4559. There are only three girls there now of the class of girls that were so bad when you first went there? Yes. There are not many of what they call the “Newcastle girls” there now.
4560. Do you not find, when you have had these girls about a month or three weeks, that you can do almost anything with them? Yes; I could do anything with them—even with the girls not on the laundry.
4561. With kindness? Yes; kindness will do anything with them. I do believe myself that they are not firm enough with the girls there.
4562. You think that that is the fault of the management? Yes, I think so. When I went in there I made up my mind to be as firm as I possibly could, and never to let them get in on me at all; but I think I had a better chance of doing so by having them on but for a week with me, and their being three weeks away.
4563. Do you recollect shortly after you went there leaving your dinner in the laundry, and people laughing at you for doing so? Yes; that was the first day that I went there.
4564. They said that you would not find it when you went back? Yes. I got the rations and put them in a basket and left them in the laundry. I was not frightened of the girls taking them, so I went away; and they said, “Where is your basket?” I said, “It is in the laundry”; and they laughed and said I would not have it when I went back; but I went back to the laundry and looked in the basket, and saw that the girls had not touched anything. I found it all right; the girls never meddled with anything belonging to me.
4565. You think that if confidence is placed in them they appreciate it? Yes, I think so; they have proved it to me. I always leave my things in the laundry. I take in my breakfast with me, and the girls always have a good fire lighted when I go in to make my breakfast.
4566. Do you recollect what they told you that the laundry used to be used for before you went there besides for washing—did they not kill fowls and cook them there? No, not in the laundry.
4567. Not since you have been there? I think they cook in the officers’ places, but I do not think that they ever cooked in the laundry. They were always careful about the laundry, and whenever they had a riot they always spared the laundry—they did not break anything there.
4568. Mr. Metcalfe.] You have not much opportunity of seeing the girls in the evening? Oh no; I am on the other side of the fence.
4569. You know nothing about the girls running down to the beach and bathing, and things of that sort? No.
4570. Mr. Couper.] At first when you went there they used to do that? Yes; in the summer season they did run down to bathe, but I do not know the bathing-place.
4571. Was there not a great difficulty in getting them to wear shoes and stockings? Yes; but I think that is the fault of the matrons, too. These girls are locked up all night, and when they are let out in the morning why should not the matrons see that they have their shoes and stockings on when they come out? The girls very often bring their shoes and stockings down to the laundry and put them on, and I often say that they should not make a dressing-room of the laundry.
4572. Mr. Metcalfe.] Do they black their own shoes? I know that the laundry girls do in the laundry, and in the evening they clean themselves up there. I never object to their making themselves clean in the laundry. They put on dry clothes, for they cannot be always dry in the laundry. They get wet there, and I asked Mr. Lucas to get aprons made for them, and he did.
4574. Mr. Lucas? Yes. He comes in every day or so. Some days pass that he will not come, but he generally does.
4575. Mr. Couper.] Did you always get on well with Mrs. Lucas? Sometimes.
4576. Mr. Metcalfe.] Do the girls get on well with her? They are getting on better now—within the last twelve months.
4577. Mr. Couper.] Did she ever show her temper to you? Yes, sometimes—once or twice: that is not much.
4578. Mr. Metcalfe.] Is there much punishment going on upon the island, that you have noticed? No, not a great deal. One of the girls got a great punishment from Mrs. Rowland, who punished her very severe. She was one of the laundry girls too, Anne B—. Mrs. Rowland beat her very severe.
4579. Who beat her? Mrs. Rowland. She shut her in the little store (I was never in it till the other day, when I went over for something) and beat her very severe. This girl was on the laundry and they sent for her—Mrs. Rowland sent for her and beat her very severe; and she was all marked, and I took down Mr. Lucas and showed him how the girl was marked with the beating she got. I told the girl, “Now if you report this, I will go with you,” and I got the girl to strip, and her back was severely marked, and I showed it to Mr. Lucas. I asked him whether Mrs. Rowland was allowed to flog a girl like this, and he said, “She has authority to do so.”
4580. What had the girl been doing? I do not know; she was up at Mrs. Rowland’s place, as her servant, and I always find that if the girls are there for any length of time I have more difficulty in getting on with them than with the others. I have often remarked that to Mr. Lucas. I have said “I wish you would not send the girls to the officers’ places.”

Mrs.
H. Austin.
12 Aug., 1873.

4581. Can the girls at the officer's quarters attend school? Yes, in the afternoon.
4582. Not in the morning? No; the smaller girls go in the morning.
4583. None of the big girls go to school in the morning? No; there is a different class.
4584. Mr. Cowper.] Do the girls who are on Mrs. Lucas's quarters behave better than the others? I do not see any difference; I do not say that they behave better.
4585. You think that the girls on the officers' quarters behave worse than the others? Yes, they do, but then they are all the big girls.
4586. Mr. Metcalfe.] You do not think that it is a good plan that the officers should be allowed to have these girls as servants? No, I never did think so. I think that I remarked that to Mr. Cowper when I went in there first; I think I passed a few remarks to Mr. Cowper—I said what I say now—that there should be better matrons over those girls.
4587. I gather then that you think it would be a better school if there were better matrons? Yes. They are good, willing girls,—there may be one or two who are not very good and who do not work well; but what I get Mr. Lucas to do is to put one who does not work well in with too good working girls, so as to make them get on.
4588. Has that a good effect? Yes, there are two or three girls that I cannot get to work, and Mr. Lucas puts them in with the others, and I just do the best I can with them.
4589. Mr. Cowper.] Did you ever hear of Mrs. Lucas thrashing the girls? I have never seen her.
4590. Did you ever hear of it? I have heard the girls say so. I do not think Mrs. Lucas has ever beat them very severely, because she is small and they are too quick for her. I do not think that she could give them very much.
4591. Do you recollect some of the girls going and making a mess in the copper in the laundry one morning? Yes, and I do not know who they were; I never knew since.
4592. Was there any inquiry? I do not know. I told Mr. Lucas of it.
4593. Did you ask for any inquiry? Well, I just sent for Mr. Lucas and told him of it.
4594. No inquiry was made, nor was any one punished for doing it? No; I do not know.
4596. Did you never tell me that she was jealous of your girls getting situations, and that she sent them off the laundry so that you might not gain the credit? I do not know whether she did it for that—she might have done it. The only girl I was angry about was the girl Martha S—.
4597. Did not Mrs. Lucas complain to you that the laundry girls got all the situations through me? She never said that to me.
4598. Did you not tell me so? She never said it to me—neither Mr. Lucas nor Mrs. Lucas never said it to me; they might have said it among themselves.
4599. Did you not speak to me once or twice about going to the Colonial Secretary to complain of Mrs. Lucas? Yes; but I was put off of it. I went once to the office to Mr. Cane, and he did not take down the report—he would not do it until Mr. Lucas came home, and, of course, when he came home I had forgotten the matter, and then I did not think that it was right to complain of Mrs. Lucas to him. If she was not his wife I might, but as she was his wife it was quite natural that he should take her part.
4600. Mr. Ellis.] What did she do, that you were going to complain of? It was something about the clothes, or clothes on the line, or water. At all times the girls have to pump the water for the laundry, and they pump, and then the other girls come and take the water, and the laundry girls were cross, because, if we cannot have the water we cannot get the clothes washed and dried, and we must always have them dry; so that the girls have to work harder in the morning than in the afternoon, for they have to get the clothes out. We often had a trouble with the water; and then I asked to have a tap outside at the laundry door, and they would come and take the water from the laundry door. I often asked Mr. Lucas to get other girls to pump, and he said that the laundry girls should pump, and I think that in the summer season it was hard for them to have to go and pump and then come to the laundry again to work; so I got them to pump in the afternoon, and in the morning before the sun was up. Of course I had to manage myself to get the water and things for the laundry, and get the work done. Perhaps if Mrs. Lucas and the others had been there in my place, they would have had the same trouble. When it rains we have plenty of water; and the tap is inside now, so that they cannot take the water from us.
4601. You say that the matrons are not nice matrons? No, they are not.
4602. What do you mean by that? I say that it is not nice for these matrons, who are there to try and reform these girls, and keep them from these men—(of course they are not near them—they are on the other side of the fence, but the girls have often got punished for looking over at the men)—and they to be waving to these officers; and then the girls turn round and do the same; and when I check them, they would say —
4603. How do you know that the matrons wave their handkerchiefs to the officers? I have seen them doing it.
4604. How do you know it was to the officers they were waving? I believe it was so.
4605. You naturally suppose that the wavings of the matrons were addressed to the officers, and of the girls to the sailors? Yes, I think so; and Mr. Cowper's man could direct your attention to it. Turner, Mr. Cowper's man, went down there, through the sailors, privately, and he told me; and I went out and saw them doing it. And then I saw the other matron on the other side waving to the steamer.
4606. You saw all the matrons then? No, only two.
4607. Two of them? I have only seen one waving to the steamer, and I have seen her do it several times.
4608. Who was that? Mrs. Brackenregg.
4609. She addressed herself to the Parramatta steamer—that is her weakness—the captain of that ship? I cannot say whether it was to the captain she did it.
4610. President.] It may have been to some friend of hers on the steamer? It might; but he made a great mistake waving to me one day.
4611. Mr. Ellis.] Of course you did not return the salute? No, I did not.
4612. In what other respect is the conduct of the matrons reprehensible? There are young men who come in there at late hours, and I think there should be no men allowed in there after 6 o'clock. I have never been in at night, and so I have not seen it at night, but I have seen it in the day-time.

- Mrs. 4613. Young men inside the fence? Yes, young men visitors.
H. Austin. 4614. Did you report that to Mr. Lucas? I did not. I thought that he was aware of it.
12 Aug., 1873. 4615. And did he take any exception to it? I do not know. He may have done.
4616. Might not these young men have been relatives of the matrons? I do not know. They could not all be.
4617. Were there so many of them then? I have seen some there.
4618. How many? Two I have seen there at a time.
4619. Only two? I have seen two there at one time. I have seen one at other times.
4620. You said there were a good many? I meant that they came one at a time—not all together.
4621. Has that practice continued all along? I do not know—not all along. I do not think it has been so lately.
4622. How long is it since these visitors have ceased to put in an appearance? I think one or two months—it may be three.
4623. In what other respects do you complain of the matrons' conduct? I do not think that there is any more; that is all I have seen, I think.
4224. Are you and the matrons good friends? Well, we are friends.
4625. From the teeth out, I suppose? Yes, as far as we see one another.
4626. Do you speak to one another? Sometimes we do.
4627. Have you ever had a quarrel with any of them? Never had a word with one of them in my life up to this.
4628. You never had a disagreement with them? No, never.
4629. You said just now, as regards the manners of the girls you could not see much improvement, but you did see an improvement in their morals? Yes, I think they are better—I think that they are improving. They have been a great deal better for this last twelve months than they were when I went in. There are not so many quarrels amongst the girls. They might have a quarrel among themselves, but they do not quarrel now so much as they used to do, I think. But the quarrels of the girls are nothing; they will quarrel and all be as great together again in five minutes after.
4630. Have you ever had occasion to get any of the girls sent into the laundry punished? No, never.
4631. None of them ever behaved to you in such a way that you thought it necessary to get them punished? No, never. I think it was a bit of jealousy on the matron's part that I never did complain of the girls.
4632. You never knew them to do anything that deserved punishment? Nothing but run away from the laundry for a few minutes; or they might be told to pump, and did not pump; but I never had them punished.
4633. Do you not think that that offence with reference to the copper called for punishment? Yes, I think so; and if I knew the girl I would have asked Mr. Lucas to punish her, but I never found out the girl; they never tell tales on each other.
4634. Is there any inducement held out to the girls to do the laundry work? I do not think so.
4635. Is there any extra indulgence allowed them? Yes; they have a loaf of bread extra for their lunch. I thought that the girls needed something about 11 o'clock, and so I asked Mr. Lucas and Mrs. Lucas whether they would not be able to give the girls a lunch. Mr. Lucas said—"Don't you think we could manage for the girls to get a loaf of bread—there are a good many pieces left among the smaller children?" And they did so; and they gave the girls some sugar and a drop of milk, and I used to give them my ration tea (for I did not care for it myself). I do not give it them now, but I give it to my children, who are with me now; so they do not have so comfortable a lunch now as they had; but sometimes they will ask Mrs. Lucas and she will give them some tea of her own.
4636. Have you ever had any disagreement with Mr. and Mrs. Lucas? I cannot say that I had.
4637. Can you say that you had not? No. Once or twice I had disputes with Mrs. Lucas about the water and the girls taking it from the laundry; the girls were cross with the other girls about it.
4638. Anything else? No.
4639. As far as you know, the girls have hardly ever done anything to deserve punishment? Not to me.
4640. But for any conduct that you have heard of? I might have heard of things, but I have never seen them.
4641. Have you heard of things that deserve punishment? Well—the girls have been talking amongst themselves.
4642. Have you ever heard of any conduct on the part of the girls that deserved punishment? There is no bad conduct that I ever saw.
4643. Have you ever heard of any bad conduct on the part of these girls since you have been on the island? No, I have not.
4644. There has been none that you ever heard of? No.
4645. You have never heard of any bad conduct on their part? I never heard of anything that they deserved punishment for, because Mr. Lucas told me that he often punished the girls against his conscience.
4646. Against his conscience? Yes, to please the matrons.
4647. Did Mr. Lucas tell you that? Yes, he did.
4648. When did he punish the girls to please the matrons? I think that he punished a girl once to please Mrs. Rowland. I think the girl got seven days in the cells, locked up.*
4649. Did you ever hear of any acts of the girls which deserved punishment? No, I did not.
4650. You never did? No, I never did.
4651. And Mr. Lucas told you that he punished them against his conscience, to please Mrs. Rowland? Yes; that was the day that he punished Janet B—.
4652. President.] How long is that ago? I think it may be a couple of months ago, but I do not know how long—I never mind these things.
4653. Mr. Ellis.] Used you generally to hear when a girl was punished? No, not always.
4654. Did you sometimes hear? Yes, I used to hear sometimes that they were punished—that they were making a noise in the night.

* NOTE (on revision):—Not the cells—the dormitory. I can't say for how long.

Mrs.
H. Austin.
12 Aug., 1873.

4655. Would not the girls who were with you talk about these things? They might.
4656. Would you not hear in that way? I do not hear what they talk about.
4657. Would they not, in chatting familiarly, be apt to say that so and so had been punished? No, they did not say so in my hearing.
4658. And though girls were punished there daily for months, you never heard of it? Never.
4659. And, as far as you know, they were punished undeservedly? Yes, they were, a good many times.
4660. Can you mention cases of the kind to us? I can. I think I did mention one to you about the girls going to look over at the ship and waving.
4661. But if they were punished for that, you would not say that they were punished undeservedly? Well, but the matrons were waving too.
4662. But the matrons deserved it too? But Mr. Lucas would not punish the matrons the same as the girls. I don't know would he punish them.
4663. Were these the only instances in which they were punished improperly? Yes; these are all that I know of.
4664. You never use the cane? No; nor did I ever get one. If I could not get the girls to wash without caning them, I know that the cane will not do it. I do not believe in the cane for girls come to the age that they are. It may be good for young children sometimes, but as for grown up girls I do not think that the cane has any effect upon them. The girls have never refused to work for me.
4665. Do you mean to tell us that Mr. Lucas told you that he punished these girls merely to please Mrs. Rowland? He told me that he had punished one or two girls, I may say, against his conscience, to keep peace between the matrons and the girls.
4666. President.] How did he come to tell you that? He told me just in conversation.
4667. Mr. Ellis.] Did you say anything to him about such a very unreasonable thing? I did not. I thought he might have known better.
4668. Would you not think it a very strange thing if he were to punish you to please somebody else? Yes; but I would not let it slip like the girls, if any one were to punish me undeserved.
4669. You could stand up for yourself; but who was to stand up for those girls? Yes; but when I did stand up for this Anne B— Mr. Lucas told me that Mrs. Rowland had authority to beat her.
4670. I am speaking of cases in which the girls have been punished undeservedly—who is to stand up for these girls? No one at all.
4671. You have never taken the matter up? No, I did not. I do not know what that girl was punished for.
4672. You said, some time ago, that a good many were punished undeservedly? Yes, Mr. Lucas said so; I do not know.
4673. Mr. Lucas said so? Yes, that is what Mr. Lucas said to me not many days ago.
4674. Why was it against his conscience to punish these girls? I do not know.
4675. Did you not understand him to mean something by that? I understood him to mean that he punished the girls to keep in with the matrons.
4676. Is not Mr. Lucas a kind man? Yes, he is—he has treated those matrons very kindly indeed.
4677. I am speaking of the children, and not of the matrons; we shall come to them directly. Is he kind to the children? Yes—to the children, and the matrons, and all.
4678. Do you think it is kind of him to beat the children undeservedly? I do not know what they did.
4679. Suppose that he beat a child of yours in that way, would you stand by and allow it? No. But Mr. Lucas was the head of the institution, and if Mrs. Rowland made a complaint to him, whatever it might be, he would then punish the girl she complained of, just to keep peace. I suppose he just did it for the sake of quietness.
4680. But that is a new mode of promoting quietness, is it not? Yes. If it was done to my child I know I would see more about it.
4681. You would protest against it? I would not allow it to slip if I had the means.
4682. But still you did not make any protest in regard to these little girls? I do not think I would be allowed to do so. I have nothing to do with anything except what is in the laundry. If the girls offended in the laundry it would be a different thing, but what occurs in the building is not in my department. It is just that Mr. Lucas said to me the other day—"How often I have punished those girls just for quietness' sake."
4683. Mr. Gould.] What led him to make that remark? I cannot say.
4684. He was conversing with you? Yes.
4685. Did you say anything to lead him to say that? I said to him—"You will have some bother now the ship is in." He said—"I do not think so now, for they will not understand these men." And I was going into the store and he said he had punished the girls a few times for waving to the sailors; and I said, "Did you speak to the matrons about it?" and he said, "Yes." That is all the conversation we had about it; but I know that he punished Janet B— for some days—I do not know how many days.
4686. President.] What did she do? I do not remember. I may have known at the time, but I forget now. It may not have been for much, and it might.
4687. Mr. Ellis.] You took no interest in what went on in the institution? I could not, you know. The laundry is far down from the building—it is right down on the point.
4688. You never inquired what children were punished, or anything of that kind? Oh no, I did not. I only inquired what girls were going on change for the week.
4689. And you have always been perfectly good friends with Mr. Lucas? Yes.
4690. And with the matrons? Yes.
4691. And Mrs. Lucas? Yes. I have had a few words with her about the water.
4692. You and the matrons have never had any disagreement? Never.
4693. Not the slightest? No, I never had a word with the matrons or with the storekeeper, or any other person on the place.
4694. President.] Do you go to the houses of the matrons at all? No, never.
4695. Did you never go to Mrs. Lucas's residence? No, I never was there but once. I was once in the kitchen the first week I was there. I happened to go across with a few shirts, and I left them down on the table inside the kitchen.
4696. As far as you see, the children are perfectly orderly and well behaved? Yes, they are.

- Mrs. H. Austin.
12 Aug., 1873.
4697. In fact, you know of no disturbances ever having taken place among the children since you have been there? No, never. They are all away from me—they are never down at that end of the island; they are at school up there, and they are mustered up, and they have their meals up there, and there is no place at all close to the laundry; they might do what they liked up there and I would not know anything about it.
4698. Their conduct then may be very bad indeed without your knowing anything about it? Yes.
4699. Have you ever heard them singing at night? No. I have often heard them singing, but I cannot tell what they are singing. I hear them when a new girl comes in, for they are anxious to learn whatever new songs she brings in, and they sing them for a few nights.
4700. Mr. Ellis.] Do the girls ever sing in the laundry? Yes, very often.
4701. Do they sing any bad songs? Never.
4702. What songs do they sing? Any funny songs.
4703. Do you remember any of them? I do not. I never took any notice.
4704. President.] Funny songs—what do you mean? Not bad songs.
4705. Mr. Ellis.] Did you ever hear a girl sing a bad song? No, not in the laundry.
4706. Did you out of the laundry? No, never.
4707. President.] What do you mean by funny songs? Pleasant songs—love-tales and things of that kind.
4708. Mr. Ellis.] Nice pure romantic songs? Yes.
4709. President.] Did you ever hear them sing hymns? Yes, I have heard them practising. Mrs. Foott comes on Thursday afternoon, and the Sisters of the Good Shepherd, and they practise their hymns.
4710. And your opinion is that the girls are remarkably well behaved? Yes, in the laundry. I do not know much about the other part of the institution. I have not been a dozen times through the institution.
4711. Do you know how it is that the girls' skirts are so short? I do not know, unless it is the fault of those who measured them for it.
4712. Who does that? Mrs. Rowland.
4713. It is her fault then that the dresses are so short? I do not know.
4714. Mr. Metcalfe.] Did you ever ask? I did not.
4715. President.] Has it ever struck you that the dresses are much too short? Yes, I thought they were.
4716. Do you think it was because they were made so, and that it was Mrs. Rowland's fault? I do not know.
4717. Do not the girls like to have their dresses short? Yes, I believe so.
4718. Do you know whether Mrs. Rowland has anything to do with it? I do not know. She makes the dresses.
4719. Do not the girls tear them short? No. I do not know.
4720. Have you ever heard that they do? No, I have not.
4721. Have you never heard of that? Yes, I did hear that there was a girl that tore her dress, but when it was measured again it stood the measurement.
4722. Who said so? Mrs. Lucas. The girl happened to be on the laundry the same week, and Mrs. Lucas came down and said, "Sarah B—, have you torn your skirt?" and she said, "No"; and she took the skirt and measured it, and showed that it was long enough, but whether the girl tore it after that I do not know.
4723. Do you not know that the girls like to have their skirts short? They do when they are working about—they do not like to have them under their feet.
4724. And that desire not to have them under their feet is illustrated by their having them up to their knees indecently? I do not say that.
4725. Do you not know that their skirts are indecently short? Some of them are—not all.
4726. And you think that this desire of theirs not to have their skirts under their feet is illustrated by their having them up to their knees? I do not know.
4727. You said that the girls did not wish to have their skirts trailing under their feet? Yes—they said so; they said that they did not like to have their skirts under their feet. I have asked them why they wore their dresses so short, and they told me that was the reason.
4728. Was that the reason they wore their skirts so short—do you not know that this arises from indecent feelings on the part of these girls? No, I do not know.
4729. Did you never hear that? I never did.
4730. Is it not a matter of fact that they do like to have their skirts short, and that they tear them to make them so? I never heard of it.
4731. Has it not struck you that their skirts are indecently short? I think so.
4732. Then why did you say that they had them short because they did not like to have them under their feet? The girls themselves said so—they said that they were far tidier with the short skirts.
4733. Were the dresses made in that way? I cannot say.
4734. Then why did you say that Mrs. Rowland did it? I said that Mrs. Rowland measured them—I do not know who cut the dresses. I never saw them made. They are made in the work-room.
4735. Have you never noticed that the bottoms of the dresses were torn? No.
4736. Do you not know that the dresses are torn at the gathers, and made shorter in that way? I cannot tell.
4737. Have you never heard such a thing spoken of amongst the officers of the island? Never.
4738. Is this the first time that you ever heard of it? I have never heard any one in the institution say that the girls tore their dresses—they were always short from the first time I went into the place—
4739. Mr. Ellis.] Then if Mr. Lucas said that they do tear their dresses he was wrong? They might tear them at night.
4740. But would you not see that the dresses had been torn? How could I see it?
4741. Would you not notice it when the dress came to the laundry? No; it would be sewn up again, and I would not notice one short dress among the others. There are different sizes of girls there.
4742. President.] You say that the measuring of the dresses and the length of the dresses rests with Mrs. Rowland? I think so. I do not know. She is the house-matron.
4743. Have you any doubt about it? I do not know.
4744. Is it a matter of choice with the girls as to what length they shall have their clothes? I do not think so.

4745. Then why did you ask the girls why they wore their dresses so short? I said to the girls—"Why do you have the dresses so short?" and they said they did not like to have the skirts under their feet; and I asked them who measured the dresses, and they said Mrs. Rowland; and then one of the girls said that they could not make their clothes as long as usual—not as long as usual—that they had not the stuff to spare, even in the petticoats. I was saying that they were nice tidy petticoats, and they said—Yes. There were not two alike. They had no tuck to let out, and I dare say the girls might outgrow the dresses.

Mrs.
H. Austin.
12 Aug., 1873.

4746. You say that it is no fault of the girls that their dresses are so short? I cannot say.

4747. What is your opinion? I believe that if the girls get the chance they will make their dresses short, but, of course, there are two matrons in the work-room with the girls. Whether they do it when they leave the work-room I do not know, or whether the girls make them to their own taste.

4748. Then why did you, in answering my first question, as to the cause of this, refer to Mrs. Rowland measuring these dresses, as if it was her fault that they were so short? Because she does it.

4749. But why did you give that answer? Because she does measure them.

4750. But do you wish to throw the blame of this upon her? No.

4751. Then why did you refer to her and not to the girls? Because the dresses have been like that for this two years—ever since I have been there. I have never seen them different.

4752. Mr. Ellis.] As far as you know of the state of matters generally on the island now, do you think that there is anything that calls for a reformation of the management of the place? I do not know anything about the management of the place.

4753. Is there anything that you would complain of? No, I do not know of anything.

4754. Nothing at all—you have nothing at all to complain of in the management? No.

4755. And nothing to complain of as respects the girls? No, nothing—that is, nothing of mine—nothing of the laundry girls. I cannot say anything about the big girls who have not been on the laundry, because I have nothing to do with them.

4756. President.] Do you know a girl named Lizzie L—? Yes. She is not here at present.

4757. Do you remember her? Yes.

4758. Mr. Cowper.] In Lizzie L—'s time were not the girls sent regularly to the laundry? Yes.

4759. How long is it since the girls were sent regularly to the laundry? A long time.

4760. How many times was Lizzie L— on the laundry during the three months she was there? I cannot tell.

4761. Was she not in the institution for months and never went near you? She was looking after the cows.

4762. Was she not there for months and was never sent to you? Yes, she was.

4763. Did I not tell you that I wanted her to go to the laundry, because she was such a decent girl, and I wanted to get her a situation? Yes. Well, I asked her to come.

4764. Asked her to come—but she would have come if she had been sent I suppose; a girl is not supposed to do as she likes in the place? Of course she could not come without being sent, and she was not put on the laundry.

4765. Although I particularly requested that she might be sent to the laundry, she was sent after the cows, and was never sent to the laundry at all? Yes, I believe so.

Mr. Michael Prior, clerk and storekeeper, Industrial School for Girls, Biloela, called in and examined:—

4766. President.] What office do you hold at Biloela? I am clerk and storekeeper.

4767. What salary do you receive? £120 a year for both institutions.

4768. Both institutions? Yes; the Industrial School and the Reformatory.

4769. You are allowed rations and quarters? Yes.

4770. How long have you been there? About sixteen months.

4771. What are your duties as clerk and storekeeper? As clerk, to write all communications and letters which the superintendent may require, and take charge of all stores and issue them as required.

4772. And you issue all the rations every day? Yes.

4773. Do you keep any journal in the place? Relative to the occurrences?

4774. Yes—a diary? Yes, the daily journal.

4775. Is it part of your official duty to keep that diary? Yes.

4776. Are you directed to do so by any letter of instructions? I only insert what the superintendent tells me to insert—nothing else.

4777. Did you get any letter of instructions? No. I am immediately placed under the superintendent's orders.

4778. Did you find this diary in existence when you first went to the institution? Yes.

4779. Does the superintendent regularly give you instructions to make up this book? Yes; I always ask him what I am to insert.

4780. That is the book, I believe (Journal produced)? Yes, that is the book.

4781. What occurrences are usually inserted in it? Only occurrences such as any one visiting the institution—any occurrences that take place during the day of any consequence.

4782. How is it that no punishments are recorded here? There has never been any record of the summary punishments such as caning—all other punishments are inserted.

4783. Such as what? Supposing that a girl is insubordinate and is punished by being locked up for any length of time, the matter is reported to the Colonial Secretary and entered.

4784. No record is kept of corporal punishment at all? No.

4785. Is corporal punishment administered on the island at all? I have never seen it myself.

4786. Do you know whether it is enforced? I think it is, but I am not positive who enforces it.

4787. What makes you think that it is enforced? I have heard the girls say that some of them have been flogged.

4788. By whom? I cannot tell you by whom.

4789. Did you not hear that stated at the same time? No.

4790. There is no record in this book of any flogging then? No. I am not supposed to enter any occurrences there without instructions.

Mr. M. Prior.
12 Aug., 1873.

- Mr. M. Prior. 4791. You do not hold yourself in any way responsible for the entries? No; I obey the orders of the superintendent.
- 12 Aug., 1873. 4792. Are you in a position to say whether the officers of the institution, who are in charge of the children, are acting harmoniously together? I do not think they are.
4793. What has led you to form that opinion? I always find that there is a good deal of insubordination among the girls, through the great impropriety of the officers.
4794. How is this? This impropriety is when vessels come into the dock. They form connections with the officers of these vessels, and while on duty, they are generally waving to these officers, which brings on insubordination.
4795. The officers are waving? Yes.
4796. Which officers? The matrons.
4797. All of them? I have seen two or three of them repeatedly.
4799. How often have you seen this? Repeatedly; not latterly, owing to the sitting of the Commission.
4800. Mr. Ellis.] They have given up love-making now then? Yes.
4801. President.] Do you say that they all do this? Two or three of them do it.
4802. Are there some who do not do it? I have never seen Mrs. Dunn do it.
4803. Do they all do it with the exception of Mrs. Dunn? Yes; Mrs. Brackenregg, Mrs. Kelly, and Mrs. Rowland do it, and the girls have drawn my attention to it and said—"You see, they are doing what they check us for doing."
4804. You have told us of acts of impropriety on the part of the matrons, but you have said nothing as to the want of harmony among them—I asked you whether you had seen anything to lead you to the conclusion that the officers were not acting harmoniously together? The matrons do not act harmoniously with the head matron in working the institution.
4805. How does this want of harmony show itself? I have heard Mrs. Lucas give instructions that the officers would not carry out. For instance:—On the Anniversary night, when Mrs. Lucas wanted the girls to stay out of the dormitories, they refused their assistance in looking after them when they remained out.
4806. How do you mean—how did they refuse to assist? They were asked to stop in the yard to help in amusing the girls, and they refused to do so.
4807. What time was this? I think that the girls are generally locked up about 6 o'clock, but on any general holiday Mr. Lucas allows them to remain out until 9.
4808. What matrons refused to assist? Mrs. Brackenregg and Mrs. Rowland.
4809. What other instances have you seen showing this want of harmony? Well, there was a young child brought in, and Mrs. Lucas remarked to me that none of the matrons would look after this child, and she was obliged to look after it herself. The child was about fourteen or fifteen months old, I think.
4810. Anything else? Nothing else that I am aware of—these are the cases which I particularly remarked. I do not pay much attention to the detail of the institution.
4811. Have you ever been aware of open quarrels and high words taking place between the superintendent and his wife and the matrons? No, not to my knowledge.
4812. You were never present at any altercation between the matrons and the master? No.
4813. Are you in a position to state whether Mrs. Lucas is a person who keeps her temper? Well, some times she gets out of temper—I have seen her out of temper.
4814. With whom? With some of the girls when they would not put on their boots or shoes, or anything like that.
4815. Do you see much of the children in the institution? No, I do not see much of them. I never go near the dormitories at all, nor do I ever go near the girls in any way. I just keep to the office and the stores, and have nothing at all to do with the other parts of the institution.
4816. You are not in a position to speak of the behaviour of the inmates? No, only when they come to the store—not otherwise.
4817. Then, with the exception of the improprieties you have mentioned—that is, of their waving to the officers, and so on—you have not seen any other improprieties? I have seen the matrons repeatedly down about the ships at 9 or 10 at night when occasionally out for a walk. My house is close to the gate, and so I see every one who passes in or out, and it is a complete nuisance, these people going backwards and forwards.
4818. What people? The matrons.
4819. What matrons? Mrs. Brackenregg, Mrs. Kelly, and Mrs. Rowland.
4820. Where do they go to? Down to the shipping. They have gone repeatedly within the last nine or ten months. I always see them going in and out, as my house is close to the gate.
4821. At what hours do they go in and out? 9 or 10 o'clock at night.
4822. Can you see who they are—are you close to them? Yes, I was close to them. No one can get in or out of the gate without my seeing them, and I can always see them quite well. When anybody comes through the gate I generally look to see who it is, because it might be one of the girls getting away.
4823. Mr. Metcalfe.] No one can go in or out without your seeing them? No. It is the greatest nuisance to me—I am so much disturbed by these people going in and out, and the sailors coming in and out. I am obliged to keep two dogs there to keep the sailors away.
4824. President.] Do you know what sailors they are? I do not know whether they are sailors or officers of the ship.
4825. Can you not distinguish whether they are officers or seamen? I cannot tell. They are not dressed in blue clothes. They keep me awake all night long coming in and out.
4826. Who keeps you awake? We are kept awake all night. I cannot keep my family there on account of this—the matrons going in and out constantly to and from the ships, while the ships are in dock.
4827. Do you say that they all do this? Three of them do, for I have seen them myself.
4828. Mr. Metcalfe.] Are not the gates locked? Yes.
4829. Is there not a gatekeeper? Yes.
4830. What instructions has he about people going in and out? It is a female—Mrs. Connell keeps the gate.

4831. Mr. Cowper.] You cannot be mistaken in these people who go in and out? I cannot be.
4832. Mr. Ellis.] Do any others besides the matrons go in and out in this way? Yes, there are others.
4833. Who are they? The Miss Connells.
4834. Who else? Nobody else. You see they cannot go in without my seeing them, because my bedroom faces the door. I am close to the gate, and must see every one who goes out or in.
4835. You do not see sailors going into the place? No.
4836. But you see the women come out? Yes.
4837. You reside there I suppose? Yes.
4838. And you stop in your room when these people are going out of the gate? Yes.
4839. You do not go to see where they go to? I do not.
4840. Are there not other people on the island? Yes, there are, but they are not in the institution.
4841. How do you know that these people go to the sailors? Because the sailors come up with them, and I see them go in and the sailors go away again.
4842. Mr. Cowper.] Might these matrons not be coming up from the late steamer? No, it was before the late steamer began to run.
4843. President.] Will you undertake to say that the persons who come with them to the gate are not people living on the island? No, they are not. They are sailors—dressed as sailors. Two of them came to my place one night, and asked for the matron, and I said no matron lived there. They came knocking at the door, and my daughter had to come and wake me.
4844. It is not your inference that they were there,—you saw them yourself? Yes, it is a positive fact; I have seen them. I have seen, on moonlight nights, the men come with them. I have seen Mrs. Kelly come up at half-past 12 in the morning with a sailor. She was under my window with one of the men of the “Blanche” until half-past 12 o'clock.
4845. Mr. Cowper.] Might that not be on an occasion when she dropped a parcel and went back for it? No, I beg your pardon. I watched her. She was under my window for half an hour.
4846. President.] What was she doing? She was acting very improperly.
4847. Never mind that—what was she doing? What I saw I could not help seeing.
4848. What did you see—speak out, if you have anything to say; it is so easy to take away a woman's character by insinuations or vague statements of this kind—what was she doing? I was in bed, and my bed was alongside the window (this was near half-past 12 at night), and I heard a knocking sound, which I thought was caused by the cow's tail* knocking against the window, as they do sometimes. I woke Mrs. Prior, and we lifted up the curtain of the window, and saw Mrs. Kelly and a stout man, one of the officers of the “Blanche.” He drew her over to my window, and attempted to do something to her, and she broke away from him, and ran out to the path, and then he went to her, and they got close to my window, and they were there hugging and kissing one another.
4849. You said that you were attracted by the sound as if a cow's tail was knocking against the window? Yes; they do sometimes.
4850. Was the knocking repeated more than once? No, it was not.
4851. When was this? I cannot tell exactly—it was when the “Blanche” was in the dock.
4852. When the “Blanche” was there? Yes. I told Mr. and Mrs. Lucas of it on the next morning, and they will tell you the same. I saw it with my own eyes.
4853. Mr. Metcalfe.] Is that the only instance of impropriety that you saw with your own eyes? Yes, that is the only instance.
4854. President.] Did Mr. Lucas take any notice of the matter? He ordered that the men should be kept out, and would not allow them to go into the place.
4855. They were not in the place then? No, they were opposite my place.
4856. Is your place outside the institution? Yes, outside the fence. I must see every one who comes in or goes out. I see every one who goes backwards and forwards. I always look to see who is there when the gate is opened, for some official may be coming, and at night it might be the girls getting out, and so I go to see.
4857. Did your wife see this? Yes, she could not help seeing it—it was just before our eyes.
4858. Mr. Gould.] Was this a common sailor? I do not think it was. I think it was the engineer of the “Blanche.” I could hear all the conversation that took place. It was a Mr. Brown, of the “Blanche,” I believe, from the conversation.
4859. Mr. Ellis.] He belonged to that ship? Yes. He is a corpulent man, weighing about 16 stone. My room being dark, all I did was to lift up the curtain of the window, and when I thought they had gone far enough I drew the curtain down, and when I told Mr. Lucas about it he went down to inquire of Mrs. Connell when Mrs. Kelly came in.
4860. President.] Do you accuse Mrs. Kelly then of having acted immorally? Oh no.
4861. I understand then that you do not accuse her of any immoral conduct? No, I would not impute that—highly imprudent conduct, but not immoral.
4862. Mr. Ellis.] How is it that you did not record that in the book? I cannot enter anything unless I am ordered to do so.
4863. Have any girls died on the island since you have been there? No, none.
4864. What is the usual kind of punishment inflicted on the girls? Relative to what?
4865. For any offence? For insubordinate conduct to any of the matrons, they are confined for a week or so.
4866. On bread and water? Yes, I think so. When they are on bread and water it is stated in the book.
4867. Have any of them been confined for longer than a week? A fortnight is allowed by the Colonial Secretary. They are locked up in the dormitories sometimes.
4868. Are there any beds in the dormitories? I do not know. I have never been in the dormitories. I did not think that it was a prudent thing to go amongst the girls, so I kept away and never went amongst them at all.
4869. Do you know whether there were any fires in the rooms in which they were confined on bread and water? I cannot tell you, because I never went there. I always left the institution at about 6 o'clock in the evening.
4870. Have you been at any amusements which were given to the girls in the evenings? No.
4871. Have you ever heard them singing? Yes, in the dormitories I have sometimes.

Mr. M. Prior.
12 Aug., 1873.

4872.

* NOTE (on revision):—horn.

- Mr. M. Prior. 4872. What kind of songs did they sing? I have never paid any attention to them.
4873. Mr. Metcalfe.] You are too far off to hear the words? Yes.
- 12 Aug., 1873. 4874. Mr. Ellis.] Have the girls ever had gags put into their mouths there? Not in my time, I think.
4875. Is that book (referring to Journal) kept by you? Yes, it was kept by me for a portion of the time.
4876. I see there an instance recorded in which a girl was taken in and a gag put into her mouth? It is not in my writing.
4877. When did you go to the place? On the 14th April.
4878. Did you ever hear of a girl being put into a strait-jacket there? Yes, I have heard of it.
4879. Did you ever hear of a girl being put into a strait-jacket, and a gag being put into her mouth in addition? I have heard of its being done, but not since I have been there. I should think it would be a brutal thing to do.
4880. Is there any record kept of the work done by the girls? Yes, it is only just a weekly thing. The work that is done weekly is reported to the Colonial Secretary. It is a weekly report sent to the Colonial Secretary.
4881. Is there any book that would show it? Yes, there is a book that would show.
4882. What is the general character of the girls there—what is their general conduct? Well, they are better now than when I first went there.
4883. Have you heard any serious charges against their moral conduct? In what way?
4884. In their language or otherwise? I have heard them use bad language, and I have spoken to them and remonstrated with them about it.
4885. Are any inducements or rewards for good conduct held out to them? No. I think that is a very great detriment.
4886. What is meant by the black list? I do not know. There is no black list kept now.
4887. It is mentioned in that book? I do not know. It is not kept now.
4888. Did you report the conduct of those matrons who were in the habit of going out constantly at night to the ships? It was not my place to report it, but I have spoken to Mr. Lucas in a friendly way about it.
4889. As it was a matter of such frequent occurrence, you must have spoken about it frequently? Yes, so I did.
4890. Did he see any objection to their going out in this way? I cannot say.
4891. Did he say anything? I did not report it exactly. I just mentioned what I saw.
4892. Would you not have thought it a matter of sufficient importance to justify you in going and making a formal report of it? Well, I did not like to report the officers. I just spoke to Mr. Lucas about it, and told him that I thought it was very wrong, and that it was setting the girls a bad example.
4893. How did the girls know that the matrons used to go out in this way? They found it out from the sailors.
4894. The sailors? Yes, the sailors were down beside the fence where the girls were pumping water, and they used to talk to them there.
4895. The sailors used to talk to the girls and tell them that the matrons had been down to the ship at night? Yes; and the girls used to tell me in the morning about it when they came into the store.
4896. They told you that the sailors told them the matrons had been down? Yes, and that they thought that they had a right to go down too if the matrons did.
4897. Well, in the knowledge that this was likely to demoralize the whole institution, should you not have reported it? I did speak to Mr. Lucas about it several times.
4898. Did you speak to Mrs. Lucas about it? I do not know, but I did to Mr. Lucas.
4899. Repeatedly? Repeatedly.
4900. Do the sailors ever go to the fence now? No, not now.
4901. Mr. Cowper.] Do they try less to get into the place now? I do not hear of it.
4902. Have they not been trying to get in every night since the ship has been in dock? I do not know.
4903. Mr. Ellis.] Do you think that the girls are any better since they have been there than they were before they went there—do you think that they are morally better there than they would be elsewhere? Not with the example before them.
4904. You do not think that there is much chance of a reformation there now? Not with that example. How could there be?—If your own children were to see that conduct with yourself you could not expect any good from them. That has been the whole cause of the insubordination of the institution since I have been there—I have watched it.
4905. You are friends with the matrons? Yes, I have always been friends with them.
4906. Have you drawn their attention to this unwise conduct of theirs? I did speak to Mrs. Rowland about it.
4907. What did she say? She said she would go where she liked and do what she liked. Why, Mrs. Kelly made the assertion to me that “she was going to reform.”
4908. Going to reform? Yes.
4909. What did she mean by that? That she considered her conduct was imprudent, and that she was going to reform.
4910. In what way? That she was going to give up those flighty, giddy, foolish actions of hers; she told Mrs. Lucas so too; and she did so until the “Blanche” came in.
4911. What flighty, foolish actions? Being out at all hours of an evening: I suppose she considered that was foolish of her.
4912. And she promised to reform? Yes.
4913. President.] Promised whom? Promised me, in the presence of Mrs. Connell.
4914. Mr. Ellis.] But you said that Mrs. Connell herself indulged in these practices? No, not herself—her daughters.
4915. How many daughters has she? Two.
4916. What age are they? One is twenty and the other is eighteen.
4917. Were they ever reprimanded for their conduct? I do not know. Of course they are not officers of the institution. The matrons were officers of the institution. I have heard several nasty remarks passed about the officers of the institution, and being one myself I thought they should be put a stop too; and when I saw this I spoke about it to Mr. Lucas, and told him that it was a disgrace to the institution, and he gave instructions that no one was to be let out of the place after 9 o'clock at night.

4918. Mr. Goold.] Was any report made in that book? I cannot enter any report there without the sanction of the superintendent. Mr. M. Prior.
4919. Did he order you to make any entry in the book? No. 12 Aug., 1873.
4920. Mr. Ellis.] The only proceedings recorded in that book are the punishments inflicted on the girls—(and the offences in all cases are not stated there)—and the occasional visits of religious instructors, and so on? Yes.
4921. No other information is there? Yes, whatever the punishment is for is mostly put down there.
4922. But in some cases it is not so? The summary punishments with the cane are never inserted.
4923. Mr. Goold.] But why has that not been done? I never had any instructions to do it.
4924. Do you not think that it is important these punishments should be entered? Yes, I think it is.
4925. Has Mr. Lucas never given any reason for not having them entered? I never questioned him on the subject.
4926. Mr. Ellis.] Have these canings ever been pretty severe? I am not aware.
4927. Has it ever been complained of? There was a girl who showed marks to Mr. King, and they were rather severe.
4928. Who inflicted them? I do not know. She said it was Mr. Lucas.
4929. President.] Where were the marks? On the shoulder.
4930. Mr. Ellis.] Are there any other punishments but caning and confinement? No.
4931. President.] How long had the marks been inflicted when you saw them? Two days, I think. I was not aware of it until Mr. King's report was made, and Mrs. Connell told me of it, and then, as the girl was her servant, she showed me the marks.
4932. Mr. Cowper.] Do you not know as a fact that, until within the last few weeks, Mrs. Lucas and Mrs. Brackenregg and Mrs. Rowland have all been on the most friendly terms? No, not within the last three months.
4933. President.] Have they been on friendly terms? Yes.
4934. Mr. Cowper.] They were most intimate? I cannot say that.
4935. They joined together in their walks and amusements? Yes, but I did not see any improprieties then.
4936. Was not Mrs. Lucas about the place when the matrons were waving to the ship? Yes, I believe so, but I cannot say whether she saw them or not.
4937. Was she not in a place where she could have seen them? Yes, I think so.
4938. You think it is probable that she did not? I do. You see there is a curve in the building, so that they might not be seen by her.
4939. President.] How long is it since you began to notice these people going in and out? For the last nine months.
4940. When did you first mention it to Mr. Lucas—on the occasion of seeing Mrs. Kelly there? I reported it long before that. One night Mrs. Prior woke me up, and there was a dreadful noise at the gate, and I jumped up to see what it was, and I saw Mrs. Kelly and Mrs. Rowland at the gate with two men pulling them about.
4941. And they were making a great noise about it? A great noise. My wife said—"That is very respectable of Mrs. Rowland and Mrs. Kelly"; and since then I have not been on friendly terms with them. That is twelve months ago.
4942. Did you not say that you were on friendly terms with them until within the last three months? No, that was Mrs. Lucas.
4943. Mr. Cowper.] You were living on the island by yourself—without your family—for some time? Yes, for about three months.
4944. During those three months you were very friendly with the matrons? Yes; I was not aware that they were such people.
4945. Had you not some fun with them sometimes? No.
4946. Never? Never.
4947. Do you not recollect some fun you had with them, when they ran into your house and shut you out? Yes, but I was very much annoyed about that—I was very angry at their coming and pulling me out of bed.
4948. President.] How is it you did not mention this before—about your being pulled out of bed? I did not think of it.
4949. Was it not a joke? I had no joke with them. I was fast asleep in bed, and there was no one but myself in the place, and they came and pulled me out of bed.
4950. Who was guilty of doing this? Mrs. Rowland and Mrs. Brackenregg came and pulled me out of bed.
4951. At what time was this? 8 or 9 o'clock at night.
4952. Mr. Metcalfe.] Did you sleep with the door of the house open? There is no key to the door. I went there a stranger, and I had not been more than a fortnight on the place when they did this.
4953. Mr. Ellis.] What did they do—did they take themselves off after pulling you out of bed? I had my trousers on. Of course I ran away into a room inside, and they went out. Of course I was very much annoyed about it.
4954. Do you think they would have done that if you had not joked with them? No, I did not. I was a perfect stranger there then.
4955. But do you think that they would do that unless you gave them some reason to suppose that you would enjoy a joke? No, I never gave them any reason at all.
4956. You never joked with them? Never.
4957. President.] How long is that ago? About fifteen months ago.
4958. Did you mention that to Mr. Lucas? I forget whether I did or not. I may have done so.
4959. Do you not think that it was very extraordinary conduct on their part? I do.
4960. Here was an institution for the reclamation of prostitutes and homeless girls, and here were two officers of that institution—two matrons who were total strangers to you—coming down to your house and pulling you out of bed at night? Yes.
4961. Having had only a fortnight's acquaintance with you? Yes.
4962. And seeing you seldom before? Yes.
4963. And you did not report this to the head of the institution? Well, I thought it was a joke too, though I was angry about it. I said to myself if Mrs. Prior comes to hear of this it may be the means of separating us; and what would any gentleman do under the same circumstances,—a person sleeping in his bed and pulled out of it by two women? 4964.

- Mr. M. Prior. 4964. Were you ever in a public institution before? Yes, I was for sixteen years in one institution.
 4965. Where? At Parramatta.
 12 Aug., 1873. 4966. What institution? The Lunatic Asylum.
 4967. Did you come direct from there to Biloela? No, I went to Newcastle, to the asylum there. I was superintendent there.
 4968. How did you come to be removed from that institution? I got promotion from Parramatta, and went to Newcastle as superintendent. I was removed from there in consequence of an error about some money that was owing to me—seventeen days' pay.
 4969. Where were you removed from? Newcastle.
 4970. What was the error? It related to seventeen days' pay being kept back and not paid to me. I wrote repeatedly to Dr. Wardley, and then I wrote to the Government, and the money was paid me. Then an altercation arose, and there was a Board of inquiry, and I was removed.
 4971. Did you make any charges then against any one? No specific charges.
 4972. How long after you were removed were you appointed to Biloela? Immediately I was removed from there I was appointed to the Industrial and Reformatory Schools at Biloela.
 4973. Is there anything you wish to add to the evidence you have given? No, I do not think so.

Mrs. Margaret Kelly, teacher, Industrial School for Girls, Biloela, called in and examined:—

- Mrs. M. Kelly.
 12 Aug., 1873. 4974. President.] You are the schoolmistress at the Biloela Industrial School? Yes.
 4975. How long have you been so? For five years and ten months.
 4976. What salary do you receive? £75 a year.
 4977. And rations? Yes—one ration.
 4978. Were you engaged in teaching before you went there? Yes; before I was married I was engaged in teaching, but not for some time before I went there.
 4979. You are a widow? Yes.
 4980. Were you a teacher under the National Board? Yes.
 4981. For how long? About four years.
 4982. In what schools did you teach? I was at Fort-street for some time, and I was also at the Wollongong girls' school.
 4983. What are the school hours here? From 9 till 12, and from 2 till 4.
 4984. Do all the children come to you during the week? Not all of them. There are several girls who are told off for the different duties in the institution, such as the work of the laundry and the kitchen.
 4985. How often do you get them to teach? Every other week.
 4986. How do you find the children compare in point of intelligence with the children out of doors? I find some of the children very talented, and some of them are very attentive to instruction, particularly the younger children.
 4987. Do you find them much more troublesome to teach than the children who attend a Public School? Yes, I do.
 4988. In what respects? They have no home training, and I think that has a good deal to do with it.
 4989. Do you mean that they are troublesome to manage or have less desire to learn? No; many of them have more desire to learn, while others are not attentive and will not apply themselves.
 4990. Do you find that it is troublesome to keep them in school? No, I find very little trouble in that; I cannot complain. Of course all children are more or less troublesome.
 4991. You teach them under the Public School system? Yes.
 4992. Has the school ever been inspected? Yes.
 4993. By whom? By the metropolitan inspectors.
 4994. Do you teach the children to sing? I do teach them to sing, but not the theory of singing.
 4996. Have you any other work to do after school hours? I attend the prayers of the Roman Catholic girls morning and evening, in addition to giving them secular instruction.
 4997. You are a Roman Catholic yourself? Yes.
 4998. All the Catholic children assemble for prayers, morning and evening? They do not all come in the morning, but they all come in the evening.
 4999. Have you any other duties? None, except that on Sundays I give religious instruction to the Catholic children if there is no one else there to do so.
 5000. Then you have nothing to do with the children in the evening—looking after them in the dormitories, or at meal-times? No.
 5001. Do you find that the children are very deficient in scriptural knowledge, compared with the children you have seen in the National Schools—are they very ignorant of religious matters? Lately the children have got on very well in regard to their scriptural knowledge. There are some ladies who come there to give them religious instruction.
 5002. But what is the condition of the children in this respect when they first come to you? Some are thoroughly ignorant.
 5003. Degradingly so? Degradingly so, some of them.
 5004. To what extent does this ignorance go—can you give us any idea? Some of them have no idea who God is.
 5005. What has been the age of these ignorant children? There were two girls who came in, one was about twelve and the other ten.
 5006. Where did they come from? From the country.
 5007. They did not come from the streets of Sydney at all? No.
 5008. Have you found many instances of that sort of ignorance? No, not many. There were some children came from Bathurst who were very ignorant. They did not come from the town of Bathurst, but from somewhere in the bush near Bathurst.
 5009. And you find that this ignorance is shown in the case of country children? Yes. We had a girl in last week—a very big girl, about sixteen years of age—who is in the most deplorable state of ignorance. She does not even know her alphabet.

Mrs. M.
Kelly.

5010. These elder girls who we are told have come from the streets of Sydney—girls who have led immoral lives—are they the most ignorant? They are very ignorant, because many of them have not given their minds to school, though they say that they have been sent to school. 12 Aug, 1873.

5011. Have they ever had any religious instruction? They have had some religious instruction before they came in—I know that by their prayers and catechism.

5012. You do not find them then the most ignorant? Oh no.

5013. Neither in point of secular knowledge nor of religious teaching? Neither.

5015. Was the use of the cane allowed in the National Schools? Yes.

5016. Have you ever had recourse to it in the school here? Yes, I have used the cane.

5017. Do you do so more frequently than is done in other schools? I do not indeed. I am sometimes for weeks and do not use a cane, except as a pointer.

5018. Then in point of fact you do not find the girls more than ordinarily troublesome? No, not on the whole.

5019. They are troublesome out of school—you have observed that? Yes.

5020. Do you know whether the officers of the institution—that is, the matrons, yourself, and Mr. and Mrs. Lucas—are working harmoniously together? Well, I cannot say that they are working harmoniously together.

5021. Have you ever come into collision with any of them in any way? Yes, I have.

5022. In what way? Mrs. Lucas has nothing whatever to do with my duties—it is Mr. Lucas; and I do not say that Mr. Lucas interferes with the duties of the school with regard to the progress of the girls—that is left to the inspectors—but I object to his manner in speaking to me sometimes before the girls.

5023. In what way does he speak? In a manner that would tend to lessen the respect I would wish to have from the girls. The girls are shrewd in seeing that their teacher is not spoken to with respect.

5024. The girls notice it? Yes; they are very shrewd.

5025. How is it that Mr. Lucas speaks to you in the school? Well, the last time was on the 20th June. He came into the schoolroom and spoke to me about a letter. The messenger had brought some letters, as he does every morning, and the day before a letter of mine had gone down to the institution instead of being left in the schoolroom, and the next morning I asked the man why he did not leave the letter with me, instead of taking it down to the institution. He said that he did not know that the letter was for me (the man cannot read writing), so I said it was all right. The next day a letter came for me and the postmistress put it up in paper, and Mr. Lucas came up and asked me how it was my letter came under cover. I said that I had no idea—that the postmistress had done it, and that I had not told her to do it. He then said that he was annoyed at my saying that I had an objection to my letters going to the institution, as they were “hawked about” there. I said that I had not said anything of the kind. He said that the messenger had said so, and I said that I did not like the man to make a false statement; and I asked Mr. Lucas to be kind enough to send for the messenger, and he said that he would do nothing of the kind. I said that he should do so, in justice to me. And then he said in the school, before all the girls—“And pray who are you?—you must be Mrs. Somebody.” And the girls all went about saying “Oh, Mrs. Kelly is Mrs. Somebody now.” I felt very much hurt about it. I told Mr. Lucas that there was an office, and if he wished to speak to me that was the place to do so, and not in the schoolroom.

5026. Has this kind of thing happened more than once? Yes, it has.

5027. Do you know of any similar cases having happened with regard to the other officers? Well, I have often heard Mr. and Mrs. Lucas speaking to them in a very disrespectful way at muster. I have had nothing to do with it, but I have been present sometimes.

5028. In what way have they spoken—what sort of things have they said? Well, really I have not known what the quarrels have commenced about, but I have heard them.

5029. There have been altercations in the presence of the girls? Yes.

5030. Calculated to destroy the respect of the children for their officers? Yes, it would do so very materially.

5031. It is said, Mrs. Kelly, that you and the other matrons, or some of them, have been in the habit of waving handkerchiefs to the officers of the ships in the dock, and that the girls have seen you doing this, and that of course it has destroyed their respect for the officers: is that the case? Well, on one occasion I did wave to a ship, but that is the only time I ever did so.

5032. When was that? That was when the ship “Cossack” was going out of dock. There was Mr. Lucas and Mrs. Lucas, Miss Lucas, Mrs. Rowland and myself. The ship was going out about half-past 10 o'clock in the morning, and we all stood near the old stone wall, and saw the ship going out; it dipped its ensign to us, and we all waved our handkerchiefs.

5033. This was before Mr. Lucas? Yes, he was there, and Mrs. Lucas too.

5034. You never did such a thing on any other occasion? Never. I never did it before the girls at all. The girls were not present on that occasion.

5035. Were they not present? No; the Roman Catholic girls were receiving religious instruction in the schoolroom from the nuns, and the Protestant girls were in the sewing-room.

5036. Then if it is represented that the matrons have done so on many occasions? That is not correct; I never did it but on that occasion. I have been very sorry since for doing it, because, though it was not disapproved of then, I have heard remarks about it since.

5037. Have you been in the habit of going down to the ships in the dock? I have been on board two ships—the men-of-war vessels—since I have been on the island.

5038. What vessels were they? The “Cossack” and the “Blanche.”

5039. Were you on board those vessels more than once? No, only once.

5040. Was it in the day-time or at night? In the day-time. It was between 4 and 5 o'clock in the afternoon that I went on board.

5041. It is fair to tell you that you have been accused of flirting with the officers of these vessels constantly: is that the case? Really I do not understand—Flirting with them—

5042. Well, being about with them constantly, and meeting them,—you understand what is meant?

Mrs. M.
Kelly.

I have never met any officers, except accidentally on board the steamer; when I have been going to Sydney they have occasionally been on board at the same time, both going and coming back. I have never met any by appointment.

12 Aug., 1873. 5043. But whether you have met them by appointment or not, you deny having carried on anything like an imprudent familiarity with them? No; I have not done anything that I feel at all ashamed of, but I have spoken to them.

5044. Now, one person has told us that one night he was aroused from his sleep by a noise outside his house, at the gate—that he got up and looked through a window and saw you there with an officer (some gentleman who was an officer on board the “Blanche”), about half-past 12 o'clock at night. This person states that he was aroused by hearing some noise as if there was a knocking against the window, and he got up and saw you there and this officer,—and he states also that this officer was kissing you;—what do you say to that? I deny it. I think I know the night that he speaks of. I went down to town one evening by the half-past 6 o'clock boat—Mrs. Lucas, Mrs. Brackenregg, and myself. When we got on board the boat two officers of the “Blanche” came on board. I knew them, and they came up and spoke to me and to Mrs. Lucas. They sat on the same seat and joined in the conversation. When we landed and got to King-street (we all went up together), and Mrs. Lucas and I and one of these officers walked up as far as Pitt-street. I was going to Darlinghurst, and Mrs. Lucas took a South Head Road 'bus, and so we all separated. As we were going back these gentlemen were again on board the steamer, and the steamer was later than usual that evening. When I got on board, the ladies' cabin was occupied, and Mrs. Brackenregg said to me—“You will get no room there; come to the other end.” So we went to the other end. When we reached the wharf one of these officers went to the ship, and the other said “I will help you carry your parcels to the gate.” We all walked up together. When I got near the gate I found that I had dropped a parcel, and I said that as it was such a bright night I would go back and look for it. So we went back and I found the parcel on the wharf, and when we went back again we stayed about ten minutes before Mr. Prior's window chatting, and then rang the bell and went in. I never thought that there was any harm in it, until one day Mrs. Brackenregg came up and said that some quarrel had taken place in the sewing-room, and Mr. Lucas said—“A pretty lot of ladies you are when you stand outside the gate with two fellows until 12 o'clock at night.” I wanted to go down and speak about it then, but Mrs. Brackenregg said—“You know it is false, so why take notice of it?” That is the only night that could be referred to, and Mrs. Brackenregg was with me then.

5045. Mr. Prior mentions that night, and he also mentions a night when you were alone with an officer? I was never alone with any officer since I have been on the island—no gentleman has spoken to me alone there. I heard that Mr. Prior afterwards said that he got up and came to the window and lifted it a little to listen to all we had to say; and I said that I had said nothing I cared about any one hearing. I heard that he mentioned the name of the officer we were with.

5046. What was the name of the officer you were with? Mr. Brown.

5047. Mr. Prior states that this gentleman was with you on this night, and that you were by yourself? I was never with him alone—never with him, but on that night, at all.

5048. How long ago was this? It was some time in May.

5049. Do you remember when the gates were ordered to be closed at a certain time? Yes.

5050. How long before that was it? The gates were ordered to be closed at a certain hour in the end of December, 1872. Mr. Lucas made a rule since Christmas that the gates were to be closed at 10 o'clock, except when any one went to town and did not return until the late steamer came up. There is a late steamer on some nights, and often some of the officers go to town in the evening, and the gate is not closed until after the late steamer arrives.

5051. You say that this occurrence took place in May? Yes. The “Blanche” was in dock in May. This is the only night on which I saw Mr. Brown.

5052. You solemnly deny the charge that has been made? I do, indeed.

5053. Have you and Mr. Prior been on good terms? Not since he has been in the institution. Since he was a month there I have never spoken to him except on business.

5054. What was the cause of your coolness? Well, I was told by a lady friend of mine of something about Mr. Prior—whether it was true or not I do not know—but if it was true I did not consider him a fit person to be seen with. He used to come to my house and invite me and the other matrons to his place to tea, and after I heard this I was very cool with him, and sent him word that I did not wish him to visit my quarters.

5055. That was within a month of his coming to the place? Yes. I know that his feeling towards me is bitter. I have never spoken to him since except on business.

5056. After sending him that message did you cease to have any communication with him? Yes. He asked me out to his place and I would not go, and he wanted to know why, and I did not like to tell him why, for I thought it was best to have nothing to say to him at all.

5057. Was Mrs. Prior there? She was not. At any time that Mr. Prior asked me out Mrs. Prior was not there.

5058. Did he ask you often? Yes, two or three times.

5059. Was his wife not there then? Yes, he asked me once when she was there. He said “As you won't come when my wife is away, will you come when she is here?”—but I would not go. I told the officers that I did not like to insult him, but I said—“If he comes into my place I will tell him the reason I do not think it is right for me to be with him.”

FRIDAY, 15 AUGUST, 1873.

Members Present:—

WILLIAM CHARLES WINDEYER, Esq., PRESIDENT.

SAMUEL GOOLD, Esq.
MICHAEL METCALFE, Esq.EYRE G. ELLIS, Esq.
CHARLES COWPER, JUN., Esq.

Mrs. Mary Anne Connell, gatekeeper, Industrial School for Girls, Biloela, called in and examined:—

5060. Mr. Metcalfe.] You are the gatekeeper of the Industrial School at Biloela? Yes.

5061. How long have you been so? Just turned two years.

5062. What salary do you receive? £50 a year.

5063. State as shortly as you can what you conceive your duties to be? I have never had any rules about the gate—no more than to be there from 6 in the morning until 10 at night, just according as when any one is in I have to let them out.

5064. There is no fixed hour for closing the gate? There has been no fixed hour. Some six months ago Mr. Lucas adopted the plan of closing the gate at 10 o'clock, and there was no one to be admitted into the place or let out of it after that time, except when the late boats came from Sydney—that is on Saturday night, Monday night and Wednesday night—and at any time that he himself has been to Balmain. He often goes backwards and forwards there, and he is there until 10 or 11 o'clock, and I wait until the police pull him across.

5065. Has that rule been strictly acted upon? Yes, it has been so; there has been none further than what I say. Of course, occasionally, when no late boat, Mr. Lucas has often been backwards and forwards to Balmain—perhaps every other night—and there are nights when the steamer comes in late.

5066. What gave rise to the issuing of the order to close the gates at 10 o'clock? The reason of that was that there were some gentlemen belonging to one of the men-of-war that had been coming in, and I believe that, as far as I know, they were an annoyance to the people at the other end of the island looking for a boat to go across to Balmain; and then I think that Mr. Lucas made that rule about the gate.

5067. But what had these people to do at the gate at that time? They had nothing to do at the gate, but I suppose that there was some grievance Mr. Lucas had that I had no concern in.

5069. But before that, what really did occur—did the men-of-war's men come to visit the people on the place? No; only two came in to visit the people there.

5070. Two officers from the men-of-war? Yes; one visited Mrs. King and Mrs. Barton, and another visited Mrs. Kelly occasionally. There were these two, and then the order was made about the gate. I suppose Mr. Lucas thought it best to make this rule, and then there would be no encouragement for these people to come.

5071. But we are told that officers of the men-of-war vessels have been there as late as half-past 12 o'clock at night—is that the case? I do not know whether there were any there so late before I went there, but there have been none so late since I went. The latest they have been at Mrs. King's or Mrs. Kelly's is 10, or a quarter to 10, or say 10 o'clock. I have not kept the dates, but that is as near as I can possibly say.

5072. Did the matrons of the institution go in and out of the gate up to that time? No, never—there has been no one in or out at that time, with the exception of when they have been coming backwards and forwards from Sydney in the late steamers on the Monday nights, Wednesday nights, and Saturday nights. They are never out after 9 o'clock. Mrs. Rowland has to lock up the dormitories at 9, and put the lights out, and she is never out after that. They have not been in and out, as I have heard has been said.

5073. They could not go out of the gate without your knowledge? No, they could not.

5074. You do not leave the key of the gate to any one else? No, except to my daughters when I am inside at the table.

5075. You do not go away from the place at all? When I come to Sydney my daughter minds the gate—she is there now.

5076. You are not away late? No. Sometimes I go away to Sydney and return by the 10 o'clock boat, so that I am no better than any one else.

5077. Mr. Cowper.] Do you recollect the institution in October 1871? I have been there two years on the 5th of August—the 5th of this month.

5078. What was the state of the institution then—just describe it as well as you can, in your own language? The state of the institution at that time was with regard to the girls they were very noisy, radical, and impudent in all forms; they were very impudent, but I must say that they are now a great deal better in a good many ways, to take them all on the whole, considering what they are, even at this present time, to what they have been; they were much better when Mr. Cowper was in the habit of coming into the institution, and they seemed to keep in better order.

5079. Mr. Metcalfe.] Better order than they are in now? Yes. I cannot say much for them at present. They are very rude at present in a great many ways.5080. Mr. Cowper.] At that time was not their behaviour when they were standing about your gate so bad that it was almost enough to keep any decent person from entering the institution? Yes, the place had a very bad name.

5081. Their language was very bad? Yes.

5082. And their acts? Yes, their actions were very rude—I cannot say different.

5083. Did they not use bad language as soon as any one entered the gate? Yes, as soon as the bell rang they came flocking round the gate to see any person who might be coming in, and before you could get a few yards, they were down to the institution with the news. They used bad language no doubt, and they do so now. I will not screen them, and I cannot screen them; I have children of my own. I know that these girls are, the great part of them, the rakings and scrapings of all parts of the city everywhere, and cannot expect too much from them.

5084. Was it not a regular thing for them to go down and bathe in sight of the public in the day-time? I have heard so, but I have not seen them in the water.

Mrs. M. A.
Connell.

15 Aug., 1873.

- Mrs. M. A. Connell.
15 Aug., 1873.
5085. Have you not heard of their doing it as a regular thing? I have heard of it; I have not seen it, but I have heard of it as a regular thing.
5086. Mr. Metcalfe.] When you first went there? Yes. I have heard of their doing it even up to such time as it was too cold for them to go into the water.
5087. Mr. Cowper.] Did they not go without their shoes and stockings? Yes, they did.
5088. Was it not the exception and not the rule to see them with shoes and stockings on? They were to wear them—it was the rule.
5089. Yes, but was it not the exception to see them wearing them? Yes, it was; they scarcely ever had them on.
5090. Was it safe to leave any thing belonging to an officer in a place to which the girls had access? No, I would not leave it myself—anything I set any value by. They have taken things belonging to me, but I cannot blame Mr. Lucas on account of it, for I have never said anything about it to him, so he is not to be blamed. They have taken a dress of mine, and taken several other things, but I have never mentioned it to Mr. Lucas.
5091. Did they not often take your meat? Oh yes, they often took the meat, but that is nothing; they often took the meat.
5092. And left you without your dinner? Well yes, they have certainly done that—but don't put that against them.
5093. Did you ever hear them singing? Yes, I have heard them singing.
5094. What did they sing? Sometimes they sing hymns—they very often sing hymns, practising for Sunday and Wednesday, when the Sisters of Charity come. They often sing hymns to them.
5095. But do they sing them about the place and in their dormitories? Well, I cannot tell what kind of songs they sing there. I can only hear the sound of the singing. I cannot tell distinctly what they sing. I can hear that they are singing, but I cannot hear what the words are. I have heard them singing several times, but I cannot say much about that, for I never thought it was worth while to notice what words they were singing.
5096. Have you not heard them singing from 6 o'clock until 9 at night, and heard the noise at your own house? Yes, I have heard them singing later than that—I have heard them up to 10 and 11 o'clock.
5097. And was it not a matter of common conversation that they were singing what were called their "war songs"? Yes. Mr. Lucas has several times tried to prevent their doing it—tried to prevent their singing these songs and making these remarks. He has several times spoken to them about it.
5098. You recollect when persons from outside went to visit the girls and give them religious instruction on Sundays—Mrs. Foott and the Sisters of the Good Shepherd, and clergymen and others—when Mrs. Foott and others came in and preached to them? Yes.
5099. Do you not think that that had a good effect on the girls? I think if it was not for Mrs. Foott, and the Sisters and the ministers coming on Sundays and other days, the girls would be bewildered altogether—they would not know what religion is. They have a little more feeling now when they see people come in to teach them, but they used to be very rude when people came in.
5100. Mr. Metcalfe.] They have been thankful when people have come to teach them? Yes, generally when people are coming to visit them they get into such a state of excitement.
5101. For joy? Yes, that any one should come to see them—that is what I think. There is Mr. Cowper himself who knows that he was visiting the institution, and that they were all highly delighted when he came into the place; and when anything went wrong they always said,—“Oh, I will tell Mr. Cowper when he comes in.” They seemed to look up to Mr. Cowper, but lately they have not done so.
5102. Mr. Ellis.] They do not look up to him now then? No, not as before.
5103. Why have they turned against him? I do not know how it is, but they do not seem to appreciate his coming in now as they did at one time.
5104. Mr. Cowper.] I think I have only been into the place three times since my return home? Yes, only three or four times I think.
5105. Did you not tell me when I came back that you wished I would come in again because things were getting just as bad as ever? Yes, I did say so. I said that the girls were much better when you were coming into the institution. The girls were in better order then, and seemed more respectful.
5106. Did I not then say to you that I saw that I could do no good, and that it was no use my wasting time there? Yes, you did say so, and that you did not intend to go in for the future. It is not an easy matter for any one to manage those girls. It is very difficult, for there are two or three of them always set to watch a person while the rest are doing some mischief.
5107. How do you mean? I mean if one of the matrons is occupied with anything, and requires a couple of girls, and they want to scheme away, they will watch their opportunity, and scheme until they have their wishes fulfilled.
5108. The girls will do that? Yes. How well that girl Sarah B— got away the morning before yesterday.
5109. How did she do it? It was by the half-past 7 boat, she went up the river. I cannot tell how she managed to get the clothes, but she got on board the steamer and escaped.
5110. Mr. Metcalfe.] Had she a hat on? Yes, some kind of a bonnet on. She got up the river as far as Gladesville.
5111. Mr. Ellis.] How did she get through the gate? She did not get out at the gate, but she got through a hole in the fence—a large hole that was made for the occasion.
5112. Mr. Metcalfe.] Has she been brought back? Yes, she was brought back by half-past 9 o'clock. The police found her.
5113. Mr. Cowper.] Do you know what duty she was performing in the institution? She was on Mrs. Lucas's place.
5114. Mr. Ellis.] What is her age? I cannot say what her age is—sixteen or seventeen I should think—quite that.
5115. Mr. Gould.] How long had she been in the institution? She has been in the place since I first went there—at least I was there only a short time when she first came in.
5116. Mr. Metcalfe.] Is she usually a well-behaved girl? Well, I cannot say much for her. She is one of those who ran away before—one of those that were in gaol.
5117. Mr. Cowper.] And you mean to say that this girl got away from the institution and from the island, dressed up in clothes not belonging to the institution, and without any person on the place knowing of it? She

She did; she got on the boat and went away. Well, generally, I do not think that the matrons look after the girls that are on their quarters, for they are all employed upon their duties at that time in the morning. 5118. But this girl was on Mrs. Lucas's quarters—that is at the other end of the island? Yes, it is the last house down. I do not know how the girl got out.

Mrs. M. A. Connell.

15 Aug., 1873.

5119. Mr. Goold.] She was acting as servant to Mr. and Mrs. Lucas? Yes, and Mrs. Lucas said that five minutes before they saw her taking the bath water out, so that they were more than surprised when the policeman came and told them that she was on the boat. The policeman saw her on the boat, and he knew her, and he said "You belong to the institution?" She said "Yes, I was there, but I have a place up the river, and I came down and slept at Mrs. Connell's place last night." So the policeman took it to be the truth and let her go. Then he came up to me, and said "Is Sarah B—in the institution?" I said "She ought to be." He said "Is she out at service?" I said "No; she should be here." He said, "She has gone off in the boat, and she told me that she slept last night at your place." So I said, "No, she did not sleep at my place—she ought to be in the institution." He then went down and reported it, and they went up the river and brought her back.

5120. Mr. Cowper.] What reason have you for saying that the girls do not think as much of me as they used to do? Well, you know, I only think so.

5121. I only want you to explain? I cannot exactly say what my reason was for saying that.

5122. Have they ever said anything about it? Yes, they have.

5123. What have they said? They have sung songs, you know, and gone on—but it is all nonsense, foolishness, and so on. They sing songs and put you at the head of it, you know.

5124. Mr. Ellis.] Do you remember the words of any of the songs? Oh, they are not worth talking of—they make them up about any one that comes into the place.

5125. Mr. Cowper.] How is it that they pick me out, though they never see me? Oh, but they know you are there.

5126. Do you think it is possible, Mrs. Connell, for the matrons or any other persons to have been outside your gate, near Mr. Prior's house, night after night, when the men-of-war vessels were in the dock—could these persons have been there talking and laughing and making other unseemly noises, without your knowing of it? No, not night after night. They are not. Nothing of the kind. There is no one can go in or out of that gate without my knowledge. You yourself could not go in without my knowledge. No one can go out or in without my knowing it; and as to the men-of-war being in dock, the matrons have gone out occasionally for stamps and for paper to Mrs. Haggarty's, where their children go to school. They have gone down to Mrs. Haggarty's about their children, but they have not been out night after night—not anything to that effect.

5127. Do you think that they were out once a week or once a fortnight so late as 10 or 11 or 12 o'clock? They have been late sometimes when the steamer has been late.

5128. But when the steamer has not been late? No, they have never been out late except when the steamer has been late—never except on the late steamer nights.

5129. Mr. Goold.] And on those occasions they would be coming from Sydney? Yes. On those occasions the steamer does not leave Sydney until 11 o'clock, and sometimes they are a long time coming up. Some come up quicker—those little steamers come up quick, but some of the big ones used to make the time long. It used to be twenty minutes to 12 before they came up and before the people got to the gate, but for any more than that, no one has been out of that gate after that time. If Mr. Prior makes that statement he makes a false one, and I am sorry the man should tell such an untruth. It was wrong of him to say so.

5130. Mr. Cowper.] Do you think that if those forty big girls were back again in the institution, it would be in any better condition than it was in August, 1871? Of course I do not know what condition those girls may be in now, but if they were left in the school and never taken out it would be in a very bad state.

5131. If there were forty of those big girls in there now, do you not think that the school would be riotous—do you think it would be quiet? I think that it would not be quiet.

5132. Mr. Metcalfe.] You think that the school has gone back in discipline? Yes, it is not so good as it was six or eight months ago—they are more impudent now than they have been.

5133. Can you give us a reason for that? I cannot.

5134. What is your impression? My impression is that Mr. Lucas is too kind to them. He treats them too kindly, and they impose upon him. I think he is very kind to them, and he is not firm enough.

5135. But still there seems to be a good deal of punishment? Yes, they get punished too, but they do not seem to care a great deal for that.

5136. Mr. Cowper.] I punished them, did I not? Yes, you did.

5137. And they praised me up then, did they not? Yes; when they get excited you know, they do so. The way it is, they like any new person that comes in. If any of you gentlemen went in, they would think much of you for a time.

5138. Mr. Ellis.] Did we make any very great impression on them, then? Yes. They think that they are going to get something.

5139. Mr. Cowper.] Has not Mrs. Foott been visiting them for some time? Yes.

5140. And do they not respect her as much now as they ever did? Yes, they are very fond of her; and they pay a great deal of attention to the Sisters, and seem to think a great deal of them.

5141. Then you think that the girls have been benefited by the influences brought to bear upon them by these persons? Yes. I think if it was not for the visitors and the clergy coming they would be in a very queer way—they would not be as quiet as they are.

5142. Do you not think that that is the reason that they have improved? Yes, I think so.

5143. Do you think that moral influence would have a greater effect upon them than harsh punishments? Yes; I think, as far as my judgment goes, kindness is very good with many of them; but then again, there are a good many of them that kindness is thrown away upon. If you are kind to them, and think too much of them, they will impose upon you. They all like to be dealt with kindly, but some of them will impose on kindness.

5144. What punishments are generally inflicted on the girls? I cannot give you any proper information about that, as I do not deal with the girls. I am so far up from them that I have little to do with them, but as I hear, they are locked up, and get nothing but bread and water—that is what I hear.

5145. Mr. Metcalfe.] Have you not heard anything about the cane being used? Yes, I have heard about it.

- Mrs. M. A. Connell.
15 Aug., 1873.
5146. It has been used severely too? Well, I cannot say that it has been used very severely, but it has been used.
5147. Mr. Cowper.] Have you ever seen marks of the cane on a girl? Yes, I have.
5148. Do you recollect a girl standing at the corner of your house, and showing her arm when you opened the gate to Mr. King? Yes, I do.
5149. Mr. Ellis.] Did you ever hear of a girl being put into a strait-jacket? Yes, I have.
5150. Have you ever heard of a girl being gagged? Yes, I have heard of it, but I have not seen it. I do not see much of what goes on in the place. I have not even seen the girls mustered; so that will tell you how little I go down to the place. I have heard of their being gagged, and put in the cells, and all that, but I have not seen it.
5151. Have you ever seen the matrons and other persons on the island beckoning and waving their handkerchiefs to the officers on the ships? No, I have not seen it, but I have heard of it.
5152. Does any one besides the matrons do it? No, not that I know of. I have seen the girls waving to the steamers going past.
5153. Merely waving their handkerchiefs? Yes. I have heard of the matrons doing it, but I have never seen it done.
5154. Mr. Metcalfe.] You have seen the matrons waving their handkerchiefs? No, I have heard of it repeatedly, but I have never seen it.
5155. Mr. Ellis.] From whom did you hear of it? I have heard the girls speak of it. I have heard them say it was no harm for them to do it, when the matrons did it. That is the remark that I have heard.
5156. Mr. Goold.] Could it have been done without your seeing it? Oh yes; I am away up at the gate.
5157. Mr. Ellis.] Listen to this evidence, and say whether you think it is true:—
- You have not seen any other improprieties? I have seen the matrons repeatedly down about the ships at 9 or 10 at night when occasionally out for a walk. My house is close to the gate, and so I see every one who passes in or out, and it is a complete nuisance, these people going backwards and forwards.
- What people? The matrons.
- What matrons? Mrs. Brackenregg, Mrs. Kelly, and Mrs. Rowland.
- Where do they go to? Down to the shipping. They have gone repeatedly within the last nine or ten months. I always see them going in and out, as my house is close to the gate.
- At what hours do they go in and out? 9 or 10 o'clock at night.
- Can you see who they are—are you close to them? Yes, I was close to them. No one can get in or out of the gate without my seeing them, and I can always see them quite well. When anybody comes through the gate I generally look to see who it is, because it might be one of the girls getting away.
- No one can go in or out without your seeing them? No. It is the greatest nuisance to me—I am so much disturbed by these people going in and out, and the sailors coming in and out. I am obliged to keep two dogs there to keep the sailors away.
- Do you know what sailors they are? I do not know whether they are sailors or officers of the ship.
- Can you not distinguish whether they are officers or seamen? I cannot tell. They are not dressed in blue clothes. They keep me awake all night long coming in and out.
- Who keeps you awake? We are kept awake all night. I cannot keep my family there on account of this—the matrons going in and out constantly to and from the ships, while the ships are in dock.
- Do you say that they all do this? Three of them do, for I have seen them myself.
- Are not the gates locked? Yes.
- Is there not a gatekeeper? Yes.
- What instructions has he about people going in and out? It is a female—Mrs. Connell keeps the gate.
- You cannot be mistaken in these people who go in and out? I cannot be.
- Do any others besides the matrons go in and out in this way? Yes, there are others.
- Who are they? The Miss Connells.
- Who else? Nobody else. You see they cannot go in without my seeing them, because my bedroom faces the door. I am close to the gate, and must see every one who goes out or in.
- You do not see sailors going into the place? No.
- But you see the women come out? Yes.
- You reside there, I suppose? Yes.
- And you stop in your room when these people are going out of the gate? Yes.
- You do not go to see where they go to? I do not.
- Are there not other people on the island? Yes, there are, but they are not in the institution.
- How do you know that these people go to the sailors? Because the sailors come up with them, and I see them go in and the sailors go away again.
- Might these matrons not be coming up from the late steamer? No, it was before the late steamer began to run.
- Will you undertake to say that the persons who come with them to the gate are not people living on the island? No, they are not. They are sailors—dressed as sailors. Two of them came to my place one night, and asked for the matron, and I said no matron lived there. They came knocking at the door, and my daughter had to come and wake me.
- It is not your inference that they were there,—you saw them yourself? Yes, it is a positive fact; I have seen them. I have seen, on moonlight nights, the men come with them. I have seen Mrs. Kelly come up at half-past 12 in the morning with a sailor. She was under my window with one of the men of the “Blanche” until half-past 12 o'clock.
- Is what you have heard read true—is the evidence you have heard read true? That is not true—that is very false. I can state positively it is false; there has been no one out of the gate at that time—no one.
5158. And there has never been such conduct there as might be called a nuisance? No. My daughters have been in the habit of going out, independent of any ship being in the dock at all.
5159. Mr. Cowper.] Is it not usual for everybody to walk about the island in the evening? Yes, they have sometimes walked as far as the flagstaff in the evening.
5160. There has been no conduct such as would make such a thing a nuisance? No, never.
5161. It is a usual thing for some of the officers to walk out there, in the summer-time particularly? Yes, they have gone out in the summer-time, but they have never been out so late as is stated there.
5162. Mr. Ellis.] Do you recollect Mr. Prior ever asking you at what time Mrs. Kelly came in? He may have asked me, but I disremember it if he did. I will tell you all about that night that has been spoken of. There were several went down to Sydney—I cannot remember whether it was a Saturday or a Monday night—I believe it was Mrs. Lucas was in Sydney, and Mr. Lucas went down to meet her, and I believe the boat was late, for there was some dispute on the wharf with a drunken man there, and they wanted to get him off the boat, and that caused a delay, and made the boat a few minutes later than usual. Mrs. Kelly and Mrs. Brackenregg came up in the boat, and one gentleman belonging to the “Blanche” came up with them to the gate. I thought that Mrs. Kelly and Mrs. Brackenregg had missed the boat, as they were so late, and I waited some time for them. I went out after the steamer came in and heard no footstep, and no one came, and then I waited another while and sat down, and then presently the bell rang, and then I went out and opened the gate. It was Mrs. Brackenregg rang the bell, and Mrs. Kelly was standing on the green about the length of this room off—she was standing there speaking to Mr. Brown.

I said "Why are you so late?" Mrs. Kelly said—"I lost a pair of boots I bought for the children, and I went back to find them." I said—"Well, you have been long enough looking for the boots." She said—"I had to look for them, for I did not want to lose them; and as it was a moonlight night I thought I would go back and try to find them."

Mrs. M. A.
Connell.

15 Aug., 1873.

5163. Both Mrs. Kelly and Mrs. Brackenregg came in together? Yes, and I did not hear any more about it until I heard that Mr. Prior made some remarks that were quite false. He has said a falsehood when he said that Mrs. Kelly was under his window. She was not near his window. I know there is not one goes in or out of the gate that he does not watch to see who they are, and of course if people make a point of watching every person they can soon pick out a fault.

5164. Do you remember any occasion on which Mrs. Kelly was out alone and came in alone as late as 12 o'clock at night? No, never.

5165. I mean exclusive of the late steamer nights? The only time I have known Mrs. Kelly to be late was one night when she went across to Balmain with those gentlemen—those same gentlemen that I have mentioned to you before—and there were Mrs. Kelly, Miss Lucas, and Mrs. Rowland went all together on that occasion.

5166. Mrs. Kelly, Miss Lucas, and Mrs. Rowland? Yes.

5167. How did they go to Balmain? They went across in a boat. They got the police to put them across to Balmain, and the three of them came home together. While they were away Mrs. Lucas came up to the gate once or twice, and said to me "Are they not come back yet?" She said—"They are a long time." I said—"They are rather a long time." So Mrs. Lucas and myself stood outside the gate until we saw them coming by the flagstaff. We stayed there until we saw them all come back, and there was no gentleman with them then.

5168. That is the only other occasion on which you have known them to be out late? Yes, except on the steamer nights.

5169. Have you known Mrs. Kelly to be out late alone? No, never. Mrs. Kelly is nights on nights there and never goes out.

5170. Have the matrons separate quarters? Yes, but I have not stood in one of them so long as I have been in this room, and I have never been in Mr. Lucas's house but once since I have been on the place.

5171. Do the girls sing bad songs when they are about the grounds? Sometimes they do. I cannot exactly say that they sing the songs about the grounds. They are more playing, and the school hours are from 9 until 12.

5172. How did you hear that they composed songs about Mr. Cowper? They told me that—at least I heard it. They make up these songs themselves.

5173. Do they ever make songs about Mr. and Mrs. Lucas? Not lately they have not, but they used to do it. Lately they have not, but they have done it.

5174. Do you happen to remember any of them? I cannot remember, except that they used to make songs about him that it is not nice to describe. I think it is as well to leave that where it is. I have heard that they did so; in fact we have all got nicknames, without exception—there is no choice about that.

5175. Have you ever heard that the caning carried on there was very severe? I have heard some people say that it was—that the girls have got it rather too much.

5176. Have you heard the girls complain? I have heard them say in the morning that so and so got the cane, and what would not they do if they got the cane, and all that kind of thing.

5177. Is this caning a matter of frequent occurrence? I have not heard anything about it for the last—I cannot say how long; I cannot say that it has occurred for six months, or since Mr. King was over.

5178. Has the cane vanished then? I have not seen any canes.

5179. Did the canes vanish when this Commission was appointed? The canes?

5180. Yes? I do not believe that there is one in the building. I asked some one the other day about it. I believe I asked Mrs. Dunn, and she said there was none. I have never given any of them a stripe with the cane myself.

5181. Do you know whether the gags took their departure at the same time as the canes? No, I think that they left some time before.

5182. And the strait-jackets—when did they disappear? At the same time as the gags did; I think that they all went away together. There is nothing frightens the girls like the cane.

5183. Mr. Cowper.] Have you seen a girl named Henrietta M—with a black eye? Yes, I have seen it, but I did not know who gave it to her.

5184. Have you seen a girl named Ellen S—with a black eye? Yes.

5185. And L—L—? Yes, I have seen her with a black eye, but I do not know who gave it to her.

5186. Mr. Ellis.] That would be rather a rough sort of caning to produce such effects? That is not such a caning as I would give.

5187. Mr. Cowper.] Did the girls tell you who gave them these marks? I cannot say whether they said it was Mr. Lucas or Mrs. Lucas—I cannot say positively. I believe to the best of my knowledge it was one of them, but I cannot say positively whether it was or not.

5188. You were told it was one of them? Yes, I was told it was one of them, but I cannot say myself that it was. Emma G— told me that Mr. Lucas gave her the cane, and she was the only one (that was the girl that showed her arm to Mr. King). She told me that Mr. Lucas gave it to her. Mr. Lucas said at the time that he had used the cane to her, and Mr. King made a remark to the effect—"That's rather hot on that girl," or "That's rather hard." Mr. Lucas made no remark about it, and Mr. King has never been to the place since.

5189. Mr. Gould.] Did you see the mark. Yes. I was there when she showed it to Mr. King.

5190. She showed it in your presence? Yes, there was only the three of us there.

5191. Mr. Ellis.] I understood you to say that Mr. Lucas was very kind to these girls? Yes, in a good many ways, but like other men when his temper gets up he gets a little beyond it.

5192. But he is naturally kind to them? Yes, in a way of speaking he is kind to them. This girl tore the sleeve of her dress and showed her arm to Mr. King—let him see where the mark of the cane was across the arm.

5193. Mr. Metcalfe.] Can you say whether these girls improve in the institution at all? They would improve there if the bigger girls were all divisioned off and the little ones put by themselves—then they might improve more, for they would not have so much talk.

- Mrs. M. A. Connell.
14 Aug., 1873.
5194. You think that the big girls corrupt the little ones? Yes, that is my firm belief.
5195. And you think if it were free from these big girls it would be a good institution? Yes, I think if they were all divisioned off more might be done with the others.
5196. Mr. Ellis.] Do you not think that the whole place has the character of a prison? Well, it is not very nice-looking, going into it.
5197. Would it not be impossible for a person to live there and not feel that he was inside of a prison? Yes; the gate is always locked, and you must feel that you are in a prison when you are inside.
5198. Mr. Metcalfe.] Then the children are locked up at 6 o'clock every night? Yes, they are locked up at 6; they are mustered and locked up.
5199. Does not that seem to you to be a great punishment in the summer-time? Yes. I could never lock up one of my children at that time.
5200. Mr. Goold.] You mentioned that the officers visited Mrs. Barton, Mrs. King, and Mrs. Kelly. What did you mean by that—in what sense are we to understand it—what officers did you refer to? They both belonged to one ship.
5201. How often did they visit them? I think, to the best of my belief, perhaps once or twice a week. That is my opinion.
5202. Mr. Ellis.] Who is Mrs. Barton? Mrs. King's daughter, in the Reformatory.
5203. Has she any appointment? No, she has not. Mrs. Barton has not, but Mrs. King is matron of the Reformatory.
5204. During how long a time did these visits continue? Really I cannot say how long the vessel was in.
5205. Mr. Metcalfe.] They continued as long as the ship was in dock? Yes, and after the ship went out of the dock.
5206. Mr. Ellis.] Have strangers any right to come inside the fence? That is what I told you before, that there was never any alteration made until those gentlemen visited the institution, and then Mr. Lucas made an order that no one was to be allowed in the place after a certain time.
5207. Who drew his attention to these visits? I cannot say.
5208. Mr. Metcalfe.] Then no one was allowed in or out after 10 o'clock? No—no strangers are allowed in after 7.
5209. Mr. Ellis.] Now? Yes.
5210. But formerly they were allowed in at any hour? Yes.
5211. Any officer there might see at any time any friend who took the trouble to call there? Yes.
5212. And you had no right to exclude them? No, no right.
5213. Mr. Metcalfe.] Does Mr. Lucas ever have visitors in the evening? Well, I cannot say that he has ever had anybody in to see him since then.
5214. Mr. Cowper.] Has he had visitors at any time in the evening? Yes, they have had.
5215. Mr. Metcalfe.] Gentlemen and ladies too? Yes.
5216. And the matrons considered that they had the same right? Yes. I was never told anything different. When visitors came, I generally asked where they were going and who they were going to see, and I never asked any more questions than that.
5217. Mr. Ellis.] The matrons have had other friends to visit them besides these officers? Yes, private people. I have people come from Sydney to visit me.
5218. But these matrons—had they other friends to visit them besides these two officers? Well, I do not think there was any one else came to visit them belonging to the Navy.
5219. I do not mean that—I mean had they no other friends? Oh yes, they had.
5220. Because it appears now as if no one visited them but these two officers? Oh, yes, they had other friends come to see them. They had friends come over from Balmain, and some from the other end of the island.
5221. And these you admitted in the same way to see them, as a matter of course? Yes, just the same.
5222. Did you ever think that there was any impropriety in the visits of these officers? Never.
5223. You looked upon their visits as you did upon the visits of other friends? Yes, in that kind of way. Sometimes they came in the afternoon by the half-past 3 steamer, and went away by the half-past 6 boat.
5224. Are your premises near the gate? Yes, about two or three yards from the gate.
5225. I suppose that no great noise could take place at the gate without your hearing it? Yes, sometimes the dogs are very troublesome and I have to put them out.
5226. Is your house as near to the gate as Mr. Prior's is? Yes, about the same. I am close to the gate.
5227. Have you heard of Mr. Prior's getting dogs for his protection? No, I have never heard of such a thing. I believe that he brought a dog with him from Newcastle.
5228. Did you hear of any more dogs that he had? I did not.
5229. Did you ever hear of his being pulled out of bed at night? No, he was never pulled out of bed.
5230. You did not hear of it? No; he was not pulled out of bed.
5231. How do you know he was not? That is very right, but I certainly do not believe that a man would go to bed and leave all the doors and windows open—that is all.
5232. Did you ever hear that he was pulled out of bed? I did hear of it, but I did not believe it.
5233. From whom did you hear it? I have heard him say so himself—but lately; he did not say so at the time.
5234. Lately? Yes. It may be three months ago.
5235. Mr. Goold.] Did he say who did it? I believe that he asked the matrons out to tea—two or three of them.
5236. Did he say who did it? No, he did not say particularly who did it, but he said that they dragged him out of bed.
5237. President.] Have you ever known Mr. Prior to ask the matrons to tea? Yes, I have known him to ask them to tea, and to ask them to supper too when Mrs. Prior was there.
5238. Was it before or after these friendly suppers that he was pulled out of bed? It was somewhere about the same time—the suppers were at the same time and afterwards. Whether it was that affected Mr. Prior or not I do not know, but I know that Mr. Prior several times asked Mrs. Rowland to tea, and sometimes she went to tea and sometimes she did not go.
5239. Did Mrs. Kelly ever go to tea or supper with Mr. Prior? No, not to my knowledge; never. She was never in his house to tea or supper.

5240. Do you know whether she and Mr. Prior are on friendly terms? I do not think that they were ever very friendly, as far as my knowledge goes. Mrs. M. A.
Connell.
5241. Have you any idea why they were not friendly? I have no doubt that I could give a reason for it, but Mrs. Kelly told me that she did not care to form any acquaintance with Mr. Prior. 15 Aug., 1873.
5242. That was when he first went there? Yes.
5243. Did she assign any reason? No.
5244. And you did not ask for one? No, but I know that he asked Mrs. Rowland out, and several of them, and that they never pulled him out of bed.
5245. How do you know they did not? They told me.
5246. Did you ask them about it? After Mr. Prior said they pulled him out of bed, I asked them about it, and they told me that they knocked at the door, and he came and opened the door (whether he was in bed when they knocked I cannot say), and they pushed him out and went into the room, and left him outside.
5247. How long did they keep him outside? I cannot say.
5248. Was he dressed? Yes. He was in his trousers and shirt. I saw him standing outside in his shirt and flannel trousers.
5249. Did you say anything to him? No, I stood and laughed the same as the others did.
5250. You looked upon the matter as a joke at the time? Yes, I did. I thought there was no harm in it.
5251. Did Mr. Prior appear to take it as a joke at the time? Yes, he did; he seemed to enjoy the lark quite as much as the others did.
5252. Who were the persons present? Mrs. Rowland, Mrs. Brackenregg, and Mrs. Hammond—she was cook there then.
5253. And Mr. Prior seemed to consider it a joke? Yes. And Miss Lucas saw it as well.
5254. Where was she? I disremember what brought her to the gate, whether she was going for her brothers or not I cannot say, but she was either going out or coming in. She was standing there and looking through the window, and my daughter went to open the gate to let Mrs. Rowland and Mrs. Brackenregg and Mrs. Hammond out—the two matrons and the cook.
5255. All three went out and knocked at Mr. Prior's door? Yes. I cannot say whether they went out intentionally to do that.
5256. And when Mr. Prior came out they played him a trick and shut him out? Yes, and then my daughter went in along with them. They all went in all together in a string and shut him outside.
5257. How long did they remain there? About ten minutes.
5258. And then came into their own place? Yes.
5259. And you considered it a joke? Yes, and Mr. Prior himself considered it a joke.
5260. Mr. Goold.] How long ago was this? I cannot say. Mr. Prior was there about two months I think.
5261. How long has he been there altogether? About twelve months, I think.
5262. Mr. Ellis.] Did he complain the day after, or within a week or so, of what was done to him? Oh no, it was months after that he complained.
5263. You heard no complaint whatever at the time? No, it was months after.
5264. Mr. Goold.] What did you hear then? I heard Mr. Prior made insinuations about what did Mrs. Rowland want pulling him out of bed. I said "I think you make a mistake—I understood you let them in."
5265. Mr. Cowper.] Has Mr. Prior taken his wife and family to visit Mrs. Rowland since this happened? Oh yes, and himself too has visited her.
5266. They have been on friendly terms? Yes, on very friendly terms.
5267. Mr. Ellis.] Been to tea and supper? I cannot say, for I have never been to his place but once on business.
5268. Mr. Cowper.] How many times do you think I have been in the institution since April, 1872? That would be more than twelve months—you have not been in very many times, but I cannot exactly say to half a dozen—you may have been more times or less.
5269. About half a dozen? Yes, about that.
5270. Are not the girls generally quieter and better behaved just before a riot than they are at any other time? Yes, when they are going to have a riot they generally keep quiet. They are planning I think; at any rate they seem to be quieter just before a riot.
5271. Then visitors may go in and see the institution almost in what they might consider a state of perfection, and within a few hours afterwards it would be hardly safe for the officers to walk about among the girls in 1871? Yes, at that time they were very noisy and impudent.
5272. A person outside could not form any opinion of the institution? They did not take any interest in it.
5273. But even if they did, would it be possible for any one to form an opinion of the institution unless they visited it daily or weekly? You might form an opinion of course. If you wished to form an opinion of it, the time to visit it would be meal-times for a week or a fortnight, and then a person would be able to see how it went on.
5274. Mr. Metcalfe.] Would it require fourteen days to gain a knowledge of the place? It would; for then you would see the state it was in.
5275. Mr. Cowper.] Have you ever seen or heard of my doing anything to interfere with Mr. Lucas's authority, or take the management out of his hands in any way whatever; have I not done everything I could to assist him? As far as I know, you have never done anything else.
5276. Have you ever heard of any officer being told by me to say or do what Mr. Lucas told them not to do? No, I never have.
5277. What character does Mrs. Lucas bear—that of a good-tempered woman? I would not say anything about it, for I have had little to do with her; it is mostly with Mr. Lucas that I have had to deal. I have heard that she has said things about me, but I let them go.
5278. Is she good-tempered? I do not think that she has a very good temper. I think that she gets out of temper as other people do sometimes. I cannot say much about it.
5279. Do not the officers of the institution consider her to be a bad temper? Yes, they consider that she is a bad temper.
5280. All of them? Yes. 5281.

- Mrs. M. A. Connell.
15 Aug., 1873.
5281. Mrs. Austin and all? Yes; but there is enough there to put a person out of temper sometimes.
5282. Mr. Metcalfe.] Are your daughters here? No, they are not. You must take my word for them. I am here to speak for them and will answer any questions about them; but they are not here, for it might be thrown up to them if they came, that they were brought before the Royal Commission, they not wishing their name to be brought into question.
5283. President.] It was merely for their own sakes we desired them to come. Is there anything you wish to add? No, there is nothing more.

George Turner, Water Police constable, called in and examined:—

- G. Turner.
15 Aug., 1873.
5284. President.] You are a Water Police constable, stationed at Cockatoo Island? Yes.
5285. How long have you been stationed there? About twenty months, I think it is.
5286. Mr. Cowper.] What was the state of the institution when you went up there;—just describe it. Had it not been almost in charge of a sergeant and two city policemen just before you went up? I believe that there were four or five policemen there before I went up.
5287. Resident there? Yes; living on the island.
5288. Mr. Metcalfe.] Who was master there then? Mr. Lucas was superintendent there then, I believe.
5289. Mr. Cowper.] Shortly after you went up there was it not necessary to send to the "Vernon" for the assistance of the officers? Yes.
5290. And then to Sydney for all the Water Police,—the sergeants included? Yes.
5291. And did not the girls at that time smash all the windows, break their iron bedsteads, and destroy a good deal of property? Yes.
5292. Did they not pull down a strong door, break the iron casing off it, and burn the wood? Yes. I do not know whether the door was iron or not; but I know that they set fire to it.
5293. Do you not know that the girls having destroyed this door once before, the Colonial Architect's men went up and cased it with iron, thinking to make a good job of it—do you not recollect that? I cannot recollect that; I cannot recollect whether the carpenters cased the door with iron.
5294. Were not the young girls as bad as the others at this time? They were very bad.
5295. Were they not impudent to every one who went into the place? To every one.
5296. Was it not then almost impossible to walk across the ground without some girl making use of bad language to you? Yes. The blackest stranger that went in would be insulted with some abusive language or other.
5297. And, in assisting the officers of the institution to put down these riots, have you not received ill usage at times? I have.
5298. Were you not more knocked about by these girls than you were in any police duty you ever performed? Yes, a great deal more.
5299. Have you not asked me to relieve you from duty, as you were so sore and unwell from it? I have.
5300. Do the girls make use of any bad language now? There has not been so much carried on during this last two or three months.
5301. Do you ever hear the girls use bad language? Yes, I did on Sunday last.
5302. What was the cause? There was a French man-of-war in the dock, and the French seamen were on the island.
5303. What took place? The girls got at the back of the officers' quarters, and the Frenchmen were close to the fence outside.
5304. What did they do? There was a boat passing at the same time; it was between 1 and 2 o'clock on Sunday.
5305. What was the language used? A girl (I believe her name is Lizzie E—) said, "Go away; we do not want any b— Chinamen here."
5306. Anything else? No other girls sang out, but this girl fired that volley several times,—the same girl. She said she did not want the Chinamen there; she wanted the Frenchmen.
5307. Mr. Ellis.] What age was she? I suppose that she was between fifteen and sixteen.
5308. Mr. Cowper.] Have you heard them use bad language at any other time? On Wednesday they made use of bad language again.
5309. Where was that? On the hill right abreast of the laundry.
5310. Did you know who it was? I could not exactly swear who it was, but I believe it was a girl named Annie D—.
5311. What did she say? She let an oath out, alluding to constable Glassington, and she said, "Glassington, you short-a— b—, I would give it you if I had the chance."
5312. Was that constable on duty? Yes, he was in a boat with me at the time.
5313. Mr. Metcalfe.] Then they are not so quiet now as they were some time ago? It appears to be getting worse within the last few days—whether it is from the ship being in dock, or whether it is that they intend to get up another row, I do not know.
5314. Mr. Cowper.] Then what is the behaviour of the girls in the dormitories after tea, when you are on duty? They have been pretty quiet for the last two months.
5315. What do you mean by pretty quiet? They have not been singing such rude songs.
5316. Have you any idea how they amuse themselves? Well, they sing sometimes—it is their play.
5317. What do they sing—have you any idea—hymns, or songs, or blackguard songs? Sometimes they sing hymns, and sometimes they sing such songs as "Annie Laurie." Sometimes they play about—one girl acts as ghost, and the others gammon to be frightened; that is the only noise I have heard.
5318. Mr. Ellis.] Was "Annie Laurie" the worst song you ever heard them singing? Oh dear no.
5319. Mr. Cowper.] Up to within the last three months was it not usual for them to sing all sorts of bad songs in the evening? No, not every evening, but they used to break out now and again.
5320. What songs did they sing? One was a blackguard song about "lily-white thighs"—a beastly, dirty, blackguard song; and another the "Rolling Magazine"—beastly, dirty songs.
5321. You have heard them sing those songs within the last three months? I cannot say.
5322. About that time? Yes, it may be about that time.
5323. Have you ever heard Mrs. Austin complain of Mr. and Mrs. Lucas's bad management, and say that they were cruel to the girls? I know that she came to me with a complaint at one time. 5324.

5324. State it? She came to me to know whether it was right for two or three to be beating one girl.
5325. Mr. Metcalfe.] Did she say who was doing it? I did not give her the time to say who it was. I told her that I was not the one to come to with complaints, and that she ought to go to other parties—that I did not know anything at all about it, and I did not want to know. That was the answer I made her.
5326. Mr. Cowper.] Have you ever heard her complain of the management and say it was bad? No, never.
5327. Have you ever heard her praise it up, and say that she had changed her mind? No, I have not.
5328. Have you ever seen the officers of the institution walking about the island when the men-of-war have been in the dock? I have.
5329. Who were the officers that you saw? I have seen Mrs. Rowland, Mrs. Kelly, and Mrs. Brackenregg.
5330. Have you ever seen any other people? Yes, I have seen others walking about too.
5331. Have you seen anybody else from the institution—belonging to the institution—any one from inside the fence? Oh yes.
5332. Mention whom you have seen? I have seen the superintendent's daughter, and Mrs. Barton, and the two Miss Connells.
5333. Have you ever seen any improper conduct on the part of any of these people? No, none whatever.
5334. Have you ever seen them walking with gentlemen? I have.
5335. Or were they walking singly? No, I have seen them together, two or three together.
5336. Have you ever seen any of them singly walking with gentlemen? I cannot say that I have ever seen them—one woman walking with a gentleman. I have generally seen two or more together.
5337. We have had it stated that the officers of the institution go down to the ships regularly when they are in the dock, and knock about the island at all hours and behave themselves in the most improper manner: have you ever seen anything that would lead you to suppose that this was true? No, I have not. I have seen no more than I would if I was in Sydney. I have seen nothing more on their part.
5338. Than you would see among respectable people in Sydney? Yes, take the general class of people.
5339. Have you ever taken any of them over to Balmain in a boat at night? I did take them one night.
5340. Whom did you take? Mrs. Rowland, Mrs. Kelly, and Miss Lucas.
5341. Any one else? An officer belonging to the "Blanche," I believe.
5342. Have I not always told you that your duty was outside the institution and not in it? Yes.
5343. Have I not found fault with you for going into the institution without my orders? Yes.
5344. Did I not tell you at the time that I would write to the Government about it? Yes.
5345. In everything that I have said and done with regard to the institution, have I not supported Mr. Lucas in every possible way? I believe so.
5346. Since April, 1872, do you not know that I have hardly gone into the place at all? You have gone in very seldom, I believe.
5347. Did I not tell you that I did not go in because I knew that I could do no good? Yes.
5348. And did I tell you that I thought Mr. and Mrs. Lucas were jealous of me? Yes, I recollect your saying so.
5349. Mr. Goold.] Have you heard this referred to by the officers on the island? What is that?
5350. Have you heard of any complaints being made by the officers as to Mr. Cowper's interference? I have heard no one complain of Mr. Cowper's interference whatever, except that he wanted to get Mr. Cane into Mr. Lucas's place.
5351. You have heard that? Yes, I have heard that.
5352. Mr. Ellis.] You say that you were so sore or so unwell on one occasion, in consequence of the way in which these girls treated you, that you asked to be relieved? Yes.
5353. What had they done to you? The girls kept flinging stones at me.
5354. What had you been doing to them? That was at the time of the riots there. We were trying to get them in, to put them into the dormitories and lock them up.
5355. And then they pelted stones? Yes, they smashed all the windows and all the glass on the place.
5356. Did you succeed in getting them in? We got in five or six, and while we were away with the others the first ones got out again in some way or other.
5357. Were you the only one who suffered from being pelted? No, there was another constable with me at the time.
5358. You succeeded in putting the girls in the dormitories? Yes.
5359. What is the general system of punishment adopted there? They have been locked up in the dormitories five or six together.
5360. Mr. Metcalfe.] All day long? Yes.
5361. For days? Yes, they have been punished there together for five or six days.
5362. And nights? Yes.
5363. Mr. Ellis.] Are there any beds in the dormitories when the girls are locked up in that way? No, I believe that they are only allowed blankets.
5364. They sleep on the flags? They are not allowed beds, because they set fire to them.
5365. They just lie on the flags? There is matting.
5366. Did you ever hear of a girl being put into a strait-jacket there? Yes.
5367. Were you one of those who assisted to put it on? I was.
5368. At what time was that? The last time I did so was on a Sunday morning.
5369. Did you ever hear of a girl being gagged there? I did.
5370. Was the gag put into the mouth of the girl who had the strait-jacket on? It was.
5371. Did you use any violence in putting these things on? Not a great deal of violence.
5372. Were you able to do it alone, or had you to get the assistance of others? Well, I cannot say.
5373. Mr. Metcalfe.] You do not often do such a thing? No, it was only done once.
5374. Mr. Ellis.] Did you force the gag into her mouth? I do not believe that it was put into her mouth at all—her mouth was shut.
5375. Were any attempts made to put it into her mouth? I believe it was left there for some time.
5376. In her mouth or out of it? She had her teeth closed tight.
5377. Then the gag was outside her mouth? I do not say it was; I cannot say. It is a piece of wood across like that.
5378. Did you ever know of any other instance in which a strait-jacket was put on a girl? Oh yes.

G. Turner.
15 Aug. 1873.

- G. Turner. 5379. And a gag put into her mouth? No, that was the only instance.
5380. What was the gag put into her mouth for? For cursing and swearing when she had the strait-jacket on.
5381. Did you expect that she would turn into a lamb when she was tied up like a lunatic? It was not done by my orders.
5382. Did you expect it would have a good effect? You must do something when the girls go on in that way.
5383. Do you not think that it is enough to destroy any girl's self-respect to do a thing like that to her? Well, I cannot see that it is any way out of the way cruel.
5384. Not to put a strait-jacket on a girl and a gag in her mouth? Where you cannot stop their tongues —
5385. You would put a gag then into the mouth of every girl who cannot be made to hold her tongue? Oh no.
5386. As a matter of fact, when the strait-jackets were put on those girls did they not resist violently? The first one did, but the others did not. The last one that was put in did not resist at all.
5387. Who put the strait-jackets on? The matrons.
5388. You stood looking on? Yes.
5389. While the matrons did it under Mrs. Lucas's orders? Yes.
5390. How many times have you assisted to put girls in strait-jackets? Twice, I think.
5391. Were the girls' clothes torn in the attempt? Not that I am aware of.
5392. Is it true that one of the girls had hardly any clothes on? Some of the girls had hardly any clothes on when we went in to them.
5393. Did any other police on the island ever assist to put strait-jackets on the girls? Yes, there was another constable with me.
5394. Has he ever been called upon to put them on alone? Not that I am aware of.
5395. The practice of putting strait-jackets on the girls and gagging them has been discontinued lately? Yes, it has.
5396. And do you think that the girls are the better for it or the worse? I think that the girls are better now for many reasons, the greater part of the rioty girls are away.
5397. And the very bad girls who went into the institution in the beginning are away? Yes.
5398. Are the girls who go there now of a better class? There are very few of what you may term big girls there now.
5399. From your experience as a policeman, do you think that the prison-like character of that place is calculated to lower any girls who are sent there—do you not think that they are likely to feel like prisoners? Well, I cannot give any opinion upon that.
5400. Did the place ever strike you as being nothing but a prison? It would not if I had not known it was previously.
5401. How then would you account for the cells scattered about so plentifully, and the iron doors,—would you think that they were part of a private house? No.
5402. What would you have thought then? But a stranger would not know that they were there.
5403. I am asking you what your opinion is of the place as it is now—as you know it—you say that there is nothing about the place that would make you think it was a prison? I know it is a prison.
5404. But how could any one go there and see the iron-barred windows, and the iron doors, and the aspect of the whole place, without thinking it a prison? Yes, I think that it looks like a prison.
5405. Do you think that any one can live in the place without feeling that it is a prison? They cannot help feeling it, because if it comes to that the whole island is a prison.
5406. Do you not think that these girls would be likely to have a little more self-respect if they did not feel that they were altogether prisoners? Well, some of them might.
5407. Do you not think that kindness will go further than ill treatment in reforming them? I never went into the place to interfere with them until I was sent for.
5408. I am not saying whether they are kindly treated or not, but do you not think they would be more likely to be reformed by kindness than by harsh treatment? Some would, and some would not. It is according to their disposition. There are some you might be kind to, and they would turn on you the next minute.
5409. Did Mrs. Austin ever complain to you about the big girls? I have heard her say that she could manage them best herself, but she is a woman I do not hold much conversation with.
5410. Are you on duty inside the fence? No, not in the day-time.
5411. At night? At night we go in—except on Saturday and Sunday nights.
5412. President.] How many police are stationed there? Two.
5413. Mr. Ellis.] What caused this great insurrection when the girls pelted you with stones? I cannot say. I had only been there a few days. I had never seen the like before.
5414. Did all the girls take up stones to pelt you? You could not tell, because the stones came from all quarters. If you laid hands on one girl you would get showers of stones from all quarters. You could not tell where they came from—they were pelting away in all directions.
5415. Did they pelt Mr. and Mrs. Lucas? They pelted any one who came into the yard. Any one who laid a hand on a girl to lock her up would get it.
5416. How were they fed when they were locked up? I cannot say. I had nothing to do with that. I did nothing but what Mr. Lucas told me, and I believe that they got so many days on bread and water.
5417. How was the bread and water given to them? At that great riot they were sent to gaol—seven or eight of them.
5418. What sort of gag was it that was used there? A bit of cedar wood, I suppose seven or eight inches long, with a kind of lanyard at one end and a hole at the other; those are the gags that are supplied there. It is supposed to be put in the mouth and fastened behind the head.
5419. Mr. Goold.] Fastened with string or with a strap? With a string.
5420. Mr. Cowper.] You never received any orders from me to put those things on? No.
5421. I always told you to stay outside the institution? Yes.
5422. Mr. Ellis.] Did the girl's mouth bleed when the attempt was made to put in the gag? No.
5423. How thick would the gag be? About as thick as my thumb.

5424. President.] You have never seen any improprieties by day or night in the conduct of the officers? Never. G. Turner.
15 Aug., 1873.
5425. Mr. Cowper.] You are always on duty when a ship is in dock? Yes.
5426. President.] And you have seen nothing objectionable in their conduct in a moral point of view? Nothing whatever.

Henry Glassington, Water Police constable, called in and examined:—

Glassington.
15 Aug., 1873.
5428. How long have you been stationed there? Eighteen months.
5429. Do you reside on the island? Yes.
5430. Inside the enclosure or outside? Outside.
5431. What state did you find the girls in as to subordination when you first went there? Very bad.
5432. Just tell us what kind of things used to happen, and what kind of things you noticed there? Cursing and swearing, and destroying the Government property. The girls were very abusive if any one spoke to them.
5433. Are they as bad now? Not quite.
5434. When did things begin to mend? About twelve months ago, I think.
5435. You observed then that the girls became more orderly? Yes.
5436. To what cause did you attribute that? Well, I found that some of the bad ones had gone away out of the place.
5437. Have you been long in the Police Force? Seven years.
5438. As a matter of experience, can you tell us whether girls who have been on the town are not harder to deal with and are not more depraved generally, even though not convicted of crime, than are young people who have been convicted of petty larcenies—do you think it is harder to reclaim a prostitute than a thief—that she is more degraded in moral character? I think so.
5439. That is your experience as a policeman? Yes, since I have been there.
5440. Do you think, from your knowledge of such characters, that it is desirable to associate these juvenile prostitutes with those who are simply wretched in their circumstances, or even those who have committed petty larcenies? No, I do not think that they should mix together.
5441. You think that the prostitutes are calculated to corrupt the others and make them worse than they are? I think so.
5442. Did you ever see any of these girls punished up there? I did.
5443. By whom? The superintendent, assisted by the matrons and the officers.
5444. In what way? By strait-jackets being put on them, and a gag—a piece of wood that goes into the mouth.
5445. How often did you see the gag used? Once.
5446. How were the girls punished usually—was there any beating? No, I never saw any. I have heard beating going on, but I never saw it.
5447. You have heard it? Yes.
5448. In what way? The superintendent has been inside the dormitory, and I have been outside in the square, and I have heard the cuts with the cane.
5449. How often have you heard that? I think on two occasions.
5450. Did the girl scream? No.
5451. How many blows were given? Perhaps half a dozen—six or eight.
5452. Did you ever see a girl going about with a black eye? Yes.
5453. Do you know how she came by that black eye? No, I do not.
5454. Do you know her name? I do not.
5455. How do you suppose they got black eyes? By fighting among themselves, I think.
5456. Have you ever seen any improprieties between the matrons of the institution and the officers of ships in the dock? No.
5457. By day or night? No.
5458. Are you on duty at night? Yes, up till half-past 9, and from that to 10 o'clock at night.
5459. Where? Walking round the island, sometimes inside the fence and sometimes outside. One man is inside and one outside, walks round the island.
5460. If it has been represented to us that these matrons are constantly about the island at night, and going about with the officers of the ships of war, is that true—have you seen anything of the kind? I have not. I have not seen any disorderly conduct on the part of the officers. I have seen them talking to the officers when they have landed from the steamer in the daylight, but it was never for me to interfere with them. There was no disorderly conduct whatever.
5461. Have you ever seen anything that you consider imprudent, unbecoming, and improper in their conduct? No.
5462. You have seen the matrons talking to the officers, when they have landed from the steamer? Yes, in the day-time; I have not seen the matrons with the officers at night-time.
5463. Not under any circumstances? No.
5464. And when they have been together in the day-time, they have casually met, I suppose? Yes, they have passed the time of day to one another, and then each has gone their own road.
5465. You have not seen them sitting about on the grass or on the rocks with the officers, or anything of that kind? No.
5466. Or sitting down at all together? No.
5467. Mr. Cowper.] Have you ever seen any of them walking singly with an officer? No.
5468. You cannot be mistaken about that? No.
5469. When the ships are in dock you are always on duty? I am.
5470. And particularly at night, watching lest the sailors should try to get over the fence? Yes, I am.
5471. Have you heard the girls use any bad language lately? Yes.
5472. What have you heard? Yesterday morning, or the morning before yesterday—Wednesday morning—I was in a boat, and there was a girl in the boat, and there was an expression made use of by

- Henry Glassington. one of the girls on the island. She said, "Glassington, you short-a—— b——." That was the expression.
- 15 Aug., 1873. 5473. Was there anything else? No.
5474. What was the reason for her saying this? I do not know what was the reason, without it was because I was bringing back a girl that had bolted, and they had a down on me for that.
5475. Mr. Ellis.] Was it the girl who escaped the other day? No, it was another girl.
5476. Mr. Cowper.] It was the girl who escaped to Lane Cove, was it not? Yes.
5477. Who had bolted that morning? Yes.
5478. Just state the circumstances under which that girl got away? I was on the wharf about half-past 7 o'clock on Wednesday morning, meeting the steamer from Sydney, and I saw a girl sitting on the rocks. She was dressed respectably, and she came to go away in the steamer, and I knew her directly as a girl belonging to the place. I said, "What are you doing here?" and she said, "Mr. Glassington, I am at service." I said, "How long have you been at service?" and she said, "A fortnight." I said, "Where?" She said, "Up the river"; mentioning some person's name up the river. I said, "Where have you been all night?" and she said, "I stayed up at Mrs. Connell's." Mrs. Connell happened to be looking down to where we were standing, and I thought that it was all right, and so I let her go on board the steamer. I then ran up the hill and asked Mrs. Connell about it, and found that it was wrong, and that the girl had got away from the place. I got information where she was, and manned the boat and found her up at Hunter's Hill.
5479. What time did you bring her back? About twenty minutes past 9 o'clock.
5480. Where was the girl standing who used the bad language to you? Outside the laundry.
5481. Was she one of the girls on the laundry at the time? Yes, I think so.
5482. President.] When you went into the institution and reported this, did they not know that the girl was gone? No.
5483. Whom did you see? The superintendent.
5484. What took place? I saw the superintendent and told him, and he would scarcely believe it. I said—"You had better look and see if the girl is there"; and he asked his daughter where Sarah B—— was, and whether she was gone, and the daughter said—"No, father, she is in the kitchen"; and then they searched the house and found that she was gone.
5485. Mr. Ellis.] Have you ever had any complaints about the caning of the girls? No, I have not.
5486. Have you any reason to believe that caning takes place frequently? No, I do not think so.
5487. Did it ever take place frequently? Not that I am aware of. I have heard it myself on two occasions—that is all.
5488. Have you ever assisted to put the girls into strait-jackets? Yes, I did assist once.
5489. Did you ever assist to gag a girl? I did.
5490. From what you know of the place, do you think that the girls there are more likely to be reformed by kindness than by harsh coercive treatment? I think myself that a little more discipline would be better than what there is.
5491. You think it would be desirable to have a stricter discipline? Yes, I think so.
5492. But not any more punishment? No.
5493. Are you on duty inside the fence at night? Yes, from 7 o'clock till half-past 9.
5494. Have you ever heard the girls singing in their dormitories? Yes, I have.
5495. What kind of songs do they sing? About twelve months ago they used to sing those riotous songs, as they call them—songs which they made up amongst themselves.
5496. Were they immoral songs? Yes.
5497. Were they really very bad? They were.
5498. Were the girls ever punished for singing these bad songs? I cannot say whether they were ever punished or not.
5499. In passing round those dormitories at night, could you not look into them through the iron bars in the windows? Yes, into two of them—not into all.
5500. Mr. Gould.] Have you ever seen the matrons waving their handkerchiefs to the officers of the ships? No.
5501. On no occasion? No; I have seen them standing and looking in the direction of the shipping, but I have never seen them waving.
5502. Have you heard any remarks made among the officers of the institution about their doing so? Yes, I have heard Mr. Prior remark it, and also I have heard the superintendent remark about the matrons doing so.
5503. Would you be likely to see it if it had been done? I think so; for we are continually round about the dock when there is a ship in there.
5504. And you never saw it? No, I never saw the matrons do anything of the kind.
5505. Mr. Ellis.] Did Mrs. Austin ever make any complaints to you about the girls in the laundry? What, about their bad conduct?
5506. Yes? No.
5507. Mr. Cowper.] Did she ever complain to you about the management of the place? Yes.
5508. Have you not heard her complain continually of Mrs. Lucas? Yes, I have heard her.
5509. Mr. Ellis.] What did she say? Complained about Mrs. Lucas abusing her for not keeping the girls in the laundry.
5510. Mr. Cowper.] Have you ever heard her say that Mrs. Lucas was very bad-tempered? I have.
5511. Have you heard her express an intention of reporting her to the Colonial Secretary? No, I have never heard that.
5512. Have you seen quarrels among the officers? I have.
5513. Of what kind? Disputes about punishing the girls—some are for punishing them more than others are.
5514. Have these disputes taken place before the girls? No, but within hearing of them.
5515. Did the persons disputing raise their voices so high that the children could hear them? Yes.
5516. They had regular wrangles? Yes, the same as three or four persons will be when they are disputing together. I have seen Mrs. Lucas very excited about things of that sort.
5517. Is she an excitable woman? She is.
5518. Do you recollect in June, 1872, Lizzie D—— telling Mrs. Brackenregg that she would do as she liked—that she did not care for her? Yes, I brought the girl up myself.
- 5519.

5519. Have you heard the girls impudent at other times to the officers? I have.
5520. Often? Yes, often.
5521. Can you mention any instances? Yes. I remember once a girl telling Mrs. Lucas "she would see her b——d before she would go."
5522. President.] Was she punished? I cannot say. I think not. We generally used to hear outside when a girl was punished, and I do not think she was punished for that.
5523. Mr. Goold.] In your opinion, should she have been punished? Yes, I think so.
5524. Mr. Cowper.] Do you not think that it is the passing over instances of this kind that causes the insubordination? Yes, that is my opinion.
5525. And the improper behaviour? Yes, that is my opinion.
5526. Do you not think that the visits of the ladies and the clergymen and others to the girls on Sundays have had a very beneficial effect on the girls? Yes, I think so. I attend divine service myself on Sunday, and the girls are very orderly there; they conduct themselves very well.
5527. Do you go there every Sunday? Every other Sunday.
5528. Were you ever there when the person who was reading the service told them that he would go out if they were not good? No. When I say that I go every other Sunday, I mean when there is no ship in dock. I do not go when there is a ship in dock.
5529. Mr. Ellis.] Do you think it would be possible to establish an institution of the kind in such a place? Yes.
5530. You think it would be possible? I do, by making some alterations in the place.
5531. What alterations would you make? By shutting the dock right out.
5532. Could a wall be built to do that? Yes.
5533. Do you not think that the whole character of the place is that of a prison, and is calculated to lessen the self-respect of any girl sent to it? I cannot say it is myself. I never heard any remark passed about the place by those in it.
5534. Could you go over it yourself without being struck by its prison-like appearance? Certainly there is a prison-like appearance about it.

Henry
Glassington.

MONDAY, 18 AUGUST, 1873.

Members Present:—

WILLIAM CHARLES WINDEYER, ESQ., PRESIDENT.

SAMUEL GOOLD, Esq. | MICHAEL METCALFE, Esq.
CHARLES COWPER, JUN., Esq.

Mr. Frederick Cane, Superintendent, Government Asylum for Imbeciles, Newcastle, called in and examined:—

5535. Mr. Cowper.] You held the appointment of clerk and storekeeper in the Industrial School at Biloela and at Newcastle, some time ago? I did.
5536. What was your salary? £120 a year.
5537. Had you anything else? No.
5538. No other allowance? Yes, quarters and rations.
5539. What was the date of your appointment? February, 1868.
5540. And when did you leave the institution? I left in March—the latter end of March, 1871.
5541. Was it not 1872? Yes, it was 1872.
5542. Why did you leave? I had another appointment.
5543. This Commission has been appointed by the Government to inquire into the management of the Public Charities of this Colony, particularly those receiving aid from the Government; and we would like you to point out the defects, if any exist, in your opinion, in the management of the Industrial School at Biloela; we would like to receive any recommendations you may have to make with reference to the improvement of that institution in the future? I shall be happy to afford any information that I can give.
5544. Was the Industrial School at Newcastle a success at first? When I received the appointment it was in a fair state, but there was a little irritation in consequence of the girls—some of them—having their hair cut off.
5545. Mr. Metcalfe.] You did not go down when the school was first established? No; it was established in August.
5546. And you went down? In the February following.
5547. Mr. Goold.] To Newcastle? Yes.
5548. Mr. Cowper.] You were saying something about there being a little irritation? Yes. There was some time previously an attempt at escape—two girls had, I think, escaped, and on being brought back their hair was cut off, and there was some irritation among the girls in consequence. Then that subsided, and for some time afterwards the school was not all that could be wished, but in a very fair state. I may mention that the first report of the Inspector of Charities would give an exact idea of the state of the institution at that time—the first report of the Inspector of Charities, Mr. Walker. (See Appendix M.)
5549. How long did that state of things continue? I think that it lasted March, April, May—for about three months.
5550. And how many officers were there in the institution at that time? The matron-superintendent, Mrs. King, the superintendent, Mrs. Rice, and myself, and Mrs. Kelly, the teacher, who went to the institution in the first instance, when it was opened.
5551. How many girls were there in the school? About eighty, if my recollection is correct; I think about that number.
5552. Was the discipline of the school then what you would consider perfect? I considered it very fair. There was no trouble and no disturbance.

Mr. F. Cane.

5553.

- Mr. F. Cane. 5553. Can you give us the history of the school after that? There was afterwards a change. At first there were few officers in the institution; in fact, it was never more comfortable than when there were fewer officers in it; with the increase of the officers I do not think that the efficiency of the school increased. 18 Aug., 1873.
5554. Mr. Goold.] How many were there? There were four officers altogether.
5555. Mr. Cowper.] You were going to give us a history of the school? As far as I can recollect the salient points, there was this change, I think, in the conduct pursued towards the girls: punishments became more frequent, and greater notice was taken of small things. This caused an irritation, which increased in intensity and force, until finally it culminated in the great disturbance of the 9th of July, 1868. There is a book that was kept previous to this—a book about half this size (referring to Journal of daily occurrences)—in which was entered a daily record of the cases of the girls who were punished, and you would see there the absence of any punishments for about three months; it was more of a domestic institution then.
5556. Mr. Metcalfe.] More of a home? Yes, I think so.
5557. Mr. Cowper.] When did they commence cutting off the girls' hair and putting them in the cells? Just before my going. I think you remember Mr. Parkes making a complaint. It was the first commencement of a serious disturbance. Those children never did any good in the school whose hair was cut off; they lost all self-respect, and that accounts for the punishments that continued at various intervals. You cannot understand the present state of things without going back to the formation of the institution; as the punishments were intensified, so the girls became more degraded and more troublesome.
5558. Were the girls destructive there? Not in the first instance.
5559. But afterwards? Yes, the girls afterwards became reckless.
5560. Were any of the girls apprenticed? None in the first year. They had to remain in the institution for twelve months according to the Act—so that none could be apprenticed the first year. When the change I have alluded to took place—when severe punishments were enforced—I told the matron-superintendent that she would find it easy to raise the devil, but find it difficult to lay him; and that has proved to be the case. Cutting off the girls' hair was, in my opinion, the first step in the downward progress of the school. I have reason to believe it from facts which have come to my knowledge in connection with the girls who were punished in that way; you could do nothing with them afterwards in the school.
5561. Mr. Goold.] Was their hair cut short? Yes, quite short. It ruined them. I do not think that the institution ever recovered that; and when it was continued after that it was something frightful.
5562. Mr. Cowper.] The institution was in a dreadful state? Yes, from somewhere about the latter end of May, and then in June and July the punishments became frequent; every little peccadillo was noticed, and the punishments were often considerably greater than the offence deserved. The girls were confined, and were wild and thoughtless, and with such persons small offences should have been dealt with very mildly. For instance, a girl was severely punished for ringing the bell: any child would do that for mischief. I cannot with certainty state what punishment. With regard to the girls sent to this institution, I presume that it is scarcely possible to conceive a class of persons so debased; but that is their misfortune. They are brought up in an atmosphere of vice and impurity of every description, and the moral disorder is so great that it requires some time and care to eradicate it; but it can be done and it has been done.
5563. Did clergymen and ladies ever visit the institution at Newcastle? Yes; Mr. Selwyn did.
5564. Did you find that the girls were much benefited by this? I believe that the visits of persons of various persuasions did good—there is no doubt of it. There is no doubt that any respectable person taking an interest in the girls would have a good effect on them; no person of refinement and education could go in there without producing a good effect upon those girls; they are very sensible of refinement.
5565. Did people there take the girls into their service? Yes; Mr. Selwyn, the clergyman, and others did. One of Mr. Selwyn's congregation actually would not call upon him because he took a servant out of the institution.
5566. The institution was eventually removed from Newcastle to Cockatoo Island, or as it is called, Biloela? It was.
5567. President.] You came with it from Newcastle? I came with it; but I think, if you will allow me, a little further information with regard to the institution at Newcastle will best explain the sequence. After that the matron-superintendent was superseded and we had Captain Clarke, who after a time carried on the same system of — 5568. Punishment? No; for a time the school was quiet; after that there were severer measures adopted, and they resulted in the same way.
5569. Mr. Goold.] You were there before Captain Clarke? Yes.
5570. Mr. Metcalfe.] Mr. Jackson was there first, was he not? Yes, and he was a very worthy man—it is a pity that he did not remain there.
5571. Mr. Cowper.] You were going to say something as to the state of things under Mr. and Mrs. Clarke? Yes; Mr. and Mrs. Clarke pursued a course of considerable attention and kindness to the girls for some little time, but again severer punishments were resorted to, and then offences became frequent again.
5572. Mr. Metcalfe.] At whose instance were these punishments inflicted? The superintendent's. I may observe that most of the officers were opposed to these punishments. When Mr. Lucas took charge of the place it was in the most deplorable state. The girls had gutted the whole building. Mr. Lucas came into a bad inheritance. There were several girls whose hair was cut, several riots had taken place, and the buildings were much damaged; but notwithstanding all that, those girls, when removing to Biloela, in three days packed up the whole of the property of that institution, took everything down, and put it on the carts themselves. We had very little extra assistance in removing the furniture—the girls did it all; and they assisted in taking the things from the wharf to the school. They are very peculiar children. There are two things that they never lose, and those are wit and courage. It is very rarely that by the most severe punishments their courage has been broken. Severe punishments did more harm than good. I never knew a girl whose hair had been cut off who in any way was manageable in the school. It was impossible to elevate her—it was impossible to restore in her a spirit of self-respect—it was gone; and when once a man or woman loses moral power over those girls, he or she may just as well walk out of the place.
5573. Mr. Cowper.] Have you anything more to say with regard to the institution at Newcastle? No, I think not.
5574. Eventually the institution was removed to Biloela? Yes, it was.
5575. Did the state of things which you have described continue afterwards? Not immediately.

5576. How long was the place quiet? Well, I can hardly say how long. It was not quiet for a very long time, but for some time it was.
5577. President.] Did any change take place after a short time? Yes, a great change.
5578. Of what character? The girls were more violent, destructive, insubordinate, and abusive.
5579. Did you see any cause for that? Well, no; except the entire absence of any moral influence over the girls, there was none whatever—not the slightest.
5580. Then, in your opinion, was the system of management injudicious? The system of management really has little to do with it. It is the character, the deportment, the style of management—the whole character of the place. It requires a refinement, a deportment, which it is impossible to understand unless one has been among this class of people. A person cannot be too highly educated or refined for them; hence the influence of the Sisters of the Good Shepherd, who, irrespective of their religion, are refined, are educated, and must necessarily have the influence which all such persons have.
5581. Do you attribute the falling off in the conduct of the girls to a falling off on the part of the officers in that respect? There was no moral influence—it did not exist.
5582. Mr. Metcalfe.] Then the present manager was not responsible for the state of things that existed—it was before his time? It was not created by him.
5583. He carried it on? It continued in the same way. The condition of things was not changed until it culminated in most serious demoralization.
5584. President.] Was the system of punishment pursued at Biloela an injudicious one? No, they were not severe, but there was an utter want of moral control over the girls.
5585. The children were allowed to do as they liked? Yes, they did as they liked. The daily record and the weekly reports founded upon it will show that to a very large extent.
5586. Were they allowed to go into meals in the irregular way that they do now? I was not in the meal room, but I have heard that such was the case, from the officers.
5587. In what respects were the children allowed to do as they liked? In every respect. There was a want of proper respect—a proper subordination to the orders of the officers generally.
5588. Did the officers seem to act harmoniously together? No, I do not think they did, and that is a fatal blot upon any institution. There was never much working together on the part of the officers and the matron—the matron particularly. That is a fatal mistake—everything should move in harmony. Girls have a delight in setting one against the other, and marked disrespect between officers had a marked influence on the children.
5589. Have you seen that disrespect shown? Yes, in many ways there has been a failure in supporting discipline.
5590. The inferiors did not support the superiors? There was not that mutual respect that there should have been.
5591. Did this state of disorganization and of insubordination on the part of the girls continue? Yes, it continued.
5592. As long as you were there? Well no, it did not continue in such a state. It came to its worst when Mr. Cowper came to the island—it was just at its worst then.
5593. Mr. Cowper went to reside on the island? Yes, and then the state of the school was terrible. Reference to this book (the Journal of occurrences) will show that. The state of things was frightful. You may consider it so, when I tell you that on one evening when I went in to assist, the dormitory door was in flames and the girls were dancing about it in a state almost of insanity. I put out the flames myself with a bucket of water. They had pulled down a large door, taken the iron sheeting off it, and set fire to it—they got it down and then they made a bonfire inside.
5594. In the dormitory? Yes.
5595. In which they were? Yes, in which they were locked.
5596. Mr. Gould.] Which dormitory was that? No. 3.
5597. President.] Did any change take place for the better? There was a great change, but only what you might expect from the means adopted.
5598. What were the means? Instead of a mere perfunctory influence, there was an actual kindly interest manifested. It was not giving a child a tract or some lollies, but there was an absolute effort on the part of Mr. Cowper to secure the interest of a large number of persons in the welfare of these children. There was a large number of girls there who had no idea but that of getting out. Their only idea was to go back to the unfortunate life from which they had been removed, and they had determined not to take situations. I gave Mr. Cowper the list of these girls which he asked me for. (There was a letter from the Colonial Secretary which induced me to do it, otherwise it would have been highly irregular for me to do anything of the kind.) I gave him a list of these destructive girls. They were, without exception—every one of these girls—very disorderly indeed. Nearly all had been in the cells; a considerable number had been in Maitland Gaol. When I gave Mr. Cowper the list, I said that if anything could be done with those girls, then we should be in a fair way of doing something with the institution. These girls had been in all the riots—they were thoroughly hardened, utterly careless, the very scenes through which they had passed had eliminated all proper feeling from them; and I said if Mr. Cowper would obtain situations for them something might be done with the rest. Mr. Cowper then wrote a letter to the Herald newspaper and communicated with several of his friends in the country, and brought down several persons from the country to take them away. It was thought that was the proper course to pursue, for to put these girls out in the town was to return them to their old mode of life. They require to be taken away from all their old associates; even sending out two girls to a station together is fatal—quite fatal. When this was done, I thought there was some hope. This was the result of an early interview with Mr. Cowper.
5599. Mr. Cowper.] You have seen letters from these girls since they left, have you not? Yes, I have seen letters written by them and by the persons they were sent to, especially one girl, Kate H.—
5600. President.] It comes to this then, that from Mr. Cowper's exertions and through his instrumentality the most insubordinate of the girls were placed out at service? They were; it was an effort never made before for the girls in such a way.
5601. When Mr. Cowper went there, were the officials informed that they were to co-operate with him and with the superintendent for the benefit of the institution? I do not remember that they were. I think myself that Mr. Cowper was asked to meet the officers and consult with them. A meeting did take place in the office, and Mr. Cowper's views were then placed before them all.

- Mr. F. Cane. 5602. Mr. Cowper.] Was not this letter (letter produced) written by the Government? Yes, that letter was. (See Appendix M 1.) I remember that letter.
- 18 Aug., 1873. 5603. President.] Did Mr. Cowper appear there as a person officiously interfering, or was he armed with the authority of the Government? He was armed with the authority of the Government, of course. There is the letter.
5604. You remember seeing this letter at the time? Yes, I do.
5605. And you say that in pursuance of that letter Mr. Cowper met the officers generally, and a plan of action was resolved upon for the purpose of remedying the disorganization which then existed? Yes.
5606. And the result was, very soon, the advantageously placing out of the worst girls—the insubordinate? Yes.
5607. Did you find that there was an interest taken in these matters by the girls—that they became more amenable to discipline and better behaved? Yes, there was a most marked change.
5609. President.] Do you know of any other measures that were taken for the improvement of the girls and the occupation of their minds? Yes. It is in the evening when they are locked up together and before they go to sleep that they are most riotous, and when the most mischievous results are produced, from their being shut in together unemployed for so long a time.
5611. All this insubordination and riotous conduct, and the singing of obscene songs, sprang up at that time? Precisely. When they were thoroughly occupied there was little of it.
5612. What steps were taken to put an end to this evil? It was arranged that the large room should be opened—that lamps should be purchased and books should be distributed amongst the girls in the evening, and that they should thus occupy themselves. The room was accordingly opened, and large numbers of the girls attended, and there appeared to be every chance of a perfect success.
5613. Used you to attend at these meetings? I did, at particular request; it was a great inconvenience to me, of course.
5614. And Mr. Cowper too? Yes, of course.
5615. And Mr. and Mrs. Lucas? Yes, Mr. and Mrs. Lucas attended.
5616. And how did this mode of spending the evening go on? It went on very well while all were harmonious in it.
5617. While all the officers? Yes. It was arranged that the teacher should teach them fancy-work, that I should look after the amusements as far as I could, and that the rest should do the best they could.
5618. And were the girls orderly and well behaved? Yes, they were at first.
5619. They appreciated the kindness shown them? Yes. If the thing had been continued it would have been a success.
5620. Of course, the longer it was continued the more ameliorating an effect it would have? Yes, no doubt of it, especially if music could have been introduced. But it requires perfect harmony to make these things a success.
5621. How long was it continued? For some time, but not for very long successfully. For instance, all the fancy-work and crochet that Mrs. Kelly arranged to have done was set aside, and Mrs. Lucas introduced the sewing of frocks, which of course merely reproduced the work of the work-room.
5622. Mr. Metcalfe.] That was no relaxation? There was no relaxation or amusement in that—it was only continuing the work of the day.
5623. Mr. Cowper.] The girls wished to do their frocks at first, did they not; and then, when it was continued, they lost all interest in it? Yes. That was a mistake. I do not know that the girls expressed a wish that they might make their frocks—it might have been so; but it was a mistake to introduce the work of the day. I should think so in the case of my own children.
5624. President.] The object was to make this place look like a home? Yes; when once it lost the domestic appearance it was done for.
5625. How did this evening school finally break up? The girls gradually lost interest in it. Mrs. Kelly, for instance, finding herself set aside, never went there any more. There was, in fact, no necessity for her to go. She did not want to have to do with the sewing of frocks, so she gave it up. I continued for some time afterwards, but thought that it was better to leave it.
5626. Mr. Cowper.] Were not the girls allowed to sit on the tables and do all sorts of irregular things? Yes, there were all sorts of irregularities.
5627. In point of fact, those girls who wished to enjoy themselves could not do so? I thought so from what I saw of it.
5628. President.] How long was it carried on? For some months—for some little time; I really do not know how long.
5629. Months or weeks? A few weeks.
5630. And after these evenings were given up the girls were remitted to the darkness of the dormitories again? Precisely so; and that brings me back again to the commencement. When first amusements were introduced in Newcastle I used to assist the matron in giving entertainments. They were quite successful. The girls took part in singing. Many of them had excellent voices, and sang really well. But the moment that punishments of a degrading character were inflicted, that moment the influence of that officer over the children was gone. There the profoundest principles of patience should be carried out to the fullest extent. I could give a remarkable instance of that. There was a girl—a servant to me—a smart, clever little girl. Her name was M—, and her father was confined in gaol in consequence of a riot riot in which he had stabbed a man. She was in the kitchen, and was put out about something, and used Mr. F. Cane. some very bad language. I said to her—"I have a little daughter, and I should not like her to hear that language;" and the girl said—"Now, Mr. Cane, I shall never use that language again"—and she never did. 18 Aug., 1873.

5631. In point of fact, half these children are brought up in the idea that they are the natural enemies of decent society, and in a state of antagonism to it? Yes; and when they are punished in this way it confirms them in that idea. Would you allow me to say one thing—there is one evil of such a character that I will defy any institution to succeed while it exists. Girls are taken reeking out of Chinese dens and put into a dormitory with thirty other girls, who regale them with all their horrible experiences, until they are worked into a perfect fever. That is a fatal defect. There is no means of keeping a girl separate from the less degraded ones. There is no place where you can put such a girl so as to prevent her contaminating the others; but she is placed at once, within half an hour of her arrival in the institution, in the midst of the girls already there.*

5632. Mr. Metcalfe.] That is the case? It is so still, I presume.

5634. Did it appear to you that there was an indisposition on the part of the superintendent to co-operate with Mr. Cowper, and that he resented the giving of any authority to Mr. Cowper? I always thought that it was a mistake on the part of the superintendent not to co-operate and let Mr. Cowper assist him. I fear—and I say it without prejudice—that there was a want of co-operation on the part of the matron with Mr. Cowper.

5635. Did you see anything in Mr. Cowper's demeanour to Mr. Lucas which was likely to create a desire not to co-operate? I saw nothing in Mr. Cowper's conduct but an earnest desire to assist Mr. Lucas to the fullest extent. The first words he said to me were "Nothing must be done without Lucas's consent." That was the basis of his operations, and I do not think that he deviated from it in one single instance. I did regret very much—for the sake of the children, for it was nothing to me, except on their account, as I was not going to stop there long—that Mr. Cowper's efforts were not received with more heartiness and cordiality. I had apprenticed to me two girls, and took them with my family to Newcastle.

5636. In your service? Yes. One finished her apprenticeship, and went to her grandmother, and the other will make a first-class servant. They were perhaps two of the unlikely class to succeed with in the institution—the latter especially. I took her because she was of the most neglected class. She was so stupid and useless in the institution that she was only able to clean earth-closets, and that was the work that she did.

5637. What is she now? An apprentice, and at the expiry of her time will make a fair general servant.

5639. President.] Do you think it is expedient to have girls of the town in an institution of this kind at all? I do, if there is a proper course adopted; it is the only means of doing good to them.

5640. Do you think it would be possible to keep so far apart from the other children in such an institution as to prevent contamination? Yes, I do. I think that means could be adopted to do it. I have noticed little difference between the younger and the elder girls, as far as knowledge of evil is concerned. The younger girls are the worst as regards the absolute want of moral training, and there are often children who have been brought up in brothels and houses of an infamous description. I used to endeavour to obtain the history of some of them. There was one little girl about fourteen years old who taught me more about Vagrant Acts, and the difference between larceny and vagrancy, than I ever knew before. These girls are worse than the elder ones. I believe that, under suitable arrangements, it is possible to save them, and that good might be done.

5641. President.] Do you not think that the associations of Biloela and the character of the building are such as render the place unsuitable for such an institution? I very much regret their leaving Newcastle. I think above all places it was the proper place for them. I do not think that Biloela was a proper place for them, whatever it might have been made. I think that it might be made a nice place, notwithstanding its associations, for its associations do not matter much to them, who have been brought up in the most horrible places.

5643. Do you not think that the proximity of the institution to the dock was an evil? Yes, that was a most serious error and drawback. The presence of a number of sailors belonging to the ships could not be beneficial, and may have a very bad effect upon them; but in the absence of any moral influence that would be of little consequence. Nothing could be done with them by violent measures. You might wall the place up and line it with iron, and you could not subdue them. You cannot subdue them by violent measures; they bear confinement better than men. I have known them take fourteen days in the cells, and come out prepared for another. The whole thing was a mistake.

5644. Have you ever seen exhibitions of temper on the part of the superintendent and Mrs. Lucas before the children? Mrs. Lucas was a woman of a very irascible temper. I have seen exhibitions of temper on her part, on one occasion when Mr. Cowper was present.

5645. Mr. Cowper.] Did you not on one occasion see Mr. Lucas obliged to put Mrs. Lucas out of the office for her violence towards me? Yes.

5646. President.] Was she violent in her language? Very loud.

5647. To Mr. Cowper? Yes.

5648. After he had come to the place armed with authority as you have said? Yes.

* NOTE (on revision):—There should be separate apartments for such girls on entering the school.

- Mr. F. Cane. 5649. Mr. Goold.] Were there any of the children present? No; it was in the office.
5650. President.] Was corporal punishment inflicted at all upon the island? Yes.
- 18 Aug., 1873. 5651. By whom? The superintendent.
5652. What with? I have seen it done with a cane, and I have heard of strait-jackets having been used, and a gag.
5653. To what extent have you seen the cane used? The superintendent generally carried a cane with him. I have seen it used once in the dormitory when there was a disturbance there; but I was unable to judge at all times of the extent to which it was used, because I was always in the store and in the office, and did not see the proceedings among the girls. However, I saw a girl on this occasion struck with the cane. I have only heard of girls having been caned on other occasions.
5654. Was it after the girls had retired to bed that the cane was used? Yes, it was in the dormitory.
5655. Tell us the circumstances? The girls were creating a great disturbance in the dormitory (I do not know whether they had made a fire there or not, but I think they had), and of course there was great irritation and provocation—there is no doubt about that—and the girls were struck.
5656. More than once? Yes, Mr. Lucas cut at them as they passed by him.
5657. Did he strike more than one? Yes; the girl I had was struck, and I do not think that she had been creating a disturbance. I do not think that she had the sense.
5659. President.] Did you keep a journal of daily events? Yes, a daily record of events. (Journal of occurrences produced.) This is the book.
5660. Do you do that as part of your official duties? Yes, I was requested to do so. I obtained this book upon the request of Mr. Parkes. I did not keep it in the first instance, but when the change took place I immediately adopted this book, and it was kept up by Mr. Clarke, who kept it himself, and then I kept it.
5661. Did you enter in it such circumstances as you chose to enter? I entered them as they were recited to me by Mr. Lucas, who did not sign that book, though he signed the weekly report which was made up from that book.
5662. Used you to enter the punishments? Yes, I did that—I was bound to do that.
5663. By what were you bound to do it? By the rules; I think that the rules said so. There is a book in which they were entered particularly.
5664. Mr. Goold.] You refer to another book besides this one? Yes, a book kept previously to this.
5665. Where is that? It is in the office. It was the case book of punishments.
5666. President.] Can you account for there being no entry in the Journal of occurrences from January to May? In which year?
5667. In 1872? Yes, I think I can.
5668. There is no entry for 1872 until May? That is accounted for by the fact that I was not in the office at the time. I was not in the office with Mr. Clarke, but simply in my own quarters, engaged with the store books mostly and the books of the institution. This book was kept by Mr. Clarke, and then I was not in the office for some time after Mr. Lucas went there. Mr. Lucas made a complaint that I did not assist him in putting down some disorder that arose among the girls. There is a proviso in the rules that I was not to assist unless requested by the superintendent to do so, and as I was not requested I did not do so. I think that in this book you will find a perfect history of all transactions that took place in the institution, and they were understated rather than overstated, and I always read them to Mr. Lucas. Here is a record of all the proceedings of the girls when the police went to the island.
5669. When you were storekeeper, did you keep any record of the goods which were delivered out of the store? Yes, I did.
5670. Did you make an entry of each issue? Yes.
5671. Suppose that you issued so many bars of soap, did you enter them? All were entered in the daily stock-book, but the rations were always sent in daily or weekly, so that we could not exceed the quantity. I got no more than the quantity.
5672. As to other things—for instance, take the article soap? The soap was issued from the store, but there was a requisition for it sent in, I think, every week.
5673. Then the girls did not simply go into the store and ask for it and take it away, without producing any authority to receive it? Never. I never issued things to the girls. The only persons to whom I issued soap was the laundress and the superintendent of course, and then I always issued it in a regular manner.
5674. Mr. Goold.] Did you make an entry in a book of what you issued? Yes, I did. The rations I could not make a mistake in. The article of soap was one of those things which were not in the ration, but I issued them all.
5675. President.] Then if there is no book kept in the store showing the issue of these articles other than rations, that is a departure from the system which was in vogue when you were storekeeper? Yes. With regard to soap and matches I cannot say. I do not know whether there was any regular record kept of articles of that kind—I am not certain.
5676. Mr. Metcalfe.] Candles and oil—did you enter them? Candles were little used in Newcastle; gas was in use. At Biloela the matrons usually drew the quantity required. The extra soap was usually drawn by the laundress.
5677. Mr. Metcalfe.] You issued to any person who brought you a proper order? Yes. I never issued to the girls unless they were properly credited.
5678. President.] Did you keep any account of the quantity of fuel consumed? I could not keep an account of the quantity of fuel consumed daily; I used to issue it in Newcastle, where we could weigh it out, for there we had a yard; but at Biloela there was no means of securing it.

5679. In your time was there the same quantity of fuel consumed in summer as in winter? No. I do not think that there was a large difference, but I can easily tell by the vouchers. Mr. F. Cane.
5680. Did you not hand over a stock-book to the person who succeeded you? Oh yes. 18 Aug., 1873.
5681. Who was the person that succeeded you? Mr. Prior. I had not quite finished the stock-book; but it is there, with all accounts made up of all the articles issued.
5682. And if the storekeeper has said that he had no list of the stock on hand given to him when he took possession? He took stock with me; I counted the stock over to him in a proper business-like manner.
5683. Mr. Metcalfe.] Did you take a duplicate? No, I did not. The stock was there—everything was there.
5684. President.] Supposing that a quantity of linen was required, or was issued, who would get it? The matron or house-matron would come for it.
5685. Who would give the order for the issue? The matron or house-matron would come for it, and then when the things were made up I would get the quantities brought into the store, from which the articles would be issued from time to time. That was the course from the time I went there.
5686. Mr. Couper.] Did Mr. Brennand examine the books before you left? Yes, and everything that was in the place; and he was satisfied with them; he said that it was one of the best kept stocks that he ever saw. He looked over the whole of the books and the whole of the stock, and he said that it was the best kept stock, and the books were well kept. The Inspector of Charities always examined my books too.
5687. President.] Suppose that you sent away a quantity of leather to the "Vernon," would you make an entry of it? Yes, I made an entry of every piece of washing, as my books will show. They have been examined for years.
5688. Mr. Metcalfe.] The ordinary washing? No, the washing for the "Vernon."
5689. Mr. Couper.] But did you enter the leather sent to the "Vernon" to be made into boots and shoes? No, I never did that. No leather was sent from us. The Inspector of Charities was so satisfied with his examination of my books that I thought I was perfectly safe.
5690. Did you apply for the appointment of superintendent when Mr. Lucas received it? Never. I was appointed to the Reformatory up there at Newcastle by Sir Charles Cowper; but there was no Reformatory established (I refer to a Reformatory for Boys); and Sir Charles Cowper sent a letter down and said my services would not be required after 1871. I was to have had the Reformatory for Boys, and I was to have had all the young rascals out of the gaols. I should have been glad to have had them; but Mr. Cowper went out of office without providing for me, and so I kept my place as storekeeper, which I had some difficulty in keeping.
5691. If it has been said that you applied for the office and were disappointed in not getting it, is that true? It is perfectly untrue. My only object, from the time that I entered the place until the time I left it, was to assist those unfortunate children.
5692. When I first went into the institution did I not tell you that I had heard of this being said? Yes; and you said to me, in your usual familiar style—you said to me—"Mr. Cane, it is useless for you to think of having the charge of this institution." I will tell you the exact words that you used. You said "Whatever is done must be done with a view to assist Mr. Lucas." Those were your words. I should have been a bold man to take the place then.
5693. Did I not tell you that it would be better for every one in the institution to try and gain individual credit, than to allow the institution to remain such a disgrace to the Country and to the people as it was then? Yes; it was only upon these terms, you are aware, I went out of my way to assist; you know that I —
5694. I was living on the island for some time, was I not, before I went in at all? Yes.
5695. And I only went in then on the occasion of a riot, and to prevent the destruction of Government property? Yes.
5696. And when all the officers of the "Vernon" had been sent for, and when it became necessary for me to send my son to Sydney to bring up the Water Police? Yes, I remember that day well.
5697. And did not Mr. Lucas then seem very ready to receive my assistance? Yes.
5698. Nobody seemed to know how to prevent these riots? No; they were at sea about the whole business.
5699. You see that I received that authority to act in December—do you remember a report which I wrote in the January of the following year? You did write a report of some kind.
5700. And I did not send in that report because, as I said to you, I did not wish to make Mr. Lucas's position more difficult than it was? Yes.
5701. Is that the report (document produced)? Yes, that is the report. (See Appendix M 2.)
5702. Is not that a correct account of the state of things which existed then? Yes.
5703. And it was out of kindness to Mr. Lucas that I did not send it in? You said so to me.
5704. You recollect that ultimately I was obliged to send in another report, couched in other terms? Yes, you told me of it, but I do not think I saw it. I saw the one you just handed to me, but not the other, I think.
5705. Do you think that when you left the institution there was any difficulty in managing the girls, if the manager were a person who understood it, and had any idea of managing them at all? No, I think that the great bulk of the girls might have been managed—I think so. All those who were the original ring-leaders—that is an unfortunate expression to use, but it is the only one I can use—had gone out. This is a list of those who were in all the disturbances, and they were got rid of. I left the place with great hope. I left it more comfortable with regard to the institution. I thought that it would have worked well.
5706. There were only a few girls who took part in these riots? Yes, a very few. They were all small children nearly—the numbers of the refractory were so reduced, you see.
5707. Do you remember the riot which took place when the American sailors entered the enclosure—do you recollect on that occasion that the girls were quiet, with the exception of those in one dormitory? Yes, they were.
5708. Showing how much they were improved? Yes. There was a great change for the better. Had it been carried out there would have been no trouble. Had I the management of such an institution, I should hail with delight any one who came to assist me.
5709. Previous to that the little girls and the big girls all joined in singing bad songs, and staying awake all night? Yes; I have seen the little girls fetching ammunition for the big girls to destroy the windows, in July, 1868—a perfectly organized military arrangement.

- Mr. F. Cane. 5710. Used not Mrs. Lucas to take the letters coming to the institution to the superintendent and open them? They were taken to their private residence and opened there.
- 18 Aug., 1873. 5711. And did you not hear the contents of those letters from the girls before you saw the letters themselves? Frequently; I have often heard the contents of official letters before the letters themselves came to the office. Sometimes they remained at Mr. Lucas's private residence for days.
5712. Was not that against the rules? No, I do not think so.
5713. You were responsible for the letters, were you not? Yes, when once they were in my possession I was, but I had nothing further to do with them. I could not control Mr. Lucas.
5714. Did not Mr. Halloran tell you that such a proceeding was highly irregular? No, I do not think so.
5715. Mr. Gould.] Were these letters addressed to you? No, they were always addressed to the superintendent.
5716. President.] Is it the fact that Mr. Lucas is so illiterate that he cannot write his own reports in that Daily Record book? He never did so.
5717. Do you believe that to be the reason why he did not? That is rather a difficult thing for me to say.
5718. Mr. Cowper.] Is that a sample of his writing (document produced)? Yes, this is a sample of Mr. Lucas's writing. (See Appendix M 3.)
5719. President.] Is the document produced in his handwriting? Yes, it is.
5720. And is that the usual character of his writing, both as regards the spelling and the writing? Yes, it is.
5721. Mr. Metcalfe.] That is a fair sample of his writing? Yes, it is.
5722. Mr. Cowper.] Did you not feel hurt at having a man put over you who was so evidently ignorant? Yes. I should have left the place immediately if I could have afforded to have done so. I had with Mr. Lucas some hope of being useful to the girls.
5723. Did you ever hear of Mrs. Austin complaining of the bad management of the place, and of Mrs. Lucas's bad temper and demeanour? She complained of Mrs. Lucas's bad temper, and came to the office to report her on one occasion.
5724. She complained to you repeatedly, did she not? Yes, I think she did complain on several occasions.
5725. Do you think that the statements of any of the girls could be received as reliable? Not in the slightest degree; you can get their statements of any colour you please; there is not the least reliance to be placed upon them.
5726. What reasons have you for coming to this conclusion? Why, almost daily I saw instances of their untruthfulness.
5727. Mr. Metcalfe.] They have no regard for truth? Not the slightest; and any person who put them forward as witnesses must have some reason for doing so. On one occasion they were in the cells, and they communicated the most outrageous things about the officers in order to get out of the cells. They are lost to everything in the way of truth. It would be an insult for any person to wish them to be put forward who knew them.
5728. Do they mend at all in that respect when they come into the institution? It is like all these moral disorders—a long standing disease has to be cured by a long process. I have known persons cured of it, but only by a long course of time. These disorders are moral, and require persons who treat them to know the diagnosis of the human mind, and the idiosyncracies of the human mind when it has grown up surrounded by impurities. These girls should be surrounded by persons of good moral power, and even then it would take long to cure them.
5729. Mr. Cowper.] I understand you to say that you are much opposed to severe punishments? Very much. They are always useless—they only tend to degrade the girls and make them infinitely worse.
5730. Do you not think that at the time of these riots at Biloela, about September, 1871, that some extreme measures were necessary to prevent the destruction of Government property at that time? Considering that there was no moral influence to keep them in order. It was absolutely necessary to keep them from doing damage to the property, but that the place should have got into that state of disorder was an outrageous thing. I think that all punishments in these institutions should be the absence of rewards rather than the infliction of penalties. They are as amenable to that as to other things, and such severe punishments as were then resorted to were necessary to restore order and prevent the destruction of property. As a principle, I think that punishment is most inoperative and dangerous, and to be deprecated; I knew none to be any the better for it.
5731. Did you ever hear girls request that they might not be returned to their mothers, but be sent to situations, as, if they went back among their old associates it would be fatal to them? Yes, that was a matter of daily occurrence.
5732. That was after they began to take situations? Yes.
5733. Mr. Metcalfe.] Did you see much of the girls? Yes, I did see a good deal of them. I was the clerk of the institution, and I had to do all the writing, and nothing whatever occurred in the place that I did not hear of. Everything must pass through the office; and when any inquiries were held, I was there to take down any particulars—there was no one else to do it. My position was not a very pleasant one. Under the matron's supervision it was much better, because I was then a sort of secretary, and was frequently consulted as to matters for some time.
5735. President.] In what way? Disrespect from one officer to another. A high moral tone is required there, and if it is not kept up the thing will fail.
5736. Do you mean disrespect from the higher officers to the lower ones? Yes. There should be the profoundest respect paid to every officer. I have never known the inferior officers there to be guilty of disrespect. There is one officer there who has never lost influence in that institution, and that is the teacher.
5737. Mrs. Kelly? Yes.

5738. Did you form a high opinion of her? Yes, I did.

5739. Do you believe her capable of loose conduct? No, particularly incapable of it. She is a very different class of person. If it was only her affection for her late husband, that would be quite sufficient to keep her straight. She messed with me and Mrs. Cane for some time, and I considered her a most superior officer. I never knew her to lose her influence in the school. I never knew her to commit an indiscretion, or to associate with persons who were not of thoroughly good character.

Mr. F. Cane.
18 Aug., 1873.

5740. Mr. Cowper.] Was not that letter sent to me to take out warrants against the girls (document produced)? Yes, I remember this very well. (See Appendix M 4.)

5741. That is a true statement of the case? Yes, that is quite correct. That is a true statement sent in by Mr. Lucas—and there is his signature.

5742. In consequence of that, the superintendent did not like to ask the Government to authorize the expenditure for the establishment of the evening school? I cannot say that.

5743. But no one would ask? That is very likely.

5744. There was a general feeling that the girls would destroy them? Yes.

5745. Did I not order the things? Yes.

5746. And was not the requisition sent back with that memo. on the paper (document produced)? Yes, there was some demur to paying this—that is quite correct.

5747. And did I not write that memo. upon it? Yes. That is correct; I wrote an official letter about it. (See Appendix M 5.)

5748. Mr. Gould.] Did Mr. Lucas ever intimate to you that Mr. Cowper had interfered in the management of the institution without authority? I think that Mr. Lucas intimated that he acted without authority.

5749. Are you sure that he ever said so to Mr. Cowper—that he interfered without authority? I rather think that he did, and that that letter was the result.

5750. Did you ever notice the girls writing on the flags and on the walls indecent things respecting the matrons? Yes, grossly so.

5751. Was that frequent? Yes, it was almost daily.

5752. Did you ever notice that sort of writing in the matrons' premises? No; but I think that they would write anywhere—I do not think that any place would be sacred from them.

5753. Was any punishment awarded for that? If they could trace it.

5754. Did you ever hear the girls refuse to obey the matrons when they ordered them to do anything? Yes, I did, frequently.

5755. That was a frequent occurrence? Yes.

5756. Mr. Cowper.] Were not Mrs. Rowland and Mr. Lucas generally on friendly terms? Yes.

5757. And do you not think that Mr. Lucas was supported by the matrons generally? Yes.

5758. They were very friendly with him? Yes; and were always willing to lend him any assistance of any kind, however disagreeable. I never saw any unwillingness on the part of the inferior officers to do anything that they were ordered to do. If there had been, it must have been reported in this book.

5759. President.] They never made that complaint? No, never; and I was the only means of communication between them and the Government.

5760. You are of opinion that Mrs. Kelly bears a high moral character? Yes, the highest that any person can bear.

5761. And is incapable of levity or loose conduct? Utterly incapable. She has had the friendship of the best society in the Country. I am deeply sorry that anything has been said against her. She is a widow.

5762. Is there any suggestion that you would wish to make for the advantage of the institution? I think that with proper moral influence, which any person who is accustomed to this sort of work would have, the institution would be by no means difficult to manage. I think that there should be a house of reception, through which all girls introduced should pass before they were permitted to mix with the other girls. I think that that is absolutely necessary. Here is a girl like this, that was married—she was only seduced a week—and she was utterly saved by the institution. She was a girl of a different class to most of them. Her father came down to see her. He had to go to different parts of the country, leaving her with her relations, who did not look after her so carefully as they should have done, and she fell. There was a girl only a short time from home, is now settled in life, saved by this institution from further destruction. Her mother was dead; left to the care of friends, she fell. It is one of the most useful institutions, and can be carried out with very good results. In Ireland, in similar institutions, it is found that only 4 per cent. of the girls rescued ever go back to their original life. In France and Germany it is the same. All these institutions are successes. The little children should be kept apart from the others. Of course their early training has been bad, but they forget that, and if some line could be drawn between the two classes it would be successful. Then there is the system that is adopted at Mettray and other continental institutions. There the children have "fathers" and "mothers," as they are called. A matron, or mother, has ten, or twelve, or twenty children under her, who all call her "mother," and they have a most perfect influence over them and the most perfect control. That is where a good deal of the mischief of persons in office being jealous of persons who have influence is so bad. It is an absurd thing. That influence is bringing water to their well, and making the children comfortable and happy. I see no difficulty in managing such an institution, if proper means are taken to maintain influence and control over the children.

5763. We have been given to understand that these girls are guilty of disgusting sexual practices? Yes, I have been given to believe so. It is scarcely possible to conceive the filthy practices of some of them. It is scarcely possible to imagine the low state of demoralization that they have reached.

5764. Mr. Metcalfe.] Do you think that they ever recover? [The witness related several instances, which the Commission directed the shorthand writer to omit, for the sake of the parties concerned.]

5765. President.] I gather from your evidence that the placing out of girls as servants from the institution has been attended with success? Yes, in a great number of cases. I think that it is not difficult to work it satisfactorily.

5766. In spite of the defects of the institution, you still think that the Country should persevere in endeavouring to reclaim these girls? Yes, it is the best and the cheapest course to pursue.

5767. Despite all obstacles, a good deal of success has been attained? I do most thoroughly think so.

5768. With regard to children who are not of this degraded class—the class of children who seem more generally to go to Randwick? The neglected class?

Mr. F. Cane. 5769. Yes, the neglected children more than the degraded ones—do you see any objection to the boarding out system being applied to them? The difficulty is to find the sort of persons to take these children, from Christian motives. There was a case occurred at Plymouth. A lady there never had a servant in her family but off the streets. She had no children, and was highly educated, and whenever she wanted a servant she went out into the streets and obtained one; and there were seventeen girls whom she took out of the streets who were married. She simply went out into the streets and took the girl, and there was from that time a complete blind thrown over that girl's past existence. I believe honestly the success of the system, which could be proved by cases out of the institution, would really astonish you. [The witness here, in answer to questions put to him as to the success in after-life of girls sent out from the institution, related a number of instances, which the Commission think it inadvisable, for the sake of the girls, to publish, but which showed the good which had been effected by rescuing these girls from the previous state of life. One case was mentioned of a girl, who was since married, who has a large sum of money at her disposal, and who is doing very well.]

Members Present:—

WILLIAM CHARLES WINDEYER, ESQ., PRESIDENT.

EYRE G. ELLIS, Esq.
SAMUEL GOOLD, Esq.

CHARLES COWPER, JUN., Esq.
MICHAEL METCALFE, Esq.

Sister Mary Benedict called in and examined:—

Sister Mary Benedict. 5770. President.] I believe that you have been visiting the Industrial School at Biloela, for the purpose of giving the children religious instruction? Yes, I have.

5771. How long have you been attending the school there? About one year and nine months.

20 Aug., 1873. 5772. And how often do you go there? Twice a week—on Wednesdays and Sundays.

5773. In the afternoons or the mornings? In the mornings.

5774. How long do you remain there? I go up by the 9 o'clock boat, and, I think, at about half-past 12 on Wednesdays, and about a quarter to 12 on Sundays, I leave the island.

5775. You are there for two or three hours each day? Yes.

5776. Do all the Catholic children in the school come to you on these occasions? I think so.

5777. Except at these times, have you had any other opportunities of observing the demeanour of the children? No, I never go further than from the boat to the schoolroom where the children assemble. On one occasion they took me through the establishment when I first went there.

5778. In what state did you find the children when you first took them in hand, as to religious knowledge and general intelligence? Well, I looked round, and I did not see such wild faces at all. There were eight of the girls in gaol then, when I first went—I went there first in November, 1871—and they were in gaol for setting fire to the place.

5779. That was when you first went there? Yes.

5780. There were eight undergoing punishment? Yes.

5782. Do you find that they are ignorant? I do not ask them further than as regards their religious knowledge, and at that time they were extremely ignorant of anything, because they had come from Newcastle, where they had but little religious instruction. I prepared some of them for communion, and they were confirmed at St. Augustine's Church. Mr. Cowper procured me what I required—dress for them, and so c.

5783. Have you had any experience in teaching children in any of the schools of the Country before this? Yes; I have been in St. Mary's School for a number of years. I was a teacher there.

5784. A denominational school? Yes.

5785. How did you find these children compare in point of intelligence with the children in that school—I speak of those who first came to you? You could see at once that they had not had that discipline which you would consider necessary.

5786. Did you find any difficulty in controlling them and fixing their attention? Oh dear, no. If I had the charge of them I could bring them up to a good deal of perfection, for they are very easily taught. I said to the female teacher, Mrs. Kelly, I would try if they could remember a lesson I gave them on the Creation. I said—"I will just mark how much they know, and I will mark and find out what they can remember about it"; and I was surprised to find that they remembered so much of the lesson.

5787. Are they quite uninformed? Some of them—not all. Some have been well instructed—a few—I think about six.

5788. They appeared then to be accessible to kindness? Oh yes, everything of that kind. It is only kindness that will do with them, and firmness and discipline. They see nothing where they are now,—it is a very queer place for them.

5789. Do you think that the associations of the place are calculated to improve them? Not at all. It is enough to make them feel prisoners. They see nothing,—what are they to learn? The persons who are in charge of them—the superintendent and the officers—they have to go to their different duties, and are not so much with the children as I would like them to be. With us in the Orphanage there is some one always with the children; they are never left alone; there are persons with them always until they are asleep.

5790. Have you been in the Catholic Orphanage in Parramatta? Yes, I was there for four years.

5791. What did they do with the children there after dark? They assembled in the schoolroom after dark—there were fires there in the winter—and there was one of us always with the children. We play with them and have different amusements for them; and then there is the prayer-bell, and then they go into into the church, and then they retire, and the nuns walk up and down in their dormitories, saying little prayers until the children go to sleep, and then they are left to the nurses. A nurse sleeps near them: they are never alone.

Sister Mary
Benedict.

20 Aug., 1873.

5792. From what you saw of the Industrial School, did it appear to you that there were no opportunities of exercising personal influence over the children, or that there were insufficient opportunities? There could be a great deal more done with them—I am quite sure of that—a great deal more. And there is a great want of classification. It is a pity—a sin—to have small children mixed up with the grown girls, who are not ignorant of the most vile and foul sins.

5793. This want of classification struck you? Oh dear, yes.

5795. Do you think that they should associate together at any time? Oh yes; at recreation time, when any superior would be present.

5796. I think that you are now at the House of the Good Shepherd? Yes. There were, on one occasion, not long ago, three incorrigible girls at Biloela, and Mr. Lucas asked me to see whether the Reverend Mother would take them, because they were corrupting the girls at Biloela, and he could not manage them. We took those girls, and we had no trouble with them; two turned out very well; one was really a great credit to us, and one has been away at a place and has come home. We expected the Archbishop to come and give confirmation to those two girls, and they came to be prepared for the holy sacrament, and we were struck with their goodness. There was the third of these girls, who was not, I believe, so bad as we thought. We thought that she was lost, but I heard a good account of her a few days ago. I heard that she was in a cook-shop at service.

5797. These girls were taken into the House of the Good Shepherd—that is a refuge for fallen women? Yes, that is its object.

5798. Do you think that it would be possible for the Government to make arrangements with the two houses of this character, for the reception of girls of this class—could it be done in the case of the institution you are connected with? It could not be done to bring it out creditably to the House of the Good Shepherd—but with a place for these girls we could do a good deal for them, I have no doubt.

5799. Why could it not be done at the House of the Good Shepherd? The girls would not be supposed to be subjects for us, and one would reproach the other with their different conditions; one would suffer for the other, because perhaps she would be of a lower grade as it were.

5800. Mr. Ellis.] The Good Shepherd is for the reception of voluntary penitents? Yes, for the really fallen women; those who have made up their mind to turn to good and forsake their old ways. We have no locks at all upon the doors; we could not manage the girls if we had locks, for they would try to get away.

5801. Mr. Metcalfe.] Do not the girls sometimes run away from the House of the Good Shepherd? Yes, there may be some. They get tired and want to go out. They are not compelled to remain, and the superior will not force them, but we go to them and beg of them to remain.

5803. But you do not think that it could be done in connection with the House of the Good Shepherd, as there the girls are all simple penitents who become inmates of their own accord? Yes, I know it from what I have seen of them. It would not do to mix the girls together. I have a knowledge of these penitents; and if we take a person of reduced circumstances in, to rescue her from danger, it has not a good effect. For instance, if we take in a young lady whose parents have died and left her destitute, and she comes to us for a home, the girls do not like it—they do not look upon her kindly. It cannot be done.

5804. They feel that she regards them as of a much lower class? Yes. They should all be of the same grade.

5805. Do you not think that many of these girls at Biloela have no superiority to boast of? I suppose that some of them in the sight of God are a great deal worse; but in the eyes of the world they may yet pass for decent women; and it would be a pity to stamp them with the mark of infamy, if we can get them to something higher for the benefit of society, by keeping their faults secret. They may not have been very wicked, and it is no use exposing their shame or making them worse than they are.

5806. And you see no absolute objection to their being in a public institution such as the Industrial School, if proper arrangements are made for them? I do not know whether they should all be separated—the big girls from the small. Perhaps some of the big girls could be made useful, because they could wait upon the young ones if they were properly disciplined.

5807. But if they are so constantly in contact with them, would that not give them opportunities of corrupting the young girls? No, not if the superiors were vigilant.

5808. Your idea then is to have them in the position of servants to the others? No, not exactly servants, because they could be useful in many ways and yet not lose a great deal of time; and it would help to do good for themselves, because waiting on the younger children would teach them to be nurses, and to be handy, so that they could go into the world and do good for themselves.

5809. Then you would have some one in authority always with them? Yes, always have some one with them, because when they are by themselves it gives them the opportunity of committing many grave sins, and there is nothing to interest their minds, and, as it were, cultivate their manners. Say, for instance, that there is a nun always with them; she can say, if they do anything wrong “Oh, fie! that is not at all nice to do that,” and that corrects them at once, and they get ashamed of doing things which otherwise they would do.

5810. Do you think that girls of that class should have separate sleeping rooms? No, not exactly; if there were a dormitory with a person sleeping with them. There is always a nurse with the children in our schools, and there is a lamp in the room.

5811. Have you ever had an opportunity of observing the management—the style of management of the officers at Biloela? Oh no, I never thought that I would have had to say anything about it. 5812.

- Sister Mary Benedict.
20 Aug., 1873.
5812. That never came under your notice? No.
5813. Are the children generally well behaved and orderly on Sunday at service? Yes, they are very orderly. They are rather heedless; but still for that sort of children they behave very well. I expect very little from them myself.
5814. Did you observe whether the state of organization of the school became more settled down and improved, and that things became more orderly after you first went there? Well, I thought that they were getting a little better myself. I know that they have not sufficient religious attendance, because our two hours are not sufficient, and I believe that the religious teaching that they get is confined to our two hours' religious instruction. Mrs. Kelly, the teacher, says that there is some rule of the Council of Education which prevents her giving them more religious instruction. It is a mixed school. I do not understand what the rule is exactly.
5815. Have you observed any difference in the demeanour of the children? I know that they had been very bad.
5816. They have improved in manners? There have not been any fires or mischief of that kind lately. They used to tear up the blankets and make signs—I have not heard of that. One girl tried, the other day, to get away; but I would not be surprised at that, for it is a queer place for them to be in.
5817. You think that the place is altogether unsuitable? Altogether. There is nothing at all there to civilize them.
5818. Do you think that its proximity to the dock is advantageous? They have had complaints about that, but still I have not heard of anything particular—not anything about it lately.
5819. Do you not think that such a place should be more in the country? I think so, where the children could go to church on Sunday. If they grow up without going to church they get careless, and do not wish to trouble themselves about it when they are their own mistresses. I think that it would be very necessary to have them go to church.
5820. Religious habits should be formed early in the mind? Yes, very much so; that is what I would like most to be noticed—their attending church.
5821. Did you notice that the dress of the girls at Biloela was very scanty? I do not think that they require a great deal of dress there.
5822. Did you not think that they were improperly short? Yes, I did; but I thought that they had put on one another's dresses by mistake—so I did not mind that much.
5823. You never had any conversation with them about their dresses? Oh no, I never spoke to them about dress at all.
5824. You think that it would be out of your province to do so? Yes; it would lessen our religious influence, except we were keeping recreation with them as we do with our children at home. We have an hour with our children when we can play with them, and we are all together; and, at such a time we could speak about dress, but when we are going to instruct we never enter into anything of the kind.
5825. If you were informed that the dresses were shortened by the girls wilfully, would you not speak to them about it? I never heard of anything of the kind.
5826. Supposing you were informed that they did shorten their dresses, and that they did so from want of feelings of delicacy, would that be a matter that you would speak to them about? Yes; anything that would be likely to do good we wish to say. Anything that Mrs. Lucas would suggest to me, as to their conduct in the dormitories, I would speak about. I did not see a great deal of any want of delicacy among them at all.
5827. It has not shown itself before you? No, not in the slightest. I was amazed when the Vicar-General brought me there—they were so quiet. I thought then that it was the presence of the Vicar-General that awed them; but the next day when I went I found them even more respectful, and then I knew I could manage them. I thought first it was the Vicar-General's presence, and I thought to myself, "You are leaving me here now, and I will try my best"; but the next day, as I was going up from the steamer, I thought I should not be able to get on at all; but when I went in the girls were all as glad to see me, and all as quiet as possible, and I felt then that I could manage them, and I never had the least difficulty. I could always manage them.
5828. President.] You never found that their respect for your authority wore off? No. We had mass this morning, and you would have been surprised to see how well they behaved. They are very fond of us. They like to be near us. We have great influence over them; and we have great influence even with the poor prisoners in the gaol.
5829. Did not a case occur in which one girl was rude to one of the sisters? Yes, there was a case occurred. It was one of the Reformatory girls. I did not remark about it. She said something, and would have been rude if I had made a scene about it. There were three little girls from Mrs. King's. They got up and went out quite quietly. I was instructing the girls, and after a time I said, "Were they sick that they went away?" and some of them said something about a cow; I do not know what it was.
5830. That was the only case of want of respect you ever experienced? Yes; they are very respectful—poor things.
5831. You do not know anything about the way in which they are locked up in the dormitories? Yes; I do not like that. They used to be locked up on bread and water, and they used to be put down holes—poor things. They showed me a place, when I was going through the institution, where they used to put them, and I said, "If you please don't do that while I am here, because I cannot think of such a thing."
5832. Mr. Cowper.] Did you not find that music had a soothing influence upon the girls? Yes. We had an harmonium for a short time—one that Mr. Cane kindly lent us. The nuns could always amuse them from morning until night. There should be some way of employing the girls there—they are not half employed.
5833. Do you not think that one of the secrets of managing them properly is to keep them employed? Yes, and cultivate their minds and bring them up to some object. They have no idea of what position they are going to fill. They are like little sheep—I never saw anything like it. They should be worked up to fill some respectable trade or calling, and to prepare themselves for that and respect themselves. There are many of them who do not know anything; they do not know what to think. It is a grand thing to keep them employed, and out of sin.
5834. Have you visited them when they have been shut up in their dormitories after these riots? Yes.
5835. Do you not think that shutting them up in that way, where the others could see and hear them, had a bad influence on the school? I do not like shutting up grown girls together in sixes and sevens at all.

20 Aug., 1873.

5837. Do you not think that you would put them in close confinement separate from the others, and where they could not excite the others? I do not think so. We never have such punishments at the House of the Good Shepherd.

5838. If you had an institution in a state of disorganization, would it not be necessary to make an example of those who were creating the disorder? Yes, but the less severity the better with a woman. You cannot work upon her tender heart in any way but by kindness. If I were to go to those girls and tell them I was shocked at anything they did they would be sorry. These great punishments must be bad for the girls—to keep them on bread and water for a fortnight must injure their constitutions, which are not formed yet.

5839. But you spoke of the cells or holes? I do not like that at all; I do not think that it is necessary; I do not believe in it at all.

5840. You think that shutting them up in the dormitories would be better than putting them in the cells? Yes, I think it is better.

5841. Although it excited the others? I do not understand cruelty at all; I do not like it at all; there is a way of punishing them without it. There is no necessity for one or the other. There is a firm treatment for children, and I would like certainly to see the punishments and any such cruelty as bread and water for fourteen days done away with.

5842. Would you rather send them to gaol? No; I think that would be enough to degrade them for life.

5843. Of the three punishments—supposing that you had to inflict some to prevent their doing mischief, when they had destroyed £20 or £30 or £40 worth of Government property in a night—which is the least objectionable, the gaol, locking them up in the dormitories seven or eight together, or putting them in close confinement even in cells? I would not like the cells, the damp and cold are injurious to health, but if there was a room they might be put in that.

5844. But providing that there was no room? You would have to do something to prevent the destruction of Government property. I would watch them. I would not put them down that hole at all—I would not allow it; it is cruel in the extreme. If I had to stop up with them all night myself I would not do it. I would not put them there myself; it would put a woman out of her mind. If I were put down there I know I could not be put down the second time. I would die. I could not have it at all.

5845. Mr. Ellis.] Do you think that the caning of the girls is a good means of improving them? No, nothing of that sort for this kind of girls.

5846. Do you think that caning them is nearly as objectionable as putting them in the cells? There is no necessity at all for it; I think that a little firmness is all that is necessary.

5847. You think that that is necessary? Yes, I believe so.

5848. President.] Is there any suggestion that you would like to add yourself upon what you have seen in the institution? I think if there were a classification of the girls according to their ages it would be better. I think the Vicar-General has said that if we had them we could save a great deal of the expense.

5849. In what way would you propose to take them? Have a place built for them—a school. It would save one-third of the salaries; we would do it for a great deal less than it costs now.

5850. You mean that the whole of the children of the Catholic faith in Biloela should be handed over to you? Yes. We could save a great deal of the expense. I will engage that if you got a high wall, I would not want any cell or any punishment, and believe me there would not be any fight or riot. I do not believe that I should want a lock to a door there.

5851. Mr. Cowper.] For a time you would? I do not know. I have had very wild ones with me.

5852. President.] You mean that there would be no need for any restraint upon them? I think that they would stop with us—I feel that they would stay without a lock.

5853. Mr. Ellis.] Then you think that, on the whole, if these children were properly looked after, most of them would be reformed? I think so. They have no fair play there. They had not had anything like instruction, and they have been left to the guidance of their own wills altogether.

5854. Mr. Metcalfe.] At what cost do you suppose that you could maintain these children? I think for a third less than they cost now.

5855. Suppose that they cost now £35 a year each? We could do it for £14 or £15 a year each; you know the great salaries take up the money there.

5856. President.] You do not think that it is desirable, if you got little children, to allow them to go back to their parents again? The children could be brought up early to work, and you could get them nicely apprenticed, and there would not be any one of them want to return to the institution; they would conduct themselves well and respect themselves. We must get them to respect themselves, so that they would scorn to degrade themselves by any sin of this kind again. If they are bad, and everybody looks down upon them, they can never be brought to anything I think.

Mrs. Henrietta Tooth called in and examined:—

5857. President.] I believe that you have been kindly visiting the Protestant children at the Biloela Industrial School, for the purpose of giving them religious instruction? Yes, I have. Mrs. H. Tooth.
20 Aug., 1873.

5858. How long have you been doing so? I think I went there first a few weeks after the school was opened there; for nearly two years; about a fortnight after Mr. Cowper went to live on the island.

5859. And you have been going there ever since? Every Sunday, and almost every Thursday, but I missed a few weeks.

5860. How long do you remain there on the occasion of your visits? I remain there nearly two hours on Sunday—quite two hours.

5861. Are all the Protestant children sent to you? Almost always. Sometimes one or two are left in the kitchen.

5862. Have you had any experience in teaching the children of the humbler classes before? No, not much, except up in Bourke, where I collected the children of all denominations, and taught them for about a year and a half. 5863.

- Mrs. H. Tooth. 5863. As a matter of kindness? Yes; I taught between thirty and forty children every Sunday.
5864. You have then taken an interest in teaching? Yes, a very great interest.
- 20 Aug., 1873. 5865. We have been given to understand that you had formerly some experience in teaching at Bourke? Yes.
5866. How do you find the girls in the Biloela Industrial School compare with the children of humble life with whom you have elsewhere been brought in contact? I find that some of them are clever and quick, and these are of the worst class. There are a great many there who are stupid and dull—they seem as if their intellect had been injured in early youth; in fact they seem to be quite silly. Some of the older girls and some of the younger ones are very sharp and intelligent. I think that the worst girls are the most intelligent.
5867. Do you find them very ignorant? Yes, some are very ignorant—those who are from the country especially.
5868. Do you find that it is difficult to instruct them in what you endeavour to teach them? Those who have intellect seem quite pleased and anxious to learn, and are attentive.
5869. Do you find any difficulty in managing them? At first I did, but now they are very much better.
5870. From what you see of them, do you think that it would be necessary to exercise much coercive power to restrain them, or do you think that they are amenable to kind treatment? I think that kindness and firmness are needed. Of course there are exceptions. There are some who may require and deserve punishment, but I think that kindness goes a great way with them—I have found it so.
5871. Did they ever treat you with disrespect or rudeness? Never; they may have quarrelled with each other, and been troublesome in that way.
5872. But they have never been personally disrespectful to you? Never.
5873. Had you opportunities of observing what system of management was pursued by the officers, and whether it was judicious or not? I have not seen much of it. I have gone on Sundays and Thursdays, and the children if they were not there then came in afterwards, and I have not had much opportunity of judging as to the management. I have remarked Mr. or Mrs. Lucas always about looking after the girls.
5874. Are you aware that the children are locked up at night without any means of employment, from 6 o'clock in the evening? I do not know at what hour they are locked up, I am sure, but I am told that they have books given to them in the evening to read. They have a very nice little library or collection of books which I asked Mr. Parkes to get for them.
5875. Are you aware that these books are let out to them only on Sundays? I believe it is so, though I think that they might get them on week-days, if they would take care of them.
5876. Have you had any opportunity of observing the demeanour of the officers to each other or to the children? No. Mrs. Lucas is the only one who comes in. She is generally there with me teaching the younger ones and giving me every assistance, and the other matrons do not come in with the children there.
5878. Do you think that the character and the associations of the place fit it for an institution of that sort, and that it is calculated to have an ameliorating influence on the girls? I do not think it is at all a fit place for the girls—there are so many great objections to the island for such an institution. It is too much like a prison.
5879. What are they, in your opinion? It is such a poor place. I think that the girls require a playground. Besides, the ships coming into the dock are a great drawback; and at present there are men working there, which is a very injurious thing for the girls, though I suppose that the girls are kept from them; yet I do not think it is good.
5880. Do you think that it is desirable to have girls who have been on the streets associating with girls who are simply neglected? I do not think that it is at all a good plan. There are some children go there who I am sure are perfectly innocent, and may be brought up to something good, and they are made far worse than they otherwise would be by associating with the older girls.
5881. Would you have the older girls of the class to which I have alluded in such an institution at all? I would have them divided from the younger children—I would not have them mix with them in any way. I have seen them since they have been with me, and the little ones watch the elder ones, and imitate them in everything, if there is anything improper or disrespectful in their behaviour.
5882. And do you think it is possible, if you had efficient and judicious officers, to exercise such a supervision over them as would prevent the ill effects of the younger girls associating with the older girls? I do not think that any officers would do it. I would suppose, if the Reformatory girls and the older girls were placed together, and the younger children were kept apart, it would be better. They might be divided in that way. I mean girls above twelve years of age.
5883. We are informed by officers of the police, and by a number of persons, that the Reformatory girls, though they have been convicted of crimes, are not in point of morality so degraded as are those girls taken from the streets? They may not be then; I do not know; they look very young—the Reformatory girls.
5884. Have you any suggestion that you wish to make with regard to the improvement of the place? I think that the first thing would be to classify the children—that is the main thing. I do not think that the school can go on well until that is done, because there are fresh girls going there almost every day, and the younger ones are brought into contact with them.
5885. How would you classify them? If they are all obliged to be kept on the island, I would divide the the buildings, and I should have separate apartments for them all, and keep them all apart.
5886. The different classes? Yes, the younger and the older ones; those whom we know to be wicked I should keep completely away from the others.
5887. Mr. Metcalfe.] Have you observed that the younger children are contaminated from association with the older ones? I cannot exactly say. I have not much time to observe them. I do not talk much to the children, except what is really required as to their lessons, and I cannot say that they are much contaminated; but they imitate the older girls, and would learn what is wrong from them.

5888. You do not go much about the institution there? I do not. I have been in the hospital to see sick children, and it has always appeared to me clean. I have met Mr. Lucas there seeing to the wants of the sick. I have also been on several occasions in the dining-room, where all was in proper order. Mrs. H. Tooth.
20 Aug., 1873.
5889. You cannot say much as to the conduct of the girls to the matrons? No, I cannot say. I do not see much of the matrons.
5890. Mr. Couper.] Have you ever received letters from the girls you have taught, after they have left school? Yes, from several. I have lately received two or three—within the last fortnight I mean; and those that I have heard from seem comfortable and happy in their situations. They generally mention your name, and ask me to thank you, and Mr. Lucas—the last girl I heard from did.
5891. Mr. Metcalfe.] Were these girls fallen? Yes.
5892. Mr. Couper.] They were some of the worst? Yes.
5893. And do they not generally express themselves as being thankful for your kindness? Yes, they say they are thankful to have got into good situations. I heard the other day from a girl at Ashfield; she was a very bad girl when I first taught here, and last year she improved very much.
5894. Mr. Metcalfe.] Are they really brought to a sense of religion? Yes; she is really a very good girl now. There are two girls I knew up at Bourke, both very bad characters at one time, and I have heard from them both lately.
5895. Mr. Couper.] They are doing well there? Yes. I think that it is an important thing to get situations for them in respectable families.
5896. From what you have seen, such an institution is necessary and likely to be valuable? I think so indeed, if the children were only classified and the little ones kept away from the big ones.
5897. Mr. Ellis.] Do you approve of confinement in the cells as a mode of punishment for those girls? I should be sorry to see any of them put down there, but I suppose that sometimes they have deserved it on very rare occasions. I should not recommend such a punishment except for very violent conduct.
5898. Do you think that it is too much to put a girl for fourteen days on bread and water? Yes; I should not do that unless she had been guilty of some very great offence.
5899. Do you think that it is desirable the girls should be caned? Well, on certain occasions I suppose that such characters would require it, although I think that kindness goes a great way with them; but I suppose that occasionally they do need it.
5900. Assuming that you had the direct management of them there, do you think that you would be more likely to succeed by firmness and kindness than by caning? I do not think I should cane them.
5901. You suppose, however, that it might be sometimes necessary? It might be sometimes necessary. A girl that would tear her clothes or set fire to the dormitory would require some severe punishment, I think.
5902. Mr. Metcalfe.] But did you not do more with them by kindness? Yes, I think so; they are very quiet and good with me, and have always been so. I think that they require a little more change than they get there. Mrs. Lucas has done what she could to assist me in gaining an influence over the girls.
5903. Mr. Ellis.] Do you think that it is proper to put a girl in a strait-jacket? No, I do not think so. She would require to be a very violent character before I would do that.
5904. Would you put a gag in a girl's mouth? I would not.
5905. Mr. Couper.] Have you not heard the girls, when they were riotous, singing songs,—have you not heard them at your house over at Balmain? Yes, but it is more than a year ago since I heard them. It is about eighteen months ago; but I have heard them on more than one occasion.
5906. Mr. Ellis.] You have heard the noise all the way over at Balmain? Yes; my house is opposite to the island—it is at Birch Grove.

Owen Spencer Evans, Esq., M.R.C.S.E., Medical Officer, Biloela Industrial School, called in and examined:—

5907. President.] You are Visiting Surgeon of the Industrial School at Biloela? Yes. O. S. Evans, Esq.,
M.R.C.S.E.
20 Aug., 1873.
5908. How long have you been so? Ever since the Industrial School arrived there from Newcastle. I forget the exact time.
5909. How often do your duties take you there? Twice a week.
5910. You have had, I suppose, opportunities of seeing the inmates of the institution, and their demeanour? Yes. I may mention, if you will excuse me for interrupting you, that it has been necessary that the inmates should be seen sometimes more than twice a week, and on such occasions I have sent my partner to see them; but as a rule I have been there twice a week.
5911. Do you visit the "Vernon"? Yes, I visit the "Vernon" also.
5912. What is your opinion as to the position of the school in a sanatory point of view? I consider that the health of the inmates is excellent.
5913. But the place? Yes, it is a healthy position. I am not speaking, of course, as to other causes.
5914. The natural position is good? Yes, I consider so.
5915. Did you attend the "Vernon" before she was taken up the river? No, not before.
5916. You cannot in any way compare its sanatory state now with what it was then? No, I can only do that by report. The sanatory state of the "Vernon" was stated to be much worse there than it was down below, but we had an epidemic of scarlet fever up there—without losing a single case—and that has made the average number of cases appear proportionately heavy. But really there has been very little sickness up there, excepting that in getting children off the streets you will get them with diseases, such as scrofula, and with a weakly habit of body.
5917. You see nothing against the position in a sanatory point of view? I do not.
5918. To return to Biloela—are the premises kept in a good state? Yes, they are kept as clean as the circumstances will admit of. The fault I saw there was with the closets. I have applied to the Government officers to have them altered, but my request has not been complied with. They remain in the same state as when the prisoners were there; and the Principal Under Secretary, I believe, has ordered that they shall be altered.
5919. How long is it since you represented the matter? I have done so five or six times—ever since I have been on the island, and I represented it in such strong terms as that it would be desirable to find out

O. S. Evans, Esq., M.R.C.S.E., the official on whom the responsibility rested, and if there was a death I would have a Coroner's inquest, and bring that official in as guilty of manslaughter.

20 Aug., 1878. 5920. You have represented the matter to the Government on several occasions? I have, and I believe that the officer should be found out who is responsible, and I would have him punished for his gross neglect in this matter.

5921. Have you been making these representations ever since you have been on the island? Yes, I have made them repeatedly.

5922. Mr. Ellis.] Have you always observed a bad smell from these closets? Yes, always.

5923. Mr. Gould.] They are close by the pig-sties and the cow-shed? They are so situated that the prevailing winds carry them right into the superintendent's quarters and to the work-room. Besides, there is the waste of allowing all that manure to run into the water—which should be applied to growing vegetables, and the improvement of the place.

5924. Mr. Metcalfe.] I suppose that they could form earth-closets there? There are some at present, I believe.

5925. President.] Would you advise the introduction of earth-closets entirely? I would have them in every Government institution, except there is a good drainage. Of course, if you throw the drainage away you liberate the gases in it, and besides it is a waste of manure, which would grow green stuff, and save the Government buying food for the cows.

5926. Are there any other defects in the place? The defects are those which are inherent in the place—which were there when the school came there. The premises are not spouted or guttered, which they should be in order to save water.

5927. Are they very short of water there? Yes, they are frequently. Of course that is a defect which is inherent in the place. If the place had been spouted and guttered in the old convict times, it would have saved hundreds of pounds.

5928. Had water to be taken there? Of course, though the tanks are there ready excavated if there were spouting.

5929. The shortness of the water has been a matter within your observation? I can speak of that in times previous to my holding my present appointment—in the prisoners' times—I have seen water brought there. That is merely owing to the want of forethought on the part of the officials, in not having the building properly spouted and guttered.

5930. Have you had any opportunities of observing the system of management pursued by the officials there in respect to the children? I have remarked things, but I have never gone out of my way as far as my duties as a professional man went.

5931. You have noticed things, of course? I have.

5932. Did the system of management there appear to be judicious? Well, the system of management is not what I would advise. It appeared to me to be altogether too undecided; the girls seemed to have an opinion that they were not to be punished, and that they could pretty well do as they liked. For example: rules for the guidance, limiting and stating the duties of officers, were posted up for the girls to read—and none for the regulation of the inmates. This had a bad effect.

5933. You mean that there was a want of firmness? Yes, there was.

5934. Do you think that that has led to the insubordination that has manifested itself there at different times? There has been less insubordination of late than at the commencement—it was at the commencement that it was shown.

5935. Mr. Metcalfe.] And the people in charge of the place were not able to cope with it? It is not for me to say whether they could, but they simply did not cope with it in the way I should have done. It seemed to me that the superintendent—(I cannot help remarking things)—he said in fact that he had no power or authority to act, that it would be against his regulations—he said he must report to the office before he could act.

5936. Used you to advise him to do anything? I did. I advised him to throw his regulations overboard, and secure peace at all hazards, and if the Colonial Secretary did not support him he should resign his situation. I said, if I were in his place, if I had not discretionary power I would resign.

5937. What course did you propose? I should have stopped them at any cost, at any hazard, and talk about the regulations afterwards.

5938. Do you think it was possible, in the state things were in, to subdue this riotous spirit among the girls, except by coercive measures? I would not have stopped at coercive measures; I would have stopped the whole arrangement the next morning, or I would have given up my post. I would have had obedience first, and talked about the regulations afterwards.

5940. We have been told that some of the children were placed in cells—did that appear to you to be necessary? Yes, I believe that they were, but they were placed in the cells too late. I believe that the proper way was to put them in at once and nip the thing in the bud. It was allowed to go too far. Mind, I am only giving my own opinion; I do not know what instructions the superintendent had—I am only giving my own opinion on the matter. I can only speak of what came under my own observation. As far as I am personally concerned, I may say that I have received the greatest kindness and attention from everybody on the island. I never had but one difficulty with any of the inmates, because I never would have one—I took that stand, that my first difficulty there should be my last—if I was not to be respected I would give it up, and I would pursue any insubordination to the bitter end. I would have the first offence punished, or I would not continue my duties.

5941. Did you ever meet with insults from any of the girls? Never but once, and that case I reported, as insults to other officers had been passed over from professed inability to act and punish them suitably at once without referring to the office, and stated that if the girl were not punished I should appeal to the Colonial Secretary; and, through Mr. Cowper here, I had an ample apology given me by the girl, and I have never had any difficulty since, and never would have.

5942. Mr. Cowper.] Did I not ask you to accept the girl's apology? Yes, and I did. It was quite sufficient.

5943. And they behaved well afterwards? I never had an ill word from any man, woman, or child in the establishment. I would not put up with it. If I could not stop it I would not remain there.

5945. But your being good friends with them would not affect their quarrels with each other? I mean that I am good friends with them as far as ordinary politeness goes.
5946. You do not know anything about these quarrels then? No, I do not know anything about them.
5947. Do you think the associations of the island—such a style of place as Cockatoo—are calculated to have an ameliorating influence upon the girls there? I cannot say whether it has or not, but I suppose that the influence would be the same everywhere.
5948. Do you think that the prison-like aspect of the place or the associations of the place are likely to be of benefit to the children? Well, any place where people are kept in must be a prison, or it will not fulfil its requirements.
5949. But if the object of the thing is not the punishment of the children but their reformation, and suppose you do not choose that they should communicate with the external world, is it desirable to have them in a place which is so like a prison in its aspect and so bad in its associations? I should hardly like to give an opinion on the subject. The place is like a prison in many respects. You have a difficult class of people to deal with. You have people to reform, and you wish to make them obedient, and there are no means there by which you can make them obedient.
5950. What means would you advise for controlling the children? Kindness and firmness, and if that failed, isolation and restraint. Whatever I did I would do thoroughly. To put a lot of girls into a ward and allow them to knock about there like maniacs and give people the impression that instead of punishing them they were annoying the persons who were punishing them, is absurd. I would have separated them, isolated them, and after that, if they continued to tear their clothes, I would have tied their hands so that they could not tear them. I would have broken them. I would not have sent them to prison, which was a confession of weakness—a confession that the officers of the institution were not able to cope with them.
5951. You allude to those who were sent to gaol? Yes; I thought that was a great mistake—it was tantamount to admitting that the persons in authority over them were not able to cope with them. Any person under restraint for a long period will do anything for a change. I believe that when insubordinate the girls should be put into the cells, and then if they choose to tear their clothes their hands should be fastened behind them until they were quite quiet. They should be shown that the authorities are masters. They got the idea that they were masters, and that they could do as they liked without being punished.
5952. Do you think that the proximity of the school to the dock is advantageous? I do not think it is advantageous; they are, however, kept separate.
5953. Do you not see any objection to the place on that score? I do not; I do not see that the proximity of the prisoners in Darlinghurst to the South Head Road is disadvantageous. It is hard to give an opinion on such a subject, as so much depends on the collateral circumstances.
5954. Mr. Metcalfe.] But is it not dangerous to have sailors so close to the girls? Well, it is, if the sailors get into the premises.
5955. Mr. Ellis.] Did you ever visit the island when the prisoners were there? Yes, I was surgeon to the prisoners for four or five years, from the time of Dr. West's death.
5956. That was during the time when there were some of the worst felons in the Country there? Yes.
5957. Is there much difference between the dormitories—the places set apart for these girls—now, and the places in which these felons were confined? Yes, there is a considerable difference—the dormitories are matted now and made more comfortable; they have beds instead of hammocks.
5958. In what respects do they differ? They differ in having matting laid down.
5959. A little matting laid down—that is the only difference? That is the only difference.
5960. Mr. Metcalfe.] Are they clean? Yes, they are.
5961. Mr. Ellis.] I want to know whether there is any substantial difference between the place as it is now, and as it was when it was a prison for the worst class of felons in the Country? No, except that the girls have beds.
5962. There are the same iron bars, the same iron doors, and everything about it is calculated to give you the idea of a prison, and a prison of the rudest kind? Yes, undoubtedly.
5963. The ground is wholly uncultivated, or rather wholly neglected? Yes, it is.
5964. It is wholly neglected, barren, and desolate—there is nothing to give you the idea that Christian people live on it at all? No, except the church—there is a church on it.
5965. Where—that escaped my notice? Well, it is a schoolroom. There is another point that I should like to touch upon,—that whoever was in charge of the place should have the power of getting things done. There was a door there that the girls destroyed, and for a period of six months that door was left unrepaired, so that the other girls could pass food in to those who were shut up there, and could pass implements into them. This door was left unrepaired—in fact, the whole discipline of the establishment rested upon that door. I said at last—"If you do not go to the Colonial Secretary and have that done at once, the whole discipline of the place will be broken down; why do you not go and see the people, and have it done?" The whole discipline of the place lay upon that.
5966. It was simply childish to lock the children all together in one room and leave them there? Mr. Lucas professed to be so hampered by instructions that he could do nothing. He had to report everything to the Colonial Secretary's Office, instead of acting first and reporting afterwards. In fact, he appeared to be tied down by some influences which I could not make out.
5967. You think that Mr. Lucas was under a system of coercion himself? I do not know how it was. I would have had it altered, or else I would not have remained there another day.
5968. Would you think fourteen days' imprisonment on bread and water too severe a punishment for a young girl? That is a question which it is difficult to answer as an abstract question. I should say it was; but as it is done at Biloela, I should say that it was not too much.
5969. Was it too much physically, if not morally? Not under the circumstances under which I saw them there.
5970. Imprisoned for fourteen days on bread and water, and without fires in mid-winter, seems rather severe? I would never have allowed them to get to that pitch—I would have secured their obedience before. As it was, orders were given and not obeyed. In my opinion, it was better to give them three days in the cells than fourteen days knocking about.
5971. We understand that on one occasion most of the girls on the island had the itch—is that the case? Yes. It broke out on one occasion on most of them, and I saw by the Inspector of Charities' report, that that he said the girls had had the itch and still had the marks of it on them; but we acted on that occasion in a manner that was very creditable to us, I think, rather than discreditable. In a week we stamped it all out; and when it is considered that each girl had to be painted with a solution of sulphuret of lime three times a week, and had three hot baths, it will be seen that a tremendous work was put upon the officers. Sixty were run through in three days, and it stamped the disease down at once. It was an epidemic which ran through the place, and I think that for stamping it out in three days we deserve the greatest credit.

5972. We are told that there was an attack of the same kind on the "Vernon" about the same time? Yes, and we dealt with that in the same way.

5973. Did the "Vernon" give the disease to the island, or the island give it to the "Vernon"? I cannot undertake to say that; my books will give the date. We had a severe epidemic, and after we had stamped it all out the Inspector of Charities came on the island, and said that he was astonished to see that some of the children had the itch. He had not been there for ten months before.

5974. Do you think that he knew anything about it? No, I do not think so. I think that the matrons deserve great credit for stamping that attack out in a week. The inmates had a hot bath, were then painted with the solution; twenty minutes after that they had another hot bath. This was done three times a week.

5975. President.] Is there anything that you wish to suggest yourself with reference to the place? No, I do not wish to say anything. I do not wish to make any complaint. I never had any difficulty with any one, because I never would have. I always bring matters to a crisis.

5976. Mr. Metcalfe.] What is your opinion of the place as a reformatory for girls? I can give no opinion. The place can be conducted as a reformatory as well as any other building can be. The isolation is good, of course—the place is isolated. You gain something by being surrounded by water, quite as much as if it were a long distance off. I have nothing to say more. My duties in the place are medical, and I confine myself to them.

William George Watson, Esq., M.B., M.R.C.S.E., called in and examined:—

5977. President.] I believe that you have been in the habit of visiting Biloela occasionally to discharge some of the duties which Dr. Evans has to discharge as medical attendant of the institution? Yes.

5978. How long is it since you first went there? About thirteen months—twelve months last July.

5979. How often do your duties call you there? About once a month; I do not go regularly, but only when Evans cannot go. I think that I have been about once a month; the Register of the island will state the exact number of times that I have been there.

5980. Have you had any opportunities of observing the mode of discipline pursued there? Yes, I have.

5982. Have you had opportunities of seeing the intercourse between the children and the officers? Not very much; the matron, the chief one, is the only one I have seen manage the girls.

5983. Who is she? Mrs. Lucas. By the by there is Mrs. King in the Reformatory too.

5984. Have you seen enough of the management to be able to speak about it at all? No, I have not seen very much of it. Of course I go formally to visit and see the patients in the surgery and dispensary, and go straight away again. I see the patients in the presence of Mrs. Lucas, and it takes from a quarter to half an hour. I do not see much of the management.

Mr. George Wallace called in and examined:—

Mr. G. Wallace.
20 Aug., 1873.

5985. President.] What is your business? I am a news agent.

5986. Were you ever employed at the Industrial School at Biloela? I was there for fourteen or fifteen months almost—I was there about a year and eleven weeks, and I was going backwards and forwards for another week.

5987. How long is it since you have been there? On the 7th of last February I left the place.

5988. What was your business there? To improve the ground, blasting rocks and putting the desolation into some kind of order, and sowing grass seeds on it, and putting soil on the grass seeds. I was improving the ground—that is the bank facing Balmain.

5989. Had you much opportunity of seeing the girls of the place? Yes, I saw them every day, I saw them for three or four hours. They used to come and chat to me, especially the little ones.

5990. What sort of order were they in? I do not know. I never saw anything particular wrong with them; sometimes about the new moon there would come on them a wild fit now and again, some of the big girls, never the little ones; but I never saw anything particular wrong with the girls.

5991. Did you sleep there? No, I came out at night. I left about 6 every night, and went in again the next morning.

5992. From what you saw of it, do you think it was a good place in which to have an industrial school of this character? My opinion was that the place was good enough, but that there could be improvements made about it that I did not see all the time I was there. I did not see that there was a Government building better adapted for the purpose. Suppose you brought them into the town among the confusion of the streets, it would be worse.

5993. Do you think that it is a suitable place for them on the whole? There could be improvements made in the place.

5994. What improvements would you suggest? There should be a division between the younger children and the bigger ones, but how that could be managed I can hardly tell. There are some fine young creatures there, and although they do not mix exactly, as the young ones are kept by themselves, yet they are too near one another. That is my opinion of the matter.

5995. Did you ever know of any quarrels existing between the officers of the institution? Yes, there were always rows and divisions now and again.

5996. What sort of rows—rows about managing the children? No, one party had complaints against the other, and other parties had complaints against other parties again, but of course it was not my business to interfere, so I just let the thing pass. I did see rows, and heard that there were rows now and again.

5997. Were the rows that you did see in the presence of the children? Well, they might be. I have heard them disputing, in a high voice, at the office, and I have been at my work, and have just wrought on, and paid no attention to it. I was at my work a few hundred yards away, and I just wrought on.

5998. What sort of rows did you hear? Disputes.

5999. Amongst the officers? Yes.

6000. Mr. Metcalfe.] Among the women? Mostly among the women; oh yes, Mr. Lucas did not dispute.

6001. President.] The disputes were between the matrons and Mrs. Lucas? Yes. I will give you an instance: it was the time the pigs were going about the place; there was great abuse going on then, but I could not understand it—I only saw it at a distance.

6002. Were there pigs running about there then? Not when I went there first, but I brought them there by express orders from Mr. C. Cowper, and they multiplied and increased.

6003. What was the row about? Something appeared in the papers about Mr. Parkes coming down and finding a lot of pigs running about the place. There was an article in the papers to the effect that the pigs were running about in the dormitories and kitchen, and that created a great sensation, of course. One was blamed for making a bad report, and another was blamed for putting out a report that was without foundation, and the women—the matrons—had a dispute in my presence, a considerable pace off, and I just wrought on and did not pay any attention to it.

6004. Was Mrs. Lucas taking part in this dispute? Yes; I think that she was trying to take her own part.

6005. Is she an excitable woman? I dare say she is a little hasty. She may be a little hasty when her good deeds are evil spoken of.

6006. Mr. Goold.] Did the children see this dispute? I do not think that they were there at the time. They may have been, for anything that I remember now.

6007. President.] What time of day was it? It was about 11 o'clock in the morning.

6008. Where were they standing? Just before the office door at that time.

6009. Mr. Ellis.] You said just now that the new moon had some effect upon the girls? Well, there were several rows while I was there, and yet everything was particularly quiet for a fortnight before. You never could get any indication. You might think that they were all angels, and just without any premeditation they smash the windows and all before them.

6010. Do you say that that was the effect of the moon? No, I do not say that; but almost every month they just broke out in that way. How it happened I do not know, but when they were very quiet Mr. Lucas would say they were preparing for a row. He would come and say, "Things is too quiet." There was a kind of a lull, and when there was a particular quietness and lull, it would appear that something was going on all the time.

6011. Mr. Cowper.] If a stranger went in there he would think it the quietest place in the world?* Yes. When I was living with you, about a fortnight before I went out they were pretty quiet, and then all of a sudden the smashing of the windows was dreadful. I was busy working another time, and two of them came to chat to me, and a few minutes afterwards the row began, and they looked more like fiends than anything else.

Members Present:—

SAMUEL GOOLD, Esq.

MICHAEL METCALFE, Esq.

CHARLES COWPER, JUN., Esq.

John Robertson, Esq., M.L.A., called in and examined:—

6012. President.] I believe that you were in office as Colonial Secretary at the time that the Industrial School for Girls was removed from Newcastle to Biloela? I was.

6013. And you were in office for some time while the school continued at Newcastle? Yes.

6014. You had a long enough experience of it to know how far that place suited such an establishment? Yes, for a considerable time I think—for fully two years before its removal.

6015. Would you tell us the reasons which induced you to think it desirable that the school should be removed from Newcastle to its present position? When I first became Colonial Secretary, about four years and a half ago, one of the first things I had to deal with was the terribly outrageous insubordination of the girls of the Industrial School at Newcastle; and on my way to my constituency for my re-election on taking office, I was induced to stay some time at Newcastle in consequence of the state of affairs there. Mr. Forster, who was then a Member of the Ministry, went with me, and we found everything in the most terribly disorganized state, and in fact the conduct of the big girls to the matron was such as is hardly fit to be mentioned. There was a matron in those days without a male superintendent, and these girls assumed the complete mastery over her; I can hardly say the manner in which they used her; and we arrived at the conclusion (as indeed the law seemed to indicate) that there should be a male superintendent over these girls. There was a gentleman very highly recommended by the Premier of the Ministry which had just gone out—a Mr. Clarke—and this gentleman obtained the appointment; and his wife (a most exemplary woman) and himself took charge of the place for some time, and I think for nine or ten months the thing went on well—I mean considering the class of girls that the elder girls were. But from some neglect on the part of Mr. Clarke, and from some harshness in the way of cutting the girls hair, and thrashing them, he lost moral power over them, and we were obliged to remove him. We then thought that Mr. Lucas—whom I have known for many years, and who had a very high character for philanthropy—a man who had done much among the poor of Sydney, in aiding them and restoring them to industrial pursuits—and we thought thought it might be well to try whether Mr. Lucas and his wife could manage these girls. So Mr. Lucas and his wife were sent to Newcastle. They had not been there long before the conduct of the girls was even worse than before; to such an extent that some of them ran about along the top of the building—a high building—completely naked. They exposed themselves naked at the windows, and their conduct was outrageous in the highest degree. We then thought—and this was the opinion of all those who had the opportunity of overlooking the place, that the position of the institution was a bad one. The whole place was quite overlooked by the townspeople, and it was in a seaport town. Wherever you walked, or at any rate on two sides of the place, those who were walking outside the institution could overlook it and could talk to the girls; and we thought that this was unseemly and a reason for the disorders that took place. Indeed the girls used to break out and go and stay a night on board one of the vessels, and then go back, or they would stay in the bush; they were utterly unmanageable. It could not very well be otherwise—though no one would think it could be so bad—when all the idlers about the town, and the sailors and people congregated round the institution and overlooking it in times of these revolts. They were perfect revolts. They used to illuse the mistress and the superintendent and destroy the public property, and do quite as they liked; we therefore thought it best to move them. By moving to Biloela we thought that they would be more immediately under control, and there would be the means of more immediate reference, and there would not be that power of overlooking the place on the part of the public, or of ill-conditioned people coming round the fences and talking through the fences to the girls. By moving them to Biloela we did not think that we should have a highly suitable place for them—which it is not—but that it would be better than Newcastle, and I have no doubt that it has so turned out; but a very short time after we removed them to Biloela it became quite apparent that however good Mr. and Mrs. Lucas might be, and however kindly disposed towards the girls, and though they wished to be useful to poor people, still that they were wanting very much in some of the qualifications which were necessary; and that being so, I induced Mr. Cowper, who had shown some interest in the matter, to see what help his being up there could be. I thought that his residing on the island would strengthen the position of Mr. Lucas, and that his whole character and position would have a moral influence over the girls; which I have no doubt they had for some time; and it was advantageous also, Mr. Cowper being a Superintendent of Police, for him to be up there, in consequence of ill-mannered people in boats, usually on Sundays, calling out to the girls and misbehaving themselves. It was thought that, by stationing a Superintendent of Police on the Parramatta River much of that might be done away with, and that at the same time that part of the district of Sydney, which had been much neglected by the Police, would be better protected. There being a building also there, and the Government of the day requiring the premises which had been allotted to Mr. Cowper as a Superintendent of Police in Sydney, at the old Battery, we thought that he could remove to this place. The Government required the house for the Military, and Mr. Cowper removed from it up to Biloela. There were all these reasons influencing the Government, and the hope that much good would come of it. No doubt for some time this went on well, and Mr. Cowper succeeded in inducing several ladies to take an interest in the institution, and the thing seemed to be going on well, but from some want of temper, I rather think, on the part of Mrs. Lucas, things did not go on so well latterly, and I came to the conclusion that the better way would be to make a complete change in the law with regard to the institution, and make some other provision for the older and worst-behaved girls, and to see if some arrangements might not be made by which the younger children—those who had been necessarily pure from their extreme youth—might be boarded out with respectable people willing to take care of them. That was the idea I had, but that was not in accordance with the law as it stood, and we did nothing towards it—we had no opportunity. I had made an attempt, not very long before, to board out in like manner the elderly people in the Liverpool institution. Great numbers of these people are boxed up there, at a great expense to the Country, and I think that if some of them were allowed to live with respectable people who would be glad to take them, it would be cheaper to the Country and more satisfactory to these people. The Parliament thought otherwise. The Parliament disapproved of “farming out,” as they called it; and that was one of the reasons why I did not propose the matter with regard to the young children of whom I have spoken. It will be seen that there is a great amount of success arrived at with regard to these girls. When they went to Biloela the elder girls were the very worst you could find. I suppose it would be hard to find worse in the whole world; and in about nine months twenty-seven of them were apprenticed out, and some were given back to their friends; and I believe that in a very few instances did those children fail who were so apprenticed out. They did quite as well as one could hope girls of that class could do. I know several in the country districts who have behaved admirably, and therefore the attempt which Mr. Cowper made when he first went to Biloela had a considerable amount of success. I think now that if the girls were properly dealt with, something might be made of them. I think it will be found that there are few of them really unmanageable girls; but the law is such that they must be all put together there, or you must let them go. While at Newcastle, we prosecuted some of the girls, and they were sent to gaol for destroying public property—that was I believe the charge—and in that way some trial was made, but they did not care about it. Some of these girls were unmanageable, but as a whole they are not so; there are some. These were the reasons why we removed the school from Newcastle to Biloela.

6016. At the time you moved them, there was no other place but Biloela available for their reception? There was certainly no other place whatever. We had a great indisposition to send them to that place at all, because of its old penal character; there was a great indisposition to do it; and if we could have got other buildings we would not have sent them there. As it was, we changed the name of the place and called it “Biloela”—we no longer call that part of the island “Cockatoo.” That indicated a great indisposition to send them there, but there were these fine old buildings, plenty of room, a healthy island, in many respects very suitable. No doubt there was too much of the gaol aspect, but there was no building available elsewhere, and what little money we had to expend was nearly granted for repairs to public buildings, and the repairs made were pretty much those which must have been made for the preservation of the buildings. Having regard to the cost, we did the only thing we could do; it would have been impossible to put up new buildings, and the necessity of removing the girls from Newcastle was very urgent.

6017. Then it was not because you thought Biloela the most desirable place to be fixed upon, but it was more the urgency of the move required, and there were the buildings ready to a certain extent? Yes. In fact, it was the only place we could use. We thought of Port Macquarie, but that had just as much of the penal character as Biloela, and the latter had the advantage of being near to Sydney, where we could overlook overlook over them at once and correct irregularities. We had no other buildings. Another advantage was gained by removing them from Newcastle. Dr. Manning was of opinion that the building there was suitable for a certain class of lunatics, and it did enable us to relieve the asylums to the extent of some 200 people. It was urgently wanted, and it was a tremendous advantage getting a building for that purpose.

John
Robertson,
Esq., M.L.A.

6018. Do you not think that the proximity of the institution to the dock, where there are always a number of sailors knocking about, is a disadvantage? Yes, no doubt it is; but I do not know of a site where men would not be knocking about, and I have yet to learn that men under strict discipline are less manageable than mobs of young larrikins outside. At any rate, they are clear of that element, and where can you put them—where is the place where boys cannot climb over the walls? It is more difficult to go there than to any other place, and we never had any trouble while I was in office about sailors from the men-of-war. Their conduct was always exemplary, except in the case of one ship—the American ship—whose men behaved badly; but the officers at once put the thing down. We had no power to serve the sailors and larrikins at Newcastle as the American naval officers served their men. They dressed them down and cured the evil at once, while we could have done nothing of that kind. I think in that regard the place was as clear of objection as a place could be, unless you can find a place where these people cannot go. I do not know of such a place. Biloela is certainly not the place I should have chosen, because of its old convict associations, and because the buildings were more suitable for a penal establishment than for the girls, although they were good buildings, clean, and light and airy, and well cared for.

6019. Then, as I understand you, Mr. Lucas was appointed on the score of his having a character for philanthropy? Yes, as I happen to know he kept up at his own charge for many years of his life a system of affording relief to poor people. He devoted himself, and his wife devoted herself, and gave food and the use of his premises to the care of poor wretched wandering people, giving them a place to sleep in and finding them food. This went on for many years; and he was a man of reputable character, and I am inclined to think that had it not happened that he was in some way misled by other people, he would have carried out properly the arrangement with Mr. Cowper, which arrangement he entirely concurred with.

6020. Was he consulted about it? Oh yes. In fact, it was apparent that the place could not go on as it was, when I asked Mr. Cowper to go up there.

6021. Did it appear to you that there was a want of judicious firmness on the part of Mr. Lucas? Before Mr. Cowper went up there to take any interest in the management, he had to go as Superintendent of Police with nine policemen.

6022. I understand you to say that you are in favour of the boarding out system with regard to destitute children? I think so. I think that the crowding of so many of them together—poor little things, who cannot know any harm, as they grow older they are injured by the older ones who are brought in from the streets—young prostitutes who are brought in there. I think that they injure the young children—it must be so. That is the fault of the law.

6023. Do you not think that it is more desirable they should be if possible put out upon farms, where they would grow up used to the kind of life they would have to live afterwards, rather than that they should be brought up in an institution like so many machines, without any individuality about them? When we took the girls to Biloela, I thought that by giving them poultry, pigs, and any amount of fowls, so that they might have eggs—and by giving them cows so that they might learn to milk, and to do such things as they would have to do if they were living in the house of a small farmer up the country,—that it would be a good plan. So we sent them cows and poultry and ducks and pigs.

6024. Are you aware that with the exception of a very few the girls were not taught systematically to milk? I am not aware of it; if that is the case it is contrary to the intention. The object was that they should all learn and do it when they went out into the country. I thought that it was nonsense to train these girls for an institution life, and that the better way would be to send them where respectable people could be got to look after them. They might be easily disposed of in the country. For example, take a town like Parramatta: I will be bound that there are many ladies there who would be quite willing to have an eye to these girls if they were placed out with respectable individuals in the lower ranks of life; and in that way perhaps ten or a dozen might be spread out in Parramatta, and these ladies would have an opportunity of seeing them occasionally, and they might see the money paid for these children. Thus they would be brought up as respectable characters, and would not be contaminated by being with prostitutes. They would be brought up in respectable families, and would be overlooked by a committee of ladies, who could not be suspected of wishing anything else than the welfare of the children. This could be done at a far lower rate than the cost of keeping up this institution. I however think that there must be some place provided for the young vicious girls—the young prostitutes.

6025. With regard to the younger children—do you not think that they might be sent to Randwick? Yes. I would separate them entirely from the prostitutes.

6026. You are of opinion that there is a class of persons in the country to be found willing to take charge of these children, and fit to be trusted with them? Yes, I am perfectly convinced of it; there are numbers of people who having no children of their own would be very glad if the law gave them possession of children.

6027. Is it not the fact that a child at a very early age becomes useful in the country? Yes, undoubtedly; but the only danger is that the thing may be abused. The child might be ill-used. The plan would be to have some Board of persons who would see how the children were getting on. Supposing that eight or ten children were sent to Parramatta, or Liverpool, or Maitland, and divided among the farmers in that neighbourhood, and I think that could be done—that would be far better than this system.

6028. To what extent was the system of boarding out the aged and infirm ever carried out here? It was not carried out. It was a proposition of mine, but a hubbub was got up in Parliament about it, although we never intended that the people should go out unless they were willing.

6029. Are you aware that this system has been carried out with great success with regard to the Greenwich Hospital? Yes, I have heard so.

6030. And that the old people there have gone out so quickly that now it is almost empty in consequence of the adoption of this system? Yes, I think that many people would be willing to take these old men—who would be much happier away from the institution—and would give them food and raiment, and they would have enough to find them in food and clothes and tobacco. The old men would be much better off; they could garden a little, rear poultry and pigs, and those sort of things, and that would be better than spending spending their time idling about as they do. I think that it would be the best way; but I observe that when Parliament gets a cry it is no use contesting. You may as well give it up for the time until people come to their senses. While the idea was that it was farming these people out, it was no use going on with the proposition. I suppose if it is proposed to send these little children out, the whole cry will be that it is "farming out," because we hear of cases of baby-farming in England. I believe that the proposition would be met with great opposition, but I am perfectly satisfied that it is a proper one.

6031. Do you not think that the public schools are now so much scattered throughout the country that provision could be made for sending them to school? No doubt of it. I thought at one time that the teachers of the public schools might have some power or control over them, and over the people in whose charge they were placed, but I am afraid that it would take up too much of their time; but I think that committees of ladies willing to look after the children could easily be obtained.

6032. Do you see any objection, supposing that the expense per head were not increased, to the appointment of inspectors, or an inspector to go about through the country and see that these children were looked after? That might be done. I think that people could be found who would be in communication with some inspector; but in either of these ways it could be done at less expense than is caused by keeping up this institution. I think that these children cost something like £35 apiece, and you could send them to a good boarding school for that. The reason why there was a necessity for something of the kind was the utter impossibility of governing the outrageous ones and controlling them. You must have some way of coercing them.

6033. Were you at all aware when you were in office that the use of the cane in the establishment was very frequent? No; for a long time after the ill usage of the children by Mr. Clarke it was prohibited; I hope it was not so bad as was alleged, but at any rate it was so bad that we prohibited the use of the cane; but ultimately a letter was written at my instance to the superintendent, Mr. Lucas, saying that it was not intended entirely to abolish the use of the cane, but that it was only to be used by the female officers, and by them only with great moderation.

6034. If it has been used by the superintendent himself, that is not in accordance with his instruction? It is absolutely contrary to the instructions. I thought it was highly improper that a male superintendent should beat the girls.

6035. Has the state of things with regard to the superintendent and his wife ever come under your observation in such a way as to suggest to you that it was undesirable to appoint a husband and wife to these positions, seeing that complaints made against the wife must necessarily go to the husband, and that therefore the temptation presents itself, from feelings quite natural in a husband, to maintain his wife in an injudicious course? No doubt there is that objection; but on the other hand, you can always find objections to having single men and single women in the position of superintendents and matrons in an establishment of the kind. In fact, it all depends on the people. If the people turn out suitable, I do not think that marriage should be any bar to their holding the positions; and on the other hand, their not being married should be no bar either. But I should not like to lay down absolute rules for guidance in that matter. So long as Mrs. Lucas could be managed by her husband, there was less trouble; but Mr. Lucas plainly told me that there were times when he could not manage his wife. Many men find that out, I think. I remember on one occasion Mr. Cowper writing me a letter of complaint. I remember that it was a letter of complaint about Mrs. Lucas, and Mr. Lucas came to me and said that he could not very well help what had occurred on the part of his wife—that it was a misunderstanding on her part—and that if the matter was allowed to drop, the thing would go on all right; and I then suggested to Mr. Cowper to withdraw the letter, which he did, and for some time matters went on right enough. It seemed that sometimes there was a little temper on Mrs. Lucas's part.

6037. There is one paragraph there which bears special reference to Mrs. Lucas? Yes. Mr. Lucas came to me and said that he thought they would be able to go on and manage the place better. I do not think that there is anything to be said against Mrs. Lucas but that she is a little bad-tempered sometimes.

6039. Mr. Cowper's course of action is in no way to be looked upon as an interference without authority, on his part? Certainly not. He was sent up there on purpose. For example, there were times when these girls required, I think, to be put into strait-jackets by the police, and it was a rather doubtful thing to trust this power to the superintendent. Sometimes the public property was being destroyed there, as it had been at Newcastle, though there has never been at Biloea anything at all approaching the conduct at Newcastle. I attribute that to the fact of their knowledge that Mr. Cowper was there, because there at once was the power of restraint.

6040. Mr. Cowper.] Was it not the fact that at first no one would take the girls as apprentices? Yes. I attribute that to the wretched conduct of the Press of this city. They were continually publishing paragraphs tending to bring discredit upon the institution—"Biloela again," and "Here's Biloela again"—they were always putting in some story about the place, and they made the most of everything. This kind of thing did a great deal of harm. I think that the newspapers did these poor wretched girls infinite injury, by publishing these instances in which they misconducted themselves. The girls read the newspapers, and no doubt they thought that it was a clever thing to do to have their names in the papers; and they used to say—"I will give them something else to put in the paper next week." I think that the Press did a great deal of harm; and the first renewed favourable stir was the letter published by Mr. Cowper, in which he endeavoured to induce people in the country to take these girls into their service.

6042. Do you think it is desirable to have, in such a position, a person who is unable to write his own reports? Unquestionably it is not; but it is difficult to find other qualifications; and we were informed that this man had the highest qualifications.

6043. But were you aware of his being ignorant to such an extent as now appears? I was not; but I do not think that if I had been aware of it, and he had been qualified in every other way, his literary ignorance would have frightened me and prevented my appointing him.

6044. As a matter of fact, you were not aware of it? No.

6045. And if he were an able administrator you would overlook his ignorance? Of course. It is so difficult to get people who are suitable for the care of such places at all—people who will make allowances for the wretched training or want of training of these girls from the streets. If there was a man who was more likely than any other to make allowances for these unfortunate girls, and to influence them, it was, as I thought at that time, Mr. Lucas.

6046. He had a high character for kindness of disposition? Yes, nothing could exceed his character; he had passed a lifetime of service among people of the same class, and had, as I suppose you are aware, kept that night-refuge for many years at his own charges. If any one gave him any help, so be it, but he did not ask it; he received no pay for it in any way; and he did this throughout almost a lifetime. I thought, at the time, that we were exceedingly lucky in getting him.

6047. In point of fact, did not people press his claims on the Government, and say that he was the proper person to take charge of such an establishment? Nothing could be higher than his recommendations.

6048. Were you aware that the children were locked up at dark in the dormitories, without chairs, or tables, or lights in the room; a room in which there was no light, save the glimmer from a lamp hung in the passage outside? No, I was not aware of that; but I am aware that during the time I was Colonial Secretary, up till almost just before I left office, Mr. Cowper had endeavoured to form some amusements for the children, and they used to be out in the dining-room of an evening. These amusements were, I think, the cause of the dissatisfaction that existed between Mr. Cowper and Mrs. Lucas.

6049. Why was Mrs. Lucas dissatisfied with Mr. Cowper? I do not know. She thought, I suppose, that he was taking from her a certain amount of control, and she preferred that the girls should not have so much amusement.

6050. She made that representation? Yes, I think so. That came to me somewhere on the papers, I think.

6051. Mr. Cowper.] Was it not one of the things about which Mr. Lucas said that there should be no complaint in future? Yes. I thought that Mrs. Lucas had misconceived the thing, and thought that that which was doing them good was doing them harm. I thought that the best thing was for Mr. Cowper to withdraw his letter.

6052. President.] Does it not seem to you highly undesirable that children should be left in this way in the dark, or partially in the dark, locked up by themselves? Yes, there is no doubt about it. I should hardly think they were left so.

6053. The evidence shows that it undoubtedly is so? It is so now?

6054. It is so now—from sundown they are shut up almost in the dark? It is shameful.

6055. I believe that it was also while you were in office as Colonial Secretary that the "Vernon" was removed from the position which she occupied down near Garden Island to the neighbourhood of Biloela? It was.

6056. Would you tell us what your ideas were with regard to that removal? Well, we found that the boys were not being apprenticed, and that very few had been apprenticed to a seafaring life—that nearly the whole of them had gone into the country; and I thought that, as well as learning what they learnt on board the ship, it was as well to have some other employment for them; and there being plenty of garden ground at Biloela (it had cost an immense sum of money in years gone by), that they might learn gardening and the kind of pursuits in which they would be employed when they went out to service—that they could work in that garden and grow vegetables for themselves and for the girls. And I think that up to the time when I left office that was eminently successful. I forget the whole of the reasons why we removed them, but that was one. There was no advantage in their being down the harbour.

6057. It has been represented to us that since the vessel has been away from the lower part of the harbour, where she was near to other ships, and particularly to the ships of war, the boys have lost the example of smartness set before them, and they have not now got such models to work up to; it is also said that captains of ships do not now see them, and that therefore very few are apprenticed to ships: the officers of the ship seem to think that it would be desirable to have the vessel down the harbour? I have no doubt that the officers of the ship would like very much to play the grand naval officer, and that they do not approve of gardening or doing useful things. I know that the officers of the ship (although in other regards excellent public servants) liked it better when there were more of them, and less to do, but I cannot think that there can be any particular value in what you speak of. I cannot see that the change would be of any value. The boys behave well at Biloela, I believe, and the gardener there is, I believe, an excellent gardener, and altogether they are doing very well there. As for the seagoing part of the matter, very few of them had been apprenticed to ships for a long time before I thought of moving them. I think I had been Colonial Secretary for two years before the vessel was removed up to the Parramatta River.

6058. Were you ever aware that the Commodore was anxious to have a number of these boys apprenticed to the Navy? No, he never applied to me.

6059. Then, if it has been represented to us that the Commodore did wish to have these boys, and that it was thought desirable to apprentice them to Her Majesty's Navy, you know nothing of it? No application was made to me. Of course I have not the papers here, but I am pretty clear that there never was an application on the subject made to me. If Mr. Parkes had refused them to the Commodore, then the matter would not come before me, and that system would go on until some day the Commodore would make another application to me, when I should consider what Mr. Parkes had done; but I am convinced that no application was ever made to me.

6060. The evidence is, that when the Commodore wanted the boys, a great many volunteered to go, but they could not be apprenticed, as the Government would not allow them to be apprenticed to English ships, and as they would have to join the Navy for a certain number of years—Do you see any objection to their joining the Navy? That was not the question. You asked me if I had ever refused.

John
Robertson,
Esq., M.L.A.
22 Aug., 1873.

6061. Do you see any objection to the course? Well, I think I would rather see them in the service of the people of the Country who have paid for them, and in the service of our own marine; but still I do not think that I should have refused the application.

6062. Mr. Metcalfe.] I understood Captain Mein to say that a great many shipowners wanted the boys, and were not allowed to have them? I do not remember how that may be, but I know what I would do. If a gentleman came here as master of a ship and wanted to take these boys, and we had no knowledge of him, I should not allow him to have the boys.

6063. But the large regular traders—vessels such as the “La Hogue,” which come here every year—do you see any objection to these boys going in such ships as those? I would much prefer apprenticing the boys to colonial owners, whom we could find at any time when we wanted to know about the boys.

6064. President.] The evidence shows us that a great many of these boys are anxious to go to sea, but that they cannot go because the number of colonially owned ships is small; and it is said that they could be taken, if permitted to go, in the regular traders between here and England? I tell you frankly that I prefer, if we are to apprentice these boys to ships, to apprentice them to a shipowner who lives here, and whom we can always get at, rather than apprenticing them to a shipowner in London.

6065. But suppose you could not get colonial owners to take these boys? I would let them go if they wished. I should be guided by the wish of the boy.

6066. Mr. Metcalfe.] Then if a particular boy wished to be a sailor you would allow him to go? Yes, certainly. I do not believe that there has been a case in which that has not been done.

6067. President.] The evidence is that the boys are obliged to do what they have not the inclination to do? I should like to confront the gentleman who says so. I know of nothing of the kind.

6068. The evidence is that, though the boys wish to go to sea, they cannot go, as the “Vernon” is out of sight of the ships; that because she is away from the ships the captains do not go to see the boys; and that on some occasions boys have been applied for and granted, and the ships have yet gone to sea without them because the “Vernon” was so far out of the way? Any one who puts forward such a statement as that knows that he is making a statement to people who are easily imposed upon. The owners know very well that the ship is there.

Mr. Metcalfe.] I do not think so. Some people think that the ship has been abandoned.

6069. President.] A tradesman of whom Captain Mein purchased some goods, on being told to send them to the “Vernon,” said that he thought the ship was broken up? I do not believe that there is a shipowner in Sydney who does not know that the vessel is at Biloela. No doubt Captain Mein would like very much to be down the harbour.

6070. But do you not think that there is some reason in all this? I do not believe a word of it.

6071. Do you not think that seamen who would take some interest in these boys come here and go away again now without knowing anything about them? They are easily put off then. They cannot go up the Parramatta River two or three miles, I suppose.

6072. Mr. Cowper.] Do not most of the large ships lie at the Circular Quay? Yes.

6073. And did not the “Vernon” boat lie for hours at the Circular Quay every day? Yes.

6074. So that the captains must have known of the vessel's existence? Yes.

6075. President.] Do you not think that a boy who leaves Sydney at twelve or thirteen years of age is just as likely to look upon this place as his home, and will look upon it as such even if he goes away in a foreign ship? I have made no such objection. I have said that no application was ever made to me.

6076. I think you said that the boys should not be lost to the Colony? I did not complain of the action of my predecessor. It is a very objectionable thing, and I do not think it is such a course as I would take myself.

6077. Were you aware of a fact that has been given in evidence before us, that boys taught a trade on board this ship, and who have shown great aptitude for that trade, such aptitude as would lead to getting good positions by it, as master workmen, have afterwards been sent off as personal servants to gentlemen? There have perhaps been such things. None were apprenticed except on the recommendation of the captain.

6079. You do not think that such a thing is desirable? Certainly not—it could not be desirable.

6080. Have you ever thought of the desirability of having some central Board of administration, or some officer charged with the supervision of these Orphan and Industrial Schools, and of the other Charities aided by the Government—for instance, a central office to which persons should apply for children to be apprenticed from, so that favouritism might be prevented, and that children might not be sent to particular persons? I think that if we had an Inspector of Charities, he might then look after these things and have an office for the purpose. He might do that with other things. There are so few of these children that there would be little business for him to do in connection with them.

6081. Is it your opinion that there would not be work for such a person? There are very few children.

6082. Why, there are 700 at Randwick alone? Yes, but we have not been in the habit of interfering with them.

6084. There were some clothes exhibited at the last Exhibition in Sydney, made by a boy of nine years of age on board the “Vernon,” and the tailor of the “Vernon” gave evidence that the boy had quite a genius for this sort of work, and would rise if put to the business; well, this boy, instead of being put to this trade, has been handed over to some gentleman to be his private servant? Well, there must have been a recommendation by the officer in charge, and the Minister, of course, would not be aware of the boy's aptitude for any particular trade.

6085. To prevent such a thing as that, could not the officer or Board we have referred to have control over the admission and discharge and apprenticing of children in these institutions—the general charge of all the institutions? No doubt; but then that officer or Board would not be aware of the peculiarities of the children. He would not know any more about them than the Minister, or whether they had an aptitude for one thing any more than another. The officer in charge of the institution is supposed to know, too, that a child is fit to be apprenticed.

John
Robertson,
Esq., M.L.A.

22 Aug., 1873.

6086. Mr. Metcalfe.] But an officer specially appointed for the purpose would have time to inquire into cases? If you are going to put Randwick into it, there will be a good deal of inquiry required to know how these children are to be disposed of. I think that, on the whole, the boys have been very fairly apprenticed.

6087. Mr. Cowper.] But should not certain principles be acted upon, and where the State has had a child taught tailoring, ought he to be apprenticed as a servant? No, there certainly should be some principle to regulate such matters.

6088. President.] Do you see any objection to the apprenticing of boys in Sydney to tradesmen? I think not; but I should object to apprenticing boys in the town that they came from—that is all.

6089. The girls you would not send out in Sydney? No; the girls I would not allow to go into the great towns at all—I think not. We laid down a rule that no girl should be apprenticed within ten miles of Sydney, as a general rule. There may be special reasons for departing from that rule. With regard to the boys, I never remember refusing to apprentice a country boy in Sydney; but a Goulburn boy would not be apprenticed in Goulburn; he would be apprenticed in Sydney or some other town.

6090. Mr. Cowper.] Did you not make some arrangements for the clergy visiting the island? Yes, I did arrange for the clergy. I put on the Estimates £50 a year each for the three, but my successor in office thought, I suppose, that the vote was not likely to pass, and he withdrew the item; but some clergymen have visited the island—we always gave them accommodation to go over; and there was a gentleman, a Wesleyan, who gave great attention to the children. I thought that he paid more attention to the children than any other person did.

6091. Did you not also institute a system of rewards, or try to do so, by making regulations for them, so that the girls might be punished by the absence of rewards rather than punished more severely? Yes, I thought it was better than any mode of punishment, to give the girls rewards, and to stop giving them to a girl who did not behave herself well.

6092. Do you recollect that in your letter authorizing the whipping of the girls, you only authorized the female matrons to do it? Yes, I have mentioned that.

6093. What is your opinion with reference to returning children to their parents? I think it is a very doubtful advantage. Of course, when the applicant comes and appears in every way to be a respectable person, and brings to us all manner of testimonials from clergymen and gentlemen of influential position well known to the Government, representing that the applicant is a reputable person who may be trusted with her child, the natural impulse would be to let the woman have her child, the opinion of so many gentlemen who have the means of knowing her being that she will take care of the child. Well, in this way a great many children have been permitted to return to their parents, and I do not think that one out of three of them turned out well, whereas the apprentices in almost every instance turn out well. In almost every case it has been a mistake to send back a child to his parents. But I would like to have it understood that they are never given back to their parents except upon reference to the police, and with certificates from clergymen and gentlemen in the parents' neighbourhood. One hardly knows what to do in such cases. One is apt to say,—“Well, let the child go”; but in the great majority of cases it has been a mistake. I think that in many cases we have been unwise in letting them go, but I should be apt to do it again under similar circumstances.

6094. President.] Is there anything that you wish to add to your evidence? No, I do not think there is anything more.

6095. Supposing that it is considered desirable to remove the school from that place, where do you think it could be removed to? You will have to put up a proper building.

6096. Have you ever thought of the locality? I have not.

6097. I think that at one time you examined some place at Middle Harbour? Yes, we did examine some land there where Captain Mein wanted the “Vernon” to go—a place where there was neither garden nor buildings of any kind. I never thought it was a very good place. There is a place there, but I do not think that it would be a bit better than where they are. It would certainly be more hid away from the public—out of the way of being seen.

6099. President.] These boys are not taught to swim, as there is now no place where they can bathe? No bathing-place on the Parramatta River!—it is a large place, and I have never heard of any person refusing to allow the boys to bathe. For that matter, he could easily erect a bathing-place with a few poles—rig a raft, and lower it deep enough in the water, and allow the boys to bathe there. It is nonsense to say that he cannot find a place for them to bathe—any one can find a place to bathe who wants to bathe. I cannot understand why the boys could not bathe as well up the Parramatta River as they could at Pinchgut.

6100. There are no beaches up there—nothing but mud or rocks—and the boys have been warned off Cockatoo? That has never been represented to me. If this gentleman had represented it to me, I would soon have found a place for the boys to bathe. I cannot think it is possible that the Colonial Secretary has had this represented to him, and has not found a place for the boys to bathe.

Mrs. Margaret Kelly, teacher, Industrial School, Biloela, called in and further examined:—

6101. President.] You have been recalled in consequence of our receiving from you a communication to the effect that you wished to be examined again, and you are now at liberty to make any statement you think fit?

Mrs. M.
Kelly.

22 Aug., 1873.

6102. Mr. Cowper.] You give the Roman Catholic children religious instruction on Sundays? Yes.

6103. But the rules of the Public School forbid your giving the children religious instruction to any great extent in the school? No; they allow an hour a day in all schools for religious instruction, but it is not to be given in the schoolroom, but in some private room, such as a class-room, and the children separate for it.

6104. Have you a class-room? No; we separate for it. I take the schoolroom with the Roman Catholic girls, and the Protestant girls take the sewing-room.

- Mrs. M.
Kelly.
- 22 Aug., 1873.
6105. You have given them instruction in that way? Yes.
6106. Were you not at one time blamed for not advancing the children as much as you could? Yes, I have been. At one time I was accused by Mrs. Lucas with not teaching properly, and that was the time when I asked you to ask Mr. Wilkins either to come and examine the school himself, or get one of the inspectors to do so.
6107. The inspectors were sent? Yes.
6108. We are told that the officers' servants dine up in the officers' quarters, and not in the large dining-hall—is that your wish? No; on the contrary, I never wished them to dine at my place—I think it is right that they should go to the dining-hall. They bring their food to the officers' quarters, and the knives and forks and plates get mixed up, and that causes a great deal of confusion and annoyance. Mrs. Lucas complains of the things being up in the officers' quarters; and that is how they are brought there—they are brought by the girls.
6109. Have you had any trouble lately with your own servants, or with the girls of the kitchen, in reference to the crockery, or to things being stolen from your quarters? Yes, last month, in July. Our food is cooked in the kitchen, and in the dinner hour our servants take down our dishes to get the dinners. On the 1st of July there were some dishes of mine there, and they were all taken out of the kitchen and broken, and when our servants went to the kitchen for our dinners, they came up and told us that the dishes were not in the kitchen, though they had left them there. I told my girl to see after them, and when she went down she told Mrs. Lucas that they were not to be found, and Mrs. Lucas went to look after them, and found them all broken and thrown away. We went to the office and reported this to Mr. Lucas, as we knew that it had been done maliciously, and he held what he called an investigation—that is, he called the girls in and asked them whether they had done it, or whether they knew anything about it, to which they said "No," and that was all the satisfaction we got about it.
6110. Did you not lose some money lately? Yes. On another occasion my box was broken open. A girl came and told me that my box had been broken open. I went down to my bedroom and found that the box was open, and before I touched it I sent to Mr. Lucas, and I showed him that some one had broken my box, and they had taken a purse and some gloves and ribbons to the value of about £3. I asked him what he was going to do, and he said I was a mad woman to leave money in my box. I said—"Where else could I leave it?" And he said, "I cannot attend to it now, as I have to go down to attend the Royal Commission." Then Mrs. Lucas came up, and I showed her the box, and she said that she would try to find out who had done it. One of her servants, Sarah B—, came up and asked if it were true that my box was broken open, and she said, "Never mind; it was very wrong, and if I can find out who did it I will get the things and bring them to you." She went away, and soon afterwards brought the purse and all the things back that had been taken; and she said, "I give them to you on condition that you do not ask who did it." I said—"That rests with Mr. Lucas." So Mrs. Lucas asked, and I told her what the girl said, and she said—"She must be a deceitful girl, for I have been told that she and Sarah L— and Janey M— were the girls who did it." I heard nothing about it afterwards.
6111. Mr. Metcalfe.] Are your rooms open to the girls? To our own servants; the other girls are not supposed to go there.
6112. The doors are open? Yes, there are no locks to them. I did not think it right that, because that girl had given up the things, they should not be punished. It was simply an encouragement to them to steal.
6113. Mr. Cowper.] That Sarah B— was the girl who ran away? Yes. That is how a great many things occur that perhaps might be prevented if it was put down at first.
6114. Is this the first time that you have ever had anything stolen out of your room? Yes, it is the first time anything has been stolen out of my room since I have been in the institution. Other officers have had things taken several times.
6115. Mr. Gould.] Have the girls ever gone into your apartments and disfigured the walls by writing things upon them? Not in my place.
6116. Have you noticed things of that kind written on the flags? Yes, several times, down by the institution.
6117. Do you know if any notice was taken of it by the superintendent? No, I have never heard him speak of it. I have known Mrs. Lucas to get the flags washed when she has seen the writing on them. I have never heard Mr. Lucas speak of it, but he may have done so. Sometimes the writing on the flags there has been really frightful, and I have rubbed it off with my foot as I went along.
6118. Mr. Cowper.] We have been told by the laundress that she is so much out of the way that she never hears anything—she never hears any noise, or sees anything that deserves punishment—do you think that is possible? I do not think so; she is much closer to the institution than I am.
6119. Have you heard any unseemly noises there? Yes, at my quarters.
6120. Both by day and night? I am in the schoolroom nearly all day, so that unless they come near the schoolroom I do not hear them, and I do not allow them to come near, as they interrupt the girls who are in school; but I have heard them after school hours, and very often in the evening, when they are in their dormitories.
6121. President.] Did you ever say anything to the effect that you were "going to reform," and give up habits of frivolity, or lightness, or flightiness, or anything of that sort—did you ever say that to Mr. Prior? I did not. I do not remember saying such a thing to Mr. Prior. I never thought that there was any occasion for me to make such a confession.
6122. Do you mean to say that you did not say such a thing, or that you do not remember saying it? I am sure I did not say so. I have spoken so little to Mr. Prior since he has been in the institution.
6123. Have you made your coolness evident towards him? Yes, I am sure I have.
6124. He could not help seeing that you had an aversion to him? I am sure he saw it and felt it. I remember making a remark one day when he was speaking of another officer in the institution. He was censuring the conduct of another officer, and I said—"She is going to reform, and it is never too late to mend"; but that was not said about myself. He was accusing this person of being impertinent to him, and I said "It is never too late to mend." He came and told me a tale about this officer, and I told him that I did not believe him. He said she had been abusive to him, and I said—"I think you richly deserve all that she has said to you"; and I said—"She is not going to say anything more to you in this institution; she is going to reform." I remember the time—it was in April. I said it, but I never said that I was going to reform.

6125. Has Mr. Prior had differences with the other officers of the institution? Yes; I do not think there is one of the officers who speaks to Mr. Prior, and it is only lately that Mr. and Mrs. Lucas have spoken to him. It is only within the last few months that Mrs. Lucas came to me crying, and said that she was never so abused in her life as she was by Mr. Prior—that he told her he would not take her out of the gutter; and I really felt for her. I made the remark then that Mr. Prior should not be allowed to insult the officers. It was on one Saturday when she went to the stores, and he abused her most shamefully.

Mrs. M.
Kelly.
22 Aug., 1873.

6126. Mr. Goold.] How long is it since she told you that? I think that is about four months ago.

6127. President.] Is there anything that you wish to add yourself? There is one thing which Mrs. Lucas has said,—that we use no moral influence with the girls. As far as I am concerned, I have always tried to do so, until I was insulted by Mrs. Lucas for so doing, for I think it would have a great deal more effect upon the girls than punishing them has.

6128. How was it? Last year there were some little girls made use of bad language in their dormitories at night, and this was a class of girls that I was preparing for examination by the nuns. I said to one of the big girls—"If any of these little girls make use of bad language, tell me." And there was one girl, Anne D—, who heard one of these girls swear, and she said—"I intend to complain of you to Mrs. Kelly for using bad language." Mrs. Lucas was just coming in; she heard it, and said—"How dare you say that you will complain to Mrs. Kelly?—Mrs. Kelly has nothing to do with the place; I am the person to complain to, and not Mrs. Kelly." When I went to muster I met Mrs. Lucas, and I saw that she was angry about something. I had not been long in the yard when Anne D— came to muster, and then Mrs. Lucas said—"I wont have Anne D— coming down here and saying that she will complain to you." I said I did not know anything about it, and then she repeated the matter, and said—"You have nothing to do with the children except in school." I said—"Very well, Mrs. Lucas; for the future, I intend to deal with the children in the school only"; so since that I have never interfered with the children except in school. The want of moral influence is very much felt in the institution. Moral influence has a very great effect upon these girls—I know it from my experience; but as Mrs. Lucas is my superior officer, and when my attempting to influence the girls was not agreeable to her, it was of no use my continuing it, as whatever she says Mr. Lucas will support her in.

6129. Mr. Cowper.] Do you recollect the starting of the evening school? Yes.

6131. How was it arranged? You asked me if I would assist, and Mr. Cane as well; the other officers thought that as they had so many hours in the day to work they could not well do it, unless they got some rest during the day. When you proposed it to me I said—"Well, I have several hours during the day, and I will be happy to amuse the girls in the evening"; so we went down and arranged for the amusement of the girls. Some were amused with draughts, and some were writing letters, and I had formed a class for crochet and fancy-work. Next evening when I went down to conduct the class I found Mrs. Lucas in the room, and that she had taken the class of girls I had for crochet, to make dresses, and so had completely upset my arrangements. I remained that evening in the room and wrote letters for the girls; I did not go in any more, as I considered that I had been insulted.

6132. Mrs. Lucas thought the idea was all nonsense at first, did she not? Yes, she thought it was a perfect waste of time, and that the girls would be better in their dormitories.

6134. These girls at that time wanted to make dresses, because they were then without dresses or wanted new ones? Yes, they were at that time short of dresses.

6135. And as soon as this interest in their own dresses was over, their interest in the needlework was gone? Yes. Mrs. Lucas may have been quite right in what she did, but out of common politeness she might have come to me and spoken about it. But I know that she did it to insult me, and that she did not wish me to attend the school.

6136. You would have been quite willing to continue it? Yes.

TUESDAY, 2 SEPTEMBER, 1873.

Members Present:—

WILLIAM CHARLES WINDEYER, Esq., PRESIDENT.

SAMUEL GOOLD, Esq.

MICHAEL METCALFE, Esq.

CHARLES COWPER, JUN., Esq.

Mrs. Mary Anne Dunn, sub-matron, Industrial School, Biloela, called in and further examined:—

6137. President.] Do you recollect an occasion, Mrs. Dunn, when Mrs. Rowland had an altercation or dispute with Mr. Lucas, said to be about eight months ago, and arising apparently one night at tea when some disorder occurred amongst the girls? Yes, I do remember it. The girls were noisy, and behaving very badly in the dining-room; they were throwing bread at each other, and we could not stop them, and I went for Mr. Lucas, and just as I went out I met Mrs. Lucas and told her about it, and she said "Was not Mrs. Rowland there?" and I said that she was, but that no one could make the girls quiet. And then Mrs. Lucas left me and went for Mr. Lucas. Mr. Lucas then came in, and there were some words between him and Mrs. Rowland, but I cannot tell you what they were, as I was not near enough to hear what was said.

Mrs. M. A.
Dunn.
2 Sept., 1873.

6138. Did you see anything take place? Yes. I saw Mr. Lucas put his clenched hand into Mrs. Rowland's face, and say something about suspending her, but I cannot tell you the particulars of it; they were at one end of the room and I was at the other.

6139. Were the girls present? Yes, they were all present.

6140. When Mr. Lucas put his hand into Mrs. Rowland's face? I think he did that at the dormitory door, and not in the dining-room, but the girls were present at the time.

6141. Do you know anything of his having apologized to her afterwards? Mrs. Rowland told us that Mr. Lucas had apologized, but I was not present nor did I know anything about it.

- Mrs. M. A. 6142. She told you at the time that he did apologize? Yes, she told me so, and she also told Mrs. Dunn. Brackenregg.
- 2 Sept., 1873. 6143. This occurrence took place after tea? It was while the girls were at tea. I saw the quarrel, but I did not know anything about it more than I have said. I do not know anything about the apology at all.
6144. You saw Mr. Lucas put his hand into Mrs. Rowland's face? Yes, he certainly did do that.
6145. Was his manner very angry at the time—was he very violent? Yes, he was very angry indeed, and violent.
6146. Do you know anything about Mrs. Brackenregg being ordered out of the prayer-room? No, I do not know anything about that. That was at the morning muster, and I never attend the morning muster.
6147. But Mrs. Brackenregg complained at the time that she had been turned out of the prayer-room? Yes, she said so.

Mrs. Mary Anne Lucas, matron, Biloela Industrial School, called in and further examined:—

- Mrs. M. A. 6148. President.] We have thought it right to recall you, as several statements have been made affecting yourself and Mr. Lucas, and as we thought it right to give you an opportunity of hearing what was said, so that you might say anything you wished in your defence. Several of the officers under you complain that you do not support them before the children, and that you behave to them in a manner which is calculated to impair their authority over the children, and they say that this is done very often by your speaking harshly to them, and even rudely to them, before the children? In what way do I not support them?
- Lucas. 6149. They say that you frequently find fault with them in a very rough way before the children? I do not think so. I deny that charge altogether. If I have occasion to complain of duties being neglected and work undone, and I speak to an officer about it, I do not think it is that officer's place to retort upon me. That has been done before the girls. I am but human, and I think that if I am insulted in the presence of the girls I have a right to defend myself before them. I have never stood by and allowed the girls to act improperly in the institution—never.
- 2 Sept., 1873. 6150. It is said that you have lost your temper, and it is said that on one occasion you threw down the keys you were carrying, at Mr. Lucas's feet, and threw the cane over to him, and told him to manage the place himself as he pleased; and that this happened in the presence of the girls? I had no cane to throw down.
6151. Did anything of this sort take place? * That was on the occasion of Mary C— getting me down in the room, and Mr. Lucas would not remove her or punish her, and I said that I would retire and would not be pulled about in that manner, and Mr. Lucas would not take hold of the keys and they dropped at his feet; but I had no cane, and the girls were not present. That was the time when the girl had the nail, and Mrs. Rowland pretended to search her, but she did not find the nail; and then I searched her and found the nail, and she caught hold of me and dragged me about, and then Mr. Lucas came, and I said "What was he going to do?" and he would neither remove the girl nor punish her. As to my temper, I know that there has been a good deal said about my temper—Mr. Cowper has said a good deal about it. I have never shown temper to him except on one occasion, and if that occurred again I should do it again. My temper! Mr. Cowper went to my friends, to one that I have known since I was a young woman coming to Sydney, and he spoke about my temper. My temper; and that has been for eighteen months nothing but a song about my temper. I must say that I did speak about books with Mr. Cane, but the ill-usage of those books I had nothing whatever to do with. I am well aware that it is said that I have a bad temper, but I do not believe that there is another individual, a matron in any other institution, who has to put up with such insults as I have to put up with in this institution. Of course Mr. and Mrs. Lucas stand there alone, and these other people have Mr. Cowper at their back, and they have only to go out of the gate and make complaints, and it is done. Since this Commission has commenced—since I gave evidence here—I got some of the evidence back through these people. Yes, and I am sure that they did not get it from any other source, and yet they knew my evidence and Mr. Lucas's evidence, and of course they spoke so as to counteract my evidence. Of course, it has been said that it took as much plotting and planning as would take a city. Mrs. Connell made that remark to me, and on the first visit of the Commission to the school Mr. Cowper was heard to say that "the saddle might be put on the other horse," in answer to something Mrs. Rowland said about her being ousted. We know what it is all for. I believe Mr. Cowper is carrying out what he said eighteen months ago—that he would not leave a stone unturned until he got Mr. Lucas removed.
6152. Have you always read prayers to the Protestant children since you have been there? Yes. It is not necessary to read them—the children know them. I just commence and they go through with their prayers.
6153. Have you always done that since you have been there? Yes, always.
6154. Did Mrs. Brackenregg never attend to that duty? Never, unless I was absent or ill.
6155. Did you ever order her out of the room? Yes, I did. Mrs. Brackenregg was carrying on a conversation with Sarah H—, as she made a common practice of doing, and telling her to sing a different hymn to the one I told the girls to sing. When I commenced, this girl would, at the instigation of Mrs. Brackenregg, put her hand up and say they would not have that hymn, but some other. 6156.

* NOTE (on revision):—That was on the occasion of Mary C— breaking down the new door, and secreting a nail, which she had used for that purpose, in her hair. Mrs. Rowland searched her without success, and I then searched her and found it, and the girl caught hold of me and dragged me about the room. Mr. Lucas and Mrs. Rowland released me, and the girl attacked Mrs. Rowland and tried to bite her, whereupon Mrs. Rowland threatened to smash her face with a lock she had in her hand. In the meantime, the other matrons, the teacher, and police came, and in the presence of them all I asked Mr. Lucas what punishment she was to have; and he said "As I have no power to put her in the cells, she will remain where she is." They upheld me in demanding that she should be put in the cells, and that if she was not so punished they would not be able to live in the place, now that the girls had commenced to lay hands on the officers. Mr. Lucas still persisted that he had no power to do so, and I held out the keys to him, and they fell to the ground. Mr. Lucas said—"If you all persist in demanding that she should be put in the cells, I will do so." I had no cane in my hand. As to my temper, I know there has been a good deal said about it—Mr. Cowper has said a good deal about it. I have never shown temper to him except on one occasion, and under the same circumstances I should do so again. Mr. Cowper has made it his business for the last eighteen months to speak to my friends about my temper. I did feel very indignant with Mr. Cowper for calling me to account for ill-usage to books which Mr. Cane had given out, and of which I had not charge, Mr. Cowper having requested Mr. Cane to take charge of them. I am well aware that it is said that I have a bad temper, but I do not believe that there is another individual, a matron in any other institution, who has to put up with such insults as I have. Of course Mr. Lucas and myself stand there alone, and these people, being assisted by Mr. Cowper, go to him with their complaints, and after those interviews are still more insubordinate and insulting. Since this Commission has commenced—since I gave evidence here—I have heard it repeated during the next day, and I am certain they could only have heard it from one source—from Mr. Cowper. It has been said that it took as much plotting and planning as would take a city. Mrs. Connell made that remark to me.

6156. Would not have what? The hymn that I wanted them to sing. This girl wanted some other. They always sing a hymn.

6157. You ordered her out for misbehaving herself? Yes. Mrs. Brackenregg kept on talking, and telling me to hold my tongue, and I told her that I would not have that.

6158. She told you to hold your tongue? Yes.

6159. What for? I told her while I was there to conduct the prayers I would do so, and I told her not to interfere again, and she told me to hold my tongue—that she had had enough of that. I called Mr. Lucas, and he told her to go out of the prayer-room, and not to go in there again.

6160. Is that the only occasion on which you told her to leave the prayer-room? Yes, that was the only time.

6161. It simply arose then out of Mrs. Brackenregg's misconduct? Yes.

6162. Was there any one else present? None but the girls and the two of us. This had gone on between her and Sarah H—for some time, and I could not stand there and be defied by an assistant who was teaching the girls that they could do as they thought proper.

6163. Did you ever see a dispute between Mr. Lucas and Mrs. Brackenregg in the prayer-room? No, only on that occasion when I called Mr. Lucas in.

6164. What did you call him in for? Because she interfered with me as I have said.

6165. Did you ever know of a dispute, commenced between you and Mrs. Brackenregg, to be commenced in the dormitories, or at muster, and continued in the prayer-room? No; Mr. Lucas is never present in the prayer-room, unless he is called in; he never goes there.

6166. Did Mr. Lucas order Mrs. Brackenregg out of the prayer-room or did you? I told her to go out and then I would begin the prayers, and she said that she would not go for me.

6167. And then? And then I called in Mr. Lucas, and he said that she must go, and she went out. Of course I have made complaints about her before, and this time, when I told a girl to start a hymn, Mrs. Brackenregg would tell another to start a different one.

6168. The children were all there? Yes, all the Protestant children.

6169. And Mr. Lucas, before them, told her to go out of the room? Yes; of course, I was told first to hold my tongue—that she had enough of that—before I told her to leave the room.

6170. Did he tell her to go out of the prayer-room—that she was not wanted there? No; I told her to go out, and that I would begin the prayers myself.

6171. But did Mr. Lucas say so when you called him in? I cannot say what he said. Of course, the same system was carried on there continually—it was not the first time she had behaved in that way.

6172. Are you sure that no quarrel had taken place with Mrs. Brackenregg before this occurred in the prayer-room? Not that I am aware of. There has been a constant dispute with her ever since she has been there, and the only way to secure peace was to let her do just as she liked, and then there was peace, when I did the work that she ought to have done.

6173. Did you ever in the presence of the girls taunt Mrs. Brackenregg with having kept a public-house? No, not before the girls.

6174. But you have spoken to her about it? I did speak to her of it once, but not before the girls—it was in the verandah.

6175. You did taunt her with having kept a public-house? I think I did, but I must state the circumstances. They went up to dinner at a few minutes past 1, and at a quarter to 3 they were not down, and I sent a girl to tell them that it was a quarter to 3 o'clock, and they both came down in a great passion. They came and spoke to me as I was going into Mrs. Rowland's store, and they asked me who I was—whether they were servants under me—that I should send for them, and Mrs. Dunn spoke in the same manner. I said my position was as good as hers, and that I had not kept a public-house. I did not keep notes of what occurred, for what they said was so painful that I was glad to have done with them, and so I cannot recollect the words that Mrs. Brackenregg said, but she said far worse to me than what I said to her about her keeping a public-house. Of course she did keep a public-house; and my training was not at the bar of a public-house, nor yet flirting in ball-rooms. I think that when she said—"Who are you that you should send for us"? I said—"I think I am something in a better position than you"; and they went on to something else. It was looked over at the time, greatly against my wish, for I think that officers have a right to be at their duty, and if I sent up a girl to tell them the time I do not think it was their duty to fly at me. They have said many offensive things to me. I have been told to go and serve soup out in the Soup Kitchen, and to go to the wash-tub again; and it has been said that Mr. Lucas would have to get a cart and sell tripe. When I first gave evidence I did not wish to bring forward what I might, knowing that it had all to go into print. If I had spent my time as these ladies have done, in looking up things to bring against me, I could have brought a catalogue here that would astonish the Country.

6176. Some officers complain that you take the word of the children before theirs? No, only lately, and when I find that an officer will come and say one thing, and then it will be denied, and from one thing to another, I find that their word is not to be taken; but I have not shown that spirit to the girls.

6179. What is her system? If a girl gives up her dirty clothes to Mrs. Rowland, she of course wants clean ones, but if Mrs. Rowland is doing something which she does not care about leaving, it is a common thing for her to say that the others have not been given in, although she knows well they have been, which I have proved on more than one occasion. I have gone to the press and got the clothes which she has denied having there; but as to that case of Janet B—, I do not know anything about it. But it is a continual thing.

- Mrs. M. A. Lucas.
6180. Do these disputes often take place in the presence of the girls? Yes, sometimes they do.
6181. Have not the girls made comments upon it, and said—"Go it—go it—give it to them!" when you have been disputing in this way? They may have done so, but I cannot say. They can hear what is said in the office, but I have not heard the girls say such things. But I am not a stone—I am flesh and blood, the same as they are. Am I to stand there and have these people insult me—is that my position? These people come to muster, and if some of the girls are absent, they will tell me to go and look for them myself. Is that the style in which an officer should speak to a matron?
6182. Have you ever, when one of the girls has been sent on a message by a matron, called the girl and told her not to go? Yes, I have done it when girls have been sent on private messages—when girls have been taken out of the work-room to be sent to the officers' quarters to wait upon the officers' children.
6183. You have not done it upon any other occasion? No, I have not. If the girls are at work, and I want a girl to do anything, I get another girl to do it—I do not take the girls from the officers.
6184. Did you ever tell Mrs. Rowland that you would run every Roman Catholic out of the place? Never did such an expression escape my lips.
6185. Do you know the girl named Rose O—? Yes.
6186. Did you ever have a dispute about her eating meat on a Friday? No, never. They rose disputes, but they were not about eating meat on a Friday, and very often when that girl was there, the Roman Catholics rose disputes. The girls might have had disputes among themselves about eating meat on Friday, but I am certain I never had.
6187. Did she threaten to tell the priest? Yes, she did, but not about the meat.
6188. What was it about? It was about the cleaning of the kitchen—it was the cook who instructed her to do it.
6189. What did you say to her? I told her not to threaten me with the priests.
6190. Did you say, "What do I care for your miserable things of priests"? I said it was no use her threatening me with the priests.
6191. Will you undertake to say that you did not use those words? I cannot say. I cannot say that I did say so. I may have said "poor miserable things." I cannot say whether I did or not; it is so long ago. It was when we first came to the island—before Mr. Cowper came there—that occurred. The Roman Catholic children have the same privileges as the others—in fact, they are favoured more than the other children, for they have rice on Friday, and part of the Protestants' vegetables, and, to save any annoyance, Mr. Lucas gets 12 lbs. of vegetables more on a Friday, so that they have more than they are entitled to, for they are entitled to nothing but rice. They have all the privileges, though the Roman Catholics never acknowledge the officers, the superintendent, or any one else. They have had every opportunity of carrying out their religion in the place.
6192. Mr. Metcalfe.] You mean the clergymen? Yes, and the Sisters of Charity. I assisted them in every possible way in making and trimming their dresses for the confirmation, and Sister Benedict has said that they would be sorry to lose Mr. Lucas, and they would never get any one else to allow them the privileges that he did; but as to running every Roman Catholic out of the place, I have never had such an idea. The Roman Catholic children are as dear to me as any others.
6193. President.] Did this ever take place—"They all commenced singing the most disgraceful songs, and I went down with the other officers, and we met Mr. and Mrs. Lucas coming into the yard; and Mrs. Lucas opened the door of the passage, and said—"It is easy to pick the girls out here; and here are their friends come to back them up"; and these two girls that she spoke of, Jane W— and Sarah H—, they were sitting at the door perfectly quiet. Mrs. Lucas accused us of being there to support them—to back up these two girls, Sarah H— and Janey W—." Did that take place? You will have to know the whole of that. I did not say—"Here are their friends come to back them up"; but the circumstances that arose are these. Anne D— came in there diseased, and I have heard Mrs. Rowland taunt the girl about the state in which she came into the institution. That girl sent to her for wearing apparel, and she said something to one of the girls to the effect that "Anne D— should remember the rotten state that she came into the institution in." So at tea-time Anne D— called me and said—"Are the officers allowed to bring forward to us the state that we came into the institution in?" And I said—"No; that neither I nor any of the officers had any right to say anything of the kind." Then Mrs. Rowland got another girl to come forward and say that she never said anything of the kind to the girl, and the consequence was that they made a noise, quite a riotous noise, in Nos. 3, 4, and 5 dormitories; the girls were not in the dormitories a quarter of an hour, and these three dormitories were in a riotous state; and when I went down and opened the door, I said—"It is easy known who the girls are." Mr. Lucas told me to come out, and I said—"It is easy known who the girls are"; and Mrs. Rowland said—"What was it?" and I said—"You know very well"; for all the riot was because of her speaking of Anne D— as she did. The girls were calling out about it—about what Mrs. Rowland had said of Anne D—.
6194. Did you say—"As true as there is a God in Heaven, Janey W— and Sarah H—, I will make you suffer for this night"? I did not.
6195. Was Mr. Lucas there? Yes.
6196. Did he say that it was all Mrs. Rowland's fault? Yes, he did. He said to her—"It is all your doing."
6197. What—the row? Yes.
6198. Did Sarah B— say—"Give it her—she wants it"? Yes, I believe she did; and the girls in No. 3 dormitory said a great deal, but of course they were soon stopped, and all the building was quiet in a quarter of an hour.
6199. Did you, on the occasion of Mrs. Brackenregg being sent out of the prayer-room, call out to Mr. Lucas—"Come here and put this woman out"? I did not.
6200. Do you remember having some words with Mrs. Brackenregg about a girl named Sarah H—, and the dispute being kept up until you went into the prayer-room, and then Mrs. Brackenregg saying "Let us stop it, now we have come into the prayer-room"? No.
6201. Will you undertake to say that it did not happen? I do not remember anything of the kind. What was it in connection with?
6202. It was about Sarah H—? No, I have no recollection of anything of the kind. As to quarrelling with her, I should think that she was greatly out of place in saying that she had had enough of it; that was not the place of an assistant.

6203. Do you not think then that an assistant might say—"It is time to stop quarrelling in the prayer-room"? No, I do not recollect it.
6204. Do you recollect saying—"If you do not like it, go out"? No, I do not recollect anything of the sort, nor do I recollect her desiring me to have done with it.
6205. You do not say that it did not happen? Yes, I say that it did not happen.
6206. Do you mean to say then that this is all a pure invention on the part of Mrs. Brackenregg? It is nothing else but an invention.
6207. Two of the sub-matrons complain that on one occasion when the work in the sewing-room was badly done, you came in and spoke about it—you remember that? Yes, I do.
6208. And that afterwards when they were talking to one another you seemed to think that they were talking about you, and went back and abused them before the girls? I did not; I went and told Mr. Lucas. They were making complaints loud enough for the girls to hear.
6209. What were they saying? That I was never satisfied with the work.
6210. But they both say that they were not speaking about you at all? Yes, they were. I heard the words myself. They said that they never could do right, and that I was never satisfied. I should not think any one who had any charge or responsibility could be satisfied with the way in which the work was done. If they were responsible I have nothing to say, but if I am responsible I must see that the work is done properly.
6211. Did you ever tell Mrs. Rowland, in the presence of any of the girls, to hold her tongue and let one of the girls speak? I may have done so when the girl has been called upon to give her evidence. I may have said—"Stop, and let the girl speak." I do not say "Hold your tongue"; that is not an expression of mine, but I may have said "Stop, and let the girl speak." The girls are never brought forward in any investigation but what the officers will interrupt and try to stop the girls speaking. The other day we had a case of the kind. Mrs. Rowland gave her evidence, and then when the girl gave hers she interrupted her.*
6212. Did Mr. Lucas interfere on that occasion? Yes; I think it was in the office, and Mr. Lucas told her to hold her tongue.
6213. Did he not tell you to hold your tongue? He may have done so.
6214. Do you remember a dispute about some clothes, between Mrs. Rowland and Jane M—; do you remember this:—"The other day a girl went to the line and took two aprons off it. I missed the holland aprons, and wanted them for Sunday, and they were found stowed away in the kitchen, and I got them from the girl that washed them out. I said to Mrs. Lucas that these girls should not be allowed to go to the line and take the clothes off it, as it put me out very much with the clothes. She said—'Where are they?' And I said that Janey M— had them, and I found them in the kitchen. Mrs. Lucas said—'Oh, nonsense, they are not allowed to go and do it'; and I said—'There is a proof that the girls had the aprons, as I was three short.' Mr. Lucas and Mrs. Lucas would not listen to a word I said, and he called in the girl and said to me, as I was stating the case—'Hold your tongue, and let the girl speak.' And I said—'I thought that I was the first to speak; but as the girl is to be the first, why, go on Janey M—.' The girl then said, 'I did not take them.' 'Why,' I said, 'I have just found them in the kitchen and got them washed.' And she said she did not take them, and the other girl was there, and she said—'I saw you take them.' And Mr. Lucas said—'Do you think I am a fool, to have these complaints made to me?' I said—'The girls are allowed to take these things off the line, and I cannot account for them if they do.' And then they commenced and insulted me before that girl, and said that I delighted to have rows, and they went on at me in that way. Mrs. Lucas walking up and down and abusing me, until Mr. Lucas told her to hold her tongue"? I remember that circumstance well. It was not very long ago. I think it was on the Saturday after Mrs. Rowland came in to give evidence. It was since that; and if I am not much mistaken, that has been added to her evidence, after she gave evidence here. The circumstance was that I went round after the clothes were arranged in the dormitories, to see that they were all correct, and there were three pieces short, and when I spoke to her about it, she said that they were allowed to go to the laundry and take what they pleased. I said that they did not, and that they were not allowed to do so. Mrs. Rowland, however, still insinuated that they were allowed to go to the laundry and take whatever clothes they thought proper. I said that they did not, and it was proved that Mrs. Rowland was wrong.
6215. Did Mr. Lucas on that occasion say—"You will go to the Royal Commission now and tell your lies, but I have seen the day when a woman who struck my dog or cat I would give her a lift in the ear." Did he say that? I did not hear him. I left the room. Mr. Lucas remained there, and what he said I could not say. I cannot answer for him—he can answer for himself. I was not in the dining-room walking up and down, for when it was proved that she was in fault I left the room. I went out to other places, and, if Mr. Lucas stopped, he will remember the circumstances well enough I suppose.
6216. Do you remember that on one occasion when Mrs. Rowland put a little boy in the corner, you told him to come out and sit down? I never did such a thing.
6217. Just after she was first examined, as she says—"a little boy struck a girl in the room, and I put him in the corner, and Mrs. Lucas said to him—"Come to your seat immediately; and sit down"? I never did anything of the kind. I never remember the boy being put in the corner. I never saw anything of the kind.
6218. Mrs. Rowland says too—"Another time I was taking down on the slate a girl's size for boots, and I was speaking to the girl and asking the size, when Mrs. Lucas called out—"How dare you stand speaking to Mrs. Rowland when I am speaking to you?" Is that correct—did that take place? Not in the way that she has stated it. I was speaking to the girl, and Mrs. Rowland interrupted and took the girl away, only I gave her the order to stop. I said—"You will stand until I have done speaking to you, and then you can speak to Mrs. Rowland." Mrs. Rowland came up while I was giving the girl an order about something else.
6219. Do you remember her shaking a girl for tearing her pinafore, and you burst out laughing at her? Mrs. Rowland?
6220. Yes? No.
6221. Is this then a pure invention on the part of Mrs. Rowland? I cannot say.

* NOTE (on revision) :—In no case is a girl brought forward to give evidence against the matrons by me; for if a dispute occurs, I am sent for by the matron to settle it, and I hear the complaint which is made before the girls.

- Mrs. M. A. Lucas.
 2 Sept., 1873.
6222. She comes and tells us that it happened: is that a pure invention on her part, or do you merely not recollect it? Well, it may have happened, but I do not remember it. I remember on one occasion, not long ago, Mrs. Rowland took a child at muster and knocked her head against the wall, and I was close to her, and said—"You are very tender—your tender mercies are very great"; and I looked over to Mrs. Kelly and smiled, as she was smiling at the way in which the child's head was knocked against the wall.
6223. You say that you were smiling? Yes, Mrs. Kelly was smiling, and I did the same.
6224. What were you smiling at? At Mrs. Rowland's tender mercies.
6225. Do you know a girl named Ellen St—? Yes.
6226. Did you ever punish her? I may have done.
6227. Did you ever drag her about by the hair of the head? No, never.
6228. If we have been informed that you did, is that then a pure invention? It is. The child is there, and you can ask her whether I have ever dragged her about by the hair of the head. I have not done so to any of the children, nor have I tripped them up, as Mrs. Rowland has done—tripped them like a fighting man—got them down and put her knee on their stomachs.
6229. How often have you seen that? Once.
6230. How long ago? It was done to Margaret D— twelve months ago.
6231. Who saw it besides you? I have not seen it, but the girls have.
6232. You saw it? No, but Mrs. Rowland boasted of it. She told me of it herself. She told me that she had tripped Margaret D— in the dormitory, and held her down until she begged of her to let her up.
6233. How old was that girl? A young woman, between fifteen and sixteen I think.
6234. Mrs. Rowland says this:—"I saw Ellen St— where Mrs. Lucas dragged her by the hair of the head, and I saw handfuls of hair come out of the girl's head." Is that true? Never any such thing happened.
6235. How is it that the children are not allowed any night-dresses? They never were allowed them. They are not allowed in their clothing—no night-dresses, only for girls going out.
6236. Do you say that there is any regulation forbidding them to have night-dresses? They are not allowed them. We found it to be the regulation.
6237. Do you mean to say that there is a rule against giving them night-dresses? There is no rule for anything of that sort; we get a certain amount of materials, but not enough to make night-dresses.
6238. Have you ever suggested that the girls should have night-dresses? No, I have not, for they were in such a riotous state that we gave them as little as possible.
6239. Mr. Metcalfe.] Do you not think that these decencies are likely to make them more civilized? Of course every girl that is sick we have a night-dress for; but on other general occasions they have not. They never had anything of the kind under Mrs. King or under Captain Clarke. We find it a great trouble to get material for under-clothing, let alone night-dresses.
6240. What is the trouble? Mr. King seems to think that we use a good deal of calico. Sometimes the requisition that we send in has 200 yards or more of calico deducted from it.
6241. Is it true that at one time the girls had no knives and forks? Yes.
6242. How long did this state of things continue? About July we had a few—a very few.
6243. Who introduced them into the place at last? We sent a requisition for them.
6244. Did you do that when you first went? The requisition was sent from Newcastle for clothing, crockery, and ironmongery, and we were three months on the island before we received any. The children were literally naked, and we had to wrap them up in blankets and put them in their dormitories so that their clothes might be washed. When we took charge at Newcastle there were hardly any cups or plates, and our first business was to go round the yard and gather up the knives and forks and spoons which were buried in the mud. There was no order and no regularity in the place at all. When we first went there the girls were at the broken windows like a lot of maniacs. We were at the island without clothing for some time after the requisitions went in. Mr. Halloran came over, and I begged of him to let us have clothing for the children, as they were nearly perished with the cold.
6245. You said just now that if you told all you knew about the character of the matrons you would astonish us: what did you mean? If I had put down all that has occurred in that institution, it would be something that the Country never saw or heard before.
6246. Why did you not report these things to the Colonial Secretary? It was done in such a way that I could not well do that.
6247. Did you think that such persons as those matrons were fit to have the charge of children? I did not indeed.
6248. Do you not think, then, that you should have reported them? Well, Mr. Lucas will answer that. He made a report at Newcastle to the effect that to manage the institution there must be a change of officers. He has a copy of the letter now, describing the state of affairs then and everything else.
6249. Mr. Cowper.] You have stated that I said I would have Mr. Lucas out of the place in eighteen months? Yes.
6250. Who did I say so to? Mr. Wallace said that you said you would not leave a stone unturned until you got Mr. Lucas out.
6251. That is the man who was working on the ground there? Yes.
6252. Who told you that I made any remarks when the Commission visited the place? I decline to answer that question. The remark was made and heard.
6253. You have referred to my speaking to Mr. Roseby—(that is the person you mentioned as having known you many years ago, I presume)—did he tell you that I spoke of you in anything but a kind manner, except that I said you had a bad temper, and that I wished you had some command over it? Mr. Roseby told me of it at that time. When did you see anything of my temper?
6254. Do you recollect the time when you thrashed Bridget M'— coming up the lane there by the ground which Wallace was improving? She was coming up from the beach, where she was talking to the men in the boats.
6255. Perhaps she was? Yes.
6256. Did Mr. Lucas ever tell you that I heard the noise from my own house, and that if I heard it again I should have to report it? No, you never heard that from your house.* Mr. Lucas never told me anything thing of the kind. I may have beaten Bridget M'——. I have done many things there, but nothing that I would not do to any of my own. Your advice was to punish these girls, and to ask no questions—to take the matter into our own hands and punish them, and the public would stand by us; and that the place would be a failure if the girls were not punished. When the girls are punished it is wrong, and when they are not punished they are let do as they like. I do not think that any one has ever punished the girls worse than you did yourself. Mrs. Kelly and you went about the building, listening to the girls, to put them down the cells for singing a song of their own concocting—"Charley is my darling." When we went to Newcastle I did not suppose that there was any person between us and the Government; and when you came to the island one Sabbath morning you ordered me to let all those girls out, and I did so, without saying a word.

* NOTE (on revision) :—Bridget M'— is a girl that would not give any one the satisfaction of hearing her cry.

6257. Just state what Sabbath morning? The morning that the man-of-war people were there; and you and Mrs. Kelly went out and listened what girls were singing, and you had them brought out by their voices and put in the cells, and even girls that were asleep in bed or sick were brought out.

6258. Did you tell me that any girl was sick and should not be put down? No.

6259. When I sent to the dormitories for these girls, did you tell me then that any of them were sick and were not fit to be put down the cells? I did not. I just obeyed you, and did what you ordered. You told me to go to No. 4 dormitory and get the girls dressed, and I did, and I stayed in the office until you spoke to them, and then you put them down the cells.

6260. Emily W—— was one of those girls? I believe so, and Rose O—— was another.

6261. Would you know Emily W——'s writing if you saw it? I do not think I should.

6262. If I showed you a letter from her, saying that she was sorry for her conduct and asking me to forgive her, would you say that it was not her writing? I do not know. I have got several girls' letters here, but I have not one of hers. I have none from her, but I have some from Ellen J——.

6263. Do you think the girl who wrote this letter would do so if she felt that she had been unjustly treated by me:—"I am very sorry that I behaved myself so bad that morning I was put down the cells, but I am very sorry for doing so, as I am now going to make up my mind to be a good girl, but please Mr. Cowper would try and get me a situation, for I am very miserable here—Mrs. Lucas is always scolding me."? When was that written?

6264. Just at the time you have been speaking of—just after they were put down the cells? I do not believe that letter at all.

6265. You do not believe it? I do not.

6266. President.] Do you mean that you do not believe that this girl, Emily W——, wrote it? I do not believe it.

6267. You think then that Mr. Cowper forged it? I do not say that, but I have known of greater forgeries than that.

6268. You think the letter has been got up for the purposes of this Commission? I do.

6269. How long is it since the girls were put into the cells? Last December twelve months.

6270. Was this girl the one that was sick and unfit to be put there? I do not say so.

6271. Who, do you think, concocted that letter? I do not say who did it; but I do not believe that Emily W—— wrote it.

6272. I understood you to say that it had been concocted for the purposes of this Commission? No, I do not say that. Of course the date of the letter would show that; but I would not put anything past the concoction that is going on now.

6273. You believe it to have been concocted, though it bears date of the time of the occurrence? I will not say that, but it is a wonderful thing.*

6274. Then it is your opinion that this letter has been concocted with a view of being used here to-day? I do not know. The girl may have done it with a view of getting out. I know that the girl had a good deal of attention paid her.

6275. Mr. Cowper.] You thought it was all nonsense taking her to my house and having her cousin to see her before she went away to a situation? Well, the rules of the institution were against that; she ought to see her friends in the institution, and not outside of it.

6276. But this was after the girl had left the institution? If she had, her sister was in the house.†

6277. Is it objectionable, then, in your opinion, that a girl going away to a situation should be allowed to spend the day with her sister or brother or cousin at my house before she goes? Yes, I think that the intercourse should take place in the institution. Of course she was on her road—that is, she had to go to the steamer, which was not very far; what transpired afterwards we have nothing to do with, but the girl was not out of Mr. Lucas's charge until she was given up to the people to take her to her situation.

6278. Do you think that it was nonsense to allow Ellen J—— to meet her cousin at my house in the same way? There was a great deal carried on then that was very ungentlemanly on your part. She was on her way to the steamer and was taken in by you.

6279. President.] What was it that you considered to be ungentlemanly? Mr. Cowper's conduct with those girls in ignoring Mr. Lucas's authority over them. They were brought to feel that Mr. Cowper was over them, and not us. They were led to believe that he was the person to do everything for them. We had no influence over them, for if you found fault with a girl or punished her, she would say "I will tell Mr. Cowper of you"; and the girls in the school knew that the girls going away were taken into Mr. Cowper's house. If Mr. Cowper or Mrs. Cowper wished to benefit these girls, the place was free, any one could come into it; but while we were there no one should have had any authority in the place but the superintendent.

6280. But the things that you complain of are simply matters connected with Mr. Cowper's interesting himself to bring about family intercourse between the girls and their relatives and friends? I complain of the manner in which it was done. If Mr. Cowper wanted a girl for a situation, it would not be Mr. and Mrs. Lucas he would inquire of, but he would come in and say so-and-so was a good girl, and he would take her. I should like to know where Mr. Cowper got his information about the conduct of these girls. If he ignores Mr. Lucas he should respect the office. Most of the girls who went out at that time were very bad girls. For instance, there was Mary S——, he got a situation for her.

* NOTE (on revision):—It is strange that it has not been seen by Mr. Lucas, as girls are not allowed to send letters unless through the superintendent.

† NOTE (on revision):—Emily W—— had not left the institution till Mr. Lucas took her away to the train himself.

- Mrs. M. A. Lucas.
2 Sept., 1873.
6281. Mr. Cowper.] I suppose that you objected to my bringing Maria S—— to my house, and allowing her brothers, who were on the "Vernon," to come there to meet her? I did not object at the time, but things have so transpired since that I have seen the evil of it. I object to the girls being made to feel that there is a superior influence to the influence of the superintendent and matron. There must be no power to come between us and these girls, as we have had to work against it.* A little bit of a child will come and say, "I will tell Mr. Cowper," and the cook would say "I don't acknowledge you—it is Mr. Cowper." All this arose out of the girls being taken into your house.
6282. Is it a fact that I got situations for these girls? Yes, you did.
6283. And had I not a right to choose the girls I thought best for my friends? No; for I think, with due respect, that the superintendent was the proper person to recommend these girls.†
6284. President.] Did you object to Mr. Cowper knowing the character of the girls? No. Many of the girls that went out were anything but good girls—they were very bad girls, most of them. Bella C—— was a very bad girl.
6285. Mr. Cowper.] Would you be surprised to hear that she had written a letter to the same effect as the one I produced just now, and that I have a letter from her master speaking in the highest terms of her? Yes; I have got a letter from Ellen J——, in which she thanks you for the good situation that she has got; but some have not proved good—some have been a disgrace to the institution. I am speaking of the disrespect that was shown to the superintendent and the matron, by the subordinate officers being consulted in preference to them; as you could not have known the characters of these girls without consulting the subordinates.
6286. Do you think that this letter was a concoction:—"On account of me not calling according to promise. I thought it my duty to write, so I hope you will excuse the liberty. Mrs. Lucas seems very much annoyed to think you should get all the praise when they were getting her the same place; but I am very much pleased to think you have been so kind to trouble yourself so much. I will expect a note from you as you promised. I will feel very grateful indeed. That is more than any of them promised to do for me." Do you think that that was a concoction? No; I know the writing; I have had several letters from that girl. But with respect to Ellen J——'s selection, Mr. Devlin spoke about the situation to Mr. Lucas before he spoke to Mr. Cowper at all, and then Mr. Cowper takes the girl and her cousin into his own house, and, of course, what was done for her was made out to be all his doing. Of course it is nothing to us who does it; but you weakened our influence, and you led these girls to think that you were the superior party.
6287. Did you consider that you had very great influence to weaken; had you much influence the first night I went there, when you all rushed out of the place, thinking that the girls had broken out—when you had had the "Vernon" men there all day—do you think you had much influence there then? I had no influence with the girls who were rioting.
6288. So that there was no influence to weaken? No; Mr. Cane had the influence then; but you never saw me run out of the place.
6289. Yes, all of you? No, the other officers did, but I did not. I never flinched from any of them. Mrs. Rowland and Mrs. Brackenregg and Mrs. Kelly rushed out, but I did not.
6290. Do you recollect my saying that if I had any authority I would put the girls down in the cells? I do not recollect that. There was something said about putting them down in the cells. That was a creditable scene the girls going arm-in-arm about the island with the officers from the "Vernon," instead of their being taken up. And there was Mr. Cane hiding himself behind a policeman's coat tails; and when we got the girls in, Mr. Cane had charge of one of the gates, and he allowed the girls to go past him, and he stood there rubbing his hands while the girls took the bottles and stones and destroyed the windows. That is how we were assisted. If there has been anything said against my character I should like to be questioned upon it. I know the two police who came up from Sydney did their best—Turner did very well, but the other was not much use. It has been two years and a half of such battling and worrying that no salary would pay for it.
6291. President.] Is there anything that you wish to add yourself—any statement of any kind? Well, I do not think that it is worth while. I have done my duty as much as it was in the power of a human being to do it, since I have been in the institution. I have served these officers at any turn in sickness and in health, but all this concoction arose because they were not allowed to have in gentlemen on an evening—to carry on their flirtations with the officers of the ships that came into the dock. The commencement of this unpleasantness was in December, when Mr. Lucas found a gentleman in Mrs. Rowland's house between 9 and 10 o'clock at night, and told her that he must leave the place. Of course, they have said that they would soon have us removed. I cannot speak to a girl but there are some improper remarks made about it.
6292. How long has this "flirting" continued? It has got to a height this last few months—some three or four months before the Commission sat. When the "Cossack," and the "Gazelle," and the "Blanche" were in the dock, they got beyond all bounds, and Mr. Lucas found that it was time to make some regulation to keep the naval officers out of the building; and I believe Mr. Cowper said he was glad the regulation was made. He knows it all better than we do ourselves—he has a way of knowing things from the police—that those people have been out at unseemly hours on the island, singing and walking about, and at the first onset they threatened what they would do. Mrs. Rowland said that I accused her of being on board the ship. I know she was there. There are witnesses to say so, who saw her; and she came and waved her hand up and said she was under higher authority than any one there, and she would do as she liked, and she would bring up gentlemen and parade the island with them as long as she liked—which she did do.
6293. Did she say all this to you? No, she did not.
6294. To whom did she say it? In the hearing of one of the officers.
6295. What officer? Mr. Prior and her own girl told me of it.
6296. Who told you? The girl on her quarters. It was her Sunday in Sydney, and she boasted on the Saturday evening that she would bring up gentlemen the next day and parade about the island as she liked,

* NOTE (on revision):—The only thing we can offer them is situations, and when that is taken away, we have nothing to offer in the way of reward.

† NOTE (on revision):—The worst-behaved girls were taken out soonest; thus a premium was established for bad behaviour, for the girls said there was no necessity for behaving well, for they could get out just as soon.

liked, in defiance of the "old fellow,"—meaning Mr. Lucas. And she did do it too; she brought up two gentlemen once, instead of stopping in Sydney.

6297. What was it you said about Mr. Prior? He heard Mrs. Rowland say so, when she waved her hand and said she was under higher authority.

6298. To whom did she say it? To the girls; there was no one there but the girls. I was in my own quarters in my own verandah, and of course I could not hear it all. That is the style they have if some one is near to hear a thing—they will talk to some one else, instead of saying things in a proper manner.

6299. Is there anything else? No, I do not think it is worth while saying anything else.*

THURSDAY, 4 SEPTEMBER, 1873.

Members Present:—

WILLIAM CHARLES WINDEYER, ESQ., PRESIDENT.

SAMUEL GOOLD, Esq. | MICHAEL METCALFE, Esq.
CHARLES COWPER, JUN., Esq.

Mr. George Lucas, superintendent, Biloela Industrial and Reformatory Schools, called in and further examined:—

6300. President.] We have thought it right to recall you, as a number of things have been stated affecting your management of the institution under your charge, and we consider it fair to examine you upon them, so that you may answer anything that has been said concerning you? Mr. President, I would first like to know the position that Mr. Cowper has held at Biloela.

6301. I am not in a position to answer any questions? Because I think it is a very important matter for me. By the regulations of the Executive and the Act of Parliament empowering me as superintendent, Mr. Cowper came and took some of these functions out of my hands.

6302. You can, as a witness, state your views upon that question, but I am not in a position to give either my own views or those of the Commission, with regard to anything? And how is the evidence taken—is it sent in from other parts? I thought it was all taken here, but Mrs. Lucas informed me of matters spoken of in Mrs. Rowland's evidence that took place long after she was examined here.

6303. That is quite possible—witnesses were examined here several times—and matters mentioned by them at their last examination were not mentioned before? But these things have occurred since the last one.

6304. What Mrs. Lucas has informed you of I cannot say; but something you mean has transpired here that has taken place since the witnesses who spoke of it were examined? I find that matters are known, from the evidence I got; and then there is another question—that the evidence for revision was sent from here open to Mr. Cowper, and was sent in to me with the envelope wet. I took it to Mr. Cowper, and he said that he had it to examine. I do not know whether all the members of the Commission have that privilege; but they say that Mr. Cowper hands the papers round there.

6305. Mr. Cowper.] Any member has the privilege of reading the evidence when he likes, and I told you that I did do it? You do not stand in the light of other members of the Commission there.

6306. President.] What is your charge—I do not believe that Mr. Cowper has done anything that, as a member of the Commission, he had not a perfect right to do? I do not believe that these people had any right to know what evidence Mrs. Lucas and I gave here.

6307. Mr. Cowper.] But the Commission told them, when they came here—questioned them about matters mentioned in your evidence? But they had it before they came here.

6308. I am quite certain that they had not? I am quite certain that they had.

6309. President.] Did I understand you to say that Mrs. Lucas has told you of things here that could not have been obtained from the evidence? Well, Mrs. Lucas told me that there was something said about a dog and cat. There could have been no evidence given about that, because the thing happened since the witnesses were examined.

6310. You are under a wrong impression, for all that was stated in the evidence by one of the witnesses? Well, the evidence was given a few weeks ago, and this thing happened quite lately.

* NOTE (on revision) :—No questions having been asked of me to elicit information concerning the daily routine of the institution, I think it desirable that you should know these matters. I therefore append a list of such:—

Monday—Rise at six o'clock; open dormitories, girls go to bath, make their own beds, milk cows, and feed cows, pigs and fowls; clean dormitories, do the outside sweeping, clean closets, sweep quadrangle, clean sewing-room, clean baths, clean knives, forks, and spoons, and tin dishes. Breakfast, half-past 7 o'clock; wash, half-past 8 o'clock; muster and prayers, quarter to 9 o'clock; school and sewing room from 9 till 12 o'clock—from 12 to half-past, pump; dinner, half-past 12; wash, half-past 1 o'clock. Muster for school and sewing room quarter to 2 o'clock; 4 o'clock, milk cows, pump water for baths and other purposes; tea at 5 o'clock; prepare dormitories and lamps for night; 6 o'clock, muster and prayers, and lock up; 9 o'clock, see that all lights are out.

Tuesday—Order of work as Monday; muster time, clean pinafores given out; change of underclothing placed ready for the next morning; boots cleaned in the evening.

Wednesday—6 o'clock,—open doors; keep dormitory doors closed until matrons have received and counted all soiled underclothing from the girls; half-past 9 o'clock, Catholic girls go to religious instructions (two Sisters of Good Shepherd) until 12 o'clock—Protestants sewing; 2 o'clock, school and sewing.

Thursday—Order of work as Monday. School and sewing to 4 o'clock; Protestant prayers until 5 o'clock (Mrs. Tooth).

Friday—Order of work as Monday. Clean the dormitories and bedsteads thoroughly.

Saturday—Bath all girls; examine their heads; cut hair, if needed; clean up everything; afternoon—give out boots, place the clothing round for Sunday morning; in the evening—clean all the boots.

Sunday—Quarter to 9 o'clock, issue library books; quarter past 9 o'clock, muster and prayers; Catholic girls go to religious instructions (Sisters of Good Shepherd); at half-past 9 o'clock, Sunday-school for Protestants (Mrs. Tooth); dinner at 1 o'clock; Catholic children attend religious instructions at 3 o'clock (Teacher)—Protestants at the same time, conducted by the Church of England Minister and laymen; 5 o'clock, tea; collect the library books; muster and prayers at 6 o'clock.

Kitchen—Three girls cook the food for all inmates,—keep everything in the kitchen thoroughly clean.

Laundry—Monday—Laundress and six girls wash all the house and body linen. Tuesday—Mangle and iron; send in to the house matron. Wednesday—Wash all the officers' clothes and underclothing of the girls. Thursday—Fold, mangle, and iron officers' clothes. Friday—Wash pinafores and any other articles that may be there. Saturday—Clean the laundry.

- Mr. G. Lucas. 6311. What is your charge about this matter of the evidence—is it that the evidence with reference to the dog and cat came irregularly before the Commission? I say that Mrs. Rowland could not have given such evidence at the time she came here, because the matter happened since.
6312. But supposing that she did give such evidence, and we all tell you that she did, could she invent the thing before it happened—or how do you account for her giving it? Do all the members of the Commission know that the evidence was given?
6313. You admit that the occurrence took place on the island? Yes.
6314. And you contend that it took place since Mrs. Rowland gave evidence here? Yes.
6315. Does it not appear that there must have been two occurrences, or that one took place before Mrs. Rowland was examined? But there was another case about a girl and boots.
6316. Is it not clear that there must have been two instances in which there was a reference to a dog and cat, and that one happened before Mrs. Rowland was examined, and one after, or that there was but one case which really happened before Mrs. Rowland was examined? I say that it only happened on one occasion.
6317. When do you say that this thing about the dogs and cats happened—on what date? About Saturday week I think.
6318. What date was that? Well, I do not know I may have made a mistake.
6319. What was the occurrence to which you allude as having taken place on that day? I think it was on Saturday that I told Mrs. Rowland that if she had been a man I should have _____ 6320. Given her a “lift in the ear”? No, I did not say that. I said I should have dealt with her different to what I could as she was a woman, for I could not interfere. My reason was that the thing was so cruelly done, that I felt I could almost strike her.
6321. What did she do? She kicked my dog, and once she kicked a cat I had over the table.
6322. Was that when the cats and dogs were fighting in the dining-room, and the children were throwing crumbs to the pigs in the dining-room? Throwing crumbs to the pigs?
6323. Yes? There have been no pigs in the dining-room for over a year. This is quite a new idea.
6324. What did the conversation you spoke of arise about? This that took place about a fortnight ago, was about a dog. A dog came into the institution, and it followed Mrs. Lucas, and because it did, Mrs. Rowland kicked it several times; and I had a little cat, and because it was mine Mrs. Rowland kicked it over the table, while other officers may have more than one cat without their being cruelly treated by Mrs. Rowland. I have heard it said that Mrs. Brackenregg keeps a menagerie, she has so many dogs, but none of them are ill-used.
6325. I may inform you that no such occurrence has been described as you have now described, and the occurrence which was alluded to took place certainly prior to the 4th August? In this-year?
6326. That shows what an entire misconception you are under as to the evidence before the Commission, or as to Mr. Cowper abusing his position; your impression was that we were informed of something that took place since the evidence was given? Yes.
6327. Mr. Cowper.] I would like to know who said that I went there and handed papers about? They said that you would do it—Mrs. Rowland and Mrs. Brackenregg, in common conversation.
6328. I have never handed any papers to any one there? I do not say that you did—but that is what they say.
6329. Mr. Metcalfe.] But if you bring a charge against a gentleman on the Commission, you should be able to substantiate it? Well, that's all.
6330. President.] You see that the only charge you make has broken down, because this evidence was given on the 4th August? That about pigs and dogs?
6331. Yes? There have been no pigs in the dining-room for over twelve months, so that it could not be that.
6332. Whilst upon that, I may tell you that Mrs. Rowland says that after she had given some evidence here, as I understand, you said to her—“You will go to the Royal Commission and tell your lies, but I have seen the day when a woman who struck my dog or cat I would give her a lift in the ear”; and she says that you said this on the occasion when the dogs and cats were fighting in the dining-room, and the children were throwing crumbs to the pigs, which were also there, and she was engaged in beating them out, when you made the observation that you had seen the day when you would strike a woman who beat your dog or cat? I never struck a woman in my life.
6333. She does not say that you did, but that you said you would? Did that happen during the recess—about the pigs and dogs, and that I would take her to the Royal Commission?
6334. It is not for you to inquire whether such a thing occurred, but to tell us whether you made this observation? I never knew anything about pigs and dogs and cats being there. I have told you that Mrs. Rowland kicked a dog of mine, and kicked a cat, and that is within a month. There have been no pigs in the dining-room for over fifteen months—not since Mr. Parkes was there.
6335. Then there were pigs there at one time? Yes. Mr. Parkes made a speech in the House about it, and the pigs were sold—they stopped the supplies of hominy to feed them.
6336. They also complain that on the 1st of July you told them, on the occasion of some dishes being broken by the girls—you told Mrs. Dunn that, “if you lost your place, you would drag every one of them out with you”: did you say that? I said that they would all go with me.
6337. The sub-matrons complain that their authority is weakened by your not supporting them in their control over the children, and not only so, but you have done things which are calculated to bring them into contempt with the children. One of them has complained that you mimicked her walk before the children; Mrs. Brackenregg has said that you mimicked her walk before the children? When I have told her to do anything, she has gone off in a huff, and danced and capered about in such a ridiculous way that I did mimic her.
6338. And some of the children were there? Yes.
6339. It was done at the muster of the children? Yes, it was.
6340. Did you say anything on that occasion? When I asked her to go and look for some of the children, she did not say that she would not go, but she went off in such a style; it was so ridiculous that I could not help it.
6341. And did the children cry out—“That's right, Mr. Lucas—give it them”? No, that is false.
6342. You just took off her walk? Yes.
6343. Do you not think that that was calculated to destroy the respect of the children for her? Her conduct was calculated to set me at contempt.
- 6344.

6344. What did she say to you? She was not bound to go for the children—there was no bell.
6345. What were you asking her to do? To go and see where the children were; and when I asked her, she told some of the girls that it was my duty.
6346. Did she refuse to go? Yes, she did refuse. She said she would not go, but she went; and she went away in that style. I did not know where she was going, but she went away.
6347. Has this refusal on her part to obey orders been a matter of frequent occurrence? Yes.
6348. How is it that you have not reported it? I made a report against Mr. Cane at Newcastle, and there was so little notice taken of it, I thought I would try and go along as well as I could without reporting them. When the girls were rioting, Mr. Cane walked out of the place and did not assist me, and I reported him, and the reply of the Government was that I did not order him to assist me.
6349. Mr. Cowper.] Was not Mr. Cane's reply that, if you had ordered him to assist you, he would have done it? Yes, but he walked away.
6350. But did he not say that if you ordered him he would do it? That was his reply. And I have ordered him to keep a gate, and he did not do so.
6351. President.] Are you aware that the children are in the habit of leaving the table at meal-times without finishing their meals, and that they carry their food away from the table in their hands, and eat it outside? They do not do any such thing, except those who go to business in the institution. They say grace when the meal is over.
6352. How many are there who go away to business in the institution? Perhaps two or three of the officers' girls have to go; they ask leave, and they go.
6353. Is it not a fact that these children may be seen outside after dinner is over with their dinners in their hands? No; they take their bread when they are done, but they all march out in order.
6354. How is it that there is no water in the dining-room? The children never ask for any.
6355. They have never asked for any water? No; there has never been any used for dinner in the institution since I have been there.
6356. There are no mugs of any kind upon the table? No.
6357. You think that their not asking for water is a sufficient reason why there should be none there. They would be running out for water all dinner-time if they had mugs.
6358. Are you aware that these children are seen after dinner drinking out of a horse-trough? No, they do not. There is a tap in the yard, and there is a cup put there on purpose for the children to drink, and there is a trough under it.
6359. Mr. Gould.] There is a trough that the tap runs into? Yes.
6360. I saw the children drinking at the trough after dinner when I was there? They were drinking from the tap.
6361. No, from the trough? Well, if so, it is clean.
6362. President.] You think, then, that it is a proper thing that they should drink out of a horse-trough in this way? There are no horses there.
6363. Mr. Gould.] Do the cows not go to that trough? Yes. It is put there to save the waste water.
6364. President.] We have been told on authority there is no disputing that the children go out from the dining-table carrying their broken victuals in their pinafores? Yes, they take them out to eat at play.
6365. Do you think that that is proper? They did not all eat sufficient that day. It was a Saturday—a play day with them.
6366. And you think that their carrying out broken victuals in their pinafores is a matter of no consequence at all? Yes, it is.
6367. Mr. Gould.] Has it always been the practice? Yes.
6368. President.] Is it a fact that the girls were at Biloela for some time without knives or forks? Yes. We had some knives and forks, but the Government did not send a full supply.
6369. How long did that state of things continue? They had no knives and forks for months.
6370. Do all the children on the officers' quarters come and get their dinner in the dining-room? Yes, they do now.
6371. How long has that been the practice? Since I was examined here the first time.
6372. It was not the practice before that? No.
6373. At what time are the children supposed to have their dinner? Half-past 12.
6374. We are told that, on the occasion of a visit paid to the institution a short time ago by two members of the Commission and the Secretary, when the children sat down to dinner there were twenty-nine of them absent? That might be. We have got no bell.
6375. It might be so? Yes, but they all came in to their meal.
6376. It has been reported to us that nine of them never came in at all? They all came in to their dinner.
6377. Is it a fact that there is no muster-roll of the children? No, there is not one. The muster-roll got into confusion—the girls were leaving the institution so fast, and one child would answer for another, so that it caused a good deal of confusion.
6378. Why should they not be all mustered at once—why should any of them be allowed to go in or out, until they are all assembled? They all do.
6379. The muster-roll, then, has been given up? Yes; there were so many alterations to be made that now I count the children myself.
6380. Their names are not called over then according to any muster-roll? No. I prefer counting them to a muster-roll.
6381. Do you not think that system is liable to a good many abuses? No, I do not—not when I do it myself. If there are ninety-three children in the ranks I know that they must be all there.
6382. Mr. Cowper.] Do you not find a difficulty in missing a particular girl if there is one short? We had a greater difficulty with the muster-roll.
6383. Do you not think that if you had a roll, and called the names out, it would be better. Suppose you called Ellen St—, for instance, and she answered you, it would show at once that she was there; whereas if you merely count them, it takes you a long time to find out who is away? But I do find out, and I have them there and muster them up. When I have had a muster-roll and called the names over, I have had more mistakes about that.
6384. President.] Why was the muster-roll given up? Because it was more convenient to count them.
6385. What difficulty had you in calling over the muster-roll? If there were any absent, then there was

Mr. G. Lucas.
4 Sept., 1873.

- Mr. G. Lucas. a confusion about it; and the next girl would sometimes answer for one that was away. The girls used to answer for the others. I used to count them after Mrs. Kelly, to see whether the numbers were right.
- 4 Sept., 1873. 6386. How long has Mrs. Lucas been in the habit of attending at the prayer-room? Ever since we have been in the institution.
6387. Were the duties of attending the prayer-room with the Protestant children ever discharged by any one else? Occasionally.
6388. By whom? By Mrs. Dunn and Mrs. Brackenregg—sometimes both.
6389. Did not Mrs. Brackenregg attend the prayer-room constantly at one time? Never; she used to assist sometimes, but she seldom went in there by herself.
6390. Do you remember, on the occasion of your taking off the way in which she walked, having words with her in the prayer-room? No. Mrs. Lucas had some words with her, because Mrs. Lucas told a girl to sing, and Mrs. Brackenregg told another. We have not had any disturbance in the prayer-room since she left.
6391. Did not Mrs. Brackenregg say—"We have had enough disputing, and now, as we have come into the prayer-room, we will stop it"? No; there is too much of the old gentleman about her for that.
6392. Did not Mrs. Lucas tell her to go out if she did not like it? No. I told her to go out, because she was making a confusion in the place. I said that if she could not go into the prayer-room without having a dispute about it she had better stop out.
6393. Did you order her out—did you say to her—"You go out of the prayer-room; you are not wanted here at all"? I did not go there at all.
6394. Did any one say so? When she came out I said—"You have no right to go there to make a disturbance; it is not your duty at all"; neither was it.
6395. Have you ever struck the children? Yes.
6396. What with? A cane.
6397. To what extent? Three or four stripes—four or five, perhaps.
6398. In point of fact, have you generally inflicted whatever corporal punishment has been inflicted on the place? No.
6399. Who has? I think Mrs. Rowland gives them the most.
6400. But supposing that a girl requires punishment, who inflicts it? I do. If I had a cane in my hand I would give a girl a few strokes myself, or any of the matrons might do the same.
6401. Are you allowed by the regulations to inflict corporal punishment on the girls? No.
6402. Are you not expressly forbidden to do so? Yes, but I must have some discipline in the place.
6403. Are you aware that when corporal punishment was allowed in the place the Colonial Secretary objected to its being administered by the superintendent, and said that the women only should inflict it? I am aware of it; but I was recommended by Mr. Cowper to set aside the rules, and by Dr. Evans, and I thought so myself.
6404. What rules did Mr. Cowper recommend you to set aside? He said that I must punish those girls, that if they were not punished the thing would break up. I said, "I am not allowed to do it," and he said he would take the risk.
6405. What risk? The risk of setting the regulations aside.
6406. But what rules did he advise you to set aside? These rules which say that I shall not punish. According to these regulations the cane or the cells are not to be used, and there were no other means of punishing them but those.
6407. Did Mr. Cowper advise you to inflict corporal punishment upon the girls yourself? He said I ought to go in and set the regulations aside, and bring the institution into subjection.
6408. Mr. Cowper.] Do you mean to say that I ever said those words to you? Yes, before you ever had charge there, you and I were walking together, and you said—"If you make a success the Government will not say anything about it, and if you do not do it the thing will be broken up."
6409. Did I not tell you to enforce discipline, and when you gave an order to see that it was obeyed? No, that was before you took charge.
6410. President.] Then Mr. Cowper had no authority there then? No.
6411. Then it was in consequence of a suggestion made by Mr. Cowper, and not in consequence of any control exercised by him, that you did this? Yes.
6412. But I do not now understand you to say that he definitely advised you to flog the girls? Well, that was punishing them, and Mr. Cowper got that allowed so far as it went. It was he that got Mr. Robertson to allow the use of the cane by the matrons.
6413. But Mr. Robertson's letter expressly forbids the superintendent using it? Yes.
6414. We have been told that the girls have had black eyes from the effects of the blows given by you? Never.
6415. Have you ever marked them at all? I think there was one little girl of the name of Mitchell; she took a handkerchief out of the storekeeper's pocket, and I boxed her ears, and my hand, I think, just blackened the corner of her eye. It was not a beating that the child complained of herself.
6416. Did one of the girls complain to Mr. King, the Inspector of Charities, about being beaten? Yes, she was beaten with a cane.
6417. Was she not marked? Yes; that was the one that was marked with the cane. There was a report about it, and I answered it. It was Emma G——, the girl that Mrs. Rowland quarrelled with.
6418. Is it a fact that she was marked, and had the marks upon her when she showed her arm to Mr. King? Yes.
6419. Mr. Gould.] It is said here in the evidence by Mrs. Rowland, that she has seen you beat the child Henrietta M——, and that she had a black eye for three weeks afterwards? That is untrue, because she did not see it.
6420. President.] Did you beat the child? Yes; I slapped her on the cheek, and my finger just touched her eye.
6421. Had she a black eye? It was not black for three weeks—it was for a day or two. You could just see that it was coloured.
6422. Was that the girl who showed her arm to Mr. King? No.
6423. Who was the girl? Emma G——.
6424. What was she struck with? The cane.

6425. How long did she bear the marks about her? It was the next day that she showed it to Mr. King. Mr. G. Lucas. Mr. Cowper was there the day I caned her. She and Mrs. Rowland had a quarrel about a letter that came in a different name, and Mrs. Rowland said to her, "You must have a queer mother to have so many names," and then this quarrel began, and the girl was beaten. 4 Sept., 1873.

6426. Did you ever cane a girl named Anne D—, one of the biggest girls in the school? Yes, I caned her in the dining-room. I gave her two strokes of the cane for giving insolence to Mrs. Dunn and throwing pudding about the room.

6427. Mr. Couper.] You say that I was there when you were thrashing Emma G—; you mean that you left me out where Wallace was working—I was not actually in the school? Yes, you and I were walking there, and a child came for me to go up to the institution, and when I went up Mrs. Rowland had Emma G— down with her foot on her; and when she got up, she took the cane from Mrs. Lucas, and I then took it and gave her two or three strokes, and put her into the dormitory.

6428. President.] We have been told by two witnesses that, on some occasion of your having an altercation with Mrs. Rowland, you put your clenched hand up in her face in a very angry manner? I deny that.

6429. And Mrs. Rowland tells us that you went to her afterwards and said that you were sorry, and that you then made it up between you? I would hang myself before I would say I was sorry for a thing to her.

6430. You would hang yourself? Yes; I never would say any such thing to such a woman as her.

6431. You have thought well of Mrs. Dunn, have you not? Yes, until lately—until this bread racket.

6432. Well, Mrs. Dunn corroborates this? I do not care what she says.

6433. You say that this is a pure invention then on the part of these two women? Yes; it is a tissue of falsehoods altogether. I have heard something of this before. If there is anything to tell I will tell it. I will tell the truth here. I suppose you cannot find two worse creatures in the whole community than Mrs. Rowland and Mrs. Brackenregg.

6434. You could not find two worse persons than they are in the whole community? No, for making up things. I mean that you cannot find two worse persons in an institution in the community, for concocting and scheming.

6435. Mr. Metcalfe.] Then you do not think that they are suitable people to have charge of girls? No, I do not.

6436. Have you reported to the Government your opinion to that effect? No; as I have told you before, I have not reported any one since I reported Mr. Cane. I went on as far as I could.

6437. President.] Who was in office when Mr. Cane was reported? Mr. Robertson.

6438. Mr. Metcalfe.] Then it does not matter how bad your subordinates were, you would not report them? I could not catch them. If Mrs. Dunn came to tell me that Mrs. Kelly had certain things belonging to other people, and all this sort of thing, when they were falling out with each other, I know what they do when they are friends again, against other people. They have just done as much duty as would keep them from being reported.

6439. You believe that such matrons should be respectable people? Yes, and people of good moral character.

6440. Do you think that these matrons are? Not to my idea of morality.

6441. Then should you not have reported them? I have only found them out lately.

6442. President.] How lately? Since the ships have been in the dock; and besides, there is a great difference between knowing a thing and proving it.

6443. Mr. Gould.] But is it not a dangerous thing to make these charges if you cannot prove them? There should not be such characters as these about the institution.

6444. But suppose that you were called upon to prove these points? Well, I suppose I might do it, so far as their actions in the institution go. I will give you three instances of it. The first instance was when Mr. Cane was there. He became very particular about the tidiness of the place, and if a girl had been scrubbing and left a bucket for a few minutes, Mr. Cane would send a girl to get it and take it to the store. Mrs. Lucas was rather suspicious of the merits of Mr. Cane's zeal, and told him to leave them alone, as it caused great inconvenience at times. After a dissension among Mr. Cane and his co-workers, we were told that he was working in that way so that he might bring a charge of mismanagement and untidiness against me. Another time when Mr. Cane was there, they said that Mr. Cowper was taking individuals up to his house to give evidence, and Mrs. Dunn went to Mr. Cowper and she said she would not go any further. Then when Mr. Prior came, Mrs. Rowland and Mrs. Brackenregg joined together. Mr. Prior and Mrs. Rowland were to be superintendent and matron, and then Mrs. Brackenregg would not get fair play, and so that broke down, and Mrs. Kelly would not take any part with them, and she told Mrs. Lucas how they were carrying on. And knowing all these things, I am certain that these are not fit persons to be officers of an institution. I will say that I have turned people out of the place late at night—between 9 and 10 o'clock I have ordered a gentleman out of Mrs. Rowland's house.

6445. How often has that happened? Once I turned him out, and others have been seen there, and this was the final point which made me prevent them coming in there. Mrs. Kelly and other people inside the gate used to have friends in from the man-of-war.

6446. Who? Mr. Beaton and other gentlemen used to come to Mrs. Kelly's and other houses, and they used to stop middling late sometimes, and it was notorious about the place about these people coming in. It was such a matter of notoriety that people used to ask, was not that the place where the whores were kept.

6447. Who asked that? Some person on the steamer.

6448. Who was it? I do not know the individual—some person asked another.

6449. Some person asked you on the steamer? No, asked people on the wharf.

6450. You did not hear it yourself—you do not know it of your own knowledge? No. Mrs. Connell told me of it.

6451. Told you what? Why, that it was said that that was the place where the whores were kept—pointing to the institution.

6452. And you think that that referred to the officers and not the inmates? Yes, I think so; both officers and inmates. I think so, because it is notorious all over the place.

6453. Do you mean to accuse Mrs. Rowland and Mrs. Kelly of imprudent conduct in having these people come to their place? Yes, coming to their place at that time of night.

6454. Do you infer that they were guilty of immoral conduct, or that they were simply imprudent—what do you accuse them of? Having people coming to their places.

6455. But you have associated this with people pointing up to the institution and saying that was where

Mr. G. Lucas. the whores lived? I believe that was the expression used—it was used with reference to my family as well as others, being all associated there together.

6456. Can you tell us of any act of impropriety on the part of any of these women? Yes.

6457. What? I have come home at 11 o'clock at night—at least my wife did, and I went down to meet her at the boat; and I saw Mrs. Kelly and Mrs. Brackenregg come on shore with two gentlemen, and I went in, and nearly an hour after that I went down to the gate and they had not come in.*

6458. Where had they been—do you know? I do not know.

6459. There were other houses on the island which they might have been in? I do not think that they had been in any other house.

6460. Can you tell us anything about them that we can inquire into—have you any charge against them? No. I know that they were out with men.

6461. Who were the men? Mr. Brown was one.

6462. Did you stop at the gate and watch them coming back? I did not. I came back and found that they had not come in at twenty minutes past 12.

6463. Did you go to their houses to find out? No, I asked the gatekeeper.

6464. Mr. Metcalfe.] Did this happen on more than one occasion? No, on one occasion only.

6465. President.] Mrs. Rowland says this—"The girls were locked up, and we went home to tea; and then we heard a great noise, and the girls singing the songs that they have when there is a riot. We went down (we did not wait to be sent for), and as we went into the yard Mrs. Lucas came in and she went to No. 5, and said, 'Here is your friends come to back you, Janey W— and Sarah H—; and as true as there is a God in Heaven I will make you suffer for this night.' And these girls were sitting perfectly quiet; and when she saw that, she shut the door and went over to No. 3, where the girl was who made all the noise; and Mr. Lucas said to me, 'This is all your fault—all this row and noise; it will be a good thing when you are out of the place.' To whom did he say that? To me. In the presence of the girls? Yes, in the hearing of the girls, and this girl, Sarah B—, saying, 'Give it her—she wants it; she will not turn me out of the prayer-room again.' I said to Mr. Lucas—"This is no place to speak to me like this—there is an office where you could say it in, in the morning, and not to say it here before the girls.'" Do you recollect that occasion? Yes, a good deal of that happened, I believe, but I do not know about these two girls being perfectly quiet. They were all making a noise until I went in, when they all stopped. I said to the matrons—"If you will go out of the yard the girls will be quiet." The girls were making a noise that night about Mrs. Rowland telling Anne D— that she was rotten. That was a nice thing.

6466. Then the account given here is substantially true? No, it is not.

6467. In what way is it untrue? These words were not used by me.

6468. What words? What Mrs. Rowland says there.

6469. I am not asking about that—you mean that you did not say—"This is all your fault—all this row and noise; it will be a good thing when you are out of the place"? No.

6470. Did you say anything like it? I may have said that.

6471. Do you remember anything about this—Sarah B— saying—"Give it her, she wants it; she will not turn me out of the prayer-room again"? That part is false.

6472. That has been invented? That is an invention.

6473. Will you undertake to say what every girl there said? The girls did not say anything at all, to my knowledge.

6474. Then you believe that that is a pure invention on the part of Mrs. Rowland? I believe so.

6475. Is it only your belief? I do not think that the girls made any remark at all.

6476. Is it more probable that Mrs. Rowland invented it than that it was said and you did not hear it? I know that they can invent a great deal.

6477. Are you so clear as to what took place that you can say, with the solemnity becoming an inquiry such as this, that these words were not uttered, and this statement of Mrs. Rowland's is an invention? I think it is—that part about what the girls said.†

6478. Is it an invention to say that she said to you—"This is no place to speak to me like this—there is an office where you could say it in the morning, and not say it here before the girls"? They never asked about the office at all.

6479. Is that, then, all an invention? Yes, it is—that part of it, because I know that what one of them will say the others are ready to back it up. I have found so much of it. I am not the first or second superintendent that has been turned out of that institution by cliques like that.

6480. Then they complain—more or less the whole of them—that if they complain to you of the conduct of the girls, you will call up the girls and you will believe them instead of believing the matrons? I never appeal to a girl at all. That is just the reverse of what I do. Sometimes they will appeal to a girl, and the girl will say just the contrary to what they expect. But I never appeal to the girls—I do not think that it is right to do so.

6481. And they say that you scold them for bringing you tales? Who?

6482. Why, the officers? These are new ideas altogether to me. I tell you that whenever there is a bit of a noise four of them get together, and, as Mrs. Connell says, there is as much cliquing together as would take a city. She has often said that they are at it hours and hours here planning things.

6483. It is said that, on the occasion of your birthday, you sang a song in which these words occur:—

"When I was young, I courted the cook—
Most people thought I was silly;
But I knew what I was about—
It was all for the sake of my belly.
Ri-to-rol-de-rol-de-ri-to, &c."

Did you sing that song to the girls? Those are not the words at all, but I did sing a song.

6484. Was that verse I have just read in the song you sang? No, those are not the words; it is very nearly about the thing; "It is true I fell in love with the cook"—those are not the words there.

* NOTE (on revision):—On reading my answers to questions from 6445 to 6457 inclusive, I am of opinion that they are liable to misinterpretation. What I wish really to convey is, that the parties alluded to were guilty of imprudence and not of immoral conduct. I wish this to be clearly understood, as I should be sorry to injure any one. It may be that I am too particular in my notions, still it must be borne in mind that great caution should be used by persons in their position.

† NOTE (on revision):—On thinking the matter over, I will allow that such might have been said without my knowledge, as things were of course very confused.

6485. Did you sing this verse? I did sing a song about the cook, but not this verse.

6486. Is this then a pure invention? I tell you I sang a song—"It is true I fell in love with the cook——"

Mr. G. Lucas.

6487. What is the rest of it? I have forgotten it.

6488. If you have forgotten it, will you undertake to say that these words were not in it? No, those are not the words.

6489. Which part of this verse was in it? There was not a bit of that in it; and what if there was; they dance and sing songs themselves, and they did that time; and it is only because Mr. Cowper found fault with it that they have done so. I thought it was good amusement for the girls. I would sing it anywhere. I have sung it often at wedding and birthday parties. If that is a charge, it is an abominably frivolous one.

6490. Look at the words? I see them; there is not a word of that in the song.

6491. Mr. Cowper.] But if you have sung it so often, how is it that you forget it now? Well, I forget it.

6492. It is strange that you cannot remember it now? I have known it for this forty years.

6493. President.] Will you undertake to say that this verse was not in the song? No. For the sake of argument, what if it was; there is no harm in it.

6494. You think that there is no harm in singing a song like that before these girls? No, I should think not. These are not the words of the song at all. I will think over it, and sing you the whole of it if you like.

6495. I do not agree with you as to there being no harm in singing such a song; but at all events, whether you sang these words or not, you think it would not be at all out of place your singing them? No. I can hear "Love among the roses," a regular bawdy song, sung in the schoolroom by the school-mistress.

6496. What do you say about a bawdy song? I say that "Love among the roses" is a very improper song, and it is played in the school.

6497. And you think that there is more harm in "Love among the roses" than in this song about the cook? I cannot see what harm there is in the song about the cook.

6498. Mr. Cowper.] Is it the tune or the words of "Love among the roses" that you object to? There is a song called "Love among the roses," that they sang in the school.

6499. What part of it do you object to? The words.

6500. Do you know the words? No, I do not.

6501. Mr. Gould.] Did you hear the words yourself? Well, I have heard them sing "Love among the roses" in the school, but it is a good while since—about eighteen months. I think that there was an objection made to it, and it was discontinued.

6502. Who made the objection? I think Mrs. Lucas did.

6503. President.] You said that you had confidence in Mrs. Dunn until some occurrence took place about bread? Yes.

6504. Would you tell us to what you alluded? About three or four weeks ago there was no bread in the kitchen, and Mrs. Dunn sent over to the store to get a loaf of bread for Mrs. Brackenregg, although my orders were that no one was to have any bread out of the kitchen. I took the loaf away from the girl, and afterwards she came and told me that Mrs. Dunn had taken a loaf to her house, and Mrs. Lucas sent a girl up for her keys to count the bread that was in the cupboard or press in the kitchen, where it is kept, and Mrs. Dunn said then that she had borrowed this loaf after my positively telling her that no person should have any bread—that I did not allow her or any one else to take it. And one of the girls said that Mrs. Dunn said—"If Mrs. Lucas does not say anything, don't tell her, and if she does, say I am going to return the loaf"; but I would not injure any one on the word of the girls.

6505. Mrs. Dunn says that Mrs. Lucas and all the other officers on the island have had bread in this way from the stores, it being impossible to get it in any other way; and that this was a matter of constant occurrence? Mrs. Dunn was told positively not to do so.

6506. You told her that morning? Yes.

6507. But has it not been the practice for every officer of the institution to get bread in this way? No, not unless they came and asked me. It was my orders that not even my wife should get bread in that way from the stores. I believe my wife did so once, and she asked them not to tell me, because I would make a noise about it.

6508. The girls were present when you spoke to Mrs. Dunn about this? When I went into the dining-room I do not know whether any of the children were there: I said what I did say to her in a calm manner.

6509. Did you say that Mrs. Dunn had committed a theft? Not then, but the next day I did when she abused the girls for telling tales; and then I said to her—"If I had done right yesterday I should have suspended you about that bread."

6510. Did you tell her then that she had committed a theft? No, I did not.

6511. I understood you to say that you did? No, on the next day I told her that if I had done my duty I should have suspended her: if I had done right for what she had done the day before. My orders were that no bread should be taken out of the kitchen.

6512. Did she not tell you that all the officers had been in the habit of obtaining a supply in this way, when they were short of bread? But I told them not to.

6513. Did she tell you that? Yes, but that was a breach of the rules of the institution, because it was my positive order that no bread was to be given without my consent.

6514. Did you say to her—"You have committed a theft; and if I go out of the place I will drag you all with me"? No, not that at all.

6515. That is what she says you said? Oh, I know all about what they say. I know all that they can say. Mrs. Dunn would be a first-rate woman if she was not mesmerized by Mrs. Rowland.

6516. Do you think that she is so far mesmerized as to be induced to make statements which are absolutely false? Mrs. Dunn was always going on well, but whenever there was any little kick-up she was sure to be in it. Mrs. Rowland, I think, got her the situation, and they always go together. But Mrs. Dunn has spoken as disparagingly of Mrs. Rowland as any woman could do, and of Mrs. Kelly too.

6517. Mr. Gould.] To you? Yes: saying what wonderful things they were to be mothers, running away and leaving their children.

Mr. G. Lucas. 6518. President.] Did you ever have any words with Mrs. Kelly? No, I do not think so.

6516. You have had no quarrels with her then? I do not know that we had.

4 Sept., 1873. 6520. Nothing has ever occurred between you to make her do you an injury? She was always opposed to me.

6521. But has anything happened to make her wish to invent things about you? I believe that she wished Mrs. Lucas's place when Mr. Cane was there.

6522. Has there ever been any quarrel between you? No. Mrs. Kelly expressed to Mrs. Lucas, when the quarrelling was going on with the others, that she was sorry for me indeed, that I should be amongst such a lot.

6523. Well, Mrs. Kelly tells us that this took place: that you went into the schoolroom and spoke to her about a letter—"The messenger had brought some letters, as he does every morning, and the day before a letter of mine had gone down to the institution instead of being left in the schoolroom, and the next morning I asked the man why he did not leave the letter with me, instead of taking it down to the institution. He said that he did not know that the letter was for me (the man cannot read writing), so I said it was all right. The next day a letter came for me and the postmistress put it up in paper, and Mr. Lucas came up and asked me how it was my letter came under cover. I said that I had no idea—that the postmistress had done it, and that I had not told her to do it. He then said that he was annoyed at my saying that I had an objection to my letters going to the institution, as they were 'hawked about' there. I said that I had not said anything of the kind. He said that the messenger had said so, and I said that I did not like the man to make a false statement; and I asked Mr. Lucas to be kind enough to send for the messenger, and he said that he would do nothing of the kind. I said that he should do so, in justice to me. And then he said in the school, before all the girls—"And pray who are you?—you must be Mrs. Somebody." And the girls all went about saying 'Oh, Mrs. Kelly is Mrs. Somebody now.' I felt very much hurt about it. I told Mr. Lucas that there was an office, and if he wished to speak to me, that was the place to do so, and not in the schoolroom." Do you remember that? Yes, I recollect that; I do not call that a quarrel.

6524. Did you on that occasion say to her, before the girls—"And pray who are you?—you must be Mrs. Somebody"? When Mrs. Kelly came out, and said she would do, and she would see, and went on bouncing like that, I said—"Who are you, that you should do all this?"

6525. Then you did say this? Yes.

6526. Did she not say to you, there was an office in which you could speak to her? Yes, she did.

6527. Was that not calculated to destroy Mrs. Kelly's influence in the school? But she had first come out, and said she would see about it. She bounced me first.

6528. You simply retorted, then, on her behaving improperly to you? Yes.

6529. When anything is wanted out of the store, what is the mode of getting it? Mrs. Rowland goes for it and gets it.

6530. Is that always the case? I used to sign the book at one time.

6531. Are you aware that the children go into the store, and get what they want without giving any order, or without any account being kept? No. Mrs. Rowland is responsible, and nobody gets anything out of the store unless I order them.

6532. But, as a matter of fact, it does take place, for we are aware that things are got out of the store upon the simple application of the children themselves? Well, if so, it is contrary to all my orders, at all events.

6533. How is it that you are not aware of it? I am not aware of it. These officers do not tell me. I know nothing about it if they do not tell me.

6534. Mr. Metcalfe.] Is stock taken in the store? Yes.

6535. Who takes it? The clerk and storekeeper.

6536. Is he allowed to issue goods without your order? Well, the matrons go, and I tell him to give them things, and he enters them, and Mrs. Rowland enters them.

6537. But do you check the issue to see what there has been expended, or whether any more has been issued than there should be? Not always.

6538. President.] Mrs. Rowland has nothing to do with the issue of salt, has she? No; the children get that.

6539. And they get it without any orders? There has been so much issued daily.

6540. It has been reported to us that the children go into the stores without orders, and without any entry being made in any book, and obtain articles? It is more than I know of, then.

6541. Is it not a fact that there is no book at all in the store to show the daily issue of articles? Mr. Prior keeps the book, and so did Mr. Cane. Mrs. Rowland keeps a book too. Mr. Cane had a book away six weeks at Newcastle after he left the place.

6542. Mr. Couper.] How was it that there were no entries made in the daily Journal for six weeks after you went to Newcastle? I do not think there were any made. I had no time to make them—I was too busy. Mr. Cane was not in the office at Newcastle, and I had too much to do with the girls bolting and so on. There were two girls sent to Maitland, and I had to go up and pay the expenses, and I never got a shilling.

6543. Who writes your reports? The clerk and storekeeper.

6544. Mr. Prior? Yes, at my dictation.

6545. Do you ever keep up any correspondence with the girls, or with their masters, after they leave the institution, so as to know where they have gone to? Sometimes. There is that case of R——'s; I shall have to bring that before the Colonial Secretary. There was a girl reported to go out of the school—well recommended—away a year and seven months—has a baby, and conceals it, and it is said that it was done in Sydney. She was never in Sydney, only going through it.

6546. Did you read the case in the paper? Yes, I did.

6547. Did the paper say that it was done in Sydney? Yes; that the party was in Sydney.

6548. Did it not say that it was done by a Sydney man on a visit to the place? It did not say anything about a visit at all. It said that the party was in Sydney.

6549. I think you have made a mistake? No, I make no mistake about it.

6550. Do you know what has become of Elizabeth B——? No. I did hear that she was in Sydney. Mr. G. Lucas.
6551. Do you know what has become of Lizzie T——? No.
6552. Have you heard whether she has left her place or not? I heard that she was away, and that she had gone back again. 4 Sept., 1873
6553. Have you heard what has become of K——? I saw from a newspaper that some gentleman had taken her from the Court.
6554. Do you know what has become of Winny Mc—— and Bridget Mc——? Are they not at their places?—I wrote down to the person and never got any answer.
6555. Do you not think that it would be very requisite to have some officer to communicate with the masters of these girls after they have left the institution? I think so; the girls generally write to the institution, either to me or to some of the inmates, after they go out. We get letters from them sometimes.
6556. Do you not think that it is objectionable that the girls should be taken to Court by persons who have taken them away as apprentices, and their indentures cancelled, and the girls left without any one to look after them? I have not heard of any cases of the kind.
6557. Have you had a letter lately from a person who had a girl named W——, asking to have the girl transferred? Yes, and I wrote him back again, telling him how to do it. I got another letter since, but not the form.
6558. Did he tell you that he had written to me, and said that he wrote to you and could get no answer? No, I wrote back, and told him he must make an application to the Colonial Secretary, that I could not transfer the girl from one master to another.
6559. Do you not think that it is very objectionable to return these girls to their parents and to hold out to them any hopes of that sort? Yes, I have always objected to that.
6560. And have you not found that those girls whose mothers are continually trying to bring influences to bear on the Colonial Secretary to get their children released generally do the worst, and in some instances have you not found them unmanageable? I only know of two cases; the two Y——'s—those are the only two I know of.
6561. And Janey M——? The two Y——'s are the only two that have done well since they have gone out.
6562. But while in the school were they not unmanageable from the fact that they expected to go out to their parents? Yes.
6563. Mr. Gould.] How long has that girl who is attending the cows there been doing so? Which one? There are two.
6564. How long have they been at that work? One about twelve months, and the other about four.
6565. Do they learn to milk? Yes.
6566. How long does it take a girl to learn to milk? Some time. There is one who has been learning for four months, and she has not learned yet.
6567. Has not one of those girls been attending to the cows for more than twelve months? Well, she might; she is a good milker.
6568. Has she not been two years at it? She might be.
6569. Do you not think that it is undesirable to keep a girl for two years at that occupation? When I get another I may take her from it.
6570. Do you not think that it is undesirable to keep a girl at it so long? Yes; but I should like to see them learn to milk. I do not think that girl has been two years at it.
6571. President.] Is there anything that you wish to add yourself? Well, I do wish to add a bit. (Witness handed in a document. See Appendix L 2.) These were the views that I held at Newcastle of the position I was in, and how I found the place.
6572. Is this a copy of a letter that you sent in at the time? I think it is the substance of it. I was so green to official life then that I did not know exactly how to put it. I do not know whether it is an exact copy or not, but it is just the substance of what I wrote.
6573. Do you wish this to be appended to your evidence? Well, yes, I should like to have it put in.
6574. This also is a letter written by you (Appendix M 3 handed to witness): that is your writing—is it not? Yes, that is a letter I sent in in April, 1871.
6575. Is there anything else that you wish to add to your evidence or to show us, Mr. Lucas? No.
6576. How is it that you have never represented to the Government the fact that these children are shut up at 6 o'clock, with no means of employment or amusement of any kind? I think that it has been represented.
6577. To whom? I believe there has been a correspondence with Mr. Cowper; it has been represented in that way.
6578. And did you never represent it before that? I do not know; I might have done so.
6579. Mr. Cowper.] Did you not tell Mr. Robertson, when these letters which I sent in were withdrawn, that you would continue the night-school again? Yes, and so I did.
6580. Did you say that you would commence it, and did you do so? I did.
6581. How long did you carry it on? Until April.
6582. When did you commence? Five or six weeks before. We have commenced it this week again, and the girls do not like to be out.
6583. President.] They prefer being in the dark instead of in a well-lighted room? Yes, the big girls do, unless they are allowed to dance.
6584. And you have given the school up again? No, we commenced on Monday, but a good many did not like it. I had to quarrel with some girls last Monday to bring them out. They prefer to be in the dormitory—not in the dark. They are not there in the dark; they have lights and they amuse themselves.
6585. They have no lights in the room with them? No; in the passage they have. They have light enough to see.
6586. There is a light in the passage between the two dormitories, which are some 30 or 40 feet long? They are eight and twenty feet long, I think. The girls have amusements there.
6587. There is one lamp in the passage between these two dormitories? Yes; they sew, and read, and amuse themselves.
6588. Do you tell us that that light is sufficient for them? I do. I think it is because they make their dresses in there very often; they do their work there—do crochet work.

Mr. G. Lucas. 6589. And they also make a great noise at times, and sing bawdy songs—do they not? Yes; I have not had the officers to help me. I believe that Mrs. Brackenregg has said that she has never refused to help, but when they were asked they all refused.*

C. Cowper,
jun., Esq.

Charles Cowper, jun., Esq., a Member of the Commission, examined in his place:—

6590. President.] Such frequent reference has been made to you, Mr. Cowper, as having exercised some authority at Biloela, apparently at the suggestion or under the authority of the Colonial Secretary of the day, that we shall be glad to know from you the circumstances under which you acted there, what you saw there, and, generally, your views about the management of the place and the suitability of its position for an Industrial School? About September, 1871, I applied to the Government for quarters as Superintendent of Police, as every other Superintendent of Police had quarters or house rent allowed him; and while my letter was under consideration Mr. Robertson asked me to visit Cockatoo Island with him on one occasion and see the Industrial School. He then told me that there was a house there vacant which I could have if I liked, and that possibly I might be of some service in assisting Mr. Lucas, who had great difficulty in managing the girls of the Industrial School. The institution was then in a state of riot, and seven girls were locked up in one of the dormitories; and the school was in charge of a sergeant and several policemen, who told me that they had never before had such hard work in their lives. At my suggestion Mr. Robertson took the whole of the police away, and two water police were sent up to keep boats (which were a particular source of annoyance on Sundays) from approaching the island, or that part of it which was occupied by the school. I was up there for some time, and one evening Mr. Lucas sent for me to say that a number of girls had smashed all the windows, and destroyed property to a considerable amount; that the "Vernon" officers who had come over were of no use: and he asked me to send to Sydney for the sergeant of the Water Police and all the available force. On one or two other occasions there were similar riots, and on the second—it was on a Saturday night, and I could not communicate with the Colonial Secretary—and on the Sunday morning I put the ringleaders in the cells, which was the only "separate and close confinement" available, and for which the regulations appeared to me to provide. I commenced at once to try and find out from the officers the character of each individual girl in the school, and I took up one day with me some friends of mine from the country, and persuaded them to take several of the ringleaders as servants. During the following six months I think I found employers for about forty of the worst girls, and with a few exceptions they are now all doing well. Up till about the end of November I visited the school daily. I found when I went there that the porridge was cooked over night, and only warmed up in the morning for the girls; that they had no knives and forks; that they seldom or never wore shoes and stockings; that they went to their meals and left them whenever they liked; that they seldom obeyed any orders given to them; that one girl stole from another, and cut out the marks of the brands upon the articles of clothing in order to escape detection; and that they used very often to go on the beach and bathe in the day-time, and they ran about the island without there being apparently any control over them. I told Mr. Lucas from the very first that he must insist upon implicit obedience, and after a time I thought that the girls appeared to me much improved in that way. One instance I can particularly remember, and that was with reference to the girls going to the beach. Mr. Lucas told me that he could not stop it. I said that he must stop it; that the public outside were complaining about it, and that I was there to prevent any indecency that would offend the public; or at any rate that the police were. He then took the matter up in a determined manner, and, except upon very extraordinary occasions, I never heard of any offence of that kind afterwards. I felt that the only means of reforming the girls was by moral influence, and that by bringing moral influence to bear upon them would be the only way to bring them to a proper sense of their position, and make them behave in such a manner as would allow of their being restored to society. In view of this, I addressed the heads of the Church of England and of the Church of Rome, asking them to try and arrange for some periodical visits by clergymen or ladies, so that the children might have services, and be taught the catechism and other things of a religious character likely to improve them. I wrote also to Miss Manning, who, as I had heard, took a great interest in such institutions. She visited the place once or twice, but found that the distance was too great, as she had so many other places to attend. I also communicated with a lady whom I had known in Bourke to have taken a great interest in children, and who had her Sunday-school there during the whole time that I was residing there—a Mrs. Tooth. She and the Sisters from the House of the Good Shepherd have since visited the school regularly on Sundays and Thursdays, and I think that their visits have had a very good effect, because they have led the girls to feel that the outside public were desirous of restoring them to society, and of doing everything that they could to make them happy. I also started an evening school. I did this at the suggestion of Mr. Cane, who, with Mrs. Kelly and Mr. Lucas, assisted me in opening it. Mrs. Lucas ridiculed the idea, and we therefore started it ourselves. The first evening it was quite a success. Mrs. Lucas only looked through the window at us. The next morning I went down at breakfast-time, and, before all the girls in the breakfast-room, Mrs. Lucas attacked me most violently with having left her out of the school the night before. In the evening, having arranged the programme, and not being able to attend until the school had been opened for some time, Mrs. Lucas went into the room and upset all my arrangements, and arranged that the girls, instead of doing work of an amusing

* NOTE (on revision):—As, during my examination on the 4th September, I was asked some questions in reference to a song sung by me on the anniversary of my birth, the words of which escaped my memory when the questions were put to me, I beg to supply them:—

"It's true I fell in love with the cook,
I'll tell you the reason why—
She has plenty of mince pies,
Plum pudding and roast beef,
And when poor belly is empty
She can give it relief."

The circumstances under which it was sung were as follows:—Upon the occasion in question I gave a friendly party to the matrons and a tea to the girls. During the evening various amusements were indulged in so as to make it pass as pleasantly as possible. Mrs. Dunn, Mrs. Rowland, and Mrs. Brackenregg danced with the girls, and Mrs. Kelly and Mrs. Brackenregg, my daughters, and some of the girls, sang several songs. I was pressed to do so likewise, and as the object was to amuse, I sang the doggerel referred to without waiting to consider whether the matter was calculated to improve the mind or not. The object, at the moment, was amusement, and this was obtained.

amusing kind—or fancy work, which I had arranged they should do—should make new dresses for themselves. I found then that it was useless my interfering, except to go and visit it occasionally, and, as long as the girls were making their dresses, they went on quietly; but as soon as they were made the girls seemed to lose all interest in the school, and wished to return to their dormitories. When I was starting this school, a number of my friends subscribed towards buying amusements for the girls; and the idea was for some to play drafts, and solitaire, and so on; and others were to write letters to their friends, while some did crochet work, and the remainder read newspapers, and books, and light literature. I think that if two or three people had understood the way to amuse the children, and had attended to them, in a very short time they would have valued such a privilege, and there would have been no wish on their part to return to the old system of going into their dormitories at dark, and amusing themselves by singing bad songs during the evening. I found that my assistance was always looked upon by Mr. Lucas—as far as he spoke to me—as being of great advantage; but after a paragraph appeared in the newspapers attributing the improvement in the school to me, Mrs. Lucas apparently got very jealous, and has remained so up to the present time. I always insisted upon the right to select girls for my friends—they having confidence in my selection, and only taking the girls upon my recommendation. Mrs. Lucas, however, objected to this. She objected also to my taking the girls to my house for the day upon which they left the school, and allowing them to have lunch there with their sisters or mothers. She considered that it gave me greater influence in the school than I had any right to have. Captain Mein, on the other hand, was only too glad to send the boys from the “Vernon” to spend the day with their sisters at my house, if there were any of them in the school, before they left. In apprenticing these girls, I always required the master to send me sufficient money to dress them as other servants would be dressed; and it appears to me very necessary that, after they leave the school, some Government officer should be appointed in each district to see that they are properly cared for by their masters, and, if any dispute arises between the parties, to endeavour to settle it amicably. With reference to the girls that I have sent away myself, I have always been able to arrange these differences by letter; and many masters and mistresses who at first wrote in harsh terms of the girls have been induced to look upon them more leniently, and afterwards to admit that they only required patience and good management. It is of great importance that when these girls are taken to a situation no one should tell from whence they came; and I am very sorry to find that some mistresses who promised to keep it a secret have mentioned the matter before the girls have arrived at their new home. This takes away the girl's chance of making a new start in life, and leaves her open to many liberties being taken with her which otherwise would not be attempted. When I first went into the school the girls told me plainly that they would not take situations—that they would return to their former associates and bad practices. Within two months there was hardly a girl who was not anxious for a situation; and several of the worst, whom their mothers wished to take home again, begged me to interfere and prevent the Colonial Secretary giving his consent, as they knew the temptations of city life would be too much for them. I found that people who could not keep other servants were always ready to apply for these girls, and it required a great deal of discretion in selecting mistresses for them; that if a girl did not do well in one place it was advisable to transfer her to some other master if one could be obtained; and I thought that there should be some officer—some permanent officer—in connection with these institutions, and others, to regulate these matters on the spur of the moment. I found in the case of one girl that it was necessary to see the Colonial Secretary, and telegraph at once in order that her transfer might be made even without her apprentice papers being signed. That girl, who would have been sent back to the school, or probably to gaol, has under her new master done well. I think that it is also objectionable to send two girls to one place. I sent one girl to a place, and she did well; and ultimately I was persuaded to send up her brother, who was on the “Vernon,” and another girl from the school, who had been very well behaved. As soon as the three got together they took a horse and some property, and ran away. I think if there was some Government officer in Sydney who could take the matter in hand at once, these girls might have been permitted to return to their employment, or to take situations elsewhere. That would have been better than sending them to gaol, where they are now suffering terms of imprisonment for stealing.

Members Present:—

WILLIAM CHARLES WINDEYER, Esq., PRESIDENT.
SAMUEL GOOLD, Esq. | MICHAEL METCALFE, Esq.
CHARLES COWPER, JUN., Esq.

Charles Cowper, jun., Esq., a Member of the Commission, further examined in his place:—

6591. President.] Will you continue your statement as to the condition of the Industrial School at Biloela, and your suggestions as to the improvement of the management? The idea exists that these girls are difficult to manage, both in the school and after they leave it. I think it is well that I should give you a few instances showing how easily they can be managed. Soon after I went to the school there were eight girls sent to gaol for destruction of property, and I heard that one of them was the daughter of a person who had been kind to me when I was a boy, and I made up my mind when she came out of gaol that I would persuade her to take a situation. When I visited her in the cells at the Water Police Office, she and the other girls sang bad songs, and treated every one who went near them in an insulting manner. Upon her return from gaol, I found out the officer who I thought had most influence over this girl, and asked her to tell the girl that I owed a debt of gratitude to her father, and would get her a situation if she behaved well in future. The girl had only four months to remain in the institution; she behaved herself very well, and a few weeks afterwards agreed to apprentice herself for twelve months to a person I knew in the country. She behaved remarkably well during the whole time of her apprenticeship, and only returned to Sydney upon the urgent solicitation of her father. She then came to me and said that she had made a mistake in coming to Sydney at all, and she asked me to get her another situation. A gentleman came in the next day and engaged her, and took her up the country at 12s. per week. Shortly afterwards, he wrote and told me that he thought a young man was paying her attention who was not a very desirable person.

person. I wrote to the girl and advised her. She answered my letter and stated that she had followed my advice, and I had a most satisfactory letter a few weeks ago from her master about her. She is still in the same situation.

6592. How long is it since she went there? I think it is about six months since she went up to the last place. Another little girl, called K—, went to the school very young, and was a notoriously bad character. A few weeks after I visited the school I could see some improvement in her, and that she evidently wanted to be noticed. She came up to me one day and asked when I was going to get her a situation. I told her that I would try to get her one if she behaved herself. A little time after that I went into the breakfast-room, and she had no shoes and stockings on. I said, "K—, I am shocked at your coming to breakfast in such a state." The girl burst out crying, and cried most bitterly, and from that time up to the time that she went out of the institution I never noticed her without shoes and stockings. She went to a situation, but she did not get on very well. I do not know the reason why, but her mother came to me one day and brought me a newspaper with an account of her having been brought before a Police Court, and of her indentures having been cancelled by the Bench. I put myself in communication with the police; she was handed over to a respectable woman, and she remains with her now, I believe, giving satisfaction. This case shows the necessity of having some officer in every district to attend to these children, and see that the masters, when they get tired of them, cannot get rid of them by paying their passage back to Sydney, or taking them before a Bench of Magistrates, and getting their indentures cancelled. If the woman I have referred to had not kindly taken this girl in charge and got her a situation, she would have been left there without any one to look after her. After I left off visiting the school regularly, there were one or two girls who were anxious to get situations; and one of them, Martha S—, used to send me messages regularly, saying that if I would only get her a situation, she would be a good girl. She was I think one of those who had been sent to gaol. I got her a situation. I sent her away by the train without any one in charge of her; she went up, having engaged for a longer period than she was bound by law to engage for; and she remained for the whole time, and gave satisfaction. Another girl, named Emily W—, who had never done much work (and I think that her parents did wrong by allowing her to wear jewellery and go to dancing saloons), was unwilling to do anything in the school, except act as assistant in the school. I told her that if she went to the laundry and improved herself, I would get her a situation; she did so; but before I got her one, a painter, who had either seduced her or who knew her in the days when she was leading a bad life, got into the school as a servant of a contractor who was mending the broken windows. This quite upset the girl. She was the leader of the riot at the time that the American sailors broke into the place (she was the principal cause of it, I believe; in fact, letters written by her and thrown over the fence were brought to me). I had to put her in the cells, as she was the only one of a very few who kept singing bad songs all night. I may state here that this was the first riot that I witnessed where the great bulk of the girls were quiet, and where only the girls in the large dormitory made the noise. As a rule, all the girls were riotous, from the smallest to the largest. After Emily W— was punished, I took no notice of her; but the laundress complained to me that Mrs. Lucas persecuted this girl and never gave her any peace, and that the only hope for her was to get her out of the institution. Her sister—a very respectable woman—also called upon me, and said that the only hope for the girl was in my getting her a situation. I then prevailed upon a lady, who I knew would be a good mistress to her, to take her, and she has given very great satisfaction. I had a letter from her master stating how pleased he was with her, and that he would be ready to take another girl from the institution when her time was up. This was one of the girls that Mrs. Lucas said I had no right to get a situation for because she was a bad girl, and one of the girls upon whom, only a few weeks before, they had put a strait-jacket, and in whose mouth they had put a gag. I believe at the time that was done she had only a chemise and a small petticoat on; and I thought that the thing was disgraceful, so much so that I reported it to the Colonial Secretary, as I was sure that he never intended such indecent conduct on the part of officers of the institution and police.

6593. What age was this girl? She was a grown girl—a big girl.

6594. Was the superintendent aware of this strait-jacket being put on this girl when she was thus indecently clad? Yes. I reported it to the Government—and I can produce my letter.

6595. Was the superintendent present, and did he see it? Yes. This is the letter I wrote to the Government at the time. (Letter produced. See Appendix O.) Another girl, named Lizzie T—, who was one of seven who were placed in the dormitory for punishment. One evening they were making a most frightful noise, and when I went up to the door this girl began to hiss me. I ordered the iron gates to be unlocked, and walked in amongst them, when some one said that I would have the slop-pail thrown over me, as I believe Mr. Lucas had once. I went to this girl and spoke to her quietly but firmly, and told her not to do that again. I then advised the other girls to be quiet, just speaking to them quietly, and reasoning with them; and I said that it would be better if they were quiet; and they were quite quiet for the rest of the night. The next morning I advised Mr. Lucas to let them out, as it was not the proper way to punish them, and only excited the rest of the school, and really was no punishment at all. I never knew that girl to be impudent to me afterwards. I was only in favour of putting the girls in solitary and close confinement to prevent the destruction of property. On one occasion the doctor was insulted by a girl named Bella C—, and he wrote a strong minute in the book, insisting upon the girl being punished, and stating that, if she was not, he would not visit the school again. Feeling that the girl was not so much to blame, because it was in consequence of the system that had grown up in the place that she had behaved so badly, I called her up and reasoned with her, and advised her to apologize to the doctor the first time he came to the institution. I then asked the doctor to receive her apology, which he readily agreed to do, and I think that the girl afterwards behaved herself well until she left; and although Mrs. Lucas the other night gave her a very bad character, and spoke of her as one of the girls I should not have got a situation for, yet Mr. B—, who was lately a Member of Parliament, and who is now her master, writes of her in the most satisfactory manner. Another girl, named Rose O—, was a troublesome character, and nothing could be done with her. If you went and told her to do anything, she would turn round and say that she would return to what she had been, and that she did not want to be respectable. She was on one occasion punished with Emily W—; the one was rude to Mrs. Kelly, and the other to Mrs. Lucas. When Rose O— came out after being punished, she refused to do anything. I reasoned with her, and advised her to go and apologize to Mrs. Kelly (as I knew that Mrs. Kelly was the only one who could influence her), and to ask her to take her as her servant. The girl said that she would not; I gave her the day to consider, and when I went to visit the school in the evening she was on Mrs. Kelly's quarters, quarters, quite happy and contented, and she told me that she was obliged to me for talking to her in the way I had done. She remained in the school for some time, behaving herself fairly well. She could not be apprenticed to any one, as she was too old, and the Sisters of the House of the Good Shepherd took her to that institution. She is now there, doing well. Another girl, called Kate R—, who I believe had done nothing but tail cattle, like a black gin, all her life until she was sent down to the school, was very ignorant. She came from some part of the interior; and I noticed her as being ignorant, slothful, and utterly careless about learning anything or doing anything. I asked the laundress to take her on the laundry, and see if she could not teach her something. She did so, and in a few weeks she got on so well that I got her a situation, and for some time I had a very good character of her.

6596. Mr. Metcalfe.] Did she not go into the school under Mrs. Kelly at all? Yes, I suppose she did. She would go in by turns as the other girls did, but she would have very little of that. I have had to keep up a regular correspondence with the employers of all the girls who have left the school, and I find that that is the only way to reconcile the masters and the girls to one another if they have any disagreement. Several times a master or mistress has written to me, giving a girl a bad character, and saying that they would not keep her on any terms; but upon my reasoning with them, and writing to the girl, they have generally adjusted their differences, and in nearly all these cases the girls are still in their situations, doing well. During all the riots and disturbances I believe that Mrs. Kelly's school was always in perfect order. She may have had difficulties at times, but discipline was always enforced, and her orders were implicitly obeyed, showing that it only required firmness and kindness to manage the worst girls in the institution.

6597. President.] Speaking of Mrs. Kelly, as far as you had any opportunities of observing her demeanour and of forming an opinion of her character, did you see anything to make it appear probable that the charges made against her by Mr. Prior were true? I have never seen anything in Mrs. Kelly's conduct, at any time, to lead me to believe that the charges I have heard made against her are true. She laughs and talks freely; but I am quite certain, from what I know of her, that she has never been guilty of any impropriety.

6598. As far as you know what her reputation is—if you have any knowledge of it at all—does she in any way bear the character which Mr. Prior would represent? I have never heard any one speak of Mrs. Kelly in anything but a respectful way, except on the occasion when Mr. Prior gave his evidence. It is the first time that I have ever heard an imputation cast upon her. With reference to the influences which can be brought to bear upon these girls, I think that any one who visited the institution when I first went there, and had an opportunity of visiting it on Sunday some two months afterwards, when the sisters from the House of the Good Shepherd were playing the harmonium, and the girls were singing, would hardly believe that such a change could be effected in such a short time; and the Protestant girls would, I have no doubt, have appreciated the music quite as much if they had had any one to play to them, which they unfortunately had not. And, while speaking of this, I think that it is only fair to add that I think Mr. Firth, the Wesleyan clergyman, deserves the greatest credit for having attended to the school on Sundays, and held service there every Sunday afternoon until he removed from Balmain. Seeing the effect that that had upon the girls, made me particularly anxious to induce as many kindly-disposed people as I found could give their time to teaching the children.

6599. Speaking of the visits of Mr. Firth and Mrs. Tooth, and other persons, who, from charitable motives, have visited the institution,—do you not think that one of the disadvantages of the position of the institution is, that it is generally inaccessible to persons who may be disposed to take an interest in the children—that it is for the advantage of such children to be kept at a place where they could be visited by persons of education and refinement who would take an interest in them? Of course, if a new institution were built it might be placed in a more accessible spot, but at present it is as comeatable as any place that can be occupied by the girls. There is a large number of people on Balmain.

6600. Are there not many ladies who take an interest in these children, and would visit them if they could get at them without going in boats: it is not always that opportunities present themselves of getting to the island? Of course, if the institution were near Sydney a large number of ladies would be found to visit it; but if the institution was on the main land it would be more difficult to keep bad characters away from it, I think—and they are the greatest possible nuisance. I think that you have to fear more from outside people of bad character than from the girls themselves. If you can put them where it is impossible for these young fellows to communicate with them, there would be less difficulty. No ladies have ever objected to me about coming over the water. Of course, the expense is heavy upon some people who cannot afford it—particularly clergymen, perhaps.

6601. Mr. Metcalfe.] Do you not think that these girls could be maintained elsewhere at less expense, and with less risk to the character of the younger children? I do not think that there is any necessity for the expense that is incurred.

6602. President.] Do you mean that the institution should be abolished, or that it could be more cheaply conducted? It could be more cheaply conducted.

6603. In what way? I made a calculation once when I went there, that the expenses could be reduced to a very small amount as far as regards the officers.

6604. By reducing the number? Yes. I think if the Government were to build a place for this institution, give so much towards the keep of each girl, and have it managed by a committee of ladies, it could be managed as cheaply as any other institution. To effect economy in management, I think that a wall round the institution would be necessary in order to keep bad characters away; because I know that a great temptation to these girls to be troublesome is the seeing or hearing from former associates with reference to their returning to their former life. They have often told me so themselves.

6605. Can you tell us anything as to the extent to which corporal punishment has been resorted to on the island? My own idea was that no corporal punishment was resorted to at all except to a small extent. I have heard of the case reported to Mr. King, and of other instances, but I was not present at the time Mr. Lucas spoke of yesterday. When he punished the girl I was on the island talking to the man Wallace, and some girl came and said that he was wanted in the institution; and what he did there I do not know, and did not see.

her in my pocket which is written in the same hand. I think it is in most instances very objectionable to hold out any hope to the girls that they will be returned to their parents. I think that when the State has once taken charge of them because the parents have failed to manage them, it is unfair to the public who are taxed to keep up this establishment, that after these girls have been kept at a great expense to the State for one or two years, they should be returned to live amongst their old associates who possibly have led them astray in the first instance. Several instances of girls having been returned to their parents have come under my notice, and I only know of one in which the girl is doing well. When the girls in the school are led to believe that their mothers are likely to get them out they never will settle down to work. If they know that they have to take a situation, and that their getting a situation depends on their learning certain work in the laundry and the kitchen, they set to work readily with this object in view. There was one girl, called Maggie M—, who was returned to her parents, and who was shortly afterwards brought before me for being drunk and being with prostitutes in a public-house. There was another girl who ran away from her situation and came to Sydney, and the first night she was in Sydney her mother took her to the theatre, and when the police went to look for her they were told that the mother had taken her there. There are two girls now in the institution whom it is no use getting situations for, because they have set their minds upon returning to their parents when they are released—which will be in a few months—and going back to their former life among prostitutes and bad women. When Janie M— ran away from her situation, and instead of going to her mother, went to the houses of prostitutes, she only gave herself up to the police when she found that she really was so closely followed that it would be impossible to keep clear of them much longer. With reference to the boys, I have always noticed that it is very objectionable to return them to their parents; and on any election day in Sydney now, the majority of these boys who have been returned to their parents are to be seen going about in the most ragged state, and as if they were entirely uncared for. Some people think that such an Act as the Industrial Schools Act should never have been passed, but the system of decoying girls away from their parents renders it necessary, and I think that such an institution as that at Biloela will always be required. Of course, whether it is to be maintained by the Government or by private persons will remain an open question. The system among the Chinese is this: they engage a good-looking girl of respectable appearance and good manner, and they pay this girl well to decoy young innocent girls away from their homes to their houses.

6607. Mr. Metcalfe.] Has that been proved to you by the police? Yes, by the police, and in other ways. The first time that this girl meets the one which she wishes to decoy she takes her to a shop and buys her sweetmeats, or she takes her to the theatre for an evening. Possibly the child goes home late and is thrashed by her mother. The next evening that she is out, the decoy takes the girl to her own house (where she is probably kept by the Chinese), and there the girl staying late, and afraid to return home and get another thrashing, remains with her friend. The Chinese meet together in large numbers and smoke opium, which overpowers the girl and enables them to effect their purpose. I have had one case of a girl who begged of me to send her to the school. She had been living with an old Chinaman who had given her a disease, and she dare not go anywhere else, as she could not get a living in any other way. There was another girl whose father was a Chinaman and whose mother was an Englishwoman. The father complained to me most bitterly that his daughter kept away from him—that he knew she must be among prostitutes—that he thought the mother countenanced it,—and that he could not find the girl. I could not grant him a warrant, because he had never seen the girl among prostitutes, but after some time she was caught and sent to the school. I have had other instances of mothers living by prostitution, and almost forcing the daughters to follow the same course, and it was impossible to get evidence against them until they were sixteen years of age, when they were beyond the power of the law. I find that the reason why so many girls go astray is that their mothers neglect to teach them to do housework or anything that would at all fit them for taking situations as private servants—that they rather encourage them to wear jewellery, and allow them to visit dancing saloons. I have known instances where mothers have actually, when the girls have been before the Court, proposed not to give evidence against their daughters if they would give them the 5s. a week which they earned as wages. This would, of course, necessitate the girls clothing themselves with money earned by prostitution. Some girls are led astray by bad women when their mothers are away out nursing or doing other work, and others by being left to take charge of the shops when the mothers are away buying vegetables or other supplies. There is one girl in the institution now who was made a thief and a prostitute by a bad woman who visited her mother's shop when she was away on other business. The mother told me that this girl for months had stolen her earnings, and had reduced her to a state of poverty. I find that many girls are driven astray by bad step-mothers or step-fathers; and I know of one instance in particular in which a very nice girl indeed was driven to leave her home on account of ill treatment of this kind. I think that the Act requires alteration, for many cases are brought under my notice of children who should be sent to the school, but who do not come under the provisions of the Act. I think the Act should be made more stringent, and that any child who is beyond the control of its parents, or who is wandering about neglected, without control, should be liable to be sent to the Industrial School. I know of the case of the son of a most respectable woman, who is so fond of thieving that his mother can do nothing with him, but who behaves so well in other ways that it was impossible for me to grant her a warrant for him, although she was willing to pay any reasonable sum for his maintenance. One offered the other day to pay £26 a year towards the support of his boy, in order to get him into an institution in which he would be controlled. He had sent him to different schools, and no one could do anything with him. The clause with reference to parents contributing towards the support of their children when in the school should be made more stringent. I think that the establishment of a Reformatory is very necessary, for we often have to send boys convicted of stealing to gaol.

the streets are not criminals. Provision should be made in the Reformatory Act for apprenticing children, similar to that in the Industrial Schools Act. At present, when children are released it is difficult to know what to do with them. People are unwilling to take them, except as apprentices. And unless some benevolent person takes them by the hand they are very likely to go to ruin.

C. Cowper,
jun., Esq.

6609. Have you ever thought of the policy of making the Act clearer, so as to make a mere frivolous excuse of some occupation, that is not an occupation at all, a means of preventing a boy being sent on board the "Vernon," supposing that a boy is selling matches, or oranges, or things of that sort? Yes; a case has come under my notice where two boys—the worst in the city—were reported by their father to be gaining their livelihood by selling matches, and eventually, after they had been sent to the "Vernon," he had them released upon this pretext, saying that he was able to look after them, and that they not only gained a livelihood for themselves but made money for him. The boy after he was released was brought before me, I believe, for stealing. When before the Court the father appeared in a state of drunkenness, and tried to beg him off a second time, but the Bench sent him to the Industrial School.

6610. That is a case to which I drew attention in a letter to the Herald? Yes.

6611. Do you remember the fact that the boy was found residing at the house of a person of bad character—a suspected receiver of stolen property? Yes; I recollect that it was mentioned in your letter.

6612. Then, as I understand you, it would be desirable to make the law so clear that the mere pretext of having some employment, unless it was of a substantial character, should not be the means of preventing these children being sent to the Industrial School? Decidedly so.

6613. Is it not, in point of fact, one of the difficulties with which the Justices have to contend, that all kinds of cases are set up by the boys, of their having some employment? Yes, and then after the Magistrates have sent them to the "Vernon," the parents go round and get up petitions, asking the Colonial Secretary to release them.

6614. Were you aware that that was the means taken in the case which has been just referred to, to induce the Colonial Secretary to release these boys, who were afterwards convicted of crimes? Yes, and at first I reported strongly against it.

6615. Against their release? Yes. At last pressure was brought to bear, and I gave way because I thought that I might be mistaken. Mr. Want took the case up, and said he had known the family for years to be respectable. When first I visited the school I only did it with a view of assisting Mr. Lucas, by giving him my advice in a time of riot and other disturbances; and upon one occasion he wrote to me (the letter is now before the Commission), complaining that the girls had destroyed £25 worth of property in one evening. He said that he was not supported in keeping order and in carrying out his idea of discipline; and the Colonial Secretary having great difficulty in dealing with matters of detail, thought that, as it was Mr. Lucas's wish, and as I was on the spot and willing to do it, my assistance might be valuable. But during the whole time that I visited the school I never gave an order to any officer—unless it was accidentally, nor to any child except through Mr. Lucas; and when I found that some notice which had been taken of what I had done with reference to the school, that appeared in the paper, had created some jealousy in the mind of Mrs. Lucas, I started a memorandum book in which I entered anything that attracted my attention with reference to the management; and I used to write in this book when I visited the school, in order that Mr. Lucas might notice it, and if he thought proper carry it out. I always felt that I had no power there to carry out anything myself except through him. I find that the case mentioned by Mrs. Lucas at her last examination, of my putting down in the cells a girl who was ill, is mentioned in this book. I wrote a memorandum, saying that Dr. Evans should be asked "if Ellen J——'s health rendered her removal from the cells necessary." I wrote this memorandum at the time, because I heard something had been said about my putting a girl down in the cells who was not very well,—although no officer represented the thing to me when I did so. On the next page of this book I wrote this memorandum:—"Up to this time I have written these minutes in the office, and left the book on the table, but it appears to be a waste of time"; and another memorandum sent in by Mr. Cane to be read to Mr. Lucas, in order to draw his attention to the alterations I thought it necessary for him to make in the management, and which I felt that no attention had been paid to. I afterwards wrote other memorandums at my own house and sent them in by the policemen, in order that Mr. Lucas might have an opportunity of hearing things which perhaps had not been brought under his notice by any one else; and from this time, which was about the first of the year 1872, I went very little into the institution, because I found that my speaking to an officer or a girl only created a jealousy, which was to me very unpleasant. I only wished to do good for all, and when I found that I could not do that, I ceased to interfere, except in getting girls situations, or in matters wherein Mr. Lucas personally requested my advice. I recollect once sending a girl up to the school, about whom I had very grave doubt, and I was sorry to be obliged to send her there. I asked that that girl might be placed on the laundry and taught to be a good servant. The result of my making such a request was that the girl was sent to milk the cows, and afterwards put on the officers' quarters, and was never properly taught during the whole time she remained in the place—at any rate, until after I wrote my letters to the Colonial Secretary. On the first of the year 1872, thinking that it was the proper time to write to the Colonial Secretary a report of what I had been able to effect in assisting Mr. Lucas, I wrote the letter which has been identified here by Mr. Cane as one I read to him on that occasion; but I did not send that letter to the Colonial Secretary, because Mr. Lucas explained to me that he was most ready to carry out all the improvements that I mentioned, but that his wife was the difficulty; and out of kindness to him I allowed the matter to stand over until the month of February. I then addressed another letter to the Colonial Secretary, informing him that all my suggestions appeared to be disregarded purposely. In March, 1872, I wrote another letter, going into particulars. Mr. Robertson arranged an interview with Mr. Lucas and myself in the Colonial Secretary's Office, when Mr. Lucas again said that his wife was the difficulty, and that he would see that everything which I suggested should be carried out in future. One of these things was the evening school. Upon that, I withdrew the letters I had sent in, not wishing to do anything which would be unkind to Mr. Lucas, and having no object in view but the carrying out of the Colonial Secretary's instructions to me. Some of my suggestions were carried out, but the evening school I think was never reopened. I never knew that Mr. Lucas objected to my assisting him, and I have spent not only a good deal of time, but also a good deal of money in cab hire, going to the Government Stores and the contractors, in order to see that when he sent in a requisition for any articles he obtained those articles quickly and of good good quality. I selected the material for dresses and clothing, with Mrs. Lucas's concurrence, as she complained of what the contractor sent in the first instance. I thought that it was much better to give the girls good dresses, which made them feel a respect for themselves (and some of which have lasted and been used in the second year), than to buy bad material which possibly would hardly last one season; and I thought that showing an interest in the girls in this way by dressing them respectably, and not like prisoners, would make them feel a pride in themselves, and prevent their being so destructive, as they had hitherto been, when more than three times the extra value of this clothing was destroyed in one riot. I may say that the contractor, Mr. Moore, advised me to get this material, and told me that it was the cheapest in the long run.

6616. Mr. Metcalfe.] Has anything been said about your sending up bad stuff? Mr. Lucas objects to my interference, and this is one way in which I interfered. I also procured crockery mugs instead of the tin panikins which the girls used; and when the mugs first went up they were kept in the store for weeks, Mrs. Lucas saying that it was absurd to give them to the girls, as they would break them in a week.

6617. President.] When they were used, did that turn out to be the case? No, they lasted quite as well there as they do in any other institution.

6618. Mr. Lucas yesterday, in justifying his infliction of corporal punishment—which he inflicted, although the rules say that it should be administered only by the female officers of the institution—referred to you as an authority for his so violating the rule? I never advised Mr. Lucas to do anything of the sort, and considered it most objectionable. I told him when I first went there that I would deal with the girls with a high hand.

6619. Do I understand you to say that, at the time you first went there, you saw the place was in a state of insurrection, and you then advised Mr. Lucas to take vigorous measures to stop the rioting? Yes.

6620. What you referred to was the propriety of putting the girls in confinement? Yes, to stop the riots and destruction of property. When the girls were shut up in the dormitories they sang bad songs all night, and every other girl in the dormitories joined in. This excited the whole school, and rendered discipline impossible. Although I think as a rule that cells are most objectionable, still, under the circumstances, and in order to stop the destruction of Government property, I used them, as they afforded the only means of "separate and close confinement."

6621. Mr. Lucas gave us to understand in his evidence the other day that all the officers in the institution were conspiring against him, and apparently always had been; he would lead us to suppose that they were always in a state of hostility to him. As far as you saw the state of things on the island, were you aware that all these officers were on bad terms with Mr. Lucas? Since my illness, in May, 1872, I have been very little in the school, but I have always looked upon Mrs. Lucas, Mrs. Rowland, and Mrs. Brackenregg as one—as very good friends, at any rate—particularly good friends—more than ordinarily good friends; and I never knew it was otherwise until the appointment of this Commission. And I think that all the officers, with the exception of Mr. Cane and Mrs. Kelly, were appointed about the time when Mr. Lucas was appointed; they are, in fact, a new set of officers, with the exception of Mrs. Kelly. I suppose that I may be expected to give some opinion generally on this matter, and I cannot do better than quote from a book (the report upon schools of this description in California), which expresses my opinion in possibly more forcible language than I can use. It is in these words:—"Moral results can be effected only by moral agencies. Dungeons, solitary confinement in dark, damp and cold cells, grated windows and high walls, may be tolerated a while longer in state prisons, but in a school for children—little children—they are monstrous." And with reference to my opinion of the proper method of managing these children, I think that this report expresses exactly what I would say of the children at Biloela:—"Generally they are hungry and thirsty for instruction—for proper guidance and encouragement. They respond readily to every touch of interest and sympathy, and yield easily to necessary restraint. What the teacher of such children requires is true Christian love, sympathy and patience. Properly armed with these weapons, he may boldly attack the heart citadel of the worst child who may come under the law, with sure confidence of success. There is no power on earth so strong as love, and the most depraved child has a soft spot somewhere in its heart, through which it may be touched and reclaimed, if we but perseveringly approach it in this spirit, having patience with its short-comings and sympathy with its weakness." And I think it would be well if all persons in charge of these Industrial Schools felt as this teacher in California did when he wrote: "I am learning to feel that if a child stubbornly and persistently resists the ordinary efforts made for its reformation, not that it is hopelessly fallen away, but that the fault rather lies with myself, that through my ignorance I am not able to discover the specific remedy for its peculiar form of disease." I wrote a letter with reference to this matter in 1872, and if I could lay my hand upon it I would attach it to these proceedings. A great many people thought that because I spoke of these girls then in rather a hopeful manner I could not know much about the subject, but time has proved that I was right; and although the girls who went from Biloela to situations were among the worst girls ever sent there, and were badly managed while they were there, they have, with the exception of two or three, turned out well.

Members Present:—

WILLIAM CHARLES WINDEYER, Esq., PRESIDENT.

SAMUEL GOOLD, Esq.

MICHAEL METCALFE, Esq.

CHARLES COWPER, JUN., Esq.

Mr. Arthur Whitling, master, Protestant Orphan School, Parramatta, called in and examined:—

Mr. A. Whitling.
8 Sept., 1873.

6622. President.] I believe you hold the office of master of the Protestant Orphan School? Yes.

6623. How long have you held it? For about seven months.

6624. What salary do you get? £120.

6625. And you live on the place? Yes.

6626. You are boarded there? Yes, I have the Government ration.

6627. What are your duties? They consist in looking after the boys' department, issuing stores, keeping the books and accounts, seeing to the state and repair of the buildings and the out-door work generally.

6628. When things are required from the stores, do you issue articles upon requisition, or what is the mode adopted? I issue them when the attendants require anything. They bring all the old articles up to the store, and I give them new ones in exchange, if they are worn out and not fit to be used.

6629. Are there any stock books kept, showing the issue from time to time? Yes, and the initial of the person receiving them is in the book.

6631. We have already taken some evidence about the school, and it will be unnecessary to ask you about matters of routine; but we wish to know whether you can make any suggestions as to utilizing the labour of the boys to a greater extent than is done now? I think that, if the school were larger, and there were more children in it, boot-making and tailoring might be done to some extent; as it is, I do not think it would be possible, as the school is really too small, without the children made articles to supply other Government establishments also.

6632. Do all the boys work in the garden? Some of them are too small, but a great many of them do—in fact, on Friday we send the biggest boys out to work all day in the garden; the rest of the boys we leave in the school, as they would do more harm than good.

6633. Do you not think that they might to advantage do more work in the garden than they do at present? No, they do all the work there that is necessary. The garden is about 3 acres in extent, and it is kept as well as it can be with the labour that we have.

6634. We observed when we were up there that the boys did not even cut the wood for the establishment—that a man was employed to do it? No, it is not cut by the boys; it is cut by a man. There is a man employed for that purpose.

6635. He does nothing else? He does nothing else except odd jobs. There are always repairs to be done about the place, little things which we cannot get done by the Colonial Architect.

6636. Has this man been long there? He has been there only a few months. There is a labourer who does the rough carpentering.

6637. I thought you said that this man who cut wood did the rough carpentering about the place—I thought you said that he did all those things? No, he does odd jobs, such as helping to scrub the paddocks, assist in repairing the roads, mending the wharf, and things of that sort.

6638. Scrubbing what? Scrubbing the paddock. We have cows, and of course if the paddock is not cleared, the scrub takes up all the grass.

6639. That is not constant work? It requires to be done every year. You would hardly believe how fast it grows.

6640. Is that not work that the boys could do—is it not exactly the sort of work most of them would have to do after leaving school? Yes, but if you took them out of school too often the schoolmaster's office would be a sinecure. I do not suppose that he would supervise the children when they were at work.

6641. Why could he not take half the children at a time and teach them: I suppose that if the classes were smaller greater attention would be paid to them? Yes; that is how it is done on Friday, but most of the children are too small to do anything like work. They are apprenticed when they are thirteen years old, and below that age they are not of much use. If one or two boys were apprenticed to the institution, I dare say that in the course of time it would give us more labour, and would not increase the expense much.

6642. Are not boys apprenticed to the institution at all? Yes, there is one.

6643. What is he doing? He is working in the garden.

6644. Do you bake on the premises? Yes, we do.

6645. Are there any boys apprenticed to the baker? No; there would not be enough to do in the bake-house. We could teach a boy the trade, but it would not be to the advantage of the Government to do so—the Government would not gain by it.

6646. But it would not be any loss to the Government to teach a boy the trade? No, it would not be a loss to the Government, but we have a great many applications for apprentices, so there is no difficulty in apprenticing the children out. Just one or two apprentices would not matter, but if we had many it would increase the expense a great deal.

6647. Have you any suggestion to make for the improvement of the place in any way? No, except as regards the apprenticing of the children—there might be a great improvement in that. We have no control whatever over the children after they leave the school. I was speaking to Mrs. Betts about it, and I suggested that the children might be placed under the care of the police. It would be no expense, and the whole Colony might be taken in.

6648. To what extent? They could report how the masters treated the children, and how the children behaved. The police take the Electoral Roll, and have to visit every house in the Colony in the course of twelve months, so that we should have from them a yearly return as to how the children were getting on. They would also be passing the places where the children were occasionally, and they might then look in and see how they were treated, and ask whether they had any complaints to make.

6649. Do you know whether any of the authorities in the school ever hear from the children? Yes, occasionally we do—we have letters from them.

6650. Mr. Metcalfe.] How many boys are there in the school? 149.

6651. Do you think that is too small a number to make it worth while to teach them trades? Yes, I do.

6652. Why? The average cost of the children is about £15 a year per head.

6653. At present? Yes. There would be the master-workman to pay, whom you could not get under a salary of £100 a year; and I suppose that our boots altogether do not cost us above £150 a year, so that we should gain nothing there.

6654. Do you know that on board the "Vernon" boys of eight and nine years old make their own boots and clothes? Yes; but the question is, does it pay.

6655. But is it not a good thing to teach boys a trade, by which they may earn a living outside? Yes; and when they leave, they are, if possible, apprenticed to trades.

6656. How do these boys employ themselves? In looking after the dormitories and cleaning them, and cleaning themselves. They do all the work on their side of their building.

6657. That is all they do? Yes, that is all.

6658. Do they dig in the garden? Yes, a few of them—the biggest of them.

6659. The boys between seven and thirteen years of age? Yes; there are some of the small children who are only three years old, and cannot work.

Mr. A. Whitling.

8 Sept., 1873.

- Mr. A. Whitling.
8 Sept., 1873.
6660. You keep all these books (referring to books of account produced by the witness)—these are the books of the institution? Yes.
6661. What is this book? This is a register of applications for apprentices. They are in alphabetical order in this. In this register (another book produced) we enter them in rotation.
6662. This book has been in use about seven years? Yes.
6663. Are the boys chiefly sent out to be domestic servants? Farmers chiefly, and a few domestic servants.
6664. They are nearly all domestic servants it appears by this book? Those are the female apprentices.
6665. Here is a "farmer and gardener"—that cannot be a girl? No, that is not a girl.
6666. The boys here appear to be nearly all apprenticed as labourers, with occasionally one tradesman? Yes, very few tradesmen apply for them.
6667. Mr. Gould.] How many of the children have gone out during the last year? This present year?
6668. Yes? About seventeen boys and seven girls have been apprenticed this present year.
6669. Since January? Yes.
6670. Mr. Metcalfe.] Do the masters who take these children give them wages? The first three years nothing; the last three years two pounds a year.
6671. How is that money paid? It is paid into the Savings' Bank in the boys' name, but I think as a rule that half of them do not get it.
6672. How is that? The masters do not pay it to them.
6673. But do you not write letters to them and ask them for the money? We do not hear of it, and if we did we have no control at all in the matter.
6674. Mr. Cowper.] In fact, you never look after the children at all after they leave the institution? We ask them to write to us, and sometimes they do, but oftener they do not.
6675. Do you not think that the boys from the Orphan School are worth as much as the boys from the "Vernon"? Yes, quite as much—indeed they are worth more, I think.
6677. Mr. Gould.] Do you ever correspond with the boys who have left the school yourself? No, I have not as yet, as only a few apprentices have gone out since I have been there.
6678. In fact there is very little care taken of the boys after they leave the place? We very seldom hear of them; but the fact is that there is no encouragement to the boys to work well when they are apprenticed. A boy when he knows that he is worth money will not work for nothing, or for a couple a pounds a year, which he probably will not get.
6679. Mr. Metcalfe.] What is this book (referring to book produced)? That is a register. In that the applications are set down in rotation.
6680. What is the use of this book then—it is the same as the other? This (B) is a rough one of that (A). As applications come in for apprentices, we enter them here in this book (B), and thus have them in rotation. One applicant comes before the other, and in that way has the preference sometimes.
6681. But you have the applicants down in another book too? Yes.
6682. Then this seems a useless sort of book, does it not? No, it is very useful. With this book (A) you can run over the applications which have come in during a period of twelve months in a few moments, if you want to put a boy to a particular trade.
6683. What do you mean? We generally ask the boys what they wish to be, and when he chooses a trade we run up this column to find an applicant of that trade.
6684. And what do you find out by that? We see in a few moments the different trades to which the boy could be apprenticed.
6685. I do not understand you? Here is the applicant's name, here his trade or calling, and so on. If we want a boy to be apprenticed to a blacksmith, we can run up this column to find a blacksmith, in the space of a few moments.
6686. What is the use of that—supposing you wanted to apprentice a boy to a bootmaker, what is the use of this? Well, we look here for the trade and man's name, then we look there and obtain all the particulars about him.
6687. For instance, here is a man named M'Guffin who applied for a servant? Yes; we see his name there, and we get the full particulars here.
6688. What is he now? His application is dated 6th February; Wesleyan; married; will teach the apprentice the trade of a boot-maker, and is recommended by so-and-so. You see if we wanted to find out a boot-maker for a boy we should have to go all through this book—to the end possibly.
6689. But it seems to me that a simple index would answer all purposes? The books have always been kept in this way. I have not thought it necessary to alter them.
6690. What are the other books? This (book C produced) is the general register.
6691. Mr. Gould.] Do you consult the boys as to the trades to which they are apprenticed? Yes, we ask them what they would like to be, and we apprentice a boy to the trade that he chooses if we can.
6692. Mr. Metcalfe.] This book (C) is a register of all the children in the school for a great number of years? Yes, and of those who are in it at present.
6693. With an account of where they came from and what has become of them? Yes; with whatever particulars we received with them on their admission, and the particulars of their discharge, with remarks and so on. Of course we write down here the names of the persons to whom they are apprenticed.
6694. How are the children admitted into the institution? By the authority of the Colonial Secretary.
6695. That is the only authority, is it? Yes, it is. This book (C) is the register for the girls; we have another one for the boys.
6696. You do not inquire into the circumstances of these children at all? No; generally a clergyman or Magistrate writes to the Colonial Secretary, giving particulars, which he sends to the matron for a report, and she then reports upon the case.
6697. I see one case here "Father dead; mother at present unable to maintain her, but if she obtains employment will receive her back"? Yes.
6698. Mr. Gould.] Have you any children there both of whose parents are living? Yes, I think there is one—that is all.

Mr. A.
Whitling.
8 Sept., 1873.

6699. Mr. Metcalfe.] That child cannot be called an orphan then? No, but the father is a cripple. This is the treasury book (book D produced); the one in which we keep an account of the vouchers forwarded to the Treasury. This is the date we get the advance; that is the service it is for; that is the time we are allowed for adjustment; that is when the vouchers are sent to the Audit Office; and that is when the receipt of them is acknowledged. This (book E produced) is the book in which we keep an account of the salaries paid.
6700. You receive no moneys at all except what you receive from the Treasury to pay bills with? Yes, we receive money from parents; the Treasury pay so much to Mrs. Betts's account, and we draw upon it.
6701. Mr. Cowper.] What do you mean here by contingencies? Sundry services.
6702. Are these accounts all approved by the Colonial Secretary? They are approved by the Audit Office—they check our accounts for that expenditure. If we want to expend any extra money in repairs, &c., we have to get an authority for it from the Colonial Secretary and forward it to the Treasury.
6703. Mr. Metcalfe.] I see the schoolmaster is down on this list: does he not get paid by the Council of Education? No, by the Government.
6704. "Attendants"—are these all female servants? They are nurses; that is the boys' infant nurse, that the hospital nurse, and so forth.
6705. In this book then there is simply a monthly abstract of the salaries? Yes. These are the store issues (book F produced). These are the stores that I issue every Saturday. The attendants bring up the old articles to the store, and if they are worn out I issue new ones in their place, and send the worn out articles to Mr. Brennand if he wants them. Such things as old tin pots, and so on, if they are really useless we bury them.
6706. You make every person sign for what they receive? Yes.
6707. And is there any check upon the undue expenditure of anything? I use my own judgment as to whether things are worn out or not.
6708. Suppose a man were to come to you to-day for some blacking, and you had given him some yesterday, would you give it him the second time? No, I should refuse it. I only issue once a week, and we can judge how much is required for that time.
6709. I see they are squares of blacking? Yes.
6710. None of these goods are made on the establishment? No, nothing whatever.
6711. Mr. Goold.] How do you issue the soap? I issue that every morning to the laundress, and to the attendants every week.
6712. There is then no requisition for it? No. The soap is issued out of the provision store; the attendants are allowed so much each day, and we issue it every week.
6713. And when you issue it do you require the initials of the party to the book? No, we are only allowed a certain amount, and that must do us. We cannot exceed the allowance.
6714. Mr. Metcalfe.] I see that one person gets a clothes-basket, and that another person gets one too at the same time? Yes; one is used for carrying bread round to the store.
6715. This, then, is an old basket? Yes.
6716. How do you keep the stock—where is the stock book? We take stock once every six months.
6717. Have you any stock ledger? No.
6718. Why that is the most important book you can have? Mr. Betts did not keep one, and I have not done so. He said that he did not find it necessary to keep one, and so I have not thought fit to commence one as yet.
6719. But unless you have one you can never tell what stock you have in hand? No, unless I take stock every six months.
6720. Mr. Goold.] How do you do that? In a rough book.
6721. Have you got one here? No, I have not.
6722. Mr. Metcalfe.] Supposing some person broke into the store and took a lot of things away, how would you know what was taken? They could not very well do that.
6723. But supposing that they did, how could you check the stock? They could not get into the store—it is in such a position that they could not well break into it.
6724. But supposing some person about the place got into the store and took things out of it, how could you check it? There would be no check. I was thinking next year of starting a store ledger.
6725. This book (F) is only a book of issues—I see no occasion for this book at all? It shows that the issues have been made, and they are all initialled by the persons who received them. This book (book G produced) shows the requisitions sent in every six months to the Under Secretary for Finance and Trade.
6726. Do the Government require anything but a requisition from you? No, that is all they require. We give the date of the last supply, the quantity on hand, and the quantity required.
6727. That is all they require? That is all. They very often cut off some things we ask for.
6728. Do they not in any way ask you how the goods have been expended? No.
6729. They do not interfere much unless you ask for a great deal more than they think you will require? No. Then they cut some off.
6730. Mr. Goold.] Has Mr. King, the Inspector of Charities, ever visited the institution? No, not since I have been there, except that he came up a short time ago to make inquiry into the conduct of an infant teacher; but he did not inspect the place at all. (Books H produced.) These are the letter books.
6731. No money passes through your hands? No, except the money for the maintenance of some of the children. We send in the vouchers to the Treasury, then they pay in the amount required to the bank, which we draw upon, and forward the receipts to the Audit Office. We keep the letters to the Colonial Secretary separate from the others. (Book I produced.) This is the bread book. The baker, for instance, draws 200 pounds of flour, which we calculate should make 270 pounds of bread; and we make up the quantity every month. Sometimes there is a considerable balance in the baker's favour.
6732. Do you find that the quantity is very regular? Yes; sometimes the account is in the baker's favour, and sometimes it is against him. But this is a check upon our flour account—it is balanced at the end of the month. (Book J produced.) This is the medical comforts book, showing the medical comforts issued every month.
6733. The Government, I suppose, compel you to keep this book? Yes, I have to send a copy of this with the provision account every month.

- Mr. A. Whitling.
8 Sept., 1873.
6734. I wonder how it is that you have not a similar account for all other things—for wines and spirits, and eggs and butter, and not for all other things? These are simply the medical comforts that are issued.
6735. This is not the beginning of the thing—you had a book before this one? Yes. (Book K produced.)
- This is the daily ration book: this is what we make up our daily provision account from. We are only entitled to so much per head, and by this we check the contractor's account.
6736. And when a boy goes away, do you strike him off this book? Yes; we enter his discharge, and the next day the ration is altered; and so we get the number of rations issued each month.
6737. How often does the contractor send his account in? Every month—and we check it, and send it to the Treasury.
6738. Do you keep a check on that? Yes, I keep an account of all that I receive from him. We generally draw under what we are allowed. I keep an account of all that I receive; I generally make out the account. (Book L produced.) This is the trustees' letter-book. (Book M produced.) This is the hospital register.
6739. Mr. Goold.] When do the trustees meet? When we require them.
6740. Mr. Cowper.] Do you have to come to town to see them, or do you see them at the institution? They come to the institution. Mrs. Betts is one of the trustees, Mr. Halloran another, and Mr. Byrnes another.
6741. Mr. Metcalfe.] There are no children in the hospital now? Yes (referring to book M), these are the boys there now, and when they leave the hospital we draw a line along there, and that closes up the matter.
6742. There is a different ration allowed to the children there? Yes, we generally give them a double ration of butter or treacle.
6743. And you arrange for that in the contractor's account? Yes. (Book N produced.) This is the medical comforts register. This is how we make it up: you see, we add the various columns up at the end of the month, and they should agree with the monthly return.
6744. And it does agree, I suppose? Yes. We seldom issue much—sometimes we issue nothing at all. (Book O produced.) This is a copy of all the contractors' accounts that we receive. We keep a copy of them, and send them to Mr. Brennand, who pays them.
6745. Would it not be better to make the contractor send in two bills, and put one of them on the file, instead of going to this trouble? They do send in two bills now, but I find it is more handy to do this.
6746. You say that you have no stock book at all? No; Mrs. Betts keeps the issues of the clothing, and so on; I merely take the hardware.
6747. How do you account to the Government if there are 600 yards of holland used, for instance? Mrs. Betts keeps an account of that.
6748. She keeps an account of all the soft goods then? Yes; I have nothing to do with them at all.
6749. You only keep copies of the bills? Yes.
6750. And then Mrs. Betts checks them, and they are paid? Yes. (Book P produced.) This shows the expenditure of our vote, and then we know whether we are exceeding it or not; it shows the expenditure, salaries, and so on—everything, you see; the expenditure is here distributed in detail.
6751. What is this amount paid to W. Roberts? He is a pupil-teacher, and receives 1s. a week from the Government; and David Richardson too.
6752. What is the meaning of all these names in this book—what does Roberts get? He gets 13s. every quarter. Provisions; incidental expenditure, and so on—all come out of the same vote.
6753. The sum put down here is the amount for the whole year? Yes; and as we go on we see that we do not exceed that amount.
6754. And if you are economical you must order a lot of stuff that you do not use? No, we have surplus struck off then.
6755. I see that although three-quarters of the year are gone you have only consumed half the vote? Yes; but there are quarterly accounts to come in yet; they have to be paid out of that total. (Book Q produced.) This is the cash-book, in which are entered the petty amounts which we receive from the parents who contribute towards the maintenance of their children.
6756. That is the only cash you receive, except what you get from the Government? Yes, and we pay that in to the Government.
6757. That is all you receive, except what you receive from the Colonial Treasurer? Yes, that is all.
6758. You do not balance this book as your predecessor did, I see? Yes, I do; I close it every quarter, and send in the quarterly statement to the Treasury. (Book R produced.) This is the maintenance book. In this we keep an account with parents who subscribe to the support of their children, and this is posted into the cash book.
6759. When you get it you enter it in this book? Yes.
6760. This is a kind of pupils' ledger then, as it were, in which you keep an account with the children's parents? Yes, with those who pay. (Book S produced.) These are copies of the incidental expenses and contingencies.
6761. This is similar to the book I saw before? No, we get the money from the Treasury to pay these accounts, but we send the regular contractors' accounts for goods supplied on our requisitions to Mr. Brennand, who pays them out of the stores and stationery vote.
6762. Mr. Cowper.] Where do you buy these goods—in Sydney or in Parramatta? In Sydney. They are mostly supplied by the contractors.
6763. Mr. Metcalfe.] How often are these accounts sent in? Every quarter. We make out the vouchers and send them into the Treasury; they return them after paying in the necessary amount to the matron's credit at the bank; we draw upon that and pay the bills, and send the accounts when receipted to the Audit Office.
6764. Why do you not do the same in the other cases? Because these amounts come out of our vote for salaries and contingencies, and the others come out of the vote for stores and stationery, and are paid by Mr. Brennand.
6765. These are the books that have always been kept? Yes. (Book T produced.) In this book we enter all the alterations made, such as shifting children from one nurse to another, or when they leave the place.
6766. President.] Is there any suggestion that you wish to make with regard to the management? No.

Mrs. Martha Betts, Matron, Protestant Orphan School, called in and examined :—

Mrs. M. Betts.

8 Sept., 1873.

6767. President.] You are the Matron of the Protestant Orphan School at Parramatta? Yes.
6768. You have been so for many years? For upwards of twenty-two years.
6769. What salary do you get? £164.
6770. And you are found in everything? Yes,—quarters and rations.
6771. As you are no doubt aware, Mrs. Betts, we have already taken the evidence of your son, and he has informed us of most of the particulars as to the daily routine of the school, so that it is unnecessary for us to take you all through these matters again, but we shall be willing to hear any suggestions you may have to make as to the improvement of the school, more especially with a view of utilizing the labour of the children and better fitting them for the duties of their after-life? There is perhaps an idea of my own—one that I have had for many years, and that I laid before Mr. Cowper when he was in office. It is to make the Protestant Orphan School a kind of nursery, and remove the children when they are old enough to receive instruction elsewhere, after the manner of the large schools of England.
6772. What do you mean? To form the school into a nursery for the children, say under nine years of age—the whole of the children who are supported by the Government—and then remove them to where they could be taught trades and put to service. That has long been my idea.
6773. You would have none more than nine years of age? They would be about nine years old.
6774. Mr. Metcalfe.] You would only keep them until they were nine, and not beyond that age? Yes, up to about nine.
6775. President.] And then they should go to Randwick, or wherever they could be taught trades? Yes.
6776. How young are the youngest children who come to you now? The youngest is between two and three years. I have had them at three days old, but not of late years.
6777. What do you think would be gained by the division of the children in the way suggested? I think the Government would find it more economical, and I believe it would answer better to keep the training of the children supported by the State distinct from their rearing. As the Government mainly supports Randwick and the Benevolent Asylum, and wholly supports the Orphan Schools, it seems to me that they are virtually keeping up four distinct establishments where two would be sufficient (one for training and one for rearing), and do the work better and more economically. I believe also that my idea would prove more beneficial to the health of the children. This site is a better one for infants than either of the others.
6778. You have had no illness of late? No. There have been no deaths since February, 1870.
6779. How many children are there in the school at present? 239.
6780. How many more could you take without erecting additional buildings? We have not room for more than 250 without crowding.
6781. Do you know how many children the schoolrooms are calculated to hold? I do not; but I know they would hold a larger number than 250. The building is new.
6782. What is done with the children of an evening? The young ones go to bed.
6783. At what time? That is according to the season; about half-past 7 is the latest in summer, and 6 in the depth of winter.
6784. That is when the young ones go to bed? Yes; the elder boys sit up to read, and the elder girls are generally sewing in their sewing-room.
6785. Where do the elder boys spend their evenings? In their reading-room. They have a reading-room, and they are there under the supervision of the drill-master, whose quarters are close to them. He is not compelled to sit with them, but he is generally there.
6786. Are the boys allowed to amuse themselves as they like in this reading-room? Yes, they play games and do what they like.
6787. Have they any means of amusing themselves? Yes, they play draughts and games of that kind.
6788. Have you any trouble in controlling them in the evening? No, I have not had any complaints.
6789. There has been nothing to complain of? I have never had any complaints.
6790. And the girls, you say, have needlework to do in the evenings? Yes, they have work to do; but there are not nearly so many girls as there are boys.
6791. How many girls are there in the school now? There are about 100 girls, taking the infants in, but there are very few elder girls now,—so many have been removed.
6792. Is the work that they do in the evening, task-work, or do they merely amuse themselves? It is not task-work; it is their own clothing, or it is something that they take an interest in. Sometimes they read.
6793. They have books too? Yes, they have a nice library—there are separate libraries for the boys and girls.
6794. Who finds the books? The Government.
6795. Do the girls make their own clothes? Yes—not all, but they make a good deal. (Document handed in. See Appendix P.) There is a list of the clothes made by them last year.
6796. How many articles are there in that list? 1,715 new articles of clothing, and besides this there was all the mending for the institution—the darning of socks and so on; that takes up a great part of their time.
6797. Do you keep cows? Yes.
6798. Are the girls taught to milk? No.
6799. Are any of the boys taught to milk? No.
6800. How is that? It has been tried, and they spoil the cows.
6801. But how is it that boys are taught to milk in the country—they must learn some time or other? But they leave us so young.
6802. I have seen them in the country able to milk at ten years of age? We found that they spoiled the cows. If we kept a boy on the place he might do it.
6803. I cannot see what greater difficulty there can be in teaching them there than in teaching them in the bush—they learn some time or other? You know that cows do not like a change of milkers, and the boys would soon spoil them.
6804. How long would it take a boy to learn? I cannot answer that question.
6805. We are told that the boys do not even cut up the wood for the establishment? No, they do not: I think that they might do that, but it is difficult to get the men to look after them, and they tore and dirtied their clothes so much when they used to cut the wood that we gave it up. They did cut wood in the winter, but we gave it up.

Mrs. M. Betts. 6806. All the wood at the Roman Catholic School is cut up by the boys? Is it?—They have a greater number of children there than we have here, I think.

8 Sept., 1873. 6807. They have about 250 I think? No, I think they have 350.

6808. Mr. Metcalfe.] And yet the Protestant Orphan School is twice as large as the other? No.

6809. How many have you accommodation for? About 250. A great number of children have gone out lately.

6810. Boys and girls? Yes.

6811. Do the girls make clothes for all? Part of the boys' clothing and part of their own, but not the boys' trousers.

6812. Not even the summer trousers? No; there are so few girls in the school now who are able to make anything—they are so young.

6814. From your long experience, have you formed any opinion as to whether the only child of a parent should be taken into an institution of this kind? I think that a woman should support one child, and I have represented that to the Government some time ago. I recommended that every parent should be made to support one child, except the parent was, from illness unable to do so: and that has been made the rule.

6815. And you have 60 per cent. of children of that kind in the place? No, 60 per cent. of children who have mothers only living. I found, about four or five years ago, that the mothers were applying for the elder children, and leaving the others to be supported in the institution; that is to say—supposing a woman had three children in the school, she would take the elder one out just when it was fit to be apprenticed, and would leave the young ones in the school. I said if she took the elder one she ought to take the youngest also; for I found that they could get from 4s. to 6s. a week for the elder children, and I think with that assistance they should be able to support the youngest child. That recommendation has been carried out, and I think there were seven children removed within the last few weeks under that rule.

6816. How long has that rule been carried out? For about four years.

6817. President.] You think that when a parent takes the eldest child out, the youngest should go too? Yes; especially in a case where (say) one child is four years old, and another (say) twelve or thirteen years old. In such a case I am certain the mother can keep the infant with the assistance of the other child.

6818. Mr. Metcalfe.] Did the Government pay any attention to the matter? Yes, they did.

6820. What is the greatest number of children of one family you have in the school? I took in five the other day, all of one family. They are all young children. The father was killed, and the mother has still three children to support. In such a case as that she could not possibly support them all. That is the greatest number of children of one family that I have.

6821. Is there anything further in this direction that you could suggest as a check? It is very difficult to devise any plan; you cannot discover the circumstances of every one; I know a good many of them, but I think that if the Government saw the dress of some of the mothers when they came to the institution they would be surprised to find them recipients of charity.

6822. Mr. Gould.] Their dress, when they come to visit the children? Yes.

6823. President.] You think from their dress that they are people in a good position? I do not know whether they are in a good position, but I believe that many of them are able to support their children, and that they should work for them like other mothers.

6824. Do you not think that when a woman is in a situation, earning good wages, she should, if she has a child in the institution, at least pay something towards its support? Yes; I think she should certainly pay 2s. 6d. a week towards the support of one child. Some mothers are required to pay at this rate now.

6825. How many children are being paid for in this way now? There are nine mothers paying for their children.

6826. Mr. Gould.] Do those who are paying pay up regularly? Yes, tolerably.

6827. If they do not, what steps are taken to enforce payment? We report the circumstance to the Colonial Secretary. I suggested, in a personal interview, that the collection of these moneys should be placed in the hands of the Police Magistrates of the districts, but Mr. Cowper said that it could not be done. I do not know otherwise who can collect the fees, because the parents who are ordered to contribute are scattered all over the country.

6828. To whom is the money paid? To me, and I pay it to the Treasury. Latterly a bond in the sum of £5, to secure the payment of the contribution, has been executed by the mothers.

6829. Mr. Metcalfe.] They have to sign a bond for the payment of the money? Yes. Without a bond it is very difficult in a Colony like this to enforce any payment.

6830. President.] Do you ever have instances of women who have children in the school marrying again? Yes; and they generally take the children out.

6831. Have you heard of instances to the contrary? I do not know. There have been cases in which I have told them I should report it; but, as a rule, they take the children out.

6832. Have you ever found out what position these parents are in who come to see their children, and who appear to spend so much money on their dress? Some are dressmakers, some are housekeepers, and so on.

6833. Are they people living in the neighbourhood or are they from a distance? They are generally from Sydney—as a rule.

6834. Are there any such children in the school now—children whose parents are of such a class? Yes, there are several.

6835. President.] Are there many illegitimate children? No, not many.

6836. How do they get admitted? By the Colonial Secretary's order.

6837.

* NOTE (on revision):—There are twenty-one children in the school who have a parent living, and yet are the only member of the family here. Out of this number only one parent contributes towards the child's support. Some of these parents are unable to contribute, being lunatics or in gaol.

6837. Have you ever had children of that class taken out—reclaimed by their parents? I do not remember any. Mrs. M. Betts.

6838. Have you ever suggested to the Government the propriety of altering the present Act with a view of the children when they are apprenticed out being paid more? Yes, there has been a long correspondence about that. This letter (letter handed in—see Appendix P 1) refers to that. It was the last letter I wrote upon the subject. Mr. Byrnes, my co-trustee, did not approve of it, and so the letter was not sent, as he was then in the Ministry, but I handed the original to Mr. Parkes soon after he took office. It was not sent in to the late Government, because Mr. Byrnes did not approve of it.

6839. What was his objection? He said that the arrangements with regard to the schools would all be altered, and that it was of no use interfering at present. So far back as 1857, the subject of the apprentices was brought before the Government, when I made a suggestion similar to this.

6840. Are these letters of a similar character to those of an earlier date? Yes, they were all upon the apprenticing of the children and showing what should be done with regard to them, and with regard to not taking applicants in rotation as was done formerly.

6841. How do you mean? As people applied for the children they were allotted. That is, supposing that you applied first, you would have the first apprentice that was eligible.

6842. Has that been altered? Yes, that has been altered.

6843. What was the system formerly? The applications were taken in rotation. Those who applied first got the first boys who were eligible for going out. That was altered, because the trustees wished to have some discretion as to the disposal of the children—they wished to have the option of placing a brother and sister within reach of each other, and besides, the medical officers said sometimes that a child ought to go to the sea-side, or sometimes to the interior, and we wished sometimes also to consider the disposition of a child.

6844. You desired to deal with each case so as in the best way to advance the interests of the children? Yes. In some cases we did not consider that the applicant ought to have the child, though the application might have been sent in first. From our own knowledge of the parties, we might think that they were not proper people, or that they were bad-tempered, or perhaps one of them might be addicted to intemperance, and that coming to our knowledge we would pass the application over. We endeavour to get as much knowledge of the parties as possible.

6845. Suppose that there were more dormitory accommodation added to the school, would it require any other additional buildings in order to accommodate a very large number of children there? The dining-rooms would also have to be increased.

6846. Supposing that you had 200 more children? Then we should have to add to everything.

6847. Add to the school-rooms, do you think? I should think not. The schoolrooms are large, and the class-rooms are also large. I do not think we should require any more accommodation there, but I may be mistaken.

6848. At present you have no means of looking after the children after they leave the school? No, there is no supervision over them. If complaints are made we cannot reach the parties; they may be 200 or 300 miles off, and all we can do is to write to the master.

6849. Has that been done? Yes.

6850. On complaints having been made by the children? Yes.

6851. Mr. Metcalfe.] As a rule, do the children do well? Yes, I think that they do.

6852. President.] Do the girls ever come to see you after they leave the school? Oh yes, they often come back to see me; and I hear from them from all parts of the country.

6853. Mr. Metcalfe.] They serve out their whole term of apprenticeship in one place? Yes, they very seldom remove.

6854. In spite of the small pay which they receive? Yes. During the last few years there have been more absconders, and I think it has been on account of their getting such small pay, and sometimes no pay at all. I think if they had proper pay, and were well treated, and there was some one to look after them, they would do well. Now their pay is very small, and sometimes they do not get it.

6855. President.] To whom should it be paid? It should be paid into the Savings' Bank yearly, but many of the masters keep it until the end of the time, and then the boys do not get any interest at all. I am surprised that the boys have turned out so well.

6856. Supposing the thing is properly carried out, does the boy get the money? Yes; the masters, as a rule, generally pay when the boy leaves.

6857. Mr. Metcalfe.] Have you any control over the money when it is paid into the Savings' Bank? No, I have no control over it.

6858. Who keeps the boys' Savings' Bank book? I do not know who ought legally to keep it. The Act says nothing on the subject, but the master generally keeps it. At Randwick they give each child on going out a printed book, which contains instructions as to how they are to act.

6859. President.] You have nothing of that kind? Nothing; and these Acts, under which the children are apprenticed, contradict one another.

6860. In what respects? One Act says that if the amount is paid it is to go to the Government, and another says that it is to go to the apprentice. There are several contradictions. There is no punishment for female apprentices. One Act says that they can be punished for three days, and another for three months; it is all a jumble. The Roman Catholics have no Act allowing them to apprentice their children, any more than we have; they have the same Act as we have; and their trustees act upon their own responsibility, and their children get much better pay, and are much better looked after than ours; but they have no more right to it than we have; they are in just the same position legally as these children.*

6861. You think that the organization of their Church gives them the power of attending to their children better? Yes. They are placed under the priest of the district; and I believe the Protestant clergymen would not take the trouble to look after the children that the priests take. We do sometimes write to the clergymen.

* NOTE (on revision):—In respect of the punishment of children for misconduct, and masters for ill-using apprentices,—one Act says a female cannot be punished, or a male apprentice under fourteen years of age; and then says an absconder (male or female) can be sent to gaol for three months if they refuse to give reasonable satisfaction, or security to give reasonable satisfaction, whatever that may mean. One Act says one Justice may fine a master, for ill usage, not less than £10, the fine to go to the Government; and another Act says two Justices may fine a master up to £10, fine to go to apprentice. The Government have for years refused to make any change in the law, in view of the alterations in the constitution of the two Orphan Schools which have long been contemplated.

Mrs. M. Betts. clergymen of the districts to which children are sent, to ask them to look after them, but they have no power to interfere. I think that the Roman Catholic children are well looked after, after they leave school, and they take them away from their masters if they are neglected or ill-used; but they have no more power to do it than we have, that I am aware of.

6862. Mr. Cowper.] I do not know—I have had the children from that school before me, and the same clothes were on them that they had worn three years before? There may be solitary instances of that kind.

6863. And from Randwick too—children who have never been looked after at all? I think that, in the remote districts, the police might look after the children.

6864. President.] Do you not think that putting them so much under the police would fix the brand of pauperism upon them? The police might see that they had proper clothing, &c.

6865. Mr. Cowper.] Do you not think that the Police Magistrates would be the proper persons to look after them? Yes. Something ought to be done for the children in the interior. There are many of them who have worked their way up to very respectable positions.

6866. Mr. Metcalfe.] Many of the children from your school? Yes, many of them, though I am surprised that they have. There is one at the Survey Department now, about three and twenty—a licensed surveyor—getting a large salary in a good district. I had a letter from him, and I had him when he was five years old. Many of them who have left the school have got small farms and respectable situations.

6867. President.] They have small farms of their own? Yes.

6868. Have many instances come to your knowledge in which the girls have gone to the bad? I have reckoned up ten since I have been there—only ten that I know of; and out of those ten there are four whom I know of who have since turned out very respectable women.

6869. Have retrieved their positions? Yes; four out of the ten were led astray by members of their masters' family very young—soon after they went out. You have no idea what mischief one bad girl will do amongst a number of others.

6870. Have you had any girls of that class? Yes.

6871. You have young girls who were not virtuous come to you? Yes, I have had one or two. I had one sent in lately. I protested against it—it was an exceptional case—a case of a girl who had been living with a Chinaman. That girl was sent in; I protested against it, and Mr. Parkes promised me that he would look into the matter, but the girl was sent in.

6872. Have you found that she has had a bad influence on the other girls? No, I do not think she has done any harm as yet. She promised me that she would not say where she came from. I told her that my little girls would not speak to her, or notice her at all, if they thought she had come from such a life, and that they would make her miserable. I do not think she has told any one.

6873. You have kept it a secret then? Yes, no one knows anything about it but the sub-matron.

6874. Do you find it difficult to deal with this girl? No, she is very tractable. She was deserted by her father, and her mother was deranged. I think that she will turn out very well. She is naturally of a mild, gentle disposition, and I think that she has kept her promise to me. She promised me faithfully that she would not tell any one where she came from, and if she had done so I think that I should have heard of it.

6875. You have had no experience in dealing with girls of this class? I have had but one of late years.

6876. Do you keep them separate? Yes, I do keep them separate. I had one two years ago, and I got her into the Refuge, and she has turned out very steady. I heard from the matron that she was giving great satisfaction. When she misbehaved herself, her mistress was more to blame than herself, for the mistress allowed her to go out, and then if she was not home in time, locked her out all night.

6877. President.] Is there any further suggestion that you wish to make? No, I think that is all. I suppose that Mr. Whitting has told you everything connected with the books. I think that the rations of the servants should be increased. The children's ration is large enough, but the servants' is not. A pound of meat a day is not enough for a working man.

6878. I thought the ration was 10 lbs. a week? No. I think the rations allowed to the men in the Asylums are much larger. The tea, sugar, and meat want increasing—not the bread—that is large enough.

6879. What alteration would you propose? That they should have 1½ lb. of uncooked meat, 6 ozs. of tea, 2 lbs. sugar, and 6 ozs. butter, weekly, in lieu of 3½ ozs. tea and 17½ ozs. sugar that they receive at present.

TUESDAY, 9 SEPTEMBER, 1873.

Members Present:—

WILLIAM CHARLES WINDEYER, Esq., PRESIDENT.

SAMUEL GOOLD, Esq.

MICHAEL METCALFE, Esq.

CHARLES COWPER, JUN., Esq.

James Cavill, late inmate of the Training Ship "Vernon," called in and examined:—

J. Cavill.

6880. President.] How old are you? Going on for fourteen years, I think. I was twelve when I left the ship.

6881. When did you leave the ship? About a year and a half ago. I am at Mr. Moriarty's now.

6882. How long were you on board the ship? About four years.

6883. Where were you born? In Hobart Town.

6884. In what part of the country did you live before you were sent on board the "Vernon"? I do not know. I cannot say.

6885. Were you taught any trade on board the ship? Yes.

6886. What trade? Tailoring.

6887. What do you do at Mr. Moriarty's? I clean the knives and boots, and I go on messages.

6888. Did you like the trade of tailoring? No.

6889. You did not like it? No.

6890. When you were apprenticed, were you asked what you would like to be? Captain Mein asked me if I would go to Mr. Moriarty, and I said "yes."

6891. You say that you did not like tailoring work? No, I did not.

6892. Did you not make a suit of clothes which were shown at the Exhibition? Yes, I made one suit.

6893. They were very well made; did you not like the work when you were doing it? Yes, I did; but then—I did not like the work.

6894. Mr. Metcalfe.] What do you mean—you say that you did like it when you were doing it, and yet that you did not like it? I did not like to lay my mind down to it.

6895. Then you would rather do the sort of work that you are doing now than you would be a tailor? Yes.

6896. President.] Do I understand you to say that Captain Mein asked you whether you would like to be a tailor, or did he simply ask you whether you would go to Mr. Moriarty? He only asked me whether I would go to Mr. Moriarty's.

6897. Mr. Cowper.] If you had your choice, which would you have gone to—the tailoring business or to Mr. Moriarty's? I would rather go to what I am doing now.

6898. President.] Do you know whether the boys are ever asked what trades they would like to be? No, I never knew Captain Mein to ask them what they would be or what they would like to go to.

6899. Mr. Metcalfe.] Did he ask you? No; he asked me if I would go to Mr. Moriarty, and I said "yes."

6900. President.] Have you ever told any one on board the ship that you would like to be a tailor? No.

6901. But you felt that you would not like to be a tailor? Yes.

6902. Do you know whether there are many boys on board the ship who would like to go to sea? There were a lot of boys who would have liked to go to sea while I was there.

6903. Mr. Metcalfe.] Would you have liked to go to sea? No.

6904. President.] Are there many boys who would prefer being sent up the country to going to sea? Some would, but others would rather go to situations here.

6905. Have you either father or mother living? My mother is not living; my father was a captain in the Army.

6906. Mr. Metcalfe.] Is he dead? I do not know.

6907. President.] Do you remember him? No.

6908. Mr. Metcalfe.] Have you any relatives in the Colony? No.

6909. President.] No one belonging to you that you know of? No.

6910. Were all the boys pretty comfortable on board the ship when you were there? Yes.

6911. Mr. Cowper.] When you were on board the ship, she was in Farm Cove, was she not? Yes, and up at Cockatoo too.

6912. She was down by Lady Macquarie's Chair before she went up to Cockatoo? Yes, when I first went on board she was.

6913. Mr. Metcalfe.] Did you bathe when the ship was down the harbour? Yes, over in Mossman's Bay.

6914. Can the boys swim? Some of them.

6915. Did they all learn to swim? Some did.

6916. Some did? Yes, plenty of the boys can swim.

6917. Mr. Cowper.] Was any boy taught to swim, or were only those allowed to swim who could swim? Yes, there were plenty who could swim; no boy was taught; they always went over in the boats to bathe.

6918. You were all allowed to bathe? Yes, allowed to bathe, but not allowed to go out in the deep.

6919. President.] Then you all had a chance of learning to swim, had you not? Yes.

6920. Can you pull? Yes, I can pull.

6921. You do not know any boys in Sydney? No, I know no boys in Sydney or over on North Shore either, only a young gentleman who is stopping at Mr. Moriarty's.

6922. Let us hear you read? [Witness read a portion of the printed Evidence.]

6923. How was it that you came to learn the tailoring trade if you did not like it? I do not know. I was sent down to the trade, and first I used to learn to sew on a piece of rag, and then I was made a tailor.

Mr. Emilè Morris, shoemaker, called in and examined at his own request:—

6924. President.] You have been summoned in compliance with your own wish, as you have given us to understand that you desired to make some communication to the Commission? Yes.

6925. We shall be happy to hear what you have to say? Perhaps, to make myself understood of the Commission, it is right I shall make a short statement with regard to some boys of mine upon the "Vernon."

6926. You have some boys on the "Vernon"? Yes, I have three.

6927. What is your business? Shoemaking.

6928. You reside in Sydney? Yes, in George-street.

6929. You have a shop there? Yes.

6930. Make any statement you like? The mother of these boys is an habitual drunkard and has been for twenty years, and I have had enough to do with her. She has been in the habit of teaching these boys to steal, and they have robbed me until I have now nothing of worth to steal; and then they stole from somewhere else. I then communicated my feelings to some one else, who advised me to put the boys on board the "Vernon," which I did. One by one I did so, to save them from becoming thieves. Now the object of my complaint is, that I have been a loser of one of my boys from the "Vernon." He was sent to the country and was killed by a bull at the age of twelve years; he was sent from his trade as a shoemaker to the driving of cattle, and there he was killed by a bull. My impression is that the boy would only be bound to his trade on the "Vernon," and I think it unjust to the boy that he should be sent somewhere else. On the other hand, I thought that the boys were at liberty to sign their own documents, but it seems that this boy on his dying bed said that he was made to sign this document and go up the country.

9 Sept., 1873.

Mr. E. Morris.

9 Sept., 1873.

- Mr. E. Morris. 6931. Then he objected to it? Yes, he objected to it twice, and the third time he was asked, the boy thought that it was no use his objecting any more, and he was sent away without my receiving any intimation of it. I got no intimation of his death or of anything else.
- 9 Sept., 1873. 6932. Where was he sent to? To the place called Kangaloon. I have one other little boy on the ship, aged eleven years and six months, and I am afraid that he will be served the same.
6933. What became of the other one? I got him off and he is up the country on a station. He is able to have care of himself; he is seventeen years of age.
6934. Mr. Cowper.] You sent him away yourself? Yes. He is quite capable of taking care of himself.
6935. At what age did you send him up the country? He was seventeen years old then.
6936. Before you sent him? Yes.
6937. How old was the boy who was killed by the bull? Twelve years of age.
6938. President.] You had three on board the ship? Yes.
6939. One of them is there still? Yes.
6940. And the other you got out when he was seventeen years old? Yes, when Mr. Robertson was Colonial Secretary I got him out. My complaint is simply this,—that I thought my boy should be bound to his trade that he had served to on board the ship.
6941. Did the boy wish himself to be a shoemaker (Yes; and I got no intimation of where he was sent to.
6942. Where did you reside then? In Sydney.
6943. How long have you been residing in the same place? Four years. I have a fear that the other little fellow will be sent away among the wild cattle, and that is why I requested to be examined of the Commission here to-day.
6944. Mr. Gould.] How long is it since the boy was killed? Last Christmas.
6945. Mr. Metcalfe.] And you want to save the other boy from being sent away without your knowledge? Yes, from his trade I hope.
6946. What trade is he learning now? Shoemaking.
6947. President.] Does he wish to be a shoemaker? Yes. There is a respectable person at Newtown who wants him, but I am afraid that he won't get him.
6948. Do you see any objection to his being apprenticed to a respectable shoemaker in Sydney? No; I would be glad of it.
6949. Do you see no harm in it? No. The person I mean resides near Petersham.
6950. But supposing that person will not take him, do you see any chance of the boy's going to the bad in Sydney? I think that his work would keep him from evil. I should like to have my eye upon him; he is the only one I have now.
6951. Did you go before the Bench and say that you could not control these boys? Yes.
6952. Mr. Cowper.] Have you paid anything towards their keep? I was not in a position to do so.
6953. Have you any other children? Yes, two more at home.
6954. Boys or girls? Girls.
6955. What are their ages? One is nine and the other seven.
6956. President.] Is your wife living with you? Yes, and she is still a drunkard.
6957. She lives with you? Yes.
6958. Would you prefer this boy's being apprenticed in town, supposing that a respectable tradesman would take him in any of the country towns such as Bathurst or Goulburn? I should prefer to have him in Sydney, so I could watch over him.
6959. Do you think that that would counterbalance the danger of his being amongst old companions in the town here? I do not think any of his old companions are there now; he was only a little boy when he went on board the ship.
6960. Have you got your two girls at school? Yes.
6961. Where? The Church of England School in Pitt-street. I speak on account of others as well as myself. I feel as much interest in every little boy being sent among wild cattle as of my own; but it stands to reason that a man will cleave to his own.
6962. Is there anything else you would like to say? I simply would like to add that I do not think it is right to send a boy away without his parents' knowledge.
6963. But I think that yours is an exceptional case: you put the boy on the ship because you could not control him; but the parents of most boys there do not look after their children at all? No.
6964. Mr. Metcalfe.] Do you not pay anything now towards the boy's support? I have not been in a position to do it.
6965. What is the name of this person to whom you wish him to be apprenticed? Aaron Daves.
6966. Where does he come from? From Goulburn lately.
6967. Is he a Frenchman—a countryman of yours? No.
6968. But you would safely trust your boy with him? Yes; he is one of the best tradesmen in the Colony.

WEDNESDAY, 10 SEPTEMBER, 1873.

Members Present:—

WILLIAM CHARLES WINDEYER, Esq., PRESIDENT.

SAMUEL GOOLD, Esq.

MICHAEL METCALFE, Esq.

CHARLES COWPER, JUN., Esq.

Mrs. Martha Malbon, matron, Sydney Female Refuge, called in and examined:—

- Mrs. M. Malbon. 6969. President.] I believe that you are the matron of the Protestant Female Refuge? I am.
- 10 Sept., 1873. 6970. How long have you held that position? For three years and a half.
6971. How many girls have you in the institution? We have at present twenty-four.
6972. How many of this class of girls have come under your observation during the time you have been there—how many have passed through the institution during the time you have been there? I really cannot tell you. 6973.

6973. Is twenty-four your average number? Yes from four and twenty to eight and twenty. We have had eight and twenty.

6974. How long do they stay in the place, as a rule? They generally stay for twelve months; some stay over that time, and others less.

6975. Do you find that the majority of them stay for the twelve months? Yes, the greater number of them do.

6976. This Commission has been appointed to inquire into the Public Charities of the Colony, and amongst others that have come under our observation is the Industrial School for Girls at Biloela. At that institution we found a number of young girls—prostitutes—mixed up with a number of little children belonging to the unfortunate and distressed class, and not in any way addicted to this particular vice; and the Commission have considered how far it is desirable that juvenile prostitutes should be allowed to consort with young children who have been simply unfortunate in the circumstances of their early life,—homeless and wretched, but not vicious. It has been suggested that perhaps arrangements might be made with the two Refuges in the city for the reception of these juvenile prostitutes; and we want to know from you how far you think such an arrangement might be practicable—if it is practicable at all; and, if so, under what conditions? Well, I think that I am scarcely the person to answer that. The gentlemen and ladies of the committee would be the right persons to supply that information, would they not?

6977. As a matter of opinion, your statement would be quite as good as that of any one else, you know—perhaps better. We do not wish to ask you whether any arrangements can be made, or whether they would be made;—we know that you could not bind the governing body upon such points as those; but we want to know from you whether you think that the system of discipline in the Refuge is such as would allow of the reception of girls of this class; or, if it is not such at present, whether it could be made so? It could very easily be adapted to that. I have girls there now as young as fourteen.

6978. But do not these girls go there voluntarily as penitents? Yes, for the most part; but one or two of them have been brought there by their mothers.

6979. Have you any system of restriction or coercion? No, only my key; that is the only thing. They cannot get out without my permission. I always tell them, "You must remain in for twelve months." We have no punishments.

6980. If a girl were to insist upon going out, you have no power to keep her in? No, but I keep the key so that she cannot get out.

6981. They cannot get out then except by stealth? No; and I do not think that they can get out in that way now—we have every precaution against it.

6982. Do you find that system answer? Yes. I have some girls there from Biloela now. Mr. Cowper knows of them.

6983. How did they come to you? I think that they came from the Water Police Office.

6984. The girls are usually admitted there of their own accord? Yes.

6985. You can only get them to go there by advising them? Yes, they are only admitted by giving their consent to go in.

6986. Do you think that if you did not lock them up they would go out to a greater extent? I am sure that some of them would.

6987. Do they appear pleased? They do not like work, to begin with—that is a general complaint; but they get to like it after a time.

6988. Then you think that if the committee would agree to receive such girls on consideration of the Government paying a certain amount for their support, you have sufficient means at your disposal to restrain them if that is necessary—to keep them from getting out? Yes; I think that we should have a little more power to keep them in, and we have now no means of punishment whatever.

6989. How many of these very young girls have you had in the institution? I have now about sixteen who are under twenty years of age.

6990. Do you find them difficult to restrain or keep in order? Occasionally they are.

6991. What means do you resort to if you find them refractory? If they do not work I tell them that they must not eat, and they get only bread and water.

6992. Do these girls come in voluntarily? Yes.

6993. Do they come in merely seeking a temporary asylum in case of illness, or do they come in with the intention of reforming? I think of reforming. We do not keep them if they are ill—in that case they go to the Infirmary.

6994. They go to the Infirmary until they are well? Yes.

6995. Mr. Metcalfe.] And then they come back again from the Infirmary? Yes, they have their choice of coming back, and if they say that they will come back I go and fetch them.

6996. They are sent into the lock ward of the Infirmary? Yes.

6997. President.] Do you find that this class of girls is amenable to kindly treatment? Yes, very much so. They are very sensitive.

6998. You can govern them more by kindness and by endeavouring to raise them from their fallen condition than you can by treating them harshly? Yes, I am sure of it.

6999. Personally, would you have any objection to undertaking the charge of a number of girls of this class, varying in age from eleven years up to about sixteen—say about twenty-five of such girls, that is about the supposed number of them? I could not do it without help.

7000. How are you off for accommodation—how many could you take into the place now? We could accommodate fifty altogether, very comfortably, I think.

7001. Mr. Metcalfe.] And you have only twenty-four? Yes.

7002. And do the committee ever refuse to receive a girl who wishes to come in? Oh no.

7003. It would not matter from what source they came, so long as they were penitents you would admit them? Yes.

7004. President.] Is there any room there for additional buildings? Yes, there is room. We are just going to build a new wash-house.

7005. Is there room for more dormitory accommodation? Oh yes.

7006. Mr. Metcalfe.] What ground have you for recreation there? There is a beautiful large piece of ground behind the institution.

7007. Is it grassed? Yes.

Mrs. M.
Malbon.
10 Sept., 1873.

- Mrs. M. Malbon.
10 Sept., 1873.
7008. President.] What further assistance would you require if you were to receive twenty-five more young girls such as these? I should certainly require another hand—a sub-matron.
7009. Have you any sub-matrons now? I have a teacher there who acts as sub-matron.
7010. That is the only help you have? And a laundress we generally have.
7011. You think that you would require another sub-matron? Yes, I am sure that we should.
7012. Mr. Metcalfe.] The laundress has to teach the girls washing? Yes.
7013. President.] Do you find this class of girls very ignorant of household matters? Yes, very.
7014. How far is the place self-supporting at present? I can give you the last year's report. (Report handed in.)
7015. I see by this report that you received £348 8s. 6d. in subscriptions, and that £483 19s. were raised from the proceeds of work done by the institution? Yes.
7016. And that the expenses for the year appear to have been £674 11s. 2d., apart from the interest upon some overdraft at the bank? Yes, that is it.
7017. Can you tell us how much per head the institution costs? No, I have never made the calculation.
7018. Is their time fully employed in earning this amount of money? Yes, they are fully employed, but I think that we shall have more money this year.
7019. The time of the girls is fully employed? Yes, it is, but the amount will be more this year than the last; it has been more hitherto.
7020. This money is all for washing? Yes, nearly all. There is a little needlework done—a very small share.
7021. Then do I understand you to say that personally you would have no objection to undertake such a charge as this? I would not.
7022. You have heard something as to the character of these girls who have been at Biloela? Yes, I think we have got a specimen with us.
7023. Are the premises so situated that misbehaved young men cannot communicate with the girls if they are so disposed? No, they cannot. The premises are next to the Police barracks, and our walls are very high.
7024. Mr. Cowper.] Have they no means of access from the outside—can they not speak to the girls at all? All the front of the building is occupied by ourselves, and the windows are so fastened that they cannot get to them at all.
7025. I understood that sometimes young men were in the habit of waiting about there to see the girls? No, not to see the girls from our place, I am sure of that.
7026. President.] What is your opinion as to the success of the institution as far as regards the object for which it is intended? Well, of course there is a very small percentage of these girls actually reclaimed, but I believe that some are thoroughly reclaimed.
7027. Do you take a girl in more than once—suppose that a girl goes out and falls into her old habits, do you take her in again? That is according to her age, and according to circumstances. We have now two who have been out once; but it is just according to the circumstances of the case.
7028. Do you find that you are more successful in reforming the older ones or the younger ones? The younger ones.
7029. You think that the younger a girl is taken away from this course of life the better? Yes, I do think so indeed.
7030. Then it is not your opinion that this precocity of vice is attended with a determination to adhere to a course of vice? I do not think so; if they were led properly many of them might be rescued—but of course there are some who are really badly disposed.
7031. Do I understand you to say that you see no reason why you should not be as successful with the girls at Biloela as with those who come into the Refuge voluntarily as penitents at a greater age? Those who come in quite broken down, wanting to reform and asking to reform, I think reform more thoroughly than the others; but then I have had so few young ones to deal with—I have only had young ones latterly.
7032. After they have been with you for a time and are going away, do you not find them situations and watch over them? We find them situations, and if we can we get them bound.
7033. Do you find it difficulty in getting them out? Sometimes they have to wait a little time.
7034. Do you send them out into the country or into the town? We never send them into the town, but into the country always.
7035. Do they receive less wages than other servants? They do receive small wages at first. The ladies think that it is good for them—that if high wages are given to them, great temptations are thrown in their way.
7036. What wages do you expect them to take? That is according to what work they can do.
7037. The ordinary work of general servants? I have had some who got 10s. a week, and some go for 5s. with the promise of an increase.
7038. What are they supposed to know in the way of housekeeping, after having been with you for a twelvemonth? All kinds of house-work. They can scrub, and wash and cook.
7039. While they are in the institution, do they take turns in the kitchen and learn to cook? Yes.
7040. All the labour of the place is done by the inmates, is it not? Yes.
7041. And they all take their turns at different vocations? Yes, they take their turns as kitchen-maid, but they do not go in as cook, because it would require some one to be over them.
7042. Mr. Cowper.] Do you teach them to cut out and make their own clothes? Not to cut them out, but they make them. I can assure you that it is a great trouble to teach them even to put the materials together.
7043. I have always heard that these girls were the smartest girls in the community? Yes; but they do not make their own clothes themselves.
7044. I mean smart only as regards their ability to learn these things? Yes. I have had a few of the younger ones until lately, and their mothers have brought them up so idly.
7045. Their mothers have not taught them to work, but have allowed them to wear jewellery and finery, and go to dancing saloons, and so on? Yes. Directly they come to us they have to wear the institution clothes.
7046. Have you a uniform for the girls who are inmates of the Refuge? Yes.
7047. Mr. Metcalfe.] When they go out to service, do you give them clothes? Yes.
7048. Are they made in any distinctive shape? No; they have two suits—under-clothing and all; and then they mend up the clothes that they bring in with them, and they take them too.

Mrs. M.
Malbon.
10 Sept., 1873.

7049. Mr. Cowper.] I suppose you teach them to act as laundresses? Yes.
7050. President.] What do you do with them in the evenings? On three evenings in the week we have ministers for an hour. The girls' work is not over until 6 o'clock, and then they have to get their tea; and after that—on three evenings in the week—we have ministers come to see them; we have the Dean, or Mr. Bode, on Thursday evenings; and I have a young lady who comes and teaches them music on Friday evenings. They sing very nicely; and at half-past 8 o'clock they go to bed.
7051. Mr. Metcalfe.] Half-past 8 in the summer-time—do they go to bed so early? Yes; they are very tired.
7052. President.] Would you tell us what your hours are—your daily routine of duty? They are up at 5 in the morning.
7053. Not in the winter? No, not in the winter, but they are in the summer—and they are up earlier than that if we have hard work to do; and then we have prayers at half-past 6, and breakfast at half-past 7; and they begin their work at 8.
7054. Is there no work done before that? They prepare their work, you know—they go direct to their work at 8 o'clock, and there is a good deal of preparation required, which they do before breakfast; they are occupied in doing that up to breakfast-time; then from 8 to 11 they work; and then at 11 they have a bit of bread for their lunch, and they sit for five or ten minutes eating that; and then they go on working until 1, when they have their dinner. They then, at 2 o'clock, go to work again, and go on working until 6, and then they have tea.
7055. And then they have tea? Yes; and they go and do any fancy-work that they choose.
7056. Mr. Metcalfe.] Have they table-covers set on at their meals? Oh yes; and the table-cloth is clean enough for any one to eat off. I am always there at dinner-time, to see that they behave themselves properly.
7057. Do they get tea and sugar and milk, and so on? Yes, bread and meat or treacle for breakfast, and for dinner they have meat and greens one day, and meat and potatoes the next, with cold meat on Sundays, and sometimes a pudding.
7058. President.] Their time after 6 o'clock in the evening is at their own disposal? Yes; they mend their clothes, and so on—the elder girls do that. At tea-time they have bread and treacle and tea.
7059. Mr. Metcalfe.] They are kept employed—they have no time to concoct mischief? Oh, they can do that.
7060. Mr. Cowper.] Have they a library? Yes, we have had some nice presents made lately. The greater number of the girls can read.
7061. Supposing that a girl is resolutely refractory and refuses to do the work, do you turn her out? No, not unless she is very bad—we never turn them out if we can help it. There was one came in the other day—one that Mr. Crane sent us—who refused to remain.
7062. President.] Supposing that you had young girls like these from Biloela, would you keep them apart from the others? They must mix.
7063. You see no objection to it? I do not see any objection to it. I have some small girls and some large now.
7064. Mr. Metcalfe.] Do you dine at the same table with them? No, I sit at the table, and at dinner-time I read to them. In the morning I have the Register, and at breakfast-time I ask them what their conduct has been the day before, and I generally find that they give me the correct answers. I ask them all round, and if one says that she has done her work and behaved herself when she has not, another will say "You do not tell the truth."
7065. Do they tell the truth? Yes, they generally do.
7066. President.] This is done openly before them all? Yes.
7067. Do they take it good-naturedly—do they not object? No. They have a habit of backing-biting and telling tales, and so I do it.
7068. And you find that this system checks that habit? Yes. That is one of the questions which I put to them—"I hope you have not been carrying tales."
7069. And if they have been doing so will they confess it? Oh yes.
7070. Mr. Metcalfe.] They do not sing indecent songs? No, I do not hear it.
7071. President.] What do you read to them? I am reading the "Wide, Wide World" at present.
7072. You read any light and entertaining books? Yes, any nice book, "Jessica's First Prayer"—I dare say you know that; and all those books. The ladies provide me very often. They are very fond of the "Oiled Feather."
7073. Mr. Cowper.] How many sleep in one room? We have sometimes seven in one room; that is the greatest number we have in one room.
7074. Are there any rooms in which only one or two sleep? That is according to how many are in the house? There are no rooms in which there are only one or two beds, except the probationers' room.
7075. President.] Who are the probationers? The girls who come in to be admitted. The ladies committee meet every Tuesday, and those girls who come in in the interval between the meetings of the committee remain in the probationers' room until the committee meet.
7076. Do they dine there? Yes, they take their food there.
7077. Do you give the girls any money when they go out? No, nothing but their clothes.
7078. Mr. Cowper.] Where do you get situations for them? Up the country as far as we can.
7079. You think it desirable to send them away as far as possible from their old associates? Yes; if they go among their old associates they are very likely to go wrong again.
7080. Mr. Metcalfe.] Do people apply from the country to you to find them servants? Yes; I had an application the other day for one to go up the country. Lizzie R— is going to the situation next Saturday.
7081. Do you teach those who cannot read? The teacher teaches them reading, writing, and arithmetic, and if they are so far advanced they learn a little geography.
7082. They can in the evenings, I suppose, read any book they choose? Yes.
7083. President.] For how many hours a day do they attend school? There are eight who attend.
7084. For how many hours a day? For two hours. They do not attend school the whole time—each one—for they are at work; but they are attended to by the teacher. You cannot get them to study long; they do not like it. Of course if there were more of them to teach they would be longer in the school-room.
7085. Mr. Metcalfe.] It keeps you very much at home? Yes; I think that is one reason why the girls behave

- Mrs. M. Malbon.
10 Sept., 1873.
- behave themselves well, because I am so constantly with them. I should lose the hold I have over them if I was away from them constantly.
7086. Mr. Couper.] Who looks after the girls while you are away? There is a teacher with them.
7087. Does she live on the establishment? Yes; I have one girl who has been with me three years and four months, and she attends to a good deal of the work for me, and then we generally have a laundress, and she would be in the laundry with the girls, you know.
7088. The girls there are all Protestants, I think? I have two Roman Catholics in the place. When they came I told them that they had better go next door, but they preferred coming into the Refuge.
7089. Mr. Metcalfe.] But if they came to you, you made them conform to your service? Oh yes, to everything. If they say they do not want to go next door, they must attend and conform to all the services, and they do; they attend to the services.
7090. President.] Is there any suggestion you wish to make yourself? No, I think not.
7091. What salary do you get? £65.
7092. And board? Yes, for myself and my husband. I had £50 when I went there, and the ladies raised it £15. Of course I have everything done there in the way of washing.

The Rev. George Sutherland called in and examined:—

- Rev. G. Sutherland.
10 Sept., 1873.
7093. President.] You are a Presbyterian clergyman at present officiating in Sydney at St. George's Church? Yes, I am settled pastor there.
7094. I believe that you have had some experience in connection with the school system of Canada? Yes, I have had some experience of the school system of British America—Eastern British America—especially in Halifax and Charlotte Town.
7095. I dare say that you know what is the object of the Commission: it is to inquire into the Public Charities of the Colony, and amongst others our Industrial and Reformatory Schools and Orphanages. I dare say, as you have paid some attention to the subject, you can make some suggestions to us. It will perhaps be best if you will make some statement first, upon which we may ask you some questions afterwards? I can just state, in a very few words, what my experience and acquaintance with the school system has been. I was a teacher for three years in the city of Halifax, and was accustomed as a student to visit both the poor house and the hospital and asylum; and in Charlotte Town I was a member of the Board of Education for the whole Colony for eight years, and had a constant acquaintance with the working of the whole machinery. The Board met once a month, and more frequently if required than that. I know the working of the public institutions there. Latterly I have been in Dunedin for five years, and I know what the school system is there, and am acquainted with the benevolent institutions, reformatory, and free schools. That is the range of my experience.
7096. Has the Industrial School at Biloela come under your observation since you have been here? No.
7097. Or the Orphan Schools at Parramatta? No, beyond being in the Fort-street School, where my own children go, and where I have been twice. I have not been in any other public school.
7098. In the part of Canada with which you were acquainted, were the Orphanages conducted upon an entirely unsectarian principle, or were the children of the different denominations kept apart? In Prince Edward's Island, where I was a member of the Board of Education for eight years, we had a common school system, and a moderate fee was charged for ordinary scholars in ordinary schools; but there were free schools also for children who were unable to pay anything, and those were public schools.
7099. We are not so much inquiring about the common school system, but about schools for the education and care—more particularly the care—of such children as we have at Randwick, in an institution there with which you are perhaps acquainted? I know something slightly about it. The nearest thing to that of which I have had any experience is the Benevolent Institution in Dunedin, and the Reformatory there, where all denominations mingle together. I am acquainted with these, as the matron of the Benevolent Institution was a member of my congregation, and as I frequently attended the institution. There the children of all denominations are together.
7100. What class of children is there in the Reformatory? The worst boys; those who are almost incorrigible.
7101. Are they boys who have been convicted of crimes by the Courts, or are they boys who have been simply picked up about the streets as having no homes? They are of both classes; guilty of inferior crimes—misdemeanours and so on; those who were young rascals, too bad for the Benevolent Institution. The Benevolent Institution took hold of poor children, orphan children who were manageable.
7102. How many were there in this Reformatory? I think the numbers, as far as I can remember, were from sixty to eighty.
7103. Of both sexes? I think that there was a different arrangement for the female sex. I am specially aware of the boys. The Reformatory was, I think, of about a year and a half's growth when I was there; but the Benevolent Institution was for both boys and girls.
7104. Do you know anything of the discipline of the institution? Yes.
7105. Was corporal punishment resorted to? I think not—not in the Benevolent Institution.
7106. But in the Reformatory? I cannot say.
7107. As to the Benevolent Institution, you are not certain whether it was or not? I think not. I have been through the institution from time to time, and I know that if anything of a severe character had taken place there it would have arrested my attention.
7108. Do you know anything of the system of punishment that they had, supposing boys were incorrigible and violent? At this moment I do not know beyond the ordinary restraints placed upon the children of the public schools.
7109. Do you know if there was ever any difficulty found in restraining them? No, I think not. I know that there was some difficulty arose in the place on the score of religion, but so far as corporal punishment was concerned I knew of no case ever coming before the public.
7110. This is Dunedin that you are speaking of? Yes, it is.
7111. Were there any such institutions in Canada for the care of homeless and neglected children that ever came under your notice? The poor children, while I was in Halifax, were accommodated in a department of what was called the poor house; and I have been present frequently when young and old and

and middle-aged, and a number of children, were habitually present at services there. They all attended together. It was what was called the poor house there—a large institution for very aged persons, and for young neglected children.

Rev. G.
Sutherland.
10 Sept., 1873.

7112. How many inmates were there in this institution? I cannot say at this moment.

7113. Give us some idea—were there one hundred or one thousand? They would range, I think, from sixty to one hundred and twenty; I should say so.

7114. What proportion of young children and old people would there be? The population of Halifax was about 25,000.

7115. What proportion of young and old people were there in this institution? From those who attended regular meetings that I held there, I should say that perhaps there were two-thirds aged people and one-third children. There were old people there supported upon crutches and in various stages of infirmity.

7116. Did they all live in this building? Yes. There were several buildings within the one enclosure.

7117. Did they mix together in the institution? They might all come together for public instruction. They met together when I was there.*

7118. When they were not in school did they mix together? No, they did not; but I would have you to understand that there were schools in the city of Halifax and in the city of Charlotte Town for the poor children—not for orphans, but for poor children whose parents could not pay for their maintenance.

7119. How long have you been in Sydney? Only about twelve months.

7120. You are not acquainted with Randwick at all? No.

7121. Mr. Goold.] What is your view with regard to uniting these Orphan Schools at Parramatta: there are at present existing a Protestant Orphan School and a Roman Catholic Orphan School,—would you be in favour of doing away with the denominational character of those schools and uniting them? I certainly think that if the Government support institutions they should have the control over them and reduce the expenditure as much as possible, and if that can be reduced with the efficient working of the school still carried on I would unite the two together.

7122. Do you think that, as a principle, the Government should support denominational schools? No; I am decidedly in favour of common schools.

7123. That is, schools in which the children of all denominations mingle together? Yes.

7124. Similar to our public schools? Yes.

7125. Mr. Metcalfe.] Then it is on the score of economy that you say that? Yes; economy and efficiency too. I think that the Government can render the schools more efficient; and if I am to trust my judgment and what I read in the public prints, many of these poor children in the denominational schools are neglected; and if I am to trust to what I know of the matter, I believe that there is a strong tendency in denominations to give these poor children an inferior kind of education.

7126. But if it is proved to you that in this Colony the children in the denominational schools are exceedingly well taught by each denomination, would you then think it necessary to amalgamate them? My objection on the score of efficiency would be removed, but that on the score of economy would still remain.

7127. But, on the score of economy also, we have it that those schools are maintained at the minimum rate? On the score of efficiency and economy, I think you should amalgamate if you can bring them to it—as much as possible unify your people.

7128. Mr. Cowper.] If one denomination manages a school cheaper than others, would you think it advisable to incur expense by amalgamating with the others? I do not know whether I would like to answer that. I would like to consider the premises before making an answer.

7129. It must be very simple;—if there is a denomination managing a place more economically than other places, would you advise that it should be retained as it is, or that it should be amalgamated? If you put it with the other schools would it be under the public management?

7130. They are all paid for by the Government at present? And your question is as to whether these two institutions should be merged into one?

7131. If any one denomination manages a school more economically than another, would you leave that school entirely under the control of that denomination who manage it under the Government, or would you amalgamate it with others which are not managed so economically? My decision would depend on the efficiency of the school. If it were perfectly efficient in all respects, then of course it would be best to leave it as it was; but if the efficiency was of one class only—if it did not render its pupils fit for their duties as public citizens—if it rendered them narrow and bigoted—that would enter into my consideration. If it placed the pupils before the public as persons who were capable of discharging their duties, or whether it simply made them agents for a sectarian party,—such considerations would enter into my consideration.

7132. President.] Then it would be cheaper to the Country in the long run, even if the Country paid a little more, to have these schools together, rather than to isolate them. They would attain greater efficiency, and the education would be better, and the results altogether would be better, by reason of that unanimity of sentiment which arises from children being educated together? I believe that you can render them efficient on any general platform —

7133. Will you answer my question please;—is that your view? I was going on to say that common schools being, in my judgment, as capable of being as thoroughly and efficiently worked as any denominational school, you have the additional advantage of a unanimity of sentiment and fitness for the common duties of life.

7134. But supposing that we know from facts before us that a given denominational school is educating its pupils more economically than can be attempted or which has been attempted, under any system of control that the Country has at its command—under these circumstances would you sacrifice that school, on the ground of the general principle which you have enunciated, and which, I may say, that I concur in? It would be a question with me, if this denominational school turned out citizens as competent in every respect as those turned out by the public institution, and at a cheaper rate, why then our object is to get the citizens of a high class at the cheapest rate.

7135. Does it not come to this that one of the premises is,—that, with sectarian education of this kind, you cannot get as good an article? That is my impression; but your question stated that the school was “efficient”; and when you use the word “efficient” I take it in its widest possible sense, as meaning that the

* NOTE (on revision) :—My answer has reference to young and old mixing together. All the children of all denominations mixed together—were taught, fed, and trained together.

Rev. G.
Sutherland.

10 Sept., 1873.

the pupils are fitted to discharge all the duties of public citizens. That I do not believe a sectarian school can produce.

7136. Mr. Goold.] Then you do not agree with denominational schools? I would certainly unify all our schools, and have one common school efficiently conducted.

7137. President.] You think that you cannot look at particular cases, and should sacrifice anything to carry out that principle—that you should sacrifice a school even though it taught its children well and more cheaply than could a school administered by the State? I think that you would gain a good deal by making this present temporary sacrifice.

7138. Mr. Metcalfe.] Then you would destroy all the denominational schools in the Colony, in order to drive them to the Government? I would not like to say “destroy.”

7139. What would you say? Transfer and build up.

7140. Mr. Cowper.] Do you not think that there is a difference between orphan schools and general public schools—that in the case of the public schools the parents look after the children and give them religious instruction, but the orphan children have no one to look after them and take an interest in them, and therefore they are likely to be neglected: for instance, the persons in charge of an orphan school may be bigoted Roman Catholics or bigoted Protestants, yet they would look after the children better than they could be looked after in a mixed unsectarian school? Yes. I will tell you how that was managed in Dunedin. There the Roman Catholic priest was allowed to go into the institution once a week to give instruction to the Roman Catholic children there; all other children were allowed to attend biblical instruction by the teachers of the school on a certain day. And the children went to church in the neighbourhood—the nearest Protestant church was attended by all the Protestant children; and the Roman Catholic priests had the privilege of going once a week and giving instruction. I may state that in America the Roman Catholics endeavour to get all their children, as much as possible, under their own control. They endeavour to get their own teachers, and they endeavour to bring all that they can get under their own hand. Even in the public schools there the teachers were selected by them.*

7141. Mr. Cowper.] Do you not think that that of itself is objectionable—that it is an evil when any denomination gets power over a school in that way? I do not think that you can help it. As the Board of Education we did what we could, as we were a thoroughly Protestant Government. There was not a Roman Catholic among us. We constrained all the Acadian teachers to come before the Board of Education and pass an examination in common with all the teachers of the Country; and we constrained their schools to take the ordinary school-books, and stopped the regular draft of French Roman Catholic books that were furnished by a previous Government. They were all refused. There was no distinction—Protestant or Roman Catholic, French or English—and the effect, of course, would be to break down the barrier and unify the people.

7142. President.] In the case of deserted or neglected children who have not the home teaching or home influences which children have who attend our ordinary class of public schools—do you think that the kind of moral teaching and religious instruction which they get in an institution like Randwick, where 700 or 800 children are collected together, and which must be of a perfunctory character, is likely to be as good as if the child has such instruction as it may be able to get under the management of an institution of a more sectarian character: do you think the religious teaching there is efficient—do you think that in that regard we can deal with children of this class as we can deal with the children of our ordinary Public Schools? I look upon their position as being somewhat peculiar. I am against multiplying Charities, and for making every parent support his own child as much as possible—making the home system as universal as we can; but there are orphans, and they must be provided for; and if three institutions, containing 100 each, can be more efficiently managed than one institution containing 300, where the instruction would be so perfunctory, my judgment would go to the three institutions, rather than to the one. The supervision would be more thorough than it could be in a large mixed multitude.

7143. In point of fact, the more such an institution is unlike a home, the less efficient it becomes, as far as regards the bringing up of the children? Yes, quite so.

7144. Does not this, to a certain extent, point to the necessity—or does it point to the necessity of a compromise, in the case of these deserted, neglected children, with respect to this unsectarian principle? I should have liked to have gone through the Randwick institution, and have seen your public institutions. The cities I have been in were much smaller than this. In Dunedin there was a population of 14,000, in Halifax, 29,000, and in Charlotte Town even less, and they do not afford the same scope for observation as this city of 160,000 people. I have not had any opportunity of seeing the working of these large institutions which you have here, and, of course, I am not as competent to express an opinion; but the nearer you can bring the school to a home of a limited number, and the more thorough the restraint can be up to a certain age, the more efficient I think the schools would become.

7145. Then you are not prepared to state how far you would sacrifice the unsectarian principle, with a view of attaining this object? If I knew the amount of instruction and the character of it in the Randwick institution, I should be better able to express an opinion.

7146. You think that the question is simply to be determined by a comparison of results attained in the various institutions we have? If you can as efficiently train up the children in the general non-sectarian school, and educate them as highly, morally as well as intellectually, as in any other, I should by all means bring them all together; but if they cannot be trained in common schools, and if their moral and religious education must be sacrificed, then it may be better to train them in the sectarian schools.

7147. Mr. Goold.] Do you think that the Government, as the Government of the Country, should support denominational schools as a matter of public policy? I do not; I think it is the policy of the Country to have a common school system on a proper basis—unsectarian, open to all, and certainly inculcating the principles of sound morality.

7148. Mr. Cowper.] Do you not think that it is objectionable to have a school so large that each child in it is only known by a number—so that even the masters and matrons and schoolmistresses only know each child by its particular number? I think so, decidedly; especially where it is a purely orphan institution.

7149. Do you not think that such an institution, even with 1,000 children in it, might be managed in a certain way,—that there might be “mothers” appointed to take charge of certain children; persons appointed appointed to act as parents to certain sets of children, so that they might have an individual knowledge of them all? Yes, I think that there should be a person set over a certain number of children, and be to them as far as possible in loco parentis.

* NOTE (on revision):—This may require explanation. The teachers in the different schools were selected, not appointed, by local trustees, and hence in districts where Roman Catholic influence was predominant, by means of a majority of Roman Catholic trustees, teachers of that persuasion were chosen, and if legally qualified were appointed by the Board of Education.

Rev. G.
Sutherland.

7150. They should learn the character of each child, and ascertain what it would be most likely fitted for in after life? Quite so. I am not for the State going in for the position of a parent-general; I shall certainly set my face against anything of the kind. There is no place like home—if it is at all worthy the name of a home.

10 Sept., 1873.

7151. Mr. Goold.] Have you, in America, had anything to do with any institutions in which the family system has been adopted. I have noticed, in reading some works upon schools in America, that in some of these large institutions they have a system by which perhaps thirty or forty children would be put out, with a superintendent over them; it is designated the family system? I have had no personal experience of that. In our place the population was self-sustained; it was looked upon as a disgrace to send a child to a poor school.

7152. President.] Have you had any experience of the boarding out system? Do you mean sending children out to board?

7153. Yes—getting respectable farmers to bring up children in the country? Yes, I have known cases of the kind.

7154. As a public institution? No, not of a public character. These were simply individual cases; it was not a public institution.

THURSDAY, 11 SEPTEMBER, 1873.

Present:—

WILLIAM CHARLES WINDEYER, Esq., PRESIDENT.

SAMUEL GOOLD, Esq.

MICHAEL METCALFE, Esq.

CHARLES COWPER, JUNR., Esq.

William Wilkins, Esq., Secretary to the Council of Education, called in and examined:—

7155. President.] You are Secretary to the Council of Education? Yes.

W. Wilkins,
Esq.

7156. This Commission has been appointed to inquire into the Public Charities of the Colony, and amongst others the Industrial School, Reformatory, and Orphanages. We have thought that, very likely, from your having had so much to do with the subject of education, you have had some experience in these matters, and may be able to give some information about them. Have you ever had anything to do with industrial schools as distinguished from common schools? Yes, I have some knowledge of what used to be called the Norwood Industrial School, and I was for some time a teacher in the Swinton Industrial School near Manchester. Both of these were schools for the education of pauper children, and they were maintained by funds raised under the Poor Law Act of England; but the children were of the pauper class—in some cases orphans and deserted children. Generally speaking, they belonged to the lower stratum of society—that which furnishes a large proportion of criminals.

11 Sept., 1873.

7157. What was the size of these schools respectively? I think that that at Norwood had 1,200 children, and that at Swinton had over 800.

7158. How were these children got together in these schools? Do you refer to the terms of their admission?

7159. Yes; I wish to know whether they were children sent in under any Act similar to our Industrial Schools Act? No, simply under the Poor Law Act. I am not sure whether there is not a modification of it, which allows parishes to form a union—unions of districts—for the purpose of establishing such schools. They are called District Schools instead of Industrial Schools, and a new class of schools has sprung up, called Industrial Schools specifically.

7160. Were the children housed and boarded in these schools? Yes, they were entirely provided for.

7161. At what age were they taken into the schools, and how long were they kept there? From the age of infancy up to fifteen or sixteen years of age.

7162. Children of both sexes? Yes.

7163. Was there any restraint used for the purpose of keeping the children there, or could they be taken out by their parents? They could only be taken out under the provisions of the Poor Law Act, and upon compliance with certain regulations, so I should think there were a good many difficulties surrounding it.

7164. Do you know whether the children you had there had ever been convicted of crime? Not to my knowledge.

7165. Did you find much difficulty in enforcing discipline and keeping them in order? No. I may say that I was one of the staff that opened the institution.

7166. Was that at Norwood? No, I speak more particularly of Swinton. These children were the sweepings of Manchester and the surrounding manufacturing towns, and their parentage was derived from all nationalities that congregate round Manchester. A great many were orphans or children who had been deserted by their parents and who had never been accustomed to any kind of restraint—wandering about the streets—and we had some trouble at first in getting order and discipline. We had a few refractory boys; but within a month I do not think that we ever had occasion to use corporal punishment, for example.

7167. Corporal punishment was permitted, I suppose? Yes, it was permitted, under certain salutary restrictions.

7168. Do you remember what they were? An appeal to the head master, and the infliction of the punishment in his presence and to the extent that he deemed desirable.

7169. Was corporal punishment allowed in the case of the girls? Yes, the same rule was adopted.

7170. Up to what age was it inflicted? They were all treated as children, though some of the girls were sixteen years of age.

7171. Were these classes of children amenable to kindly treatment? Yes. I do not think that I ever met with children of that class who were more easy to deal with than they were.

7172. Mr. Cowper.] Do I understand you to refer now to those girls who, if not prostitutes, had led improper lives—girls of the age of fourteen and fifteen years? Yes.

- W. Wilkins, Esq.
11 Sept., 1873.
7173. President.] Were any of these girls of the juvenile prostitute class? Yes.
7174. Did you find that there was more difficulty in managing them than in managing the others? No. They did not form a large proportion of the girls. I was about to mention that, in addition to the impressive nature of the children, there were other circumstances to be taken into account as bringing about that state of discipline to which I have referred. From the moment of their entering the institution the children were not brought into contact with any persons except the teachers, or persons of good moral character or discretion or judgment, so that in every moment of their lives when they were awake they were never in contact with any persons save those who set them good examples and contributed to their training. The teachers took it in turns to be responsible for their order and conduct for certain portions of the day—one batch, for example, in the morning, and another in the evening. They relieved each other at stated times, and during the whole twenty-four hours the children were under the surveillance of the teachers.
7175. They were never left by themselves? Never.
7176. Were the girls of the prostitute class in any way separated from the others? No; the notion was not to brand them, as it were—not to make any distinction between them.
7177. Did you find that the girls who were of that class corrupted the younger and more innocent children? I think that under the arrangements I have described there was very little opportunity for that. The teachers knew their work and the special difficulties of their work, and they gave their attention to the special points which seemed to require attention.
7178. Did any of the officers of the institution sleep in the dormitories with the children? Yes; the girls' mistresses all slept very near to the dormitories, and one mistress in turn had charge of the dormitory for the night; and the same way with the boys and infants.
7179. Mr. Cowper.] There was some one sleeping in the dormitory with them? Not exactly in the dormitory, but near it, and in a room with a window commanding it.
7180. President.] Can you tell us what proportion of officers there were to manage these children? I should require to have a little time for reflection. I believe that I can give you a full list, with a little time for reflection.*
7181. Can you tell us now the routine of school duty for the day? I believe that I can find among my papers a copy of the original instructions to each of the officers—or, at any rate, to the more important officers—and the daily routine of the establishment. I will endeavour to find it, and send a copy to the Commission. (See Appendix Q.)
7182. Were the boys and girls kept separate? Yes, separate. They took their meals in each other's presence; that is, there was a large dining hall that also served the purpose of a chapel, with the girls on one side and the boys on the other, and the infants were in the middle.
7183. Was the teaching of an unsectarian character? It was nominally Church of England, as required by law, and we had a Church of England chaplain, but the teaching of doctrinal matters was of a limited character, and, speaking from my own experience, it was not sectarian in any point of view.
7184. What instruction did the Roman Catholic children get? Precisely the same as the others.
7185. Did they attend the services of the Church of England? Yes.
7187. President.] Have you formed any opinion as to whether it is desirable in the case of these homeless and deserted children, whose moral training has been altogether neglected—whether it is desirable in any way to relax the principle which has been so much adopted here of non-sectarian education—whether it is in any way necessary for the moral teaching of these children to remit them to the care of denominations, instead of having them together in one institution conducted on the non-sectarian plan? I have not lately given much thought to the question, but I should state as a result of my experience, that the plan of mixed education has proved highly successful. I do not think that greater success could be attained under any denominational plan.
7188. You see that in the case of this class of children they have not the home influence and the home teaching which the great mass of our children in the Public Schools get; and the question, therefore, has been suggested, whether in the case of such children as these, where that home teaching is wanting, you can give them, in these large institutions of an unsectarian character, those feelings of religion which it is desirable to instil into the minds of young children, except under denominational influences? So far as regards what you may call practical religion, I have no doubt that these institutions may be made to supply far better training than the home training of a vast number of the poor. In this very institution that I speak of, I look back even now—through a period approaching nearly thirty years—to the time that I spent there with the greatest feelings of pleasure. I do not think that after the first month or so—or say three months—we ever had an example of stealing, or of the use of bad language, or of any of the offences which children of that class might naturally be supposed to be prone to. On the other hand, some tests to which the children might be put, resulted in a triumphant way for the kind of training which they got. This I know to be the fact, and I think you will find it recorded in one of the earlier numbers of "Household Words." Mr. Charles Dickens visited the institution, and wrote a paper on the subject, which appeared in that periodical. The master of the infant school not only planted flowers, but even fruit trees in the garden surrounding the playground (I mention him in preference to mentioning anything which might seem to have an indirect reference to myself.) He was accustomed to train the children to regard these flowers and fruit as being the property of others,—not simply to be respected, but taken care of; but he would even go further occasionally, and would drop a penny about the school or playground, and would wait with great interest to see what child would find it and bring it to him; and he never lost a penny. If by any means a delay occurred in bringing the penny to him, it was found that it had been picked up by a child who had recently entered the institution, and who naturally looked upon the coin as his own property; and it was only the superior training of the other children that led him to see that he had acted wrongly; and frequently an elder child would bring up the child, with an explanation that the child did not like to come by herself, and was not clear whom the penny belonged to, and that she thought it right to let the master know, and Janey would give it up readily. Sometimes little children might be seen gazing with great earnestness at a bunch of cherries, and no doubt, had there been opportunities—

* NOTE (on revision):—The officers were—1, head-master; 2, chaplain; 3, matron; 4, teachers (10); 5, stewards; 6, storekeeper; 7, training (or drill) master; 8, tailor; and 9, shoemaker.

tunities of doing so, they would have helped themselves, only that they had undergone such training as led them to know that it was wrong to do so, and would not only offend the master but be an offence against God; and I think that is an evidence of the value of the religious teaching.

7189. Mr. Goold.] Can you state about the year of that volume of "Household Words"? It could not have been long after the periodical started.

7190. It was one of the early numbers? Yes, the paper was in one of the earlier numbers; it was entitled "Visit to a Pauper Palace."

7191. President.] How were the masters chosen for this institution? They were nominally appointed by the Board of Guardians, and they were recommended to the Board of Guardians by Mr. Tuffnel—Mr. Edward Carlton Tuffnel—who was in the position of Inspector of Schools under the Poor Law, and who was particularly charged with the duty of visiting institutions of this kind. He recommended the teachers for appointment, and I think in every case.

7192. Was the girls' side of the school entirely under the management of females? No, there was a head master, and occasionally I gave instruction in the girls' school myself; for example, I taught singing there.

7193. In the case of corporal punishment being inflicted upon the girls, who inflicted it? The head master generally, or rather, the master of the girls' school.

7194. Mr. Metcalfe.] Then there was a separate master for the girls' school? Yes, there was a master and so many mistresses.

7195. Mr. Cowper.] I understand you to say that some system was adopted in the infliction of punishment—that the master did not go up and thrash a girl upon the spur of the moment? Yes, precisely. It was not done in school at all—it was a matter of some solemnity.

7196. I suppose the case was reported, and then the girl was chastised according to rule? Yes, and always in the presence of the head master of the establishment.

7197. President.] Then the cane was not habitually in the hands of the master? No.

7198. Mr. Goold.] There were no strait-jackets or gags? No.

7199. Mr. Cowper.] Do you think that anything of that kind would be necessary under proper management? No, not under proper management. I lay the greatest stress upon the fact that no persons were allowed to come into contact with the girls except persons whose proper moral feeling was to be relied upon. Then the visits of the children's parents were discouraged, if it was found that after such visits there was a deterioration of moral tone.

7200. President.] What became of the children in the evening? There was a large room in which they read or chatted, or ran about and played; they did not make too much noise; but a teacher was always present and had something to interest them, whether it was some quiet game, or that he read them a story—he had always something to keep their minds occupied.

7201. They were not kept at the task-work of the school? No, that was all done before school in the morning, except such things as washing up after the meals.

7202. Was the school in any way self-supporting? No, not at that time; trades had been introduced, and there was a large extent of land cultivated by the boys; and the girls all helped to wash and scrub and clean, and of course to that extent there was a tendency —

7203. Mr. Metcalfe.] The children made their own clothes, I suppose? Yes.

7204. President.] What extent of land did they cultivate? As far as I can recollect, I should say about 20 acres of good soil.

7205. Mr. Metcalfe.] Did the children see anything of the outside world? Yes, they were occasionally taken out for walks by the teachers.

7206. In file, I suppose? Yes, two and two; and in a convenient place they were dismissed to have a romp—in a meadow, for instance.

7207. President.] Were they truthful when they came into the institution? Certainly not; for the most part it was difficult to believe a word that they said.

7208. Did they improve in that respect in the school? Yes, they wonderfully improved. It was a principle established by all the teachers, that the children should be encouraged to speak the whole truth the moment they were asked anything; and it became a point of honor among the boys always to speak the truth; in fact, looking up to the teachers as their friends—their parents you might say—they knew that they had nothing to fear for speaking the truth, and for any offence that they committed they knew that they would receive no more punishment than they deserved, and that they would receive merciful consideration.

7209. Mr. Metcalfe.] Did any Jews there receive instruction in the doctrines of the Christian religion? I think not.

7210. How would you separate them in giving the common lessons of the school, which teach of the redemption of the World by our Saviour? I do not think that would be difficult, because at such lessons the child could easily be set to some other work, and the class of Jews in that institution would be so low that their parents would absolutely care nothing at all about them. But I do not think that a Jewish child could be found in any one of these institutions.

7211. President.] Up to what age did you keep the children? There was a nominal limit, but, generally speaking, fifteen was the age when they were supposed to leave.

7212. Were they apprenticed out? Either that, or else they went as servants to earn their own living.

7213. Was there any machinery for that? There was such a demand for them that it was not necessary. Being under the control of Boards of Guardians for several places, these Boards interested themselves on that point; they placed the children at the school and paid for them, and they removed them when they thought fit.

7214. There was no provision for apprenticing them after a certain time? No, not by the school.

7215. Then the school lost sight of them after they left it? Yes.

7216. And the Boards of Guardians took care of them? Yes, quite so. They were a charge upon the parish, and it was the interest of the Guardians to provide for them as soon as possible.

7217. When they went out to service, did they go in uniform or in the dress of ordinary servants? In the ordinary dress.

7218. Did they receive wages? Yes, but the amount was small. Wages were not high some time ago in England.

7219. Mr. Cowper.] How were the girls clothed? To the best of my recollection, after the style of the girls of the School of Industry here; that is to say, dark stuff frocks, and so on.
7220. Mr. Metcalfe.] Like the children in the English parish schools? Very much like that. The fashion of the clothing was not such as to mark them out distinctly from other children who happened to meet them. Supposing that one went to the village on an errand, beyond the superior quality of the stuff and the superior neatness of the girl, there would be nothing to show where she came from. Of course when a number went out together attention would be drawn to them.
7221. Mr. Cowper.] They were clothed as much like other children as possible? Yes.
7222. President.] What system of rewards was there in the school? None; the highest reward that a boy or girl could get—I am speaking of external rewards—was the approbation of the teacher. You will see that the pivot of the whole system was the qualifications of the teacher.
7223. Mr. Metcalfe.] But if you taught them self-denial, and they did not even pull a bunch of cherries, did you not give them anything? Yes. We provided them with playthings out of our own pockets—marbles, hoops, and kites; they got just the same as other children.
7224. These things were given to them by the masters? Then all the girls in the same way were provided with dolls and other feminine amusements.
7225. Were they not allowed to have fruit occasionally? Yes; I think twice a year, or once a year, they had a sort of feast; but that part of England is not very productive of fruit.
7226. Was there a bed for each child in their bedrooms? For the bigger boys and the bigger girls; the smaller ones were two in a bed.
7228. Have you visited the Randwick Asylum here? No, not since it has been at Randwick.
7229. President.] How far was this place from Manchester? About five miles.
7230. Was it, in point of fact, a country place? Yes.
7231. Mr. Cowper.] How much land was there attached to the school? About twenty acres.
7232. Mr. Metcalfe.] You say that no dogmatic theology at all was taught in the school? That is a mistake. On Sundays we had a sort of Sunday-school, in which the children who were old enough were taught the Church Catechism. I think I mentioned that it was supposed to be a Church of England institution: the children were all taught the prayers and collects.
7233. And did they have any private prayers, or did they all kneel down together while the prayers were read by the teacher? In their dormitory, before they undressed, there was a sort of public prayer, and then they were encouraged—but not forced—to say prayers for themselves. We did not think it was right to say—"You shall pray to God before you go to sleep."
7234. President.] In point of fact, the children were treated as you would treat a little child in its own home? Yes.
7235. Mr. Cowper.] Did you find that the prostitute girls were open to moral influences? Yes, they were very easily influenced.
7236. They were gradually brought to change from the ways of vice? Yes. Besides the usual instability of young people, these had a stronger propensity for wandering—that is, a changeability of humour and temper.
7237. President.] Did the girls of that class ever attempt to escape from the institution? I do not think that there ever was an attempt. In the first place, escape would have been rather difficult. There were only two outlets.
7238. Was the institution surrounded by a wall? No, but it was contained within itself—the buildings shut it in. There was a main entrance and a back entrance—the latter made use of by the medical attendants; and these were the only two.
7239. Mr. Metcalfe.] It was a quadrangle then? Yes; there were four quadrangles and the hospital ward.
7240. Mr. Cowper.] When I asked you about these girls being open to moral influences, you said something about their instability of character? Yes. I meant to imply that there was with them rather more than the usual changeableness of children—they were greater children than those who were younger; and, as they were more impressionable, the first good impressions were likely to wear off. So it was with them; and it was only by successive attempts that they were brought to the same moral tone as the others.
7241. Did you find that they got fond of you? Yes; so much so, that their fondness was occasionally embarrassing. When I left the school, all the girls who understood what parting was cried very bitterly. I was not present when their own teachers left; in fact, we all took offence at something which the managing body said, and we all left.
7242. President.] How long were you there? I was there about two years.
7243. Mr. Metcalfe.] Did you visit the school when you went Home the last time? I did not the last time. I did not hear that any of my friends there were alive, and I did not like to go back without the hope of seeing them.
7244. Mr. Cowper.] I do not think that it would be at all objectionable if you were to give us some instances of the different characters which have come under your notice in these schools,—boys and girls who were difficult to manage, and the effect of the system upon them—you must have seen such cases in your experience? The girls I cannot say much about. The master of the girls' school and myself had been at the Training College together, and we were old friends when we met in this school. His apartments were exactly at the other end of the building to mine, and to go to his apartments I had to go through the girls' school, and I used to see some of the girls about; and he was allowed some of them as servants for himself and his family. I have noticed a girl that he had as nursemaid—she was about sixteen I think at the time—her father had been a coiner, and was supposed to be one of the cleverest men in that business. I think that at this time he was serving a sentence for some offence of the kind; but this girl was one of the best, not only as a servant, but in every respect you can suppose. I know that she was greatly beloved by her master and mistress, and idolized by the children. What that girl's fate would be if her father recovered possession of her I shudder to think of. She was a very handsome handsome girl, and I have no doubt would be made the victim of his love of money and his disinclination to labour. She was one of the best instances of the effects of the training that I can remember.

W. Wilkins,
Esq.

7245. President.] With regard to these Industrial Schools which have sprung up more lately—have you had any opportunities at all of observing them? I have not; the thing was new to me when I went Home this time. It was introduced since my first coming to this Colony; in fact, the term Industrial School has undergone so many mutations of meaning that you require to be very guarded in applying it. The first Industrial School that I knew of was established by Lady Byron on an estate of hers at Ealing. That was a kind of farm school, at which the boys boarded and received instruction, but at the same time worked upon the farm. That was the first notion of an Industrial School, and in the first reports of the Committee of Council on Education, that is the meaning given to the term. Then it came to be applied to schools such as that of Swinton, and now it means something still different, and more, I imagine, upon the principle of our "Vernon" School.

7246. How many children were there on this farm school which was established by Lady Byron? I do not think that there were more than twenty. The establishment was a small one, and to the best of my recollection there could not be accommodation for more than twenty boys.

7247. Mr. Metcalfe.] Do you know anything of the system in England of boarding out children from the Industrial Schools and other schools? When I was in London last, an agitation had sprung up with reference to that question. I was not in a position to put myself in communication with those who agitated the matter, but I talked it over with Mr. Tuffnel—(whose name I mentioned before—he is some relation to the Bishop of Brisbane I believe)—and his opinion was strongly against that measure; and he reminded me that it had been the practice prior to the establishment of these large Industrial Schools—or as they are now called "District Schools." I think it would not be difficult to find among the records of the Imperial Parliament reports and returns showing what that system was as practised prior to 1840.

7248. Then it has been abandoned? Yes, and it has sprung up again since. While I was in England, I remember seeing the first letter on the subject that appeared in the Times.

7249. President.] Do not the objections to the system in England proceed in a great measure from the dearness of food, and the temptations thus caused to such families as would be likely to receive children as boarders to stint them in favour of their own children? Yes, that was one reason. I think other reasons were that the class of people who were inclined to take children, so sent to be boarded, was not sufficiently elevated in the moral scale to set them a good example and care for their bringing up.

7250. Would not the superabundance of labour in England be another reason why you would not get people there to take these children in readily? Quite so.

7251. Do you think that these objections prevail so strongly here as they do in the Mother Country, food being here so abundant and labour so scarce, and there being here too a class of people settled in the country who would be glad to get such children—if after a certain age the children were bound to them—for the sake of their labour? I think the moral objection I have mentioned would still apply. There is no doubt that there is a large number of people who would be properly qualified in that respect, but there are a great many more people who are not so qualified, and I think—in the case of girls particularly—the experiment would have to be made very cautiously.

7252. Mr. Cowper.] Do you not know of some instance which proves to you that it is very doubtful if such a system could be carried out? I can give a statement which was made to me very recently—the statement was made quite irrespective of any inquiry of this kind. The gentleman who made the statement wished to explain why the attendance at a certain school had diminished, and he stated that a whole family had been removed from the school on account of this circumstance:—A little girl had been sent by her father to board with her aunt—her mother's sister—and a very liberal allowance was paid for her; but the schoolmistress noticed that the girl came to the school ragged, bare-foot and dirty, and with her hair always in a matted and untidy condition. She further observed that the girl was continually picking the vermin from her head, and at last her motherly feelings could not endure it any longer, and she took the child into her own apartments, and tried as well as she could to put things to rights. She found that the child had scratched her head to such an extent, owing to the irritation caused by these vermin, as to raise large sores, the flies had got to these sores and deposited their eggs, and the sores were swarming with maggots. She attempted to cut off the hair, and in doing so severed many of these maggots in two. The aunt was so irritated at any notice of these things being taken that she removed all her children from the school, and endangered the attendance: that was the reward she got.

7253. President.] But surely one instance of brutality does not show that the majority of the people are unfit to be trusted? No, nor do I mention the case with that view.

7254. Mr. Metcalfe.] I suppose you know nothing of the farmers in the country? I have travelled throughout the country as much as any one.

7255. And what do you think could be done in the way of boarding children out here? I shall repeat the statement made before, that it must be cautiously done. This danger arises with the small farmers particularly that they have very limited accommodation—not sufficient for decency in their own families—and I am inclined to believe that much of the juvenile prostitution of the country districts arises from the fact that, in their huts it is quite impossible to observe decency. Father, mother, and two or three children in the same room, or sleeping in apartments between which there is no effectual separation.

7256. President.] But is it not the fact that children are apprenticed out from Randwick, and chiefly among these farmers? I do not know; I am not in a position to answer that question.

7257. But it is so—there is no doubt of the fact; and if they are to be trusted with children of twelve years of age, do you see any objection to allowing them to have them younger? I think that the conditions are different. If they get them at twelve years of age, their labour is reproductive, and there is then a direct interest in taking care of them; not so with young children, who are likely to be a great trouble and not likely to be of any assistance.

7258. But supposing that the proposition is that, after being paid for these children while they are very young, the people who take them are to have the children bound to them—do you not think that there would then be an inducement to take care of them? Yes.

7259. What makes you think that juvenile prostitution is so common in the country as you would give us to understand: I must confess that I never heard of it before? I will give you an example that has been already before the public. A man was tried recently at Bathurst—I think for rape upon two girls attending a school at Mount Victoria (I am not sure that the man was not connected with them)—and the medical evidence showed conclusively that one of the girls was no stranger to illicit intercourse.

- W. Wilkins, Esq.
11 Sept., 1873.
7260. That might very likely be, but how does that one instance of vice prove that the thing is common? If you see the same circumstances existing, you have a right to expect the same results.
7261. But do we see them: my experience in the Courts of the Colony has been pretty extensive, and I have met with many instances of vice, but nothing that would lead me to believe that juvenile prostitution was common in the country? I do not speak of juvenile prostitution, but of a familiarity with sexual matters that is not proper.*
7262. But after all, the children that we propose to board out in this way,—are they not very often children of the class from which many of our small farmers have originally sprung in the country districts? Very likely.
7263. Is not the objection which you raise to this boarding-out system an objection which strikes at the character of a large portion of the humbler classes in the country? It is open to that interpretation, I dare say, but you will remember that I have restricted my remarks on the question simply to saying that it is an experiment which will require to be carefully watched.
7264. The question arises as to whether these children will be exposed to more danger of corruption than the most of the children in the country districts? I should say that they would, for the simple reason that they would have no parent to care for their interests or look after their moral welfare.
7265. Mr. Cowper.] You think that while the people would put their own children in the best rooms to sleep, and so on, they would put these children in places not suitable for them? Yes; that is one example of the kind of neglect to which they would be subjected.
7266. You think that people would not clothe them so well as they would clothe their own children? I do not think that it is natural to conceive that they would—the best of them even. A man must be acting under very powerful motives to pay the same attention to the child of a stranger as to his own offspring.
7267. President.] But surely there are hundreds of farmers in the older districts of the country in whose homes all the decencies of life are observed, and to whom children might be safely entrusted? There is no doubt of that.
7268. Is it saying any more than that care should be taken as to where you put a child? It comes to the same thing—very great care.
7269. Mr. Cowper.] How many miles distant from a school might a child be placed? Children often go three or four miles to school.
7270. Mr. Metcalfe.] They go in carts or on horseback, I suppose? No; they walk—they think nothing of it.
7271. President.] There is another remarkable fact bearing on the question that has arisen as to the immorality of the country people,—that the girls in the Industrial School who come from the country parts are generally the most virtuous? Yes, I am not prepared to dispute that at all.
7272. But do you not think, supposing proper care is taken, that such a kind of bringing up is more likely to be advantageous to the children than their being brought up in a large institution with hundreds of others;—do you not think that the individual characteristics of a child are more likely to be brought out, and it would be more fitted to encounter the rough life of the world, even though its face might not be kept as clean, and though it might not be as tidy as one of 800 children at Randwick, or so perfectly educated;—do you not think it would grow up more like a child in a home, and as the mass of our children must grow up? With certain qualifications, I may say yes. These qualifications apply to only a portion of your statement. I do not think a child is at all likely to get so good a training in a home such as you speak of as it would get in an institution which was thoroughly well conducted. The advantage of the scheme is that the child would be put in the same circumstances as other children of the same class—would receive the same practical training in the ways of the world as others.
7273. Mr. Metcalfe.] Do you not think that the association of so many children together in one large institution, in the way you state, has an ill effect upon them in after-life at all? Not at all.
7274. Do you not think that they lose their individuality and the feelings that other children have? Quite the contrary. I assume, of course, that you have judicious people to manage the children; and one of the first principles of a judicious educator would be to develop the individuality of the children, and you cannot educate a child without some consideration for its own peculiar character of mental endowments.
7275. President.] Does not the possibility of doing that become less as the institution is larger? Not if you have a sufficient staff.
7276. Mr. Metcalfe.] You were in a large institution, and you did not find out the difficulty? No. I knew every child's name and character, and I knew what mode of address would be effective with one, and what with another. We knew what their capacities were for school learning, and I could point to a boy and say—"That is a good arithmetician," and to another, and say—"That boy can read well." A teacher acquires that knowledge by instinct.
7277. President.] Does not your answer point out that the education in a place of that character is superior to home education altogether? For a very large proportion of the population it is.
7278. Then you do not value at a very high rate the home influences of a large mass of our population? I would say a large proportion.
7279. Mr. Metcalfe.] If the children, when they are brought there first, are liars and thieves, and are reformed as you say, there cannot be much doubt as to the superiority of the large school? ———
7280. Mr. Cowper.] You disapprove of the system of distinguishing children by numbers which is in force at Randwick? Decidedly.
7281. In this large school that you have been speaking of, were the children's clothes numbered, and did they walk about with the numbers in conspicuous places on their clothes? No.
7282. President.] Is there not always a danger in these large institutions of persons doing their duties in a perfunctory sort of way? Yes; and there should be a head to the institution, who will see that such a feeling does not grow up.

* NOTE (on revision) :—To prevent any possible misapprehension of my meaning, I think it necessary to state that, in speaking of juvenile prostitutes, I refer to young girls who have lost their virtue, rather than to habitual and, as it were, professional prostitutes.

7284. Mr. Cowper.] I understand you to say that everything depends on the head of the institution? W. Wilkins, Esq.

Yes, and his assistants.

7285. He should see that he has proper assistants? Undoubtedly.

7286. I suppose you would say that one of the first qualifications such a person should possess is that he should be educated? Yes. 11 Sept., 1873.

7287. And that he should have such a manner and appearance as would command esteem and respect? Yes.

7288. And have tact in managing both officers and children? These things are so self-evident —

7289. President.] With reference to Randwick, has the subject of the inspection of the schools there ever been brought before the Council of Education? Not formally. The inspector was allowed to examine the school, but not on behalf of the Council, nor was any report made to the Council. It was done at the request of the directors, and I suppose that the report was made to them. I did not see it.

7290. Do you not think that it is highly desirable that all schools supported by the Government should be under the supervision of the Council of Education? That is my opinion.

7291. Are you aware that there are two small denominational schools in the old Benevolent Asylum in George-street, each of them with a separate teacher? I was not aware of it.

7292. That has not come under the notice of the Council of Education? No.

7293. Mr. Cowper.] You had something to do with the Parkhurst Reformatory, I think? Yes.

7294. In England? In the Isle of Wight.

7295. A reformatory for juvenile criminals, was it not? Yes.

7297. What kind of children were sent there? Children nominally under the age of fifteen who had been sentenced to seven, ten, or fourteen years' transportation. I should, however, make an exception in the case of the London pickpockets—they were without doubt the worst class of children of all I have ever seen or met with; I do not mean to say that they were the most coarse and vicious, but they were the most irreclaimable.

7298. Can you give us some instances of the different kinds of children there? The best boy I knew there was a murderer. In a fit of passion he had, when playing with another boy in the fields, drawn a knife and stabbed his companion to the heart, and killed him on the spot: a crime repented of almost in the very act, and the subject of continual remorse to him. He showed his sorrow, I think, by a perpetual effort to restrain himself under all provocations, in the sincerity of his wish to do good and to be good, in every act of his life. He was not in any sense an attractive boy; but still the force of his character made him much beloved, notwithstanding the dreadful stigma that attached to him.

7299. Mr. Metcalfe.] He was scarcely a murderer, I suppose? He was convicted of wilful murder. There was another lad there who was one of the finest fellows I ever met in my life. He was absolutely destitute of fear, and if you endeavoured to make an impression upon him with a view of making him better by appealing to any such feeling in his mind, you soon found that you had made a great mistake. No punishment had any effect upon him, but he was as tender-hearted as a baby, only take him in the right way. As a specimen of his courage and good feeling, I may mention that another lad attempted to commit suicide by throwing himself down a well 50 feet deep and 10 feet in diameter—an enormous well which supplied the whole establishment with water. This lad, without waiting a moment, at once plunged down the well (there was 20 feet of water in it), and he felt about until he caught the would-be suicide, whose head he held above water until he was rescued. It was a daring act which few men would have done. Another little fellow was convicted of killing a bull, and was certainly not more than eight years of age when this crime was committed. How the little urchin accomplished it no one could discover, for we were forbidden to converse with the boys upon their past life. I think I mentioned to you, Mr. Cowper, the case of another lad whom I met after his discharge. That was the boy who attempted to commit suicide. He was gifted with a most beautiful voice, which led him into company and into some extravagance—he was led to pilfer and was discovered. Having been of a superior class of life, and having to associate with these children, it had a great effect on his mind, weakened it, and seemed likely to drive him to insanity. It was on one of these occasions that he tried to drown himself; but his conduct generally was so excellent, that on one occasion when the Queen visited the place he received a free pardon and went back to his friends. I met him afterwards dressed in a very becoming way, and he said—“You do not know me, Mr. Wilkins”; I said—“I do not know, but I have a kind of suspicion that I have seen you before”; and the poor fellow struggled for some time before he could refer to the place, but at last he said, “Don't you remember No. 44?” I did remember “No. 44” instantly. I did know his right name, but was so accustomed to No. 44 that the recognition was instantaneous. I shook hands with him and inquired about him, and found that he was in a respectable way of life. I mentioned the London pickpockets. Decidedly the worst lad in the institution belonged to that class. He was smart, clever, learning was no trouble to him, but so thoroughly vicious that the instruction given to him seemed to be turned into wickedness as soon as it was received. If it were possible for him to misconstrue a sentence you uttered, so as to give it a bad meaning, he would do it, and endeavour thereby to corrupt his neighbours. I should say that his was a hopeless case.

7300. Mr. Cowper.] Number 9? Number 9 was an example of a class of boys and men which I should hope is seldom to be met with in the world. There was a kind of sullen ferocity about him which made him utterly repulsive. He seemed to be impervious to punishment or kindness of any sort; his was a dogged, sullen look under all circumstances, and in moments of irritation he seemed like a wild beast.

7301. Had you what are called “riots” in this establishment at any time? Yes, the boys were for a long time in a chronic state of mutiny. I have known the Governor of the institution to go into the large dining hall and be saluted with a shower of spoons and panikins; and the boys in the tailors' shop threw their scissors and irons at him. At one time they captured the master tailor and cut off his coat tails. These are slight specimens of what they would do. On the same day a very little fellow, after throwing his scissors at the Governor, called out, “You said you would take away our bread, but you wasn't game.” The boys had behaved so badly that the Governor had threatened to reduce the allowance of bread. He did not carry out the threat, and they put it down that he was afraid to do so. All this arose from the fact that the persons employed were military men, who had no notion of ruling boys, but thought that they should go right by word of command, and their only remedy for disobedience was the cat-o'-nine-tails. They so tyrannized over the boys and so irritated them that they got into the state I have mentioned.

There

- W. Wilkins, Esq.
11 Sept., 1873.
- There was another case of some importance as involving a principle. The Commissioners who directed the institution believed that it was possible to combine legal punishment with efforts at reformation. They had some excuse, I think, at the time, for the place had such a good name that boys would commit crimes in order to be sent there—or, rather, their parents would make them commit crimes with that object—and it was thought that by making the penal nature of the establishment more prominent they would be afraid to enter it. It was ordered that the boys should rise at 5 in the morning, continue at work until late at night, and after supper receive two hours' instruction in the evening school. I thought it was a very injudicious step, because it was the only occasion on which there was any uproar in the schoolrooms. My own personal recollections of the matter are extremely unpleasant, because, being then a young man of about nineteen, I frequently found myself locked up with about 150 or 200 of these boys—nominally aged fifteen, but up to the age of twenty-five—who vented their dissatisfaction by groans, howls, and yells, which were rather calculated to dismay a nervous person. It was on one of these occasions that this lad, No. 9, became rather prominent, inasmuch as it was arranged that he was to lead the attack upon me. It was only by the exercise of the greatest coolness and tact that I was able to keep the boys sufficiently quiet to prevent them making the attack. If they had done so, something serious would have occurred.
7302. Mr. Cowper.] Do you know when these acts of mutiny ceased, or whether the school got into the hands of some one who managed it better? The evening school was stopped—that gave some satisfaction; and then immediately afterwards, about 250 of the youngest boys were drafted off to a separate building, some little distance from the main building, and I was removed with them, so that I had not much insight into the doings of the larger boys. The same Governor remained, but a new Chaplain came and exercised the powers of deputy-Governor over the juvenile prison, and the management there was more satisfactory, and little trouble was ever given. He was a kindly, judicious man, but very firm; and as soon as the boys got to understand what sort of a person they had to deal with they subsided, and the mutiny ceased so far as the juniors were concerned.
7303. You think that these children could be reclaimed? Certainly.
7304. Any of them? Yes.
7305. Mr. Metcalfe.] Except your morose friend? No; I should say that his mental organization was such as would lead him to become a ferocious lunatic: I attach the greatest importance to bringing these boys into contact with only such persons whose conduct can be relied upon.
7306. President.] Was the labour of these boys in any way utilized? Yes; they were taught farming, carpentering, tailoring, shoemaking, and there were some wheelwrights. I think that these were all the occupations that they were formerly taught. There were separate masters for all these, and the boys became very proficient.
7307. Mr. Goold.] When they left the institution, was any further notice taken of them? We never saw or heard of them afterwards, except by accident. I do not know what arrangements were made by the superior authorities. A man who had been an officer of the institution was bailiff of the inner Domain here, or had some occupation of that sort, and he was one of the very few officers who had not been soldiers, and he was highly successful. He had charge of the refractory ward, and he could do better even with No. 9 than any one else could do. He told me that he met some of the boys on the Liverpool Plains.
7308. Is he alive now? I think he is dead.
7309. Mr. Cowper.] Were the boys doing well? Yes, doing very well—these boys were; and they were able to tell him about other boys whose names he mentioned. There was nothing to distinguish them, as far as conduct is concerned, from the ordinary run of bush people. They seemed to have a little more smartness than many.
7310. Mr. Goold.] Do you approve of half-time—that is, that the children should be occupied in industrial pursuits half the day, and should spend the other half-day in school receiving instruction? Yes, I think it is a very judicious arrangement.
7311. President.] What is the best mode of carrying that out—that the children should be half a day in school, or so many days in school and so many days out? I should think half a day. Of course, if your view is to make the labour as profitable as possible in a pecuniary sense, then keep them at work a week and in school a week; but if you want to do the best for the children themselves, then half a day is the best; you do not fatigue their body or mind so much.
7312. Mr. Goold.] The work would be rather an advantage to them than otherwise? I think so. I think the experience in the half-time schools in the manufacturing districts shows that the children learn quite as much in their half-time as the whole-timers do.
7313. President.] Is there anything you wish to suggest yourself on any of these topics? Not just now. I should prefer having an opportunity of thinking over the matter.
7314. If anything strikes you, perhaps you will add it in a note to your evidence? Yes.

WEDNESDAY, 17 SEPTEMBER, 1873.

Members Present:—

WILLIAM CHARLES WINDEYER, Esq., President.

SAMUEL GOOLD, Esq.

MICHAEL METCALFE, Esq.

CHARLES COWPER, JUN., Esq.

RICHARD DRIVER, Esq., M.L.A.

Frederic King, Esq., Secretary to the Board of the Government Asylums for the Infirm and Destitute, called in and examined:—

F. King, Esq.
17 Sept., 1873.

7315. President.] I believe that you are Secretary to the Board which has the supervision of the Government Asylums? I am.

7316. How long have you held that position? Since the 14th March, 1862, on the handing over of these institutions to the Government.

7317. What salary do you receive? When I was appointed my salary was £250, shortly after it was raised to £300, and again to £400 when the Chairman was appointed Auditor General. I now receive £500 as Inspector of Public Charities, holding the office of Secretary to the Board, without pay.

7318. What do your duties consist of? As Inspector of Public Charities, I have to visit and report on on all such institutions as I receive directions to do by order of the Honorable the Colonial Secretary. F. King, Esq. As Secretary to the Board of Management of the Government Asylums for the Infirm and Destitute, I am charged with the general supervision of the Asylums, and held responsible for their good order and management; I have the control of the expenditure under the Board's direction, and am held responsible for all the disbursements, and for the general accuracy of the accounts, books, and records of the office. I give £1,000 guarantee for faithfulness in the discharge of these duties. I have to deal with the contractors for the supply of all articles required and to see that the contracts are properly fulfilled; I have to visit the institutions frequently, to see that all is going on satisfactorily, and report to the Board; I have to correspond with the Honorable the Colonial Secretary's Office on all matters requiring Government sanction or interference; I have to correspond with Country Benches and all other persons as to applications for the admission of paupers; I have to make personal inquiry into the cases of all applicants asking for admission to the institutions at the Hyde Park office, and to grant admission orders to such as are eligible; I have to prepare the business for the Board meetings every Tuesday and Friday, and take the Board's instructions on all points needing their direction; I have the general control and supervision of the office work, the keeping of the books, records, &c., by the clerks employed under me. I make occasional musters of the inmates at the three Asylums, to ascertain that all are there for whom rations are drawn, and also to ascertain if any are fit to be discharged. I prepare an annual report on the Asylums, which is accompanied by statistics of the expenditure.

7319. Do you ever visit these establishments? I visit the Government Asylums frequently and report to the Board.

7320. Then you hold another office besides the office of Secretary to the Board? Yes; I was appointed Inspector of Public Charities on the 1st October, 1869.

7321. Do you get any salary for that office? Yes, I am paid as Inspector of Public Charities—holding the office of Secretary to the Board, without pay —

7322. And, as I understand, you only inspect when directed to do so by the Government? Yes, but I have occasionally inspected institutions on my own motion.

7323. How many times during this year have you made an inspection of any public institution? On the 3rd March, 1873, I visited and reported on the Biloela School, and on the 23rd August I conducted an inquiry into the conduct of the infant teacher at the Protestant Orphan School.

7324. How long is it since you inspected Biloela? On the 3rd March last.

7325. You have not inspected the place within the last six months? No.

7326. When you inspected it on the last occasion did you send in a report to the Government? Yes, I reported on the case of the girl Grey.

7327. Then you did not send in any report to the Government on that occasion? Yes, I did on the above case, but not as regarded the institution generally.

7328. That was the last report that you made to the Government? I reported on several cases that were submitted to me, but not on any institutions.

7329. Upon any institution? Yes.

7330. When did you inspect the Infirmary? On the 21st June, 1872, I reported on the expenditure of the Sydney Infirmary, but not as to the state of the institution.

7331. That was sent to the present Government? Yes.

7332. Did you make this inspection at the request of the present Colonial Secretary? No.

7333. Is that the only inspection you have made under the present Government? I also inspected Biloela on the 18th April. This is the report. (Report produced. See Appendix R 1.)

7334. I see in the first of these reports you pointed out the untidy state of the children? I did.

7335. Did you bring that under the notice of the superintendent? Yes, I have always complained of that—that the children always looked most discreditable—I have always complained of it.

7336. To the present superintendent? Yes.

7337. Have you seen any improvement made upon your suggestion? No, I have not—most certainly not.

7338. Were the children often allowed to run about without shoes or stockings when you first went there? Yes, always, except when in Mrs. Kelly's school, where they always had shoes and stockings on.

7339. Only in the schoolroom? Yes, the schoolmistress always made it a rule—so she told me—that they should not come into the school without shoes and stockings.

7340. That is Mrs. Kelly you refer to? Yes.

7341. Did the discipline maintained by her appear to be better than that outside the school? Yes, so I should say; she had a most extraordinary influence over the girls both here and at the Hunter.

7342. For good? Yes, for good.

7343. What was the opinion you formed of the superintendent with regard to his efficiency and power of managing the place? Of Mr. Lucas?

7344. Yes? I have always considered him wanting in the ability to conduct the Industrial School successfully.

7345. He takes an interest in the school, does he not? Yes.

7346. And he is a man of kindly disposition? Yes, he is an excellent man, but he fails in keeping order; he has not the knack of controlling the girls in a proper manner.

7347. What do you think that arises from? In a great degree from his easy action. He fails in inspiring respect on the part of the girls, and he is careless of his personal appearance.

7349. Did you ever speak to him on these matters—on the subject of his personal appearance? No, I have not.

7350. Have you had any opportunities of forming an opinion as to the fitness of his wife as an officer? I only saw her on occasional visits. She takes a great interest in the school, but she is not the head of the institution. Her husband is the person who is responsible for the proper order of the school.

7351. Did you ever become aware of any infirmity of temper on her part? I have heard of it, but I have never seen it.

7352. You have never seen instances of it? No.

7353. Did you form any opinion with regard to the efficiency of the other officers of the institution? Yes.

- F. King, Esq. Yes. Mrs. Kelly and Mrs. Rowland are very good and efficient officers; during the riots at Newcastle they assisted me very materially, and by their influence assisted me in restoring order.
- 17 Sept., 1873. 7354. Did the superintendent at any time make any representations to you that any of the officers under him were unfit for their position on any ground? No, he has not.
7355. You came to the conclusion that one of the matrons might be very well dispensed with? Yes; I reported, on the 10th October, 1870, that one of the sub-matrons might be dispensed with, and I recommended that the office of storekeeper should be abolished. I really cannot see what he has to do that could not be done by the superintendent.
7356. Did you inspect the storekeeper's books? Yes; but not minutely. I applied to the Principal Under-Secretary to have the vouchers of the accounts of contractors and other persons submitted to me for inspection and approval, in order that I might keep an account of the expenditure, as I do for the Government Asylum, but my proposal was not approved of. It was impossible on casual inspections to look as minutely into the accounts as I could do if they were submitted to me in my office.
7357. Did you ever look into the mode in which the stores were served out there? No, I only looked into the books in a casual way.
7358. Were you satisfied with the mode in which the books were kept? I did not look sufficiently into them to form an opinion upon that after Mr. Lucas took office—I did with the person who held office there before, and he had the books in excellent order.
7359. That was Mr. Cane? Yes.
7360. Do you consider that your hands are so tied that you cannot make an inspection without the authority of the Government,—that you have no power to look into the way the accounts are kept? Certainly not; but I was unable to look into them accurately during my visits to the institution.
7361. Are you aware that goods are served out in the store at Biloela to the girls there without any voucher being required, or any requisition, or any entry being made of the goods so issued? No, I cannot say that I am—I have never had these institutions under me except as Inspector.
7362. What instructions as to your powers did you receive when you first received your appointment? I was referred to the Public Institution Inspection Act of 1866.
7363. I see that the Public Institution Inspection Act was passed in 1866? Yes.
7364. There was another gentleman who held office as Inspector of Public Charities before you? Yes.
7365. Mr. Walker? Yes; he held that office alone. I have other duties. He was only Inspector of Public Charities.
7366. Is your time fully taken up by your other duties? Yes, I can always find occupation here, I take a great interest in all these institutions. I am also held in a heavy bond, which forces me to accurately look over all the entries in the office.
7367. What are your duties in the capacity of Secretary to the Board? The same as those mentioned in answer to your fourth question.
7368. You say you have two meetings a week: how long does a meeting last on each occasion? About an hour or two—from an hour and a half to two hours.
7369. An hour and a half? Yes, often—it varies from an hour to an hour and a half to two hours.
7370. How many accounts have you paid this week? Well, it happens that I have passed about forty, but I have not paid them yet. They have to be submitted for the approval of the Board, but I have them in every month. (Book produced.) They are entered here; I have to look over all these.
7371. You say there are forty in this list? I do not know, really; I often have forty.
7372. There are only twenty-six accounts here? But here is an account in which a lot of small items are contained.
7373. You mean this, "F. King—sundries"? Yes.
7374. Is that your own name? Yes; it is our monthly payment of all small accounts under £1.
7375. What, petty accounts? Yes.
7376. Then are these twenty-six accounts the accounts for the month? Not all; it happens that these are the accounts which I submitted on that day to pay.
7377. During what time have they accumulated? Since the 1st of the month.
7378. The 1st of this month? Yes. The chairman initials each, and I hand them on to the Treasury.
7379. Besides this, what are your duties with regard to these accounts? To see that the charges in them are correct, that the quantities charged for agree with the orders issued by the masters, and, when properly checked, to submit them for the Board's approval; they are then initialled by the chairman, and transmitted to the Treasury for authorization.
7380. What does the examination consist of? To see whether the articles were ordered, to see if they were according to the order, and if the prices were accurately entered.
7381. Here is an account for bread, £31 9s. 8d.—what do you do practically with regard to that? I will show you; here is an account (account produced).
7382. This is the ordinary form of pay voucher? Yes.
7383. This is sent into you by the person who claims payment of £31 9s. 8d.? Yes.
7384. What do you do with it—what is your duty with regard to it? To see that the article has been ordered.
7385. How do you find that out? By comparing it with the monthly ration return.
7386. How do you satisfy yourself that these 4,097 lbs. of bread have been used? I examine the ration return, and see that the articles have been ordered and received at the Asylums.
7387. Then all you have to do in each case is to contrast the amount charged in each pay voucher with the amount of goods supplied as shown by the ration return furnished by the master or matron of each institution? Yes.
7388. You will simply have to see that these things correspond? Yes; after having found that the ration returns are correct when compared with the numbers of inmates and the quantities ordered by the masters.
7389. Is there anything else that you have to do with regard to the account? After the account has been passed by the Board, an abstract is prepared and sent to the Treasury; the Examiner passes the abstract, and the vouchers stamped at the Treasury are returned to me for payment.
7390. Have you nothing else to do with the account itself? No.
7391. Then the work of the account, if right, does not take five minutes? No.
7392. Then it comes to this—having satisfied yourself that the account is correct, you enter it in this book? Yes.

F. King, Esq.

17 Sept., 1873.

7393. And then bring it so entered before the Board? Yes.
7394. And the Board being satisfied, they pass it? Yes.
7395. What do you do after that? I send the accounts in to the Treasury, under an abstract.
7396. You furnish the accounts so passed by the Board, under an abstract, to the Treasury? When the vouchers are returned from the Treasury for payment, I draw cheques on my public account on the Bank of New South Wales.
7397. What officer authorizes the money to be paid, because I understood that the Board had already authorized it? No.
7398. Does the Colonial Treasurer minute these things, or some officer there;—has this account been to the Treasury, or is it going? It is going. The Colonial Treasurer authorizes the payment of the amount named in the abstract to my public account in the Bank of New South Wales. After the accounts are paid, and the vouchers receipted and stamped by the claimants, they are sent under another form of abstract to the Audit Office.
7399. On what account do you draw your cheques? On the Bank of New South Wales, in the ordinary Government form of cheque, which I am authorized to do.
7400. The money is not placed to your separate account in any way? No, the account is only opened in the bank.
7401. You have no separate sum of money placed to your credit for this purpose? No, except to my public account, as before stated.
7402. Then you say also that you have to see that all the articles supplied are of good quality? Yes.
7403. And do you visit the institutions for this purpose? I do, very often.
7404. When were you at Liverpool? I went up on Saturday.
7405. When were you there before that? I was there about a fortnight before.
7406. How often do you visit that institution? As it happens; about on an average once a month, and oftener if required. I held a muster there on the 8th instant.
7407. When did you go to Parramatta last? On the 8th instant.
7408. When before that? I held a muster on the 10th.
7409. Were you there in June and July? No; I was confined by illness to my house; I had leave to be absent from office.
7410. Did it come under your knowledge that the bread there was short weight? Yes, it has been complained of occasionally.
7411. Both at Liverpool and Parramatta? Yes.
7412. How long have you noticed that? It was complained of early in the year.
7413. Did you report it to the Board? It was complained of in January last, and then the Board cautioned the contractor. His contract was well carried out till April, when he again gave trouble, and the Board decided to mulct him in $\frac{1}{4}$ of his monthly account; but afterwards, on his promising to attend better to the supply, the Board remitted the fine. The masters were always authorized to obtain proper bread and charge it to the contractors.
7414. Was anything done about the matter practically to put a stop to this state of things? The contractor was cautioned repeatedly, and the masters were told to keep him to the terms of his contract. Months elapsed without a complaint, and the Board believed that generally the bread was of proper quality and good weight.
7415. In point of fact, this thing has been going on all the year? Not all the year; it was only occasional.
7416. Did you find it to be the case when you went there? Only the first time.
7417. Did you always weigh the bread when you went there? Only if it was complained of.
7418. Complained of by whom? By Dr. Strong. I always asked him. I spoke of it as I did of all other articles; I always asked how the food was.
7419. Did you ever try the bread at Parramatta without any suggestion being made to you? Yes.
7420. How did you find it? It was light.
7421. In point of fact, whenever you tried the weight of the bread you always found it light? I cannot say it was always, because there were no complaints from January to April, but I do not remember weighing it during that time, as I should have done if it had been complained of.
7422. In point of fact, has not this state of things been going on from the beginning of the year? It has been, if I am to judge from these instances.
7423. As a matter of fact, the Board never put a stop to it until the matter was brought under the notice of the Board the other day? The Board did notice it, as soon as the masters reported it.
7424. But the contractor was only brought up and scolded, and then the matter occurred again and was overlooked? The matter was never overlooked or neglected, and the Board's action always had the effect of making the contractor supply good bread,—at all events for a time.
7425. Were you satisfied with the management of the Parramatta institution, from what you saw of it? I have always thought it was inferior to Liverpool.
7426. In what respects? In almost all respects. The inmates are not so clean, and the arrangements are not carried out in so orderly a manner as they should be.
7427. Did you form any opinion as to the efficiency of the master there? Yes. The unsatisfactory state of the institution proves that the master is not efficient, but he has always done his best to carry out the Board's directions. The building is old, and the difficulties of carrying on the institution are greater than at Liverpool.
7428. On the occasions of your inspecting the Asylum at Parramatta, did the master ever know that you were to visit the place? Never.
7429. Did you always find the matron on the premises when you went there? The matron lived for many years in the Asylum, but the quarters were found to be very unhealthy, and a house close to the Asylum was hired for the master and matron, since which time the matron has not been continuously in the Asylum.
7430. Is it not the fact that she was generally absent whenever you went to the place? No, she was as frequently at the Asylum as at her own house, which is close to the Asylum.
7431. Was she ever in the institution when you visited it? As often at the Asylum as at her own house.
7432. Then your answer is that she was always away from the institution? I cannot say she was always away. Her quarters are so close to the gate of the Asylum that she can easily go to and fro when occasion demands her presence.

- F. King, Esq. 7433. Did you ever report either to the Board or to the Government this habitual absence of the matron? It was always thought that her husband was the head of the house, and that if he was there —
- 17 Sept., 1873. 7434. But she is an officer of the institution, and a paid officer, is she not? Yes.
7435. Do you not consider that it is the duty of all paid officers to be at their posts, and to perform the duties for which they are paid? Well, hardly in her case.
7436. What salary does she receive? £50 per annum.
7437. And what makes her absence exceptionally allowable, and why should she not be at her post as well as any one else? Because her duties are hardly of any importance compared to her husband's.
7438. What is she supposed to do there? To look after the clothing of the house, and see to the branding of the articles; her husband is the principal of the establishment.
7439. What act of supervision, then, does she perform that could not be performed by her husband? I dare say that he could do it.
7440. Is there any work done by her that could not be done by the master of the institution? No.
7441. In point of fact, is she not an unnecessary officer there? Hardly. In the master's absence he would give the charge to her, and she is a certain help to him, though it is slight.
7442. Is not Mrs. Burnside, who is Matron of the Liverpool Asylum, constantly at her post? Yes, always.
7443. And are not her hands always full? Yes, I think so; she has a great deal of work, because she has to see to all the house-work, and do all that Mr. Dennis does at Parramatta, and she is an exceedingly active woman.
7444. Is it not the fact that Mrs. Burnside takes an interest in the institution, and that Mrs. Dennis does not? That may be, but Mrs. Burnside has not her husband in the place.
7445. Do you not think that if Mrs. Dennis did her duty in looking after the place as it should be looked after, it would be more orderly and clean—is there not lots of work there for a woman? Yes.
7446. And is not the unsatisfactory character of the place in a great measure attributable to this habitual absence? I cannot say that it is, because Mr. Dennis is quite able to look to all the work of the establishment.
7447. Is it not so? It may be so.
7448. Mr. Cowper.] When Mr. Burnside was alive, was not Mrs. Burnside as active as she is now? No, she never entered the institution at all.
7449. Mr. Gould.] Did she receive payment then? She did.
7450. And yet she never went into the house? No; her husband did all the work.
7451. Mr. Metcalfe.] She does a great deal of work now? Yes, she does a great deal of work—she is a most active woman.
7452. President.] She is, in fact, a highly efficient officer? Yes, she is, in every way.
7453. In point of fact, you describe Mrs. Burnside as having all the control over the internal and domestic economy of the Asylum, while the doctor looks after the medical department? No; Mrs. Burnside acts wholly under Dr. Strong—she consults him in everything.
7454. I thought you said Mrs. Burnside was in a similar position to that occupied by Mr. Dennis at Parramatta? No, Dr. Strong is the officer who is held responsible.
7455. Do you think from what you have seen that it is desirable to have husband and wife in the position of master and matron of any institution; for instance, does it work well at Biloela? Well, no, it has its objections, I should say.
7456. You say that since the present Government has been in office you have not been called upon to report, in consequence of some objection on the part of the Colonial Secretary; before the present Government came into office used you to report more frequently? Yes, I was often ordered about.
7457. What institutions did you inspect? I have inspected and reported on a large number. The reports are as follows:—On the 14th January, 1870, I visited and reported on the Industrial School and the Reformatory for Girls at Newcastle, calling attention to the absence of proper classification, stating that the association of the younger children with the elder girls, whose career had generally been disreputable, was very hurtful. I represented the over-sufficient dietary scale, the insufficiency of clothing, the unsuitable occupations to which the girls were subjected, the enormous bills for medicines, and the generally unsatisfactory state of the institution. On the 31st January I visited and reported on the Newcastle Hospital, stating that the nursing arrangements were satisfactory, but that the building was in a very unfinished condition. On the 1st February I recommended to the earnest consideration of the Government the very imperfect mode of accepting tenders for the annual supplies of food for the several Government institutions. On the 4th February I visited and reported on the Sydney Infirmary, complaining of the discomfort of the invalids and the unsatisfactory state of the premises. On the 5th February I visited and reported on the Protestant Orphan School, stating that the whole institution presented a neglected aspect, wanting painting, whitewashing and repairs, that the beds were infested with bugs, and the children's hair with lice. On the 8th February I visited and reported on the Roman Catholic Orphan School, calling particular attention to the absence of printed rules and regulations for the guidance of the officers, and stating that the premises looked wretched, and that the dormitories were swarming with bugs. On the 12th February, 1870, I visited and reported on the Nautical School Ship "Vernon," stating that the institution appeared to be in a satisfactory condition. On the 7th March I reported on the petition of the Inhabitants of West Maitland for the establishment of an Industrial School in that town, and stated, in my opinion, the Newcastle School and the "Vernon," were sufficient for the present. On the 8th March I visited and reported on the Benevolent Society, stating that the several arrangements appeared satisfactory, and calling attention to the claims of the Society on the Government for the maintenance of paupers, which I submitted should be referred to me for examination and report. On the 10th March I transmitted a new dietary scale for the Newcastle School, which had been prepared by Dr. Bedford and myself, in consequence of my report of the 14th January. On the 17th March, 1870, I called attention to the impropriety of apprenticing girls to publicans and lodging-house keepers. On the 18th March I suggested the expediency of causing all applications for apprentices to be submitted to me, explaining my ability to investigate the fitness of applicants to have the care of the children. On the 1st April I reported on the new order book which was proposed for adoption at the Protestant Orphan School. On the 4th April I visited and reported on the Protestant Orphan School, calling attention to the improper sleeping arrangements, and the bad supply of knives, forks, and spoons. On the 7th April I visited the Newcastle Industrial School and the Reformatory for Girls, and reported on the complaint made by the superintendent against against the matron of the Reformatory for Girls, for insubordination. On the 13th April, 1870, I visited F. King, Esq. and reported on the Newcastle Industrial School and Reformatory, stating that the institutions were in a very unsatisfactory state, and urging the necessity for classification. On the 14th April I visited and reported favourably on the West Maitland Hospital. On the 21st April I called attention to the unsuccessful treatment of itch at the Protestant Orphan School, and to the imperfect mode of apprenticing the children. On the 16th May I visited and reported on the Randwick Asylum for Destitute Children, stating that the institution presented a favourable aspect, and suggesting some alterations in the management. On the 23rd May I reported on Dr. Harris's bill for medicines supplied to the Newcastle School girls, which was excessive. On the 25th May, 1870, finding that I was quite unable during my casual inspections of Government Institutions to supervise the expenditure, I suggested that all vouchers of contractors and other persons, for supplies, &c., should, before payment at the Treasury, be submitted to me for inspection and approval, and stated that I would thereby be enabled to furnish proper returns of the expenditure of those institutions. On the 14th June, I visited and reported on the Newcastle School and the Reformatory for Girls, stating that they were in a very unsatisfactory condition. On the 23rd June I visited and reported on the Protestant Orphan School, representing the prevalence of skin diseases, the dirty state of the infants' schoolroom and dining hall, the bad arrangements generally in the dormitories, and the keeping of pigs on the premises. On the 11th July, I visited and reported on the Roman Catholic Orphan School, calling attention to the continued want of rules and regulations for the guidance of the officers, and to the bad repair of the premises. On the 23rd August I visited and reported on the Nautical School Ship "Vernon," calling attention to the requisitions sent in by the superintendent. On the 25th September, 1870, I visited and reported on the Protestant Orphan School, stating that itch was prevalent and that the sleeping arrangements were still very defective. On the 10th October, 1870, I visited and reported on the Newcastle Industrial School for Girls, and the Reformatory, suggesting that the office of clerk and storekeeper should be done away with, and also that of the Matron of the Reformatory. On the 21st October, 1870, I visited and reported on the Roman Catholic Orphan School, stating that there was a perceptible improvement in the general appearance of the school. On the 12th December, 1870, I visited and reported on the Sydney Infirmary, stating that the building was swarming with bugs, that the walls were dirty, and that soiled clothing was put away, and given to persons leaving the Infirmary, in a state of filth. On the 14th January, 1871, I reported on the riots at the Newcastle Industrial School for Girls, stating that the Superintendent had failed in administrative ability. On the 16th March, 1871, I visited and reported on the riots at the Newcastle Industrial School for Girls. On the 23rd March, 1871, I visited and reported on the Cockatoo Island, as inspected by Captain McLerie and myself. On the 24th March, 1871, I visited and reported on the Newcastle Industrial Schools for Girls and the Reformatory, stating that I had relieved Mr. and Mrs. Clarke, and placed Mr. and Mrs. Lucas in charge of both institutions. On the 12th June, 1871, I reported on the transfer of the girls from Newcastle to Biloela. On the 13th June, 1871, I visited and reported on the Biloela School and Reformatory. On the 27th June, 1871, I visited and reported on the scanty supply of clothing at the Biloela School. On the 29th June, 1871, I visited and reported on the continuance of itch at the Protestant Orphan School. On the 17th July, 1871, I visited and reported on the Biloela School, stating that the institution was in a most unsatisfactory state, and that there was a deplorable absence of a proper system of classification. On the 8th August, 1871, I visited and reported on the Biloela School, stating that the conduct of the girls was very insubordinate. On the 12th August I visited the Roman Catholic Orphan School, representing the absence of rules and regulations, and the otherwise satisfactory state of the institution. On the 8th August, 1871, I visited Bathurst, and reported on the proposal of the Roman Catholic Bishop to have an Industrial School at Bathurst, in accordance with the Act of 1866. On the 12th August, 1871, I visited and reported on the Bathurst Hospital, calling attention to its unsatisfactory state. On the 28th September, 1871, I visited and reported on the Protestant Orphan School, representing its continued unsatisfactory state. On the 6th October, 1871, I visited and reported on the Penrith Hospital. On the 12th October, 1871, I visited and reported on the Goulburn Hospital, stating that the arrangements were generally satisfactory, but calling attention to the very expensive medical attendance. On the 13th October, 1871, I visited and reported on the Windsor Hospital and Hawkesbury Benevolent Society, stating that the premises were old and neglected. On the 13th October I called attention to the expenditure for the maintenance of paupers in the Sydney Infirmary as compared with the Government Asylums. On the 20th October, 1871, I visited and reported favourably on the Braidwood and Araluen Hospitals. On the 31st October, 1871, I reported generally on the Charitable Institutions of New South Wales. On the 16th November, 1871, I visited and reported on the Yass Hospital, stating that it had an old and neglected aspect. On the 17th November, 1871, I visited and reported on the Mudgee and Gulgong Hospitals favourably. On the 15th December, 1871, I reported on the dietary scale at the Biloela School, which appeared to be ample; on the 20th December, 1871, I reported the case of Samuel Smith, who had been kept in the Sydney Infirmary for eight months at the public expense. On the 21st March, 1872, I visited and reported on the Benevolent Asylum, again referring to expenditure for the maintenance of paupers, showing that there was no scrutiny exercised on the part of the Government over this important item of expense. On the 16th April, 1872, I visited and reported favourably on the Bathurst Hospital. On the 17th April, 1872, I visited and reported favourably on the Orange Hospital. On the 18th April, 1872, I visited and reported on the Biloela School, stating that the girls were untidy, without boots and stockings, and suggesting that the services of one sub-matron and the storekeeper be dispensed with. The difficulties connected with the supply of meat were brought under notice. On the 21st June, 1872, I reported on the expenditure of the Sydney Infirmary, showing how the charges to the Government should be reduced. On the 23rd July, 1872, I visited and reported on the Biloela School, stating that itch had spread through the school, evidencing carelessness on the part of the officers; that the clothing was made of bad material, and that the cook had been wrongly discharged. On the 6th August, 1872, I reported on the supply of kerosene oil at the Biloela School. On the 3rd March, 1873, I reported that Mr. Lucas had beaten one of the girls in a very severe manner. On the 4th March, 1873, I reported on the excessive requisition for clothing, &c., sent in by Mr. Lucas. On the 5th March, 1873, I reported on the Rev. Mr. Love's application for the admission of five children to the Randwick Asylum for Destitute Children. On the 26th July, 1873, I reported on the case of a boy Williams, an inmate of the Sofala Hospital, a cripple, whose admission to the Randwick Asylum had been refused. On the 6th August, 1873, I reported on the case of Minnie Perks, who was, in my opinion, fit for admission to the Institution for the Deaf and Dumb and the Blind. On the 23rd August I conducted an inquiry as to complaints against Miss Morrow, the infant teacher at the Protestant Orphan School.

F. King, Esq. 7458. But at this time the same system prevailed, and you did not report unless you were called upon to do so? I did so occasionally on my own motion.

17 Sept., 1873. 7459. Does any one else except yourself visit any of these institutions in the discharge of the duties which you perform? No, I have not heard of any one else doing so.

7460. What other officers are there under you? One clerk, Mr. Gyulay, and a youth, Mr. Dennis.

7461. What are his duties? He acts under me in keeping the books and otherwise helping me.

7462. Does he ever go to any of these institutions? No, except occasionally when I have been confined to my house in ill health.

7463. How many members attend this Board generally? Only two, the Auditor General and the Health Officer.

7464. And the other members never attend? No, hardly ever. We have the Sheriff here occasionally.

7465. We understand that the Board leave the duties appertaining to the admission of inmates to these Asylums to you? Yes, they are left to me; but, in cases in which I hardly like to act, in cases of doubt, I submit the applications to the Board.

7466. What steps do you take with the view of forming an opinion as to the propriety of allowing any applicant to become an inmate of these institutions? I have each applicant before me here, and I ask him questions, the answers to which I enter in a book. I try to obtain all the information I can about each applicant—information as to his history and so on. Our principal cause of admission is old age and infirmity, and it is almost always easy to decide whether a case may be admitted or not.

7467. Do you ever make inquiry as to whether these people have relatives who are able to support them? Yes, frequently, and our officers are always ordered to inform us of any case that they hear of.

7468. Have you any reason to believe that attempts are made to impose upon the charity of the public, by applicants presenting themselves who are in a position to support themselves, or whose relatives are in a position to support them? Yes, I often have. We have refused hundreds of applicants here.

7469. Within what space of time have you refused a hundred applicants? Well, perhaps 100 in the half-year or less—within that I can show you by this book. (Book produced.) Each applicant is entered here; and after all the applications are entered up, there are two days in the week when they are dealt with. But I sometimes admit people between the days. I have them up here, have them into the room, and subject them to as much cross-examination as I can; but as a rule they are very old and infirm.

7470. But most of these people spoken of in this book appear to have been admitted? Yes.

7471. Do you keep any record of those who apply and are refused? Yes (referring to book) here is one refused, and here is one refused, and so on. It may sometimes happen that I do not refuse a man for a week or two, and then there may be a good many refused.

7472. What does this mean "Letter from Infirmary"? They come from the Infirmary to go into the Asylum, and when they come they bring a letter. These (referring to book) all came with letters from outside people asking me to have them in; and the others come with letters from the Infirmary. I never refuse to admit a case of real distress.

7473. Have you ever informed the authorities of the Infirmary of the persons discharged from the Asylums for misconduct? No, there is no communication from me to the Infirmary, except when I want to get a man into the Infirmary, or when they want to get a man into the Asylum.

7474. An instance has come under our knowledge where a person has been discharged from the Infirmary as hopelessly incurable, and has got into the Asylum at Parramatta: he is discharged from the Asylum for misconduct, comes straight down to Sydney and gets into the Infirmary. In the Asylum that man cost the Country about £14 a year, and in the Infirmary he costs the Country £46? That is often the case, since the new rule has been in force that any one can be put into the Infirmary at the Government expense. They have made an order now that any one almost can give a recommendation to the Colonial Secretary, who upon that gives an order for admission, and these people are admitted into the Infirmary at the Government expense. I have no doubt there is some good reason for this man's being in the Infirmary. He has been taken up by the police, no doubt, suffering from some injury or something of that kind. Since I have held this office there has been a constant dispute between the authorities of the Infirmary and myself. They are constantly trying to get people on to us. I have refused more applications from the Infirmary than from anywhere else.

7475. Mr. Metcalfe.] But you do not benefit the Government by doing that;—with you these people only cost the Government £14 a year, but they cost £46 in the Infirmary? But they are not eligible for admission into the Asylum; and if a patient submitted is ineligible, then I cannot have him in.

7476. President.] What are the elements that have made them ineligible? Those persons who are capable of being improved by active treatment are ineligible.

7477. But if the Infirmary authorities discharge these people, they do so because they are incurable, and they are not supposed to go to the Infirmary unless they are in destitute circumstances? Yes.

7478. And if they come to you from the Infirmary, they come with the opinion of the Infirmary authorities that their cases are incurable, and that they are utterly unable to earn their own living: on what ground do you reject them—how do you form an opinion, contrary to that of the medical officers of the Infirmary, that these cases are capable of being cured? Well, when I have them here I ask them questions, and I get out of them something which proves them to be ineligible. I believe that I can refer to some cases. It often happens that they send down patients who are not eligible.

7479. Mr. Goold.] What are these mentioned on the last page of this book (referring to book produced)? Those are simply cases admitted.

7480. President.] Would you give us an instance of a case that has been sent to you from the Infirmary for admission into the Asylum for the Infirm and Destitute that has been refused by you, and will you state the grounds upon which you have refused it? I often hunt up and find that they have friends who should be able to keep them out of the house.

7481. That would be a very good ground for refusing them admission, but I understood you to say that on some occasions you refused them because they were cases that could be cured: if you do that, you must set up your own opinion against that of the Infirmary authorities, who say that they are incurable, and that it is not desirable to keep them in an institution which is intended only for the reception of curable cases? Yes.

7482. You see the cost of a patient in the Infirmary is £46 per year, while in the Asylum it is only £14 a year, so that it should be the object of the Board here to relieve the Infirmary as much as possible if the patients patients are in destitute circumstances and if they are supported by the Government? I cannot refer to any case. I can only say that whenever I have refused a man it has been on good grounds. There is a very large number—about sixty per annum—ordered in here out of the Infirmary.

F. King, Esq.
17 Sept., 1873.

7483. The medical authorities of the Infirmary complain too that persons who are discharged from the Infirmary as cured of erysipelas have been refused admission into the Asylum because they have had erysipelas, though they are discharged cured and in a condition not dangerous to other people? The case of erysipelas was refused at the Infirmary and admitted to the Hyde Park Asylum and cured there. The Board represented the case to the Government.*

7484. But this person was cured of the erysipelas—they do not discharge a patient from the Infirmary until he is cured? Well, I forget how it happened, but it was in the early days of the institution I think. I do not know how long ago it was.

7485. Mr. Metcalfe.] I observe in the abstract of the accounts that the old women's asylum at Hyde Park is charged with the salary of two clerks—one at £200 and one at £50? Yes.

7486. Do they work for that one establishment? No, it is for all the Asylums.

7487. One would imagine from the abstract it is all for this one? Yes; it is entered here, as this is the head office, but they do the work of all the Asylums.

7488. Then these two gentlemen are your clerks? Yes.

7489. Mr. Couper.] Is that taken into account in averaging the cost per head? Yes, it is distributed amongst the houses.

7490. Through them all? Yes.

7491. Have you not written some long reports to the Government with reference to the Sydney Infirmary? Yes, there are some here. (Report produced. See Appendix R 2.)

7492. Is that one of them? That is one; there are others also. This is one in which I compared the average cost of the patients in the Infirmary with the average cost per head of the inmates of these institutions.

7493. Have you ever had any reports which you have sent in to the Government returned to you? Yes; my annual report was returned to me because I had worded it too strongly.

7494. That was with reference to the practice of the Infirmary authorities giving out the patients' dirty clothes? No, it was objected to because of my remarks on the Biloela School.

7495. In what year was that report sent in? In 1870.

7496. It speaks of the patients' underclothing being soiled in a disgusting manner and yet given to patients? Yes, we had inmates who came here from the Infirmary and they were covered with vermin; that is how I knew it.

7497. President.] Did you ever consider whether there was any way of utilizing the labour of the inmates of these Asylums? That has often been considered here, but the whole work of the institution is done by the inmates, and we find that such a large number are required to do the work of the institutions that we could not spare any of them. The best men would go, and those who remained would be so feeble and infirm that they could not do anything. The very principle on which these people are taken into the Asylums is that they are quite helpless. If I go up to Liverpool and see there a man who is able to earn his own living, the medical man and I consult together, and if he agrees with me that man is put out.

7498. Are you aware that a proposition was made by the proprietors of the Paper Company at Liverpool, to utilize the labour of the inmates of the Asylum there in making paper bags? Yes. The correspondence is appended to this evidence, marked B.

7499. How long ago was it? It was about two years ago, I fancy.

7500. Was an application made either verbally or otherwise, and did the Board consider it? Yes, I think that the Board did consider it.† (See note on revision, B.)

* NOTE (on revision) A.

No. 69-275.

Board of Government Asylums,
Sydney, 26 August, 1869.

Sir,

I am directed by the Board of Management to request that you will be good enough to solicit the attention of the Honorable the Colonial Secretary to the case of a young girl whose admission to this institution, while suffering from a dangerous disease, "erysipelas," was forced on the Board in consequence of the refusal on the part of the authorities of the Sydney Infirmary to give her shelter. Application for her admission to the Hyde Park Asylum was made to the Chairman by the Reverend Mr. Morton, who stated that he had made personal application at the Infirmary for her admission, but had been informed that, as the girl was suffering from an infectious disorder, she was ineligible. This is one of numerous instances in which, for the sake of humanity, the Board have been constrained to admit to the Government Asylums for the Infirm and Destitute, patients requiring active medical treatment who have been refused admission to the Infirmary; and they desire to call the attention of the Government to the expediency of instituting an inquiry into the rules and practice of the Infirmary, with the view of causing such modification thereof as will open the doors of that institution, which is so largely supported out of the public funds, for the reception of such cases as that which they have brought under notice.

The Principal Under Secretary.

I have, &c.,
FREDERIC KING,
Secretary.

† NOTE (on revision) B.

With reference to your question as to whether an application was not made by the Paper Company at Liverpool, for the employment of the inmates of the Asylum in making paper bags,—I have to state that the Manager of the Paper Company did apply to the Board, on the 9th December, 1872. The superintendent was called on to report, which he did as follows:—

"Of the suggestion contained in this letter I do not at all think well, for many reasons. To carry out the Company's plan we should require a room purposely set apart, and which we have not; an overseer of the work would be necessary, which we could not find. There are not, I think, a dozen men in the yard who have the use of their hands for the purpose of making bags; those who are not too aged are paralyzed or otherwise deformed in their limbs. Besides, tables, benches, scissors, and many other articles, would be needed, for the keeping of which we have no accommodation, and many of which also it would not be safe to trust in the yard, for there are many violent characters there. In fact, I think such a plan put into operation would demoralize the whole class of inmates, and I trust therefore the Board will not entertain the suggestion.

The Board decided that all or nearly all the inmates who are capable of doing anything are employed in the work of the establishment, and they directed me to so inform the Manager of the Paper Company, and to express their regret that for the above and other reasons they did not see their way to comply with the suggestion.

FREDERIC KING,
Secretary.

F. King, Esq. 7501. Why was the proposition rejected? I think one reason was the difficulty of looking after it—looking after the property of others sent into our house without having officers to attend to it; and also, because of the helplessness of the inmates.

17 Sept., 1873.

7502. Mr. Metcalfe.] But he must be a very helpless man who cannot make a paper bag? He could do it if he had any one to look after him, and we should have had to hire in help. We could not have undertaken the thing without having a storekeeper who would have to have been answerable for the property.

7503. President.] Are not the Paper Company's works so close to the Asylum that the inmates could go down there and work? —

7504. Mr. Metcalfe.] Would it not be as well to let these old men earn 1s. a day or so, half of which could go to their benefit and half to the institution? Yes, it might be done.

7506. On the whole, you think there are not many people there who really could earn their own living? There are not more than a dozen—I am convinced of it; because we keep a very strict eye over them, and we don't keep any who are able to work, except a few of the helpers. There are a few head wardsmen there who are able to work a little, but otherwise there are not any who are able to earn their own living.

7507. President.] Mr. Rolleston informs us that a great number of persons less fit to be received than those who obtain admission here are sent down from the country? That has often happened. We are quite unable to control their admission into the house, but after we have them in we very often send them out again. It is owing to the efforts of the up-country people to get these old people off their hands that they are sent down.

7509. Mr. Cowper.] And they are very often people who would not be admitted if they applied in Sydney? Very often.

7510. You have as a rule visited the hospitals throughout the country? I have done so occasionally. I have visited the hospitals at Bathurst, Orange and Braidwood, and Goulburn and Maitland.

7511. Do you consider that they are well managed? Not generally.

7512. Mr. Metcalfe.] Have you been to Windsor? Yes. The buildings are very old and dilapidated.

7513. And are the rations issued at Windsor the same as those issued in other institutions of the Colony? Yes, I think so. There is a Benevolent Society as well as a Hospital: the two institutions are combined.

7514. And are the rations given out in the same way? Yes. The institution is wholly in private hands, but it is helped by the Government.

7515. The Government give half the money that is contributed to that institution? Yes, the same as all the others; but they have no control over the expenditure, except that they have the right of inspection.

7516. Mr. Goold.] When did you visit the Bathurst Hospital last? I think it was August, 1872.

7517. In what state did you find it then? It was in a rather old, perishable condition.

7518. But as to cleanliness? It was ordinarily clean, but it is a very old house; it is a very unsuitable place.

7519. President.] Did you form any opinion as to the suitability of Biloela as the site of an Industrial School? Yes; I thought it would require very great alterations, but as to the island itself, I thought it was tolerably good. It is an isolated place, and much better than the house at the Hunter. The house there was so exposed—it was exposed to the streets—and I believe that a great deal of harm was done by that. Here, with proper control the school might be carried on with more success, if the buildings were altered. The place at present is unsuitable—I cannot conceive how the place can be carried on with such arrangements as they have there.

7520. Is there any suggestions you wish to make with reference to these institutions? No, I do not know that there is anything more to add.

THURSDAY, 18 SEPTEMBER, 1873.

Members Present:—

WILLIAM CHARLES WINDEYER, ESQ., PRESIDENT.

SAMUEL GOOLD, Esq.

MICHAEL METCALFE, Esq.

CHARLES COWPER, JUN., Esq.

Captain John McLerie, Inspector-General of Police, called in and examined:—

Capt. McLerie

18 Sept., 1873.

7521. President.] You are the Inspector-General of Police? Yes.

7522. I believe that you were appointed one of the Board to have the supervision of the Government Asylums for the Infirm and Destitute? I am one of the Board, but I must confess that I cannot attend the Board meetings, as my doing so would interfere too much with my official duties—those which I am paid to perform.

7523. What is the hour at which the Board meetings are usually held? 10 o'clock in the forenoon, and that is the hour when I have to put the whole of the police machinery of the Colony in motion.

7524. You have at that hour to be always at your official post? Yes.

7525. To make arrangements for carrying on the whole police business of the Colony? Yes, from 10 to 12 I am always busy. I told the Chairman of the Board that if he altered the hour of meeting I would attend, but that I could not neglect my official duties in order to attend the meetings of a Board of which I was merely an honorary member.

7526. And in point of fact you have not attended? Yes, I did attend two or three times, but I have not been there for ten months. I did attend, but found it very inconvenient—the whole department was upset—and so I ceased to attend.

7527. In point of fact, you found that you could not attend the Board meetings consistently with your other duties? Yes.

7528. Was any notice taken of your request to have the hour of meeting changed? I was appointed a member of the Board by Sir Charles Cowper—who is now at Home, and I thought that I should be able to to arrange with the chairman of the Board as to the hour of meeting, but I did not succeed in that, and I ^{Capt. McLerie.} never went to a meeting afterwards.

7529. Was there any particular reason given for adhering to the hour of 10 o'clock? None. I have been talking to Dr. Alleyne, one of the members of the Board, and he says that he has never seen either the Sheriff or me at the meetings. I do not know why the Sheriff has not been there, but I have mentioned the reason why I have not been there. 13 Sept., 1873.

7530. Do you see enough of the working of the Board to enable you to form an opinion as to whether such a Board, composed as it is of gentlemen who have other important official duties to attend to, can satisfactorily discharge the functions thrown upon it? I do not believe that any gentleman who has important official duties to attend to can do justice at that Board. That is my opinion, and I have formed that opinion from having been many years ago a member of the Board of the Benevolent Asylum. There the committee met in the afternoon, and I could attend the meetings.

7531. Have you formed any opinion as to the best mode of supervising these Charitable Institutions;—what better plan can be adopted than the present one? I think that a much better plan could be devised.

7532. What is your idea on the subject? I think that there should be a Government officer responsible to the Government for the whole of these institutions, who should have some sort of supervision over all Charitable Institutions—these Asylums and others—for which there is a Parliamentary vote of money every year.

7533. From what you saw, did it appear to you that there was much work for the Board to do in relation to the Asylums? Yes, if the work was properly done.

7535. What institutions do you include among those who receive shares of that £112,000? The Industrial Schools, Asylums, Lunatic Asylums, Infirmary, Biloela, Protestant and Roman Catholic Orphan Schools, and other charitable allowances. The total is over £112,000.

7536. You do not include Randwick in it? Yes, that is included; and so are the Orphan Schools.

7537. Did you, when you first endeavoured to attend to the duties of the Board, visit any of these institutions yourself? I did. I was a member of the Board of the original Benevolent Asylum, and went up to Liverpool in that capacity. We had no local Board there then. Members of the committee went up to Liverpool once a quarter, and I generally used to go there. Afterwards they had a local Board.

7539. Did you ever form any opinion as to whether the Board managing that institution was too large? I did; and it was also too mixed in its nature.

7540. Do you mean to say that such a Board would be better able to do its duty if it were composed entirely of laymen? I do. I will not say that the institutions should be without the spiritual assistance of clergymen; but they have no right to be on the Board, as they are so easily imposed upon.

7541. In point of fact, the kindly, benevolent disposition which makes a good clergyman tends to unfit him for the harder and sterner work of examining into cases of distress and detecting imposture? Yes. I may say that, in England, when the Poor Law Bill passed it was said that relieving officers should be appointed—men who might be called relieving officers, but who would actually be detectives, and find out whether persons were fit objects of charity or not. These people, while charged with the duty of relieving cases of real distress, would be able to detect impostors.

7542. Why did you think that the Board of the Benevolent Asylum was too large? I think that no Board should exceed three members.

7543. Do you think that the large size of the Board tends to create a waste of time—that there are frivolous discussions, and so on? Yes, I do.

7544. Had you any reason to believe that the out-door relief given by the Benevolent Asylum was sometimes given to improper persons—that this form of charity was imposed upon? I had.

7545. Was it so up to the time you left the Board? Yes, it was so. I disqualified myself for the purpose of getting away from the Board, because I was convinced that we were relieving people who were undeserving, and I believe that is the case now.

7546. What were the grounds on which you came to that conclusion? I have lived in the neighbourhood of the Asylum for the last twenty-two years, and of course I could not help seeing a good deal of what goes on there.

7547. Do you see the class of people who go there for relief? Yes, and also the class of women who are admitted there to be delivered. I have seen the same women there three or four times.

7548. But I believe that sort of thing has been put a stop to? I do not know. I know it was the case some years ago. I have seen the same women there—women with long ringlets and gay dresses—in the place.

7549. Have you had, since you have left the Board, up to the present time, any opportunities of observing the class of people who go to the institution for relief? Well, I have not paid so much attention to the matter since; but I know for a fact that at that time people got relief of bread and meat, and sold what they got immediately afterwards.

7550. Probably in order to get drunk? I do not know what for, but they sold it.

7551. Did you ever consider as to what would be the best means of checking this kind of imposition? The only means which I could suggest would be to place the whole vote for charitable purposes in the hands of a responsible officer. I have no doubt that he would get a Board of three or five to assist him—unpaid gentlemen on whom he could depend.

7552. We are informed that the charity of the public is very much imposed upon in regard to the out-door dispensing of the Sydney Infirmary? That is a matter about which I know very little, except what I have learned from reports which I read in the papers.

Capt. McLerie. power now with my limited force to assist Captain Mein, of the "Vernon," and also the Asylums, when they refer to me. They do refer to me sometimes, and when they do I send all over the Colony, and report the result of my inquiries to the Colonial Secretary. The other day I sent to Captain Mein a report upon the parents of some of his boys who were able to pay for their children's maintenance.

188 Sept., 1873.

7554. Then do you think that there are boys at present on board the "Vernon" whose parents are able to pay for them? I should not like to say positively, but I have little doubt in my own mind that there are. In Victoria they publish in the Police Gazette the names of defaulters who fail to pay for the subsistence of their children in the Benevolent Asylums. We have nothing of the kind here. I will send you down the Victorian Police Gazette, in which you will see the large number of the names of defaulters published there. They are put into the Police Gazette, and the police secure the payment of the money. (Appendix S.)

7555. Do the police take steps to recover the money? Yes, and so would I. I would make my people do the same as the police do in Victoria, but I have no intimation as to who are defaulters. In the Victorian Gazette there are three or four pages of defaulters.

7556. Mr. Cowper.] They publish a list of people who are able to pay? It is a list of people who have not paid their subscriptions towards their children's maintenance, and the police obtain payment. I would do the same here if I were supplied with the information, but I do not get it. Perhaps there is something in our Act which is different from the Victorian Act—I do not know. That return of the children sent to the "Vernon" and to Biloela was a suggestion of mine to the Colonial Secretary. I suggested that the Magistrates should make out duplicate returns and send one of them to me, but the information that the returns contain is so meagre that they are not of the slightest use.

7557. Well, there is a great difficulty in all these cases—I do not think that there are two cases which are really perfect—there are cases which I could upset quite easily? I know that.

7558. They do not know how to make out the warrants, or anything? Well, that printed form was a suggestion of mine also. But it gives the most meagre information—it is perfectly useless to me.

7559. President.] What is your opinion as to the working of the Acts which were passed a few years ago with a view of reclaiming vagrant children? Well, I think that the Act is defective in many respects. There was the case of a family of children sent down from Braidwood. The mother was dead, the father was insane; the police took charge of the children. I reported the matter to the Colonial Secretary, and received instructions to have them brought here. The girls were sent to Biloela. I do not think that was right. I think that the poverty of the parents should not be visited as a crime upon the children. The mother of these children was dead, and the father was insane, or the father was dead and the mother was insane—I cannot recollect which. The children should have been sent to the Destitute Children's Asylum, I think.

7560. Your idea of Biloela is that it is a place for criminals? Yes.

7561. But that is not the intention of the Act? That is a mistake of the Act. It should be a place for the reception of girls who have been in one way unfortunate, or girls who have been convicted of thieving, and there should be only the two classes there.

7562. But the evidence before us points to the conclusion that these juvenile criminals are not as immoral as are the prostitute girls—that it would be wrong to mix the prostitutes with the thieves? I quite admit that; yet I do not think that these unfortunate children who have not committed crime should be mixed up with criminals of any kind of the female class.

7563. You are aware of the difference between the Reformatory and the Industrial School at Biloela? I believe that the Reformatory is all humbug. The Orphan Schools and the Asylum at Randwick were quite enough.

7564. But if you did away with the Reformatory, would you not be doing what you complain of, and mixing the two classes together? My complaint is that these simply unfortunate children are sent to mix with girls some of whom are of the prostitute class, while others have been convicted of petty larcenies. Why should these unfortunate children be sent there?

7565. But we are informed that very few of them have ever been convicted of crime, and those who have been were sent there by mistake? I would have a different place for them all.

7566. Mr. Metcalfe.] Would you mix the prostitutes and the thieves together? No; I would have only two classes in Biloela. I would have no Reformatory there; and I would send mere pauper children, those who were proper candidates for admission into an industrial school, to Randwick.

7567. Mr. Cowper.] Do you not know that at Biloela the children who have been convicted of thieving do not mix with the others? I do not know what the arrangements are—I have never visited the place. As long as the Industrial School is there it will be looked upon with suspicion. Leave Biloela for culprits—for females who have been guilty of some indiscretions, and for thieves, and send the others to Randwick; but do not mix up the thieves with the prostitutes.

7568. President.] Your objection in the particular case you have quoted is, that the children, though deprived of their parents, were simply neglected, and should have been sent to Randwick rather than to the Industrial School? I do not think that they should have been sent to Biloela. The very fact of their being sent to the Industrial School at Biloela is enough to injure them.

7569. You think that the old associations of Cockatoo Island have not been done away with by the place having been re-christened Biloela? No.

7570. And you are against Cockatoo Island as the site of a school of this character? Yes, for a School of Industry. Mind, I recommended it as a place of punishment for females when they could not be kept under discipline at Newcastle; but I never intended that unfortunate children, such as those to whom I have alluded, should be sent there.

7571. Do you not think that its proximity to the dock is undesirable, as there are a number of sailors constantly there? Well, with proper supervision I do not think there would be any harm in that. There has been only one instance of the sailors having made a disturbance there, and that was when the American ship was in the dock.

7572. Do you not think that there is a constant danger of such a thing, with the sailors so much about the island—are they not a most enterprising class of men, and very like to go into escapades of that kind? I quite agree with that. I think that one of the Orphan Schools at Parramatta would be a far better position for these girls. It would be best to amalgamate the two schools—the Roman Catholic and the Protestant Schools, with the institution at Randwick. I do not see why that should not be done. I was one of the original founders of the Randwick Asylum, long before it was at Randwick, and it was our intention to propose such an amalgamation to the Government. 7573.

7573. Your idea is that the Roman Catholic and Protestant Orphan Schools should be abolished as Denominational Schools and one of them taken as an Industrial School? Yes, and the other children should be sent to Randwick. The Government pays nearly the whole of the expenses of Randwick as it is. Capt. McLerie.
18 Sept., 1873.

7574. Mr. Metcalfe.] To what extent would you enlarge Randwick Asylum? Put another wing on to it.

7575. There are now 800 children there, and many of them are sleeping two in a bed? Add another wing to the building. I believe that there is quite room there for 1,200 children if proper arrangements were made for them.

7576. Do you mean that 1,200 could be housed there now? No, not now.

7577. President.] Do you not think that it would be best to retain the Protestant Orphan School and make use of the buildings there—to put the children of the two schools all together there? No, I think it would be better and cheaper to have them at Randwick. My opinion is that there are a number of children in the Randwick Institution who ought not to be there.

7578. Why do you think that it would be cheaper for the children to be kept at Randwick than at the Protestant Orphan School, supposing that the latter place is properly supplied with appliances? Because you would have one staff instead of three. You have three staffs now.

7579. Do you not think that by having so many children together the tendency is to make the school ineffective, by the individual character of the children being lost sight of? No, I do not think so; not if you have proper officers. There are some of our English workhouses which contain 1,500 paupers.

7580. But you would hardly make them model schools for the imitation of the Colonies, would you? No, I would not.

7582. You have taken a considerable interest in Randwick? Not lately; I have not since I ceased to be a member of the committee.

7583. What is your reason for thinking that there are a large number of children there who should not be there? That was my reason for seceding from it, and I have no doubt that was the reason why others did the same. There is now not one of the original founders of the institution connected with it.

7584. Were you then unsuccessful in your endeavours to prevent the reception of children who ought not to be there? Well, they increased the committee there.

7585. Is it your opinion that the committee is too large? Yes, it is. There is not a meeting but there is some sectarian squabble takes place; we never had anything of the kind in my time.

7586. Was the committee much smaller in your time? Yes; there was Dr. Douglas, Dr. Ross, Archdeacon M'Encroe, Mr. Dowling and myself,—and Mr. Stephen was our secretary. That was our Board, and we had no sectarian squabbles then.

7587. And you think that this tendency to waste the time of the meetings in frivolous discussions has arisen in part from the size of the committee? I have no doubt of it whatever.

7588. What is your experience as to the desirability of having Boards composed entirely of laymen to manage all these institutions? Of all; wherever a vote of money is given, I would make one man responsible to the Government for expending it.

7589. You think that the Government should be represented on every Board? Yes, and the chairman should be responsible to the Government, and associated with either paid or unpaid members.

7590. Mr. Metcalfe.] How can you make the chairman responsible when he has only a casting vote at the Board? Let him look after the expenditure of the money.

7591. But how can you make him responsible? Well, make the Board responsible; I do not mean the individual—the chairman. You are quite right there. For instance, I am one of the members of the Transit Commission; the chairman is the Mayor, and the other member is the Mayor of St. Leonards; and I find that I am very often out-voted.

7592. And yet you are the Government representative? Yes. I must say that we work very well together, but I have had a difficulty about the 'bus boys.

7594. Do you not think that if you so much diminish the proportion of the members of the Board elected by the subscribers, it will have a still greater tendency to diminish the subscriptions? I do not think so; it is not because they are represented by their own body that people subscribe.

7595. You think that they subscribe for the sake of the Charity itself? Yes, exactly so. We used to get £3,000 or £4,000 a year with that small Board of three members.

7596. May not the falling off of the subscriptions to the Benevolent Asylum have arisen from the fact that there are now other institutions calling upon the public for subscriptions, and thus the contributions of the people are divided amongst many more institutions than they used to be? Still the charity of the public is confined to only a certain number of persons. The same people give to all these institutions. There are many people of very large means, of immense wealth, who never give a farthing to anything.

7597. Have you never considered, when you were a member of this Board, how the labour of the inmates might be utilized to some extent—I mean the inmates of the Government Asylums—and that they might be made more self-supporting than they now are? Well, I believe that in the Destitute Children's Asylum the labour of the inmates is utilized to a great extent. The boys and girls are apprenticed as servants to the institution—and they do a large amount of work, of course only receiving rations and a small annual gratuity.

7598. Did it ever come to your knowledge, when you were attending to the duties of the Board, that the proprietors of the Paper Company at Liverpool had made some proposition to the Board for employing the inmates of the Asylum in making paper bags? No, not in my time; the Paper Company was formed after my time.

Capt. McLerie. 7599. Mr. Metcalfe.] But the President is speaking of an offer made to the present Board—the Hyde Park Board? I am not aware of it.

18 Sept., 1873. 7600. President.] You have not turned your attention to the subject? I proposed in the Transit Commission to write to some of the factories to employ some of the boys whom we rejected as 'bus boys. I made a motion that we should apply to the proprietors of certain factories, and try and obtain employment for these boys, and no one would employ them.

7601. What boys? 'Bus boys too young to be licensed and otherwise ineligible.

7602. Did you ever visit the Asylum at Parramatta, in the course of your experience as a member of the Board? Only once.

7603. Did you then form any opinion as to the mode in which it was managed? Well, my visit was so cursory that I would not like to give an opinion on the subject. I did form an opinion, but it may have been a wrong one, and I do not wish to advance it.

7604. Do you think that the Industrial School Act has been put in force as much as it might have been by the Benches of Magistrates? I can only speak as to Sydney and the principal towns of the Colony—Goulburn, Maitland, Bathurst, &c. I know they do there, but of course I cannot speak of other places.

7605. What is your opinion? I believe that in those towns the Act is carried out in its integrity.

7606. But are there not numbers of children running about the streets neglected now? Yes; but the police cannot legally go into the houses and take the boys out.

7607. But is there not a laxity on the part of the Benches—a desire to let boys have "another chance" when they are brought up before them; that is to say, "another chance of going to the bad"? Yes, of course there is. I get the police returns every morning. If the boys are charged with an offence against the law, the Benches can send them to gaol.

7608. Do you not think that excuses are too readily accepted—that mere pretences set up as to a boy having a means of support are accepted as genuine? Yes.

7609. That is your opinion? That is my opinion; and I know, too, that parents very often bring their children before the Benches with a view of getting rid of the expense of supporting them.

7610. And the responsibility of looking after them? Yes.

7611. And you think that, if they do put their children in these institutions, they should be made to pay for them? Certainly.

7612. Is there any suggestion that you wish to make upon any of these topics at all? No. I think I have given my opinion to the effect that the public money is misapplied to a large extent. That is my opinion.

7613. In all these institutions? In all these institutions. It is enormous that £112,000 a year should be voted for these institutions for a population of only 500,000 or 600,000.

7614. Of course the tendency of allowing people too easily to obtain admission to these institutions is to pauperize the people? Yes, the tendency is to make them paupers.

7615. Mr. Metcalfe.] And you think that there should be a central Board to decide as to who shall be admitted into these places? Yes; and that Board should be assisted by officers to make inquiries.

7616. President.] It has been suggested that there should be a Board in a central position in town, where there should be a staff of clerks and so on, and which should be a place of reference for all people who wish to get apprentices from any of the Orphan or Industrial Schools, and which should to some extent supervise the whole of the Public Charities;—it has been suggested that this central body would prevent favouritism, and be able to keep up a system of supervision in such a way as to prevent persons discharged from one Asylum getting into another: do you think that would be a good plan? The Board should be a central Board, having control over all the money voted by the Parliament for charitable purposes.

7617. You would not have the Board meet in a Government office, but in some central place in the town devoted to their special business? Yes; it would be a large establishment, you know. The Board and the secretary, and a staff of officers to make inquiries. If they did not want officers to travel about, I could make the police inquire when reference was made to me. That Board should publish quarterly the names of all defaulters—people who did not pay for the support of their families or children in the public institutions. There was a case referred to me the other day for inquiry—(I will not mention names)—the case of a woman in the Gladsville Asylum, for whose support her son paid 2s. 6d. per day. He applied to the Government to be relieved from this payment on account of his poverty. The matter was referred to me, and it was found that the man's father died leaving £4,000 worth of property, and that this man was drawing the rents of £2,000 worth, and yet he applied to be relieved from the duty of supporting his mother. That is a case which has occurred within the last month.

7618. Is there anything else you wish to add? No, I do not think so.

FRIDAY, 19 SEPTEMBER, 1873.

Members Present:—

WILLIAM CHARLES WINDEYER, Esq., PRESIDENT.

SAMUEL GOOLD, Esq.

MICHAEL METCALFE, Esq.

CHARLES COWPER, JUN., Esq.

The Hon. E. Deas Thomson, C.B., M.L.C., President of the Board, Destitute Children's Asylum, called in and examined:—

The Hon. E.D. Thomson, C.B., M.L.C. 7619. President.] You are, I think, the President of the Society for the relief of Destitute Children? Yes, and I have been so, by annual election, ever since the first establishment of the institution, in February, 1852.

19 Sept., 1873. 7620. At that time I believe that the present buildings had not been erected at Randwick? They were not erected. The institution was in Mr. Robert Cooper's house, "Juniper Hall," South Head Road.

7621. Of course you are aware of the object with which this Commission has been appointed: it has been appointed to inquire into the Public Charities of the Colony, and amongst others the Asylum for the relief of Destitute Children at Randwick. We thought, from your long connection with that institution, that you would would be likely to offer some observations with respect thereto which would be of value to us? I believe that the institution is remarkably well managed in general—nothing can be better, I believe. It is very economically managed, and the children are exceedingly well taught and brought up, both in regard to the ordinary branches of education and to industries and trades. They are taught farming, tailoring, shoe-making, and so forth, and their conduct upon the whole has been exceedingly satisfactory. I do not believe that there is any institution in the world in which the sanatory condition of the inmates is better. The deaths are extremely few. I do not very frequently visit the institution, because I do not ride so much as I used to do; but I sometimes go there, and I find that there is not a single child in the hospital—that is to say, that there may be some there, but none with any serious diseases—none that may be considered invalids. There are some with eye complaints perhaps, or some whose heads are affected with scurf that comes upon the hair and is sometimes very catching.

7622. There has been no serious epidemic in the school since it has been there? The measles broke out, but the deaths were extremely few. We had not then the advantage of having the Catherine Hayes Hospital; which has every requisite, and which ordinarily is much larger than we require; but when an epidemic of that kind breaks out, the whole institution becomes one large hospital. There are upwards of 800 children there.

7623. Your opinion is that the present site is a good one? Yes, the site is admirable in a sanatory point of view, and I believe in every other. It is within a convenient distance of the town, as I think all such institutions should be, that they may be supervised by the public at large. The place is open to the sea, and has the advantage of the sea breeze in summer, and the aspect of the buildings is favourable in that respect. The grounds also are very well managed. They raise a large quantity of vegetables and green-stuff for the cows, and altogether I think that there could not be a better selection of ground for the purpose.

7624. We have been very much struck, on looking into matters connected with this institution, at the very large number of persons who have the right to attend upon the governing committee? That, in my opinion, is a mistake. I was looking at that myself, and the number even exceeds what I thought it was. The 18th rule of the institution says that “the management of the institution shall devolve upon a Board of directors, consisting of the officers mentioned in the preceding rule, of ‘all life directors’ (of whom I see there are forty) together with not less than sixteen members nor more than twenty-three to be elected, except as hereinafter mentioned, at the annual or special general meeting: eight of whom shall retire at the end of each year, being those members who have attended the meetings of the Board the least number of times, but who, nevertheless, shall be eligible for re-election.” That is to say, that the minimum number of members is sixty-one, and the number might be increased to nearly the number of the present House of Assembly. I may mention, that some inconvenience is likely to arise from this, because we seldom have two meetings composed of the same members, and where a committee is so very numerous it is difficult to get agreement among the members.

7625. Some gentlemen come to one meeting and do a thing, and a different set of persons attend another meeting and do a different thing? Yes. The disagreements have however been less frequent than might be expected, but they have sometimes occurred. Besides, with so large a directory there is too great a division of responsibility—

7626. Do you not think that the large size of the committee tends to cause useless discussion? It must always do that; and another thing—they have introduced the reporters of the Press to the meetings, and that induces some people to speak at greater length than they otherwise would do. I have no objection to the reporters of the Press being present myself, except the objection which I have just mentioned—that their presence induces people to talk who otherwise would not do so.

7627. Then your suggestion would be that the number of members on the Board should be reduced? Yes, I think so. There is a power to appoint life directors under certain conditions, and these life directors become members of the Board from the date of their appointment.

7628. A number of witnesses examined by us in the course of our inquiry have suggested the advisability of composing the Boards of such institutions as these entirely of laymen? We have had no practical inconvenience caused by the presence of clergymen on the Board. We have them of different denominations, and I am not aware that any practical inconvenience has arisen. They have agreed wonderfully well together, considering the wide difference of opinion that exists upon matters of religion.

7629. But have there not been difficulties at the meetings caused by that odium theologicum which clergymen feel? There has been a feeling of that kind, but it has blown over. I do not think that it has led to any practical result.

7630. Another reason which has been alleged against the continuance of clergymen on these Boards is a reason which is complimentary to the clergymen themselves, and to the kindness and benevolence of their dispositions. It is said that these qualities render them liable to be imposed upon, and induces them to listen to tales of feigned distress which more business-like men would carefully sift? That has reference merely to the admission of children, and that is done by the house committee—not by the Board. There are, however, clergymen on the house committee. I am not, as President, a member of the house committee, to which body is confided the arrangement of the details of management. They have the entire management of all matters of detail. The Board is sometimes consulted, but it seldom happens that the Board interferes in any way with the discretion exercised by the house committee.

7631. Have you ever thought to what extent it would be desirable to limit the size of the Board? I have thought over the matter more since I got the summons to attend here than I did before, but I find it extremely difficult to say. What I am afraid of is, that if you reduce the number of the Board to a minimum, the amount of subscriptions received from the public would be very materially affected—there would be much less money subscribed.

7632. Do you not think that those people who subscribe to these Charities do so for the sake of the Charity itself, and not because they hope to become members of the Board, or hope to see their friends in that position? I hope so.

7633. But as long as a Board was large enough to enable the various denominations of the Colony to be represented upon it, would not that be sufficient? That would, in my opinion, be quite sufficient for all purposes.

7634. I do not mean that the representation should be limited to the four denominations of old times? I think it is quite right that the denominations should be represented in a Charity of this kind, although the community is composed of so many different denominations that the matter seems somewhat difficult. The limitation to four in the olden times arose from the difficulty of seeing to what extent the thing would be carried. If you do not make some limit, there would be no end to the increase of denominations—new sects would be constantly starting up and demanding to be placed on the same footing as the others. That was the reason why only four denominations were taken into consideration; it was with no idea of doing injustice to other denominations.

7635. I suppose that in the early times of the Colony the preponderance of these denominations was very great? Yes, very great indeed; some of the minor denominations are divided into so many different sects that you cannot make out where they are to end. There was a rule laid down that each denomination should receive land, but it was found that the lands of the Colony would scarcely suffice—so to speak—for them all. And these grants of land operated as a premium upon subdivision of sects, which I think should be checked as far as possible. Of course every man has a right to worship God according to his own conscience, but it does not follow that the State should recognize subdivisions of sects infinitely.

7636. Have you considered the propriety of the Government being represented on this Board, considering the large amount of money which is voted for this institution? Yes, that has occurred to me frequently. I think that in all these institutions where the larger amount of money is received from the State, the Government should be represented on the Board. That would be quite right and proper. There was a Bill introduced some time ago which gave the Government power to appoint an Inspector of Charities. That Bill received my advocacy when it came before the House of which I am a Member. In round numbers, I think that the total amount of the annual expenditure of this institution is about £14,000, and of that amount upwards of £8,000 is contributed by the Government. They begin with a large item in the first instance—to supplement the subscriptions, donations, fees and voluntary gifts by an equal amount; and then they have also to provide for the maintenance of children sent into the Asylum by the order of the Government—which it is of course quite right that they should do. They take advantage of the management of the institution to have these children brought up there, and I do not think they could do better, for if the children were not sent there it is quite clear that the Government must have a separate establishment for their reception. I may say that I have always been in favour of the principle of this institution. Complaints have been made to the effect that it induced parents to neglect their children, but I do not think that it does so. I have always insisted upon this,—that when a parent, either a father or a mother, could afford to pay the whole or a part of the expenses incurred for the maintenance of the children, and their education, that parent should be called upon to do so. I was instrumental in getting an Act passed by the Legislature which gave the power of suing parents for the amount incurred in the maintenance and education of their children, and they have to pay, or else to show that they are unable to pay.

7637. Have you ever acted upon that? Yes, that has been acted upon several times. There are some voluntary contributions made by the parents; but I see that in 1871 the amount received from parents and guardians for maintenance of children in the institution was £564—which shows that it was acting practically for good.

7638. Do you know what the practice of the institution is with regard to the reception or rejection of only children? Of “only” children?

7639. For instance, where a woman is left with only one child—would that child be admitted? I do not know about that. We do not profess to take in children who are admissible into the Orphan Schools. There is a rule to that effect:—“3. Children admissible into the Protestant or Roman Catholic Orphan Schools shall not be considered eligible for reception into this institution.” I drew these rules a good many years ago, and you will find, at page 37 of the last report, that the objects of the institution are set forth clearly:—“1. The object of the Society is the protection, support, industrial training, and moral and religious instruction of children deserted or left destitute by dissolute and abandoned parents, or from other causes neglected, or in a state of great privation, and without adequate means of support. 2. Under the foregoing description of destitute children admissible into the institution shall be included only: 1st—children abandoned by their parents, or left without friends and protection; 2nd—children the offspring of parents either or both of whom may, from profligate habits or conviction for felony, be unable to support and unfit to educate them, and who may voluntarily surrender them to the care of the Society; 3rd—children who, coming within any of the classes above enumerated, may, according to any law in force for the time being, be compulsorily placed in the institution; 4th—children of any of the above classes who may be received by order of the Government from any Benevolent Asylum or other Public Institution; and for whose support provision shall be made by the Legislature.” These are the regulations, and, as I said before, children who are admissible into the Protestant and Roman Catholic Orphan Schools are not admissible into the Randwick Asylum.

7640. Do you see any reason for the maintenance of that rule—any reason why destitute children of any kind whatever should be excluded from the Randwick Asylum? We considered that the Government had already provided for certain classes of destitute children, and we would not interfere with them. We wanted to withdraw children who were not orphans from the influence of the bad example of dissolute parents, and train them up that they might become good subjects and able to earn a livelihood in an honest way; and there would be an objection to any mingling up of the two classes. Very often children are admitted into the Orphan Schools who have come to need assistance from misfortune—children of a somewhat superior class—the children of tradesmen and others. These that are admitted into the Randwick Asylum are often taken from the streets and rescued from infamy. That is a different class altogether.

7641. Mr. Metcalf.] I know that orphan children have been admitted there; I know that the child of a man who was killed at the Steam Company’s Works was taken there: it was highly improper? I know nothing of the case referred to. It was clearly not one properly admissible into the Asylum. The children are apprenticed out when they reach the age of thirteen, and, as a general rule, we hear a very good account of them. According to the report for 1871, which was passed at the annual meeting in the beginning of 1872, the demand for apprentices has been greatly in excess of the supply. “42 boys and 18 girls have been apprenticed, but situations could readily have been obtained for double that number, had the children attained to a sufficient age to leave the Asylum. The system of local supervision exercised over the apprentices continues to work effectively. With but a few exceptions, the conduct reports received from the employers have been of a very satisfactory character, and letters received from the apprentices are equally gratifying.” So that, upon the whole, I think that shows very conclusively the success of the institution in reclaiming the children from vice, and from the bad influences to which they were exposed when they formed members of their own families.

7642. President.] Have you ever considered the expediency of trying here the boarding-out system which has been adopted in the Mother Country? I have not. I have no knowledge of that system at all; but I should be greatly afraid that it would be extremely difficult here to find suitable families with which children could be placed—families suitable, for example, or in any other way. I think it is better to bring the children up to the age of thirteen in this way, educate them, teach them some trades, and then to apprentice them by a careful selection of the individuals with whom they are put out.

The Hon. E. D.
Thomson,
C.B., M.L.C.
19 Sept., 1873.

7643. It has been suggested to us that you would be able to teach a larger number of children these trades if, instead of apprenticing them, they were taught a trade for a year or two, and that tradesmen would be glad to take them then although they had not finished their term of apprenticeship, as they would have got over the first drudgery of their trade, and could be made very useful at the end of two years? I do not think that they would be of much use in that time. I think that thirteen is the age at which the children should be sent out; but I say at once that I have had no experience of the boarding out system.

7644. I am not speaking of that at all; now when you apprentice a child out, you do it for five years? Yes.

7645. It has been suggested that they might be partially taught trades in the institution and still sent out at thirteen, and it is said that tradesmen would be very glad to take them? Labour is so dear here that tradesmen would no doubt be glad to take any they could get, and that is, in my opinion, a reason against the plan. The children would probably not be taught anything—they would merely have to work.

7646. But they work in the institution as it is now? But it is in learning trades and so on that they work, and that is quite a different thing. Besides, they are learning to read and write and do arithmetic, and are otherwise usefully trained.

7647. They do not learn reading, writing, and arithmetic when they become apprentices to the institution? No, I believe not; but they have been already instructed in the usual branches of primary education.

7648. That is what I am speaking of; you have children who are apprenticed to the institution? Yes, sometimes they are apprenticed to the institution, that is to save us labour. The report says that there were in the institution on the 31st December, 1871, 809 children, consisting of 432 boys and 377 girls, exclusive of twenty-seven boys and fourteen girls apprenticed to the institution, and thus accounted for—

To boot and shoemaker	11 boys	As seamstresses	3 girls
„ tailor	3 „	„ domestic servants in the	} 11 „
„ baker	4 „	Asylum, and in the Cath-
„ carpenter	2 „	erine Hayes Hospital. }
„ engineer	1 „		—
„ garden and farm	4 „		14 girls
„ cook	2 „		—
	27 boys

They are brought up in this way in the institution, and when they are discharged they know some useful vocation in which they can be employed in private service. “The daily average number of children in the Asylum, exclusive of the forty-one apprentices, has been 805.” I believe that the question arose and was discussed at the Board as to the limit to be put upon the number of children to be received, and that we determined that the maximum number should never exceed 1,000.

7649. You have room in the institution then for 1,000 children? I think we have, because we got additional accommodation when a separate house was built for the superintendent.

7650. Mr. Metcalfe.] Are you aware that two children sleep in one bed? I believe they do in some cases.

7651. How did that come to pass? I do not see any objection to it among these young children at all. I know that it is the opinion of the manager that the younger children are better in that way. They require a sort of society they do not find for the comparative solitude of sleeping singly—though there is a large number in the same ward.

7652. President.] How many children could be taken care of in one Asylum? Of course that depends entirely on the number of buildings. I think that you could have 1,000 together, but not more than that. There would be economy in extending the number up to 1,000, because the same matron and superintendent, and secretary, and surgeon, and so on, and a great deal of the expense would be saved by increasing the number in that way.

7653. The superintendent of the Randwick institution reckons the cost per head of the children at £14 8s. 5d.? I see that the expenses per head per annum were not so much in 1871 as they were last year. Things have grown dearer since 1871. This average is made upon the entire cost for maintenance, clothing, tuition, repairs, and improvements, as well as for all other incidental charges detailed in the treasurer's statement during the year, amounting in all to the sum of £11,263 12s. 6d. There was a sum of £284 4s. 8d. paid by parents and guardians when visiting children at the institution.

7654. Do the children there seem to be very happy? Yes, it gives me pleasure to visit that institution, for more cheerful or merry faces I never saw. I hate to go to an institution and see the children looking unhappy, but I have never seen the slightest symptom of it there, but on the contrary, they all seem to be most happy.

7655. They do not lose their individuality there? Very little of it. They seem to be very happy indeed; they cluster round you and laugh and talk, and do not seem to be at all impressed with awe at the presence of anybody. That I like very much. It is a good sign with regard to the management of the place.

7656. The manager says that many of the children are taken first to the Benevolent Asylum and are then drafted to Randwick? That is so—the portion supported by the Government; but we get a great number of children who do not come through the Government at all.

7657. Sent from the Benevolent Asylum? No, they do not come through there at all; they are sent in from the streets, or admitted on the application of subscribers and others, if found to come within the rules of the Society. When a man becomes dissolute and drunken, and deserts his wife and family, and rushes away to the diggings or elsewhere, the children are generally brought to the Randwick institution.

The Hon. E. D. Thomson, C.B., M.L.C.
19 Sept., 1873.

7658. You believe the management of this institution to be good? Yes, as far as it has come under my notice. I think that there is great kindness and consideration shown to the children, and they are nicely brought up as a general rule. Of course I speak with few opportunities of seeing the minute details of the management, but I have had reason to be pleased with the management whenever I have visited the institution.

7659. I think you said that children younger than thirteen years of age could not be taught trades? I think not, in apprenticeship. I see no objection to their being taught trades in the institution as at present, so far as they are capable at that tender age of learning them.

7660. Have you ever been on board the "Vernon" to see the boys there? No, I have never been.

7661. They showed us clothes on board the "Vernon" which had been made by a boy only nine years old? Yes. The boys make shoes at thirteen—they are employed long before that. For instance, you will see at page 14 of the Report for 1871—"Your directors revert with much satisfaction to the very important subject of industrial training, which annually demands increased attention." That is a point on which I have insisted myself. "The elder boys continue to be employed in all the various occupations connected with the institution. The general distribution of their daily work may be noted as follows:—Engaged on the farm—twenty boys; in the garden twelve; on trial in shoemaking and tailoring, exclusive of the apprentices to those trades, thirteen; engaged in the engineer's department, two; engaged in household duties in the early part of each day and proceeding to the school immediately their work is finished, twenty-five; total number of boys thus daily employed, seventy-two." These are the boys only. "The farm has afforded a continual supply of good fresh vegetables, the liberal use of which has probably conduced to the health of the children. Nearly twenty-nine tons of vegetables have been raised, and upwards of sixty tons of green food for the cows. Another important item of farm produce is the supply of 34,212 quarts of milk. The boot and shoe-making department has steadily progressed during the year; 1,963 pairs of boots and shoes have been made, and 5,940 pairs repaired by the boys apprenticed to that particular trade, for the use of the inmates of the Asylum. 439 pairs have been sold to the following institutions, viz., the Sydney Infirmary, the Asylum for the Aged and Infirm, the Sydney Female Refuge, and the Institution for the Deaf and Dumb and the Blind." So you see that these boys are kept well at work and very beneficially so, for making them useful members of society when they have finished their apprenticeship in the institution.

7662. Do you know whether the Board has any reason against the schools in the institution being examined by the Inspectors under the Council of Education? No, I am not aware. I never heard the question mooted.

7663. Do you know that they are not? It is not a point that has come under my special notice.

7664. Do you not think it would be desirable, for the sake of uniformity, that these schools should be so inspected? Yes, I am quite of that opinion. We should be happy to avail ourselves of the services of competent teachers from the Council of Education for a purpose of that kind. I think that there is a good deal of attention paid to the examination of the boys and girls, but there cannot be the least objection to the inspection of the schools by the Council. I think, on the contrary, it would be a satisfaction to the managers of the institution, as well as to the public at large, if there was an examination into the efficiency of teaching the children.

7665. Is there anything you wish to suggest yourself? I think I have told you as much as I know about the matter. If there is anything particular beyond what I have already said, I will add it.

Robert C. Walker, Esq., called in and examined:—

R. C. Walker, Esq.
19 Sept., 1873.

7666. President.] I believe that you were at one time the Inspector of Charities when that office was first created? Yes; I was the first Inspector of Charities appointed under the Act. I took office in April, 1868, and I retained it until September, 1869.

7667. At that time did you visit institutions of your own discretion, or did you only do so when called upon to visit them by the Government? I received general instructions to visit the Benevolent Institutions about Sydney and the Sydney district, but in all other instances I received special instructions from the Colonial Secretary.

7668. Mr. Metcalfe.] Did you visit the Sydney institutions periodically? Yes; I visited the Sydney Infirmary, the Benevolent Asylum, the Randwick Asylum, the Asylum where the old women are kept at Hyde Park. St. Vincent's Hospital was not included in these. For visiting all those institutions out of Sydney, with the exception of the Benevolent Asylum at Liverpool, and the Benevolent Asylum at Parramatta, and the Protestant and Roman Catholic Orphan Schools, I received special instructions.

7669. President.] To what points in the management of these institutions did you direct your examination? In every instance in which I went under the direction of the Colonial Secretary, I made a separate report to the Colonial Secretary, not to be laid before Parliament.

7670. I understand you to say that you held the office for a very short time and were new to the work,—that you hardly feel in a position to offer any positive testimony about these places? Yes.

7671. Mr. Cowper.] You wrote some long reports about the Industrial School for Girls? Yes, I have held several inquiries.

7672. Mr. Goold.] You say that you have held several inquiries? Yes.

7673. At Biloela? No, at Newcastle.

7674. What led to them? It was owing to an outbreak of the girls.

7675. Mr. Cowper.] What was the cause of that outbreak originally? In the first place, I believe that it was bad management. It was upon my report, I believe, that the matron was removed and a fresh appointment made; but I think that the main cause of it rested with the Magistrates, as the class of girls sent there were unfit to be sent to an Industrial School.

7676. President.] You allude to the elder girls—to the prostitute girls? Yes. It was simply absurd to send such girls there to be mixed up with the younger children. It was impossible to make an Industrial School of it so long as those girls remained there.

7677. Mr. Cowper.] Did you believe in the possibility of reforming those girls? Yes, but not in the manner in which they were associated together.

7678. But if arrangements were made for separating them? Yes, I made a report to that effect, and arrangements were made for separating the elder girls. They incite the small ones to do the same things that they do. R. C. Walker,
Esq.

7679. Mr. Goold.] Who was the superintendent at that time when you made the inquiry? The school was under the management of a matron, Mrs. King. She was succeeded by Captain Clarke. 19 Sept., 1873.

7680. Mr. Metcalfe.] I thought the first superintendent was Captain Jackson? Yes, but that was before my time. Captain Jackson was first appointed, and then Mrs. King succeeded him.

7681. Mr. Cowper.] How often did you visit these institutions during the year—monthly or quarterly? At no specified periods.

7682. How often did you visit them? I should think about once a month on an average.

7683. Mr. Metcalfe.] Did you ever go as far as Bathurst? Yes.

7684. Mudgee? No; I had a special case to report upon at Bathurst. There was a Destitute Children's Asylum, or rather School of Industry there, under the care of the Roman Catholic Bishop; he wished it brought under the Industrial Schools Act. The question was raised several times, and I was sent up to examine the place and make my report to the Colonial Secretary; and I did make a report.

7685. Mr. Cowper.] What was the nature of the report? Well, it was not favourable to the opening of the place.

7686. Why? I stated the reasons in the report. I can hardly state the contents of the report now, but the place did not seem to me in a sufficiently substantial condition to warrant the Government in granting the license that was asked.

7687. President.] Do you mean that the accommodation was not sufficient? No, it was not. The place was only a small dilapidated cottage, furnished in a rude way. Certainly the arguments used by the Bishop were good. He had got up the school, and the girls were trained there in the same way as that in which they would be accustomed to live as bush servants; but that did not appear to me to come within the requirements of the Act; and as it was connected with a Roman Catholic institution up there, it did not appear to me to be an independent institution of itself, and under these circumstances I did not recommend the Colonial Secretary to bring it under the Act.

7688. Mr. Cowper.] Did you ever write any reports on the Infirmary and on its management? I wrote a report, but simply a visiting report, for these reasons—that I did not wish to comment on the proceedings of those who were so much more experienced than myself until I had gained a more general knowledge of the management of these institutions, and the Colonial Secretary permitted me to refrain from expressing strong opinions in my first reports.

7689. There was no particular matter on which you were asked to report? There was an inquiry on one occasion.

7690. Mr. Metcalfe.] About the nurses? There was a charge made by Captain Mein, of the "Vernon," I think. I happened to be on board the "Vernon," inspecting it, when two boys were sent on board from the Infirmary, and Captain Mein drew my attention to them. They were in a beastly state with vermin.

7691. They were received on board the ship? Yes, they came on board while I was there, and the captain called my attention to them. I believe that I reported this to the Colonial Secretary, and the lady superintendent was asked to report upon the matter, and she denied, I believe, that the children were in that state; but upon further inquiry she said that the thing had been caused by carelessness on the part of the nurses, which she admitted. The nurse got a caution from the Board on the subject.

7692. Mr. Cowper.] Was the vermin in their clothes? In the children's heads.

7693. Are there no important reports that you wrote upon any of these institutions that we can refer to? I do not think that there are any reports that would help you in the matter. They are simply reports upon complaints made. I was called upon to inquire, with the present Inspector of Charities and the doctor of the Asylum at Port Macquarie, into a complaint as to the manner in which the inmates of that Asylum had been fed; but the charge was very frivolous—the case was not so bad as the inmates made out.

7694. President.] Did you go to Port Macquarie? Yes, I did.

7695. There is ample accommodation there, is there not? Yes.

7696. Mr. Metcalfe.] What is the state of the buildings? They were in very good condition when I was there.

7697. Mr. Cowper.] What do they consist of? It is a square block of buildings—they form a square; they were built for the military barracks, and one side is bounded by the waters of the bay.

7698. Mr. Goold.] How can these buildings be utilized, do you think? I do not think that they are used at all now.

7699. But can they not be applied to any use? Oh, yes. It would have done very well for what it was, but I believe the management got worse. We censured the manager then, but, as he was under the control of the medical officer, he did not seem to have neglected his duty to the extent stated. There was a good deal of feeling against the man for some reason; but afterwards he did neglect the institution very much—so much so that the Government found it necessary to remove it to some nearer place. It was too far away.

7700. Mr. Metcalfe.] Was there any other reason? No.

7701. How many people would the buildings contain? From 180 to 200.

7702. Mr. Cowper.] Do you know that provisions cost much more up there? No, not a great deal more.

7703. Do you not know that prices are higher there? There was a little difference, but not much—some things were cheaper. The difficulty was in getting vegetables.

7704. Mr. Goold.] Was there no land connected with the place? No; they rented a small paddock for a garden.

7705. Mr. Metcalfe.] I suppose there is plenty of land there? There is plenty of land about Port Macquarie, but not belonging to the Government, near the building.

WEDNESDAY, 24 SEPTEMBER, 1873.

Members Present:—

WILLIAM CHARLES WINDEYER, Esq., PRESIDENT.

SAMUEL GOOLD, Esq.

MICHAEL METCALFE, Esq.

CHARLES COWPER, JUN., Esq.

Mrs. Alice Ann Goodlet, Secretary, Ladies' Committee, Sydney Female Refuge, called in and examined:—

Mrs. A. A.
Goodlet.

24 Sept., 1873.

7706. President.] I believe that you are the Secretary to the Ladies' Committee of the Protestant Female Refuge? Yes.

7707. How long have you been acting in that capacity? Since 1859.

7708. Since the opening of the institution? Oh no; the institution was opened many years before that—it was opened in 1849.

7709. This Commission has been appointed to inquire into the Public Charities of the Colony, and amongst others our attention has been directed to the Industrial School at Biloela, where we found a considerable number of juvenile prostitutes, and the suggestion has been made to the Commission that it might be possible to make some arrangement whereby this class of girls could be received into the two Refuges, and we would wish to know whether it is possible to make any arrangement for these girls at the Protestant Female Refuge? I should think not, because it would be breaking faith with the subscribers. It would alter the character of the institution altogether and make it an Industrial School. We get subscriptions from the public for a certain object.

7710. But the only girls we wish to know whether you would receive are girls of exactly the same class as those whom you are endeavouring to reclaim, except that they are younger. The object of the Government in sending these girls to the Industrial School is simply to reclaim them, which is the object which you have in view? Yes, to reclaim them and train them up to be domestic servants.

7711. That is your object? Yes.

7712. That is all that is done with the girls at Biloela—they are not taught anything beyond the ordinary routine of house-work? We have no laws to compel them to remain in the institution; when they desire to leave it they can do so.

7713. We understand that your institution is for penitents who go there voluntarily? Yes.

7714. We wish to know whether, if power was given you to restrain these girls and keep them there, it would be possible, in your opinion, for your institution to deal with them? I am afraid not. Of course I do not know what power could be given, but certainly not under the present regulations.

7715. Mr. Couper.] The difficulty now is that persons are admitted of their own accord into the Refuge, and the girls sent to the Industrial School are sent there by law, and that possibly the girls who went in there of their own accord would object to be mixed up with those sent in by law? I believe that they really would, because they all say, "This is not a gaol; we are not compelled to remain here—we remain here only as long as we choose."

7716. You think that they would look upon it as a disgrace? Yes.

7717. President.] I thought your objection to the scheme was that it would be breaking faith with the subscribers? Yes, that is an objection too, for they give us money with the understanding that the money should be devoted on this plan.

7718. Of course this thing can only be done with your consent—there can be no breach of faith—the whole thing proceeds on the assumption that you are consenting parties? Yes, but that is really the case, and I really feel that.

7719. It must be understood distinctly that the Industrial School does not bear the character of a prison; the object is not to punish, but to reclaim; it is no more a prison than the school at Randwick is? I know that the impression abroad amongst these women is that it is a sort of prison. There was a girl brought into the place by her mother—whom I have been interested in for some years—a girl who was between thirteen and fourteen years old. She distinctly said that she did not want to go to the other institution, and when I put the question to her "If you do not come in here, you will be taken up by the police and you will be sent to Biloela," she said "I would rather stay here, because I know that I can leave it at any time, and I do not feel that I should be in a prison here."

7720. But there would be nothing to prevent your having voluntary penitents coming in and leaving the place as they do now; you need not change the whole character of the institution—the only question would be whether you could take these children under your wing now if there were authority given you to restrain them? Of course I have not thought enough about the matter. It was only brought under my notice a few days past, and I am afraid that we could not do it. It has not been brought before the committee, and of course it is the gentlemen who would decide the question—the ladies do not interfere; but I feel that the gentlemen would never take that responsibility on themselves, and I think that I may answer for the majority of the committee that they would be opposed to it.

7721. Mr. Metcalfe.] But it would be a kind way to take care of these girls? Yes, but you see we have twenty-eight in at present—a greater number than have been in for some time—and if we were to send them out to take others in we should be doing injustice. Those girls were admitted upon certain conditions.

7722. But you would never be asked to send any one out? But we have no power to retain them if they desire to go out. They would leave of themselves.

7723. You keep them for a certain period? Yes, for twelve months we have them.

7724. President.] We do not propose that you should turn any girls out? The mere fact of taking these girls in would drive the others out. They would feel that we had broken faith with them, although the conditions might be exactly the same.7725. Mr. Couper.] Though you might be successful in dealing with the younger girls sent in, you would not be successful with those who are already in? No.

7726. And it might deter others from going in? Yes, I am afraid so.

7727. President.] You have some girls there who were at Biloela? I am not quite sure that we have any at present, but we have had two. I am not aware at the present time.

7728. Mr. Metcalfe.] Suppose that the Government establishment were broken up to-morrow, you would not reject these girls then? No, we should not, but they would come in quite differently in that case—they would come of themselves.

7729. Mr. Couper.] There is no fear of their doing that. The generality of these girls would go out as soon as ever they had the chance; they are so young—they have got no sense—they have not sown their wild oats; and you want an institution where they can be taken to at first and kept for some time, and then sent away up the country? We have had some of them.

7730. But as a rule, these very young girls will not go into the institution? No.

Mrs. A. A.
Goodlet.

24 Sept., 1873.

Mr. William Wailes, accountant, Destitute Children's Asylum, Randwick, called in and examined:—

7731. President.] I believe that you are the accountant of the Destitute Children's Asylum? Yes.

7732. What books do you keep? I keep the account-books, the cash-book, and the subscription-book, as well as the journal and ledger, besides a variety of subsidiary books.

7733. Do you keep the books with reference to the store? No, they are kept in the institution.

7734. What do you keep an account of? Of the whole expenditure and receipts of the institution.

7735. I suppose that is not your sole business? Yes, that is my business.

7736. Mr. Metcalfe.] You have no other appointment? No, except something which I do in the evening.

7737. President.] You do not work for any other institutions of a similar character? No.

7738. What salary do you receive? £200.

7739. You keep your books at some office in town? Yes; Vickery's Chambers.

7740. Does the institution rent an office there? Yes.

7741. Simply for that purpose? Yes.

7742. Do the Board meet there? Sub-committees occasionally meet there.

7743. What rent do they pay? £40 a year; a great many people come there to pay their subscriptions.

7744. There is an account attached to the annual report of the institution, and one has also been furnished to this Commission, showing the average cost per head of maintaining these children? I made out the balance-sheet that is in the report.

7745. Mr. Metcalfe.] Have you seen these accounts (Appendix handed to witness)? No, these were not made out by me.

7746. Mr. Goold.] This is the account you made out then (Balance-sheet for 1872 handed to witness)? Yes, this was made up from the books.

7747. President.] Does that contain any item for materials or for work done? You mean in the shape of building materials?

7748. Any materials worked up into articles of clothing in the establishment and then shown afterwards anywhere in that form? The materials for the children's clothing are all charged for in the account.

7749. But there is a quantity of things made for other institutions—for the deaf and dumb, for instance? Nothing except boots and shoes.

7750. Is that shown anywhere? No, it is simply credited; the amount received for boots and shoes made for the deaf and dumb is credited to the account in the ledger for clothing. Supposing that there were £600 expended for clothing, if £20 worth of boots and shoes were sold, it would be placed to the credit in that account: the account would be so much less.

7751. Mr. Metcalfe.] Your account does not show what is earned by the children? It does not.

7752. The superintendent has sent us an account which says that the cost per head of the children is £14 8s. 5d. per year? Yes.

7753. It appears to us that it is a great deal more than that? May I ask how?

7754. President.] Do you agree that the amount is only £14 a head? Yes, I do.

7755. Will you kindly tell us how you make that out—we cannot arrive at that amount? That is the cost per head, taking the average number of children.

7756. Do you not think that it would be better that some account was kept in the report of what was received from the children's clothes, so that they might be credited with everything they make? I do not think so. If it was made a receipt it would add to the expenses of the institution; it would of course increase the cost per head in that way.

7757. But they would have credit for their work? Yes, but it would increase the cost of the institution—not really, but in appearance.

7758. But it would be a fairer statement of the case, because now it is said that this institution is to some extent self-supporting, and yet on looking at the accounts no one would see that there was a single shilling earned by the children? It would be seen in the report.

7759. But most people would look into the accounts and expect to see it there? Of course the amount for boots and shoes is not considerable, and they are the only goods that are sold.

7760. In these accounts that Mr. May has sent in, there are £7,972 calculated for certain work done by the children? That is to produce all these things.

7761. That does not appear in your account? No, it does not.

7762. Is not the account then faulty? No, that as contained in the balance-sheet is the actual expenditure of the institution to a penny. These items of what the children have earned do not go to the credit of these accounts. If they did, they would have to go on the other side as a charge, and the figures would come out the same. If you charge it on one side, you must take credit for it on the other.

7763. I think that it should appear, otherwise no one would imagine that there was a single penny earned—they might imagine that the clothing and feeding of the children only cost that? They have cost the institution only that. Of course the children have made the institution partially self-supporting.

7764. I think all that should be shown in the accounts? The figures will show that the cost per head of the children is what has been stated.

7765. I do not think so? Here is the actual expenditure—over £11,000; and if you take the number of children in the institution, you will see that the cost per head is about £14. Of course I have nothing to do with these matters of work done in the place.

7766. There is a difference in the amount of the salaries stated in the two accounts? Perhaps that would be accounted for by the fact that the salaries of the tailors and seamstresses, and so on, would be charged here.

Wailes.

here in the clothing account. At the end of the year their salaries are charged to whatever account they belong to. For instance, there is a carpenter, and his wages are charged to repairs and improvements account.

7767. These accounts sent in by Mr. May, on being analyzed by the Secretary to the Commission, give a cost of £24 10s. per head? Of course if you take into account what the children make, it increases the expenditure materially; but still the actual outlay is £14 a head—the actual cost is that. The children have certainly earned something in the shape of making things.

7768. And that has been deducted from these expenses? No. Of course they have been fed and clothed. This is the actual amount of cash expended on these things.

7769. Without taking their labour into account in any shape? No, there is no credit given for that.

7770. Well, it is a great misfortune that it is not here to show that the institution is self-supporting, instead of showing as it does that food and clothing are cheap? If it were shown, it would go forth that the cost per head was much larger than it is now.

7771. President.] But if other institutions keep their accounts in this way, and so make their annual expenditure appear greater, is it fair to compare the Randwick Destitute Children's Asylum with them and say that it is a much cheaper institution? I have seen some other institution accounts, and they do not seem to take credit for these things. It might become a question whether a charge should not be made for rent on the money invested in the buildings in the same way. This that is stated in this balance-sheet is certainly the actual cost of the institution, and that gives £14 8s. 5d. as the cost per head.

7772. Mr. Metcalfe.] It is quite clear that literally the balance-sheet is correct, but still the earnings of the children should be credited? I will vouch for the accounts being correct. I think we have the best system of book-keeping that has been devised.

MONDAY, 29 SEPTEMBER, 1873.

Members Present:—

WILLIAM CHARLES WINDEYER, Esq., PRESIDENT.

SAMUEL GOOLD, Esq.

MICHAEL METCALFE, Esq.

CHARLES COWPER, JUN., Esq.

Richard Wynne, Esq., Member of the Board, Randwick Destitute Children's Asylum, called in and examined at his own request:—

R. Wynne,
Esq.

29 Sept., 1873.

7773. President.] You have been summoned, in accordance with your own request, as we understand from a communication received from you that you wish to make some statement to the Commission? Yes.

7774. You are one of the directors of the Randwick Destitute Children's Asylum? Yes. It is not very much that I have got to say—merely to assert my opinion with respect to the practice which now exists of admitting clergymen upon the committee of management of the institution, which practice since I have been a director I have found to be very injurious, as I think, to the working of the establishment; in fact, I may say that it makes the place just an arena for the sectarian bickerings of the clergy.

7775. I suppose you think that it would be very desirable to extend this principle of the exclusion of clergymen from the management of all public institutions which are managed by Boards? I certainly, from my experience in the Randwick institution, think that the principle should be applied to all institutions. In the first place, the clergymen are not men of business; they are no doubt large-hearted, good men, but they have very little business tact.

7776. In point of fact, their kindness of disposition makes them liable to be imposed upon? That is it; it quite unfits them for dealing with cases that come before the Board. I know from all I can hear since I have been a director of the Randwick institution, that there have been several children admitted there—I will not say hundreds, but a great many—who should not have been admitted. We can easily account for this: they are admitted by these clergymen, who from their large-heartedness are easily imposed upon by people who come to them and make a good story.

7777. Is it your opinion that there are children in the Randwick institution whose parents are able to support them? I cannot point to any particular case, so that I had better not make an assertion, but from general information I think that such has been the case—that several children have been admitted there who should not have been admitted into the institution.

7778. Mr. Metcalfe.] You believe that to be the case? I will point out one case that came under my notice a little while ago, and perhaps the fact of that person applying to get her children admitted into the Asylum will lead you to believe that there is a general impression abroad that the Randwick institution is a proper place to put children in, and that to do so is not in the least degrading. Some time ago there was a widow—the widow of a gentleman leaving a considerable amount of valuable property—applied.

7779. President.] What for? To have three of her grandchildren admitted into the institution. This old lady's husband had died, and her grandchildren by the child of a former husband were thrown on her through the drunkenness of the mother of the children and the incapacity of the husband. She wished to be relieved of them, and applied for their admission to the Asylum. I knew the family, and knew that they were in good circumstances; that they had a great deal of land which was exceedingly valuable; that there were stations in the family and a good deal of city property, and when the application came up I said that I objected to the application until an investigation had been made; and I was appointed for that purpose. I went to the Supreme Court, and found that this woman had been left at the rate of £300 a year. She was an old person, and I came to the conclusion she was able to support her grandchildren.

7781. President.] Do you happen to know from your acquaintance with the place if only children are received there when one parent is living? I do not know; I think there has been an exception; that rule has has seldom been departed from, and it has been an exceptional case, if any. I do not remember any instance in which the rule has been departed from.

R. Wynne,
Esq.

7782. Mr. Metcalfe.] Then Randwick is not a place for orphans, but for neglected children? Yes, destitute and neglected children.

29 Sept., 1873.

7784. President.] Do you not think that the large number of which this governing body is composed—I believe that if they all attended the meetings there would be some seventy—do you not think that very large number tends to useless discussion? Scarcely half that number ever attend the monthly meetings which are held at the Infirmary Board-room. I agree with you; the smaller the number the less opportunity for useless discussion.

7785. Mr. Metcalfe.] You think that the real management of the place rests with the house committee? Pretty well with the house committee. There have been some instances in which the Board have complained of the house committee having so much control. They have in some cases objected to the house committee returning thanks to people who have sent charitable donations in the shape of fruit or different things of that sort. I think that it occurred in a case in which we gave the children a picnic some time ago, and Mr. Heselton gave a steamboat for the conveyance of the children without charge. Some of the Board objected to the house committee returning thanks for that.

7786. President.] What is the number of the house committee? Somewhere about twelve.

7787. How often do they meet? Every week.

7788. Is there any other suggestion that you would like to make? No, I do not think so. The only thing I had to complain of was the obstruction of the business by the clerical element upon the committee, for I find that it tends rather to obstruct and to create difficulties which would otherwise not exist. My opinion is that the clergymen go there just to manufacture material for these two party papers—the Freeman's Journal and the Protestant Standard. Those are papers which I do not read, but I have heard that they suck in all that they hear about these institutions: and such conduct prevents men of liberal minds from subscribing to institutions where party feeling runs so high.

7789. Do you think that the publication of the proceedings in the papers has any good effect? I do not think it has at all.

7790. Mr. Metcalfe.] Except that they bring the institution into contempt? Except bringing those into contempt who do not carry on the business properly. I will give you an incident in the case of the boy Eastwood. There was that Eastwood case of which I dare say you heard, where a boy was hired out to a master as an apprentice, and the boy said—"I am not a Roman Catholic: I am a Protestant." Well, Mr. May is a conscientious, clever man, and he said—"What do you mean,—you have always been a Roman Catholic here." "Yes," the boy replied "but I am a Protestant—I was reared a Protestant before I came to the Asylum, and I would sooner go to a Protestant master." We saw the necessity of investigating the case, and the thing was gone into.* Some time afterwards, our collector, Mr. Coulter, whom we send up the country, (we were under the impression that these people in the country should subscribe who receive the advantages of the labour of the institution—so we sent this collector through the country), and he succeeded very well at Goulburn, and then he went to Bathurst. He wished to see Bishop Quinn, but he was not there, but there was a Rev. Mr. McAuliffe—I think it was—who saw Mr. Coulter. Mr. Coulter said—"Well, I have come to see the Bishop, and I want him to give me a subscription towards the Randwick Institution." Mr. McAuliffe said—"You need not come here looking for subscriptions: I mean to give it out from the pulpit, and you will not get any subscriptions from our people at all." Mr. Coulter can verify this, and I think it will be well to have it verified, and it just shows you the ill effect of having the affairs of the institution published—it tends to prevent subscriptions coming in as well as they otherwise would do.

7791. President.] Ignorant people are apt to judge of the whole body from the intemperate observations of one or two? Exactly.

7792. Is there anything else you wish to add? No, I think not.

Mr. Samuel Watson, superintendent, Institution for the Deaf and Dumb and the Blind, called in and examined:—

7793. President.] I believe you are the Superintendent of the Asylum for the Deaf and Dumb and the Blind? Yes.

Mr. S.
Watson.

7794. How long have you held that office? You mean in Sydney?

7795. Yes? Three years next November.

29 Sept., 1873.

7796. What salary do you receive? £200 a year.

7797. You occupied, I believe, a similar position or were engaged in an institution for the Deaf and Dumb and the Blind, in England? At Belfast, in the north of Ireland.

7798. How long were you engaged in that work in the Old Country? For nine years.

7799. What are your duties in the institution? The chief duty is teaching the children, but it is not limited to that only. There is the general supervision, and, I may say, constant attendance there.

7800. The teaching of the children includes the teaching of the blind the use of the embossed type? We have a teacher of the blind.

7801. Besides yourself? Yes. I was engaged to do both, but the numbers have increased so that assistance was needed.

7802. How many officers have you altogether under you? There is the blind teacher and the deaf and dumb assistant also—one of our old pupils.

7803. What salaries do they receive? The teacher of the blind receives £60 a year, and the deaf and dumb girl receives £1 a month or £12 a year.

* NOTE (on revision):—What follows is only hearsay, and I think it would be well to have it verified by Mr. Coulter.

- Mr. S. Watson.
29 Sept., 1873.
7804. Is the deaf and dumb teacher deaf and dumb herself? Yes, and the blind teacher is blind.
7805. The teacher of the blind is blind himself? Yes.
7806. Is that usual? It was not customary in the institution that I was in at Home.
7807. Did this teacher come from any Home institution, or was he educated here? He came from Melbourne.
7808. From the Melbourne institution? Yes. He had taught in the institution there for some time.
7809. But was he taught there? No. He received part of his education in London.
7810. Mr. Metcalfe.] Is he quite blind? Yes.
7811. President.] And is he competent, in your opinion? Oh yes; but a blind person, of course, cannot give that variety of reading and general information which another person could do. The blind children, of course, are limited to the use of the embossed type. We supply that want as far as we can by reading to the children in the evening, and thus giving them the variety that is needed.
7812. What are the teachers' duties? Just simply to teach the children—the blind children—during school hours.
7813. The reading of the embossed type? Yes.
7814. Mr. Metcalfe.] What is his salary? £60 a year.
7815. President.] Then is it no part of your duty to instruct these children? I have not to undertake it just now, having so many deaf and dumb children to teach.
7816. You devote yourself to them? Yes.
7817. What other officers are there? The matron and her assistant, and the servant.
7818. Those are all the officers and servants? Yes, those are all.
7819. What is the servant you refer to—the cook? Well, she is just a general servant, cook and laundress, and generally helping with the girls.
7820. Do you know what the average cost per head of each child was last year? Does that mean inclusive of the entire expense?
7821. Yes? It is pretty high; about £30 a year. In a small institution the average expense must always be large, as the number of pupils is small.
7822. Are you satisfied with the accommodation that you have in that building? Oh yes.
7823. What is the routine of the daily duties of the children? They rise in the morning at 6 o'clock; breakfast about 8; go into school at 10, or a quarter to 10 in the summer-time; then there is an intermission from half-past 12 until 2 for dinner and a little recreation; and they are in school again from 2 until after 4. Then in the evening there is evening school—a voluntary after tea. However, there is not any specified time for it. It is rather an exercise,—and as the children are there and doing nothing, it is better and pleasanter to employ them in some way.
7824. How do you employ them? As the deaf and dumb are not able to read the ordinary books, where language is difficult or diffuse, we generally tell them—the news, for instance, as far as it is interesting to them—or little tales, so as to open their minds and give them the information which other children have. Being deaf they are shut off from these things, and they need this in order to familiarize them with what other people are interested in.
7825. At what time do they go to bed? The younger children about 8 o'clock, and the elder ones about 9 generally.
7826. What religious teaching have the children? The first hour in the morning is generally occupied with religious teaching—always occupied with religious teaching—and the school is opened and closed with prayer. But indeed, in all institutions that I have ever seen, religious teaching must be given to the children more or less in the school, for a deaf and dumb child cannot have any opportunity of getting it after he leaves the institution, and hence the necessity of attending to it during the few years that we have them with us.
7827. Of what character is the religious teaching—are you acquainted with the Public School system of the Colony? Not very much.
7828. Having lived in Ireland, are you acquainted with the Irish National system? Pretty well.
7829. I want to know how far the religious teaching which you give these children is of a general character, or whether it is doctrinal? Of a general character.
7830. Mr. Metcalfe.] There is no Roman Catholic teaching there? No.
7831. That is not allowed—the institution is supposed to be Protestant? It is for all classes.
7832. Unsectarian? Yes.
7833. For no particular denomination at all? No. It is of such a general character that it is not intended to interfere with the religious scruples of the parents of the children.
7834. There is no dogmatic teaching? No.
7835. Mr. Cowper.] Are the officers all Protestants? The blind teacher is a Hebrew, and the rest are all Protestants.
7836. Who teaches the Roman Catholic children their prayers? They are not taught any special prayers.
7837. President.] You teach them the Lord's Prayer simply? Yes.
7838. Mr. Cowper.] You speak of teaching them religion? Yes.
7839. And you have said that it is important to teach them religion and to give them a notion of religious subjects while they are at school, because it is the only teaching they will receive through life: how do you teach them the principles of religion? They are all taught upon the same system—they are taught a general outline of Scripture history.
7840. President.] Such as would be taught under the Irish National system? Pretty much the same. We familiarize them with the teaching of the Bible and with the teachings of Scripture history. It is impossible to enter into disputed questions, as their minds are after all only partially opened.
7841. Mr. Gould.] Do you teach them to read the Scriptures as a whole? Yes.
7842. Mr. Cowper.] Do you teach them any prayer except the Lord's Prayer? No, no regular form of prayer except with the children who are very young. We must begin with very short prayers. The first prayer of a deaf mute must be only three or four words. They cannot comprehend anything more difficult, but by degrees they are able to use and to understand more lengthened prayers; but there is no established form of prayer.
7843. Mr. Metcalfe.] When the school is opened is there no prayer read? Yes, it is I who begin with prayer, but there is no regular printed form that we continue by unless it is the Lord's Prayer. There is a chapter always read at prayers, and that may suggest some thought appropriate for supplication.

Mr. S.
Watson.

7844. It is at the discretion of yourself? Yes.

7845. President.] How do these children compare intellectually with children suffering from the same kind of misfortune in the Old Country that you have come in contact with? I think that they are pretty much the same; possibly they are not quite so quick in their apprehension. That might be a feature not peculiar to the deaf and dumb of this Country only: it may apply as well to children who have all their faculties and who are possibly less quick of perception than the children at Home.

7846. Do they do any of the work of the institution? Almost the entire work.

7847. What becomes of the children—how long are they kept in the institution? Six years is the appointed time, but the committee never send them off at that time if the parents wish to have them longer in the institution; but as a rule, the friends seeing them able to write and pretty well forward, and not fully comprehending what they really do know, take them home and give them trades or make them useful about their own houses.

7848. Do they find occupations? Yes, nearly all.

7849. That is the deaf and dumb? Yes.

7850. What trades do they take to? Shoemaking, tailoring, printing, carpentering, and so on. The next boy to leave will be a cabinet-maker.

7851. To what age do you keep them? This boy will be fourteen by the time that he leaves, and another boy, who will leave about Christmas, will be seventeen years of age.

7852. What is he going to? He will be a shoemaker, I think.

7853. How is admission to the Asylum obtained? By application simply to the committee, and they give a printed form to be filled up.

7854. Is the order of a subscriber necessary? No, I think not. No one is refused if the child has mental faculties for learning, or if it is free from infectious disease.

7855. Do the parents contribute anything towards the support of the children? Yes; they are always expected to contribute as far as their means will permit; some contribute the full sum, and others again smaller amounts.

7856. What is the full payment considered to be? £25 a year for board and education.

7857. Mr. Metcalfe.] Does the institution find the children's clothes? No. In some cases where the friends of the children are willing to supply it, it is always expected that they will do so as far as they can. Some who live far away are not much inclined to assist if they can get out of it.

7858. President.] Have you any children there of well-to-do people? Yes, we have four or five who are very well off, and a good many from the middle classes.

7859. And do these people pay for their children as they should do? Yes.

7860. And there are some who are entirely clothed by their friends? Yes.

7861. People who are simply taking the advantage which the institution gives them of having their children instructed under their natural disadvantages? Yes.

7862. You do not think then that the charity of the institution is abused by people who might pay? Well, no, I do not think it is. There are some people who might possibly give a little more, but I do not think that the parents are anxious to impose on the institution at all.

7863. You do not think that the children are got in there under the pretence of their being genuine cases of charity while the parents can afford to pay for them? I do not think so at all; they seem always to be very affectionate and anxious for the children's welfare, and usually they will try to assist as far as in their power.

7864. Do the parents come to see them often? Yes, generally they do, but some of the children are from Queensland and Tasmania, and it is impossible for their friends to come and see them.

7865. I suppose that the blind do not do any work about the place? No, they do not do anything scarcely, except that our supply of water is pumped, and the blind children are expected to do that.

7866. In the institutions of this kind in the Old Country are there any modes of utilizing the labour of the children so as to make the institution at all self-supporting? In connection with the Belfast institution—in the early history of it—they tried to introduce trades among the boys, but they found that it was better to give it up and apprentice the boys to parties outside. They felt more independent, and made the school entirely for educational purposes.

7867. How many children were there in that institution? 130. Thirty blind, and 100 deaf and dumb.

7868. Does the number of the deaf and dumb always exceed the number of the blind? I do not know that the proportion is greater among the entire population, but the means of training the blind at home and teaching them is so much greater that very often they are kept at home and taught; but the parents of deaf and dumb children find themselves unable to open their minds in any way, and hence they feel the necessity for sending them to some school.

7869. Then the blind who go out from the institution do not find employment here? No, our committee are very anxious about that question just now.

7870. Is not basket-making an employment to which the blind sometimes take? Yes, and the making of mats from the cocoa-nut fibre.

7871. Mr. Metcalfe.] And tuning pianos? Yes, that is an excellent trade for them. In Edinburgh I saw an institution where the adult blind were taught these trades. They go in as day workers, and they went home to their own families in the evening. We found that work better. It was better in principle. They were more independent. It was found that accumulating them together resulted in a less independent feeling or in some dissatisfaction, owing to the collection of so many hopelessly afflicted ones.

7872. President.] You say that the committee are endeavouring to find employment for the blind? Yes. We have one blind boy ready to leave, and we have been trying to get some one to teach him basket-making or anything to earn a living. The greatest difficulty will be at the beginning—to get some one to start the thing; many people fear that the blind boy will be more difficult to teach than he really is.

7873. Mr. Cowper.] Do you not think that he should be taught in the institution? That is a matter of opinion; my own opinion is that it is not desirable to teach many trades within the institution.

7874. Why? I always consider it better to give the children a good education—to put them in the way of being independent rather—and then let them out to learn these trades themselves, where they would be among their friends and have the stimulus of competition with others of their own age and like themselves. After six or seven years in the usual school term boys like some variety and change, and they would much prefer learning a trade outside than in the institution; and it would be better for them too, I think.

Mr. S.
Watson.

7875. But is there not a great deal of time in the institution that they could occupy in learning these things without being prevented from going on with their studies? Well, no; at present the time of the children is nearly fully occupied. Certainly the school hours do not occupy the whole day, but every boy has an allotted duty to do in the way of cleaning the house and attending to one thing and another about the place. This occupies his time fully, and the little ones are quite unable to do anything. I speak regarding the elder ones, who are strong and fit to learn anything.

7876. It would almost require a special establishment to teach these children trades after they leave the institution? In the Belfast institution, where I was trained, we had a printing press, and it was found to work very well indeed: the report was printed, and all the bills and circulars; and those boys who had a taste for printing were put in the way of learning the trade. They generally went out to printing-places after they left—went as journeymen printers; but that was the only trade taught in the establishment.

7877. Mr. Metcalfe.] That seems to be a very good trade to teach them? Yes, it is a very good trade.

7878. President.] Do you see any objection to that trade being introduced into the institution? No, none whatever. In Belfast one of our old pupils taught the others.

7879. Mr. Metcalfe.] The blind children could learn that? I am afraid not—the ordinary types are very small—though there are blind persons who act as printers too. I am afraid that it is hardly practicable.

7880. Mr. Cowper.] Do you think that any one in business would be able to teach a blind boy his trade easily? Do you mean the blind children?

7881. Yes. Could they be taught boot-making, or basket-making, or any of these trades? Yes, I think it would be easy to teach them. This boy who is going to leave is anxious to do his best, and my opinion is that he would work very well and be able to assist his employer materially.

7882. Mr. Metcalfe.] Did we see the boy there? No, you did not see this boy—this blind boy.

7883. I thought you meant the one that was to be a printer? Yes, he will be a good boy I am sure.

7884. Mr. Cowper.] How can that boy learn a trade out of the establishment? It would be a difficult thing I am sure in the beginning with him, because he is deaf and dumb; but you can talk to a blind person and tell him what to do—what to take up first and what he must do—so that the difficulty of his learning a trade is not so great as people imagine.

7885. Mr. Metcalfe.] All the faculties that they have are sharper than those faculties are in persons who are not blind? Yes, their whole attention is devoted to the subject on hand—there is nothing to divert it as in the case of seeing children.

7886. Mr. Gould.] Do you think that a blind person can learn shoemaking? Yes; this boy had a wish to learn because he had seen a blind shoemaker.

7887. Mr. Cowper.] How could he see him if he was blind? I am using the word which the blind generally adopt; it is the word that they always use themselves. They always speak of seeing things.

7888. President.] Have you any suggestion to make for the improvement of the institution? Well, no, I do not think so. In my position, however, suggestions would, I am afraid, be hardly appropriate.

7889. I do not see why they should not be—because you know more about the place than any one else? Of course you know what my position is, and that the institution is managed by a committee, and they are the parties who make such proposals and who control and direct.

7890. I ask you for suggestions more with regard to the practical working of the establishment—suggestions derived from your experience of such institutions in the Mother Country? No, I do not think that I have any to make. The chief object is the education of the children, so as to put them in the way of future usefulness, and that I think is carried out here about as well as it is in any place that I have ever seen before.

7891. How many boys are there in the place? There are twenty-one deaf and dumb boys and there are five blind boys.

7892. Mr. Metcalfe.] Twenty-six altogether? Yes.

7893. President.] And the girls? There are twenty-one deaf and dumb girls.

7894. The same number as the boys? Yes, and there are seven blind girls.

7895. Mr. Metcalfe.] Then there are a little more than fifty altogether? Yes, there are fifty-five in all.

7896. President.] What is the diet in the school? This is the scale of diet. (Diet scale handed in. See Appendix T.)

Mrs. Eliza Jane Ashton, matron, Institution for the Deaf and Dumb and the Blind, called in and examined:—

Mrs. E. J.
Ashton.
29 Sept., 1873.

7897. President.] You are the matron of the Institution for the Deaf and Dumb and the Blind? Yes.

7898. How long have you been so? Five years last May.

7899. What salary do you receive? £70.

7900. Were you engaged in any similar institution before? I was for a few months at Randwick as seamstress.

7901. But in any institution for the deaf and dumb or the blind? Oh no.

7902. How far have you made yourself acquainted with the system of communication with these people? I can converse with them so as to make them understand me.

7903. Can you read the embossed writing? No, not for the blind.

7904. What are your duties? The general supervision of the establishment.

7905. The domestic economy, I suppose? Yes.

7906. Then are you responsible directly to the Board of Management, or are you responsible to Mr. Watson? To the Board of Management.

7907. Mr. Watson has no authority over you? No.

7908. What do your duties consist of? I superintend and look after the servants and the housekeeping, and I have to see that the institution is kept clean.

7909. And look after the clothes of the children? Yes, and mustering the children for school and so on—seeing that they go in proper time; and assisting in the needlework.

7910. Are the clothes of the children made in the institution? Some few. The parents are expected to provide for them as far as they are able, but there are some few who are not able to do so. The material for the clothes of these is purchased and made up in the institution for the boys and girls.

7911. Mr. Metcalfe.] There is no uniform in the institution? No.

7912. President.] The work of making up these materials is done by the deaf and dumb children? Yes, with the assistance of Miss Tookey and myself. I have an assistant.

7913. Is there any difficulty in teaching deaf and dumb children the use of the needle? Not at all; they are very ready to learn sewing.

7914. Do they take an interest in work of that sort? Yes, a very great interest in all kinds of work; they are very ready.

7915. Do you find any difficulty in keeping them in order and controlling them? No, I never found much trouble with them. With kind treatment you can do a good deal with these children, but if you treat them harshly they are very stubborn.

7916. I suppose that you reside in the institution? Yes.

7917. Are you a widow? Yes.

7918. Is there anything that you wish to suggest, and that would tend, in your opinion, to the improvement of the institution? We require bedding; but the ladies' committee have spoken of that.

7919. Mr. Metcalfe.] What are the beds made of now? Fibre; we are very ill off for bedding, and the ladies' committee have expressed the same opinion.

7920. What else do you require particularly? The place is not very well furnished—we are not well off in the way of furniture.

7921. In the schoolroom? We want more in the house generally.

7922. The bedrooms do not require more? No.

7923. The schoolroom is well furnished? Yes.

7924. And these are the only rooms used by the inmates? Yes.

7925. Then I suppose it is the quarters of the matron that require more furniture? Yes, we require a few more chairs for our accommodation.]*

7926. President.] Have you a diet list with you? Yes, I have it here; and also a time-table. (Witness handed in diet list and time-table. See Appendix T 1.)

7927. Mr. Goold.] Is there any distinction made with the children of the institution? As regards what?

7928. Their position—any difference made between the children of persons who are well able to pay for them and clothe them, and the children of others? They are all treated alike.

7929. President.] You have nothing to do with the teaching department, I suppose? No, only on Sundays, when I take the blind on alternate afternoons and give them religious instruction.†

7930. Do you know what the religion is of all the children in the place? They are mostly Protestants, but there are some few Roman Catholics.

7931. Does any one come to give the blind any religious instruction besides what is given them by the officers of the institution? No.

7932. Not ministers of religion? No one. Our clergyman, Mr. Taylor, calls occasionally.

7933. What denomination does he belong to? Church of England; he prepared three or four boys for confirmation last year.

7934. Then is the religious instruction which you give of a general character, such as is given in the Public Schools? Yes, it is just like the ordinary Sunday Schools.

7935. Mr. Metcalfe.] Do the blind children seem to understand these matters? Oh yes, very readily.

7936. President.] Do they ever go to any religious services? Yes, they go to church once in the morning.

7937. All who are in the institution? Yes, those who are able to go; of course there are some too little.

7938. Mr. Metcalfe.] And all the parents who can afford it pay something towards the maintenance of their children? Yes.

7939. President.] Do they come and see them sometimes? Oh yes, frequently.

WEDNESDAY, 1 OCTOBER, 1873.

Members Present:—

WILLIAM CHARLES WINDEYER, Esq., PRESIDENT.

SAMUEL GOOLD, Esq.

MICHAEL METCALFE, Esq.

CHARLES COWPER, JUN., Esq.

Mrs. Jane Briscoe called in and examined at her own request:—

7940. President.] You have been summoned here to give evidence in accordance with your own request? Yes; made in compliance with an advertisement that I saw in the papers.

7941. We shall be happy to hear any evidence that you desire to give to the Commission upon any subject? I am ready to answer any questions that you like to put to me.

7942. Are you acquainted with any of the Charitable Institutions of the Colony? I have been engaged in one in Melbourne for three years under the Board of Education, and also performing matron's duty.

7943. What institution were you connected with? The Home Industrial School, worked on Industrial School principles prior to the passing of the Industrial Schools Act.

7944. Where is that institution situated? At the Immigrants' Home, Melbourne.

7945. Is it in operation now? No; the institutions created under the Industrial Schools Act absorbed that school.

7946. Where were its operations carried on afterwards? At Sunbury.

7947. How long were you in the institution? Nearly three years.

7948. How many children were in it? 170 when we commenced, and 350 when we left.

7949. Children of both sexes? Yes.

* NOTE (on revision):—With regard to the questions and answers within the brackets, it may be noted that since 29th September, the requisite furniture has been supplied, also that the absence of it was throughout the establishment—not in the officers' quarters only, as appears from my replies. Indeed, the furniture of the officers' rooms, instead of being scanty, is all I would desire.

† NOTE (on revision):—On the alternate Sundays Miss Tookey teaches the blind children.

Mrs. E. J. Ashton.

29 Sept., 1873.

Mrs. J. Briscoe.

1 Oct., 1873.

Mrs. J. Briscoe. 7950. What was your position in the school? Head female teacher under the Board of Education, and matron of the children's department.

7951. What class of children was received there? Neglected children.

7952. How did they get into the institution? They had to be charged as vagrants, and then they were admitted precisely the same as those who were sent to the Industrial Schools under the Industrial Schools Act.

7953. I thought you said that this was before the passing of the Industrial Schools Act? Yes, it was prior to that; the institution formed the nucleus of the Industrial Schools of Victoria, and the two Acts are similar.

7954. Then there was an Act in force then empowering Magistrates to send children to this school? Yes; because we received the children not only from Melbourne, but from the whole of the surrounding districts.

7955. What were the ages of the children? They were from infants up to an age when we could get them out.

7956. What age was that? Fourteen years old, or I may say fifteen. We had some even older than that—some sixteen and seventeen; but those were exceptional cases—they generally ran from infants up to fifteen.

7957. They were not committed to this school for any time? Our city missionaries brought us juvenile prostitutes.

7958. How many of that class had you? They were not separately placed.

7959. About how many had you? I suppose about thirty.

7960. And do I understand you to say that they were not isolated from the rest of the children? No, they were not isolated. We had no Act to enable us to isolate them then.

7961. Did they sleep in the same dormitories as the other children? Yes, but they never slept unwatched.

7962. Was there some teacher always with them? Always; a wardswoman slept in every ward.

7963. Did you find any difficulty in managing girls of that class? No.

7964. They were not more troublesome than the others? No, they fell into rule very soon.

7965. Had you any disorders or outbreaks or riotous conduct there, such as we have had here? No. We have had children run away—"bolters" as they were generally termed,—but we had no outbreaks calling for any assistance—in fact no outbreaks at all—nothing but perhaps a romp in one of the wards at night—simply child's play.

7966. Mr. Metcalfe.] You had not any prostitutes of fifteen or sixteen years of age? Only two who were very troublesome; but they were not there in sufficient numbers to cause any outbreak such as they have here.

7967. President.] When you say that the school was carried on upon the industrial principle, what do you mean? The boys were taught shoemaking, tailoring, carpentering, and so on; and so many were let out to work for Dr. Mueller.

7968. In the Botanic Gardens? Yes, in what is known as the reserve for the new Government House. They worked there. There were so many boys in the garden, so many girls in the laundry, so many in the sewing class, and then of course the infants were kept in the infant school. I had an infant school mistress, and Mr. Briscoe had an assistant master, a drawing and music master.

7969. Mr. Metcalfe.] Drawing master? Yes, and the drawing lessons were productive of good. The children learned free-hand drawing and architectural drawing, and the singing was the greatest blessing in the place, for it amused them and kept them out of mischief.

7971. And they did the ordinary work of the institution in the day-time? Yes, and they did the mending at night—those who neglected to do it were of course reported the next morning. The bigger boys—the tailoring boys—had to mend also.

7972. Mr. Metcalfe.] What was the consequence of a boy or girl being reported? A mild punishment. You must have some punishment—prohibition from play hours, or a lesson or something of that kind.

7973. You did not whip them with the cane? Never, if it could be possibly avoided. We were never without a cane, but still we hardly ever used it.

7974. President.] Who inflicted corporal punishment when it became necessary? I did.

7975. You only? In my department amongst the girls, but it was seldom resorted to. Occasionally one of the elder ones would set you at defiance.

7976. Was the institution self-supporting? To a great extent it was. We made all that the children wore in the place, except their hats and the shoes for the smaller children—those we could not make. Then we had a double advantage which you do not possess. Our institution was combined with another. Say a man deserted his wife and family and left them destitute, we took in the whole family, and took the mother in with them, and made her labour useful.

7977. How many women did you take in in that way? About eighty.

7978. What men were there there? Many persons—it was a sort of refuge where people went in for a short time. There are always people incapable of doing hard work, and those were the men we took in, and men who had abused their positions through drink.

7979. Mr. Metcalfe.] They went into this institution? No.

7980. Not into the same building? No; into a building which stood on the same ground, but which had no connection with our building whatever.

7981. President.] Was it under the same management? No; I had nothing whatever to do with it, because there was a 10-foot dividing fence between.

7982. Mr. Metcalfe.] And yet it was all one institution? Yes.

7983. President.] I do not understand you to say that there was any labour remunerative to the institution? No, we had no possibility of doing that.

7984. Mr. Couper.] Did they all make their own boots? Yes; that is the bigger boys.

7985. Mr. Metcalfe.] At what age did they begin to do that? The boys went to the tailor younger than they did to the shoemaker.

7986. How young? Eleven or twelve.

Mrs. J.
Briscoe.
1 Oct., 1873.

7987. And did they not do any work of that kind before they were eleven years of age? No; but they did the cleaning and scrubbing and the attending, and so on.

7988. But in the way of making clothes? Yes, only the little girls; the girls from the time that they were eight years old left the infant school and came to my room—which was not the schoolroom but the workroom—where I had to lay out the plain work, and where I kept them working.

7989. You think that eleven years of age is time enough for them to begin? Yes, because they are children of neglected education, and they must have a certain amount of schooling; and then the boys that are working go into half-time school, and the girls too.

7990. President.] How do you carry that out—work in the morning and school in the afternoon, or vice versa? On alternate days.

7991. Were they the whole day out of school and the whole day in? It depended whether the girls were in the laundry or not. If they were, it was better to leave them the whole day in the laundry; but if not, they were taken into the school for part of the day.

7992. Had the institution any power to apprentice the children out of it? Yes.

7993. How long were they apprenticed? We did not apprentice them for any time. They were put out, and they were taken back again if they were not suitable. They were not bound. Sometimes they did well, and sometimes they came back.

7994. Mr. Metcalfe.] But if the master wished them to be apprenticed to him? If he wished it, it was done; but there was no necessity to bind them if both parties were satisfied.

7995. But they did remain in a place at the same nominal wages for any length of time? We expected good wages for them.

7996. What would be good wages for a boy who was sent out to a shoemaker? I know of three lads who went out, and who had been for a short time in the workshop, and they received 4s. a week each and their board, and a suit of clothes to commence with.

7997. From the master? Yes.

7998. When they began? Yes, and those boys remained well and did well. Some girls did not remain, and some girls did.

7999. But was this money paid by the master to the boys, or was it paid to the institution, and did the institution hand it to the boys? It was paid to the institution, and the institution handed it over to the boys. This was done as a sort of check upon the boys wasting it or the master evading payment, and the provision was found to be very salutary. That was a wish of mine, and I had it carried out. When the money was paid to the children themselves they used to squander it.

8000. That plan was adopted both with the girls and the boys? Yes.

8001. Their wages were paid every week? Every month.

8002. What wages did they get? According to their capacity. If I had a girl in my own house and made her useful, she received better wages when she went out than the others would.

8003. Were you long enough there to know what became of those who started in life for themselves? In some instances I did. One girl remained eight years in one service, so that she must have been a good girl. There are others that we had just as much trouble with and whom we had to take back.

8004. Have you visited any of the institutions in this city? I have seen all of them.

8005. Will you give us your opinion as to their efficiency? I had rather not do that.

8006. We shall be glad to know what you think of the management of them? I had rather not say. I find great fault with the building at Randwick—it is a most inconvenient place.

8007. In what way is it inconvenient—they do not think it is? In the first place the children have to come down right from the top to the bottom of the house for their baths, which is not calculated to maintain order and discipline. If they come down before they are dressed they do not come down as they should do, and if they come down dressed they have to undress and dress again in the bath-room, which causes a great waste of time. All those children should bathe every day all the year round. There are too many children there, and I think it would be better to have a smaller institution, because when there are such large numbers together it is not so easy to classify them and to select the different methods of improving them, as might be done if there were not so many.

8008. You cannot find out a child's disposition and capabilities? Not nearly so well; and unless you can do that you cannot do anything with them.

8009. What do you think is the largest number to have in a school?—What class of school?

8010. Such a school as that at Randwick? I think that 300 would be quite enough, because 300 could be classified in four divisions,—the head boys and girls, the second and third classes of boys and girls, and the infants.

8011. Mr. Metcalfe.] Do you know of any similar schools in England? In England they have a thousand. You cannot compare those schools with these that we have here. I know the working of the Redhill School as well as possible. There they have trained teachers—people to whom the working of the school is as easy as possible—people who have had long training and experience. That is why their staff of teachers is so far superior to what we have here.

8012. President.] Do you know anything of Redhill personally? Yes, and I know the Rev. Sidney Turner, Inspector of Industrial Schools in England, personally.

8013. Do you personally know anything of the working of the institution? I have been through every portion of it.

8014. You were not engaged there? No, but I was the personal friend of Mr. Turner there, and my father was a subscriber to that and to the Blind School.

8015. Why do you not think that an institution of that size could be worked in this Country? Simply from the want of proper persons to carry out the discipline.

8016. Mr. Gould.] If you got the proper teachers then it could be carried out? Yes, but you would want the whole staff.

8017. But proper teachers could manage an institution in the same way here as there? Yes, but then it would be an injustice to some.

8018. To whom? I consider that it was an injustice to amalgamate the schools in Melbourne, and I consider that it would be an injustice to take the girls from Biloela and mix them with the children at Randwick.

8019. Why? Because their training ought to be totally dissimilar.

- Mrs. J. Briscoe.
8020. President.] But that only applies to girls of the prostitute class? That is all; but then you know there is little difference in many cases between them and neglected children; they very often become vicious themselves from seeing vice in others—they are habituated to it.
8021. Mr. Couper.] That is an argument against putting little children with prostitutes at all? That is exactly what I say. I said that it was an injustice to the children to do so, but you know that we could not help it, because there were a great number of city arabs brought in to us, as there was no other place to put them in, and we had to take them.
8022. President.] Did you say that you had often been at Red Hill? No, not often, but I have been there before it assumed its present form. It was called the Philanthropic Society. It was formed 100 years ago to educate the children of convicts, and it has sprung up from what I first remember it to what it now is. I suppose there were not more than sixty boys and forty girls in it at first, and they used to do rope-work, make boots and shoes, and basket-work of all kinds. A number of trades were taught there and the children were educated besides; and when Mr. Sidney Turner went there the ground was not large enough, and the Red Hill was purchased to carry out the scheme.
8023. What system of religious instruction was there in this institution in Melbourne? Protestant and Catholic. The assistant master was a Catholic and taught the Catholics, who were told off to their own room. There was Catholic Sunday-school and Protestant Sunday-school, and they all went to their own churches.
8024. I suppose in all matters of secular education they were brought up together? Of course they were.
8025. They were only separated for religious teaching? Nothing else; they did not allow of any interference of religious matters in secular hours under the Victorian Board.
8026. Is there anything you wish to add to your evidence yourself. Of course coming here and not knowing exactly the matters on which you could give us information, we shall be glad to hear anything that you have to say? I do not think of anything more; only I would be glad to see a better system of education carried on. I would like to see the children made more useful than they are. I have seen them sent out at Randwick and they are very useless. That is the consequence of their having so many together—the work is in such large masses.
8027. How many trades did you teach them in Melbourne? I cannot say.
8028. Say there were so many children in the institution, what proportion of them were taught trades? I cannot say. The infants increased. I had thirty babies in the nursery; the bigger boys and girls went out, and we got a large number of the small ones in, and it altered the face of things. I cannot say how many were taught trades; I think that there were about sixty boys at work, and there were ninety girls employed scrubbing, washing, and cleaning.
8029. What was the cost per head? £17 14s.
8030. Did they take credit for the work that the children did? Yes; the average cost of working the institution was £17 14s. per head, but when the Industrial Schools Act was passed it increased to £26.
8031. Why? Because they were worked with a more expensive staff.
8032. But it was the same school? Yes. They took it to Sunbury. There was a great rise in the price of provisions and material for clothing, and that made a great deal of difference; of course everything was bought by contract.
8033. Of course the clothes being made by the children diminished the cost per head? Of course.
8034. Was the value of the clothes given in the accounts? No. I think the cost of the raw material only was counted as expenses; that is, I expect, how our expenses came to £17 14s. per head. It was a very low average.
8035. Had every child a separate bed with you? No, the small ones slept two in a bed.
8036. Did you approve of that? In the case of sisters—little children—we were obliged to do it.
8037. Did they not kick each other? No; we had good wide beds.
8038. Did you see those at Randwick? I do not recollect particularly—we had 4-foot beds.
8039. You did that with all the children, both boys and girls? When we were very full we were obliged to,—we did not do it except when we were compelled; it was not choice, and the bigger boys all had separate beds. Then our boys were all taught music; some of them formed a portion of the head quarters band, and were well paid for it.
8040. Did the money which they received for that go into their own pockets? No, to the institution, and they were found a uniform.
8041. Were they all taught music? No, sixty boys were taught. They were a drum and fife band, and were well paid for going out.
8042. Had the other children a uniform? Yes, they had a uniform dress.
8043. Did they all go to churches? Yes, except the smallest children, and so many wardsmen and women took turn and turn about to go.
8044. What kind of rations were given to the children there? Bread and tea, with milk and sugar, for breakfast—
8045. Any butter or treacle? No. Then, for dinner, boiled or roast meat.
8046. Alternately? Yes. Boiled or roast meat, potatoes, and, when obtainable, a second vegetable for dinner; and rice and milk and sugar for tea.
8047. You had no puddings at dinner-time? No; I established that, on Friday, as there were so many Catholics, we should give them all pudding on that day, and it was more satisfactory.
8048. You gave them rice and milk for tea? Yes. It was their supper. The bigger boys who worked out had meat, and the girls had bread and tea. That was an improvement on the rice. The bigger boys required it, as the rice was not sufficient for them.
8049. President.] Did any children go there except those who were sent in under the authority of the law? Yes.
8050. It was for people in necessitous circumstances? Yes, we took children in that way, and we took troublesome children. I took two boys in—two lads whose parents could do nothing with them, and one of them is holding a good position in one of the banks.
8051. Did the parents pay for the children? Yes.
8052. How much? 8s. a week.
8053. That was to cover the expenses? Yes. Of course we could not charge much less than that.
Another

Another thing—if a widower wished to put his children in there for security—a working man—if he did not pay, he was brought up very sharply.

8054. Mr. Metcalfe.] Then they were entitled to take their children there? Yes.

8055. Mr. Cowper.] Who admitted them? The committee, under Mr. Sturt's order.

8056. Were the committee appointed by the Government? No. It was a Relief Society—originating in Melbourne in the great outbreak—after the first outbreak of the diggings.

8057. It was a private institution? Yes. We received our first appointment from the office-bearers—but then we were subject to the Inspector of Public Schools, who visited us very regularly.

8058. President.] Did you find that the charity of the institution was at all abused by people getting in there who had no right to get in? We soon stopped that by compelling them to pay. I do not think that there was anything sufficiently attractive about the place to cause people to put their children in there, for though the children were kindly treated, it was still a Charity.

8059. Mr. Cowper.] But a great many people do not mind putting their children into a Charity, if they can get rid of them by doing so? That is the very object of making them pay for them. Had they not been compelled to pay for them, they might have been able to get them in for nothing, but we had always a detective employed to hunt up evidence against parties.

8060. President.] One of the officers of the police placed at the disposal of the committee? Yes; and he holds the appointment under the Industrial Schools Act—he has the same post still.

8061. He did nothing else but inquire into these cases? No, he did nothing else but hunt up evidence about the parties who sent their children there, and saw that the payments were kept up. He used to act for Yarra Bend at the same time, because a great many people neglected to pay.

8062. Mr. Goold.] Did you say that the Orphan Schools paid the expenses of this inspector? No. At that time they found that it was not necessary, but since then the Industrial Schools have taken a person entirely to themselves.

8064. Mr. Metcalfe.] You have no appointment here? No, there has been no vacancy since I have been here. I have always sought an appointment of the kind, but I have never sought any interest in the matter. Of course we have our testimonials from Melbourne, which will bear out what I have stated. (Documents produced.) Here is a testimonial from Mr. Orlebar, the chief inspector of the Board, and the secretary of the Board, and Mr. Kane.

8065. President.] Are these gentlemen in office now? Mr. Kane is dead and Mr. Orlebar is dead, but they are gentlemen whose names stand well on record there. There is also a testimonial from Mr. Sturt, which is in his own handwriting, when that gentleman was a member of the Royal Commission of Inquiry into the Public Charities of Victoria.

THURSDAY, 6 NOVEMBER, 1873.

Members Present:—

WILLIAM CHARLES WINDEYER, ESQ., PRESIDENT.

SAMUEL GOOLD, Esq., | MICHAEL METCALFE, Esq.,
CHARLES COWPER, JUNR., Esq.

George F. Wise, Esq., honorary secretary, Randwick Destitute Children's Asylum, called in and examined at his own request:—

G. F. Wise,
Esq.

8066. President.] You are the secretary to the Randwick Asylum for Destitute Children? Yes, I am the honorary secretary.

6 Nov., 1873.

8067. How long have you been in that position? I have been honorary secretary since January 1872.

8068. Were you connected with the institution before that? I was honorary treasurer for four and a half years previously, and was elected a director in January 1866.

8069. Since 1866, then, you have been constantly associated with the Asylum? Yes.

8070. I believe that you have been deputed by the committee of the Asylum to attend here and give evidence? I have, by a resolution of the committee, been requested to ask to be examined.

8071. Are there any particular points, before we ask you any questions, upon which you desire to make any statement? No, I am merely here to answer questions.

8072. Then there are no particular points that you wish to bring under our observation, as deputed by the committee? That may depend upon the result of your questions. I can scarcely answer that now.

8073. With reference to the committee managing the Asylum, have you formed any opinion as to whether it is desirable to have so large a governing body? We have gone on very well at Randwick.

8074. In what way do you think that you have gone on well? There have not been too many directors present at the meetings: it is the managing committee I am speaking of.

8075. Do you think that a Board of Directors that comprises seventy-two members—a Board as large as our Parliament itself—is well adapted for governing an institution of that sort? How many?

8076. Some seventy members? But that is not the governing body in fact—the governing body is the house committee, which consists of twelve members exclusive of the treasurer and secretary.

8077. The governing body, I suppose, is a body that can ultimately determine how the institution is to be managed, is it not? As a matter of fact the chief management is in the hands of the house committee, which is composed of twelve members with the treasurer and the secretary, and they report their proceedings to the Board of directors for their approval or otherwise.

8078. As a matter of fact, is not the Board of Directors the governing body? Yes.

8079. And does it not amount to some seventy in number of members? No. The Board of management consists of twenty-three directors. Life directors are permitted also to vote on the Board as life directors, but as a matter of fact they never have. There are about forty of them.

8080. Then, do I understand you to say that Mr. E. Deas Thomson, the President of the institution, wrongly informed us, when he said that the governing body of the Asylum was as numerous as the Parliament of the

G. F. Wise, Esq.
6 Nov., 1873.

the Country? The Board of management consists of a president, two vice-presidents, a treasurer, and secretary, twenty-three directors chosen at the annual meeting, and such life directors who have qualified themselves by large donations or otherwise; but as a matter of fact, such life directors scarcely ever attend.

8081. But, as a matter of fact, there are some forty life directors who have the right to attend? Yes.

8082. Then Mr. E. Deas Thomson is not wrong in comparing the size of the governing body to the Parliament of the Country; is he so or is he not—I want to know as a matter of fact? Independently of the Board there are thirty-two or thirty-four life directors—some of them living in England—who if they were present would have a right to attend the meetings of the Board.

8083. How many are there living in England? Living out of the Colony?

8084. How many are there living out of the Colony? Living out of Sydney and the Colony?

8085. Well, how many are there living out of Sydney and the Colony? About a dozen out of the thirty-four.

8086. Then, as a matter of fact, there are some twenty-seven gentlemen in the Colony who, if they did their duty and exercised their powers by attending at the Board meetings, would make the number of the governing body up to some sixty? As a matter of fact, there are twenty-two life directors residing in Sydney who would have the privilege of attending at the Board.*

8087. Answer my question if you please: does it not come to that? It is not their duty to attend, but they have the privilege of attending.

8088. They have the power of attending? Yes, the privilege.

8089. The power? The power—yes; but it is not their duty to attend.

8090. That depends on the view they take of it; if they are invested with the power of seeing this place is managed properly, they may exercise this power for which the people consider them responsible? Because a man has given a hundred pounds—

8091. Answer the question. Is it not so: having that power, people may choose to consider them responsible, and they may think it their duty to exercise that power? That is a matter of opinion.

8092. You think that the Board then is not at all too large? I consider that the Board consists only of the directors chosen at the annual meeting.

8093. Whatever you may consider it to consist of, do you consider that it is too large? As a matter of fact, the managing committee is not too large.

8094. Then if Mr. Deas Thomson has given his opinion that it is too large, you differ from him? I differ from him.

8095. Do you think that the presence of clergymen on the Board is desirable? Are you speaking of any particular clergymen or of all denominations?

8096. I ask you the simple question whether it is desirable to have clergymen on the Board? I do not think so; generally they are not men of business.

8097. In point of fact, have there not many squabbles arisen at the Board which might be traced to the presence of clergymen there in a great measure? Yes, these disputes are entirely owing to the clergymen wishing to carry out their own sectarian views; for instance, the dispute which occurred yesterday and reported in to-day's newspaper.

8098. With reference to the publication of these proceedings in the newspapers, do you think that the publication of proceedings of this sort is desirable at all? I did not think so originally. When the publication in the newspapers of our proceedings at the Board meetings was first proposed I opposed it; but since then I have seen reason to think that, with regard to the Randwick institution, it has been found to be of some service.

8099. In what way? By letting the public know and understand our proceedings. I have received letters from persons in the country who have been much interested in reading these reports.

8100. In what way has this interest been of benefit to the institution—that is the question? It may be curiosity satisfied, or that thereby the institution is more particularly brought under the notice of the public, and probably an increase in the number of subscribers may thus be obtained.

8101. Mr. Metcalfe.] Do you imagine that it induces people to subscribe? I think that it might or it might not. Any person who wishes to save his pocket immediately catches hold of something or other that he hears, and says that he will not subscribe because so-and-so is the case.

8102. President.] Do you not think, on the other hand, that well-judging people, who think that a Charity governed by persons among whom there is so much dissension cannot be well governed, where so much time is taken up in squabbles of the character that they see recorded in the papers, are likely to withhold their support from such an institution? Allow me to deny that the time is taken up in squabbling, for we do a vast deal of business.

8103. But people might form the opinion that all the time was wasted in squabbling? Yes.

8104. Mr. Cowper.] Do not some of the directors—the men of business—complain that they are detained and that their time is wasted by the squabbles of these clergymen? Yes, I have heard them say so.

8105. President.] Is it not the tendency of this state of things to drive away business men who do not wish to see time taken up in useless discussion? Undoubtedly it is.

8106. Your opinion is that the clergy should be excluded? I think that if clergymen were off the Board of Directors it would be much more to the interest of the institution—affairs would be conducted with more regard to matters of business and with less attention to mere religious squabbles.

8107. Do you think it is desirable that children should be kept in the institution until they have gone through the whole term of their apprenticeship, or do you not think that it is desirable that they should be apprenticed out with such education as they have when they are old enough to work? By the Act of Incorporation of 1857 we are not allowed to apprentice them until they are beyond twelve years of age.

8108. That is not an answer to my question. I wish to know whether you think it is desirable that children should be kept there as apprentices—there are some kept there as apprentices to the institution;—do you not think that you would pass more children through the institution if you apprenticed them out when they had learned the rudiments of a trade—if, instead of keeping them in there for five years, you allowed people to take them after twelve months of teaching? I think it was about 1864 that we first had children apprenticed in the institution for the usual term of six years. We have latterly thought it advisable that no boys should be apprenticed in the institution, and that those who are now there shall be transferred transferred from the institution to close up their term of apprenticeship elsewhere. That has been decided very recently. G. F. Wise, Esq.

8109. I understand then that you are going to adopt the system I have suggested—that is, to give these boys instruction in some trade, and then as soon as they have learned the rudiments of it to apprentice them out? If you will refer back to your previous question I will repeat what I have said. In 1864 we began to apprentice boys to the institution; and we have now thought it advisable that boys should not be apprenticed to the institution; so they are all gone or going away, and henceforth children under thirteen years of age will occupy the position which these apprentices occupy, and when they come to the proper age—between twelve and thirteen—they will be sent out as usual. 6 Nov., 1873.

8110. They will be apprenticed to the trades which they have been learning, as soon as anybody will take them? That does not always follow, because the boys may not wish it themselves.

8111. Mr. Metcalfe.] Then is it your intention to give up making clothes in the institution? No.

8112. Who will make them if you send away the apprentices; the apprentices have made them hitherto? The younger boys, under proper instruction.

8113. The boys and girls too? I am speaking of the boys. The boys will carry on the same duties which the apprentices have been carrying on, and will perform the same work, and will make the boots and shoes, up to thirteen years of age.

8114. Then you will be able without apprentices to make all the necessary clothes for the institution, by the aid of boys under thirteen years of age? Boots and shoes only will be made by the boys, and the rest of the clothes by the girls.

8115. Yes, but will they make clothes for them? Yes.

8116. The clothes will be made by the boys who are not apprentices? Yes, and by the girls. The girls are still apprenticed.

8117. We observe in the accounts of this institution that there is a sum put down of £2,340 4s. 9d. for the clothing of children? Quite right; including the outfits to apprentices on leaving the institution.

8118. Was that for clothes bought outside? No, we never buy clothes.

8119. Then how do you get at that sum? That is the raw material of the clothing.

8120. That £2,340 4s. 9d. then is only the cost of the raw material? Yes, with the cost of making the clothes.

8121. What expenses? Wages.

8122. Wages to whom? The seamstresses, for instance, and the tailor, and shoemaker, and so on. The raw material is given to these individuals, and the cost thereof is put down under the head of clothing in the ledger.

8123. Then what vouchers do the auditors see to enable them to arrive at that fact and certify that the clothes only cost this sum of money which I have named—what have they to establish that fact? The ledger. In the ledger under the head of clothing is carried the cost of all things purchased at the wholesale houses in Sydney.

8124. The material—the calico and so forth? Yes, in the first place; afterwards there is added to that—carried to the same folio—the wages paid to the seamstresses, to the tailor and shoemaker, and the vouchers for that are in the wages account.

8125. Then there is nothing charged in this sum for the labour of the children in any way whatever? Certainly not.

8126. And you make it out according to this account that the children cost £14 each? For that year 1872, £14 5s. 7½d. You see the cost of the institution was £11,354 1s. 2d.; and that divided by 795 children produces £14 5s. 7½d. as the cost per head.

8127. It struck me as curious in these accounts that there is no debit made for things bought at all; it is simply kept in some account of the stock in some way, but you only charge the institution with the expenditure of it; you have some stock? Of course.

8128. That does not appear in the accounts? Yes, it does. Here it is on the treasurer's balance sheet of receipts and expenditure: Value of stock, at cost price, £1,623 14s. 5d.

8129. Then this account contains the wages of the children? The wages of the masters and mistresses—not the children.

8130. The wages of the seamstresses, and the master tailor and master shoemaker, and so on? Nothing more.

8131. The allowance to the apprentices too? Yes.

8132. President.] Are you aware that the cost per head of maintaining the children in one of the Orphan Asylums at Parramatta—the Roman Catholic Orphan School—is considerably less than the cost per head of maintaining the children at Randwick, though the number of children in the Orphan School is considerably less than half the number in the Randwick Asylum? In the Protestant Asylum?

8133. No, in the Roman Catholic Orphan School? I am not able to answer the question, because neither the Protestant Orphan School nor the Roman Catholic Orphan School has ever to my knowledge published any accounts at all; but I certainly doubt very much the fact, for this reason, that the Government estimates for both institutions give somewhere about £13 2s. per head for the cost; but in addition to the Government estimate there is £1,000 put down by the Colonial Architect for each establishment for this present year—£1,000 for the year for repairs. Then there is no charge whatever made at either establishment for a doctor, because, although the doctor attends both places, his salary is paid from the medical vote; beyond all that, their clothing is supplied from the Government stores in Sydney, and the cost is not entered upon the Estimates at all. All kinds of clothing, boots and shoes, and stationery, and I believe crockery and furniture, is supplied from the Government stores. All that has to be added to the £13 2s. per head. But our account here includes every expense, even repairs and improvements to the buildings.

8134. Mr. Cowper.] But if we have a return showing that all these things are taken into account—that the medical attendance, and cost of clothing, and everything else is included—and that the expense per head of the children in the Roman Catholic Orphan School is a little more than £13: how do you explain that? My reply is that I doubt the correctness of the return, for the reasons I have given. I know that these Orphan Schools apply to the Government stores for all that they want, and that these stores are not included in the Government estimate.

8135. Mr. Metcalfe.] There are 308 children in the Roman Catholic Orphan School, and there are 795 in your

- G. F. Wise, Esq.
6 Nov., 1873.
- your institution, therefore the cost in your institution per head should be less, instead of being, as it is, much greater? Excuse me, but I doubt the fact.
8136. The amount expended in salaries at Randwick is considerably more than double what is expended in the Parramatta Orphan Schools—it is nearly 200 per cent. more? That is an assertion to which, in the absence of figures, I am not able to reply.
8137. You cannot account for it in any way whatever? I doubt the fact which is put before me, because of the Government annual Estimates—in which neither the stores nor the doctor are charged at all.
8138. Mr. Cowper.] But the doctor and stores are charged in this return: here the doctor's attendance is charged as £62 10s. per annum? That is not the Government annual Estimates.
8139. Mr. Metcalfe.] Here are the salaries at Randwick—they amount to £3,390 Gs.? Excuse me—I deny that.
8140. What items do you take exception to? The amount of the salaries is only £2,757 Os. 9d.
8141. Then without the seamstresses, tailors, and so on, the salaries of the officers amount to £2,797 7s. 6d.? Yes.
8142. Does it not strike you that the institution is over-officered; there are too many people to take charge of these children? At Randwick?
8143. Yes? I think not.
8144. Do you think it is fair that the State should be called upon to pay such a very large amount for the support of children of that description—that they should pay three-fourths of this very large expenditure? Three-fourths of what? I do not follow you.
8145. The total amount expended is about £15,000? Something over £11,000.
8146. Of which the Government give—what? £4,000.
8147. No, the public give only £2,000, and the Government give over £8,000? The public give more than £2,000.
8148. The institution gets in one year £8,000 from the Government, and the public give only £2,000? The public give a great deal more than that.
8149. There are, I see, a few special things which go to the account of the year? The public gave over £3,400 last year.
8150. But you carry a great part of that to a perpetual account? Yes.
8151. That money is not used in the working of the institution? Yes, the interest of it is.
8152. Well, leaving all that out of the question, the Government give £8,000 out of £11,000? The Government gave last year £8,183, and the public gave over £3,000.
8153. The public gave that, but it was not to be expended in that year—it was put to a perpetual account? Well, £300 of it.
8154. That money was derived from legacies and bequests, and so on? Only £300 was paid to the perpetual subscribers' fund.
8155. Do you not think that some economy should be practised in the management of this institution, when you consider who the children are, and the immense amount of money paid for their support? I think that it is very economically managed.
8156. What, with salaries alone amounting to over £3,000 a year? The cost is 9d. a day for each child.
8157. For salaries? For everything included.
8158. That is about 1d. less than it takes to maintain a man-of-war's man on board a Queen's ship. What kind of children are taken into this institution—do you admit orphans there, simply because they are orphans? We never admit orphans; they are not admissible—they are not eligible.
8159. Then you confine yourselves entirely to the original plan of the institution? Yes. Children are ineligible for admission who are admissible to either the Protestant or the Roman Catholic Orphan Schools.
8160. President.] What is the object of keeping up that distinction? It was most likely in the Act; and there may have been a good reason for it. The Society has been established for that purpose, and has been carried on always upon that principle.
8161. Mr. Metcalfe.] Do you not occasionally refuse to receive children that have anything the matter with them—any physical defect? Cripples?
8162. Yes? Certainly; for this reason,—that we are bound by the Act of Incorporation to apprentice children from the institution when they come to the age of about twelve years; and no subscriber would accept a cripple; and we cannot keep cripples at the institution.
8163. President.] We are told that when you take children from the Benevolent Asylum you reject those that have anything at all the matter with them? We reject those that are cripples, or those that are suffering from any particular disease, such as measles or scarlet fever, or for reasons which the doctor assigns. We receive an intimation from the Benevolent Asylum that they wish to get rid of a certain number of children. We should be quite willing to take them once a week or once a month, but we wait for the authorities of the Asylum to request us to take them. When they ask us to take them we always do so; that is to say, a committee from each institution attends, with the doctor of the Benevolent Asylum and the doctor of the Randwick Asylum, and the two medical officers examine the children, and the committee decline to receive cripples, or such persons as the doctor refuses to take, for such reasons as he may think fit to assign.
8164. If a child has some marks of having a scrofulous constitution, you reject that child? The committee do not interfere with the doctors.
8165. Then is the matter left entirely to the doctors? If the doctor were to pass a crippled child, the committee would refuse to take that child; and if the doctor says that a child is not fit to come into the institution, we should not ask him why—we should be satisfied with his decision.
8166. But your charter is very wide—children abandoned by their parents, or left without friends or protection—children the offspring of parents either or both of whom may, from profligate habits or conviction for felony, be unable to support and unfit to educate them, and who may voluntarily surrender them to the care of the Society. You cannot expect to get healthy children from such sources as these, and I imagined that you rejected no one, unless one that from an infectious disorder was dangerous to take in? I believe that would be the rule.
8167. Mr. Gould.] But people would infer from that clause that you would receive all the children that were brought to you? There is no compulsion. I know of children being refused because the doctor declined to certify as to their freedom from contagious disease, and we should decidedly refuse to receive a crippled child.

8168. President.] There is a child of thirteen or fourteen years of age in the Benevolent Asylum now, crippled in one foot, but perfectly healthy in every other respect—a child who has been refused time after time? It may be so. G. F. Wise,
Esq.

8169. Mr. Metcalfe.] Would not such a child be able to be put out? No subscriber would take a crippled child as an apprentice. 6 Nov., 1873.

8170. President.] Can you not apprentice them to any one but a subscriber? No individual would take such a child.

8171. Not a tailor or a shoemaker? No.

8172. Mr. Metcalfe.] Then what is to be the fate of a crippled child? That is a question which neither you nor I can answer.

8173. Are there not children in the Randwick institution who have parents in tolerably wealthy positions? Not that I am aware of—not one that I am aware of. Of course we should have no control over any of the relatives but the father or mother, if we happen to discover—which sometimes occurs—that the father or mother is in a better position than they were in when the child was put into the Asylum, as in a recent case which occurs to me. We were informed that a man whose child was in the institution had received a good legacy. He was summoned to appear before the committee, and was asked if he had received a legacy. He acknowledged that he had. “Well, take out your child, and pay us for it.” He said that he would not. We said—“Very well; unless you do so, and pay us £25 before the day after to-morrow, we shall sue you.” The accountant was sent to the man, and after some demur he paid the £25 and took his child out. When the child was first put in it was a genuine case of distress.

8174. It answered the description there of “neglected or abandoned children”? Yes.

8175. The charity of the institution has not been abused in any cases that you know of? Not one. The best institution may be abused in the way I have just described.

8176. But none of your children belong to people who are well off? Not that I know of. I may suspect one. There is one that just now occurs to my mind, that I had reason to suspect, and that was some time ago.

8178. This form then is signed by a clergyman and a Magistrate for every child which you admit? Yes.

8179. Mr. Metcalfe.] But if they are brought to you by the police, there can be no such certificate given? We have none brought to us by the police. Let me add a little more to my explanation, as to the mode of admission. The father or mother brings this admission paper filled up and signed by a clergyman or Magistrate, who states to the best of his belief that the replies are correct. The committee then examines the father or mother of the child with regard to the replies to the questions. Having determined that the child shall be admitted, the question is then put—by the Chairman, not by any member of the committee—“What religion do you wish this child to be brought up in?”—and whatever answer the father or mother makes to that question is recorded and taken as correct at once. The words—“What religion do you wish this child to be brought up in?” are put, and the answer is taken as conclusive. We have there the children of mixed marriages—children of Protestant fathers and Roman Catholic mothers, and vice versa; but the answer to the simple question—“What religion do you wish this child to be brought up in?”—is taken at once and not allowed to be altered.

8180. Mr. Goold.] When the police bring children to the institution, what course do you adopt? The police do not bring children to us—they take them to the Benevolent Asylum.

8181. Mr. Cowper.] But you say in your appeal to the public, which is printed in this report—that one of the objects of the institution is “to receive children found by the police, or others without protection, whose parents cannot be discovered, or whose parents have been convicted as vagrants, drunkards, or disorderly characters, unfit to have the care of their children, children abandoned by their parents and left without friends or protection. Children, either of whose parents is an abandoned or dissolute character, and who may be placed by the other parent in the proposed Asylum, on payment of a fixed sum for their maintenance. Do you not in this appeal state that as one of the objects of this institution? That appeal was written twenty-one years ago.

8182. But was it not published and sent forth to the world in 1873, as part of the report of 1872? The appeal alluded to was made in 1852.

8183. But was it not published in 1873 as part of the report of 1872? Yes, as being a copy of an appeal which was published in 1852.

8184. Was it not a copy of your appeal to the public in 1860, and attached to all your proceedings since? The appeal of 1852 is printed in conjunction with the annual Report of 1873.

8185. President.] Do you think that the public are influenced as to what you mean by your putting a date to it? Yes.

8186. Then because it was first published fourteen years ago, the public are to pay no attention to it: is that your argument? This appeal gives the origin of the institution. For instance, in 1872 it cannot be said that “it is proposed to establish an Asylum for the reception of destitute children.”

8187. Do you not put this appeal forward as showing the objects of the institution? Yes.

8188. Mr. Cowper.] Is there anything to show that the management of the institution has been altered since that period, and that the children admissible in 1852 are not admissible in 1873? The same class of children have been admitted all along.

8189. President.] That is not the answer to Mr. Cowper’s question? I think it is.

8190. Mr. Cowper.] No. Is there anything to show that the system has been altered since 1860—that the same children will not be admitted into the institution now as were eligible for admission in 1860? The same class of children are admitted now that has always been admitted.

8191. President.] That is still not an answer to the question—it seems to me that the answer is simply yes or no? It seems to me that there is no difference in the system.

8192. Then how is it that children found by the police without protection will not be admitted now into the Asylum? I have not said that they will not be admitted. They are not brought to the institution.

8193.

- G. F. Wise, Esq.
6 Nov., 1873.
8193. Mr. Goold.] But why is that—is it because they will not be admitted? Because it is customary for the police to take them to the Benevolent Asylum.
8194. Is that because they know that they will not be received if they are taken to Randwick? We cannot take children except under the Act of Incorporation of 1857.
8195. Mr. Cowper.] We have nothing to do with that, but we ask you whether you will not take certain children mentioned in a certain appeal to the public: you said, "No" at first, and now you say that the police do not bring them to you? If a policeman brought a child to the institution to be admitted, we should decline to receive it, because there is no one to surrender the child, or to give us any information about it—to place us in loco parentis, as the father or mother would do. The policeman could not do so.
8196. But as you state in this appeal that that was the original object of the establishment of the institution, when was that object altered? I am not to answer for what the Hon. George Allen or the Rev. Alfred Stephen may have written twenty-one years ago.
8197. Mr. Metcalfe.] I think you are, for you put that forth to the world now, though you say that you do not take these children? I do not think so.
8198. Mr. Cowper.] Are you not one of the officers whose duty it is to revise these documents before they are published every year? I will take upon myself the responsibility of this report, with the exception of the list of subscribers, and amounts noted as received from them; also, the medical officer's report, and the report of the examination of the children. As to the remaining portion of the report, I will take upon myself the responsibility of publishing as honorary secretary.
8199. Mr. Goold.] Including this appeal? The whole of it.
8200. And certainly from this appeal the public would gather that all children would be received that were brought in by the police? But this appeal was published before the building was erected.
8201. No, it is now, because this is in the report for 1872, and the public would gather that from it now? I grant you are correct. The public might think so—they would think so.
8202. Mr. Cowper.] If any child were brought to you—by a father, for instance—and the child were crippled or suffering from any defect of any kind, would that child be refused as the children are at the Benevolent Asylum refused because they are cripples? We should refuse to take in a cripple.
8203. Or a child whom the doctor would not pass as perfectly sound in every way? Every child is passed by the doctor before it is admitted. We think it inadvisable to introduce infection into the institution for the sake of one child.
8204. Then I understand you that the same class of children that is refused by the doctor at the Benevolent Asylum would be refused by the committee if brought before them by the parents? Yes, if they were not found eligible by the doctor. We think it more advisable to look after the health of 800 children than after the condition of one child. We think it advisable to guard against giving 800 children a disease—such as the itch, for instance.
8205. Mr. Goold.] But can you depart from the conditions laid down in your regulations? I should imagine that these points are embodied in the Act? I should think so.
8206. President.] Dr. Renwick says that there is a child in the Benevolent Asylum thirteen or fourteen years of age with merely a deformity of one ankle, and yet it has been refused time after time;—was that done under the instructions of the committee? Very likely so. We do not take children over ten years of age.
8207. Is that meant as an answer to my question? Yes.
8208. But I understand that this child has arrived at this age, having been refused over and over again? We should always refuse to receive a cripple.
8209. What do you mean—do you call a child that can walk well but has simply a deformity of one ankle a cripple? Our doctor considers the child a cripple.
8210. Do you mean to say that you are justified in refusing a child who can walk perfectly well, but who has merely a deformity of one ankle? Well, I cannot say that.
8211. I do not care what you can say: yes or no is the answer to my question? If the child could walk very well indeed, of course we should take it.
8212. Then how do you account for such a child having been refused over and over again—a child that can walk perfectly well and is in good health? I have no recollection of any such thing.
8213. Dr. Renwick says that there is such a child in the Asylum now? I do not contradict that.
8214. Has it been properly refused, in your opinion? I cannot recollect the particular child.
8215. If the child can walk perfectly well and has a mere deformity of the ankle, and is otherwise in good health, was it properly refused? If the child is not deformed, we should have accepted it if it was under ten years of age.
8216. That is not an answer to my question. This child was of an age to be taken by the institution, and with no other defect but a deformity of one ankle: was that child properly refused? I really do not know how to answer that question exactly, except by a general answer as to any deformed child.
8217. What do you mean by a deformed child;—would one that squints be deformed? No.
8218. What difference would there be between a child that squints and a child who had a deformed ankle, but yet could walk perfectly well? I do not think that child has been refused.
8219. But it has been refused? Not to my knowledge—I have never heard of it.
8220. Is it contrary to the intention of the directors? It depends on the extent of the deformity.
8221. It can walk perfectly well? You are asking me what took place four years ago.
8222. It has been refused over and over again? But it is fourteen years of age now.
8223. If four years ago the child could walk perfectly well and had merely an ugly-looking ankle, should it have been refused? If four years ago the child could walk perfectly well and had merely an ugly-looking ankle, I see no reason why it should not have been accepted.
8224. Mr. Goold.] I wish to know whether the three points mentioned in these regulations are embodied in the Act of Incorporation, because there is nothing said here about the age of the child? The preamble of the Act says—"children deserted by dissolute or abandoned parents, or from other causes neglected, or in a state of great privation and without adequate means of support." And then it goes on to say what is to be done with these children, and that certain laws and rules are to be made by the Directors for the purpose of carrying out the Act of Incorporation. The Act of Incorporation says that rules are to be made by the body politic, and those rules are not to be valid until they are approved of by the Governor and the Executive Council. All the rules we have have been approved of by the Governor and the Executive Council.

8225. But that means rules with regard to the management of the children after they have been admitted into the institution: we are now speaking of rules as to what children are to be admitted? These rules are as follows—

G. F. Wise,
Esq.

8226. But I think that the point is what class of children is to be admitted? The Parliament and the Executive Council have authorized us to receive "children abandoned by their parents, or left without friends and protection; children the offspring of parents either or both of whom may, from profligate habits or conviction for felony, be unable to support and unfit to educate them, and who may voluntarily surrender them to the care of the Society; children who, coming within any of the classes above enumerated, may, according to any law in force for the time being, be compulsorily placed in the institution; children of any of the above classes, who may be received by order of the Government from any Benevolent Asylum or other public institution, and for whose support provision shall be made by the Legislature." The Parliament and the Executive Council have authorized us to admit these children and these only.

6 Nov., 1873.

8227. Mr. Cowper.] Have they authorized you to refuse them because they are brought by the police; or if the police say that they are destitute children, do they not come within the meaning of the Act? It goes on to say how the children shall be admitted into the institution. "No children shall be admitted into the institution unless certified by one of the medical officers, or, in the case of a child from the country, certified as free from any infectious or contagious disease." Therefore we abide by the Act.

8228. Then the Act contravenes what is stated in this appeal—"With this view, it is proposed to establish an Asylum for the reception of destitute and abandoned children, who may be classed as follows:—children found by the police or others without protection, whose parents cannot be discovered"? That is no limit.

8229. Mr. Metcalfe.] And the Act itself gives no limit? No, it gives nothing about that; the by-law is that no children shall be admitted of an age younger than four nor older than ten.

8230. Mr. Cowper.] Do you not think that publishing that appeal every year really bears the appearance of obtaining money under false pretences, when you know that you are going to refuse every child that is brought to you that is not in perfect health? Well, perhaps it may be wrong to have published that appeal, because circumstances have altered since that appeal was written in 1852—the Parliament over-ruled this appeal when the Act of Incorporation was passed in 1857.

8231. Mr. Metcalfe.] The Parliament have not over-ruled it—your own rules have? Yes, but our by-laws are not valid except certified by the Executive Council.

8232. Mr. Cowper.] Do you not think that your being so strict is the cause of your having so few deaths? No, I think that is owing to the very excellent management of the two medical officers, Dr. Brown originally and Dr. Nott now—who are accustomed to give very little medicine; and since the hospital has been built it has been of immense advantage.

8233. Did you not give as a reason for refusing unhealthy children, that you thought it more necessary to look after the lives of 800 children than the life of one? Yes.

8234. But is not that the argument used by yourself in favour of refusing children—that it gives you the advantage of having none but healthy children in the institution? We decline to receive children who—

8235. Answer my question, please? No, it is not.

8236. How then can you explain it? We decline to receive children who are suffering from contagious or infectious diseases.

8237. Mr. Metcalfe.] Then you decline to receive them, though they are the children who most need your aid, and though the Country has given you all appliances for the care and proper treatment of such cases.

8238. President.] And you tell us now that the death rate does not depend on the class of children that you take in? No, it is the great care which the children receive when they are ill.

8239. Then the healthiness of the place entirely depends on the superexcellence of the management? Entirely depends on the excellence of the doctors and nurses.

8240. Not at all upon your excluding cripples and so on? Excluding infectious and contagious diseases.

8241. But you exclude scrofula too? No, I do not think so.

8242. But your own doctor says so? I cannot say.

8243. How does your doctor show that a child is not fit to be admitted? By saying that the child is suffering from an infectious and contagious disease.

8244. But we have evidence that he does not limit his rejection to such cases;—will he take anything but healthy children? He signs a certificate that the children are free from contagious and infectious disease.

8245. He certifies that they are healthy? That they are free from infectious and contagious disease.

8246. But this is the evidence of one of the witnesses—that you "take nothing but prize children"? Oh.

8247. That is the evidence before us? Eighteen months ago we had eighty-one children with scarlet fever, and not one of them died.

8248. That simply shows that they had good constitutions? It shows that they were well doctored and well nursed.

8250. Can you give any good reason for Parliament not having altered it;—besides, Parliament has not so determined—Parliament may never have seen this by-law, and I do not suppose they did;—can you give any good reason against the repeal of this by-law? The answer to your question is, no. I cannot see any difficulty excepting the difficulty as to who shall surrender the child, if it be an orphan. We do take orphans from the Government, namely those from the Benevolent Asylum.

8251. Mr. Metcalfe.] Then you do that in defiance of your own by-law? No, not in defiance of it.

8252. President.] Then under what particular clause do you take them? There is a clause of that kind here.

8253. Empowering you to receive orphans from the Government? Yes; here is the regulation: "Children of any of the above classes who may be received by order of the Government from any Benevolent Asylum or other public institution, and for whose support provision shall be made by the Legislature."

8254.

- G. F. Wise, Esq.
6 Nov., 1873.
8254. But according to that, the Government can only send those that are eligible for admission under the previous rules, and they cannot send one that is eligible for admission into the Orphan School, so your argument tells against yourself;—you now receive those children which the Government have no power to send? That is the fault of the Government.
8255. Mr. Metcalfe.] It is the fault of the governing body, I think? No, we do not know the children—we know nothing about them.
8256. Mr. Cowper.] But we are told by your superintendent that there is a description given with them? Yes.
8257. That it is stated whether they have fathers or mothers, or both? Yes, that is quite correct.
8258. You get a description of them? Yes.
8259. Such as “orphan; mother in the Asylum,” and so on? Yes.
8260. President.] A case came under my notice the other day of a child sent out of the institution; its mother was a housekeeper to a gentleman in a good position, and getting a good salary; the eldest brother was a tradesman doing a flourishing business. Do you think that was an eligible case for the institution? I cannot answer as to a case without knowing the particulars. I do not know that the child was admitted.
8261. The child was in the institution, and was sent out the other day? Sent out, not in—out?
8262. Was that a case for you to receive? Was the child sent in or out?
8263. Is this a case for you to receive: the child of a house-keeper getting good pay, and with a brother in a flourishing trade? We should not receive such a child.
8264. Well, I can inform you that you discharged such a child the other day? The greatest care is taken to prevent imposition.
8265. Mr. Cowper.] Particularly that of unhealthy children? The admissions this year have been very few indeed, in consequence of the very close cross-examination that the mother or father has had to undergo in every case before the child has been admitted—more than ordinarily close.
8266. I suppose you admit that the original objects of the institution have been departed from? I am not aware of what they were; I was not present when the institution was first established, and therefore I cannot tell.
8267. But as you are the particular officer publishing this appeal in which the objects of the institution are stated, you must know whether the present objects of the institution are the same as they were when that appeal was drawn up? Well, taking your view of the case, I have already said that perhaps it is an error to publish this appeal, and most likely I will take the hint.
8270. President.] The question is what was the object of funding it? Such was the object of the Board, but some years ago it was lost sight of until, in 1869, I discovered it, and thought it advisable that something should be done to carry out the original resolution of the Board. It was then proposed by myself to the Board of Directors, that that money having been used for general purposes, the interest upon it should be paid up, and then a fund established to be called the “Cuthill Gratuity Fund,” from which gratuities should be given to apprentices when they had finished their terms of apprenticeship; because at that time there was no control whatever over the masters or employers, and the result was that the children received little or no payment for their services from the masters. The indentures were so made out that there was no control over them. For that reason this fund was established in hopes to make up to the children for the loss of their wages; but from that time another course has been adopted, which has been carried on most successfully, by altering the terms of the indentures, and requiring the employers to pay two-thirds of the children's wages into the Randwick Savings' Bank. And now from that period the accounts have been sent out regularly every six months, and the result has been that £1,777 9s. has been paid on account of apprentices since the 1st January, 1870. £510 12s. 4d. has been paid back to apprentices, and there is a balance now to the credit of the fund of £1,266 17s. 8d. We hold that as trustees for the apprentices. That was the origin of the “Cuthill Gratuity Fund.”
8271. Is that an answer to Mr. Cowper's question? Yes.
8272. I do not think it informs us of what Mr. Cowper wished to know? Yes, it does.
8273. It does not state what was done with the Cuthill bequest? —
8274. Mr. Cowper.] It was the Cuthill gratuity fund that I asked about; we will have the bequest now? It was a bequest for the welfare of the institution.
8275. What for? The relief of destitute children.
8276. Mr. Metcalfe.] What sort of children were they supposed to be? It is in the Act, I suppose.
8277. President.] Have you a copy of the will? No, I never saw it.
8278. Who were the Trustees? Mr. Fanning and Mr. George Allén.
8279. The money was left by will? Yes.
8280. Mr. Cowper.] Was that the cause of the institution being founded? No, it was founded some time before.
8281. Mr. Gould.] Were these by-laws published before Mr. Cuthill's death or since? I am unable to say that. By-laws were of course immediately published.
8282. President.] Have you a copy of the bequest anywhere among your papers? No.
8283. Is there no record anywhere of the trusts of that fund? No.
8284. Can you state from any document that you are carrying out the objects of this trust? All that we had to do was to receive the money given to us by the executors for the general purposes of the institution.
8285. Mr. Cowper.] And you consider that it is one of the general purposes of the institution to give this money to the apprentices? Yes. (Allow me to correct an error I have made. I said some time ago that this appeal was dated in 1860; it was dated I believe in 1852. I see my mistake; the appeal was dated in 1852, and not in 1860.)
8286. I do not see that that matters; you are an officer of the institution, and you publish that appeal in 1873? I acknowledge that.

8287. It only shows that the officers have for a longer period failed to do what they said that they would do? No. In 1852 the institution was first established and the appeal was then made; in 1857 the Act of Incorporation and the by-laws were passed; and that makes all the difference.

8288. This gratuity from the bequest of Mr. Cuthill to the apprentices,—is that one of the objects of the institution? It was thought advisable to establish this fund.

8289. But you have since decided to do away with it? We have since decided to do away with it, because at that time scarcely any money was received by the apprentices at the end of their apprenticeship, and now we see and foresee by our present arrangements that the apprentices will receive their full wages, and that it is no longer necessary to give them that gratuity; and we think it advisable to abolish it—to rescind the former resolution.

8290. Has there been any alteration in the rate of wages paid to the apprentices? No, I think not.

8291. But until lately the employers neglected to pay their apprentices? Yes, previous to 1869.

8292. They neglected to pay them at all? Yes, as a rule, and we had no control over them whatever; we had no means of ascertaining whether they paid their apprentices or not.

8293. How have you managed to get over that difficulty? The wording of the indentures under which children were indentured to employers was very materially altered. The words now are:—“One-third part of the said moneys to be paid” or weekly sums to be paid to the apprentice monthly, and the remaining two-thirds part of the said moneys to be paid to the treasurer for the time being of the said Society, in equal sums quarterly.

8294. Mr. Metcalfe.] The children are apprenticed from thirteen to nineteen? Yes; and the result is that at the end of the six years each child should have about £21 to his or her credit.

8295. It does not all go to his credit; he gets only 1s. 6d. per week and the rest goes to the credit of the Asylum? They get it, and they are very thankful when they come before us to get it.

8296. They so express themselves? Yes; they say that they are obliged to the institution.

8297. President.] Then up to 1869 the rights of these children were entirely ignored by their employers? We had no means of finding out whether they were paid or not.

8298. I only want an answer to the question? As far as I could ascertain.

8299. Then there was some great defect in the manner in which these children were looked after, after they left your walls? Very great.

8300. How has that been remedied? In November 1869, I issued a circular of which this is a copy (Circular handed in), before this new rule was entered upon, asking half a dozen questions.

8301. To whom were they sent? To the employers. They are asked the following questions:—“You will be good enough to fill up and return this form, for which a stamped envelope is herewith enclosed:—“What has been the general conduct of _____, who was apprenticed to you on _____? How often are you able to permit your apprentice to attend divine service? Does _____ at any other time receive instruction from a minister of religion? During the period of _____ apprenticeship, namely, from _____, what amount have you paid to _____ credit at the Savings' Bank? And what amount have you paid during the same period to _____? You are requested, henceforth, to remit the two-thirds of the wages due to your apprentice (in accordance with the agreed terms of apprenticeship, copy of which is herewith annexed) to the Savings' Bank at the Randwick Institution? Be good enough to name in what manner your apprentice is usually occupied. If in any trade, perhaps you will state what progress the _____ has made.” That circular has been sent to all the employers, and most of them have replied.

8302. You have no way of compelling them to reply? No.

8303. And the master who desires to behave badly to a child can do so just as much as he ever could? No, not now.

8304. What is there to prevent him? Accounts are half-yearly sent out and payment demanded; and almost every employer now pays: the proof is, that £1,777 has been received since January, 1870, in settlement of such accounts.

8305. But still there is no guarantee that the children will be well treated? Not beyond that; but our collector when he goes into the country, receives instructions to visit every apprentice in that particular part of the country which he goes to: he introduces himself to the master, ascertains how the child is behaving, sees the child, and so on. We are constantly receiving letters, and of the 436 apprentices out, we have comparatively very few complaints.

8306. Has your collector seen every child that has been apprenticed out? No.

8307. Has he seen half of them? No; he has only been to one part of the country as yet.

8308. Then it still remains that all these children who are unseen may be ill-treated? It may be so, but the slightest hint from any part of the country—and we encourage people to give us information—is enough to induce us to take strong proceedings.

8309. Do you not think it would be desirable to have some organization by which these children could be constantly reported upon to you? I think so. The Superintendent of Police, Captain McLerie, has often assisted the directors in obtaining information.

8310. Are you aware of the organization of the “Ladies' Visiting Society” of Victoria? Yes.

8311. Do you not think that a similar system could be adopted here? I am informed that it does not answer.

8312. Who informed you so? A gentleman who was recently up here from Melbourne: I was talking to him on the subject.

8313. Is he a member of any such organization? No; he said he was much interested in the matter.

8314. I am informed by the Government of Victoria, and the Inspector General of Industrial Schools, and the Secretary of the Association itself, and other persons of a similar character, that it is giving great satisfaction? _____

8315. It is regularly accredited and recognized by the Government of Victoria, and is in official communication with them, through the Inspector of Charitable Schools, who in his report speaks in the highest terms of the good effect of the working of that Society. Do you not think that such an organization as that would be better than having the interference of the police, and placing the children under the espionage of the police? When I say that Captain McLerie obtained information for the directors, I mean that he did so in a private manner.

8316. Mr. Cowper.] If a girl who was apprenticed from Randwick ran away from her employment, what course would be pursued to find her? We should call upon the employer to issue a warrant, and we should hold him answerable for her.

- G. F. Wise, Esq.
6 Nov., 1873.
8317. But suppose that the employer neglects to do it? We cannot do anything. Of course we do the very best we can. Out of the 436 apprentices that are now in service it is, of course, very difficult to have a supervision over every one of them, but we watch them as carefully as we can.
8318. It is the duty of no particular person to make inquiries with reference to the children who are apprenticed out near Sydney? No, not unless the case requires it;—that is to say, if we hear of a child misbehaving herself, or her master or mistress misbehaving, inquiry is instantly made.
8319. But if a person fails to report a case to you nothing is done? Of course not.
8320. How many children were apprenticed out previous to 1869? About 300.
8321. How many have been apprenticed out since 1869? 698 children have been apprenticed out altogether from the institution.
8322. Mr. Goold.] Since its first establishment? Since its first establishment in 1852, 391 boys and 307 girls have been apprenticed.
8323. Mr. Cowper.] Do you know how many children have been apprenticed last year? Seventy-one; and sixty-three have been apprenticed this year, from the 1st January to the 31st October.
8324. Can you give any reason why children who have only a mother living are refused admission, while children whose father is living are admitted? No, I cannot, excepting that orphans are inadmissible.
8325. But it is the fact that such is the case? Yes; because the law says that a child is an orphan who has lost its father, and that a child is not an orphan who has only lost its mother.
8326. But does not the law say that you are not to receive orphans? We do not do so.
8327. Do you not think that that requires to be altered? We are not allowed to admit them.
8328. President.] There is nothing but a law made by yourselves to prevent you? It was the custom until about four years ago for the directors always to refuse to receive illegitimate children because they were illegitimate. I took a legal opinion on the subject to prove that illegitimate children could not be refused, and from that time such children have been taken in.
8329. Mr. Cowper.] Do you not think, Mr. Wise, that, in calculating the cost per head of the children, it would be the fairer way to put down the cost per head of the children in the institution at £19 11s., and add "less the sum of £3,662," which Mr. May estimates as the profit made by the children in making wearing apparel, &c. This would leave the cost per head at £14 8s. 5d. Would not that be better than putting down the actual cost per head as £14 8s. 5d.? I cannot make the cost more than the actual cost, and the actual cost is what the figures show in the Treasurer's Statement of Receipts and Expenditure, published in each annual Report.
8330. President.] Then what becomes of the profit of the children's work? There is no profit.
8331. Mr. Cowper.] But if Mr. May says there is a profit of £3,662, and that if you purchased the goods they would really cost more than he has estimated, do you not think that it would be fair to value the cost at £19 11s. per head, which would include that profit I speak of, rather than make it £14 8s. 5d., which does not include the cost of making the clothing, &c.? There is not, in my opinion, any profit in the children's work, or you may make the profit as high as you like. Other institutions do not do it. I do not see why the accounts of the Randwick institution should, in this respect, be made out in a different way from the accounts of other public institutions,—say, for instance, of the Hyde Park Asylum for the Infirm and Destitute. But what you term the "profit" I cannot see is profit at all. If you think proper, you may value the boots and shoes at 5s., 6s., or 7s. apiece, and that makes a vast difference in the result. I value the articles at merely the cost of making and the cost of the material.
8332. President.] Supposing that the cost of an institution is £11,000 a year, and that the inmates of that institution made goods which yielded an annual return of £11,000—would you say that the cost of the institution was nothing? If the goods were sold, and £11,000 was actually received, the result would be that there would be £11,000 profit from the work of the children, and then the institution would be entirely self-supporting.
8333. Would you say that the inmates cost nothing per head? I would say that they cost nothing to the State.
8334. Would you say that they cost nothing per head? I would say that they cost so much, and they earned so much.
8335. Answer the question, please. Supposing that the inmates made goods which gave a profit of £11,000, would you put down the cost per head as 0? Where is the profit?
8336. Answer my question. These goods are sold, and they realize £11,000: would you, in that case, seeing that the goods made by the children realized as much as the cost of their maintenance, put down their cost per head as nothing per year? I deny the premises as connected with the — 8337. But you are to take the premises as I put them. Here is an institution in which the labour of the inmates realizes a profit of £11,000, and you have to make out a return showing the cost of each inmate per year; what would you say would be the cost of each inmate? The cost would be £11,000, of course.
8338. The cost per head? Would be £11,000 divided by the number of children.
8339. The profits of the work would be a part of the cost of the whole institution? Of this supposed institution.
8340. Well, take an institution containing any number of children you like? The cost of their living is what has been expended for them out of pocket.
8341. Then if the profit equals the expense of maintenance, would you say that the children cost nothing? It has nothing at all to do with it.
8342. But you have got to fill up that column in a return—you have to state the price per head—how would you do it—say that the institution cost £11,000, and there were 1,000 children in it? Say the cost was £10,000.
8343. Well, say £10,000? Then the cost would be £10 per head. If I received £10,000—say for goods sold—and I spent £10,000, received from subscribers, &c., in providing the children with provisions, the cost per head would be £10, and I should then have the other £10,000 to their credit.
8344. I do not know; I want to know how you would fill up that column of figures? The cost of the children would be £10 apiece.
8345. I want you to fill up the column according to your own idea? The cost would be £10 each.
8346. Then if the profit was £5,000, what would the cost per head be? The cost of maintenance would still be £10 per head, because I have paid that for them.
8347. But suppose you have £10,000 given you to maintain the institution, and that the inmates make in addition

- addition a profit of £5,000 by their work? The profit is so entirely dependent on the figures which you choose to put down.
8348. We will say that £5,000 is the result of their labour? I see what you mean, but I deny that there is any profit.
8349. Would you say that the institution cost nothing a year? No, I should say that it cost £10,000 a year.
8350. And that each child cost £10 a year? Yes.
8351. The price is not diminished by the amount produced by the inmates' labour? The labour has been so arranged that the inmates produce £10,000, and thus we have the cost actually reduced to nothing; but the cost per head of the inmates is still £10 a year, though they have contributed the whole amount themselves.
8352. Then supposing the profit realized at Randwick is £3,000 a year? But I say that there is no profit.
8353. But suppose there is? Well.
8354. And suppose that profit of £3,000 is not paid into the Treasury, but is absorbed in the working of the institution, is it not quite clear that it must be taken into account in estimating the cost of the children? I may be allowed to say that it is supposing a fallacy.
8355. But supposing, I tell you, that there is a profit, is it not quite clear that that profit must be taken into account? I do not know how you arrive at it; I so entirely dispute the premises.
8356. Never mind the premises. If there is a profit, is it not clear that you must take it into account—does it not follow that it must be so: if there is a profit, after paying for materials and for making up, and that is absorbed in the working of the institution, must not that profit of £3,000 be taken into account as part of the cost of the institution? No.
8357. On what principle do you say no, if the profit is used in the working of the institution? I say that the profit does not exist.
8358. If the children did not earn that £3,000 you would have to get it somewhere else? We should not have it.
8359. If it was not earned, and you had to buy the clothes, you would have to get that money somewhere else? If there was gross mismanagement we should have to incur extra expense. If there was gross mismanagement in the institution—if the labour of the children was not turned to a proper account—the expenses would be larger.
8360. Would you not have to get the £3,000 somewhere else? Yes, the expenses would be larger.
8361. But you could not throw out that £3,000? I cannot see how it can be taken into account.
8362. Yes, it should be, because you might go on making your establishment more and more expensive, simply on the ground that these children yielded a greater profit? I do not see that.
8363. Supposing that the children made £6,000 instead of £3,000, and the directors by mismanaging the institution, by creating sinecures and multiplying services, used that money, should you not have a right to take that £6,000 into consideration in estimating the cost of each child? I cannot follow you.
8364. It is nothing to say that the children support themselves—they still cost as much as if they did not contribute to their own support. Each child might raise £1,000 a year, but you could not justify yourselves by saying that you only expended that money upon the institution? Take the item of bread. The bread costs us the cost of the flour, the cost of the materials, the wages, firing, and so on; thus the cost of the 4lb. loaf to us is something less than the cost of a 4lb. loaf would be at the baker's. That is the cost of the institution as far as the article of bread is concerned. The expenses of other institutions are stated in the same way. You see that the orphan institution at Hobart Town states the expenses in the same way—no deduction is made there at all events.
8365. Take the case of an institution costing £10,000, and having 1,000 inmates, the cost is £10 apiece? Yes, £10 apiece.
8366. Suppose that by the results of their labour those inmates were able to pay £10,000 into the bank, would you return their cost per head as nil? No.
8367. What would you return it as? £10 a head.
8368. Suppose the inmates made a profit of £5,000? If the profit is realized and paid over, the cost per head is still £10, but they have reduced it to £5.
8369. Mr. Cowper.] Then if the bread is paid for at so much a loaf, and the boots at so much a pair—the market price—the cost per head of the Randwick institution would be nearer £25 per head than £15? Nothing like it.
8370. Would it be £20? No.
8371. If the children were perfectly idle and were not allowed to assist in the work in any shape, there would naturally be an increase of expenses? If no boots and shoes were made, and all the boots and shoes were got from the Government stores, as is the case at the two Orphan Asylums at Parramatta, we should perhaps be better off.
8372. Then if Mr. May says that this would increase the expense he is wrong? I do not say so. If the children were not permitted to make boots and shoes for the establishment the expense would of course be more—there is no doubt of it. If they were not allowed to assist in the work of the place—were not compelled to do house-work—of course more servants would have to be engaged if the children were not allowed to do house-work; and in the same way, if the boys were not taught to milk the cows and obliged to do so, other persons would have to be engaged, and the expenses would thus be increased.
8373. Then, if the management were the same at Randwick as it is at Parramatta, with reference to milking and gardening, and so on, the expenses would be much increased? The Parramatta establishment never issues any—8374. Answer my question, please? I cannot tell. They never publish any accounts.
8375. If the children were not engaged in milking, the expenditure would be increased? Yes, if there were bad management, and the children were allowed to run idle.
8376. It comes to this then,—that if the children were only taught to read and write, the expenses would be much increased? Of course if there were that mismanagement the expenses of the establishment would be much more.
8377. The rate per head would be greater? Yes; by mismanagement or misapplication of the services of the children the rate per head would be greater.
8378. President.] Mr. May has given us a return, in which he states the gross value of the children's labour at £7,972 13s. 3d., of which, after deducting £4,708 16s. 2d. for expenses and cost of material, there is a profit of £3,263 17s. 0½d.? I consider that statement perfectly incorrect, as far as the pounds, shillings, and pence are concerned.

- G. F. Wise, Esq.
6 Nov., 1873.
8379. In what respect—is not the expenditure so great, or are not the results so great? The pounds, shillings, and pence there are not correct. (I cannot say that I have not seen that return, but I have not examined it.) No doubt the list of articles produced is perfectly correct as put down there; all the numbers of pairs of boots are correct, but the pounds, shillings, and pence I dispute altogether.
8380. In what respect? It is an over-calculation.
8381. What is over-calculated? Ask me as to anything you like. I consider, for instance, that the boots and shoes cost only the leather and the workmanship.
8382. But still if a boy gets a pair of boots and wears them they must cost something, no matter where they come from? I will show you where Mr. May is wrong. In the matter of boots and shoes, for instance.
8383. Well, he tells us that the value of the boots and shoes made was £976 11s. 9d., and the expense of producing them, £718 5s. 5d., leaving a profit of £258 6s. 4d.;—do you dispute that? I do. It is not correct.
8384. In what way is it incorrect? It is an exaggerated statement altogether—a miscalculation.
8385. Then this is a cooked account, is it? No, it is a misconception, that is all.
8387. Then, if we publish this to the world as the value of the work done in the Randwick institution, the world will labour under a gross delusion as to the amount of work done there? I think that it would be a great mistake to publish such a statement.
8388. This is with respect to the trades? But the whole expenditure provides everything.
8389. Are all your accounts as correct as this one—this one that we are not to place any reliance upon, and that gives amounts with the exactitude of farthings? I say that these figures with respect to the value of the goods are fancy figures.
8390. Mr. Metcalfe.] Then the amount mentioned in the report is right? Yes.
8391. President.] Do you mean to say that the cost of working these departments is wrongly stated? I am unable to answer that question.
8392. Then you cannot say that the expenditure is incorrect;—we are told that the cost of producing these goods amounts to £4,708,—is that correct? I have no doubt that is correct.
8393. And all that you can say is that the gross value of the goods is exaggerated? They are fancy figures.
8394. Then you are paying far more for your clothes and so on than you could buy them from a contractor for? It has been said so.
8395. How do you know that this account is exaggerated? I cannot say I have not seen it, because I did glance over it.
8396. I see that boots and shoes are put down at 4s. 6d., and that the value of the boots made is stated as £976 11s. 9d.—is that correct? I say that it is incorrect.
8397. Then we are told that the cost of the boot-making department is £718 5s. 5d.—is that correct? I have no doubt that is correct.
8398. And that the value of the goods made is £976 11s. 9d.—do you mean to say that that is wrong? It is a fancy price.
8399. Is it any more of a fancy price than any tradesman would be justified in putting on his goods; has Mr. May, in order to make out this result exaggerated the value of each pair of boots, and put a fancy price upon them? I cannot say that. He has put such a price upon them as produces the difference which you call a profit.
8400. Has he put more than the market price upon them? I cannot say.
8401. Has he not placed a fair market value on them—has he not made his calculations upon the basis of the price at which such goods are sold? I do not know in what way he has arrived at that conclusion.
8402. Then why do you say his account is an exaggeration? Because any profit must be an exaggeration.
8403. You must calculate the price as if these goods were not issued to the children at all—as if they were sold and the money spent on the institution—the cost then remains the same? I cannot see it.
8404. Some of this money is actually paid in cash? But that is deducted.
8405. Are you justified in increasing the expenses of the establishment as long as you do not exceed what you earn, and then say that the children only cost so much; that institution may be a most extravagant institution? In reply to that, I saw Mr. May's letter to the Commission, and it appeared to me to be a very satisfactory answer to the question which had been asked him; and I hope that that letter will be published as he requested.
8406. And the result of your evidence with regard to these accounts is that the values here are all fancy prices, and that no reliance is to be placed on them? I have no doubt that the quantity of things professed to have been produced is perfectly correct, but I think that the price attached to the boots and shoes is a fancy price.
8407. In point of fact then, these things may have been produced at a loss? They may have been—as a director has said.
8408. Mr. Metcalfe.] And I suppose you credit the institution with the balance put in there? Yes, with regard to the small account of about £200 of boots and shoes sold to other public institutions.
8409. There you make out an account of profit and loss? No, not under any separate heading in the ledger.
8410. Does not your own ledger show an account of profit and loss with regard to these things? No. Under the different headings of maintenance—clothing, salaries, &c. There is a debit and credit account.
8411. With reference to the wages paid and the articles purchased, and then on the other side so many articles sent out at a certain price? Yes.
8412. President.] Surely you endeavour to find out whether it would be cheaper to buy these things or to make them yourselves, do you not? It was considered in 1864, when children were first apprenticed to the institution, advisable that they should make boots and shoes, not only to teach them the trade, but also for the sake of economy, and the children are credited in the report every year with every single thing that they make and every single thing that they do, not in pounds, shillings, and pence—that you cannot do, because they would all be fancy prices.

8413. Mr. Cowper.] Where is the account kept that shows the actual cost of these things? In the ledger. G. F. Wise,
Esq.
8414. Is that kept in Sydney? Yes.
8415. Can we see it? Of course you can.
8416. You were speaking of the Queen's Asylum at Hobart Town—have you anything here to show the cost of that institution? Yes, I have. 6 Nov., 1873.
8417. Do you think that the accounts there are kept as well as the accounts at Randwick? No.
8418. Why? I will not give a reason.
8419. Because perhaps you cannot give a reason: what do you object to? I have only seen one account—that for 1867 I think, and I think that the accounts are very incorrect indeed.
8420. How? Well, they are very queerly kept. Their own statement is that the cost is £19 10s. 10d. per head, independently of which they receive a great many advantages from the Government.
8421. What do they receive? Repairs to buildings, stationery, and things of that sort.
8422. How do you know that? Because no charge is made for repairs to buildings, &c.
8423. But they acknowledge the receipts from their produce? They actually deduct from their gross expenses the value of the milk used by the children, considering such milk (or its value) as an asset.
8424. President.] Have you anything further to add? Yes; I wish to explain the cause of the present indebtedness of the Society. The institution is now in debt over £2,500, and has been so for the last two or three years. The debt has not increased or decreased, and I should wish the public to understand how this large debt has been contracted.
8425. We will examine you again in reference to that matter? Very well.

TUESDAY, 11 NOVEMBER, 1873.

Members Present:—

WILLIAM CHARLES WINDEYER, ESQ., PRESIDENT.

MICHAEL METCALFE, Esq.

SAMUEL GOOLD, Esq.

CHARLES COWPER, JUN., Esq.

George F. Wise, Esq., Honorary Secretary, Randwick Destitute Children's Asylum, called in and further examined:—

8426. Mr. Cowper.] In comparing the expenditure and the cost per head of the Queen's Asylum at Hobart Town with the cost per head of the children in the Randwick Asylum, do you not think that it comes to the same thing as I stated,—that the return should show the whole cost per head, and then the net cost per head. You will see that the returns of the Queen's Asylum are made out in that way—giving the total cost per head, and then the net cost. Do you not think the Randwick returns should be made out in the same way, and that the total cost per head should be so stated? I do not understand your question. G. F. Wise,
Esq.
11 Nov., 1873.
8427. The Randwick returns do not take the results of the children's labour into account; but in the case of the Queen's Asylum the value of the produce of the dairy, and so on, is taken into account, and goes to increase the cost per head. I want to know whether this return is not made up on the basis of the total expenditure? No, it is not.
8428. Should it not be? The return of the Queen's Asylum is not so made up.
8429. Will you show me how it is not so? The cost per head is £19 10s. on a total expenditure of over £8,000.
8430. And then they take credit for so much for farm produce deducted from that? Yes, for farm produce, and I think that is highly improper.
8431. But if the Randwick accounts were made out on the same system as these accounts are, would they not bring up the cost per head to a much larger amount than it is at present? —
8432. Would it not, if the Randwick accounts were made out on the same principle, make the cost per head of the children in the Randwick Asylum appear much greater than it now appears? If the Randwick accounts were made up incorrectly it would raise the cost per head to anything you please. I maintain that this return of the Queen's Asylum is incorrect.
8433. I put a plain question, and I want a plain answer? —
8434. President.] Mr. Cowper is surely entitled to an answer to his question. If the accounts were made out in the same way at Randwick as they are made out at the Queen's Asylum, would not the cost per head of the children in the Randwick Asylum appear to be much larger;—a simple answer to that is yes or no? But this is taking an improper account —
8435. Mr. Cowper.] I simply ask you, if the Randwick accounts were made out on the same basis as these, would not the cost per head be stated as much greater than it is now stated to be? Is it not a correct answer to say that if the Randwick accounts were made out as incorrectly as these accounts are made out, there would be an apparent increase in the cost per head?
8436. How do you make out that these accounts are incorrect? Because they have deducted from their total cost the value of the milk which they have actually used themselves. They have used this milk, and they have deducted its value as if the money had been actually received from a third party. They have sold to themselves, and have deducted £835 11s. 1d., which they have considered as the value of the milk they have used themselves.
8437. But is it not clear that if they had had to buy that milk, it would have cost them more than the amount stated, and that therefore the cost of maintaining the children, as compared with the cost of maintaining the inmates of any other institutions, would be so much—less the cost of this milk? If one institution has to buy milk, and another institution keeps cows for the purpose of providing the institution with milk, there probably would be a difference between the two;—that is to say, that institution which has the cows might perhaps obtain its milk at less cost than would the institution which obtained its milk by contract. I notice that the Queen's Asylum in their accounts have thought proper to alter the estimated price of the milk. Between 1867 and previous years they have chosen to lower the price.
8438. But that makes no difference in the principle of the thing? They have chosen to make the price 2d. per pint instead of 3d.
8439. That is all the more against them? It shows that it is a fancy price.

G. F. Wise,
Esq.

11 Nov., 1873.

8440. But if they raised the price the cost would be so much more? No, their saving would be so much more.

8442. But if these things were all put in, it would still be so much the more in their favour—it would still more reduce the cost per head? In reference to the question now under consideration, I beg to state that, referring to my previous evidence relative to my opinion that no money value should be put on the labour of the children, whereby, as I am informed by the members of this Commission, a profit of about £3,300 is said to have been realized, and which amount, as I understand the Commission to say, should appear as an extra charge for maintenance per head of the children, I have ascertained that this amount—say £3,300—is thus made out, viz.:—Estimated profit beyond cost of wages and materials on laundry-work, £1,000. Estimated profit on the clothing, &c., made by the children for their own use—such clothing, viz., dresses, boys' coats, house-linen, &c., to a total of 15,105 pieces, being valued at the retail shop prices, £1,100. Estimated profit on the produce of the farm, viz.,—on milk, 100 quarts per day; on vegetables (23 tons), &c.; on forage, &c., for cows, upwards of 100 tons, raised on the farm chiefly by labour of the boys, the said farm produce being valued at retail market prices, £600; on bakery, being the difference between the cost of flour, wages, &c., and what would have been required to be paid for loaves of bread if purchased from the baker, £250. Estimated profit on boots and shoes made by the boys over and above what would have been the cost if purchased by contract, £270. Estimated profit, in like manner, in tailoring department on clothes made by the children, £100. Supposed total profit, to no portion of which do I assent, £3,320. I cannot agree that any part of the above amount should form a charge on the institution; a saving of expenditure, by careful and judicious management, cannot be considered a profit. Take, for instance, the estimated profit on laundry-work of £1,000. By the erection of costly machinery, of steam-engine, washing apparatus, &c., and by the employment of many girls, who are thus prepared for their future domestic service, the cost of washing their own clothes—upwards of 500 dozen per week—is of course much less than if the clothes were sent away from the institution and paid for at per dozen; thus, by good management, a saving of expenditure is effected, but no pecuniary profit is realized. Then, as to the supposed profit on the 15,105 pieces of clothing, &c., made by the girls, estimated to amount to about £1,100,—a part of the education of these children is that they should be instructed in needlework; they, therefore, by their labour convert the materials given to them into wearing apparel, household linen, &c.; such clothing and household linen, &c., if valued at retail shop prices, would of course produce a larger sum than the original cost of the materials employed in their manufacture. The produce from the farm is in like manner the result of useful occupation given to the boys. So, also, are the boys usefully and profitably engaged and taught trades, by their employment in the bake-house, the engine-room, and in the shoemaking and tailoring departments. There is no doubt that if the children in the institution were not required to assist in household duties—were not instructed in needlework, shoemaking, tailoring, &c.—or were not usefully engaged on the farm or in the garden, the expenses of the establishment would be largely in excess of present outlay, because, in such case, an additional number of servants and others would necessarily be required. Such additional expense would, I conceive, be the result of most extravagant mismanagement on the part of the directors of the institution; and not only so, but the children would lose the benefit of the instruction which they now receive, and which fits them for their duties in after-life.

8443. Mr. Cowper.] Do you not see that if the articles were sold instead of being used in the establishment, they would produce so many hundred pounds; and as they are worth so much and are consumed in the school, of course their value must be added to the expenses—and in that way the cost per head must be so many pounds more per year? If that principle were carried out to its full extent I do not know where you would end; because you would have to tarry it out through every portion of the institution in every shape and way. You would even say that if the children were not able to wash themselves they would require extra assistants to wash them, and thus you would add to the expense per head. The principle might thus be carried out ad infinitum and ad absurdum.

8444. But it would not be ad absurdum if you sold the boots and shoes and spent the proceeds? But the boots and shoes and wearing apparel are used in the institution.

8446. And the proceeds go into the funds of the institution? They are sold at cost price.

8448. Suppose that the production of the institution is increased beyond the actual requirements at a given time to the value of £5,000, and that you then, by creating additional offices and so on, use up the whole of that £5,000 which before was not used, would it not be quite clear that the institution, although it does not take £5,000 from the public for its management, may still be very extravagantly managed, for it gets the £5,000 from its own inmates; is not that quite clear? Excuse me, I do not follow you.

8449. Do you mean to say that an institution raises the money that it expends is any answer to the accusation that such an institution is extravagantly managed? The institution certainly may be extravagantly managed.

8450. You admit that it may be extravagantly managed, even though it raises its own income? Yes, in the abstract it may be extravagantly managed.

8451. Then, whether it is extravagantly managed or not may depend on the amount which is spent in working the institution over and above the amount that the institution provides for itself? I do not quite see the purport of these questions.

8452. Is not that the ultimate test as to the cost of an institution? An institution although self-supporting may be extravagantly managed—may be expensively managed, even although it is self-supporting.

8453. I presume that even though the Randwick institution were self-supporting it might still be extravagantly managed? Yes; I said expensively managed.

8454. Well, does not that show that although it may be a very fair thing for the Randwick Asylum to say that that its inmates raise a certain quantity of articles that they require themselves and would have otherwise to buy, still after all the institution may be very extravagantly managed? Of course it may be so.

8455. Well, is not the only way to find out whether it is so, or not, to find out how much the institution produces for itself, and taking the value of the articles produced into account, ascertain what the expenditure is beyond that? That would necessitate a very close examination of the figures—a much closer one than has ever yet been gone into. Take any one department you please—take the laundry for example. I have not seen the accounts upon which are based your estimate of the cost of washing, but I understand that the charge is somewhere about £300, which, as I am informed, is supposed to cover the wages of the laundry-women and the cost of soap and starch and the other things used; but beyond that there are very many other expenses to be taken into consideration. There is a portion of the superintendent's salary, and indeed a portion of every charge in the establishment. All these matters would have to go into the account before a correct result could be obtained. Now that laundry could not exist by itself—it can only be carried on profitably in connection with the institution. Then again there is the steam-engine and the coals required, and the engineer's wages—all these matters should go to the laundry account, because the laundry work is done by machinery.

8456. Surely you can make a proper estimate of the cost without entering into these complex calculations. You may find that it would be cheaper to put the washing out than to do it in this way upon the premises? We know what we receive and what we expend.

8457. But your answer is no answer at all. You must put your washing out or you must do it at home, and it seems that you are not able to say which plan would be the cheapest; it may be that though you imagine you are doing your washing for nothing, it would be cheaper to put it out? But we have other objects in view.

8458. But is it not quite clear that this way of doing the washing upon the premises may be more expensive than it would be to put the washing out? It may be so.

8459. Mr. Metcalfe.] What is the object that you have in view? We have several objects, and the chief one is to teach the children to wash and make themselves useful—to bring them up as servants.

8460. But with all these appliances, the children are not likely to learn anything that will be useful to them in after-life—one of these girls would not know how to do the washing for a small family; in the institution the washing is all done by machinery? A great portion of it is, but only to a certain extent.

8461. The greater part of it is, is it not? Yes; but every article passes through the girls' hands both before and after being put through the washing machine.

8462. Mr. Cowper.] Here is a paper showing the cost of the Queen's Asylum, Hobart Town, and the cost of the Randwick Asylum. If your accounts were made out in this way the actual cost of the institution would be shown, then the reduction in the cost by the labour of the children. You will find that the actual cost per head of the children at Randwick is £25 10s. per year, but taking off the value of the work done by the children and the value of the farm produce and so on, the cost is reduced to about £15 per head? That is not the way in which the accounts of the Queen's Asylum are made out. They omit many things.

8463. Then that is so much the worse for them—then their cost per head would be so much less? But you must carry this to much greater lengths, as I said before—you must take everything into account.

8464. Mr. Metcalfe.] Well, do you not think that the cost of the children at Randwick per head is an immense cost, considering the amount of work that these children do for themselves? No, I do not think so, because the ascertained actual cost per head of £14 per annum covers every expense incurred, including the repairs and improvements to the buildings, painting, purchase of machinery, and so on.

8465. But the buildings were all put up by the Government? No, they were not. Large amounts from the general funds and from bequests were appropriated towards the cost of buildings, &c., and the annual repairs are defrayed from the general funds. For instance, in 1872 the amount paid for such repairs was £446, and there is a large sum required to be expended every year in repairs and improvements.

8466. Mr. Cowper.] In this paper of yours, comparing the cost of the Queen's Asylum with the cost of Randwick, you have, in your comparison of salaries, put down all the salaries of the Queen's Asylum, but you have omitted the salaries of a great many people at Randwick—the cooks, bakers, farm labourers, and many others? Oh, you are going into that thing.

8467. If you put down here every salary that is paid at Randwick it will amount to as much per head of the children as the other does? But I should not be asked to explain a portion only of the paper which you have in your hand unless you permit me to enter into a full explanation of the whole of the Queen's Asylum accounts.

8468. Can you tell us where that £4,000 is got from—that amount set down as the cost of producing the articles at Randwick—you admit that it is correct? I beg your pardon; I did not admit that it was correct. My statement was this: I said that whatever Mr. May had put down as the numbers of boots and shoes, &c., &c., that were produced, and the number of loaves of bread, &c., was perfectly correct; but my expression was that in the pounds shillings and pence part of the statement, Mr. May was incorrect.

8469. What you said was this, upon the following question being put to you—"Then you cannot say that the expenditure is incorrect—we are told that the cost of producing these goods amounts to £4,708,—is that correct?—I have no doubt it is correct." What you questioned was the accuracy of the value stated, but you admitted that the statement as to expenditure was correct? I believe I said, over and over again, that the stated number of tons of potatoes, and number of boots and shoes, &c., &c., was perfectly correct, but I said no more than that; and until this moment I never saw this £4,700. I do not know how it is made out—I have not the slightest idea.

8470. Well, look at the prices set down in this statement. Are they extravagant, do you think—£5 per ton for potatoes, 4d. per quart for milk—do you consider those prices extravagant? I cannot give an opinion.

8471. Do you not know that 4d. per quart for milk must be cheap? I know that a less price than that is paid elsewhere.

8472. Do you not know that 25s. per head for calves is a low price? I do not know.

8473. President.] Where is milk sold at a less price than 4d. per quart? It is supplied to the Sydney Infirmary for less.

G. F. Wise,

- G. F. Wise, Esq.
11 Nov., 1873.
8474. Are you sure? I do not know; but I think that I heard it spoken of as being supplied there at 3d. or 3½d. per quart. I do not know, but I have heard it spoken of* 8475. Mr. Cowper.] But do you not know that milk fresh from the cow is better worth 4d. per quart than the milk which is ordinarily retailed is worth 3d.? Yes, of course I am aware of that.
8476. Here are boots charged at 4s. 6d. per pair—do you consider that an extravagant price? Yes. Of course if Mr. May chooses to value them at that he may do so.
8477. President.] Do you mean that the price is extravagant? I do.
8478. What is your reason for thinking so? I believe that it is an extravagant price.
8479. Do you know of any institution to which boots are supplied at a less price? No. I repeat that I think that 4s. 6d. per pair is too high a price.
8480. On what grounds do you hold such an opinion? I believe that such estimated price is excessive, as is also the estimated price of 1s. per dozen for washing. I am satisfied that if you offer 26,000 dozen pieces they would be washed for less than 1s. per dozen.
8481. Mr. Cowper.] Do you mean to say that the institution could not sell these boots and shoes at 4s. 6d. per pair? I do not think that they could be sold at that price.
8482. President.] Do you not think that these boots and shoes last much longer than those which are supplied to such institutions by contractors? I do not know what is the cost of boots and shoes supplied by contractors.
8483. Mr. Cowper.] Will they not last much longer than boots which are got from contractors? I do not know.
8484. President.] Have you any experience on the subject at all? I have not.
8485. Have you any knowledge as to the cost of these things elsewhere? No.
8486. They must last twice as long as the boots and shoes supplied by contractors? Yes, or perhaps only half as long.
8487. Mr. Cowper.] If I tell you from my own experience that one pair of these boots will last as long as two pairs of the boots which are supplied by contractors, what can you say? I believe you, of course.
8488. Do you not think that people knowing this, would be glad to buy these boots at the same price as they pay to the contractor for inferior articles—and I know that the price is the same? If I had been aware that such questions would have been put, I would have provided myself with data for reply. Some years ago we had a superabundance of — 8489. If I tell you that institutions which are now supplied by contractors would be glad to take these boots at this price, will you not admit that they must be worth that price to the Randwick Asylum, and that they should be valued at the same amount of money? No, I do not think so.
8490. Why? Because I cannot help expressing my opinion that the value of these boots is no more than the cost of the materials and the labour—nothing more. We save in expenditure, that I acknowledge; but we make no profit—there is no doubt about that.
8491. Mr. Metcalfe.] But suppose that you gave up making these boots and had to buy them, and that you had to buy twice the number—what would be the result of that? Then from our mismanagement and injudicious arrangements we should be incurring useless expenses.
8492. President.] If the cost of the victuals and the clothes that a child wears is £20 a year—the cost of the actual food and raiment—is the actual cost of that food and raiment any the less because £10 of it is found by the child's employer and £10 is given to it? I think that is the same question as the other.
8493. What is your answer to the question? The cost per head is £20 of course.
8494. And the cost is just the same no matter whether the child has £10 worth of goods given to it, or whether it produces £10 worth of goods by its own labour? Yes, by your reasoning, but not by mine.
8495. We understood when you were last examined, that you wished to say something about the institution being in debt? Yes, I did, because that is a very important matter, and the public ought to have the facts correctly stated. Our indebtedness, on the 31st December, 1866—our overdraft rather, was £275. Our indebtedness on the 31st December, 1872, was £2,415 14s. 9d.; and at the end of this year the overdraft will be about the same amount—about £2,500. This certainly requires explanation. In December, 1866, we had 654 children in the institution; in December, 1872, we had 837 children, including the forty-two apprentices. In the five years from December, 1866, to December, 1871, as shown in the report for the year 1871—in these five years there was an extra expenditure in buildings. The Catherine Hayes Hospital was built, the superintendent's residence was built, two steam-engines were provided, cooking apparatus, water-tanks, a verandah was erected, the paddocks were fenced, and furniture was obtained for the hospital. In this way the sum of £6,824 was expended. In addition to which, a former loan of £1,151 8s. 4d. was repaid, and an investment of £488 12s. 9d. was made for the benefit of the apprentices. Thus, the extra expenditure for the five years from 1866 to 1871, inclusive, was incurred in carrying on permanent works and improvements. A further expenditure for repairs and minor improvements, of about £600 a year, was also made in each of these years. This large expenditure, therefore, fully accounts for the increased overdraft from £275 in 1866, to the present overdraft of about £2,500. This matter has been brought by a deputation from the Board of Directors before the Colonial Secretary, and a grant of £2,500 has been requested to cover the indebtedness, but no reply has yet been made to the application. The Catherine Hayes Hospital was built during this period of five years. Previous to the erection of the hospital, the superintendent and his family resided in the main building, also the sick and weakly children; and those suffering from ophthalmia, &c., were also in the same building. By their removal, and by the erection of the hospital and the superintendent's residence, an increased accommodation was obtained for at least 200 children. I beg particularly to draw your attention to the following information, which I give to disprove the statement which I understand has been made by some witnesses before the Commission, that the directors only take in prize, healthy children. The hospital was opened in May, 1870; and, to show the use of the hospital, from May the 1st to December, 1870, in the eight months of this first year there were 530 children admitted into the hospital and entered upon the admission book. In 1871 there were 803 children entered upon the admission book and treated in the hospital.
8496. Mr. Metcalfe.] Why then every child in the place must have been there? In the year 1872 there were 819 children entered on the admission book and treated in the hospital. During this year—the ten months up to October 31st—there have been 655 children admitted and treated in the hospital. In addition to the

* NOTE (on revision) :—I have made inquiry, and have ascertained that the contract price for milk supplied to the Infirmary is 2½d. per quart.

the numbers which I have now given, there is a daily average number of thirty children sent to the hospital for medicine and treatment. G. F. Wise,
Esq.

8497. How many? About thirty children every day.

8498. Every day? Yes; in addition to those who are treated in the hospital. These thirty children merely go over to the hospital for medical treatment. There are now twenty-nine in the hospital. 11 Nov., 1873.

8499. President.] What are they suffering from? They are weakly children—children suffering from ophthalmia. I can give no more detailed answer than what I have given, as I have not made particular inquiries as to the diseases of the children.

8500. How many come to the institution suffering from complaints for which they are now being treated in the hospital? I have given all the particulars I can give.

8501. Can you tell me whether the children treated were healthy when received into the institution? I cannot say.

8502. Then, for all we know, these children who have been treated in the hospital may have been perfectly healthy when they were received into the Asylum? Yes.

8503. And their diseases may have been engendered amongst them since they have been in the institution? Yes.

8504. How many deaths have taken place in these years that you have mentioned?

From May, 1870, to December 31, 1870	2 deaths.
In 1871	3 "
1872	5 "
From Jan. 1, 1873, to October 31, 1873	0 "
Total...				10 "

8505. In how many years? Since May, 1870, namely, in three and a half years, there have been ten deaths.

8506. Then your object in giving the figures you have just given is to show that, in point of fact, there is considerable illness in the institution? Yes, constant sickness; and also to show the great advantage that has resulted from having a hospital, in which last year we were able to treat eighty-one cases of scarlet fever, without a single death.

8507. I say that the figures you have produced are intended to show that there is considerable sickness among the children—that the children are anything but healthy, inasmuch as there were 819 cases treated in the hospital in one year? Yes.

8508. Does that year seem to have been an exceptionally unhealthy year? No; you will see that it was about the fair average.

8509. Answer my question? The largest number of children were treated in the hospital in that year; but it does not follow that it was more unhealthy than other years. The largest number of children were in the Asylum then, I think.

8510. Do you know whether during that year there was any epidemic such as scarlet fever? Yes, there was.

8511. The most healthy children may be attacked by scarlet fever in such an institution as this? Yes.

8512. And which are we to take then—your figures, to show that these children are an unhealthy lot of children, or the report of your medical officer for the year 1872, who says—"During the first part of the year the health of the institution was all that could be desired, there being no diseases requiring special treatment"; and that at the end of the year there were no cases in the hospital whatever. How are we to judge of the health of the institution,—from your figures, which show that 819 children have been treated in the hospital in 1872—that is, that every child has been there—or from your medical officer's report, which says that "there have been no diseases requiring special treatment"; but that "in July, scarlatina broke out—eighty-one children were under treatment in the hospital, all of whom recovered"; and that at the close of the year, when this report was brought up, the institution was free from sickness of any kind? Yes, it was free from sickness of any kind.

8514. Are we to judge of the healthiness of the children from your statistics or from the report of the medical officers? I only give you facts.

8515. Which facts are the safest for us to go by, as to whether these children are taken in when they are deserted and destitute, or whether they are picked children? There is no doubt of the truth of the facts which I have stated.

8516. That is not an answer to the question. The medical officer's report states one thing, and you state some figures which give us no information whatever. Which is the safest guide? If you ask me to admit that the children received into the Randwick Asylum are prize children, I must say—

8517. Which do you think we should go by—bare statistics which give no information as to the character of the diseases treated, or the medical officer's report, which is printed with your report and laid before the public? Yes, it always is.

8518. Which do you think the safest to go by? The two reports are apparently, but not really opposed to each other, because they give different kinds of information.

8519. Exactly opposite information? No, different kinds of information—they are both correct.

8520. The object of your figures is to make out that the children are not healthy? My object is to show the very great benefit that the hospital has been to the institution.

8521. And how highly requisite it is? Yes, and that it is only by constant care and supervision of these children that they are as well preserved as they are from more serious sickness.

8522. You have not yet answered my question as to which is the safest for us to take as a guide—your figures, or the health officer's report? You must use your own judgment as to that.

8523. Mr. Metcalfe.] They do not agree? They do not contradict each other. My figures are right; they are taken from the doctor's admission book at the Catherine Hayes Hospital.

- G. F. Wise, Esq. 8524. Mr. Goold.] But that is not any answer to the objection that you refuse to take unhealthy children into the institution? We are, as I said before, bound by Act of Parliament to certain rules and regulations, one of which is that we should not take in children suffering from contagious diseases.
- 11 Nov., 1873. 8525. That is a by-law? Yes, it is.
8526. President.] Which you can alter to-morrow if you like? No, we cannot.
8527. I beg your pardon—there is nothing to prevent your altering it? Nothing at all, provided the Executive agree to the alteration; but the by-law would not be valid until the Executive agree to it. The by-law now is that no child shall be admitted into the institution unless certified by the medical officer to be “free from infectious or cutaneous disease.”
8528. Mr. Cowper.] No one asks you to take in cases of contagious disease? But that was the question.
8529. Mr. Goold.] No; I said unhealthy children, deformed children, or any others. There is nothing in the intention of the institution to prevent you taking in deformed children. According to the original intention of this institution, you should take in all destitute children; and if you make by-laws which are contrary to that intention you go beyond your power? You are alluding to this appeal, which was originally published in 1852. Undoubtedly when the establishment was first formed all children were to be taken in. The original appeal of 1852 does not even say what age the children were to be. They might therefore be infants. Then you may say why do you not take in children six months old—why do you not take in cripples—they are both the same class of children. As far as this appeal of 1852 is concerned, infants might be taken in, and cripples, and persons under the age of twenty-one (who in the eyes of the law are children). The Asylum would thus have become a foundling hospital. I take this opportunity of handing in a copy of a surrender paper. (See Appendix U.)
8530. President.] Do you receive any salary? No, I do not.
8531. Do you not get some allowance in the way of fees? There is an allowance made to cover all expenses incurred by me as honorary secretary.
8532. What is it? £1 a week.
8533. Mr. Metcalfe.] That is the allowance which the Rev. Alfred Stephen used to get? Yes.
8534. You receive £50 a year? Yes, to cover the cost of all incidental expenses; and “without such allowance,” as the Rev. Alfred Stephen wrote me in January, 1872, when I accepted the office of honorary secretary, “I should have been out of pocket in various ways, on account of expenses continually being incurred.”

NOTE (on revision) :—Memorandum having reference to the evidence given by me in my examination before the Commission on the 6th November, which I wish to append to my present evidence.

GEORGE F. WISE.

In my evidence given on the 6th November, having taken for my guide the Government Estimates of expenditure, I stated that the expenses of each of the Orphan Asylums at Parramatta were about £13 2s. per head, exclusive of sundry supplies obtained from the Government stores, &c. I am now able to give exact information of the expenses of each one of these establishments, from a Parliamentary paper lately published, viz. :—

The total expenses for 1872 of the Protestant Orphan School amount to..... £15 10 5½ per head.
Do. do. Roman Catholic Orphan School 15 7 7½ „

The total cost for 1872 at the Randwick Asylum, cost of all repairs and improvements, and every expense included, was at the rate of £14 8s. 5d. per head; but for purposes of a more correct comparison between these several institutions, the following items should be deducted from the Randwick accounts, similar charges not being required to be incurred in the Government establishments, viz. :—

	£	s.	d.	s.	d.
Publishing and posting 1,800 annual reports, stationery and postage account, together..	331	12	0	=	8	4 per head.
Commission paid to collector on subscriptions.....	175	16	2	=	4	5 „
Interest paid to Bank on overdraft	172	15	0	=	4	2½ „
Insurance on main buildings and rental of Sydney office	71	7	6	=	1	9½ „
Total.....	18	9				per head.

which amount of 18s. 9d., if deducted from the previous amount of £14 8s. 5d., would leave an expenditure of £13 9s. 8d. per head, being about £2 per head less than the cost per head at either one of the two Orphanages at Parramatta.

I notice that the children are employed at both these Orphanages in like manner as at Randwick, namely, the boys at garden and farm labour, the girls being instructed in needlework and engaged in household duties and in laundry work.

It is worthy of remark that the average age of the children at the three institutions is very similar, viz. :—

Average age of the children at the Protestant Orphanage	8	years	8	months.
Do. do. Roman Catholic—a fraction over	9			„
Do. do. Randwick Asylum—a fraction under	9			„

Members Present :—

WILLIAM CHARLES WINDEYER, Esq., PRESIDENT.

MICHAEL METCALFE, Esq.

SAMUEL GOOLD, Esq.

CHARLES COWPER, JUNR., Esq.

Simeon H. Pearce, Esq., Director of the Randwick Destitute Children's Asylum, called in and examined :—

S. H. Pearce, Esq. 8535. President.] You have been for many years connected with the Destitute Children's Asylum at Randwick? I have been more or less since its commencement. I have been a director for about seventeen years.

14 Nov., 1873. 8536. We have been given to understand, by one of the witnesses, that you have expressed an opinion that the articles which are raised for consumption by the children, and the clothing of the children in the institution, might be more economically supplied by contractors? That is quite wrong. I have never said any such thing.

8537. Is it your opinion that these things are now more economically provided than they could be if they were supplied by contractors? There is no doubt of it; that is, to a certain extent.

8538. In point of fact, there is, to a certain extent, a profit on the articles raised? Well, if you mean a profit, I cannot say that there would be a profit if all the expenses were taken into consideration, because there is nothing sold, and there is no profit arising from that which is not sold. The profit is in the education of the children and reduction in maintenance.

S. H. Pearce,
Esq.
14 Nov., 1873.

8539. Of course, not a profit in that way? No, no profit can arise without sale.

8540. But supposing that the articles were sold at the usual market prices, do you believe that any profit would arise in that way? Under the circumstances I do not think there would be, because there are so many boys employed to produce these articles, and there would be no profit if sold in the pure state in which the children receive the articles. Milk, for instance, if sold pure, in the state the children received it, could not be sold at a profit, but if it was adulterated and sold, it would in that way produce a profit.

8541. If it was brought into the state of the ordinary market article, it could be sold at a profit? Yes, there would then be a profit. But I do not think we need enter into that question; in fact, the directors have decided that no goods shall be sold, and that no private work shall be done by the shoemaking department, in future.

8542. When was that decision arrived at? About two months ago it was decided that no private work should be done.

8543. Mr. Metcalfe.] What was private work? The children made boots and shoes for sale for any one who ordered them, and, believing that there was no profit from it, the Board decided that no private work should be done in the institution in future, but that all the boys shall be re-apprenticed in the country. This was done, not only with reference to the non-production of anything at a profit, but also with reference to the prevention of immoral practices which might occur—the danger arising from youths of of such an age being there among so many girls. We had twenty-five or thirty apprentices growing up to be men, and we saw the danger of keeping them on the premises; and therefore, to preserve the morality of the institution—and knowing that the labour of these lads was without profit in doing private work—we thought it best to decide that they should be apprenticed in the country, and that no boys should remain on the premises, except in special cases, such as allowing one or two to teach the others—two to help the carpenter and engineer, and so on—none but these are to be kept on the premises after they are thirteen years of age.

8544. Have those youths employed on the premises been apprenticed out? I believe so. I believe that nearly all of them have been re-apprenticed.

8545. Re-apprenticed? Yes; we cancel our indentures in order to re-apprentice them to other parties in the country.

8546. For what period are they re-apprenticed in this way? Only for the remaining portion of their term. We cannot do otherwise.

8547. And have you more of the boys now learning trades than you had before this plan was adopted? No, we have decided that no boys shall be apprenticed to the institution except under special circumstances.

8548. But have you not boys there who are learning trades? Yes, we have boys assisting the shoemaker, the baker, the engineer, the carpenter, and the tailor; but we have decided that no more boys shall be apprenticed within the institution, except a few who may be retained to teach the others, and a lad to assist the engineer and carpenter. I believe that those who are to be retained on the premises are confined to two or three—at all events they will be kept under a special arrangement.

8549. Then in future are you going to apprentice all the boys out when you can get persons to take them, as soon as they have been instructed? Yes, we have decided not to apprentice them to the trades on the premises, because we thought that, as agricultural labourers, vine-dressers, and horticulturists are wanted in the country, it would be better to supply the country, as far as we could, with labour of that class, than with lads who had learnt the various trades. We thought that if there were to be hewers of wood and drawers of water, they should be taken from this class, which is chiefly maintained by the State; that we should not overstock the country with mechanics, because we wanted those positions for our own sons. It would be reversing the order of things altogether to give these positions to this pauper class. That was decided; but afterwards it was again decided not to limit the powers of the Board, but to allow the Board to use its own discretion. Still, that is the feeling; and the Board, in sending the children to agricultural pursuits, believe that the establishment of these pursuits are the stability of the Country, and that men are mostly required to till the land, and produce wine and corn, and other necessary articles for consumption and export.

8550. Have you ever become acquainted with what is known as the boarding-out system? No, I never saw anything of it when I was at Home,—it was not then established, but I have heard of it and read of it, and I think it is a very good system to establish in England, but I have my doubts as to the success of such a system here, because our population is not so numerous as in England, and there are not those facilities for receiving children here as there are among the densely populated portions of Great Britain and the Continent.

8551. That is a mere theoretical opinion of yours? Yes, it is merely my opinion.

8552. Are you aware that this system has been tried with very great success in South Australia? I was not aware of that. I have no doubt that the principle is good, and that if good people could be found to train up the children properly they would learn "home habits." It would be better for the children generally if they could be "farmed out" in some way.

8553. In fact, the children would then grow up under the conditions most suited to fit them for their after-life? There is no doubt of it, as they would possess more independence and become more useful.

8554. Do you not think that the more perfect an institution is, as an institution, in the way of economizing labour and those matters—that in proportion as it becomes so, it unfits the children for after-life; if their food is cooked by steam, and their clothes are washed by steam, and all that they need is done by machinery, are not their whole circumstances different to what the circumstances of their after-life must be, and are they thus not to a certain extent unfitted to go out into the world? There is no doubt of that whatever; and I believe that if all these institutions could be closed and abolished, and this system of "boarding" could be properly carried out, it would not only tend to the advantage of the children themselves, but it would also tend to the advantage of the Country generally, inasmuch as we should not have so many paupers as we have at the present time. It would take some time to give my reasons for thinking so, but I have duly considered them, and I think that the reasons would weigh with any Board who would receive them, but am afraid I should take up too much of your time with them now.

S. H. Pearce,
Esq.
14 Nov., 1873.

8555. We shall be very glad to hear them? Then I will give them as briefly as I can. It is a well-known fact that in all institutions and establishments where they desire to attain perfection in their cooking arrangements and other matters, that improved machinery is purchased for the place, from the funds of the institution, or from money raised by public or private contributions, as at Randwick. I must say that there is no institution which I have ever had anything to do with which is in a greater state of perfection, with reference to its management—its sanatory and all other arrangements—than the Randwick institution now is. There is, I believe, everything perfect, with reference to the cooking, baking, and bathing matters, and every other thing connected with the institution. I have given the institution my attendance gratuitously, and a great many of the improvements have been under my control and supervision, from the selection of the land by me, the erection of the fences in the first place, and up to the present time I have been connected with nearly all the improvements, except that I was not the architect of the buildings. Mr. Pullman has also given his valuable assistance with regard to engineering matters. I may say that, with respect to laying out the grounds and carrying out the various minor improvements on the premises, they have been done by Mr. May, chiefly under my supervision or advice. Now, although the place is excellent in itself, still I think it does not give the children that opportunity of learning how to make themselves as useful in the world as they might be, by learning to cook, bake bread, wash their own clothes, and do all such things as those, without machinery. As it is now, these children are being made, to some extent, independent of manual labour. I think now that we have gone too far in procuring machinery, although I have been one of the parties who advocated making the institution a model to the world, and have done all that I could to make it so. Experience now shows me that the children are taught too many things for their position—they are taught music to play in a band of their own; and such things as those appear to raise the children's ideas above manual labour. I have given my most willing service to the institution, but I have arrived at a conclusion that in endeavouring to obtain perfection we have been taking a wrong course, inasmuch as we have been teaching the children to be independent of the Charity and of their position. I think they are treated too well altogether, and raised far above the sphere in which they should be placed. When I compare the advantages which these children possess with those possessed by others—even by my own children—I say that they have many advantages which my children have not, and which they have no opportunity of getting, because these children are apprenticed to a trade in the institution. They are brought up there, fed properly, well clothed, provided with good beds to lie upon; they have good airy premises, and they have everything to make them happy and comfortable. They are taught a trade, and at the expiration of their time they have £25 or £26 in hand to start in life with. Now, if I apprentice my boy to a master I have to give a bonus with him, or if not, send him there for 5s. per week, to board and clothe him myself, and to do everything except teach him the trade. At the expiration of his term he has nothing whatever placed to his credit, and he has to begin the world with nothing, unless I assist him—so that these children have advantages that my own cannot possess. I think that if the system of “boarding” can be properly carried out and paid for by the State, it would be an advantage to the Country generally. It would prevent the dreadful annoyances that arise with reference to sectarian matters; for the ministers and priests who are on these Boards attend there, as I think, chiefly for the purpose of looking after the advantages of the Churches to which they belong. I speak strongly on this matter, and I do so from the experience I have gained during the last seventeen years. I have often been disgusted with those proceedings, and would exempt all clergymen from being members of those Boards. Their extraordinary benevolence or interest in the various cases tends to pauperize the Country, and teaches the lower orders of the people to depend on the State for support or assistance when they ought to depend on their own exertions. There are children in the Randwick Asylum who ought not to be there. I speak without fear, favour, or affection; and, in my opinion, with all our exertions and precautions, there are children admitted into that institution which ought to have been provided for by their parents; and it is a positive fact that demands are often made to get children admitted there, and they have been in some cases admitted, who should not have been admitted at all. There are clergymen constantly giving recommendations to interested parties, sending recommendations which sometimes astonish me when I find the parties who send them; and, in my opinion, it is the same at the Benevolent Institution. It has been said that children have been made paupers for the express purpose of proselytism, the Country pauperized in consequence, and the people taught to depend on others instead of depending on their own exertions. Parents who should maintain their children see that they are better cared for in these institutions than they can care for them, and so they get them in when possible.

8557. I was merely speaking as to the general question—the expediency of throwing this condition upon persons seeking assistance—that only one of a family of four should be admitted? I think that they acted with great judgment in making that rule, but the Orphan Schools are under the management of the Government, and the influences brought to bear on the Colonial Secretary are so great, he would be pestered out of his life unless he granted admittance to these applicants.

8558. Have you had any of these children in your service? As apprentices?

8559. Yes; or have you had them in any position in which you had an opportunity of observing them? Yes, I have had one, and but one, and I never intended to have another. I had a girl once; she was a good girl, and I gave her an allotment of land when she was out of her time, because she was a good girl; but I never made any application for another.

8560. For what reason? Some of them turn out badly; they are, as you are aware, the offspring of the lowest orders of the people—the children of diseased parents, of drunken, dissolute, and most abandoned characters. They have learned such bad habits from their parents, and have been so far contaminated, that there are but few of them indeed but have imbibed some of the bad habits of their parents.

8561. Mr. Metcalfe.] Are not their evil habits eradicated? No, it is like the germ of a seed, which grows whenever it is sown, and that is especially the case in human affairs. They have acquired bad habits; and, though they have good examples set before them at the institution, still the bad seed is in the ground, and whether it be vegetable or animal, it will produce its effects.

8562. President.] But many of the children must be too young to have received this contamination, unless they are contaminated by the elder children? They are of all ages—from four up to ten or even twelve; but but those are exceptional cases. Our rules provide that a child is not eligible for admission under four years of age, nor above ten, except in special cases. If there was a girl over ten whom we saw in danger, we should, rather than allow her to be lost, make a special case of it, and admit her; but there is great danger in doing so, because girls of that age and class know much wickedness, and they are liable to contaminate the other children. We have much to contend with; but we cannot allow such a child to be lost if possible to prevent it.

8563. Mr. Metcalfe.] There was nothing the matter with the girl that served with you? No, but before I had her I traced the career of her parents. She had a dissolute father, and her mother had been a long time dead. She could not have seen her father or mother for a long time.

8564. But you have seen the effects of a vicious training in other cases? Yes.

8566. Mr. Cowper.] In consequence of that, you do not now apprentice them near Sydney? No, in consequence of that, except under special circumstances, we do not apprentice any children within ten miles of Sydney.

8567. President.] Not even if a child has come from a country part? No; we think that Sydney is stocked well enough—that people here have no difficulty in procuring servants, and that they would be much better if sent away from the vice of the city into the country parts, where they will not come in contact with their old companions.

8568. Mr. Metcalfe.] After the education which they receive, are they well fitted for domestic servants? Well, that is a question. I look upon the Randwick institution as a large family, and I look upon its management as the management of a father or mother who is a strict disciplinarian, and who endeavours to teach the children all occupations that they can learn,—to do for themselves all those domestic matters which are necessary to be done in a family, and to work the household as economically as possible, namely, they are employed in making their own clothes, in making their own boots and shoes, and in growing their own vegetables for domestic use, growing the green-stuff for their cows, milking the cows, and doing the odd jobs about the premises. I look upon the institution as I would upon a large family managed in that way; and, as you may observe from the small amount stated in our reports (£14 a head) as the cost of the children, from the domestic economy of the management, we are enabled to maintain our children at the annual cost of the sum mentioned in the “Annual Report,” and it is on account of the management of the children in these domestic matters, whereby we produce from the garden and farm our potatoes, vegetables, and milk, for the use of the place. We make our own clothes, boots, and shoes. That is why we are enabled to maintain the children at the small cost of £14 per head. I hear that the institutions at Parramatta do no such things as we do. Though I believe one of them produces its own milk, yet I believe that they do not produce any vegetables, so that they have to purchase those articles, and it costs more to maintain their children. They have to purchase the articles which we produce chiefly by our own labour, and that therefore makes a great difference in the cost of the children’s maintenance. If our institution is compared with those at Parramatta, it will be found that the charge for the children at Randwick, by taking into consideration the articles grown and produced, is about £14 a head; but if we look at the institutions at Parramatta, which are not productive, it will be found that the children cost, as I am informed, about £23 per head, exclusive of the cost of repairs to the buildings; and if you will refer to the Public Estimates you will find sometimes £800 or £1,000 down for these matters. The institutions are repaired and kept in order out of a special fund, which I believe is not charged with the maintenance of the children. If these repairs were charged for, and all the improvements were added to the cost, which it appears is not done, the cost per head of these children would be about £30 a year; so that the difference between the management of the institutions is this,—that those children do not produce any of the necessaries of life, and thus the difference in the management adds to the cost of maintenance.

8570. You are under a total misapprehension, and other members of the Board of the Randwick institution seem to be under the same misapprehension? Of course I have nothing to do with the accounts; they are laid before us every year, to show us the moneys received and the moneys paid away. If they have made out wrong accounts they have deceived the directory, which I must deny. We take them as they are passed by the officers and auditors, and we also look into the accounts every month, before they are passed; there is a finance committee to examine the accounts; they are examined to see that they are correct, and are certified accordingly.

8571. There is no reason to doubt the accuracy of your accounts, but there is this difference,—that in the case of the Catholic Orphanage at Parramatta everything that the children use is bought and paid for, and the money so paid goes to swell the cost per head of the children; whereas, in the case of Randwick, the cost of producing a great many articles is not considered at all. Now, wherever an article comes from it must be of a certain value, and, whether it is raised by the institution or provided by the State, you cannot help taking that value into account in estimating the cost per head of these children. The Randwick Asylum does not do so. You do not take into account the value of the articles that you produce in estimating the cost of each child per year; these other institutions do, and if you prepared your accounts in the same way as they do, the cost per head of your children would be £19 10s. per year? That is taking the productive resources of the institution into consideration.

8572. Yes, you are right in one way—you may say that this difference is saved to the Country by the labour of the children at our institution—that the goods do not cost so much, because we raise them ourselves; but these people say that it is fair to take the value of these things into consideration, because if you did not raise them you would have to buy them, and so the actual cost of maintaining the children can only be estimated by taking these things into account? I cannot understand that principle. I think that

- that that may be very easily simplified if we take these institutions as large families. For instance, a wife having a large family thinks proper to put all her washing out and pays so much a dozen for them—gives out every article of dress to make and pays a milliner—calls in the baker and pays him for his services—and although she has a large garden and a number of children to work in it, but produces nothing. The consequence of such bad management would be that the husband would have to put his hand in his pocket and pay perhaps £2,000 where he only ought to pay £1,000 per annum. If I have a wife who bakes her own bread, and so gets it for two-pence a loaf instead of three-pence—who makes her children wash the clothes of the family on the premises, where they cost her only sixpence a dozen instead of one and sixpence—who keeps a cow on the produce of the garden and produces the milk for the family—I should only have to pay (say) £500 per annum for the same things that other men would be charged £800 for. This is the way to look at the matter. The husband whose wife acted with this economy would not for a moment say, "My expenses are so much." He would say, "My house is managed more economically than my neighbour's, on account of my wife being an industrious and economical woman—she has managed my house for £500 a year, whereas my neighbour, who has an expensive wife, has had to pay £800 a year." The husband would not put down in his account that his wife's labour was worth so much. For instance, if my wife bakes a batch of bread and saves some money by it, I would not put down in my account the value of her labour, and state that she saved in baking 2s. or 5s., because that never comes into my consideration, and therefore I cannot make an asset of that which I never received.
8573. But you have the money that your wife saves to spend? I should not have it as an asset, but in the way above stated, showing that my family was maintained for less than my neighbour's.
8574. If she saves it, you must have it to spend on something else? If I have that saved and state it, I must place something against it on the other side of the ledger; if I enter it on one side of the ledger I must enter something on the other.
8575. Mr. Cowper.] But do you not see that the money you save in this way you may spend extravagantly in other ways; you may spend it in wine; you may spend it in employing too many servants, or in giving them too high wages; though you save the money out of your washing, your gardening, and so on, still you may spend more upon your children than other people spend on theirs. So it is in Randwick, where, even upon your own estimate, they spend £14 a year upon each child, while the Catholic Orphanage only spends £11? Then you put down the profits on the produce of the labour of the children, and you say that that money is paid away in extravagant expenditure to servants and others.
8576. We do not say any such thing, but we say that to find out whether the expenditure is extravagant or not, you must take the value of these products into account? Well, that is a new feature to me.
8577. We say that the management must be extravagant, as the children do so much for themselves and yet cost £14 a head, while other children who do nothing to lessen their cost only cost £11 per head? If that can be clearly shown, there must be some mistake in the management. If you will refer to the Report for 1872 you will find that all these things are stated. The treasurer's statement shows the moneys actually received and the moneys actually paid away, which is all that a treasurer's statement can show; but in the Report you will find it stated the number of boots and shoes made for the children, and so on. If we sell a ton of vegetables, the cash received for them is put down among the donations, but we cannot put down as cash what is not received as cash—it is entered in the Report as "donations."
8578. Mr. Metcalfe.] There were many boots and shoes made by the children and sold, as this Report states? Yes.
8579. Where is that money? Is that not accounted for?
8580. I cannot see any account of it here? If it is not accounted for, it certainly should be; but suppose it has been accounted for in the deduction of maintenance?
8581. They do not give us any account of the sales of boots and shoes made for private individuals, although there have been large sales? Well, it should be here, because there has been money received from that source. There is no doubt that the account is placed under one of these heads, which, in my opinion, is irregular, although correct as to the general amount.
8582. It appears that some £176 was received for boots and shoes sold. I suppose the sum went into the general account—where is it? I do not know. The treasurer can best explain that.
8583. Mr. Cowper.] They charge a certain account, called the clothing account, with the expenditure for material, &c., and they credit that account with all sales, and the balance is put down as expenditure for clothing? Yes, it appears so; the sales are deducted, that is the way it is done; but I should certainly prefer that every item should be accounted for on each side.
8584. President.] But if that were done, it would make the cost per head greater? Yes, more than £14 per head.
8585. Mr. Cowper.] In spite of these profits, you still spend £14 per head on the mere care of the children; the money is frittered away in salaries, because you should have less officers than these other institutions which have a less number of children—that is, you should have a less number of officers in proportion to the children? I do not admit the correctness of that statement at all. I believe that all the officers are necessary, and I do not believe in employing them unless you pay them properly and keep them above temptation. If you have good officers, and they render efficient service, I would always vote for their being paid a proper salary. I do not believe in employing improper characters to manage and educate children, neither do I believe that any money is frittered away by the employment of useless officers.
8586. I do not say that it could be done with less, but there is this amount of money spent in this way: you spend £14 a head on half providing for the children, and the other institutions spend £11 a head, and provide them with everything? I cannot deny that statement, as I have no proof to the contrary, but nevertheless I cannot accept it as being a correct one, because I am satisfied that the Randwick institution, taking its efficiency and numbers into consideration, is managed as cheaply, with reference to officers, as any institution that I ever read of; but, as I said before, if proper servants are employed, it is but just and right to pay them for their services: their salaries should be commensurate with what is just and right. I do not see why we should expect to get people to assist in these things for nothing. Where is the man who will assist in any of these matters and give his whole services for nothing? Of course we who are members of the committee all give our services for nothing, but if you require a continuous service from any poor man or woman you will have to pay them accordingly. We give our services for a charitable object, but as directors meeting only at intervals: if servants are employed, they must be fairly remunerated for their labour.

8587. We do not say that they should not be paid? No. From a remark of yours, I take it that you think we pay too much, and have too many officers. S. H. Pearce, Esq.

8588. I say that the care of your children costs £14 a head, while elsewhere the cost for everything is only £11 a head? I can only say, with reference to these "profits," that I cannot endorse them by any means. No doubt Mr. May has fixed a retail value on these articles which are supplied, in order to show the advantages of working the institution economically. 14 Nov., 1873.

8589. Mr. Metcalfe.] He has put down on one side what has been paid, and on the other side what the goods produced will sell for? I will give you an instance. If a sack of pease are taken from a market garden and taken to market they will be sold for about 4s. a bushel, but if they are sold retail round from house to house, the retailers will charge 2s. a peck for them, which is double the wholesale price. Now, evidently Mr. May has calculated his produce at the retail price, instead of valuing it as if it was to be sold wholesale as the market gardeners would do.

8590. Mr. Cowper.] Is the price stated there? I do not see any figures before me.

8591. I have looked through these accounts, and the prices stated are the same as the prices paid for boots and shoes by contract, and those boots and shoes are not half so good as those which are made in Randwick? With reference to the boots and shoes, it is said that there are so many made and so many thousand mended. It is a well-known fact that these children often go without boots or shoes, and when my boots are worn out I do not have them repaired. Would any of us think of having boots repaired so often except it were done by the children in this way? Only strike the difference between new ones and the repairs, and it would be considerable.

8592. That will not make much difference? If the profit is what is stated there, we are doing a grand work for the Colony. I should be inclined to start an establishment of my own if I could make such profits. You may depend that, in reality, if these things were sold and the work accounted for in the ordinary wholesale way, the half of this money would not be realized.

8593. Mr. Cowper.] But the cost of the children is more than in other institutions, even though they make all these things? Then I say the sooner it is abolished the better, if that is a true statement of the matter and the advantages equal.

8594. I say that other institutions pay the same price as that reckoned by Mr. May for a quart of milk, and the same price for a pair of boots; and notwithstanding that they have to pay these prices, there is one institution where the children only cost £13 a head, while the children at Randwick cost over £14 per head? But how is it possible, if the rate of provisions is the same, for the children at Randwick to cost more than other institutions?

8595. Mr. Metcalfe.] Because you have too many salaried officers and servants.

8596. Mr. Cowper.] And you spend that without putting anything down for building? No. In this account there is an amount for repairs of the building, but not any amount for erecting new buildings. I do not see anything with respect to the erection of new buildings, but there are repairs and alterations constantly being made by us, and the cost is charged against the maintenance of the institution generally.

8597. All the expenses are put down in the Orphan School accounts in just the same way? How is it that our children are made to cost so much more for their maintenance and so on?

8598. Mr. Metcalfe.] You see you pay £3,390 in salaries and wages? There is no doubt we have a number of officers, but they are required to be employed for the due efficiency of the place, to educate and keep the large number of children in proper order, and to make all the clothing which is there provided. These servants and officers have been considered necessary; but if it can be shown that the Randwick institution is conducted more expensively than it should be, let some recommendation be made at once. I would then take part in the reduction myself.

8599. But with a large institution the cost per head should be cheaper than in an institution where there are only 300 children? Yes, providing the advantages are equal. These children are apprenticed out at thirteen years of age—they come at all ages—and some are delicate children, unable to do much bodily labour. There are gangs of these children counted off—all the elder boys—some for the bakery, and some to the other parts of the establishment; and the girls too, some to scrub the floors, clean and wash, and assist, and so on; and so with all the children who are able to work. They are all told off in numbers to do these various works. Then they have so many hours in school; they take turn about, and are employed in this way.

8600. Should not all that assist in reducing the expenditure, as well as the great number that is there—there are more than double the number there that there are at Parramatta? Yes.

8601. And yet the management at Parramatta makes the cost per head much less than the cost per head at Randwick? Yes, so you state. They must have officers to look after the children. There are not many servants employed in the Randwick institution—servants to do the washing and scrubbing, and such things as those. There are some laundry women, and some officers appointed to instruct the children, to see that they properly behave themselves and attend to their personal cleanliness; and wherever these children are employed in numbers—if there are twenty told off to do certain work, there must be an officer told off to take charge of them. There must be a gardener to take charge of twenty sent on to the farm, to teach them, keep them in order and make them work.

8602. That is just the same as it is at Parramatta? So in the clothing department and in the shoemaking department, there must always be an officer in all these departments, to take charge of the children. The children must be properly looked after. Whether there is any excess of officers it is for this Commission to find out. I would not attempt to say that there were too many or too few, because we are bound to take the recommendations of our superintendent; and if he brings up a report saying that such and such an officer is wanted, we are bound either to question his recommendation or to appoint the person. If he says he cannot carry on the management without such an officer, we must accede to his request.

8603. You see the cost of looking after the children at Randwick is £14 a year per head? That is a large sum; and if the expenditure is too large, it should be pointed out and the matter set right if possible.

8604. Do the children learn to swim? They can if they like. There is a place fenced where they can go if they desire to do so.

NOTE (on revision):—It should be remembered that the children in the Randwick institution have hitherto been taught the various trades herein mentioned, which necessitated the employment of mechanics to teach them their various duties; and it must also be admitted that the management of that institution is far superior to that of other institutions in this Colony, or perhaps in any other Colony.

Miss Rosamond Hill called in and examined:—

MISS R. HILL. 8605. President.] This Commission has been appointed by the Government of the Colony to inquire into the working of the Charitable Institutions of the Colony, and, amongst other things, into the mode of conducting Industrial Schools and the regulation of Reformatories. Hearing that you were travelling in the Colony, and knowing the interest you have taken in institutions of the latter kind, we have asked you to give us the benefit of your experience in these matters in the Mother Country? I shall be happy to tell you anything I know which you think may be of any advantage to you. I may tell you that my father was for many years Recorder of Birmingham, and that he took a very great interest in Reformatory Institutions of every kind. He took a very active part in obtaining the Act for the establishment of Reformatory Schools in England, and devoted a great deal of time and attention to the subject, so that I have, as I may say, an hereditary interest in it. I was very intimately connected with the establishment of the Industrial School for Girls at Bristol. I was treasurer of that institution for more than four years, and after I resigned that office I remained an active manager up to the time of my leaving England. It was there that I gained my experience, for when the committee commenced the school we really knew but little of the working of such an institution, and we had to learn how to manage it as we went on: we had to try in one direction, possibly to fail, then in another, until we succeeded. These institutions are difficult to manage until experience has been gained, more especially schools for girls: those for boys need not give so much trouble.

22 Nov., 1873.

8606. How many years have you been engaged in paying attention to this subject? I was one of the managers of a ragged school in Bristol for twenty years. The first Industrial Schools Act was passed in England in 1857. Our girls' school was established in September, 1866.

8608. Then they have to start in the first instance with a few children, whom they get together by their own exertions? Yes; and then the inspector comes again and reports upon the school. The committee make application to the Secretary of State for a certificate. There is no difficulty in obtaining one, for the certificate is granted directly if the inspector reports favourably of the school. As soon as it is obtained the managers can receive children from the Magistrates. They then allow their voluntary pupils to leave them as is convenient, because children who can quit a school whenever they or their parents choose are out of place in an institution in which the inmates are compelled to remain.

8609. For what period are the children sent by the Magistrates to the school? They are generally sent for five years. Some of them are sent for as short a time as three, but we do not approve of such short sentences; we consider it our duty to enable our pupils to earn their own living when they leave us. The length of the sentence depends in some degree on the age of the child, as we cannot retain them in the school after they attain the age of sixteen;—a girl of thirteen cannot receive a sentence of more than three years duration. These elder girls are the most difficult to reform, their evil habits have taken such deep root. If children of eight or nine receive a five years sentence, it is not long enough, as they would in that case leave the school when they are thirteen or fourteen, and a girl cannot in England earn her own living under fifteen years of age. When their sentences have expired, and they go to service, we often experience great difficulty and not unseldom fail altogether in preventing their friends from inducing them to leave the places we have obtained for them. Parents who will easily part with their children while they are little are often very desirous of getting them back again when they are old enough to be useful. Of course being voluntary Associations we can refuse to take any children whom we do not think it desirable to admit into our school. The Magistrates are beginning to understand our objections to short sentences, and are gradually giving them of greater length. Though we can refuse to receive a child, we cannot dismiss it when once received—it must then remain in the school.

8610. Have you any mode of putting them out or of apprenticing them? Yes. We can place them out on license with an employer until their sentence expires.

8611. And what is your system of supervision in these cases? At first we intended to visit them ourselves, but we found that impracticable; next we appointed the matron to do this work, but that interfered too much with her duties in the institution—she was away when her presence was required in the house. At last we determined to appoint a female missionary or visitor to go round to the children and visit them in their several situations.

8612. Was this school of yours exclusively for girls? Yes. There were other schools in Bristol for boys.

8613. How many girls did you have there? There were forty-five I believe when I left Home.
8614. Have you ever thought over the question of the advisability or inadvisability of increasing the number of children in these schools beyond a certain extent? My own opinion is that the smaller the number of children you have to deal with the better. Of course the fewer the children the more expensive per head the school will be in a money point of view, as it is necessarily more expensive in proportion to manage ten than thirty or forty children; but I believe the advantage gained by the increased certainty of reforming a small number counterbalances the extra cost.
8615. Then, for the sake of the children, you think the schools should be kept small? I do, most certainly.
8616. Has any limit been arrived at by general consent as to the number of children which it would be wiser that these children should not exceed? No, there is a great difference of opinion on that point. The question has been further complicated by the fact that the Government have lately cut down the allowance of money for each child, so that the managers have often smaller funds at their command, and there is a great temptation to take a larger number of children, to render the school less expensive.
8618. And these schools which are started by voluntary effort, are they generally of this small character? When they are started they are much smaller than this. We started with six children only, and there may be others which have started with a smaller number than that.
8619. What dimensions do these schools usually attain to? One of the boys' schools at Bristol has between seventy and eighty inmates; and the other may have room for a larger number. Both these are successful undertakings, but then I may say that it is more easy to train boys in large numbers than girls—the girls give more trouble. If a boy goes wrong, he is still a child and you can treat him as such; but with a girl of nine or ten years of age who goes wrong, you find that it is a premature woman with whom you have to deal, as far as regards her knowledge of a certain kind of evil. It is this evil knowledge you must endeavour to root out, and replace it with something better. Boys are not injured by vicious courses in the same manner as girls are, and hence they are more easily reformed. I should tell you that in the great reformatory school of France, at Mettray, the system pursued is that of having a number of families, which families join together for school purposes, but each of which lives separately in its own house. M. Demetz, the principal of the institution, with whom I am well acquainted, told me that he considered twenty-five boys were a number sufficient for one family, but that, as the smaller the subdivision the greater the expense, the funds at his command did not permit him so to limit them. Each house contains two large rooms one above the other, and, in each, twenty boys work, eat, and sleep. The boys sleep in hammocks, which are taken down in the morning and put away during the day. Both arrangements are conducted with great rapidity and wonderful precision. The boys take their lessons in one schoolroom common to the institution. The cooking for each house is done in one large kitchen.
8620. Then, though altogether it is a large school, it yet combines with that the advantage of domesticity derived from comparatively smaller numbers living together as in one family? The "family system," as it is called, was instituted at the Rauke Haues near Hamburg, by Dr. Wichern. There, however, the number in each family is still smaller. It consists of twelve.
8621. How many boys were there altogether in this institution at Hamburg? There may have been about 100, but I do not know the number exactly.
8622. Did the system you saw in these two schools meet with your approval? It did.
8623. How many children are there at Mettray? There are about 700 altogether, but they do not all live in the institution. There are some outlying farms to which a portion of the elder boys are sent. I believe there are twelve houses in the institution.
8624. What character of building have they at Mettray? The houses of the boys are substantial, but extremely simple in their construction. The church, schoolroom, and all the other buildings, are of a similar character.
8625. What I mean is as to the style of buildings—are they of stone? Of stone or of brick, I believe. Several among them have been given at different times by different donors, and all have been erected as the requirements of the place seemed to demand—that is, one house has been added on after the other as it was required. The boys at Mettray remain longer at the school than we keep our boys in England. The law of France authorizes their detention till they attain the age of twenty, but in England, I think, they cannot be detained after they are eighteen.
8626. Do you know for what period a Magistrate may send a child to one of these institutions? A child can be committed to an industrial school under fourteen years of age, and may be sentenced for any period until it is sixteen. To a reformatory a child may be sentenced at any age under sixteen, and may be detained till eighteen.
8627. Mr. Cowper.] Must the Magistrate not send them if they are younger than fourteen? There is no limit as to the youth; the limit is the other way—they must not be sent to an industrial school after they are fourteen.
8628. They cannot be sent after they are older? No.
8629. President.] Then, if a child of four years of age were sent to one of these schools, he could be sent for twelve years? Exactly.
8630. These are the industrial schools of which you are now speaking? Yes. They can receive children who have been guilty of actual theft, if they are under twelve years of age; above that age such children are sent to a reformatory.
8631. And then do you mix those who have been guilty of theft with those who are unconvicted of crime? Yes, but there is no great difference between them, as they are much the same class of children, and no inconvenience or injury arises from the contact; and if those who are unconvicted happen to be so, it is in most cases simply from the fact that they have not been found out. Occasionally we get some children who are sent to us really from no faults of their own, but solely from the fault of circumstances or of their parents. Such girls are often a benefit to the institution, because a little leaven will leaven the whole lump, and the remark holds in the good as well as in the evil sense. Their good example influences the rest.
8632. Have you visited the Industrial School at Biloela? I have.
8633. From what you saw, do you think that the school is in a suitable position? I should not think so. In the first place, its associations are bad. As I understand, it was a prison in which the worst class of convicts

Miss R. Hill. convicts were confined. In England our great desire is to keep children from any association with gaols. When a Magistrate has a child brought before him under the provisions of the Industrial Schools Act, it very often happens that some days must elapse while a school is being sought to which it can be committed. Of course during this time the child must be kept in safe custody, but there is a special clause in the Act forbidding its being put in prison, but directing that it shall be sent to the nearest workhouse.* Imprisonment incapacitates a boy ever after from entering the Army or Navy; and this is found to be a great injury to him, because in England the Army or Navy is often the best mode of life for him. It is not residence in the reformatory which incapacitates him, but the detention in gaol which the law requires before he can be received into a reformatory. That, however, is a state of things we must alter in England before very long.

22 Nov., 1873. 8634. You do not think it desirable to send the young child to a gaol? No, I do not; and that was one of the points most warmly debated when the Reformatories Act was under discussion. My father was always very strongly opposed to it. The idea was that the child must make atonement for his crime, and should therefore be sent to prison. When atonement has been made, then he should go to the school to be reformed. This condition has not done the harm expected from it, because a period of fourteen days passed in gaol, if it be well ordered, where he cannot associate with other prisoners, does not injure the child, while it does give him time for reflection, and makes his entrance into the reformatory a step upwards.†

8635. Mr. Metcalfe.] Is it not always brought up against him if he has been in gaol? No, I do not think it has been found so, though it has been generally supposed that this would be the case. There is a feeling of compassion for the children and a desire to have the matter forgotten.

8636. President.] It seems to me that in sending children to an industrial school, you send them to nothing more than a kind of boarding school? If the schools are established under the Acts of 1857 and 1867, the inmates are unable to quit them—they are compelled to remain until the expiration of their sentences. With this difference, the children are in a boarding school.

8637. Then, besides the mere school instruction, do you give them instructions of any other kind? Yes. They do all the work of the house; they do all their own washing, and the school takes in washing also. We try to fit them as nearly as possible for the life they will lead after they leave us. They do everything about the house. We have no servants at all.

8638. Do you think it desirable that children should be relieved of all this labour by the application of steam—as for instance, in the laundry, by a steam-washing apparatus? No; because when they leave us and go out to service they will not find these appliances, and will be unable to do the work required of them.

8639. Your ideas are against training these children up with appliances unlike what they are likely to meet with in the particular class they will have to live in? Exactly.

8640. And is that the opinion of those generally who have the management of industrial schools? It is.

8641. But it is not the opinion of those who have the conduct of workhouses and of pauper schools in connection with the parish? I am sorry to say it is not, except in rare instances. The large numbers in these schools necessitate the economy of labour produced by these appliances. Besides, it is far more easy to have the work done in this way than to teach the children to do it themselves.

8642. Amongst those who take a philanthropic view of the matter, and are not anxious to rid themselves of the trouble of teaching the children, it is considered better that they should be taught to do things for themselves? Yes, and I may say that Miss Carpenter is very particular on that point, and prohibits the use of any machinery in her reformatory at Red Lodge at Bristol. I do not entirely agree with her. The use of machines in domestic life is rapidly increasing in England, and therefore the ability to work them is becoming more and more necessary. As yet, however, the sewing machine is not much used amongst our humbler classes.

8643. Mr. Metcalfe.] From what we ourselves know of England, it must be apparent that there is no sewing by machine in the cottages of the peasants? Not in England; they have but little chance of obtaining them. Besides, if the girls learn to sew with the machine and not with their fingers, their knowledge probably will be of little use to them, because they will but rarely find machines to work when they go to service, and if they did, there is a certain amount of hand-work required even with a machine. They should learn to sew with their fingers first; the power of working the machine is not difficult to acquire afterwards. We always taught the girls in our schools to sew with their fingers, and, with the sanction of my colleagues, I had caused some of those who could sew with their fingers to learn to work the machine. We make all the clothes, mattresses, pillows; in fact everything that can be made. The only articles of clothing we buy are boots and hats.

8644. President.] What was the average cost per child in your school? About 7s. 6d. per week I believe; but I must tell you that when we bought the house in which the school is carried on we raised nearly half the purchase money by subscription; and therefore, in counting the cost per head this sum ought to be reckoned, and the 7s. 6d. does not include this. The other portion of the purchase money we raised by a mortgage on the property, and the interest paid on that mortgage stands in the place of rent.

8645. And how much per child is allowed you by the Government? We received 5s. a week from the Government, except in the case of those children who were sent to us under the 16th section of the Industrial Schools Act. Under that section a parent may apply to a Magistrate to commit his child to an Industrial School, and in that case only 3s. a week is allowed. This regulation was made to deter managers from too easily receiving children whose parents might desire to get rid of the trouble and expense of maintaining them.

8646. Is there any provision by which a parent can be compelled to pay for his child when the child has not been under the control of the parent—when in fact you may have taken it off the streets? Yes. The Magistrates have power to order the parents to pay a certain sum a week towards the maintenance of the child.

8647. By the parents? Yes; they generally order about 1s. a week, and from that up to 2s. 6d. a week. The Magistrates may order any sum not exceeding 5s. per week. They, however, rarely order so large a sum as this.

* NOTE (on revision):—The Act declares that any child who has been in prison is ineligible for reception in an industrial school.

† NOTE (on revision):—Little children are now sent to industrial schools, and therefore as a rule it is only when they are above twelve years of age that boys and girls are liable to be sent to prison.

8648. But they do order something to be paid? Yes. The parents of such children are generally persons who, if they did not waste their substance in drink, could earn a respectable living. Whilst they are following vicious courses their children are neglected, running about the streets and going to ruin. But because a parent neglects his duty towards his child, that is no reason that he should be allowed to escape the expense of its maintenance. Miss R. Hill.
22 Nov., 1873.

8649. And if he does not pay the money what is done—is the child turned out of the school? No, we do not turn out the child; we receive the allowance from Government whether the parent contributes or not. The money recovered from the parents goes to the Government—the schools have nothing to do with it. Great difficulty has been experienced in recovering the payments from the parents, and many escape entirely from contributing towards the support of their children in the schools.

8651. There is a class of persons in England who do not like to be troubled with children, and would be glad to get rid of them if they could? I am sorry to say there is.

8652. And do you take these children without payments, trusting to the parents to pay you? No, we do not take them unless the Magistrate sends them to us. If he considered that the parent be only trying to get rid of his child he would probably not commit it. It is entirely in his own discretion to do so or not.

8653. And where the parent is ordered to pay and does not do so, he has not been forced to pay? He has often escaped doing so up to the present time, but the appointment of the agents I have before mentioned will effect a very great improvement in this respect. There is power under the Act to distrain for the money due, but this power has, I believe, never been enforced. My own opinion is that this power might have been wisely exercised. One example of distraining—of course, I mean distraining for a small sum, because the entire possessions of this class of parents would only be of small value—would give a lesson to the whole neighbourhood. Landlords can obtain their rents from exactly the same class. Surely the Government, possessed of the power of the law, ought to be able to enforce its own commands, and compel the parents of children committed to reformatory and industrial schools to contribute towards their maintenance.

8654. And you think that twenty children, if girls, are enough for any one school? Yes.

8655. If you have only twenty children in a school, the expenses for the salary of the matron and other charges would be just the same as for forty children? I have said that the small school would be more expensive than the large one in proportion to the number of children; but then you must consider this,—that you would be more certain to reform the girls, and therefore it would be a wise expenditure, be it what it may, if you can turn the children into respectable men and women.

8656. Were all the officers in your schools volunteers? No. The committee of managers were volunteers; the matrons and teachers were paid officers.

8657. Will you tell us what was the organization of your school? The system of management was organized by the committee, which consisted entirely of ladies. They arranged the hours for lessons and for work, engaged the officers, determined the amount of their salaries, and fixed (under some slight Government limitation) the dietary for the children. One matron was the chief officer, and was responsible to us for the carrying on of the institution under the regulations we had drawn up.

8658. What salary did you pay her? We paid her £40 a year.

8659. She, of course, lived in the house? Yes. She had her board, lodging, and washing in addition.

8660. Then she did not find herself? No. Of course we did not buy her clothes. We had a schoolmistress, who gave the whole of the instruction in school, besides, with the assistance of the sub-matron, teaching the sewing as well.

8661. For twenty children? No; we had forty-five children. Then we had a laundress, who superintended the laundry and the work of the girls in that branch. The girls did the work. It was her business to teach them how to do it. She was lower in rank than the matron and schoolmistress, and took her meals with her laundry girls. She however was in a position of responsibility. There was an assistant matron, who had a portion of the work of the house under her superintendence, part of her duty being to teach the elder girls to cut out their clothes. We gave her £20 a year, the laundress £20 a year, and the schoolmistress £25 a year. The latter came into our employment at that salary, but it was understood that it should be raised after a time.†

8662. Mr. Metcalfe.] That makes £105 a year for forty-five children, or 22s. per head, for management alone, exclusive of clothes, food, or rent? Yes. We kept our accounts ourselves, and conducted our correspondence with Government and with the Magistrates ourselves. The matron managed the minor expenses, under our supervision, but all the larger purchases were made by the treasurer.

8663. Did you consider that you had a larger number of officers than was required, seeing that you had ladies to look into the management? No. Besides the committee, one officer to ten pupils is considered about the right proportion. We did not begin with four; we increased our officers as our pupils increased.

8664. Then in all cases you think that that proportion of officers is required, and that the average of children should not be greater than in your school? Yes. We did not consider that we had a larger proportion of officers than other schools, nor that we paid ours more highly than managers of other schools.

8665. President.] Do these schools all depend upon the voluntary efforts of those who started them—you have no schools supported by the Government? None at all.‡ 8666.

* NOTE (on revision):—My father considered it to be essential that parents should feel that, if they shifted the duty of bringing up their children on to the State, they would not thereby rid themselves of the cost of their maintenance. He believed that, supposing the expense incurred in recovering these contributions equalled the contributions themselves, yet that their recovery would be a wise expenditure of time and money.

† NOTE (on revision):—We expected to raise the salaries of all our officers if they remained long in our employment and proved themselves to be efficient. Our matron began with £35 a year, which has been raised to £40.

‡ NOTE (on revision):—Voluntary managers can at any time close their school by giving due notice to the Government of their intention to do so. I believe also they must, before they close their school, first dispose of their pupils by placing them in other certified industrial schools whose managers are willing to receive them.

- Miss R. Hill. 8666. Mr. Metcalfe.] What do you consider to be the particular advantage of having the schools so small—at Mettray for instance, you say that they have a number of houses—where is the advantage in this? In this way, that to each house there is attached a house father or superintendent, who has the boys in that house under his care. With a small number he will be able to understand the temper and disposition of every one, and can adapt his treatment to the peculiar idiosyncrasies of each. With a large number, children of very different dispositions must be treated all alike.
8667. Then, in order to make these schools successful, you think it necessary to have some person put over every twenty boys, or do you think he might undertake the management of a larger number? It would require very peculiar powers in the master, if it could be successfully accomplished at all. These children require what Sir Walter Crofton terms individualization, i.e., treatment adapted to each individual.
8668. They require attending on and looking after night and day? Yes, they are always under superintendence. In our own school the matron sleeps on one floor, the assistant matron on another, and the laundress on another, so that some one is always near them during the night.
8669. Do they sleep in the dormitories with the girls? Either in the dormitories or close by.
8671. I suppose each house has a different branch of trade? Yes, I believe so. Many trades are carried on very successfully.
8672. Do you not think it more costly than the system we adopt here, of a large number of boys working together as at Randwick? The first cost is certainly greater, but it will be found to be cheaper in the end, because it will be more certain to teach a larger number to support themselves in after-life. I did not approve of the very large classes I saw in the schoolroom at Randwick.
8673. Why do you think it objectionable? Because in such large classes it is impossible to give each child sufficient attention. The quick-witted and the industrious may learn, but the dull and the idle will not.
8674. What time did you give to scholastic teaching with your children? The Government obliges us to give each girl three hours' schooling per day. Those who were employed in the laundry and kitchen took half their school instruction before breakfast—that is, before they began their work—and the other half in the evening when it was finished. The others were in school in the morning and employed in needlework in the afternoon; but all had some time for recreation, and every pupil in the whole school took some part in the daily cleaning of the house.
8675. Had they any hard work to do? Yes. They did all the work of the house, besides the washing which we took in.
8676. One of the conditions of success is to keep the girls at work to keep them out of mischief? Yes; but their strength must not be overtasked, and, as I have just said, our girls were always allowed time for play. Then again, we often had to send them out on errands, such as carrying messages, or taking home the washing, &c.
8677. Did you make your institution in any way self-supporting? Of course our children made all their own clothes, but we could do very little work of a remunerative kind. We took in washing, but the benefit we derived from this was in the practice it gave the girls in the higher branches of laundry work, rather than from any money profit we obtained, which was very small, if indeed it existed at all.
8678. President.] Do you think it desirable that benevolent people in this Colony should take an interest in endeavouring to find places for these girls who are now on Biloela? Yes. It would be akin to the work done by Societies which exist in several Countries in Europe, whose work consists in befriending persons when they leave prisons or reformatories. The benevolent men and women who are members of these Societies look after those leaving prisons—often obtain work for them, and give them advice in any difficulty or trouble. In France these Societies are called Sociétés de patronage.
8679. Have you found any difficulty in apprenticing the girls from your school? We have never found any difficulty in finding them places of service. We do not apprentice them. The supply has often been unequal to the demand.
8680. Is it not one of the conditions of success that after they leave school to go to service, these girls should be subject to judicious supervision? Certainly, I consider that to be essential.
8681. Then you do not consider your work finished when you send the girl from your school to fight her way in the world? No. The Government obliges us to send in yearly reports upon the conduct of the children for three years after they quit the school; and even if it did not, we should hardly be inclined to leave the girls entirely to themselves, after having laboured for years in their reformation, at a period too when they are not old enough to be left completely to their own resources.
8682. And how do you carry out this supervision? If they are placed anywhere near the institution, the matron or one of the managers visited them; if at a distance, we made our inquiries by letter.
8683. Is it not essential that benevolent-minded persons should devote themselves to this kind of work—or in other words, is not such work much better done by volunteers than by any mere officials? Voluntary assistance in the work of reformation is a condition essential to its success. The volunteer can obtain an influence over the person to be reformed, be it man, woman, or child, to which the mere paid official never attains. The cause of this influence is the conviction in the mind of the person to be reformed that the volunteer is performing a labour of love.
8684. Is not the fault that all this is done in an official and not in a kind way, as it is by ladies who volunteer to do the work? It has been and still is in many parts of England the duty of the relieving officer to visit the girls sent out to service from the workhouse schools. His arrival is an announcement that the girl comes from the workhouse and has to be visited by its officers, and is often most injurious to her. The girls require a friend to advise them.
8685. Is there a Government Department to examine into the reports you send in about the girls, or is it a mere matter of form? No, it is not a matter of form. The Home Secretary is the Minister under whose direction Industrial Schools are placed, and H.M. Inspector of Reformatory and Industrial Schools is the officer who receives and conveys our reports to the Home Secretary.
8686. Then there is a Government Department to look after the matter? Yes, certainly.
8687. Do the visitors ever hear of any falling back into the old courses on the part of the girls after they have left school? Yes, there will always be some failures. But the visiting is an essential part of the training, and often prevents falling back into evil courses.

8688. Mr. Metcalfe.] How long do you exercise this supervision over the girls? We exercise supervision— Miss R. Hill. that is, we can remove them from their places of employment and take them back into the school—until the period of their detention expires, if we think fit, supposing we have placed them out on license. If, however, they do not quit the school until their sentence is fulfilled we have no longer any power over them. We can only report to Government on their conduct, which we are required to do for three years after they leave the school. 22 Nov., 1873.

8689. Mr. Cowper.] Do you find that the work of these institutions is better done by ladies than by gentlemen? Girls' schools are certainly managed by ladies better than by gentlemen. Ladies have more leisure than gentlemen. One of the boys' schools in Bristol is managed by a committee of ladies and gentlemen, mixed. Our own school was managed entirely by ladies, but I know of no other completely under female management.

8690. By the report your sister has handed in of the Bristol Ragged School, I see that there is a joint committee of ladies and gentlemen: did they find this mixing of the two to act well? Yes, very well.

8691. Did the ladies and gentlemen agree well together? Yes, they did in the school to which I refer. The ladies took a more active part in the details of the school, whilst the general business was undertaken by the gentlemen? Both ladies and gentlemen occasionally taught in the school, and the supervision of the needlework fell naturally to us.

8692. We find the difficulty here to be, that what the ladies recommend the gentlemen will not carry out? That indeed is unfortunate.

8693. Do you find anything of that kind at Home? I have not heard of disagreements where ladies and gentlemen form one committee, and therefore are on a perfect equality.

8694. In procuring a house for your school in the first instance, did you look out for any particular class of house for the purpose? In the first place we looked out for a house that was as little looked over as possible from neighbouring houses. Then we required a garden as a drying- as well as play-ground. It was necessary that the house should be in as central a position as circumstances would allow, because the managers lived at considerable distances in various directions. Still we were desirous to have our house in as airy a situation as we could, in order to promote the health of the children, and so placed also as to separate those of our children belonging to Bristol, from their old associates.

8696. Mr. Metcalfe.] You try to make their life with you as much as possible like the life they will have to lead after they leave you? Yes. Some slight restraints, however, must be used. Our front door was always locked, the key being kept during the day by the girl whose business it was to open the door; and we placed iron spikes on the top of our garden wall. I believe we found these as useful in preventing persons from coming in as they were in preventing our girls from getting out. At the same time, those whom we could trust were constantly sent on errands into the neighbourhood and into the town; but we did not send one girl alone—we considered it safer to send two together.

8697. Were their parents allowed to visit them? Yes; they were allowed to come and see the children once a month.

8698. Did you find that unsettle them at all? No, I do not think it did.

8699. Mr. Cowper.] If the parents were of bad character would you let them visit the children? If of very bad character they seldom come. But they were of a very low class, and if they were not admitted, either because they were not sober or from other causes, they were very often saucy. As there were only women in our institution, and it was injurious to the children to hear their remarks, and very unpleasant to our matrons and ourselves, we thought it better to have a policeman sitting in the hall during the hours for visiting. His presence always made the most unruly perfectly quiet, and there was never occasion for him to enter the adjoining room in which the parents met their children in the presence of a matron of the institution.

8700. Mr. Metcalfe.] In the majority of cases I suppose that the parents of these children were dissolute people? Yes, either drunkards or dissolute persons, some of them receiving out-door relief from the parish—allowing their children meanwhile to run half-starving about the streets, learning all manner of evil. The Guardians of the Poor have power, under the Industrial Schools Act, to send children who are very unruly in the workhouse before a Magistrate, with a view to their being committed to an industrial school, and I believe they can if they choose send contributions towards its funds; but we had no such children committed to our school. The Corporation of Bristol allowed us 1s. per week for each child committed by the Magistrates of that city.

8701. Then in that case I suppose you would get so much the less from the Government? No; we received precisely the same amount from the Government as for children committed by any other Magistrates.

8702. Would you get the 5s. from the Government as well as the 1s. from the Corporation? Yes. The Act enables all prison authorities (Borough and County Magistrates come under this category) to raise rates, out of which they may contribute towards the support of those children whom they commit to reformatory and industrial schools.*

8703. Then it would seem to be the great object to prevent this class of children which come to your schools from being taken to the workhouses, amongst the merely indigent poor? No; rather to supply the reformatory training they can never receive in a workhouse.

* NOTE (on revision):—Since the passing of the Education Act this power has been transferred to School Boards. The Government have latterly reduced the contributions they make to industrial schools—3s. instead of 5s. is now allowed for children under ten years old. Nothing at all is contributed for those under six. After fifteen, supposing the girl or boy to have been four years in the school, 3s. is the weekly sum allowed. I believe these reductions have been made with a view of inducing the local authorities to increase their contributions, and thus lessen the burden on the funds of the Imperial Government.

Miss R. Hill.

8704. Will you be good enough to explain to us what is the distinction between a reformatory and an industrial school? Reformatory schools receive older and more criminal children than industrial ones do. The instruction given and the employments provided are very similar in both schools. The discipline in the reformatory is perhaps more strict than in the industrial. Children can, I believe, be committed to a reformatory up to the age of sixteen; but of whatever age, they must, to render themselves liable to be sent to that kind of school, commit an offence against the law, and if of a grave character, they may be tried at Quarter Sessions, and must pass, under any circumstances, at least fourteen days in gaol before they can enter the reformatory. The industrial school receives children summarily convicted by the Magistrates under twelve years of age for theft, and under any age up to fourteen for begging, having no home, or being without proper guardianship. Perhaps the chief distinction between a reformatory and an industrial school is, that the latter cannot receive children who have ever been in prison.

8705. As I understand it, the Magistrate has power to send a child to an industrial school simply by reason of its being neglected; but where an offence is charged against it, he is to a great extent guided by its previous character? Yes, and by its age.

8706. Have you no schools for children who have committed no offence but being simply found on the streets? No; such children are committed to industrial schools.

8707. And in addition to these, you receive the children who may be said to be of bad character and who may have committed an offence? Yes; if they be under twelve years of age, and their offence is a slight one.

8708. President.] And then after twelve years of age what becomes of them? After that they are sent to a reformatory, or they may be even before that age, if their offence be of a grave character.

8709. I suppose the offence they commit is principally stealing? Yes, I think pretty nearly half our numbers have been sent for stealing—for petty pilfering.

8710. And what would be the causes for which the others would be sent to you? For begging, or for selling things in the streets—matches or flowers—which after all is only another form of begging. We had one girl sent to us from Merthyr Tydvil in whom there was no real evil, but her mother was a most abandoned woman, who would probably have brought her own daughter to ruin. The stipendiary Magistrate considered that though the girl had a home, she was, in the meaning of the Act, without proper guardianship.

8711. Mr. Metcalfe.] Have you no schools to which you can send girls of fourteen or fifteen, so that they may not be in danger of being contaminated by being mixed with women of improper character? The law does not provide for such cases in England. Fourteen is the limit of age under which they can be committed to an industrial school—and indeed, these schools would not approve of receiving girls above that age to mix with their younger pupils. Their example would in all probability injure them. Besides, girls who must begin their training at fourteen should be treated somewhat differently from those who enter the school as little girls, and the two modes of treatment can hardly be successfully carried on in the same institution.

8712. President.] I suppose you have in your schools girls of no such character as those we have at Biloela? No, none like the elder more insubordinate ones, but if we had, we certainly should not mix them with the little ones. They would be kept by themselves, if they were ever admitted into the same school.

8713. Do you think that our efforts in regard to these girls are not likely to be successful so long as we continue to conduct the institution at Biloela upon the present plan? I should think not. I cannot say what good discipline might effect. From what I saw at Biloela, I should think the discipline bad.

8714. Do you not think that the practice of locking the girls up at night in their dormitories, without occupation and without sufficient light, is almost certain to lead to mischief? Most certainly I do. If we were to do such a thing as that in our schools at Home, our certificate would be taken away from us, as we should be considered quite incompetent to manage a girls' school. One very bad feature in this system is the placing little girls with the big ones in the dormitories, out of hearing of the officers. These elder ones are almost certain to ill-use the little ones, besides teaching them much that is evil.

8715. Mr. Couper.] Excepting some extreme cases, the facts are all the other way. They never ill-use the young children, but on the contrary pet them and seem to be fond of them. Our great difficulty seems to me to be to find something for the girls to do—something in which they will take an interest, so as to furnish them with occupation. There is certainly one thing in their favour—that they are very kind to each other. Of course they quarrel sometimes, but they never ill-treat or ill-use each other, and what is more, they seem to have a thorough knowledge of what is good and what is bad. They are all anxious for work, and if we could only find work for them we might do something with them by applying the mark system to them, after what is called the Irish system? I think it essential that employment should be found for the girls.

8716. What system of rewards and punishments do you adopt in your school? For good behaviour we issue good marks, and a certain number of these marks entitles the child to receive a halfpenny or a penny. There are also small offices in the school filled by the girls who can be trusted, and for which small salaries are paid.

8717. And you say that you let the girls go out occasionally? Yes, but only those whom we can trust. We send them out on errands frequently, and we have found the plan answer well. They can be trusted to carry small sums of money. With regard to punishments, we sometimes gave bread and water diet for a day or two, but we did not like this punishment to be frequent, because, though our girls had enough food, they had no more than enough to keep them in health, and we did not consider it wise to lower their diet. We had a cell which was nearly dark, in which we put the girls for a day—or sometimes two or three, but they never slept there. We had a small room inside one of the matron's rooms, in which girls who were under punishment, or who were troublesome in their dormitories, slept alone. We also used corporal punishment in rare cases for very bad conduct. The punishments—especially the heavier ones—were frequently awarded by the managers themselves, the matron preferring to apply to them to decide what punishment should be inflicted. We, the managers, were strongly of opinion that the power of inflicting corporal punishment should not be entrusted to the matrons, and should be used only in extreme cases. The Inspector of Reformatory and Industrial Schools, however, so strongly urged us to invest our matron with this power that we gave way, or rather we effected a compromise. Our matron has power to whip the girls without referring to us, but she must wait two hours after the offence has been committed before she inflicts the penalty, in order that the whipping may be purely a punishment, and and quite free from any feeling of vengeance. The matron, who is the only officer entrusted with the power of punishing, is obliged to report each punishment she inflicts to the managers. I am opposed to the use—except in very rare cases—of corporal punishment. The inmates of these schools have generally been too much struck and knocked about by their parents or associates to receive benefit from whipping in the school. Miss R. Hill.

22 Nov., 1873.

8718. President.] Do you not think it fatal to the development of any self-respect amongst girls that they should be struck by a man? I should think so, most certainly. Nothing could well be more degrading, or more calculated to lower a girl in her own estimation than to be struck by a man.

8719. That is a thing which never ought to be allowed under any circumstances? I should certainly say not. It is bad enough when the chastisement comes from a female hand, and then it requires the utmost care and judgment. We have found some girls who require the infliction of actual pain before they can be impressed beneficially, but I think such cases are very rare indeed.

8720. What corporal punishment do you give them? Generally some strokes with a cane on the hand.

8721. But never so much as to raise a mark? Most certainly not. If a girl should become so insubordinate as to be quite unmanageable, the Act empowers the managers to take her before a Magistrate with a view to her being sent to pass the remainder of her sentence in a reformatory. We had a case of that kind, and for the benefit of the rest of our pupils, we were obliged to obtain her transfer to a reformatory school.

8722. You have been over the Randwick Asylum? I have.

8723. And your idea is that having so large a number of children together in one institution is undesirable? Yes, I should think so.

8724. How will that institution compare with institutions of a similar character in England? I can hardly form a comparison, because I have visited but few such institutions at Home. It did not appear to me to compare well for cleanliness with Müller's Orphan Houses near Bristol, which is the only secular institution in England with which I am much acquainted. In that school, however, I noticed a subdued appearance not natural in childhood.

8725. Did you observe that subdued look amongst the children at Randwick? Certainly not so much here as at Müller's, but still it was observable.

8726. Has not the cutting of the hair the effect of giving that subdued look you speak of? It may have that effect here, but that was not the cause at Müller's school.

8727. How many children have they at that school? Müller has five houses all near together, and about 1,100 children in the five: that would give rather more than 200 in each house.

8728. Has each child a separate bed? Almost every one has a separate bed, but there are a few who sleep two in a bed. The dormitories are quite remarkable, for they are spotless. Indeed, the whole house is in the highest state of order and neatness, and the children's dress and appearance scrupulously neat and clean, and their behaviour in their classes as quiet and regular as possible. But as visitors are admitted but on one day in the week, when everything is prepared for their reception, it is not easy under these circumstances to judge of the real efficiency of the system.

8729. What is the annual cost per child at Müller's school? It used to be £12 a year; but whether in that amount they reckoned the cost of the house I cannot say. The houses all belonged to Müller, and have been built by him. I believe he never began the building of one until he had sufficient money in hand to complete it.

8730. Was that school in any way reproductive? No. Most of the work of the institution was performed by the inmates, and the boys worked in the garden.

8731. Were the children taught any trade? No. The boys are apprenticed to trades on leaving the school, a premium being paid to their masters, and the girls all go to service. I have, however, heard that the girls when they go out into the world are sometimes unable to take care of themselves. Having been accustomed to live in very large numbers which must be necessarily treated as a mass, they do not learn to depend on themselves.

8733. Do you know of a large school at Swinton near Manchester? I have heard of it. It is a separate school for pauper children from Manchester.

8734. By the plan upon which this school is conducted the individuality of the child is not at all lost, whilst the boys look upon their masters as their friends, and often as their parents, and are thus led on more easily to reformation? It is not a reformatory, but a pauper school. I have never seen it, but as it contains a great mass of children, I should hardly think it accomplishes all you say.

8735. Mr. Cowper.] I understand that there are 1,200 children at Norwood and 800 at Swinton, so that there must be some confidence in them? I believe they are considered good specimens of their class by those who have faith in such large institutions, which I have not.

8736. The school at Norwood is understood to be a district school? Yes, I believe it is, but I know very little of the district or the separate schools, as I have never visited them.

8737. President.] Has it not been found, as a matter of fact, that a number of the children discharged from these schools who have been supposed to do well in after-life have been found to have fallen into vicious courses, and that there have been many more failures than have been taken into account? Yes, it is too often the case that, because nothing is heard of a girl after she leaves the school that therefore she must have done well as a woman.

8738. Then you agree with me that there are many of those children who have been discharged from these schools and have been supposed to have done well, that have turned out badly? I do. Pauper children, unless boarded out, are always in the district or the separate schools, or what is worse, in the school in the workhouse. Indeed, in all these schools we may be said to be rearing a future generation of paupers.

- Miss R. Hill. 8740. They are mixed up all together—the good and the bad, the idle and the industrious—and no work of any kind is given them to do? Work is given them to do, though perhaps but little is accomplished; and I fear the idle and the industrious are mixed up together. As regards the children, it is very difficult to avoid this when a large proportion of them are constantly coming in and going out of the schools, as they are brought in and taken out by their parents.
- 22 Nov., 1873. 8741. But the great characteristic of the workhouse is its idleness? Hardly so, when all who are able are required to work. But it is work seldom done with a will. Guardians of the poor have aimed at making life in the workhouse as irksome as possible to the able-bodied, and this, especially in times of prosperity, causes the workhouses to be chiefly inhabited by the sick, the infirm, and the children.
8742. Still it is the only place to which children who do not come under the category named in the Reformatory and Industrial Schools Acts can be sent? Yes.
8743. President.] If a man has lost his employment, the only place for him to go to is the workhouse? Yes, unless the Guardians choose to give him out-door relief.
8744. But as a general rule do not the Guardians send these persons into the workhouse? I can hardly say that it is the rule, because it varies in every Union.
8745. In Ireland, however, there is nothing but the workhouse for the pauper—they give no out-door relief there? I am not aware whether it is so or not. Out-door relief should be administered with great care and judgment. To those who fall into want through illness or some other temporary cause, and can manage to tide over their time of adversity with a little help, out-door relief is very beneficial; but if given to persons of dissolute habits, out-door relief enables them to indulge their vices at the expense of the public. They do not experience much difficulty in obtaining enough to eke out a living, pleasant enough to them, by begging. Indeed, residence in a workhouse is not to be desired for any persons, and for children it is especially sad.
8746. President.] Do you approve of the boarding-out system, as adopted in England, in connection with the workhouses? Yes, most assuredly I do. The health of the children is vastly improved by the more natural life they lead in their foster parents' cottages. They cease to be surrounded, as it were, with the pauper atmosphere of the workhouse. They forget their old dependent associations, and become as self-reliant as the class among whom they live.
8747. Has it not been found better that the children should grow up under the circumstances amongst which they will have to carve their way in the world? It has been so.
8748. Then, from what you have seen, do you consider that public opinion is favourable to this system? Yes; and it is now making very steady progress.
8749. Is there any difficulty experienced in getting persons to take them? None.
8750. Are objections made by the Guardians, when the person is thought not to be of proper character? Certainly, when any such apply; and strict inquiry is made into the character of all persons applying for children to be placed out with them.
8751. I suppose you have not seen enough of this Colony to enable you to say whether the boarding-out system could be successfully adopted here? No, I cannot; but I may say that it has been adopted in South Australia, and has been very successful. When I was in South Australia recently, the gentleman who is at the head of this particular department took us round to see several of the children in their foster-parents' homes.
8752. And did the working of the system in South Australia compare, in your opinion, favourably with the working of the same system in England? Yes, I considered that it worked quite as well, as far as it came under my notice.
8753. Is it not better for the child that he should grow up amidst the difficulties which he will have to encounter in after-life, than to be shut up in a school where he sees nothing but a daily routine? Certainly it is.
8755. Is it found that the children take kindly to these foster-parents? Yes, they do; and the foster-parents become equally attached to them. My sister has heard of some strong instances of this being the case. There is one story of a foster-mother in a Union, where a few of the children had been boarded out, on hearing that from some change of plan the children were to be returned to the workhouse—and she was a poor woman too—who went to the Guardians and offered to keep her foster-child for nothing, as she said that she had become so attached to it that she could not part with it.
8756. And the children become absorbed in this way amongst the labouring population from which they have sprung? They do.
8757. It seems to me also to be the more economical plan for taking the clothing, supervision, and board: you would consider £10 a year per child to be anything but an excessive charge? I should.
8758. Are these children boarded in the country villages or in the town? Nearly all in the country, as it is found to be more healthful. Children of that class are usually very sickly, owing to dirt and neglect. Those who are sent to industrial schools are also often very sickly, from the same causes. They used to come to our school sometimes most hideously dirty, and we very often had to burn their clothes, they were so full of vermin. Our first work was to wash them thoroughly clean. We never allowed them to associate with the other children until a medical man had seen them and pronounced them to be free from infectious disease. Even then we did not allow them to sleep in the dormitories with the rest for the first week. We always desired to learn something of their character before we liked them to be with their companions at night. They often have very dirty habits, and are apt to use bad language. Very probably because they have been accustomed to use it in their wretched homes, and have never been taught the difference between good and evil.
8759. Do they soon give up their bad habits? The time they take varies with the disposition, and almost always with the age of each child. The younger they come to us the better. The example of their well-behaved companions has a powerful influence over them.
8760. Have you been connected with any of the boys' schools? No; mine was a girls' school, but I have seen schools for boys.
8761. I think you said that the boys were more easily managed than girls? Yes, it is more easy to find active and out-door employment for boys. The open air has always a beneficial influence on these children.

children. I cannot tell why, but I know it as a fact that, when a member of my own sex falls into evil courses she seems to be worse and more degraded than a man does; it is therefore a more difficult task to reinstate her in a virtuous life. One of our early child-reformers, and a very remarkable person, said it was more easy to reform ten boys than one girl; but that when you had reformed one girl you had done as much as if you had reformed ten boys. It is a fact that if the mother of a family be respectable and industrious she will in all probability bring up her children to be the same, let the father be dissolute and drunken; but if also her character be bad, the respectability of the father has but small power to counteract her evil influence.

8762. Mr. Cowper.] In the school you speak of, what was the age of the oldest girl that was sent to you? It is very difficult to tell their ages exactly, as they are concealed for various reasons, and very often neither they or their parents know their ages. I think the oldest sentenced girl we received may have been nearly sixteen. Her age was stated, however, as being under fourteen.

8763. She was the oldest amongst your pupils? Yes, I believe she was. The words of the Act are "apparently under fourteen," which gives the Magistrates a certain discretion.

8764. Your number of scholars never exceeded twenty? No, I said that the number was forty-five, and I have heard since I came out here that there have been as many as fifty. There is, however, not more than sufficient room for forty-four, and if the number were smaller than that it would be all the better for the children.

8765. And they are sentenced for three years? Not always; sometimes for three, five, six, and even ten years. We have now one child who was not quite six years old when she came, and she has been sentenced to remain with us until she is sixteen.

8766. President.] Do you think that girls who have committed no offence, but who have got beyond their mother's control, should be taken from them and put to school to learn habits of industry? It would doubtless be very beneficial to the girls. In England, however, we have no law which enables us to receive girls above fourteen years of age. I wish we had. But without a power of legal detention a school for older girls would be of little or no use. I should approve of a school for girls above fourteen. Perhaps the term of detention should be of uncertain length, as some would require a longer training than others, and it might also be expedient to enable the school authorities to enforce a longer term of apprenticeship or supervision in some cases.

8767. Would you send girls above twelve and under sixteen to be kept till they were eighteen, supposing them to be beyond the control of their parents, if they were consorting with bad girls—oblige them to remain twelve months in the school, and then apprentice them till they were eighteen if they were of good behaviour? Yes.

8768. And if the girl does not behave well in her apprenticeship, should she be returned to the school, after being taken before a Magistrate for punishment? I cannot tell. We have no law in England which empowers us to restrain girls of that age and character, unless they commit a breach of the law. There are refuges, but they only receive persons who voluntarily remain there.

8769. I suppose you consider it necessary to teach girls to cut out and make their own clothes before they leave school? Yes, most assuredly. We found in our own school that the teaching of the art of cutting out was very apt to be neglected if the managers did not exercise a close supervision, for the temptation is great to choose the easier task of doing one's self that which it is wise to teach others to do. Our children learned to make their own dresses and underclothing, and to knit their own stockings.

8771. And if they were to be put out to service in the towns? Without very careful selection of places and kindly supervision I should think that a very bad plan.

8772. You told us that you objected to Biloela because at one time it had been a penal establishment. Do you happen to know that the first lady who took children over from England to America purchased an old gaol there to put them in? Yes; that was Miss Rye. She purchased an old gaol; but she adapted it as a residence for herself when in Canada, and a reception house for the children on their arrival from England, and they remain only until they are placed out into families.

8773. Then your objection is not so much to its having been a gaol, as to its having the appearance of a gaol? I object to it on both accounts.

8774. Might not Biloela be so altered, by making nice buildings and by laying out the grounds, so as to take away that idea of a prison? Yes, it is very possible it might; but I should still object, on account of the associations connected with it.

8775. Do you think that the fact of the children being hired out from a place which had been a prison would have an injurious effect upon the children? I do.

8776. How is it that it is not found to be so in the case of Miss Rye? Partly because she lives there herself, and also because it is only a very temporary abode for the children; moreover, these children are looked upon as quite distinct from the class of juvenile criminals.

8777. But I understood you to say that it would be impossible to make these girls good, from the mere fact of their being kept in a place which had been a gaol? No, I do not say that. But, in addition to the objection of its having been a prison, the position is unfavourable. On an island the children are secluded from the visits and observation of persons who might exercise a beneficial influence; they have no gardens or other homelike objects around them; but I think the associations connected with Biloela are not those which young girls should have around them if you wish to improve them.

8778. That being the case, have you not thought it extraordinary that this lady should have taken children from England and purchased a gaol in America in which to lodge them? It has never struck me in that light, the circumstances being so different.

8779. But the idea I gather from you is, that if you use an institution which has once been a gaol, the hiring out from it would have a bad effect, since it would make people object to the children as degraded from having been hired out from such an institution? It would certainly have that effect at first. At the same time, if it were a well-ordered school that feeling would die out by degrees.

8780. Then you think that by good management they might succeed in overcoming that objection? Yes.

8781. Then you would prefer some other locality? Yes. I should prefer a house a short distance from town. If it had been a family residence, so much the better, for it gives a household feeling to the children.

8782.

Miss R. Hill. 8782. Then as to the supervision of the children after they leave school, do you consider it inadvisable to return them to their friends after having once taken the children out of their control? I do—very inadvisable.

22 Nov., 1873.

8783. You would advise that control should be maintained over them until they reach an age when they will be able to look after themselves? Yes.

8784. Do you think it desirable that when the children are sent out they should be sent some distance away from the place where they have previously resided, so that their friends may not be near them to exercise improper influence over them? Yes, that is what we are always glad to do, if we can find such places where the girls can be under a good and careful mistress. When we have girls sent to us from a considerable distance we find they remain quietly in their places, being removed from former undesirable connections, while those who have been committed by the Bristol Magistrates and have friends close by to visit them are often unsettled.

8785. And you think also that it is better for the child to receive a long sentence—that is, supposing they come to you young? Yes, I think it is essential that they should remain a long time in the school. I do not think reformation can be effected in a short time. It must be gradual. Considerable lapse of time is necessary for the child to conquer her bad habits and acquire good ones. She needs a discipline strict at first, but which should diminish by degrees as her amendment progresses, until she is ready to go out on license. The Industrial Schools Act empowers managers, should they see fit, to send a girl or boy to a place on license after eighteen months' detention in the school. But I believe this is very rarely, if ever, done. We do not consider that a permanent cure can be effected in so short a time as eighteen months.

8786. That is different from our system: our idea is that the children should remain in the school as short a time as possible? As short a time as their reformation can be effected in.

8787. Then, though you have power to restrain the child during the term of her sentence, you have also the power to send her out as an apprentice when you find she behaves well? We have power to license them out to an employer.

8788. And with regard to the girls of fifteen, would you let them also go out as apprentices, when you found that they took a turn for the better, and that they were to be depended upon? Girls of that age are not suitable for the schools to which I am alluding. A long detention would probably be not beneficial to them, but its length must in great measure depend on the character of each girl.

8789. And when the child leaves the reformatory it should be apprenticed, and there should be some power in the Executive to keep a restraining hand over him until he arrives at an age to take care of himself? Yes, there should.

8790. Then we have no provision for anything of the kind in our Reformatory Schools Act, so that when the child is released from the reformatory, he is thrown upon the world, and of course falls back upon his old companions? That is very unfortunate. It is quite as important to take charge of the girl after as before leaving; we have no power over them in England after the expiration of the sentence; but we trust, by amending the Reformatory and Industrial Schools Act, we shall obtain supervision over girls and boys for some years after they quit the school. Such a power is possessed over criminals who have by good behaviour earned their ticket of leave. They are under police supervision, and have to report themselves periodically at certain places and to certain persons. We would not, however, suggest that these girls should be brought under the cognizance of the police; but the managers of the schools might be constituted their guardians, with a certain power of restraint over them. Such a power would enable managers to remove them from any situation in which they might receive injury, and more especially it would enable them to prevent the parents of these boys and girls from doing their children harm.

8791. Did you visit the Orphan School at Parramatta? Yes, the Catholic Orphan School.

8792. How did it strike you that that was managed? I liked the looks of the children very much. They had not that subdued look which I have so often noticed in orphan schools. We did not see them in school, but we examined their books and their letters, which appeared very satisfactory. All seemed to be very happy.

8793. Mr. Gould.] How do you manage with regard to the religious question in your school—are the Catholics and Protestants mixed together, or are they separated? There are separate schools for Catholics and for Protestants. If a Catholic child be sent to a Protestant school, the parent has an opportunity, within thirty days of his committal, of applying to the Secretary of State for his removal to a Catholic school, and vice versa. The same power exists of applying for the removal of children from one denominational school to another, but in this latter case the parents very rarely care to make any application; and in the case of Catholics the children are now, if possible, committed to schools of their own faith. But the application in the case either of Catholics or Protestants would generally be successful.

8794. If a Roman Catholic were sent to your school, would you require her to receive the same instruction as the other children? We could not avoid it, as ours is a Protestant school. We do not profess to belong to any particular sect. Our children attend the nearest Protestant place of worship, which happens to be a Wesleyan chapel. None of the managers, I believe, are Wesleyans. I remember the Inspector once advised that the children should attend the Church of England, but, as there was no church of that persuasion in the neighbourhood to which we could conveniently send the children, no alteration has been made.

8795. How many industrial schools are there in England? I cannot say exactly: perhaps fifty, or it may be sixty.

8796. They are quite a modern institution? Yes. The first Act authorizing their establishment was passed in 1857. A second, which is considered an improvement upon the first, passed in 1866. Since the latter date the majority of the industrial schools have, I believe, been founded.

8797. That is within the last seven years? Yes.

8798. What is your opinion as to the advisability of teaching boys trades—suppose a boy should show some great aptitude, for instance, to tailoring, would you let him follow that trade? We might do so, as several trades are often practised in boys' industrial schools. In the Park Row school in Bristol, baking, wood-chopping, gardening, tailoring, shoemaking, &c., are all carried on. The object of an industrial school is to fit children for obtaining their living in the world when they leave it, and I think that its inmates ought to make everything for themselves—their clothing, their boots, and everything they require.

8799. I think you said your girls made everything for themselves in your school? Yes, everything except their boots and their hats.

8800. Did you get a fixed sum from the Government, without reference to what you produced yourselves? Yes, without reference to anything. 8801.

8801. And what was the cost per head? About 7s. 6d. per week, including everything except the interest of the money (£450) sunk in partly purchasing the house. Miss R. Hill.
8802. In that 7s. 6d. you do not reckon the interest payable on this investment? No, but we reckon the interest we paid on the mortgage we raised on the property. 22 Nov., 1873.
8803. Here, however, we have nothing of the kind, as the buildings are provided by the Government? Then you don't pay any rent?
8804. Reckoning this interest, that would be about £20 a year that each child costs you in England? Nearly that sum in our school. Some, however, will cost less, and there may be some who will cost more, but we think £20 quite enough.
8805. Do you have to account in any way for your expenditure? Yes; we send in accounts to the Government once a year. But the Government never interferes with our expenditure. If our cost per head were very high, they would probably point out to us that we carried on our school in too costly a manner, and they would certainly expect us to be more economical in future.
8806. If you should chance to spend less than the Government allow you, would they dock off that much from the amount they sent you? Oh no; but there is little chance of that ever happening. When volunteers were invited to take the management of the schools, it was assumed that their interest in the institution would be tested by their contributing towards its funds; therefore the Government allowance is not supposed to cover the whole expense of the school.
8807. Are you aware that the cost of the children in our reformatory only amounts to £12 per head a year? I was not aware of it. That is small.
8808. President.] In estimating your cost per head, do you take into account the value of the labour bestowed upon the clothes which the children make for themselves? No.
8809. Then you do not charge for the labour of the children as an expense against the school? I do not.
8810. You only charge the money it has actually cost you—the amount you are out of pocket? Yes, the price paid for the raw material before it is made up by the children.
8811. If bought ready-made outside, you would have to pay more for the clothing? Yes, we should have to pay for the making.
8812. And if you paid money for the making, you would have charged that as an expense against the school? If I had paid it I should.
8813. And not having paid it, you do not charge it as an expense? Certainly not. I hand in "A Summary of the Principles of Reformatory Treatment with especial reference to Girls." [Appendix V.]

Miss Emily Clarke called in and examined:—

8814. President.] You are a resident in South Australia? I am.
8815. You are well aware of the circumstances of that Colony? I am. Miss E. Clarke.
8816. And of the kind of life that is led there? Yes. It is not very different from what is led elsewhere in the Australian Colonies. 22 Nov., 1873.
8817. We understand that you have been the means of introducing the boarding-out system into South Australia, and we desire to ask you to favour us with the results of your experience on the subject? I shall be only too happy to tell you all I know. I did introduce it in the first instance, but on a very small scale. I placed out two children only.
8818. How long is it since you first tried the experiment? I think it was about six or seven years ago, but I am not sure.
8819. And since then has the movement progressed? It was only taken up upon anything like a system within the last two years. The Society was formed about twelve months ago. At the time I took out the children from the Destitute Asylum there were some five or six children taken out by other persons.
8820. And what was the class of persons with whom you placed the children you took out? One was an old servant of my mother's. But I was very unfortunate with one of the children I took out. It was very delicate, caught cold the day it left the Asylum, and died within a week.
8821. Since then, however, the matter has been taken up by the Government? Yes.
8822. And you have still kept up your interest in the movement? Yes. I and others were afraid that the official inspection might not be sufficiently frequent to ensure success,* so we formed ourselves into a Society to assist the Destitute Board in visiting the children and seeing that they were properly treated and cared for.
8823. What is the designation of your Society? It is called the Boarding-out Society. We found, however, that when the children were sent out, they were so much scattered through the Country that it was impossible that the members themselves could visit them; we therefore adopted the plan of appointing corresponding members in the different localities to which the children were sent, to look after the different children in their neighbourhood, each corresponding member undertaking to see to the children in a particular district.
8824. And was your Society recognized by the Government? It was recognized by the Destitute Board, which is under the Government and has charge of this department.
8825. That is the department which has the control of these Boarding-out arrangements? Yes. That Board sends us a list of the places to which children are sent, and we find visitors for them. As soon as a fresh child is sent out we are informed of it, and a request is sent to the member resident in that district to report to the Board. The Board prefers that the report should come direct to them.
8826. The Board, however, recognize your Society in the matter? Yes. We should have liked to have all the reports pass through our hands; but the Board wished to have them direct from the visitor, and within three days of her visit, and therefore the report is sent in to the Board, and we receive a duplicate of it. I may say that I am secretary of the Society, and I produce a copy of our first report, if the Committee would wish to see it. (Appendix W.)
8827. How many children are there boarded out under this system? 264. I should, however, rather say "placed out" than "boarded out," for of this number there are about one-fifth boarded out, two-fifths in service, and two-fifths have been adopted.

* NOTE (on revision):—In some parts of England the boarding-out system has failed, apparently, for want of voluntary assistance.

- Miss E. Clarke. 8828. What do you pay for the children that are boarded out? When I began I received 9s. a week for the child I boarded out, but now the amount is 5s. a week—that is all the Government allow.
- 22 Nov., 1873. 8829. And for that amount do the foster-parents have to find the children in clothes? Yes, they have to find them in everything except schooling—which they get under the Act, at the district schools—and medical attendance, which is found for them. If the children are ill they go to the hospital for medical attendance, or to a medical officer in their district appointed by the Board.
8830. And besides this supervision by your Society, is there any other system of inspection? Yes; the chairman of the Board also makes visits of inspection very frequently in different directions, and sees the children.
8831. Have you a graduated scale of payments according to the ages of the children? No. There is a fixed sum of 5s. a week paid for all children. I do not like the graduated scale at all. As the children grow older they necessarily cost more, and I think that if the payments were cut down there would be a temptation to get rid of them; and I think it very important that they should remain in the same home, if it is a good one. Besides, if the children have been well trained by the foster-parents, it is only fair that they should have the benefit of their services for a time.
8832. Up to what age are the children boarded out? Up to twelve years of age.
8833. And what becomes of them then—are they sent to service? Yes.
8834. With their foster-parents? They might be, but not necessarily.
8836. Have you ever found that after a child has been boarded out for some time with a person that that person has adopted it? The system has not been tried long enough for that to be the case.
8837. Have you yourself ever known of a case of the kind? Yes. There is one case that has come to my knowledge, when the Government ordered the children to be sent back to the Magill Industrial School. There was one child which had been placed with a farmer, and he refused to part with it; he had become attached to it, and said he would rather keep it for nothing than lose it. He did keep the child, and the child is with him still.
8838. What was the object of this calling the children in? The Government had erected a new building for the school, and they did not like, with that not full, to go to the expense of keeping the children outside. At that time, however, they were paying 9s. a week for the children.
8839. Have the Government since abandoned that school, seeing that they now board the children out? No, they have not abandoned the school, but it was filling up so fast that I think, if they had not boarded the children out, they would soon have had to increase the size of the building; besides, the chairman of the Board has become a convert to the system, and he now thoroughly believes in it and has fully adopted it.
8840. How many do you say had been adopted? The largest number adopted was thirty-seven, when our report was published, but now there must be at least 100.
8841. And they are taken quite free of all payments? Yes.
8842. By people who have, or who have not, children? By both. But then many of these children are ten or eleven years old, when they can be of use.
8843. How many children generally go to the one person? Generally only one. There is not any limit as to number; but I believe that there are not more than four children with any one.
8844. And as a general rule are the children well treated? Yes, generally I should say they are very well treated. I have seen many of these children, and have asked them if they would like to go back to the Magill School, and they have always answered "No."
8845. What are the class of men who usually put in applications to take these children? They are mostly small farmers.
8846. What countrymen are they? They are of all Countries—some are English, some are Germans, and there are some Irish.
8847. And what are the rules about the children attending school? They should attend school until they are twelve years old. Some, however, live too far in the bush to be able to go to school, and perhaps it might be said that no child ought to be so placed. The persons, however, with whom they are placed, undertake to teach them.
8848. And how many children are there in the institution? There are fifty-four I believe.
8849. And you find no difficulty in getting suitable people to take the children as they are ready to go out? None whatever. I believe any number of children could be placed out at 5s. a week; but the Board are beginning to find that they can place them out almost as readily for nothing at all, and they are consequently not willing to place out fresh children with payment, so long as they can find good homes for them without paying.
8850. Are they placed in the town as well as in the country? Yes, there are some in the town, but not very many.
8851. I suppose the Board has no objection to allowing them to go to persons who reside in the suburbs? No, no objection at all.
8852. Is there any condition as to the occupation of the persons with whom they are placed, or do you send them to any who may apply? No, not quite that; there is an objection to sending them to publicans.
8853. But you allow them to go to private families, and to all tradespeople except publicans? Yes, I think so. I do not think there are objections to any others, but I cannot say exactly.
8854. Who decides as to the foster-parents that the child shall be sent to? The chairman of the Board.
8855. Your Society has nothing to do with that? No. All we do is this: if we find a nice home, we apply to the Board for a child for it; but we have found very few homes. The Board has found them much more quickly than we could have done.
8856. To place the children out in? Yes; and the Board has been very careful in making inquiries about those with whom the children are placed.
8857. And what is your opinion of the boarding-out system, now that you have had a more extended experience of it? The experience I have had of the working of the system makes it retain its place in my confidence, confidence, or rather, I should say, that I think more highly of it than before. It is certainly far preferable to keeping the children penned up in large institutions. I find that they improve in health when they are placed out, that they are more happy, and that they have not that subdued look which you find in children brought up in large numbers. I have seen many of the children when they have been attending the Public Schools, and it is impossible to distinguish between the boarded-out children and the others. They are quite as well clothed, and look quite as happy and comfortable as the others. Of course there must be occasionally cases where they are not well placed, but these are rare.

8858. You do not find that there is much cruelty complained of? No, very little.

8859. If the foster-parents do not like the children they are sent back into the Asylum? Yes, at once, and then another home is found for them.

8860. Has it often occurred that children are sent back to the Asylum? Yes, it frequently occurs, from people taking the children without properly considering what they are about to undertake.

8861. None of these are children who have ever committed crime? Some of them have been in the Reformatory School and have subsequently been placed out, but they are not of the class you have at Biloela.

8862. Down to how young an age do you board them out? There is no limit in that respect. For my own part I should like to see them boarded out as infants, as they would then be more likely to elicit the kindly feelings of those with whom they were placed. But that would be expensive, because it is hardly likely that a person would undertake the charge of an infant for 5s. a week, and that is all which the Act allows to be paid by the Board.

8863. Your impression is then that the sooner they are boarded out the better? Yes, there is more likely to be an attachment formed between the foster-parent and the child.

8864. Can they bring children up in England more cheaply than they can here? That is a matter I cannot give an opinion upon.

8865. There they board children out at from 2s. 6d. to 3s. a week? Money is of more value in England than here, and goes further; and besides, people here, before their sympathy is enlisted, do not care about the trouble of having the children.

8866. Mr. Couper.] Do you think then that people accept the charge of these children merely to make a profit out of them? No, I do not say that; but they would not undertake the charge when it entailed a loss upon them. I know one instance of a woman who undertook the charge of three children. She was a dress-maker, and she found that she could not pay attention to her work and look after the children at the same time; and that though she got the payments for the children, she lost money at her trade. Seeing that she gave the children up, stating that to be her reason for doing so.

8867. Everything is done for the child for the 5s., except providing him with education and medicine? Yes, but I should like to have seen the payment a little higher, say 6s. a week. It would have given a larger choice of homes, I think.

8868. President.] I suppose you regard it as a most important thing that the children should be sent to school and to church? Yes, as most important.

8869. Do you find any difficulty arise from the parents of the children desiring to see them when they are boarded out? Yes; sometimes I have experienced that difficulty myself. The mother of the child whose charge I undertook wished to see it, and she was not a nice woman at all, so that it caused us considerable inconvenience. The people with whom the child was placed did not like her coming about their house, and informed me that they would have to give up charge of the child if she was not kept away. She was appealed to to keep away and not to injure the prospects of the child; but she would not give it up—she said she would come every month. At last I had to remove the child, for other reasons. The second person with whom she was placed pitied the mother, and told her she might come whenever she liked. Then she gave up coming, and we have never been troubled with her since. She has been only three times since, I think.*

8870. What is the class of children that you board out? Simply destitute children.

8871. Are they destitute children with a father and mother alive, or with no father and only a mother, or with no parents, or are there any limitations in that respect? Generally they are children with only one parent, but there is no rule about that. Some of the children have been surrendered to the institution, the parents giving up all control over them. The Destitute Board have largely adopted this principle of surrender in cases where the parents are thoroughly bad. They have printed forms setting forth that the parents give up the children and will henceforth make no claim on them. This the parent signs. At first the Board only placed out those children who had been surrendered to them by the parents, and those who were really or practically orphans, but I think from the number placed out now that they can no longer keep to that rule.

8872. Can you say about what percentage of the children boarded out is returned to the institution by the foster-parents? I cannot, because our Society has not been at work long enough to enable us to obtain accurate information in respect to this and other matters of importance. At first starting we had not visitors to do the work required, so that we had to go on by degrees before we got to anything like a satisfactory position. It took us a long time to find visitors in the different districts who could give their time and attention to the duties required from them, and indeed we have not nearly enough now.

8873. I suppose you do not mind how the children are employed out of school hours, so long as they are well brought up and the people with whom they are are respectable? No; they are placed with tradesmen of every description. The only thing is that the children must attend school regularly until they are twelve years of age.

8874. And who reports as to the regularity of the attendance at school? The schoolmaster of the district school.

8875. To whom does he report? To the Board; besides, that is one of the points upon which the visitor is also required to report.

* NOTE (on revision):—That is in about three years. I think it very important that children placed out should be protected by law from their parents. It is not right, when the State has had all the expense of bringing up the children, that the parents should interfere with them and claim their earnings. When the parents are bad their influence may be very injurious. In the case I have mentioned the woman would not allow the people with whom the child was first placed to adopt it as they wished to do. She said she "could sell the child."

Miss E. Clarke. 8876. Did you find that you get any assistance in your labours from the clergy of the different localities? We have not received much assistance hitherto. We have always chosen ladies for visitors when we could get them. Many of our visitors are the wives of clergymen and ministers. I think that the Board has visitors among the clergy and some of them have taken an active interest in the children. Wherever the children have been sent, there has been a marked improvement in their appearance, and I imagine that to be the greatest proof that the plan is a good one.

22 Nov., 1873.

8877. Mr. Cowper.] How far have they been sent into the interior? I do not know exactly, but I should say that some of them have been sent 50 or 100 miles, or even further than that. Some of them have been placed with squatters as apprentices, being bound for three years or more, and I may mention also that, as regards adoption, there is a modification of the system, by which it is not in the first instance for life, but only for three years.

8878. At what age are they apprenticed? At any age at which a person may choose to take them, I believe.

8879. Has any case ever arisen in which a foster-parent has determined to take the child altogether as his own? I have mentioned one case that came under my knowledge, and I have known others where the foster-parents have adopted the child with a view from the very first of keeping it as their own.

8880. And they have done so? Yes. These persons have treated the children exactly as if they had been their own. We have had some very nice reports upon them from some of our visitors.

8881. Under the system of adopting the child for three years—at the end of that term what becomes of the child? Then a new arrangement would have to be entered into with the foster-parent.

8882. What is the object of such an arrangement as this? It is merely because the people may be willing to try for a time how the adoption will answer, and may yet not be disposed permanently to undertake the charge of a child before they know exactly how it would suit them.

8883. The authorities do not pay anything for these children who are adopted for three years? No. The children get an outfit when they leave the institution, and the persons who take them are expected to keep it up. That plan, however, has not been tried very long.

8884. Mr. Gould.] Have you found any very great difficulties in the way of securing proper supervision in the country? Yes, sometimes. I should like to see much more visiting than we have now. Our Board, however, was afraid that the people who received the children would dislike to be frequently visited, and made it a rule that there should be only three or four official visits in the year; but permitting the visits to be more frequent, in the event of the people who had the children wishing them to be so.

8885. Have you found any difficulties put in the way of your going to see the children? We have sometimes. At some of the places where the children are adopted they do not like the visits, because, they say, they wish the child to grow up as if it were really their own, and not to fancy that it was being continually looked after from outside. In some cases, as it was found that the children were being treated exactly as if they had been born in the house, it was thought advisable to dispense with any visits except those of the chairman.

8887. Do you think it desirable that there should be a limit upon the number of children that any one person may take? Yes, certainly. I do not think that any one person ought to be allowed to take more than four at most. It would be a very bad thing indeed for the children if persons were to be allowed to take them for the purpose of making a profit out of them, and I feel convinced that this would be done in time, if persons were allowed to take many children.

8888. For what period do you generally apprentice these children after you have done with their boarding out? Some are apprenticed for three years, others for a longer period.

8889. Have you an organization for looking after them then, as you do when they are boarded out? Yes. The same system would look after them after they were apprenticed as before. Besides, the Destitute Board look after the children until they are sixteen. After that the Board has no more power over them.

8890. And does the Destitute Board rely for their inspection and looking after these children upon your Society? It does in part; but the chairman visits himself also. And I think it very desirable that there should be an official visitation occasionally, as well as what may be called the mere voluntary visits. It increases the check upon persons who may be disposed to behave wrongly.

8891. When you make your visit do you see the child by itself? We should do so, but then it is not always possible without making a special point of it, which we do not think advisable except in extreme cases, as we desire to give as little offence as possible.

8892. You do not like, I suppose, to seem to be too inquisitorial? No, for it has the effect of setting the foster-parent in opposition to us; and we like that he should consider us to be as friendly to him as to the child, and as coming to assist him to govern the child rather than merely to see how the child is treated.

8893. Mr. Cowper.] You would never be likely to get much from the child if the foster-parent is always allowed to be present? No; but in case of any suspicion of ill treatment arising in the visitor's mind, it would be her duty to see the child alone, and to visit it again and again, until that suspicion was either confirmed or set at rest.*

* NOTE (on revision):—In South Australia this business has not been left to the visitor, for such suspicions being necessarily recorded in the report, the chairman of the Board (having the welfare of the children very sincerely at heart) himself inquires into them at once, and, if they prove well-founded, the foster-parents receive notice to return the children immediately.

CHARLES COWPER, JUN., Esq.

JOSEPH WEARNE, Esq., M.P.

Mary Ann Williams called in and examined :—

8894. President.] How old are you? I am seventeen.
8895. How long have you been here? Three years and about six months.
8896. You are one of the girls that we found locked up last night in No. 3 dormitory? Yes, sir.
8897. When were you put in? On Friday morning.
8898. Were you in your present hoarse state when you were put in there? No, sir, I had no sign of hoarseness on me when I was locked up.
8899. What time were you put into No. 3 dormitory? About 4 o'clock on Friday afternoon.
8900. Were you one of the girls whom we found without dresses on, and with your breasts all exposed? Yes, sir.
8901. And without shoes and stockings? Yes, sir.
8902. What state was the dormitory in when you were put into it? It was quite wet. It was just after being sanded out.
8903. Had you any bedding to lie upon? Yes; we had mattresses and blankets to lie on on Friday morning, but the beds were afterwards taken away.
8904. Mr. Wearne.] Had you no matting on the floor? We got it taken out from us when we burnt it.
8905. Then there was matting on the floor when you went in? Yes, sir.
8906. How much? One piece. It is in No. 3 dormitory now.
8907. Then did you burn it after you went in? No, we burnt it on the Sunday night.
8908. Then you say that you had matting and bedding put into your dormitory on Friday night? No, sir, matting and blankets.
8909. But no bedding? No, sir.
8910. President.] How long had you been confined when this hoarseness first came on you? It was on Sunday that I began to get hoarse. I told Mrs. Lucas about it and said that my throat was sore, but she took no notice.
8911. Did you feel the place cold when you went in? Yes, sir, it was cold and very damp. The damp struck up to us through the matting all the night. We were so cold and damp that we had to walk about the dormitory half the night.
8912. Were the windows all closed? Yes, sir; when we went in they were all closed up upon us.
8913. So that you were in the dark all the time? Yes, sir.
8914. Were you allowed out to go to the closet for the purposes of nature? No, sir, we were not.
8915. Was the place as close, and with as sickly a smell about it, as it was when we found you shut up in it? Yes, sir, it was. And we were sleeping there two nights without matting, the Sunday night and the Monday night. Many of the other girls came into the dormitory and threw water in under the door.
8916. What was that for? Because we were kicking up a row.
8917. Were you supplied with water whilst you were confined? No, sir. We asked for water a good many times, and Mrs. Lucas refused to let us have it. She said we were only allowed a pint a day.
8918. And when it was given to you, in what way was it given? It was put in to us in a bucket, without a mug or anything to drink out of.
8919. Mr. Wearne.] How was it that you happened to be without your dress? I was told that I had set my clothes floating down the river, and I never.
8920. When were you first without your dress? I threw it off when I first went to the riot.
8921. Where did you go to? To the schoolroom.
8922. And have you been without it ever since then? Yes, sir, until this morning. I only got it given to me this morning.
8923. How many of you were there who went to the riot on Friday? There were six of us.
8924. And when did you first make up your minds to riot? On the Friday morning.
8925. How was it that you came to riot in this way? I was walking round the buildings, round at the back of the officers' quarters, with another girl, and she was saying something to me, and we were laughing over it, and Mr. Lucas saw us and called us down, and wanted me to do something I would not do, and then he put up his hand to me and threatened me, and so I went in to smashing the windows, and the other girls followed me.
8926. What was it he asked you to do that you would not do? He put me on the laundry in the beginning of the week, and then on the Friday he called me down to him, and wanted to send me to the bath. I said there were more girls idle besides me, and that the laundry was my work and I would not go to the bath.
8927. But when he gave you the order, do you not consider that you were wrong in disobeying him? I do not consider it was right that I should have to do two works.
8928. President.] He would hardly expect you to do the two things at once? He had told me to go to the laundry, and I had been there all the week, and then on the Friday he wanted me to go to the bath, and I would not go.
8929. Mr. Wearne.] Do you think that you ought to be confined to the one work during the week? Yes, sir, I do.
8930. Mr. Cowper.] Those who are employed in the laundry generally have a spell at the end of the week, till Monday? Yes, sir; we have a spell from the Friday.
8931. Why did you not go to the bath-work when he told you? Because he had no right to give me two works, and because I do not like the bath-work.

Mary Ann
Williams.

Elizabeth

Elizabeth Sharply called in and examined :—

- Elizabeth Sharply.
26 Nov., 1873.
8932. President.] How old are you? I am going on for nineteen.
8933. Is that really your age? Yes.
8934. How long have you been here? Nearly two years.
8935. Were you one of the girls whom we found locked up in the No. 3 dormitory when we came here yesterday? Yes.
8936. How long have you been locked up there? Ever since Friday night.
8937. Were you hoarse then, when you were locked up, like you are now? No, I was not.
8938. What made you hoarse? The damp floor of the dormitory. It was just after being scrubbed out when we were put in, and was quite wet.
8939. Had you any boots and shoes on? No, nor any dress on me either. I asked them to get me my dress and they would not. Mrs. Lucas said I had thrown away my dress, and I must go and look for it myself if I wanted it.
8940. What did you do with your dress? I threw it down on the beach because I was too hot.
8941. When was that? On the Friday morning.
8942. What made you do that? Because I could not help myself; I was too hot.
8943. Were you not one of those who were breaking the windows of the schoolroom? I was.
8944. And what made you do that? I did it because the others did it.
8945. Were you allowed out of the dormitory at all for exercise or for the purpose of nature, from the Friday when you were confined there to yesterday (Tuesday), when we saw you? No, not for anything.
8946. Had you any bed to lie on? No; we had to lie on the wet stones—there was not even any matting under us.
8947. When was the matting taken away from you? The next day after we were locked up; but it was all wet and damp when we went in, so wet that we could not sleep on it, and we laid it on one side, and then it was taken away from us.
8948. Did not the girls set fire to it? No.
8949. But there was some matting burnt—when was it that it was set fire to? That was on the Thursday.
8950. Was not your matting taken from you because you set fire to it? No.
8951. Were you in the dark all the time you were locked up in the dormitory? Yes, all the windows were closed up.
8952. Mr. Wearne.] When was it you threw away your dress? On Friday morning.
8953. Was it not when you were going to the riot? Yes.
8954. There were six of you in the riot? Yes.
8955. And did you all throw away your dresses? Yes.
8956. All six of you? Yes.
8957. And were the six of you without dresses from the Friday until we saw you yesterday? Yes, the whole six of us were.
8958. When did you make up your minds to riot? We did not make up our minds at all—we just went and done it.
8959. Was it not made up or talked over in some way? No; we never talked over it at all—we just went and done it. It was never talked over, and nobody ever told us anything, but we just commenced of ourselves.
8960. Who commenced? We all of us commenced at the same time.
8961. Do you know any reason for commencing the riot? It was because Mr. Lucas would not let us alone. We were at the back of the overseer's place when he came looking after us, and then we went round by the front and he still kept following us about, and we told him that we were not going to be run after like that. He said that he was sure we were up to something, and we said that he should see we would be up to something if he said so, and then we went in for the riot.
8962. Were you on the beach? Yes, and we would not come from it when he called us. We were at the officers' quarters when he called us, and we said we would not come; then he said that we were up to something, and we went in for the riot to show him we would be up to something if he would not leave us alone.
8963. Do you not think that you did wrong in rioting in that way? Yes, sir.
8964. You did not consider that, though you might be injuring Mr. Lucas, you were injuring yourself far more? I have never been in any riot before.
8965. How often have you been locked up before this? This is the third fourteen days that I have had.
8966. And what were you locked up for before? For smashing the windows.
8967. Mr. Cowper.] You have been in two fourteen days before this? Yes.
8968. And this makes the third? Yes.
8969. How many months were you in charge of the kitchen? Two months.
8970. Is that all—I thought you had been longer? No, only about two months.
8971. Have you ever been put to the milking? No, I cannot milk.
8972. President.] What work have you been put to since you have been here? I have been on the laundry and in the kitchen—those are the only two places that I remember.
8973. Mr. Cowper.] Can you not give us any reason for your being so bad after having been for so long a time good? They would not let me alone—they all kept on at me when I was quiet.
8974. Who kept on at you—the girls? No, the officers.
8975. What officers? Mr. and Mrs. Lucas—they thought they might go on at me as they liked, because I was quiet, and they kept on jawing at me about everything, thinking I would do nothing because I was quiet, so I said then that I would be quiet no longer, and then they would leave me alone.
8976. Did they do this when you were on the kitchen and behaving so well? Yes, they were on to me there as well—both Mr. and Mrs. Lucas were always at me.
8977. What was it for—was it because you broke the things? No, I never broke any of the things; but me and the other girl who was in the kitchen used to be blamed for stealing things, and I knew nothing about them.
8978. You did not steal anything from the kitchen? No, I did not.
8979. But you were accused of doing so? Yes; they were always in and out jawing at me, and I would not stand it.

8980. President.] You must consider, my girl, that it is a very base and unkind thing to charge Mr. Lucas with cruelty of this kind towards you if he has not been guilty of it—just consider well before you answer, and tell me are you sure that you are saying what is true? Yes, I am quite sure—it is nothing but the truth.

Elizabeth
Sharply.

26 Nov., 1873.

Elizabeth Eddington called in and examined:—

8981. President.] How old are you? I am sixteen.

8982. How long have you been here? I have been here seventeen months.

8983. You were one of the girls we found yesterday locked up in the dormitory? Yes.

8984. When were you put in? On Monday morning.

8985. What were you locked up for? There was one of the girls at the window of the dormitory singing and shouting, and some of the girls inside were breaking the buckets and things in the dormitory. Then Mr. Lucas came to the door and took me and Sarah Bourke out, and said it had been us who had been breaking the buckets, and the girls that broke them he let out, and kept us in who had nothing to do with it. We said it was not us, and that he had let the girls out who done it; but the only word we could get out of him was that he would make us pay for it.

8986. Were you hoarse as you are now when you were put into No. 3 dormitory? No, there was nothing the matter with me.

8987. What has made you hoarse? When we went in Mr. Lucas came in and threw a bucket of water over the place, and that made the stones wet and damp. He gave us two blankets to sleep on, but when we laid down we found the damp and cold striking up to us from the floor through the blankets.

8988. Where was it Mr. Lucas threw the water? He threw it down where we had been burning the matting. He threw the water over to put it out.

8989. Were you burning the matting? Yes; and Mr. Lucas and the constable threw water over the place to put it out, and made the stones all wet.

8990. When was it that this burning took place? On the Sunday night or Monday morning.

8991. Was there a burning of the matting in No. 3 dormitory on Sunday night? Yes. I was not there on the Sunday, but he put me and Sarah Bourke in on the Monday morning; but they burnt the matting there on Sunday night, and put it up against the door to burn the door down. Then Mr. Lucas and the constable chucked tubs of water in under the door, for the door was catching fire, and they threw water in to put it out.

8992. Mr. Gould.] Did you say that Mr. Lucas threw water into the dormitory? Yes.

8993. For the purpose of putting out the fire? Yes.

8994. How did you come to be put in? Me and Sarah Bourke were up at the window, and one of the girls was there singing and calling out. Then some of the girls in the dormitory began breaking the buckets and things; and then Mr. Lucas came in and took me and Sarah Bourke out, and said it was us who had done it. We said we had nothing to do with it; but he was in a great passion, and said he would put down these affairs, and if he could not do it any other way he would fetch the strait waistcoats and put them on us. Then he took us over to No. 3 dormitory and locked us in with the others, and all day long he was threatening what he would not do, and that he would put the strait waistcoats on us.

8995. What time was it when he took you out? About 6 o'clock, or going on for 7 in the morning. It must have been as late as that, for the children were out of their dormitories.

8996. Mr. Wearne.] Were you present when those figures were made on the wall? No; they were made after we left. It was whilst we were locked in No. 3 dormitory that they were made; and yet when Mr. Lucas went in and saw them, the first thing he said was—"That is some of Bourke and Eddington's work."

8997. And it was not the work of either of you? It was not.

Mrs. Harriet Austin called in and examined:—

8998. President.] Mr. Lucas has given us to understand that you have something to tell us. Will you be good enough to state in your own way what it is that you think we ought to know? I have not much to tell.

Mrs. H.
Austin.

26 Nov., 1873.

8999. You are the laundress, are you not? Yes. On Thursday last week Janet Boyd was in the laundry. She was just after doing fourteen days, and I said to her—"What made you go destroying these things?—You do no good, and only get yourself into trouble." And she said that the girls would have it in for old Lucas, that he was not to be let to go running on like this, but that Sarah Bourke had told her that if the girls went altogether and broke the schoolroom windows, that would get Mr. Lucas sacked. She said that Mrs. Kelly had told Sarah Bourke this, and advised the girls to do it to get Mr. Lucas sacked. I asked her if she was going in to do it, and she said "No, not if I can help it." I then persuaded her all I could to keep out of it, for when all the big girls are under punishment I have only the little girls to help me. On the Friday morning she said they would be sure to break the windows, and that the schoolroom windows would be broken first. And sure enough they did so, for the girls walked up and deliberately broke the windows of the schoolroom. One stone passed me very close where I was, but I did not see who threw it.

9000. Then what you say is this,—that Janet Boyd told you that Sarah Bourke had informed her that Mrs. Kelly had recommended the girls, if they wanted to get Mr. Lucas dismissed, to break all the windows in the schoolroom? Yes, that Mrs. Kelly had told Sarah Bourke so, if they wanted to get Lucas sacked, and Sarah Littlewood told me the same thing.

9001. Was any one present when Janet Boyd told you this? No.

9002. Was Sarah Littlewood present when Janet Boyd told you? No.

9003. What did Sarah Littlewood tell you? She told me that she had heard Sarah Bourke speaking to the other girls in the dormitory, and saying that Mrs. Kelly said if they wanted to get rid of Lucas that they must smash all the schoolroom windows.

9004. Anything else? No, only that I thought it looked very much like it when they did smash all the windows on the Friday, and when they began at the schoolroom windows first.

9005. When all this window-breaking was going on, did Janet Boyd do anything or take any part in it? No, not on the Friday. Mrs. King came and persuaded her to go into her place.

- Mrs. H. Austin.
26 Nov., 1873.
9006. She kept out of it? Yes. I asked her if she was going into the riot, and she told me no, not if she could help it, but if the girls got hold of her she would have to join, as the other girls would call her names if she did not join them. When these girls are this way altogether they run each other on into mischief.
9007. How long have you been on the island? Two years.
9008. Have you been in the dormitories since Friday last? No, I never go into the dormitories at all. I never come up to the yard except at certain times on business, and I know nothing about the dormitories.
9009. Where is the laundry? Away at the further end of the enclosure.
9010. Mr. Cowper.] Did you come in to see what was the matter when the windows were broken? I always come in between 6 and 7 o'clock in the morning.
9011. Were you not passing at the time the windows were broken? No; I was in the laundry, and me and Janet Boyd were putting up the clothes, when this riot commenced. On the Friday night she told me again that Mrs. Kelly had set Sarah Bourke on, and that Mrs. Kelly had had Sarah Bourke in her bedroom for about an hour on Wednesday.
9012. And you persuaded Janet Boyd to keep out of it? Yes. I generally do what I can, for I never like to see the big girls locked up, because it leaves me with the little ones, and I cannot get on with my work with them.
9013. President.] How many girls do you have to assist you? Generally six or seven.
9014. And they are told off to you for the week? Yes, they are put on on the Monday for the week.

Janet Boyd called in and examined:—

- Janet Boyd.
26 Nov., 1873.
9015. President.] How old are you? My proper age is nineteen, but I am entered on the books as being under eighteen.
9016. How long have you been here? Two years.
9017. And how old were you when you were sent here? I was seventeen, but I was sworn to be under the age of sixteen, or else they could not have sent me.
9018. You are one of the girls that we found locked up in one of the dormitories yesterday? Yes, in No. 4 dormitory.
9019. Will you tell us what it was that Mr. Lucas said to you after we had left the island yesterday? Mr. Lucas said that the Commissioners had told him that the girls were all a pack of liars, and that they would not believe a word we had to say; and he said that he did not care about Cowper or any of the other Government gentlemen, and that if I gave him a word out of my mouth he would smash all my teeth for me.
9020. When did he say this? In the dormitory last night, after you gentlemen had left.
9021. In which dormitory was it? In No. 4.
9022. What time did he say this? Just as we went into the dormitory. Some of the girls swore, and he blamed it on to me, and he said—"Now Boyd, if I have another word from you I will smash your teeth. I don't care about Cowper or Goold, or any of the other gentlemen," and he said—"The gentlemen know what a pack of liars you are, and told me that they would not believe a word you had to say."
9023. When were you locked up first in No. 4 dormitory? On Sunday night.
9024. And you were kept confined in it till the following Monday morning? Yes; and I think you gentlemen need not have made the remark you did to Mr. Lucas, because we told you nothing but the truth.
9025. I may tell you, that whatever you have been told of this sort is not the fact—that we did not mention to Mr. Lucas or to anybody else anything of what you said to us, or make any observation whatever, either to him or to anybody else, upon what you girls then told us. Let me now ask you to tell us the same story that you told us yesterday? Where shall I begin?
9026. Tell me first are you quite sure that Mr. Lucas told you that we had said we would not believe you? Yes, quite sure; and when he said he would smash my teeth, one of the girls said she was quite sure that such a thing would not be allowed.
9027. All we want to know is the truth, and you are old enough and intelligent enough to know that it would be an exceedingly cruel and unkind thing to say anything about Mr. Lucas that is not perfectly true? What I am saying is quite true.
9028. Will you tell us what you stated to us yesterday, when you asked to speak to us? What do you want to know about?
9029. Tell us how the riot began? I was not in the riot. I did not know anything about it.
9030. Tell us then how it was that you came to be locked up? It was this way:—Me and Annie Smith were going on with some of the girls when we were mustered in to prayers. When the prayers were over, we went out, and we were talking and laughing, when Mrs. Lucas found us out and came up and charged me with having torn up the leaves of the Bible. There were some bits of paper about that I had cut up, and she said I had been cutting the Bible up with a pair of scissors: but it was not the Bible at all, but only a yellow leaf that was in the Bible.
9031. You mean a blank leaf? No, it was not a blank leaf, it was a yellow one. I was sitting at the back of the building with Annie Smith, and then Mrs. Lucas began at me about Littlewood's beads, saying I had stolen them and that I must give them up. I said that I had not got them, and knew nothing about them. She jawed away at me till at last me and Annie Smith got up and walked away round the building. She met us again and began jawing at us again, and we began laughing at her. Then Mr. Lucas came up and sent us back to the other side of the building, and began chasing us about wherever we went, telling us that he was going away to-morrow.
9032. What did he mean by that? That was what he was always telling the girls when he wanted them to be quiet. He was always saying—"There, never mind girls, I am going away on Monday." Then everywhere we would go he follows us about, and meets us and says, "It's all right—I am going away to-morrow." We began laughing at the way he was going on. Then Mrs. Lucas comes up and she begins at us, and says—"I think you two girls must be drunk by the way you are going on." I said—"I do not know what we are to get drunk upon; it is not upon anything you give us." This set the girls laughing and made Mrs. Lucas more savage, so me and Annie Smith went away down to the beach and took off our boots and stockings and walked in the water, and got our clothes very wet. When Mrs. Lucas saw us she began began jawing us again about that. Then Mr. Lucas, he came up and joined in, and the pair of them went on jawing till we were mustered in to prayers. After prayers, when we were in the dormitories, we began singing, and Mr. Lucas came and began throwing stones through the bars to make us quiet.

Janet Boyd.

9033. Were you up at the window? I was not, but some of the girls were. He threw stones at them to fetch them down; but the more he threw the more we laughed and sang, till at last he left us alone, saying we should be quiet enough before we came out. In the morning we were not let out, and when we saw the other girls out of the other dormitories, we asked if we were going to be let out, and he said "No." Then we began laughing and shouting, and throwing our boots out, and Sarah Brown and Ellen Scores began breaking the buckets. These two girls were let out, and they were the only two girls in the dormitory that were let out, and yet these were the girls who broke the buckets.

9034. How was it that you came to be marked in the way that you showed us yesterday? When we were in the dormitory Mr. Lucas came in with a policeman, and he said, "Now, Boyd, what is this you have been doing?" He said we had been turning him into contempt, and he caught me and Katie Solomon, and he gave her more than he gave me, for he kept rubbing her head against the wall, to try and rub the figures that were drawn on it, with her hair. And he kept saying, "Will you tell me who did it?" and we said we would not. Then he beat her head against the wall, and he would have had her killed if some of the girls had not interfered. He had her down on the ground, and was kneeling on her and beating her head against the floor. Then he left her and said, "Now, Boyd, I will have it out of you," and he made a run at me. The policeman tried to save me, but he caught hold of me, and gave my head a grind against the wall. I caught hold of Annie Dooley's hand, and she and the other girls tried to pull me away; and I kept crying out that I did not do it, and that I did not know who had done it, and then at last he left me alone. He said he would have it rubbed out, and one of the girls promised that she would rub it out. Then he took a broom and called Annie Smith, and held the broom out to her, and said she would have to sweep out the dormitory. She said she would not, and he said he would soon see that, for he would make her. He then said, "Now, are you going to do it?" And she said "No." Then he took the handle of the broom and began beating her with it, and bumped her head up against the wall. He took a cane after he had done with the broom, and began beating her with that. At last me and Jane Windsor agreed to sweep out the dormitory, and then he dropped it.

9035. Who were the girls that he beat on this occasion? Katie Solomon, Annie Smith, Annie Dooley, Mary Windsor, and me.

9036. Supposing Mr. Lucas says that he never touched you with anything but his hands, would that be true? No. Only a little while ago he ran at me with a poker, and said he would knock the wind out of me, but I ran back when he made the blow.

9037. Then he did not strike you? No; I got out of his way.

9038. Are you sure that all this which you have been saying is true? Yes, it is quite true.

9039. I must remind you of what I said before—that it is a most cruel and unkind thing for you to say all this of Mr. Lucas if it is not true? It is all quite true, every word of it.

9040. Do you know how this stone-throwing began on the Friday? I do not. I was standing at the window in the laundry when the stone-throwing began, and I know nothing about how it was or why the windows were broken. I was down at the laundry, me and Annie Smith, when we heard the crack of a window breaking, and we ran out to see what was the matter. We saw Mr. Lucas, and asked him what was the matter, and he said "Nothing at all, girls; just go in and keep quiet." We then asked what the girls were running down to the beach for, but he went on saying it was nothing, and for us to keep quiet. We could see some of the girls at the wall, and we went and called out to them to know what was the matter, and they said that some of the girls were breaking the schoolroom windows, and mentioned the names of those who were doing it. That is all I know of it, but I never knew what set it agoing, for none of them ever said a word about it.

9041. Did you ever tell Mrs. Austin that Mrs. Kelly had told you that the way to get Mr. Lucas sacked was to break all the schoolroom windows? I did not. I do not recollect telling that.

9042. Did Mrs. Kelly ever tell you anything of the kind? No, I do not recollect her ever saying a word to me, good or bad, since we had the remonstrance about the matron.

9043. But you told Mrs. Austin something the day before the riot—what was it? Yes, I did say to her that the girls knew that the way to get Lucas out of it was to break all the windows.

9044. Did you say what windows? No.

9045. Did you say the schoolroom windows? No.

9046. If Mrs. Austin has said that you told her that Mrs. Kelly had said that breaking the schoolroom windows was the way to get Mr. Lucas out of the place, is that true or not? It is not true that Mrs. Kelly said anything of the kind. She has never spoken to me since we turned against the matron—when we spit in Mrs. Rowley's face; but we did not mean anything by it—it was nothing but a lark, and we were put up to it.

9047. Put up to what? To go against the matrons.

9048. Who put you up to it? Mr. and Mrs. Lucas. There was never a word said to us when we called the matrons by all manner of nicknames. We were allowed to do just as we liked, so long as we went on at the matrons, and no notice was ever taken.

9049. Since this affair of the matron you have had no talk with Mrs. Kelly? None at all. The only thing I go to Mrs. Kelly for is to read.

9050. Did Sarah Bourke or any girl tell you about this? No.

9051. Did you say to Mrs. Austin that anybody had told you? Yes, I may have said that some of the girls had told me.

9052. Told you what—that Mrs. Kelly had told them that the best way to get Mr. Lucas out was to smash the windows? Yes.

9053. And you told this to Mrs. Austin? Yes, but I did not say anything about any particular windows.

9054. And were you told this? I was.

9055. Can you recollect what girl it was who told you? I can recollect, but I do not wish to give her name.

9056. Mr. Cowper.] You had better tell it if you know it, because you will only be putting a down upon some other girl who is innocent? I would not tell on the girl.

9057. President.] All we want is to get at the truth, and with no idea of punishment, and it may be unfair to others if you do not tell? I would not like to come it on the girl.

- Janet Boyd. 9058. Was it said in fun or in earnest? It might have been said in fun, or it might have been meant for earnest; I do not know, but I know this—that the first night that we were put in No. 3 Sarah Bourke was sick all the evening, and she was lying on the bed crying about her father, when Mr. Lucas came into the dormitory and ordered her out. She was ill, and paid no attention, and then he came and took hold of her and pitched her out. He held her and took her by the throat and shook her, and everybody said that he was choking her. I said that Sarah Bourke had nothing to do with the noise, as she was ill, but he would not hear us and turned us out into the No. 3 dormitory. He was so violent that he roused up the other dormitories, and they all began shouting, and that made him worse, and he threw us out. There was a ship in the dock at the time, and the men were singing and getting on with funny talk, and that set the girls on laughing and going on, and then Mr. Lucas came up and pitched us out.
9059. Did you ever tell Mrs. Austin that Sarah Bourke had told you what Mrs. Kelly is supposed to have said? No, I did not.
9060. And you say now it was only the girls who said that that was the best way of getting rid of Mr. Lucas? Yes.
9061. Mr. Couper.] Did you see the girl kicked by the policeman? Yes.
9062. What was her name? Annie Roberts.
9063. Did you see it done? Yes.
9064. How was it? We were up in the window when the police came in to search the place. We had let Annie Dooley and Annie Smith down from the window, and as Annie Roberts was coming down the policeman caught hold of her, threw her round, and kicked her. The other policeman—the one with the pock-marked face—made a kick at me, but I jumped away from him.
9065. What coloured hair had the man who kicked Annie Roberts? I did not take notice.
9066. Mr. Wearne.] How do you get up to the windows? We stand on each others backs.
9067. And how do you get down? We jump down.

Annie Smith called in and examined:—

- Annie Smith. 9068. President.] How old are you? Fifteen years and seven months.
9069. How long have you been here? I shall have been five months to-morrow.
- 27 Nov., 1873. 9070. You showed us some bruises yesterday upon your arm, your shoulder, and your bosom? I did.
9071. How did you come by them? Mr. Lucas beat me with a broom-handle, with his shut fist, and with a cane.
9072. Where was it that he beat you? Across the back and the shoulders with the broom-handle and the cane, and in the face with his fist.
9073. In what place was it he struck you—in the dormitory? Yes, in No. 5 dormitory.
9074. How did it come about? It was on Saturday morning that he beat me the first time—in the morning of the day before we were locked up; but the worst beating was on the Monday morning.
9075. And how was it that he came to beat you the first time? He told me to take the bedsteads out of the dormitory and I said I was not able to do it by myself. He said he would have me do it, and I told him I was not strong enough. He said he would make me do it, and he caught me and knocked me down and beat me. I said it was no use his doing that, for I would not do it for beating even if I could.
9076. What were you beaten for the second time? He put a broom into my hand, and told me to sweep the floor of the dormitory; and on a girl coming to take the broom out of my hand and do it for me, he would not let her. He said he would not have any one to take the broom from me, and that I should be forced to sweep the place out. He then hit my head against the wall and beat me again.
9077. In what way did you get that mark upon your bosom? It was where he hit me with the cane.
9078. What sized cane was it? It was not a very thick cane, but it was a long one.
9079. Was it as thick as your finger? Yes, about that.
9080. Did you see the other girls struck by Mr. Lucas? I saw Katie Solomons knocked down and beaten and kicked, and her head knocked and rubbed against the wall. When he came in with the police to search the dormitory, he said he would very soon knock us down if we did not come down quick out of the window; and we said we were not going to get down whilst there were any men there.
9081. Then you were up in the window? Yes, some of the girls were. I saw Janet Boyd jump down and one man made a kick at her—the man with the pock-marked face—but he missed her; then Annie Roberts jumped down, and the man with the sandy whiskers laid hold of her, turned her round and kicked her.
9082. Could there have been any mistake about this—could she have fallen down and made the bruise? No, she did not. I saw the man raise his foot and kick her.
9083. Did you see her leg? Yes. We asked her to show it to us, and she did so; and the place was all black.
9084. Mr. Wearne.] Did you break any of the vessels in the dormitory? No, I was up at the window when the breaking was going on. It was Sarah Brown and Ellen Scores that broke the tubs.
9085. How long were you at the window? For about two hours.
9086. Was that when you were asked to remove the bedsteads? I did come down then. It was when the girls in the dormitory were separated, and Sarah Bourke and Lizzie Eddington were taken over to No. 3 dormitory.
9087. Why did they commit such wanton mischief as to destroy these things? Because we had no water—we drank it all up through the night, and in the morning there was no water. When we asked for some Mrs. Lucas would not give it to us, and then the girls broke the buckets.
9088. How long is it since you have had water this day? We got some this morning, but it is all gone.
9089. How long is it since you drank the last? About half-past 2 o'clock.
9090. How is it given to you? In a bucket.
9091. Have you to drink it out of a bucket? No, out of a mug,—we have a mug to drink from.
9092. Which dormitory are you in? In No. 5.
9093. Have you beds to lie on? We have matting and blankets.
9094. No mattresses? No.
9095. When had you beds last? On Sunday night.
9096. Is the matting spread all over the floor? No; only just enough for us to lie on.

9097. How many of you lie on it? Fourteen of us.

9098. Have you always had your boots and stockings? No; Mr. Lucas took them away and only brought them to us this morning.

9099. When do you say he took them away from you? On Monday morning.

9100. And since Monday morning you have been walking about on the stone floor without boots and stockings? Yes.

9101. All the girls in your dormitory have had their dresses? Yes.

9102. And do you know for how long you are to be confined? No.

9103. President.] Did the girls remain quiet after Sarah Bourke left No. 3 dormitory and came over to you? Yes.

9104. And you have done no mischief since then? No. Everything that is done in the ward Mr. Lucas blames her for—he blames Sarah Bourke for everything.

9105. Or you? No. He has no right to blame one more than another. If one does a thing we all do it; and as to the riot, Sarah knew nothing of it more than all the others who went into it.

9106. Mr. Cowper.] Was it a dark-faced policeman who kicked the girl? No, a light-complexioned man.

Annie Smith.

26 Nov., 1873.

Kate Solomon called in and examined:—

9107. President.] How old are you? I am going on for fifteen.

9108. How long have you been here? It is going on for six years.

9109. Have you ever been taught to milk since you have been here? No.

9110. You are one of the girls we saw yesterday who complained to us of having been struck by Mr. Lucas? Yes.

9111. Will you explain how you got that mark on your face? Mr. Lucas came into the dormitory and saw some figures on the wall. He was very angry about them, and caught me by the hair of the head and told me to rub them out. I said I would not. He then dragged me down, and put his foot on my back and stood on me. He knocked my head against the wall, and said he would take my hair to rub the figures out with it.

9112. What other girls did he beat at that time? He beat Janet Boyd, and Annie Smith, and Annie Dooley, and Mary Windsor.

9113. Did you see all these other girls struck by Mr. Lucas? Yes; Annie Smith, Janet Boyd, and Mary Windsor were beat very badly.

9114. How was Annie Smith beaten? With a broom-handle, with a cane, and with Mr. Lucas's hands.

9115. Were you kicked at all as well as beaten? Yes, I was kicked on the hip, and I have the mark on the place to show.

9116. Mr. Gould.] What do you mean when you say that Mr. Lucas stood on you? He got on to me and stood on my back with his feet—the constable saw him do it.

9117. What constable? The constable Mr. Lucas brought into the dormitory with him.

9118. And did you get that mark on your face when he hit your head and rubbed it against the wall? Yes, and I got my finger scrunched against the wall in trying to save my head.

9119. President.] Were the girls quiet after we went away yesterday? Yes, they kicked up no row after that.

9120. Mr. Wearne.] Have you got beds in your dormitory? No.

9121. Since when have you been sleeping without beds? Since Sunday night.

9122. What are you sleeping on now? On the matting and blankets.

9123. Who was it broke these vessels—did you do it? No; it was the girls who were let out that broke them.

9124. When were they let out—was it before or after Mr. Lucas rubbed your head against the wall? When they broke up the things it was before we knew that we were going to be locked up at all.

9125. Did Mr. Lucas know of the drawing when he came into the dormitory? Yes, I should say so, because he began about it at once.

9126. Did he ask who had drawn it? No; but laid hold of me to rub it out.

9127. But he let out two of the girls? What he did was to let out two girls who were as much in it as any of the other girls.

9128. Were any of the bedsteads broken? There was nothing broken but the heads and the slight parts that can be taken off.

9129. What did they do all this mischief for? I do not know, unless it was to serve him out for the Sunday night when he threw stones at me and Lizzie Prior and some other girls who were up at the window singing out to No. 3 dormitory.

9130. Mr. Cowper.] Was it not after breakfast-time on Monday that this smashing up began? No; it was before breakfast.

9131. Was it before the girls were let out of the other dormitories? No; it was when the others were let out and we found that we were not to be let out that we kicked up the row. We never broke a single thing until we found that Mr. Lucas was not going to let us out, and he never told us what it was for. Then, only last night, he said that he did not care for any of the Government gentlemen, but that he would shove Janet Boyd's teeth down her throat with a poker if she did not hold her tongue.

Sarah Littlewood called in and examined:—

9132. President.] How old are you? I am sixteen.

9133. How long have you been here? Fourteen months.

9134. Will you tell us the story that you told us yesterday? What about?

9135. You made a statement to us yesterday about something that took place in the dormitory—do you recollect what it was? Yes; we went into the dormitory, but I do not recollect what night it was.

9136. Try and think. It was Friday when the windows were broken—how long was it before that? It was four nights before that. It was Monday night—the night of the fire.

9137. What fire do you mean? The first fire—that is the only one I know of. I was not in the dormitories when the other fires took place. We went into the dormitory, and we sat down on the bed near the door.

Sarah
Littlewood.

26 Nov., 1873.

9138.

Sarah
Littlewood.
26 Nov., 1873.

9138. Into what dormitory? Into No. 3. We sat there talking till at last the candle went out. We were a good while before we could find the matches, and at last Sarah Bourke said "I can find matches"; then she went to some place and she found them. Then she said—"What do you say if we have a fire and burn the door down?" And I said—"O don't Sarah—don't let us burn the door." They would not mind me, but got all the matting together and set it on fire. But before they set it on fire we barricaded the door so as no one should come in and put it out. Mr. Lucas came round when he heard of the fire and wanted to get in, but we would not let him. He asked us at last to open the door to let him send us in water to put out the fire, and then we did, and we helped him to put the fire out. That is all I know about it.
9139. Do you know how the second riot was got up? The window-smashing?
9140. Yes? I believe that Mrs. Kelly put them up to that. Sarah Bourke said that Mrs. Kelly said it.
9141. Said what? That it would be best to break the windows, and especially the schoolroom windows.
9142. Who did she say this to? To four of the girls in No. 2 dormitory, and to two of the other dormitory girls.
9143. Where was this? In the dormitory in No. 3. They came into the dormitory, and Sarah Bourke asked them if they would go in for a riot and get Lucas sacked; that Mrs. Kelly told her that if they smashed the schoolroom windows from the outside that they would be sure to get him sacked. Four of them agreed to go into it, and then they took in two girls from the other dormitories. This was on Friday morning.
9144. What was it that Sarah Bourke told you Mrs. Kelly had said? She said that if we had a riot we were to be sure to break the schoolroom windows, and then we would be sure to get Lucas turned away. They were to break all the windows except those in Mrs. Kelly's house.
9145. How many were in the riot? Six.
9146. What were you doing all this time? I was in No. 4 dormitory stoning out.
9147. Did you not tell us that there had been some speaking about it in No. 3 dormitory when you were sleeping there? Yes, they began talking about it there, and four of the girls agreed to go into it. There were ten of us altogether, and six would not agree to go into it. I was one of the six.
9148. How was it that when the riot came at last Sarah Bourke was not in it? She wanted to stop out so as to be able to feed them.
9149. What do you mean by feed them? To give them up things to eat when they are locked up.
9150. How did she know that they would be there to be fed? They knew pretty well that they would be locked up if they got smashing the windows.
9151. Mr. Cowper.] You say that Sarah Bourke told the girls to break the windows from outside and not from inside, and that Mrs. Kelly had told her to do so to get Mr. Lucas dismissed? Yes. She said that Mrs. Kelly told her it was no use to break the windows from inside, but we must break them from outside if we wanted to get Mr. Lucas sacked.
9152. What do you call outside? Out in the dock—out of our boundaries—if we broke the windows from there we should get him discharged.
9153. President.] Who sleeps next to Sarah Bourke in the dormitory? Annie Dooley's bed is next to Sarah Bourke's, but they sleep together.
9154. And do you sleep in the next bed? No; there are two beds between me and Sarah Bourke.
9155. Who sleeps next to Annie Dooley? Janet Boyd, she sleeps between me and Sarah Bourke, and then there is a spare bed where Annie Dooley sleeps, only she sleeps with Sarah Bourke.
9156. On the night you heard this talk about breaking the windows, was Annie Dooley sleeping with Sarah Bourke? Yes.
9157. Then her bed was empty? Yes.
9158. And who was in the next bed? Janet Boyd; and then there was my bed.
9159. Then Janet Boyd was sleeping between you and Sarah Bourke? Yes.
9160. Can you hear everything that is said in the dormitory? Yes, when they speak out at all loud.
9161. And could Janet Boyd have heard what was said just as well as you did? Yes, quite as well.
9162. How many of you were there sleeping in the dormitory? Ten.
9163. And you say that the arrangement was that they were not to break Mrs. Kelly's windows? They were not to break any of the windows in the officers' quarters at all.
9164. Are you aware whether they broke any of these windows? No, I was not there. I only know from what I was told, that they did not break Mrs. Kelly's windows.
9165. Who told you that? Some of the girls.
9166. Did they tell you that Mrs. Kelly was down at the school trying to save the windows? No; they said she was standing up against her own place, and that she caught Polly Williams in her arms, to try and keep her quiet.
9167. Then of your own knowledge you know nothing of what took place? No. I was in another part of the institution at the time.
9168. Where were you—in No. 4 dormitory? No, I was in the hospital.
9169. You did not sleep in No. 4 dormitory after the night of the riot? No; I was removed into the hospital.
9170. Then you do not know what took place with Annie Smith and Kate Solomon? No, I do not; although the girls think I have been telling things about them. Every time I go across the yard, they call me all sorts of names, and say that when they catch me they will pull my liver out, because I came before you gentlemen and told the truth.
9171. Who did you hear say that? Janet Boyd and Sarah Bourke. They said they would smash my face for me when they got out, for what I had said to you about how the riot had been got up.
9172. Did they tell you that they knew of your having told us what you had heard? They did.
9173. Who could have told them that? I cannot say. They must have been told, because they called out to me, what I had been saying, and said they would tear my liver out.
9174. When was it that they threatened you? To-day—this morning, the first thing. Whenever I would be in their sight when they were at the windows, they would shout and hoot at me, and threaten to smash me.

Bessie Moore Dangar called in and examined :—

9175. President.] How old are you? My age in my warrant was put down at thirteen, but I was then over eighteen. Bessie Moore
Dangar.
9176. What age do you say you are? I shall be twenty-three next March.
9177. How long have you been here? I shall have been here eighteen months on the 27th of this month. 26 Nov., 1873.
9178. Will you now tell us briefly what you told us yesterday? About what Sarah Littlewood told me?
9179. Yes? She told me that Mrs. Kelly had given Sarah Bourke some butter to give to the girls who were locked up, but I did not see her give it myself.
9180. Did you see Mrs. Kelly give it to Sarah Bourke? No.
9181. Then you really know nothing of the matter from your own knowledge? No; I did not see Mrs. Kelly give it to her, but I saw her give it to the girls.
9182. Mr. Wearne.] Have you been here eighteen months without leaving? Yes, I have been here all the time.
9183. And what are your duties? I am minding the little baby that is here.
9184. That is in the hospital? Yes.
9185. Have you been mixed up in any of the riots? No, I have never been in any of them.
9186. Have you seen any of them start off—this last one, for instance? No, I never knew anything about it till the windows were all broke.
9187. President.] Then you sleep in the hospital? Yes.
9188. And I suppose that accounts for your not being mixed up in the riots, and for your not knowing anything about them? Yes.
9189. And you do not know of any reason for this last riot? No.
9190. Mr. Cowper.] You say you saw the girl Bourke give the butter to the girls? Yes; I saw her bring it up.
9191. But you do not know where she got it? No.
9192. She may have stolen it? Yes, she may.
9193. And what did you see her do? I saw her hand it up to the girls inside No. 3 dormitory.
9194. How did she hand it to them? By the window outside.
9195. Did you ever hear any of the girls say that Mrs. Kelly prompted them to riot? No; but Sarah Littlewood told me she had done so.
9196. You are not mixed up with the other girls, being in the hospital? No.
9197. But Sarah Littlewood was until lately? Yes; she has been sleeping in the dormitories until this last riot; when she was put to sleep in the hospital—since last Friday.
9198. Did you ever hear of the girls taking pudding as well as butter and passing it to the girls who were locked up? No.
9199. You did not hear of their saving their pudding at dinner-time, and passing it to the girls who were locked up? No.
9200. However, they may have done so? Yes, I would not say that they did not, because they try all sorts of things.

Sarah Bourke called in and examined :—

9201. President.] How old are you? I shall be eighteen on the 16th of next May. Sarah Bourke.
9202. Is that your age in the warrant under which you were sent here? Yes, and my real age. 26 Nov., 1873.
9203. I believe you are the girl whom we induced Mr. Lucas to let out of No. 3? Yes.
9204. And to be sent over to No. 4 dormitory? Yes.
9205. The girls in No. 4 petitioned us very anxiously that you should be allowed to come over amongst them. How long were you locked up in No. 3 dormitory? Two days.
9206. When were you put in? I was sent in on Monday, and stopped there till last night.
9207. And during that time was it shut up as we found it? Yes, it was closed up tight ever since Friday, when Mr. Lucas had the windows boarded up.
9208. Do you know anything of how the riot began on Friday—I mean the breaking of the windows? No, I do not.
9209. Where were you on the Friday morning when the riot took place? I was in the dormitory, scrubbing it out with Annie Dooley, and we never left off stoning until we heard the windows smashing.
9210. Where did you sleep on Thursday night? In No. 4 dormitory.
9211. And when did you leave it on Friday morning? About half-past 8 o'clock. It was then quite wet, as we were just after finishing stoning it.
9212. You are quite sure that you never heard anything of this mentioned in the dormitory on Thursday night? Yes, quite sure, for if I had I should have gone into it.
9213. Whereabouts is your bed placed in the dormitory? It is in the corner of the dormitory—the last of the row.
9214. And who sleeps next to you? Annie Dooley's bed is next to mine.
9215. And who slept next to that? Janet Boyd, and then Sarah Littlewood was the next.
9216. Do you remember any conversation taking place on Thursday night about breaking the windows? No, there was not a word spoken about it on the Thursday before the riot.
9217. Was there upon any other night previously? No, not upon any night, for if I had heard of it I should have been in it, and it could not have been on any other night, for I had only just come out on the Wednesday before the riot from doing fourteen days; and I did that time without a tick to lie on.
9218. Mr. Cowper.] That was your second fourteen days? Yes; I got it for Polly Williams and Lizzie Eddington.
9219. President.] If it has been told us that you have said in the dormitory that Mrs. Kelly told you that the way to get Mr. Lucas out of the place was to smash the windows—is that true? Mrs. Kelly never said a word of the kind.
9220. Did you say so in the dormitory? No, I never mentioned a word of the kind in the dormitory or anywhere else, and if the girl was only here that told you I would say so to her face. But I know where you got the story from, for the same girl has told lies of us before. The misery we suffer from these two girls,

Sarah Bourke. girls, Sarah Littlewood and Bessie Dangar, is more than you would believe. They are always following us about wherever we go, spying upon us, and then carrying tales to Mrs. Lucas—they are always with Mrs. Lucas.

26 Nov., 1873.

9221. They do not sleep in the dormitories? No, they sleep in the hospital, and that is where they are always, and I often hear Mrs. Lucas in the hospital talking to them. Only two months ago these girls had a regular down on both Mr. and Mrs. Lucas, and Bessie Dangar wrote a letter to her mother complaining about them, and saying that they treated her worse than a blackfellow. After all this she is now all for Mrs. Lucas.

9222. If this girl Littlewood has stated to us that you have said in the dormitory what I have just quoted to you, is that untrue? Yes, it is. I never said anything of the kind. She only says this of me because she has a down on me since Sunday. We had a row together on Sunday, and since then we have not spoken to each other. Last night, when we went into the dormitories after you gentlemen had gone, Mr. Lucas came up and spoke about what we had been saying to you, and said he did not care for Cowper or any of the Government gentlemen. Even if there were six of them, he said, it would be all the same to him.

9223. Mr. Wearne.] Where did you sleep last night? In No. 4 dormitory.

9224. I thought you were put in No. 5, so that you might sleep in bed? So I was at first.

9225. There are no beds in No. 4? No, we slept on the matting. I did not sleep in the same dormitory with the other three girls who were taken out of No. 3 dormitory.

9226. How was that—I thought you were all put in No. 5? Some were—the four of us that came from No. 3—but I managed to get out of No. 5 into No. 4.

9227. How did you get in? Last night, when the dormitory door was locked, Mrs. Rowley opened the inner doors leading to Nos. 4 and 5 to empty the slops, and then I managed to slip past her and to go from No. 5 to No. 4.

9228. What made you change—had No. 5 no beds? No. 5 had beds, but No. 4 had not.

9229. Then why did you go? Because I did not like to give Mr. Lucas the chance of throwing it up to me that I only wanted to get over from No. 3 so as that I might have a bed.

9230. Only just before this you had done fourteen days—without a bed I suppose all the time? Yes.

9231. What had you to eat and drink? Bread and water, and they took care that we should have nothing else, for they kept a close watch so that nothing should come to the window for us. Mr. Lucas watched one day and Mrs. Lucas the other, so as to be sure that nothing was passed in to us.

9232. Had you bread enough? Yes, we had half a loaf a day.

9233. Had you enough of water? No, Mrs. Lucas said we were only allowed a pint a day, and that we should not have any more. She said that was our allowance, and she was not going to wait upon us carrying water.

9234. Were you allowed outside to the closet? When we are doing fourteen days we are never allowed out on any occasion.

9235. Was it light where you were confined? Yes, we had one of the windows down.

9236. So that you were able to see? Yes.

9237. President.] On the occasion when we found you in No. 3 dormitory the windows were all fastened up? Yes.

9238. Did you find the room close? I had to get up and walk about. I could not sleep. I could hardly get my breath—I was almost suffocated.

9239. You went into No. 3 on Monday? Yes.

9240. Do you know if there was a fire there on the Sunday—the day before you went in? Yes, I believe there was.

9241. Did you see anything take place in No. 4 dormitory when the police were brought in to search it? Yes; one of the policemen made a rush at me, but I told him not to do anything of that kind, for I would not stand it. Then he let me alone. Then he went at Polly Smith and Annie Roberts.

9242. Were you present when Mr. Lucas beat Lizzie Eddington? Yes.

9243. What did he beat her with? With his fist. The policemen were kicking about our blankets as they were searching over the dormitory, and we told them not to do that as we had to sleep in them. Then Mr. Lucas got in a passion, made a rush at us, and caught Lizzie Eddington and beat her with his fist, calling us "bulldogs" and "faggots."

9244. When you were leaving No. 3 dormitory to go over to No. 5 at our request, I believe that some of the girls you were leaving cried when they wished you good bye? Yes.

9245. What was it Mr. Lucas said about their "blubbing"? He said they were a pack of babies to be blubbing, and he told me that I was gammoning all this to get away.

9246. Did you not tell us that the girls had an axe concealed in the roof of the dormitory? Yes, when we were first locked up.

9247. Where was it? Hidden up amongst the rafters. They have often got up to search the rafters for things we planted there.

9248. How did you get it up there? We put it up by standing on each others shoulders.

9249. And you have matches too? Yes, we take them in and plant them for when we want them.

9250. And candles? Mr. Lucas gives us candles.

9251. The axe was not left there—you planted it yourselves? Yes.

9252. With a view, I suppose, to a riot at some future time? Yes.

9253. We know that you have a good deal of influence over the girls, and you have promised us to use that influence with them to prevent them from rioting in future? Yes, I have.

9254. And will you do so? Yes.

9255. When you come out you will use your influence with them to keep them quiet? Yes; but we do not care much about coming out just yet, for we know our lives will be made a misery to us by Mr. Lucas after what we have said here.

9256. Were the girls quiet last night? Yes.

9257. Mr. Wearne.] When you have fourteen days' confinement, are you always without beds? No, not always; it has only been these last two fourteen days that we have been without beds. Mr. Lucas too has left the other girls their beds, but not us.

9258. You have been without beds at other times? Yes; but it is only when the girls go against Mr. Lucas that they get no bed-ticks.

9259. President.] Have you seen the girls behave rudely to the matrons? Yes, and I have behaved badly to to them myself, and never got anything done to me or a word said to me. I have gone on worse to them than ever I have done to Mr. Lucas or Mrs. Lucas, and never a word said to me. I have called them all in the manner of names in his presence, and he has never taken any notice.

Sarah Bourke.
26 Nov., 1873.

9260. He has allowed you to insult the matrons without offering a remark? Yes; and when I have been down to her place, Mrs. Lucas has told me to slam the door in the face of the matrons. One day Mrs. Plumridge was standing at the door of Mr. Lucas's house, and Mrs. Lucas sent me to shut it in her face. I was going to tell you before that Mr. Lucas said last night that Mr. Goold and Mr. Ellis said that we were all a pack of liars, and that they could not believe us; and he said—"You need not be telling any of your tales, for they will not believe you."

9261. Whom did he mean by "they"? I do not know. The only two names he mentioned were those of Mr. Ellis and Mr. Goold.

9262. What led him to make this statement? I do not know.

Annie Dooley called in and examined:—

9263. President.] How old are you? I shall be eighteen on the 1st of next March.

9264. How long have you been here? I have been close upon two years.

9265. Have you a sister here? No.

9266. You are one of the girls we saw yesterday, and who told us something? Yes.

9267. Did you see anything take place when the police came into the dormitory? Yes; I saw the girls beaten.

9268. What dormitory are you in? No. 4.

9269. What girl did you see beaten? Annie Smith.

9270. Who by? By Mr. Lucas.

9271. When was it she was beaten? On the Monday morning.

9272. Will you tell us how it came about? Mr. Lucas came into the dormitory, and told Annie Smith to take the bedsteads out. She said she could not do it by herself, and some of us said we would help her; but Mr. Lucas said we should not—that she should do it, and he would make her do it. He then took hold of her, and beat her and knocked her down, and took her by the throat and shook her. She said she would not do it for beating, and he said she should—that he would make her.

9273. What did he beat her with? With his fists.

9274. Where did he strike her? About the face and head. He never hit her anywhere but about the face and head.

9275. Were you in the dormitory on Sunday night? Yes.

9276. The girls were making a disturbance, were they not? Yes. In the evening they began kicking up a row—singing and shouting. I joined in it with the rest. Mr. Lucas was walking about listening to us, but he never said a word to us or came into the dormitory, or ordered us to be quiet; but in the morning he would not let us out. When we saw that the girls in the other dormitories were let out and that we were kept in, some of the girls called out of the window, and asked what was the matter that they were locked up. We were told that the girls had all been put to the different work—some of them to the laundry and some to the kitchen, and that we were to be kept locked up. Then the girls said that if they were to be locked up they would be locked up for something, and that they would not be locked up for nothing. Then they began rowing again, and broke the buckets and smashed all the bedsteads. Then Mr. Lucas came in with the policemen, and he turned to two of the girls to take the bedsteads out. Annie Smith said she could not do it, and then he beat her. I was taken in to help with the bedsteads afterwards, and Lizzie Eddington and Sarah Bourke were taken out and put into No. 3. Then we were all locked up for the day, and the moment they left us we began making a noise, and we burnt our aprons and the matting; and Mr. Lucas and the policemen came in to put out the fire. Yesterday we began taking up the floor, and then Mr. Lucas came in with the constables, and Annie Roberts got beat and kicked. I was sitting up in the window when they came in, and had a kick made at me when I jumped down. But Kate Solomon was the worst—she got beaten most unmercifully by Mr. Lucas. The girls had been drawing things on the wall, and when Mr. Lucas came in Kate Solomon was talking about it, and making a laugh of it, so he made a rush at her and grabbed her and told her she should rub it out. She said she would not rub it out, as it was not her who had done it. Then he beat her most unmercifully with his fists, and knocked her down and put his foot on her throat. We all thought he would have killed her the way he went on. I told him he had got the wrong girl, and that she did not do it, and he said he would hit me if I did not mind, and serve me the same. One of the constables came up and was going to hit me, but did not do it when I told him he had better not. Then Mr. Lucas began beating her again and knocked her head against the wall, and knocked her down and hammered her head against the floor, and tried to rub out the drawing with her hair. Then I got before him and at last he let her alone. Then he did the same with Janet Boyd, and rubbed the wall with her hair and bumped her head against the wall.

9277. What was that about the kicking of the girl by the policeman? That was the day before yesterday. I was up in the window when Mr. Lucas came in with the two constables about the fire and to search us for what we had. Me and Annie Smith were up on the window; one of the constables came up to the window to drag us down, but Annie Smith jumped down before he got up. The constable said—"Will you come down before I drag you down?" and I said—"I am not coming down whilst you are standing there looking." Annie Roberts came to help me to get down, when one of the constables—the sandy-whiskered one—gave her a kick and made a big bruise on her leg.

9278. Mr. Wearne.] Do you not find it difficult to climb up to the windows? No. We help each other up.

9279. And down? Yes; we help each other down too.

9280. President.] Do you sleep with Sarah Bourke when you are in your own dormitory? Yes; my bed is next to hers, but we sleep together.

9281. Who lies next to you? Janet Boyd sleeps next to us.

9282. Prior to the riot, when the windows were smashed, did you hear anything said about it in the dormitory? No, nothing was said about it.

9283. Did you not hear Sarah Bourke say that the girls were going to have a riot. No. I am sure she knew no more about it than I did, for we were doing our work—scrubbing the dormitories—when we were Annie Dooley.

26 Nov., 1873.

Annie Dooley. told that the girls were having a riot. We did not believe it, for we had heard nothing about it, and so we went on with our work, until presently we heard the glass smashing, and then we thought it might be true and that the girls were on for a big riot. Then me and her went to see what they were at, and we saw that they were smashing the schoolroom windows.

26 Nov., 1873.

9284. Was that your work? Yes; me and Sarah Bourke only came out on Wednesday from doing fourteen days, and we were turned to to scrub the dormitory out and all round in front of the door. Then we went to the sewing-room and scrubbed that out, and on Friday we were scrubbing out our own dormitory and doing the bedsteads.

9285. Did you hear anything said about Mrs. Kelly in the dormitory on Thursday night? No, not that I know of.

9286. If anybody had said that the best way to put Mr. Lucas out of his place was to smash the windows, and that Mrs. Kelly had said so, would you have heard it? I think so, but I never heard it.

9287. If Sarah Bourke had said so would you not have been sure to have heard it? Yes, I should have been certain to have heard it, because everything she knows she tells me, and if there is anything going on she always tells me about it. I do not believe that anybody knew anything about it, because the girls kept it so sly.

9288. Did you sleep with Sarah Bourke on the Thursday night? Yes.

9289. So that if she had said this you must have heard it? Yes, and I am sure she never said it. They blame everything on Sarah Bourke.

9290. Who do? Mr. and Mrs. Lucas.

9291. How did you hurt your thumb? A large block fell on it and jammed it.

9292. Mr. Wearne.] How long have you been barefooted? Only since I have been locked up in the dormitory.

9293. Since Friday? No, since Monday; I had them on the Friday. We never put our boots and stockings on when we are locked up.

9294. How many dresses have you? We have a working dress, an afternoon dress, and this dress—this is what we call our Sunday dress.

9295. Then you have three dresses each? Yes.

9296. Do you make your own clothes? Yes, I have made every stitch of clothes I have on.

9297. How is it that you have your dresses so short—do you make them so purposely? Yes.

9298. Who cuts them out for you? Mrs. Rowland.

9299. Does she cut them out as short as this? No; she makes them too long. We do not like long dresses, and we put a hem on them after she has cut them out, so as to make them shorter.

9300. Do you cut off the extra piece of material? No, we put a broad hem on it, but I have cut some off.

9301. Have you plenty of clothing supplied to you? No, we have not enough of everything. Sometimes I want a pair of stockings and cannot get them.

9302. How often do you get a change of linen? Twice a week, and that is not often enough.

9303. Why is that? Because we cannot always keep ourselves tidy, and if we soil any of our things they will not give us others.

9304. But you would have sufficient if you only took care of them? Yes, if we were careful over them.

9305. Then you have sufficient clothing and food? Yes. Only last night, the last thing, when he was shutting up the dormitories for the night, he came in and shook his fist at Janet Boyd, and said he did not care for sixty Cowpers or Government gentlemen—he did not care for any of them.

9306. President.] Where was this? In No. 4 dormitory. I was standing up against the wall, and Janet Boyd was sitting down; and he shut his fist and held it up to her and said he would smash her teeth for her—he did not care for all the Cowpers, if there were sixty of them, nor for all the Government gentlemen. He said, "I will not put up with you—you need not think that you are going to do as you like." That was the last thing he said going out.

9307. Mr. Cowper.] You have made up your mind to be a good girl in future? Yes.

9308. And you would be glad to go up the country to service for twelve months? Yes, I would be quite willing to go for twelve months; I would go anywhere to get out of here.

Mrs. Margaret Kelly called in and further examined:—

Mrs. M. Kelly. 9309. President.] Were you here last week when the outbreak occurred—when the girls smashed the schoolroom windows? Yes.

26 Nov., 1873.

9310. What was the first you saw of the breaking out of the riot? About a quarter past 8 o'clock on Friday morning I was sitting in my room having breakfast when I saw some girls running across towards the schoolroom. The first I saw was Polly Williams, and I thought she was going across to the pump to get water for the laundry; but just then I heard a scream, and then, looking more closely, I saw that she had some stones in her hand, and was about to throw at the schoolroom windows. I rushed up to her immediately, but before I could stop them they had several windows broken. The first thing I did was to send to Mr. Lucas to come and put a stop to it, and then I went up to the girls and asked them to stop throwing at the schoolroom windows, as it was mere useless destruction that could not do them any good; but they told me that my talking to them was all of no use, for they had come to break the windows, and break them they would, and they added that I had better go to my own house and look after my children. I did all I could to persuade them, but it was perfectly useless.

9311. Do you know anything of Sarah Bourke taking any butter from your place on Sunday? No. She was at my place and in my yard in the morning, but as I knew that Mr. Lucas had a great objection to the girls coming to our quarters, and that he had a very great objection to my having any conversation with them, I sent her away at once. I am positive that she could not have got butter at my place except from me, and I certainly did not give her any.

9312. If a girl has said that she saw Sarah Bourke coming from your place with butter, and that just before that she saw her talking to you, is that the truth? It is not, for Sarah Bourke did not come beyond my verandah. I was sitting in my bedroom when she came up, and I sent her away at once without hearing what she had to say.

9313. Had you any conversation with any one or more of the girls about breaking the schoolroom windows prior prior to the riot on Friday? No. I had not spoken to any of the girls except to two or three who were sent in to afternoon school on the Thursday. From that time I had no conversation with any of them until I came up here on Sunday to give the religious instruction. I conducted here because the schoolroom windows were all broken, and as it was a wet morning the rain drifted in. Mrs. M. Kelly.

26 Nov., 1873.

9314. If it has been said that you suggested that the way to get Mr. Lucas out of the place would be for the girls to break the schoolroom windows, is that true? Certainly not true. It is not a thing that I should be at all likely to do, as I should have put myself completely in their power, and that I certainly should not do unless I wished to ruin myself. I have not confidence enough in any of them to do such a thing and to place myself at their mercy; for if once I did so, all my usefulness would be gone, and I might as well leave at once. So far was I from urging them on, that I begged and entreated of them to stop breaking the windows. I had no idea whatever of what they were going to do, and it was only when I saw the stones in Polly Williams' hand that I guessed they were bent on mischief.

9315. Mr. Wearne.] What time did you spend in giving them the religious instruction on Sunday? About two hours, I think. The clock was not going, and I had to make a guess at the time. I came at about half-past 9 o'clock up here, and the Catholic girls were mustered. Mrs. Lucas said that as it was raining, this room would be better for the girls than the schoolroom. I agreed that it would be much more comfortable for the girls than the schoolroom, with the rain drifting in at the broken windows. I dismissed the girls at half-past 11 as near as I could guess, and saw Mrs. Brackenregg, to whom I said that I was going to my own quarters. In the afternoon I assembled the girls in the schoolroom, for it had turned out fine by that time. They were kept about one hour on this occasion, but my duties were not done till about a quarter past 6 o'clock, when I came up to give them evening prayers. The girls are mustered and brought in to prayers. When I have said prayers I leave them to the matrons, who take the girls to the dormitories and lock them up. On this occasion, I had not got down to my house, after leaving the girls, before there was a most tremendous row.

9316. Did you ascertain where it was? It seemed to me that they were all up in arms—even the little ones were shouting and screaming.

Sarah Bourke called in and re-examined:—

9317. President.] Did you carry any butter from Mrs. Kelly to any of these girls when they were locked up? No, not from her. Sarah Bourke.
26 Nov., 1873.

9318. Or from her place? No, I did not, nor did she give me any.

9319. Did you hand up butter to the girls? Yes, I did.

9320. You got it somewhere? Yes. — took it out of Mr. Lucas's cupboard and gave it to me for the girls that were locked up.

9321. What time was this? It was the Sunday after the windows were broken. It was after we left the dining-room after having our dinner.

9322. About what time would that be? About half-past 1, I should say.

9323. Did you ever say that you would not go into this riot, but that you would stand out, so as to be able to hand things up to the girls who were locked up? Yes, I have said so, and so has Sarah Littlewood. She said she did not want to go into the first fire we had, but said she would stay out of it, so as to hand us in food when we were locked up. But we would not have it, and said that if one goes in to it we must all go.

9324. Then afterwards you said that you would stop out and do it? No, we all went in to that. That was another affair. But there was nothing said over this, for we knew nothing of this riot till it took place.

9325. Mr. Cowper.] You told us yesterday about you and the other girls saving your pudding on Sunday? Yes.

9326. And then handing it in to the girls who were locked up? Yes.

9327. Do you always do this to each other when you are locked up? Yes.

Mr. George Lucas called in and further examined:—

9328. President.] Mr. Lucas, the Commission, in making their inquiries here, have found certain bruises upon some of the girls—they have shown us certain marks and bruises, and excoriations, and we would like to ask you if you know how they came there? I do not know how they came there. I slapped a few of them on that occasion; but they knock themselves about, and knock one another about in climbing up the walls and getting into mischief. Mr. G. Lucas.
26 Nov., 1873.

9329. What do you slap them with? My open hand.

9330. Do you strike them with nothing else than your open hand? With nothing else.

9331. Are you quite sure of that? Quite sure.

9332. It is only fair to tell you that a number of these girls concur in stating that you struck some of them with a cane and some of them with a broom-handle, and that these marks and bruises I have alluded to have been occasioned by your using the cane and broom-handle? I think that on Tuesday I touched Mary Windsor with the cane—I gave her one stroke with it.

9333. Did you touch Annie Smith with the cane? I am not aware that I have done so.

9334. You know the occasion to which I allude—to the Monday when the police were sent for—did you use the cane to Annie Smith on that day? I am not aware that I did.

9335. Did you use it to either of the Windsor girls on that day? No, not on Tuesday.

9336. Did you use it upon any of the others? No, upon none of the others.

9337. Did you strike Kate Solomons with the cane? I did not.

9338. Did you strike her at all? Yes, I did, but not with the cane.

9339. What with? With my open hand. I ordered her to do a certain thing, and she refused to do it, and I gave her a slap with my open hand.

9340. What was the certain thing you ordered her to do? To rub out some figures they had made on the wall.

9341. There were some figures on the wall? Yes, turning me and Mrs. Lucas into contempt.

9342. Did you drag the girl Solomons up to the wall, and endeavour to rub out this drawing with the hair of her head? I do not remember.

Mr. G. Lucas. 9343. But surely you could not forget such a thing as that? I do not think I did.

26 Nov., 1873. 9344. If, as these girls state, you dragged Kate Solomons up to the wall, and with her hair tried to rub out the figures drawn there, you surely must remember it, and we are entitled to a better answer than "you don't remember"? Well, I might have done it.

9345. And is that really all you can say about it—I ask in justice to yourself? That is all I know of it.

9346. And you now tell us deliberately that you cannot speak to these transactions with more certainty than that? No, I cannot.

9347. Do you think that if you had done all this that the girls represent, it was a thing that you would be likely to forget? I do not know. The figures that were drawn on the wall and the names I was called was enough to put any man out of temper, and to make him not know what he was doing. Then when I told them to rub it out, they expressed their determination that they would not rub it out for me or for any old Orange sod like me. I acknowledge that put me out of temper; but I would ask any of you gentlemen whether you would not have been the same, if you had seen the figure drawn there and the man's name written against it with all his private parts exposed. Knowing that my wife and others have to go in and out the dormitory, and that they must remark what is there. It was a most abominable thing to see, and I do not know what feelings a man can have if he could put up with such things and not get out of temper. I asked them first of all to rub it out, and they would not; then I ordered them to do it, and they told me positively they would not. When they said this, I took one or two of them and tried to force them to rub it out, but they struggled and opposed me, and at last the girl Calf volunteered to rub it out, and did so. They told me positively that they did not care for my orders, and that they would do nothing for me—that none of them would obey me.

9348. Then it may be the fact, that in endeavouring to force the girl Solomons to rub out the drawing, you may have taken the girl's hair to rub it out with? It may be, for I acknowledge that I was very excited. I can only say that I think I did not do it.

9349. Is it also possible that you threw the girl Annie Solomon, on to the floor? I might have done so.

9350. And that whilst she was there you put your foot on her and stood upon her? I do not think so.

9351. But you cannot speak with any certainty on the matter? There were three policemen present—you had better ask them. They saw all that took place, and I dare say they can tell you.

9352. By your answers do you mean in point of fact to say that you have no recollection of what took place on that occasion? I know that I had some quarrelling with the girls about the figures they had drawn on the wall, and that I tried to make them rub those figures out. They refused to do so, and then I tried all in my power to make them. I know that I did this, and I tell you so, for it is no use for me to be here unless I can have my orders carried out. I must force them to obey me in something.

9353. Can you say anything as to whether, upon that occasion, you struck Janet Boyd? I struck her as I struck the others—with my open hand.

9354. But a blow with the hand is hardly likely to make a black mark on the girl's flesh? That is nothing. If you go into the dormitories you will see black marks upon them anywhere. They pinch each other till they make black marks, and it is astonishing to see how they bite each other when they are fond of one another. You would be surprised to see how they will pinch each other sometimes.

9355. What was the commencement of this riot on Sunday—what induced you to lock them up on the Monday? On the Sunday afternoon they went about singing all manner of Orange songs—songs opposed to the Orange, such as, "Down with the orange and up with the green." Then they began singing about me as "The old Orange dog Lucas," and that I was going to be sacked, and such things as that. Then they kicked up a row and began singing that they would rally round the beach, and all the old riot songs.

9356. When was this? In the afternoon.

9357. At what time, before prayer-time? Yes, before they had tea; and they kept it on a greater part of the night. They made so much row in the night that Mrs. King came down to see what was the matter.

9358. How was it that on the Monday morning you determined to keep some of the girls in and to let others out? I kept them all in until I ascertained in some way as to who really were the guilty ones and ringleaders.

9359. And how did you ascertain this? By hearing their stories—hearing what they had to say and seeing how they would act. When you are used to them you can find that out pretty well.

9360. Did you see them breaking the vessels? No, but I heard them; and that Smith and some others were breaking them up. When I went in amongst them, these girls said that the others I let out had nothing to do with the breaking, and asked me to let these girls out. They told me themselves that the girls I let out had nothing to do with the smashing.

9361. But suppose that one says that the two girls you let out were in fact the instigators and ringleaders in the breaking? That is a got-up story. They can make up a first-rate story amongst them when they like. There was as good a lawyer as ever you could have went over from the one dormitory to the other the night you gentlemen were here, and she would take care to have a good story ready amongst the girls.

9362. There could have been no lawyer in this case, because the conversation we had with the girls yesterday took place before the girl you allude to went over from the one dormitory into the other? They have means of communication and send messages.

9363. How was it now that you came to let out some and to keep in others? From what I had heard, and because the girls I let out are girls who never take part in these things—they do not join in riots. There are girls there now amongst those who are locked up that I would not have thought would have done such a thing except from what I have seen since.

9364. And do you think that what had occurred justified you in caning the girls? I did not cane them.

9365. How can you say that, when here is a girl who shows us the marks on her bosom and shoulders where you have struck her with the cane? It may have been Mrs. Lucas who struck her—I did not. I know I struck one of the Windsor girls.

9366. But Annie Smith is the girl I allude to,—did you strike her with the cane? No, I do not remember doing so.

9367. Did you lean down on Kate Solomons' throat and chest with your knee until you nearly choked her? I do not think I did; I do not remember doing so.

9368. Mr. Cowper.] Did you stand on her back, and bear your whole weight upon her? No, I do not think so; I have no recollection of doing so.

9369. When you went into the dormitories did the policemen go with you? Yes.

9370.

Mr. G. Lucas.

26 Nov., 1873.

9370. So that they would have seen everything that occurred? ———

9371. When the girls told us that you said to them that they need not be telling their tales to the Commission, as the gentlemen knew them, and knew what liars they were, and would not believe them,—were they telling us the truth? No; I said nothing of the kind. What I said was that they need not trouble themselves to make statements to the Commissioners, as there was no likelihood that any one who knew them, and knew what liars they were, would believe a word they said unless it was corroborated.

9372. President.] How do you know that there were statements made to the Commission, and what those statements were? Why, I can tell all that they are going to say before they come out.

9373. But nobody knew what questions were going to be put to these girls, so how could you know what they were going to say? Why, the girls talk inside there amongst themselves when they come out from being questioned. They had all out of Sarah Bourke very soon after she had come back from being questioned, and then of course they all knew at once what they should say and what they should not say.

9374. But surely none of them could know what we were going to ask them? Then how could I know? That was the only way in which I could get the information—hearing the girls talk. Every word that is said in those dormitories can be heard outside; and that is the way in which Mrs. Lucas and I heard everything of what was said before the Commission,—by the girls talking inside.

9375. Yesterday we had a girl out, and questioned her, and she made a statement to us—neither she nor the others could know what we were going to ask her? They know a good deal more than you think. Why, directly the bell was rung yesterday afternoon Mrs. Kelly knew what it was, for she said to the girls in the schoolroom—“Here is the Royal Commission.” Now, how was she to know this, and yet she did know it.

9376. How do you know that Mrs. Kelly said this? I have my authority who heard her.

9377. What time would that be when the bell rang? About 3 o'clock.

9378. Then again, how could she communicate with the girls who are locked up, to let them know? There is very little trouble about that. Those who are locked up learn everything that is going on nearly as soon as it happens.

9379. And you say that on seeing us, Mrs. Kelly used the words—“Here come the members of the Royal Commission”? Yes; but that was before she saw you, before you came in the gate.

9380. She must have seen us coming? Not at all. I did not expect you, but I should have known from what I heard that you were coming.

9381. But if she knew the persons who composed the Commission, and saw them approaching the island, she might say, when she heard the bell rung—“There is the Royal Commission”? She did not see you—she knew it another way.

9382. Do you mean to say that some one at the back of the officers' quarters might not have seen us approaching, and have given her information? Not at all; she knew it last night.

9383. It was not known till this morning that we were coming here—our arrangements for coming were only made at the last moment this morning? Yes; I know all about it. It has all been very well arranged to come and get the evidence just at this time. If you had come here about four weeks ago and taken the evidence of these girls, it would have been all the other way.

9384. But I can assure you that it was only upon a sudden idea conceived this morning that the Commission is now here to-day? That may be, but one member of the Commission knew you were coming to-day.

9385. Then do you mean to say that some member of the Commission talks to persons upon the island about what the Commission is going to do? I do say so.

9386. Are you aware that you are making a serious charge against one gentleman? I believe it to be well founded.

9387. Perhaps, as you have said this much, you will say also which of the members you think has done this? Yes. I have no hesitation in saying that it is Mr. Cowper, and that there have been communications passing between him and some of the officers of the institution.

9388. And your ground for this is that Mrs. Kelly said, about the time of our arrival—“Here is the Royal Commission”? Not from that alone, but from other things that have come to my knowledge, where communications have passed.

9389. Then do you know you make a very serious charge when you imply that Mr. Cowper is in communication with the officers of the island? I do not make any charge, but I certainly do wish to imply that Mr. Cowper does communicate with the officers. It is no use making any mistake about it—I know this to be the case. Everything that is done here goes to Mr. Cowper, and he knows every little thing that takes place here much better than I do.

9390. Mr. Cowper.] You complain about the girls calling you an “Orange sod”: have you never said anything to them about their being Fenians? No, I have never said a word to them about Fenianism until they began calling me an Orange everything they could put their tongue to.

9391. What did you say to them? When the girls have called me Orange names, I have said that they were a pack of Fenians. Then the girls laughed and said they were all Fenians, and the Protestant girls joined with them, and said that if they were Fenians they would be Fenians with them. But it is the new girls who have made all the mischief—they who have recently come in. When they came, they began at once by talking about the “poor Catholics” and getting up a lot of sympathy, and ever since then there have been these difficulties.

9392. And how long is it since what you call your new girls came in? About four months ago; and we have heard constant party remarks ever since.

9393. President.] But in the late outbreak both Catholics and Protestants were mingled together? Yes, because the Protestant girls are in the minority, and they are compelled to do as the others do. But as far as I am concerned, I never spoke about their being Catholics, and never said a word about Fenianism until they began to say this about my being an Orange this and an Orange that, and united in singing songs against Orangemen, and then I called them a pack of Fenians, and no better than a lot of rebels. And I say that there must be Fenianism about it, for Fenianism is rebellion against the Government of England, and I know that there is somebody in a very different position who is pushing these girls on; and so I told them.

9394. When you told them this, did you give them to understand who it was that was pushing them on? No, I did not.

9395. Perhaps you will tell us to whom you alluded? I alluded to Mrs. Kelly and to the Sisters.

Mr. G. Lucas. 9396. Then when they call you Orange names you replied by calling them Fenians, and telling them that somebody was setting them on to rebel? No; but all I told them was that they were a pack of Fenians.*

26 Nov., 1873. 9397. And in the face of this, you say Mr. Cowper was in communication with the officers, and through the officers with the girls? No, not in this matter. In this affair it is not Mr. Cowper, but the Church that interferes.

9398. Interferes in doing what? In backing up Mrs. Kelly. She has said more than once that she does not care for me or what I can do—that her Church would stick by her; that it was not Mr. Cowper, but the Church who would help her to keep her ground.

9399. Help her in doing what? In getting over any difficulties she might get into in carrying out the instructions of her Church. You would be astonished if you knew the way these parties are working. I have got some books that I will show you, which I have picked out from those which the Sisters have brought here for the girls to read. If you will only look over them you will be surprised that, with such teaching, we have not had a rebellion amongst the Catholics in this institution long before now.

9400. If you think that there is any necessity for making charges against any person, of interfering with the discipline of the school, or in a manner hostile to the Government, you should do so? It is not my intention to make any charges here.

9401. And as far as the books are concerned, if any improper book is given to the girls, it is your duty to take possession of it, and to report the circumstance to your superior officer? I shall take a course I have determined upon.

9402. What are these books? I will give you an opportunity of seeing them by and by.

9403. We would prefer to see them now? I will fetch them. (Witness retires and returns with a book.)

9404. The book produced (“Adventures of Moses Finnigan, an Irish Pervert,” by Brother James, the late Dr. James Reynolds, of Booterstown, County Dublin—published by Duffy, Wellington Quay, Dublin) is the one you complain of? Yes. It is one selected by the Sisters for the reading of the Catholic girls.

9405. Will you point out to the Commission any portions of it that make it in your opinion an improper book to introduce on to the island? I cannot pick upon any particular passages, because it is all through so utterly wrong that you cannot open a page without finding something objectionable in it.

9406. Is it objectionable upon moral grounds, or upon religious grounds, or upon political grounds? It is objectionable through the wrong it does to the Protestants, and through doing it too in so vulgar a manner as to be offensive.

9407. Have you spoken to the Sisters about it? No, I have never interfered with them in any way. They come and they go and I take no notice of them, ever since the time when they spoke of me as a hireling of the Government.

9408. How do you know this? I am told this by those who heard it.

9409. Now, do you think it a wise thing in a person in your position to listen to what any one person may tell you that some other person has said? I know as a fact that one of these ladies said that she would write to the Bishop about the matter, that she would not report to Mr. Lucas, as he was only a hireling of the Government. It made no difference to me, as I know it is only the style of these people; but I object to these books, because once or twice the Catholics and Protestants have changed books, and these Catholic books ought not to be in the hands of Protestant girls.

9410. What was it you said about Fenianism to the girls? I told them that it was a Fenian affair altogether, and that I should have to expose some of the leaders of it.

9411. But the girls say that you called them Fenians? I did nothing of the kind. I said it was a Fenian affair.

9412. Who do you call the “leaders of it”—who are you going to expose? I am not going to say to the Commission who it is. I take the only course that is open to me, by appealing to those who can do me justice.

9413. But the Commission has been appointed for the express purpose of inquiring into all these matters; and if there is anything of so serious a character as that at which you seem to hint, and you have any charge to make in connection with it, the Commission is the proper body to whom to make it? I had rather not do so. I have not confidence in the Commission.

9414. What do you mean by that—why do you say you have not confidence in the Commission? I mean that I do not think the Commission would deal fairly with me, and therefore I say that I have no confidence in it.

9415. In what sense do you fancy they will not deal fairly with you? In a good many senses.

9416. Just state one sense in which you consider yourself unfairly treated? Well then, in the first place, some of you gentlemen come here to ascertain all about the institution. You go about making inquiries without me, and then you come here and take evidence of which I know nothing. Then this evidence, which I have no doubt would have been in my favour, is kept back till an outbreak occurs some four or five months after, and then, through one Member of the Commission, the Commission is called together at the very time when the whole of the girls are in rebellion against me, and the evidence of the girls is taken against me without my being allowed to be present. This is not fair to me to take the evidence when the girls are all in rebellion against me, because if the evidence had been taken only four weeks ago it would have been of a very different kind altogether. Had the Commission come then, they would have found a very different state of affairs.

9417. Mr. Gould.] Two Members of the Commission did come here about four weeks ago. I was one of them, and we were then perfectly satisfied from what we saw that things were out of order altogether? I am speaking about the statements of the girls. Why were they not taken then?—You would have had no complaints at that time.

9418. President.] You remember last Friday, Saturday, and Sunday, when you had some of the girls locked up for unruly conduct: were you throwing stones at them at the windows? No, I was not, for they were not locked up on those days. 9419.

* NOTE (on revision):—The words “Fenian” and “Fenianism,” occurring in my evidence, and the manner in which they were used, not been very clearly explained, in consequence of my not having had time to think over the matter, I will relate the whole of the circumstances:—On Sunday night, the 23rd November last, two Protestant girls in No. 3 dormitory called out to me that they were Fenians, and at the same time the girls in Nos. 2, 4, and 5 dormitories began singing, “Down with the orange and up with the green.” I said to them—“If you two are Fenians you are all Fenians; is that what it is—you are Fenians? but I will find out the head of this Fenian conspiracy.” This is all that occurred, and it could not possibly have been the cause of the disturbance, for the girls were locked up for rioting after Mr. Cowper investigated the case of burning and read my recommendations as to punishment to the girls which first caused their rebellion against me.

9419. Are you sure of that? Yes, quite sure. I could not have thrown stones at them.

Mr. G. Lucas.

9420. I am speaking of No. 4 and No. 5 dormitories—were not the girls up at the windows, and did you not throw stones at them to make them get down? No; I threw a stone against the dormitory on Monday to frighten them; but I did not throw it at them.

26 Nov., 1873.

9421. What time was this? It was just before we all went in amongst them on the Monday, and I did it for the purpose of getting them down from the windows. They had climbed up to the windows, and there they were laughing and shouting and carrying on in a way that was most disgraceful.

9422. Mr. Cowper.] You try to make out that this talk about Orangeism and Fenianism is a new thing on the island—now do you not recollect that some two years or so ago, when a steamer came by with a picnic party of some Orange lodge. The Orange flag was flying on the boat, and when they passed the island they dipped the flag. On that occasion did not Mary Callaghan tear up a lot of grass to represent the green, and hold it up and shake it at the vessel, at the same time swearing against the Orange flag? I do not remember it.*

9423. But surely you cannot have forgotten that—you must remember Mary Callaghan having done that? No, I do not. I know this,—that I was never called an Orange dog from the time when Mary C——n jumped into the river till now, and that was by Elizabeth Donohoe.

9424. All I want to show is that this talk about Orangeism and Fenianism has occurred before, and that this is not the first time that there have been similar remarks. Are you certain that you have never heard any such remarks? I will not say that I may not have done so; but my memory is not very good. The man who cannot get on the average more than four hours sleep out of the twenty-four—and that is all I get—is not likely to have a very good memory.

9425. Now, used they not to call you an Orange dog much in the same way as they would call me “bloody Cowper,” not really meaning anything particular by it, but more from their peculiar style of conversation? That may be all very well, but I know what the girls’ object is, and I know too who it is that is keeping them up to it.

9426. President.] Do you really mean to say seriously that there are persons of influence and authority behind the scenes who are inciting these girls on in their acts of insubordination, and who are using their influence to incite these religious dissensions? I do.

9427. And you say that you are prepared to point them out, but not to us? That is what I say.

9428. And you decline to give us any information on this point? I do certainly.

THURSDAY, 27 NOVEMBER, 1873.

Members Present:—

WILLIAM CHARLES WINDEYER, Esq., PRESIDENT.

CHARLES COWPER, JUNR., Esq., | MICHAEL METCALFE, Esq.,
SAMUEL GOOLD, Esq.

Miss Florence Hill called in and examined:—

9430. President.] This Commission has been appointed, Miss Hill, by the Government of this Colony, to inquire into our Public Charities, amongst others our Industrial Schools and Orphanages; and knowing from your book the great interest you take in neglected and destitute children in the Mother Country, as well as your intimate association with the success of the boarding-out system and its extension in England, we thought that perhaps you would be willing to give us the benefit of your valuable experience. It is some four years, I think, since your book on the subject appeared? Yes, it was published in January, 1868.

Miss F. Hill.

27 Nov., 1873.

9431. Have you seen any reason since its publication to alter the views you put forward as to the advisability of adopting the boarding-out system? All I have learned has confirmed the opinion put forward in my book very strongly, and I have paid great attention to the subject since.

9432. Do you find that in England the advisability of adopting this system in preference to placing the children in large schools is growing in favour? Yes, it is decidedly growing; and I think also that we see an improvement in the large institutions themselves, and that the feeling is becoming more general that very large institutions are a mistake. Although many persons will not go so far as to say that the boarding-out system is feasible, still they do see that large numbers brought together in masses is a mistake; and means are being taken to subdivide them.

9433. But on the whole, you say there is a growth of public feeling in favour of the boarding-out system? Decidedly, but we are slow to move in England.

9434. I see from the publications which you have been kind enough to lend the Commission, that the system has been adopted in many places throughout England? Yes, I think it is in operation in about seventy Unions. In 1867 it had been adopted, I believe, only in nine or ten.† I think as many as that. It is difficult to find out the number, because it is often practised without the circumstance being reported, so that one has to learn from special inquiry in many cases.

* NOTE (on revision):—Mr. Cowper must have got this information from the same lady as invented the story of the pigs in the dining-room. I never heard of this before, which I should have done if it had taken place.

† NOTE (on revision):—The organization for administering our Poor Law may be thus briefly described:—The central authority, entitled the Local Government Board, sits in London, and its President is a Cabinet Minister. Each parish is very large, but usually a combination of several parishes, called a Union, has a Board of “Guardians of the Poor,” part of whom are elected by the rate-payers of their parish or Union, and part (usually about one-third) are ex-officio Guardians as being Magistrates for that district. This Board administers the Poor Law in its own Union, but its conduct is liable to appeal to the central authority. In every such parish or Union there is a workhouse—often itself called colloquially

Miss F. Hill. 9435. Do you know of any Union where, having been fairly tried, it has been abandoned? Yes, a few. I made inquiries respecting all the Unions in which I could learn the plan had been adopted, and it had been given up in four or five, but in each of these cases it was so given up, as far as I could ascertain—except possibly in one, where however the number of children boarded out was very inconsiderable—because no effective supervision had been organized. The help of volunteers had not been obtained. The individual Guardians who undertook the duty themselves, and who had been very desirous of having the system adopted, had not been able, single-handed almost, to provide sufficient supervision to ensure the successful working of the plan. In these few instances it had been given up.

9436. Do you find that the opponents of the system are persons who have had practical experience of its working, or, is the opposition from theoretical men, or those who are interested in maintaining large institutions? As far as I know, either from theoretical grounds, or by those who may be said to have an interest in maintaining large institutions; in this way—that, knowing that a great deal of money has been spent on them, they think that money will be thrown away. A great deal of money has been spent during the last few years in building pauper schools, and great efforts have been made to render them successful. Great expense has been gone to, so much so that in some schools where there is accommodation for 500 children the cost of building alone is £25 for each child.

9437. Is that the usual cost in England? I am not sure, but at any rate many schools have been built at that expense. Then money has been sunk for the training of the children, by engaging highly paid teachers and a large staff of officers. A great deal of time and attention have been devoted to these institutions by their promoters, and it is not unnatural that they should prefer to abide by them rather than adopt a new system; but still many instances have come to my knowledge where the Guardians themselves, who have been engaged in establishing these large institutions, have nevertheless been convinced that boarding out would be better, and have exerted themselves to get it adopted.

9438. I see that Professor Faucett objected to the system. Do you know whether he has any practical acquaintance with it? I think not. I believe it is theoretical.

9439. At all events, from what you have seen, do you think there is any force in his objections? No, I think his objections are that it is unfair to the industrious labourer to compel him to help in paying perhaps 4s. or 5s. a week for boarding-out the child of his idle neighbour, while he may be able to spend but 2s. 6d. a week on his own. In answer to that, we say that the State is obliged to support these children in some way or other, and that while the average sum for children boarded out is 3s. 9d. a week, the cost in workhouses is scarcely under 5s. and in separate and district schools is from 6s. to 10s. a week. Therefore we maintain that, as the industrious labourer is compelled to board his children somewhere or other, it is cheapest for him to board them out, and that it is far more to his advantage to have them brought up in a way to make them self-supporting than to bring them up to be a burden to the State. In some of our pauper schools, although most elaborate appliances are introduced to secure health, the children are sickly, and improve in health when removed to a humble cottage home.

9440. Would you just state briefly your views as to why this system of boarding out is better, as far as the child is concerned, than bringing them up in these large institutions? It is better, I believe, from many causes. The child placed in a family is under parental care—it becomes familiar with the duties and pleasures of family life—and it receives insensibly that training of the temper and affections which comes from living with persons of different ages and standing in different relations to it, as father and mother, elder and younger brothers and sisters, &c. Then, in the cottage home it sees frugality and economy exercised, which it never sees in large institutions, where food is given to it as if it fell from heaven, without effort on its part. No effort of its own, for the sake of others, is ever called forth in its daily life, nor does it see any one foregoing anything for it. No one exercises that generosity and forbearance in its behalf which is habitual in a good parent, especially among the poor, and which have a most wholesome effect upon the child, who thus learns by example to be generous and forbearing in its turn. All that is absent from large schools, where each teacher may have as many as fifty children in her charge. Again, children require constant change—they are not able to fix their attention long on one thing; but in the schools they pass their lives in their schoolrooms and a very monotonous playground, rarely going out into the roads and lanes to see fresh faces, fresh objects, and a variety of animals, all of which have a good effect upon them. The extreme monotony of these large schools has a most deadening effect, physically and mentally. A highly important advantage of the boarding-out system, and one wholly wanting in schools, is that it weaves fresh home ties about the child, and creates an interest in his welfare among his foster relatives, and a desire on his part not to lose their good opinion, which, in his after-life, are probably the most efficient safeguards from going astray with which he could be surrounded.

“The Union.” The funds administered by the Guardians are derived from local rates raised in each parish or Union, except as regards London, which contains a vast number of Unions, but whose Poor Law expenditure is, I believe, by a recent Act of Parliament, defrayed from a general fund, consisting of rates raised throughout the whole metropolis. This exception arises from the unequal distribution, in our gigantic capital, of rich and poor. There are districts of many square miles not possessing a single rich inhabitant; and there are others where there are scarcely any poor.

Every destitute person has a legal claim to relief, but it is at the discretion of the Guardians (within certain conditions) to give out relief, or to compel the applicant to come into the workhouse, when he must give up whatever he possesses, as furniture, tools, &c. The inmates are required to work, if able, but very little profit is ever made by their labour. Except in seasons of depression, when employment is scarce, and able-bodied men and women take refuge there, the inhabitants of the workhouse are almost entirely the old, infirm, and sick, and children, except that there is usually a residue of shiftless or ill-conducted young men and women who have formerly been pupils in the school, and have failed to become self-supporters.

In all well-managed workhouses the adults and juveniles are separate, as far as the inhabitants of one building can be separated, but in even the best they mingle to some extent. For this reason the children are sometimes removed to a distinct building called a separate school; and sometimes the Guardians of several Unions join in building one school for all the children: this is called a district school. Some of these receive 1,000 or 1,500 children, while the largest separate school has, perhaps, 600 or 700 pupils.

The children consist of two very different classes, though all are mixed together, namely; the permanent, who are orphans of, perhaps, thoroughly respectable parents, children of lunatics or other incurables, and the deserted; and the casual, whose parents pass constantly in and out of the workhouse, taking their children with them. Under our Poor Law, parents cannot quit the workhouse themselves and leave their children behind, unless they engage to pay for their maintenance.

The permanent class remains sometimes from infancy until they go to service at thirteen or fourteen; while the casuals may come in and out many times in a year; the intervals, perhaps, being spent in the lowest lodging-houses and other haunts of their parents, who are often vagrants, prostitutes, or petty thieves. One of the disadvantages of the large school system is that it throws these two classes of children into the closest association—an evil which boarding out (at present applied in England to the permanent class only) will obviate.

9441. Do you find as a matter of experience, and from complaints made to you, that, to a certain extent, girls are unfitted for the ordinary work of the world by the very perfection of the institution in which they are brought up? Yes. It not unfrequently happens that they are utterly at a loss what to do when they go into ordinary places, and are dependent on their own efforts. Miss F. Hill.
27 Nov., 1873.

9442. Then, do I understand you to say that this feeling against large institutions is growing in England? Certainly; I am quite sure of it. For instance, in a rather new institution which I went to see before leaving England, last January, for the children of female convicts, the system of separate houses had been adopted.

9443. Where is that? About twenty-five miles from London, near Weybridge in Surry. It is called the Princess Mary Village, in consequence of the interest taken in it by Princess Mary of Teck. There are four or five small houses,* in each of which perhaps ten or twelve children live with the matron, who is called a mother, I think. They have one schoolroom in common,† so that they have the advantage of being taught in large numbers, and better still, they have the advantages of home life. In the "Home for Little Boys" at Hornsey, near London, called the "Alexandra Village," after the Princess of Wales, the same arrangement prevails. The children are dealt with successfully by breaking them into groups and giving them as much family life as possible.

9444. That is the same principle? Yes.

9445. What would you say from casual experience as to the size a school should not exceed, if you must have a school and could not board children out? The number in each family dwelling?

9446. Supposing you had not the appliances and buildings suitable for the family system, what size should these schools not exceed? If I understand you aright, you are contemplating still buildings for the purpose.

9447. No. Supposing you have not got that—supposing you have the children altogether? I should not have more than twenty together.

9448. I understand from your sister that it should be not more than twenty? I think that perhaps some confusion may arise in reading reports in which pauper schools are sometimes called industrial schools. The term has been employed to avoid the use of the word "pauper." Some of the earliest and best known pauper schools are thus called industrial schools, but they are entirely distinct from what are called industrial schools in the Act of Parliament of 1866, where the inmates are detained under sentence, as at Biloela.

9449. We have two schools, containing about 200 or 300 children each, and it has been thought desirable, on grounds of public policy, to abolish them if possible; the question has arisen how this should be done, and whether it is desirable, in abolishing these schools, to put these children all together in one institution, making it an institution of 500 or 600 children. Apart from public grounds, what would you say, from your experience on the subject and the tendency of public opinion in England, as to the desirability of putting these children together? It would be most undesirable I think. I do not think such a step would be taken in England. The feeling against large numbers is gaining ground, and I believe any proposal to amalgamate two schools would be rejected.

9451. In point of fact, the family system being the natural one, the more unlike it a system becomes the more imperfect it is? Yes, I am convinced of it.

9452. Then, as I understand the theory and the arguments founded upon it, the remedy for this state of things is the boarding-out system? Yes. The system is applicable to a large number of cases. There might be some whom it would not be advisable to board out. Certainly at Home there is a considerable class of children who come into our workhouses and schools and go out again with their parents over and over again. Respectable cottagers would not take them if liable to be removed at any time. We must deal with them differently so long as the law gives parents power to take their children away when they choose. But this law is likely to be altered, for the evil of it is beginning to be recognized.

9453. Have you visited our Asylum in Parramatta-street, where there are a number of little children? Yes.

9454. From what you saw, do you think it desirable they should be congregated as they are? No, I think not. They look to me far from healthy, and, I should think, are growing up in a manner not to become good citizens. Certainly the orphans amongst them cannot, where they are, form the fresh family ties that would help them in after-life. We think that of great importance. The children through life have the advantage of belonging to respectable families.

9455. Do you think, as a matter of experience, that they are absorbed into these families? Yes, in many instances they are so absorbed. Boarding out has been pursued in Scotland and Ireland for twenty-five and forty-five years respectively, and the success has been very marked indeed. In Edinburgh, Glasgow, and Dundee, the children are found to be absorbed into the working population. Their career is watched, and it is known for a great many years what they are doing, and the percentage of those who return to the workhouse is very small. A return was sent to me last year from Glasgow, giving the career of 923 children who had been sent to service or other employment during the past sixteen years; and of this number, less than 5 per cent. had been lost sight of by death or otherwise, less than 5 per cent. were of bad character, and about 91 per cent. were known to be doing well. That return shows conclusively the superiority of the boarding-out system. It is very difficult to know what becomes of the children out of large schools. They soon pass away from observation, but, from investigations that have been made, we do know that a large proportion must come to grief. We cannot tell exactly where they are, but we know they are not living respectably, and I am afraid it would not be an exaggeration to say that 50 per cent. are failures.

9456. That applies equally to the boys as well as to the girls? I do not say that as many boys as girls would fail, but the proportion, taking them all together, would be 50 per cent.

9457. Was any difficulty found in providing suitable homes for these children? At first we had a little difficulty—we had to inquire rather widely to find them; but as soon as the plan was understood we had applications from suitable foster-parents, and now there are more homes offered than there are children for them.

* NOTE (on revision):—More will be built as they are required.

† NOTE (on revision):—Where, I think, children from outside also come.

- Miss F. Hill. 9458. Amongst what class do you seek to put the children out? Market gardeners, small farmers, and the superior class of agricultural labourers, getting perhaps from 15s. to 18s. a week; and married servants are desirable, as having the knowledge necessary to train the girls to service. Small shopkeepers have sometimes taken the children. We consider it very important to put children where there are no servants kept, because otherwise the child is likely to be associated with the servants and sink below the level of the family and become a drudge. It is essential it should be accepted as a member of the family.
- 27 Nov., 1873. 9459. Objections are sometimes raised here that you will not find people to take the children. Was the same objection raised in England? Oh yes. It was said that it was absurd to suppose that people who had either no children or plenty of their own would be willing to take the children of paupers. I am sorry to say that "paupers" are a class looked upon with great contempt—a feeling which attaches too often to the children as well as to those grown up.
9460. But I understand you to say that these objections are found to be imaginary and ill-founded? Quite so. We have always endeavoured to appeal to the kindly feelings of those with whom we propose to place the children. We pointed out the miserably dull life they lead in workhouse and even separate schools. Even there their life is a dull one, and moreover it does not prepare the children to do well in after years. We explain this, and appealing to them in that way have always found a response. The foster-parents have done by far the largest part in enabling the children to turn out well. There are among our hard-working people at Home a large class most desirable as foster-parents, who yet are not rich enough to support the children out of their own means, though many do support waifs and strays; so that it is not an unusual thing to find children in these humble households who have been taken in and treated as one of the family out of pure benevolence; but as a rule, they could not afford it. Still we think it best to pay only what the children cost them.
9461. Do you make any provision for the children going to school? Yes, it is compulsory that the children shall go to a day school, and in addition to that, it is required that they shall attend a place of worship, and if possible a Sunday-school. We prefer that the child should go to the place of worship attended by its foster-parents, and on that account we try to place the children with foster-parents of their own religion. Of course Protestants and Roman Catholics are the great divisions.
9462. Coming back to Professor Faucett's objections,—was not one of these founded on the assumption that under the boarding-out system the life of the children would be so pleasant that parents would be tempted to desert them in order to obtain it for them? Yes, that is one of his principal reasons for opposing the system, but experience has shown it to be groundless. Indeed, it is a curious fact that the boarding-out system has just the opposite effect. In the workhouse at Cork, in Ireland, the children had got into such a horrible state of disease that it was determined to adopt the boarding-out system, and within a short time I think 250 were placed out. The parents became aware of this, and although they had been quite content that their children should remain in the workhouse, about fifty children were immediately re-claimed. A similar effect has resulted in Liverpool and other places; and although I do not know that any children were re-claimed by their parents from Bath Union, when the system was adopted there, it was certainly the case that for a year and a half afterwards no children who could be boarded out were brought into the workhouse; so that the introduction of the plan there certainly had no such influence upon the parents of that locality as Mr. Faucett apprehends.
9463. Mr. Metcalfe.] Where poor persons find that there are people who are willing to take care of their children, why do they have an objection to the system? I think it may be in some cases from affection, but in far more instances they object to it because they want their children from time to time to go with them on begging and pilfering expeditions, after which, having made all the use of them they can, they bring them back again to the workhouse.
9464. Are they allowed to do that? I am sorry to say they are.
9465. President.] How is the boarding-out system administered? Boarding out is conducted in different parts of England under different regulations. Children boarded out within the limits of their Union are entirely under the direction of the Board of Guardians for that Union, and may be placed in any cottage within that Union, without reference to the Central Board in London. It rests with the Guardians to regulate the conditions under which the children shall be placed out. For instance—in some Unions the children are not allowed to be boarded out under or above certain ages; such limits, if prescribed, depending entirely upon the Guardians. But as regards children whom it is thought desirable to send away from their own Unions, a very strict code of regulations has been issued by the Central Board in London, whose consent is required to legalize such removal beyond the Union. We have a great many entirely urban Unions, and the object of getting permission to board children out beyond their Unions was to remove them from London and other large towns into the country. In these regulations the ages are limited to above two and under ten. It is further provided that voluntary supervision shall be secured—that a child must not be placed in a home more than a certain distance from a good school, or from the house of one of the voluntary supervisors, &c., &c. I may mention, in order to show how completely a child may become a member of the family with which it is boarded, that it is not unusual, especially if it enters it while very young, for it to have its own surname superseded by that of its foster-parents, so that it actually grows up unconscious that it is not their own child. This has happened frequently in Scotland. In Ireland I have been told that there are instances in which boarded-out children can only be distinguished from those born in the family by their different physiognomy.
9466. Then it is no part of this system of boarding out that a child should take a position of servant or apprentice? We have no system of apprenticeship to service in England similar to yours; but I think the plan of apprenticing from the school a very good one, because it retains the young people under supervision and control until they are able to take care of themselves.
9467. You think it would be an advantage, boarding them out in this way, to become at a certain age servants in the same family, or would you make them quite distinct? I think that in almost all cases the apprenticeship would have to be to other persons, because it is not desirable to put children to board in families where servants would be employed. If the foster-parents wish to retain the children, it certainly would be undesirable to break the bond which has grown up between them, supposing they were mutually attached, and then apprenticeship might be desirable.
9468. You spoke of a failure having taken place in one or two instances from want of a volunteer organization in carrying out the system, and I observed from the publications you lent us, that considerable importance is attached to the necessity of getting volunteers to look after the welfare of the children, and that such a feeling was growing up—Is that the case in England? Yes, decidedly. The feeling is becoming so strong strong that, as I have said, in 1870, when the central Board consented to allow children to be boarded out beyond their own Unions, it laid down conditions in which was included volunteer supervision. In the neighbourhood to which it is proposed to send the children, a committee must first be formed, which becomes responsible for their welfare. Its members select the homes for them, and visit them both in their homes and at school. It also receives the money for the support of the children from the Guardians of the Union to which they belong; it pays the foster-parents, medical officer, &c., and communicates whenever needful with the Guardians.

Miss F. Hill.
27 Nov., 1873.

9469. Do you think, in order to ensure the success of a child after leaving a reformatory or industrial school, that it is desirable to have persons to watch over it? Yes, I am sure it is of great importance.

9470. Is it becoming general in England? To some extent, but not so thoroughly as I should wish.

9471. Do you think that persons taking that sort of work from a love of it, are better people to watch over the children and exercise a beneficial influence over them than an inspector? Yes; but my opinion is that both are desirable as regards children sent to service from schools and those boarded out. An official inspector visiting occasionally is a very great safeguard also.

9472. Mr. Metcalfe.] I presume that in the case of any one taking these boarded-out children, if they do not behave themselves they are sent back to the Union? Yes, they can be sent back.

9473. That seems to obviate the necessity of volunteer supervision? I think not, for the following reasons:—We regard it as a great misfortune to a child to be returned to the workhouse, where it has small chance of growing up to be a good and useful citizen, and we make every effort to prevent it. When a child is first boarded out, especially if it has passed some years in a large pauper school, it is apt to be stupid and ill-tempered. If the foster-parents have patience with it for a few weeks, an attachment almost invariably springs up, which reconciles them to the charge they have undertaken: but this is a trying time, and friendly supervision is needed, both to help them through the difficulty and to ensure their doing their duty towards the child.

9474. I should think that would not be the case, but that they would resent any interference between them and the child they had taken to adopt? We rarely find any objection, on the part of foster-parents in England, to supervision (which indeed is made a condition of their having the children), and in South Australia even those who adopt children are usually willing for them to be visited, if this is done with tact and in a kindly spirit. There are different ways of dealing with the children: for instance, in England their maintenance is paid for, but in South Australia, though some are paid for, a much larger number are put out on "adoption" without payment, as the demand for the children is great.

9476. I presume where the pay ceases you give up the inspection? Yes; at Home, where payment is universal, it would be so; but I think if children should be placed out here on adoption, they ought to be supervised as well as if boarded out. That is the rule in South Australia.

9477. Mr. Cowper.] Do you not think it is a duty the State owes to the child? Most certainly I think so.

9478. Mr. Metcalfe.] But when they adopt the child it becomes theirs? No; in South Australia it can at any time be taken from them if its treatment is not satisfactory; and how, without supervision, can it be ascertained that the foster-parents are competent and willing to perform their duty?

9479. I suppose the children would take their chance, as all children of this class must do? I think there is a great difference, as regards the responsibility of the State, between protecting children from ill-usage, whom it has placed in the power of persons who are not their parents, and intervening hastily where real parents may seem to fail in their duty towards their offspring.

9480. My theory is, that if a child was not well treated it would be sent back to the place it came from? I am afraid that instances might arise in which, without supervision, it would be retained and over-worked. At Home the great danger would be that it would be underfed: here, I think, the great danger is that it would be over-worked.

9481. President.] Are you in favour of a graduated or fixed scale of payment? I think a fixed scale is the best, except in cases where the child is a very young infant.

9482. Mr. Metcalfe.] Your object in boarding out children is not to save the State any expense, but simply to ensure the welfare of the children? Both. When it is generally adopted in place of the large schools at Home it will be far cheaper than the school system.

9483. But I see that while 3s. 6d. a week is paid in Scotland to the foster-parents for the children, in England it is 5s.? I beg pardon; I do not think it is as high as that.

9484. I think I saw it stated that it was 5s. or 6s. in England? It varies according to the locality, but is usually under 4s. in England. In the neighbourhood of large towns food is more expensive than in the country, and that might make a difference. Our Scottish neighbours of the working class live more frugally than our own people. Of course we cannot ask that these children shall be received for less than the maintenance costs of the members of the family with whom they live; still, I have reason to think that the foster-parents often spend more than the allowance for the children.

9485. President.] From their attachment to them? Yes.

9486. Mr. Metcalfe.] It appears to be a very cheap system, but the doctor costs nothing, because he is an officer of the State? In calculating the expense, of course each child is debited with a share of the doctor's salary. In Scotland the amount is a few pence a year. In England, in many Unions, the plan is to give the medical man of the district, the workhouse doctor, or any other medical man, 10s. a year for every child they may have to attend, and very often this 10s. is paid to them when they have no duties to perform, though in another year of course there may be serious illness.

9487. I see the system has been adopted in Ireland since 1826? The Protestant Orphan Association, which boards out all its children, was formed in 1828, but something resembling boarding-out has existed in Ireland for centuries. I find that the boarding-out system has been pursued for a very long time in many Countries.

9488. In Scotland there are very few pauper schools at all? Very few. I have been told by a Poor-law official, now at Glasgow, that he was at first strongly opposed to the system. He went from England to Scotland, but in the course of time, having watched it, his opinion was entirely changed, and he is now one of its most earnest supporters. Another gentleman, now at one of the Edinburgh workhouses, who when he went thither from England was strongly opposed to it, is now entirely in favour of it. There was a strong feeling against it, because it was confounded with the method formerly pursued of "farming-out" pauper children, who were sent in great numbers to one person, and under it they were often the victims of shocking neglect, and sometimes of great cruelty. It is very important to place at most two or three in the same family, except in the case of brothers and sisters, when there might be as many as four or five put together, but as a rule one or two are better than more, and it is not desirable to send a large number to one locality, or else they form a class to themselves. The advantage of the boarding-out system is that it disperses the children widely.

9489. President.] You have been in South Australia lately? Yes.

9490. I believe the system has been adopted there to some extent? It was adopted about eight years ago in the case of two or three children, but only a few were boarded out until lately, when it was resolved to pursue the system extensively, and a large number of children are now boarded out.

9491. And as far as you saw, under the different circumstances compared with the Mother Country, the system had been successful? Yes, decidedly so. Mr. Reid, Chairman of the Destitute Board, took us to see a considerable number of children in the neighbourhood of Adelaide, and their homes were excellent. The houses are rather rougher than we are accustomed to in England; but there was the same kindly feeling to the children, who seemed to be very much valued—far more so than they would be at home merely as children. Children seem to be very valuable here.

9492. Mr. Gould.] Were servants generally kept in these families? No, I think not—not in those we visited. They are very small farmers, labourers, market gardeners, and that class of persons. In two or three cases the children were placed in gentlemen's lodges, which of course make a capital home for the child, because it is under the constant observation of the owner of the place. The lodge is generally a nicely-kept house, and the lodge-keeper is a superior person.

9493. President.] You were asked just now as to the comparative number of failures amongst the girls leaving large institutions—Is it not found, as a matter of experience, that these large institutions are more detrimental to girls in the development of their characters than to boys? Yes, I believe that is the case. I believe boys lose much happiness by being brought up together in masses, and I think their characters suffer in after-life; but I think as a whole the girls suffer a great deal more, from a want of home life, and other causes.

9494. Then you think the character of a large school is the very thing that makes a girl undomestic? Yes; and it seems to deaden all their better feelings, and to make them sullen. They often become very stupid and dull.

9495. Mr. Metcalfe.] There is no element of kindness in their life? They receive a great deal of kindness, no doubt, from their teachers, as far as they have time to show it, but they cannot show it to individuals in so large a number.

9496. President.] Do you think the children you saw in Parramatta-street would be better at Randwick? I should think they would be better in the country. I think it is a dreary thing for them to be in the town, and it must be bad for their health. We have in London a very celebrated Foundling Hospital. It was established about a century ago for the reception of any child that might be brought there; but great evils arose, and the character of the institution has been changed. It is now a home for children whose mothers cannot support them. They may be admitted in earliest infancy, but if so, are invariably boarded out in the country until they are three years of age.

9497. In reformatory and industrial schools, where they have no volunteer organization to watch over the young persons sent out, have they any system of inspection? Yes, for three years after the children leave these schools the managers must keep up some sort of supervision, so as to be able to report to Government upon the position of the young people they have placed out. This is one of the rules they have to comply with.

9498. A district school, as I understand, is a school built by two or more Unions for the reception of the children from all the parishes in their respective Unions. What are separate schools? A separate school is the school of one Union only, but distinct from the workhouse, and hence its name. The object in so separating it is to divide the juvenile from the adult paupers; and the object of the district school is the economy anticipated from providing for large numbers together—an economy, however, which is certainly not attained. With regard to the importance of supervision, I may mention that the success of Mettray is in part attributed to the fact that all the youths sent out of that reformatory are supervised—the friendly services of people residing in various districts being enlisted for this purpose. The institution is visited by a large number of persons from all parts of France, as well as other Countries, and some of these persons upon being asked will promise their patronage, as it is called, and overlook any of the youths who may come to their neighbourhood. The person who undertakes this voluntary duty reports from time to time upon the conduct of his protégé, and is a friend to him in case of need.

9499. What sort of persons would you appoint to undertake this supervision? I should be glad to obtain the voluntary help of gentlemen and ladies, but it is usual in England for the managers of schools to engage such a person as a city missionary—one who could give part of his time to the duty.

9500. Do you pay these people? Yes. If a young person goes to service at a distance from the neighbourhood of his school, supervision is obtained sometimes by asking some volunteer to watch over him and report upon his position and conduct.

9501. Is any provision made compelling persons to pay for the education of a child sent to a reformatory or industrial school? Yes.

9502. How much a week are they compelled to pay? The Magistrate who sentences the child fixes the sum, which must not exceed 5s. a week. In France, a pauper child that has been under the care of the State cannot be re-claimed by the parent until he has repaid the cost incurred by the State for the child. I think this would be a good provision to introduce into our law.

9503. Mr. Cowper.] Do you not think there would be no hope of the children returning to their parents? I would not go so far as to say that all the money should be repaid, but I think that unless a parent can repay a considerable portion of the money which has been spent upon his child, and also give a guarantee that he will hereafter do his duty towards it, he should not be permitted to have it.

9504. Parents who neglect their children when they are in these institutions will probably neglect them when they return home? Yes, unless they can turn them to some profit. We are very much troubled with parents who have neglected their children and who are glad to take them when they grow up, but it is for evil purposes generally.

9505. President.] Has it been found in England that if the police attempt to take these children from the streets, the parents set up some excuse of trifling employment? Oh yes; but that is met under our

Industrial

Industrial Schools Act. The offering of any small article for sale (usually a mere cloak for begging) is a reason for taking the child up. Selling matches, asking for money for sweeping crossings, &c., are all considered reasons for apprehending the child and committing it to an industrial school. I do not mean that any child who did that would be apprehended, but it is a reason if a child is known to be in a bad position.

9506. Is that the Act of 1866? Yes.

9507. You have seen the Industrial School at Biloela? Yes.

9508. What do you think are the prospects of doing any good in such a school, where the older girls, as you have seen, associate with the little ones; what do you think is the chance of success with the older girls, and do you think such an arrangement is desirable as far as the younger children are concerned? It is most undesirable as far as the younger children are concerned, and, as regards the elder girls, the treatment suitable for young children is altogether unsuitable for them.

9509. Have you an institution where such elder girls are taken? No, we have not power to apprehend them for want of guardianship, &c., after fourteen years of age.

9510. Our age is sixteen: do you think that too great an age for this Country? No; I should like to see it extended, but such girls should be committed to schools or homes established specially for their reception. In reformatories at Home the older girls are very unsuitable associates for the younger. These schools are managed on the voluntary principle and receive State subsidies. The managers can determine the age of the children they will receive.

9511. And they are sentenced for long terms? Not so long as could be wished, in order to reform the children and give them a fair start in life.

9512. Mr. Cowper.] What are the sentences for children who did not commit crime, but who were found sleeping out? We should call two years a very short sentence for a child. Suppose a child of seven or eight committed for two or even three years, how could it get its living at the expiration of its sentence?

9513. Then there is no provision for apprenticing them? No, not under our Reformatory and Industrial Schools' Act; and unless the sentence is long there is no opportunity of placing them out on license, which is the system adopted at Home.

9514. Our provision—that under the Industrial Schools Act—for waifs and strays is that they must remain in the school until they are twelve, and then we can apprentice them out? I think that is a very wise provision indeed. Do you sentence the child?

9515. No, we do not sentence the child under the Industrial Schools Act. We send the children to the schools for a certain term up to thirteen years of age, and then they can be apprenticed to any person applying for them until they are eighteen? I think your system of apprenticeship is a very good one.

9516. We have no system of licensing such as you have in England? That is a great want.

9517. Which institutions have you visited? I have seen the institution at Parramatta-street, the Catholic Orphanage at Parramatta, and Biloela Industrial School.

9518. Would you have the boarding-out system in the country rather than the suburbs? Yes, rather than quite close to town.

9519. In distant parts of the country there would be difficulties? Yes, in securing supervision.

9520. President.] From what you say, I understand that you see no objection to boarding out in our suburban districts? Certainly not; nor in your country districts, where there are people residing who would undertake the supervision of the children. I understand that you have clergy scattered over the Colony.

9521. Mr. Cowper.] Do you not think it very necessary, in boarding the children out, that they should be placed near enough to school to attend it? Yes, it is very important indeed. We make it compulsory at Home. I think in South Australia attending day-school is made a condition, but this condition is sometimes waived when there is no convenient school and Mr. Reid has reason to believe that the foster-parents are able to give instruction to the child themselves. There are many homes where the people are able to do so, but such relaxation of the rule would depend upon the character of the foster-parents.

9524. I think I understood you to say that you did not know of any school where there were girls of the age of those you have seen at Biloela? I have seen some quite as old in our reformatories.

9525. We are told that the girls sent to the reformatories are more easily managed than the class of girls sent to Biloela. Would it not be a grand thing if these also could be made a success? I do not see any reason why they should not be trained to do well. In some respects they are more hopeful than these who usually get into reformatories. Persons who have been in prison learn, for instance, to conform readily to the rules while under control, making what are called "good prisoners," without learning at all how to live respectably when again out in the world.

9526. President.] Is it considered a condition of success in England, as regards both girls and boys under detention, that they should be allowed out sometimes, to teach them habits of self-control? Yes; but those allowed to go out would not be taken indiscriminately from the whole school. They probably would have worked up by good conduct to an honorable position. Sometimes these form what is called a "trust-worthy class" to which various privileges attach. To be employed beyond the boundaries of the school should be esteemed a very high privilege.

9527. Do you not think it a condition of success that philanthropic persons should be allowed to visit the children? Yes; assistance of that kind from people who take an interest in the children is very important.

9528. Is it not found in England that the children of the class you find in the industrial schools, children who are neglected or living with dissolute parents, require a person of superior attainments and culture to the ordinary run of officers to take charge of them? Yes. I was looking over my book this morning, and came upon a passage exactly illustrating what you say. In a little school in Dublin there were a number

Miss F. Hill.
27 Nov., 1873.

Miss F. Hill. number of girls of very humble parentage who were found to be very manageable. The ladies of the establishment were induced to try if they could not reclaim some workhouse girls, who were very much like the girls you have at Biloela in regard to insubordination, and who had, while in the workhouse, required police constables to subdue them. A few of the girls were admitted by these ladies to their institution. In a short time it became apparent that the mistress, who had been perfectly able to manage the other inmates, was not able to cope with these girls. It was found necessary to put a lady of superior attainments over them, and the result was that they were trained, and in course of time were enabled to earn a respectable living.

27 Nov., 1873.

9529. Mr. Cowper.] Do you not think it would be a greater temptation for girls than boys to go out on errands? Yes; but as the object of their detention in the institution is to prepare them to live respectably when they return to the outer world, they must gradually learn to resist the temptations they will there encounter.

9530. There is a possibility perhaps that when they were allowed to go out they would meet with those persons who led them astray. That is a temptation which we know would be met with? That would be a reason for placing the institution so far away as to render it very unlikely that they would meet with these associates. In England we have this great advantage,—that when a child belongs to a very bad family it can be sent to a school 100 miles away perhaps, so as to break off the connection.

9531. I know of instances in which, where it was proved that girls were able to behave well and have come to Sydney to be apprenticed, they have come to me asking me to get them away again in order that they might avoid the temptations they are subjected to? No doubt that is the case; but I think where the number is small and the influence brought to bear upon them wholesome, they acquire strength to resist temptation. They acquire a strong desire not to lessen the good opinion of those who care for them, and thus find strength to resist temptation.

9532. President.] What system of punishment is there in the industrial schools and reformatories of England? They vary according to the opinion of the committee of management as to what is best, but in most, if not in all, I think, there is a cell which is almost dark, which can be used on occasion. It is removed from the ordinary rooms, so that no noise made in it can be heard by the rest. If such a cell were in use it would be visited from time to time by the officers, but a child would not be put there unless otherwise unmanageable. Then there is bread and water diet.

9533. Is there not a fixed period for these punishments? Yes; fixed by law. I believe two days are the limit during which bread and water diet can be continued, and it is not allowable to leave a child in the dark cell at night.

9534. Is corporal punishment allowed in these institutions? Severe punishment would not be allowed, but a stroke of the cane would be permitted. I think they depend more in England upon rewards for good conduct than on punishments.

9535. Do you not think that in industrial schools for girls women should be supreme? Yes, I think so.

9536. Mr. Cowper.] And that a man should not be allowed to use the cane? Certainly not.

9537. Do you not think it an objectionable practice to cut the hair of girls fourteen or fifteen years of age,—I mean to cut it short? Yes; it ought never to be done except in extreme cases. Of course, as a matter of health or cleanliness it may be necessary, but should not as a punishment. I should certainly be unwilling to cut the hair of a girl of that age as a punishment—it would be an outrage. The most successful reformatory I ever visited was the Protestant Reformatory for Girls in Dublin, where there were only fifteen or sixteen inmates. The small number has no doubt much to do with the success of the institution. The children were divided into classes, and each class had its privileges. Those who entered the school were placed in the lowest class, and from that they worked their way gradually up. I think there are six classes altogether, and each class had some privileges attached to it until the highest was reached, and that was almost like freedom. For instance, they went out of school to do errands and shopping for the institution. After that they passed into service. When I visited this institution it had been in existence for seven or eight years, I think, or longer perhaps, and no child had failed to do well. A few had been placed out, and all were doing well. I have always considered that a model of what such an institution should be.

9538. President.] Is there anything else that occurs to you that we have not asked you about, and which you think would be useful to us? I think here, as is often the case elsewhere, institutions are conducted rather with a view to make the inmates satisfactory in their conduct while in the institution than to ensure their success in after-life. It seems to me that the one object to be attained is success in after-life, and I think the only test of the excellence of an institution is that success.

9539. Mr. Cowper.] They ought all to be taught to do those things which would make them good wives and good servants: they should understand housekeeping thoroughly? Yes, and they should be taught to govern themselves, and not be dependent upon the rules of the institution to keep them right.

9540. President.] In what way do you think there is a tendency in our institutions to look to the good behaviour of the inmates while in the institutions, rather than their success in after-life? I have heard much about keeping them quiet and obedient while under detention, and little about giving them the power to manage themselves when restored to liberty. It is common in most institutions to rely upon discipline, and to trust to the smooth appearance of things produced by efficient discipline, rather than to cultivate in each individual the power of self-control.

9541. And how would you promote this very much better object? I think by making the conduct of each child regulate its position in the school. This tends very much to encourage the child to work to a superior position to gain for itself advantages by its own conduct. It should not be subject to the same regulations whatever its conduct may be. Returning to the boarding-out system, I should wish it to be known how very much I have been impressed in England with the affection which grows up between these foster-parents and the children. Their care of the children has been quite touching, and sometimes in serious illness instances are not rare when they will not part with them even when payment for them stops. We prefer placing them with married couples rather than with widows or unmarried women (though with these they often do well), because the influence of a father is very desirable, and the affection which springs up between the foster-father and the child, especially if a little girl, is often very strong. It is not uncommon for these children to be taken by people who have lost their own, or who wish for a companion for an only child, sometimes by these who have never had children, or whose children have grown up and gone into the world, and who find life dull without little people about them.

Sister Mary Benedict called in and further examined:—

9542. President.] Since you were last examined before this Commission a book has been placed in our hands by the late superintendent of the Industrial School at Biloela, which he states was a reading-book used by the Catholic children in their school. It is entitled "The Adventures of Moses Finnigan, an Irish Pervert." Do you know the book? I never heard of it.

Sister Mary
Benedict.
8 Dec., 1873.

9543. It is a kind of tale of a very sensational character indeed? I never heard of such a thing at all.

9545. I see it bears the stamp of the Industrial School library? That may be, but I do not know the book at all. I know that the Government some time back ordered £10 worth of books to be supplied to the library at Biloela, and that Mr. Moore supplied books to that amount.

9546. Then you do not know the book? No, I do not.

9547. I presume that, had you known of it, you would not have permitted it to be in the library? If it be what you describe it to be, I should not certainly have allowed such a book to be in the institution.

9548. I read the book through, considering it my duty to do so, as it had been placed in our hands, and I can assure you that the staple of the story is what I describe it to be? Then it is certainly a most improper book to be there.

9549. Mr. Cowper.] Have you ever distributed books of that kind amongst the girls? No, I have never distributed books at all. Mr. Lucas always had the distribution of the books amongst the girls.

9550. President.] Who distributed the books on Sunday? Mr. Lucas.

9551. Mr. Cowper.] I understood Mr. Lucas to say that the Sisters brought objectionable books to the island, and that this was one of them—is that the case? No; we have never brought any books for distribution—we have nothing to do with that.

9552. Mr. Metcalfe.] Have you ever heard of its being read by the children in the school as a reading-book? I never heard of the book in my life in any way.

9553. When you are there, I suppose you hear the children read in the school? We go there merely for the purpose of giving religious instruction; and if ever we put a book into their hands, it is merely to enliven the poor things by giving them something to think about.

9554. Mr. Cowper.] It has been stated to us that sectarian feeling has been aroused by these books which have been distributed by you amongst the girls; and this book handed to us was stated to be one of them? This is the first I have heard of it. I do not think there has been any sectarian feeling shown at the institution. I have not noticed anything of the kind.

9555. President.] Then you say that there was simply a general order sent to Mr. Moore to supply £10 worth of suitable books to the institution, and that he executed it? Yes. I know the books were sent, for Mr. Lucas asked me one day to look at them just as they were unpacked. The steamer happened to be passing at the moment, and I had only just time to glance at the books, without being able to see what they were.

9556. Mr. Goold.] Was the selection of these books left to Mr. Moore? Yes; the books for the Catholic library. We sent in a list of the books which we desired to have in the library, but Mr. Moore had not the books we wanted, and the list was sent in to this office. We heard no more of it afterwards.

9557. Mr. Metcalfe.] Do you mean to say that the list was detained here by the Commission? I do not know by whom, but I know it was detained. I suppose it was by the Government.

9558. Mr. Cowper.] Was this list made out by you, at Mr. Lucas's request? It was.

9559. It was sent in to the Government to be approved of, was mislaid, and then Mr. Moore was left to select the books? Yes.

9560. President.] Did Mr. Lucas ever say anything to you about this being an improper book, in his opinion, given to the girls? No, I have never heard anything about it until now.

9561. Mr. Goold.] Under whose charge is the library? I believe it is under the charge of Mr. Lucas.

9562. Mr. Cowper.] And with regard to this sectarianism—you say you have never heard of anything of the kind? Nothing of the kind has come under my notice.

9563. President.] I may as well ask you the question, as the statement has been made in evidence—Have you in any way, directly or indirectly, countenanced any opposition by the children under your instruction, to the master; or have you in any way done anything which could excite sectarian feelings amongst the girls? No, never. I have endeavoured to suppress, as much as I could, any spirit of insubordination that I might see in the girls. I considered it my duty to do so. As to sectarian feeling, I have never seen anything of the kind.

9564. And you say distinctly and solemnly that if such statements have been made, they are untrue? Oh yes.

9565. Perhaps you would like to look at this book and form an opinion of its character, from a glance through it. (The book was handed to witness, who perused certain passages pointed out.) Having looked at the book, you are perhaps better able to form an opinion as to whether you think it a desirable one for young girls, and whether, if you had known it, you would have allowed such a book to be in the place? I certainly should not.

9566. I suppose you will agree with me that it is not at all the class of book to put in the hands of any young person, still less in the hands of such girls as are at Biloela? No; it is particularly unsuited for such an institution as that.

9567. Do you know of any other book of a similar character being in the place? No. I did not see the books—I only had time to glance over them when they were shown to me by Mr. Lucas.

- Sister Mary Benedict. 9568. We have been given to understand that there are other books quite as objectionable as this? I am not aware of it.
 9569. If that is the case, it is entirely without your knowledge? Yes, entirely.

Mrs. Margaret Kelly, schoolmistress, Industrial School for Girls, Biloela, called in and further examined:—

- Mrs. M. Kelly. 9570. President.] Under whose control have the libraries been kept? Mrs. Lucas has had charge of them.
 12 Dec., 1873. 9571. These are the books which are lent out to the girls on Sundays? Yes.
 9572. And only on Sundays? Yes, only on Sunday. They are given out about 9 o'clock. The girls came to the office, and Mrs. Lucas distributed the books, and then in the evening she called them in and locked them up until the following Sunday.
 9573. This was done with both the Catholic and the Protestant libraries? Yes, with both.
 9574. Do you know who selected these books? I know that the Protestant books were selected by Mrs. Foott; and Mrs. Lucas asked me how the Catholic books were to be selected. I said I did not know, and that he had better speak to the nuns. So he spoke to them, and Sister Mary Benedict made a list of books and gave it to Mr. Lucas, and he sent it to the Colonial Secretary's Office. I do not know what books were in the list. I saw the books that were sent, but I did not look at them, and I know Mr. Lucas said there were some books in the list that he could not get.
 9575. How long is it since the books that did come were received? It is some six or eight months ago.
 9576. Do you know any of the books in the Catholic library? I have only read two myself.
 9577. What were they? "Handy Andy" and the "Old Curiosity Shop." I can remember Mrs. Lucas asking the nuns to come down to the office to see the books, and they looked over them, and some that were here they rejected, and Mr. Lucas said that he would change them.
 9578. That was on their arrival? Yes; it was before any of them were issued.
 9579. Do you know whether one of those books was called the "Life and Adventures of Moses Finegan"? I have no idea. I have never read any but those two I have mentioned, and one last Sunday I read a part of—"Angels' Visits." These were the only two books I read.
 9580. Mr. Goold.] Do you know whether the list you speak of is still in existence? I have no idea.
 9581. Mr. Metcalfe.] Are the books provided by the Government? Yes.
 9582. Mr. Cowper.] Do you recollect that the books sent up were sent in this way: that Mrs. Foott applied to the Government to have £10 worth of books, and got them; and then the Catholics wanted them, and the nuns sent in a list? Yes; and Mr. Lucas said he would not issue any of the Protestant books until the others arrived.
 8583. And do you not know that Mr. Halloran took an interest in the matter himself? Yes, he sent up some very valuable books indeed.
 9584. President.] Did you ever know that this list was lost? I have heard that it was lost. I have heard Mr. Lucas say so.
 9585. Then you do not know that the books they ordered were the books that came here? No, I do not. I know one day Mr. Lucas said that the books were a long time coming, and he asked Sister Mary Benedict to make another list, and she said she could not take the trouble to make another list—that she had spent two evenings over it; and then he said he would see about it himself. I know that when the books came the nuns came to the office to look at them, and they rejected some. They said that they did not think that they were proper books for the girls to read, and he said that they would be changed.
 9586. None of the books that Mr. Lucas objected to were given to the children? The nuns objected to them. Mr. Lucas did not object to any. Sister Mary Benedict looked over two or three, and she said that they were not fit for the girls to read; and he said that they had come by mistake, and those books were never issued nor covered (Mrs. Lucas covered all the books with calico). I asked once whether they had been changed, and Mr. Lucas said they had been too busy.

Miss Mary Probert called in and examined:—

- Miss Mary Probert. 9587. President.] You are matron of the Randwick Asylum for Destitute Children? I am.
 9588. How long have you been there? I have been there thirteen years.
 9589. Have you always occupied the same position since you have been there? No. For two years I was there to assist Mrs. May. When she resigned I was appointed matron.
 9590. I was under the impression that you at one time held some other post? Assistant matron—not at the Asylum.
 9591. Did you not at one time resign, and were afterwards reappointed? Yes, I was re-appointed.
 9592. How did that come about? I think it was because some of the ladies took offence at what I did.
 9593.

Miss Mary
Probert.

15 Dec., 1873.

9593. What was it you did? When I became matron, the ladies wished to go round the institution by themselves. On the occasion I refer to, I met these ladies and told them that it was my duty to accompany them. They wished to go by themselves, and I appealed to the committee to support me in my decision. This gave offence to the ladies.
9594. Had you received any instruction from the committee to accompany these ladies on their visits? No, not before I appealed to them.
9595. Were these ladies who wished to go round by themselves members of the ladies' committee? They were what we called lady visitors.
9596. They were ladies who were officially connected with the institution? Yes.
9597. And you objected to their going round by themselves? I did.
9598. Did you complain to the committee on the subject? I did.
9599. And did the committee sustain your objection? They did.
9600. And in consequence of that, the ladies ceased to come to the institution? Yes, they did, some of them—not all, for there are some of the ladies still visitors to the Asylum.
9601. Are there ladies officially connected with the institution now? Yes, there are lady visitors, and I suppose you may call them officially connected with the place.
9602. Do they go there now? Yes.
9603. How often? That I cannot say.
9604. Did any of these ladies visit the Asylum last week? No. Mrs. Hay comes sometimes; but you will see in the report the names of the visitors, and the number of times they have visited the place.
9605. Were there any of these ladies there during the week before last? I think not any. We have not had any lady visitors there for some time.
9606. What was your objection to these ladies going round by themselves? I thought it only right that when they visited the Asylum the matron should accompany them, so that if they have any fault to find, or any complaint to make, or any defect to be remedied, that I should be first made acquainted with it; if there were any faults, or alterations, or the least thing, it should be pointed out to me alone. I considered it only right that I should know it the first.
9607. Were you ever in any other institution than the Randwick Asylum? I was at the Immigration Barracks for some time—for about twelve months; but they were giving up immigration just about that time, and this opening offering at Randwick I applied for it and obtained it. I was at the Immigration Barracks in Captain Brown's time.
9608. What salary do you receive? At present I receive £100 a year.
9609. With board and residence? Yes.
9610. What are your duties? The general supervision of the servants and the various officers of the institution, the distribution of the children, and the whole of the domestic arrangements.
9611. And what are Mr. May's duties as distinguished from yours? A lady's duties are very different from those of a gentleman, but Mr. May supervises the whole Asylum.
9612. Have you power of yourself to suspend or dismiss a servant? No; I always appeal to the superintendent in any case entailing dismissal. I always communicate with him when there is anything which I conceive to be wrong.
9613. Then where would you draw the line of division between your duties and those of Mr. May? Mr. May has all the office duties to perform, the admission and the discharge of the children, and the hiring them out. All the office and store management is also under him.
9614. And is the domestic management entirely under your control? Yes.
9615. The cooking? Yes.
9616. The washing? Yes, and the needlework.
9617. All these matters being under your management, how far are they under that of Mr. May? He has the general supervision of the whole, and frequently inspects with myself every branch of the institution.
9618. Mr. Metcalfe.] And I suppose that you also go round once a day? Yes, I go round many times a day.
9619. I suppose you would be able then to do all the duties of the superintendent as well as your own? No, indeed; I should be very sorry to undertake them. They are far more onerous than would be believed.
9620. But you say that you can hardly define the boundary between his duties and yours, except that he does the office work, including the admission, discharge, and hiring of the children? Yes; and the office duties occupy a considerable portion of his time.
9621. President.] Then, with this one exception of the office duties—including under that head all the business relating to the admission, discharge, and hiring out of the children—have you practically the management of the whole internal economy of the place? Yes; the general work of the place is all under my management, but always under Mr. May's supervision and direction.
9622. Yes; but I want you to explain what we are to understand by that—how far does his power of interference extend? To the whole Asylum.
9623. Mr. Metcalfe.] Take the daily routine of the children—they get up in the morning, are washed, say their prayers, and get their breakfasts—what part does Mr. May take in that? He visits the bath-room during prayers and the dining-room during meal-times.
9624. Then I suppose after breakfast they are drafted off to school? No, they are always mustered before they go to school. Mr. May goes to the boys, and I go to the girls, and they are all mustered by answering to their names on the roll. Then the children are distributed. Mr. May distributes the boys, and I the girls.
9625. President.] What do you mean by distributed? Distributed for work. We draft off those that are to go to work and those that are to go to school.
9626. Is there a fresh distribution of the children every morning for each particular kind of work, or do you send the same children? Yes, we send the same children, only we change them every week. In the case of the girls, so many are told off for the laundry, so many for the dormitories, so many for the kitchen, and so on, and they continue at that work for a week, when they are changed to something else, or are sent to school.
9627. Mr. Metcalfe.] Then do you tell them off to their work as they answer to their names? No, not as they answer to their names. There are so many different departments of work in the Asylum, and so many children are selected every Monday morning for each—so many to the kitchen, so many to the garden, and so many to each of the other departments. If they are one week in the laundry, the next week they will be in the sewing-room or the dormitories.

Miss Mary
Probert.
15 Dec., 1873.

9628. And the girls always go to the kitchen or laundry, or sewing, or some household work? Yes.

9629. Then it seems to me that your duties are exactly similar to those of Mr. May, only you have to manage the girls and he the boys? They are, in so far as that is concerned, but that is only a small portion of his duties.

9630. Mr. Cowper.] I presume it is something in this way:—You have officers who take the charge of the bath-room, the bed-rooms, or the various other branches; each officer having one of these charges is responsible to you for it, and you in your turn are responsible for each and all of these? Yes, that is how it is arranged.

9631. Take the case of the needlework—people who teach sewing to the children, they are responsible to you in the first instance for the children under their charge; if anything goes wrong, the person in whose branch it occurs speaks to you about it, and then you, if you consider it necessary, report the matter to Mr. May? Yes.

9632. Mr. Metcalfe.] Have you no monitors amongst the children, to look after the others, and to relieve you of a good deal of that kind of work? No; the senior girls do assist, but not to any great extent, for they require as much looking after as the younger ones.

9633. President.] Are the children told off into messes? No; we have nothing of that kind.

9634. No captains of messes having charge of a certain number of other children? No; but the children are arrayed into messes for the bath-rooms and the dining-room.

9635. Into what sized messes are they divided? There are sixteen in a mess.

9636. With a boy as the captain? No, we do not do that.

9637. Mr. Metcalfe.] Then there is no individual responsible for the rest, but they only go just like a lot of soldiers, precisely as they are drafted off, and not responsible for each other in any way? No, they are not.*

9638. President.] Have they not to look after each other—the elder girls after the younger? Yes, to that extent they look after each other. So many girls are told off to the nursery to take charge of the little children,—they look after each other in that way.

9639. Besides this, in what other way do they assist each other? In a good many other ways. The elder girls assist in washing and dressing the children—in washing their clothes, and various other ways.

9640. Mr. Metcalfe.] So that the elder girls do assist the officers by washing the younger ones? Yes, except in the infant department, where there are regular nurses, and girls told off for the purpose.

9641. Is this nursery for girls and boys? Yes, the very young boys.

9642. President.] How many girls are told off for the laundry? There are sixteen told off every day.

9643. And how often do they go to the laundry? Every day for a week.

9644. Suppose Mary Ann Jones to be told off to work in the laundry, she will go there every day for a week? Yes.

9645. Then she will be put to something else? Yes.

9646. And when will she go to the laundry again? That would depend upon the number of girls we have in the Asylum. At present we have very few, and the turn would come oftener.

9647. What do you call very few? About 270; that is our number at present.

9648. When will Mary Ann Jones go next to the laundry? In about three weeks.

9649. Mr. Metcalfe.] A girl is hardly likely to become a proficient in washing, with no more practice than that? No; but then we have to give them some schooling.

9650. Do they go to school in the interim? No; we give them other duties—the bath-room, the dormitories, the washing and scrubbing out the place. They attend school every second week.

9651. President.] What you mean is, that they are not kept at school until it is their turn again to go to the laundry? No; they do not go back to the school from the laundry—we have other work that we put them to as a change.

9652. But as far as the laundry is concerned, there is not much chance of their becoming efficient laundresses if they only go there once every three weeks—which would be only some sixteen times in the course of the year? Sometimes we send them oftener, when we have a smaller number of children.

9653. If there be a larger number of children, it seems to me that they would not require to go so often, seeing that their turn would not come round so soon? When there is a small number, they have to go every other week.

9654. How many go to the laundry then on these occasions? About sixteen—that is about the usual number; but it depends a great deal upon the number of girls we have in the Asylum. The laundry is very heavy work, and I send the girls there as little as I can. I would not send them there so often as every other week if I could avoid, for it is very hard work for such young children.

9655. What do they do in the laundry? Wash the clothes.

9656. Mr. Metcalfe.] Have you not machinery for washing? Yes.

9657. I understood that was to do all the washing—they can only have to wash small things, such as shirts and stockings? Oh yes, they have to wash table-cloths, and bed-linen, and many other things.

9658. I thought that you required to have this machinery in order to save all the labour of washing? Yes; but we have to rub all the white articles as well as to put them through the machine. The machine does very well, but it does not wash the clothes clean without hand-washing as well.

9659. But with so costly a machine as the one you have just had erected, in addition to the one you had before, this hand-washing ought to be saved, or the machine is useless? You are mistaken—we have only one washing machine at the Asylum.

9660. President.] I thought you had a new machine just erected—one that had been lately imported? So we had, but that is the only one we have.

9661. But you surely had some steam machinery before that? Yes; but that was for heating the water, and not for washing the clothes.

9662. So that the introduction of this machinery has actually caused you to require this large number of girls in the laundry? No; we have just the same number as before.

9663. Mr. Metcalfe.] Have the girls still to rub the clothes as they did before they had the machine? Yes; the same.

9664. President.] Then what is saved by the use of the machine? The machine will wash the blankets and the heavy bedding. It washes woollen things very nicely; but the linen things require to be washed by hand after going through it.

* NOTE (on revision):—I should have answered,—the senior boy in each mess is held responsible for anything wrong that may occur at the table.

9665. How were these blankets and bedding washed before you got the machine—by the children? No, not by the children. We could not put such children as these to wash heavy things like blankets. They were washed by the women employed in the laundry. Miss Mary Probert.
9666. And how many laundresses did you have? We had four. 15 Dec., 1873.
9667. And how many have you now? The same number.
9668. What saving then has been effected by having this machinery? There has been a great deal of saving. In the firing, I think it has been a saving.
9669. Mr. Metcalfe.] In what way—seeing that you require a considerable amount of fire to get steam, whereas the only fire you wanted before was to boil the water? Yes; but we required the fire for a longer time; and besides that, we used to have to burn fires under three or four boilers.
9670. And you do with one now? Yes, and that makes a saving in coals.
9671. President.] What other advantages have you gained by having this machine? I do not know of any other.
9672. So that the machine has no other advantage than that of saving coals? Yes—it makes the washing lighter.
9673. And you have still four laundresses? Yes, and we ought to have had an extra laundress before this. We require one very badly.
9674. Then do you mean to say that there is actually no saving of labour by using this machine? I do not say that, because it does save a little, and at the same time it gets the things through faster. Still the white things must be hand-rubbed to get them clean.
9675. Mr. Metcalfe.] What time do you begin your washing? On Monday morning; but we wash all the week through.
9676. How many days are you actually employed washing, as distinguished from the days you are folding, ironing, and mangling? We do all together. The washing, ironing, folding, and mangling all go on at the same time all the day through.
9677. President.] Is the week's washing completed by the Saturday in each week? Yes, we are always finished by midday on Saturday.
9678. And before you had the machinery, was the week's work always finished up on the Saturday? No; there was often a lot of things left over from one week to another. We often found it impossible to get all the clothes washed up within the week. We have frequently sent extra people down to try and do it.
9679. How often did it occur that you could not wash up within the week? Frequently, more especially when we had extra changes to provide. In this respect we have found the washing machine to be a great help.
9680. Mr. Metcalfe.] But how will it help to teach these girls to do washing when they leave the institution, and when they will not, in all probability, again catch sight of a washing machine? It will help them, because they still have to wash and rub the things the same as they would have to do in a private house.
9681. There are some articles of woollen, however, that they do not wash now, but are giving their attention to other things? They could never wash blankets—such children could not do it. They would not have the strength.
9682. But they would be quite competent to wash sheets—such sheets as they have on the small beds? Yes, they might do these.
9683. Then where is the advantage of the machinery, if it is simply that it enables you to wash the blankets better than before, and to wear them out quicker than under the old process? It gets the work done faster, and that is a great advantage.
9684. President.] How often do you wash the blankets? Twice a year.
9685. Mr. Gould.] And the sheets? Once a week.
9686. Mr. Metcalfe.] In what way did you obtain your washing machinery? Some of the ladies interested themselves in the matter, and they took it in hand and collected the money. The committee of the Asylum had been applied to, but they had not the money to spare. We wanted the machinery for a long time, and after finding that it was not likely to be obtained from the committee, an appeal to the ladies was made, and they got the money for it.
9687. Do you dry your clothes by fire heat? No, not at present; but they are trying to arrange for doing so.
9688. Do you prefer that to drying in the open air? No; but sometimes we are not able to get the clothes dried in the open air. There are times when we have wet weather for a week together, and that is very inconvenient, for we have so many children that we have not changes enough for them if the washing goes over a week.
9689. Two or three weeks ago when I was at the Asylum I saw the little boys being marched off to the bath, and there was one in particular I noticed who was about as dirty as could well be—I do not mean as regards his flesh, but his clothing? It is very likely, as it was Saturday when you visited. They get playing about and dirtying themselves, and they are only cleaned once a week—that is, their dresses—they have shirts twice a week.
9690. President.] How many children are sent to the cookhouse daily? There are seven boys told off every day to the kitchen.
9691. Are there any girls employed to assist in the kitchen, as scullery-maids? No; because we have a man cook, and it would not do to send the girls there.*
9692. Do you not think it desirable that they should learn something of cooking? With the machinery that is used in our kitchen there is not much chance of the girls learning cookery there.
9693. Then there are none who get the chance of being taught cookery except these three boys who are sent to the kitchen? No.
9694. And with the machinery they would not learn anything? They would not, excepting the girls employed by the several officers as their servants, twelve daily, who are changed weekly; these have opportunities of learning plain cooking.
9695. Mr. Metcalfe.] What good is the training the children get in the Asylum, if it does not fit them, when they are sent out, to get their living as general servants? Every practical means are taken to instruct the children in domestic duties to fit them for useful servants.

9696.

* NOTE (on revision) :—There are four girls employed in the girls' scullery—exchanged weekly.

- Miss Mary Probert. 9696. Do you not think that every girl who reaches the age of fourteen ought to be able to cook a dinner and to do all that is necessary about a house? We do not keep them till they are as old as fourteen, We apprentice them out at twelve years old, and from that to thirteen.
- 15 Dec., 1873. 9697. President.] Do you not think that a girl of thirteen ought to know how to cook a potato? There is no difficulty about teaching the girls to cook or other general domestic work, as they have undergone a fair training while in the Asylum.
9698. Do you not know that in some of the schools of this description in other Countries they have a large number of small fires, with the commonest appliances for cooking, in order to teach the children to cook in the mode they will most likely be called upon to do so, and thus to fit them for the work of their after-life? Yes, all that is well enough where they have all these arrangements; but then to do this we should require to take girls of from thirteen years upwards, and then we should want instructors to teach them all the various branches of a general servant's work. We cannot keep them at that age, for they are taken out before they reach thirteen. And another thing is, that instead of our having the expense of teaching them, the children are apprenticed out young, and the people who take them undertake to teach them.
9699. Mr. Metcalfe.] Is it not one object of the Asylum to train up children to be good general servants? Yes; and they are taught everything in connection with the establishment.
9700. They are taught everything but the most important thing of all, and that is the cooking? That is not exactly the case with all the girls. A good many of those who are servants know something about the cooking.
9701. What do you mean by servants? They who are servants of the institution. In that position they learn all the domestic duties of the place.
9702. President.] Do you not think that there are many children of the humbler classes from which also these children in the Asylum have come, who at twelve and thirteen years of age are able to cook and look after a house? Some of them may; but they know very little about it when they come to us.
9703. You must remember that you receive into the Asylum children who are professedly neglected, and consequently not likely to have been taught? That is not always so.
9704. Is not that the very object of your institution? Yes.
9705. Do you not see that you rear up children in a place where they are provided with steam machinery for cooking and steam machinery for washing, and that after they leave you these children will have to live in homes where there is no steam machinery of any kind? I see all that, but it is my opinion that it really makes very little difference. They know well enough how to do washing, and scrubbing, and cleaning, and washing dishes and all things of that sort.
9706. How are the knives cleaned at the Asylum? On a board.
9707. By the children? Yes. All that little work is entirely done by the children. The cooking is about the only thing the children generally are not taught to do.
9708. Then the girls that come from your Asylum do not know much about cooking? They very soon learn to cook well when they are taken out of the institution.
9709. Why do you not teach it to them, seeing that they learn it so easily? There are a good many who are learning—I mean those girls who are taken on as servants to the officers. Mr. May has them as servants. I myself have them in the same way, and they are taught their duties in that way. But we could not send them into the regular kitchen with a man in charge there, nor indeed would they learn much if we did send them.
9710. The number of these must be very small? We take as many as we can for the purpose of teaching them.
9711. Mr. Couper.] Are these girls apprenticed out any earlier from having been servants under the officers? No, at the same age, viz., thirteen years.
9712. And are they to be had as easily from your service as from the general ranks of the Asylum? Yes, quite as easily.
9713. President.] How many girls have you? I have two.
9714. Mr. Metcalfe.] Have you a cottage in which to reside? No, I live in the institution. Mr. May is the only one who has a separate house to live in, and he has not had it till lately.
9715. Mr. Couper.] I think you said that he had apprentices? Yes, he has two.
9716. Mr. Metcalfe.] I understood that the apprenticing to the institution had been given up? Yes, it has, to a very great extent, but only lately.
9717. Mr. Goold.] Why? Because it has been directed by the committee. The committee ordered, a short time ago, that no more children should be apprenticed to the institution. It was a pity, because they make very good servants for the institution. I like them as apprentices very much; and as regards the girl apprentices, I know that I miss one of them, if she goes out, more than I do one of the women servants.
9718. Mr. Couper.] Are they better than the ordinary female servants? They are quite as good, and the only fault is that we cannot keep them long enough. We are only allowed to apprentice them up to a certain age, and when they reach that age it is optional with them to go away or to stay; and as young people like change, they do not usually stop after their apprenticeship expires.
9719. Have you any opportunity of knowing how the girls get on after they have left you? Yes, we have frequent opportunities: they write to us, and sometimes they come to see us.
9720. And are the accounts that you receive of a satisfactory character? Yes, generally.
9721. As a general rule, is it found that the girls like their mistresses and that their mistresses like them? It is. I have known of several of them who have done very well.
9722. Mr. Couper.] Do you recollect a girl who was apprenticed to Mr. Teece, a merchant in Sydney? No, I do not.
9723. I thought that perhaps as she had been apprenticed in Sydney you might recollect her? No, I do not.
9724. Mr. Goold.] Do you keep up a correspondence with all the girls that go out of the Asylum? Yes, with every one of them. They write to the superintendent, and the letters are answered regularly.
9725. Mr. Couper.] And what do you do when they cease to correspond with you? We make inquiries then to know the reason.
9726. Mr. Metcalfe.] Do the girls sometimes write to you? Yes, frequently; and I often feel sorry that I cannot answer all their letters. I think, however, that it is only lately that they have made arrangements for a regular correspondence.

9727. President.] I suppose you do not know the name of every child in the school? No, not of all of them, but I know the names of a good many.
9728. Do you know the names of half of them? Oh yes; of half of them I am sure I do.
9729. Mr. Metcalfe.] Supposing the children to be out playing in the playground, and you wanted one of the girls in, what way do you call her? I call her by her name.
9730. You do not call her by her number? No; we call her by her name, and she answers by her number. They all know their numbers perfectly well, even to the little ones. They get so used to it by the roll being called over three times a day, when they have to answer by their number. The roll is called over in the morning, in the middle of the day, and in the evening when they are going to bed.
9731. President.] How often do you think you speak to each child in the institution individually in the course of the year? I am sure I could not tell you.
9732. I suppose a boy might go for months without your speaking to him, unless you wanted him specially, or unless he misbehaved himself? No, I think not, because they are spoken to during the time when they assemble to muster, and I am always with them.
9733. How often do you think you could speak to 700 children in the course of a year, even supposing you made it your business to do it? That is a very difficult question to answer.
9734. Mr. Cowper.] Taking the whole of the girls, do you think there is a week in which you miss speaking to any one girl? No, I think not.
9735. Mr. Metcalfe.] Does ever any one read stories or anything of that kind, to amuse the children in the evening? No. They read in school.
9736. But I mean to the little ones—do the matrons ever sit up with them and read to them? No. The little things are too tired, and are glad to get to bed. They leave school at 4 o'clock, they have tea at 5, and then they play in the yard till half-past 6 or 7, when it is bed-time.
9737. Do they go to bed at 7 o'clock? Yes, after the muster roll has been called.
9738. Then there is no time during which they could be read to? No, unless they read the little story-books which they have in school.
9739. How do they pass the day on Sunday? In the morning they go to church.
9740. And in the afternoon? They have Sunday-school, with religious instruction. The time is pretty well filled up for them even on Sunday.
9741. Were you ever in an institution of a similar character to this before you came to this Colony? No, not of this kind. When I tell you that I have been thirteen years at the Asylum, I think you might guess that I was rather young when I came to the Colony.
9742. President.] How many persons have you in charge of the hospital? Three.
9743. All devoted to that particular branch of the institution? Yes.
9744. What are their duties there? The entire management of the children in the hospital, and the nursing of the sick.
9745. How many children have you there to-day? They average from thirty to forty a day in the hospital.
9746. Do you know how many there are actually there to-day? I do not.
9747. Or how many there were there on Saturday last? No. Mr. May keeps the hospital returns.
9748. Mr. Metcalfe.] Do the children go there for every little petty thing—for a trifling cold or other ailment? Yes; they are sent there for every little trifling ailment they may have, because we cannot attend to them in the institution. They may want to lie down, and they cannot do that in the institution.
9749. How many go through the hospital in the course of the year? That I cannot say.
9750. President.] How many are confined to their beds there to-day? None—at least, not all day.
9751. How many were there confined to their beds there in the course of last week? I know very little about the hospital—I have nothing to do with it.
9752. You are not responsible for its management? No. Mr. May has the entire management of the hospital.
9753. Mr. Metcalfe.] Is there a ward there for skin diseases? No, we have none in the institution, nor have we had for a long time.
9754. But suppose a child came to you with any particular form of skin disease, what would you do? We would very soon stop it, or we would not receive them at all, if they had it. I believe that they did receive a few cases of the kind some time ago, but the children were apart by themselves, and were kept in bed till they got well.
9755. Mr. Cowper.] What kind of disease was it? Skin disease.
9756. Mr. Metcalfe.] But suppose a man found a child destitute and starving in a gutter, and suffering at the same time from some form of skin disease—would the committee refuse to receive the child, and turn it out to starve, solely because it had this skin disease? No, I think not in such a case as that. We have had two or three cases of children being brought into the institution bad with skin disease, but they have always been put to bed, and kept there until they were free of it. They were never allowed to mix in any way with the others until they were quite —
9757. Mr. Cowper.] You said, just now, that children had been received into the institution suffering from skin disease, and I asked you what kind of skin disease, but you did not answer me? I presume that everybody knows the kind of skin disease these children suffer from.
9758. President.] I do not see that there is any reason to be delicate about the matter, as we have it already in evidence that they were suffering from the itch—I presume that is what you mean? Yes.
9759. Mr. Cowper.] Then there were two or three taken into the institution some years ago, they all the time having the itch? Yes, there were two I think; and they were kept in bed till they were well—for a week. But of course there are exceptional cases when the mere skin disease would not be taken into consideration. For instance, in anything like the case just mentioned, of a child picked up destitute in the street, the committee would not be likely to let the child starve, but would take it in.
9760. President.] Do you see the children when they are going to bed? Yes, always.
9761. With regard to the very little ones,—what is done about prayers? They are told to kneel down, and then a prayer is dictated to the children, and they repeat it word for word after the sub-matron; but of course they all know their prayers, and repeat them after the sub-matron without any difficulty.
9762. But why of course—the prayers would not come to them by instinct; to know their prayers they must be taught them? Yes, but after being there a little while they are taught them.
9763. Who by? By the teachers. We have religious instruction in the school every day.

Miss Mary Probert.

- Miss Mary Probert.
15 Dec., 1873.
9764. And that is the way in which these little children are taught their prayers—now do you think that mere infants can be taught in that way? Certainly. They are taught for half an hour every day; then they have the Friday, when the clergyman comes and gives them religious instruction.
9765. How young is the youngest child in your institution? Three years old. We are supposed only to receive children at four years old; but here again there are exceptional cases in which we have received them younger.
9766. And how are these infants taught? By the teachers.
9767. Do you ever hear them say their prayers? Yes, frequently.
9768. Where—at the bedside? Yes. When the children come in, we always ask them the question whether they can say their prayers.
9769. Mr. Cowper.] You do not mean to say that a little child of three years old will say its prayers by itself? No; the nurse or the sub-matron dictates the prayer, and the child repeats it after her.
9770. Every night? Yes, every night and every morning in the same way.
9771. Do all the children say the prayer together? Yes; they are all told to kneel down at the bedside, and then the teacher stands up in the middle of them, and repeats the prayer, and the children all say it after her.
9772. President.] How many female servants have you employed as housemaids for cleaning the establishment? We have seven women servants.
9773. Have you any men servants? None, except the two cooks—now that the apprentices have been done away with.
9774. Who washes up the plates and dishes? The children. Everything is done by the children which can possibly be done by them.
9775. How many children are employed at this work? We have two boys for the boys' division, and four girls for the girls' division.
9776. How many divisions have you? Three.
9777. And how many children have you told off for the kitchen for scullery-work? There are five boys told off to the kitchen.
9778. How long do they continue at that work? For a week, and then they are changed to something else.
9779. And how many children are employed doing housemaids' work about the place? We employ in the whole about fifty girls.
9780. Is there anything to prevent the whole of the work of the institution being done by the children? All the work is done by the children now, only you cannot trust them by themselves. You must have some one to look after them, and to keep them to their work. It must be considered that all the girls who are able to do the work—that is, all those who are old enough to go out—leave the institution, and we are left entirely with the girls who are under twelve years of age. As soon as they reach that age they go out, and we have only the younger ones.
9781. Is there, in your opinion, any absolute necessity for having these seven housemaids? I consider them quite necessary to assist in doing the work.
9782. Are you aware that in a similar institution to that at Randwick there are no such persons as these housemaids employed? No, I am not. What institution is it?
9783. The Catholic Orphan School at Parramatta—they have no housemaids? No, but they have the nuns.
9784. But the nuns do not scrub the floors? They superintend the work. To do up large dormitories like those we have at Randwick, it would not do to send up a lot of little girls all by themselves, and to trust to them that they would do it. If they were left in this way, they would go away and play.
9785. They do this, however, at Parramatta? No; they have the nuns there to look after the children.
9786. Allowing it to be so, there is not so large a proportion of nuns at the Parramatta Orphan School as you have of attendants and servants at Randwick? And even then they have their servants there as well as the nuns. I happen to know this, because we have had servants come to us from the Catholic Orphan School at Parramatta.
9787. Still, with nuns and servants, they have not so many as you have at Randwick? Of course not. They have not so many children as we have.
9788. They have 300 children there? And we have 800 children; and, in proportion to the number of children, they have more hands employed than we have. I know this because Mr. May and I have had several conversations upon the matter.
9789. Mr. Goold.] What do you mean when you say you have had servants come to you from the Catholic Orphan School at Parramatta? What I mean is that persons who have left there have come to us and engaged as servants with us. We have had two or three of their servants engage with us.
9790. President.] I did not say that they were altogether without servants at the Roman Catholic Orphan School at Parramatta, but that the general work of the institution was done by the children? And so it is with us; and as to what they employ, I know myself that they have a laundress and three nurses—at least they had about twelve months ago.
9791. Have you any suggestions which you wish to offer? No. Mr. May, I think, has done all that is necessary.
9792. Mr. Metcalfe.] You fancy that your institution is as near perfection as it can be? Yes; we have worked very hard to perfect it.

THURSDAY, 18 DECEMBER, 1873.

Present:—

WILLIAM CHARLES WINDEYER, Esq., PRESIDENT.

CHARLES COWPER, JUN., Esq. | MICHAEL METCALFE, Esq.

SAMUEL GOOLD, Esq.

William Charles Windeyer, Esq., President of the Commission, examined in his place:—

- W. C. Windeyer, Esq.
18 Dec., 1873.
9793. Mr. Cowper.] I believe that, during your late visit paid to the Colony of Victoria, you took some trouble to visit the institutions of a charitable character, to obtain information with reference to their working and establishment, and ascertain whether they had been successful or otherwise. As there are in Victoria various institutions similar to ours, we shall be glad to hear what you have to say with reference to comparisons between between them which may enable us to form some conclusion as to alterations required in the management of our institutions? I did, when going on circuit to Albury and Deniliquin to prosecute for the Government, take the opportunity of visiting a number of charitable institutions in Victoria for the purpose of seeing how they were conducted, with the view of obtaining information which might be of use to us in this inquiry. I found that the Reformatory and Industrial Schools were placed under the control of an Inspector of Industrial and Reformatory Schools who was also Inspector of Prisons. This gentleman appeared to be at the head of the department for the organization and management of these schools, and in a conversation I had with him as to the best mode of conducting these institutions, he laid great stress on an officer in his position having authority to deal directly with the persons in charge of such establishments. The system of having to communicate with a Minister with regard to every matter of discipline, or matter requiring instant determination being much calculated to interfere with the discipline and success of such institutions. This matter is also referred to, I find, in a report of his on the Reformatory and Industrial Schools of Victoria, dated 1871; and I was much struck myself, in going through these various institutions, with the prompt and energetic manner in which all matters concerning internal discipline were decided upon. I visited, amongst other institutions, the Industrial School for Boys and the Reformatory for Girls, at Sunbury. These institutions are situated about 25 miles from Melbourne, in an elevated position, with a considerable quantity of land about them. The Industrial School for Boys numbered at the time I was there a little over 500. Some time before this it had numbered 700, but the number had been reduced by the application of the boarding-out system, which had then been introduced. With reference to the boarding-out system, I might state that Mr. Duncan, the inspector to whom I have just referred, and who is an able and intelligent man, stated that it had not been long enough in force to give any very great experience of its working, but he seemed to be in favour of the system upon the theoretical grounds which commend it to the Members of this Commission, and as far as it had proceeded in Victoria, it had worked satisfactorily. Whilst upon this topic of the boarding-out system, I may mention that I found, in connection with that system, and in connection with the Reformatory and Industrial Schools generally of Victoria, that a ladies' committee had been formed, of which Lady Bowen was the President, and which had for its object the visiting of the different Industrial Schools in Melbourne, and the supervision of the children who were licensed out from the Industrial School at Sunbury and other places.

9794. Mr. Metcalfe.] Licensed out? Yes. I will speak of that presently. Mr. Duncan attached very great importance to the exertions of this committee, both with regard to their supervision of children that have been licensed out, and also as visitors going to inspect the various institutions from time to time. In his report I see he says "that the ladies deserve most hearty thanks, as they have shown how effectively work of this sort can be done by earnest volunteers resident near the children's employers"; and I find that he attached great importance to some such supervision. I also obtained an introduction to Mrs. Bromby, the secretary of this committee, and had a long conversation with her as to its success and working. She stated, as far as she was able to judge (and she appeared to be a lady who took considerable interest in these matters), that its action had been highly beneficial. It was in communication with and recognized by the Government, and its reports were always attended to. The members of this committee take it in turn to visit the schools in Melbourne every week. They have no authority to interfere in the discipline or management of the institutions directly, but regularly visit them, and if they see anything that calls for attention, they report the matter to their committee, and the committee then communicate with the inspector, calling his attention to any matter that required notice. The Industrial School at Sunbury, which I said only numbers 500 instead of 700, in consequence of the introduction of the boarding-out system, is composed of a number of separate buildings, the boys sleeping and having their meals separately in each of these establishments, of course meeting together for the purpose of labour and instruction. Each wing, if I may use the expression, was under the supervision of a man and his wife, and the boys were always under the eye of some officer of the institution who was always in attendance upon them. The man and his wife, who are always persons chosen with great care, and generally without children, slept in an apartment immediately adjoining the boys' dormitories; and whether the boys were at work, or at meals, or amusing themselves, there was always an officer in charge of them. The children, instead of being apprenticed at the expiration of their term in the school, I found were licensed out to labour when they had served one-half of the time for which they had been sent to the school, and after they were thirteen years of age—the school thus keeping a power of control over them for a longer period than with us. If they were returned for misconduct by their employers, they were liable to punishment and to be kept hard at work, the object being to attach a stigma to the children who by their misconduct should bring about their return to the school. They were further, as a punishment, prevented from being licensed. It was a part of their system of punishment to let the boys understand that if they did not behave themselves they could not be licensed out. The boys were allowed to have good conduct badges, and though corporal punishment was allowed to be inflicted, the rule of the institution was that it might not be inflicted by the person complaining. All punishments, I found, were recorded in a book kept for the purpose. These, I think, were the principal matters respecting the system of punishments that I think worthy of notice.

9795. You say that the boys sleep in the wing? Yes. There were a number of separate buildings with a dormitory, and place for meals attached to each, the institutions not being altogether comprised in one building, but a number of low buildings of one story high.

9796. Mr. Couper.] Like cottages? Long, low buildings.

9797. Were there any verandahs to them? Yes a good many about the place.

9798. Were they of stone or of wood? Of wood chiefly, I think, but partly of stone.

9799. Mr. Metcalfe.] You say the boys were licensed out—were they there any particular time? Yes, they were there long enough to acquire some knowledge. The object appearing to be, not so much to give them a finished education, but to license them out as soon as they had received some instruction in reading and writing.

9800. Then, if a boy went in at eight years of age, he remained until he was thirteen? Their periods of sentence are longer than ours. Mr. Duncan and Mr. Scott, the master at Sunbury, attached importance to their being sent to school for a considerable time.

9801. Did the schools find them clothes? Yes, for the time they were in the school, and an outfit at starting.

9802. And were they to be paid by their employers afterwards? Yes.

9803. Paid wages? Yes, a small wage.

9804.

W. C.
Windeyer,
Esq.
18 Dec., 1873.

9804. Did it strike you, from what you had heard of their system, that it answered? Yes, very satisfactorily.
9805. Were they let out in the neighbourhood of the school? Yes, anywhere where they could get them taken, just as the children are apprenticed from Randwick.
9806. Mr. Couper.] Did they say that they preferred apprenticing in the country districts rather than in town? Yes, but the main feature was, that the school still had a control over the boys after they left, and were liable to be returned to it if they misconducted themselves.
9807. Mr. Metcalfe.] That is something like the workhouse system at Home, which results in misery to many persons? There seemed to be few cases of that sort. The boys were very seldom returned. It had a very beneficial effect upon the boys, as far as I could learn.
9808. How long has the boarding-out system been established? About twelve months, as far as I can understand.
9809. Of course you did not know as much about the system as now? No, not so much as we can have lately learnt from Miss F. Hill and her sister.
9810. Mr. Couper.] Were these institutions surrounded by a wall to keep away outsiders? No; it is situated on a high hill with a large expanse of open ground around it, simply fenced in. There is no wall, but there is a very large quantity of land there surrounding the institution.
9811. Do the children ever run away? Yes; escapes do sometimes take place, but in the neighbouring country places the boys are well known, and they are soon recovered.
9812. Mr. Metcalfe.] Did it strike you that the system was better than that at Randwick? Yes, I think so.
9813. Better than the system on board the "Vernon"? You can hardly compare them.
9814. Did it strike you as a better way than bringing up boys on board ship? Yes, certainly.
9815. Do they learn farming and gardening? Yes; numbers are employed in farm labour. They are also taught other trades, and a far larger number were under the teaching of one person than at Randwick. One man would have forty boys under him learning shoe-making. A considerable number are also sent to Melbourne, where they are employed in the parks and gardens of the city.
9816. They learn trades? Yes, and they all more or less were made to work upon a farm.
9817. After they were apprenticed out they were no longer a charge upon the school at all? Do you mean after they are licensed out?
9818. Yes? Not after they are licensed out.
9819. Did you ascertain the cost of these children not licensed out--the cost to the Government? Yes, I did; and I found that the rates of pay in Victoria are much higher than here.
9820. The pay of the officers? Yes, which makes the expense of the schools greater than here. For instance, the superintendent receives a salary of £375, the matron, £132; head teacher, £250; four assistant teachers, £108; inspector, £180; assistant inspector, £120. I think the annual cost is £17 or £18 per head.
9821. Mr. Couper.] That is the Industrial School? Yes.
9822. Mr. Metcalfe.] There was nothing of a prison nature about the institution? None whatever. There are no walls, and it is situated in the middle of a large open space of ground.
9823. That is likely to have a salutary effect? Yes.
9824. Mr. Couper.] Is there a male superintendent? Yes, and a matron.
9825. And these persons' characters had a salutary effect upon the children? The children seemed extremely happy, I think; and one feature in the management which struck me was that there was a room set apart for their recreation during evening hours. Good behaviour in the school seemed to be held out as the means of obtaining access to this. They were also allowed to amuse themselves in the evening hours under the supervision of the man and his wife in the different wards; but besides this, there were the amusements provided, such as draughts and things of that sort, in the room set apart for the purpose.
9826. Did you examine the dormitories? I did.
9827. Do they sleep separate? All separate.
9828. How many in one room? I cannot speak with certainty, but my impression is about forty. There were a considerable number of persons engaged as attendants and overseers. Besides those I have mentioned, there is a drill-master at £150 a year, and then there is an agricultural inspector and farm overseer at 7s. 6d., tailor 9s. 6d., blacksmith 9s., shoemaker 9s., and baker at 9s., and the assistant baker at 7s. 6d. All these trade inspectors live at the school, but had no lodgings. Then there was a butcher at 4s. 6d., with quarters and fuel, four farm labourers at 4s. 6d., cook 3s. 6d., hospital nurse 2s. 6d., fourteen attendants at 2s. 3d., thirteen at 2s., and five at 1s. 9d.
9829. All these live on the premises? Yes, the latter do. So that makes thirty-two attendants employed, one as night-watchman, two with the children in out-door work, one as labourer in the same, two as cooks, one in the attendants' dining-room, one as serving-mistress, twenty-four attending the children in their wards, and two with the matron in the reformatory. There was also a non-resident medical officer with a salary of £400 a year. It will be seen that the number of attendants that they consider necessary are far greater than ours and the rates higher.
9830. And yet the expense per head should be smaller? Yes. I find that they raise a considerable number of pigs, which are sent to market and sold by public auction.
9831. They take credit for these things? Yes. On the same land, and in the same locality, there is a Reformatory for Girls. This Reformatory only held twenty-five girls. The Reformatory seemed to be in a very orderly state, and corporal punishment, according to the evidence of Miss Inch, was almost entirely unknown. She believed she had a cane, but it was not used. There was a place used as a cell where they shut up the girls, but it was seldom resorted to. This lady seemed to have had some experience first in bringing immigrants out to the Colony and in the Industrial Schools of South Australia.
9832. Miss Inch? Yes; and I spoke to her as to the expediency and possibility of associating the older girls, and those more initiated in vice, with the younger ones, and whether she thought it possible to conduct the institution in that way. She seemed to entertain no idea of difficulty on that score, and thought the success of the institution entirely depended upon the spirit with which it was managed, and that these girls, instead of letting one another know what they had been doing, should be brought to feel that their former life was a degradation, and she gave me to understand that she would have no fear of undertaking the charge of an institution where such girls were associated with the younger ones. What she particularly insisted upon was the necessity of firmness and kindness, and the use of more moral suasion in dealing with characters of this sort, rather than coercive measures. This institution, I might state, was enclosed with an outer fence made of galvanized iron, as in our buildings at Biloela. 9833.

W. C.
Windeyer,
Esq.

18 Dec., 1873.

9833. Mr. Metcalfe.] Then it is not on the same land? Yes; it is at the same place, but at a little distance from it, on the same large reserve.

9834. And that was the only industrial school that you saw? No. Then there is another school for girls in Melbourne that I saw at Prince's Bridge, in a building formerly occupied as a barracks for troops, in Melbourne. My visit to that, however, was very cursory, and except the fact that I saw a number of girls there and a number of young infants brought up as these are in our Benevolent Asylums, I did not see much that struck my attention.

9835. What was the system of management in Sunbury Industrial School? It seemed to be managed entirely by a superintendent, Mr. Scott, who seemed to be a very efficient officer, and a matron, who was also Matron of the Reformatory for Girls, and between these officers there seemed to exist perfect harmony.

9836. Subject to some Government department? Yes; under the Inspector. I also visited amongst other institutions the Protestant Orphan Asylum at Emerald Hill, where there were 300 children. This institution was perhaps the best managed that I saw in Victoria, and the remarkable feature connected with that fact is, that its domestic economy is entirely controlled by a committee of ladies. The cost per head of the children there, including repairs, was £17 3s. 8d.

9837. Mr. Goold.] How is that committee appointed—is it elected by the subscribers or by the Government? It is elected by the subscribers. I may mention that the cost of the children, exclusive of repairs to the building, was £15 19s. 11d. Amongst the noticeable features of this institution, I observed that all children were taught to swim, in a bath of very considerable size.

9838. Mr. Metcalfe.] Are they all boys there? No, boys and girls, and Mr. Francis, the Chief Secretary, told me that it was the intention of the Government to have such baths in all institutions, for the purpose of teaching them all to swim. I find that, to check imposition upon the charity of this institution, it is a rule only to admit one child out of a family of four or more, and thus the parent must still have three remaining on her hands to support.

9839. Mr. Goold.] But if there was a family of seven or eight, would it be confined to one? Apparently.

9840. Mr. Metcalfe.] That is the orphan establishment? Yes, the Protestant Orphan Establishment at Emerald Hill. There was a small piece of land attached to this establishment which appeared to be kept in most admirable order; and though the ground is limited in extent, they raise all their vegetables from it, as the land was constantly kept cropped; and they were, also, from these few acres of land—I think not more than four or five—able to keep several cows to supply them with milk. I never saw land better tilled or in a better state of cultivation.

9842. To what extent rateably? The Government appeared to subscribe for one year—for 1872-73—£4,500, and the private subscriptions were £1,336, so that the Government subscribed two-thirds. These accounts do not appear to be all for one year—they are mixed up, and won't explain themselves—but that is about the state of the case. I find that the Inspector, Mr. Duncan, was very strongly averse to increasing the size of all such institutions for the education of the young, and seemed to be of opinion that no such institution could be satisfactorily worked, with a view to develop the character of the child or knowing anything about them, if it had more than 250 or 300. He also appears to be averse to nautical schools like the "Vernon," and mentions that matter also in his report; his reasons being that, although in a nautical school when they are mustered the boys are very prompt and neat, yet it is doubtful whether the effect of such a school is to favour the establishment of a spirit of steady industry and a desire for steady occupation on the part of the boys.

9843. Mr. Metcalfe.] But surely this is made plain in England? Yes; except it was the intention to send the boys to sea. I found also that they were beginning to be more alive in Victoria to the necessity of making parents pay for the keep of their children in charitable institutions of this kind, where the parents were in a position to do so, and it has become the practice in Victoria to put arrears of maintenance, which parents should pay for the support of their children, in the Gazette. They found that the mere publication of these arrears had a good effect. I should also mention that the Inspector of Charities approves of all books supplied to these institutions, before they are placed in the hands of the child. I also visited the Benevolent Asylum in Melbourne, which is an Asylum very similar to ours at Liverpool, for the infirm and destitute.

9844. All men? No; men and women. In fact, I noticed several cases of husbands and wives living there together.

9846. The old folks? Yes. There was a very perfect steam washing apparatus in the place, and I may say it was the only institution where there was one, except the Melbourne Hospital, and the Prince Alfred Hospital. I inquired what kind of rations were issued, and whether they had the same system in force as we had here of serving out the rations, allowing the inmates to take away their bread in a bag. Mr. M'Cutcheon, the superintendent, who appeared to be a very intelligent officer and had charge of the institution for some sixteen years, told me that although there was supposed to be a ration, in point of fact little attention was paid to it, the system pursued being that every inmate had as much meat and bread as he liked. The bread was placed upon the table, and every man helped himself to as much as he wanted. A certain quantity of meat was also placed upon their plates, and each inmate was given to understand that he might have as much as he liked to eat, but could take none away; the attendants walking up and down on each side of the table for the purpose of supplying them with bread. They could also send and get more meat if sufficient was not put upon their plates. He told me that having tried the two plans, they had abundant evidence in favour of the plan I have just now described, and found that there was a large saving to the institution. Formerly all sorts of complaints were made as to the amount of bread which each man could consume; and some had more than they required, and some less. He found the present plan far more satisfactory—that it put an end to all grumbling, there was less waste, and there was a saving to the institution.

9847. What was the cost of that place? £16 7s. 3d. per head.

9848. Did that establishment seem comfortably managed in the dormitories? It appeared to be admirably managed.

9849. How did they manage with the old couples—did each have a separate room? Yes. The building has been added to at different times, and there are a number of small rooms about it. It was rather a patchwork sort of building, and some of the rooms were very small.

9850. Mr. Cowper.] They did not put more than one married couple in a room? No. I only remember two instances of the sort. I may mention that I visited the Prince Alfred Hospital, and that I found the system of management in force there similar to that recommended by us for the management of the Sydney Infirmity.

9851. Do they wash altogether by steam in the Prince Alfred Hospital? I do not exactly remember, but I think the washing was all done by steam.

9852. On the ground? Yes; and I was very much struck with the small amount of labour which it required. I think that the head of the nursing staff told me that it only took two persons to do all the washing of the establishment.

9853. How much ground is attached to the hospital? I cannot tell you.

9854. Is it in the city? The Melbourne Hospital is in the city, and the Prince Alfred Hospital is a little out of town, on the St. Kilda Road. The head of the nursing staff there was one of the sisters formerly in Sydney, and she told me that she read the report, and fully approved of the recommendations we had made; that she had been in a different position to that she now occupied; that formerly she had not the control of the domestics under her, and found the system a bad one, but now she has entire control of the place, including the stores.

9855. Mr. Metcalfe.] And all goes smooth? All goes smoothly now.

9856. Is there a committee of management? They have a committee of management, but as soon as this change took place, there was very little trouble. As long as there was a divided authority it had not worked well.

9857. Mr. Cowper.] Is that hospital supported by the public, or entirely by the Government? By the public, and aided by the Government.

9858. Private subscriptions to a great extent? Yes. In connection with the state of the country hospitals, I may state that one case for the Crown that I prosecuted at Deniliquin was one of manslaughter, the person accused being a wardman in the country hospital. The charge against him was that he had, through his being utterly unable to read, given carbolic acid to a patient instead of the prescription ordered by the doctor, and the consequence was that the man died in an hour. The late Chief Justice, Sir Alfred Stephen, commented severely upon the employment of persons so ignorant in positions of this kind, and on the danger to which unfortunate persons, who were obliged to have recourse to the hospital, were exposed by the ignorance of attendants provided for them, and thought it a matter worthy of attention in these country hospitals.

9859. Mr. Metcalfe.] How came the carbolic acid in the possession of this man? The carbolic acid was used in the hospital, and having to give some medicine he went into a room where he found the bottle plainly labelled "Carbolic Acid." He thought it was the prescription ordered by the doctor; and instead of asking the patient to read the prescription on the bottle, as he was generally in the habit of doing, he proceeded to give the man the carbolic acid. I may mention that Dr. Noyes, of Deniliquin, complained of the over-crowding of the hospital there by a number of aged and infirm, whom they were obliged to keep there, and was endeavouring to send them down from the hospital to Sydney. He said it was a standing cause of over-crowding and injury to the hospitals.

FRIDAY, 6 FEBRUARY, 1874.

Members Present:—

WILLIAM CHARLES WINDEYER Esq., PRESIDENT.

MICHAEL METCALFE, Esq.,

SAMUEL GOOLD, Esq.,

CHARLES COWPER, JUN., Esq.

Captain David Charles Frederick Scott, Police Magistrate, called in and examined:—

Capt. D. C. F.
Scott, P.M.

6 Feb., 1874.

9860. President.] You are the Police Magistrate of the city of Sydney? Yes.

9861. And you have been so for some years? Yes; fourteen years and six months.

9862. I suppose you have frequently young people coming before you charged with the commission of crime? Yes, frequently.

9863. Do you think more frequently than you used to have years ago? Crime has increased a little every year. There is a trifling increase—there were more last year than before.

9864. Do you think it has increased in undue proportion among the juvenile population of the city? I do not think so, but I cannot say.

9865. What do you do with young people who are charged before you with commission of crime? If they are of a certain age, and appear to be fit for Biloela, or Cockatoo, as it is called, we send them there. If they are under age we have no place to send them to at all.

9866. You mean that if they are over age you do not send them? No, if they are under the full age we do not send them there.

9867. But you can send them there very young—you can send them there at any age under fifteen, or you can send them there at ten? I never do that—I never send girls eleven, twelve, or thirteen, there—I never do so.

9868. You think it is your duty to abstain from doing so—do you object to sending children there? Yes, I object to send them there when they are under the age of thirteen.

9869. Either to the industrial school or to the reformatory? I believe there is an industrial school at Newcastle, or has it been transferred to Cockatoo, Mr. Cowper? 9870.

9870. Mr. Cowper.] Yes? I have no knowledge of Cockatoo at all, but I believe sending children there is ruination to them. Capt. D. C. F.
Scott, P.M.
9871. President.] Till Mr. Cowper informed you of the fact, you appeared to be unaware of the school being transferred to Cockatoo? I have heard of it, but I have never sent a child there. 6 Feb., 1874.
9872. But you appeared to be unaware of its existence at Biloela? No.
9873. You have no practical knowledge of its existence? I have no practical knowledge of it at all. I know nothing about Cockatoo now, but I had charge of it when there was a convict establishment there.
9874. Are you aware that there is more than one establishment there? No. I believe so—I have been informed so.
9875. Have you ever sent any children there? I have sent the elder girls there, but not the others.
9876. Have you had no females charged before you, during the last five years, with the commission of petty larcenies—children under the age of sixteen? Yes, we have had, but we generally deal with them as kindly as we can—as gently as we can. We fine them or admonish them, or something of that kind. What is wanted here is a reformatory for these children.
9877. Are you not aware that there is a reformatory at Biloela? I have heard of it, but I am not aware that there is a proclamation that any place is a reformatory.
9878. Is that one reason you have not sent any there? Oh yes, I recollect a discussion on the subject in the papers. I have written very strongly on the subject myself.
9879. Are you not aware, as a matter of fact, that a reformatory has been established by the Government at Biloela? I was not aware that it had ever been proclaimed.
9880. You are aware of its existence, but doubting the legality of the matter you have not sent girls there? I did not know that it was proclaimed that we could send girls there.
9881. Do you not know that other Benches have done so? I have nothing to do with other Benches.
9882. Then you availed yourself of the supposition that there was no proclamation, to avoid sending children to the reformatory there? Yes, and I was not quite aware whether the two institutions were quite settled.
9883. Are you aware of the distinction between the two? Oh, quite; I know the Act all by heart; but I was not quite aware whether the institutions were kept separate. I have never been there—I have never seen the place at all.
9884. You say as a matter of duty you refuse to send children either to the industrial school or the reformatory? No. I have sent to the industrial school hundreds of girls who have been proved to be the companions of thieves, of prostitutes, or living in the same house as prostitutes, and so on. I have sent hundreds, of course, but with the younger girls I have tried to deal with them without sending them there.
9885. You say you have not sent girls to the reformatory because it was not proclaimed? No, I do not think so. I want to deal with them in a milder form and send them where they could not be corrupted by others.
9886. Are there many bad girls there—prostitutes? Yes, there are many common prostitutes there—I have sent them.
9887. I am asking about the reformatory—you say that criminals have been brought before you and convicted, and yet you have not sent them to the reformatory? Well, I had some reason for not sending them there—I cannot remember what it was now.
9888. Do you know how many there are there? I do not know anything about Cockatoo, how it is conducted, or anything else, never having been there.
9889. Do you think that the policy of the Legislature in establishing these institutions was wrong? No; on the contrary, I think that they should be established all over the Country.
9890. Then what would be the use of it if all Magistrates acted as you do? But I have had cases that did not require so severe a measure, and looking over my documents I could give you every case, and the reasons why punishment was inflicted.
9891. If a girl of twelve years of age was brought before you and found guilty of stealing some article, what would you do? Suppose the article were worth 20s., I should then fine her to that amount, and there is always some person present to pay the fine, and we admonish her and let her go.
9892. And you think that a child is likely to be reclaimed by a course of that kind? We are allowed to inflict any penalty up to 20s.
9893. And do you think that that is likely to reclaim a child? I do not know many cases in which they have come back to me—I do not know, but I can tell you every case by referring to my papers.
9894. Can you give us a return of the number of children brought before you? Females?
9895. Both males and females—a return showing the number within the last two years? Yes, or more. I will have a return made out and you shall have it next week. I think there are many boys reclaimed by fining and letting them go—frightening them in fact; others of course are incorrigible, and they are sent on board the “Vernon.”
9896. Mr. Cowper.] If you had a child brought before you two or three times in twelve months, for stealing, would you always let him off with a fine? Certainly not, but I do not recollect such a case.
9897. What would you do in such a case? Send him to Cockatoo, to the reformatory there.
9898. But there is no reformatory for boys? Not for boys?—Well, I would send him to the “Vernon.”
9899. But you cannot send a boy to the “Vernon” for stealing? Yes, it comes under the Industrial Schools Act.
9900. President.] You then consider the “Vernon” a reformatory for boys? Yes.
9901. And a place to which you can send a boy for stealing? Yes, of course. When a boy steals, there is always other evidence against him as to his keeping bad company and having no other means of living, and all that is taken down and he is sent on board the “Vernon” after inquiry has been made.
9902. And what would you state on the warrant? The charge, whatever it is.
9903. And if the boy was charged with larceny and convicted, you would send him on board the “Vernon” for that crime? I do not know that I ever did so. It is always connected with some other crime. I do not remember having done so.
9904. But you are dealing with these cases every day? We take other charges against the boy, and send him on board the “Vernon” for that.
9905. I ask you, suppose a boy was brought before you for stealing, what would you do with him? I generally fine them.

- Capt. D. C. F. 9906. Mr. Cowper.] But in the case of a boy who has been charged three or four times with stealing?
 Scott, P.M. I would send him on board the "Vernon."
- 6 Feb., 1874. 9907. But supposing he could not be sent on board the "Vernon"? Oh, that is impossible.
 9908. But I know of several cases. Suppose the case of a boy charged with stealing—a case that could not come under the Industrial Schools Act? You are asking about extreme cases.
 9909. I am speaking of common cases? I have never had such a case as that of a boy three times convicted of theft. You will find that our decisions are right—they have never been objected to yet.
 9910. President.] What is your idea of the object of the "Vernon"? To receive boys who associate with thieves, prostitutes, and so on, and who have no means of living; the Act goes on "or," "or," "or," making each a separate offence.
 9911. Do you consider it a place for criminals? No, it is rather a reformatory.
 9912. Rather a reformatory than an industrial school? Both combined.
 9913. May not boys be sent there who are in no way criminal, but simply destitute and neglected? I do not know that: I would not send one. If a boy is found without means of support I send him there at once. The Act is distinct upon that.
 9914. Then, in the case of a boy who has committed a crime, you pass the crime over and send him on board the "Vernon," by trying to make out that the case comes within the Industrial Schools Act? Yes—that he has no visible means of support and his parents have no control over him.
 9915. But suppose he does not come under those conditions, what would you do with him then? He has committed no crime.
 9916. Yes, he has committed a larceny, but yet comes under the provisions of the Industrial Schools Act? It is impossible: he must remain out at night and he must have no visible means of support.
 9917. But suppose that he does not remain out at night and he has visible means of support? I do not know what I should do then; I should like to know the case.
 9918. But suppose that you had this clear case of a boy convicted of larceny, what would you do with him? I would send him on board the "Vernon."
 9919. Under what Act? Industrial Schools Act.
 9920. But suppose that he did not come under the Industrial Schools Act, suppose that he was the child of respectable parents—that he was not the consort of thieves—that he was proved guilty of larceny—that you could not fine him? You can fine all juvenile offenders under a certain age, and in my return you will find that they are all fined.
 9921. But supposing this boy was repeatedly committing these acts of larceny, what would you do with him? I would send him on board the "Vernon."
 9922. President.] For larceny? Yes, for larceny and having no visible means of support.
 9923. But suppose that he has visible means of support? I cannot tell what I would do. That is a case I never had.
 9924. Is it your idea that you can send a boy to the "Vernon" for larceny? I should hesitate to do so.
 9925. You believe you have the power, but you hesitate to do so? I believe I have the power, but I would hesitate. I should fine; I should send him to a reformatory, but not to an industrial school.
 9926. Do you think it advisable that boys who are convicted of crime should consort with those who are simply neglected? No, I do not think so.
 9927. If that is the case, do not you think that the course you propose to adopt—of bringing a boy within the provisions of the Industrial Schools Act for the purpose of sending him to the "Vernon," when he ought to be sent to a reformatory—is a bad course? But there are so few cases of the kind. We do send them to gaol, with a recommendation to keep them from the other prisoners; and then we fine others.
 9928. How long is it since you sent a boy to gaol? I do not think I have sent one to gaol for six or nine months.
 9929. But you have done so within the last twelve months? I think so; we have averaged nearly forty cases a day—so that I cannot remember all, but I can give you an ample return of every case, and the reason why it was dealt with.
 9930. Have you sent any young girls to gaol lately? Little girls—no, I don't think I have. We try to deal with them as kindly as we can.
 9931. Suppose you get hold of young children wandering about the streets—young girls under thirteen years of age—you say you would not send them to Biloeola? We do not like to send young girls there.
 9932. What do you do with them? We admonish them, talk to them, and get the parents to take them back; we try to reclaim them by kind means, and so far as I know we scarcely ever fail.
 9933. Do you not think there are a great many youngsters now running about Sydney who would be much better in an industrial school? Yes, plenty.
 9934. Does not this arise from the fact of the Magistrates refusing to put the Act in force? I have never heard of one Magistrate refusing to do so.
 9935. But do not you yourself decline to put it in force? I am not speaking of girls committed for theft—I am speaking of boys, and I have never heard of a Magistrate declining to send a boy to the "Vernon."
 9936. I understand you to say that if the girls are under thirteen years of age you would not send them to the industrial school? Not if we can avoid it—we admonish them and let them go.
 9937. What do you do that for? To give them another chance.
 9938. Another chance to go to the bad? No, I do not think so.
 9939. Mr. Cowper.] Have you kept records of these cases? We can trace them from the depositions.
 9940. You think that they turn out well? I think so. If the children do not come before us again and the parents do not come to complain, we take it for granted.
 9941. Do not these children sometimes come before you again? They are sometimes brought by the police.
 9942. And does not the fact that they are not oftener before you arise from the fact that Justices are not anxious to carry out the Act? I do not believe that at all—I believe that the Magistrates do their duty.
 9943. We are told that the number of children running about the streets is to be accounted for in this way? I know of many cases in which we have given them another chance, and they have never been brought before me again.
 9944. Do you think that the Industrial Schools Act has had any effect on the population? I do not know the result of the acting of it.
 9945. Do you not think that at the time it came into force it prevented many girls going astray, from the fear that they had of going to these schools? I do not know; I cannot say many—some of them are frightened and cry and beg to be let off. 9946.

Capt. D. C. F.
Scott, P.M.
6 Feb., 1874.

9946. President.] You say you have sent children to gaol? Yes.
9947. Why did you do that instead of sending them to the reformatory? I cannot tell you the reasons now; but it was as a punishment of course, and with a strict injunction that they were to be kept apart from the others.
9948. You say you have sent some girls to gaol? I cannot remember a case of a girl, but that you will find in my return.
9949. If you had a young girl brought before you for larceny, what would you do with her? A girl of what age?
9950. Well, say ten years of age? I would fine her if I could.
9951. Mr. Goold.] Supposing the fine was not paid? Then she would have to go to gaol or to the reformatory.
9952. What would you do with her if the fine was not paid? I do not know—according to circumstances. The decision might be this—you pay the fine, or if it is not paid, the girl might be sentenced to sit in the Court until the rising of the Court, or she might be sent to gaol.
9953. What would you do in that case—in the case of a girl who was not able to pay the fine? I would say—“You are fined so much, or you will have to go to gaol for a day or two.”
9954. But why should you send her to gaol instead of the reformatory as the Act specifies? I cannot answer that question.
9955. You surely must have some reason for it? Well, to tell the truth, I have some prejudice against Cockatoo, thinking that the girls of the two establishments might meet and prejudice each other. I do not know what the management of the place is, but from what I have learned from others the little girls associate with the bigger girls.
9956. You mean that the industrial school girls mix with the reformatory girls? Yes.
9957. That is not the fact? I told you I had only heard so, but I have never seen the place.
9958. President.] Have you never looked through the place? I have not time to do so. There was a lady went there the other day and made a report about it. I believe she made a report about it to Mr. Parkes.
9959. Do you object to the institution because it is badly managed, or because it is on Cockatoo Island? I believe that the elder girls corrupt the others.
9960. Do you mean that the girls in the reformatory corrupt the others? The girls sent there over sixteen might corrupt the others who are sent there young.
9961. Do you mean that the girls of the reformatory and the girls of the industrial school are allowed to mix together? Yes, at the two institutions. That is what I have heard; I believe that it is so.
9962. But do you not think that, before contracting such a prejudice, it would have been as well to have informed yourself of the actual fact? I think there are other punishments that would meet the case.
9963. You have no particular objection to Cockatoo itself or to the site of the institution? Nothing of the kind, or to its management either, of which I know nothing.
9964. Mr. Cowper.] With reference to children charged with stealing, could you not in many cases have adopted a third course, which the Act provides? What—send them to the reformatory?
9965. No; there is another course that the Act provides? Will you mention what you are alluding to?
9966. You say there are two ways of dealing with these children—fining them or sending them to gaol? I said I had two ways of dealing with them.
9967. President.] Do you think there are only two ways of dealing with them? No, there are other ways, of course.
9968. Mr. Cowper.] What ways have you of dealing with them? We fine them.
9969. And imprison them? Imprison them.
9970. Is there nothing else you can do? —
9971. President.] You are not aware of another alternative? I may be.
9972. Mr. Cowper.] You might bind over a third party for their good behaviour? Oh yes, that of course. I did not think you were alluding to securities and binding them over; that I looked upon as a matter of course—binding over parents for the good behaviour of their children.
9973. Have you never bound them over to find security for their good behaviour? I think I have.
9974. What was the result of that? I cannot tell without a reference to the record. I have no doubt it was very good. Do you wish to have two years or three years returns?
9975. President.] From the commencement of the Act? How long is that?
9976. Five years? Very well; that will give us a little more trouble, but it shall be done.
9977. Mr. Goold.] Suppose a mother brings a girl to you over whom she has no control—a girl who associates with prostitutes and thieves—if her mother comes and asks you to deal with that girl, how would you deal with her? That is a difficult question. She may be living with prostitutes without any knowledge of their guilt or of anything of the kind, and so we get the mother to give her another chance.
9978. Suppose the mother finds out that it is impossible to keep her at home, but she goes away and stops away? Then she must be dealt with.
9979. Have any cases come under your notice of girls of thirteen being prostitutes? No. I have heard of Chinamen having prostitutes of all ages; but that is a different thing to its coming under my notice.
9980. President.] There is an institution in which you take an interest in, called the Protestant Training School for Servants? Yes.
9981. That is a private institution? Yes, quite private.
9982. How many children do you receive there? Twenty. We have no means of receiving more at present, but if the public would support us we would receive a hundred.
9983. Not in the present building? No.
9984. What class of girls do you take? Some whose parents are respectable and able to pay for their education any amount, from 1s. to 5s. per week. Those who paid for the education of their children can take them out at any time for their own benefit. They are taught all domestic duties; they are taught to sew, to wash, to iron, to mangle, to bake, read, write and cipher, to scrub floors and make their own beds, to be respectful to their superiors, and curtsy when spoken to, and so on. We turn out nearly all of them excellent girls, but sometimes they go to mistresses who do not treat them properly; very often it is the fault of the mistress that the girl does not turn out well. We had a girl returned to us, and she went into the service of another lady, who says she is one of the best servants she ever had.

- Capt. D. C. F. Scott, P.M.
6 Feb., 1874.
9985. These children are not of the neglected class—not of the destitute class? Yes, some of them are.
9986. They are not the same class as the girls who are sent to the Industrial Schools? No, we would not take in any very corrupt girls; but we generally consider a girl of ten or eleven or twelve quite uncorrupted, but if a girl is thirteen we consider that she knows too much.
9987. What age do you take them in? From ten to thirteen.
9988. What is the cost per head? £15 per head. We have two matrons. The children earn a good deal of money by washing and sewing, which goes towards defraying the expenses, and that, joined to what the mothers are able to pay, reduces the annual charge to about £15. We apprentice children to subscribers, but if a non-subscriber wants a child she must pay £2 2s., which goes to expenses of the child, and she must give 3s. a month to the institution on account of the child, a third of which goes to the child herself.
9989. How long does she serve? Two years; and the second year she gets 1s. 6d. pocket-money, and the institution 4s.
9990. A month? A month. It is upon that principle that a very large institution might be established for all classes of the community.
9991. Do you keep up a supervision after they have left the institution? Merely by letter; and we act as parents to them. We do not allow them to go to any person whose characters we have not inquired into, and whose characters are approved of, and a certain bond is entered into—they are allowed to come and visit us at the school. We apprenticed one girl at Newcastle, but in future we do not intend to apprentice any out of Sydney.
9992. Mr. Metcalfe.] They are all Protestants, I believe? Children of all denominations of Protestants—Baptists, Wesleyans, and all Protestant denominations. We cannot allow the Jews to join us, or rather they will not join us, because they never bring up a child to servitude but always to a trade; and we do not ask the Roman Catholics to join us, because they are a poorer body than we are and would swamp us. That is the only reason why we exclude these two bodies from our school.
9993. President.] Do you know anything of the system of out-door relief at the Benevolent Asylum? I am on the committee, but I only attend the committees about six or eight times a year, to read over the statements. Of course I am aware that they give away thousands of loaves, and flour, and gruel, and that sort of thing, and sometimes money, but very seldom.
9994. Do you know anything of the practical working of this institution? The rule is this: the applicant is obliged to bring a recommendation from some person, usually a subscriber to the institution; that letter is opened by the secretary and read out, and the case is taken into consideration, and an order made according to the circumstances.
9995. Have you formed any opinion as to whether the charity is abused? There is no doubt but it is, and whenever I hear of cases I write to the secretary.
9996. Have you anything to do with Randwick? Nothing, except as a subscriber.
9997. We saw a number of children in the Benevolent Asylum? Yes.
9998. Do you know how they came to be there? Simply that I myself, when policemen bring in two or three children, send them there with a recommendation that they should be received.
10000. Mr. Gould.] In your opinion there are many who impose upon the charity? I do not say many, but there are some—they come with letters, principally from clergymen, who are kind-hearted people, and the committee do not like to refuse clergymen, because they fancy they have taken the precaution to inquire into the circumstances, and very often they are taken in.

Mr. Joseph Coulter, Collector, Randwick Destitute Children's Asylum, called in and examined:—

- Mr. J. Coulter.
6 Feb., 1874.
10001. President.] I believe that you are the Collector for the Asylum for Destitute Children? Yes.
10002. How long have you been so? For fourteen months.
10003. Have you visited the country districts in that capacity? Yes.
10004. To what parts of the Colony have you been? Over part of the Southern and Western Districts.
10005. How far south have you been? To Albury.
10006. And how far west? Bathurst, Forbes, and Currajong.
10007. You mean to say that you have been to those towns? Yes.
10008. Have you seen any children from the Asylum while you have been in those districts? Yes.
10009. How many? I cannot say how many. I saw several children.
10010. Did you make any return to the institution of those you saw? Yes.
10011. A nominal return, or what sort of a return? I communicated to the directors a return concerning each child.
10012. Where did you see these children? In their homes.
10013. In what part of the country? Yass, Adelong, Goulburn, Orange, Bathurst, Trunkey. I may have seen some others, but I cannot call them to remembrance just now.
10014. When you say several children, how many do you mean? I cannot say how many children I saw—I did not keep a memo. of that fact.
10015. But I thought you gave a return about each child? Yes.
10016. Shall we find that return in the institution? I do not know.
10017. Was it in writing? I believe so.
10018. Surely you should know whether it was in writing or not? Yes, it was. I forwarded a report about each child.
10019. Did you report upon the case of each child you saw, and upon all the children you saw? Yes.
10020. How many children did you report upon, do you think? I cannot say how many.
10021. How many did you see that you did not report upon? None.

10022. You said just now that you did not send a report upon all the children that you saw? I sent a separate report concerning each of them.

10023. Did you send a separate report upon all the children that you saw? Yes.

10024. How many were there of these reports? I cannot say.

10025. About how many—half-a-dozen? More than half-a-dozen.

10026. Well, several generally means about that. Can you give us an idea of the number of children you saw? I will say about twelve.

10027. Mr. Goold.] That is, you saw twelve during the fourteen months you have been engaged as Collector? Yes; but I was only travelling through the country for ten weeks, and it was during those ten weeks that I was absent from town I saw them.

10028. President.] When was that? Between May and July, 1873.

10029. When you visited the children, did you see them apart or in the presence of their employers? Both ways.

10030. What class of people did you find them amongst? Very respectable people.

10031. People with families? Yes.

10032. Farmers, or what class of people were they—can you give us an idea? Some appeared to be landowners, others large farmers, and I think some were independent gentlemen.

10033. Mr. Metcalfe.] Were they all boys? No.

10034. Were there about an equal number of each—boys and girls? Yes, I suppose there were an equal number of each.

10035. Do you remember the names of any of them? No, I cannot tell you the names of any individual just now.

10036. President.] Did you see any of the boys and girls in Bathurst? Yes.

10037. How many? Two boys I saw in Bathurst.

10038. Were they with one employer or with two? With two employers.

10039. What were these employers? Gentlemen of independent means.

10040. Did you see any girls in Bathurst? No.

10041. Where did you see any girls? In Trunkey and Orange.

10042. How many did you see there? I saw one in Trunkey.

10043. What class of person was she with? She was with a storekeeper.

10044. Mr. Metcalfe.] Was she a servant? Yes, she was a domestic servant.

10045. President.] How did these children seem to be, from what you saw of them? They seemed to be very comfortable, very steady, and very content.

10046. And that holds good with all the cases that you saw? Yes.

10047. You speak rather doubtfully? No; in all cases the children seemed to be very comfortable.

10048. Did your report state what the employers said of the children? No.

10049. Then is there no report from you as to what the employers said of these children? No.

10050. Then what was the object of your visiting them? To report upon their position.

10051. Mr. Metcalfe.] You did not inquire of their mistresses and masters whether they were satisfied with the child? Yes, I did.

10052. You said you did not just now? I did not relate the conversation.

10053. President.] Why did you not state what the employer reported to you? I did not think that it was necessary.

10054. Mr. Metcalfe.] Were there any complaints made to you by the masters or mistresses of the children. Sometimes.

10055. President.] What sort of complaints were made to you? Sometimes they would say—"The child is rather obstinate; but generally speaking the child behaves well."

10056. They do not complain of any vice on the part of the children? No, I do not remember a single case.

10057. Mr. Goold.] Were any complaints made by the children themselves? No.

10058. President.] Did you find any people of the humbler classes—not people of education—people working their own land with their own labour—the ordinary class of small farmer—did you find any of these children with them? Yes, I found one.

10059. Where was that? In Adelong.

10060. What quantity of land was that person occupying? That I do not know.

10061. What sort of house was he living in—was it a bark hut? No; it was a weatherboarded house.

10062. Was that a boy or a girl? A boy.

10063. Was he learning farm work? Yes.

10064. President.] You had no complaints of any kind at all? No serious complaints about the children.

10065. Mr. Goold.] Nor from the children? No.

10066. Mr. Cowper.] How were they dressed? They appeared to be very comfortably dressed.

10067. Were they dressed in the clothes they received before they left the institution? No, I did not see one child with the institution clothing on—not one.

10068. President.] Do you know how long they had been at service? No, I cannot say.

10069. Had they all boots and shoes? No; one had not when I saw him.

10070. Mr. Cowper.] Were the girls dressed like ordinary servants, or in the kind of clothing that would give one the idea that they had come from Randwick? They were dressed like ordinary servants.

10071. President.] How did you find out these children—how did you find out where they were? I received a memorandum from the honorary secretary, with the names of the children and their residences.

10072. Did you see all the children mentioned in the memo. when you started? No.

10073. How is that? I did not visit some of the places where the children are residing.

10074. Was that the sole reason? Yes.

10075. Mr. Cowper.] You keep the accounts of the Randwick institution, do you not? No.

10076. Any of the books of the establishment? No.

10077. Did you not keep any books? Yes.

10078. What were they? When I was clerk and storekeeper, the books I kept in the institution were the clothing store book, the shoemaker's book, the provision store book, and the coal store book. I had charge of the stores.

10079. What did you keep in the clothing store book—how did you keep that? The names of the articles

Mr. J.
Coulter.

6 Feb., 1874.

Mr. J.
Coulter.
6 Feb., 1874.

articles in the clothing store were enumerated one after the other, and opposite each article there would be the number of articles in the store, and all other particulars. We will say—the day I receive a quantity of clothing, that quantity would be entered in a book for a purpose, and another column would show the issues of such clothing, and every week the book would show what was remaining in the store after adding the receipts and putting down the issues.

10080. And the provisions? They are entered in the same way.

10081. And the coal book? The coal store book is kept in the same way.

10082. Was there any other book kept by you? Yes, the bread book.

10083. Is that all? Yes.

10084. Who kept the account of the farm? I kept that account.

10085. What would you call that account? Well, the produce of the farm is inserted in the provision store book; what we receive from the farm is entered there and issued as rations.

10086. Mr. Metcalfe.] None of that was sold, was it? No.

10087. Mr. Couper.] Suppose you had 500 yards of blue cloth, and that was made into frocks and so on, on the premises, how would you enter that? I would enter it as 500 yards of blue cloth.

10088. Yes; and if you issued that cloth to be made into jackets, who would you debit with the issue? The matron; and she would account for the way in which the cloth had been made up.

10089. But supposing these clothes were sold, after being made up, to some other institution, what would you do then? I do not know—such a case has never occurred.

10090. You do not know where they go to? I do not know; I have never experienced such a thing.

10091. Leather is issued from the store of the institution to the shoemaker? Yes.

10092. And you lose sight of it altogether—you know nothing of it afterwards? Oh, yes. I always received the boots and shoes into the store after they were made up.

10093. And you would issue them to children to wear? Yes.

10094. And if they were sold? The boots and shoes sold to the various institutions—the amount would be debited to each institution.

10095. And where does the money received go to? I do not know, but I suppose it would of course go to the treasurer.

10096. What account would be credited with the money? I have nothing to do with the accounts of the treasurer.

10097. Who has? Mr. Wailes, the accountant.

10098. Mr. Wailes has told us that he has nothing to do with these things? He has to do with all matters relating to money. I have had to do with the stores only.

10099. Does Mr. May keep any books? I do not know.

10100. Did you make out any of the returns that you sent to us? I sent no returns to you.

10101. Was there any officer of the Asylum who kept the books? Lately?

10102. Since we have been sitting? There has been an officer since I left—my successor.

10103. How long ago did he succeed you? Since January, 1873.

10104. But there is a gentleman there who has been only there six weeks, so that there must have been some other people between you? Yes.

10105. Was there not an account showing everything expended on the farm, and anything produced on the farm? Not to my knowledge. We only put down what is received from the farm.

10106. Was there no account kept on the establishment that you know of to be credited to the sale of a pair of boots sold to any private individual? Yes.

10107. What account was there? The account kept by the accountant, Mr. Wailes, called the boot and shoe account.

10108. Is that account debited with the leather put into the boot and shoe shop, and credited with the boots and shoes returned made up? I do not know.

10109. But there is no account kept on the establishment with reference to these things that are sold? I do not know; I have nothing to do with the account further than what I have already stated.

10110. Who delivers the leather to the man in charge of the boot and shoe shop? The storekeeper.

10111. And you were the storekeeper? Yes.

10112. What account had you of that leather when you delivered it to him,—how did you enter it? I entered so much of one kind of material and so much of another.

10113. And were the prices carried out? I had nothing to do with the prices.

10114. If you delivered twenty sides of leather suitable for making boots, all you knew of the way the leather was used was that a certain number of boots after a certain time? Yes.

10115. There was no account kept on the establishment charging the boot and shoe shop with that leather, and crediting it with the boots and shoes returned? I do not know.

10116. You did not keep it? I did not.

10117. Mr. Goold.] Had you any means of ascertaining whether that leather came back to you? —

10118. Mr. Couper.] Are you aware of any books that could contain accounts of this character? Would you kindly repeat the question?

10119. Are you aware of any books, kept on the establishment, by Mr. May or any other officer, showing where the leather goes to, or in what form it returns from the shop where it was made up? Yes.

10120. What book? The book that was kept by myself; that book would show the leather that was issued and the boots that were returned.

10121. And what check did that give on the foreman of the boot shop,—what check had you on the foreman of the boot shop, if you were not a tradesman, and could not value the leather when it was given out and the boots when they were returned? I had no check.

10122. Are you aware whether Mr. May kept any accounts on the establishment? I do not know.

10123. Were there any books kept in the office which you used that he might have kept the accounts in? Yes, there were several large books in the institution, but for what purpose they were used I cannot say.

10124. Did you never look into them? Sometimes, but not officially.

10125. Were they account books? Yes, they were account books and registers.

10126. What is the difference? An account book is a book in which accounts are kept, and a register is a book in which the children's names are recorded.

10127. What did you see when you looked into these books? Names and figures.

10128. What were they? Books kept by Mr. Wailes—they may have been.

10129. But all his books are kept in the office in Sydney,—did you see him make up accounts there? Yes.
10130. How long have you been there? I was clerk and storekeeper for eighteen months.
10131. Were you ever brought into contact with Mr. Wailes? Yes, I generally spoke to him, but nothing more.
10132. Did not he examine your accounts? No.
10133. Did you not give him returns? No.
10134. Did you give him any information from your books when he came to the institution? He may have asked me questions, but I cannot remember.
10135. How was the information that your books contained conveyed to Mr. Wailes? Sometimes I was instructed by the superintendent to make out a return, and I would do so and give it to the superintendent, and what he did with it I do not know.
10136. Was it not Mr. Wailes's business to examine your books? I do not know.
10137. Did he not look into them? I cannot say.
10138. Did no one check the accounts? Yes.
10139. Who? The superintendent.
10140. How would he check them? With the invoices and the daily ration list.
10141. How did he check the clothing account? By the invoices. Supposing I received 100 yards of clothing material, he would have the invoices, he would see whether the 100 yards was entered in the receipt-book, and before I made an issue he always signed the requisition book belonging to the matron. Nothing was issued from the store without the authority of the superintendent.
10142. Then how did he check what you had in stock,—did he go over that? Yes.
10143. How did he do that? He would be with me sometimes; he generally remained some time with me when I took stock.
10144. Was there any regular date for taking stock? Yes.
10145. What time of the year? It was done twice a year.
10146. How did he check it? By keeping my books with him in the office while I went and took the stock; I would furnish my papers, and he would then see whether the books agreed with what I had in stock.
10147. You would send a return of 1,000 yards of print, which would appear in the book, and then you would go to the store and count 1,000 yards of print and tell him you had it? No; before I commenced stock-taking the superintendent would ask for my books; he would have my books in his possession; I would not know what number of yards was in this book; I would take my papers, go into the store, take the stock, and furnish him with the papers; he would keep my books, so that it would be impossible for me to take the stock from the books.
10148. This was done twice a year? Yes, near the end of June and December.
10149. Would it not be possible for you just previous to the stock-taking to look through the books, and take a private memo., so that your return might accord with the books, without Mr. May knowing there was anything wrong? No, I do not think it is possible—though it would depend very much on the time the books are taken from the storekeeper.
10150. But, if as your stocktaking happens at certain periods of the year, and you knew of the time when you would be called upon to take stock, would it not be possible for you to make up from your books such a calculation as would enable you to know what number of yards you should have in stock; and as no one acted with you, could you not return the amount you should have, and not the real amount? It would not be possible, because during part of the time I am taking stock the superintendent is with me.
10151. I thought you told me that he did not take stock with you? Yes; he will have the books away from me; and sometimes he will come into the store and see me take stock.
10152. Does he count the things with you? Yes, at times.
10153. I think you said he did not do so? I think not.
10154. I understood you to say so? No.
10155. Was there any regular quantity of material for making articles of clothing—if you gave out material for making trousers, how did you check the articles returned afterwards? I always reckoned that a certain number of yards would make a pair of trousers; and if the master tailor made application for a piece of material, I would always see that he furnished me with a certain number of pairs of trousers.
10156. But surely a large boy will want more than a small boy? Yes.
10157. How did you strike the average? The tailor furnished me with a return showing the amount that would make trousers for boys twelve years of age, ten years of age, eight years of age, and so on.
10158. And was that return given to you of the ages of the boys that the trousers were made for, as well as the number of trousers? The sizes were mentioned.
10159. Were the memorandums handed in to you weekly? Yes.
10160. And you preserve them? No.
10161. Did you enter them in a book? I did.
10162. Showing the number of trousers and the size of each pair? No, I never entered sizes in the book. After checking them and seeing that they were correct, I only entered the number of pairs of trousers received.
10163. Then you had a check upon the tailor, but there was no check upon you? In what way?
10164. The tailor had to send you the number of pairs of trousers and their sizes? Yes.
10165. But if you liked to be dishonest, there was no record kept by which Mr. May could check the quantity used? Yes, there was a check.
10166. What was it? The tailor kept a book.
10167. But suppose the tailor worked with you, there would be nothing to show that a certain number of pairs of trousers were made from a certain piece of material? Yes, when Mr. May checked my issues he would know the number of pairs of trousers that were to be received.
10168. How would he know that? He would know by the receipt entered.
10169. He could not know what sizes the trousers should be, and you say that the sizes of the trousers are different? I did not keep a check of the sizes; I did not enter the sizes, I only entered the number of pairs of trousers, but the master tailor always entered the sizes—so many of the first size, and so many of the second size, and so on, and his book was always submitted to the superintendent for his initials to be attached to it. He entered the sizes—I did not.

Mr. J.

- Mr. J. Coulter.
6 Feb., 1874.
10170. Was this an official book belonging to the establishment? He kept it himself.
10171. It was a book that the establishment could claim? Yes.
10172. And he kept a more perfect account than you did who were the accountant or storekeeper? I do not say that.
10173. Did not he keep the number and sizes too? It was not necessary for me to do that.
10174. But if the tailor's book was lost, there would be no check upon the tailor? —
10175. And you were supposed to keep the book to check the issue of these goods? Yes, to check the issue of these goods.
10176. You kept the goods in stock and issued them, and got the goods back again? Yes.
10177. Therefore the tailor's was a perfect book, and yours was an imperfect book? Yes, according to your making out.
10178. But is it not so;—do you not say that your book contains record? No; because I always checked the trousers, and saw that they were correct before I entered them.
10179. But Mr. May had no check from your book? No.
10180. And you were the storekeeper? Yes.
10181. Mr. Metcalfe.] You say you do not know what becomes of the money when boots and shoes are sold outside to private gentlemen or to other institutions? No. I suppose, of course, the money is paid to the treasurer.
10182. You know nothing about that? No; I have nothing to do with those accounts.
10183. And if you issue leather to the shoemaker you do not get it all back in boots and shoes, because some of them may be sold to persons outside? The private work was always returned to the store.
10184. Suppose I bought a pair of boots, would the requisition be made to you for them? No; the requisition would be made to the superintendent, and the boots would be issued by the storekeeper from the store.
10185. Mr. Goold.] You would not receive the money? No.
10186. To whom would the money be paid? I do not know.
10187. President.] How much money did you collect in the country? £479 9s. 3d.
10188. Are you paid by commission? I get a salary, and 5 per cent. commission on all I collect myself—all that comes through my own hands.
10189. What salary do you get? £100 a year.
10190. Mr. Metcalfe.] You had some opposition in Bathurst, or there was some opposition to the Society there? I was in Bathurst canvassing.
10191. You met with some difficulties there? Yes.
10192. What was the cause of that? Well, I attribute it to a conversation I had with a Roman Catholic clergyman.
10193. What was the cause? I do not know, except the reasons stated.
10194. What were they? That the institution was nothing but a sectarian institution, and a place where children were prepared for such a place as the Bathurst Gaol.
10195. President.] Did you go to the country solely for this purpose? Principally to canvass for subscriptions.
10196. You were not collecting for any house of business or anything else? No.
10197. What did the expenses of the trip come to? The expenses, including allowances for myself and horse, and advertising and miscellaneous expenses, were somewhere about £70.
10198. Mr. Metcalfe.] And you collected £450? £479 9s. 3d.
10199. President.] What proportion of that was from people who are already subscribers to the institution? Perhaps £20.
10200. All the rest were new? All the rest were new.
10201. All sorts of amounts, I suppose—What was the highest amount received from one person? £5 5s.
10202. Did you take any sum offered, however small? Yes.
10203. Did you receive many small subscriptions? Yes.
10204. Sums under £1? Yes.

Members Present:—

WILLIAM CHARLES WINDEYER, Esq., President.

SAMUEL GOOLD, Esq., | MICHAEL METCALFE, Esq.,
CHARLES COWPER, JUN., Esq.

Charles Moore, Esq., Director, Botanical Gardens, called in and examined:—

- C. Moore, Esq.
10 Feb., 1874.
10205. President.] You are the Director of the Botanic Gardens? Yes.
10206. The Commission think it desirable that the boys on board the "Vernon" should be employed on shore at times, for the purpose of learning garden work—digging, and the ordinary operations of a garden, and at the same time they might be providing the ship with vegetables. We thought you might be able to inform us what facilities could be given for employing the boys in the Domains and Gardens, as the boys in Melbourne are employed in the public parks? I have pondered over this matter during the day, and although opposed to it in the first instance, I believe it is practicable to a certain extent to employ the boys in the kitchen garden, which I now call the "nursery"; but to employ them they must be under the orders of men who are under my direction—that is, we cannot have two separate establishments, one for the "Vernon" boys, and one for the garden; and if they were so employed on the ground called the kitchen garden, it would in fact almost be kept in order by their labour. They would be taught propagating by cuttings and layers; and if it were to be a permanent establishment, we would plant stocks, to teach them grafting and budding of all kinds. We have now to grow vegetables of various descriptions for the birds in the garden, and I think there would be space enough to grow vegetables for that purpose and and some for the "Vernon" as well. I think it is worth a trial, because the labour of the boys could be utilized in the kitchen garden, and they would be away from the public. But I am quite satisfied that it would be improper to have them in the Botanic Gardens. C. Moore, Esq.

10 Feb., 1874.

10207. Have these boys come under your observation? Yes. I have had occasion frequently to watch the progress that they made at Biloela, and I was much pleased indeed with the state in which they kept the grounds there. The vegetables were all of a first-class description. I believe they grew as much vegetables as were required for the ship; and it was very creditable to the man who had charge of them—an old Scotch gardener—James Duncan. He was a very suitable man indeed, and the boys seemed to be very fond of him, and he was fond of the boys. His services were dispensed with since the 1st January, and I have him employed; he is now doing up the garden of the Legislative Council Chambers. He was a very suitable man to instruct the boys.

10208. That system is no longer carried on? It is no longer carried on. The boys have no ground of any description to work, as far as I know. I am speaking without knowledge perhaps. At all events, I know the gardener Duncan is now under me.

10209. How many boys do you think could be employed in this way, or what number would you have in a detachment at one time? I suppose there might be from ten to twelve of them. In that case they would be instructed in digging and in trenching ground. They would be taught the proper rotation of cropping, and in fact, they would be taught why and wherefore every operation was done. I would take care of that. They would be taught, not merely how to put in plants of various kinds, but why one sort should be put in at one season and another put in at another season; that certain crops are summer crops and others winter crops; that to grow two successive crops of the same kind in the same ground is not correct; that you ought not to put one crop after another in the same ground without manure. The kitchen garden is very poor soil—it is very very poor; it is the longest cultivated ground in the Colony—it is the original farm.

10210. From which the bay there obtained its name of Farm Cove? Yes. The soil is very light indeed now. If you throw it up, half will blow away, but it is a fine winter garden. My impression is that the thing is worth a trial, or it may be better to choose a piece of ground at North Shore or elsewhere, where a garden could be wholly maintained by themselves. I should have to keep a man in charge of the kitchen garden, besides one in charge of the boys.

10211. If the man formerly at Biloela was transferred with the boys, and that man were put under your orders, then there would not be any further expense than there was before his discharge? No. The boys could be landed in the Botanic Garden, and brought up to the kitchen garden, which is surrounded by a fence. The public are not admitted to it; they would be kept away from the public. I presume the gardener would meet the boys in the morning, and would take them down to the boat again in the evening. There is no apprehension that they would escape; they would pass through the garden, and not be in the Outer Domain at all. In point of fact, the experiment might be tried in the kitchen garden to see how it would work, and then a portion of ground might be set apart for them where fit.

10212. As they became more expert they might be set to work among the plants? It would become a school of gardening; they would become, to all intents and purposes, young gardeners, as far as out-door work is concerned, which is all that is required in these Colonies. There are many things we grow here which cannot be grown in Goulburn, Bathurst, and other country districts, without protection.

10213. There is a demand for that sort of labour, is there not? Yes, for handy men there is a great demand. They would be taught in two or three years all that would be necessary to know, above all things budding and grafting.

10214. Mr. Metcalfe.] They would then be able to get 6s. or 7s. a day wages? In Sydney they would, and become exceedingly useful to send into the country. They would be very useful on stations; they would in point of fact be gardeners. If the thing were carried out as I wish it, they would know a vast deal more than many professed gardeners. They must have a good man to instruct them, and I believe that old man Duncan capable of doing it; he was bred as a gardener in Scotland, and had a nursery in Ballarat.

10215. Mr. Gould.] You say you could take from ten to twelve boys? Yes.

10216. And how long would you keep them? The would send a certain number of boys in rotation.

10217. Week and week about? Yes, so that they would all have a turn; and it would not prevent their being taught other things, because during the week they were not employed in the garden they would be employed at other things. I was much opposed to this plan when I first heard of it, but I thought the matter over to-day, and I think that it is quite practicable. They could grow a great many vegetables for themselves,* and for the purposes for which I have the kitchen garden, and it would enable me to spare a certain amount of winter labour that I have for the sake of making cuttings, &c., for the country. It is now an almost understood thing that I have to give plants for schools and churches and so on. I have applications from all parts of the Colony. In Victoria this is carried to a great extent, and it caused a great deal of bad blood to arise between the Government Gardens and the nursery establishments, for the proprietors said that the Government were growing plants for nothing and competing with them. They have taken here to plant the police barracks, and a great deal has been done in that way; and the cemeteries too—at all events, I have given plants for these purposes, and shall continue to do it, no matter whether this arrangement with respect to the "Vernon" boys is carried out or not. If it is done, I can devote a certain amount of labour to other things.

10218. Mr. Metcalfe.] This you do without any charge at all to the public? Of course. These boys would come into the garden, and I would give certain directions, and would see that what I proposed now should be carried out. That is where my direction would come in. I would not interfere with them in any other way. I would simply see them instructed in the way proposed.

* NOTE (on revision):—See letter to acting secretary.

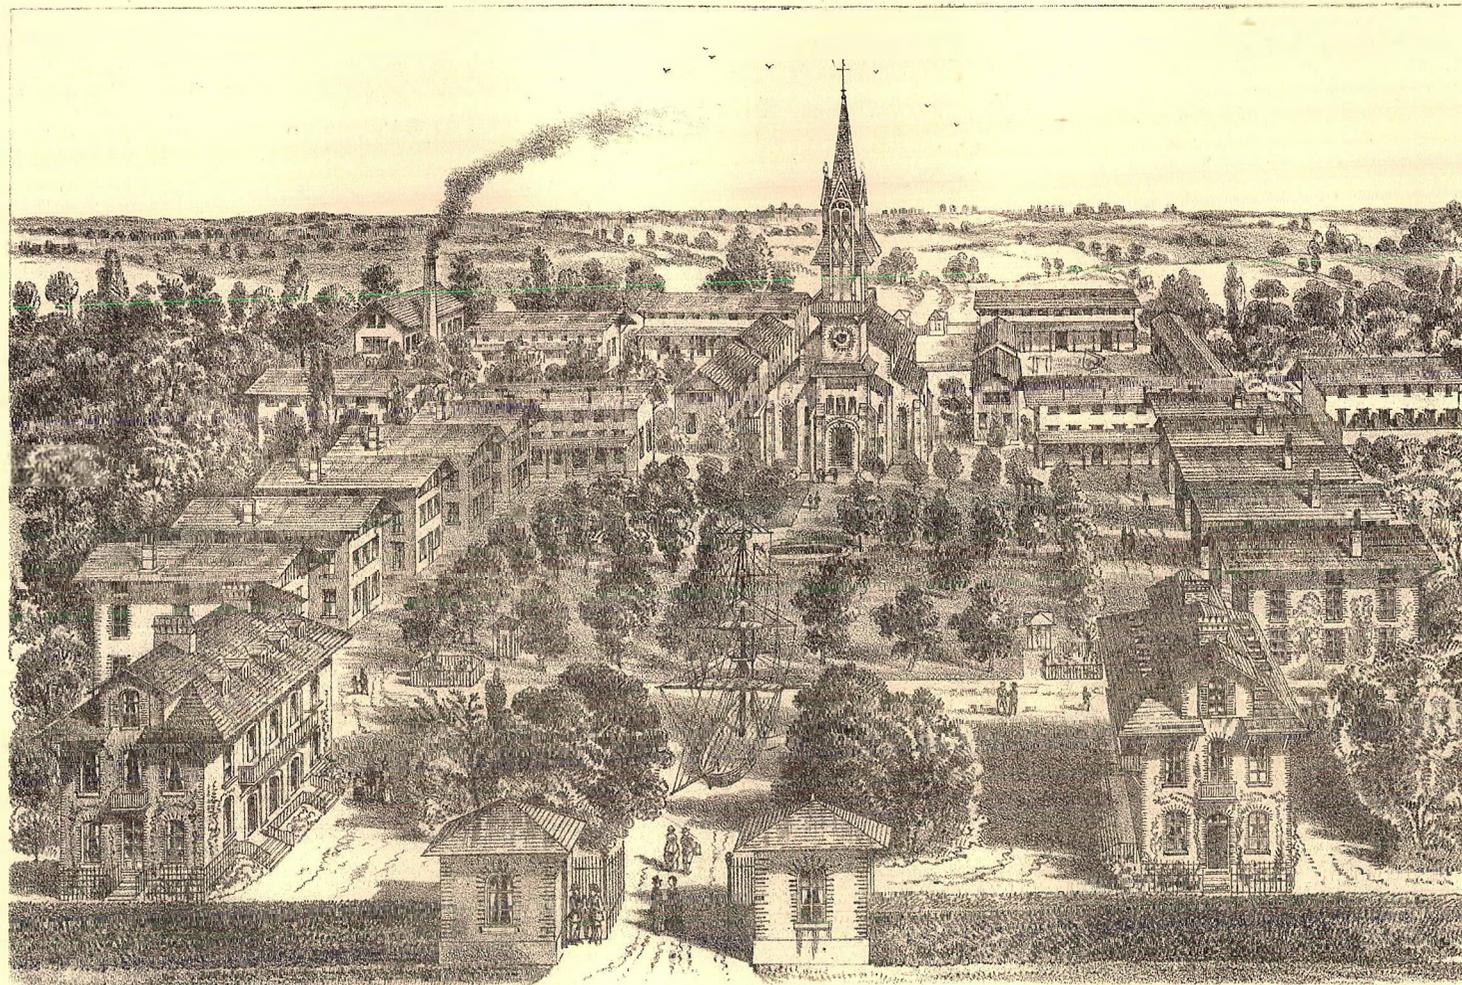

- C. Moore, Esq.
10 Feb., 1874.
10220. Mr. Cowper.] They could be sent backwards and forwards to the ship at meal-times? That would depend entirely on the authorities. The thing might be tried as an experiment, at all events.
10221. Mr. Goold.] It would be a great advantage to the boys? It would; for information of that kind they never lose; no matter what part of the world they go to, the principles of propagation are the same, the grafting of an orange or a peach, and so on.
10222. President.] They would be taught to prune vines? Yes; it would become a school of gardening, and the better man you have to instruct, of course the greater advantage it would be to the boys. It would be nonsense putting in a man who could not instruct them properly, and I believe the man who was at Biloela knows what he is about in all gardening matters.
10223. And he seemed to get on with them? Captain Mein told me that they liked him.
10224. And they got on with the work? The work was done as well as it was possible to be done; it was neatly done.*

George F. Wise, Esq., Honorary Secretary, Randwick Destitute Children's Asylum, called in and further examined:—

- G. F. Wise, Esq.
10 Feb., 1874.
10225. President.] We summoned you, if you please, Mr. Wise, to produce a document you referred to in your evidence when you were examined before—an abstract of the accounts of the Queen's Asylum, Tasmania; and the evidence being almost unintelligible without that document, we should like to see it again? I have been asked to produce a document that I laid before the Commission on a previous examination. I did not lay any such document before the Commission; I distinctly said that the document relative to the Queen's Asylum in Tasmania, in 1867, to which I referred, did not belong to myself or to Randwick—it was an old paper of years ago.
10226. Which I understand belonged to yourself? No, it did not.
10227. I am not aware of the wording of the document sent to you asking you to bring the document with you, but I should hardly think you wished to refrain from producing the document on the ground of some misstatement of the terms under which it was produced? It was not my document. Your secretary wrote to me for it some time ago; I replied that the document I referred to did not belong to me.
10228. You seem to be under some indisposition to produce it—is it so? It is not my property at all. I did not produce it at my previous examination, but I did refer to it.
10229. That is not an answer to my question? I cannot now produce it—it is not in my possession.
10230. Have you an indisposition to produce it? I have not got it.
10231. That is not an answer to my question—have you an indisposition to produce it? I cannot produce what I have not got.
10232. That is an equivocation again? No, it is not an equivocation.
10233. I want an answer, yes or no—have you an indisposition to produce this document? I cannot produce what I have not got.
10234. Mr. Metcalfe.] If we desire you to produce it could you procure it? Yes, certainly, I could again procure it.
10235. There has been a good deal of evidence about it, and the Commission will be glad to have it? With reference to Mr. Metcalfe's question, I have no doubt I can again get the document now asked for.
10236. President.] It struck me that was an indisposition on your part to give such evidence as was required, and therefore you were examined, but in some cases your answers were impertinent, and we cannot help thinking that there is now manifested on your part an indisposition to produce this document, which is somewhat unreasonable. You are a Government officer, and the secretary to this institution, and it is your duty, as a Government officer, to give us what assistance you can, and not to throw obstacles in the way of the Commission. We wish to know where this document is? I cannot accept the word "impertinent" as applied to myself. I have studiously wished, from the beginning, to give as much information and as concise information as I possibly could; and, fearing that the Commission might not examine me, I wrote, at the instigation of the directors of the Randwick institution—which is not, as you have stated it to be, a Government institution—expressly requesting to be examined, and at the same time I requested to be informed by the Commission on what subjects I was to be examined, that I might inform myself upon them. For some reason—I will not say a want of courtesy—I did not receive any information as to the subjects upon which I was to be examined. I therefore brought a large number of papers with me, on the chance of being examined. I have studiously done all I could to advance the interests of the institution and the interests of the Commission, because I wished earnestly to assist the investigation from beginning to end; and with regard to this particular document, viz., the report of the Queen's Asylum, in Tasmania, I said at the time it was not mine—that I had to return it. I did not quote from it—no allusion was made to it—it was an old document of years ago.
10237. So far from its being the fact that you did not allude to it, you distinctly introduced the matter in answer to a question that was put to you? I do not remember it.
10238. I have it before me. You began answering the question by saying—"I notice in these accounts of the Queen's Asylum," so that it has been distinctly referred to in your evidence? They were, I believe, your accounts of the Queen's Asylum to which I then referred.
10239. We had no accounts? I beg your pardon—they were shown to me. I think that the accounts produced were for the year 1871. I did not produce them. I hope, Mr. Chairman, that you will not think that I am, either as a private individual or as a Government officer, impertinent in any way whatever, and I decline to receive the word as applicable to any expression made use of by me.
10240. I think your conduct was unbecoming and discourteous to myself and the other members of the Commission? I do not think so.
10241. Mr. Metcalfe.] I thought your answers were rather curt, and they certainly were different to those we received from other people? I do not think so.
10242. You came here of your own accord? Showing that I wished to give evidence and assist the Commission.
- 10243.

* NOTE (on revision):—Since giving evidence before the Public Charities Commission, I have very carefully considered the subject, and have arrived at the conclusion that there is not sufficient space, either in the Botanic Garden proper or in what is known as the kitchen garden, to grow vegetables for the "Vernon" ship establishment. In all other respects I adhere to the evidence which I gave when under examination.

10243. And when you did come, your answers were given in a tone different to that of other people? I G. F. Wise, was not aware of it. Esq.
10244. President.] There seemed to be a desire to evade answering the questions? I think that I answered every question I could. The questions in my cross-examination have been such as, in many instances, to render it difficult for me to have given any direct replies. 10 Feb., 1874.
10245. Who's document is this? It belongs to Mr. May.
10246. An officer of the institution of which you are secretary? Yes.
10247. How long has it been out of your possession? It has been off and on in my possession for some time.
10248. When was it last in your possession? Last week.
10249. On what day last was it in your possession? Really I cannot tell you.
10250. On what day last week did you get your notice to produce it? This is dated on the 7th February.
10251. Do you mean to say that you did not get that notice on Saturday? I cannot tell.
10252. To-day is Tuesday—Do you mean to say you cannot tell when you got that notice? I have had so much to do I cannot tell.
10253. Did you get it to-day? I did not.
10254. Did you get it yesterday? I think I did, yesterday morning. Yes, I received it yesterday morning, because on receipt of it I think I immediately wrote to your secretary requesting that my presence might not be required till half-past 4 to-day. I am nearly certain I got the letter at my office yesterday morning. I won't be sure, but that is my impression. If you ask me whether I will again obtain the document, of course I will do so.
10255. Mr. Goold.] Why is there any unwillingness to produce this document? There is no unwillingness on my part to do so.
10256. Mr. Metcalfe.] Well, surely you might produce it then? I have not declined to do so. I did not produce it at my previous examination, although I certainly did refer to it.
10257. Mr. Goold.] If the document is a fair and clear document, there is no reason why it should be kept back. I do not see why it should not be produced without this difficulty? If you say you want the document, of course I will get it. I regret that either you or any Member of the Commission should think—
10258. President.] Before receiving that summons you were written to for that document? Yes, two or three weeks ago, and I think that my reply was just as I now state—that I have not got it; I think such was my reply.
10259. Mr. Metcalfe.] Do you not think that, out of courtesy, you should have endeavoured to get it for us, as you knew where it was; and you did not suppose that the Commission wanted it for any other than a public purpose; they wanted that document to compare with other documents, and I think that this thing should have been produced whenever it was asked for? It was not produced. I regret there should be a misunderstanding with respect to this document.
10260. President.] You were written to and asked about it as long ago as December last? Yes, some weeks ago.
10261. And since then you have received a message about it? Yes; a man called upon me one day—I did not know who he was. My reply to him was that I had already received a letter and sent a reply; that is what I replied to the man—I did not know him.
10262. Mr. Metcalfe.] Perhaps Mr. Wise will get the document for us, and if we have occasion to examine him upon it, shall do so? Yes, I will obtain it, and forward it to you.
10263. President.] We shall be obliged by your sending it as soon as possible? Yes, I will send it as soon as I can.
10264. Do that to-morrow, please? Yes, probably to-morrow or next day.

Barley and corn is grown on the farm, for the cows.
 Permission was granted in April, 1869, to sell off the wood from the farm land, and to apply the proceeds to the ploughing and improvement of the same land.
 The fencing, fruit-trees, manure, and seeds, have all been paid for with the proceeds.

Roman Catholic Orphan Boys', Parramatta.—Regular inspection, 14th May, 1873.

Teacher:—Mr. M. O'Grady, C III., A; married.

Pupil teacher:—Wm. Watters.

Number of pupils enrolled:—112 boys.

Number of pupils present:—105 boys.

1. The schoolroom is too narrow for its length, and the furniture is insufficient, old, and in need of replacing. A urinal is also required in connection with the closets. The supply of books and apparatus is sufficient for the effective working of the school. Since the present teacher took charge, a class roll similar to those in Public Schools has been in use, but there is no Register of Lessons.

2. The pupils are punctual and regular. They are clean, fairly orderly, and attentive, and on the whole respectful in demeanour. The government is mild, but tolerably effective; and the general spirit of the school is fairly pleasing.

3. The subjects are those generally taught in Public Schools under the Council; singing, however, being omitted. There should be no first class in this school, but it is difficult to prevent the necessity for it, on account of the smallness of the

the

the infant school. The lesson documents are tolerably drawn up; the methods are tolerably effective; and the teaching is conducted with industry and tolerable skill. The following are the results of examination in the subjects undermentioned:—

Reading, dictation	Fair.
Writing, object lessons, drawing	Tolerable.
Grammar, arithmetic	Moderate to tolerable.
Geography	Tolerable to fair.
Average proficiency	Slightly exceeding tolerable.

When under examination, the pupils are tolerably self-reliant and accurate in answering. As there is no Register of Lessons, it is difficult to form a correct opinion as to the progress of the pupils since last inspection, or to examine on the work that may have been done since that period. For this reason alone, not to mention others, it is very desirable that there should be the same records in this as in Public Schools under the Council.

4. The teacher is fairly competent, and tolerably skilful. He states that he has been trained and classed III A under the Council. The pupil teacher seems tolerably suitable, but I cannot speak as to his attainments, seeing that he has not been examined under the Council as the Protestant Orphan School pupil teachers have been. Another teacher—an assistant—should be appointed to this department, as the numbers are sufficient to warrant such an appointment, in accordance with the practice of the Council of Education.

5. In conclusion, the material condition needs improvement, as indicated in paragraph 1 of this Report. The discipline is fairly effective, and the instruction is tolerably regulated. The attainments are tolerably satisfactory, the prevailing spirit of the school is fairly pleasing, and the general progress, so far as I can judge, is tolerably satisfactory.

Recommendations.

I would beg to recommend—1. That all the Registers kept in Public Schools (the Fee Book excepted) be furnished to this and the other departments of this institution, and that the teachers be instructed to keep them. 2. That a urinal be attached to the closets, and new furniture provided, the desks to be fixed on raised platforms. 3. That an assistant, trained and classified under the Council of Education, be appointed to this department. 4. That the teachers in this and the other departments be subjected to examination, in accordance with the Regulations framed under the Public Schools Act.

Roman Catholic Orphan Girls', Parramatta.—Regular inspection, 15th May, 1873.

Teacher:—Mary Gertrude Byrne, not examined or classified.

Pupil teacher:—Sarah Jane Price, not examined.

Number of pupils enrolled:—118 girls.

Number of pupils present:—108 girls.

1. The schoolroom is somewhat more suitable than that of the boys', but is also too narrow in proportion to its length. New furniture is also required, and the desks should be placed on platforms similar to those on which one group of desks now stands. A class-roll is kept as in Public Schools, but there are no Registers of Lessons or other necessary school records, although the introduction of them was recommended by my predecessor last year into this and all the other Orphan Schools at Parramatta. The supply of books and apparatus is satisfactory.

2. The regularity and punctuality are good, as might be anticipated in the circumstances. They are very clean, orderly, respectful in demeanour, and fairly attentive. The government is mild, but firm; and the prevailing spirit of the school is very pleasing.

3. Except drawing, which is omitted, the subjects are those ordinarily taught in Public Schools. The classification has the same defect as that of the boys' school, and from the same cause. The time-table is very neatly drawn up, but needs remodelling, and the programmes are only moderately suitable. The methods are fairly intelligent, and the teaching is earnest and industrious. The results of examination are given below in connection with the various subjects taught:—

Reading, object lessons	Tolerable.
Writing, dictation	Fair
Arithmetic, grammar, geography	Moderate to tolerable.
Singing	Very fair.

Average proficiency—Fully tolerable.

The pupils are fairly self-reliant and accurate in answering when undergoing examination. Owing to the non-registration of the work done, a decided opinion cannot be formed as to general progress, on a first inspection.

4. The teacher seems competent and fairly skilful. She is intelligent, earnest, and industrious. Being a member of a religious order, she has not been trained or classified by the Council. The pupil teacher impressed me favourably as to her personal fitness for the office, but I know nothing of her attainments. I am of opinion that an assistant's services are necessary for this school as well as for the boys'.

5. Finally, the material condition is in need of improvement, as stated in the first paragraph; the discipline is mild, but firm; and the instruction is moderately regulated. The attainments are tolerably satisfactory; the spirit of the school is very pleasing; and I am on the whole favourably impressed with the management of this school.

Recommendation.

I would beg to recommend—1. That a set of Public School records (Fee Book excepted) be supplied to the school, and the teachers instructed to keep them. 2. That new furniture be supplied, and that the desks be fixed to raised platforms. 3. That an assistant be appointed as soon as practicable, and that training and classification under the Council of Education be necessary qualifications for the office. 4. That the teachers be subjected to examination as those are who hold office under the Council of Education.

Roman Catholic Orphan Infants', Parramatta.—Regular inspection, 16th May, 1873. •

Teacher :—Mary Nihill, not examined or classified.

Numbers of pupils enrolled :—38 boys; 27 girls; total, 65.

Numbers of pupils present :—38 boys; 25 girls; total, 63.

1. The schoolroom, which is about eighteen feet square, is much too small. In consequence of this, there are numbers of children in the boys' and girls' departments that should be in this, and their effectiveness is lessened through having a first class in each. A schoolroom twice as large is necessary to meet the requirements of the institution, unless indeed the necessity be obviated by the proposed amalgamation of the two Orphan Institutions. In other respects the room is suitable, and is properly furnished and supplied with working materials. A Class-roll is kept, but no other school record.

2. The pupils are very regular and punctual. They are clean, but only moderately orderly and attentive. They are restless and talkative, and it is difficult to fix the attention of the class for a few minutes. The government is far too slack; greater promptness, vigour, and watchfulness are requisite. From the weakness of the disciplinary power, the moral aspect of the school is not of a satisfactory character.

3. The subjects are those usually taught in infant schools. The classification is tolerably suitable. The instruction is only moderately regulated, the methods are defective in intelligence, and the teaching partakes largely of a mechanical or rote character. For instance: the teacher proposing to show me that they knew something of grammar, began thus :—“ What is grammar?” and getting the usual stereotyped book answer, followed it up by—“ Into how many parts is grammar divided?” the answer to which was glibly given by a little urchin who could not possibly have any conception of its meaning, as “ orthography, etymology, syntax, and prosody.” This example will suffice to show the character of the teaching and the practical skill of the mistress as an infant school teacher. The following are the results of examination :—

Reading	Tolerable.
Writing, dictation, arithmetic	Indifferent.
Geography, object lessons	Moderate.
Singing	Tolerable.

Average proficiency, barely moderate.

The pupils, when under examination, are weak in self-reliance, and neither prompt nor accurate in answering. I am of opinion that satisfactory progress will not be made until the government is firmer and more prompt, and the general discipline of a more vigorous and vigilant character.

4. The teacher has neither been examined nor classified under the Council. What training she may have received in connection with the religious order to which she belongs I am unable to say. She exhibits kindness of disposition, but lacks that firmness of character and disciplinary power without which the former is positively injurious to a school. It is necessary that a pupil teacher should be appointed to assist the teacher.

5. To sum up:—A new schoolroom is necessary, the discipline is much too slack, and the instruction is moderately regulated. The attainments are not of a satisfactory character; the moral aspect of the school is only moderately pleasing; and, generally speaking, greater care, energy, and intelligence are requisite in the teaching.

Recommendations.

I would beg to recommend—1. That a new schoolroom be erected as soon as practicable, unless the necessity therefor is obviated by the amalgamation that is to take place. 2. That a pupil teacher be appointed to assist the teacher. 3. That school records similar to those in Public Schools be furnished to the teacher, with instructions to keep them. 4. That the teacher be examined as if in the service of the Council of Education.

[To Evidence of Very Reverend Dr. Sheehy, V.G.]

C.

MINUTE OF THE COLONIAL SECRETARY.

OBJECTION having been offered to an examination of the teachers and children of the Roman Catholic Orphan School at Parramatta, which was duly ordered by the Government, and the Very Reverend Mr. Sheehy having, in a letter of the 4th instant, claimed for a Committee of gentlemen connected with that institution an absolute and final authority in its management, I have caused search to be made in this Office, with the view of ascertaining the origin and powers of any such Committee.

By the first section of the Act 5th William IV No. 3, passed in 1834, the Governor may "authorize and empower any two or more fit and proper persons to bind any of the male or female children" admitted into any Orphan Schools, or any "other poor children as shall from time to time be sent out from any part of the United Kingdom," as apprentices to masters and mistresses approved of by His Excellency.

By the 3rd section of the Act 8 Vic. No. 2, it is provided that any two Magis' rates may apprentice orphan children in the room and stead of parents or guardians; and the sections runs on, as follows :—"In case of any such person receiving eleemosynary support in any public establishment in the said Colony, it shall and may be lawful for the person or persons or any one or more of them who may have the control or inspection of the same to execute such indenture of apprenticeship in the room and stead of the parents of such persons Provided that nothing herein contained shall alter the provisions of any Act now in force and specially provided for such cases."

There does not appear to be any authority in law for the appointment of any Committee of Management; and the positive provision in both the Acts referred to is for apprenticing the children when they arrive at a fit age for apprenticeship. In providing that the power of apprenticeship given to Magistrates may be also exercised by any person or persons who may have the control or inspection of the schools, the Act 8 Vic. No. 2, it is quite clear, simply contemplated that the persons who might be placed in charge by the Government should be competent to exercise this clearly defined power of apprenticing. The Legislature could not intend, and there certainly is no power in the Act, to create Committees of General Management.

Soon after the passing of the Act last referred to, Sir George Gipps wrote the following minute :—"Under the 3rd clause of the 8th Vic. No. 2, it is necessary to appoint some persons to have the control and inspection of the Institution for Destitute Roman Catholic Children, in order that they may have the power of placing them in apprenticeship. Let the following persons be appointed for the purpose :—The Attorney General, the Revd. Dr. Gregory, P. Hill, Esq., Colonial Surgeon." The minute is dated 2nd February, 1845, and was apparently written without a knowledge of the Act 5 William IV No. 3. It will be seen that the same intention of apprenticing runs through the Governor's minute. The persons are not to be appointed to appoint officers or teachers, to decide on methods of instruction, and to expend the sums voted by the Legislature, but in order that they may have the power to apprentice the children. Under the advice of the Crown Law Officers of the day, the persons named are appointed by an instrument under His Excellency's hand; and this instrument, which is settled by Sir William Manning, appoints them "to have control and inspection (in compliance with the Act) of the Orphan School known as the Institution for Destitute Roman Catholic Children"; and it proceeds—"and I hereby authorize and empower them or any two of them to bind and put to be apprentices any children admitted into the said institution when they shall have respectively arrived at fit and proper ages." The notification of these appointments appeared in the Government Gazette, 14th March, 1845, their duties being described in the same terms.

The persons appointed by Sir George Gipps were not appointed as Roman Catholics. One of them, Mr. Patrick Hill, was a Protestant, and all were appointed obviously more from the positions they held than from any other consideration; and they were not appointed a Board or a Committee, but simply to perform certain clearly specified duties. Their places at different times and from different causes became vacant, and others were appointed in the same way, until we come to the appointment of the gentlemen who at present call themselves a Committee of Management.

The instrument appointing the Very Reverend Mr. Sheehy, James Hart, Francis M'Nab, Richard O'Connor, and James Mullens, Esquires, is dated the 17th November, 1862; and in this instrument, the words "to have control and inspection of the Orphan School known as the Institution for Destitute Roman Catholic Children" are omitted expressly on the advice of the Attorney General of the time being. They are appointed solely and exclusively to bind the children as apprentices under the Act 5 William IV. No. 3—no other duty is assigned to them.

The designation of "Committee" has been assumed by these gentlemen and their predecessors without any authority whatever, and they appear to have taken upon themselves the absolute management of the establishment. In their correspondence with the Government, they first call themselves "the Committee," then "the Committee of Management." The Protestant element is soon removed from the "control and inspection" of the Orphan School. In 1859, a Protestant gentleman, Dr. Bassett, of Parramatta, was about to be appointed, on the recommendation of Archbishop Polding himself, on the ground that he would be of service in the sanitary regulation of the institution; but a public meeting of Catholics was held to protest against it, and the Government gave way, and a Catholic gentleman was appointed in his stead. The so-called Committee are now as much masters of the institution as if it were their own property. They appoint the teachers and servants, direct the course of instruction, decide upon all internal arrangements, expend the money voted by Parliament for improvements, employ their own architect and builder. In the course of this uninterrupted "management," they have filled the offices of matron, sub-matron, and female teachers, with ladies of a religious order, built a chapel within the premises, and in fact, converted the Orphan School into a Convent supported from the Public Revenue.

The very Reverend Mr. Sheehy, in his letter of the 4th instant, speaks of the Committee thus self-created, and which does not appear to possess a vestige of power legally conferred, beyond the power to apprentice the children, as a "final authority" in the management of the institution, and he speaks throughout as if the Government had abdicated in its favour.

I do not think this state of things can be suffered to continue,

The gentlemen who, it appears, assume to themselves the absolute and final control over this institution, have been appointed solely for the purpose of apprenticing the children maintained and educated there, and they could not legally have been appointed for any other purpose. The erroneous impression which they have formed of their powers and duties may have arisen from former Governments having tacitly acquiesced in whatever they or their predecessors may have recommended, and so having withdrawn from all practical control over the institution. The refusal of the Matron, at the instance of the gentlemen styling themselves "the Committee of Management," to allow the Government to acquaint itself with the mode in which the school is conducted, has rendered it necessary to have existing misapprehensions removed, and the due subordination of the public servants in this institution recognized and enforced. A refusal by any public servant to recognize the authority of the Responsible Minister in whose Department such servant may be placed, will in all cases lead to the removal of the person so refusing. And this rule must of necessity be applied to the institution in question, in the same way as to any other Public Department. The Government cannot in future permit the gentlemen who have asserted their right to control the institution, to interfere any further beyond their proper and legal functions of apprenticing. In all other matters, the Government will insist upon its right of inspection and control; but in exercising such right, every desire will be manifested to comply as far as possible in all things with the wishes of the head of the religious denomination for the destitute children of which this institution is supported.

Sydney, 15 August, 1870.

Very Rev. Sir,

With reference to your letter of the 27th May last, I am now directed to inform you that the Colonial Secretary approves of the resumption by the Committee of Management of the Roman Catholic Orphan School of the functions to which they were appointed by Governor Sir William Denison and the Executive Council, by notice in the Government Gazette of 29th March, 1859.

2. I am to add, that the commission appointing Trustees to apprentice is quite a distinct matter.

I have &c.,

HENRY HALLORAN.

P.S.—All expenditure of money in repairs or alteration of buildings, or in the erection of new buildings, will remain as at present with the Colonial Architect.

Reverend dear Sir,

The Committee of the Roman Catholic Orphan School have this day apprenticed to of and they venture to beg of your charity that you would, from time to time, as occasion may serve, ascertain that the temporal and spiritual condition of the child is reasonably cared for, according to the conditions of the indentures. Their wish is that both the master and the apprentice should look on you as an adviser and as a friend, in whose impartial reports to the Committee, in case of dissatisfaction on either side, they may have the fullest confidence. I need hardly say that His Grace the Archbishop will regard with great satisfaction the kindly interest with which you may undertake the service he has allowed us thus to solicit from you.

Protestant Orphan Infants—Parramatta. Regular inspection, 8th May, 1873.

Teacher—Miss M. Morrow, Probationer. Assisted by two monitors, who are daily changed.

Numbers of pupils enrolled:—Boys, 63; girls, 0; total, 63.

Numbers of pupils present:—Boys, 59; girls, 0; total, 59.

1. The schoolroom is a good one, but it is not furnished with a suitable gallery, and some desks are needed for the more advanced pupils. There are three broad platforms in lieu of the usual gallery for infant schools. A Class Roll is kept, in which the names are entered monthly, and the lessons are registered as in schools under the supervision of the Council. It is desirable that all the records in public schools should be kept, except the Fee Account Book. The school is well found in books and apparatus, and the general aspect is pleasing.

2. The pupils are regular and punctual; they are clean, tidy, orderly, respectful in demeanour, and fairly attentive. The government is firm, and the prevailing spirit of the school is pleasing.

3. The subjects are those usually prescribed for infant schools. The classification is appropriate: the lesson documents are tolerably drawn up; the methods are fairly suitable; and the teaching is earnest and industrious. The following are the results of examination:—

Reading	Nearly fair
Writing	Fully fair
Dictation	Fair
Arithmetic, geography, object lessons, singing	Tolerable
Average proficiency	Tolerable to fair

The pupils, when under examination, are fairly self-reliant and accurate in answering. The attendance, owing to the removal of nineteen pupils to the boys' school just before my visit, was smaller than usual. It will be observed from the heading of the report that there are no girls in this school. In consequence of this arrangement there is practically another infant school in the girls' department, by which the progress of the more advanced pupils therein is injuriously affected, and there is a considerable waste of teaching power. It appears also that the practice has obtained of carrying on children beyond the usual stage of attainments in infant schools before removing them to the boys' school. This practice should be put a stop to, and the course of instruction usually prescribed for such schools adhered to by the teacher.

4. The teacher has not been examined or classified, but she seems painstaking and anxious to do her best, in the earnest and faithful discharge of her duties. The use of monitors should be discontinued, and the teaching power increased and improved by the appointment of a pupil teacher, as has already been done in the other departments.

5. To sum up:—The material condition is good, except for the want of suitable furniture and a gallery; the discipline is effective, and the instruction is tolerably regulated; the average proficiency is from tolerable to fair; the moral tone is fair; and the general progress appears to be fairly satisfactory.

Recommendations.

I would beg to recommend—1. That the school be furnished with the following Registers, similar to those in Public Schools—One Admission Register, one Class Roll, one Daily Report Book, two Registers of Lessons, one Observation Book. It is desirable that these should be furnished at once, so as to be of use for the next inspection. 2. That the school be furnished with a suitable supply of hat-pegs and desks, and with a gallery. That the girls now constituting the first class in the girls' department be removed to the infants' school. 4. That a pupil teacher be appointed in this, as has already been done in the other departments.

Protestant Orphan Girls, Parramatta.—Regular inspection, 9th May, 1873.

Teacher, Miss Fairbairn, C. III C.

Pupil teacher, Emma Tall, Class IV.

Number of pupils enrolled :—91 girls.

Number of pupils present :—81 girls.

1. The schoolroom is an excellent one, and only requires furniture in keeping therewith to be in every respect satisfactory in its material aspect. A monthly class roll is kept, but no other school register. It is very desirable that similar registers to those in use in schools under the Council should be furnished to this school. It is well found in necessary appliances, and presents an attractive appearance.

2. The pupils are, as might be expected in the circumstances, very regular and punctual; they are clean, orderly, respectful in their demeanour, and fairly attentive. The government is mild, but firm; and the tone of the school is satisfactory on the whole.

3. Drawing is the only subject omitted of those usually taught in Public Schools. The classification is not judicious. There should be no first class in the school, more especially as only three hours are devoted to instruction daily. Those in it should be placed in the infant school, so as to enable the mistress to give greater attention to the more advanced girls. The lesson documents are tolerably suitable, the methods are fairly intelligent, and the teaching is earnest and industrious. The following are the results of examination :—

Reading, dictation, geography, singing	Fair.
Writing, grammar	Tolerable to fair.
Arithmetic	Barely moderate.
Object lessons	Tolerable.

Average proficiency, tolerable to fair.

When under examination the pupils show fair self-reliance and earnestness of application to work. Considering the time given to teaching (three hours per day) the results are tolerably satisfactory, but from the want of school registers it is difficult to judge of the progress made since last inspection.

4. The teacher has been classed III C under the Council. She is painstaking and industrious, but needs greater energy and animation to render her very successful as a teacher. The pupil teacher is steady and attentive to her duties; she is promising as a teacher, and is well spoken of as a sensible, careful girl.

5. To sum up:—The material condition is quite satisfactory, except as regards furniture; the discipline is kindly, but firm; and the instruction is tolerably regulated. The average proficiency is from tolerable to fair, the spirit of the school is pleasing, and the general progress seems to be reasonably satisfactory.

Recommendations.

1. That suitable furniture be provided as soon as practicable.
2. That recommendations 1 and 3 made in connection with the infant school be adopted also with respect to this department.

Protestant Orphan Boys', Parramatta., 13th May, 1873.

Teacher, Mr. J. C. Bravey.—Class III., Sect. B.—Married.

Pupil teacher, David Richardson.—Class III.

Pupil teacher, Wm. Roberts.—Class IV.

Number of pupils enrolled—73 boys.

Number of pupils present—68 boys.

1. The erection of new closets at a greater distance from the building, and the supplying of new and suitable furniture, are both desirable improvements; in other respects the material condition is satisfactory. The school is well found in necessary apparatus and working materials, and the room is large enough to accommodate many more pupils than are in attendance. This remark is also applicable to the girls' schoolroom. A suitable class-room is connected with this department, as with that of the girls. A Monthly Class Roll is kept and a Register of Lessons.

2. The pupils are regular and punctual; they are clean, orderly, respectful, and fairly attentive. The government is firm and sustained, and the prevailing tone of the school is satisfactory. A Drill Master has charge of the boys in the playground and out of school hours.

3. Singing is the only subject omitted from those prescribed in the course of instruction for Public Schools. The classification is appropriate. The lesson documents are fairly drawn up; the methods are fairly intelligent, and the teaching is earnest and industrious.

The following are the results of examination:—

Reading, grammar	Fair to very fair.
Writing, dictation, geography	Fair.
Arithmetic	Moderate.
Object lessons, drawing	Nearly fair.
Average proficiency	Fair.

Considerable self-reliance is shown by the pupils under examination, and their answering is fairly prompt and accurate. Reasonable progress appears to be made, but in the absence of the usual school registers it is difficult to form a decided opinion on the subject.

FOURTH CLASS (called UPPER THIRD).

Teacher—Mr. Bravey.

NAUTICAL SCHOOL SHIP "VERNON."

(Report for the Year ending 30 June, 1872.)

The Superintendent to the Principal Under Secretary.

N.S.S. "Vernon," 16 July, 1872.

Sir,

I have the honor to transmit, for the information of the Honorable the Colonial Secretary, a Report of this Institution for the past year, ending 30th June.

The general health of the boys has been most satisfactory. The last few weeks several unaccountable cases of itch appeared, but prompt and energetic measures were taken to stamp it out, which proved effective, so that at the present moment all are clean and in excellent health. Very many of the boys, when received on board, were crawling with vermin, clad in rags, covered in filth, and altogether in a deplorable woe-begone state, with a vicious, furtive, distrustful expression of countenance. What with a plentiful use of soap and water, clean clothing, regular and wholesome diet, kind but firm treatment, and regular work, in a short time their appearance is so changed and improved that they could scarcely be recognized as the same lads.

One poor boy, when received on board, was so far emaciated and constitutionally broken that, with all the care and attention we could give him, together with the skill of the medical staff of the Sydney Infirmary and nurses, he could not be restored to health, but passed away. This was the only death during the year.

Dr. Evans is now vaccinating all those boys who have not yet been done, to secure them as far as possible from small-pox.

When the weather permitted, on Sunday, all the boys not under punishment were landed and marched to their respective churches, under the charge of officers; but when detained on board through boisterous and wet weather the Church of England Service was read by Mr. Waller or myself to the Protestant boys.

They were also visited during the week by clergymen of the Church of England, Roman Catholic, and Presbyterian persuasions, for imparting religious instruction; the latter denomination only prior to the removal of the ship from her former anchorage. Table 11 contains a record of their visits.

The educational return attached (table 12) gives a general view of their attainments; they have been attentive in school, and made fair progress.

In pulling in boats, trades, and work with the pick and shovel on the island of Cockatoo, they have all made good progress; but in gun drill they have done little, and in seamanship they know little or nothing, since the removal of the ship to this anchorage, as the work required to be done on the island of Cockatoo has been heavy, and fully occupied all our time (with the exception of keeping the ship clean and in order)—in fact some of the labour performed by these small boys on the island has been worthy of record, such as taking out stone, some of which had to be quarried with iron wedges, putting in earth to plant trees, digging the garden over three times before it could be cropped, it previously having been permitted to go to wreck and lay idle—the ground had become so hard that it required to be broken with a pick. All this work was done as expeditiously and as well as it would have been by a gang of ordinary labourers. Now that it is all finished, we will be able to resume the ordinary routine of the institution.

Table 9 will show a list of the articles made on board, and their estimated value.

Admissions during the year have been 60; discharged and apprenticed, 53; discharged to relatives, or otherwise, since the inauguration, 68; to Lunatic Asylum for Idiots and Imbeciles, 2; died, 3; deserted and not caught, 1; apprenticed, 168; number remaining on board, 30th June, 1872, 101; total passed through the books to 30th June, 1872, 343.

Table 10 shows a statement of their conduct, as far as I can obtain a report and trace the career of the boys; some who were apprenticed absconded, and got re-committed to this institution, have been apprenticed again to other masters, and are now doing well.

The master of one of them reports:—"C. W. has conducted himself to my satisfaction during the time he has been with me."

A lady who had two boys reports:—"M. C.'s time expired with me in April last; he is now in respectable service in this neighbourhood, with good wages, and is considered a useful lad. J. S. is now becoming useful in the farm, and conducts himself well; he seems quite happy and contented."

Another person reports of his apprentice:—"C. L. conducts himself in a very proper manner indeed."

Another master says:—"My apprentice has not conducted himself in the most highly satisfactory manner, but would be unwilling to part with him."

A master in Sydney reports:—"W. J., my apprentice, I can certify that he has conducted himself, as long as he has been in my service, in a highly respectable manner; he still is at school in the evenings, and I have every reason to believe that when his time has expired that he will be both a credit to me and himself."

Another writes about his apprentice:—"He has done very well, and is getting quite useful and strong, and I think he will be of great use to me after another year."

Another says:—"The boy has conducted himself to my entire satisfaction."

A gentleman near Sydney reports:—"I have much pleasure in being able to make a favourable report of the conduct of the apprentice from the N.S.S. 'Vernon.'"

A

A gentleman in the Hunter River District writes:—"I think you will be pleased to hear that J. M. has become a valuable servant; it is evidence of the value of the institution of which you have charge; doubtless, many of the boys sent to the 'Vernon,' like him, only require to be removed from evil influences to become, as he has done, a respectable lad and a valuable servant. I believe the reason many fail with the 'Vernon' boys is, their want of tact in their management."

Another writes from the Clarence:—"It affords me the greatest pleasure to be able to inform you that the boy has behaved himself admirably since he came; he appears to be a very willing and obedient boy."

A gentleman who has the name of being a very strict and hard master writes:—"My apprentice has conducted himself, with few exceptions, as well as I could wish, and promises to be a good boy, being both attentive to his Church, as also his learning worldly matters in general."

Another gentleman from another district says:—"My apprentice, J. W., has conducted himself very satisfactorily, and made himself very useful."

Another writes:—"The lad has conducted himself in a proper manner; is willing and obliging. I am much pleased with him, and should be sorry to have to part with him."

Another gentleman in Sydney writes:—"My apprentice, M. O'B., has conducted himself entirely to my satisfaction, and, I must say, his previous training deserves the highest encomium."

These are a few of the characters given out of a number of the same tenor. Some are dissatisfied that they did not get a stronger lad than was sent; but it was impossible to give every one a full-grown lad when the greater number on board were small children.

At present we have fifty applications for apprentices, but it will be quite impossible to supply that number for a long time to come; if we could turn out 200 per annum I believe situations could be readily procured for them.

Some time back several gentlemen made an effort to find employment for the idle boys about Sydney in a Porter and Shoeblock Brigade; however, after losing a great deal of time and money, it was abandoned, and proved a failure, not from the unwillingness of the boys to take employment, but it was found impossible to deal with the boys, on account of the evil and pernicious influence of their parents. For example: If a boy was placed on a station, and earned any money, which they all did, the mother (it was mostly the mothers) came round at regular intervals and got the money from the boy, telling him to give in a shilling or two at night and say that was all he had earned; and if the parent was attempted to be reasoned with, she would tell us that she was not going to have her children degraded by being so low as shoeblocks.

I know that many of these parents sent their children to steal in preference to their permitting them to take a situation or obtain steady work. Two of these same boys have since come to this institution: one has been apprenticed away and is doing well; another we have on board at present, and he is one of the most orderly and well-conducted boys in the ship.

These remarks, I think, will not be quite out of place in a report of the working of this institution; for I wish to point out that an institution of this description is the most successful way of permanently reclaiming the vagrant youths of this Colony, and experience teaches me that the farther they are removed from the influence of their relatives and former companions the better it is for the lads, and the greater the probability of a certain reformation and reclamation to society.

Many of the boys who have been discharged to their friends and relatives I have frequently met, and in several instances they have fallen back into their former disreputable habits and filthy appearance; in some cases the parents have come to me and deplored their action in obtaining the boy's release.

The parents of a boy who was discharged some short time back regretted that the lad had not been apprenticed from this ship instead of given up to them. This boy was walking and lounging about the wharfs of Sydney, until a gentleman was good enough to give him a berth in one of his vessels, at my request, and much to the lad's delight. One boy, who was discharged to his mother, upon the understanding that they were going to quit the Colony, after an interval of fourteen months was committed under another name.

If all the persons who obtained apprentices from this institution took into consideration and made some allowance for the previous habits of the lads, taking a little trouble themselves in looking after their welfare, treating them as human beings, and not entirely handing them over to the tender mercies of their servants, or taunting them with being "Vernonites," we should hear of fewer absconders.

The cost per head is less than it was last year, although the daily average number of boys has been less. Since the ship has been at her present anchorage we have not purchased any vegetables, but grown all that we required on the island of Cockatoo. A copy of the last half-year's report from the gardener is appended.

Everything that is worn by the boys is made on board. By giving credit for the estimated value of articles made, the cost per head will be under £30.

Notwithstanding the uphill work we have had to contend against in endeavouring to conquer the prejudice entertained by a large and influential section of the community against this institution, I think the facts as shown in the tables appended, together with a reference to my prior reports, will bear out my statement that it has proved a success and one of the most useful institutions in the Colony.

I am still of opinion that if the suggestions thrown out in my reports of the 3rd May, 1869, and 29th July, 1870, were permitted to be carried out, the success and usefulness of this institution would be increased largely.

I have, &c.,

The Gardener to The Superintendent, N.S.S. "Vernon."

Cockatoo Island,
26 June, 1872.

Sir,

Since my report in December last, I have been enabled to maintain a steady supply of useful vegetables for the ship. The whole of the gardens are in good order, either fully cropped or in course of rotation, affording a good supply of the most useful vegetables.

The piece of ground formerly held by Mr. Johnston having been handed over to me, I have had it thoroughly cleared and cropped; and, from its sheltered position, is a valuable addition to the grounds.

The gardens referred to by me in my last report as the Magistrate's gardens, after having been thoroughly cleaned and cropped, were handed over to the Magistrate, since which period they have not been under my control.

The peach trees, occupying the ground mentioned as No. 2, or peach orchard, being found useless, have been taken from the centre, giving an additional piece of excellent ground.

At intervals during the past six months a portion of the boys have been engaged preparing holes, round the island, for planting trees; this work they have accomplished in a praiseworthy manner. I have much pleasure in stating that the boys generally are very tractable, obeying my instructions, and working as well as I can expect; they are now understanding the use of the tools, and some of them can use them in a workmanlike manner. I feel much pleasure in teaching them, and spare no pains in my endeavours to make them assiduous; and, I need scarcely add, no effort of mine shall be wanting to carry out your orders and wishes.

I have, &c.,
JAMES DUNCAN,
Gardener.

Present supply of vegetables:—Carrots, onions, turnips, celery, parsley, lettuce, cabbage, cauliflower, parsnips, and pumpkins.—J.D.

[From Government Gazette, 14 January, 1869.]

Colonial Secretary's Office,
Sydney, 13th January, 1869.

THE following regulations for the Nautical School Ship "Vernon," having been made by His Excellency the Governor, with the advice of the Executive Council, are published in accordance with the 3rd clause of the Industrial Schools Act of 1866.

JOHN ROBERTSON.

REGULATIONS FOR THE NAUTICAL SCHOOL SHIP "VERNON."

THE SUPERINTENDENT AND COMMANDER.

Charge of Institution.

1. The Superintendent will have entire charge of the Institution, and be held responsible for all property belonging to the Government; he will visit and inspect every part of the ship daily, and ascertain that the whole is under efficient management and control; he will attend the daily musters, and appoint the boys for work under the various divisions.

Responsible for duties of Officers.

2. He will be held responsible for the proper discharge of all duties to be performed by the various officers of the Institution; and he will be guided, from time to time, by such instructions as he may receive from the Colonial Secretary.

Training.

Training.

3. He will see that the boys are properly instructed by the schoolmaster—that they are taught habits of cleanliness, industry, and diligence; and he will be expected to do everything in his power to encourage, by force of example, moral and pious conduct amongst those entrusted to his care. Those boys who are capable of receiving nautical instruction are to be taught by the Superintendent and Commander, one hour in the winter and two hours in the summer.

Treatment.

4. He will see that the boys are treated with kindness, combined with strict discipline, and check every instance of harsh conduct on the part of the officers or instructors.

Register to be kept.

5. He will keep a Register for recording the name of every boy admitted into the Institution, entering such particulars as can be ascertained respecting age, religion, parentage, &c.; also, how the boys are disposed of on leaving the Institution; and, in case of death, the cause should be stated.

Power to suspend Officers and dismiss Instructors.

6. All complaints made by the officers, instructors, or the boys, must be carefully looked into by the Superintendent, in order that any abuses or infringement of the regulations may be checked and rectified. The Superintendent may suspend any officer for neglect of duty or improper conduct, pending the decision of the Colonial Secretary, and shall have power to hire or discharge any of the instructors not appointed by the Executive authority.

CHIEF OFFICER.

To take charge in absence of Superintendent.

7. The Chief Officer will take charge of the Institution in the absence of the Superintendent, and will see that all orders are punctually and efficiently carried out; he will have to keep watch, and assist the Superintendent to instruct the boys in navigation and seamanship, when required to do so; he will also be held responsible for the issue of Boatswain's stores.

PURSER.

Charge of Stores and Clothing.

8. The Purser will have charge of all stores and clothing, except those placed under the Boatswain, and he will be held accountable for the same before issue. No stores or clothing of any description are to be issued without the orders of the Superintendent. Upon receipt of the provisions from the Contractor, the Purser, with the Steward's assistance, will weigh out the rations, and see that each mess has its fair allowance.

VISITING SURGEON.

To visit at least twice a week.

9. The Visiting Surgeon is to visit the sick at least twice a week, or oftener if required; he is to attend the Institution at any time when he may be sent for by the Superintendent.

Medical Journal.

10. A Medical Journal is to be kept at the Institution, in which he will record all cases of sickness, disease, or death, with any particulars he may deem necessary.

Inspection of boys admitted.

11. He will see every boy that is admitted into the Institution, and examine into the state of his health, in the presence of the Superintendent, and make an entry of the result of such examination in the Medical Journal.

Deaths.

12. In the event of death, he should make an entry in the Medical Journal, specifying the name of the boy, the date, cause of death, with any other particulars he may consider necessary, and report the same to the Superintendent as early as possible.

Medical Comforts.

13. When Medical Comforts are ordered, it will be necessary for him to enter, in an Order Book to be kept for the purpose, the name of the boy for whom they are required, with the quantities of the articles to be supplied; and he will also have to certify to the correctness of the account for the same, on the voucher for the Colonial Treasurer.

SCHOOLMASTER.

Hours of attendance for teaching.

14. The hours for the school instruction will be from 9 o'clock to 12 o'clock noon, and from 1 o'clock to 4 o'clock p.m. The Schoolmaster in charge should be in attendance and have the schoolroom ready for commencing duties punctually at 9 o'clock.

Muster Roll.

15. He will receive the boys from the Commanding Officer at school hours, and see that they are all clean and tidy in person; any who may appear to him not to be so should be sent back; he will then call the Muster Roll, and report to the Superintendent any boys who may be absent.

Prayers.

16. Prayers are to be read to the boys at divisions every morning by the Schoolmaster.

Monitors.

17. As many Monitors as the Schoolmaster may consider necessary may be selected by him as Assistants in the School, to whom he will give one hour's additional instruction, between 4 o'clock and 5 o'clock p.m.

CARPENTER.

Instruction to Carpenter.

18. The Carpenter to work at his own trade, and to instruct the boys who may be told off as carpenters during the day; he will also have to take charge of a night-watch.

MASTER-AT-ARMS.

Responsible for Cleanliness of Boys—Escape of Boys from Lower Deck.

19. The Master-at-Arms to have charge of the lower deck, and to be responsible for the order and cleanliness of the same; he should see that the boys properly wash themselves, and that their clothes are clean and tidy. Every morning he will have to muster and inspect the boys before divisions with the Chief Officer, and to report when all are present; he will be held responsible for the escape of any boys from off the lower deck, and will also have to perform the duties of Gunner.

BOATSWAIN'S MATES.

Watches.—Boatswain's Stores.

20. The Boatswain's Mates have to perform their duties under the Commanding Officer, and to keep watches when required; they will have to instruct boys in seamanship and boats; the senior Boatswain's Mate to have charge of Boatswain's Stores, which are not to be issued without the orders of the Commanding Officer.

WARDERS.

Watch on Lower Deck.—Washing at Divisions.—Care of Bags, Clothes, &c.

21. The Warders or Seamen Instructors to keep watch on the lower deck both by day and by night, under the immediate orders of the Master-at-Arms; one to attend the boys when washing, at divisions, and inspection; they are to see that all bags are properly stowed away, the boys' clothes in order, and the decks kept clean. Clothes are not to be left on the lower deck, nor allowed to hang between decks. Mess-traps, tables, stools, &c., must be kept clean and in good order. The Warders will also have to instruct the boys when required to do so.

QUARTERMASTERS.

Watch, upper deck.—Boats to be kept off.—To report boats approaching.

22. The Quartermasters or Seamen Instructors to keep watch on the upper deck both day and night, to instruct in seamanship and boats; when on the watch to keep off all boats from alongside, unless they have business with the ship; to see that boys do not go over the side, unless by orders; to report all boats approaching the vessel to the Commanding Officer; at night all boats to be hailed and warned off, unless they have an order on duty.

BARBER.

Hair to be cut once a month.—Charge of Bath-room.

23. The Barber to perform both Bugler and Barber's duties, to attend the boys with the Warder when they are washing. Each boy's head to be examined once a month, and his hair cut. He will also take charge of the bath-room, and see that it is kept clean and in proper order.

STEWARD AND COOK.

Boys to be instructed.

24. The Steward and Cook to perform their own duties, and instruct such boys as may be placed under them in their art.

TAILOR AND SHOEMAKER.

Trade instruction.

25. The Tailor and the Shoemaker will have to instruct any boys who may be told off to them in their trades, and will have to take charge of them whilst at work.

GENERAL RULES.

Caution to Officers.

26. Every Officer must bear himself in such a manner before the boys as not to set a bad example by either word or deed; and not only any offence such as drunkenness will be visited with instant dismissal, but such dismissal will follow from ascertained unsuitableness without any special bad conduct.

Book for Visitors.

27. A Visitor's Book will be kept, in which all ladies and gentlemen who visit and inspect the Institution must be courteously requested to enter their names, with the date of visit, and any remarks they may think proper to make.

Strangers to explain relationship to boys when visiting—Warders to be present during interviews with boys.

28. Strangers wishing to visit any of the boys must explain to the Superintendent, or, in his absence, to the officer in charge, their relationship to the boy whom they desire to see, the object of their visit, and any other particulars that the Superintendent may desire to know; and either the Master-at-Arms or Warder must be present during the interview of any such stranger with a boy.

Relatives to enter names in book.

29. The relatives and friends of the boys will be required, on every occasion of a visit, to enter their names in a separate book kept for that purpose.

Boys permitted on shore.

30. Any boy who has proved himself to the satisfaction of the Superintendent to be trustworthy, may be permitted to go on errands on shore.

Boys permitted to attend Divine Worship on shore.

31. Any number of the boys whom the Superintendent has reason to believe may be so trusted, will be permitted to attend Divine Worship on shore, on such occasions and under the charge of such officers as the Superintendent may approve.

Prayers to be read by Schoolmaster in absence of Clergyman.

32. The Officers, Instructors, and boys must attend Divine Worship every Sunday on board the ship. If no Clergyman is in attendance, prayers must be read by the Schoolmaster.

PUNISHMENT.

Punishment to be awarded by the Superintendent.

33. No Officer or Instructor will be allowed to punish any boy summarily, but the names of such boys as may misconduct themselves must be sent in, with the nature of offence, to the Superintendent, who may award such punishment, hereinafter named, as he may consider sufficient.

Punishments to be awarded in presence of Ship's Company.

34. All punishments shall be administered at divisions after prayers, every morning (Sundays excepted), when the whole of the boys and Ship's Company are present.

Mode of Punishment.

35. The mode of punishment to be, black list, mast-head, meals by themselves, loss of dinner, cells during play-hours, cells with bread and water.

Restriction to punishment.

36. Corporal punishment not to exceed six cuts with the cane on the hand. For stealing, immoral conduct, and malversation, the boy to be placed over a gun, and punished with a plain leather strap, but no more than twenty stripes shall be given for any offence. This last mode of punishment is only to be resorted to when all other chastisements have failed to have effect upon the conduct of any boy, or in cases of very gross breach of discipline.

CLOTHING

CLOTHING BOYS.

37. As soon as a boy has been entered, he is to be sent to the Barber to have his hair cut and his head examined; he is then to have a warm bath and be turned over to the Boatswain in charge, who will supply him with a hammock, bag, clews and lashing, a bed, blanket, and bed-cover, which are to be legibly marked before being issued.

38. As soon as the clothes are received, an Instructor, told off for the purpose, is to take them to be marked and issued, and he is to see the boy place them in his bag. No further supply of clothes is to be issued without the sanction of the Commanding Officer.

39. The following articles of clothing are to be supplied to each boy during the year:—

- | | |
|-----------------------------|------------------------|
| 2 pairs blue cloth trousers | 1 hat (cabbage-tree) |
| 2 do. drill do. | 1 ribbon with name |
| 1 pair canvas trousers | 1 neckerchief |
| 1 canvas jumper | 1 knife and lanyard |
| 2 blue serge frocks | 1 rug |
| 2 blue drill do. | 1 blanket |
| 2 flannel shirts | Needles and thread |
| 2 pairs socks | 2 combs |
| 2 pairs boots | 2 towels |
| 1 comforter | 1 scrubbing-brush |
| 2 caps | 2 pocket handkerchiefs |

1 clothes-brush, with blacking brushes and blacking for every mess of twelve boys.

MESSING.

40. Two boys are to be told off as Captains to each mess; they are to wear a distinctive badge, and to be selected with great care; they should be boys of good character and of good disposition; they are to be held responsible for the good order of their messes, and to portion out the food to each boy. At 11:30 a.m., one Cook is to lay out the table with the mess traps, &c., and one is to go to the coppers for the meat, &c.; this is to be divided, and a portion put into each plate by the Captain of the mess, under the superintendence of the Seamen Instructors and Master-at-Arms. The boys are to be ranged outside of the stools, standing. When the dinner has been portioned out, it is to be inspected by the Chief or other Officer; the senior boys of each mess are then to say grace, the boys are to take their places, and to dine with their caps off. If on inspection it is found that any boy has an undue proportion of bone, the senior boy should be made to exchange dinners with the one that has an unfair share given him. By this means this selfish practice will be easily corrected.

Apprenticeship.

41. Each boy upon being apprenticed, or otherwise discharged from the ship, will receive a certificate of service signed by the Superintendent and Commander, of the following form:—

No. CERTIFICATE of Service on board the Nautical School-ship "Vernon."

Name.	No.	Entry.	Discharge.	Conduct.	Abilities.		Trade.
					Seamanship.	Gunnery.

Captain's signature.

42. Each boy, upon being apprenticed to the sea, is to be supplied with the following outfit:—

Changing Divisions.

44. Every Friday afternoon a different division to be sent to school, so that each boy will receive the same number of hours' schooling during the month.

Idle Boys.

45. Idle and inattentive boys who will not learn, but play, will be kept in to study during their play hours, till they give signs of progress.

Boys not to be called out of School.

46. Boys are not to be called out of school, under any circumstances, without the permission of the Superintendent.

Books

Books to be kept posted up.

47. The following books are to be kept posted up by the Schoolmaster, and ready for inspection at any moment, viz.:—Register of Average Attendance at School, School Routine, Progress Book, School Record Book, and Quarterly Examinations.

INSTRUCTION IN SEAMANSHIP.

Classes.

48. The boys are to be arranged in classes, and a system devised by which a boy will be gradually passed out of one class to a higher one, a register of which is to be kept by the Instructors.

FIRST INSTRUCTION.

Drilling.

49. The names of all the masts and yards, decks, &c., and drilling at the monkey topsail yard on the gangway; also learning to pull in a boat.

SECOND INSTRUCTION.

Sailor's work.

50.	Reef knot Bowling knot Bowline on bight Running bowline Clove hitch Timber hitch Blackwall hitch Two half hitches Bowling hitch	Bend studding sail haulyards Cat's-paw Sheep-shank Carrick bend Bend hawsers Sling a cask Inside clench Outside clench Clap on siggers and stoppers
-----	---	---

For this instruction, a jackstay is to be stretched along, and set up; at intervals of three feet, pieces of rope, one fathom long, are spliced in it; each boy in the class will hold one of these in his hand, and wait the orders of the Instructor, who is to give directions which knot or bend is to be made; and when it is finished, each boy will wait until the Instructor comes round to examine the work and to explain its uses.

THIRD INSTRUCTION.

Splicing, pointing, &c.

51.	Long splice Short splice Eye splice Matthew Walker knot Stopper knot To make a grummet To make a Turk's head To make a point To make a gasket Shroud knot	To make a clue Worming Parcelling Serving Strapping blocks Turning in dead eyes Reeving a lanyard Rattling down rigging To point ropes To pass an earing
-----	--	---

FOURTH INSTRUCTION.

Naming Rigging, &c.

52. The boys are to learn the names of all the running rigging and blocks, to set up rigging, as also to use the palm and needle. Each boy is to be able to sew a seam and work an eyelet hole well.

Instruction not to be continued too long.

53. The foregoing should be varied with the gunnery instruction. No boys should be kept long at any instruction, otherwise they will get tired and weary, therefore the seamanship instructions are to be alternated with the gunnery classes. The hours for changing the instructions are to be 10:15 A.M. and 2:15 P.M.

Pulling in boats.

54. Two boats are daily to be sent with the boys that are in the first instruction, to learn to pull; and on Wednesday afternoon and Thursday forenoon the watch not at school are to man all the boats, and to go away for the purpose of boat exercise, viz.:—Under sail, to practice getting up and down masts, making and shortening sail, tacking, wearing, reefing, steering by compass, attending sheets, haulyards, &c.

TRADES.

Boys to be told off to Trades.

55. One division of boys is to be told off to trades at 9 o'clock A.M. and 1 o'clock P.M.; all trades-boys to be sent to their respective trades after divisions, at 4 o'clock P.M. until 6 o'clock P.M.

GUNNERY.

Exercise with Guns, and Powder and Shot.

56. Boys to be taught the first, second, and third instructions of gun drill with detail, manning both sides, and hand-spike drill, also cutlass and rifle drills. Occasionally to be exercised with powder, that they may be accustomed to its use, and when practicable to be exercised with shot; they are also to be taught to aim at a movable target; a boat pulling abreast of the ship to be used for that purpose.

SUMMER ROUTINE.

Rules to be observed by the Seamen Instructors and boys of the Nautical School Ship "Vernon."

- 1.—Instructors are expected on all occasions to show an example of cheerfulness and willing obedience in executing their several duties ; they are not only to abstain from using violent or harsh language themselves, but they are uniformly to discourage all improper conduct in others.
- 2.—The Instructors in their several stations are expected to report all skulking characters, and to point out all those who, by activity and good conduct, deserve encouragement.
- 3.—Nothing whatever is to be taken in at, or thrown out of, the ports, nor are any clothes to be hung about the chains, head, rigging, or in the messes between decks.
- 4.—When any duty is being carried on, the strictest silence is to be kept.
- 5.—All complaints are to be made on the quarter-deck to the Commanding Officer, in order that they may be communicated to the Commander.
- 6.—It is the duty of every boy to report all skulkers and lazy characters, in order that they may be made to do their share of the work.
- 7.—It is the duty of every boy to detect a thief, as a common enemy to all on board ; and any boy screening or holding communication with a thief will be considered as equally bad in character, and will not be allowed to mess with the other boys. No article can ever be lost on board, therefore everything found is to be taken to the ship's Corporal for its proper owner.
- 8.—All quarrelling and fighting will be severely punished, and on no account are cards, dice, or gambling of any sort, to be allowed in any part of the ship.
- 9.—If any boy should disobey the orders of his Instructor, or Captain of Mess, he will be punished.
- 10.—Selling or exchanging clothes, and all trafficking, is strictly forbidden, and will be punished by the forfeiture, on both sides, of the articles so sold or exchanged, and further as may be deemed necessary.
- 11.—The boys are to be mustered at divisions, according to the instructions to which they belong. The Warrant Officers in charge of the boys, assisted by their Instructors, will be responsible for the progress they make in their instructions ; they will take care never to allow them to appear otherwise than clean in their skin and orderly in their clothes.
- 12.—All are expected to feel a proper pride in their ship, and to merit encouragement by showing activity and a cheerful spirit in the performance of their several duties.

Nautical School Ship "Vernon"—Letter from Superintendent, relative to future management of.

N. S. S. "Vernon,"
 3 May, 1869.

Sir,

I do myself the honor to draw your attention to the following suggestion in reference to the future management of the N. S. S. "Vernon," with the view of carrying out in the most effective manner the objects for which she was intended ; and by the same means, to provide for the establishment of a Reformatory under the same management, viz. :—

1. To remove the "Vernon" from her present moorings, and moor her in Middle Harbour above the spit abreast the Government Reserve or lands not yet disposed of by sale, and made a receiving-ship for all male juvenile delinquents.

The

The reserve to be enclosed in with a high, close fence; working parties to be told off daily to erect substantial workshops and sheds for trades—such as shipwrights, carpenters, boatbuilders, blacksmiths, shoemakers, tailors, baking, quarrying &c.; large tanks could be quarried out of the rock to hold a quantity of water, and the rest of the ground laid out as a farm; cows could be kept to produce sufficient milk for the establishment and to make butter for the market.

2. For the efficient training of seamen, to purchase a small vessel, either a schooner or brig, as a tender to the "Vernon," of about 100 tons—a good weatherly craft—which I think could be obtained ready for sea for about £800. This vessel could go to sea when wanted for exercise, or could be made use of in going either to the Islands, or a cruise along the coast, or visits to light-houses, or any special Government service, and to be entirely worked by the boys from the receiving-ship "Vernon." The boys would thus become really practical sailors.

The shore-working party could be conducted as nearly as possible on the Red Hill Farm system, or Mettray, as would be found from experience the best adapted to the juveniles of this Colony. A Reformatory, Industrial School, and Training Vessel for Seamen, would thus be all under the one superintendence, and be an easy distance from Sydney, where the head of the department could inspect at any moment required; and being under one superintendence and staff, the expense would be much less than by separate establishments. From this depôt the whole Colony could be supplied with trained artisans, agriculturists, servants, and seamen.

The expense of adopting these suggestions would not be attended with any material increase of the present estimate for this institution. The boys who are on board the "Vernon" have now acquired such habits of industry that all the manual labour required could be furnished from the decks of this vessel, and it would be only necessary to engage the services of one or two skilled persons to direct their energies in certain special departments.

With reference to that portion of paragraph 1 where it is recommended that the vessel should be "made a receiving-ship for all male juvenile delinquents," and which has been objected to on the grounds that it is not advisable that juveniles who had been convicted of offences should be mixed with those who have committed no fault,—I beg to remark that the objection would be obviated by the ground on which I propose to locate the boys being divided by a close fence, of such a nature as would effectively prevent any communication between the two classes; or, if it suited the view of the Government, the ship could be used for the accommodation of one class, and the others could be quartered on shore. But I would observe that it may be worthy of consideration that, after sufficient accommodation had been provided on shore, whether it would not be advisable to exchange the "Vernon"—which, even if she was a new ship, would, from her size, be always a source of great annual expense for repairs, &c.—for a small craft, on board of which the boys could be taught with equal facility the theory of navigation, and would at the same time have the advantage of acquiring the knowledge of practical seamanship.

Since I have made the suggestions which I now take the liberty of specially directing your attention to, I have visited the locality referred to in them, and also other parts of Middle Harbour, and I am more than ever impressed with the advisability of the plan I propose. The Government Reserve in Long Bay, of which I enclose a chart, is easily isolated, abundantly supplied with a never-failing spring of water, and includes a sufficient quantity of soil well-suited for gardening purposes. There are also suitable places for workshops, dormitories, &c., and is at the same time easily accessible from Sydney, not being at a greater distance than half an hour's drive from Milson's Point.

But if the Government have any ulterior views in respect to the Dock Reserve which would be incompatible with its occupation as a Reformatory or Industrial School, I would point out that there is abundance of land in Middle Harbour which has not yet been disposed of, which would be well suitable for the purpose under consideration.

In conclusion, I would urge upon your consideration that, by the adoption of these measures, that not only would the institution be made to carry out to the fullest extent the object for which it was established, but there would ultimately be a very considerable reduction in the annual expenditure.

I have, &c.,
J. S. V. MEIN.

J 1.

Nautical School Ship "Vernon." General inspection, 22nd July, 1872.

Teacher, Mr. E. M. Waller.

Number of pupils enrolled—97.

Number of pupils present—95.

The school is conducted in a portion of the between decks. The room is 32 feet by 30 feet, and is fairly lighted and ventilated.

The furniture consists of four tables with the necessary seats, a set of book-shelves and a teacher's desk. Owing to its unsuitability, the pupils cannot be grouped properly for purposes of teaching. The apparatus comprises a globe, a map of the World, a map of Australia, a map of New South Wales, a map of Asia, a map of Europe, an Abacus and a black-board. There are no diagrams of any kind. The books are insufficient in quantity and in a tattered condition—due care is not taken to preserve them. No distinct school records are kept. The occupations of the boys, both scholastic and industrial, are regulated by the subjoined time, which shows what division is in school, and by inference what divisions are at work.

Days.	A.M.	P.M.
Monday	1st division, starboard	1st division, port.
Tuesday	2nd division, starboard	2nd division, port.
Wednesday	Sail drill	1st division, starboard.
Thursday	1st division, port	2nd division, starboard.
Friday	1st division, starboard	2nd division, port.
Saturday	No school—clean ship.

It will thus be seen that the school is taught in four divisions; in other words, that four distinct schools are held in rotation. The result of this arrangement is that each boy receives about six hours' instruction per week. This, in our opinion, is altogether insufficient. To derive reasonable advantages from the school, the whole of the boys should be taught in two divisions, and the school conducted on the half-time system. The boys are subdued in demeanour, respectful and fairly behaved. Tolerable order is maintained; restlessness and talking prevail to some extent, and the various movements are loosely performed. Drill is not practised. The government is tolerably firm without being harsh, and the moral character of the school may be regarded as moderately satisfactory.

The course of instruction includes reading, writing, arithmetic, grammar, and geography. It is regulated by a timetable of indifferent merit. The amount of time devoted to each subject is not specified, but grammar and geography would seem to receive very little attention, no intelligible classification has been made, individual rather than collective teaching being practised. The methods are mechanical and worthless—learning by rote is their characteristic feature. The results disclosed by the examination are,—

Reading	Moderate.
Writing	Moderate.
Arithmetic	Very small.
Grammar	Very small.
Geography	Failure.

The pupils are attentive under examination, but evince a want of self-reliance, think slowly, and answer only after repeated questioning. Considering their ages, the attainments are exceedingly small. Most of the information possessed by the pupils was obtained at other schools.

The

The teacher was formerly Purser and Chief Mate, and he still continues to discharge the duties of those offices. He knows very little about teaching. He informed us that he was made schoolmaster by the late Government, much against his inclination. A properly qualified teacher, who should also be young, earnest, and energetic, is badly needed. The present management of the school is a failure, and its condition most unsatisfactory.

We beg to recommend,—

1. That a competent teacher be appointed.
2. That the school be taught in two watches, on the half-time system.
3. That suitable desks, a supply of diagrams, and additional school books be provided.

Teacher, Mr. W. Plummer, Class III B.

Number of pupils enrolled:—107 boys.

Number of pupils present:—102 boys.

The organization of this school was described with tolerable fulness in our report, No. 42, dated 23rd July last. There is little new under this head to record. The want of suitable furniture and apparatus is still felt, as well as an insufficiency of reading books. It is right to state, however, that proper school records are now kept.

The same routine is observed in connection with the school as was explained in our former report. A quadruple division is made for purposes of teaching, the result of which is that each boy receives instruction on two half-days of each week. That this amount of instruction is utterly insufficient to secure proper educational progress may be gathered from one fact alone, namely, the startling preponderance of boys, whose ages range in many instances between fourteen and seventeen years, in the first or lowest class. Out of 102 pupils in attendance, three only were able to read easy narrative, and these had been pupils in the fourth or third classes of one or other of our leading public schools. The number of pupils who have been promoted since the school has been in operation could not be ascertained, but there is reason to believe that they are very few.

In school the boys exhibit a quiet and respectful demeanour and are fairly behaved. Out of school they are boisterous and somewhat rough. Drill is either not taught or not understood. It is certainly not practised. The government is tolerably firm, but only partially effective. This latter result may arise from the fact that the teacher is relieved from all control over the boys out of school.

The course of instruction comprises reading, writing, dictation, arithmetic, grammar, geography, and object lessons. This course is sufficiently comprehensive, considering the limited time devoted to each boy's education. The teaching is regulated by a time-table and by a quarterly programme of work, drawn up for each class. The methods are modern, and are applied with diligence and earnestness.

The following are the results of the examination:—

Reading, writing, dictation	Tolerable.
Arithmetic, grammar, geography, object lessons	Moderate.

The absolute proficiency cannot be rated higher than indifferent.

The pupils are fairly attentive under examination, and tolerably self-reliant, but evince only moderate intelligence.

The teacher, who has just been appointed, seems anxious to give satisfaction; he has been trained under the Council for his office.

We regret to have to state that our opinion of the usefulness of the school in an educational point of view is extremely low, nor can we hope for better results until the organization has been placed upon a more satisfactory basis.

Recommendations.

We beg to repeat the recommendations made in connection with our former report.

Nautical School Ship "Vernon."—Visited, 27th March, 1873.

Proficiency of the pupils:—

FIRST CLASS.

Number present at examination, 86 boys. Average age, 11 years 3 months.

Reading.—Thirty-six pupils evinced a fair knowledge of the alphabet; twenty read lessons 1 and 2 of the 3rd section of the First Book, "Irish National Board," with moderate ability; thirty were able to read very fairly lessons 1 and 2 of the 1st section of Second Book, I. N. B. These latter pupils were able to spell moderately well, and they evinced a moderate acquaintance with what they read.

Writing.—Copies on slates.—Fifty-six pupils were able to write with fair ability such copies as "ga," "sat." The remaining thirty wrote "same" fairly. Dictation.—The same thirty pupils had the following sentence read slowly to them, and eight of them were able to spell the words correctly:—"How wise and great he must be."

Arithmetic.—The lower division of the class i.e., fifty-six, were tested by mental questions in addition. They were able to work fairly by addends of two and three. Ten of them were able to work the following on slates:—

The upper division (thirty) had the following tests:—Notation— $301 + 13 + 29 + 111 + 8$. Eleven were able to do such Slate addition—4 places, 5 lines. Twelve of the thirty were correct.

Object Lessons have been professedly taught to this class, but the results are valueless.

Summary.

When under examination, these children were very fairly attentive, and they evinced tolerable mental effort. Their minds have been but indifferently cultivated; their general proficiency is of moderate worth only.

SECOND CLASS.

Number of pupils present, 13. Average age, $12\frac{1}{2}$ years.

Reading.—From Second Book, I. N. B., page 15. The enunciation was very fair. The class was able to spell satisfactorily. A fair acquaintance with the meaning of words occurring in the passages read, and a very fair knowledge of the whole subject, were shown.

Writing in copy-books (mixed hands). This was fairly satisfactory.

Dictation.—A paragraph from the lesson read was given. Both the writing and the spelling were very fair.

Arithmetic.—In notation to 5 places, 5 lines, five of thirteen were correct. In addition, 5 places, 6 lines, six of thirteen were correct. Four of thirteen were able to solve the following questions correctly:—

$$6859736 \times 47$$

Grammar.—The class showed a fair acquaintance with the ordinary definitions, and was able to distinguish the "parts of speech" in a sentence with tolerable ability.

Geography.—The class was tested upon the "uses of a map" and upon the ordinary definitions. They did tolerably well.

Object Lessons.—The subjects selected were "Glass" and "A Book." The knowledge was of moderate worth only.

Summary.

Under examination, the children were very fairly attentive. They showed fair effort to answer, and the results of the examination showed that their mental culture and general proficiency were alike tolerable.

THIRD CLASS.

Number present, 3. Average age, $14\frac{1}{2}$ years.

Reading.—From Third Book, I. N. B., page 12, lesson iii. Both the enunciation and the spelling were very fair. A fair acquaintance with the meaning of words and of the subject read was evinced.

Writing.—Copy-books (mixed hands). Fair.

Dictation.—The writing was tolerable. The spelling very fair, and the punctuation tolerable.

Arithmetic.—The following tests were given: 1. Find the difference between $1\frac{1}{2}$ ton and 15 cwt 4 ozs. 2. Divide £2,61⁰ 17s. 3⁴d. equally among 79 persons. 3. Express 1,000 half-guineas, 1,000 half-crowns, and 1,000 pence, in half-sovereigns. The three were correct in the two first sums, and two in the third question.

Grammar.—The three boys showed a tolerable acquaintance with accidence and parsing, but their ability to analyze sentences was small.

Geography.—They showed a moderate acquaintance with the ordinary definitions, and a similar readiness to illustrate such with examples.

Object Lessons.—Subject chosen "A book." Their knowledge was moderately satisfactory.

Summary.

The attention shown when under test was good, and the mental effort very fair. The results of the examination showed that the pupils of the class had received a tolerable amount of mental culture, and that their general proficiency was also of tolerable worth.

BOARDING OUT NEGLECTED CHILDREN.

THE Government having decided to test the system of boarding out children from the Industrial Schools, hereby invite the co-operation of ladies in giving effect to the proposed scheme,—such success as has attended the adoption of the plan in other Countries having been mainly due to the ladies' committees. The following are the Conditions and Regulations under which children will be boarded out:—

Conditions.

A. No child will be boarded out in any district until a ladies' committee or association of not less than three persons has been formed, and has undertaken to find homes for children, and to superintend such homes while children are boarded therein. Applications will only be dealt with when recommended by the Committee.

B. No person deriving, directly or indirectly, any pecuniary or other personal profit from the boarding-out of any child shall be a member of such Committee.

C. Every boarded-out child shall be visited not less often than once in every six weeks, at the home of the foster-parents, by a member of the committee, and the visitor shall thereupon make a report in writing to the committee stating the apparent bodily condition and the behaviour of such child, and all reasonable complaints made by or concerning the child against or by the foster-parents. These reports shall be forwarded by the committee quarterly to the Inspector of Industrial and Reformatory Schools.

D. If in the case of any boarded-out child no such report as that specified in the last preceding clause shall be received by the Inspector for the space of four consecutive months, he (the Inspector) may, after giving fourteen days' notice in writing to the committee and the foster-parent with whom such child is placed, remove the child.

E. The committee will exercise general supervision over the children and the persons they are placed with, advising them as may seem necessary; and, in cases requiring prompt action, such as the removal of a child from one home to another, &c., they will be authorized to effect such removal, but will require to report the same at once to the Inspector of Industrial and Reformatory Schools for such further action to be taken as may be necessary.

F. Accounts will be paid to foster-parents upon the certificate of and through the ladies' committee.

G. Every committee will require to appoint one of its number to act as correspondent, and to certify accounts.

Regulations.

1. Applicants (hereinafter called the foster-parents) for children under these Regulations must be females of good moral character, good health, not over fifty-five years of age, and if married, their husbands must be of the same religious persuasion as themselves. They must not be in receipt of assistance from any benevolent asylum or charitable institution or society, hospital excepted.

2. Applications for children must be sent in to the ladies' committee, and must be accompanied by the certificate of a clergyman of the church attended by the applicant and her family, as to the moral fitness of herself, and, if married, her husband, to be entrusted with the training of children.

3. Every applicant having children within the school ages specified in the Education Act must show that they are attending school in accordance with the requirements of that Act, or give a satisfactory reason for their being detained therefrom.

4. The family of a foster-parent must not at any time consist of more than six (6), including the children boarded from the Government, but exclusive of herself, and, if married, her husband. No more than four (4) children—except in the case of families of more than four (4)—may be placed with one foster-parent.

5. No males above the age of twelve (12) years may at any time form portion of a family in which female children over eight (8) years of age are boarded, except in the cases of brothers and sisters.

6. The residence of a foster-parent must not be more than two (2) miles from a State school, five (5) miles from the residence of a medical practitioner or hospital, or five (5) from the residence of some member of committee. The accommodation provided must be sufficient, and suitable, and separate sleeping-rooms must be provided for male and female children when above the age of seven (7) years. Children above seven (7) years may not sleep in the same room with married people.

7. No boarders or lodgers (children or adults) other than the children boarded for the Government, may be received by foster-parents, nor may a foster-parent or her husband be the holder of any license for the sale of fermented or spirituous liquors, or any member of her family hold such license for premises situated within three (3) miles of her residence.

8. The family, including the children boarded, must all attend the same place of worship. Protestant children may only be placed with Protestant foster-parents, and Catholics with Catholics; other creeds to be dealt with in a similar manner.

9. The children must be properly fed, and kept decently clothed by the foster-parents with sufficient and seasonable clothing; the supply at all times to be complete to the extent shown in the schedule hereto. Clothing to remain the property of the children, and to be at all times clean and in good repair.

10. The children will be visited from time to time by some member of committee, who, as well as the Inspector of Industrial and Reformatory Schools, or any one appointed on his behalf, shall have free access to them within reasonable hours. The certificate of the committee approving of the treatment of the children must be forwarded to the Inspector with the account for payment.

11. Should a child meet with an accident, or become ill, it must be taken without delay to the medical officer hereinafter mentioned, or, if it be not practicable to take the child, the medical officer must be called in to attend to it, under such regulations as regards charges as may from time to time be made.

12. No child boarded out may be placed at service, or hired out to any kind of employment, except by the written direction of the Inspector of Industrial and Reformatory Schools.

13. The children must be sent to and attend school regularly, in accordance with the Education Act, unless the Inspector of Industrial and Reformatory Schools, on the written recommendation of the committee or the medical officer, authorizes in writing their non-attendance.

14. The foster-parents will be expected to attend to the moral and religious training of the children, who must, when of a suitable age, be sent regularly to a place of worship and to Sunday-school; and clergymen of the denomination to which they belong must also be allowed every reasonable facility for imparting to them religious instruction.

15. Should a child meet with an accident, become seriously ill, die, or run away, information must be at once given to the committee, for report to the Inspector.

16. Children received under these Regulations may not be transferred by foster-parents, or placed permanently under the care of any other person, without the consent in writing of the Inspector of Industrial and Reformatory Schools; but the committee have power in any case which they consider urgent to remove children from foster parents in anticipation of the directions of the Inspector. Foster-parents may not change their residence without giving two (2) weeks' notice of the proposed change to the committee, for report to the Inspector.

17. Payments will be made for the children at the rate of twelve (12) shillings per week for each child up to the age of one (1) year, seven (7) shillings per week up to the age of seven (7) years, six (6) shillings per week to the age of ten (10) years, and four (4) shillings per week to the age of twelve (12) years. Payment to cease in the case of children who have attained the age of twelve (12) years, when they can either be returned to the school or retained without payment, as may be agreed on. If retained after reaching the age of thirteen (13) years, it will then be under the licensing regulations of the department. Should the Government decide to reduce the rates of pay, three (3) months' notice will be given to the foster-parents.

18. Deductions may be made from the monthly accounts, at the discretion of the Inspector, for any neglect or improper treatment of the children.

19. A medical officer will be appointed for every district in which children are boarded out. His duty will be to visit the children not less than once in every three (3) months, and to attend to them in illness or in case of accident, either at the residence of the foster-parent or his own residence or surgery, as may be necessary, and to supply all requisite medicines and medical appliances. He will be required to report any deficiency of accommodation, any defects in the sanitary condition of the residence, insufficient supply of food or clothing, or absence of cleanliness, and generally any ill treatment of the children or cause for complaint that may come under his notice.

20. An allowance for such attendance and supervision as above mentioned will be paid by the Government at the rate of one pound (£1) per child per annum.

21. The Inspector may remove or direct the removal of children at any time he considers it necessary or expedient. Persons taking children under these Regulations will be at liberty to return them to the school from which they received them, upon giving two (2) weeks' notice of their intention to do so.

22. The Government will make such further rules and conditions as may from time to time be necessary, and foster-parents will require to comply with the directions they may receive from the Inspector, whether provided for in these Conditions or not, and to give effect to the requirements of the committee hereinbefore referred to.

SUGGESTIONS by Miss Preusser to ladies undertaking the charge of the Boarding-out System in England.

(The following remarks with reference to the Boarding-out scheme, from the pen of the lady named above, are published by the Government of Victoria, because, although not in all respects applicable to the system it is proposed to adopt here, they are very suggestive, and will, no doubt, prove of practical value.)

"Ladies who are anxious to carry out the plan of rescuing pauper children by means of the Boarding-out system, should, in their villages or parishes, constitute themselves into a committee, and follow the mode or proceeding suggested for the guidance of Boarding-out Committees."

"The

* It will be seen that the "Regulations" for Victoria provide for a payment that covers the cost of clothing.

"The regulations mentioned in * * * * * would have to be strictly observed; but, besides this, ladies would have to settle the following points among themselves:—

"1. They would have to choose in their village or neighbourhood foster-parents whom they personally know, for whose respectability, honesty, cleanliness, and good nature they can answer, and of whom they may feel sure that they would be kind to the child or children. The ladies would make, if possible, a few conditions in placing the child with its foster-parents:—

- a. That they would treat the child in every way as their own little ones.
- b. That the child is to have a bed to itself, or, at least, to share it only with a child of its own sex and age. If the family should be too poor to provide a bed, the ladies would do well to furnish a bed for the child, which would belong to the committee of ladies, and would be removed when the child leaves for service, &c. The overcrowding of cottages and the very scanty accommodation is often the root of a great many evils, and it would be a great blessing if, by degrees, a reform could be inaugurated.
- c. That they send the child to a day-school, Sunday-school, and place of worship, regularly, unless prevented by illness.
- d. That the foster-mother shall receive a book with the name of the child and a list of clothes, which she is to show to any lady belonging to the boarding-out committee who asks for it when visiting the child, in order that she may put down her name and the date of her visit, and the answers to the questions as required by the 'Reports for six weeks,' and make a memorandum of any present she gives, or insert any remarks she may think necessary to make.

"2. Although the Government order does not contemplate that any expense should be incurred by the boarding-out committee, it would seem to be most desirable that the ladies should undertake to provide for the clothing of the children. To keep a girl in clothes costs very little if one makes use of one's own worn-out things, and likes to do the work one's self till the girl is able to sew, mend, knit, and darn her own things. The ladies would be careful that the child should entirely lose the taint of pauperism, and not be made conspicuous either by too good clothes or too simple ones."

"3. The ladies would visit the children regularly at the houses of the foster-parents, and the lady president would pay the foster parents, the first Monday in every month, the sum agreed upon, and note it in the book of the child at the foster-parent's.

"One objection is very often made to the whole plan of taking charge of children. Ladies say they are afraid of the responsibility. This is a theoretical objection, for it vanishes when they once practically try the experiment. As the Guardians pay for board—The Victorian Government will pay the entire cost of the children's maintenance, clothing, &c., see allowance in Regulations, clause 17]—the committee of ladies will have very little expense, and therefore will find it very easy to give any necessary additional help, according to the circumstances, so as to bring up the children well, and relieve them, as much as possible, of the pauper taint. If one realizes the sad, monotonous, and unnatural life the little pauper children are doomed to live in the workhouse, district school, or orphanage, where the pauper girl is only one in many hundreds of children, and nobody takes a special, personal, individual, or loving interest in her, must one not feel that to take her away from such a gloomy and cheerless existence must be a benefit to the child? Even if she has to bear little hardships in her new home, the advantage will thoroughly counterbalance these in the end. Why should we not hope and trust that, if we have the earnest wish to do good to the poor deserted little ones, and conscientiously try to fulfil our duty to them, by watching over them and their foster-parents, and giving them every help and assistance we can, our endeavours will be blessed, and many a child saved from a life of uselessness, shame, or ruin?"

"Do we not incur a much greater responsibility by leaving our own part of the work undone, by not caring personally for any of those thousands of wretched little girls? Remembering St. James's words, 'Therefore, to him that knoweth to do good, and doeth it not, to him it is sin,' let us cheerfully begin our work at once, in love, hope, and charity, and also in an earnest, methodical, systematic, and yet truly loving way, and, with God's blessing, we shall succeed."

Biloela Industrial School for Girls, Parramatta River—Regulations.

Colonial Secretary's Office,
Sydney, 17 July, 1871.

The following Regulations for the Industrial School for Girls, Parramatta River, having been made by His Excellency the Governor, with the advice of the Executive Council, are published in accordance with the 3rd section of the Industrial Schools Act of 1866.

JOHN ROBERTSON.

SUPERINTENDENT.

- | | |
|---|--|
| Charge of institution. | 1. The Superintendent will have entire charge of the institution, and be held responsible for all the property belonging to the Government. He will visit and inspect, with the Matron, every part of the establishment daily, and ascertain that the whole is under efficient management and control. He will attend the daily musters, to see that proper order is observed. |
| Responsible for duties of officers. | 2. He will be held responsible for the proper discharge of all duties to be performed by the various officers of the establishment; and he will be guided, from time to time, by such instructions as he may receive from the Colonial Secretary. |
| Moral training. | 3. He will see that the girls are properly instructed by the teacher or teachers,—that they are taught habits of cleanliness, industry, and diligence; and he will be expected to do everything in his power to encourage, by force of example, moral and pious conduct amongst those entrusted to his care. |
| Treatment. | 4. He will endeavour to obtain needlework, washing, paper-bag making, &c., to be performed at the school, the net profits of which will be ratably divided amongst the girls monthly, in proportion to their good marks, as will be also the net profits of other industries maintained in the school. |
| Examination of food, &c. Register to be kept. | 5. He will see that the girls are treated with kindness, combined with strict discipline, and check every instance of harsh conduct on the part of the officers or attendants. |
| Power to suspend officers. | 6. He will see that the food is good and sufficient; that it is properly cooked, and served with regularity and order. He will also examine the store and diet books, to see that the proper quantities are supplied. |
| | 7. He will keep a Register for recording the name of every girl admitted into the institution; entering such particulars as can be ascertained respecting age, religion, parentage, previous life, &c.; also, how the girls are disposed of on leaving the establishment; and, in case of death, the cause should be immediately reported. |
| | 8. All complaints made by the officers, attendants, or the girls, must be carefully looked into by the Superintendent, in order that any abuses or infringement of regulations may be checked and rectified. The Superintendent may suspend any officer for neglect of duty or improper conduct, pending the decision of the Colonial Secretary. |

MATRON.

- | | |
|--|---|
| Household duties. | 9. The Matron will act under the orders of the Superintendent, and give directions for carrying out all arrangements for the proper working of the household duties of the institution. |
| To appoint girls for work. | 10. She will attend the daily musters, and appoint such girls as she thinks fit for performing domestic and other duties. |
| School roll. | 11. She will see that all the girls whose names are entered on the school roll attend punctually each day. |
| Prayers. | 12. She will, in the absence of a clergyman, read prayers on Sundays, when required by the Superintendent to do so. |
| To direct house-matron and assistants. | 13. She will direct the house-matron and assistants in their duties, and overlook all the internal working of the establishment. |
| Industrial training. | 14. She will see that a portion of every day, except Saturday and Sunday, is devoted to teaching the girls some branch of useful industry, and especially all the duties of household management. |
| Attendance on Visiting Surgeon. | 15. She must attend the Visiting Surgeon when he visits the sick, and take every care that his instructions are properly carried out. |

VISITING

VISITING SURGEON.

16. The Visiting Surgeon is to visit patients in hospital at least twice every week, or oftener if required. He is to attend the institution at any time when he may be sent for by the Superintendent. Visits.
17. A Medical Journal is to be kept at the institution, in which he will record all cases of sickness, disease, or death, with any particulars he may consider necessary. Medical Journal
18. He will see every girl that is admitted into the institution, and inquire into the state of her health, in the presence of the Matron; recording the result of such examination in the Medical Journal. He will also control all correction involving health. Inspection of children admitted.
19. In the event of death, he will make an entry in the Medical Journal, specifying the name of the girl, the date, cause of death, with any other particulars he may consider necessary, and report the same to the Superintendent as early as possible. Deaths.
20. When medical comforts are ordered, it will be necessary for him to enter, in an Order Book to be kept for the purpose, the name of the child for whom they are required, with the quantities of the articles to be supplied; and he will also have to certify to the correctness of the account for the same, on the voucher, for the Colonial Treasurer. Medical comforts.

TEACHER.

21. The hours for the school instruction will be from 9 o'clock to 12 o'clock, a.m., and from 2 o'clock to 4 o'clock, p.m. The teacher in charge should be in attendance, and have the schoolroom ready for commencing duties punctually at 9 o'clock. Hours.
22. She will receive the girls from the house-matron before school hours, and see that they are all clean and tidy in person; and any who may appear to her not to be so should be sent back. She will then call the muster-roll, and report to the Matron any girls who may be absent. Muster-roll.
23. Prayers are to be read to the girls by the teacher and the Matron, by arrangement, according to their different religious persuasions, before the school duties commence, and in the evening before bed-time. Prayers.
24. As many monitors as the teacher may consider necessary may be selected by her as assistants in the school, to whom she will give one hour's additional instruction, between 12 and 1 o'clock each day. Monitors.
25. In case of the appointment of assistant teachers, they will perform their duties subject to the direction of the teacher in charge, in all matters of instruction and school management. Assistant teachers.

HOUSE-MATRON.

26. She will, under the direction of the Matron, overlook the internal arrangement of the institution,—will see that the dormitories are cleaned and thoroughly aired—that the soiled clothing (including bedding) is taken to the laundry, and counted over to the laundress. She will take care that the dining-hall, hospital, &c., are kept properly clean, and that the female servants are attentive to their duties. To overlook internal arrangements.
27. She will preside in the bath-rooms whilst the girls are being washed; will be present at all musters; and assist the Superintendent and Matron in inspecting the girls twice daily. To preside at bath-rooms.
28. She will see that the dormitories are properly lighted for the night, and every requisite for the convenience of the girls duly provided. She will be present at the evening muster in the dormitories, and will see that the lamps are turned down at 9 p.m. in winter and half-past 9 in summer, and that the outer doors of the dormitories are secured. Dormitories.
29. She will take care that every child, upon her admission, is immediately stripped, well washed, and clothed in the dress provided by the Government; and that, on leaving the institution, every girl be furnished with clean and suitable clothing. Children to be properly clothed.
30. She will see that the apartments are thoroughly cleaned every Saturday, so as to secure a due observance of Sunday. She will notify to the Superintendent the name of any officer or servant applying for temporary leave of absence, and the provision to be made for the performance of the duties of the applicant during such absence. Establishment to be cleaned on Saturdays.
31. She will keep all spare bedding and other articles drawn for the use of the establishment in her stores, over which she shall always preserve complete control. Stores.
32. She will cut out and measure off all material for clothing, and will brand the same, if intended for the use of the institution, when made up, subject to the directions of the Matron. Clothing.
33. She will visit the dormitories in the morning and evening, to see that the girls rise and retire at the proper hour, and keep order while they are dressing and undressing. Dormitories.
34. She will on all occasions attend the girls when they are in the playground, or out of school, unless relieved by the orders of the Superintendent. Playground.

CLERK AND STOREKEEPER.

35. The clerk and storekeeper will receive and weigh all stores as they are delivered at the institution by the contractor, and issue the same, according to the scale, punctually at the hours specified in the time-table. Weighing of stores.
36. Will make all entries in register, warrant, store, and other books of the institution,—copy all documents, and write whatever letters may be required. Books of institution.
37. Will keep an account of, and issue all hardware and other stores for the use of the institution, as also of the cost and of the net profits of the industries of the institution. Accounts.
38. Will assist the Superintendent at all times—when required by him to do so—in carrying out any instructions he may consider necessary to give, for the preservation of order and discipline in the institution. To render assistance when necessary.

ASSISTANTS.

39. They will render every possible assistance to the Matron and house-matron in the discharge of their duties, from whom they will directly receive orders; and they will not leave the institution themselves, nor allow any of the servants to do so, without the permission of the Superintendent. To receive orders from Matron and house-matron.
40. They will be present in the dining-hall during the meals of the girls, will frequently visit the kitchen whilst the same are being cooked and carved, and will see that the food is served up properly. Meals.
41. They will daily inspect the coppers and cooking vessels, and will see that the kitchen is kept scrupulously clean. Cooking.
42. They will frequently in the day visit the laundry, and see that the duties of that part of the institution are effectively and economically performed. Laundry.
43. They will see that the lavatory and bath-room are kept in perfect order. Bath-room.
44. They will assist the house-matron, morning and evening, in the dormitories, to see that the girls rise and retire at the proper hours. Dormitories.
45. They will attend in the work-room, and see that the work in hand is diligently and carefully executed; and they will also instruct the girls, as far as practicable, in farm duties, milking, and the rearing of poultry; and they will on all occasions, when required to do so, attend the girls when they are in the playground or out of school. Playground.

GATE-KEEPER.

46. The gate-keeper will open and close the gates at the hours appointed by the Superintendent, and see that no person is permitted to visit the quarters set apart for the girls, without first being introduced at the office of the institution. Gates.
47. Will regularly ring the bell at the time specified in the time-table. Bells.
48. Will take every care that no one from the outside holds any communication whatever with any of the inmates of the institution. To prevent communication with inmates.

COOK AND LAUNDRESS.

49. The cook will draw the food from the storekeeper punctually when the store-bell rings, and observe proper care and economy in cooking the same. Drawing of provisions.
50. The cook will also see that the dining-room, tins, spoons, knives, forks, &c., and all culinary vessels, are kept in perfect order, and will teach the girls placed under her how to cook and be clean in their habits. Dining and cooking utensils.
51. The laundress will teach the girls washing, ironing, mangling, &c. She will be at all times careful that none of the house or body linen is lost or destroyed, and she will be responsible for the security of the same until delivered to the house-matron or assistant. Laundress.
52. The laundress will see that the laundry is at all times kept clean, and she will be held responsible for the conduct of the girls placed under her. Laundry girls.

VISITORS.

VISITORS.

Visitors' Book.

53. A Visitors' Book will be kept, in which all ladies and gentlemen who visit and inspect the institution must be courteously requested to enter their names, with date of visit, and any remarks they may think proper to make.]

Strangers to explain object of visit.

54. Strangers wishing to visit any of the inmates must present an order from the Colonial Secretary or the Under Secretary, and explain to the Superintendent, or in his absence, to the officer in charge, their relationship to the inmate whom they desire to see, the object of their visit, and any other particulars that the Superintendent may desire to know; and either the Matron or house-matron must be present during the interview of any such stranger with an inmate.

Relatives.

55. The relatives and friends of the inmates will receive an order monthly as above, and be required, on every occasion of a visit, to enter their names in a separate book kept for that purpose.

RELIGIOUS WORSHIP.

How prayers to be said.

56. The inmates must attend divine worship every Sunday within the institution. If no clergyman is in attendance prayers must be read by the Matron or the teacher to the girls, according to their religious denomination.

REWARDS AND INDULGENCES

57. The Superintendent will at his discretion, or on the recommendation of the Matron, house-matron, or teacher, appoint monitors from among the best conducted of the girls, who will wear a better dress, and will also be paid at the rate of 6d. per week.

58. Marks will be given on the same recommendations for good conduct, liable to reduction for misconduct,—in proportion to the number of which, claims to participate in net profits of industries under rule 4 will be considered and allowed.

59. On the same recommendation, indulgences in diet, such as eggs and extra milk, will be allowed to the most deserving, to whom also other small indulgences will be given from time to time.

60. A small library of interesting volumes will be established, for the instruction and amusement of deserving girls in their leisure time.

CORRECTION AND RESTRAINT.

Object of correction and restraint.

61. The object of the institution being to reclaim and instruct the children admitted, every effort will be made to accomplish this without recourse to severe correction or unnecessary restraint, but that such efforts may not be unavailing, correction and restraint will be resorted to and persevered in in all cases of difficulty.

Mode of proceeding.

62. No subordinate officer will be allowed to chastise summarily, but will report any offence to the Superintendent, who will immediately deal with it, unless he should require to report it for the instructions of the Colonial Secretary.

Confinement in cells only on order of Colonial Secretary.

63. In cases of immoral or dishonest conduct, lying, stealing, gross indecency, continued contumacy and insolence to the Superintendent, Matron, or other officer, or destruction of public property, a report will be made to the Colonial Secretary, on whose order the offender will be kept in close and separate confinement for such period as may be directed, not exceeding three days for any one offence.

Minor cases dealt with by the Superintendent.

64. In cases of a less grave character, disobedience of orders, uncleanness, indolence, quarrelling, or rioting, the Superintendent may in his discretion impose suitable correction; to consist, as the offence may demand, of separation at meals for not more than fourteen days,—confinement during play-hours for not more than two days,—confinement on bread and water for various periods,—the black list and withdrawal of good marks, a weekly list being forwarded to the Colonial Secretary

No correction involving health, if objected to by the Visiting Surgeon

65. No correction or confinement which may affect the health of an offender will be imposed, if objected to on professional grounds by the Visiting Surgeon.

Mr. George Lucas to The Colonial Secretary.

Industrial School,
Newcastle, March 28, 1871.

Sir,

The inmates of this place are in a very refractory state, making all sorts of noises, and breaking the Government property, tearing their bedding and breaking the bedsteads, and frames of windows. There is a cause for all this. They have been taught that we were the outcasts of society, and that we should not be respected. Clarke's friends think that he has been badly treated. Some of the officers think they should have been appointed, and they encourage the girls to the mutiny. I believe that all the old officers should be cleared out and a new staff appointed. When this building is repaired the windows should be built up, those at the back within twelve inches of the top; and the girls should be classified in five (5) classes. This place will never get on till the officers all work together. If it had not been for the police, all the officers' quarters and reformatory would have shared the same fate. I have been learning the ways of the girls and the officers, and will be able to make some valuable suggestions in a few days which will be of some service to the Government. One thing in particular, they must have work and more classes. There are some fine children here, and it is a pity that they should be spoiled by mixing them with the very vicious.

I have, &c.,
GEORGE LUCAS,
Superintendent.

The Principal Under Secretary to the Water Police Magistrate.

Sydney, 2 December, 1871.

Sir,

With reference to your letter of the 22nd ultimo, I am directed by the Colonial Secretary to inform you that it has been intimated to the Superintendent of the Biloela Industrial School for Girls that you will give your attention to the management generally of that institution, and that he should accordingly, in any matter of difficulty, consult with you and be guided by your instructions.

I have, &c.,
HENRY HALLORAN.

M 1.

REPORT of the Water Police Magistrate to the Honorable the Colonial Secretary, with reference to the Industrial School at Biloela.

THE commencement of the new year appears to me a fitting time to report to the Honorable the Colonial Secretary the result of my endeavour to assist the Superintendent of the Industrial School at Biloela, in accordance with the instructions conveyed to me by letter of the 2nd December last, which letter I understood was written to me because the officers of the institution had lost all control over the girls, and a succession of riots had taken place, which had rendered it necessary, for a time, to keep police resident within the walls of the institution, and ultimately to bring some of the ringleaders before a Court of Petty Sessions, when they were sentenced to imprisonment in gaol.

For some weeks I devoted the greater portion of Saturday and Sunday and all my mornings and evenings (that is, the portion at my disposal) to the work, determined to satisfy myself whether this deplorable state of affairs could not be remedied.

The persistent determination of the Matron not to adopt my suggestions has rendered my efforts to a great extent unavailing.

I found the girls roamed about the island as they liked, without restraint, apparently without occupation.

They had little or no religious instruction.

They were locked in their dormitories at 6 o'clock every evening, and the singing and other noises between that hour and 9 o'clock were something dreadful to listen to.

They paid no respect to officers of the institution or visitors.

They attended muster, meals, &c., when they liked, and left in an equally irregular manner.

There was no laundress, and they used the laundry for concocting and carrying out schemes for destruction.

Hardly a single girl had sufficient change of clothing, and the greater number were without shoes and stockings.

There was no account kept of the clothing belonging to each girl, and no system in force to prevent their stealing from one another.

When a girl was short of a garment, she took from her neighbour and cut out the mark or brand to prevent detection.

They were expected to eat meat without knives and forks, because (as I was told) they could not be trusted with them.

They were not provided with spoons to eat their porridge. Only a portion had tin panikins for their tea; the others had to wait until they were finished, and then use the panikins without being washed.

Few eat their meals at the table, the greater portion carrying away their bread in their hands.

I at once put a stop to the girls going on the beach and roaming about the island at pleasure.

In order to provide them with religious instruction, I arranged with certain ladies of each denomination to visit the girls on Sundays, and it has been followed with the most satisfactory results.

As I considered locking them up at 6 o'clock very objectionable I ordered lamps for the dining-room, in order that I might arrange for their amusement in the evenings. Mr. Lucas and two of the officers agreed to attend to them, and the first opening was a decided success, which, when Mrs. Lucas, the Matron (who up to this time opposed it) saw, she became angry, and vented her wrath upon me the next morning before the girls in the breakfast-room. On the second evening, before I could get down to the building, she upset all my arrangements, and insulted the officers who had volunteered to assist me.

Mr. and Mrs. Lucas then took the matter in hand, and with their daughters continued to attend to it until a few days before Christmas, when one evening after all the girls were supposed to be locked up in their dormitories two were found by the police at 9-15 roaming about the island.

During the holidays they have been locked up in the evening as formerly.

The appointment of a laundress has been very beneficial, showing most conclusively, in my opinion, that the riots are more the result of bad management than anything else.

Six girls wash about one thousand pieces a week, among which are a large number which have to be starched and ironed carefully.

Although the most unmanageable girls are sent to the laundry; they work well, and, as a rule, give satisfaction.

Since my letter in the paper, twenty-five girls have been applied for, eleven are gone out to situations, and others will be sent as soon as the necessary arrangements can be made.

Unless the girls are properly trained and made good servants, people cannot be expected to take them; and, under the present management, where such terms as obedience and discipline are unknown, this is impossible.

The Water Police Magistrate to The Principal Under Secretary.

Water Police Office,
20 February, 1872.

Sir,

With reference to your letter of the 2nd December last, I have the honor to state, for the information of the Honorable the Colonial Secretary, that my suggestions in regard to the management of the Industrial School at Biloela appear to be purposely disregarded.

I have, &c.,
CHARLES COWPER, JUN.

The Water Police Magistrate to The Principal Under Secretary.

Biloela, 29 March, 1872.

Sir,

Complaints have been made to me that the girls apprenticed from the Industrial School are not taught to make their own clothes.

As I find I cannot get my suggestions attended to, I have to request that the Honorable the Colonial Secretary will cause instructions to be given to the Superintendent to have each girl taught to cut out and make her own clothes, in order that when she takes a situation she may not be a burden to her mistress.

I find that the girls who have been in the school the longest know the least.

Greater attention should be paid to the cutting out and sewing of the frocks especially, and the system of branding in a conspicuous place should be avoided, and indeed everything which tends to give the institution the appearance of a prison.

The

The older girls lately sent to the school are put upon the officers' quarters, where they are left entirely to themselves during the day, instead of being at once brought under a system of discipline.

As the officers' clothes are washed in the laundry and their meals cooked in the kitchen, I cannot see the necessity for this.

I have endeavoured to establish a reading-room for the girls in the evening, and I think the Superintendent should be informed that it is his duty to have the girls trained to appreciate such a privilege.

The system of locking them up in the dormitories at 6 o'clock, or of letting them out in the yard and allowing them to behave in a noisy, disorderly, and indecent manner, has a most demoralizing effect.

By giving the girls incessant employment, and carrying out a proper system of discipline, I am satisfied all unpleasantness and the necessity for resorting to harsh punishment might be avoided.

Sir,

I have the honor to report, for the information of the Honorable Colonial Secretary, that Mr. Lucas has sent for the Water Police on two occasions without communicating with me, to assist him in putting the strait-jackets on the girls in the Biloela Industrial School.

I understand that the girls were almost naked. This is hardly the way, I think, the Colonial Secretary intended this mode of punishment should be carried out.

P 1.

The Matron, Protestant Orphan School, Parramatta, to The Principal Under Secretary.

Protestant Orphan School,
Parramatta, 17 May, 1870.

Sir,

Referring to your letter of the 19th April, 1866, on the subject of apprenticing the children of this institution, I am very strongly of opinion that some alteration must be made in the law relating to this matter, with a view of giving the apprentices—

- 1st. Increased remuneration.
- 2nd. Providing that more supervision shall be exercised over them during their term of service, by an officer who shall be under the control of, and report to the Principal Secretary.
3. The necessity for dealing with this matter has long been felt and admitted, and I shall therefore briefly point out how it occurs to me that it can best be done.
4. In the first place it will be necessary to repeal Act 5 William 4th, No. 3; and at the same time provide that the children may be bound by such persons and under such regulations as the Government may see fit to appoint. The regulations would of course have to be drawn in accordance with Act 8 Victoria No. 2, passed 1st August, 1844, but which Act does not in any way deal with amount or mode of payment or remuneration to apprentices.
5. After carefully considering this subject I have arrived at the conclusion that it will be better to proceed in this way, than to draw up an Act with specific clauses for apprenticing the Orphan School children alone, and I beg to recommend that the Principal Secretary will be pleased to take the matter into consideration, and, if my suggestions meet his approval, give instructions for the preparation of a short Act for submission to the Legislature. If Mr. Cowper does not agree with the conclusion I have arrived at, I could in a few days sketch out in detail the alterations in the existing Acts which I consider necessary.

I have, &c.,
Matron.

Q.

MORAL AND INDUSTRIAL TRAINING SCHOOLS, SWINTON.

REGULATIONS.

1. The head-master is invested with complete control over every department of the institution.
2. No corporal punishment is to be inflicted without the express orders of the head-master, and then in his presence.
3. The masters of schools are authorized to inflict such other punishments as may be approved by the head-master.
4. The masters of schools are to report to the head-master, at such time in each day as he shall appoint, all such cases as appear to require corporal or other severe correction, and he will order such punishment as he, in consultation with the master, may deem desirable.
5. The head-master is expected at times to examine the children of each school, and will give privately to the masters any suggestions he may have to make.
6. The masters of schools are authorized to make any temporary alterations in the school routine which peculiar circumstances may render necessary, but permanent alterations are only to be decided on in consultation with the head-master; the final decision remaining with him.

7. The masters and mistresses of schools, assistant masters and mistresses, and other officers not specially exempted by the head-master, are to rise at 6 o'clock, and to be dressed and in their sitting-rooms at half-past 6; the industrial masters, and masters and mistresses in attendance excepted, who will rise with the children at 5 in summer and 6 in the winter.

8. The masters and mistresses of schools are responsible for the execution of Rule 7, as respects the teachers in their respective departments, and are to report to the head-master immediately any breach of that regulation.

9. The masters and mistresses and assistant masters and mistresses are expected to superintend the children in the play-grounds in such order as shall be decided on by the head-master, and occasionally to take part in the children's recreations.

10. The masters and mistresses of schools may leave the house at any time after afternoon school on those days when their further attendance is not required by the regulations. The steward and storekeeper may also leave the house after 7 p.m., if their further attendance is not required; but both the former and latter officers are, in all cases, required to report the time of their leaving and returning to the head-master.

11. The other officers of the establishment are not allowed to leave the house without permission from the head-master.

12. Officers absent on leave are not to remain out after 10 o'clock p.m.

13. From the 1st October to the 31st March the boys' and girls' school-rooms are to be open from 7 to 8 p.m., and a master and mistress are to be in attendance in each to distribute books from the school library to those children who desire them; to encourage various quiet occupations and to maintain order.

14. All the masters and mistresses and assistant masters and mistresses are expected to accompany the children in their occasional walks in the neighbourhood of the institution, and are also required to perform the duties of master and mistress in attendance as defined in the disciplinary regulations.

BOYS' SCHOOL.

DISCIPLINARY REGULATIONS.

The children are to rise, at the first sound of the bell, at half-past 5 in summer, and 6 o'clock in winter; and to be put to bed, those above 11 years of age at 9 in summer and 8 in winter, and those under 11 at 8 in summer and 7 in winter.

The masters and assistant masters of schools are to perform in rotation the duties of masters in attendance, which are as follows:—

To be present in the dormitories five minutes before the early bell rings, and to superintend the rising of the children, sending them down in sections to the training master in the lavatory.

To spend some time daily in the playground and field garden with the children.

To assist the training master when necessary in enforcing discipline.

To superintend in winter the library and reading room in accordance with Rule 13.

To instruct the pupil teachers' class from 7½ to 8½ p.m.

The duties of the training master are:—

To be present with the children five minutes before the time of rising and to superintend the washing of the children.

To send the industrial drafts, under conduct of a pupil teacher, to their work as soon as washed, the latter being furnished with written instructions for their management.

To see that the children are bathed at least twice a week (on Wednesdays and Saturdays), and that their heads are well combed at least three times per week.

To march the boys into the dining-hall at meal times, and to take charge of both boys and girls during meals.

To take charge of the boys in the playground or dayroom till ten minutes before 2 o'clock, then to march them into the dayroom in classes, where the teachers are to join them, and after calling the roll to conduct them at the single stroke of the bell into school.

To take a general charge of the industrial sections during school hours.

To receive the boys at 5, and superintend them until 5½; then to leave them in charge of two pupil teachers whilst he takes his tea.

To superintend the boys on their return from supper till bed-time alternately with the shoemaker and tailor, the training master being always held generally responsible for regularity and discipline.

The training master is to be relieved on Sundays by the tailor and shoemaker alternating with him in his duties; the former must however be present at meals except on the occasion of leave days, when the master in charge will take his place in this respect.

The pupil teachers are to assist the training master on alternate days, placing themselves entirely at his disposal.

SWINTON INDUSTRIAL SCHOOL.

EXTRACTS FROM HEAD MASTER'S ADDRESS TO TEACHERS.

It gives me pleasure to believe that the greater number of the children now under instruction are, by no means, of the lowest and most degraded class; still you must prepare your minds to receive many under your care who have become apt pupils of vice and immorality before they arrive here; the offspring, in many cases, of parents steeped in ignorance, in misery, and perhaps in vice, reduced by squalid poverty and want of common necessities, to the lowest degradation. You must not therefore feel surprised if they appear to lack many of the more refined sympathies and affections of more favoured humanity. Having been daily practised in habits and accustomed to scenes the very reverse of what should have been presented for their imitation, what wonder if they are neither virtuous nor moral? Their early associations have been of the worst kind,—their educators have been the youthful devils, immature in age, but mature in vice, of the wretched courts and alleys of their birthplace. Should we judge them by the same standard we should apply to those who have enjoyed from their earliest years the advantage of the tenderest parental care and nurture, and who have but to imitate the example set them to become wise and virtuous? Should we not rather make every possible allowance for the follies and vices of the unfortunate beings I have described? Should we not attempt their gradual recovery and reformation by the most gentle means, and with all patience and forbearance, ever remembering that, sunk and vicious as they are, they are yet children of a common parent, objects of the compassion and love of the Father of all?

There will be some whose parents have once enjoyed affluence, but have been plunged by a course of misfortunes into poverty. Others, again, who have been reduced from comparative comfort and respectability to seek an asylum in the parish workhouse, by the loss of one or both parents. These, I need hardly say, have peculiar claims on our sympathy and care. We are, as regards the latter especially, their guardians and protectors, and inasmuch as this class will be more entirely and for a longer period under our control, we may well hope to gather from it the first-fruits of our labours in this institution. In all cases, however, you must endeavour to convince your youthful charge how sincerely you desire their well-being; and having by repeated acts of kindness and condescension won their affections, you must place yourselves at their head, and gently lead them onwards, closely watching over them to discover the peculiar temperament and character of each, in order that you may adapt your advice, instruction, and general mode of treatment, to the wants of every one.

It is probable that you will find many of them accustomed to habits repugnant to your sense of propriety and delicacy, wanting perhaps in cleanliness and decency. You will do well in such cases to temper your disgust with the consideration that cleanliness is sometimes an expensive and difficult virtue in the dwellings of the poor, and that delicacy must be so often outraged in abodes of misery, where one room supplies a whole family, and sometimes two, with the means of shelter, that all feeling on the subject is at last obliterated. Show them patiently and kindly over and over again the advantages, as well as the moral obligation of these virtues, and teach them to look up to yourselves as examples they may safely follow.

I would make every department of the institution a separate training school: the field, the garden, the stable, the farmyard, the kitchen, the laundry, equally with the schoolroom and playground. In the unrestrained intercourse of the place of recreation, and amid the daily labours of the workshop, the watchful care of the trainer must detect and kindly point point out violations of the principles inculcated in the Bible lesson of the school; enforcing the necessity for self-examination and watchfulness. Every boy must be taught to make and mend his own clothing, to do a little carpentry, to cultivate successfully a plot of ground, groom a horse, and rear a pig. His body should be inured by athletic sports and exercises, as well as by periodical labour proportioned to his strength, to the life of toil which is to procure for him his daily bread. In the intellectual department of the institution his judgment should be formed, and his reasoning powers awakened and expanded. He should be taught enough of history to show him the blessings of good government, and place him beyond the reach of the agitator and vulgar demagogue. He should know as much of the situation, natural productions, and political constitution of foreign countries as would prevent him from mistaking the coast-lines of his native country for the boundaries of the civilised world, and as would lead him to venture without fear into distant regions to seek that profitable employment which the resources of his fatherland could not afford him. He should be able to read and write and to calculate sufficiently to guard himself from imposition, and to make him more useful to his employers. He should be taught to enjoy and take a part in the spirit-stirring melodies of his native land, which are so well calculated to awaken dormant patriotism and rouse forgotten loyalty. He should be so far instructed in the construction of his native language as to remove that great impediment to the spiritual improvement of the poor—his inability to understand his teachers—as well as to enable him to comprehend readily the instructions given him by his master. He should be taught to draw a tolerably correct outline of simple objects, that he may understand more readily the plans and directions of his employer. If possible he should obtain some acquaintance with the mechanical powers, and with machinery, a little knowledge of which would prevent many of those distressing accidents which are generally the result of entire ignorance on the part of the workman employed. The girls should learn to make and mend their own clothing, and perform intelligently the respective duties of the housemaid, the laundrymaid, the cook, and the nurserymaid; they should be taught to love a white hearthstone and a clean floor; to prepare inexpensive dishes, adapted to the limited means of the labourer's household; to form right notions of what should constitute the comfort and attractions of a working-man's home, and thus be prepared for the future duties of the servant, the wife, and the mother. Both sexes should, above all, be taught to refer for their rule of conduct to the holy word of God, that they may labour, "not as eye-servants and men-pleasers," but as the servants of God; with good will doing service not as unto man but unto God. All should be trained up in a spirit of respectful independence, neither unmindful of their own social and political rights, nor forgetful of the rights of others. Pains should be taken to eradicate what has been rightly termed "the pauper spirit," by accustoming children to habits of self-respect, self-dependence, economy and industry.

The Inspector of Public Charities to The Principal Under Secretary.

Sydney, 18 April, 1872.

Sir,

I have the honor to report, for the information of the Honorable the Colonial Secretary, that I inspected the Biloela school on the 15th instant.

The institution, though in a more orderly state than I have hitherto seen it, has still an unsatisfactory aspect, regarding it as an industrial school; the girls are to be seen moving about the premises without boots and stockings, and dressed in a most untidy manner.

The number of girls at the school at present is 75. I consider that with such a small number the institution is burdened with too many officers. When there were 130 girls, and many of bad and vicious characters, the assistance of three sub-matrons may have been necessary, but now the case is different; and I would suggest for the approval of the Honorable the Colonial Secretary, that the services of one sub-matron may be dispensed with. Again, the clerk and store-keeper can have very little to do. The supplies are received from the contractor daily, and consequently the store accounts must be of the most simple nature. The correspondence should be conducted by the superintendent, who without such duties can have little to do in an institution which should be principally under the superintendence of the matron. I would therefore suggest for the approval of the Honorable the Colonial Secretary, that the services of the clerk and storekeeper be dispensed with.

The quality of the meat supplied by the contractor is much complained of. An indifferent article is frequently accepted because it is difficult to replace it. I would suggest that the contractor, Mr. Kidman, be cautioned against sending any except meat of the best quality, according to the conditions of his contract.

I have, &c.,

FREDERICK KING,

Inspector of Public Charities.

APPENDIX V.

[To Evidence of Miss Rosamond Hill.]

A SUMMARY of the Principles of Reformatory Treatment, with especial reference to Girls.

It is the lack of good home influence which, in the great majority of cases, brings girls into the condition necessitating reformatory training. In order to change them into respectable members of society, i.e., to re-form them, we must as far as possible supply to them that wholesome family life which they have not before enjoyed; therefore, a prison with its bolts and bars should never be used for their dwelling-place.

The numbers of girls in a Reformatory or Industrial School must be small, or they must be subdivided into distinct groups, each group resembling a real family as nearly as possible, and occupying a dwelling to itself. This arrangement would facilitate the separation of Catholics from Protestants, and the placing them under the care of persons of their respective faiths. But a number of these groups living in small houses near each other might unite for purposes of secular instruction in a common schoolroom.

It is, above all, essential to imbue the children with a love of work. Therefore, care must be taken to prevent their labour from being either beyond their strength or too monotonous, creating in them in either case a distaste for work.

A sufficient amount of recreation must be allowed—it must never be forgotten that we are dealing with children.

The members of each group or family should as far as possible do the whole work of their own house—baking, washing, and ironing, and the making of their own clothes, household linen, mattresses and pillows, inclusive. It is also essential that the children should frequently go beyond the boundaries of the institution, especially that they should go to a place of public worship.

The girls should also be employed—as it is found they can be trusted—to do errands for the household; they should be trained gradually to market and to shop, in order that when they leave the school and go to service, they should know how to purchase for their employers and to buy their own clothes—in fact, how to manage their wages with economy.

It must always be borne in mind that the training the girls receive in the institution is a means to an end—not an end in itself; and that therefore, however perfect the order and discipline of the school may be, unless the girls are allowed a certain amount of voluntary action and power of self-government, it will not prepare them for life after they have quitted its roof.

When the girls enter the school, they are idle, dirty, and very probably untruthful and dishonest. The aim of the managers is to render them industrious, cleanly, and honest. As the training gradually improves them, they will require less supervision, which should diminish by degrees as they become more and more able to govern themselves, until, when the time comes for their quitting the institution, they shall be able to fight the battle of life successfully for themselves.

Rewards and punishments, indispensable in Reformatory and Industrial Schools, should be, whenever possible, the natural consequence of the girls' conduct,—not on the one side an indulgence, or on the other an infliction of pain arbitrarily awarded by the managers. Good conduct should better the position of the girls in the school; and, on the other hand, bad conduct should worsen it.

This end will be most easily attained by allowing the girls to earn their privileges by their own efforts, and to lose them by bad conduct.

The best means of registering their behaviour is by the use of the mark system.

A certain number of marks gained by industry and good conduct should raise the girls in rank in the school. Bad conduct and idleness should take away their marks, and deprive them of the privileges they had earned, with the power of re-earning the marks and of regaining their position by their subsequent good conduct.

Thus, on entering the school a girl would necessarily possess no marks, and would therefore be at its bottom. A certain number of marks earned would raise her a stage, and would entitle her to certain privileges; a further number of marks would raise her to a second stage and entitle her to more privileges, and so on until she has reached the highest stage of all. In the course of climbing to the highest stage, the girl would gradually acquire that perseverance and self-control essential to her well-doing when she quits the school. The strict discipline under which she had been placed on admission would slacken by degrees until, as the time of her departure approached, she would almost govern herself.

By this time she would have become trustworthy, and would be accorded a certain degree of liberty. For instance, she might be permitted to go out on errands with a companion of similar rank in the school, and might have an allowance for the purchase of some part at least of her clothing.

Great care must be taken to prevent the ascent from being too difficult, and it must be made more easy to rise in the lower stages than in the higher, because the first efforts at self-control are always the hardest. The girl must not on the one side be disheartened by the too great steepness of the ascent, nor on the other must the privileges lose in value by the too great facility of their attainment. The advance from stage to stage should be so arranged that the girls should be able to reach the highest at least six months before the term of her detention expires.

The foregoing remarks are founded on practical experience, and no plan is suggested which has not been in successful operation.

They

They apply specially to schools in which girls enter at an early age and where they remain for some years. Those committed above twelve years old should be dealt with in separate institutions, and for these of course the plan described would require modification. For instance, the shorter term of detention would probably necessitate either fewer stages or a more rapid transition from one to another. There would be less school instruction and more industrial work, and the privileges would be different—adapted to the more advanced ages of the girls.

In order that the management of Reformatory and Industrial Schools should be successful, it is essential to secure voluntary, i.e. unpaid assistance.

In England the voluntary managers of these schools attest their interest in them by subscribing towards their funds; but as the power of legally detaining the pupils, and pecuniary aid from the State, are indispensable, justice demands that the managers should submit to Government inspection.

A committee of ladies and gentlemen should be formed to direct the management, which should be carried on under their auspices by paid officials. The volunteer manager acquires an influence over the inmates of these schools distinct in character from that of the paid official, and very beneficial to the children. The leisure class, from which necessarily the volunteers must be drawn, possess the mental culture and training necessary for surmounting the difficulties inherent in the application of reformatory science—under their guidance the hard-working, conscientious, paid official will be able to carry the undertaking to a successful issue.

But the work of the managers is not complete when their pupils quit the Industrial School. They will require, when put out into the world, friendly supervision, which may be found necessary for some years.

MEMORANDUM.

1. It is impossible in most cases to ascertain the precise age of the child when the case is being heard, the Magistrates being satisfied if the child is under the age of 16 years. Such information, if obtainable, is usually uncertain in the forms furnished in duplicate "Record of Cases committed to Public Industrial School at ———."
2. When Magistrates inflict fines, it is generally when parents, relatives, and friends are in Court, ready to pay them and avoid gaol.

SPECIAL APPENDIX 3.

RETURN showing the number of Children under sixteen years of Age, who have been dealt with at Water Police Office, for Larceny and Offences under the Industrial and Reformatory Schools Act, from the date of its coming into operation.

Date.	Name.	Age.	Charge.	Circumstances of offence.	Result.	Remarks.
		Years.
1867.
4 Jan.	Charles Watts	12	Stealing	On New Year's morning prosecutor left his shop locked up; on returning at night he found a skylight open, and missed some fishing-lines, books, and porte-monnaies, from his shop.	Discharged.	Most of the Magistrates considering that the association with older criminals in gaol renders children more hardened, have a great objection to committing juveniles convicted of larceny to prison, and, as a rule, either inflict a small penalty or order their imprisonment in the lock-up for a few hours, or, where at all possible, discharge the offenders. In this return it will be seen that 212 children were arrested for larceny, of whom 153 were convicted, and 59 discharged. Of those convicted, 24 were sent to gaol, 50 fined in small penalties varying from 1s. 6d. to 40s., 38 bound to good conduct, and 41 locked up in the watch-house.
	Farrell Geritty	15
10 Feb.	William Johnson	11	"	Stealing about 67 lbs. of lead from a vacant house.	"
	John Cassidy	10
19 Mar.	Henry Wellington	15	"	Taking a Crimean shirt from a shop door where it was exposed for sale, at 3 p.m.	1 month's gaol.
	Thomas Hobbs	10	"	The boy was charged jointly with his father, who was employed by Mrs. Cadell to remove a fowl-house. When he had removed the house there was a sheet of iron too much, which the father sent home with the boy. On his way the boy was arrested.	Discharged.
23 April	Arthur Adlum	13	Suspicion of steal-	The boys were found lying in a shed adjoining some premises in Bridge-street, from which some lead had been stolen.	"	Previously convicted of larceny.
	George Williams	14	ing lead.
	George Plowright	12
	John Smith	12
	Henry Wellington	16
22 May.	Eugene Hayes	11	Destitute	Found lying at the rear of the Court; when asked what he was doing there, said he had come to see if he could be sent to the "Vernon"; that his father could not keep him; he had to beg his food on board the vessels in port.	Discharged to the care of his father, who stated he could well afford to keep him.
22 "	Edward Cassidy	12	"	The boys were found wandering about the streets: known to the police for five or six years as vagrant children; the mother of the Cassidies a drunkard; they admitted having stolen ginger-beer that evening.	Cassidies sent to "Vernon." Cary discharged to his father, who stated he had six children and could not keep them.	John Cassidy previously convicted of larceny.
	John Cassidy	11
	John Cary	9
22 "	James Plowright	15	"	Prisoners were in Darlinghurst Gaol; on being released, were arrested and charged with wandering about with convicted thieves.	Plowright and M'Evoy sent to the "Vernon," the others discharged.	All previously convicted more than once of larceny.
	Frederick Smith	16
	John M'Evoy	13
	Thomas Oakey	14

9 "	Alfred J. M'Donald	9	Stealing	Stealing a watch from a room and pawning it.	B. good conduct by parent.
25 "	Jane Murphy	13	Vagrancy	Wandering about with prostitutes and bad boys.	Discharged—Father promising to send her to the House of the Good Shepherd.	Became unsettled by parents applying to the Colonial Secretary for release. Would not accept a situation for a long time; eventually, upon consenting, she was sent with another girl to Queanbeyan. Both ran away and returned to Sydney; she was sent back to the school, was always troublesome afterwards; she was released when she became of age, and went on the town at once, showing that the parents who had represented they could control her had no power over her. This case shows how mischievous the interference of parents is, and that it is a mistake to send two girls to the same place.

4 Nov.	John Kelly	14	Stealing	Taking tobacco and matches from a shop.	Discharged.	*Mary Ann Kearney, 10. This girl before she was sent to the school bore a very bad character; she behaved well in the school, was apprenticed; shortly afterwards she was brought before the Goulburn Bench and her indentures cancelled. She was thus thrown upon the streets without protection, when a person took her as servant. She behaved well till she was too old to be returned to Biloela, then became suddenly unmanageable, another place was got for her, where she stayed a short time and left suddenly. She is now in a third place doing well. This case shows the absurdity of cancelling the indentures a few weeks after the girl has been apprenticed, rendering the training in the school valueless, also the necessity of having a responsible person to look after the girls when they are apprenticed who can deal with them systematically, and when they do not behave transfer them to another employer, still keeping them bound by indenture and under restraint.

SPECIAL APPENDIX 5.

The Superintendent, Destitute Children's Asylum, Randwick, to The Secretary to the Commission.

(Explanation respecting expenditure, &c.)

Randwick Institution,
16 October, 1873.

Sir,

I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 9th instant, calling my attention to certain alleged discrepancies which appear on a comparison of the last Annual Balance Sheet of the Destitute Children's Asylum with the Returns furnished by me to the Commission.

In reply, I have the honor to state that, in your letter from the Commission, dated 2nd July, I was requested to furnish a Return showing "the officers and servants employed, specifying their names, titles, and rate of pay," but not the actual amount of salaries and wages paid; consequently, a difference is to be observed between the two amounts.

Referring to the second paragraph of your letter, in which you say—"It also further appears by the Balance Sheet, that the cost per head of the children in the Asylum is £14 8s. 5d. per year, but no account is taken of the children's labour, stated in your Return to be equivalent to £7,972 13s. 3d."—

The Balance Sheet here referred to, I presume, is the one that appears in the last Annual Report of the Society, for which I, as Superintendent, am not responsible; but I would call the attention of the Commission to the fact that, in my Return, the actual cost of producing or working expenses was deducted from the £7,972 13s. 3d., leaving the estimated profit only at £3,263 17s.; but this estimated amount was not taken by me to reduce the cost per head, but only to show what it would have been in the event of not employing the children's labour.

The sum of £14 8s. 5d. is, I conceive, perfectly correct, and, it will be perceived, is the sum given in my Return to the Commission, the amount having been arrived at by dividing the total amount of expenditure, of whatever nature, between the average number of children maintained in the institution during the year; and I respectfully submit that, had I done otherwise, the Return would have been incorrect, as I could not make any charges against their cost which had never been expended, or that we were in no way liable for.

If called upon to ascertain the actual cost, including all charges of producing any article of manufacture at a particular establishment, I should certainly not deem myself justified in estimating what it would be, supposing the factory in question was without its special advantages, merely because others did not possess them, but should take things as they stood in the particular case I was called to report upon.

The one great object in all such establishments to be kept constantly in view is the reduction of the expenditure, without impairing the efficiency of the service to be performed; but if credit is not to be taken for economy of working, where is the object in exercising it?

In order that a comparison could be drawn between this and similar institutions, both in England and the adjacent Colonies, I have kept the same form of return, and adopted the same method of arriving at the actual cost per head, as I find (with one exception) others have done; and if some establishments having advantages not possessed by us, or, on the contrary, we possess that which others do not, the difference might be estimated as to what, under these special circumstances, it would have been; but in a return such as I was called upon to furnish, no expense could be set down unless actually incurred, or for which the institution was liable.

In an official comparative abstract presented to both Houses of Parliament by command of Her Majesty, showing the cost per head of prisoners in the different great convict establishments in England, credit in every case is taken for the earnings of the men, and the net sum set down as the total cost of the maintenance of each prisoner for the year. In one case—that of Portland—the earnings equalled the whole expenditure; yet this self-supporting establishment could not by any process of reasoning be shown to cost as much as the others.

In the event of an estimate being required for the probable expenditure of this institution for the ensuing year, and knowing—say in the case of vegetables—that they would be raised on the grounds at a certain outlay to the institution, I should not estimate the cost at the amount we should have to pay if we purchased them in the ordinary manner, but merely take the actual expenditure required to obtain them, as this would be all they really did cost.

As shown in my return, every article of clothing is made in the institution, at a much less cost than they could be purchased for; but the difference between the actual cost and what might have been paid for them by purchase certainly could not be made a charge on the establishment.

In conclusion, may I venture respectfully to request that the Commission will allow this explanation to appear as an Appendix to their Report.

I have, &c.,
J. M. MAY,
Superintendent.

Secretary's Memo.

THE Returns furnished by the Superintendent of the Randwick Destitute Children's Asylum tend to prove—

1. That the institution is not economically managed.
2. That the system adopted of employing the inmates in the manufacture of the wearing apparel, &c., used in the establishment, is expensive and unsatisfactory.

There are in the Randwick Asylum 795 children, who are clothed, educated, and maintained, at an annual cash expenditure of £12,300 3s. 4d., or £15 9s. 5d. per head. There are in the Roman Catholic Orphan School at Parramatta 308 children (much less than half the number at Randwick), who are clothed, educated, and maintained, at an annual cash expenditure of £4,278 5s. 6d., or £13 17s. 9d. per head. A comparison of these two bare facts shows that the Randwick Asylum, with the advantage of distributing its expenditure among more than twice the number of children, expends upon its inmates £1 11s. 8d. per head more than is expended by the smaller institution. This of itself is a sufficient proof of defective management.

But upon a closer investigation, the costliness of the establishment at Randwick, when compared with the economy of the Roman Catholic Orphan School, becomes perfectly startling. At Randwick, the whole of the children's clothing is made upon the premises, and the returns furnished by the Superintendent show that there is obtained from the labour of the inmates a clear profit of £3,263 17s. 0½d. This surplus, which is of course expended in the maintenance of the institution, added to the actual cash expenditure of £12,300 3s. 4d., makes the total cost of the establishment £15,564 0s. 4½d. The actual cost per head, therefore, of the children in the Randwick Asylum is £19 11s. 6d. per head; or, taking the gross earnings of the children into consideration, about £25 per head. It may be said that the sum of £3,263 17s. 0½d. being derived from the labour of the children, should not be reckoned as increasing their average cost per head. The objection is a fallacy. According to the Superintendent's returns, the labour of the children produces in one year £7,972 13s. 3¼d. worth of goods, and of that sum £3,263 17s. 0½d. is a clear profit over and above all expenses. If a profit is made, some one must get the benefit of it. A thousand pounds paid into the exchequer of the Randwick Asylum is neither more nor less than a thousand pounds, whether it comes from the purse of a subscriber or from the labour of those who are supported by the Charity.

The Roman Catholic Orphan School possesses no such advantage. The clothes of the children are supplied by contractors, and are paid for out of the money voted by Parliament for the maintenance of the institution. No profit is realized by the employment of the inmates at various trades; and notwithstanding this, the children of the Roman Catholic Orphan School cost the Country £1 11s. 8d. per head per year less than the children of the Randwick Asylum, albeit the latter contribute £3,263 17s. 0½d. to their own maintenance.

That the management of the Randwick Institution is exceedingly extravagant as compared with the management of the other establishment which has been referred to, there can be no doubt. The only further question is as to the extent of that extravagance; and either it is outrageous, or the profit shown in the Superintendent's returns exists only in that gentleman's imagination.

WALTER H. COOPER,
Secretary to the Commission.

SPECIAL APPENDIX 10.

The Inspector General of Police to The President, Public Charities Commission.

(No. 74/165.)

Police Department,
Inspector General's Office,
Sydney, 14 April, 1874.

Sir,

I have the honor to state, in reply to your letter of the 13th instant, respecting the admission of children into the Randwick Asylum, of which I am one of the original founders, that during the time I was connected with the institution it was not the practice to make the Benevolent Asylum a receiving house for children to be admitted into the Randwick Asylum.

I have, &c.,
JNO. McLERIE,
Inspector General of Police.

BILOELA INDUSTRIAL SCHOOL.

The Secretary of the Public Charities Commission to the President.

Sydney, 25 August, 1873.

Sir,

I have the honor to inform you that, in pursuance of a resolution passed by the Commission, instructing me to make visits of inspection to and report upon the Industrial School for Girls at Biloela, I proceeded to that institution, accompanied by Messrs. Ellis and Goold, two of the Commissioners, on Saturday, the 16th instant.

We entered the institution at ten minutes past 7 o'clock, a.m., and proceeded at once to the quadrangle, in which we found a number of girls, some partially dressed, many without shoes or stockings, and all in a very untidy state. There was an inmate engaged in sweeping out each of the dormitories, the beds having been already made; there were three girls idling about in the mess-room; two cleaning out the cowshed, under the supervision of one of the matrons; three in the kitchen, preparing breakfast; several lounging in and about the bath-rooms; three amusing themselves in the laundry; and the remainder (with the exception of the officers' servants) wandering about the enclosure, under no supervision of any kind whatever.

The regulation breakfast-hour for the inmates is half-past 7 o'clock, but on this occasion the meal was not ready until twenty minutes past 8. It was stated that the delay was caused by the non-arrival of some oatmeal, which the contractor failed to send in proper time. There were eighty-nine inmates, and all of them, save one girl who was undergoing punishment for an attempted escape, were present at the breakfast-table. The meal consisted of bread, tea, and porridge, the last-mentioned article being sweetened with coarse ration sugar. The behaviour of the girls during the time they were in the mess-room was exceedingly good, and they both came to and left the tables without noise or confusion. After breakfast some of the inmates cleared the mess-room, while the others were permitted to amuse themselves in the quadrangle until the hour for morning muster. Having been mustered at 9 o'clock, the girls separated for prayers, the Catholics going into the mess-room, and the Protestants into one of the dormitories, to perform their devotions; and after these were concluded, the girls were dismissed to various employments and recreations.

At half-past 10 o'clock I went round the premises, accompanied by the matron (Mrs. Lucas), in order to see how the inmates were employed, and the following statement shows the proportion at work, viz:—

There were—

Cleaning mess-room	2 girls.
Attending children's bath	3 "
Cleaning hospital	2 "
Attending grown girls' bath	1 "
Employed in kitchen	4 "
Cleaning knives, spoons, &c.	1 "
Cleaning sewing-room	2 "
Attending house matron in clothing store	2 "
Pumping water	5 "
Sweeping grounds about school-house	6 "
Officers' servants	7 "

There were thus thirty-five of the inmates engaged in various occupations, and there being one girl undergoing punishment, there remained fifty-three still to be accounted for. These fifty-three were scattered about in all parts of the enclosure, under no sort of supervision, but doing just as they pleased. There were several playing among the pig-sties, some roaming about the beach, and a noisy troop of them in one of the matron's quarters—the matron in question being on duty elsewhere. Of those whom I have set down as being at work, many were playing about with their unemployed companions and neglecting their duty. Of the party detailed to sweep the grounds not one was to be seen at work, until the matron hunted them up and made them pick up the brooms and shovels which they had thrown down; and the five girls who were supposed to be pumping water for the institution were certainly near the pump, but did not touch it, so far as I saw. There did not seem to be any attempt made to enforce discipline, and the girls were impudent, disobedient, and unreprieved. Orders given by the officers were frequently disregarded and sometimes treated with derision. One girl, on being told to assist in pumping water, gave an impertinent and point blank refusal, for which she was not even censured.

The dinner-hour, according to the rules, is noon; but on this day the dinner was not ready until ten minutes before 1 o'clock. The meal consisted of bread, boiled meat, potatoes, and turnips. The meat having been cut up in the kitchen, was set upon the tables in the portions allotted to each inmate, and while the tables were being arranged a cat took possession of one inmate's meal. The girls straggled in by twos and threes, without any attempt at order, and when grace was said there were only sixty-four present. Of the twenty-four absentees, some dropped in, from time to time, up to the close of the meal, when there were seventy-nine present, nine girls never making their appearance at all. Mr. and Mrs. Lucas, when spoken to about these absentees, were quite unconscious of their absence. At fifteen minutes past 1 o'clock a signal was given by Mrs. Lucas, which was instantly followed by a general scrambling of food into aprons and pockets, the girls carrying off their half-eaten dinners to be devoured at leisure, either by themselves or their absent comrades. There was not a drop of water in the mess-room. The superintendent, on being spoken to as to this deficiency, said that if a girl wanted a drink she would have to go outside to the water-tap. The tap which he pointed out was outside the quadrangle, and some 20 yards from the mess-room door. There was on this day no water to be obtained from it; but there was a stone trough beneath it, from which immediately after dinner four or five children were seen lapping water, the apron of one of them being filled with bread, meat, and vegetables, which she had carried off from the mess-room.

During the day Messrs. Ellis and Goold assisted me to examine some of the storekeeper's books, and had an opportunity of observing the mode in which articles were issued from the store. The books examined were—The Daily Register, Stock Book, Work Book, Weekly Abstract, Register of Admittance, and Yearly Expenditure Book. No book of any description was found in the store; and the storekeeper stated that, with regard to the issue of articles of ordinary consumption, he trusted to his memory and made no record. Goods are issued to the inmates of the institution, on their simple request, without their producing any order, and without any entry of the issue being made. While we were in the store, several girls came in and asked for soap, soda, salt, &c., which articles were given to them without question; and two girls, without saying a word to any one or being spoken to by any one, carried off a bag of bran. An investigation of the books showed,—

1. That no matter how the number of inmates may vary, the quantities of goods consumed do not.
2. That some issues are never entered, their being no entry since 21 February, 1873, of the issue of salt, and no entry whatever of the issue of suet and currants.
3. That the same quantity of fuel is consumed in summer as in winter.
4. That many articles are omitted from the Stock Book.
5. That there is no proper check upon the issue of wearing apparel, bed-linen, &c.; as, for instance, when linen is issued (upon nobody's order) and made up into sheets, the sheets sometimes go back into the store and sometimes go direct into use, but in no case do they appear in the Stock Book.
6. That the entries in the Yearly Expenditure Book are vague and not properly dated—an account headed as for 1873 containing an entry dated "December."

I may remark that three of the inmates of this institution are boys of tender age, and that one is an infant. This child was committed to the Industrial School, under the name of Walter Tomlinson, by Mr. Henry Bayliss, Police Magistrate of Wagga, for having no lawful visible means of support.

I have, &c.,

WALTER H. COOPER,
Sec., Public Charities Commission.

MINUTES OF EVIDENCE.

BENEVOLENT ASYLUMS.

SATURDAY, 21 JUNE, 1873.

Members Present:—

WILLIAM CHARLES WINDEYER, Esq., PRESIDENT.

EYRE G. ELLIS, Esq.

MICHAEL METCALFE, Esq.

SAMUEL GOOLD, Esq.

CHARLES COWPER, JUN., Esq.

RICHARD DRIVER, Esq., M.P.

Mr. James Dennis, Superintendent, Asylum for the Infirm and Destitute, Parramatta, examined in the hospital ward:—

1. President.] This is the hospital ward? Yes.
2. How many beds are there in it? Twenty.
3. How many patients? Nineteen.
4. What medical man visits here? Dr. Rutter.
5. How many people are there in the institution altogether? 267.
6. Mr. Metcalfe.] All infirm men unable to work? Yes, all more or less infirm.
7. President.] Suppose these people were in an institution in the country where there was some land for them to cultivate, could they not do something? Yes. We have a paddock which has just been enclosed here to make a garden, and I have a gardener appointed and intend to make them work.
8. Are they allowed to smoke here? Yes.
9. In the sick wards? Yes. They cannot go out of the ward, some of them.
10. Mr. Cowper.] Do you find that any of them complain of the smoking? Never.
11. President.] Is the work of the place done by the inmates? Yes; we have no servants here except the inmates of the institution; they are paid some 1s., some 6d., some 4d. and some 3d. a day.
12. Mr. Ellis.] What is the average cost per head? I do not know exactly.
[Further examined in the infirm ward.]
13. President.] What inmates are in this ward? This is the infirm ward.
14. For those who are not ill, but simply infirm? Yes, these are mostly cases of paralysis.
15. How do you distinguish these cases from those in the hospital ward? The surgeon does that. He has charge of these two wards, and can order them as he likes.
16. Then this is a hospital ward? No, this is a ward that is used mostly for infirm patients—chronic cases.
[Further examined in the store-room.]
17. Will you weigh this loaf, which is issued as the rations of two men? (Loaf handed to witness.) It weighs 1 lb. 11 ounces. It is 5 ounces short.
18. Who supplies this bread? Mr. Freehill, of George-street, Sydney. I have frequently had to find fault with the bread.
19. You have frequently found fault with it? Yes, and reported it to the Board, both for lightness of weight and for the way in which it is made.
20. You have frequently complained of it? Yes, and reported it to the Board.
21. Mr. Ellis.] Do you object to the quality of the bread? No, but the quantity. (Half-loaf handed to witness.)
22. President.] The piece of bread you now weigh is one man's ration for the day? Yes.
23. The allowance is supposed to be 1 lb.? Yes, 16 ounces.
24. How much does this weigh? 13 ounces. It is 3 ounces short. But I always allow them an extra piece when the bread is short weight.* I allowed this morning 2 ounces. I calculated how many loaves we had, and how many loaves I would mulct the contractor in, and I found it to be nine loaves for the short weight in the bread, and I told any man who had short weight to come up and get an equivalent; and the man who had this loaf probably had another bit of bread given him to make up his pound.
25. How do you supply the deficiency? I supply the bread, and deduct it from the contractor.
26. But how do you supply the men? The men get it from the head wardsmen, in my presence.
27. From whom does he get it? I stopped nine loaves of bread from the contractor this morning.
28. How came you to have the surplus loaves to make up the weight? I stopped it.
29. But how did you do it? There were 146 loaves sent in—that is 288 rations—and all that I allowed the contractor was 137 loaves—that is deducting nine from the contractor.
30. Is he paid by the loaf or by the pound? By the pound.
31. But where do the loaves come from to make up the quantity? That is the nine loaves I have kept to make up each ration.
32. But how can you get the extra loaves out of the bread you get yourself? I have done it.
33. How many loaves do you get every day? It varies. To-day it was 146 loaves to make up 288 lbs. of bread.
- 34.

Mr. James
Dennis.

21 June, 1873.

* NOTE (on revision):—This man had his breakfast when this piece was weighed.

- Mr. James
Dennis.
- 21 June, 1873.
34. And how many loaves came in? 146.
35. Then you had rations for 288 people? I kept nine out of it, and procured seven.
36. But then you would be seven short? Yes, but I get it from my own baker in Parramatta, and charge Freehill with it. (Book produced.) You will see it entered in this book.
37. Is not this bread sour? No, I do not think it is sour. [Commissioners tasted the bread, and found it to be sour.]
38. Do you know as a matter of fact that the milk contract is sub-let? I do not know. I did not know the person who now supplies us had it until lately. I heard that Castner was sold off, but it is mere hearsay.
39. You do not know what the facts are? No, I do not. The contractor we have is Castner.
40. How often does Mr. King visit here? He has been ill lately. He has not been here since the 3rd May.
41. How many inmates have you now? There were 269 this morning.

Thomas Simpson, inmate, Parramatta Asylum, examined in the infirm ward:—

- T. Simpson.
- 21 June, 1873.
42. President.] How long have you been here? It is two years since I came here. I had my leg taken off about two years ago.
43. Have you applied for a leg? Yes.
44. And you would rather be out of the Asylum than in it? Yes.
45. What is your age? I am fifty.
46. Are you hearty and strong? Yes, as strong as a lion.
47. What would a leg cost? I believe one of those from Home would be about £13, but I think one could be got here that would do me very well for about £7.
48. What could you do to earn your living if you were out? I could do any sort of light work. I have been accustomed to work an engine, and have no doubt that if I had a leg I could do it still. I was a sailor first, and then I went on to the railways at Home and got to pick up some ways of doing things, and then I took to carpentering myself. I was a diver in Victoria; and I was diving up at the Penrith Bridge.
49. You believe that if you had a leg and were out you could earn your own living? Yes.
50. And you would rather be out? Yes.

James Jamieson, wardsman, Benevolent Asylum, examined in infirm ward:—

- J. Jamieson.
- 21 June, 1873.
51. Mr. Ellis.] Does the food always come up in this way? Yes, always.
52. When was this meat cooked? To-day.
53. Is that the way in which it is served up every day? Yes, every day.
54. Do they never get roast meat? Oh no; always boiled.
55. And always served up cold in that way? Yes, always cold; and the soup is always cold too.
56. Do you always bring the soup over in that way in slop-pails? Yes.
57. And what do the men drink it out of? Out of these dishes.
58. And where do they put the meat? In these plates.
59. Mr. Goold.] Do you give them a knife and fork? No; a knife, but no fork.
60. Do you give every one a knife? Yes, but some don't use one.

James Coleman, inmate, Benevolent Asylum, examined in the dining-room of the institution:—

- J. Coleman.
- 21 June, 1873.
61. President.] How long have you been here? For five or six years.
62. What are you making? A fishing-net.
63. Are you constantly employed in making fishing-nets? When I can get them to do.
64. Do you make them on your own account, or on account of the institution? On my own account.
65. Do you get paid for them? Yes.
66. Have you made any before? Yes. It is twelve months since I made one.
67. What do you get for making them? 1s. a pound.
68. And who finds the twine? The person for whom I am making the net.
69. What amount of money will you earn by making this net? About 32s.
70. And how long will it take you? About six weeks.
71. Do you think that a blind man could be taught to do this work? No. I could not get a living by it. A blind man could not do this—he could not see the meshes. There are different sizes; this is inch and a quarter mesh, and there are some 2 inches.
72. Do you spend your money as you like? Yes.
73. In getting tobacco and things of that sort? Yes. Sometimes I buy a pair of shoes.
74. Does not the institution find you in boots? Yes; but my legs are bad, and the boots are too heavy, so I get a pair of light ones.
75. Do the other inmates work? Yes; some of them make sennit for hats.

Charles Lambert, inmate, Benevolent Asylum, examined in the yard:—

- C. Lambert.
- 21 June, 1873.
76. President.] How old are you? Thirty-six.
77. You are suffering from blindness? Yes; I cannot see you now.
78. With that exception you are hale and hearty, are you not? Yes.
79. What allowance of bread do you get per day? One pound is the allowance, but we do not get a pound. I could eat it all at one meal, but I cut it into three pieces.
80. Your full ration for the day is served out at once? Yes.
81. Is that piece of bread you have there a third of what you got this morning? Yes.

82. What do you get besides the bread? A pint of tea in the morning and a pint in the evening, and some meat for dinner and soup. C. Lambert.
83. Are you allowed sugar for your tea, or is it sweetened for you? It is sweetened for us. 21 June, 1873.
84. Do you ever go without bread for your tea? Yes, often. I am sometimes so hungry that I eat it all at one meal; I sometimes eat it all for breakfast.
85. Supposing that there was some work found for blind people to do, would it not be an amusement for you to do it? I do not know what I could do. I have been a sailor myself.
86. Mr. Ellis.] But if there were any work that you could do? I would be very glad to do it.
87. In some institutions the blind are taught some kinds of work? Yes, I would be very glad to be taught. I am not old.
88. Would it not be better for you than remaining here? Yes; the only way I can get any exercise is to get some man who can see to take me out.
89. President.] Do you go out every day? No, not every day. We go sometimes and have a swim in the water.
90. Do you bathe regularly in the summer? Yes, and in the winter too—I do.
91. Is that part of the routine of the place? Not all the men go, but I go because I think it does my eyes good.
92. Is there anything you wish to say about the place here? The meat is sometimes stinking, and we always get it cold like this (showing a plate of meat).
93. Is that bullock's heart you are eating? Some of it is. I can only tell by the taste of it. We often get bullock's heart, and not much of that.

Thomas Kingston, inmate, Benevolent Asylum, examined in the infirm ward:—

94. President.] What were you before you came here? I was mate of a vessel. T. Kingston.
95. How long have you been here? Three years. 21 June, 1873.
96. Is there anything that you think we should know about the place here? Well, I am pretty comfortable as far as I am concerned myself, but I think there ought to be some change of food. As far as I am concerned I have everything that I require, but there are others who are not so well off. The washing of the clothes is very bad. I have had sheets on me that have stunk for want of washing, and since I have been here I have been obliged to get my own things washed. Of course my own friends are not very well able to pay for it, but they give me a few pence to get my clothes washed.
97. What was it you said about the food? The beef is bad, but the soup is good—the men like the soup—and the potatoes are very bad sometimes.
98. How about the meat? The meat is very bad at times.
99. Mr. Ellis.] Do you mean bad in quality, or decayed? Smells sometimes. Sometimes the soup has smelt very bad, but I am fond of the soup.
100. You cannot touch it? Yes, I do.
101. But you say that it smells bad? Yes, the meat must be bad.
102. You do not mean that the meat is coarse, but getting rotten? Yes, evidently bad; and the bread is also very bad sometimes, and at other times it is good.
103. President.] How do you mean that the bread is bad? It is sour sometimes.
104. Where does it come from? I cannot say.
105. What is the allowance per day? I get as much as I require. With respect to the allowance, I never heard of there being any scale of diet, or what it really is.
106. What is the regular allowance? A pound a day. I get plenty myself, but from what I hear from the others they fare hard. There are some have their clothes in bits, the collars all torn and ragged, and I often pity them. I myself have got good clothes, and I get them washed by people in the yard.
107. Mr. Metcalfe.] Can the people in the yard wash? Yes, and they get paid for it.
108. President.] What are you suffering from? Paralysis, and a tumour inside.
109. Mr. Ellis.] Are you sufficiently provided with clean bed-clothes? There could be an improvement. From what I see, they are short of water here. There could be an improvement in the washing, and also in the cook-house.
110. How often do you get a change of bed-clothes? We have a sheet on once a week, and those who are bad cases have it oftener. They are changed once a week; there could be an improvement in that.
111. Only once a week? Yes.
112. All through the summer? Yes. I have had blankets on me for two years.
113. Without their being washed? Yes, without their being washed.
114. Were there no vermin in them? I do not know. Sometimes there have been vermin on me, and that is why I get my clothes washed.
115. Do you mean to say that you have had the same blankets on you for two years? Yes.
116. Has that been the case with others? I cannot speak of others—I only speak of myself.
117. Mr. Metcalfe.] What do you do about a bath? Of course I wash myself, but in that bath place you get more dirty than when you go into it. It is in a very dirty state.

Thomas Groves, inmate, Parramatta Benevolent Asylum, examined in the infirm ward:—

118. President.] How long have you been here? About three years. T. Groves.
119. What were you before you came here? I was house steward of the Sydney Infirmary. I kept the books and regulated the diets in the time of Dr. Houston and Mrs. Ghost. 21 June, 1873.
120. Are you suffering from paralysis? No, from chronic rheumatism.
121. Do you wish to make any statement about the food here? The food is very monotonous. There is bread and tea for breakfast and tea, and bread and boiled beef and a drop of soup for dinner. We have potatoes twice a week, but they are generally so bad that they have to go out of the ward the same as they come in.

- T. Groves.
21 June, 1873.
122. Mr. Cowper.] Is the beef always boiled? Yes, always. We never see the slightest change. The potatoes are very indifferent, so much so that the greater part of them go out of the ward just as they come in.
123. Do you never have any pumpkins or green vegetables? Never get anything of the sort. I complained to Mr. Dennis that living always on bread and meat, it made me costive and make me weak, and he was good enough to send me vegetables from his garden, and allow me some mutton instead of the beef, which I find do me good.*
124. You say that there is never any change—the food is always the same? Yes. I think it would be better if there could be a change. I am informed that the potatoes are so bad that it is difficult to get any of them at all eatable, and as nothing else is substituted for them it is rather hard fare.
125. How do you find the bread? Latterly it has been better; but before, it was very indifferent indeed—stale and sour and bitter.
126. What about the weight? I do not know myself, but I believe there are great complaints in the yard about the weight, amongst the men there. They have better appetites than we have in here. We do not, as a rule, eat the pound of bread, but outside the men are able to eat a good deal more, especially this cold weather. They sometimes eat all their bread at breakfast-time. It is not unusual for them to do so.
127. It is all given out at once—the whole day's ration? Yes.
128. President.] Do they complain that they have not enough? Yes.
129. Do you think the complaint is well founded? Yes.
130. Have you ever noticed the quality of the soup? No, I never take it, but I believe that it is generally liked by the men who get it.
131. Mr. Ellis.] Have you heard complaints about it? Yes—sometimes it smells badly, and sometimes it tastes as if the meat were putrid in it; but not often.
132. Have you any reason to complain of the meat yourself? No, never.
133. What age are you? Close on forty.
134. How long have you been here? About three years.
135. Have you any friends outside? Yes; they are very kind to me, and send me a few shillings now and then—I should not be alive but for that. Rheumatism destroys the appetite, and the constitution becomes weakened, and I should not exist at all but for what little things I get. There are thirty people in these two sick wards, and all the extras that come here are one glass of rum and two glasses of gin, and my mutton, and a little milk, and that is all that comes in. That is the usual average. Three inmates are allowed a pint of beef tea each per day; three a pint of gruel; and one a pint of arrowroot; one an egg, and nine a pint of milk each; one a gill of rum, and one a glass of gin, exclusive of two gills of rum to the wardsmen.
136. Mr. Cowper.] Have you heard that the old people prefer this institution to the one at Liverpool? Yes.
137. Can you say why? Yes; because there is more liberty for them here to walk out, and they can do a little washing in the yard, and there are many ways in which they can make a penny or two-pence.
138. President.] For whom do they do washing? For myself and others.
139. And you pay for it? Yes.
140. How is the washing done? Sometimes it is very indifferent, and we have complained to Mr. Dennis, and he has changed the clothes and sent others over.
141. Are all the clothes washed by the inmates? Yes, by paid inmates, but there is a bad supply of water. The supply is obtained from wells and tanks, and the water-cart has to come several times a day. That makes a great scarcity in the water, and it is to the cost of the institution. The water-cart brings in water by contract.
142. Has it struck you that the labour of the inmates could be used in any way? No. Many of them are so crippled that there could be little done in that way. If they come in for a little temporary relief, those who get it go out as soon as they can, and those who are not able to go out are set to work as wardsmen, wood-cutters, and so on.
143. Is there anything that you wish to suggest or that you think it right we should know about the place? Yes. If the water supply was improved it would be an advantage, and the monotony of the food is unpleasant. It is always the same—there is no change.
144. How do you find the dispensing of the medicines carried on? When the doctor orders medicine it is frequently a long time before we can get it. It has come in twenty-four hours after it has been ordered. It has been so with myself and others here throughout these wards. We never get anything until we want it very badly indeed. The dispenser is away often, as he has to attend other places.

James Reid, inmate, Parramatta Benevolent Asylum, examined in the hospital ward, at his own request:—

- J. Reid.
21 June, 1873.
145. President.] You wish to say something? Yes.
146. How long have you been here? About six weeks. I have been under an operation; had a hole cut in my side, and it is protruding out of my side, so that I have to put on pieces of blanket to bind it up.
147. Have you seen the doctor? Yes.
148. What doctor? I think his name is Rutter. I saw him once, but the ward has been closed when he has been since, and I have been prevented from seeing him.
149. Has he not been to see you? Yes, he has been twice, and I complained to him.
150. Did he see you afterwards? I have seen him passing the door.
151. But he has not been to see you? No.
152. Mr. Driver.] When Dr. Rutter saw you did he order you anything? He did; he ordered me a dressing.
153. Have you seen him since? Yes; he spoke to the wardsmen, and it appears that there is no dressing or bandages allowed for men here.
154. Who said so? The wardsmen.
155. You have had none? No.
156. Although you were ordered one? Yes, ten days after I came in.

157.

* NOTE (on revision):—The mutton is not given by Mr. Dennis, but is allowed by the doctor as a medical comfort.

157. President.] Where was this operation performed? In the Sydney Infirmary, by Dr. Jones and Dr. Fortescue. J. Reid.
158. What is the name of the wardsman you complain of? I do not know his name. It is No. 1 ward—the hospital ward. That is the man there (indicating Benjamin Pretty).^{*} 21 June, 1873.

Benjamin Pretty, wardsman, Parramatta Benevolent Asylum, examined in the hospital ward, in the presence of James Reid:—

159. President.] This patient (James Reid) complains that he is suffering from the effects of an operation which requires that he should have proper bandages; that the doctor has ordered him bandages and that none have been supplied? Yes; I have applied for them several times. B. Pretty.
160. To whom? To the dispenser. 21 June, 1873.
161. Who is the dispenser? Mr. Austin.
162. Does he live here? Yes.
163. How long is it since you applied to him last? Last week.
164. How long is it since the doctor ordered them? About a week ago, or may be more.
- [Reid.] I was only ten days here when he ordered them. I do not think it is so long as that, but it may be more than a week ago.
165. What reason did the dispenser give for not supplying them? I cannot say why he did not supply them. I have applied for them and never got them. Whatever is got for the patients I get through the dispenser. The man has had a substitute for them. He has a false passage in his side under his shoulder, and all the food he takes comes through there.
- [Reid.] And here I have to lie here in the cold wind, and he won't allow me to have that bed over there where the wind won't blow on me, and there is no one sleeps there.
166. Is this the case? I have not refused him. He can have that bed whenever he likes.

Frederick Hillier, inmate, Parramatta Benevolent Asylum, examined in dormitory:—

167. President.] When did you come here? I came here from the Infirmary, and was glad to leave that place. F. Hillier.
168. Why? The women there domineer over one, and try to get a patient turned out because he won't work. The principal work there is done by the patients. The doctor there ordered me not to go out in the cold, on account of my eyes; and Sister Mary required me to go down to the straw house when I was in a perspiration with washing up the things, and I refused to go, and she said she would report me to the doctor. She also gave me a pair of trousers without any buttons on, and because I asked for a needle to put buttons on, she told me to go to bed. It was then 10 o'clock a.m., and I said I would go when ordered by the doctor. I stopped in the hospital for fourteen weeks, and she reported me several times for smoking. 21 June, 1873.
169. Mr. Ellis.] What complaints have you against this place? The provisions for one thing—the meat, bread, and potatoes—and the cooking of them. The cooks we have here are not fit to cook for pigs, and the rations are not according to the scale. There is a pound of meat allowed to each man, and I have never had above 6 ounces any day, and not more than 4 ounces sometimes. Then the bread is light; it does not weigh above 1 lb. 4 ounces; instead of 2 lbs., and some of us go short. There is many a man goes hungry this weather; and the potatoes are not fit to eat.
170. When do you get them? Twice a week.
171. Are there any other vegetables allowed you? You are supposed to get them in the soup, and sometimes they are there, and sometimes there are none. The whole management of the place is carried on by paupers, and the master only comes occasionally as a matter of form, and seldom examines the food either before or after it is cooked.†

Matthew Sands, wardsman, Parramatta Benevolent Asylum, examined in dormitory:—

172. President.] How long have you been here? I came in the 17th October last. M. Sands.
173. Where did you come from? I was in the Liverpool Asylum before I came here.
174. For how long? For a few months. There is great discipline there. I venture to make that remark. 21 June, 1873.
175. And is it not better for the inmates of the place that there should be discipline? Evidently so.
176. It keeps the place in better order? Yes.
177. Mention the difference in the discipline here to what it is there? Here there are no regular hours for getting out in the morning. In fact, all the establishment is carried on in a perfect state of discipline at Liverpool; there are certain hours for carrying on everything, and I consider when the fixed hours are selected it is better for the inmates. Here there is no regularity. The wards are opened at half-past 5 or 6 or 7, and so on.

* NOTE (on revision):—The statements made in this paper are correct. Since I complained to the Commissioners, the wardsman has been removed, and another substituted in his place. The attendance, since the change, is better. Have not received any bandages or dressings since.—JAMES REID.

† NOTE (on revision):—INFIRMARY.—I have great reason to complain of the overbearing arrogance of Sister Mary; also of her gross neglect of the instructions given by the medical gentlemen—not in my case only, but as a general rule—and this will be borne out by the medical gentlemen themselves.

BENEVOLENT ASYLUM, PARRAMATTA.—I complain of the great difficulty of getting an audience of the master. His office door is guarded by a pauper called a constable, who demands your business; and be it ever so private, he denies admission until he can convey your why and wherefore to the master, who will sometimes keep us waiting for an hour before he deigns to listen to our wants or complaints, be they ever so urgent. The washing is shamefully neglected—in fact it is but a dip and a shake, and frequently both sheets and shirts are given out half-dry. Shirts without buttons, aye, and sometimes without a sleeve, and the body in tatters; the trousers about the same. No one will trouble themselves about them, nor is there any redress. There is a tailor, but he will not work for paupers, although paid for it. There is also a matron, who is paid well for looking after the linen, but she is the lady of the master and is very seldom seen. There are many in this institution who could give a great deal more information than I can, and who would have made known many grievances had they known the purpose of the visit of the gentlemen of the Royal Commission, but no one announced them or made known their purpose.

- M. Sands.

178. What of that? The hours are irregular. There should be regular hours.
179. But what happens at 6 o'clock instead of 7? I am waiting to carry my tubs out, and I ought to have to carry them down at a particular hour, but I have sometimes to go one hour and sometimes another.
180. Why could you not do it at a regular hour? Because the doors are not opened. In Liverpool the wardman has charge of the establishment. I had charge of a ward there.
181. What time do they lock up here? Oh, there is no particular time—half-past 6 or 7; there is no fixed hour.
182. What is the latest time? I cannot tell you the hour. There is no particular hour. Sometimes it is half-past 6, sometimes a quarter-past 6, and so on. Then there are not different kinds of wards here,—all the diseases are mixed up together.
183. Do I understand you to say that there are some sick people here who should be in the hospital ward? Yes; here is a man here who should be in the hospital ward (referring to inmate). He should be down-stairs, where there are only twelve or fourteen beds in a place where there is room for thirty-six beds.
184. How old are you? Seventy-two.
185. Have you been a soldier? No. There is a man here who gets up and wanders about in the night, disturbing every one.
186. Does he appear to be insane? Yes, there is no doubt of it.
187. Does he disturb the patients at night? Yes, at 2 or 3 o'clock in the morning, and there's a man who has fits, so that we have to put his bed on the floor for fear of his rolling out.

Edward Rawlings, wardman, Parramatta Benevolent Asylum, examined in dormitory:—

- E. Rawlings.
21 June, 1873
188. Mr. Ellis.] Are those tins used for tea as well as soup? Yes. These are used for dinner, and after dinner we have to bring up a certain quantity for those who have tea.
189. The meat is put into those dishes at 11 o'clock? Yes.
190. When do the men get it? About 1.
191. Then it is two hours in the dishes getting cool? Yes, it is so.
192. And then you use the same dishes for tea? Yes, for the tea.*

John Walker, wardman, Parramatta Benevolent Asylum, examined in dormitory:—

- J. Walker.
21 June, 1873
193. President.] How many sleep in this ward at night? Sixty-three.
194. How many are there who should be in a sick ward? There is one man there who has never got out of bed since he got into it.
195. How long has he been in? About three weeks.
196. Why is he not in the hospital ward? I do not know. They put him up here and keep him here.
197. Mr. Couper.] Does the doctor ever come to see him? Yes, when he is required.
198. When is he required? When the man asks for him.
199. Does he not come regularly as a matter of duty? No, not unless he is sent for.
200. President.] Are all these beds occupied? Yes.
201. Are they as close together at night? No, they are a little more apart. I shift them away from one another a little.
202. What is the matter with that man in the corner (referring to inmate)? I think that he is suffering from lead-poisoning. He gets his medicine and a mutton chop every day.
203. Mr. Couper.] Is that nicely cooked? Yes.
204. Is the bread good? It is rather light in weight.
205. Is it sour? No.
206. Is it stale? No.
207. Is it musty? No.
208. How is the soup? Passable.
209. Do you hear any objections to the meat being boiled every day? No, I have never heard any one object to it.
210. Are the potatoes good? No, very bad.
211. How long have you been here? About four months.

John Turner, bath-man, Parramatta Benevolent Asylum, examined in the bath-room:—

- J. Turner.
21 June, 1873
212. President.] How long have you been here? One year and six months.†
213. This is the bath-room? Yes.
214. Do all the men on the establishment wash here? Yes.
215. Mr. Couper.] What time do they begin in the morning? About twenty minutes past 6.
216. What time do they get done? I have the place all cleaned up by half-past 11.
217. Mr. Ellis.] They all come here to wash? Yes, all of them that can come.
218. How many wash in the same water? They all have fresh water.
219. Is there room enough—do they all wash in this room? Yes, they all come in here. There are eighteen dishes here.
220. What do the blind men do? They all come here, and I empty the dishes into the bucket for them.
221. Mr. Couper.] How often do the men have a bath? Every time the boards come down—the bed-boards.

222.

*NOTE (on revision):—I beg to transmit further for your information, that Lady Dennis receives one quart of beef-tea daily, equal to two pounds of our meat, daily for several years, and she never inspects our messes or linen; and allowed the pudding on Her Majesty's Birthday to be made in a bath previously used by the inmates. During the last rain Mr. Dennis came up to No. 4 ward and ordered me to take down several good mattresses, his pigs being in want of bedding, and the fresh ones for the use of the dormitory were damp straw.—EDWARD RAWLINGS, Parramatta, 8th July.

†NOTE (on revision):—Two years and six months.

222. And how often do they come down? They all come down every month.
 223. How many basins are there in the lavatory? Eighteen.
 224. So that eighteen men can wash at once? Yes.
 225. And every man has fresh water? Yes.
 226. How is the water supply? The pump throws it up into the cistern.
 227. Mr. Ellis.] How many men bathe in the same water? Mostly two.
 228. Will you undertake to say that not more than two men wash in the same water? Two; I think not more.
 229. Where are the towels? Here. (Towels produced.)
 230. How many men use the same towel? I put three clean towels up every night.
 231. How many use those three towels? All the men who are down in the yard.
 232. How many is that? About 130 men.
 233. Then 130 men have only three towels to use? Yes.*

J. Turner.
 21 June, 1873.

William Francis, inmate, Parramatta Benevolent Asylum, examined in the yard:—

234. Mr. Gould.] What sort of meat do you get? The meat comes in sometimes necks and sometimes legs with the bones.
 235. You have seen the meat come in yourself in that way? Yes.
 236. And the contract is that it should be supplied in joints and quarters? I do not know. I suppose fore and hind quarters.
 237. You find that there are too many shins? Yes; legs and necks.
 238. Is it always sweet? Oh no, we have had it stinking.
 239. Has that happened recently? Yes, a week or so ago—I can't say to a day.
 240. Do you get your proper allowance of meat? Sometimes there is 4 ounces, sometimes 5, and sometimes there may be 6 ounces.
 241. How do you find the soup? The soup is passable—as good soup as could be made from the sort of meat.
 242. How is the bread? I have no fault to find with the bread, what there is of it.
 243. Have you ever found it sour? Yes, I have found it to be sour, but I can't say when.
 244. Do you get your full weight of bread? I cannot say. I am doubtful about that.
 245. Do you get enough? No; if you were to see one of those loaves cut in half you would see there was a small bit for each man.
 246. Do you get enough meat? I could eat more if I had it.
 247. Do you get your full allowance? No, I do not.
 248. How long have you been here? I came here on the 4th February.
 249. What are you suffering from? A bad leg.

W. Francis.
 21 June, 1873.

Edward Reynolds, wardman, Parramatta Benevolent Asylum, examined in the yard:—

250. President.] How long have you been an inmate of the Asylum? Since February.
 251. How old are you? Thirty-nine.
 252. Where did you come from to get here? I only had a month's work since I have been in the Colony. I came out from London, and had an accident on board the "Grafton," and hurt my arm, and I had no means of support.
 253. You had a sprained arm? Yes.
 254. Did you go into the Infirmary? No; Dr. Moore attended me as long as I had means.
 255. How did you get taken in here? I went to the Board.
 256. You are well now? Yes, I am comparatively well. I was made wardman here the beginning of the month.
 257. Were you at sea before you came out here? No, I was always in private service.
 258. Is there anything the matter with you now? No, nothing the matter with me, but I sometimes feel a pain in my arm.
 259. You cannot do hard work? No, not laborious work.
 260. What was your occupation? I was always in gentlemen's service before I came here, but I cannot get any employment, and I cannot live out of this unless there is somewhere for me to go to.

E. Reynolds.
 21 June, 1873.

FRIDAY, 27 JUNE, 1873.

Members Present:—

WILLIAM CHARLES WINDEYER, ESQ., PRESIDENT.

SAMUEL GOOLD, Esq.
 MICHAEL METCALFE, Esq.

EYRE G. ELLIS, Esq.
 CHARLES COWPER, JUN., Esq.

Samuel W. Mansfield, Esq., clerk and accountant, Maternity Hospital, examined during inspection of the institution:—

261. President.] You are clerk and accountant of this Society? The Benevolent Asylum—yes.
 262. How long have you been connected with the institution? In that capacity?

S. W. Mansfield, Esq.
 263. 27 June, 1873.

* NOTE (on revision):—There are upon an average about 260 in the institution at all times; and from sixty to seventy of those are in the sick wards, or in bed; the remainder come here to wash.
 One bar of soap, weighing about 2 lbs. is allowed each week for the whole.
 One bath is all that is provided for all, owing to the piping and tap connecting the bath with the boiler (for warm water) being out of repair. The bath has been very little used for a long time.

- S. W.
Mansfield,
Esq.
- 27 June, 1873.
263. Yes? Ten or eleven years. I have been connected with the institution for nearly nineteen years.
264. What salary do you receive? £400 a year now.
265. You live on the premises? No.
266. You do not live in the institution? No; I have no perquisites.
267. No allowance for house rent or rations? No.
268. What are your hours of attendance here? I come at half-past 6 in the morning during this time of the year, and in the summer-time earlier; go home to breakfast, and return a little after 9, and remain until dinner-time, when I go home to dinner, and return at 2 o'clock, and remain here until 5 or 6 or 7. There is no fixed time. On committee out-days it is very often 6 or 7, or even later, when I leave.
269. What are your duties? To keep all the accounts of the Society, and keep all the records—to issue all allowances to the out-pensioners, to visit and report on the out-pensioners, report different cases, and have the general management of that department altogether,—the entire management.
270. That is, of the out-door relief? Yes; to report upon the different cases weekly. Here is the record of my reports on the different cases. (Report book produced.)
271. Will you enumerate the rest of your duties? There are no other special duties that I can think of. I have the general supervision of the whole; I am over the institution.
272. How is the institution managed; what is its organization? In what respect?
273. What is the governing body of the institution? The committee.
274. Consisting of how many members? Twenty-eight, I think, now. According to the rules they must not exceed thirty-four.
275. Does that include the president, vice-presidents, honorary secretary, and treasurer? No.
276. All of whom are members of the committee? Yes, ex officio.
277. And may come and form part of it? Yes.
278. How is this body elected or appointed? At the annual meetings.
279. By whom? The subscribers.
280. Do you know how many subscribers there are to the institution? At the present time?
281. Yes? I do not know the exact number; I think about 400 or 500.
282. What was the amount of the subscriptions last year? £780 odd, I think, speaking from memory.
283. Mr. Metcalfe.] £710, according to last year's report? There was something after that, I think. It came up to £780.
284. How much was contributed by the Government last year? £500 towards out-door relief.
285. Is this institution kept up on an income of £1,200 a-year? No.
286. Mr. Cowper.] Surely the Government gave £3,500 last year? They give a grant of £500 to the out-door relief, and all inmates are paid for by the Government at so much per head in addition to the £500.
287. President.] What, last year, did the Government contribute towards the maintenance of the institution in all its departments? £3,772 15s. 1d. That was not for the year, because that includes the last quarter of 1871.
288. What is the average annual contribution of the Government to the institution in all its branches? About that amount.
289. Mr. Cowper.] Did they not contribute over £10,000 in the years 1860 and 1861? That was under a different arrangement altogether.
290. Did they not contribute £7,000 in 1866? That was under a different arrangement; that included £2,500, a special grant for building.
291. President.] What was the arrangement? All the paupers were here,—all the old men and women.
292. Now the contribution is £4,000 a year? No, the general grant is £4,208. That was put on years ago, but we have never expended that amount, and never drawn it. Every quarter an account is rendered to the Government for so many women and children.
293. What other sources of income have you? The Police fines.
294. You mean the fines from the Police Benches? Yes; that is a very trifling matter.
295. That was, last year, £381 6s. 10d.? About that.
296. In your account of last year there appears a sum of £211 for interest: what is that the interest of? Interest on money invested, and the rent of a farm at Bankstown.
297. What is the rent of the farm? £10 a year, and £75 for interest on Government debentures; at least, £150 for the year, and £75 for the half-year.
298. You have not yet made up the £211? I cannot charge my memory with the exact items.
299. There is the rent of the farm, £10 a year, and there is the interest on debentures? Yes, and interest on No. 2 debentures.
300. Is there anything else? Nothing else.
301. How long has the farm been in the possession of the institution? Many years.
302. How many years? I cannot say exactly. It was long before I was connected with the institution.
303. How long ago is that? Nineteen years.
304. Was it given to the institution? No.
305. How did the Society come to get it? It was mortgaged to the Society, and the Society had to foreclose and take the land. It was a loss. The mortgage was £400, and the farm lets for £10 a year.
306. How big is it? 240 acres.
307. How far is it from Sydney? About fifteen miles.
308. Any of it under cultivation? There has been, but there is none now.
309. How did the institution become possessed of the debentures? There are £3,000 worth of debentures derived from the Railway Company by the purchase of land for railway purposes.
310. Land purchased from the Society? Yes.
311. And the other debentures? There are £1,000 from the late Mr. Manson, invested in New Zealand debentures. This money was left as a legacy to the Society.
312. Then these are all your sources of income? Yes, these are all.
313. Mr. Metcalfe.] Buildings have been added here since you got that money for the land from the Railway Company? Yes.
314. Why was not that money expended in putting up these additional buildings? ———
315. President.] Is there any money at interest as a bank deposit? Yes, some £10,000 or £11,000.

S. W.
Mansfield,
Esq.

27 June, 1873.

316. You did not mention that just now? Of course we have the interest of that.
317. Mr. Metcalfe.] You do not use the interest of these investments to pay the expenses of the establishment? No.
318. President.] How much money is there deposited in this way in the bank? £10,449, I think, from what I see in the report, but I can show you more clearly by one of my sheets.
319. I see by your account that you have £11,000 as a bank deposit? Yes.
320. What bank is that in? The Bank of New South Wales.
321. Mr. Metcalfe.] What do you get for that? 3 per cent.
322. What is the amount by this time, less the general account, in the bank? The general account was overdrawn, and this was taken from the accumulated interest which this account should show more clearly.
323. But how does the institution become possessed of this £11,000? It is made up of—house sold, £785; legacies and accumulated interest, £9,761 9s.; and legacies and land sold, £5,895 9s. 6d.; investment in the farm, £480,—making a total of £16,921 18s. 6d. Then there is on the other side—by investment (farm), £480; by Government debentures, £3,000; by New Zealand debentures, £1,000; by deposit in Bank of New South Wales, due 25 June, 1873, at 3 per cent., £6,000; by amount not re-invested, £5,000 15s. 4d.; and loan from accumulated interest to general account, £1,135 3s. 2d.; total, £16,921 18s. 6d.
324. What is the actual amount of the legacies that the institution holds? £5,330, and then there is the accumulated interest.
325. Mr. Cowper.] Does the interest bring the amount up to £19,000? No; to £9,761.
326. President.] But you have here in this report £19,000? That is a misprint; it should be £9,000.
327. Is the difference between that £5,000 and the £11,000 made up by the interest? Yes, you see here on bank deposits not expended but accumulating.
328. Do the directors never spend the interest? Yes, they have invested it.
329. But there it is only lent? The institution has got a fund from which they overdraw the annual amount of the interest, and, instead of spending that money, they re-invest it. That has been done for years.
330. What amount of interest is re-invested in this way, instead of being used in working the institution? What amount?
331. Yes, what amount of interest instead of being spent last year was put into the bank again? You can scarcely get at the amount last year, but you must take the whole amount.
332. Was there any interest coming in last year from any sources? Yes.
333. How much? I cannot say how much just now.
334. Mr. Metcalfe.] Will not your ledger tell you? No, I do not keep the cash account there. This sheet (sheet produced) will show clearly the interest up to last year.
335. President.] I want to know what interest accrued due to the institution last year? I think about £400.
336. What became of that £400? That went to the general account.
337. I thought that you told us that it was re-invested, and not used in working the institution? When the deposits come due the interest is not re-invested; but the practice has been to add the interest to what was deposited, and re-invest it, until the year before last, when this account was overdrawn, and this sum was taken from it before any re-investment was made.
338. Mr. Metcalfe.] But these accounts are added up to the end of 1872, and it seems that the money received for interest was £211 exactly? Yes, irrespective of the interest on deposits—there is no account of that at all.
339. That does not appear in this account at all? No.
340. But that is very strange. What interest is that £211 then? On the Government debentures paid into the bank half-yearly, and the rent of the farm, and the New Zealand debentures.
341. The money from these is used in working the institution? Yes.
342. But the interest on the bank deposits is not used? No, it is not.
343. President.] Can you tell us why? I cannot.
344. Mr. Metcalfe.] What is the object of the directors accumulating this large fund—and why do they make a difference between one source of revenue and another; you have got some you use and some that you do not use—why is that? I cannot give any definite reason for it, unless it is done with a view of accumulating something more in the bank.
345. You do not know what is the ultimate object of these accumulations? No, I cannot say, except to make a fund from the interest of which the operations of the Society might be carried on.
346. President.] Have the Government any control in the management of the institution? Only by the inspector.
347. They have no voice in the management of its affairs? No.
348. Mr. Metcalfe.] And yet they find five-sixths of the funds? More than that—nine-tenths.
349. President.] How often does the Board meet? Weekly, and quarterly the general committee—the whole committee; the house committee meet every Tuesday.
350. Mr. Metcalfe.] You have a sub-committee that meet every Tuesday? Yes, the house committee.
351. President.] Of how many members is it composed? Sixteen.
352. What is the average attendance? Six, eight, or ten sometimes.
353. Mr. Metcalfe.] Do the same members attend at every meeting? No, not always.
354. Mr. Gould.] You have here in this balance sheet an item of £64 10s. “on account of inmates”: is that paid by the parents of the children? It is in some cases.
355. How is it made up—in what other cases is money paid? Single women pay for admission.
356. President.] Do all single women pay for admission? No; every case is considered by the committee upon its merits, but the system of making the single women pay was introduced because it was thought to be a check upon them.
357. Does this sub-committee of sixteen practically manage the institution? Yes.
358. What time does their sitting extend to every week? They meet at 4, and sit sometimes to 7.
359. What sort of business do they transact? First of all general business, read minutes of the previous meeting, receive applications for out-door relief, or any other matter connected with the internal management of the house.

- S. W. Mansfield, Esq.
27 June, 1873.
360. Do you find that much time is taken up in discussing matters at length? Yes, on some occasions.
361. What does that arise from, in your opinion? From differences of opinion sometimes as to the merits of applicants.
362. Do you think that it in any way arises from the size of the committee? No, I do not think so.
363. Do you see any object in having so large a committee—a committee of twenty-eight members? That is the general committee.
364. Do you see any object in having so large a general committee? No, I do not see any object in having so large a committee, nor have I found any inconvenience from its size, as far as my experience is concerned.
365. Do you not think that a smaller committee would get through the work more rapidly and with less waste of time? I think that they might—on some occasions particularly—but as a rule I have not found the committee too large. On the quarter-days the business is very soon gone through. It is mere formal business, merely the reception of documents and reading them over, and so on. With the weekly committees there is a good deal of time lost, but that does not occur from the number of members.
366. From what cause does it occur? From difference of opinion among the parties present; but on the whole I do not see any reason to complain of that.
367. When you say that time is lost then, do you not mean that it is lost unnecessarily? Merely by argument about some of the cases that come before the Board—with reference particularly to the admission of young females. There is often a strong feeling and discussion on that subject. Some members think that cases should be admitted, and others think that they should not, from the circumstances that come before the Board.
368. What position does the matron occupy in the place? She has the entire management of the institution inside—the direction and management of the house.
369. She looks after the internal affairs of the institution? Yes, as far as the management goes—not the stores.
370. Everything with regard to the management of the wards, and the cooking, and the clothing, and the discipline of the wards? Yes, they are entirely under her control.
371. And you look after the stores and the external affairs of the institution? Yes.
372. Dr. Renwick is the medical officer attending here? Yes.
373. How often does he come? Twice every day, morning and afternoon, and at any hour day or night when his services may be required.
374. Is he paid? Yes.
375. What salary does he get? £250.
376. Your subscriptions are collected by a collector on a commission, I suppose? Yes.
377. Mr. Metcalfe.] The subscriptions have fallen off very much, have they not? No; rather increased within the last two years.
378. Up to 1855 they were much larger? Yes.
379. President.] At that time there were not so many institutions of a benevolent kind? No, perhaps not; but that is not the reason. At that time this was a benevolent institution for all the poor, but now all the aged people are taken charge of by the Government. Then we had all the church collections, and now we have not. At one time we had £1,200 or £1,300 from the churches.
380. Of all denominations? Yes.
381. Mr. Cowper.] Then the Government having started other charitable institutions, have prevented the public subscribing several thousands a year? Exactly so.
382. President.] How long is it since the change was made in the character of the institution? The change was made in 1862.
383. Would you tell us generally now what the institution is for? What—now?
384. Yes? To receive young single women for confinement, and married women deserted by their husbands, with their children, and children—I scarcely know how to describe them, for many of them are not deserted, but still are brought here. Since January last, thirty-six children have been received here by order of the Colonial Secretary, and four women. Children are sent here from all parts of the Colony—sent down by Police Magistrates and the Magistrates in the interior. An application is made to the Colonial Secretary, stating the case, and then he gives an order for admission. There are some from the country, and some from Sydney. Children are continually sent here from both Police Courts—the Central Police Court and the Water Police Court. There is no other place for such children—no other receptacle but this. During the last week, we had a child sent down from the Lunatic Asylum at Gladesville—an infant six days old. Its mother died there two days after its birth.
385. What else? There are many similar cases.
386. I mean what else does this institution do? It dispenses out-door relief.
387. In what way do the single women obtain admission here? By presenting themselves before the committee, and giving in recommendations from some clergyman who knows something of the cases. Of course a woman has to state her own case, and how she came into the position, and upon the merits of the case she is admitted or rejected.
388. What are supposed to be the merits of the case? The state of destitution in which a woman is placed—her being unfit for work, and without friends, or relatives, or home.
389. What then do the disputes arise from when the cases come before the committee? Well, I can scarcely charge my memory with any specific dispute, but disputes do occur sometimes on such subjects; for instance, where an applicant may have relatives who are either in Sydney or not far from it, and some members of the committee think that the relatives should assist her or keep her in their own houses; and often applicants are rejected on that ground. In some cases it has occurred that a girl has had younger sisters in the same family, and they do not wish her to be confined there.
390. That is a reason for accepting them here? Some members have thought so, and some, in some cases of the kind, have refused them, and they had to go to their parents.
391. Mr. Metcalfe.] Then the decision is arbitrary? Yes.
392. President.] There is no rule with reference to such cases? No, every case is to be decided upon its merits.
393. Then, whether a case is admitted or rejected depends entirely on the committee of the day? Yes; that is the view they take of it.
394. Does it not come to that? Yes.

S. W.
Mansfield,
Esq.

27 June, 1873.

395. On one day one committee may reject a girl, and on another day another committee may accept her on the same circumstances? Scarcely that. Greater necessity must be shown.
396. But at all events, there is no settled principle for the admission of patients? No settled principle. Every case must be dealt with on its own merits. There was a fixed rule once that no case should be admitted except on payment of £2.
397. I see that you do receive some money from people coming into the house? Yes.
398. How is that done? They are told that they are expected to pay, and if they are girls who have just come from service with a pocketful of money, it is only right that they should pay.
399. But if they say that they have got nothing? Then they must show that they have got nothing.
400. Is there an organized system of inquiry? Yes.
401. Of what kind? On the part of those who recommend the applicants.
402. But is there no organized system of inquiry except the inquiry by those who recommend them? No, none as to that.
403. There is no organized system of inquiry by the institution itself? Not with reference to girls who come in for confinement.
404. How long are the girls kept here? They are not supposed to remain longer than a month, and a great many do not remain so long, but some remain longer. Very few remain for a month.
405. With regard to the married women, in what mode do they obtain admission here? Either from having been deserted by their husbands, or their husbands being sick in the Infirmary or in hospitals in the interior. They are admitted under these circumstances, but not for any lengthened period.
406. Is there any system of inquiry into the circumstances of their cases before their admission? Only from representations made at the time.
407. No inquiry is made by any officer of the institution? No. They are generally of that character that the cases present themselves to the committee as being legitimate cases for assistance. Some cases are recommended by the Colonial Secretary, on representations made to him.
408. What number of single girls do you take in, on an average, during the year? Between ninety and 100.
409. Have you got a record of the number of cases you have had annually since the place has been opened? Yes. (See Appendix A.)
410. Can you furnish us with it now? No. I will send it to you.
411. What is the average number of married women who come here during the year? Three or four in a quarter. Latterly they have decreased very much.
412. To what do you attribute that? To the husbands being better employed, and not deserting their families.
413. There have been no alterations of the conditions on which they are admitted? No alterations.
414. Then circumstances external to the institution have brought about the decrease? Yes.
415. Is there any increase or decrease in the number of illegitimate births? A decrease.
416. Since when? Within the last two or three years.
417. There has been no alteration of the circumstances under which they are admitted? No.
418. To what cause do you ascribe the decrease? I cannot see any cause, save in the improvement in the moral condition of the people.
419. Mr. Couper.] What class of girls generally apply for admission here—servant girls, or girls who have relations? Servant girls, the majority of them.
420. From Sydney or the country districts? Chiefly from Sydney.
421. President.] Have you been able to trace whether they are native-born or not? Yes, we find out all that. The majority of them are native-born—I think forty-five out of sixty.
422. Do you find that they chiefly belong to the uneducated class? Generally so.
423. Do you keep any records as to whether they can read or write? We do not.
424. What can you state as to the ages of these single females—do some appear to be very young? Yes, from 14 to 26—the youngest say 14—but that is an exceptional case. We have the child here now; she is in her 15th year—she is not 15 yet; and we have now in the establishment one who is 19 and waiting for her second confinement.
425. Do you have instances of girls coming here more than once? It is not very frequent. Those are cases against which the committee set their faces very determinedly, and they refuse them admission if they find it at all safe to do so.
426. What age do you find giving you the largest number of single females? From 18 to 21.
427. Are any steps taken by the institution to find these girls employment when they leave? Yes; before they leave, a large majority of them get situations, either through the instrumentality of the matron, or by advertising, which I frequently do. There are a number eligible for servants, and, where the children are healthy, I advertise that the women can be employed, and applications are made at once.
428. What wages do they get under these circumstances? The rule laid down by the committee is that they are not to refuse half-a-crown a week; but there are very few who do not engage for a much higher sum than that. When they see the girl, people do not attempt to give her half-a-crown, but they give 4s. or 5s. a week.
429. Do the people who engage them appear to be a respectable class? Yes, that is always looked to.
430. Have you traced the after career of these women? Yes; it has come to my knowledge that many of them are comfortably married.
431. Retrieved themselves? Yes.
432. What has been the success of the institution with regard to the maternity hospital—the lives of the children? In what respect?
433. Have you had many deaths occur in the lying-in wards? No, we have never had a death in the lying-in ward—never had a death in confinement.
434. Never had a death since the place has been open? Not since Dr. Renwick has been here—either among the married or single women.
435. Does Dr. Renwick attend all the cases? Yes.
436. He is always called in to attend the cases? He sees every case; if not at the birth, soon after.
437. With regard to the married women—they stay in a month the same as the others, I suppose? There is no fixed time for them; it is according to the urgency of the case. In most cases they are extremely anxious to go out again, and they do go out.
438. Do you take in mothers with their children? Yes.

- S. W. Mansfield, Esq.
27 June, 1873.
439. Do you take the children in and attend to them while the mother is being confined? Yes.
440. In any numbers? No.
441. What limit do you fix? If a woman comes with one child, and is a fit case, we take her in; but a woman with a family must bring a special recommendation from the Colonial Secretary.
442. What are the cases of children in which children are sent here by the Colonial Secretary? They are picked up about the streets by the police, and taken to the Police Courts for protection; then the circumstances are sent to the Colonial Secretary, and he gives an order for their admission. There are cases which come from the Gaol—there are many whose fathers are dead and mothers are in the Gaol.
443. Are there many foundlings here? Not many at present.
444. What is the average number of foundlings here per year? I do not think there has been one this year.
445. Has the number increased or decreased? Decreased. We have a foundling ward here, but the children in it are not foundlings in the proper sense of the word; they are children who are picked up in the streets by the police.
446. What has been the success of the institution in the rearing of these foundlings? Well, as a rule, I think not very satisfactory. There is great difficulty experienced in rearing them.
447. Are there more children die than survive? I think the numbers are pretty nearly equal. The foundlings are generally brought here in such a state that it is impossible to resuscitate them after exposure to the cold and wet. They have frequently been brought in on cold wet nights, and thus deaths have been frequent. Some have been reared who have been brought in in that state. There are now in the institution two healthy children who were admitted in June, 1869.
448. When young children are brought in here how are they nursed? By the most appropriate nurse in the institution. If a child is just born, it is taken into the ward where a woman has a child just born. A woman who acts as wet nurse is allowed a perquisite.
449. What is she allowed? 2s. a week.
450. Have you ever known instances in which foundlings have been claimed by their parents? No, not one, except one some years ago. It was not claimed by the parents in that instance, but was taken away under a feigned name. I am sure that there was some family connection in the matter.
451. Have they ever been left here in such a way that they might be identified afterwards? No, not with clothing.
452. Is there any provision made for the married women when they are discharged? Yes, prior to their leaving, when they are once discharged, of course ———
453. I mean with a view to their earning their own living? Oh yes; they are advertised frequently, when they are eligible for service and fit to go out, and applications are made here continually for servants. There are none allowed to remain in the house at all who are fit to go out as domestic servants, unless they are usefully employed about the place, and then they are not kept to the detriment of their getting away.
454. Is there any fee ever paid by married women for their confinement? No.
455. Then a woman cannot come here to be confined for payment? No; they have often applied, and have been refused. The committee say, "No; if you are able to pay for your confinement, you are able to do so outside." The success of the confinements here has drawn many people here to apply for admission.
456. We have seen a number of children here at school—what children are those? They are children who have been collected in the various ways I have spoken of.
457. Children belonging to women who have come in here to be confined—children who have been sent in by the Colonial Secretary's order? Very few of that class, with the mothers being confined here.
458. Would you enumerate the children who are here—the kind of children who come here? Children from Sydney, sent in by the Colonial Secretary's order; children from almost all parts of the Colony who are sent in here; and very soon there will be an application made for the removal of at least sixty to Randwick.
459. How many children have you here now? 165.
460. That is including new-born infants? Yes, including all.
461. Mr. Cowper.] Infants with their mothers? Yes.
462. President.] To what age are children kept here? There is no stipulation as to that.
463. Then what becomes of them—to what age as a matter of fact are they kept here? There are only one or two in the house that the question will apply to at all, and they have been kept here under peculiar circumstances. Two are lame girls, who cannot be received into any other institution. They will not take them into Randwick if they are at all lame or disabled in any way. Both these girls are lame. There is another who is a little imbecile, and they will not take her into the Randwick Asylum. She has been sent there twice and returned.
464. Why returned? Because she was not fit—not perfect.
465. How not perfect? She is imbecile, and not sufficiently so to be sent to another institution. Application was made for her to be sent to Newcastle, but it was thought not fit for her to go there, and she is still here. Otherwise, children of eleven and twelve, if they get beyond the age for sending to Randwick, are not kept here at all. They are sent out as nurse girls to any one that applies for them.
466. Then there is no principle on which they are sent to Randwick? None under four years of age or over ten are ever sent there.
467. Mr. Metcalfe.] Do you ever make inquiries about them after they go out from here? Yes, frequently. Any one who takes a child from here has to enter into a written obligation.
468. President.] Is there anything provided as to wages? No; only that the child shall be properly clothed and fed, and attend religious services.
469. Is there any supervision over them afterwards? No, not afterwards.
470. Suppose that they do not stay with their employers, what becomes of them? They are left to their own resources.
471. They do not come back here at all? No.
472. Mr. Gould.] Do I understand you to say that they do not go to Randwick before they are four years old, or after they are ten? Yes.
473. President.] Are they sent from here to Randwick at any stated time? No.

S. W.
Mansfield,
Esq.

27 June, 1873.

474. Who decides that they are to be kept here or sent there? When we have a good number of children here, healthy, clean, and strong, an application is made to transfer them to the Randwick institution.
475. Mr. Couper.] At what rate does the Government pay for these children in this institution? £14 a year.
476. Mr. Metcalfe.] That is the average cost of each child? Yes.
477. President.] I see two schools here? Yes.
478. A Roman Catholic School and a Protestant School? Yes.
479. Has the teaching here always been of a denominational character? Not always.
480. How long has it been so? I think for the last ten years.
481. Do you know under what circumstances sectarian teaching was introduced? I cannot state any set reason for it, save that it was thought desirable at that time, but from what circumstances I cannot remember.
482. There are two female teachers? Yes.
483. Roman Catholic and Protestant? Yes.
484. Have the schools ever been inspected by the Council of Education's officers? No.
485. Who supervises the school? The committee. There is no special appointment for it—the committee look after it.
486. There is no school committee? No, no special committee.
487. There is no organized system by which the schools are examined or inspected? No.
488. What regulations are there about the time of these schools? In what respect?
489. In respect to the attendance of the children in the school? I do not know of any special regulations, except those with reference to the attendance of the teachers to their duties. They have regular rules to go by.
490. Where are these rules—that is what I want to know? I think you will find them in the general rules—the time of opening school, entering it and leaving it and so on.
491. Then, with the exception of the rules which provide that a child shall be in school by a certain hour and so on, there are no rules provided for the management of these schools? No general rules.
492. Do the committee engage a schoolmistress and turn her into the schoolroom and let her do what she likes? No. There is a weekly committee besides the house committee, who are appointed to visit the house, and they make a general supervision of the whole institution, including the schools.
493. That is the only supervision of the schools that there is? Yes, that is the only special supervision that there is.
494. Then these schools are conducted on no system, as far as the institution knows or directs—is it not so? There are no special rules and no special supervision.
495. Who appoints the teachers? The committee, by advertisement, invite applicants to appear before them.
496. Is there any condition that they shall be certified teachers under the Council of Education? No.
497. And as a matter of fact the school is not inspected? No.
498. Mr. Goold.] Who pays the teachers' salaries—the Government? No, the Society.
499. What salary have they? £40 a year each.
500. Do they live on the place? Yes, they have board and lodging.
501. Does any clergyman attend to the religious teaching of the children? They do, but not in any organized way, I think—at least I am not aware of it.
502. Do any clergymen come here regularly? Yes, there is service here regularly every Friday evening.
503. Church of England service? Yes.
504. What about the Roman Catholic children? They get instruction every Sunday, and at other times during the week, from what are called the "sisters."
505. What religious teaching have the Protestant children during the week, if any? I am not aware of any special system of teaching for them.
506. Do you see any object in keeping up two small denominational schools in this establishment? No, I do not.
507. Do you not think that the children would be more advantageously managed if the two schools were made into one? I think that they might be quite as efficiently managed. I never saw any object to be gained by dividing them, myself.
508. Mr. Goold.] Do you not think the teaching would be more efficient if they were amalgamated? I think that it might be.
509. President.] Do you see anything, as far as you know of the management of the place, of any particular religious exercises that these children go through, or any systematic teaching that they have, which would prevent either school being conducted as a public school is conducted? No, I have never heard of anything.
510. Has there ever been any attempt made by the committee to have school here conducted on the public school principle rather than the two schools you have here now? I cannot say that there has been any special attempt made, but the thing has been at various times spoken of, and it was thought better to let things remain as they were.
511. If a child comes in as a foundling, what is done towards determining the religion in which it shall be brought up? You mean infant foundlings?
512. Yes? We have always been guided by circumstances—the place where the child is found, and anything else that may tend to show to what denomination it might belong. For instance, if a foundling were picked up near St. Benedict's Church, it would be natural to suppose that the child belonged there. On the 28th June, 1869, a female child was found near St. Benedict's, the child was baptised in the asylum a Roman Catholic, and is now a fine girl. There was an instance of that kind the other day, and the child was baptised there, but did not live long. There has always been care taken to have them baptised. We can generally form an opinion from the appearance of the child as to whom it belongs to; at least I can.
513. And supposing that there is nothing whatever to indicate what religion a child belongs to? The rule here was to baptise them all as Church of England children—that was my system; but then there was an outcry, and it was thought unreasonable that they should all belong to the Church of England.
514. Other Churches wished to have a share of them? Yes, and it was then determined that they should be shared equally, one for one.

S. W.
Mansfield,
Esq.
27 June, 1873.

515. Mr. Goold.] Taking all the denominations? No, only the two. The others were left out of consideration; but since then I do not think that three have been baptized under similar circumstances.
516. President.] Have you any reason to think that the Charity is abused by people coming here to be confined—either single or married women? I do not think so; I think that it would be most difficult to point out a case in which it was not really necessary that the woman should be admitted. In the married cases one or two may have occurred where there has been a show of imposition—an appearance of it—where men have absented themselves just for the time while the wife came to be confined. That has occurred in one or two cases, but that is the only way in which to my knowledge imposition has been attempted.
517. Have you yourself given any attention to the teaching in these schools? I have not for some years. When I resided on the premises I did, but that is eleven years ago; then there was only one school.
518. Did you then see anything to prevent the children of both denominations being taught in that way? No; and they were then taught by a Roman Catholic.
519. You yourself are a Protestant? Yes.
520. And having observed the teaching by that system and under a Roman Catholic teacher, you see nothing to make you think that a system of that sort could not work? No.
521. From that I gather that you are in favour of the Public School system generally? Decidedly.
522. I do not think you have told us what servants there are in the institution? There are six paid servants besides the teachers, and the rest are inmates—all the rest of the servants.
523. Are they all women? All women.
524. There are no men servants? Yes, there are three old men,—the gate-keeper, yardsman, and the watchman.
525. Mr. Metcalfe.] What has a watchman to do in a place like this? Walk round the place at night.
526. What wages does he get? 4s. a week.
527. Mr. Goold.] Is that the man at the gate? No; that is the gate-keeper; he gets the same.
528. President.] Is he employed here constantly? Yes.
529. Some old inmate of the place? They are not inmates here, but they are old men.
530. What is this watchman? He goes round the place when the wards are locked up, and he is there to give notice if the doctor is wanted in the lying-in ward. He goes to the gate and sends for the doctor.
531. What are the women employed on the place? Wardswomen, cook, laundress. There is a woman for the boys' ward, one for the foundling, the skin ward, cook, and laundress. The wardswomen for the women's wards are inmates, and are kept only for a short period.
532. I think you said that you managed the whole of the out-door relief business? Yes.
533. How many people weekly do you give assistance to on an average? At the present time I think that there are 410 cases on the books. They have decreased considerably. This time last year I think there were 515, or somewhere about that.
534. What relief do you give? Bread, flour, or bread and meat.
535. Is that all? That is all.
536. Mr. Metcalfe.] You never give tea or sugar? Sugar, but no tea. In cases of sickness, arrowroot and things of that sort.
537. You never give tea? No; I think it would be a bad thing to begin with.
538. What ration is given out? Six loaves of bread and six pounds of meat, four loaves and four pounds of meat, three loaves and three pounds of meat, and two loaves and two pounds of meat a week.
539. On what principle is the ration regulated? Two and two for a single person, three and three for a woman with one child, and four and four for a woman with three children, and six and six is the largest ration issued.
540. How often are these rations given out? Once a week.
541. Then in some cases you give six loaves at a time? Yes.
542. What is the mode of obtaining this relief? By appearing before the committee and bringing the recommendation of the minister to whose church they belong, or from a subscriber who knows the circumstances of the case, and that is afterwards inquired into.
543. What number of out-door pensioners can a subscriber recommend in the course of a year? There is no limit.
544. As a matter of fact, do some subscribers send many more people than others? Yes; ministers of religion send more than other people.
545. Do they send the chief portion of the cases? Yes.
546. Mr. Goold.] Have you any printed forms of application? No.
547. Do you merely give relief on receipt of these orders? Not before the applicants go before the committee. The case is investigated by the committee in the first instance.
548. What mode of investigation is adopted by the committee? Questions are put to the parties, and inquiries are made by myself.
549. Is it part of your duty to make these inquiries? Yes. You see by the report that last year there were 269 cases specially reported to the committee, of which 152 were struck off.
550. That is, rejected? No, struck off the books. They had been receiving relief, but were considered unworthy to continue receiving it.
551. Then you do not inquire before giving the relief? No.
552. How long do they receive relief before the inquiry is made? Perhaps a week. I believe that very few impositions have taken place. Relief has not been sought by persons who do not require it—that has not been practised; but it is where a husband is sick in the Infirmary, and the family require relief and get it, and then the husband gets well and goes to work, and the family still continue to receive the relief, and after a time we find out the circumstances.
553. Do these cases often occur? There is scarcely one in a hundred who has the honesty to say, "I do not require the relief any longer."
554. Does this happen in the case of families? Yes, where the husband is up the country, or in the Infirmary, and he returns home and goes to work, and still they come for relief.
555. Have you any assistance in making your inquiries? No. I have assistance, but in a way that I keep to myself. There is no system organized by the Society.
556. Have you any way of communicating with the Infirmary as to the discharge of the fathers of families who receive relief? No, I have not.

S. W.
Mansfield,
Esq.

27 June, 1873.

557. Do you not think that such a system could be established;—that on finding that the fathers of families obtaining relief are there, you could arrange to obtain from the Infirmary information as to their discharge? Yes, I might do it; but from my long knowledge of these people, and from practice in this work, I am a pretty good judge as to how they are going on.
558. But you see your judgment fails you sometimes? No, not often.
559. You say that it failed you in 152 cases out of 269? No; these cases were specially reported, and 152 were struck off.
560. Mr. Goold.] What do you mean? There is a special report of every individual case.
561. That 152 then were out of 500? No.
562. Out of how many then? 269.
563. Why were not the others examined into by you? So they had been; but these were special inquiries that were made, owing to certain circumstances.
564. President.] But you gave relief in the first instance? Certainly.
565. Then in these 152 cases you were imposed upon? I might have been, for a longer or a shorter period.
566. Mr. Goold.] When relief is allowed to any person, is it allowed for an indefinite period? No, it is sometimes for two weeks, sometimes for three weeks, and sometimes for a month.
567. What is the longest time for which relief is allowed? A month.
568. Mr. Metcalfe.] What is the longest time that they have received it? Sometimes they receive it for years.
569. What cases are those? Cases which I know myself cannot be struck off.
570. What sort of cases? Cases of people who are unfit for work.
571. Mr. Goold.] If people apply for relief next week, will they be told that they will only get it for a certain period? Yes.
572. What is the period? That depends on circumstances.
573. And when the period has expired do they make a fresh application? Yes.
574. President.] Then you do not see any objection to this system of out-door relief, from your knowledge of it? No, I think it has been of great benefit.
575. Can you suggest anything for the improvement of the system? No, I do not see what improvement could be made.
576. Or for the improvement of the institution generally? No; as far as its objects now are concerned, I do not see that any improvement can be made.
577. Except the amalgamation of the two schools? I see no objection to that.
578. Mr. Metcalfe.] Do you not think that, as the Government contribute so largely to the funds, they should appoint some members of the Board? I do not see any objection to it.
579. And do you not think that the Board could be reduced with advantage? I have no doubt that it would be quite as well, though I have not found any difficulty in the working of the committee. If there were a smaller committee the business might be got through more speedily, but the attendance of members here is generally very good.
580. Mr. Goold.] I suppose if any repairs are wanted here they are all done by the Government? No, they make no repairs.
581. President.] Who are they done by? The committee.
582. Mr. Goold.] I see that some of these buildings are newer than others—were they built by the committee or by the Government? By the Society. One large building was paid for by the Government after a very special application.
583. It was built by the Government? No, it was paid for afterwards by the Government.
584. President.] Do you order the meat? Yes.
585. What is your daily consumption of meat? The order for to-morrow is 66 lbs. of beef and 40 lbs. of mutton.
586. Is there a certain ration allowed every day to everybody? Yes, $\frac{3}{4}$ lb. of meat to every inmate.
587. What do you allow for waste? 4 ounces out of every 12.
588. In ordering meat, what do you allow for waste? One-third. There are ninety-seven in the house who are not on meat at all; then, making the calculation for those who do require it, brings the quantity to 66 lbs. beef and 40 lbs. of mutton. That includes servants and all the rest.
589. You do not think it necessary, if rations to be issued require 100 lbs. of meat, to order 200 lbs.? No, I do not.
590. Mr. Metcalfe.] Is the meat always roasted or always boiled? No, it is roasted and boiled alternately.
591. President.] Do you see any necessity, in ordering meat for an institution of this sort, when 100 lbs. of beef are required for the rations, to order 200 lbs.? No, I do not.
592. Did you ever hear of such a thing? No.
593. It is not necessary to do so? I cannot see how it can possibly be necessary.
594. Mr. Metcalfe.] You would order 1 lb. of meat to give a ration of $\frac{3}{4}$ lb.? My experience is that 1 lb. of meat roasted or boiled will yield one-third less of cooked meat, and to give $\frac{3}{4}$ lb. of cooked meat would take 1 lb. raw. Here the ration for each inmate being 8 ounces of meat without bone, I order for that $\frac{3}{4}$ lb.
595. That is 12 ounces? Yes.
596. President.] We are told that, in one institution, that when 100 lbs. of meat are required 200 lbs. are ordered? On what principle?
597. The principle that the loss is so much? ———
598. What experience have you had in this place? Nearly nineteen years. Once I had nearly 500 or 600 inmates here, men and women.
599. And your experience is that one-third is a proper allowance for waste in cooking and for bone in meat? Yes.
600. Have you any objection to state that the assistance you receive in making inquiries as to cases of applicants for relief, is from gentlemen who for charitable reasons give you the information? I have no objection to state that, but I do not wish to disclose their names or anything more about them.

SATURDAY, 5 JULY, 1873.

Members Present:—

WILLIAM CHARLES WINDEYER, Esq., PRESIDENT.

EYRE G. ELLIS, Esq.
SAMUEL GOOLD, Esq.MICHAEL METCALFE, Esq.
CHARLES COWPER, JUN., Esq.

William E. Strong, Esq., M.D., surgeon-superintendent, Liverpool Asylum for Infirm and Destitute, examined during inspection of the institution:—

- W. E. Strong, Esq., M.D.
5 July, 1873.
601. President.] I believe you are the surgeon-superintendent of this asylum? Yes.
602. How long have you been so? About two years and a month or so.
603. What salary do you receive? £250.
604. There is a matron assisting in the management of the place? Yes.
605. What are her duties as distinguished from yours? She looks after the dormitories and the washing, and so on—anything that a woman would do in the house.
606. The internal economy of the place? Yes.
607. How many inmates have you in the asylum at present? About 638 at present—perhaps there are two or three more or less. To-day is our day for making out the census and sending down the returns. You may put down 630 as the number of inmates at present.
608. Do you know what the average cost of maintenance is per head? £11 and some odd shillings per year.
609. The hospital is for the reception of aged and infirm people as well as for chronic and incurable cases, I believe? Yes.
610. Amongst the inmates how many hospital cases have you? About 200 regularly, including the infirm, as you say.
611. Chronic cases and infirm people? Yes. There are 200 hospital cases—sometimes more and sometimes less; 200 is the average.
612. Does the house accommodation allow of your classifying these inmates? Yes, the hospital accommodation does.
613. Are the aged and infirm classified in any other respect? No, I do not think so. The general inmates of the asylum, except those who cannot walk upstairs, are put into the upper wards.
614. Besides the matron, are there any other paid officials in the place? Yes.
615. How many, and what are their offices? I do not know that I can tell you exactly. There are two men to each dormitory.
616. They are inmates, are they not? Yes, there are none besides inmates employed here.
617. All the work of the place is done by the inmates? Yes.
618. Some of whom are paid small sums for their labour? Yes.
619. What amount do they get? Well, the dispenser gets 1s. a day.
620. Is he an inmate? Yes.
621. Was he a qualified dispenser, or was he trained here? I found him here, and trained him. I think that he was sent out in the convict times. They used to utilize all these men. He is a cripple. A boy assists him, and I teach the boy. Then the clerk gets 1s. a day. You saw him in the office.
622. Besides the dispenser, we saw a boy in the dispensary? Yes.
623. How does he come to be here? He was sent up here by the Board or Committee of the Infirm and Destitute Asylums.
624. Which is a Board of Government officials? Yes.
625. Is he a cripple, or a boy who requires protection of any kind? He cannot earn his living. He has got scrofula of the hip joint.
626. What is his age? From fourteen to sixteen.
627. Do you think it is desirable to have a boy of that age in this place amongst old people? I think we should be better without them.
628. Have you had experience in the management of institutions of this sort? Yes.
629. Where? In Tasmania.
630. What office did you hold there? Assistant-surgeon.
631. Where? At Port Arthur and different places in the Colony.
632. You have been accustomed to these places? Yes. I have been in military hospitals in America; in fact, I have had the management of men all my lifetime.
633. What is your opinion of the present sanatory condition of this asylum? It is very good.
634. Do you think that the locality is healthy? Yes, particularly so.
635. Then you think that this locality is well suited for an institution of this sort? Yes, particularly so, I think.
636. And the cases under your care in the hospital, if they do not progress, are as healthy as can be expected? Yes, those who are not incurable really recover here.
637. What do you say as to the building itself, with regard to its sanatory condition? Good.
638. We noticed, in going through the wards to-day, that some of them were rather close and had an unpleasant smell, and that this was particularly the case in wards which were not provided with ventilation on both sides on the pavilion principle of constructing hospitals—Do you not think that in erecting any buildings of this kind it would be advisable to provide better ventilation? Oh yes, most decidedly; the windows should be facing each other.
639. You are aware that persons who have directed their attention to hospital construction in modern times have insisted upon that as a necessary condition of hospital management? Yes. You came early this morning, and the wards had scarcely lost the effluvia of the night. We scarcely open them at night. If you were to go through the wards now, you would scarcely perceive the smell that you noticed this morning.
640. I suppose there would not be so much of it if the wards were ventilated on both sides? No; but I think that the ward you allude to is particularly well ventilated—the ward that you found me in. The others are not so well ventilated.

641. Is the institution at present over-crowded, in your opinion? No; with the accommodation that we have got—that spare house up there—we could not put those inmates into this building at present.

642. Then, as a matter of fact, you have no room in the main building here for all the inmates that are sent to you? No.

W. E. Strong,
Esq., M.D.

5 July, 1873.

643. You have to hire a house in the neighbourhood for some of them? Yes.

644. Where there are from twenty to thirty inmates? Yes.

645. That is a temporary arrangement? Yes, until the new wing is built.

646. In the new wing what dormitory accommodation will there be? There will be accommodation for 200 there. The lower portion will be divided off for any particular cases—acute cases, and so on—and the upper portion will be similar to the other wing—(what is called the new wing now)—the infirm and those who cannot go into the yard, and that sort of thing.

647. What accommodation will that new wing give you when it is finished and you bring into it all the inmates of the hired house and of the wooden structure in the garden? If they keep as they are now we shall not want the hired place.

648. How many spare beds would you have? None at all. We should be just full enough to be comfortable.

649. Mr. Metcalfe.] I thought you said it would accommodate 200 more inmates? Yes; but I have to take in all these who are in the hired house and the wooden building; and some sleep on the floor, and so on.

650. President.] Then the place is over-crowded? Yes; but I do not call it over-crowded.

651. What I want to know is this—we have evidence before us to the effect that there are a number of persons in the Sydney Infirmary who are not proper persons to be inmates there—chronic cases, which might as beneficially to themselves and more economically to the Government be taken care of in an asylum of this sort. The Sydney Infirmary is a hospital for acute cases, and the average cost per bed per year there is about £43, while here it is only £11, and it is thought desirable to relieve the Infirmary of some fifty or eighty of such cases—we wish to know whether, when the new wing is built, there will be accommodation for them here? I should think so. I have not gone into it, but I say roughly that I could make room for fifty, and doubtless for more than that.

652. And if this wooden building is kept you could take more? Yes.

653. How many more? I dare say about eighty or 100.

654. Mr. Metcalfe.] What is that building in the garden? We call it the temporary shed.

655. President.] Do you see any objection to using that for these people? None at all. My impression was that it always would be there.

656. It is not used for any other purpose? No, not that I am aware of.

657. It answers its purpose? Very well indeed, so far as I have seen. I would like to have some improvements made in it.

658. What improvements? I should like it to be lined and made comfortable. The rain drives in very much. We have had none enter lately, but Mrs. Burnside occupied that place when this house was being done up, and she was obliged to move the beds.

659. The roof is water-proof? Yes, it is.

660. If it is thought desirable to move fifty patients from the Sydney Infirmary to this place, there would be accommodation for them here, with this new wing? Yes, provided that the Board did not send up more inmates.

661. How many do they send up now? Sometimes fifteen, sometimes five, sometimes ten; you cannot tell how many. Last night they sent up four or five, and on Tuesday they sent up four or five.

662. Can you tell what has been the average number sent up per month? I can by looking at the books.

663. Will you tell us then what is the number per month, during the last six months, that have been sent up by the Board? Seventy per month.

664. Do you receive any other inmates than those sent up by the Board? Well, of course the up-country hospitals relieve themselves tremendously here.

665. Have you observed whether the number of admissions per month has increased during the time that you have been here? Yes, the hospital cases have.

666. Where do they come from? I suppose that they come from the Sydney Infirmary and from the up-country hospitals.

667. Have the number of patients received from up-country hospitals increased since you have been here? I think they are about the same.

668. What class of cases are they? Chronic and incurable cases, such as cancers and broken legs, that they have not room for in the country hospitals.

669. Mr. Goold.] Do these cases come direct from the up-country hospitals? Yes.

670. Mr. Cowper.] And direct from the Infirmary? Yes. Of course they go through a certain routine. They come from the committee—they come up with a ticket of admission from the committee, and so on.

671. President.] Do you keep a record showing what these people are—whether they come to the Colony as emigrants or otherwise; or what ship they came in; what is their religion, occupation, and so on? No, not a complete record.

672. Mr. Metcalfe.] You do not enter these things in a book? No.

673. President.] Could you give us a return showing the number of inmates, and the length of time each has been in the Colony? Yes, with regard to any man you named. (See Appendix B.)

674. Mr. Metcalfe.] You could tell whether a man had arrived here free or not? No, I think not. We ask a man's age, and so on.

675. President.] You see that public attention has been directed to this subject—to the growth of pauperism in this Country, and we are anxious to trace the reasons for this, and find out why so many paupers of this class are thrown upon the public charity; and I understood you to say that you could give us a return showing how these people came to the Country? Yes. (See Appendix B 1.)

676. Mr. Goold.] I should like to ask the doctor whether, from his experience, it is possible for him to give an account as to how many people are brought here from intemperance? Well, I should say precious near the whole of them.

667. Have you any record of that? No. I only speak from my own experience. I do not think that I could send out a dozen men with three-pence in their pockets who would not get drunk.

678. President.] Is it your opinion then that vice has been the cause which has brought most of these people

- W. E. Strong, people into this Asylum, and thrown them upon the public for support? Yes, in the majority of cases.
Esq., M.D.
- 5 July, 1873.
679. Do you keep any record as to whether they can read and write? No, I do not think there is any record of that. We simply ask them their age and ship.
680. Do you not think that it would be desirable to find out what their education has been? Yes, I think so.
681. Do they object to answering such questions? Oh dear no; but I should say that the majority of them could neither read nor write. There are very few of the old men who can read or write.
682. I suppose you have some cases in the Asylum who have been brought here by misfortune? Oh yes.
683. People who have been crippled by rheumatism, or accidents, or some other of the ills that flesh is heir to? Yes.
684. Mr. Metcalfe.] Have you any men here who have been delicately brought up? I do not think that there are any now, but there have been such men here. There have been one or two lawyers and people of that kind here I think in past years.
685. President.] You do not classify these people, and separate such men from those who are ignorant and vicious? No. Those who have been well brought up are the men who most frequently come here from vice. I can only name one here now who has been well brought up—a man who is blind, and whose name is Whitehouse. He was a lawyer's clerk in Sydney.
686. Are the inmates ever discharged for insubordination? Yes; in the majority of cases they are.
687. Do you enforce the rules of the place? Yes; or we could not keep up the discipline.
688. What kind of insubordination do you find most difficult to deal with? Drunkenness, and refusing to assist in the work of the place.
689. What opportunities have they of getting drunk? There is no opportunity of preventing their getting drunk when they pass the constable at the gate. There is no restriction upon any one who goes out.
690. They are allowed to go out? No; but they get out, you know—especially while this building is going on, and the place is quite open.
691. Do they come in again? I do not admit them again.
692. The Board may do so? Yes, but I do not.
693. Do you think that the Board admitting them again is injurious to discipline? Yes, my private opinion is that it is.
694. You think that it would be better not to readmit them? Yes, I do. I have often remonstrated with the Board about it, and they have said—"Well, what are we to do?"
695. Mr. Gould.] The men can demand to go out? Yes.
696. Do many of them do that? Yes, a good many.
697. President.] To go out for a certain time? Yes. Many of them get tired of being here, and they go out to work or beg, and after a time the Board admits them again. When they are really very old men, who should not go out, I have sometimes refused them permission to go out; but I have no power to do so. They might all walk out in a body if they liked, and I could not prevent them.
698. Do you think that power to prevent them should be given to you? I think so. There are some blind men who go out, and go down to Sydney, and come back again a few days after. There are many who go out who are not fit subjects to go. I do refuse to allow them to go sometimes, but I have no right to do so.
699. The whole of the work of the place is done by the inmates? Entirely so.
700. What trades are carried on in the place? Carpentering, shoemaking, tailoring—everything, in fact.
701. To what extent do they provide their own clothes? The majority of our moleskin trousers are made here, and the boots—I dare say half the number of boots we get are made here.
702. Mr. Metcalfe.] How many are employed at these trades? Not many. I dare say there are about three shoemakers and four or five tailors.
703. President.] And the men so employed are men who have pursued those avocations outside? Yes. They are not fit to work outside, either from want of sufficient moral courage to refuse drink, or from being crippled.
704. I see that you have a garden? Yes.
705. Do the inmates work in it? Yes.
706. Do you have to buy any vegetables? No, we have never bought any vegetables at all.
707. Mr. Cowper.] Except potatoes? Yes, we have to buy potatoes.
708. Mr. Gould.] Could you not arrange to grow potatoes? Yes, if we had a field.
709. Mr. Metcalfe.] If you had that paddock you could grow them? Yes, or this grass plot of Mrs. Cordeaux's.
710. President.] You do not bake your own bread on the place? No.
711. Do you think that it would be advantageous to do so? Decidedly.
712. Have you stated this to the Board? Yes.
713. Have any reasons been assigned to you as to why it was not done? The Board forwarded me a communication from the Colonial Secretary to the effect that there were no funds on the Estimates for such a purpose.
714. Do you think that the bread could be provided more economically than at present if it were baked on the premises? Yes.
715. The baking could be done by the inmates? No; I think that we should have to get a baker, and he could attend to other work besides.
716. Are you satisfied with the way in which the present contract for the supply of bread is carried out? Not by any means.
717. What do you complain of? Well, the bread is short weight, and the uncertainty of its being really good, and the difficulty of getting it here.
718. Mr. Gould.] You state that it would be equally economical to bake your own bread here? More than that—I think that a saving would be effected.
719. President.] The present bread contract is, in your opinion, badly carried out? Yes, in my opinion it is. The bread is good, but it is sent up much broken, and of short weight. I think it would be better to bake the bread on the premises.
720. Do the inmates complain of the light weight of the bread? Yes, sometimes they do, but not always, always, because the bread is better than the bread we get here in the town. They like the article best, and therefore they do not grumble. W. E. Strong,

Esq., M.D.

721. What is the diet of an inmate? 1 lb. of bread per day.

722. The loaves supplied to you are 2-lb. loaves? Yes.

723. And in supplying the rations you divide a loaf between two inmates? Yes.

724. Do you keep an account of the amount to which the bread is deficient in weight? Yes.

725. Is it weighed from time to time? Yes, I think that the matron weighs it every day, otherwise I do not.

726. We observed to-day, in weighing some of the bread, that in one case two 2-lb. loaves were deficient in weight to the extent of 7 ounces, and in another case there was a deficiency of $6\frac{1}{2}$ ounces in the weight of two loaves—Are these cases, as far as your experience goes, in any way exceptional to the ordinary run of bread supplied? No, not at all, I think.

727. Mr. Metcalfe.] Is the bread supposed to be made of fine flour? Yes, of the best flour I believe.

728. Do you consider that it is made of the best flour? No, I do not think it is.

729. Who is the present contractor for the supply of bread? Freehill.

730. How often does it come up here? Every day.

731. Do you ever find the number of loaves short? Sometimes we have—but I do not know whether it was done purposely or not. It does not affect us, as we send out and buy bread to make up the number: if there are ten loaves short we buy ten to replace them, so that the contractor gains nothing by it.

732. How do you find the butchers' meat supplied? Generally speaking it is very good; sometimes one has to find fault, but very rarely.

733. Mr. Metcalfe.] Who is the contractor? Dunn.

734. Does he carry on business up here? No, in Parramatta or Sydney. We get the meat from Parramatta, but the contractor is in Sydney, I think.

735. President.] Is the meat given to the inmates boiled all the week through? Yes.

736. They never have roast meat? No.

737. Do you approve of that arrangement? No; I think it might be altered.

738. You think you should give them roast meat or baked meat sometimes? Yes.

739. Have you represented that to the Board? Yes.

740. Have they supplied you with appliances for roasting? No.

741. What answer was made to your application? The Colonial Secretary's letter about the ovens for baking bread—we could bake the meat in the same ovens.

742. Then you think that it is desirable that roast meat should be given to the inmates sometimes? Yes, I think so in every way.

743. The boiled meat which is now given is the meat from which the soup is made? Yes.

744. Is there much substance left in it after the soup is made? Yes, very fair I think.

745. Mr. Metcalfe.] Could a man do a day's work on such soup and meat? Yes.

746. President.] Then you are satisfied with the amount of the rations supplied? Yes—quite.

747. Mr. Ellis.] How much out of a pound does a person get after the meat has been boiled and the soup made of it—does he get half a pound? Yes; I think about two-thirds, taking away the bone. You see he gets the meat in the soup.

748. But when the meat is given to him in his plate, does it exceed half a pound in weight? Yes, I think so. I have weighed a good many—some are 10 ounces, some are 8 ounces; I should say half a pound on an average. I should think that in the soup and altogether, a man gets two-thirds of a pound. It is an abundance of food for them I think.

749. You have no suggestion—with exception of that with regard to the baking—to make as to the soup or the rations generally? No, I do not think that it could be at all improved upon.

750. Mr. Gould.] Would it increase the expense if the inmates had roast meat? Not at all—with the exception of the cost of the ovens.

751. There is no objection to it then on that score? No.

752. Mr. Metcalfe.] They would not have soup then? No, they would rather do without it on some days.

753. Mr. Gould.] Do they have mutton? Yes, twice a week.

754. President.] Do you see any way in which the labour of the inmates may be further utilized? No, I do not—we do all that is requisite on the place.

755. Mr. Metcalfe.] They cut the wood and so forth? Yes, everything is done by the inmates.

756. There is nothing expended in salaries except what is paid to yourself and the matron? That is all, except that the inmates who work are paid.

757. Mr. Ellis.] If they were all on a farm, do you not think you could make their labour more or less remunerative? No; they are too infirm and decrepit. We could grow our own potatoes if we had ground.

758. President.] If you had that piece of land adjoining given to you by the Corporation, could you grow your own potatoes there and otherwise use it to advantage? Yes.

759. Do you think that that piece of land could be used to more advantage than the piece you have rented from Sir Daniel Cooper? I think if we could get that which is not rented we could grow our own potatoes, horse-feed, and everything else. That land over there is almost too much for us at present, now that we have got this. About 2 acres would do us now.

760. Mr. Metcalfe.] The land you have rented is to be used for recreation? Entirely so.

761. Supposing other buildings were to be erected here, where would you advise that they should be erected? We have no room for another building on our own ground. We have not a foot of ground to build on when this new wing is up.

762. President.] What is the condition of the last new wing—is it waterproof? This one now?

763. The one with the tiled roof? The roof is to be slated.

764. I mean the last building erected? It is not in a satisfactory state.

765. What is the matter with it? The roof is leaky, the tiles being porous, I suppose, as far as I know; and too heavy, I believe, from what I have heard from people who are judges of it.

766. Do I understand you to say that arrangements have been made for re-roofing the place? No; the architect said that he should eventually have to do so.

- W. E. Strong, Esq., M.D.
5 July, 1873.
767. Mr. Ellis.] Of whom is the Board that visits the institution composed? Mr. Rolleston is chairman—Dr. Alleyne is a member; and, upon my word I do not know the others—there is Captain McLerie, I think, and Mr. Wise, I think—but they have altered them lately—within the last few months.
768. How often do they visit the institution? About once a quarter.
769. Do you know what their duties are? No, I do not know.
770. How are patients admitted here? By admissions from the Board, or by myself; in cases of emergency I admit—in all other cases, when they come to me, I send them down to Sydney if they have the means of going.
771. Suppose there was a fit subject for this institution in Goulburn or Bathurst, would he have to go to Sydney to gain admission here? They often come here and have no means of proceeding further. When that is the case I take them in, but otherwise I send them on.
772. How many sick wards have you in the institution now? Well, about eight, I think, just now—seven with the exception of this back place down here.
773. How do you classify them? Acute cases, chronic cases, paralyzed or bed-ridden cases.
774. How many cases are there in the hospital now? About 200, roughly speaking. That is the general average.
775. Are any of the inmates allowed indulgences, such as tobacco? Do you mean the sick?
776. The ordinary inmates? Yes, they are allowed each a fig of tobacco every Saturday.
777. Do you think it would be desirable to have more ground attached to the asylum? It would not be desirable, except for the purpose of cultivation.
778. Do you not think that the inmates would avail themselves of it for the purpose of recreation? No, we have enough of that.
779. Or that the men's labour would be utilized upon it? Well, they might cultivate it.
780. Mr. Cowper.] Could they not supply the place with vegetables? Yes; they could grow green-stuff for the horses and so on.
781. Mr. Ellis.] How are patients discharged from here? At their own request, or for insubordination.
782. Mr. Cowper.] How was that man Platt discharged? He was not discharged. I got an order for the Infirmary for him and sent him down. That is the man with the bad hand you are speaking of?
783. Mr. Ellis.] Have you observed a tendency to increase in the number of the patients during the last few years? No, the number has rather decreased since last year.
784. To what do you attribute that decrease? I do not know at all whether there is a greater demand for labour in the country, or something of that kind. Last Queen's Birthday we had I think 670 to provide for, and this year we have only 640. They have decreased since last year, but whether they have gone elsewhere or not I do not know.
785. Do you approve of the plan of that wooden building that has been put up for wards or dormitories? Differently constructed, I do. I approve of a detached place.
786. I mean the general design? Yes.
787. It is 124 feet by 30? Yes, I think that is it.
788. Mr. Cowper.] But such a building should be weatherproof and well-drained? Yes.
789. And that building is neither one nor the other? No.
790. Mr. Ellis.] You do not reside on the premises? No.
791. President.] Do you reside in the town? Yes.
792. Mr. Ellis.] You are obliged to visit the place every day? I am expected to be here at 9 a.m., and remain all day.
793. President.] Have you an allowance for house rent? Yes—£40 a year.
794. Any allowance for rations? No.
795. Mr. Cowper.] When a patient is discharged from here, is he given a suit of Government clothes? No.
796. He goes out in his own clothes? Yes, if he has any; if he has not we provide him with clothes, but not with Government clothes.
797. Are the clothes that you keep of the persons who come in, washed and fumigated and so on? Yes. If they are very bad they are burnt. I do not suppose that they are fumigated—they are washed.
798. You give them to them clean when they go out? Yes.
799. Do you find that the inmates leave the institution and take the Government clothes with them? Yes, they abscond sometimes, and then I inform the police, who pick them up if they can.
800. Have any of them been prosecuted? Not in my time. If the police take them we send them their clothes.
801. Then it is a benefit to them to get away without their own clothes? Yes.
802. They can sell the Government clothes and get re-admitted by the Board in Sydney? Yes, and the clothes are lost.
803. How many are re-admitted during a month? Seventy per month.
804. Is there any danger in admitting into this institution cases of erysipelas which have been admitted into the Infirmary? How do you mean?—they would not be discharged from the Infirmary if they had got erysipelas.
805. Then, if a doctor sends out a patient who has been suffering from erysipelas with a certificate to the effect that he is perfectly cured, there is no danger in admitting him here? Certainly not. There is no danger of infection from erysipelas, except for the time being.
806. In a hospital such as this, are not the wards occupied by old people particularly unpleasant—more unpleasant and close from the smell and effluvia—than are the wards occupied by young people? Oh dear, no; it depends on what the disease is.
807. How then do you account for the difference in the smell of this place and of the Infirmary in Sydney? I do not know what the difference is. I never was inside the Infirmary.
808. It is much sweeter than this? I cannot tell.
809. Mr. Metcalfe.] There is not so large a number of people there? No; there should not be if it is a proper hospital.
810. Mr. Cowper.] You see no objection to sending up from the Infirmary to this institution any cases which it is thought advisable to send up as chronic cases? No, I should accept anything they sent me.
811. Do you think such cases could be made comfortable here? As far as I know, a heap more comfortable than they are there.

812. There is no reason why these wards should not be made as comfortable as those of any other hospital? W. E. Strong, Esq., M.D.
No, not that I know of.
813. Can you say how it is intended to divide the lower floor of this new wing? No, I do not think I could tell you exactly; it is so long since I saw the arrangement. It is to be in different wards. There are to be separate small wards. 5 July, 1873.
814. What classes of cases are to be put into these small wards? Eye cases—cases of delirium tremens—cases we often get.
815. How many beds will there be in these small wards? Two beds; only one in some.
816. Will these wards extend across the building? I have only got two small wards.
817. Do they extend across the building? Yes, from window to window.
818. You say that you have 620 inmates in the institution? Yes, I think so.
819. And your calculation is that this institution will hold one quarter more when the new wing is finished? Yes, with the old building, I think I could stow away 800, giving me that place down there.
820. Mr. Goold.] In your opinion, are the windows sufficiently high for the proper ventilation of the new wing and the other parts of the building? If they were facing one another, I think they would do.
821. Do they not face one another? Yes, they do in the dormitories.
822. Is the ventilation of the dormitories sufficient? Yes, I think so.
823. President.] Do you not think that the windows should be carried up nearer to the ceiling? No, not if they face one another.
824. Mr. Metcalfe.] Is there not always a quantity of vitiated air that remains in the top of the room near the ceiling? I do not think so; if the windows are open it gets out.
825. President.] Are there any vermin in the building? I do not think that you could find a bug in the place.
826. The walls are sound? Yes, and they are always inspected and kept clean.
827. Mr. Goold.] How often are they white-washed? Three or four times a year; when they require it.
828. President.] Do you think that the piece of land which has been given to the Corporation should be secured? No, not now that we have got the other piece.
829. Not with a view to further building accommodation? Yes, for that purpose.
830. Is it not a most suitable piece of ground for the purpose, if further buildings are required? Yes, it is, undoubtedly.
831. Do you think that the cooking could be better managed here if it were carried on by steam? I do not think so. I have not had much experience of cooking by steam, and if that were introduced here, we should have to get a paid man to manage the steam apparatus. We do the thing more cheaply now.
832. Is the supply of water sufficient? Yes.
833. Mr. Ellis.] How often are the men's clothes changed? Once a week, I think.
834. Shirts and underclothing? I think that, whenever they are bathed they have a clean shirt on—that may be once or twice in the week.
835. What is the percentage of deaths in the institution? Well, it varies a good deal; sometimes we have a good many. The cold weather carries off the old men a good deal.
836. Mr. Metcalfe.] Have you had many die this winter? Yes, since the cold weather set in.
837. How many died last month? I dare say ten or eleven; and another month there might not be any deaths.
838. Mr. Ellis.] Have you any idea as to the average age of the persons admitted here? No, but I can give you some statistics which were made out for Sir Alfred Stephen when he was up here a short time ago. I can give you a copy of it. (See Appendix B 2.)
839. Have you any record that will show the reasons for any inmate's admission, whether from age, infirmity, or acute disease? No, I have never any reasons given me—I only get the ticket of admission.
840. Does that not state that the person is infirm or diseased? No.
841. You have, in fact, no means of judging as to that? No, except from what I see myself.
842. President.] Have you any reason to think that the charity of the place is abused by persons coming in who have no right to be here? No.
843. You do not think that people come in who are really not infirm or incapable of maintaining themselves? No; if they came in, I would send down a notice to the Board and turn them out. We have had some.
844. What are they—malingerers? Yes. Too lazy to work, and having no disease. If a man is lazy and drunken, and below 50 I turn him out. If the Board chooses to admit him, of course I cannot help it.
845. Mr. Ellis.] You say that there are people who could work, but who are so lazy that they prefer to come here and live at the public expense? I believe there are.
846. President.] Is there anything you wish to suggest for the improvement of the place? No, with the exception of the bakery. I do not think there is.

Mary Burnside, matron, Liverpool Asylum for Infirm and Destitute, examined during inspection of the premises:—

847. President.] You are the matron of this asylum? Yes. M. Burnside.
848. How long have you occupied that position? Twelve years the 17th of next March. 5 July, 1873.
849. What is your salary? £150 a year at present.
850. And residence is found you? Yes.
851. Any rations or allowances? No, nothing more than fuel and light.
852. Mr. Ellis.] No provisions of any kind? No, nothing at all but fuel and light. I think that these are the only institutions which do not get rations.
853. Mr. Goold.] You have this residence? Yes, I have.
854. President.] Will you tell us please the number of inmates at present in the asylum? There are 161 in the hospital, 435 in the dormitories, and twenty-eight in the temporary hospital.
855. They are all the inmates? Yes.
856. There are at present then 629 inmates? Yes.

- M. Burnside. 857. Of whom 189 are in the hospital? Yes. Of course that twenty-eight are convalescents, but they are treated as hospital patients—they are never asked to do anything.
- 5 July, 1873. 858. You have no paid servants on the establishment besides the inmates who assist? No.
859. What are your duties? The first thing in the morning I distribute the rations—I pass them first, and if I find anything is not as it should be, then I send for Dr. Strong. I give every wardman his bread for so many men in each dormitory and so many in the sick wards. Each man has a pound of bread. Then I serve out the tea and sugar. The rations are supplied daily, as likewise the medical comforts for the hospital. I remain on the premises until the men go to breakfast, and then I am there all day after breakfast to see that the food is properly cooked. I am there at dinner until grace is said, and I am there at tea-time. I see the medical comforts issued every day, and the gruel at 11 o'clock. I am responsible for the cooking, and I have charge of the stores, and see to all the clothing twice a week.
860. Are you satisfied with the way in which the bread contract is carried out? No, I am not satisfied with the weight of it. There is a good deal of difficulty in distributing the bread and giving every man his proper weight. The bread comes up in bags and is much broken, and Freehill does not send up any to make allowance for that. The bread is light in weight. If a man comes to me and says, "I have not got a pound of bread here," I go and weigh it, and if it is an ounce or two short I sometimes have not the bread to make the weight up. I have no fault to find with the quality of the bread, but if it were delivered in a cart, or in boxes, it would be much better.
861. How is it delivered now? In bags. It comes up in the train from Sydney, and it is thrown from one to another, and probably tossed about without much care, and then it is carted from the train here again.
862. Do you find the loaves short in number? No, the number is there, but the loaves are short in weight.
863. How long has this state of things been going on? Ever since Mr. Freehill has had the contract. There have been frequent letters written about it by the Board.
864. Do you know what steps have been taken with reference to the matter? Only that the Board has written about it.
865. Have you noticed any improvement? Yes. For instance, Dr. Strong wrote about the loaves, and they have been much better and larger. I have seen loaves come here which have been not more than 1½ lb. in weight, but I have not distributed it in that way. One morning, not a month ago, I weighed every man's bread in the institution, and gave each man his pound. I had thirty loaves over the number. (Probably those loaves were put in over to make up for deficient weight.) However, I took the trouble to weigh out every man's pound, and it took the whole of the thirty loaves to make up the weight for each man.
866. Mr. Ellis.] Then there were rations for sixty people deficient? Yes. There was one man brought his half-loaf to me, and it only weighed 11 ounces, instead of 16. They eat more bread now than they do in the summer-time.
867. President.] Are you satisfied with the way in which the meat is supplied? It is very good; but sometimes we have had to find fault with the contractor. The meat has been twice condemned.
868. Do you think that the bread should be baked on the premises? Yes; but there would have to be a paid baker on the place. It would not do to depend on getting a baker from among the inmates, as the men serve me sometimes, for as soon as they get a month's pay they want to go out and spend it. It would be better to get a paid baker, who could have the sole control of the kitchen and be head over the cooks.
869. Mr. Goold.] What do you mean by their getting a month's pay? The inmates are paid small sums for working on the place. A man may get 10s. a month, or whatever his pay may be; for instance, the wardsmen get 10s. a month, and a man when he gets that wants to go out until his money is gone, or sometimes he will wait and get two or three months' pay together.
870. Mr. Metcalfe.] And do they remain outside? Yes, sometimes for a month—sometimes more.
871. And are they admitted again without any question? No, I do not think that they are admitted without question, but they cannot help themselves.
872. President.] Is the washing done on the place? Yes.
873. Are you satisfied with the washing arrangements? Yes; it gives the men employment.
874. Is there not something wrong with the washing apparatus? Yes, it has given way—it nearly set the whole place on fire.
875. You cannot use it now? No, we cannot use it. We only use it in the winter-time, and in wet weather.
876. How long is it since the accident happened? I think last Thursday week.
877. Have the Board been informed of it? Yes. The letter was forwarded to the Works Department.
878. Mr. Cowper.] Have you any difficulty in getting things done by the Government? I do not know. There is certainly a difficulty somewhere, for we keep constantly asking for things.
879. Is there delay? Yes, constantly. There is this drying arrangement, it has not been attended to; and here are all these men to be provided with clean clothing—some hundreds of dozens—and what am I to do? We cannot dry the clothes before the fire.
880. Last week when it rained you had no means of drying the clothes? No.
881. Mr. Metcalfe.] Can you not use that drying apparatus? No, not at present.
882. President.] Should there not be a shed put up for these old people—a shelter during the wet weather? Yes. We had a shed, which was taken down and put into the paddock. There will be no shed in the yard for the convalescents and very infirm people—the hospital people.
883. But cannot they get into the shed in wet weather? They will have to go into the mess-room—that is all we can do for them. We put them into the mess-room, and we should do that if the shed were there. We throw the mess-room open after everything is cleared away after meals.
884. Mr. Cowper.] Is it not intended that they shall go there to wash as well? Yes; there is a lavatory outside, with the water laid on, and there is a hair-cutter there as well.
885. President.] Do you find any difficulty in getting the men to work in the garden? No. We give them extra bread and tobacco. We pay one man, and give the rest half a loaf of bread and half a fig of tobacco extra.
886. Mr. Ellis.] What is the rate of pay? 3d. per day.
887. But per head per day? 1s. per day is the highest. That is paid to the clerk, head wardman and dispenser.

888. What do the cooks get? 6d. per day each. The wardsman in 6 ward and the man in the cancer ward get 8d. a day each, and the deputy wardsman 4d. Each dormitory wardsman gets 4d., and they are not allowed deputies, but I give half a loaf of bread and half a fig of tobacco to any man who will assist in the dormitories, in carrying water, and so on. Then the wardsman in the new wing has 4d. a day, and he has two assistants who get 2d. a day each. M. Burnside.
5 July, 1873.
889. Have you any assistance yourself? None at all.
890. Then the whole responsibility of the institution, subject to Dr. Strong, devolves upon you? Yes.
891. If you are ill there is no one to take your place? No. Sometimes if I go away my eldest daughter does the duty.
892. But she does it for your sake, not for pay? Yes.
893. What time do the patients go to bed? At about a quarter to 7.
894. At what time do they get up in the morning? At a quarter to 6 in summer.
895. At what time in the winter? Quarter past 6.
896. Whose duty is it to see the beds cleaned up and so on? Mine. Every morning after breakfast I go up to the dormitories, and I am up there until 1 o'clock. I visit every ward every day—I am responsible for their cleanliness.
897. President.] How often do you wash them? Twice a week; and once a month all the bed-boards and irons are brought down out of the dormitories and cleaned.
898. Mr. Ellis.] Does the garden afford you a sufficient supply of vegetables all through the year? All through the year. We have never bought any.
899. You think that you have an ample supply? Yes; sometimes we have too much.
900. In weighing the bread have you ever found that there was more than the proper weight? No.
901. It has always been deficient? Yes, always.
902. Were you never allowed rations at all? No, we never applied for them.
903. Mr. Metcalfe.] Does the baker ever give you an extra number of loaves to make up for the short weight? Yes, he often sends extra loaves.
904. How many? I believe, as I said before, there were on one occasion thirty loaves over the number.
905. Why do you suppose he sent them? I do not know, I am sure. We have often complained about the broken bread, as it is hard to distribute, and I think that he has said that he would send an over quantity to make that up. He has sent up fancy bread, which is never the weight—stale bread—and we do not require it.
906. Mr. Ellis.] You think that it would be a saving to have the bread baked here? Yes, I am sure that if we had a baker here it would pay.
907. President.] Do you not think that the inmates should sometimes have roast meat? Yes, if we had appliances for giving it to them, they should have it twice a week. That was what was suggested when the letter was written about the baking.
908. Mr. Ellis.] Do you think that there are many impostors come here? Yes, I have known them come up by train. They have got a ticket from the Board, but they have not come in here. On one or two occasions they have done so, but not regularly.
909. As a rule, you do not keep persons here who should not be kept in? No, that is an order which Dr. Strong has had from the Board.
910. Mr. Gould.] You said that last week there were £40 paid for allowances? Yes.
911. What period was that for? One month.
912. Do you not think that those men who are able to work should work without pay, seeing that they are kept gratuitously by the State? It is hard to get them to work. Some think that they are not paid enough—that they do not receive the value of their services. They were paid at a higher rate formerly. When we came here, the persons in the wards now getting 4d. a day were paid £35 a year.
913. Mr. Ellis.] There is a pound of meat allowed to each inmate? Yes, in its raw state, with the bone.
914. It is boiled up, so as to make soup? Yes.
915. It is then cut up and distributed? Yes.
916. How much actual meat does each person get? I think that he should get about 10 ounces. I have seen the meat run about 12 ounces, but it is not always so.
917. There is not much nourishment left in the meat after the soup has been made from it? No; but at the same time the nourishment is in the soup, and that is really good. There are some of the inmates who cannot eat the meat.
918. Mr. Metcalfe.] Do they ever complain? Never; but they seem to enjoy the dinner on the Queen's Birthday and on Christmas Day.
919. That is the only time when they get roast meat? Yes, and they got it when the Prince came.
920. They get plum duff too on those occasions? Yes, and a glass of ale.
921. Do the clergymen attend here very regularly? Yes.
922. What clergymen? Mr. King comes once a week—every Wednesday—to attend the men belonging to the Church of England. And the Roman Catholics are attended on Thursday, and the Presbyterians on Friday; and the students preach on Sunday evenings. At any time that a patient requires to see a clergyman, one is always sent for.
923. Mr. Ellis.] Have you any difficulty in keeping the men in proper order? Never. If I find them refractory, I direct the wardsman to take the house clothing off them.
924. President.] How often do they have a change of linen? When they get their baths—sometimes twice a week, and sometimes three times a week. At any time, when we find that they require a change, we give them one, and if I find that a man does not look clean, I send him down and have his clothes changed at once; and on Saturdays every man has a clean sheet put on his bed. To sick wards we allow clean sheets at any time.
925. Mr. Ellis.] How often are the men allowed clean shirts? Sometimes twice a week, sometimes three times a week. There is a man in charge of the bath, and if he thinks that a man requires a change of linen, it is always changed.
926. President.] How often do they have a bath? Twice a week and three times a week, and sometimes every other day.
927. They do not like it? Some of them do not. They say that they catch their death of cold.
928. Mr. Metcalfe.] Do you allow those who can go to walk to church? Yes, those that we know, and can trust, but I have known some of them to go away in the clothes of the institution, and give away the clothes

M. Burnside. clothes to get drink. I always ask the priest to give me the names of those whom he would like to attend the Roman Catholic Chapel, and I make him responsible for them. One man is left in charge of them, and he is responsible for them until they come back to dinner.

5 July, 1873.

929. Mr. Goold.] From your experience, can you say how far in your opinion has intemperance been the cause of these people coming here? I think you may say it has brought three-parts of them here?
930. President.] Three-fourths? I think so. They will almost confess it themselves.
931. Mr. Goold.] You have no means of ascertaining that? No.
932. Is it possible to get the information? No; all of them would not confess it; some will tell you that drink has brought them here. There are many of them who are afflicted with paralysis.
933. Mr. Metcalfe.] Brought on by intemperance? In some cases perhaps.
934. President.] Do you see any way in which the labour of the inmates could be made use of more profitably—is there any employment that these people could be put to? I do not think so, judging by the time they take to do the work of the institution.
935. How many are employed? A great many. I give out about thirty half-loaves a day for gratuities to inmates who do not get paid any money.
936. How many persons, paid and unpaid, are employed on the establishment? 138.
937. Have you to carry all the water used for washing purposes? Yes. We carry all the irons and boards and the bedding down to clean them, and we sometimes find great difficulty in doing it. Really these old men are not capable of doing it sometimes.
938. Would the work be simplified if you had elevators? Yes, I think so.
939. Mr. Ellis.] Would it be of any advantage to the institution to have a few paid attendants who would not be inmates? I do not think so. We have the inmates under control, and if you had paid assistants they would be sometimes away from the place when they would be needed perhaps. We have these here always—they are at home.
940. Mr. Couper.] You think that assistants would not work so well? No; you would find that they would impose on the old men, and they would not work themselves—they would require more looking after than the old men do. When I came here there was a paid laundress and her daughter, who had £45 a year. The men did all the washing, but she got all the pay, and the men got nothing but a little extra bread and tea and sugar.
941. Mr. Goold.] Do the men who wash get paid anything? 3d. a day.
942. Do you not think that they should be made to work without pay? If they could be made to do so, perhaps.
943. Should it not be a rule of the place that those who could work should do what was required of them without pay? But then you should have some inducement for them to work, as far as the cooking and so on. Then there is the making of boots and shoes—the pay that they get for these things is very small.
944. Mr. Ellis.] You think the trifling pay that they get makes them work more willingly than they otherwise would do? Yes.
945. Mr. Couper.] If they would work for nothing you would not pay them for it? We should never get them to do it.
946. Giving them bread and tobacco is quite as expensive as giving them money? Yes.
947. Mr. Metcalfe.] What do you say is the average cost per head of the inmates of this institution? The inmates altogether?
948. Yes? £11 odd. I have not the return yet. I do not know exactly.
949. President.] It is under £12? It is this year. That includes everything—servants' wages, clothes, and everything else. I think that Hyde Park is the lowest this year, and we are the next lowest, and Parramatta is the highest. But we pay £80 a year rent for an extra building at the other end of the town, and we have to buy water for that place at 7d. a cask; and then we had to keep extra cooks, though now I make the same cooks do the work. Before I had to keep two there.
950. Mr. Metcalfe.] The water will be laid on to the new wing? Yes, it will be laid on all over the building.
951. There will be force-pumps to send the water up? Yes.
952. And there will be a tank on top? Yes.
953. Mr. Ellis.] Do you find that the rations are sufficient? Yes, I think so. I think that if they had more they would waste it. Oftentimes I feel vexed to see so much bread wasted.
954. President.] What becomes of the waste bread? We sell it.
955. Does any one buy it? Yes. It is a sort of slush; we throw it all together, and sell it for pigs. I think last quarter we made somewhere about £20; and the bones too, we sell them at 1s. per hundred, and we forward that down to the Board.
956. Mr. Ellis.] What do they have in the evening—tea? Tea.
957. Mr. Metcalfe.] Have you any cows? No, not for the institution.
958. Do you not give them milk in their tea? No, not in the dormitories, but in the hospital we do. We buy it for 2d. per quart—beautiful milk it is.
959. Mr. Ellis.] Have the present inmates been in the institution for some time? Yes; there is an old man here who was here before I came. We have a man here who will never speak, but he will sing all day.
960. Are there many who have been here for a long time? Not many. There is a wardsman and "Old George," and there are a good many others who have been in and out since I came; but I can pick out, I dare say, half a dozen who were in the house when I came, and who have not been out of it since.
961. President.] Have you any suggestion to make for the improvement of the place and its management? No, I do not think so. I think that Dr. Strong would be the best person to do that; he understands what is required better than I would.
962. Mr. Couper.] Do you think that the patients get sufficient medical comforts? I am sure that they do. Since I have been here there has never been a doctor who has given so much of medical comforts as Dr. Strong.
963. What do you give them? Anything that they ask for.
964. Anything but spirits? Spirits, too, as far as a glass of rum.
965. Anything besides rum? Yes, brandy.
966. I saw that you had gin in the store? Yes, we give them gin.

967. Mr. Goold.] How much rum do you use? Fifteen gallons in a month. There is one man who gets a gill of rum a day to keep him alive. I have given them warm grog, and you would think they were in their last moments, but the spirits would sometimes keep them alive for days. M. Burnside.
5 July, 1873.
968. Why do you give them more rum than any other kind of spirit? These men have been accustomed to drink rum, and the doctor finds it better for them.
969. They do not get spirits in the gaol at all? But these poor old men are not sent here for punishment. They want looking after in that way.
970. Mr. Cowper.] Do you give them beer? We give them porter.
971. Mr. Goold.] That is only used as a medical comfort? Yes.
972. You never give it to any of the men in the yard? No; the doctor makes out a list of the medical comforts, and I issue them.
973. President.] Who keeps the books of the place? They are up in the office. That is under Dr. Strong's control.
974. Mr. Ellis.] Do benevolent people appear to take any interest in the place? No; as it is a Government institution they do not think it is requisite.
975. You never receive any donations for the benefit of the patients? Never.
976. The Government alone seem to take any interest in the matter? Yes. The inmates' friends sometimes visit the place on a Saturday, and bring them a little money. Sometimes they get a little money which I give them—a shilling a week and so on.
977. President.] Is there always that unpleasant smell about that porch? Yes; that is from the cancer ward. Before the cancer cases came here there was not that smell. It is a pity for them; but at the same time there should be a comfortable room for them away from the main building. It is most unsightly.
978. Mr. Goold.] Will that be altered when the new wing is finished? I think so. There is a small ward intended for them. There are two side wards; it will not be in the main building. There must be some place to put them into out of the house. They lie there eight or nine months suffering, with the whole face eaten away sometimes.
979. Mr. Cowper.] Are there wardsmen with them? Yes. That man has to have a glass of rum a day before he can dress them. I have seen as many as eleven cancer cases in the house at once.
980. Mr. Metcalfe.] How many are there now? I think that there are six.
981. They are not all old men there? No.
982. President.] Do they go off suddenly? Yes, some of these main arteries break, and they bleed to death.
983. Mr. Cowper.] Does the clergyman visit them often? Yes. We always treat them well—give them the same privileges as any one else. When they come in they know that they are going to die. There was one who came up in the train last night and I had to leave the place—the smell was something dreadful.
984. Mr. Ellis.] When patients come up unexpectedly, how do you provide rations for them? We have always bread in the house—extra bread—and a pint or so of soup. We always have that over.

W. E. Strong, Esq., M.D., surgeon-superintendent, Liverpool Asylum for Infirm and Destitute, called in and further examined:—

985. Mr. Cowper.] Do you think that there are sufficient medical comforts allowed to the patients? Yes. We get rum and sherry and gin for them, and if there is anything else required they send it up. I find these three enough. W. E. Strong,
Esq., M.D.
5 July, 1873.
986. What else do you give them—I do not mean spirits—do you give them sago puddings? Yes, arrow-root, sago, corn-flour—all those things in fact.
987. Poultry? No, no poultry—they do not require that. They have not required poultry since I have been here—I have not seen a case in which it was required. They get beef tea, and in particular cases I get some shins and make a jelly.
988. What do these cancer cases live on? The best that is going.
989. What do they live on? The food I have just named to you, and butter—that is their great craving. That poor man whom you saw is in a great state if he does not get his butter, if the grocer does not send it.
990. Do you find that the medical comforts add much to the expenses of the place? No; there is less used of other things, and so much less to draw from the contractor.
991. Mr. Metcalfe.] The expense is between £11 and £12 per head? Yes.
992. Mr. Cowper.] Can you give any idea of the reason of the difference in the cost here and in the Sydney Infirmary? In the Infirmary there is a large amount of attendance.
993. Do you not think that the people here require more attention than the patients in the Sydney Infirmary—you see, I want to know how it is that these people can be cared for and maintained properly here at a cost of £11 a year per head, while at the Infirmary the cost is something like £45 per head—I cannot believe that they are properly supplied here? Well, there are the inmates; go and ask them.
994. Do you think that they get all that they require? Yes, and more than I have seen men get in other places. There is a ward there with thirty-two patients in it—go and ask them; that is the test.
995. What makes the difference between the cost here and the cost in the Infirmary? There are operations in the Infirmary, and attendance.
996. But there are not operations in every ward? No. Well, I have not been in the Infirmary.

MONDAY, 7 JULY, 1873.

Members Present:—

WILLIAM CHARLES WINDEYER, Esq., PRESIDENT.

SAMUEL GOOLD, Esq.
MICHAEL METCALFE, Esq.EYRE G. ELLIS, Esq.
CHARLES COWPER, JUN., Esq.

Maurice Alexander, Esq., Hon. Treasurer, Benevolent Society, called in and examined:—

- M. Alexander, Esq.
7 July, 1873.
997. President.] I believe you are the honorary treasurer of the Benevolent Society? I am.
998. How long have you been so? I think since 1860 or 1861.
999. We see, by the accounts of the Society, that you have a considerable sum of money invested? Yes, we have. I believe that the statement in last year's report is correct.
1000. How much is it? According to this statement in the report, it is over £11,000.
1001. What has it accrued from? From legacies left by different parties. The principal one is from Mr. Francis Jones; I do not recollect the others.
1002. What was the amount? Something over £3,000 in the first instance.
1003. We are informed that the interest of this money is not used for current expenses, but that it is reinvested? That is the case as far as the bank deposits are concerned. Of course, as far as the investments in debentures, in the farm, and in the New Zealand debentures are concerned, the interest goes towards the current expenses.
1004. Can you tell us why one portion of the interest goes to pay current expenses while the other does not? It has been our wish to realize as much money as we can.
1005. With what object? To re-erect a new establishment. I think in 1866 or 1867 it was contemplated to erect a new establishment and sell the site of the old one.
1006. In whom is the site of the building in George-street vested? In trustees—the Hon. E. Deas Thomson, M.L.C., the Hon. George Allen, M.L.C., and the treasurer for the time being.
1007. Can you tell us what amount was subscribed to this Society last year? £710 14s. 6d., in 1872.
1008. What was the amount contributed by the Government? That is a different matter, I think. I am not quite so well up in what is subscribed for the assistance of the institution proper. There is a part of the sum granted for the support of children who are brought to us and intended to be sent to the Randwick Asylum.
1009. But what is the amount altogether—whatever the objects for which it is contributed may be? £3,772 15s. 1d.
1010. Mr. Metcalfe.] That is over and above what fines you receive from the Police Office? We have fines amounting to £351 6s. 10d. in addition.
1011. President.] Do you attend the committee meetings? Generally.
1012. Do you find that there is any inconvenience from the committee being so large? No, I have not. I do not think so.
1013. But do you not think the committee would work better if it were not so large? Of course, if the committee were paid, six or eight gentlemen would do the work of twenty; but when their services are gratuitous or honorary, the question is whether, by having a great many, you cannot make sure of having a quorum.
1014. Do you think that it is desirable to have clergymen on these committees? I do not see any objection to it. We depend on their giving us information and seeking information as to cases that come before us.
1015. Are you aware that there are two schools on the premises of this Society? Yes.
1016. Were they in existence when you became a member of the Board? When I became a member of the Board it was quite a different institution to what it is now.
1017. Then these schools were not in existence then? I cannot tell you—I do not recollect.
1018. Were not the schools formed after the old people were taken away? Yes.
1019. Why were two schools established? The Catholics did not like their children to be educated with the Protestant children, and vice versa.
1020. Do you think that it is right for two schoolmistresses to be employed? I cannot answer that question. I do not see the necessity of it. I prefer the children being educated together; but that is a sectarian question altogether—a question of opinion.
1021. Is it not a question of economy? I think so. If they were all educated together it would be much more economical.
1022. You have not paid much attention to the schools? I have been there and visited them frequently.
1023. Mr. Ellis.] Could one teacher attend well to more than thirty or forty children? I think not. I do not think that the staff could be reduced. Just as many assistants would be required as there are there now.
1024. Mr. Metcalfe.] But would not the education be better if the children were all together? Yes, there is no doubt of that. That is a mere question of the Denominational or Public School System.
1025. Mr. Ellis.] Are the teachers there certified by the Public School Board? I think not. They have very small infants to teach.
1026. Mr. Goold.] Do you see any reason why all these children should not be removed to Randwick? They are removed to Randwick.
1027. But would it not be better to have no schools there, and take all the children to Randwick? I think that the schools are useful to occupy the children's minds.
1028. President.] But is there any object in keeping them there? We do not keep them longer than we can possibly help.
1029. Mr. Ellis.] But cannot they be sent to Randwick instead of being kept at the Benevolent Asylum? But the authorities at Randwick will not receive them until they are four years old. Some of these children are only two years old.
1030. Mr. Goold.] Supposing that arrangements were made for their removal there, is there any reason why they should not go? I think not. The Randwick institution would have a great objection to take them as they come off the streets.

1031. Mr. Ellis.] Then is the Benevolent Asylum a preparatory school for Randwick? Not exactly. M. Alexander, Esq.
1032. Are the children supposed to be made more fit for Randwick? Well, these children have no right to go to the Benevolent Asylum at all, but go there as a last resource. It is not known what to do with them, and so they are sent to the Benevolent Asylum; and it is a mere home for them for a short time. 7 July, 1873.
- The Randwick people would not take them, so they come to the Benevolent Asylum.
1033. Have you any idea of the average cost of the children in the Benevolent Asylum? I cannot tell that from memory—it would be stated in the report. I do not think it exceeds £8 or £9 odd, but you had better refer to the book for the exact sum.
1034. Mr. Metcalfe.] How is it that this interest comes to be reinvested? The money we have invested chiefly in the bank at 3 or 5 per cent., as the case may be. When the deposit receipts become due, the interest is added to the original amount, and reinvested in the same way.
1035. But you have got some debentures? The interest of them goes to the general account.
1036. Why? Because the Bank deducts the interest and pays it to the general account. We are bound, as far as this £1,000 is concerned—the legacy of Mr. William Manson, of Frazer & Co.—to devote the interest of that to current expenses.
1037. Mr. Ellis.] How many lying-in wards are there in the institution? I have no idea; you must get that from the matron. There are a good many confinements during the year.
1038. Do you know whether there is any distinction made between respectable married women and unfortunate girls who come in under the same circumstances? I believe that they try to place them as well as they can; I think that they are classified as well as the limited wards will allow.
1039. Under what circumstances are women and children received into the institution? Under a variety of circumstances. Sometimes they are the children picked up by the police in the streets.
1040. I mean women with children? Sometimes a woman is in destitute circumstances and has no home or friends, and a clergyman or respectable housekeeper, or subscriber, gives a recommendation, and the committee takes the recommendation, and if they can admit the woman they will; but these cases are generally admitted by a recommendation from the Colonial Secretary.
1041. What is the time for which they keep people in the institution? If a single girl comes in to be confined —
1042. I mean all the women with children who are taken in there? These are exceptional cases altogether. Often application is made for a child to be admitted. Very young children take so much attention, and we admit the mother to take care of it.
1043. Do the women who go there to be confined pay anything? We have a rule that a single woman who is recommended pays £2. Of course, if it is found that she cannot pay the £2, she is admitted in any case. They generally come well-dressed, and we say—“We will admit you, but you must pay £2.”
1044. And, with the exception of the part devoted to the destitute children, the institution is a lying-in hospital? Yes; and an out-door relief Society.
1045. Do you think that it would be any improvement if a lying-in ward were established in a public hospital, and the Benevolent Asylum left to exercise its charity in the ordinary way? Yes, there is no doubt of that; a lying-in hospital would be very beneficial.
1046. Do the committee ever take the trouble to find out whether a married woman going into the institution is able to pay something? If a married woman applies—of course it is understood that she is a married woman—she is recommended by people that the committee have confidence in, and it is Mr. Mansfield's place to satisfy himself, by seeing her marriage lines, that she is so.
1047. But do you make her pay anything? No; if they apply to be admitted, it is quite certain that they are not able to pay.
1048. What is the doctor's salary? £250 a year. Dr. Renwick has been there a long time.
1049. Mr. Cowper.] Are there no fixed principles which guide the committee in admitting these people? Fixed principles! It is not a law like that of the Medes and Persians. If a girl comes in there from the country (we have had them come from Brisbane and Victoria) we know that they are poor and penniless, and we are obliged to admit them.
1050. Do you think they are sent up from Brisbane and Melbourne for the purpose of being confined here? Yes, chiefly from Brisbane.
1051. Do you know of any instances of the kind? Yes, we have had several instances. These new arrivals too—girls from the “Silver Eagle,” and other emigrant ships—we cannot exact the £2 from. We expect them to find their own baby-linen too, but this is not customary.
1052. Mr. Ellis.] But you receive them in any case? Yes, we must receive them.
1053. Do you not think that it would be well to make them pay? You cannot make some of them; you will not find a married woman going in there who is able to pay.
1054. Mr. Cowper.] Have there not been cases of husbands going away from their wives in order that the women might go in and be confined, and then coming back again after the confinement was over? I do not think there has been a case of that kind. Men desert their wives, but not for objects of that sort. People may go into the Infirmary who can afford to pay for medical aid, but they do not go into the Benevolent Asylum. I am satisfied that there are few women in the Asylum who have not gone there from dire necessity. Of course, there is no doubt a good deal of imposition and deception is practised with regard to the out-door relief, but I do not believe that there is any in the other cases. Of course these single girls know that the institution is open, and they come in as bold as brass, and, no doubt, we have what may be called “respectable” girls, (belonging to respectable families), who are sent there to be confined, to get rid of the disgrace.
1055. Mr. Gould.] Do they pay anything? Yes, we insist on them paying £2 if they can.

George Harris, late an inmate, Parramatta Asylum for the Infirm and Destitute, called in and further examined, at his own request:— G. Harris.

1056. President.] You were lately an inmate of the Parramatta Asylum? Yes. 7 July, 1873.
1057. When did you leave that institution? On Friday morning, at a quarter to 12.
1058. Were you there when the Commission visited the Asylum? Yes.
1059. You made certain statements then? Yes; to Mr. Metcalfe, Mr. Driver, and Mr. Cowper.

- G. Harris. 1060. Why did you leave the institution? Because of the statement I made to the gentlemen of the Royal Commission.
- 7 July, 1873. 1061. How do you know that was the reason you were required to leave? Because Mr. Dennis told me so; he told me that I had no business to put myself forward.
1062. What were the statements you made? I said that instead of getting meat to eat as we should do, it was bullock's heart, and that the potatoes were rotten.
1063. Did you complain of the shortness of the bread? I did. I said we never got above nine ounces of bread, or a quarter of a pound short of what it should be. He put one of the constables to hear what was said, and he said there were ten more that he would turn out as well as me; and he said if he was fetched before this Committee he would turn plenty out. On Friday I was there, and Mr. Dennis told me to get my things and go out.
1064. When were you turned out? On Friday morning.
1065. Did you ask him why he turned you out? Yes, I did. I said to him, as he was going into the store, "Can I speak to you, Mr. Dennis?" He was going over with a saw to cut a pig, and he turned round and said, "What is it?" I said, "Will you kindly inform me why I am to be turned out of the place?" and he said "No, I won't."
1066. I thought you said that he told you why it was himself? That was before, when he told me that I had no occasion to put myself forward.
1067. Are you sure that you have not violated any of the rules of the institution? None whatever. I have only been turned out for speaking my mind.
1068. Have you had any disagreement with Mr. Dennis before? No, I have always lived on the best of terms with him—never had any unpleasantness at all.
1069. Mr. Ellis.] Did the person who told you to go out tell you why you were to go? No, he told me to pack up my things.
1070. Did you ask him the reason? I asked him, and he said that he had orders to put me out.
1071. President.] Has any stir been made about the bread since we were up there? It was better for a morning or so, but now it has gone back again to what it was before. Two or three men took their loaves to be weighed, and the wardsmen took them and weighed them and said they were all right. They were not allowed to see them weighed though.
1072. Mr. Goold.] How long were you in the place? I went there this time twelve months.
1073. President.] How old are you? I was born on the last night of July, 1822.
1074. Under what circumstances did you gain admission into the Asylum? I came down from Bathurst; I had a dislocation of the hip—the toe only touches the ground. I got the dislocation going over to Melbourne with horses for Judge Cheeke. I was always in private service before that.
1075. Mr. Ellis.] You believe that you were turned out of the Asylum on account of the information that you gave the Commission? That is the only reason.
1076. Are you sure that you did not refuse to carry out any rule? I never refused to do anything. There has been no dispute. I never had a word with any one on the place.
1077. Mr. Metcalfe.] Are you the only man that has been turned out? At present I am, but there are more picked out to go.
1078. Mr. Cowper.] Had you not some intention of leaving the place when we were up there? Yes; I had some intention of getting a situation with a man named Logan, and I told Mr. Driver so.
1079. You are well enough to leave, then? I want something to support me. If I had a high-heeled boot, Dr. Nathan told me I could do, when he turned me out of the Infirmary three years ago. The hip is driven right behind. I should be glad to earn a living if I could.
1080. Mr. Goold.] What could you do? Groom horses, and go about among horses. I could do that if I got a high-heeled boot, or something of that sort—it would enable me to get round and earn my living.
1081. Otherwise you are in good health? In every other way, only for the left leg being short. If I go to walk, it pains me in the knee and the hip.
1082. Mr. Cowper.] Have you any other complaints to make with reference to the management of the asylum? Yes, a good deal.
1083. What have you got to say about it? Last Christmas Day there were 270 men left there without a bit of breakfast at all. Mr. Dennis goes down the bay in his yacht, and never gives us a bit of bread or meat. He goes away with his sons and two boatmen, and he leaves 270 men there without a bit of bread.
1084. President.] Was any one left to look after his duty in the place? No one at all.
1085. Mr. Metcalfe.] Who is the matron there? Mrs. Dennis; and she never looks after us, to see if there is a button on the shirts. She never comes into the place; and Mr. Dennis would never come down into the mess room but for you gentlemen being there. He only goes there on the Queen's Birthday and Christmas Day, when he gives out those toasts.
1086. Mr. Cowper.] What else have you got to complain of? Well, there are eight gallons of kerosene a month go up for the institution, to enable the men to have a light in the ward, and there are only two gallons of it used in the institution, and the other six gallons are used by Mr. Dennis.
1087. Mr. Metcalfe.] How do you know that? I know. The wardsmen only get a pint a month.
1088. How many wards are there? Eight wards.
1089. That is eight pints? Yes; there are eight gallons go up every month, and there are only two gallons used in the place.
1090. President.] Do you know that the kerosene goes over to Mr. Dennis? Yes; they know it goes over to his house.
1091. Who knows it? The lamp-cleaner and the constable—Grant and Sweeney. They take it over.
1092. Do they take the six gallons over regularly? Yes, in the tin can. They go over regularly, and take the oil over.
1093. Mr. Ellis.] Does not Mr. Dennis live in the institution? No; in a brick house there.
1094. Do you know whether Mr. Dennis is allowed any light for himself? Yes, he is allowed a certain quantity of oil for light, but not the quantity that he consumes.
1095. The wardsmen are inmates? Yes.
1096. And the whole of the place is left in charge of the wardsmen? Yes, the whole place is managed by three cooks and the head wardman. Mr. Dennis never comes to interfere in the place.
1097. Does he not come near the place? He comes, but he only stops a few minutes.
1098. Is the consumption of this kerosene by Mr. Dennis a matter of comment on the place? Yes, regularly; every one there has complained of it.
- 1099.

1099. Mr. Metcalfe.] Is there anything else? Yes, there are several things. There is £21 that Mr. Dennis came and got out of the bank for a man in No. 6 ward, and I would like to know whether he has accounted to the Government for that money. The man is dead.

1100. President.] How long ago is that? About two months ago.

1101. What was the man's name? - I do not know, but I can ascertain that.

1102. Was he an inmate? Yes, he was bed-ridden there.

1103. Mr. Ellis.] How do you know that he got the money? Because I was in the ward when he got the pen and ink and paper for the man to sign an order for him to get the money, and I was in the ward when he told him he had got it. He told the man he would allow him milk and anything that he wanted.

1104. How long was this before the man died? About three weeks.

1105. How long had he been there? Fifteen or sixteen months.

1106. How did he get him to sign this paper? Because he told the wardsman, and the wardsman told Mr. Dennis, and he came and spoke to the man about it, and got the money out of the Savings Bank. He had to get the man to sign two papers, for the first time the signature was not right.

1107. Then this was done openly? No, it was not, but I was there at the time.

1108. Mr. Ellis.] Might he not have given the money to the man? No, the man never had it. He never handled any money, and Mr. Dennis said he would take the money and keep it for him.

1109. He said he would give him milk for it? Yes, he allowed him milk until he died—a pint of milk a day—that was from the time he got the money until he died.

1110. Mr. Goold.] Did you know the man? I had no acquaintance with him only by sight. I do not remember his name, but there was a man named Hodge, who was a gatekeeper there—he can tell the name.

1111. President.] This is about two months ago? Yes.

1112. Who was the wardsman in the ward? A big able man who is in the No. 1 ward—a big strapping able man. There was a lot of men anxious to give evidence against the institution—Neale, Hodge, William Smith, William Edney, and Chas. Brown, and a man named Miller—I do not know what his christian name is—William or Robert—he is a lame man. Then there is Edward Rawlings.

1113. What will they give evidence about? The bad management of the institution—the bad working of it altogether.

1114. Have you any other charges to make? No. There are several things,—but still Mr. Dennis may have accounted to the Government for them. There is a hydraulic pump that may have been taken away.

1115. Where was it taken to? I do not know where it has gone.

1116. Mr. Cowper.] What else? Mr. Dennis shut up the well against the cookhouse for his own use, and will not allow us to get a drink out of it; and the man in charge of it, John Challinor, will prove it. He threatend to turn men out of the institution who wanted to get water out of it to make tea.

1117. How so? Because he kept the well for his own use.

1118. But one man would not drink all the water in that tank? No; but he keeps it for his own use.

1119. Is that the well where the pump is padlocked? No, the other one, that one is kept to wash Mr. Dennis's clothes when it is short.

1120. Might it not be that he keeps the well shut because the water is short? That is not the reason. He will come and storm like a madman if any one goes near it—he will say—"How dare you go to that water?—I will turn you out." There was a man filling the coppers for tea, and he threatened to turn him out.

1121. Mr. Goold.] Is that since the Commission were there? No, it was before you were up there. He has opened the well since, and it is carried to the cookhouse for boiling the meat and the tea.

1122. President.] What was your occupation in life before you went there? I was a groom and coachman.

1123. Did you not say something about Judge Cheeke? Yes, I was living with him. It was the last occupation I had. I lived with him for better than two years. When I first went to live with him he was Commissioner, and afterwards he got promoted.

1124. Where was the last place you were at? At Darling Point—at Wetheril's.

1125. Mr. Cowper.] Have you ever driven a cab? I drove an omnibus once.

1126. Mr. Goold.] Could you drive an omnibus now? Yes. I was out to-day to try and get employment.

1127. Mr. Ellis.] Whose employment were you in before you went into the Asylum? In the employment of a man named Logan.

1128. And before that? The last place I was at, I was driving in Sydney for a man named Taylor.

1129. Mr. Metcalfe.] Why did you leave the man for whom you were driving? He knocked the omnibus off.

1130. Mr. Ellis.] It must be fifteen years since you were in Judge Cheeke's employ? Yes, it is about that time.

1131. President.] Who would you refer us to if we required a character of you? I do not know how I could get one. There is no one I could refer to. But there is Mr. Alexander Maskell—I was looking after the horses and waiting at table for him.

1132. How long ago? Eighteen or twenty years ago.

1133. Are there any persons with whom you have been living more lately than that to whom you can refer us? This man Logan or Khel—I stopped with him until he sold out to Cobb & Co.

1134. Mr. Goold.] How long have you been in the institution? This time twelve months I went into it—twelve months the latter end of this month.

1135. Mr. Ellis.] Before that, you were in the Sydney Infirmary? Not for years.

1136. How long is it since you met with that accident? It is twenty years. It was just at the time the "Great Britain" made her first trip out here.

1137. President.] Have you been earning your living since the time you met with this accident? I was driving an omnibus for a man named Pugsley.

1138. How is it you had to go into the asylum? I went to Hudson's saw-mills for a load of sawdust, and I had put on eight or ten bags, and was in the act of going away, and the man with me went to prod the horse, and I was in the act of getting the scotch away from the wheel, and the wheel went over my leg and burst the wound open, and they took me to Waterloo and then to the Infirmary. They sewed my leg up—I have the mark now—and when I came out of the Infirmary I was advised to go into the Parramatta Asylum.

- G. Harris. 1139. Mr. Ellis.] It was not the dislocation of the hip then that disabled you? No, it was the bursting of the right foot.
- 7 July, 1873. 1140. President.] Is that healed now? Yes.
1141. Then you are able to work now? Yes, if I had a high-heeled boot.
1142. Where did the dislocation take place? At Yackandandah.
1143. How is it that you are not able to earn your living now? Because my leg is continually getting shorter.
1144. Does it always keep getting shorter? Yes.
1145. How much is it too short? I cannot say, but it does keep getting short.
1146. Was it short when you drove the omnibus? Yes, it was.
1147. But you were able to attend to the business? Yes, until I met with this accident.
1148. Mr. Goold.] Have you done anything since that? The last place I had was in Bathurst—I came down from Bathurst to the asylum. I got hurt loading copper ore—that is how I came into the institution the last time.
1149. Mr. Ellis.] Do you mean to say that your leg is shorter now than it was when you were driving the omnibus? Yes. I could at one time carry two buckets of water quite well, and it is more than I can do now.
1150. That is owing a good deal to the contraction of the leg? Yes; the more I walk on it the worse it is.
1151. President.] Have you any relations in the Country? No, none of any description.
1152. Mr. Ellis.] Where does this man Logan live? He lives close to the institution, at a public-house that his mother keeps. His mother's name is Mrs. Kehl.

Edward G. Ward, Esq., Registrar General, called in and examined:—

- E. G. Ward, Esq. 1153. President.] You are the Registrar General of the Colony? I am.
- 7 July, 1873. 1154. I believe that you have been good enough to prepare some returns, showing the number of paupers at present in the different hospitals, asylums, and industrial schools of the Colony? I have.
1155. Do you produce them? Yes. (See Appendix C.)
1156. Do these returns show the percentage of paupers of the population of last year? Yes; those receiving assistance in hospitals, orphan and industrial schools, and miscellaneous institutions. It does not give the paupers who are receiving out-door relief.
1157. Does it show the out-door patients of the Infirmary? Yes, but it does not give the percentage.
1158. Can you tell us what the percentage is? I could in a few minutes.
1159. Mr. Ellis.] The percentage is as to the inmates? Yes. The out-door patients are 6,383, and the Benevolent Asylum out-door cases number 6,131—each case averaging four rations.
1160. President.] I want the percentage? I have only just shown those who are inmates of the hospitals and asylums, which is about four per cent. of the estimated population at the end of last year. That will be four per cent.—all patients, in-door and out-door. It is a small trifle over four per cent.
1161. Does that include lunatics? That does not include lunatics.
1162. Nor criminals in the gaols? No.
1163. Do you happen to know the percentage of the pauper class in the Colony of Victoria? No, I cannot say.
1164. Mr. Goold.] Do you know what it is in England? I cannot say. I have not seen the last returns from England.
1165. Mr. Ellis.] Four per cent includes all the paupers receiving in-door and out-door relief in this Colony? Yes. The percentage of those who are receiving out-door relief is about 1·5 per cent.—about $1\frac{1}{2}$.

JOSEPH WEARNE, Esq., M.P.

Frederick Hillier, late inmate, Parramatta Asylum for Infirm and Destitute, called in and further examined, at his own request:—

- F. Hillier. 1166. President.] You have been an inmate of the Government Asylum at Parramatta? Yes.
- 10 July, 1873. 1167. How long have you been there? I think it is on this paper (producing a form of discharge). It is somewhere about nine weeks.
1168. You are suffering from amaurosis? No; from inflammation of the eyes and granulations. I think the granulations have got well since I have been up there.
1169. Are you blind? No, I can see my way about. It is principally the inflammation that is bad now.
1170. Do you wish to make any statement to us? I believe I did make a statement already, and that that is the cause of my having been turned out of the asylum. I put my statement in the post and returned it yesterday.
1171. When did you get notice of dismissal? At about half-past 9 o'clock this morning.
1172. What was said to you? The head wardsman came into No. 3 ward (I was deputy wardsman there—I have been so this six weeks), and he comes up and says to me (there was three others discharged before me)—he says, "You have to leave too." "Indeed," says I. "Yes," he says; "that's because you didn't let your letter go through the office." I had no more to do but put on my clothes and come down by the steamer.
1173. You received this discharge (referring to paper produced) this morning? Yes.

1174. It simply states that Frederick Hillier, an inmate, has been discharged, and that "his conduct has been"—blank? Yes. F. Hillier.
1175. Have you ever had any disagreements with the master there before? No. There were four other men discharged on the same day. 10 July, 1873.
1176. Were you required to send your letters through the manager? No, I do not think so. I have often posted letters myself there.
1177. Is it a rule of the institution now to send letters through the office? I have sent letters through the office.
1178. Did you ask why you were discharged? No. I did not see Mr. Dennis—it is seldom that you can see him when you want to.
1179. Did you see Mrs. Dennis? No. I have only seen her three or four times in the place. I saw her once go through the institution and once in the yard.
1180. Mr. Metcalfe.] You say that your former evidence was sent to you to look over? Yes.
1181. Did it come to you through the post? Yes.
1182. Sealed? Yes.
1183. You answered it yourself? Yes; I got a man to write it out, because I am blind myself and cannot see to write.
1184. Mr. Cowper.] Have you any complaint to make of the management of the institution, further than that you have already made? Yes, I put a little appendix to my evidence yesterday.
1185. You have written down what you wish to state? Yes, all, I think.
1186. The additions you have made to your former evidence contain all that you wish to say? Yes. There are some little appendices to my evidence,—there is something more with respect to the matron. (Evidence handed to witness.) That is correct.
1187. What do you mean by saying, as you do here, that "if they had known the purpose of the Commission"? There was a great many who fancied that they did not know, and I told them that they had an opportunity of knowing.
1188. But we went round to every table? Yes. There is one man there who has been in every office in the place, and he said that he would not make any complaints, and he could have told the Commission everything—every complaint that could be made.
1189. Mr. Ellis.] Are there any tailors in the institution who are not inmates? No; the tailors there are paupers.
1190. Are they paid? I do not know what pay they get.
1191. Are they paid at all? Yes, every one who works there gets extra tobacco and sugar, and some get money as well.
1192. Are the tailors supposed to work for the other inmates? They are supposed to mend the clothes, but I have known the wardsman send clothes to the tailor to get them done, but it was no use doing so, for the tailor would not do them.
1193. Mr. Cowper.] Is there only one tailor? I think that there are two.
1194. Mr. Goold.] Were you a wardsman? I was a deputy wardsman. I got 5s. a month and tea and sugar, and this year I was to get 7s. 6d. a month. I think the wardsman gets 6d. a day and a gill of rum.
1195. Mr. Ellis.] We did not hear of that when we were there—does he get a gill of rum every day? Yes, every day.
1196. I thought rum was only allowed to inmates as a medical comfort? No, the wardsman gets a gill a day. There are two wardsmen there who get 1s. a day, and each man a gill of rum; two sticks of tobacco and a pound of sugar a week and tea besides; and some give it to the deputy wardsman instead of giving money. That is why I only received 5s. for last month.
1197. Do they get the rum as part of their pay, or because they are invalids? As part of their pay—not because they are invalids.

Members Present:—

WILLIAM CHARLES WINDEYER, Esq., PRESIDENT.

SAMUEL GOOLD, Esq. | MICHAEL METCALFE, Esq.
CHARLES COWPER, JUN., Esq.

Mr. Edward Ramsay, collector, called in and examined:—

1198. President.] I believe that you have been for some time engaged as a collector of accounts in this city? Yes. Mr. E. Ramsay.
1199. And that you collect exclusively for several Charitable Institutions? Yes, I do. 5 Sept., 1873.
1200. For what institutions do you collect? For the Benevolent Asylum, Sydney City Mission, Home Visiting and Relief Society, Deaf and Dumb, Sydney Ragged Schools, and the Sydney Female Refuge. These are all the Charitable Institutions. I forgot to mention one—the Asylum for Inebriates. I have just received the appointment. It has only been in existence a short time.
1201. You collect besides for other institutions which are not of a charitable character? Yes.
1202. How long have you been engaged in this kind of business? Altogether upwards of six years.
1203. I presume that in following your vocation you come into contact with a very large number of people in the city? I do, both in the city and in the country too.
1204. This Commission has been appointed to inquire into the Charitable Institutions of the Colony receiving aid from the Government; and amongst them there are some to which admissions are obtained on the orders of the subscribers. We wish to know whether you have ever formed any opinion as to whether the subscriptions to these institutions would be increased if the institutions were thrown open to all persons who were in really necessitous circumstances, with regard to the orders of subscribers? That would particularly pertain to the Infirmary, I think.
1205. To the Infirmary, and also to the Institution for the Deaf and Dumb? I think that there the inmates are admitted by a special recommendation, and not by a general order.

1206.

Mr. E.
Ramsay.
5 Sept., 1873.

1206. You mean the special recommendation of a subscriber? Yes.

1207. That is what I mean? Well, it is my opinion, that respecting my own institutions—those which I collect for—the present mode is as useful as it could well be; but I think that with regard to the Infirmary, that there should be a different course adopted, inasmuch as in that institution human suffering exists, and there is great sympathy on the part of the public towards that institution specially. I have often come in contact in this way with people who have not been able to give a guinea or two guineas to the Infirmary, but many of whom could give a small amount, such as 5s. or 10s. These have passed by my notice, as I was not the collector; but I have for some time thought that the funds of that institution could be considerably augmented if there was another course adopted, and if their collector had that special work—if their collector made that his special work. The sympathy for that institution is different to that of institutions generally, and I speak of it because I have come in contact with it during my experience. Many would give less than a guinea, not because it should get an inmate into the place—not because through their instrumentality an inmate should be received —

1208. But for the sake of the Charity itself? Yes, inasmuch as human suffering exists there, and there are expenses there which they would like to participate in. I do not think that it applies so much to other institutions such as the Deaf and Dumb, and the Female Refuge. I fancy there is a stationary course there, that differs somewhat from that of the Infirmary.

1209. Do I understand you to say that with regard to the Infirmary alone this should be done—that the Infirmary alone should be thrown open to the really necessitous poor in bad health, without the orders of subscribers being used? I do say so.

1210. You think that if that were done, you could collect in small sums more money than is now collected? I do not refer to myself. I think that such a course, if adopted, would augment the position of the institution considerably; I do not doubt that a very great deal more money—certainly five times as much as is got now—would be collected. You would augment the funds considerably if you made it open work. The present gentleman who collects is most active, but his attention is not confined outside.

1211. I want simply to know whether you think it would make an institution more popular, and get more money for it by collections in smaller sums, if that institution were thrown open to the really necessitous poor—I understand you to say that you are of that opinion? I am of that opinion.

1212. What is your opinion as to the advisability of institutions having officers of their own to collect subscriptions, or employing persons like yourself who make a business of it—do you think that the officers are likely to get the most? Of course that is a peculiar question to put to me, but I am of opinion that the public generally are satisfied with the course that is at present adopted.

1213. What is your opinion—you need not be afraid of giving it—you will not injure any one by doing so? What applies to the Infirmary does not apply to other institutions. I think that the present course is sufficient, with regard to other institutions, namely—the Benevolent Asylum, the Refuge, and the Deaf and Dumb, and others. I think the present course is sufficient for them. But while I refer to that, I do think that the returns would be augmented tenfold if they were to adopt a more popular course outside.

1214. When you are collecting for one institution, do you not often have persons ask you if you are collecting for others? Yes, I do very frequently.

1215. And an officer of the institution who is employed to collect subscriptions does not trouble himself to hunt these people up—he goes only to those who have subscribed before? Yes.

1216. And is not a person who makes collecting a trade and special business likely to get more money than others? Yes, I do not doubt it.

1217. Do you ever have persons asking you in that way as to whether you collected for others? I have very frequently—particularly with reference to the Infirmary; and many guineas have passed by my notice because I have not been the collector for the Infirmary. Many I have handed in, but I did not wish to interfere with the present collector.

1218. I asked you whether you did not think it was right to have a person employed to collect on a commission, like yourself, rather than an officer who simply goes round to known subscribers? Undoubtedly. I have represented that necessity to members of the Infirmary Board. I have conveyed that information, to them three years and a half ago, and how they have dealt with it I do not know.

1219. Your opinion is that these two alterations should take place,—that with a view of increasing the subscriptions, a collector should be employed on a commission, and that the institution should be thrown open to all necessitous cases, independently of the orders of subscribers? Yes; and I refer particularly to the Infirmary. There is a very great sympathy towards that institution. It is natural there should be. There is human suffering, and as I said before, you would get five times the amount which is now received—perhaps ten times; five-times, at any rate, you would get.

1220. Do you find that the same set of people pretty much subscribe to all your Charities? I do. It is not because others are not willing to do so. This year I hoped to realize something considerably extra; and had the mining interest been kept up, there is no doubt but what our Charitable Institutions would have realized something very much surpassing previous years. I have had something like five or six £25 promised to me this year, but the persons who promised them now find themselves unable to spare the money.

1221. In consequence of the depreciation of this kind of property, persons are not able to give what they otherwise would give? Several have promised me, and if the mining interest turns out satisfactorily they will still give to the institutions.

1222. You find that when people are prosperous they are willing to give? I have never come into contact with more charitable people in the world. I have travelled over a great part of England, and there is no comparison there with this Country. I find here that the spirit of charity is universal—even poor men will give me 5s. or 10s. if he possibly can.

1223. I understand you to say that if it were not supposed to be necessary to give a pound or two pounds for the sake of gaining a privilege, and the people liked the institution, you would get many a five shillings or half-crown where you now do not get anything? Yes, quite so; I am quite satisfied on that point.

1224. You would get at a large class of people whom you do not get at now at all? Yes, and the drawback is that they feel “Well, I have got to give two guineas,” and some are not able to give so much; but if they knew that the institution was open to all, they would give them 5s. or 10s. If it was left to the spontaneity of the people, you see, the character of the people is of a charitable kind. There are very few who will say "Go out of my way" when you ask them for a subscription. Of course you are obliged to go at them with some respect.

1225. Mr. Metcalfe.] Do you not think that some people subscribe to the Infirmary because their doing so gives them the power of admitting a patient? Yes, they do.

1226. But if they subscribed smaller sums they would not have that power? No, but you would get more money. I have come into contact with people of this kind—people who would support the institution irrespective of a patient being admitted into it, if it were thrown open freely to all.

1227. You are sure of that? I am quite satisfied of that, because suffering exists, and there is a natural sympathy with that institution—the Infirmary specially.

Mr. E.
Ramsay.

TUESDAY, 16 SEPTEMBER, 1873.

Members Present:—

WILLIAM CHARLES WINDEYER, Esq., PRESIDENT.

SAMUEL GOOLD, Esq.

MICHAEL METCALFE, Esq.

CHARLES COWPER, JUN., Esq.

Christopher Rolleston, Esq., Auditor General, called in and examined:—

1228. President.] I believe that you are the Chairman of the Board which has the supervision of the Government Asylums? Yes.

1229. How long have you been the Chairman of that Board? I think for nearly twelve years—between eleven and twelve years; it was in 1862, I think, that the Asylums were taken over.

1230. Are there any emoluments attaching to the office? None.

1231. Of how many members does the Board consist? Nominally, four; really, two. The Inspector General of Police and the Sheriff are members of the Board by appointment, but neither of them attends the meetings. Dr. Alleyne, the Health Officer, and myself, are the only two members who give any attention to the business.

1232. How often does the Board meet? Twice a week—on Tuesdays and Fridays.

1233. Does it meet regularly? Yes, I think very regularly. Dr. Alleyne is frequently away. His duties require him to be down the harbour, and so I am there alone occasionally.

1234. What are the duties of the Board? To supervise and conduct the business of the department and look after the expenditure, at least in so far as authorizing any expenditure to be entered upon.

1235. How far, practically, does the Board exercise any supervision over these Asylums? Well, nothing can be done without the Board's approval; the secretary cannot expend any money out of the ordinary course of the salaries authorized before, without the consent of the Board.

1236. What secretary? The secretary of the Board, Mr. King.

1237. What money is there at his disposal for expenditure? About £13,000 I think it is.

1238. Does all the money which is voted for these different Asylums pass under your control—is it all administered by you? Only that which is voted for the three Asylums in Sydney, Parramatta, and Liverpool; it is £12,000 or £13,000 a year.

1239. This is the money which is voted for the salaries of the officers and the maintenance of the inmates. What money have you any power over besides, so that you can authorize the secretary to expend it or not? The whole of it; it is all under our control.

1240. Do you draw the money then and pay it away? No.

1241. Who does that? The secretary. We used to do it.

1242. Does he pay the officers then? Everything. At the outset the Board assumed the entire control and paid the cheques. The cheques under the regulations were signed by two of the directors and countersigned by the secretary. When the Collector of Customs and the Clerk of the Executive Council left the Board, and when I became Auditor General, I said that I did not think it was right and proper that I should continue to be involved in the expenditure which I should have afterwards to check. The Board concurred, and we gave up the signing of the cheques and the entire control of the expenditure, as regards the drawing of the cheques on the bank, to the secretary, taking from him a bond of £1,000 for the faithful discharge of his duties; and from that time he has had the entire control of the money.

1243. What duties has the secretary to perform besides that of paying away the money? He has the management of everything.

1244. To what extent does his management go? He has to visit the Asylums and communicate with all the officers in connection with them; to keep the whole of the accounts, or to have them kept; he has to look after the contractors; to order the supplies of all kinds of stores; to select the goods and so on; and generally, to look after the business of the department. There is a great deal to do.

1245. How often does he visit these Asylums? I think he visits them every two or three weeks.

1246. Does the Board ever visit the Asylums themselves? No; I am the only member of the Board who goes near them.

1247. How often do you go? Once or twice in the year—say three times.

1248. When were you at Parramatta last? About a month or five weeks ago. We used to go regularly when we were first appointed. We had an arrangement whereby we took it in pairs, and we went up regularly once a month—two of us; but the thing gradually fell off, and the members would not go—they said it was no use.

1249. Why was it of no use? Well, I do not know. It was of use undoubtedly, because it kept the officers up to their work; but the Board would not continue to do it.

1250. Were you satisfied with the state of matters at Parramatta? No.

1251. On what grounds were you dissatisfied? I have never been satisfied with Parramatta. I do not know whether it could be a satisfactory institution even under the best management; it is a faulty institution, and the master is not up to his work either. The place is not cleanly-looking—it is untidy-looking, and altogether it is a very nasty-looking place. I have never been pleased with it; we have tried over and over again, but cannot make much improvement. On the whole, however, the men seem to be very happy there, and it is a singular fact that the men who apply for admissions to the Asylums wish to be sent there rather than to Liverpool.

C. Rolleston,
Esq.

16 Sept., 1873.

- C. Rolleston, Esq.
16 Sept., 1873.
1252. Is not that because the discipline at Parramatta is bad? Yes, I believe so partly. The discipline is lax as compared with that at Liverpool; but the way that laxity has grown up it is only fair you should know. It is owing to the place being a very improper place in which to keep old people; it is very confined. Dr. Greenup, who was a member of the Board, and took great interest in the Asylum, represented to the Board that it was essential that the old inmates should have the privilege of going out—that a walk up the town and a bathe would do them a great deal of good; and the Board assented to that from that time. We afterwards found that the men went out more than we thought right or proper; however, we could not well withdraw the privilege, and there has been from that time to this what I call laxity of discipline, on that account. There are more of the people go out than are entitled to go out; but the medical officers have all stated to the Board that it is important and necessary that they should go out, and the Board have not thought it fit to resist the opinion of the medical officer of the Asylum.
1253. Do you ever see the matron of the institution there when you visit the place? Yes, I do. I saw her the last time I was there. She lived there for many years, and very nearly died there; the place was like the Black Hole of Calcutta; it has been only within the last two or three years that they have lived outside in that cottage.
1254. Do these people know when you are going to visit the institution? Never.
1255. Do you think that this mode of administering the affairs of these Asylums is a good one, seeing that all the gentlemen engaged on the Board are supposed to have other duties which constantly occupy their time? No, I do not think it is the best system that could be devised; it was a makeshift to begin with—and like other things, it has been continued.
1256. Why did the Inspector General of Police and the Sheriff abstain from attending the meetings? Upon my word, I cannot tell you. The Sheriff has been there occasionally; if we send for him for any particular purpose he will come; he says that he has so much to do in his own department.
1257. Have you any system of communication whereby you know how an inmate discharged from one Asylum applies to enter another? Oh yes; there is a weekly report sent down by the master, of persons admitted and discharged, with the remarks as to their conduct—good or bad—and any bad conduct is noted, so that when the man applies again he is refused admittance.
1258. Have you any system of communication with the Infirmary so that when a chronic case is discharged from one of these Asylums he may not be received into the Infirmary? No, I do not think that there is any system of that sort. There is constant communication between the two, but I do not know of any system such as that which you refer to.
1259. I may mention to you that a case has come under our notice in which a man was discharged from the Infirmary as incurable, admitted into the Asylum at Parramatta, and discharged from there for misconduct; and immediately after his discharge, that man came down to Sydney and got into the Infirmary as a matter of course. His cost to the Government at Parramatta Asylum was £14, and in the Infirmary it is £46? I have no knowledge of that at all; we have nothing to do with where the man goes after he is discharged.
1260. Is it the duty of the master of the Asylum to enter upon the discharge note the reason for an inmate's discharge? Yes, as a rule certainly.
1261. Is he, by any code of rules, instructed to do so? Yes. I do not know whether it is in the printed rules. In the form of return which the master has to furnish, there is a column for remarks and reasons for the discharge.
1262. Has it come to your knowledge that the master of the Asylum at Parramatta discharged a number of persons because they gave evidence before the Commission, and that he did so without entering anything on the discharge notes? Yes, it did come under our notice, and we pulled the master up about it. In the weekly return that came before me there were the names of four men whom he had discharged for disobeying a rule of the institution. I think that there was a note to the return to the effect that they had disobeyed some rule that had been established under Dr. Greenup's administration of the place, that inmates should send their letters through the messenger of the Asylum, or the storekeeper, or one of the officers. Upon receiving this return I thought that it was very unsatisfactory, and I gave instructions that the master should be called upon to report more particularly the reasons for which these men had been discharged, as the reason given was not satisfactory. Then the master sent as a reason that the men discharged had been wardmen, and had not kept their wards clean—which was departing from the reason he had placed on his return. After that I think that the Board got a letter from the Commission, bringing the fact under their notice, and we wrote to say that the discharge of these men had been entirely without our knowledge, and that we had reproved the master for doing it. I think that is all. We told the master that he was decidedly wrong and had acted improperly, and that we should withhold from him the power to discharge, as he did not seem fit to be entrusted with it, having acted so improperly.
1263. Does the power of discharge still remain with him? It must remain with him in violent cases. The Colonial Secretary brought that under our notice, and we saw that it was utterly impossible—that we must remove the master—unless he had that power. You cannot put a master over these old men, many of whom are very bad characters, without giving him the power of discharge. Cases of violence might happen, and if the master could not discharge a man on the spot the lives of others might be endangered.
1264. The Board came to the conclusion that the master had improperly discharged these men? Yes, and we reproved him for doing it.
1265. Did you come to the conclusion that he did it because they gave evidence? We did not pursue the matter, but I believe that was the reason. He gave as an excuse for discharging the men that Dr. Greenup had given him a strict order that no communication should pass outside without going through the office. The Board knew nothing of any such order—it was not written or printed; but he says that he has always acted upon it. I believe the men were troublesome and impertinent to him.
1266. At all events, there was no reason for the discharge? There was not. It was a foolish thing under the circumstances.
1267. Of course the Board were not aware that the master discharged these men without putting the reason of their discharge upon the discharge note? No, we did not see the discharge note at all. We only see the return in which the master states his reasons for discharging the men.
1268. What mode of supervising these institutions would you recommend in place of the present Board? Well, I have hardly thought of the best mode. I suppose if the matter of expense is to come into consideration you cannot have a less expensive Board than the present, for they get nothing for their trouble. I do not know, I am sure. I think myself that the Board is of very little use.

1269. What was the idea in appointing it—what object was to be gained? It was appointed at the time that there were some difficulties in connection with the old Benevolent Asylum, which was getting overcrowded. The Government were called upon to give more money, and Sir Charles Cowper—who was then in office—thought that it was better for the Government to take the poor people into their own hands, and with that view they took the Liverpool Asylum over, and established the Asylum at Parramatta and the Asylum for old women at Hyde Park; and Mr. Cowper appointed a Board, consisting of myself, Mr. O'Connor, Mr. Duncan, Dr. Alleyne, Dr. Greenup, medical adviser; and Mr. Charles Cowper, junior, was one of the first members, I think. That was the Board; and Mr. King was appointed clerk or secretary, to look after the details and keep the accounts and the books. At first we paid a great deal of attention to the business, but that gradually fell off. Mr. Duncan resigned, Mr. Cowper went away, Mr. Greenup was killed, Mr. O'Connor's state of health would not allow him to attend; and then I think Mr. Robertson appointed Captain McLerie and the Sheriff, but neither of them ever attended to the duties at all. The object was, I suppose, to control the expenditure, as the Government had taken the whole thing—to see that the money voted was properly administered.

C. Rolleston,
Esq.
16 Sept., 1873.

1270. Mr. Metcalfe.] Is the expenditure the same at each establishment? No, there is a difference. Parramatta is more expensive than Liverpool.

1271. On whose order are the inmates admitted into the Asylums? Now the secretary has the admission in most cases—the Board have given up the personal examination of these people. For the first five years we sat several hours and examined every applicant for admission most minutely, and we rejected them if we did not think that they were proper cases for admission; but after a time the Government of the day issued a letter of instructions to the Benches of Magistrates to send up the vagrants and vagabonds from their districts to these Asylums. I think that this was done in Mr. Forster's time, and I said—"You will have these institutions inundated with people from these districts—you have no control over them—we shall be put to great expense—and you will have to find a larger establishment." When Mr. Robertson came in I made the same remonstrance to him, and he said he could not help it—that the Sheriff said the gaols were full of these people; and what was he to do. The Board found that while they were sitting in Sydney, and rejecting old men and women who were not quite up to the mark, people were sent down the country and put into the Asylums who were less eligible than those we rejected; and we said "It is no use sitting here and wasting time, when the place is being inundated by people from the country." When we went to visit the Asylum, we found many inmates from the country who had been admitted under this system. So we gave up examining applicants; besides, the Board was really reduced to Dr. Alleyne and myself, and I had too much to do to sit two or three hours to inquire into the cases of these people. So we gave it up and we have not admitted people these five years, except in peculiar cases; and if the secretary did not feel clear about them, he would ask us to stay and see the applicants in such cases.

1272. Mr. Metcalfe.] What would you do if the Magistrates in the country sent down too many of these people? They were accommodated in the passages. We could not help it.

1273. President.] Then the order that was given did result in these people being sent down? Yes, great numbers of them.

1274. Mr. Metcalfe.] Ineligible people? A great many of them were.

1275. Did you see a hale and strong man in the Parramatta Asylum who only wanted a leg to be able to go out and earn his living, and who was anxious to go out, and he said an artificial leg would only cost £7? We paid £14 for a leg for a man, and he broke it in twelve months, and was back again in the Asylum.

1276. President.] There is a man there anxious to go out, and he says he could earn his living if he had a leg? We have sent legs up there by the dozen; we had a leg made for one man at a cost of £14—a young, good-looking man, who, as we thought, would be able to get his living; but he soon broke it, and went back again.

1277. Your description corresponds with the man who spoke to us? We certainly did try it; but as that failed, we did not feel justified in paying any more such sums as £14 in the same way. Mr. King can tell you the man's name.

1278. There was a blind man there who said that he could work? We have had that question of working under consideration; it was proposed to buy stuff for these men to work up, but there was a great feeling against it in Parramatta—it was said that it would tend to reduce the value of other people's labour.

1279. Was that the reason against it? That was not the only reason we had. The principal reason was this: that we managed these institutions entirely by the labour of the inmates—there were no paid servants in any of them—and if a man had been allowed to work at plaiting hats, the ablest men in the place would prefer to make a little money in that way, and not one of them would do the work of the institution; so that the work of the institution would be left undone. That was the reason why we did not do it.

1280. But you would have had the proceeds of the plaiting of the hats? It would not do.

1281. Has any offer been made to utilize the labour of the inmates of the Liverpool Asylum by the proprietors of the Paper Company there? There was an offer some two or three years ago. I know we declined it, for the reasons I have stated just now. It would have taken away the best men, and thus would have deprived the institution of the means by which the master was able to carry it on properly. There are 700 people there; it is an enormous place, and it is entirely managed by the inmates themselves. Of course the Paper Company would only take the best men, and we really could not manage the institution if that was allowed.

1282. Did you find that they would have taken the best men—the men who would have been most useful to you? I do not think that we personally inquired into the matter; but we made sufficient inquiries to show that that would be the result.

1283. Mr. Metcalfe.] But the men would support themselves, and enable the institution to employ paid labour? That would have subverted the whole principle on which the institution is managed.

1284. There is no objection to these men working if they can work? Well, if you recollect, when Mr. Robertson was Colonial Secretary, he issued a circular or proclamation in the Gazette inviting persons to hire out the inmates of these Government institutions. The first application we got was from a gentleman named Hurley, Member for Central Cumberland, asking for a "strong, hearty man," to work in his garden. We said that we did not take in "strong, hearty men," but that we should be glad for Mr. Hurley to make his selection. He came, and there was not one of them that he would take.

- C. Rolleston,
Esq.
16 Sept., 1873.
1285. President.] Was not Mr. Robertson's proposition that the men should be boarded out? Yes, that was it; but there were no offers. The only real bonâ fide offer was that of Mr. Hurley, who wanted a "strong, hearty man." We wrote back to say that we did not take in "strong, hearty men," but that he could select one if he chose, and he went to the Asylum, and there was not a single man that he would select.
1286. Mr. Goold.] Has there not been an offer made lately? I do not think so, except the offer made by the Paper Company.
1287. Mr. Hurley told me that there had been? My memory may fail me, but I do not think so.
1288. Mr. Cowper.] I suppose if the Paper Company chose to take these men and employ them, they could do so? Certainly; the place is not a gaol; they can go out if they like; the objection that we had was to their taking the hale people to do their work, and leaving none to do the work of the institution. The work of cleaning that place is something considerable; there are so many plates and dishes, and knives and forks, and so on; besides, they whitewash and paint; they do the whole work of that place—all the work.
1289. President.] Seeing that the Board at present meets so unsatisfactorily, have you any suggestion to make as to the best mode of dealing with these institutions? I think the secretary, who thoroughly understands the whole thing, would do the duty, but there would be a great outcry against him; he would not be able to stand his ground; you must have broader shoulders than his to stand the racket.
1290. What would you substitute for the present Board? I do not know; it works very satisfactorily—that is, I do most of the work, and I shall be glad to be relieved.
1291. When one member does all the work, you can hardly say that the Board works satisfactorily? Well, Alleyne cannot always attend to it; his time is occupied with other duties.
1292. We do not say that it is any one's fault—it arises from people having other official duties to attend to? There is another difficulty that the Board had to contend with. I find that people who have been refused admittance by the Board are in the habit of coming to the Colonial Secretary's Office, and getting letters, and trying to get the Colonial Secretary to admit them. The Board have always resisted this, because the minute by which they were appointed says that the Board, and they alone, shall have the power of admission; and they have always maintained their right of admission on these grounds: if persons refused as ineligible can go to the Colonial Secretary and get admitted, why, the Board had better retire altogether. There has been a good deal of trouble in that way. Of course it is impossible that the Under Secretary, who has a great deal of work, could inquire into the cases of people of this kind. He does not attempt to do it now, but he rather encouraged it once, until he was shown that it involved a good deal of difficulty. You must have a Board to manage these Asylums, if they are to be carried on by the Government; paid officers would perhaps be the best.
1293. What does the Board do now (as they do not inspect the inmates) which the Under Secretary of one of the departments could not do? I think that the Under Secretaries of the departments have ample work to occupy their time, without going into matters in connection with the Infirm and Destitute Asylums.
1294. But I understand you to say that the Board does not exercise any authority in the choice of the inmates? No, they have not done so for the last three or four years, as a rule.
1295. Then what do they do that a paid secretary could not do? I do not say that there is anything that he cannot do, but he would not command the same attention from the contractors and others that the Board do, and there would be complaints lodged against him that he refused one man's contract and took the other.
1296. Does not the same complaint apply to all other institutions—for instance, the Lunatic Asylum, and the "Vernon"? No; the contracts for them are all taken at the Treasury among the other contracts of the Government, and when Mr. Cowper appointed the Board we said that, unless we had the contracts entirely in our own hands independent of the Government, we would not have anything to do with it; so we have had our contracts, and have had them from the first; we would not have the Government contracts.
1297. Why? Because they are not only expensive, but the goods are inferior in quality.
1298. Are you aware that on our visiting the Parramatta Asylum a short time ago we found that the bread was short in weight? Yes, we are, and we made a great row about it with the contractor; we mulcted him, according to the terms of his contract, in a month's bread money—(he owned that it was quite right, that he had been at fault)—but, on his representing that he could not control it, that he was a new contractor, and found it was impossible to send up such large supplies of bread without its being short weight and being pressed together, the Board omitted the penalty, and told him that they should take the contract from him if he did not improve his system. He at once did so. He got a local man to bake up there, and there is now no trouble whatever.
1299. Is there any reason why each establishment should not bake its own bread? We have applied to the Government to have ovens built at Liverpool, and the Colonial Architect says that it will cost £1,500, and so the Government will not do it. We wanted to do that some years ago, but the objection was the expense. Dr. Strong is anxious to do it, and says that it would save a good deal of the expense. We have put the money on the Estimates this year again, and the Government may do it now that money is plentiful.
1300. Is there anything else besides the contracts that the Board keeps the supervision of, that could not be attended to in the Government departments? Which Government department—the Colonial Secretary's do you mean?
1301. I asked you what there was that the Board did in the ordinary routine of Government business which the Under Secretaries could not attend to, and you mentioned the Government contracts? Yes, and I will tell you why. The Board sit at the Asylum where all the people come to be admitted and the contractors come there, and the Board go to the office and the matron is there, and the medical officer knows that he can see us there, and it would be inconvenient to have all the business brought down to this department. There should be some officer on the spot to look after things. There are questions constantly arising which we have to consider—questions sent down by the masters and the superintendents every day; the questions are put down in a book, and the decisions are given on the opposite side. There is a good deal to do.
1302. It has been suggested to us that there should be an office taken in some central place in Sydney, which office should have the general control of all Charitable Institutions, so as to keep up a communication with reference to the inmates leaving one place and seeking admission to another, and where also information information could be obtained as to apprentices from the "Vernon" and Biloela and other places. It has been suggested that the establishment of such an office would be desirable in many ways? You would bring the whole thing into one focus under the Government? C. Rolleston, Esq.

1303. Yes; what do you think of it? I think that whoever was placed at the head of it would find himself involved in disputes with the local Boards.

1304. Are there local Boards then? Yes, at the Infirmary and Randwick, and all these different places.

1305. The idea was not to give them such a control as would interfere with the administration of these establishments, but that they should exercise a supervision: for instance, they could prevent a man discharged from one institution for misconduct gaining admission into another? Just so. It would be a check in that way, no doubt, and I believe myself that there is not a man more competent to manage the Asylums than the present secretary. He knows the ins and outs of them, and would be quite able to do all the business without the interference of the Board.

1306. Mr. Cowper.] In speaking of or comparing the institutions at Gladesville or the "Vernon" with these Asylums, they are upon a very different footing to them, are they not; because there is a head to those institutions which there is not to the Asylums—a head which deals with all matters? Yes, they are separate sub-departments under the Colonial Secretary—each of them.

1307. There is really no person in such a position with reference to these Asylums? No, the Board only.

1308. But if the Board were done away with? The secretary then would have to take the place of the Board.

1309. The powers of the Board would have to be given to him? Yes. The power is now, by Minute of the Executive Council, in the hands of the Board only.

1310. The Colonial Secretary could hardly deal with these places except through some head? It would be quite impossible.

1311. It would be quite impossible for the Under Secretary to give his time and attention to the small matters which would come before him daily? Oh yes, it would be quite impossible.

1312. President.] Would it be impossible for the Under Secretary to do so through the present secretary? Oh no.

1313. I do not contemplate the abolition of the secretary—I only ask what is the use of the Board? I think that the Board might be dispensed with.

1314. Mr. Metcalfe.] But you say that the secretary would not be able to bear the burden of responsibility—that he wants the Board to fall back upon? The President has suggested that the Under Secretary should be the head of the department.

1315. Of course the Under Secretary must depend entirely on the officer placed over these institutions,—but one officer would do all the Board does with their authority given to him, under the Colonial Secretary? Mr. King could act quite independently of us, but I only say that there would be complaints made against him, and insinuations that he did this or the other,—insinuations that would not be made against the Board, because the Board would not care a rush about what was said.

1316. These Asylums are all entirely supported by the Government? Yes.

1317. You find the clothes and so on? Everything.

1318. You do not think that anything could be done in the way of making them self-supporting? I do not see how it can be done. If you hire the people out and hire people to do the work of the institution, you will find at the end of the year that you have lost rather than gained by their labour—I am satisfied of that.

1319. But it is a painful thing to see such a lot of men sitting in those yards and doing nothing from day to day? I have noticed hale-looking people in those yards, who when they came to apply for admission, were the most miserable looking creatures you can imagine—men who could hardly crawl—and after they have been a month or so there they look quite hale and hearty. I have said to them—"Why, who are you?" and the man would say "You admitted me, sir,—but I was quite paralyzed then, and I am quite well now." It is extraordinary. They go out sometimes quite strong and hearty, and after a time they come in again as miserable.

1320. President.] Do the Board ever take upon themselves to discharge any of the people who are sent down from the country? Never, except upon medical report of their ability to earn their own living.

1321. Mr. Cowper.] Has not Dr. Strong the power to discharge them? We have periodical inspections when every man passes before us, and those who are considered fit to work are sent out; and there is a return made to the Board that so-and-so and so-and-so are able to gain their own living, and their discharge is recommended, and if the Board approve of it they are discharged; but in very many cases those who have been discharged in this way soon come back again the veriest old wretches that we could not possibly refuse to admit.

1322. Mr. Metcalfe.] Lots of these men would go to the Paper Company? They would not go; they would go and drink and lie about and get rheumatic, until they were utterly incapable of doing anything.

1323. Mr. Goold.] So far as I understand Mr. Hurley's proposition, it was to send the material into the institution in order that the men might make paper bags? Well, I will inquire about it. The thing does not occur to my mind.

1324. He said that there was a lot of paper to be made up into paper bags, and that the old men could do it? I will inquire into it. Now you talk of the paper bags, I have some remembrance of the matter.

1325. Mr. Cowper.] Has there been any complaint made to your Board by the authorities of the Sydney Infirmary or the Government that you systematically refuse to take persons from the Infirmary? We have never systematically refused; we try and oblige them as far as possible, and the Infirmary patients have been a great nuisance to us. We have always done what we could to admit them.

1326. How are they admitted? The manager there, Mr. Blackstone, writes a special recommendation, and that comes before us, and unless there is any special reason against it the cases are always admitted.

1327. If a person has been suffering from erysipelas, do you admit him? I will tell you a case. They sent a paralysis case to us, and after the man had been in a short time, we found that he sold some land worth £70. That is an Infirmary case.

1328. Do they ever send in a person suffering from erysipelas? Yes, they did. The doctor said it was very dangerous to the other patients, but we got her in I think. I know that the doctor has remonstrated strongly against an erysipelas patient coming in amongst sixty or seventy old women.

1329. Mr. Metcalfe.] It could do them no harm unless the people had open sores? I do not know. All I know is that the medical officer was very frightened about it, and I do not recollect now whether the woman was admitted or refused; but the secretary will tell you all this.

1330.

16 Sept., 1873.

- C. Rolleston, Esq.
16 Sept., 1873.
1330. Mr. Cowper.] Do you give the secretary now power to admit? We give him full power now; he has the power the Board has. The secretary has got so well broken in as to the questions to be asked, and what was required, that we consider him quite equal to the Board; and the Board wanted to relieve themselves of the trouble and annoyance of attending to admit these people. It was a great trouble; it took me from 10 to 12, or sometimes 2 o'clock, to look through these cases, and if it is not done thoroughly it is of no use doing it. We have delegated the admissions as a rule to the secretary.
1331. President.] It comes to this then—that the Board have delegated all their powers to the secretary? Yes, the powers of admitting persons to the Asylum, and he has the entire control of the funds, and gives security to the extent of £1,000 for the due performance of his duties. He draws the cheques, but every account that he pays is passed by the Board; he pays no account which has not been scrutinized and passed by the Board. They are all entered in the minute-book, and the book is ticked off—each account in it—so that there is no account which is not approved of by us before payment. I used to sign the cheques up to the time when I became Auditor-General, when I said that I could not pay the accounts which I had afterwards to pass as well.
1332. Mr. Metcalfe.] Then the secretary prepares the abstract of expenditure, and gets the warrant from the Treasury? Yes.
1333. Who checks his expenditure? It is checked by the Audit Department in the same way that any other expenditure of any other department is checked. I did establish a private check by members of the Board, but I could not get the other members of the Board to go into it, so I gave that up. Besides, it did not seem to me that it was particularly effective, as the audit in the Audit Office is as minute as it can possibly be.
1334. The ration account I suppose can always be checked by the numbers in the building? Yes.
1335. And the only other thing is the salary list? Yes. The salaries are very few—only the master and matron; the others who are paid are inmates, who only get from two-pence to three-pence, or sixpence a day. Their money is sent up to the master, who pays it and gets the men's marks or receipts. The expenditure for medical comforts at Parramatta is greater than it is at Liverpool, and we have tried to check it, but we cannot. Doctor Rutter gives more wines and spirits than his predecessor did. We asked him why he did so, and he said that it was his business, and of course the Board is obliged to knock under to him. We cannot say that it is not necessary.
1336. President.] A larger allowance is given at Parramatta? Yes, Dr. Rutter allows double the quantity that his predecessor allowed. The allowance is greater at Parramatta than at Liverpool. Parramatta is a far more expensive establishment than the other in everything—clothes, medical comforts, and almost everything.
1337. How do you account for that? We cannot fully account for it. One reason is that you can manage an institution of 700 people more cheaply per head than an institution of 300, because you have the same staff of officers, and the expense of salaries is distributed among a larger number. That is the principal thing. But the contracts are higher at Parramatta generally; I do not know why; perhaps it is because they are not so large. The clothing there is much more expensive, and we cannot help it. We have over and over again spoken about it and remonstrated with the master, and asked "How is it that you use so much more clothing?" and he says that he does not know, that the people are out at elbows, and so on.
1339. Mr. Metcalfe.] And unhappy? Yes; and still when they are admitted they all say "Send me to Parramatta."
1340. But the inmates at Liverpool look happier than those at Parramatta, and at Parramatta they all complained, while at Liverpool there were no complaints? I went round a little time ago at Parramatta without the master, and asked them whether they had anything to complain of,—whether the rations were bad or short, or whether anything was the matter, and they all said "No sir, nothing; we are very comfortable." There was a short allowance of bread some time ago, as I said before, but we had heard of that, and now it was all right.
1341. President.] Are they satisfied with having the soup and tea made in the same vessels? They made no complaints.
1342. How do you account for the fact that they complained bitterly to us and would not complain to you? I do not know. Whenever I have visited them I have gone freely amongst them.
1343. Mr. Metcalfe.] They seemed to us to complain justly, for they were fed like pigs? Yes; the great secret of the difference between Liverpool and Parramatta is in the management of master and matron; there is also a great difference in the two kitchens.
1344. President.] Do you think that the Hyde Park Asylum is suitable to the purpose for which it is used? Certainly not; it is wonderful that Mrs. Hicks does what she does with the people there. We got the Volunteer Barracks some time ago, and we wanted it turned into dormitories. They gave us the buildings and not one penny to make them useful, and the buildings are utterly useless, and the people sleep about the alleys and passages in the main building.
1345. Were not these people at one time at Port Macquarie? Yes, a few of them were; we had a separate establishment of some seventy or eighty there.
1346. Why was that given up? It was not managed satisfactorily, and the people quarrelled; and when we got these Volunteer quarters given to us we thought we could take them all. We had the new wing at Liverpool. The Asylum at Port Macquarie was a very expensive place; it was expensive sending the people up there; and as we had, with the new wing at Liverpool and the Volunteer Barracks here, ample room for all, we thought it would be better to bring them down. But the Volunteer Barracks are of no use; the only advantage is that we have the space as a recreation ground. But it is not at all a suitable place.
1347. Has the Board ever represented the expediency of going to some other place? No, we have not formally - formally made any representation about it. They have made frequent representations as to the insufficiency of the present quarters. C. Rolleston, Esq. 16 Sept., 1873.

1348. Have you ever turned your attention to another situation? Yes. If a portion of the Military Barracks could be allotted to them, it would be a fine thing.
1349. Mr. Metcalfe.] Are you aware of there being idiots in the Hyde Park Asylum? Yes, I know there are a few, but they cannot be sent to Parramatta or to Gladesville.
1350. Why not? They are imbeciles rather than lunatics.
1351. Have you ever applied to have them transferred to Parramatta or Gladesville? Yes, we have had the greatest difficulty in the world in getting mad people sent there.
1352. In what way? The pressure, I suppose—the want of room there; the medical officers have represented to the Colonial Secretary that it is absolutely necessary not to crowd them any more.
1353. Mr. Cowper.] But if you bring them before the Bench, and get two doctors to certify that they are mad, no one can refuse them? Yes, we do get the Judge's order; but sometimes we put the women in a room by themselves and they come round again.
1354. President.] We were told that some of them were utterly devoid of reason? We have remonstrated against receiving them; we said that it was not the place to which these young idiot girls should be sent, but they said that there was no other place to send them to.
1355. Mr. Metcalfe.] Mrs. Hicks seems to manage very well? Yes, she is an admirable woman.
1356. Mr. Cowper.] They do not come to you from any Government institution? No, I do not think so—I do not know—I am not sure that one did not come from Randwick.
1357. President.] Do you think that the objections to Port Macquarie are insuperable? I think it is a matter of expense and absence of supervision.
1358. Why should the people there be more expensive than they are here? First, we have to send the people up by steamer, and then we have to send supplies from here. They will not contract up there, and they put on an enormous sum in order to meet the extra expense; and then the people there were always complaining of the men going out begging and being a nuisance.
1359. In what articles was the extra expense caused? Tea, sugar, potatoes, flour, meat, &c.
1360. Mr. Metcalfe.] Are there not plenty of potatoes up there? Yes, but the people want a good price for them; an Asylum is a grand thing for the people up there.
1361. Mr. Gould.] Could they not cultivate land up there for themselves? Yes, to a limited extent, perhaps.
1362. Mr. Cowper.] If the Asylum were there, would it not be requisite to have an institution in Sydney to receive these people? Yes, and you cannot force people to go there, to that trebly convicted place. We had several who would not go; we had to turn some out because they would not go: there is the greatest horror of going to Port Macquarie, both amongst the men and the women, and a great many who went there found their way over here again.
1363. Mr. Metcalfe.] There is a woman of 106 in the Hyde Park Asylum? Yes, a very good old creature.
1364. Mr. Cowper.] I suppose many of them have friends who, though they are not able to keep them, like to see them occasionally? Yes. They are shut out of the world up at Port Macquarie. I know that I have been astonished to find that some, after we sent them up there, managed to find their way down overland, and came back to be re-admitted in Sydney.
1365. It is a difficult thing to deal with? Yes. A great many of them are not reasonable beings at all—their intellect has never been exercised.
1366. President.] Have you any suggestion to make as to the improvement of the Parramatta Asylum? I think to put a firestick to it would be the best improvement you could make.
1367. Mr. Cowper.] It is a strong building? Yes, but the rooms are low—it is a miserable place.
1368. Mr. Metcalfe.] The upper rooms seemed airy? The upper one of all is. We have lately rented from Sir William Macarthur's estate a piece of ground at the back of the place, and we have got a door leading to it, and let the men out there. But the institution is not a credit to any one.
1369. There is a great smell from the closets there? Dreadful; and a great deal of money has been spent there by the Colonial Architect without effect. The place wants new kitchens, and it wants a new head—of that there is no doubt. I believe that the man there does his best, but he is one of those men whom you cannot improve in any way. He thinks that he knows best, and he will go his own way. I am quite tired of finding fault with him. There is another thing at Parramatta—there is that abominable place where they go down-stairs to meals. There have been several men injured rushing down to meals.
1370. Most of the men dine in those sheds in the yard? Yes.
1371. When all is said, they are much better off than British seamen? Yes, Mr. Dennis tells us so. If they complain, he says that they are much better off than the soldiers of the British Army.
1372. President.] Is there anything else you would like to add? No. If anything occurs to me, I will add it.

WEDNESDAY, 17 SEPTEMBER, 1873.

Members Present:—

WILLIAM CHARLES WINDEYER, Esq., PRESIDENT.

SAMUEL GOOLD, Esq.

MICHAEL METCALFE, Esq.

CHARLES COWPER, JUN., Esq.

RICHARD DRIVER, Esq., M.L.A.

Frederic King, Esq., Secretary to the Board of the Government Asylums for the Infirm and Destitute, called in and examined:—

1373. President.] I believe that you are Secretary to the Board, which has the supervision of the F. King, Esq. Government Asylums? I am.

1374. How long have you held that position? Since the 14th March, 1862, on the handing over of these 17 Sept., 1873.

1375. What salary do you receive? When I was appointed my salary was £250, shortly after it was raised to £300, and again to £400 when the Chairman was appointed Auditor General. I now receive £500 as Inspector of Public Charities, holding the office of Secretary to the Board, without pay.

1376. What do your duties consist of? As Inspector of Public Charities, I have to visit and report on

F. King, Esq. on all such institutions as I receive directions to do by order of the Honorable the Colonial Secretary. As Secretary to the Board of Management of the Government Asylums for the Infirm and Destitute, I am charged with the general supervision of the Asylums, and held responsible for their good order and management; I have the control of the expenditure under the Board's direction, and am held responsible for all the disbursements, and for the general accuracy of the accounts, books, and records of the office. I give £1,000 guarantee for faithfulness in the discharge of these duties. I have to deal with the contractors for the supply of all articles required and to see that the contracts are properly fulfilled; I have to visit the institutions frequently, to see that all is going on satisfactorily, and report to the Board; I have to correspond with the Honorable the Colonial Secretary's Office on all matters requiring Government sanction or interference; I have to correspond with Country Benches and all other persons as to applications for the admission of paupers; I have to make personal inquiry into the cases of all applicants asking for admission to the institutions at the Hyde Park office, and to grant admission orders to such as are eligible; I have to prepare the business for the Board meetings every Tuesday and Friday, and take the Board's instructions on all points needing their direction; I have the general control and supervision of the office work, the keeping of the books, records, &c., by the clerks employed under me. I make occasional musters of the inmates at the three Asylums, to ascertain that all are there for whom rations are drawn, and also to ascertain if any are fit to be discharged. I prepare an annual report on the Asylums, which is accompanied by statistics of the expenditure.

1377. Do you ever visit these establishments? I visit the Government Asylums frequently and report to the Board.

1378. Then you hold another office besides the office of Secretary to the Board? Yes; I was appointed Inspector of Public Charities on the 1st October, 1869.

1379. Do you get any salary for that office? Yes, I am paid as Inspector of Public Charities—holding the office of Secretary to the Board, without pay—

1380. And, as I understand, you only inspect when directed to do so by the Government? Yes, but I have occasionally inspected institutions on my own motion.

1381. How many times during this year have you made an inspection of any public institution? On the 3rd March, 1873, I visited and reported on the Biloela School, and on the 23rd August I conducted an inquiry into the conduct of the infant teacher at the Protestant Orphan School.

1382. How long is it since you inspected Biloela? On the 3rd March last.

1383. You have not inspected the place within the last six months? No.

1384. When you inspected it on the last occasion did you send in a report to the Government? Yes, I reported on the case of the girl Grey. (See Appendix R.)

1385. Then you did not send in any report to the Government on that occasion? Yes, I did on the above case, but not as regarded the institution generally.

1386. That was the last report that you made to the Government? I reported on several cases that were submitted to me, but not on any institutions.

1387. Upon any institution? Yes.

1388. When did you inspect the Infirmary? On the 21st June, 1872, I reported on the expenditure of the Sydney Infirmary, but not as to the state of the institution.

1389. That was sent to the present Government? Yes.

1390. Did you make this inspection at the request of the present Colonial Secretary? No.

1391. Is that the only inspection you have made under the present Government? I also inspected Biloela on the 18th April. This is the report. (Report produced. See Appendix R 1.)

1392. I see in the first of these reports you pointed out the untidy state of the children? I did.

1393. Did you bring that under the notice of the superintendent? Yes, I have always complained of that—that the children always looked most discreditable—I have always complained of it.

1394. To the present superintendent? Yes.

1395. Have you seen any improvement made upon your suggestion? No, I have not—most certainly not.

1396. Were the children often allowed to run about without shoes or stockings when you first went there? Yes, always, except when in Mrs. Kelly's school, where they always had shoes and stockings on.

1397. Only in the schoolroom? Yes, the schoolmistress always made it a rule—so she told me—that they should not come into the school without shoes and stockings.

1398. That is Mrs. Kelly you refer to? Yes.

1399. Did the discipline maintained by her appear to be better than that outside the school? Yes, so I should say; she had a most extraordinary influence over the girls both here and at the Hunter.

1400. For good? Yes, for good.

1401. What was the opinion you formed of the superintendent with regard to his efficiency and power of managing the place? Of Mr. Lucas?

1402. Yes? I have always considered him wanting in the ability to conduct the Industrial School successfully.

1403. He takes an interest in the school, does he not? Yes.

1404. And he is a man of kindly disposition? Yes, he is an excellent man, but he fails in keeping order; he has not the knack of controlling the girls in a proper manner.

1405. What do you think that arises from? In a great degree from his easy action. He fails in inspiring respect on the part of the girls, and he is careless of his personal appearance.

1406. Not very clean himself? No; I have seen him in the morning in a costume quite unfitted for the head of an establishment such as the Industrial School for Girls. Mr. Lucas is an excellent, benevolent man, but he does not understand the management of the girls of the Industrial School.

1407. Did you ever speak to him on these matters—on the subject of his personal appearance? No, I have not.

1408. Have you had any opportunities of forming an opinion as to the fitness of his wife as an officer? I only saw her on occasional visits. She takes a great interest in the school, but she is not the head of the institution. Her husband is the person who is responsible for the proper order of the school.

1409. Did you ever become aware of any infirmity of temper on her part? I have heard of it, but I have never seen it.

1410. You have never seen instances of it? No.

1411. Did you form any opinion with regard to the efficiency of the other officers of the institution? Yes.

Yes. Mrs. Kelly and Mrs. Rowland are very good and efficient officers; during the riots at Newcastle F. King, Esq. they assisted me very materially, and by their influence assisted me in restoring order.

1412. Did the superintendent at any time make any representations to you that any of the officers under him were unfit for their position on any ground? No, he has not. 17 Sept., 1873.

1413. You came to the conclusion that one of the matrons might be very well dispensed with? Yes; I reported, on the 10th October, 1870, that one of the sub-matrons might be dispensed with, and I recommended that the office of storekeeper should be abolished. I really cannot see what he has to do that could not be done by the superintendent.

1414. Did you inspect the storekeeper's books? Yes; but not minutely. I applied to the Principal Under-Secretary to have the vouchers of the accounts of contractors and other persons submitted to me for inspection and approval, in order that I might keep an account of the expenditure, as I do for the Government Asylum, but my proposal was not approved of. It was impossible on casual inspections to look as minutely into the accounts as I could do if they were submitted to me in my office.

1415. Did you ever look into the mode in which the stores were served out there? No, I only looked into the books in a casual way.

1416. Were you satisfied with the mode in which the books were kept? I did not look sufficiently into them to form an opinion upon that after Mr. Lucas took office—I did with the person who held office there before, and he had the books in excellent order.

1417. That was Mr. Cane? Yes.

1418. Do you consider that your hands are so tied that you cannot make an inspection without the authority of the Government,—that you have no power to look into the way the accounts are kept? Certainly not; but I was unable to look into them accurately during my visits to the institution.

1419. Are you aware that goods are served out in the store at Biloela to the girls there without any voucher being required, or any requisition, or any entry being made of the goods so issued? No, I cannot say that I am—I have never had these institutions under me except as Inspector.

1420. What instructions as to your powers did you receive when you first received your appointment? I was referred to the Public Institution Inspection Act of 1866.

1421. I see that the Public Institution Inspection Act was passed in 1866? Yes.

1422. There was another gentleman who held office as Inspector of Public Charities before you? Yes.

1423. Mr. Walker? Yes; he held that office alone. I have other duties. He was only Inspector of Public Charities.

1424. Is your time fully taken up by your other duties? Yes, I can always find occupation here, I take a great interest in all these institutions. I am also held in a heavy bond, which forces me to accurately look over all the entries in the office.

1425. What are your duties in the capacity of Secretary to the Board? The same as those mentioned in answer to your fourth question.

1426. You say you have two meetings a week: how long does a meeting last on each occasion? About an hour or two—from an hour and a half to two hours.

1427. An hour and a half? Yes, often—it varies from an hour to an hour and a half to two hours.

1428. How many accounts have you paid this week? Well, it happens that I have passed about forty, but I have not paid them yet. They have to be submitted for the approval of the Board, but I have them in every month. (Book produced.) They are entered here; I have to look over all these.

1429. You say there are forty in this list? I do not know, really; I often have forty.

1430. There are only twenty-six accounts here? But here is an account in which a lot of small items are contained.

1431. You mean this, "F. King—sundries"? Yes.

1432. Is that your own name? Yes; it is our monthly payment of all small accounts under £1.

1433. What, petty accounts? Yes.

1434. Then are these twenty-six accounts the accounts for the month? Not all; it happens that these are the accounts which I submitted on that day to pay.

1435. During what time have they accumulated? Since the 1st of the month.

1436. The 1st of this month? Yes. The chairman initials each, and I hand them on to the Treasury.

1437. Besides this, what are your duties with regard to these accounts? To see that the charges in them are correct, that the quantities charged for agree with the orders issued by the masters, and, when properly checked, to submit them for the Board's approval; they are then initialled by the chairman, and transmitted to the Treasury for authorization.

1438. What does the examination consist of? To see whether the articles were ordered, to see if they were according to the order, and if the prices were accurately entered.

1439. Here is an account for bread, £31 9s. 8d.—what do you do practically with regard to that? I will show you; here is an account (account produced).

1440. This is the ordinary form of pay voucher? Yes.

1441. This is sent into you by the person who claims payment of £31 9s. 8d.? Yes.

1442. What do you do with it—what is your duty with regard to it? To see that the article has been ordered.

1443. How do you find that out? By comparing it with the monthly ration return.

1444. How do you satisfy yourself that these 4,097 lbs. of bread have been used? I examine the ration return, and see that the articles have been ordered and received at the Asylums.

1445. Then all you have to do in each case is to contrast the amount charged in each pay voucher with the amount of goods supplied as shown by the ration return furnished by the master or matron of each institution? Yes.

1446. You will simply have to see that these things correspond? Yes; after having found that the ration returns are correct when compared with the numbers of inmates and the quantities ordered by the masters.

1447. Is there anything else that you have to do with regard to the account? After the account has been passed by the Board, an abstract is prepared and sent to the Treasury; the Examiner passes the abstract, and the vouchers stamped at the Treasury are returned to me for payment.

1448. Have you nothing else to do with the account itself? No.

1449. Then the work of the account, if right, does not take five minutes? No.

1450. Then it comes to this—having satisfied yourself that the account is correct, you enter it in this book? Yes.

1451.

- F. King, Esq. 1451. And then bring it so entered before the Board? Yes.
1452. And the Board being satisfied, they pass it? Yes.
- 17 Sept., 1873. 1453. What do you do after that? I send the accounts in to the Treasury, under an abstract.
1454. You furnish the accounts so passed by the Board, under an abstract, to the Treasury? When the vouchers are returned from the Treasury for payment, I draw cheques on my public account on the Bank of New South Wales.
1455. What officer authorizes the money to be paid, because I understood that the Board had already authorized it? No.
1456. Does the Colonial Treasurer minute these things, or some officer there;—has this account been to the Treasury, or is it going? It is going. The Colonial Treasurer authorizes the payment of the amount named in the abstract to my public account in the Bank of New South Wales. After the accounts are paid, and the vouchers receipted and stamped by the claimants, they are sent under another form of abstract to the Audit Office.
1457. On what account do you draw your cheques? On the Bank of New South Wales, in the ordinary Government form of cheque, which I am authorized to do.
1458. The money is not placed to your separate account in any way? No, the account is only opened in the bank.
1459. You have no separate sum of money placed to your credit for this purpose? No, except to my public account, as before stated.
1460. Then you say also that you have to see that all the articles supplied are of good quality? Yes.
1461. And do you visit the institutions for this purpose? I do, very often.
1462. When were you at Liverpool? I went up on Saturday.
1463. When were you there before that? I was there about a fortnight before.
1464. How often do you visit that institution? As it happens; about on an average once a month, and oftener if required. I held a muster there on the 8th instant.
1465. When did you go to Parramatta last? On the 8th instant.
1466. When before that? I held a muster on the 10th.
1467. Were you there in June and July? No; I was confined by illness to my house; I had leave to be absent from office.
1468. Did it come under your knowledge that the bread there was short weight? Yes, it has been complained of occasionally.
1469. Both at Liverpool and Parramatta? Yes.
1470. How long have you noticed that? It was complained of early in the year.
1471. Did you report it to the Board? It was complained of in January last, and then the Board cautioned the contractor. His contract was well carried out till April, when he again gave trouble, and the Board decided to mulct him in $\frac{1}{3}$ of his monthly account; but afterwards, on his promising to attend better to the supply, the Board remitted the fine. The masters were always authorized to obtain proper bread and charge it to the contractors.
1472. Was anything done about the matter practically to put a stop to this state of things? The contractor was cautioned repeatedly, and the masters were told to keep him to the terms of his contract. Months elapsed without a complaint, and the Board believed that generally the bread was of proper quality and good weight.
1473. In point of fact, this thing has been going on all the year? Not all the year; it was only occasional.
1474. Did you find it to be the case when you went there? Only the first time.
1475. Did you always weigh the bread when you went there? Only if it was complained of.
1476. Complained of by whom? By Dr. Strong. I always asked him. I spoke of it as I did of all other articles; I always asked how the food was.
1477. Did you ever try the bread at Parramatta without any suggestion being made to you? Yes.
1478. How did you find it? It was light.
1479. In point of fact, whenever you tried the weight of the bread you always found it light? I cannot say it was always, because there were no complaints from January to April, but I do not remember weighing it during that time, as I should have done if it had been complained of.
1480. In point of fact, has not this state of things been going on from the beginning of the year? It has been, if I am to judge from these instances.
1481. As a matter of fact, the Board never put a stop to it until the matter was brought under the notice of the Board the other day? The Board did notice it, as soon as the masters reported it.
1482. But the contractor was only brought up and scolded, and then the matter occurred again and was overlooked? The matter was never overlooked or neglected, and the Board's action always had the effect of making the contractor supply good bread,—at all events for a time.
1483. Were you satisfied with the management of the Parramatta institution, from what you saw of it? I have always thought it was inferior to Liverpool.
1484. In what respects? In almost all respects. The inmates are not so clean, and the arrangements are not carried out in so orderly a manner as they should be.
1485. Did you form any opinion as to the efficiency of the master there? Yes. The unsatisfactory state of the institution proves that the master is not efficient, but he has always done his best to carry out the Board's directions. The building is old, and the difficulties of carrying on the institution are greater than at Liverpool.
1486. On the occasions of your inspecting the Asylum at Parramatta, did the master ever know that you were to visit the place? Never.
1487. Did you always find the matron on the premises when you went there? The matron lived for many years in the Asylum, but the quarters were found to be very unhealthy, and a house close to the Asylum was hired for the master and matron, since which time the matron has not been continuously in the Asylum.
1488. Is it not the fact that she was generally absent whenever you went to the place? No, she was as frequently at the Asylum as at her own house, which is close to the Asylum.
1489. Was she ever in the institution when you visited it? As often at the Asylum as at her own house.
1490. Then your answer is that she was always away from the institution? I cannot say she was always away. Her quarters are so close to the gate of the Asylum that she can easily go to and fro when occasion demands her presence.
- 1491.

1491. Did you ever report either to the Board or to the Government this habitual absence of the matron? F. King, Esq.
It was always thought that her husband was the head of the house, and that if he was there ———
1492. But she is an officer of the institution, and a paid officer, is she not? Yes. 17 Sept., 1873.
1493. Do you not consider that it is the duty of all paid officers to be at their posts, and to perform the duties for which they are paid? Well, hardly in her case.
1494. What salary does she receive? £50 per annum.
1495. And what makes her absence exceptionally allowable, and why should she not be at her post as well as any one else? Because her duties are hardly of any importance compared to her husband's.
1496. What is she supposed to do there? To look after the clothing of the house, and see to the branding of the articles; her husband is the principal of the establishment.
1497. What act of supervision, then, does she perform that could not be performed by her husband? I dare say that he could do it.
1498. Is there any work done by her that could not be done by the master of the institution? No.
1499. In point of fact, is she not an unnecessary officer there? Hardly. In the master's absence he would give the charge to her, and she is a certain help to him, though it is slight.
1500. Is not Mrs. Burnside, who is Matron of the Liverpool Asylum, constantly at her post? Yes, always.
1501. And are not her hands always full? Yes, I think so; she has a great deal of work, because she has to see to all the house-work, and do all that Mr. Dennis does at Parramatta, and she is an exceedingly active woman.
1502. Is it not the fact that Mrs. Burnside takes an interest in the institution, and that Mrs. Dennis does not? That may be, but Mrs. Burnside has not her husband in the place.
1503. Do you not think that if Mrs. Dennis did her duty in looking after the place as it should be looked after, it would be more orderly and clean—is there not lots of work there for a woman? Yes.
1504. And is not the unsatisfactory character of the place in a great measure attributable to this habitual absence? I cannot say that it is, because Mr. Dennis is quite able to look to all the work of the establishment.
1505. Is it not so? It may be so.
1506. Mr. Couper.] When Mr. Burnside was alive, was not Mrs. Burnside as active as she is now? No, she never entered the institution at all.
1507. Mr. Gould.] Did she receive payment then? She did.
1508. And yet she never went into the house? No; her husband did all the work.
1509. Mr. Metcalfe.] She does a great deal of work now? Yes, she does a great deal of work—she is a most active woman.
1510. President.] She is, in fact, a highly efficient officer? Yes, she is, in every way.
1511. In point of fact, you describe Mrs. Burnside as having all the control over the internal and domestic economy of the Asylum, while the doctor looks after the medical department? No; Mrs. Burnside acts wholly under Dr. Strong—she consults him in everything.
1512. I thought you said Mrs. Burnside was in a similar position to that occupied by Mr. Dennis at Parramatta? No, Dr. Strong is the officer who is held responsible.
1513. Do you think from what you have seen that it is desirable to have husband and wife in the position of master and matron of any institution; for instance, does it work well at Biloela? Well, no, it has its objections, I should say.
1514. You say that since the present Government has been in office you have not been called upon to report, in consequence of some objection on the part of the Colonial Secretary; before the present Government came into office used you to report more frequently? Yes, I was often ordered about.
1515. What institutions did you inspect? I have inspected and reported on a large number. The reports are as follows:—On the 14th January, 1870, I visited and reported on the Industrial School and the Reformatory for Girls at Newcastle, calling attention to the absence of proper classification, stating that the association of the younger children with the elder girls, whose career had generally been disreputable, was very hurtful. I represented the over-sufficient dietary scale, the insufficiency of clothing, the unsuitable occupations to which the girls were subjected, the enormous bills for medicines, and the generally unsatisfactory state of the institution. On the 31st January I visited and reported on the Newcastle Hospital, stating that the nursing arrangements were satisfactory, but that the building was in a very unfinished condition. On the 1st February I recommended to the earnest consideration of the Government the very imperfect mode of accepting tenders for the annual supplies of food for the several Government institutions. On the 4th February I visited and reported on the Sydney Infirmary, complaining of the discomfort of the invalids and the unsatisfactory state of the premises. On the 5th February I visited and reported on the Protestant Orphan School, stating that the whole institution presented a neglected aspect, wanting painting, whitewashing and repairs, that the beds were infested with bugs, and the children's hair with lice. On the 8th February I visited and reported on the Roman Catholic Orphan School, calling particular attention to the absence of printed rules and regulations for the guidance of the officers, and stating that the premises looked wretched, and that the dormitories were swarming with bugs. On the 12th February, 1870, I visited and reported on the Nautical School Ship "Vernon," stating that the institution appeared to be in a satisfactory condition. On the 7th March I reported on the petition of the Inhabitants of West Maitland for the establishment of an Industrial School in that town, and stated, in my opinion, the Newcastle School and the "Vernon," were sufficient for the present. On the 8th March I visited and reported on the Benevolent Society, stating that the several arrangements appeared satisfactory, and calling attention to the claims of the Society on the Government for the maintenance of paupers, which I submitted should be referred to me for examination and report. On the 10th March I transmitted a new dietary scale for the Newcastle School, which had been prepared by Dr. Bedford and myself, in consequence of my report of the 14th January. On the 17th March, 1870, I called attention to the impropriety of apprenticing girls to publicans and lodging-house keepers. On the 18th March I suggested the expediency of causing all applications for apprentices to be submitted to me, explaining my ability to investigate the fitness of applicants to have the care of the children. On the 1st April I reported on the new order book which was proposed for adoption at the Protestant Orphan School. On the 4th April I visited and reported on the Protestant Orphan School, calling attention to the improper sleeping arrangements, and the bad supply of knives, forks, and spoons. On the 7th April I visited the Newcastle Industrial School and the Reformatory for Girls, and reported on the complaint made by the superintendent against

F. King, Esq. against the matron of the Reformatory for Girls, for insubordination. On the 13th April, 1870, I visited and reported on the Newcastle Industrial School and Reformatory, stating that the institutions were in a very unsatisfactory state, and urging the necessity for classification. On the 14th April I visited and reported favourably on the West Maitland Hospital. On the 21st April I called attention to the unsuccessful treatment of itch at the Protestant Orphan School, and to the imperfect mode of apprenticing the children. On the 16th May I visited and reported on the Randwick Asylum for Destitute Children, stating that the institution presented a favourable aspect, and suggesting some alterations in the management. On the 23rd May I reported on Dr. Harris's bill for medicines supplied to the Newcastle School girls, which was excessive. On the 25th May, 1870, finding that I was quite unable during my casual inspections of Government Institutions to supervise the expenditure, I suggested that all vouchers of contractors and other persons, for supplies, &c., should, before payment at the Treasury, be submitted to me for inspection and approval, and stated that I would thereby be enabled to furnish proper returns of the expenditure of those institutions. On the 14th June, I visited and reported on the Newcastle School and the Reformatory for Girls, stating that they were in a very unsatisfactory condition. On the 23rd June I visited and reported on the Protestant Orphan School, representing the prevalence of skin diseases, the dirty state of the infants' schoolroom and dining hall, the bad arrangements generally in the dormitories, and the keeping of pigs on the premises. On the 11th July, I visited and reported on the Roman Catholic Orphan School, calling attention to the continued want of rules and regulations for the guidance of the officers, and to the bad repair of the premises. On the 23rd August I visited and reported on the Nautical School Ship "Vernon," calling attention to the requisitions sent in by the superintendent. On the 25th September, 1870, I visited and reported on the Protestant Orphan School, stating that itch was prevalent and that the sleeping arrangements were still very defective. On the 10th October, 1870, I visited and reported on the Newcastle Industrial School for Girls, and the Reformatory, suggesting that the office of clerk and storekeeper should be done away with, and also that of the Matron of the Reformatory. On the 21st October, 1870, I visited and reported on the Roman Catholic Orphan School, stating that there was a perceptible improvement in the general appearance of the school. On the 12th December, 1870, I visited and reported on the Sydney Infirmary, stating that the building was swarming with bugs, that the walls were dirty, and that soiled clothing was put away, and given to persons leaving the Infirmary, in a state of filth. On the 14th January, 1871, I reported on the riots at the Newcastle Industrial School for Girls, stating that the Superintendent had failed in administrative ability. On the 16th March, 1871, I visited and reported on the riots at the Newcastle Industrial School for Girls. On the 23rd March, 1871, I visited and reported on the Cockatoo Island, as inspected by Captain McLerie and myself. On the 24th March, 1871, I visited and reported on the Newcastle Industrial Schools for Girls and the Reformatory, stating that I had relieved Mr. and Mrs. Clarke, and placed Mr. and Mrs. Lucas in charge of both institutions. On the 12th June, 1871, I reported on the transfer of the girls from Newcastle to Biloela. On the 13th June, 1871, I visited and reported on the Biloela School and Reformatory. On the 27th June, 1871, I visited and reported on the scanty supply of clothing at the Biloela School. On the 29th June, 1871, I visited and reported on the continuance of itch at the Protestant Orphan School. On the 17th July, 1871, I visited and reported on the Biloela School, stating that the institution was in a most unsatisfactory state, and that there was a deplorable absence of a proper system of classification. On the 8th August, 1871, I visited and reported on the Biloela School, stating that the conduct of the girls was very insubordinate. On the 12th August I visited the Roman Catholic Orphan School, representing the absence of rules and regulations, and the otherwise satisfactory state of the institution. On the 8th August, 1871, I visited Bathurst, and reported on the proposal of the Roman Catholic Bishop to have an Industrial School at Bathurst, in accordance with the Act of 1866. On the 12th August, 1871, I visited and reported on the Bathurst Hospital, calling attention to its unsatisfactory state. On the 28th September, 1871, I visited and reported on the Protestant Orphan School, representing its continued unsatisfactory state. On the 6th October, 1871, I visited and reported on the Penrith Hospital. On the 12th October, 1871, I visited and reported on the Goulburn Hospital, stating that the arrangements were generally satisfactory, but calling attention to the very expensive medical attendance. On the 13th October, 1871, I visited and reported on the Windsor Hospital and Hawkesbury Benevolent Society, stating that the premises were old and neglected. On the 13th October I called attention to the expenditure for the maintenance of paupers in the Sydney Infirmary as compared with the Government Asylums. On the 20th October, 1871, I visited and reported favourably on the Braidwood and Araluen Hospitals. On the 31st October, 1871, I reported generally on the Charitable Institutions of New South Wales. On the 16th November, 1871, I visited and reported on the Yass Hospital, stating that it had an old and neglected aspect. On the 17th November, 1871, I visited and reported on the Mudgee and Gulgong Hospitals favourably. On the 15th December, 1871, I reported on the dietary scale at the Biloela School, which appeared to be ample; on the 20th December, 1871, I reported the case of Samuel Smith, who had been kept in the Sydney Infirmary for eight months at the public expense. On the 21st March, 1872, I visited and reported on the Benevolent Asylum, again referring to expenditure for the maintenance of paupers, showing that there was no scrutiny exercised on the part of the Government over this important item of expense. On the 16th April, 1872, I visited and reported favourably on the Bathurst Hospital. On the 17th April, 1872, I visited and reported favourably on the Orange Hospital. On the 18th April, 1872, I visited and reported on the Biloela School, stating that the girls were untidy, without boots and stockings, and suggesting that the services of one sub-matron and the storekeeper be dispensed with. The difficulties connected with the supply of meat were brought under notice. On the 21st June, 1872, I reported on the expenditure of the Sydney Infirmary, showing how the charges to the Government should be reduced. On the 23rd July, 1872, I visited and reported on the Biloela School, stating that itch had spread through the school, evidencing carelessness on the part of the officers; that the clothing was made of bad material, and that the cook had been wrongly discharged. On the 6th August, 1872, I reported on the supply of kerosene oil at the Biloela School. On the 3rd March, 1873, I reported that Mr. Lucas had beaten one of the girls in a very severe manner. On the 4th March, 1873, I reported on the excessive requisition for clothing, &c., sent in by Mr. Lucas. On the 5th March, 1873, I reported on the Rev. Mr. Love's application for the admission of five children to the Randwick Asylum for Destitute Children. On the 26th July, 1873, I reported on the case of a boy Williams, an inmate of the Sofala Hospital, a cripple, whose admission to the Randwick Asylum had been refused. On the 6th August, 1873, I reported on the case of Minnie Perks, who was, in my opinion, fit for admission to the Institution for the Deaf and Dumb and the Blind. On the 23rd August I conducted an inquiry as to complaints against Miss Morrow, the infant teacher at the Protestant Orphan School.

1516. But at this time the same system prevailed, and you did not report unless you were called upon to do so? I did so occasionally on my own motion. F. King, Esq.
1517. Does any one else except yourself visit any of these institutions in the discharge of the duties which you perform? No, I have not heard of any one else doing so. 17 Sept., 1873.
1518. What other officers are there under you? One clerk, Mr. Gyulay, and a youth, Mr. Dennis.
1519. What are his duties? He acts under me in keeping the books and otherwise helping me.
1520. Does he ever go to any of these institutions? No, except occasionally when I have been confined to my house in ill health.
1521. How many members attend this Board generally? Only two, the Auditor General and the Health Officer.
1522. And the other members never attend? No, hardly ever. We have the Sheriff here occasionally.
1523. We understand that the Board leave the duties appertaining to the admission of inmates to these Asylums to you? Yes, they are left to me; but, in cases in which I hardly like to act, in cases of doubt, I submit the applications to the Board.
1524. What steps do you take with the view of forming an opinion as to the propriety of allowing any applicant to become an inmate of these institutions? I have each applicant before me here, and I ask him questions, the answers to which I enter in a book. I try to obtain all the information I can about each applicant—information as to his history and so on. Our principal cause of admission is old age and infirmity, and it is almost always easy to decide whether a case may be admitted or not.
1525. Do you ever make inquiry as to whether these people have relatives who are able to support them? Yes, frequently, and our officers are always ordered to inform us of any case that they hear of.
1526. Have you any reason to believe that attempts are made to impose upon the charity of the public, by applicants presenting themselves who are in a position to support themselves, or whose relatives are in a position to support them? Yes, I often have. We have refused hundreds of applicants here.
1527. Within what space of time have you refused a hundred applicants? Well, perhaps 100 in the half-year or less—within that I can show you by this book. (Book produced.) Each applicant is entered here; and after all the applications are entered up, there are two days in the week when they are dealt with. But I sometimes admit people between the days. I have them up here, have them into the room, and subject them to as much cross-examination as I can; but as a rule they are very old and infirm.
1528. But most of these people spoken of in this book appear to have been admitted? Yes.
1529. Do you keep any record of those who apply and are refused? Yes (referring to book) here is one refused, and here is one refused, and so on. It may sometimes happen that I do not refuse a man for a week or two, and then there may be a good many refused.
1530. What does this mean "Letter from Infirmary"? They come from the Infirmary to go into the Asylum, and when they come they bring a letter. These (referring to book) all came with letters from outside people asking me to have them in; and the others come with letters from the Infirmary. I never refuse to admit a case of real distress.
1531. Have you ever informed the authorities of the Infirmary of the persons discharged from the Asylums for misconduct? No, there is no communication from me to the Infirmary, except when I want to get a man into the Infirmary, or when they want to get a man into the Asylum.
1532. An instance has come under our knowledge where a person has been discharged from the Infirmary as hopelessly incurable, and has got into the Asylum at Parramatta: he is discharged from the Asylum for misconduct, comes straight down to Sydney and gets into the Infirmary. In the Asylum that man cost the Country about £14 a year, and in the Infirmary he costs the Country £46? That is often the case, since the new rule has been in force that any one can be put into the Infirmary at the Government expense. They have made an order now that any one almost can give a recommendation to the Colonial Secretary, who upon that gives an order for admission, and these people are admitted into the Infirmary at the Government expense. I have no doubt there is some good reason for this man's being in the Infirmary. He has been taken up by the police, no doubt, suffering from some injury or something of that kind. Since I have held this office there has been a constant dispute between the authorities of the Infirmary and myself. They are constantly trying to get people on to us. I have refused more applications from the Infirmary than from anywhere else.
1533. Mr. Metcalfe.] But you do not benefit the Government by doing that;—with you these people only cost the Government £14 a year, but they cost £46 in the Infirmary? But they are not eligible for admission into the Asylum; and if a patient submitted is ineligible, then I cannot have him in.
1534. President.] What are the elements that have made them ineligible? Those persons who are capable of being improved by active treatment are ineligible.
1535. But if the Infirmary authorities discharge these people, they do so because they are incurable, and they are not supposed to go to the Infirmary unless they are in destitute circumstances? Yes.
1536. And if they come to you from the Infirmary, they come with the opinion of the Infirmary authorities that their cases are incurable, and that they are utterly unable to earn their own living: on what ground do you reject them—how do you form an opinion, contrary to that of the medical officers of the Infirmary, that these cases are capable of being cured? Well, when I have them here I ask them questions, and I get out of them something which proves them to be ineligible. I believe that I can refer to some cases. It often happens that they send down patients who are not eligible.
1537. Mr. Gould.] What are these mentioned on the last page of this book (referring to book produced)? Those are simply cases admitted.
1538. President.] Would you give us an instance of a case that has been sent to you from the Infirmary for admission into the Asylum for the Infirm and Destitute that has been refused by you, and will you state the grounds upon which you have refused it? I often hunt up and find that they have friends who should be able to keep them out of the house.
1539. That would be a very good ground for refusing them admission, but I understood you to say that on some occasions you refused them because they were cases that could be cured: if you do that, you must set up your own opinion against that of the Infirmary authorities, who say that they are incurable, and that it is not desirable to keep them in an institution which is intended only for the reception of curable cases? Yes.
1540. You see the cost of a patient in the Infirmary is £46 per year, while in the Asylum it is only £14 a year, so that it should be the object of the Board here to relieve the Infirmary as much as possible if the patients

F. King, Esq. patients are in destitute circumstances and if they are supported by the Government? I cannot refer to any case. I can only say that whenever I have refused a man it has been on good grounds. There is a very large number—about sixty per annum—ordered in here out of the Infirmary.

17 Sept., 1873.

1541. The medical authorities of the Infirmary complain too that persons who are discharged from the Infirmary as cured of erysipelas have been refused admission into the Asylum because they have had erysipelas, though they are discharged cured and in a condition not dangerous to other people? The case of erysipelas was refused at the Infirmary and admitted to the Hyde Park Asylum and cured there. The Board represented the case to the Government.*

1542. But this person was cured of the erysipelas—they do not discharge a patient from the Infirmary until he is cured? Well, I forget how it happened, but it was in the early days of the institution I think. I do not know how long ago it was.

1543. Mr. Metcalfe.] I observe in the abstract of the accounts that the old women's asylum at Hyde Park is charged with the salary of two clerks—one at £200 and one at £50? Yes.

1544. Do they work for that one establishment? No, it is for all the Asylums.

1545. One would imagine from the abstract it is all for this one? Yes; it is entered here, as this is the head office, but they do the work of all the Asylums.

1546. Then these two gentlemen are your clerks? Yes.

1547. Mr. Cowper.] Is that taken into account in averaging the cost per head? Yes, it is distributed amongst the houses.

1548. Through them all? Yes.

1549. Have you not written some long reports to the Government with reference to the Sydney Infirmary? Yes, there are some here. (Report produced. See Appendix R 2.)

1550. Is that one of them? That is one; there are others also. This is one in which I compared the average cost of the patients in the Infirmary with the average cost per head of the inmates of these institutions.

1551. Have you ever had any reports which you have sent in to the Government returned to you? Yes; my annual report was returned to me because I had worded it too strongly.

1552. That was with reference to the practice of the Infirmary authorities giving out the patients' dirty clothes? No, it was objected to because of my remarks on the Bilóela School.

1553. In what year was that report sent in? In 1870.

1554. It speaks of the patients' underclothing being soiled in a disgusting manner and yet given to patients? Yes, we had inmates who came here from the Infirmary and they were covered with vermin; that is how I knew it.

1555. President.] Did you ever consider whether there was any way of utilizing the labour of the inmates of these Asylums? That has often been considered here, but the whole work of the institution is done by the inmates, and we find that such a large number are required to do the work of the institutions that we could not spare any of them. The best men would go, and those who remained would be so feeble and infirm that they could not do anything. The very principle on which these people are taken into the Asylums is that they are quite helpless. If I go up to Liverpool and see there a man who is able to earn his own living, the medical man and I consult together, and if he agrees with me that man is put out.

1556. Are you aware that a proposition was made by the proprietors of the Paper Company at Liverpool, to utilize the labour of the inmates of the Asylum there in making paper bags? Yes. The correspondence is appended to this evidence, marked B.

1557. How long ago was it? It was about two years ago, I fancy.

1558. Was an application made either verbally or otherwise, and did the Board consider it? Yes, I think that the Board did consider it.† (See note on revision, B.)

* NOTE (on revision) A.

No. 69-275.

Board of Government Asylums,
Sydney, 26 August, 1869.

Sir,

I am directed by the Board of Management to request that you will be good enough to solicit the attention of the Honorable the Colonial Secretary to the case of a young girl whose admission to this institution, while suffering from a dangerous disease, "erysipelas," was forced on the Board in consequence of the refusal on the part of the authorities of the Sydney Infirmary to give her shelter. Application for her admission to the Hyde Park Asylum was made to the Chairman by the Reverend Mr. Morton, who stated that he had made personal application at the Infirmary for her admission, but had been informed that, as the girl was suffering from an infectious disorder, she was ineligible. This is one of numerous instances in which, for the sake of humanity, the Board have been constrained to admit to the Government Asylums for the Infirm and Destitute, patients requiring active medical treatment who have been refused admission to the Infirmary; and they desire to call the attention of the Government to the expediency of instituting an inquiry into the rules and practice of the Infirmary, with the view of causing such modification thereof as will open the doors of that institution, which is so largely supported out of the public funds, for the reception of such cases as that which they have brought under notice.

The Principal Under Secretary.

I have, &c.,
FREDERIC KING,
Secretary.

† NOTE (on revision) B.

With reference to your question as to whether an application was not made by the Paper Company at Liverpool, for the employment of the inmates of the Asylum in making paper bags,—I have to state that the Manager of the Paper Company did apply to the Board, on the 9th December, 1872. The superintendent was called on to report, which he did as follows:—

"Of the suggestion contained in this letter I do not at all think well, for many reasons. To carry out the Company's plan we should require a room purposely set apart, and which we have not; an overseer of the work would be necessary, which we could not find. There are not, I think, a dozen men in the yard who have the use of their hands for the purpose of making bags; those who are not too aged are paralyzed or otherwise deformed in their limbs. Besides, tables, benches, scissors, and many other articles, would be needed, for the keeping of which we have no accommodation, and many of which also it would not be safe to trust in the yard, for there are many violent characters there. In fact, I think such a plan put into operation would demoralize the whole class of inmates, and I trust therefore the Board will not entertain the suggestion.

The Board decided that all or nearly all the inmates who are capable of doing anything are employed in the work of the establishment, and they directed me to so inform the Manager of the Paper Company, and to express their regret that for the above and other reasons they did not see their way to comply with the suggestion.

FREDERIC KING,
Secretary.

1559. Why was the proposition rejected? I think one reason was the difficulty of looking after it—looking after the property of others sent into our house without having officers to attend to it; and also, because of the helplessness of the inmates. F. King, Esq.
17 Sept., 1873.
1560. Mr. Metcalfe.] But he must be a very helpless man who cannot make a paper bag? He could do it if he had any one to look after him, and we should have had to hire in help. We could not have undertaken the thing without having a storekeeper who would have to have been answerable for the property.
1561. President.] Are not the Paper Company's works so close to the Asylum that the inmates could go down there and work? —
1562. Mr. Metcalfe.] Would it not be as well to let these old men earn 1s. a day or so, half of which could go to their benefit and half to the institution? Yes, it might be done.
1563. But you think that it could not be done there? The men are so feeble.
1564. On the whole, you think there are not many people there who really could earn their own living? There are not more than a dozen—I am convinced of it; because we keep a very strict eye over them, and we don't keep any who are able to work, except a few of the helpers. There are a few head wardsmen there who are able to work a little, but otherwise there are not any who are able to earn their own living.
1565. President.] Mr. Rolleston informs us that a great number of persons less fit to be received than those who obtain admission here are sent down from the country? That has often happened. We are quite unable to control their admission into the house, but after we have them in we very often send them out again. It is owing to the efforts of the up-country people to get these old people off their hands that they are sent down.
1566. Every country district endeavours to get rid of its own paupers and throw them all upon the city public? Yes, that has been the effort all through.
1567. Mr. Couper.] And they are very often people who would not be admitted if they applied in Sydney? Very often.
1568. You have as a rule visited the hospitals throughout the country? I have done so occasionally. I have visited the hospitals at Bathurst, Orange and Braidwood, and Goulburn and Maitland.
1569. Do you consider that they are well managed? Not generally.
1570. Mr. Metcalfe.] Have you been to Windsor? Yes. The buildings are very old and dilapidated.
1571. And are the rations issued at Windsor the same as those issued in other institutions of the Colony? Yes, I think so. There is a Benevolent Society as well as a Hospital: the two institutions are combined.
1572. And are the rations given out in the same way? Yes. The institution is wholly in private hands, but it is helped by the Government.
1573. The Government give half the money that is contributed to that institution? Yes, the same as all the others; but they have no control over the expenditure, except that they have the right of inspection.
1574. Mr. Gould.] When did you visit the Bathurst Hospital last? I think it was August, 1872.
1575. In what state did you find it then? It was in a rather old, perishable condition.
1576. But as to cleanliness? It was ordinarily clean, but it is a very old house; it is a very unsuitable place.
1577. President.] Did you form any opinion as to the suitability of Biloela as the site of an Industrial School? Yes; I thought it would require very great alterations, but as to the island itself, I thought it was tolerably good. It is an isolated place, and much better than the house at the Hunter. The house there was so exposed—it was exposed to the streets—and I believe that a great deal of harm was done by that. Here, with proper control the school might be carried on with more success, if the buildings were altered. The place at present is unsuitable—I cannot conceive how the place can be carried on with such arrangements as they have there.
1578. Is there any suggestions you wish to make with reference to these institutions? No, I do not know that there is anything more to add.

THURSDAY, 18 SEPTEMBER, 1873.

Members Present:—

WILLIAM CHARLES WINDEYER, Esq., PRESIDENT.

SAMUEL GOOLD, Esq.

MICHAEL METCALFE, Esq.

CHARLES COWPER, JUN., Esq.

Captain John McLerie, Inspector-General of Police, called in and examined:—

1579. President.] You are the Inspector-General of Police? Yes. Capt. McLerie.
18 Sept., 1873.
1580. I believe that you were appointed one of the Board to have the supervision of the Government Asylums for the Infirm and Destitute? I am one of the Board, but I must confess that I cannot attend the Board meetings, as my doing so would interfere too much with my official duties—those which I am paid to perform.
1581. What is the hour at which the Board meetings are usually held? 10 o'clock in the forenoon, and that is the hour when I have to put the whole of the police machinery of the Colony in motion.
1582. You have at that hour to be always at your official post? Yes.
1583. To make arrangements for carrying on the whole police business of the Colony? Yes, from 10 to 12 I am always busy. I told the Chairman of the Board that if he altered the hour of meeting I would attend, but that I could not neglect my official duties in order to attend the meetings of a Board of which I was merely an honorary member.
1584. And in point of fact you have not attended? Yes, I did attend two or three times, but I have not been there for ten months. I did attend, but found it very inconvenient—the whole department was upset—and so I ceased to attend.
1585. In point of fact, you found that you could not attend the Board meetings consistently with your other duties? Yes.
1586. Was any notice taken of your request to have the hour of meeting changed? I was appointed a member

Capt. McLerie. member of the Board by Sir Charles Cowper—who is now at Home, and I thought that I should be able to arrange with the chairman of the Board as to the hour of meeting, but I did not succeed in that, and I never went to a meeting afterwards.

18 Sept., 1873.

1587. Was there any particular reason given for adhering to the hour of 10 o'clock? None. I have been talking to Dr. Alleyne, one of the members of the Board, and he says that he has never seen either the Sheriff or me at the meetings. I do not know why the Sheriff has not been there, but I have mentioned the reason why I have not been there.

1588. Do you see enough of the working of the Board to enable you to form an opinion as to whether such a Board, composed as it is of gentlemen who have other important official duties to attend to, can satisfactorily discharge the functions thrown upon it? I do not believe that any gentleman who has important official duties to attend to can do justice at that Board. That is my opinion, and I have formed that opinion from having been many years ago a member of the Board of the Benevolent Asylum. There the committee met in the afternoon, and I could attend the meetings.

1589. Have you formed any opinion as to the best mode of supervising these Charitable Institutions;—what better plan can be adopted than the present one? I think that a much better plan could be devised.

1590. What is your idea on the subject? I think that there should be a Government officer responsible to the Government for the whole of these institutions, who should have some sort of supervision over all Charitable Institutions—these Asylums and others—for which there is a Parliamentary vote of money every year.

1591. From what you saw, did it appear to you that there was much work for the Board to do in relation to the Asylums? Yes, if the work was properly done.

1592. In what respects in particular? In fact, there should be an officer appointed by the Government, at a tolerably high salary—with officers under him—to see that the public money voted to these institutions is not misapplied. Just before coming here I looked at the Estimates for the present year, and I found that the amount voted for the Public Charities and other institutions for the year 1873 was over £112,000. I think that that money—every farthing of the money voted by the Parliament for these purposes—should be expended by an officer responsible to the Government.

1593. What institutions do you include among those who receive shares of that £112,000? The Industrial Schools, Asylums, Lunatic Asylums, Infirmary, Biloela, Protestant and Roman Catholic Orphan Schools, and other charitable allowances. The total is over £112,000.

1594. You do not include Randwick in it? Yes, that is included; and so are the Orphan Schools.

1595. Did you, when you first endeavoured to attend to the duties of the Board, visit any of these institutions yourself? I did. I was a member of the Board of the original Benevolent Asylum, and went up to Liverpool in that capacity. We had no local Board there then. Members of the committee went up to Liverpool once a quarter, and I generally used to go there. Afterwards they had a local Board.

1596. Up to what time were you a member of the old Benevolent Asylum Board? Up to 1854—from 1847 to 1854, as far as I can recollect.

1597. Did you ever form any opinion as to whether the Board managing that institution was too large? I did; and it was also too mixed in its nature.

1598. Do you mean to say that such a Board would be better able to do its duty if it were composed entirely of laymen? I do. I will not say that the institutions should be without the spiritual assistance of clergymen; but they have no right to be on the Board, as they are so easily imposed upon.

1599. In point of fact, the kindly, benevolent disposition which makes a good clergyman tends to unfit him for the harder and sterner work of examining into cases of distress and detecting imposture? Yes. I may say that, in England, when the Poor Law Bill passed it was said that relieving officers should be appointed—men who might be called relieving officers, but who would actually be detectives, and find out whether persons were fit objects of charity or not. These people, while charged with the duty of relieving cases of real distress, would be able to detect impostors.

1600. Why did you think that the Board of the Benevolent Asylum was too large? I think that no Board should exceed three members.

1601. Do you think that the large size of the Board tends to create a waste of time—that there are frivolous discussions, and so on? Yes, I do.

1602. Had you any reason to believe that the out-door relief given by the Benevolent Asylum was sometimes given to improper persons—that this form of charity was imposed upon? I had.

1603. Was it so up to the time you left the Board? Yes, it was so. I disqualified myself for the purpose of getting away from the Board, because I was convinced that we were relieving people who were undeserving, and I believe that is the case now.

1604. What were the grounds on which you came to that conclusion? I have lived in the neighbourhood of the Asylum for the last twenty-two years, and of course I could not help seeing a good deal of what goes on there.

1605. Do you see the class of people who go there for relief? Yes, and also the class of women who are admitted there to be delivered. I have seen the same women there three or four times.

1606. But I believe that sort of thing has been put a stop to? I do not know. I know it was the case some years ago. I have seen the same women there—women with long ringlets and gay dresses—in the place.

1607. Have you had, since you have left the Board, up to the present time, any opportunities of observing the class of people who go to the institution for relief? Well, I have not paid so much attention to the matter since; but I know for a fact that at that time people got relief of bread and meat, and sold what they got immediately afterwards.

1608. Probably in order to get drink? I do not know what for, but they sold it.

1609. Did you ever consider as to what would be the best means of checking this kind of imposition? The only means which I could suggest would be to place the whole vote for charitable purposes in the hands of a responsible officer. I have no doubt that he would get a Board of three or five to assist him—unpaid gentlemen on whom he could depend.

1610. We are informed that the charity of the public is very much imposed upon in regard to the out-door dispensing of the Sydney Infirmary? That is a matter about which I know very little, except what I have learned from reports which I read in the papers.

1611. Do you think it would be possible for these institutions in any way to make use of the assistance of your department in finding out whether persons applying for relief are eligible? I do everything in my power.

power now with my limited force to assist Captain Mein, of the "Vernon," and also the Asylums, when they refer to me. They do refer to me sometimes, and when they do I send all over the Colony, and report the result of my inquiries to the Colonial Secretary. The other day I sent to Captain Mein a report upon the parents of some of his boys who were able to pay for their children's maintenance. Capt. McLerie.
18 Sept., 1873.

1612. Then do you think that there are boys at present on board the "Vernon" whose parents are able to pay for them? I should not like to say positively, but I have little doubt in my own mind that there are. In Victoria they publish in the Police Gazette the names of defaulters who fail to pay for the subsistence of their children in the Benevolent Asylums. We have nothing of the kind here. I will send you down the Victorian Police Gazette, in which you will see the large number of the names of defaulters published there. They are put into the Police Gazette, and the police secure the payment of the money. (Appendix S.)

1613. Do the police take steps to recover the money? Yes, and so would I. I would make my people do the same as the police do in Victoria, but I have no intimation as to who are defaulters. In the Victorian Gazette there are three or four pages of defaulters.

1614. Mr. Cowper.] They publish a list of people who are able to pay? It is a list of people who have not paid their subscriptions towards their children's maintenance, and the police obtain payment. I would do the same here if I were supplied with the information, but I do not get it. Perhaps there is something in our Act which is different from the Victorian Act—I do not know. That return of the children sent to the "Vernon" and to Biloela was a suggestion of mine to the Colonial Secretary. I suggested that the Magistrates should make out duplicate returns and send one of them to me, but the information that the returns contain is so meagre that they are not of the slightest use.

1615. Well, there is a great difficulty in all these cases—I do not think that there are two cases which are really perfect—there are cases which I could upset quite easily? I know that.

1616. They do not know how to make out the warrants, or anything? Well, that printed form was a suggestion of mine also. But it gives the most meagre information—it is perfectly useless to me.

1617. President.] What is your opinion as to the working of the Acts which were passed a few years ago with a view of reclaiming vagrant children? Well, I think that the Act is defective in many respects. There was the case of a family of children sent down from Braidwood. The mother was dead, the father was insane; the police took charge of the children. I reported the matter to the Colonial Secretary, and received instructions to have them brought here. The girls were sent to Biloela. I do not think that was right. I think that the poverty of the parents should not be visited as a crime upon the children. The mother of these children was dead, and the father was insane, or the father was dead and the mother was insane—I cannot recollect which. The children should have been sent to the Destitute Children's Asylum, I think.

1618. Your idea of Biloela is that it is a place for criminals? Yes.

1619. But that is not the intention of the Act? That is a mistake of the Act. It should be a place for the reception of girls who have been in one way unfortunate, or girls who have been convicted of thieving, and there should be only the two classes there.

1620. But the evidence before us points to the conclusion that these juvenile criminals are not as immoral as are the prostitute girls—that it would be wrong to mix the prostitutes with the thieves? I quite admit that; yet I do not think that these unfortunate children who have not committed crime should be mixed up with criminals of any kind of the female class.

1621. You are aware of the difference between the Reformatory and the Industrial School at Biloela? I believe that the Reformatory is all humbug. The Orphan Schools and the Asylum at Randwick were quite enough.

1622. But if you did away with the Reformatory, would you not be doing what you complain of, and mixing the two classes together? My complaint is that these simply unfortunate children are sent to mix with girls some of whom are of the prostitute class, while others have been convicted of petty larcenies. Why should these unfortunate children be sent there?

1623. But we are informed that very few of them have ever been convicted of crime, and those who have been were sent there by mistake? I would have a different place for them all.

1624. Mr. Metcalfe.] Would you mix the prostitutes and the thieves together? No; I would have only two classes in Biloela. I would have no Reformatory there; and I would send mere pauper children, those who were proper candidates for admission into an industrial school, to Randwick.

1625. Mr. Cowper.] Do you not know that at Biloela the children who have been convicted of thieving do not mix with the others? I do not know what the arrangements are—I have never visited the place. As long as the Industrial School is there it will be looked upon with suspicion. Leave Biloela for culprits—for females who have been guilty of some indiscretions, and for thieves, and send the others to Randwick; but do not mix up the thieves with the prostitutes.

1626. President.] Your objection in the particular case you have quoted is, that the children, though deprived of their parents, were simply neglected, and should have been sent to Randwick rather than to the Industrial School? I do not think that they should have been sent to Biloela. The very fact of their being sent to the Industrial School at Biloela is enough to injure them.

1627. You think that the old associations of Cockatoo Island have not been done away with by the place having been re-christened Biloela? No.

1628. And you are against Cockatoo Island as the site of a school of this character? Yes, for a School of Industry. Mind, I recommended it as a place of punishment for females when they could not be kept under discipline at Newcastle; but I never intended that unfortunate children, such as those to whom I have alluded, should be sent there.

1629. Do you not think that its proximity to the dock is undesirable, as there are a number of sailors constantly there? Well, with proper supervision I do not think there would be any harm in that. There has been only one instance of the sailors having made a disturbance there, and that was when the American ship was in the dock.

1630. Do you not think that there is a constant danger of such a thing, with the sailors so much about the island—are they not a most enterprising class of men, and very like to go into escapades of that kind? I quite agree with that. I think that one of the Orphan Schools at Parramatta would be a far better position for these girls. It would be best to amalgamate the two schools—the Roman Catholic and the Protestant Schools, with the institution at Randwick. I do not see why that should not be done. I was one of the original founders of the Randwick Asylum, long before it was at Randwick, and it was our intention to propose such an amalgamation to the Government.

- Capt. McLerie. 1631. Your idea is that the Roman Catholic and Protestant Orphan Schools should be abolished as Denominational Schools and one of them taken as an Industrial School? Yes, and the other children should be sent to Randwick. The Government pays nearly the whole of the expenses of Randwick as it is.
- 18 Sept., 1873. 1632. Mr. Metcalfe.] To what extent would you enlarge Randwick Asylum? Put another wing on to it.
1633. There are now 800 children there, and many of them are sleeping two in a bed? Add another wing to the building. I believe that there is quite room there for 1,200 children if proper arrangements were made for them.
1634. Do you mean that 1,200 could be housed there now? No, not now.
1635. President.] Do you not think that it would be best to retain the Protestant Orphan School and make use of the buildings there—to put the children of the two schools all together there? No, I think it would be better and cheaper to have them at Randwick. My opinion is that there are a number of children in the Randwick Institution who ought not to be there.
1636. Why do you think that it would be cheaper for the children to be kept at Randwick than at the Protestant Orphan School, supposing that the latter place is properly supplied with appliances? Because you would have one staff instead of three. You have three staffs now.
1637. Do you not think that by having so many children together the tendency is to make the school ineffective, by the individual character of the children being lost sight of? No, I do not think so; not if you have proper officers. There are some of our English workhouses which contain 1,500 paupers.
1638. But you would hardly make them model schools for the imitation of the Colonies, would you? No, I would not.
1639. What are the grounds for the opinion you have just expressed that there are a large number of children in Randwick who should not be there? I am one of the original founders of that institution, and there is not one of the original founders now connected with it. I do not know what the reasons of the others for withdrawing from it may have been, but mine were that the original objects of the institution were not carried out.
1640. You have taken a considerable interest in Randwick? Not lately; I have not since I ceased to be a member of the committee.
1641. What is your reason for thinking that there are a large number of children there who should not be there? That was my reason for seceding from it, and I have no doubt that was the reason why others did the same. There is now not one of the original founders of the institution connected with it.
1642. Were you then unsuccessful in your endeavours to prevent the reception of children who ought not to be there? Well, they increased the committee there.
1643. Is it your opinion that the committee is too large? Yes, it is. There is not a meeting but there is some sectarian squabble takes place; we never had anything of the kind in my time.
1644. Was the committee much smaller in your time? Yes; there was Dr. Douglas, Dr. Ross, Archdeacon M'Encroe, Mr. Dowling and myself,—and Mr. Stephen was our secretary. That was our Board, and we had no sectarian squabbles then.
1645. And you think that this tendency to waste the time of the meetings in frivolous discussions has arisen in part from the size of the committee? I have no doubt of it whatever.
1646. What is your experience as to the desirability of having Boards composed entirely of laymen to manage all these institutions? Of all; wherever a vote of money is given, I would make one man responsible to the Government for expending it.
1647. You think that the Government should be represented on every Board? Yes, and the chairman should be responsible to the Government, and associated with either paid or unpaid members.
1648. Mr. Metcalfe.] How can you make the chairman responsible when he has only a casting vote at the Board? Let him look after the expenditure of the money.
1649. But how can you make him responsible? Well, make the Board responsible; I do not mean the individual—the chairman. You are quite right there. For instance, I am one of the members of the Transit Commission; the chairman is the Mayor, and the other member is the Mayor of St. Leonards; and I find that I am very often out-voted.
1650. And yet you are the Government representative? Yes. I must say that we work very well together, but I have had a difficulty about the 'bus boys.
1651. President.] With regard to the Destitute Children's Asylum at Randwick,—seeing that the Government contribute a very great proportion of the money expended on it, what proportion of the Board do you think should be composed of members representing the Government? I should make it pro rata, according to the sum voted by Parliament and the amount subscribed by private individuals. It will be found that every year the subscriptions from the public will become less and less, until eventually the institution will become a Government establishment. I am speaking now from twenty-five years' experience in Sydney.
1652. Do you not think that if you so much diminish the proportion of the members of the Board elected by the subscribers, it will have a still greater tendency to diminish the subscriptions? I do not think so; it is not because they are represented by their own body that people subscribe.
1653. You think that they subscribe for the sake of the Charity itself? Yes, exactly so. We used to get £3,000 or £4,000 a year with that small Board of three members.
1654. May not the falling off of the subscriptions to the Benevolent Asylum have arisen from the fact that there are now other institutions calling upon the public for subscriptions, and thus the contributions of the people are divided amongst many more institutions than they used to be? Still the charity of the public is confined to only a certain number of persons. The same people give to all these institutions. There are many people of very large means, of immense wealth, who never give a farthing to anything.
1655. Have you never considered, when you were a member of this Board, how the labour of the inmates might be utilized to some extent—I mean the inmates of the Government Asylums—and that they might be made more self-supporting than they now are? Well, I believe that in the Destitute Children's Asylum the labour of the inmates is utilized to a great extent. The boys and girls are apprenticed as servants to the institution—and they do a large amount of work, of course only receiving rations and a small annual gratuity.
1656. Did it ever come to your knowledge, when you were attending to the duties of the Board, that the proprietors of the Paper Company at Liverpool had made some proposition to the Board for employing the inmates of the Asylum in making paper bags? No, not in my time; the Paper Company was formed after my time.

1657. Mr. Metcalfe.] But the President is speaking of an offer made to the present Board—the Hyde Park Board? I am not aware of it. Capt. McLerie.
1658. President.] You have not turned your attention to the subject? I proposed in the Transit Commission to write to some of the factories to employ some of the boys whom we rejected as 'bus boys. I made a motion that we should apply to the proprietors of certain factories, and try and obtain employment for these boys, and no one would employ them. 18 Sept., 1873.
1659. What boys? 'Bus boys too young to be licensed and otherwise ineligible.
1660. Did you ever visit the Asylum at Parramatta, in the course of your experience as a member of the Board? Only once.
1661. Did you then form any opinion as to the mode in which it was managed? Well, my visit was so cursory that I would not like to give an opinion on the subject. I did form an opinion, but it may have been a wrong one, and I do not wish to advance it.
1662. Do you think that the Industrial School Act has been put in force as much as it might have been by the Benches of Magistrates? I can only speak as to Sydney and the principal towns of the Colony—Goulburn, Maitland, Bathurst, &c. I know they do there, but of course I cannot speak of other places.
1663. What is your opinion? I believe that in those towns the Act is carried out in its integrity.
1664. But are there not numbers of children running about the streets neglected now? Yes; but the police cannot legally go into the houses and take the boys out.
1665. But is there not a laxity on the part of the Benches—a desire to let boys have “another chance” when they are brought up before them; that is to say, “another chance of going to the bad”? Yes, of course there is. I get the police returns every morning. If the boys are charged with an offence against the law, the Benches can send them to gaol.
1666. Do you not think that excuses are too readily accepted—that mere pretences set up as to a boy having a means of support are accepted as genuine? Yes.
1667. That is your opinion? That is my opinion; and I know, too, that parents very often bring their children before the Benches with a view of getting rid of the expense of supporting them.
1668. And the responsibility of looking after them? Yes.
1669. And you think that, if they do put their children in these institutions, they should be made to pay for them? Certainly.
1670. Is there any suggestion that you wish to make upon any of these topics at all? No. I think I have given my opinion to the effect that the public money is misapplied to a large extent. That is my opinion.
1671. In all these institutions? In all these institutions. It is enormous that £112,000 a year should be voted for these institutions for a population of only 500,000 or 600,000.
1672. Of course the tendency of allowing people too easily to obtain admission to these institutions is to pauperize the people? Yes, the tendency is to make them paupers.
1673. Mr. Metcalfe.] And you think that there should be a central Board to decide as to who shall be admitted into these places? Yes; and that Board should be assisted by officers to make inquiries.
1674. President.] It has been suggested that there should be a Board in a central position in town, where there should be a staff of clerks and so on, and which should be a place of reference for all people who wish to get apprentices from any of the Orphan or Industrial Schools, and which should to some extent supervise the whole of the Public Charities;—it has been suggested that this central body would prevent favouritism, and be able to keep up a system of supervision in such a way as to prevent persons discharged from one Asylum getting into another: do you think that would be a good plan? The Board should be a central Board, having control over all the money voted by the Parliament for charitable purposes.
1675. You would not have the Board meet in a Government office, but in some central place in the town devoted to their special business? Yes; it would be a large establishment, you know. The Board and the secretary, and a staff of officers to make inquiries. If they did not want officers to travel about, I could make the police inquire when reference was made to me. That Board should publish quarterly the names of all defaulters—people who did not pay for the support of their families or children in the public institutions. There was a case referred to me the other day for inquiry—(I will not mention names)—the case of a woman in the Gladesville Asylum, for whose support her son paid 2s. 6d. per day. He applied to the Government to be relieved from this payment on account of his poverty. The matter was referred to me, and it was found that the man's father died leaving £4,000 worth of property, and that this man was drawing the rents of £2,000 worth, and yet he applied to be relieved from the duty of supporting his mother. That is a case which has occurred within the last month.
1676. Is there anything else you wish to add? No, I do not think so.

Albert Gustavus Gyulay, Esq., Clerk to the Board of Government Asylums, called in and examined:—

1677. President.] What office do you hold under the Government? I am connected with the management of the affairs of the Board of the Government Asylums. A. G. Gyulay,
Esq.
1678. You are first clerk there? Yes. 18 Sept., 1873.
1679. Have you anything specially to do with the Hyde Park Asylum; because we see that you are down upon the Estimates under the head of that institution? I am not connected with the Hyde Park institution alone, but have to do with all the Asylums. My name is on the Hyde Park abstract.
1680. What salary do you get? £200 a year.
1681. How long have you occupied this position? Since October, 1870.
1682. What are your duties? My duties are various. This office of mine has been created at the time when Mr. King was made Inspector of Public Charities. The first officer under that arrangement was a Mr. Grant, who had to do all that which Mr. King now does—had all his powers, with the exception of signing the cheques, when Mr. King was absent. It is supposed that when he is away on his duty as Inspector the first clerk has to take his duties, receive the orders from the Board direct, take his place there, and do all that Mr. King does when he is in town, with the exception of signing cheques. Besides that, I have also my own duties—to do everything connected with the accounts, to keep the books, and everything of that kind.
1683. Do you keep the books then yourself? Yes, I do.

- A. G. Gyulay, Esq.
18 Sept., 1873.
1684. Does Mr. King keep any books himself in addition to those which you keep? I suppose that, being the head, he takes cognizance of my books, and that he looks into them, but the actual working of the books is mine.
1685. Have you ever had to attend the meetings of the Board yourself? Yes, very often.
1686. How often does the Board meet? Twice a week—on Tuesdays and Fridays.
1687. What time does the Board sit? They meet at 10 o'clock; that is the usual hour—10 o'clock in the morning.
1688. What work is transacted at the Board? Everything that comes before us, as their officers, is brought afterwards before the Board for sanction. For instance, if accounts have to be passed the first time they are sent to me, and I have to check them according to the rations, or whatever it is, returned as having been supplied. I have to see whether the orders have been exceeded or not; and then if there are contractors I have to see that they have supplied all that I have ordered from them, because the orders are given by me at the instance of the Board, respectively their secretary; and then, when I have checked all, I send them to Mr. King, and he lays them before the Board. I have to check the accounts, and Mr. King gives his certificate, and the Board then pass them; and if there are some cases, for instance, from the country—applications for admission which do not seem to be admissible—then they are laid before the Board, and the Board consider the cases, and if they think proper they admit the applicants.
1689. Have you ever had occasion to visit any of these institutions? Yes, Parramatta and Liverpool both, when Mr. King was sick and at other times. He was ill for about two months, and, of course, during that time I had to do the duties that otherwise devolved upon him. The last time I have been twice. Once a month he has to visit each Asylum.
1690. How often have you been to them? I have been several times; but this last time, during Mr. King's illness, I have been twice.
1691. When you have visited Parramatta have you always seen the matron there? No, she has not been present at Parramatta.
1692. Did you ever see her there? At her house.
1693. But in the institution? No, I have never seen her there. I beg to correct myself: once I have seen her when I was there with Mr. Rolleston, about a year and a half ago. There was then a question about cooking the soup or something, and we went into the kitchen, and the matron came with us, and I think she came into the wash-house too.
1694. Were you satisfied with what you saw of the mode in which the institution was carried on? I was not—I cannot say that I was—I could not be. If the master there were my own brother I could not say otherwise, or in favour of the Asylum, as it is there conducted. Perhaps the bad state of the house may have something to do with it; the place is unsuitable, and may look disadvantageously on that account; but otherwise I do not think it is properly managed. Having been a military man myself, and used to rules and regulations, I have thought the place looked slovenly, and not as it should have been—quite different from the other two. I believe that Mr. Dennis does what he can, but some people have not the knack as others have.
1695. Mr. Metcalfe.] Your duties consist of making up the abstracts of accounts for the month, and checking the contractors' accounts—making up the monthly pay sheets? Yes.
1696. That is all? And more.
1697. What other clerical duty have you to perform? Writing letters. Sometimes I write in my own name, pro secretary, and sometimes I send them in to Mr. King for his signature. And besides, there are blank cover books that we pass to the Colonial Secretary's and other departments.
1698. I observe that you have a junior clerk in the office? Yes.
1699. Has he anything to do? He has, and he has much improved since he has been there.
1700. Can he find anything to do? Yes, there is a good deal to do.
1701. What does he do? The nature of his duties is to keep the Register and Report books, and make out different things—vouchers, and so on—duplicates.
1702. You have a duplicate I suppose that you send to the Government and one that you keep? Yes.
1703. That is all the clerical work that has to be done, except writing letters? Yes.
1704. Does that occupy all your time? Fully. I have been used to very hard work. I have done in my life as much as any man in this place. My time is not only fully occupied but over-occupied. I was sometimes there to 6 and 8 o'clock at night, else I could not keep it up.
1705. How long has that gentleman been in the office? Not very long; the salary is so scanty that few will come and stay.
1706. He is a son of Mr. Dennis, is he not? He is, and I do not think that is desirable; I would not place my son there—I do not think it is right or correct.
1707. President.] What you object to is a son being in the same office with which his father has dealings? Yes, a relative being in the same office.
1708. And especially in the office which has to supervise the father's work? Yes.
1709. Mr. Metcalfe.] You said something about this clerk's pay being small? Yes.
1710. It is the same as a junior clerk in a bank would get? Yes, this young man may not be more worth than such a clerk as you mention; but in a bank a clerk would have a prospect of promotion, while here there is very little chance of it.
1711. President.] You say that you are at the office sometimes until 8 o'clock at night? I have often been, but not lately. I keep up to my work.
1712. Is there so much work as to keep Mr. King employed and two clerks in the office? I have to do it—I must have it done; but for the last five or six months I have been able to leave the office about 4 o'clock, but before I was very hard up, and the work had to be done—I could not leave it to accumulate.
1713. How is Mr. King's time employed? Well, he comes to the office, and I think that he is a pains-taking officer.
1714. Does he see all the people who are admitted into the Asylums? If he is there he sees them, and if he is not then I see them. Sometimes they come late when he is not there, and when I happen to be later in the office. Unfortunately these applications from the Police Courts generally come about that time.
1715. Then you see these people yourself sometimes? Yes.
1716. Do you think that many attempts are made to impose on the charity of these institutions? I think so;

so; not that I do not think the applicants are people who would be unsuitable inmates for the Asylums, A. G. Gyulay, Esq. for in most cases their general appearance of debility and infirmity would make them subjects for the Asylums; but some of them do not like to go into the Asylums. I have seen cases of that kind. For instance, a short time ago a man was brought down from a country gaol where he had been confined for 18 Sept., 1873. vagrancy or for protection, and the constable wanted to impress upon me that the man should be kept in Liverpool. I said that I could not do anything more than give him an order and a ticket for the railway. The constable said he could not leave the man in that way, that some one must be sent with him. I said, "You leave him here or not"; and he said, "But he will go away." I said, "This is not a prison"; thereupon, the man took the two orders, tore them up, and walked away.

1717. Mr. Metcalfe.] That man did not deserve charity? No. They are constantly in and out. They want to go to Parramatta, where the discipline is not so strict. They prefer rambling there to ease and comfort, and if they are sent to Liverpool, they often will not accept the order.

1718. Do you not think that the men in these Asylums could be taught some trade? No, they are too old.

1719. Why too old? They are too old; there are very few who can do anything—they are past work.

1720. President.] Do you not know anything of an offer that was made by the Paper Company at Liverpool to employ the labour of these inmates? Yes, I was very much interested in that; I hoped that it would come to something. I thought that it might be easily done, and Mr. King, I believe, was also in its favour; but I know that Dr. Strong was not. We wrote to him about it, and he said that it was undesirable, and he gave some reasons—I do not know what they were. I encouraged the gentleman who came to the office—the Manager of the Paper Company.

1721. It seemed to you to be a feasible thing? Yes—such a kind of thing could be easily done—it was only pasting papers together.

1722. Mr. Gould.] How long is it since the offer was made? Five or six months ago.

1723. President.] Since the Paper Company was re-established? Yes, I think so. Just as it was being established, Mr. King brought the matter before the Board, but Dr. Strong objected to it, for what reasons I do not now recollect.

1724. Did it ever strike you that there was any way in which the labour of these people could be utilized more extensively than it is at present? It could be utilized only in the way of the service of the place, washing things, scrubbing floors, cooking, digging in the garden, and so on.

1725. Their labour is utilized in that way now? If we can get them to do that, I think it is almost all that they can do. Really, they are past work; they are liable to all kinds of fits and sicknesses, and some of their rheumatic pains recur.

1726. Do you think that it is desirable this Board should be composed of officials who have other important duties to perform? I do not know whether that is quite a fair question to put to me, as I am one of the officers of the Board; but I must say this much, that I am very much biassed in this respect—I must say that it would be very difficult to get me to be secretary to any Board in the world, unless I knew the members thoroughly. I have had enough of Boards. With respect to the Government Boards, I do not think that they will work. There is no pay attached to it—no interest—and the Board is composed of Government officers who have in other ways their own share of work.

1727. Without having this extra work put on them? Of course.

1728. Is there any further information you wish to give, or suggestion you have to make, arising out of your acquaintance with these Asylums? I think that a great saving might be made in the expenses. It could not be done with regard to the actual maintenance of the paupers, their feeding, clothing, and so on, because that will in all cases have to be provided for; but in regard to the administration I think that a great saving could be made, and that it could be made more effective.

1729. In what way do you think that a saving could be effected? For instance—suppose that the Hyde Park Asylum, being in the middle of the town, were used for some other purpose. There is the Secretary for Lands, and the Secretary for Works, they pay high rents for houses that they occupy, and these departments might be placed in the building at Hyde Park. It would be central, and save that expense to the Government. I would remove the old women from Hyde Park to Parramatta, and send the men from Parramatta to Liverpool. The building at Liverpool could be extended; it will hold about 800 now when the new wing is finished; and if the men were drafted away from Parramatta, the women could be taken from Hyde Park to Parramatta, which would be a place amply sufficient for them. Liverpool would then be the only place to which men could go, and there would be no more jealousy and picking where they were to go. There would be only one place for them to go to; and they would be under better surveillance, and it would be a better place for them altogether. Then, if this could be done, I believe—of course it is not for me to say that the Board should be abolished—that if the present secretary were attached to the Colonial Secretary's department, the office here could be done away with altogether—they would have no messenger, no clerks.

1730. That plan then would lead to the abolition of your own office? Yes, it contemplates a saving altogether. I believe that there could be a saving of half of the administrative expenses, or almost half, and I am positive that it would work easily, because Mr. King would be on the head staff. He would be in immediate contact with the Colonial Secretary, and for the service in his hand he would be the officer of that department—all the admissions would be under his hand; and there would be no delay, and no more jealousy as to why men were sent to one place more than another. Everything would come from the head. That is the great difficulty now. There are some people who come and wish to put their position in society in the scale, and of course it is difficult to refuse. People who are able to work are sometimes admitted, but they go out after a time, because they do not like to appear to be paupers, and so it works itself out to some extent. I believe that the men should be under one surveillance and superintendence in one building and one place; and the women should be also. I do not think that there is a better place for the women than Parramatta; and the rent of offices here should be saved to the Government.

1731. President.] A suggestion has been made to us that there should be an office taken in some central position in the town, where a Board should meet who should have the general supervision of all these Public Charities, including Orphan and Industrial Schools, as well as Asylums—a Board to which reference could be made, for apprentices, and so on; what do you think of that? That is an enlarged view, of course—I only spoke as far as our Asylums were concerned. I think it would be more proper to have such an establishment.

It

A. G. Gyulay, Esq.,
18 Sept., 1873. It would be very beneficial—it could be worked beautifully. It could be all brought under one head, and of course the superintendence would be much better and easier, and the authority would be more accessible, being all under one establishment.
1732. Is there any other observation you would like to make on these matters? I cannot say that I have any more information to give.

John Hurley, Esq., M.L.A., called in and examined :—

J. Hurley, Esq., M.L.A.,
19 Sept., 1873. 1733. President.] I believe that you are one of the proprietors of the Paper Company at Liverpool? Yes.
1734. This Commission has been appointed to inquire into the Public Charities of the Colony, and amongst other things has been considering whether the labour of the inmates of these Asylums could be utilized, so that the institutions might be made more self-supporting. I believe that some application was made by the Paper Company to the Board managing the Asylums, that these inmates should be employed in making paper bags in some way connected with their establishment? That is some time ago. We instructed the Manager to wait upon the matron of the Asylum and to see if we could make any arrangement by which the old men might be allowed to make paper bags. The matron, I believe, promised to see Mr. King about it, which she did, and I believe that he thought the matter over and returned a verbal answer to say that they could not consider the proposition, as it would interfere with the Asylum or the Government business of the Asylum.
1735. Was your proposition that the old men should go down to the Paper Company's premises,—which, I believe, are not far off,—or were the materials to be sent up to the Asylum? We preferred to send the paper up to the Asylum ready cut—everything requisite—paste and so on; weigh the paper out to them and check it as received back again; and that we would pay them so much a cwt.; at all events, it would pay them very well.
1736. Mr. Metcalfe.] What would it amount to? We have girls there who earn from 6s. to 12s. or 18s. a week. It is very light work. For instance, a girl eight years of age can do the work. We have them from eight years of age up to women.
1737. President.] Would the Paper Company be open to treat with the authorities governing the Asylum for this purpose still? Oh yes.
1738. You are still anxious to obtain the labour? Yes. We cannot get sufficient labour at anything like a fair price. Labour is very dear.
1739. Mr. Metcalfe.] Is there not a great deal of other labour which they might do? Yes, there is. We have several old men there now, who have left the Asylum, and old women sorting rags, for instance, for the different qualities of paper. We sort the rags and separate them, in order to make the different papers. We have a great number engaged at that; and we could engage a great many more, provided we could get them at a fair wage.
1740. That is work which old people could do? Yes. In making paper bags they are always sitting down. There is nothing to do but sort the bags out. The paper is all cut to the size, and they are sorted out, and the old men would merely have to paste them, gather them up, and put them on one side. It is just play—it is in no way laborious.
1741. Mr. Goold.] I suppose that they could learn to do it in a day? Of course. We have some girls who are very quick; those who earn 12s. and 15s. a week are very smart, and we have boys to pick the bags up and weigh them, and they are credited with the weight.
1742. President.] How many hours a day do they work to earn that amount? Nine hours a day.
1743. Could you give them constant employment at this? Yes; of course we could go on making the bags even if we had 20 tons on hand. We have a great demand for them at the present time. There is no doubt that we could enter into a contract to give the old men a great number of tons.
1744. They are paid for by the ton? By the cwt., of course; we have not had any large orders out like that, although we make a great number of tons.
1745. There is no counting involved? No; it is calculated by weight.
1746. All the authorities would have to see to would be that the same weight went out that came in? Yes.
1747. Mr. Metcalfe.] Then there would be the paste? Yes. We had six tons of flour in lately to make paste, and that will give you an idea of the work.
1748. How long has that lasted you? About seven months. We have some of that by us yet. That will make a great quantity of bags.
1749. Are you getting that trade back from Melbourne? No, for there they have a protective tariff giving them 12s. per cwt. on paper bags. This shuts us out of the market. They have no works equal to ours in Melbourne. We have several feeble old men at work now, but we could engage a great many more. We could take a great many under our management at the works, or we could send into the Asylum a very large quantity of paper. It is the only thing we have a return upon; we could give a very large quantity of paper.
1750. Mr. Couper.] The paper bags pay better than anything else? Yes, that is the only thing that pays at present, but we intend to go into white paper. There are plenty of men in that Asylum able to perform this work equally as well as some we have employed on the mills at the present time.
1751. President.] How many could you employ down at the establishment itself? I cannot say the number, but I will ascertain; I think about twenty.
1752. Mr. Couper.] Could you not in any way take these men out of the institution, and employ them as your own servants? We should not like to do that; a great many of these men who would work inside the Asylum would not work outside. You could not depend on them. A great many of them would like to go to the public-house, and if we depended upon them we should be disappointed. I know that when I was living in Liverpool, very often when they were turned adrift they were generally brought up at the Police Court on a charge of drunkenness; so to take these men into our own charge would put us back very much.
1753. You say that sending them down to your establishment would upset the discipline of the place? We do not wish that. We will send the bags up ready cut, or have the cutter put into the place, and they

- they can get the materials and make the bags there. There is no waste. We would give them paper of the proper size, and there is not a scrap of waste.
1754. They would require a shed where they would be able to go out of the rain for this? Yes. They have a new ground there; if a shed were put all round it they might make the bags there, and it would be a nice pastime for them.
1755. You would send the material up in the morning, and take the bags back in the evening? Yes; or, if the matter was entered into it would pay to put up a small store there, and have them bring their bags in, and have them weighed and credited to the different makers.
1756. Mr. Goold.] Would you hold the authorities of the Asylum responsible for the material that you sent up? As they would gain the benefit, I should think so. They would benefit by it.
1757. Then your proposition would be to make a contract with the authorities, and the authorities could call upon these men to labour for their maintenance and support? I understand that is the way in which these institutions are governed now. Certain men are chosen for certain work, and have allowances made to them; so that this would be equal to that. You know that one responsible man in that shed could take charge of the whole affair, and I am sure you will find one responsible man out of the large number of men in the Asylum. There are some good men there. If you desire, I would give you a list of what we would pay.
1758. President.] We should be much obliged to you if you will? What we could pay per cwt. or per ton.*
1759. And what you could supply in the course of the year, so that we can form some idea of what the institution could earn, because it is a matter of great importance? You must not have the idea that there is any responsibility on the part of the Government in taking this; I do not see any.

MONDAY, 22 SEPTEMBER, 1873.

Members Present:—

WILLIAM CHARLES WINDEYER, Esq., PRESIDENT.

SAMUEL GOOLD, Esq.

MICHAEL METCALFE, Esq.

CHARLES COWPER, JUN., Esq.

Robert Champley Rutter, Esq., M.D., medical officer, Parramatta Benevolent Asylum, called in and examined:—

1760. President.] I believe that you are visiting surgeon of the Parramatta Asylum for the Infirm and Destitute? I am.
1761. How long have you been so? For about six months.
1762. Is there a salary attaching to the office? Yes.
1763. How much? The salary for attending this institution, in conjunction with the Orphan Schools, is £150 a year.
1764. I suppose that you succeeded Dr. Pringle there? I did.
1765. And you have been visiting all these institutions for the last six months? Yes.
1766. Are you satisfied with the present sanatory state of the Roman Catholic Orphan School? I am. There are no diseases in it.
1767. When we were there, there was a very foul stench in the infirmary, said to arise from a connection with one of the sewers there? That has several times been attempted to be remedied, and it is sometimes remedied for a few days, but by some means or other it gets out of repair and becomes just as bad as ever. They cannot tell the reason why. Since you have been there it has been remedied, and it is better now, but it will soon come again. Still, it has had no effect on the health of the children; it is isolated away from them.
1768. Mr. Metcalfe.] Yet the smell was very bad in the small upper bedrooms of the infirmary? No, it was only smelt in the washing-rooms. You may go there several times and not smell it at all. It is only when the wind is in a certain direction. It has been reported to the Colonial Architect, but I think that it will take a great deal to remedy it; it will have to be remedied de novo.
1769. President.] You mean that they would have to seek for another outlet for the drainage? Yes, for the whole of it.
1770. Surely there is not more difficulty in connecting those premises with a main sewer than there is in connecting any of the houses in Sydney with a sewer? I should say not, but they appear to make it so; it has been ever so many times attempted to be remedied, and every attempt has failed. They have attempted it, and it has been better for a short time, and then the smell has come back again; and it only lasts for a few hours and then it is gone again.
1771. Is there anything else about this institution to which you desire to direct attention? There is a nasty waterhole near the buildings that ought to be filled up. Many years ago it was a watercourse, but both ends of it have been stopped up, leaving a hole in the middle, and that hole ought to be filled up.
1772. You think its effects are unwholesome with regard to the school? Yes, I think so; but still there is no disease there.
1773. How do you find the sanatory condition of the Protestant Orphan School? There is no disease there. I suppose there is such an immunity from disease there as is not to be found in any other part of the world. There have been 200 and 300 children there, from fourteen months old up to five years of age, for the last three years, and within that time there have been only three deaths—and those deaths were not attributable to any disease. One came to the school with a fractured spine from St. Vincent's Hospital.†
1774. I suppose that, as a mere site, the position of the Protestant Orphan School is superior to that of the Roman Catholic Orphan School? Yes, it is.
1775. There are greater facilities for drainage, and so on? Yes.

R. C. Rutter,
Esq., M.D.

22 Sept., 1873.

1776.

* NOTE (on revision):—The price would be 3s. per cwt., and number of tons about five.

† NOTE (on revision):—This remark applies to the two schools conjointly, with a floating number of about six hundred (600), many of them admitted at one year of age and discharged at twelve, thus tiding over all those dangerous diseases termed infantile.

- R. C. Rutter, Esq., M.D. 1776. Then in point of fact it is a situation which you think, in point of healthiness, may be made use of to a greater extent if there were proper accommodation there? Yes, decidedly so. I think that it is a most eligible situation—one of the best that could be got.
- 22 Sept., 1873. 1777. If the Government thought it desirable to establish a large unsectarian school there for children of all denominations, you think that in point of healthiness it is well situated? Yes, and there is plenty of ground.
1778. Is there any observation that you yourself wish to make with reference to this school? None but what you are aware of; in fact, the state of health of the children there indicates that the school is in the proper place; there are no deaths, no diseases, no zymotic diseases of any kind.
1779. With regard to the Asylum for the Infirm and Destitute, what do you say as to its sanatory condition? The sanatory condition is remarkably good, but of course the site is not eligible nor are the buildings themselves of a suitable description. The place never was constructed for anything but a store. It is not suitable for an Asylum. The rooms are low, but still they are well ventilated.
1780. Do you know anything as to the water supply there? There are several wells there, but they obtained at one time—and do now occasionally obtain (but not recently I think)—water from the river with water-carts.
1781. From above the dam? Yes, from the dam itself in fact.
1782. Is the water supply there sufficient, do you think? The water supply is sufficient by what they obtain occasionally from the dam.
1783. I mean the water supply on the place—the water from the tanks—and the means of storing water from the roof? Yes, it has been sufficient since I have been there.
1784. Are you aware that there have been complaints made about the water? No, there have been no complaints made to me. I made a complaint about some pigeons on the top of the place. There were some pigeons kept; and the whole of one part of the building was new shingled, and of course the water became discoloured. But still I know that Mr. Dennis who resides near used the water himself, and indeed he wanted to persuade me that it was all the better for the discolouration.
1785. To whom do the pigeons belong? To Mr. Dennis, I believe. I believe that in the first instance they came there of themselves. They came into the top of the building and built themselves nests, and there was an objection to shooting them, as some persons threatened to fine Mr. Dennis for letting a gun off. There are not so many now; he has destroyed them by some means.
1786. Is there anything about the premises or the grounds that you wish to bring under our observation? The ground itself is not of sufficient size, but on all occasions when the men apply to me they get a pass. They consider it a great privilege to be allowed to go out, and we want to get them out into those paddocks. They are allowed out, and are allowed to go to the water and to bathe there.
1787. How is it that they have to apply to you for a pass,—on medical grounds? No, not on medical grounds, but because that was the practice before my time. When I give them a pass they are allowed to go out; but there are some whom you cannot trust out, because they get drunk, and those are not allowed out.
1788. Mr. Metcalfe.] There was a very disagreeable smell from the urinals when we were there; have you observed that—they were in a very bad state? That is the fault of the men themselves. They are washed out every day.
1789. So they told us at the time? That smell also is only occasional; it is not always so.
1790. President.] It has occurred to us—I do not know whether you have noticed it—that the mode in which the meals were served to the inmates there was unsatisfactory and rude? That is what I have tried to alter since I have been there. They were served with bread, for instance, in the morning, and what they cannot eat they put into a wallet and keep it until the next day, when they get a fresh supply. If there is more than they can consume they throw it out. I suggested that the men should be put into squads or messes, and that they should be supplied at certain hours. One man can eat more than another, and at present there must be a good deal of waste. I tried to find out what became of it, but I could not.
1791. To whom did you suggest this? To Mr. Dennis and to the Board, but they did not see it.
1792. Mr. Metcalfe.] That is a common plan in merchant ships—they have messes of five or ten? Yes.
1793. We observed when we were there, that the men sometimes had eaten all their bread up before dinner? Yes. That convict element has not burned out yet, and there is some dissatisfaction among them, and they inoculate the others. When you were there the last time you made some remark about the meagreness of the food, and we have had some of them ask for more, although I am quite certain that they cannot consume it. A Chinaman was found on one occasion passing out of the gate, taking it away from the institution.
1794. President.] We made some observations as to the lightness of the bread, but we did not say anything more—we said nothing as to the ration being insufficient, but that the amount of bread given as the supposed ration was not up to the proper weight? But “meagre” was the word used; that was the particular word; and they construed it in that way; and they have made complaints of not having sufficient bread. A little Irishman came to me the other day—one who is always finding fault, and he said his bread was short. There were some scales to weigh it in, and when weighed the ration was found to be half an ounce short. (This was at 11 o'clock in the day.) I said, “This bread is half an ounce short—what did you have for breakfast?” “Sure,” he said, “some bread I had from the day before.” “So,” I said, “you could not eat the bread you had the day before; you go away; you have got bread enough, I am quite sure.” The reason why you found the bread of short weight was that the baker made the loaves short weight, but he sent up additional bread to make up the quantity; and that made the master's position difficult, but wherever a loaf is short weight the eye can detect it immediately, and it is made up.
1795. But elsewhere, at other institutions, the bread is weighed? Yes, so it is here.
1796. It is weighed in batches? Yes, they do; but where 100 loaves require to be divided into 200 rations, you see it takes a good deal of trouble to cut all those loaves properly, especially if they are not of the proper weight.
1797. Mr. Metcalfe.] But a baker is punishable for a loaf that is found to be short of weight? Yes, so it should be; but I think it has been the practice. I do not know the man who is the contractor, but I think that no better bread was eaten in the world than the men have there.
1798. President.] I think that the meagreness which we observed in the food was more particularly observable in the quality of the meat, and the way in which the goodness seemed to be extracted from it before the men received it? But it is in the soup. 1799.

1799. Mr. Metcalfe.] And it was cut in pieces and put into dirty tins—it looked like feeding pigs almost? It does nearly. The tins are dirty, and all the washing in the world will not make them look nice. With long use the surface is worn off, and thus though clean, they look brown and rusty. The meat is boiled—it is boiled for two hours, and the bones are then put by for the stock for the next day's soup. They have amply sufficient, and I am certain that if they were put into messes they could not eat as much as they have there.

R. C. Rutter,
Esq., M.D.

22 Sept., 1873.

1800. They would be more comfortable? Yes. I think that they should have roast meat sometimes. Always eating boiled food, it must become nauseating to them.

1801. President.] You think on medical grounds that they should have a change? Yes, but not on economical principles, because I believe that it would be attended with more waste.

1802. Mr. Goold.] Have they any cooking apparatus for roasting meat? I believe that they have some that would cook for about a quarter of the people there; some of them might have mutton, which is cheaper than beef, sometimes.

1803. Mr. Metcalfe.] Do they never have mutton? Sometimes, the contractor there sends a little more than he is required to do by the terms of his contract; he is not very particular.

1804. President.] Have you ever held a similar office with regard to other public institutions? No, but I served my articles in a hospital, though I never attended as a medical officer. I never would attend any Societies or anything of the kind.

1805. How many chronic and incurable cases have you in the Asylum which have been discharged from the Infirmary? I suppose there are perhaps forty blind people there, and there are I should say about thirty other incurable cases.

1806. Mr. Metcalfe.] Bed-ridden people? No, not bed-ridden. Some are blind.

1807. President.] Do you think that the charity of the public is abused there by persons getting admission there who should not be received into such a place? Occasionally people are admitted who should not be there, but it is very difficult to ascertain that. Some who are young men come in there, and they are there for a short time and then they go away again.

1808. Do you mean that they are discharged, or that they leave of their own accord? They are discharged, or they discharge themselves frequently. Perhaps they misbehave themselves and are not allowed to come back again—but it is difficult to manage them. They go into this institution and commit themselves and are turned out; and they go into the town and get drunk and are taken to the police office, and then they are sent to the hospital, and I have had them in the hospital. Then they are to be sent to Sydney. I have to give them money out of my own pocket in order to send them to Sydney; and then they are sent back again here from Sydney.

1809. Where do you send them down to? To the Board here, and then they come back again to the Asylum.

1810. There was a man there who said that if he could get a wooden leg he would be able to go out and earn his own living; is he there still? I think not; I think he is out.

1811. Did he get a wooden leg? I think so. There is a great difficulty in getting anything of that kind. The Board act upon strict economy. I think they are parsimonious.

1812. Is it economy to refuse a man a leg that may be purchased for £7, and keep the man in the Asylum at an annual cost of £14? No, I do not think so; but I had to amputate a leg off a man in the Parramatta Hospital, and when I wanted a wooden leg for the man they said it would cost £14. I said 14s. would be quite enough. I did not see what a brickmaker wanted with a wooden leg with springs in it. But they got the man a wooden leg, and he has been in the watchhouse several times since. It was preposterous nonsense getting him such an expensive leg; they might as well have got him a gold watch at the same time.

1813. Have you found any delay in communicating with the Board? I hardly ever communicate with the Board at all—I have enough to do as it is, because my coachman would not go backwards and forwards for the pay which I receive, and so I do not enter into communication with the Board—I leave that to Mr. Dennis.

1814. From what you see of this system of management, do you think that this Board affords an effective means of administering these Asylums? I hardly think so; I think that there should be some local inspector to see that things are properly conducted—some competent person who would occasionally visit the institution and have it more under his supervision.

1815. Mr. Metcalfe.] I suppose that the Parramatta people feel no interest in the Asylum, as they do not subscribe to it? No, they pay nothing; they feel no interest in it at all, except when one of the men is taken up drunk, and then they make a disturbance about it. It is not often that they do that. The characters of these old men are known, and they are prevented from going out.

1816. Mr. Cowper.] I do not suppose that the people there would be at all willing to subscribe? No, they subscribe very little to the hospital. All that they subscribe, in fact, hardly keeps the patients in the hospital in food. An amount equivalent to what is subscribed is obtained from the Government, and consequently only during the last four years £512 17s. has been received from that source, while the expenses have amounted to £1,375 1s. 8d., thus diminishing the bequest fund £349 6s. 8d., and for which no equivalent is given.

1817. President.] Have you any official position connected with the hospital? Nothing further than that I was sole medical attendant there for some time, and I am now one of the surgeons of the place. Dr. Brown and I are the surgeons.

1818. The office is honorary? Yes.

1819. Mr. Metcalfe.] The hospital appears to be very little used? Sometimes there is a great number of cases in it, and at other times there are very few.

1820. When we were there there were four cases, and we understood that was about the usual number? Sometimes we have as many as twenty and more than that; and we have a great number of accidents. They come to us from the neighbouring districts, whence we have no right to receive them, and they get admissions and we are forced to receive them.

1821. In fact the hospital at Parramatta is not necessary? It is very little expense to the town—about £100 or so.

1822. But then it is an expense to the Government? Yes, but the police bring in a great number of men to be treated there—a great many accidents or injuries.

1823. President.] Do you think that people make use of that institution who might be fairly expected to

R. C. Rutter, find their own medical relief? Sometimes they do; but they are admitted on the recommendation of a subscriber.

Esq., M.D.
22 Sept., 1873.

1824. Yes, but still if people are in a position to pay for their own medical attendance, that is no reason why they should come down upon the public at all? Yes, but it is difficult to find out whether they have means or not; some have and you cannot find it out. No doubt the whole of these institutions are abused.

1825. Mr. Cowper.] Do you not think that it is objectionable, having chronic and incurable cases in an institution which is supposed to be a Benevolent Asylum for old people—to make a hospital of it? It is objectionable of course, but it cannot be avoided. When a man arrives at a certain age, he is a chronic disease himself; he is always subject to some disease, and it is difficult to make a line of demarcation between disease and old age. There is a decay you know: it is difficult to draw a line between disease and the decay of old age.

1826. Are some of the cases which you have in the Asylum, cases which will never be out of the hospital? Yes. Those cases are objectionable, but at the same time I do not know what you are to do with them.

1827. Would it not be better to have a hospital for chronic cases set apart for them? Yes, it would be entirely. But a man who is well to-day may get catarrh to-morrow, and that may produce irremediable disease of the lungs.

1828. Then he would be removed to the hospital? But there is not a hospital in the Colony for chronic cases.

1829. But it would make it necessary to have one? It would be necessary; and it would be very expensive too.

1830. Why would it be more expensive than having a hospital in the Asylum at Liverpool and another hospital in the Asylum at Parramatta, while the eligible inmates of those places were healthy and able to get about? That would do in Liverpool, but there the men have no means of getting about—they are surrounded by walls.

1831. Do you not think that all these hospital cases should be sent off to an establishment like Liverpool, to be kept in separate buildings? It would be better, but still I do not think that Liverpool is so healthy an institution as ours.

1832. Not so healthy as Parramatta? No, not by any means.

1833. President.] What are the superior advantages of Parramatta? The men get out into the fields at the back. They are allowed to into the fields, and they can go into those back paddocks of Mr. Byrnes' and Mr. Icely; and in Liverpool they are kept within the walls.

1834. Mr. Cowper.] Then the fault is not in the institution? No; they have no land; it is not the fault of the institution; there is no place for the men to go to but into the town.

1835. But surely the fields there are more extensive than they are at Parramatta? No; the institution is surrounded by the town.

1836. They could go out down the railway line? Yes, but still there is nothing there but a bush.

1837. But they could go down the road? Yes—to the Sydney Road, through the back of Mr. Icely's paddock—I was told that; and one of the men went to Mr. Icely's and solicited charity. That would be the case there. There would be no control over the men.

1838. But you have no control over the men when they are in Mr. Icely's paddock, have you? Mr. Icely's paddock is nearly surrounded with water, and they can only get out of it by passing near the house.

1839. I could get into the town in hundreds of ways without being seen—just pop round the buildings and you are in the town at once? Yes; but if you were lame and crippled and blind you could not do it.

1840. Mr. Metcalfe.] There is an old man there who is represented to be over 100 years old? Yes.

1841. President.] Do you know anything of his history—are you satisfied that he is so old? Most of these cases are somewhat apocryphal—they are usually not so old as they make out; but this old man states that he is this age, and he gives some account of things that occurred in Ireland when he was young. Whether he is so old as is said I do not know. There was a man, named Hollyoak—that died about three months ago—that was assigned to Major Druitt, and he was an old man when he came out into the Colony. I was attending Major Druitt's family then.

1842. How long is that ago? Forty-five years; and this man was an old man then—he was a Yorkshire man, and he lived with Deane on the road, and after Deane died he lived with Pike, Deane's son-in-law, within the last twelve months.

1843. Do you think that he is as old as he represents himself to be? I think so; but I do not think that one in ten of these old men are. There was a woman died at Liverpool the other day of the name of Thorne—she was 106. She said that she came here with the 102nd Regiment, and she had a family with her then.

1844. Do you think it is desirable to keep up the hospital at Parramatta? I do not think that the people there could do very well without it, for if an accident was to occur where would you put it?

1845. Mr. Metcalfe.] What do they do at Liverpool? Put them into the institution I suppose.

1846. Could they not be sent down by train to Sydney? That would sometimes kill them. I had a case of a man who sold a farm up at Pitt Town, and he got on the spree, and afterwards he was driving a waggon and passed the toll-bar, and fell down, and the wheel passed over his shoulder. We had to remove the shoulder from the joint while the man was there drunk—he would have bled to death otherwise. What would have become of that man had he been brought to Sydney?—he would have died. Within the last six months we have not had so many accidents; but sometimes we have a great many of them.

1847. President.] Do you know how the allowance of stimulants to inmates of the Parramatta Asylum compares with the allowance to inmates of other institutions? I do not know. I do not know how the stimulants are given in other institutions; but in the Parramatta Asylum the only stimulants allowed are those given to the warders. They have each some stimulant allowed them—I think it is a gill a day; but there are only about fourteen gills a day used in the whole institution.

1848. Have not the Board represented to you that the allowance is larger than is the allowance at Liverpool? The Board have written to me twice; but there are several cases there which require stimulants, and it is cheaper to give them spirits than to give them stimulating medicines, which you would otherwise have to give them.

1849. Is there anything which you yourself wish to add about any of these Asylums? No. I think that Mr. Dennis would be the best person to give you information. He understands these things better than I do, because I go through the wards every day since I have attended the place, but he is there always.

1850. You do not think that the place is over-crowded? No, it is not—it is so well ventilated. I have been called up to visit it at night, and I have never found any bad effluvia in it. With regard to the warders, one has 1s. a day and the others 6d. each, and these men have sometimes very nasty jobs to do—jobs that they are not accustomed to; and of course if you do not give them a little rum or something they would not do them. The man is there from the Infirmary who had an artificial anus—everything passes through his side—and of course he causes a great deal of trouble and has to be washed constantly. There have been cases lately of men with large carbuncles, and I have been surprised at the sympathy with which the warders have attended to them—washing them and keeping them clean, although it was a disgusting job.

R. C. Rutter,
Esq., M.D.
22 Sept., 1873.

1851. Do you think that the arrangement of the patients is as perfect as it might be; some of the inmates complained to us that there were one or two invalids who kept them awake at night—not in the hospital wards but in the ordinary dormitories? Just previous to death, many of these old people become delirious, which of course would prevent their getting their natural rest. They are waited upon by these warders.

1852. But what was complained of was the disturbance of the general wards by these cases? That is not a common occurrence.

1853. Have you heard of any cases of lunacy—some complain of people being there who were lunatics? They could not discriminate between lunacy and delirium from disease. Some of these people would not be admitted into an asylum. Last week I was called upon to examine a man in the gaol—sent there from the police office—and they were going to hand him over to the asylum. He was perfectly imbecile, but he was not a lunatic.

1854. Would not such people be better cared for in an institution devoted to the care of people bereft of their reason? Well, that implies that you want another institution.

1855. Mr. Cowper.] Do you not know that there is an Asylum for Imbeciles at Newcastle? Yes.

1856. Is that not the proper place for such people? Yes, but there is so much delay and trouble in getting them there; you have to go through such a routine. These cases which you allude to, of what they call lunatics, are merely people with delirium previous to death. There was one old man admitted, but he is in the hospital ward; he would sleep all day and walk about all night.

1857. Do you not think that it is very objectionable to have persons who are really ill mixed up with those who are healthy? It certainly is in some measure, but what are you to do? They are inclined to do one thing; they will make complaints in order to get to the lower story, which is worst of them all; they will all try to do that.

1858. I did not hear any complaints from them about this matter, but I saw two or three sick people lying about in the dormitories? Those were people with bad legs, who were allowed to go up-stairs and lie down; they are allowed to go up there as a favour.

1859. But we were told that some of them were there for weeks together? Then that was a case of paralysis or something of that kind—nothing else. Where they are paralyzed of course they cannot go down, and when the hospital wards are full you must do the best you can with them. If they are disagreeable men, and dirty men, you must keep the wards as clean and as empty as you can. Thirty or forty there are paralyzed.

1860. You think that the building is suitable? No, I do not think that the building is very good; but it is a good substitute; it is extremely healthy.

1861. It is well ventilated? I do not think that there is a better ventilated building in the Colony; what with getting the men out into the paddocks, and having those ventilators introduced by Mr. Dennis, the place is as healthy as it can possibly be. I have been there in the night and found no effluvia of any kind, and we have no zymotic disease. We have not had a single case of low fever there, though there have been several cases in the town.

1862. President.] Do you remember a man named Hillier who had something the matter with his eyes; he was turned out the other day? Yes.

1863. Do you think he is able to work? I do think he is; but it is difficult to make him. There are numbers of malingerers there. There was one went out yesterday; he had a new shirt, and last week he had a new shirt, and yesterday Mr. Dennis detected him going out with two suits of clothes on. Of course he would have sold one suit somewhere and got drunk. Another was detected, brought before the Bench, convicted and punished, last month.

Mr. James Dennis, master, Government Asylum, Parramatta, called in and further examined:—

1864. President.] You are the master of the Government Asylum at Parramatta for the Infirm and Destitute? I am.

Mr. J. Dennis.
22 Sept., 1873.

1865. How long have you held that position? Since the 19th March, 1862.

1866. Had you the management of any such institution before? I was in the Lunatic Asylum as clerk for a short period.

1867. Were you in the Public Service before that? No, I only came to Sydney in 1861.

1868. What salary do you get as master of the Parramatta Asylum? £150 a year.

1869. Is Mrs. Dennis an officer of the institution as well as yourself? Yes, she is the matron.

1870. What salary does she get? £50.

1871. How many inmates have you in the Asylum at the present time? There were 265 this morning.

1872. What is the greatest number you have ever had there? About 273.

1873. Was the place then supposed to be full? More than full.

1874. Too crowded you think? Yes. 210 was the original number, but it was increased since we left the premises and got a residence outside, by fifteen.

1875. Does the Government find you quarters elsewhere? Yes, outside.

1876. Does the Government give you an allowance for rent? They pay for the house £50 a year.

1877. You do not sleep on the Asylum premises? No; we did at one time; we are four years in the house we have at present.

1878. Do you think that the Government are at all imposed upon by a class of people getting into the Asylum who have no right to be supported there at the public cost, and who are not entitled to relief of that

- Mr. J. Dennis. that sort? I do not know exactly. Many that come in, but not all of them, are or have been drunkards. They cannot earn their own living outside in consequence. Nine out of ten of them are drunkards, take them on the whole. They are nearly all drunkards—they will acknowledge it themselves. I do not think that it is so generally, but in a few instances they are men who could get their own living outside.
- 22 Sept., 1873. 1879. Are such people ever discharged from the institution? Yes, when the inspector comes round they are discharged or are reported to the Board.
1880. Do you discharge them on your own responsibility or by the authority of the Board? The Board gives me authority to discharge any unruly party.
1881. But have you authority to discharge such persons as are able to work and earn their own living? No, I do not discharge them. When the Visiting Board come up I draw their attention to these men, or I draw the Inspector's attention to them.
1882. You have authority to discharge them for insubordination? Yes, for insubordination.
1883. It is a part of your duty, I believe, to give a discharge ticket stating the reason for a man's discharge? Yes.
1884. Do you always do so? Oh yes. If a man is discharged for drunkenness I put it down.
1885. And if he is discharged for insubordination you state so? Yes.
1886. How do you account for the fact that these men whom you discharged lately came down with discharge tickets on which no reason for their discharge was assigned? Which men?
1887. After we visited the Asylum you discharged a number of inmates? Yes, I discharged a good many, and perhaps if I gave them a bad character on their tickets they tore the tickets up.
1888. But they did not: in fact we saw the discharge tickets of several of these men, and no reason for their discharge was given upon them? Was it a good character?
1889. There was no character whatever upon the tickets? Then I suppose they did not deserve a character, and that they got a blank like a soldier's certificate.
1890. You said just now that you gave these tickets and stated upon them the reasons why the men were discharged; in these cases there were no reasons whatever assigned? If there was any clear case of drunkenness it was done. If I am obliged to force a man out I generally put down the cause.
1891. But is it not your duty to state the cause of the man's discharge upon the discharge ticket? I do not always give a discharge ticket to the unruly, but record their characters in the discharge book, for the information of the Board.
1892. I am speaking of cases in which you do give a discharge ticket; is it not your duty to state on that ticket the cause for which a man is discharged? Yes.
1893. How is it that you did not do so in this case? I do not know.
1894. Did you discharge them because they gave evidence before the Commission? No, certainly not; I would not be so foolish as to do so.
1895. Why did you discharge them? I discharged them because they broke a rule that every letter should go through the proper messenger. That rule was established by Dr. Greenup. There are several men there who gave evidence before the Commission, and I did not discharge them.
1896. This rule is not in writing, is it? No, it is not; but the Board wrote to me that I was under the verbal direction of Dr. Greenup; and Dr. Greenup once came and put a letter on my table that was being sent by one of the men, and he said it would have to be sent in the regular way.
1897. You have been reprimanded by the Government in reference to this matter? Yes, the Under Secretary wrote to me, but I have written to Mr. Parkes stating that it was not the fact that they were discharged for giving evidence. It was for unruly conduct. These men were keeping their wards in a bad state, and I told the head wardsmen that I would discharge every one of them before you came up, if they did not keep their wards in better order; and when you came up and examined these men, I did not know at the time whether you examined them or not. They still kept their wards in a bad state, only just running the mop over the floor.
1898. Will you undertake to say that there were no other men discharged besides the wardsmen? Certainly not, that I recollect; but I told every one of them who got letters—or I told the clerk to tell them—that I would give them stamps, and for him to assist them; that I would give them stamps and envelopes, and for him to forward the letters, so that I would have nothing to do with them. I can solemnly declare that these men were not discharged on account of their giving evidence.
1899. How many men were discharged? Four wardsmen; one named Rawlings. That man got discharged himself at his own request—went out with a few shillings, which he saved in the Asylum, and begged from me some pecuniary assistance which I refused him previous to his last re-admission.
1900. And the other men were discharged for posting their own letters? This man did, and defied me.
1901. But were there not several who were discharged in this way? Only these four, Rawlings and the No. 3 wardsmen—I forget his name now. Hillier and Turner.
1902. Mr. Couper.] Was that the coachman who used to live with Judge Cheeke? Yes. If you mean George Harris,—he was discharged for insubordination and for threatening me.
1903. After we visited the Asylum? Yes, after you were there; a man with a lame leg. He was with Kehl, and drove Kehl the publican's coach for some time. They have defied me before, and there was a regular mutiny, and I wrote to the Board, and the Board said that the man should have been discharged. There was a regular mutiny in the yard, and if I had not the power to discharge them I could not keep up the discipline of the place. I am aware that the clerk has sometimes brought me discharges, and I have signed them in the hurry of work, and perhaps I may have omitted to put down the character; but then I have scarcely any clerical assistance there. The poor clerk I have now is epileptic and falls down before me. I have no assistance.
1904. Is the clerk one of the inmates? Yes, he is one of the inmates. He frightened Mrs. Dennis one day. I was speaking to him about something, and he fell down and hurt his head.
1905. President.] What are Mrs. Dennis's duties in the place? She looks after the clothes—cuts out the flannel waistcoats and shirts and those kind of things, and takes my place when I am absent or ill.
1906. Where is that work done? In the store opposite the office.
1907. Mr. Metcalfe.] Who makes up these things? The tailor belonging to the institution, who has been there during the whole time I have been there.
1908. Is he paid? He is paid 3d. a day. His lower limbs are paralyzed.
1909. Are all the clothes made by him? Yes, by him and two other tailors, who mend the clothes, to whom I give a fig of tobacco a week each.

Mr. J. Dennis.
22 Sept., 1873.

1910. Mr. Cowper.] They do not make all the clothes? The shirts and so on.
1911. President.] How many hours a day is Mrs. Dennis there? I cannot say how many hours—she is backwards and forwards there.
1912. Does she spend any given portion of the day there? She does; any time that is wanted there she goes over—two or three times a day.
1913. Mr. Cowper.] Her duty is simply to go into the store and cut out clothes, and so on? Yes.
1914. President.] Is she there for half an hour a day? Certainly.
1915. Is she there regularly, or has she been away from the place for days together? I do not think that there has been a week that she has not been there two or three times.
1916. Two or three times during the week? Yes; she is always there every day, unless absent from illness, or when she has to go to Sydney. She lost her health in the place.
1917. Are you aware that the washing in the place has been done very unsatisfactorily? It has been very unsatisfactory to me because of the hands we got, but now it is better—we have got better washers.
1918. People have complained to us that sometimes the clothes stink? I do not know how they could after being washed.
1919. Mr. Cowper.] They are not properly rinsed? They cannot stink after being washed. The men are changed; they have a clean shirt every week, and some dirty cases are changed perhaps twice a day—perhaps three times a day. It is a very arduous duty—the washing.
1920. Mr. Metcalfe.] By whom is it done? By men on the establishment,—the head washer and four others; they get 4d. a day for three days in the week.*
1921. President.] Do you deny the truth of this allegation as to the clothes being offensive? No, certainly not—they are not offensive.
1922. You say it is not true? No, it is not.
1923. Do all the men wash themselves every morning? Yes, every morning. I go down and inspect them myself.
1924. By what time is the washing done? Before 12 o'clock; that is my instruction to the care-taker. The lavatory is to be cleaned up by that time, but it has to be left open for the servants of the establishment to wash themselves,—the woodmen, for instance.
1925. Do you think that the washing accommodation is sufficient? Not at all; we have only one bath for the whole.
1926. How many people wash in the same water—in the same bath? Three or four—perhaps four or five. We change it frequently.
1927. Is it not a fact that the lavatory is miserably insufficient? It is. They made a second lavatory below, but it would not answer, because, in going down-stairs, we find that it is dangerous for the men, and that it would make the stairs continually wet and slippery.
1928. If you had a larger lavatory could not the men wash themselves much more quickly? Oh yes; but you see the place is so confined.
1929. How is the place off for water? We have not bought water for some time. We have a tank that holds 40,000 gallons—it is 12 by 12 by 40, and it holds about 40,000 gallons; and we have a deep well, of which water I drink myself—which is 41 feet deep. There is another well 25 feet deep, and the inmates like that water better than the other; but the deep well is very good clear water.
1930. Then you have sufficient water? Yes, in wet weather, but during the summer we have to buy water from outside.
1931. Mr. Metcalfe.] Have you no tanks to catch the water? The water goes into this tank, which holds 40,000 gallons.
1932. President.] How long would that water last you? It would last about three months. I wanted slates to be put on the roof instead of shingling. The water was the colour of beer when the new roof was put on.
1933. The tank is connected with the roof? Yes, all the water comes from that.
1934. There is no garden connected with the place? Yes, we were trying to make one; there is a poor man there—he is the best we have as a gardener—and he is doing his best to make the place into a garden.
1935. Have you hitherto bought vegetables for the place? Yes, we buy the pot-herbs—2s. worth every day—for the soup.
1936. Mr. Goold.] Do you buy the potatoes? Yes, we do buy the potatoes.
1937. President.] Have you only one man employed in this garden? Two; one is making a walk, and he is an epileptic man.
1938. Are there not other men who can work? They are very imbecile and weak.
1939. Are there not some men who have bad eyes who can work there? They are so weakly.
1940. There are men like that Hillier whom you discharged—men with bad eyes? I forget him.
1941. He talks very loud—he is a big strong fellow, with a green shade over his eyes? I recollect the name very well, but I cannot recollect the man; there are so many going in and out that I cannot bring the man to my recollection.
1942. Do you mean to say that there are not more than two men who are able to work in the garden? I spoke to the gardener about them, and he says that if I bring them in he cannot control them. He is not a regular professional gardener.
1943. There is not much control required over people who are digging up a piece of ground? This man is digging up all the holes and putting all the refuse of the earth-closets in for pumpkins. You cannot tell what a difficulty we have in getting men who are able to do anything. It is time enough now for pumpkins.
1944. There are plenty of men working in the garden up at Liverpool? They have stronger men there, but we have a very imbecile weak lot. I cannot even get a head wardsman; the man I have is too feeble. I never had a good head wardsman but one—a Mr. Mc——, who was recommended by Dr. Greenup—a gentleman who had held a high position at Home—he was the best head wardsman I ever had; and ever since his death I have been unable to get a good man. One man, named Salter, I had to disrate twice, and I had no other to take his place. The present man is too enfeebled; he is an intelligent man, but he has swelled legs, and is too feeble and not able to go about as I could wish.

* NOTE (on revision) :—The former gets 4d. per diem, and the latter 4d. for two days in the week.

Mr. J. Dennis. 1945. Has there been any change made in the weight of the bread since we have been there? Yes, we get the bread in Parramatta now. Mr. Freehill has a sub-contractor. The bread is as fine bread as you would wish to have on your own table; the bread is good now.

22 Sept., 1873.

1946. Mr. Cowper.] You did not consider it was so when we were up there? I did not find fault with the quality then, but the quantity. It gave me a great difficulty to portion out each ration when we had loaves that were a few ounces short. It was difficult to give each man his proper weight of bread. Often the bread was short and I had to get bread elsewhere to make up the rations. In fact there is now £11 16s. due to Griffin, for bread that I got on the contractor's account.

1947. President.] Do you weigh the bread every day when it comes? Not now: I used to do so, but I do not weigh it now, because I know by the look of it that we have full weight.

1948. Do you not weigh it as a matter of routine? No; I know if the bread is light when I pick it up in my hands. It is very good bread—they all say that it is splendid.

1949. But in other institutions they weigh it as a matter of course every day? I take the bread into my store, and I take half a dozen of the loaves and weigh them to see that they are all right.

1950. I do not mean to say that they weigh every individual loaf, but they weigh the bread in batches? If I see a loaf that I think is short weight I weigh it, but the scales are small and I cannot weigh more than five or six loaves at a time in them. I take it into my store and weigh it there to see that it is correct—the scales there are more correct than the large scale.

1951. Has there ever been any kerosene taken from the institution to your house? Oh yes; we always have light and wood.

1952. How much kerosene are you allowed a week? There is no allowance; only Dr. Greenup told me that he got light for me. I bought wood when I first went there. Going through the wards at night, I used to feel the want of light, and Dr. Greenup told me that he went to the Board and got me allowed sufficient light and wood—not only candles for the lanterns, but light and wood for myself.

1953. That was when you were living in the institution? Yes.

1954. And now you take the kerosene to your own house? Yes. That is all that is allowed me—light and wood.

1955. Mr. Metcalfe.] And rations of course? No, no rations. When I went there first that place was in a dreadful state; it was unventilated, and I had to write repeatedly about the ventilation; and Mr. Dawson, the late Colonial Architect, said that he did not like to pierce those old walls. However, it was said that I was perfectly right in getting the place ventilated. I wrote about it several times. Dr. Greenup said the windows would let in plenty of air, but the Rev. Robert King said how would the bad air get out.

1956. President.] Do you not think it would be better to have all the men arranged in messes? Yes, we did that. We had messes, and the heads of messes were allowed 1s. a week in kind, but they got so impertinent that I made larger messes, and made the wardsmen carry down the dinners, for which extra work I gave them two figs tobacco and 1 lb. sugar weekly, saving by this arrangement 5s. per week.

1957. Mr. Metcalfe.] Is that carried out now? Yes, we have eight messes now.

1958. But yet the food is carried to each man, is it not, and not served out in messes? Yes, it is carried down by the messman.

1959. But would it not be better to have the meat in joints served up to the messes, and let the men cut it up for themselves? Yes, but you would find that they would not be able to carve the meat; you have no idea of the awkwardness of the men there.

1960. Do you allow them knives and forks? They will not take a fork—only a very few of them.

1961. President.] Are there any means of roasting meat in the place? The last feast the Mayoress gave them was last Tuesday; we got half the meat baked outside at the baker's and half we baked ourselves. When we bake it all ourselves we are obliged to have the oven twice heated.

1962. Then half of the meat gets cold? We keep it as hot as we can, in a place close to the oven. You saw the dining-hall down those stairs. If we were to have everything ready there, and the inmates were all to rush down at once, there would be a great many accidents. Of course it would be more orderly to have everything ready and ring a bell, when the men could all walk in, but here they have to go down those wretched stairs, and we have had several accidents there—we have had men killed there. If we had everything ready on the tables below and then rang a bell, they would rush down all together; but now we allow the feeble ones to go down—those who can—and then the stronger ones afterwards.

1963. Did you ever represent to the Board that the tea is made in the same vessels in which the soup is served? No, never.

1964. You know it is the fact that the vessels used for soup are used for tea a short time afterwards? The tea is never made in the same copper.

1965. It is served in the same vessels that are used for the soup, is it not? We have the tins washed perfectly clean.

1966. You see no objection to it then? If they are perfectly washed and clean, I do not see any objection to it. We attempted at one time to have separate vessels for the tea and the soup, and it accumulated an immensity of these tins. We always wash them with soap and soda; I am sure they are perfectly clean.

1967. Mr. Metcalfe.] They did not look very clean? Tea will always blacken tin; but at the Orphan School I understand that they have tin with ware inside, and they look very nice. I got tin plates, and I prefer them to the wooden platters, because when you cut meat on a wooden platter, it cannot be cleansed very easily afterwards.

1968. You can get tin plates lined with white enamel, you know? That would be a great improvement. The roof of the place was in a very bad state when I first went there; in fact, I had to hold an umbrella up in the wards when it rained.

1969. Yet the doctor says that the place is very healthy? It is very healthy. I had to remove the racks shortly after we first opened the Asylum, and behind the racks—the soldiers' racks—it was one mass of bugs. The way I got rid of them was by using Sir W. Burnett's disinfecting fluid in the whitewash; it got rid of them, and I think it will get rid of hospital malaria too. I got rid of all the bugs by that means.

1970. President.] Was there a man named Jamieson in the place—a man who died? When did he die?

1971. In July last—do you not remember him? No, I do not.
1972. A man who was examined by us, and he died between the time of his being examined and the time of his evidence going to Parramatta for revision? Yes, I remember him; he was a wardsman in No. 2 wing. Mr. J. Dennis.
22 Sept., 1873.
1973. You remember the man? Yes.
1974. Do you remember any inquiry being made about his letter? His letter was returned through the post.
1975. Did you post it? I got it posted by the messenger.
1976. When? Immediately after I received it; I marked "dead" on it, and returned it. I think I marked on it the date when the man died.
1977. The evidence in that letter contained various complaints about the management of the Asylum? I do not know what was in it.
1978. You sent it back then immediately after it came, I suppose? I gave it to the messenger—and I am sure that I marked it "dead."
1979. That letter (letter produced), dated 22nd July, is your letter on this matter? Yes
1980. At the time you wrote that letter, the letter therein referred to had been sent back? Yes, on the 22nd July.
1981. You had sent it back before that? Yes, I should suppose so.
1982. How do you account for the fact that this letter (envelope produced), which contained the evidence, was not, as appears by the post mark, sent back to the post office until the 31st July? That is the clerk's writing—it is not mine.
1983. You sent a letter on the 22nd July saying that the man Jamieson had died on the 26th June, and that his evidence had been returned to the post office, marked "dead," and yet we find that this letter was not returned to the post office until the 31st July—a week after your letter was written? It was on the 26th June that the man died.
1984. I want to know how you account for the fact that whereas you wrote on the 22nd July that this evidence had been reposted to the Commission, it does not appear by the post mark to have been reposted for a week afterwards? My letter is dated the 22nd.
1985. You see that either the post mark upon this envelope is wrong, or your letter is wrong? I cannot say; I do not know; I cannot make it out.
1986. The importance of the matter is this: it has been said that several men have been discharged because they chose to give evidence to the Commission, and the fact is that several men were undoubtedly discharged after giving evidence. You say that they were discharged for violating a rule, of which there is no official record. And now we have the facts that a man who has given adverse evidence to you dies on the 26th June—his evidence is sent to him for revision—you write to say that that evidence was returned to the Commission—and yet it appears from the post marks that it was not returned for a week after you had been written to for the letter. All this, coupled with the evidence of other men having been discharged, looks as if there was a desire to keep back this evidence from the Commission? Not in the least.
1987. Can you account for the fact that this letter was not reposted for a week after you wrote and said that it had been? I left it to the clerk—that is his writing; that is not my writing.
1988. The Commission have had a good deal of trouble, you see, in getting the evidence back? I recollect when the letter came, and I directed it to be marked "died on such a date." That is not my writing on the envelope at all. I think it was posted. It was out of my possession altogether.*
1989. To whom did you give that letter to be posted? The messenger is there now—he is an old man.
1990. An inmate? Yes.
1991. Did you ever before know him to fail in delivering letters? Never. He is a most trustworthy man, as far as my knowledge of him goes. As for these letters, I did not wish to have anything to do with them; and I told the clerk I would give the men envelopes and stamps to post them. I think you sent up thirteen or fourteen letters, and I did not discharge the other men who gave evidence.

Members Present:—

WILLIAM CHARLES WINDEYER, Esq., PRESIDENT.

SAMUEL GOOLD, Esq.

MICHAEL METCALFE, Esq.

CHARLES COWPER, JUN., Esq.

The Hon. George Allen, M.L.C., Vice-President, Benevolent Society, called in and examined:—

1992. President.] I believe that you are the President of the Benevolent Society of Sydney? No, I am not; I am Vice-President. Mr. E. Deas Thomson is President. The Hon. G. Allen, M.L.C.
23 Sept., 1873.
1993. You have been connected with the institution for many years? For fifty-two years. Ever since 1821; that was my first election as a member of the committee. I was secretary to the Society for thirty-six years, during five of which I was joint secretary, and I was sole secretary for thirty-one years. I have been Vice-President for upwards of thirty years, or about thirty.
1994. I see that the governing body of the institution is a committee composed of more than twenty members? The report will tell you that; I do not recollect.
1995. Do you think that it is desirable to have a committee so large as that? Well, that is a question which I am hardly prepared to answer. If they would all do their duty perhaps a less number would answer, but I do not see any harm in having a large body; but I would like to be understood, I do not mean a large body as a large body, but a large body of proper persons. I do not see any objection to it, nor do I see any objection to having a smaller number, provided they would do their duty.

* NOTE (on revision):—See my report of 24th ultimo, and also report from Parramatta Postmaster, 3rd instant, in explanation of this paragraph.

The Hon. G. Allen, M.L.C. 1996. Do you not think that the large size of bodies of this character sometimes tends to waste of time in frivolous discussions? It is not very often that we are troubled with a large body up there, but sometimes there is more discussion than there need be.

23 Sept., 1873. 1997. Do you not think that this in some measure arises from the size of the governing body? No doubt it does to some extent in all bodies, no matter what they are—whether a charitable institution or a political one; but then it depends on the persons there—the persons who are appointed, and so on.

1998. I suppose you are aware that there are two small denominational schools in this institution in George-street? Yes.

1999. Could you tell us how that arose? No, I cannot tell you how it arose. I think—mind now I am only speaking from memory—I think that at one time we had only one school in the place, and I presume that the Catholics did not like their children to be instructed by a Protestant teacher, and as a matter of course the Protestants would not like their children taught by a Catholic teacher, and I cannot see any harm in the thing remaining as it is. I should like to see matters so conducted that all could be taught together; but these are children of tender age, and I am not surprised that the Catholics should like them to be brought up in that way. It is not like a school where they go to obtain secular education; but here they are taught their prayers and everything else.

2000. But their prayers are, I presume, taught them as much out of school as in school? I should look upon these schools more as dame's schools than anything else. These schoolmistresses have charge out of school as well as in. It is a matter of fact that there is a Protestant teacher and a Roman Catholic teacher, and in that Asylum I certainly should not raise my voice against it, from the tender age of the children.

2001. You think that it is desirable to maintain these two small schools? That is a strong word. I do not say that it is desirable. If some one were there to hear the children say their prayers morning and evening, it might be better. I do not think that we could expect a person of a different religion to hear them say their prayers, and I do not think that the children should go to bed or should get up without their devotions.

2002. Do you think that these schools should be an exception to the general system of the Colony? I think, from the tender age of the children, and considering that the institution has to deal with their spiritual concerns as well as their secular training, it is only fair that they should have their own teachers.

2003. Then this argument proceeds on the assumption that the teachers look after the children after school hours? Yes. I do not mean in the playground.

2004. Night and morning? Yes. That they attend to the children's morning and evening devotions.

2005. Do you think that the charity of the public is abused by people obtaining assistance from these institutions who should not do so? I have no doubt that it is abused sometimes. We take every precaution we can. We have an excellent visitor in the accountant, Mr. Mansfield—he ferrets them out, and as soon as he discovers anything he makes it known. And we make all the inquiry we can, and if we find out any impostors we strike them off immediately. But notwithstanding all our care, I have no doubt that we are imposed upon.

2006. Considering the large amount of money that the Government expends upon the institution, do you not think that the Government should be represented on the Board? I think you are under a mistake as to the large amount. The large amount given to the poor by the Government is £500 a year; and that is given on condition that we raise an equal amount.

2007. Mr. Cowper.] But you received last year £3,000? That was not for the poor; that is for persons like some of the women and girls you have got, but in a different state; that is for some of these girls who go in there.

2008. Mr. Metcalfe.] You get a grant of £500 for the out-door relief? Yes, upon condition that we raise an equal sum.

2009. And you spend more than double that amount upon the out-door relief? I cannot tell, without a reference to the books, what we do spend; but we have money at interest.

2010. Mr. Cowper.] And in addition to the grant of £500, you are paid so much by the Government for every person taken into the lying-in hospital? The institution now is thoroughly altered. We took all these girls at the express request of your father.

2011. You received last year £3,000 for that? Yes, of course; we gave them our house—we gave them the use of that—and whatever they cost us the Government pay us; but the out-door cases are a different thing altogether.

2012. President.] But is not the greater part of the money which the committee have at their disposal Government funds? Well, the accounts will speak for themselves—you have them.

2013. Well then it is so? Then you need not ask me.

2014. Is it not right—this being the case—that the Government should be represented on the Board? As far as I am concerned, I should be much obliged if the Government would take charge of the girls altogether. We did it at the request of the Government, when Sir Charles Cowper was at the head of affairs.

2015. Do you see any objection to the Government being represented on the Board? I do not know what you mean—do you mean by popular election?

2016. By members of the Board being appointed by the Government? It depends on what sort of people they send in—I object to no respectable person coming. I shall be glad to receive any help from any quarter. What object can any member of that committee—where they are all unpaid—have but to do good? I have been there for fifty-two years, and the only object that I have had has been to advance the welfare of these poor creatures, and I am sure every member of the committee has the same object.

2017. I do not suppose that any one doubts that; but utterly apart from that, and as a question of abstract principle, do you not think the Government should be represented on the committee? I think that the subscribers are as well able to send in proper people as the Government are.

2018. Yes, but is it not better that the Government should be represented on the Board? I have no objection to the Government having a voice in the management. I have always sought to get the most respectable persons to come and assist us.

2019. I am not putting these questions in any way doubting the respectability of the committee, but with a view of ascertaining your opinion, if you have formed one, as to whether it is desirable, where so large an amount of money is contributed by the Government, that the Government should be represented on the Board? I have no objection to it. I do not think that you would have it better conducted whether the members are appointed by the Government or sent there by other persons; but I have no objection to it.

2020. Mr. Metcalfe.] The subscriptions have materially decreased since 1855—they are very small now to what they were? Oh, but then there is a reason for that. At the period you are alluding to, I presume we had the whole of the aged and infirm to support. It was before the alteration took place. The public do not profess to subscribe for these girls; that is a different department altogether. The Hon. G. Allen, M.L.C.
23 Sept., 1873.

2021. You say that the Government taking charge of the aged and infirm, the public no longer subscribed? In my opinion it was a wrong course to pursue.

2022. President.] I see that the Government contribute nine-tenths of the income of this institution? I do not agree with that. The Government pay for the girls and the children; they pay for everything connected with them.

2023. They pay for the support of a number of the inmates for whose benefit the institution is carried on and exists? It should be put in this way—that the Government pay for the inmates there, and we give our services in looking after them.

James Oatley, Esq., member of committee, Sydney Benevolent Society, called in and examined:—

2024. President.] You are one of the committee managing the Benevolent Asylum? Yes. J. Oatley, Esq.

2025. How long have you been on the Board? About twelve years.

2026. How often do your duties take you to the institution? Once a week; every Tuesday at 4 o'clock, with the exception of quarterly days, and then we meet at 3 o'clock. 23 Sept., 1873.

2027. I see that there is a large number of persons on the committee—more than twenty-five, I think? There is a large number.

2028. Do you see any object in having so large a committee? I cannot see any object. I think that the business would be done equally as well with a much smaller committee. The only difficulty in having a smaller committee would be to get them together.

2029. But do you not think that the fact of a committee being so large tends to keep members from attending meetings: a person says—"Oh there will be plenty there without me—I need not go"? Perhaps it is so to some extent.

2030. And perhaps different sets of people may attend these meetings, so that what is done at one meeting is possibly undone at the next? I do not think I have ever seen a case of that kind—a resolution rescinded; it is done very seldom, if at all.

2031. What is the average attendance of members of the committee? I should say on an average about ten; sometimes there are considerably more, sometimes less than ten. At the general meetings—the quarterly meetings—there is a larger number, because generally the general committee and the house committee meet on those occasions.

2032. On inspecting the institution, we saw that there were two small denominational schools in it? Yes, two.

2033. One a Roman Catholic school, and the other a Protestant school? Yes.

2034. Do you see any reason why the children attending these schools should not be educated together? No. At Randwick they have both Roman Catholic and Protestant teachers. At any rate, I consider that it should be one school.

2035. They are conducted on the Public School system? Indeed; I thought that they had Roman Catholic teachers.*

2036. They are conducted on the same system? The two schools there are distinct—they are kept separate; and it has always been my opinion that there should be but one school.†

2037. Mr. Metcalfe.] The children are not always separate? They have always been so since I have been a member of the committee. You see the children are generally very young there, and they do not remain in the institution more than a month or so before they are drafted off to Randwick—some of them.

2038. President.] Do you think that the institution is at all imposed upon by persons getting into it who have claim to charity of that sort? Oh, there are some in all institutions. You will find some in which persons receive assistance who do not deserve it, and these are at once struck off as soon as we find them out. We get information from Mr. Mansfield, who is a very good man, and from various clergymen, and also from the missionaries who go round. Private individuals also give us information; but I think that, considering the numbers we relieve there, there is not much imposition. There is a large number of persons receiving relief there, and no doubt we are imposed upon sometimes.

2039. Do you know what rule is laid down by the institution as actuating them in giving out-door relief? It is the rule that persons who wish to get relief must be recommended by a clergyman or by a subscriber, and then the recommendation is considered and inquiries are made, and the parties have to attend at a meeting of the Board, at which inquiries are made of the applicant as to her means, and then the rations are given to the applicant according to the number of the family.

2040. What I wish to know is, whether ill health or inability to work from any cause is one of the primary matters inquired into? That is one. Persons who are unable to work, and persons who are aged and unable to support a family. The people we give temporary relief to sometimes are persons out of employment.

2041. Whether they are aged or incapable of working or not? Yes. We give them temporary relief—relieve them for just a short time if they are unable to get employment. They are recommended by a clergyman or a subscriber, and if we find that the representations made are really true—that a person has just come down the country with several children and is seeking employment and cannot get it—we give them food for their support. We assist them sometimes for a fortnight or a month—for never more than fourteen days at a time, and at the end of that period they must make a fresh application if they are still out of work. We very often assist parties to go into the interior by paying part of their passage—people who are out of employment and unable to get any.

2042. Do persons often avail themselves of that kind of assistance? Oh yes, frequently. I formed one of a deputation to the Government for the purpose of obtaining passes for persons who were not able to get employment, but who were able to earn their own living. Of course we would not send old people up the country; but able-bodied persons we frequently assist by giving them tickets and paying a portion of their passage money and giving them rations to help them on the road.

* NOTE (on revision):—This question refers to Randwick.

† NOTE (on revision):—In my answer, the two schools referred to are the Benevolent Asylum.

J. Oatley, Esq. 2043. There is no organization in connection with the Society, by means of which these people who are supported until they get work have work found for them? There is not. I have often found them work myself on the Corporation works; I have got several men work at stone-breaking, or at Botany or other places.

23 Sept., 1873.

2044. But it is not part of the work of the Society to find work for these persons? No, not at all; but we make them take work if it is offered them, or we stop the relief.

2045. So that you can say to a man who is getting this relief—"Here is work, you must take it, or you shall not get any more relief"? We have never done that exactly; but in cases where I said that I would get the men employment and they failed to attend for the purpose of getting the work, the relief was at once stopped.

2046. Mr. Metcalfe.] Would it not be wise for employers of labour to apply to you for that kind of thing, so that you might send some of these men to them? We are always open to things of that sort. If an application is made to us, we instruct Mr. Mansfield to look over the books and see if among the parties obtaining temporary relief there is one to suit the applicant, and if there is a man, and he refuses to accept the employment, we discontinue the relief.

2047. President.] But it is not announced to the public that labour may be obtained here? No, not at all.

2048. Mr. Goold.] Would it not be advisable to adopt some plan of that kind? It might be better. We do advertise the female servants, and perhaps it would be advisable to put in an advertisement of the sort you mean; but it is not always that we have such people. It is only occasionally that we have persons out of work. Those to whom we give relief are usually old and infirm people—persons who are not fit to do hard work. We are very particular about that. And even if persons belong to these Societies we do not relieve.

2049. Mr. Metcalfe.] You mean the Odd Fellows and so on? No, not the Odd Fellows, but these lumpers and so on—parties who combine together and will not take less than a certain rate of wages. We never give them relief, because we think that they should take any wages rather than become paupers; we do not encourage anything of that sort.

2050. President.] You do all you can to prevent the pauperizing of the population? Exactly.

2051. And teach people as much as possible to rely upon themselves? Yes, because we find it difficult if a person has once received relief there to keep them away afterwards. When they are out of employment they at once apply to the institution. They have become paupers, and they never forget it.

2052. It has been suggested that it would be a good thing if the whole of these Asylums for the Infirm and Destitute, and the whole of the Government Asylums, were brought under some central management, and there were an office taken in some part of Sydney—more accessible than one of the Government offices—where applications could be made for apprentices out of the Industrial Schools, or by persons in want of labour, or for boys from the "Vernon";—it has been said that this would, amongst other things, be a means of checking favouritism—that it would ensure the sending of boys to the kinds of employment for which they were best suited—that the Board having a general supervision over all these institutions, could prevent, amongst other things, people discharged for misconduct from one institution, getting into another;—what is your opinion as to the advisability of that? You would then have to rely upon the officers of each institution, or upon their reports. It would be creating another establishment, but the question is whether it would not be as well to have proper persons at the head of each of these establishments, and let applications be made to them.

2054. That depends upon whether a boy is brought up in Sydney or not? The different institutions do not send them to the city. For instance, there is Randwick; I do not believe that you could get a boy from there for the city. I believe it is wrong. I believe it would be better for the boys and girls themselves to apprentice them in the city, because then it would be much easier for them to make complaints if they were ill-treated. I know of an instance that occurred the other day. There was an old man of fifty, I think, who brought a girl to the Benevolent Asylum for confinement—quite a young girl, fifteen or sixteen years of age, and he said that this girl had been apprenticed to him, either from Randwick or from the Orphan School, I forget which. The question was asked who was the father of the child, and the girl said she must not tell. I said—"If you do not tell who it is, you will not be received here"; but the girl would not tell. So I said to the man "You go outside"; and he did so, and the girl then said at once, "He is the father of the child." That man was the girl's master; and he had actually taken the girl to a clergyman and got a recommendation from the clergyman for the girl to be received into the institution; but of course he did not tell the priest who the father of the child was. I asked him about the matter, and he said he knew nothing at all about it. I asked him did he ever see young men coming to the place, and he said he never did, and that he never knew anything at all about the matter. I said to him "You must be a pretty sort of a man to have acted in this way." What you suggest would be a good thing, but you would have to depend a good deal on the superintendents of the various institutions, as to whether the boys were fit to be apprenticed, and so on.

2055. Mr. Cowper.] But I suppose you know that at present no one looks after these boys when they are apprenticed; there is no one to look after them, and if a child appeals, no notice is taken of the appeal? I am quite aware of that. There should be some person to look after them; there should be a record kept of the various parties, and either the police or the Magistrates should see the children now and then, once a year, or so on.

2056. Do you not think that the masters should be forced to send in regular returns to some person, with reference to the conduct of the children, and the children should be called upon to write letters themselves? You will find that very difficult in the interior. No doubt it would be a good thing if it was possible to do it, but it would entail a good deal of expense and trouble.

2057. Do you not think that some officer should visit these children, and see them properly clothed and so on? Yes, that is just what I have suggested. The police or Magistrate of a district should inspect the children in that district, say once in six months.

2058. Do you not know that, with reference to the children sent out from the Benevolent Asylum, there is no supervision at all? There are very few children now sent out from our institution—very few indeed—occasionally there is an odd one. The children are too small.

2059. I mean those who have been sent out? I do not think that there is any person appointed for that J. Oatley, Esq. purpose; the number being so small, supervision is not requisite.

2060. And if they do not agree with their employers, they are thrown upon their own resources? Well, 23 Sept., 1873. they would be protected by the institution if they came back.

2061. But they cannot get back? They might apply to the police.

2063. Mr. Gould.] Do you send any of your children into the interior or away—I thought that they all went to Randwick? Not all; occasionally an application is made to the institution by some person highly recommended, to be allowed a child to assist in nursing a baby, or to adopt. We have printed forms as to what the employer has to do with the child, and he must be strongly recommended by the clergyman of the Church that he belongs to, before the application will be granted.

2064. And do they take the children for any fixed period? Yes, there is a certain time allowed, but I am not sure as to the term.

2065. And do these people pay them? Yes, there is a scale; but, as I before remarked, the children are so small that there is rarely any application made for them. Sometimes we have an application from the relatives of a person who has put a child in, and frequently the parents apply to take them out, being able to support them; but it is rarely that any applications are made to take them out.

2066. Mr. Metcalfe.] Most of them are children brought in by the police? No, very few indeed. There are some who are brought in by the police.

2067. Are they brought in by the parents then? Yes, by the parents, or where they have become orphans and are not able to support themselves they are taken in. For instance, a person may come to us—a widow, with three children. It is not possible for her to keep them all—she may keep one; and then we take two into the institution.

2068. President.] Is there a rule compelling a parent to keep one child? No rule.

2069. Mr. Metcalfe.] You do not take in single children? Yes, we do.

2070. Without pay? Very rarely, and when we do take them in we make the mothers pay a portion of their wages to support them.

2071. President.] And do they do so? Yes.

2073. Mr. Metcalfe.] That is about half the cost of the child to the institution? Yes, and then the children are only kept there for a time. They are drafted to Randwick with the first draft that goes.

2074. President.] Do you find it difficult to get rid of these young women with one child? Not latterly; but we are often applied to for some relief to assist in keeping the child.

2075. You give that? Sometimes we give a little arrowroot or sago for the child.

2076. You never give money? Only for rent, and with widows, and in very extreme cases.

2077. Sometimes these women obtain employment notwithstanding their having a baby? Yes, and we have a rule that they must go to a situation if application is made for them, even for half a crown a week. That is the lowest pay; but they very seldom get so little as that. We allow them to make their own arrangements, but if they are offered half a crown a week they are bound to take it or to leave.

2078. Mr. Metcalfe.] Cannot any young woman near her confinement be admitted by merely asking? No, they have to get a recommendation from the clergyman of the Church to which they belong, or from a subscriber, or from some respectable person. Then their case is considered, and if they are considered eligible persons they are allowed to come in; but there is a rule—though I never agreed with it—that single females should be called upon to pay £2 on their admission. Married women are not called upon to pay anything; they are admitted free, and are kept separate from the others. There are two distinct wards—one for married women and the other for single. There are cases in which a member of the committee moves that so-and-so be admitted on the payment of £2, and they frequently pay the £2. I have always opposed it, because if a person can afford to pay £2 she does not need to come into a charitable institution at all.

2080. You think that this rule opens the door to shame—that the father of the child should pay for it? Yes, and no doubt we try to find out who the father is, and after the child is born we try to make them prosecute them for maintenance.

2081. President.] Do you succeed in that? Sometimes some of them will, but not many of them do it.

2082. Do they confess who is the father? Yes, they will confess that.

2083. Do you keep a record of that? Yes.

2084. And is there any mark put on a child so that you can recognize him in after life? No, it is merely said that so-and-so was admitted on such a day, that she named so-and-so as the father of the child, and was confined on such a day of a male child or a female child.

2085. They generally stay about a month in the place? Yes, sometimes more.

2086. Do they take their children away with them? Decidedly. What should we do with them?

2087. I believe that when you take in little infants—foundlings—you give them to women to suckle who have infants about the same age? No, the children are fed by the bottle. It is a difficult thing to get a woman to suckle two children. We do sometimes get a woman to do it, but we have to allow her extra milk, and so on.

2088. These foundlings usually die, do they not? They are usually brought in in a very bad state. That child which was found on Hyde Park the other night is doing remarkably well. There is every care taken of them that is possible; but it is natural that infants of that description will be sickly and bad.

2089. Are you satisfied with the way in which the institution is worked? I think it is worked tolerably well: everything is fully discussed—we have very few religious squabbles, very little of that sort of thing; and I think that upon the whole the institution is well conducted.

2090. Mr. Metcalfe.] You had better put those two schools into one, and then with the two mistresses you could have better teaching? Yes, I believe that—I do not think we want two mistresses. We have more children there now than usual. I quite agree with you that there should be only one school.

- J. Oatley, Esq. 2091. Mr. Goold.] Are you in favour of clergymen being upon the Board? That is rather a difficult question. I do not see why clergymen should not have the same privilege as any one else, but it seems to be a feeling that they should not be allowed to sit on the Board. The clergymen are elected like the other members; but in our rules it states that some clergymen—those that collect a certain amount of money—shall be life members. If you are to dispense with clergymen altogether, how would you deal with these rules?
2092. President.] I suppose that there would have to be an alteration in them? Yes, as a matter of course, that would have to be altered; but what would you do with those who are already life members?
2093. I suppose one reason why they should be excluded is that they are good-natured and easily imposed upon? There are some who are not easily imposed upon at our Board; but as a rule I believe that they are. The great objection to their having seats at the Board is this—that they give people recommendations, and then sit at the Board and decide upon the cases, and very often there is a majority of them there. They sit in judgment upon their own recommendations.
2094. That is a strong argument against their being on the Board? That is an argument against it.
2095. Mr. Goold.] I thought the principal reason against it was that they quarrelled so? No; there are one or two of them hot-tempered, but there are few religious disputes. I have heard more disputes among the lay members than the clergymen.
2096. Mr. Metcalfe.] I see that you have a large sum of money invested in bank deposits, and in one thing and another? Yes.
2097. What is your idea of the intention with which that money was invested? That is a sort of reserve, in the event of the grant for relief being taken away. We could fall back upon that money to assist in carrying on the institution.
2098. Then you have debentures also, and you do not pay the interest of them to the capital account—you use it: why do you distinguish in that way? I cannot see any reason for it, but such is the case.
2099. No one seems to be able to give a reason for it? Well, you see, the other is a sort of fixed deposit, and we allow the interest to accumulate; but the interest on the debentures is paid to us, and we use it.
2100. And that makes the keeping of the accounts more simple? Yes.
2101. President.] What is your experience of the working of the Industrial Schools Act? Well, I have never found any difficulty myself. I think that the Act upon the whole works tolerably well, and the necessary inquiries are always made, so far as I have seen.
2102. You think that the Act has had a good effect? There is no question about it. I think it was one of the best things that ever was done,—the establishment of the “Vernon,” and of the Industrial School for females; though I think it might be better managed, from what I have heard—I know nothing about it myself.
2103. It has been suggested to us that the Act, as at present framed, admits of excuses being too readily made by children who should be brought under its operation—excuses of their having means of support which are, after all, no means of support: for instance, carrying about a small basket of oranges and a few matches? I think that if the Act is properly carried out, and if the Justices attend to the cases before them, it is quite strong enough.
2104. You think that such excuses should not be accepted? I think not.
2105. You think that when children are found wandering about in this way, they should be taken care of by the State? There is no doubt about it: I have never found any difficulty about it myself.
2106. Mr. Metcalfe.] You see that the State is acting as parent in a vast number of cases now—there are thousands taken care of by the State who should not be? No, it should not be so. There is one difficulty I spoke of with reference to the Benevolent Asylum, and I cannot see any remedy for it. You see women leaving the institution with young children and they cannot find employment, and they come back to us; we do not take them in, but we allow them a small support. I think there should be some place for these women. Sometimes the women go away with the children healthy, and they come back with the child in a dying state, and we have to take them in until the child recovers. I do not know what could be done.
2107. Mr. Cowper.] Do you not think that if this central office were established, it would remedy these things to a certain extent; they occur to some degree from there being no person to apply to? I think it would be advisable to do something, but you will find it a very difficult thing to manage—you will find that there is a great deal of imposition. There are a lazy worthless lot of people, who do not want employment.
2108. President.] But the object of this system would be to check imposition? But suppose these women say they will not take a situation, what would you do?
2109. Not take them into the institution? Throw them on the world to go and become prostitutes. It is a most difficult thing to deal with.
2110. After all, it comes to this,—that vice must bring its own punishment: it seems hard, but it is just? Our place is a sort of registry office for the hire of these women.
2111. You see if you coddle people too much, you simply make them paupers? There is no doubt about that.
2112. Is there any other suggestion that you would like to make on any of these topics? There is nothing else that I think of now. I am much pleased with the “Vernon.” I think it is one of the best things ever established. I have not been there very much, and I cannot form any idea as to the amount of work done.
2113. From your knowledge of Sydney, you think that the Act has had a very beneficial effect? There is no question about it. But there are many young fellows about here of seventeen or eighteen, who are a disgrace to the community, and the Vagrant Act is not strong enough to touch them. These people should be called upon to show how they get their living. It is a great pity that something cannot be done to prevent gaming: and as regards abusive language too—a man may stand inside his own door and say what he likes to you, and you cannot do anything to him.

Mrs. Eliza Blundell, matron, Benevolent Asylum, called in and further examined:—

- Mrs. E. Blundell. 2114. President.] You are the matron of the Benevolent Asylum in George-street? Yes.
2115. How long have you been so? Two years and nine months.
2116. What salary do you get? £100 a year.
- 23 Sept., 1873. 2117. Any rations? Yes. 2118.

Mrs. E.
Blundell.

23 Sept., 1873.

2118. The ordinary ration, I suppose, given in all public institutions? Yes.
2119. What are your duties? Well, I have the entire management of the house—the internal management—subject to the control of the Board.
2120. You are directly responsible to the Board? Yes.
2121. You are not in any way under the control of Mr. Mansfield? No.
2122. He communicates directly with the Board, and so do you? Yes; but we always consult with each other, and act together in matters connected with the institution.
2123. Then a portion of the internal management which is directly under your control is the management of the lying-in hospital there? No, not exactly.
2124. Will you explain? I am responsible for the cleanliness of the lying-in hospital, but not for the nursing.
2125. Who has charge of that? There is a paid nurse who is responsible for the nursing.
2126. What salary does she get? £70, I think: I am not quite sure, but I think it is £70.
2127. Is she in any way responsible to you? Only for the cleanliness of the wards.
2128. Who engages her? The Board.
2129. Was that so when you went there? Yes.
2130. Are there any other nurses employed on the place besides her? Yes, four others for the children.
2131. But none for the lying-in women? No.
2132. I suppose the nurse you speak of is specially employed as a midwife? Yes.
2133. Are you satisfied with that arrangement? Yes.
2134. You would not wish for a change, making you responsible for the nursing? Not with the person whom we have at present.
2135. Then she is efficient, I suppose, and you work together well? Yes, she is very efficient, and we work together well.
2136. How long has she been there? I think for fifteen years, if not longer; I think I may safely say fifteen years.
2137. From your previous training, could you take charge of that department? Yes.
2138. But you think that this nurse is so thoroughly competent that you see no reason to alter the present state of things? No.
2139. You look after the cooking of the establishment, I suppose? Yes.
2140. What servants are there on the place under you? A cook, laundress, four paid nurses, and a few inmate women who act as nurses.
2141. And who are, of course, changed from time to time? Yes.
2142. Is the cook under you? Yes.
2143. All those servants, in point of fact? Yes.
2144. Then Mr. Mansfield has nothing to do with the internal economy at all? Nothing whatever.
2145. He simply looks after the financial business and the out-door relief department of the institution? Yes, he is also the storekeeper, and issues all stores to us.
2146. Does the institution find any clothing for the women? Yes, and for the children.
2147. Who looks after that? I do.
2148. And you are responsible to the Board for that? Yes, I am responsible to the Board.
2149. Directly? Yes, directly.
2150. Do you buy the things for the institution? No, the treasurer buys them.
2151. Who is the treasurer? Mr. Maurice Alexander.
2152. How many women are there at present in the institution? Fifty-seven, I think.
2153. All lying-in women, I suppose? No, not all lying-in; they have either been confined or expect to be, with a few exceptions; and there are two blind women who are kept there.
2154. Aged people, who have been there for some years? One is an aged person, and the other is a young girl, or rather a young woman.
2155. Mr. Metcalfe.] The aged woman has been there thirty years, has she not? More than forty, she told me to-day.
2156. President.] Have any of these single women been received there a second time? Some of them have.
2157. Have you had such cases since you have been there? Single women coming in a second time?
2158. Yes? Yes, I think I can think of at least half a dozen who came back to us a second time.
2159. Have you any reason to think that the charity of the place is abused by persons getting in there who could either support themselves under the circumstances, or who have friends to whom they could look for assistance? I think not. The Board generally sifts the cases very thoroughly.
2160. Yes, but sometimes a woman may find out things afterwards which have escaped the Board? Yes, sometimes I find out something and tell Mr. Mansfield of it, and he tells the Board.
2161. But you say that you have not found that the institution is imposed upon? Yes, I may have found out something, but I could not say that any great abuses exist.
2162. You have found such cases? Yes, I have found such cases.
2163. Do these people come from the town or from the country? They are people who come from the country generally.
2164. What is done in cases of that sort—are they turned out directly? As soon as they can make arrangements they have to leave, but not at an hour's notice.
2165. You do not find these things out, I suppose, until after the woman is confined? Generally after they are confined.
2166. You have nothing to do with the schools in the place? I have to see that the teachers are in the schools at the proper hours, and that they keep a proper surveillance over the children.
2167. The teachers have nothing to do with the children after school hours? Yes, they take charge of them in the play-ground alternately.
2168. But with that exception? No, they have nothing more to do with them.
2169. Then it is not their duty to give the children private religious instruction at night or in the morning? No, they have prayers twice a day in the institution.
2170. What religious services have you in the place? The Catholic teacher reads prayers twice a day, morning and evening, to the Catholic women and children.

- Mrs. E. Blundell.
23 Sept., 1873.
2171. At what time? At 8 o'clock in the morning, and after tea in the evening—at half-past 5, or after that.
2172. And the Protestants—what about them? They have prayers. I read prayers to them, and the children, before they leave their wards, say their prayers collectively.
2173. Who teaches them to say their prayers? The teachers teach them in the school.
2174. They have that duty then? The Catholic teacher has to read prayers to them before breakfast, and they also teach the children their prayers that they say in the morning on getting out of bed.
2175. By whom is that done? The Protestant teacher teaches the children prayers, but the nurses hear them say their prayers.
2177. And the nurses hear them say their prayers? Yes.
2178. Are the nurses Catholics or Protestants? Some are Protestants and some are Catholics, but that makes no difference—the Catholic nurse hears those of her faith, and the other the same.
2179. Supposing that it is thought undesirable that there should be two schools in the place, and that there should be only one—and that the school should be conducted on the principle of the Public Schools, upon a non-sectarian system—we want to know if that were done, is there anything taught by these two teachers which would prevent that change being carried out? I am not able to answer that question at all.
2180. You mean that it is not a matter on which you would like to give an opinion? I would not like to give an opinion about that.
2181. You cannot tell us, as a matter of fact, whether such a change would be advisable. I want to know whether there is anything taught by these two school-mistresses to the children out of school hours, in the way of religious instruction, which necessitates their being kept as separate schools? Not out of school hours, but I know that the Catholic teacher teaches these children what prayers they are to say in the services, and the Protestant teacher the same, but whether one person could do that, I cannot say. There are many people visiting our house to give religious instruction.
2182. I suppose there are ministers and other persons visiting the place? Yes; the City Missionaries come twice a week, the Sisters once, the Rev. Canon Vidal holds a service every Friday night, and we have now a Presbyterian minister once a week to instruct the Protestant children.
2183. Supposing the children are taught their prayers in the school, as they are now, the nurses would see that they said their prayers on going to bed, as they do now? Yes, the same; I make that a part of my duty also to see that the prayers are said.
2184. And the nurses indiscriminately, without reference to their own particular creed, see that each child says the prayers which have been taught in the school? The children say the prayers collectively—they kneel down in a circle and say them all together.
2185. How many children are there in each dormitory? In the boy's ward there are forty-five, but they are not all sleeping in that dormitory. They have to go out at present to sleep, as we are rather full.
2186. How do you mean rather full? They have to go into another ward; but I am speaking of their dormitory, the nurse in charge being responsible for them.
2187. How many girls are there? There are about 150 children in the house altogether—an equal number of boys and girls. When I say 150, that includes infants from one day old to two years.
2188. Are you satisfied with the accommodation of the place for the purpose to which it is devoted? Yes.
2189. Is there anything you wish to suggest in the way of appliances about it or improvements? No, I think not.
2190. Mr. Metcalfe.] It is very healthy now, is it not? Yes, it is very healthy.
2191. The drainage is perfect? Very perfect. The drains were all taken up and replaced with much larger pipes.
2192. You do not know where the drains are taken to? I do not know—to Pitt-street I think.
2193. President.] Dr. Renwick is the Visiting Surgeon, I believe? Yes, he is the medical officer.
2194. How often does he go there? Twice a day, and sometimes three times; but twice always.
2195. You have nothing to do with the out-door relief? Nothing whatever, unless I make a discovery that some person who is receiving relief is not worthy of it, when I at once speak to the accountant about it.
2196. Do you see the people who apply for these young women as servants after their month is over? Yes, always.
2197. Do you have any difficulty in getting rid of these women who have children? No; they generally stay longer than a month—some two months, some three months, some six; it is quite according to circumstances.
2198. What circumstances? Delicate health, or the child being delicate.
2199. Mr. Metcalfe.] As far as you know, do these children live? Yes, generally.
2200. You hear of them afterwards? Yes. One lady took a servant from us, and she is now parting with her to send up the country, and the woman came to see me with the child—a very fine little fellow.
2201. President.] The woman has taken service up the country? Yes; the lady has recommended her to a friend and relative of her own.
2202. Are these young women who come into the place unmarried generally strangers in the Country, and friendless, or are they people belonging to the place? I think that they generally have friends belonging to them.
2203. Do they generally come from the town or from the country? Some are from the town and others are from the country.
2204. Mr. Metcalfe.] Do many of their friends visit them while they are there? The single women are not supposed to see any one; but if they are well behaved, and if their friends are respectable, I do not deny them;—for instance, if they want things for their baby's clothes, and so on, their friends bring them things some times.
2205. President.] Which have you most of there to be confined—married women or single? Single.
2206. Have you any suggestion to make which would improve upon the management or working of this portion of the institution? No, I have not.

2207. Mr. Metcalfe.] Does the number of single women who go there to be confined increase—has it increased since you have been there? Last year there was a great decrease, but there was about the average number this year.

2208. President.] Do you know what was the cause of the decrease? No.

2209. Did the committee make any new rules, or make the rules more stringent, or anything of that sort? I think that previous to 1871 they had made a rule that the single women should pay £2 for their admission—not to cover expenses, but as a means of marking their disapprobation.

2210. And do you think that the payment of the £2 kept people out? Yes, I think so.

2211. I suppose you have had conversations with these women sometimes, and have learned something of their characters? Yes.

2212. Have you ever had any such conversations with them in any way, or learned their opinions as to the desirability of establishing a foundling institution? I do not think it would be a very desirable thing. After they have once these children it does them good to make them look after them themselves.

2213. Did you form this opinion on general grounds, or from intercourse with these young women? From my intercourse with these young women.

2214. Mr. Metcalfe.] You think that it would increase immorality? I think that after they have these children they become better members of society; it makes them feel and know what they can do for them—that they can support themselves and the children too. I do not find them at all inclined to give up their children. They would prefer going out for their food rather than leave their children behind them, or put them out to other people.

2215. President.] Did you ever have any conversations with them to lead you to form an opinion as to whether such a thing as a foundling institution would tend to prevent infanticide? I do not think it would. I believe that the woman who would destroy her child would prefer getting rid of it altogether to coming into our place and then have to support the child afterwards. They destroy the child because they do not want the burden of it afterwards through life.

2216. Mr. Metcalfe.] But suppose that a woman could put a child in a cradle and leave it at the Foundling, and see no more of it? They would jump at the chance of that.

2218. Yes; I want to hear your reasons for it? Yes; and my answer was sufficient, I suppose.

2220. Do you find that young women with these children have to wait a long time before they find people to take them into their service? No; generally we get rid of them by advertising. We advertise, and people come, and I get quite cleared out occasionally.

2221. Are they town or country people? Both town and country people—more generally town people.

2222. Can you give us any idea as to the class of life these people are in? Well, there are people from the country—those who have cows and so on; they need a rough sort of housekeeper. The women do not go into very refined service, if I may use such a term, generally speaking.

2223. These people are not taken on philanthropic grounds, but by people who wish for their services, and are glad to get them at a lower rate of wages? Yes.

2224. Is there anything that you wish to add yourself with regard to the institution? No, nothing more.

2225. From what you have seen of these young unmarried women, does it strike you that they are very ignorant;—how do they compare in point of education with others of their class in life? At present we have one young girl who is nicely educated; it is her second child; but the others are not very well educated.

2226. They are below the average? Yes; they are seldom able to write a letter properly, for instance.

2227. And how do they compare in point of intelligence? They are generally very sharp and shrewd—nine out of ten are.

2228. They are not inferior in intellectual capacity? No.

2229. As far as you have been able to discover, what do you think has been the reason of their getting into difficulties; is it because their education has been neglected and their moral training has been defective, or because they have been more exposed to temptation;—what were the conditions that led to their falling? I think that many of them are exposed to temptations from their being in service and not properly looked after—away from their friends, perhaps.

2230. Have you ever found that they have ascribed it to the neglect of those over them? Generally they say that they are miserable and unhappy in their situations, and perhaps they have been promised marriage and so on. They form some connection with some young man who promises to marry them.

2231. You have not been there long enough to see what are the chances of these women's ultimate recovery, and of their retrieving their characters? No; of course two years and nine months is not long enough.

2232. Have any been married, to your knowledge? Yes, some have married and done well. I cannot answer for many. I can answer for those girls whom I have put out to service. Some have done remarkably well, and are still in good service.

2233. Mr. Gould.] Do you communicate with them? I tell them to come back and call at the house and see me; and I do correspond with one or two. For instance, I have one who has a child which I got adopted to a lady in Sydney, and she corresponds with us regularly.

2234. What age are these girls? From sixteen up to twenty-six or thirty.

Mrs. E.
Blundell.

WEDNESDAY,

WEDNESDAY, 24 SEPTEMBER, 1873.

Members Present:—

WILLIAM CHARLES WINDEYER, Esq., PRESIDENT.

SAMUEL GOOLD, Esq. | MICHAEL METCALFE, Esq.

CHARLES COWPER, JUN., Esq.

Harold Maclean, Esq., Sheriff, called in and examined:—

- H. Maclean, Esq. 2235. President.] You are the Sheriff of the Colony? Yes.
- Esq. 2236. I believe that you are also one of the Board having the supervision of the Asylums for the Infirm and Destitute? Yes.
- 24 Sept., 1873. 2237. It has been stated to us that you hardly ever or never attend the meetings of the Board, and we wish to hear from you what your reasons are for taking that course—whether it is from press of business—or from what reason are you so constantly absent; and also whether you think that official gentlemen are able to devote the necessary time to the work of such a Board? I find that I cannot spare the time. I did attend the meetings at the commencement, soon after my appointment, for some time, and I have also attended latterly at various times when specially asked by the chairman, Mr. Rolleston, to do so; but I find that I cannot give the time necessary for a regular attendance—sometimes I am out of town, and sometimes press of business prevents me; in fact I expressed a desire to resign, but Mr. Rolleston said he had rather I would not.
2238. Do you think, from your experience of the difficulty in attending the meetings, and from what you have seen of the working of the Board, that such a Board can efficiently supervise these institutions? I think that the institutions are, by the exertions of Mr. Rolleston and Dr. Alleyne, very efficiently managed. The management seems to be very regular and effective.
2239. Then the Board is only able to work because these two gentlemen happen to be able to devote some attention to it? Yes. They give their time and attention to it; and the administration seems to be good—it is worked on a good system. The greater part of the management is worked by the secretary, Mr. King, who seems to conduct his business very satisfactorily.
2240. I suppose that you are hardly in a position to say much about these institutions? Very little. My original appointment was occasioned, I think, by my having pressed the then Colonial Secretary about so many people who should go into Benevolent Asylums being put into the gaols,—people who are not criminals. There were great difficulties about the matter; and that was, I think, the Colonial Secretary's reason for putting me on the Board, so that I could see the difficulties of the matter myself.
2241. I believe that you also hold the office of Inspector of Prisons? Yes.
2242. And in the course of your duties you visit the different gaols of the Colony? Yes.
2243. Do you still see in the gaols, from time to time, very young people? Occasionally; but not nearly so many as there were before the establishment of the Industrial Schools.
2244. But you still see some? Occasionally. Measures are taken to release them as soon as practicable when they are very young, and to get them employment, or to send them away.
2245. In what way—through the action of the Executive? Yes. If employment can be obtained for a young boy—seldom for girls—the Governor would liberate him so that he could take it.*
2246. But intervention on the part of the Executive would not be necessary if the different Benches of Magistrates sent these children to the schools? If there was a Reformatory for boys it would, I think, be of great advantage to the Country. I always think that a Reformatory should have preceded the Industrial School; but that is a matter of opinion.
2247. You think that it would be advisable to carry out the idea that there should be a Reformatory for boys? Yes, decidedly. It would have to be a small school at first—it would not be filled for some time; but they could not send the criminal boys to the Industrial School.
2248. If you do send criminals to the Industrial School, you send them to consort with those mere victims of desertion and neglect, who are unstained by crime? Exactly. I think there is a great evil in that. If I may bring forward a matter I referred to just now,—the practice of sending infirm people to the prisons throughout the Colony. The remedy is difficult to devise.
2249. Is that still done? Largely, in all the country gaols. I think it would be well to establish branch Asylums in the centres of population; such places as Bathurst, Goulburn, Orange, Armidale, and so on. That would obviate the evil.
2250. Could you give us an idea how many persons are sent to these gaols in the course of a year? I cannot give you the exact number, but I can say that a very large number of persons are sent. There are very many persons convicted under the Vagrant Act, and sent to the gaols for protection. They are not criminals; but they are placed in gaols (for there is nothing else to be done with them), and then the course is to apply to the Board of Asylums here for their admission. There are many who would be sent to an Asylum if there were local Asylums.
2251. Have you the means at command of informing us how many such persons have passed through the gaol at Bathurst during last year? I can obtain the information for the Commission. (See Appendix S.)
2252. Which gaol would afford the best example? I will take Bathurst as a good example of the thing of which I speak.
2253. Mr. Cowper.] You are not speaking of people who if they were in Sydney would be sent to the Asylums for the Infirm and Destitute? Yes. They are brought up by the police, and are actually in need of an amount of protection, and they are sent to gaol. The Government has been aware of persons who are not criminals being sent to gaol; and the principle of the thing is worse than the number. Perhaps the people themselves do not care so much about it, but the thing is wrong.

* NOTE (on revision):—I was referring entirely to cases of boys. I do not call to mind any of girls.

2255. They impede the work of the gaol? Yes. I will not say that they interfere with the discipline, but it is a wrong thing as regards the people going in. I see great practical difficulties in obviating the matter; I could do nothing on the Board to improve it. H. Maclean,
Esq.
2256. The attention of the Board has been directed to it? Yes. I recommended that the Benches of Magistrates should be allowed to send these people straight to the Asylums instead of committing them to the gaols; but the Board resisted that, on the ground that the Asylums would be over-crowded, and that wrong persons would be sent—that the different localities would get rid of troublesome persons by sending them down to the Asylums. 24 Sept., 1873.
2257. It has been represented to the Commission that most cases of imposition—cases that should not be sent to the Asylums at all—come from the country already? Yes, I dare say that is so; because in Sydney there is an examination before the Board and the secretary; while in the country persons are only desirous of getting people into the Asylums, the Board here protect their room being always over-crowded.
2258. Is there any other matter which you wish to suggest upon these topics? No, nothing else occurs to me on that head.
2259. Mr. Metcalfe.] Where do you put these people in the gaols? It depends on their condition. They are put in the ordinary prison, unless they are put into the hospital.
2260. I thought that there was a receiving house at Darlinghurst outside the Gaol? That is for persons who are insane.
2261. Or persons who are supposed to be insane? Yes, that is what that house is used for. People are not sent there unless certified to be insane. It is an error in the Act; so that the building has not satisfied its purpose, which was to receive people of doubtful sanity. Those people now go to gaol as they did before. The great object was to keep them out of the gaol, their minds being affected by the associations of the place.
2262. President.] So that the intentions of the Legislature are defeated by the wording of the Act? Yes.
2263. And any person, however respectable, who is simply of doubtful sanity, must go to gaol? Yes. He must be proved to be insane before he can go into the receiving house.
2264. So that a person suspected to be of unsound mind would now have to go to gaol instead of to the receiving house? Exactly.

Mrs. Lucy Hicks, matron, Government Asylum, Hyde Park, called in and examined:—

2265. President.] You are the matron of the Hyde Park Asylums for aged women? Yes. Perhaps you will permit me to hand in this paper. It is a copy of my appointment. I have the sole charge of the institution. (Witness handed in a document.) Mrs. L. Hicks.
24 Sept., 1873.
2266. You have held this appointment since June, 1869? Yes. I was matron previous to that; but now I have the sole superintendence of the institution.
2267. What is the difference between the position which you hold now and the position that you held then? Very great. The whole responsibility now rests with me—I am in sole charge there.
2268. You can communicate directly with the Board of Management? Yes.
2269. Who formerly stood between you and the Board of Management before you occupied your present position? Mr. Applewaite, my former husband.
2270. What were his duties? He was then the superintendent of the institution, and I was the matron; what were then his duties I now perform, and I have no clerical assistance or anything of that sort. I have had all to do myself.
2271. On his death this office was not filled up, and you were permitted to discharge both duties? You see by that letter that the Board recommended that the vacancy should not be filled up.
2272. Have you received any increase of salary since you have discharged both duties? Yes.
2273. What did you receive before? Well, I held a double appointment in the Government Service previously. When Mr. Cowper—Sir Charles Cowper—placed me there, I was matron of the Immigrants' Depôt, and Mr. Applewaite was a clerk in the Immigration Department, with a salary of £285 per annum. We had a very good appointment then; and when the old people were brought there, Mr. Cowper wished us to undertake the duties connected with the Asylum, and promised us a salary of £300 per annum. When the other institution was formed our salaries for the Asylum duties were reduced to £200 per annum, and to make good the promise of the Government £100 each was given from immigration.
2274. What have you now altogether? I have £200 a year from the Asylum, and I have a nominal salary of £20 a year from the immigration. The latter was awarded simply to retain my services for a future period.
2275. You take charge now of the young women who come out here—the few immigrants who do come? Yes.
2276. What officers have you under you? I have not any officers to assist me beyond the servants of the institution.
2277. You have no storekeeper? No.
2278. Are there stores kept there? We merely have from time to time what we require, and I think that is the better plan myself.
2279. Have you to keep any books? Yes, I have to keep a good many books; I keep the store book, the ration returns, and I have to give in a monthly ration paper. I have to keep that every day myself, and I have to issue the orders for the rations every day. I also keep a diary, admission and discharge books, giving in a weekly return to the office, and a rough book of what we give out in the way of boots and shoes.
2280. You keep these books yourself? Yes.
2281. Mr. Metcalfe.] And you keep a stock book? Yes; my daughter does that for me. She puts every woman's name down as she gives them the boots and slippers, lest they should require them a little too often. She is not an officer of the institution, but she does that in a kind way for me. I always keep my books, and I make them up every night when all the people are in bed.

- Mrs. L. Hicks. 2282. Are there any paid servants on the place besides the inmates? Only one, and she is the laundress—I look to her for the laundry business.
- 24 Sept., 1873. 2283. How many inmates have you at present? To-day there are 220.
2284. What is the greatest number that you ever had? 229.
2285. Do you ever have people in there as inmates, who either could support themselves or who have relatives that are able to support them? Yes, we have.
2286. Do you think that there are any such cases there now? Might I be allowed to say that the fault of that rests upon the pauper laws of this Country.
2287. We are not ascribing any blame to you in the matter? I have nothing whatever to do with the admission of the inmates; but the Board cannot refuse to admit them, because they are really destitute, and I grieve to say that children will not always keep their parents. They should do so, but they do not. I may be permitted to mention a case that came under my notice the day before yesterday. A woman had her daughter come to see her (it struck me that she was rather dashingly dressed), and after she was gone the woman cried a good deal. I called the woman to me, and I said to her, "What is your distress?" Her reply was that her daughter wished her to go and live with her, and she had refused. I asked, "For what reason do you decline the offer?" and she said, "She is leading a very immoral life, and I cannot be a witness to it; I cannot change it, and I cannot witness such things; I had better live here than with her." I really pitied the woman, for she cried bitterly. There are several cases like that, and this was one that came under my notice the day before yesterday.
2288. Is this the only class of cases in which children are not supporting their parents? There may be a few of the old people who really cannot refrain from drink, and perhaps the children try to restrain them, but cannot keep them within bounds, and then they let the Government take charge of them.
2289. Mr. Metcalfe.] With you they cannot get drunk? No, they cannot.
2290. President.] They are not allowed out? Yes, three women are permitted liberty at a time—three every day, but all have to wait for their turn; they are never permitted out more than once a month, unless in a special way and as a special favour; as for instance, to-day, a woman's daughter died, and I gave her special leave of absence.
2291. What is the age of the oldest person you have there? 106.
2292. Is that the old woman whom we saw up-stairs? Yes.
2293. Do you think that the place is too crowded? Yes, decidedly so.
2294. What is the number, do you think, that could properly be accommodated there? It is too crowded now, but if the Government would spend a little money over it there might be a great many improvements made at Hyde Park which would give us quite room enough for all. We have some fine rooms in the Volunteer Department, which would be very good if there were a little money spent on them.
2295. Buildings which were formerly occupied by the Volunteers? Yes. There is the large band-room, for instance; it would be invaluable if it were in proper repair.
2296. Mr. Metcalfe.] What is the matter with it now? It is in a most deplorable state.
2297. President.] Is it so bad that you cannot make use of it? Yes; I could not sleep myself with the knowledge that people were in such danger. It is not safe in the day-time.
2298. The roof might fall in? Yes, the roof might come down. If that place were put in repair it would give us some room. The Government did speak of turning my apartments into two wards, and that would give accommodation within the building for forty more women; and they would build me a cottage at the gate.
2299. Inside the gate? Yes, at the corner where the large room is; either there or at the armoury. They said it might be done at little expense, taking the present foundation and building upon it. That would give us abundance of room for all our inmates.
2300. Mr. Metcalfe.] But I suppose that the more room you got the more applicants you would have to fill it? Yes; I think that there are many turned away who should be admitted.
2301. President.] A portion of the building is set apart for the immigrants who arrive? Yes, a portion of the main building.
2302. How much of the building is taken up in that way? Two large rooms, a large ward, and a dining hall. I had formerly three other rooms and an office, but Mr. Wise, at the time the Census was in preparation, applied and got these rooms, and his having them has put me to very great inconvenience. I have now no office or any other accommodation. The Board, I believe, have written in about it.
2303. Have these rooms ceased to be used for the purposes of the Census? They have.
2304. And you have not got them? No.
2305. You have not the use of more than half of that building? Yes; rather more than half of it.
2306. Mr. Metcalfe.] What is done with the immigration rooms if there are no immigrants? The ward is not occupied, except in wet weather. I use my own discretion as to putting people in there, because in bad weather I do not like them to be in the Volunteer ward.
2307. President.] What accommodation would they afford, supposing that you used them? I have accommodated an immense number of immigrants there.
2308. But in the same way as in other parts of the institution? The sleeping ward would accommodate forty, and if I had the increased number, I would have to have the dining-hall for an additional dining-room.
2309. Then the place would accommodate about forty more? Yes, of course it would give more accommodation.
2310. Have you any young people there as inmates, besides the aged people? Yes, a few.
2311. What class of people are they? Blind; and we have a few idiots, or girls who have something wrong with them; there are some two or three idiots, and some complete cripples, who are very young.
2312. Have you ever applied for the removal of these idiots to the Asylum at Newcastle? I believe that our Board have; they always object to take that class of people in, but cannot help themselves. There are cases received from the Infirmary, and the Board have been compelled to admit them out of pure charity.
2313. Do you think it is desirable to have these idiots there? I do not.
2314. Have you sufficient means of looking after them? They are well looked after; we tell off one woman for that business entirely—one of the inmates.
2315. Mr. Metcalfe.] You think that they are comfortable? Yes, I think that they are happy.

2316. The room in which they were seemed very damp and dark? The room is dull, but I see them Mrs. L. Hicks.
cheerful. I always make it my business to say, "Well, girls, are you comfortable here?" and I never have any complaints.

24 Sept., 1873.

2317. President.] How many are there there? I have eight in that room; one has St. Vitus's dance very badly—cannot sit up from it. I cannot say that they are all idiots. There are eight very bad cases in that room.

2318. Are you satisfied with the way in which the contracts for the supplies are carried out? Very much so, particularly this year; they are very well carried out; there are no complaints.

2319. Do you find that the bread contract is properly carried out? I do.

2320. Do you weigh it every day? I do. I will not say every day myself, but I do in a general way. I may miss a morning, and then my cook will send up to me and say, "Don't hurry down; the bread is correct." I may miss a morning if I have been up late writing or cutting out. But the contractors know that I am very particular, and that I never look over any fault. I think that the fairest way to weigh the bread is to take four loaves at a time. We serve it out in that way to the messes. I take the four loaves and put them in the scale, and I am satisfied if they are the proper weight. I do this with all, and it is much fairer to everybody than to weigh the bread altogether.

2321. You divide the people into messes? Yes; messes of eight.

2322. Do they divide the bread amongst them? Yes; a mess gets four loaves amongst them. We have an odd mess too—not a full mess—and if a woman leaves me the cook places one out of the odd mess into the woman's place; and we appoint one as the captain woman—the strongest woman of the eight, and she brings the tea in and the soup, and so on. We endeavour to give them their meals as comfortably as we can—it adds to their comfort.

2323. The allowance of bread is half a loaf to each woman? Yes. When I say that four loaves are divided amongst eight women, I mean that the women prefer having a whole loaf one day and none the next. As there are eight in a mess, four of them take a loaf each to-day, and the other four to-morrow.

2324. And do they go without altogether on one day? No, they have fresh bread one day and stale bread the next day: there can be no quarrelling or dissatisfaction.

2325. Do they divide the bread as they please? The four on one side take it one morning, and the four on the other side the next morning. They have their quantity every day; and they prefer it in that way.

2326. Mr. Metcalfe.] But if there are four new persons come in you cannot do that? In that case we cut a loaf in half in the kitchen before giving it out.

2327. And the meat—do you serve it out cut up? We never cut it up.

2328. You serve it out in the joint? Yes, in the joint.

2329. They cannot understand that in Parramatta? I assure you that the old people have meat on the table as comfortable as I have myself.

2330. Nice plates of soup and so on? We have nice soup-tureens, and each tureen holds so much.

2331. President.] You find that they are quite able to carve the meat—they have knives and forks? Yes.
I go round whenever I think it necessary, and I see the plates on the tables and the knives and forks and everything, and I see that they all have their things—

2332. They have tins? Yes.

2333. How often are they cleaned? Every morning.

2334. Polished? Yes.

2335. Are you obliged to serve the soup in the same vessels in which you serve the tea? No, certainly not. I have teapots which hold each the proper quantity, and if the contractor brought them short I would send them back.

2336. Do you think that it is possible to put tea into a vessel that has just had soup in it without spoiling the tea? I should not like to have it myself.

2337. Mr. Metcalfe.] Do you think that these tin vessels would become brown if they were properly cleaned? I find that tin dishes are discoloured by tea when they are a long time in wear. When they get very old we discard them.

2338. You do not put tea into tin cups, do you? The women have tin cups, and they have each a pint of tea, which they pour out for themselves.

2339. President.] What do they have their soup in? In tureens and in their dishes; and their meat is always kept warm and comfortable, and it is brought in hot in the joint.

2340. Do you serve out the meat to each mess? Yes, to each mess; they are allowed one pound of meat each.

2341. Then there are eight pounds of meat to each mess? Yes, I very often tie up eight pounds and weight it, and see what it will turn out, and I generally find that it loses about two pounds; but we keep the proper hours in cooking. I like to have them comfortable. We take the meat up, and while it is being dished there are cloths thrown over, and the flour and so on is put into the soup quickly, and they get everything hot.

2342. Then it is not your experience that, if you wish to give people fifty pounds of cooked meat, you must order 100 pounds? Oh dear no. They have abundance, and they sit down to a quiet bit of lunch from the day before.

2343. Do you always give them boiled meat? They prefer it.

2344. Have you the means of giving them roast meat? We have a beautiful stove.

2345. Do you ever give them roast meat? Sometimes; on special days.

2346. Do you always give them beef? I always ask them which they prefer, and for the last few years they prefer large roast legs of mutton; and I make the butcher send them as near eight pounds weight as possible.

2347. I am speaking of ordinary days? Beef through the week and mutton on Sundays; but our contractors sends in half and half, so that we give some of them mutton and some beef every day. Our cook gives them tickets, and when they come for their dishes they present the tickets, and she says, "Oh, you got mutton yesterday, you get beef to-day; there, take your dish."

2348. Do you pay the servants small wages? Yes.

2349. What are they allowed? Some two-pence, some three-pence, some four-pence, six-pence, and two at a shilling.

2350. Per day? Yes. It is only very lately that they have had a shilling, but they have deserved it—they have been so many years with us. I suggested it to the Board, and they kindly allowed it.

2351.

- Mrs. L. Hicks. 2351. Is there any work done in the institution besides house-work? We do all the house-work. The cooking is good; we skim the soup you know; our soup is as nice as possible, and I am sure that any one could take a plate of it. We skim the soup and sell the fat, besides giving the old women all that they want of it.
2352. How are the vegetables supplied? Baptist has the contract.
2353. Is the labour of the inmates in any way remunerative? They make everything that they wear—everything. When Sir Charles Cowper brought them there he said that he wished the place to be as self-supporting as possible, and that has been my great aim.
2354. Mr. Metcalfe.] Where do you get the boots and shoes—they do not make those? No, they do not make those.
2355. Are they supplied by contract? Yes, tenders are called for by the Board; we only just get in enough to last us, and then we ask for more.
2356. President.] Who purchases the material for the dresses and clothing? The Board; tenders are always called for, and samples are brought.
2357. Mr. Metcalfe.] For your approval? For the Board's approval; but they generally send for me and ask my opinion.
2358. President.] Are you satisfied with the supply of these articles? Very much so indeed.
2359. Mr. Metcalfe.] Do the women dress in uniform? As nearly as possible; some wish to keep their own clothing—for instance, if a woman is in mourning.
2360. What colour is the dress? We used to have plaid until this winter, and I acknowledge that I made a mistake when I asked the Board to change it.
2361. What have you now? Winceys; and they have never looked the same; they are of a brown colour.
2362. President.] How is your bath accommodation? We find it very good, except that we could do with a larger room. We are obliged to let some of them go into the laundry to dress. We find it good in the summer.
2363. You do not give the old woman 106 years old a bath? Indeed she goes into the tub of water every Saturday morning like my own baby.
2364. All through the winter? Every Saturday, and washed every morning, excepting that I always try to do to them as I would be done by; and if it is a very cold wet day I stop the bath, because aged people require different treatment.
2365. Mr. Cowper.] I suppose the water is warm? Yes, always warm.
2366. President.] They do not bathe in cold water then? Oh dear no.
2367. Mr. Metcalfe.] But the bath in the yard is a cold water bath? No, poor creatures, not cold water; there are hot and cold taps.
2368. President.] There is no work done by which any money is earned for the institution? No. It is quite as much as we are able to do, to make for the place. I think it is very well to patch up and mend up as we do. There are sheets to be patched—because when a sheet goes into holes I do not throw it away; I turn the sides to the middle, and make it do again; the old women are celebrated for patching. Everything that is made is made in the house. We receive, perhaps, 1,000 yards of calico, and set to and cut it out; and I have felt greatly the loss of that office I used to have at the bottom of the stairs where I used to cut out.
2369. Mr. Metcalfe.] Who took that from you? Mr. Wise. Many times I had an hour to cut out, and I could lock the room up and leave it; but now I am obliged to keep at it, and say I am not at home, for I cannot leave the material when I once begin to cut it out. I have a woman, I should perhaps tell you, the head wardswoman—that is the one I spoke of as having 1s. a day—she is a very useful woman indeed.
2370. Is there anything which you wish to suggest to us for the improvement of the institution? There are many improvements which might be suggested; for instance, if we had a casual ward there, it would be a great blessing. We have very bad cases sent to us at times—cases that should not be sent to us at all—cases more fitted for the Infirmary.
2371. Sick people do you mean? Yes, I do; and we have no appliances for treating such cases, but our Board are obliged to take them in.
2372. Mr. Metcalfe.] They are chronic cases? Yes. I have had them sent from the Infirmary as incurable cases, and I have known them afterwards go out to service—one came to see me the other day. I think that we are treated unfairly in that respect. We get cancer cases, and I have no ward for cancer cases. It is not right to put such cases with the old women.
2373. President.] Have you any now? I have not; but it is seldom that I am without them; and another thing, it is not more than a week ago since I had a case of itch there; and that, with another very horrible disease, should not have been received there; such cases should not be brought to me. I have no room to put them by themselves. In this case the poor woman only lived a few days, and I cannot tell you what care we had to take with it to prevent the disease spreading through the institution. It did not, very fortunately, but it was only by the greatest care and always sending things to be burned, that it was prevented from spreading. Of course, if I had a casual ward to put such cases in, I would not say anything about them. Then, when insane people are sent to me, I think the doctor should have power to send them to the receiving house; but they are not, and it is a source of bitter complaint. We have to keep them for ten days or a fortnight sometimes, and I have only a small room to put them in, and that one woman will perhaps keep 100 poor old souls awake night after night. I think that it would be well if we were permitted to send them at once to the receiving house.
2374. President.] If you had these old Volunteer premises put in order, I suppose that you could make the band-room a casual ward then? Yes, that would give ample room for everything. People are sometimes brought to me by the escort at 7 and 8 o'clock at night, when our fires are all out; and I certainly do not approve of a person going into one of my beds without a bath. When they come in they go into a bath, and all the clothes belonging to them are put into a vessel of water and taken out and washed; I never allow a dirty rag to come into my place.
2375. Mr. Metcalfe.] People's outside clothes? Yes, everything. We wash our clothes every week.
2376. Mr. Cowper.] You want a casual ward for the reception of these people? Yes. I now have to get nurse up, and in the best way we can, we sponge the patient over, and in the morning we give her a bath. It is very disagreeable. Of course, I do not know when these people are coming; the escort brings them down to me, and they get in about 8 o'clock.

2377. What do you mean by escort cases? The police bring them down.
2378. How would you remedy that? A casual ward to place these people in every night would do, and then of course in the morning you could clean them.
2379. Supposing that it was decided to move this institution out of Sydney, would there not be a difficulty in moving these old people? Oh, a great deal. There never was a more cruel thing than moving the institution to Port Macquarie.
2380. Mr. Metcalfe.] Were you there? No, but they used to cry so bitterly.
2381. What did they cry about? They are not able to go to sea; some of these people are so feeble that, if you were to take them a journey, they would die I am sure.
2382. I think you are too tender in your ideas? I think that in a town like Sydney you must have such a place.
2383. President.] We did not hear of many deaths among the 600 or 700 people there? I do not know.
2384. Mr. Metcalfe.] If there are quarters for them at Port Macquarie, do you not think that they ought to be used? The poor old people would not like it.
2385. But if you were leaving your Country on your own account you would have to go in a ship, and what more hardship is there for them? I should be sorry to see them sent there.
2386. Mr. Cowper.] In any case would not a receiving-house be required here? Certainly.
2387. There must be some establishment of the kind in the town? Yes, it would be required in any case. Even now there are people turned away from the gate who should be admitted. I have not the power to admit (which I am glad of), but certainly at night-time when cases come to me, it makes a great difference to me to send them away to get a night's lodging.
2388. President.] Is there anything else, beside the casual ward and the power to remove lunatics, that you wish to remind us of? No; I think those are very necessary.
2389. And you think that the imbeciles there should be removed to Newcastle? Yes, I think so.
2390. Do you know whether people are ever refused for want of room? Oh yes, certainly, very often. I think the institution should hold 250.
2391. Mr. Metcalfe.] Do you not think that place at Port Macquarie should be made available? It would be a great misery to them; half of them would not go there; they would rather starve in the streets of Sydney.

Mrs. L. Hicks.

MONDAY, 29 SEPTEMBER, 1873.

Members Present:—

WILLIAM CHARLES WINDEYER, Esq., PRESIDENT.

MICHAEL METCALFE, Esq.

SAMUEL GOOLD, Esq.

CHARLES COWPER, JUN., Esq.

Arthur Renwick, Esq., M.D., Medical Attendant, Maternity Hospital, called in and further examined:—

2392. President.] I believe that you are the medical attendant at the Benevolent Asylum in George-street? Yes.
2393. How long have you been attending there? I was elected honorary medical officer in February, 1862, and was appointed visiting medical officer in April, 1862.
2394. There is a salary attached to the office, I suppose? Yes, to the office I now hold.
2395. What is it? It is either £200 or £250 per annum—£250 I think it is.
2396. How often do you have to attend there? There is no fixed rule, but I attend there twice a day; and as often as I am sent for, but regularly twice a day.
2397. What is the present sanatory state of the institution? It is very good at present.
2398. Have you anything to say about the building at all, as to the accommodation and so on—is it suitable for the purpose? Yes, it is suitable for the purpose for which it is at present used. The buildings were not originally intended for their present purpose. It was an institution for the relief of the poor, aged and infirm, but some twelve years ago the character of the institution was completely altered—that was about the time that I became connected with the institution. When I first took office there as medical officer, in conjunction with Drs. Bland and Burgon and Walker, the old people were not removed. A Commission had sat to inquire into the state of the institution at the time, and I saw then the state of things as they were represented at that commission.
2399. It was not very satisfactory I believe? Very unsatisfactory indeed: it is very different there now.
2400. That was the reason it was broken up? Yes.
2401. Have you any reason to believe that the charity of the institution is abused in any way by persons who obtain admission there, though they have no right to obtain it? I think that the whole of the cases are carefully examined into by the Board. There have been cases of women confined there who have been found to have several pounds, but I do not think there have been more than three or four cases of that kind. With regard to the out-door relief, there are no doubt some cases of imposition there.
2402. Does that come under your notice? I was going to say that, as one of my duties, I advise the Board: I am present at all meetings, and, of course, in connection with the out-door relief, I am called upon to state whether I consider such a person suitable for relief, and the Board is guided accordingly. I am always present when these cases come before the Board.
2403. What is your reason for thinking that the charity of the institution is abused in the out-door relief department? Because I have heard the history of these persons subsequently, and the cases have been exposed at the Board meetings. One case I remember, of a man living at Waterloo, and it so happened that, on looking over the police news one day, I happened to see it stated as given in evidence that this man, though he received relief from the Benevolent Asylum, was in the possession of a house, and that he used the rations that came from the Asylum to feed his fowls, and so on. I brought the matter before the Board, and Mr. Mansfield became acquainted with it, and the man was struck off. Every now and then reports are made that such and such cases are unworthy cases—persons who either do not require relief or have become the subjects of intoxication.

- A. Renwick, Esq., M.D.
2404. Are you satisfied with the manner in which the nursing of the lying-in women is carried on? Perfectly satisfied.
2405. The midwife has been there for many years I believe? She was there before I had any connection with the institution at all—under the old régime—and subsequently for about six years, she has been under me there again. Her sister was a lying-in nurse for a considerable time; she has not had what is called a modern training, but before she came to this Colony at all, she was sixteen or seventeen years in the Manchester Hospital.
2406. The sister of this woman? No, this woman we have now. I have every confidence in her.
2407. And are you satisfied in other respects with the management of the place? Yes, I am satisfied so far. There are things that may be improved upon, and no doubt will be. Since I have been connected with the place we have made a great many alterations in the state of things; for example, before the year 1864, there was no separation or classification of the women—married and unmarried, pregnant and recently confined women, were all mixed up together. I used to send in a report to the Board, in which I gave them periodically the medical history of the house, and any facts which I thought proper to bring under their notice; and in one of these reports I stated the importance of separating the unmarried women from the married women, and the pregnant from the recently confined, for the sake of morality and for other reasons. Two large wards were built, and since that time I have been able to separate the married women from the unmarried women, and also those pregnant from those who are waiting to go out—a similar arrangement in fact to that which is adopted in the Rotunda and other hospitals at Home. There was no gas before that date. I recommended the use of gas—I don't think it is much cheaper—as much cleaner and safer, and better for the institution than the oil lamps before used. They used to have oil lamps—tin things that they carried about. In the year 1866 I recommended them to build a small hospital to serve as a quarantine for the children on their coming into the institution. At that time they were all mixed together, and the institution was never free from skin diseases. There was a hospital built, and we now receive the children there. In 1868 we improved the ventilation of the house. Formerly there were lateral holes above and below in the rooms, but it was found that they did not answer the purpose in rooms where women were recently confined, and we use the double tube ventilator, principally on the recommendation of the Rev. Canon Walsh, Mr. E. Deas Thomson and myself. Another matter I spoke about some little time ago to the Board, but they have not carried it out at present, as they are endeavouring to repair the outside of the institution—that is, the putting of verandahs round about the inside, the improvement of the yards, and fencing the outside near Devonshire-street. When that is done, the next thing is a plan for providing separate rooms for accouchement cases. We cannot be more successful than we have hitherto been in the treatment of cases of that kind; but having seen these rooms adopted in England and Victoria, I thought that we might have rooms for bad cases here, and for the sake of separation which might be expedient. That is an improvement which is now under consideration.
2408. Mr. Metcalfe.] It would not encourage people to go there to be confined? I think not. All cases are inquired into. The only cases that come into the hospital and that might be treated outside are cases of great danger to the women—for instance, women who have experienced great hardship coming in to be confined. There are women sent in there with deformities of the pelvis and things of that sort. We have several of these cases—bad cases—every year, and these are the only cases which can be considered cases of imposition.
2409. President.] In such cases as this is a midwife capable of attending to them? No, these cases are attended to by myself; in fact, I consider myself responsible for every case, and for the medical results of the institution.
2410. Mr. Gould.] Do these parties ever pay anything? Oh no: I have known one or two cases in which they have paid, but the committee considered that they were only allowed to take in urgent cases and cases of paupers; and according to the correspondence, that was the agreement entered into between the Board and the Colonial Secretary of the day, Mr. Cowper. I may state also that we train nurses in the Benevolent Asylum.
2411. President.] How many have you in training there? We have none just now, but we have trained several—we have one or two yearly.
2412. Do they receive any pay? No, they do not receive any pay whatever; they pay nothing for learning, and they do as much to assist in the place as lies in their power. We have an examination weekly.
2413. The mortality of the infants is very small there? Yes, of infants belonging to the institution; but the principal mortality is amongst the young children who come in without their mothers, and many of them in a dying state. I should think that three-fourths of the deaths are entirely due to that. A woman may come up in the course of the day with her child. I see her at my visit, and I find that the child is in a sickly or perhaps dying state, and that the mother has no means of tending it. Of course she is taken in. That child may not rally. We have sometimes had the children thus brought dead to the institution. We have four or five children sometimes brought in to suckle, but of course the Board has no means of treating them—the mother frequently is diseased as well as the child. Of course the mortality occurs among these children. I do not think that in the course of the last four or five years we have lost above four or five children admitted into the institution under ordinary circumstances.
2414. What success have you in rearing foundlings? It is not favourable, but not more unfavourable than in other institutions of the same kind. We have a large number of them—I think twenty or thirty—reared under these circumstances in the house.
2415. Are they nursed? Yes, by women confined in the house—suckled; these women are paid for doing so—they get an extra allowance of food, and so on. I may state in this connection, when I went first to the institution there were so many dying children brought into the place that I used to have a Coroner's inquest once a month by way of giving the institution publicity, and letting mothers know that there was a place to which they might bring their children earlier for treatment.
2416. The internal economy of the place is solely in the charge of Mrs. Blundell? Yes, and Mr. Mansfield.
2417. What has Mr. Mansfield to do? He was originally the master of the institution at the time that the old people were there; but when the change was made it was thought better to have a matron. I think that there have been five or six matrons there since that time—Mrs. Blundell is the last. Mr. Mansfield having been master still continues to exercise some authority. For instance, if anything goes wrong in the way of fences being down and so on, he attends to it; but as regards the management of the women it is principally in Mrs. Blundell's hands.
- 2418.

2418. I see you have some notes there;—perhaps you had better take your own course in giving evidence? Would you like to see how many married women and how many single women have been confined in the institution? A. Renwick,
Esq., M.D.

2419. Yes, if you please? This tabulated statement (statement produced. See Appendix T) shows the number of women in the lying-in hospital, and their condition as to wedlock, in those years. There is a total of 689 unmarried women and 429 married women; total, 1,118. 29 Sept., 1873.

2420. In what time? From 1863 to 1872. The rate of maternal mortality is as follows:—One woman died in 1863 with puerperal fever; two women died in 1870 with convulsions—and both died a few hours after admission; so that really speaking only one woman has died in connection with the lying-in department there. It is important sometimes to have an account of the nationality of the women, and I have given a table of that. There are from England, 179; Scotland, 27; Ireland, 382; New South Wales, 387; Victoria, Queensland, British America, United States, East Indies, Germany, 39. Total for nine years, 1,014. Then further, I have thought it would be important information for you to know how many children had been discharged to other institutions, as the place is only a receiving house for children. There were discharged in 1862, one to the Protestant Orphan School, one to the Deaf and Dumb Institution. From 1863 to 1872, there were 778 children discharged to the Randwick institution, and various others to these other institutions which I have given in these tables.

2421. Mr. Metcalfe.] Have they all gone to Randwick? Yes, and there are about eighty waiting now who will be removed next month.

2422. President.] How many? About eighty—from fifty to eighty. They will be prepared and ready to go next month. The Randwick Board come and inspect these children, and see that they are thoroughly sound and clean before they leave this place.

2423. Mr. Cowper.] Is it a fact that the Randwick authorities come and pick the children? Yes, they do. We have children in the place now who have been refused five or six times by the Randwick authorities.

2424. Is there any reason for this? If the children have any bodily defect they refuse to take them.

2425. What kind of defect? If they are lame, for example, or blind of one eye. Unless they are in a perfectly sound state they will not take them.

2426. Mr. Metcalfe.] They want prize children? Yes, and will take no others.

2427. Will they take scrofulous children? No, on no account.

2428. President.] What becomes of those children who are not up to the standard of excellence? We keep them; some we send to the country as servants.

2429. Do you see any reason why they should not go to Randwick? I see no reason whatever.

2430. Would they injure the others there? No.

2431. Are they capable of improvement? Some of them are most intelligent—these children have an increased development of intellectual power; but if there is any bodily blemish about the children they are refused.

2432. How long have the children who have been left the longest in the institution been there? In the Benevolent Asylum?

2433. Yes? There is one there thirteen or fourteen years old.

2434. What is the defect in that case? It has something wrong with the ankle—merely a deformity, nothing else.

2435. Can the child walk? Yes, perfectly. We have a girl as a servant in one of the wards—there is a girl of eighteen or nineteen. She has a scrofulous disease, and she has been refused every time the children have been removed.

2436. Mr. Metcalfe.] Is that infectious? No, not in the slightest degree at all.

2437. Mr. Gould.] How many children have been refused? I cannot tell. Not a great number. People come for these children and take them out as servants, under the conditions imposed by the Board as to food, education, and so on—the usual bond. This system of selection is a very sore thing. In fact, originally, until within the last two or three years, when I called attention to the matter, the Randwick committee were in the habit of sending a deputation down and picking the children themselves, without any representatives of our Asylum being present at all.

2438. Mr. Metcalfe.] The children feel this to be a sort of degradation? No, they do not; they prefer staying where they are.

2439. President.] How is that? I do not know. Some of the mothers had children at Randwick, and they did not seem satisfied, and they spread a bad name about it; but I know for a fact that on two or three occasions the children were in the habit of scratching themselves with pins to prevent their being selected to go to Randwick.

2440. Do you know the grounds of dissatisfaction on the part of these mothers? They are very ignorant persons, and have all sorts of opinions as to what should be done with their children; I suppose that it is something of that kind; I never inquired into it.

2441. But you found no foundation for their complaints? I did not consider it proper to inquire any further into the matter at all.

2442. Do you know of the existence of two small Denominational Schools in the Asylum? Yes. Originally there was only one school; but certain members of the committee, several years ago, thought that it would be advisable to separate the children, and they were separated accordingly. The first schoolmistress that was appointed there—who was the woman that is now a nurse in the institution—and it was thought that she was not competent to manage the children. The Board advertised for a trained schoolmistress, and got a Miss Bowie. She was the sole teacher of all the children. She left shortly afterwards; and I think it was from that time that two teachers were appointed—one Roman Catholic, and one Protestant.

2443. Mr. Metcalfe.] Were you at the Board when that was carried? Yes.

2444. What reason was given for it? I forget—it is so long ago.

2445. President.] Do you see any sufficient reason, for this? I see no reason, except perhaps that when there is a large number of children there, two persons can manage them better than one, as far as the arrangements go; but of course I approve of their all being taught together on the same system.

2446. Is there anything else that you have to add about this institution? I do not think that there is anything further.

2447. Mr. Cowper.] Have you visited a similar institution to this in Melbourne? Yes, the Lying-in Hospital there.

2448. Is it similar to the one here? It is separate from the institution for children there.

- A. Renwick, Esq., M.D.
29 Sept., 1873.
2449. But it is the same in other respects? Yes, it answers the same purposes, and it is, I think, exactly of the same character as ours.
2450. Is it conducted entirely under Government management, or by a committee? It is supported partly by subscription. They have a ladies' committee there, and I am not sure whether there is a gentleman's committee or not.
2451. Does that committee manage the place independently of the Government? Yes, altogether.
2452. Was it not started by some lady? Yes, I think so.
2453. Do you think that our institution is equal to that one? Our institution is in some respects superior to it, and inferior in others. It is inferior inasmuch as we have not the same accommodation, and no separate rooms—(the women there are not confined in a ward, but in separate rooms.) The Melbourne institution has some other advantages—it is separate, quiet, and retired; but our institution is superior as regards the results of the treatment. In that institution they have three or four deaths—they have never less than two or three—annually. I know their percentage of mortality is over one per cent., while ours is only one in a thousand.
2454. Then you see no great difference, except that there a room is given to each patient? Yes. In other respects I see no great difference. The economical management of the place may be superior to ours—I mean with regard to keeping books and things of that kind—they pay a great amount of attention to those things there.
2455. Are there more officers there than here? Yes, a separate matron and resident medical officer, two or three honorary medical officers, two or three nurses. They have a large number of confinements per annum—about 140 I think.
2456. What is the average here? 130, I think, this year, or nearly so.
2457. Did you visit any other institutions in Melbourne—the Government institutions? Yes, I visited all the institutions when I was there.
2458. Did you pay any attention to the way in which they managed the Industrial Schools or Reformatories there? Yes. Do you mean in regard to making them remunerative?
2459. Were they near the city? Most of them are kept out of the city—contiguous to it, but still outside.
2460. Are they built near to one another, or at some distance apart? Some little distance from each other.
2461. Are the Reformatories surrounded by walls? I do not know. I have here a copy of the dietary scale of the Asylum, if you wish to have it. (See Appendix T 1.)
2462. President.] Is there anything further that you wish to suggest about this institution? No. I have nothing further to say. I think that having the schools amalgamated would be a proper thing. It would prevent a good deal of the internal dissension that occurred among the persons in charge of the schools. The school could be managed by one person, who could have an assistant if the numbers increased.
2463. Mr. Metcalfe.] And the work would be done better? Yes, decidedly.
2464. President.] It has been suggested to us that Boards of management of these institutions should be composed entirely of laymen? Yes, I am decidedly of that opinion. I mentioned it with regard to the Infirmary, and I think it should be carried out with regard to all public institutions.
2465. Mr. Metcalfe.] On what ground? Well, it is a very unpleasant thing for me to enter into a matter of that kind, because I know my evidence will be read by some for whom I have the highest respect; but the most discreditable scenes I have ever seen at the meetings have occurred between clergymen. When religious matters come up dissension seems inevitable, and matters are carried to a very great length. The same thing does occur among laymen sometimes, but never with the same bitterness. I think if the Boards were composed of a smaller number of members, and there were no clergymen upon them, the institution would be better managed.
2466. Mr. Gould.] If you have popular election you cannot prevent it? The elections are a perfect farce; the subscribers never know of them, and take little interest in them, unless there is some particular object to be gained, or some purpose to be subserved on some special occasion.
2467. President.] Do you not think that, considering the large amount which the Government contribute to this institution, they should have some voice in the management? I think so. If the Government selected two men they would be sure to appoint good men, and they would have an influence with the others with regard to any matters that might arise.
2468. Mr. Metcalfe.] Are you on the Randwick Board? No, I am not. I believe matters are equally bad there also.
2469. Then you think that the number of this Board might be very largely reduced? With great advantage to the institution. I am quite sure that the business is frequently obstructed owing to the largeness of the committee.
2470. President.] You have seen unpleasantness arise from the large size of the committee? Yes.
2471. Useless discussions? Yes.
2472. Mr. Metcalfe.] How large do you think that a Board should be? I think that six or eight competent members would be quite sufficient to conduct all the business connected with any Board.
2473. President.] I believe that you are the visiting medical officer at the Asylum for the Deaf and Dumb and the Blind? Yes.
2474. I suppose you have been so since its foundation? No, only within the last four or five years have I attended it.
2475. Is that an honorary office? Yes, an honorary office.
2476. How are you satisfied with that institution? I am very well satisfied with the present institution; there is only one drawback—that is the sewerage. At present the public sewers do not reach so far, and, consequently, they have now to send the sewage down to a large cesspool at a distance from the building. That is a great drawback; they do use earth closets, but from the house the sewage is conducted to a cesspool, as I have said. I think that it would be a great advantage to have the city water laid on; at present they have tanks, and I do not think the city water supply reaches to that part of the town.
2477. Is there not continually water there? Yes, there is plenty of water, and the water is good; it is rain water; but still, if there was a more copious supply, it would be more advantageous to the place.
2478. Is there anything peculiar in the cases in that institution as distinguished in any way from similar cases in the Mother Country? No, not as far as I have seen.

2479. There is nothing of a local character? No, nothing worthy of notice. I have never noticed anything peculiarly distinctive.

2480. Are any of these children blind from what is known as blight? Yes, several of them are. They come principally from the country districts.

2481. Mr. Metcalfe.] Could they not be cured? Yes, the disease is easily remedied at first, but frequently in the bush the eyes are neglected until at the last moment it is found that the thing has gone too far—that both eyes have burst.

2482. President.] How is that? The contents of the chambers burst completely out.

2483. Can they not be supplied? No, they are completely lost.

2484. That arises from inflammation of the eye-ball? Purulence on the eye-ball, but inflammation of other parts of the eye running rapidly into pus. It is sometimes caused by disease in the mothers; it occurs after birth; we have had several cases in the Benevolent Asylum.

2485. Venereal disease? No, sometimes it arises from constitutional disease in the mother—sometimes from the specific poison of a disease, and then it is a serious matter indeed. Sometimes a child will lose an eye, but in ordinary cases the eye is restored to sight in ninety-nine cases out of one hundred.

2486. Mr. Metcalfe.] Do you think that all the children at that institution are incurably blind? We only take in incurably blind cases there—children who are hopelessly blind. All the children are examined by me, and if there is a chance of a child getting its sight it is put under medical treatment. There were some cases in which I had a doubt, but we took the children in for training, as no operation could be performed upon them. These children come from all parts of the Colony, and from Queensland.

2487. Have you any figures that would be of interest with reference to this place? No, I have nothing in connection with the deaf and dumb. It is rarely that I go to the Board meetings there, because there is no necessity.

2488. Mr. Metcalfe.] You think that the management of the place there is good? As far as I see, it is very good.

WEDNESDAY, 1 OCTOBER, 1873.

Members Present:—

WILLIAM CHARLES WINDEYER, Esq., PRESIDENT.

MICHAEL METCALFE, Esq.

SAMUEL GOOLD, Esq.

CHARLES COWPER, JUN., Esq.

Mr. Stephen Robins called in and examined:—

2489. President.] I believe you are a City Missionary? Yes.

2490. You are no doubt aware of the object of this Commission, which is to inquire into the Public Charities of the Colony, and we thought that from your moving about a good deal among the poor of the city you could give us some information which would be of use with reference to some of our charitable institutions? Yes. I have had a good deal of experience now of course, among the poor of the city.

Mr. S. Robins.

1 Oct., 1873.

2491. How long have you been engaged in this work? Between eleven and twelve years.

2492. Chiefly in the city? Among the poor of the city.

2493. Do you know anything of the class of people who receive out-door relief from the Benevolent Asylum? Yes, I know a great many of them.

2494. Do you think that there are any grounds for supposing that the charity of that institution is at all abused by persons seeking assistance who have no right to that kind of relief? Yes, in many cases.

2495. Do you think that that is going on now? Well, I do not think that there is any improvement in that way—I may say, probably. Anything that I know of I have a way of conveying it to the institution, and I have conveyed a great many cases.

2496. We have been given to understand that you have assisted the institution in that way a good deal? Yes, I had four people at this end of the town who were imposing a good deal on the institution. Of course the secretary of the institution is given to understand that it is no use for him to go to find these cases out; I get my information from the people themselves. I go into their houses, and when they quarrel among themselves, these people are fond of tale-bearing, and they tell me all each other's secrets, and they seldom tell me anything good of one another. They tell me all the black sides of things, but I do not listen to them, except it is about a thing of this kind. One man was working and getting £2 a week, and his boy was carrying out newspapers, and he got relief from the Asylum; another party, a woman, kept cows, and she had two or three cows, and the man was working on the wharfs occasionally; and the others were similar individuals, and all of them had incomes of £2 a week or more.

2497. And these people got relief from the Asylum? Yes, all four of them.

2498. Mr. Metcalfe.] Got rations? Yes. Of course the Board is so kind to me that it is my place to vindicate it, though of course it would do me an injury to have my name published in a case of this kind, because I should get no access to some of them then; if they knew I told these things, I should not be able to do them any spiritual good. That is my object of course; so the thing is simply this—that if I convey this to Mr. Mansfield it has been in this way, not to let any one know how it has been found out. I often find out some person who has been imposing—perhaps a drunkard—and I go and let Mr. Mansfield know, and he brings the case up before the committee, and the people do not know where the information has been got. I say that it would do the Society an injury, and do the Missions an injury too, if they knew of it—we could not convey the Truth to them. I have been doing this for eleven years. There was one woman who had a lot of money in the Savings Bank—quite £100 I believe—and she was getting relief from the institution. The Rev. Mr. Rogers gave an order for it. The husband was killed at Cutburt's Wharf, and there was a good collection for the woman—the ladies were very charitable to the family and gave her work, and she economised and had £100 in the bank. One woman, her neighbour, said to me, "That woman has a lot of money in the Savings Bank—I do not think she should have rations from the Asylum." So of course I conveyed that to Mr. Mansfield, and he fetched the woman up before the committee, and she got Mr. Rogers to go and vindicate her, and he said that some ill-disposed persons

Mr. S. Robins. had been saying this. So I said "Go to the Savings Bank," and he went; and the Manager said he did not know whether the woman had the money, but he would let him know. Then Mr. Rogers came up again and pleaded hard that this woman should be allowed the relief—said that she was an industrious woman, and then he pleaded so hard for her to be allowed 1s. 6d. a week for her rent, and he got it; and just as he was going out the postman came with a letter and handed it to Mr. Mansfield, and he read it; and the letter was to say that the deposit the woman had in the bank was just drawn out—that it was about £100; and Mr. Rogers had just got her 1s. 6d. a week, thinking that she had no money. I found these out by the people falling out amongst themselves, and if she knew that I told of it of course she would not receive me very well. But all the information I get I convey to Mr. Mansfield, on the understanding that he will not let even the Board know from whom he gets it. There was a case at Woolloomooloo; Mr. Mansfield wrote to me and asked me to go and find out about it. It was not in my district, but as it providentially happened, there was a person living opposite that I knew, and we got into conversation, and he showed me a Bible he had got, and I said "Who lives over the road there?" and he said "They drink there, and they get their rations from the Asylum." I investigated the matter then, and he showed me that this man had £1 a week from a Benefit Society, and kept a green-grocer's shop—and a pretty tidy shop—he has got a shop there now. When the rations were stopped, one of the Fathers wrote a very beautiful letter to the Board, and said that the woman was in great distress, and that whoever this was (he said it was a Presbyterian Minister who had done this, for he must have seen me over the road and thought I was one)—whoever this was that had stopped the supplies, the people were in sore distress. And these people were getting drunk every night, there was a public house very handy, and this gentleman's house was at the other corner, so that there was no mistake about it. If I find a case where there is a doubt, I never make a stir about it until I find it out.

2499. Do you think that this is going on now? Yes. I am almost certain that it is. I have several cases under notice now, and I was thinking the other day (though it was taking too much on myself, but I have done it too) that I would place myself up against the gate there. I know so many of these people, and could see who they were that got relief. Of course when Mr. Mansfield writes to me I look after a case, but I have no business to run all over the town. If I see an old man there who I know has money, of course I just let Mr. Mansfield know of it. We get this information amongst the people themselves—they tell us from house to house where we go. They tell us what rent they pay and everything else; what income they have, and whether they go to the Benevolent Asylum, and to all these institutions. The great distress in Sydney generally is not known; the good people who are in distress will not go for relief. I have known several people who have been almost starved and who will not go to these places; they have got independence of their own.

2500. Can you suggest any method by which this kind of imposition can be checked,—can they be watched any further than they are now by the voluntary efforts of those who take an interest in the matter, like yourself? I cannot say. You could not employ any one who could get further information than I get. I did say that I would go up to the Benevolent Asylum some day, and, as I said before, I would know some of these people, and I could just warn other missionaries about them.

2501. Do you think that there is any way besides that;—supposing that we had not persons who took an interest in the matter, like yourself, to prevent this kind of imposition—is there no way that you can suggest for detecting cases of this kind;—do you think that if a detective was employed he could find these things out? Not a bit of it. I think he would be as far off as any one. There is no one can find them out like a city missionary, for this reason—that we can go into these cases and the people tell us everything. I told a policeman where to get those girls from the island; I told him where they were, and told him to open the door without knocking; they were inside there, and the stupid fellow went and rapped at the door and the girls ran away. I saw them there at a window, looking out, and I told the policeman to go and open the door, and I said, "I go, and I never rap." I go quietly and open the door and visit these people, and there were these two girls in the back room. The policeman rapped at the door and I saw the two girls looking down from a window over his head, and of course they were out like a shot at the back. If the man had gone in they would have been seen and he would have got them. I asked him why he did not go in quietly, and he said that he had no authority.

2502. Then you do not think that the Society can do better than avail itself of your efforts? No. I think that if you send a detective you will not get on much. I do not know how he would begin. I saw one looking after two thieves, and these thieves have a good eye for a detective; and though we never detect anybody (we never do take up thieves), still we like to see them stopped. I did point out to the detectives where these thieves were—that was in Exeter-place; but they said they would take no notice of me. They went to every house up the street but this house, which I had come out of. The blinds were down, and these two men were in there when the detectives went to the house. They went to every other house first, and I pointed to this house; and when they went into it, the men jumped over the fence and were away without their knowing anything of it.

2503. Do you know anything of the Industrial School at Biloela? No.

2504. Have you ever come across any of the girls that have been sent there—do you know anything of them? I have seen a good many girls that have been sent there, and I have been the means of sending some of them there.

2505. Have you seen any of them since? Yes. There is one of mine by the name of Coulter; she is at Maitland; she has got a situation there; she is doing well. I think that when they go away they do well, but if they come back to the town they are just as bad as ever. If they are kindly treated you can do anything with them, but if they are harshly dealt with they will not stand it.

2506. You have not been to the Benevolent Asylum on any day when people have been getting their rations there? I have been there. I saw a man who came in from Bathurst, and he was waiting about the gate, and I popped in and told Mr. Mansfield that he was an imposter, who would not take employment. I saw him on the Racecourse with a woman. The Rev. Mr. Vidal gave him an order, and Mr. Mansfield would not give him any rations until he had made further inquiry, and he went away and did not come back. I think he was a shoemaker—a strong able man; he had got rations, and wanted to get money to go back to Bathurst, I think.

2507. Do you think that this imposition is carried on to such an extent as would make it advisable to give up this system of out-door relief? I do not think so. If these people did not get it there, they would have to go to some other place or starve. The other institutions, such as that at Liverpool, and that at Hyde

Hyde Park, and that at Parramatta, all appear to be pretty full, and if there was no out-door relief many of these poor people would have to go into those places or into some place. Mr. S. Robins.

2508. Will the Soup Kitchen give relief to children as well as to grown people? If they go down at dinner-time and take a can down, they will get some soup in the can, and they can take it home. 1 Oct., 1873.

2509. That is cheaper relief than the out-door relief given at the Benevolent Asylum? Yes, but it is not anything permanent like that which is given to people who go to the Benevolent Asylum and get three or four loaves of bread or some flour, and who have a supply given them for a week at a time nearly.

2510. Do you think that pauperism is increasing in Sydney? Yes, I think it is. Of course, as you know, most of it is through drunkenness.

2511. In many cases of genuine distress the people have too much independence of spirit to seek relief from a public charity? Yes. I went into a place not long ago in my own district, and there was a man lying there paralyzed in his limbs and back, and he could not move. His wife, as I learned, went out occasionally to do a day's washing, but he was so bad that often she could not leave him. I said—"How do you live?" He said—"We have very little; my wife worked two days last week, and now it is two days since we have had anything to eat." I said—"Where is your wife now?" He said—"She has gone out now." He had been lying there all alone since a little after 6 o'clock, and I said to him "Do you ever get rations from the Benevolent Asylum?" and he said, "No." I said—"Do you never think of doing so?" He said—"Yes, I have thought of it, but it would break my poor wife's heart to go up there—she would sooner wash night and day than go up there." I have found a good many similar cases to that. Of course I relieved the man—I gave him a shilling; and sometimes I have gone direct to Mr. Mansfield, and got a couple of loaves of bread and something for them.

2512. Do you know anything of the out-door dispensing at the Redfern Branch of the Sydney Infirmity Dispensary? Yes, I sometimes give an order to some patients for out-door relief.

2513. Have you had any opportunities of observing whether that kind of charity is abused? Well, I think it is—I do believe that it is; but I am very careful myself about giving any one an order. I am always careful to know whether they are able to pay for medicine themselves, because I think it is a great imposition to give it free to such people; you should make them stand on their own legs.

2514. You do not know enough to give a general opinion about it? No, I cannot bring any definite cases before you. I have had several people ask me for these orders, and I have refused them in my own way. I do not always go direct and refuse a person, so as to cut off my connection with him and my chance of visiting him. You, Mr. Goold, were speaking to me the other day about Hyde Park. I was there yesterday, and I have been in the habit of going there for eleven years. Now, I went in a different way yesterday (I go to read and pray with the sick and dying women, and then I go down-stairs to hold service in the big room), but yesterday I went in a different way. I took a few tracts with me, and went to a few individuals—nearly all I could get access to—and I spoke to them; but in looking them over I could not see any women there who were able to do anything more than the work of the house. They are very old women there. There is one woman of the name of Elizabeth Mills, who asked me to get her a situation. She is one of the nurses up-stairs, and she says that she does not like stopping there, and she does not know where to go to outside. She has no home, and would go for small wages if she could get them. It requires some one with strength to nurse these old women. That is the only woman whom I saw that could do anything. There was another woman of the name of Dawes. I do not think that any one could take her for a servant, because she is very deaf. They are all very old women, except the blind ones and a few that are paralyzed. It does not seem to be scarcely enough to do the work of the house.

2515. Mr. Metcalfe.] They seem to be very happy and comfortable? Yes, they are; and I think, as far as the sick women go, there is not a better institution to be found; and in fact, a great many ladies go in and give them a little tea and sugar, and speak kindly to them. The Protestant side stands better than the other. They are divided there—the Protestants from the Roman Catholics—and the Protestants get the best privileges, as there are more people to visit them. There is one woman there who is 106 years old.

2516. President.] You do not mean that they are unduly favoured? No, not at all; but the people seem to care more for them, and they are not allowed, you know, according to the rules of the institution, and the priests and that, to go on the other side.

2517. Do you know anything of the lying-in hospital at the Benevolent Asylum? Yes.

2518. Have you any reason to believe that the charity of that place is abused? I have been going there a long time. I go to hold service there on a Sunday, and so on. I do not think that the charity of the place is abused. I think it is managed very well.

2519. I suppose you are aware that there are many juvenile prostitutes in the Industrial School at Biloela? Yes.

2520. What is your opinion as to the probability of reforming girls of that class who do not go into the institution as voluntary penitents to give up their course of life, as the women in the Refuges do, but who are rescued in this way by the strong arm of the law and against their own will? I do not think that there is any better way of using them than to be kind to them, and, if they have got teachers, to learn them to read the Bible and get the fear of God before their minds and eyes. I never saw any of these girls on the streets who had been brought up in a Sunday School—scarcely any of them—not one in a hundred; and most of these girls belong to bad parents. You do not see one of them with a good father or mother and a good home. They are greatly to be pitied. I have seen an old woman looking after her daughter a few weeks ago. She said to me—"My daughter has run away." I said—"What sort of a girl is she?" and she told me, and I said "I know where she is." And she said—"Oh, I will give it her," and you could see the old woman's eyes flash fire. I was told afterwards that the girl was driven away from home by her mother; so that the woman was going to drive her home again, and then beat her for going home. That is how it is.

2521. Mr. Goold.] How long have you been visiting the Hyde Park Barracks? Nearly eleven years.

2522. You are satisfied with what you have seen there—with the mode in which it is conducted—and what you have seen of the inmates? I would not like to say all I think sometimes, but I think that there is a good deal of partiality shown there. I do not know that it is so just now.

2523. That is what you have told me before? Well, there really is a good deal of partiality shown, but—

2524. President.] This evidence is all to be printed, so it is fair to tell you that any charge you make must go down and be printed? Then I shall say nothing more. 2525.

Mr. S. Robins. 2525. Of course you are quite at liberty to make any charge, but we must receive it officially? As I said before, the institution is most comfortable, especially for those old women who are sick.

1 Oct., 1873. 2526. Mr. Goold.] A charge such as you have hinted at is of course a most serious one? I shall not say anything more.

2527. President.] We do not wish to prevent your making any charge, but I wished you to know that whatever you said would go down and be investigated. It would not do for us to hear charges without calling upon the persons accused to answer them? Just so. The institution, as far as I have seen, is for the benefit of the old people, and I should not have said that about partiality perhaps if I had known it was to be published.

2528. Mr. Goold.] We are here to find out how all these institutions are managed. Have you any definite case of partiality to mention to us? I have not any definite case.

TUESDAY, 11 NOVEMBER, 1873.

Members Present:—

WILLIAM CHARLES WINDEYER, Esq., PRESIDENT.

SAMUEL GOOLD, Esq. | MICHAEL METCALFE, Esq.

CHARLES COWPER, JUN., Esq.

Mr. James Dennis, Master of Parramatta Asylum for the Infirm and Destitute, called in and further examined:—

Mr. J. Dennis. 2529. Mr. Cowper.] Wardsman Jamison, in his evidence given before the Commission, complains that the meat and soup were served up cold to the inmates of the Asylum? Cold; soup—it could not be served up cold to the sick wards. Of course the meat could not be hot, because it is portioned out and left in the tins in ranges, and then the soup is taken up and served out direct from the kitchen. The inmates of the sick ward are served before the general inmates; that is, the sick ward and the infirm ward get the soup direct from the coppers.

11 Nov., 1873.

2530. And the meat too? No, the meat is cut up and put in dishes, and ranged and portioned out first. When I first went there, Dr. Greenup said that the hot soup put over the meat would warm the meat, but the inmates would not have that. They have the separate plates, and they always take the meat out of the dishes and put it on their plates. They cannot have the meat hot; the soup they have hot, and it is always hot.

2531. Inmate Lambert says, in his evidence, that “the meat is sometimes stinking,” and that they “always get it cold”? Stinking; no. They always get it cold; we cannot give it to them hot; but as for its being stinking, that I deny. It is not hot, but it is not stinking.

2532. And the same man says that they very often get bullock’s heart to eat? Yes, there is sometimes bullock’s heart sent in, and it has been remarked by Mr. Rolleston himself that it is very good. It will make good soup; they make mock-turtle soup with it sometimes. There is often a heart sent in, and sometimes two.

2533. When asked as to whether it is the routine of the place for the men to bathe regularly, this man Lambert says, “Not all the men go, but I go because I think it does my eyes good”: is that so? Every month when the wards are cleaned out and the beds brought down, all the inmates go into the bath; they are all washed—every man has a bath.

2534. How often? Once a month.

2535. Only once a month? Yes, and we have a great difficulty in making them go into the bath; and we have but one bath; and now I have adopted a new plan—instead of having two or three washing in the same water I have a man to whom I give a fig of tobacco a week, and he washes one man in a portion of the water and throws it away, and washes another in clean water. Every man now gets clean water.

2536. Once a month? Yes, or whenever they require it; once a month regularly every man gets a bath; but we do not require it so much, because the men go down to the river to bathe. They go there continually, and any one passing up and down will see them bathing in the water.

2537. Mr. Goold.] In the day-time? Yes, in the day-time; morning and evening. I forbid them going in the hot sun, but they go down in the evening—sometimes 180 of them together. I have had nearly 200 on the doctor’s list going down to the river; and it is a great relief to the institution, when you remember that we have only one bath, and that there is great difficulty in making them take a bath. We have only one bath there; and, in fact, to give you an idea of the difficulty I have in making them go into the bath—one man resisted me—would not go into the bath—and defied me to put him in; so I got half a dozen buckets of water, and several of the servants, and we threw the water over him, and then he was obliged to go in and take off his clothes, for they were all wet; we sluiced him.

2538. Mr. Metcalfe.] Did you sluice him with his clothes on? Yes—he would not undress to go into the bath; but generally the men all have a bath once a month, when the beds are brought down, and the tressels are brought down to be cleaned. There is not a man who is found to be dirty but he is always taken in and washed; and the men in the sick wards, always, when it is necessary, they have a bath; and I think that the surgeon will bear me out in that.

2539. Are the beds only cleaned once a month? Once a month they are brought down from the wards and cleaned.

2540. All kerosened and washed? No, I do not use kerosene; I do not believe in it; the smell of it is enough for me. They are all washed.

2541. Are the bedsteads free from vermin? Yes, quite free. You may get an odd one now and again, but that you will get in every house. I believe—nay, I am sure—that there is not a cleaner establishment, nor one more free from bugs, in any Government institution in New South Wales, and the way that I get rid of them is by cleanliness, and using Burnett’s disinfecting fluid.

2542. Do you use that in washing the beds? No, I put it in the white-wash—I put in a pint into a bucket nearly. The bedsteads are washed with soap and hot water—I have a kettle of hot water poured into the joints of the iron bedsteads. There are some few iron bedsteads in the infirm ward and the sick ward, and the patients who have been a long time there like the iron bedsteads best; and when they are brought out out I pour a kettle of hot water upon them. The wooden bedsteads are the better of the two. They are Mr. J. Dennis. so simply made—made on a plan of my own—and they were approved of so much by the Board that I had to send in a sample for Port Macquarie. We used to have iron tressels, but they harboured bugs, but we got these wooden tressels, which are much better. The iron ones were heavy, but the wooden tressels are moved so easily that a man can bring down his own bedstead. They are in this shape [marking out a diagram]. In these wooden tressels there is a space between, so that you can put in your finger and see whether they are clean.

11 Nov., 1873.

2543. They are made fast with a screw? No, with a wire nail.

2544. Like the old-fashioned stretcher very much? No, they are made in a different way. The legs are not crossed. We have as little joining as possible; in the usual stretcher there would be a joining.

2545. Mr. Cowper.] Kingston, an inmate, in his evidence, complains that "The washing of the clothes is very bad. I have had sheets on me that have stunk for want of washing, and since I have been here I have been obliged to get my own things washed"? Stunk! That is not true. A great many men get their washing done, but he has had no need to do so. At one time, as I said in my evidence before, we were badly off for washers, and the things were not washed to my satisfaction; they were dark-coloured certainly, but they never stunk. If they did stink it was that man's business to speak to me about it, or to the surgeon under whose particular care he is in the infirm ward.

2546. He says also that the "meat is bad," and that the soup "smells sometimes": is that so? I have never heard a complaint of it; I never knew anything of it; if it was so, it was his business to call for me or the surgeon.

2547. And he says that the bread is bad at times—sour? I think that the surgeon's testimony will bear me out to the contrary of that, certainly.

2548. He says that "Some have their clothes in bits, the collars all torn and ragged," and that he "often pities them"? Whenever I do notice anything of that kind I always have had the clothes repaired. We have a tailor specially for it. That is a man that I have sympathized with most feelingly—I mean that Kingston.

2549. He says that he has been treated well himself? Yes; I have sympathized with him most feelingly, because he had been a mate of a vessel and had a master's certificate.

2550. Mr. Metcalfe.] Is that the man that was suffering from rheumatism? No, Groves is the man that has the rheumatism—the next man to him; he was in the police in Victoria.

2551. Mr. Cowper.] He says that sometimes there is vermin on him, and that is why he gets his clothes washed? I never heard him complain of it; I do not know. I am most particular about anything of the kind, and it is very extraordinary that I did not hear of it.

2552. He says that he has had the same blankets on him for two years, without their being washed? That is utterly false.

2553. Without their being washed? It is not true.

2554. It is after some questions that are put about the bed-clothes that he says—"We have a sheet on once a week, and those who are bad cases have it oftener. They are changed once a week. There could be an improvement in that. Only once a week? Yes. All through the summer?—Yes; I have had blankets on me for two years. Without their being washed?—Yes, without their being washed"? Did the Commission notice that they were dirty when they went in?—There is not a breath of complaint in the diary about the want of cleanliness in any respect by any visitor.*

2555. He says that "in that bath place you get more dirty than when you go into it. It is in a very dirty state"? I never knew the man to be outside the ward—never. I allow him everything that would be requisite—basins, towels, and everything that is requisite. I have sent him from my own table plenty of vegetables and pumpkins and so on, and pork also of my own curing; and I have sent things to Groves too, and to another party besides.

2556. Groves says that the "food is very monotonous"? Of course it is always the same.

2557. He says—"We have potatoes twice a week, but they are generally so bad that they have to go out of the ward the same as they come in"? Of course we sometimes have bad potatoes, but generally they are not at all bad, and there cannot be any such complaint.

2558. He says that the bread "latterly has been better; but before it was very indifferent indeed—stale, sour, and bitter"? I would refer you to the surgeon of the place, who says that the bread is excellent. Sometimes a batch will not be good and I will smell something wrong, and then I will take notice of it and say to the head wardsman †——

2559. He says that "sometimes the soup smells badly, and sometimes it tastes as if the meat were putrid in it"? I do not know it.

2560. That the men complain of it? They never complain to me; they say it is excellent.

2561. He says that the washing is indifferent—very "indifferent"? It was indifferent at one time, but the clothes never stunk.

2562. Have the men ever made complaints about the meat? They did some time ago—I cannot say whether it was two or three years ago. Mr. King, the Inspector of Charities, was up the other day, and he examined the meat in the copper—saw it there—and he pronounced it to be very good indeed. We did not know that he was coming up.

2563. He says also that "when the doctor orders medicine, it is frequently a long time before we get it"? I am generally in with the doctor every day, and I give directions to the patients myself to go to Mr. Austin for any medicines that they require. They all go the dispensary and there they get their medicines; but sometimes the men will remain away, and will not go for their medicine. I have heard the dispenser's man crying out their names in the yard and they won't answer him; and then after all they will come and complain if they do not get their medicine.

2564. James Reid, an inmate, complains that the doctor ordered a dressing for him, and that he never got it? It was for a false passage that he has; it was not a dressing, but it was some calico for a pad for him. Dr. Rutter said that it would be fatal to put a bandage round him, and, besides, that is a thing I leave to the dispenser. I am most particular in attending to the doctor's orders. I get orders every day, and I am most particular in attending to them; and I think that the doctor is a gentleman who would not be trifled

* NOTE (on revision) :—Kingston (No. 2 wing) had new blankets served out to him on the 21st May last.

† NOTE (on revision) :—The head wardsman is a baker, and I refer the matter to him.

- Mr. J. Dennis. trifled with if his orders were not attended to—or Dr. Pringle either, when he was alive. In fact, I anticipate the doctor's orders, for I go to his book myself.
- 11 Nov., 1873. 2565. Then, if Benjamin Pretty says that the doctor did order these things, he tells an untruth, I suppose? What things?
2566. These bandages? They must have been for another man.
2567. But if Pretty says that the doctor did order these bandages for Reid, he tells an untruth, I suppose? I do not remember just now what he ordered.
2568. You say that the doctor refused to let him have bandages? I told the doctor that he wanted bandages, and the doctor said that it would be the worst thing he could do—that he might have a calico pad, but not a bandage; and the man got the calico, 2 or 3 yards of it; I cannot remember how much it was.
2569. You first said that Dr. Rutter said that he was not to have these things, and now you say that he got them? Not a bandage—he did not get a bandage, but a piece of calico for a pad.
2570. I am talking about bandages—they have not been supplied to him? I do not think that the doctor ever ordered that he should have bandages.
2571. Then, if Pretty says the doctor did order them, he tells an untruth? I cannot say whether the man intended to tell an untruth or not.
2572. Pretty says that the doctor ordered Reid bandages, and that they had not been supplied, though he had applied for them several times? I cannot remember all particulars. This I remember, that Mr. Austin put, on the surgeon's order, some calico for a bandage, which the doctor told me would not be fit for him. It is not likely that I should refuse to give the bandages.
2573. All you say is, that you do not know whether the doctor ordered them or not; and do you not think it would be proper for you to know that he did order them? I think it was put down in the order book by Mr. Austin—so much calico—and the man got it immediately; and when the matron spoke to the doctor about it, she served out 4 yards for the purpose for which it was intended.
2574. Hillier, an inmate, complains of the meat, bread, and potatoes, and the cooking of them. "The cooks we have here," he says, "are not fit to cook for pigs, and the rations are not according to scale"? I deny that entirely.
2575. "There is," he says, "a pound of meat allowed to each man, and I have never had above 6 ounces any day" and not more than 4 ounces sometimes? 7 or 8 ounces is all that we can get out of a pound of meat.
2576. But he says that he does not get 6 ounces? Oh yes he does.
2577. "And," he says, "the bread is light. It does not weigh above 1 lb. 4 ozs. instead of 2 lbs., and some of us must go short"? Yes, the loaves had been light.
2578. "There is many a man goes hungry this weather; and the potatoes are not fit to eat"? That is the time that the bread was complained of, which I explained to the Commission. I thought that I had thoroughly explained that. When the bread was sent light weight, and the loaves were cut in two, of course the rations would be deficient—only 5 ounces in some half-loaves. I made that up by getting the amount needed from a Parramatta baker.
2579. Mr. Gould.] Did you say that you could not get more than 7 or 8 ounces out of 1 lb. of meat? That is all. Dr. Greenup asked me to try it at one time, and I did; and the most that I could get out of a pound of meat was 8 ounces in some cases and 7 in others. I think Liebig allows half for the loss by bone and cooking.
2580. Mr. Cowper.] Sands, a wardsman, complains "that there are no regular hours for getting out in the morning. Here there is no regularity. The wards are opened at half-past 5, or 6, or 7, and so on"? The wards are ordered to be opened at half-past 5 in the morning.
2581. He says—"I am waiting to carry my tubs out, and I ought to have to carry them down at a particular hour, but I have sometimes to go one hour and sometimes another"? At half-past 5 they are opened every morning, and I know that that ward was always opened—No. 3 ward—because there was a man there who used to come down to milk my cows, and he is always down at 20 minutes before 6 or half-past 5; so that the ward must have been opened —
2582. He says that—"there is no particular time for locking-up—half-past 6 or 7—there is no fixed hour"? Never before 8 o'clock.
2583. And that "all the diseases are mixed up together"? Oh yes, that is so.
2584. Rawlings, a wardsman, says that "the tins used for soup are also used for tea"? Yes; but they are all cleansed.
2585. And that "they are hardly cold before the tea is put into them"? They are put into a large tub of water, and allowed plenty of soap and soda, and they are washed and cleansed perfectly free from all grease. It was only the day before yesterday that I showed to the Inspector the tins all cleansed for tea.
2586. He says also that "Lady Dennis receives one quart of beef-tea daily—equal to 2 lbs. of our meat"? That is an untruth.
2587. And that "she never inspects the messes or linen"? That is not her duty, to inspect the messes, unless in my absence.
2588. Not to look after the linen? She cuts out—that is her business.
2589. And he says that she "allowed the pudding on Her Majesty's Birthday to be made in a bath previously used by the inmates"? We had no other vessel, and the bath was made perfectly clean. I saw that it was scalded and washed with soap and water, and we had no other vessel; the men had no objection to it. The soup—I am very particular about the stock of it—it is very good—I have tasted myself a sample of it.
2590. He says also—"During the last rain Mr. Dennis came up to No. 4 ward and ordered me to take down several good mattresses—his pigs being in want of bedding; and the fresh ones for the use of the dormitory were damp straw"? Never. I deny it.
2591. That is untrue then? I deny it.
2592. Francis, an inmate, says that the meat is stinking? It is false.
2593. And that the bread is sour? It is false.
2594. Mr. Metcalfe.] Do the men complain that their clothes are not mended? Sometimes they do, and I have it remedied. I send them at once to the head wardsman.
- 2596.

2596. She is there every day? Yes, she has been there every day, except when she has been unwell. Mr. J. Dennis.
2597. President.] At what time during the day is she there? At any time—generally between 9 and 10, when the doctor comes. 11 Nov., 1873.
2598. Mr. Metcalfe.] Will you tell the Commission what her duties are? Cutting out, and seeing after the linen—cutting out the sheets; and she gets a return from the wash-house every Saturday—a return from the head wardsman showing the sheets and shirts that have been given out to wash, and also those which have been received back again.
2599. Who makes the shirts for the men? They are bought ready-made, and mended by the tailors.
2600. There is nothing made on the establishment? No, there is nothing made except sheets, flannel shirts and drawers, pillow-slips, towels, &c.
2601. President.] In point of fact, beyond the work of cleaning the place, the inmates do no work of a reproductive character? None; but now we have a gardener, and he seems to get on pretty well.
2602. Mr. Metcalfe.] He is attending to that piece of ground rented from Macarthur? Yes, I got a man for it lately.
2603. President.] How many men are there at work there? He is working in the garden now. There is only one man, and he is, I understand, a brother of Mr. Suttor, the Member. I am told his brother goes about playing a whistle. I have a good deal of trouble to manage him, as he is not quite right in his head, but he goes rightly to work trying to make the place into a garden; and he spoke to the Inspector, Mr. King, to have a house built there for him, so that he could look after the place, and Mr. King said he saw no objection to it. He might live there and attend to the garden.
2604. Mr. Metcalfe.] I think you said that you see no occasion for having baths there, as the men go down to the river and bathe, and do so to the extent of about 200 a day? Yes, they do; but still, in case of bad weather, I would rather have a bath; but that is a great relief—not only a relief to the atmosphere, as it removes the foul air, but in the cleanliness of the men's persons in bathing.
2605. President.] Harris says that you told him that he was discharged because of the statements he made to the Commission? I never did. I was not aware that he was examined.
2606. And that he afterwards asked you more distinctly why he was turned out of the place, and that you said to him—"No, I won't tell you why"? He said to me—I forget what he said, but he was so impertinent that I reported the matter to the Board, and the Board wrote and said that the man should be discharged, and so he was.
2607. You say, then, that there is no foundation at all for this statement? No foundation at all. I never knew that the man gave evidence at all, and I am sure I did not get a letter for him from the Commission. I did not know that he had given evidence.
2608. He also says that on last Christmas Day you were away from the institution? I am always there.
2609. Were you away from the institution on last Christmas Day? I am never away on Christmas Day. It is a feast day, and it is no holiday to me.
2610. You are asked as to a particular day—as to last Christmas Day. This man says that you went away in a boat? I do not think so.
2611. And that you went away and left 270 men there without a bit of bread? I do not think I was away.
2612. Surely you must recollect whether you were away or not on last Christmas Day? I do not know—solemnly, I do not know.
2613. He says that you went away on that day, and left the people without their meals? Without their meals?
2614. Yes. He says—"Last Christmas Day there were 270 men left there without a bit of breakfast at all. Mr. Dennis goes down the bay in his yacht, and never gives us a bit of bread or meat. He goes away with his sons and two boatmen, and he leaves 270 men there without a bit of bread." And he says that no one was left in the place to look after your duty at all? That is most false.
2615. Were you away at all? I do not recollect that I was, but my impression is that I was not away.
2616. But you may have been? I believe that I was there.
2617. Have you no recollection one way or the other? I am quite sure that I was there.
2618. Are you sure that you were not away in a boat on that day? I would not swear that I was there that day, but to the best of my belief I was not away from the place; because on these occasions I am never away. I was there at the Mayor's feast—which was the last given to the inmates, and at the last feast I was there; but I should inform the Commission—
2619. Mr. Metcalfe.] Do you remember the men being left without food? Never, unless the baker disappoints us and we have to get the bread elsewhere. Mrs. Dennis has had to go round in a carriage to get bread for them.
2620. President.] How often do you go down into the mess-room? Constantly.
2621. How often during the day? Not every day.
2622. How often during the week? Two or three times during the week, and the head wardsman is always there and says grace.
2623. You see the men dining two or three times a week? Yes.
2624. That is all? That is all. Half of the men dine in the yard, and if there is any complaint I go down into the mess-room at once.
2625. Do you see the men in the yard dine every day? Yes, certainly. I am there from 7 in the morning until near 6 at night—from 7 in the morning or half-past 6 very often.
2626. This man says that you only go into the mess-room on the Queen's Birthday; that you never go down there on ordinary days? That is false.
2627. Did you get the sum of £21, that belonged to a man in No. 6 Ward, out of the Savings' Bank? Yes.
2628. What became of that money? There were £11 that the man had, and £10 I returned to the Board, and £1 for my own expenses. I came into town several times about the matter.
2629. You gave the man £11? Yes; I gave him £11 to settle some debts he had, and he wanted to give the wardsman something.
2630. £11 for debts that he had? Yes.
2631. To whom did he owe them? To different parties. He paid the wardsman so much.
2632. How much did he pay the wardsman? I do not know.
2633. Did he owe money to other people? Yes.
2634. Had you vouchers for the money? I do not know. There are others there.
2635. Mr. Metcalfe.] But if the man had this money, should he have been there at all? I do not know.

- Mr. J. Dennis. 2636. President.] How much money was it that he paid to the wardsman and the others? I do not know. The man got £11 and I got £11.
- 11 Nov., 1873. 2637. How do you mean; the man that died had £11? He had to pay some things, and he requested that I would get him the money out of the Bank, and I drew up a statement in Dr. Rutter's presence and drew the money out, and I charged £1 for my own expenses.
2638. What were your expenses? Coming into Sydney for the money.
2639. And what did you do with the balance? I sent it to the Board.
2640. What was this man's name? Sunderland.
2641. How long is it ago that this happened? It was in September, I think.
2642. In last September? I think so. It was in September or August—I am not sure which.
2643. Mr. Metcalfe.] In this year? Yes. I have got several cases in which I have sent money to the Board.
2644. Mr. Goold.] You say that you gave the man £11? Yes.
2645. And that you sent £10 to the Board? Yes.
2646. Then you did not keep anything for your expenses? Yes; I kept £1.
2647. But the whole amount was only £21? No; £22.
2648. President.] Then there was £22 got out of the Bank? Yes. There was Webb, a military pensioner—I saved his money for two years, and it came to £33 1s. 2d. which I sent in to the Board.
2649. What is that paper you have there? A few notes I have made.
2650. Mr. Metcalfe.] Is it not the practice for a pensioner received into the Asylum to give up his pension to the master of the institution? No, but he gets his own clothing.
2651. Is he fed at the Government expense? Yes. There was a man named Walsh, when he died I sent in £27; Phillips, £45 6s. 3d.; Murray, £5 12s. 6d.
2652. Did all these men die? Yes, and there were various sums left by inmates down to 5s.
2653. President.] Do you say that you paid over £11 to this man yourself? Yes.
2654. Into his own hands? Yes, to himself.
2655. Did any one see you pay it to the man? No.
2656. What did he want the money for? Oh, I do not know; a great many want money.
2657. How long before he died did he get it? About a month.
2658. Did you not ask him what he wanted the money for—it was a good deal of money to give a man in his position? No; I did not know what he wanted it for; there are a great many who have money from their friends in this way. There is a man who has money with Mr. King, and he gets a trifle now and then.
2659. What was this £11 to be paid him for—it is a large sum for a man in a place like that to owe—what did he want it for? To pay for things. The man was obliged to be nourished with brandy and eggs and milk, and so on.
2660. But those things are found by the institution for such inmates as need them? No; but he got extras, and the wardsman attended to him.
2661. What wardsman? He is not there now.
2662. Where is he? I do not know.
2663. You see, Harris says that this man did not get a farthing of money? How does he know?—The money was paid away for the man.
2664. Did you pay it away? Yes, I did.
2665. But you said just now that you gave the money into the man's hands; how did you expend it? He was four months in the institution previous to his death, and he was nourished with extras—with brandy, eggs, and milk. I gave him these things, and used to go and beat up the eggs for him myself, and show the wardsman how to do it for him.
2666. Did you know that he had this money all this time? No.
2667. Then how was it that you came to supply him with eggs and brandy and milk for all this time—four months you said? I have done so for many of them there. There was Mr. Dunlop, Edwards, &c. I have gone and broiled their chops myself; and there was Mr. Birch too I did the same for. I gave this man wine and brandy without knowing that he had a penny when I first attended to him.
2668. Who was Mr. Birch? He was our clerk at one time, and he died.
2669. And you supplied this man with brandy and eggs to the amount of £11 at your own cost? No, I did not.
2670. That is what you gave us to understand—that you supplied this man with these things for several months at your own cost, and without knowing that he had any money? Of course, when the man got the sum of money, he gave it away to me to pay for what he had had, and told me to do “what I liked with the balance.”
2671. The facts are these: you find out that this man has £21 in the Savings' Bank, and you draw it out for him, and you say you pay £11 of it to him; I asked you, “What for?” and you said you did not know what it was paid for. You tell us that you had no vouchers for the payment of this money, and you now say that you paid this £11 for wine and eggs and brandy and milk supplied to this man by yourself for months before you knew that he had the money; you supplied him with those things out of your own pocket? Yes, I did supply some of it out of my own pocket at first. Of course I could not have gone to the extent I did, had he not told me that he would be able to reimburse me for it.
2672. What did you supply—brandy and eggs and milk? Yes.
2673. How much? I cannot tell you. He used three eggs a day and a pint of milk a day. He was like a child, and the wardsman got money for attending to him.
2674. Then this money was paid to you, this £11? Not all to me; the wardsman got some.
2675. You got some of it? Yes, I had to refund myself whatever I paid to the wine merchant.
2676. Well, what did you pay him—tell us the items? I cannot say.
2677. It is impossible that, on your small salary, you can go on supplying inmates with these things at your own cost—What was paid to the wardsman? I cannot tell—5s. a month.
2678. What for? Sunderland expressed a wish that the wardsman should get this money. It was a bad case, and this man had to beat up eggs for him and attended to him very well.
2679. He got 5s. a month, and you say the man was there four months, so that would be £1 to the wardsman? Yes.

2680. Then there are £10 to be accounted for? I am sure I cannot tell how.
2681. What wine merchant did you pay it to? It was from Sir Daniel Cooper that I got the brandy and porter.
2682. To supply this man? Yes.
2683. Had you no invoice of it that you cannot tell how it went? I cannot tell how much the man took. He had wine, brandy, and milk—also dinners daily, and light puddings.
2684. Now, with the exception of that £1 which went to the wardsman, did not the whole of that money go to yourself? Yes; I had to refund myself for the expenses which I was at.
2685. And you refunded to yourself expenses to the extent of £9? Yes.
2686. You never saw the man before he came into the institution? No, I did not; and I attended to him like a child.
2687. He had no special claim upon your sympathy? No, but before I knew anything about him I tended him and beat up his eggs myself for him, and I showed the wardsman how to attend to him. I was with him three or four times a day.
2688. You sent £10 to the Board? Yes.
2689. Did you send a letter accompanying that money? Yes.
2690. What statement did you make with reference to this money? I enclosed the £10 left by Sunderland, and entered it in the half-yearly account.
2691. Did you mention in your letter the fact that the man had had £22, and that you had retained £9 for yourself? I do not know whether I did; I forget whether I did or not; I cannot say.
2692. Have you ever had any similar dealings with other of your inmates? No, I do not recollect any, except this Walsh—£27. That man died, and I sent that in.
2693. The whole of it? Yes, every penny.
2694. Have you ever spent £9 or £10 upon any of the inmates except this man? No. I did not know that this man had the money until he was dying. He informed me of it himself. He was in fact in a dying state when admitted.
2696. You supplied this man with milk? Yes, a pint of new milk every morning, with eggs, beat up.
2697. Do you keep cows? No, not in the institution. My own cow I do not keep there. I got the eggs and the milk, and I used to beat them up for this man.
2698. This man Harris says—"The man never had the money—he never handled any money, and Mr. Dennis said he would take the money and keep it for him"? Nothing of the kind.
2699. That you said you would "give him milk for it—a pint of milk a day"? Nothing of the kind. When I brought the money to the man he said—"You keep it and do as you like with it." Of course he meant as to the balance.
2700. Was it from that time you supplied him with the milk? No, before that—long before that. I took him the money, and I said—"Well, Sunderland, I have got the money." He said—"Do what you like with it"; and I will make an affidavit of that.
2701. You had no idea how long he would live when you did this? I thought the brandy and eggs and milk he was getting would have kept him alive for months.
2702. And you gave him these things without any prospect of ever being paid for them? No, I had no prospect of being paid at first. Only one of the men came down and said that Sunderland wanted me, and I went up to see him, and he gave me his pass-book, and I went down to the Savings' Bank, and they would not give me the money at first.
2703. Did you inform the Board of this? Not until the six months accounts went in.
2704. Did you ever inform them that you had appropriated £10 of this money as payment for yourself? I forget the tenor of the letter.
2705. Have you no recollection as to what you said? I might have said that the man spent the money for necessaries.
2706. Did you ever inform the Board that you had appropriated this money in payment to yourself? No, I did not.
2707. Did you inform them of the fact at all in the monthly account, as to the expenditure of the money? No, I did not. I send in half-yearly accounts, but I sent in the £10. I allowed the man every comfort that he could possibly have.*
2708. What has become of the hydraulic pump that was on the premises? It is there.
2709. Where? In the institution.
2710. I do not mean that pump which you mean, but another pump that was taken away? Which other pump?
2711. The one that was taken away—was there not another there? The pump at the well.
2712. There has only been one pump taken away, has there? There was an old pump that was of no use.
2713. What became of that pump? I do not know whether Mr. Houison got that pump or not.
2714. Who is Mr. Houison? He is in the Colonial Architect's department.
2715. How did he come to get that pump? I forget entirely about it now.
2716. Did you ever give it to him? I assure you that I forget the circumstances.
2717. How long is it ago? It is some months ago.
2718. Surely you must recollect a thing of that sort? I can recollect Mr. Houison saying that he wished he had the tube that went down from the pump.
2719. What sort of a tube was that? An iron tube.
2720. And you gave it to him? I think so.

* NOTE (on revision) :—I beg leave to certify, that when I was wardsman in No. 6 ward, John Sunderland was an inmate of the same; that Mr. Dennis had supplied him with every nourishment, such as milk, brandy, wine, porter, &c., also dinners and light puddings, and that he often showed me how to beat up the eggs with milk and brandy for him. That Mr. Dennis brought Sunderland the money, and when he did, he said to Mr. Dennis, "Do what you like with it." Of course meaning whatever balance might have remained after his death.

- Mr. J. Dennis. 2721. What authority had you to give it to him? Really I forget all about it now.
2722. What was the length of the tubing? It was a rusty tube, about 18 feet long.
- 11 Nov., 1873. 2723. Was there a pump attached to it? Yes, but the pump was no good.
2724. What has become of it? I forget.
2725. Did Mr. Houison get it? I forget.
2726. At all events, though the pump was of no use, Mr. Houison wished to have it? Yes, I think so; he said he did, but I forget about it now.
2727. Mr. Gould.] Does he live near the Domain? He is in the Colonial Architect's department.
2728. He lives in Parramatta? Yes. I remember his saying to me that he would like to have it.
2729. Mr. Cowper.] He looks after public works in Parramatta? Yes, he does.*
2730. President.] This man Harris further complains that you have shut up the well against the cook-house for your own use, and that you will not allow the inmates to get even a drink out of it? No. I have shut the well up from the general inmates, to keep the water clean for the use of the kitchen, and for my own use. I do not allow them all to go to that well; it is paled off, and if they were all allowed to go there the water would be very dirty. We ourselves put a new windlass to it.
2731. What do you allow the water to be used for? For the kitchen, cooking.
2732. Do you allow it to be used for making tea? Yes, I do.
2733. But this man says—"He threatened to turn men out of the institution who wanted to get water out of it to make tea." Then he was asked—"How so?" and he said "Because he kept the well for his own use. But one man would not drink all the water in that tank?—No; but he keeps it for his own use. Is that the well where the pump is padlocked?—No; the other one, that one is kept to wash Mr. Dennis's clothes when it is short. Might it not be that he keeps the well shut because the water is short?—That is not the reason. He will come and storm like a madman if any one goes near it. He will say—"How dare you go to that water?—I will turn you out." There was a man filling the copper for tea, and he threatened to turn him out." Is that so? I do not allow any man to go to it but those who are authorized, and there is a man there who draws the water for the kitchen, to whom I give a fig of tobacco weekly.
2734. Do you deny that you refused to allow it to be used for tea? Certainly.
2735. And that you ever threatened to turn a man out for taking it? No, I deny that; I do not remember anything of the kind.
2736. How long have you been using it in this way? We are using it for the kitchen.
2737. For how long? For about six months. When it comes to about 5 or 6 feet of water I do not allow it to be drawn, because it is the only water I can use, and I have no water to drink where I am.
2738. So that when the water in that well falls to 6 feet, you entirely appropriate the whole of it to yourself? Yes; because there is no other water that I can drink. Then there is the lower well. I suppose this wet weather will give us enough water in the tank. If the well is 40 or 41 feet deep, and if a sufficient supply then I allow them to draw it.
2739. I suppose you have only had one system in force as to giving the men their rations—you have not tried any other plan but the present one—you give them their bread in the morning, and they carry it away and keep it in their bags—you have never tried any other plan of giving the rations? No; except that I used to issue it out to the mess men. We had at one time heads of messes of twelve, and about thirteen or fourteen heads of messes, and I used to issue the rations to the heads of messes, but I found these mess men so obstreperous that I gave up the plan. We gave them 1s. a week in kind, but I did away with them and put them into larger messes, and made the wardsmen do the duty. I gave the wardsmen two figs of tobacco a week and a pound of sugar, and by that I saved 5s. a week.
2740. Mr. Metcalfe.] Would it not be better to give them joints of meat which they could have hot and cut up themselves, rather than to cut it up and let them eat it cold? You must consider that when you make soup you must separate the meat from the bones. You boil the bones, and they make the stock for the soup.
2741. That I can understand; but there are plenty of pieces of meat weighing 8 or 10 pounds which might be served out to messes whole, and which they might cut up and eat hot? There are smaller pieces than that put in, 5 or 6 pound pieces; and if that was the case it would be difficult to cut the meat. "The inmates would not be able to cut up the meat, and even if they were, each individual would be dissatisfied; it is a rare case when they ask for a fork."
2742. At present the system seems to me like feeding animals? —
2743. President.] Was there anything special about this man Sunderland that made you take such an interest in him? Nothing, I solemnly declare, except that he was a good man and that he said he was dying. When I brought him the money he said—"You do what you like with it." I did not know before that that he had a penny. I have even done the chops for Mr. Birch myself. I have gone up to him and said—"You are very weak," and I have asked him—"Mr. Birch, shall I get you anything?" And he has said—"I will take anything you give me"; and I have gone and grilled a chop for him myself, and put it before him; and he lived for four years afterwards.
2744. Is that the gentleman who was at one time in the Commissariat? Yes. And there was Captain Hynam there. I sympathized with him, and when his son took him out, rather than he should go out a pauper I asked him to my own breakfast table.
2745. Mr. Cowper.] Are these the only people that you have treated in this way? No, there are several.
2746. I understand you to say that your cooks and so on are so inefficient that, in the case of these two or three persons, you were obliged to cook the chops yourself? Well, you know they cannot cook a chop for a dying man as I would like it myself.
2747. But Captain Hynam did not die—he went out? No, he did not die, but some did.
2748. But did not your men understand how to beat up eggs, that you had to take such particular care in beating them up yourself? No, I had to do it myself. I showed the wardsmen how to do it, and I even fed the man myself.
2749. Was this the only inmate who required to have eggs beaten up in this particular way? No, there were others.

2750.

* NOTE (on revision) :—I find that the "hydraulic pump" was sold for £1, which sum I paid in to the "Secretary, Hyde Park Asylum."

2750. Mr. Metcalfe.] In these cases, you supplied the eggs and so on at your own expense? Yes, I Mr. J. Dennis. supplied them to him before I knew that he had a penny.
2751. Mr. Cowper.] You laid stress upon the fact that you beat up these eggs yourself? No; there is a 11 Nov., 1873. particular way of doing it.
2752. Do you as a rule do it for the inmates? No, not as a rule.
2753. You make it a rule to do it? Yes, if it is necessary I do it.
2754. You do it as a rule for the inmates? No, not as a rule, but I do it when required.
2755. How long has the warder been with you who has been longest attending in the sick ward? Only very lately.
2756. You have had no man there for any time? No; Rawlings was the first; but Dr. Smith when he came down from Liverpool said to me "I wonder you have such a ruffian in the place as that man." He left, and afterwards I had him again and he was again discharged for drunkenness. Then we had another man who remained for a longer time—a man of the name of Tapp.
2757. And none of these men knew how to beat up eggs? No, not until I told them how to do it.
2758. Have you ever cooked a chop for Groves? No, he has no cause for it; he does not need it; he has not been so well brought up.*
2759. Has he not been brought up tenderly? No, he has not; and I knew poor Birch to have been a gentleman. Groves was a policeman in Victoria.
2760. Is it a disgrace to be a policeman? No. I speak of position.
2761. President.] This man Groves was house steward in the Sydney Infirmary? I never knew that. He never told me so.
2762. How long has he been there? Two years, I think.
2763. And he never attracted your attention sufficiently to cause you to ask him what he had been? He told me that he was a policeman. I have sympathized with him; I have asked him what he would like from my own table. Corned pork of my own curing, and so on, I have sent in to Kingston, and Groves, and another man, and plenty of vegetables as a change. It is impossible for me to remember all the cases I have attended to in that way, and I think that these men will not say to the contrary.
2764. Mr. Metcalfe.] No; Groves says that you have sent him vegetables from your own garden, and have let him have mutton instead of beef? Yes, not only that, but pork of my own rearing, and the others too who required a little change. There never was a man who really wanted anything of the kind that I did not send him vegetables from my garden, and other things too. Lately, in the sick ward there was a man struck down by paralysis, and I went to him and asked him "Is there anything I can do for you?"—and he said there was nothing. There was also poor Edwards the musician; he was with us, and I think that he would testify to my kindness to him. He was one of the first professors of music here, and taught Mrs. Robert Campbell; and I put him and two others into a ward by themselves.

Members Present:—

WILLIAM CHARLES WINDEYER, ESQ., PRESIDENT.

CHARLES COWPER, JUN., ESQ. | SAMUEL GOOLD, ESQ.

MICHAEL METCALFE, ESQ.

Sergeant John Dawson called in and examined:—

2765. President.] You are a sergeant in the Sydney Police? I am.
2766. We have been informed that some short time ago you found an infant that had been exposed, or that was in a neglected position, and that you afterwards took it to the Benevolent Asylum? No, I brought it before the Court—before the Water Police Court. I got it from a house in Harrington-street. 2 Dec., 1873. Sergeant J. Dawson.
2767. Under what circumstances? I found it lying on a bundle of rags on the floor, apparently in a dying state, and the mother lying drunk and helpless on the floor.
2768. What age was the infant? It seemed to me to be about nine months old.
2769. What did you do with it? I brought it before the Water Police Court, before His Worship Mr. Goold. After I had stated what were the circumstances under which the child was brought there, His Worship ordered the child to be sent to the Benevolent Asylum. The clerk wrote a letter requiring admission for the child, and this was signed by Mr. Goold. I then ordered Constable Hughes to take the child down to the Asylum.
2770. On what day was this? This was on the 11th of last month. He took the child down to the Asylum, and returned in about an hour afterwards, and said that they would not admit the child into the Benevolent Asylum, as the Secretary refused to entertain the letter from the Bench.
2771. What became of the child afterwards? It was sent again on the same day, and about 5 o'clock in the afternoon was admitted.
2772. Mr. Cowper.] Then how many hours was the child knocking about from the time you took it out of the house to the time when it was received into the Benevolent Asylum? From 10 o'clock in the morning till 4 o'clock in the afternoon.
2773. Was it fed during that time? Yes; there was a woman who took charge of it, and went with it in a cab with Constable Hughes to the Asylum. The Police called upon her in the usual way to give her assistance to save the child, and she came and took charge of it.
2774. How came you to go into the house and find the child? From information I had received about the conduct of the mother. Only the night before I had found her in the same room lying on the floor having connexion with a man. The room was in a most miserable state, just a few rags in one corner that the infant was laid on, and no furniture whatever in the place—nothing but an old porter bottle and a tallow candle.
2775. It was the mother of the child you found like this? Yes.
2776. And was the child lying there that night? It was.
2777. On what day was this? It was on the night of the 10th. I think it was on a Monday.

2778.

* NOTE (on revision):—I do not remember saying this.

- Sergeant J. Dawson.
2 Dec., 1873.
2778. President.] Was there any clothing on the child? Yes, there was clothing, but it was very scanty. The child was very thin and emaciated, and had a large lump on its forehead as if it had had a great fall.
2779. Does the child still survive? Yes, it is still living. Since that there have been two other children belonging to the same woman admitted into the Asylum—one nine and the other four years old. The police found them altogether neglected, wandering about the streets half starved, and no one to take care of them.
2780. Have they got any father living? He is in gaol at the present time; he was sent there from the Water Police Court.
2781. Mr. Cowper.] Do the police generally experience a difficulty in getting persons, both old and young, admitted into public institutions? Yes, very great trouble. Often we bring people up before the Bench not for any offence but for protection, and the Bench orders them to the Asylum or the Hospital. We take them there, and no attention whatever is paid to the order of the Bench. It is very often the case that we have to bring them back and put them into the lock-up again, and sometimes into the Infirmary.
2782. And often amongst the prisoners? Yes; we have no other place to put them.
2783. President.] Have you been long in Sydney? Yes, fourteen years.
2784. Mr. Cowper.] Do you think the watch-house at the Water Police Office has got cells in which it is at all fit that persons in an unprotected state should be confined? I think they are not at all in a proper state for anything of the kind.
2785. Does it not often happen that children and respectable persons have to be put in the same cell with criminals? Yes; and also persons of unsound mind who are brought in. They are always put there, for we have no other place for them.
2786. President.] No other place—is there not the Receiving-house at Darlinghurst? Yes; but they have to be brought up before the Bench before they will be received there—they must be brought before the Bench and committed before they will be taken in there.
2787. I always understood that these receiving-houses were to prevent the confinement of persons of unsound mind with common criminals—Do you mean to say that these persons will not be taken in there first? No; we must take them to the watch-house first, and then they are received into the Receiving-house, under warrant of committal.
2788. Mr. Cowper.] Is it not the fact that the watch-house of the Water Police Office has only two cells in which to confine all persons who are received—whether they come in for protection, for being of unsound mind, or for any other charge? Yes, that is all.
2789. And that constables must be told off to watch these persons all day long, or else they must be confined in these cells? That is the case. I may say, with regard to the father of this child, that this is the third time he has been convicted and sentenced during the last three years. He is now undergoing a sentence of six months' imprisonment for an assault upon his wife, the mother of this child.
2790. President.] Have you ever taken up children under the Industrial Schools Act? Yes, very often.
2791. Have you ever found any difficulty in carrying out the law in these cases, by reason of the parents of these children, who have been found by you to be neglected and prowling about the streets, setting up some paltry excuse such as that they were employed in selling matches, or things of that sort? Yes. I had one case recently of a boy named Codey, who was tried before the Bench and got out of the charge because he said he was selling matches about the street.
2792. You remember the case of this boy named Codey? Yes.
2793. That boy was taken up under the provisions of the Industrial Schools Act, and was sent on board the "Vernon"? He was.
2794. And afterwards, on the representations of the father that he was employed in selling matches about the street, he was released? Yes.
2795. Was not this boy soon after that apprehended again in the commission of a crime? Yes, for stealing.
2796. Do you remember the circumstances under which he was found? He was apprehended for stealing a bird-cage from a house in Woolloomooloo. We found that he and another boy were living with a woman who maintained herself by receiving and selling whatever the boys brought to her as the results of their robberies. She disposed of all they got by robbery.
2797. What occupation did the father follow? He gained his living by gathering bottles and such like about the town.
2798. Do you think he was a fit person to have the control of such a boy as this? Certainly not. Both the father and mother have been convicted before the Water Police Court under the Vagrant Act.
2799. You say there was another boy with him when he was apprehended: do you know anything about him? There was another boy, but I do not know anything about him, as he did not live in my district.
2800. Do you think, from your experience as a police officer, that to make the Industrial Schools Act effective it would require to be amended so as to prevent these allegations about the children being employed in selling trifling articles, being made an excuse for children leading a vagrant life? I do. There is another case that has only happened to-day of a boy named Galetop, who has been charged with stealing a case of lead. The father on a recent occasion was bound over in a penalty as surety for the good conduct of his son, and the parents hearing of this charge against the boy came to apply for a warrant so as to be able to surrender him and send him to the "Vernon."
2801. You are aware that there is no Reformatory for boys at present? I am.
2802. From what you have seen of juvenile crime about the city, do you think such an amendment of the Industrial Schools Act as I have indicated would be desirable? I do—more especially about this locality—in the Water Police district.
2803. Have you ever formed any opinion as to whether juvenile crime is at all on the increase amongst our juvenile population? Yes, I am sure it is on the increase, more especially amongst boys who get up to fourteen or fifteen years of age.
2804. You think it is on the increase amongst boys of that age? I do.
2805. Have you ever been able to form an opinion, from what you have seen, or from anything that has come under your own observation, of what has been the cause of this increase? I have noticed that it has been more often the case when the boys have had drunken fathers and mothers; when the parents are addicted to drink, the boys are almost sure to go wrong.
2806. I suppose your duties as a police officer bring you very much into contact with the working classes—that is, with the humbler class of workers? They do.

2807. Do you think that this dissolute life, which you say is led by so many of these parents, has been in any way caused of late by a want of work? No; work was never more plentiful than it is at present; and all these parents are receiving good wages. Sergeant J. Dawson.
2808. So that there has been no lack of work to cause this dissolute conduct? Nothing of the kind; if anything has caused it, it is that they are earning too much money. They have only to work for three days, and then they can be drunk for the rest of the week. } Dec. 1873.
2809. You think it would be better for them if they were not quite so prosperous? I do.
2810. Mr. Cowper.] Is it not the fact, that at the time the boy Galetop was taken up and discharged on the father becoming surety for his good behaviour, some eight or ten other boys were also brought before the Court for the same charge—that of stripping houses of their lead? There were eight of them, I think, besides Galetop.
2811. And the Bench were in that position, that they could not do anything but either send the boys to gaol or bind the parents over in a penalty for the good behaviour of their sons? Yes, that was the only alternative. There were two out of the same lot sent on board the "Vernon."
2812. President.] Can you tell us whether in your experience, you have found that juvenile prostitution has been to any extent checked by the operation of the Industrial Schools Act? No, I do not think it has. From what I have seen of the girls, I have found that they have always come out worse than they were when they went in.
2813. Mr. Metcalfe.] You mean that girls who have been discharged for being over age are worse than when they are sent there? Yes. As soon as they come out they go on the town.
2814. President.] How many could you tell us of, to a certainty, who have done this? I could not give you the correct number, but I myself know of several.
2815. Mr. Cowper.] The girls you speak of are those who have been returned to their parents on the expiration of their sentence? Yes.
2816. And not those who have been sent out to situations? No.
2817. Have you ever heard any instance of a girl running away from employment and going back to her mother, and then of that mother dressing her up, leading her about town, and taking her to the theatre? I have. That was the girl Bourke. I have seen her myself with her mother as you describe.
2818. Do you not think that one of the main causes of these girls going wrong when they leave Biloela, is that their parents dress them up and take them about to the theatre and other places immediately after their leaving—they are not allowed to settle down? Yes, that is it. And then they get a lot of this cheap jewellery, and get dressed out; and they will do anything for jewellery and dress. I have seen this girl Bourke's mother bringing her home from the theatre at half-past 12 at night.
2819. That girl ran away from the employment to which she was sent from Biloela? Yes; she absconded from somewhere up the country.
2820. Have you not found that the boys released from the "Vernon" have been amongst the worst characters that you have in town? I have.
2821. And are generally to be seen on election days, or on days of public excitement, ragged, and almost without clothes, and in a wretched dirty state, hanging about the hustings, creating disturbances and conducting themselves in the most disgraceful manner? Yes; when they get over age they are discharged from the "Vernon"; and as they know from their age that the police cannot take them and put them there again, they set the officers at defiance.
2822. President.] We have been told that these dancing-rooms tend greatly to the promotion of prostitution—Are there any of these carried on in public-houses? Not in public-houses, but in close proximity to public-houses. There is one in Clarence-street close to a public-house; and I have seen the men and girls in the public-house drinking and getting drunk there.
2823. Of what age are these girls? They are twelve, thirteen, and fourteen, and from that up. I have frequently gone to parents of some of these girls, and called upon them to fetch their children out of these places.
2824. Mr. Cowper.] Some two years ago was it not almost impossible to get a Bench of Magistrates to send children on board the "Vernon" or to Biloela? It was.
2825. President.] Was it not because the Magistrates seemed to think that, instead of its being an attempt to reclaim the children, the sending them to these places was intended as a punishment; and the parents holding the same view made all manner of excuses for the children, inducing the Magistrates to believe that the children ought to be let off? Yes, no doubt their friends begged them off in very many cases.
2826. Mr. Cowper.] Do you not think that if, instead of this, the parents had brought their children before the Bench, and sent them to the "Vernon" or to Biloela when they first went wrong, that there would have been a greater chance of reforming them than there is at present, now that they have got very bad? Yes, I think so.
2827. President.] Is that class of parents who allow their children to grow up in this neglected way in permanent employment? Yes, they are mostly business people—dealers and such like.
2828. Have you formed any opinion as to whether crimes of violence and assaults of an indecent character upon women are upon the increase among the young boys of Sydney? We have not much of that sort of crime in this district. We have never had a case of the kind since I have been in the district.
2829. But in the city generally, if not in your district, do you think these offences on the increase? These charges mostly come from about the centre of the city and the Racecourse.
2830. Do you think they are on the increase? No. A great stop has been put to them lately, more especially since we have had the police about in plain clothes on the Racecourse.
2831. Mr. Gould.] Are the police on the Racecourse at night? They are. There is another thing that I should like to mention, and that is that the boys behind the busses should be looked after more than they are now.
2832. President.] Do you think that boys are put behind busses too young? I do.
2833. And that instead of being there they ought to be at school? Yes.
2834. Mr. Cowper.] Do you not think that for youngsters, who make a practice of stealing wholesale lead and other articles from houses and selling the proceeds of their robberies to Chinese and other low characters, the establishment of a Reformatory is required? I think so—very much indeed. It is the only way to put a stop to that sort of thing.

- Sergeant J. Dawson.
2 Dec., 1873.
2835. President.] You say that many of these parents are in good employment who allow their children to run about neglected in the streets? They are.
2836. If then their children were taken and lodged in a Reformatory or Industrial School, would these parents be in a position to pay, if an order of the Bench were made that they should pay so much a week towards the support of the children whilst in such school? There is not a man in my district who is not earning good wages, and who could not make a good week if he liked to work. I know men, labouring men, who are earning £3 and £3 5s. a week. If these boys, instead of being left to run about, were properly looked after and sent to school, in a very short time they would be able to support themselves, and give no trouble to the Government or to anybody else.

Constable Henry Hughes called in and examined:—

- Constable H. Hughes.
2 Dec., 1873.
2837. President.] You are a constable in the Sydney Police? I am.
2838. We are told that you, by the direction of Sergeant Dawson, took an infant to the Benevolent Asylum in Parramatta-street, a few days ago? Yes, on the 11th of last month.
2839. At what time did you get there? I could not say exactly, but it was between 11 and 12 o'clock in the forenoon.
2840. Did you succeed—I believe you had an order from the Bench to admit the child? Yes, from His Worship Mr. Goold.
2841. Did you succeed in getting the child admitted? Not the first time.
2842. How was that—what were you told? The gentleman to whom I gave Mr. Goold's letter said he could not take upon himself to take the child in until such time as the committee should sit at 4 o'clock, so I brought the child back to the Water Police Court.
2843. What did you do next? I took the child back again at five minutes past 1 o'clock, and then I found that the old gentleman I had seen was away at his dinner. I waited till he came back, and then I presented to him a letter I had got from the Colonial Secretary's Office. He looked at the letter, and he said that did not at all alter the circumstances, that it did not alter them a bit, and that I must wait till 4 o'clock till the committee met, before the child could be received. When I came back with the child I took the letter I had got from the Water Police Bench to the Colonial Secretary's Office, and there they gave me another letter, which I took with the child down to the Benevolent Asylum. The old gentleman took the letter.
2844. Was it Mr. Mansfield? Yes, I think that was the name I heard him called. He took the letter and looked at the address, and then said that did not alter the circumstances a bit, and that I would have to wait till 4 o'clock till the committee met.
2845. Did you take the child again? I did not go away, but waited about until 4 o'clock, and then I succeeded in getting the child admitted when the committee sat.
2846. And all this time that you were waiting about, was the child in charge of a woman? Yes, the woman who had charge of the child was with me all the time.
2847. Mr. Goold.] Did you appear before the committee yourself? Yes.
2848. What took place? They asked me if I knew anything of the child and its parents, but I told them that I knew nothing about either except what I had heard. Then they asked me what the parents were, and I said that the one was in gaol and that the other was a confirmed drunkard.
2849. But at last the child was admitted? Yes.
2850. On what ground? They did not state anything to me.
2851. You took an order from the Colonial Secretary's Office for the admission of the child? I went with a letter—I suppose it was an order, but I did not see it.
2852. And that is all you know of the matter? Yes, that is all.
2853. Mr. Couper.] Then if the committee had not met for a week, you were led to believe that it would be no use for you to bring the child, as until the committee did meet it would not be admitted? Yes.
2854. Was that the purport of the communication made to you? He told me that he would not take upon himself to admit the child until the committee sat at 4 o'clock that evening.
2855. Then you understood him to convey the idea that it would be impossible to admit the child until the committee sat—that he could not admit it except when the committee were sitting? Yes; I was led to believe that it would be no use for me to bring the child unless the committee did sit.
2856. Mr. Goold.] That was on Tuesday? Yes, on the 11th.

FRIDAY, 6 FEBRUARY, 1874.

Members Present:—

WILLIAM CHARLES WINDEYER, Esq., PRESIDENT.

MICHAEL METCALFE, Esq. | SAMUEL GOOLD, Esq.
CHARLES COWPER, JUN., Esq.

Frederic Norton Manning, Esq., M.D., called in and examined:—

- F. N. Manning, Esq., M.D.
6 Feb., 1874.
2857. President.] What is your official title? I am the Medical Superintendent of the Gladesville Hospital for the Insane, and Inspector of the Insane at Newcastle.
2858. Inspector of what? Inspector of the Asylums for the Insane.
2859. You are Inspector of all the Asylums for the Insane? Yes.
2860. A suggestion was made to us, Dr. Manning, in the course of the evidence, with reference to the treatment and care of lunatics in the country districts; and though the subject is not absolutely within the province of our inquiry, we deem the subject worthy of some consideration. It was suggested to us that some steps should be taken with reference to the treatment of pauper lunatics in the country districts, and Mr. Fosbery has represented that great expense is incurred in bringing these people down the country—sometimes more than once—and he represents the great hardships they have to suffer, and the ill effects of their being dragged about in this way. He suggested the propriety of establishing some Asylums

Asylums in the country for the insane, or providing for their treatment in the gaols of the country. Has the subject been under your consideration? It has repeatedly. The fact is now that a large number of insane people are treated in the up-country gaols, and it is only when they become incurable that they reach me. I scarcely expect to do anything to cure people who are sent to me from the up-country districts. They are not sent to me until they are incurable; they often reach me six months after the original date of their falling into the hands of the police. Of course I am speaking of outlying parts of the country, like Bourke more particularly. I think that a great deal may be done to improve the conditions under which they are treated, and my suggestion was to attach to the up-country hospitals small reception-houses (as they would really be) for the treatment of lunatics. There are two or three sections in the new Lunacy Bill now before the House, giving power to erect these small detached buildings in connection with country hospitals, and making provision for the Government defraying the expense of persons maintained there. I think this would be better than providing for their treatment in gaols.

F. N.
Manning,
Esq., M.D.
6 Feb., 1874.

2861. Would it not increase the expenses of the country hospitals very largely—you would have to have extra assistance? Yes, but the Government would pay for it.

2862. They could pay for it as required? Yes, that is my idea—as it is required.

2863. Mr. Fosbery says—"that from want of care and proper means for treating lunatics in the country districts, they are dragged through the country hundreds of miles, frequently under restraint, and at an enormous cost to the public, simply for the purpose of bringing them down to Sydney, possibly making confirmed lunatics of them thereby. I know an instance in point, of a woman who was brought twice from a distant part of the country, at a cost each time of £70; and of course the exposure and restraint, and the hardship of travelling, rendered her disease ten times worse than it otherwise would have been"? Yes. I know that woman—she came from Deniliquin—I remember the case. Once or twice it has been suggested to have hospitals for the insane in the up-country districts, but it has been found that the expense of maintenance is greater in the country than near Sydney, and I do not think the Government have entertained the idea. Even at Newcastle the expenses of the Asylum there are greatly in excess of the expenses of the Asylum at Gladesville.

2864. They have a Lunatic Asylum at Beechworth in Victoria? Yes; and one at Ararat too.

2865. Are the expenses greater there? No, they are not greater there. I suppose the supplies are more easily obtained there. The rations are very expensive at Newcastle; they cost nearly a third more there than they do at Gladesville.

2866. Mr. Metcalfe.] Do you know why it is that the up-country Benches detain insane people so long? Very often it is for want of an escort; and sometimes they are kept in gaol—the surgeons seeing that they are recovering. Sometimes their recovery is only temporary, and then they are sent on in the end.

2867. Mr. Couper.] Should there not be padded cells in all the lockups on the way down the country? No doubt it would be advisable to have special cells, not padded cells; padded cells are not necessary; I have none. If you have them boarded, they are much cleaner and better in every way. Certainly some special rooms are necessary.

2868. President.] There would not be any economy in keeping them up the country? No. It would be better for them to come down if there was a quick escort. I would sooner have them come early, because insanity is more curable in its early stages.

2869. But you believe that this carrying about is bad for them? Yes, very bad indeed. Still, I must say that the physical condition in which they arrive is as a rule very good indeed, and most creditable to the police. It is very rare indeed that there is any bruising of any kind, and, as a rule, they are very clean. There are certain cases of course where they arrive dirty, but I always complain of them when they do.

2870. What are your reasons for desiring that they should go to hospitals rather than to gaols? I do not think it is advisable to regard lunacy as a crime. It is a disease, and should be treated in a hospital rather than in a gaol.

2871. Mr. Metcalfe.] But there are so few hospitals in the outlying districts? But they are kept in places where there are hospitals—as Mudgee, Bathurst, Yass—places where there certainly are hospitals.

2872. President.] Have you seen cases in which the effects of their detention in gaol have been injurious? I think the whole process is injurious. The process by which a man is taken before a Magistrate, and lunacy is technically regarded as a crime, is injurious. It has a very bad effect. In the future these people imagine they are imprisoned for some crime; their detention in gaol continues that belief, and they very often regard Gladesville as a gaol.

2873. Mr. Couper.] There can be no possible use in bringing them before Magistrates, because the Magistrates only act upon the opinions of the doctors? Yes.

2874. Therefore, if a doctor gives a certificate, that should be sufficient? Yes.

2875. President.] In the proposed Lunacy Bill it is proposed to do away with this system? Yes, entirely.

2876. And substitute what? The examination by medical men in a private room. Lunatics are not brought before the Court at all. A delay now arises from the necessity of sending to Sydney for the Governor's warrant—that is the official routine; the papers are always sent down to Sydney, and under this Bill the Magistrate has the power of committing them at once without waiting for the Governor's warrant, so that the day they are found insane they are started off to a hospital.

2877. With reference to the receiving-house at Darlinghurst, recently erected to obviate the necessity of lunatics being sent to gaol, we understand that it does not answer its purpose? A large number passes through it every year—quite two-thirds of the total number at Gladesville pass through it now. I have not the figures with me, but last year I admitted 296, and of that number upwards of 200 passed through the reception-house; others came to me from Parramatta, Mudgee, and Bathurst direct, without going to the reception-house.

2878. But persons of doubtful sanity still go to gaol, and, on being certified insane, they go to the receiving-house, and you get them? Yes, I think it might be advisable to admit them into the receiving-house on the certificate of one medical man, and then another might certify to their insanity there. That is proposed to be done under the new Bill. It is proposed to give what is called a certificate of emergency.

2879. That is a defect under the present Act? Yes, it is a defect.

2880. Mr. Couper.] Is it not the case, to send people to the receiving-house you must have a certificate from two medical officers, taken before two Magistrates, and when you cannot get that they are sent to gaol? Yes, that is the exact defect we are speaking of.

2881. Mr. Metcalfe.] I understood that when the receiving-house was built, these people should be taken there at once? I do not know what was the original intention.

F. N.
Manning,
Esq., M.D.
6 Feb., 1874.

2882. Mr. Cowper.] But they may be insane—but unless the doctors actually certify that they are insane they must be taken to gaol? Yes.

2883. And under these circumstances the Magistrate can only remand them to gaol until two medical officers can be got to certify that they are insane—Do you not think a man of doubtful sanity should be sent to the receiving-house instead of to the gaol—persons suffering from delirium tremens for instance? I do not think so. I do not regard it as a place for the treatment of drunkards.

2884. Mr. Metcalfe.] You regard them as criminals? No, I do not say that; I would rather see them sent to such a place as the Sydney Infirmary, or some hospital.

2885. But you do not think that drunkards should be sent to gaol? There are some cases in which you cannot rightly give a certificate of insanity—they are suffering from delirium tremens, and you feel quite certain that they will be perfectly well in a few days. That they should pass under a certificate of insanity would be worse for them than sending them to gaol.

2886. Mr. Cowper.] Cases come before us where we remand them to gaol first, and ultimately they are sent to the receiving-house? Yes.

2887. Should not these cases be sent to the receiving-house direct? Yes, on the certificate of one medical man that they are insane.

2888. But if there is any doubt about their being insane, should they not be taken to the receiving-house rather than to the gaol? I think not.

2889. Mr. Goold.] There was a case came before me at the Water Police Office of a man who was suffering from insanity through drink—he was remanded for a week to gaol, put under treatment, and then he was all right.

2890. Mr. Cowper.] I had a case yesterday of a Chinaman who had come out in this rail boat—he is one of those East Indians or Chinamen, I am not sure which. They could do nothing with him on board the vessel, he talked like a madman and acted like a madman—acted in the most extraordinary way, and the doctors would not certify that he was insane, and I sent him to gaol. Is not that a case for the receiving-house—the man was sober, talked all kinds of nonsense, yet the doctors would not certify to his insanity, and I had to send him to gaol? I think it requires a considerable amount of consideration whether you send a man to a lunatic asylum or not. The receiving-house is really a lunatic asylum. Great safeguards are provided, and are necessary to prevent people being sent to a lunatic asylum who are not insane; and you may injure a man for life by sending him there when he is suffering from temporary illness. He might be sent there by designing friends. A man had better go to gaol if his is a doubtful case than go to a lunatic asylum, but I had far rather see him sent to a hospital.

2891. Would it not be better to have another place erected for the reception of such cases? Decidedly.

2892. President.] I have certainly been under a misapprehension as to what this reception-house was for? It is a temporary residence for lunatics—for people who are of unsound mind—lunatics. There are now cases in which a delay of six or seven days occurs, and during that period these people reside in the reception-house instead of the gaol.

2893. Then people who are on their way to Gladesville have very often to pass a night in Sydney, and they are taken to the reception-house instead of the gaol? It certainly would be better if people were admitted to the reception-house on the certificate of one medical man.

2894. I understood that this building was erected to prevent people of doubtful sanity being sent to gaol, as people are sometimes made confirmed lunatics by being sent to gaol; in fact, this building, as I understood, was erected in consequence of a case of this kind—a case of a gentleman here in Sydney, a schoolmaster, who was sent to gaol suffering from some illness, became a confirmed lunatic. Do you think that he was better in gaol than he would have been in the receiving-house? I think so, provided the gaol hospital was properly conducted and he was not really insane.

2895. Do not you think that it might confirm the madness of people suffering under excitement? I would not allow a man to know that he is in gaol. The hospital might be so detached from all other parts of the gaol that he might feel no stigma in having been there.

2896. Then who are the people you object to send to gaol? Lunatics—people who are thoroughly insane.

2897. You think it is more harm for them than to people who are in such a state that no one can say whether they are insane or not? Very much more. If you can have wards in connection with the Sydney Infirmary, or a hospital for those cases, it will be better, otherwise I think the gaol is the best place for them. I do not think that doubtful cases are these which should be sent to a receiving-house for lunatics.

2898. Mr. Metcalfe.] Suppose we call it an interim reception-house? It would be used for the passage of lunatics, and its purpose still thoroughly well known.

2899. President.] You think then that a man is more likely to become a confirmed lunatic by being sent to a lunatic receiving-house than by being sent to gaol? I did not say that at all.

2900. I thought you said that it might affect the man more injuriously? No; I do not think a man should have the stigma of having been insane attached to him when he has really never been so. There is no disgrace in it at all, but there is a stigma attached to a man who has been in a lunatic asylum—he does not find occupation readily afterwards—for all the rest of his life people look upon him with suspicion, and even in legal matters he is a doubtful witness and a doubtful will-maker. I do not think he should be placed in any building that is really a lunatic asylum unless he has gone through an examination by a medical man, and the medical man should be responsible, and should be prosecuted if he sent him there wrongfully.

2901. Mr. Cowper.] Innocently? No, but he should be compelled to take all proper precautions. It is a terrible pity to send doubtful cases of insanity to gaol; but it would be worse to send them to the reception-house.

2902. You think there should be some place for the reception of these cases in connection with the hospital? Yes, or if in connection with the gaol apart from its ordinary work.

2903. President.] Mr. Maclean, the Inspector of Prisons, says this. I put the question:—"I thought that there was a receiving-house at Darlinghurst outside the gaol?—That is for persons who are insane. Or persons who are supposed to be insane?—Yes, that is what that house is used for. People are not sent there unless certified to be insane,—it is an error in the Act; so that the building has not satisfied its purpose, which was to receive people of doubtful sanity. Those people now go to gaol as they did before. The great object was to keep them out of the gaol, their minds being affected by the associations of the place."

2904. Were you here when the reception-house was built? I was not.

2905.

F. N.
Manning,
Esq., M.D.
6 Feb., 1874.

2905. Then if it was built for that purpose, it was a building that should not have been put up? If it was built for that purpose—a very excellent purpose too—it should not be used as it is used now, as a temporary asylum; the two places should be totally distinct—one comes within my department, and the other has nothing to do with it. It is fulfilling a very useful purpose now as a temporary refuge for people who are supposed to be insane—people pass a night there on their way to Gladesville. When they come from the country they are taken in and rested there, and a great many of the Sydney cases spend a week there.

2906. For what purpose? Until the necessary papers are obtained. Out of 296 that came to me last year, upwards of 200 passed through the receiving-house. That shows what a useful place it has been, but I think it should not be used for doubtful cases. I would not mix the two classes of cases.

2907. You would not approve of an alteration in the Act to make this a place for the reception of doubtful cases? I would not. I should approve rather of having another building for them.

2908. Mr. Metcalfe.] Could it not be abolished as a place for the reception of lunatics? Then you would want some other place for them. People from the country very often have to stay a night in Sydney, when they are not able to get on to Gladesville.

2909. Mr. Cowper.] Could there not be a place attached to this building for the reception of doubtful cases? No. It would be only like adding another room to the building.

2910. If that is your idea, the establishment of some place like that is very necessary? I have always looked forward to a change in this place—I expected every month it was going to be changed.

2911. I thought it was intended for the reception of doubtful cases? I should be very glad indeed to see the establishment of another institution—very glad, but not to have a lunatic reception-house devoted to that purpose. When the new Act passes, there will be no necessity to keep people in the reception-house for so long a time.

2912. Will there be any necessity for keeping them there at all? Yes, in some cases, for one night.

2913. President.] Then it would not be so bad to send doubtful cases there if the confirmed cases merely pass through it? Not quite, possibly.

2914. Then, in your opinion, it is merely a question of degree? Yes, a question of degree.

2915. Is there anything you would like to add yourself on this topic or mention on these matters. I do not think it is within our scope to inquire into the Asylums for the Insane as such, but if there is anything you wish to say we shall be glad to hear it? I do not think there is anything I wish to state particularly. I do not know much of other institutions with the exception of the lunatic asylums.

2916. Have you ever visited the country hospitals? No, except that at Newcastle. There is one thing I might mention—I do not know whether it has attracted your attention or not—and that is the system we have here of specializing institutions so much, and working some of them at a totally different cost from others, excluding all cases that give extra trouble and expense, from the Benevolent Asylums, for instance. I have a great many cases sent to me that could be easily managed in the Benevolent Asylums—cases of men with failing faculties, who might be maintained there at far less cost.

2917. What is the average cost of the patients in the Lunatic Asylum? About £32 a year.

2918. Is that the average? Yes, that is the average. Parramatta is cheaper, and Newcastle is more expensive.

2919. How much more expensive? A good deal more, from the distance from Sydney and the price of provisions, but mainly because it is a small establishment, and the people are helpless and not able to do anything for themselves.

2920. What is the cost there? It is upwards of £40, I think. I cannot tell you exactly; we have not all last year's returns, and the first year is always more expensive, as furniture and other things go into the cost. The institution was started late in 1871, and the returns I have are for 1872 only.

2921. What is the cost at Parramatta? £25 I think.

2922. The complaint made by managers of the asylums is, that cases of the kind you describe disturb the place so—that they have no special rooms to put them in—that they have to put men with unsettled minds into a large dormitory, where they disturb the rest of the others? Then the fault is not setting apart a separate dormitory for them. Many of these people are not violent or dangerous. They are maintained in the workhouse wards in England with perfect comfort, and at a much less expense than they can be maintained in lunatic asylums, because there must be paid labour in a lunatic asylum. I would not carry it to a great extent; but I think that this idea of sending old people with demented minds to the Lunatic Asylum has been pushed too far here. The moment they are a little bit troublesome they are sent to the lunatic asylums.

2923. Mr. Metcalfe.] But the asylums are too full? We are too full also—we have nearly double the number we should have.

2924. Mr. Cowper.] They object to take cripples or boys? Surely you can have separate rooms for these people, rooms for your junior patients, and with them put a responsible officer or wardman—we have to do that—it is a thing that occurs frequently in Asylums. We have children and grown-up men, but we so far classify them as to prevent any evil consequences, and I do not see why that cannot be done in other institutions.

2925. But they have no officers, these Benevolent Asylums? They should have them; I think that should have more officers—that is my idea. There was a case of an epileptic boy on board the "Vernon"; they tried to send him to me, but the doctors refused to certify that he was insane, and the papers came back to me two or three times. I pointed out that he could not come to me unless certified to be of unsound mind, and I suggested that he should go to the Benevolent Asylum, and they absolutely refused to take him because they had no special appliances for these boys, and did not like to put him with the men on account of bad practices. They should provide for the reception of such cases. If they were maintained at a cost of £20 per head, it would be better than paying £30 or £40 for them.

2926. How many cases have you of people in the Lunatic Asylum who should be sent to the Asylum for the Infirm and Destitute? From 150 to 200 might be sent I think.

2927. Mr. Metcalfe.] Then it may be well to build a ward to look after them? I will not say there are 200; perhaps 150.

2928. Mr. Cowper.] I thought all these cases were at Newcastle? No; there are a great many at Parramatta. I am not speaking of children only.

2929. Harmless lunatics? Yes, old people who are not troublesome, except that they need attention.

2930. Most of the people whom you have at Newcastle are unable to attend to themselves at all? Very few.

F. N.
Manning,
Esq., M.D.
6 Feb., 1874.

2931. Mr. Cowper.] They have to be washed and dressed, and taken to the water-closet and so on? Yes.
2932. And these are the sort of people you would send to a Benevolent Asylum? I would not send the very helpless—I think they should be in an especial institution—with specially paid and trained attendants—but I could pick out a large number who just might as well be maintained in the Benevolent Asylums as with me. They might pass through me and back again. I would not send them to the Benevolent Asylums if they were very bad, or when they have recovered from a state of extreme excitement or feebleness. The diet there is not what it should be, and they would drop back again.
2933. Mr. Metcalfe.] What diet do you give? Our diet is a very liberal one, and it is necessary for such people.
2934. Mr. Goold.] What number have you at Gladesville? 570.
2935. And what number out of that do you think would be suitable for the Benevolent Asylum? A very small number. Mine are recent admissions. I do not as a rule send patients to Parramatta until they are fit to sleep in an associated dormitory. The larger number would go from Parramatta and Newcastle.
2936. Not from Gladesville? No, not from Gladesville. Many of them are not recent cases; some have been in for years, and have got gradually demented.

George Girling, overseer, Parramatta Hospital, examined during the inspection of the hospital:—

G. Girling.
21 June, 1873.

2937. President.] What is your position here? I am overseer or master.
2938. How long have you been here? Ten years and better.
2939. What salary do you receive? £100 a year for my wife and myself, and rations.
2940. Rations for two? Yes.
2941. And £100 for the two? Yes.
2942. Is there any one else about the place? Yes, the cook and the wardsman.
2943. Do you mean two officers, or are the cook and wardsman one person? There is one person cook and wardsman; and also there is an old man who cuts wood and looks after the cow and so on.
2944. Does he get any salary? The cook and wardsman receives £40 a year; the old man who cuts the wood, &c., receives a gratuity of 6d. per day.
2945. Do they live on the place? Yes.
2946. These are the only people you have? Yes.
2947. Mr. Cowper.] How many patients have you here? Two men and three women—five altogether.
2948. How many are there in this ward? Only two.
2949. What is the greatest number of patients you have had in here at one time? Fourteen, I think—not more, but I can see by the book. Our average at different times, one with another, may be nine or ten; we have only five now.
2950. Mr. Ellis.] What is the average number during the year? We have about eighty or ninety in the year.
2951. What number do you have here at once, on an average? Not more than six or seven.
2952. How long do they stay here? From time of admittance different periods, but rarely exceeds eighty or ninety days.
2953. How long have these patients been here? There is a woman has been here the longest; she has been here nearly eighty days, but she has been very bad.
2954. What is she suffering from? Neuralgia very bad, but she is getting better now.
2955. President.] Are there any people here, do you think, who would be better in the Liverpool Asylum? Yes, that man over there [referring to a patient] ought to go; he was brought in by the police here; but we often send them to Liverpool or Parramatta or Hyde Park Asylum. The doctor gives a certificate and the secretary then sends a request to Mr. King to have the man taken into the asylum, and then there is invariably an order sent up for the man's admission into the asylum.
2956. What is that man suffering from? Old age.
2957. Is there nothing the matter with him? Yes, when he came in he had a hurt in the knee.
2958. But he is well now? No, he will never be well.
2959. Who pays for his keep here? He is here without charge; any man brought here by the police has to be taken in.
2960. Do you know how much the Government grant to this hospital? £250 a year;—at least, when I say that, I mean that sum is on the Estimates, but if the subscriptions do not come to that it is lost, for the Government only pay pound for pound with what is subscribed. One year they only paid 10s. in the pound, and the year they gave only 10s. to the subscribers' £1 the expense of the institution exceeded the receipts by more than £80.
2961. Mr. Ellis.] What class of persons is received here generally? Every subscriber is authorized to send a patient in—all subscribers of £1; and accidents are admitted free at all times, and any case of emergency—that is, if the police find persons in the street destitute, or a case of sickness, it is brought here and received.
2962. Who is the medical officer? Dr. Rutter and Dr. Brown.
2963. They do not attend here very often I suppose? When it is requisite; not daily, only when considered necessary by them to do so, or in cases where daily attendance is necessary.
2964. Have you any out-door patients? No. There is a Benevolent Society, and I issue rations to some people. I am issuing them to-day.

2965. Are they provided by the Government money? Yes, the Government have money on the Estimates for it, but it is claimed in the same manner as the hospital, pound for pound. There are eighteen rations to issue to-day, and there are seventeen people waiting for them. G. Girling.
21 June, 1873.
2966. What have you to do with this Benevolent Society? I issue the rations—that is all.
2967. President.] Are you paid extra for that? Nothing of consequence—only £1 a month.
2968. How long is it since this place was whitewashed? Two or three years since it was properly white-washed, but it is whitewashed as you see every two months. I whitewash the place about every two months, outside, or anything like that, when it is necessary.
2969. Are there any vermin here? No, I do not think so. I whitewash the place whenever it is necessary, or if a man dies here I whitewash it then.
2970. Mr. Ellis.] Who has the management of the institution? There is a committee of management.
2971. Who are they? The names are in the office. Mr. Bowden is the president, and Mr. Doust is the secretary.
2972. Do they meet very often? Once a month, or even oftener if there is any special reason.
2973. How many members of the committee are there? Twelve.
2974. Are they appointed by the subscribers? Appointed at the annual meeting, by a ballot of as many subscribers as meet. There are not many generally.
2975. Do they attend frequently? Once a month.
2976. Are there any sub-committees? There is a visiting committee of three.
2977. When do they come here? There is no fixed time for their coming. They come perhaps once a week, sometimes oftener, and sometimes they do not.
2978. Do they come once a week or once a month? Not all of them.
2979. President.] How many women have you got here? Three.
2980. Have you any female nurse? No.
2981. Then who attends to the women? The missus does that, or she gets an old woman to do it; but she is responsible for it.
2982. Mr. Goold.] How often do you have these clothes washed? Once every week, and the blankets when they need it.
2983. Have you any regulations for the government of this hospital? Yes.
2984. Have you only one female ward? Yes.
2985. President.] Who makes up the prescriptions? Mr. Rowling, the chemist.
2986. Does he come here to do it? No, we take the book to him.
2987. And he makes them up and sends his bill in just as he would to a private individual? Yes, at the end of the month. I think that there is an understanding that he allows 10 per cent. or something like that.
2988. Who is the treasurer? Mr. Gregg.
2989. Mr. Metcalfe.] Who cleans the floors here? The wardsmen do that. I do anything myself that has to be done. In a place like this it is not like a place where there are plenty of servants—the master has to do it.
2990. Who washes the clothes? The missus does that.
2991. Your wife? Yes.
2992. Mr. Ellis.] Have you any book to show what is consumed here during the year? Yes, there is a book to show that. (Book produced.) It has to be made up.
2993. This is a day-book? Yes.
2994. You have no book which will show at a glance what is consumed? No.
2995. No ledger? No; that is the only book I keep.
2996. Mr. Metcalfe.] Do you receive any money at all? No; it is not usual for me to do so.
2997. If you get any money it is given to the committee. Yes. There is a visiting-book and a list of the committee.
2998. Mr. Ellis.] Have you any diet scale here? No more than this. (Diet scale handed in. See Appendix A.)
2999. President.] Is there any suggestion that you wish to make? No. Everything is brought before the monthly committee, and if they think proper to do a thing it is done, and the accounts are all sent in and placed before the committee and examined and paid.

CHARLES COWPER, JUN., ESQ.

Michael Metcalfe, Esq., a member of the Commission, examined in his place:—

3000. President.] I believe you have been to Windsor, and have visited the hospital there? Yes.
3001. Will you describe the kind of building used as a hospital there, and the general state in which you found it? I found an old building which in past days was I believe used as a military hospital—a large house containing four rooms, one of which was used entirely for females, and the three for men. There were, I think, about ten or twelve women in the institution and between thirty and forty men. There was no exclusive ward appointed for the reception of hospital cases; and the arrangements were so bad that if an operation had to be performed, the patient had to be placed on the table from which the others had to eat their food. There are also two outside cottages, one of which is occupied by the master, and the other used for cooking, &c.; they are both out of repair.
3002. When you say there was no classification in the place, you mean that the paupers maintained there were in the same wards with the sick people—that it was an asylum as well as a hospital? Yes. The master said that as far as they could they kept the hospital cases separate, but that they were obliged to mix them up with cases of merely destitute people. The place appeared to be kept tolerably clean, and was represented to me as being perfectly free from vermin, but it had the appearance of a worn-out building; the floors floors were quite worn-out and had a dirty appearance (I don't think they were actually dirty), and the beds and everything else looked as if they were the refuse of some old hospital—in fact, the whole place was destitute of anything like comfort.

3003. How was its ventilation? The windows are on each side of the rooms, but they are very small, and they are placed about the middle of the wall—they are very small indeed. There was no unpleasant effluvia in the rooms I was in; but I was informed that people with bad sores which smell disagreeably are placed in the same room with people in good health, and they have to eat their food with this frightful stink all round them. The ration allowed to the inmates was 1 lb. of meat and 1 lb. of bread a day; a pint of tea morning and evening; $\frac{3}{4}$ lb. of sugar for each inmate per week; no vegetables of any sort are allowed them, but occasionally the people in the neighbourhood send presents of vegetables.

3004. Is there any land attached to the institution? They informed me that there were two acres of land there, but it was very scanty.

3005. Available for cultivation? No, there is only room for a little garden; they do not grow vegetables, but the master said that if there was land the inmates could grow vegetables. I asked for one of the reports, and they gave me one for 1872, which gives a description of the property held by the Society, viz., £3,500 worth of Government debentures, 524 acres freehold land, and a run at Mooki, Liverpool Plains, of 1,369 acres (that must be 13,000, I think, instead of 1,300). I was informed that the run was let formerly for £400 a year, but at present they only received £100 a year for it, as some free selectors had selected a large quantity of it, and therefore the value of the place to the tenant had become very much reduced. I was also informed that they had applied to the Government to let them have some more land; and that the Colonial Secretary had promised to put £400 on the Estimates to build them a wing. But while they ask for this additional accommodation, they have a house in the town of Windsor that they let for a public-house for £25 a year, which would be quite enough for all the hospital uses that they want. The only expense to which they seem to be put for care and nursing is that they have a manager and his wife, who receive £70 a year and their rations. I do not know that there is anything else.

3006. Did they tell you on what system the patients' were admitted? Yes, on the recommendations of the subscribers.

3007. Was this building which is let for £25 a year originally a Government building, or is it a property which they have acquired? I do not know. They receive £25 a year rent for it. They call it the old asylum. I have no doubt that it was Government property. They receive £100 a year from the Government in aid of the hospital, £100 a year rent of their run, £25 a year rent of the old asylum, and £16 a year rent for land at Wilberforce, and £191 9s. 2d. are the annual subscriptions and donations. In addition to the expenses I have named, there is £40 a year salary to the surgeon, and they have an allowance to the cook and laundress of about £23 a year, and to a wardman they allow £15; he is one of the inmates. I was impressed with the idea that to spend money in adding to such a building as that would be a waste of money, and I should recommend an inspection by the Colonial Architect before any money is spent upon it; and I should also think that where a Society has £3,500 in cash, they should spend their money in keeping the place in repair, rather than apply to the public to do so.

3008. Did they explain to you at all how it is that the rent of this station at the Mooki is so small—being only £100 a year? Yes. They informed me that it was £400 a year at one time, but in consequence of free selection—and they thought that the lessee had been the free selector in this instance—the value of the run had been very much reduced, and it was now let for £100 a year instead of £400.

3009. Did they tell you what was the average number of patients? In the year 1871, according to the report, there were fifty-three patients during the whole year, of whom fourteen died, twenty-five were discharged cured or relieved, and I think at present there are fifteen women and thirty-five men in the place.

3010. The institution is managed by a committee, elected by the subscribers annually? They meet on the second Wednesday of each month. The water is all supplied from the roof. There are no conveniences for bathing or washing.

3011. Is there no bath at all? No place of the kind; there is an old tin bath there, which cannot be used. I do not know how the poor creatures manage at all. The superintendent's cottage is very much out of repair; and the average number of patients a year is fifty.

WILLIAM CHARLES WINDEYER, Esq., PRESIDENT.

SAMUEL GOOLD, Esq., | MICHAEL METCALFE, Esq.,

The Rev. W. J. Gunther, President, Parramatta District Hospital, called in and examined:—

Rev. W. J.
Gunther.

3012. President.] You are the Incumbent of St. John's Church, Parramatta? Yes.

3013. I believe you are president of the Parramatta Hospital? Yes, I come here as president.

10 Feb., 1874.

3014. You have been summoned in compliance with your own request, giving us to understand that you wished to make some communication to the Commission? It is at the request of the committee I attend. I was not present at all the meetings when the grievance I have to bring under your notice was discussed, and I think the communication could have been made in writing just as well. The thing is that a great number of people impose upon us as we think; a great number of persons get into the hospital who are fit for a benevolent asylum rather than a hospital; they are sent in generally by the police, and we thought it well to recommend to the Commission that either an individual or a Board should have the power to transfer these persons at once from the hospital to the asylum.

3015. I suppose these people who have been in the asylum at Parramatta go out and are found wandering about the streets by the police, and are then sent to the hospital? To the hospital, just so. I will not say that every one of these people have been in the asylum, but nine-tenths of them have. I find from an examination of the books, that in the year 1868 there were in the Parramatta Hospital sixty-one patients, of whom eight were benevolent asylum patients rather than hospital patients; in 1869, there were sixty-four patients in the hospital, of whom nine were benevolent asylum patients; in 1870 there were sixty-five patients in the hospital, of whom eleven were regarded as benevolent asylum patients; in 1871 there were eighty-three patients in the hospital, ten of whom were regarded as benevolent asylum patients; in 1872 there were eighty-four patients, fifteen of whom were regarded as benevolent asylum patients; in 1873 there were sixty-four patients in the hospital, nineteen of whom were regarded as benevolent asylum patients; they have increased very much within the last two years. I do not think that Mr. Langley and the other Magistrates always exercise their privilege of sending people to the hospital. The Government contribute pound for pound in proportion to the subscriptions, but I do not think the Magistrates generally exercise their privilege.

Rev. W. J.
Gunther.
10 Feb., 1874.

3016. Mr. Metcalfe.] The privilege of sending patients to the hospital? Yes.

3017. President.] The Government exercise that power, because they contribute pound for pound in proportion to the subscriptions, and the Magistrates send people to the hospital sometimes? Yes, they send them to the hospital sometimes when they ought to go to the benevolent asylum.

3018. And all the Government pay you is pound for pound in proportion to the money subscribed by the public? Yes.

3019. Do you not get any special allowance on account of Government patients? No, not at all, and it is difficult to know what to do with these old men, some of whom have been weeks and months in there; the fact is, our medical officers receive no remuneration, and we do not like to suggest that these shall be turned out; we feel some delicacy in the matter.

3020. Why? Lest we should be interfering with the medical officers, who may not think they ought to be removed until they are fit. If any Board or individual in Parramatta had power they could be sent to the asylum at once, if you did not like to recommend that the doctor should have that power.

3021. Had not Dr. Greenup that power? Yes, he had.

3022. Mr. Metcalfe.] Is not the asylum sometimes over-crowded? Yes, very, occasionally, I think. I do not know what position Dr. Greenup occupied, but he had some power.

3023. President.] And you wish a similar power to be given to some one else there? Yes, to an individual or a Board.

3024. Do you know the average cost of a patient in the Parramatta Hospital? I cannot tell you that.

3025. Is there anything else you would wish us to know? No, I think not.

3026. Do you think the charity of the hospital at Parramatta is at all abused by people getting in who are in a position to get medical assistance for themselves? Very rarely, I think. I think the committee attend very well to their duties. We were discussing that matter some time ago. I only know of one case for some time past.

3027. Mr. Metcalfe.] There must be no necessity for a hospital there at all, you are so near Sydney? A good many come from the country districts, Pennant Hills and Seven Hills, and there are a good many accident cases.

3028. You do not appear to have more than five or six patients a month? Altogether, no.

3029. It is scarcely worth while to maintain this hospital at the public expense? Yes, there are a good many cases of accidents in the neighbourhood—serious accidents. It is a question whether these people would not be inconvenienced by travelling by rail.

3030. They would not be worse off than people who meet with accidents up the country? Oh no; and we are very close to the railway station.

3031. Mr. Goold.] There is another hospital at Windsor? That is partly a benevolent asylum. We have a benevolent society also. We have two distinct institutions—a benevolent asylum, supported by the Government, and this other institution to which the Government contribute pound for pound in proportion to the subscriptions raised.

3032. President.] Are you connected with that benevolent society? Yes, I am virtually president of that also.

3033. What is the amount per annum that you expend in the operations of the society? I am afraid that I cannot give you that at all accurately. I do not think it is over £200 a year.

3034. Mr. Metcalfe.] I confess that it struck me that the hospital was of little use, and that the only good thing was the giving of these rations to the poor? I do not think that the charity of the hospital is abused, but that of the benevolent society is constantly.

3035. President.] How abused? People get rations under false pretences—people who are able to keep themselves. The committee has been shamefully deceived in past times. The plan was to appoint a new visiting committee every month, so that persons obtaining relief were put off by one visiting committee and very often put on again the next month by the next visiting committee. I suggested that a visiting committee should be appointed for six months.

3036. Did you not keep a record of the persons relieved? It was left to the visiting committee. We have altered all the rules, and the visiting committee is now appointed for six months, and it is impossible for people to get on and off as they did before.

3037. You say that the Government give pound for pound in proportion to the subscriptions? Yes.

3038. And the persons whom you relieve are principally townspeople? A large proportion of them are people residing in the town. It costs the Government less than if they sent the old people to the asylum.

3039. Do they live in their own houses? Yes, there are several married couples, who are singularly respectable people, receiving relief. I know two whose rent I pay, and they get rations from the society. They think it a sad thing to be separated after living together for such a number of years. I think it is a good thing to keep the respectable old people in the town. If they drink, of course we take away the relief from them. They are not allowed even to enter a public-house; if they do so, they stand a chance of losing rations at once.

Richard Harper, Esq., Vice-President, Parramatta Hospital, called in and examined:—

3040. President.] You are vice-president of the Parramatta Hospital? Yes.

3041. You have been summoned here in compliance with your own request? Not exactly at my own request; but being an officer of the institution, and having been connected with it for many years, the committee recommended that I should be examined.

R. Harper,
Esq.

3042. 10 Feb., 1874.

- R. Harper, Esq.
10 Feb., 1874.
3042. We shall be happy to hear any communication you have to make? I think the principal suggestion I have to make would be in reference to the paupers: we are suffering much from the admission of paupers who come to us from the benevolent asylums—that is our greatest grievance, if we have any.
3043. How do you propose to prevent this? I have thought the matter over myself, and I think there should be some supervision in Parramatta to remand these old men into the asylum at Parramatta—some supervision independent of the Board in Sydney. They are taken up by the police, and if the doctor certifies that they are not fit to be sent to prison, they are sent to the hospital, not to receive medical treatment, but simply nourishment. That is expensive, and absorbs the greater part of the Government money we receive. We get from the Government pound for pound in proportion to the subscriptions we receive. Before this year we only used to get 10s. in the pound. The reception of these paupers is a heavy tax upon us—so many of these people coming in. If the Bench of Magistrates had the power of sending them down, it would relieve the hospital very much—these cases should not come to us.
3044. Mr. Metcalfe.] Do you think it is a great charge upon the public that these paupers should be a charge upon the public? It is perverting the hospital from its proper use, although there is a Government Asylum and a Benevolent Asylum supported by the inhabitants, on the principle of pound for pound granted by the Government, for the reception of these people in the town.
3045. But the asylum may be full, you know. I understand they put them in the passages to sleep. This reception of these people into the hospital—this does not seem to be a hard thing on the charity of the town? We find it difficult to get sufficient funds to carry on the institution efficiently. If it were not that the rules give the privilege to persons subscribing to recommend patients, it is only by that that we are able to get pounds. It is very difficult indeed to get money.
3046. You had only sixty-four paupers in the hospital during last year—that is not a large number? It does not appear large, but it is large in proportion to the number of patients.
3047. President.] Do you take sums smaller than a pound? Yes, shillings, sixpences, very few pounds indeed, as you will see by looking through the report. These old men generally come from the Liverpool Asylum; they come out there and get a little grog and become quite helpless, and the consequence is that they are brought into the hospital. If they could be brought into the asylum instead, it would relieve the hospital very much. The Government Asylum has a medical attendant, and if these old people were sent down to the asylum it would be of advantage to the hospital.
3048. Mr. Metcalfe.] I suppose you would be very glad if the hospital was abolished? Yes, if provision were made for the wants of the district, accidents and so on occurring, and the railway running through Parramatta. The hospital is useful on account of accidents occurring there. We have had several accidents occur there on the railway, and the people have died.

SYDNEY BENEVOLENT ASYLUM.

Ordinary Diet Table for Male Women and Children.

	Women.	Children.
Breakfast—	Bread, treacle, tea.....	Bread, treacle, porridge, maize-meal and rice alternately.
Dinner—	Roast beef with vegetables and bread	Sunday and Thursday.
	Roast beef with rice and bread.....	Tuesday.
	Boiled mutton and vegetables and bread.....	Monday and Friday.
Supper—	Soup (with beef) and bread	Wednesday and Saturday.
	Bread, treacle, tea.

Each adult shall receive daily 12 oz. ($\frac{3}{4}$ lb. avoird.) bread, and 8 oz. meat (beef or mutton) without bone. On soup days, the same quantity of beef shall be issued to the cook to make soup.

For the children, bread shall be issued to the nurses of each ward, and meat to the cook, according to the storekeeper's discretion, and in quantities regulated by the ages of the children in the various wards.

Nursing mothers shall be allowed $\frac{1}{2}$ pint of milk daily.

Extra milk for suckling mothers, and delicacies for weakly children, shall be allowed only by special order of the doctor.

Women's Convalescent Ward, otherwise known as "Sick Ward" and "Women's Ward" No. 3.

The diet hours in this ward are as follows:—

At 8 o'clock a.m.—Breakfast (tea or gruel, as allowed).

11 o'clock a.m.—Chop (allowed to sick and double nurses).

1 o'clock p.m.—Dinner (house and sick dinner of such articles specially allowed, as sago, rice, &c).

3-30 p.m.—Beef tea.

6 o'clock p.m.—Tea (house tea or sick allowance).

7-30 o'clock p.m.—Gruel.

Bread as allowed, do. each meal.

No woman in this ward can take her infant or infants out of the institution, for a day's leave of absence, without special permission from the doctor.

All women in this ward must do any ordinary work prescribed for them by the Matron, unless specially exempted by the doctor.

With above exceptions, all the printed rules regarding the general management of the institution shall hold good in this, as in the Hale Women's Wards.

Children's Hospital Wards. Sick and Skin Wards.

The diet hours in these wards are as follows:—

At 8 o'clock a.m.—Breakfast (bread, butter, and tea, or oatmeal gruel).

11 o'clock a.m.—Beef tea, with bread or rice.

1 o'clock p.m.—Dinner (sago, arrowroot, corn flour, or beef).

6 o'clock p.m.—Tea and bread.

The children in these wards are allowed one pound of butter weekly, and a sufficiency of treacle is given thrice a week. House beef for dinner thrice weekly for all the children, except those specially exempted.

Such children as may be considered fit, shall be taken to the green for exercise, daily, weather permitting, between the hours of half-past 1 p.m. and half-past 5 p.m., excepting on Fridays, when they shall be mustered in the ward for the usual weekly inspection at 4 p.m.

In all cases, whether in hospital or when in the open air, particular care must be observed to keep the children suffering from skin disease from other sick and hale children.

No child while in the hospital can be seen by his or her friends, or be removed from the house, except by special permission.

Superintendent, Government Asylum for the Infirm and Destitute, Parramatta, to The Secretary, Public Charities Commission.

Government Asylum for Infirm and Destitute,
Parramatta, 10 July, 1873.

Sir,

I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your communication of the 2nd instant, requesting me, by direction of the President of the Public Charities Commission, to furnish certain particulars respecting this institution.

I beg to state that I now comply with that request, so far as it is in my power to afford.

The officers of the Asylum for the period mentioned are as follows:—

James Dennis, Superintendent, £150 per annum.

H. MacLaurin, Surgeon, not specified.

C. H. M. Dennis, Matron, £50 per annum.

Isaac Waugh, „

G. H. Pringle, Surgeon, not specified.

William Austin, Dispenser, £50 per annum.

It would be impossible for me to give the names of the servants, inasmuch as they are so often changed, their situations being dependent upon good conduct in the discharge of their several duties. Their rates of pay are enumerated below.

The inmates of the Asylum are pregnant women awaiting confinement, women recently confined, and nursing mothers, together with young children awaiting removal to other institutions. The work of the house, its washing and sewing, &c., &c., &c., are carried out by the inmates, and this is the utmost that they have been found capable of performing.

SPECIAL APPENDIX 4.

The Matron, Hyde Park Asylum, to The Secretary to Public Charities Commission.

Hyde Park Asylum,
12 July, 1873.

Sir,

In answer to your communication, bearing date 2nd July, delivered here late on the evening of the 7th, I have the honor to inform you,—

(1.) The officers employed at Hyde Park Asylum are—

Surgeon, Dr. Ward.....	£122 per annum.
Matron, L. H. Hicks	190	"
Servants—Head laundress, Nancy Bell.....	12s. per week.
Servants selected from inmates :—
Head cook, Ann Bertha	1s. per diem	} These are all inmates.

" " 2 at	3d. "
Head hospital nurses, 2 at	6d. "
Assistant " 2 at	4d. "
Care-taker of needlework	2d. "
Messenger,—M. Jackson	4d. "

The servants, selected from the inmates, with three (3) exceptions, are so constantly changed, from their leaving the institution and other causes, that it is impossible to furnish their names.

(2.) The number of inmates at the date hereof is 226. I beg to refer you to the office of the Asylums for particulars as to cost of food, clothing, repairs to buildings, medical attendance, and contingencies. I am only required to receive and account for all goods supplied by order of the Board, to initial the vouchers as to quantities received previous to the accounts being paid, and to give in monthly returns of everything supplied to the Asylum.

I have nothing to do with the payments, neither have I any clerical assistance, nor any office in which to write up my books, returns, and reports.

(3.) The total yearly expenditure for year 1872 was £2,343 6s. The average cost of each inmate was £10 16s. 11½d.

(4.) There are no donations or subscriptions, and since (with the exception of one paid servant, the head laundress), all the work of the institution, including cooking, laundry, hospitals, wards, cleaning, making and repairing all clothes and house linen, &c., is performed by the inmates alone, no out-door needlework is therefore permitted to be done, the great object being to make the institution as self-supporting as possible, and their time being fully occupied in their various occupations.

I have, &c.,
LUCY H. HICKS,
Matron.

SPECIAL APPENDIX 5.

The Inspector of Prisons to The Secretary to Public Charities Commission.

Sheriff's Office, Prison Branch,
Sydney, 15 October, 1873.

Sir,

In accordance with the wish expressed by the Commissioners on the Royal Commission on Charities, I have the honor to inform you that the number of aged and infirm persons received for protection in Bathurst Gaol, during the twelve months ending 25th September last, was as under,— 21 males and 4 females.

Of these, 2 males were sent to the Liverpool Asylum, and nine (9) males to the Parramatta Benevolent Asylum. 3 of the females were sent to Hyde Park Asylum.

I have, &c.,
HAROLD MACLEAN,
Inspector of Prisons.
