS TO THE SUB-COLLECTOR, GRAFTON.

Custom House, Sydney,
6 May, 1869.

SIR,

With reference to previous correspondence on the subject of the site chosen by you for the Customs' station at the mouth of the Clarence, I have duly weighed your arguments in favour of that site against the objections that have been offered to it; I have also had the assistance of Captain Hixson, Superintendent of Pilots, and the master of one of the steamers trading to the Clarence, and I have come to the conclusion that Iluka, being distant from the entrance and not within sight of it, is not the proper place for the Customs' station.

I have not overlooked the difficulty anticipated by you in boarding vessels near the Heads from a two-oared boat; but both the professional gentlemen referred to assure me that in ordinary weather there would be no difficulty whatever; and as it would be easy in foul weather to use the Pilot's boat, it appears to me that the advantages of a good look-out station far outweigh the disadvantage referred to.

Even if at some future time it should be necessary to supply the officer with a whaleboat and four men, I think the importance of fixing on the proper site at once too great to be overruled by such a contingency; and such is also the opinion of the Honorable the Colonial Treasurer.

You will therefore proceed again to the mouth of the river, and choose a site at or near the Pilot Station, and in view of the entrance.

I have, &c.,
W. A. DUNCAN,
Collector of Customs.

THE COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS TO THE SUB-COLLECTOR, GRAFTON.

Custom House, Sydney,
3 November, 1869.

SIR,

A private letter has been shown to me, from which I have been permitted to take an extract, for the information of the Colonial Treasurer, in which it is stated that smuggling is carried on at the mouth of the Clarence. This is no more than might have been expected, from the want of all protection at the Heads, and I am greatly disappointed that Mr. Dobbin has not before now established himself there in compliance with the orders of the Government.

I am aware that Mr. Dobbin made a proposal, which, with a view to meet his wishes, I had submitted to the Minister of Lands, who has not yet found time to deal with it, but in the meantime Mr. Dobbin should have complied with his instructions; and Mr. Samuel directs that he remove to the Heads as soon as possible.

I have, &c.,
W. A. DUNCAN,
Collector of Customs.

THE COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS TO THE UNDER SECRETARY FOR FINANCE AND TRADE.

Custom House, Sydney,
22 November, 1869.

SIR,

I do myself the honor to state, for the information of the Honorable the Colonial Treasurer, that Mr. Dobbin, Landing-waiter at the Clarence, has left his station without leave of absence, and without any adequate excuse.

This

This officer has been repeatedly ordered to take up his station at the Heads to prevent smuggling, of which I have had several reports, his present position at Lawrence rendering his office quite useless; but he has for months past delayed, on one pretext or another, to obey the order, and he now positively refuses to remove.

I have no doubt an officer can be found who will undertake to watch the Clarence Heads; but in any case it is certain that there is no use whatever for an officer at Lawrence.

I have, &c.,
W. A. DUNCAN,
Collector of Customs.

MINUTE OF THE COLONIAL TREASURER.

Mr. Dobbin is highly censurable for having left his station without leave, and he must at once return and await my decision. Mr. Dobbin has made charges, personally to me, against the Sub-Collector at Grafton, of being addicted to drunkenness, and permitting duties, which should be performed by him, to be performed by Mr. Dobbin. The latter officer should be required to make these charges in writing.—S.S., 24/11/69.

MEMORANDUM OF THE COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS.

Mr. Dobbin informed.—W.A.D., 24/11/69.

No. 7.

THE COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS TO THE SUB-COLLECTOR, GRAFTON.

Custom House, Sydney,
22 November, 1869.

SIR,

I have the honor to request that you will inform me whether it is with your knowledge that Mr. Dobbin has left his station without leave of absence?

It is also necessary that you should offer some explanation of a statement made to me by Mr. Dobbin, which would go to show that your station rather than his, or perhaps both, should be abolished, and that the maintenance of a boat and crew at Grafton—at a time when retrenchment is the order of the day—is as indefensible as you admit that at Lawrence to be.

Mr. Dobbin states that he performs the whole of the duties of Sub-Collector,—enters and clears all vessels; and that all that you do is to superintend a store containing a few packages secured for duty. He further states that, with the exception of steamers (the passengers by which have to be landed at Grafton), no master of a vessel is required to report at the Custom House there. The result is, of course, that the law is set at naught, and that the object of the Government in appointing a Sub-Collector at Grafton is frustrated.

On asking Mr. Dobbin by what authority he, a landing-waiter, presumed to clear vessels, he said he had written instructions to do so from Mr. Hamburger. What these instructions may be I know not, but they could not be binding on you, or remove one iota of your responsibility as Sub-Collector; and I should have thought that the proceedings of Mr. Hamburger would rather be a beacon to warn his successor than an example to be followed.

It does indeed surprise me that if you found a practice so abnormal in existence, you did not either abolish it, or communicate with me on the subject.

I have, &c.,
W. A. DUNCAN,
Collector of Customs.

No. 8.

THE SUB-COLLECTOR, GRAFTON, TO THE COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS.

Custom House, Grafton,
27 November, 1869.

SIR,

I do myself the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 22nd instant, inquiring whether it was with my knowledge that Mr. Dobbin left his station without leave of absence; and calling on me for an explanation of certain statements made by him respecting the Customs' service at this port.

My report, that Mr. Dobbin had left his station without my knowledge, will have already reached you.

Mr. Dobbin states that he performs the whole of the duties of Sub-Collector; this reckless assertion will be best disposed of by a reference to the records of this office. From these documents it appears that all that Mr. Dobbin did in connection with the duties of Sub-Collector during the first six months of this year, was to clear five Intercolonial schooners, while during the same period I cleared seventy-eight steamers and three sailing vessels. During the succeeding three months, known as the "corn" season, when only (with few exceptions) sailing vessels call at this river, twenty-six of these were cleared on the Lower Clarence, and at Grafton there cleared thirty-six steamers and seven sailing vessels.

Mr. Dobbin goes on to state that all I do is to superintend a store containing a few packages. The duties upon what Mr. Dobbin is pleased to call "a few packages" will, I anticipate, reach £1,000 during the current quarter. This amount, consisting of several small items, will involve no inconsiderable clerical labour, as may be seen by referring to (say) my last quarterly return to the Auditor General. The goods upon which these duties are levied, arrived by steam vessels at uncertain hours of the day and night, and require my supervision. Grafton is the only place on the Clarence River where duties are tendered.

I come now to explain how it was that I permitted an officer of the rank of Landing-waiter to encroach upon my office as Sub-Collector in clearing vessels. When this irregularity, which had been in existence before I took charge of this port, came under my notice, I wrote to Mr. Dobbin, as follows, on the 19th September, 1865:—"I send you, at your request, a few forms for clearing vessels, without, however, committing myself thereby to any sanction of your entering or clearing vessels at all. I believe your doing so to be irregular, and indeed illegal. This opinion is of course subject to the instructions which you received on your appointment, a copy of which you will have the goodness to favour me with. I intend to make a representation of the question, with a view to relieve myself of the responsibility it involves." Finding that those instructions gave Mr. Dobbin no authority to clear vessels, I visited his station, and was assured by him that Mr. Hamburger had, with the knowledge of the Collector, directed him to do so; and in proof of this he showed the books and forms, which he said were supplied to him from head quarters. I am sorry to say that I accepted this explanation, little suspecting the use which Mr. Dobbin was about to make of my acquiescence in this abuse. I did this all the more readily, seeing that if these trifling duties were withdrawn from him, Mr. Dobbin would have absolutely nothing to do.

I may here remark, that the Telegraph line, which will be extended to the Heads in a few weeks, and the daily steam communication which will be opened immediately to the Lower Clarence, will enable me to control the trade of the river far more effectually than heretofore.

I have, &c.,
CHAS. GRANT,
Sub-Collector.

MEMORANDUM OF THE COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS.

When I called upon Mr. Grant to explain the irregularities herein referred to, Mr. Dobbin had not made his charge of drunkenness against Mr. Grant.

I read the Treasurer's Minute to Mr. Dobbin, requiring him to put his charge in writing, but he refused to do so, and I am not aware whether he has returned to his station or not.—W.A.D., 2/12/69.

MINUTE OF THE COLONIAL TREASURER.

Bring this forward in a few days.—S.S., 6/12/69.

No. 9.

MR. LANDING-WAITER DOBBIN TO THE COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS.

Customs' Station, Lawrence, Port of Grafton,
7 December, 1869.

SIR,

I have the honor to address you in reference to your letter to the Sub-Collector of Customs at Grafton, of the 3rd November, 1869, conveying an expression of dissatisfaction at my not having removed to the Clarence Heads.

In defence of my conduct, and with all due respect, I beg leave to state:—

That from the position of the correspondence which had taken place, I concluded that it was not necessary for me to leave Lawrence until a site for the new station at the Heads had been determined upon.

That it was quite out of my power to remove the present quarters, and re-erect them at the Heads, a distance of nearly thirty miles, with only the assistance of the boatmen, in accordance with your letter of the 16th February, 1869.

And that I was unwilling to accept the new appointment to be made at the Heads in lieu of my present office of Landing-waiter at the town of Lawrence, which is, I understand, now considered unnecessary.

I have the honor at the same time briefly to lay before you the circumstances under which I accepted the appointment to Lawrence, in July, 1861.

I resigned my commission as Lieutenant in Her Majesty's Navy, upon the offer of the command of the Colonial armed steamer "Torch," at a salary of £322 per annum; this office I held until the 18th of January, 1856, when the "Torch" was sold, and when I was offered the first suitable appointment.

After waiting until the 7th August, 1860, and seeing vacancies filled up, for which I was fully qualified, I was offered the office of Tidewaiter in the Customs' Department, and on the 7th August, 1861, I received the appointment of Landing-waiter to Lawrence, with a salary of £200 a year and quarters, with permission to live at any place within sight of the station. I was informed that the duties were not of a nature to confine me constantly to my post, but that as they increased my pay should be increased, and that I should be promoted on the first vacancy.

When I came to Lawrence, after waiting twelve months, and having to rent a house, the material for quarters was forwarded in order to get the quarters ready for my family; I had to assist in felling the timber, building the quarters, and boatshed.

I have now been here a period of eight years, officers have been appointed over me to the Sub-Collectorship, and many new places have been made with higher salary than I am receiving.

The work has increased, as reference to pay-books will show, to at least twenty times what it was, and my salary, less amount paid to the Superannuation Fund, is now £192 per annum.

By unremitting and faithful discharge of my duties for the last nine years I have at least incurred no censure, and I feel assured that if it is necessary to do away with my appointment the Government, upon consideration of the circumstances, will do me the justice to allow me the usual compensation of one month's pay for each year of service, besides the amount which I have subscribed to the Superannuation Fund.

I have, &c.,
C. B. DOBBIN,
Landing-waiter.

THE COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS TO MR. LANDING-WAITER DOBBIN.

Custom House, Sydney,
13 December, 1869.

SIR,

Your letter of the 7th instant contains a number of statements respecting your appointment to this department, which have no foundation in fact.

You received your first appointment from me without any action of the Government; your promotion was made on my recommendation, without any reference whatever to your previous services or claims; and you received assistance to erect your quarters, not in consequence of any promise, for there was none, but simply on my recommendation. It is quite useless therefore to discuss imaginary claims, or to suppose that the Government will grant you any compensation while you are under a charge of disobeying its orders, and of leaving your station without its permission.

I have further to remind you that you have not yet complied with the minute of the Honorable the Colonial Treasurer, which I read to you (copy herewith), requesting you to put in writing your charges against the Sub-Collector at Grafton, and which Mr. Samuel insists on your forthwith doing, as well as on your removal to the Heads, under pain of dismissal.

I have, &c.,
W. A. DUNCAN,
Collector of Customs.

MR. LANDING-WAITER DOBBIN TO THE COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS.

Customs', Lawrence,
17 December, 1869.

SIR,

In reply to your letter of the 13th instant, I beg to observe that I have made no statements which are at variance with facts.

My promotion and assistance to erect quarters have been given solely upon your recommendation, and without any reference to my former services. I may with more justice urge upon the Government the claims referred to in my letter of the 7th instant.

I am not aware of any grounds for the charge against me of disobeying orders. Had I been disposed to accept the appointment at the Clarence Heads I could not have removed the station until the site was determined—that question not having been settled. I must protest against the injustice of throwing the blame upon me.

When I received your letter of the 3rd November last, I proceeded at once to Sydney to make known to you personally my intentions of not moving from Lawrence; and if the appointment at that place has been cancelled I must not have been said to have absented myself without leave; and, what is more, you cannot dismiss me if the appointment is cancelled.

I beg to remind you that I did not make any charges against the Sub-Collector of Customs in Grafton, except in answer to your leading questions concerning him. I informed you in Sydney that I declined to put any charges in writing.

SIR,

I do myself the honor to report that Mr. Dobbin still remains at Lawrence in disregard of your orders,—that he should remove to the Clarence Heads. When those orders were communicated to him he took his departure for Sydney without leave of absence; and since his return the only notice he has taken of them has been to return to me your letter of instructions, marked "Read."

THE COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS TO THE UNDER SECRETARY FOR FINANCE AND TRADE.

Custom House, Sydney,
24 December, 1869.

SIR,

With reference to previous correspondence on the subject of the protection of the revenue at the Clarence Heads—the refusal of Mr. Dobbin to obey the Treasurer's order to remove thither—and his coming to Sydney without leave of absence, and preferring serious charges against the Sub-Collector at Grafton,—I have now the honor to forward two letters* from Mr. Dobbin, dated respectively the 7th and the 17th instant. In answer to the first, I pointed out the fictitious nature of its contents, and declined to submit the claim for compensation put forth by him till he had complied with the Treasurer's minute required requiring him to put the charges referred to in writing. In his letter of the 17th Mr. Dobbin treats his removal to the Heads as a new appointment, which he is not disposed to accept; states, untruly, that the site is not determined, and protests therefore against the imputation of any blame to him.

* Vide Nos. 9

I may here mention that the site was fixed near the pilot's station (after much correspondence and consultation) as far back as May last, and that Mr. Dobbin had been repeatedly instructed to remove.

Mr. Dobbin goes on to say, that he came to Sydney to make known his "intention of not moving from Lawrence," and argues that if his appointment at Lawrence has been cancelled he cannot be said to have absented himself without leave, nor can he see how he can be dismissed from an appointment that is already cancelled. It appears to me useless to discuss such an argument as this.

Finally, Mr. Dobbin (although he repeated the same things at the Treasury) accuses me, untruly, of having extorted his charges against Mr. Grant by leading questions, and repeats his refusal to put them in writing, in obedience to the Treasurer's minute.

The same post has brought a letter from Mr. Grant with reference to Mr. Dobbin's refusal to remove from Lawrence, which I also enclose for the perusal of the Honorable the Colonial Treasurer.

I have, &c.,
W. A. DUNCAN,
Collector of Customs.

A large proportion of these articles were, of course, lawfully consumed by the 14th Regiment, and there is no doubt that considerable quantities were disposed of fraudulently, but there is no means of distinguishing the one from the other, or of estimating their proportions respectively.

CUSTOMS LAWS CONSOLIDATION AND AMENDMENT BILL.

(PETITION—MR. J. B. WATT, CHAIRMAN OF THE SYDNEY CHAMBER OF COMMERCE.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be Printed, 4 April, 1871.

To the Honorable the Members of the Legislative Assembly of New South Wales, in Parliament assembled.

The Petition of the Members of the Sydney Chamber of Commerce,—

RESPECTFULLY SHOWETH:—

That in the month of September, 1870, a Bill "to consolidate and amend the Laws relating to the Customs" was introduced into your Honorable House, by the then Colonial Treasurer.

That your Petitioners having had experience of the defects of the existing Act, and feeling that the proposed amended Act was a measure affecting deeply the commercial interests of the Colony, and through them the Colony at large, gave their anxious and careful consideration to the proposed measure, and prepared suggestions for such alteration as appeared to them essential. That these suggestions were submitted by your Petitioners to the Honorable the Colonial Treasurer, at an interview at which the Collector of Customs was present. That the various alterations and additions proposed by your Petitioners received the concurrence and approval of the Honorable the Colonial Treasurer and Collector of Customs. That the most important alterations suggested by your Petitioners were the following:—

- 1st. That a Board of Commissioners should be appointed for the purpose of hearing and determining disputes between officers of Customs, and between such officers and the masters or owners of ships, importers, consignees, shippers, or exporters of goods, or their agents respectively; from whose decision appeal should lay to the Supreme Court.
- 2nd. That with a view to limit the vexatious delays experienced by ships in this port, in consequence of the present Customs Act allowing a period of seven days before a consignee may be compelled to pass entry for his goods, the master of a vessel should be empowered forty-eight hours after arrival to pass at sight entry for goods, if not previously passed by the importer or consignee, and thereupon to land the goods and place them in the Queen's Warehouse or other safe store, retaining a lien for freight and charges so incurred.
- 3rd. That in cases where the Collector of Customs is not satisfied with the value declared by an importer, he shall be entitled to take the said goods on behalf of the Government, on paying the importer the value at which he was willing to pay duty on the said goods with ten per cent. added thereto.

Your Petitioners, feeling the urgent necessity of an amendment of the Customs Laws, humbly pray that your Honorable House will as early as possible proceed with the measure now before your House, or enact such other measure as may facilitate the settlement in a just and equitable manner of disputes betwixt the officers of the Customs and the public, and lessen the delays to which ships are now subjected in the discharge of their inward cargoes.

And your Petitioners, as in duty bound, will ever pray.

For and on behalf of the Members of the Sydney Chamber of Commerce,—

JOHN B. WATT,
Chairman.

AD VALOREM DUTIES.

(PETITION—COMMITTEE OF CHAMBER OF COMMERCE.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be Printed, 7 March, 1871.

To the Honorable the Legislative Assembly of New South Wales, in Parliament assembled.

The Petition of the Committee of the Sydney Chamber of Commerce,—

RESPECTFULLY SHOWETH :—

That your Petitioners having had experience of the unsatisfactory working of ad valorem duties, had hoped, from the almost unanimous expression of opinion of the Members of the Legislature, that means would have been found “to unfetter the trade and commerce of the Colony” by the abolition of the system of ad valorem duties.

That your Petitioners view with regret a proposition to perpetuate a system so generally disapproved of, aggravated by the introduction of a principle of discriminating, or in other words, protective duties.

Your Petitioners humbly pray that even if it be necessary for the maintenance of the public credit to delay for the present the abolition of ad valorem duties, they may be made uniform in amount ; and that such measures may be adopted as early as possible as will enable your Honorable House altogether to relieve the commerce of the Colony of ad valorem duties ; and that, in the meantime, every facility should be afforded, by an extension of the warehousing system, and an amendment of the Customs Act, to reduce as far as possible the difficulties in the way of carrying on the re-export trade.

And your Petitioners, as in duty bound, will ever pray.

The Committee of the Chamber of Commerce,—

JOHN B. WATT,

Chairman.

THE TARIFF.

(PETITION—CERTAIN FARMERS AND OTHERS OF MORUYA.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be Printed, 15 March, 1871.

To the Honorable the Legislative Assembly of New South Wales, in Parliament assembled.

The Memorial of the undersigned Farmers and others, Inhabitants of the Town and District of Moruya,—

HUMBLY SHOWETH:—

That at a Public Meeting held in the Court-house, Moruya, on Thursday the 23rd February, T. T. Gannon, J.P., in the Chair, it was unanimously resolved, that whilst the agriculturists of this district and the Colony generally will be subject, in the proposed new Tariff, to the payment of import duties on agricultural implements, wheat, flour, and other necessities,—and whilst they admit the advisability of increased taxation under the present financial condition of the Colony,—they desire to draw attention to the fact that one of the staple products of this country, viz., potatoes, is omitted from the new list of duties on importations.

That your Petitioners deem such omission unjust to potato-growers, as vast quantities of potatoes are imported into New South Wales from other Colonies.

Your Petitioners therefore pray that a Customs duty at what may be considered by your Honorable House a reasonable rate (say 20s. per ton) may be levied on the importation of potatoes.

And your Memorialists, as in duty bound, will ever pray.

THE TARIFF.

(PETITION—MR. THOMAS SUTCLIFFE MORT.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be Printed, 13 April, 1871.

The humble Petition of Thomas Sutcliffe Mort, of Mort's Dock and Engineering Company, Shipbuilders and Engineers,—to the Honorable the Legislative Assembly.

SHOWETH,—

That your Petitioner has at a very great cost erected premises, and introduced machinery, to enable his firm to build and repair iron ships of large size, and for the manufacture of all kinds of machinery and the building of iron bridges and other large works.

That your Petitioner observes that your Honorable House has placed a duty of ten shillings per ton upon imported bar, rod, and sheet iron, all of which are extensively used in the building and repairing of iron ships, and in the construction of machinery and bridges, &c., without placing any duty upon foreign built ships, or an adequate duty upon the manufactured article, thereby offering a direct protection to the foreign builder and manufacturer.

That your Petitioner would respectfully point to the important fact, that the tariffs of the sister Colonies of Victoria and Queensland charge ten per cent. upon imported machinery, whilst they admit the material employed in its construction, and in the construction and repair of iron ships, free of duty. Your Petitioner would also point out, that your Honorable House contemplates admitting articles which are used in the building and repairs of wooden ships free of duty, whilst duty, as your Petitioner has already shown, is charged on articles used in the repair and building of iron ships.

That your Petitioner would further point out, that wooden ships are fast being superseded by iron ones, in proof of which your Petitioner would quote the well-known falling off in the American ship-building trade, and which is now admitted to be almost entirely owing to that cause,—thereby showing how much more important the building and repairs of iron ships is likely to be to the Colony than that of wooden ships.

That, in the opinion of your Petitioner, the foregoing statement, coupled with the well-known abundance of iron and coal in the Colony, points out that it is highly important that your Honorable House should not place our iron shipbuilding and engineering trade at so great a disadvantage as is now threatened; and your Petitioner would humbly urge the fact upon the attention of your Honorable House, that unless the concession now prayed for be granted, or something equivalent thereto, in spite of the large advantages which this Colony possesses in her extensive workshops and cheap fuel, the whole of the neighbouring Colonies will be absolutely closed against the iron manufacturers of New South Wales.

That your Petitioner is of opinion that the disadvantages herein referred to would be mainly overcome by the insertion of a clause in the Customs' Act, allowing the Collector of Customs, upon the affidavit of any master engineer, or master worker in iron, to the effect that he had used imported bar, rod, or sheet iron in repairing any ship or ships, not belonging to owners within the Colony, or in the building of any new ship, or in the making of bridges or machinery (if the said bridges or machinery were there and then exported beyond the Colony), to allow drawback thereupon at the rate of ten shillings for every ton of such iron so consumed in such work respectively, it being understood that no claim should be allowed where the amount collectively should be less than five pounds, or where the Collector was of opinion that such claim for drawback was fraudulent.

That your Petitioner humbly prays the attention of your Honorable House to the foregoing, and trusts that it will be pleased to accede to his prayer.

And your Petitioner will ever pray, &c., &c., &c.

(PETITION—FARMERS AND OTHERS RESIDENT AT SHOALHAVEN.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be Printed, 19 April, 1871.

To the Honorable the Legislative Assembly of New South Wales, in Parliament assembled.

The Memorial of the undersigned Farmers, Storekeepers, and others, inhabitants of Shoalhaven,—

HUMBLY SHOWETH :—

That at a public meeting, held at Terara on Tuesday, the twenty-first day of March, one thousand eight hundred and seventy-one, James Aldcorn, Esquire, J.P., in the chair, it was unanimously resolved,—That whilst the agriculturists of this district and the Colony generally will be subject, in the proposed new Tariff, to the payment of import duties on agricultural implements, wheat, flour, apparel, and other necessities, and whilst they admit the advisability of increased taxation, in the present financial condition of the Colony, they desire to draw attention to the fact that one of the staple products of this country, namely, potatoes, is omitted from the list of new duties on importations.

That your Petitioners deem such omission unjust to potato growers, as large quantities of potatoes are imported into New South Wales from other Colonies.

Your Petitioners therefore humbly pray your Honorable House to take into your favourable consideration the premises, and enact that a Customs' duty, at a reasonable rate (say twenty shillings per ton), may be levied on the importation of potatoes.

And your Petitioners, as in duty bound, will ever pray, &c., &c.

PROTECTION TO NATIVE INDUSTRY.

(PETITION—CERTAIN INHABITANTS OF POLICE DISTRICT OF BROULEE.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be Printed, 7 June, 1871.

To the Honorable the Legislative Assembly of New South Wales, in Parliament assembled.

The Petition of the undersigned Tradesmen, Agriculturists, &c., residents in the Police District of Broulee,—

HUMBLY SHOWETH:—

That owing to the limited means and demands of the inland towns, people at a distance from Sydney have to depend almost entirely for their supplies upon the metropolis, and for selling their produce, and the few manufactured articles which they prepare.

That, with the exception of railroads, the roads of the country are in a very ill-constructed state, necessitating heavy charges for transit.

Your Petitioners therefore, and country people generally in the Colony, have to pay a dear rate for their supplies, whilst the heavy charges for carriage to which they have to submit ere their produce and goods can reach the metropolitan market, reduces their returns to less than remunerative rates.

That the new Tariff will still further increase the prices your Petitioners have to pay for articles they require.

Your Petitioners do not object to these increased rates, as they are desirous of seeing the Colony meet all demands on its revenue, and still energetically go on improving the public roads and public works.

Owing to the difficulty and expense of reaching the metropolitan market the country people of our own Colony cannot compete with the cheap producer of other countries.

Your Petitioners therefore deem it indispensable, for the encouragement of the farming and manufacturing interests, and as a means of revenue, that duties should be charged on all articles imported from other countries, the like of which can be produced in New South Wales.

Your Petitioners therefore pray that the above premises may be taken into consideration by your Honorable House, and that the principle of protection to native industry may become the law of the land.

And your Petitioners, as in duty bound, will ever pray.
