VICTORIA, by the Grace of God, of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, Queen, Defender of the Faith, and so forth,—

To our trusty and well-beloved—

WILLIAM CHARLES WINDEYER, Esquire, Master of Arts and Barrister-at-Law ;
 JOSEPH WEARNE, Esquire, a Member of our Legislative Assembly of our Colony of New South Wales ;
 MICHAEL METCALFE, Esquire, one of our Justices of the Peace of our said Colony ;
 SAMUEL GOOLD, Esquire, one of our Justices of the Peace of our said Colony ;
 RICHARD DRIVER, Esquire, a Member of our said Legislative Assembly ;
 EYRE GOULBURN ELLIS, Esquire ; and CHARLES COWPER, Junior, Esquire, Water Police Magistrate ;

Greeting :

KNOW ye that we, reposing great trust and confidence in your ability, zeal, industry, discretion, and integrity, have authorized and appointed, and do by these presents authorize and appoint you to be our Commissioners to inquire into and report upon the working and management of the Public Charities, more particularly the Sydney Infirmity and the Orphan Schools ; the inquiry to be directed to the sanitary condition, dietary scales, dormitory accommodation, systems of superintendence, medical treatment, and all other matters of a cognate nature ; and, in the cases of the Schools and Benevolent Asylums, to the methods of teaching and other educational agencies, and the extent to which the available labour of adults and children is turned to a productive account ; and to make such recommendations as may be considered advisable, based upon the results of the inquiry, for the improved management of the institutions inquired into : And, for the better discovery of the truth in the premises, we do, by these presents, give and grant to you, or any three or more of you, full power and authority to call before you, or any three or more of you, all such persons as you shall judge necessary for the purpose of this our Commission : And we do also give and grant unto you, or any three or more of you, full power and authority to call for and have access to all such official books, documents, papers, and records as you may deem expedient, and to inquire of and concerning the premises by all other lawful ways and means whatsoever : And we do give you power, at your discretion, to procure such clerical and other assistance as you may deem necessary for enabling you duly to execute this our Commission : And our further will and pleasure is that you do, within four months after the date of this our Commission, or as soon as the same can conveniently be done (using all diligence) certify to us, in the office of our Colonial Secretary, under your hands, or under the hands of any five or more of you, what you shall find touching the premises : And we further will and command, and, by these presents, ordain that this our Commission shall continue in full force and virtue, and that you, our said Commissioners, or any three or more of you, shall and may, from time to time, proceed in the execution thereof, and of every matter and thing therein contained, although the same be not continued, from time to time by adjournment : And we hereby command all Government Officers, and other persons whomsoever, within our said Colony, that they be assistant to you, and each of you, in the execution of these presents : And we appoint you, the said William Charles Windeyer, Esquire, to be President of this our Commission.

In testimony whereof, we have caused these our Letters to be made Patent and the Great Seal of our said Colony to be hereunto affixed.

Witness SIR HERCULES GEORGE ROBERT ROBINSON, Knight Commander of our Most Distinguished Order of St. Michael and St. George, our Governor and Commander-in-Chief of our Colony of New South Wales and its Dependencies, at Government House, Sydney, in New South Wales aforesaid, this eighth day of April, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and seventy-three, and in the thirty-sixth year of our Reign.

(L.S.) HERCULES ROBINSON.

By His Excellency's Command,

HENRY PARKES.

Entered on record by me, in Register of Patents, No. 10, page 136, this eighth day of April, one thousand eight hundred and seventy-three.

HENRY HALLORAN,
 Under Secretary.

THE PRINCIPAL UNDER SECRETARY TO THE PRESIDENT AND MEMBERS OF THE ROYAL COMMISSION ON PUBLIC CHARITIES.

Colonial Secretary's Office,
Sydney, 17 April, 1873.

GENTLEMEN,

I am directed by the Colonial Secretary to explain that any expense which may be found necessary in the conduct of the inquiry entrusted to you, will be met by the Government, on the presentation of vouchers, duly signed by the President.

2. The Commission can hold its meetings in the large room at the Colonial Secretary's Office ; and it will be necessary to engage the services of a shorthand writer, who, very probably, may also be prepared to perform the duties of secretary.

Whether the two offices can be combined or not, the necessary precautions must be taken to see that the duties of the two offices are efficiently performed, as regular minutes of the proceedings of the Commission must be accurately kept, and it is important that all correspondence should be conducted with uniform attention and courtesy.

3. Travelling and any other expenses rendered necessary in the performance of your duties will be allowed.

4. The Members of the Commission who are not Members of Parliament will be paid by fees for their attendances ; and the Colonial Secretary proposes that the same scale of fees as was fixed for the Water Supply Commission in 1867 should, in the present case, be acted upon, namely :—

5. Mr. Parkes considers that the terms of your appointment are sufficiently wide to enable you to direct your inquiry to any matter within the general scope and objects of a Public Charity, although the matter itself may not be expressly named in your Commission. It is particularly desired that defects of management in every instance should be clearly pointed out, with the view to improvement ; and any recommendations arising from the special knowledge acquired by you in the course of your inquiry will be carefully considered by the Government. In the case of the Sydney Infirmity, it appears to Mr. Parkes that it will be desirable to keep in view the principles of modern hospital management which have been of late years accepted by those who have devoted their attention most beneficially to this object in England. -The object of the Government is to place this, the principal hospital of the Colony, under the most improved system of management.

6. With regard to the Orphanages and Industrial Schools, the introduction of new methods of industrial training, which would—among other results—turn the labour of the inmates to more profitable account, would be regarded with much satisfaction by the Government.

I have, &c.,

HENRY HALLORAN.

EXTRACTS FROM THE MINUTES OF PROCEEDINGS RELATIVE TO THE SYDNEY INFIRMARY.

WEDNESDAY, 16 APRIL, 1873.

MEMBERS PRESENT :—

William Charles Windeyer, Esq., President.

M. Metcalfe, Esq.

Samuel Goold, Esq.

Eyre G. Ellis, Esq.

Charles Cowper, junr., Esq.

The Commission was read.

Mr. Walter H. Cooper was appointed Secretary and Shorthand Writer.

The Commission deliberated as to the mode in which the inquiry should be conducted, and in consequence of some Members being unable to attend during the sittings of the Parliament, it was decided to adjourn until the 1st day of May next ensuing.

THURSDAY, 1 MAY, 1873.

MEMBERS PRESENT :—

William Charles Windeyer, Esq., President.

Richard Driver, Esq., M.P.

Samuel Goold, Esq.

Eyre G. Ellis, Esq.

Joseph Wearne, Esq., M.P.

Michael Metcalfe, Esq.

Charles Cowper, junr., Esq.

Letter read from the Principal Under Secretary explaining the scope and objects of the Commission, and stating the scale of fees allowed to the Commissioners.

Mr. J. R. Street, honorary treasurer of the Sydney Infirmary, called in and examined.

Witness handed in copies of the "Rules and Regulations of the Sydney Infirmary," and "By-laws of the Sydney Infirmary."

The witness withdrew.

The Commission deliberated.

Moved by Mr. Driver, seconded by Mr. Wearne, and carried :—

That the President be requested to wait upon the Colonial Secretary, to ascertain if it is proposed to issue any grant of the site of the Sydney Infirmary; and if so, to request that the issue of such grant may be postponed until the Commission shall have brought up their Report.

The secretary was directed to communicate with the honorary secretaries of the Sydney Infirmary, and request that the Commission might be allowed to meet in the Board-room of that institution, for the purpose of examining witnesses.

MONDAY, 5 MAY, 1873.

MEMBERS PRESENT :—

William Charles Windeyer, Esq., President.

Joseph Wearne, Esq., M.L.A.

Samuel Goold, Esq.

Eyre G. Ellis, Esq.

Michael Metcalfe, Esq.

Charles Cowper, junr., Esq.

The President announced that, in pursuance of the resolution passed at the preceding meeting of the Commission, he had waited upon the Colonial Secretary, who had informed him that no grant of the site of the Sydney Infirmary would be issued, nor any change made in respect of the Public Charities, until after the Commission had brought up their Report.

Correspondence with reference to meetings of the Commission to be held at the Sydney Infirmary was read.

Mr. John Blackstone, manager, and Miss Lucy Osburn, lady superintendent of the Sydney Infirmary, were called in severally and examined.

TUESDAY, 3 JUNE, 1873.

MEMBERS PRESENT:—

William Charles Windeyer, Esq., President.

Michael Metcalfe, Esq.		Samuel Goold, Esq.
Charles Cowper, junr., Esq.		Eyre G. Ellis, Esq.

Mr. Joseph Jones, a witness examined by the Commission on the 22nd May, having made the following memo. on his evidence of that date sent to him for revision, viz.—

“The questions and answers in this day’s evidence are transposed and alters the context materially, and several questions and answers are omitted”,—

He was called in and examined with reference to the alleged transpositions and omissions.

The witness asserted that questions 4112 to 4117 inclusive were wrongly placed in the middle of his examination and should have followed question 4204, but he admitted that such transposition did not materially affect the substance of his evidence. He also said that a question as to whether “he was a brother of Mr. Jones of the Custom House,” and a question as to whether he “received an allowance of wine from the Infirmary” had been omitted, but that he did not desire to have his answers to those questions appended to his evidence.

The President stated that with regard to the first part of his complaint Mr. Jones was entirely wrong, as he (the President) had asked both sets of questions himself, and that he had asked the second set of questions some time after putting the first set, in consequence of a communication which had taken place between himself and a gentleman who was present at the time.

Mr. Cowper confirmed the President’s statement.

The shorthand writer said he had referred to his notes of the evidence given on the 22nd May, and found it to be utterly impossible that the alleged transposition could have taken place. The questions referred as having been omitted were not intended for insertion in the evidence.

The Commission decided that Mr. Jones’s evidence of the 22nd May was correctly taken, and should be printed as transcribed by the shorthand writer.

Miss Gertrude Moule, head nurse, Sydney Infirmary, called in and examined.

G. A. Mansfield, Esq., architect, Sydney Infirmary, called in and examined.

Witness handed in—

1. Report on Infirmary Buildings and on plans showing alterations and improvements. (Appendix G.)

2. Plans adopted by the Board of the Infirmary, showing proposed alterations and improvement in elevation, ground floor, upper story, and out-offices. (Separate Appendix.)

Mrs. Jessie Whytlaw, head nurse, Sydney Infirmary, called in and examined.

Alfred Roberts, Esq., called in and examined.

Witness handed in—Statement of Hospital Expenditure in London and the Provinces. (Appendix H.)

The Commission resolved that an accountant should be employed to examine the books of the Infirmary, and report as to whether there was a sufficient check upon the receipt and issue of the stores of the institution.

THURSDAY, 5 JUNE, 1873.

MEMBERS PRESENT:—

William Charles Windeyer, Esq., President.

Charles Cowper, jun., Esq.		Samuel Goold, Esq.
Michael Metcalfe, Esq.		Eyre G. Ellis, Esq.

From Mr. Thomas Park, dispenser, Sydney Infirmary, stating certain grievances with regard to his treatment by the authorities of the institution. (See Appendix M.)

From Mr. J. C. Taylor, accountant, reporting that he had examined the books of account of the Sydney Infirmary, and stating the result of his investigation. (See Special Appendix.)

It was ordered that Mr. Park's letter be appended to his evidence given before the Commission, and that the accountant's report be printed and form a portion of the evidence.

Dr. Fyffe, Dr. Morgan, and Dr. Pattison, three witnesses, summoned at their own request, failing to attend, no evidence was taken.

Mr. Goold gave notice that he would move on the next day of meeting:—

1. That no Report be presented to the Government by this Commission until it has in its possession fuller information regarding the modern improvements, both in structure and management of hospitals in Great Britain and other Countries, and that the President be requested to take steps to procure the same.
2. That this Commission proceed to no further business until it has defined the scope and object of its inquiry, and laid down a programme for its guidance.

WEDNESDAY, 6 AUGUST, 1873.

MEMBERS PRESENT:—

William Charles Windeyer, Esq., President.

Charles Cowper, junr., Esq.	Samuel Goold, Esq.
Michael Metcalfe, Esq.	Eyre G. Ellis, Esq.

The President stated that he had not been able to complete his draft Report on the Sydney Infirmary, but thought it would be ready to be laid before the Commission on Monday, the 11th instant.

Mr. Goold moved, and Mr. Ellis seconded—

“That this Commission proceed to no further business until it has defined the scope and object of its inquiry, and laid down a programme for its guidance.”

The Commission deliberated.

Mr. Goold, by consent, withdrew his motion, and substituted for it the following:—

“That in addition to the institutions now under examination, the inquiry be directed to the Deaf and Dumb and Blind Institution, and the Temperance Alliance; and that letters be written to the Country Hospitals receiving aid from the Government, requesting particulars as to their management, the mode of admitting patients, revenue and expenditure, and such other information as may be desired.”

Mr. Ellis seconded the resolution, which was carried unanimously.

Mr. Goold, by consent, postponed the motion No. 1 of which he had given notice at the preceding meeting.

Moved by Mr. Ellis, seconded by Mr. Cowper, and resolved:—

That a statement of the effect of the evidence with respect to each of the principal points be prepared by the Secretary, with a view to its being embodied in the Report, if such embodiment be deemed desirable.

TUESDAY,

TUESDAY, 12 AUGUST, 1873.

MEMBERS PRESENT:—

William Charles Windeyer, Esq., President.

Charles Cowper, jun., Esq.
Michael Metcalfe, Esq.

Samuel Goold, Esq.
Eyre G. Ellis, Esq.

The Secretary laid before the Commission, in accordance with resolution of the 6th instant, a statement of the effect of the evidence with respect to each of the principal points to be reported upon.

Michael Metcalfe, Esq.

Samuel Goold, Esq.
Eyre G. Ellis, Esq.

* * * * *

The President brought up his draft Report on the Sydney Infirmary, which was read by the secretary.

The Commission deliberated.

It was decided to postpone the consideration of the Report until Monday, 25th instant.

MONDAY, 25 AUGUST, 1873.

MEMBERS PRESENT:—

William Charles Windeyer, Esq., President.

Charles Cowper, junr., Esq.
Michael Metcalfe, Esq.

Samuel Goold, Esq.
Eyre G. Ellis, Esq.

The President laid before the Commission a letter written by himself to the Colonial Secretary's Department, requesting definite information as to the scope of the Commission's inquiry, with the answer thereto.

The Commission deliberated.

On the motion of Mr. Ellis, seconded by Mr. Goold, it was resolved that the consideration of the two letters now read be postponed until the next meeting.

WEDNESDAY, 27 AUGUST, 1873.

MEMBERS PRESENT:—

William Charles Windeyer, Esq., President.

Charles Cowper, junr., Esq.
Michael Metcalfe, Esq.

Samuel Goold, Esq.
Eyre G. Ellis, Esq.

Joseph Wearne, Esq., M.L.A.

The President brought up an Amendment upon his original draft Report.

Mr. Metcalfe moved,—“That the President's Report, as amended, be adopted.”

The Commission deliberated.

The Motion was by leave withdrawn.

Mr. Ellis moved,—“That this Commission decline to receive the correspondence between the President and the Colonial Secretary, such correspondence not having arisen out of any action on the part of the Commission.”

Mr. Goold seconded the resolution.

The Commission deliberated.

The further consideration of the resolution was postponed until the next meeting.

MONDAY, 1 SEPTEMBER, 1873.

MEMBERS PRESENT:—

William Charles Windeyer, Esq., President.

Charles Cowper, junr., Esq.
Michael Metcalfe, Esq.

Samuel Goold, Esq.
Richard Driver, Esq., M.L.A.

Joseph Wearne, Esq., M.L.A.

The following correspondence was read:—

(1.) Letter from the Principal Under Secretary, dated 26 August, requesting the Commission to close their labours within one month if possible, and to furnish at once a Report as to the state of the Sydney Infirmary.

* * * * *

The Secretary was instructed to write to the Principal Under Secretary, and inform him that the Commission would bring their labours to a close as expeditiously as possible.

The President stated that, in compliance with the wish of some members of the Commission, he had withdrawn the correspondence between himself and the Colonial Secretary's Department, with respect to the scope of the Commission's inquiry, and that he should treat the correspondence as private.

The President's amended Report was then brought up, and considered paragraph by paragraph.

Introduction, paragraphs, 1, 2, and 3, agreed to as read.

Paragraph 4 verbally amended and agreed to.

Paragraph 5 agreed to as read.

Section 1, Summary of evidence, read and considered.

Motion made (Mr. Goold), and Question put,—“That paragraph 10 be omitted.”

The Commission divided.

Aye, 1.	Noes, 3.
Mr. Goold.	Mr. Metcalfe, Mr. Cowper, Mr. Driver.

Summary of evidence agreed to as read.

Paragraph 1, section 1, verbally amended and agreed to.

Paragraphs 2 and 3 agreed to as read.

Paragraph 4 verbally amended.

Motion made (Mr. Driver), and Question put,—“That the paragraph be amended by the omission of the following words—‘If the present site be resumed, the Flag-staff Hill would, it has been suggested, be a good position for a small casualty and receiving hospital; and, in the opinion of some persons, the Victoria Barracks might be transformed into a large general institution to answer all purposes.’”—Agreed to.

Paragraph 4, as amended, agreed to.

Paragraph 6 agreed to as read.

Motion made (President), and Question put,—“That the following new paragraph be inserted, to stand paragraph 7 of the section:—‘Though the question of erecting a new hospital on the site of the present old building seems to have been decided in the negative by the Committee of the Legislative Assembly before alluded to, we do not think that we should be doing justice to ourselves if we did not, with all the respect for the opposing opinion of the Committee, record our conviction that it would be better if the building fronting Macquarie-street were pulled down, and a new hospital, complete in all modern improvements, erected in its place, believing as we do that the adoption of this course would be cheaper to the Country in the end than patching up the present defective structure.’”—

The Commission divided.

Ayes, 3.	No, 1.
Mr. Metcalfe, Mr. Driver, Mr. Cowper.	Mr. Goold.

Paragraph inserted.

Paragraph 8 (printed 7), verbally amended and agreed to.

Question put,—“That the section, as amended, be agreed to.”

Ayes, 3.	No, 1.
Mr. Cowper, Mr. Driver, Mr. Metcalfe.	Mr. Goold.

Section 2, Summary of evidence, agreed to as read.

Paragraph 1 read and considered.

Motion made (Mr. Goold), and Question put,—“That the paragraph be amended by the omission of the following words—‘Though the principle on which retirement is provided for seems sound in theory, yet it may be questioned whether in practice its tendency in this institution is not to get rid of the most able business-like men.’”—

The Commission divided.

Aye, 1.	Noes, 3.
Mr. Goold.	Mr. Cowper, Mr. Metcalfe, Mr. Driver.

Motion

Motion made (Mr. Goold), and Question put,—“That the paragraph be amended by the omission of the following words—‘owing to the large number on the committee.’”

The Commission divided.

Aye, 1.	Noes, 3.
Mr. Goold.	Mr. Metcalfe, Mr. Cowper, Mr. Driver.

Paragraph agreed to as read.

Paragraphs 2, 3, 4, and 5, agreed to as read.

Paragraph 6 read and considered.

Motion made (Mr. Cowper), and Question put,—“That the paragraph be amended by the omission of the words ‘At times by giving uncalled for and erroneous orders, by personally scolding members of the nursing staff in the presence of patients, by ignoring officers and dealing in preference with servants, and by instigating them to protest against the action of the head of the nursing staff in reporting their conduct or recommending their discharge.’”

The Commission divided.

Ayes, 2.	No, 1.
Mr. Cowper, Mr. Goold.	Mr. Metcalfe.

The words were omitted, and the paragraph as amended agreed to.

Section II, as amended, agreed to.

Motion made (Mr. Metcalfe) and Question put,—“That the Report upon the Sydney Infirmary be reconsidered, with a view of reinserting certain words omitted from paragraph 6, section II”—agreed to.

Motion made (Mr. Metcalfe) and Question put,—“That the words ‘At times by giving uncalled for and erroneous orders, by personally scolding members of the nursing staff in the presence of patients, by ignoring officers and dealing in preference with servants, and by instigating them to protest against the action of the head of the nursing staff in reporting their conduct or recommending their discharge,’ be reinserted in paragraph 6, after the word ‘injudiciously.’”

The Commission divided.

Aye, 1.	No, 1.
Mr. Metcalfe.	Mr. Goold.

The President gave his casting vote with the Aye.

The words were therefore reinserted.

Section as amended, agreed to.

Report, as amended, agreed to.

THURSDAY, 4 SEPTEMBER, 1873.

MEMBERS PRESENT:—

William Charles Windeyer, Esq., President.
 Michael Metcalfe, Esq. | Samuel Goold, Esq.
 Charles Cowper, junr., Esq.

Minutes of preceding meeting read. Mr. Goold stated that the minutes were incorrect, inasmuch that they stated that the Question for the reconsideration of the Report on the Sydney Infirmary had been put and agreed to.

Question put,—“That the Minutes be confirmed.”

The Commission divided.

Ayes, 2.	No, 1.
Mr. Cowper, Mr. Metcalfe.	Mr. Goold.

The minutes were confirmed.

Mr. Goold handed in the following memorandum:—

“I regret my inability to vote for the confirmation of the Minutes that have just been read, for the following reasons which I desire may be recorded:—

- “1. At the meeting held on the 1st September, when five members of the Commission were present, it was resolved to omit certain words from the Report then under consideration, viz.:—“All the words on page 14, line 26, after ‘injudiciously’ to the end of the sentence, and the Report was adopted by the majority of the meeting upon the understanding that the words were to be omitted.”
- “2. At the next meeting of the Commission, when four members were present, one of them declining to vote, the President, without having given notice of his intention, urged the re-insertion of expunged words, and without recommitting the adopted Report, caused the objectionable words to be restored by his casting vote.
- “3. I hold it to be contrary to all rule and a very objectionable precedent, that a Report once adopted should be altered in the slightest particular without being recommitted, and notice of the intended alterations given to all the members.

“SAMUEL GOOLD.

“Member of the Commission.”

Mr. Metcalfe gave notice of his intention to move, on the next day of meeting, that the amended Report upon the Sydney Infirmary now submitted be substituted for the Report which has been agreed to by the Commission.

Mr. Goold gave notice that he would, on the next day of meeting, ask the following question :—
The Report upon the Sydney Infirmary having been adopted by the majority of the members present at a duly summoned meeting, and the same having been signed by Mr. Windeyer as the President of the Commission, and also by Mr. Metcalfe, can it now be either altered or laid aside ?

WEDNESDAY, 10 SEPTEMBER, 1873.

MEMBERS PRESENT :—

William Charles Windeyer, Esq., President.

Samuel Goold, Esq. | Chas. Cowper, junr., Esq.
Michael Metcalfe, Esq.

Mr. Goold, in pursuance of amended notice, asked the President—“If the Report upon the Sydney Infirmary, having been adopted by a majority of the members present at a duly summoned meeting, and the same having been signed by Mr. Windeyer as the President of the Commission, and also by Mr. Metcalfe, can it now be either laid aside or altered without the unanimous consent of the members”?

Mr. Windeyer said—“I am of opinion that, under the circumstances of the case, the Report can be altered or laid aside, and a new one substituted, if the majority who adopted the Report either choose to alter it or substitute a new one.

“At the meeting when the consideration of the Report came on, six members were present. One, Mr. Wearne, on the business being commenced, said he would take no part in the matter, and left the room. Five members remained—Messrs. Goold, Metcalfe, Cowper, Driver, and Windeyer. Before the Report was adopted, Mr. Goold, on his failing to carry certain amendments which he proposed, said that he would have nothing further to do with the Report; and at a subsequent meeting, stated, in answer to a question put by me, that he would not sign it, though I suggested that he should do so, and state in a minute appended to the Report how far he dissented from it. I signed the Report, as I believe Mr. Metcalfe also did, under the impression that in the form in which it was carried it would meet with the approval of three other members—Messrs. Cowper, Driver, and Ellis,—one of whom (Mr. Driver) voted for its adoption. Mr. Cowper and Mr. Ellis afterwards informed me that they both wished that certain passages in the Report, not, in my opinion, affecting its general tenor, should be omitted, and Mr. Driver and Mr. Metcalfe having assented to such omission, I caused the Report thus altered by the omission of the passage objected to to be re-printed for the consideration of the Commission. Notice of motion for the substitution of such amended Report having been duly given by Mr. Metcalfe, it appears to me competent for the Commission to adopt it or further amend it if they think fit.

“Those who wish to sign a Report can surely frame it as they think desirable.”

The Commission deliberated.

Motion made (Mr. Metcalfe), and Question put,—“That the amended Report upon the Sydney Infirmary now submitted be substituted for the Report which has been agreed to by the Commission.”—Agreed to, Mr. Goold declining to vote.

Motion made (Mr. Metcalfe), and Question put,—“That this Report be now adopted as the Report of the Commission on the Sydney Infirmary.”—Agreed to, Mr. Goold declining to vote.

Mr. Goold handed in the following Protest :—

“I, the undersigned member of the Commission, protest against the Report on the Sydney Infirmary now adopted, for the following reasons, and desire the same to be recorded upon the Minutes.

“1st. Because the course which has been pursued in the preparation of such Report has been altogether informal, and contrary to precedents usually followed; no steps having been taken to secure unanimity of opinion, so necessary to give value to a Report of the kind. For example,—

“(a) When the evidence was closed, the President took no steps to ascertain the views of the members of the Commission upon it; submitted no general resolutions suggested by the evidence according to which a Report might be drafted, but, at a meeting held on the 19th August, brought up a draft Report prepared without general consultation, and which was so objectionable to some of the members that it was withdrawn without being put to the vote.

“(b) At a subsequent meeting, held on the 29th August, one member of the Commission, by agreement, brought up a draft Report to be substituted for the original one prepared by the President; but the President at the same meeting also brought up another draft Report. An attempt was made to amalgamate the two, but it failed, and the meeting broke up without the meeting arriving at any definite conclusion.

“(c) At the meeting held 1st September, the President laid upon the Table another draft Report, which appeared to have been amended in private consultations with the gentleman who had submitted a draft to the former meeting, and, after the omission of certain words, on a motion of a member of the Commission, was duly proposed, seconded, and carried, the Report so amended was adopted.

- (d) At the next meeting, held 2nd September, the President, without having given any notice of his intention, procured the re-insertion of the words that had been expunged, and by his casting vote, a proceeding I have already protested against as informal, and highly objectionable as a precedent.
- (e) The loss of time and fruitless negotiations which have ensued might, I believe, have been prevented, had the President taken the usual course of calling the members together after the evidence had been closed, and obtained their assent to the general principles and specific recommendations which the Report should embody.
- "2nd. Because I have reason to believe that the Report, though adopted, does not really represent the views of a majority of the Commission.
- "3rd. I protest against the Report now adopted, generally, because it is not in accordance with the impressions conveyed to my mind by the evidence, and because it is vague and inconclusive, and therefore comparatively of little value to Her Majesty's Government, and discreditable to the Commission, from whose investigations the Government and the Public have a right to expect results of greater practical value; and further, I protest against the Report for the following amongst other reasons in particular :—
- (a) The evidence does not appear to me to justify the conclusion that the system of nursing is the best that is known. To decide on such a matter, it would be indispensable to have evidence from some of the leading Hospitals in England and the Continent.
- (b) The conclusions arrived at in the Report, touching the character of the officials and the Board of management are open to grave doubts; a portion of the evidence supports them, but other equally reliable testimony is directly opposed to the statement of the Report.

TUESDAY, 16 SEPTEMBER, 1873.

MEMBERS PRESENT :—

William Charles Windeyer, Esq., President.

Charles Cowper, jun., Esq. | Samuel Goold, Esq.
Michael Metcalfe, Esq.

The President stated that he had received a communication from the Colonial Secretary's Department, announcing that Mr. Ellis, a member of the Commission, had sent in his resignation, which had been accepted.

The President read the following memo., which was ordered to be entered upon the Minutes :—

"With reference to the Protest recorded by Mr. Goold against the Report on the Infirmiry, adopted by the Commission, we, the undersigned members of the Commission, in justice to ourselves, record our opinion as follows :—

"The statement that the course pursued with reference to the preparation of the Report has been altogether informal and contrary to precedents usually followed is, in our opinion, unfounded, as the course taken was that usually adopted in Select Committees of the Legislative Assembly, and every reasonable effort has been made to secure unanimity. Though no resolutions were discussed embodying the recommendations contained in the Report, the subjects to be treated of in it were constantly the subject of discussion during the two months that the Infirmiry was the subject of investigation. Mr. Goold never proposed any resolutions, as he might have done had he thought such a course necessary; and the President only brought up his draft Report in accordance with a resolution, unanimously carried, requesting him to do so.

"As to the statement that the draft Report was so objectionable that the President withdrew it without putting it to the vote, the fact is, that of the five members ultimately signing the Report, three, Messrs. Metcalfe, Driver, and Windeyer, have always thought, and still think, that, both in substance and form, the Report originally prepared by the President was preferable to that now adopted, though, with a view of inducing other members of the Commission to join in a Report, they have not insisted on adhering to it. All the recommendations contained in the Report signed by us, with the exception of those in section I, relative to the site and buildings, are taken from the President's original draft, which, to a very large extent, is embodied in the Report adopted. The real reason of the President's original Report being withdrawn was his desire to carry out the wish of another member that the Report should embody a synopsis of the evidence. This suggestion was only found practicable to a certain extent, and was further abandoned in the endeavour to please Mr. Goold, who wished portions of the synopsis omitted.

"If the Report is on some points vague and inconclusive, as Mr. Goold complains, such vagueness and inconclusiveness has originated in the desire to conciliate that member of the Commission, who has always seemed anxious to avoid any definite expression of opinion.

"W. C. WINDEYER.

"RD. DRIVER.

"M. METCALFE."

Mr.

Mr. Goold declined to make the motion of which he had given notice, and read a memo. explaining the reasons for adopting that course.

The Commission deliberated.

Motion made (Mr. Goold), and Question put,—“That the written statement just read be inserted upon the Minutes.”

Commission divided.

Aye, 1.	No, 1.
Mr. Goold.	Mr. Metcalfe.

The President gave his casting vote with the No.

Mr. Goold handed in a protest against the Report on the Sydney Infirmary, and desired that it should be appended to that Report.

The Commission deliberated.

The consideration of this matter was postponed until the next meeting.

SUMMARY OF EVIDENCE RESPECTING THE SYDNEY INFIRMARY.

THE PRESENT BUILDING.

Most of the witnesses consider that the site on which the Sydney Infirmary stands is excellent. Mr. ^{The site.} Alfred Roberts says that, having travelled throughout Europe, and visited a great number of hospitals, he has seen but one the situation of which was equally good [5435]; he attaches considerable importance to the charming view from the verandahs, and believes that it has a good effect upon the patients [6397]; he advocates the retention of the site [6398]; and suggests that there should be built upon it a small hospital, to contain not more than 150 beds [5437, 6381]. In an appendix sent subsequently to the above evidence being given, he advocates the erection of a small casualty hospital, of from twenty to thirty beds on Flagstaff Hill [Appendix L 3]. Dr. Alleyne thinks the site excellent for a receiving hospital, on account of its central position [4520-4522]; but he considers that a general hospital should be taken as far out of town as possible. Mr. J. G. Raphael thinks that the Government should resume the site, set apart some other piece of ground in a central position, on which a receiving hospital might be built, and erect a large general hospital at some distance from the town [5852]. Dr. Fortescue is of opinion that it is impossible to build a modern hospital, sufficiently large for this city, upon the site of the present Infirmary [5734]; and he also is in favour of the resumption by the Government of the land on which the building now stands [5822]. Mr. M. H. Stephen states that the directors expected to have got a grant of the site from the Government, but that the issue of the deed has been recently stayed [4315]; and he thinks the grant should issue untrammelled with any conditions whatever [4321].

There is abundant evidence as to the defective sanatory condition of the present Infirmary, but ^{The sanatory condition.} there are differences of opinion with reference to the expediency of erecting new buildings. Mr. Roberts advocates the pulling down of the Infirmary, and the construction of a modern hospital on its site, because the walls of the present structure cannot be kept free from disease, and the current expenses of maintenance would be much greater than they would be if the place were entirely rebuilt [6332-6366]. He states that, in defiance of a law of hospital architecture, a sewer passes beneath the wards; that there is no proper ventilation [6369]; that the walls are infected with hospitalism; and that one of the resident medical officers told him that, latterly, there had not been a single case of wound which had not been attacked with erysipelas [6371]. Dr. Fortescue says that any person who treats diseases in the Infirmary must be conscious of the bad influence of the hospital itself; that there are certain diseases of the eye which never can be cured in the old building [5729]; that the structure has many fatal defects, and is totally inadequate for the purposes of a general hospital [5721 and 5730]; and that "there can be no good management, no decent morale, nothing to be proud of, in a building like the present" [5742]. Dr. Renwick says that the sanatory condition of the institution is very bad, and that some of his patients under treatment for various diseases have been attacked by pneumonia and bronchitis, caused by the unwholesomeness of the place [5494, and Appendix K]. Dr. McLaurin says that the bed area is too small; that the wards are damp (K ward especially); that there are unpleasant smells from the drains; that there is near the south wing a pool of stagnant water, the drainage from the Mint; and that the ventilation of the south wing is bad, by reason of there being a dead-wall close to the hospital building [5677-5682]; he finds fault with the sanatory condition of the Infirmary, and instances the case of a patient who died from erysipelas, which attacked her when she was convalescent from typhoid fever [5688]. Dr. Cox thinks that the dormitory accommodation is very fair, but that the windows are defective, being too draughty, both in the front building and in the south wing [5046-5049]; that the sanatory condition of the hospital is very bad indeed, the drainage of the slops and filth from the upper floors being discreditable in the extreme [5051]. Dr. Halkett speaks of the sanatory condition of the hospital as being very fair at present, but says that there were some cases of erysipelas a few months ago; and the dormitory accommodation he says is superior to that of many English hospitals [1802, 1803]. Dr. Markey, who was for some time house surgeon of the Infirmary, states that erysipelas frequently broke out in the wards—that he had five cases of it in the hospital at one time; but he is doubtful as to whether the disease was caused by the impure condition of the walls [7043-7046]. Mr. J. G. Raphael considers the Infirmary to be devoid of "sanatory comfort," and badly drained [5852]. Miss Lucy Osburn says that the ventilation is bad, the space above the windows, inside the wards, being "like a well of foul air" [728]; and that one window opens into a lavatory, the smell from which is sometimes offensive [729]. Mr. Street considers that the sanatory condition of the hospital is not so good as it used to be [181].

The water supply is very defective. Mr. Street merely states that it is inadequate [184]; but from ^{Insufficiency of the watersupply} the evidence of Miss Osburn, Dr. Halkett, Mr. Park, Mr. Blackstone, Dr. Gillman, Mrs. Bland, and Miss Moule, it appears that the water is cut off every afternoon between the hours of 3 and 6 o'clock, and that there being no tanks on the premises, there is frequently no water at all to be had. Mr. Blackstone states that from 3 o'clock until 6 every afternoon, if a patient were dying for a warm bath, there would be no water to give him one [303]. Miss Osburn says that the nurses are often absolutely without water in the wards—they cannot wash out even the most necessary things, and sometimes have not even water to wash themselves with in the morning [814-825]. Dr. Gillman and Dr. Halkett say that when a man who has met with an accident comes into the receiving-room in the afternoon to have his wounds dressed, there is frequently no water to wash either the patient's hurts or their own hands [1745 and 1923]. Dr. Halkett says he has sometimes to send away a patient with his head bloody, and that this want of water occurs daily [1925]. Though this scarcity of water is stated by several witnesses to have been repeatedly reported to the committee, yet Mr. Josephson, one of the directors, says that he never heard of it [2576]. Mr. Park [2685], Dr. Schuette [3150], Mrs. Bland [4835], and Miss Moule [5211], all speak of the difficulty of getting water.

The cook-house, mortuary, and back premises.

The present mortuary is in a disgraceful state, and the whole of the back premises are, as Mr. Street acknowledges, in a condition that is most discreditable to the management [86]. Miss Osburn says that the kitchen is not convenient [842]; that the dead-house is now in a very bad position, and should be removed to the south-eastern corner of the enclosure [860]; and that it is not expedient to have a laundry on the premises [1020]. Mr. Blackstone states that there is a proposal to remove the mortuary to the south-eastern corner of the premises, which he thinks the best site, but that Dr. Bedford and Dr. McLaurin wish the new mortuary to be built close to the Nightingale wing, where the old one now stands [919-926]. Dr. Schuette states that he recommended many years ago the erection of another dead-house; that the best position for it is the south-east corner; and that the present building is so infested with rats, that he has seen a body there with the nose and cheek eaten away [3169-3176]. Mr. J. Bernauer, the cook of the establishment, says that the cook-house is very inconvenient; that of the two stoves which are in it, one is too small, and the other cracked and almost useless; and that the rain pours down into one portion of the kitchen [3455-3470]. He also says that there should be a covered way between the kitchen and the main building, so that meals should not be carried through the wet [3489]; that the stove was made to cook for fifty people, but that he cooks with it for 220 [3503]; that the kitchen is large enough and well situated [3455, 3488]. Mr. Bedford says that the "dirty stable, full of rats," which answers the purpose of a dead-house, is in a bad position; and that the only objection to building the mortuary in the south-east corner is that it would there be too near the south wing, and obstruct the air [4038]. Miss Mary Barker says that the cooking-stove is not large enough; that it will cook comfortably for fifty people only, and yet cooks for 250 [4756]. Mrs. Bland thinks the kitchen and all the cooking arrangements very bad, and says that the nurses have sometimes to go across to the kitchen in the pouring rain to get hot water [4893]. Dr. Cox says that the sooner the kitchen is pulled down the better [5014]; that it is a shame to leave the ground at the back of the Infirmary in its present state [5056]; that the dead-house ought to be removed to the southern right-hand corner, and that the urinals, &c., used by the out-patients are in a filthy and defective state [5053]. Dr. Renwick states that the out-buildings, including the kitchen and mortuary, are disgraceful [5514, and Appendix K]. Dr. McLaurin is in favour of erecting a new dead-house upon the site occupied by the old one, as, if it were placed near to the south wing, it would interfere with the ventilation [5686]. Mr. Raphael says that the mortuary is a disgrace to civilization [5827].

Size; state of repair; drainage; and deficiencies.

Mr. Street states that the Infirmary is capable of accommodating 220 patients [134]; that the building is in a bad state of repair; that the walls require renewing; that there are some tanks; and that the building is properly drained [181]. Mr. Blackstone says that there are no tanks, though they have been asked for several times [305]; that there is now a greater number of beds in the hospital than there were previous to Miss Osburn's arrival [478]; and that the place is in a bad state of repair, and requires a new roof and a new floor [553]. Miss Osburn states that the walls are old, and the plaster falls away [626]; and that there are no tanks [820], or contrivances for taking water up into the wards [827]. Dr. Halkett says that there is but one sitting-room for the resident medical officers, and that they have to share it with the manager [1535]; that in comfort and cleanliness the Infirmary does not compare favourably with the hospital at Newcastle-on-Tyne, where he was formerly a resident surgeon [1645]; that the hospital is not large enough for the requirements of this city, as patients have to be refused admission daily [1804-1888]; that there is no chair for carrying patients in, such as he has seen in all other hospitals [1920]; that the receiving-room is in a very defective state, and without any proper appliances, that the operating-room is damp and inadequate, and that the institution is very badly supplied with instruments [1931-1935]. Dr. Gillman agrees with Dr. Halkett as to the insufficiency of the accommodation for the resident medical officers [1652]; that the Melbourne Hospital is considerably larger than this one [1657]; and that there is not sufficient bath-room accommodation here [1743]. Mr. Hinest says there is no tank, or any provision for a proper supply of water to the dispensary [1989]. Mr. Park states that the dispensary is inadequate, and requires renovating; that some chairs, a sink, and an extra water-tap, are needed there [2645]; that there is no laboratory or room for preparing tinctures, &c., no place for storing open drums of oils, and no tank [2682]. Dr. Schuette says that he never saw a hospital which was worse provided with appliances; that there are no conveniences in the receiving-room; and that medical men who come to witness an operation have to wait upon the verandah, there being no room for them [3152]; that the operation-room itself is a horrible place [3162]; and that the accommodation provided for the resident medical officers is very bad [3188]. Mr. Bernauer considers the kitchen very inconvenient, one of the stoves being placed in an out-house, where its good or bad cooking depends on the state of the weather [3457]; but he says that the kitchen is well found in the needful appliances [3481]. Mr. Bedford states that the hospital was condemned some time ago; the roof, verandahs, and floors being bad, the plastering altogether defective, and the erection of lavatories opening into the wards being a great evil [4025]. Dr. Cox says that he made incessant complaints about the condition of the water-closets and lavatories [4925]; that the arrangements with regard to the dispensary are very inefficient and defective [4986]; that the dormitory accommodation is fair, but that the windows, both in the front building and in the south wing, are very defective [5046]; the mistake, as regards the construction of the south wing, being that the windows are too broad, and too much opposite to each other, thus rendering the wards draughty [5050]; that the drainage is very bad indeed, and needs urgent attention [5055]; and that the committee ought to be ashamed of themselves for not keeping the ground at the back of the buildings in better order [5056]. Dr. Renwick considers the state of the out-buildings and premises generally to be disgraceful, and the drainage bad [5497, 5514, and Appendix K]; that there is insufficient accommodation for patients, as he has frequently been compelled to refuse as many applicants as he admitted [5492]; and that the building is very old, and has never been properly repaired [5598]. Dr. QuaiFFE states that the condition of the building is very bad indeed [5638]. Dr. McLaurin says that the area space is defective, the wards damp, and the drainage bad; that there are unpleasant smells from the drains, a pool of stagnant water close to the south wing, and the ventilation of that wing injured by the contiguity of the dead-wall between it and the Mint; and that the lift is out of order [5677-5689]. Dr. Fortescue thinks the buildings wholly inadequate, and should be pulled down, and that any attempt to remodel them would be like an "attempt to mend a garment which is quite worn out" [5722]. He also states that there is not a sufficient number of beds to meet the requirements of the population [5723], and that there are now more patients accommodated than there should be [5727]. Mr. Raphael says that the

the building has been allowed to fall into a ruinous and scandalous state [5827]. Mr. Roberts is of opinion that nothing can be done with the old building [6364]. Dr. McKay says that the rooms in which operations are performed can scarcely be called operating-rooms at all, and that there is very little light in them [7397].

Mr. G. A. Mansfield, architect, states that he has prepared some plans of alterations and additions to the present building. He proposes to remodel the old wards, form a new hall through the centre of the building, and construct a new front. In each corner of the front elevation he proposes to build a nurses' room, so that each ward may be under the immediate supervision of a nurse at night. Additional staircases are projected, and a block of kitchen offices—the new cookhouse being arranged for cooking by steam [5267–5271]. The alterations also include arrangements for the conveyance of hot and cold water into the upper wards, and complete remodelling of the closets and lavatories. Mr. Mansfield estimates the cost of the new buildings, including a new mortuary, at £15,452, and states that the repairs to the old building alone will cost £3,325 [5282–5294]. He also says that in preparing these plans he has borne in mind modern reforms in hospital architecture. Two new wards are projected; one over the front block of buildings, to include nurses' rooms, lavatory, &c.,—and the other over the kitchen block, for contagious cases. Attached to the dead-house (which he proposes to erect in the south-eastern corner) there will be a new dissecting-room. There is also provision for a new operating-theatre [5297]. The plans do not include any alterations or additions to the dispensary, nor has Mr. Mansfield's attention been directed to the defective state of the drainage. He is of opinion that the building, standing on the crest of a hill, possesses sufficient natural drainage [5305–5319]. The plans show a variety of minor alterations. Mr. Roberts gives important suggestions with reference to the style of hospital which he considers it expedient to construct, and gives copious details as to the space of wards, ventilation, position of windows, wall-facing, flooring, lavatories, &c. [6332–6362]. He estimates the cost of a new hospital at from £28,000 to £30,000 [6385]. Mr. Blackstone thinks that washing might be done on the premises by machinery, and that the engine could be utilized in various ways [550]. Miss Osburn, on the other hand is opposed to washing clothes on the premises [1020]. Dr. Schuette is in favour of the erection of wooden huts, for the reception of such contagious cases as are now put into tents [3167]; suggests that the ground should be improved [3168], and that an oven should be built for disinfecting the clothes of patients [3181]. Mr. Bedford thinks that there might be tents or small rooms, with covered ways leading to them, for the reception of contagious cases, and that a small wooden hut would do [4067]. Mrs. Mary Bland thinks that there should be a steam-engine upon the premises [4894]. Dr. Cox suggests that some of the improvements which have been adopted in the Melbourne Hospital should be introduced here [4986, 5034]; that for the reception of infectious cases, there should be a large row of buildings erected, facing the Domain [5015]; that the cooking should be done by steam [5034]. Dr. Fortescue disapproves of Mr. Mansfield's plans [5722] for altering the hospital, and says that the wards might be made tolerably healthy if the main building were broken into three, with passages between, so that the air might circulate round the building [5730]. Dr. McKay says that the back yard should be properly drained, and a portion of the soil removed, to facilitate the running off of the water; that the old kitchen should be removed, and a new one built, with a bath-room and operating-room, where the old operating-room now is [7276–7279]. Dr. Milford says that the hospital accommodation is not sufficient for the population, and that he has known at least a score of men to lose their lives from not being able to get into a hospital where they could be attended to [5627]; he thinks that 200 more beds are wanted to provide for the wants of the sick poor [5629]. Dr. Markey says that the hospital ought to be a good deal larger [7039].

Many witnesses are in favour of pulling down the present building, and erecting a modern hospital on the site; but some think that a new general hospital should be built at some distance from the city. Dr. Alleyne says that if the Government resumed the site of the Infirmary, the Paddington Barracks would be a good position for a new hospital; that if he were building a new hospital, he would take it as far out of town as possible; and that the Paddington Barracks are upon a good elevated site [4520–4523]. Mr. Roberts wishes to pull down the Infirmary, and build upon the same site a modern hospital, to contain not more than 150 beds; but he recommends this on the understanding that another hospital—the Prince Alfred Hospital—is shortly to be erected; in which case he thinks that future hospital requirements should be provided in the direction in which population progresses [5436]; he estimates the cost of a receiving hospital, such as would meet the requirements of the city, at from £28,000 to £30,000 [6385]; he is averse to removing the institution to the site of the Victoria Barracks, because that place is too far away from the shipping and the main streets, and is in favour of having two hospitals,—one general hospital, and the other for the reception of acute and accident cases [6398, 6399]; he is of opinion that the Flagstaff Hill and the heights of Pyrmont are both good positions for a hospital [6559]; and he thinks so highly of the Paddington Barracks as the site of a hospital that at one time he recommended the Government to establish a hospital for chronic diseases there [6379]. Dr. Fortescue says that there is only one place here where you can build a modern hospital—the Paddington Barracks [5734]; that all authorities are against building a general hospital in the midst of a city; and that the Flagstaff Hill would be a better site than Macquarie-street for a small hospital of 100 beds; that all the patients now in the Infirmary could be accommodated in the Paddington Barracks as they now stand, and that a new hospital should be built there at once [5735–5741]; and that the Government should resume the present site, and set apart the Barracks for hospital purposes [5822]. Mr. Raphael says that the Government should resume the Infirmary site, and that a hospital should be built out of town [5852].

THE GENERAL MANAGEMENT.

The Sydney Infirmary is under the control of a Board of Directors, consisting of a President, two Vice-Presidents, two Honorary Secretaries, an Honorary Treasurer, and twenty-one members—twenty-seven in all. This Board delegates its functions very largely to a smaller Board of twelve members, called the house committee, who have full power to act in all matters connected with the general management of the institution. The house committee meet weekly, and the honorary secretaries are the only persons who can interfere with the management of the Infirmary in the absence of that committee [4–11]. The average attendance at the Board meetings Mr. Street states at one-third [87]. The members of the Board are are elected by the subscribers to the institution, to whom must be submitted any proposed alteration of the rules [150]. Mr. Josephson says there are some life directors, who become entitled to seats upon the Board, by reason of their services or large donations to the funds of the institution [2396], and suggests that the whole of the directors should retire every three years and be eligible for re-election, or that half should retire one year and half the next [2399]. Honorary medical officers have by the rules the right of appealing from the Board to a general meeting of the subscribers, and Mr. M. H. Stephen considers this provision absurd, as a public meeting can have no means of coming to a right conclusion upon a case submitted thereto [4265].

Miss Osburn states that the nurses get to know individual members of the committee, and when found fault with say they will appeal to Mr. so-and-so; that members of the committee go into the wards and shake hands with the nurses, take them over to the office to discuss her arrangements, and promise them that their salaries shall be raised in spite of her; and that this has made the nurses insubordinate [672]. She draws attention to a pamphlet written by Miss Nightingale, wherein it is stated that "No good ever comes of any one interfering between the head of the nursing establishment and her nurses—it is fatal to discipline," and asserts that this rule has been infringed in her case [678]. She gives instances of this kind of interference, and says that she finds it very difficult to get rid of a nurse who is idle or negligent, as the committee will send for the woman and ask her whether she wishes to leave. She mentions the case of a woman who was unfit for her position, and was going to leave, but who, on the motion of a member of the committee, was called in and asked if she wished to go; also, the case of a nurse who gave notice that she intended to leave—who was asked not to leave by a member of the committee,—who then remained a fortnight, when she again gave notice,—and who was again told by members of the committee that she was "a good nurse, and indispensable," and that they would "compel Miss Osburn to keep her" [635]. Miss Osburn further states that this weakens her control over her subordinates [686]; speaks of the neglect of the committee, who, notwithstanding her repeated solicitations, postponed the cleaning of the wards; and says that one gentleman told her "they were quite tired of being bothered about these vermin" [622]. She says, too, that when the committee altered the mode of sending down the diet-lists, and she explained the system, they did not seem to know anything about the matter, either as to who sent for the diets, or what was meant by the cards going to the house steward [698]; that one day a member of the committee, early in the morning, called to the nurses from the other side of Macquarie-street to open some windows which were properly closed [726]; that a wardman behaved very badly, and she reported him to the committee; that the committee took evidence, and decided to keep the man, at one meeting, and then, at the next meeting reversed their decision, and discharged him [808]; that the committee have neglected to provide water tanks, or any contrivance for conveying water into the upper wards [818-827]; that the cooking is bad, and she dare not interfere [835]; that the bread and potatoes are bad, and it is ages before she can get any representations attended to [869]; that the committee discouraged her efforts to train nurses for country hospitals [940-949]; that she represented the condition of patients' private clothes to the committee several times, as shown by her report book [7517]; that entries in her report book show that she represented the verminous state of the hospital in February 1871, May 1871, October 1871, and December 1872, [7527-7536]; that Mr. Stephen might not be aware of her having reported it, as he was seldom there [7609]; that though she represented the dirty condition in which patients' private clothes were kept, the committee failed to remedy the evil [7520]; that the report book showed that she had represented the verminous state of the wards to the committee in February 1871, May 1871, October 1871, and December 1872, and that she was reprovved for bringing the matter so often before the committee (In this she is corroborated by Mr. Russell) [7527-7531]; that besides written reports she had made verbal representations on the subject, and that though the building committee were asked to look into the matter they never went near her [7535-7537]; and that a purchasing committee has been appointed, which buys goods of inferior quality at high prices [7582-7589]. Dr. Halkett says that he, several months ago, reported to the committee, without any good result, that the surgical and other instruments were falling into disrepair [1936]. Mr. Josephson says that the directors do not support the manager in his position; that the Infirmary is the worst managed institution in the world, owing to the directors' neglect of duty; that life directors go to meetings and only stop for five minutes; that Miss Osburn "twists the members of the Board about like shuttle-cocks" [2327, 2342, 2349, 2390, 2511]; that there is "no manager, no system, and no head in the establishment" [2363]. Mr. Park states that he has repeatedly represented to the committee the state of the dispensary, and the necessity of having certain improvements made, but that his reports were not attended to [2640]; and that no one on behalf of the committee ever inspects the stock of drugs [2698]. Mr. Jones, the storekeeper, says that he takes stock of the goods in his store yearly, but that he is assisted by no one, and that his stock-taking is never checked by any one [2216-2267]; but that an account is laid before the committee whenever they ask for it [3326-3329]. Mr. Paxton says there were so many screws loose in the management that he was ashamed to complain about matters which came under his observation [2748]; that he will not keep his seat on the committee unless the system is altered [2804]; that the errors of management are the fault of the Board or the house visitors; that, finding a nurse had omitted to apply a poultice to a patient's leg at the proper time, he personally interfered, and gave the nurse a reprimand [2781]; and that either the directors were aware of the verminous state of the wards and took no steps to remedy it, or they never went through the wards to see if anything was wrong [2847]. Mr. S. H. Pearce declines to cast reflections upon the Board with which he is connected [3096], but says that the dreadful state of the institution demanded some urgent remedy and decision on the part of some one [3093]. Dr. Schuette says that when he was house surgeon of the Infirmary, requisitions would go for weeks before he could get an answer, and that the system of management was a red tape system [3119]; that he represented to the committee, without success, the deficiency of the water supply [3151]; suggested the building of a new dead-house many years ago,—the building of an oven to disinfect the patients' clothes, which are now put all together in the clothes-house without being washed or in any way disinfected,—and represented the want of proper accommodation for the medical officers [3169-3190]. Mr. J. Bernauer says that he has told the committee that the cooking stove was too small, and that they have always said that they intended to build a new kitchen [3463]. Mr. Stephen states that matters have been left to be dealt with by the committee, and have never been carried out [3873]; that the committee have sent back nurses whom Miss Osburn had discharged, with instructions that they should be put on again [3884]; that when one or two nurses complained to the committee, it struck him that in dealing with the matter, the members somewhat prejudged the case [3887]; that a sub-committee, appointed to devise means to get rid of vermin, told Miss Osburn to do as she liked, and when she did take her own measures some members were very angry [4347]; and that Miss Osburn has often told him she did not care to report matters to the committee, as there was little use doing so [4370]. Mr. Bedford states that there has been a great deal too much interference on the part of directors with subordinates [3948, 3949]; that he considers this extreme zeal, officiousness, and interference by members of committee detrimental to the interests of the institution [3951]; that he has represented evils to the directors, but found so little attention paid to his statements that he ceased to make them [3982, 3983]; and that the committee were always going to do something, and saying that it was no use going to any expense until that something was done [4030]. Dr. Alleyne says that he attended the committee meetings for some years, but although there was always a great deal of conversation, it had little bearing on the good management of the institution [4426]; and that he disapproves of interference with the nurses and servants by the members of the Board, as it leads to great inconvenience and subversion of discipline [4485]. Miss Mary Barker states that members of the committee go round the Infirmary much oftener than they used to [4639]; that the two house visitors, Messrs. Wise and Pearce, last week (24 to 31 May) spoke very roughly to her, and also to the lady superintendent [4644]; that this was before the patients [4651], and was calculated to impair her authority over them [4650 and 4727]; and that she hopes she shall not again hear the house visitors speak to the lady superintendent as they did on this occasion [4778]. Mrs. Mary Bland says that she has constantly drawn the attention of the committee to the vermin in the wards; that she did so two years ago, but no action was taken [4817]. Dr. Cox considers that the nursing staff has lost prestige, in consequence of members of the committee going into the wards to scold the lady superintendent and nurses before the patients [4932], and says that the committee frequently reversed decisions it had previously come to [4920]. Miss Gertrude Moule says that she considers that her authority is weakened by the interference of members of the committee in the government of the wards [5231]; that some of the members are very officious, and give orders which she thinks they have no business to give [5237]; that the new members of the committee come round very often [5328], but have ignored her, and have dealt with the servants of the institution rather than the officers [5240]; that Mr. Josephson, a member of the committee, has twice shouted out to the nurses from the street to open the windows [5245]; and that he sometimes comes round with a pencil and piece of paper, and asks the patients if they have any complaints to make [5252]. Mrs. Jessie Whytlaw states that she has seen Mr. Josephson in the wards with a pencil and paper, speaking to the nurses and patients [5417]; that she has often called the attention of the directors, when they have been passing through the wards, to the bugs, but has always been met with the reply, "Oh, it will be seen to",—but nothing was done until recently [5427]. Dr. Renwick cites an instance of the interference of the Board with his medical duties [5556]. Mr. J. G. Raphael states that the Board is at fault; that its wishes are not carried out by the lady superintendent [5827, 5895, 5949]; that he believes the committee were aware of the state of the wards [5906]; that the house committee are rarely represented by more than six or seven at their meetings, and sometimes only four attend for months [5972]. He denies, but afterwards admits, that Miss Osburn brought the matter of the cleaning of the hospital before the committee [5932 to 5940]. Nurse Ann Brannigan states that members of the committee are in the habit of coming round the wards [6255]; that not long ago one of the patients complained that he had been left without a poultice, when Mr. Paxton, one of the committee, brought her to the patient, and asked about it, but would not hear her explanation, and spoke of his power, &c., before the other patients; that she thinks if this sort of thing occurs every week, the nurses might clear out [6259]; that on her speaking to the patient about this matter, he was insolent, and said that Mr. Paxton would be there all the week to see him [6260]; and that the attention of the committee was frequently directed to the vermin in the wards [6295]. Mr. Alfred Roberts thinks that it is utterly impossible for the institution to go on in an orderly manner if the members of the Board interfere with the lady superintendent and nurses [6547]; that it is most subversive of discipline for persons to go into the wards and scold the sisters [6548]; that he had seen this interference and the results, and considers that the Board did not understand the relative positions of the officers [6550]. Dr. Markey states that he was referred by Miss Osburn to the committee; he wrote to the committee; the committee referred the matter to Miss Osburn; her letter was sent to him; his reply was sent to her; and this went on for some time, and at last the committee told him that he had better drop the matter [6967]. Dr. McKay says that he has taken notes of interferences of directors [7378]; that many directors interfere in the wards; he cites an instance of the Board interfering in respect to the filling up of diet-cards [7380]; and complains of the interference of the directors with regard to the doctors operating on Sundays [7397]. Dr. Pattieson says that the Board ignores the district surgeons, and pays no attention to any of their suggestions, and that if you wrote to the Board you would not get a reply [7657, 7667].

THE INTERNAL MANAGEMENT.

Mr. Halloran states that in consequence of some complaints which were made in 1866 as to the nursing system of the Infirmary, a correspondence took place between the Colonial Secretary and the Infirmary authorities, which resulted in the Government sending home to Miss Nightingale for a nursing staff [7872-7877]. Mr. Street states that he is very satisfied with the present nursing system, and thinks it a great improvement on the old system; and that this is generally admitted by the patients, some of whom have been in the institution for years [76]. Mr. Blackstone thinks that, under the present system, the patients have been better attended to than they were formerly [599]; that the patients are well looked after [600]; but that he prefers male nurses [609]. Miss Osburn says that, owing to the constitution of the whole management, the nursing system is weakened [686]; that, although at first a strong prejudice existed against the new staff among the doctors, she thinks they are ready to admit the superiority of the present system [855]; that she has not a sufficient staff of sisters, and could not do with less nurses; that there are always convalescent patients to scrub the floors, and there women scrubbers are not needed, but men to clean the walls [7610]; that in consequence of the night nurses remaining on night duty for only three months, she has to change the nurses from ward to ward rather frequently [7625]; that in St. Thomas's Hospital several old nurses have been in one ward for twenty years or more, but there the new nurses are changed from ward to ward as they are here [7879]; that these changes are needed in order that the nurses may receive training in medical and surgical wards, both male and female, and thus gain experience experience of the four different kinds of nursing [7880]. Mr. Russell states that, upon Miss Osburn's arrival, the whole system of nursing was changed [1356], and that he has heard the medical officers attached to the Infirmary say the present system is greatly superior to that of Mrs. Ghost's time [1360]. Dr. Halkett thinks that the existing system of nursing could not be improved [1646, 1919]. Dr. Gillman considers the nursing here superior to that of the Melbourne Hospital [1741]. Mr. Josephson is of opinion that the whole nursing system is rotten [2349], that the nursing could not be worse [2506], and that the inefficiency of the institution is shown in the nursing [2507]. Mr. Pearce is not satisfied with the nursing as carried on at present [3044]. Dr. Schuette, late house surgeon to the Infirmary, states that the alteration in the system of nursing since Miss Osburn's arrival is an improvement [3209]; and that the nursing is satisfactory [3246]. Mr. Bedford is of opinion that some of the nurses are admirable; that, under the new system, the wards are quieter, and, on the whole, look better and more home-like and comfortable than they did under the old system [3969]. He adds also, that he thinks that the hospital has been cleaner under the female nursing than it was under the male nursing. Dr. Alleyne considers that the nursing is a great improvement upon the former system [4381, 4386, 4502]. Miss Mary Barker states that the staff and lady superintendent work harmoniously; that unless this were the case the nursing would fail—the management being so bad [4621]. Mrs. Mary Bland corroborates this statement [4789]; and says that she would be well satisfied, if she were ill, to be looked after as well [4885]. Dr. Cox says that the existing nursing is far superior to the former system; that the nursing of his day was carried on by convalescents or discharged patients; that the introduction of the sisters has not only resulted in improved nursing, but has educated a useful class of the community [4904]; that the nursing in Mrs. Ghost's time was not so good as at present [4917]; that any person who said that the nursing was as bad as it could possibly be, knew nothing about it [4968]; that the nursing in St. Vincent's Hospital—where there are wardsmen in the male wards—he did not regard as equal to that at the Infirmary [5072, 5073]. Miss Gertrude Moule states that the lady superintendent and nurses work harmoniously together [5114]. Mrs. Jessie Whytlaw gives similar testimony [5343]. Dr. Renwick, although not perfectly satisfied with the nursing, says that there is a great improvement since Miss Osburn's arrival [5510, 5597]; that if the doctors attend to the nurses and give them instructions they will be carried out, as a rule, well [5511]; that he prefers female nursing for both male and female patients [5593]; that the old system was incomparably inferior to the present—a system of torture more than anything else [5597]. Dr. Milford, honorary surgeon of St. Vincent's Hospital, while stating that he has no means of judging of the present relative merits of the nursing at that institution and the Infirmary, says that the nursing at St. Vincent's is far superior to what the nursing at the Infirmary was in past times [5621]. Dr. Quaiiffe says that the nursing is sometimes good, sometimes indifferent [5640], and on the whole well conducted [5666]; that for general wards he is in favour of female nurses [5667]; and that the nurses need a little more direct looking after [5663]. Dr. Fortescue states that the nursing is very good, but that he has been struck with the want of discipline in the wards [5756]; that the patients seem to be less under control than in English hospitals, and he fancies the nurses are not quite able to control them; that, however, in the wards of exceptionally good nurses the discipline is perfect [5757]; and that he is entirely in favour of female nursing [5814]. Mr. Raphael considers that the "sister nursing" has not answered its purposes [5852]; that the former system of nursing was superior to the present one [5854]; that the system has been a failure [6003]; and that the patients have not been so well cared for by the present nursing staff as they were by the original sisters who came out [6006]. Nurse Ann Brannigan states that the nurses, sisters, and lady superintendent, work together harmoniously [6247]; in the old sisters' time disputes arose between them and some of the nurses (since left); and that now no disturbances take place [6248]. Annie Parker, housekeeper in the Nightingale wing, states that the nursing staff agree together [6323]. Mr. Roberts says that he prefers the system of female nursing in all the wards [6489]; that he is familiar with the present nursing system, was instrumental in getting the nurses out, and corresponded with Miss Nightingale on the subject [6490]; that he is satisfied there has been an immense improvement in the nursing [6491], and of the desirability of having a nursing system founded on the principles of the Nightingale fund, [6492]; that the present nursing system has done a great deal of good [6495]; that he has never heard that the Nightingale system has proved a failure [6538]; that he approves of it [6534], and does not know of any better in England [6535]; and that its adoption is on the increase there [6542]; and that he has Miss Nightingale's authority for saying that the nursing system here differs from her system, and that she was grieved at the results attained by the staff sent to Sydney [7733, 7747, 7755, and Appendix L 2]; that there was a want of concord among the nurses here [7725]; that he approves of the Nightingale system, and thinks that the nursing system here has done a great deal of good [7775]. Mrs. Blundell, one of the original "sisters" referred to by Mr. Raphael, approves of employing females only in nursing [6844]; and states that in her own case, and others she knows of, there was a want of confidence between the lady superintendent and the nurses [6870]. Dr. Markey states, that while he was house surgeon at the Sydney Infirmary, he was dissatisfied with the nursing at first, but afterwards approved of it [6957]; that it was very good when he left [6960, 6963]; and that some neglect which occurred was caused by the working of the system, and was afterwards remedied [6961]. Dr. McKay states that he considers the nursing pretty fair, but that it does not do so well that it should cost so much money [7314, 7418]. He considers the practical part of the nursing to be very good [7447].

Mr. Blackstone says that, in a moral point of view, it is desirable to employ wardsmen to nurse male patients; that he is aware in Germany and England all the nursing is done by women, but that they are of a "certain age"; and he quotes from "Notes on Nursing." "The age considered desirable for candidates is from 25 to 30 years." The limit here he states is 18 years, and he has never known one to stop more than three years in the institution [560-565]. Miss Lucy Osburn is not averse to receiving candidates for training under 20 years of age, considering that they are more easily trained when young, and she says that she was only 20 when she became a nurse, and that Miss Nightingale was only 21 [957, 959]. She says that there are permanent night nurses in St. Thomas's hospital, who devote their lives to that particular duty [7881]; that she cannot obtain permanent night nurses here [7886]; that, acting upon Miss Nightingale's recommendation, she wished to have a night sister to superintend the whole hospital at night [7887]; that there is no accommodation to admit of the nurses residing in the wards here, nor are the facilities in the south wing for such an arrangement at all equal to those of St. Thomas's hospital [7888-7891]; that Miss Nightingale recommended that the nurses should reside in one building, where they would be more united, and under the lady superintendent's control [7895-7898]; that she has always insisted upon the sisters and nurses going round the wards with the doctors; considers it most important they should do so, and remembers that Mr. Roberts complained once because a sister did not instantly quit another doctor to attend upon him; that Mr. Roberts seemed to think the sister should go to him no matter whom she was with; that she instructed the sisters and nurses to attend who ever came first [7907-7913]; that the operating-theatre may not have been got ready at all times when it was needed, because the nurses were never informed when it would be needed, and could only guess, by castor oil being ordered for a patient, that an operation was about to take place; that the nurses never but twice received any official intimation that the operating-theatre was wanted [7914-7920]; that Mr. Roberts, since his return from Europe, wanted her to send a particular nurse to attend one of his private patients, and was very angry at her refusing to do so, though she did ask the nurse (who refused to go), and though she did subsequently send a nurse [7933-7941]; and that Miss Nightingale has written to her, and spoken regretfully of the dispersion of the nursing staff, but had never attributed blame to her [7950-7956]. Dr. Gillman thinks that some of the junior nurses are too young, and that probationers should be five or six and twenty when admitted [1724]. Dr. Halkett thinks that a porter is needed to lift patients or take them into the operating-room, but would not have a wardman or male nurse [1921]. Mr. Paxton is of opinion that the nurses are too young; that people of riper years are needed [2788]; that the nurses should be between 30 and 40 years of age [2857]. Mr. Pearce objects to female nursing for male wards,—not from any evil he knows to have resulted from the system, but because he considers that men should nurse men; that the present nurses appear too young; that he has not observed anything (morally speaking) wrong in the system; but that when he, with the sub-committee, inspected the wards, he saw too many nurses, and recommended the discharge of some of them, and the employment of women to clean the place [3038-3045]. Dr. Schuette does not consider the substitution of female nursing for male nursing an improvement; he likes trained wardsmen best [3210], because they keep the wards clean [3215]; he does not approve of young nurses, and would never engage a nurse under 30 years of age; though he admits that by having persons of 20 and 25 years of age as nurses, a boon is conferred on the public at large [3247]. Apart from the superior cleanliness secured by the employment of wardsmen, he prefers them as nurses for men patients, and does not think it right for females to attend to some cases in the hospital [3253, 3256]. Mr. Bedford does not understand how any other system than that of female nursing can be carried on; prefers it to the system of wardsmen [4014]; does not consider the nurses too young [4018]; complains of the changing of nurses from one ward to another; states that the nurses are allowed to stay three months in a ward, and are then moved to another—the juniors with them; but adds, that he spoke to the lady superintendent, and she altered the system [4087]. Dr. Alleyne says that, though there are duties connected with hospital arrangements for which men are required, he would not employ them specially as nurses [4497]; that he would not like to be nursed by wardsmen, for though they might be kind, they were naturally rougher than women. He instances a case of a man suffering from acute rheumatism, and says—“to hear that man shout when the wardsmen took hold of him would frighten you” [4500]. Miss Mary Barker says that the nurses, as a whole, are not too young for their position; that they are about the same age as nurses in England; that the youngest is nineteen; that they fall into the system of training better when young, as the older persons do not adapt themselves so well to their work [4631-4633]; and that, as one of Miss Nightingale's oldest nurses, she sees no reason for saying that the nursing is inefficient [4729]. Dr. Cox, in contrasting the nursing systems of the St. Vincent's Hospital and the Infirmary, says that in the former institution the nursing is done by men, which he does not approve of; and sees no objection to the employment of females in all the wards except the lock ward; believes that young women make better nurses than those who are older [5072-5076]. Miss Gertrude Moule states that younger people pick up instruction better than elderly people [5260]. Dr. Renwick complains of the system of changing nurses from one ward to another, and says that they are not kept long enough in one position to learn their duties; that a nurse is about three months in a ward, and then she is shifted, and another takes her place [5504], which greatly inconveniences the medical men [5509]; and that he prefers female nursing for all wards [5593]. Dr. Quaiffe says that he disapproves of the frequent changing the nurses, which brings the doctors into contact with new nurses; that the changes, if made at all, should be made at longer intervals [5640]; and that he is in favour of female nurses for general wards [5667]. Dr. Fortescue states that the difficulty in carrying out the system sometimes arises from the character of the superintendents, and that there is nothing in the system against its proper working; that he prefers female nurses even for male wards, and is altogether prejudiced in favour of that arrangement; that at King's College Hospital they have women even in the syphilitic wards, which however he does not like; that the discipline of the ward here, nursed by a man, is the best in the hospital [5618]; that many of the defects of the nursing system are attributable to the building; that there is great confusion at meal times—a mixing of nurses and patients of different wards; and that in the arrangements of any decent hospital everything is like clock-work—the dinners are served by machinery, and are served without confusion [5813-5820]. Mr. Raphael thinks that the nursing system of Mrs. Ghost's time excelled the present, adding that he was one of the warmest supporters of the introduction of the English nurses [5854]. Mr. Roberts is opposed to male nursing, and states that even in the lock wards at Guy's, he has found the nursing by women work well [6484]; upon the whole he approves of this [6489]. Mrs. Eliza Blundell, formerly head nurse in the institution, states that she did not consider that the place was properly managed in her time [6572]; that the nurses had too frequent changes of wards and patients; that these changes occurred once in three months, and even oftener; that it is not necessary for the nurses to be so changed—only the probationers; sometimes these changes occurred once in six weeks; sometimes the nurses were in the ward only three days [6577-6586]; and the result was that the patients would not have the same nurses or doctors for any length of time [6655]; she states that probationers are admitted at Home at from 25 to 30 years of age; that she was 25 when she was admitted; that probationers are admitted here very young—some of them under 16 years of age; that she considers it unwise to admit them so young [6478]; that she saw many applicants over 25 who were refused; that the probationers were admitted, not after examination, but by Miss Osburn's will [6673-6683]; that females are best to nurse, but that men are required in the wards, as there are many things which women cannot do [6844-6847]; that the sisters might be changed once a year, but then should be allowed to choose their own wards [6837]; and that she does not approve of the employment of wardsmen in the surgical wards [6845]. Dr. Markey says that when he was house surgeon a great many of the probationers were too young; that one was as young as 16 years; that he thinks a woman in that position should be over 24; that in no case ought they to be as young as 16; that 20 was quite young enough, as they see things that they should not see, and hear things they should not hear; that there were many nurses in the Infirmary under 25; that no nurse should be under 30; and that he would leave the nursing to the old maids and widows; but would prefer to be nursed by a young woman, and thinks that the patients would have a similar choice, if the nurses were good-looking [7014-7027]. Nurse Emily Marks says that she is 22 [7124]. Nurse Harriett Jupp states that she is 22 [7134]. Nurse Mary Jane Telford says that she is 21 next October [7191]. Dr. McKay says that the male nurse in the lock ward was sent into the operation-room to arrange sponges for patients with green wounds [7393]; that he approves of male-nursing for men; and that in private practice he prefers male nurses for male patients; and that he thinks the nursing here very good [7447-7454].

In the opinion of Mr. Street, it was undesirable to change the designation of the nursing officials, who were called "sisters." He considers that the title distinguished them as of a superior grade, influenced superior persons to enter the profession, and gave these superior nurses a greater moral control over the patients and subordinates [201-207]. Miss Osburn says that the abolition of the title "sister" was injudicious; that the superior or head nurses require some distinctive title; that the title "sister" has nothing to do with a religious order—any other name as appropriate would do; that the intention from the first was that the head nurses should bear the distinctive title of "sister," simply because it gave the head nurses a moral power, and from no sentimental or religious prejudice; that it is used in England and Germany [875-884]; that the effect of doing away with the title has been to lower the position of the sisters, to weaken the discipline of the wards, and to render those who are fitted for the position, by reason of moral qualities and education, undesirous of undertaking it [928]; that since the change of name, there is a great difficulty in obtaining candidates for training—superior people; that when four of the English sisters left, she took on three persons to train as sisters, but when the discussion arose about the change of name they left; that those who remained found the position irksome [1002]; that it is important in the management of patients to retain the name; and that the nurses regard the title as honorable, and considered themselves degraded when it was abolished [1004-1012]. Mr. Bedford says that he approves of the title of "sister"; that it was a great mistake to fight about the title, for ridiculous reasons; a great pity to do away with it [3995]. Dr. Alleyne thinks that ladies occupying the position of "sisters" should have some distinctive title, and that there could not be a better one than "sister"; that it had an excellent effect in maintaining order and discipline among patients and nurses, and that he regrets the committee abolished it [4510-4514]. Miss Mary Barker states that she was in the Infirmary when the title of "sister" was changed to that of "head nurse"; that the designation of "sister" gives the possessor a greater authority in the hospital; that that is the only reason why she prefers it. She considers that those in training as superior nurses prefer to be designated "sisters"; that there is no religious idea connected with the word, and no other term, in her opinion, is so appropriate; that the term has long been in use in English hospitals—in St. Thomas's for over 200 years, there being in that hospital a set of rules, at least 200 years old, printed in Old English, for the guidance of the "ward sisters" and nurses [4613-4619, 4772]. Mrs. Mary Bland thinks that the title of "sister" gives the holder more authority than the title of "head nurse" [4787], and that, therefore, on public grounds it is preferable [4788]. Dr. Cox states that he was opposed to the change of name, and still calls the head nurses "sisters," because it gives them more influence in the wards; that the title is a good distinguishing badge; that it is used in most English hospitals, and that it is not desirable to give way to ignorant prejudices on such a subject [4969-4978]. Miss Gertrude Moule states that the title gives authority and influence to the holder, and also maintains the respect of others [5107-5112]. Mrs. Jessie Whytlaw is of a similar opinion [5348]. Dr. Renwick states that the title of "sister" gave the head nurses authority over the patients [5605]. Dr. Fortescue says that he always calls the lady in charge of the ward the "sister" [5759]; and that the head nurses should always be called "sisters" [5760]. Mr. Roberts thinks that it is desirable to call the head nurses "sisters," as they are intended to be a superior class, and if they are called "nurses" they get confused with the other nurses; that the patients attach importance to the title; that the general discipline of the wards can only be secured by moral tone, and this can only be the case where the lady in charge receives respect; that a proper title is an important feature in this respect; that practical good arises from use of the name; that it indicates the position of the person holding it, and, as long as he can remember, has been in use in English hospitals; and that the innocent assumption of the title "lady superior" by Miss Osburn gave rise to the change of names [6503-6509]. Mrs. Blundell states that it is customary in England to call the head nurses "sisters"; that the title is of remote origin; that she did not consider it any honor, but a great convenience; and that it induces a kindly feeling between the sisters and patients generally [6761-6775].

tendent:—
Duties, powers, qualifications

Mr. Street says that the lady superintendent is responsible for the cleanliness of the wards [20]; attributes complaints against the nursing staff to a feeling against the lady superintendent, but cannot say from what cause that feeling arises [82]; and says for the most part, the committee's inquiries as to complaints have fallen through [91]. He states that the lady superintendent has been here about five years [120]; that she has sufficient powers, if she were free to exercise them, does her duty as far as she can, has the well-being of the institution at heart; and goes through the wards regularly; that he does not believe the statement that she has not been there for a week; that she has been blamed for the prevalence of vermin in the wards, but has reported the matter to the committee, and has no power to make alterations [136-140]; that he is not aware of any feeling against her, save the feeling between herself and the manager; that so far as he knows, there is none between her and the nurses [155]; that in consequence of charges as to her over-bearing disposition, a sub-committee was appointed to investigate, but when she was allowed to be present, no one would come forward to state anything; that no undue favour has been shown her; that the manager has felt aggrieved at her ordering supplies without sending him a requisition [161-166]; and that the whole responsibility of the internal management of the institution and the control of the servants rests with her [192]; that as far as he knows, the lady superintendent and the nursing staff work harmoniously together [197]. Mr. Blackstone states that the lady superintendent has the whole control of the nursing staff and wards [242]; that the responsibility as to the cleanliness of the wards was placed in her hands [254]; that the first time the responsibility was defined, however, was some three months ago [266]; that the servants, but not all of them, take their orders from her [297]; that she has control over the nurses, probationers, and servants in her own wing; also over the bathman and wardman [298]; that she gets things done without consulting him, and that he appealed against her interference with his department [338]; that she purchases goods which should come through him [343, 440]; that when when the wards wanted cleaning, the house committee gave the order, and she asked them to have it done [360]; and that there is a great difference between the duties performed by Mrs. Blake, the former matron, and those of the present lady superintendent [403]; that she was away from the institution on the night of Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday, from 5 p.m. until 9.30 a.m., which is the absence referred to by Messrs. Paxton and Pearce [6100, 6106, 6122]; that the dust-boxes were obtained by the authority of the committee; that Miss Osburn asked the committee for them and reported when she had received them [6220-6230]; and that about twelve or eighteen months after Miss Osburn arrived he was instructed by Mr. Manning not to interfere with the nursing [356-357]. Miss Osburn states that she is lady superintendent of the Sydney Infirmary, and has occupied that position since December 1867; that she was for a year in St. Thomas's Hospital; three months in King's College Hospital; four months at the Kaiserswerth Hospital at Dusseldorf, and has visited the Allgemeine Krankenhaus at Vienna, and other Continental Hospitals, in order to study her profession [614]; that the sole control of the nursing staff should rest with her [674]; that her duties, as distinguished from those of the manager, are laid down in the rules for her guidance, and almost confine her to the nursing staff; that that would do, if patients wanted nothing but nursing, but they also want food and medicine; that the patients complain of the food, and she is powerless [687]; that she had great difficulty with the late wardsman, because all the male servants are under the control of the manager [807]; that she gets £250 a year salary; that it was raised last year from £200; that if the design under which she originally came out were carried into effect, she would have complete control over the whole nursing department; that everything connected with the wards would, under the governing body, be under her control; that it is most important that she would have control over the cooking; that she had gathered from the letters of the Colonial Secretary that she was to have such a position; that the control of the whole internal management of the institution, the stores, everything connected with the wards, and everything that men had to do with patients; that the discharging of nurses is in the hands of the committee [866-873]; that Mr. Parkes told her, and Mr. Cowper afterwards reminded her, that an important part of her duty was the training of nurses [934]; that she used to deliver lectures to the nursing staff twice a week—bringing some disease under their notice, and referring them to cases in the hospital, but ceased doing so in consequence of interferences [947]; that she goes round the wards four times a day; and to any ward where there is a bad case, where there is linen wanted, or painting going on, several times a day [962]; that she went to King's College to study in the maternity wards, and attended Mr. Barnes's operations there [7549]; that the surgeons always sent for her when operations were performed, put her close to the operator, and pointed out important matters to her [7551]; that on the occasion when she was absent for four nights she had Mr. Stephen's leave, and never was absent without leave [7543-7546]; that she ordered the dust-boxes by authority of the committee, as shown by her report book [7562-7567]; that she had been asked to get stuff for nurses' dresses, and had been put to inconvenience and loss by doing so [7570]; that Mr. Manning told her not to clean the wards, because the manager objected to her doing so [7538, 7603]; that she never refused to give a nurse a character on discharging her [7622]; that she did refuse to send a nurse to attend a man in a tent, because the tent was then a long way from the building, and it was not right for a nurse to be there alone [7631]; that oiled silk costs 12s. 6d. a yard, and she keeps it locked up, and always cuts off what is wanted herself in the wards, and on one occasion suggested to Dr. McKay that he should use oiled silk paper instead, which he refused to do, though afterwards the paper was used for the case, and did quite as well [7634-7637]; that when she arrived, the manager was called superintendent, and her being called "lady superintendent" caused great confusion and unpleasantness, as she used to get Mr. Blackstone's bills and letters, and people thought she was some connection of his; that in consequence of this she felt it necessary to change her title, and was willing to take the title either of "matron" or "lady superior"; that she consulted with Mr. Stephen and Mr. Manning, and it was felt that "matron" would not be a proper title, and so she was called "lady superior"; that as soon as Mr. Blackstone ceased to be called "superintendent" she took back her original title without being asked to do so by any one; that she never asked a nurse to call her "lady superior," or connected the title with any religious feeling; that she has no connection with St. John's House [7641-7646]; and that the title of "lady superior" is used in several London hospitals, and in some Lutheran and Evangelical institutions [7649-7652]; that she is compelled to change the nurses every three months, owing to the regulation of the night duty [7625]; that she has always taken great pains to instruct the nurses [7554]; that she was specially told the cleaning of the wards was the manager's duty, and was only desired to take it into her own hands last March [7606]; that of the occupants of the Nightingale wing twenty-nine are Protestants, and four are Roman Catholics [7647]; that the cost per year per head of the Nightingale wing is £13 18s. 6d., including wine, spirits, and everything except coal [7558]; she had nothing to do with the selection of the sisters sent out from England [7619]; that they were not sisters at all in England, and with one exception were very deficient in knowledge of female surgical nursing [7882]; that she did refuse to call up a day nurse at midnight to attend a patient of Dr. Roberts; that it was against the rules to send a day nurse on such duty; that so far from her practice in that regard being different to the practice at St. Thomas's Hospital, day nurses there were not allowed to do night duty under any circumstances, she herself having been reprimanded for offering to do so [7901-7908]; that she was hardly ever told when the operating-theatre was wanted [7916]; that untidiness results from there being no place in which to put necessary things [7923]; that Mr. Roberts, when she first arrived, made her believe that he was the representative of the Government and the Board, and the medical staff, and that she was in awe of him until Mr. Parkes came to see her [7926]; that Mr. Roberts interfered with her arrangements and that no other medical man did so [7928]; that Mr. Roberts, since his return from Europe, had applied to her for a nurse to attend one of his private patients, and that she had refused to send one [7935]; and that the nurses declined to go because of Mr. Roberts's over-bearing manner [Note to 7937]. Mr. Russell states that, when he first came to the Infirmary, Mrs. Ghost was matron, and had large powers [1335]; more powers than Miss Osburn [1355]; that, until recently, Miss Osburn has had no control over the wardsmen as Mrs. Ghost had [1349]. Dr. Gillman considers that the whole control of the nursing staff should be vested in the lady superintendent, and that she should have the power of engaging and discharging nurses [1739]. Mr. Josephson states that the house committee, appointed as an investigation committee, proceeded to examine into the working of the institution; that Miss Osburn wrote a letter to them, stating that, as charges were made against her, she demanded to be present when they were made; that as the committee were simply employed in investigating the working of the establishment, they declined to allow her to be present; present; that at the next Board meeting it was voted that she should be present, but that the committee adhered to their resolution, and proceeded no further with their investigation [2330]; that the committee knew that her purpose was the intimidation of the nurses [2331]; that he has never seen nor heard anything as to the over-bearing demeanour of the lady superintendent [2338]; that the committee would not permit her attendance, because she treated them with contempt [2340]; that he has never seen her in the wards; that, as far as he can discover, she has never handled a patient, except in one instance, when she held a man's thumb; that she had said there was only one nurse—sister Mary—whom she could trust to go to Mr. Lambton's family [2343]; that she knew who committed a certain guilty act, yet cautioned the staff of nurses against doing it, and that nurse Simpson left in consequence [2344]; that she does nothing in the place; that she has never examined the nurses; and that he questions if she knows how to teach nurses; that he believes the nurses who left did so because they would not "toady" to her; that they could teach her her duty over and over again; that, in a letter sent to the Board, she stated that if the English nurses did not go, she must [2349]; and the Board let the trained nurses go, and kept a lady who, in his opinion, is not worth her salt [2351]; that she does nothing but receive visitors and go visiting; that she has been away from the establishment for days and weeks together, giving no account of her absence; that she orders things, and the manager never knows what goes into the place; that she has been permitted to spend hundreds of pounds without authority; that she is "fondled" by the directors, who are frightened to say a word against anything she does; that she takes and gives holidays whenever she pleases; that it was only when she was compelled by the house committee that she gave characters to nurses who left [2354]; that she has treated the house committee "like dogs" [2363]; that she came out at a salary of £150 which has been raised to £250 with extras [2368]; that he can take his oath that she ordered without authority some wooden boxes to hold dirt and refuse [2426]; that he would have the engagement of nurses placed in the hands of the honorary medical staff, because they are better judges than Miss Osburn is [2477], and would never give that power to her [2484]; that he does not consider her fitted to train nurses, because he does not see her doing her duty [2489]; that she now rules the establishment (directors included), and "twists them about like a shuttlecock" [2511]; and he complains that she takes no notice of the orders of the house committee, and instances a case of her neglect, in not having diet lists made out as directed [2528]. Mr. Paxton says that the lady superintendent has absented herself for days at a time without leave [2793]; that she does not apply herself to her duties [2817]; that she is not sufficiently a working nurse [2835]; that if she had taken care, the wards could have been kept clear of vermin [2841]; that she has failed to take interest in the institution [2865]; that the nurses would know their duty better if they were looked after properly [2866]; that he should be sorry to give her the power of appointing or dismissing nurses [2879]; that while he believes her to be a lady not without ability, her ability is not brought to bear on the institution [2891]; that he does not expect her to do the work, but thinks she is bound to superintend [2923]; that he has never met her in the wards but twice [2927]; that patients had complained to him that sometimes for a day or a couple of days they had not been visited by her [2928]; and that when she was away for two days and a half, he and others of the committee were "put out" to find that the officers and nurses of the institution seemed to treat it as a common occurrence [2957]. Mr. Pearce makes a similar complaint of the lady's absence [3063]; and states that when the sub-committee pointed out the verminous state of the wards to the lady superintendent, she replied, "What can I do?—I cannot clean it," and complained that there were no men under her supervision; that her girls had cleaned the walls as far as they could reach [3078]; that the by-laws empowered her to employ men, and that she should have done so, and reported to the committee [3085]; that she, however, did act on her own responsibility, and was reprimanded by the committee [3089]; that he thought her over-zealous [3094]; but she made a great improvement—so much so that the committee decided to revoke the improvements to be made by the architects, and save £600 [3094]; that it is the duty of the lady superintendent to see that the floors, clothes, curtains, and bedsteads are kept clean; but that it is not the nurses' place to scrub floors [3102]; and that Miss Osburn had discharged the scrubbing women, and engaged nurses instead, so that the cleaning was neglected [3103]; Dr. Schuette states that he did not observe any improvement in the care and appearance of the wards after the arrival of the lady superintendent [3215]; that Miss Osburn was frequently absent from the institution for days together [3238–3240]; that he used to find her in the wards in the morning, and at 9 or 10 o'clock at night [3242]; that she gave due attention to her duties [3243]; that he observed her every morning during his stay in the hospital and after her arrival [3244], and considers her in every way qualified for her position [3245]. Mr. Stephen is not aware that the Board insisted upon her taking back nurses whom she had discharged, but knows that on appeals made by nurses to the Board, Miss Osburn gave them a better character than she had before [3883]; that it is untrue that the lady superintendent is often away for days and weeks together, without any one knowing where she is, and without the knowledge of the hospital authorities [4293]; that he had no reason to believe that she would neglect her duty [4296]; and is sure that she is zealous and energetic [4297]; that, on the occasion of her absence, as referred to by Messrs. Paxton and Pearce, he gave her leave, and reported it to the committee [4298]; that her position is such that she requires some recreation [4304], and that she has a great deal of worry and vexation to encounter [4305]. Mr. Bedford, referring to lectures delivered to the nurses by Miss Osburn, is disposed to think that too much regard was paid to that kind of thing, and too little to the drilling of the nurses [3965]; that her interest and zeal in the institution have gone in a direction which does not tend to the practical improvement of the nurses, so much as to their theoretical education and the enlargement of her duties; that she likes to carry out her duties in an official style, and that a great deal of her zeal is expended in that way [4068]; and that she should look more thoroughly into the practical education of her nurses [4069]. He instances a case of neglect arising from this want of practical instruction [4070]; says the lady superintendent is an intelligent and zealous person, and competent to discharge her duties; but thinks she has fallen into the error of giving too much importance to the official kind of duty, and to the theoretical part of instruction of the nurses, rather than drilling them in the practical details of their work [4083]; that the nurses should be held responsible to her [4086]; that she has improved in one respect lately (referring to her former system of changing nurses from ward to ward) [4087]; and that she requires to be about the place all day, to keep the nurses up to their work [4092]. Mrs. Isabella Ross, late a patient in the Infirmary, states that she has frequently seen Miss Osburn in the wards [4194]; and that Miss Osburn did not speak to her, nor any of the patients, but used to come into the wards to see that all was right and clean [4231].

Dr. Alleyne states that he does not think the lady superintendent has had full control over the internal government of the institution [4431]; that she had complained she was unable to keep the wards clean because she could not get assistance [4441]; that she takes a great interest in the institution and the welfare of the patients, and is very energetic; that she is competent, judging from the results of her work and the great improvement of the nurses who have been under her guidance; that she is not inattentive to her duties; that he is seldom at the Infirmary without seeing her about the place; that she has been absent on leave, but he has not noticed her absence excepting on such occasions [4503-4507]. Miss Mary Barker states that the lady superintendent and the nursing staff work harmoniously together; that she has never observed Miss Osburn unjust or arbitrary to the nurses; that it is not true that she takes no interest in the institution, or does not apply herself to her duties; that some nurses left who preferred private nursing, but not because they were systematically dismissed by the lady superintendent; that some younger nurses were discharged because of their incompetency [4620-4627]; that she never knew Miss Osburn to be absent for weeks, except on one occasion [4637], when she was away on sick leave [4638]; that she has always insisted upon the beds being regularly cleaned [4663]; that she is never less than three or four times a day in the wards; that at Home the lady superintendent, as a rule, visits the wards but once—about 10 o'clock in the morning; that Miss Osburn rises at 6 o'clock, and visits the wards, being frequently there before the nurses; that she is constantly on the alert to preserve discipline; and that her duties are more arduous than they would be in England [4699-4707]. Mrs. Mary Bland states that she considers Miss Osburn endeavours to be just and fair in her treatment of those under her; that the statement that she does not apply herself to her duties is unfounded; that, with two exceptions, she has not been absent from the Infirmary for any length of time; that she goes round the wards several times a day; that she is in the habit of conversing with and taking notice of patients [4790-4796]; that she never found her unwilling to impart instruction [4854]; and that, as far as she knows, there is no truth in the statement that Miss Osburn "rules the whole establishment, directors and all, and twists them about like shuttlecocks" [4883]. Dr. Cox states that Miss Osburn takes a most active interest in the institution, gives her greatest attention to it, is extremely attentive to her duties, and very desirous of doing what is right; that she is competent, but imprudent sometimes in not mastering small difficulties; that she has a good temper, but he thinks she rather likes to see others get into trouble; that he thinks her quite equal to her position, and competent to train nurses [4963-4967]; that he has known her to complain continuously to the committee about the vermin [4992]; that it is unfair to attribute the verminous state of the hospital to her neglect [4995]; and that he does not think she would make an unfounded statement [5025]. Miss Gertrude Moule states that so far from the lady superintendent being unjust or arbitrary to those under her, she is too ready to think the best of every one and accept their excuses [5116]; that she takes the greatest interest in the institution [5190]; that she was absent for three nights [5194]; that she is very seldom away [5196]; and her absence is not habitual [5201]; and that she has endeavoured to keep down the vermin [5220]. Mrs. Jessie Whytlaw states that there is no ill feeling existing between the nurses and the lady superintendent; that Miss Osburn is just and kind, and takes a great interest in them all; that she knows no case of her having systematically got rid of the best nurses [5343-5346]; that she goes round the wards regularly three times a day—sometimes oftener; that she takes a great interest in the patients; that it would be impossible for her to speak to all the patients; that it is a false statement that she takes no interest in her work, or that she has been absent for days together; that she is always accessible to the nurses and ready to give advice to them [5360-5367]; and that she has endeavoured to rid the Infirmary of the bugs [5426]. Mr. Roberts states that he considers the lady superintendent competent to perform the duties of her office, though he doubts if her character of mind is quite suited to the calling; that he does not consider it is a correct representation that she takes no interest in the institution, or that she neglects her duties [6496-6499]; that he cannot say whether Miss Osburn has any practical knowledge of nursing; that he considers her fit to instruct nurses; that it is not the duty of the lady superintendent to do the nurse training; that it is essential that the lady superintendent should be a good practical nurse; that he knows from Miss Nightingale that Miss Osburn is competent; that he is confident she can use a speculum, &c., and that she is too intelligent not to be able to do so [6513-6519]; that Miss Nightingale had stated that Miss Osburn was full of energy, clever as a nurse, and that she had worked for twelve months as a nurse in large wards; that no doubt Miss Osburn has excellent reasons for not doing any nursing, and that she considers it her duty to work the staff [6528]. Dr. Renwick complains that on one occasion the lady superintendent interfered with one of his patients [5547]. Dr. Quaiffe says that the nursing staff is under the control of the lady superintendent, who has the management of all the nursing [5644]. Dr. Fortescue believes that a lady superintendent is a necessary accompaniment of nursing by women, and that a woman of superior education and social position should have the charge or supervision of every ward [5757]; he adds that while he sees clearly that there must be a matron, she must not have too much authority [5776]. Mr. Raphael says that the lady superintendent has aimed far above whatever was contemplated when she was sent for; that the understanding was that she was simply to be manageress over her nurses, and nothing more, but that from the negligence of the Board other duties have been cast upon her—the purchasing of stores, clothing, &c.; that she has even been allowed to purchase on her own account, and to sell clothing to her nursing staff; that in consequence he had moved a resolution that whatever stuff she had on hand the Board should take from her and pay her the cost; that she sold goods to the nurses; that he does not know what she did do further than that he knows she did wrong; that this wrong consisted in her buying stock and begging to her subordinates as a saleswoman [5827-5833]; that she "crushed" her nurses out of the institution; that she has been "taken up by the Country and made a goddess of," which he "believes to have been her first fall in life"; that she is upheld in a position which was never intended for her; that she is continually coming into contact with the officials of the institution, and has caused some of them to be dismissed because they did not call her "lady superior" [5839]; that a man was "hounded out of the place" because he would not bow his head to her [5842]; that she had been instructed by Mrs. Blundell [5860]; that she should have been a barrister rather than a nurse; that she had two spies, who caused a great deal of mischief; that she favours Roman Catholics, and has neglected the patients [5862-5874]; that he had signed a report acquitting Miss Osburn of all blame in these matters, but now considers if he ever had a sin on his soul it was that [5882]; that she has usurped more authority than ever she was intended to have [5887]; that the verminous state of the building was never, to his knowledge, brought before the Board by Miss Osburn [5918]; that "she is a lady, and therefore he won't say a word" about her statement that a member of the committee committee told her they were quite tired of being bothered about the vermin [5932]; that he never in his life heard of her bringing the matter before the directors [5933]; that she did apply to have the walls whitewashed, and it was done [5935], but that he had forgotten it [5940]; that the only thing he finds fault with her about is not her fault at all, because the directors have turned her head [5949]; that she has never been disrespectful to the Board [5952]; that no gentleman would say she treats the house committee like so many dogs [5954]; that she never rested until she got rid of a wardsman [5956]; and that on "his soul's safety" he believes the man was innocent [5967]. Nurse Brannigan says that the lady superintendent and the nursing staff have worked very comfortably since the English sisters, who quarrelled a good deal among themselves, have left [6247]. Ann Parker says that the nursing staff get on comfortably, and that Miss Osburn is not constantly away from the institution [6323]. Mrs. Blundell says that the nurses are changed too frequently by the caprice of the lady superintendent [6586]; that Miss Osburn was trained for twelve months in St. Thomas's Hospital [6610]; that Miss Osburn gave lectures on Anatomy and Physiology [6647], but stopped doing so after Dr. Roberts came and gave a lecture [6919]; that she interfered too much with the sisters [6651]; that it was not her duty to handle patients [6657], or to train nurses [6645-6921]; that Miss Osburn frequently made a probationer a nurse before she was competent [6666]; that there was partiality shown [6668]; that she did not hear that Miss Osburn had passed a very satisfactory examination at St. Thomas's [6447]; that she had been unkindly treated by Miss Osburn and her servants [6783]; that her complaints about ill-treatment were not listened to by Miss Osburn [6786]; that being sent on one occasion by Dr. McKay for oiled silk, Miss Osburn brought the material up to the ward and cut it herself, thus implying that she (Mrs. Blundell) was not honest [6795]; that Miss Osburn was highly educated [6827]; that the nurses purchased their clothes from the lady superintendent [6883]; that at Home the nurses purchase the stuff for the uniforms they wear in the wards from the matron [6891]; that Miss Osburn sold the nurses here other things besides the dresses [6898]; that she was partial to Roman Catholics [6904]; she declines to give any opinion as to whether Miss Osburn is a fit person to manage the institution [6744, 6823, 6874], and states that she certainly will not endorse Dr. McKay's statement that Miss Osburn brought out a number of incompetent nurses with her [6931]. Dr. Markey instances a case of a patient who was neglected by a nurse, and said that he spoke to Miss Osburn about it, and brought the matter before the committee; that Miss Osburn refused to send a nurse to attend a man in a tent [6997-7012, and note]; and that on one occasion he saw a little temper on the part of the lady superintendent [7035]. Nurses Caulfield, Marks, Johnson, Jupp, Davis, Tookey, Traviss, Rafter, Rucker, Fairburn, Telford, Curr, Gordon, and Gibson, all state that the nursing staff are at present working harmoniously, and have nothing to complain of with regard to the lady superintendent's treatment of them [7111-7229]. Dr. McKay states that a patient complained to him that Miss Osburn scolded her for interfering to prevent an act of cruelty [2295]; that Miss Osburn is not fit for her position, because the nurses who came from England with her were not able to perform certain surgical duties [7314]; that he does not think she can perform these duties [7331]; that he does not think her competent [7421]; that she wishes to domineer and take too much upon herself [7424]; and that on one occasion he gave her a setting down.

his duties,
powers, qualifications, &c.

According to Mr. Street, the present manager has a general superintendence of the Infirmary, with the exception of the lady superintendent's department [15] acts as Secretary [26] has had no experience in the management of similar public institutions [38]; and his duties do not require any particular qualifications [41]. He adds that he believes the manager has been jealous of Miss Osburn's position [28], and has felt aggrieved at her taking certain duties upon herself [165]. Mr. Blackstone, the manager, does not reside upon the premises, but is there from 7 a.m. to 7 p.m. He states that three months ago the committee took the cleaning of the wards out of his hands; that previous to that he did not consider them in his charge [245-276]; that he has no ill feeling against Miss Osburn; that he has been six years and two months in the Infirmary, and before Miss Osburn's arrival had the engagement of all the servants, and the general management of the institution [401-414-416]; and that it was not his duty to see to the cleaning of the beds [461]. Miss Osburn thinks that the manager is the superior of even the resident medical staff [619]; she states that he interferes with the nurses, and encourages tale-bearing [708]; that his demeanour is a little rough to everybody, and the patients have complained of it, and that he does not take any interest in them [718-721]; and that though the cooking is under his control he does not understand it [837]. Mr. Russell says there was no one in the position of manager when he first came to the Infirmary eighteen years ago [1334]; that until lately the manager has had control of all the male servants, with the exception of the male wardsman [1349]; that he has charge of all stores, and receives and answers all inquiries of applicants for admission [1364]; and that the male servants all consider him their superior officer [1369]. Dr. Halkett says that he makes his requisitions to the manager; that he believes he saw him one night under the influence of liquor, but always found him able to do his duty [1629-1635]. Dr. Gillman has not seen the manager under the influence of drink [1773]. Mr. Josephson says the manager is merely a head clerk and no manager at all, owing to the directors not supporting him in his position; that he is not allowed to do anything [2327-2354-2418-2443]; that he is cowed down and brow-beaten, but intelligent; that he has heard reports of his being drunk, but it is all nonsense [2512-2518]; and that if the manager heard complaints as to want of water and failed to report them to the committee he neglected his duty [2578-2582]. Mr. Park, chief dispenser, has repeatedly complained to the manager about the inefficiency of the dispensary boy without effect [2663-2675]. Mr. Paxton considers the manager quite unfit for his position [2810]; but has never seen him under the influence of liquor [2606]; declines to say whether or not he bears a character for sobriety [2911]; and he questions whether the manager has any qualifications for his office [2982]. Mr. Jones thinks the manager bears a character for sobriety; has never seen him under the influence of liquor [3672], and has never noticed him at all confused [3774]. Mr. Bedford says the manager should have more to do with the duties of secretary than anything else, and should have nothing to do with the wards, but attend merely to the business department [3953-3958]. Miss Mary Barker says that the manager did not interest himself about the vermin at all, and though frequently asked, never sent men to clean the wards [4665]. Dr. Cox does not think that the manager is fitted for his position, and saw from the first that the office, which was, he believes, created for him, would bring him into disrepute [4934]. Mrs. Blundell says that the manager tried to make the men work, and never refused to send a man to do anything when she asked him [6707]. Dr. Markey considers the manager competent [7038].

Mr.

Mr. Street states that there has been an unsatisfactory clashing of authority between the manager and lady superintendent; that there is jealousy between them; that an unpleasant feeling has arisen; and that half the complaints about the institution are simply matters of jealousy between these officers [19-24-32-84-155]. Mr. Blackstone states that the lady superintendent has authority over the nurses and servants, but the yardsman and bathman are engaged by him; that there has been some clashing between his department and Miss Osburn's, and the committee have stopped her interference [337]; that the yardsman, bathmen, and cooks are under his control, while Miss Osburn controls all other servants, and that she, by leave of the committee, orders goods, apart from him [434-439]; that he does not know of ever having refused a patient his clothes to air [905], and that he never knew Miss Osburn to order a bath and be refused [912]. Miss Osburn states that the male servants are out of her control, know the manager is their master, and will not obey her orders; and to this she traces the difficulty of getting the wards clean [627]; that there is a conflict of authority between herself and the manager, which prevents her having things done [689]; that the bathman won't even provide a bath for a patient by the nurse's order [708]; she gives an instance in which a man refused to fetch ice needed for a patient with a broken head because the manager was not in; also a case of a man refusing to go for a clergyman for a dying patient; also a case of an erysipelas patient being kept twenty-four hours without a tent being provided [708-710-714]; states that the gas stoves were taken out of the wards suddenly and without warning [726], and that she has not full control over the wards [729]. She further instances a case in which a yardsman refused to fill a bed; a case in which a bed could not be obtained from the store because the manager had given no order [804]; a case in which the manager justified a yardsman's misconduct [807]; a case in which a man refused to pump water for the Nightingale wing [814]; and a case in which she gave a patient an order to get his clothes out of the clothes-house, which order the manager tore up, refusing to let the patient have his clothes [722]. She states that she has great trouble in getting things done [812]; that though the cooking is sometimes very bad she cannot interfere [835]; that though the manager cannot tell what is needed, the nurses have to run to him for everything [872]; that the nurses are very often without linseed, tow, cotton-wool, &c., because the manager stopped the supply to the wards [778]; that the method of sending up the diets was altered, to the detriment of the institution [690]; and that towards the end of 1870, she got one of the wardsmen to clean the walls, but had to stop it, as Mr. Manning told her the manager felt hurt about her cleaning the place, as it was part of his duty [7538]. John Smith, a patient, confirms Miss Osburn's evidence with reference to the insubordination of the yardsman [735], and Bridget McAulty corroborates the statement with regard to the delay in putting up the tent [761]. Henry Harris, bathman, states that he is under the manager's directions, but as far as is in his power obeys Miss Osburn; that he cannot serve two masters, and would do all he could for Miss Osburn, but is bound to obey the manager [1122-1126]. William Sadlier, yardsman, says that he takes instructions both from the manager and lady superintendent [1211]; that he did not pump water for the Nightingale Wing on the 8th May [1217] because he was clearing the yard by order of the manager [1231]; that he has refused to fill beds, and may have refused to obey nurses' orders [1251-1271]; that he would obey an order of Miss Osburn's as a matter of favour to her [1273], but does not consider himself bound to obey her; that he refused to obey the order of a nurse who told him to go for ice [1294-1299], and that he would not obey a nurse [1302-1318]. Mr. Russell has observed a clashing of authority, occasioned by the manager repudiating the right of the lady superintendent to give orders to male servants [1367]. Dr. Halket has observed a clashing of authority between the two officers, which affected him personally as regards the method of making up the diets [1566-1570]; he corroborates Miss Osburn's evidence with regard to the yardsman [1584], and the delay in putting up the tent [1591]; and states that there are often delays in obtaining ice [1588]. Mr. Josephson says that Miss Osburn orders things, and the manager never knows what comes into the place [2354]; and that the authority of the two officers clashes because Miss Osburn exceeds her duty [2420]. Mr. Park is aware of the clashing of authority [2738], and confirms Miss Osburn's statement with regard to the manager's stopping the supply of linseed, &c., to the wards [2733]. Mr. Paxton has observed the division of authority [2749-2806], and states that, when he complained to the manager about the bugs he said it was no business of his, and Miss Osburn said it was no business of her's; that they complained of each other [2807]; and that the manager refused to accompany him through the wards, as Miss Osburn disliked his interference [2827]. Mr. Pearce gives similar evidence [2996]. Dr. Schuette observed a clashing of authority between the two officers [3147], which was very prejudicial to the interests of the institution [3197]. Mr. Stephen speaks of a clashing of authority, which has arisen out of the peculiar relation the manager and lady superintendent bear to each other [3876], and says that the duties of the two officers are not thoroughly defined [4360]. Mr. Bedford says there is a clashing of authority, which arises from the duties of the manager and the lady superintendent not having been clearly defined in the first instance [3952]. Mrs. Bland says that one can hardly help noticing the clashing of authority [4823]. Dr. Cox says that there is a party on the committee opposed to the manager, and another opposed to the lady superintendent [4923], and that the division of authority was distressing to the medical officers [4925]. Miss Gertrude Moule says that the men, when asked to do anything, turn round and ask if the manager is in [5117]; that there is frequently no water to wash the patients because the yardsman doesn't pump [5211], and that the supply of linseed-meal was stopped [5204]. Mrs. Whytlaw says that it is very difficult to get a man to do anything by the lady superintendent's authority; that the manager interferes in the wards [5370]; that Miss Osburn gave a patient an order to get his clothes out to air them, which order the manager refused to honor, saying—"What the devil has Miss Osburn to do with it?" [5371]; that she also gave an order for a pair of boots for a patient, and on its presentation to the manager, he said—"Miss Osburn should mind her own business," and refused to give the boots [5372]; that she knew of an erysipelas patient being kept waiting twenty-four hours for a tent [5375]; that the old system of making up the diets was discontinued in order to annoy the sisters [5386]; and that the supply of linseed-meal, &c. was stopped [5400]. Dr. Renwick was not aware that the lady superintendent could not get the simplest things done without reference to the manager, but heard something about the delay in getting a tent for an erysipelas patient [5538]. Dr. Fortescue thinks the nurses should have linseed in the wards ad lib., and sees no reason why the supply should be stopped [5820]. Mr. Raphael thinks the internal management has been injured by differences between the manager and lady superintendent, and that the latter has exceeded her duty [5827]. Mrs. Blundell says she would not presume to give a man an order except through the manager, who never refused to send a man to do anything when asked [6705-6710]. Dr. Markey heard a good deal of grumbling about the work not being defined, but considers the management on the whole satisfactory [6989].

Division of authority between manager and lady superintendent: and its effects.

Mr. Blackstone says that the wards were thoroughly cleansed in March last, by order of the committee [270]; that there was vermin in the walls of the building before Miss Osburn came, but that in his time the beds were always clean and the walls whitewashed [349]; that the vermin might be kept down if the beds were taken out and cleaned [373]; that the Infirmary has not decreased in cleanliness since the arrival of the nursing staff [376]; that he has picked the bugs out of the wall himself, and unless the mortar was picked off and the walls replastered they would never be free from them [476]; that the Infirmary is not in a filthy state, nor as bad as is made out [514]; and he believes that the story that has been got up is an exaggeration. Miss Lucy Osburn states the vermin were in the walls and in the frames of the windows, but not in the floors; that she saw patients dying, with these creatures crawling over them [624]; that the wards are now quite clean [631]; that the sisters complained of the wards being dirty [732]; and that the water used for washing the back verandah runs down into a sink at the end of it [995]. Mr. Russell states that when Miss Osburn came she found the Infirmary in a very dirty state [1357]. Dr. Halkett states that he is not surprised to see vermin in a rubble building, but would be surprised if it were stone [1648]. Henry Harris states that verminous clothes are put in a basement room under the south wing, but cannot see how the vermin could get up to the next floor, and thinks they die in the bundles [2278]. Mr. Josephson says that the wards were beastly until the last month or so [2567], and that patients would be apt to be covered with vermin if verminous clothes were kept underneath them [2605]. Mr. Paxton states that the place was over-run with bugs, but that the evil has been remedied [2783, 2784]; that a patient who had paid his money for three weeks asked to leave after a week because the bugs were getting into his mouth; that complaints were made that if a man had a bad leg the rats would tear at the poultice around it [2837]; that he thinks the wards in their present state might be made comfortable [2851]; that the hospital used to be in a filthy state and swarming with bugs [2870]; that the window and bed curtains were like soot [2931]; and that he thinks if the verminous clothes of patients are kept immediately under the wards they would possibly generate vermin throughout the building [2980]. Mr. Pearce states that he found the beds and wards in the old building in a most filthy condition, with myriads of bugs [3051]; that he had seen vermin and things that would disgust many persons to look at, on the beds [3072]; that there were thousands of bugs in the holes and crevices of the plaster; that you could see them everywhere [3077]; and that after Miss Osburn's improvements the wards looked clean and healthy, and there were no bugs to be seen [3094]. Dr. Schuette states that he did not notice any improvement in the general care and appearance of the wards after the arrival of Miss Osburn [3215]; that there were vermin in the beds under the old system [3218]; that in Miss Osburn's time the beds were washed [3222], and that the wards were not whitewashed very often [3249]. Mr. Bedford states that there must have been some want of care, but thinks that a good deal has been allowed to go on in consequence of the hospital having been condemned some time ago [4025]; that he cannot understand how the place got into such a filthy condition, because the vermin might certainly have been kept under [4028]. Mr. Stephen says that Miss Osburn complained of the verminous state of the institution, but never gave the committee to understand that it was in the very bad state in which it afterwards turned out to be [4348]; that if the bugs were so numerous as reported, it was strange the house visitors did not see them, but that the system is not properly carried out [4351]; and that he was not aware that verminous clothes were kept in the basement below the south wing [4376]. Dr. Alleyne states that there are an enormous quantity of bugs habitually about the beds [4416], and that he had heard Miss Osburn say she was not able to keep the wards clean without assistance [4441]. Miss Barker says that there had been a great deal of vermin in her ward, and that the beds are taken out and thoroughly overhauled once a month, but still the vermin cannot be kept down [4645]; that the place was alive with vermin when the English nurses first came; that she has been told it has been in the same condition for the last thirty-five years [4649]; that the cleanliness of the hospital is badly managed [4721]; and that the vermin are still about the place [4779]. Mrs. Mary Bland states that she noticed vermin in the wards when she arrived and since [4809-4810]. Dr. Cox says that there were vermin in the building before the present staff came, and in 1850 [4908-4909]; that in his ward there was an urinal on the outside, the urine from which soaked into the ward; that he pointed this out to the directors, but they took no notice of it [4926]; that the verminous state of the building had been continually reported to the committee, and that he had seen Miss Osburn appealing to them to clean the wards [4992]. Miss Moule states that there was a great quantity of vermin in the building when she came there; that she and the lady superintendent did everything in their power to keep them down [5218-5222]. Mr. Mansfield states that he is sure that no amount of cleaning or whitewashing could keep the walls free from bugs [5335]. Mrs. Whytlaw states that it is impossible to keep the main building free from vermin, owing to the state of the walls [5424]. Mr. Roberts states that the system of keeping the wards constantly filled with patients must be injurious to its sanitary condition [5443], and that there is a want of tidiness about the hospital, and he has seen brooms in corners, clothes lying about, and beds lying in the verandahs [7831-7836]. Dr. Renwick says that the principal reason for the bugs being so numerous is that the building was so very old, and has never been properly repaired [5598]. Dr. Milford states that there were any number of bugs and rats there in 1849, when he first became acquainted with the place [5623-5626]. Mr. Raphael states that he often observed the state of the wards as to the existence of vermin, and suggested improvements, which would be found on record [5905]; that Mr. Pearce's report was grossly exaggerated, as he would maintain "at the point of the bayonet" [5917]; that within his knowledge the matter was not frequently reported to the Board by Miss Osburn [5928]; that the building being rotten underneath made it easy for rats to get through the place [5923]; that he does not believe that the rats run around the men's legs, nor that the bugs existed to the enormous amount stated [5945]; and that he found the floors and bed-clothes dirty [6017]. Nurse Brannigan states that ever since she has known the building, there have been great quantities of bugs there [6279]. Mrs. Blundell corroborates Nurse Brannigan's statement as to the vermin, but thought it possible they might be kept down [6592-6735]. Dr. McKay states that the beds were in a dirty state, and that he had often taken off splints and found the bugs had got into the broken bones of the patient; that there is any quantity of bugs in the old house; and the only way to get rid of them would be to pull all the plaster off and put in new floors [7434-7444].

medical officers;

Mr. Street says that the honorary medical officers admit patients, some of whom could be treated more economically at the Benevolent Asylum, but that the admissions of these patients must be left to the medical men [64-73]. Mr. Blackstone says that the honorary staff admit and discharge quantity of chlorodyne, for which a much cheaper substitute could be found [4597]. Miss Mary Barker says that the doctors admit a patient directly a bed is empty; that a man came in to go into the bed of a patient who died, sat in a chair while the body was being carried out, and got erysipelas [4653]; that the quiet of Sunday is much disturbed by doctors performing operations unnecessarily [4685]; that the surgeons keep patients in the hospital in order to retain beds, and in her own ward a man was detained a month in that way [4688-4693]; that honoraries allow patients to violate the rules and have, in defiance of the committee, re-admitted patients discharged for insubordination [4694]; that they take the part of rebellious patients [4720]; and that the physicians attend more regularly than the surgeons [4760]. Mrs. Bland says that the surgeons perform operations unnecessarily on a Sunday [4804]; that patients are very often kept in by medical men, as some are jealous of getting as many beds as they can [4806]; that the nurses have given up reporting violation of the rules, because the doctors take no notice [4860]; and that some doctors maintain discipline, while others do not [4861]. Dr. Cox thinks the statement that medical men give so much spirits to patients that they become confirmed drunkards, a libel [5011]; that the medical staff have more honor than to keep in patients for the purpose of retaining beds [5017]; that if it is true, the doctor doing it should be called upon to resign at once [5024]; and that if the committee allow medical men to permit patients to violate the rules, they are not performing their duty [5027]. Miss Gertrude Moule says that the doctors keep patients in very often, in order to retain beds; she has known one kept in four weeks, and they have constantly said openly, when a patient was fit to be discharged,—“Wait until my week comes” [5119-5129]; that some honoraries allow violation of the rules, while others do not; that some patients are allowed to wear their own clothes, and insubordination is thus created [5163-5175]; that with regard to Mrs. Ross, there was no neglect on Dr. Jones's part [5181]; and that unnecessary operations are performed on Sunday [5247]. Mrs. Jessie Whytlaw has been inconvenienced by the medical men performing operations on Sunday [5403]; and knows two instances at present (3rd June), in her own ward, of patients who might have been out last week, but who have been kept in by the doctors [5413]. Mr. Russell states that during the week (3rd June) there were two surgical and two medical cases refused admission in consequence of there being no beds [5430]. Mr. Roberts says that he never knew of medical men keeping in patients in order to retain beds [5470]; and that medical men in England attend hospitals more punctually than they do here, but that the circumstances are different [5488]. Dr. Renwick says he only orders porter or wine for patients for seven days at a time [5512]; that violations of the rules with regard to smoking are too severely dealt with, but that frequent offenders should be discharged [5582-5585]; that the rule with regard to patients wearing their clothes ought to be enforced [5587]; and that there is no necessity for patients wearing their own clothes, as extra clothing is provided by the institution when required [5590]. Dr. Quaiffe complains that the committee disregard the suggestions of the medical staff, and treat them arbitrarily [5637-5639]. Dr. Fortescue says that the system on the surgical side tempts surgeons to keep patients in until they get others to supply their places [5743]; that it is notorious [5744]; that patients are unnecessarily retained in the hospital, to the exclusion of patients who ought to be admitted [5749]; that he is not a considerable offender, but “what is one to do?” that “a man who wishes to act fairly is at a great disadvantage, because he sends his patients out as fast as he can, and thus fills up every one else's beds” [5750]; that the rule preventing patients wearing their own clothes ought not to be violated; that permitted violations impair the discipline; that it is a difficult thing to enforce the rule with regard to smoking; and that one great cause of the defective discipline is the fact that a patient may be discharged for misconduct by one surgeon and re-admitted by another [5786-5791]; that it is sometimes expedient to perform operations on Sunday, when surgeons are not hampered by visitors [5794]; and that the medical staff are less punctual in their attendance than they are in England, but the circumstances are different [5799]. Mr. Raphael says that medical men prescribe wines and spirits extravagantly—sign orders for a month together—and give sometimes half-a-pint of brandy a day [5884-5885]; and that one medical man ordered spirits for a patient for 365 days [5890-5900]. Nurse Brannigan says that the rule prohibiting patients from wearing their own clothes is violated on the female side, and patients are difficult to manage, owing to the doctors allowing such violations [6273]; and that on the surgical side the doctors keep patients in until their week for admission. Mrs. Blundell states that, when she was connected with the Infirmary, medical officers frequently sent patients out prematurely, in order to make empty beds; and that Dr. McKay certainly never allowed patients to violate the rules [6926-6928]. Dr. Markey states that he cannot say whether surgeons kept in patients unnecessarily [7055]; and that surgeons wish to retain interesting cases for themselves [7089]. Dr. McKay states that he does not think that surgeons keep in patients in order to retain beds [7254]; denies having done such a thing himself [7260]; states that he is aware that patients wear their own clothes [7335]; that there are two patients of his now in hospital wearing their own clothes [7341]; that the nurse has complained of it [7345]; that he has allowed patients to violate the rule [7341]; that other medical men are very cruel if they don't allow it [7342]; that he has never represented its cruelty to the committee [7343]; that he does not care whether it violates a rule or not [7347]; that he does it medically [7348], and chiefly in the case of female patients [7349]; that he is aware of the rule against smoking; that he has had complaints about it; that it does good if the patients smoke in the lavatories; that he would not discharge a patient for smoking, but would put him on low diet [7350-7372]; that it is better to perform operations on a Sunday, in consequence of there being fewer strangers admitted [7307-7409].

Mr. Street says that there are two resident medical officers under the control of the committee [14]. Mr. Blackstone says that when an honorary medical officer discharges a patient, the resident medical officer endorses the card to the effect that either the man is well or incurable, as the case may be [400]; and that the resident medical officers are responsible for the dispensary, and check the purchase and issue of medicines [527]. Miss Osburn says that they have no power to admit or discharge patients [646]. Dr. Halket states that he resides on the premises, and has very meagre accommodation, having to share his sitting-room with the manager and resident physician [1532-1537]; that he was resident assistant surgeon in the hospital of Newcastle-upon-Tyne, in which there were 250 beds [1538]; that the dispensers are under the joint control of himself and the resident physician, but that he has no authority over them [1546-1550]; that he admits patients if the honorary surgeon does not arrive by 11 o'clock; but cannot discharge, except, for insubordination, or at the patient's own request [1594-1610]; and that if he did discharge for insubordination the honorary would probably reverse his decision [1626]. Dr. Gillman resides discharge patients, and that he sees men in the hospital who are in better health than himself [388, 397, 400, 455]. Miss Osburn states that the honorary medical officers admit patients immediately beds are vacant; that patients are often waiting to go into the beds before the convalescent patients go out [632]; that the honorary surgeons admit all their own patients, and often retain them in the hospital longer than is necessary, in order to keep the beds full until their own week for admitting comes round; that there were two patients ready to go out, but as no patient suitable for the ward applied for admittance, the surgeon kept them in until his week came round; that one surgeon has over half a ward, while the other three have only half between them; that a rule passed by the committee fixing the number of beds has not been kept [637-642]; that a rule that the manager can discharge patients who misbehave has not been carried out, as the doctors object; that however badly a patient behaves, nothing can be done until the honorary comes; that there are cases where patients have been discharged and re-admitted by the honoraries [643, 647, 650]; that some honorary medical officers permit patients to violate the rules, and thus render the inmates insubordinate [653]; that a nurse has reported a patient for smoking in the eye ward and nothing has been done [654]; that several cases of insubordination in the Magdalen ward were not noticed [657]; that there are two patients now in that ward wearing their own clothes, in violation of the rules [659]; that she thinks there is a rule enabling the Board to dismiss an honorary, but it is never acted upon [704]; that an honorary surgeon, in order to prevent other surgeons getting beds, will not discharge patients during his own admission week; that the honoraries continually perform operations on Sunday, to the disturbance of the hospital [982]; that they are most irregular in their attendance [985-991], but that it would be inexpedient to do away with them [987]. Dr. Halket states that the honoraries alone have authority to discharge patients, except for insubordination, or at their own request [1595]; that there were on the 19th May seven patients on the surgical side who ought to have been discharged [1596]; that he has been told of an honorary surgeon keeping patients in until his week came round [1608]; that complaints have been made to him of patients smoking in the wards, but that he did not discharge them, because the honoraries would have re-admitted them and stultified his discharge [1611-1615]; that for the same reason, he has not interfered to prevent the rules of the hospital being violated by patients wearing their own clothes [1626]; that the course pursued by the honoraries is likely to create insubordination [1621]; that the honoraries do not visit at any stated hour [1807]; that their performance of minor operations on Sunday does not create much inconvenience [1811]; that the doctors are not extravagant in ordering extras for the patients [1838]; that an honorary attends a patient from admission to discharge [1883]; that the abuse, as regards the blocking up of the beds, exists only in the surgical wards [1864]; that the honoraries attend to their patients pretty well [1911]; but that the nurses have complained of their coming at irregular hours, and that he himself has been inconvenienced by it [1916]. Dr. Gillman says that the honoraries admit patients, and alone have power to discharge, except for insubordination, or at the patient's own request [1681]; that the practice of the honoraries keeping in patients in order to obtain beds for themselves does not prevail on the medical side [1686]; and that, though he has seen champagne ordered for a patient once, he does not think the discretion of ordering extras is abused by the medical officers [1762-1771]. Mr. Hinvest says that the honorary staff are always in the hospital before 2 o'clock, but he has known one to come in as late as 6 or 7 o'clock at night [1966]. Mr. Josephson says that the honorary staff are considerably too independent, will not obey the directors, come when they like, go when they like, and do what they like; that he has known patients come by appointment at 11 or 12 and stop till 4, and no doctors have attended; that to obviate the necessity of seeing their patients frequently, they prescribe wine, beer, spirits, and everything else, for thirty days at a time; that they sign blank diet lists and let the nurses fill them up [2342]; that a Mrs. Ross (a patient) never saw a doctor for a whole week [2357]; that he has known a woman live on champagne for a week; that he has known diets to be ordered for a dead man; that Dr. McKay has ordered diets for thirty days without change [2374-2378-2379], and that the irregular attendance of the medical staff is prejudicial to the institution; that they come on Sundays, and sometimes at 6 o'clock at night [2386, 2387]. Mr. Paxton states that surgical operations are unnecessarily performed on Sundays [2751]; that so much stimulants are administered to patients in the Infirmary that they become confirmed drunkards when they are discharged [2754]; that no such case came under his own notice, but an officer of the institution says he has known many cases [2756], and that he is not aware whether the doctors prescribe more stimulants for patients in the Infirmary than for private patients outside [2767]. Dr. Schuette says that he does not remember that the honoraries allowed patients to violate rules when he was connected with the hospital [3136], and that he was inconvenienced by their irregular attendance [3201]. Mr. Bedford says that the rules do not compel the honorary surgeons to visit daily, though that has been their practice [3897]; that they are expected to attend before noon [3900], but that no positive rule on that matter could be laid down, as they are men in general practice [3901]; that one doctor has nothing to do with the treatment of another doctor's patient [3930]; that he is not aware of patients being kept longer in the hospital than they ought, in order to enable a surgeon to retain beds [3931]; that an honorary officer who did so would not be fit to be a doctor of the institution, and should be dealt with by the Board [3941, 3942]; that the attendance of the honorary staff is constant [4004]; that operations have been performed on a Sunday; that the convenience of medical officers should be consulted in such matters [4010-4013]; and that he does not consider that the honoraries have been extravagant in ordering diets or stimulants [4034]. Mrs. Isabella Ross states that she went into the Infirmary under Dr. Jones, and only saw him once while she was there; that she was there a fortnight before she saw him [4182]; and that Dr. Jones was ill part of the time [4215]. Mr. Stephen says that it never has come under his notice that honoraries allowed patients to violate the rules, but if there is a case the medical officer should be dismissed [4261-4264]; that the honoraries admit patients week and week about, and he does not know that surgeons keep patients in the hospital until their week for admitting comes round [4270]; and that the system of honorary medical officers is not a good one, as these gentlemen are subject to no control, and purposely disregard the wishes of the committee [4325, 4326]. Dr. Alleyne says he does not believe that the surgeons retain patients in the hospital until they get cases to fill their own beds [4453]; that the medical staff are more attentive here than in England; that they are generally regular—visit between 10 and 11; and that the nurses are not inconvenienced by their visiting at meal-times [4466-4470]. Mr. Senior states he has heard that medical men order a large resides on the premises, and makes the same complaint as Dr. Halkett with regard to the accommodation [1650-1654]; states that he was resident physician for fifteen months in the Melbourne Hospital [1656]; and gives the same evidence as Dr. Halkett as regards the dispensers [1676] and admission and discharge of patients [1681]. Mr. Hinvest, one of the dispensers, says that he takes his directions from the resident medical staff, and Mr. Park, chief dispenser, makes the same statement [2621], and adds that when a patient is discharged or dies, his bed ticket passes, he believes, into the custody of the resident medical officer [2730]. Mr. M. H. Stephen has never heard that the resident medical officers allow violations of the rules because their actions would otherwise be stultified by the honoraries [4267]. Dr. Markey, late house surgeon, states that he discharged patients whenever he thought proper [7047].

Mr. Street says that there are two dispensers who attend to the medicines and the making-up of prescriptions [12]; that the medicines are imported from England, and that it is difficult to estimate the cost of a prescription [178]. Mr. Blackstone says that the dispensers are under the control of the resident medical officers [302]; that the medical staff have complained of medicine not having been sent up to the patients, but that instances of neglect are rare [330]; that the resident medical officers check the purchase and distribution of medicines; and that it would be impossible to show, by keeping any book, how the medicine was consumed [527-536]. Miss Osburn has had great reason to find fault with the dispensing, and thinks it very irregular; she says that there is the greatest difficulty in getting the doctors' orders attended to; that sometimes blisters and lotions are not received for twenty-four hours after they are ordered; that the boys who carry the prescriptions to and from the dispensary are very careless; that the patients suffer because the nurses cannot get the necessary things; that she had supplies of lint, tow, linseed-meal, and cotton-wool in the wards, until the manager stopped it [770-780]; that the dispenser blames the boys [791]; that the nurses say their work is doubled by their having to run about after medicines, and that the medical men complain very much of the non-supply of medicines [844]. Dr. Halkett says he has often to complain of the delay in sending up medicines to the wards; that he never could find out the cause of the delay, which has extended sometimes to twelve or thirteen hours [1547, 1553]. Dr. Gillman says that on several occasions the medicines have not been sent up promptly; that some hours delay has taken place; that he attributes it to neglect [1661-1664]; that, as far as he can judge, the prescriptions are properly prepared [1700]; that each week the dispenser furnishes a list of such medicines as have been used, which list is signed by Dr. Halkett and himself, and sent to the house committee; that there is no check upon the issue of medicines, and that it would be exceedingly difficult to devise one [1787-1797]. Mr. Hinvest, assistant dispenser, says that he does not reside upon the premises, but commences work at 9 in the morning, and leaves off between 7 and 8 in the evening [1945-1950]; that he was never employed in a hospital before, or in any one's employment, but dispensed medicine just for pleasure in the Royal Infirmary of Edinburgh, where he was studying medicine [1955-1960]; that, as a rule, the medicines are in the wards every day by 3 o'clock [1970]; that they have had complaints about delay in sending up medicines [1971]; but that mistakes occur through the carelessness of the boys (who are much too young) and the nurses [1973]; that sometimes the boys take the medicines to the wrong wards [1977]; that no copy of prescriptions is kept in the dispensary, prescriptions being written on the labels of the bottles [1996]; that it is impossible to say at the end of a month how much medicine is consumed, but that they take stock [2004]; that there are forty or fifty prescriptions made up for out-door patients at the Infirmary and the dispensary in Regent-street, the patients supplying their own bottles [2018]; that the drugs for the dispensary at Regent-street are taken from the Infirmary as required [2021]; that there is a book to show what drugs are taken out of the store [2052]; and that there is no account of the medicines dispensed [2058]. Mr. Jones says that there is wine sent to the dispensary—two gallons at a time—by order of the manager [2194], and that the dispenser has charge of the medical stores [2273]. Mr. Josephson says there is no system at all in the dispensary [2328]; that it is as simple as A B C to take stock of the medicines [2371]; that they have plenty of time to keep a record of all medicines dispensed [2373]. Mr. Park, the principal dispenser, says that he does not reside upon the premises, but attends from 9 a.m. till 8 p.m., and is responsible to the resident medical officers; that he was dispenser to the Oddfellows a few years ago—has been employed in first-class establishments, and been in business on his own account, and has lived with medical men in England [2615-2625]; that the prescriptions are brought down to the dispensary by boys at all hours of the day, but the bulk of the medicine is in the wards before 3 [2626-2631]; that complaints have been made as to delays, and that medicines have been delayed even for twenty-four hours; that sometimes the cards are not sent down, and the dispensers are overworked, the dispensary having been short-handed for the last twelve months [2632-2638]; that in the present state of the Infirmary delays are inevitable [2639]; that one of the dispensers has to go to Redfern every day, and that 300 prescriptions are dispensed daily [2648-2653], there being as many as sixteen ingredients in some of the prescriptions [2665]; that it is impossible to do the indoor business before the outside work commences [2658]; that the present system of employing boys as messengers is very bad—the boys being very young, and not under his authority [2661-2675]; that the work is so hard that he is completely tired out at night, and there is no business requires such coolness, as a mistake might cause serious consequences [2677]; that the dispensary is too small and overcrowded, there being no space to store open drums, &c., no proper dispensing counter, and an insufficient supply of water [2683-2690]; that the drugs are imported from London, and stock taken every year, but that no one has ever inspected the stock, nor is there any check as to the consumption; that if he attends to the books, he must neglect the duty of dispensing; that it would take an extra staff of clerks to keep an account of the medicines consumed [2691-2715]; that the branch dispensary is much too small, badly ventilated, and crowded with sick people; that a rental of £1 per week is paid for it, and it is supplied with drugs from the Infirmary [2716-2727]. Mr. Paxton says that medicine-presses have been ordered for the wards, to prevent patients helping themselves to physic [2776]. Dr. Schuette said that he made some improvement in the arrangements of the dispensary, that in his time medicines were administered punctually, and delays and mistakes must arise from bad management [3137-3146]; that if the dispensers make up 200 prescriptions a day besides the out-door dispensing he is overworked, but would not be if the doctors were compelled to use a house pharmacopœia [3154]; that it would be difficult to keep a record of the prescriptions [3158]. Mr. Bedford says the dispensing is worse latterly than it used to be; that he cannot say whether the dispensers are overworked; that the boys make mistakes; that persons old enough to understand the duties should be employed [3171-3979]; and that he believes the dispensers to be competent men [4090]. Dr. Moon does not approve of the management of the branch dispensary; he says that it is too crowded, that there is no necessity for it; that that it is pauperizing the district in which it is established, and leads to a great amount of imposition [4118-4137, 4109]; that a young woman well able to pay for medicine got cod-liver oil for over twelve months free [4156]; and that a silversmith in York-street also imposed on the charity in the same way [4160]. Mr. Stephen says that there have been complaints about the delay of medicines, and he is not aware of the dispenser being overworked [4272] or of any defects in the branch dispensary, and if charity is abused there, he would sooner devise means to check the abuse than take the whole business to the Infirmary [4287-4289]. Dr. Alleyne has heard complaints as to delay in supplying medicines, but has suffered no personal inconvenience [4532]. Mr. Senior agrees that the dispensers are overworked, and thinks that unless the system of having formulas as in the London hospitals is pursued, more assistance will be required [4568-4571]; and that there is no means of taking stock, but the honesty of the dispensers must be relied upon [4574]. Miss Mary Barker says that there have often been delays of twelve and twenty-four hours in sending up medicine [4681]. Dr. Cox considers the whole of the dispensing bad in the extreme; says that he himself did the duty of dispenser for six months, and considers it one of the most awful duties he ever undertook; that the dispensary is defective, and the officers overworked [4985]; that it is desirable to have a branch dispensary, but he has known the charity to be imposed upon [5061]. Miss Gertrude Moule says it is very difficult to get medicines or anything else from the dispensary; ointments are sometimes kept in the dispensary for days; the draught, ordered for a patient at 11 o'clock has not come up until late in the afternoon, and that medicines often go to wrong wards [5202-5210]. Mr. Mansfield says that his plans of proposed alterations do not embrace any additions to the dispensary [5307]. Dr. Renwick considers the dispensers over-worked the prescriptions for in-patients and out-patients being more than two men can manage [5499, and Appendix K]. Dr. Quaiffé has known a delay of twenty-two hours in the supply of medicine to occur [5664]. Dr. Markey says that the branch dispensary is quite inadequate, that the charity is very much abused [6936-6939]; that the dispenser is overworked [6950]; and that there were in his time irregularities in sending medicines to the wards [6952]; that the branch dispensary patients come in frequently drunk, and are very impertinent [6975]. Dr. McKay says that there have been irregularities in sending up medicines, and that he has found the dispensary in a very dirty state [7283]. Mr. Park, in an Appendix to his evidence, states that there are five medical pupils who receive instruction from the dispenser; that the dispenser makes out all indents of medicines, &c., imported from England, prepares all the ordinary tinctures and other preparations, and that a regular hand to mouth system prevails [Appendix M].

Mr. Street states that he thought it rarely happened that the patients did not get the supplies ordered by the medical men [188]. Mr. Blackstone states that he never heard of medical comforts being supplied to patients after they were dead; that the cooking is done by a range, and that about 240 people are supplied every day [603, 606]; that the house steward sends him a return every night of what he wants for the diets [3854]; that he takes it for granted from the house steward that there are a certain number of people on full diet [3860]; that if a man chose to take away half-a-pound of sugar he could not detect it [3848]; that he believes the house steward to be a perfectly honest man [3850]; and that the loss by bone and cooking upon meat is so great that he always has to order double the quantity allowed to the patients [3866]. Miss Osburn states that the patients complain to her of their food [687]; that the cooking is very bad; that the food is sent up in a most wretched condition [688]; that the system of sending up the diets was altered at her suggestion, the sisters making out the lists of the diets required in the wards; that this system was afterwards changed, and now there are often two or three diets short, and occasionally diets supplied for patients for days after their death [690-694]; that she thinks the nurses should be responsible for the diets [801]; that the cooking arrangements are unsatisfactory, and the cooking is bad; that the doctors often complain of the non-improvement of patients, which is caused by the wretched preparation of the victuals supplied them [830-835]; that there is a nice stove in the kitchen, but the building is not so convenient as it might be [842]; that the potatoes of late have been shocking, and there have been many complaints about the milk and eggs [870]. Mr. Russell states that in Mrs. Ghost's time there were men cooks, who were entirely under her control [1362, 1363], and that he heard of disputes between the house steward and nurses about the diets [1508]. Dr. Halket says that he found that the patients' dietary-cards were not at the heads of the beds, where they ought to be, but at the house steward's, of which he did not approve, as they should always be in the wards, for the doctors to see; that he approves of the system introduced by Miss Osburn of the nurses making out the diets, and sending their lists to the house steward instead of the cards; that that system was in vogue when he came, but has since been altered [1570-1579]; that since the alteration patients have complained of not getting the food ordered them [1580]; that the diet is superior to that of most English hospitals [1647]; and that there has been no extravagance in ordering fowls, wine, champagne, and things of that kind [1838]. Dr. Gillman states that he thinks Miss Osburn's system of the nurses making up the diets the best [1668-1670]; that he is not aware of any instance of delay in sending up diets to the patients [1679]; that, as far as he had seen, the meals are pretty well cooked [1711]; and that he thinks the present dietary scale very large [1761]. Mr. Hinvest says that when the bed-cards are done with in the dispensary they are sent down to the house steward, in order that he may make out the diets [1994]. Mr. Jones says that the diet-cards are sent down to him; that he compiles from them the programmes of the daily meals [2092]; that the duty was marked out for him by the manager when he first came; that when the lady superintendent came a change was introduced, and the head nurses supplied the lists of the diets every day; that the latter system continued in operation for two years, when the old system was re-introduced [2112-2125]; that there is no superiority in the present plan over that which the lady superintendent introduced [2137]; that the old system was the best [2138]; that the one system is just as good as the other [2144]; that he is responsible if anything is wrong with the diets [2163]; that he gets orders from the medical men for the wine, &c., issued to the patients, and that he keeps the orders in monthly packets [2199-2213]; that on the whole his programme and the head nurse's summary would amount to the same thing, but the programme is more convenient for the cook [3262]; that the present system affords the best check on the nurses [3270]; that he thinks the other system would not be the best check on the house steward [3274]; that it would be a check to a certain extent [3278]; that there was some doubt about the nurses asking for more than was required [3281]; that on one occasion a nurse asked for three rice puddings less and two sago puddings more than were required [3285-3298]; that on one occasion the nurses ordered sixty-four rice puddings, and he by an error supplied sixty-five [3299-3313]; that he does not know of diets being short on any occasion; that he has heard no complaints, nor of of patients being dead for days and diets sent up to them ; that in one instance he did hear of more eggs than were necessary sent up ; and that he cannot see the advantage of the nurses making out the summary [3314-3339]. Mr. Josephson says he has known a woman to live on champagne for a week [2374] ; that he has known diets to be ordered for a dead man [2378] ; and that in one instance the doctors had ordered spirits for a dead man [2381] ; that he has heard few complaints about the cooking, but that the bread was sometimes said to be bad [2461] ; that the committee directed that the nurses should make out the diets and send them down to the kitchen, which directions Miss Osburn disobeyed [2528-2558]. Mr. Paxton says that patients leaving the institution become so used to the stimulants they have had given to them there that they become confirmed drunkards [2754] ; that no case of the kind has come under his own notice [2756] ; but that an officer of the institution assured him on his honor that he knew of many cases [2758-2772] ; that he has had complaints about the cooking, but has not seen any bad provisions [2900-2904]. John Bernauer says that Mr. Blackstone or the house steward are the only persons he gets any orders from relative to the cooking [3443-3451] ; that he has four sets of meals to cook per day [3474] ; that he cooks all extras with the exception of jellies [3483], and that no complaints have been made with regard to the cooking [3486]. Mr. Bedford states that going round the wards once a patient showed him what he got for a rice pudding, and it certainly could not be made from the quantity of rice the diet scale allowed ; that on inquiry he found there was an extraordinary difference between the amount of rice issued from the store and the amount which was cooked ; that if 40 lbs. of meat are required for a ward, there are 80 lbs. ordered from the butcher [3983-3986] ; that the former system of making out the diets was the best, and that he never heard of the cards being taken out of the wards in any other hospital [3999]. Mrs. Isabella Ross said that the food was so roughly got up that she could not eat it ; that the meat was boiled black, the potatoes bad, and the tea sloppy [4238-4251]. Mr. Stephen says there was some idea of the irregularities in the diets—the steward sometimes sending up too much and sometimes too little, and there was a proposition made that the nurses should keep diet-lists [4279] ; that a patient had been ordered champagne, and that according to the way patients were now treated, they must formerly have been treated very stingily [4333]. Dr. Alleyne says that the meals might be served better ; that he would not be surprised at a patient saying she could not eat the food ; that the food is pretty good, but badly served up ; that most of the cases sent into the institution are benefited by a liberal diet [4404-4411] ; that the diets were at one time made up from the lists furnished by the sisters, but that the system has been changed, and the bed-cards taken from the wards [4540] ; and that men do not acquire drinking habits owing to the doctors allowing them spirits [4552]. Miss Mary Barker says she has observed irregularities in the sending up of the diets lately ; sometimes too much is sent up, sometimes too little, extras are often missing, diets are sent up for days for patients who have been discharged ; sometimes there are two or three diets short ; sometimes she would send down three or four extra loaves, which had been sent up for patients who had been discharged, and these loaves would come again the next day just the same ; and that the system by which the nurses made up the diets was much better than the present system [4671-4679] ; that she is, generally speaking, satisfied with the cooking, though there have been complaints about arrowroot and things of that sort ; that the meat has been under-done, but sent up hot [4756-4758]. Mrs. Bland says that it is in the sending up of the extras that most of the irregularities occur [4807] ; that she is in favour of the sisters sending down the diet lists, as it is inconvenient sending the cards out of the wards [4874] ; that under that system there were fewer complaints about the diets being sent up wrongly ; that under the present system she has heard of diets being sent up for weeks after patients had gone out [4876] ; that the cooking of the patients' ordinary diets is pretty good, but that extras are not nice [4893]. Dr. Cox says that it is the duty of the sisters to make out the returns of diets wanted for the wards, and that the change made by the committee was undesirable [5000]. Miss Moule says that the lady superintendent's system of making up the diet lists was the best ; that there could not be greater confusion than there is now in the diets ; that the patients do not get what is ordered for them ; that too much is sent up sometimes, causing great waste ; that she has known one dish to come up for three months after the patient for whom it was ordered had gone out ; that sometimes if an egg were ordered the patient would not get it for several days ; that she knew a doctor to order a chop for six days, and the patient never got it at all ; that the irregularities are a source of constant worry, and there was no use reporting it ; that there was one dish that came up for three weeks that was never ordered at all ; that the milk is very much wasted, and she has two pints over every day at tea-time ; that the former system was much more economical than the present one, and that it was done away with simply as an insult to the nurses [5132-5141] ; that under the former system the nurses could order for patients whatever they could eat from day to day [5144] ; that there was no waste under it [5145] ; that lately there were, on one occasion, eleven loaves short in one ward [5154] ; that there is a great waste of bread [5161], and that there is not much care bestowed on the cooking of delicacies for patients who are very ill [5264]. Mrs. Whytlaw says that there are great irregularities in sending up the diets ; that if a diet is put on, it is not sent up for a day or two, and if taken off, it will continue to come up perhaps for a week ; that the former system was the best, as there were fewer irregularities then ; that there was no waste caused then by the sisters, but on the contrary, waste was prevented by their ordering only what the patients could eat ; that the system was discontinued principally to annoy the head nurses [5377-5386] ; that they sent up so many more eggs to the south wing than were required, that she made a collection of them [5394] ; and that the whole loaves, she believes, sent back to the kitchen are used to make bread puddings [5402]. Dr. Renwick says it often happens that the food is badly cooked, and that he has known patients absolutely refuse the food brought to them [5515]. Dr. QuaiFFE says that the cook is in the habit of frying steaks and chops, instead of grilling them, and that medical men regard all frying as bad [5636]. Dr. McLaurin thinks the system of diets very expensive [5690], and that the cooking is not good [5692]. Mr. Raphael says that wines and spirits are used in a very extravagant way [5885]. Nurse Ann Brannigan says that there have been irregularities in the diets, and that they were short in some things and had more of others than they wanted [6253-6255]. Mrs. Blundell said that when she was in the Infirmary the food was well cooked, but some things were not right [6728, 6864]. Dr. McKay says that there is no ground for saying that patients are so accustomed to stimulants while in the Infirmary that they become confirmed drunkards when they leave it [7387].

Mr. Blackstone states that the clothes of patients suffering from all kinds of diseases are put into the clothes-house without being washed, and may remain in that condition for twelve months, clothes with vermin in them being kept in a separate place [886-896]. Miss Osburn says that the care of the patients, private clothes has been taken out of her hands [7508], but that the nurses often wash them [7510] ; that she she has been told of the dirty state in which clothes go out, has represented the matter to the committee, who ordered that they should be washed, and that the order has never been carried out [7511-7519]; that clothes in a bloody and dirty state are often put on patients going out, that she has represented it to the committee and obtained authority to send the clothes to the laundress, but that it was never done [7508-7520]. Henry Harris states that part of his duty is to take charge of the clothes-house [1042]; that on the arrival of a patient, his clothes are made up into a bundle and taken to the clothes-house, where they remain until he goes out; if able, the patient may air or wash them, but otherwise they remain untouched [1099-1107]; that the clothes are put all together, no matter what diseases the patients may be suffering from, and remain there without being washed or fumigated until the patients go out or die; that clothes of deceased patients remain in the clothes-house unwashed for years, unless claimed by relations or friends, in which case they are given out unwashed; that the unwashed clothes of deceased patients are given away in charity [1181]; that if a man came in suffering from venereal disease, and was too ill or lazy to wash his own clothes, he would put them on unwashed when he was discharged [1158-1182]; that the clothes of patients swarming with vermin are tied up in bundles and placed in a shed at the back, and are not put into the clothes-room [1517-1521]; that the shed in question is simply the basement of the southern wing [2277]; that, to the best of his knowledge, there are no vermin on the clothes placed in the clothes-house [2290]; that verminous clothes remain in that state in the shed, unless called for by the patients [2293]; that the clothes that are very verminous are destroyed [2291]; that a patient going out might have vermin on him if he put on verminous clothes without cleaning them [2296]; that in accident cases, where the clothes are covered with blood, they are put into the clothes-house unwashed, and may remain in the same state for months, unless the patient cleans them himself [2306, 2307]; that the clothes belonging to dead men, if verminous, are destroyed [2309]; and that he believes the dead men's clothes now in the clothes-house are not verminous [2318]. Mr. Russell states that he believes that clothes are stored in a building in the state in which they are received, and kept there until the patients go out [1372]; that he is not aware there are any conveniences for washing on the premises [1378]; that he knows of instances where clothes were taken from the clothes-house and burnt, but only when they were full of vermin [1406-1409]; that he knows that clothes of dead men are generally given away [1486]; that if they were in too bad a state they were not given away but kept in the clothes-house, and that some now there have been in the clothes-house for over two years [1487-1491]. Mr. Josephson states that he never heard of clothes covered with blood being kept unwashed until the owner left, and then restored to him in that state [2599]. Mr. Paxton states that he knows nothing of the state of the clothes, or how they are kept [2978-2984]. Dr. Schuette states that the clothes of patients are kept for months in the clothes-house without being washed, and are given out in the same state in which they are brought in [3177, 3178]; that he had noticed that the clothes were almost carried away by lice [3179]; that he had seen vermin on the patients' clothes [3185]; and that in hospitals on the Continent, clothes of in-coming patients are placed in disinfecting ovens, which destroy either vermin or infection [3231]. Mr. Bedford says that he does not know how the clothes are kept, but thinks they should be washed and put away decently [3980-3981]. Mr. Stephen says that he was under the impression that patients' clothes were taken from them on their admission and fumigated [4372]; that the clothes used to be cleaned, but that the subject had not been brought under the notice of the committee for some time [4374]; that he does not know that verminous clothes are kept in the basement below the south wing [4376]; that the clothes of patients who die are often given away in charity; and that he had seen bundles of clothes packed up and put by after being washed and fumigated; but of late years had not heard anything about the matter [4378]. Mrs. Bland states that the clothes of patients on their admission are sent to a little store [4838], and that they are often burned when too bad to be given back [4841]. Mr. G. A. Mansfield states that at present there is no clothes-house provided for in his plans [5333].

Patients.—
Admission and
ordination;
admitted or detained; com-

Mr. Street says that there are many patients admitted who might be treated at some cheaper institution; that patients might be discharged more rapidly than they usually are [64-72]; that the institution is for pauper patients, and a subscriber of two guineas is entitled to have one patient admitted per year; that as many Government as subscribers' patients are refused admission for want of room [111-119]; that there is room for 228 patients in the Infirmary; that a large number of out-patients are attended by paid medical officers [135]; and that the Government sends a large number of patients, and thus induce a feeling of pauperism [218]. Mr. Blackstone says that there are patients admitted who might be treated in a less expensive establishment [314]; that patients are well treated, having nothing to complain of, and seem to be well satisfied on the whole, though he has had complaints [315-327]; that there is a rule against a patient remaining more than six weeks in the hospital [371]; that men are kept in the hospital sometimes because the authorities in the Benevolent Asylums won't receive them [387]; that there are patients in the hospital in a good deal better health than he is himself [397]; that about one out of every five patients are refused for want of room [448]; that the medical staff do not know by whom applicants are recommended, but admit solely on the merits of the case [455], and that urgent cases have priority [459]. Miss Osburn says that some patients insist on wearing their own clothing, against the rules [657]; that incurable cases are admitted, and there is great difficulty in getting rid of them [663]; that the patients complain about the food [687]; that there was a case of a woman in the surgical ward who said she could afford to pay a medical man outside, but was promised all sorts of things if she would come in [851]. Mrs. Bland says that accidents are never turned away, that there is great difficulty in getting convalescent patients out of the accident ward, as there is no convalescent ward [744]; that surgical cases are often admitted in to the accident ward [751], and that there are a great many loafers in the hospital [756]. Henry Harris says that patients by permission of the manager wash their own private clothes when they are able to do so, [1107-1117]; and that patients are often admitted swarming with vermin [1516]. Dr. Halket says that on the 13th May there were seven cases in the Infirmary that were not hospital cases [1596], and that there is no way of excluding these persons, as the Infirmary is the only place where a sick person can be taken to [1627]; that orders for the admission of Government patients are issued in any quantity to respectable householders [1837], that a great many accident cases are caused by drunkenness [1899]; that great inconvenience is caused by the indiscriminate admission of visitors to patients [7964]. Dr. Gillman does not think that there are more than six cases on the medical side which ought not to be in the hospital [1748], and that no patient suffering from acute rheumatism has complained of the manner in which the nurses treated them [1782]. Mr. Josephson says that there are patients here who should have been out long ago; that under no circumstances, according to the rules, should a patient remain in more than two months; and that patients never complained to him about the nurses [2563-2565]. Mr. Paxton gives two instances of complaints by patients, and says it is not hard to get complaints from them. [2780, 2850], but that it is dangerous to receive their complaints [2864]. Mr. Pearce says that advantage is often taken of the system by which persons can recommend applicants to the Government for admission; that it tends to increase the number of patients, to diminish the subscriptions and increase pauperism; that he traces many difficulties to the recommendations by clergymen, who, he thinks, should not be allowed to recommend people [3004-3012], that the patients were not well cared for, and complained loudly of the vermin [3054]. Dr. Schuette says that some people are kept in the hospital unnecessarily and other people kept out [3129]; that there are many patients in the Infirmary who could be as well treated in cheaper institutions [3135]; and that patients frequently complained of partiality, but he did not know whether their complaints were well founded [3233]; Mr. Bedford says that people broken down from old age and infirmity should not be retained in the hospital, and that there are a large number of patients in the Infirmary who should not be there [3907-3910]; that in the case of Government patients the Colonial Secretary trusts to the persons recommending them, and that the system has a tendency to promote pauperism [3914]. Dr. Moon says that out-patients obtain his professional services by presenting a slip signed by a subscriber [4104]; that there is no guarantee that these persons are in necessitous circumstances, and that the charity of the institution has been imposed upon very much [4107, 4123, 4161]. Mr. Stephen says the natural tendency of the system by which Government patients are admitted is to keep down the number of subscribers; that any one can send recommendations, and the orders are given as a matter of course; that a short time ago a patient was admitted as a pauper who was found to have £300 on him [4254-4257]; and that any person can give orders on the Colonial Secretary to any extent [4286]. Dr. Alleyne says that in one or two cases patients have complained to him that nurses were unkind, but without any real cause [4386]; that there are a good many patients who should not be in the hospital at all, and would be much better in some country institution [4387]; that no patient ever complained to him about the bugs [4450]; and that ineligible patients are admitted daily [4462, 4525], and a large number by the Government [4472]. Dr. Cox says that as long as the Colonial Secretary gives admissions on demand the public will not subscribe [5064]; that many persons get in who are mere malingerers and unworthy of treatment [5078]; and that a convalescent hospital is urgently wanted, as chronic cases are difficult to get rid of, and exclude urgent cases from the Infirmary [5079]. Miss Gertrude Moule says that patients favoured by the doctors are insubordinate, and patients kept in order are much more satisfied [5174]. Mr. Russell says that from 1st to 31st May there were nineteen patients refused admission from want of room, eight of whom were afterwards admitted; that on the 1st June last there were in the Infirmary 142 Government and eighty-two other patients, and that during 1872 there were 1057 Government and 770 other patients admitted [5431]. Mr. Roberts says there are on an average fifty patients in the Infirmary who could be treated in Liverpool at one-third of the expense [5445, 6551]; that the present system leads to a kind of favouritism in the admission of patients [5465]; that the institution is imposed upon by persons who should pay, but get in under a Colonial Secretary's order [5478]; that one clergyman boasted of having given away 300 orders in the year; and that he knew of two cases of persons going in as paupers, each with more than £100 in his pocket [5481]. Dr. Renwick says, that if he finds persons in his ward who ought to be removed to Liverpool, he discharges them [5493]; that he has had complaints from patients about the nurses, but on investigation he found them groundless; that they object to discipline, and sometimes combine together to misrepresent the conduct of the nurses [5580, 5581]. Dr. Milford has known a score of men who have lost their lives through not being able to get into a hospital where they could be properly attended to [5627]. Dr. Quaiffe has had complaints from patients about the nurses, but not one that could be substantiated [5676]. Dr. Fortescue says that the hospital suffers by men being kept in who might be discharged; that there are many cases which would do better in the Liverpool Asylum, and that patients here are much less under control than men in English hospitals [5755-5758]. Mr. Raphael says that patients have complained to him that they felt themselves neglected [5875]; and that it is a well known fact that certain medical men keep out certain patients and take in others [5903]. Nurse Brannigan gives an instance of a patient who complained to Mr. Paxton, and was very impertinent and troublesome [6260-6263]. Dr. Markey says that there were very often patients kept in the hospital who might be discharged [7056], and that there are a number of cases which might as well be in the Liverpool Asylum; that there are many patients who spend their time between the Infirmary and Darlinghurst Gaol, and that the greatest ruffians get in on the clergymen's orders [7106-7110]. Dr. McKay gives an instance of cruelty of a nurse who put a child under a cold-water tap for punishment [7297]; and says that a woman named Alice Brown said she was glad to get out, as she was bullied and made to scrub [7303].

FINANCIAL ARRANGEMENTS.

Mr. Street states that, in round numbers, the revenue of the institution is £11,000 a year, £9,000 of which is paid by the Government, who subscribe an amount equal to that subscribed by the public—something over £2,000 [109]—and pay for patients, sent in on Colonial Secretary's order, at the rate of 2s. 3d. per day [216]; that the Government simply pay in proportion to the number of patients they send [213]; that a few patients pay for themselves, but that the amount received from this source is not more than £300 a year [209]; that patients cost from £40 to £45 a year each [135], and that subscribers of two guineas are entitled to have one patient per year admitted [114]. Mr. Blackstone says that the increase in the number of beds in the hospital has not increased the expense much; that the salaries come to about the same amount as they did formerly, though the number of attendants is nearly doubled, the only difference being in the consumption of food [521-524]; and that the average yearly expenditure for wines and spirits is not more than £350, while the milk is over £600 a year [584]. Miss Osburn says that the sisters begin at £20 a year; the second year they get £40, and should have an increase each year of £10 up to £70, but are actually paid at the rate of £60; that the nurses get £20 the first year, and £25 the second, and so on up to £36 [1023]; and that her own salary is £250 a year, with board and residence [866]; that there was no extravagance in the diets, and that champagne had been properly ordered for a patient in one case [7555]; that in the last report the only thing she was praised for was the economical management of the Nightingale Wing, the cost per head in 1872 being only £13 0s. 8d., including everything but coal [7556-7561]; that a purchasing committee has been appointed who buy goods goods at high prices and of bad quality [7584]; that Mr. Paxton bought material for pillow-cases (much too narrow for the purpose) at 2s. 6d. per yard, while she bought proper material at 1s. [7585]; that she bought serge retail for 1s. 9d., while the committee bought the same stuff wholesale for 2s. [7586]; and that the committee bought £26 worth of floor cloths, which were quite useless [7589]. Mr. Russell, clerk and collector, says that the subscriptions have increased since he became collector, and amount now to about £2,300, subscribed by 700 or 800 people [1388]; that more than one-half the patients pay nothing, very nearly two-thirds being paid for by the Government; that there are not more than two or three paying patients in a month, the amount received from them last year being only £123 5s. 2d.; that many patients recommended by clergymen have been found to possess £400, £500, and £600, and have been made to pay for their treatment at the rate of two guineas per week; that sailors pay 4s. a day while their ship is in harbour; that the Government pay for their patients 2s. 3d. per day [1414-1438]; that the average number of Government patients throughout the year are three daily; that the Government pays for patients nearly £6,000 a year, between £400 and £500 a year towards the salaries of the nursing staff, and an equal amount is raised by public subscription [1445-1450]; that there is a manager, at £300 a year; two resident medical officers, at £250 each; himself, £225; house-steward, £120; 1st dispenser, £120; 2nd dispenser, £100; two wardsmen, at £50 each; gate-keeper, at £60; yardsman, at £30; two bathmen, at £45 each; two cooks,—one at £70, and the other at £40; night-watchman, at £60; two boys, at £12 each; four head nurses, at £40 each; eight nurses, at £30; nine nurses, at £26; seven probationers, at £20; four general servants, at £26; house-keeper, at £40; needlewoman, £30 [1454-1461]; that the district surgeons are paid £50 a year, each one of them getting £15 a year for boat fares [1462]; and that he does not think that any more subscriptions would be obtained if a person were employed to canvass from house to house [1478]. Dr. Gillman does not think that the expenditure for wine is large [1772]. Mr. Paxton says that there are fourteen gallons of brandy used per month in the Infirmary, exclusive of wines and beer [2755], and complains of the Board buying novels for the patients to read [2934]. Mr. Pearce thinks that the system of admission by Government orders diminishes the subscriptions [3012]. Dr. Cox considers the contributions to the country hospitals much larger proportionately than the contributions to the Infirmary, and that St. Vincent's Hospital is more freely subscribed to by the public [5066]; he says that the patients cost very much less in St. Vincent's than in the Infirmary [5076]; that the contributions are much below the mark, and that subscribers sometimes withdraw their subscriptions because they cannot get a patient into the hospital [5082]. Mr. Roberts says that the entire expense of the Infirmary is £46 per bed, and, comparing it with the cost of English hospitals, states the cost per bed in the Cancer Hospital is £123 per bed; Hospital for Sick Children, £53; Consumption Hospital, Brompton, £53; Lock Hospital £33; London Fever Hospital, £38; Royal London Ophthalmic Hospital, £44; Birmingham General Hospital, £46; Birmingham Queen's Hospital, £43; Bradford Infirmary, £56; Brighton Sussex County Hospital, £58; Bristol General Hospital, £38; Charing Cross Hospital, £59; Guy's, £47; King's College, £59; London, £58; Middlesex, £62; St. Bartholomew's, £58; St. George's, £56; St. Mary's, £57; University College, £77; Westminster, £39; Seamen's Hospital "Dreadnought," £55 [5445]; that the subscriptions to the Sydney Infirmary are small in comparison to the population, and would be increased if the hospital were thrown open to all cases needing treatment [5462]. Dr. Milford says that in 1871 the cost per bed in the Infirmary was £46 4s. 5d., and in St. Vincent's, £19; that in 1872 the cost in the Infirmary was £44 14s. per bed, and in St. Vincent's, £21; and he accounts for the difference by the nursing staff of St. Vincent's not being paid, there being no resident medical officers there, and the medicines being dispensed gratis [5610-5616]. Mr. Raphael believes that the superfluities and extravagances of the Nightingale wing are equal to a third of what the patients cost; that there is a great waste in food [5827]; that the amount of extravagance, chiefly in the use of wines and spirits, has been very culpable [5840]; and that the thirty-four nurses consume one-fourth as much as the patients [5984].

House steward's books; want of sufficient check on the consumption of stores.

Mr. Street says that the manager keeps the cash account of the institution, and pays the money into the Bank of New South Wales; that he checks the books weekly [186]; that there are contracts for nearly all provisions, and the supplies are checked by the house steward, who has charge of the stores, and whose books will show the actual consumption [168]; and that the resident medical officers are responsible for the drugs, and issues them to the dispensers [180]. Miss Osburn says that there is no check on the house steward that she knows of with regard to the diets [695]. Mr. Russell says that he keeps all the books of the establishment, except the petty cash book, the store book, requisition book, order book, and inventory book, which are kept by the manager [1341]; that stock is taken once a year by the manager, house steward, lady superintendent, and dispensers, in their several departments, but that the stock-taking is never checked as far as he knows, and the committee might be at a considerable loss without their being aware of it [1493-1501]; and that the medical men's orders are a check on the diets issued by the house steward [1506]. Dr. Halket believes that if the sisters made out the diet lists there would be a check on the house steward [1582]. Dr. Gillman is not aware of there being any check on the receipt and issue of drugs [1790], but does not think there would be any difficulty in checking the consumption of wines and spirits [1801]. Mr. Hinvest says that the consumption of medicine could not be shown, but that there has been stock taken in the dispensary [2005]. Mr. Jones says that he receives and issues all provisions [2077], and that he is guided in his issues by his programmes [2083], which are compiled from the patients' cards [2092]; that he keeps a lot of stock books showing the stores received and issued daily [2165-2185]; that he does not keep an inventory [2196]; that wines, &c., are supplied to the patients by order of the medical men, whose orders he keeps [2205-2214]; that he takes stock yearly, but his accounts are not checked by any one; that the manager might find out an error in his absence [2216-2235]; that he cannot see how any one could make away with the stores, because the manager has a check upon him [2252]; that the house steward might possibly send away goods in a baker's cart, but would be found out in a short time by the manager [2258]; but that if the manager and house steward acted in collusion there would be no check upon them [2263]; that the present mode of making out the diets is the best check upon the nurses [3270]; that the making out of diet lists by the nurses would be a check upon the house steward to a certain extent [3278]; that if any one came and asked why he sent up twenty full diets on a particular day, he would show as his authority copies made by himself of the patients' diet cards [3355]; that if he were asked his authority for issuing 3 lbs. tea on the 1st May, he would produce the doctor's orders, and the cards from the patients' beds [3375]; that he could not do that without a deal of trouble [3396]; that he shows the amount of brandy brandy issued by the doctor's orders [3406]; that the manager keeps the wines and spirits specially, and he draws from the manager such quantities as he requires [3407-3419]; that he keeps about twenty-two books, all stock books [3557]; that there is no ledger at all [3577]; that if he wants to find how much brandy has been consumed, he has to go through every book to find it out [3590]; that the expenditure of brandy is not checked in any way [3594]; that no one ever examines the stock [3611]; that a man might possibly put down brandy for forty or fifty people when in reality it was only given out to six [3620]; that if a man were inclined, he could not debit the institution with twice as much brandy as was given [3622]; that he has laid returns three or four times before the committee since he has been in the institution [3629]; that it would be impossible for him to say what spirits have been consumed in the Nightingale wing [3650]; that the wine, &c., is entered in a book kept by the manager [3654]; that if he made a mistake in his books no one would find it out [3666]; that his books have been laid before the committee on several occasions [3687]; that he does not supply the wine to any of the officers of the institution, their wine not being in the store; that they get their wine from the wine merchant, and he has nothing whatever to do with it [3692-3705]; that the manager keeps the invoices of goods received; and that he has no money transactions at all [3729-3738]. Mr. Josephson has little fault to find with the storekeeper [2342], and considers that stock could be easily taken of the medicines [2371]. Mr. Park says that he takes stock of the drugs once a year, but is too busy to keep books properly; that no one inspects the stock, and that there is no check on the consumption [2694-2699]. John Bernauer states that he weighs the breakfast meat, and receives the bill, and that the steward relies upon him [3506-3510]. Mr. Blackstone says that he countersigns for everything that comes out of the stores [294]; that he and the house steward take the tally every day of what goes out and what comes in, and therefore no medical comforts could go into the wards for more than a day unchecked [382]; that there is no check upon the issue of medicines, but that he checks the receipt and issue of stores [529-541]; that the wines, beer, and spirits, are partly under his charge and partly under the house steward's, upon whom he keeps a check; that the medical officers' orders are the vouchers for the issue of medical comforts; that the house steward supplies the wines and spirits to the Nightingale Wing on the order of Miss Osburn [3776-3811]; that he does not give any order for the wine supplied to himself, but draws it from the house steward, six bottles at a time [3812-3821-3827]; that the house steward cannot take any wines or spirits from the bulk without referring to him [3847], and sends him a return every night of what is required for the diets [3854], but that he takes it for granted from the house steward there are a certain number on full diet and that there is a certain quantity required [3860]; that there is no general stock account, and that there has never been any valuation of the stock or furniture [6237-6240]; that he keeps all moneys found upon patients in separate packets in a safe in his office [7465]; that when a patient dies he hands his money over to the treasurer [7469]; and that the plan of paying the money into the bank did not answer [7503]. Mr. Bedford says that he drew the attention of the committee to the extraordinary difference between the amount of rice issued from the store and the amount sent up to the patients as cooked, and that he did so specially with regard to its effect on the accounts and expenditure [3983]. Mr. Senior is of opinion that to a large extent the honesty of persons employed in the dispensary must be relied upon [4575]. Mr. Raphael speaks of the excessive waste, and blames the directors for not having a proper supervision over the expenditure [5895]; believes the present storekeeper to be efficient; does not know whether stock is taken or not; has no knowledge as to how the books are kept, and expects the secretaries to go through them [6031-6037]. Mr. James C. Taylor, accountant (appointed to investigate the books), reports that there is no check on the storekeeper's accounts, that his books are altogether too numerous, that there could be no check on the dispenser's department, and that the plan on which the office books are kept is unsatisfactory. [Special Appendix.]

SUGGESTIONS FOR IMPROVING THE EXTERNAL AND INTERNAL MANAGEMENT.

All the witnesses who gave evidence as to the expediency of reducing the number of directors are—with one exception—of opinion that the Board is too large; that the Government should have a voice in the management; and that clergymen should be excluded from the directory. Mr. Street says that an unsuccessful attempt was made to reduce the number of directors to twelve; that he believes the Board at present to be too large, the consequence being that time is wasted in frivolous discussions and personal disputes; that he is in favour of creating a directory of twelve members, with a working committee of not more than five; that the Government should have a voice in the management; that clergymen should be excluded from the Board [46-59]; that the presence of clergymen at the meetings tends to excite feelings which should be avoided, and that unseemly discussions have sometimes arisen between clergymen themselves [96-149]; and that the smaller the number of the directors the better the Board would work, for at present there is so much frivolous discussion on personal matters that members leave in disgust and no business is done [103]. Miss Osburn says that the Board is very unwieldy—so large that it is difficult to get the same members together at consecutive meetings, and thus matters explained at one meeting would have to be re-explained at another; that there has been a great deal of personal altercation; that most of the things she has brought before the Board have been referred to committees that never sat, or otherwise shelved [622, 668, 684]; that their power is used spasmodically, and there is no sustained action; and that the number of members should be reduced [700-704]. Mr. Josephson states that a Board of five members would be sufficient, two of that number being representatives of the Government [2400-2404]; that the mismanagement of the institution is attributable to the directors; that the mode of referring matters to sub-committees is unwise; and that life directors should be done away with [2388-2397, 2562]. Mr. Paxton says that the directory is too large, and that the working of the institution is shirked from one shoulder to another, the result being that things are left undone [2746, 2747]; that clergymen should be excluded from all Boards, as they create dissension [2914]; and that sub-committees are of use, as they divide the work a good deal [2986]. Mr. S. H. Pearce declines to give any opinion as to the expediency of reducing the Board [2993]; thinks that the Government should appoint a certain number of directors to act with those appointed by the subscribers [2997]; and says that clergymen should not be on any of these Boards if he could prevent it [2998]; Dr. Schuette states that the managing body is too large, and has a roundabout way of doing business [3118]. Mr. M. H. Stephen is decidedly of opinion that the Board is too large. He states that time is wasted in useless and wearying discussions, and that matters which come before one set of members at one meeting, will have to be considered by an entirely different set of members at the next meeting; that sub-committees have sometimes done good service, but that it is difficult to get them together that the Government should have a voice in the management; and that he cannot give any opinion as to whether clergymen should be excluded from the Board, though on the whole he would prefer their being shut out [3871-3875]. Mr. Raphael is not in favour of reducing the size of the Board, as the house committee do the work. He says that there has been for months an attendance of only four members of the committee, and that there is not much time wasted by the indulgence of the members' propensity for talking [5969-5972]. Mr. Bedford says that from its large size the Board is unable to do executive work, and that he does not see any great impropriety in the Government being represented upon it [3947, 3948]. Dr. Alleyne thinks that Boards are bad machinery for managing anything, and that when a Board consists of a great many members it is useless; that the Infirmary Board should be reduced to five, or even three members, and that two at least of those members should be appointed by the Government [4474]. He also says that there is a great deal of conversation at the meetings which has no bearing upon the management of the institution [4426]. Dr. Cox considers that the governing body is much larger than is necessary, and states that he has seen useful movements set on foot at one meeting and rescinded at the next, owing to different sets of members attending; that time has been wasted, and much ill feeling exhibited; that the committee is divided against itself; that there are too many church matters mixed up with the affairs of the institution; and that, with every respect for clergymen of all denominations, he thinks the Board should be composed of laymen [4919-4924]. Mr. Alfred Roberts says the Board if reduced would work much better, and that the decisions come to at one Board meeting are sometimes reversed, and that the reversion has in some cases been again reversed; that he does not approve of clergymen being on the Board [5472]; that the directors should consist of five, or not more than seven members, and that subscribers (including the Government) should be represented in proportion to their subscriptions; and he explains that, even if he were in favour of admitting clerics to seats on the Board, it would be impossible to admit them to so small a body without creating jealousy among the various religious denominations [6422]. Dr. Renwick says that all Boards are too large, and that a Board of five members would be sufficient to manage the Infirmary; that the Government should have representatives in the directory, who would probably hold their seats while the other members appointed by the subscribers might be frequently changed [5525, and Appendix K]. Dr. McLaurin is in favour of a reduction in the size of the Board of Management [5695]; and Dr. Markey says that there is no occasion to have so many directors [7073].

medical superintendent; medical officers; lady
superintendent,
&c., &c.

Mr. Street is in favour of appointing a paid secretary [43-193], and the whole of the internal arrangements being left to the lady superintendent [45]. Miss Osburn quotes the opinion of Miss Nightingale, to the effect that the charge of financial matters and general supervision should be vested in an officer who should be responsible to the Board, and that the whole of the responsibility for the internal management, discipline and training, &c., should be vested in the female head of the nursing staff [678, and Appendix A]; she proposes that the power of admitting and generally discharging patients should rest with the resident medical officers [645]; that the Board should be supreme, and their power final in all cases [703]; that the dispensary boys should be more under her control [775]; that the dispenser should be under the control of the resident physician [789]; that the cooking should be under her control [837, 867]; that the beds should be equally divided amongst the doctors on the surgical side [848]; that everything that men have to do with the patients should be under her direction [872]; that the head nurses should be called "sisters" [883]; and that the doctors should attend regularly, and not on Sundays [985]. Mr. Russell thinks that, independently of collecting the subscriptions, he could take charge of the stores and do all the manager has to do [1403-1437-1481]. Dr. Halket recommends that the medicines be sent up three hours after the orders go down [1555]; that the power to suspend the dispensers should be invested in somebody [1560], say the resident medical officer [1564]; that it would be better if the resident medical officer had the power of admitting and discharging patients [1805]; and that the lady superintendent should have the engagement and dismissal of nurses [1821]; that surgical cases should be kept separate from medical cases [1863]; that an equal number of beds should be assigned to each doctor [1867]; and that there should be three or four empty beds in the accident ward [1887]. Dr. Gillman does not see the necessity of the resident physician having the power of discharging patients [1688]. Mr. Josephson would abolish life directors [2397]; put all the men under the manager's control [2430]; the cooking under Miss Osburn [2460]; give the honorary medical staff the power to engage nurses [2474-2500], except when there was a proper training staff, when the staff should examine applicants for the position of nurse [2485], and make the lady superintendent see the wards cleaned [2570]. Mr. Paxton considers that one master-mind, responsible to the directors, would prove a great advantage [2749], and that there should be a matron under the master-mind [2814]; also, that the matron should be a genial, motherly old lady, and that the nurses should be persons of riper years [2788]; and that the duties of manager and superintendent should be properly defined [2897]; he would vest the entire management and general supervision in one officer [2920], and thinks the manager should reside on the premises [2976]. Mr. Pearce recommends the appointment, at a good salary, of a resident medical officer, who should be responsible for everything [3014-3018]. Dr. Schuette says that the manager should report to the Board after a patient has been in a certain time [3130], and that the manager should be a medical man [3193]. Mr. Stephen generally agrees with the recommendations of Miss Nightingale [3881]; is in favour of the appointment of a paid secretary [3890]; would make the decision of the Board final [4266]; thinks that no patient discharged should be readmitted without special reference to the managing body [4268]; believes that the system of honorary medical officers is not a good one, and that it would be better to have a highly paid medical officer of ability rather than depend on the honoraries [4325]. Mr. Bedford thinks that the lady superintendent should have choice of the nursing staff; and full control over the nurses, and generally agrees with Miss Nightingale's recommendations, but thinks that the lady superintendent should be more under the control of the honorary medical officers; that the manager should have more to do with the duties of secretary [3953-3964]; that the manager should be restricted to external matters, store matters, &c., [3990]; that the cooking should be under the lady superintendent's control, as well as all matters relative to nursing [3988]; and that it was a great pity to do away with the title of "sister" [3996]. Dr. Alleyne is in favour of abolishing the honorary secretaries, appointing a paid secretary, to have the general supervision of the institution, and giving to the lady superintendent the entire control of the nursing and internal arrangements, and the engaging, but not the discharging, of nurses [4478-4489]; he thinks it desirable that the head nurses should be called "sisters" [4510]. Dr. Cox recommends the the abolition of the office of manager, and the appointment of a medical man as superintendent, to whom Miss Osburn should be responsible [4928], and who should have one or more medical men under him as assistants [4938]; that if such a medical man could not be obtained, the institution should be governed by Miss Osburn and a steward, under a smaller committee [4953]; that the duration of the appointment of honorary medical officers should be limited to eight or twelve years [4983]; that a medical superintendent should have the power of admitting patients but not discharging, and that the decision of the Board should be final [5019]. Miss Moule cannot see how the medical staff could engage nurses, as it takes some weeks to form an opinion as to a person's capabilities [5255-5259]. Mr. Roberts advocates the establishment of self-supporting dispensaries [5447], and that the hospital should be thrown open to all who need medical aid and who are unable to pay for it [5464]; that the honorary staff should form a Medical Board to advise the directors on purely professional questions [6433]; that the beds should be equally divided amongst the surgeons [6451]; that the hospital should be managed either by a responsible manager or the chief medical officer [6455]; that the cooking should be under the management of the house steward [6467]; that complaints about bad cooking should be reported to the lady superintendent, and by her to the manager [6470]; that the lady superintendent should be supreme in her department, yet should not have the engaging or discharging of nurses, but that the Board should act on her recommendation [6474]; that the lady superintendent should communicate to the Board through the manager [6476]; that full confidence should be placed in the lady superintendent, and she should be left to manage her own department without any unnecessary interference [6494]; he agrees with Miss Nightingale's recommendations [6554]. Dr. Renwick recommends the appointment of a medical superintendent, and would make the district visiting surgeons and physicians the associates of the honorary medical staff, thus connecting them more closely with the hospital (Appendix K); he recommends that the cooking and whole management should be placed under the superintendent [5519]; but that the lady superintendent should be supreme in her own department [5521]; and he thinks that the Nightingale system, though good in theory, is defective in practice [5534]. Dr. QuaiFFE thinks that the honorary medical staff should have a little more power in the management [5635]. Dr. McLaurin advocates the appointment of a house governor, who should have a seat at the Board, reside on the premises, and have the general management of the hospital [5695]. Dr. Fortescue recommends the equal division of the beds on the surgical side; investing the house surgeon with the responsibility of admitting patients [5746]; the appointment of a business man rather than a medical man as manager of the hospital [5766]; the distribution of beds throughout the various wards instead of giving separate wards to each doctor [5782], and the election of medical officers every three years [5805]; he agrees with Miss Nightingale's recommendations as to hospital management [5809]. Mr. Raphael thinks that the honorary medical staff should be done away with, and that two paid medical officers should be appointed,—one to be superintendent and physician, and the other to be surgeon and assistant superintendent [5825]; that patients should be admitted by the directory, members of which should meet once or twice a week for that purpose [5827, 5903]; he thinks, however, that the honorary medical staff should have the right of going into the institution for the purpose of improving themselves, but only on sufferance [5986]. Dr. Markey recommends that there should be a monthly consultation of the medical staff as to the discharge of patients [7061], and is not in favour of a medical man as manager [7067]. Dr. Pattieson recommends that the out surgeons should be made assistant honorary medical officers, should receive no pay, should be elected by the subscribers and be afterwards promoted to the position of honorary medical officers upon vacancies occurring in the medical staff—the promotion to fall to persons selected by the staff [7657-7663]; he also suggests that out-patients suffering from gonorrhoea or syphilis should be made to pay [7676]; that out-patients should keep their prescriptions and hand them in to the dispenser with their bottles each time they went for medicine [7667]; that the resident medical officers should admit patients [7704]; and that though he is not in favour of discontinuing the issue of orders by the Government, he thinks the hospital should be thrown open to all who need medical treatment [7701].

ABSTRACT OF EVIDENCE.

I.—THE PRESENT BUILDING.

The evidence with regard to the present Infirmary building is condensed under the following heads:—

(1.) THE SITE.—Though the site of the Infirmary is said to be in many respects admirable, still the evidence of all the witnesses who have expressed opinions on the subject is adverse to its retention (except for a small casualty hospital), and in favour of the erection of a large general hospital upon the ground now occupied by the Victoria Barracks.¹ Some think that the Government should resume the land in Macquarie-street, upon which, as Dr. Fortescue states, “it is impossible to build a large modern hospital.”² The Flagstaff Hill and the heights of Pymont are spoken of as being desirable sites for a small casualty hospital.³

² Fortescue, 5734, 5822; Raphael, 5852.

(2.) THE SANATORY CONDITION.—It is stated to be impossible to keep the walls of the present building free from disease. Not only is the place infected with “hospitalism,” but there is no proper ventilation, and for some time there was “not a single case of wound which was not attacked with erysipelas.”⁴ The bad influence of the building upon certain diseases is very perceptible. Some affections of the eye cannot be cured there at all; and patients under treatment have been frequently attacked by erysipelas, pneumonia, and bronchitis, brought on by the unwholesomeness of the place.⁵ There are unpleasant smells from the sewers and lavatories, the bed area is too small, and the ventilation of the south wing is obstructed by a dead wall.⁶ Two witnesses speak of the dormitory accommodation as being fair, but one of them finds fault with the construction of the windows in both the main building and the south wing.⁷

(3.) STATE OF REPAIR.—“The hospital,” says Mr. Bedford, “was condemned some time ago.” It is very old, and has never been properly repaired. It requires new wall-facing, a new roof, and new floors. The walls are old, and the plaster falls away. The operating-room is damp, inadequate, and, is described as “a horrible place.” One witness states that any attempt to remodel the Infirmary would be like an effort to “mend a garment that was quite worn out”; another says that it has been allowed to fall into a “ruinous and scandalous state”; and a third is of opinion that “nothing can be done with it.”⁸

(4.) DRAINAGE.—Four witnesses state that the drainage is bad. The water from the Mint flows into a pit which is situated close to the south wing, and a sewer passes beneath the wards.⁹ One gentleman states that the building is properly drained,¹⁰ and another is of opinion that, standing on the crest of a hill, it possesses sufficient natural drainage.¹¹

(5.) WATER SUPPLY.—The water is cut off from the establishment daily between the hours of 3 and 6 p.m.; and there being no tanks on the premises, there is no water at all to be had during that time. If a patient were dying for a warm bath he could not have one. The nurses are unable to cleanse the most necessary things, and sometimes have not the means of performing their personal ablutions. Out-patients coming in with injured heads, and having their wounds dressed in the receiving-room, have sometimes to go away with the blood unwashed from their faces.¹²

(6.) THE DEAD-HOUSE.—The Mortuary, or as one witness calls it “the dirty stable full of rats, which answers the purpose of a dead-house”—is in a disgraceful state. It is infested with rats, and those animals have sometimes mutilated the bodies placed there.¹³ The building now stands in the north-eastern corner near the Nightingale wing,—a position which several witnesses consider unsuitable for it.¹⁴ One gentleman, however, advocates the erection of a new mortuary upon the site of the old one.¹⁵

- (7.) THE COOK-HOUSE.—The kitchen appears to be well situated, but in bad repair, and ill-provided with cooking appliances. Of the two stoves which it contains, one is cracked and almost useless, while the other, originally intended to cook for fifty people, is made to perform that function for 250.¹ The rain pours down into one portion of the kitchen; the witnesses agree in condemning the place; and one says that the sooner it is pulled down the better.²
- (8.) OFFICERS' QUARTERS.—The resident medical officers have very scant accommodation, for they have but one sitting-room, and that they have to share with the manager.³
- (9.) DEFICIENCIES GENERALLY.—The whole of the back premises are in a condition that is discreditable to the management; the grounds being shamefully neglected, and the out-buildings much dilapidated.⁴ The urinals used by the out-patients are filthy and defective, and incessant complaints have been made as to the state of the water-closets and lavatories.⁵ There are no water-tanks or contrivances for conveying water to the wards.⁶ There is not sufficient bath-room accommodation.⁷ The receiving-room is defective, and unprovided with proper appliances; the operating-room damp and inadequate; the supply of instruments insufficient; and there is no chair for carrying helpless patients.⁸ The dispensary is small, and is not fitted up properly, the whole of the arrangements being very defective.⁹ The hospital is not large enough for the requirements of the city.¹⁰
- (10.) PROPOSED ALTERATIONS.—Plans of alterations and additions to the Infirmary, prepared by Mr. G. A. Mansfield, the architect of the institution, have been approved by the Board. They include the building of a new front, new kitchen (with appliances for cooking by steam), two new wards, nurses' rooms, and ward for contagious cases, new mortuary and dissecting-room, operating-theatre, &c.—the remodelling of the lavatories, and arrangements for supplying hot and cold water to the upper wards. The estimated cost of the new buildings is £15,452; and of the repairs to the old building alone, £3,325.¹¹ Suggestions are made by various witnesses as to the erection of wooden huts for contagious cases—the building of ovens for disinfecting patients' clothes—cooking and washing by steam—the constructing of a row of buildings to face the Domain—and the removal of some of the soil from the back yard.¹² Miss Osburn is opposed to washing on the premises, and Dr. Fortescue disapproves of Mr. Mansfield's plans.¹³

II.—THE BOARD OF MANAGEMENT.

A considerable amount of evidence has been taken with reference to the constitution, powers, and general efficiency of the managing body, and the facts elicited may be grouped as under:—

- (1.) CONSTITUTION.—The Board consists of a president, vice-presidents, two honorary secretaries, an honorary treasurer, and twenty-one members—in all, twenty-seven persons. With the exception of certain life directors, who gain their position by services or large donations, the members of the Board are elected annually by the subscribers. Subordinate to this managing body, but possessed of very large executive powers, there is a house committee of twelve members. The general directory meets once a month, the house committee once a week; and there are two house visitors selected weekly from the house committee, who are supposed to inspect and report upon the Infirmary very frequently.¹⁴
- (2.) DEFECTS IN CONSTITUTION.—The number of directors is said to be needlessly large, and the waste of time in frivolous discussions and personal altercations at the Board meetings proportionately great. The result is that members do not attend consecutive meetings, that there is no sustained action, that the work is shirked from one shoulder to another, another, that useful motions passed at one meeting are shelved at the next, and that important matters are neglected. The presence of clergymen at the Board meetings is considered objectionable, as it creates dissension; and the Government, who contribute fully three-fourths of the funds of the institution, have no voice in the management.¹ One witness thinks that the Board is not too large, and says that the members do not waste time in discussions.²

- (3.) NEGLECT OF DUTIES.—It is asserted that, though repeated representations of the verminous state of the wards were made to individual members of the committee, and in written reports laid before the meetings, nothing was done to remedy the evil.³ Some witnesses, however, state that this matter never was reported to the committee.⁴ There is a great deal of evidence as to their neglect in not providing water-tanks, in failing to supply the dispensary with proper appliances, in not checking the issue of drugs and stores, in not attending to requisitions and reports respecting the condition of the surgical instruments, and the care of patients in private clothes, and in ignoring altogether the suggestions of the district medical officers.⁵
- (4.) INTERFERENCES IN THE DETAILS OF MANAGEMENT.—Individual members of the committee appear to have interfered a good deal between the lady superintendent and the nurses, and instances of this interference are quoted. Nurses have been encouraged to resist Miss Osburn, and when dismissed,—or having given notice of their intention to leave,—have been requested to remain, by certain directors. Several witnesses are of opinion that there has been a great deal too much of this officious interference with the subordinates, and that it has tended to subvert the discipline of the establishment. It is alleged that some members of the committee have scolded the nurses in the presence of the patients.⁶ Complaint is also made as to interferences with the honorary medical staff.⁷
- (5.) REDUCTION OF THE BOARD.—All the witnesses who have given evidence on this point—with the exception of Mr. Raphael—are in favour of reducing the number of directors.⁸
- (6.) EXCLUSION OF CLERGYMEN.—There is almost unanimity among the witnesses as to the expediency of excluding clergymen from the directory. It is said that their presence at the meetings tends to excite bitter feelings and create dissension.⁹
- (7.) GOVERNMENT TO BE REPRESENTED.—It is generally thought that the Government, who contribute largely to the funds of the institution, should have a voice in the management, and should nominate two or more members of the Board.¹⁰

III.—THE MANAGER.

- (1.) APPOINTMENT.—The office of manager is stated to have been created for the purpose of providing with a situation the gentleman who now occupies the position.¹¹ Mr. Blackstone was appointed manager about six and a half years ago.¹²
- (2.) DUTIES.—The manager has the general superintendence of the Infirmary, but is not authorized to interfere with the nursing department. He does not reside upon the premises; he keeps certain books, receives and answers the inquiries of applicants for admission, has the custody of patients' money, the charge of all stores, and the engagement and control of male servants; he should report complaints as to want of water and other deficiencies to the Board; he receives requisitions, and orders daily the food required for the patients' consumption. One witness considers him to be the superior of even the resident medical staff. At one time he had to supervise the cleansing of the wards, but that duty was taken from him in March last.¹³

(3.) CHARGES.—It is alleged that the manager is jealous of the lady superintendent, and that his jealousy has been exhibited very frequently. He suddenly and without notice had the gas-stoves removed from the wards; he tore up an order given by the lady superintendent for the issue of a patient's clothes from the clothes-house; he complained, in 1870, to Mr. Manning, of the lady superintendent's attempting to clean the walls; he repudiated the lady superintendent's right to give orders to the male servants; he stopped the sending of supplies of linseed, &c., to the wards; he interferes in the wards; and the various acts of insubordination and neglect of duty on the part of the servants about the place are ascribed to his influence.¹

(4.) QUALIFICATIONS.—The duties of the manager are not of such a kind as to require any special qualifications on the part of the person who performs them. The present manager is said to have had no previous experience in the superintendence of public institutions.² Three witnesses state that he is unfit for his position; but Dr. Markey and Mr. Josephson are of opinion that he is competent.³

(5.) SUGGESTIONS.—Opinions are much divided upon the question as to whether the general superintendence of the hospital should be vested in a paid secretary, a medical superintendent, or a house governor. Miss Nightingale's recommendations upon the point are generally agreed in; but while some witnesses think that there should be a medical superintendent placed in charge of the institution, others prefer that a non-professional gentleman should have the position. Those who take the latter view urge as a chief objection to the engagement of a medical superintendent the necessity of paying a very high salary in order to secure a competent man. One witness recommends the appointment of a house governor, who should have a seat at the Board; another suggests that there should be a physician in the position of medical superintendent, and a surgeon to act as assistant-superintendent.⁴

IV.—THE LADY SUPERINTENDENT.

(1.) APPOINTMENT.—Miss Osburn was appointed to her present position in December, 1867. She, with four subordinates, was sent out to the Colony by Miss Nightingale (or rather by the Committee of the Nightingale Fund), in response to an application from Mr. Parkes, the then Colonial Secretary, who was induced to send to England for a nursing staff, in consequence of certain disclosures which took place respecting the nursing system of the Infirmary, notably in connection with the case of a patient named David Gibson.⁵

⁵ Halloran, 7875; Osburn, 611; Street, 120.

(2.) DUTIES.—The lady superintendent is supposed to have the sole control of the nursing staff, and to be responsible for the cleanliness of the wards, the efficiency of the nursing, and for the internal management generally. It appears, however, that the responsibility has never been very clearly defined, and that until last March she was not charged with the duty of cleaning the wards. The training of nurses was laid down as an important part of her duty, but the committee seem to have discouraged her efforts in that direction.⁶

(3.) CHARGES.—It is asserted that the lady superintendent "never handles the patients"; that "she does nothing in the place"; that she has "never examined the nurses"; that nurses who left the institution because they "would not toady to her," could "teach her her duty over and over again"; that she "does nothing but receive visitors and go visiting," and has been away from the establishment for days and weeks without giving any account of her absence; that she has been permitted to spend hundreds of pounds, and is "fondled" by the directors, who are "frightened to say a word against anything she does"; that to nurses who left the place she gave characters only on compulsion; that she is unfit to train nurses; that she ordered without authority certain wooden boxes to hold dirt and refuse; that she rules the establishment, "twists the directors about like shuttlecocks," "treats the house committee like dogs," and is not "worth her salt."¹ It is also stated that she fails to take an interest in the institution, her absence from the institution being regarded by the officers as quite a common occurrence.² Tyrannical assumptions of power (as exemplified in her treatment of certain nurses, and the alleged "hounding out of the place" of a wardman named Whitney, who "would not bow his head" to her), are attributed to her. She is charged, by one witness, with having usurped authority, with having sold clothing to the nurses on her own account, with having favoured Roman Catholics and neglected the patients.³ Other persons condemn certain portions of the lady superintendent's conduct, but are less sweeping in their censure. Some of the doctors consider that she changes her nurses from ward to ward too frequently.⁴ Mr. Roberts makes this complaint, blames Miss Osburn for having assumed the title of "lady superior," and expresses doubt as to whether her "character of mind" is quite suited to her calling. He censures her for declining on one occasion to allow a nurse to attend a child on whom an operation had been performed, for not insisting upon the sisters going round the wards with the doctors, for not getting the operating-theatre ready for the surgeons, and for general untidiness in allowing clothes, &c., to lie about.⁵ Dr. McKay considers Miss Osburn domineering and incompetent, and Mrs. Blundell accuses her of partiality and of interfering too much with the sisters.⁶

- (4.) ANSWERS TO CHARGES.—All the medical gentlemen who were examined on the point (with the exception of Dr. McKay—and even he admits the goodness of the nursing) state that the lady superintendent is competent, zealous, attentive to her duties, and takes a great interest in the institution. There is other evidence to the same effect. All the head nurses agree in stating that Miss Osburn is neither unjust nor arbitrary; is very attentive to her duties; visits the wards three times a day, and sometimes oftener, being frequently there in the morning before the day nurses are at their posts; has never been absent from the institution without leave; has done all in her power to keep down the vermin; and that there is the greatest harmony among the nurses generally.⁷ The whole of the nurses corroborate this latter assertion.⁸ From the statements of Miss Osburn herself, it appears that she has had singularly good opportunities of perfecting her knowledge of nursing, having studied in King's College Hospital, St. Thomas's Hospital, the Kaisersworth Hospital at Dusseldorf, the Allgemeine Kraukenhaus at Vienna, and other Continental institutions. She went to King's College Hospital specially to study in the maternity wards, and was instructed by Mr. Barnes and the late Mr. Solly. At St. Thomas's, the surgeons knowing the position she was destined to fill here, always sent for her when operations were performed, put her close to the operator, and pointed out important matters to her. She visits the wards three, four, and more times, a day; was never absent from the institution without leave; never refused to give a nurse a character; never ordered dust-boxes or anything else without authority (this statement is proved by her report book), but has, in response to requests, and at loss and inconvenience to herself, purchased materials for nurses' dresses; she took the title "lady superior" (after consultation with Messrs. Manning and Stephen) because the present manager was then styled "superintendent," and because of the unpleasantness caused by the similarity of the two officers' titles; and she resumed the designation of lady superintendent as soon as Mr. Blackstone was styled "manager," and without being asked to do so; she was specially told that the cleaning of the wards was the manager's duty, and was only desired to take it into her own hands last March; she

she has several times (as shown by her report book—and in this she is corroborated by other witnesses) represented the verminous state of the wards to the committee. The wardsman Whitney was discharged by the committee for insulting a nurse, and general incompetency. There are in the Nightingale Wing twenty-four Protestants and only four Roman Catholics. The changes of nurses from ward to ward is rendered necessary by the exigencies of the training system. The same thing is done in St. Thomas's Hospital. Miss Osburn did refuse to allow a day nurse to sit up at night with a child upon whom an operation had been performed—such a thing would be opposed to the rules, and she herself was once reprimanded at St. Thomas's Hospital for merely offering to sit up and do night duty; she has felt the "clothes, &c., lying about" to be a great eye-sore, and agrees with Mr. Roberts that it is wrong but says there is no place in which to put such things; she has always been most particular in insisting that the sisters and nurses shall go round the wards with the doctors; and has always done her best to get the operating-theatre ready for the surgeons, but very seldom knew (except by guess) when it would be needed; she has a home and income of her own, and came out here not from necessity but because she liked the work of nursing; she has consulted Miss Nightingale upon almost every part of her arrangements; has not the slightest reason to believe that Miss Nightingale blames her for any unpleasantness that has occurred, and would, if she did think so, return to England at once.¹ The title "lady superior" is used even in Lutheran and Evangelical hospitals in England.² Mr. Roberts says that he knows of "no one in the Colony more fit for the position" that Miss Osburn holds.³

(5.) QUALIFICATIONS.—With few exceptions, the witnesses express themselves in terms of eulogy with regard to Miss Osburn's talents and competency. She has had a very complete training, and, according to Miss Nightingale, is full of energy, and a clever nurse. Of an ambitious, but self-sacrificing nature, she devotes herself to the interests of the institution.⁴

(6.) SUGGESTIONS.—There are numerous opinions in favour of giving the lady superintendent, or head of the nursing staff, the full control of the internal management, the supervision of the cooking, and the power of engaging and dismissing nurses.⁵ The duties appertaining to the office should be more clearly defined than they are now.⁶ One witness thinks the lady superintendent should be more under the control of the hon. medical staff,⁷ and some persons are opposed to her having the power of engaging and discharging nurses.⁸

V.—THE NURSING SYSTEM.

(1.) QUALITY OF THE NURSING.—The system of nursing introduced and carried out by Miss Osburn gives very general satisfaction. It is regarded on all sides as being a great improvement upon the old system which was in vogue at the Infirmary.⁹ Three witnesses—Messrs. Josephson, Pearce, and Raphael—consider that the nursing at the present is inefficient.¹⁰

(2.) OBJECTIONS.—Five witnesses state that many of the nurses are too young, and four of those five object to female nurses being employed in male wards.¹¹ The greater portion of the evidence is, however, opposed to these views,—one witness going so far as to say that he "cannot understand how any other system than that of female nursing can be carried on."¹² Exception is taken to the frequent changing of nurses from ward to ward, and (by one witness only) to the mode in which probationers are admitted.¹³

- (3.) CHARGES.—Miss Nightingale is stated to have expressed disappointment at the “results attained by the nursing staff sent to Sydney,” and to have described them as a “near approach to failure”; but no reasons for these assertions are given.¹ The nurses are accused of “flirting with each other,” but by one person only.² One witness says there are too many nurses employed.³ In some cases nurses appear to have been guilty of neglect.⁴ Dr. Fortescue speaks of a want of discipline in some of the wards.⁵
- (4.) SUGGESTIONS.—It is considered expedient to have a nursing system founded upon the principles of the Nightingale Fund—which principles are laid down in a pamphlet which will be found in the Appendix.⁶ The efficiency of the system is weakened by the personal interference of the directors with the nurses.⁷ There is not a sufficient staff of sisters.⁸ Mr. Roberts thinks that the nurses should sleep in the wards, but Miss Osburn doubts the desirability of such a change, and points out, moreover, that it could not be carried out here.⁹ Some witnesses think that wardsmen should be employed for male wards; others, that there should be a porter to assist in the wards when needed.¹⁰

VI.—THE TITLE OF “SISTER.”

- (1.) ORIGIN.—The Hospital of St. Thomas was endowed by King Edward the Sixth, and since his time the head nurses have always been called “Sisters.” There is in the hospital now, printed in black letter, and more than two centuries old, a set of rules for the guidance of the “ward sisters” and nurses.¹¹
- (2.) UNIVERSALITY.—The title of “Sister” is used in almost all the English Hospitals, and has been commonly applied to head nurses for many years. It is also in vogue in the hospitals of Germany.¹²
- (3.) SUITABILITY.—The abolition of the title was a very undesirable change. It is necessary that the head nurses should have some good distinctive designation; and this one was of advantage, not only as enabling the officers to exercise a more complete control over the nurses and patients, but because it gave to the position a certain dignity and respectability which induced educated persons to become candidates for it. It has no religious signification. Instances of evils caused by the change of title are given.¹³
- (4.) OBJECTIONS.—None.

VII.—THE DIVISION OF AUTHORITY.

- (1.) ORIGIN.—There is a very evident clashing of authority between the manager and the lady superintendent, which appears to have arisen from the non-definition of each officer's duties, and a species of petty jealousy which has been abundantly manifested.¹⁴
- (2.) EVIL EFFECTS.—There is no proper control over the servants of the institution, no clearly defined responsibility, and a disposition on the part of the subordinates to consider themselves as the employés of individual officers rather than of the institution. Numerous instances are cited in which men-servants have refused to obey the lady superintendent's orders, because those orders did not come from the manager. The clashing of authority has also led to the adoption of a bad system of supplying diets to the patients, and to the stoppage of supplies of linseed, tow, &c., to the surgical wards. The nursing system generally is detrimentally affected by it.¹⁵ Mr. Blackstone denies two of the allegations made with reference to this matter.¹⁶

VIII.—THE DIETS.

(1.) THE DIETARY SCALE.—There are five diets, distinguished as (1), full; (2), house; (3), simple; (4), low; (5), milk. The No. 2, or house diet, is the one most commonly in use, and it consists of, for breakfast, 6 oz. bread, $\frac{1}{2}$ oz. butter, 16 oz. tea; for dinner, 6 oz. meat, and 6 oz. of vegetables on five days of the week, with 16 oz. soup and 10 oz. bread pudding on the other two, and 4 oz. bread daily; for supper, 6 oz. bread, $\frac{1}{2}$ oz. butter, 16 oz. tea. The full diet allows meat for breakfast, and a little more bread, meat, and vegetables, for dinner. The simple diet is a decreased allowance of these articles. The low diet is nothing but bread and tea. The milk diet substitutes milk for tea. With the first three diets no extras can be ordered; but with the last two the doctors may give any extras they please.¹

(2.) SYSTEM OF SUPPLY.—The house steward receives daily the cards upon which alterations of the diets are ordered, and from these cards he compiles lists of the diets required, which lists are handed to the cook, together with the articles of food required for the day's consumption. The meat is sent up into the wards in joints, which are carved by the head nurses.² The lady superintendent introduced a system by which the head nurses made out diet lists for their several wards, the house steward supplying what was ordered on those lists. This was a far superior plan to the present one.³

(3.) IRREGULARITIES.—Owing to the defects in the present system of making up the diet lists, all kinds of irregularities occur. Diets are sent to wrong wards. Sometimes too many, sometimes too few, are supplied. A ward has been left without any bread at all. A dish never ordered for any one was sent into a ward for three weeks continuously. Diets are constantly being provided for patients who have left the hospital. A chop ordered daily for six days was never sent up once. One of the head nurses made quite a collection of eggs that were supplied in excess of the proper quantity, and another has a quart of milk to spare every evening. The waste is said to be very great.⁴ Three witnesses question whether these irregularities have occurred.⁵

(4.) EXTRAVAGANCES.—The manager orders from the butcher double the quantity of meat allowed to the patients. Thus, if the aggregated diets amount to 100 lbs. of meat, 200 lbs. are ordered. The allowance for bone and loss in cooking is 100 per cent.⁶ Complaint is made of certain extravagances on the part of the doctors in ordering extras, but the allegations are denied.⁷

(5.) QUALITY.—Much exception is taken to the quality and the method of serving up the food; the meat being sometimes boiled black, the tea sloppy, and the potatoes bad.⁸ Some witnesses, however, say that the provisions are good, but carelessly prepared.⁹ Dr. Halket considers the diet superior to that of most English hospitals.¹⁰

(6.) COOKING.—The cook-house being in a very defective state and ill supplied with appliances, the cooking is not very good. Extras and such delicacies as are needed for enfeebled patients are not so carefully prepared as they might be.¹¹

IX.—THE HOUSE STEWARD.

(1.) DUTIES.—The house steward, or storekeeper, has charge of all the provisions and other stores, except clothing. He compiles the diet-lists from the patients' bed-cards, issues the provisions to the cook, makes requisitions to the manager for what stores are required, receives and takes account of the goods that are sent in from time to time, and issues the wines, spirits, &c., to the patients, in obedience to the doctor's orders. He takes stock once a year, and sometimes submits statements to the committee.¹²

- (2.) SYSTEM OF ACCOUNTS.—The house steward keeps a great many stock-books—more than twenty—which might easily be condensed into two or three. His books are never examined, and the whole system is very unsatisfactory.
- (3.) ISSUE OF STORES UNCHECKED.—There is no check whatever upon the issue of stores by the house steward, who sends up diets, or withholds them, in accordance with lists made out by himself, from the patients' bed-cards. These lists remain in the house steward's custody, and are not inspected or verified by any one.
- (4.) WINES AND SPIRITS.—There is great confusion in the wines and spirits account. The liquor, though actually in the house steward's store, is supposed to be in the custody of the manager. No account whatever is kept of the wine issued to the manager and resident medical officers; and, though that wine is kept in the house steward's store, and issued by him to the officers six bottles at a time, he denies all knowledge of it.

X.—THE DISPENSARY.

- (1.) THE DISPENSERS.—There are two dispensers, who have to do the whole work of the department, making up prescriptions for both inmates of the Infirmary and for out-door patients. One of them has also to attend a branch dispensary at some distance from the Infirmary, for two hours every afternoon. The dispensers are very much overworked.⁴
- (2.) DEFICIENCIES.—The dispensary is small, inconvenient, and unprovided with necessary conveniences. There is no proper messenger to convey medicines to the wards and bring down the prescriptions, small weakly boys of ten or twelve years old (ex-patients) performing that duty.⁵
- (3.) PRESCRIPTIONS.—No record of the prescriptions dispensed is kept. The prescriptions are written upon the patients' bed-cards, which bed-cards are brought down to the dispensers, who copy off the prescriptions, which they affix to the bottles containing the medicines. Some of them contain sixteen ingredients; and chlorodyne is said to be used, rather than a cheaper and equally efficacious a substitute. The medicines are properly dispensed.⁶
- (4.) ERRORS AND DELAYS.—Many mistakes are made in sending the medicines up to the wards. Physic is sent to wrong wards very frequently. Delays are also common; blisters and lotions are sometimes not received in the wards for twenty-four hours after they are ordered; and there is great difficulty in getting the doctor's orders promptly executed.⁷
- (5.) ISSUE OF DRUGS UNCHECKED.—There are no means of checking the issue of the medicines, and it seems to be impossible to devise any. The drugs are imported, and stock is taken once a year.⁸
- (6.) SUGGESTIONS.—The dispensary should be remodelled, and properly fitted up; there should be an additional dispenser; and a pharmacopœia—such as is adopted in all the London hospitals—should be compiled.⁹

XI.—THE OUT-DOOR DISPENSING.

- (1.) BRANCH DISPENSARY.—There is a Branch Dispensary in Regent-street, Redfern, for the supply of medicines to out-patients. It is a small and inconvenient place, not fitted for the purpose for which it is used. It is furnished with drugs from the Infirmary; and the dispensing is done by one or other of the Infirmary dispensers, who visit the Branch every afternoon.¹⁰

- (2.) OUT-PATIENTS.—A very large number of persons are supplied with medical attendance and medicines, free of charge. Some attend at the Infirmary, and at the Branch Dispensary; others are visited at their own homes. None of these persons pay any fee to the institution. There are six district surgeons who attend these patients, and are paid £50 a year each.¹
- (3.) ABUSES.—The defects in the system of out-door relief lead to very great abuses, and the Charity is much imposed upon. People who are in a position to pay for medical advice and medicines receive both at the expense of the public. The Branch Dispensary, which is said to be “pauperizing the district” in which it is established, seems to be particularly open to imposition.²
- (4.) SUGGESTIONS.—Some of the evidence recommends the abolition of the Branch Dispensary, but the greater part of it favours the continuance of the establishment, and the adoption of means to check abuses. It is considered to be a convenience to the public. Some limit should be placed on the issue of out-patients’ orders, and the arrangements of the Branch Dispensary require improvement. Mr. Roberts suggests the establishment of self-supporting dispensaries; and Dr. Pattison thinks that patients suffering from certain diseases should be made to pay a small fee; also that the prescriptions should remain in the custody of the patients.³

XII.—VERMIN IN THE WARDS.

- (1.) CONDITION IN FORMER YEARS.—The Infirmary has been for many years past infested with vermin. There is evidence that it was so thirty-five years ago; and Drs. Cox and Milford describe the verminous condition of the wards in 1849 and 1850.⁴
- (2.) EFFORTS TO ERADICATE.—The lady superintendent and her nursing staff have made repeated efforts to destroy the vermin; but the nuisance was of such magnitude that they were unable to cope with it, and in the absence of any action by the committee the wards continued in a more or less verminous state up to last March, when the building was thoroughly cleaned, plastered, and whitewashed.⁵
- (3.) CAUSES.—The building is constructed of rubble stones, and the walls being very old, the bugs made nests in the crevices, from which they could not be easily dislodged. The insects were also in the woodwork of the windows and doors. The keeping of verminous clothes in the basement of the southern wing may have, to some extent, assisted in increasing the nuisance.⁶

XIII.—THE PATIENTS.

- (1.) ADMISSION.—Members of the honorary medical staff attend daily at the Infirmary (each doctor taking a week in his turn) for the purpose of admitting patients. Persons who are desirous of entering the hospital present orders for admission signed by a subscriber to the institution, or a Colonial Secretary’s order; and if there are beds vacant, and the honorary deems the cases fit ones for treatment in the hospital, they are admitted. Sometimes, in the absence of the honorary for the week, the resident staff admit. Subscribers of two guineas are entitled to have one patient per year admitted; but any respectable person can issue any number of recommendations to the Colonial Secretary, which are equivalent to orders for admission. Urgent cases are admitted at any time without any recommendations.⁷

⁷ Street, 111-119; Blackstone, 459, 314, 455; Halket, 1837; Bedford, 3914; Stephen, 4286; Russell, 5431; Roberts, 5445.

- (2.) DISCHARGE.—The honorary medical officers alone have power to discharge patients from the hospital; except a patient is insubordinate, or requests to be discharged, when the resident staff may send him out.¹
- (3.) IMPROPER ADMISSIONS.—There are many patients in the Infirmary who would be treated with equal benefit to themselves and less expense to the public in cheaper institutions. It is said that there is an average of between fifty and eighty chronic and incurable cases always in the hospital.²
- (4.) IMPOSITIONS.—The institution seems to be very much imposed upon, by persons who are in possession of large sums of money obtaining admission on the pretence that they are paupers. Such persons are either expelled from the institution or made to pay for their maintenance. They usually get into the hospital by means of Government orders.³
- (5.) REJECTED APPLICANTS.—The Infirmary being over-crowded, a great many cases are refused admission, there being no vacancies for them. About one applicant out of every five is rejected for want of room; and this happens although there are many persons in the institution who ought not to be there.⁴
- (6.) DETENTIONS.—There is a rule that no patient shall remain longer than six weeks in the Infirmary; but there are many who have been in the institution for months. Some are improperly detained by the honorary surgeons to suit their own purposes.⁵
- (7.) SUGGESTIONS.—There is an emphatic expression of opinion that the system of admission on the recommendations of subscribers should be abolished, and that the hospital should be thrown open to all cases needing medical relief.⁶

XIV.—THE HONORARY MEDICAL STAFF.

- (1.) APPOINTMENT AND DUTIES.—There are four honorary surgeons and four honorary physicians, who are elected by the subscribers, and who, if dismissed by the Board, have the right of appealing to the subscribers. A surgeon and physician attends daily to admit patients, each member of the staff taking that duty for a week in turn with his colleagues. They attend the patients in the hospital, prescribe for them, give directions as to their diet and medical treatment, and discharge them when cured.⁷
- (2.) ALLOTMENT OF PATIENTS.—On the medical side the patients are divided equally among the physicians, each physician having charge of a ward and a half. A different system prevails on the surgical side, where the cases belong to the surgeon who admits them, and where, in consequence, some surgeons have many more patients than others.⁸
- (3.) ATTENDANCE.—The members of the honorary staff are said to attend at the Infirmary very irregularly, visiting their patients at all hours of the day.⁹ The allegation is, however, denied by some witnesses.¹⁰ Others say that medical men in general practice here cannot be expected to be punctual in their attendance.¹¹
- (4.) SUNDAY OPERATIONS.—Complaint is made that some of the surgeons perform operations unnecessarily on Sundays.¹² Two surgeons admit that they do so, but state that they are less disturbed by visitors and better able to operate satisfactorily on Sundays.¹³
- (5.) VIOLATIONS OF RULES.—One or two of the medical staff decline to punish violations of the rules. They refuse to discharge offenders. They allow patients, in defiance of the rules, to wear their own clothes in the wards, and, though smoking is prohibited, they take no notice of reported cases of smoking.¹⁴

- (6.) RETENTION OF PATIENTS.—Some surgeons are desirous of retaining under their supervision as many of the cases that come into the hospital as they possibly can. As there is no fixed number of beds allotted to each surgeon, and as each retains control of the cases admitted by himself, a surgeon will sometimes retain patients in the hospital after they are cured until his week for admitting comes round.¹ In this way patients fit to be discharged have been kept in the hospital for weeks, to the exclusion of cases needing relief.²
- (7.) SUGGESTIONS.—It is considered desirable that the honorary medical officers' tenure of office should be limited—some say to eight or ten years, and others to three.³ Two witnesses recommend the abolition of the system, as the honoraries are practically under no control, and disregard the orders of the committee.⁴ There are opinions in favour of allotting an equal number of beds to each surgeon; but some of the surgeons are adverse to that arrangement, and also object to the resident medical officers admitting patients, on the ground that "sore legs" would be unfairly distributed, while enjoyable little "lithotomy cases" would be reserved for favoured friends.⁵ The surgical cases should be kept separate from the medical cases, and there should be several empty beds in the accident ward.⁶ The honorary staff should hold monthly consultations as to the discharge of patients: The members of the district medical staff should be made assistants to the honoraries, should be unpaid, and should be promoted to the position of honorary physicians and surgeons when vacancies occurred. Mr. Roberts advocates the formation of a Medical Board to meet once a month and advise the General Board on professional questions.⁷

XV.—THE RESIDENT MEDICAL STAFF.

- (1.) DUTIES AND POWERS.—There are two paid medical officers, who reside on the premises, admit patients in the absence of the honoraries, attend to any case of emergency, and have, so far as the medical treatment of the patients is concerned, the general control of the establishment. They have power to discharge patients for insubordination, but that power is rarely exercised, inasmuch as the honoraries re-admit persons so discharged.⁸
- (2.) SUGGESTIONS.—It is by many persons thought desirable that the resident medical staff should admit patients.⁹ Some of the doctors, however, say that under such a system there would be favouritism; that the surgeons who were the especial friends of the resident officer would have all the interesting cases, while the ulcerated legs would be given to others.¹⁰

XVI.—THE DISTRICT MEDICAL STAFF.

- (1.) DUTIES.—There are six district medical officers, who attend to the out-patients, prescribe for them, and as occasion requires visit them at their own homes. Each of these gentlemen receives £50 a year.¹¹
- (2.) SUGGESTIONS.—It is said that the districts are unequally divided. It is suggested that the appointment of district medical officer should be honorary; that the district surgeons and physicians should be made assistant honoraries, should be elected by the subscribers, and promoted, when vacancies occurred, to be honorary surgeons and physicians.¹²

XVII.—THE NIGHTINGALE WING.

OCCUPANTS.—The Nightingale wing is the habitation of the lady superintendent and her nursing staff. There are thirty-three persons now living in it.¹³

EXPENSE.—One witness states that the "superfluities and extravagances of the Nightingale wing are equal to a third of what the patients cost."¹⁴ It appears, however, that the whole establishment was maintained in 1871 at a cost of £13 18s. 6d. per head, and in 1872 at a cost of £13 0s. 8d. per head.¹⁵

XVIII.—THE PATIENTS' CLOTHES.

- (1.) CUSTODY.—The private clothes of patients entering the hospital are taken from them, and packed unwashed into a small shed called the clothes-house. No attempt is made to clean or classify the clothes, which remain in the shed unwashed until the patients to whom they belong leave the hospital. The clothes-house is in charge of the bath-man under the supervision of the manager.¹
- (2.) VERMINOUS CLOTHES.—Verminous clothes, if not too tattered to be preserved, are put uncleaned into a room in the basement of the south wing, immediately beneath the wards. Clothes which are too filthy and verminous for this place are sometimes destroyed. A patient going out might put on verminous clothes.²
- (3.) ABUSES.—Clothes worn by patients suffering all kinds of diseases are thrown into the clothes-house indiscriminately. Garments saturated with blood are rolled up and bundled unwashed into the shed, and are returned to the patient, on his discharge, in the same filthy state. Patients may wash their own clothes if they get the manager's permission, but that permission has sometimes been refused. The unwashed clothes of deceased patients are given away in charity, without any reference to the disease of which the owners may have died.³
- (4.) SUGGESTIONS.—There should be disinfecting ovens to destroy insects and infection in clothes of persons entering the hospital. The clothes should be in charge of the lady superintendent, and should be washed at the expense of the institution.⁴

XIX.—REVENUE AND EXPENDITURE.

- (1.) INCOME.—The income of the Infirmary is stated in round numbers at £11,000 per year, of which £9,000 is found by the Government, who subscribe an equal sum to that raised by public contributions, and pay at the rate of 2s. 3d. per day for the support of patients sent in on Colonial Secretary's orders. There are some new paying patients, but not more than £300 is derived from this source. The subscriptions are about £2,300 yearly.⁵
- (2.) EXPENDITURE.—The cost per head for maintenance &c. of patients in the Infirmary is about £45. The expenses of the institution have not much increased of late years. The salaries amount to £3,471 13s. 3d. The cost of the Nightingale wing, in which reside the lady superintendent and thirty-two subordinates, is £13 0s. 8d. per head per year. The expenditure for wines, spirits, &c., is about £350 per year, and for milk £600. Compared with the cost of maintaining patients in English hospitals, the rate is small; but the expenses of St. Vincent's Hospital amount to less than half the expenses of the Sydney Infirmary.⁶
- (3.) SUGGESTIONS.—The system by which subscribers of £2 2s. have the right of issuing orders of admission is bad, and tends to decrease the amount subscribed. The hospital should be thrown open to all in need of medical aid and unable to obtain it.⁷ The accounts should be kept on a different plan.⁸

PUBLIC CHARITIES COMMISSION.

FIRST REPORT OF THE COMMISSIONERS.

To His Excellency SIR HERCULES GEORGE ROBERT ROBINSON, K.C.M.G., Governor and Commander-in-Chief of the Colony of New South Wales and its Dependencies.

We, the undersigned Commissioners, appointed by Letters Patent, dated the 8th day of April, 1873, to inquire into and report upon the working and management of the Public Charities of the Colony, have now the honour to submit to your Excellency the several matters following:—

The Infirmary being the most important of the Public Charities to which our inquiry was directed, and the institution most urgently calling for investigation into its affairs, we commenced the work of the Commission by an examination into its organization, management, and working.

In dealing with this institution, we have endeavoured by every means at our disposal to obtain an insight into its condition, and to gain such special knowledge of the recognized leading principles of hospital construction and administration as may enable us to suggest remedies for the defects which have become apparent. In the prosecution of this inquiry we have spared no pains. We have held twenty-six meetings and examined fifty-eight witnesses. We have several times inspected the premises. We have considered the results of similar inquiries held in the neighbouring Colonies, and have perused reports with respect to this institution which have been prepared by a Select Committee of the Legislative Assembly, and by a Committee of investigation appointed by the Infirmary Board. We have examined the Reports of the Poor Law Commissioners of 1832; and have, in order that we might be enabled to bring our labours to a satisfactory result, consulted the works of some of the most eminent authorities upon the questions of hospital construction, administration, and nursing.* The evidence appended to this Report is somewhat voluminous, but it has been received with an earnest desire to gain the differing views of different persons, upon debatable topics, and so to make the inquiry impartial, searching, and complete. This evidence may therefore be taken as fairly representative of the various shades of public opinion with respect to the condition and management of the Sydney Infirmary; for while no undue prominence has been given to any particular class of testimony, the fullest opportunities have been afforded to persons desirous of placing their statements of fact or opinion upon record. Before closing the inquiry we caused advertisements to be inserted in the daily papers requesting persons who wished to give evidence to communicate with us, but there was no response to the invitation. We therefore conclude that no further information is to be obtained as to this portion of the subject matter of our investigation; and believing the facts we have collected to be worthy of immediate and serious attention, we deem it right to bring up our Report upon this institution before completing our examination of the other Public Charities of the Colony.

The witnesses may be classified as follows:—

Paid officers of the Sydney Infirmary	8
Male servants	4
Head nurses and ex head nurse	5
Nurses	16
Patients and ex-patient	3
Honorary medical officers	8
Members of the Board of Management	6
Medical gentlemen not connected with the institution	5
Architect	1

In basing a Report upon the mass of evidence given by these persons—much of it of a contradictory and debatable character, we have found it convenient to range the matters treated of, under their several and appropriate heads; to present summaries of the evidence under those heads, and in each case to submit the distinct recommendations which appear to us to be consequent upon that evidence.

And here it may be remarked that, for the introduction into the evidence of the many matters of minor detail and personal dispute which appear there we do not consider ourselves responsible. Such testimony, as tending to illustrate certain defects of system or administration, could not be altogether rejected, nor, having admitted it in one case, could we justly exclude it in others. It is perhaps to be regretted that these petty matters should have crept into an inquiry of this importance; but we do not propose to bring them into any greater prominence than they attain as portions of the evidence.

The evidence with regard to the present Infirmary building is condensed under the following heads:—

- (1.) THE SITE.—Though the site of the Infirmary is said to be in many respects admirable, still, the evidence of all the witnesses who have expressed opinions on the subject is adverse to its retention (except for a small casualty hospital), and in favour of the erection of a large general hospital upon the ground now occupied by the Victoria Barracks.¹ Some think that the Government should resume the land in Macquarie-street, upon which, as Dr. Fortescue states, “it is impossible to build a large modern hospital.”² The Flagstaff Hill and the heights of Pymont are spoken of as being desirable sites for a small casualty hospital.³

³ Roberts, 6559; Fortescue, 5735.

- (2.) THE SANATORY CONDITION.—It is stated to be impossible to keep the walls of the present building free from disease. Not only is the place infected with “hospitalism,” but there is no proper ventilation, and for some time there was “not a single case of wound which was not attacked with erysipelas.”¹ The bad influence of the building upon certain diseases is very perceptible. Some affections of the eye cannot be cured there at all; and patients under treatment have been frequently attacked by erysipelas, pneumonia, and bronchitis, brought on by the unwholesomeness of the place.² There are unpleasant smells from the sewers and lavatories, the bed area is too small, and the ventilation of the south wing is obstructed by a dead wall.³ Two witnesses speak of the dormitory accommodation as being fair, but one of them finds fault with the construction of the windows in both the main building and the south wing.⁴
- (3.) STATE OF REPAIR.—“The hospital,” says Mr. Bedford, “was condemned some time ago.” It is very old, and has never been properly repaired. It requires new wall-facing, a new roof, and new floors. The walls are old, and the plaster falls away. The operating-room is damp, inadequate, and is described as “a horrible place.” One witness states that any attempt to remodel the Infirmary would be like an effort to “mend a garment that was quite worn out”; another says that it has been allowed to fall into a “ruinous and scandalous state”; and a third is of opinion that “nothing can be done with it.”⁵
- (4.) DRAINAGE.—Four witnesses state that the drainage is bad. The water from the Mint flows into a pit which is situated close to the south wing, and a sewer passes beneath the wards.⁶ One gentleman states that the building is properly drained,⁷ and another is of opinion that, standing on the crest of a hill, it possesses sufficient natural drainage.⁸
- (5.) WATER SUPPLY.—The water is cut off from the establishment daily between the hours of 3 and 6 p.m.; and there being no tanks on the premises, there is no water at all to be had during that time. If a patient were dying for a warm bath he could not have one. The nurses are unable to cleanse the most necessary things, and sometimes have not the means of performing their personal ablutions. Out-patients coming in with injured heads, and having their wounds dressed in the receiving-room, have sometimes to go away with the blood unwashed from their faces.⁹
- (6.) THE DEAD-HOUSE.—The mortuary, or, as one witness calls it, “the dirty stable full of rats, which answers the purpose of a dead-house”—is in a disgraceful state. It is infested with rats, and those animals have sometimes mutilated the bodies placed there.¹⁰ The building now stands in the north-eastern corner near the Nightingale wing,—a position which several witnesses consider unsuitable for it.¹¹ One gentleman, however, advocates the erection of a new mortuary upon the site of the old one.¹²

- (7.) THE COOK-HOUSE.—The kitchen appears to be well situated, but in bad repair, and ill-provided with cooking appliances. Of the two stoves which it contains, one is cracked and almost useless, while the other, originally intended to cook for fifty people, is made to perform that function for 250.¹ The rain pours down into one portion of the kitchen; the witnesses agree in condemning the place; and one says that the sooner it is pulled down the better.²
- (8.) OFFICERS' QUARTERS.—The resident medical officers have very scant accommodation, for they have but one sitting-room, and that they have to share with the manager.³
- (9.) DEFICIENCIES GENERALLY.—The whole of the back premises are in a condition that is discreditable to the management; the grounds being shamefully neglected, and the out-buildings much dilapidated.⁴ The urinals used by the out-patients are filthy and defective, and incessant complaints have been made as to the state of the water-closets and lavatories.⁵ There are no water-tanks or contrivances for conveying water to the wards.⁶ There is not sufficient bath-room accommodation.⁷ The receiving-room is defective, and unprovided with proper appliances; the operating-room damp and inadequate; the supply of instruments insufficient; and there is no chair for carrying helpless patients.⁸ The dispensary is small, and is not fitted up properly, the whole of the arrangements being very defective.⁹ The hospital is not large enough for the requirements of the city.¹⁰
- (10.) PROPOSED ALTERATIONS.—Plans of alterations and additions to the Infirmary, prepared by Mr. G. A. Mansfield, the architect of the institution, have been approved by the Board. They include the building of a new front, new kitchen (with appliances for cooking by steam), two new wards, nurses' rooms, and ward for contagious cases, new mortuary and dissecting-room, operating-theatre, &c.—the remodelling of the lavatories, and arrangements for supplying hot and cold water to the upper wards. The estimated cost of the new buildings is £15,452; and of the repairs to the old building alone, £3,325.¹¹ Suggestions are made by various witnesses as to the erection of wooden huts for contagious cases—the building of ovens for disinfecting patients' clothes—cooking and washing by steam—the construction of a row of buildings to face the Domain—and the removal of some of the soil from the back yard.¹² Miss Osburn is opposed to washing on the premises, and Dr. Fortescue disapproves of Mr. Mansfield's plans.¹³

This evidence tends to a conclusion somewhat at variance with former opinions expressed as to the desirability of retaining the site of the Infirmary and building thereupon a large modern hospital complete in all its requirements. Though, in the opinion of some members of the Commission, the question as to the retention or otherwise of this site has not been remitted for our consideration, still that question is so forced upon us that we cannot altogether ignore it.

Captain Douglas Galton, in his admirable treatise upon hospital construction, says—"The qualities of a site most favourable to a hospital may be described to be a situation in the open country, upon porous and dry soil, with free circulation of air round it.* * There should be no buildings near a hospital, except those immediately connected with its object.* * It has been held sufficient to allot an acre to 100 patients."* The Société de Chirurgie, in a discussion held at Paris, in 1864, apropos to the reconstruction of the Hotel Dieu, laid down the principle that the clear space upon which a hospital should stand should not afford a less area than nearly 540 feet to each patient, that is to say, that a hospital for 80 patients should stand in the centre of an acre of ground; and that the proportional area should be greater as the number of patients increases.† The site of the Herbert Hospital at Woolwich affords an area of 800 square feet to each patient, the number of beds in the hospital being 620.‡ This, therefore, is an exemplification of the axiom stated above, that the "proportional area should be greater as the number of patients increases."

The Sydney Infirmary stands upon three acres of ground, and there are no means whereby an extension of the area can be obtained. Even if an acre for each 100 patients were taken to be a just proportion, no adequate hospital accommodation could be placed upon that site; while if we are to adopt the axiom of the Surgical Society of Paris as a sound one, viz., that the allowance of space should be an acre for eighty patients, with a proportionate enlargement of the area as the number of patients increases—we are driven perforce to the conclusion that the site of the present building is far too contracted for the requirements of this rapidly increasing city. A small hospital for the reception of accidents and very urgent cases may be placed there, but if suitable provision is to be made for the necessities of our sick poor, a large general hospital must be built elsewhere. The evidence fortifies us in this opinion. Those witnesses who praise the site, yet confess that it is unadapted for a hospital of more than 150 beds; and it is asserted—we believe with reason—that present accommodation, setting aside the demands of the future, is needed for some 400 patients. As we believe that the Prince Alfred Hospital will make the requisite provision for a large number of these cases, it will only be necessary to retain the site of the Sydney Infirmary for the erection of a hospital for acute and accident cases.

Upon a careful review of all the facts and theories which have been presented for our consideration, we are led to consider whether the site of the Sydney Infirmary should be resumed, and devoted to some purpose, to which in the opinion of some people it is better adapted. For a large general hospital, such as this city needs, some other situation must be chosen; and, in our opinion, it should be a situation sufficiently commodious, and as far as possible removed from the polluted atmosphere of the town.

As, however, the total abandonment of the site in Macquarie-street is a matter upon which there exists a considerable diversity of opinion, it is our duty to treat this question from the point of view of those persons who contend that this site is to be retained. We have clearly shown the impossibility of constructing upon it a large modern hospital, and there now remain the questions—first, as to whether the building fronting Macquarie-street should, with improvements and alterations, be retained; and second, as to whether the building should be pulled down and an entirely new edifice raised in its place. We

We find that, to make the smallest appreciable improvement in this building would involve an expenditure of more than £3,000; while to carry out the whole of the alteration necessary to make the institution even moderately efficient would cost some £17,000. Designs for alterations and additions have been prepared, and have been approved by the Committee of the Infirmary. They will be found appended to this Report. Those designs appear to us insufficient. The faults of the present system of drainage, the deficiencies of the dispensary, and the Resident Medical Officers' quarters, appear to have been overlooked; and no provision has been made for isolating the lavatories from the wards as completely as the best authorities upon the question of hospital construction consider expedient. It is very possible that superior plans would have been obtained if competitive designs had been called for; and if the present building is to be retained, we think it undesirable that the necessary alterations and improvements should be made without the designing of them being submitted to competition. Though the question of erecting a new hospital on the site of the present old building seems to have been decided in the negative by the Committee of the Legislative Assembly, before alluded to, we do not think that we should be doing justice to ourselves if we did not, with all respect for the opposing opinion of the Committee, record our conviction that it would be better if the building fronting Macquarie-street were pulled down, and a new hospital, complete in all modern improvements, erected in its place, believing as we do that the adoption of this course would be cheaper to the Country in the end than patching up the present defective structure.

Taking this view the expenditure of £17,000, or indeed of any sum, upon the improvement of the Sydney Infirmary, would, in our opinion, be a waste of money. We hold that, under the circumstances disclosed in the evidence before us, the retention of this old, infected, and worn-out building for a moment longer than is absolutely necessary is altogether inexpedient. The defects of the structure can in no way be removed except by removing the structure itself. To attempt improvement would, as one witness has described it, be like the endeavour to "mend a garment which is quite worn out." It is true that by extensive alterations and repairs the unwholesomeness of the place may be to some extent temporarily lessened, but nothing short of demolition will effect a permanent cure. The whole of the evidence points to that conclusion. Refacing the walls, improving the ventilation, perfecting the drainage, and providing tanks, lifts, and other appliances, of which there is now a absolute deficiency, will involve the expenditure of a considerable sum of money, and for a very inadequate result. No permanent good will be attained. The walls are infected with "hospitalism," an unwholesome condition to which all hospitals long in use are more or less subject, and to reface them will be to cover with a thin and permeable crust a mass of impurity. "Do not," says Captain Galtōn, "build for a long futurity. Buildings used for the reception of the sick become permeated with organic impurities, and it is a real sanitary advantage that they should be pulled down and entirely rebuilt on a fresh site periodically. The hospital is the handmaid of the physician. If he is to cure disease, he must place the patient in conditions to enable Nature to do her part,—not in conditions which would thwart both Nature and all the art which the physician can bring to bear."* Dr. Bristōwe and Mr. Holmes say—"The evils which result from the walls of the ward being in a very absorbent material have been most clearly noticed at the hospital-ship 'Dreadnought,' where the walls are of white-washed wood. There the old ship 'Dreadnought' had become greatly infected with hospital diseases, chiefly erysipelas and pyæmia, pyæmia, and surgical operations succeeded very badly ; but on the substitution of a new ship (the 'Caledonia') these affections almost disappeared for some years. Now, again, after the latter ship has been in use for seven years, the same affections have reappeared, and threaten to attain the same height, although the new ship is much more roomy than the old ; and the other conditions, as to river atmosphere, miasmata, &c., appear to be unchanged or changed for the better."* The walls of the Sydney Infirmiry are old, and composed of rubble. They must be permeated with hospitalism, and the building, however altered and patched, cannot fail to be unhealthy.

Dismissing, then, the proposition to alter and repair the present building, and dealing with the question of erecting an entirely new hospital upon the site in Macquarie-street, we deem it desirable to direct attention to some of the leading principles which regulate the construction of modern hospitals. No matter where the hospital may be built, these principles should be kept in view. Whether there be a small institution placed upon the site of the present Infirmiry, or whether a commodious and efficient hospital be erected elsewhere, there are certain fundamental maxims from which radiate the conditions desired of salubrity, convenience, and efficiency.

More than a century ago, Sir John Pringle asserted three maxims, the soundness of which modern experience has verified. They are these:—

1. Avoid agglomerations of large numbers of the sick.
2. Give sufficient cubic space in sick wards.
3. Provide abundant ventilation direct from the outer air.†

The third axiom of this group is of paramount importance ; the second may be regarded as merely accessory of the third ; and where the conditions of these two are fulfilled, the first may be to some extent disregarded with safety. In actual practice it is found that large hospitals are more healthy than small ones. This fact, however, does not disprove the first axiom stated above ; it merely establishes the efficacy of science in counteracting those evils which are caused by aggregating in one institution large numbers of the sick ; for the resources of science are more lavishly applied in large hospitals—hence their superior healthiness.

Free ventilation, then, must be the first consideration with the designer of a hospital. Provide a building perfect in form, rich in appliances, and skilfully managed, and even then satisfactory results will not be secured if the ventilation be imperfect. Diseases may be, and often are, treated with great success in hospitals which are badly situated, ill drained, and otherwise deficient, but the wards of which are well supplied with fresh air : an ill ventilated hospital, possessing every other condition of excellence, never can be healthy. The York County Hospital, which was dependent on artificial ventilation, was so infected with hospitalism that to perform operations there was to doom the patient to certain death.‡ The statistics of the Manchester Infirmiry, the Liverpool Royal Infirmiry, the Bristol General Hospital, the institutions of Derby, Edinburgh, Maidstone, and Brighton, prove the bad effects of deficient ventilation ; and in the Leeds Infirmiry we have a remarkable example of the extent to which the evils of defective construction and overcrowding are nullified by good ventilation.§ Experience has shown that it is better to treat diseases in the open air than in an ill-ventilated building. Sir John Pringle says—“I have generally found those wards most healthful when by broken windows and other wants of repair the air could not be excluded.”† During the war with France in 1814–15, the sick and wounded English soldiers “were treated partly in hospitals and partly in unfinished shed buildings, without doors or windows, so that the air blew freely through them; and the result was that in the uncomfortable sheds the mortality was one-half what it was in the more comfortable hospitals.”* Dr. Bristowe and Mr. Holmes consider the due supply of fresh air to each ward of a hospital to be the “essential feature of hospital construction, with which almost every shape of hospital and ward has been found to fulfil its purpose; and without which, none, admirable as many are in some other respects, have been found to be safe receptacles for the sick and wounded.”† Subordinate to the necessity for providing sufficient ventilation in the construction of a hospital are the considerations of economy of space, the housing of the administrative department, the provision of proper accommodation for medical students for operations, and the conducting of post mortem examinations, the arrangement of the necessary offices, and accommodation for dispensary patients.

There are four distinct classes—or as we may call them orders—of hospital architecture, viz. :—

1. The Pavilion.—This class of hospital consists of single wards or pavilions, isolated from each other, exposed on both sides to the open air, and connected by corridors. Each pavilion forms in fact a small distinct hospital. The Lariboisiere Hospital, at Paris, and the Herbert Hospital, at Woolwich, are perfect specimens of the pavilion plan. (See separate Appendix, drawing No. 1.)
2. The H-shaped.—The uprights of the H form the wards, while the connecting portion is a corridor with a staircase at each end. The ward offices are ranged on each side of the corridor. This plan is very common in England; and St. George’s Hospital, London, is a good type of the class. (See separate Appendix, drawing No. 2.)
3. The Block.—Rectangular blocks are ranged about a square, and the wards are double, being divided in the centre by a perforated or spinal wall. St. Bartholomew’s Hospital is an example of this arrangement. (See separate Appendix, drawing No. 3.)
4. The Corridor.—Briefly stated, the principle of construction is to connect the wards together by corridors, out of which they open. Examples are very numerous, and we have selected the Bristol Royal Infirmary as a specimen of the class. (See separate Appendix, drawing No. 4.)

Modern authorities state that the pavilion plan is by far the best of these, and its advantages are obviously numerous. It admits of the complete isolation of the wards from each other, of free and thorough ventilation from the outer air, and of increasing the size of the institution to any extent, without violating the maxim that the collecting of large numbers of sick people in one building is injudicious. A ward unit or pavilion should be in itself a complete hospital; and any number of these units may be aggregated together, so long as there is provision made for the free circulation of air between the pavilions, for their proper exposure to sunshine, and for easy and separate means of access to each. Captain Galton lays down as general rules that “the distance between adjacent pavilions should not be less than twice the height of the pavilion, reckoned from the floors of the ground-floor ward”; and

* Galton’s Report to Privy Council on Herbert Hospital, 1865, p. 4.

† Report to Privy Council on Hospitals of the United Kingdom, 1863, p. 502.

and that "there should not be more than two floors of wards in a pavilion," because "if there are three or more floors, the distances between the pavilions become very considerable," by reason of the rule first stated.

The pavilion system is, however, open to some objections of more or less importance. The chief of these are the distance of the parts of the hospital from each other, and the costliness of construction. It has been asserted, also, that the exposure to the outer air of so much wall space renders the building too cold. This defect could scarcely exist in our climate, and we should imagine would be easily remediable anywhere. The only real argument against the system is to be found in its expensiveness—which is very considerable. Apart from that one consideration, it is the most perfect principle of hospital construction which has yet been promulgated.

The H-shaped hospitals are certainly next in point of efficiency to the pavilions, and, considered in relation to the question of cost, are superior. They afford a large amount of ward space, and, where the principle of their construction is strictly carried out, provide a complete and simply regulated ventilation.

With regard to the block plan, although Messrs. Bristowe and Holmes disagree with the objections which have been made to the system, still the theory of construction is undoubtedly defective. If good results are obtained in the hospitals built upon this plan, they are attributable, not to excellence of construction, but to accidental circumstances, or the success of efforts made to overcome the architectural defects. In the case of St. Bartholomew's Hospital, ventilation is secured by the aid of a very wide staircase, which bisects each block, and acts as an efficient air-shaft. The wards are thus kept sweet and pure; but no one will contend that the result attained in that way is better than it would be if attained by the simple means of ventilation secured by ward windows placed opposite to each other.

Much has been said both in laudation and in condemnation of the corridor hospitals. The great objection raised to this plan of construction is, that the "foul air of all the wards must necessarily pass into the corridors, and from the corridors into the wards indiscriminately." Dr. Bristowe doubts the validity of this objection, and quotes the results attained in the treatment of diseases, in several corridor hospitals, as proving the salubrity of institutions built upon this plan. The Bristol General Hospital, and the Dundee Hospital, both corridor hospitals, are singularly healthy; and citing these examples, Dr. Bristowe asserts that "the objection to a hospital constructed with corridors has been somewhat exaggerated, and that, provided the ventilation of the corridors themselves is perfect, that of the hospital may be, for all practical purposes, complete."* If we admit the truth of this, there are abundant reasons for the adoption of the corridor plan. It is economical and compact. The various parts of the hospital can be drawn into close proximity and the wards can be made of any size—two advantages which are not possessed by the pavilion system of construction. There are three kinds of corridors which secure good ventilation:—A corridor, wide in proportion to its length, with large end windows, constantly open; a corridor carried up through the whole height of the building, which is thus divided into two parts; and, best of all, a corridor placed on one side of the building, so that only one set of wards open into it.†

* Report to Privy Council on Hospitals of the United Kingdom, 1863, p. 494.

† The first plan is adopted at the Bristol Royal Infirmary; the second, at the Liverpool Southern Hospital (old); and the third, at the Mater Misericordie, Dublin. Bristowe and Holmes' Report, p. 494.

A careful consideration of the leading features of the four classes of hospitals here described, leads us to the conclusion that, while the pavilion plan is undoubtedly the most perfect in theory—complying as it does with all the conditions needed in a building set apart for the treatment of diseases—still, the H-shaped hospital is practically of almost equal excellence for institutions of limited size; and it is very much less costly. If it were proposed to build a hospital of some 650 beds, then the pavilion system of construction is the only one which could with confidence be recommended; but if an institution of only half that size is needed, then the H-shaped structure gives all the essentials of healthiness at about half the cost. St. George's hospital, built in the H shape, and containing 350 beds, was completed at a cost of about £51,000; the cost of the Herbert Hospital at Woolwich—a perfect example of the pavilion plan, and containing 620 beds—was £250,000. The land on which the Herbert Hospital stands is nearly three times the size of the site of St. George's Hospital. Two H-shaped hospitals of the size of St. George's—that is containing between them 700 beds—could therefore have been erected on the Herbert site, at less than half the cost of the Herbert Hospital. "This," says Dr. Bristowe, "is the expense of the pavilion plan as compared with the H shape. Yet, if the facts we have collected are to be trusted, no advantage attaches to the former over the latter."* Faultless in a sanatory point of view as the pavilion system undoubtedly is, we are inclined to think that the expense it involves is unnecessary, inasmuch as the H-shaped class of hospitals affords equally satisfactory practical results.

We have stated the results of our investigations upon these points with some minuteness, because we conceive that in any future scheme of hospital construction—such as must ere long be commenced—these initial considerations will require the closest scrutiny. The facts we have collected and the course of inquiry we suggest may tend towards the goal of excellence, if we ourselves are not permitted to reach it; and we put forward these views with regard to pavilion hospitals, not because we are ambitious of upsetting a theory, but in order to direct the attention of more practised minds to matters which may possibly have been too much overlooked.

Whatever form of hospital may be chosen, there can be little controversy as to the essential details to secure the healthiness and efficiency of the institution. The wards must be spacious, airy, and exposed on two sides at least to the outer air. The ward offices must be properly isolated from the wards. The drainage must receive the greatest attention. The interior walls of the wards must be faced with some material capable of receiving a polish, and impervious to the impurities of the hospital air. "The architect's watch-words," says Captain Galton, "should be light, air, speedy removal of refuse and great facility of cleansing * * There should be no dark corners. Light means cleanliness."

The Royal Commission appointed in 1857 to inquire into the Sanatory State of the Army, laid down the following principles, to be applied to the construction of hospitals:—

1. The cubic space per bed to be 1,200 feet at home and 1,500 in tropical climates.
2. In the construction of new hospitals, the adoption of separate pavilions, with lateral windows on opposite sides and natural ventilation.

* Bristowe and Holmes' Report, p. 491.

3. The use of Parian cement, or other impervious material, for walls and ceilings.
4. Sufficient provision for warming and lighting the hospital.
5. The introduction of water-closets and sinks with efficient sewerage by impervious drains free of the buildings; the closets and sinks to be cut off from the hospital by a ventilated lobby.
6. The provision of suitable lavatories, baths and laundries.
7. The use of stone or fire-proof material for staircases and landings, instead of wood.
8. The introduction of proper cooking apparatus.

A hospital ward—unless for special cases—should not contain more than thirty-two patients; and where cases of more than ordinary severity are received, the size of the ward should be much decreased. Miss Nightingale says that a ward should be 24 feet wide, with a wall space of 7 feet 6 inches for each bed; and these dimensions, with a ward height of 14 feet, would give a cubic space per bed of 1,260 feet. Messrs. Bristowe and Holmes say—“It is of great importance that the cubic space should not be below a certain minimum, which in hospitals intended for the reception of numerous urgent cases may be taken at about 1,200 feet. But the cubic space allowed in a ward may be ample, and yet from ill arrangement in the ward the beds may be crowded, even to such a point as to produce unhealthiness in the wards.” The same authorities are adverse to the arrangement of beds in pairs between each pair of windows, because the “interval between the beds, where the morbid exhalations must be in the greatest quantity, is just the spot where the ventilation must be most feeble,” and asserts that the beds should be “removed from each other by an interval of not less than six feet.”* The wards should not be too high, as cubic space attained in that way is of no use whatever. It is generally conceded that ventilation can be easily obtained in either pavilion or H-shaped hospitals, “by the only system which has as yet been found to effect its purpose; that is to say, by windows opposite each other.”† Captain Galton adds to this that “means for the admission of air of the ordinary temperature should be provided direct from the open air, independent of the doors and windows; for this purpose Sheringham’s ventilators should be placed between the windows near the ceiling. * * * Eminent surgeons are of opinion that, for bad surgical cases, openings of equal size should be placed close to the floor under the beds.”‡ Experience has shown, however, that artificially provided ventilation is quite useless. In nearly all hospitals where it has been tried it has failed utterly. “Provided that the cubic space be ample, the beds well apart from each other, and the windows constantly open, no accessories whatever are necessary.”§

The method adopted in the Herbert Hospital at Woolwich for isolating the lavatories and water-closets from the wards to which they belong is exceedingly simple and effective. They are cut off from the ward in each case by a ventilated lobby, with the ventilating windows placed at right angles to each other; an arrangement by which the wind, in whatever direction it blows outside, carries the effluvia away from the ward. A sketch showing the mode of arrangement will be found appended to this Report. (See Separate Appendix, Drawing No. 5.)

Some of the witnesses who gave evidence before us suggested the desirability of erecting small wooden buildings, when requisite, for the reception of infectious cases. These buildings would be temporary, put up when required, and taken down when the necessity for their use was gone. Captain Galton is in favour of some such arrangement as this, but Dr. Bristowe points out that such a system would not only be unnecessary but absolutely mischievous. "Sad experience," he says, "has shown how extremely dangerous such places are to the medical and other attendants on the patients, and to the patients themselves."* * The treatment of contagious diseases no doubt involves risk. No doubt such diseases, if taken into any hospital, will occasionally spread; but will they not spread if the patient is left at home? * * That the hospital should have the power of treating acute disease is the first requisite, and for this it is necessary that no rule should exist excluding fevers. * * For the safe reception of fever, large, well-ventilated wards and beds, well removed from each other, are essential; and we must also repeat that, in our view, the reception of fever is a necessary qualification for the due and efficient discharge of the duties of a general hospital. We have thus far endeavoured to show that the establishment of separate fever wards and fever houses is in ordinary terms unnecessary. * * Separate erysipelas wards, or the separation of cases of erysipelas, appears to be superfluous. There can be no reason for separating erysipelas, if the hospital is fit, as every hospital ought to be, to receive cases of continued fever."* In the face of this authoritative expression of opinion, by gentlemen thoroughly conversant with the subject, we hesitate to recommend the construction of special wards for the reception of infectious diseases. The proper system seems to be to construct a thoroughly good hospital, and receive into its general wards all cases of disease, no matter whether contagious or not.

We do not consider that it is necessary in this Report to go minutely into detail, with reference to the arrangement and fittings of the various parts of a hospital: our aim is to suggest general principles merely.

II.—THE BOARD OF MANAGEMENT.

A considerable amount of evidence has been taken with reference to the constitution, powers, and general efficiency of the managing body; and the facts elicited may be grouped as under:—

- (1.) CONSTITUTION.—The Board consists of a president, vice-presidents, two honorary secretaries, an honorary treasurer, and twenty-one members—in all, twenty-seven persons. With the exception of certain life directors, who gain their position by services or large donations, the members of the Board are elected annually by the subscribers. Subordinate to this managing body, but possessed of very large executive powers, there is a house committee of twelve members.¹
- (2.) DEFECTS IN CONSTITUTION.—The number of directors is said to be needlessly large, and the result is that members do not attend consecutive meetings, that there is no sustained action, that the work is shirked from one shoulder to another, that useful motions passed at one meeting are shelved at the next, and that that important matters are neglected. The presence of clergymen at the Board meetings is considered objectionable; and the Government, who contribute fully three-fourths of the funds of the institution, have no voice in the management.¹

* Report to Privy Council, 1863, pages 471, 473, 476.

- (3.) NEGLECT OF DUTIES.—There is a great deal of evidence imputing neglect in not providing water-tanks, in failing to supply the dispensary with proper appliances, in not checking the issue of drugs and stores, in not attending to requisitions and reports respecting the condition of the surgical instruments, and the care of patients in private clothes, and in ignoring altogether the suggestions of the district medical officers.²
- (4.) INTERFERENCES IN THE DETAILS OF MANAGEMENT.—Instances of interference, by individual members of the Committee, in the details of management are complained of; and complaints are also made as to interferences with the honorary medical staff.³

The governing body is a committee of twenty-seven, elected by the subscribers to the institution. Of these, one-third retire every year, the retiring members being those who have attended least frequently at the Board during the year. Though the principle on which retirement is provided for seems sound in theory, yet it may be questioned whether in practice its tendency in this institution is not to get rid of the most able business-like men. The evidence taken by us shows that, owing to the large number on the committee, meetings are often wasted in useless discussion, and that instead of being devoted to the practical consideration of abuses to be remedied, they are frittered away in personal altercations and useless declamation to such an extent that business men are driven away, thus leaving the field to others, remarkable rather for zeal than for discretion or administrative capacity to deal with the affairs of the hospital. At these meetings there is frequently no determination arrived at, or previous decisions are canvassed and reversed by members present who were absent before. In consequence of the difficulty of getting anything done by the whole body, sub-committees are appointed, which either never meet or decide, or their decisions are not confirmed by the general committee. The natural result of this state of things is the utter neglect of matters vitally affecting the welfare of the hospital, and a general want of vigour and sustained action in the attempt made at managing its affairs. Thus, whilst we fully recognize the high character, intelligence, and business-like capacity of individual members of the committee, and the general desire of the whole Board to work for the good of the institution, we feel bound to record our conviction, founded upon our examination of the results attained, that, as a body, they have shown themselves incapable of governing the Infirmary in a manner entitling them to the confidence of the community or to the recognition of any claim to the continued administration of the large amount of the public revenue which hitherto has been confided to them by the Legislature.

This conclusion, we feel convinced, will be concurred in by the most intelligent members of the committee, who are keenly alive to the defects of their administration, but are individually impotent to counteract the working of the constitution under which they act.

Serious deficiencies in the hospital, as well as abuses and mistakes in the management, have come to our knowledge in the course of our inquiry, of which the committee as such have either been ignorant, or which they have failed to remedy when brought under their notice.

Miss Nightingale, who, as an authority on hospital affairs, stands pre-eminent, in a paper written by her on hospital management in relation to nursing, and to be found in an appendix to the evidence, has the following remarks:—

The superintendent should be responsible to the constituted hospital authorities, and all her nurses and servants should, in the performance of their duties, be responsible to her only.

No good ever comes of the constituted authorities placing themselves in the office which they have sanctioned her occupying.

All complaints on any subject should be made directly to the superintendent, and not to any nurse or servant.

No good ever comes of any one interfering between the head of the nursing establishment and her nurses. It is fatal to discipline.

Every principle of good management here enunciated has been violated—every error against which a committee is warned has been fallen into by members of this Board. Individual members of the committee appear to have interfered most injudiciously at times, by giving uncalled for and erroneous orders, by personally scolding members of the nursing staff in the presence of patients, by ignoring officers and dealing in preference with servants, and by instigating them to protest against the action of the head of the nursing staff in reporting their conduct or recommending their discharge. Such interference on the part of the committee renders discipline impossible, and paralyses authority.

To remedy the evils disclosed in the evidence, every witness examined on the subject, with one exception, is of opinion that the number of the governing body should be greatly reduced, and in this opinion we entirely concur.

We have been, in the course of this inquiry, very much struck with the completeness with which the Government has been ignored in the management of this and other Public Charities.

We are of opinion that, considering the large sum annually contributed by the Legislature, amounting to four-fifths of the income of the institution, the Government should have a direct voice in the management.

No particular number can be fixed upon as decidedly preferable, but we are disposed to advise that the number of the Board be limited to six, all of whom according to the tenor of the evidence should be laymen. Three of these should be elected by persons subscribing to the hospital to the amount of £1, and three (including the President) should be appointed by the Government, the President having a deliberative as well as a casting vote. One elected and one nominated member should retire annually, but be eligible for re-election or re-appointment. The member retiring might be chosen by lot.

All regulations made by this body should be approved of by the Governor and Executive Council as the by-laws of the University and other institutions now are, and they should furnish the Government with an annual report of their proceedings. The Board should be supreme in its authority over every one connected with the institution.

With

With efficient officers, directly responsible for the departments under their control to this Board, we believe that the good government of the hospital will be secured ; but allowed to remain as at present, the institution must continue disorganized and mismanaged.

III.—THE MANAGER.

- (1.) APPOINTMENT.—The office of manager was created about six and a half years ago when Mr. Blackstone was appointed to the office.¹
- (2.) DUTIES.—The Manager has the general superintendence of the Infirmary, but is not authorized to interfere with the nursing department. He does not reside upon the premises ; he keeps certain books, receives and answers the inquiries of applicants for admission, has the custody of patients' money, the charge of all stores, and the engagement and control of male servants.
- (3.) QUALIFICATIONS.—It is said that the duties of the manager are not of such a kind as to require any special qualifications on the part of the person who performs them. The present manager is said to have had no previous experience in the superintendence of public institutions.²
- (4.) SUGGESTIONS.—Opinions are much divided upon the question as to whether the general superintendence of the hospital should be vested in a paid secretary, a medical superintendent, or a house governor. Miss Nightingale's recommendations upon the point are generally agreed in ; but while some witnesses think that there should be a medical superintendent placed in charge of the institution, others prefer that a non-professional gentleman should have the position. Those who take the latter view urge as a chief objection to the engagement of a medical superintendent the necessity of paying a very high salary in order to secure a competent man. One witness recommends the appointment of a house governor, who should have a seat at the Board ; another suggests that there should be a physician in the position of medical superintendent, and a surgeon to act as assistant-superintendent.³

Whether it is desirable to retain the office of manager or to abolish it, one thing is certain,—that under the present disordered system of control the manager is a practically useless officer. His real status in the institution is merely that of a clerk, though he does not perform the clerical duties. The defects so patent in the constitution of the governing body have extended their injurious influence throughout the whole of the administration ; and the manager, in common with other officers, has had his usefulness nullified by their paralyzing consequences. It may be that, even under conditions more favourable to success, such an officer as the manager would not be successful. In view of all points worthy of consideration, we think not—we think that the chief executive officer of an institution like the Sydney Infirmary should have larger powers than the manager possesses, and should be made more the medium of communication between the subordinates and the Board

Board than the manager is. The question therefore arises as to whether that chief executive officer should be a man of business merely, or whether he should be a person who has had a medical training. If he were the former, the efficient discharge of his duties would most certainly bring him into frequent collision with the medical officers of the institution, and, overborne by their authoritative dicta upon quasi medical questions, he would be apt to give way when he should properly make a stand. If, on the other hand, he were himself a professional man, he could more readily adjust matters of dispute, and exercise a more confident control.

There is, however, great weight in the objection that, to obtain the services of a skilful and energetic medical man, in the position of Superintendent, a very large salary would have to be paid; and with every respect for the opinions of the gentlemen recommending that supreme power in all matters should be vested in a resident medical officer, counterbalanced as they are by the opinions of others opposed to them, equally entitled to consideration, we are of opinion that the system of management recommended by us, and founded on the suggestions of Miss Nightingale, is the most suitable for the Infirmary, whatever might be desirable in hospitals of such enormous size as exist in the Mother Country.

IV.—THE NURSING SYSTEM.

- (1.) APPOINTMENT OF LADY SUPERINTENDENT.—Miss Osburn was appointed to her present position in December, 1867.
- (2.) DUTIES OF LADY SUPERINTENDENT.—The lady superintendent is supposed to have the sole control of the nursing staff, and to be responsible for the cleanliness of the wards, the efficiency of the nursing, and for the internal management generally. It appears, however, that the responsibility has never been very clearly defined, and that until last March she was not charged with the duty of cleaning the wards. The training of nurses was laid down as an important part of her duty, but her efforts in that direction seem to have been discouraged.²
- (3.) QUALIFICATIONS OF LADY SUPERINTENDENT.—With few exceptions, the witnesses express themselves in terms of approbation with regard to Miss Osburn's talents and competency. She has had a very complete training, and, according to Miss Nightingale, is full of energy, and a clever nurse.⁴
- (4.) QUALITY OF THE NURSING.—The system of nursing introduced and carried out by Miss Osburn gives very general satisfaction. It is regarded on all sides as being a great improvement upon the old system which was in vogue at the Infirmary.³ Three witnesses—Messrs. Josephson, Pearce, and Raphael—consider that the nursing at present is inefficient.⁴

- (5.) SUGGESTIONS.—It is considered expedient to have a nursing system founded upon the principles of the Nightingale Fund—which principles are laid down in a pamphlet which will be found in the Appendix.¹ The efficiency of the system is weakened by the personal interference of the directors with the nurses.² There is not a sufficient staff of sisters.³ Mr. Roberts thinks that the nurses should sleep in the wards, but Miss Osburn doubts the desirability of such a change, and points out, moreover, that it could not be carried out here.⁴ Some witnesses think that wardsmen should be employed for male wards; others, that there should be a porter to assist in the wards when needed.⁵

Under any system of hospital management that may be selected, it is absolutely necessary to have a female head of the nursing staff—a lady in the position of matron or lady superintendent, who shall have the direction of the nursing and the care of the sick. “The office of lady superintendent,” says Miss Garrett, “is one which should be held by a trained and qualified person, and the salary should be what a lady of the educated class would be glad to take.”* She should possess peculiar, and not easily acquired qualifications. Though versed in all the duties of an ordinary nurse, she should, in social degree and in the culture of her mind, be very much superior to an ordinary nurse; otherwise she would not have the power of commanding respect and obedience from her subordinates. Refined and educated persons have always a strong moral influence over their inferiors in station, and the latter will submit willingly—nay almost involuntarily—to those in whom they recognize a superior intelligence. The converse of this principle is equally true, and is more frequently proved by every-day experience. Place an ill-educated and unintelligent person in a position of command, and there will speedily be discontent, if not revolt, among the subordinates. It is contrary to human nature that a man should obey cheerfully and without criticism, the orders of a superior whose vulgarity and want of intelligence excite his contempt.

Restrained by a strict discipline, the inferior may promptly execute such a person's commands; but let the discipline be relaxed, and the opportunity for resistance be given, and the smothered discontent at once makes itself apparent.

The duties of the nursing staff are in our opinion discharged in a highly satisfactory manner, under the efficient management of Miss Osburn.

Several witnesses gave evidence to the effect that the lady superintendent was so ignorant of her duties, and so negligent in discharging them, that she was, in their opinion, unfit for her position. Having, however, carefully considered these accusations, we are of opinion that they are entirely refuted by the evidence; and no better proof can be given of her ability to discharge the duties of her office than the fact, so clearly apparent in our examination of the Infirmary, that the department of the internal economy under her control was the only one effectively administered. The charges also made against her of sectarian partiality, of tyranny, and of abusing her office by making a profit on the sale of clothing to her nurses, are not supported by any evidence worthy of attention.

One or two members of the honorary medical staff have indeed come into collision with the lady superintendent. The most remarkable instance of such difference appears to have arisen from the refusal on her part to allow one of the best nurses to go out of the hospital for the purpose of attending on a private patient of a member of the honorary staff on his mere demand. An officer whose duty it is to regard the general welfare of an institution as of more importance than pleasing individuals, is not unlikely to make some enemies; and we think one who so discharges the obligations of duty, at the risk of giving offence, is entitled to commendation rather than blame.

Though there are several witnesses who condemn the nursing system which is carried out in the Sydney Infirmary, we have been left somewhat in the dark as to the particular system or systems which these witnesses prefer. The evidence being thus barren of suggestion, we have sought elsewhere for some basis, whereon to ground our recommendations as to the continuance of the existing method of nursing, or the adoption of a new one.

At the outset we have a pretty general expression of opinion in favour of female nurses being employed in general wards. There are but four witnesses who advocate the employment of wardsmen in male wards; and among those who take the opposite view there are some who profess themselves unable to understand how any other than female nursing can be efficient. Going beyond the evidence for confirmation of this view, we take the following principles, which were laid down by Messrs. Bristowe and Holmes, in their Report to the Privy Council on Hospitals of the United Kingdom:—

We need perhaps scarcely express the opinion that nurses of civil hospitals (except possibly in certain special cases) ought to be women. The peculiar instincts and moral qualities of the female mind especially adapt women for ministering to the wants of the sick.

The duties which nurses have to perform are important duties, and ought only to be entrusted to women of a certain character of mind.

• No woman, however admirably adapted by nature to be a nurse she may be, can be an efficient nurse without some experience or some special training.*

There is at hand abundant evidence—if any be needed—that these words express the opinions of most intelligent and experienced persons who have bestowed attention upon the subject. Miss Elizabeth Garrett, in a paper upon “Hospital Nursing,” read before the National Association for the promotion of Social Science, says—“Thanks to Miss Nightingale, most people have some idea of what nursing should be—every one wishes it to be good, and every one agrees that, to be so, it should be in the hands of trustworthy and intelligent women.”† Dr. Franklyn, Dr. Stewart, Mr. Bracebridge, Dr. Ogle, Dr. Routh, and Dr. Rendle, all express concurrence in this sentiment.‡ In fact, the difficulty would be to find, amongst English physicians and surgeons, any men of standing in their profession who do not concur in this.

The soundness of the system of female nursing being thus established, we come now to the mode of application; and here, also, there are very slight divergencies of opinion to be noticed. There are some persons who regard “unpaid lady nurses”—volunteers as they are called—as in every way admirable. Miss Nightingale is credited with an opinion of this sort; but, from perusal of her writings, we believe, that if she ever had such a notion, she has long ago abandoned it. Miss Garrett argues very strongly against unpaid lady nurses. Though she admits the advantage to be gained by the employment of ladies as nurses, still she contends that the volunteer system is bad. "If the highest work," she says "is to be done at all, those capable of doing it must be content to leave the easier work to others—to recognize that they are bound not to do it but to leave it undone for the sake of those to whom it is the highest possible" * * It is not true that hospital nursing cannot be well done by women of inferior rank and culture, and therefore it cannot be entirely desirable that those of a higher class should spend their time in doing it."* At the same time it should be borne in mind that there is a part of the hospital nursing service which should be undertaken by ladies, and which ladies alone are fitted to undertake—the supervision. It has been spoken of by the Lancet as "the very best nursing that England has yet seen," and its efficiency is attested by facts and experience.

For the supply of really skilful nurses, who shall attend to all the practical details involved in the care of the sick, we must look to the results of the Nightingale training system. Upon this point Messrs. Bristowe and Holmes put forward several general propositions, indicating the conditions under which a good nursing service may be secured. They are:—

1. That nurses should be specially educated. It is only of late years that medical men have been required to undergo a course of instruction in a hospital, and at the present time it is acknowledged that no man is competent to act as a physician or surgeon who has not been specially educated for the purpose; and further, that no large hospital is efficiently worked without it has associated with it a class of medical students. All this is applicable to the question of nursing. Nurses have not, it is true, been hitherto specially educated; but they ought to be educated; they ought to be educated in hospitals, where alone they can have adequate instruction; and we are satisfied that this course, systematically pursued, will gradually tend to elevate the character and position of nurses, and that a school of nurses will bring with it to the institution to which it is attached analogous advantages to those which accrue from a school for the education of medical pupils. The Nightingale fund has for two or three years past been partly expended in a system of educating nurses at St. Thomas's Hospital. The plan has succeeded admirably well in that institution; and we are bound to add, that in the course of our visits to the provincial hospitals, we frequently met with nurses who had received their education there, and we were invariably assured that these nurses were in all respects far above the average of ordinary hospital nurses.

2. That nurses should be relieved of all duties but those strictly belonging to their office. For example. It should be no part of their duty to perform the functions of a scrubber; and that they should not be expected to do more work than common sense and experience shows that they are physically capable of doing efficiently.

3. That they should live on the premises and board there; and that they should be thoroughly well cared for.†

With all this mass of testimony in its favour, and with absolutely nothing whatever in depreciation of it, the Nightingale Training and Nursing system may fairly be considered as answering all practical requirements. We must at any rate accept that system in default of a better, and we certainly have failed to discover that there is any better system in existence.

This, we believe, to be the system which Miss Osburn has endeavoured to carry out in the Sydney Infirmary; and though in some minor matters of detail she has been unable, from external circumstances, to adhere rigidly to every point here laid down, the good effect of the introduction of the system here has been made abundantly clear.

The members of both the official and honorary medical staff concur in speaking of the nursing at the present time, in terms of approbation varying from simple satisfaction to an expression of opinion that it is so perfect as to be "incapable of improvement." Amongst the thousands of cases nursed in the hospital during a period of five years, by a staff of over twenty nurses, many necessarily inexperienced at the commencement of a new system, it would be indeed surprising if some instances of forgetfulness and carelessness could not be found, but the very small number of such instances cited in no way affects the general tenor of the evidence. Under these circumstances, we have not allowed our minds to be biassed by an alleged expression of regret by Miss Nightingale at the results attained by the nursing staff sent out by her, as it seems to have been founded on the unfortunate dissension which arose amongst the sisters who have since left the Infirmary, and ought therefore to have no weight in our judgment upon the nursing as now conducted.

The general aspect of the wards is clean and cheerful, and in that respect, as well as in the whole character of the nursing, there is, in the opinion of the whole of the medical staff, a vast improvement upon the state of things existing before the arrival of Miss Osburn. It is to be regretted, however, that the design entertained by the Government in first introducing the Nightingale system of nursing—of training nurses for country hospitals, should have been discountenanced by the Board, and that the efforts of the lady superintendent to instruct her nurses by lectures on subjects connected with their duties should have been thwarted.

A statement having been made that much dissension and ill-feeling existed amongst members of the staff, we thought it our duty to inquire into it. Having examined all the head nurses and every nurse in the hospital on this point, we find the statement to be entirely without foundation, and are of opinion that the members of the nursing staff are working together with the harmony and good-will which is necessary for success in the discharge of their kindly and womanly duties.

V.—THE TITLE OF "SISTER."

- (1.) GENERAL USE.—The title of "Sister" is used in almost all the English hospitals and has been commonly applied to head nurses for many years. It is also in vogue in the hospitals of Germany.¹
- (2.) ORIGIN.—There is in the hospital of St. Thomas, now, printed in black-letter, and more than two centuries old, a set of rules for the guidance of the "ward sisters" and nurses.²

The change, about twelve months ago, from the title "sister" to that of "head nurse" was in our opinion inexpedient, and made without sufficient reason. The evidence shows that the alteration of the title, by doing away with the recognition of official rank, has weakened the influence and authority of these officers over the nurses and patients. All the medical witnesses who have given evidence on this point concur with the head nurses in this opinion. By lowering their status, the position has been made less an object of ambition amongst those who by education and character are best fitted for the office ; and the lady superintendent informs us that since the change she has found a difficulty in inducing fit persons to train for a position the title of which practically allows them to be addressed as if they were servants and not officers of the institution. We need not point out how desirable it is to attract to the Public Service in our Charities, ladies capable, by their intellectual attainments and moral power, of maintaining discipline and exercising the administrative authority of a ward sister. As a hospital title of rank it first appears in a charter granted by Edward VI to St. Thomas's Hospital, London ; has since then been adopted in all the large London hospitals ; and we know of none better to denote that distinction of official rank which it is desirable to maintain for the sake of discipline.¹

VI.—THE DIVISION OF AUTHORITY.

- (1.) ORIGIN.—There is a very evident clashing of authority between the manager and the lady superintendent, which appears to have arisen from the non-definition of each officer's duties, and a species of petty jealousy, which has been abundantly manifested.²
- (2.) EVIL EFFECTS.—There is no proper control over the servants of the institution, no clearly defined responsibility, and a disposition on the part of the subordinates to consider themselves as the employés of individual officers rather than of the institution. Numerous instances are cited in which men-servants have refused to obey the lady superintendent's orders, because those orders did not come from the manager. The clashing of authority has also led to the adoption of a bad system of supplying diets to the patients, and to the stoppage of supplies of linseed, tow, &c., to the surgical wards. The nursing system generally is detrimentally affected by it.³ Mr. Blackstone denies two of the allegations made with reference to this matter.⁴

We find that one cause of the disorganized state of the Infirmary is the existence of a divided authority between the manager and the lady superintendent.

It appears that some years ago the internal management of the hospital was principally confided to a matron, and that its financial and out-door affairs were attended to by a clerk or secretary, acting under the committee. In consequence of public complaints arising from the imperfection of the nursing as carried on by wardsmen and untrained nurses, it was then determined by the administration of Sir James Martin, in which Mr. Parkes was Colonial Secretary, that the Nightingale system should be introduced ; and, in pursuance of the reform so originated, the present lady superintendent was sent out by Miss Nightingale on the application of the Government.

In the meantime the office of manager was created by the committee of the Infirmary. On

On his appointment much of the power formerly exercised by the matron appears to have passed into his hands; and on the arrival of the lady superintendent, this authority, which should naturally have been transferred to her, remained with him. Certain by-laws and regulations were indeed passed, affecting to define the limits of their respective authorities, but they are either so indefinite or ill-conceived as to make it doubtful with whom the responsibility rests to get particular work done, or they impose it on the wrong officer. The result is a constant clashing of authority between the manager and the lady superintendent. As the management of the internal economy of the wards naturally lies with the head of the nursing staff, most of the orders required to be given for the welfare of the patients must come to the servants of the hospital from the lady superintendent. The servants, however, seem to think that they are only bound to take their orders from the manager. They evidently regard themselves as the servants of Mr. Blackstone rather than of the institution. Engaged by him and paid by him, they openly state that they are his servants and not Miss Osburn's, and that whilst bound to obey him they only comply with her requests as a matter of favour. A spirit of insubordination against the authority of the lady superintendent has thus grown up. The result is most disastrous to the working of the hospital and the welfare of the patients. We need only to refer to two or three instances illustrating this.

A woman suffering from erysipelas was admitted as a patient. The rules of the hospital requiring her to be placed in a tent, the evidence goes to show that she was obliged to remain twenty-four hours in an open verandah and a bath-room, because, in spite of every effort made by Miss Osburn, the men servants could not be got to put up the tent required. In another instance, ice was urgently required on a Sunday morning for a patient brought in with an injured skull. In the absence of the manager, a man servant refused to go for it because the order was brought to him by a nurse from the lady superintendent. Only when hunted up by Miss Osburn herself, and peremptorily ordered to go for the ice, did he think fit to comply.

Again, it appears from the evidence of the doctors and nursing staff that the cooking, especially of delicacies, for weak or dying patients, is at times so bad that they cannot be induced to touch them. The cooks, however, are under the manager, and if Miss Osburn complains to him on the subject, he says he knows nothing about cooking, whilst the lady superintendent, who has learnt this as part of her training to fit her for office, has no power to interfere, telling us that she cannot go into the kitchen for fear of exposing herself to impertinence, on the ground that she has no business there.

Having given a very anxious and careful consideration to this question of divided authority, and the best mode of remedying the evil, we have come to the conclusion that the office of manager should be abolished, and the duties now discharged by him should be redistributed between the lady superintendent and a paid secretary. The time of the gentleman now holding the office of clerk to the manager is at present much taken up as a collector of subscriptions, but we think this work might as advantageously be done by a collector, paid by a commission. Relieved of this duty, he would then, as secretary, have time to attend to the admission and discharge of patients, and the financial and out-door business, which at present is transacted by the manager. For the proper performance of all such duties, as well as for the general state of the grounds, drains, offices, officers' quarters, and dead-house, and the proper discharge of the storekeeper's duties, the secretary should be immediately responsible to the Board, whilst the lady superintendent should should be directly responsible for the management and discipline of the wards and patients, the nursing and the cooking,—all servants of the institution engaged in these departments being paid by and responsible to her. With regard to the nursing staff, she would be left, as now, practically absolute in authority, but reporting everything to the Board; with regard to men servants under her, it is proposed simply to give her the power to suspend, pending a final decision by the Board.

In proposing this redistribution of duties, we have been largely influenced by the opinions of Miss Nightingale as to the best mode of administering hospital affairs, as they are both supported by reason and common sense, and are of authority in themselves, coming as they do from one who has done more for the reform and improvement of hospital management than any who have dealt with the subject.

Miss Nightingale's opinions on the relation of hospital management to efficient nursing are so concise and so entirely to the point that we give them in full, as best indicating the position which the lady superintendent should occupy with reference to the governing body, the medical staff, and the secretary.

II. RELATION OF HOSPITAL MANAGEMENT TO EFFICIENT NURSING.

Equal in importance to the provision of trained nurses is the nature of the hospital authority under which these nurses are to perform their duties; for unless an understanding is come to on this point the very existence of good nursing is an impossibility.

In dealing with this question, I may state at once that to turn any number of trained nurses into any infirmary to act under the superintendence or instructions of any master, or matron, or medical officer, would be sheer waste of good money.

This is not matter of opinion, but of fact and experience.

The "original sin" of this part of the infirmary system, or no system, has been,—

1. The nature of the authority.
2. The nature of the nursing material on which the authority has been exercised.

Experienced administrators will scarcely suppose that I mean to imply an independence, and to ask for uncontrolled hospital authority, for the nursing staff, in what I have said.

On the contrary:—Vest the charge of financial matters and general supervision and the whole administration of the infirmary in the Board or committee, i.e., in the officer who is responsible to that Board or committee. Vest the whole responsibility for nursing, internal management, for discipline, and training (if there be a training school) of nurses in the one female head of the nursing staff, whatever she is called.

The necessity of this again is not matter of opinion, but of fact and experience. I will enter a little more fully into this, viz., the relation which the nursing establishment ought to bear to the government of the hospital.

The matron or nursing superintendent must be held responsible for her own efficiency, and the efficiency of all her nurses and servants. As regards the medical officers, she must be responsible that their orders about the treatment of the sick are strictly carried out.

To the governing body of the hospital she shall be held responsible for the conduct, discipline, and duties of her nurses, for the discipline of her sick wards, for their cleanliness, for the care and cleanliness of sick, for proper ventilation and warming of wards, for the administration of diets and medicines, of enemas, &c., the performance of minor dressings, and the like, for the care of linen and bedding, &c., and probably of patients' clothing.

The duties which each grade has to perform should be laid down by regulation, and all that the medical department or the governing body of the hospital has a right to require is that the regulation duties shall be faithfully performed.

Any remissness or neglect of duty is a breach of discipline, as well as drunkenness or other bad conduct, and can only be dealt with to any good purpose by report to the superintendent of nurses of the infirmary.

I may perhaps again point out that the superintendent should herself be responsible to the constituted hospital authorities, and that all her nurses and servants should, in the performance of these duties, be responsible to the superintendent only.

No good ever comes of the constituted authorities placing themselves in the office which they have sanctioned her occupying.

No good ever comes of any one interfering between the head of the nursing establishment and her nurses. It is fatal to discipline.

All complaints on any subject should be made directly to the superintendent, and not to any nurse or servant.

She should be made responsible, too, for her results and not for her methods.

Of course, if she does not exercise the authority entrusted to her with judgment and discretion, it is then the legitimate province of the governing body to interfere, and to remove her.

It is necessary to dwell strongly on this point, because there has been not unfrequently a disposition shown to make the nursing establishment responsible on the side of discipline to the medical officer, or the governor of a hospital.

Any attempt to introduce such a system would be merely to try anew and fail anew in an attempt which has frequently been made. In disciplinary matters a woman only can understand a woman.

It is the duty of the medical officer to give what orders, in regard to the sick, he thinks fit to the nurses; and it is unquestionably the duty of the nurses to obey or to see his orders carried out.

Simplicity of rules, placing the nurses in all matters regarding management of sick absolutely under the orders of the medical men, and in all disciplinary matters absolutely under the female superintendent (matron), to whom the medical officers should report all cases of neglect, is very important. At the outset there must be a clear and recorded definition of the limits of these two classes of jurisdiction.

But neither the medical officer nor any other male head should ever have power to punish for disobedience. His duty should end with reporting the case to the female head, who, as already stated, is responsible to the governing authority of the hospital.

The powers thus proposed to be vested in the lady superintendent are somewhat similar to those exercised by the matron before the appointment of the manager.

VII.—THE DIETS.

- (1.) THE DIETARY SCALE.—There are five diets, distinguished as (1), full; (2), house; (3), simple; (4), low; (5), milk. The No. 2, or house diet, is the one most commonly in use, and it consists of, for breakfast, 6 oz. bread, $\frac{1}{2}$ oz. butter, 16 oz. tea; for dinner, 6 oz. meat, and 6 oz. of vegetables on five days of the week, with 16 oz. soup and 10 oz. bread pudding on the other two, and 4 oz. bread daily; for supper, 6 oz. bread, $\frac{1}{2}$ oz. butter, 16 oz. tea. The full diet allows meat for breakfast, and a little more bread, meat, and vegetables, for dinner. The simple diet is a decreased allowance of these articles. The low diet is nothing but bread and tea. The milk diet substitutes milk for tea. With the first three diets no extras can be ordered; but with the last two, the doctors may give any extras they please.¹
- (2.) SYSTEM OF SUPPLY.—The house steward receives daily the cards upon which alterations of the diets are ordered, and from these cards he compiles lists of the diets required, which lists are handed to the cook, together with the articles of food required for the day's consumption. The meat is sent up into the wards in joints, which are carved by the head nurses.² The lady superintendent introduced a system by which the head nurses made out diet lists for their several wards, the house steward supplying what was ordered on those lists. This was a far superior plan to the present one.³
- (3.) IRREGULARITIES.—Owing to the defects in the present system of making up the diet lists, all kinds of irregularities occur. Diets are sent to wrong wards. Sometimes too many, sometimes too few are supplied. A ward has been left without any bread at all. A dish never ordered for any one was sent into a ward

ward for three weeks continuously. Diets are constantly being provided for patients who have left the hospital. A chop ordered daily for six days was never sent up once. One of the head nurses made quite a collection of eggs that were supplied in excess of the proper quantity, and another has a quart of milk to spare every evening. The waste is said to be very great.¹ Three witnesses question whether these irregularities have occurred.²

- (4.) EXTRAVAGANCES.—The manager orders from the butcher double the quantity of meat allowed to the patients. Thus, if the aggregated diets amount to 100 lbs. of meat, 200 lbs. are ordered. The allowance for bone and loss in cooking is 100 per cent.³ Complaint is made of certain extravagances on the part of the doctors in ordering extras,⁴ but the allegations are denied.⁵
- (5.) QUALITY.—Much exception is taken to the quality and the method of serving up the food; the meat being sometimes boiled black, the tea sloppy, and the potatoes bad.⁶ Some witnesses, however, say that the provisions are good, but carelessly prepared.⁷ Dr. Halket considers the diet superior to that of most English hospitals.⁸
- (6.) COOKING.—The cook-house being in a very defective state, and ill supplied with appliances, the cooking is not very good.⁹

The dietary scale of the Sydney Infirmary is liberal, but not excessive. When compared with the diets allowed to patients in English hospitals, there does not appear to be any very great difference. Less meat is given in England, and more bread—the average allowance of the former being from 4 to 6 ounces, and of the latter from 8 to 16 ounces; and it is worthy of notice that while in English institutions the scale gives the weight of the uncooked meat allowed, here the allowance is specified as so many ounces of cooked meat. This makes the liberality of the diets here much greater; for the patient who, in the Sydney Infirmary, would receive 6 ounces of cooked meat, could in no London hospital, except the Royal Free Hospital, receive more than the same quantity of raw meat. The allowance would, therefore, be about one-third less, that being the estimated loss by bone and cooking. One marked difference between the Infirmary here and the English hospitals is to be found in the discretions permitted to medical men in the ordering of extras. There are two of the Infirmary diet scales—Nos. 4 and 5—which are merely skeletons, which the doctors are allowed to fill out in any way they choose. With regard to these two diets, they indeed act as if there were no diet scale at all, and may order any conceivable thing they please. Now, the practice of most English hospitals is to have diet scales, which embrace the requirements of all classes of patients as nearly as possible, and which include many things which medical men here order as extras. Thus, if a patient were on low diet, the articles most proper for his condition would be prescribed upon the diet scale; in the Sydney Infirmary such a patient would, by the diet scale, be allowed nothing but a little bread and tea; and numerous articles necessary for his sustenance would be provided as extras, at the doctor's discretion.

We print a comparative statement showing the diets allowed in some of the principal Metropolitan, Provincial, and Rural Institutions of England.

† Cooked.

There has been, for some years past, a tendency to make the diets of hospital patients more liberal, and this has been particularly noticeable in the matter of stimulants. The statistics of English hospitals show that every year the allowance of stimulants to patients is becoming more liberal; and the increased supplies of aliment are proportionate.* We have no reason to believe that stimulants are, as some persons have stated, administered to inmates of the Sydney Infirmary with any extravagance.

Miss Nightingale draws special attention to the necessity of the food of sick people being well cooked and regularly supplied. She attaches the very greatest importance to this, and contends that in many cases human lives, which might otherwise be saved, are sacrificed to—(1) defects in cooking, (2) defects in choice of diet, and (3) defects in choice of hours for taking diet. "Surely," she says "many lives might be saved by drawing a closer distinction; for the remedies are as diverse as the causes. The remedy for the first is to cook better; for the second, to choose other articles of diet; and for the third, to watch the hours when the patient is in want of food." †

The mode in which the diets are administered in the Sydney Infirmary is very unsatisfactory, and gives rise to the most culpable irregularities. The present system of making out the diet lists appears to us to be altogether wrong in theory, as it certainly is defective in practice.

The diet ordered for every patient is written on a card placed at the head of his bed, and called the bed-card. At one time, summaries of the diets required for the day were made up by the head nurses. As they knew of any change made by the medical men, the work was easy to them, and the diets were regularly supplied on the summaries so made out. These officers knowing the exact requirements of the patients, there was also the opportunity afforded of exercising some economy. For instance, if thirty patients in a ward were on one diet, and the head nurse found from experience that the amount of food required for twenty such diets was all that was really consumed, she used only to order the quantity actually found to be necessary. This system of the head nurses or sisters making out the summaries for the diets prevails in English hospitals, and was introduced by the lady superintendent. For some reason, unexplained to us, it was abolished by the committee, and the present unsatisfactory system introduced. Now, instead of the head nurses making up summaries of the diets required, a boy goes to the wards daily, and is supposed to collect all the bed-cards in which a change of diet has been made. These cards, whatever their number, are taken to the house steward, who, from them, by himself makes up the diet lists of the day. The result is that sometimes five or six diets are short for one ward, or patients do not get for days the diets ordered, or diets which have ceased to be required are still sent up. Much food is either wasted by this needless supply, or, as was explained before, by the actual number of diets shown by the cards being sent up, whereas a much smaller quantity of food would suffice. There is, moreover, no check upon the storekeeper, as he can, if called upon to account for any stores, say they have been consumed in diets, whereas the summaries formerly made up by the head nurses would, if kept, show the quantity of stores actually required in the wards.

Another objection, made by the medical men, is the inconvenience caused by the cards being out of the ward with the steward, when they are required for reference as to the patient's prescription, which is also written upon them. For all these reasons, we are of opinion that the old system of the summaries being made up by the head nurses should be revived, and the summaries kept by the secretary. We are of opinion, also, that a more minute inquiry than could be made by us should be instituted, by some responsible officer in daily attendance at the Infirmary, into the amount of butcher's meat actually consumed in the wards. The manager is at present in the habit of ordering 200 lbs for every 100 lbs. required in diets. This allowance for waste appears to us excessive, as the evidence before us shows that in other public institutions an allowance of 33½ per cent. is found ample for the loss in bone and cooking.

VIII.—THE HOUSE STEWARD.

- (1.) DUTIES.—The house steward, or storekeeper, has charge of all the provisions and other stores, except clothing. He compiles the diet-lists from the patients, bed-cards, issues the provisions to the cook, makes requisitions to the manager for what stores are required, receives and takes account of the goods that are sent in from time to time, and issues the wines, spirits, &c., to the patients, in obedience to the doctor's orders. He takes stock once a year, and sometimes submits statements to the committee.¹
- (2.) SYSTEM OF ACCOUNTS.—The house steward keeps a great many stock-books—more than twenty—which might easily be condensed into two or three. His books are never examined, and the whole system is very unsatisfactory.²
- (3.) ISSUE OF STORES UNCHECKED.—There is no check whatever upon the issue of stores by the house steward, who sends up diets, or withholds them, in accordance with lists made out by himself, from the patients' bed-cards. These lists remain in the house steward's custody, and are not inspected or verified by any one.³
- (4.) WINES AND SPIRITS.—There is great confusion in the wines and spirits account. The liquor, though actually in the house steward's store, is supposed to be in the custody of the manager. No account whatever is kept of the wine issued to the manager and resident medical officers; and, though that wine is kept in the house steward's store, and issued by him to the officers six bottles at a time, he denies all knowledge of it.⁴

The storekeeper's department is not, in our opinion, managed as it should be. There has been no proper stock-taking for upwards of five years, and no check whatever exists upon the storekeeper. The system of book-keeping is rude and imperfect, and was found so unintelligible by us that we thought it our duty to employ the services of a professional accountant to report upon it. His report will be found attached to the evidence. The present system of book-keeping appears to have been adopted by the house steward, on the suggestion of the manager, and should be abolished, the system recommended by the accountant being established in its place.

IX.—THE DISPENSARY.

- (1.) THE DISPENSERS.—There are two dispensers, who have to do the whole work of the department, making up prescriptions for both inmates of the Infirmary and for out-door patients. One of them has also to attend a Branch Dispensary at some distance from the Infirmary, for two hours every afternoon. The dispensers are very much overworked.¹
- (2.) DEFICIENCIES.—The Dispensary is small, inconvenient, and unprovided with necessary conveniences. There is no proper messenger to convey medicines to the wards and bring down the prescriptions; small, weakly boys of ten or twelve years old (ex-patients) performing that duty.²
- (3.) PRESCRIPTIONS.—No record of the prescriptions dispensed is kept. The prescriptions are written upon the patients' bed-cards, which bed-cards are brought down to the dispensers, who copy off the prescriptions, which they affix to the bottles containing the medicines. Some of them contain sixteen ingredients; and chlorodyne is said to be used, rather than a cheaper and equally efficacious substitute. The medicines are properly dispensed.³
- (4.) ERRORS AND DELAYS.—Many mistakes are made in sending the medicines up to the wards. Physic is sent to wrong wards very frequently. Delays are also common; blisters and lotions are sometimes not received in the wards for twenty-four hours after they are ordered; and there is great difficulty in getting the doctors' orders promptly executed.⁴
- (5.) ISSUE OF DRUGS UNCHECKED.—There are no means of checking the issue of the medicines, and it seems to be impossible to devise any. The drugs are imported, and stock is taken once a year.⁵
- (6.) SUGGESTIONS.—The Dispensary should be remodelled, and properly fitted up; there should be an additional dispenser; and a pharmacopœia—such as is adopted in all the London hospitals—should be compiled.⁶

First, as to the establishment of a check upon the issue of drugs, we find it extremely difficult to make any confident recommendation. It appears that, from the nature of the business of dispensing—the variety of drugs, and the minute quantities of some, used in compounding a single prescription—the keeping of a record as to the consumption of medical stock would be a very troublesome and laborious, if not impossible work. The prescriptions of some of the doctors contain many ingredients—we were shown one that comprised sixteen—and frequently many of those ingredients are infinitesimal in quantity and in value. It will thus be at once apparent that, to keep an account of the issue of every grain, or drop, of every component part of each of the 200 prescriptions that are dispensed at the Infirmary daily, would be a rather formidable task. It has been suggested that it might be accomplished, if printed forms properly headed and subdivided were used; but we hesitate to advise such a course, and are rather inclined to think that there is really no practical way of overcoming this difficulty.

The numerous and culpable irregularities which have characterized the supply of medicine to the wards may be dealt with much more easily. The whole secret of these irregularities seems, to us, to lie in the deficiencies of the dispensary—the overworking of the dispensers, and the employment of small boys to carry medicines to the wards. There can be no doubt that the dispensary is small, inconvenient, and unprovided with necessary fittings; that the dispensers, of whom there are two, are overworked, as they have, in addition to the out- and in-door dispensing at the Infirmary, to attend to a branch dispensary at Redfern; and there certainly can be no doubt that boys of nine and ten years old, having no conception of the responsibilities of their position, are not the proper persons to entrust with that power of life and death which is frequently involved in the prompt administration of medicines.

The remedies for this state of things, which naturally suggest themselves to us, are:—1st. The appointment of a second assistant dispenser, which we conceive to be an absolute necessity. 2nd. The employment of an adult messenger to convey medicines to the wards. 3rd. The adoption of a hospital formula, such as is used at all the London hospitals, and which would obviate, in many cases, the delays in compounding prescriptions.

In connection with the dispensing, we would suggest that the practice, formerly in force, of furnishing the wards with a weekly supply of articles in constant use, such as linseed and tow, should be revived, as it appears that much inconvenience and trouble has been occasioned by its ill-advised discontinuance. The suggestions of the dispenser for the improvement of the dispensary should also be carried out. A chair for carrying helpless patients from the front of the building to the wards is much needed, and we think that authority should be given to the resident surgeon to procure necessary instruments when required, as well as mechanical appliances required by crippled patients after their recovery from accidents.

X.—THE OUT-DOOR DISPENSING.

- (1.) BRANCH DISPENSARY.—There is a Branch Dispensary in Regent-street, Redfern, for the supply of medicines to out-patients. It is a small and inconvenient place, not fitted for the purpose for which it is used. It is furnished with drugs from the Infirmary; and the dispensing is done by one or other of the Infirmary dispensers, who visit the Branch every afternoon.¹
- (2.) OUT-PATIENTS.—A very large number of persons are supplied with medical attendance and medicines, free of charge. Some attend at the Infirmary, and at the Branch Dispensary; others are visited at their own homes. None of these persons pay any fee to the institution. There are six district surgeons who attend these patients, and are paid £50 a year each.²
- (3.) ABUSES.—The Branch Dispensary, which is said to be “pauperizing the district” in which it is established, seems to be particularly open to imposition.³
- (4.) SUGGESTIONS.—Some of the evidence recommends the abolition of the Branch Dispensary, but the greater part of it favours the continuance of the establishment, and the adoption of means to check abuses. It is considered to be a convenience to the public. Some limit should be placed on the issue of out-patients’ patients' orders, and the arrangements of the Branch Dispensary require improvement. Mr. Roberts suggests the establishment of self-supporting dispensaries; and Dr. Pattieson thinks that patients suffering from certain diseases should be made to pay a small fee; also, that the prescriptions should remain in the custody of the patients.¹

In associating with such an institution as the Sydney Infirmary a system of out-door relief, intended for the succour of the pauper sick, the example of many of the great London institutions has been imitated. And, as tending to show how largely like causes produce similar effects in different states of society, it is curious to note that the moral results of the system are the same here as they are in London. It has exercised an evil influence upon the public on both sides of the World. It has not only tended towards the impoverishment of the Hospital, but to the creation of a spirit of pauperism among the people. The evidence before us shows that the Dispensary—and especially the Branch Dispensary at Redfern—is systematically imposed upon, by persons of ample means obtaining there the relief which is intended only for the destitute. The information we have gained as to the Free Dispensaries of London is but another and larger edition of the same story of demoralization and abuse. There it is said to be no uncommon thing for persons who are earning £2 or £3 per week to go to a Free Dispensary “entirely as a matter of principle, and as they believe of right. This is the proceeding which engenders a sense of dependence. These people come first to the dispensaries, next to the hospitals, and then to the pauper surgeons. When you consider that in London 200,000 orders are given per annum to the Poor Law Medical Officers, you will perceive the enormous amount of gratuitous advice which is demoralizing the poor.” There were treated at St. Bartholomew's Hospital alone in 1868 no less than 90,000 out-patients, no care being taken as to the class of persons who are permitted to avail themselves of that Charity. Mr. C. E. Mathews, in a very able paper, read before the British National Association for promoting Social Science, asserts that in no English hospital was the out-door relief department ever administered with success. In the course of the discussion upon that paper, Dr. Rumsey, the President of the Association, said,—“The great rock of offence is the out-patient department. We have heard that in some hospitals as many as sixty patients are seen in an hour. I have witnessed that myself, and I must say that it is an awful farce.” Dr. Stewart, on the same occasion, said,—“I am convinced that the system of free dispensaries is the most efficient means for creating paupers that can be devised.”† Experience, then, in England has proved that this kind of charity is open to much abuse, and, if not carefully watched over, that it is calculated to create a spirit of pauperism, by destroying independence and self-respect and discouraging provident habits.

The out-door relief department of the Sydney Infirmary seems to be subject to similar abuses, and to be bringing about similar results. We have had brought under our notice impositions and errors which tend to confirm the above-quoted opinions as to the evil effects upon the people, in a moral point of view, of free dispensaries. There are crowds of applicants for the relief that they afford, and there is but too much reason to believe that the majority of those applicants, though professing themselves paupers, are well able to pay for medical assistance. There are grounds for the presumption that employers of labour sometimes use their power of of issuing out-patients' recommendations in order to provide their workmen with medical aid; and there is abundant proof that many subscribers give orders for relief far in excess of the number which they are entitled to give.

The subscribers to St. George's Hospital, London, are so sensible of the extent to which this form of charity is abused, that they have determined to give up the power of issuing orders to out-door patients. Under the auspices of a very energetic organization, styled "The Charity Organization Society," self-supporting dispensaries for the poor are being extensively established in London and other places. The principle on which these provident dispensaries are worked is, that medicines are only issued to the poor on the payment of some small sum such as a shilling a month, a system of inquiry being established by local committees as to the position of the applicants for this sort of charity.

We are of opinion that this system should be tried in the out-door dispensing, as, if successful in England, it can hardly fail here, where the working classes as a body are so much better off than in the Mother Country. We cannot shut our eyes to the fact that there is a spirit of pauperism growing up amongst us, and that if our Medical and other Charities are not carefully watched over, they may become a means of demoralizing our population, by the facilities for abuse which they offer. Startling as it may seem, it would appear that the proportion of paupers in England and Wales receiving in-door relief was, in 1865, 1 in every 187 of the population, whilst upon the 31st December, 1867, it was in New South Wales 1 in every 176 of the population. It also appears, from the evidence of the Registrar General, that the number of persons in 1872 receiving aid from orphan and industrial schools and hospitals was 4 per cent. We of course do not lose sight of the peculiar circumstances which in this Country have tended to bring together a large number of the aged and infirm, and which, by weakening family ties and associations, tend to throw a number of children destitute on society; but we are seriously convinced that the tide of pauperism which ever accompanies the progress of settlement and population in a new Country is advancing with a rapidity in some measure due to our want of caution in too easily allowing the advantages of our charitable institutions to those whose honest spirit of independence, industrial habits and providence, should keep them above stooping to assistance of this sort.

The tendency to lower the wages of the working classes, arising from giving as charity what should be paid for from increased wages, is clearly established by the able Report of the Commission appointed to inquire into the English Poor Laws of 1832. In the words of a vigorous writer of the present day, "hospital relief is the inclined plane that leads to pauperism."

Should the provident system, recommended by us, not be adopted, it would be expedient—seeing that orders for out-door medical assistance are issued by some subscribers in larger numbers than are justified by the rules of the Infirmary, and often to persons not entitled to receive them—to check the issue of such orders, and to employ some officer from time to time in making inquiries as to the pecuniary position of persons seeking this kind of charity.

XI.—VERMIN IN THE WARDS.

(1.) CONDITION IN FORMER YEARS.—The Infirmary has been for many years past infested with vermin. There is evidence that it was so thirty-five years ago; and and Drs. Cox and Milford describe the verminous conditions of the wards in 1849 and 1850.¹

- (2.) EFFORTS TO ERADICATE.—The lady superintendent and her nursing staff have made repeated efforts to destroy the vermin; but the nuisance was of such magnitude that they were unable to cope with it; and, in the absence of any action by the committee, the wards continued in a more or less verminous state up to last March, when the building was thoroughly cleaned, plastered, and whitewashed.²
- (3.) CAUSES.—The building is constructed of rubble stones, and the walls being very old, the bugs made nests in the crevices, from which they could not be easily dislodged. The insects were also in the woodwork of the windows and doors. The keeping of verminous clothes in the basement of the southern wing may have, to some extent, assisted in increasing the nuisance.³

Our attention having been directed to the reports respecting the presence of vermin in the building, we have inquired into the matter, and find that at the present time, in consequence of some extensive cleaning operations in March last, the hospital is now as free from vermin as it can be, considering its age and the structure of the walls.

It appears from the evidence that the existence of the vermin has been known for many years past, and we cannot absolve the committee from blame for not having taken more decisive measures to abate the nuisance before.

From the evidence of Dr. Cox, Mr. Russell, the lady superintendent, and others, it seems that bugs in large swarms infested the wards at the time of the arrival of the nursing staff. The nuisance was verbally complained of to the committee on repeated occasions, by the head nurses and the lady superintendent, and the latter appears to have made three written reports, but no action seems to have been taken by the Board to get rid of the nuisance. So often did Miss Osburn complain that the committee appear to have got weary of the subject, and one member told her with some asperity that it was no use her mentioning it again.

It should be here stated that the bugs existed principally behind the plaster and skirtings, under the window-sills, and in crevices in the rubble walls, whence they issued chiefly at night. To this may in some measure be attributed the fact that the committee appeared to have paid little attention to the matter, and to have either considered the reports exaggerated, or to have determined on postponing the cleansing of the wards till the contemplated alterations were made in the building. On one occasion, the lady superintendent having employed the men-servants to get rid of the vermin, she was desired by an honorary secretary to refrain from so doing, as the manager had complained to the committee of this action on her part. The result of this inattention to the matter was that the bugs became an intolerable and disgusting nuisance. Under the circumstances before described, of their issuing from the walls by night, the most strenuous efforts of the nurses to keep the beds clean were quite ineffectual to check and impotent to get rid of the nuisance. Beds would be cleaned, and in twenty-four hours again infested with vermin, and only after the plaster was taken down in places and the walls pointed were they got under.

under. The vermin are still in the building; and the evidence of Mr. Mansfield, the architect, shows that they can only be effectually exterminated by entirely removing the plaster, taking out the window-frames, and replacing them by new ones.

XII.—THE PATIENTS' CLOTHES.

- (1.) CUSTODY.—The private clothes of patients entering the hospital are taken from them, and packed unwashed into a small shed, called the clothes-house. No attempt is made to clean or classify the clothes, which remain in the shed unwashed until the patients to whom they belong leave the hospital. The clothes-house is in charge of the bath-man, under the supervision of the manager.¹
- (2.) VERMINOUS CLOTHES.—Verminous clothes, if not too tattered to be preserved, are put uncleaned into a room in the basement of the south wing, immediately beneath the wards. Clothes which are too filthy and verminous for this place are sometimes destroyed. A patient going out might put on verminous clothes.²
- (3.) ABUSES.—Clothes worn by patients suffering all kinds of diseases are thrown into the clothes-house indiscriminately. Garments saturated with blood are rolled up and bundled unwashed into the shed, and are returned to the patient, on his discharge, in the same filthy state. Patients may wash their own clothes if they get the manager's permission, but that permission has sometimes been refused. The unwashed clothes of deceased patients are given away in charity without any reference to the disease of which the owners may have died.³
- (4.) SUGGESTIONS.—There should be disinfecting ovens to destroy insects and infection in clothes of persons entering the hospital. The clothes should be in charge of the lady superintendent, and should be washed at the expense of the institution.⁴

Reports having reached us that patients discharged from the Infirmary came to the Hyde Park Asylum infested with lice, we inquired into the mode in which the clothes worn by patients on their admission to the Infirmary were kept.

We were not long in discovering a very sufficient cause for the complaints above mentioned. It will hardly be credited that the clothes taken from patients on their admission are put away in bundles, unwashed, sometimes soaked in blood, often verminous, and are so kept as long as the patient remains in the hospital. We found on the premises a small unventilated building, filled from floor to ceiling with piles of clothes, stored up, festering in their filth. Some belonging to deceased patients had been there for years, and, monstrous as it may appear, such clothes, unwashed, coming from patients, suffering perchance from loathsome and contagious diseases, are, by way of charity, issued by the manager to poor but perhaps respectable patients when discharged from the hospital. Some rags, indeed, too filthy and disgusting to be kept even under this system of management, appear to have been at times burnt; but in another place, apart from the rest, because too excessively verminous, we found bundles of clothes kept unwashed and uncleaned in any way. The store reserved for the safe keeping of the pre-eminently verminous clothing was, strange to say, under the basement of the female wards. No comment is necessary on this state of things. We are of opinion that the care of the patients' clothing should, in future, devolve on the head of the nursing staff, as recommended by Miss Nightingale.

XIII.—THE PATIENTS.

- (1.) ADMISSION.—Members of the honorary medical staff attend daily at the Infirmary (each doctor taking a week in his turn) for the purpose of admitting patients. Persons who are desirous of entering the hospital present orders for admission signed by a subscriber to the institution, or a Colonial Secretary's order; and if there are beds vacant, and the honorary deems the cases fit ones for treatment in the hospital, they are admitted. Sometimes, in the absence of the honorary for the week the resident staff admit subscribers of two guineas are entitled to have one patient per year admitted; but any respectable person can issue any number of recommendations to the Colonial Secretary, which are equivalent to orders for admission. Urgent cases are admitted at any time without any recommendations.¹
- (2.) DISCHARGE.—The honorary medical officers alone have power to discharge patients from the hospital; except a patient is insubordinate, or requests to be discharged, when the resident staff may send him out.²
- (3.) IMPROPER ADMISSIONS.—There are many patients in the Infirmary who would be treated with equal benefit to themselves and less expense to the public in cheaper institutions. It is said that there is an average of between fifty and eighty chronic and incurable cases always in the hospital.³
- (4.) IMPOSITIONS.—The institution seems to be very much imposed upon, by persons who are in possession of large sums of money obtaining admission on the pretence that they are paupers. Such persons are either expelled from the institution or made to pay for their maintenance. They usually get into the hospital by means of Government orders.⁴
- (5.) REJECTED APPLICANTS.—The Infirmary being over-crowded, a great many cases are refused admission, there being no vacancies for them. About one applicant out of every five is rejected for want of room; and this happens although there are many persons in the institution who ought not to be there.⁵
- (6.) DETENTIONS.—There is a rule that no patient shall remain longer than six weeks in the Infirmary; but there are many who have been in the institution for months. Some are improperly detained by the honorary surgeons.⁶
- (7.) SUGGESTIONS.—There is an emphatic expression of opinion that the system of admission on the recommendations of subscribers should be abolished, and that the hospital should be thrown open to all cases needing medical relief.⁷

The method adopted by the authorities of the Infirmary of dealing with patients—or rather with applicants for medical relief—is from first to last so full of defects that it is difficult to find any part of it that is unobjectionable. The whole system is a chaos of blunders, abuses, and injustices. Although, strictly speaking, patients are supposed to qualify themselves for admission by presenting a recommendation signed by some person who has subscribed two guineas to the institution, yet it is the fact that the great majority of the patients are admitted upon what are called called "Colonial Secretary's Orders." Some persons have given as many as 300 orders within a year. These patients are assumed to be paupers, but the orders on which they gain admission are issued in such a wholesale and indiscriminate way that no inquiry into their actual condition is possible. As their maintenance in the Infirmary is paid for by the Government at the rate of some £41 annually per head, it is by no means surprising that so many of them are received into the wards; though there is every reason to believe that some of them have no right to be there. Then, again, there are partialities shown to the patients who are recommended by influential subscribers; numerous cases are taken in that should never enter a hospital intended for the reception of persons suffering from acute diseases; there is as much difficulty in getting ineligible patients out of the establishment as there is in getting eligible patients into it; and fully one-fourth of the beds are occupied by malingerers and incurables who would be fit inmates perhaps of a Benevolent Asylum, or Convalescent Hospital, but who certainly are quite out of place as pauper inmates of an expensive Infirmary. A case came under the notice of the Commission in which a man discharged from the Government Benevolent Asylum at Parramatta came straight down to Sydney and obtained comfortable quarters in the Infirmary.

Any person, whether a subscriber or not, can give an order on the Colonial Secretary, certifying that the bearer is a fit person for admission to the hospital. On this certificate the case is at once admitted, without any inquiry by any officer of the Government whether the patient is entitled to admission on the ground of his necessitous circumstances. The inevitable tendency of allowing persons thus to discharge their charitable duties vicariously is to discourage the giving of subscriptions. To this system may also be largely attributed the fact that persons obtain admission whose circumstances give them no claim upon the public for eleemosynary assistance. The evidence shows that these certificates are recklessly given by some persons in large numbers, without any inquiry as to the position of those to whom they are given, and in a few instances it appears that several hundreds of them have been issued by one person in a year. Amongst the persons so admitted as Government patients, some have been found possessing sums as large as £78, £170, £190, and £215, leaving little doubt that others more cautious have placed their money in safe keeping, to make themselves appear qualified for admission as paupers. Whilst it appears absolutely necessary that provision should be made for the admission of those whose case is absolutely necessitous, the mischief of perpetuating a system so open to abuse and so calculated to encourage a spirit of pauperism need not be insisted upon.

The number of patients in the hospital so admitted was, on the 1st June, 142, and the numbers so received in the year 1872 was 1,057. The system appears to have originated at a time when the Infirmary was almost the only refuge for the aged and infirm, and for sufferers from incurable chronic disease. The circumstances of the Colony have, however, materially changed since it was established; and other asylums having been provided for the aged and infirm, the present indiscriminate system of admission on Government orders should be abolished.

The cost of each occupied bed in the Infirmary appears to be about £45 per annum. This is not excessive when compared with the cost of London hospitals, where the amount per bed varies from £40 to £77. A hospital kept up for the treatment of accidents and acute cases of disease, with the necessary staff and appliances for their successful treatment, must necessarily be far more expensive than a mere asylum for the aged and infirm. The cost per head of the inmates in the Sydney, Liverpool, and Parramatta Asylums for the Infirm and Destitute seems to be, on an average, a little over £14 per annum. The evidence of all the officers and medical men connected with the Infirmary points to the fact that the Government is constantly paying for the maintenance in the Infirmary of people who, as beneficially to themselves and far more economically to the Country, might be maintained in the cheaper asylums, whilst their presence in the Infirmary is the cause of persons being often turned away who are fairly entitled to admission. The number of patients constantly in the Infirmary suitable for the Liverpool or Parramatta Asylums is variously estimated to be from fifty to eighty. The number of persons seeking admission to the Infirmary and turned away on the ground of there being no beds for them was nineteen in the month of May alone.

With regard to the system of admission upon the recommendations of subscribers, we have evidence that it has a most pernicious influence upon the revenue of the Infirmary, and we find that in England it has been almost universally condemned. Here, for instance, is a paragraph taken from an annual report of the Queen's Hospital at Birmingham:—

In reference to these cases (viz. pthisis) your Committee of Council would earnestly and respectfully request their governors and subscribers as far as possible to observe the regulations printed on the ticket of admission. A large number of patients have been, from the fear of giving offence, admitted, who could derive no benefit from the hospital; and consequently, a large number have been deprived of that relief which a residence within its walls would have afforded.

This might have been written of the Sydney Infirmary, so accurately does it express the state of matters in that institution; but the evil made apparent here is not by any means the worst which is consequent upon this order system. It keeps down the revenue of the hospital. The mass of the public will not subscribe their crowns and shillings, because the persons who subscribe pounds have the privilege of nominating patients. The shillings and crowns merely contribute to the support of the pounds' nominee. Throw the hospital open to all persons needing medical aid and unable to pay for it, and you at once appeal to the benevolence of the people, which is a far safer way of raising revenue than by bartering a doubtful advantage—not enjoyed by the person with whom you bargain—for a given sum of money. At present, the inducement held out to subscribers is, that by paying two guineas they will acquire the right of sending a patient into the Infirmary. In the abstract this is wrong, because if a man is sick and destitute, surely his miserable condition should entitle him to relief,—not the two guineas with which some subscriber has purchased a privilege; and practically the thing is mischievous, for it deprives the institution of much money that it would certainly receive if conducted upon the broadest principles of charity. Experience has brought this truth home to most of the London hospitals, and they are now rapidly abolishing the system of admitting patients upon subscriber's recommendation. In 1868 the Royal Infirmary of Glasgow had a subscription list of under £4,000; it gave privileges to subscribers of a guinea, and had not a subscriber of a less amount. The Free Infirmary of Edinburgh, giving no privilege, situated in a city whose extent, wealth, and population were altogether inconsiderable compared to Glasgow, had a subscription list of £7,000, of which £4,000 were contributed in sums under ten shillings.* Mr. C. E. Mathews, in a paper upon "Public Hospitals and Dispensaries," read before the Society for the Promotion of Social Science, pointed out that "great institutions supported supported by a generous and too confiding public, under the belief that no poor man labouring under a serious disease was turned away from them, presented the monstrous anomaly that the more violent and dangerous the disease the less chance there was of the patient's reception. They were so surrounded by formalities and privileges as to have become not public refuges for the sick poor, but private institutions for the relief of subscribers' nominees.

The remedy, at once simple and efficacious, is to abolish the system of admission on the orders of subscribers, and throw open the hospital to all really indigent persons requiring treatment for accidents and acute cases of disease. The object then set before the public mind would be the duty of helping to support the Charity for its own sake, and not the narrower aim of getting something out of it in return.

But there is another point in connection with the admission of patients that requires consideration. We conceive that, having abolished the system of subscribers' orders, it will be necessary to provide some means of detecting imposition, and deciding as to real cases of distress. If there were a medical superintendent, he certainly ought to decide whether an applicant was in such a state of health as to be eligible, but he could not be expected to find out whether the applicant was a pauper or an imposter. Some method of inquiry must be adopted in order to guard against fraud. “The first step”—says one of the authorities we have before quoted—“in the direction of hospital reform is, that every institution which aims at treating the largest possible number of proper and deserving cases, must appoint an officer to inquire into the social fitness of applicants for relief. This difficult duty should form no part of the labours of a medical officer; it should be performed by an authorized authorized and salaried officer of the institution, directly responsible to the committee of management. In Paris the hospitals, which are partly endowed and partly supported by Government, are bound to receive all the sick poor of the department; and every one who is poor enough and sick enough to require admission is sent by a public officer into any one of the hospitals in which a bed happens to be vacant.* In our opinion, there should be an officer charged with the special duty of inquiring into the social position of applicants for relief; and, as we propose to show in a future and general Report upon the Public Charities of the Colony, there should be some central body exercising a supervision over all charitable institutions receiving aid from the Government.

* Report to Privy Council. Hospital Regulations, p. 465.

No proper regulation exists—or, if it exists, it is not enforced—respecting the admission of visitors to patients. There are certain days in the week on which the inmates of the hospital are allowed to see their friends, and on those days the wards are usually crowded with persons, many of whom appear to go there out of mere idle curiosity. This is a source of great annoyance to medical men, nurses, and patients; and it is an annoyance that might be very quickly got rid of, if proper limitation were put on the number of visitors allowed to see an individual patient.

XIV.—THE MEDICAL STAFF.

- (1.) APPOINTMENT AND DUTIES.—There are four honorary surgeons and four honorary physicians, who are elected by the subscribers, and who, if dismissed by the Board, have the right of appealing to the subscribers. A surgeon and physician attends daily to admit patients, each member of the staff taking that duty for a week in turn with his colleagues. They attend the patients in the hospital, prescribe for them, give directions as to their diet and medical treatment, and discharge them when cured.¹ There are six district medical officers, who attend to the out-patients, prescribe for them, and as occasion requires visit them at their own homes. Each of these gentlemen receives £50 a-year.² There are two paid medical officers, who reside on the premises, admit patients in the absence of the honoraries, attend to any case of emergency, and have, so far as the medical treatment of the patients is concerned, the general control of the establishment. They have power to discharge patients for insubordination, but that power is rarely exercised, inasmuch as the honoraries re-admit persons so discharged.³
- (2.) ALLOTMENT OF PATIENTS.—On the medical side the patients are divided equally among the physicians, each physician having charge of a ward and a half. A different system prevails on the surgical side, where the cases belong to the surgeon who admits them, and where, in consequence, some surgeons have many more patients than others.⁴
- (7.) SUGGESTIONS.—It is considered desirable that the honorary medical officers' tenure of office should be limited—some say to eight or ten years, and others to three.⁵ Two witnesses recommend the abolition of the system, as the honoraries are practically under no control, and disregard the orders of the committee.⁶ There are opinions in favour of allotting an equal number of beds to each surgeon; but some of the surgeons are adverse to that arrangement, and

and also object to the resident medical officers admitting patients, on the ground that "sore legs" would be unfairly distributed, while enjoyable little "lithotomy cases" would be reserved for favoured friends.¹ The surgical cases should be kept separate from the medical cases, and there should be several empty beds in the accident ward.² The honorary staff should hold monthly consultations as to the discharge of patients. The members of the district medical staff should be made assistants to the honoraries, should be unpaid, and should be promoted to the position of honorary physicians and surgeons when vacancies occurred. Mr. Roberts advocates the formation of a Medical Board to meet once a month and advise the General Board on professional questions.³

The medical care of the patients devolves upon a resident surgeon and physician, and an honorary staff of four surgeons and four physicians. The professional duties of all these gentlemen are, in our opinion, satisfactorily discharged, though there is some laxity in allowing the rules of the hospital to be violated, which should be amended. We are of opinion that it would be more convenient if the number of the honorary staff were reduced to six, and think it advisable that they should meet periodically, to advise the committee on the sanatory condition of the hospital. The English system of having an assistant honorary staff from whom the honorary staff should be promoted by election amongst themselves might, we think, be introduced to advantage. In any event, members of the honorary staff should not be eligible for election after being twice elected, without retiring for a year, as it does not appear to us desirable that they should hold office in perpetuity.

The rule allowing a member of the honorary staff to appeal to a meeting of the subscribers, in the event of his being suspended by the Board, should be repealed, as the body appealed to cannot investigate evidence, and their decision is apt to depend rather on the personal popularity of the gentleman appealing than on the merits of the case.

Patients are at present admitted and discharged by the honorary staff, who each in turn admit for a week, the patients admitted by them individually becoming the patients of the gentleman admitting them. This system is in full force on the surgical side of the hospital, but on the medical side the beds are allotted amongst the physicians, and one physician admits for another when his own beds are full. The latter system we consider better than that prevailing on the surgical side, as it gives every gentleman an equal number of patients, whilst, as there may be many admissions in one week and few in another, one surgeon may have twenty patients and another only two or three. Another tendency of the practice on the surgical side is, that the temptation arises to keep patients in the hospital who are fit to go out, till the admission week of the surgeon comes round under whose care they are, in order that he may then by discharging them have their beds vacant for patients who shall become his own. This, we think, an abuse of the power possessed by the honorary staff, and the evidence undoubtedly points to the conclusion that patients fit to go out are unnecessarily kept in the hospital for days, and sometimes for weeks, to the exclusion of cases which ought to be admitted. The result to be attained in every well-regulated hospital, of curing as many patients as possible in a year, is defeated if the beds are thus occupied with a view to keeping individual surgeons well supplied with interesting cases. Whilst we were examining the Infirmary,

Infirmary, persons were refused admission on the ground of there being no beds, who might have been admitted had not patients been thus improperly kept in. We think the best mode of dealing with this question would be to allot the beds amongst the honorary staff, and to give the resident surgeon and physician the sole power to admit surgical and medical cases respectively. The power to discharge when well, might still be left with the honorary staff.

A regulation should be established that a patient discharged for breaking the rules of the institution should not be readmitted at once, as some members of the honorary staff immediately readmit patients discharged for misconduct by the resident medical officers, thus paralyzing their authority and destroying the discipline of the place. So notorious has this become that the house surgeon refrains from exercising his power to discharge for misconduct as he ought to do, because he knows his action will be nullified by the readmission of the patient.

Additional private rooms should be provided for the resident surgeon and physician, as well as an additional room with proper appliances for examining patients on admission, the present accommodation for that purpose being quite inadequate and miserably deficient in appliances. An operating-room is also urgently required. The room now used for the purpose is small and ill-lighted, and, when crowded, as it often is on operating days, the surgeons are obstructed in their duties and cannot conveniently perform them. The result is that operations are often performed on Sunday, to secure the necessary light and room; and not only is the quiet of Sunday disturbed, but labour is thrown on servants on a day when they reasonably look for some rest.

XV.—THE NIGHTINGALE WING.

EXPENSE.—One witness states that the “superfluities and extravagances of the Nightingale wing are equal to a third of what the patients cost.”² It appears, however, that the whole establishment was maintained in 1871 at a cost of £13 18s. 6d. per head, and in 1872 at a cost of £13 0s. 8d. per head.³

We have in this place simply to repeat the statement, quoted elsewhere, of Messrs. Bristowe and Holmes, that the nursing staff of a hospital should be comfortably lodged in some building separated from the main portion of the institution. The Nightingale wing provides the nursing staff of the Infirmary with such accommodation as is best suited for them; and we do not see that any fault can be found therewith.

As to the charge of extravagance which has been made against the occupants of this building, we do not find it in any way sustained by the facts. The cost for maintaining the whole nursing staff, and the servants who attend to their wants, only amounts to £13 0s. 8d. per head per year. This is less than the expense of maintaining the inmates of any charitable institution that we have visited, less by several pounds per head than the cost would be if the nurses were each allowed separate daily rations, and were not provided with a residence.

XVI.—COST AND EXPENDITURE.

- (1.) EXPENDITURE.—The cost per head for maintenance, &c., of patients in the Infirmary is about £45. The expenses of the institution have not much increased of late years. The salaries amount to £3,471 13s. 3d. The cost of the Nightingale wing, in which reside the lady superintendent and thirty-two subordinates, is £13 0s. 8d. per head per year. The expenditure for wines, spirits, &c., is about £350 per year, and for milk £600. Compared with the cost of maintaining patients in English hospitals, the rate is small; but the expenses of St. Vincent's Hospital amount to less than half the expenses of the Sydney Infirmary.¹
- (2.) SUGGESTIONS.—The system by which subscribers of £2 2s. have the right of issuing orders of admission is bad, and tends to decrease the amount subscribed. The hospital should be thrown open to all in need of medical aid and unable to obtain it.²

The income of the Infirmary last year, in round numbers, amounted to £11,100, of which £8,800 was contributed by the Government, and £1,965 8s. 6d. was raised by subscriptions from the public, the balance being made up by the interest on some invested legacies and donations, with a few fees from medical students and paying patients.

The amount subscribed by the public to this, a metropolitan institution, bearing in mind the charitable liberality of Sydney, is in our opinion small, compared with the sums collected for some of the country hospitals, and we believe that the means by which admission to the hospital has hitherto been obtained has in a great measure brought about this result. If it were known that every person in necessitous circumstances had the right of admission without an order from a subscriber of £2 as now, we believe that numbers of subscriptions in sums less than twenty shillings would be obtained from persons willing to contribute their honorable mite to an institution so all-embracing in its charity.

With reference to the issue of the proposed grant of the Infirmary buildings, we are of opinion that it would be highly inexpedient for the Government to part with the control of so valuable a property, and of an institution which, though partially aided by private contributions, is essentially of a public character, unless provision is made in an Act of Incorporation for securing its proper government and management; and, in support of our opinion, we would appeal to the evidence, a summary of which, faithfully condensed by the Secretary to the Commission, precedes our Report.

All which we hereby certify under our hands, this tenth day of September, 1873.

MINUTES OF EVIDENCE.

SYDNEY INFIRMARY.

THURSDAY, 1 MAY, 1873.

Members Present:—

WILLIAM CHARLES WINDEYER, Esq., PRESIDENT.

MICHAEL METCALFE, Esq.

EYRE G. ELLIS, Esq.

RICHARD DRIVER, Esq., M.P.

JOSEPH WEARNE, Esq., M.P.

SAMUEL GOOLD, Esq.

CHARLES COWPER, JUN., Esq., W.P.M.

John Rendell Street, Esq., Hon. Treasurer, Sydney Infirmary, called in and examined:—

1. President.] I believe you are the treasurer of the Sydney Infirmary? Yes.
2. How long have you acted in that capacity? About six years, I think.
3. Will you tell us, if you please, the constitution or organization under which the Infirmary is worked? It is managed by a committee of twenty-four gentlemen—a Board of twenty-four—consisting of a president, some vice-presidents, two secretaries, and a treasurer. I think there are twenty-one members of committee besides these, so that there are more than twenty-four altogether.
4. Would a reference to the rules refresh your memory? I think I have the rules in my pocket. The Board consists of a president, the vice-presidents, the honorary secretaries, the honorary treasurer, and twenty-one governors.
5. The twenty-one members are in addition to the officers you have named? Quite so.
6. That makes altogether a body of some twenty-eight or twenty-seven members? About twenty-seven at present.
7. Does this Board in any way delegate its functions to any smaller executive body? Yes, the management of the institution generally is conducted by a Board of twelve, chosen from the Board of twenty-seven. They constitute the weekly committee, the Board itself meeting once a month. The smaller committee is called the house committee, and the Board delegate their powers largely to them.
8. Have they full power to act in all things for the general body, or only on certain matters? Only on matters connected with the management of the institution.
9. And does this committee of twelve include these other officers who are not among the twenty-one members of the Board?—for instance, could any of the vice-presidents attend upon the house committee? Not officially; not unless they have been appointed do they attend.
10. Does this Board of twenty-seven members manage the affairs of the institution in every respect? Yes.
11. Do I understand you to say that there is no officer within the institution who can manage or direct things to be done;—is there no one who can direct any business to be done, without reference to the house committee? The honorary secretaries are the only persons who act in the absence of the committee in any way connected with the management.
12. What officers have the committee under their control? The manager, clerk, house steward, and messenger. Of course you are speaking now irrespective of the nursing department? The dispensers are under the control of the committee. They attend to the medicines and the making up of the prescriptions.
13. Mention all the officers, whether belonging to the nursing staff or not? The lady superintendent and the staff of nurses.
14. And the resident medical officers? Two resident medical officers.
15. What are the duties of the manager? Well, his duties are defined by the rules. They are to have control over the male servants of the establishment, the out-door department—to see patients and anything connected with the out-door work—and he has control over the stores. His duties are defined in the rules. He has the general control and superintendence of the institution, with the exception of the department placed under the lady superintendent; and he has to attend the Board meetings and meetings of the committees, and take minutes of the proceedings.
16. Is that all? He has to keep the books of the establishment.
17. There are some things excepted from his control? Yes; the department placed under the control of the lady superintendent.
18. What matters are under her control? She is considered the head of the nursing and training staff, and is responsible for the efficiency of the entire nursing and female domestic staff of the establishment. She has the engagement of all the nurses, and the power of discharging them, subject to the house committee.
19. What I want to know is;—how do you find that this system of dividing the authority in the Infirmary between the manager and the lady superintendent works practically? Well, practically, it has not worked very well. There has been some little clashing at times between the two officers.

J. R. Street,
Esq.
1 May, 1873.

20. I want to know this for instance: Supposing that the Infirmary wants cleaning in respect of vermin, who has authority to get that done? The lady superintendent is responsible for the cleanliness of the wards.
21. But has she authority to get them cleaned? Only by order of the house committee. Of course she is supposed to have a sufficient staff to keep the wards ordinarily clean.
22. Has she to refer to the manager for a thing of that sort, or can she act upon her own responsibility? She acts on her own responsibility as far as the ordinary cleanliness of the wards is concerned.
23. If new beds are required, or anything of that kind, can she get them? On a requisition to the house committee for them.
24. In what respect do you find this divided system of management unsatisfactory? There are many minor things perhaps that have arisen from a feeling of jealousy between the two officers, and they have not worked together so well as they might have done.
25. But from what you have seen of the working of the institution under this divided authority, do you think it is a system that ought to be maintained? I think that some reform is necessary, but I don't know that I can suggest a proper mode of getting over the difficulty. There must be somebody to have charge of the manager's department.
26. What do you define his department to be? He has to receive all applicants for admission every day, which is a duty that cannot be undertaken by the lady superintendent. He has to see to the discharge of patients, and to see that any money they may have is taken from them on their admission, and to take charge of it, and also of their clothes; and he also does the duty of secretary to the institution actually.
27. Do I understand you to say that, with the exception of such matters as these, it would be better if there were more authority placed in the hands of the lady superintendent of the nursing staff? No, I do not think so. I don't know that she should have more authority than she has. I think that she has under our rules sufficient authority for all her duties. We have endeavoured in the framing of these rules to render the two offices consistent and prevent any clashing, and were it not that the people are not disposed to pull together there would not be any difficulty.
28. What has the difficulty arisen from? I can scarcely say who is to blame. I am myself disposed to think that the manager is inclined to be jealous of the lady's position there. He found it clash a little with the position he had previously occupied there. Having previously had the entire management of the institution he found that his authority was divided.
29. Before the lady superintendent came there he occupied a position similar to hers? Yes, there was a matron of the establishment, having charge of the stores and the female women of the department, but not in control of the nurses.
30. Who were the nurses under? The manager.
31. Did this person, who was matron then, retire or die before the present manager came into his office? Her services were dispensed with when the lady superintendent came, and the new rules were framed to suit the new organization.
32. Do I understand you to say that the unpleasant state of things in the Infirmary has arisen partly from the divided authority? I think that was the first cause of the feeling arising.
33. I don't mean that the difficulties arose because it was divided, but because those between whom it was divided disagreed? I think myself that the two positions are quite compatible and might be occupied by two people who need not come into collision at all, and who could act with satisfaction to the institution.
34. Do I understand you to attribute the present state of things to the ill-feeling which has grown up between the parties? I scarcely know: I am simply alluding to that as the state of things, without reference to causes—you mean of course the state of things as between these two officers.
35. Has that arisen from these two officers having a divided authority, or from the jealousy which has been created in the manager's mind, owing to his having been supplanted? I think that it has arisen entirely from that feeling in his mind.
36. Were you in your present position when the manager was appointed? Yes.
37. Was he a gentleman with experience of that sort of life? Yes.
38. Had he had experience in the management of similar public institutions? No, I think not. As far as I understood he had not.
39. Have any steps been taken by the committee to endeavour to bring about a more harmonious working between these two officers? I can scarcely say that any decided steps have been taken, but suggestions have been made.
40. Suggestions of what character? As to the unsatisfactory way in which they were working together, and the desirability of their trying to —
41. From what you see of the manager does he appear to have qualified himself for the position and become efficient? The duties might be undertaken by any man of ordinary intelligence, and it does not require any peculiar qualifications, except honesty, and the qualifications which are needed for a place of trust.
42. Then you have no suggestion to make as to the mode of getting over this difficulty, which has arisen from this divided management—have you? I am afraid that the thing will not improve as long as the two officers are there. If any alteration were made I would have some gentleman more in the position of secretary to the institution and do away with the honorary secretaries altogether.
43. What are the functions of the honorary secretaries? To carry out the orders of the house committee. They would be well performed by a paid secretary.
44. Are you acquainted with Miss Nightingale's recommendations as to hospital management? No; I cannot say that I know them thoroughly.
45. Supposing that her suggestion is that all matters connected with the external management of a hospital—all connected with its financial affairs—should be left in the hands of such a person as a secretary, and that all the internal arrangements—the management of the nursing staff and the cleanliness of the wards—should be left entirely in the hands of the heads of the nursing staff;—do you think that is a wise suggestion? Yes, most decidedly I do. I should place the whole of the internal arrangements under the care of the nursing staff. Of course, with regard to the distribution of the duties, they should be all under one head. I think the more there is under one head the better, and all that could be undertaken by the lady superintendent.
46. Do you think it advisable that the directory of this institution should be so large? No, I do not think so; and I was some time ago appointed a member of a committee to revise the rules, and we tried, unsuccessfully, to get the number of the Board reduced.
47. What has arisen from their having so large a directory? There is a great amount of discussion which might be avoided, and you don't get so large a number of working members as you would get by having a smaller smaller Board. Time is wasted, matters of importance have been overlooked in the discussion of a mere matter of personal feeling between members of the Board, and questions of importance have been allowed to lapse while these disputes were going on.

J. R. Street,
Esq.

48. Have you observed this more than once? Very frequently in the last few years. The members worked much better some years ago than they have done latterly.

1 May, 1873.

49. There was, you say, a proposal made to reduce the number of members of the Board? Yes.

50. To what extent? We proposed to reduce the Board to twelve members, I believe, speaking from memory.

51. What became of that proposition? It was submitted to the Board and negatived, and their proposal was carried at the annual meeting.

52. You are still of opinion that the number of the Board should be reduced? Yes.

53. Have you ever considered, looking at the large amount which the Infirmary receives from the Public Funds, the advisability of the Government having a voice in the management? Yes, I have considered that, but I think there is a great mistake made as to the amount which the Government contributes to the Infirmary. They pay us a large sum, but by far the greater part of it is for work performed. We undertake to keep their patients at a certain price, and they pay us that price and nothing more.

54. Granted that the money is paid for work properly performed, still ought not the Government to have a voice in the management? Yes, I think so. I am of opinion that the Government should have a direct voice in the Board in some way.

55. Was not that a part of the proposal to reform the Board that you have alluded to? No, I don't think it was.

56. Your attention having been drawn to that, have you thought to what extent the Government should be represented on the Board, or to what extent you would reform the committee? No, I have not. I don't know whether the Government should have the power of nominating more than one or two members.

57. Out of how many? Out of a Board of twelve. I would strongly suggest the exclusion of clergymen from the Board, as has been carried out in the Prince Alfred Hospital Board. The clergy ought to be excluded from the management.

58. You think they should still carry on their work in the institution? Yes; but they should not have any voice in the management.

59. Do you think that the number of even twelve members of the Board might be reduced with advantage? My suggestion would be that the whole Board should not be more than twelve, and that out of that number a working committee of not more than five should be formed.

60. I see that you make a suggestion in your last report to the effect that the hospital would be more efficiently worked by having a proper medical officer with a properly qualified assistant —? The Board are very divided on that point. There is no unanimity on that matter, and I think it is doubtful whether such a thing would be desirable or not.

61. Then you do not personally concur in this? I do not.

62. What was the idea of those persons who did concur in it? I believe it was thought that the number of patients would be reduced; that with a paid medical officer there would not be the same desire to admit patients, or to retain them as long as they do. It is the feeling that the doctors do retain them, not wishing to be harsh with them, or perhaps in order to improve their practice.

63. You think that patients might be discharged more rapidly than they usually are? Yes.

64. Do you think that persons are received into the hospital whom it is not desirable to admit? Yes, it is very often the case I think.

65. What classes of cases are these? In many cases they are patients who could be treated at a Benevolent Asylum, or at some cheaper institution than the Infirmary, where you have to keep up an expensive staff.

66. To what do you attribute the admission of these persons? Simply to the desire to do acts of kindness.

67. Who admits them? The honorary staff.

68. By whose recommendation? We have adopted all sorts of plans to prevent the doctors knowing who recommend the applicants.

69. Then you think they are sometimes not admitted on the strict merits of the case? I should hardly like to say that, but we have ascertained that there are cases there of persons who could be treated just as well in the Benevolent Asylum. We are obliged to keep up an expensive staff, and the diet is on an expensive scale for the treatment of serious cases, and we cannot have two sets of dietary scales.

70. Then the patients you would exclude are those who could be kept in a place like the Liverpool Asylum? Yes.

71. Old broken-down shepherds and people past cure, who should be taken care of, but are not likely to recover;—these are the cases you refer to? Yes, I believe there are many.

72. And you believe they would be as well cared for in another less expensive institution? Yes, I have heard the doctors say so frequently.

73. Have you any suggestion to make as to the mode in which patients should be admitted? I think you must leave it to the medical men. Laymen, of course, cannot form an opinion as to whether a man is fit to be admitted as an inmate or not.

74. Then I understand you to recommend that the admissions of patients should be left in the hands of official medical officers rather than the honorary men? No, it should be in the hands of the honorary men rather than the officials. Officials are young men, perhaps not well up in their profession, not so experienced as the honorary men, and I do not think it is desirable that they should have the admission of patients into the Infirmary.

75. But was not that part of the recommendation in the report? It was proposed to get a man of large experience at a high salary.

76. From what you have seen of the present system of nursing in the Infirmary have you reason to be satisfied with it? Yes, very much so. I have compared it with the old systems, and I do not hesitate to say that it is a great improvement upon them. The fact is admitted by all the patients, and we have some who were in years before.

77. Mr. Metcalfe.] You said that the institution did not get as much from the Government as was imagined? No; except in payment for services rendered.

78. But are not these services rendered to people who apply for admissions through some persons outside? Yes; that is the mode of admission.

- J. R. Street,
Esq.
1 May, 1873.
79. Then if the number of the subscribers to the Infirmary were much larger than it is, there would be no necessity for anything of this kind; but as the number of subscribers is small there is nothing for it but this? Yes. I don't think the subscribers give very many orders for admission. I believe that people can go to the Government and get orders with little difficulty, and they go.
80. But these persons have no claim upon the Government? Quite so.
81. Have we not had one or two large and laborious investigations by committees with reference to complaints about the nursing staff? Yes.
82. To what do you attribute those complaints? I attribute them to the feeling against the lady superintendent, but from what cause that feeling arises I am unable to say.
83. Is it not a fact that some of the nurses applied to members of the committee and put them in motion for the purpose of making complaints against the lady superintendent? It has been stated so, and I believe with truth.
84. In point of fact, half the complaints we hear of about that institution are simply matters of jealousy between these two officers—the manager and the lady superintendent? I have no doubt of it.
85. Do you think if one person had the sole charge of the establishment—a clerk—and had liberty to appeal to a paid secretary, it would be better managed? Yes. I think we want some person in a superior position to an ordinary clerk—the paid secretary should have nothing to do with the internal management, beyond having the control of the stores.
86. Has it not struck you that the condition of the back premises is discreditable to the management? Yes, it has.
87. With reference to the Board of Directors you say that there are twenty-one, and six officers? Yes.
88. What is the average attendance at the Board meetings? I think about seven or eight members attend—about one-third.
89. And of that number there are two or three gentlemen who always attend, and the remainder are changing? Yes.
90. Mr. Driver.] You say that one or two inquiries have been made by the committee? Yes; there have been one or two.
91. What has been the result of these inquiries? For the most part they have fallen through. One was commenced a short time ago, and it fell to the ground. I perhaps had better tell you the reasons: It was stated that some of the nurses who were dissatisfied had been applying to the Board to bring forward charges, and a committee was appointed to investigate these charges. The lady superintendent applied for permission to be present during the inquiry, and permission being given the thing fell to the ground; the persons who made the charges would not come forward.
92. Has not the lady superintendent triumphed in all these cases? Yes, she has always come out of them triumphantly.
93. Have you found the committee willing as a body to listen to charges against her? Not as a body, but there are members of the committee who will listen to anything against her.
94. You say that time is wasted at the Board meetings in the discussion of frivolous matters? Yes.
95. Has this tendency to waste time in that way increased since 1871? Yes, since 1871, it has, I think.
96. You have stated that it would tend to the better management of the institution if clergymen were excluded from the directory? Yes.
97. Why? I think that they tend to excite bitter feelings in the minds of some members. Their presence at the meetings tends to create a feeling that had better be avoided.
98. You have been several years on the Board? Yes.
99. And that is your opinion? Yes.
100. Mr. Cowper.] You spoke of the large number on the Board, and of the personal discussions which have arisen lately? Yes.
101. Has not the Board consisted of the same number for many years? Yes.
102. Were there not personal discussions in past years? Yes, there were always personal discussions, but they were not so bad as of late. At the time I joined the Board it was working very well.
103. Do you not then attribute this matter to the persons on the Board rather than to the number? No doubt, but still I think the less the number the better the Board would work. What I meant was, that some important business comes before the Board, and out of this some personal matter arises, and a discussion ensues, which causes some members to leave in disgust, and of course the business is neglected.
104. President.] Does it ever happen that talk is kept up in order to drive people away? I do not say that, but it has had that effect.
105. Mr. Cowper.] Do not the same people always engage in these discussions? Yes.
106. How many members attend regularly out of the twenty-one? I have never taken down the average attendance. I think that in the last report the attendance of the members is detailed.
107. Are there not some members who never attend at all? —
108. Mr. Wearne.] Do the public subscribe to the institution as liberally now as they did? Yes; I do not find that there is much falling off.
109. Out of your revenue of £11,000, all but £2,135 is paid by the Government? Yes, for work done.
110. What is the contract? That we shall take in any patients that the Government send us for the actual cost of their keep. The cost was fixed some time ago at the rate which has been charged ever since, and that £6,000 or £9,000, whichever it is, is paid for that purpose, with the exception of £2,000, which is to supplement our subscriptions.
111. Is that the proportion of the Government patients sent in? Yes, there is a large proportion sent in, and that is what makes the amount paid to us seem so large.
112. Chairman.] Then you mean to say that the amount is calculated in that way with the addition of £2,000? Yes, to supplement our annual subscriptions.
113. Mr. Metcalfe.] It is more of a Government institution than a public one? Yes; it is more for pauper patients.
114. Mr. Wearne.] If I am a subscriber of two guineas I am entitled to have one patient admitted during the year? Yes.
115. Can they be admitted at all times? Not unless there is a vacancy.
116. Then of course the law is void? Of course it is, unless there happens to be a vacancy for a patient at the time of his application. At the time of his application there might not be a bed in the institution to spare, and the doctors would in such a case tell him to keep on coming until there was one—that is, supposing his were a proper case for admission.

117. Can you tell how many of the subscribers' patients are refused during the year? I cannot tell that. We have no data to go on. J. R. Street, Esq.
118. Mr. Metcalfe.] I think there are a great many more Government patients refused? I think the proportion of the Government patients refused would be the same as the proportion of the subscribers' patients refused, unless they were unfit cases for admission. But they have only one patient each, and the subscribers would probably inquire into the cases before they sent them, and thus they would probably be fit ones. The Government patients are more likely to be unfit cases. 1 May, 1873.
119. Mr. Wearne.] Then you think there are many of their patients refused? I do not think it makes much difference. The medical officer who examines a patient does not know by whom he is recommended. The applicant comes with his ticket, and the gate-keeper takes his ticket from him, and another paper is issued to the medical officer, upon which the medical officer sees him. The medical officers are not supposed to know from whom the recommendations come.
120. How long has the lady superintendent been here? About five years I think.
121. How many of the nursing staff did she bring with her? Four I think.
122. How many are there now in the Infirmary? One.
123. Do you know the reason why the other three left? They became dissatisfied I think, and it became desirable that they should go.
124. Were any of them dismissed, or did they leave of their own accord? They were not dismissed, but perhaps some of them were told that their services would not be required any longer.
125. Was there ever any inquiry? Yes; and I think there was a report in which it was said that these persons services should be dispensed with.
126. How many of a staff has the lady superintendent now? Some thirty or forty in actual service, or in training. She is supposed to be training nurses for the different institutions of the Colony, and she will take any number to train.
127. How many are there in the institution? They are all in the institution, and I think there are about thirty-eight.
128. And she trains them? Yes, as qualified nurses.
129. And are they when trained drafted to other institutions? That was the object of the Government no doubt in the first instance, and it has always been borne in mind by the Board, who have endeavoured to get a nursing staff to draft off to the other institutions of the Colony. We have had many applications for nurses and have been able to supply them.
130. Out of those trained by Miss Osburn? Yes.
131. Not from those brought out to the Colony with her? No. One of those is in Melbourne in the Prince Alfred Hospital. We sent up to Mudgee a nurse of Miss Osburn's training.
132. Of the patients you now have in the institution how many cases are there which should be in the Benevolent Asylum? I cannot tell you the proportion, but it is a complaint that there are persons who occupy beds and who might as well be in the Benevolent Asylum.
133. And can you not dismiss them? No, we have no power either to dismiss or to admit them. It rests entirely with the honorary staff.
134. What accommodation have you in the Infirmary for patients? We have room for about 220 I think.
135. And they cost £11,000 a year? I think that they cost from £40 to £45 a year each. There are 228 patients I believe. We have also a large number of out-door patients, and a large staff of medical officers, whom we pay for attending to these out-door patients, and of course the medicines they consume are considerable.
136. I understand you to recommend the removal of the manager, and that more power should be given to the lady superintendent? No, I think she has now sufficient powers if she were free to exercise them.
137. Do you think that she does her duty? I think so, as far as she can. I am quite sure that she has the well-being of the institution at heart and does her best to carry out the duties of her position.
138. And you think she goes through the wards frequently, and sees that everything is right? Yes.
139. If it has been stated that she has not been there for a week? I should not believe it.
140. If there were vermin on the patients it should be seen by the lady superintendent;—should it not? Yes. There has been a good deal of vermin on the patients of late, and it has been reported by the architect that it is impossible, without large expenditure, to get rid of the vermin. Of course the lady superintendent is blamed for this, but there is evidence that she has reported the thing over and over again. She has no power to make any alteration.
141. But the vermin would be in the linen—the bed-linen? No, it is in the walls, in the crevices, in the window-frames; and the architect reports that without stripping the walls and removing the window-frames it would be impossible to get rid of the vermin.
142. But they have been seen in the clothes? Yes, that may be so.
143. And they have been seen in the day-time? Yes, it may be so in the day-time. I never knew it until of late, and there is no doubt it has been much worse than I had any idea of; but at the same time I do not know that the lady superintendent is to blame in the matter, as she had no authority to go to any expense in obviating the evil.
144. In the event of the Prince Alfred Hospital being built, would you keep this hospital? Yes, I think that this hospital will always be necessary for acute cases and for accidents. But there are cases in our hospital at present which might be sent to the other institution, such as cases of fever, and cases where there is likely to be considerable delay in effecting a cure.
145. You said you would like the Board reduced to twelve members, and yet at present you only get an average attendance of seven members out of a Board of twenty-one? I think that when there is a large number the members do not see the necessity of attending, but if there were a smaller number they would, and it would be ascertained who would best perform the duty.
146. And you think the Government should appoint two members of the Board? Yes, one or two, I think.
147. Mr. Gould.] Do you think there is a general desire that clergymen should not be on the Board? Yes, I think the desire has become general since the incorporation of the Prince Alfred Hospital. It was thought a harsh measure at first, but people now see that the system would work better. It has been adopted in Victoria and it works well there.

J. R. Street,
Esq.

1 May, 1873.

148. What is the reason of this feeling, think you? I think, as I said before, that the presence of clergymen at the Board meetings tends to create feelings of irritation in the minds of members at times.
149. Has anything occurred in the Infirmary Board meetings with regard to clergymen, which shows that such a feeling is produced? Yes, we have had unseemly discussions between clergymen themselves.
150. What course would you suggest. If I understand the rules of the institution, the constitution has been adopted by the general body of the subscribers, and any suggestion made must be adopted by a public meeting of the subscribers before it can be carried into effect? Yes.
151. I understand you to say that it was recommended that the Board should be reduced in number? I think I said that the Board refused to adopt the suggestion of the sub-committee, and the larger number was put to the public meeting.
152. Supposing your suggestion had been adopted by the Board it would have been put to the public meeting? Yes.
153. And any alteration made would have to be approved of by the subscribers? No doubt.
154. Is there at present any strong feeling on the Board as to the disputes with reference to the lady superintendent? I don't know that there is any very strong feeling.
155. Is there a strong feeling in the institution against the lady superintendent? I know of no feeling of that nature. The only feeling is between herself and the manager. I am not aware of any other. So far as I know there is none between her and the nurses.
156. Of course you know that there is in the public mind a conviction that there does exist a feeling of that kind? Yes, I suppose there is, as to the feeling between the lady superintendent and the manager.
157. And it is supposed that she is very arbitrary in her conduct towards the nursing staff? I don't know whether such an idea exists. I don't think myself that it is true.
158. Well, there is a conviction among the outside public that such is the case? I am not aware of it.
159. Mr. Driver.] Whether it is so or not, is there any foundation for it? No; I think if she were more arbitrary it would be better for the institution.
160. Mr. Goold.] Then, if anyone, after leaving the institution, has stated that she was arbitrary it would be incorrect? Yes, if anyone has left the institution they would probably feel aggrieved. If you dismiss a servant of your own he will feel aggrieved.
161. Some persons say that it is necessary to have a thorough investigation in consequence of the overbearing disposition of the lady superintendent? Yes, I believe it was in consequence of statements of that kind that the sub-committee was formed to inquire into these matters, but when the lady superintendent was allowed to be present at the investigation no one would come forward to state anything.
162. Don't you think that they may have refused to come forward from fear? What could they fear? They could have nothing to fear—people who had left the institution too.
163. You do not think that undue favour has been shown to the lady superintendent? No, I do not think so.
164. Mr. Ellis.] Can you say in what way the duties of the manager clash with those of the lady superintendent? No, I cannot. I think that the definition of their duties is sufficiently distinct to make them work harmoniously. But the fact is, that the two officers do not work harmoniously, and I think that must arise from feeling on one side or the other.
165. Does it arise from any interference by one party in the duties of the other? I think that the manager has felt aggrieved at the lady superintendent taking upon herself duties which formerly appertained to his department.
166. President.] Such as what? Such as ordering supplies without sending him the requisition, or some little matter of that sort.
167. Mr. Wearne.] But should not the house committee get the requisition for the supplies? Yes, they do that, but still the lady superintendent has power under these rules to get some small things and report them to the committee at the next meeting.
168. Mr. Ellis.] With regard to the supplies,—through whom are they ordered? There are contracts for everything.
169. For everything? Nearly everything—for all provisions, and things of that sort.
170. Who checks the supplies? The house steward, who has charge of the stores.
171. Is there any check then upon the giving out of the supplies. Suppose a case of wine is received into the stores, is there anything to show the quantity of that wine supplied to the patients? Yes, the house steward's books will show that. Returns are given of the actual quantity consumed.
172. There are books to show that? Yes.
173. And you say that nothing is to be had except by contract? No, all provisions are supplied by contract.
174. Are the contracts taken by the Board? Yes.
175. Is the grant of the site of the Infirmary issued yet? The deed is in course of preparation. The Government have approved of the trustees named, and the grant will issue without delay.
176. President.] To whom is it proposed to issue the grant? To the president and vice-presidents of the Infirmary—Mr. Deas Thomson, Mr. Cameron, Mr. Stephen, and Mr. George Allen.
177. Mr. Ellis.] Have you any idea of the expense of the out-door patients? No, it is difficult to get at that, unless we assume that the out-door patients use a full half of the medicine dispensed—that is, unless we assume that if our contract costs us £1,000, the out-door patients cost us half of that.
178. Cannot the dispensers say what the cost of medicines issued to out-door patients would be? No, it is difficult to estimate the cost of a prescription, and all the drugs are taken from the same stock.
179. Are your drugs supplied by contract? We import our medicines from England.
180. Who is responsible for them? The resident medical officer is responsible for them, and issues them to the dispensers.
181. With regard to the sanitary character of the institution—what is your opinion? I think it is not so good as it used to be. Owing to its long occupation as a hospital, I think all the woodwork wants replacing with new. The walls want renewing. I think they take in a large quantity of impure matter at present.
182. Is the building properly drained? Yes.
183. Into Macquarie-street? Yes.
184. Is it not inadequately supplied with water? Yes, at times the water will not rise to the top levels, and sometimes the water is off, as it is supplied through the street mains.

185. President.] Have you any tanks? Yes, we have some. It is not often there is any inconvenience from the non-supply of water, but there has been on some occasions.

186. Mr. Ellis.] Who keeps the cash account of the institution before it comes into your hands? The manager. He has to account to me, and he pays the money into the Bank of New South Wales as he gets it.

187. You check his books? Yes, weekly.

188. Mr. Gould.] Has it come to the knowledge of the Board that the patients sometimes do not get the supplies which are ordered by the medical men? I have heard of isolated cases; but I think such a thing happens very rarely, even if it happens at all. There has been no general complaint of such a thing. The complaint in the institution has been the other way—that the patients' dietary scale has been larger than it should have been.

189. Mr. Ellis.] Are there any male attendants in the wards? Only in the male syphilitic ward; there is a man there.

190. He is under the control of the manager I suppose? No; he is under the lady superintendent. It was found better that she should have the control of these things—of all the nursing.

191. What duties has the manager to perform with regard to the internal management of the institution? None at all.

192. The whole responsibility then rests on the lady superintendent? Yes, the whole of the internal management, and the control of the servants.

193. And that is an arrangement that you think should exist? I think it requires some person to be in that or in some similar position in the institution, but I think myself if the Board were made smaller we could do away with the honorary secretaries, and have a person in the position of a paid secretary.

194. And give him control over the entire establishment? Yes, the financial business and the exterior.

195. Over everything not connected with the nursing or the servants? Yes.

196. A paid secretary, accountable to the Board? Yes.

197. President.] You have been asked as to the existence of some supposed idea that the nursing staff were not working harmoniously with the lady superintendent, and you are not aware of any such thing? No, as far as I know they work quite harmoniously.

198. You know there have been reports as to the existence of some such state of things? Yes.

199. Was that while the original nurses, who came out with Miss Osburn, were in the institution? Yes.

200. And since then the difficulties have ceased? Yes, to a large extent. There has been a change for the better. The recommendation to the committee was that the difficulty never would be got over until these nurses left the institution.

201. Did you approve personally of the change in the designation of the officials who were formerly called "Sisters?" No. I think it was a mistake to change the name. It is a name which is adopted in the London hospitals, and it is agreeable to the women. It distinguishes them as being of a superior grade.

202. The office of these "Sisters" was to keep a general superintendence over the nurses? Yes, each of them was to have charge of a ward and to be instructed so as to be able to instruct others.

203. Is it not a desirable thing in a case of that kind that she should be addressed, not so much personally as by some official title? Yes, I think it was very desirable as a matter of convenience to retain the name.

204. Mr. Metcalfe.] And did it not conduce to persons of a superior walk of life coming into the position? Yes.

205. And it gives them firmness and power of control, and so on? Yes.

206. Have not patients been sometimes discharged for violating the rules—smoking in the wards and so on? Yes, they have.

207. And sometimes the ordinary nurses have not the power to enforce the rules, not having a sufficiently high official position? Yes. A person in the position of a lady will have more power than persons who are merely in the position of servants. They are paid much greater respect by the patients.

208. Do any of the patients who go to the Infirmary pay for the attendance they get? Yes.

209. What amount do you get in that way? It is not very large. It is some £200 or £300 a year; something of that sort.

210. What do they pay? About two guineas; and they pay by the week also if they are kept some time.

211. Mr. Wearne.] Do you think it is right for the Infirmary authorities to be investing their money, and at the same time getting thousands of pounds from the Government; is it right that the Government should advance this money when you have thousands of pounds of a reserve fund? The thing would be at a standstill very soon if we took in Government patients and got nothing for them. We have by an old subsidy been enabled to withdraw some money and invest it, and it will be required shortly for repairs; but if we were to apply the whole of the money sent in by the Government we should soon be insolvent.

212. But is it right for the Government to pay this money, and for you to invest it? We don't ask them for anything. They pay the money for work done. If they sent us less patients we should receive from them less money.

213. You see there are £9,000 received from the Government, while at the same time you have several thousands of pounds of a reserve fund? The Government can prevent that by refusing to send in any patients. They only pay in proportion to the number of patients that they send in.

214. Mr. Ellis.] Does the Government give anything in proportion to the subscriptions of the public? Yes, an equal amount; they do that in the case of all such institutions. With reference to the amount they pay for their patients, I am not in a position to say whether they pay too little or too much. There was a discussion as to the rate some time ago, and it was finally fixed at the rate which we now obtain. I am of opinion that the rate does not cover the cost. It was recommended by the Inspector of Charities that the amount should be reduced, and the Government sent his report on to the Board. I wrote to the Government, calling attention to the principle on which they paid, and to the fact that their own Inspector of Charities had fixed the rate without reference to the cost, and that I was prepared to go into the matter, but I have never heard anything more of it. I don't think what they pay is more than sufficient to cover present cost, but they have taken no steps to ascertain whether it is or not.

215. They have thousands of pounds invested here? That is because the Government sends us so many patients.

216. Mr. Metcalfe.] Then, if the Government refused to send these patients, it would simply lessen the amount they paid? Yes; the reason why we have so much money from the Government is, that they send us such a large number of patients; we charge the Government 2s. 3d. per day.
217. If there were more subscribers the Government need not send one? No.
218. Mr. Ellis.] Does the Government of Victoria pay in the same way? I cannot say. I think it has tended here to induce a feeling of pauperism. There are many men sent in who are well able to pay. There was a man sent in the other day as a pauper who had £170 in his possession.
219. Do you think it would be well to do away with the system? I think so; but I cannot say whether it would or not. The instance I have mentioned is not an isolated one of patients having large sums of money.
220. President.] Was that man turned out? No; but we do not charge the Government for him at all. We made him pay himself. We could not turn him out.
221. Mr. Wearne.] If we recommended the Government to use more caution in sending patients would the hospital suffer? No, I think not.
222. Would you get less patients? I do not think so, but if that were done I would withdraw my suggestion that the Government should have a voice in the Board.
223. And from your experience you think the Government should not send any applicants? I do not think the institution would suffer, as I believe we should get a large number of subscribers from the public.
224. President.] You think it would be like the State Aid matter;—you think the public would do more if the Government did less? I think the action of the Government encourages a feeling of pauperism.
225. Mr. Goold.] Were you on the Board in Mrs. Ghost's time? No.
226. You cannot say then what difference exists between the management in Mrs. Ghost's time and the management now? No, I cannot; but I am sure that other members will speak of the difference of the management now to what it was then.
227. But with regard to the cleanliness of the wards? That has been going on up to the present time. We have had a report from Mr. Mansfield, the architect, in which he says it would be impossible to get rid of the vermin without stripping the whole of the walls.
228. President.] There was no manager in Mrs. Ghost's time? No, there was only the house surgeon.
229. And Mrs. Ghost had the sole control then? Yes.
230. You mentioned something about having the constitutions or rules? Yes, I have a copy here of the rules and also of the by-laws of the Board. The rules are passed by a meeting of the subscribers. Here they are. (Rules of the Sydney Infirmary, also the By-laws, handed in.)
231. Mr. Ellis.] Of course the Government recommends patients without inquiry into their cases? Yes, they cannot inquire, and we cannot inquire. We get the cases, that is all, and are paid in proportion to their number. That will account for the very large sum that is apparently received from the Government for these things.

MONDAY, 5 MAY, 1873.

Members Present:—

WILLIAM CHARLES WINDEYER, Esq., PRESIDENT.

JOSEPH WEARNE, Esq., M.P.,	SAMUEL GOOLD, Esq.,
MICHAEL METCALFE, Esq.,	EYRE G. ELLIS, Esq.,
CHARLES COWPER, JUNR., Esq.

Mr. John Blackstone, Manager of the Sydney Infirmary, called in and examined:—

- Mr. J.
Blackstone.
5 May, 1873.
232. President.] I believe you are the manager of the Sydney Infirmary? Yes.
233. How long have you held that position? For six years and two months.
234. What salary and emoluments do you receive? £300 a year and board.
235. Do you reside on the premises? No, I was to have had quarters, but there are none there to live in. That was my agreement with the Board. I was to live on the premises but there are no rooms for me.
236. Mr. Metcalfe.] You have a room there;—have you not? Yes, I have an office.
237. President.] The board you get includes a certain quantity of wine;—does it not? Yes, a pint of wine a day.
238. What are your hours of attendance? I am there at 7 every morning, and I remain until nearly 7 at night.
239. Will you explain to the Commission, if you please, what your duties as manager are? Well, I can do nothing better than hand in the by-laws. My duties are all laid down there.
240. Then you have no duties beyond those prescribed as such, under the head "manager," in the by-laws? That is all.
241. Would you state, so that we may have it down in evidence, what is the distinction between your duties and the duties of the lady superintendent? Her duties are to look after the general nursing staff. It is all laid down in the by-laws. She has the control of the training and nursing staff.
242. But unless we know something of the subject we cannot understand from that what the duties are. I want you to explain what is the line of demarcation between your duties and hers? She has the whole control of the nursing staff and the wards.
243. And the wards;—what do you mean by her having charge of the wards? Why, that she looks after the nurses.
244. And that is all? Well, I believe that is all her duty.
245. And when you say she has the whole control of the wards, you mean that she has the supervision of the duties of the nursing staff? Yes.
246. And seeing that the patients are properly looked after? Yes; I have nothing at all to do with the wards.
247. She has the sole control there? Yes.

Mr. J.
Blackstone.

5 May, 1873.

248. For instance, supposing the wards were dirty and infested with vermin, whose duty is it to rectify that? Miss Osburn's.
249. That hardly comes under the definition you have given—of her being over the nursing staff? And the wards.
250. Mr. Metcalfe.] But you said she had the supervision of the nurses just now? I meant the wards generally. The committee have taken them out of my hands altogether.
251. President.] How long have the committee taken it out of your hands? Well, it is some years ago since I was told not to interfere with the nurses.
252. And how long is it since you were prevented from interfering in the cleansing of the wards;—prevented for instance, so far as to hinder you from getting the vermin out of the wards? That was about two or three months ago. The committee knew of it. They knew there was vermin in the wards.
253. How long ago is it since you were prevented from interfering in the cleaning of the wards? It is about three months ago since it was taken out of my charge.
254. By whom? By the house committee, and put under Miss Osburn's charge.
255. Then, previous to that, it was in your charge? No, it was not. I did not consider it so.
256. You say it was taken out of your charge about three months ago? No, that is the time we came to an understanding.
257. How long was it under Miss Osburn's charge? Ever since she has been there, and she has been there five years.
258. Whose charge was it under before that? Mine.
259. Whose charge is it supposed to be under? By the by-laws under Miss Osburn.
260. Will you show me the by-laws—the portion of the by-laws—which places it under Miss Osburn? There is nothing there about the vermin.
261. That is what I am speaking about. You spoke of the vermin? Well, the cleanliness of the wards.
262. What portion of the by-laws do you point to as giving authority for the removal of the vermin, which, as we have heard, are so prevalent in the Infirmary? There is no by-law here to that effect, but it was always understood.
263. Then your answer, that it was pointed out by the by-laws, is incorrect? I thought it was in the by-laws. There have been alterations in the by-laws of late years, and I allude to what was in them before. It was always understood that Miss Osburn was responsible for the cleanliness of the wards.
264. Understood in what way? By the house committee. I had orders from them, or from the executive officers—the two honorary secretaries.
265. Then what do you mean by telling us that Miss Osburn was made responsible two months ago, or three months ago? Because it was done then, when Captain Onslow made a complaint in the House, and then the committee insisted on knowing who had the responsibility.
266. Was that the first time that the responsibility was defined? Yes.
267. Was Miss Osburn informed to that effect? Yes, she was there at the time.
268. Then she was informed of it? Yes, by the house committee.
269. And upon that the wards were cleaned by her? Oh no.
270. Were they not cleaned? Yes, but by the orders of the house committee, I suspect.
271. When was she informed? Sometime in March.
272. And when was the first real attempt made to extirpate these vermin? Miss Osburn was ordered to engage two men and three women to clean all the beds in the establishment.
273. When was it? In March, I think, but it might have been in the latter end of February.
274. That was when this determination was arrived at? No; when the complaint was brought forward.
275. I want to know whether the cleaning of the wards was not done after she was informed that she was responsible for the cleanliness of the wards? Most decidedly it was.
276. Then, do I understand you to say that up to that time you were not aware whether you were responsible for the cleanliness of the wards or not? I was not responsible.
277. Were you aware that Miss Osburn was responsible? I understood that she was.
278. There is nothing in the by-laws defining that she was? But it does not say there that I shall do it.
279. Do not the by-laws leave it vague as to who shall do anything in the Infirmary? It is quite possible that they do.
280. Is it not the fact that they do? It is the fact.
281. And you have always been of opinion that Miss Osburn had full control within the wards? Yes.
282. I ask you again to what extent did you believe that that authority extended? That her authority extended?
283. Yes? That she could go down to the committee and ask them to cleanse the building, the same as it was with me before.
284. That is your idea of her having full authority? She had to go down to the committee. I can prove it by her report, where she had to go down. I can prove that.
285. I don't say it was not so. It was no part of your duty to interfere in the internal economy? No.
286. Miss Osburn had charge of it? Yes.
287. Supposing a new bed was wanted, or a bed of any kind, had Miss Osburn power to get such a bed into the ward? Yes; by making a requisition to the house committee.
288. How often does the house committee meet? Every Monday, at 12 o'clock.
289. Once a week? Yes.
290. And supposing a bed were required on a Tuesday, she would have to make a requisition, and wait until the next week before she got the bed? You are asking now about what —
291. Answer my question;—is it so? It is so. We have beds enough in the establishment to answer all purposes—air-beds, water-beds, and everything else.
292. These beds being on the place, she could get one immediately it was wanted? Yes, by sending in a requisition.
293. To whom? The house steward, and countersigned by me.
294. She cannot get it then without reference to you? No; I countersign for everything that comes out of the stores.
295. Mr. Metcalfe.] You are responsible for these things? Yes, I countersign everything.

Mr. J.
Blackstone.
5 May, 1873.

296. President.] Can not the house steward issue anything? Yes, he would if I was out, and he would bring it to me afterwards to countersign; but I am very seldom out; I am seldom off the premises. I don't go out once a week, except just to run round to Mr. Stephen's or Mr. King's. That is the extent of my going out. I never leave the building except on business.
297. Whom do the servants about the building take their orders from? From Miss Osburn—not all the servants. You know there is a different class of servants altogether.
298. Which servants has she authority over? The nurses, probationers, and the servants in her own wing, and the bathman and wardsman. But the yardsman and bathsmen are supposed to be engaged by me.
299. Suppose water were required to be pumped into the cistern, who would order it to be done? Miss Osburn comes to me to get it done, and I have it done; but now it has got to be a regular thing that the man does it without my order. But it used to be neglected.
300. There have been occasions when there has been a want of water? Yes; in the Nightingale wing.
301. And the proper person to take orders from respecting it was you? Yes; the man who does it is under my authority.
302. Under whose authority are the dispensers? Not under mine. If you look at the rules you will find that they are under the authority of the resident medical officers.
303. Is there a sufficient supply of water to the Infirmary? No; from about 3 o'clock every day we have not a drop of water until half-past 6. If a patient were dying for a bath we have no water at that time to give him a warm bath.
304. That has happened? It has not happened that a man has died, but we could not get a man a warm bath if he were dying. The men have to go into the wards without getting a bath.
305. Are there no tanks? No tanks.
306. Have there been none ordered? No; it is all in abeyance, as they are going to make great alterations. But the tanks have been asked for several times; I have asked for them.
307. Mr. Metcalfe.] But there is a large tank in the yard? That is a main tank, and it does not supply the bathroom.
308. President.] You have represented the want of tanks to the committee? Yes.
309. And yet no tanks have been ordered? No.
310. How long is it since you made the representation? I cannot say without referring to the books.
311. What is the cause of the water stopping at half-past 3? Because the City Council turn it off all over the city. I would not be sure whether it is turned off from 3 o'clock, or from half-past 3, but it is turned off until 6 fully. They turn off the water from one reservoir.
312. How long is it since you represented to the committee the desirability of having tanks? About two years ago. They have put it off and put it off from time to time. There was a proposition on the subject, and it has been under the architect's attention, to know what was the actual cost of these tanks. Mr. Holdsworth has been asked what tanks could be got for, but they have never been put up.
313. Is it your opinion that there are a number of persons admitted into the Infirmary who might be more advantageously treated elsewhere? I think, gentlemen, that is asking me a strange question. It is a strange question for me to answer, as giving my opinion against that of the medical gentlemen who admit these persons.
314. I am not asking you whether they are fit cases to take in, as being curable or not, but I want to know whether persons are admitted who would be as well treated in other establishments? I believe there are some patients of that class—not all. I can instance several cases. For instance, a man was taken in and remained there for five or six months, and then he was discharged; and he was brought in again a few days afterwards by the police, mad. He was kept in a few days, and discharged again, and in a short time he was again brought in by the police, mad. Everything brought by the police is bound to be taken in, as the medical officers will not run the risk of refusing to turn them out. That is noted to be the case. Cases are constantly brought in by the police at 1, 2, 3, and 4 o'clock in the morning—cases of people who have been picked up in the streets by the police, and there they are. If they were turned away by the resident officers, and anything were to happen to them, there would of course be a great disturbance about it. I can instance several cases, not only that of the man I have mentioned, but of several others, who have been in three or four times within a few months. There was this man, I wanted to ask for a pass for him up to Bathurst, and I got it, and I have the pass now on my table. He would not take it, but defied me and said he would not go. He would go out of the hospital, and then he would get a few glasses of ale, and become roaring mad. I have given him two or three suits of clothes to make him decent, but it is no use.
315. Are there any complaints by the patients as to their treatment? There have been some complaints, but, on the whole, they seem to be generally satisfied.
316. What kind of complaints have you received? Well, I never would receive any verbal complaints. I invariably say, when they come to complain of anything: "Put it down in writing, and I will lay it before the committee, and it shall be inquired into." I will not take verbal statements. I thought it always better to have the complaints put down in writing, and there have been some complaints which the committee have inquired into.
317. What sort of complaints are these? Generally complaints about the nursing, and about one thing and another.
318. Can you mention any of them? No, not without I had the minute-book here to call my attention to the matter.
319. These things have been inquired into, whatever they were? Yes; and the parties have appeared. When they have written the letter they have come down and been called in before the committee and been examined, and the nurses too.
320. Have the complaints been against the nurses then? Well, they have complained about the nursing staff not attending to them. When the complaints are only verbal, I cannot produce the men who make them, for they go away and we hear no more of them.
321. Then you don't pay much attention to these complaints? It would be no use paying attention to complaints, unless I could get the men to substantiate them. If the complaint was in writing there would be an inquiry into it.
322. Do you think that, on the whole, the patients have reason to be satisfied with the treatment they receive?

Mr. J.
Blackstone.
5 May, 1873.

receive? Yes. Out of the large number who come there, there are a great many who are perfectly satisfied. Of course there are cantankerous men who would not be satisfied with anything. It all depends on a man's disposition whether he is satisfied or not. I can tell in a moment whether a man is satisfied or not by just talking to him.

323. You think, on the whole, that the patients are well treated, and have nothing to complain of? No, they have nothing to complain of that I know of.

324. From what you see yourself,—you speak as if the patients complained on the eve of going away—but have you had complaints from patients who remained in the place, and could be got at any time to substantiate their statements? No.

325. Have any complaints been made to you as from the patients by the nurses or servants about the institution? Of what description?

326. Complaints as to the management of the institution, or as to the way in which they were treated, about bad cooking, or not getting their physic, or any other things of that sort? I have heard of these things.

327. There were complaints made? Yes.

328. Have you inquired into them? Yes, and reported them to the committee.

329. What have you found generally? That there has been neglect, but I cannot trace it. One laid it on one shoulder and one on another, so that I could not trace where the fault lay.

330. Can you mention instances of this? In the dispensary. The staff would come and complain that the medicine had not been sent out of the dispensary.

331. Whom do you mean by the staff? The honorary staff—the medical staff. They would complain. I would go down to the dispensary, and they would say there: "It is sent out." The nurses say, "No." Then it would be said that it was taken off to the wrong ward, or something of that kind. But it has generally turned up somewhere or other—generally in the ward.

332. How long has the medicine been kept from the patients? It is of rare occurrence. It does not often happen. But you asked me if I knew of any instances of complaints. It is a rare occurrence.

333. Mr. Metcalfe.] Have not the nurses complained to you many times about their treatment in the hospital? About their treatment?

334. Yes? Do you mean the present nurses, or those who have left?

335. I don't allude to particular individuals, but the nurses in any way? Well, I have heard them complain.

336. President.] Is it not a fact that there is not a very comfortable feeling between you and the lady superintendent;—is it true that there is some kind of work going on that shows that you do not possess confidence in each other? I do not know who has ever thought—I do my work, and Miss Osburn has her work. When she comes to me I meet her with a kindly feeling; but if we were to go into the matter from the first—which is not likely, I suppose—I could show that I have no ill-feeling against her, not the slightest.

337. Is there not some clashing between the two departments—your department and Miss Osburn's department? Yes, there has been, and I have gone to the committee and stopped her interference.

338. Explain how this has happened? I am the manager; Miss Osburn is the lady superintendent of the training and nursing staff; but if she wants anything, instead of coming to me for it she will sing out to some yardsman to go for the carpenter or the plumber, and so on, and she will get things done without speaking to me. All these things come under my revision at the end of the month—the charges do—and how can I know who comes on the place if she does this. Therefore I appealed to the committee that she should not interfere with my department at all, and they consented.

339. And that is the reason of the feeling between you? Yes, I suppose so.

340. And the nurses therefore come to you to complain about Miss Osburn? No, they do not.

341. They do not come to you? Some of them do, but not all. I do not see them—at least, I see them very seldom. There are few of them who come to the office at all, except about the discharge of a patient, or to bring me a patient's letter that I have to send to the post.

342. I remember that you complained some time ago that Miss Osburn purchased goods which you thought should have come through you? And I am still of that opinion. I am the manager. Supposing she goes out and buys £100 worth, or £80 worth, or £20 worth, of goods, or say £5 worth of goods, should I not have the invoice to enter in my daily book everything that comes into those premises? I make the house steward and everyone else responsible to me, but I know nothing of what comes in to Miss Osburn.

343. And that is your complaint? It has been complained of so that I have known Mr. Street complain that I should have the accounts on the day after the goods come in. I am supposed to have all my accounts in to meet the committee, but how can I have them under these circumstances?

344. And does not the existence of this uncomfortable feeling render the working of the hospital not quite so good as it should be? I do not know.

345. President.] Can you mention anything else, except the question of accounts, on which there has been a conflict of authority? Yes, Miss Osburn's sending for the labourers.

346. Mention specific instances;—what labourers? A plumber and carpenter.

347. What cases do you mean? There is a man employed there every day in the week, and when she wants him she sends a messenger for him.

348. Were you in the Infirmary when Mrs. Ghost was there? No, she was dead. I was there, and had two matrons under me. Mrs. Blake was under me, and another matron after Mrs. Blake left.

349. Mr. Cowper.] Do you know whether, before Miss Osburn came to the Infirmary, there was vermin in the building? I believe there was vermin in the building for some considerable time—in fact, so much so that the architect —

350. What do you mean by a considerable time? Well, they were in the walls. The beds were always clean in my time. There never was a man went out of the wards without the nurses cleaning every bed when a patient left it. Every bed was both scalded and cleaned with kerosene, and placed in the ward again, ready for another patient.

351. How did you clean the walls then? We whitewashed them.

352. President.] Was it the duty of the nurses to whitewash the walls? No; men were employed to do it, and I can show their accounts.

353. Mr. Cowper.] They were only whitewashed? Yes.

354. When did you discontinue that practice? It was done after Miss Osburn came.

- Mr. J. Blackstone.
5 May, 1873.
355. Under whose orders? Under my orders. She came to me at that time and asked me to have it done.
356. Were you never specially ordered to give up that duty to Miss Osburn in any way—either by letter, regulation, or in any way? No, no more than by being told not to interfere with the wards and the nurses.
357. President.] By whom? By Mr. Manning.
358. And then you gave up whitewashing the walls? No, I did not give that up.
359. Mr. Cowper.] I understand that you carried out a certain practice before Miss Osburn came, and that you ceased it after she came? It never ceased to be carried out.
360. Was there any order or by-law, or regulation given you, under which you ceased to carry it out? It never ceased to be carried out. When the wards wanted cleaning the house committee gave the order, and I can prove it by Miss Osburn's own reports, where she asked them to do the same thing to the wards then.
361. But you are shifting the responsibility on to the house committee? Yes.
362. Who put them in motion? I did; and Miss Osburn sent in her report as well as I did mine.
363. If you were never ordered to hand over that portion of your duty to Miss Osburn it is your duty still? But if the committee took it out of my hands?
364. But I want to know when it was taken out of your hands? I cannot tell you without having the reports here.
365. President.] I understood you to say that you ceased to clean the walls on some suggestion of Mr. Manning? No I did not say so.
366. What did you say? I said that I had nothing to do with the wards or the nursing.
367. Did you not say what I have attributed to you in answer to one of Mr. Cowper's questions? That had nothing to do with it. I have a bad cold and am rather hard of hearing, and it is rather a trouble to me to follow you. Mr. Manning some four years ago told me that I had nothing to do with the nurses or the wards; but then Miss Osburn would come and consult me if there was anything wanted, and I put it down in the book. But Miss Osburn brought up a report of her own, independent of mine, and what she asked for I cannot tell, but I know that sometimes Miss Osburn has asked the committee to have the walls and wards cleansed, but when it ceased on my part I cannot tell you.
368. Mr. Cowper.] Was it not her duty to do so, although you might have failed in your duty;—was it not in consequence of a failure of your duty that she did so? No, I do not think so.
369. How often were the beds taken out of the wards and cleansed? Directly a man left the ward his bed was taken out and cleansed.
370. And if a man remained there for 3 years would the bed remain there all that time uncleaned;—say a patient remained in 6 weeks or 6 months, would his bed remain uncleaned during that time? If a man was unable to be moved it would remain there. There are many cases in the accident ward where men cannot be moved.
371. But is it the practice for the beds to remain there as long as the patients remain? The rules say that a patient shall not remain more than 6 weeks.
372. But do the beds remain there as long as the patients? Yes, it would be impossible to remove men suffering from severe accidents.
373. There is a practice in the Liverpool Asylum of removing the beds every week, and I think there the vermin were always kept down? They might be kept down now if the beds were taken out and cleaned.
374. President.] Do you mean to say that the beds are not cleaned now? I do not see them cleaned, but I cannot say that they are not.
375. How long is it since you have known them to be cleaned? Ever since the nursing staff has been there.
376. Then the Infirmary has been going back in cleanliness ever since the nursing staff has been there? No.
377. Do you mean to lay the blame on them? No.
378. What do you mean then? The beds might be kept cleaner.
379. When were they cleaned before? When the patients left the wards they were done. I did not say that they did so now; and therefore if you make me say one thing when I am speaking of years ago, and make it out as if it referred to the present time, it is not an answer to the question.
380. Mr. Cowper.] Did you ever hear of medical comforts being supplied to patients for months after they were dead? No.
381. President.] Have you known a man's food to be sent up into a ward after the man was dead? Yes, on the same day he died.
382. No longer? No, it is quite impossible. The house steward comes to me and we take the tally every day of who goes out and who comes in, but the tally is taken at 11 o'clock, and if the man in charge of a ward can get the medical comforts after that for a patient who is dead, no doubt he will drink it. But no medical comforts can go up for more than a day before it is checked.
383. Mr. Cowper.] Do you know of men coming in as pauper-patients, and money being found on them, and yet they have been received? Yes, and they have had to pay.
384. But have they been kept in the hospital without payment? No, the money is found on them in the bath soon after they come in. I have often seen men sometimes coming in there with £300 or £400 in their pockets—£100, or £80, and £90,—and I have asked that they should be discharged.
385. Is it a regular thing to draft men off to the Benevolent Asylum? Yes, by the order of the honorary staff.
386. Do the authorities of the Benevolent Asylum ever refuse to receive them? Often, for being too young, or because there is no room. There was a man discharged a month ago, and the resident surgeon gave him a certificate to go to Liverpool, seeing that the man was totally unfit for work, and unable to get his own living. That man came back. He is in the last stage of consumption, and will die in the hospital.
387. Have you known men kept there when they were more fit for the Liverpool Asylum? No; whenever they are recommended to the Board the nurses bring the cards down to me, and I write to Mr. King, and if he does not choose to take them they are kept in the hospital. We cannot turn them out. The men have no means.
388. Have you known a man to be kept for months in the hospital after application has been made for him to go to the Asylum? I might think a man fit to go out, and the medical officer may say, "No, he is not."

not." I must decline to answer that question. It is not for me to say; it is for the honorary staff to say that. It has been mooted there that the resident staff should not have the power to discharge patients. The honorary staff have the only power of discharge.

Mr. J.
Blackstone.

5 May, 1873.

389. Mr. Wearne.] But is it the custom that the patients are removed when the honorary staff think they are fit for the Asylum. Are they removed to the Asylum when you think they are fit to go? The honorary staff recommend them for Liverpool, or for Parramatta, on the card. I then write to Mr. King, stating the man's age and religion, what he is suffering from, and whom he is recommended by—the name of the member of the honorary staff for the week—and that is sent down to Mr. King. The man takes the letter himself; but, supposing that he is not able to go round there himself, I write and say "that the man is unable to attend your Board" from such and such circumstances.

390. Are these patients oftener received than refused? There are a great many received.

391. What reasons are given for refusing them? That the Asylum is too full, or that the applicants are too young. From what I can understand, the men must be 60 years old or 50, and then they will take them in; but we have sometimes patients who have been discharged from the Infirmary, who go up to Liverpool, are admitted there, and who get discharged from there and come down here again, and here they are picked up by the police and brought into the hospital again.

392. Then cases of persons who are under 50 years of age are not taken in by Mr. King? No.

393. And you have these cases now in the Infirmary? No, this man I speak of was discharged, and I gave him an order. Where a man can take a letter to Mr. King I give him one, and I don't know whether he is refused or not. It is only in the case of those who are unable to walk that I send round.

394. Do you discharge them from the Infirmary whether or no? No, the honorary staff discharge them. The resident officer discharges them on the card, and I countersign it then.

395. Then you have no patients in the Infirmary, except those who should be there? That is hard for me to say. I am not a medical man. I may consider that there are fifty men there fit to go out of the institution, but the honorary staff say, "No; what do you know about it?"

396. But we are not asking the honorary staff. I want you to answer, and tell us just what you think. It may be that we shall recommend the establishment of some place to send them to other than Liverpool? But you are asking me to say whether patients are kept there longer than they should be.

397. I don't say that. I want to know are there persons occupying beds in the Infirmary who should not be there, and who keep the beds from persons who do require to be there? Well, I am not a medical man, but I believe it to be the case walking round of a morning, and I see men in a good deal better health than I am myself, but still I can't say what their ailments are.

398. Who recommends these men for admission? The honorary staff.

399. And how often are they there? Every day.

400. And how do they discharge patients? There is a long ticket hanging at the bed's head with the man's name and the doctor's name on it, and the date, and he states on it when the man is to be discharged, and the resident medical officer endorses the card to the effect that the man is either well, or incurable, and so on. That card comes down to me, and the man gets his clothes out of the clothes house and goes out. I have to keep an account of all admissions and discharges, and on the Sunday morning I go round and take the census of the place, and that has to tally with my account of the admissions and discharges.

401. How long have you been in the Infirmary? Six years and two months.

402. Who was matron when you went there? Mrs. Blake.

403. What is the difference between the duties she performed and those of the present lady superintendent? There is a great deal of difference.

404. What? Mrs. Blake had five women under her.

405. And how many has the lady superintendent? Thirty-four.

406. Are these thirty-four paid? Yes.

407. What is the difference in the rate of pay between the present thirty-four and the former five? We had wardsmen as well.

408. How many wardsmen had you? About eight or nine wardsmen, and three night wardsmen.

409. And five women—that is, you had seventeen people altogether? Yes.

410. And now you have thirty-four—nurses you call them? No, not all; they have distinctive names.

411. What are they? There is one English nurse, three head nurses, that have been taught in the establishment, seventeen nurses, seven probationers, one housekeeper, one needlewoman, and three domestics; and one charwoman occasionally. I think you will find that is thirty-four.

412. When you had Mrs. Blake there were nine wardsmen, three night wardsmen, and five women—seventeen in all? Yes, and we had three or four laundry women too.

413. Don't you have them now? No.

414. Were your duties different then? Yes, I had the general management of the whole institution then.

415. And Mrs. Blake was under you? Yes.

416. The servants were all under you? Yes, I had the engagement of them all, and fixed their salaries too. If a nurse was wanted I put a notice in the paper, and I certainly did not engage them, but I sent them to Mrs. Blake.

417. When Miss Osburn came out how many nurses did she bring with her? Four.

418. How long has she been here? Five years last March.

419. Then you were there before her? Yes.

420. Was there any matron since Mrs. Blake's time? Yes, Mrs. Cole.

421. Was Mrs. Blake discharged? No; she remained there for some time after Mrs. Cole came.

422. How many nurses did Miss Osburn bring out with her? Five.

423. And how many of them remain? One.

424. When did the new regime commence;—how soon after Miss Osburn came? The nine wardsmen and the nurses remained for some time after she came, but the head nurses who came there—the "sisters"—were put in charge by Miss Osburn, in certain wards, to look after the men as well as the women.

425. The others then came afterwards? They were all trained in the Colony.

426. Are they trained? Yes, by the nurses that came from England.

427. Do you think there should be all females where there are so many men in the Infirmary? No, in a moral point of view I should say that it is decidedly wrong.

Mr. J.
Blackstone.
5 May, 1873.

428. Then, if you made any recommendation to this Commission, it would be to have men to nurse men and women for women? Yes, we have one man now.
429. Over what? The male syphilitic ward.
430. Then you have thirty-four women and one man? Yes, but the man has charge of the lock ward.
431. Who has charge of this man? Miss Osburn.
432. So they are all under her control? Yes.
433. Even the man in this lock ward? Yes; we used once to have a man in in the morning only.
434. You have the bathsmen and the yardsman, and the cooks, under your control? Yes.
435. No one else? No, only the boys.
436. And Miss Osburn has the control of all the others? Yes.
437. You have to send in a report to the house committee for anything you require? Everything I require I make a requisition for.
438. To the house committee? Yes.
439. And you state that Miss Osburn has been accustomed to order things, apart from you? I cannot say that. Miss Osburn has come and asked the committee for so many blankets and so on, on the Monday morning, and the committee have told her to get them.
440. You can't blame her for getting them then? No, I do not. I only blame her for not sending in the account to me.
441. Then these irregularities are the fault of the committee, if they are sanctioned by the committee? Well, it is the fault of the committee. There has been a committee appointed now to purchase things, and no one can purchase anything but them.
442. Is that an improvement? Well, that will soon be seen in the difference of the prices. I don't think there will be much difference. A house such as Prince Ogg's will not impose upon gentlemen going round to buy goods.
443. You do not complain of Miss Osburn buying goods? No, but I say that I should know when the goods are bought, so that I can go to the committee and say I have received so and so.
444. Leaving that matter and coming to the admission of patients—how many probably do you refuse during the year? That I cannot tell you, except by reference to the books.
445. But an estimate from memory will do? I can't say.
446. Do you refuse as many as you receive? No, there were two and thirty admitted last week, and only seven refused.
447. Is the proportion two to one—what is the proportion of those refused to those admitted—estimate it roughly in your own mind? I could not make a calculation unless I had the book here to run it up.
448. And yet it is your duty to admit these patients, and notwithstanding that, you cannot give us any idea whether you refuse one out of twelve applicants, or one out of three? I should say that there is about one out of every five refused.
449. That is all I want? But then you must bear in mind that if they are refused to-day they are admitted to-morrow, or if they are again refused to-morrow they are taken in the next day. Every Monday morning I enter all the patients who have applied during the week.
450. But I want to know how many are refused and never get in? I cannot tell that.
451. Do you think one in five never get in? No, the proportion is smaller than that.
452. But they wait some time after being refused? Sometimes. I have known them to wait a month.
453. Have you noticed what applications come from the Colonial Secretary? Yes, they all come through my hands.
454. Do you make any distinction between the applications that come from the Colonial Secretary and the others? I have nothing at all to do with the admissions.
455. How do you proceed? A man comes to me with an order on the Colonial Secretary. I see them as they don't want these people going down to the Colonial Secretary's Office. I look at the order and the signature, and I see that it is an order on the Colonial Secretary. I make out a form, and sign it with my name, and send it down to the honorary medical staff. The medical staff do not know whether the applicant is recommended by a subscriber or not, or whether the man pays for admission. The man is taken in or refused on the merits of his case.
456. What are the merits of his case? Whether the man is a fit or unfit subject for admission—whether he is bad enough.
457. Then you send the patients to the honorary medical officers? I send down the form, and the medical officer has to say whether the applicant is admissible or not. He writes on the form that the applicant is admissible. He says, perhaps, "Yes, no bed"; or, if he is not admissible, he says the applicant should be an "outside patient."
458. And in that case would he be admitted the next day? No, a more urgent case might come in and prevent it.
459. A case from the Colonial Secretary? No, a more urgent case of disease. Suppose a case of typhoid fever were to come in as against the case of a man with a little bronchitis, the man with typhoid fever would come in.
460. Then you alone knew from whom the orders came, and the medical officers gave decisions upon the merits of the cases? Yes, all the particulars are written in a book, and then I look over them and see who are sent in by the Colonial Secretary, who by the subscribers, who are guarantee, and who are pay patients.
461. You stated that the beds were not cleaned, and that it was not your duty to see to them? No.
462. I see that Miss Osburn has three domestics? Yes, her own domestics.
463. Whose duty would it be to clean these beds? I do not know.
464. President.] You don't know? I do not. I can only tell you that when Mrs. Blake was there we had one nurse and one scrubber—that was a general servant—to two wards. But the men had their wards. In the women's wards there was a general servant—a scrubber. There were three wards up-stairs, and two wards down-stairs.
465. Then they were responsible for the beds and bedding? Yes.
466. And the laundry women did the washing? Yes.
467. It is not done now? No, it is all done differently now.
468. Then out of the thirty-four —? But you are reckoning too many. There are three of those thirty-four go to the Nightingale wing. You must take six off that list—the housekeeper, the needlewoman, the three domestics, and the charwoman. They are not employed in the wards at all.

469. They have nothing to do with the Infirmary, and yet are paid by the Infirmary? They have nothing to do with the wards.
470. Then there are six persons employed in the Infirmary who do nothing for the Infirmary? No; they are in the Nightingale wing.
471. What do they do? The housekeeper looks after the Nightingale wing.
472. Are there any patients there? No, it is the habitation of the nurses.
473. Then taking away these six persons, there are twenty-eight employed in the Infirmary? Yes.
474. Then it would be part of the nurses, duty to clean the beds? Yes, or the probationers.
475. I have heard it said that a woman who went into the hospital to see her husband could scrape up a handful of bugs;—should that be the case? Yes.
476. Ought that to be the case? I have picked them out of the wall myself, and if they are in the wall they get into the beds. My recommendation was to have the place replastered. I told the architect that unless he put in a plan to pick off all the mortar and replaster the walls the place never would be free from bugs.
477. Is it not possible to keep all the beds clean? Yes, by cleaning them, and washing them with kerosene, as in any other private house.
478. Mr. Metcalfe.] Are there not a greater number of beds in the Infirmary since Miss Osburn took charge of it? Yes, there are forty beds in a ward—not exactly forty,—because when the men were there we had fourteen beds instead of twelve, but there are more wards.
479. You have more wards now? Yes, we have six more wards now. We have forty beds more, taking two from each of the six.
480. President.] How many beds are there in the women's wards now? There are seventy-seven.
481. And how many are there in the men's wards? There are two more wards.
482. How many patients do they include? Forty. There were nine men's wards when I arrived.
483. Mr. Metcalfe.] And how many beds were there in them? There was twenty, and twenty is forty, and six fourteens make eighty-four, and twenty in the accident ward. Say 150. There were 144 when I arrived.
484. And how many wards are there now? Eight.
485. And how many beds? 150.
486. How many women's wards were there? Three.
487. And how many are there now? Six.
488. And there are seventy-seven women now in the women's wards? Yes.
489. How many were there formerly? Fifty-eight.
490. Mr. Gould.] Were you ever connected with any similar institution before? No.
491. You do not know then what the practice is in England? No.
492. The Infirmary has been recently cleaned—the walls whitewashed? It has been cleared and cleansed. It has not been finished yet.
493. What time elapsed before anything was done to it? Since it was done before?
494. Yes? I should say about nine months.
495. Was it cleaned so recently as that? Yes; but then we always whitewashed the walls.
496. I am speaking of the cleansing of the walls of the institution;—are you aware that in the hospitals of Great Britain it is customary periodically to whitewash the whole of the walls every three or six months? Yes; I have read so.
497. Has that been done here? No, not so often as that.
498. How long before the recent cleansing had it been done? I think about nine months before.
499. How long has Dr. Quaife been there? He was elected last March twelve months.
500. Has the whitewashing of the walls been done since he has been visiting? I cannot say now.
501. Is it part of your duty to see that the walls are properly cleansed and whitewashed? No.
502. You say it is possible to keep down the vermin;—do you refer to the vermin existing in the beds or in the walls? I refer to the beds.
503. Whose duty is it to see to that? It always was in the nurses' department.
504. Whose department is it in now? Miss Osburn is responsible now by the minutes.
505. Did the same filthy state which has been described exist when you first went there? No, though there were always more or less bugs in the building, but they were kept down by the place being cleaned.
506. Do you know how it is that the practice has not been continued. It is rather strange that if it is possible to keep down the vermin, that has not been done; there must be some neglect if it is not done. As you say that it was done when you first went there, can you give any reason why it is not continued? As I said before, we had a man to do it, and general servants instead of the nurses.
507. Then this state of things has existed since the change has been made? We have had scrubbers in Miss Osburn's time.
508. I want to know why it is that the vermin is not kept down? I don't know why it is. There is no labour to do it if the time of the nurses is fully taken up in nursing patients. I have always advocated general servants for the wards. I think one to every two wards would be proper.
509. President.] How many bathmen are there? Two. One is a messenger and is called away to go anywhere.
510. Mr. Gould.] When the wardsmen were employed did they clean the wards out? Yes, they were answerable.
511. Then do you think that the discharge of those wardsmen is one cause of the present state of things? No, I do not say that; but you have more command over a lot of men than over a lot of women—at least I have. If I saw a speck of dirt on the floor I could say to a man, "Do not let me see that again."
512. Is that not done now? I do not know what Miss Osburn says to the nurses in the wards. I do not pretend to know.
513. When it was under your management you had the control of all, and then the present state of things did not exist? Not to the present extent. We had some vermin in the building, but we kept them down as much as ever we could.
514. Do you think that the alteration that has taken place is one of the causes of the filthy state of the place? It is not by any means so bad as it is made out to be. It is not in a filthy state. If I answer your question, and assert that it is in a filthy state, I should assert what is not correct.

Mr. J.
Blackstone.
5 May, 1873.

- Mr. J. Blackstone.
5 May, 1873.
515. You say that there is vermin there? Yes, but I cannot say that the wards and beds are in a filthy state. I know there is vermin there, but I cannot say the wards are filthy, because I believe the whole story that has been got up is an exaggeration.
516. You were not responsible for the state of the wards? No.
517. Who was? Miss Osburn; but for me to say that the wards are filthy would be a wholesale slander. I do not say that. I have never said so to anybody.
518. Can you not give us some idea of the time when the place was last whitewashed? I cannot without referring to my books. I cannot carry such a multiplicity of things in my head.
519. It is not customary that the walls should be whitewashed at any fixed time, say once in three months, or once in six months? No.
520. Mr. Ellis.] Are you prepared to offer any suggestions as to the general working of the institution; is there anything that you think would tend to its improvement? Really I do not know how to answer that question. It would be setting myself up against so many that I should be very loth to give an opinion. You should examine the honorary staff and the other officers on that point. If I can answer any questions I will do so, but to go and set myself up to give an opinion that a general alteration should be made in the management of the institution is more than I can do. I think it would be invidious on my part to take that out of the hands of other people.
521. Having reference to the increased number of beds in the hospital, can you say that the expense has increased much? Not a great deal.
522. Going back to the time when you had a smaller number of attendants, has the expense increased very much since then? No, not a great deal.
523. What is the expense of the institution principally caused by—is the expense of the nursing staff great? No, I don't think the nursing staff costs more than the wardsmen did. You must bear in mind that those men were getting £40 odd a piece, and the probationers now get only £20 a year. The nurses get £26, and one nurse gets £30. The salaries now come to about the same as they did, and we have nearly double the number of attendants.
524. So that you get now two attendants for one in the former system? The only difference is in the consumption of food. I do not think you will find much difference in the salaries.
525. There is a needlewoman now; had you any before? Yes, there was a woman—the housekeeper—who looked after the linen. There is a large linen room full of all the patients' clothes, and that is taken charge of by the needlewoman, who repairs the clothes and serves them out to the patients when they require clean clothing. The head nurse sends down and says, "I want so many things," and they are obtained from the Nightingale wing.
526. Are you responsible for all the stores of the institution? Yes, except what goes into the Nightingale wing, and except the dispensary.
527. Who is answerable for the dispensary? The resident medical officer.
528. Who checks the purchase and distribution of the medicines? The resident medical officers.
529. They have never been checked? No.
530. So that at the end of the year you can hardly tell what quantity of medicine is consumed? Yes, there is a stock-book kept, and every year there is a balance shown of what remains in the store.
531. But it is not shown how the medicine consumed has been spent? No, it would be impossible to show that by any mode of book-keeping. You could never show it.
532. Suppose you took stock, and kept a record of all the prescriptions made up, they should show how much of that stock has been used for the purposes of the hospital? No. Suppose you had a prescription come in with ten, eleven, or twelve, or perhaps fifteen, different ingredients, how could you calculate it?
533. Then there is no check upon the issue of the medicines? No.
534. Then any quantity that is required is ordered? Yes, we go more by custom than anything else. If there were a large increase in the consumption of medicines the dispensers would be called upon to account for it. It is easily accounted for. The drugs are asked for in the same way as the stores. Every year there is an indent goes Home to England to Collier Brothers. For instance, the other day we got more out of a certain drug than we are in the habit of using, and there is an inquiry.
535. And how can you tell? The dispensers must account for it.
536. But there is no check? We are supposed to be honest men. It was mooted the other day that a book should be kept—a record of the disbursements of all medicines—but it was proved that it would be impossible to do it, for the clerical assistance would cost more than the value of the things. Fancy ten or fifteen prescriptions a day coming in with perhaps ten or fifteen ingredients in each.
537. I suppose a medical man or a practical chemist could form an approximate idea of the consumption? Yes, by going through the list and seeing what the consumption was.
538. Is stock taken in reference to the general stores? Yes, every year, and laid before the committee.
539. You check them in the proper way? Yes.
540. You compare the quantity received with the quantity consumed and the quantity on hand? Yes.
541. Who checks that? I do. When I first went there there was not a book or invoice in the institution; there was never a book kept.
542. Are the books examined now by a professional accountant? No, only by the auditors.
543. And they took everything for granted I suppose? They saw the vouchers.
544. I think you said the laundry and the kitchen were under your control? No, the laundry has been done away with for years.
545. Are you aware that in some large hospitals—in Melbourne, for instance—all the washing is done by machinery? Yes.
546. That 100 articles can be turned out and put on the lines to dry within a quarter of an hour? Yes, it is done in a hot-air room. We always had our washing done by hand. We had three or four laundresses.
547. Were they able to do the washing for a couple of hundred people? They did do it.
548. Don't you think it would be an improvement to have the washing done by machinery? There is such a difference of opinion about it that I should not like to give an opinion on the subject.
549. But there can be no difference of opinion as to the cleanliness of the system? The doctors say that they will not have the clothes washed on the ground.
550. But do you not think that it might be done by machinery? Yes, I think it might be.

Mr. J.
Blackstone.

5 May, 1873.

551. Could it not be better done, and faster? Well, we only wash twice a week.
552. It could be done on the premises by machinery? Yes, there could be two days there set apart for the washing. I believe if the machinery were there it would save a vast amount of labour and fuel, and the coppers could be done away with. We could have a hot bath in less than two minutes by letting a jet of steam go into the water. But there is a man now has four or five pumps, force-pumps, and he has to pump the water up about 150 feet.
553. What state of repair is the building in? The main building is in a bad state of repair.
554. In what respect? In all respects.
555. What about the roof? It wants a new roof.
556. The flooring? They say that it wants a new flooring.
557. Are the walls built of stone? Yes, rubble stone. It is one of the strongest buildings we have here, but the alterations that it is proposed to make would carry the windows up within 2 feet of the ceiling.
558. There is some difference of opinion among the medical men on that point;—is there not? No, I believe they agree about the ventilation.
559. Then you do not care to offer any suggestions as to the improvement of the general management? No, I had rather not.
560. Mr. Gould.] You said just now that in a moral point of view it was desirable that wardsmen should be employed? I think so. I think it is wrong that those young girls, nurses, or whatever they may be, should see men exposed; they must see them exposed, and have to assist them with pans and so on. It is all very well women to women.
561. President.] I suppose you are aware that in Germany and England the nursing is done by women? Yes, women of a certain age.
562. Mr. Metcalfe.] Do you know that as a fact? I will prove it. Here, in this book, "Notes on Nursing," it says, "The age considered desirable for candidates is from 25 to 30 years."
563. President.] Are there not nurses in Germany and England as young as there are here? How can I tell when I have never been in Germany, and when I have not been in England for nearly 40 years?
564. How young are the probationers? Not under 18.
565. And they remain for four or five years—they leave after that? I have never known one to stop for more than three years.
566. Mr. Couper.] Are there not women who have been there longer? Yes, there is one nurse who has been there six years. I engaged her. She was there before Miss Osburn came, and she is the best nurse we have in the establishment. She was only a "scrubber" there first, and she is now a head nurse, and gets £30 a year.
567. President.] Was there not one there in the position of housekeeper before Miss Osburn came? There was in a certain way—there was a housekeeper. I forget her name now.
568. And there was a person in the position of needlewoman? Yes, we used to get a woman in occasionally to work the machine.
569. Was there no constant employment for a woman;—surely the mending of the sheets and so on must occupy a woman? But the patients used to do it; there was one man used to do it; used to come and ask for them to mend.
570. Mr. Metcalfe.] But he was a patient, and only there for six weeks? Oh, but this was an old man.
571. President.] What other servants had you there then? A housekeeper, a needlewoman, and the general servants.
572. How many nurses? Three nurses and two under nurses.
573. That is five nurses altogether? Yes.
574. Then there were twelve wardsmen and five nurses? The pay-sheets that I have in my possession would give the information.
575. You said just now that these six domestics you have at present have nothing to do with the patients? Yes.
576. The housekeeper has, I suppose;—you had such a person before? She has nothing to do with the patients.
577. Where is she? In the Nightingale wing.
578. Do you not know what she does there? No, I do not. I never go into the Nightingale wing, except when I go into the place to see Miss Osburn on business.
579. Do you not suppose what they do there? I have no right to suppose anything.
580. How many persons are there living in the Nightingale wing? Thirty-four, I think.
581. That includes the six domestics you spoke of? I will just count them up: One English nurse, three head nurses, seventeen nurses, seven probationers, one housekeeper, one needlewoman, one charwoman, and three domestics; there are thirty-five altogether.
582. What does the charwoman do? I really cannot say. I have nothing to do with the Nightingale wing at all.
583. Mr. Metcalfe.] Has the expense of the wines and spirits increased or decreased of late years? No, it is a varying kind of thing. It increases and decreases one year with another.
584. What is the average expense? About £350 I think; not more than that I think. It is not a very heavy item. The milk is a large item; it is over £600 a year.
585. Mr. Wearne.] You said that there were nine wardsmen and three night wardsmen; then there were twelve wardsmen altogether? Yes.
586. And there were five women? Yes.
587. What were they? They looked after the women.
588. What were they? Nurses. There were three female head nurses and two night nurses, and two or three scrubbers. The scrubbers were what we term "general servants," but they were called scrubbers, and were always entered on the pay-sheets as scrubbers.
589. Did these three servants include the needlewoman and the housekeeper? No, they were scrubbers, and had to clean the wards.
590. Did you have a constant needlewoman? No, occasional.
591. A housekeeper? Yes, there was a housekeeper.
592. Who had to wash? There were three or four laundresses besides. I am talking about the wards entirely. The laundresses were quite separate from the others.

- Mr. J. Blackstone.
5 May, 1873.
593. Then, before Miss Osburn came, you had twelve wardsmen, five nurses, three scrubbers, a house-keeper, a needlewoman, and three laundresses? Yes. I think there were four laundresses at times.
594. And the needlewoman you have now does the same duty as the other one did before? Yes.
595. Does the housekeeper you have now do the same duty that the housekeeper did before Miss Osburn came? No.
596. You had a housekeeper? Yes, but she used to assist the matron in the wards.
597. Then these people now are above the number we want, and do nothing for the Infirmary? Yes.
598. Do you know the number of deaths in the Infirmary since Miss Osburn came and before she came;—has there been an improvement in the nursing—are deaths less frequent in the place? I should have to take the statistics from the books to answer that.
599. Do you think since we have had this nursing staff the patients are better attended to? Yes, but in some months we have had more deaths than in others. Last month we had seventeen deaths; but some months we might not have more than five or ten deaths.
600. I want to know whether the present arrangement is an improvement? I believe the patients are very well looked after by the nurses generally.
601. Were they well looked after before Miss Osburn came? I believe so.
602. Then the only suggestion you make is that there should be wardsmen instead of women? I think there should be men to nurse men, and women to women.
603. Mr. Ellis.] About the kitchen;—how is the cooking done—is it done by steam? No, by a range.
604. For how many persons can you cook? Our average number of patients is 224 daily.
605. How many are cooked for at a time? They are all cooked for at a time—each meal.
606. Is the apparatus ample? Yes. There are 224 patients, and six officers are 230, and three or four men and the two cooks; about 240 people are cooked for, morning, noon, and night, by the two stoves, and we vary the dinner every day.
607. You are satisfied with it then? I should be satisfied if the place was better.
608. How can it be made better? By pulling the old place down and cooking by steam. I think the engine that did the washing could do it, and we should consume less fuel for cooking. We consume now two tons a week for the coppers.
609. President.] Do you think a man makes a better nurse than a woman? I would sooner be nursed by a man than by a woman, unless the woman was a relation.
610. Is that the foundation of your opinion? Yes; I have seen as good wardsmen in the Infirmary as ever put foot into a ward. You may come across some cranky fellows, but take the general run of them they were good men.
611. What wine is it that you are allowed a pint of per day? Cawarra.
612. Mr. Cowper.] What do you pay the cooks? One £75, and the other £45, a year.

Miss Lucy Osburn, Lady Superintendent, Sydney Infirmary, called in and examined:—

- Miss L. Osburn.
5 May, 1873.
613. President.] You are the lady superintendent of the Sydney Infirmary? Yes.
614. How long have you occupied that position? Five years and a-half, from the 2nd December, 1867.
615. You came out from England to take the appointment? Yes.
616. You had received a previous training for taking such a position? Yes, I had been in St. Thomas's Hospital. At the time I received the appointment I was in King's College Hospital. Miss Nightingale has a school in connection with both those hospitals. I had been for a year there, and in King's College three months, during which time I was in connection with the "Nightingale Council," as it is called—a body of gentlemen, appointed to take charge of a fund to endow a school for the training of nurses. I had been previously on the Continent—not in connection with Miss Nightingale, but visiting hospitals in different parts of the Continent. I had resided for four months at the Kaiserswerth Hospital, at Dusseldorf, which has a great name. I have visited hospitals in other parts of the Continent—at Vienna, the Allgemeine Krankenhaus, built by the Emperor Joseph II., and hospitals in Holland. I did not live in them, but I visited them.
617. And during this time you made a study of the subject? Yes.
618. Will you state briefly the circumstances under which you came out here, and the position that you were to occupy? Yes. I understood from Miss Nightingale that there was a house surgeon in control of the patients, who was responsible to the visiting staff for the treatment of the patients during their absence, and who also had full control over the patients, inasmuch as he could discharge them for insubordination. I understood that there was also a matron, who was in charge of the administration of the hospital, the nursing, and the stores, and the cooking, and so on; and that there was an accountant, who had charge of all the books, and when the accounts had been passed by the matron, this accountant filed them, and prepared them for the governing body,—the Board of the institution.
619. Was the office of matron in existence when you came out? No. I do not know whether it was abolished, or whether they did not wish to fill it up on account of the Premier having applied to Miss Nightingale for a lady superintendent. But they had in the meantime established the office of manager. The manager was a superior officer. I think he is even the superior of the resident medical staff. He was an officer I had not heard of until I came here, and I felt, perhaps, a little annoyed at first, on finding this new arrangement, because it gave me a worse position than I had been given to understand that I should have. I was at first inclined to refuse the position, but, however, on reconsidering the matter, I thought it would be better to try and do some good. The nursing I found to be very bad indeed, and I thought that, at all events, we could improve that.
620. So you determined to remain? Yes, I determined to remain, but at first I was for giving it up.
621. The position was so different from what you expected? Yes.
622. We are told that the hospital is managed by a committee, which numbers some twenty-seven members;—how have you found that the working of the hospital can be carried on with so large a managing body? Well, I think we have all found it rather unwieldy. It was very large indeed. It was always difficult to get the same members of the committee together. One would often explain a thing to one committee, and at the next meeting would find a different set of gentlemen there, and so it had all to be explained again. There was also a good deal of personal altercation in the committee, and matters not connected connected with the place were brought under discussion, and this has prevented our bringing before the committee things which were often necessary for the good of the place. Or if one did bring them forward, I was of course only sent for into the committee after the manager and other people had been, and I found that most of the business-like gentlemen had to leave, because they had given all the time they could; and so the things I have brought before them have been referred to some committee that never sat, or otherwise shelved; and I think it has been greatly to the detriment of the patients. I particularly mention one circumstance, because the attention of the public has been called to the matter—about the cleaning of the hospital. I brought that before the committee many times—so often that one gentleman told me they were quite tired of being bothered about these vermin—that there were some repairs to be made in the hospital, and that until that took place I must manage as I could with the nurses.

Miss
L. Osburn.

5 May, 1873.

623. These vermin were in the walls of the place? Yes.

624. And in the frames of the windows? Yes, not in the floors. In the morning they used to go up in companies. I have reported it in my report book that the patients were suffering. Of course I do not blame the committee so much, because they were intending to make alterations, and thought that any expense incurred would be a waste of money; but then we waited month after month and nothing was done, and I was always put off with a promise that something should be done, and the patients in the meantime suffered very much. I would often go into the wards at night, and see perhaps a patient that was dying, with these creatures crawling over him, and then I would go back to my own clean room, and feel that it was a shame that these poor people I had been sent out to take care of should lie in such a place.

625. Were the beds cleaned? We always cleaned the beds; took them out and cleaned them; scalded them and oiled them. Everything we could think of we did; and these holes in the walls we filled up with mercury and any preparation that we could get to kill the bugs.

626. And notwithstanding that they made head against you? Yes; the walls are old, the plaster fell away, and they made nests, and we could not get at them. The walls wanted pointing. When I first went there there was a bathman, a very active, energetic, clever man, and he was more under my control than any bathman we have had since has been, and we used to keep down the bugs very well. We got the patients to assist in doing it. But afterwards I found I was not allowed to control the man at all; indeed, now, if I were to ask a man on the place to do anything, he would probably say, "It is not my duty; you must go to somebody else."

627. Can you trace this state of things to any cause? The men are from under my control altogether; they know the manager is their master, and he pays them, and they are dependent upon him; and they must please him; but as for their doing anything by my orders, they will not do it at all.

628. Have you been given to understand lately that you are responsible for the cleaning of the wards? Yes; of course it was found out at last. A patient bitterly complained about these vermin, and three gentlemen were appointed to go round the wards. They asked me if it was the case. I said, "Certainly it was"; and they found that it was the case. I was told to get three men and two women to clean the walls. I went to try and get these people, and soon found that without going to a proper plasterer it could not be done. I brought up several people, and they would not undertake it, not being proper plasterers. As I had been ordered to get it done, and several gentlemen called upon me and said something must be done immediately—as this was the case, I went rather beyond the leave given to me, and sent to Mr. Chapman, and had the work begun. Some members of the committee came, and they were very angry indeed, and said I had subjected myself to dismissal, and were very cross about it; but indeed it was the only thing that could be done.

629. Was the work carried out eventually? Yes; it was confirmed by the house committee on the Monday.

630. You had done this in your anxiety to carry out the original wish of the committee? Yes, of course; it was not the letter of the law given me, but I understood I was to get rid of the bugs in any way. Of course these three women were of little use to me, and I thought it was better to get proper men, and not to have the women at all, so I did not engage any women.

631. Has this nuisance been got rid of? Yes; we are now quite clean.

632. We understand that this nuisance has arisen from the beds not being cleaned on patients leaving? No, certainly not; we tried to have a rule passed, on the committee, and did have it passed, that where a patient went out no patient should be admitted into that bed until the next morning; but the doctors would not carry out that rule at all, in spite of being reminded of it. We often have patients sitting and waiting to go into the beds before the convalescent patient has gone out.

633. Then it is your wish to clean the beds? I would wish to have all the beds cleaned even if a patient only had it one night. All the convalescents beds are taken up, and thoroughly scalded and cleaned, independently of the time that they have been in.

634. You have not been able to enforce this rule? No; Mr. Manning, the secretary, appealed to the doctors that it was necessary in this climate, and in that old building, to take every precaution, but they will not do it. I saw patients to-day waiting for the beds to be ready for them.

635. Do you see any difficulty in the matter? I do not see any at all, because the difficulty would only be in starting the rule. It would only be for one day; and we did start it, and it worked very well indeed.

636. What interest has a doctor in getting a patient in? They are not supposed to have any.

637. I don't mean personal and pecuniary, but professional interest? Yes, a doctor likes to get as many beds as he can, especially on the surgical side.

638. I understand that the members of the honorary staff take the privilege of admitting patients in turn? Yes, there are four of them, and they take it in turns—each have a week. If in his week a great number of patients are discharged, that doctor gets a great many patients into the hospital all under his name, and he is jealous of keeping those beds. We had a case of two patients, who were ready to go out; as soon as the doctor got anybody to fill up the two beds he would have discharged the two patients. But it so happened that no patients suitable to be put in that ward applied for admittance during his week, so then the doctor said to the nurse in charge of the ward, "We must keep these patients until my week comes round again."

639. How long would that be? A month.

640. Then I understand that patients are kept there from a desire on the part of the doctors to have patients under their eye? Yes, that is the case.

Miss
L. Osburn.
5 May, 1873.

641. Are there patients there now of this class? Yes, there are. On the medical side of the house each physician has a ward to himself, or a fixed number of beds in a ward. If during his week for admitting patients he has no empty bed in his own ward, and there are empty beds in some other ward, he will admit patients for those beds, and his colleague will attend them. On the surgical side of the house every patient a surgeon admits belongs to himself; he can fill up every empty bed with his own patients. When we first came we got the committee to pass a rule fixing the number of beds for each surgeon, but this rule has not been kept for the last three years.

642. And this would prevent those beds from being filled? Yes, it would. There is one surgeon now; I have not counted his patients, but I think he has over the half of the ward, and the others have only the other half between them, and he will not allow them to have a single bed.

643. Do I understand you that the medical staff have the sole power of admitting and discharging patients? Yes; there is, I think, a rule, that the manager can discharge if a patient misbehaves, but it is not carried out, as the doctors object.

644. Then, do you think that this mode of admitting and discharging patients is objectionable? I think some one should have the power of admitting and discharging if necessary—some one resident on the premises—and report to the doctor the reasons for doing it.

645. In whom would you propose to vest the power of admission? In the resident medical officers.

646. It does not rest with them at present? No.

647. But with the honorary staff? Yes. However bad a patient may be, however desirable it may be to get rid of a patient, we cannot do anything until the honorary comes next day; and perhaps he does not come next day, and we must wait until he does.

648. You would not put the power of discharging a person improperly kept in, in the hands of the resident medical officers? No, that would bring them into collision with the honorary staff.

649. They should report that to the governing body? Yes.

650. You propose that the resident medical officers should admit on their own responsibility? Yes, and generally discharge when a patient has so misbehaved that it is necessary to take notice of his conduct. It is necessary to make a note of it too, so that the offending patient is not admitted again, at least for some time. There have been cases in which a patient has been discharged, and directly afterwards re-admitted.

651. By a member of the honorary staff? Yes.

652. I suppose in ignorance of what has occurred? No, I do not think so.

653. Do you find that there is an indisposition to discharge patients on the place? Yes, I do find it difficult indeed to keep any control over some of the patients. Although they break the rules that I am looked to to keep, and that the committee have made for the benefit of the patients generally, we forgive them once or twice, but they go on with impunity, and if the honoraries—one or two of them at any rate—take any notice at all of it, they only laugh.

654. Have you any instances of this to specify? Yes. The other day when the medical officer went through a ward he said to the sister, "I smell smoking; will you see who it is?" She went and found who it was, and brought the pipe and tobacco. Afterwards she brought the patient up before the honorary medical officer, and told him what had occurred, and all he said was, "I suppose they will do it." This was in the eye ward.

655. And you have it placarded about that smoking is not permitted? Yes, there are placards all round, stating that smoking is not allowed.

656. And this was in the eye ward? Yes. And if we reported another patient for the same thing to another medical man he would be discharged.

657. Is this kind of thing not subversive of the discipline of the institution? Yes, and we find it so. People who are in charge of the wards find it hard to be blamed for these things, but they have no control. In the Magdalen ward the patients are sometimes ill-tempered, and we have great trouble with them. If we are supported of course we can keep order. I have got the sister to report two cases there, but no notice was taken of them. She was ordered to dress a wound on one patient, and she tried to do so, and this patient was extremely impertinent, and called her bad names, and the sister said her doctor had ordered it, and she would get discharged if it were not done; but no, she would not have it. When the doctor came, the nurse went to him and said the patient would not allow her to dress the wound, and the patient said, "No, I won't allow her to do it." The doctor said, "Well, come here, and I will do it." It is very difficult to keep order against things of that kind. And some of the patients insist upon wearing their own clothing, which is against the rules. I did once allow a young woman to wear a shawl, or something of that kind, and I was reported for doing it.

658. By whom? By the manager.

659. Is that part of his duty? Yes, to report any transgression of the rules. There were two who insisted on wearing their own clothes. We got away the clothes from one, and the other we did not, and we reported them to the honorary, and he said, "Let them have it;" and those two patients are now in the ward with their clothes.

660. Transgressing the rules? Yes.

661. What is the effect of this kind of thing upon the patients? They grumble very much. Mr. Bedford told me that he had ordered a nurse to do something to a patient, who refused to allow it, and he discharged that patient on that day. That I think was hard upon her, seeing what the others had been allowed to do.

662. And these things all point to the fact of its being advisable that the discharge of patients should rest with the resident medical officer? Yes, it would at Home. For any infraction of the rules there the resident medical officer would have the power of at once discharging a patient.

663. Do you think that there are persons admitted into the hospital who can be as well treated elsewhere? Yes, there are incurables admitted, and we have great difficulty in getting rid of them. Of course a hospital for acute cases is an expensive establishment, and not a fit place for incurables, who do not require the amount of attendance or the expensive medicines which acute cases require. There are cases in the hospital now that will be a long long time in the place before they will get better.

664. There are cases in the hospital now? Yes, but when we can we get rid of them to Liverpool.

665. And you think if the admission of the patients were left in the hands of the resident medical officers the number of such cases admitted would be kept down? If it were left entirely to them?

666. Yes? I do not know that it would.

Miss
L. Osburn.

5 May, 1873.

667. How do they get admitted? Perhaps when they apply for admission their symptoms are acute, and then a little treatment relieves the acute symptoms, and there they are, poor things, not able to go out and battle with the world, and it would be hard to turn them out of the hospital unless there were some other place to send them to.

668. I understand you to say that the committee is too large in your opinion? It is too large to work well.
669. You find that there is a tendency to remit matters for the consideration of smaller committees? Oh yes. They are constantly saying—"Oh, that belongs to such and such a committee."

670. Have you had instances of that? Yes; in reference to this very cleaning of the building it was referred to the building committee. There are other committees too, though I never saw them, or knew when they sat, unless when there were sub-committees upon myself.

671. You have never been admitted to these committees, except when your own conduct was under inquiry? No; and then I was only called in to give my evidence.

672. In consequence of the management being in this state, have your functions been at all interfered with? Yes, I have considered that they have been, because the nurses get to know particular members of the committee, and it makes them—has made them—very insubordinate and very difficult to manage. They will tell me if I find fault with them that they will appeal to Mr. So-and-So; and I can hear them say sometimes—when I have been speaking to them and they get angry with me—I can hear them say that they will let Mr. So-and-So know, and they will bring it before the committee. They know that this thing I have been speaking to them about will not tell against me, and so they will take something else, such as my religion, or the church I go to, or the place where I say my prayers, or something of that kind. I am always having that brought up. The members of the committee may perhaps feel friendly towards the nurses, and they will go into the wards and shake hands with these women, and sometimes they will take them over to the office and discuss my arrangements, and they promise them that their salaries shall be raised in spite of me.

673. You have known this to occur? Yes, I have known it to occur with some who are very loyal; and of course it is done with others.

674. You think that the sole control of the nursing staff should rest with you? Certainly, and the salaries, and all things belonging to the nurses.

675. Is that your own opinion merely, or is it a matter of experience? It has been Miss Nightingale's opinion for years. She always gives us a pamphlet on nursing in hospitals when we go out of St. Thomas's Hospital, and in that pamphlet it is distinctly stated that everything belonging to the nursing department should be under the control of the lady superintendent, whoever she may be.

676. Have you got one of those pamphlets? I have got the one that was given me by Miss Nightingale. Here it is. (Pamphlet on "Method of Improving the Nursing Service of Hospitals," handed in. See Appendix A.)

677. To what portion of it do you refer? To this headed—"The relation of hospital management to efficient nursing." That is the portion which will tell upon the point.

678. Would you mind reading it to us? Yes, I will read it: "Equal in importance to the provision of trained nurses is the nature of the hospital authority under which these nurses are to perform their duties, for, unless an understanding is come to on this point, the very existence of good nursing is an impossibility. In dealing with this question, I may state at once that to turn any number of trained nurses into any Infirmary to act under the superintendence or instructions of any master, or matron, or medical officer, would be sheer waste of good money. This is not matter of opinion, but of fact and experience. The 'original sin' of this part of the Infirmary system, or no system, has been—1. The nature of the authority. 2. The nature of the nursing material on which the authority has been exercised. Experienced administrators will scarcely suppose that I mean to imply an independence, and to ask for uncontrolled hospital authority for the nursing staff, in what I have said. On the contrary: Vest the charge of financial matters and general supervision and the whole administration of the Infirmary in the Board or committee, i.e., in the officer who is responsible to that Board or committee. Vest the whole responsibility for nursing, internal management, for discipline, and training (if there be a training school) of nurses in the one female head of the nursing staff, whatever she is called. The necessity of this, again, is not matter of opinion, but of fact and experience. I will enter a little more fully into this, viz., the relation which the nursing establishment ought to bear to the government of the hospital. The matron or nursing superintendent must be held responsible for her own efficiency, and the efficiency of all her nurses and servants. As regards the medical officers, she must be responsible that their orders about the treatment of the sick are strictly carried out. To the governing body of the hospital she shall be held responsible for the conduct, discipline, and duties of her nurses, for the discipline of her sick wards, for their cleanliness, for the care and cleanliness of sick, for proper ventilation and warming of wards, for the administration of diets and medicines, of enemas, &c., the performance of minor dressings, and the like, for the care of linen and bedding, &c., and probably of patients' clothing. The duties which each grade has to perform should be laid down by regulation, and all that the medical department or the governing body of the hospital has a right to require is that the regulation duties shall be faithfully performed. Any remissness or neglect of duty is a breach of discipline, as well as drunkenness or other bad conduct, and can only be dealt with to any good purpose by report to the superintendent of nurses of the Infirmary. I may perhaps again point out that the superintendent should herself be responsible to the constituted hospital authorities, and that all her nurses and servants should, in the performance of these duties, be responsible to the superintendent only. No good ever comes of the constituted authorities placing themselves in the office which they have sanctioned her occupying. No good ever comes of any one interfering between the head of the nursing establishment and her nurses;—it is fatal to discipline. All complaints on any subject should be made directly to the superintendent, and not to any nurse or servant. She should be made responsible too for her results and not for her methods. Of course, if she does not exercise the authority entrusted to her with judgment and discretion, it is then the legitimate province of the governing body to interfere, and to remove her. It is necessary to dwell strongly on this point, because there has been not unfrequently a disposition shown to make the nursing establishment responsible on the side of discipline to the medical officer or the governor of an hospital. Any attempt to introduce such a system would be merely to try anew and fail anew in an attempt which has frequently been made. In disciplinary matters a woman only can understand a woman. It is the duty of the medical officer to give what orders, in regard to the sick, he thinks fit, to the nurses. And it is unquestionably the duty of the nurses to obey, or to see his orders carried out.

Simplicity

Miss
L. Osburn.
5 May, 1873.

Simplicity of rules, placing the nurses, in all matters regarding management of sick, absolutely under the orders of the medical men, and in all disciplinary matters absolutely under the female superintendent (matron), to whom the medical officers should report all cases of neglect, is very important. At the outset there must be a clear and recorded definition of the limits of these two classes of jurisdiction. But neither the medical officer nor any other male head should ever have power to punish for disobedience. His duty should end with reporting the case to the female head, who, as already stated, is responsible to the governing authority of the hospital."

679. Do I understand you to agree in the principles laid down in the paragraph that you have just read to us? Yes, certainly. It is what we were trained on,—that there should be no interference between the nurses and the head of the nursing staff.

680. And you claim nothing more than is laid down there? No.

681. And that is essential to the proper management of the hospital? Yes.

682. You do not claim it on grounds personal to yourself? No, but for the better management of the hospital.

683. Then, I understand you to complain that the rule here laid down by Miss Nightingale, that "no good ever comes of the constituted authorities placing themselves in the office which they have sanctioned her occupying" has been infringed in your case? Yes, it has, I think.

684. And that arises from the committee being so large? I think so.

685. Can you mention any specific instances of that sort of thing, and where it has interfered with your getting things done for the good of the patients? Well, I find it very difficult, if a nurse is idle or negligent, or not fitted for her duties as a nurse—I find it difficult to get rid of her. The committee will call upon these nurses to know whether they wish to leave or not. There was a case some time ago—two years ago—of a nurse who was very unfit for her position, partly on account of her bad health (she was ill frequently and unable to do anything, and she was unfit in other ways). I had her into the office, and told her I thought she must see herself she would not do for a nurse. She said very well, she would give me notice to leave. We had a long talk over the matter then, and she said she would give me notice. She did so. I reported that she was going to leave, and one of the members of the committee got up and said that this nurse had called upon him and said that she did not want to leave at all, and he proposed that she should be sent for and asked whether she wanted to leave. So she was brought in and examined, and I think a large majority of the committee came to the conclusion that they would have discharged her long before. We had another case of a nurse who was with us for a longer time. In the middle of one quarter I had occasion to move her from a medical to a surgical ward. She was displeased at the move, and she came and gave me notice to leave, without giving any reason at all. I reported that she was going to leave, and one of the members of the committee saw her and talked to her, and persuaded her not to leave. He then came to me and said he had got the nurse not to leave. I said that was a bad plan. I never found a person answer who was asked not to leave; it puts her in a wrong position, and makes her think you cannot do without her. However, I then put her into another ward with a nurse who was her friend. She was there a fortnight, and then she sent me in her resignation again, and I thought it was best to let her go. I was going away for a week, and so I paid her up to the end of her time before I left. While I was away some members of the committee went to her and told her how foolish she was to give these notices, as "it gave me a handle over her," and that she was a good nurse, and indispensable, and there was no occasion for her to leave, as they would have a committee and compel me to keep her. At the next meeting of the weekly committee they had no time to go into the matter, and in the meantime the woman left, and some one then said—"Oh, the woman has left, and there's no use going into it now," and they did not go on with the committee. This kind of thing gives the nurses the idea that they are indispensable, and a woman never works well unless she supposes that she can be done without; it makes them presumptuous where there is such a large number of them.

686. Have you found this interference of the committee inconvenient in other matters? It is not so much with the committee, as that I find I have no control over the people. I cannot get things done that I require. That, of course, is owing to the constitution of the whole management.

687. What do you consider are your duties as distinguished from those of the manager;—is there any defined line between them? I have rules laid down for my guidance, and they almost entirely confine me to the nursing staff. That would do if one did not want anything but nursing, but the patients want to be fed, and they want medicine, and if one cannot see that they get these things, it is impossible to do one's duty towards them. The patients complain to me about their food. The potatoes are very bad now, and I can do nothing at all. I complain to the manager, and he says, "They are very bad," but he is not in the wards. He is not to blame—he does not see these poor people—he has not to make them comfortable; and it does affect us, who have to do so, very much. We do not like not to be able to help them.

688. Are there any complaints? Yes, there are. The cooking is very bad, especially of the extras ordered for some of the patients. I do not know who has the control, but the cooking is not good. I have seen things sent up to the patients in the most wretched condition. I think those who are in charge of the wards could give you more information on these points, for they see it every day.

689. You find that you come into conflict with the manager from time to time, or that there is a conflict of authority between you? Yes, that is more it. His having the control of the people who have to work for me makes it difficult for me to have things done. Of course everything in connection with the diets comes into my department. When we first came here the diets were most miserable. The carving was done in the kitchen, and the food was sent up in miserable tin dishes, which were put down in the ward; and if people saw something that they liked they would fight over it.

690. This was at first? Yes. This was altered. I was consulted about the change, and we got a very nice dietary scale, and the sisters were told to look after the dietary scales of their wards. A sister has forty patients under her charge, and she has nothing to do but think of those forty people. I have brought with me a printed form such as we used to have. (See Appendix A 2.) This is the list I had made, and the extras are put below. The diets used to be entered on this diet list, from the cards, for the whole of the ward. We used to have the joints sent up to the wards, and the sister used to carve, so that the patients got their dinners nice and hot. If the sister had so many of No. 1 or No. 2, they were all put down on this list together. The joints were sent up for the whole number, and she carved for all the patients, and they had their food comfortably. The nurses were there to give the diets round. I think at a meeting of the finance committee there had been some complaints of the large consumption of milk, and the manager said—"Oh, these sisters have full control of the diet, and they can order what they like." There was a hint of something improper on the part of the nurses, so the committee determined the cards should go down to the house steward every day, and all the cards were sent down.

691. Will you explain what the cards are? They are called "bed cards" or "bed tickets." This is onc.⁵ (Bed ticket handed in. See Appendix A 3.) The name is put down here, the diet here, and the medicine here, and if the doctor alters a prescription the sister sends the card down to the dispenser. When the cards are returned from the dispensary, the sister makes out her diet list to send to the house steward. With this diet list the sister could go round and see what alterations were made in the diet, and could arrange her list in the same way.

692. Mr. Ellis.] Is the diet list a summary of the cards? Yes. We do not say on the diet list what patient it is required for, but only such a diet and so many of each.

693. President.] And she used to go and get these diets for the whole? Yes, six of these lists used to go to the house steward every day, and from these he would order so many joints, and so much of such a thing, and they were sent up to the sister, and she would carve. Then I suggested as a check upon her that either the manager or the house steward should come in on any day they pleased, not mentioning it to the sister, and take all the cards and check her list. But the committee said,—“Oh, let the house steward have the cards, if that is the better plan,” and that was carried, and I got a letter to say that the cards must go down as they used to. So now we get them in the old way, and there are many mistakes. Sometimes there are two or three diets short; sometimes there are eight eggs more than is wanted; sometimes patients have been dead for days, and the diet still comes up for them. We say that the patient is dead and the diet is not required, and they say they know better than we do, and still send it up.

694. The diet still comes up? Yes, and once there were five diets that we did not get, and an honorary medical man went down and made a fuss about it, and then we got them. It is a miserable way that we have these diets now.

695. What check is there upon the house steward? None that I know of.

696. And these diet lists would have been a check upon him? Of course, and they were so much less trouble. There were only six of them, and it was quite easy for any one to see in a moment what was wanted. It is exactly as it is done in an English hospital, and the cards are checked by the house steward, or some one else.

697. He can compare the cards themselves with these summaries? Yes.

698. To what do you attribute this interference with the mode of dieting the patients and the interference of the committee with your province? I do not think the committee knew anything at all about it; for when I explained that they had passed a resolution which was quite against the interests of the institution, they did not know who sent for the diets, or what was meant by the cards going down to the house steward.

699. Do they understand the routine of the hospital? I do not think they do very much. They are business men, and not able to devote very much time to the matter. There are some who spend much time in the hospital, but not to good purpose, or advantageously to the institution, for they don't see to matters that affect the patients.

700. Do you think that the governing body should be smaller? Yes, very much smaller. To have three or four gentlemen who would attend to matters would be quite enough; then one could have things explained and carried out at once.

701. What powers would you give such a Board? All the powers that the Board have now. It is not that they have too much power, but the Board is too unwieldy, and their power is used spasmodically.

702. There is no sustained action? No, you cannot reckon upon it at all.

703. Do you think the Board should have the power of getting rid of an honorary medical officer,—one who violated the rules? Certainly they should be supreme over all the place.

704. What would be the best way of correcting the difficulty of managing the institution? To have a small Board of gentlemen able to give time to the consideration of the business of the hospital, and who are so far independent that they can carry out any rule that is made. I think there is a rule now enabling the Board to get rid of an honorary in the case of complaints being made, but if there is one it is never acted upon.

705. But although the power exists, there is still a power of appeal from the Board to the subscribers? Yes.

706. Is that advisable? No, certainly not; their power should be final in all cases over every one.

707. What would you propose in the way of reform to prevent the clashing of authority that seems to exist between your office and that of the manager? When I came first, had I seen that the manager's object was the good of the patients, and the carrying out of the general good of the institution, one could have got on, our departments being quite separate, mine being over the servants, and his over the stores, but I find that it does not answer at all.

708. You find that he interferes in his capacity of manager with your department? Yes, he interferes, inasmuch as the nurses always appeal from me to him, and he encourages a kind of talebearing. Also, this not having the control over the male servants hinders the business very much. Suppose a patient is ordered a bath, it is not my duty to give that bath. I consider that if the doctor orders a bath, it is enough that the person in charge of the ward should give the order. But now we have to run about here and there to get it done. They tell me the man won't do it, and then I have to call and call the man and make him do it. The other day a boy was brought in with a broken head, insensible. The doctor ordered his head to be shaved, and some ice to be applied. The nurse said to one of the men that we wanted some ice at once, and she told him to go and fetch some ice from Compagnoni's—the only place we could get it at that hour on Sunday. He said, "I shan't; the manager is not in; I shan't take orders from any one but the manager."

709. And the boy was lying insensible all this time? Yes. I went after the man and found him after some trouble, and he went at last most unwillingly and fetched the ice.

710. He said he would not go because the manager was not in? Yes. There was another case. A patient asked me to send for a clergyman—he thought he was going to die, and he did die soon afterwards. I sent the nurse to tell the man to go, and he said that he would not—that it was not her duty to tell him to go. I had to look for that man myself, and I had to wait some time before I got him. I had to go down to the dead-house after him, and tell him to go. This kind of thing is a matter of almost daily occurrence.

Miss
I. Osburn.
5 May, 1873.

711. You speak of the difficulty of finding these men? They have duties connected with the dead-house, and they attend to the patients' clothes; they have various duties; but they are generally in that bath-room doing nothing at all.

712. And you have some difficulty in getting hold of them? Yes. I think the committee now have told them that they must obey me, but you see they will only take the orders from me. In an English hospital, no matter from whom an order comes, the people know that they have to obey it—the person ordered feels bound to obey. But only the other day a woman was admitted for the tent. It was a case of erysipelas. The doctor said she must not be admitted into the wards at all—that she must be put out on the verandah until the tent was got ready. She had a very inflamed leg. I saw this woman sitting there, and I did not know she was a patient at all—for we have often people coming to see patients, and I did not think she was a patient.

713. What time was this? About 10 o'clock in the morning. I saw one of the sisters give her some food, and that drew my attention to her, and I asked about her. The sister said she had been admitted for the tent. There seemed to be no preparations for putting up the tent. I may state that the way of it is this: The doctor usually says, "There is a tent case," and on that we get the tent up some time or other. Well, the sister saw the manager, and showed him the card, and said, "You see here is a woman for the tent," and he said, "I know nothing about it." I thought he would perhaps inquire of the doctors about it, and that we should have the tent put up; but, however, tea-time came, and this woman was still sitting there. We gave her two chairs, one to support her leg, and we gave her some tea and food; so it was getting rather desperate, and I went over to the doctor's, and said, "Have any orders been given to have a tent put up?" He said, "If there was a tent on the card I had better order one to be put up." I went about and told the yardsman to send whichever man came in to me at once. None of them came; and when it got dark we made a bed for this woman in the lavatory, and put up a screen, and made it as comfortable for her as we could, and in the morning the tent was put up.

714. Do you mean that the woman was there for twenty-four hours without the tent? Yes.

715. Where was the manager? I do not know, but he knew about it. I then went to him, and said we wanted a bed placed in the tent. The man just put up the tent and left nothing else there, although he knew that a bed was wanted, and I got the bed put in.

716. Had you to ask for the bed? Usually the man would leave the bed there, but on this occasion he just put up the tent and went away.

717. You consider that an instance in which you should have acted without referring to the manager? I do. I should have the power to order things on the spot. The person living among the people, and seeing what they want, should have the power to get what is wanted, because, when it is mentioned to the manager he does not see the things as we do, and he cannot understand what is wanted.

718. What is the manager's demeanour to the patients? His demeanour to everybody is a little rough, perhaps not more to the patients than to others. He is a little rough.

719. Does his indifference to the patients seem habitual? Yes. I don't think he takes any interest in them—it is not part of his work.

720. But everybody should take an interest in the efficiency of the institution? Yes.

721. Have you ever known complaints to be made by patients as to his manner of receiving them? Yes, sometimes.

722. Or of his interference? Yes. Of course, he is sometimes a little jealous of me, and a feeling of that kind may prevent his doing things. Sometime ago a patient showed me his card. He was going out at 2 o'clock, and he asked me to let him have his clothes, to dry them, as there had been some very damp weather, and they possibly might be mildewed. I said, "Yes," and I wrote an order. The person in charge of the clothes-house took this to the manager's office, and the manager tore up the paper, and said, "What has she to do with this? You shan't have your clothes until 2 o'clock."

723. So that this man, who was an invalid, was not allowed to have his clothes to dry them, as he was going out? No.

724. Because you gave the order? Yes. There are other instances that can be related to you by other persons connected with the establishment.

725. The manager has told us that you have sole control in the wards generally;—have you always found that you have that control—have you the management of the ventilation and the lighting, and so on? I do not know exactly what that means. Of course I have the sole control over the nurses, but as to the wards, I suppose it means everything in connection with the wards, and that is not so. For instance, last winter we had fires when the cold weather set in. I went through the wards, and the nurses at one ward told me that the gas stoves in the hall had been removed—the pipes had been cut off and the stoves taken away.

726. What are they used for? For heating, fomentations, and for making poultices, and for any little thing that is ordered for the patients that needs warming. I said, "I suppose the plumber has found it out of order, and has taken it away to mend." But another nurse said the same thing. I thought it odd that there should be two of them taken to repair, and going on I saw that they had all been taken off, and the nurses complained that they could not get on with their work—no poultices could be made. When the doctors came round they could get no hot water. I felt annoyed at the man for taking them all at once. The next morning it was the same thing—they were all calling out that they had no hot water for their patients. Afterwards, when the office was opened, I went over to the manager and said, "Do you know that the stoves have been taken away?" He said, "I have ordered them to be cut off." He said, "You have got fires in the wards, and you must manage with them." I said, "I could do that if you had let me know, so that we could get pans or kettles to heat things with." It was such bad management to do this so suddenly. I know of another instance. Of a morning patients get up and have their beds made. Some of them are more delicate than others—persons in consumption, for instance, we have to be very careful with. When they get up we do not shut the windows but raise them a little, and after the beds are made they can be opened as much as possible. One day one of the members of the committee shouted out to the nurses from the other side of Macquarie-street and told them to "open those windows." We had to go down to know what was the matter.

727. Mr. Metcalfe.] Was he a doctor? No.

728. President.] How is the ventilation of the hospital? It would be better if those windows were higher, or if we had ventilators above them. The space above the windows is like a well of foul air, and it must be very bad.

729. Do all the windows open into the street, or do some of them open into closets and things of that sort? Yes, there have been lavatories and closets built within the last three or four years, and they took in one window. There are four windows on that side, and there is one window which opens into the lavatory. There again, you would think I would have control over the ventilation, but one of the patients complained that this window was open, and the smell that came through it was bad in the wards. It was bad, and I told the night-wardsman to close the window. The next morning I found it open again, and I told the day-wardsman that I wished it to be closed. He closed it, but afterwards said to Mr. Halkett, the house surgeon, as he was going round—"Do you wish all the windows in this ward open—it is a close ward?" and he said, "Of course." Next time I went round I found the window open again, and the wardsman said, "The doctor has ordered it to be open." I told the patients I was sorry, but could not order the window to be closed against the doctor's orders. I did not see the house surgeon until the next day, when I met him and asked him into my office. He said, "I know what you are going to say. I did not know that the window of No. 10 ward opened into the lavatory, and when the wardsman asked me if I wanted the windows open I said they should be open, but I did not know he was appealing to me against you."

Miss
L. Osburn.
5 May, 1873.

730. To what do you attribute that? Well, I suppose they were angry I should give orders in the ward. It was the male lock ward, and is nursed by a wardsman, and the manager has control over the male servants.

731. And this man was annoyed and had the window opened against you? Yes.

732. And this is another instance, showing the evil of this divided authority? Yes, and in cases like this I have not the full control over the wards. Also, when I appealed to the committee, and it was decided that the wards should be cleaned, the committee referred me to the only rule upon cleaning which is in the by-laws, and that is under the head of "sisters." It is in paragraph number 2: "They will be held responsible by the lady superintendent for the good order and efficient nursing of the patients, and the cleanliness of their wards, lavatories, &c." That of course means, I suppose, that as far as the nurses can keep the place clean, it is to be kept clean; but surely not the ceilings and places which are entirely out of a woman's reach. The sisters reported to me that the place was dirty, and I repeatedly told the committee that it needed cleaning. I don't see what we could do further than that.

SAMUEL GOOLD, Esq.

MICHAEL METCALFE, Esq.

John Smith, a patient in the male lock ward of the Sydney Infirmary, examined in that ward:—

733. President.] How long have you been here? Three months.

734. Is the same wardsman here now that was here when you first came? No.

735. Do you know of that window—the window opening into the lavatories—being left open? No, not since Whitney went away. It was open before, and she [Miss Osburn] ordered it to be shut.

736. Before that it was kept open? Yes.

737. Did you find any inconvenience from it? Yes, a bad smell.

738. Did you apply to the wardsman to have it shut? It was little use applying to him; it was seldom he would do anything.

739. Do you recollect the patients complaining to Miss Osburn about it when she came round? Yes, I recollect them complaining. We spoke to the wardsman about it several times, and he would not shut it. We spoke to him about it first, and then we spoke to her [Miss Osburn], and after that it was kept shut.

740. Do you recollect its being opened since? No, it has not been open since.

Mr.
J. Smith.
8 May, 1873.

Mrs. Mary Bland, head nurse, in charge of G and H wards, Sydney Infirmary, examined in ward H:—

741. President.] You are one of the head nurses? Yes.

742. In charge of G and H wards? Yes.

743. This is an accident-ward—this H ward? Yes, and I am in charge of this and the next.

744. Do you find a difficulty in receiving urgent cases of accidents into this ward—pure accident cases—in consequence of beds, which should be kept empty, being filled with cases other than accident cases? Yes, we have to take them in somehow, and we have sometimes to put four beds down on the floor here. We never turn an accident case away. The great difficulty is to get rid of the convalescent patients out of the ward. There is no convalescent ward, and there are many patients who could go into a convalescent ward if there were one for them.

745. How many does this ward hold? Eighteen.

746. If there are more than that number, is the ward crowded? Yes, and I have to put beds on the floor.

747. Is that bad for the patients? Yes.

748. What is this crowding caused by? There are often cases which are not really accident cases in the ward, and there are cases originally accident cases, where the patients are sufficiently convalescent to be removed if there were a room for them.

749. How comes it about that the rule is violated? I suppose because there is no room in other wards. There was a ward here called the convalescent ward, and patients were received there as they were convalescent, but that has lapsed a long time now.

750. Do I understand you to say that patients are sent in here from other wards, contrary to the rules? No, they are not sent in, but they remain here longer than there is any necessity, in consequence of there being no other ward to send them to, when they are sufficiently well to go out of this ward.

751. What cases are admitted here? There are often surgical cases admitted.

Mrs.
M. Bland.
8 May, 1873.

- Mrs.
M. Bland.
8 May, 1873.
752. You define the accident cases as being different to the surgical cases? Yes. The accident cases are different from the surgical cases. A surgical case is not an accident case. That old man's case [pointing to a patient] was a surgical case, and not an accident case.
753. How long has he been here? About two months.
754. Has he recovered? Yes, and the doctor discharged him to Liverpool, but they refused him because he had had erysipelas.
755. But he does not remain here because he needs treatment? No.
756. Mr. Cowper.] I suppose he would go into a convalescent ward? Yes. I suppose it is necessary that the Liverpool Asylum should not take in cases of erysipelas, but we have so many people here who only want taking care of. They don't want physic. Some of them are real loafers; and such a number of them too. On the lower floor there are many who come in and go away for about two months, and come back again with a little pain. They can easily get up a little pain, and it is difficult for a doctor to know whether they are really bad or not. We, who see so much of them, could tell better.
757. Mr. Ellis.] Who has the G Ward—what doctors? That is Dr. Alleyne's ward.
758. His ward exclusively? Yes.
759. Is there any other ward which is attended by one medical man exclusively? Yes; Dr. Renwick has one whole ward to himself at the other end of the building.
760. Are they the only two who have wards exclusively to themselves? Yes; Dr. M'Laurin and Dr. Quaife have nearly as many patients. They have the whole of one side between them.

Bridget M'Aulty, a patient in Ward B of the Sydney Infirmary, examined in that ward:—

- Bridget
M'Aulty.
8 May, 1873.
761. President.] How long have you been here? A fortnight to-morrow.
762. You have been suffering from erysipelas? Yes; very bad it was; but it is nicely now.
763. What time did you come into the Infirmary? On Friday I got in.
764. At what time in the day? It was better than half-past 10.
765. What time were you put into the tent? On the same evening I came in, sir;—no, I went into the bath-room, and they made me up a bed, and I slept there in the bath-room.
766. And when did you go into the tent? On Saturday.
767. When did you come in on the Friday? About half-past 10 in the morning.
768. And you did not get the tent until the next day? No.
769. How long did you sit out waiting for the tent to be put up? Oh, pretty well all day,—until nearly evening.

Miss Lucy Osburn, Lady Superintendent, Sydney Infirmary, called in and further examined:—

- Miss
L. Osburn.
8 May, 1873.
770. President.] Under whose control are the dispensers? I do not think they are under anyone's control, except of course the committee; they are under the control of no officer.
771. How many are there? Two—the dispenser and his assistant. I have complained to the head dispenser about what I thought was improper conduct on the part of his assistant, and he told me that he had no authority over him. I said, "Whom shall I apply to?" and he said he did not know; but he would speak to the assistant about what I had said.
772. Have you had reason to find fault with the dispensing? Yes, I have had great reason to find fault with it altogether.
773. Is the dispensing bad? I think it is very irregular. We have the greatest difficulty in getting the orders of the doctors attended to. If blisters are ordered, or lotions or applications, it may be sometimes twenty-four hours before we can get them.
774. What, twenty-four hours after the doctors have ordered them? Yes. There is a boy for the dispensary, and another for the storekeeper; the dispenser's boy goes round the wards and fetches the cards when the doctors have been. When the doctors have ordered anything the nurse puts the cards on the hall tables, and the boys come and fetch them. These boys are extremely careless about whether they fetch them or not; and when they fetch them I suppose that they do not deliver them properly to the dispensers. If I go down to complain that such and such a thing has not come in then there is a search for the card to see whether such a thing is the case, and the card may be found there, or the boys may have left it behind when picking up the others. The boy may go talking to the patients and put down the cards, or he may leave some down when he picks the others up, so that they may be lost.
775. Who engages these boys? I suppose the head dispenser engages his boy, and Mr. Jones engages his. If a nurse says to one of these boys that she will go and tell the lady superintendent about him, the boy will say, "Well, go and tell her; she has nothing to do with me." I have heard them say so when they have been doing something for which the nurse has spoken to them. She has said, "I shall have to report you to the lady superintendent;" and the boy will say, "Go and report; she has nothing to do with me." Of course boys are always rather careless; but still I think if one had some kind of authority over them they would better obey what the nurses tell them to do.
776. Have you had to complain more than once of this neglect and delay in bringing up the medicines and appliances for the doctors? Yes; I have often to complain. The doctors come to me and say that such and such pills have not come up, or such a thing has not been administered. Sometimes the dispensers have had the card and returned it, and never sent the medicine at all, and the doctors come to me and complain about it, and say it must be attended to. Of course I can scarcely be responsible for the neglect. I can go to the dispenser and complain of it, but that is all I can do.
777. Have you been obliged to do that? Very often. We do apply to the doctor—the house surgeon.
778. And what does he say? Oh, sometimes he says, "I have nothing to do with it," and sometimes, if the thing needed is something that he is just going to use, he will rush down and have a quantity sent in for the use of the ward. All these kind of things, such as lint, and tow, and cotton-wool, we never can get up at all. The nurses have often to wait a long time before they can make the poultices or dress the wounds with the applications ordered.
779. How long have you known patients to suffer on this account? For days sometimes we cannot get a bit bit of linseed meal for a poultice. Of course the nurses will not let the patients suffer if they can help it, and so they run round and get what they want somewhere. They can sometimes get what they want in some of the other wards.

Miss
L. Osburn.

780. But of course in a well managed hospital they would have a supply of things in the wards? Yes. I made a rule that each of the nurses should send once a week—she can generally tell how much of a particular thing will be wanted—to write an order every Friday for what was wanted, and these things were to be sent up once a week. This was, I suppose, objected to, and I went to the dispenser about it, and he said that the manager did not like supplies going into the wards in this way.

781. Supplies merely for the nursing? Yes; cotton-wool, and tow, and linseed, and so on. There are always things of this kind supplied to the wards—the surgical wards.

782. You think that these things should be under your control? Yes.

783. Mr. Driver.] As being constantly required? Yes; constantly in these wards. The people in the wards will be able to explain to you how constantly their work has been hindered by the want of these things.

784. President.] And in this climate the want of these things may lead to serious results? Yes.

785. The want of bandages and things of that sort? No, not the bandages; that is in the linen department, and I have charge of that myself.

786. Mr. Gould.] Is it the practice in the English hospitals to keep a supply of these things? Yes; there is always a supply in the ward, and then if the supply is out before the week has expired, it can always be sent for. I never knew of such a system as this.

787. President.] In all your hospital experiences did you ever know of such mismanagement? Never.

788. Mr. Metcalfe.] There is no such person as a manager in an English hospital? No.

789. President.] Under whom do you think that the dispensing staff should be placed? Under the resident medical officer; if there are two, it should be the resident physician.

790. That is the English practice? Yes.

791. Have you spoken to the committee about this neglect? Yes; and I have been asked by the committee if I often found it so bad, and I have told them exactly what I have told you, how often we have to complain. When I complain to the dispenser he often blames the boys.

792. What is the system of communication between the wards and the dispensary in an English hospital—does it depend on the vigilance of a boy? No. If the boy were intelligent and kept up to his work, he would be quite able to fetch these cards without a mistake; but they make fifty mistakes, and they are so careless that they often break the bottles. I have seen a boy bring castor oil, break the bottle, and go the whole length of the ward spilling the oil as he went. Of course when I saw what was happening I stopped him in the middle of the place, otherwise he would have gone right through. But that has happened several times—it has happened at least five times within the last year. I have seen when I have come into the ward, the grease all down the ward, where they have spilled either cod liver oil or castor oil.

793. Have you any other observation to offer on the subject of the dispensary? No. I think that for details you will find that those in charge of the wards know more about it—can give you more anecdotes than I can. But I have had complaints from the doctors, both the resident officers and the honoraries, about the want of regularity in supplying the medicines to the patients, and the nurses have come to me often to say that the work is doubled by the running about to get things up. If a boy forgets something they have to go down to the dispenser themselves, and this takes them out of the ward.

794. Mr. Wearne.] In what part of the building is the dispensary? It is near the entering gate—exactly opposite to the doctor's quarters; it is on the Mint side.

795. President.] You have to go across the yard to it? Yes.

796. Mr. Wearne.] What, in your opinion, would be the best arrangement to make the thing more perfect—is it necessary for these boys to take down the cards every day—can the cards not be copied and left in their places in the ward? No, I hardly think so. A prescription is always written in Latin, and it would be scarcely safe for any one not specially trained to make a copy of it.

797. A man has to be trained to understand it? Yes.

798. But if the prescriptions were to be written twice, and one copy to be sent off to the dispenser, but the board still kept at the head of the patient's bed? Yes, that would do.

799. Would that get over the difficulty? Yes, it would. It would be a most excellent plan, because it is a great inconvenience at present having the board taken out of the ward at all.

800. You think that the board should always be in the ward? Yes.

801. And that the nurses should be responsible for the diet—that the nurses should copy out the diet lists, and send them down? Yes.

802. And that this lad who carries down the prescriptions to the dispensary should be under the control of the resident medical physician? Yes, everything belonging to the dispensary should be so arranged that if there were anything to complain of we could go to the house physician and say so and so is wrong.

803. Is he always present? Yes; he goes away in the evening, but only for a short time.

804. President.] Supposing that a case comes in, and there is no bed for it in the ward, or there is another mattress required, could you get it at once? Well, if a bed wants filling with straw, there is a man called the yardsman who is supposed to do that. This very afternoon before you came, the sister in the accident ward wanted a bed for a case that had come in, and the straw was very old. She sent a nurse to tell this yardsman to fill the bed, and he sent back word that he would not do it, and she might get who she could to do it. As you were coming she did not want the bed left, and she went to the manager and said she must have it, and he then ordered a bed to be filled. That is only one instance out of many of the same difficulty. As to the mattresses, they should be properly under my control, because they are part of the bedding, and they may be wanted at any moment, so that not having control over them is a matter of very great inconvenience. When we want a new mattress I report this to the committee, and they have always given me leave to do what is necessary, but I have no place in which to keep them in this house, and so they have to be kept in the store, and the store is under the manager's control, and it is etiquette to get the manager's permission to get anything out of the store. In a general way it does not matter at all, but in a case of emergency it does. I remember a case of a patient who had gone out—he had had a fractured head, and had a soft mattress. He went out, and there came in a patient with a fractured femur. I said, "Oh, run to the store and get a bed, for this is a soft mattress." A convalescent patient went to the store, and the storekeeper said he would not give out the bed because there was no order for it. I sent to the manager to get the order and he was not in the office, and I had to go down myself and tell the storekeeper. Of course the mattresses are made for the patients, and they must be had without delay once in a way. And moreover, he knew if I ever had anything without an order I always sent down the order afterwards.

805. So although it was a case of emergency they stood upon a matter of form? Yes. One of the great faults in the place is that the servants feel that they are the servants of certain people, not that they are here to do certain duties. At Home if the commonest man or a bath-man came to me—supposing I were a nurse—and said, "Sister, there is a case wants something doing,"—if it was not in my department at all I would run and do it in a moment. In the same way a nurse can give an order to a bath-man to do anything in the bathing line, and he would not want an order from any particular person to do it. He would be engaged to do certain duties for the institution, and wherever they came it would be his duty to see to them.

806. And that spirit does not prevail here? No. The man will say the manager is out and he cannot do it, although it is the very thing that the man is supposed to do. For example, in connection with the putting up of the tents,—I have given you one case—but I have known people stay for hours waiting for the tent to be put up. Now, at Home, if a man saw that a tent was wanted—and this man does know, because he sees the cards—he would not wait for people to tell him, he would put up the tent, and he would be blamed unless he did so. He would not wait for orders from an officer he considered his master. He might perhaps go to the sister of the ward, and say, "I see there is a tent case; I suppose I had better put one up?"—and she would of course tell him.

807. Had you charge of the wardsman? No, I had great difficulty with that wardsman—the late wardsman,—because under the rules all the male servants are under the control of the manager. I complained to the manager about the incompetency of the man, for he was really very incompetent, and on one occasion he behaved most rudely to a nurse. She went into the ward to ask a patient to assist in cleaning the opposite ward. The opposite ward is Dr. Renwick's, and the patients there are medical cases. When that is the case we always allow the surgical patients to help in cleaning the ward, and the nurse went to ask for a patient who had expressed his willingness to assist, to do so. She went to the ward as usual and asked the man to come and he did, and as he was in the other ward the wardsman came up—(I am sure the man must have been intoxicated, for he really behaved very badly)—he came up and told this patient to leave the ward immediately. The nurse did not see what had happened, but she saw that the man was gone, and she went to the other ward again to ask for him, and this wardsman took hold of her and pushed her against the wall, and shut the door against her. She came to me to complain. I went up to the ward, but the wardsman was not there, and I then went down to the manager and said the man had behaved very improperly. The manager told me afterwards that he had spoken to the man and he thought that he was quite justified in what he had done.

808. Did you tell him what the man did? Yes. He was also a very incompetent man, and kept the ward in a disgraceful state. I told the manager that he ought to be discharged, and that if he took no notice of what I said I should report the matter to the committee. He did not take any notice, and I did report the matter to the committee. Two or three members of the committee examined the nurse and myself, and the man, and they came to the conclusion that they would keep him. Then this Commission was asked for in the House, and the next Board day the man was discharged.

809. Mr. Driver.] Without any fresh complaint being made against him? Yes; I had made no further complaint.

810. And without any fresh inquiry? I think a number of gentlemen read over the evidence; there was a shorthand-writer taking the evidence and I think it was read over again.

811. President.] It was the same evidence as was given on the first inquiry? Yes.

812. And on which the man had been retained? Yes. It is always a great trouble to get things done without bringing one's self forward in a disagreeable manner.

813. You felt your power to a certain extent paralysed by the fear that whatever you recommended would not be carried out? Yes, it has been so; but I would not mind if somebody else would carry it out—if somebody else would look after the work—if the patients did not suffer for it.

814. We were told by the housekeeper just now, during our inspection of this building, that there was no water for the nurses to bathe in in the Nightingale wing this morning, and that when she spoke to the bathman about it, and asked him to pump the water, he said that he had no time? Oh, that often occurs.

815. And have the nurses to go to their work in the morning without washing? They have sometimes not even a drop of water to wash in.

816. They have not even water for simply washing themselves in the morning? No, they had not a drop this morning.

817. And I need not ask whether this deprivation is not detrimental to their health and comfort? Yes, it is.

818. How is the establishment generally supplied with water? It is not well supplied at all. We often have to complain, not only of the scarcity of the water but that there is really none at all. I thought the committee had arranged that some tanks should be got. I was quite in hopes we should be relieved in that way; if we only had one tank in some central position so that the nurses could go to it, we should be better off.

819. Sometimes you are absolutely without water in the wards? Yes, even to wash out the most necessary things; there is no water at all sometimes—that is to say, the supply is cut off.

820. And there are no tanks to keep up a supply? No. You saw those baths in the lavatories—we fill those before the water is turned off, and that lasts us a little while.

821. Are there cisterns over the baths? Yes, the water is pumped up into them.

822. Does the water never rise to them? No.

823. Then the first floor is dependent for its supply of water entirely on the pumping? Yes.

824. There are no cisterns capable of keeping a supply? No, no great supply.

825. Not twelve hours' supply? No; in the south wing there are no male patients, and they have to depend there for water on the same man as we do, and very often they cannot get any water pumped.

826. Is it not one of the conditions of success in a hospital to have a good supply of water? It is a great hindrance not having it. It is most miserable. The first thing in the morning you will see people coming to this tap here by the kitchen for water for the patients to wash with, and for bathing the children, children, and for washing up the things used in the night. All the water has to be carried up those stairs—many buckets have to be carried up for the purpose of washing the floors and so on. Of course, there is all the washing to be done, and there are a great many things for which hot or cold water is required. If they make a good fire at the stove there it will send the water up to the upper floor, but when the fire is not large it will not do so.

Miss
L. Osburn.
8 May, 1873.

827. Is there no contrivance for taking the water up into this old building? No, but the male patients are more able to get water for themselves than the women are.

828. But in most hospitals the water is supplied everywhere always? Yes.

829. It is so in the English hospitals? Yes, it is, except in some very old places.

830. Are the cooking arrangements satisfactory? No, not at all. There is some excuse for them, but of course we have only to do with the results. There is the excuse of the place being so bad, but the results are most miserable. There are most bitter complaints—more from the nurses than the patients, because the nurses have a dislike to taking things to the patients when they are very ill which are badly cooked. On this point the nurses will give you more information than I am able to give.

831. Have you observed yourself that the cooking is bad? Yes, I have.

832. And you can say yourself that it is so? Yes; I go to the patients' bedsides, and see things left uneaten, and I can see the reason why they are left.

833. Are they badly cooked? Miserably cooked. When a fever patient is getting better the first thing sometimes ordered for him is a chop. That chop is a thing that he looks forward to, and then when he gets it, a miserable thing half done, or a wretched dried up stick of a chop is sent up, such as no one can sit down to at all.

834. Does this interfere with the health of the patients? Yes, it does.

835. And sometimes the doctors come and find their patients not so much improved as they ought to be; and this is one of the reasons why they are not? Yes, the doctor comes and finds a patient not improved, and then he scolds the nurses, and comes to me and says this must be altered; but I cannot alter it. I should not like to interfere with the cooking in any way. I would not like to go into the kitchen to complain.

836. You are afraid you might be subjected to some rudeness there? Yes.

837. You think, as a department of the hospital connected with the nursing of the patients, the cooking establishment should be under your control? Yes, I think so. I have heard the manager say, when the doctors have gone to him to complain, for instance, and say, "This chop should be grilled," I have heard the manager say, "I can just give the order, but I don't know whether it is grilled or not; I can't see about the cooking of it." That is just one of the things that I took pains to learn, to see when a thing was properly sent up to a patient. The manager does not know. I am sure if he is asked he will say that he knows nothing about cooking.

838. Mr. Wearne.] Would you have male or female cooks? As we are situated here I would have male cooks, but I think that female cooks would cook better.

839. President.] Was the cooking included in your training? Yes.

840. Mr. Cowper.] You say that the situation of the kitchen is such that you must have male cooks here? Yes.

841. But you think that if you had a proper kitchen, female cooks would be better? Yes, I think so. There are many small things that patients require, and I think female cooks would be nicer about them.

842. Mr. Metcalfe.] But you are quite capable of getting nice things cooked in that kitchen;—the cooking apparatus is a good one? Yes, they have a nice stove, but still the place is not convenient—not so convenient as it might be; and when we make a complaint they say, "With this kitchen what can you expect?"

843. Mr. Gould.] Do you find that the medical men complain of the cooking for the patients? Yes, they do.

844. And also of the non-supply of the medicines? Yes, very much indeed.

845. President.] Would you explain how it is that some of the wards seem to be entirely devoted to one doctor—how it is that while some wards are divided between two medical men, other medical men have a ward to themselves? That happens in the case of the physicians. There are three wards on each side—the male and female side—and there are four physicians, so that in the division of the wards a physician may have a whole ward on the male side and half a ward on the female side, or a ward on the female side and half a ward on the male side. Thus Dr. Alleyne and Dr. Renwick have each a ward to themselves on the male side, while Dr. Quaife and Dr. M'Laurin have only a ward between them. But, then, these two (Dr. Quaife and Dr. M'Laurin) have each a ward to themselves on the female side, while Dr. Renwick and Dr. Alleyne have only a ward between them on the female side.

846. Does it not happen that these doctors keep patients in until they can admit others to fill their beds? That does not happen in the medical wards—not in the medical wards to any extent; it happens in the surgical wards, where the patients cannot be distributed in the same way.

847. Do you not find that the abuse of keeping patients in improperly exists in the medical wards? No; it exists in the others. It may perhaps happen that a doctor will keep a patient in a long time, but he has not the same object in doing it that a surgeon has. He has his twenty beds and can have no more.

848. Mr. Driver.] What object would a surgeon have? The surgical wards are attended by the four surgeons, and have a certain number of beds in them. There are four surgical wards on the male side of the house. There is one lock ward, and all the surgeons like lock cases. There is another accident ward, and all the four surgeons like to have accident cases. There is another operation ward, and all the surgeons like to have operations. And there is a pure surgical ward, and all the surgeons like to have those cases, and none of them like to give up a ward to one surgeon. Therefore each ward is divided amongst the four surgeons. It used to be arranged that if there were twenty beds in a ward, each surgeon had five beds, and if he had not an empty bed during his week he would admit to any bed that happened to be empty in the ward, but that patient would then not belong to him, just as it is on the medical side.

849. President.] Then it amounts to this: that a surgeon would like to admit patients in order to operate upon them? Yes; we had this rule, and it answered very well; but then the doctors said, "Oh, I must have this bed; I want particularly to treat this case," and so on. Now perhaps one surgeon may have ten or twelve beds in one ward to himself, and the others only a few between them; and when he has these beds, his object is not to lose them, so he will not discharge a patient, except during his own week, to prevent the other surgeons getting them.

Miss
L. Osburn.
8 May, 1873.

850. I think you recommended in a former part of your evidence that the resident medical officers should have the power to discharge when, in his opinion, a patient was cured? Yes.

851. Mr. Ellis.] And the power of admission as well? Well, at Home it is not the house surgeon who does it; it is a resident medical officer who is empowered to do it. It is not the honoraries who do it. Since I gave evidence before, I was speaking to a woman in a surgical ward, who said she was well able to afford a medical man outside, but that she was pressed, and promised all sorts of things if she would come in.

852. President.] Did she pay? I suppose she paid £2. I will find that out if you like. Still that would be an abuse, because if the honorary wants people to come in he can admit them, though not proper objects of the charity.

853. We observed in going through the wards that the patients' diseases are not marked on the cards;—is that usual in hospitals? No. The disease used to be marked on the card here when we first came, but Dr. Schuette, I think it was, recommended that it should be left off. They objected to the nurses knowing from what disease a patient was suffering.

854. That was the reason it was left off? Yes.

855. There was some prejudice among the doctors against the nursing staff when they first came here? Yes.

856. Do you find that prejudice dying away now? Yes, very much. I do not think that there is one doctor who does not think we have improved the nursing, and who does not give us all support.

857. And you think that this was done from pure prejudice? Yes.

858. That they did not want the nurses to know what was the matter with a man? Yes.

859. Do you think that was wise? No; I think it assists the nurses to know what is the matter with the patients. It does not matter that the disease is left off the card now, because the doctors will tell the nurses, and ask them to watch the symptoms, and give them books, and tell them to watch temperatures, and so on. I am sorry to say anything against the doctors, but you will understand that it is the system I speak against, not the doctors themselves.

860. Do you approve of the position of the dead-house? No, I do not. Mr. Deas Thomson said when this place was first built—this Nightingale wing,—“There is the dead-house there, but it will be moved before long; we have it under consideration to build one at the end of the south wing,” and I then hoped they would make such preparations as were necessary to get rid of it from its present site.

861. Are they going to build a new one? Yes.

862. Where is it to be placed? Most of the committee wish it to be placed where it was originally intended, but some have thought that the present position would be better.

863. What is your objection to the present site? I think that on account of the prevailing winds it would be better to have it where the odour would not be blown over towards the hospital. In its present position too, patients can see everything carried there, the coffins and so on, and of course it is distressing for the patients to see these things going on before their eyes. If the place were built on the other side there is a road at the back, so that nothing carried there could be seen from the building.

864. All these matters tend to affect the health of the patients? Yes, very much indeed. There are no windows looking upon that site in the corner. There are only two lavatories at that end of the south wing.

865. Will you explain to us the organization of the nursing staff and its duties? Do you mean of my own staff?

866. Yes; beginning with yourself. I will ask you first what salary do you receive? £250 a year; it was raised last year from £200.

867. Will you explain what your position should be if the design under which you originally came out were carried into effect? That I should have complete control over the nurses; over all in the nursing department—the sisters, or those in the place of them—and the nurses and the servants; that also everything connected with the wards should, under the governing body—the Board or the house committee—be in my control; that I should have the entire department to see to and report upon, and be responsible for, such as the cleaning of the wards, and the ventilation and the fires, and everything of that kind; and that if anything was wrong, or required seeing to, I should, under the direction of the house committee, see to it. And also I think it is most important for the patients that I should have control over the cooking.

868. Mr. Gould.] Did you understand before leaving England that you were to have these powers? The thing was very vague. We only had to gather it as well as we could from the letters of the Colonial Secretary, but I quite gathered from those letters that I should have this position, and so did Miss Nightingale.

869. President.] You would advise that all the internal management of the hospital, apart from its financial management, and the repairing of the building, should be vested in you? Yes. Also the stores. When the patients complain to me that the bread is bad, or that the potatoes are bad, it is ages before I can get the matter attended to. The manager only says that the tender is badly carried out, and that the contract cannot be altered, and so on.

870. But have you had to complain? Yes. The potatoes lately have been shocking. There have also been many complaints about the milk and eggs.

871. Did you complain to the manager? Yes, and afterwards to the committee, who ordered that one of the tenderers should be written to.

872. Will you proceed with your explanation as to your position? I think these are the principal duties which should be vested in me. Of course, everything connected with the wards, and therefore everything that men have to do with the patients, such as bathing or shaving, should be under my control. The manager cannot tell what is needed, and yet we have to run to him to order some one to do something, and it takes an immense time.

873. Will you explain to the Commission the organization of the staff under you? I may explain that, as I understand it, I am the lady superintendent of the nursing staff, and I have the nurses only under my charge. They are supposed to be altogether under my control, but as the discharging of them is in the hands of the committee great trouble has sometimes been given to me. It really is not the case that they are under my control, for if I ever want to discharge a nurse, such pressure is brought to bear upon me that I cannot help keeping people whom I think incompetent. Just now it happens that I have no people of that kind, but I have had them, and have been obliged to keep them.

874. Will you explain the theory of the distinction between the nurses and the sisters? The sisters have charge of the wards, each a certain number,—sometimes two, sometimes three,—but usually about forty patients. There are four sisters—head nurses as they are now called. They see to the linen, and carry out my directions as to the wards, and also attend to the treatment which the doctors order for the patients. They always go round with the honoraries;—they may not always go round with the resident medical officer, but they do so whenever they can. They see that the nurses carry out the treatment, whatever it may be—that the medicines are given regularly. They have charge of the diets—have had up to the present time. They make out the diet lists, and carve the joints, and distribute each person's diet.

875. Do they require to be persons of superior intelligence and education? Yes, they must be superior persons in order to maintain control over the nurses and the patients. When a dispute arises between patients themselves, it requires a person of judgment to decide how the dispute is to be settled. So also when a patient behaves improperly to the nurses, or is rude, she must be prepared to come up and decide; or when the nurses quarrel among themselves, she must decide their disputes, so that she must be superior to anyone else in the ward. That was why I felt the taking away of their title to be a detriment.

876. There has been a change in the title? According to the rules of the institution we are to train sisters and nurses, but at a meeting of the subscribers it was proposed that this title should be altered; and without giving any reason at all, either good or bad, it was altered.

877. Do you approve of that? No, for the reason I gave you. They now call them nurses, just the same as any other nurse. The men about the place call out to them "Nurse Barton," &c. I know that one of the members of the committee called out to one of them in the market place, "Nurse Barton, what are you doing here?"

878. Mr. Driver.] Is he still a member of the committee? Yes; not of the house committee, but of the Board.

879. President.] Then you think it is necessary to have a superior person in the position? Yes.

880. I believe the term "head nurse" is now given to them? Yes, and that quite describes their duties, but they require some distinctive title. The title "sister" has nothing to do with a religious order. If there were any other name to give them other than "sister," it would be quite as good, but people call them simply nurses here, although they may be head nurses. In the contract, though the sisters who came out may be called head nurses, it was not intended that they should be called so, because all the linen we brought out was marked "sister" by the hospital people, so that the intention was that they should be called "sisters," though their duties were those of head nurses.

881. Mr. Driver.] I suppose you did not contemplate establishing a nunnery here? Not at all.

882. President.] It is not on religious grounds, or from any sentimental feeling, that they were called "sisters"? Not at all.

883. And you think it is right that should be their title? Yes.

884. And you know of none better in England? No; they are called sisters there, and in the best hospitals of Germany they are called "schwester"—sister—all of them.

885. Mr. Ellis.] What is the practice in the hospitals at Home with respect to putting the disease on the patient's card? I believe it is always done, unless the name of the disease is some very well known name among people generally, and then only the initials are put.

Members Present:—

WILLIAM CHARLES WINDEYER, ESQ., PRESIDENT.

MICHAEL METCALFE, Esq.

RICHARD DRIVER, Esq., M.P.

EYRE G. ELLIS, Esq.

SAMUEL GOOLD, Esq.

CHARLES COWPER, JUNR., Esq.

Mr. John Blackstone, Manager, Sydney Infirmary, further examined, during inspection of clothes-house, by the Commission:—

886. President.] Are the clothes of patients suffering from all kinds of diseases put in here? They are all put in here together.

887. No matter what the disease may be from which the owners of the clothes are suffering? Yes.

888. Are clothes with vermin upon them put in here? No, they are put in a separate place.

889. Mr. Cowper.] If a man came in here suffering from venereal disease, would his clothes be put in here just as they came off him, and without being washed? Yes, they would be put in here in a bundle.

890. Without being washed? Yes.

891. Mr. Ellis.] And it is the same with the clothes of all the patients, no matter what complaint they may be suffering from? Yes.

892. And are the clothes never washed? Yes, if a patient wants to wash his clothes, and is able to do it, he gets them out.

893. But if he is not able to wash them, what then? Then they are not washed. Sometimes a man gets better, and gets his things to wash before he goes out.

894. But suppose he does not wash them, they remain here in this way unwashed, in the same state as when he took them off, for perhaps twelve months? Yes, but that does not often happen.

895. Does it not happen that clothes may remain here twelve months without being taken out or washed? There are solitary instances of it, but not many.

896. Suppose a fever patient comes in, are his clothes taken off and put in here with the others, unwashed? Yes, but on different shelves. Each shelf belongs to a ward. All the women's clothes are put on the top. As the men's clothes are taken off in the bath-room, they are brought down here.

897. President.] Suppose a case of typhus fever came in? We never take in a case of typhus fever.

898. Well, suppose a case of typhoid fever —? That is not infectious.

899. Suppose then a case of erysipelas comes in, are the patient's clothes put in here? Yes, the clothes are put in here. I have asked the committee to build a fumigating room, to have the clothes fumigated.

900. Who is the man in charge of the room? The bathman. That is the man standing there now.

Miss
L. Osburn.
8 May, 1873.

Mr. J.
Blackstone.
9 May, 1873.

- Mr. J. Blackstone. 901. Mr. Driver.] From whom does this person receive his orders? From me.
 902. From no one else? He obeys Miss Osburn.
 903. Is he supposed to obey her? Yes.
 9 May, 1873. 904. In all things? Yes.
 905. President.] Are you aware of any occasion on which Miss Osburn gave a patient an order to get his clothes to air, as he was going out, and you refused to give them? No, I do not know of any such case.
 906. Has there been a case of that kind? I cannot say.
 907. Will you undertake to say that there has not? No.
 908. Mr. Cowper.] Have there been complaints of such things? Not that I know of.
 909. Not in any single instance? No. Miss Osburn complained to the committee that this man refused to obey her orders, and the committee said that he should obey her orders in reference to matters about the building.
 910. But if she gave orders about a bath or anything else, he would not be called upon to obey her? Yes, anything ordered by the doctors, of course. It is the doctors who order a bath.
 911. President.] Then they do it, you think, because the doctors order it, and not Miss Osburn? The men have to obey them.
 912. And not Miss Osburn? I never knew Miss Osburn order a bath and be refused. I don't know that she has ever given orders about it; but sometimes there is no water, so that if a man came in here now it would be very difficult to give him a bath.
 913. Mr. Driver.] How long have you been in this state in reference to the water? A long time, sir.
 914. Has the attention of the committee been called to it? Yes, and the attention of the City Council.
 915. President.] I suppose if tanks were erected it would meet this emergency? Yes.
 916. It has been proposed to do that? Yes.
 917. Mr. Driver.] For how long? For some considerable time, sir.
 918. You do not pay for the water consumed here, do you? No.
 919. President.] What are these four pegs put in here for? This is where they intend to build the mortuary.
 920. And they are put in to mark the site? Yes.
 921. Has anything been done in the way of taking the contract? No, it is not decided to build it yet.
 922. Then this spot is not decided upon as the site? No, there is a meeting on Monday to settle it.
 923. Is there any other site proposed? Yes, some members want to build it in the other place, where the old mortuary stands. Some of the doctors want to have it there.
 924. What doctors? Dr. Bedford and Dr. MacLaurin.
 925. Are you of opinion that that is the best site? This is the best site, but there is no water drainage here.
 926. Does not the same difficulty as to drainage obtain with regard to the other site? No, because according to the plan of the building they would carry the pipes so as to shoot the sewage into the Nightingale wing drain. This will be the best site, and I believe that this will be the place where they will build the mortuary.
 927. What is the practice with regard to pumping water for the south wing? The man pumps every day for a few hours.
 928. Is there no regular practice? He pumps until the cisterns are full.
 929. How does he know when they are full? He pumps until the tell-tale up there tells him they are full.

- Miss L. Osburn. 930. President.] You said yesterday that you did not approve of the alteration of the term "sister" to "head nurse";—have you observed, in fact, that in consequence of the change there is more difficulty in getting competent people to take the position, or anything of that sort? Yes, I think so. When people have applied to me here and asked about it, I have been compelled to tell them that the position is scarcely that of a lady. They are not recognized as officers. I may perhaps say that the committee gave me to understand that they would be a kind of petty officers, and have a position as such in the building and have the control of the nurses; but the nurses dislike being controlled by a nurse, for soon after the title was changed several rather rude women told them that they were only nurses like themselves. They would not obey them in carrying out the usual orders in the wards. That has not been done lately, but it is much more difficult to get things done in the wards. It has given the sisters a worse position in the building, for patients do not see the difference between one nurse and the other. Of course the only difference now is in the dress. Before, if a patient was angry or cross, and a sister went up, she had a little power over him, but she has now lost a good deal of that in losing the title sister—the distinctive title.
 931. Then, the effect of doing away with the title has been to lower the position of the sisters, and to render those who, from their moral qualities and education, are best fitted to take the office, undesirous of taking it? Yes.
 932. Have you at the present time enough sisters in the hospital—or rather "head nurses"? No, I have only four; I should like at least six or seven. If I had seven, I could have one on at night, which would be a great advantage. It would be a great advantage to have some one in authority to go through the whole building at night. Sometimes when we have not been quite sure that things would be properly attended to I have got one of the sisters to go on at night.
 933. I suppose the strain of constant work night and day would be too much? Yes. She did not go on in the day after being on all night. I gave her wards in the day-time into the charge of another sister.
 934. Was it not in contemplation by the Government, when you took this office, that you should not only superintend the nursing, but that there should be nurses trained here by you to become useful throughout the Country? Yes, Mr. Parkes told me so—he was in office when I first came—and Mr. Cowper reminded me of it afterwards, and said that it was a very important part of my duty. I do not know that the committee have recognized it, for when I applied to go to Mudgee—I may tell you that they wrote to me from the Mudgee hospital to ask to have a nurse from here.
 935. The Mudgee people did? Yes. There was some difficulty about granting a nurse, and the committee seemed unwilling that she should go. It was a very small majority of the Board that allowed it.
 Well,

Miss
L. Osburn.
9 May, 1873.

Well, the nurse selected to go knew no one in the country at all, and I could not explain very clearly what her duties would be, and she seemed unwilling to go alone. I wrote to Mudgee and the people there seemed to think it would be better for me to go up with the nurse, and start her in her work. I applied to the Board for leave to go, and they kept me for three or four weeks waiting for the permission: I applied and they refused me, and this nurse would not go to Mudgee alone, and the people kept thinking we were coming, and I kept writing every committee-day to say that I could not get a majority of the committee to let me go.

936. But you finally went? Yes, I did go.

937. At your own expense? Yes.

938. And established this nurse in the hospital there? Yes. She has done remarkably well there, and has met with general approval. They are enlarging the hospital now, and asking for another nurse.

939. And you thought that in doing this you were carrying out part of the object for which you came to the Colony? Yes; I quite understood it, and have always done so. I hold nurses in readiness, in case a country hospital should wish to apply for one.

940. Have you thought that the committee discouraged your efforts? Yes. I do not think that they liked it at all. I told them at the time that I had always understood it was a part of my distinct duties here, and they said they could not undertake to have anything to do with the country at all, or to allow nurses to go. Of course they did, in the case I have just mentioned, allow it, but they seemed to think it was not a proper thing for this hospital to do.

941. Do you see any reason why it should not be so? Not at all. I think it would be a very useful thing.

942. One of the functions of a large hospital is to train people to be nurses? Yes, it is so in London.

943. Have you seen this disposition to check your attempts to train nurses manifested in any other way? No, except that they have tried to affect the nurses themselves to persuade them not to go. Some members of the committee have done that. When I proposed it to the nurse and she said she would go, some members of the committee went to her and tried to persuade her not to go. She was nearly giving it up. She came to me once or twice, and said perhaps she had better not undertake the work, and she said she had been begged not to go.

944. Does this paucity of the number of sisters, or head nurses, in the hospital, prevent your training nurses? Yes, a sister has many more opportunities of training probationers well than the nurse has. Probably she has had more education and is therefore better able to do it.

945. I believe that you used to give the nurses instruction in the way of oral teaching? Yes, I did, and I have had to give that up also. There was interference and the nurses were given to understand that they attended rather to please me than anything else.

946. To please you in what way? By attending.

947. These lectures? Yes. I gave them twice a week. I think it was for about half an hour in the afternoon, and they generally had some disease brought under their notice during the time, and I referred them to cases in the hospital, so that they could study them with more intelligence. I believe the doctors themselves thought it would be better that the nurses should have a little instruction as it gave them more method in nursing, but I found that it was objected to. The house doctors were great friends of the managers, and he used to get them to go into the wards and send for the nurses when I was instructing them, and the nurses were told it was all nonsense their having instructions from me, so that I had a difficulty in getting a class together. I therefore told the committee that until it was a recognized thing that I had to give instructions and that orders were given that the nurses should attend, I would not do it again. You see I used to divide them into halves. Half went one afternoon and half another, so that there was always a sufficient number in the wards.

948. And was this system similar to that by which you were yourself instructed—the system pursued in the English hospitals? Yes.

949. Then, in point of fact, from the action of the committee, this design on the part of the Government in establishing a nursing staff has been so far defeated? Yes, it has. I think if the country hospitals knew that we could supply them with nurses they would take advantage of it. But we cannot of course let them know, as the committee might not like it.

950. Have any other country hospitals besides Mudgee had nurses from you? Yes, Maitland and Newcastle.

951. Mr. Couper.] Do you not think that it would have a beneficial effect on the nurses themselves, this feeling that it was promotion to be placed in charge of a country hospital? Yes, I think it would.

952. It would give you a chance of getting a higher class of people as nurses? Yes.

953. And it would give you a greater amount of efficiency? Yes, I think the going to take charge of a country hospital would be looked upon as promotion by the nurses.

954. Mr. Metcalfe.] Do you think that it is objectionable having young ladies under 20 in the hospital to be brought up as probationers? I think we have only had two.

955. President.] We were told that some of the nurses here were as young as 18? That is not the case.

956. What is the age of the youngest? I think she is nearly 20.

957. Mr. Metcalfe.] There are some who have gone away as young as that? No, but we had one—nurse Leech—I did not know her age.

958. President.] What age is the youngest you have? Between 19 and 20. She is in the children's ward. All the nurses were on duty the other day when you went round—all except five night nurses.

959. It has been suggested that there should be none under 25 or 30;—do you adhere to that rule? No, and they do not do it at Home. It is recommended, but it is not done, because some people are much older than others though the age may be the same. I was only 20 when I became a nurse, and I think that Miss Nightingale was only 21.

960. Are they easier to train when they are young? Yes, much easier to train when they are young. The sisters always prefer young ones to train. They are much more difficult to train at 30 than at 20.

961. Mr. Metcalfe.] Are these young ones under 20 in the female wards? Yes, I seldom have them so young, but I always keep them there when I have them.

Miss
L. Osburn.
9 May, 1873.

962. President.] What time are you in the wards? Four times a day. I go round into every ward; and any ward where there is a bad case, or where business takes me, where there is linen wanted or painting going on, I go to many times.

963. But as a matter of routine you go four times a day? Yes.

964. At what hours? Before 6 in the morning; then between 10 and 11; then somewhere in the afternoon between 3 and 5. I do not always tell them when I am going round in the afternoon, but during the time patients' friends are with them I always go round, and again before I go to bed at night.

965. What are the hours that the sisters are on duty? They go on at 6 in the morning and leave at 6 in the evening. Of course they have time for breakfast and dinner in that time, and they have tea at 6.

966. What are the hours of the nurses? The nurses go on at 6 in the morning and half of them leave at dinner-time—half-past 1—and do not go on again until after tea, which is at 5 o'clock in the evening. These remain on until the night nurses go on, between half-past 8 and 9; the other half of day nurses return to the wards after dinner and leave when their tea-bell rings at 5.15, and have no further duties in the wards until the next morning.

967. Mr. Cowper.] There is no head nurse on at night? No.

968. Then, the same number of people who are looked after by one head nurse, and three nurses in the day-time, have only one nurse to look after them at night? Yes.

969. And that one may not be well up in the business? No. It would be much better if we could have a sister to go on at night.

970. Mr. Metcalfe.] But there is a nurse in each ward at night? No, in each set of wards.

971. Have you had any complaints from the patients that they do not get proper attention at night? No, I do not think so. A patient complained this morning that the nurse had left the door open, and that he was cold. I said I would inquire into it when she got up, but of course she is not up yet.

972. President.] There are no complaints of the nurse not bringing them water, or that the nurse is out of the way when she is wanted, and cannot be got? No. I go round and speak to the patients, and if there is any complaint I am sure they would make it to me. They know that I am over the nurses, and I have not had them complain. There is an abundance of nurses on at night. In the provincial hospitals in England the nurse sleeps in a room near the wards, and when she is wanted a convalescent patient calls her. No nurse sits up with them; so that to have four or five nurses on at night is quite enough here. There are only one or two of the patients who want them at night.

973. Would it not be better to have bells that a patient might ring for the nurse when she was at a considerable distance? That would rather disturb the patients I think. The nurse is generally in the hall.

974. But the bell might be in the hall? Yes, it could be.

975. Mr. Metcalfe.] Are there bells in the English hospitals? No, I never saw one.

976. President.] Is there any reason why there should not be? No, except that they would disturb the patients.

977. Mr. Metcalfe.] I suppose that a very nervous patient would be always ringing the bell, whether he wanted the nurse or not? Yes, that might be. We have patients of that kind now.

978. President.] How many trained nurses are there in the hospital now? Seventeen.

979. And the remainder? They are probationers.

980. Have you any sisters in training at present? None.

981. In point of fact, you find a difficulty in getting them since the change of name? Yes, very much so. They think that the change of name has changed the position, and I think so too.

982. Have you any further suggestions to make;—if so, we shall be happy to hear them? I forgot, when you were making your inquiries about the doctors, to remark another great objection—one that I have brought before the committee, and that they have done their best to assist us in, without doing any good—I mean, that the doctors will perform operations on Sunday. Of course, it may happen now and then that an operation must necessarily be performed on a Sunday. An urgent case might be brought in, and the operation must be performed; but that is not what I complain of. The doctor will say, "Oh we shall have nothing for Sunday if we do that to-day—we will leave it for Sunday." This disturbs the patients very much. If a patient is carried out, of course it more or less disturbs the whole ward, and makes them uncomfortable. It is a rule at Home that an honorary never visits the hospital at all on Sunday, unless sent for. We get everything clean on a Saturday, and have the place in good order, so that there is something quiet and nice about the wards on Sunday. But this we cannot effect at all here. You will see the nurses on Sunday scrubbing on their knees all morning long.

983. Mr. Metcalfe.] We thought that it was discontinued? No, they go on still just the same.

984. Do the honorary medical men attend at the times that they should attend? No, they come in at all hours—at meal-times—at the most awkward times of the day that they can think of. When a sister is carving she will have to leave it to go round with the doctor.

985. President.] Then it makes their services less valuable than if they attended at regular hours? It does indeed. They are most irregular in their attendance, and there is no occasion for the Sunday attendance at all.

986. It has been suggested that the hospital would be better without these honorary medical men at all if there were a clever resident medical man? I do not know.

987. What do you think of that? I do not think it would take with the public at all. They come in hoping to have the highest skill that can be got. Excepting in hospitals for special cases, there are always visiting medical men at Home. I don't remember to have seen one hospital for general cases that was wholly under a resident medical man. There are hospitals for the treatment of special diseases, which are managed in that way.

988. Mr. Ellis.] Were there any rules in the hospitals you were acquainted with as to the hours of attendance of these honorary medical men? Yes, a very strict rule, and the busiest men in London observed it to a minute. I have seen Mr. Solly stand and wait for the clock of St. Thomas's to strike 9 before he came in.

989. President.] And has he a large practice? Yes, an enormous practice.

990. Mr. Ellis.] You think a similar rule here would be most convenient and conducive to the carrying on of the business of the institution? Yes.

991. Mr. Metcalfe.] There is a rule of that kind here? Yes, there is a rule, but it is not observed. Some of the doctors come in at 5 o'clock in the evening. 992.

992. Mr. Cowper.] Have you ever had any complaints from patients who were suffering from acute rheumatism as to the way the nurses spoke to them, and ordered them to do things which they were unable to do from the suffering that they were undergoing at the time? No, I never have. I do not recollect a case of the kind.

Miss
L. Osburn.
9 May, 1873.

993. President.] Do the patients generally understand that if they have any complaints, their course is to complain to a sister, or to you? Yes, I always tell them so. I say to them, "You understand, patients, if there is anything you have to say you will complain to me, and I will attend to it."

994. Mr. Cowper.] I suppose the first appeal is to the sister, and then to you? Yes, and I am always ready to hear them.

995. With reference to the washing of the larger building, have you ever complained of the water used in washing the back verandah running down by the south wing;—does not the water used in washing the back verandah run down into the yard there? You mean at the very end of the verandah; it drops down into a sink there.

996. President.] We are told that it runs from the bath and flows down into the yard? Oh.

997. Do you not think it is very objectionable that the water should run off there to the building in which the female patients are? Yes, it is very objectionable. I have always told them in washing the verandah to direct it as much as possible to the end, as there is a little slope there and it runs away, but it is not good at all. They are obliged to wash the verandahs once a week to keep them clean.

998. Mr. Goold.] I don't know whether we have any evidence as to the state the hospital was in when you first came—I refer more especially to the cleanliness of the place? I did not find it clean; indeed, it was very dirty, but there was great confusion caused as to who was to have the cleaning, and it was some time before I could make an arrangement. There were then, I think, six nurses here, and three servants.

999. And some wardsmen I think? Yes. The wardsmen were in all the wards but the three female wards.

1000. Did the vermin exist in the building then? Yes, they were very bad indeed. I was nearly eaten up myself the first night I slept here. I did not sleep a wink. I slept that night in Mrs. Ghost's place.

1001. Do you think it would be possible for a clergyman to visit this hospital for a long period without seeing anything of the kind? Yes, I think it would be quite possible, because in the day-time the bugs are not about.

1002. Mr. Cowper.] I think you mentioned before, that in the morning you could see them walking up the walls? Yes, regiments of them. I think the reason why I could not get the committee to believe how bad they were was because they were not to be seen in the day-time when people went round. I know that Mr. King has mentioned them; he came round as Inspector of Charities, and he saw the places where the bugs were, and he said he was sure there were bugs.

1003. Mr. Goold.] With regard to the change of name, how many nurses have you trained since you have been here? I cannot tell without my book.

1004. You state that since the change of name you have found a difficulty in getting persons to come? Yes; the first three years I was here I had those who came out from England—five of them—and we were training—had four in training. Then four of the English sisters left; one was married, and three left and I took on I think three more at that time to train as sisters. Of course, then began the discussion about the change of name, and they left me—all those—and those who remained found the position rather irksome.

1005. You think that it is the change in the name that has deterred people from coming? Yes; I think so.

1006. Do you not think that the circumstances of the Colony would deter them—that it is more difficult to get persons here than in England? It may be so. I like those who are trained here much better than those who were brought from England.

1007. Mr. Ellis.] It is principally for the sake of having some distinctive name that you would have the term "sister"? It is.

1008. All you wish is that they shall have some distinctive name? Yes; some distinctive name.

1009. Mr. Metcalfe.] So that they might have a rank the same as an officer in the army? Yes.

1010. You think it is a very important power in the management of the patients by the nurses that they should have some distinctive appellation? Yes.

1011. No matter what the appellation may be? Yes.

1012. Mr. Driver.] And I suppose that the sisters look upon it as some slight honor? They do decidedly. They felt that they were degraded when the name was taken away from them.

1013. Mr. Ellis.] I have observed in the report of, I think Guy's Hospital, that some ladies go in in the capacity of "lady sisters," and are so desirous of devoting themselves to the work that they pay their own expenses in the hospital? Yes; that is done sometimes.

1014. The item of washing, mentioned in the report for last year, seems a large one—£605;—can you say, with reference to the quantity of clothes given out, whether the washing cannot be done more cheaply by steam? We have no accommodation for washing on the place.

1015. But supposing you had? Yes; I think if even they had an establishment outside somewhere it could be more economically done. It is very well done now—it is not that I have to complain of. I think we send about 2,000 pieces a week.

1016. The expense of getting quilts and blankets washed must be considerable, apart from the ordinary washing? Yes, it is very troublesome, and unless it is well done it puts us to great inconvenience.

1017. It used to be done by hand? Yes, it is done by hand now outside—at Woollahra.

1018. But it used to be done here? Yes, but it was very bad, and we had no control over it.

1019. If you had machinery to do it could you not do it on the premises? Yes, it would be a good thing if we had space for it. I don't think they would be nice unless we had time and space to put them out in the open air.

1020. President.] You are against washing on the premises? I am.

1021. Mr. Cowper.] How is it done in England? It is all done out, except in the country.

1022. Mr. Metcalfe.] What does it cost? It is not much; it costs less than 1s. per dozen.

1023. President.] What do the head nurses or sisters get? They begin the first year at £20 a year; then for the second year they get £40; and then they should have an increase of £10 each year up to £70, as they understood things. But there was some difficulty about them, and I think that they kept them at

Miss
L. Osburn.

9 May, 1873.

£40 for about three years. It was thought that there would be such an opposition to getting anything for them in their capacity as sisters, I had better not bring it forward. But now I have got them raised to £60.

1024. What do the nurses receive? The first year £20, the second year £26, and after that the pay is raised according to the nurse's skill,—to £30 and upwards. There is one now at £36, and I am going to ask for her pay to be raised again.

1025. What nurse is that? Nurse Brannigan.

1026. Mr. Goold.] In time do these nurses become sisters? No; we get sisters in to train.

1027. Then the nurses do not rise to be sisters? No; that would not answer, for many reasons; a person may be an excellent nurse, and yet not suited for a sister. Besides, if I had six nurses here who had been long enough in the place to be made sisters, I should cause jealousy and ill feeling if I selected one of them. I should be sorry to do it, and it would not be right, because those whom I did not select might be excellent nurses. So that we take in people to be trained as sisters.

1028. President.] A person may make an excellent nurse who has not had sufficient education or has not moral power to be a sister? Yes, very often.

1029. You think it is better to get a different class? Yes, we take them in to train.

1030. Who are trained so as to be more fitted for authority than those who make admirable nurses? Yes. They live quite separately. The sisters have a separate room, separate bedrooms, on a separate floor to the nurses; and of course they are as quiet, steady people as we can get. The nurses are of course more of a merry set, and like music and dancing, and that kind of thing; and that I could not allow with the sisters.

1031. Mr. Goold.] At present you have no sisters in training? None.

1032. Then country hospitals could not be supplied if they wanted one? I could supply them with a nurse.

1033. What position would she take? That of nurse in charge of the place. In this Mudgee hospital there is no one else living on the premises besides the nurse I sent up. They seem to be well satisfied with her. It was Nurse Ross; she is a very good nurse.

1034. There was one came from here, who was, I understood, going to Dubbo? Nurse Stanbury was that.

1035. I forget the name? Was she in Mudgee?

1036. Yes; she was doing duty there for Nurse Ross? Yes, Nurse Stanbury. Nurse Ross told me she was in charge there while she was on leave of absence. She was not so good a nurse as Nurse Ross.

Mr. Henry Harris, bathman, Sydney Infirmary, called in and examined:—

Mr.
H. Harris.

9 May, 1873.

1037. President.] What position do you occupy? I am the bathman.

1038. How long have you been here? Six years the 30th of this May.

1039. What wages do you get? £4 10s. a month, and an extra allowance of 17s. 4d. a month for carrying rations and coals to the women's side—the south wing.

1040. Making altogether how much? £5 7s. 4d. a month. The extra money is for doing extra work.

1041. Do you reside on the premises? No.

1042. What is your regular work? The work that I engaged for is to have charge of the bath-room. The messenger and the yardsman are put under my directions like to receive instructions from the manager, and see that they do their work, and to supervise the place, and see that it is kept clean, and to have charge of the clothes-house.

1043. You take all your orders from the manager? Yes, I am supposed to do so, except Miss Osburn wishes me to do anything.

1044. Was she here when you first came? No.

1045. How long were you here before she came? I was here two years and a half or better, as far as my memory serves me, before she came.

1046. What is your routine of duty during the day? I am obliged to be present in the bath-room to receive all the patients that come into the house, to bath them, wash them, and clean them, and take them into the wards; to go to the wards for linen for them, and to take down the dead, in conjunction with the messenger, who assists in carrying them down. I attend to the clothes store, and do anything I am ordered to do.

1047. What are your hours? From half-past 6 until 6.

1048. What do you do when you first come in? I go to the clothes store, and put up the clothes that have come in; then I go round and take an account of the deaths, and take them to the manager. The first thing I do is to go round the wards and get the deaths, and I write out the account and give it to the manager; and after I do that, I pack up the clothes of the patients who come in.

1049. How many came in this morning? Only one this morning. Sometimes there are four or five, or six or seven.

1050. How long did these duties occupy you this morning? The bathing of the patients?

1051. The duties you have told us of? Well, I did what I say; then at half-past 7 I went to breakfast, and after that I carried the rations to the patients.

1052. How long did that take you? About ten minutes. Then I go to the other work, cleaning up the verandahs, cleaning up the Board-room here, and working round the place, see that the fires at the coppers are kept going, and to carry down the dead.

1053. Do not the cooks look after their own fires? It is not the cooks' fires, it is the fires at the hot water coppers that I mean—those that carry hot water all round the building.

1054. How many patients were received yesterday? I think there were three altogether through the bath.

1055. Is it your duty to see that there is water for the bath? Yes; I always fill the bath before the water is cut off, so that if there is an urgent case there may be a bath available.

1056. Was yesterday an exceedingly busy day? I had a good deal of work to do yesterday. I had a tent to put up yesterday for an erysipelas case.

1057. How long did that take? It took a long time.

1058. How long did it take? I dare say it took two men an hour to put up the tent.

1059. Was there anything else? There was the general work of the place.

1060. Nothing out of the way? No, I think the tent was put up yesterday.

1061. At what time? I think it was after dinner; about half-past 2, or a quarter to 3, the case came in.
1062. What time did you put up the tent by? About 4 o'clock.
1063. Do you know that yesterday there was no water for the nurses in the Nightingale wing to wash in? It is not my duty to attend to that; it is the duty of the yardsman. It is not my duty.
1064. No complaint was made to you? No.
1065. Was there a complaint made to anyone? The yardsman says that some of the nurses spoke to him about water in the evening.
1066. What did he say? That they were asking for water.
1067. What did you understand by that? I did not take it to myself.
1068. When did he say that? I think it was last evening.
1069. Do you mean last evening, or the evening before that? I think it was last evening, about 3 o'clock.
1070. Are you aware of the fact that they had no water for their duties in the hospital? He said he wondered there was not more call for water, as he was employed a good deal on that day. That is what I understood him to say.
1071. How do you mean that he was so much employed? He had to go round and clean about the place, and he could not pay attention to the pumping,—and there were beds to fill, and he could not pay attention to the pumping.
1072. But I understood you to say that the nurses complained of a want of water? He said that they would ask more for water than they did usually because he was more employed. They generally appeal to the yardsman for water. It is his duty to pump. It has no reference to my duty. I only speak of what they are in the habit of doing. They generally call to him if there is no water, and he goes and pumps it.
1073. Did you know that the nurses were complaining yesterday of the want of water? I heard the yardsman say that he wondered that they did not complain of the want of water, and I understood from that that he had not had the same time to pump yesterday as on other days.
1074. Did I not understand you to say that the yardsman is under you? Well, I —
1075. Did you say so or not? I always understood that he was; but when I came here the situation was not carried out the same as I engaged for, so I do not consider him under me.
1076. Whose duty is it to see that the water is pumped up? It is the yardsman's duty.
1077. But if he does not do it? They complain to the manager and then he is compelled to do it.
1078. When a patient comes in who is ordered a tent, do you see the card? Yes.
1079. And you know that a tent is required? Yes; it is written on the card.
1080. Immediately on the patient being admitted you know that the tent is required? Yes.
1081. And it is your duty to put up tents? Yes.
1082. How do you account for an erysipelas patient being kept for twenty-four hours after admission without a tent? I am not aware of it.
1083. Do you not know that there was a woman came in and sat on the verandah from half-past 10 o'clock in the morning until dark, for want of a tent? I am not aware of it.
1084. Do I understand you to say that such a thing did not occur? I do.
1085. Were you not spoken to about getting up a tent? No.
1086. Do you know of a patient called Bridget M'Aully coming in? I was at home ill that day.
1087. Whose duty was it to put up the tent in your absence? The yardsman and the messenger do it.
1088. Do they always do it? The yardsman always helps me. I cannot do it by myself.
1089. Did you put the tent up for this woman on the next day? No, it was put up when I came the next day.
1090. Do you ever receive directions to do things from the sisters or the nurses? No, except they want a bedstead and they ask me to bring it, and I do so if I can find a spare one.
1091. Mr. Cowper.] Are you ever without spare ones? Sometimes the bedsteads run short.
1092. President.] Do you invariably take their orders, without reference to the manager? Yes, always; if the Sisters ask me to procure a bedstead, I do so.
1093. And without reference to the manager? Yes, unless when I cannot get a bedstead without going to the manager.
1094. What do you mean? You cannot always get a spare bedstead; there may be some extra cases, and the supply may run short.
1095. Do you mean it is because there are no bedsteads in the store, or that they cannot be procured without going out of the establishment? I can't get them in the store—there are some bedsteads, and if they are all in use I have to ask the manager how I am to get a bedstead for such a ward.
1096. Have you to refer to the manager for a bedstead if it has to be got from the store? Yes.
1097. Do I understand you to say that you do no pumping at all yourself? No, it is not my duty.
1098. Who has charge of the clothes in the store in which the patients' things are put? I have.
1099. What is the course pursued with regard to a patients' clothes, when he is stripped for the bath? He takes all his clothes off and his clothes are made up into a bundle and tied up, and the name put on them, and in the evening the clothes are taken to the stores and entered in a book, whatever is in the bundle, and then they are taken to the clothes-house, and put on the shelf of the ward the patient is admitted for, and there they remain until he goes out. If he is able to air them, the man can get them to air them. He comes to me, brings his ticket, and gets his clothes, airs them, and returns them to me, and I give him back his ticket, and he goes away and gives the ticket to the sister.
1100. They are never washed from the time the patient goes into the hospital until he comes out? Not unless the patient washes them himself.
1101. Mr. Driver.] Does that frequently happen? Yes, the patients wash their clothes very often.
1102. President.] When were the last things washed? I can't say.
1103. Is it not a fact that in the majority of cases the clothes remain in the building, and never come out? In some cases they do, but not in all.
1104. But is it not a general case that they remain in without being washed? No, it is not.
1105. If the manager has said it is a general case he has made a misstatement? —
1106. Is it so? I am not aware of it.
1107. Mr. Cowper.] Is it not a fact that the clothes are not generally washed? The institution does not wash them, but the men wash them sometimes. I think there are as many cases of the clothes being washed as of their not being washed. The patients wash their own clothes when they are able.

Mr.
H. Harris.
9 May, 1873.

- Mr. H. Harris. 9 May, 1873.
1108. President.] Can you mention any patients in the institution now who have washed their clothes since they came in? I cannot call to mind any.
1109. And you don't know when any of the clothes were last washed? No, I cannot remember.
1110. Can they go out of the place without your knowing it? No, not unless some one else has the key.
1111. If the manager says that the practice is that the clothes go in there and remain there until the patient to whom they belong goes out, has he stated what is correct? In some cases he is stating what is correct.
1112. Do you wish us to understand that in the majority of cases they are washed? I cannot say that they are in the majority of cases, there is such a number of bundles there; but in many cases they are washed.
1113. Can you tell us the names of patients who have washed them? Yes, some men who have gone out.
1114. Can you tell us any patient who is in the institution now who has washed his clothes? There are plenty there.
1115. Can you name one? No, I cannot tax my memory.
1116. Mr. Goold.] Where do they wash them? At the taps at the back of the cook-house. They air their clothes too. Men come and get their clothes, and wash them there.
1117. President.] Do they come to you and get their clothes? I refer them to the manager, and if they get his permission then I give them their clothes.
1118. Mr. Goold.] They cannot get their clothes without your knowing it? No.
1119. President. Do you know of any cases of persons wishing to get their clothes to air, and not getting them, and being obliged to leave the Infirmary without airing them? No.
1120. Will you undertake to say that that has not happened? No, not to my knowledge. The patient generally gets them the day before he goes out.
1121. We have been told that a man who was going out wanted to get his clothes to air before leaving, that he got an order for them from Miss Osburn, and that the order was taken to the manager, who tore it up;—is that true? Well, I cannot say.
1122. Is that true? Not to my knowledge. I have always done what Miss Osburn wanted me to do, but I am not able to do what I would wish.
1123. In what way? I am under the manager's directions. I look to Mr. Blackstone as my superior officer, and I have always done so. I have always done whatever Miss Osburn asked me to do, as far as was in my power, but I always look to Mr. Blackstone and take my instructions from him.
1124. What do you mean by not being able to do as you would wish;—tell us frankly? Well, I cannot serve two masters, and I must obey Mr. Blackstone.
1125. You said just now that you could not always do what you would wish in the establishment;—what do you wish us to understand by that? That I am not my own master.
1126. Do you mean that you are afraid to take orders from Miss Osburn without reference to the manager? No, but I am under Mr. Blackstone's orders. I would do all I can for Miss Osburn in the establishment and would obey her, but I am bound to obey Mr. Blackstone. If Miss Osburn wanted me to do anything for her, and Mr. Blackstone wanted me at the same time to go anywhere else, I should have to go for Mr. Blackstone.
1127. Have you ever been placed in that position? No; I have always obeyed Miss Osburn when I could, and I have always done it most willingly.
1128. Mr. Ellis.] Do you consider yourself bound to obey her? Certainly. I consider the work of an institution like this—it is a cross kind of work—that you have not the same kind of work to do one day as you might the next, and it is rather hard to have to do everything at once. A tent may be needed, or something else.
1129. Mr. Driver.] Do you require assistance? Yes, more assistance than there is on the premises.
1130. Have you ever experienced any difficulty in carrying out the orders of Miss Osburn? I do not know; I have never neglected to do what she told me.
1131. Have you ever experienced any difficulty in carrying out her instructions? No, I cannot say so.
1132. Why do you hesitate so long in replying to the question? To call to mind whether she ever told me to do anything that I could not do.
1133. You misunderstand the question. Did you ever experience any difficulty in carrying out any instruction you received from her? No, I do not think I have.
1134. President.] Were you here one Sunday morning when some ice was wanted for a patient? I have been several times for ice.
1135. Were you here on one occasion when ice was required for a patient with a fractured skull? I do not recollect the case, but I have been for ice several times.
1136. Were you sent for ice lately for such a case? Yes, and I have fetched ice from Compagnoni's.
1137. How long is that ago? I think that was the last occasion; it was about seven weeks ago. Five pounds of ice I fetched.
1138. Who sent you for that? The manager.
1139. Are you sure it was the manager who sent you? I remember the case of a man coming in with an injured head. It was on a Sunday morning he was taken in, and Dr. Halkett took him in, and I was ordered to go and shave his head. I was in the ward when the nurse spoke about the ice. She wanted the yardsman to go and get ice. I was in the ward shaving the man's head, so I could not go.
1140. Were you asked to go? Yes.
1141. Who asked you? It was nurse Stead asked me to go for the ice, and I was shaving the man's head, and the ice came before I had finished.
1142. What reply did you make when you were asked to go? I told her that I had to shave the man's head. She knew that for she heard the doctor say so.
1143. Mr. Cowper.] Were you shaving the man's head when she asked you to go? No, I was just going to do so.
1144. But you had not commenced? No; they were gone for the hot water.
1145. President.] What is the yardsman's name? Sadlier.
1146. Did you never decline to go for ice for a patient? No.
1147. Who do you take your orders, as to shaving the patients, from? It is not my duty. It is the messenger's duty, but in his absence I do it.

1148. Who were the men on the place on that morning when the ice was required? I and the yardsman. He was ordered by the manager to get the ice, and he brought it.
1149. How do you know that he was ordered by the manager to get the ice? I know Miss Osburn ordered the man to get the ice, and before I had done shaving the patient's head the ice was brought.
1150. Mr. Goold.] Of course the ice would be of no use until the shaving was done? No, the head must be shaved before the ice could be applied.
1151. President.] Then you did decline to go and get ice, on the ground that you were shaving a man's head? Nurse Stead told me to go.
1152. And did you refuse to go? Yes. I said I could not go because I was shaving the man's head.
1153. Did you understand her to mean that you should leave off shaving the man's head and go? No, she did not mean it in that way.
1154. Did she mean that you were to put your razor down and go for ice? No, because she asked me herself to come and shave the man's head; and then she asked me to go for ice.
1155. And did you not make an excuse and say you could not go because of shaving the man's head? Of course I could not do the two things.
1156. But you did not understand that you were to leave off shaving there and then, and go for ice? No.
1157. And you refused to go? No, I did not, but they wanted the one thing done as well as the other.
1158. Mr. Ellis.] With regard to the clothes in this clothes-house, without reference to the diseases from which the patients may be suffering when they come in, the clothes are thrown indiscriminately into the clothes-house? They are all made up in separate bundles, and put up on the shelves. They are put in there, no matter what disease the patient may suffer from.
1159. They are put in together, without reference to the disease from which the owners were suffering? Yes, without reference to the disease.
1160. And they are all there together in heaps? No, they are put up in separate bundles on the shelves.
1161. Did we not see the clothes lying there on the floor? No, they are in the racks.
1162. Did I not see them on the floor myself just now? Yes; but those do not belong to patients now in the Institution—they are the clothes of deceased patients.
1163. Well, no matter whether the patients are deceased or not, the clothes are all put together, without reference to the disease from which the patients are suffering? Yes.
1164. And they remain there without being washed or fumigated, until the patient goes out or dies? Yes, that's a fact.
1165. Mr. Couper.] And after a patient dies I suppose his clothes remain there for a considerable time? Yes; sometimes they are given to his friends, and sometimes they are distributed to patients needing clothes.
1166. Mr. Ellis.] Without being washed? Yes; they are given to patients going out.
1167. Do you mean to say that the clothes of deceased patients are given out by way of favour,—unwashed? Yes.
1168. Mr. Metcalfe.] But no infectious diseases come into the hospital? I don't know.
1169. Mr. Ellis.] There is typhoid fever? That is not infectious.*
1170. Well, there is erysipelas? We don't put those clothes there; we put them under the shed.
1171. President.] But you have no instructions about doing so? No.
1172. Mr. Ellis.] Suppose the case of a man coming in with a venereal disease, and too ill or lazy to wash his own clothes, would that man when he came out put on his clothes unwashed? He would.
1173. And people sometimes get the clothes of men who die from disease, and those clothes are not washed? Yes, persons in necessitous circumstances get them sometimes.
1174. Supposing the clothes of deceased patients are not distributed in that way, what becomes of them? They remain in the clothes-house.
1175. For years? Yes.
1176. And they remain there unwashed? Yes, until they are taken away. They do not remain there for ever, but for years some of them. I have only been two years in charge of the place.
1177. Are there clothes there now that were there when you first came? Yes, there are some that have been there ever since Bennett was messenger, about two years ago.
1178. Did you ever hear of anything being done to the clothes, beyond giving them away out of charity? No.
1179. Who gives them away? The manager.
1180. Mr. Couper.] And that is what they are kept for? Yes.
1181. Mr. Ellis.] And he gives tainted clothes away as an act of charity? They are put by themselves.
1182. They are not, for we saw them all together? The clothes of deceased patients.
1183. President.] Whose duty is it to fill the beds? The yardsman's.
1184. Mr. Driver.] You have not got a good supply of water here? No.
1185. How many patients do you allow to use the same bath before it is refilled? One.
1186. Only one? Yes.
1187. Mr. Couper.] If a patient is about to be discharged and has got no clothes, the usual course is to select clothes for him out of the clothes of deceased patients? Yes, he gets an order for them.
1188. And when you selected clothes for him you would have no idea of what disease the former owner of the clothes had had when he entered the hospital? No.
1189. Then you might give to a respectable man the clothes of a man who had suffered from typhoid fever or from venereal disease? I cannot tell what the patient died of.
1190. Suppose the clothes of female inmates were brought to you, you would put them together, without reference to what diseases they suffered from? I would not know what diseases they were suffering from.
1191. Then the clothes of a respectable female would be put alongside the clothes of a person suffering from typhoid fever, or the venereal disease? Yes.
1192. No directions would be given to you about them? No, no orders whatever.

Mr.
H. Harris.
9 May, 1873.

Mr.

* NOTE (on revision) :—I don't remember this question. Typhoid fever is infectious, I believe.

Mr. William George Sadlier, yardsman, Sydney Infirmary, called in and examined:—

- Mr. W. G. Sadlier.
9 May, 1873.
1193. President.] What are you in this institution? I am the yardsman.
1194. What wages do you get? £3 10s. a month.
1195. Do you live on the premises? No; I stop sometimes, and sometimes I go home.
1196. Do you get your meals here? Yes.
1197. You are found then in everything but residence? Yes.
1198. And you get £3 10s. a month? Yes.
1199. How long have you been here? Over two years this time. I was here before.
1200. How long were you away from the institution? May be twelve months.
1201. How long were you here on the first occasion? About fifteen months.
1202. How did you come to leave? I left on the reduction.
1203. Do you mean the reduction of wages or of the servants of the establishment? The reduction of the servants.
1204. Who engaged you? The manager.
1205. Where were you in the time when you were away from the establishment? I was working in a grocer's store on the Glebe.
1206. For how long? I was not engaged there; I was only working.
1207. Did you bring certificates of character here? Yes, one from a grocer and a corn-dealer.
1208. Where are they? There is one on the Glebe now.
1209. What are your duties on the establishment? I do the scavenger work—clean all round the sinks and attend to all the pumps on the premises, and pump water for the Nightingale wing and the south wing.
1210. Anything else? I fill the mattresses and have charge of the straw-house, and attend to anything that has to go to the Nightingale wing.
1211. From whom do you take your instructions? From both the manager and Miss Osburn.
1212. Do you take instructions from both of them as a matter of duty? I am supposed to do anything that I am told.
1213. By anybody? No; if the manager sends any person to tell me to do a thing, and he comes from the manager and says so, I will do it.
1214. Or from any one else? No.
1215. Then all orders to you must come from the manager? Yes. I know my regular work, and if there is anything extra to be done I will do it.
1216. Do you know that the Nightingale wing was short of water yesterday morning? Yes.
1217. When were you told of it? I knew it because I did not pump.
1218. When should you have pumped in order to supply them with water? I pump generally after breakfast. I have pumped sometimes three hours a day on one of those tanks and not filled it then.
1219. Did the nurses complain to you that they wanted water? Yes, one of them did.
1220. Which one? The lady's maid.
1221. You mean the housekeeper? Yes, Ann Parker.
1222. What answer did you make to her? I said I was cleaning up the yard, and I don't know that I said anything else.
1223. Did she not tell you that the nurses had no water to wash with yesterday morning? I did not have any conversation ———
1224. Answer my question? She said there was no water.
1225. Then when you do not pump they have no water? There is plenty down-stairs in the Nightingale.
1226. Then you think that they should carry it up-stairs to save you the trouble of pumping? No, I do not think at all.
1227. Is that what you mean? No; I had instructions to clean the yard.
1228. From whom? From Mr. Blackstone. If I am to do my regular work I do it.
1229. Who prevents your doing your regular work? If I receive orders from Mr. Blackstone.
1230. That prevents you doing your regular work? Yes.
1231. Do I understand that you were taken off your regular work to clean the yard yesterday, and that instead of pumping you were clearing the yard by the order of the manager? Yes.
1232. Is not the manager as likely to know what is your regular work as anybody about the place? Yes.
1233. Any one would know that water is required for the baths? Yes, it would take a man to do nothing else but pump to keep them supplied.
1234. Did you do anything else? Yes; I cleaned up the place, and went round the sinks and emptied the boxes, and that is what I do every morning.
1235. Then the manager should know just as well as you did that if you were prevented from pumping there would be no water? Yes; it puts me all out if I do not pump at regular times.
1236. Is it often that you are interfered with in that way? Yes, often.
1237. Do you ever represent that these people must go without water unless you pump water for them at a certain time? I have not represented it to him, but he knows when the water is off. I cannot pump at the south wing, but I must go there after dinner and fill those two tanks.
1238. When did you receive this order from Mr. Blackstone that you had to clean the place up? When I was going round cleaning about 8 o'clock in the morning.
1239. Mr. Driver.] Did you expect that any one was coming here yesterday? Yes, I expected you were coming.
1240. And the order to clean up was given you on that account? Yes.
1241. Mr. Metcalfe.] Did you tell the manager that the water had to be pumped up? I told him to get some one to pump.
1242. What did he say? That he would see about it.
1243. President.] What is your regular time for pumping for the Nightingale wing? After breakfast. Sometimes I will go there from 10 to 11.
1244. Do you often have complaints as to the want of water in the Nightingale wing? Not often. I used to have complaints when I was here before.
1245. Whose duty is it to fill the beds? It is my duty to fill for the whole establishment.
1246. Did you receive an order to fill a bed yesterday? Yes.
1247. From whom? The manager.

Mr.
W. G. Sadleir.
9 May, 1873.

1248. Did you receive an order from a nurse to fill a bed yesterday? Yes; I did fill some beds.
1249. From a nurse's order? Yes.
1250. Did you refuse to fill a bed? Yes; but before that I did fill a bed.
1251. Did you refuse to fill any bed? Oh, that was before that; that was for the tent.
1252. Who asked you to fill that bed? I was asked by a patient. He came down with the tick and asked me to fill the bed.
1253. And what answer did you make him? I said, "I can't just now."
1254. Who was the patient? I do not know.
1255. You don't know? I do not know one patient from another. I have nothing to do with the patients.
1256. Why could you not fill the bed? I was busy at the time.
1257. What were you doing? I was cleaning up. The manager called me 5 minutes afterwards to fill the tick, and there was plenty of men there who could have filled it.
1258. Were you never requested by a nurse to do it? No; Mrs. Whitlaw asked me, and I filled five.
1259. Did you refuse to fill a tick for a nurse? Oh, a nurse did come into the dining-room and asked me to fill a tick, and I said, "I can't do it now," and she left the tick and I filled it afterwards. She left them there.
1260. Why did not you do it when she asked you? Because I was dining then.
1261. Do you mean to say that you have never refused to obey an order brought to you by a nurse? I have done what was required to be done.
1262. Do you mean to say that you have never refused to obey an order brought to you by a nurse? —
1263. What answer do you make to the question? —
1264. Mr. Metcalfe.] Do you not understand the question? —
1265. President.] Come, give us an answer to the question? —
1266. Do you decline to answer the question? I do not know what you mean.
1267. Do you undertake to say that you have never refused to obey an order brought to you by a nurse? I cannot say.
1268. You may have done such a thing? I might.
1269. On what ground? On the ground of other work. When I am at the pump they come and say, I want you to do this or that sometimes.
1270. In whose service do you consider yourself to be in this establishment? The manager's.
1271. And you obey all orders that come from him? Yes.
1272. Mr. Gould.] I understood you to say that if an order came from Miss Osburn you would attend to it? Yes.
1273. President.] As a matter of favour to Miss Osburn? Yes.
1274. Are you her servant? I obey her.
1275. Are you her servant? No, I believe not.
1276. Then you do anything that she asks you to do only as a matter of favour? Yes.
1277. If you thought fit you would refuse to do what she tells you? I would not like to refuse.
1278. No, you are a man; and I suppose you would not like to refuse a lady? I would be on the wrong side of the box. I would obey her when I could.
1279. Mr. Driver.] Do you consider yourself bound to obey her? No.
1280. President.] Whose duty is it to put up the tents? I am called on for everything sir.
1281. In the absence of the bathman is it your duty? Yes, sir, they make it my duty.
1282. Do you see the cards of the patients who come in requiring tents? No.
1283. Do you remember a patient coming in suffering from erysipelas—a patient called Bridget M'Aully—who had a tent in the yard? No.
1284. Do you remember the case of a patient who came into the establishment and sat on the verandah a whole day waiting for a tent to be put up? No, I do not know anything about it.
1285. Were you not asked by Miss Osburn to put up a tent for a patient who was suffering from erysipelas, and did you not refuse? I do not know anything about it.
1286. You will not undertake then to say that you did not refuse? Yes, I do undertake to say that I did not refuse.
1287. Were you never asked to put up the tent? No, I was never asked to put up the tent.
1288. Have you any knowledge of a woman sitting in the verandah waiting for a tent, and not getting it until the next morning? No.
1289. Is your memory defective? No; but a woman might be there the whole day and I not notice her.
1290. Do you say you do not remember the woman sitting there, and that you declined to put up a tent without an order from the manager? No, I do not remember it.
1291. Did such a thing occur? No, I do not remember a woman being there.
1292. Do you remember Miss Osburn insisting on your putting up the tent? No, she never insisted.
1293. In the absence of Harris? No, I do not remember.
1294. Do you remember being told to get ice for a patient on a Sunday morning? No. Yes, I remember that. I was told to get ice.
1295. Who told you? A nurse.
1296. You knew the nature of the accident—the injury to the patient, for whom the ice was required? No.
1297. What did the nurse say to you? She told me to go for ice.
1298. What nurse was it? I do not remember now her name.
1299. And you did not go? No.
1300. Why did you not go? I was cleaning up the yard; I am not the messenger. It is not my place to go for ice.
1301. Then the patient may die I suppose because you do not choose to go for ice? It is not my place to go.
1302. Were you not told to go? I would not obey a nurse.
1303. Do you mean to say you believed that the nurse was giving you an order of her own, on her own account? I went for the ice.
1304. Do you wish us to understand that you believed the nurse was giving you an order on her own account? I do not know.
1305. Why did you not go for the ice? I did go. I should not go at all.

- Mr. W. G. Sadleir. 1306. Whose duty was it to go? The messenger's.
 1307. Who was on the place? The man of it—Harris.
 1308. Who came and insisted on your going for the ice? Miss Osburn.
 9 May, 1873. 1309. Where did she find you? She did not come to me at all. She called to me out of a window.
 1310. What did she say? She said, "Go for some ice," and I put on my coat and went.
 1311. Then you think yourself justified in refusing an order that comes to you through a nurse? Yes.
 1312. Through whom do you think that the orders should come? I know my work.
 1313. Answer my question; through whom do you think the orders should come? Through the manager.
 1014. Mr. Goold.] You understand that you are under the control of the manager, you are to receive your orders from him, and when you refused to go for this ice you felt it was not your duty to go? No, it was not my duty.
 1315. Was that the reason you refused to go? I was cleaning up the yard, and was very dirty cleaning all these sinks out.
 1316. Then it was not from unwillingness to go, if you had been at liberty? No, I have got to work on Sunday the same as any other day, and these other men have not, and they could have gone.
 1317. Would you have gone willingly? Yes, if I had been clean.
 1318. President.] Why did you say that you would not go for a nurse? I would not obey a nurse.
 1319. Do you mean to give that as a reason for not going? No.
 1320. Then why did you give it as a reason? No, when they run short of ice, I have often gone for ice.
 1321. Mr. Ellis.] Have you anything to do with the dead-house? Sometimes I carry a body down there.
 1322. How long are bodies allowed to remain there? I cannot say.
 1323. Have you ever heard of any being allowed to remain there for an unreasonable length of time? I cannot give any answer about the dead-house.
 1324. Have you ever assisted to put bodies in the coffins there? I cannot give you any answer about the dead-house.
 1325. You do not work there? No.
 1326. You have nothing to do there? No, only I help sometimes to carry a corpse down there.
 1327. Do you help to put the bodies in the coffins? No, the undertaker does that.

TUESDAY, 13 MAY, 1873.

Members Present:—

WILLIAM CHARLES WINDEYER, Esq., PRESIDENT.

MICHAEL METCALFE, Esq.
 CHARLES COWPER, JUNR., Esq.

RICHARD DRIVER, Esq., M.P.
 SAMUEL GOOLD, Esq.

EYRE G. ELLIS, Esq.

Mr. Henry D. Russell called in and examined:—

- Mr. H. D. Russell. 1328. President.] What position do you hold in the Infirmary? I am clerk and collector.
 1329. What emoluments do you receive? £225 a year.
 1330. Do you live on the premises? No.
 1331. How long have you occupied your present position? Well, I have occupied the position of collector for about five years. I have been clerk of the Infirmary for over eighteen years.
 1332. Have you been twenty-three years here, then? No. I have been here eighteen years altogether, and for over five years of that time I have been collector.
 1333. What was your title when you first came? Clerk.
 1334. Was there anybody in the position of manager when you first came? No.
 1335. Who had the authority then in the Infirmary? The authority was divided, as it were. Mr. Houston—I may say that Mrs. Ghost was matron, and she had large powers. The secretaries were, of course, over all. Mrs. Ghost was subject to them, but she had large powers entrusted to her. There was no manager. If Mrs. Ghost wished for advice she went to the secretary, as the chief executive officer of the institution.
 1336. What were your functions at that time? I was secretary's clerk.
 1337. And how did your functions then differ from your functions now? I had very much less to do then.
 1338. In what respect? Well, at present I keep the books of the Infirmary, and at that time that work was done by the treasurer. Mr. E. W. Cameron was the last treasurer who performed all the duties connected with the treasurership, and he had a clerk in his office who kept the books. I may say that Mr. Cameron was treasurer for many public institutions, and one of the clerks in his office kept all the books of the institutions with which he was connected; and when Mr. Cameron resigned, Mr. Street became treasurer, and Mr. Street was not in a position to do as Mr. Cameron had done. He had not the clerical assistance, so I have done it ever since.
 1339. What books do you keep now? The cash-book, journal, and ledger connected with the treasurer's department.
 1340. What books do you keep now, of any kind? There are the cash-books, the ledger and journal, the general ledger, two case-books, the minute-books of the institution, books of entry for Government patients, books of entry for paying patients—
 1341. I will draw your attention to the 6th by-law, under the head of "management";—do you keep all the books mentioned there? "Books of subscriptions"—that I keep; "petty cash-book"—the manager keeps that. I will name all that he keeps: The petty cash-book, the store-book of articles supplied to the institution, the requisition-book, the order-book, and the inventory-book. He keeps the books I have named, and I keep the others.
 1342. Are all the books named there kept by you or by him? Yes.
 1343. Is your time pretty fully occupied? Yes, it is quite occupied.
 1344. Not by keeping these books, I suppose? Not altogether. I may mention that I am out collecting nearly every day. I may say four days in the week I am collecting.

1345. What change was made in your position when the manager came? Well, I looked to the secretary then as my chief officer, or the only executive officer over me, and now I look to Mr. Blackstone as my superior officer. Mr.
H. D. Russell.
1346. Was that the only change made in your work? No; I became collector when he was appointed. 13 May, 1873.
1347. Was that all the difference that was made? That was all; and I may say that I kept the treasurer's accounts.
1348. Can you tell us from observation what difference there is in the position that the lady superintendent occupies now, and the position that Mrs. Ghost occupied in reference to the internal management? I think there is no difference except that.
1349. You said that Mrs. Ghost had large powers? She had. She had the control of all the male servants. Now, until within the last week or so, Mr. Blackstone has had command of them, and Miss Osburn has had control over the nursing staff and the female servants.
1350. What change was made last week? It was found inconvenient that the male wardsmen should be under Mr. Blackstone's control. Miss Osburn did not consider him to be under hers, and she applied that the control of the wardsmen should be given to her, and the committee granted it.
1351. Under whom was the control of the other male servants of the institution in Mrs. Ghost's time? Under Mrs. Ghost's.
1352. Then that is a change? I may say that, subject to the approval of the committee, Mrs. Ghost appointed and discharged the servants.
1353. Mrs. Ghost did? Yes.
1355. Then, in the power to direct things to be done in the wards, and the cleaning of the hospital, do you consider that Mrs. Ghost had more power than the lady superintendent now has? I really think that she had. I may tell you that the medical men left a good deal to Mrs. Ghost, and I do not know whether they do it now with Miss Osburn. I knew more then of the management and the internal economy of the institution than I do now, for my time is now so fully occupied in the office that—I cannot answer your question accurately.
1356. Well then, what did you understand when the manager came as to the position that he took in the state of things that then existed? That the powers that formerly were vested in the matron were taken from her and placed in his hands. There was a matron when Mr. Blackstone came here, and subsequently Miss Osburn arrived and the whole system of nursing was changed.
1357. Can you tell us anything as to the state of the hospital as to cleanliness when Miss Osburn came? When she came I have no doubt she found it in a very dirty state. We had a matron, who from illness or from other causes, left too much to the servants, and things had got to a very bad pass.
1358. Are you now speaking of the cleanliness of the hospital in respect to vermin? Yes.
1359. Have you seen a change for the better in that respect lately? Yes.
1360. Are you able to give an opinion as to the efficiency of the nursing as it is at present carried on as compared with what it was when there men—wardsmen? I can only tell you what I have heard from the medical men themselves, and they say that the female nursing is far beyond the old system that obtained here in Mrs. Ghost's time.
1361. Mr. Metcalfe.] It is superior? Yes.
1362. President.] Were there men cooks in Mrs. Ghost's time? Yes.
1363. Were they under her control? Entirely.
1364. Can you tell us what the manager's duties are now? He is supposed to have charge of all the stores of the institution, and through his executive officer—the house steward—he distributes the provisions as they are required; in fact, all the stores of the institution. He is supposed to receive every applicant for admission to the Infirmary, and make inquiries if necessary into the truth of the statements of persons recommending them, that is, as to whether they are paupers or not. I may say that his duties are so clearly defined in the by-laws that — 1365. Who conducts the correspondence of the Infirmary? I do.
1366. Are you aware, as a fact, from what you observe, that there is an unpleasant feeling existing between the manager and the lady superintendent on account of this division of authority? Yes, I have observed that.
1367. And does it appear to you that there is a clashing of authority? Yes.
1368. In what way? Well, the manager repudiates the right of the lady superintendent to give orders to the male servants, and her doing so has caused a little unpleasantness.
1369. Do you think that the male servants are aware of this repudiation on the part of the manager of the right of the lady superintendent to interfere? No, I think that the manager makes the male servants understand pretty well that he is their superior officer. They only look to him as their superior officer.
1370. Are you acquainted with the case of a patient—an erysipelas patient—who was kept for twenty-four hours before she got a tent? No, I have not heard anything of it.
1371. Are you aware of complaints being made by the inmates of the Nightingale wing of an insufficiency of water? Yes, I have heard of such complaints.
1372. Are you aware of the fact that the clothes which patients wear when they enter the hospital are stored in a building in the same state in which they are received, and kept there until the patients go out? I believe the clothes are stored away as you say, but if a patient requires them to be aired he can have them if he speaks to the manager or to a nurse.
1373. But there is no regulation as to the clothes that are taken there? Yes, I think there is. I know that one of the principal duties of one of the bathmen is to look after that clothes-house and keep the clothes in order.
1374. Does his duty extend to washing them? Oh no.
1375. Mr. Driver.] He has simply to see that they are properly stored? Yes. He is responsible also for the clothes.
1376. Mr. Cowper.] To see that none are stolen? Yes, he keeps a book in which he enters them, and he puts them away as he gets them, and gives them up when they are demanded by the proper authorities.
1377. Mr. Gould.] Would it be his duty to see that they are properly washed? I do not think it would.
1378. He has merely to put them away? Yes, merely to put them away. I am not aware that there are any conveniences for washing on the premises.

- Mr. 1379. President.] And they are not put out to be washed? No.
- H. D. Russell. 1380. Mr. Metcalfe.] Have you ever heard of any clothes being destroyed with vermin in them? Yes; burnt.
- 13 May, 1873. 1381. President.] Have you ever heard of complaints having been made from the institution at Hyde Park that when inmates have gone there from here they have been infested with vermin? Yes, I have heard of it.
1382. The patients going out would get their clothes from this building, I suppose? Yes.
1383. Mr. Metcalfe.] You say that the treasurer (Mr. Cameron) kept the books. Had he a clerk in the office? Yes.
1384. What do you mean? You know Mr. Clarke, in Mort's office?
1385. Yes? He kept the cash-book, journal, and ledger of the Infirmary.
1386. Who was collector before you? Mr. Jeanneret.
1387. Under a commission? Yes.
1388. Have the subscriptions increased since you took charge of the collection? Yes.
1389. President.] Do you get any commission? No.
1390. Mr. Metcalfe.] What do the subscriptions amount to now? About £2,300.
1391. How many subscribers are there? 700 or 800.
1392. Throughout the city and suburbs? Yes.
1393. Do you call at every house, or only upon those who are already subscribers? I call upon those from whom I think it probable that I shall get a subscription. I do not canvass every house, for you know that nine out of ten people will not give you one.
1394. Then you do not make a systematic canvass, I suppose? No, I have no time for it.
1395. Are not the subscriptions absurdly small for a city like Sydney? Yes.
1396. What commission did the late collector get? 5 per cent. for old, and 7½ per cent. for new.
1397. Who was secretary when you first came here? The Rev. Canon Stephen.
1398. When you first came? Yes, he had just succeeded the Rev. Mr. Ross as secretary.
1399. These Government patients;—are they from all descriptions of people in the Colony? Yes.
1400. They are not simply men who have been convicts? No.
1401. They are people who may be recommended from any household in the city? Yes.
1402. And they get in on the order of the Colonial Secretary without any subscription on their part or on the part of their friends? Yes.
1403. Now, with reference to the duties of the manager, do you not think that his duties could be all performed by yourself very well? I think that they could.
1404. Independently of the collection? Yes.
1405. And, as a matter of opinion, do you not consider that all the servants of the institution should be under the orders of Miss Osburn as well as of the manager? Yes, I do.
1406. Mr. Driver.] I think you said, in answer to one of the questions, that you knew of some clothing taken from the clothes-house at the rear to be burnt? Yes, in many instances.
1407. How long since? I cannot say how long since. The last case might have occurred a month or perhaps three months ago.
1408. So recently as that? Yes.
1409. What was the cause of their being burnt? Some of these old vagrants are brought in here, and their clothes are literally crawling alive with vermin. It would not do to put such clothes in the house, as they would fill the other clothes with vermin.
1410. These are the cases to which you refer? Yes.
1411. Are not all clothes of patients that come in placed in that clothes-house? Not such clothes as I speak of. For instance, the flying pieman was brought into the hospital the other day; his clothes would probably be full of vermin. I should imagine so; and if they were, I have no doubt that they were burnt.
1412. Who could give any information on that point? Harris.
1413. Mr. Cowper.] You spoke just now of paying patients? Yes.
1414. What proportion does the number of paying patients bear to the number of those who pay nothing? We have more than one-half who pay nothing themselves, and very nearly two-thirds are paid for by the Government.
1415. These you call paying patients? No. Supposing you are a subscriber to the Infirmary, and you send a patient in, I do not call him a paying patient. He is not paid for by the Government, but still that patient may be in the hospital for twelve months on your subscription of two guineas. The number of paying patients other than the Government patients is very small.
1416. Mr. Metcalfe.] They are sailors generally;—are they not? Yes; we have not more than two or three a month.
1417. You sometimes find money in the patients' pockets? Yes.
1418. Mr. Cowper.] Are there any patients in the place who pay so much a week, however small? Yes; we have such patients, but very rarely.
1419. I suppose you have only one or two at a time? Yes; if you will refer to our last report you will see that the amount of money received for paying patients is very small.
1420. Mr. Ellis.] I see it is £123 5s. 2d.? Yes, that is it.
1421. Mr. Cowper.] Was there not a case of a person well off who came in as a pauper? Yes, there have been many cases.
1422. President.] Do the paying patients only pay the two guineas on entrance? If we find that they have money we make them pay more. If we find a man has a balance in the Bank, we tell him that he must pay the rate which the committee decide, or go out, but we only find out very rarely that they have money. We have cases of patients recommended by clergymen—by Dr. Lang—a great many recommended by Dr. Lang—who have large balances in the Bank,—£400, £500, and £600.
1423. Mr. Cowper.] Are they made to pay for the treatment that they have received, or for what they receive after it is discovered that they have money? We have made them pay for the whole of it.
1424. For all that they have received in the shape of medical treatment, food, and medicines? Yes.
1425. Have you any idea of the regular rate charged in such cases? Two guineas a week.
1426. Can you recollect how many patients, or about the number that have been charged in that way? Perhaps not twelve during the year.

1427. Mr. Ellis.] Twelve out of 1,800? Yes, out of 1,800.
1428. Mr. Couper.] In point of fact there are no such people as paying patients; what you term so are people admitted under a Government order, or on the annual subscription of two guineas? Oh, no. We have sailors here from the ships who pay four shillings a day while they are in,—while the ship is in harbour. If the ship leaves them the ship leaves a subscription. We took a man in last week who had money, and he was told he would have to pay a subscription of, I think, a guinea a week. He was not very well off, but sufficiently well off to pay that.
1429. I would like to know what is your usual custom when you admit sailors who have money, what you charge them entrance fee, and per week? There is no entrance fee charged.
1430. But the regular charge for paying patients is 4s. per week? No; 4s. per day.
1431. Mr. Metcalfe.] But when a ship sends a subscription of two guineas you admit the sailor? No, we do not do that. The ship has to pay. The thing you speak of has been done. For instance, Mr. Frazer sent up a man from the "British King," and the man died. I found that he was a seaman on board of the "British King," and I made out an account and charged for him at 4s. per day, and charged for the funeral, although he brought an order for admission, signed by Mr. Frazer as a subscriber to the Infirmary.
1432. Mr. Couper.] Would you admit a sailor if I recommended him? Not if he was in employment.
1433. Mr. Driver.] In the majority of cases seamen admitted to the Infirmary as patients are paid for by the ships' agents? Yes; not all. We have many seamen sent here by the Colonial Secretary's order, but they are seamen who are resident in Sydney.
1434. But in the case of Foreign-going ships? We make the ships pay.
1435. Mr. Ellis.] The Colonial Secretary sends seamen here also? Yes, but not the seamen of Foreign ships.
1436. Mr. Goold.] I think that you said you could perform the duties of manager and your own at the same time? Yes, except the collecting.
1437. You could take charge of the stores and do all that the manager has to do as well as your own duties? Yes.
1438. What amount does the Infirmary receive from the Government; for instance, when the Colonial Secretary sends an order for a patient, what amount does the Government pay for that patient;—is it two guineas? No, the Government pay 2s. 3d. per day.
1439. As long as the patient remains in the hospital? Yes. In fact if a patient remains in for twelve months they pay, and if he remains that time the amount paid is £41 per year.
1440. Mr. Driver.] Are there many cases in which that amount of £41 is paid? No.
1441. How many are there in a year? Four or five, I dare say, in a year; only four or five who remain in the hospital the 12 months.
1442. I suppose you cannot say whether these have been recommended by Dr. Lang or not? I cannot. The reason why I mentioned Dr. Lang was because I know that he does not make inquiries into the cases he sends. In fact Mrs. Lang sends most of them. They are signed for the Rev. John Dunmore Lang. The people come here with the order, and of course we take it for granted that they are paupers, and then perhaps when the clothes are overhauled by the bathman a deposit receipt is found in the pockets.
1443. Mr. Goold.] Do you find that the case when these people come with an order from the Colonial Secretary? Yes, I am speaking of such cases.
1444. Then, when Dr. Lang gives an order, that goes to the Colonial Secretary's Office? Yes, and the order is given on the faith of Dr. Lang, that the person is in necessitous circumstances.
1445. Mr. Ellis.] What is the daily average number of these Government patients? Hardly three.
1446. Hardly three per day throughout the year? Yes, it would average three daily throughout the year.
1447. The expense now for Government patients during last year was £4,644 7s. 11d.;—that is what the Government have paid for patients alone? It would be more than that. It would be between £5,000 and £6,000—nearly £6,000 a year.
1448. That is the amount paid for Government patients? Yes.
1449. And in addition to that the Government pays between £400 and £500 a year towards the support of the nursing staff? Yes.
1450. So that the Government pays upwards of £7,000 a year to the support of the establishment? More than that. The Government also gives us an equal amount to that raised by public subscription.
1451. And including that? Including that the amount received from the Government would be about £8,000—
1452. In the annual report for 1872—31st December, 1872—under the head of "General Staff," I find the salaries and wages are stated at £2,792 9s. 10d.? Yes.
1453. Can you give us the items of that amount? Yes.
1454. From recollection? Yes, I can. There is a manager at £300 a year, two resident medical officers, £500,—that is £250 each; myself, £225; house steward, £120; first dispenser, £120; second dispenser, £100; two wardsmen at £50; a gateman at £60; a yardsman at £30; two messenger boys at £12 each—that is £24; two bathmen at £45 each.
1455. Mr. Couper.] Do they live here? They have their meals here.
1456. Mr. Ellis.] Yes? These are the male officers and servants. I forgot the night watchman at £60 a year. I have now to give you the female servants—the nursing staff.
1457. Is it not all here together? No, you will see that is put in separately. There are four head nurses, and I think their salaries are £40 a year each.
1458. President.] Are they not part of the training staff? Yes, one of them. I should have said there are three head nurses—(there are four altogether, but one of them is Sister Mary, who came out with Miss Osburn.)
1459. Mr. Ellis.] Did you say there were three or four head nurses? We have four, but the English nurse is paid for by the Government. That will be three head nurses at £40 a year; seventeen nurses—some at £30, and some at £26.
1460. What is the average? Well, I think eight of them are at £30, and nine at £26. Then there are seven probationers at £20 a year.
1461. There are seventeen nurses? Yes, I think about eight of them at £30, and nine at £26; seven probationers at £20, and four general servants at (say) £26 per annum each; one housekeeper (salary lately

Mr.
H. D. Russell
13 May, 1873.

- Mr. H. D. Russell, lately raised to £40)—it was originally £30; one needlewoman, £30 a year—a machinist. I forgot to mention among the male servants two cooks, one at £70, and the other at £40. The duties of the head cook require a man of a better sort than you will ordinarily find among cooks.
- 13 May, 1873. 1462. What are the district surgeons paid? £50 per year each. One gets £65 I think. He has to visit Balmain and Pyrmont, and the extra money is to pay his boat fares.
1463. The total expenses of the institution during the year appear to be about £10,300? Yes.
1464. And towards that the Government contribute about £8,000? Yes.
1465. Mr. Metcalfe.] When you first came here were there as many directors as there are now? Yes.
1466. And the house committee was of the same number as now? Yes.
1467. Mr. Ellis.] Does inconvenience arise from the fact that some directors attend at one meeting, and others at another? No, I do not think that any inconvenience has arisen from that cause.
1468. Mr. Cowper.] Do you attend the meetings? Yes.
1469. Mr. Metcalfe.] And are not matters debated over and over again? They are. I did not understand the question at first.
1470. Mr. Goold.] Do you take the minutes? Yes.
1471. President.] I understood that the manager did that? No, I do it.
1472. Mr. Ellis.] Are you present when the patients are admitted by the honorary staff? No.
1473. Who fills up the forms? The manager fills up the form. He receives the order from the subscriber, and on that he fills up a form which he hands to the patient, who leaves his subscriber's order and takes the manager's form to the honorary medical officer. It is a kind of pass to show that the man has gone through the necessary forms. On the back of that form, if the man is admitted, the doctor fills in certain particulars, which are noted in the case-book.
1474. Do you find that, being obliged to act as collector, interferes with the proper performance of your duties as clerk here? No, I make time.
1475. Can you do within ordinary office hours the clerical work, and yet be running about for collections? I will tell you how I manage: On wet days I pick up a great deal of work, and also on mail-days and holidays. This is a day on which I would not think of going out for collections. In this way I pick up the work—overtake it, in fact.
1476. I do not mean to say that the work is not done, but if the work had to be done from day to day, would not your employment as collector interfere with it? I may say that it would. There are many things I would like to do but I have not time to do them. Mr. Metcalfe will bear me out. I commenced, for instance, to keep a report-book, to keep the reports of every sub-committee that met in the building—and I have kept the originals—but I could not find time to continue it. I would also like to index my books better, and make marginal notes, but I have no time to do it.
1477. If you had to do the work then regularly, day by day, you could not do it;—you are obliged to make shift to do it when you can? Yes.
1478. Mr. Goold.] Do you think more subscriptions would be obtained if a person were employed to canvass from house to house? Well, I do not know that there would. Another collector might get a little more, but I know that I must get in a certain amount of money or the committee would very soon think that I was not doing my duty.
1479. Mr. Ellis.] You have no time to go into the suburbs? You cannot get money in the suburbs. People who live in the suburbs generally have offices in town, and you can get at them there.
1480. Mr. Goold.] Have they not a collector for the Randwick Asylum who devotes his whole time to it? Yes, but he does not get as much as I get,—not half as much.
1481. President.] Suppose that the whole internal management of the institution were vested in the lady superintendent, and the collection of subscriptions left to a collector, there would not be work in the place for more than one officer? I don't think that there would be.
1482. Mr. Ellis.] You said when clothes were swarming with vermin that they were burnt? Yes.
1483. Have they often been burnt in this way? I cannot say. I have heard of clothes being burnt. It may happen every day, or not for six months, as far as I know. I only speak from hearsay, for I never saw a bundle of clothes on fire in my life.
1484. You never saw any clothes burnt? No.
1485. Did you ever see any fumigated? No. It was tried here, I believe, but it seemed to have no effect on the vermin.
1486. How long would the clothes of a dead man be allowed to lie in that clothes-room? The clothes of dead men are generally given away to the living.
1487. But there is a large pile of them on the floor at the present moment? Then they are too bad to be given away.
1488. And they are allowed to remain with all the others? I believe they are kept apart from the others.
1489. Do you know that, or have you only heard of it? I know that each ward has a shelf for the clothes of its patients.
1490. Do you know that there is a large pile of clothes rising up from the floor of that clothes-house? Yes, I saw it there the other day. The bathman called my attention to it and said that he wanted to get rid of them.
1491. He said some of those clothes had been there two years? Very likely they had; it was a very large heap. I think I had occasion to go down to the place with the building committee, and with the architect, to look at the ground there, and the clothes-house was open, and I spoke to Harris, and he showed me the heap, and spoke to me as to its being in his way. I told him to speak to Mr. Blackstone and get leave to send the clothes to the Benevolent Asylum. We do send a great quantity there, but I do not know whether they are of any use. We give them away to the people who go out.
1492. Mr. Cowper.] These would be of no use to the Benevolent Asylum? Of very little use indeed.
1493. Mr. Ellis.] How often is stock taken here? Once a year.
1494. Who takes it? The manager in his department, the house steward in his, the lady superintendent in hers, and the dispensers in theirs.
1495. Who checks the stock-takings? I do not know that they have ever been checked—merely laid on the table.
1496. As far as you know they have never been checked? As far as I know, never checked.
1497. So that there might be a considerable loss without the committee being aware of it? There might.

1498. Mr. Driver.] Or any officer of the institution? Yes. I may say that, unless it is compared with the stock of the previous year.
1499. Mr. Ellis.] Is there a stock-book? No, an inventory-book.
1500. Would that book show the quantity consumed, and the quantity on hand, of any article, so as to admit of comparison being made with the quantity received into the institution? Well, I cannot say. It is some time since I have seen that book. I formerly kept that book, but I have not done so of late years.
1501. Who keeps it now? The manager, in his department—the lady superintendent—the house steward—and the dispensers.
1502. Have any persons been appointed to examine the accounts? Auditors.
1503. But to examine them and verify the whole from first to last? Never.
1504. President.] Do you know the mode in which the diets are made up—how they have had to be obtained from the store? No.
1505. As far as you are aware, is there any mode of checking the amount which the house steward says he issues, and the amount he says he requires? Yes.
1506. What is the check? The medical men's orders. These are filed by the house steward, and if he delivers anything from the store, he can show where he got his order for that article.
1507. But there is no daily sum total of what is required made out, under the present system? Yes, there is.
1508. Do you know that formerly the diets were made up by the sisters, whereas, now, there is some boy who takes the whole bundle of papers to the house steward? I have heard of something of that sort. I have heard that there has been a disagreement between the house steward and the nurses about the diets.
1509. If the diets were made out daily by the sisters, would not that be a check on what is said to be issued by the house steward? Well, I do not know. The sisters, I believe, asked for a lump amount and the steward wanted the orders, and there was some disagreement between them. The boy was supposed to bring down the cards, showing every man's diet, and any addition made to it in the course of the day.

Mr.
H. D. Russell.
13 May, 1873.

Mr. Henry Harris, bathman, Sydney Infirmary, recalled, and further examined:—

1510. Mr. Ellis.] When you bathe and wash the patients do you find them in a very dirty state? Some of them.
1511. Very dirty? Very dirty.
1512. And you supply them with hospital clothes as soon as they are washed? Yes.
1513. Do you find any vermin on them? On the admitted patients?
1514. Yes? Frequently on the admitted patients.
1515. In any considerable quantity? On the head, yes. Very often we have to cut off the hair and clean the head, and wash it with kerosene oil.
1516. Have you ever found them swarming with vermin? Yes, on their clothes. I have seen as many as a hundred or so on the coat outside after it is made up in a bundle.
1517. And those clothes are made up in bundles as the patients take them off, and placed in the clothes-house? Placed in the shed if they are not too bad.
1518. What would you call too bad,—would you call them too bad if there were 100 lice on them? When these people, who are without any home, come in, their shirts are covered with them, and their trousers. I have seen them thick under the collar of the coat. These are destroyed—these clothes.
1519. You destroy them when you find them covered with vermin? Yes, I report it to the manager first. I have seen some patients come in whose clothes are pretty good, and it would be a pity to destroy them.
1520. And those you tie up into a bundle which you put into the clothes-house? Into a shed.
1521. Mr. Goold.] Into the clothes-room? No, into a shed. There is a shed at the back, there.
1522. Mr. Ellis.] Do you know in how many cases within the last six months you burnt these verminous clothes? I cannot say how many cases, but there were a good many.
1523. Within the last six months can you say about how many? Well, I cannot say. I dare say some ten or fifteen bundles have been destroyed within the last six months.
1524. It is said that there was one patient—the flying pieman—lately admitted in a verminous state;—can you say whether it was so or not? I did not admit him. I did not receive his clothes.
1525. Is there another bathman then? Yes, the man who always assists, and if I am away he takes them in in my absence.
1526. Who burns the clothes? They are put on the dirt heap, and are generally burned with the straw from the bedding,—the dirty straw.
1527. Who burns them? The yardsman; he generally sets fire to them.
1528. Have you heard of any complaints from the authorities of Hyde Park of patients being discharged out of the Infirmary with vermin on them, and going there? No, it has not come to my knowledge.

Mr.
H. Harris,
13 May, 1873.

Laurence John Halkett, Esq., House Surgeon of the Sydney Infirmary, called in and examined:—

1529. President.] What is your position in the Infirmary? House surgeon.
1530. How long have you occupied that position? Since the first week of September last.
1531. What emoluments do you receive? £250 a year.
1532. And you reside on the premises? Yes; £250 a year—board and lodging.
1533. What accommodation have you? I have the share of a sitting-room, and I have a bed-room.
1534. You share with the resident physician I suppose? Yes, and the manager.
1535. Are you satisfied with the accommodation? No, I am not.
1536. In what respect? I should prefer a private sitting-room of my own, in which I could see my own friends, and I do not consider that the medical officers should be associated with the manager at all.
1537. Would you give the Commission your reasons for coming to that opinion? Well, very often the resident medical officers have to talk about medical matters that are not fit for general conversation. It is also an intrusion on our privacy.

L. J. Halkett,
Esq.
13 May, 1873.

- L. J. Halkett, Esq.
13 May, 1873.
1538. Have you ever occupied a position similar to your present one, in any other hospital besides this? I have never been a house surgeon, but I was resident assistant surgeon in the hospital of Newcastle-upon-Tyne.
1539. How many beds are there in that hospital? 252.
1540. It is a larger hospital than this? Yes, it is.
1541. Is it a modern hospital or is it an old-fashioned place? It is composite; the old building is still standing, but the larger part of the hospital has been built within the last 15 years. The old building was erected in 1760 I think.
1542. Was it managed by wardsmen? No, there was a staff of female nurses everywhere, except in the male lock ward.
1543. That is similar to our own arrangement? Very similar, except that we had no sisters there; they were all nurses.
1544. Are there any persons in this Infirmary under your control? You mean the servants?
1545. Any persons whatever? The only thing I have to do with them is to grant passes to the wardsmen if he wishes to go out at night.
1546. Are the dispensers in any way under your control? Yes, they are under the joint control of myself and the other medical officer, but I have sole control of the wardsmen myself.
1547. Are you satisfied with the way in which the dispensing is carried out? I have often occasion to complain of the delay in the arrival of the medicine in the wards after it has been ordered.
1548. What does this delay arise from? I have investigated it several times, and never been able to come to a satisfactory solution. The blame is always transferred from one to the other. The dispensers say it was the boys' fault, and the boys say it was the nurses, and the nurses say it was not theirs.
1549. You say that the dispenser is under you? Yes.
1550. Is he under you in such a way that you can bring him to book? No, I have no authority over him. I can only remonstrate with him, but I cannot suspend him.
1551. Can you report him? I do report him. I wrote a letter to the committee.
1552. What was the nature of the complaint? That I wrote for medicine for a patient and it did not come up when ordered; in some cases it does not matter much, but at other times the medicine is wanted in a minute.
1553. What is the longest delay that you have known to occur? About twelve or thirteen hours.
1554. Does this arise from the mode in which the dispensing is carried out, or to what cause do you attribute the delays? Well, the dispensers always made excuses as to the time they received the order, but when I complained to the manager about it, I left the matter in his hands then. I had nothing more to do with it; and he investigated it, and matters went on better for a time, but they have become just as bad again.
1555. Can you suggest any mode of rectifying this? Yes; but it would throw more work on the dispensers to carry out what I proposed. I proposed that all medicine should be sent up within three hours after the order went down. It would not be a very great tax upon them, but it seems to be the opinion of some people that it would be.
1556. Whose opinion is that? The opinion of those to whom I suggested it.
1557. You did suggest it? Yes.
1558. Was there any such rule in force in the institutions you were acquainted with? Yes; at Newcastle-upon-Tyne the medicines were sent up within two hours.
1559. What happened if it was not sent up? The resident medical officer had the power to suspend there. We had no manager, only a paid secretary.
1560. Do you think that such powers should be vested in the resident medical officer? I do not know that, but the power should be vested in somebody.
1561. Do you think, as a matter affecting the good government of the hospital, it is expedient that such power should be vested in the resident medical officers, or in one of them? Yes; perhaps not the resident medical officers, but some resident person.
1562. But to check the abuse that exists from hour to hour, should not the power be vested in some person resident on the place? Yes. But you have other persons resident on the place.
1563. Who are they? The manager.
1564. Do you think the manager is the proper person to have this power? No. I should prefer the resident medical officer having it.
1565. You say there was no manager in the hospital at Newcastle-upon-Tyne? No.
1566. Have you become aware since you came here of a clashing of authority between the manager and the lady superintendent? Yes, I have heard of it, and sometimes seen it.
1567. In the hospital at Newcastle-upon-Tyne who performed the functions which are here performed by the manager? We had a house steward, who had more authority than this one here, and he was subservient to a paid secretary, who came for about an hour three times a week to look over the accounts and keep an eye upon the house steward. The senior house surgeon too had far more executive authority than he has here.
1568. Who was at the head of the nursing staff? A matron—Miss Cook.
1569. Do you think from what you have seen in this Infirmary that this divided authority is conducive to the well being of the institution? I do not think so.
1570. In what way have you seen this division of authority show itself as detrimental to the working of the hospital? The way in which it affected me personally was, in regard to the dietary cards. I tried to understand the matter, but it was so intricate that I could make nothing of it. I frequently found that the patients' cards instead of being at the head of the beds were away out of the wards altogether. On inquiry, the nurses told me that they could not keep them right, for they were down at the house stewards, and they could not keep them. That is the matter of dispute.
1571. We were told that there was an alteration in the manner of making out the diets? Yes.
1572. Was that alteration made since you came? Yes, it was done in the old way when I first came.
1573. You are aware of a change in the method of getting these diets from the house steward? Yes.
1574. And you do not approve of the change? No, because the cards instead of being ready at any moment for myself or the honorary staff to write prescriptions upon, are away out of the ward.
1575. Do you not think it was better for the patients, and better in every way, that the old system should remain? I think so. The cards should never be taken away from the beds; they should be always there for the doctors to see.
- 1576.

1576. Then the system you approve of is the system that was introduced by Miss Osburn? I do not know. L. J. Halkett, 1577. That is, the nurses or sisters making out the diets and sending down their lists to the house steward Esq.
instead of the cards? Yes, that is the system I approve of.
1578. Mr. Goold.] That was the system when you came? Yes.
1579. Who altered it? I do not know. It was altered by the committee in some way. I do not know at whose instigation.
1580. Are you aware that since this alteration not only have there been inconveniences about the physic, but there have also been great irregularities in the diets? Yes, patients have complained to me they have been ordered a chop and have not got it. I remember a case of that kind.
1581. You remember instances of that sort? Yes, two or three at least in my own knowledge that I can call to mind at this time, and there may be others that have escaped my memory.
1582. Would not this system of which you approve of, of making out the diets, be a check upon the amount of stores issued by the house steward;—if the lists made out by the sisters were kept, would they not be a check on the house steward? I should think they would be, but I am not a man of business.
1583. It would be more a check than the present system? I should think so, but of course I cannot speak ex cathedra.
1584. Speaking of the divided authority of Miss Osburn and the manager, do you remember any instance when there seemed to be a clashing of authority as to a certain window in one of the wards being closed or left open? Yes, I do.
1585. Did that dispute seem to arise from this divided authority? It seemed to me so. I was led into it unwittingly. I was not aware that the window opened into a water-closet.
1586. What were you led into? The whole story is this: I went into the ward, and the wardman asked me if all the windows were to be left open, and I naturally said, "Of course." He said that Miss Osburn had said some of them were to be shut. I made no reply, but turned away and left. Afterwards, Miss Osburn came to me and informed me that this window opened into the water-closet—a thing I was not aware of—and then I quite coincided with her that it should be kept closed.
1587. Was there a case came under your notice the other day—the case of a patient for whom some ice was required? Yes, it was a patient that I took in early one Sunday morning.
1588. Did you hear that there was a difficulty in getting a man to go for that ice? I have heard rumours, but I know nothing of my own knowledge. I simply ordered it. It is not the first time that there have been delays in getting ice.
1589. What does that arise from? I can hardly say. It seems to be some fault in the system, I can hardly say where.
1590. What is your impression—you must have formed some opinion on the subject? I give the orders and leave the nurses to fight the battle and get the ice somehow.
1591. Do you know of a case of an erysipelas patient being here for twenty-four hours waiting for a tent to be put up? Yes, she lay in the bath-room all night, because there was no place to put her. She is in the house now.
1592. Do you know the reason that she remained so long without a tent? I do not know. I wrote on the card "tent"; that is all I have to do.
1593. That is the information which is usually given? Yes; there is a blank on the card for the ward to which a patient is admitted, and instead of writing the ward, I write there—"tent."
1594. Have you anything to do with the admission of patients? If the honorary surgeon does not turn up by 11 o'clock then I have the power of admission. I generally wait.
1595. Have you any authority to discharge patients? None at all, except for insubordination, or at their own request.
1596. Is it your opinion that there are patients in here who would be more cheaply looked after in some of the Government Asylums? There are one or two cases, but not many. I took a census this morning of my patients, and I only found seven who were not hospital cases.
1597. What class of cases do these belong to? Various. There is an idiot girl there. Dr. Mackellar is her honorary surgeon, and discharged her, and I countersigned the discharge more than a week ago, and she has not gone out yet.
1598. How is that? I am told by the sister that the reason is they cannot find any friends to take her, and they do not know who recommended her in.
1599. What are the other cases? There is a case that has been kept in for about three or four months for want of an apparatus which the surgical instrument maker has promised to make; but it is not made yet, and the man is detained simply for want of it.
1600. The patient cannot go out without it? No; he cannot walk without it.
1601. What are the other cases? There is a boy in J ward, who has been in fourteen months, and who would be much better in a benevolent asylum or a convalescent hospital.
1602. Mr. Cowper.] That is the boy with the broken leg? Yes, it is carries of the bone.
1603. He will never be able to walk well? No. There is another man in O ward, who has been in four and a-half months, and who cannot go out. There is a case of skin disease which has been in since the 18th February.
1604. President.] Why is that case not discharged? I don't know. It is a patient of Dr. Bedford's.
1605. Do you consider it incurable? I am afraid so. There is a dispute among medical men as to what this skin disease is. It is a very rare case. There is a patient in the female lock ward with an ulcer of the leg, not likely to benefit from treatment here; and there is also in the female lock ward a patient with a broken leg, discharged by Dr. Bedford, and the discharge countersigned by me fourteen days ago, but she is still in the hospital.
1606. Why is she kept there? Because she has no place to go to; she has no friends, and they cannot find any to have her, and so she is kept in the house.
1607. We are told it is the practice for the honorary medical men to take turn-about in the admission of patients? Yes, they each have a week.
1608. And there is some disposition shown by these gentlemen to keep beds filled until their week for admission comes round again? I have been told once or twice only of a doctor keeping a patient in until his week came round.
1609. You have been told of it? Yes, once or twice.

- L. J. Halkett, Esq.
13 May, 1873.
1610. You have no power then to discharge a patient who is well enough to go out? No. I have no power to discharge, except for insubordination, or if the patient asks to go out.
1611. Do you know of cases in which nurses have complained of patients smoking in the wards? Yes, I do.
1612. And is not smoking a violation of the rules, for which a patient may be discharged? Yes.
1613. Was there a complaint made to you? Yes.
1614. Did you discharge the patient? No.
1615. Why did you not? Because I knew the honorary would have admitted the case again the next day, and so stultified my discharge.
1616. In that particular case the complaint was made to you? Yes.
1617. And the case proved? Yes.
1618. Do you know that the honorary medical officer was referred to? Yes.
1619. And informed of these facts? Yes.
1620. And yet he allowed the patient to remain in? Yes, I believe so. I have discharged patients for smoking myself.
1621. Do you not think it is likely to create insubordination if some are allowed to violate the rules while others are not? Yes; but some of the medical officers give me more right to exercise my own judgment than others.
1622. But are there not rules to guide you? But the honorary can always over-ride my ruling.
1623. But should not the resident medical officer have power to discharge at once in cases of that kind? Certainly.
1624. Are you aware of the mode in which the clothes of the patients are kept? No; I know nothing about that.
1625. Do you know of any violation of the rules of the hospital by patients being allowed to wear their own clothes? Yes, I do.
1626. Have you not interfered in these instances? I have not interfered for the same reason that I gave just now. The honorary would reverse my decision and of course I should lose my authority altogether.
1627. Can you suggest any mode by which these persons who are not fit subjects for the Infirmary should be excluded, or any mode of regulating the admissions? I am afraid not so long as this is the only place you can get a sick person into. At Home they have hospitals for incurables, and convalescent hospitals, but here you have not. At the Asylum they will only take a man when he is advanced in life and is incurable. We have great difficulty in persuading them sometimes that a man is incurable.
1628. Are you satisfied with the nursing here? Yes.
1629. What do the manager's functions appear to you to be? I do not know. I seldom come into contact with him, except at meal-times. He fills up the tickets. The patients bring their tickets and he gives them a letter to me, and I admit them or do not admit them, on that. I make my requisitions to him also.
1630. Has he a character for sobriety in the place? Well, that is a question I do not know anything about. I do not see much of him at all.
1631. Has he that character? I never heard his character discussed either one way or the other.
1632. Have you no opinion about it yourself, one way or the other? I have my own private opinion.
1633. What is your opinion;—do not be afraid to speak out? It is a very unpleasant thing to do.
1634. Of course it is unpleasant—an inquiry of this kind always is? Well, I have seen him a little bit—not quite himself; but I have always found him able to do his duties.
1635. But you have seen him under the influence of liquor? I believe I saw him so one night when you were here. I heard you accuse him of it then.
1636. You heard me accuse him of being tipsy? Yes.
1637. Do you remember what took place on that occasion? I remember it was after dinner, and I was standing on the steps. You came up and spoke to him and passed him by, and then you went to the Nightingale wing, and you came back and he spoke to you, and you said, "Why, you are drunk;" that is all. I just happened to overhear what took place.
1638. Is his manner at times a matter of comment in the institution? No; I do not think so; I have never heard of it; but I never converse with anyone but my own fellow professional.
1639. Mr. Metcalfe.] You have said that the manager has access to the sitting-room you occupy as well as you? Yes.
1640. But he is not there often, is he? Not latterly; but he is in and out.
1641. He lives away from the premises? Yes, and leaves at about 6 o'clock.
1642. You dine together? Yes.
1643. In that room? Yes.
1644. Not in this? No; this is the dispensers' dining-room.
1645. How does the building appear to be in the way of comfort and cleanliness; how does it compare with the hospital in which you formerly were? The building at Newcastle-upon-Tyne was far better.
1646. But the nursing? The nursing in this building could not be better. It is first-class.
1647. And the diet? The diet is superior to most English Hospitals, and the building itself is pretty fair, considering its age.
1648. It is not wonderful that there should be vermin in it? No; not considering the nature of the building. A stone building I should be surprised to see vermin in, but in a rubble building I am not surprised to see them.

Thomas Henry Gillman, Esq., M.D., House Physician, Sydney Infirmary, called in and examined:—

- T. H. Gillman, Esq., M.D.
13 May, 1873.
1649. President.] What position do you occupy? I am house physician.
1650. What are your emoluments? £250 a year—board and residence.
1651. You have quarters with the resident surgeon? Yes.
1652. Do you share the same room with him, or have you a room to yourself? We have each a bedroom, and one common sitting-room, in which the resident surgeon and myself sit, and we have our meals with the manager in the same room.

1654. How have you found it unpleasant? Well, though I get on very well with the resident surgeon, still sometimes his friends may not be exactly pleasant to me, and my friends may in a similar way not be pleasant to him. And if I want to read or write, persons may come in and talk and smoke, and that is not always convenient. I have no private sitting-room, as I should wish to have. 13 May, 1873.
1655. How long have you been here? About two months.
1656. Have you ever occupied any similar position in an English hospital? No. I was for thirteen months a resident physician in the Melbourne Hospital.
1657. What was the size of the hospital in which you were? I cannot tell the number of beds exactly, but I think there were about 390.
1658. It was larger than this? Considerably.
1659. Are the dispensers in any way under your control? Yes, according to the rules they are.
1660. In what respect? Well, we are supposed to see that the medicines are properly made up and promptly delivered.
1661. Are the dispensers amenable to you, in point of fact? Yes, to a certain extent they are. We have had complaints on several occasions as to medicines not being sent up as promptly as they should be.
1662. Within what time should medicine be sent up after being ordered? That depends very much on the medicine. Some medicines may take twenty-four hours to make up, but the ordinary run of medicines ought to be ready in an hour. Of course, if there are only a few prescriptions they can be compounded more rapidly, and we have to make allowance for the number of prescriptions. The time varies with the number of medicines that the dispensers have to compound.
1663. But making the allowance you speak of, you still have had cause to complain? Yes. I think that there has been unnecessary delay on some occasions.
1664. What length of delay has taken place? Some hours. I have ordered medicines in the morning, and on going round the wards next morning, found that the medicine had not come up at all. I attribute that to neglect.
1665. Have you complained about it? Yes.
1666. To whom? To the dispensers; but they were always ready with some excuse,—that the card on which the prescription was written had gone to the house steward, and not come to them in time, or something of that kind.
1667. I believe the diets and the prescriptions are written on the same cards? Yes.
1668. Do you think it is right that those cards should be removed from the ward? I think it would be advisable to have distinct cards for the diets and the prescriptions; of course that is a mere matter of opinion, but I think it would be more convenient, and there would be less excuse for delays.
1669. But if the diets were made out by the sisters of the wards then there would be no need for sending the cards out of the ward at all, except to the dispensers? None.
1670. Would that be a good plan? Yes, supposing the duplicate written by the sister were sufficient to satisfy the house steward.
1671. You were not here when the former system of making out the diets prevailed? I am not aware of any other system than that which prevails at present.
1672. Have you any power to suspend the dispenser if there is a gross delay? No.
1673. Then you have no absolute control over him;—he is not responsible to you in any way? No, I can merely remonstrate with him, and complain to the Board. I have no power to suspend him,—at least I have not heard so.
1674. Should he not be directly responsible to some one on the place for the discharge of his duties? I think so.
1675. Do you think the efficiency of the dispensing would be best secured by making the dispenser responsible to you? Well, that is not an easy question to answer. The dispenser is, to a certain extent, directly responsible to the resident medical officers.
1676. To what extent? Any complaints against the dispensers are made to us, and we are supposed to inquire into them and report to the Committee.
1677. But that is a very ineffective kind of control? Well, it is a very round-about sort of control. Of course we have no authority to dismiss or suspend. I do not know that it would be advisable that we should have such authority. I doubt whether it would be.
1678. Do you not think you should have the power to suspend, leaving it to the governing body to dismiss? Well, if we were to suspend one of the dispensers we should not be able to get the medicines dispensed. There are only two dispensers, and if we were to suspend one the other would not be able to discharge the duties, so that we should only place ourselves in a worse position than before.
1679. Have you ever known instances of delay in the sending up of the diets to the patients? No, I am not aware of any.
1680. That would come more under the notice of the sisters or nurses? Yes.
1681. Have you anything to do with the admission of patients? When the honorary physician of the week does not come on any particular day then I examine patients and admit.
1682. Have you any power to discharge them? None, except at their own request, or for gross misconduct or insubordination. In such cases I recommend to the manager, I think, or to the lady superintendent according to the rules—I am not positive which—that they shall be discharged. I have only had occasion to do so once.
1683. What did you do on that occasion? I simply wrote on the patient's ticket: "Discharged for insubordination," and that was taken to the manager's office, and the patient was discharged accordingly.
1684. Mr. Wearne.] Was he admitted again? No. It was a female patient, and she has not been since admitted.
1685. Did the honorary physician approve of what you did? Yes. I told him of it the next morning, and he quite approved of it. That is the only instance in which I have discharged a patient.
1686. President.] We are told that there is a disposition on the part of some of the honorary medical men to keep their beds filled, and that they sometimes keep in patients who should be discharged, until it comes to their turn to admit patients again—that cannot prevail as we understand to any great extent on the physician's side of the hospital, the side under your management? They can do it on one side just as well as on the other, but I don't think that the practice does prevail on the medical side.

- T. H. Gillman, Esq., M.D. 1687. On the medical side there are a certain number of beds allotted to each doctor;—is it not so? Yes.
- 13 May, 1873. 1688. Do you think the resident physician should have the power of discharging patients when they are sufficiently cured? That would be a matter of opinion. I think that when the honoraries come every day—as they usually do—there is no necessity for the resident physician having such power.
1689. The resident medical officers' have such powers in other hospitals;—have they not? In Melbourne, according to the rules, the honorary discharges, but by the practice the resident officer generally discharges the patients, except occasionally, when the honorary discharges them himself.
1690. Mr. Ellis.] Who admits them in the Melbourne Hospital? There are two admission days per week—Tuesdays and Fridays—and on these days two members of the committee come to admit. They form an admission committee. If they do not attend, the secretary and superintendent takes their place. Prior to the patients appearing before the admission committee they are seen by the resident medical officer on duty, who decides whether they are fit to be treated; and if they are he makes a note to that effect on the back of their recommendation paper. The patient takes this to the admission committee, and if he is found to be fit, in a pecuniary way, for admission, he is then admitted according to the recommendation of the medical officer.
1691. Then it is, in fact, the resident medical officer there who does what is done by the honorary medical officer here? Yes. The patients are certified as fit by the resident medical officer. But then, of course, if a patient comes up with a recommendation by an honorary medical officer at any time, that is equivalent to an order, and the resident medical officer dare not refuse to admit that case. On ordinary days, however—Tuesdays and Fridays—the resident medical officer recommends them.
1692. Mr. Metcalfe.] And when he has recommended them they go before a committee? Yes.
1693. Who are not medical men? Who inquire as to whether they are fit objects of charity.
1694. Mr. Gould.] Have they only two days of admission? Yes, for ordinary cases, but urgent cases can be admitted at any time—night or day.
1695. What is the rule here? Here they are admitted daily.
1696. President.] Has it come under your observation that there is any clashing of authority between the manager and the lady superintendent? I cannot say that I have any knowledge of that—my experience has been so short.
1697. Are you satisfied or otherwise with the system of nursing carried on in this establishment? I am satisfied.
1698. Have you found any inconvenience from the deficiency of the supply of water to the establishment? Yes.
1699. Do you concur in the objections made by Dr. Halkett as to the deficiency of the accommodation in the premises for receiving patients and examining them? I think that the accommodation is very inadequate.
1700. Mr. Metcalfe.] Are the prescriptions accurately prepared by the dispensers? As far as I can judge they are.
1701. And you judge from the results? Yes.
1702. Mr. Cowper.] Have you never noticed any conflict of authority between the lady superintendent and the manager, such as persons ordered by one officer refusing to obey that officer, and the patients suffering in consequence of the order not being obeyed? No.
1703. You have not seen a patient kept waiting after being admitted, in consequence of the negligence of the servants, or their refusing to obey any officer? No. Nothing of that kind has ever come under my notice.
1704. President.] Are you aware of an erysipelas case being kept waiting all day for a tent to be put up? No; that would go to the surgical side, and I would know nothing about it.
1705. Mr. Metcalfe.] Do you find that the hospital is supplied with everything necessary for the medical patients? Do you mean with medicines and food?
1706. No; appliances to be used for the comfort of the patients, or for your own convenience? Once or twice I have found the galvanic battery out of order, and there has been a want of cupping glasses and some other trifling matters.
1707. Have they been supplied? Yes.
1708. Mr. Cowper.] Without delay? Yes, without any unreasonable delay.
1709. President.] Did you order them yourself? I mentioned the matter to Dr. Halkett, who, as house-surgeon, has charge of the instruments, and he obtained them. If anything is urgently needed he orders it at once, and sends in his requisition to the next committee meeting.
1710. You have seen the cooking establishment here? No, I have not been in the kitchen at all.
1711. Mr. Metcalfe.] You have seen the patients' meals;—are they properly cooked? I see them occasionally, accidentally, and, as far as I have seen, they seem to be pretty well cooked.
1712. President.] That is a matter about which the nurses are better able to speak than yourself? Yes.
1713. Mr. Wearne.] How often do you go through the wards? Twice a day.
1714. Once with the honorary physician? Yes, I make it a point to go round with the honorary physician who is receiving patients that week. I cannot go with them all.
1715. And you always go round again in the afternoon? In the evening at 7 o'clock.
1716. If there is any alteration in the medicine required you order it? If at any time I deem it desirable to make a change I do so without hesitation. If I expect the honorary I wait for a while, so that he may make the alteration himself; but if he does not come by 12 o'clock, and I deem it necessary, then I make the alteration.
1717. You say it would be an improvement to have the diet on one paper and the prescription on another? Yes.
1718. Do you think that a probationer could copy a prescription as suggested by yourself, so that the board could be always hung up over the patient's bed? No, not a probationer.
1719. There are medical students;—are there not? There are some—only five or six, I believe, altogether.
1720. Could you rely on their copying the prescriptions correctly? On the senior students I could, but not on all.
1721. Do you think the manager has too much power, or that more power should be given to the lady superintendent? I do not feel in a position to offer any opinion on that subject. I am not sufficiently intimate with the working of the institution to know that. I do not care to interfere with the duties of other persons.
- 1722.

1722. Do you think that it is right to have all female nurses;—should there not be some males? I think in the male lock ward it is desirable to have a male nurse. T.H. Gillman, Esq., M.D.
1723. Which you have? Yes. In the other wards I see no objection to female nurses. I think it is desirable to have them. 13 May, 1873.
1724. Are not some of them too young? The head nurses are all old enough, but some of the junior nurses seem to me to be rather young.
1725. You think that there should be more discretion used in admitting probationers—that they should be older than they are? That is a matter of opinion; but I think it is desirable that they should be about five or six and twenty.
1726. Mr. Couper.] As a rule are not some women older and more capable at 20 than others are at 25? Yes.
1727. It depends on the character of the female? Yes.
1728. Mr. Wearne.] You think that there are sufficient males about the premises to do the work? In the nursing department—yes.
1729. You think that if Miss Osburn had one or two men under her control she would not get on better? I am not sure under whose control the male wardsmen is.
1730. He is in the lock ward? Yes.
1731. Would it not be better in a large hospital like this if there were one or two male wardsmen—call them porters if you like—under the control of the lady superintendent, to do work that the females cannot do? You mean to go on messages.
1732. No; to lift patients, and do things of that sort—to attend on the operating-room. There are certain operations where there should be males present? I think that perhaps it might be advisable in the male accident ward to have one male nurse. There are operations of an indelicate nature, where it is desirable to have a male attendant; but in the other wards I do not see the advantage of having male attendants to replace the female nurses there.
1733. Mr. Couper.] If there were some person on the establishment to be called to carry any person suffering from an accident, or do little things of that kind, or attend and do duties at operations which are indelicate for females to perform, that would meet the difficulty? Yes; I think so.
1734. Mr. Wearne.] Under whose control should the bathman be—the manager's or the lady superintendent's? Well, the bathman's duties are not confined solely to the bathroom. It depends on what his other duties are. He may not have to give more than one or two or three patients a bath per day, and then again he may have to give a dozen patients a bath. Of course there is but a small portion of his time taken up with that work, and it depends on what his other duties may be as to whose control he should be placed under.
1735. Don't you think that if the lady superintendent required him to do anything that came within his duties he should be ready at any moment to do it? Yes.
1736. You think whatever she ordered him to do should be instantly done without reference to the manager? Yes, unless he were engaged at the time in the performance of some duty assigned to him by some of the medical officers—some important duty.
1737. But there should be nothing outside of the hospital duty to interfere with the duties of the bathman—that should be first? Yes, that should be first.
1738. Other things should be secondary? Yes.
1739. Mr. Goold.] Do you think that the whole of the nursing staff should be under the lady superintendent—that she should have, as is recommended by Miss Nightingale, the whole and entire control of the nurses, with the power of engaging and discharging them? Yes, I think so.
1740. You have been for thirteen months in the Melbourne hospital? Yes.
1741. Of course in that time you obtained a thorough knowledge of the hospital there. Comparing the management of that hospital with this, so far as you are able to form an opinion;—how does this compare with the Melbourne institution? As regards the nursing, the head nurses here I consider superior intellectually, and in their knowledge of diseases, to any nurses in Melbourne; but some of the head nurses there are quite equal to the nurses here in the practical details of nursing. But I consider the nursing here superior on the whole to the nursing in Melbourne.
1742. Of course we have not the same conveniences in this building as they have in the Melbourne hospital? No.
1743. Of course then in that respect they would have a great advantage? There is not sufficient bath-room accommodation here.
1744. So far as we have accommodation, you consider that this hospital is in a far better condition as regards the nursing than the Melbourne hospital? Yes, as regards the nursing.
1745. Mr. Metcalfe.] Have you found any inconvenience from the want of water? Yes, in the receiving-room we find it exceedingly inconvenient when, for instance, accidents are brought in between the hours of 3 and 5 in the afternoon. There is no water supply. There is merely one basin filled before the water is turned off, and that becomes soiled with the first case that is brought in, and then we have to send for water, or wash them in bloody water.
1746. That is of daily occurrence? Yes, it happens every day.
1747. Mr. Goold.] Where would you have to send to for water? Not off the premises, but to the other end of the building.
1748. President.] Can you tell us how many patients there are on your side of the house which are not fit subjects for treatment here, or which, on other grounds, might be discharged? I do not think that there are more than six cases (this is of course a matter of opinion); and two of these cases are under recommendation for admission to the Benevolent Asylum on Friday next. Another is a case that may be treated very well as an out-patient. Two others are cases of advanced phthisis, which cannot derive any benefit from this institution; another is the case of an old man, who is suffering from nothing, but is simply a very old man. He is a man who, as I understand, has been a servant of the institution for many years, and is on that account allowed to remain.
1749. Mr. Wearne.] And these are six cases out of how many;—what number of beds are there in the hospital? 228; but I cannot tell whether they are all full or not.
1750. How many are there on your side? Half that number—114 on my side. Of the others, there may be many cases unfit to be in,—many incurables; but of these there is a large proportion who will derive benefit

T. H. Gillman, benefit from treatment, though they cannot hope to be cured, and I consider that such cases are fit for hospital treatment.

Esq., M.D. 1751. Mr. Metcalfe.] But that would not involve the necessity of keeping them here for months? It might or might not.

13 May, 1873.

1752. But is there not a rule that no patient shall be kept more than six weeks, and in urgent cases two months? Yes.

1753. President.] Are there not patients in the hospital here who might be just as advantageously to themselves treated in the other establishments of the Country? Two of the cases to which I have referred are of that class. One is the case of an old man, who was brought in by the police in such a state of extreme exhaustion that he could not be refused admission. He has since recovered, and is now recommended for admission into the Benevolent Asylum. Another is a similar case, which is also recommended for admission to the Benevolent Asylum on Friday next; and a third is this old man of whom I spoke, who is 102 years old, and is kept here in consequence of his long service.

1754. Mr. Ellis.] Have you paid any attention to the training of sisters and nurses? No, I give all my directions to the head nurse of the ward, and if she is there she accompanies me when I go round. The juniors I know very little about.

1755. Can you tell why it is that the complaints of the patients are not marked on their cards? I cannot. I have never had any complaints made to me, except as regards medicines not coming up.

1756. I mean the diseases;—why are not the diseases marked on the cards at the head of the patient's beds? I do not know. When I came here I found that there was no diagnosis of any disease on the patients tickets. I do not know why it was left off—whether there was any object in not putting it on the card. I have not made any innovation. I have been in the habit of putting the disease on the card in Melbourne, as soon as the disease was ascertainable.

1757. Do you not think it would be of great assistance to the sisters or head nurses if they were to know what the patients diseases were? I do not know that it would.

1758. Would it not make them more intelligent in carrying out the doctor's instructions? The nurses usually know very well what is wrong, and if they ever ask me what is wrong I always tell them. There are some cases in which it would act injuriously on the patient if he were to know the disease.

1759. In special cases? Yes.

1760. Do you approve of the present dietary scale? I cannot say that I exactly disapprove of it.

1761. Can you suggest any improvement in it? I think that it is extremely large, and in four and five diets no extras are allowed. (See Appendix B 3.)

1762. Mr. Couper.] Do you think them extravagant? No; I see in 4 and 5, extras are allowed, and of course these extras are left to the discretion of the medical officers. I don't think the discretion is abused. I have only seen champagne ordered once, and on that occasion it was done on the recommendation of several of the medical officers, who assembled in consultation.

1763. Was it given for a lengthened period? It was just after I came here, and I think the patient got it for a week.

1764. Mr. Wearne.] It was not ordered by one doctor? It was recommended by those who were in consultation.

1765. Mr. Metcalfe.] Do not the doctors order stimulants for the patients? Yes.

1766. For how long have they been ordered;—what is the longest time? A week.

1767. I thought they had been ordered for a longer period than that? No, not longer than that.

1768. I suppose if you considered it necessary you would give it for a longer time? Then they must give a fresh order.

1769. Mr. Wearne.] Then can the order be repeated on the following week? If the honorary thinks it advisable he repeats the dose, and gives a larger or a smaller dose, as the case may be.

1770. We understood you to say that it could be only given for a week? Yes. But the order can be repeated weekly for any number of weeks.

1771. So that if an honorary brings in his own patient he can give stimulants as long as he pleases? Yes.

1772. Mr. Metcalfe.] Has it ever struck you that the expenditure of the hospital as regards wine is large? No.

1773. President.] Does the manager bear a character for sobriety? I have not seen him under the influence of drink. I have not known him long, and I really do not know what character he may bear.

1774. Have you never heard such a thing alluded to or discussed? I have.

1775. Were the remarks favourable to his character or not? I cannot say; but I have heard remarks. I cannot say whether true or not, but I have heard persons say that he was sometimes under the influence of liquor.

1776. Is his manner not often confused and stupid? No. He is perhaps sometimes a little more argumentative than I care for, but I cannot attribute that to alcohol.

1777. Mr. Couper.] You are continually in his company? We meet at breakfast, luncheon, and dinner every day.

1778. Mr. Wearne.] At the same table? Yes, the same table.

1779. In your sitting-room? Yes.

1780. Mr. Goold.] Has it ever come to your knowledge that the patients do not get these stimulants which are ordered for them? No.

1781. Mr. Wearne.] It would come to your knowledge if they did not get them? I think so. They are very ready to complain about such things.

1782. Mr. Couper.] Has any patients suffering from acute rheumatism complained to you of the manner in which nurses have treated them? No. There was one case in which a complaint was made to me about the treatment of a nurse, and that was made by a man with a diseased brain, and he had I believe no foundation whatever for his complaint.

1783. No females have complained to you? None.

1784. And if there had been any causes of complaint they would have made their complaints to you? I think so. I do now recollect one complaint, by a female patient, but it was in reference to the cooking. I do not recollect any complaint being made about the nurses.

1785. Mr. Metcalfe.] You think that the cooking is good? As far as I have seen it is. I cannot speak with any confidence.

1786. Mr. Ellis.] Did you ever have any complaint? No, not to me, except in the cases I have just mentioned. T. H. Glliman,
Esq., M.D.
1787. Who is responsible for the medical stores? The dispenser I think. You mean the drugs I suppose?
1788. Yes. Does he furnish any account to show the quantities received and consumed? Every week. 13 May, 1873.
He writes out a list of such medicines as have been used during the week—that is, medicines which are out of the ordinary run of every-day prescriptions—and each list is signed by Dr. Halkett and myself, and sent to the house-committee at their weekly meeting.
1789. Is there anything to show the actual quantity received, as compared with the quantity consumed;—is there any check, in fact? I am not aware of it.
1790. There is no check as far as you are aware? None, as far as I am aware.
1791. Assuming then that things were misappropriated you could not tell? I could not tell. The out-patients I know nothing about.
1792. Have you any idea of the average expenditure for drugs? I have not. It would be rather difficult to ascertain whether any drugs were misappropriated, as the out-patients, as well as the in-patients, are all supplied from the dispensary here.
1793. Mr. Wearne.] Are the wines and spirits under the control of the dispenser? No, of the house steward.
1794. All the wines and spirits? Yes, so I understand.
1795. Mr. Ellis.] I see that the expenditure for drugs and surgical instruments is upwards of £1,200 a year? I am not in a position to say whether that amount is exorbitant or otherwise.
1796. Who has charge of the surgical instruments? Dr. Halkett.
1797. Mr. Wearne.] Could there be any check upon the issue of the medicines—is it possible to have a check—can you recommend anything different to the present system? I think it would be exceedingly difficult, and I can recommend no plan at the present moment.
1798. Is there any check upon the issue of the wines and spirits? I presume there is, but that would not come under my supervision at all.
1799. Suppose wine or spirit is recommended by a doctor, would it not come under your supervision? The patients only get the quantity ordered by the doctor—the number of ounces—and I presume that that is compared with the gross quantity on hand.
1800. And the prescriptions have to be taken out to ascertain what is the quantity consumed? No. For each patient there is a small card on which the doctor writes the order for wine or other stimulants, stating the number of ounces to be supplied daily, and the number of days that he wishes it supplied. That is taken to the house steward, who sends up the quantity ordered, and keeps the card as a check, which he has to produce to the manager, or to whomsoever has supervision over him.
1801. So that there might be a check in that way? Yes. I do not think there can be any difficulty about the consumption of wines and spirits, as the house steward's records would show the amount issued. The checking of the medicines issued would be a much more complicated matter.

WEDNESDAY, 14 MAY, 1873.

Members Present:—

WILLIAM CHARLES WINDEYER, Esq., PRESIDENT.

EYRE G. ELLIS, Esq.

MICHAEL METCALFE, Esq.

SAMUEL GOOLD, Esq.

CHARLES COWPER, JUNR., Esq.

JOSEPH WEARNE, Esq., M.P.

Laurence John Halkett, Esq., House Surgeon, Sydney Infirmary, called in and further examined:—

1802. Mr. Ellis.] What is the general sanatory condition of the hospital now? At the present time it is in a very fair condition;—on the whole very good indeed; but a few months ago we had some cases of erysipelas. L. J. Halkett,
Esq.
1803. As to the dormitory accommodation;—how is it? That is very good. It is superior to many hospitals in England in that respect—in the number of cubic feet allowed to each patient. 14 May, 1873.
1804. Mr. Metcalfe.] But it is not adequate to the requirements of the city? No, I have to turn away a good many every day.
1805. Mr. Ellis.] Would it be a convenience if the resident medical officer had the power of admitting and discharging patients? I have the power partially now.
1806. Would it be better if you had it completely? Yes, it is the custom in most English hospitals and in most Colonial hospitals that I am acquainted with.
1807. Do the honorary medical staff visit the hospital at stated hours every day? Yes, they generally come in the morning, but I don't know of any stated hour at all. Most of the work is done by lunch-time—1 o'clock.
1808. Mr. Metcalfe.] Do you know that the rules require the honorary staff to come at stated hours? No, I do not.
1809. Mr. Ellis.] Do you think it desirable that they should visit at stated hours? They should not all come at the same hour.
1810. No, but at stated hours, whatever they may be? Yes.
1811. President.] Do you find much inconvenience from their coming on a Sunday? No, not much, as it is my easy day.
1812. Mr. Cowper.] Is it not a fact that they perform operations on that day? Yes, minor operations they do, which they can do without the assistance of the staff—that is, those they can do with me alone. If they want more than that they do it on the Wednesday afternoon, except in a case of emergency.
1813. Mr. Ellis.] Has it been the practice since you have been here to mark the patient's disease on the card at the head of the bed? No, it has not been done here. I have done it occasionally for my own information, but not as a rule.
1814. Do you know why the rule has been discontinued? I do not know. It was discontinued before I came.

- L. J. Halkett, 1815. President.] Is it the practice in the English hospitals to mark the disease on the patient's card?
Esq. Not as a rule. It is often difficult to make a diagnosis for some time.
1816. But those are exceptional cases? Yes; about 30 per cent. of the cases, I should think, cannot be easily diagnosed.
- 14 May, 1873. 1817. In other cases it is usual? No, not always.
1818. Mr. Ellis.] In cases where the diagnosis is reasonably established there would be no objection to it? Not at all. They mostly have blank spaces on the card for the disease, but it is seldom that it is used at all.
1819. Do you know anything as to the number of the Board of Management? No, I know nothing of that.
1820. With reference to some suggestions of Miss Nightingale, that have been handed in to the Commission, I wish to have your opinion. For instance, Miss Nightingale says: "Vest the charge of financial matters, the general supervision, and the whole administration of the Infirmary in a Board or committee; that is, in the officer who is responsible to that Board or committee. Vest the whole responsibility for nursing, internal management, for discipline and training (if there be a training school) of nurses, in the one female head of the nursing staff, whatever she is called." Would you approve of that arrangement? Yes, I should.
1821. Do you think that she should have the engagement and dismissal of the nurses under her? The lady superintendent?
1822. Yes? Yes, I think so.
1823. She should have the right to engage and dismiss them, in order to secure due obedience? Yes.
1824. And the manager should have the same powers in regard to those under him? Yes.
1825. She being responsible to the committee, and those under her being responsible to her? Yes.
1826. Mr. Metcalfe.] Do you mean that there should be two heads, each of whom should order a part of the servants? No; I believe there should be one head.
1827. Who should have full control of all the servants attached to the institution? Yes, there should be one head.
1828. There must be a manifest inconvenience if the lady superintendent requires assistance from some man, that she should be obliged to go to the manager to order the man to do it? Yes, I think it would be a great inconvenience, unless the two heads were working in unison.
1829. Have you seen any examples of that inconvenience? No, they do not come under my notice.
1830. President.] Would you explain to us, if you please, the process of this admission of patients? This document (See Appendix B) is a governor's letter. The patient brings this document to the manager, who takes it, and gives him a document like this—a blank admission ticket this is. (See Appendix B 1.) This paper is presented to the honorary, if present, or if not, to me, and if I admit the patient I fill in these particulars. If there is no bed I mark it so on the ticket.
1831. And what is this third paper? This is an order on the Colonial Secretary. (See Appendix B 2.)
1832. Can you tell us how many persons during the last month were refused admission, on the ground that there was no bed for them, and who were otherwise eligible? No, I cannot; the manager keeps the book.
1833. Can you not tell from these papers? I could give an estimate from them.
1834. But if all the papers are filed here, can you not tell from them exactly? No, sometimes the manager takes them off. I cannot say that all the papers are here.
1835. In the case of a patient being admitted on the order of the Colonial Secretary, the person recommending him signs that form? Yes, you get these from the manager. Any respectable householder can get them. Sometimes one of the honorary staff fills them up and then they are taken to the manager; and that (B 2) does instead of this (B.)
1836. Does it not appear that any persons can make use of this power without restriction, and that this system therefore offers a premium to people not to become subscribers? Yes, it might lead to that.
1837. Are these forms (B 2) issued in any quantity? Yes, in any quantity. That is, not addressed to the manager, but to the Colonial Secretary, and then he gives an order for a Government patient.
1838. Mr. Cowper.] About the prescriptions—do you think the doctors are extravagant in ordering fowl, champagne, and things of that kind, for the patients? No, not on my side of the house.
1839. But there has been champagne ordered? Yes, I remember a case, but it was not on my side.
1840. President.] You believe that there has been no extravagance? No. I believe there has been no extravagance.
1841. Mr. Cowper.] What is the dietary scale? We have five diets.
1842. What extras do you allow? Well, on No. 4 and 5 diets you can give any extras you please. You can order a patient anything you like.
1843. Have you any dietary scales printed? Yes, I keep one for my own use, and there are several in the wards.
1844. Can you produce one of these diet scales for the use of the Commission? Certainly. (Diet scale handed in. See Appendix B 3.)
1845. President.] This is the diet scale? Yes, and with these two diets, No. 4 and No. 5, you can give any extras you like.
1846. According to the requirements of the case? Yes.
1847. Mr. Cowper.] Will you explain the diets to us;—what is No. 1? Full diet for a strong healthy man. No. 1 allows meat for breakfast; No. 2 is the ordinary house diet, and is the same as No. 1, except that there is less meat, and no meat given for breakfast. No. 2 is for ordinary people in average health. The great difference between 1 and 2 is that with 1 you get meat for breakfast, and with 2 you only get tea and bread and butter. In No. 1 too you get 8 ounces meat for dinner, and in 2 only 6 ounces,—these are the only differences.
1848. Point out the differences between the other diets? No. 3 is generally used for children. The quantities are reduced. There is less butter and tea for breakfast, and only 4 ounces of meat for dinner; only 4 ounces vegetables, and 12 ounces of soup, instead of 16, as in the other diets. No. 4 differs from No. 3 altogether. There is nothing but 4 ounces of bread and 12 ounces of tea for breakfast. It is a diet of nothing but bread and tea, and we can give any extras we like with it—either fish or game, or anything you like.

1849. Mr. Ellis.] For what class of patients is that? For people who are very ill; they would get as extras, beef-tea and things of that kind. The only difference between No. 4 and No. 5 is, that in 5 you give milk instead of tea, and with 5 also you can give any extras you like.
1850. Mr. Cowper.] What is the difference between No. 5 and No. 6? There are only five diets.
1851. And with No. 5 you can give any extras you like? With 4 and 5 you can; with the others you can only give what is laid down.
1852. President.] The extras are all things which are not enumerated in this list? Yes; fish, game, and preserves, and anything of that kind.
1853. Mr. Cowper.] Are not surgical cases the cases in which patients will generally require these extras? Yes.
1854. There is a patient on your side suffering from a broken arm—a bad case? Yes; an un-united fracture.
1855. Is that not a case which will require extras? Yes, he was on No. 5 diet, and his extra diet to-day was an extra pint of milk, and strong beef-tea.
1856. You have never known champagne to be given to a patient on your side? No, never.
1857. Mr. Wearne.] Who decides as to the diet;—the honorary medical officer? We both do it; we both have that power.
1858. And you consult together as to what shall be given? Yes.
1859. President.] Is it your duty, as a matter of routine, to see every surgical case in the hospital every day? I do see them once a day, and I go round the wards every night and ask the nurse if anything is wanted by any of the patients, but I do not go to see every patient at night.
1860. Who, in your opinion, should admit patients into the Infirmary;—the honorary staff or some one who is always on the premises? I was always brought up to understand that the resident medical officers should admit.
1861. Singly, or in conjunction with each other? The house surgeon admits surgical cases, and the house physician, medical cases.
1862. Do you think that would be an improvement on the present arrangement? I believe it would be. It is found to work better in the London hospitals and in the provincial hospitals, and I believe in most Colonial hospitals too.
1863. Do you approve of each medical officer having his own patients, so that each has his own wards, or would it be better for all to be kept together? Surgical cases should be kept separate from medical cases. They are all separate in this hospital, except in this J ward, which used to be a convalescent ward, but we had not space enough to keep it as a convalescent ward, so we use one side of it for medical cases and the other side for surgical cases.
1864. The abuses which are complained of are in the surgical wards? As far as regards the blocking up of beds?
1865. Yes? Yes, they are.
1866. If you had the power of admitting, and the power of putting patients were you chose, that would be obviated? No, if I admitted anybody this week, I must admit them under Dr. Bedford. I must admit under the doctor of the week, whoever he may be.
1867. What alteration would you suggest for the purpose of obviating the evil? You might assign beds equally to each doctor; say there are 100 surgical beds, give each doctor twenty-five.
1868. And you would have the power of putting the patients wherever you pleased? Of course if a bed was empty a patient coming in would occupy it.
1869. Would that be an improvement? Yes, but I believe it was tried here and failed.
1870. What was the reason that it failed? I cannot say.
1871. Were you here when the change was made? No, the present system was in vogue when I came.
1872. Mr. Gould.] What was the practice in the hospital that you came from? Each honorary surgeon had one side of a ward. There were two wards, and so each had the same number of beds; and there were never any complaints.
1873. Who discharged patients? The resident medical officer. The honorary very seldom did so, but they might do it occasionally.
1874. Here the honorary only discharges the patients? Yes. I have no power to discharge any patient, except for insubordination, or at his own request.
1875. In that respect this hospital differs from the one you were acquainted with? Yes.
1876. Mr. Ellis.] Can you say why that system of distributing the beds failed? No, I cannot say.
1877. How could it fail if the patients were allotted to each medical officer? The system works well on the physicians' side of the house; but I believe it was tried on the surgical side of the house and did not succeed. So I am told.
1878. Why? I have no idea.
1879. You would not be likely to put too many cases in upon one gentlemen? A man might do such a thing.
1880. You would distribute the beds fairly, I suppose? Yes; but they would be assigned by the committee.
1881. President.] Supposing there were 100 beds, and twenty-five of them were given to each doctor? That is what has been done on the physicians' side—so many beds have been given to each doctor.
1882. And why cannot the surgeons' beds be divided in the same way? I see no reason why it should fail, but I was told that it was a failure here.
1883. Mr. Cowper.] The patients admitted this week would be attended by Dr. Fortescue? No. Dr. Bedford attends his patients all through, and a patient of Dr. Bedford's would remain Dr. Bedford's patient until he was dismissed.
1884. He attends them regularly throughout? Yes; never changes.
1885. Mr. Gould.] And he alone can deal with them? Yes; I cannot dismiss.
1886. Mr. Cowper.] You understand that you have the power to dismiss a patient for insubordination? Yes, I have, according to the rules.
1887. President.] Do you not think it is a proper thing to keep, if possible, an empty bed in the accident ward? Yes; there should be more than one—there should be at least three or four. I have sometimes had four extra beds put up.

L. J. Halkett,
Esq.
14 May, 1873.

- L. J. Halkett, 1888. What does that arise from? The hospital is so small. I have had ten people applying, out of which perhaps four were urgent cases, at once. We have had to take them in, or turn them out to die in the streets.
- Esq. 1889. Is it the practice that patients are sometimes sent down to the accident ward, to enable doctors to get beds? No, I have not permitted that. I may have sent a patient from the accident ward to another ward until a bed is ready for him.
- 14 May, 1873. 1890. Instances of that kind have been given to us, of patients having been sent into the accident ward from other wards? No, I do not remember any such instances.
1891. Mr. Wearne.] At any rate it does not frequently occur? No, I do not remember any instances of it; at all events it certainly does not frequently happen.
1892. President.] Do they remain in the accident ward when there is no necessity for them to remain there? Yes, that may be the case, but they are not brought in from other wards.
1893. Do you think that more accident beds should be reserved in the hospital? Yes, there would be enough if we stuck to the rule, but as it is, there are sometimes three or four extra beds instead of empty ones.
1894. Are these extra beds filled with accident cases or other cases? Very often I put up an extra bed for an accident case—I am compelled to do so; but sometimes they take a man into the ward that is not an accident case, but then at night a man may break his thigh, and I am bound to take him in, and if there is no bed for him there must be one put up. In Easter week I had four extra beds in the ward.
1895. Do these accident cases increase at holiday times? Yes.
1896. Are they caused generally by drunkenness? Yes.
1897. Mr. Gould.] How far do you think that drunkenness is the cause of the diseases of patients in the Infirmary, from your observation? I can speak only of surgical cases; those are all I know anything of.
1898. Of course it is well known that drunkenness has a good deal to do with disease;—how far is it the case with the diseases in the Infirmary? Leaving out instances of drunkenness as the occasion of a good many accidents, and there are surgical cases which are not the result of accidents, there is not a large proportion; more are caused by syphilis.
1899. Do you think that is brought on by the drunken habits of the people? No, not so much as I have seen in other places; but in the accidents there are a large proportion caused by drunkenness.
1900. Are your cases mostly syphilitic? Yes, there is a large proportion. There is a good deal of syphilis in this country.
1901. President.] Do you think the proportion is larger than is to be found in the large seaport towns of England? No, not larger.
1902. The proportion, as compared with the provincial towns of England, is large, but not as compared with the seaport towns? It is not larger than other seaport towns.
1903. Mr. Wearne.] What number of syphilitic cases are there? I should think that 25 per cent. of my patients are of that class—male and female; I mean constitutional syphilis—not the primary thing.
1904. Are the cases most numerous among males or females? They are about equally distributed I think.
1905. Mr. Metcalfe.] The rules say, that one of the honorary officers shall attend every morning at 11 o'clock? I do not remember the rule.
1906. I will read the rule: "One honorary physician and one honorary surgeon shall attend daily (in weekly rotation) at 11 a.m., for the selection of patients to occupy vacant beds?" That is the physician for the week. They usually attend to that, but not all of them.
1907. But are they always here? No, they are not, and that is the reason why the committee passed a by-law giving me power to admit.
1908. Do they attend very regularly? No, as a rule.
1909. Do you find any inconvenience from that? No, because I have power to do the work.
1910. Mr. Wearne.] Do they attend when it is not their week? Yes, they come as often as they like.
1911. Do you think that they attend to their patients? Yes, I think so, pretty well. They differ so much. Some honoraries come every day, and others come about three times a week.
1912. Mr. Metcalfe.] That is all they are required to do. They are required to attend three times a week at the hours specified by the Board? There are no hours specified—you will find that there are several alterations of those rules. Those were never passed. They were Mr. Josephson's resolutions, which were never passed.
1913. Mr. Ellis.] As the resident medical officer, is it not a part of your duty to accompany the honorary round? With the honorary medical officer for the week I always go round, and often with the others as well.
1914. If they don't attend regularly then, their neglect must put you to inconvenience? No; if the honorary does not come I go round by myself.
1915. And then you don't have to go round afterwards in case he comes after you have been round? Well, if I happen to be on the place and doing nothing, I go round again, but there is no rule to compel me to do so.
1916. Mr. Cowper.] Does not the irregularity of their attendance cause the staff to have additional work thrown on them, and does it not put you to inconvenience? Yes, I have been put to inconvenience by their coming at irregular hours—sometimes they come at meal-times.
1917. And that is an inconvenience to the nurses? Yes, they have complained of it.
1918. President.] They have complained to you? No; not complained to me; but I have heard them grumbling about it. It makes a rush of work when they are carving the dinners, and so on. I never had a formal complaint.
1919. Mr. Wearne.] Do you consider the female nurses an improvement upon the old system? I consider the present system could hardly be improved on the whole. It is first-rate. You can hardly improve it as far as the sisters are concerned.
1920. Do you not think there should be some male wardsmen? No; of course you want a kind of porter. These women are not strong enough to lift a man off a bed, or take him into the operating-room. They can't do it, and it is not their duty to it, neither is it a medical man's duty; and we have to get a bathman, anyone we can press into the service. In the English hospitals there is always an operation-room porter to do that kind of work, but here there is nothing of the kind. Sometimes it is a great exertion to get a heavy sick person into the place. It is very awkward to have to carry a patient all round from the front here, perhaps to the south wing, and then up stairs there. There should be a chair for carrying patients.

1921. You think that one wardsman, a sort of labouring man, should be employed? Yes, a labouring man L. J. Halkett, you may say. Not a nurse at all. A man to do the heavy work. Esq.

1922. President.] Have you no contrivance for carrying a patient round from the front to the back? No, they come in a cab perhaps, and we can get the cab up to the steps, and then the patient must be carried. 14 May, 1873.
There is no chair, such as I have seen in all other hospitals, a chair like an old-fashioned sedan chair, without a top.

1923. Mr. Cowper.] Can you mention anything else of that kind that is wanted? Nothing more of that kind; but there is great inconvenience from the want of water from half-past 2 o'clock in the afternoon till about 6 p.m., or after. If a man comes in after that time with a broken head—an out-door patient perhaps may come—and there is no water to clean anything in the receiving-room, we have sometimes to send away the man with his face all bloody, and he has to walk down the street in that condition. I have my hands all over blood, and the man has to go out with his head all bloody, and attracting the notice of the people in the street.

1924. There is no convenience there for holding water? No, nothing at all but a small basin that a man cannot wash his head in. A little blood makes a mess of a great deal of water, and of course the little we have then is dirtied at once.

1925. Mr. Goold.] And is this want of water a matter of daily occurrence? It is of very frequent occurrence—almost daily. From now until about 6 o'clock—say from 3 to 5.30—I have not had a drop of water.

1926. Mr. Ellis.] As the rules stand now the honorary physicians and surgeons can attend at any hour they like? I think so, except the admitting surgeon or physician, who comes about mid-day.

1927. That is to admit patients? Yes.

1928. But the others can come at any hour they like? Yes.

1929. Mr. Metcalfe.] But they are supposed to come at 11 o'clock—between 11 and 1.15—and they sign an appearance-book, I think? No, they do not sign that book. That is kept by the doorkeeper—the porter—and when he sees a surgeon come in he looks at the clock and enters the time of arrival in the book. But there is no rule that they shall come at any hour, except the one who admits the patients.

1930. Mr. Ellis.] How is he bound? By rule.

1931. But he comes for selecting patients—not to attend to them? Yes, but he goes round then. He never comes twice a day. I may say here that there is a great want of couches and fittings in the receiving-room. There is no facility for examining a patient there. If warm water is wanted there is frequently no possibility of getting it; and in the afternoon there is no possibility of even getting cold water.

1932. President.] What fittings should there be? There is only one sofa for the joint use of Dr. Gillman and myself, and that is an old ramshackle thing. There is no facility for examining patients. You cannot, with decency or satisfaction to yourself, examine the patients down there. It is badly situated. From the dispensary you can see all that is going on, and people can see all that takes place if you are examining a woman. Indeed it is a farce examining a patient down there. We just give a superficial examination, and pass them into the wards.

1933. Is there anything else you would like to mention? No, except that the operating-room is inadequate for its purpose.

1934. In what respect? It is too small, and the wet comes in. If you leave an instrument there a short time it will be spoiled with rust.

1935. How is the hospital found with instruments? It was very badly off until they got that case. It was got about eighteen months ago—and there are still many things wanted. The honorary staff have often to bring their own instruments, or do without. There is a difficulty in procuring instruments in this country.

1936. There is nothing to prevent their importing them? Nothing at all. I wrote about four months ago, when I was doing double duty, telling the committee that their instruments were not so first rate as they thought they were, and that they were rapidly deteriorating from not being looked after. Well, my letter was handed about from house committee to Board, and house committee again, and to the honorary staff, and nothing was done until about a fortnight ago, when there was a meeting of the honorary staff, and they inspected these instruments, and are going to report to the committee. We have no microscope in this institution. It is many months ago since I reported that the microscope was falling to pieces.

1937. In a properly found institution a microscope is essential;—is it not? Yes, it is essential. I sent it down to MacDonald, and he wrote to say that it had gone completely beyond "his power to mend it."

1938. Do you not think that such a matter as that should be under your control? Yes, it would be much better, but I can order nothing. If I want a thermometer, or a dozen of surgeon's needles, which cost half a crown, I have to requisition for them. I have no power to get anything.

1939. Does that system occasion delay? Yes, great delay. This microscope has been away for five months I think. It is utterly useless. I think that they paid eighty guineas for it a few months ago.

1940. And now it is perfectly useless? Yes, from want of repair—the rack and pinions are out of order. I think that before I came it received rather rough usage.

1941. In whose charge was it? In my charge, but it was out of order when I came, and I never used it. I do not know where the microscope is now. It has completely gone out of my care. It was sent down to MacDonald about five months ago.

1942. By whom? By order of the committee. MacDonald said he would have nothing to do with it.

1943. Who gave directions about it? The messenger took it down, and MacDonald wrote and asked me to come down, and I pulled it to pieces with him to see what state it was in. I did so, and I saw what a state it was in, and I wrote to the committee and told them that the only way was to send it Home to the makers in England.

1944. Was it a good instrument? Yes, a first-class instrument originally. I should think a 120-guinea instrument.

Members Present:—

WILLIAM CHARLES WINDEYER, Esq., PRESIDENT.

SAMUEL GOOLD, Esq.

MICHAEL METCALFE, Esq.

EYRE G. ELLIS, Esq.

CHARLES COWPER, JUN., Esq.

Edward Hinvest, Second Dispenser, Sydney Infirmary, called in and examined:—

- Mr. E. Hinvest.
15 May, 1873.
1945. President.] What office do you hold in the Sydney Infirmary? I am assistant dispenser.
1946. How long have you been there? A little over six months.
1947. What salary do you receive? £100 a-year.
1948. Do you live on the premises? I get my food there, and live outside.
1949. What are your hours of attendance? I commence work at 9 o'clock in the morning, and leave after the doctors have performed their rounds at night.
1950. What time is that? Between half past 7 and 8 I generally leave; it is according to the work.
1951. Who is your superior officer? Mr. Park is the other dispenser.
1952. Do you take your directions from him? Well, no, there are hardly any directions. I take my directions from the doctors principally, if there are any to be given.
1953. But suppose something arises with reference to the dispensing? I take directions from the doctors.
1954. Which doctors? The resident medical staff.
1955. Were you ever employed in an institution such as this before? Not in an Infirmary, but I have dispensed in an Infirmary, though I was not employed there.
1956. What Infirmary? The Royal Infirmary of Edinburgh.
1957. How long were you there? I was not employed there; I used to go just for pleasure.
1958. How came you to do that? I was studying medicine there.
1959. Have you been in private employment as a dispenser? No, I have not been in anyone's employ, but I have dispensed medicine at the Dispensary in Edinburgh.
1960. How long were you there? For over six months. I used to go occasionally during the three years I was there to dispense at the Infirmary, as I knew the dispenser there well.
1961. Then you were engaged at it off and on for several years? Yes.
1962. By what time are the prescriptions generally sent down and the medicines sent up to the wards? If the baskets are down ready for us we commence work at 9 o'clock in the morning, and they are all in the wards by half-past 10. The first done are sent up first; but whether or no they are generally all up by half-past 10, and then the visiting staff come, and the cards come down as they prescribe. Sometimes the visiting staff come in late, and we get the cards late, but they are sent up as soon as possible.
1963. Is there any rule as to the time when medicines must be sent into the wards? No, but the baskets are always made up first.
1964. What are the baskets? The bottles are placed in baskets and sent down to the dispensary. There are six or seven baskets for the whole Institution.
1965. Then these are the medicines in which no change has been made since the previous day? Yes.
1966. How late are the honorary staff in the habit of coming? Well, they are generally all in before 1 or 2 o'clock, but I have known one to come in as late as 6 or 7 at night.
1967. But that is a rare case? Yes, that is very rare.
1968. As a rule all the medicines are in the wards by 2 or 3 o'clock? Yes, and the cards are done.
1969. And all the medicine sent up? As soon as possible the principal bulk of the medicines are generally in the wards before we go to dinner (1.30 p.m.)
1970. By what time are the medicines generally in the wards, leaving out these exceptional cases when the doctors come late? They are, as a rule, principally all up before 3 o'clock.
1971. Have you ever had complaints made that medicines have not been sent up which have been ordered? Yes, we have. For instance, cards may be delayed in the wards, and by the nurses. Our window is facing the place, and we can see the doctors come in, and we have sent up the boys particularly after the visiting surgeons have come to see whether anything is required. I have told the boy to go round and pick up the cards, and perhaps when he goes up the nurse will not look for the cards. I have known a doctor give an order on a card at night and it has not come in until the next morning.
1972. And does the blame of that delay rest upon the nurses? Sometimes upon the nurses, sometimes upon the boys that bring down the cards to us.
1973. Have not the nurses complained that when the cards have been sent down, the medicine has not been sent up? Often the cards have been sent down and the medicine has gone up, and the nurses have complained that the medicine has not gone up, and it has been up the morning before. There was a case yesterday morning, in which I sent up the medicine myself, and they complained that it was not sent up. The mistakes occur through the carelessness of the boys and the nurses.
1974. What age are these boys? They are too young. Our boy is about 12 years of age, and the other is about 9 or 10. These two boys we have now are two boys taken from the wards—they were patients.
1975. Who were they appointed by? The manager, I think.
1976. Is there not a regular place in each ward where the medicine is to be taken to? Yes. I believe that in the lobbies there are tables, and they should put the medicines down on the tables.
1977. Then if the medicines were put there there should be no difficulty in the nurses finding them? But sometimes they are taken into the wrong wards. Sometimes medicine intended for the men's wards will be taken to the women's wards by the boys in mistake. I sometimes am inclined to think that the boys cannot read.
1978. That accounts for the mistakes? Yes.
1979. Mr. Metcalfe.] Are the bottles marked with the name of the patients for whom they are intended? Yes. There is first the ward and then the name of the patient.
1980. Mr. Goold.] Do you know whether these boys can read? Yes, I think that they can.
1981. Should you not be sure? Yes, they can read, but from the mistakes they make you would think they could not.

1982. Mr. Metcalfe.] You have not had a medical education? Yes, I studied medicine in Edinburgh for three years.
1983. I understood you to say that you had been merely an amateur dispenser? No, I have a thorough knowledge of medicine. I came out here for the benefit of my health.
1984. President.] You say the medicine is sent up by half-past 10 in the morning? Yes, the baskets are sent up by that time.
1985. But the medical staff do not come in until 11? But these are the baskets containing the medicines to be repeated.
1986. And the new medicines are not made up until the doctors have come? Not until we get the cards.
1987. Then any accident as to the patients not getting the medicine is entirely attributable to the boys? Either the boys or the nurses.
1988. Have you a sufficient supply of water for the dispensary? No, sometimes the water goes off at 3 o'clock, and we are very much put about for want of it.
1989. Have you a tank? No, the water goes off sometimes, and we have twenty or thirty out-door patients to attend to; and we have to send a boy to the other end of the Infirmary for water.
1990. Mr. Metcalfe.] I suppose it is often necessary to wash your hands? Yes, it is, but we can't do it. I have come out now without washing my hands.
1991. President.] I suppose the water is laid on there? Yes, there is one tap.
1992. This turning off of the water is, I suppose, a constant occurrence? Yes, it occurs every day.
1993. Mr. Cowper.] It is off in the afternoon? It is never on until half-past 6 o'clock.
1994. Mr. Ellis.] What is done with the cards when they are sent down to the dispensary? After we have done with them they go to the house steward, Mr. Jones.
1995. In order that he may make up the diets from them? Yes.
1996. Do you keep a copy of the prescriptions in the dispensary? No.
1997. No prescription-book? No. Whatever medicines are ordered the prescription is written on the label on the bottle.
1998. What becomes of the cards? They go back to the patient's bed.
1999. But the prescriptions may be changed from day to day? There is a sheet on the card, and when that sheet is full they put another on top of it.
2000. What becomes of them when a patient is discharged? They go to the doctors or to the manager, I cannot exactly say which. I know I have sent patients to get their medicine ordered for them, and I have sent them to the doctors for their cards.
2001. President.] Suppose a patient died, and an investigation took place as to the course of medicine he took for two months during which time the medicine was constantly changed, would there be any mode of showing what he took? Yes; it would be on the card.
2002. Mr. Metcalfe.] What becomes of the cards? They are kept I know. I think they are kept in the doctors' room.
2003. Mr. Gould.] They are taken off the board and filed? Yes; after the patient is discharged.
2004. Mr. Ellis.] As there is no prescription-book it is quite impossible for the dispensers to say at the end of the month how much medicine has been consumed? Quite impossible. You cannot tell how many times the medicine is changed in any patient's case.
2005. You have nothing to show what medicine is dispensed? No; you could not tell that.
2006. Does the manager who keeps these cards ever submit them to the dispensers with a view of having the stock taken? No.
2007. President.] Has there been any stock-taking since you have been there? Yes.
2008. Mr. Ellis.] How is the stock taken? What we have in hand is ascertained.
2009. Is that entered in any book? Yes.
2010. Would that book show what has been used? I do not know. Mr. Park attends to these books; all I know is that there was a stock-taking, because I helped him to take it.
2011. Mr. Metcalfe.] How did you do it? By putting down everything we had in the place.
2012. But what you have is only in bottles and small jars on the shelves? No; there is a small store where we keep things when we take them out of the cases.
2013. I thought the storekeeper issued them to you? No; we take them out ourselves from the store.
2014. Then the packages are put in your charge? Yes.
2015. Mr. Gould.] Who is responsible for the medical stores;—do you know? Well, I suppose we are responsible.
2016. Who is responsible for the drugs in bulk as they are taken from the shop? Well, I suppose we are, for we have the cases, and no one else has a right to go into the store, except the manager.
2017. Mr. Metcalfe.] You have to make prescriptions up every day for the out-door patients? Yes.
2018. How many, on an average, are made up daily for them? On an average there are forty or fifty prescriptions made up daily for out-patients at the Infirmary, and at the out-door dispensary in Regent-street, where Mr. Park is now. One of us goes there every day. We leave the Infirmary at a quarter to 3, because the district surgeon is there at 3 o'clock, and we get back to the Infirmary about half-past 5.
2019. Mr. Ellis.] Do the out-door patients supply their own bottles? Yes.
2020. Mr. Gould.] You go out to Regent-street to get the prescriptions of the district surgeon? Yes; we take them up out there; there is a small dispensary there.
2021. Where do you get the drugs from for that dispensary? We get them from the Infirmary as we require them. We keep no stock there.
2022. President.] How do you know what you may require? We know from the day previous what we run short of.
2023. Do you make up the drugs in the Infirmary? No; out at Regent-street; we have what we require there.
2024. Then you keep some stock out there? Yes, a small stock, but not an abundance of things—only enough for a little chemist's shop; and if we run short of anything we take out a little with us from the Infirmary.
2025. Mr. Ellis.] Under whose authority do you do that? No one's.

Mr.
E. Hinest.
15 May, 1873

- Mr. E. Hinvest.
15 May, 1873.
2026. You use your own discretion? Yes. For instance, Mr. Park is out there to-day, and if there is anything running short he will say to me to-morrow, "You had better take out such a thing," and of course I would take it out.
2027. What sort of a place is this? It is a small place; it is a house. A person who takes charge of it lives upstairs.
2028. Mr. Cowper.] Is this person paid to look after the place? I cannot say.
2029. Is it a man or a woman? There is a family there—a person with a couple of children.
2030. President.] Are they in any way employed by the Infirmary? I cannot say. I think he is a clerk; I think so.
2031. Mr. Ellis.] Is it usual in dispensaries to keep a prescription-book? Yes; but not where the prescription is written on the bottle.
2032. Every prescription is? No, merely the directions.
2033. But suppose I go to Mr. Watt, he could produce any prescription that I had had made up at his establishment? Yes; but these prescriptions are written on the bottles and on the cards as well.
2034. President.] Is there any object in having the prescriptions on the bottles? Yes; we can then see what to make up by looking at the bottles, for the prescriptions are on the bottles.
2035. Mr. Goold.] Is that the practice in Edinburgh? Yes, it is.
2036. What was the practice there with regard to the cards;—do you know whether they were always kept at the patients' beds, or were they removed so that the prescriptions could be made up from them? The prescriptions were written in books which were in charge of the nurses of the wards, who took them to the dispensary. At the head of the patients' beds were fixed cards, with their numbers, name, age, and disease, which remained until they left.
2037. You are aware that there is some difficulty caused by the removal of the cards from the wards; there have been complaints made? Of the time they are kept from the wards?
2038. Yes? They come to us first, and then go to Mr. Jones.
2039. I want to know whether the same plan is adopted in Edinburgh? I cannot say whether they go to the storekeeper there or not. The practice has not been carried on here very long.
2040. On these cards there is the diet and the prescription? Yes; with the bottom marked off in two rows for the medicines.
2041. You are aware that there has been some inconvenience caused by these cards being taken from the heads of the beds? Most likely; they are away some time, as they go from us to Mr. Jones.
2042. Is the same practice adopted in Edinburgh? I cannot say with reference to the stores—the diets.
2044. On whose order are they obtained from you? The sisters. They have a small book, and they write in this book what they require, and send one of the nurses for it. The nurse comes down and gets whatever is required,—either lint or tow or cotton wool.
2045. Without any reference to anyone else? Yes.
2046. They state the quantity? Yes; any quantity.
2047. Mr. Cowper.] Can they get it at once? Yes.
2048. Do they not apply to anybody—to the manager? No; not to the manager.
2049. Or the committee? No; in the accident ward they can have it at any time without writing.
2050. Mr. Ellis.] What becomes of the books? I cannot say.
2051. Did you enter anything from these books? No.
2052. In fact there is nothing to show what goes out of the dispensary? We have a book to show what we get out of the stores.
2053. Mr. Metcalfe.] You have no means of knowing what should be left in the packages that come from England. Suppose you had a case of senna, and took some out, can you tell how much is left? Yes.
2054. How can you tell? If we take out so much we should know what was left.
2055. Would you enter what you took out in a book? Yes.
2056. Mr. Ellis.] What book would you enter it in? A small book.
2057. What becomes of that book? From that it is entered in a larger book.
2058. Suppose I came and asked you how much lint you issued last week could you tell me by referring to any book? There is no account of the medicines dispensed.
2059. You said that you assisted in taking stock the last time? Yes.
2060. Do you remember whether the prescriptions on the cards were in any way compared with the quantities of goods in the dispensary? No; you could not do that. If there is a bottle of medicine ordered, it may contain a great number of ingredients, and we do not know how many times it has been made up. It may come down for months.
2062. Do you know of the rule having been broken through and the lady superintendent complaining about it? What rule is that?
2063. That these things should be sent up once a week? I heard something about that—about linseed meal going into the wards. Mr. Park proposed that they should have a week's supply of linseed meal in the wards where it was required. It appears from the manager that it got wasted, and he said it was only to be taken there when it was required.
2064. And so they went on from hand to mouth getting it as they required it? Yes.
2065. The rule was that they should have a week's supply? Yes.
2066. And this rule was interfered with by the manager on the ground that the linseed meal was wasted? Yes; that is what I have heard, and it has never been sent up in quantities since.
2067. What is your age? I am 23 the 12th of July next.

Mr.

Mr. Joseph Jones, House Steward, Sydney Infirmary, called in and examined:—

2068. President.] You are the house steward of the Sydney Infirmary? Yes.
2069. What are your emoluments? £100 a year, with an allowance of £24 for lodgings.
2070. Do you board on the premises? Yes.
2071. How long have you held the situation? Six years, I think, next June.
2072. What are your hours of attendance? From 7 in the morning until the duties are finished in the evening.
2073. What time is that generally? It is generally about 6 o'clock.
2074. Have you anyone to assist you in the store? Only a boy—a little boy.
2075. Were you in the position before the manager came to the Institution? No.
2076. Were you there before the lady superintendent came? Yes.
2077. Could you tell us what your duties are if you please? The principal duties are receiving and issuing all stores which come in during the day—the provisions only. I have nothing to do with the wearing apparel, or anything of that kind. That is in the hands of the lady superintendent, with the exception of the bedding and such like, which is received into the stores.
2078. Then you look after all the stores, except the clothing and the medical stores? Yes; I have had some drugs in my stores at times; that was when there was no store accommodation for the chemists.
2079. But now the medical stores are entirely out of your control? Yes.
2080. Will you tell us what your daily routine of duty is? I come in the morning, and generally the first thing is to issue the stores for what may be required for breakfast that has not been issued on the previous evening; and receiving in general the bread that comes first, and then the meat. Of course the meat is not received into the stores, but at the cook-house, for the daily consumption.
2081. That does not make up the whole of your day's work, I suppose? And then any other stores are issued which may be required for the daily consumption. Such things as eggs, bread, and sugar, which are generally issued by me before I go to breakfast, so that the cook may proceed with his work previous to my coming back again; because, generally, while at breakfast they get things prepared and have them ready, which is of some importance to them to enable them to get through their day's work.
2082. Mr. Cowper.] He begins to prepare for the day? There is one particular thing that I may mention, for instance, the puddings ordered for the patients, which generally consist of rice puddings, bread puddings, or sago puddings; it is necessary that they should be made early, and cooked early, so that they may not interfere with the cook's other work, for there is such a number of them.
2083. President.] By what are you guided as to the quantity of stores you issue? By my programmes.
2084. Are these the patients' cards? No, that is a distinct thing; that is the tangible order of the surgeon, or the physician, as the case may be.
2085. What then are the programmes to which you allude? They are four programmes that I have and that I keep in my possession until the meal comes on, when I issue them to the cook, so that he may issue the provisions or diets, whatever they may be, to the different wards for which they are intended.
2086. Mr. Cowper.] Are they printed forms? Yes.
2087. And you fill them up daily? Yes, I fill them up, not daily if you can understand —
2088. Mr. Ellis.] Who sends them to you? They are what I compile myself from the orders of the surgeons and physicians, so that I can tell what is to go to the head nurses.
2089. President.] What are these programmes made up from? From the diet cards, the orders of the surgeons and physicians.
2090. How long have you been in the habit of making out these programmes? Ever since I have been in the establishment.
2091. Have you never ceased to make them out at any time? No.
2092. Have these programmes anything to do with the diet scales sent down with the patients' cards, or are they made up from the patients' cards? They are compiled from the cards. Perhaps I may explain. The diet cards come to me. They go first to the dispenser—that is the routine—and then they come to me after the dispenser has taken off the medicine. I then take off the diets on to a set of forms that I keep, and that I always keep in my possession.
2093. Mr. Gould.] Are they printed forms? Yes, and I keep that in my possession. It is a fac simile of the patient's diet card in the ward. I take off the diet, and whatever is ordered for a particular day—supposing there is a fresh order on a card to-day,—I take it off, and it is added on to these programmes which I keep. They are just the diets taken to pieces.
2094. President.] How often do you make them up? Daily.
2095. What time of the day do you make them up? At any time when an alteration arises, but more particularly between 1 and 3.
2096. Mr. Ellis.] You are obliged to keep the cards to do that? No, they do not come to me before that.
2097. What time? About 1 or 2.
2098. What time do they leave your hands? About half-past 3.
2099. Then they are returned to the wards? Yes, at least the bulk of the cards are returned between 1 and 2.
2100. Do you go through the whole 228 cards every day? No.
2101. How is that? It is not necessary.
2102. President.] Then how can you tell that there is a change of diet? The cards that come to me are only the cards on which an alteration is made.
2103. Who selects them? I do not know—the boy brings them to me.
2104. What is the average number you go through every day? I think from thirty to fifty.
2105. Can you look on your programmes and see to which ward each particular diet is issued? Yes.
2106. What becomes of these programmes? I keep them.
2107. For how long? Until they are useless.
2108. When do you consider them to be useless? Sometimes they last a month, sometimes three weeks, and sometimes five weeks.
2109. Then they are destroyed? Yes.
2110. Do you know what becomes of the patients diet cards;—are they destroyed too when a patient leaves? Which ones?

Mr. J. Jones.

15 May, 1873.

- Mr. J. Jones. 2111. Those from which you make up the programmes? I do not know. That does not come under my notice.
- 15 May, 1873. 2112. Does the same mode of making out the diets for the wards which prevailed in former times prevail now? I do not understand you.
2113. Has there never been any alteration in the mode by which you were informed of the diets required for the wards? Yes.
2114. What was the original state of things. What change was made, and what state of things exists now? When I first went to the hospital that was one particular duty which was marked out for me.
2115. By whom? The manager.
2116. What was it? To take the whole of the diets right through the wards. This system existed for some considerable time after the lady superintendent came to the hospital, and then there was a change caused by introducing a long list containing all the diets—the five particular diets, and the extras—which I took. There was first a list made by the lady superintendent herself as an example of what was wanted, giving the five particular diets and some extras. That was not found to come within the requirements of the case, and there was a list submitted to her by me that was used for some considerable time, containing more.
2117. Is that the list (Appendix A 2 shown to witness)? Yes. That was what was finally settled upon at last. The other was in existence a long time, until several thousands of copies were used up, and then this was substituted. The lady superintendent approved of the alteration which I suggested, and then the head nurses used to supply these every day.
2119. When that system was in force you did not make out a programme yourself? Yes, I did make out a programme, just the same as now.
2120. Why? Because the cook would not understand this, and I could not make any calculations from it. Of course it could be done with a great deal of trouble. I could not make a calculation as to what stores were issued for a particular meal.
2121. Mr. Ellis.] Would it not be easier to make up a programme from that list than from the cards? No, I do not think it would be any easier.
2122. There would be only forty of these lists to go through, and there would be 228 of the others? No; there would be only six of these lists to go through—one from each head nurse.
2123. And would it not be easier to go through these lists than through 228 cards? I think not; I have worked them both ways.
2124. President.] How long did this system continue in force? I think about 18 months or 2 years;—if I recollect right, I think that was about the time.
2125. What took place then? Then there was another alteration back to the old system.
2126. At whose instance was that change made? I do not know at whose instance it was made. My instructions were a letter from the committee, instructing me to do so.
2127. Did you make any representation in the first instance? No.
2128. You did not complain of any inconvenience you experienced from the system of sending down the lists instead of the cards? No.
2129. Nor did you find the system impracticable? No.
2130. As I understand it, the list—the diet-list—sent to you each day, showed you the number of diets of each kind required in a ward? Yes; and all the extras were put down underneath.
2131. Would you explain again what was the difficulty you found in that as storekeeper? I did not find any difficulty in it.
2132. You did not find any difficulty? No, not in the working.
2133. In point of fact this plan was hit upon by you, after a suggestion was first made by the lady superintendent? Yes.
2134. You and she came to the conclusion that this should be the plan? Yes; she had a similar sheet made like that, only about half the size—printed the reverse way to that—and there was not sufficient room for the extras, and all these extras are sure to be required somewhere in the hospital, and some of the nurses went a clumsy way about putting things down and trying to explain themselves; so I thought it would be better if they simply had to put it down in figures—so many of this and so many of that—and I submitted the sheet to the lady superintendent, and she approved of it, with the exception of one thing which she erased.
2135. What was that? Mutton tea.
2136. What used to be done with these papers when the system was in force? They are in the store now. I keep them in yearly packets.
2137. Would you explain again to the Committee the superiority of the present plan over this plan which was in force for 18 months? There is none.
2138. Do I understand you to say that the present plan is not superior to that system, or that there was no superiority in that plan over the present plan? I do not know that there is any superiority over the present plan as regards working it myself, but I believe that the old system is the best—the system at present in force.
2139. Does the present system impose less trouble upon you? No; but a patient's diet is always in my possession, and there are many instances arise, where a patient is discharged I know when he is discharged, and I at once, directly I know that, without having to run to the wards and find out what particular diet he is on, I open the drawer and take out the ticket which contains all the diets belonging to the ward, and I at once see what diet the man was getting and remove it from the programmes, and of course it does not go up again.
2140. Mr. Ellis.] Would you hear of a man's death? Discharge.
2141. President.] How do you know of his discharge? By the list which I receive.
2142. For what purpose do you receive that list? I receive it from Harris, so that I may know a man is discharged.
2143. Would not exactly the same information be given you if on these lists you saw that instead of six breakfasts being required there were only five required? If you say breakfasts, I cannot understand.
2144. Supposing on Monday you issued six of No. 1 diet, and on the Tuesday you received a list from which it appeared that only five of No. 1 diet were required, would that not give you the information that there was one diet less wanted in that ward? It would be equally the same. 2145.

2145. Would you not get the same information from the ward that you now get? It would be equally the same as if I received the notice that the man was discharged. Mr. J. Jones.
2146. Then where is the superiority of the present system? They never told me—I never receive any information from them about a man being discharged. 15 May, 1873.
2147. Did I not understand you to say that this list was filled up with the number of each diet required in each ward? Yes.
2148. Then, if on Monday you were informed that twenty of No. 1 diet were required, and on the Tuesday that only nineteen of No. 1 diet were required for a particular ward, would not the information conveyed to you be exactly the same, except that you would receive it from a nurse through the diet list, instead of receiving it from the bathman? I never received any information from them until I got their next diet lists. I never received any until the patient was discharged.
2149. Mr. Ellis.] And did you want any? Yes.
2150. Mr. Metcalfe.] I understand that all the stores are given to you;—everything but the meat and vegetables is given to you? Yes.
2151. Then, if the nurses send you in those lists, I presume you see how many of 1, 2, and 3 are required, and so on, and the total you send in to the cook;—is not that the way? Yes, I furnish him with a programme.
2152. Suppose there were fifty of a particular diet, you will give him the stores for the whole number? Yes.
2153. And you know the total amount of what you give to the cook? Yes.
2154. Is there anything more than that on these programmes? That is it.
2155. It is a very simple affair;—that is all you have got to do? No, it is not all, because I am responsible for the whole of these things, and that they go correctly into the wards.
2156. And you enter in a book the diets of each day? Yes.
2157. Then that accounts for your stock and what goes out, and what occasion is there to make programmes? It seems very simple to me of course.
2158. Mr. Goold.] I understand that you are responsible for seeing that what you get out goes to the ward for which it is ordered? Yes.
2159. And yet you hand it to the cook? Yes.
2160. President.] You get out a programme? Yes.
2161. A written document? Yes.
2162. What is the reason of that? I give the programme to the cook, because I issue the stores in bulk, and he has to distribute them to the wards.
2163. Mr. Goold.] Then if anything goes wrong you are responsible? Yes, they always refer to me.
2164. Suppose the cook cannot read? He would not be suitable for his place.
2165. President.] What books do you keep? I keep a lot of books—stock-books.
2166. Enumerate the books? They are all stock-books.
2167. Tell us what they are—the objects for which they are kept;—it is no use saying they are stock-books? There are books for provisions, wine, beer, and spirits, and I think that is all.
2168. You mean that there is a separate stock-book for each description of article? Yes, the glass and crockery, ironmongery, and bedding, and so forth.
2169. Are there any other books? No, no other books, except stock-books.
2170. Mr. Goold.] How is the account for the wines and spirits kept;—have you a book for them? Yes.
2171. Are these all the books that you keep in the management of the store? Yes.
2172. You keep no books showing the record of the stores which are issued daily? Yes, I do.
2173. You did not enumerate those then? —
2174. Mr. Metcalfe.] The books are never balanced;—are they? Yes, they are balanced.
2175. The President asked you if you could give an account of the balance every day? And I said yes.
2176. President.] Do you keep any other books? That is what I consider a stock-book.
2177. What do you mean; is there a book for each department, containing daily entries of the stores you issue? Yes.
2178. And these are the only books you keep? Yes.
2179. Mr. Goold.] Have you no book in which you enter everything you receive into the store? —
2180. Mr. Couper.] Supposing that you receive a quarter-cask of wine, where do you enter that? Well, in bulk like that it does not come under me.
2181. President.] Supposing six cases of brandy and two or three cases of stout come in? I receive those articles and sign a receipt for them.
2182. What did you mean by saying that they did not come under your eye in the first instance? I did not say so. They are kept in bulk.
2183. By whom? By me.
2184. What record do you make of them? I sign the receipt and it is handed over to the manager, and as I draw from the bulk I make a record of it.
2185. But do you not make a record of what you receive? The goods are entered in my stock-book to my debit.
2186. Supposing that the receipt got lost or altered there would be nothing in your store to show what you have received? I do not see how the receipt could be lost or altered.
2187. We need not argue about that; but supposing it were? Well it would be shown in the store.
2188. Is there any record by which you charge yourself with receiving these wines and spirits? Yes; I debit myself with them.
2189. Where? In my stock-books.
2190. Suppose six bottles of brandy go out, and a dozen of wine, and a dozen of stout, what takes place then? They are entered.
2191. Where? In the stock-book.
2192. In the same book? Yes; on the credit side they would have to appear.
2193. Mr. Couper.] How would you credit wine sent to the dispensary? By charging the dispensary with it.
2194. And you keep no further check upon it, except sending it to the dispensary in bulk? The wine used in the dispensary is sent in bulk. It is issued in gallons. If I receive an order for two gallons of wine for the dispensary, I send it down. The order is signed by the manager and brought to me, and then I issue the wine.

- Mr. J. Jones. 2195. And credit stock with it and charge the dispensary? Yes, and I do not see anything more of it then.
- 15 May, 1873. 2196. Mr. Metcalfe.] Do you keep an inventory? No.
2197. President.] Does your book show where each article has gone to? Yes.
2199. The wines supplied to the patients go direct from the store? Yes.
2200. Do your books show what quantity of wine goes to them? Yes.
2201. Mr. Goold.] If a patient does not get the wine that is ordered for him, are you responsible for that? No; I am not responsible. It is delivered to the wards and I see nothing more of it.
2202. Mr. Cowper.] Then if the dispenser wants wine to mix up medicine with, he gets it from your store in bulk—two gallons at a time? Yes.
2204. What account do you charge that to in your stock-book? The wine-book, whatever wine it might be; port or sherry, or whatever it is.
2205. What note do you take as to whom the wine has gone to—what ward it has gone to? It is charged as so much wine issued upon the orders which I hold.
2206. President.] What orders? The orders issued by the medical men.
2207. In what form? Issued under the different headings—"brandy," "wine," and so on. It is on a card.
2208. Is that the card that hangs at the head of the patient's bed? No; it is a small card, about the size of an envelope. The surgeon or physician puts in the ward, the name of the patient, and the date, and the number of ounces the patient is to receive per day, and the number of days he is to receive it, and he signs it.
2209. And this card is brought to you? Yes.
2210. By whom? By a boy, who gets the cards as he goes round the wards.
2211. Do you make a record of the order anywhere? Yes.
2212. Where? In the stock-book.
2213. What becomes of the order itself? I keep it. I preserve these cards, and keep them in monthly packets.
2214. Mr. Ellis.] How long do you keep them? I keep them altogether. I believe I have every order that has been issued in the establishment.
2215. President.] How is the wine taken up into the wards? By the boy that I have to assist me. It is his duty to take them to the different nurses.
2216. Have you a regular stock-taking in the store? Yes.
2217. How often? Yearly.
2218. Who takes it? I take it myself.
2219. Unassisted by anybody? Yes.
2220. Mr. Cowper.] Is it never checked by any one afterwards;—after you have gone though it yourself, and made out the various items, does anyone see whether your account is correct? No.
2221. For instance, you may put down two barrels of beer, and you may only have one, and no one comes to check your account? —
2222. Mr. Metcalfe.] Does the manager verify your account? It shows by the balance in the books what I have in stock.
2223. But does no one come to compare it with the stock? No.
2224. President.] Then no one can say whether your stock-taking is correct? No.
2225. Mr. Ellis.] Does not the manager go through the books when you are making up the stock? Not on that particular occasion.
2226. Does he ever do so? No.
2227. He is responsible for the stores;—is he not? Yes.
2228. And you are responsible to him? Yes.
2229. And he does not check your account? In the yearly stock-taking.
2230. President.] What stock-taking? The examination of the books.
2231. You mean the examination of the accounts? Yes.
2232. And that is all the examination there is? Yes.
2233. Mr. Ellis.] He does not go through the stock with you, and check your account? No.
2234. Mr. Cowper.] Supposing you put down two barrels of beer when there were three, who would know of the error? I believe the manager would know if there was an error.
2235. But no one would come round to see if there were an error? I do not know. He might do that in my absence.
2236. President.] Has he done it in your presence? No.
2237. Mr. Metcalfe.] The manager has the key of the store? Yes.
2238. Mr. Goold.] Would it not be better for some one to go through the stock as you take it down, so as to prevent any mistakes;—that is not done, I suppose? No.
2239. Mr. Cowper.] You say the manager has the key? Yes, in my absence.
2240. You have it in the day, I suppose? Yes.
2241. He only keeps it at night? No, not at night; but only when I am absent.
2242. How often are you absent? Once or twice a week.
2243. For how long? An hour or a couple of hours.
2244. Mr. Goold.] Have you any reason to suppose that he has gone and checked your books in your absence? Yes.
2245. President.] What reason have you for supposing so? I have known instances of his drawing my attention to things that were incorrect, and I don't know how he could have known it, unless by examining the books.
2246. Mr. Ellis.] Did he tell you that he had been examining the books? No.

2247. President.] Give us an instance of his having spoken to you about them? Once about some bread, when he said I was in error in my figures; but I was not. Mr. J. Jones.
2248. He questioned whether your accounts balanced? Yes. 15 May, 1873.
2249. Is that the only instance that you can recollect? There are other matters that I cannot think of.
2250. Mr. Goold.] How is the bread supplied? By contract.
2251. Mr. Cowper.] Daily? Yes.
2252. President.] Of course this is a mere theoretical case, and there is no imputation on your honesty intended; but suppose a person in your position were dishonest, and left suddenly, after being there some-time, has there been any such supervision in the way of examining stores as would prevent its turning out that, instead of there being 10 dozen of wine there there are only 7 dozen, or anything of that kind? I cannot see how anyone could make away with the stores.
2253. Not if he were dishonest enough, what is to prevent him? The manager has a check on me.
2254. We are now discussing the matter, quite irrespective of the manager or yourself. Supposing there was a manager who did not check your accounts, and there was a dishonest storekeeper;—is there anything to prevent his sending out a dozen of wine without anybody finding it out for six months? He could not do it.
2255. Why? Because the manager keeps a book, and knows everything that goes into the store.
2256. But if he does not count the wine what is the good of his keeping a book? —
2257. Mr. Cowper.] We saw 2 dozen or so of wine in the store when we were there? That is a rare exception.
2258. What is to prevent the house steward sending away some of that wine, or half-a-dozen bottles of brandy, in a baker's cart? It is possible, but in a short time it would be found out.
2259. How would it be found out? Because the manager knows what is there.
2260. Does he ever go round and count it? Yes he does.
2261. Mr. Ellis.] Did you not say, as a matter of fact, that he did not know what stores you had? I thought you referred to all stores?
2262. So I did? He is in the stores daily, and if there is wine there he has a memorandum of it in his book, and if I take a dozen of wine there is the book, and I have to account to him for it.
2263. Mr. Cowper.] Supposing the manager and the house steward acted together and took it into their heads to send wine away, what check is there upon them to prove to the committee that that wine was not used upon the establishment? None.
2264. President.] What check have the committee to find out whether the wine was used or not? Is there anything in your mode of keeping the account of the stores to enable the committee to find out whether the quantity of wine stated has been used in the wards? Yes.
2265. What is it? The doctors' orders and my books, and of course they must agree.
2266. You keeping both? Yes, the orders are in my possession.
2268. What do you mean;—the account in the ledger? If it is sherry wine you head it "sherry wine."
2269. And you debit and credit that account with the sherry received and the sherry issued? Yes.
2270. And you check that account with the doctors' orders? Yes.
2271. Mr. Ellis.] Are all the doctors' orders for wines and spirits entered in the book as soon as they are received? They are entered daily, and when the orders expire they are nullified. If the order is for seven days the issue is stopped at the end of the seven days, and there must be a fresh order issued.
2272. Are these orders entered in the day-book or the stock-book? In the stock-book.
2273. Who has charge of the medical stores? The dispenser.

FRIDAY, 16 MAY, 1873.

Members Present:—

WILLIAM CHARLES WINDEYER, ESQ., PRESIDENT.

MICHAEL METCALFE, Esq.
CHARLES COWPER, JUN., Esq.

SAMUEL GOOLD, Esq.
EYRE G. ELLIS, Esq.

JOSEPH WEARNE, Esq., M.P.

Mr. Henry Harris, bathman, Sydney Infirmary, called in and further examined:—

2274. Mr. Ellis.] In your evidence the other day you said that the clothes which were very bad with vermin were put into a shed? Yes.
2275. Is that the shed that we have just looked at? They have always been put into the shed, but there is a good deal of lumber there now, and so they were put into the place you saw.
2276. Where is the shed? The place you saw where the rack is—the clothes' house.
2277. What you call the "shed" then is simply the basement of the southern wing? Yes.
2278. Don't you think it probable, that as these clothes are swarming with lice and other vermin, some of the vermin may get into the wards above that place? I do not think that they can get through the ceiling. As far as my experience goes they die in the bundles.
2279. Is the place not an open shed, and can these vermin not creep from it up the walls into the wards above? I do not think so.
2280. Why not? I do not think that they could get there.
2281. Suppose this room, where we now are, were swarming with vermin, could not those vermin work their way up to the next floor? I do not see how they could get through the ceiling.
2282. Could they not creep up the walls? They could creep up the walls, but not through the ceiling.
2283. Mr. Goold.] Is there a ceiling there? Yes, and if they did get up they would only get into the lavatory.
2284. Mr. Ellis.] The patients go into the lavatory? Yes.

Mr.
H. Harris.
16 May, 1873.

2285.

- Mr. H. Harris.
16 May, 1873.
2285. Mr. Goold.] Have you seen vermin on the clothes? Yes.
2286. Lice and bugs? It is seldom you see bugs on wearing clothes. I have seen lice very often on them.
2287. Mr. Ellis.] You told us that the clothes selected to be put into this shed were those which were particularly dirty and filled with vermin? Clothes that are verminous are put into the shed and are never put into the other place. I do not put them into the other place for my own sake, for if I did I would get swarmed myself.
2288. And you destroy those that are very bad? Those clothes are reported to the manager and destroyed—such as are very bad. The clothes that are not in such a bad state altogether, but have some lice on them, are put into the shed, and the patients can clean them before they go out if they think fit.
2289. But this shed is under the Nightingale wing? The shed, as I call it, is the lower part of the south wing were those barrels are.
2290. Do you mean to say that there is no vermin on the clothes in the other place? Not to my knowledge. If I see any vermin on them I do not leave them there.
2291. What do you do with them? I put them into the shed. Those that are very bad are reported to Mr. Blackstone, and he gives an order and they are destroyed.
2292. Those clothes which we saw under the southern wing were put there because they had vermin in them? More or less.
2293. And they remain in that state from the time they are put there until the patients go out? Yes, unless they come for them. There was a man came for his clothes to-day.
2294. Mr. Goold.] Is that the man we saw at the tank place? I did not notice the man. His name is Stewart.
2295. Mr. Ellis.] Suppose a man goes out of the hospital immediately he is discharged, he would receive his clothes in the same state as they were when taken off his back? He would.
2296. You would not then be surprised to hear that a discharged patient went out covered with vermin? Well, if a man came in with verminous clothes, and put those clothes on him again when he was going out, without cleaning them, he might have vermin on him going out.
2297. All these clothes that we saw in the shed were in the same state in which they came off the patients' backs? Yes.
2298. And they were then covered with vermin? They had vermin on them.
2299. Mr. Goold.] You mentioned the other day the case of a man who came in, on whose coat-collar you saw hundreds of vermin;—where did you put that man's clothes? His clothes were destroyed.
2300. Mr. Ellis.] On an average how many patients come in with vermin on their clothes during the year? It is impossible for me to say.
2301. Are there many come in? There are a good many come in verminous.
2302. The clothes are not washed, but are simply taken down into the shed, or put into the other place? Yes.
2303. Do you ever hear of any complaints as to lice being in the southern wing? A woman came in the other day, and her clothes were full of vermin.
2304. But I mean complaints of lice in the wards? No.
2305. You alluded the other day to the clothes of the flying pieman;—what was done with them? His clothes were destroyed. He had a lot of old clothes about him, and his feet tied up, and the stench and dirt was such that they could not be put anywhere.
2306. We have been told that patients sometimes come in with wounds on them, and their clothes saturated with blood and dirt. Are these clothes tied up in a bundle? Accident cases, where the clothes are covered with blood, are treated in the same way as the clothes of other persons.
2307. So they may remain in the state in which they come in for months perhaps? Yes, unless the patient cleans them himself.
2308. Are there any clothes belonging to dead men in that place under the southern wing? No.
2309. No dead men's clothes there? In the event of a man dying, and his clothes are verminous, I tell Mr. Blackstone, and he gives an order for them to be destroyed.
2310. All those clothes then belong to patients now in the hospital? Yes.
2311. Mr. Goold.] Supposing a man comes in who has met with a severe accident, and whose clothes are very much saturated with blood—of course those clothes are taken off him; are they put up just as they are? Yes.
2312. Supposing the man remains for a month in the hospital, or dies, his clothes are wrapt up in the blood and put into that room? Yes.
2313. Mr. Ellis.] Are any clothes out of that place under the southern wing ever given away in charity to other institutions? No, they have not been since I have been here.
2314. They are given away out of the other building? Not to charitable institutions but to individuals going out of the Infirmary, who are in necessitous circumstances.
2315. Do you give any clothes out of the shed to necessitous persons? No, not verminous clothes.
2316. Any clothes? No.
2317. Are they always burnt if not given back to the patients' friends? Yes, they are always destroyed.
2318. Would you undertake to say that the heap of dead men's clothes lying in that room are not verminous at this moment? I believe not.
2319. Do you believe that they are not verminous? No, I believe not.
2320. You told us the other evening that there were some of the clothes which had been there from before the time you entered the institution? Yes; I cannot account for them.
2321. If a lot of clothes are piled up in a heap would not the vermin upon them increase? No, I think the vermin die.
2322. What from? Because they have not got sufficient suction.

I. J. Josephson,
Esq.
16 May, 1873.

Isaac John Josephson, Esq., Member of the Board, Sydney Infirmary, called in and examined:—

2323. President.] I believe you are a member of the committee of the Sydney Infirmary? I am.

2324. How long have you been so? For seventeen months.

2325. I understand that you have some communications to make to the Commission. We shall be happy to to hear any statement you wish to make? You wish me to make a statement first, so that you can examine me upon it afterwards?

2326. Yes? I suppose then I had better begin with the manager?

2327. Yes, if you please? So far as the manager is concerned, he is no manager at all, but merely a head clerk, owing to the committee and the Board of Directors not supporting him in his position. During the time I was on the house committee I visited the establishment every day, not even excepting Sundays, and I always found him at his post; but I never found him able to do anything, except certify to accounts. He cannot give orders. I made a complaint to the committee about it. (I wish to be as short and concise as possible in making my statement, and you can ask me any questions you like afterwards.) The next thing is the dispensary. I found that in a very disorderly state. During my examination of several patients at several times, I found that in many cases they had had no medicines. I brought this under the attention of the house committee, and some inquiries were made; the dispensers blamed the boy of the establishment and said it was his fault, but the boy denied it and said it was not his fault, and he blamed the dispensers for not giving the medicines. As to the dispensary, certainly I never saw it look nice and clean. As regards the examination of the dispensers,—I may say, that after several months, bringing it before the house committee and the Board, we had an investigating committee upon it, and on inquiries it proved to be very unsatisfactory.

2328. In what respects? For instance—when medicines are given they do not know who gave them to the patients, and they do not put any date or signature; they do not say who composed them or dispensed them, and, in fact, there was no system at all in the dispensary.

2329. Mr. Goold.] Was a report brought up. I will tell you why that committee did not carry on any further: We began examining the nursing staff, as it is called, and we examined two nurses, when a letter was received by the Board. Perhaps it will be as well to tell you how this investigation committee was appointed. I had it appointed after very great trouble and incessant appeals to the Board. They appointed the house committee as an investigation committee.

2330. President.] To investigate what? The working of the institution. The Board appointed the house committee as an investigating committee, but after we had examined the manager and the dispensers we then began with the nurses. After we had examined two nurses at our next meeting we received a letter from Miss Osburn—not to us—a letter to the Board, stating that as charges were made against her she should be present at the meetings when charges were made. Now, as we were not there to make charges, but simply to investigate the working of the establishment, we declined to let Miss Osburn be present, and referred the matter back to our next Board meeting. When the next Board meeting sat, we brought this subject forward, and it was mooted there, and brought forward, and, I think, only lost by one vote, that Miss Osburn should not be present. But we still adhered to our resolution and we would not have her present; and we proceeded no further with the investigation.

2331. Mr. Goold.] It was carried by a majority of one that she should be present? Yes; as we all knew very well there were seldom more than five sat on this investigation committee. We knew her purpose was for intimidation of the nurses; and I also said that when any charges were made against her she should be brought in and brought face to face with them. As this resolution was passed we proceeded no further with that committee. You will find that on the minutes,—the resolution appointing the committee.

2332. President.] Were any minutes of your proceedings taken? Yes, so far as we went. I also said that if the scullion was brought up, the cook should be present too, on the same principle.

2333. Mr. Goold.] Was that committee appointed in consequence of the overbearing demeanour of the lady superintendent? What committee?

2334. The committee you have referred to? No, it could not be, because Miss Osburn's name was never mentioned in the matter.

2335. There was a committee, as it seems, appointed, on account of complaints being made as to Miss Osburn's overbearing demeanour? No, it is impossible, because Miss Osburn's name was never mentioned in the matter. This is the first time ever I heard of that.

2336. President.] Of what? Of the overbearing disposition of Miss Osburn.

2337. Nothing has come under your observation as regards that? No.

2338. Then if there is a report outside that she is overbearing in her conduct it is not founded on anything that you have seen? No, nor on anything that I have heard there. This is the first I have heard of it. I have never heard it mentioned by the committee, or by anyone else.

2339. Mr. Goold.] In reply to a question of mine (question 161) Mr. Street, the treasurer, said this: "I believe it was in consequence of statements of that kind that the sub-committee was formed to inquire into these matters?"—I may as well state at once that I flatly deny it. It is a total untruth. State that plainly, if you please. It is a total untruth, and I know because I was the means of getting that committee up.

2340. And Mr. Street goes on to say: "But when the lady superintendent was allowed to be present at the investigation no one would come forward to state anything?" That is incorrect. We would not allow her to be present on principle, because she treated the committee with such contempt. Why, instead of writing to the committee, she writes over their heads to the Board, to ask if she can be present. She says, "I shall be present in spite of you," and we say, "You shall not." She would not communicate with us at all—treated us with contempt—and wrote to the Board.

2341. Mr. Metcalfe.] It is the same thing? No, I beg your pardon, it is very different. Everyone of those who was taking part in this investigation was against her being present to a man—the Rev. Thomas Smith was against her, and the Rev. Mr. Lewers and I was against her.

2342. Mr. Goold.] Did she attend? No, we would not allow her to attend. We held no meetings when we found how the thing was to be burked. I think this is the worst conducted institution in the world. I have told the committee so and the Board, and it is wholly attributable to the house committee and the Board, owing to their not maintaining the rule and system that there should be; it is all their fault. I have told them so over and over again. The term I used to them was, that it was the most "rascally governed institution in the world"; and so it is. Now then, gentlemen, we come to the doctors, and with them I have had great disputes, because they are considerably too independent and will not obey the directions of the Board, or of the house committee. They come when they like, go when they like, and they do what they like. I have now a proposition before the Board—rather two propositions before the Board —relative to these doctors. You are aware that in our by-laws; at least I may say that there is a by-law that says no patient, except in extraordinary cases, shall remain in the institution over six weeks, or at most two months; and it is a very extraordinary case if they stay in two months. There are now from forty-five to forty-seven patients, averaging from three to thirteen months, in the institution. There is a notice of motion of mine at the present time on the books, that the doctors shall hold monthly consultations relative to the dismissal of these patients; and the other motion is, that the doctors shall attend here not later than half-past 10 in the morning; because I have known patients come here by appointment at 11 or 12 o'clock, and stop until 4, and no doctors have come. I also gave notice of motion, some time ago, relative to the dietary scale. It says in the by-laws that the doctors shall only prescribe diets for a certain number of days, and to obviate the necessity of seeing their patients as frequently as they should they prescribe for thirty days at a time, including wines, spirits, beer, and everything else. I then had a motion brought forward, precluding these medical gentlemen from ordering diets beyond seven days at a time, as I think they should see their patient once a week at least. I believe that was carried. The doctors had a fashion of signing blank diet lists, and letting the nurses fill them up as they pleased. I then brought forward a motion that the doctors should fill them up before they signed them, but I do not know whether it has been acted upon. These other two motions of mine will come before the next Board meeting. The storekeeper—I have little fault to find with him, because he must obey orders. Now we come to the nurses.

2343. Mr. Gould.] Do you include in the medical staff the resident medical officers? No, the honorary medical staff of the place, because the resident medical officers are always on the establishment. Now we come to the nursing staff. I may as well state, at the start, that during the whole time I have been here I have never seen Miss Osburn in the wards once. I have never known—as far as I can hear or find out—that she has ever handled a patient, except in one instance, when Dr. Halket told me that she held a man's thumb. I have also had great work with the committee on the ground of the dismissal of superior nurses. I am only speaking now as regards my own time on the house committee, because I maintain now there is no nursing staff at all. These nurses, whom I term good nurses, were taught by the English nursing staff that was here, and whom the committee dismissed or allowed to go away—I do not care which term you apply;—but they should never have been allowed to leave this establishment, in proof of which I instance the situations that they fill in Melbourne, and Newcastle, and elsewhere. They prize them highly because they are regular trained thoroughbred nurses, and know their business. There is only one nurse (Mary Barker) now in this place—the only one Miss Osburn said herself that she would allow was a good nurse, when Mr. Lambton applied for one to go to his family. She said Nurse Mary was the only person in this establishment she could put faith in to go. A pretty thing for the Sydney Infirmary, where we are supposed to train nurses, that the head of the nurses says there is only one nurse she could trust to go.

2344. Mr. Gould.] Did she say that to you? No, to the committee. She said it here before the committee, and that it would be a great inconvenience for her to let her go. The nurses that have left the place during my time here, have been Nurse Shorter, Nurse Gordon, and Nurse Simpson, and I think Nurse Macdonald. To show the appreciation of these nurses—Nurse Gordon was one of the best nurses in the place, and trained by this nursing staff from England—and to show what kind of a lady she was, I may tell you that Dr. Jones took her for a companion to his father and mother to live with them, and she lived with them until they died. Nurse Simpson was also a good nurse; she left in consequence of one of the nurses marking some clothes of another nurse. Miss Osburn, who knew who the guilty party was, brought up all these intelligent women and cautioned them against doing such a thing, and Nurse Simpson, who was a clergyman's daughter, and a respectable lady, said she would not put up with such an insult. Even in the wards there are some good nurses put under probationers whom they can teach, and yet these nurses whom they can teach are put over them.

2345. President.] What do you say? That good nurses who have been here for years are put under probationers; there is one of the best nurses in the place, and been here for years, in that position.

2346. Mr. Cowper.] Put under the sisters? There are no sisters here now.

2347. What are now called head nurses were called sisters? Yes. Nurse Gordon was put under a probationer whom she could teach double and treble. Why? If you ask the committee they have nothing to do with it.

2348. Whom do you say? Nurse Gordon was put under a probationer.

2349. Do you know the name of the probationer? I forget the name, but I can find it out. I maintain that we have here no nursing staff at all now, and we have not four nurses in the establishment. They are nothing but servant women. I say that the whole system is rotten, and I have told the committee so too. I state it plainly, there is not one of the directors or of the house committee that know as much of the establishment as I do, because I was over here every day—Sundays and all—and I could see all the by-play that was going on. I have been in the wards when there have been no nurses there at all, and I consider that we have one-third too many women in the establishment. Now, as regards Miss Osburn herself, so far as I can see, she does nothing at all in the institution. From the inquiries I have made, I cannot find that she has never examined one of the nurses, except, I think, as she stated, Ann Parker. I question if she knows how to teach nurses, and my impression is, that those nurses who have left did so because they would not toady to Miss Osburn; and they could teach her her duty over and over again. There was a letter sent to the Board by Miss Osburn, and she stated in that letter—which I wanted to get, and I am sorry Mr. Lewers has taken it away—that if the English nurses did not leave the establishment she would have to leave. And instead of letting her go they gave into her and allowed her to have her own way.

2350. Mr. Gould.] Who took the letter away? The Rev. Mr. Lewers, the secretary.

2351. Was the letter addressed to the committee? Yes; and they let these trained nurses go, and kept a lady in the establishment who was not worth her salt.

2352. But this letter must have belonged to the committee? Yes; decidedly.

2353. Then what right had any person to remove it? That's just what I want to find out; and there are one or two other letters that he has got.

say that I have not. As long as she keeps her position and does her duty there is no one who will support her better than I will. There is nothing the manager is allowed to do. She orders things, and he never knows what comes into the place. You will see by the books I had a committee of supply, or a purchasing committee, appointed. I did that because they allowed Miss Osburn to go and buy just what she pleased, and spend hundreds of pounds for things that were not ordered. I say she has no right to do that; she is the head of the nursing staff, and should keep that position; and I say she has no right to go out of the establishment to purchase things without asking the leave of the committee, nor even then. But it is all of a piece, and it is the Board's fault to allow it. And then it comes out that the manager knows nothing of the purchase of these things until the accounts come in to the committee to be passed. There is a manager! Why he is nothing but a head clerk, and the committee will not support him in his position. How can you expect an establishment to be conducted in this way when there is no head and everyone does what he likes? I say I shall support Miss Osburn before any one in the establishment when I see her doing her duty; but when she is fondled, as she is, by the Directors; when they are frightened to say a word against whatever she does, it is time for some one to look after the interests of the institution. I have been over here dozens of times myself, and have seen Miss Osburn go out, and asked when she comes back, and no one knows. She goes and comes just as she likes, takes holidays when she pleases, and gives holidays when she pleases, and to whom she pleases. Here is another important fact, that is, that these nurses who have left the establishment she would not even give them characters until she was compelled to do so by the house committee.

I. J.
Josephson,
Esq.
16 May, 1873.

2355. Mr. Gould.] Which nurses do you refer to? That was the case with Nurse Simpson and Nurse Gordon, and I am not sure whether it was not the case with Nurse Shorter too. They came to me about it, and I asked them to write me a letter, and tell me the reasons why they left, and they did so, and I laid the letters before the committee. I did not see why good women should leave the institution to make room for women who are not nurses, and who never will make nurses.

2356. Were those who left the English nurses? No, they were trained by the English nurses who came out with Miss Osburn, and they knew their duties well. I do not think there are three nurses in the hospital now who know how to use a simple instrument, excepting perhaps Mary Barker and Nurse Mowle. Miss Osburn was at one time called "Lady Superior," and the others were called "Sisters," but we put a stop to that. Mary Barker is the best nurse in the institution, without a doubt, and Nurse Mowle, although she is a head nurse, is not much; and neither is Nurse Whitelaw. She is not much; she is quite a new nurse; I do not think she has been in the establishment for more than eighteen months. Why was she put over the heads of others who were more competent? Why was not she to learn as well as others? Then there is Nurse Brannigan, one of the most experienced nurses here, one who has been here for years, and she gets only six and thirty pounds a-year, while Nurse Whitelaw, whom she is able to teach, gets £60. Why should these things be allowed? Nurse Brannigan, the next best nurse to Nurse Barker, who has been here upwards of six years, only gets £36 a-year, and yet Nurse Whitelaw, that she is able to teach, gets £60. Why is it? Something must be radically rotten. Is it because Nurse Whitelaw is a lady that she gets this advantage? Does Miss Osburn suppose that ladies will come here to be nurses? No, she tried that, and how did it turn out? You have nothing but common servant women in the establishment now.

2357. Mr. Metcalfe.] To what do you attribute that? Because Miss Osburn wishes people to go and toady to her;—that is the real reason, if you wish for it. She never goes about the establishment, except of a morning, and even if the postman brings a letter to one of the nurses she takes it. She never handles a patient. There was a patient here, a Mrs. Ross, who never once saw Miss Osburn, and never saw a doctor for a whole week.

2358. Was she treated in the hospital? She was never treated at all.

2359. Who admitted her? I do not know. I saw her in the south wing, and I asked her, "What doctor is attending you?" and she said, "Dr. Jones was attending me, but he has not been." I said, "Have you seen Miss Osburn?" and she said, "No." A nice state of things this. If she is a head nurse she should show her nurses how to act, and examine them to see if they can pass as nurses, but she does nothing of the kind. There is nothing of the kind takes place here, and the committee are to blame for the whole of it.

2360. Then you think the nursing staff is inefficient? Inefficient! Yes, most inefficient—it is most disgraceful.

2361. Then your opinion is beyond that of the doctors? I will guarantee that the doctors do not say it is efficient.

2362. What doctors? That I can state afterwards if it becomes necessary.

2363. Did you ever ask Miss Osburn her reasons for making promotions? I believe it has been asked her, but I did not ask her, and any communication sent from the house committee she never takes any notice of. She treats them like so many dogs, and the Board pass it over—"Oh, she is a lady," and so on. To sum up, there is no manager, no system, and no head in this establishment, nor any rule. Now, gentlemen, I have done, and I am willing to undergo any examination you think fit.

2364. Will you kindly tell us what your recommendations as to a system would be? When you have got all the evidence I have no objection to tell you what it should be, in my opinion; but I wish, if you want to see how an establishment should be conducted, you would go to the Randwick Asylum. That is the best conducted institution in the world, because the committee make their servants keep their places, and keep theirs. How is that? Because we have a head there, and maintain him in his position, and that is what we want here.

2365. Then you complain of the want of a head here;—is there not one? Certainly not. Is Miss Osburn the head of the establishment?

2366. Mr. Metcalfe.] I think so? Then it is the first time that I ever heard that Miss Osburn was the head of the establishment—the manager of this establishment.

2367. I understand that the manager has the control of the financial part of the business, and that Miss Osburn manages the hospital? What; can you have two heads of an establishment?—Can you have two heads in your store?—Can you have two captains of one ship?—Or two Governors of one Colony?

2368. What is Miss Osburn's salary? She gets £250 a-year. She came out at £150, to be raised to £200. She is allowed extras, and a lady's maid, under the name of a housekeeper, at £40 a-year. Her salary is now raised to £250 and the extras.

- I. J. Josephson, Esq.
16 May, 1873.
2369. You said something about the prescriptions being sent round without the name upon them, so that the medicines were given to the wrong man? No, I did not say that. What I say is, that when the prescriptions are made up no one can tell by whom they are made up—there is nothing on them to show who dispensed them.
2370. Mr. Cowper.] Neither the doctor's name nor the dispenser's? Neither. And they never keep any book to show how they were made up. I maintain that there should be a record kept of all these things, for, as it is now, if they want to take stock how can it be done, or make reference?
2371. Can you suggest how stock could be taken? It is as simple as A B C. All they have got to do is to keep a record of all medicines dispensed. The storekeeper has a store where it is kept in bulk, and they should keep a record of what they get. If they get a certain quantity, and keep a record of what goes out, then there must be a balance to tell what is left.
2372. Have you considered the clerical assistance that would be required to do that? It would not be much.
2373. Do you know how many prescriptions are dispensed daily? Oh, they have plenty of time to spare.
2374. Do you know how many prescriptions they dispense daily? Well, perhaps sometimes a couple of hundred; sometimes not fifty; because you see the medicines are sometimes not changed for weeks. I have known a woman live on champagne for a week.
2375. By whose order? I do not know. I could find out the doctor's name.
2376. Do you recollect any other instance of champagne being ordered? No.
2377. I heard you say once in the street that diets and spirits or wines were actually ordered and sent up to patients here for weeks and months after they were dead;—is that true? You never heard me state that. I can tell you this, that you have heard me say that the doctors have ordered on the cards a diet for a week or a month at a time without change.
2378. President.] Do you say that you have known instances where the doctors have ordered wines or spirits for a patient for a month, the patient being dead? No; I say I have known diets to be ordered for a dead man; and I have known doctors order diets for a week and a month without change.
2379. Mr. Ellis.] Do you know any doctor who has ordered a diet for thirty days? Yes; Dr. Mackay; and he was very angry when I interfered.
2380. Mr. Cowper.] Did you ever know of wines and spirits being ordered for dead men? Only in this one instance, and I know it was ordered then when the man was dead.
2381. I remember having some conversation with you in the street about these things, and you said, "What would you think if I were to tell you that wines and spirits were ordered for a month for patients after they were dead, and were sent up after the patient was in the grave?" No, you have been confounding the cases. I told you that the dietary scales had been ordered for a month, and that spirits had been sent up for a dead man.
2382. You said after the man had been placed in his grave? No, I never mentioned "grave." You have made a mistake.
2383. Well, I have repeated the thing over and over again, and I certainly understood you to say what I have described? No; you have made a mistake. You have confounded the two things. I told you that the doctors were in the habit of ordering diets for thirty days at a time, and that in one instance they had ordered spirits for a dead man.
2384. No, I never heard that until now. I am certain you said they were ordered for some time after the patients were dead? No, I am ready to take my oath that I never said so. It is an impossibility that I could have said so.
2385. I believe since you have been before this Commission you have said something stronger than that? No, you will find different.
2386. Mr. Metcalfe.] You believe that the irregular attendance of the medical staff is prejudicial to the institution? Yes, there is no doubt of it.
2387. President.] Have you observed that they come on Sundays? Yes, and at 6 o'clock at night I have seen them come in; and they come on Sundays in preference to other times. I have kicked up a row here because I saw the place so villainously conducted. I only want it conducted rightly. I want to get this place on a par with the Randwick Institution; but under the present system it never can be managed, and I say there is no place in the world which is managed so well as the Randwick Institution.
2388. Mr. Metcalfe.] Would it not be managed better if there were a smaller Board? There is not the slightest doubt of it.
2389. President.] Do you not think that this mode of referring matters to sub-committees is unwise? Yes.
2390. Mr. Ellis.] At whose door does this mismanagement lie? The Board and the house committee. I say it flatly and unflinchingly.
2391. Mr. Wearne.] How can it be remedied? By putting in men who are not afraid to do their duty.
2392. Who will put them in? The public.
2393. Cannot the public do that now if they choose? Yes, they can, but there are so many people here of a certain class who do not care who goes in, and then there are others who can put in whom they please; for the middle classes do not care and will not attend to the matter.
2394. Does it arise, do you think, from the life directors on the Board? Yes, that has a great deal to do with it.
2395. Of the Board—how many are life directors? I never took the trouble to count, but I can tell you what they do. They will come in to the meeting and stop five minutes, and then away they go. They are put down as attending the meeting.
2396. What is the amount that a life director contributes? I think it is £50 or £100. I may as well tell you that I brought forward a notice at the last meeting that all directors should retire every three years, and be subject to re-election.
2397. That there should be no life directors? No life directors at all; there should not be any, or I would qualify them by time. If a man goes for so long a time, and attends so many meetings, all the people in Sydney could not put him off.
2398. Why? There is a rule that stipulates that if you attend so many meetings you cannot be put off. You must understand that those who attend the fewest times must go off; but the public do not care a rap about that.

I. J.
Josephson,
Esq.

16 May, 1873.

2399. Your suggestion is, that the whole of the directors should retire and be elected every three years? Yes, and be elected by the public of course; or half of them could retire one year and the other half the next. It would not be advisable that the whole lot of the directors should retire at once, because the new ones would know little about the institution, and would want some one to guide them. This, the old directors could do while the new ones could soon find out the failures of the institution.

2400. If the Government find four-fifths of the money should they not have a voice in the management? Certainly.

2401. Mr. Metcalfe.] Do you not think that a Board of six would be sufficient? I think that six is too many. If they all do their work five is enough.

2402. If there were a Board of five, with a quorum of three, they must do the work? Yes, of course. Among so many as there are now, one says, "Oh, I need not go," and another says, "Oh, they won't want me," and so you get no one. I may state that for four weeks there was no one attended the house-committee meetings but Mr. Lewers and myself, and sometimes Mr. Coveny would pop in, and the consequence was that the work was undone. You don't want a Board of Directors at all; have a rattling good working committee, and I should say that the Government should have two voices on it—make it seven instead of five, and let the Government have two votes.

2403. Mr. Cowper.] Do you not think that the representation should be proportionate to the amount contributed? No, for then the Government would have too many votes, and you know these Government representatives would not attend.

2404. President.] Is it not possible for the Government to get gentlemen who will attend just as well as the gentlemen who are selected by the subscribers? Yes, if they came in like the subscribers.

2405. Mr. Cowper.] Do you not know that there is a similar Board appointed by the Government to manage the Asylum for the Infirm and Destitute? I have not heard of it.

2406. Do you not know of the Asylum for the Infirm and Destitute? I know nothing about the working of the Institution.

2407. You say that the members appointed by the Government would not attend? I did not say that. I said that in all probability they would not be able to attend—they would be too much engaged.

2408. Do you not think the institution could be managed by a Board consisting solely of Government officers? I don't know that.

2409. Don't you know it is the case with regard to the other institution I have mentioned? I do not, because I do not take notice of anything that I am not concerned in.

2410. Mr. Wearne.] Then you think the institution should be managed by a Board of five? Yes, I think so.

2411. And they should retire once in three years? No. In that case I would elect them once a year.

2412. President.] Why would you not give the Government a voice in the management, proportionate to the amount which they contribute? Because it would then be a Government Institution, and the public would not subscribe.

2413. Why do you think you would get more by not doing that? From casual conversations I believe so.

2414. Don't you think people give for the sake of the institution? No. They do certainly, but still they like to get hold of gentlemen with whom they are acquainted, and to have some control over them. They like to know the working of the establishments, and they like to have a finger in the pie.

2415. But why do they want to have so large a preponderating voice? I do not see why. The thing is conducted now upon no principle at all.

2416. Do you think that their still retaining a large voice in the management would influence subscribers? Yes. Well put it the other way, and let the Government put in five and the others two.

2417. Mr. Wearne.] You think the public would not subscribe? I think not from what I have heard, and I believe I am pretty well acquainted with the feelings of the people.

2418. You say that the authority of Miss Osburn clashes with that of the manager? There is no manager.

2419. Well, whatever he may be? There is no doubt of it.

2420. Can you give us an idea where they should not clash? In every instance Miss Osburn exceeds her duty. She is the head of the nursing staff, and should keep there, and let her send requisitions to the committee for what is required, instead of going out and buying things just as she pleases.

2421. Mr. Cowper.] Where has Miss Osburn exceeded her duty? She has spent hundreds and hundreds of pounds.

2422. By order of the committee? Yes.

2423. Then she has not exceeded her duty? She has spent hundreds and hundreds of pounds, and she has bought goods without the authority of the committee.

2424. Has the committee ever censured her? Certainly.

2425. President.] Do you mean to say that she never informs the committee of what she purchases? No she did not, until I had the purchasing committee appointed. Since then she has sent in her requisitions.

2426. Mr. Metcalfe.] But she always sent in every week? No she did not. To give an instance of it: There were some wooden boxes came in to hold the dirt and refuse. I saw them coming in, and I said to the manager, "What is the meaning of this?" He said, "I do not know." I said, "You don't know; and you are the manager?" I said, "Go and find out what they are"; and they were boxes ordered by Miss Osburn, and I found that she had ordered them without any authority from the committee at all. I can swear that the committee never gave her any authority to purchase them at all, and yet she purchased them. As for the manager he never knows of anything that is purchased here.

2427. President.] Don't you think it was an improvement to get those boxes? Yes; decidedly it was; but that is not the point. I say that no one was asked, and that she bought them without authority.

2428. Mr. Metcalfe.] I have some recollection of her asking for those boxes? No; she never did. There was not a meeting at which I was not present, and I can take my oath that she never asked for those boxes. We heard afterwards that she had bought them.

2429. Mr. Wearne.] Under whose control are the men of the establishment? Goodness knows; I cannot find out myself.

2430. Under whose control should they be? The manager's.

2431. Should the bathman be under his control? The manager, or Miss Osburn herself.

2432. If a man is to be bathed should the bathman go to the manager to get an order for it, or should he obey the nurse? He should obey a head nurse, not a probationer.

- I. J. Josephson, Esq.
16 May, 1873.
2433. Should not the bathman be prepared to provide a bath for any patient, no matter who orders him to give it? If it is a case of urgency; but you must understand there is a great jealousy among the nurses and Miss Osburn.
2434. The present staff? Yes.
2435. Why? Because they have not the sense to do anything—they are only a lot of common servant-women.
2436. But is there not a head nurse in each of the wards? No; we cannot get head nurses to fill the wards.
2437. But a head nurse has charge of two wards? Yes, they should have, but I question whether Miss Osburn has got nurses to take two wards; there is but one nurse in the place, Nurse Barker, who knows anything, and none of them ever will know as much as her.
2438. Why? Because there is no one to teach them.
2439. Cannot she teach them? No; I should not think she would. She knows the value of what she knows too well to teach other people.
2440. President.] Then she would not teach them because she knows the value of her knowledge too well? No; but it is improbable that a woman, old in practice like her, will teach them.
2441. You think she knows the value of what she knows too well to teach them what she knows? I do not say that, but I think she knows too well to teach these people who require a great deal of teaching.
2442. Mr. Ellis.] Would you give the manager the power of controlling all the persons on the establishment? Do you mean the nurses?
2443. Would you give the manager the power of engaging and dismissing all those under him? I say that there is no manager.
2444. But supposing there was? Certainly, by the authority of the committee.
2445. You would not give him the direct power? No; let him say what he wanted, and get them.
2446. But would you not give him the power of dismissal? Yes.
2447. Mr. Wearne.] Power to dismiss or to suspend? To suspend, decidedly, because there are always two sides to a question—not to dismiss.
2448. Mr. Ellis.] It has been said that some of these people bring a good deal of influence to bear, and the manager is placed at a disadvantage? There is no doubt of it.
2449. And the same may be said with regard to Miss Osburn? That has only happened in one case: In the case of the man in this ward who was said to be drunk, and the resident medical officer says that he never saw that man drunk, and I do not think he had any friends here. Mr. Smith gave evidence on the matter, and no one said that the man was drunk, except the one nurse and Miss Osburn.
2450. President.] Under whom would you put the control of the cooking? Well I think Miss Osburn should have something to do with the cooking, and so should the manager too, no doubt.
2451. Would you have them both then to control the cooking? Decidedly.
2452. Then how would you prevent the divided authority? That would be a coalition of authority instead of a division.
2453. In what respect would you put the cooking under the control of the manager? The men must obey his authority.
2454. And not Miss Osburn's? Yes; obey her authority too, and in a case like this they could not possibly disagree. They could not disagree about cooking.
2455. Mr. Goold.] Supposing there was bad cooking, whom should they complain to? Miss Osburn and the manager too.
2456. Supposing that they disagreed about it? Then refer the matter to an umpire.
2457. President.] Is the manager a judge of cooking? He should be.
2458. Then why give him authority in the matter? Because there are different departments to cook for.
2459. But I speak only of the cooking for the patients? I speak of the whole; I look at everything.
2460. Whose department should that be under? Miss Osburn's, of course.
2461. Do you know that it is not? No; I have heard so few complaints about the cooking that I have not taken notice of it.
2462. You have not heard of things being so badly cooked that they are repulsive to the patients? I have not. The bread was said to be bad sometimes. If you will take the trouble to look at the house visitors' book (there is a book which ought to be signed by the house visitors every week),—if you will get that book you will see what I state to you,—the complaints are made in this book; and I may as well state that there was not a house visitor went through the place for five months, except myself.
2463. Mr. Metcalfe.] Then you mean to say that they entered nothing in this book? No; they did not go round; they made no minute in the book.
2464. President.] You do not mean to say that they were not here? We can only judge by the attendance-book.
2465. But some people are fond of parading their names? I am not. No one sees this book but the house committee. It is the duty of the visitors to enter their names in the book.
2466. Mr. Wearne.] It is their duty to sign this book? Yes.
2467. Mr. Goold.] And do you think that they omit to sign it? I do not think so. If they went through the place they would sign the book. They would be bound to hear complaints, and if they did not enter them they would be shirking their duty; that is all I can say.
2468. Have you had complaints of the cooking? No; I have had complaints of the bad bread, and that is stated in the house visitors' book.
2469. President.] You said just now that Miss Osburn was away for weeks together without anybody knowing where she went? No, I said "days," not weeks; or rather, I said she was sometimes away for weeks, with the permission of the committee, and away for days without anyone knowing of it.
2470. How often did that occur? She has asked for holidays for weeks, but she has been away for days without anyone knowing it.
2471. Have you brought that under the notice of the committee? No, I did not. What was the use? They would have only said that I had a spite against her.
2472. Did you ever know of her being away without the committee knowing it, except when she was unwell? Yes, when Mr. Paxton was here the first week, she was away, and the committee did not know it.
2473. Mr. Goold.] Away altogether from the establishment do you mean? Yes, altogether; and there is this Ann Parker; she goes away whenever she likes.

I. J.
Josephson,
Esq.

16 May, 1873.

2474. Mr. Wearne.] You think that Miss Osburn should have power to suspend, subject to the committee's power to dismiss? But I say she should not have power to engage.
2475. Who should have power to dismiss? The house committee—the honorary medical staff.
2476. Mr. Goold.] Why would you give the power to the honorary medical staff? Because I think the present medical staff would put the nurses under a thorough examination.
2477. President.] Why do you think that they would do better than Miss Osburn? Because they are better judges of them than Miss Osburn is—they see more of them.
2478. Do you think that a man is more capable of engaging a woman than a woman? Under these circumstances, yes.
2479. I am not speaking of Miss Osburn, but of any person in the position of lady superintendent? Decidedly.
2480. Why? Because they can tell at a glance whether a woman is a good woman or not. They can tell directly she goes to a patient.
2481. But they do not go to patients? They should make them go to the patients, and show what they can do.
2482. But is there not a training staff? No, there is not.
2483. Supposing there were one? That is a different thing.
2484. If there were one, you would not give the honorary medical staff the power of engaging the nurses? I would never give the power to the lady superintendent.
2485. But you think the system good? My idea is, that when a lady superintendent has a proper training staff, and there are persons applying, she should go to her training staff and say, "Examine this woman, and see whether she is up to her business."
2486. How are they to examine here? Oh, that is too minute for me.
2487. But you said just now you would give this to the medical men? Decidedly, but you put it in a different view. You say if there is a proper training staff then they can examine, and I say they can.
2488. Then your objection to the system now depends on the efficiency of the lady superintendent and the nursing staff? Yes; if a lady came here, and had her proper training staff then she might engage the nurses.
2489. How do you know that the lady superintendent is not fitted to teach nurses? Because I do not see her doing her duty.
2490. What hospitals have you walked? I don't require to do that to know whether she does her duty. I never see her here.
2491. Mr. Cowper.] Do you know that she used to give lectures to the nurses? No, I do not; but I know she got books out from England and not one of the nurses ever read them.
2492. President.] Did you hear there were lectures given? No, I did not; it must have been before my time. I say that when a lady superintendent has a nursing staff, when an applicant comes she must send her to the nursing staff, and upon their recommendation examine her.
2493. Mr. Goold.] You would have them all examine her? Certainly; one might be biased, two might be biased, but with the lot it would be impossible.
2494. What do you mean by the nursing staff—the head nurses? Yes.
2495. And they would report? Yes.
2496. Suppose there were one or two against the applicant? Go by the majority of course.
2497. Mr. Ellis.] Could not a competent person be entrusted with that duty? If this lady is a competent person, I say no.
2498. I said a competent person, without reference to any individual? Certainly; but there is no competent person here.
2499. What is your idea of a competent lady superintendent? I think that she should know how to teach the nurses.
2500. And how would you ascertain that? By the doctors.
2501. You would place her in the hands of the doctors? Yes, and let the nurses be properly examined and passed, so that they could go to any part of the world and say they were fit to nurse.
2502. Mr. Goold.] Do you think that that is the plan adopted in Great Britain? I know that it is the proper one.
2503. Mr. Cowper.] Are you aware that everything you have said is directly opposed to the written opinions of Miss Nightingale? What do I care for Miss Nightingale? I come to tell you what I think it should be, and have nothing to do beyond that.
2504. Mr. Goold.] Have you been to Melbourne—have you been in the Melbourne Hospital? No, I have not. There are the two institutions I am acquainted with—the Randwick Asylum and this Infirmary; and one is a model for the world, while the other is a disgrace.
2505. Suppose that the nursing in the Melbourne Hospital is worse than in this? Then it must be very bad indeed. Why, there is only one efficient nurse in the whole of this place.
2506. President.] Then you think that the nursing is bad here? Yes, it could not be worse.
2507. And you think that the inefficiency of the institution is shown in the nursing? Yes.
2508. Mr. Ellis.] Can you tell us of any instances of bad nursing? Well, I cannot do that. I am sorry to have to speak of these things. I thought that the committee I wished for to investigate the working of the institution would have put a stop to all this. I know that this will damage the institution fearfully; I am sure it will.
2509. Mr. Metcalfe.] Do you remember the inquiry which took place in 1869? No.
2510. There was a large report brought up;—have you read it? No.
2511. In that report the members of the committee said that they took great pains to arrive at the truth, and they reported at last most distinctly and decidedly in favour of Miss Osburn? Yes, but you must be aware that the Miss Osburn of the present day is not the Miss Osburn of the past. At one time everything she wanted she got through Mr. Blackstone, as I can prove; but she began by little and little to take the responsibility upon herself, until now she can rule the whole establishment, the directors and all. She twists them about just like shuttlecocks.
2512. President.] Do you think the manager is an intelligent man? Yes, but he is so cowed down that I do not blame the man.
2513. But you think him intelligent? Yes.
2514. Have you ever seen him at all confused? Well, I have seen him take a glass of wine now and then, but I have never seen him drunk.

I. J.
Josephson,
Esq.
16 May, 1873.

2515. Mr. Wearne.] We do not mean drunk ;—have you seen him confused in his ideas? I believe so, but that is from the way they browbeat him here.

2516. Mr. Metcalfe.] I think, so far as I have seen, he is treated with the greatest politeness? Yes, but there is a quiet way of browbeating a man, and I know whenever he says a thing against Miss Osburn they say, "Oh, it is ill feeling."

2517. I think he has quite as many friends as Miss Osburn? No, I am sure there are not four men to stick up for him.

2518. President.] Have you ever seen the manager under the influence of wine? You could not call it that. It is when walking across the racecourse together and smoking our pipes that I have seen him; well, you could not call it under the influence of wine. I have heard reports of his being drunk, and it is all nonsense. I have never seen him drunk. I have seen him take a glass of wine, and I have seen the Rev. Mr. Lewers and the Rev. Thomas Smith take a glass of wine here too.

2519. Where? In the office here.

2520. What wine was it? The wine that is allowed them.

2521. The wine of the institution? No. There are various departments that wine is allowed for.

2522. On these occasions what wine was drunk? Their own wine—claret.

2523. You spoke of Mr. Lewers and Mr. Smith ;—they have not wine allowed them? No, but I have seen them take wine, and that wine is allowed to Mr. Blackstone by the institution.

2524. You have heard reports, you say, against the manager's sobriety? Yes; but I have never seen him under the influence of liquor, and whoever has told me of it I have said that they made a mistake. These reports always go from one to the other, and you can't believe them.

2525. Mr. Gould.] You say you have been a good deal through the institution at all times of the day, and of course you have had intercourse with the patients? Yes.

2526. Have any complaints come to you as to the patients not getting the wine or beer allowed them? No; the only complaint was as to their not getting their medicines. I heard no complaints about their not getting their diets; but I have had complaints made to me about their not getting their medicines.

2527. Are you aware that Miss Osburn states that it is her practice to go through the wards early in the morning — ? Yes, and late in the evening, and that is all she does do.

2528. And in the middle of the day? Well, I only saw her there once. I did see her once, and I'll tell you what occurred then: The cook complained that the old style of getting the diets made up, was the best, and the house committee ordered that the cards should be done in that way. Mr. M. H. Stephen and I went into the wards to see the nurses, and direct how the cards should be made up; told them it was the direction of the house committee that the nurses should make out the diets, and send them down to the kitchen. Miss Osburn was there with Mrs. Bland, and she knew that this was the order of the house committee; but did she take any notice of the order?—not a bit of it.

2529. President.] She did not interfere with these matters? Did she not?—I think she interfered too much, for she disobeyed orders; and those orders have never been carried out to this day. She never took any notice of them.

2530. Mr. Wearne.] You say the order was that the cards were to be made up in the old style? Yes.

2531. And that she objected to do it? No, she did not object; she did not say anything; but she did not do it, and it has not been done up to the present time.

2532. And Miss Osburn is the reason of its not being done? Yes.

2533. Suppose now that she states that she wants the thing done in that way? She wants it done in her way.

2534. President.] And the present way is her way? The present way is her way.

2535. Mr. Wearne.] And if Miss Osburn states that she wishes the summary of the diets to be made up by the nurse and sent down, and the food sent up in accordance with it, that is wrong, you think—she does not mean that? What I maintain is, that Miss Osburn does not do it in the style in which it was ordered to be done by the house committee.

2536. But supposing that she states she wishes it to be done in this way? I cannot help what she states to you. All I know is that it is not done.

2537. And that order that was given has not been rescinded? No.

2538. And the order of the committee was that diet lists should be made out? And it was not done.

2539. President.] Would you be surprised to learn that the manager, the house steward, and Miss Osburn, all concur in stating that the system of sending up the diets was altered to the present system by the desire of the committee; and that Miss Osburn represents that she has all along been opposed to the present system; and that the house steward and Miss Osburn say that they, between them, hit upon this plan of sending down the diet lists? Which committee altered it? You must know I have not been on the house committee this year.

2540. Were you here at the time the system of the nurses making up the diet lists was brought into use? No.

2541. Do you know how that system came into use? No.

2542. Would you be surprised to hear that that system was suggested by Miss Osburn? No, I would not be surprised.

2543. Would you be surprised to hear that that system was disused against Miss Osburn's wish, and the present system adopted? I cannot answer such questions as this.

2544. But do you not see that if all these things are true the charge which you make is unfounded? No, I make this charge, that the committee ordered a thing to be done, and she disobeyed the order.

2545. Mr. Wearne.] Did the house committee say that the cards should be sent down? Just so.

2546. Then they were opposed to the nurses summarising what is on these cards, and sending down the summaries? I cannot remember whether the nurses were to make out these cards or whether some one else was to do it.

2547. When you went to these wards to convey the order of the house committee, you decided that the quantity of food required should be stated in the lump, and that the food should be sent up in accordance with the statement? Well, I really cannot recollect what the precise orders were.

2548. President.] What you objected to was the cards being taken and thrown down in a heap? The thing is this: The committee ordered that these diet cards should be sent down in one particular way.

2549. Mr. Wearne.] What was that way? The old style in which it was done. The minute-book will show show you. I stated that it was the wish of the committee that the diets should be done as formerly, and what I say is, that Miss Osburn paid no attention to that order, and that it has never been done.

2550. President.] And it is not done now? No, not done now.

2551. Mr. Wearne.] You cannot state what was the previous system? No, I really cannot tell.

2552. Mr. Cowper.] Can you tell why the committee decided upon this? Well, I believe the cook made some complaint about it, and the storekeeper agreed with it, and Mr. Blackstone agreed with it, and it was done.

2553. Mr. Ellis.] What time was it done? It was about November, I think.

2554. Did you approve of the alteration? Decidedly.

2555. Why? Because it was necessary that the nurse should do her own work and make out the diets for her own ward.

2556. President.] Exactly; and you approve of that? Yes; but it was never done while I was on the committee. All I say is this, that the committee ordered that the old system, whatever it was, should be adopted again—that was it—that the old style should be adopted.

2557. Mr. Goold.] Does that old style go back to before Miss Osburn's time? I do not know.

2558. President.] And the old style was that the nurses should make out the diet lists? Yes, I believe so. At any rate we gave the order and she never carried it out. Mrs. Bland was there, and Miss Osburn would not allow Mrs. Bland to speak, and Mr. Stephen had to request Miss Osburn to hold her tongue.

2559. Mr. Wearne.] Can you give us any other information? I do not think I can. The only thing is to have a responsible manager, who will take care the place is managed well.

2560. You think that seven directors should be appointed,—five by the subscribers and two by the Government? Yes.

2561. And they should be elected every year? Well, perhaps, on reconsideration, I think it would be better for them not all to go off every year. I should say it would be advisable for half to go off one year and half the next; because, if you had a number of strangers on the Board they would not know what to do; but if you have half of the old directors in they can go on very well; and if these gentlemen don't do their duty you can put others in.

2562. You are opposed to life directors? Most decidedly; did I not say so?

2563. Are you aware that the honorary staff, in order to get patients, keep people in the hospital improperly, to keep their beds filled? I cannot say that, but I know there are patients here who should have been out long ago.

2564. Where would you send them to? Send them out and let them take their chance somewhere else. The by-laws say that a patient cannot remain in more than six weeks, except in extraordinary cases, when they can remain in two months. That is the reason I gave notice of my motion, and they don't like it; but I do not care twopence whether they like it or not.

2565. Mr. Goold.] You have been a good deal among the patients, and had conversations with all of them;—have you ever had any complaints from them as to the treatment of the nurses, and the general treatment they have received in the institution? I have had no complaints.

2566. Do you not think that if the patients were badly nursed they would make complaints? The fact is that the probationary nurses have too little to do. Sometimes the patients have complained to me of the state of the clothing and of the bugs—of the cold clothing, and those kind of things—and, as I have informed you, I have had complaints about the bad bread.

2567. As to the cleanliness of the wards, what is your opinion? They used to be beastly, there is no mistake.

2568. How long is it since a change in that respect has taken place? Within the last month or so.

2569. Mr. Wearne.] Who is to blame for that? The head, of course, Miss Osburn—she goes through the wards.

2570. The nurses should see to it, you think? Yes, they should report it to Miss Osburn, and she should see that the place was cleaned. The patients have complained to me of the ragged state of the bed curtains and so on.

2571. Mr. Goold.] I want to know by whose authority the place has been cleaned? As far as regards the removal of the bugs, that was done by the house committee, and then Miss Osburn took it upon herself to clean the wards without authority, and the committee afterwards sanctioned her doing so.

2572. President.] And do you think that that was an improper sanction? No; they could not help themselves.

2573. Mr. Cowper.] Do you know that water-tanks have been applied for by the officers of the institution, and that the recommendations have never been acted upon? I do not know.

2574. Mr. Wearne.] Would you have refused the water-tanks if they had been asked for? It depends upon where they should be fixed.

2575. If every afternoon there is no water in the establishment would you have tanks? Then there should be water-tanks.

2576. Have you heard any complaints as to the want of water? No.

2577. Not from the dispenser? No.

2578. President.] If complaints were made to the manager he should have laid them before the house committee? Yes.

2579. And if he did not do so he failed in his duty? Yes.

2580. Mr. Goold.] Is it not a fact that the resident medical men, after performing an operation, have not had water to wash their hands? I am not aware of it.

2581. President.] Are you aware of the nurses not being able to get water to wash themselves? No; I have not heard of it.

2582. And if the manager has heard of it, and not reported it, he has failed in his duty? Certainly; but there is no head here at all—no management. The best thing you can do after winding up this affair is to take a walk through the Randwick Institution, and there you will see a properly managed place, there you will hear no complaints from beginning to end, and you will see that the institution is a guide to any country in the world.

2583. Mr. Ellis.] How often do the visitors inspect the hospital? Every day if they choose.

2584. There are two members of the committee appointed to go round? Yes.

I. J.
Josephson,
Esq.

16 May, 1873.

- I. J. Josephson, Esq.
16 May, 1873.
2585. Are they changed often? Every week. For instance, the house visitors this week are Mr. Paxton and Mr. Metcalfe.
2586. Are you often here? Yes.
2587. Did you ever hear what becomes of the patients' clothes? Some are burned, and some are kept.
2588. President.] Does the manager superintend the discharge of patients? Very frequently, because he has their money and jewellery, and they are bound to go to him for everything when they leave.
2589. Do you think patients should be allowed to leave this institution in clothes which are covered with vermin, and which have never been washed? Most decidedly not.
2590. Are you aware that such has been the case? I am not aware of it; I have never heard any complaint.
2591. You are aware of the authorities of the Hyde Park Asylum having complained of people going from here with vermin on them? I have heard of that. It is just a matter of public notoriety.
2592. What officer is charged with the care of the patients' clothing? I should say the nurse of the ward.
2593. But the clothes that are taken off them when they come in? The nurse of the ward, or the person who takes the clothes.
2594. The bathman? Yes, I think the bathman does it.
2595. And who is the bathman under the control of? I cannot tell you. There is no head.
2596. Are not the men, as a rule, under the control of Mr. Blackstone? Yes, certainly. Or they should be.
2597. Mr. Ellis.] Are you aware that the clothes of dead patients are given away in charity to poor persons leaving the institution? I have not heard of it. These kind of things seldom come under the notice of the house committee.
2598. President.] Do you not think that the manager should be aware of it? I think so.
2599. Mr. Ellis.] We had in evidence here to day that if a man comes in covered with blood and dirt, his clothes when they are taken off are simply rolled up and put into a room, and kept there unwashed until the man goes out, when they are handed back to him unwashed? I have never heard of such a thing; if I had I would have turned the place inside out to get it altered.
2600. President.] Would it not be the manager's duty to see that the clothes were properly taken care of? No, the manager cannot waste time running after every one.
2601. Are you aware that there is a building in the yard filled with bundles of clothes? No.
2602. Have you never seen it? No, never. I have never even been in the Nightingale wing.
2603. Do you think the manager should be aware of it? I think so.
2604. Do you not think it is a gross neglect of duty if he is not aware of it? Certainly, if there is a place to keep the clothes in.
2605. Mr. Ellis.] Would there not be a chance of patients in the wards being covered with vermin if verminous clothes were kept underneath them? Certainly; and I should think it a gross dereliction of duty to keep them there.
2606. President.] What would you think if these clothes, instead of being placed in a separate building, were placed under the building in which the female patients were? I should say it was a gross thing, but I think Miss Osburn should be hauled over the coals about it.
2607. Although she has not charge of these things? But she has charge of the south wing. If I had heard of these things I would have had it changed.
2608. Mr. Ellis.] Would you be surprised to hear that in that heap of clothes in the clothes-house there are the verminous clothes of men who died in the Infirmary several years ago? It is monstrous—disgraceful. I have never heard of it before, and, as a punishment, I think the persons in charge of them should be made to wear the clothes.
2609. Oh, they appear to be given away in charity? Nice charity that.
2610. President.] Can you point out the resolution to which you referred, appointing the house committee? Yes, this is it. (See Appendix C.)
2611. And these letters referred to are the letters to which you referred as coming from the nurses? Yes.
2612. And this is the resolution of the Board, authorizing Miss Osburn to be present, and upon which the house committee would not act? Yes. (See Appendix C 1.)
2613. Mr. Ellis.] Have you looked into the house steward's system of delivering the stores? No; I have gone there several times, and looked into his books casually, and the manager says that they are well kept.
2614. You have never examined them for yourself? No.

Thomas Park, Dispenser, Sydney Infirmary, called in and examined:—

- Mr. T. Park.
16 May, 1873.
2615. President.] I believe you are the first dispenser in the Infirmary? Yes.
2616. What are your emoluments? £150 a year.
2617. Do you live on the place? No, I board; I have no quarters.
2618. Any allowance in lieu of quarters? No, no allowance.
2619. How long have you held your present situation? Three years and eight months.
2620. What are your hours of attendance? From 9 o'clock in the morning until 8 or half-past 8 in the evening.
2621. To what officer of the institution are you directly responsible? To the resident medical officers.
2622. Have you ever occupied a similar position in any other institution? No, not in a hospital; but I was dispenser to the Oddfellows some few years ago. I have also occupied a similar position in first-class chemists establishments.
2623. In Sydney, or elsewhere? Both in Sydney and at Home too.
2624. It has been the business of your life? Yes, it has; and I have been in business on my own account as well.
2625. But you were never in a hospital before? No, never. I have lived with medical men in England as dispenser.
2626. We understand that the prescriptions made up by the doctors are brought to you by boys? Yes, they they are: There is one boy for the dispensary—a boy who belongs properly to the dispensary—and another boy for the house steward, and they go out on alternate nights, and the house steward's boy does duty while the dispensary boy is out. Mr. T. Park.

16 May, 1873.

2627. Where do they go when they go out? They go home I suppose. Every other night one goes out.

2628. When not out do these boys sleep on the establishment? Yes, they sleep on the premises. They do not stop out all night. They get passes and go out for a certain time.

2629. They have each an "out" you mean on alternate nights? Yes.

2630. By what time do the prescriptions get to the dispensary? Generally from 11 to 12. Of course the time varies considerably. We get them at all hours during the day.

2631. By what time is the bulk of the prescriptions back in the wards in the form of medicine? We try to get the bulk of them up before dinner, or at all events before 3.

2632. Are you aware that at times complaints have been made as to the delay? Yes, lately there have been complaints.

2633. Whom have they been made by? By both the honorary and the resident medical staff—they have been written on the cards.

2634. As a matter of fact it is so—there have been cases in which medicines have been behind time? Yes, it has been the case.

2635. Even to the extent of 24 hours? Well, possibly.

2636. To what do you attribute that delay? In some cases the cards are not sent down, and occasionally a card is not sent down until the next day, by some oversight.

2637. In other instances by what is the delay caused? In other instances, we are so over worked in the dispensary that we cannot do the in-door cards as well as the out-door prescriptions. We are so completely overworked.

2638. In your opinion is the dispensary short-handed? Decidedly; it has been for the last twelve months.

2639. In point of fact such delays as are complained of must take place in the present state of the dispensary? Decidedly they must.

2640. Have you represented this to any of the Infirmary authorities? Yes; I have repeatedly represented it to the house committee, and also to individual members of the committee. I have often spoken to them on the subject.

2641. Have you represented this in writing to the house committee? Yes; I have a copy here of a letter which I sent to them some time ago. I addressed it to the honorary secretaries, and the answer that I received was—I forget whether I received an answer in writing or not—that it could not be entertained.

2642. Will you read the letter? Yes. "The Honorary Secretaries of the Sydney Infirmary"—I have not put any date to it—this is only a rough copy.

2643. Do you remember the date? It was some time after the branch dispensary was established.

2644. How long is that ago? About twelve months ago last December (namely, 1st December, 1871.)

2645. Is this a letter that was written over six months ago? Yes, it is.—"Gentlemen,—I beg leave to report, for the consideration of the house committee, that the average daily attendance at the branch dispensary has increased from twenty to thirty patients since the 1st December last, and considering that we dispense on an average fully 300 prescriptions daily, besides making all the tinctures and other preparations required, I think you will admit that there is enough work at the Infirmary for any two men, without having to attend to the branch at all. I hope, therefore, the committee will be pleased to appoint an additional dispenser to do the work of the branch, the drugs, &c., to be supplied from the Infirmary as at present. I also beg to report that owing to the great increase of work we require a man instead of a boy to keep the Infirmary in a thoroughly clean and efficient state. Henry Pounds, who is at present doing duty for the boy George Myers" (at that period the boy was ill—had met with an accident—and we had a man to do the work) "would, I think, be a very suitable man for this. The dispensary itself also requires a little renovating" (that is, cleaning up); "a chair or two is also wanted to replace the broken ones. We are also very much in want of a proper drug store sufficiently large to hold a shipment of drugs. The room at present occupied by the yardsman and errand-boys would answer the purpose very well if they could be accommodated elsewhere. I am, gentlemen, &c." That is all.

2646. That is your letter;—did you receive any reply to it? No, not a written reply—merely a verbal one.

2647. To what effect? That it could not be granted. The only thing we got out of that was to have a little shelving put up to run round the dispensary, which certainly was some improvement, and the chairs. Some time afterwards a drug store was provided, but there are other matters which require attention, such as the sink, and an extra water-tap, &c.

2648. How much time is occupied by this dispensary at Redfern? About two hours every day.

2649. And the time occupied in going and returning? Yes. It is a great waste of time.

2650. How many prescriptions are dispensed on an average in the Infirmary itself, excluding the branch dispensary? The late assistant dispenser and myself took an account of it at one time, about twelve months ago, and we estimated it at 300 packages or items daily.

2651. Excluding Redfern? Yes.

2652. Then the 300 you mention in your letter does not include the prescriptions dispensed at Redfern? I would not be quite positive on that point, as to whether it did include the branch or not.

2653. Are there 300 dispensed now, without the branch? No, the estimate must have included the branch.

2654. Is there any rule in the business as to how many prescriptions an assistant can dispense? Yes, there is. I should consider sixty prescriptions a very hard day's work in a chemist's shop, but then you must consider that we do not do all that is done in a chemist's shop. There we would have to wrap them up and finish them off, and we do nothing of that kind here, but in all other respects they are made up precisely the same as there.

2655. How many prescriptions do you dispense at the out-door dispensary? I think about fifty patients' prescriptions daily, on an average, and then about twenty-five or thirty at the branch; say between seventy and eighty altogether. And the prescriptions of one district officer are particularly laborious and elaborate. From curiosity, more than anything else, I took a copy of one of his prescriptions. Here it is. That is a copy of a prescription that was dispensed by myself.

2656. How many ingredients are there in that? There are sixteen ingredients. There are fourteen ingredients

- Mr. T. Park. ingredients in the mixture, and in addition to that there is also spirit of turpentine ordered for external use, and powdered alum.
- 16 May, 1873. 2657. So that, for the supply of one patient you would have to open sixteen packages or bottles? Exactly; which involves a considerable amount of walking about, &c.
2658. Then, it is your opinion that to have the work efficiently done, it would be necessary to have another dispenser? There should be another dispenser here and another at the branch solely. There is so much time wasted in going backwards and forwards, and the dispenser here is left alone to contend with the out patients and the prescriptions of the medical staff. It is sometimes almost impossible to do the in-door business before the out-door patients commence. We commence them at 12 each day, and we are supposed to finish them by 3, but it is frequently half-past 4 before we finish them, and then we have to finish the in-door cases, except urgent cases, which are attended to at once as they arise.
2659. Did you make any representation to the committee before you wrote that letter;—was that the first communication that took place between you in reference to these matters, or did you represent the case to them before? I represented it repeatedly.
2660. Before you wrote? I never represented it so fully as I did in that letter, but I have repeatedly written in, when I have written in for an increase of salary on the ground of hard work and increase of work; but I have never obtained any satisfactory answer. The answer generally was that my application could not be granted or entertained.
2661. Do you approve of the mode in which the prescriptions are brought from the wards—this mode of employing boys? No; decidedly not. I think it is very bad. In the first place the boys are much too young; our boy is about 12, and, as I stated in the letter there, the messenger should be a man, not a boy—he should be 15 or 16 years old at least. The boys have no idea of the responsibility of the thing, no idea of the importance of bringing medicines up, and they frequently take them to the wrong wards. We frequently get blamed for that reason unjustly.
2662. Have you no authority over the boy;—can you dismiss him? No; that rests with the manager, who engages the boys.
2663. Have you complained to the manager? Repeatedly.
2664. What has taken place when you have complained? I have stated frequently to the manager that the boy was not strong enough to do the work.
2665. Was he changed? Not at all.
2666. What was done? No notice was taken of it. The manager thought that the boy was able to do the work.
2667. Did he tell you so? He gave me to understand so.
2668. At all events he did not listen to your complaint? Well, he did not engage another boy at all events. He is much too young, and even if he were not, he is not a strong boy. He was formerly a patient in the wards. And the other boy, the house steward's boy, was also a patient. He is still younger than ours, not more than 9 or 10, I think.
2669. What is the night duty of these boys as distinguished from the day duty? They are on duty from 6 o'clock in the evening until the time we leave. At 7 o'clock the resident staff go into the wards and see if anything is required in the way of medicines; of course there frequently is—any urgent cases are attended to and prescribed for, generally in the shape of draughts, powders, or something of that kind, and sufficient is made up to last for the night.
2670. And it becomes of importance to supply these things at once? Yes, most decidedly.
2671. And you say that the boy who looks after this is still more incapable than the other boy? Still younger, and further than that, he is ruptured, so that he cannot do much. He is much too young.
2672. Has the lady superintendent complained to you of the conduct of these boys? Yes, of one boy.
2673. And you told her that you had no authority over them? I said I would speak to the boys—that was all I could do. Further than that, I had no power.
2674. How long is it since you complained to the manager of the inefficiency of these boys? I complained to him soon after the dispensary boy was appointed.
2675. How long ago was that? It is over six months ago.
2676. To make the dispensary perfect can you tell us what its organization should be, and the mode of carrying it out? In addition to the present dispensers there should be one at least, and there might be an apprentice or junior assistant, at all events there are three absolutely necessary to carry it out efficiently, and it cannot be done without. I have had considerable experience in dispensing, and I am quite sure it cannot be efficiently worked, as the work stands at present, with less than three. There should never be less than two there—one man left to himself is frequently overpowered by the work.
2677. A man is apt to get confused under such circumstances, and danger may arise to the patients? Yes, very great danger. I am frequently so tired out when I get home that I fall asleep in my chair at once. There is no business which requires such clear-headedness and coolness as dispensing. Of course it must be so, it is a matter of life and death, and a mistake might cause serious consequences.
2678. We are told that there is no prescription-book kept? No, but when the cards come down—say at 11 o'clock—the bulk of the cards come down about 12—then I or the assistant dispenser—generally myself—copy the prescriptions on to the labels, which are then attached to the bottles, &c., and of course dispensed as soon as possible. This does away with the necessity of keeping the prescription. We find it convenient to have the prescription on the label.
2679. Don't you think it is desirable to have a record of the prescriptions;—of course it would take more time? Of course it is desirable to have a record, but at present we could not do it on account of the work.
2680. Would you proceed to state what you would recommend further for the improvement of the dispensary? The boy is too young and unreliable, and not strong enough for the work. He was formerly a patient.
2681. I may ask how would you supply his place? The boy's place?
2682. You say you would have three dispensers;—how would you communicate with the wards? Have a lad of not less than 15 or 16, and then he would be strong enough to do the work, which is occasionally heavy, such as pounding up drugs, or something like that. A boy such as we now have could not do it properly. We require a laboratory or working room, in which to make up tinctures and ointments, and other preparations.

2683. Are you not satisfied with the present accommodation in the dispensary? Not by any means; it is much too small. None of these preparations should be made in the dispensary itself; there should be a room, a work-room to make them in. It is a usual thing in large establishments. At present all these things are made in the dispensary. We also require some space for storing open drums of oils on draught, which are now kept in the dispensary. Mr. T. Park.
16 May, 1873.

2684. Then, do I understand you to say that it is crowded up? Very much crowded up. It is too small. If we had this room that I propose we could draft out many of these large jars of drugs and oils. The dispensing-room is well enough, but there are other things required. A new sink and water-tap are very much required.

2685. What supply of water have you? When it is on it is very good, but the supply is taken off at half-past 3 every day, and it remains off until 6 in the evening.

2686. And you have no tank to supply its absence? No; we have to get it from the other places of the institution. We have no tank; we are obliged to send and get it, and that is very inconvenient at times. We require also a new sink.

2687. Is there no sink now, or is it in a bad state? In a bad state. It was stopped up this morning, and once or twice since I have been here; I have been obliged to get a plumber to clean it out. We want also a proper dispensing counter, with shelves, with duplicate bottles, &c., to contain the principal medicines used in dispensing.

2688. Have you not such a thing at present? No; not a proper dispensing-counter. I think there should be a short counter in the middle of the place, with shelving and so on, for the chief leading medicines used. It would save us much time in running about.

2690. And that makes your work heavy? Very heavy—we are often regularly tired out. For instance, when we have to dispense such prescriptions as that I showed you, there is a good deal of running about. Frequently we dispense thirty patients' prescriptions a day for one district surgeon, and he has a peculiar style of his own. It is not adapted for a hospital at all. We ought to have shelving for the principal medicines used in the dispensary so as to have them within easy reach, instead of having to go all over the place for the different bottles. That is all I have to say about this dispensary here.

2691. Do you import your own drugs? Yes.

2692. By whom are they ordered? By the house committee I believe.

2693. Do you supply them with lists of the drugs you require? Yes, and I make out the indents. When my requisition is approved of I copy it out—make out the indent—and it is sent Home to the wholesale druggist in London.

2694. Do you ever take stock of your drugs? Yes, once a year—on the 31st of December in each year.

2695. Who takes the stock? I do, with the assistance of the assistant dispenser. We both take the stock together.

2696. What books do you keep? There is a drug stock-book containing an account of the open drugs in the front store (containing an account of the drugs open, and the drugs unpacked and stored away in the front store). There is a book containing an account of these. I take stock at the end of the year, and everything should be posted up there, but really I have so little time for book-keeping that it is more than I can do to keep the stock properly posted up. We do, however, keep a memo. of what we take out, and then it is picked out and checked.

2697. Then, is it your opinion that at present the books cannot be properly kept? They cannot. It is impossible. If I attend to the books I must neglect the duty of dispensing, and of two evils I choose the least.

2698. Has anybody, on behalf of the committee, inspected your stock at any time to see whether your stock-taking is correct;—has the manager ever done it? No, the manager has nothing to do with the drugs, but the lists of the stock taken at the end of the year are handed in to the manager.

2699. But is there no check, apart from the question of your being able to keep books—no check attempted as to the consumption of the drugs in the dispensary? No; not at present. There is this list handed in at the end of the year, and there is also an estimate handed in with it.

2700. Do you not think that in an institution like this there should be some system of taking stock, so that there might be a check upon any dishonest person in the dispensary? Yes.

2701. I suppose that in a well conducted private business there is a system of taking stock—supposing a proprietor wishes to find out whether his accounts are honestly kept, and whether the goods have gone out of his shop? Yes, stock is taken.

2702. There is such a thing in a chemist's business? Yes.

2703. Could you suggest any mode by which this can be done;—we want to know whether you can suggest any mode by which there can be any check on the amount of drugs in the place, and sent out of the dispensary? I do not think you can take any account of the drugs sent out of the dispensary in the form of medicine. That would require a regular staff of clerks, but you can keep an account of the drugs taken from the store, as is done now.

2704. Mr. Ellis.] Can you not average the amount consumed? Yes, of course you could do that.

2705. Assuming the prescriptions to be all kept? No doubt it could be done, but then it would take a long time, as the ingredients in these prescriptions vary so much, and it would be impossible to take an account of all medicines.

2706. Mr. Cowper.] How many clerks would it take to keep an account? I dare say it would employ at least two.

2707. Would you propose to do it by taking the quantities or the values of the articles, or both? Both, to make it a perfect thing.

2708. But some drugs are retailed in such small quantities that it would be difficult? Very difficult indeed.

2709. Can you give us an instance showing the difficulty of making out a return of this kind? Yes. In a twelve-ounce mixture there might be one grain of the bi-chloride of mercury. That would be so small a quantity that you could not estimate it at all. There are many of these powerful medicines which mixtures contain a small quantity of—they are a mere nothing.

2710. You do not see any way without engaging two extra clerks, to make out where these drugs go when they are retailed? No, I think it would take at least two.

- Mr. T. Park. 2711. And you think that taking the average or estimate would be the correct way of doing it? I think it would.
- 16 May, 1873. 2712. And you think that by an experienced hand it could be done? Yes.
2713. Mr. Ellis.] Could not one clerk copy prescriptions and summarise them? He might copy them.
2714. Assuming that he had books properly prepared for the purpose? Yes, he might. Then of course there is the branch dispensary, which would require another. I do not think it could be done with less than two.
2716. You had some suggestion to make as to the out-door dispensing? Yes; with respect to the branch dispensary. The branch dispensary is too small—much too small. Patients sit or stand in the dispensary which is sometimes almost suffocating. The noise also interferes with the dispensers' work. There is a continual buzz going on all the time. The dispensary should be in a separate room.
2717. Mr. Metcalfe.] You have only one room? Only one, and there is a small screen running across, which divides the patients from us. The room is badly ventilated, and with a number of sick people crowded together in it it is by no means pleasant. There should also be separate rooms for the medical officers.
2718. At the branch dispensary? Yes. One is supposed to come at 3 and leave at 4, and the other to take his place at 4 and stay until 5. But they frequently cannot be there by that time, being called away to some urgent case, and so they are frequently there together.
2719. And they cannot both see their patients in the same room? No, they are frequently obliged to see them in the dispensary, which is inconvenient. The place is altogether too small.
2720. Have you any further suggestion as to the branch dispensary? No, I have no further suggestion to make.
2721. Do you know what rent is paid for this place? £1 a week.
2722. Does any person take charge of it? Yes.
2723. Are they paid? No, they merely live rent free and take care of the place.
2724. What stock of drugs is there there? Not a large stock, but we supply it from the Infirmary here.
2725. Have the people living in the house access to the stock when you are not there? Yes.
2726. In what way is this branch dispensary supplied with drugs? We supply them from this dispensary.
2727. Do you take out certain quantities? We generally send out weekly. We supply it as it is required.
2728. Is any account kept? There is a memorandum-book in which we enter down the things.
2729. Mr. Ellis.] Do you know what becomes of the prescription cards when they are done with? I do not exactly understand you.
2730. Of course the cards go back to the wards, but when a patient is discharged, or dies, what becomes of the cards? They are sent to the resident medical officer, I believe.
2731. And does he file them? I do not know. I only know that they are sent on to him. I do not know what he does with them.
2732. President.] Can you tell us how the wards are supplied with articles in every day use, such as linseed? By a boy, unless the nurses come down as they do in urgent cases and take up what they require. They have requisition-books in which they mark down what is required—so much tow, or linseed meal, or adhesive plaster, or whatever it may be.
2733. At one time weekly orders were made out for supplies of linseed as it was required, and we understand that this system was discontinued on the ground of the nurses wasting the linseed? Yes, it was the case. I proposed at one time, in order to save the great trouble and inconvenience of sending down for the linseed whenever a little was wanted, to send up a week's supply to each ward. I did so, and sent up a small keg. It was found to be a great convenience. There were urgent cases coming in and linseed meal poultices would be ordered, and they would not perhaps have sufficient in the tin, and have to rush down to the dispensary to get it, and very frequently the boy has not got it. It was found a great convenience for them to have a keg of linseed meal in each ward, and it was allowed to go on for some time without any complaint from anyone, until the manager went there one day, and in going through the wards he saw these kegs and said that linseed could not be allowed in such a quantity in the ward, as it was liable to be wasted—he did not say in what way; so of course I ordered the boy to take the kegs away again, and we went on in the same old style as before. These kegs held twenty or thirty pounds of meal.
2734. Do you think that there was any waste by this system? I do not think so.
2735. Did what you sent up seem to you to be a reasonable supply for the wants of the hospital? Yes. I do not see how it could be wasted, unless wilfully.
2736. Supposing such an article is wanted now, do you get any order to supply it? The requisition-book is sent down by the nurse by the boy, and of course we supply her.
2737. Do you get any order from anybody else? No, but these things are frequently ordered by the resident medical officers.
2738. Since you have been in the Infirmary have you become aware of the existence of a divided authority between the manager and the lady superintendent? Yes, I am aware that there is some such feeling as that.
2739. A clashing of authority? Yes, decidedly.
2740. In what way has it come under your observation? Merely from hearsay. I have heard that they are not very unanimous in some things, but know nothing very decided. It is merely my impression that there is such a feeling, but I cannot say positively. I do not know that I have heard any person say so, but I believe that there is such a feeling.
2741. From what is going on in the hospital does it appear to you that the servants are disposed to look upon themselves more as the servants of one person or the other, rather than of the institution? I can scarcely say that I have heard that, but of course I have so much to do in my own department I know very little about anyone else's.

MONDAY, 19 MAY, 1873.

Members Present:—

WILLIAM CHARLES WINDEYER, Esq., PRESIDENT.

EYRE G. ELLIS, Esq.
SAMUEL GOOLD, Esq.MICHAEL METCALFE, Esq.
RICHARD DRIVER, Esq., M.P.
CHARLES COWPER, JUN., Esq.

Joseph Paxton, Esq., Member of the House Committee, Sydney Infirmary, called in and examined:—

2742. President.] You are a member of the Board of the Sydney Infirmary? Yes.
2743. How long have you been so? Ever since the last election in January.
2744. In the beginning of this year? Yes.
2745. Have you been at the hospital much since your appointment? I have.
2746. Have you formed any opinion as to whether the managing committee of the Infirmary should be so large? I believe it is too large.
2747. What has induced you to come to this conclusion? The working of the institution is thrown upon so many that the management is shirked from one shoulder to another, and things are left undone.
2748. Do you find that the time of the Board is wasted in frivolous discussion at all? No; it is the house committee. When it falls to their week two members weekly are supposed to visit the institution, and during the week I was appointed to visit I gained a greater insight into the institution than I could gain at all the meetings I attended. You might attend meetings constantly and know little of it; but by going through the building as a visitor, and getting complaints from the patients without the nurses hearing, you can get to know the secrets of the institution. There were so many screws loose that at last I was quite ashamed to complain to the house committee. I jotted down what I took notice of, and perhaps you may wish to have it, or perhaps you would prefer to ask me questions.
2749. Any matters that you think it expedient we should know we shall be glad to hear of from you? The Sydney Infirmary—management very faulty. I consider that one master-mind, responsible to the directors, would prove of great advantage to the working of the institution. I refer to the management being divided.
2750. You have found that out? I have found it out. When a member of the house committee finds anything wrong the difficulty is to whom can he apply. You apply to the manager, and he says that it does not come under his jurisdiction; you apply to the lady superintendent, and she says she knows nothing about it, and it is shirked from one to the other. In going through the institution I found that the Sabbath was very badly observed. I don't know whether I am in order in reading these notes.
2751. Certainly. We shall be glad to hear what you have to say on that point, because the lady superintendent has complained of the same thing? I found that surgical operations, which could have been conducted on the Saturday, or even on the Friday, were performed on the Sunday. This involves the services of many who could otherwise attend church. We have also to look at the effects upon the patients, for instead of the quiet, calm, peaceful Sabbath of an English hospital, we find the patients all confused in mind and agitated. I was surprised also to find so many patients reading novels on the Sabbath and other books of a light character, instead of the grand old Bible that was so much better, and would prepare their minds for dying. The Sabbath I refer to,—about half-an-hour before I entered the ward a corpse had been carried out, and I was sorry to find so many novels and light books in the hands of the patients. I found there was one man connected with the institution, and had been connected with it for thirteen years, who said he had never enjoyed a Sabbath.
2752. What was his name? Dwyer, I believe. I give it from memory.
2753. What is his position? He is a porter, I think. In asking how it was he was not relieved, he stated that surgical cases were constantly taken on the Sabbath and he was required. I am not aware whether I am in order in reading these notes, which I give you just as I took them. I believe also that stimulants are made use of in the institution to a very great extent, the effect being this—I do not know—it may be questioned whether we have a right to interfere with the medical staff, but if this is an evil, and we think it is, we should suggest a remedy.
2754. What has come to your knowledge respecting this matter? This—the effect on persons leaving the institution. They become so used to the stimulants they have had given to them in the Infirmary that they become confirmed drunkards when they are discharged.
2755. The patients? Yes. I find that there is something like fourteen gallons of brandy made use of per month in the Infirmary, not taking the wines and beers into account. And I have stated to the Board that the testimony of 2,000, or more, medical men throughout Europe, can be supplied to show that stimulants can be done without—at least brandy. I have also the pleasure to state that a resolution, proposed by myself, and seconded by Mr. Cameron, has been carried, discontinuing the allowance of wine and beer to all officers and servants of the institution. This comes in force on the 12th June next. In any remarks I have made I have no desire to reflect upon any Board of Directors—indeed I know from experience that it is no easy matter for gentlemen engaged in business to give the time to a thing of this kind that it requires. I think it a desirable qualification for a director that he should have the time and the desire to serve the institution. The institutions I am connected with are as follows:—The Ragged Schools, Randwick Asylum, Home Visiting, Deaf and Dumb, Soup Kitchen, the Infirmary, and the Asylum for Inebriates—so that any questions respecting them I shall be glad to answer.
2756. With regard to these stimulants, you state that patients are discharged unfit for the duties of life, because they have become used to stimulants in the Infirmary;—do you know of any instances of that kind where drinking habits have been traced to this cause? No case has come under my own notice that I can rely upon, but I have it from an officer of the institution, who states that he has known many cases.
2757. What officer? I would not care to mention his name.
2758. Why, it is a matter of public interest, and it cannot involve the officer in any blame? It is rather a delicate matter. The officer assured me on his honor that he knew of many cases, and I would only be too happy to have one or two named, and hunt them up.
2759. Did he name them to you? No, he did not. He seemed disposed to waive it.
2760. Is the officer a total abstainer? I think not.
2761. Are you? I am.

J. Paxton,
Esq.

- J. Paxton, Esq.
19 May, 1873.
2762. Can you state any facts to the Commission as to anything you have observed in the Infirmary to strengthen your opinion as to the undue use of stimulants there? I have lived for ten months in front of the Infirmary, and I saw there on a Sabbath morning a man with a bottle, which I suppose contained grog, and shortly afterwards a man—whom I supposed to be the same—was dismissed, for making use of grog supplied to the patients.
2763. What was his name? I cannot say.
2764. What was he doing with the bottle? Took it out of his pocket, and he did that every morning, and one morning in particular I noticed it, and made inquiry, and found that the man was discharged.
2765. Then that would show that these persons consumed the medicine instead of giving it to the patients? I think so.
2766. I want to know whether you can show any facts that go to show the use of stimulants intended for the patients? I cannot, but I wish to show my reason for moving to have all wines discontinued to the officers of the institution, so that when walking through a ward and seeing a man unfit for his duties, it could not be said, "Well the institution supplied them with the liquor." But I have not been long enough connected with the institution to be able to give any instances such as you require.
2767. Do you know whether the amount of wines and spirits prescribed for patients, or supplied to patients in the Infirmary, is larger than the quantities prescribed by medical men to their patients outside of the Infirmary? No. I only take the number of patients in the Infirmary and compare that with the quantity of grog consumed. I am not aware of the quantity a doctor may order for his private patients. I am not sufficiently well posted up to know that.
2768. Do I understand that you make any charge against the medical men as to the quantity of spirits they allow to the patients? By no means.
2769. Or do you think from the quantity consumed that all the liquor does not go to the patients? Quite so.
2770. Mr. Ellis.] I understood Mr. Paxton to complain of the quantity given to the patients, and that it made them confirmed drunkards when they quitted the Infirmary? Yes.
2771. President.] Yes, what I understood you to say was that persons were rendered unfit for the duties of life because of the drinking habits acquired from the use of spirits obtained in the Infirmary? Quite so.
2772. Well then, I wish to know whether there is anything to support that view, or whether you know that patients in the Infirmary are ordered more stimulants than are usually ordered for their patients by doctors in their private practice? The officer to whom I alluded informed me that he knew of many cases who were supplied with stimulants in the Infirmary, and who got used to it, and when they were discharged became confirmed drunkards; but I know of no cases myself.
2773. Did you ask the officer for the names of cases in order to authenticate his statement? Yes.
2774. And he gave you none? No, I have merely read my notes as I took them.
2775. Are you aware that there is no sufficient check upon the stores which are issued in the Infirmary? The house committee have ordered presses for the purpose of locking up medicine.
2776. Are you aware that there is no stock taken? I am not aware. I have not been long enough connected with the institution to know the outs and ins of it; but these presses are to lock up medicine in, so that the nurses can supply the patients at the proper times, and not allow them to supply themselves. As it is now, the patients can supply themselves with medicine at any time, so there is a little press in each ward, and the medicine is to be locked up and the nurse is to supply them.
2777. Mr. Metcalfe.] What medicines do you mean? The medicines supplied to the patients.
2778. But it is an odd thing for a patient to help himself to medicine? But there are such cases nevertheless. Miss Osburn told me that there were such cases.
2779. Mr. Ellis.] Do I understand you to say that some of the patients are so fond of medicine as to help themselves whenever they get the chance? Yes, they have done so. There have been such cases.
2780. Is that when there is wine or brandy in the medicine? No, I think not. I may say here that I had a case of a nurse the other day who should have applied a poultice to a patient's leg in the morning, and did not do it until the evening—she should have applied the poultice at 10 o'clock, and did not apply it until half-past 7 in the evening. I, being one of the new people on the Board, was afraid to be too officious, but I called the nurse and gave her a reprimand, rather than enter it in the visitors' book.
2781. President.] What did she say? She said that it was the case, that she was very sorry, and would take care it did not happen again. It is all the fault of the directors, or rather house visitors, that these things occur. The nurses seemed to think that it was quite out of place for me to visit the wards on the Sabbath, but I was particularly anxious to go there then, to see how it was kept, and they seemed annoyed at my entering the wards.
2782. Did you complain to Miss Osburn? Yes, I saw her, and informed her, and she said it would not occur again. I have no desire to blame the directors, but there are many who have the disposition to serve the Infirmary, but who cannot find the time.
2783. You state that you have observed that the servants do not appear to know who their superior officer is;—what instances have you seen of that? Well, the place was overrun with bugs—the institution, from top to bottom—and when we made complaints about it we found that the responsibility was shirked from one shoulder to another. The only desire we had in going through the building was to remedy the evil.
2784. Has that evil been remedied now? Yes.
2785. I have not been speaking of the cleanliness of the place but of the servants, and I wish to know whether you have observed any disposition among them not to take orders except from particular persons? No, I have not.
2786. Do you not think that considering the large amount of money which the Government give annually to the institution, they should be in some way represented in the management of the Infirmary? Yes; I think it would be very advisable, and I may say if I had now to give a donation to the Infirmary, I should give it somewhere else. At the time I gave my donation I had no idea that the place was so mismanaged; and I take it that the Government would be equally as culpable for giving their donation. Had I to do it again I certainly should not do it under the circumstances.
2787. Mr. Driver.] Whom do you blame for this mismanagement? The institution has no head. It wants a master-mind to rule it.

2788. President.] It is the system you find fault with? Yes; and I think that the lady superior is a little above what we want. I can find at another institution, the Female Refuge, next the Benevolent Asylum, the kind of matron we should have—a genial, motherly old lady, who would go in and see that the nurses did their work, and we want nurses who will go in, not make themselves slaves, but see that the place was washed and thoroughly cleansed. I believe the want is that of scrubbers, the same as used to be there. You cannot expect nurses to do that sort of thing; and I really think that the nurses are too young. We want persons of riper years; they want more feeling.

J. Paxton,
Esq.

19 May, 1873

2789. And do you think that older persons have more feeling? Well, I think these persons flirt too much. I have seen them dancing and flirting about there when a patient has been dying.

2790. Mr. Driver.] Not in the wards? No; in the place outside.

2791. Do you consider that a crime? No, not a crime. I consider that it is a fault. I think we should have some persons as nurses who are old and steady. They are too young.

2792. President.] Does that show the necessity of having a person who is steady to manage these people? Yes; and I think she should not absent herself for days at a time.

2793. Mr. Driver.] Does the lady superior do that? Yes, she has done so.

2794. President.] Without leave? Yes.

2795. When? I think the minutes will show that.

2796. Mr. Couper.] Can you explain to us what you mean by "flirting." You said the nurses were "flirting." I thought at first you used the word in its usual sense, but from a subsequent statement I understood you to mean that they walked too fast, or something of that sort? No, dancing is not walking fast.

2797. How were they dancing? Oh, just dancing about.

2798. Dancing with young men? No, dancing by themselves in the open space.

2799. What were they dancing;—was it a waltz? They were just dancing.

2800. This was not on Sunday morning? No; if it had been I should have had it altered.

2801. Do you mean that half a dozen of them were dancing together? Yes.

2802. What was it they danced;—a waltz or a polka? I do not know.

2803. When did you see it last? When I was living in Macquarie-street. I lived for twelve months in front of them. I consider really they are all too young and inexperienced. That does not apply to one nurse whom I met up-stairs—one Sister Mary—who seems to be an excellent nurse, and keeps her beds clean.

2804. That is one of the sisters? One of the sisters. She kept her beds clean. When I spoke to Miss Osburn about the state of the place she said it was not her duty, and the manager said it was not his. The place is badly managed. I shall not keep my seat upon the committee unless it is altered.

2805. Is it badly managed? It is very badly managed.

2806. Is that the fault of the directors? I cannot tell. The authority is divided.

2807. President.] When did you find out this disorganization? When I made my first visit, about the bugs. We went to the manager and complained to him, and we were told it was not his business, and we then went to Miss Osburn, and she said it was no business of hers; and the way the officers talked of each other is sufficient to sustain the idea—the one complaining of the other.

2808. Mr. Driver.] By the officers you mean Mr. Blackstone and Miss Osburn? Yes.

2809. Mr. Couper.] Any others? No; I make a point, when I go to the Infirmary, to speak to no one unless they speak to me, and I have gone in and out without asking the officers if there were any complaints.

2810. President.] Do you think the manager is an intelligent man? He is a man who is quite unfit for that appointment;—he is not master enough.

2811. Mr. Couper.] But you spoke of a master-mind being needed, and then said that an old woman could do better than any person you had ever seen? I was talking of the nursing.

2812. You said there was an old woman in the institution adjoining who could do better than any one you had ever seen? Well, I don't think she is a very old woman;—she is (say) middle-aged.

2813. You mean Mrs. Malbon? Yes; I was delighted with her.

2814. Then you don't mean a male manager when you speak of a master-mind? Yes; I believe that if the institution had a master-mind—a male manager—over it, and a matron, such as I have said, under him; then the Board could look to that man, and he would do well.

2815. President.] Do you know that that system has exploded in every modern hospital? Well, I do not know. I apply the same rule to my every-day work. I don't know what would become of me if I had not had some one to look to if anything was wrong. If the nurses' duties were defined, the nursing could be left to the lady and the general management to the manager.

2816. How would it be if the financial management of the institution, and all matters referring to the out-door concerns, were left in the hands of some male officer, and the internal management—the control of the nurses and the cooks and looking after the wards—was left in the hands of the lady superintendent? It would all depend on who the lady was. If it was left in the hands of the lady who is there now I question whether it would work.

2817. Do you think Miss Osburn does not take an interest in the institution? I do not think that she applies herself. I have gone in and out and never seen her at all.

2818. Mr. Driver.] And it may have been that she was there the whole time? She might have been, but it is queer that I did not see her.

2819. She might have been in her own apartments? She might.

2820. You would not go there to look for her I suppose? No, I would not.

2821. She might be attending to the linen? She might, and she might not. We called once to go through the building to see about the vermin there, and found that she had been away for several days, and without leave, and we found that that was quite a common thing.

2822. President.] Who told you that it was quite a common thing? The manager.

2823. And you quite understood that he was biased against her? Yes, we quite understood that. The house is divided.

2824. Mr. Couper.] Did you examine the wards to see if there was any vermin there, before you knew that she was away? No. We went and asked who was to go through the building with us. We asked the manager, and he said it was not his duty to do it; and we asked for Miss Osburn, and we were then given to understand that she had gone away, and had not returned. This was on Thursday, and she had gone away on the Monday previous. There was a nurse who offered to go round with us.

- J. Paxton,
Esq.
19 May, 1873.
2825. Mr. Driver.] And the manager, an officer of the institution, refused to accompany you? Yes.
2826. Did you not think that rather strange? No; I knew it was one against the other.
2827. But when he refused to go with you did you not think it strange? Yes, we did, until we inquired and found that Miss Osburn would not like his interference.
2828. Would it not have been proper to tell him that you were deputed by the house committee to go round, and that it was his duty, as an officer of the institution, to accompany you—to obey your orders? No. As we were debating the point Miss Osburn appeared, and she showed us through the place.
2829. President.] That was on a Thursday? Yes.
2830. Did she say anything? She said she did not get any notice that we were about to visit the institution, and she made an apology for not being there. She said she had not received any notice of our intention to visit the hospital. We did not think it necessary to give notice.
2831. Mr. Driver.] Did she say how long she had been away? I forget now. There was an under nurse going round with us.
2832. Who was the under nurse that went round with you? I do not know her name.
2833. Do I understand you to mean an under nurse, or one of the head nurses? One of the nurses under Miss Osburn. I took her to be one of the head nurses.
2834. Mr. Cowper.] Who were the gentlemen who accompanied you? Mr. Wise and Mr. Pearce.
2835. Do you consider that the matron should be more of a working woman than Miss Osburn is? Yes, I do. That is just my objection to Miss Osburn.
2836. She should be like the matron of what institution did you say? The Female Refuge, next the Benevolent Asylum.
2837. Why do you think so? The fact of the place being overrun with bugs is one reason; and if I had no other to advance it would be sufficient in my opinion. To cite the case of a young man, who entered a ward and paid his money for three weeks, and something like a week had gone over when he requested to be allowed to leave the institution because the bugs were actually getting into his mouth. We found that was not the only complaint. If there was a man with a bandaged arm there would be bugs crawling round it, and if a man had a bad leg there would be rats tearing at the poultice round it.
2838. President.] Was that stated to you? Yes, we were told that.
2839. Did you not state that it was not the duty of the nurses to clean the walls, and so on? Not to get on ladders to clean them.
2840. Do you know that Miss Osburn had been complaining of the dirty state of the place to the committee, and could not get it cleaned? She said so.
2841. If she complained of it several times, and a good deal of the work was such as required to be done by plasterers, what blame is to be attributed to her? I may state that I found one of the nurses had kept her apartment clean, and if Miss Osburn had taken care, the other wards would have been just the same.
2842. Did not the walls require cleaning? In some cases they did, but this Sister Mary took out the beds at night continually and cleaned them herself.
2843. Mr. Metcalfe.] Is she in the south wing? I am not sure where her wards are.
2844. President.] If it is there, the place being newer than the other, there would not be so many bugs in it? It is in the front building.
2845. Mr. Goold.] Had she one ward? The ward next the end. Her ward was thoroughly clean, so that the patients could sleep, and when she could do it I think the others could be made to do it.
2846. Mr. Ellis.] Were the beds there different to the beds in the other wards? No, there was no difference, but to thoroughly cleanse them it requires a man to unscrew them. She used to take them out and wash them, so that the patients could get a little sleep. But to thoroughly cleanse the wards it would be requisite to take out all the wood work. The question, however, is, whether another person in the position of Miss Osburn would tolerate such a state of things.
2847. Mr. Metcalfe.] Do you know that Miss Osburn informed the committee of the presence of the vermin? Well she stated so. One of the directors not long ago at a Board meeting, stated that he did not believe it. He believed that the statement was highly coloured, and at the time I remarked that one of two things must be the case—either the directors were aware of the evil and took no steps to remedy it, or they simply took their seats at the Board, and never went through the wards to see if there was anything wrong.
2848. Mr. Driver.] Who was the director who said he did not believe it? Mr. Raphael. He said at the time he had been through the institution and had had opportunities of seeing the place, and he did not believe the statement about the bugs. We had handed in our report.
2849. Mr. Goold.] Was that a report from the sub-committee appointed to examine? Yes. We sent in a written report.
2850. You say you had complaints from the patients as you went round, from time to time;—can you give us any distinct cases? A man named John M'Gill had a bath on the night previous to my being there, and he called the nurse's attention to the door being open and that he was cold, and the nurse told him to be quiet and mind his own business, and the door was kept open for some time, and he caught cold in consequence. The nurse was very cheeky to him. I called Miss Osburn's attention to the matter, and she gave the nurse a reprimand. The man, William Dickson, on the next bed to him, complained of the head nurse; that was the case of the man who was ordered a poultice for the morning at 10 o'clock, and did not get it until half-past 7 in the evening. I gave you that case before. There are many other cases, so many that I lost heart over it, and would go no more. But I had a case—a very serious case—a week back to-day, and I intended to bring it before the Board, but I was put out of heart, for it is a job to get the directors to believe that certain facts are true, and I have recommended people who disbelieve them to go and see for themselves. It is not hard to get complaints in the Infirmary. I was only pleased to find some wards in which there were no complaints.
2851. Mr. Ellis.] What do you think of the present state of the wards with regard to comfort? Very possibly I think they might be made comfortable.
2852. Have you any other fault to find with the nurses, besides their having danced occasionally? Well, I would not like to dwell upon it, that that was a fault. I would not like to make it a matter of complaint, but it does not look very seemly.
2853. You disapprove of dancing? By no means; but there is a time for all things.
2854. Can you say whether it was regular dancing, or what kind of dance it was? They took hold of each others hands. Do you think if you or I were lying there dying, would we like to see it? 2855.

2855. Was it a regular dance, or were they pulling each other about? It was dancing, and that is a thing which can be seen here any day.

2856. President.] When did you see it? About seven months ago. I lived there for twelve months in front of the place, and I was quite disgusted with the nurses. They all seemed too young and inexperienced.

2857. Mr. Cowper.] What age do you think that they should be? Between 30 and 40.

2858. Mr. Ellis.] What did you mean by "flirting";—did you mean that they were flirting with men? No nothing of that sort; they were flirting among themselves.

2859. Have you any decided objection to tell us who it was that had satisfied himself as to the injurious effects of the spirits given to patients in the hospital;—it seems a curious result? Not an unnatural result; just what we may expect to follow. I would rather like to see the party who told me before I mention his name.

2860. President.] If we had that party before us could we not ask him the question? I do not object to tell you, but I must ask him first.

2861. Were you a director when he told you this? Yes.

2862. Is he a paid officer? Yes.

2863. Did he tell you this privately? No, he told me outside the institution in general conversation.

2864. Mr. Metcalfe.] Have you had complaints as to the want of cleanliness, and the bad cooking and so on? As to the food and the cleanliness of it I think that is faultless. On one occasion I went to speak to a man, and I heard the nurse say if I had not called her by her name, so that the patient knew she was there, she should have got all the abuse possible for not letting the man smoke his pipe in the verandah near the blind room. Two men there lodged a very heavy complaint against the nurse, and I came to the conclusion that it was dangerous to receive any such complaints. I cautioned them. I found that they were exaggerating: and when I found what a man was suffering from I was cautious not to receive any complaint against the nurse, and I told the man to be careful and be thankful he had such quarters provided for him.

2865. Mr. Ellis.] Can you say now particularly why you consider Miss Osburn unfit for her position? Very often when I have called I have failed to find her take the interest in the institution that I would expect from one holding her position and with her salary.

2866. President.] How did she fail to show her interest in the institution? The nurses would have known their duty better if looked after properly.

2867. In the two cases that I have mentioned—the one where the poultice was left from 10 until half-past 7; and the other—there was great neglect.

2868. Mr. Ellis.] In what respects do you consider her unfit for her office? I consider that the nurses were inattentive: and she was absent on some occasions.

2869. You do not consider her a working nurse? No.

2870. These are the only cases which you can speak of? Yes, and the filthy state of the hospital, which was swarming with bugs.

2871. But assuming that that was not her fault, what other objections have you against her? I think I have already stated the want of attention to the nurses.

2872. Do you mean to say that she is inattentive to the patients? If not herself those under her are. I have gone in, and in two wards out of three there has been no nurse there at all.

2873. Were they not close by? I do not know. They were not in the ward.

2874. President.] Might they not have gone down for water, which is not always on? That is quite possible.

2875. Did the patients complain of inattention on the part of Miss Osburn or the nurses? I have given you two cases. Surely the case of a man lying with a sore and the old poultice on it hardened like a brick is a bad case.

2876. What is the man's name? I think Dickson is the man. Dickson is the name of one of them.

2877. Mr. Cowper.] Miss Osburn reprimanded the nurse? Yes, so she told me.

2878. Have you any doubt she did? No.

2879. Mr. Ellis.] Supposing she were the fittest person in the world such a thing as that might happen—mind you have not given her the power of dismissing and appointing nurses? I should be sorry to give her such power.

2880. Mr. Goold.] Would you give anyone that power? I think the directors are there.

2881. Mr. Cowper.] Would you give the power to Mrs. Malbon? I should not like to answer that question.

2882. Mr. Driver.] You answer it unhesitatingly in the case of Miss Osburn? I would certainly not give it to her. She absents herself from the place over and over again. It was quite a common thing.

2883. Mr. Ellis.] Who told you that? The manager.

2884. Mr. Driver.] You understood that it was done repeatedly? Yes; and I believe if she was the lady superintendent she had a perfect right to enter her name and leave word where she was gone to, so that she might be sent for if anything required her presence.

2885. Mr. Cowper.] Did no one in the institution know where she was gone to? I am not aware.

2886. Then you think that is so blamable an act as to unfit her for her office? I think two days and-a-half is too long for her to stay away.

2887. Mr. Metcalfe.] Did not Mr. Stephen mention that she had told him she was going away for a day or so;—did he not tell us that, and say that he had forgotten to mention it; that he had acquiesced as secretary;—don't you remember his reporting that to the Board? It might be.

2888. More than once she has applied to him in this way? It might be so; but I was impressed with the fact that it was so common that the directors took no notice of it.

2889. Mr. Ellis.] Have you told us every cause of complaint against Miss Osburn? I presume that I am not here to lodge any complaint against Miss Osburn.

2890. Everything that you think you should urge against her—our object is to report on the working of the institution? I am here to report and state what I think would improve the working of the institution—not to lodge a complaint as a private party.

2891. We want evidence with reference to her management? I believe that she is a lady not without ability, and it does not rest with me that that ability is not brought to bear on the institution. I think that the nurses who are there, and the various departments, would be better than they are if they were looked after.

2892. President.] Do you not think that it is calculated to impair the efficiency of the nursing system if, when

J. Paxton,
Esq.

- J. Paxton, Esq.

- when a person at the head of the nursing staff makes complaints against those under her, the directors sustain the latter in their positions? I believe that would sustain the disorder.
2893. I suppose that the best servants are fractious sometimes even under the best masters? Yes.
2894. And do you think that Miss Osburn's unfitness is proved by the two acts of which you told us, and which have occurred in a place in which there are thirty servants? The great evil is now remedied—the filthy, dirty state of the place.
2895. But with regard to the instances you have given us, might not such cases be expected in a place where there are thirty servants? I think not.
2896. Do you know of any household where, even among a few servants, there are not constant acts of neglect that have to be noticed by the master or the mistress? I have been for seventeen years an employer of labour, and that largely, and I can appeal to the men under me to say that I am not hard to please; but I think by being orderly yourself, and laying down rules by which your men may be guided, you will have order in your house or establishment.
2897. And do you not think that if there are persons constantly interfering with the carrying out of discipline it is calculated to break it down altogether? I think if the duties of the manager and the lady superintendent were properly defined, and they were given to understand that these were their duties, it would be the duty of the house committee to see that they were carried out.
2898. Mr. Goold.] Have not the duties of the lady superintendent and the manager been defined? I am not aware what has been done, but I am a total stranger as to where I could make a complaint if I found there was anything wrong.
2899. Mr. Metcalfe.] The duties of each are defined by the rules, and they always appeal to them if you ask them anything? Yes, I told the manager—in a kindly way at first—that I would be obliged to him if he would cease to complain to me.
2900. Mr. Couper.] Have you had any complaints about the cooking? Yes, many complaints about rotten eggs, and so on.
2901. I thought you said just now that the cooking was faultless? That referred to the food generally and the cleanliness of the dishes. I have examined the soup and tasted it, but I have not seen the rotten eggs and the bad potatoes. Anything I have seen I have had remedied. The cooking is very good indeed.
2902. Have you not seen that dishes, light things for persons in their last moments, were brought up in such a way that they could not touch them? I have not seen it—I have tasted the soup.
2903. But there are little things for persons in their last illnesses which require great delicacy? I have not seen them.
2904. Mr. Ellis.] What bad provisions have you seen there? I have not seen anything bad.
2905. I understood you to say you had? Oh, I have seen it very passable—the food and the cleanliness of the dishes was very good.
2906. President.] Do you know whether the manager has been seen under the influence of liquor? Well, I never saw him.
2907. What makes you hesitate so long? Because it is a very delicate question.
2908. Mr. Driver.] Has it ever been reported to you in any way that he has been so seen? That is a question that I decline to answer.
2909. President.] Did the officer who made these statements about the effects of stimulants upon the patients make any statements about the sobriety of the manager? You may be sure that I went to some trouble to recommend the discontinuance of wines and spirits, and to give them an equivalent in money if necessary. I thought if the Government had engaged to give these people so much wines and spirits, and they were engaged under that understanding, it would be best to give them the money. I have a motion to do that, and I do not do it without giving my reasons.
2910. Did you make any comment on the character of the manager for sobriety? I made reference to him in common with all the servants.
2911. Does the manager bear a character for sobriety? I decline to answer the question.
2912. Mr. Goold.] Have you had any complaints from the patients that they do not get the wines and spirits that are allowed by the doctors? I have not.
2913. You have said in a previous part of your evidence that the Board of directors is too large? Yes.
2914. Do you consider that clergymen should not be on the Board? I think that they should not. I think that they create great dissension.
2915. Have there been instances of that in your time on the Board? Not so much on the Infirmary Board as on other institutions.
2916. You would exclude them from all Boards? Yes, from all Boards.
2917. How long have you devoted yourself to these things? Two years—ever since I came to reside in Sydney. I have been two years in connection with the Randwick Institution, I think.
2918. Mr. Ellis.] It has been suggested to us that the honorary secretaries should be done away with, and that a competent paid secretary should be appointed, who should have the entire charge of the financial matters and the general supervision of the Infirmary? In lieu of the manager.
2919. Either a manager or a secretary; call him what you please—I presume it amounts to the same thing;—would you approve of that? That would entirely depend on the appointment.
2920. I am not speaking of any individual. Would you vest the entire management and general supervision in one officer? Oh, yes.
2921. Then, it has been suggested by Miss Nightingale, that the whole responsibility for the entire management of the discipline and the training of the nurses should be vested in one female head, who should be directly responsible to the Board;—would you approve or disapprove of that? I am not prepared to give any opinion.
2922. Mr. Couper.] How often during the day do you think that the lady superintendent should visit the wards? That would be left to the lady's own taste. She should go where there was a very bad case, wherever she could soothe suffering.
2923. Do you not think it is more the duty of a person in Miss Osburn's position to direct the officers than to do the work? I do not ask her to do the work, but I think she is bound to superintend.
2924. Do you not think that is more her duty? Certainly. I would not ask her to work.
2925. And if she is in the wards to see that the officers do their work, and to see the patients, and hear any any complaints they have to make;—is not that enough? That depends on the people under her, if she has confidence in them.

J. Paxton,
Esq.

2926. You are supposing something to exist that we do not know does exist. Do you not think if she visits the wards twice a day it is enough, instead of her sitting there hour after hour? There is a difference in walking through and going in and sitting down.

19 May, 1873.

2927. Have you seen her go there without taking any interest in the patients? With the exception of the last time I have never met her there but once.

2928. Is it not possible she might have been there a dozen times without your knowing it? She might; but I have asked several patients and they state that sometimes for a day, or a couple of days, they have not been visited by her.

2929. Did they refer to these absences of hers? I do not suppose that they knew anything about them.

2930. You were a director? I was.

2931. Did you make any report about this to the committee? I did not.

2932. President.] Do you not think it would have been better to have done so? There were so many things to take notice of; there were these books—these novels, that I mentioned,—and you have not taken any notice of them.

2933. Mr. Ellis.] Do you think the Board should tell patients what books they are to read? I think where the Board purchases books they should be proper ones.

2934. And would you make patients read what books you thought proper? Yes; I think when the Board spends money in buying books they should be right ones.

2935. President.] Do you know that the Infirmary has bought books? I am not aware.

2936. Did you not say just now that they did? I lodged a complaint, and there were some people on the Board quite as satisfied that the novels should be read as that the Bible should be.

2937. Mr. Cowper.] Have instructions been given to have these books removed on the Saturday night? No; a member gave notice of it on Monday week last.

2938. Then how do you hold Miss Osburn responsible? I did not say that I held Miss Osburn responsible.

2939. I understood you to attribute the blame to her? No; to the management of the institution.

2940. But she has the management of these wards? It must be to her then.

2941. Do you think that she has any power to take these novels away from them? That I am not aware of.

2942. President.] Would it not be a gross act of tyranny to take away a book that a person was reading? If I were in an institution of this kind I would conform to the rules.

2943. Are there any rules? Not that I am aware of, but there ought to be.

2944. Mr. Driver.] Then it is the fault of the directors? Well, it is.

2945. Would you compel them to read the Bible on Sunday? There is no good to be done by compulsion.

2946. Would you compel them? No; only by moral suasion.

2947. Mr. Cowper.] But if these books were on the table the patients might be prevented reading them by moral suasion? Yes; but I think the directors should not allow them to be there.

2948. But Miss Osburn may not be able to prevent it? No; it is the fault of the management.

2949. President.] Have you made any motion on the subject? No; I have a motion with respect to the surgical cases on the Sabbath, and until that is settled I do not intend to move in any other matter; and with regard to that, the manager was not ready with the papers that I require.

2950. Mr. Ellis.] Has the manager made complaints to you? He made general remarks to me at first, and I refused to hear him, and told him I would take my own course; and refused to be dictated to by him.

2951. Mr. Cowper.] Were the bed-clothes in a dirty state when you made that inspection you spoke of? The window-curtains were like soot, and bed-curtains also.

2952. But the bed-clothes were clean? I would not undertake to say that, but I say that the window-blinds were abominable, and so were the windows.

2953. Would it not be indecent to send women up to clean the windows in wards were men were in bed? Yes, we thought so, and we ordered the employment of two men to do it.

2954. Mr. Ellis.] Are the wards in a bad state now? No, they are very passable. The only fault I see is that the window-blinds are only about one half of the length of the window, and the afternoon sun shines in and annoys the patients. I stated that to Miss Osburn, and she said that as the windows were to be heightened it would be folly to spend money at present on fresh blinds.

2955. Mr. Gould.] Have you had complaints as to the curtains of the beds? Yes; that they were dirty.

2956. No complaints as to the patients being bitten for want of them? No.

2957. From what you have heard or seen, have you any reason to doubt Miss Osburn's statement that she goes through the wards at 6 o'clock in the morning, again at mid-day, and again in the evening, and at other times in the case of any patient who may be particularly ill;—have you any reason to doubt that she goes through all the wards three times a day? I should doubt it very much, but it is another thing to bring facts to prove that she does not do so. I come here unprepared to prove these things on the moment; but I should doubt it very much. When she was away for two days and a-half we were much put out to find that the officers and the nurses and those in the institution seemed to treat it as a thing quite common.

2958. President.] What nurses? I cannot tell the name of any nurse but one.

2959. Who is that? That is Sister Mary.

2960. She is one of those who originally came out with Miss Osburn? That is the only one whose name I know of.

2961. And that is the only one who makes charges against Miss Osburn? No, she does not make charges against Miss Osburn. I cannot refer you to any who do that. I say that Sister Mary is the only nurse whose name I can mention, and the only one I approve of as a nurse.

2962. Can you name any one on whose authority you can say that Miss Osburn does not visit the wards three times a day? No, I cannot.

2963. Mr. Driver.] I think I understood you to say that when you were inquiring about her you were "put out"? We were perplexed to think that such an institution should have the head wanting for days at a time, and that the officers and directors should treat it so lightly—that Miss Osburn could go when she pleased.

- J. Paxton, Esq.
2964. Can you give us the names of any officers of the institution who thought lightly of it? I cannot.
2965. Mr. Cowper.] I suppose you considered that they treated it lightly because they did not make an apology to you? I don't know what they thought; I know what I thought.
2966. They did not make any apology? I did not want an apology.
2967. How did they show that they treated it lightly? We said we were astonished to find an institution like this with the head gone, and the manager said it was quite common.
2968. Did the nurses say so? No, I think not, but this one left in charge said she was always left to take charge in Miss Osburn's absence.
2969. Was she not fitted to be in charge? I think Miss Osburn was paid for it, and she should be there.
2970. But was this nurse fitted to take charge? I do not know anything about her. I would not know her if I saw her.
2971. President.] How did they show that they treated it lightly? We asked if Miss Osburn was in the habit of going out, and she said yes, and she was left in charge when Miss Osburn went out.
2972. Well, how should she have acted then? We said we were surprised to find that Miss Osburn was gone, and she remarked that Miss Osburn went out whenever she felt disposed, and they pointed to the book to show the hours that she went out and the hours when she returned.
2973. Who made the entries in the book—Miss Osburn herself? No, the manager made them.
2974. Mr. Ellis.] The rules say it is the gatekeeper's place to do that? Yes.
2975. President.] Are you aware that the manager is not on the premises from night until morning? Yes.
2976. Should he not be there? Yes, he should reside on the premises.
2977. Mr. Ellis.] When you visit the institution do you go all round the premises? Yes, if I have time.
2978. Did you ever visit the place where the clothes are kept? I did not.
2979. Would you be surprised to hear that the verminous clothes of patients are kept in the south wing, immediately under the wards? I am not aware of it.
2980. Do you think that they would not be likely to generate vermin all through the building? It is very possible.
2981. Mr. Driver.] Is it not extremely probable? Well, before I could pass an opinion, I would have to see the place, and then I could speak, but it is only guesswork now.
2982. Mr. Ellis.] It has been stated to us that the dirty verminous clothes are tied up in bundles and tossed in there just as they are taken off the patients' backs, and that, without being washed, aired, or fumigated, they are given back to them when they are discharged;—what would you think of that? I say without hesitation that the manager and Miss Osburn would be unfitted for their duties. I know that the lady has qualifications if they are properly brought out, but I question whether the manager has. He is not the style of man.
2983. There is one thing you may not be aware of and that is, that the clothes of patients who die from venereal or other contagious diseases are given unwashed to poor and perhaps respectable patients—are given out to them in the very state in which they were taken off the dead patients? Shocking.
2984. Would you be surprised to hear of some poor respectable honest woman being turned out of the place with the clothes of some unfortunate diseased woman who has died. You will scarcely credit that but it is done constantly; would you think it a highly objectionable proceeding? I should rather think so.
2985. Mr. Driver.] Who would be to blame for that—the directors or the manager? Well, if my attention was called to it I should be much to blame if I did not take steps to remedy it, and if it was not remedied I should want to know why. The difficulty is that we do not know where to go to. In this case if I were to go to the manager and ask about it he would turn round and refer me to some by-law touching on this, and I would go to something else and get perfectly bamboozled, and turn away and walk home.
2986. Mr. Ellis.] Would you vest the whole management of the institution in one or two officers and the Board? Well, if they can find time to attend; the sub-committee divide the work a good deal.
2987. But it is a round-about way? We manage to get along.
2988. Mr. Metcalfe.] Would it not be better to have a Board of six directors, who would work together? Yes, if they would work together it would be much better.
2989. President.] Is there anything further you wish to add? No, except that I have no desire to complain against any one. All that I have said is from a desire for the better working of the institution. Let that be clearly understood.

S: H. Pearce, Esq., J.P., member of the House Committee, Sydney Infirmary, called in and examined:—

- S. H. Pearce, Esq., J.P.
19 May, 1873.
2990. President.] You are one of the directors of the Sydney Infirmary? Yes.
2991. How long have you occupied that position? About three months.
2992. That is the first occasion of your being connected with the institution? Yes, except as a subscriber.
2993. Have you formed any opinion as to whether it is desirable that the managing body should be so large as it is? I have had scarcely time to investigate this matter, as I have only been connected with it for a short period;—do you mean with reference to the nurses or the directory?
2994. I said the managing body. Well, I have scarcely had time to investigate these matters—I have been connected with the institution for so short a time.
2995. Are there any observations that you wish to offer to the Commission? I can only say what little I know about the place of my own knowledge. I can only speak of what I have seen.
2996. Have you observed that there is a divided authority there between the manager and the lady superintendent? I observed that the first day I attended the meeting; I saw that there was a divided authority acting prejudicially to the interests of the institution.
2997. Have you considered the expediency, considering the large amount which the Government contribute to the funds of the Infirmary, of their being represented on the Board by some persons nominated by the Government as directors? I think that the Government should be represented. I think that the Government should have the power of appointing a certain number of directors to act with those who are appointed by the subscribers. It would be only fair, and it would be attended with great advantage to the public generally and conduce to the proper regulation of the affairs of the institution.

2998. Is it desirable that the Board should be composed entirely of laymen? I think so. I would not permit any clergyman to be on any of these Boards if I could prevent it. I believe, as I have said before publicly, that they would be better employed in looking after the duties of their office than in attending these Boards. I have my own reasons for that opinion, and I have no objection to give them.

S. H. Pearce,
Esq., J.P.

2999. Mr. Driver.] I would like to hear them? Clergymen generally are not men of business, and the consequence is that they are not so well acquainted with matters of business or domestic arrangement as laymen, because it does not generally come under their province. They know little or nothing about business matters, and therefore, I think, the whole management would be better in the hands of laymen, who would be business men, and understand how to act. Again, there is another matter in reference to them. It is well known that clergymen, where they have any power on these Boards, are constantly being imposed upon. People will go to them and make complaints and tell their tales, and they are sometimes so tender-hearted that frequently they give recommendations which should not be given at all. This does not refer to one class of ministers or clergymen only; it is the case, more or less, with clergymen of all denominations, and is the cause of angry debates and much unpleasantness.

3000. Mr. Ellis.] Of course you would secure them the most perfect freedom for the proper discharge of their duties? What duties?

3001. Their clerical duties? Just so. I would give them every opportunity of visiting patients and performing the rites of their respective Churches, but no other authority or power whatever.

3002. Mr. Goold.] Would you allow them to give orders for the admission of patients? No, I would not allow them to give orders at all, or to interfere in any way with the management.

3003. Mr. Metcalfe.] Are they not the most natural persons for poor people to apply to for admission? They may be the most natural persons for poor people to apply to, but it is a well known fact also that there are laymen to whom these parties can apply and obtain better relief than they can by applying to the clergymen.

3004. Mr. Cowper.] It would be open to the clergyman to send a man to some other person to get an order for admission? Certainly, I would have no objection to that, but I think that they should not be allowed to recommend people to the Board or to the Government as a right.

3005. Mr. Metcalfe.] But there is a widespread notion that the clergy are allowed to recommend them to the Board, they are persons to whom people would apply? I cannot see any great difficulty in that, and I trace many of the difficulties with which we have to contend to the recommendation of patients by clergymen.

3006. President.] Of what institution are you speaking? Of the charitable institutions generally.

3007. You are connected with the Randwick Institution? Yes, I am one of its directors, and have been so for sixteen years I think.

3008. And you see the evil there of the clergymen making these recommendations? I do; and we have cause to denounce it.

3009. Mr. Ellis.] They have the right to make recommendations? Yes, but fortunately the Board is not bound to accept them.

3010. But can they recommend to the Infirmary? Yes, at one time they could; but now, I believe, they can only recommend in the same way as any other subscriber.

3011. President.] You know of a system by which persons can recommend applicants to the Colonial Secretary for admission? I do, and think advantage is often taken of it.

3012. Do you not think that that system has a tendency to diminish the number of subscribers to the Infirmary? Not a doubt of it; and it tends also to increase the number of patients. It diminishes subscriptions and increases pauperism.

3013. The facility with which people can get rid of applicants in this way is too great? I think so, and it should be put a stop to at once if the country is to be saved from pauperism and ruin.

3014. Do you think it would be desirable, from anything you have seen, to give a resident medical officer some power of discharging patients? I think that the resident medical officer should be the person in charge of the institution generally—that is, he should be the head of the institution, and should be responsible to the Board for everything that takes place in the Infirmary.

3015. Mr. Ellis.] Should he be responsible for the stores? He should be the head of the department, and until there is a head that institution will never prosper or give satisfaction to the public. There is a divided authority now, and an antagonism between the parties now superintending.

3016. Would you place the nursing staff under that gentleman's control? Yes, every one, and everything in the place should be under his control. If it was necessary to appoint a head nurse or lady superintendent, or whatever she might be called, nevertheless he should be the head of the department, and the responsible person.

3017. President.] Although he might be a young man of 24? I would not appoint a young man of 24, but a man of greater experience and age.

3018. Mr. Cowper.] What salary would you give him? A good salary to a competent person.

3019. What salary would you give him? I do not know what is paid to these gentlemen for such services.

3020. Mr. Ellis.] Half the subscriptions would not be enough to pay the salary of a qualified person? I believe the house surgeon of the Sydney Infirmary is "duly qualified," and now receives a salary of £250, and if £300 or £500 were given you might get the man you required, and act with economy in so doing.

3021. Do you think you could get such a man as you have described for £500 a year? I do not know, but I believe you could.

3022. Mr. Driver.] Could you get one for £2,000? I do not know; but if we can get a duly qualified house surgeon to take charge of the hospital for £250 you can surely get another for the higher salary I have named.

3023. But is he not commencing his profession? Yes, but "duly qualified" nevertheless.

3024. President.] And is it not as well to have a man who will remain permanently? Yes, it is indeed. Such as Dr. Houston did for the old amount of salary.

3025. Is it not a fact that the office now is generally taken by young men who are commencing their profession, and looking about for a start in life? No doubt it is so, and that is a difficulty which the directors have to contend with.

- S. H. Pearce, Esq., J.P.
19 May, 1873.
3026. Are you aware that Miss Nightingale's views are directly opposed to what you have stated? Undoubtedly; but Miss Nightingale's views should not be the views of the directory, if they are not satisfied.
3027. Can you doubt the high authority of Miss Nightingale? Yes, after what I have seen.
3028. Have you been through hospitals in England? No, except at Gloucester.
3029. How then have you seen the effect of Miss Nightingale's system? I beg your pardon. I understood you to be speaking of Miss Osburn, in Sydney.
3030. Are you acquainted with any of Miss Nightingale's works? I have read some of her remarks.
3031. Are you aware that this idea of vesting the whole management of an institution of this kind in a resident medical officer is disapproved of by her? It may be so, and without reason.
3032. And that she points out that it is likely to fail? But I suppose she is not infallible. I should be sorry to think her so.
3033. Mr. Driver.] And I presume you do not wish to be considered infallible either? No, very far from it. I have but little more to say now.
3034. President.] Your opinion is founded on what you have seen of institutions here? Yes, on what I have seen of the Sydney Infirmary. I visited an hospital at Gloucester many years ago, which was then conducted well.
3035. How long was that ago? About thirty years.
3036. Are you aware that there have been great changes on the system of hospital management since then? No doubt of it, but that hospital was carried on on very good principles, kept clean, and gave great satisfaction.
3037. Were there wardsmen there or female nurses? Both wardsmen and female nurses under one manager.
3038. Mr. Gould.] Which would you prefer? I would undoubtedly have all females in the female wards, but, I think, to have young female nurses in the male wards is altogether imprudent, and unnecessary.
3039. That is a mere matter of opinion, not arising from anything that you have seen? No, not from any wrong I have seen, but as men could be procured for such purposes, I think it would be better to do so.
3040. You are not aware of any abuses arising from that system? No, certainly not; but the present nurses appear too young for such services.
3041. You have visited the Infirmary? Yes, I go there occasionally.
3042. You take an interest in it? Yes, I am a director, and a short time ago I was appointed one of a sub-committee to examine and report upon the state of the wards, and the institution generally.
3043. And being in the wards for the purpose of examining and reporting upon the place, did you notice anything wrong in this system? With reference to the morality of the matter—no; excepting what I have before stated.
3044. Mr. Ellis.] Are you satisfied with the nursing as it is now carried on there? No.
3045. What are your objections to it? My objections to the nursing are, that when the sub-committee visited the institution, we saw there were too many nurses. The report we brought up recommended the Board to discharge some of the nurses, and employ women to scrub the place, and keep it clean and free from vermin.
3046. Was it not proposed to establish a training school for nurses? Not since I have been connected with the institution. I have only been there about three months, so that it is very little that I have either seen or heard about its management.
3047. Were any nurses dismissed on the receipt of your report? I believe not.
3048. President.] Was it a written report? Yes.
3049. How long is it since it was sent in? I think about six weeks. Mr. Paxton, Mr. Wise, and myself formed the sub-committee.
3050. Mr. Driver.] Did you agree to the report? Yes, we all did. We were appointed to examine and report, which report we signed.
3051. Mr. Ellis.] What do you complain of in the state of the institution as it now stands? I found the beds and the wards in the old building in a most filthy condition—dirty—with myriads of bugs.
3052. I am speaking of the present state of the establishment? Since it has been cleaned?
3053. I refer to the present? I believe the institution now is nearly free from vermin, but I have not had any opportunity of investigating the matter, because the visitors are only appointed to go round on certain days, and we can only go, as visiting inspectors, on the days for which we are summoned.
3054. Do you think that the patients are well cared for? They were not at the time I allude to; they complained loudly about the vermin.
3055. I am speaking of the present? I do not know, because I have not been round during the past week. I have only received my summons to visit the institution this week, and shall begin to-morrow.
3056. Then you cannot say anything of your own knowledge as to the state of things now? Not of my own knowledge now, but I believe the patients are more comfortable than formerly.
3057. Mr. Driver.] When do you visit the institution? I commence to-morrow—to inspect.
3058. There are set days appointed for visitors? Yes.
3059. And these days are known to the persons in the institution? Yes; the notice we receive is in this form:—"You are appointed, according to the present roster, house visitors of the institution for the week ending Monday, 26th May."
3060. Mr. Ellis.] Has the manager made complaints to you about the affairs of the institution? Yes; he has answered many questions.
3061. What did he tell you? I made inquiry as to why the institution was in such a disgusting state, because I thought, until I read the rules, that it was his fault as manager.
3062. What did he say? He said it was not his place to keep the wards clean, but that it was the place of the lady superintendent—Miss Osburn. He said he had no business to go in there to look after it at all. I asked him why he did not report it to the Board, and he said it was no part of his duty to do so; that his duties were defined by the rules, and all he had to do was to attend to his own duties.
3063. Did he make any other complaints? After the committee was appointed we met, and agreed to meet again and inspect the building at 9 o'clock on Thursday morning. I was there first, and asked for Miss Osburn. If, as he stated, it was not his duty to take charge of the wards, I thought it right to ask for her to come round with us and give us such information as we needed, for we were all new directors, and knew but little about the institution. We asked for Miss Osburn to go round, and he said that she was not at home. I asked where she was, and he said he did not know. I asked when she went away, and he said, "There is the book; look at it." I looked at the book, and saw an entry where Miss Osburn had left on Tuesday night at 5 o'clock, and this was Thursday morning at 9.

S. H. Pearce,
Esq., J.P.

3064. Mr. Gould.] Were the entries made in that book of the absence of all of the place? Yes, that book would show them, I think, as there were many other entries.

3066. Did the manager make any other complaints to you? No; he only answered questions which I put to him about the books, the general management, and officers' duties.

3067. Has he made complaints to you lately? No, he has only answered my questions. There was a resolution passed in reference to each officer entering his or her name in the book whenever such officer left the institution, and the book was kept at the porter's lodge. They entered their names when they left and when they returned. I brought up that resolution to be passed, and my attention was drawn to a rule to the same effect. I said, "Where is this book;—is the rule carried out?" and what I remember was, that the rule was not strictly attended to. So it was after that decided by the Board that the rule should be strictly attended to.

3068. President.] The rule is, so far as I remember, that the names should be entered in a book kept in the gate-keeper's lodge? It was a rule that no officer should leave the institution without entering the name in a book to be kept by the manager, and in his absence to be kept by the porter. I think that was it. The book has been kept since that time, and it was ordered to be laid on the table every Monday for the information of the committee.

3069. Mr. Ellis.] Do you know in whose charge the house visitors' book is? I think that it is in charge of the manager.

3070. It says in the rules that it shall be in charge of the superintendent? The rules are so ambiguous that I really cannot clearly understand them.

3071. Mr. Gould.] In this house-visitors' book that has been referred to, you enter, I presume, any charge that may be made against the management of the institution? So it appears by these rules. I did not know that until I received this summons last night. I can only state what I have seen in the Infirmary since I have been connected with it, and the first day I had any opportunity of seeing anything was when I went to inspect the place as one of the sub-committee; but of what took place previous to that I can say nothing, as I had not then been there more than a few times as a visitor.

3072. Have you seen any vermin on the beds? I have; some things that would disgust and frighten many persons to look at.

3073. Mr. Cowper.] Lately? Five or six weeks ago—that was before the cleaning took place. I have not been round since it was finished; I have not been empowered to go, and I merely looked at the place once after it had commenced, to see whether our recommendations had been carried out, or what had been done.

3074. Mr. Driver.] Cannot you as a director go when you please? I suppose I could, but when I went through I was directed to go. I should not like to go through the place, except as directed by the Board or by the house committee.

3075. Mr. Gould.] As house visitor you can go at any time during your week? Yes, at any time during the week, either by myself or with Mr. Wise.

3076. When you have gone round have the patients made any charges to you—any complaints? The time I went round was when I was appointed one of a sub-committee to inspect and report; and, as I was previously saying, Miss Osburn, after we had commenced the inspection, came into the institution—came back from where she had been visiting—and went round with us. We took the empty beds and examined them in her presence—had them turned out from the walls—examined the bed clothes and the curtains; and we found, as you will see by the report, that the floors were very dirty, the curtains on the beds were very dirty, the walls were very dirty, the plaster off in various places in the ceiling and the walls—holes in the floor, holes in the plaster—and the bedsteads, in some instances, almost one mass of bugs—not merely hundreds of thousands or millions of bugs, but myriads. I never saw any place in such a state in my life. Up the back curves of the bedsteads they were as thick as they could lie, also in all the joints. I put my hand on the top of a bedstead and my hand was nearly covered with bugs. All the crevices, and under the window-boards, were full of bugs in some of the wards of the old building.

3077. Did this occur in all the wards? In three or four or perhaps six of the wards. They are all mentioned in the report of the sub-committee. I inquired the reason of the bugs being allowed to accumulate, and the lady said it was on account of the old plaster and the old building. I said I thought that it could be remedied if the holes were plastered up and the beds taken out, cleaned, and washed with kerosene. I said, "A very little will cure this; if these broken places, where the bugs can get in, are filled up, and the places by the window-boards, and under the window-boards, cleaned well, it can be remedied." There were thousands of bugs in the holes and crevices of the plaster. You could see them almost everywhere—large numbers in the walls, under the window-sills, and in the empty nail-holes, where patients had put in nails to hang up their clothes. The empty nail-holes were full, and if you moved a small piece of plaster, there you found them packed together.

3078. Mr. Ellis.] Did Miss Osburn say that she had complained about this state of things? She did not say so then, but she said, "What can I do—I cannot clean it?" I said, "Have you no men in this institution?" She said, "That there were men who were under the supervision of the manager." I said, "Have you no authority over them," and she said, "No, that her girls had cleaned up as far as they could reach," and I saw that some one had been trying to wash the walls as high as they could reach. They had done that, but the washing of the walls only was mere useless work.

3079. Mr. Driver.] But some one had been trying to wash the walls as high as they could reach? They had;

S. H. Pearce, had; but the dirty state of the walls showed that there was no one to clean the place as it should have been cleaned. If I had seen such a thing in my own house I scarcely know what I should have done. There were also many large cobwebs in the wards and about the institution. Miss Osburn said her girls could not clean them away, and I stated that it would not be proper for girls to get up ladders in a ward where men were lying. I said I would make inquiry into the matter and see who was responsible. In every ward of the old building we noted the state of the curtains, the dirty walls, the dirty ceilings, and thousands or millions of bugs, as the case might be. We asked the patients about these things, but the nurses where there, and the patients, I could clearly see, did not like to say much in the presence of the nurses; but there were some of them who had the courage to do so; and there was one man who actually said that the bugs crawled into his mouth, and I did not wonder at it, from the myriads of bugs that we found in that ward and about that man's bedstead. The bars under the mattress were infested with bugs. There was one poor man, who was strapped down in his bed and had splints on, who complained bitterly about the bugs tormenting him. I should not have wondered if that man had died for the want of rest, &c.

3080. What was done in consequence of your report? I will tell you the whole of it: We went also into the new wing, and in the first ward we found the bugs. They had just commenced to establish themselves there. We marked down what we saw. In the next ward we did not find any. The next ward beyond that was clean, and as it should be. Of the other parts of the institution we could make no remark, except that we were satisfied with its condition. But where the majority of the male patients were, the state of the place was something so disgusting that if any person outside had told me such a state of things existed I could not have believed it. After we had finished our inspection we found that there were two or three men on the premises, and as that was the case we wanted to know how it was that these cobwebs, &c., had not been swept down. We found that the men were supposed to be controlled by the manager, and we found by the by-laws that the lady superintendent was responsible for the cleaning of the wards and keeping them in order. I believe I saw that in the rules, but when I came to look for it to-day I could not see it. I suppose it is in the by-laws. We brought up a report—the committee asked me to write it. We all signed it, and it was laid before the Board at their next meeting. We suggested what was to be done. I saw clearly what was to be done—that a little money would put the place in order. We recommended that the broken plaster should be cemented up, that the window-boards should be removed, and that the woodwork round the windows should be removed, and that cement plaster should be used there instead of wood. That the linings of the doors should be removed, cleaned, and replaced; and also, that some of the nurses should be discharged and some women appointed to scrub the floors and keep them clean, and that two men should be employed by the lady superintendent to take the bedsteads into the yard and have them cleaned with kerosene.

3081. Mr. Ellis.] She had no power to do that? It appears that according to the rules or by-laws she had, although she appeared not to know it.

3083. Had she power to replaster the walls? By no means. Further on the by-law says, "she shall have the power of engaging and discharging the female domestics employed in the institution"; and further on, "that she shall be empowered to engage extra assistance to meet any sudden serious emergency." So you see she has power to engage assistance for any "serious emergency." Surely this could be taken as a serious emergency.

3084. Mr. Couper.] But if she had reported it to the committee? Then they were to blame for not attending to the matter, and not Miss Osburn altogether.

3085. Could she do it of herself if the committee did not order it to be done? She should have done it on her own responsibility, under these rules. All she had to do was "to engage the men," and report to the committee that she had done so.

3086. President.] If the place was infested with bugs for many years previously was she to be blamed? No, if she reported it the committee should have seen to it.

3087. Can you find the rule to which you refer? No; these rules and by-laws are so jumbled up and divided into two books, which I have not. Here I see it says, with reference to the nurses, that "they shall be particularly attentive to the state of the bedding and see that it be kept clean and in repair, and that it is well aired before being used." This is part of the duties of the nurses, and they are under the lady superintendent.

3088. Who ordered the cleaning to be done? It was part of the recommendation in our report that the plastering should be repaired and the cleaning carried out; but the house committee thought that as the architects had sent in a statement that it would cost £600 to put the place in order—(they recommended that all the plaster should be removed, and that it should be replastered, and various other improvements made, in their plans and specifications, to cost about £600),—they thought it was better that the plan of the architects should be carried out, and that it was useless to touch the old plaster if the bugs could not be got rid of, and I believe the plan of the architects was to have been carried out by the committee.

3089. Mr. Ellis.] Was it carried out? No, it was not, for Miss Osburn, notwithstanding the decision of the house committee, as above stated, carried out a portion of what we had recommended in our report, although that report did not pass the house committee as recommended by us. Whether she misunderstood the chairman, who gave it to her verbally, I do not know, but she actually carried out a portion of what the sub-committee recommended, but what the house committee had not adopted or ordered.

3090. Was she reprimanded for that? Yes, I believe that Mr. Wise did say something in a friendly way to her, and I said something. I said that the orders of the committee should be always carried out, but that I was thankful to Miss Osburn, and would protect her as well as I could for having disobeyed the house committee, as she had by so doing destroyed to a large extent the vermin which infested the institution and so much annoyed the patients.

3091. Did Mr. Wise blame her? I think that he did, but in a friendly way.

3092. President.] Did he tell her that she was liable to dismissal for what she had done? He might have done so. I think that every servant and officer of the institution should obey the orders of the house committee. If every servant and officer of the institution took it upon themselves to disobey orders there would be no order or discipline at all,—they would be all masters, as indeed they now appear to be.

3094. Mr. Ellis.] Did she do it from over-zeal? I think so. She saw what a state the place was in; she, I believe, had not seen it so closely before, and it is very possible she never saw so much as she saw that day. I do not think that she wilfully disobeyed the orders of the committee, but if she did, on my part I fully exonerate her, for it was a step in the right direction. When I afterwards saw what she had done, I was very pleased to see the improvement. The wards looked so clean and healthy, and no presence of bugs. I stated this to the committee, and they decided to revoke the matter of the improvements to be made by the architects, and save the £600. 19 May, 1873.
3095. And that is owing to the improvement being carried out by Miss Osburn? Yes, as previously recommended by the sub-committee; and the house committee were slow to find that the improvements had been successful.
3096. Mr. Cowper.] Do you not think that the committee have been too slow in acting upon the recommendations of Miss Osburn? I do not like to cast reflections on the Board which I am connected with, as I do not know what her previous reports have been.
3097. President.] Do you think it is better to cast reflections upon Miss Osburn? I do not cast reflections upon any one, but some one must be to blame for such disorder.
3098. Mr. Goold.] Do you not think that the verminous condition of the place had lasted for many years? Yes, I am almost sure of that, from the colonies of bugs that were there, and the skins of bugs, where they had eaten one another.
3099. Mr. Cowper.] You talked of the filth of the floors;—what kind of filth was it—filth from these bugs? No; but they were very dirty.
3100. Did it appear to be slop from the meals being carelessly carried, or water spilled from carelessness? I do not think it was water—it was dirt.
3101. Other more disagreeable matters? No, I do not think it was that; but the floors were very dirty indeed. The boards were of Colonial hardwood, and would look dark, but were dirty by use.
3102. But that would not be dirt? Yes. It was the dirt we complained of—it was the want of sufficient scrubbers I suppose. I asked the question:—"How is it that these floors are so dirty?" And Miss Osburn said, "It was not the nurses' place to scrub floors." I quite agreed with her. They are, or ought to be, a superior order of women. I asked if she had not any women to clean the floors, and finding that she had none we suggested to the house committee that fewer nurses should be employed, and that other women should be engaged to scrub the floors; because we looked upon the nurses as a superior class of women, who were not to patch walls or scrub floors. That was a duty which the house committee should have seen performed, but I think it was the duty of the lady superintendent to see that the floors, and the clothes, curtains, and bedsteads were kept clean.
3103. Why did you recommend that some of the nurses should be discharged?—why did you believe that the patients could be attended to by a lesser number of nurses? Because we inquired into the state of things which existed before Miss Osburn came, and we heard that there was a certain number of women to scrub, and a certain number of nurses; we also found that Miss Osburn had discharged the scrubbing women and engaged more nurses instead, and that the cleaning was thereby neglected.
3104. Do you consider that you are a better judge than she is of the proper number of nurses required to look after the patients? Not at all; but we thought that if there were too many women to nurse, and too few to scrub and clean, it should be altered at once.
3105. President.] How did you know that there were too many nurses? We saw and were informed that there was a greater number of them than there used to be—all nurses, but no women to scrub and clean.
3106. But there might have been too few in former times? There might have been.
3107. Mr. Metcalfe.] The number of beds has been increased since then? Perhaps so. We were new members, and could not speak of our own knowledge with reference to previous matters.
3108. Mr. Goold.] There is one ward under the care of Nurse Mary? Yes, we gave her great credit for what she had attempted to do in the destruction of the vermin.
3109. What was the reason of the difference that existed between her ward and the others? As far as I remember, in the ward she had under her charge she had taken to pieces and scrubbed and cleaned thirteen bedsteads—I believe it was thirteen. She had herself, in her own time, taken these bedsteads to pieces and done all she could in the way of scrubbing the walls as high as she could reach. We thought great praise was due to her for doing what she had done; and it appeared a matter of impossibility for her to do more than she had done, without assistance.
3110. President.] But there were still bugs in her wards? Oh yes; she without assistance could not destroy them. I asked her how it was that the bedsteads could not be kept clean, though the walls could not be; she said that the beds were nearly always full, and that what she had cleaned she had done in her own time. There were large numbers of bugs in her ward, but I do not blame her at all, because it was a matter of impossibility for the girls to take these bedsteads to pieces and plaster up the walls. There were some empty beds in the wards and they were full of bugs, and I said, "Here are empty beds—why not get these cleaned—these are full of bugs?" but I do not blame her altogether for having bugs in her ward, as she could not, under the circumstances, prevent them.
3111. You asked how it was there were so many bugs in the empty beds? They said they had no assistance to clean them. They said they had no men, except those who were under the control of the manager, and they had other duties to perform under the manager, and so they could not get any assistance. Miss Osburn when she commenced did so in earnest; she cleared out the wards, went to a master-man and had the place done nicely and properly, and though she exceeded her orders I was very glad to see it.
3112. In what way did Miss Osburn exceed her duty? She plastered up and coloured the walls and whitewashed the ceilings, instead of leaving it "a little longer," for the architects to carry out their plan.

WEDNESDAY,

NOTE (on revision):—28th May.—The works are now so far completed, at a cost of about £140, and all that is required, to preserve order and ensure proper discipline, is some competent person as head of the department, and a few alterations in the rules and by-laws.

WEDNESDAY, 21 MAY, 1873.

Members Present:—

WILLIAM CHARLES WINDEYER, Esq., PRESIDENT.

MICHAEL METCALFE, Esq.
EYRE G. ELLIS, Esq.SAMUEL GOOLD, Esq.
CHARLES COWPER, JUN., Esq.

Rudolph Schuette, Esq., M.D., late House Surgeon, Sydney Infirmary, called in and examined:—

- R. Schuette, Esq., M.D.
21 May, 1873.
3113. President.] I believe you were for some time house surgeon of the Sydney Infirmary? Yes.
3114. For how long? For two years and a-half, or it may be a little more.
3115. How long is it since you left? I left in 1870; I am three years away now; a little more than three years.
3116. Then of the present state of the Infirmary you can say nothing? Nothing.
3117. You have not in any way been connected with it since? Not in any way.
3118. When you were in the Infirmary did you come to any opinion as to whether the managing body of the institution was too large? Yes; I believe that there are too many members on the committee altogether.
3119. What leads you to form that conclusion? Because of the requisitions made by me on several occasions, which would go for several weeks before I could get an answer.
3120. Were the requisitions to carry out objects for the interests of the institution? Yes, for the benefit of the patients.
3121. Do you recollect any instances of that—specific instances? I made frequent applications for a new dead-house; for clothes for patients; shoes, and all sorts of things; also about drugs, an electric apparatus, and things which were immediately under my control, such as surgical instruments and things of that kind. It was a long way round before you could get anything—it was a red-tape system. Two or three meetings would pass before any result was arrived at.
3122. Had you any power when you were here to discharge patients? According to the rules no power.
3123. Not even for insubordination at that time? I always did.
3124. You exercised the power? Yes; I think that was in the rules.
3125. You had no power to discharge, except for insubordination? No.
3126. Do you think it desirable that such a power should be vested in the resident medical officers, either absolutely or subject to the approval of the Board,—do you think that the resident medical officers should recommend certain patients should be discharged? I think it would be a good thing as long as you could depend on the medical officers—that is, if they had the confidence of the managing body. At that time I may tell you that I discharged patients at my own discretion, and took in patients at my own discretion, and I had, by that means, a larger number of people through the hospital, and I think I did more good than would otherwise have been done.
3127. We are told that patients are admitted by the members of the honorary medical staff in turn? That was always the case; but in former times there was, I think, some little difference.
3128. Did you observe a tendency on the part of some of these gentlemen at times—I won't say the whole of them—to keep parties in the Infirmary until their turn to admit comes round again? I have seen that.
3129. So that people were kept in the hospital unnecessarily, and people who ought to have been admitted were kept out? Yes.
3130. Then would you propose as a remedy for that to establish any rule to the effect that the resident medical officers should report to the Board after a patient has been in a certain time, or when they think it is desirable? I do not think it is the duty of the medical officers. It should be the manager, as he keeps the book which is laid before the monthly meeting of the directors.
3131. But the manager is not in a position to know whether patients are kept in unnecessarily? Oh, the book might be laid before the medical officers, and they could make their remarks on the cases.
3132. Would not the effect be just the same if the medical officers reported to the managing body whenever they thought a patient should be discharged? Yes it could be done in that way, but I think there is a rule now in force that patients who are so long in the hospital, so far recovered as to go into the convalescent ward—if there is a patient who has been three months in the hospital, the surgeon to whom he belongs gets a letter to inquire why the patient should not be discharged.
3133. Mr. Cowper.] There used to be a convalescent ward, or wards for convalescent patients? Yes, there used to be. Here is the rule I speak of (referring to by-laws of the Sydney Infirmary.) It is to the effect that no patient shall be kept in the Infirmary more than six weeks, except in extraordinary cases. Afterwards there was a rule passed that every medical man who has got a patient above three months in the hospital should be written to, and asked the reason why he should not be discharged. That is one of the rules, but I do not think it has been embodied here.
3134. President.] Was that rule carried out in practice when you were there? No, because very often a medical man had got seven or eight patients in for three, or four, or five months, and cases like that could not be reported.
3135. Are there not persons in the Infirmary who could be treated with just as great advantage to themselves, and more economically to the Government in some other institutions of a charitable kind? Most decidedly. Any patient may be taken in if it is a doubtful case, and treated for a few days, and then if it is a case that a medical man can do nothing with, that patient should be discharged.
3136. Did it come under your observation when you were here, that in some instances the rules of the institution which should have been observed by patients were allowed to be violated with the assent of the honorary medical staff? Well, I cannot say that. I do not remember any occasions of that kind.
3137. Were you satisfied with the way in which the dispensing was carried out here? Well, I think I made same other arrangements; in the beginning I think there was something that I did not like, but I think I changed it. I forget what it was. It was something about sending up the medicine, and sending the empty bottles down. I think I arranged it in a more business-like way than it was done at first. I think I established a rule to go three times through the ward, morning, noon, and night, to collect the orders.

3138. Who did this? There were two boys kept who collected the cards. There is a prescription and a diet on the card; and the card goes first to the dispenser, and then to the store for the diet. I think there has been an alteration made in the diet since I left. There have been little forms printed, about which I know nothing; I only speak of what the system was when I was here.
3139. We are told that delay frequently takes place in patients getting their medicines, sometimes to the extent of 24 hours? That is absurd.
3140. Do you mean that it does not take place? I mean that it is absurd that such a thing should occur in a hospital.
3141. You consider it bad management? Yes, very bad management.
3142. And it is bad management if the medicine goes to the wrong wards and the wrong patients? That is worse still.
3143. And we are told that this arises from the fact of the medicines being brought up by very young boys? Indeed.
3144. Do you think that punctuality in bringing the medicines to the patients should be enforced? It always was in my time.
3145. Were the medicines brought up by boys in your time? Yes.
3146. What was the age of the boys? They were of different ages—10, 11, 12—it is only necessary that a boy should be able to read and write. He has his basket to carry the bottles in, and he puts them down on a table, and the nurses, if they do their duty, can see the names on the bottles and what they are—whether they are for their wards. At that time the wards were numbered, but now they are lettered A, B, C, and so on.
3147. When you were here, did you observe that there was a divided authority between the manager and the lady superintendent? Yes, there was.
3148. A clashing of authority? Yes.
3149. In what way did it show itself? Well, that did not come exactly under my control.
3150. We are told that there is a great deficiency in the water supply at the present time? There was at that time also, very much indeed.
3151. Did you represent it to the committee? Yes, I think I did. I am sure I did.
3153. There are no conveniences? No conveniences at all. In a large hospital like this there should be better accommodation. For instance, there is an operation to be performed this afternoon, and the rule is that invitations should be sent out to the medical men; but when they come here there is not a single room to go into and wait. We have to wait on the verandah or go upstairs and wait in the operation-room. Of course in the summer, with so many medical men in it, it is very close and warm. There is no convenience at all. There is no porter—no one to show a stranger what he is to do or where he is to go—for the gate-keeper has as much as he can do. I do not say this of my own knowledge alone, but from what I hear from other medical men outside.
3154. The dispenser tells us that he and his assistant have to dispense on an average 200 prescriptions a day in the Infirmary, besides the out-door dispensing, and he represents that this is far in excess of what he should be called upon to do, with due regard to the efficiency of the dispensing;—do you concur in that? Yes; that is too much. I think there are two dispensers now.
3155. Yes? Well, it is too much, because one has to go to the branch. It would not be too much if the prescriptions were simple ones. If the medical men in the house, as well as the medical men attending districts, were compelled to use a house pharmacopœia, so that the medicine could be made up in large quantities, or made up by the gallon, then, of course, the dispensing would be very simple; but I have seen horrible prescriptions here, with eight, or nine, or ten, or perhaps fifteen ingredients in them.
3156. Then you think there should be another dispenser? Most decidedly. I think it would be beneficial, as the men are over-worked. In my time they used to come here at, I believe, 8 o'clock in the morning, and they never could leave before night. I do not know how it is now.
3157. Mr. Metcalfe.] Does not a man in an ordinary chemist's shop make up as many as that in a day? No; I should like to see any establishment here which makes up such an amount of prescriptions. It would be impossible, because there is a great deal of additional work. The chemist gets a prescription and he copies it into a book, numbers it, writes out the label; then he has to make the medicine and wrap it up nicely and neatly.
3158. President.] Do you not think that a prescription-book should be kept as a record of all the prescriptions made up? No, I do not think so. You would require more than three dispensers to do that, for if they have to keep every prescription that all the sick people get, it would take up an awful lot of time.
3159. Mr. Ellis.] An intelligent lad, who understood the reading of prescriptions, might enter them all up in a day, could he not? I could not trust him to do it. Mind you, there are printed forms now, on which the prescriptions are written, and I think that they are kept.
3160. Why do the chemists keep copies of the prescriptions in their shops;—every private chemist or druggist in town is obliged to keep copies of the prescriptions? That is only a copy that they keep for their own satisfaction. I do not think they are compelled by law to keep them, but they do it for safety, because a dispute may arise as to a prescription being wrongly dispensed. You have your prescription and the chemist has his copy, and the two must agree.
3161. President.] Do you think that the prescriptions ought to be preserved for a year or so? I think it would be as well. It would be well as far as any inquiry that might occur is concerned; otherwise it would be of no earthly use.
3162. Is there a proper room for operations here? It is called an operation-room, but it is a horrible place. I would not call it a proper operation-room. Of course a good many operations are performed there. You can perform an operation anywhere—you can do it in a small corner for that matter—but it is not at all a convenient room; it is not even a decent operating-room.
3163. What would you suggest by way of improving the operation-room? You must get another one built; I don't know where. I do not see how this one could be enlarged.
3164. You think there should be one built? Yes; for it is out of the question that the present one can be enlarged; it is much too small. If there are a dozen or fifteen gentlemen in the room, it is as crowded as it possibly can be, and no one can see anything of the operation. If you want to see you must be next to the operator. There is only a small table.

B. Schuette,
Esq., M.D.

3165. Do you not think that something could be done to improve the present system of putting fever cases and cases of that kind into tents? That was always advocated here.

3166. Which? To have tents. There is plenty of room, if only the ground was a little bit improved.

3167. You would not advise the erection of a special building for cases of that kind? I would not. There might be a tent, or one of those easily erected wooden cottages that you can take down at any moment.

3168. But is it not difficult in bad weather to attend and nurse patients properly in a tent? Yes, that is the reason why I say the ground should be improved. This is all sloping ground.

3169. You recommended the building of another dead-house? I did—many years ago.

3170. Do you think it is in a good position? It is not. There is not only the want of water but the entire want of any drainage whatever, and the rats in my time infested the place. I saw a body with the cheek and nose eaten away. I brought that under the notice of the committee.

3171. Is not the dead-house so placed at present that the prevailing winds of summer will probably drive all the effluvia into the hospital? Yes, into the south wing.

3172. It has been suggested, we are told, to place the new dead-house at the southern extremity of the enclosure—at the end of the south wing? Yes, at the corner.

3173. Do you approve of that position? Yes, and the drainage is to be got nearer there, though I suppose it is not very far off either way.

3174. It is not desirable that patients shall be constantly seeing funerals and things of that kind? I do not think that would affect the patients much.

3175. But of course if their seeing such things can be avoided it is better to do so? Yes, and certainly I think that that position down there is much better than the position down here.

3176. Mr. Goold.] Its present proximity to the Nightingale wing is undesirable, do you not think so—it is just opposite to the lady superintendent's room? If I had to live in a house I would not like to have such a building under my nose.

3177. Do you know anything as to how the clothes were kept—the clothes of the patients who came in—until they went out again? Yes, I know that.

3178. Do you think it is desirable that the clothing placed in that clothes-house should be kept there for months without being washed, and given out in the same state in which they were brought in? I do not, indeed.

3179. Did you notice this state of things when you were here? Yes, in fact the clothes were almost carried away by lice.

3180. Mr. Metcalfe.] Did you suggest a remedy for that? Yes, I did.

3181. President.] What was your remedy? To build an oven and disinfect the clothes by putting them into it. If I had known such questions would have come up, I could have produced all the correspondence and my notes, but I have burned them all.

3182. This suggestion was never carried out in any way? Never.

3183. Was it while you were here that charges were made of patients being sent out of this institution and going to other institutions with vermin on them? Yes.

3184. Do you not think it probable that this came about from the mode in which the clothes were kept? It might be, but I do not think that these creatures could live so long in the clothes.

3185. But if there were a fresh supply every day, the men might get the vermin on them from the clothes? I have seen vermin on the patients' clothes, and I have seen the patients in bed with vermin on them often enough.

3186. Mr. Cowper.] In the institution? Yes.

3187. Mr. Metcalfe.] Might not that be caused by the nature of the disease from which the patient was suffering? I do not know of any disease that will produce such insects.

3188. President.] When you were here did you share your sitting-room with the manager? Yes; there were many complaints about that.

3189. You complained about it? I did; I complained about the apartments altogether, for they were very unwholesome.

3190. In what respect? There was the most dreadful ventilation, in my time, that you could have. There was a wall extending along the front here, and there was a verandah covered in so that no fresh air could get in. I woke every morning with a headache, and I told them that there was water underneath the place, and that was pooh-poohed. Each one of us had headaches; and then several of the sisters got ill; and then the thing was altered. There was water found underneath, and all the surface drainage was going under the rooms. That has been all cemented. The ventilation in my time was very bad, and as far as the medical officers' quarters are concerned, it is a shame they should not be better accommodated.

3191. What improvement would you suggest? I should be glad to see that carried out which the committee promised me, and that was to build another story on top of this one.

3192. Mr. Metcalfe.] What is your opinion of the management of the institution;—you have, I presume, been in other hospitals? Yes, I have.

3193. What is your opinion of the management? My candid opinion is, that in order to manage the hospital well, it would be well to have a medical man as manager.

3194. A medical man who should have charge, not only of the nurses but of everything else? Yes. A man who has got everything in his hands, and is responsible to the Board; and of course he should have a good salary.

3195. Mr. Cowper.] What do you call a good salary? I do not know.

3196. You are a medical man yourself, and what do you think we could get such a man for—what should we have to pay for such a man as is required to manage this institution? You could not get a man under £800 a year, because no medical man who has got a practice will give it up. You would have to get a man out from Home.

3197. Mr. Metcalfe.] Do you not find that the difference between the lady superintendent and the manager is very prejudicial to the interests of the institution? Yes.

3198. Mr. Cowper.] Do you not think that if we were to get a medical man from England, he would not stay here long? If he was a clever man I do not think he would stay here long.

3199. Don't you think that we should have a clever man? Yes, the best man you can get.

3200. And frequent changes are detrimental to the good management of the institution? Most decidedly.

3201. Mr. Metcalfe.] Did you find any inconvenience from the irregular attendance of the honorary medical staff? I did.

3202. They are bound to attend in the forenoon—11 o'clock I think? Yes, by the rules.

3203. But was it not a fact that they came in sometimes up to half-past 1? Yes, some of them did. Some were regular in their attendance, but a good many were very irregular.

3204. And they used to perform operations on Sunday, did they not? Yes.

3205. Did you consider that improper? I did not consider it improper; I would operate at any time in urgent cases; but I would not make a practice to operate on Sunday.

3206. Mr. Ellis.] Would you give the resident officers the power to admit as well as to discharge patients? Yes, I would give him power, if the honorary medical officer did not come by a certain hour, to admit patients.

3207. Were you here before the lady superintendent arrived? I was.

3208. And continued here for some time after her arrival? Yes.

3209. Can you say whether the alteration in the system of nursing is an improvement or otherwise? There is an improvement in the nursing.

3210. The substitution of female nurses for wardsmen is, you think, an improvement? No, I cannot say that. As far as I am concerned, I like trained good wardsmen better.

3211. Mr. Metcalfe.] You like them better than female nurses? Yes, for male patients.

3212. Mr. Cowper.] Were there trained good wardsmen here before Miss Osburn came? Yes, there were several very good men.

3213. Mr. Ellis.] Would you say what is the general usage at Home in that respect? In some hospitals they have entirely female nursing, and in others they have mixed nursing—males and females. In Vienna there is a large hospital that 60,000 or 70,000 patients go through in the year—a hospital containing 500 or 600 beds,—and there is mixed nursing there. In Berlin they have mixed nursing.

3214. You mean men for men, and women for women? Yes. I have been in several large hospitals on the Continent, and have found the mixed system adopted; but in the small hospitals there is female nursing only.

3215. Did you notice any improvement in the general care and in the appearance of the wards after the arrival of the lady superintendent? No; and that is the reason why I like wardsmen better than females, because they keep the wards clean—they scrub the wards.

3216. The men do? Yes; and the nurses do not; they require some scrubbers to assist them in keeping the wards clean.

3217. Would you make the wardsmen scrubbers? Yes; they were always engaged for that. If you came into a ward you expected to see it clean, and these men had to look out for that.

3218. Had you complaints of the bugs and the vermin under the old system? Oh, yes; there were vermin under the old system.

3219. In the beds? Yes.

3220. Did you find that the wardsmen made efforts to get rid of them? Yes, if they did not make efforts of themselves they were compelled to.

3221. Mr. Goold.] When was that discontinued;—was it discontinued during your time? Yes, when Miss Osburn came the wardsmen were discharged.

3222. I refer to the cleaning of the beds? I think that in Miss Osburn's time the beds were washed.

3223. To what do you attribute the great increase of vermin recently discovered in the hospital? I do not know anything about it. I do not know anything but what I have read in the papers, or what has been brought before the House.

3224. In your time was there anything at all approaching the state of things which has been described? No.

3225. Mr. Metcalfe.] I suppose that was to some extent owing to the building being newer? Yes; the vermin are in the rubble walls.

3226. Mr. Ellis.] Did you examine the patients' beds yourself? Yes; in my time I did.

3227. And there were bugs in them then? Yes.

3228. And in the walls? Yes, and in the walls too.

3229. Mr. Goold.] I think you have said that you regard this as the worst managed hospital that you have ever known;—did I understand you correctly? Yes, in some respects it is.

3230. Can you give us any idea as to the best way of improving it; what you would consider an improvement; how the deficiency can be remedied? I cannot do that all at once. It wants a good deal of thinking about and putting things together.

3231. With regard to these clothes, do you know the practice in hospitals on the Continent with reference to them? I do not know what is the practice in England, but on the Continent I do. There there are disinfecting ovens, and the clothes are put in there, and if there are any vermin upon them, or any infection about them, the infection or the vermin are destroyed by the heat.

3232. Mr. Metcalfe.] Will the heat destroy infection? Yes; that is the reason why people put things into bakers' ovens sometimes.

3233. Mr. Goold.] Had you in your time any complaints from the patients with regard to the nursing staff? There were complaints. People frequently complained of partiality, but I do not know that there was any ground for their complaints.

3234. Had you any complaints from the patients as to the wines and spirits ordered for them by the medical man not being supplied to them? Though that is carried out very strictly, yet a patient cannot expect to get his wine or spirits if the term for which it was ordered runs out, and his medical man either does not come or forgets to renew the order. It is the fault of the medical men, as far as the wines and spirits are concerned. The nurses have nothing to do with it, except that if the time is out they should remember it, and remind the medical man to fill up a card again.

3235. Mr. Metcalfe.] Where did they get it? From the house steward.

3236. Mr. Goold.] It has been said that the medical men have ordered wines and spirits for certain patients and that the patients have not got them—Had you any complaints as to that? No, that never happened

- in my time. You know a patient might have been in a little bit of a fidget because he did not get his wine, and they might send down to the store and find that it had been forgotten.
3237. Miss Osburn came while you were there? Yes.
3238. Are you aware of her having been frequently absent from the institution for any length of time? Yes.
3239. Can you give the Commission any instances of that? I cannot, but I know that she was away several times.
3240. Mr. Metcalfe.] For days together? Yes.
3241. Without leave of the committee? That I do not know.
3242. Mr. Gould.] How often daily was it her custom to visit the wards? I found her there in the morning, and she generally made a visit at night about 9 o'clock, or sometimes she went later—perhaps about 10 o'clock.
3243. From what you observed did you consider that she gave due attention to her duties as lady superintendent? Yes, she went round the wards, and saw the nurses were all there and attending to their duties, and so on.
3244. When you were resident medical officer here you would observe her frequently? I observed Miss Osburn every morning when I made my visit in some part of the house.
3245. From what you observed of her conduct, do you consider her in every way qualified for the position that she occupies? Yes.
3246. And the nursing generally is satisfactory to you? Yes; considering that some of the nurses were young people, you could not expect too much from them.
3247. Did you consider the nurses too young? Yes, in my time they were too young. I did not approve of it at all.
3248. What age do you consider that they should be? I would never engage a nurse younger than 30. Of course, however, by having persons of 20 and 25 years of age in the position of nurses you confer a boon on the population at large, because you train young people to be nurses; and if they do not like, after a time, the work of the hospital, they can go out and earn their livelihood in town by nursing; and you always get a certain proportion of this class of people.
3249. How frequently were the wards whitewashed when you were there? Not very often.
3250. What is the practice at Home? About two or three times a year; but we manage in our hospitals,—if we have got an epidemic or fever we distribute the cases among the other patients, or take a ward separately, and as soon as the number there gets less we take another ward, and put the recovering patients into another ward, and have the first ward thoroughly cleaned, whitewashed, and left open for ventilation for some weeks.
3251. That is not done here? No, it is not possible; the hospital is always full. There are more patients than can be admitted.
3252. And that is the reason why it was not done? That is the only reason. It is a very sore point to sit down there and have a dozen patients come for admission, and out of that dozen you have to send ten away; and the blame of sending them away falls upon the resident medical officer, and not upon the honorary staff.
3253. Mr. Ellis.] Apart from the superior cleanliness which you think is secured by the wardsmen acting as scrubbers, have you any other reason for preferring wardsmen to nurses? Yes, I like men better to attend upon men. It is not right for females to attend upon some of the cases that you see there.
3254. Supposing that you had a couple of wardsmen or so to attend upon these cases would you then prefer nurses to wardsmen as a rule? I think, as a rule, that females, if properly educated, are more lenient and softer, and make better and tenderer nurses, although I have had men here equally as good, and who would handle a patient just as soft as a woman could do.
3255. If there were female nurses, do you think it would be desirable to have a wardsmen or two to attend upon particular patients? Yes, if I wanted to do something to a patient on the surgical side I would have a man to attend, and not a female.
3256. Mr. Couper.] You would not have a man not placed regularly in any ward, but to be called into each ward when necessity required? Well, in fact, a male wardsmen is only required in some instances. Of course, in the syphilitic ward there is one. In the accident, where you have to strip men, there should be one. I do not like the idea of women doing these things, and if you have to pass a catheter, or anything of that kind, it is not nice to have a woman watching you.
3257. You would keep a man regularly in that ward as warder? I would do it as it was done in my time,—two wardsmen in the accident ward, and a sister to superintend them.
3258. Mr. Metcalfe.] You would have a superior kind of nurse to superintend them? Yes. The term "sister" has been done away with, and they are now called head-nurses.
3259. President.] The nurse should be a person of superior attainments to the ordinary nurse? Yes, properly trained, and brought up so that she can give directions.

Mr. Joseph Jones, House Steward, Sydney Infirmary, called in and further examined:—

- Mr. J. Jones.
21 May, 1873.
3260. President.] In your evidence the other day you spoke of making up a programme;—have you one of those programmes here now? Yes, I have brought some forms—the whole set. These are the forms for breakfast, luncheon, dinner, and tea.
3261. Would you explain what this form is? This is the dinner programme. (See Appendix D.) For instance, if a patient is put on a particular diet, his card comes to me. The diets are taken to pieces, and condensed on these programmes for breakfast, luncheon, dinner, and tea.
3262. What difference is there between this programme and the summary which you and Miss Osburn agreed should be prepared by the nurses? They are exactly the same. On the whole they would amount to the same thing; but the programme has to be put into this shape, so that the cook may serve up the diets. I did precisely the same with this form that I received from the nurses* as I do with the cards now. The cards never came to me at all then. They were condensed on this form by the nurses.

* NOTE.—See Appendix A 2 to evidence of Miss Lucy Osburn.

3263. Then what you call a programme is not a substitution for the old summary, but something that you ^{Mr. J. Jones.} would make in any case? Yes.
3264. And it was your mode of conveying to the cook the mode in which he should send the food up? Yes. ^{21 May, 1873.}
3265. Mr. Metcalfe.] It is put in a simple form for the cook? Yes.
3266. It is something you would do in any event? Yes; in order to simplify matters for the cook.
3267. It is part of your duty to see that the proper diet is made up? Yes, it is part of my duty.
3268. It is not easier to make up that programme from the cards than from the summary? I do not see that there is any difference between them. I had as soon have one as the other.
3269. Then, as far as any convenience to you is concerned, you would as soon have one as the other—you would as soon make it out from the summary as from the card? Yes; I do not see any difference.
3270. Mr. Cowper.] Which is the best check upon the nurses? The cards, decidedly.
3271. Explain how, if you please? They can at any moment, if any dispute arises, refer to the cards. I have an exact copy of the diet that is on the patients' cards.
3272. President.] The question is, how is it a check upon the nurses—upon what is it supposed to be a check? Inasmuch as I can tell in a moment, if any dispute arises, what a patient's diet is.
3273. What kind of a dispute? If they should happen to say that such and such diets are not full diets, I can refer in a moment to the cards, because I keep an exact fac simile of the diets in a book; so that if they say there are ten full diets when they have only got nine, I can show that is only nine. There the thing is at once without further trouble if any one was to ask me.
3274. On the other hand, the summary would be the best check upon the house steward? I think not.
3275. You think not? I do not see that one has any advantage over the other.
3276. If the summary were kept, and not by you, would not that be something to prove that you had given out a certain quantity of provisions—only the quantity required for the wards? Yes.
3277. Whereas if you yourself make out a list of what is required for the wards, there is no check upon the steward,—is there? No; unless they make out a summary.
3278. Then the making out of a summary by the nurses, which they kept, would be a check upon the steward? Yes, it would be a check to a certain extent.
3279. Mr. Cowper.] Do you consider that the nurses had a greater check upon you than you had upon them, when these summaries were in existence? I think there was some division about it.
3280. President.] By whom? I do not know. The only intimation that I received was from the committee, who said that I was to go back to the old system.
3281. But nothing ever came under your cognizance as to half the number of diets being required which were asked for in any ward? There was a very great doubt about their asking for more than was required.
3282. On what ground? On several occasions.
3283. When this system was in force? Yes.
3284. Was it not suggested that you should go round and check these summaries? Yes; which I did. Miss Osburn suggested it herself on two occasions, and said that she would go round with me.
3285. I see in the summary for wards A, B, C, there are five rice puddings required, and three sago puddings, in the list as made out by the nurses, and against the rice puddings you have put down eight, and against the sago puddings, two;—how was that? When I analyzed the cards I found that those were the proper numbers.
3286. Then in this case the sister had asked for three rice puddings less and one sago pudding more than was necessary? Yes.
3287. Did you find out how that was? Yes; by analyzing the cards—the diet cards.
3288. Did you find out why it was? I do not understand the question.
3289. Did you find out the reason why the sister had asked for less rice puddings than were required? I brought it under the notice of the head nurse.
3290. What explanation did she make? I do not know that she gave any.
3291. Do you recollect that particular case? I do not recollect it very vividly.
3292. Might it be that some of the patients were discharged or dead? No, the cards were in the wards.
3293. Could it be that they found that five rice puddings were sufficient? I do not think they would be justified in ordering less than the doctor ordered.
3294. And you think if a sister found that a patient only ate a quarter of what was ordered she should go on ordering the full diets, though one-third of the quantity ordered would be wasted? I do not think she would be justified in doing that either.
3295. Might that not be the explanation of this error? —
3296. Is a separate rice pudding served up in a separate dish for each patient? Only when a small number go into the ward.
3297. Are not the puddings put together in one large dish? Yes, if the number of patients who are to get rice pudding exceeds four, it is all put into a large dish.
3298. Might not the explanation of that error be that in that case the patients did not care for having so much rice? That might be the case in a medical ward, but not in a surgical ward. The patients in a surgical ward are generally strong and able to eat.
3299. Looking at your own figures on these summaries for the 17th January, tell me how many rice puddings were supplied? Sixty-five.
3300. How many rice puddings, according to the figures of the nurses, seem to have been required on this day? Sixty-five.
3301. Count them again? Sixty-five.
3302. Does it not appear that the nurses only ordered sixty-four? Sixty-five rice puddings, that is what was ordered, and the rice consumed was 8 lbs. 2 ozs. This is the diet ordered on the 17th for rice puddings to be supplied on the 18th;—my error was in referring to the 17th for the rice consumed. The rice was issued on the 17th for the rice puddings on the 18th. On referring to the rice account I find that there were 8 lbs. 4 ozs. of rice issued. I referred to the wrong day. This is issued on the 17th for the 18th; and the rice consumed on the 18th January is 8 lbs. 2 ozs.
3303. That is only sixty-four rice puddings, and you appear to have issued sixty-five. I want you to explain how that comes about? — 3304. The nurses have ordered sixty-four, and you have issued sixty-five;—I want to know why that was? I must have made an error in counting.

- Mr. J. Jones. 3305. Then your explanation about the calculation being for the 18th January is a mistake? Yes, it is a mistake of one pudding.
- 21 May, 1873. 3306. But these papers are sent down by the nurses, and you make your calculation on the back for the day? Yes.
3307. Then the explanation you gave just now that the calculation referred to some other day is a mistake? It is simply that —
3308. You explained that the calculation was for the 18th, not the 17th; but was not that apparent all along? I confess that I do not understand you.
3309. I drew your attention to something that was a mistake in your calculation, and you endeavoured to get over it by saying that this calculation referred to the 18th instead of the 17th? Yes, that is so.
3310. But what difference does that make; is not the requisition for sixty-four rice puddings? Yes.
3311. And you have issued sixty-five, according to your own showing? Yes.
3312. Then what has your explanation to do with it? The diet for the 18th would be issued on the 17th.
3313. What difference does that make? I do not think that it makes any difference.
3314. Mr. Couper.] Do you know that there are often two or three diets short sent up? I am not aware of it.
3315. Do you not know that such cases do occur? I do not know of them; I do not know of any cases in particular of diets being short.
3316. Have instances occurred in which complaints have been made that the diets are short? I have heard of no complaints.
3317. Have you ever heard of more eggs than are necessary being sent up? In one instance I did hear of it.
3318. Have you ever heard of patients being dead for days and the diets being sent up to them? No.
3319. You have never heard of such a thing? No, never.
3320. Mr. Metcalfe.] It must be the fault of the nurse, or of the boy who takes down the cards? No, the fault of the nurse.
3321. Mr. Couper.] Did you never hear of the medical men coming down and complaining that there were five diets short? No.
3322. Do you not think yourself it would be a better plan to adopt the system of having summaries and letting the nurses make up the number of diets required and to give them to you, in the way proposed by Miss Osburn? I do not think so.
3323. You still think it would be better to send down the cards as you do now? I think so.
3324. President.] Why? It is more satisfactory.
3325. To whom? To everybody.
3326. Why? All the patients' diets are to be seen in my store at any moment. If the doctors order any particular thing, people may want to know who ordered them and why.
3327. Who wants to know? The committee.
3328. Mr. Couper.] Can you mention any instances in which extra things have been ordered and in which the committee have made any investigation? Yes, with reference to poultry and fowls.
3329. Mention the instances? I do not know of any particular instances, but I know there has been a large number of fowls ordered at times, and the finance committee of course have considered that the poulterer's bill was very heavy, and they wished to know who had ordered the fowls.
3330. But does not that summary show that these fowls were ordered? It shows whatever wards they are ordered for.
3331. President.] But if the summaries are made out, do they prevent the directors finding out who ordered any extras? They can go to the wards.
3332. And I suppose the cards are as safe in the wards as in your store? Yes.
3333. Mr. Gould.] You keep the cards to show that you serve out the diets correctly? Yes.
3334. Mr. Couper.] When would this order for fowls come before the committee first? It would come under their notice in the passing of the bills.
3335. Then could they not, by a reference to that summary, trace out who the fowls were ordered by and to whom they were given just as well as they can now? Yes, there is nothing to hinder them.
3336. Then the summary does not prevent the committee seeing anything with reference to the matter? I do not understand you.
3337. That summary list as made out by the nurse does not prevent the committee from seeing at a glance everything with reference to the ordering of these extras and for whom they are ordered? Yes, unless they take the trouble to go through the wards.
3338. But there is no more necessity to refer to the cards than there is under your system. Can they not refer to the nurses and they refer to the cards just as easily as refer to you and you refer to the cards.
3339. Is it not as easy for the nurses to refer to the cards as for you to refer to the copies of the cards which you only have? I do not know.
3340. President.] You do not keep the names of the doctors on the diets in your store do you? Yes, the name of the surgeon or the physician ordering the things.
3341. Where is it? There is this form here (See Appendix D 2), on which are entered all the particulars of the diets supplied to the patients.
3342. Mr. Metcalfe.] Have you charge of the butcher's meat? No. I keep a check on the fowls delivered and make an entry in the book. For instance there were two fowls delivered to-day and I make the entry, 21st May, two fowls delivered.
3343. Suppose Miss Osburn were to order a tin of salmon for the Nightingale wing, would not that go through you? No.
3344. How do the fowls go through you? No, nothing from the nurses goes through me, but only the things for the patients. Everything for the patients goes through me,—fowl, fish, and so on.
3345. President.] Explain this table (Appendix D 2); who fills it up? I do.
3346. From what? The patients' cards.
3347. When? Whenever a patient is admitted. If he is admitted to-day, for instance, I put ward A, or whatever ward it is,—Dr. Fortescue—the patient's name, so-and-so, admitted on such a date.
3348. What do you do with these papers? I keep them.
3349. Mr. Couper.] Have you 228 of these? Yes.
3350. President.] What do you keep them in? They are made up into a book.

Mr. J. Jones.
21 May, 1873.

3351. Do you alter them every day? Yes, if their diets are altered by the medical men.
3352. Do you mean to say that you have 224 of these? Sometimes.
3353. Lists like this? Yes.
3354. What is the object of keeping them? So that I may know what the diets are. Supposing I had twenty full diets, and any one came to ask me why I sent them, I take these and say so-and-so is on full diet, and so-and-so, until we go through the twenty of them.
3355. Then if anybody comes and asks you why you sent up twenty full diets, you show as your authority a document kept by yourself? Yes.
3356. Would it not be more a protection to you if some such document as that were kept by somebody else? I cannot see it.
3357. Mr. Goold.] How often do you make this up? Every afternoon.
3358. Is it a copy of a card that hangs at the head of the patient's bed? Yes.
3359. President.] Then if the house committee complain of the large number of fowls that have been used, you give them a voucher made up by yourself, when they inquire into the matter? No, I do not give them any voucher at all.
3360. Well, you produce these papers? Yes; I simply show that fowls have been ordered by certain doctors for certain patients, and there is the order. That order is continued in force until it expires or the doctor gives something else in lieu of it, and strikes it out.
3361. Mr. Goold.] On whose authority did you get this done;—was this form laid before the committee? It is the system that has been in vogue always—ever since I have been here.
3362. President.] Was the keeping of these forms pointed out, to you when you first came, as a part of your duty? Yes, I have kept them for years; always, except when these summaries were in use.
3363. Mr. Couper.] How long were they in use? I think about eighteen months.
3364. Mr. Metcalfe.] When the new dietary scale was prepared by Dr. Roberts, I suppose they were adopted? I do not know.
3365. President.] Can you tell me what quantity of tea was used to-day? 2 lbs. 10 ozs. for the patients.
3366. Can you tell me the quantity which you have in stock? Yes, by adding up that column, and deducting it from the other side.
3367. What quantity of tea had you in stock at the end of last month? 12 cwt. 2 qrs. 24 lbs. and 8½ ozs.
3368. Since you have been here, has stock ever been taken of the quantity of tea on hand? Since I have been here?
3369. Has the stock ever been taken by any one else of the quantity of tea on hand? My balance is always compared with the inventory at the end of the year.
3370. Has anybody ever checked it by taking stock? I do not think there is any necessity, because there is only a small balance at the end of the year.
3371. Then it would be more easily done—I want to know whether it has ever been done? —
3372. Mr. Metcalfe.] Is stock ever taken? Nothing more than this. I think you will see that there is only a small balance at the end of the year.
3373. Mr. Goold.] How long have you been here? Six years next June.
3374. Mr. Couper.] Does your ledger account for every item? Yes, for every item.
3375. President.] Suppose you were asked for your authority for issuing (say) 3 lbs. tea on the 1st of this month, what documents could you lay before the person making the inquiry, showing that you were authorized to issue that quantity? Put the diets together and count them.
3376. But what documents could you produce, supposing you had to prove it in a Court? Take the doctors' orders and the cards from the patients' beds.
3377. How long are those cards kept? I do not know.
3378. Where are they kept? I do not know.
3379. By whom are they kept? I do not know.
3380. Mr. Goold.] I understood you to say that you kept copies of them? Those cards belong to the house surgeon or the house physician.
3381. I understood that you kept copies of the cards in the store? Yes, these copies. I refer to the cards hanging over the beds, on which are written the medical men's orders.
3382. I see on the 4th April you credit yourself with 6 lbs. of tea issued to the Nightingale wing;—what authority can you show for issuing it? The lady superintendent's order.*
3383. Who keeps that? It is entered in a book that she keeps herself.
3384. The servants' rations—who keeps the account of them—is that under the lady superintendent? No, it is not under Miss Osburn.
3385. Who is that under? The committee authorized that.
3386. I see that on the 4th April you issued 4 lbs. 2 ozs. of servants' rations;—what authority can you show for the issue of that? That it was issued to eleven servants.
3387. Mr. Couper.] For what period? A week.
3388. How much does each get? Six ounces.
3389. Have you any order for it? No, sir, there is no order. I have the authority to issue the rations.
3390. Who are the eleven servants? The gatekeeper and his wife, and six men (yardsman, wardsman, and bathmen), and two cooks and the man.
3391. I see on the 12th, 2 lbs. 6 ozs. of tea issued to the patients? Yes.
3392. What authority can you show for the issue of that? The same thing; the orders on the cards.
3393. Where are they? I do not know.
3394. I think you kept the summaries yourself when they were in force? Yes.
3395. Here is a case on the 25th October last: To patients, 2 lbs. 12 ozs. of tea;—how can you explain to us to whom that tea was issued;—what documents can you show to authorize you to issue that tea;—where is your authority for issuing that tea on the 25th October last? It was issued to a number of patients on that particular day.
3396. Can you produce the authority to-morrow? I do not suppose I could without a great deal of trouble—without finding all the cards.

3397.

* NOTE:—This question (and most of the subsequent ones put to this witness) refers to items in the account books laid before the Commission by the witness.

- Mr. J. Jones. 3397. President.] Then to prove that item you would have to produce to the Commission 224 cards? I do not suppose that number, but as many cards as there were patients for whom tea was issued.
- 21 May, 1873. 3398. Would it not simplify your proof very much if these summaries were in existence? It would prove it so far as I was concerned, of course. If the committee were satisfied, that would be enough.
3399. What quantity of tea is ordered at a time? Generally twenty chests;—the last lot was twenty chests.
3400. Mr. Metcalfe.] Do you weigh that tea? Yes, weigh every chest; this lot is in half-chests.
3401. President.] How long is it since that supply came in? Not very long; I think it was the beginning of the year.
3402. Did anybody assist you to weigh that tea? No, no one assisted me.
3403. Mr. Cowper.] Do you check the issue of spirits and beer in the same way as you check the issue of tea? Yes.
3404. How do you issue them? They are issued on the doctors' orders.
3405. What is the difference between these books (referring to account books laid before the Commission)? One of these contains the porter account, and the other the brandy account.
3406. How can you show the amount of brandy issued? By the doctors' orders. I have the tickets. Each of these orders stands good for seven days, and when the time has expired I stop the issue. The honorary staff sign for seven days, and the resident staff for one day. I enter them all in a book every day, but not before the evening. I saw just now that there were two wine orders under the door, so that if I was to enter them all up before the evening I would not have them all down.
3407. Mr. Ellis.] In this Shiraz wine account you have put down from time to time so many bottles as being got from the manager;—what do you mean by that? That is as it is drawn by me.
3408. Is it what he gives you? It is what I draw from the bulk.
3409. Mr. Metcalfe.] You receive this wine from the manager? Yes.
3410. Where does the manager get it from? I do not know.
3411. Mr. Ellis.] Are you not the storekeeper? Yes. This is handed over to me to issue to the patients.
3412. Where does the manager get it from? It is in the cellar.
3413. Are you not the storekeeper? Yes.
3414. Do you debit yourself with all the stores as coming from the manager? No.
3415. Do you debit yourself with the wine only as coming from him? Yes.
3416. Can you say why the manager keeps the wine and spirits specially, and does not keep any other article in the store? I do not know that he keeps it.
3417. Who has the key of the wine-cellar? I have the key.
3418. Where is the account showing the quantity of Shiraz now in the store? It is in the manager's book.
3419. Mr. Metcalfe.] Then you are not responsible for the whole stock of wine, but only for what is given out to you? Yes, I am responsible; it is under my charge.
3420. President.] Where is the account kept of the bulk wine from which these seven bottles are supposed to be issued? In the manager's book.
3421. Mr. Ellis.] Does he have all the stock in his book? Yes.
3422. All the tea as well? Yes.
3423. These are only day-books then? —
3424. But it seems here that you do not keep the other accounts in the same way as you keep the wine account; here you debit for tea Brown & Co., and not the manager? Yes; that is the tea account.
3425. Why do you debit yourself here with so much tea received from Brown & Co.,—not from the manager? Because I received the tea from Brown & Co.
3426. But should it not go into the manager's books? It is in the manager's books.
3427. Then why do you keep the account differently to the wine account;—why do you not enter where the wine is received from? —
3428. Do you keep any other account similar to the wine account? All the wine accounts are kept in this way.
3429. But here is the porter account, and that is not a similar account, for you keep the account with the brewer, and not the manager? It is only a small quantity.
3430. But is there no principle on which these books are kept? —

WEDNESDAY, 22 MAY, 1873.

Members Present:—

WILLIAM CHARLES WINDEYER, Esq., PRESIDENT.

MICHAEL METCALFE, Esq.

SAMUEL GOOLD, Esq.

EYRE G. ELLIS, Esq.

RICHARD DRIVER, Esq., M.P.

CHARLES COWPER, JUN., Esq.

John Bernauer, Head Cook, Sydney Infirmary, called in and examined:—

- Mr. J. Bernauer. 3431. President.] I believe you are the cook of the Sydney Infirmary? Yes.
3432. Do you live on the premises? No.
3433. What wages do you receive? £75 a year.
- 22 May, 1873. 3434. And your board? Yes.
3435. How long have you been here? About five years.
3436. What assistants have you under you? One man.
3437. Had you been cook in any public institution before you came here? No, not in any public institution. I was cook at the Union Club, and also at other places in the town.
3438. Places where there was extensive cooking going on? Yes, the Club was the most extensive.
3439. What other places? At luncheon-rooms.
3440. Mr. Cowper.] Were you head cook? Not at the Union Club. I was at other places.
3441. President.] At what hour do you come in the morning? At 6.
3442. When do you leave? As soon as I can get the doctors' dinner in; that is the last thing.

3443.

3443. From whom do you take your orders? From the steward.
3444. Are you under his direction entirely? No. I merely take the diet lists from him. I am under the control of Mr. Blackstone.
3445. He engaged you? Yes.
3446. And do you expect that all the orders you get, whether from the steward or from any one else, should come from Mr. Blackstone? Yes, or from Miss Osburn.
3447. Do you, as a matter of fact, receive orders from Miss Osburn? Very seldom.
3448. When you do receive any orders from her, of what kind are they? About the diets. When any gentlemen have come in, such as Governors, she has let me know, so that I could put the dinner on a quarter of an hour or delay it a quarter of an hour, or something of that sort.
3449. You mean to say that if anything occurred to interfere with the ordinary course she would let you know? Yes. And I get the dinner earlier or later, as it might suit my convenience.
3450. But, with that exception, she does not give orders to you about the mode of cooking? No.
3451. Does anybody ever make any representations to you as to the mode in which things should be cooked? Mr. Blackstone is the only one that I get orders from if there is anything not quite right, which very seldom happens.
3452. Has he ever spoken to you about the mode in which things were cooked? No.
3453. Has he ever made any suggestions about the cooking? No. The stove is so small that I am not always able to do things as I could wish.
3454. I will ask you about that presently. Do you expect all orders about that sort of thing to come from the manager? Yes.
3455. Are you satisfied with the cook-house? Yes, it is large enough, but it is very inconvenient.
3456. What fault do you find with it? The stoves are not working as they should do. I have two, and one is too small and the other is not of much account.
3457. In what respect? It is too old. It is in the out-house, and sometimes it will cook and sometimes it will not; it all depends on the weather and the wind.
3458. Is the goodness of the cooking then dependent on the wind? Yes, sometimes it is.
3459. Is that because the out-house is exposed to the elements? Yes.
3460. What is the reason of that? The stove is not set properly, and it is all cracked. We generally cook beef-tea on the stove outside, and the potatoes and the rice puddings.
3461. Is the largest stove inside or outside? Outside.
3462. And the stove outside is unfit for use, while the stove inside is too small? Yes.
3463. Have you made representations about this to the committee? Yes, when gentlemen have come round I have said that the stove was too small, and they have always said that they intended to build a new kitchen.
3464. You mean members of the committee? Yes.
3465. What do you say as to the building itself—the cook-house? Mr. Mansfield, the architect, came and asked me if I had any suggestions to make, and I gave him two or three, and I believe that he drew up a plan.
3466. Is the kitchen commodious? Yes, it is rather too large if anything. It should be more compact. There is such a distance to go for hot or cold water; if anything is burning I have to run some distance for water. There is not water in the kitchen; I have to run to the scullery to get it.
3467. What do you say as to the outer kitchen, or lean-to, against the main building? It is only a makeshift.
3468. Does the rain come into it? Yes, it pours down into it.
3469. Into the room itself? Yes, into the back room; it comes down by the side of the wall.
3470. Mr. Cowper.] At the far end? Yes.
3471. President.] Have you assistance enough in the cook-house? Yes, at present.
3472. Have you not always had a man to assist you? Yes, I have had two, but at one time when the old diet list was in vogue the work was very heavy.
3473. Do I understand you to say that one man is sufficient for your requirements? Yes, at present.
3474. How many meals have you to cook every day? Four breakfasts and — 2475. For whom are they? One for the patients, two for the officers, and one for the kitchen.
3476. Do you cook for the Nightingale wing? No.
3477. They do their own cooking? Yes, they have their own cook.
3478. What are the other meals? The patients' luncheon at 11, the doctors' luncheon at 1, and dinner for the patients, and the chemists' dinner and —
2479. That is for the dispensers? Yes, and dinner for the kitchen.
3580. Yes? Then at 4 o'clock tea for the patients,—at least at 5 for the patients,—and dinner at half-past 5 for the doctors and the chemists' tea, and that is all.
3481. How is the kitchen found in appliances for cooking. Very well. I always get what I ask for if I want anything.
3482. You have nothing to complain of then as regards the want of utensils? No, I can always get anything I want if I only mention it.
3483. There is nothing to prevent little things that are required for weak patients—little delicacies—being properly cooked; there is no want of appliances to get these ready? There are very few of such things required. If there are any they are always done, with the exception of jellies. I have no convenience for cooking jellies.
3484. Are they ordered? Yes, they are often ordered, and they are done outside. We have no time to cook those things, so they are got from a confectioner outside.
3485. Is there anything else done outside? No.
3486. Have any complaints been made as to the way in which things have been cooked? Not that I am aware of.
3487. None have been made to you by the manager? No.
3488. Have you anything to suggest as to the position of the cook-house—is it well situated? Yes; it should be in the centre of the yard, I think.
3489. Do you not think there should be some covering between it and the main building, so that the meals should not be carried through the wet? Yes, there should be a covered way. There are many things wanted besides.

Mr. J.
Bernauer.
22 May, 1873.

- Mr. J. Bernauer. 3490. Tell us what they are? Coppers are wanted for milk and beef-tea.
3491. What is the beef-tea made in at present? A large boiler on the stove outside in the outer kitchen, but the place is not big enough.
- 22 May, 1873. 3492. What else do you want? Half a dozen coppers are wanted. We should have them to make the thing complete, but I believe Mr. Mansfield has made out a plan, and he has arranged for half a dozen coppers and everything pretty convenient.
3493. Have you been used to cooking by steam? No. I had a little of it in Melbourne at one place I was in.
3494. Where? At the "Bull and Mouth."
3495. That was an hotel? Yes.
3496. Do you understand the management of that style of cookery? Yes, I could do it.
3497. Do you think it would be more convenient than the present style? Yes, but there always should be flues in case of accidents, and a place to cook underneath.
3498. What do you think as to the comparative expense of the two systems? I think that cooking by steam is far the cheapest.
3499. Do you know whether in the improved kitchen that was planned, it was proposed to cook by steam? I have not seen the plan, but I believe it was.
3500. Mr. Ellis.] How many people can you cook for at the same time? I have to cook for all in the house—all the patients.
3501. For how many at a time;—with the stove as it is now, for how many people can you cook at once? For all that are in the house. I have to cook for them all at once.
3502. They all have their dinner at one hour? Yes.
3503. I thought you said to me when we were in your kitchen the other day that you could not cook for more than fifty at once? I said that the stove was never meant for more than fifty.
3504. And yet you make it answer for 300? For 220; but they are not all on hard food.
3505. What supplies are delivered direct to you at the kitchen without coming through the storekeeper? The meat and the milk.
3506. Who weighs the meat? I weigh the breakfast meat—the chops and steaks, and so on; and the steward weighs the dinner meat.
3507. Is there a bill delivered with the meat in the morning? Yes, always.
3508. Do you see the meat weighed? No, I weigh it myself.
3509. Do you sign the bill? No, it is put in a drawer, and then it goes down to the steward, and from him to the manager.
3510. Then the steward relies upon you? Yes, for the breakfast meat.
3511. But he himself sees to the weighing of the dinner meat? Yes.
3512. Are fowls and things of that kind delivered direct to the kitchen? Yes.
3513. What check is there on the receipt of them? If there are four patients on fowl I only get one fowl.
3514. Do you give a receipt for the fowls you get? I go down with the man to the steward and he puts down the list of things—how many patients are on fowl, and that is the check he has against me.
3515. These are the only things that you receive direct? The only things are the milk and the meat.
3516. President.] What becomes of the refuse of the kitchen? A man takes it away.
3517. The refuse fat? That is put into a cask and sold by the committee.
3518. Mr. Driver.] You have no perquisites? No.
3519. Mr. Ellis.] Under the old system was each patient's diet cooked and sent up separately? Yes, cut up and put on trays.
3520. Then the great saving now is in the cooking of joints? Yes, and the patients get it hotter.
3521. You think the present system is an improvement on the old one? Yes.
3522. Mr. Gould.] How long has it been in existence? About four years.
3523. Are you aware that complaints have been made about the cooking? No.
3524. That the nurses have complained? Not to me.
3525. No complaint has ever been made to you? No.
3526. Who carries the meals backwards and forwards? The bathman and the head bathman carry them to the females.
3527. Mr. Gould.] Have any complaints ever been made to you that things have been sent up half cooked? At one time I believe the roast beef was under-done in the middle. That was when the stove would not work.
3528. Then if there was bad cooking it was in consequence of the imperfect character of the stove? Yes.
3529. Mr. Driver.] I suppose, in the present state of the cook-house and its appliances, it is impossible for you to cook as you could wish? Yes, it is sometimes. The joints for the patients are smaller sometimes than at others. Sometimes there may be a 24-pound joint, and at other times a joint may not be more than 17 pounds, and then I have more room; and, of course, when joints are so large, it takes a longer time to cook them.
3530. Mr. Gould.] Is the meat always delivered punctually—are there no delays? Sometimes there have been, but when I have asked the reason, it has always been owing to some mistake of the butcher.
3531. Do you keep any account of the meat you receive; I understood you to say that you weigh it. When the butcher sends in his account, is it checked by your account? No, it is checked by the manager.
3532. But supposing there was a difference between your account, which you keep, after weighing the meat, and the butcher's, would there be any other account kept by which that could be checked, except yours? When the butcher comes he fetches the ticket with him, and every separate lot for the wards is weighed and ticked off.
3533. You weigh it? The breakfast meat only.
3534. Do you take any notice of the meat sent to you for the dinner? Yes; I sometimes weigh it over again for my own convenience.
3535. Mr. Metcalfe.] Do you find it correct? Yes.
3536. President.] Have the potatoes been bad? They have been sometimes. There have been bad ones mixed with the good ones.
3537. How does the steward communicate to you the diets required? By a programme.
3538. What do you do with it? It goes back again to him, and he looks over it again, and sees whether there is any alteration on the diet list when he sees the cards.
- 3539.

3539. Explain to the Commission the exact amount of information that the programme gives you? It tells me how many full diets and simple diets are required for each ward, and how many extras.
3540. Then if so many rice puddings are required for a ward, do you make it all up in one big dish? Yes; and if one tin will not hold it, we send up two or three small ones.
3541. And in the same way the meat is sent up in joints? Yes.
3542. And these joints would be carved by the nurses up-stairs? Yes.
3543. Formerly you used to cut them up, and they were sent up in separate portions? Yes; I and the second cook used to cut them up.
3544. Mr. Goold.] If the whole of a joint is not used, what is done with what remains? It is brought to me, and I put it into the beef-tea pot.
3545. Mr. Metcalfe.] You said that the food for each ward was sent up on a separate tray? No, a separate can.
3546. That is the soup I suppose, but I mean the meat? All sent up in cans, with hot water underneath to keep it warm.
3547. You do not find any difficulty in cooking in the place you have now—it is a better place than you had? I have never had any apparatus but that, and there are a great many more patients now than there were—there are forty-four more than there were.
3548. Do you keep the kitchen clean? I help the assistant to clean the stove and scrub the kitchen, and he does the tables himself.
3549. President.] Does he take his orders from you? Yes.
3550. Mr. Metcalfe.] You have made no complaints at all as to the insufficiency of the appliances for cooking? No.
3551. You think that they are reasonably good? Yes.
3552. I dare say the building is very hot? Yes, in the summer-time; and there is very little light in it.
3553. And the food not used at the meals is sent to you, and you use it in making soup? No. I generally put the beef that comes back in the beef-tea pot, and the bread I make bread puddings of.
3554. Can you make good beef-tea of the cooked meat? No; but it adds to it—gives it a body, and that is better than wasting it.
3555. I thought that good beef-tea requires to be made of beef without any fat in it? Yes. We have that beef too, but we put this meat that is left into the pot.
3556. But does not that make it greasy? I take all the grease off. It is left all night, and in the morning all the fat is caked on the top, and I can take it off.

Mr. J.
Bernauer.
22 May, 1873.

Mr. Joseph Jones, House Steward, Sydney Infirmary, called in and further-examined:—

3557. Mr. Ellis.] How many books do you keep? I think there are about twenty-two.
3558. Can you tell us what they are—give them to us as you name them? There are a great many of these books in which there are some accounts with the totals not made up.
3559. I want the books you are working on? I am working on them all.
3560. What is this book*? That is the provision book.
3561. Mr. Metcalfe.] These are all stock-books? Yes.
3562. Mr. Ellis.] What particular stock-book is this? I think that that book included everything at that date.
3563. There are some accounts not closed in it? Yes; crutches, for instance—that is not closed.
3564. That is 1871? Yes; but the account is still open.
3565. Have you any fresh stock-book in continuation of this? All these are fresh stock-books.
3566. But why are not these accounts carried on? I did not think it was necessary. Of course they could be carried on.
3567. What is this other book? That is the second stock-book.
3568. Is this a continuation of that one? Yes.
3569. How is it that the items are not transferred from that first book to this one? They are in reference to accounts that apply to that.
3570. Would it not be simpler to carry on all the accounts into the new book—I see that this book goes back to 1867—this is older than the other one? You referred first to an account that was opened in a later year.
3571. Is there another stock-book in continuation of this one? Yes.
3572. Is this book No. 3? That is C; the first one I gave you is A, and the next is B; this is C.
3573. Now come to the next one? That is D.
3574. What is the next one? That is E. I do not see E; I have not got it here. That is F.
3575. There are accounts of 1868 in this? Yes; some of them are. After I had nearly filled these large books, I commenced to draft all the accounts into separate books—such things as tea, sugar, butter, and things of which there was a large consumption.
3576. Where is E? I have not got E here.
3577. Have you anything in the shape of a ledger that would show the state of the accounts—a simple debtor and creditor account? There is no ledger at all. The accounts are all condensed into these books.
3578. Show me the brandy and wine account? That (producing a book) is the brandy account up to the present time.
3579. Is this the brandy stock-book? Yes. I used to have that brandy at one time in the large book.
3580. How do you show the stock on hand? Here it is—here.
3581. That is only a balance of a few quarts? 3 quarts 2 ounces.
3582. There is some in the store now? Yes, besides what I have.
3583. Have you not got it all;—are you not the storekeeper? Yes.
3584. What is it you have on hand? 10 gallons, 2 quarts, 10 ounces.
3585. Is there more brandy than that in the store? Yes, in the bulk.
3586. From whom do you draw it? From the manager.
3587. Then you keep this account as against the manager? Yes.
3588. Mr. Goold.] Do you know how much there is in the establishment altogether? Yes; about 26 or 27 gallons.

Mr. J. Jones.
22 May, 1873.

* NOTE.—The whole of this witness's evidence refers to books of account laid by him before the Commission.

- Mr. J. Jones. 3589. Mr. Metcalfe.] Are spirits the only things which are not in your store? They are in my store, but it is a system that I draw from the bulk four gallons at a time.
- 22 May, 1873. 3590. Mr. Ellis.] Suppose you want to find out how much has been consumed, have you to go through every book to find it out? Yes.
3591. But is there no summary of the account? No.
3592. Who checks this brandy account? That is checked by the doctor's orders.
3593. Does the manager go over them? No.
3594. Does he not check the expenditure of that brandy in any way? No.
3595. He depends on you for it? Yes.
3596. Mr. Driver.] Does anybody check it? The doctor's orders.
3597. Mr. Ellis.] That is only your authority for issuing it? Yes.
3598. Does the manager go over them? No, I have to give a statement.
3599. Does the manager check these books—go through the figures? No.
3600. So if there was a mistake in them no one would know it? No, unless I am called upon to show a statement, which I am sometimes called upon to do.
3601. President.] Is this system of book-keeping your own, or were you directed by the manager to keep the books in this way? I was told when I first came that I would have to keep these books in this way.
3602. Mr. Goold.] This was the plan adopted when you came? Yes. This first book A was in existence when I came, and then, when it was filled up, I got another book, B, and went on again; and when the accounts were not filled up I did not transfer the accounts, but as the books began to fill up I thought it was necessary to take some small books like these, and apply them to the several articles, and so I drafted some accounts off into these books, and there they remain.
3603. Mr. Ellis.] What is this book? Porter.
3604. Does this book show all the porter that is in the store? Yes.
3605. Here I see you do not receive the porter from the manager as you do the spirits? No.
3606. From whom do you receive it? From the brewer, in small casks of 10 gallons each.
3607. You give that out precisely in the same way as the brandy—on the doctor's orders? Yes, in precisely the same way.
3608. And nobody checks your accounts? No.
3609. The manager takes all that you have here for granted? Yes, except sometimes when I have known him to — 3610. Does he add up these columns? No, I do not think so.
3611. Mr. Metcalfe.] No one takes stock—no one examines the stock? No one does. They go over the inventories, and generally there is little stock remaining at the end of the year.
3612. Mr. Ellis.] Here it is brought forward? The balance of porter from the last year.
3613. Brought forward from where—from what book? That is in B, I think.
3614. Is there any reference from one to the other? There is generally. I generally make one, but there is not one in that instance. I did not do it.
3615. This is a book used for wines and spirits in 1872? Yes, there is the balance, 7 gallons and 29 ounces.
3616. That is a 3, not a 2;—it is 39? No, it is a 2; it is not a 3.
3617. Mr. Driver.] This is a 3? No, it is a 2.
3618. It is 39? No, it is 29; at any rate it is intended for 29.
3619. Mr. Ellis.] Suppose now there were 5 brandies here, and you put down 10 or 15 instead of 5—if there was a storekeeper who was inclined to do that every day in the year, could not the institution be defrauded to a large extent, in the absence of any check on this account? I do not see how it could be 3620. Suppose you put down brandy for thirty, or forty, or fifty people, and in reality it was only given to six, would not the institution be defrauded? A man might possibly do such a thing.
3621. And if the accounts are never checked, might not a man go on doing it for years, and make a good thing out of it? A man might do a good many things if he was so minded.
3622. Suppose a man was inclined to do it now, could he not debit the institution with twice as much brandy as was given? No.
3623. Why? I will take an instance: On January, February, March, and April, I was called upon to show the consumption of all spirits—to show the consumption of brandy, and all spirits that were used within those four months.
3624. How did you show it? By preparing a tabulated statement.
3625. From what did you prepare it? From the doctors' orders as they appeared in my books.
3626. Did anybody check the doctors' orders? Yes.
3627. Who? The committee.
3628. Did they check them? They were laid before the committee.
3629. Has that ever been done on other occasions? Yes, three or four times.
3630. During what period? Since I have been here.
3631. Who keeps the doctors' orders? I keep them.
3632. Suppose they were lost or destroyed, and the steward simply said, "I have lost them"? I have to keep them.
3633. When the statement was asked for, the orders were forwarded and they were examined by the secretaries? I do not know. I cannot say.
3634. Mr. Goold.] Were all these books sent? Not all.
3635. Mr. Driver.] You prepared that return? Yes.
3636. By whose orders? The committee's.
3637. Have you a copy of it? The manager has.
3638. Would it appear from that return to what particular wards in this establishment the wines and brandies were supplied? Yes, and the names of the patients themselves.
3639. And the date? Not the date. You can find that out by referring to the orders.
3640. Can you tell to what portion of the establishment the larger portion of the brandy was forwarded? Yes. I think that the largest portion went to D E F wards, or to J and K. Such wards use generally the most spirits.
3641. If it has been stated outside that by far the largest quantity is consumed in the Nightingale wing, would that be true? I think not.

3642. Have you any doubt about it? It appears there. There is not a very large quantity.
3643. If it has been stated that by far the largest quantity has been consumed in the Nightingale wing, is that true? I cannot say.
3644. You supply it, do you not? I do not supply all that goes into the Nightingale wing.
3645. Who supplies it then? I do not supply the beer.
3646. Would the statement be correct? I do not think so.
3647. President.] Does anybody supply them besides you? I do not know.
3648. Not that you know of? No.
3649. Mr. Driver.] Does anybody on the establishment supply them with brandy besides you? I think not.
3650. Then you would have an opportunity of knowing the exact quantity which they consume? It would be impossible for me to say what has been consumed in the Nightingale wing.
3651. You know what is supplied by you? Yes.
3652. President.] Is anybody in a position to know what is consumed? How can I tell?—It is impossible for me to tell.
3653. Mr. Driver.] Is there any one on the establishment with a better knowledge of what is supplied by the establishment to the Nightingale wing? No one knows better than I do what is supplied from the stores.
3654. The wine and everything else? That is entered in the manager's book.
3655. Who keeps that book? The manager.
3656. Anybody else? I do not know.
3657. Is that book looked over or checked by any one? I do not know.
3658. Not by you? No.
3659. How often do you take stock? Once a year.
3660. Do you keep a book on that occasion? No.
3661. Mr. Goold.] Do you not enter the stock? No; there is an inventory prepared, and the balance in my books must agree with the inventory.
3662. Mr. Ellis.] Who takes the stock? I do.
3663. Mr. Driver.] Assisted by anybody? No.
3664. Mr. Ellis.] The committee adopt your return as you prepare it? Yes.
3665. The manager does not go through the books to find out anything? No; not from first to last he does not.
3666. Mr. Goold.] And if you made a mistake there is no one to find it out? No.
3667. Mr. Cowper.] Do you not supply the Nightingale wing with a regular quantity of brandy? No; only what is ordered. There was one pint and 4 ounces supplied to the Nightingale wing last month altogether; 24 ounces were supplied, that is a pint and 4 ounces. That was the quantity supplied to the Nightingale wing last month.
3668. Have you any idea of the largest quantity supplied in any one month to the Nightingale wing? No, if you refer to the books you will see. It will average about —
3669. Well, state the average? Here is January; there were 32 ounces supplied then.
3670. What in February? 24 ounces.
3671. Mr. Metcalfe.] I see that up to March, 1871, you entered in your book the names of all persons who had brandy, and then you have altered it and put down simply patients? I think that was to simplify it. I had another system. I used to enter the orders only when they had expired and charge the patients then, and that would not always show at the end of a month what brandy I had actually in stock. Now at the end of a month the book shows exactly what I have in hand.
3672. President.] Does the manager bear a character for sobriety? I think so.
3673. Did you never see him under the influence of liquor? No.
3674. Did you not see him yesterday under the influence of liquor? No.
3675. Did you see him at all yesterday? Yes.
3676. How often? Several times.
3677. At all hours of the day? I saw him three or four times.
3678. You spoke of a return that you made out by the orders of the committee? Yes.
3679. Who communicated the orders of the committee to you? Mr. Blackstone.
3680. Did he tell you that Mr. Wise required it? No.
3681. You do not know by what particular member of the committee it was moved for? No.
3682. Mr. Ellis.] I understand you to say that none of these books are ever posted into any general book? No.
3683. So that in order to find out at any time what is in the store, it is necessary to go over all these books? It would be necessary to go over all the accounts. For instance, if you came and asked me how much sugar I had in the store, I should have to turn to the sugar account, and the balance there stated should be in the store.
3684. Mr. Goold.] Can you tell us what that number there (indicating number in brandy stock-book) refers to;—what page of any other book does it refer to? That is a reference to a page in what any one would term a ledger that I attempted to keep; but I found it was too much work for me, so I did not continue it. That 205 will refer to that book.
3685. Is that book here? Yes, it is B.
3686. Mr. Driver.] Have you ever received any instructions as to what books you should keep? Only the stock-books.
3687. Mr. Cowper.] Do any members of the committee look into your books? The books have been laid before them on several occasions, when they have asked for them.
3688. Mr. Ellis.] Some officers of the institution are allowed so much spirits, wine, and beer, are they not? I do not know. They are not supplied by me.
3689. Suppose that the manager and other persons are allowed wine and spirits at the expense of the institution, who supplies them? The wine merchant.
3690. Does not the manager supply you with so many bottles of wine, &c., as you require them? No.
3691. Look at this book kept by yourself;—you see here a statement that you have received so many bottles from the manager? Yes.

Mr. J. Jones.
22 May, 1873.

- Mr. J. Jones. 3692. And you do not charge yourself with the wine supplied to any officer of the institution? I do not supply any of them.
- 22 May, 1873. 3693. Then your books do not show the true state of the wine account? Not of the wine supplied to the officers.
3694. Is there no set of books in the institution which will show the state of the account? Yes, these books will.
3695. What quantity of wine is in the store? That wine is not in the store.
3696. Then if the wine is not in the store you are not responsible for it? It is not in my charge.
3697. Has anybody access to the wines and spirits but yourself? No.
3698. How then does the manager issue it to you? When I want it I go and take it.
3699. Why then do you enter it as received from the manager? I go and take it, and tell him.
3700. Does not the manager get his wine from you? No, I do not supply him.
3701. Are any of the officers allowed wines and spirits? I believe they are.
3702. Where do they get them? From the wine merchant.
3703. Do you not think it is from the store? I believe they are allowed a certain quantity of wine.
3704. Is there any book in the store which shows the quantity taken for these allowances? There is no wine taken out of my store for these allowances.
3705. Where do the officers get their wine from? From the wine merchant. I have nothing whatever to do with their wines.
3706. As far as you are concerned, there is nothing to show what wine the manager and the other officers get? No.
3707. Is there any book kept by the manager which will show it? I believe that there is.
3708. Do you know what wine the manager gets? I did hear that the officers are allowed a pint of wine per day.
3709. President.] Do you not know that the manager is allowed a pint of wine a day? No, I do not know it officially.
3710. Do you not know it as a matter of fact? I do not know it. How can I tell?
3711. Is the bulk of wine in the store not under your charge? Yes, it is, and I take the bottles when I want them.
3712. What quantity of wine is ordered at a time? A hogshead.
3713. Is it in bulk? Yes, it is in bulk, and is bottled on the premises.
3714. From whom do you get it? From Messrs. Stewart, Garrick, & Co.
3715. Do you know whether a certain quantity of that wine is drawn from time to time to supply the officers on the place who are entitled to wine? No.
3716. Can you say that it is not? I believe that it is not. It is all used for the patients—it is the patients' wine.
3717. Mr. Goold.] Has any one a key of the store but yourself? No.
3718. And no one can go to the store except by getting the key from you? No.
3719. Is there no other store where wine and beer is kept? No.
3720. Mr. Driver.] Is your office there? Yes.
3721. Do you leave the store open when you go to lunch? No, close it up.
3722. Do you keep the keys? Yes, I do.
3723. Do you take them away with you at night? Yes.
3724. In a case of extreme urgency then what would be done? I do not know. I never heard of anything of the kind.
3725. President.] Did you not tell us that you sometimes left the keys with the manager? Yes, when I go out in the day-time.
3726. Mr. Driver.] Don't you go to lunch in the day-time? I have it on the premises.
3727. Mr. Ellis.] In what books do you enter the wine received? This (handing in a book).
3728. Who keeps the invoices? The manager.
3729. Does he compare the invoices with your books, or do you examine the invoices;—does the manager ever compare them? When the goods come in I sign a receipt, and keep the counterpart.
3730. If you made a mistake and entered two chests of tea when there were three in the invoice, you would keep the three in your store, and the error would never be discovered? I do not understand you.
3731. Mr. Metcalfe.] Supposing on the way to your store one chest of tea was taken off the cart, and that you only received nineteen chests instead of the twenty in the invoice, how would you find that out?—
3732. Mr. Ellis.] Supposing there were collusion between the manager and the storekeeper, and that two chests of tea were entered in the storekeeper's book, although three chests had been supplied, would the institution not be paying for three chests and only getting two? I think I would be very thick-headed to sign for three chests of tea and only get two.
3733. Mr. Cowper.] But supposing you received three and sent one away in a baker's cart, who would check the account? I suppose any reasonable man would know that three chests of tea were not used.
3734. No one examines the books to see? Not systematically.
3735. Mr. Ellis.] The diet cards are never compared with your books? No.
3736. And these diet cards involve the consumption of all things required for the institution? Yes.
3737. So that if a man were so minded, he might perpetrate a little dishonesty with any of the things supplied? Of course such things do take place in establishments where you would never think that they would take place.
3738. President.] Do you keep any petty cash account? No; I have no money transactions at all.
3739. When you take stock, do you check or compare all the items in your book with the articles in the store;—do you go through them one by one and compare them? Yes.
3740. Are you assisted in doing so? Only by a boy.
3741. You go over them and make out a list in the best way you can? Of course, if my books show a balance I put it down.
3742. Mr. Ellis.] Then there must be losses from waste and depreciation, and I see no item for loss in any one of these books? Yes, I think there is in some of them.
3743. Can you show me there where any account of an article is made up by an estimated loss;—everything seems to balance to a hair's breadth? Here there is an allowance for waste in the twelve months' consumption of tea.

3744. What is it? 69 lbs. for loss during twelve months.
3745. Mr. Cowper.] What do you expect a chest of tea to retail you? On the whole consumption you must calculate about 5 per cent. loss.
3746. How much loss do you calculate per chest? 5 per cent.
3747. And what amount of tea do you expect a chest to retail you? The chest would be 84 lbs.
3748. What amount of tea would you expect it to retail you? It would turn out about 81 or 82 lbs. I have generally found that the loss on the twelve months' consumption is 5 per cent or 4 per cent.
3749. But what do you calculate that a chest will retail you? I put down the net weight at 84 lbs.
3750. But supposing the actual weight of a chest is 90 lbs., and there would be so much off that for the chest and the matting, and that has to be deducted. Some chests will retail 90, some 84 lbs.? But I weigh them all.
3751. How do you find out what tea is in the chest? If you weigh a chest of tea it will weigh more than 84 lbs. gross.
3752. What would it have to weigh gross to make 84 lbs. of tea net? I have not had any chests lately;—they are half-chests in the store now, and the tare of the half-chest would be 14 lbs.
3753. And what is the chest? 42 lbs. tea.
3754. That is the gross? No; the tea would weigh 42 lbs. and the chest 14 lbs.
3755. Is that the tea you have been retailing lately? Yes; it was got the commencement of the year, and it will last to the end of the year.
3756. Do you never check the account after you have weighed a chest of tea and retailed it? No, I have never done so.
3757. Did you ever make up your account to see whether you had retailed 44 lbs. of tea out of a half-chest? No, I have not done so,—or rather yes, I believe I have.
3758. What depreciation did you find? Generally about 4 per cent. I have found it go below 4 per cent.
3759. Mr. Metcalfe.] In weighing out the rations you give a turn to the scale? Yes.
3760. Mr. Cowper.] That 69 lbs. is the loss on twelve months' consumption of tea? Yes.
3761. What is the number of chests used in twelve months? About twenty-two chests.
3762. President.] Who appointed you? The committee.
3763. How did you obtain the situation? By application.
3764. Direct to the committee, or through the manager? Direct to the committee.
3765. Did you know the manager before? No.
3766. You say you saw the manager yesterday? Yes.
3767. Did you see him when the Secretary,—Mr. Cooper, saw him, in the afternoon? Yes, in the evening.
3768. Will you say that he was not under the influence of liquor then? How could I say that he was under the influence of liquor?
3769. Will you say that he was not? I have no reason to believe that he was.
3770. Had you any conversation with him then? Yes.
3771. Had you the means of judging whether he was so or not? Yes.
3772. Will you undertake to state positively that he was not under the influence of liquor? I do not believe that he was.
3773. Mr. Cowper.] Did he appear at all confused? No; I did not see anything about him to lead me to believe he was at all confused.
3774. Have you ever noticed him confused at any time? No.
3775. Always the same? Yes.

Mr. John Blackstone; Manager, Sydney Infirmary, called in and further examined:—

3776. President.] Who keeps the wine, beer, and spirits in the store? Part under my charge and part under the charge of Mr. Jones.
3777. Do you keep any check upon him? I keep a check upon him. When he comes to me for more wine I know what there is, for I keep a book.
3778. Have you got that book? Yes; it is in my office.
3779. Can you get it? I can produce the books.
3780. What do you enter in this book? Well, if I get a quarter-cask of brandy in, it goes to the store and I enter it, and the house steward tells me that he wants 2 or 4 gallons and I tell him to draw it, and when he has drawn it he comes and tells me that he has done so. I then enter it on a memorandum.
3781. Supposing that he represents at the end of a month that it is all gone, and that it has all gone to the patients, how can you tell that it is so? He can't do that without my adding the book up and seeing that it has all gone.
3782. Adding what up? Of course I know the quantity of brandy in the cask, and if that does not correspond with the balance in the book I know that it has not been used properly.
3783. But supposing he says it has all gone among the patients, how can you tell that it is so? By seeing his books.
3784. But if he chooses to make his books tell something that is untrue? As I told you before, we are all supposed to be honest men in this institution. We are not supposed to take bottles of wine out of the place. I believe the house steward to be a conscientious, religious man, who would not wrong the institution of anything.
3785. Then you rely upon his honesty? No. Well I rely upon it so far that I check his books. He is bound to come to me to draw wine and spirits out of the store.
3786. But suppose he sends it away in a baker's cart, and says that it has gone among the patients? That is not likely, because I keep the vouchers of the medical officers, and you can see them.
3787. Who keeps them? They are all printed, and if he cannot produce them he is responsible for what he issues. The vouchers are there every day. We are entirely in the hands of the medical men—the honorary staff. Some men will order 4 ounces of brandy for a patient for seven days; some will order 8, and some 12.
3788. Who issues the wine to the officers which is allowed them by the institution? Well, I do in a measure. I know the complement of wine that is allowed by the committee to the officers, and I order it. I order six dozen at a time from Lindeman, and I send it down to the stores, and when I want any I go down to the house steward and tell him to send it up to me.
3789. Then of course he has charge of all the wine that is issued to you? He tells me when it is done. I do

Mr. J. Jones.
22 May, 1873.

Mr. J.
Blackstone.
22 May, 1873.

- Mr. J. Blackstone. do not keep any account. I know pretty well at the end of the month how much is left, and when he tells me there are so many bottles left I make my calculation and go and order the wine.
3790. Then does he draw from this stock? No; it is an independent stock.
- 22 May, 1873. 3791. From the stock you get in from time to time for the supply of the patients the officers are not supplied? No.
3792. Do I understand you to say that the house steward supplies you from time to time as you require the wine? Yes; and the Nightingale wing as well.
3793. Then all the wine and brandy that goes in to the Nightingale wing is supplied by the house steward? Yes.
3794. Then the house steward can tell if we ask him about it, what comes into this Nightingale wing? Yes, he can produce the book.
3795. I am not speaking of brandy now? Yes.
3796. How much wine is supposed to be supplied to the Nightingale wing? Sometimes four bottles a week.
3797. And the house steward supplies it? Yes; at Miss Osburn's order, and I countersign the book.
3798. Whose book? Everybody's book and everybody's order.
3799. You say that you countersign a book on which wine is issued to the Nightingale wing? Yes.
3800. By whom is that book kept that you countersign? Miss Osburn; and it is sent down every morning for her supplies.
3801. Then the house steward knows what wine is issued to the Nightingale wing, and what wine is drawn for your use, and for the doctors' too? Yes, for me and the doctors—it is all one.
3802. How often do you draw that wine from the store? Six bottles at a time—three days' consumption.
3803. Does the house steward keep a record of that? I do not think he does.
3804. It is under his control? Yes, there is no place to keep it. I am not going to have a wine store in my establishment, and I send it down to the house steward.
3805. Mr. Cowper.] Do you not send a written official order for it? No, I do not.
3806. But you make Miss Osburn send down a book for it? No, that is a different kind of thing.
3807. It is her allowance? No, I do not recognize any allowance for the Nightingale wing. I would not acknowledge it. Miss Osburn writes for so much on the Saturday, and I look over one week with the other and I sign the order, and she is bound to get it.
3808. Do you not see that she has a right to these things that she signs the order for? There is no wine except for the nurses.
3809. Have not the committee decided that Miss Osburn shall have wine? I do not know.
3810. Have you complained that she asks for wine which she is not entitled to? No.
3811. And yet you say that she is not? It is supplied on her order. There is her voucher for it.
3812. Do you sign any order for your own wine? No, because that wine is allowed by the committee, and it has always been issued.
3813. Mr. Driver.] Who is it allowed to? The two resident medical officers, and myself.
3814. Mr. Cowper.] Is there not a similar order for Miss Osburn? No.
3815. Why do you officially countersign her book? Because I have an order from Mr. Stephen that nothing shall be issued out of that store, except I sign the order for it.
3816. President.] Then why not give the same order for the wine issued to the doctors? Because I never exceed the quantity which the committee allows.
3817. Mr. Cowper.] Do you allow Miss Osburn to exceed the quantity allowed? I countersign her order and the wine is sent up to her.
3818. President.] Does the house steward keep an account of the wine supplied to you? No, he does not keep it in a book, because he knows that we do not have more than our complement; because I do not recollect until I refer to the book how much there is left.
3819. Does Mr. Jones know that you get an allowance of wine? That is saying a great deal more than I can tell.
3820. Have you ever informed him of it? Yes, so far that the committee have granted it.
3821. You say that you draw all this wine from Mr. Jones? Yes.
3822. Can you account then for his saying that you do not draw any wine at all from him? I think he must have made a mistake.
3823. Can you account for his saying that the wine is not under his control at all—that he knows nothing of it—that you get it direct from the wine merchant? I am not going to be answerable for what any person says. I cannot answer for what any person says to you.
3824. Mr. Driver.] You are not asked to be answerable for that? I think so, from the way it is put. I am not going to answer what a man thinks, or what a man says here, because I am not supposed to know what he says here.
3825. You are not asked to do that at all? Well, if the question is repeated again to me—
3826. President.] If Mr. Jones has represented that he has no wine which is supplied to you, under his control—that he supplies you with no wine—that as far as he knows the wine you get yourself is ordered from a wine merchant—that you keep it yourself, and that he knows nothing about it? I believe that he is correct there.
3827. Is that consistent with what you have stated? If I order six dozen of wine from Lindeman, I send it down to the stores, and I order him to send me up six bottles at a time, and I can tell by my books if I have exceeded the quantity ordered.
3828. Mr. Cowper.] Who keeps the account of what you receive from Mr. Lindeman? I do, and I have it entered in the ledger.
3829. Mr. Gould.] How much do you order? 6 dozen; that is supposed to last twenty-eight days.
3830. Including the allowance to Miss Osburn? No.
3831. Where does that come from? She had the Shiraz wine, the same that was ordered for the patients, and we had Cawarra wine. The Shiraz was in bulk, and it was drawn off and bottled, and made 30 dozen bottles. That was kept in the books, as the Shiraz generally was kept. Mr. Jones came to me in the morning to say he wanted so many bottles, and they were entered; and when the wine was done, I added it up to see if the accounts tallied. Miss Osburn used to have that Shiraz wine, but she came to me some time ago, and said the last cask of Shiraz wine was bad; and I said she could have some of the Cawarra wine. She said she was agreeable to have it, and I know by adding up what she has, what time the wine lasts.

Mr. J.
Blackstone
22 May, 1873.

3832. Does the wine Miss Osburn has, appear in the stock-book;—is it entered there? Not if it is out of our Cawarra wine. If you understand, there are two distinct wines; the wine that we get in the bulk is bought from Stewart, Garrick, & Co., and a man comes here and draws it off, and bottles it; and the man comes up and says, "That cask has produced 30 dozen of wine." Then Mr. Jones comes to me and says, "I have taken a dozen of wine out for the patients"; and then, on the other hand, Miss Osburn writes for four bottles, and she gets it, and there is so much entered for her. It is only within the last few weeks that she objected to the Shiraz wine, and I said, "You can have the Cawarra wine."
3833. Does the Cawarra wine supplied to her appear in the books? All the Shiraz wine does, but not the Cawarra wine; not in Mr. Jones's books.
3834. Where does it appear? It would appear in my book. It would show that I drew 6 dozen from Lindeman, and that she had some of it.
3835. Mr. Ellis.] Is there any gin in the store? Yes; I got in a case of gin on Monday morning.
3836. It does not appear here*? It should do.
3837. Is there any beer? Yes, porter.
3838. You say you got a case of gin in? Yes.
3839. Why does it not appear here? It should appear. I never knew Mr. Jones to be lax in entering things.
3840. Is there a book for gin? I believe that there is, and he draws three bottles of gin at a time.
3841. What spirits are there in the store now? I believe there is some rum in the store?
3842. Would it appear in the books? Yes. We have no power to refuse anything which the doctors like to order. I have known a patient have 12 ounces of brandy a day—a single patient. I remember when one of the doctors ordered two bottles of champagne a day for a patient; and it cost 5s. a bottle, and there were eight bottles got, and I had to pay for them out of my petty cash. I showed it to the committee.
3843. What is the reason that the house steward credits you in these books with wines and spirits, but does not credit you with any other articles that he takes out of the store? Yes, he does, in all cases where I have anything do with it.
3844. He credits you with whatever wine or spirits he draws, but in all other cases he credits the persons from whom the goods actually come? I am supposed to be master of all the spirits and liquors.
3845. Particularly? Yes.
3846. But are you not supposed to be master over all? Yes, but if we get in a ton of sugar, it is delivered to the house steward.
3847. But are not the wines and spirits in the same way delivered to him? Yes, but he cannot take any from the bulk without referring to me.
3848. Can he take anything else? Of course, as I said before, we are all honest men. Of course, if the man chose to take away half-a-pound of sugar I could not detect it.
3849. Suppose a man were inclined to keep false accounts, could he not do so by the present system;—now, for instance, take one of these books; you don't compare the doctors' cards, the diet cards, with these books? No, but I can produce every card.
3850. Yes, but you are not called upon to do so, and you have no reason to suspect anything wrong? I believe the house steward to be a perfectly honest man.
3851. We don't say he is not; we want to know what the system is? Well, I do not see how you can check the system at all. You must understand me wrongly, because the diet scale comes up to me every day and I check it.
3852. President.] How? One day with the other, by the admissions and discharges.
3853. Are the whole 228 cards brought to you every day? I should hope not.
3854. Then what is brought to you? Why the steward sends me up a return every night of what he wants for the diets.
3855. Who does that? The house steward.
3856. In what form? I can produce it. It is in the office.
3857. The form is brought to you every day? Yes. How can I give the orders for the meat and other things, unless I get the list of diets?
3858. Have you got one of these forms? Yes; and it is soup day to-morrow, and that you will understand very little about. Here is the form. (See Appendix E.) It is a diet list.
3859. This may inform you as to the number of diets required, but this affords you no check upon the house steward as to the quantity of each kind of thing he supplies? This is only for the butcher.
3860. How do you know there are a certain number of people on full diet, and a certain quantity of food required? I take it for granted from the house steward.
3861. Then this is no check at all? But he would not take the meat away in his pocket.
3862. I understood you to say that this was a check upon the house steward, because you compared it with the number of patients in the hospital, and the admissions and discharges? That is on account of the meat only.
3863. But how do you know there is that number of people requiring full diets? Because I go down and overhaul the house steward's books. He has got a list of every patient in the hospital, and I go round and look them up.
3864. Do you not see that you take his word for it? Yes, I do. I do not go down every day, but I get these returns from him.
3865. Did you not say that this form saved you the trouble of going through 228 cards? It is not my business to go through 228 cards.
3866. I do not ask whether it is your business? No, it is not my business to do it. You see, here I have the numbers of patients in each ward on full diet,—house-diet, and so on. I add them together, and I find that there is so much meat wanted for these diets—say 11 lbs. 4 ozs. Well, I have to order 100 per cent. more than that to give the patients their diets. I order double the quantity. When there is 11 lbs. 4 ozs. required, I order 22 lbs. of meat from the butcher.
3867. Mr. Driver.] Is the loss so great? It has been calculated by the cooks, and the house steward and myself, when these new diets came into existence. The diet scale says the patient on full diet is to have 8 ozs. solid meat, and we are bound to give it him. There is a butcher's book, in which I enter what I order every day. That I keep, and have kept for years, and that is the order-book to correspond with these diets. And yet I go round the wards, and sometimes they will tell me there are diets short.

FRIDAY,

* NOTE:—This refers to one of the house steward's account-books.

FRIDAY, 23 MAY, 1873.

Members Present:—

WILLIAM CHARLES WINDEYER, Esq., PRESIDENT.

MICHAEL METCALFE, Esq.
SAMUEL GOOLD, Esq.EYRE G. ELLIS, Esq.
CHARLES COWPER, JUN., Esq.

Matthew Henry Stephen, Esq., Honorary Secretary, Sydney Infirmary, called in and examined:—

- M. H. Stephen, Esq. 3868. President.] You are the Honorary Secretary to the Sydney Infirmary? Yes. I do not know that I shall be able to give you much information. I wish to say that I did not volunteer to give evidence, feeling that I had so little information to give; but I was asked to attend, and being asked I am here. For a long time I have been anxious to get rid of the office of secretary; for years past I may say that I have been trying to get some one to take my position, and found no one willing to undertake the little trouble and responsibility that are attached to the office. The directors can bear me out that I have been desirous of ceasing to hold an office, the duties of which I was unable—owing to want of time—properly to fulfil.
3869. How long have you been secretary? I must have been secretary for some six or eight years. I was so in the time of Mrs. Ghost.
3870. How long have you been connected with the hospital? For a great number of years. I believe I am one of the oldest directors.
3871. Have you formed any opinion as to whether the present Board of Management is too large? I think that it decidedly is.
3872. Has it appeared to you that in consequence of the Board being so large, time is wasted in useless discussions, and that some members attending on one day do not attend on others, so that the business on one day is transacted by an entirely different set of men to those who deal with it on another day? Undoubtedly; I think that is the defect of committees of management, and I think it has been strikingly exemplified in this committee, both with regard to useless and wearying discussion and speech-making, and of late years a sort of division of the Board which has been very prejudicial. Then again, some members will come, as you say, on one Monday, and complaints are made or something requires to be investigated, and next time the Board meets it may consist of entirely different people. That a great deal of the defects which have been brought before us have not been remedied, is much to be attributed to that cause, in my opinion, because I have gone into the committee when several matters have been mentioned, and have not been able to go perhaps on the next Monday, when the matters would be dealt with; and no doubt what has been the case with me, has been the case with others.
3873. Have you observed that matters have been left to be dealt with by committees, and have very often not been carried out? I think that has been the case; I would like to say, however, that though there has often been a great difficulty in getting sub-committees together, as their members have not had time to attend, yet that some of the sub-committees have really discharged their work very faithfully indeed. But, as a rule, you cannot get them together.
3874. Considering that the Government contribute £8,000 out of the £10,000 a year which is the revenue of the hospital, should not the Government be represented on the managing body? I think so. It would be justice. I for one should be delighted to see a representative of the Government on the Board.
3875. Have you formed any opinion as to whether it is desirable that the Board should be composed exclusively of laymen? Well, while I do not wish to give a very decided opinion on that point, I think it would be better. But I will say that some of the clergymen on the committee have been among the best members. Yet, on the whole, I would as a rule prefer their being away. At the same time, there are some clergymen who are able to give more time to the business of the institution than laymen. There are some clergymen who are the most regular of the members.
3876. Have you observed, in the discharge of your duties here, that there is a clashing of authority between the manager and the lady superintendent? Yes, there certainly has been. It is a defect in the management of the institution, and the peculiar relation that Mr. Blackstone and Miss Osburn bear to one another. I do not speak of them personally, but as the manager and lady superintendent.
3877. Dr. Bedford has given it as his opinion that when the lady superintendent came here, certain duties which were before discharged by the manager should have been placed in her hands, thus giving the control of the internal management of the hospital to the lady superintendent—Do you agree in that opinion—He says that this would have obviated the present state of things? I cannot call to mind any particular duties which Mr. Blackstone discharges which should be handed over to the lady superintendent. If any were mentioned to me I should be able to say, but I cannot charge my memory with any now.
3878. The lady superintendent complains of the cooking, and says it is not what it should be in the matter of delicacies supplied to the patients, and that if she complains to the manager he says that he knows nothing about cooking; should not this branch be placed under the control of the lady superintendent—she says that this has been part of her training, to learn to cook for sick people? Yes, I think that the cooking should be handed over to her; though I don't see very well how it can be at present. If you have a manager, he should have the power to discharge the men servants. While you have a manager here he should do that.
3879. Do you think it is desirable to retain the manager? No, I think that this system is a bad one—this dual government is a bad thing.
3880. Are you acquainted with a pamphlet by Miss Nightingale on management of hospitals and nursing? I do not know to what you refer. I have read one of her pamphlets, but I do not know whether it is the one you refer to. I do not think it is.
3881. Just listen to this, and say if you agree with what is here laid down or not:—"Vest the charge of financial matters and general supervision, and the whole administration of the Infirmary, in the Board or committee, i.e., in the officer who is responsible to that Board or committee. Vest the whole responsibility for nursing, internal management, for discipline, and training (if there be a training school of nurses) in the one female head of the nursing staff, whatever she is called. The necessity of this, again, is not matter of opinion, but of fact and experience. I will enter a little more fully into this, viz., the relation which the nursing nursing establishment ought to bear to the government of the hospital. The matron or nursing superintendent must be held responsible for her own efficiency, and the efficiency of all her nurses and servants. As regards the medical officers, she must be responsible that their orders about the treatment of the sick are strictly carried out. To the governing body of the hospital she shall be held responsible for the conduct, discipline, and duties of her nurses, for the discipline of her sick wards, for their cleanliness, for the care and cleanliness of sick, for proper ventilation and warming of wards, for the administration of diets and medicines, of enemata, &c., the performance of minor dressings, and the like, for the care of linen and bedding, &c., and probably of patients' clothing. The duties which each grade has to perform should be laid down by regulation, and all that the medical department or the governing body of the hospital has a right to require is that the regulation duties shall be faithfully performed. Any remissness or neglect of duty is a breach of discipline, as well as drunkenness or other bad conduct, and can only be dealt with to any good purpose by report to the superintendent of nurses of the Infirmary. I may perhaps again point out that the superintendent should herself be responsible to the constituted hospital authorities, and that all her nurses and servants should, in the performance of these duties, be responsible to the superintendent only. No good ever comes of the constituted authorities placing themselves in the office which they have sanctioned her occupying. No good ever comes of any one interfering between the head of the nursing establishment and her nurses—it is fatal to discipline. All complaints on any subject should be made directly to the superintendent, and not to any nurse or servant." Do you agree with that? I do generally, although, if you have quite accurately defined the duties of the head of the nursing staff, and confine them to that, I do not see that it may not necessarily follow that you should have some one—a manager or paid secretary—who will be of great use in the supervision of the place, and in the discharge of various duties which I do not see how a lady superintendent could very well attend to. I do not wish it to be understood that I do not think that the presence of a man—a male person in authority of a superior class—may not be desirable. Perhaps you would not call him a manager, but a paid secretary, to reside here and have the general supervision of the place—to attend to a number of duties which the lady superintendent can not discharge, but certainly not to interfere with anything connected with the nursing.

* NOTE (on revision):—I do not presume to alter this question; but it should, I submit, be so worded as to make it clear that I answered with reference to the office of manager.

3882. You would give the lady superintendent power to engage and discharge her own nurses? That Miss Osburn has here—absolute power over the nurses.

3883. Are you not aware that the committee have interfered, and insisted on Miss Osburn's taking back nurses that she has discharged? I am not aware that they have insisted on her taking nurses back, but I am aware of particular nurses that she discharged having appealed to the Board, and the Board referred the matter back to Miss Osburn, and that on one or more occasions Miss Osburn altered the character she had given to these nurses; that is, she gave a better character than she had given before; and I think on one or two occasions, I myself, by order of the committee, gave a better character than Miss Osburn had given.

3884. Mr. Cowper.] Do you know of any case in which she has discharged nurses, and the committee have sent the nurses back to her with almost an instruction to put those nurses on again, and they were put on and kept in the service? You raise a floating impression in my mind that something of that sort once occurred; but I recollect so little of the facts that I cannot call it to mind. I do recollect something of the sort, but it is a mere floating impression.

3885. President.] You do not recollect any cases in which Miss Osburn refused to give the nurses any character at all, but only that she refused to give them the character which they wanted? She refused to give them a character of the kind that they said they deserved.

3886. Then, if it has been stated that she refused to give them a character of any kind, that would not be correct? I do not think so. I think she did give them a character, which they did not think good enough. It was just barely what she could possibly give, and I know in some instances she altered the character, and I believe in one case that I was rather glad the matter did come before the committee. As long as there was a committee I would not take away the power of appeal to it, from any officer of the institution. Whatever trust you might put in your lady superintendent, I think that if a nurse felt herself aggrieved she should have a right to appeal to the committee; but I think the interference by the committee should be most sparingly exercised.

3887. Mr. Metcalfe.] Miss Osburn complains that she has no power over the nurses? I should think that was rather too strong a statement. I think that one or two nurses, as far as I recollect, did go with their complaints to members of the committee, and that the matter was brought before the committee and it did strike me when these members came to deal with the matter that there was a little prejudging of the case; but I should not have thought that this produced any practical inconvenience.

3888. Mr. Cowper.] It destroys Miss Osburn's authority, because when a nurse is going to leave, members of the committee go and request her to go back again? If that has occurred at all, it has occurred in only one instance—that is, the nurse going back again. I have no recollection of these things. I believe while there is a committee to appeal to, a nurse should be allowed the right of appealing to it; but I think the committee would act wrongly to reverse the decision, except in some very strong cases, and then I think the case should be so strong that if decided against the lady superintendent it should lead to her dismissal.

3889. President.] Would it not be better to make her responsible for her management, and, if she fails, to dismiss her? It would involve the necessity of an appeal to ascertain whether she had discharged her duties.

3890. Mr. Ellis.] Would you advise that the honorary secretary should be done away with; and all his duties, together with those you mentioned as belonging to a paid secretary, be given to a paid secretary? I think it would be a better plan.

3891. He should be the executive officer with reference to financial matters? Yes; I think I am a specimen of the failure of the system of having an honorary secretary.

E. S. P. Bedford, Esq., F.R.C.S., Honorary Surgeon to the Sydney Infirmary, called in and examined:—

3892. President.] You are one of the honorary staff visiting the Sydney Infirmary? I am one of the honorary surgeons.

3893. How long have you been in the Infirmary? About seven years.

3894. Were you acquainted with the institution before that? I used occasionally to see it, but I was not much acquainted with it.

M. H. Stephen, Esq.

23 May, 1873.

E. S. P. Bedford, Esq., F.R.C.S.

3895. 23 May, 1873.

- E. S. P. 3895. You are not able to speak of its state—not anything definitely? Nothing definitely. I used to visit it several times for two or three years before that.
- Bedford, Esq., 3896. Have you been visiting surgeon all that time? Yes; seven years.
- F.R.C.S. 3897. How often do your duties bring you to the hospital? Daily. I may say, the rules now do not compel the surgeon to visit daily; he is, according to the rules, required to visit no more than three times a week, but not by rule daily, though the practice of surgeons has been to visit daily. I have been there every day, except when prevented by ill health; and if the duties of surgeon have been important, I have visited it two or three or even more times, but these are occasional cases.
- 23 May, 1873. 3898. In your own case, you have been to the Infirmary almost daily? Yes, I may say almost daily, with the exception that I was for three or four months absent from Sydney; and, during the last four months I have not been absent more than four days.
3899. But while you were in Sydney? Yes, daily.
3900. Is there any prescribed hour for the surgeons to attend? Yes; they are expected to attend before 12 o'clock.
3901. Do you think it desirable that there should be such a rule? I think it is desirable that the visits of the surgeons should be in the morning and before a given time, but I do not think that you can with honorary medical officers lay down a positive rule that they should be there all at one hour. There must be a limit. The honorary officers are men in general practice, and most of them now and then have other engagements.
3902. What is your own practice as to the hour of attendance? To attend before 12 o'clock.
3903. Have you ever to attend in company with any other honorary surgeon? There are occasionally consultations.
3904. Have you found any inconvenience from other surgeons not attending near the hour when they are supposed to attend? When a consultation is called, it is called for a particular day and time, and notice is sent to them to attend at a consultation—say on Saturday at 11 o'clock.
3905. So that no inconvenience does arise from any particular surgeon not attending? Well, you cannot compel them to attend; it is the way you give them notice.
3906. But is it laid down in the rules that they shall attend at a certain time? I do not think that any particular time is mentioned. I think you are referring to consultations with reference to patients who have been some time in the house.
3907. Have you, in the course of your practice here, formed any opinion that there are patients here who might, as advantageously to themselves and more economically to the public, be taken care of in other institutions? I think that is rather a large question; I mean large as it affects cases likely to come under the rules of other institutions. There have been cases that could have been dealt with at the Liverpool Asylum, but if you go into the question with regard to the economical treatment of cases of the pauper sick, that is another question, because the pauper sick do not have ulcerated legs or accidents merely; they are subject to all kinds of disorders and complaints.
3908. I refer to all broken-down people—people broken down from old age and infirmity? Such people should not be retained here at all; there should be some other place to send them to.
3909. In what way would you check the admission of such people? You mean into this hospital?
3910. Yes? You can only do that by having some place to put many of them in. For instance, a person may be broken down in health from accident or disease much under 60 years of age—may be broken down from various causes. These people would not be admissible according to the rules of the Asylum at Liverpool. I think they require them to have age as well as disability, and you would require alterations made in the system to relieve this institution. You would require to make arrangements for their admission into other Government institutions, in consequence of there being no other accommodation for that class of people; and there are a large number of patients admitted here who are not fit for this hospital at all.
3911. We are told that the authorities at some of these destitute asylums—the Hyde Park Asylum, for instance—object to receive patients who are discharged from this establishment, on the ground that they have had erysipelas when they have been here. Do you think that when a patient of that kind is discharged as cured, that is a valid ground of objection? Mind, I do not think it would be prudent to take into an asylum of infirm people a person who has just recovered from erysipelas, but there is no objection to a person who has had it and is perfectly well. Of course, I am not giving an opinion with reference to the people that they have refused.
3912. We are informed that they have refused them on the ground that they have had it; that is not a valid reason? No; I could give no opinion at all as to the particular persons—as to whether they have had been properly refused or not.
3913. I only ask in a general way? Of course they are quite as fit to be admitted there as retained here.
3914. Are you acquainted with the mode by which people are sent here by the Colonial Secretary, on the recommendation of residents in the town? I cannot say that I am acquainted with it officially in any way, but I understand that when a recommendation is sent they get the order as a matter of course,—that the Colonial Secretary trusts to the person recommending.
3915. Do you not think that that has a tendency to increase the expenses of the institution? I think that it has a tendency to create a pauper class. I do not think that paupers should be admitted into a hospital conducted as this is.
3917. Where do you draw the line between the pauper poor you would refuse admission to and the needy whom you would receive? Of course there would be a certain number of beds in the hospital open to private subscribers; that is, the hospital would be maintained by private subscriptions, and there would be so many beds in the gift of certain persons. They might admit to these beds patients as they thought proper, but those persons who should be admitted from charity are the class now admitted through the Colonial Secretary's order; and that class should not be admitted into a hospital conducted on the principles of this hospital. Exceptions to this rule might be more difficult to treat in a Colony than at Home,

Home, and I think the expenses of serious surgical operations might be too great for some persons not absolutely paupers, and who would not be able to have these operations performed at their own homes—as they would be too expensive for them, and they would require skilled nursing and so on. They might be treated in a hospital of this kind, but purely pauper patients should not be admitted on the same terms, except for accidents and operations. I think patients who are a little beyond the pauper class might be admitted to a hospital like this, who in London are patients for workhouse hospitals; it would free the space for the legitimate patients for this institution; it would lessen materially what are the legitimate patients for hospitals, and bring them nearer to what they are in London.

3918. In London, if a sailor applies for admission, to what class of hospital would he be admitted? I suppose a seaman would go to an ordinary hospital, because he would have no local rate to pay for him.

3919. He would not belong to any parish? Yes. Otherwise the parishes have to provide for their sick.

3920. Mr. Gould.] Then the workhouse hospital would be supported by the rates? Yes, and that keeps down the expenditure for the support of your absolute sick poor, which in the first place is an important thing to do in a matter of expenditure, and I think a very important thing to do in regard to the moral part of the question; for it is hard lines that the indolent and idle should be supported in a hospital and provided with everything necessary, whereas a hard-working person cannot have the same thing even for his own money. Such a system cannot tend to a right state of things, where the dissipated and bad are attended to by an expenditure of public money, and those poor hard-working people cannot get such attendance, even by their own exertions.

3921. President.] Can you point out any practical way in which you would carry on a hospital on this system? That is a difficult thing; I tried that practical way.

3922. Here? No; in Tasmania. I had a hospital in Tasmania, which was mainly supported on the plan I have told you of; and at the time when I started that hospital it was considered a most improper plan. The medical journals in England then objected to the principle they now, thirty years after, highly applaud. The system was that, by payments made for the patients, during their time in the hospital, they provided for their own treatment.

3923. How many beds were there in it? It would when full have held fifty beds, but I do not know that it was ever full. But during twenty years, in round numbers, the money received and spent was £20,000, and out of that upwards of £16,000 was paid by and for patients brought in. The rest came from other sources. It was a new principle altogether, and therefore it was not liked. The doctors did not like it, and the Government did not like it. I intended to have carried it on. I hoped to have had the convict hospital to be kept as a pauper hospital, and this hospital to be kept for other people who paid for themselves. However, the Government did not see that, and they started a branch hospital and reduced the charge to a smaller rate, and therefore that broke up St. Mary's Hospital, as I called it, and the Government never got any patients, and the scheme was upset. So that it is very difficult to carry out any plan which would be better. The only way is to eliminate the strictly pauper patients from a hospital of this description, limiting the beds to those provided for, and (excepting accidents and severe surgical cases) to let the pauper patients be provided for in a hospital of the State.

3924. Do you approve of the present mode of admitting patients—I mean the selection by the honorary staff? I think that the honorary officers ought to admit. Accidents, of course, come in, which should be admitted at once in any case, but other cases should be admitted by the honorary staff.

3925. You are acquainted with the present mode in which patients are admitted on the surgical side of the house? Yes.

3926. Do you approve of that system? Yes.

3927. Do you think that it works well? Yes. It is the system pursued in the English hospitals; it has always done at Home.

3928. Do you see any objection to the same system being pursued on the surgical side as is pursued on the medical? Do you mean so many wards to each?

3929. So many beds to each? I think that is a matter of detail which is not of very great importance.

3930. You only see your own patients—you do not attend to the patients of other doctors? No. Except in consultation you have nothing to do with the treatment of another officer's patients, any more than if they were in a separate house.

3931. Are you aware that in some instances patients have been kept longer in the hospital than they required to be kept, in order to enable the medical man to admit patients to his own beds? I do not know of any such thing. I have never done so myself, and I have never heard whether any one else has done so.

3932. From your own experience in other hospitals, have you observed any such tendency? No, I do not remember having noticed such a thing.

3933. Would you have any objection as a surgeon to the mode now pursued with regard to medical cases, being pursued with regard to surgical cases, namely, that you should admit whenever beds were empty, and the doctor attending those beds would have them, no matter who admitted the patients? I think it would be better that the surgeons should admit themselves.

3934. Why? Because there is some selection of cases—more selection of cases than in medical cases; and if there are three beds vacant on one side and one on the other, the surgeon would admit the most interesting case to his own bed, and send the trifling ones to another. That is an uncomfortable sort of selection, and it makes a choice which is not desirable.

3935. But if they were half and half? Well, suppose there were four beds empty to-day, and four patients to be admitted. The surgeon admitting would send the two trifling cases to the other surgeons' beds and keep the interesting cases himself; whereas, if he takes all the patients in for himself, they would come just as a matter of chance—the admissions of his week. I think it is much better for the surgeons to take their own patients in.

3936. Might not the evil be obviated by the number being kept up? I remember that the question was fully discussed some time ago, and after a good deal of thought over the matter it was considered that the present arrangement was the best.

3937. You know that the other system prevails on the medical side? I know that it does, and that it did prevail to a certain extent on the surgical side also.

3938. Do you think it would be advisable to give the resident staff any greater power than they at present possess, with regard to the discharge of patients? No, I do not. I think that the resident staff should act entirely as the assistants of the honorary physicians and surgeons, and act entirely under their direction, and I think it is a very undesirable thing that the resident staff should, at their own discretion, discharge patients.

3939. Not even for insubordination? That should be a rule of the hospital, and then in doing it they would carry out general instructions. I am speaking of their exercising their own discretion as to whether patients ought to remain in or not. Ordinarily the honorary medical officers and the resident medical officers understand each other pretty well, and no difficulties occur.

3940. Supposing that we are informed that there are patients kept in the Infirmary who need not be kept there, and that they are detained at the caprice of the honorary medical officers? Indeed.

3941. Should there not be some one to report such cases to the Board? Certainly not the resident medical officers. If the honorary officers so misconduct their duties as that, then it is for the Board of Directors to deal with them; but it is not by any means a desirable thing for the resident staff to decide whether the honorary officers are keeping their patients improperly, or that they should have power to carry out their own views in that respect.

3942. Suppose that we find that such a thing is an abuse of this institution, how would you correct it? I would call the honorary medical officer's attention to the matter, and would request that the patient should be discharged, if there were a case of the kind, and if it were true I should not think that gentleman fit to be a doctor of the institution.

3943. But how is it to be found out? I understood you to say that you knew of cases.

3944. Of course we, as a Commission inquiring into these matters, have found it out, but how is the governing body to find it out? I presume that if you are in possession of the information you can act upon it.

3945. But how is the governing body to become aware of such a thing? I do not know how the governing body are to be informed of such a thing. You must trust the honorary medical staff. I do not see any way of carrying on an institution of this kind if you are to place power in so many hands. I think the defect of this institution has been to have too many people exercising authority.

3946. Do you think that the managing body is too large? I do not think that there is any managing body. The directors all enter into a parcel of details without having any general principle; and if you come in and find fault with anything, you do not know whom to blame.

3947. Do you approve of the large number of the Board, which consists of twenty-seven members? No, I do not; it cannot do executive work. I think that in managing a hospital too great publicity cannot be given; but when you come to direct interference of so many persons within the walls, that is a very different thing.

3948. Considering that out of the £10,000 which is the revenue of the hospital, the Government contribute £8,000, do you not think it is desirable that the Government should be represented on the Board? I do not see any great impropriety in the Government being represented on the Board. What I was alluding to was that there should be proper authoritative people in charge of the hospital; and that it is an undesirable thing that because a gentleman happens to be a director, he should come up and say to some of the subordinates that such and such things are wrong. He may be quite right in his opinion, but he should not be allowed to express his opinion to the servants there. He should report the matter to the proper person, and have it corrected by the proper officer.

3949. You have observed this kind of thing? Yes; there has been a good deal too much of that, and it arises from the want of system in the way of carrying things out.

3950. Mr. Gould.] You mean that it is the fault of the directors? Well, I do not mean to give all the blame to them, but they do not understand how it works. They see something wrong, and they do not see how their direct interference—such as speaking to the subordinate officers, asking questions of any person who may happen to be about, and insisting on their directions being carried out, without reference to the people in authority—is an evil.

3951. President.] You think that extreme zeal and officiousness, and interfering personally in the details of management on the part of the directors, are detrimental to the interests of the hospital? Yes; I think the zeal of the Board of Directors should be exercised in this room, and not outside, or in the wards.

3952. Have you observed since you have been here a clashing of authority between the manager and the lady superintendent? Yes, very great, and that arises from accidental causes. It is always difficult for persons in very nearly the same position of authority, without a very clearly defined boundary between their duties, to work together. In this case it arises from accidental causes probably. The manager had been appointed before the lady superintendent arrived, and it was intended by the appointment of the manager really to prevent what I have been referring to:—the direct interference of members of the Board of Management in the ordinary details of the place. When the lady superintendent came, there is no doubt that many of the duties which the manager had to perform should, considering the position she was placed in, have been placed in her hands; in fact, the duties of the manager should have been altogether altered; but that was not done, and so there grew up a great deal of difficulty and confusion.

3953. Would you state what, in your opinion, should be the distinct duties of these two officers? That would be a very long affair indeed. I think the lady superintendent should have the duties mainly with regard to the care of the patients and the superintendence of the nursing establishment and the cooking establishment. The manager should have really more to do with the duties of secretary than anything else.

3954. Are you acquainted with a pamphlet of Miss Nightingale's, entitled, "The Method of improving the Nursing Service of Hospitals"? Is that a late one?—I have read a great many of Miss Nightingale's writings. I was always fidgeting and anxious for the introduction of the Nightingale system of nursing. It has great advantages, and no doubt in hospitals where it was properly introduced, it would be of great assistance. But it is a system that is very apt, from the way in which Miss Nightingale started it in the Crimea, to be another imperium in imperio in a hospital. And that is likely to be its defect,—that the person in charge of the hospital expects to exercise too much control over the establishment.

3955. Do you think that the lady superintendent should have the choice of the nursing staff? Decidedly.

3956. And the power of dismissal, subject to the governing body? She is the head of the executive department, but she is under the medical staff. I think there is the point in which the Nightingale system is likely to fail, to come into difficulty—that they are a little too independent of the medical authority.

3957. In what way? In matters about washing and cleaning floors; any details of that kind they carry out according to their own opinions, and will not attend to the directions of the staff. I am not saying this with reference to any individual acts on the part of the head of the establishment here, but I am speaking speaking of the general system. It has been the defect in the Crimea, in other hospitals, in English hospitals, and it has been the defect here. The difficulties that have arisen here are attributable to that innate defect of the system, and to the fact that a proper arrangement was not made with regard to the duties of manager when the lady superintendent arrived—that the thing was not sufficiently well laid down when she came out, but she was allowed to grow into her duties.

E. S. P.
Bedford, Esq.,
F.R.C.S.
23 May, 1873.

3959. In this pamphlet that I before alluded to, Miss Nightingale says:—"Vest the charge of financial matters and general supervision and the whole administration of the infirmary in the board or committee; i.e., in the officer who is responsible to that board or committee. Vest the whole responsibility for nursing, internal management, for discipline, and training (if there be a Training School) of Nurses in the one female head of the nursing staff, whatever she is called."—Do you approve of that? Yes, I approve of that.

3960. Then she says:—"The Matron or Nursing Superintendent must be held responsible for her own efficiency, and the efficiency of all her nurses and servants. As regards the medical officers, she must be responsible that their orders about the treatment of the sick are strictly carried out. To the governing body of the hospital she shall be held responsible for the conduct, discipline and duties of her nurses, for the discipline of her sick wards, for their cleanliness, for the care and cleanliness of sick, for proper ventilation and warming of wards, for the administration of diets and medicines, of enemata, &c., the performance of minor dressings, and the like, for the care of linen and bedding, &c., and probably of patients' clothing."—Do you approve of that? Oh yes.

3961. Then again:—"I may perhaps again point out that the superintendent should herself be responsible to the constituted hospital authorities, and that all her nurses and servants should, in the performance of these duties, be responsible to the superintendent only. No good ever comes of the constituted authorities placing themselves in the office which they have sanctioned her occupying?" Yes, that is the point I alluded to.

3962. "No good ever comes of any one interfering between the head of the nursing establishment and her nurses. It is fatal to discipline. All complaints on any subject should be made directly to the superintendent, and not to any nurse or servant?" Yes, exactly so.

3963. Do you approve of these principles? Yes, I do. These touch upon some of the matters I have already mentioned.

3964. And further she goes on to say:—"She should be made responsible, too, for her results, and not for her methods. Of course, if she does not exercise the authority entrusted to her with judgment and discretion, it is then the legitimate province of the governing body to interfere, and to remove her." You approve of these principles? Yes; I think she should be a little more under the direction of the medical officers than she is placed there. There was a tendency, I thought, with regard to the teaching of the staff here, to give too much literary instruction, to the exclusion of the practical part—there was too much reading to the nurses.

3965. Were lectures given on medical subjects? Not by medical men. Too great regard was paid to that kind of thing, and too little to the drilling of the nurses.

3966. Mr. Cowper.] Do you refer to the lectures which were given by Miss Osburn? Yes, I refer to that. I think that instruction in their more practical duties would be better than instruction by means of lectures.

3967. President.] Do you think that no instruction of that kind should be given at all? I will not say that; but in a few instances I found that there could not have been, on the part of the nurse, a proper understanding with respect to the giving of medicines. Now, I think it is important that the nurses should be well up in that. They should be taught how to check the probabilities of overlooking things of that kind, or of falling into errors with regard to the giving of medicines. That is more important; that is the kind of instruction that a trained set of nurses want.

3968. Were you connected with the hospital before these nurses came? I was.

3969. What is the relative state of efficiency of the nursing under the new system as compared with the old? Some of the nurses are admirable—they nurse exceedingly well. The wards are much quieter, and on the whole, look better and more home-like and comfortable than they did under the old system. There are five or six nurses in this establishment as good nurses as I would wish to see anywhere.

3970. Mr. Metcalfe.] Those nurses are here now? Yes, there are some very good ones here now.

3971. President.] Have you ever had occasion to complain of the dispensing establishment? Yes, I have sometimes.

3972. In what respect? Medicines have not been sent up promptly when ordered. I think it has been worse latterly than it used to be.

3973. We are told that there are two dispensers, and that 200 prescriptions are dispensed in the Infirmary daily, besides those which are dispensed in the branch dispensary, and the dispenser says that he is over-worked: what is your opinion on that point? He dispenses 200 prescriptions do you say?

3974. Yes, and there is the out-door work and the branch dispensary not included in that? I should think two men could manage it, but I have never gone into the question at all. I really cannot form any opinion as to what is the amount of work done for the out-patients.

3975. Then you cannot give a decided opinion on this point? No, I cannot. I do not personally know enough of the matter.

3976. Do you know anything of the mode in which medicines are brought up into the wards by boys? There has been a good deal wrong about that lately, because the boys have come up with wrong medicines. I have asked how these mistakes are made, and the reply was that the boys made mistakes in taking the prescriptions down and bringing them back. I said, "How do they make these mistakes?"—and they said that they were very young boys. I said, "Why do you not get older ones?"—and they said that they did not want older ones to go into the female wards.

3977. Under whose control are the dispensers? I suppose they are under the resident medical officers.

3978. What way would you suggest for the medicines to be sent up into the wards in order to improve the present practice? I would have some person old enough to understand the duties, and not boys who will play on the steps instead of attending to their work.

E. S. P. 3979. What is the longest delay that has ever taken place in the supply of medicine to a patient? Well, sometimes the medicine has not come up on the same day on which it was ordered.

F.R.C.S. 3980. Do you know how the clothing is kept here—the clothing taken from the patients when they come in? No, I do not. I have seen the place put up for it near the south wing, but I do not know much about it.

23 May, 1873.

3981. Do you think it is right that the clothing of patients, which is put in there, should remain tied up in bundles from the time the patient comes in until he goes out again, without being washed? Certainly not. The clothes should be washed and put away decently.

3982. The subject has not come under your notice? No, I have ceased to take any interest in matters of that kind. I did on one or two occasions take trouble about things, but I found so little attention paid to any suggestions that I ceased to make them.

3983. Whom did you make them to? To the Board of Directors. On one occasion I made a representation with regard to the making of the rice puddings. In the diet scale a rice pudding is set down as three ounces of rice, some sugar, butter, an egg, and half-a-pint of milk. Therefore, when I ordered a patient a rice pudding, I considered that I had made an important addition to a patient's diet. But as I was going round the ward once, a patient showed me what he had got for his rice pudding, and it certainly could not have been made of the quantity of rice that the diet scale showed. I then went into the kitchen and asked how they made their rice puddings, and I found then, to my surprise, that the rice, which, as I understood it, was three ounces of unboiled rice, was three ounces of boiled rice, and that consequently there was an extraordinary difference between the amount of rice issued from the store and the amount sent up as cooked rice. I had puddings made with the proper amount of rice, and showed what bulk they were. I brought this fact before the Board, and another fact about the bread puddings. I drew their attention specially to the matter with regard to its effect upon the accounts and the expenditure. But I was so stupid that I could not make them understand that it was a very important question. They did not seem to get beyond the fact that the patients got their rice puddings, and that three ounces of rice unboiled was too much.

3984. Does that system still prevail? It is in the diet table now.

3985. Then, if a patient is ordered three ounces he does not get that amount? Yes; but the question is, "What amount does the contractor supply the hospital with?" What I wanted to ascertain was whether the puddings were to be made of three ounces of boiled rice or not. I wanted the committee to settle the question, because, otherwise, I could not see how it could be settled at all.

3986. Mr. Metcalfe.] They could not take boiled rice into the store and issue it? No, you see they must have issued the three ounces of unboiled rice. There was another matter. You were present, I think, Mr. Metcalfe, when I brought under consideration the matter of the meat. The point, which I brought under the consideration of the Board was that, supposing a ward was to have forty pounds of meat, according to the diet table, the amount ordered from the butcher would be eighty pounds—the manager saying that the loss by cooking the meat was 100 per cent. The loss is 50 per cent., but the institution has to order double the quantity of meat it otherwise would do, so that the loss to the institution is 100 per cent. What I think would have been a good alteration there would have been, instead of having a joint with a good deal of bone, to have them always with a good deal of meat—to buy pieces of meat with little bone in them. The loss would then be much less, although the cost of the meat might be somewhat increased.

3987. According to his contract the butcher supplies everything but the offal? Yes. You would have to make a special contract, and perhaps pay a little more, but still I think a great saving would be effected.

3988. President.] The lady superintendent says that the cooking should be under her control, for if it is bad, and she complains to the manager, he cannot tell whether a thing is properly cooked or not. She says it is more her province to look after the cooking than a man's;—is that your opinion? Certainly.

3989. She also complains that she has no power over the servants about the place; that if water is wanted, or there is a tent to be put up, the men, whose duty it is to attend to these things, are not under her control; and they themselves say that they are the servants of the manager, and that if they obey her they do so to oblige her, and not as a matter of duty;—do you think that is right? No, I think all matters with reference to the nursing should be entirely under the lady superintendent's control.

3990. Then, in point of fact, you would restrict the manager to the financial part of the business, and to seeing after the external matters, rather than to the practical working of the hospital? Yes, I would restrict him to external matters, store matters, and things of that sort.

3991. Do you approve of there being persons of superior education and attainments to look after the work of the nurses in the institution? As sisters?

3992. Yes? Yes, it is very desirable, if you can obtain them. I do not think you should go in for ladies specially. I do not mean to say that a lady may not do the duty, if she has a turn that way, but generally, you will find that it is more of a sentimental turn than real desire for the work, for I do not think you can expect very highly educated nurses. The lady superintendent should, of course, be a person of education and attainments.

3993. Mr. Metcalfe.] And yet ladies do make the best nurses when they take to it? Yes.

3994. President.] Then your object is founded on the practical difficulty of getting such persons? Yes. Of course, if you can get such persons to perfect themselves in the work, you will have a hospital in the best kind of order, particularly where the lady superintendent is properly subordinate to the doctors.

3995. Mr. Metcalfe.] Did you approve of the distinctive title of "sister" which was given to those now called "head nurses"? Yes, I think it was quite right. It was a great mistake to fight about the title; but they did fight about it for certain reasons which were most ridiculous. In England all the nurses in charge of wards are always called "sisters."

3997. President.] You know that the diet cards are taken to the dispensary, and then taken to the house steward? Yes.

3998. For the purpose of making up the diets? Yes.

3999. Do you think it would be better if that could be avoided? Yes. I never heard, except in this hospital, of the cards being taken out of the wards. They used to have diet tables, and the card did not leave the ward.

4000. Do you not think that it is desirable that a record should be kept in the dispensary of the medicines dispensed? To the hospital?

4001. Yes? I do not see the reason for that. The patient's board tells to a certain extent the amount of medicine sent to him, and that, I think, they copy.

4002. You would not advise the keeping of any other record? No, I would not.

4003. Mr. Metcalfe.] You said that you objected to the resident staff discharging patients? Yes.

4004. Supposing that the honorary physician or surgeon cannot attend when a man is fit to be discharged? I think the attendance of the honorary staff—as far, at all events, as my experience goes—is so constant that it can seldom be a matter of importance that a patient should be discharged in the absence of the doctor attending him, and I think the patient should be discharged by him, or by his direction.

4005. Do you not think the resident medical officer should be competent to discharge such a duty? Of course he is not supposed to be in charge of the case. The resident officer only acts there in the absence of the honorary, and the patient is the honorary officer's patient—not the patient of the resident officer.

4006. Suppose a case alters in the night? That a patient should be discharged?

4008. Suppose there were a number of persons waiting for admission, and there were several patients who could be discharged, and that the honorary medical officer was not present, would it not be desirable that the resident medical officer should discharge those patients, and take in the others who are in need of admission? If the wards are crowded, and there is not likely to be a vacant bed, it is the medical officer's duty to call the honorary's attention to the fact, so that the case may be remedied, if possible.

4009. It should not be done without that? I do not think so, as a rule. On the other hand, when a man is fit to be dismissed, I have often told the resident medical officer to discharge the patient on the following day. He discharged a woman the other day who was anxious to go out. She had a comfortable home to go to, and did not wish to remain in any longer, and of course I did not interfere with him, though I do not look upon that as his duty, and I should not wish a resident medical officer to have by right the power to exercise his own judgment in that way. All he should do is to carry out the instructions of the honorary medical officers.

4010. Are you aware that it is the practice to perform operations on the Sunday? I am not aware that it is the practice, but I have heard of operations being performed on the Sunday.

4011. You are not aware of Miss Osburn having complained of that, and said that she thought it should be a quiet day? I think that there was a statement made to the Board about it.

4012. It has been made to the Commission also. She says it is undesirable that the patients should be disturbed? Well, but still the doctors require to have things a little their own way. I can easily understand a doctor's having one or two operations about the eye that can be put off for a day or two if he is busy outside, and then he comes on Sunday and performs the operation.

4013. President.] Do you think that operations should be performed on a Sunday which keep the nurses scrubbing all day? No, I do not think so; nor do I think you should lay down a strict law that an operation should not be performed on a Sunday. Of course you are not alluding to cases of necessity; but I am alluding to matters of great personal convenience to medical men, and I do not think that the rule should be too strict.

4014. Mr. Metcalfe.] Are you of opinion that the nursing by women is preferable to the nursing by men? I cannot understand how you can carry on any other. We gradually introduced women into the surgical wards and the operation wards—these were the two last; and they now nurse them, and nurse them very well. We used to have wardsmen.

4015. Mr. Ellis.] Do you think the change was desirable? Yes, I think so.

4016. Do you prefer men to women in the two wards you have mentioned? I think that women have nursed better than men.

4017. Have you any objection to women being in them, on the score of delicacy? No; if you get respectable women, and of course you would have two women about the place; you must not leave a woman alone there.

4018. Mr. Cowper.] Do you think the nurses are too young? No. They do not send young girls together—they send one older one with them, and I have never had any reason to suspect anything improper going on.

4019. Do you think that young nurses are as attentive to the patients as older ones? These young nurses are not put in charge at first, but the older ones.

4020. Mr. Metcalfe.] Have you observed any levity of conduct among them? No, they are not likely to carry on any levity when the medical man is going round,—we are the last persons to see it.

4021. Mr. Cowper.] Do you not think that young nurses are more easily trained than older persons, as a general rule? Of course a young person more readily picks up anything than an old one, but I do not think, as far as the nursing is concerned, that there is any difference.

4022. Do you notice that the older persons who take to nursing take to it from having had some disappointment in life, or from some reason likely to sour their temper, whereas the others take to it from a wish to learn the profession? I do not think I have seen enough of them to come to a conclusion on that subject; I have not seen a large number enough to come to a conclusion of that sort.

4023. Mr. Gould.] What was the state of the wards as to cleanliness when you first began to visit this Infirmary? The beds seemed pretty clean, but I think the hospital has been cleaner under the female nursing than it was under the male nursing.

4024. Were you attending the Infirmary in the time of Mrs. Ghost? Yes, I was visiting the hospital occasionally, but I did not join as a surgeon until just after her death. I was here before Dr. Houston's death.

4025. You are aware of the recent cleansing that has taken place, and the fearful disclosures that have been made as to vermin: how do you account for the Infirmary getting into such a state as that? I think that there must have been some want of care, but I think a good deal has been allowed to go on in consequence of the hospital having been condemned some time ago. The cheapest and best thing to be done with it is to pull it down. The floors are bad; the verandahs are bad; the roof is bad; the plastering is bad from beginning to end, and there was great evil done by putting up those closets which open into the wards. There were two or three Boards sat to investigate the condition of the hospital; Mr. Deas Thompson was chairman of one of them, and after calculating the expense of putting the place in order fit for a hospital, they came to the conclusion that the cheapest and best plan would be to pull it down and rebuild it—the only difficulty was to get the money.

4026. Mr. Metcalfe.] But they are actually going to alter it? So I see; but I have nothing to do with that.

4027. The plans have been passed by the Board? Oh yes.

4028. Mr. Goold.] Do you not think that there must have been great neglect somewhere to allow the place to get into such a state as it was in—one witness states that the bugs were in millions? I cannot understand how they got into that condition, because they certainly might have been kept under.

4029. Where does the blame rest: if this institution was allowed to get into such a state as that, the blame must rest somewhere: who do you think was responsible for it? Why, certainly, the blame that there should be such an amount of dirt and bugs must rest upon those who had the cleaning of it; but that any one would be able to keep that place in order I do not think.

4030. How often has it been whitewashed during your time? It has not been whitewashed lately—not for some considerable time. It has always struck me that the committee were waiting for some determination on what was to be done. We were always going to do something, and saying it was no use going to any expense before that something was done.

4031. But in the meantime the hospital of course should not have been allowed to get into this condition: should the manager have exercised his authority in cleansing the walls? If it was under his direction,—but I do not know that the manager had anything to do with it, any more than the lady superintendent; but it should have been done by some officer—I do not know who.

4032. Mr. Cowper.] Do you see any objection to the complaint or disease from which a patient is suffering being written on his card? No. In some cases it is not desirable, as when, for instance, you have a person suffering from cancer, in which case it is not a good thing for the patient to know his disease.

4033. Are you aware that it was the practice to write the diseases on the cards? Yes, and I do not know why it was left off.

4034. Have any instances come under your notice of the doctors having ordered extras in too liberal a manner? I cannot suppose why they should do so, and I cannot give any instances in which it has been done. I do not do it myself, and I have not looked into the extras ordered by any other officer. I don't mean that I do not order extras if there is any reason for doing so, but it is not a matter that I think of.

4035. President.] You have no reason to suppose that a larger amount of stimulant is given here than doctors give to their patients out of doors? No, I cannot suppose that.

4037. Mr. Metcalfe.] Do you think that the giving of stimulants to patients in the hospital is likely to lay the foundation of drinking habits and make them confirmed drunkards when they go outside? No, I do not think that it is likely to demoralize them. I dare say that we are all a little too easy sometimes, and we may give a patient an egg or so sometimes when, if you were to push us into a corner, we could not give a reason for doing it.

4038. Mr. Cowper.] Do you not think that the deadhouse is in a bad position? The dirty stable, full of rats, is in a bad position to place dead bodies in. We have no deadhouse.

4039. Mr. Ellis.] Did you ever hear of a body being eaten by the rats there? Yes, from the first time that I came to the hospital.

4040. Is that a frequent occurrence? Well, they have taken precautions against it. It only happens by accident, but they have to be very careful to prevent it, for the place is swarming with rats.

4041. Which do you think the best site for the deadhouse? I do not see any objection to the site where it is, or below the south wing. The only objection to the site near the south wing is that it is too near the hospital building.

4042. Mr. Metcalfe.] How can it affect the hospital? There is always a drainage from it.

4043. Mr. Ellis.] Assuming that there is direct drainage from the end of the south wing into the sewer, then that is a good site? Yes, I think it might be placed there. The only reason against it was that it would prevent the air coming up—that is all.

4044. With regard to the clashing between the executive authority of the manager and of the lady superintendent, what remedy would you suggest? That their duties should be made quite distinct.

4045. Would you make each absolute in his or her own sphere, subject only to the Board? Yes, subject to the Board only—that would be entirely with regard to the manager; but with regard to the lady superintendent, I think there should be a proper subordination of her duties, with regard to the nursing, to the medical staff.

4046. Is that the practice in any hospital that you are acquainted with? I have never been acquainted with English hospitals since the Nightingale system has been carried out. It is true that in my time there were female nurses, but the system was not the Nightingale system, and the nurses were always under the staff.

4047. They were an inferior kind of nurses? Yes.

4048. With regard to the nurses studying and receiving lectures,—why do you object to their acquiring a little theoretical knowledge of their duties? I have no objection, but I think that should be subordinate to their practical knowledge.

4049. Do you not think that a competent theoretical knowledge combined with the other would be better? Yes, there is no objection, but I think that little knowledge is to be got in that way.

4050. As a fact, medical men do not like the nurses to pretend to know too much? No, that is not it. If they really did know, their knowledge might in time be useful to them; but that kind of knowledge is not half as important as a practical knowledge gained by constantly attending in the wards; and if, instead of listening to lectures on anatomy, they had been thoroughly well drilled so that they could not make a mistake as to the giving of medicines, I think that would be much more important.

4051. In fact, you think that mere routine duties, such as might be performed by the least intelligent person, are all that they require to learn? No; if you got educated people, they would soon learn to pick pick up something more; but if not educated people, they would pick up something by oral instruction, but little theoretical information would do them any good. They might be good practical nurses, and it is not desirable that they should be half-and-half theorists.

4052. There is another important question connected with the management of the institution. I think you said that none of the directors should have any right to interfere directly or indirectly in the management of the institution, as far as regards the executive officers? Not directly.

23 May, 1873.

4053. They should simply report to the Board? They should report to Miss Osburn if they saw anything wrong, and she would put the thing right.

4054. You would not allow them to go chattering about to the servants? No, I do not think that anything of that sort should be done.

4055. President.] Do you think that they should have the power of turning the nurses out of the wards when they are going round? No, I think if they want the nurses to leave the wards, they should tell Miss Osburn. I think that it is desirable to keep the executive work in its right channels. I do not want to diminish the actual power of the directors, but to improve the way in which it should be exercised.

4056. Subject only to the interference of the Board—you would make the authority of the executive officers absolute? Yes, I think so.

4057. Relieve them from the interference of individual members of committees, or anything else? Yes, except in cases where you have the head of the establishment going wrong. If it is the lady superintendent that is wrong, then the director must exercise his authority, because he cannot appeal to any one else to interfere with her.

4058. The objection that has been urged is, that the manager and Miss Osburn have not the power of dismissing those under them, and that if they attempt to do so, individual directors interfere to prevent their carrying it out? There should be no direct individual interference of that kind.

4059. Would you allow the manager to engage and dismiss all the servants under him? Yes, you must have a person you can trust to do that. I am not speaking of officers now, but servants.

4060. Of course the officers are appointed by the Board? Yes; I refer to the servants.

4061. Would you give the same power to the lady superintendent with regard to the nurses? Yes, I think you must give her the same power.

4062. In view of the desirability of preserving due subordination in the institution? Yes.

4063. Are you acquainted with any of the modern improvements in hospital management? No, I know nothing of them except by reading. I have held hospital appointments in the Colonies since 1834.

4064. Are there any suggestions which you can make to the Commission? I do not know that there is anything at this moment.

4065. Do you approve of the present system of keeping some patients in tents? It is necessary to do it sometimes.

4066. In point of convenience, is there any improvement to be made in the present plan? No, unless you had some small separate wards for the purpose of isolating the patients.

4067. Is not the present plan inconvenient? No, there is nothing better to be done at present. A better way would be to have either tents or small rooms, with a covered way leading to them, so that the servants could get to them, and they might still be kept quite separate; but the tent affords the only means of keeping them quite isolated. A small wooden hut would do.

4068. Mr. Couper.] Have you any reason to believe that Miss Osburn fails to take that interest in the institution that a lady in her position should do—that she fails to take an interest in the patients under her charge? I have never thought Miss Osburn wanting in interest or zeal; but I think her interest and zeal have gone in a direction that does not tend to the practical improvement of the nurses so much as to their theoretical education and the enlargement of her duties. I think she has got a nice little office, and likes to carry on her duties in an official style, and I think a good deal of her zeal is expended in that way.

4069. Mr. Ellis.] What should she do instead? Look more thoroughly into the practical education of her nurses.

4070. What do you mean by that? I had two patients with bad eyes, and it was important that they should take some medicine for a particular purpose, and the safety of the eye depended upon their having it, and the medicine was in the ward, and the nurse did not give it. I think a woman should be so drilled as not to forget a thing of that kind.

4071. Would you not attribute that to carelessness or ignorance? To a want of proper drilling, or the woman could not have done it.

4072. Might it not be simple carelessness? It occurred more than once.

4073. Do you expect Miss Osburn to be always on the spot? No; I say she should lay down her rules for giving medicines, because you cannot expect a nurse to remember every special case.

4074. Do not the doctors prescribe everything? Yes, but the nurse does not go and read the prescription. Of course the directions are on the pill-box that she would have to go to, but if she does not go to the pill-box, that is the cause of the medicine not being given.

4075. Would you not dismiss a nurse who was guilty of this neglect? Yes, but I don't think these women were ordinarily bad; I think that the mistake arose from not having a good method.

4076. Were they reported to the lady superintendent? Yes.

4077. What did she say? That she was very sorry, and that she would speak to them about it.

4078. Did she speak to them about it? Yes.

4079. What was the result? That these people had their pills, I believe; I don't know. The patient went on all right afterwards.

4080. Did the same thing happen to many other patients afterwards? I do not know, but I have had that neglect in not giving medicine happen several times, and it always struck me that it arose from the want of drilling in the nurses.

4081. President.] Is there not always a difficulty in obtaining servants who will perform their duties properly and punctually? Yes, it is so.

4082. We are told that nurses are constantly sent away because they are found not to be fit for the position? Yes, they must be sent away when they are not up to their work. I am not now giving my answer with reference to Miss Osburn's discharge of her duty.

4083. Mr. Ellis.] What do you think of her competency? I think that she is an intelligent person, and a zealous person, and I think she is competent to discharge her duties, but I think that the error she is likely

- E. S. P. Bedford, Esq., F.R.C.S.
23 May, 1873.
- likely to make is to give too much importance to the official—the office sort of duty—and to the theoretical part of instruction of the nurses, rather than the drilling them in the details of their work.
4084. You think that the physical part of the work is the best;—you would leave the intellectual part to the doctors, and the physical part to the lady superintendent. No, I do not want unintellectual persons, but I want to have those things done which it is a nurse's duty to do.
4085. President.] Are not these failures on the part of the nurses to carry out their duties, reasons why there should be persons of superior intelligence to look after them? Yes, it is a reason why you should have them if you can get them.
4086. Mr. Cowper.] And is it not a reason why they should be responsible to Miss Osburn, so that she could punish them for their neglect? Yes, I think that the junior nurses should be responsible to those in charge of the wards, and they again should be responsible to Miss Osburn.
4087. And it is not desirable that when Miss Osburn dismisses a nurse, the committee should be appealed to to ask her to take that nurse back again? No, you could not carry on such a system; it would make the nurses independent of her and set her at defiance. I think that Miss Osburn has improved in one respect lately. She was too fond of changing her nurses from ward to ward. She would allow them to stay three months in one ward and then move them to another, and not only move the nurses but the juniors with them. I spoke about it, and she altered the system.
4088. Mr. Ellis.] What is the objection to that? The objection was that you left a new nurse with twenty patients to take care of, about whom she knew nothing—not a nurse perhaps with less experience, but knowing less of those individual cases.
4089. But if you want to train the nurses, it would be necessary to draft them from one ward to the other? Yes, the junior nurses, but not the people in charge of the wards. You should not take them away every now and then.
4090. Mr. Metcalfe.] From the effect of the medicines, do you believe the prescriptions are properly dispensed—that the dispensers are competent men? Yes.
4091. One of them appears to be very young? A young man can make up medicines if he has had the necessary instruction. It only requires great care.
4092. Mr. Cowper.] How often do you think a lady in Miss Osburn's position should visit the wards? She requires to be about the place almost all day to keep the nurses up to the work.
4093. Mr. Gould.] Have you noticed that she has been absent from the Infirmary for days together? I know that she has been away on leave sometimes.
4094. But without leave? I am not aware.
4095. It is said that she leaves the hospital without obtaining the permission of the Board? I am not aware of it, but she may go out without my knowing anything of it.
4096. President.] You have seen her in the wards? Yes, I have seen her there very frequently.

John Moon, Esq., M.D., one of the District Surgeons, Sydney Infirmary, called in and examined:—

- J. Moon, Esq., M.D.
26 May, 1873.
4097. President.] What is your connection with the Sydney Infirmary? I am one of the district surgeons.
4098. How long have you occupied that position? About fifteen years.
4099. Always for the same district? No, not always for the same district.
4100. What is your district at present? My district is professedly Bourke and Macquarie and the Paddington wards, and a very large extent of country. It is from Manly Beach, up nearly as far as Parramatta, through the Circular Quay, and through Campbell's Wharf, and along to Liverpool-street, east of George-street, and so to the South Head.
4101. How many district surgeons are there? I think there are six.
4102. What are your emoluments? For these two districts in one—there was a difficulty in obtaining surgeons, and they could not get one for each—the emoluments have only been the same, that is £50 a district.
4103. Then you get £100 a year? Yes.
4104. In what way do the patients whom you visit obtain your professional attendance? By presenting an out-door slip signed by one of the subscribers to the Infirmary.
4105. They present it at the Infirmary? If they are able to visit the Infirmary they do so, and if not able to do so, I visit them.
4106. How does the Infirmary pronounce its approval of your visiting them? It never does pronounce any approval. The only thing that I receive is the signature of the subscriber.
4107. Then there is no guarantee or inquiry on the part of anybody that these persons are in necessitous circumstances? No, none whatever, unless there is some particular reason assigned.
4108. Have you ever had reason to believe that the charity applied through the Infirmary has been imposed upon in this way? I have had reason to believe it in several instances.
4109. Will you state your grounds for that belief? From the appearance of the persons who present themselves for this pauperized privilege, and also the way in which the slips have been provided without any inquiry having been made with reference to their condition. In several instances, I have had to draw the attention of the committee to the matter, and have shown that the people who apply are in circumstances which preclude their being served from the Infirmary, and the committee have put a stop to it.
4110. I suppose you always report that, when there is reason to suppose the persons who apply are not persons who should ask for such assistance? When it is a clear case.
4111. How often in the course of twelve months does that happen? I do not think more than two or three times, because the trouble is really so great, and the difficulty of arriving at accurate knowledge so great.

4112. How many patients on an average do you visit in the course of a week? About eight or ten out-door patients. Of course I am not supposed to go over the water, or very great distances. That would be impossible—I could not do it. J. Moon, Esq.,
M.D.
4113. Are your prescriptions dispensed at the Infirmary, or at the out-door dispensary in Regent-street? They are all dispensed at the Infirmary—all my prescriptions. 26 May, 1873..
4114. None at the branch establishment at Redfern? None.
4115. Mr. Couper.] Under the system now in force, all subscribers can give you orders for patients, and gentlemen having a large number of servants could send in any number of patients to you, in consideration of his being a subscriber? Yes, they do.
4116. Have you noticed among your patients any great number of persons whom you consider are of the class of people likely to be employed by large employers of labour? You mean domestic servants?
4117. I mean people from wool-washing establishments, or from tanneries, or things of that sort? Yes. A large number would be domestic servants in the receipt of from 10s. to 15s. a week.
4118. President.] Do you know anything about the management of the branch dispensary in Regent-street? Yes. I did happen to fill a niche there when circumstances required my services.
4119. In what way? By filling the office of a person who summarily left the place—I would say, resigned.
4120. Does the mode of managing that branch dispensary meet with your approval? No, not at all.
4121. In what way does it not? The place is much too crowded, and I think that the class of patients there is not such as to warrant the amount of professional assistance which is rendered.
4122. Have you any other objections to it? The people who go there are as a rule in much better circumstances than the people who visit us in Macquarie-street.
4123. Then you think that this amounts to an imposition on the charity of the public and the funds contributed by the Government to the Infirmary? My impression was that there were many there quite different to those who visit us in Macquarie-street—people in better circumstances.
4124. Have you anything else to say as to the management of the branch dispensary? It is too crowded. A great number of people have to stand in the street, and as for the room itself, I can compare it to nothing else than the Black Hole of Calcutta.
4125. Does that arise from its being open at only one period of the day? No; from the over-crowded state of the dispensary, and the very limited amount of room.
4126. But is not that overcrowding brought about in a large measure by its being open at a particular time of the day, and all the patients being there at one time? Yes; they are there from 3 to 5—two hours a day.
4127. What remedy would you advise for this state of things? I do not myself see the necessity for the Regent-street dispensary at all. I think the work might be very well done in Macquarie-street.
4128. How long has it been established? Two years or a year and a half. My impression is that it was just pauperizing the district, as it were, and if there were another dispensary at Newtown that would be just as full.
4129. You would advise then that it should be discontinued? I should advise that there should be some check on the amount of professional aid rendered.
4130. How would you provide that check? By limiting the number of slips given out. I do not know how that is to be done.
4131. You think that the number should be reduced? I think it should be kept within some limit.
4132. Do you think the proper number is exceeded? I think so.
4133. Do you know the number that a subscriber is allowed to give? I have ceased to take any notice of it now.
4134. Would you suggest any limit? I think that the limit which is already made in the laws of the institution would be quite sufficient.
4135. Mr. Ellis.] That is a limit of six patients to the dispensary annually? Yes, I think that is it.
4136. President.] You think that by keeping people within that limit the abuse would be checked? Yes, I think so, thoroughly.
4137. What reason have you for thinking that the amount is exceeded? From the interminable number of papers which I receive from one individual.
4138. What is the largest number that you receive from one individual in the course of a year? I have never counted them.
4139. We want you to give us some idea of the number? Between 50 and 100, I think, from one individual during the year. I have no hesitation in saying that.
4140. Mr. Ellis.] What individuals are they who give these large numbers of orders—are they clergymen? Yes, they are clergymen. I have no hesitation in mentioning the names.
4141. Mr. Metcalfe.] Clergymen are the natural persons for poor people to go to for these things? People go to their doors, and the slip is given to them without any inquiry; that is what I complain of.
4142. Mr. Goold.] Do you know of any layman who has given a large number? No, not so many laymen as clergymen.
4143. Mr. Couper.] But have any laymen exceeded the limit? Yes, they have exceeded the limit also, but not to so great an extent as the clergymen.
4144. President.] Have they been employers of labour? Yes, they have been.
4145. Mr. Goold.] Do you think the practice of employers of labour giving these orders to their servants is general among the subscribers? I think so.
4146. President.] When you speak of a subscriber having exceeded the limit, you mean that he has given more than six orders in the year? Yes, a great many more.
4147. Mr. Ellis.] And it could only be a clergyman who could give more than six? I think so.
4148. President.] I understood you to say that laymen had given more? I have known laymen give more than that.
4149. Mr. Ellis.] Can you mention their names? I cannot at present.
4150. Were they subscribers of more than £2? They might have been subscribers to the extent of £5.
4151. Mr. Metcalfe.] It is entirely of your own district that you speak? I have been over most districts—Gipps Ward and Brisbane Ward first—then Macquarie Ward after that, and then I had the Glebe for a short time.
4152. Now you have two districts, and you do not see the orders from the others? No.

- J. Moon, Esq., M.D. 4153. Then the parties of whom you speak may have given orders for other districts besides yours? Yes, they may.
- 26 May, 1873. 4154. President.] Do you think that there is any check on the amount of drugs which are sent out to the branch dispensary? I really do not know—I do not know what check there is on that.
4155. Do you know of any instances of people having received things from the dispensary for any lengthened time when they were not entitled to them? Yes, I have.
4156. Can you give us some instances of that? I know of a case in which a young woman got cod-liver oil for nearly twelve months, and I had no means of judging myself as to her indigence, although it was reported to me. Of course the patient was a stranger.
4157. What was reported to you? It was reported to me that this individual was supported by a person who was in excellent circumstances in town, and receiving four guineas a week. When she sent for the medicine I told the messenger that I could supply her no longer unless she gave satisfactory evidence that she was in a pauperized condition, such as she stated herself to be in at first; and I ceased to give it her.
4158. You have never seen her since? No; I never saw her at her own home, because she was able to move about, and to come for her medicine.
4159. Then you don't always see these people at their own homes? No, not if they are able to move about. This was a case of chronic pulmonary consumption.
4160. Have any other instances come under your notice? Yes; I have been obliged to check others. There was one case—a silversmith in York-street—who enjoyed the privilege of getting medicine free of charge; and there were one or two more cases; but these are matters of history now almost, and I cannot give you the details.
4161. And you think from the appearance of the people who come to you that there is reason to believe that this goes on to a greater extent? Several times in a week I have detected these things, and I cannot of course afford the time to make inquiry into the cases, and I report them; but I am perfectly certain that many of these people are quite able to contribute something to the Infirmary; or if not, then that they can do so afterwards; but we never see a donation from any of them—they never pay a shilling.
4162. Mr. Metcalfe.] Do you think that there is any more occasion for a district dispensary there than in any other district? I do not think so, but that is only my own private opinion.
4163. There is not more poverty there than there is in other parts of the city? No, not more than there is at Miller's Point.
4164. And the distances people would have to go to the Infirmary are not greater than the distances they would have to go in London? No.
4165. Do you attend patients at their own homes? Yes.
4166. How many, on an average? It fluctuates so much, but the returns will show; they are furnished every month.
4167. But chiefly they come to your residence? No; to the hospital. If they report that they are unable to visit the hospital, then I visit them at once, as the majority of them are near my own residence.
4168. Mr. Ellis.] Have you any objection to mention the names of the clergymen from whom these numerous orders come? Really I have.
4169. But their names would appear on the orders? Yes, they do appear on the orders. I would not of course shrink from doing this, but still it would be invidious to mention their names, and all the more so as they belong to my own denomination.
4170. Have you had any experience as a homœopathic practitioner? I do not exactly understand the question.
4171. Have you had any experience as a homœopathic practitioner? None whatever.
4172. Do you think it would be desirable to establish a homœopathic ward in the hospital? A homœopathic ward?
4173. Yes, for the treatment of patients under the homœopathic system? I never could answer that question in the affirmative, holding the opinions that I do hold.
4174. Have you at any time been engaged in the Infirmary—on the staff there? No, not inside.
4175. President.] Is there anything you wish to state to the Commission—anything you have not been asked about? There is only one thing I wish to say on behalf of one of the people employed in the Infirmary. There is a poor, unfortunate gate-keeper there, who gets little liberty, and has a very onerous position. I think something might be done to relieve the hardship that is entailed upon this poor old man.
4176. Mr. Metcalfe.] Is it a man named Harris? No; Dwyer. I think his duties are very onerous there, and it may be inquired into—what they are. His duties are important; he has to guide patients in and out, to receive patients at the gates, and be almost ubiquitous.

Mrs. Isabella Ross, late a patient in the Sydney Infirmary, called in and examined:—

- Mrs. I. Ross. 4177. President.] I believe you were at one time a patient in the Sydney Infirmary? Yes.
- 26 May, 1873. 4178. How long were you there? About three weeks. I went in to have an operation performed.
4179. How long ago was it? About three months ago.
4180. What doctor were you under? Dr. Jones.
4181. Did he attend you before you went into the Infirmary? No; I was attended by Dr. McKay. It was his wish that I should go in there.
4182. And you became his patient there? No; Dr. McKay wished me to go under Dr. Jones, and I only saw Dr. Jones once while I was there. I saw him after I had been a fortnight there. I was attended by Dr. McKay before I went in.
4183. Outside the Infirmary? Yes.
4184. And he wished you to become a patient inside? Yes.
4185. Did he give an order for your admission? I cannot tell you.
4186. Did you go up in his week? No; in Dr. Jones's week, I think.
4187. Who attended you while you were in the Infirmary? No one at all. Dr. McKay would not have anything to do with me, and I got no attendance at all there.

4188. How soon after you went there did you see Dr. Jones? I did not see him for a fortnight; I was in the Infirmary for a fortnight before I saw him. Mrs. I. Ross.
4189. Did not the house doctor see you? No; he just passed and saw me—that was all. 26 May, 1873.
4190. Was the operation performed? No, there was nothing done.
4191. How did you come to leave finally? I left because I got tired of waiting—I had not time to stay.
4192. How soon did you go out after Dr. Jones saw you? About a week; after I had been there three weeks altogether.
4193. Were you confined to your bed? Yes, I was not let up at all.
4194. Do you know Miss Osburn? Yes. I never spoke to her. I have seen her going through the wards.
4195. Did you know the position which she occupied in the Infirmary? Oh, yes.
4196. You say that she never spoke to you? No; she used to pass in the morning,—go up and down the wards.
4197. Did you ever represent that no doctor had seen you? No, I did not speak to any one; I only spoke to the nurse who was always about me.
4198. Who was that? Nurse Johnson.
4199. Did you not see some one else there—some sister in charge of the ward? Yes, Miss Moule.
4200. Did you see her? Yes.
4201. Did you ever speak to her about not seeing a doctor? No; I only asked her once to get me a dose of medicine; that is all.
4202. Did she get it? Yes.
4203. How often did you see Dr. Jones there while you were there? Only once. I complained to Mr. Josephson about not seeing any one.
4204. Did Dr. Jones say anything about your case? They thought it was too serious to operate upon; they said that it might be instant death.
4205. Did he inform you of that? No, he never spoke to me at all, but the house doctor did, and advised me not to go under the operation,—that there was no convenience there for it, and that I would have to have a room to myself.
4206. Were you discharged at your own request? Yes.
4207. Then do I understand that nothing was done because you concurred in the view of the house surgeon? Yes, I was afraid when they told me that; but I have gone to Dr. Cox since, and he wished me to go into St. Vincent's; but I feel so much better that I do not think it is correct what they say about me.
4208. Mr. Cowper.] Did he say why St. Vincent's would be better for you than the Infirmary? He said I could go in, and pay for being in, and have a room.
4209. You can afford to pay then? Oh, yes. It was Dr. McKay's wish that I should go in, because I should get the best attendance there, but I did not care much about it when I did go in.
4210. Do you know how much you would have to pay in St. Vincent's Hospital? I did not inquire. I was to have gone back to the Infirmary, but I felt so well that I did not go.
4211. Did Dr. Cox explain that you would get a room in St. Vincent's Hospital? He said that if I went there he would watch my case, and see if it was correct; and I said that I would go in if I did not feel better, but I did feel better, and so I did not go.
4212. Where were you in the Infirmary? In the south wing. I was in the children's ward.
4213. Mr. Metcalfe.] Dr. Jones did examine you? Yes. I did not ask him the result.
4214. And after that you heard that it was not desirable that you should have an operation performed? The house doctor said it was a serious case, and advised me to live as long as I could, and when I did not want to live any longer, to come in and they would perform the operation.
4215. Do you know whether Dr. Jones was absent from Sydney? No, he was not, he was ill part of the time; and when Mr. Josephson came in and spoke to me, I said I had had nothing done for me.
4216. When Dr. Jones did come he saw you? I was the only patient he did see.
4217. Mr. Ellis.] Did he say why he was absent so long? I never asked him.
4218. Did any other doctor attend that ward? Yes, Dr. McKay; he always asked me how I was, in passing.
4219. Did any other doctor attend that ward—any of the house surgeons? Dr. Halket was attending some patients there, but he never done anything for me.
4220. Did any other doctor of the institution attend that ward? Dr. Fortescue, I think—I think that was all.
4221. Did he ever speak to you? Never.
4222. Did you ever ask how it was you were neglected in that way? I only asked my own nurse.
4223. What did she say? She said she couldn't understand it, and she blamed it on Dr. Jones. Dr. Halket advised me to go and see Dr. Jones when I went out, but I did not; he said it would be more satisfactory if I did.
4224. Mr. Driver.] How long had you been a patient of Dr. McKay's? I was his patient for three weeks before.
4225. How often did you see him in the Infirmary? Every day.
4226. Did he speak to you every day? Yes, always. I asked him to take me in hands himself, and he said the reason he got me in was that I might go under Dr. Jones, as he had faith in him.
4227. He spoke to you every day? Yes, just asked me how I felt.
4228. Mr. Metcalfe.] Did he speak to Dr. Jones about you? Yes, he wrote a letter.
4229. Mr. Cowper.] Did he say he was astonished Dr. Jones did not come? Yes, he was very angry one day.
4230. You were there for three weeks? Yes.
4231. Mr. Gould.] And during that time Miss Osburn did not speak to you? She did not speak to any of the patients; she used to come into the ward to see that everything was right and clean.
4232. Did she know that you were there without any proper attendance? I do not know, I was not very well for the first three days after I went in, but then I got rested you know; I was in great pain the first three days.
4233. Why did not Miss Osburn speak to you? I think it was against the rules; she was not to speak to any one.
4234. Did she speak to any other patients? I never saw her speak to any.
4235. Mr. Driver.] Did you ever, while you were in the Infirmary, complain of any incivility on the part of the nurses? No, I liked them very well—they were very good.

- Mrs. I. Ross. 4236. They paid attention to you? Yes, I liked them very well. The only thing I did not like was the food, which was very roughly got up.
- 26 May, 1873. 4237. President.] Was that at the time you were sick? All the time I could not eat at all. I was glad to get out of it.
4238. Mr. Cowper.] What kind of food do you think coarse? The meat was boiled black and the potatoes were bad—everything was so coarsely got up, and badly cooked.
4239. Was it hot? Yes, it was hot.
4240. President.] Were the potatoes bad, as a rule? Yes.
4241. All the time? Yes. I could not eat much—I used to give my food to the other patients.
4242. Mr. Cowper.] What was the diet given to you while you were in there—what did you get for breakfast? Bread, butter, and tea.
4243. You got that all the time? Yes. I did not like the tea, and got it changed to milk.
4244. What did you get for dinner? Boiled mutton, roast potatoes, and boiled potatoes in change, and rice pudding.
4245. Mr. Metcalfe.] Did you not have beef one day and mutton the next? No, no change—it was always mutton.
4246. Mr. Cowper.] Was the pudding good? Yes, that was very nice—that was the best of it.
4247. What did you get for tea? Bread and butter, and milk and water.
4248. What you complain of was that the meat was coarse and badly cooked—the other things were good? Altogether I could not speak well of the cooking. The food was not nice—not for sick people.
4249. What about the bread? The bread was not good, and the tea was very inferior.
4250. Was the butter good? Yes, very good.
4251. Was the tea bad itself, or was it made badly? It was sloppy—made badly.
4252. Did you think that the nurses were attentive to the patients generally at night? Yes, they were very kind and very good.
4253. You did not hear any complaints about them? No, I saw them always treating the patients very well—the nurses.

Matthew Henry Stephen, Esq., Honorary Secretary, Sydney Infirmary, called in and further examined:—

- M. H. Stephen, Esq. 4254. President.] Are you acquainted with the present mode of sending recommendations for orders to the Colonial Secretary? Yes.
- 26 May, 1873. 4255. Don't you think that this vicarious mode of persons performing acts of charity tends to keep down the number of subscribers to the Infirmary? Yes, it has that effect; at least, I would not say that it does, but that is the natural tendency of it.
4256. Would you propose to do away with that system altogether, or would you place it under limitations? I think that would be a matter for the Government to decide. They should send persons into the Infirmary if they pleased. It is the way in which it is conducted in the office. Any one can send recommendations, and the orders are given as a matter of course. No inquiry is made. There is perfect trust given to the person who makes the recommendation, and the person recommended is admitted as a matter of course. I do not see what check we can devise upon this system. We are willing to take as many as the Government like to send us, and it would not be for us to devise a check, though I believe that one is needed.
4257. Would it be desirable to take away the power of the subscribers, and to compel persons to go to some officer in the Infirmary? I think the system, with respect to persons recommended for orders by the Government, has been altered lately—that they come direct to the Infirmary, and I believe that the manager now admits the person, and sends the list in to the Government; but I would not be sure about that. It is only a short time ago that one of these persons was found to have £300 about him. It is impossible to prevent impositions of that kind, and the only thing that can be done is for the subscribers, where they recommend persons for admission, to make inquiries and satisfy themselves whether they are fit objects for charity. It is easy for them to do that, but the Government cannot do it. One cannot expect Mr. Halloran to inquire into the recommendations that come down.
4258. Mr. Metcalfe.] Do you not consider the number of subscribers to the Infirmary ridiculously small for a city of this size? Certainly it is.
4259. Do you not think it small as compared with the subscriptions to country hospitals? I cannot institute any comparisons of that kind.
4260. Mr. Cowper.] Have you any experience of the Mudgee Hospital? None, except by paying my subscription to it, while I was Member for the district.
4261. President.] Has it ever come under your observation that patients are sometimes allowed to violate the rules of the institution, by members of the honorary staff? No, I cannot say that it has ever come under my observation.
4262. Has it been reported to you officially as secretary, or has it ever come to your knowledge? I can only call to mind Miss Osburn informing me of some children, who were placed in some part of the building where she was desired not to place them. It was not reported to me officially—at least I do not know whether to call it an official report or not—something of that kind occurred more than once. On one or two occasions one of the medical officers had placed some children in a part of the building where they should not be.
4263. Do you know what became of that matter? No, I do not.
4264. Supposing it is a fact that certain medical men habitually allow patients to violate the rules, and that when the violation of the rules is reported to them they take no notice of it, but allow open infractions of the rules by their patients? I do not think that medical officer, whoever he may be, should be allowed there at all.
4265. At present the rules provide for an appeal to the subscribers by the medical officer, if any action is taken against him by the committee: don't you think it would be more desirable that more power should be vested in the hands of the governing body, and that it is undesirable to make these matters the subject of public discussion? I think it is a most absurd rule, though it is quite possible that I may have been an assenting party to it at the time. I think an appeal to the subscribers is an utter absurdity.

4266. Mr. Ellis.] You would make the decision of the Board final? Yes. A public meeting would have no means of forming an opinion on a case submitted to it—it could not hear one side or the other. They used to have this kind of appeal in ancient days I believe, but they could not have it now in matters of this kind.

M. H.
Stephen, Esq.
26 May, 1873.

4267. President.] Has it come to your knowledge that the resident medical officers feel their hands so tied by this action on the part of the honoraries, that they overlook violations of the rules, because, they know that their action will be stultified by the honorary re-admitting the patients the very next day? I never heard of anything of that sort.

4268. If it is done, do you think it desirable that no person discharged shall be re-admitted without special reference to the managing body? I think it is desirable. I should, however, like to say that I am not aware of the resident medical officers having made any formal complaint of the kind. I have never heard of any. I think one great difficulty that the committee has had to contend with is, that they hear of irregularities in a side way, but they are not brought under their notice officially. I have often thought that there is great reluctance on the part of the authorities to report matters.

4269. Is not that brought about by the desultory way in which the committee have exercised their authority? It is not at all unlikely. There is a reluctance to bring forward complaints which probably they think may not be satisfactorily investigated. I have often been in the habit of saying to the honorary officers and to the manager, and to Miss Osburn over and over again, I have said, "It is all very well to say that this is wrong, and it may be wrong, but why is not this reported?" I believe that the committee often had injustice done them in that way. There have been defects to be remedied, and they have not had the opportunity of remedying them.

4270. Do you know the system of admitting patients by the honorary medical officers? I merely know that they take week and week about, and admit in their own weeks.

4271. Do you know that there is a tendency on the part of the honoraries on the surgical side to keep beds filled except when their own turn for admission comes round, and they can admit patients to fill their own beds? I do not know it at all. One hears these things in a sort of way, but there is nothing tangible on which you can act.

4272. Are you aware that the dispenser has complained of his being over-worked? Not lately. I do not think there has been any complaint lately. I have, at all events, not been present in the committee when any such complaint has been made. The dispenser has an assistant and one or two boys. I know that he applied for an increase of salary, but I have no recollection of his stating that he was over-worked.

4273. Are you aware of complaints having been made of medicine having been delayed in its transmission from the dispensary to the wards? I have heard of complaints of that sort.

4274. Have you done anything towards finding out the cause of it? There has been a committee lately appointed to consider the whole question of the management of the dispensary, and that committee I know has prepared a report which has not been submitted yet; and I might suggest that Mr. Wise, who has prepared the report, could give all information on that point. He showed his report to me the other day.

4275. Mr. Metcalfe.] It would be Mr. Wise's own opinion? I do not know whether it was adopted then. All I mean to say is, that some of the members of the Board have been investigating the matter, and that you will get more information from them than from me, for, as I have said, I am not acquainted with the details of management, not having had time to attend to it as I wished to do.

4276. Do you know anything of the present mode of making up the diets as compared with the former system that was in existence? I cannot say that I do. How do you mean—the making up of the diets?

4277. Whether the diets were made up by the house steward or by the sisters? A short time ago some question arose about the diets, and it was said that sometimes there were irregularities—that the steward sometimes sent up too much and sometimes too little. It appears that the diets are entered on some cards which are at the head of the patients' beds, and these cards were taken down to the steward and the diets made up from them; and then the question arose as to whether the nurses themselves should not keep a list of the diets, so as to see and know exactly what should come up; and I remember being directed by the committee to see Miss Osburn with reference to the possibility of the nurses keeping these diets, and having an interview with Miss Osburn and Mrs. Bland about the matter. Miss Osburn seemed to think that they could not do it, and I was anxious to find out whether they could or not, and my impression was, from what they told me, that it could be done. I was not satisfied that it could not be done, and I ordered that the system should be tried for a certain time; but I have heard that it has never been done according to my instructions.

4278. Do you know whether that system was ever in existence before? I am inclined to think that it was, and not found to be a good one; but at all events the committee wished to return to it, and there was a resolution passed to that effect, and I was instructed to do what I did do. I have heard that the thing has not been done since.

4279. Mr. Ellis.] How long is it since the resolution was adopted? I do not think it can be three months ago. That is the only question about the diets which I recollect arising at all. There was some idea of some great irregularities—that the steward sent up sometimes too much and sometimes too little, and if he sent up too many diets they did not seem to know where they went to. And then there was this proposition made that the nurses should have their lists as well as the steward.

4280. Do you know that at one time these lists were made out by the nurses, and that the steward sent up his diets on those lists, and that that system was put an end to by the committee? That is my recollection of the subject. It was an old system that had been abandoned.

4281. You are not clear as to whether it was? No. I assure you, as to these matters, unless they are constantly before you, you forget what occurs. It is very hard to recollect the exact system that was pursued.

4282. We are informed that there are some persons who are in the habit of issuing hundreds of orders for the out-door dispensary. Should there not be some limit? There is a limit by the rules.

4283. But we are told that the limit is exceeded? I do not know how it has been lately. Not long ago there was a clergyman in the habit of issuing any number of orders, and he was written to about it, and it appeared that he issued them under a misunderstanding, and thought that he was entitled to issue a good number. He was written to; but I have not heard of any complaint lately.

4284. What right has a clergyman to issue any number of these things, any more than any ordinary subscriber? Not the slightest, no more right than any one else; but it must be a year or two since this clergyman was written to about the matter.

. M. H. 4285. Except through the Colonial Secretary, a clergyman can give no more orders than any one else? No.

Stephen, Esq. 4286. But through the Colonial Secretary he can give an indefinite number? Yes. The Colonial Secretary may fill the place on the recommendation of any clergyman, or of any one—it need not be a subscriber even who sends the recommendation: in fact, the Colonial Secretary has no means of knowing who is a subscriber and who is not.

26 May, 1873. 4287. President.] Have you considered the desirability of continuing the branch dispensary? That seems to assume that there has been some fault found with it, but I am not aware of any.

4288. Would you state the reasons which actuated the Board in establishing it? It was done in accordance with the report of a sub-committee, which report will be accessible. At all events, the reason was that people were kept waiting, and had to come such long distances to Macquarie-street. There were constant complaints of the poor people coming there and waiting a long time for their medicines.

4289. If the evidence proves that it affords opportunities for persons getting medicines for nothing, who from their position should not seek such assistance, would it not be desirable to check that abuse, and to remedy it by appointing additional dispensers at the Infirmary? No; there is not accommodation for them at the Infirmary. I would sooner devise some means of checking the abuse than take the whole business to the Infirmary.

4290. We have been told of an instance of a patient having been supplied with cod-liver oil for twelve months for nothing, and the supply was only stopped by the condition of the patient being discovered by accident? I have never heard of such a thing.

4291. And it is believed that the same thing happens in many other cases? I have not heard of it.

4292. Mr. Ellis.] I suppose the same thing might happen in Macquarie-street? It is perfectly possible. Some miser dressed in rags might obtain assistance though well able to pay for it. You cannot discover what a man's means are. It is utterly impossible to devise a check for all these things in an institution of this sort. There must be some abuses, but I do not believe that this institution is abused to any very great extent. You cannot devise complete checks any more than a banker can, who will be robbed sometimes in spite of his care.

4293. If it has been stated that the lady superintendent is often away for days and weeks together without any one knowing where she is, and without the knowledge of the authorities of the Infirmary—is that true? I should think that it is utterly untrue; if any one has said that she was away for days and weeks without the knowledge of the committee, I should say it was a mistaken statement. Miss Osburn, some time ago, —some years ago—asked leave—(I have been reminded of it lately). She went away at times, and she was then told that she should obtain leave from the committee, and I think that she has always asked leave since.

4294. Could it happen that she has been away without your knowledge? Of course it might happen. I might not go near the building for a month; not that I would not be likely to hear of her being away. Some person would tell me, otherwise I might not know it.

4295. If she were repeatedly and constantly away, would you not think it a great neglect of duty? Certainly.

4296. Have you any reason to believe that she is a person who would neglect her duty in that way? No, certainly not.

4297. Does she appear to you to take an interest in the institution—to be zealous in the discharge of her duties? I am sure she is zealous and energetic.

4298. It has been said that, on one occasion, when Mr. Paxton and Mr. Pearce went through the building to make some inquiry as to the vermin in the wards, in pursuance of a resolution of the committee, they found Miss Osburn absent, and found that she had been absent from Monday until Thursday, and that no one knew where she was, and that her absence was not known to the committee? I think you must be alluding to some occasion when Miss Osburn came to me and told me that she had forgotten to ask the committee to be allowed to go away in the evening for two or three evenings in the week, and she asked me if there was any objection to her going, and I gave her permission, and told her that I would report it to the committee.

4299. And did you? I feel positive that I did, either on the next occasion of their meeting or afterwards when the question arose. I stated what had happened to the committee, I believe. At all events, I told her to report to the committee that I had given the permission,—I recollect distinctly telling her that; and I believe that shortly afterwards I stated to the committee that I had given her leave.

4300. Mr. Goold.] Is there not a book to show when she is absent and when she returns? She should report these things herself. She brings in a report-book every Monday, but I do not know whether she is in the habit of reporting her own absences. She should do so.

4301. President.] On this occasion was she at the Infirmary in the day-time? Yes, I understood that she was only away in the evening.

4302. That was all she asked for? Yes; I was under the impression that when Mr. Paxton and Mr. Pearce found her absent she came back before they left. My recollection is that she asked for leave to go out in the evening and to come back every morning. I do not think I could have given her leave to remain away for two successive days. At the same time, if she had told me that she was unwell, and that she had left some competent person in charge of the place, I should have had no hesitation in giving her leave.

4303. Mr. Cowper.] If she said that she did get leave to stay away, you would not say to the contrary? I should certainly say that I did give her leave, because I know she would not say what was untrue.

4304. Mr. Goold.] So far as your knowledge goes, her absence from the place is not a frequent occurrence? No, not a frequent occurrence. She is more away than the late matron used to be, but then the late matron was one of those beings who are never happy outside the walls of the Infirmary at all. I should not describe Miss Osburn's absences as frequent by any means. You cannot shut a person up there without giving her some chance to get away. I think her position would require her to have more recreation than have a great number of people who are employed in business. It is a dreary sort of life.

4305. And she has a good deal of worry and vexation? Yes.

4306. Mr. Cowper.] Do you recollect any complaints as to the want of water, and the necessity of having tanks to provide the institution with water at all hours? Yes, there have been from time to time. We have been told sometimes that the water was short.

M. H.
Stephen, Esq.

26 May, 1873.

4307. Have you not been informed officially that it was always off from 2 to 6 p.m.? Yes, several times the water has been short.

4308. But this is a daily occurrence? Lately?

4309. Always. We are told that when a person comes in who has met with an accident, the doctors have to dress the wounds and to leave the dry blood on them, and that the man has to go away with the blood on him, as there is no convenience for washing even their hands? I have never heard of it. If that has been reported to the committee, it has been in my absence. That is just what I complain of—that we hear of these things in a side way—that they are not brought properly before us. In that way the committee are called upon to answer some sins that they should not have to answer for.

4310. Mr. Metcalfe.] Have not these things been put off from time to time under the idea that some great buildings were to be put up? I feel certain that some improvements have been put off until we were in a position to spend money on a complete plan. We felt that it would be waste.

4311. President.] Waste of whose money? The committee's.

4312. Do you know what money it is proposed to spend on the alterations now? There have been some elaborate plans prepared.

4313. What funds are there at your disposal to make these alterations? They are all mentioned here. You will find them in the report.

4314. You consider that you have funds in hand to make these alterations without applying to the Government for assistance? I will not say that it has not been proposed that we should apply to the Government, but I am not aware at present of any intention to apply to the Government for funds. Certainly I quite admit that we do look to the Government to do great things for us.

4315. What is the position of affairs with regard to the grant of the ground? I am told that the grant has been lately stayed. I have been told by two persons that the grant is not to be issued yet.

4316. Were you expecting it to issue then? Certainly.

4317. On whose promise? First of all, by virtue of the resolution of the Legislature, and secondly upon several applications made for the grant.

4318. To whom? I am hardly prepared to say to whom the applications have been made.

4319. By whom? Even that I can hardly say, but my impression is that we have two or three times written. I believe, by-the-by, that not long ago we had a deputation to Mr. Parkes on the subject;—but no, that was connected with the Prince Alfred Hospital. The Legislature passed a resolution, as you are aware, that we should have the grant, subject to certain conditions, and my own impression is, that we thought that the grant would be issued, and, as it was not issued, applications were made—several formal applications; and I have myself made informal applications to the Under Secretary for Lands.

4320. Are you aware of the conditions on which the Government proposed to issue the grant? None, except those provided by the Legislature.

4321. Do you not think that provision should be made for the better government of the institution? Yes, I, for one, should have no objection to anything that would secure the good government of the institution; but at the same time I do not think that the grant should be issued to the Board trammelled with conditions to which they are not themselves assenting parties, though I should hope that the Board would assent to anything reasonable. Their only desire is to benefit the public; but I think we have a right to have the grant issued in accordance with the terms the Legislature has proposed. I believe that they are entitled to the grant absolutely.

4322. Where are these conditions to be found? In the Report of the Select Committee of the House.

4323. Was that Report ever adopted? Yes, I think it was. I think that I was in the House at the time, and I believe the Report was adopted—I am sure it was—I feel no doubt that the Report was adopted, otherwise we should have no right to expect the grant now. The Report recommends the issue of the grant on condition that no part of the building shall be taken down without the consent of both Houses of the Legislature.

4324. Was not the inquiry as to whether the building should be taken down? I do not know. Nothing was proposed as to any alteration of the system, if that is contemplated now.

4325. Have you any further statement to make to the Commission? There is only one matter on which I should like to give an opinion. I have long been of opinion that the system of honorary medical officers is not a good one. I have long thought it, and I believe it has gradually become the opinion of the Board that we should be better off with a medical officer, a man of ability, highly paid, and not to depend on the honorary medical officers at all. It is an alteration that I should like to see well considered.

4326. Mr. Ellis.] Are you of opinion that as things are they have too much authority in the institution? They are practically subject to no control, and my own impression is that they do not care a rush for the committee. In more than one instance the wishes of the committee seem to have been almost deliberately and purposely disregarded. There is one thing that the committee expressed a desire for, and that is that when spirits were ordered for the patients the number of days should be mentioned for which the supply was continued, and that when the term had expired the order should be renewed, if necessary. That is one matter in which they disregarded the wish of the committee.

4327. Mr. Metcalfe.] Do you not think that the public benefit very much from the experience these gentlemen gain in the treatment of diseases in the Infirmary,—the skill that they acquire by witnessing frequent operations? I dare say that they do acquire experience there that they cannot acquire otherwise, but I do not think that all their wishes should be given way to.

4328. Are you aware that in England there are doctors who attend the hospitals daily and take their pupils with them, who thus obtain an immense amount of knowledge which they could not otherwise obtain? I believe so.

4329. How are medical men to obtain that experience here if you deprive them of that chance? I do not know how to devise any system for them, but I think that these are the defects of the present system.

4330. President.] Are there not thousands of persons who are attended by medical men who do not go into the hospital at all? No doubt.

4331. And do you not think that the experience of these few who do attend is dearly purchased? I do. They are very irregular in their times of attending, and it is no use remonstrating with them. My impression is that they come at times which suit themselves and without any consideration for the institution.

4332. Mr. Ellis.] Is that not due to the want of firmness on the part of the Board? The Board until lately had no power over them, but they have now the power of suspension or dismissal. But they are still

M. H.
Stephen, Esq.

still practically subject to no control, and the case must be a glaring one and strongly brought home to the medical man before he could be dismissed. Another thing that is a constant subject of discussion is the practice of ordering luxuries for the patients. There is an idea that people like to go to the Infirmary to be royally entertained.

4333. Mr. Couper.] Can you mention instances? I heard the other day that a patient was ordered champagne—a thing that I never heard of before.

4334. President.] But to save a person's life should not anything be ordered? Oh yes. I only mention it. I have no doubt it is an exceptional case. But we must have been treating our patients very stingily in past years according to the way we are treating them now.

4335. You think that the honorary officers might be allowed to have access to the hospital as a matter of favour at their own times, and gain experience in that way without treating patients at all? They come at all times.

4336. Mr. Goold.] It is stated here, in reply to a question put to Miss Osburn,—“We had a case of two patients who were ready to go out; as soon as the doctor got any body to fill up the two beds he would have discharged the two patients. But it so happened that no patients suitable to be put in that ward applied for admittance during his week, so that the doctor said to the nurse in charge of the ward,—‘We must keep these patients until my week comes round again.’” Then the question is put,—“How long would that be?” and the reply is, “A month.” So that we have patients kept a month longer than they should be in the Infirmary, just because the honorary medical gentleman wanted to keep them until he could admit patients to fill the two beds? If that is the case, it shows that that doctor has his own interest at heart rather more than the Infirmary's. It is another matter on which we are rather sore,—that patients are kept in the Infirmary longer than we see any reason for.

4337. Mr. Ellis.] Can you see any reason why an honorary surgeon who admits a case should keep it to himself? Do I see any reason for it?

4338. Yes? I am hardly prepared to answer that question.

4339. In the case of the honorary medical officers the patients are divided equally among them; but among the honorary surgeons there is such a competition for the cutting-up part of the business that no matter how many a surgeon admits, he will insist on sticking to all of them? I do not see the reason for the rule. It does seem open to objection.

4340. Why should not the accident cases be distributed amongst the surgeons in the same way that medical cases are distributed amongst the medical men? These are rules they would arrange amongst themselves.

4341. Mr. Goold.] It is said here that a rule was passed by the committee to prevent this system, by fixing the number of beds allotted to each surgeon, but that the rule has not been kept for the last three years? I know nothing about it. The honoraries are practically out of our control altogether.

4342. When was the management of the wards given to Miss Osburn—are you, as secretary of the institution, aware when the entire control was given to her? I always understood that she had the entire control from the time that she took charge of the institution as lady superintendent. The control of the wards was given to her. I do not think that there has been any further charge given to her in any way, subsequently to the first charge.

4343. In whose charge were they before she came—who could order the cleansing of the wards? I think the matron. I would not be quite sure about that. I think the matron we had there had charge of the cleaning of the wards.

4344. President.] Why was it necessary to appoint a committee to authorize the lady superintendent to take steps for the cleaning of the wards? The select committee?

4345. Yes? I do not know what you refer to. I do not remember any committee being appointed.

4346. I mean about the bugs? There was a committee appointed to devise the best means of doing it. Miss Osburn did not consider that she had authority to employ men, or take any special steps. She has been under the idea that she could not order the men of the establishment about—that they are under Mr. Blackstone's orders. I do not say whether she is right or wrong, and she did not conceive that she could get assistance outside the hospital. Then there was a committee appointed to devise means of getting rid of these things, and it resulted in her being told to do what she liked, almost.

4347. Mr. Ellis.] When she did do what she liked, she was told that she had subjected herself to dismissal? No doubt one or two members of the committee thought that she had exceeded her authority, and were very angry, but it was then pointed out that there was a resolution which gave her full power, or it turned out that she had been directed by Mr. Lewers, one of the secretaries, to take what steps she pleased. At all events, it turned out that she had not exceeded the powers given her.

4348. Did she complain before of the verminous state of the institution? She did complain, but I do not think that she ever gave us to understand that it was in the very bad state in which it afterwards turned out to be, although I know of one or two occasions on which she did report the matter, and what is more, reported it in writing; but she did not arouse us to the extent to which we were aroused afterwards.

4349. Mr. Driver.] I suppose these written reports are in the place? Yes; I have seen some of the documents, and therefore I know that she did report on these matters.

4350. Mr. Couper.] Are there not visitors who inspect the wards? Yes; but you may go round the wards every day in the week, and unless a patient told you, you would not be aware of the state that the beds were in.

4351. We were told that the bugs were all round the tops of the bedsteads, and that they could be seen in myriads on the walls? If they were so numerous as that, it is hard to understand how it was that the house visitors did not see them; but then I say that the system is not properly carried out.

4352. Mr. Goold.] Miss Osburn says: “I would often go into the wards at night, and see perhaps a patient that was dying, with these creatures crawling over him, and then I would go back to my own clean room, and feel that it was a shame that these poor people I had been sent out to take care of should lie in such a place”? Well, I do say, as far as I am personally concerned, that I never heard any account, written or verbal, from Miss Osburn such as that until lately. I do not remember it.

4353. Mr. Ellis.] Do you remember how soon it was after she first came that she made a complaint about these bugs? I do not recollect.

4354. She says here that she felt them the very first night she was in the place? I do not recollect any complaints being made until comparatively recent periods. It seems to me that if I had known all this, it would have horrified me so much that I could not have rested until I brought it before the committee. I have have been told that the old building was infested with bugs, but I have always been under the impression—and I have asked the architects about it—that they could not be eradicated until the walls were pulled down. M. H.

Stephen, Esq.

4355. But they are eradicated? I am told that they are as bad now as ever they were; that one of the beds was full, and that Miss Osburn's attention was called to it. 26 May, 1873.

4356. President.] In the Report of the Select Committee of the Assembly on the Infirmary, was not the prevalence of these vermin given as a reason why the building should be pulled down? Yes; I know that they have been there for years past, and no doubt that was one reason that operated in the minds of many that the vermin were in the walls. That was one of the reasons why we wanted the Prince Alfred Hospital money expended in that building; but I did not know that the bugs came out in myriads on the beds.

4357. Mr. Goold.] Were you there in Mrs. Ghost's time? Yes, for years.

4358. Do you remember whether any complaints were made then? I cannot recollect it; but it is impossible that a place like that could be free from vermin. The place was not so large in Mrs. Ghost's time—there were not so many patients.

4359. In your opinion, where does the blame lie that the hospital should get into such a state? That it should have got into the state it was in lately—I mean the excessively bad state—is the fault of the nursing staff, and partly of the committee perhaps, who having had these matters to a certain extent reported to them, may not have taken the steps that they should have taken. I do not want to throw all the blame on the nursing staff, but one would suppose that absolute vigilance would prevent the vermin attacking the patients, though nothing could keep them from the walls. While I do not acquit the committee of all blame, I do think that the chief blame rests on the nursing department.

4360. Mr. Ellis.] There appears to have been some misunderstanding between the manager and the lady superintendent, as to who should have this cleaning done; the nursing staff are responsible for the general cleanliness of the wards, and it appears that the duty only devolved upon Miss Osburn three months ago? That is one of the evils of which I spoke the other evening—that the duties of these two officers were not thoroughly defined. I think it should be understood that the cleanliness of the wards should be left to the lady superintendent of the nurses.

4361. Should she have power to order whatever is necessary to be done? Yes.

4362. Mr. Goold.] But the manager states that the power was taken out of his hands from the first—some years ago—the power of interfering in any way with the wards? Does he refer to any resolution of the committee?

4363. No. He says: "It is some years ago since I was told not to interfere with the nurses"? One hardly knows what he means by that. Of course he was not to interfere with the nurses.

4364. President.] Then he is asked: "How long is it since you were prevented from interfering in the cleansing of the wards; prevented, for instance, so far as to hinder you from getting the vermin out of the wards?" He replies: "That was about two or three months ago. The committee knew of it. They knew there was vermin in the wards"? I suppose he is referring to the committee that gave Miss Osburn power to do this. That is right enough.

4365. Has the advisability of establishing a homœopathic ward ever been suggested? Only by myself, and that not directly as a matter of resolution to the committee, but only in conversation with different members of the Board. I have talked of the possibility of having such a thing.

4366. Are there not many persons who subscribe to the hospital, who believe in the homœopathic principle? I should think there are, but I really do not know. I can hardly answer that question. There must be some few.

4367. Do you see any objection to a certain number of beds being set apart for the treatment of patients on that principle? I should like to see it tried either in that hospital or in the Prince Alfred Hospital. I should like to see it have a fair trial, and I do not see why it should not have one.

4368. Mr. Ellis.] Are the reports on the state of the wards comeatable? Do you mean Miss Osburn's reports?

4369. Yes? Yes, they are in the book.

4370. Are they all in her book? I have said to her: "If you wish to hold the committee responsible, you must put your reports down in the book, and if you do that the committee are responsible." She has several times told me that she did not like to report things to the committee because there was little use in doing it.

4371. She must have made some reports before she found out that it was useless doing so? Still, that is the case. If there were anything wrong she was wrong not to report it. The only way you can hold a servant responsible is by having weekly reports. On the one hand, it relieves the person in charge from responsibility, and casts the blame on the right people, if the report is not attended to.

4372. Mr. Goold.] Do you know what is done with the patients' clothes when they are taken from them on coming into the hospital? No, I do not, except that they are understood to be taken off and fumigated.

4373. Is it the impression of the committee that they are fumigated? I have not given the subject much thought lately. They used to be fumigated.

4374. You will be surprised then to find that when they are taken off the patients they are just done up as they are taken off, and put into a room without being fumigated? Well, the subject has not been brought under our notice for some time. I know that we used to have the clothes cleaned.

4375. Mr. Ellis.] There are, it appears, degrees of cleanness according to the numbers of lice that are seen walking outside the bundles? Matters of this kind are brought up before the committee to-day, and then attention may not be called to it for a year again. They cannot be poking their noses there continually.

4376. Are you aware that verminous clothes are kept in the basement below the south wing? I do not know it.

4378. Mr. Goold.] We are told that if a man who has met with an accident is brought in, and his clothes are all over blood, these clothes are wrapped up, without being washed, in the blood as they are, and put into the clothes-house? I used to pay more attention to these matters than I have done lately. I have seen these bundles packed up and put by after being washed and fumigated, and everything done in good order; but of late years I have not heard anything said about the matter.

TUESDAY, 27 MAY, 1873.

Members Present:—

WILLIAM CHARLES WINDEYER, Esq., PRESIDENT.

EYRE G. ELLIS, Esq.
MICHAEL METCALFE, Esq.SAMUEL GOOLD, Esq.
CHARLES COWPER, JUN., Esq.

Haynes Gibbes Alleyne, Esq., M.D., Honorary Physician Sydney Infirmary, called in and examined:—

- H. G. Alleyne, Esq., M.D.
27 May, 1873.
4379. Mr. Cowper.] What office do you hold in the Infirmary? I am one of the honorary physicians.
4380. How long have you occupied that position? A good many years. About fifteen or sixteen years, or more than that.
4381. And do you think that the management of the Infirmary now is equal to what it was in former years? In what respect?—I think there has been a great improvement in the way of nursing. There is no doubt that there has been a great improvement in the comfort of the patients; but in former years the establishment was admirably managed, considering the great disadvantages that the people in charge laboured under, for want of proper officers to conduct the work of the establishment.
4382. Will you explain what you mean by proper officers? I mean nurses to specially take charge of the sick people.
4383. Then you think that now the nursing is carried on in a very satisfactory manner,—much more so than it formerly was? As far as it comes under my observation, I think so.
4384. Do you visit any other wards besides those you are interested in? Yes, frequently I do, but I can only speak of the work as I am in the habit of seeing it in my own wards, and I presume that it is equally satisfactory in others.
4385. I suppose if any one in a ward had anything to complain of he would complain to you? I think it very likely that he would.
4386. And the patients have never complained to you that the nurses have been unkind to them? In one or two cases complaints were made to me, but I really do not think there was any real cause of complaint of want of attention on the part of the nurses; it was mere captiousness on the part of the patient. It was only on two occasions that complaints were made to me, and on those occasions I found on investigation that there were no grounds for complaint.
4387. Have you noticed whether there are any patients here who should be removed to another Government institution? Yes, there are a good many. There are a good many come into my wards who are not fit objects for this institution at all. Of course they are people who should be taken care of, but they are patients who are not likely to be benefited by active medical treatment. There are a good many cases, for instance, of chronic bronchitis, and advanced cases of phthisis, which are not likely to be benefited here—they would be much better in some place in the country. I think that a general hospital is about the worst institution in which such people can be placed.
4388. You are a member of the Board of Management of the Institutions for the Infirm and Destitute? Yes.
4389. And have been so since those institutions first started? Yes.
4390. Do you find that there are many persons admitted here who could be admitted there? I think so. There are a good many people, when it is my week for taking in patients, and when any such patients apply to me I always recommend them to go to these institutions. I tell them that they are not likely to receive any benefit from being treated here, and perhaps I may give them a letter to the Secretary asking him to send them up. But these people do get into my wards—they are admitted by other people.
4391. We have heard of a case of erysipelas which was sent to Mr. King and refused by him? I think that a case of erysipelas should not be sent to Mr. King; it should be sent here and put into a tent, in want of more suitable accommodation.
4392. But this was the case of a person who had been suffering from erysipelas and was cured here, and an application was made to Mr. King to admit it into the Asylum? That was some time ago.
4393. Some few weeks ago? I do not remember it then.
4394. What do you think with reference to applications made by officers of this institution to Mr. King, with reference to the admission to a charity of a person who had been suffering from erysipelas and was cured? If he was not cured—
4395. But this man was stated to have been cured? Of course if he was cured he should not be kept any longer here.
4396. Have you any rule which prevents Mr. King from admitting such cases? It is his duty to find out whether the persons applying are paupers unfit to gain their living, either from ill health or from extreme old age.
4397. Is he not expected not to admit cases in which there is a doubt? I do not know. He is allowed a considerable degree of latitude as to the admission of cases. I think he would be quite right not to admit cases in which there was a doubt.
4398. Do you think that when the application was made to admit this person, it should have been accompanied by a doctor's certificate stating that the patient was well? No doubt if the man was not well, he should not be sent down there at all.
4399. But is Mr. King supposed to take the word of the manager of this institution as to a man being perfectly well? I think where a case is sent round from this hospital as an incurable case, or as a case in which the person's health has so far suffered as to render him incapable of earning a livelihood, a certificate should be sent from some competent authority—such as the medical man attending him—as to his condition. Of course this is a mere speculative case we are talking about. If you were to put an actual case I could give a better opinion.
4400. We are told that there is great difficulty in getting people from this institution into that? I do not think so. We act upon this rule: if a person from ill health, no matter what his age is, is unable to gain a livelihood, and is not likely to be able to work, he is always taken in; or if he is unable to work, from extreme old age, he is always taken in; and people may be taken from other circumstances—people who are neither broken down from old age or ill health, but may not be quite recovered from recent illness—or who may have had a leg amputated or something of that sort, and not got sufficiently well from that, or who may may have had a fractured leg, and may have so far recovered as not to require any further active surgical treatment, but who are not strong enough to go to work; such cases as that may come, and they are always taken in—though they may not come within the objects of the institution—on the ground that after a few weeks' rest they may be able to go out and work. That has happened. A man comes in, suffering from a fracture, and after a few weeks he may be recovered. There is always every disposition, as far as I know—and I am a constant attendant there—to admit cases. I frequently sent patients round there myself, not only from my own wards but from other people's wards, if I think them proper cases.

H. G.
Alleyne, Esq.,
M.D.

27 May, 1873.

4401. Do you think that the Institutions for the Infirm and Destitute are quite sufficient to meet the requirements of the present state of pauperism, or do you propose that a hospital should be established nearer Sydney, where people can be taken in at less expense than in the Infirmary? The Asylums for the Infirm and Destitute under our care are nearly quite full. There was this morning in Hyde Park 224 inmates, which is many more than the portion of the building set apart for their reception can properly accommodate. There are, I think, 650 at Liverpool, but a few more may be accommodated there. In the buildings at Parramatta there are about 270, a greater number I think than should be kept there. The Asylums certainly do not afford sufficient room to properly house all of those who are fit cases for reception into them—that is, paupers disabled by great age, ill health, or other misfortune incapacitating them for labour. Many who come into the Infirmary are not paupers, and many applicants for reception into the Infirmary decline to go to the Government Asylums, when told that their cases do not admit of remedy by medical treatment here.

4402. Do you not think that some cheaper hospital is required, where patients could be kept at a lower rate: these cases which are continually admitted here into this hospital,—is not the cause of their admittance the fact that the other institutions are so far from Sydney that there is a difficulty in sending people to them? No, there is no difficulty in getting them there, because we furnish them with a railway ticket, and there are people waiting at the railway station at Liverpool to take them on. As for people who wish to go, but are not able to walk, they are sent to the railway station when they are inclined to go; they have never been put to any inconvenience.

4403. You think there is no disadvantage in their being so far from Sydney? No, there is the greatest possible advantage. I think if it is contemplated to form any new institution of the kind, the further it is away from Sydney the better for people suffering from chronic complaints, or from any complaints in fact.

4404. Do you think that the extras ordered by the medical men here are on too liberal a scale generally? Most of the cases received into this institution are such as are benefited by a liberal diet, and many of them require extras, such as a liberal supply of milk, eggs, wine, &c.

4405. Mr. Metcalfe.] Have you been here when the patients have been having their meals? Occasionally.

4406. Do you think that the meals are cooked properly for the sick? No, I do not think that they are. That is one of the greatest objections I have to the management here. I think the meals might be served in a much better manner. Of course sick men and women are rather fastidious, and it is a great thing to have their food presented to them in a tasty way, and that is one of the greatest objections I have to the arrangements here; I have always objected to the way in which the meals are served.

4407. Do you observe that the potatoes are sent up in their skins? Well, they can take them off; but I think that things are put before them in a slovenly way, and that is a strong objection to the management here.

4408. Mr. Ellis.] Is the present arrangement better than the old arrangement? I do not think so.

4409. At present the joints are sent up, instead of being carved in the kitchen as before? Yes, that is better, but still it is by no means so good as it might be. That is my greatest objection to the arrangements of the place.

4410. We had a woman here yesterday who had been a patient in the Infirmary, and she said that she could not eat the food? I should not be surprised at that. The food is generally sufficiently good, but it is the way in which it is served up that is objectionable.

4411. Mr. Metcalfe.] You think that it could be improved? Yes, it may be.

4412. There would be some difficulty; you would have to have a staff of servants? I do not think there is any difficulty; it is merely owing to their slovenly system.

4413. But no doubt the food is a good deal better than the food which most of them get in their own homes? I would not look at that. I would give them the food as well as it could be served. There should not be any difficulty in doing so, or any additional expense attached to it.

4414. Mr. Ellis.] Can you suggest any way of improving it? I cannot off hand.

4415. Can you favour the Commission with your ideas in writing? I do not see any difficulty in the nurses handing round nice little plates. It is as easy to do things neatly as to do them slovenly.

4416. Are there any other matters connected with the management of the hospital that you can give your ideas upon with the view of suggesting improvements? There is one important matter I should like to mention—a thing that is a growing evil here of long standing—and it is a most extraordinary thing that it should have existed for eight-and-forty years without more notice having been taken of it; I allude to the enormous quantity of bugs that are habitually about the beds.

4417. Is that not caused by the old rubble walls there? I do not think that is an excuse for it at all. I will give you an example. I do not know that that building at Hyde Park is as old as this one, but it is very old, and you will not find a bug there; at least there are some, of course, but if you went round every day for a week you would find the place as free from bugs as any private house in Sydney. There is no difficulty in keeping the place free from bugs if it is made a matter of routine, and if the cleaning is gone on with daily. Many of the persons who come in bring bugs in with them, and the only way to keep a house clean is by constantly working at it day after day during the whole year. Then you would have no bugs at all.

4418. Mr. Ellis.] The complaint is that they have nests in the walls and in the woodwork of the windows? So they have in other houses; but that is no reason why they should get into the beds and bedsteads.

4419. Mr. Couper.] Were not complaints made at first of the bugs being in the Hyde Park and Liverpool Asylums? I do not know, but they are very clean now.

4420. Mr. Metcalfe.] Do you speak of the Benevolent Asylum? No; the Government Asylums for the Destitute.

4421. You think, however bad the walls of the Infirmary may be, that it is quite possible to keep the bugs down? I am quite certain it is.

H. G.
Allyne, Esq.,
M.D.

27 May, 1873.

4422. Mr. Ellis.] Have you faults to find with the efforts made to keep your own ward clean? I think that it is clean at this moment; but it appears to me that there has never been any attempt made to keep down these bugs.
4423. Do they do what you tell them? I have been told, when I have spoken about the bugs, that it depended on some arrangements of the committee, and that they could not be kept down.
4424. Did you ever complain to the committee? Never specially about the bugs. It is impossible that the committee can have been ignorant of the fact.
4425. Mr. Cowper.] To anybody else? Yes; to everybody several times, but everybody knew, as a matter of course; it was notorious about the bugs.
4426. Mr. Metcalfe.] Whose duty is it to keep these bugs down? I do not know; I think that it would be difficult for any one, except a member of the committee, to say what their arrangements are for carrying on the work of the establishment. For some years I attended the committee meetings, but although there was always a great deal of conversation, it was very seldom that it appeared to me to have any bearing on the good management of the institution.
4427. Mr. Ellis.] Was there too much eloquence wasted at the meetings? There was a great deal of talking.
4428. Mr. Gould.] Have you found any improvement in the cleanness of the wards since Miss Osburn took charge of the establishment? Not in respect of the bugs, until lately. There has been great cleaning going on lately.
4429. Mr. Metcalfe.] Do you consider that it is the work of the nurses to clean these beds? I really do not know. I recollect that we proposed to have nurses here, and I, with the consent of my colleagues, wrote several reports on the subject, and they all agreed to the plan. When the nurses were brought out we wrote a report—I am of course speaking from memory now—detailing what we conceived to be the duties of the nurses; but the whole thing has been altered since, and I really do not know what the nurses' duties are. All I expect now is that the patients should receive their medicines at the times they are prescribed for, and receive such diets as are prescribed, and that they should have warm baths when they are ordered for them, and so on; but I do not know what their specific duties are otherwise.
4430. Mr. Gould.] What is your opinion as to who should have the management of the wards—that is, the entire control—What I want to ascertain is, should the management be under the lady superintendent or the manager? I think in everything that appertains to the sick people, everything that goes on inside the ward, she should be supreme, and she should be held responsible.
4431. And has that not been the case? I do not know, but I believe not. I do not know.
4432. Mr. Cowper.] Who should have charge of the bathmen and the cooks—should they be under the control of the manager or of the lady superintendent? By the by-laws, the bathmen are "subject to the lady superintendent in all duties immediately connected with the sick." I think that the time of a lady superintendent, who had undivided charge of a staff of nurses, and of all the work of the wards, would be fully occupied without making her responsible for the conduct of a staff of cooks. The kitchen should be under the charge of the officer who has control over the cooks.
4433. Who is the cook under? I believe that the cook is under the control of the manager.
4434. Mr. Metcalfe.] Have you observed that there has been a divided authority between the manager and the lady superintendent? I think that any divided authority is fatal to good management.
4435. Have you observed that that is the case here? Yes, I have, and it is fatal to good management.
4436. Would you give the authority to the manager or to the lady superintendent? If you are going to have a manager, I would make him responsible for the cooking. I think the lady superintendent can find plenty to attend to in the wards, but of course it would be part of her duty to have the cooking properly carried out, and it should be her duty to see that the meals were properly cooked and properly served.
4437. Mr. Ellis.] But she says that if she had control of the cooking, she could have the defects which are complained of remedied? I think that the defects should be remedied on her representation. But if she can find time to manage a staff of cooks in addition to her ordinary duties, I see no objection to the cooks being put under her orders.
4438. Do you not think that the cooking should be under her control then? If she can find time to attend to it.
4439. Mr. Gould.] Have you looked into the Nightingale system of hospital management? My information on the subject is derived from books only.
4440. You are aware that it gives the whole control to the lady superintendent? I believe that it gives to the lady superintendent the whole control of the nursing staff, and of those servants whose duties are in immediate connection with the patients. That is what I mean by undivided authority.
4441. According to the manager's evidence, Miss Osburn has had the sole control of the wards for the last five years? Of course I do not know anything about that; but I have heard Miss Osburn say, speaking of the bugs for instance, that she was not able to keep the wards clean, on account of the want of assistance to do the work, and the direct interference that she met with. I forget whether it was from the manager, or from whom it was.
4442. Do you not think she should have brought the matter more prominently before the committee? I do not know that she has not done so.
4443. Are you aware that she has done it? I am not aware that she did.
4444. In one part of her evidence she says that the bugs were crawling over a dying patient. Do you not think if that were the case she should have laid it before the committee, and that if she had done so they would have taken action? I should hope that they would.
4445. Mr. Ellis.] Do you believe that they did? There could not have been any action taken as regards cleaning the place of bugs until lately, because it has been the order of the day to see bugs about the place; but I have never seen them so bad as that—crawling over a dying patient. But I have seen bugs there in my ward, and that is as clean as any ward. I do not think that a bug should be seen there at all.
4446. Mr. Gould.] The question is, where does the blame rest for this fearful state of things that has been disclosed? I do not know; I do not know where the management is.
4447. Do you not think that it proves that the system is very bad? There is no doubt of that.
4448. We have been told that these bugs could be seen by millions almost; that when the iron bedsteads were taken down, the holes were filled, that they were under the window-sills, and that the walls were literally covered; now, it appears that there must have been some gross neglect somewhere? No doubt it it was owing to the very bad system of carrying on the work, that such a state of things could have existed.

4449. Mr. Metcalfe.] Miss Osburn is asked—"Do you think it would be possible for a clergyman to visit this hospital for a long period without seeing anything of the kind?" She replies—"Yes, it would be quite possible, because in the day-time the bugs are not about"? There is something in that.

4450. Did the patients complain to you about the bugs? No patients ever complained to me of the bugs, but I have seen them.

H. G. Alleyne, Esq.,
M.D.
27 May, 1873.

4451. You still say that any person who was accustomed to the cleaning of a house could keep the bugs down if they chose? There is not the slightest doubt of it. I argue from what has been done in the case of the building at Hyde Park.

4452. Mr. Goold.] We are told that it is the practice of some of the honorary staff to retain, or use their utmost efforts to retain, beds for their own patients? Do you mean for their private patients?

4453. No; that each medical man has so many beds, and that supposing he has a patient ready to go out and wishes to retain that bed, he will retain the patient in the hospital until he meets with one to occupy the bed that the patient will leave? I do not believe that that is the case.

4454. I think it is right that the physicians should know that the statement has been made. It is in evidence here that there was a case of one medical man retaining two patients in the hospital for one month just simply to retain the beds until he got patients to fill them? I not only never knew of anything of the kind, but the general practice of the medical men here would never have led me to suppose anything of the kind.

4455. This is Miss Osburn's evidence:—"We had a case of two patients who were ready to go out as soon as the doctor got anybody to fill the beds. He would have discharged the two patients, but it happened that no patients suitable to be put in that ward applied for admittance during his week, so that the doctor said to the nurse in charge of the ward, 'We must keep these patients until my week comes round again'; and those two patients were kept in a month. So far as you know that is not the case? So far as I know, that is not the practice of the staff.

4456. Mr. Cowper.] You have known of no instances of the kind? No.

4457. Mr. Goold.] You think that is rather a serious charge against a medical man? —

4458. Mr. Cowper.] It is quite possible that it might happen without your knowing it? Well, that statement there may mean one of two things. It may mean that the doctor may have had a patient who was in such a state that he might be able to turn him out if an urgent case came in, but if no such case presented itself, he might have been justified in allowing the patient to remain where he was; but I know of no such case.

4459. It has been stated that the doctor told somebody to keep a patient in until his week came round again? I think it is always far better for a doctor to admit his own cases. If that plan is now in force on the surgical side, they are better off there than we are on the medical side. I tried to get the committee to alter the plan now in force, and now this statement tells me that the surgeons have the plan which I wished for. I have had my ward filled with cases which should never have come into the house.

4460. Mr. Ellis.] Had you a fixed number of beds at that time? Yes.

4461. But if the plan you desire to be adopted were in force, you might take in so many patients for yourself that the other doctors might not have any? No. When it was (say) Dr. A's week, he would admit patients, and they would go into any ward in which there were empty beds, and he would have patients in every ward. It would be far the best plan.

4462. Would you prefer that plan? Infinitely. If each medical officer admitted patients for himself alone, he would probably admit those only whom he thought would probably be benefited by his treatment, and those would for that reason be proper patients for admission; but under the present system, patients are almost daily taken in who are not at all likely to receive any benefit from being inmates of the wards, except that they are provided with comfortable housing and regular food, and who, if they happen to be paupers and unable to provide for themselves the necessaries of life, may be very well accommodated in the Government Asylum for the Destitute.

4463. Suppose all the doctors objected to take in a certain kind of complaint, what would become of the patients? I would never object to take in any that I could do good to, but I object to the principle of taking in patients of whose cure there is no hope, and who will go out only to come again at the end of two or three months perhaps. I would take in any patient and keep him in as long as he was improving, but I refuse to take those who cannot benefit by active medical treatment.

4464. What is the practice at Home in the Hospitals—do the doctors have separate wards? I do not know. I think it is done both ways.

4465. Would you approve of the patients being put in indiscriminately? I think such a plan would work better than the present plan.

4466. In fact, the comparative attentiveness of the medical staff could be better judged than it is now when each doctor goes into his own ward? I think upon the whole the medical staff are more attentive here than they are in England.

4467. It is complained that they are irregular in their hours of attendance? I do not think so. I have heard of one or two gentlemen who are irregular in their hours, but I do not think that it is generally the case.

4468. Mr. Metcalfe.] You are supposed to be here? I do not know that there is any rule as to the hour of attendance, but I think that it is understood that the medical staff should pay their visit before 12 o'clock, and I believe that their practice is to visit between 10 and 11. Between 10 and 11 is the time that I usually pay my visit.

4469. It is said that they come about dinner-time? That is about 12 o'clock. I do not think their coming at the dinner hour occasions any inconvenience.

4470. The officers say that it does? I do not see how it possibly can. I have come here about 12 o'clock. I have come at the dinner hour purposely, because I made a point of coming to see what kind of a dinner the patients got, and I do not see how it could inconvenience them. As a matter of fact it did not inconvenience them; and I think it quite possible that the patients may be benefited by the medical staff making it their duty to make their visit occasionally at meal-times.

4471. Mr. Cowper.] Do you attend every day? Yes. It is very rarely that I do not come. On one occasion I was kept away for some days by illness.

4472. Mr. Ellis. You are aware that there are a large number of patients sent into the hospital by the Colonial Secretary? Yes.

H. G.
Alleyne, Esq.,
M.D.
27 May, 1873.

4473. You are aware that that causes the expenditure on the part of the Government for the support of patients in the hospital to be very considerable? Yes.
4474. In consideration of that large expenditure, would you give the Government a representation on the Board of Management? My opinion of Boards is that they are bad machinery for managing anything, and that when a Board consists of a great many members it is useless.
4475. This is a Board of twenty-seven members—would you reduce it? Yes, I would reduce it to not more than five; and I think that three would be a better number than five.
4476. Would you have two members appointed by the Government? Yes, they should have at least two.
4477. And you think it would be a more effective Board than the present one? I am quite certain of it.
4478. As to the divided authority, would you give the entire control of the nursing, the internal arrangements, and the servants connected with those arrangements, to the lady superintendent? Yes.
4479. Would you give the general supervision of the institution, and the control of the stores, and all financial matters, to another officer, who should be directly responsible to the Board and not to any of these sub-committees, who appear to be harassing the life out of people? Such an officer would of course be responsible to the Board of Management only.
4480. What position would you give him? You may call him what you please.
4481. It has been suggested that if the hon. secretaries were done away with, and their powers vested in a respectable, intelligent, paid secretary, it would be better than the present system—in such a case you would know to whom to come if you wished to make a complaint? Yes, the secretary in such a case would be equivalent to a manager or superintendent, and responsible for all matters outside the wards.
4482. Responsible for everything that did not occur in the wards, which would be under the control of the lady superintendent? Yes, I think so.
4483. Would you make him directly responsible to the Board? Yes.
4484. You would have no interference between him and the Board? Certainly not, and with a Board of only three or five there could be no sub-committee to interfere with him.
4485. Would you object to direct interference, by members of the committee, with the nurses and servants? Certainly I would. If individual members of the Board go round and give instructions to servants not authorized by the Board, it leads to great inconvenience and upsets discipline.
4486. Then you would vest all these duties in the executive officers of the Board, subject to the Board only? Yes, I am of that opinion.
4487. Mr. Gould.] Would you give power to the manager to discharge on his own authority? Servants?
4488. Yes? I would not.
4489. Would you give power to the lady superintendent to engage and discharge servants without an appeal to the Board? I would give her authority to engage them, as she should best know who would be likely to make a good nurse, or attendant, but I would not give any one authority to discharge without reference to the Board.
4490. Mr. Cowper.] Do you not think it is likely to upset the discipline of the establishment if, when the lady superintendent recommended a nurse's dismissal, the committee asked her to take that nurse back again? I do not think so. I think that the lady superintendent, or other officer, having reason to think that a nurse was unsuitable, should bring the matter under the consideration of the Board.
4491. That the Board should be consulted? Yes, before dismissing. I would allow the lady superintendent to engage nurses and pick out attendants, because she should be presumed to be the best judge as to whom would become good nurses after proper training than unskilled people would be.
4492. You would only give her the power of suspension? If she found any person was not suitable for the office, she could report it to the Board and state her reasons for it.
4493. Do you not think that the Board should act upon her recommendation, unless there were strong reasons for taking the contrary course? I suppose that they would, but I do not think that they would necessarily do it. They must act upon their opinion. Of course it would be their duty to inform themselves as to whether her recommendations were such as they could act upon.
4494. If the lady superintendent reported that it was impossible for her to maintain discipline if certain nurses were retained on the establishment, do you not think that the Board (unless they saw good reasons for retaining them) should agree to their dismissal? That is just what I state. The Board, in the case of any recommendation of that sort, would inform themselves—which there would be no difficulty in doing—as to the merits of the case; and I do not think there would be any disagreeable collision between the officers of the institution and the Board. I have been for a long time one of the Board in charge of the Asylums, and we have a good many servants, and we have never yet come into collision with any of them.
4495. Mr. Ellis.] Yours is a small Board though? Yes, and I believe that is the whole secret of it.
4496. Mr. Gould.] Are you aware of the mode which Miss Osburn pursues in training the nurses? As far as I have seen the nurses, I think that they must have benefited very much by the instruction that they got, in whatever mode it was given. I think that those I have in my wards are most attentive and well conducted, and in every respect careful of the patients.
4497. Do you think there should be men employed as nurses? No. There are duties connected with hospital arrangements for the performance of which men are required, but they should not be employed specially as nurses.
4498. As a rule you would prefer female nurses? Undoubtedly.
4499. Mr. Ellis.] Do you think there is any objection to their attending a man on the score of delicacy? Not the slightest in the world. It is a thing that is done all over the world.
4500. You prefer women to male attendants? There is not the slightest doubt of that. I have never been ill enough myself to require nursing, but from what I have seen here I should not like to be nursed by the men called wardsmen. They were kind men, and wished to do their best, but they were naturally rougher in their way of doing things. I have seen a man suffering from acute rheumatism, and to hear that man shout when these wardsmen took hold of him would frighten you.
4501. You remember the former system of nursing here? Yes.
4502. Is this an improvement upon it? There is no doubt of it.
4503. Do you think that Miss Osburn takes an interest in the institution, and does her best to promote it? From what I have seen I think so. She is very energetic, and seems to me to take great interest in the welfare of the patients.
4504. Do you think her competent? Yes, as far as I am able to judge, I think so. I judge from the results results of her work; that is the only way I can judge of her competency. I see that the nurses who have been under her guidance show a great improvement from the time that they first came into the institution, in their knowledge as to the management of sick people.

4505. Have you any reason to think that she is inattentive to her duties—that she does not visit the wards? I think not. I am here earlier than most medical men, and I am seldom here without seeing her somewhere about the place.

4506. Have you ever noticed her absent for a whole week? I know that she has been absent on leave up the country.

4507. Mr. Cowper.] You have not noticed her absent repeatedly for days together? No, I have not noticed her absence except on those occasions when I knew that she was absent on leave.

4508. Mr. Metcalfe.] And if she had been you would have noticed it? I think I should.

4510. Do you think that it is desirable that young ladies occupying the position of “sisters” should have some distinctive title, in order that they may secure more influence over the patients and the nurses? I think that they should have a title, and that a better one than “sister” could not be given. I think that it had an excellent effect on the nurses and the patients, in the way of keeping order and discipline.

4511. Do you think it gave them greater influence in keeping order in the wards? I have not remarked any disturbance or want of discipline in the wards, either before or since the title was done away with, but I regretted that the system had been changed in respect to that title.

4512. Do you think that the young ladies who came in liked the designation? I do not know. It is probable that they did.

4513. Mr. Metcalfe.] Do you think it was desirable that they should have such a title? Yes, and I regretted that the committee abolished it.

4514. Some distinction is you think desirable? Yes, I think so—very desirable indeed.

4515. Mr. Gould.] Do you think the abolition of the title has made as much difference as it has been supposed to make? I did not know that it was supposed to have made any difference. As I have just stated, I did not remark any alteration in the discipline of the wards, but I think it had a tendency to good—having these distinctions of rank.

4516. President.] Do you see any objection to the name itself? No, we could not have a better.

4517. Mr. Ellis.] Do you think that the absence of an appellation of that kind deters young ladies from going into the hospital? I do not know.

4518. Do you know of any instances in which it has had that effect? No, I do not.

4519. Do you know how many of that class are in the Infirmary now? I do not.

4520. If it were possible to do such a thing, do you think it would be wise to transfer this hospital to the barracks at Paddington? Well, I don't know. It is a very excellent site for a hospital in many respects. In cases of people meeting with accidents, this is a central position, near hand to the shipping, where accidents frequently occur, and near to Darling Harbour, where there are many large works going on. On various grounds, I think that this is a good situation for a taking-in hospital.

4521. Assuming that this place was wanted for public offices, I ask you whether the barracks at Paddington would not be a suitable site for a hospital? Yes; under the circumstances assumed, it would probably be as suitable a site as any other within the area of the town. If I were building a new hospital, I would take it out of town as far as I could.

4522. You must have a hospital, for acute cases and accidents, as near as possible? Yes; and for that reason I like the site of the Infirmary for a hospital for the reception of acute and urgent cases only.

4523. Would you think the barracks too far away? It is not so near as this, but it is a good elevated situation.

4524. Do you think the superficial area allowed to each bed in these wards is sufficient? It is very much less than what is everywhere considered sufficient for a hospital in a town; but I do not think that there are more beds in the wards than the number recommended by the honorary medical staff.

4525. Mr. Gould.] From what you have seen here, is it your opinion that many persons are admitted into the Infirmary who should not be admitted? I think I said that there were a great many admitted who could not receive any real benefit from treatment here. The benefit that they do receive is to be attributed almost entirely to the shelter and regular means which the institution affords them.

4526. There are many of such cases which should not be admitted? As far as my wards are concerned, quite one-half who are admitted are of that class.

4527. The difficulty would be to know how to remedy that? Yes, to know how to dispose of these people, in the absence of another institution to which they would be willing to go.

4528. Mr. Metcalfe.] Do you not think that the plan of the Government giving orders for admission tends to diminish the subscriptions of the public? The practice of the Government is that if they get a recommendation from a person in such a position in life that he may be supposed to make inquiries into the condition of the applicant, it is a strong case, and they give an order, on receiving a document signed by such a person; but there is no doubt whatever that these documents are sent to the Government by people who never take any trouble to make inquiry.

4529. And thus they save themselves a subscription? Not for that reason probably, but they do it to save themselves trouble—the trouble of asking questions or finding out anything about the man. A man goes up, perhaps, with some gentleman and asks for an order, and they give him an order, and the Government accepts the document as a statement of the facts of the case.

4530. Mr. Gould.] Did you notice this letter that appeared in the Herald the other day respecting the mode of cooking in a London Hospital? [See Appendix F.] No, I have not seen it myself.

4531. Will you read it;—what do you think of the plan? I think it is an admirable arrangement.

4532. President.] Have you ever found great delay in sending up medicines to the patients? No, I have had no personal experience on the subject. I have on one or two occasions heard people complaining, but as far as I am concerned I do not remember having suffered any inconvenience.

4533. Has the out-door dispensary ever come under your observation? No, I have not had anything to do with it.

4534. Mr. Cowper.] There are about 200 patients in the hospital at Liverpool? Yes.

4535.

H. G. Alleyne, Esq.,
M.D.
27 May, 1873.

4535. Do you know what is the cost of the medical comforts required for them? The cost of the medical comforts for the establishment at Liverpool, for the year 1872, was £251. This sum includes the cost of extras of all kinds, whether for the use of the invalids not in the hospital or for the patients under treatment in the hospital.

4536. Would the cost here be much larger than for patients in the hospital there? Yes, it is necessarily larger. The staff of attendants is not only more numerous, but composed of a superior and much more expensive class of persons.

4537. But for medical comforts? Yes, it would be, for there are cases here which require a great many medical comforts—for instance, fever cases. We have not had many of them for some time past, but we have a great many sometimes. No doubt if it continues raining we shall have many in soon; and they require many medical comforts, in the way of eggs, milk, and wine, and so on.

4538. Then, as I understand you, the hospitals are so different, or the cases treated in them, that it would be impossible to compare the expenses? It would not be a fair comparison.

4539. Do you think the diet allowed up there to the patients in the hospital is better than the diet allowed to patients here? No, I do not think that it is better, but the various articles supplied for the patients at Liverpool are as good as those supplied for the use of patients here.

4540. President.] Do you know how the diets are made up here;—do you know that the bed-cards are constantly sent out of the wards? They were at one time made up from “Diet Lists” furnished by the sisters. That system has been changed, and the bed-cards are taken from the wards, and from those the diets are taken.

4541. Mr. Couper.] Do you think there are many cases here which would be equally well treated in Liverpool? There are a great many. That is what I meant by saying that a great many people were taken in here who should not be taken in, if you look upon this as a place for the treatment of people who are likely to recover at all. There are a great many people taken in here of whose recovery there is no possibility, and who can never be permanently relieved, or even perhaps get a temporary relief.

4542. Mr. Ellis.] Have you had any experience in homœopathy? No, not at all.

4543. Do you think it is desirable to have a homœopathic ward in this hospital? I do not think so; I do not see the object of it at all. There is at present no hindrance to a man giving the smallest possible quantity of medicine, or even none at all, if he likes. You need not give any physic. I took in the other day two men on whom I wanted to try the influence of the Eucalyptus. To one man I gave nothing whatever except the milk diet, and he got well much sooner than the other fellow, and went out. He got well instantly. It is not, as I think, at all necessary, in treating a man, always to give him drugs. Give him whatever seems most rational. If you think that milk and wine will do him good, why, a sensible man will take that mode of treatment.

4544. President.] If a number of people think that they can be cured on the homœopathic principle, do you see any objection to their being treated on that principle? I think it would be a bad plan to establish any hospital on any arbitrary principle.

4545. Are you not establishing an arbitrary principle when you exclude homœopathy? I think that the homœopathic principle is arbitrary. The homœopathists lay down a certain rule and act upon it.

4546. Mr. Metcalfe.] Do you see any harm in homœopathic doctors attending patients here? There could be no objection to it if my logic taught me that the principles were sound. I do not see that there is any objection to it. The fact is, I have treated a patient here without giving him any physic at all. I treat a good many without giving them physic.

4547. President.] If a patient comes in here and thinks he can be best treated by homœopathy—practically has he any chance of being so treated? I do not know; I should never treat him in such a way. I will not tie myself down to some rigid rule of treatment; and I never should consult my patient's opinion as to what was the best mode of treatment for him; otherwise I should say “What do you come here for?” It would be unscientific and unphilosophical to do that.

4548. Is it not unscientific and unphilosophical to prevent people being so treated? But we disagree. I say I would not treat a person on the principles on which he wanted to be treated. I should act on my own judgment.

4549. Should not a patient, if he wishes to be treated homœopathically, be so treated here? I do not know that he should be. I do not think you should make a hospital a place for treating people on certain fixed principles of that sort. The only principles on which they should be treated are rational principles.

4550. But suppose that a large number of the subscribers think, that this is a rational principle, and wish the patients to be treated upon it, do you think that they should be prevented from having them so treated? Certainly, if any large number of people were allowed to subscribe to any hospital with a view of having people treated in a certain way; but I do not think, when you speak of a place being established as a charitable institution, that subscriptions should be taken on such terms at all. In fact, we have objected to the action of the committee in that respect. People have subscribed certain sums of money on certain conditions. I have heard it said—“Oh, Mr. so-and-so has subscribed so much,” and that has been used as an argument for taking in certain patients. That is wrong. The subscriber subscribes his money to a public charity, and if he sends in patients in that way he gets more than his money's worth. He may subscribe £5, and send in a patient here who will cost the institution ten times as much as he subscribes. When people subscribe money to this institution they know what it is beforehand, and they should not say they want so-and-so done because they have subscribed. I would not take their subscriptions at all.

4551. Mr. Ellis.] It is said that some of the doctors are so liberal in their allowance of spirits to the patients that some of the patients go out from here irreclaimable drunkards? I never heard of such a case.

4552. Have not men acquired habits of drinking here, owing to the liberality of the doctors in allowing them spirits? No.

4553. You think they must become drunkards from some other cause than indulgence in medical comforts here? Yes, I think so.

4554. President.] Then your reason for objecting to allow people to be treated homœopathically is because you do not believe in homœopathy? I beg your pardon. I have no objection to people being treated by homœopathy if they like it, but I say that this is a public institution, supported by the Government in a large measure, and I think that it would be a bad principle to allow people to subscribe in order that by so doing they might have people treated homœopathically, or in any way whatever.

4555. The money that the Government contribute is drawn from the public, is it not? I believe it is.
4556. Are not many of the tax-payers people who believe in homœopathy? I do not know anything about that.
4557. Mr. Gould.] Is there not a great number of people who believe in it? I know four or five who do.
4558. President.] Do you not think that the number of believers in it is advancing, not only in the Colonies but in England? Before answering you I would ask you what you mean by it. I have never found two people of the same ideas as to homœopathy.
4559. Is it not a fact that here in this hospital the British Pharmacopœia is alone to be used? In making up the medicines?
4560. Yes? I believe it is, and for a very good reason, that where people prescribe, they know the strength of the medicine they are prescribing. There is this vast difference, that outside the hospital people write extempore prescriptions, and that the apothecaries keep drugs made up to a certain strength, according to the British Pharmacopœia, and when a doctor prescribes a drug he knows the strength of what he is prescribing.
4561. But are not medicines being constantly found out which are not in the British Pharmacopœia? Yes, but medicines are being constantly adopted into the Pharmacopœia; they are being adopted every day; but the object of a Pharmacopœia is that as nobody uses crude medicines—they are always prepared in some way or other, as for instance, tinctures, oils, and extracts—it is of great advantage to a doctor to know, when ordering a thing, how much of the essential principle is contained in the thing he orders. Of course all systems of medicine must have a Pharmacopœia, and the man who prescribes by a Pharmacopœia knows what he is ordering. That led to the adoption of the British Pharmacopœia. We had many Pharmacopœias some time ago; but that led to inconvenience, and it was decided that there should be one Pharmacopœia, merely in order that people should know what they were doing when they were prescribing medicines.

Frank Senior, Esq., called in and examined:—

4562. President.] You have for many years carried on business in Sydney as a chemist and druggist? Yes.
4563. Do you know anything of the dispensing in this institution? In regard to what?
4564. How it is carried on? The manner in which the dispensing is done?
4565. Yes? No, I don't know anything of the positive working of it—I have never even seen the place.
4566. Were you ever in any public institution of the sort as a dispenser? No. I did once assist for a short time in the Blenheim-street Dispensary in London, near Great Marlborough-street.
4567. Can you tell us how many prescriptions a competent person can dispense in a day, so as to do his work well? That is a difficult question to answer. Do you mean to ask me how many bottles of medicine could be dispensed here?
4568. No. The dispenser here tells us that he has but one assistant, that he and his assistant have, on an average, to make up some 200 prescriptions per day in the Infirmary alone; that either he or his assistant is taken away every day to attend a branch dispensary at Redfern, and that many of the prescriptions which he has to dispense include seventeen ingredients; he tells us moreover that the dispensary is inconvenient, and the result is that he is over-worked? I quite agree with him.
4569. You are not surprised to hear it? No, I am not.
4570. He tells us that, to do his work properly, he should have another assistant? It is quite likely, though I have no doubt the work could be very materially altered. I should like to know how the prescriptions are done here—whether they have here, as they have in London Hospitals, one formula by which medicines are dispensed. I may also remark to you, that dispensing here is different to dispensing like mine, where the medicines are all dispensed in a certain manner, where all the bottles are clean, and tied neatly over. You see there the prescriptions take double the time to make up that they do here.
4571. Have you been to the dispensary here? No, never. Unless the system is pursued of having formulas, as in the London hospitals, I should think you would want a dozen men here. All medical men coming to this Infirmary would be accustomed to prescribe largely of one or many things, and if a new man came who had his own formula it could still be done. I have heard of some very curious prescribing in this place. The medicines should be kept in quantities, so that there would be no trouble in dispensing. That is what they do in all the London hospitals.
4572. Mr. Metcalfe.] Do they keep the medicines in bulk? Yes; gallons of black draught, and so on.
4573. What was the system in London? Well, I was an assistant in an establishment at the West End, and when they were shorthanded at the Blenheim dispensary, Dr. Hastings would ask one of us to go up and assist for a couple of hours or so. So I used to go up in the morning, and that was the way the medicines were dispensed. There was a formula, and the principal medicines were kept in large quantities. The young man would have some gallons of black draught made up, and other preparations, according to the formulæ employed; and there was no trouble in dispensing it; so with the saline mixture, and so on. But where a mixture containing six or eight articles has to be made up for each patient in an institution like this, no man living could do the work. We know that there are exceptions of course, but the large bulk of the medicines can be done in that way. It is the system in all London hospitals, and I have a book which contains the whole of the London formulæ. That will give the whole thing.
4574. Is there any mode of taking stock in a business such as yours? I think not.
4575. Then is it your opinion that in a dispensary such as this we must rely upon the honesty of the gentlemen employed? Yes, to a large extent, I have no doubt. You must get men of proper reputation, and pay them properly.
4576. President.] What is the ordinary salary paid to a competent dispenser in a first class business such as yours? Well, I have done £5 a week, but I give the two first ones now £3 a week, £156 a year, and I keep them—keep them very well too; that is a £1 a week more—say altogether £4 a week.
4577. How many assistants have you in your shop? Four proper assistants, besides porters, &c.
4578. Mr. Ellis.] When you say that you keep them, do you mean that you lodge as well as board them? Yes, I do.
4579. Do you ever assist yourself in the dispensing? Yes, very vigorously.
4580. President.] How many prescriptions a day do you make up? I should say of original copies of prescriptions my business runs 10,000 a year. Last year there were perhaps about 8,000 of original copies,—and of course one prescription may be made up once or fifty times.

F. Senior, Esq.

27 May, 1873.

4581.

- F. Senior, Esq. 4581. Have you observed what the daily average number is? About thirty a day I think.
 27 May, 1873. 4582. That is about 200 a week? Yes, of original prescriptions, and these originals may continue to be made up for years.
 4583. Mr. Ellis.] How many prescriptions can a competent person make up in a day? It would depend on the kind of prescription. A young man would make up half-pint bottles of mixture very quickly, but then he has to carry on the retailing as well.
 4584. Take the average of such an institution as this, as you suppose it would be? You can't tell. One prescription may be a mixture and pill, or a powder and a pill, or an ointment, or a pill alone, and so on.
 4585. Mr. Metcalfe.] It depends on the way that they are made up? I think here they should do about ten times as many as I would do, if the system of having a hospital formula is pursued as it should be. If that were done, it would be impossible to say how many prescriptions could be dispensed. Mixtures you might do by hundreds per day.
 4586. Mr. Ellis.] Do you keep a prescription book? I do.
 4587. That is a book into which prescriptions are copied? Yes, one book for every year.
 4588. And would it not be possible from a book like that, if there were fully detailed heads, to form a reasonable estimate of the stock expended and on hand during the year? No, I doubt it.
 4589. Mr. Cowper.] Can you give us an instance, showing the impracticability of such a course? I can only see one way of checking the consumption, and that is by having some one or more chemists, or whatever you call them, on the Board, who would be proper men—that is, who would undertake to attend and do what is expected from them.
 4590. What could they do if the consumption was not checked by their subordinates? They could check it to a certain extent. It is a peculiar business to look after. You must have a proper man to look after it, and pay him properly; and have persons connected with the drug trade on the Board.
 4591. A man could tell what the consumption was in that way? Of course he could, approximately.
 4592. Without a check of any kind, it is possible, if a dispenser is dishonest, to make away with a large quantity of drugs of great value? Yes, it is possible; and it has happened that certain ounces of quinine have been offered for sale.
 4593. That is an expensive medicine? Yes, and so is morphia. A man would not take the trouble to purloin such a thing as tincture of cardamums, but a man may soon get rid of a few ounces of quinine or morphia. From my own knowledge of dispensing, I am sure that a large amount of labour could be saved by having a formula for the place. Large quantities of aperient mixture are used, and that could be made up daily or weekly; so with other mixtures which are also largely consumed, and which contain four or five articles.
 4594. Mr. Ellis.] Would you then purge and soothe every patient in exactly the same way? That is a different matter altogether; but that is the only way to obviate the pressure on the dispensing.
 4595. President.] Have you any other suggestion to make? No, I think not. Those are the three things which I recommend,—a formula, engage proper men, and have persons with a knowledge of the business on the Board.
 4596. I suppose the book you spoke of is not in the hands of medical men? No, it is rare.
 4597. Will you allow the Commission to see it? Yes. I have heard—and I have no doubt it is true—that medical men here can order a large quantity of chlorodyne, for which a much cheaper substitute could be found.
 4598. Do you think chlorodyne should not be used in the Infirmary? No, I think it need not. The composition of chlorodyne is well known, and you can give the same remedy in a cheaper form; but you cannot substitute anything for quinine and morphia.
 4599. You wish us to understand that too expensive medicines are used here sometimes? Yes, and I mean to say that, without any detriment to the patients, cheaper medicines can be given. You may order a man an expensive claret, and yet some good sound colonial wine at half the price would do just as well.

MONDAY, 2 JUNE, 1873.

Members Present:—

WILLIAM CHARLES WINDEYER, ESQ., PRESIDENT.

EYRE G. ELLIS, Esq.

SAMUEL GOOLD, Esq.

MICHAEL METCALFE, Esq.

CHARLES COWPER, JUN., Esq.

Miss Mary Barker, head nurse, Sydney Infirmary, called in and examined:—

- Miss M. Barker. 4600. President.] I believe you are one of the head nurses of the Sydney Infirmary? Yes.
 2 June, 1873. 4601. How long have you been so? Five and a half years to-day.
 4602. I believe you are one of the sisters who came out from England with Miss Osburn? Yes.
 4603. You were in an English hospital before you came here? Yes.
 4604. In what hospital? I was trained in St. Thomas's Hospital, in the Borough, in the year 1860. Then from St. Thomas's I was transferred to the Herbert Hospital, Woolwich, and after that to the Royal Victoria Hospital, Netley.
 4605. What position did you occupy? That of sister.
 4606. What position did you occupy in St. Thomas's Hospital? I was a probationer for twelve months, then for three months I was on trial as a sister, and at the end of three months I was sent away as sister.
 4607. You are the only one of the English sisters remaining in the Infirmary? Yes.
 4608. And you were trained under the system known as Miss Nightingale's system? Yes; I was one of her first probationers.
 4609. In England when people enter a hospital to be trained, some go in to be trained as sisters and some as nurses, do they not? Yes.
 4610. Then in England it does not follow that a nurse should become a sister in course of time? No; they begin on different ranks.
 4611. Those of more education and intelligence are chosen there first as sisters, and the nurses are of a different grade? Yes, and the lady superintendent is another grade. The ladies work as nurses while training, but it is known that they are to be lady superintendents. 4612.

Miss M.
Barker.

2 June, 1873.

4612. I suppose that a person may make a good nurse, though she may not have the necessary qualifications to make a good sister? Yes, and also a person may have the qualifications necessary to make a good sister, and not the necessary qualifications for a lady superintendent.
4613. You were here of course when the title of "sister" was changed to that of "head nurse"? Yes.
4614. Which would you prefer—to be called sister or head nurse? Sister. It gives you more authority in the hospital, because, as a rule, the patients do not distinguish the nurse from the sister. They call every one "nurse." I am always called "sister" in the hospital. A patient may say—"Well, never mind, it is only the nurse"; and another one may say "No, that's the sister"; and he would be very obedient after that. You have more authority. That is the only reason why I prefer the title "sister"—it gives you more authority over the patients.
4615. I suppose you cannot expect patients to call "head nurse" when they want to speak to her—they say simply "nurse": "head nurse" is an inconvenient title? Yes, "sister" is shorter. "Sister Mary" they always call me.
4616. In the English hospitals is the title "sister" always used? Yes, always; but, as a rule, the sisters are not called by their names. They are called by the name of the ward they are in charge of. In St. Thomas's every ward has its name. The sister in Queen's ward was known as "Sister Queen"; the sister in the Accident ward as "Sister Accident"; in King Edward's ward, "Sister Edward"; in King William's ward, "Sister William"; and so on. That is the only difference.
4617. Would you not prefer to be called by an abstract name of that kind, than be addressed by your own surname? I am not addressed by my surname.
4618. Would you like to be called simply "sister"? Yes.
4619. Do you think that persons going into the hospital to be trained as sisters would generally prefer the name "sister" than the name "head nurse," which makes no distinction between them and the under nurses? I think so; those who are in training as sisters.
4620. Do the lady superintendent and the sisters and the nurses at the present time get on harmoniously together? Oh yes. We should not be able to get on at all unless the lady superintendent was with us.
4621. How do you mean? Unless the lady superintendent worked harmoniously with us we should not get on at all, because there is such bad order in the place—it is so badly managed.
4622. You mean that if the staff were not harmonious, you could not get on in consequence of the bad management? Yes.
4623. If it has been represented to us that there is considerable dissension existing among the nursing staff, and that you are not pulling together, and that there is a good deal of ill feeling and jealousy,—are you aware of such being the case? Oh no.
4624. Have you ever observed that Miss Osburn is unjust or arbitrary in her conduct to the nurses under her? Oh no.
4625. If it has been represented to us that she takes no interest in the institution, and does not apply herself to looking after it, is that correct? No, certainly not.
4626. Have you observed anything which would justify the accusation against her that she has systematically got rid of good nurses, and dismissed them without reason? No, I have not. Some nurses have left who preferred private nursing, but not because they were systematically dissatisfied with the lady superintendent.
4627. Nor because they were unjustly got rid of? Certainly not. They left of their own accord. Some younger nurses were discharged because they were incompetent and not fit for nurses, but not any of the older nurses who have been any length of time; and the younger nurses were not got rid of without their knowing the cause of their dismissal.
4628. One object of having probationers is to find out whether they are fit for nurses, is it not? Yes. They come for a month on trial, and perhaps during that month they may do very well; but as soon as the month is over, and they think that they are engaged to go on, they sometimes turn out much otherwise, and then they have to be told the reason why they must leave.
4629. Are there nurses now in the Infirmary who were trained by you and the other sisters who came from England? Yes.
4630. Are you satisfied on the whole with the staff of nurses that you have? Yes, I am quite satisfied.
4631. Do you think that the nurses as a whole, or any considerable number of them, are too young for their position? I do not think so.
4632. How do they compare in respect of age with the nurses in English hospitals? They are about the same, I think. We have one or two who look rather young. They are short and stout, but the youngest is nineteen. They are not, as a rule, taken in England so young as that; but if they are well recommended, and are strong and healthy, they are taken as young even into the Military Hospital, where they are very strict. They are taken in under those circumstances even into the Military Hospital, as young as that; but it is not the rule.
4633. They are more apt to pick up the training quickly when they are young? Yes; and they fall into the system of training more readily than older persons do. They are more particular in the Military Hospital than in the others, and don't take them in there as a rule under forty. I was myself objected to on the ground that I looked too young. They are under greater surveillance there. Every lady superintendent is obliged to have a rule for emergencies—well, say that her staff becomes sick or disabled, and she has to engage fresh ones, she takes on the most eligible ones that offer, and young persons will be taken on if they are strong and healthy, and more apt than older persons. Young persons do seem more apt than older persons. I have one of the young persons in training in my ward now, and I would rather have her than an older person. The older persons do not adapt themselves to the work so nicely.
4634. You live in the Nightingale wing? Yes.
4635. What salary do you get? £80 a year now; I had a rise of salary last December.
4636. What was your salary before? £70.
4637. If it has been said that Miss Osburn is constantly away from the Infirmary for days and weeks together, without any one knowing where she is, is that correct? Oh no. I never knew her to be away for weeks but once—that was three years ago last February, I think.
4638. What was the cause of her absence? She was away on sick leave: she was up the country, but it was known that she was away. I was in temporary charge whilst she was away. It was three years ago last February, and it was well known by every one that she was away all that time.

- Miss M. Barker. 4639. Do members of the committee of the institution sometimes go round the Infirmary? Yes, very often now; much oftener than they used to.
- 2 June, 1873. 4640. In the hospitals in England that you were acquainted with was there anything of that kind? No, I never saw them do it in England. In a hospital there every official knows his position, and is bound to see that things are properly done. The St. Thomas's committee used to come round on the anniversary—that is all; and perhaps the honorary treasurer might pay the lady superintendent a visit when any emergency occurred.
4641. Do these gentlemen speak to you? At Home?—oh no.
4642. But do they here? Yes, they do.
4643. Before the patients? Yes. The two house visitors last week really behaved very roughly in the wards.
4644. What do you mean? They spoke very roughly to me. I was never so spoken to before; and they spoke to the lady superintendent also, who was present. It was Mr. Wise and Mr. Pearce who came round.
4645. What was the matter of their complaint then? They pulled out the bedsteads, and spoke about them. There has been a great deal of vermin in my ward. I have complained often, and very bitterly about it, to the lady superintendent, because we cannot keep the beds clean. They are thoroughly gone through every month; they are taken out into the verandahs and thoroughly overhauled once a month, and yet we cannot keep the vermin down. Yet the gentlemen pulled out the beds—it was our week for cleaning them, those that they took—they pulled them out, and they found some vermin. Of course sometimes, even the next day after the bedsteads are cleaned, the vermin will be there again.
4646. Are the vermin in the walls and under the window-sills? Yes.
4647. Is it possible by ordinary cleaning to keep them down in this old building? No, not without constant whitewashing. You see the place was quite overrun with them—the old building—and it was two years and a half without any whitewashing at all being done. The old building was cleaned near the end of the year 1869.
4648. Did you find vermin there when you first came? Yes, they were much worse then than of late.
4649. Then it is not true to represent that these vermin have come there since you nurses have been there? Oh dear, no; the place was alive with them. I have one patient who has been about the hospital for thirty-five years, and it has been in the same condition all that time; and a lady visitor told me the other day, seeing that I looked put about—and I told her the reason of it, and how I kept cleaning the beds: She said, “Oh I am very sorry, but it has been the same here ever since I was a little girl.” She said, “My mamma brought me here when I was a little girl, and it was the same, and that was forty-three years ago.”
4650. Do you not think that, being spoken to before the patients in the way you have described, is calculated to impair your authority in the wards? Yes, very much so; but I was more sorry that they spoke so roughly to the lady superintendent than to myself.
4651. Was this done before the patients? Yes. It was last week; and I think that I was reported to the committee for great neglect of duty by the same gentlemen, but I explained to them in the same way as I have to you, that the beds were thoroughly gone through once a month. Every bed that a patient leaves, no matter if it is only the next day after that, is taken out and cleaned.
4652. Is that the rule throughout the hospital? Yes, throughout the hospital.
4653. Are you aware that the rule of the lady superintendent having a bed cleaned as soon as the patient leaves it, is not carried out, owing to the doctors putting a patient into that bed as soon as it is empty? Yes. There was a man died at midnight once, and before the body was taken out, a man came in—an accident—to go into the bed, and he sat in a chair while the body was taken to the mortuary. That occurred in my own ward, and the man got erysipelas, and there was a great complaint about it, but it could not be helped.
4654. Mr. Metcalfe.] Have you not spare beds? Sometimes we have as many as ten beds on the floor.
4655. But could you not have put the patient into a spare bed, while the other was being prepared for him? Yes, if there had been one.
4656. President.] You were complaining of the vermin being in the place long ago? Yes, ever since I have been here. The south wing, where the women and children are, was thoroughly cleaned and altered some time ago.
4657. How long ago? Just after we came.
4658. How was it cleaned? The walls were chipped off half way up, and replastered.
4659. Men were employed to do it? Yes, proper workmen. The lady superintendent brought in two lots of workmen to try and get it done as cheap as she could, and they said that they could not do it, because many parts of the walls wanted plastering, and they could not do it. They would whitewash it; but they said they were not plasterers, and could not do the plastering. Then the lady superintendent had to employ a Mr. Chapman, I think it was, to do it thoroughly.
4660. Mr. Metcalfe.] How long ago was that? It was in last March.
4661. President.] Has the attention of the lady superintendent been applied to this matter ever since she came here? Yes.
4662. You know that she has endeavoured to keep down this nuisance? Yes, it has been going on for the last two years and a half. We have constantly called attention to the vermin in the main building in the front—not in the south wing. The upper floor of the main building is much worse than the lower floor.
4663. Has the lady superintendent given directions for the cleaning of the beds? Yes, and she has always insisted on its being done. She has said—“It must be done.” We would show them to her, and she would say—“You must go on and clean them.” I have said—“Really it is no good our doing it”; and she would say—“You must.” And we have done our best to keep them down. I have assisted the nurses myself every month to clean the beds. It was in last March that the lady superintendent brought the men there to show them what she wished done, and they would not do it. They said that they were not plasterers.
- 4665.

4665. Was anything done? No; I went frequently to the manager and said, "Would you allow Harris or one of the men to do it?"; and he said he would, but they never came to do it.

Miss M.
Barker.

4666. Did you ever make representations to the manager about the bugs? No—not to the manager; he did not interest himself about it at all; but I complained often to the lady superintendent, who is the head of our department.

2 June, 1873.

4667. Do you know whether the committee were aware of there being vermin in the wards? Yes; because the lady often spoke about it.

4668. Have you ever heard her speak of it to members of the committee? No; they did not often come; they did not come except when the lady superintendent brought them in to call their attention to it.

4669. Then you have heard her tell them of it? Yes.

4670. Of course you are acquainted with the system of making up the diets? Yes.

4671. Have you ever observed irregularities in the sending up of the diets since the present system has been in force? Yes.

4672. What kind of irregularities? Sometimes they send up too much, and sometimes too little. Very often there are extras missing for a day or two; although every card goes down to the house steward.

4673. Have you ever known diets to be sent up for patients who are dead, or for patients who have been discharged? Yes; for patients who have been discharged, I have known it. I have not had many deaths in my ward; but for discharged patients I have known the diets to be sent up.

4674. For how long after the patient has been discharged have the diets been sent up? For days.

4675. You are quite sure of that? Yes.

4676. If it has been represented that such a thing could only occur for one day,—that is not correct? No.

4677. You are quite certain that it has occurred for days? Yes; sometimes you would send down three or four extra loaves which had been sent up for patients discharged, and they would come up again the next day just the same. At other times we would be, perhaps, one or two or three diets short; there are very often two short.

4678. You are aware of the method in which the diet lists were made up by the nurses at one time? Yes.

4679. Was that a better system than the present one? Yes; it worked very much better, because we then were responsible for what we wrote for. When a physician wanted to change a diet, he would take off arrowroot perhaps, and give the patient sago instead, and then we would not write for the arrowroot, but for the sago. If these things were taken off we would not write for them, and they could not be sent up.

4680. Did you find out why it was discontinued? No.

4681. Have you observed delays in sending medicine up from the dispensary? Yes; it has been very tiresome for us; it has been owing, they say, to the little boys.

4682. What is the longest delay that has ever taken place? Twenty-four hours; it has been very often that; and very often, twelve hours. That has very often happened. Perhaps the boys have mislaid the bottles, or something of that kind.

4683. Within what time were medicines sent up to the wards in the hospitals you were in, in England? They were sent up at once from the dispensary.

4684. When you say at once, what do you mean—Of course if there are a large number of prescriptions to be made up when the doctors come in the morning, they cannot all be sent up at once? The physicians only make their regular visits twice a week, and the surgeons twice a week, and every doctor has his own morning, and directly he has gone, down goes the basket to the dispensary, with all the orders, and the messenger waits there until the basket is ready to go up again. It is not the same system here at all; unless the physician wishes to alter anything, there is no alteration there at all.

4685. Do you find that the quiet of the Sunday is much disturbed by doctors coming in and performing operations? Yes, very often.

4686. Does it appear to you that these operations have been performed unnecessarily on a Sunday? Yes; it is a quiet day, that is why they like it, there is no one about much.

4687. You are aware of the mode in which patients are admitted week and week about by the doctors? Yes.

4688. Has it come to your notice that surgeons sometimes have kept patients in the hospital after they were fit to be discharged, in order that they may retain the bed until their week comes round for admitting patients, so that they may retain the beds for themselves? Yes, that is often done.

4689. They keep patients in after they are ready to go out? Yes, they say "that man is ready to go out when my week comes round." In my own ward, a little while back, a man was detained a month who might have been discharged.

4690. Kept until the doctor's turn for admitting patients came round? Yes.

4691. He was kept in a whole month? Yes. Whoever reads this evidence will know who the doctor is.

4692. Have you any objection to tell us his name? If I must, I will,—it was Mr. Fortescue.

4693. Who are the doctors who perform operations there on a Sunday? Dr. Fortescue; and Dr. McKay also has done it. I ought to state to you perhaps in reference to this instance of a patient being detained for a month, that the house surgeon was distinctly told that the man was ready to go out; a bed was required, and the house surgeon discharged the man. The patient took up his crutches, and went downstairs to the manager, and he returned to me with a message that I was to call the doctor's attention to him when he came. When the doctor came, I said to the patient—"Here is the doctor; if you have anything to say, speak for yourself." So he said he had been to the manager, and complained that he was discharged without his own surgeon's knowledge." The doctor saw the house surgeon and said "It was a mistake; I did not intend you to discharge that man." The house surgeon said—"You told me to do it"; and the honorary said—"It is no good having a bother"; and that patient remained in for a month after.

4694. Are you aware of patients being allowed to violate the rules of the institution, and the honorary medical men, when the cases are reported to them, overlooking the act of insubordination? Yes, very often. We used to have a rule that any one discharged for smoking, swearing, or any insubordination, could not be re-admitted, but that has not been carried out for the last two years and a half.

4695. Have you noticed that patients discharged for insubordination have been re-admitted by the honorary medical men? Yes; and women as well as men have been taken in, in defiance of the committee.

4696. Have you found this done by some doctors more than by others? Yes.

4697. Are there more than one of the doctors doing this? Yes, many of them. The name of the patient I spoke of just now as having been detained here a month was Graham.

Miss M.
Barker.

2 June, 1873.

4698. And who was the doctor who kept him in? Dr. Fortescue. That was the case I spoke of just now.
4699. With reference to this charge against Miss Osburn, that she takes no interest in the place and neglects her duties, how often do you see her in the wards? Very frequently; never less than three or four times during the day. The lady superintendent at Home does not visit them so often.
4700. How often does the lady superintendent go round the wards at Home? Once, as a general rule.
4701. At what time of the day? About 10 o'clock in the morning.
4702. What are Miss Osburn's hours for going round the wards? From 6 o'clock in the morning to a quarter past 6.
4703. That is the first time she goes round? Very often she is there before any one; she is often there before I am myself; she turns out sharp at 6, and when she comes round and finds that we are not there she is not well pleased, and we feel much ashamed—we do not like it at all.
4704. You do not like her catching you behind time in the morning? No. Her next visit would be with the letters, between 10 and 11; she goes round and gives the nurses their letters.
4705. And she goes through the wards then? Yes, she sees everything—goes through the lavatories and every place, and then, when the sisters go to dinner, she goes through again, perhaps a quarter or half past 2 o'clock. Then she is always there to see what is going on, because often they play tricks,—smoking, and so on,—when only the nurses are there; and then always after roll-call at night, from 9 to half-past, she goes through the wards again. As a rule, that is her last visit, unless she is called on for something more; and when there is no sister on duty the nurses call on her directly. They always have access to the Nightingale wing.
4706. Does she go then? Yes, when called upon, she goes directly, and gives them any means of assistance that is most proper.
4707. Mr. Metcalfe.] Does Miss Osburn perform the same duties that are performed by a lady superintendent in England? Her duties are more arduous than they would be in England. There every sister has sole charge of a ward, and is responsible to the lady superintendent.
4708. Is she supposed to instruct nurses in their duties? No, it is the sisters' duty to do that.
4709. What is the difference between the sisters and the nurses? The sister has to see that the order of the place is carried on, and has to instruct the nurses in things which they are not able to do.
4710. Then you do more work than the nurses? Yes; I am obliged to instruct them with the worst cases.
4711. Do you instruct the nurses under you? Yes.
4712. How many? Two nurses and one sister.
4713. How long are they with you? That depends on the progress they make; they are sometimes three months, and sometimes six months in one section.
4714. When they leave you they go to other wards as competent? Yes, competent in some things—not in all. I have now the operation ward, and I have three nurses who are not much up to operations; still they are good nurses for the medical wards, and in a general way for the surgical wards, but not for operations; but they are all instructed in their turn.
4715. By you? Yes; but not by me alone, but by whichever sister has charge of the wards where they are sent.
4716. If it has been stated that you do not instruct nurses, that is not true? No.
4717. If it has been ascribed to you that you are too knowing to impart your knowledge to other people, is that a fair representation of your conduct? Oh no.
4718. Have you any feeling of that kind,—that you do not like to instruct people? Oh no; I would impart every bit of knowledge I know in every way. I should think it a disgrace to Miss Nightingale not to do so; and I have served her for thirteen years on the 24th of this month.
4719. Mr. Metcalfe.] You said that something was badly managed—what did you mean? I meant the institution generally.
4720. What did you mean? Well, the surgeons take the part of the rebellious patients who cannot be discharged; and also there is no man to help us in any way, or do things that should be done by men.
4721. In what respect? In the matter of water, and the cleanliness of the hospital. That is badly managed, because at Home every hospital is thoroughly cleaned every year; every ward is left vacant for fourteen days, when every patient is sent away that can go out, and the other patients who cannot go are removed into other wards. But here the patients have to remain on the verandahs or in the hall while their wards are being cleaned, and the surgeons and physicians complain bitterly that their patients are uncomfortable, and yet the beds are filled up just the same as if the wards were clean and comfortable, while the very workmen are there. And we have to do the nursing of the patients. I speak feelingly when I say that this is bad management.
4722. President.] If the walls were whitewashed four times a year, would that keep the bugs down? Of course it would be much better if it was only done once a year.
4723. Do you know the grounds on which the committee have declined to have that done? No.
4724. Mr. Cowper.] Would not dressing the beds weekly with kerosene keep down the bugs to a great extent? We are doing that now, perhaps even more frequently than that. Mr. Senior, who was here the other day, told me that soda was a good thing to use, and we are now trying that.
4725. Mr. Metcalfe.] Do you ever burn sulphur? No.
4726. Mr. Ellis.] Has Mr. Wise been long a visitor? No, not very long.
4727. Does he go round very frequently? Once during his week these two visitors came—Mr. Wise and Mr. Pearce—they were together in my wards. I do not know about the others. They spoke very roughly to me, and told me to clean the beds myself, and to get it done at once, that it would not take me ten minutes. I said—"I will see to it, sir." He said—"How long since they have been cleaned?" and I said that they were thoroughly overhauled once a month, and I would see to it; and he said—"Get it done at once." It was just dinner-time, and I had the carving to do, and I told the lady superintendent it was very hard to be talked to in such a way, because I have never yet had to be asked to do a thing. I washed the walls once myself with a broom and cold water, and even that made the place a little more comfortable.
4728. Mr. Metcalfe.] Do you think that the nursing here compares favourably with the nursing in England? Yes.
4729. President.] And you see no reason, after the experience you have had, for saying that the nursing is disgraceful and totally inefficient? No; and as one of Miss Nightingale's oldest nurses, I would be sorry to tell you a thing that would degrade her system of nursing.

4730. Mr. Gould.] How long is it since the walls were white-washed? It was done when we first came here, and not again until last March. I would not be sure whether it was done the first year; I think it was done the second year we were here.

Miss M.
Barker.

4731. And was nothing done during that period to keep down the vermin? No. That was the way they got such a head upon us.

2 June, 1873.

4732. President.] You mean in the walls? Yes.

4733. Of course you clean the beds? Yes, just the same.

4734. And the floors? Yes.

4735. Mr. Gould.] Then it would be four years since the walls were white-washed? It was done the second year we were there.

4736. And then nothing was done until recently? No.

4737. Do you know of two patients being kept in a ward a month after they were fit to be discharged? No, I only know of one case.

4738. We have been told of a case in which the doctor said, "We must keep these patients until my week comes round again," and those patients were kept in a month—are you aware of that circumstance? No.

4739. With regard to the name "sister" given to the nurses—is the term "sister" recognized now by the committee; was not an alteration made some time ago? Yes, but I have always been called "Sister" Mary.

4740. I find here in a note in Miss Nightingale's instructions that there is a society called the "Society of St. John's House, which is a Protestant religious house; a sisterhood having for its main object the care and nursing of the sick"—Can you give us any information with regard to it? No.

4741. In using the term "sister," is there any religious idea connected with it? No, not at all.

4742. Do you not think there is a more appropriate name than "sister"—for instance, a name that would indicate more the duties you would have to perform? No.

4743. Do you not think "matron" or "head nurse" would indicate more? No, they put the probationer and the nurse and the head nurse all on a level. The name "sister" gives you more authority.

4744. I see that the terms "matron" and "head nurse" are used more frequently than "sister" in Miss Nightingale's instructions? But she does not send them out as head nurses or matrons; she sends them out as sisters and lady superintendents.

4745. She speaks here of a "trained matron" to superintend "trained nurses"—What does she imply by that; is the matron distinct from what you understand as "sister"? Yes, the word matron would be the same as lady superintendent, but she would have a smaller place.

4746. I find that the term "sister" is not used here, but "matron" and "head nurse"? She sends out lady superintendents, sisters, and nurses. Of course there are plenty of provincial hospitals where they do have matrons and head nurses.

4747. I was anxious to know whether a head nurse would perform the same duties as a sister? No.

4748. Are those not different terms applying to the same persons? There is one instance I know of with reference to the position of a matron. We went up to Parramatta some time ago and asked to be allowed to see the hospital there. I asked to see the lady superintendent, and some person came and said there was a matron. I asked to see the matron, and she said, "I am the matron." I said, "Is it possible that you are the matron of the hospital?" and she said, "Yes." I said, "Who does the nursing?" She said, "I do it myself." I said, "Who does the laundry work?" She said, "I do it myself." I said, "Who cleans your place?" She said, "My husband and myself, we do that." So she was performing the duty of matron, nurse, laundress, scrubber, and all.

4749. But I scarcely think the term used here would apply to such an individual? No, certainly not.

4750. Mr. Cowper.] I think the term is used in those instructions in reference to hospitals where they have not adopted her system, where they may have matrons and head nurses? Yes, that is so. The person who is lady superintendent of Miss Nightingale's training school was matron of the hospital for many years before the Nightingale system came up. Then Miss Nightingale sent probationers to be trained, and then she had two officers in one person, the lady superintendent of the training school and the matron of the hospital. So that that lady is often called by both names—she is called matron sometimes, and sometimes lady superintendent.

4751. President.] Does it appear to you that Miss Nightingale's system of training is carried out here by Miss Osburn? Yes, as far as it can be in the training of the nurses. The lady superintendent used to assist herself in training the nurses. She used to give them lectures, but that was interfered with.

4752. By whom? I would not be quite certain. I know that the lectures were complained of—it was said that the nurses were away from the wards when they were required there; but I am not fully prepared to say whom the complaint was made by.

4753. But it appears to you that the lady superintendent has been prevented from training nurses in the way in which it should be done? Yes, and she would like to begin again, I have no doubt. She used to give them lectures.

4754. Have you seen instances of the authority of the lady superintendent clashing with that of the manager? It has not come directly under my notice. I have gone to him to get assistance from the men and not got it, and I have told the lady superintendent of it.

4755. What sort of assistance? To get the cobwebs swept down, and also to have water pumped when we have been short of water.

4756. Mr. Cowper.] Are you satisfied with the cooking? Yes; generally speaking, but there have been complaints of the cooking. However, the cook is a very civil man, and his stove is not large enough. His stove will cook comfortably for fifty people, but he has 250 to cook for.

4757. Do you get things hot? Yes; sometimes the meat has been underdone, but we have things hot.

4758. And are delicacies, and things required particularly for very sick people, sent up nicely? There were one or two complaints about the arrowroot and things of that sort.

4759. Mr. Metcalfe.] Of the way they were sent up—the dirty-looking tins? Yes.

4760. Mr. Cowper.] Do you find that the honorary physicians attend regularly? Yes.

4761. Do you mean that they attend at stated hours? They should attend between 9 o'clock and 1.

4762. President.] Are the surgeons as attentive as the physicians? Not all of them.

4763. What is the longest time any of them has stayed away? Two or three days sometimes. That does not happen with every one.

- Miss M. Barker. 4764. Mr. Cowper.] Do you find that they are as punctual in their attendance as gentlemen occupying similar positions in the London hospitals? Oh, no.
- 2 June, 1873. 4765. Mr. Metcalfe.] Is there not usually a surgeon of great experience resident in the hospitals at Home? Yes. In the hospital that we come from the resident medical officer was born. He resides there, and has brought up a large family there.
4766. Mr. Goold.] I find in these instructions of Miss Nightingale's a reference made to the matron of St. Thomas's Hospital? That is what I told you. She was matron, and in 1860 was made lady superintendent of the Nightingale Training School.
4767. The 3rd paragraph of the summary of these instructions says,—“That the nurses shall be responsible to the ‘matron’ for the discharge of their duties”? Yes.
4768. When was the name changed? When the matron was made lady superintendent of the Nightingale Training School.
4769. What difference does there exist between the duties of matron and head nurse? The matron does not train the nurses at all, but when the new system began she had to see that all the regulations were carried out under the new training system. She has now to see all Miss Nightingale's regulations carried out.
4770. Are the matrons supposed to be under the lady superintendent? No, she is one and both; both names are given to her, and they are quite correct.
4771. Then it is a change of name—instead of matron she is now called lady superintendent? Frequently many persons who knew her as matron call her so, and she is called lady superintendent by others. In the Crimean War Miss Nightingale had thirty sisters with her. In her “War Experiences,” she names them often.
4772. But until she used the term it was not used in hospitals? The title of sister was. In St. Thomas's Hospital there is a set of old rules printed in old English, for the guidance of the ward sister and nurses, and that copy of rules was printed at least two hundred years ago.
4773. Did not the term come in with Miss Nightingale? No; but I was not acquainted with it before then.
4774. President.] You know that has been used in hospitals long before Miss Nightingale's system came into use? Oh, yes; but I may say truly I knew nothing of hospitals or their officials until I went to be trained myself. The copy of old rules I saw while there.
4775. It is not a new thing got up by the Ritualists, for the purpose of making people Romanists, is it? Oh dear, no.
4776. And you do not think there is any more danger of people becoming nuns, because they call each other “sister,” than there is of Freemasons, &c., becoming monks, because they call each other “brother,” do you? Oh, no.
4777. Mr. Goold.] Do you know this St. John's House that is spoken of here? No. I have heard of it. I have been there to see a lady. It is in the Strand, London. I know the Lady Superintendent there, she frequently goes to St. Thomas's; but I do not know their system of working.
4778. President.] Is there anything that you wish to add yourself—does anything strike you with reference to the improvement of the place? I would like to see the lady superintendent treated a little better sometimes. I hope I shall not see the house visitors speak to her in the manner they did before me. They spoke very roughly to her before me.
4779. Mr. Goold.] You say the vermin are still about the place? Yes.
4780. In the walls? Yes, and in the window-sills.
4781. How long since you have seen them in the beds? Last Friday. I scoured all the beds—I had them scoured—and the next day there was a large bug on a man's hand-towel, which was hanging up at the head of his bed; and it took me two days to clean the beds.
4782. Then the late cleaning has not been effectual in destroying the bugs? No, it would not be, after so long a time; it would take more than one cleaning to get rid of them.

Mrs. Mary Bland, Head Nurse, Sydney Infirmary, called in and further examined:—

- Mrs. M. Bland. 4783. President.] Your are one of the head nurses or sisters of the Sydney Infirmary? Yes.
- 2 June, 1873. 4784. How long have you been so? About four years.
4785. You were trained in the institution? Yes.
4786. Were you there when the change took place in the title from “sister” to “head nurse”? Yes.
4787. Which title would you prefer? Well, I really do not care personally which it is; but I think that the title “sister” gives one more authority.
4788. You think then that on public grounds the title “sister” should be preferred to that of “head nurse”? Yes, I think so.
4789. As far as you have seen, do the nursing staff, the lady superintendent, and the head nurses work harmoniously together? Yes, I think really, they do; for such a number of women, they get on very well together.
4790. As far as you have observed, is Miss Osburn just and fair in her treatment of those under her? I think so. I think that she always endeavours to be so.
4791. If it has been represented to us that Miss Osburn is for days without going into the wards, that she neglects her duties, that she takes no interest in her work, and does not apply herself to it, is that a well-founded criticism upon her conduct? No, I do not think so.
4792. Mr. Ellis.] Has she been absent for days and weeks together? I think since I have been there she has been away on two occasions. I cannot exactly remember for how long, but I know she was away on those occasions for a short time, and I suppose with the sanction of the committee.
4793. How long ago is it since she was away? I cannot recollect, but it is some time ago.
4794. With the exception of these two occasions, she has been regular in her attendance on the wards? Yes.

4796. Is she in the habit of conversing with the patients and taking notice of them? Yes.
4797. Do you think it would be possible for a person to be there for three weeks, and for Miss Osburn to go in and out without speaking to her? She may not speak to every patient. Any particularly bad case she takes notice of.
4798. Do you know of the case of a Mrs. Ross? No. I have heard that there was a patient called Ross, who was said by some one to have stated that she had never seen Miss Osburn.
4799. Miss Osburn saw her but did not speak to her; do you think it is likely that Miss Osburn would pass a patient under the peculiar circumstances that patient was in, with no doctor coming to attend her, for three weeks, without speaking to her? She might do so.
4800. Mrs. Ross's complaint is that she was there for three weeks and no doctor attended her: is it likely that under those circumstances Miss Osburn would pass by a case of that kind so long without speaking? That I am sure I cannot say; but I do not think it is very likely.
4801. Were you in the wards on one occasion when Mr. Paxton and Mr. Pearce went round to make some investigation with regard to the vermin? Yes, I think so.
4802. Did you accompany them in the absence of Miss Osburn? I do not think so. They were round before I came from my breakfast. Miss Osburn herself came in before they had gone through one ward.
4803. Have you complained to the committee that the surgeons come there on Sunday to perform operations? I do not complain to the committee, but they do come there on Sunday very often.
4804. Does it appear to you that unnecessary work is done there on Sundays? Yes, certainly. They sometimes do operations on Sunday. Very possibly they do it because they have more time on that day; they have, I suppose, more leisure on Sunday.
4805. Should that be allowed? I do not know. It would be just as well done on some other day if it would not hurt the patient.
4806. President.] Do you know of any cases of patients being kept in by the medical men when quite fit to be discharged until those medical gentlemen's week for admitting patients came round? Yes, I think we have had that done very often. I cannot name any particular instances, but I am sure that they do it very often. They are very jealous of getting as many beds as they can; some of them—not all.
4807. Have you noticed irregularities in the sending up of the diets? Not so much in my wards, where there are not so many extra diets. It is in the sending up of extras that irregularities chiefly occur; and Dr. Alleyne, who has one of my medical wards, is not so fidgety with his patients as some of the doctors are; he does not order so many extra diets.
4808. And it is in the extra diets that the mistakes occur? Yes, I think so. There are mistakes occasionally in the other diets, but they are not so marked.
4809. You have noticed that there have been vermin in the wards? Yes.
4810. Was it so when you first came? Yes; it could not be otherwise with the walls in the unwashed state that they were in. It was something frightful before they were cleaned lately. I can take a splint off a patient now, and not find any vermin at all; but before, I have often taken it off after a week and found it full. Of course it was hurtful to the patient to take it off; but still it had to be taken off, as it was full of vermin. The walls were in a frightful state.
4811. Have you and the nurses tried to keep the vermin down? Yes; I have often made up my mind never to clean bedsteads again while the walls were in such a state.
4812. Are the beds cleaned? Yes.
4813. At what times? We have no stated times for cleaning them; we clean them when we find bugs in them. They are worse in that part of the building than anywhere else. I have had twenty bedsteads taken out of No. 12 ward, and in a week they have been as bad again. If there was a bed wanted for the operation room, it had to be cleaned before it could be taken there.
4814. Were the vermin in such numbers that the ordinary amount of cleaning, such as would be carried on in a gentleman's family, could not keep them down? No, we could not keep them down; it was of no use trying to do it.
4815. Could the nurses under you have prevented such a state of things if they had used diligence? No; it was what no one could prevent.
4816. Mr. Metcalfe.] Are the floors kept as clean as can be expected? Yes, I think so.
4817. President.] Do you know whether the efforts of the lady superintendent have been directed to keeping down the vermin since you have been there? Yes, I think so, because I have been making constant complaints to her and to members of the committee when they came round. I was always drawing attention to places in the walls that were filled with vermin.
4818. What did they say? I do not know. They were always going to do something great, and would let them wait until then. It is some time ago since I was in those wards—two years ago.
4819. Two years ago you represented the matter to the committee? Yes; I never let an opportunity slip by of representing the matter. Luckily the bugs did not seem to bite the patients, for they did not complain of them.
4820. Is it fair to represent that this vermin has increased from neglect on the part of the nurses of the place? No, certainly not.
4821. Mr. Gould.] Whose fault was it that the bugs increased so much—on whom does the blame rest? The general mismanagement, I should think.
4822. On whom? The committee, I think, or whoever's business it is. But it does not seem there to be anybody's business to look after things. It seems to be everybody's business and nobody's business. People's positions and duties do not seem to be defined.
4823. President.] Have you observed any clashing of authority between the manager and the lady superintendent? Yes, one can hardly help noticing that.
4824. In what way? I cannot give instances. The manager is always glad to take things up—anything that the lady superintendent can suggest for the nurses or herself. You cannot help noticing that.
4825. Is he an intelligent man? I have not sufficient to do with him to be able to say that.
4826. Members of the committee sometimes go round the Infirmary, do they not? Yes, I think so. I do not know if the weekly visitors are members of the committee. There are always two appointed every week, but I think that they do not always come.
4827. Do they interfere much with the management of the wards? I think not. They speak to the patients and to the nurses. I do not take any notice of them unless they speak to me, but I let them speak to the patients.

Mrs. M.
Bland.

2 June, 1873

Mrs. M.
Bland.
2 June, 1873.

4828. Mr. Cowper.] Do they never find fault with you? No, not directly.
4829. Mr. Ellis.] It has been stated to us that the nurses indulge in dancing: have you ever seen them do that? Not in the wards, I suppose?
4830. No, in the passages between the wards? I have never seen it.
4831. We have also been informed that they indulge in the wicked practice of flirting with one another: did you ever notice that? I cannot say that I have.
4832. It has been complained to us that patients are also allowed to read "light books"—novels and books other than pious ones? It would be rather hard to condemn them to read nothing but heavy books,—poor things, when they are lying there suffering.
4833. Have all books of light literature been taken out of the place lately? Not that I know of.
4834. They have not been removed? No.
4835. Have you experienced a want of water in the establishment? Yes, it is a frightful want. The water is supposed to be turned off every day from 2 or half-past 2, and from that time until 7 we never have any. They say they are obliged to turn it off because they cannot afford to let people have so much water, and that if we want it, we must have a private tank.
4836. Is the want of water an inconvenience in the wards? Very much so. If a patient comes in after half-past 2 he cannot have a bath.
4837. Mr. Metcalfe.] Cannot the men pump the water up? Yes, on the upper floors they can sometimes get it in that way, but on the lower floors it cannot be got at all. I used to fill a small bath myself, and console myself by thinking that they did not save much by me. It is a frightful inconvenience.
4838. Mr. Ellis.] Do you know what becomes of the clothes of the patients on their admission into the Infirmary? They are sent down to a little store.
4839. Is that store under the charge of the bath-man? Harris—Yes.
4840. You have nothing to do with them? No, nothing to do with them after they are sent down.
4841. Have you ever heard of clothes being burned as being too bad to be given back to the patients? Yes, very often they are too bad to be given to them again.
4842. Who burns them? The yardsman, I think.
4843. But I understand that they are only burned when they are excessively bad? Yes, when they are very bad. I think the man shows them to the manager first; I have seen him doing so on one or two occasions.
4844. They are only burned when they are very bad? Yes, of course. Dark woollen clothing cannot be cleansed where there is a great amount of vermin in it.
4845. Otherwise they are put into the shed, when not so bad as to be burned? Yes, unless they are really very dirty they are.
4846. Mr. Goold.] It is not the rule that they should be washed or fumigated before they are put into the shed? I do not think so.
4847. Have you had any experience of English hospitals? No, I never was in a hospital before.
4848. President.] How long were you here as a probationer? For one year.
4849. You live in the Nightingale wing? Yes.
4850. What salary do you receive? £60 a year. The first year I received £20.
4851. Mr. Cowper.] Who do you consider instructed you in nursing? Numbers of people. I was moved about to different wards—male and female.
4852. But we are told that no one is trained to nurse in that institution? They cannot well be there without being trained—they cannot help learning.
4853. President.] Is any one who comes in to be trained always put under an experienced nurse? Yes, always put as a probationer first.
4854. Mr. Cowper.] Did you ever find Miss Osburn unwilling to give instruction? No, I never found any one unwilling to do so.
4855. Has she instructed you? Yes. She always assists us when we are in any difficulty, so that we know everything without applying to the doctors.
4856. Did you attend any lectures given by Miss Osburn? No, I never attended.
4857. Mr. Ellis.] There is a person engaged as housekeeper in the Nightingale wing? Yes.
4858. What are her duties? I can scarcely tell you, I know so little about this kind of things at all; but I think she has charge of the nurses' rooms to see that they keep their rooms neat, and she has charge of the crockery and the linen room too.
4859. It is said here in some evidence given before us that she is a lady's maid, under the name of housekeeper,—that in fact she is not a housekeeper? I do not know how that can be the case. She was not at one time in the linen room, but she is now.
4860. President.] Have you had any instances of the honorary staff retaining patients in the establishment after they had been complained of on account of acts of insubordination? Yes, but not lately. I think I have. There is a rule that we find it difficult to make the patients keep—that is, as to smoking. We of course report patients if we find them smoking, because it seems absurd when these notices are posted up everywhere that patients will be discharged for smoking, to permit them to smoke; but numbers of the nurses have given up reporting violations of the rule, because the doctors take no notice of it. The nurses have given up reporting, because when they do so and nothing is done, the patient says "Well, what did you get by it?" They think it is better to let the thing lapse altogether.
4861. Then the rules are violated because the doctors will not maintain discipline? Very often. Some of the doctors are very good indeed, and others are not.
4862. Does that not make matters worse, because some patients may complain that some are allowed to violate the rules while others are not? Yes. It would be a most dreadful state of things if patients were allowed to smoke as they pleased. I do not think there is a patient in the hospital who does not smoke sometimes—for they will do it—and when a patient is discharged for smoking it has a good effect for a time. But it is very provoking when a patient is smoking, and you see them in the lavatories smoking, and you report it, for the doctor to say carelessly "Well, you must not do it again."
4863. Have you known the rules violated with regard to patients wearing their own clothes? Yes, I have known that too.
4864. Mr. Goold.] Do you recollect Mr. Josephson having an interview with you about the diets? Yes; I think Mr. Stephen, Mr. Josephson, and the house-steward, came round shortly after the alteration in the mode of sending up the diets was made.

4865. Do you recollect the conversation that took place then? I cannot say that I do.

4866. Did Miss Osburn prevent your speaking on that occasion? I do not recollect it. I cannot remember.

4867. Do you recollect Mr. Stephen on that occasion telling Miss Osburn to hold her tongue? No. I think that I was asked something, and that Miss Osburn was going to answer. It took place at a very hurried time, just as the patients' dinner was coming up. I cannot recollect the particulars.

4868. President.] Did anything occur that attracted your attention to the matter? Not particularly.

4869. Were you made to feel then that Miss Osburn would not allow you to speak? No; I should have done that in any case if I had wished to.

4870. What did you think of that system of making up the diets—the nurses making up the lists? I think it was much better, because we are in the wards and know what diets are required, and anybody can check the diet lists and see that they are correct. It was put a stop to in a very disagreeable way, as if it were supposed that we did not give in correct lists.

4871. On whose suggestion was it done away with? That I do not know.

4872. What was it that Mr. Josephson was endeavouring to get carried out on the occasion we have referred to? He was trying to get us prevented from sending down the diet-lists, and to have the boards sent down to the steward instead.

4873. That was his object? Yes, I think so.

4874. You were in favour of the sisters sending down these diet-lists? Yes, I think so; but I do not care how the diets are sent up. It is inconvenient to have the cards sent out of the ward. Very often after the cards are sent down the doctors may come and want a card which is out of the ward, and to hunt up that card entails great delay and annoyance. It seems sufficient that the cards should go down to the dispensary.

4875. With reference to what took place on the occasion that has been referred to, when you saw Mr. Stephen and Mr. Josephson in the wards, do you think that this is a fair representation of what occurred—"Miss Osburn would not allow Mrs. Bland to speak, and Mr. Stephen had to tell her to hold her tongue"? No, I do not think so. I remember Mr. Stephen interrupting Miss Osburn. I think Mr. Stephen said something about his duty to the committee—but I do not recollect what. I was exceedingly anxious to get away, and I did not pay much attention to what took place. I remember saying that I thought the way we were having the diets sent down was the best and most practical way.

4876. Mr. Goold.] When you made out the diet lists were there any complaints about diets being sent up for patients who had been discharged? No, not so often as they are made now. I have heard complaints of diets being sent up for weeks after the patients have gone away.

4877. You have had complaints under both systems? More under the present system of sending down the cards, which is the old system revived again. The other system of the sisters making out the diet lists was going on for two years, I think, or more—certainly it is some time since.

4878. If a patient dies and there is a supply of wine left by his bed-side, what becomes of it? It is sent down to the house steward again, if the patient has not drunk it.

4879. Mr. Cowper.] What would be the largest quantity of wine on hand in that way? I have had a patient's supply on hand, and the patient has died before drinking it.

4880. How much is that? It may be four or six ounces. There may be more, but I think that is the average quantity.

4881. Mr. Metcalfe.] Not much more than a wineglassful? Yes, more than that, I think.

4882. President.] The sisters have an allowance of wine, I think? Yes, we had two bottles of wine a week at first; but now we have an allowance of beer for our dinner and one bottle of wine instead.

4883. Mr. Ellis.] It has been said by one of the witnesses that Miss Osburn has taken everything upon herself, and "now rules the whole establishment, directors and all, and twists them about like shuttle-cocks": is that the case? That seems to be the opinion of some people.

4884. Mr. Goold.] As far as you know, there is no foundation for that statement. No; as far as I know.

4885. Mr. Ellis.] It is also stated to us that "Nothing can be worse than the nursing": is that correct? I do not think so. I should be very well satisfied to be looked after as well myself if I were ill.

4886. Do you know Nurse Moule and Nurse Whytlaw? Yes.

4887. It is said that "neither of them is worth much as nurses": is that the case? I do not think so.

4888. Do you think the nurses would be better trained by the honorary staff than by Miss Osburn? No, I should not think so; scarcely so well, I think.

4889. It is proposed that all of them should be subjected to the examination of the honorary staff? Indeed. There is one thing I should like to mention, that is with reference to the provisions. I do not think that any one looks after them to see whether they are of the proper quality that they should be. I am often much amused by the advertisements in the papers calling for tenders for the supply of everything of the "best quality." The meat is, I think, very inferior. The meat we have sometimes is hard, so much so that it is almost impossible to masticate it. It goes away from the table sometimes untouched because it is impossible to eat it. If we are supposed to have good meat we might as well have it.

4890. President.] How is the beer? It is vinegar sometimes, after it has been tapped a few days.

4891. Is it colonial beer? Yes.

4892. Mr. Cowper.] How is the tea? I do not know. I am not a judge of tea myself. It has no particular taste; but one does not expect to get these kind of things quite as nice as one would in one's own home; but it does strike me that the meat ought to be eatable. I notice that the corned beef is like a piece of mahogany.

4893. How is the cooking for the patients? The patients' ordinary diets are pretty good as a rule, but the extras, such as fowls and boiled mutton, and things for people who are supposed to be very ill, are not nice. But the kitchen and all the cooking arrangements are so very bad that it is hardly the cook's fault. I did not think so much of that until I was in the Melbourne Hospital a year or two ago. They have everything very nice there.

4894. Perhaps you can suggest some improvements? They have an engine there, and the man who attends to it seems to do other things as well. There is a small steam-engine to supply the whole building with water—hot water. Here, if it is pouring rain the nurses have to go across in the wet to get hot water, and they get their feet wet. There should be water laid on. It is now very inconvenient. If a patient

- Mrs. M. Bland.
 2 June, 1873 patient comes in and hot water is wanted, you have to run round to the back of the building to get it, and that is not pleasant.
 4895. Mr. Ellis.] The engine I suppose answers for the washing purposes as well? Yes, for every-thing. In every ward there is a kind of sink, and there are two taps of hot and cold water.
 4896. In every ward? In every set of wards.
 4897. And that would be a great improvement here? Very.

James C. Cox, Esq., M.D., called in and examined:—

- J. C. Cox, Esq., M.D.
 2 June, 1873. 4898. President.] I believe you were at one time officially connected with the Infirmary? I was honorary physician for twelve years.
 4899. Are you now? No, I have resigned; I am now one of the consulting physicians.
 4900. May I ask what was the reason of your resigning? Pressure of private business.
 4901. How long have you been acquainted with the Infirmary altogether? I was a student at the Infirmary for three years before I went to Europe.
 4902. When was that? In 1850, 1851, and 1852.
 4903. Then you are in a position, I presume, to compare the nursing under the present system with the old system of nursing prevailing there? I am. I had ample opportunity of seeing it and forming an opinion of it. I went home from this Colony very soon after I attended it as a student. I went through all the schools of Europe, and I returned to take office in the Infirmary; so that I had good opportunities of comparing it with those institutions.
 4904. What do you say as to the present nursing carried on here, and that in vogue before the present staff came out? There is no comparison. The nursing staff of the present day, since the introduction of the sisters, I consider infinitely superior. The nursing long ago, during the time I was a student there, was generally carried on by patients convalescent or discharged. They became residents in the hospital. That was all the education they received. Men who were half invalids, and took an interest and showed ability for nursing were taken on, and that was really what constituted the education of those who nursed here then. When I returned to the Colony I found it very little altered. Nothing distressed me so much as to compare the nursing in this institution with some of the excellent institutions at Home in which I had had my education, and I was very much pleased at the introduction of the sisters, and I consider that there has been a very great improvement, not only in the nursing, but they have educated a class of people most useful in our community. There are now many of them serving as nurses in this city, and of very superior ability, and thoroughly educated in nursing.
 4905. Then you say that they have gone into private practice? Yes.
 4906. And are useful from their education in the Infirmary? Yes. Yesterday one of these nurses who had been in the Infirmary, I obtained a situation of £50 a year for, with board and lodging. She had been nursing in private practice on and off; she had made herself a useful member of the community.
 4907. She had been trained entirely in the Infirmary? Yes.
 4908. Do you know whether there were vermin in the building when you were acquainted with it before the present staff came — bugs? Yes, to a frightful extent.
 4909. Mr. Metcalfe.] In 1850? Yes. One of the most frightful things about the place was, to see the blood marks on the walls where they had been killed. It was one of the disgusting things about the institution. In fact they were far worse than I have ever seen them since I have returned. The accommodation was much worse. The very fact of all the patients in the ward having no water-closet to go to, only a chair in the ward, and passing their excrement into one tub, was revolting.
 4910. Then in your opinion it is not fair to represent that the vermin nuisance has become such as it has been lately, since the nursing staff came there and through their neglect? Most certainly not. I remember distinctly that the vermin were not only worse, but there were less attempts to keep them down.
 4911. How long is it since you ceased to attend the Infirmary regularly? About six or seven months.
 4912. Mr. Couper.] What was the state of the Infirmary immediately before the arrival of Miss Osburn and the sisters? That was when Mrs. Ghost was alive.
 4913. Take Mrs. Ghost's time. I remember it distinctly. It was certainly much better than when I left the Colony. It was improved in every way. It was cleaner and they appeared to me to pay more attention to the attendance on the patients.
 4914. Than when you left the Colony? Yes.
 4915. Were there vermin still in it? Oh yes; there were vermin to a very large extent. I refer particularly to the bugs.
 4916. Do you consider that the nursing and general management then was equal to what it is now? I consider that the management was better than it is now.
 4917. President.] And the nursing? Certainly not so good.
 4918. In what respects do you consider that the management was better then? Well, all things connected with the management of the institution were carried on more firmly, decidedly, and without so much official difficulty.
 4919. Have you formed an opinion as to whether the governing body is too large? I have formed my own opinion. I consider that the Board is much larger than is necessary.
 4920. What results have you observed in the action of the Board which may be attributed to its large size? I have seen useful movements carried out at one meeting by one batch of members and the same rescinded at another meeting composed of another batch of members. It was supposed that we were to act up to them in one week or month, and in the following week or month these orders would be cancelled. There always appeared to be difficulty about anything being done or supplied.
 4921. Was time wasted in useless discussions? During the last twelve months I was a member of the Board specially appointed by the other medical officers. I was very greatly distressed at the amount of time wasted, and the exhibitions of feeling exhibited on these occasions; so much so that it was one of the reasons which determined me to leave the institution.
 4922. Mr. Metcalfe.] And the same on the weekly committee? Exactly the same—worse if anything.
 4923. President.] What did the waste of time take place about—what were the discussions about? Well, the committee seemed to be divided against itself. There appeared to me to be several parties working influenced influenced by other parties about the institution. As far as I could make out, there was a party opposed to the present manager, there was a party opposed to the present lady superintendent, and there was a party opposed to the present system of medical attendance; and it struck me also that there were too many feelings of Church matters mixed up in the institution.

J. C. Cox,
Esq., M.D.
2 June, 1873.

4924. Did it strike you it would be desirable that the Board of such an institution should be composed only of laymen? I would prefer it to be so; I would advise it to be so. I have every respect for members of all Churches, but I think it would be better for such an institution that it should be free of such party feelings. I think they could act with less scruple, I might say on matters affecting religious matters particularly.

4925. Did you observe that there was an undesirable division of authority between the manager and the lady superintendent? Yes. It was one of the most painful things I have ever noticed, and it was distressing to the medical officers to have to put up with it. No one was to blame—no one would take the blame. Throw the blame on one and it was put on the other, and there was a constant discussion whether it was the duty of one or the other to carry out what should be done. I was particularly struck with it in one of the most important features of the institution, the water-closets and lavatories. I made incessant complaints about these places. I went to the manager, who invariably told me it was the fault of the nurses. I went to the lady superintendent, and she declared to me that the places were imperfect, and it was impossible for the nurses to go in and clean them when men were there in a naked state; and there was a constant feeling of one wanting to throw the responsibility on the other. I was going to mention one strong instance of it, but probably it would be as well not.

4926. You may as well? In my ward there was a urinal and a water-closet on the outside of the ward. There was a door next it, and this abominable place used always to leak into my ward through the wall. I went to the manager about it. [I must tell you that the patient whose head was against it got fever, and I put that down to these noxious odours.] I went to the manager, and he told me he could not do anything without the house committee, and told me it was the lady superintendent's fault that she did not see that the nurses cleaned the place out. I went to the lady superintendent, and she told me that it was impossible; that the place was so imperfect that it could not be cleaned out, and it was the manager's fault for not having it put right. All this time (two or three weeks) the urine was soaking into the ward. I took the directors up into the ward and showed it them, and two months afterwards it was in the same position. There was not the slightest notice taken of it. I went to the committee about it and was asked to arrange with the manager and a plumber, what was to be done; and all I could do was to get a man to knock the whole thing down. For some time there was not a urinal in the place.

4927. Mr. Cowper.] What ward was that in? I think it was numbered thirteen ward.

4928. President.] How would you propose to remedy this state of things? I would reduce the committee. My idea would be to have a chairman and five members. I would abolish the present office of manager, and I would have a medical man as superintendent, and I would thoroughly give it to be understood that Miss Osburn was under his orders and no one else's; or rather, that he should be responsible for everything. I would make the lady superintendent responsible to nobody but him.

4929. Mr. Ellis.] Would you make the nurses responsible to him? No; I would make Miss Osburn responsible to him for their conduct and efficiency; but I would not make Miss Osburn responsible to the committee while there was a manager in the institution. I think it is that very fact that has thrown the institution into this turmoil.

4930. I gather from what you say that the effect of the visitors going into the wards and interfering with what goes on there is not good? There are at all times too many visitors there.

4931. I mean the official visitors who go there? No, I think it is their duty to go in and inspect.

4933. From what you have seen, do you think that the manager has any special qualifications for the office in which he is placed? The present manager?

4934. Yes? I do not think that he is fitted for it. I have thought so from the first. I opposed the office from the beginning. I saw that the appointment would bring himself into disrepute. I saw that he could not work it, and I have told him so many times. The office was, I believe, created for him.

4935. Is it a fact that he was in some way connected with a gentleman who is now dead, and who took a leading part in the management of the institution? Yes.

4936. And the office was in fact made to give him a living? Such is my belief.

4937. Mr. Metcalfe.] Have you considered whether it would be possible to get a medical man to take such a position as that? Yes, I believe that you could get an excellent man.

4938. President.] For what salary? Well, for say about £600 a year. I consider that such a man should not only be responsible for the management of the institution, but should act as medical attendant; and I think that there should be medical men—one or more—under this officer. He should certainly have an assistant medical officer.

4939. Supposing that it is not thought desirable or possible to obtain such a person, do you think the next best thing would be to do away with the office of manager, and to place the internal economy, the nursing and the wards, in the hands of the lady superintendent, whoever she may be, and the management of the financial business of the hospital in the hands of a paid secretary, under a smaller committee? I am just thinking how the lady superintendent and the medical officers would hit it.

4940. Of course she is in no way to interfere with them? Would they be masters of her or not?

4941. Not masters of her—Do you know the suggestions that Miss Nightingale makes with regard to the method of hospital nursing? Yes, I am aware of them.

4942. Do you concur in them? Not thoroughly. From my experience and what I hear, the system does not work well.

4943. Where is it in existence then? It was in existence at King's College, and at St. George's I think it was.

4944. Is there any report that it does not work well—any statement of authority in print anywhere? No, I do not think that I can refer to any. You are merely asking me my opinion?

4945. Yes; but of course there is a difference between a vague statement of opinion, and an authoritative statement from some one who has made a report on the subject; for instance, when the nursing staff were first brought out here there was a good deal of jealousy about them? That is a long time ago.

J. C. Cox,
Esq., M.D.
2 June, 1873.

4946. Yes, but still you may be speaking from recollection of something that you heard then? No, not at all. They have had to abolish these sisters in many cases. It seems to be difficult to get medical officers to work in an institution where they have no authority. I do not think myself that this institution would work without the medical officers having authority.

4947. The resident medical officers? Or the resident medical officer. I do not think that the honorary medical officers should interfere with the working apparatus of the institution. I think their proper mode of interfering should be through the house surgeons or the committee.

4948. Would you put the resident medical officers under the honoraries? Yes.

4949. In this way you would make the honorary men the governors of the institution? No.

4950. Mr. Ellis.] Would you make the resident medical officer supreme? Yes, supreme in reference to the entire management, subject to the approval of the committee; otherwise, I do not think that the system would work.

4951. President.] Do you agree in this opinion of Miss Nightingale, or not;—"To turn any number of trained nurses into any Infirmary to act under the superintendence or instructions of any master, or matron, or medical officer, would be sheer waste of good money. This is not a matter of opinion, but of fact and experience"? I do not agree with that. What is the date of that?

4952. It was given to Miss Osburn when she came out here, five years ago? There has been a good deal of change of opinion in England since then.

4953. Supposing we are not able to obtain such a medical man as you would wish—a man fitted to hold such a position, what would you advise then? Of course if you could not get such a man, I would advise you to have such a person as Miss Osburn and a steward to govern such an institution under the committee.

4954. Mr. Metcalfe.] A smaller committee? Yes.

4955. Mr. Goold.] Do you think there would be much difficulty in getting such a person as you describe? I do not think so. I think you would get a really good man for £600 a year and quarters.

4956. Mr. Ellis.] At all events, you would only have one actual head? Yes; if he was a good man my idea would be to leave the whole of the nursing to Miss Osburn, but if she did wrong she could be corrected by that man.

4957. Mr. Cowper.] What control would the honorary staff have? They should merely deal with the patients, and have no control over the management at all.

4958. President.] Would you allow the honorary men to interfere between the lady superintendent and the nurses with regard to the discipline? No, I think it would be the duty of the medical officer to report anything he saw wrong in the discipline of the nursing staff, but I do not think there should be any collision between him and the head of the nursing staff. If there was anything wrong he should bring the matter before the committee, and it would be their duty to put it right. I don't think he should interfere directly. It would not do. You would get them into collision immediately.

4959. Mr. Goold.] Who should have the engaging and discharge of the nurses and servants? Most decidedly the lady superintendent.

4960. Should she have the power solely, without appeal to the Board? No, I think that they should have the right of appeal. I think that the lady superintendent should be responsible to the Board for everything she does.

4961. Supposing that she discharges a nurse, would you give that nurse an appeal to the Board? Most certainly I think so.

4962. President.] But practically do you not think that her recommendation should always be acted upon, unless in a case of such injustice as would compel the Board to dismiss her? Yes, I do. I think that with a proper committee and a proper lady superintendent the thing would work well.

4963. From what you have seen of Miss Osburn, do you think it is just to say of her that she takes no interest in the institution, and is negligent of her duties, and does not apply herself to their discharge? I know quite the contrary; I know that she gives her most active interest to the institution, gives her greatest attention to it, and is extremely attentive to her duties. I am sure that she is very desirous of doing what is right. That is my experience of Miss Osburn.

4964. Mr. Ellis.] Do you believe that she is competent to discharge the duties entrusted to her? Yes, I do. I think that she is imprudent in some things, and that she does not get over little difficulties which might be got over with a little trouble.

4965. Is she a little hasty in temper? No, she has a very good temper; but it seems to me that, from her position there, she has been rather glad to see others getting into trouble.

4966. President.] As far as her qualifications are concerned, from the training she has received, is she equal to her position? Yes, I think she is quite equal to it.

4967. Mr. Ellis.] Competent to train nurses? Yes, I think so; and by the nurses she has turned out she has proved that she is competent.

4968. And if you were told that the nursing was as bad as it could possibly be, would you believe that? I should say that whoever said so knew nothing about it.

4969. President.] Were you in the Infirmary when the change of title was made from sister to head nurse? Yes. The title "lady superior" was objected to. I was in favour of changing the name lady superior to lady superintendent myself, but not of changing the title of sister.

4970. Why? It seemed to me to give offence to the public, and that therefore it was desirable to change it.

4971. Was there any reason assigned for changing the term "sister" to that of "head nurse," beyond the fact that some people did not like the name? No. To this day I always call them sisters. I call them sisters because it gives them their position in the wards. If you want the sister you ask for the sister, and if you want the nurse you ask for the nurse. The title is a good distinguishing badge.

4972. Mr. Metcalfe.] But still I think you voted for the change? No, I did not.

4973. President.] Then I understand you to say that you are not in favour of the change from the title of "sister" to that of "head nurse"? I am not. I believe the name "sister" to be a good distinguishing badge—if I may use such a term.

4974. Mr. Goold.] Is it used in the English hospitals, as far as you know? It is not used in all, but it is in most of them I believe.

4975. Was it not that title which caused the discussions you referred to, when you spoke of clergymen manifesting so much feeling—was it not in consequence of these names being used? There was a good deal of feeling manifested about it—an unnecessary amount of feeling I think. 4976.

J. C. Cox,
Esq., M.D.

2 June, 1873.

4976. Do you not think that it is undesirable to use any names which are calculated to produce a feeling of that kind? My own opinion is that it never did produce any ill feeling except with a few, and that it was a mistake to suppose that it did.
4977. President.] You think that where a thing is beneficial in itself, people should not give way to ignorant prejudice on such a subject? I do not think so. It is not desirable to give way to it.
4978. Nor do you think it is necessary for the maintenance of Protestant principles that the word "sister" should be abolished? I do not.
4979. There is no more danger of people becoming Catholics simply because they call each other "sister," than there is of Freemasons becoming monks because they term each other "brother"? Exactly.
4980. And your reasons for being in favour of the title are practical ones? Yes, I think it a good distinguishing title, a respectable title.
4981. Do you not think that the personality of a lady occupying such a position should be sunk, and that she should always be addressed by her title? Yes, I think so.
4982. Have you formed any opinion as to whether it is desirable that the honorary staff should be so large? I do not think that it is at all too large.
4983. Have you formed any opinion as to whether the honorary staff ought to hold office for an interminable period? I disapprove myself of the appointment of honorary medical officers being interminable. I think that they should be limited to (say) eight years or twelve years.
4984. The dispenser tells us that he is over-worked, and that he requires another assistant—Do you know enough of the present working of the Infirmary to form an opinion on that point? I do.
4985. What is your opinion? I consider that the whole system—the dispensing system—is bad in the extreme; it is one of the worst features of the institution.
4986. In what respects? The man is hampered with the immense attendance of out-door patients in addition to the internal requirements of the institution. I myself, when I was a student there, performed the duty of dispenser for six months, at the request of the committee. I did it under Mr. Houston, and it was one of the most awful duties that I ever undertook. I have since constantly made visits to the dispensary, and I consider that it is extremely defective—that the officers are over-worked, and that they will be so, as long as the present attendance of the out-door patients and the internal dispensing are combined as they are there. The Melbourne hospital is really a pattern; it is well worth while, if you are making investigations into this matter, to see what the arrangements of the Melbourne hospital are. They are on a different principle altogether; but I must say that I consider the arrangements here are very inefficient and very defective, both in appliances and as regards the number of dispensers. I consider that there are not sufficient hands to do the work.
4987. It has been represented to us by a chemist in this city that much labour may be saved to the dispensers if there was a certain formula adopted? Yes.
4988. Is that the case? It is the case. I was appointed one of a committee to draw up a formula, which was compiled from formulæ of the principal hospitals in London, and each medical officer was written to, to know whether he would like any special formula put in. They were all put in, but for some reason or other it was never carried out. The formula is in print.
4989. Mr. Ellis.] Can you furnish us with a copy of it? Yes.
4990. President.] Do you know whose fault it was that it was never used? I believe that it was the committee's fault.
4991. Mr. Metcalfe.] Would not the adoption of a formula simplify matters very much? Immensely; but the thing went on week after week, and was never attended to.
4992. President.] Do you know whether the verminous state of the building was ever reported to the committee? Yes, over and over and over again. I have seen Miss Osburn appeal to them—I have heard her appeal to them when they have been going round the wards—she has appealed to them to clean the walls.
4993. How long ago is it since she did this? Almost continuously from the time she first came.
4994. Did the secretaries know of it? Yes, they did know of it.
4995. Is it fair to represent to the Commission that the verminous state of the building is owing to Miss Osburn? It is not fair. That hospital was in a worse state before than it has ever been since she has been here. It is not true to represent its condition as her fault.
4996. Are you acquainted with the way in which the diets are made up? I am.
4997. Were you aware in your time of irregularities in the sending up of the diets? Yes, I was. The irregularities are not to be compared to what they used to be. The thing is managed much better now.
4998. Do you know that at one time the diet lists were made up by the sisters in each ward? Yes; copied from the boards.
4999. And that that system was abolished, and that now the house steward makes up the diets from the cards? I know that.
5000. What is the best system? It is the duty of the sisters to return what is wanted in the wards.
5001. Then you think that the change made by the committee in the mode of sending up the diets was undesirable? I do.
5002. Do you think that there should be a record kept of all medicines dispensed? I think that the prescriptions on the cards are quite sufficient. They are written on long sheets of paper.
5003. Mr. Ellis.] But they are not kept? They always were. It is a new innovation if they are not. They should be.
5004. President.] A gentleman has complained that the patients are allowed to read light literature on Sundays. Do you, as a medical man, think it would be desirable to exclude all books but the Bible on that day? I do not.
5005. Do you think that patients suffering from lassitude are equal to reading severe books, or whether relaxation is not sometimes desirable? I do not think you will get anybody to read one book for ever and not get tired of it.
5006. Mr. Ellis.] Suppose that the clothes of a person who had been suffering from some contagious disease were given to a person in health, would they be likely to give the disease to that person? Do you mean the clothes of a verminous person, or of a person suffering from such a disease as the itch? The clothes of a person suffering from such a disease as itch, if put on another person, would give that disease to him.
5007. There have been cases of erysipelas and typhoid fever alluded to? Typhoid is never communicated in that way.
5008. Would venereal disease? Yes; gonorrhœa would be;—not secondary syphilis.

J. C. Cox,
Esq., M.D.
2 June, 1873.

5009. My reason for asking is, that we find the clothes of dead patients are given out without any reference to the diseases from which the patients may have died? I think that is the committee's fault. The point about the hospital that requires improvement most is the kitchen.

5010. Mr. Cowper.] Under whom would you put the kitchen if you had a resident medical officer as manager? Under the lady superintendent.

5011. Mr. Ellis.] It has been stated to us that the medical men in the Infirmary give such a quantity of spirits to the patients that they become confirmed drunkards when they leave the hospital? I do not believe it—I think it is a libel.

5012. President.] Have you any reason to believe that there is a greater proportionate amount of spirits given to patients in the Infirmary than is given by medical men to their private patients? No, I do not think so.

5013. You do not think that people are made confirmed drunkards from the use of stimulants in the Infirmary? I am quite sure that such a statement is not true.

5014. Mr. Cowper.] Can you suggest any improvements as to the cooking? With regard to the present Infirmary, I think that the sooner the present kitchen is pulled down the better; it is inefficient, and bad in every way. I do not know of anything about the place that is more defective than the cooking.

5015. President.] Cannot some improvement be made in the way of nursing infectious cases in tents? Yes. There is room enough for a large row of buildings facing the Domain. My hope is, that if they build a new hospital there, they will build it facing the Domain, and then it can be built while the present one is standing.

5016. Are you acquainted with the mode in which the patients are admitted week and week about by the honorary medical staff? Yes.

5017. Have you ever heard that some of the medical men, with a view of retaining beds in the hospital, have kept in patients who were quite fit to be discharged, until their own time for admitting patients came round? Certainly not. I think that the medical staff have more honor than that. I never knew an instance of it.

5018. It is done by the honorary surgical staff? I merely say that I never knew an instance of it.

5019. Mr. Cowper.] If you had a resident medical officer as manager, would you give him the sole power of admitting and discharging patients? I should put the sole responsibility of admission upon him, but not the responsibility of discharging. I think it should be the duty of the honorary medical staff to say whether a patient should go out or not, except for improper conduct, and then the resident officer should discharge.

5020. President.] At present, if an honorary medical man misbehaves himself, he has the right of appeal to a public meeting of the subscribers: do you think that that is desirable, or that a public meeting is able to judge of the reasons which may have induced the Board to say that a medical officer shall not remain in the Infirmary? No. I think that the Board should have the power to send a man about his business at once.

5021. Absolutely? Yes.

5022. Do you think the Board should retain in the Infirmary a medical officer who permits patients habitually to violate the rules of the institution, and who perhaps will readmit a patient who has been discharged for insubordination, the next day after his discharge? I think that such a person should be called upon to resign his office immediately.

5023. Mr. Goold.] Have the Board now power to do that? Yes; but the officer can appeal to a public meeting.

5024. It has been stated to us that patients have been kept in a month after they have been fit to be discharged—kept in just simply that the honorary surgeon may retain the beds until his week for admission comes round? Well, I can hardly believe that it is true. If it is true, such a man should be called upon to resign at once.

5025. Do you think that Miss Osburn would make such a statement if it were not correct? I do not think so; I do not think she would make such a statement unless she had good foundation for it.

5026. She says the medical man has said—"We must keep these patients in until my week comes round again"? I entirely disapprove of such conduct.

5027. Mr. Cowper.] Do you believe that some of the medical men allow their patients to violate the rules by wearing their own clothes? If the committee allow such a thing to be done, they are not performing their duty, I think.

5028. Mr. Ellis.] Is there any reason to believe that it is inexpedient to allot a certain number of beds to each surgeon, in the same way that a certain number of beds are allotted to each doctor on the medical side? No. I had that system carried out in the medical wards by arrangement with my colleagues,—that a certain number of beds in certain wards, and that certain wards should belong to certain medical men. I did not care whose week of admission came in; I treated the patient at once when he came into my ward. I disapprove myself of a man having all the patients that he admits in his own week. I believe that a patient who is admitted should be put into any bed that is vacant, and I think that each doctor should have his own beds. You can get through the work so much quicker, and what is more, some medical men order more extras of one kind or other for their patients than others. One medical man may give a chop, and if another goes into the ward and refuses it to a patient, it creates discontent in the wards. If I give these extras and others do not, the result will be that people will always want to come into the hospital in my week.

5029. It has been stated that some of the patients are so fond of medicines that the medicines have to be locked up to prevent their helping themselves: did you ever hear of cases of that kind? I consider that no patient should be allowed to help himself. I think that it is a mistake to keep the medicine in the ward. The medicines should be taken to the patients by the nurses as they are required.

5030. It is said that some surgeons have ten or twelve patients in a ward while others have none, and that that arises from their declining to discharge patients until they can fill their beds for themselves with others: is that desirable? I do not think so.

5031. You would admit the patients according as the beds were vacant, and no matter in whose ward the vacancy occurred? Yes, put them into any bed that was vacant.

5032. Mr. Goold.] In answer to a question it is said—"There is one surgeon now; I have not counted his patients, but I think he has over half of the ward, and the others have only the other half between them, and he will not allow them to have a single bed"? How can he stop them? 5033.

5033. By keeping patients in his beds who were fit to be discharged, until he could admit others to take their places? I disapprove of such conduct. The rules of the hospital would prevent such an occurrence, if carried out.

J. C. Cox,
Esq., M.D.

5034. Mr. Ellis.] Are there any suggestions with regard to the modern improvements in hospitals that you would like to favour us with? The most important change you could make would be cooking by steam, I think. That would, in my opinion, be one of the greatest boons you could bestow on the institution,—to abolish the present kitchen, and erect a good kitchen where all the principal food could be cooked by steam—such a place as there is in the Melbourne hospital. It is one of the most perfect things that I have ever seen.

2 June, 1873.

5035. You would cook and wash by steam, I suppose? Yes, do everything of that kind; supply warm water all over the place. You would do everything, too, in a smaller space than that in which the cooking is now carried on. You could warm the wards with the steam apparatus, pump your water with it—which is much wanted on the higher floors—and it would wash as well.

5036. Do you approve of cooking by gas? I do. I have not seen much of it, but I do not think that on a large scale it is so cheap.

5037. Did you notice a letter on the subject, which appeared the other day in the Herald? Yes. I have not had much experience of cooking by gas on a large scale, but it is a thing that is extensively used in private families.

5038. This is the letter (Appendix F handed to witness)? This is a recent thing, but I have no doubt that the improvement in the apparatus is the great point.

5039. Would you object to a ward being set apart for the treatment of patients under the homœopathic system? Yes, I should myself personally.

5040. President.] That is, I presume, because you do not believe in homœopathy? Yes, I think it is a pity to risk lives with it in cases which are serious.

5041. But if some people wish to risk their lives with it? Then I think it should be in a different hospital. You will find that comparisons of that kind between two systems are not expedient; they lead to unpleasant feelings.

5042. Do you not think it would produce a healthy rivalry between the two systems? I do not. You will find that it will produce disagreement. There will be just the same sort of division that there is now in the committee.

5043. Mr. Ellis.] Could a medical man treat his patients in the hospital according to the homœopathic principle at present? No, I do not think there is a supply of homœopathic medicines kept there.

5044. Are the medical men not restricted by the British Pharmacopœia? Not at all.

5045. You may then prescribe infinitesimal doses of everything? Yes, I could prescribe anything I liked.

5046. Do you consider that the dormitory accommodation of the Infirmary is adequate in regard to the space allowed for each bed? Yes, I think it is very fair. The windows are very defective.

5047. That is in front? Yes, and at the back also.

5048. Does that apply to the new or south wing, where the female patients are? Yes, they are very defective there also.

5049. What is the defect? They are too draughty; so draughty sometimes that you have to put the windows down—the patients can't stand it.

5050. President.] What is the reason of that? They are too broad, and too much opposite to each other. The windows should not face each other. The windows usually are put opposite to the wall on the other side—a window on one side of the ward faces the wall on the other side. These windows are opposite each other, and are unnecessarily wide.

5051. Mr. Ellis.] Do you consider that the sanitary condition of the Infirmary is on the whole good? No, I consider it very bad indeed. I consider that the drainage of the slops and the filth from the upper floors, conducted as it is to those pits, is one of the most discreditable things I ever saw.

5052. They have a large pit in the yard? Yes, immediately under the windows of the Infirmary.

5053. Where do these things drain into? Into that pit down the yard.

5054. We are told that the Infirmary is drained into Macquarie-street? It may be from there, but there is a terrible exposure of the filth from the top back balcony to the bottom; you see it streaming down in bucketfuls.

5055. You think that the drainage should be improved? I think that the drainage requires urgent attention; it is defective and not sufficient.

5056. President.] Pending the occupation of the ground at the back by further building, do you not think that it would be advisable to lay it out as a garden, or make it tidy in some way? I think that it is a shame to leave it in its present state. I think that the committee should be ashamed of themselves to leave it so. I think the patients could keep it in order.

5057. Would it not be in some cases beneficial to their health to give them some little occupation of that sort? Of course it would, and the place would be agreeable to the eye, instead of as it is now with rubbish heaped up in every corner. It is bad morally, and the rubbish must harbour vermin.

5058. Mr. Gould.] Where do you think that the dead-house should be? I have a great objection to it in its present position. I think myself that the southern right-hand corner, as much as possible at the back of the building, is the best possible position for it. Even there the difficulties of conveying bodies to the place are considerable: a body has to be carried through the whole building. It is a most unpleasant thing as it now exists.

5059. Mr. Ellis.] It has been suggested that the site you speak of would be the best, as there is a way out at the back, so that the carrying in of coffins and taking away of bodies would not be seen from the Infirmary? Yes. There is another great defect in the place, and that is the condition of the water-closets and urinals used by the out-patients. It is a most filthy place, and very defective.

5060. President.] Have you paid any attention to the out-door dispensing of the Infirmary? I have not seen much of it. I am continually called upon to prescribe for poor people about the city.

5061. Are you in a position to say whether it is desirable to keep a branch dispensary at the other end of the city? I think that it is very desirable. It is too far for sick people to travel from the far ends of the city up to the dispensary; and often they are kept a long time waiting, and have to go without food or nourishment. People with sore legs have to walk sometimes an immense distance, and they should not do it.

5062. There is reason to believe that some out-patients abuse the charity of the institution, and that this is the case more particularly at the branch dispensary, where they are not under the eye of the institution. It is said that there are persons who get medicines there who should not obtain eleemosynary aid. Do you know any instances of that? Yes, I have known cases of that kind. People in good circumstances, who should know better, do take advantage of the advice and the medicines supplied by the institution. I have known several instances of it.

5063. Has that occurred at the institution itself, or at the branch dispensary? At the institution itself. I do not know much of the branch.

5064. Mr. Metcalfe.] Do you not think that the indiscriminating way in which the orders are given for the admission of patients has the effect of very much diminishing the subscriptions of the public? I do. As long as the Colonial Secretary gives orders on demand the public will not subscribe.

5065. President.] Have you ever compared the contributions made to this hospital with those made to local country hospitals? Yes, I have.

5066. Do you not think the amount contributed to this hospital is small when compared with the contributions to country hospitals? Yes. For instance, I consider that the contributions to St. Vincent's Hospital are far superior to the contributions to the Infirmary. St. Vincent's Hospital is supported altogether by private subscriptions.

5067. Mr. Cowper.] Is it a better hospital? Yes, it is better in every respect. It is clean and well drained, and it is well nursed. I mean to say that, as far as I can judge, I consider that it is a far superior institution to this one, and it is alone supported by private contributions.

5068. Do you know what its revenue is? No, I do not, but I can send you a report.

5069. It is not built on the pavilion system, is it? No, of course; its ground is limited in extent.

5070. How many beds has it? Well, the beds are not all occupied. They could accommodate forty more there if they had funds.

5071. What number of patients are there there now? I do not like to say; I should like to let you know definitely, and I cannot do that now.

5072. Do you say that the nursing there is superior to the nursing in the Infirmary? No. The male portion of the hospital is nursed by men, so that I do not approve of it so much.

5073. You do not say that the nursing is superior? No, it is not superior, but it is very excellent. I disapprove entirely of the nursing by men in men's wards. I do not like it myself.

5074. You do not see any objections on the score of morality to female nurses being employed in male wards? None whatever, except in the syphilitic wards. I have a better opinion of human nature than that.

5075. Miss Osburn tells us that she finds that young women are more easily trained as nurses than women who are more advanced in life—that they fall into the ways of the institution better: can you give us any opinion on that point? I believe that she is right. I believe that younger women, especially if they have a natural taste for it, will make better nurses than older women.

5076. Have you any reason to believe that the nurses in the Infirmary are too young? Not at all. You were talking about the subscriptions just now. I believe that you will find the patients cost less at St. Vincent's Hospital than they do in the Infirmary.

5077. Why? From better management, I think. The difference is quite startling. I went into the subject some time ago. There was an article, I think, in the Medical Journal, compiled by Dr. Milford, on the subject.

5078. Have you considered whether the system of admitting patients to the hospital on the orders of the subscribers is a good one, or whether it would not be better to throw the hospital open to all who are entitled to its aid, with a view of getting subscriptions more generally from the public, though individual subscriptions may not be so large? Yes, I would like to see the hospital thrown open to the most urgent cases, quite irrespective of the orders of the subscribers. I think that the orders given to patients get in many persons who are mere malingerers, and who are not so worthy of treatment as many who are rejected.

5079. We have been told that there are many persons in the Infirmary who may, as beneficially to themselves, and more economically to the public, be treated elsewhere? Yes, we urgently want a convalescent institution to send chronic cases to; such cases are difficult to get rid of, and exclude the admission of urgent cases.

5080. Mr. Goold.] Would you abolish orders? I would.

5081. Would you allow subscribers to send in their own servants as patients? Not unless they were considered proper cases. I was a subscriber myself for some time, and I found that I could not get my servant in there; and that was the reason that I gave up subscribing.

5082. President.] Do you not think that the contributions here are very much below the mark? Yes, they are.

5083. Do you not think that this in a measure arises from there being a scale of contributions: people give more generally in the country because they know that everything is gladly received there? Yes, there is a disposition here to believe that a man, because he subscribes, is entitled to send any patients into the hospital, and if he cannot get a patient in he withdraws his subscription; in fact, I have known the committee request that a patient should be taken in because he is recommended by a good subscriber.

5084. Supposing that a person is discharged from the Infirmary as cured, who has had erysipelas, do you think his having had erysipelas is any reason for his being refused admission into the Asylum for the Infirm and Destitute? I do not think so.

5085. Mr. Cowper.] Do you not think that the Board of the Asylum for the Infirm and Destitute should exercise great caution in receiving persons of that kind? Yes. I do not think that any man would impose erysipelas on another institution. I cannot imagine such a case.

5086. President.] Then the fact of a man's having had erysipelas is not a sufficient ground for refusing him admission into an asylum? No.

5087. Mr. Cowper.] Do you not think it would be unwise for the Board of Management to allow the secretary to take in cases such as that of persons who have suffered from erysipelas, without reference to the Board? I think that such cases should be referred to the Board.

5088. President.] But if they have been discharged from the Infirmary as cured? Yes, but they may be discharged from the Infirmary to be got rid of. A man might be almost well of erysipelas—well enough to go out—and yet it would not be desirable to have that man in an asylum. It might be for the sake of the other patients to get that man out of the hospital, and the other institutions should not have him thrust upon them unnecessarily. He may be discharged before he is perfectly well.

5089. But when he is discharged with the responsibility of his going to the asylum resting upon the authorities of the Infirmary? Still I think they should use due vigilance. I think it is right they should. A man may go with the clothes that he had worn when suffering from the erysipelas, and they might communicate the disease.

J. C. Cox,
Esq., M.D.
2 June, 1873.

5090. Mr. Ellis.] Would you require from the discharging medical officer a certificate that the man was a safe person to receive into the institution? Yes, I think that would be a good arrangement, because then the responsibility would rest with the man who has given the certificate.

5091. Mr. Cowper.] But you think the Board should use every precaution? Yes.

5092. President.] Would not that be sufficient, that a man was discharged cured from the Infirmary, and sent to the Asylum as a proper inmate? No; you will find men get their dirty clothes that they had when they came in, and they will go out with the discharges on them.

5093. But suppose they are not allowed to have clothes of that kind? But you cannot ensure that.

5094. Well, how is this other Board to ensure it,—to say that a man has not got upon him clothes which will carry the disease? They must make strict inquiry.

5095. Can they find out anything more than the discharging officer of the Infirmary finds out? They can find out whether the clothes have been cleaned.

5096. Suppose a certificate is also given that the clothes are clean? Then I will give up. I am satisfied with that.

5097. Mr. Goold.] What was done with the clothes of the patients of the Infirmary, in former times, when they were taken off them? They were put down in a place next to the dead-house,—an adjoining place.

5098. What was the practice at Home, in the hospitals you were acquainted with, with regard to the clothes? Nearly all those worth fumigating were cleaned, and those which were not were destroyed without hesitation, and other clothes—cheap clothing—given to the patients when they went out. There were clothes supplied for the patients.

Members Present:—

WILLIAM CHARLES WINDEYER, Esq., PRESIDENT.

EYRE G. ELLIS, Esq.

MICHAEL METCALFE, Esq.

SAMUEL GOOLD, Esq.

CHARLES COWPER, JUN., Esq.

Miss Gertrude Moule, head nurse, Sydney Infirmary, called in and examined:—

5099. President.] You are one of the head nurses, or sisters, of the Sydney Infirmary? Yes.

5100. How long have you been so? I have been so for nearly four years.

5101. You were entirely trained in the institution? Yes.

5102. You live, of course, in the Nightingale wing? Yes.

5103. What salary do you receive? £60 a year.

5104. You began as a probationer? Yes.

5105. Was the change made in the title of sister to that of head nurse after you had taken office as sister? No, it was changed then. I never got my title of sister, because I acted as nurse for nearly two years after I came here. I have never been called sister. I was always called probation sister the first year.

5106. And then the change was made? Yes.

5107. Have you any opinion as to which title, for the good working of the nursing system, it would be well to retain? I think one has more authority if called sister, because at present we are just as often called nurse as anything else, and a great many people do not know the difference at all between my position and that of the nurses; and if we are to have any authority, it is better to have a distinction made.

5108. Then the reasons why you prefer this title are of a practical kind? Entirely.

5109. It is not because you wish to assimilate this to any title in any religious order? No, not in the least.

5110. Are you a Protestant or a Roman Catholic? I am a Protestant.

5111. Do you know whether the other ladies in the Infirmary, in a similar position to yourself, are Protestants? All Protestants.

5112. Do you not think that this abstract title is better than your being addressed by your own name? Certainly, because I am now addressed by my own name, though I never get my own name at all. My being called Miss Moule makes people call the nurses Miss. I have constantly to tell the patients not to say "Miss" to the nurses, but to say "nurse."

5113. Your object being to maintain the distinction of rank? Yes.

5114. As far as you are aware, are the lady superintendent and the nursing staff working harmoniously together at the present time? Yes, I think so; very.

5115. Do you think that there are any fair grounds for supposing or representing that there is considerable dissension among you, and a good deal of quarrelling? No, I hear very little quarrelling indeed; I do not think there could be less where there is such a number together.

5116. Is there, in your opinion, any ground for saying that the lady superintendent is overbearing and unjust in her treatment of those under her? No. I think she is a little disposed to be the other way—to be too ready to think the best of every one, and accept their excuses. She is never hard on any one. She is very just, I think.

5117. Have you observed at all, since you have been here, a clashing of authority between the manager and the lady superintendent, and an indisposition on the part of the male servants to obey the lady superintendent's directions? Yes, certainly, as far as the men servants are concerned. They used always to go to the manager, if we wanted anything done, and ask him whether they should do it. I have twice heard the men turn round when they have been asked to do something, and say—"Is the manager in?" and to go to him and see whether he was to do it.

Miss Gertrude
Moule.

3 June, 1873.

- Miss Gertrude Moule.
3 June, 1873.
5118. Has that caused delay, and acted injuriously to the patients? Yes.
5119. Have you become aware since you have been in the Infirmary, that in consequence of the present mode of admitting patients by the honorary staff, patients have been kept longer in the Infirmary than they might have been, in order that the doctors may retain beds? Yes, very often indeed.
5120. Have you any doubt about that? No, not at all. They have often said, when a patient is fit to be discharged—"Oh, wait until my week comes round."
5121. And at the same time they have admitted that the patient might be discharged? Yes.
5122. Will you tell us the names of any gentleman who has done this? I do not think that either Mr. Bedford or Mr. Fortescue have done so; the other two, Dr. McKay and Mr. Mackellar, have done it. Mr. Bedford I am sure has not.
5123. How long do you think that patients have been kept in in this way? I have known one kept in for four weeks, but generally they are kept in only a week, or perhaps a fortnight. The doctor's week comes every month.
5124. Who was the patient that was kept in for four weeks? A blind girl, I think.
5125. Whom was she kept in by? By Dr. Mackellar.
5126. In this instance, you have no doubt that this was given as a reason for keeping the patient in,—that the patient must wait until the surgeon's week came? Yes; they have constantly said so.
5127. Said so openly? Yes; "Wait until my week." When the patient was nearly well, I asked whether he would discharge her; and he said, "Wait until my week comes."
5128. The patient being obviously quite well enough to be discharged? Yes.
5129. Mr. Gould.] Would that involve the retaining of the patient in the hospital for a month longer than is necessary? No; it seldom happens that a patient is detained for a month; that is the only case.
5130. President.] Are you acquainted with the two systems of making up the diet lists which have been in force here? Yes, very well.
5131. The one that has been disused and the one now in force? Yes.
5132. Which, in your opinion, was the best system? The first one,—the lady superintendent's system, certainly. There could not be greater confusion than there is now in the diets. The patients do not get what they are ordered; sometimes too much is sent up, and the waste is very much greater.
5133. Under the present system? Certainly.
5134. What kind of irregularities occur now under the present system? All kinds. I have known one dish to come up for three months after the patient for whom it was ordered has gone out; and very often if an egg is ordered, the patient will not get it for three or four days at all. I have known a doctor order a chop for six days for one patient, and she has never had it.
5135. How long has she been without it after it was ordered? For six days. And a doctor has written down "A chop for six days," and it has never come up; and when I have sent down to the house steward about it, he has sent back word that he hadn't it down on his list, and he would not send it. Then I got the house surgeon to report it, and he wrote it in large letters on the card, and then it came up. Since then I have not complained at all; but the irregularity of the diets is a source of constant worry.
5136. It was no use reporting it? No. There was one dish came up every day for three weeks that was never ordered at all.
5137. Never ordered at all? No, never ordered for anybody.
5138. Mr. Gould.] Did I understand you to say that a dish was sent up for a patient for three months after he had gone out? Yes. It was sago pudding; because the alteration of the diet was in my handwriting it was never altered, and the dish came up for three months after, and it has only stopped a little while ago.
5139. How came it to be stopped finally? I do not know; it stopped at last. Then there is great waste now in another way. When we made out the diet lists, if the children had more than they could eat, I used to put down less on the list, and it would not come up. Now there is a great deal of waste from people being unable to use what is sent up for them. The milk is very much wasted now. I have 2 pints over every day at tea-time, though there is not so much waste in that now as there was a short time ago.
5140. President.] Then it is your opinion that the old plan was more economical than the present one? Yes, it was much better for the patients—much more regular.
5141. Do you know how it was that the present system came into operation, and that the former system was done away with? I believe the former system was done away with simply as an insult to us. My diet-lists, and the others too, were correct, though with regard to my list—
5142. Mr. Gould.] Insult from whom? I suppose that it was altered by the Board—the committee.
5143. President.] But who originated the alteration? I do not know.
5144. You said something of your own list? Yes. My list was correct, it was perfectly correct—all the lists were correct—so that the system was not disused through any incorrectness of ours. Besides, the system was better for the patients in another way. Very often in a very bad case the surgeon has told me to order anything that the patient could eat from day to day; now that is impossible. They used to leave a great deal to me. Of course they could trust me so far.
5145. Then as far as you are concerned, you can say that there was absolutely no ground for stating that there was waste under the former system of nurses making up the diets? Not in the least.
5146. But on the contrary, there was economy in it? Yes, certainly.
5147. We are told that the practice is now for some boy to come up and take the cards, and he takes just what he sees fit? Yes, it is left principally to two little boys—very small boys; they take down the cards.
5148. Are these boys, you think, from their age and character, equal to the duty? No, not at all. They are very young boys.
5149. Have you ever brought these matters under the attention of any members of the committee visiting the institution, or have you simply gone on with the altered system without complaining? They said once that I was wrong about some diets that I could not get. They were No. 2 diets, which are important diets, and I was short and could not get it altered. I told the house surgeon and the manager, and the house steward said that they were correct. I got the surgeons to count the diets over, and they found that I was right and these diets were short.
5150. How long were they short? For several days.
5151. Have you known any diets to be sent up for dead patients? No, I cannot remember. I never have any where I am now; but they are very often sent up for patients who have left.
- 5152.

5152. Did they ever come up more than twelve hours longer than the time within which it was necessary for the discharge to be conveyed to the manager? Yes, frequently. Miss Gertrude Moule.
5153. How long have you known diets to come up for a patient after that patient has been discharged? It is very difficult to tell you that. Sometimes there are too many loaves come up, and sometimes too little butter, and in that way I judge that the wrong diet has come up. 3 June, 1873.
5154. How many more loaves have come up than have been required? Sometimes very many. I cannot tell exactly how many; I have had a whole ward short. There were on one occasion eleven loaves short. The nurse went to the cook and told him of it, but the cook would not give her any; she went to the house steward and the house steward sent her back to the cook, and while she was looking after the loaves her own breakfast bell rang. However, she got them at last.
5155. From whom did she get them? From the cook.
5156. There were on that occasion eleven loaves short? Yes.
5157. Mr. Ellis.] Why would not the cook give the loaves? I do not know. I have heard the nurses complain of the same thing. When they go to the cook for loaves that have not been sent up, he will not give them without an order from the house steward.
5158. Mr. Gould.] When you speak of loaves, you mean the small ones for the patients? Yes; each patient has a loaf.
5159. President.] What becomes of the food when there is too much sent up? The whole loaves are always sent back to the kitchen, but if a loaf is cut at all they will not take it, and it is then put into the piece-box.
5160. Mr. Gould.] Is there any reason why, if a loaf is merely cut, it should be put into the piece-box? No, I do not see at all why it should be. I have often wondered why it was.
5161. President.] Do you think that there is a waste of bread in that way? There is a great waste of bread. They will not take back a cut loaf, and patients' loaves are very often merely cut and sent down.
5162. Are they not made into bread puddings? Those are the whole loaves; I know that they will take back no cut loaves, but only the whole loaves.
5163. Has it ever come under your notice that some of the honorary medical officers allow patients to violate the rules of the institution, and when violations have been reported to them have passed them over? Yes.
5164. Have you known that to occur more than once? Yes.
5165. Do you observe that it happens more frequently with some of the medical men than with others? Yes.
5166. Do you know of any rule that is now violated in the wards under your charge, and knowingly violated with the consent of the honorary medical officers? Yes; there are patients wearing their own clothes.
5167. Do you know whether the attention of the honorary medical officers has been called to this violation of the rules? Yes.
5168. Have you yourself drawn their attention to it? Yes, I have.
5169. Do you believe that the fact of the medical officers allowing such violations of the rules after you have reported them is calculated to weaken your authority in the wards? Yes, certainly, for I have taken away the clothes from them, and then I have had to get them back next day, after explaining when I took them that I only deprived them of their clothes because it was my duty to do so, and I suppose that when they got them back they thought that I had no authority to take them away—that I did it merely for the sake of annoying them. Besides, only the patients of one doctor are allowed to violate the rules in this way.
5170. How many doctors visit these wards? Four.
5171. And only one allows this violation of the rules? Yes.
5172. Does he do it habitually? Yes.
5173. What is his name? Dr. McKay.
5174. And you think that this conduct produces a feeling of insubordination among the patients,—that when they see one doctor allowing the rules to be violated they become discontented because they are not allowed the same liberty? Yes: patients who are kept in order are much more satisfied, I believe, than those who are allowed to have their own way, because the latter want more and more, and think that they must have just what they like. I have no difficulty with the patients of the other doctors.
5175. The patients who give you the most trouble are those who are favoured in this way? Yes; I do not think they get on quite as well themselves, or are as contented as those who are obliged to conform to the rules.
5176. Was there a Mrs. Ross in your ward some time ago? Yes.
5177. She has told us that she was not seen by the medical man in whose charge she was, for a fortnight after her admission: do you know how that came about? I do not know, except that most likely the surgeon was ill. He certainly did not attend very often, but whenever he had a case he always attended to it except when he was ill.
5178. Did Mrs. Ross complain to you that no doctor had seen her? Yes; and I heard her complain to one of the other doctors too; but her own surgeon knew of her being there. He knew that nothing was required for her just then, otherwise he would have been there.
5179. Mr. Cowper.] Who was her own surgeon? Dr. Jones. Dr. Jones knew of the case being there well enough. I think she was there over a week before he came to see her. I do not think that it was quite a fortnight.
5180. President.] She was waiting, I believe, for a decision as to whether she should be operated upon—it was not a case requiring attendance every day? No. Dr. Jones kept her in for three weeks, to make up his mind whether she should be operated upon; and he told her that there was nothing to be done for the present.
5181. Do you think there was any neglect? Not the least, on Dr. Jones's part.
5182. In your opinion, she received while she was in the Infirmary all the attention that the nature of the case required? Certainly.
5183. It was finally decided not to operate, and she was discharged? Yes.
5184. Mr. Gould.] Do you know whether Miss Osburn had any intercourse with her during the time that she was in the Infirmary? I think it is very likely that she had not, but I do not remember. The lady superintendent

Miss Gertrude Moule. superintendent does not generally speak to the patients unless it is some bad case, or unless the patient wishes to speak to her. This patient was of course quite well—she was up and well. I do not think it is likely that the lady superintendent would have spoken to her unless she first spoke to the lady superintendent.

3 June, 1873.

5185. Did she go through the wards as usual? Yes.

5186. President.] If it has been represented that she was never in the ward during the time that this patient was there, would that be true? No, certainly not. She is always in the wards three times a day, and sometimes oftener. She is always there at least twice a day. I have never known her to be absent more than that.

5187. This woman could have spoken to her if she had wished to do so? Yes. She saw her at least twice a day, and generally oftener.

5188. You say that the lady superintendent generally goes through the wards three times a day? Yes.

5189. At what hours? The first thing in the morning, between 6 and 7, then she goes through at about 11 o'clock, and again the last thing at night when the night nurses go on duty.

5190. If it has been represented that Miss Osburn takes no interest in the institution, and takes no interest in her duties, and is constantly away from the Infirmary for days together—is that correct, do you think? Certainly not. I think that she takes the greatest interest in everything connected with the institution, and does her very best for it in every way.

5191. Do you remember any occasion on which Mr. Paxton and Mr. Pearce visited the Infirmary, for the purpose of making some examination with reference to the vermin in the place? Yes.

5192. Do you remember Miss Osburn being away on that occasion? Yes, she was away the night before, and came back about 9:30 o'clock in the morning.

5193. She was here in the day-time, but for whatever time she was away it was at night? Yes.

5194. She returned every morning? Yes. I think she was away for three evenings and nights. She came back every morning, and remained until late in the afternoon.

5195. I think we were told that you were left in charge on that occasion? No, not on that occasion. I have been left in charge, but not then. There was no occasion to leave any one in charge then.

5196. Is it true that Miss Osburn is constantly away? No, she is very seldom away. She has only been away four times, once after illness when the doctors ordered her away. They wanted her to stay away longer than she did. She was ten days away on that occasion. Another time she went to settle a nurse in a country hospital.

5197. That was one of the four occasions to which you refer? Yes.

5198. Mr. Cowper.] But she has been away on more occasions than that for a day or two? Oh, she may have been away for one day; I do not think for more; I really cannot remember.

5199. Does she not sometimes go to Camden Park on a Sunday? I believe once I can remember her going there, and staying from Saturday until Monday; and Camden Park was where she went to when the doctors ordered her to go up the country.

5200. Mr. Gould.] When she does go away on these occasions, she leaves persons in charge of the Infirmary, to see that things will go on properly in her absence, without any detriment to the management of the Infirmary? Yes.

5201. President.] When these gentlemen, Mr. Paxton and Mr. Pearce, came round, did you represent to them that Miss Osburn's being away was an habitual thing? Certainly not. I did not know that she was away, because she did not go until late in the evening. I see nothing of her in the evening after work is done.

5202. Are you aware of any irregularities in the sending up of medicines to the wards? Very great indeed. It is very difficult to get medicines or anything else we want from the dispensary. There is a rule that the nurses shall not go to the dispensary, but my nurses are constantly going down there.

5203. For what purpose? To get things for the patients which they cannot get otherwise.

5204. We were told that it was at one time the rule to send up a supply of linseed meal, and things of that kind, to last for a week, and that this system was put a stop to: are you aware of that? It was long before I went up there.

5205. You are not aware of any alteration having been made yourself? No. I have sent the boy three times down for tow to make poultices, and he could not get it, and I had to go down myself three times after that.

5206. To what do you attribute the delay? I suppose that very often the boy forgets things, but sometimes the delay is caused by neglect on the part of the dispensers. Ointments are kept down in the dispensary for days sometimes, and often we have to send all over the hospital to borrow what we want, otherwise the patients would be left without.

5207. You have to borrow from other wards? Yes. We have sometimes to send over the whole hospital to borrow things. Medicines have sometimes not been sent for a long time after they were ordered. It used to be very bad some time ago, but it has not been so bad lately. The nurses used to be constantly running down to the dispensary to get things which had not been sent up. I have known a draught to be ordered for a patient at 11 o'clock in the accident ward, to be given immediately, and it has not come up until late in the afternoon.

5208. These boys are very young, are they not? Yes, but that would not be the boys' fault; that would be the fault of the dispenser.

5209. What would? The draught not coming up until late in the afternoon, when it was ordered at 11 in the morning.

5210. Have you known medicines go to the wrong wards? Very often indeed. I have often sent down to the dispensary for a lotion which has been ordered and has not come up, and they say that it has been sent, and afterwards it may come from some ward to which it has been taken by mistake.

5211. Have you a difficulty in obtaining water? Yes, very often indeed. Sometimes the patients are not able to wash till water has been carried up-stairs by the nurses for them.

5212. In the morning? Yes.

5213. I thought the water was only cut off in the afternoon? Yes. I am speaking of the up-stairs wards, to which the water has to be pumped up. There is often no water there in the morning.

5214. Whose fault is that? The yardsman does not pump.

5215. Have you complained about this? Yes, hundreds of times since I have been here.

5216. Does the yardsman give any reason why he does not pump the water up? He says that we let the water run away to waste. He is a terribly lazy man—he will not pump. Miss Gertrude Moule.

5217. Is there any great waste of the water, as far as you see? No. Perhaps once in a month or so, one of the children may leave the tap running; it does not often happen. The want of water is exceedingly inconvenient. The nurses have to carry all the hot water up-stairs in the morning, and that might be avoided, because there is hot water in the night and till 6 o'clock in the morning, and there is no more after that. 3 June, 1873.

5218. Did you notice vermin in the building when you first came here? Yes, a great quantity.

5219. Have you, and the nurses under you, done your best to see that the vermin were kept down? Yes. It is very difficult indeed to keep them down in the old building.

5220. Do you know whether the efforts of the lady superintendent have been directed to keeping down the vermin? Yes, she has always asked us about it—asked whether we have had the beds cleaned.

5221. And are they cleaned? Yes, as often as they can be.

5222. What has prevented their being cleaned? It is very difficult in the accident ward. I was there for two years in charge of it. In the accident ward it is very difficult, because there are many patients who cannot be moved off their beds, and then the moment a man can be moved another is put into his place; still the beds were cleaned as often as we could manage to do it.

5223. Did it appear to you that the vermin were in such positions in the walls and in the skirting that they could not be kept down by ordinary cleaning? Certainly; they are all in the walls. I have seen them in hundreds in the window-sills.

5224. Do you know whether the vermin were ever pointed out to the committee? Oh yes; they have scarcely ever come round to look through the wards without my pointing out to them the miserable state of the whole building—the walls, ceiling, and floor—and the impossibility of keeping the bugs away.

5225. What have they said when these things were pointed out to them? They were always talking about alterations that were to be carried out.

5226. Mr. Goold.] Did the honorary secretaries know of it? I think so. One of the secretaries I seldom saw in the wards.

5227. Who was that? Mr. Stephen.

5228. Did Mr. Lewers, the late clerical secretary, know of it? I should think that he certainly must, but I cannot say that I have had much to do with him. He preferred always speaking to the nurses and asking them, and leaving me out, so of course I have not had much to do with him; and it was very much the same when other members of the committee have come. Any questions which they wanted to ask, they have put to the nurses and not to me.

5229. Mr. Lewers would ask the nurses questions instead of you? Yes; he never spoke to me if he could possibly help it, and there were other members of the committee the same.

5230. Can you assign any reason for their doing so? No, I do not know why it was at all.

5231. President.] Do you think that the course pursued by members of the committee coming into the wards and interfering with the servants is calculated to destroy your authority? I should think so. They have certainly, I think, tried to destroy our authority in that way.

5232. Did it appear to you that the influence of the committee was rather against your authority? Yes, most certainly.

5233. Have you drawn that conclusion from anything you have seen in the bearing of the nurses and servants to those who are in authority over them? I have not seen much of the interference of the committee with the nurses myself, except in the way I have described. Sometimes they have spoken to me just as they speak to other nurses, calling me "nurse," and never attempting to show me the slightest respect of any kind, and of course the nurses all notice that at once.

5234. Mr. Goold.] Do you think that that is in consequence of the alteration in the name? Yes; they could not have called me "nurse" before the name was altered.

5235. Then in calling you "nurse," they were simply following out the resolution that had been passed by the Board? Yes.

5236. President.] But the resolution was that you should be called "head nurses"? Yes; I believe that it was understood that we should be called by our names—but they call us "Nurse Moule," and "Nurse Whytlaw," and so on.

5237. Mr. Ellis.] Are some members of the committee much more officious than others? Yes; very few of them come round at all except the house visitors. There are some who come and give orders which I think they have no business to give.

5238. Mr. Goold.] Do they come now much more frequently than they used to do? Yes, the new ones do.

5239. Mr. Ellis.] Are they ever rude to you? No, I cannot say that they have ever been rude to me.

5240. President.] Have they ignored you? Yes.

5241. And preferred dealing with the servants of the institution rather than with the officers? Yes.

5242. Do you know of a gentleman who shouted out from the opposite side of the street to put the windows up? Yes.

5243. Have you ever had a member of the committee shout out to you from Macquarie-street to open the windows? Yes. It was in the morning. I had just gone into the ward, and I asked the nurse what she was doing, and she said that this member of the committee had called out to her and told her to put up the windows. I thought that he had no right to do it, and so I shut them again.

5244. I suppose in some cases that it is necessary to keep the windows closed? Yes. This was at 6 o'clock in the morning.

5245. Mr. Goold.] Do you know the member of the committee? Yes; it was Mr. Josephson; it is the second time he has ordered the same thing. The surgeons themselves have always left it to me. The surgeons have sometimes said there was too much draught in the ward, and had a window shut. In this case the nurse was ordered to put up the windows, and the next time he came it was worse, for he came late at night and ordered the same thing.

5246. How often does he visit the Infirmary? I think only in his own week, when he is one of the house visitors.

5247. President.] Have you experienced any inconvenience in the management of the wards, from medical men performing operations on a Sunday which appeared to be unnecessarily performed on that day? They are generally unnecessarily performed on Sunday, except for the reason that the doctor has more time

- Miss Gertrude time then. It is for his own convenience that he does it. I have not known a case in which it was necessary for the patient to be operated upon on Sunday. There might have been such cases, but none of my cases were of such a kind.
- 3 June, 1873. 5248. Do the doctors prefer to perform operations on a Sunday? Only two of them.
5249. Who are they? Dr. McKay and Dr. Fortescue.
5250. Is this more than an occasional thing? Yes, it is very much the case.
5251. Do you find that this practice disturbs the repose of the hospital on Sunday, and causes additional labour to the nurses? Yes, of course an operation always gives a good deal of trouble and extra work.
5252. Mr. Ellis.] Is it a fact that Mr. Josephson was over here every day, Sundays and all? I have never seen him. I have seen him very seldom. I see him regularly in his own week. He comes round with a pencil and piece of paper, and asks the patients if they have any complaints to make.
5253. Do you think it is a fact that "there is not one of the directors who knows as much about the institution as he does"? I do not believe he knows anything about it.
5254. Mr. Josephson says that the nursing staff consists of "nothing but common servant women": is that the case? I think that the surgeons are the best judges of that.
5255. Mr. Cowper.] He also tells us that Miss Osburn is utterly unfit to engage nurses. Who do you think would be the proper person to see any persons applying for a situation on the nursing staff,—the lady superintendent or the medical officers? The lady superintendent. I do not see how the medical officer could do it at all.
5256. What could a person ascertain as to an applicant's qualifications for the position of nurse, at a first interview? I suppose she could not tell much at the first interview. She could only tell whether she had got good references.
5257. How long is it before you can form an opinion as to the capabilities of a person? A month or six weeks generally. They are all supposed to come for a month or six weeks on trial, head nurses and all.
5258. I suppose that you find some people take to it naturally, and understand it better than others? Yes, certainly.
5259. But it takes some weeks before you can form an opinion? Yes, before you can tell at all whether a person will make a good nurse or not.
5260. President.] Do you find that the younger people pick up the training and the ways of the place sooner than old persons? Yes, much sooner; older persons are much more difficult to teach. They do not like to be taught. They think that they know everything, and they never make such good nurses.
5261. Is there anything that you wish to state yourself with respect to the place? I think not.
5262. Mr. Cowper.] Can you state anything with regard to the improvement of the place—anything that you feel great inconvenience from—anything particularly bad in the cooking, for instance? The whole institution is in a very bad state, in almost every way. Everything seems done in a confusion. There is so very little order in any way.
5263. President.] Do you include the management of the nursing staff in that? That can scarcely help following the rule. Of course if there is no order in any other department, it is impossible that there can be perfect order in the nursing staff, especially where some are so young; but that is not the fault of its management, but of the want of order in the other departments of the institution.
5264. Do you find that the cooking of delicacies for patients who are very ill is sometimes badly done? Yes, I do not think that they are very careful about those things.
5265. Mr. Cowper.] You said that the doctor told you to see yourself what a patient would like, and to order it—Do you find a difficulty in getting delicacies ordered in that way, sent up in such a way as to be tempting to the patient? No, I don't think so. They often send up things that the patients think are not nicely cooked.

G. A. Mansfield, Esq., architect, called in and examined:—

- G. A. Mansfield, Esq.
- 3 June, 1873.
5266. President.] You are an architect carrying on business in Sydney? I am.
5267. Have you prepared some plans of proposed alterations and additions to this building? Yes, I have. I have them with me, if you would like to look at them. [Plans handed in. See Separate Appendix.]
- This is the ground floor. It is proposed on the ground floor, first of all, to remodel the old wards, by enlarging the window and door openings, by stripping and replastering the walls, so as to give them an impervious surface, and by putting a new ceiling, also impervious to gases—a ceiling chiefly of metal; repairing and altering the floors, so as to make them non-absorbent of water. These comprise the alterations of the old work, with the exception of general repairs. The new work would consist in the formation of a hall through the centre of the building, and the addition of a front block of buildings, comprising on the ground floor an entrance hall, Board-room, library, and room for the medical men.
5268. One room for the medical men? Yes, one room there. This is more for a medical library.
5269. Is there more than one room for them? There are other rooms in different places for them for other purposes. In each corner of the front elevation it is proposed to build a nurses'-room, so that these wards may be under the constant supervision of the nurses at night—that is, the head nurses. Then, coming to the back, it is proposed to put a wide flight of steps to the back yard and leading to the kitchen offices.
5270. Which it is proposed to erect on the site of the present kitchen? At each side of that there is a back staircase to be erected. These staircases lead up to the balcony. There seemed to be a deficiency in the means of getting patients down from the upper stories in case of fire, and I provided two additional staircases. The block of kitchen offices comprises a kitchen and scullery, with a laundry attached to it, a boiler and steam-engine for general purposes. There is also a store-room, with a wardsman's-room, and three bed-rooms for the men.
5271. Is the kitchen arranged with a view to cooking by steam? Precisely so—here is a boiler for that purpose. The apparatus would stand here (referring to ground plan), under the light of those windows.
5272. Mr. Ellis.] Do the alterations include arrangements for conveying water up-stairs? They do—both hot and cold water. These two little square blocks here (referring to ground plan) are in the elevation carried up as towers, and upon the top of each of these there is a large iron tank to hold a supply of water, at such an elevation as to give service to every part of the building. There is a force-pump to throw the water up to that height from the city mains, because it will not rise to that height by gravitation.

5273. President.] Is there any provision made for tanks in other parts of the building? No, not in other parts of the building. There is a provision made for attaching the engine-pump to the tank which now exists in the yard, and which I propose to clean out and arch over with brick. There is a provision for that, so that in the event of the Sydney water being suddenly cut off we can draw upon the reservoir.

5274. Were you informed that there never was any water in the building after a certain hour every day? Yes, I was instructed to that effect.

5275. Mr. Ellis.] What quantity of water will that tank hold? I do not know exactly, but I should think about 25,000 gallons.

5276. Mr. Goold.] The whole of the present kitchen comes down? Yes, entirely.

5277. President.] Have you any arrangements with reference to lavatories and water-closets? Yes, a complete remodelling of these is intended. I think it will save some trouble if I put in as evidence this report which was drawn up by me. [Report handed in. See Appendix G.]

5278. Does this report contain a summary of the proposed improvements and alterations? It does.

5279. Does it contain estimates of the cost of the alterations? Yes, it does.

5280. Can you tell us, by reference to it, the estimated amount of the proposed additions and alterations?

The cost of the new buildings and the alterations, including the new mortuary, amounts to £15,452.

5281. Mr. Ellis.] What will the alterations of the old part alone cost? £3,325.

5282. President.] What makes the great difference between the two amounts? The new buildings.

5283. The new kitchen and the new front? Yes.

5284. And the new dead-house? Yes.

5285. Mr. Cowper.] Would these alterations of the old building make it perfect: we are told, for instance, that the bugs cannot be got out of it? I cannot accept that opinion at all. I believe that the bugs can be effectually got under.

5286. President.] Would it require the taking up of the floors? I do not think so, but the walls should be entirely refaced—stripped to the bare bricks; there must be new window-frames, new ceilings, and the floors must be thoroughly overhauled, to make them quite impervious to water. These are the works which are included in the £3,325.

5287. You have, in preparing these plans, directed your attention to the modern ideas which are promulgated with reference to hospital construction? Yes, I have made them my special study.

5288. And have you borne this reformed style of hospital architecture in mind? I have. I have laid out these improvements in accordance with the most modern views on the subject. In the report I have laid before you, you will see a number of buildings mentioned of which I have made special study for that purpose.

5289. Do your plans make any alteration in the drainage of the building? No, I think not.

5290. Mr. Ellis.] Do you think it is desirable to have the lavatories and water-closets so close to each other as they are? I see no objection to it, if they are properly attended to and cleaned: not only so, but they are always associated together; they are so in the St. Thomas's Hospital, and in the Victoria Hospital at Netley, and others.

5291. Are they in the same rooms there? In adjoining apartments.

5292. President.] You say that that is so in all modern hospitals at Home? In many cases it is.

5293. They are separated from each other by walls, are they not? No, in the majority of cases they are separated only by partitions.

5294. Your alterations propose that the present system of the water-closets opening into the wards shall be altered? Yes, none will open into the wards. I propose to alter that, and in every instance the entrances to the water-closets and lavatories will be in the lobbies.

5295. Where do you propose to build an upper story? I do not propose to build a new story over the main building. This is a plan of the alterations proposed in the first floor (referring to first-floor plan). This contemplates the erection of two entirely new wards, one over the front block of the building, to which is attached nurse's room, lavatory, and water-closets; and the other new ward is over the block of kitchen offices.

5296. Is that intended as a fever ward? I cannot tell you to what purpose it is intended to apply it. I suggested that it should be a ward for contagious cases, because it is thoroughly well isolated from the others. The floor would be constructed so that no heat or vapour could ascend to it from the kitchen offices, and it would be sound-proof.

5297. In what part of the premises is it proposed to erect the new dead-house? The south-eastern corner, near the south wing. While on this subject I may say that there is a new operating-theatre provided here, to which is attached a surgeon's room.

5298. Have these plans been approved of by the committee? Yes, they have.

5299. Mr. Ellis.] Which is the operating-room? This (referring to plan of first-floor) is the operating-room.

5300. Is that not too close to the wards—do you not think the smell would pass into the wards? No, there is no smell from it. There is no dissecting done there. A dissecting-room is provided in the mortuary. The operating-room must be near the wards; it is for amputations and operations upon living patients.

5301. President.] Is your plan prepared on the present scale of prices? No, it was prepared nine months ago, so that the prices will now be slightly augmented.

5302. What addition would you make to the prices? From 10 to 15 per cent.

5303. Did you give us the estimate of the cost of the new buildings in the front? The northern building £800, the southern building £1,000.

5304. What are these alterations to these buildings? They comprise the erection of a new story upon the southern front building, to give improved accommodation to the medical staff and the man in charge of the premises.

5305. Does it provide for two rooms in which the resident surgeons may see in-coming patients? No, it does not.

5306. Does it propose an additional room at all of that character? No, there is no addition for that purpose.

5307. Does it contemplate any alterations of the present dispensary or additions to it? None whatever.

5308. Was your attention in any way directed to these matters? No, it was not.

G. A.
Mansfield,
Esq.

June, 1873.

G. A.
Mansfield,
Esq.

3 June, 1873.

5309. What additions were you asked to prepare plans for with regard to the southern front building? Improved accommodation for the gate-keeper and the dispensing staff.
5310. In respect of residence? Yes. You see there is a dining-room, and all the rest are bed-rooms.
5311. Is this an additional story? Yes, an upper story on the present one.
5312. Are there any additions to the dispensary itself? No additions at all.
5313. Has any provision been made in the plans by you for an additional private sitting-room for the resident medical officers? Yes, in the northern front building, by the addition of an extra story—the upper story that is here provided for.
5314. Do your plans contemplate any additional bath accommodation? In the hospital itself?
5315. Yes? No, I think not—no additional bath accommodation, except such as is attached to the new wards.
5316. Mr. Cowper.] And no change in the water-closets? A remodelling of them, but not any alteration in the position. I do not think that the position of the water-closets could be very well improved. It corresponds with what is adopted in most new hospitals very nearly indeed.
5317. President.] Has your attention been directed to the drainage under the building? No, it has not.
5318. Your attention was not directed by the committee to the drainage under the base of the present old building? No, it was not.
5319. Do you see any difficulty in draining and ventilating it? I do not think that it requires any drainage. It stands upon the crest of a hill, and drains itself. It may require ventilation.
5320. Do you contemplate doing away with those ugly sinks? Yes, but I may say that is not shown upon the plans. These plans must be taken merely as a general scheme, not yet altogether worked out into detail. There is a great amount of detail to be considered and planned.
5321. In working out these plans would there be extras—the usual little bill of extras? Oh no. I think that the estimate provides sufficiently for all contingencies of that kind.
5322. Mr. Metcalfe.] The walls are sufficiently strong to bear the alterations and repairs you contemplate? Quite so. I propose to enlarge all the openings considerably.
5323. President.] You consider that it would be unwise to pull down this building? I consider that it would be a great waste of money.
5324. Mr. Cowper.] It should be roofed afresh? Yes, with slate.
5325. Mr. Ellis.] Assuming that it is necessary that these bath-rooms and waterclosets should be so close together, do you not think that they should be separated by a brick or stone wall or partition? Yes, I think that a division between them is desirable.
5326. There is nothing but a wooden partition between them now? No.
5327. Mr. Gould.] Do you propose to do anything with the Domain wall? Yes. I have another plan to bring under your notice. It is proposed to take that wall down and replace it with two dwarf stone walls with iron railings, with an interval of 15 feet between each wall, the object being to grow trees within the space, in order to shut out the view, and also to prevent people outside from throwing tobacco and other articles in to the patients, as I believe that they now do. In the meantime, while the trees are growing, it is proposed to line them with a temporary wooden screen, to prevent exposing the grounds to view from the Domain.
5328. What is to be the height of the railing? 7 feet 6 inches. I am of opinion that that would be a more effectual means of preventing communication than the present solid stone wall. I have also to bring under your notice the plans of the mortuary. These are not exactly the adopted plans, which are now in course of preparation, but they are so near that they may almost be taken as the same. This is the building that it is proposed to erect at the end of the south wing. There is a basement story which is rendered necessary by the fact that we must get a drainage to Macquarie-street, and in order to do that we must elevate the floor of the dead-house to a certain height. There is no drainage from the mortuary at present.
5329. Have the bodies to be carried up to that floor? The bodies will be carried up by a lift at one end of the mortuary.
5330. Inside of course? Yes, inside. The bodies are laid upon that and raised into the mortuary, which is fitted up with shelves for seven bodies. These bodies will be lifted up to that floor. Adjoining that room is a room for post mortem examinations, and adjoining that a surgeon's room, where they wash their hands, keep instruments, &c. Then the basement is a store-room for coffins, shelter for hearses, and so on.
5331. Mr. Metcalfe.] What is the estimated cost of that? About £1,000.
5332. What is the length of the building? 56 feet.
5333. Mr. Gould.] Have you any room provided for the clothes, to take the place of the clothes-house down there? There is no room at present provided on these plans, but it has been kept in view that such a room will be wanted. It will be better to erect a separate room for that purpose, entirely disconnected with anything else.
5334. President.] Within what distance of the ceiling do the proposed windows come? Within a foot or less; that I mention in the report.
5335. Mr. Metcalfe.] Do you think that any amount of whitewashing or cleaning can keep the wards now free from bugs? No, I am quite sure that no amount of cleaning could do it, because they are in the plaster, and they have such a secure shelter that it is quite impossible to get at them; and they are in the window-frames and in the ceilings too.

Mrs. Jessie Whytlaw, head nurse, Sydney Infirmary, called in and examined:—

Mrs. Jessie
Whytlaw.

3 June, 1873.

5336. President.] You are one of the head nurses or sisters of the Sydney Infirmary? Yes, I am.
5337. How long have you been here? I have been here two years now.
5338. You were trained entirely in the institution? Yes, entirely.
5339. You live in the Nightingale wing? Yes.
5340. What salary do you receive? £40 a year.
5341. If it has been represented to us that you get £60, that is not the fact? It is quite untrue.
5342. You began I suppose as a probationer? Yes, as probationary sister when I joined.
5343. As far as you have seen, are the nursing staff—the lady superintendent, the head nurses, and the nurses—working harmoniously together? Yes, very much so indeed.

5344. Are you aware of any dissension or ill-feeling existing among them as a body? No, none whatever; I think that they all agree remarkably well.

5345. As far as you have observed, is the lady superintendent fair and just in her management of those under her? Yes, exceedingly so, and she is exceedingly kind—takes a very great interest in us all, so far as I have seen.

5346. Is it true that she systematically gets rid of the best nurses and those who have been for any time in the institution? As far as I know it is not true. I do not know of any cases of the kind.

5347. Were you here when the title "sister" was changed to that of "head nurse"? No, it was before I came here that the change was made.

5348. Which title do you think would be best, as far as regards the maintenance of your authority and your power of preserving the discipline of the wards—do you think you should be called "sister" or "head nurse"? The term "sister" would be much better. We should have more authority in the wards over both nurses and patients if we were called "sisters."

5349. What is the effect, as far as you have observed, of the use of the title which is now given to you? I think it would give us much more influence over the patients if we were called sister; at present we are called by our names, which is very objectionable.

5350. You think that you should have an abstract title—that the individual should be lost in the office? Yes, entirely. It would be better.

5351. Do you think that being addressed by your name gives an opportunity to patients, if they are displeased with you, to be disagreeable and insulting in their manner? Yes, I have experienced it.

5352. You would not be exposed to that if you were called a "sister"? Not at all, but I have experienced the disagreeableness of it since I have been here.

5353. Mr. Goold.] Of being called by your own name? Yes, by my own name.

5354. Mrs. Whytlaw? Yes, that is my proper name.

5355. Mr. Metcalfe.] Do not the patients call you "nurse"? Many of them do.

5356. President.] Thus putting you on a level with the nurses? Yes, it does not give us any power over them at all.

5357. Then your reasons for disliking the change of name are of an entirely practical kind? Yes.

5358. They are not fanciful or sentimental reasons? Not at all.

5359. Are you a Protestant? Yes.

5360. How often does Miss Osburn go round the institution? Three times a day—always as often as that, and sometimes oftener; very frequently oftener than three times a day.

5361. Does she appear to you to take an interest in the institution and in her work? Yes, she does very much indeed, as far as I know. When I tell her of particular cases that I have, special cases, she speaks to the patients and asks about them, and takes an interest in them, and from her I gain a great deal of useful information. Of course there are many patients to whom she may not speak, because they are, some of them, only in for a day or two, and there is nothing particular the matter with them. In that case I do not call her attention to them.

5362. It would be impossible for her to speak to all the patients? Oh, quite impossible, but if any of them have any complaints to make they can always do so.

5363. Have you seen them do so? Oh yes, frequently. The patients have often asked her questions and made complaints.

5364. She is always accessible to them? Yes, and very ready to listen to any complaint, and have whatever is complained of, rectified.

5365. If it has been represented to us that she takes no interest in her work, and does not apply herself, and is constantly away for days together—is that statement borne out by the facts? That is quite a false statement. As for her being constantly away, since I have been here she has only been twice away for a week; once she was ordered away by the doctors for her health, and the other time she went up the country to a hospital. On another occasion she was away I think for three nights, but came in here and attended to her duties in the day.

5366. Was that last absence when Mr. Paxton came here about the vermin? Yes, I think so. She was away at night, but she was here attending to her duties in the day-time; and these are the only occasions, to my knowledge, on which she has been away, in two years.

5367. When she is not absolutely in the wards I suppose there is much to look after? Yes, there is a great deal to look after. She is always accessible to us; if we wish to ask for any advice we can always come over here and find her.

5368. Advice in the management of patients? Yes.

5369. Since you have been here, have you become aware of a division of authority between the lady superintendent and the manager, which is very detrimental to the working of the institution? Yes, I think that it is very noticeable.

5370. In what way is it shown? It is very troublesome to get a man to do anything by the lady superintendent's authority. You have always to appeal to the manager; and in many cases the manager interferes in the wards when he has no occasion to do so.

5371. In what way? Interferes in the management of patients; and, on one or two occasions—two occasions with regard to patients of mine—he has prevented the lady superintendent's orders being carried out. A patient wanted his clothes out to get them aired, and asked the storekeeper to allow him to get his clothes. The storeman refused, and I spoke to the lady superintendent, and she gave the patient an order to get his clothes. The man came back and said they would not give him his clothes, and that the manager had said "What the devil has Miss Osburn to do with it?" The man said that if he had a shilling or two to bribe the storeman with he would have got his clothes.

5372. Mr. Goold.] How long ago was this? A year or fifteen months ago. It was when I was in the male wards. On another occasion something of the same kind occurred. A patient had worn his boots out working for the institution, and they had been in the habit of giving away to such persons the boots of patients who had died. I asked the lady superintendent about it and she gave an order, and I went to the manager, and he wanted to know "what Miss Osburn had to do with it," and he "would be very much obliged to her to mind her own business." I said I thought it was part of her business; and he said that he minded his own business, and she had better mind hers; and the man did not get his boots at all.

Mrs. Jessie
Whytlaw.

June, 1873.

- Mrs. Jessie Whytlaw. 5373. Did the man who wanted his clothes to air, get them? No, he did not get them until he was going out. On many occasions the storeman has treated the male patients in the same way. If he was in a bad temper, or the applicant was some person whom he did not like, he would not give him his clothes, while he would give them to others; it was just as he was in the humour.
- 3 June, 1873. 5374. What is the man's name? Harris.
5375. President.] Do you know anything of an erysipelas patient who was kept waiting twenty-four hours for a tent? Yes, I know of a woman who was kept waiting a day for a tent. That was a patient of mine. Of course it was not my place to order the tent to be put up. I thought the house doctor would have given the manager instructions to do it.
5376. Do you know the cause of the delay in putting up the tent? I do not know the particulars. I only know that the patient was kept waiting a day for it.
5377. Have you observed irregularities in the sending up of the diets? Yes, great irregularities indeed.
5378. Of what kind? Very often if a diet is put on we do not get it in the ward for a day or so, and sometimes after a diet is taken off it will continue to come up for days afterwards.
5379. How long have you known it to come up after being taken off? Sometimes for days, sometimes for a week after it has been discontinued.
5380. Have you known it to come up after the patient for whom it was ordered in the first instance has died? No; in that case it would not come up for more than one day.
5381. Were you here when another system of making up the diet-lists was in force? Yes.
5382. Which system was the best? The other system was much the best.
5383. There were fewer irregularities then? Yes, very much fewer.
5384. Do you think there was any waste then caused by the sisters? I do not see how there could be, because we could not ask for what we did not want. There is more likely to be waste in the medical wards than in the surgical wards, in the way of bread, because in the medical wards many of them cannot eat bread—they are too ill. In my ward, any loaf not cut or touched I return to the kitchen again.
5385. Did not the other system—that of the sisters making up the diet-lists—afford you an opportunity of preventing waste, by ordering no more than the patients could eat: if there were too many rice-puddings and less would be enough, you could order less? I have often, when there were twenty patients on rice-pudding, ordered only sixteen; times out of number I have done that. When a patient is on meat and rice-pudding I gave him a smaller quantity of rice-pudding, but when he was on rice-pudding and had no meat I gave him the full allowance.
5386. Do you know why that system of making up the diets was discontinued? I do not know, except that I think it was principally to give us annoyance. There was a good deal in that. I have noticed that when a patient is taken off an egg or wine, or anything that can be made use of in the store, they send very quickly after it. What use they make of it I do not know. A patient is hardly dead before they will send for the brandy bottle if it has come up for him.
5387. There is on their part then a remarkable desire to save in that respect? Yes; anything that we could make use of they look very sharply after.
5388. Mr. Gould.] Were any complaints made by medical men as to the former system of diets? I remember a patient making a complaint to Mr. Bedford about his not getting a sufficient quantity of rice-pudding.
5389. That was under the old system? Yes, it was.
5390. President.] Did that complaint arise out of this system of making out the diet-lists? Not at all; it had no connection with it.
5391. Did not some case of that kind lead to the alteration—some one must have suggested the alteration—you have no idea what circumstances led to the alteration? No, I do not know, except that it was represented that we did make a great many mistakes in the diet-lists, which I am sure we did not.
5392. What mistakes did they say you made? Have an extra pint of milk, or put a patient on an egg and make use of it ourselves.
5393. Mr. Gould.] Who would make these representations? I do not know, unless the manager or the house-steward made them.
5394. Was anything said by the directors? When I was in the south wing they used to send up a great many more eggs than were required, and I made quite a large collection of them. The lady superintendent told me to keep them for the committee room, but they became so offensive that I had to throw them away.
5395. Were these eggs not required? No; the patients were gone out, and the eggs still came up for them.
5396. Were complaints made to the visiting committee about the diets, by the patients? I do not think that my patients ever did; they did not make any complaints, so far as I know, about the diets.
5397. President.] Have you observed any irregularities in the sending up of the medicine from the dispensary? Yes, very great.
5398. Mr. Metcalfe.] Does that continue? Not so much in the medicine as in getting tow and linseed-meal.
5399. President.] Are you aware that there used to be a weekly supply of those things sent up into the wards? Yes, for a short time, and that was a very great convenience.
5400. Why was that supply stopped? I do not know. It was stopped.
5401. Do you think that there was any waste? I do not see how there could have been any waste. Linseed-meal could not be eaten, and one does not generally put on more poultices than are required.
5402. Do you know what becomes of the whole loaves that are sent down to the kitchen? I do not know, unless they are used to make puddings. The patients have bread puddings twice a week.
5403. Have you experienced any inconvenience from the medical men performing their operations on Sundays? When I was in the surgical ward it was very inconvenient, and could have been done at any other time. It causes much unnecessary work.
5404. Keeps the nurses cleaning up? Yes; it prevents them from going to church; they have to stop at home and work.
5405. Does it not disturb the quiet of the Sunday? Yes, it is very inconvenient to have operations going on.
5406. You can say that they have been unnecessarily performed on Sunday? Yes, quite so, because they could have been done on Saturday or Monday, many times when they have been done on the Sunday.

5407. Do all the medical men err in this way? Some gentlemen in particular are more fond of it than others.

5408. We must ask you for their names? Mr. Fortescue in particular is very fond of Sunday operations, and Dr. McKay.

5409. You stated that there was more than one? Dr. McKay is, I think, the only other gentleman who does it. Dr. Bedford and Dr. Jones never visit the hospital on Sunday, except in extreme cases. I have, I think, only known either of them to come once on a Sunday.

5410. You are aware of the way in which the doctors admit the patients, turn and turn about? Yes.

5411. Do you know whether doctors have ever kept in patients who might otherwise be discharged—who keep them in until their week of admission comes round, in order that they may retain their beds? I have known instances of it.

5412. Have you any doubt about it? I have no doubt whatever.

5413. What makes you come to the conclusion that they do so? I have known two instances of patients in my own wards who might have gone out last week, but who have been kept in by the doctors.

5414. You have heard the doctors say that they are well enough to go out? Yes, I have heard the doctors say that they are quite ready to go out, and may go out next week. I suggested another who was ready to go out, and the reply was—"We must not turn them all out this week—we must keep a bed or two for ourselves."

5415. Who was it that said so? It was Dr. McLaurin. I cannot say that I have found that with Dr. Quaiffe, and I have only found it in this instance with Dr. McLaurin.

5416. Are these patients in the hospital now? One went out to-day, and the other will, I suppose, be kept in until a suitable case comes in to take his place.

5417. Mr. Goold.] Are you aware how many times Mr. Josephson visits the Infirmary? I have seen him here twice or three times since I have been here—not more than three times, and he comes round in his own week with a pencil and paper to take notes.

5418. When he does visit, is it his custom to go through the Infirmary? I cannot say; I can only speak of my own wards; I may have seen him once on the lower floor on my side.

5419. President.] When he comes in and makes his inquiries, does he speak to you or to the nurses? He does not come to me at all. He has just walked through and not asked me any questions. Of course I have never volunteered to speak to him.

5420. Has he asked questions of other people? I think I have seen him go to the nurses, and go to the patients and ask them questions.

5421. Mr. Ellis.] Is he right in saying that there is no nursing staff, and that there are no nurses in the establishment? I should say that he was not at all right in saying that there is no nursing staff.

5422. Is he right in saying that they are not nurses at all, but only common servant women? How does he know, I should like to know—he does not spend his days and nights here. There is one thing about the place that I think should be seen to—the water supply is something atrocious.

5423. The supply of both hot and cold water to the wards? Yes, there is a very bad supply. The water is cut off from half-past 2 in the afternoon until about 7 o'clock at night. We have not a drop of water between those hours.

5424. We are told that there are a good many vermin in the building: have you done your best to keep them down? Yes, we have done our best; but when I first came here it was impossible to keep the beds clean in the main building, owing to the state of the walls; in the south wing there are comparatively few vermin. The arrangements and conveniences here are exceedingly bad. In wet weather a female patient has often been compelled to go across to the back of the kitchen to get hot water for washing up.

5425. Mr. Metcalfe.] Have you no gas stoves in the wards? Yes, but they are only intended to heat water for making poultices—you cannot heat gallons of water for washing up with them; they are very small gas stoves.

5426. President.] Do you know whether Miss Osburn has endeavoured to get rid of these bugs? Yes, she has.

5427. Has the attention of the committee been called to them? I have often called their attention to it when they have been passing through my wards, and they have said, "Oh, it will be seen to—the whole place wants renovating"; but nothing was done until quite recently.

5428. Is it your opinion that the vermin were in such positions in the building—in the plastering and window-sills, and so on—that the ordinary cleaning which a woman could do could not keep them down? It would be utterly impossible to keep them down by any ordinary cleaning. I have seen the lady superintendent myself going round with a brush and doing all the walls and window-ledges. It was utterly impossible to keep the place in the state in which it should be.

Mr. Henry D. Russell, clerk, Sydney Infirmary, called in and further examined:—

5429. President.] Can you tell us the number of patients who have been passed as eligible for admission during this week, but who have been refused on account of there being no beds for them? Four persons from the 27th May until to-day.

5430. Mr. Metcalfe.] Are they medical or surgical cases? One medical case, no bed; another medical case, no bed; and two surgical cases refused for the same reason to-day.

5431. President.] How many patients were refused, from the 1st to the 31st May, on the ground of there being no beds? There were 19 refused, 8 of whom were subsequently admitted perhaps a week or a fortnight afterwards. You have required me to furnish you with the information first as to the number of Government patients on whom money has been found during the last twelve months, and the amounts. I am not prepared to give you that information to-day, but will furnish it to you. [See Appendix J for information referred to.] The next question is, the number of Government patients in the hospital on the 1st of June last? There were on that date 142 Government patients, and 82 other patients, making a total of 224. The next question is, how many Government patients have been admitted during the last twelve months? I take it you mean from the 1st January to the 31st December, 1872. There were 1,057 Government patients admitted during the year 1872, and 770 other patients, making a total of 1,827.

- Mr. H. D. Russell. 5432. I want now the number of patients—Government patients—on whom money has been found, and the amounts? The number on whom money has been found is very large, but there are some very trifling amounts. Shall I give you all sums over a pound?
- 3 June, 1873. 5433. Yes, those over a pound, and that will of course include those on whom you find bank deposit receipts? Yes, I will furnish that. [See Appendix J.] The last question is as to the number of patients who have been refused during the month of May on the ground of there being no beds; the answer is, 9 of the Colonial Secretary's patients and 10 subscribers' patients, making a total of 19.

Alfred Roberts, Esq., called in and examined:—

- A. Roberts, Esq. 5434. President.] This Commission has been appointed to inquire into the Public Charities of the Colony, and more particularly in regard to the Sydney Infirmary—to inquire what improvements should be made to bring it under the most improved system of hospital management—to bring it into accordance with modern hospital ideas. I believe you have taken a considerable interest in the matter, and have lately been to England. Perhaps you can offer suggestions to throw a light upon the inquiry. You were, I believe, a long time connected with the Infirmary? I was for eighteen years honorary surgeon to the institution. I went Home in October, 1871, and being anxious to see the hospitals of tropical climates, I visited Bombay. Then I went to Vienna, and completely through Italy and Germany, and travelled different parts of England to see the best hospitals I could meet with. It is rather a broad question.
5435. I think it would be best for you to choose your own method of giving evidence? The first question that suggests itself to my mind is, whether a central hospital is desirable, and I should answer in the affirmative. The next point is, whether the site of the Infirmary is a suitable one for the central hospital; that I should answer in the affirmative, and I should like to add, that in my travels I have not met with more than one site that is its equal. I allude to that of the hospital at Netley, near Southampton.
5436. That is a military hospital? Yes. In making this statement, I take into consideration that it stands on the summit of a hill. There is a street on the front, and the Domain adjoins the grounds; the pure prevailing breezes come fresh from the ocean up the harbour, through the buildings, and the view is beyond measure beautiful. The next point would be the size which a central hospital for a community such as this should be, and I am inclined to think that it should be reduced to a minimum. It is desirable, speaking broadly, that sick patients should be removed out of the centre of the town, not because they want fresher air than they would get in a good hospital upon this site, but for other reasons. I should be inclined to retain this hospital for acute cases and cases of accident. Of course I am speaking with a knowledge of the fact that another hospital is to be immediately commenced; otherwise I should not offer the advice I am giving. That being the case, I should be inclined to limit the size of this to such a number of beds as will be probably required to accommodate the cases alluded to, and as can be well provided for upon the area of ground at the disposal of the directors. With respect to the size, I think that about 150 beds would be quite ample to meet the requirements of the population upon this principle.
5437. Then you propose to diminish the number of beds in the Infirmary? I would, most certainly.
5438. On the ground that the institution is overcrowded, in your opinion? On the ground that hospital accommodation is not required to the extent to be provided by this hospital and the Prince Alfred Hospital, and that future hospital requirements beyond these would be better provided in the direction in which population progresses.
5439. That reduction in the number of patients would afford better opportunities of thoroughly cleaning the wards, by enabling you to shift the patients from one to another? I think in building or remodelling any hospital, unless the walls are made of impervious material, every ward should be vacated once in six months. The Samaritan Hospital in London—which I mention because I know the working of it very well, and very serious operations take place there—is completely closed for a month every year.
5440. Are they provided for elsewhere? No, they are not. They are simply discharged. They say their object is to cure the largest number of patients per annum, and that is their way of doing it. The result of Mr. Wells' treatment of one important operation has been to decrease the mortality to under thirty per cent., and it used to be over eighty. I believe the hospital management alluded to has had a considerable bearing on this result.
5441. Mr. Ellis.] Do I understand you to say that sick or dying patients are taken out into the street? Suitable arrangements are made; new patients are not admitted for a little time before, and every patient leaves the place when the time comes.
5442. Mr. Metcalfe.] But some one takes care of them, I suppose? Not on behalf of the hospital. There are so many institutions in London.
5443. President.] Then our present system in this hospital of keeping the wards filled from year's end to year's end must be injurious to the patients, in your opinion? I think so.
5444. Especially when you are told that the walls are not whitewashed for over two years? Undoubtedly. More than that, I think that when a case of fever dies, that that bed should be left vacant for a time. Bearing on this subject, I should like to allude to a fact which I mentioned some time ago, in two papers which I read before the Royal Society, in respect to the large number of incurable and chronic cases which have always been and are now in the hospital. I have made inquiries since my return from Europe, and am informed that there are quite as many now as there used to be, and as many difficulties in the way of getting rid of them. In the calculations I made, I find that if a low average were taken, there would be not less than fifty of these cases.
5445. That is, cases of patients to be treated as beneficially to themselves in other institutions? All through the year there were not less than fifty patients who were suffering from incurable or chronic disease, who would do well in the hospital ward of the Liverpool Asylum, and whose circumstances adapted them to that when they became dependent on public charity. We know that these cases do well at Liverpool, as they do here,—that the entire expenses of this institution are £46 a bed per annum,—that the expenses at Liverpool are about £13 per bed per annum, taking all round. Putting the expenses down at £15, that would save £31 a bed upon 50 patients, and that would come to £1,600 a year. The Government contribution comes to, for each one of these patients, about £33 per annum, and that comes I think to over £1,600 a year. Suppose that it would be necessary to build new accommodation at Liverpool or elsewhere, it could be put up for about £50 per bed. The new ward at Liverpool cost £40 a bed. If you are to supply hospital accommodation such as is required for the purposes of a general hospital hospital for acute cases, &c., it will cost you £200 a bed. These are facts. I think it may be interesting to the Commission, in endeavouring to come to a conclusion, and in judging of the hospital expenditure here, to show what the hospital expenditure is in hospitals at Home. This [see Appendix H] is a paper drawn up by the secretary to the St. Mary's Hospital, a copy of which he was kind enough to give me. I would draw your attention to it; it is a very interesting document, and it shows clearly that you cannot reduce the expenditure of a general hospital much under what it is now at the Infirmary. You can render the management much more efficient, but not reduce the expenditure. We may take it fairly for granted that in London the gentlemen know as completely what they are about as any average Board of Directors, and yet there the Cancer Hospital has to pay £123 a bed.

A. Roberts,
Esq.

3 June, 1873.

5446. For the keep for a year? The total expense. The Hospital for Sick Children, £53; the Consumption Hospital, Brompton, £53; the Lock Hospital, male and female, £33; the London Fever Hospital, £38; Royal London Ophthalmic Hospital, £44; Birmingham General Hospital, £46; Birmingham Queen's Hospital, £43; Bradford Infirmary, £56; Brighton Sussex County Hospital, £58; Bristol General Hospital, £38.

5447. Mr. Ellis.] Do they give the details by which these items are arrived at? The whole of the details are arrived at. Here the details are. The number of patients daily throughout the year, the number of out-patients and casualties, the cost of provisions, washing, coals, gas, soap, soda, candles, wood, &c., furniture, turnery, drugs, dispensary, sundries, and so on. The Charing Cross Hospital costs £59 a bed; Guy's, £47; King's College, £59. These are the London general hospitals:—the London, £58; Middlesex, £62; St. Bartholomew's, £58; St. George's, £56; St. Mary's, £57; University College, £77; Westminster, £39; Seamen's Hospital, "Dreadnought," £55. Bearing upon the admission of patients, I think the question of making patients pay in a community like this rather crops up. At Home great efforts are being made to establish self-supporting dispensaries. To my knowledge they have been very successful; and, considering the high wages of people here, I think the plan is worthy of consideration. I got what papers I could respecting it, but I have not had time to go over them.

5448. Can you state generally the way in which they are managed to make them self-supporting? I am hardly able to do so at present, but each person pays so many pence per annum—a very small sum, and the expenses of the drugs are paid, and the medical men of the establishment divide the balance left between them, in proportion to the number of patients each has seen. It amounts to but little, but enables the subscribers relieved to maintain a spirit of independence.

5449. Then, instead of paying district surgeons and medical men, they are paid from contributions? Yes, and I think such an institution may be established here with every advantage to the people themselves.

5450. Mr. Goold.] In connection with the Infirmary? I do not see any reason why it should not be. In some places the same institution has a provident dispensary and a gratuitous dispensary, and they work well side by side.

5451. President.] Don't you think that class of persons get medical advice through the operation of Friendly Societies? A great many persons get advice here who can afford to pay 5s. per annum. They would do it provided they knew it beforehand. The principle establishes providence among the improvident, who are thus taught to look forward a little and provide on the plan of the Societies.

5452. Mr. Metcalfe.] Any person who paid 5s. at the beginning of the year would be entitled to relief? Yes, and to select their doctor; and there would be some guarantee that they were that class of people who required it.

5453. They must be recommended at first? Yes. I have the papers containing the rules bearing upon it, which are at your service. There is another point I should like to mention. At Vienna there is a large general hospital; it contains 5,000 beds; it costs nothing; every patient is paid for. If I ran over a person in the street, the police would take him to the hospital, ascertain my name, and they would bring him back to me with a certificate that he is discharged, and I should have to pay.

5454. Suppose you are unable to pay? I am not allowed to be unable to pay. I may have to punish myself. The whole system of poor-law relief in Germany is such that people do not say they are unable to pay unless they really are. If a servant girl requires relief, she goes to the hospital and you pay for her, if she has been more than six months in your service; if less, then the master in whose service she was previously; and if she comes up from the country, the Mayor pays from the rates. Thus the whole hospital is conducted without expenditure.

5455. President.] Can any one go into it by paying? I believe not.

5456. Then it is devoted to those who should be provided for in consequence of the applications of people connected with them? It is devoted to everybody and anybody in the large city. It is not one hospital out of many; it is the chief hospital. There is another hospital, but it is founded on the same principle.

5457. Mr. Metcalfe.] Suppose a man falls in the street and has no friends? They find out where he comes from, and the Mayor of that district pays. He belongs to some one district, and the police trace it out.

5458. Mr. Ellis.] Do you object to the Commission having this as an Appendix to your evidence? Not the slightest. I had some little difficulty in getting it, even in London. It is a statistical record. I do not recollect anything else, unless you come to the character of the building you want to put up.

5459. President.] While on this question of the admission of patients, have you ever considered the desirableness of abolishing admission on the orders of subscribers? Yes.

5460. And throwing the house open to everybody? I think the hospital would be more useful and more popular if all the vacant beds were filled by the most urgent cases among the applicants, and if any one could be an applicant who could satisfy the proper officer of his inability to pay for his treatment.

5461. Have you ever compared the amount of subscriptions to this with the subscriptions to local hospitals in the country? I do not think I have.

5462. You have not formed an opinion as to whether they are not smaller for the population than in the country? I cannot say, but I am certain they are small in comparison with the population, and the charitable tendency that exists in the community. I consider the subscriptions extremely small.

5463. Do not you think if it was thrown open generally, a larger number would subscribe, if they thought they could give a sufficient sum, not to get a patient in but to assist the hospital? I should like to throw the admissions open to every poor person. The only guarantee should be that he was unable to pay, and that his disease was a case demanding admission. I would put no restrictions on the subscriptions. I am confident the subscriptions would be increased if it were thrown open.

5464. Have you ever observed, during your long connection here, that the present system led to a kind of favouritism,—that there was a tendency to admit patients because they were the friends of influential or large subscribers? I know it worked occasionally in that way, and in keeping patients in when they obtained admission, and would otherwise have been discharged sooner.

A. Roberts,
Esq.

3 June, 1873.

5465. Do you think this would have any effect the other way, of destroying the interest of the public in the institution? I think not.

5466. Supposing this system of admission by orders were abolished, do you think it is desirable to have this system of having public meetings of the subscribers annually? I have not given that subject consideration, but I think there are others much better able to give an opinion on that point. It is a popular subject which I do not feel confidence in my opinion upon, but I am satisfied that it is more desirable to elect the officers and staff through the Board of Directors.

5467. Have you formed an opinion as to whether the honorary staff of this institution is too large? I do think it is.

5468. To what extent would you limit it? I have always said that three honorary surgeons and physicians would work better.

5469. Are you acquainted with the system which exists in the Infirmary of medical men admitting turn about? Yes, week about in turn; I am.

5470. Did it ever come under your cognizance that there was a tendency on the part of some medical men to keep in patients that might be discharged, for the reason of not having their beds vacant until their week came round? Not during my period.

5471. If such a thing is proved to exist, do you think it should be allowed? That is just one of the questions which the directors cannot interfere with. I think that the soul of efficiency in the administration of all institutions such as this depends on the general morale—the general feeling—and that when confidence in officers is lost, whoever they are, the institution is sure to go wrong, and it is not to be put right by checking them in small matters, but by a full re-establishment of a high moral tone throughout the institution. The medical man clearly must be the judge as to when a patient can be discharged; and the great point to establish in the minds of your medical staff is a desire to turn as many patients, cured or relieved, as possible from the hospital through the year, and you must take it for granted that they would do so.

5472. Have you formed an opinion as to whether the managing body is too large? I feel as satisfied as I can that it is so. It would work better if the Board was much reduced. What I have seen has been that the Board is formed, and the business half got through, before ten or more gentlemen; then three or more others come in, and they want to hear what has been done, and a considerable part, if not the whole business has to be gone over again. At another time, a small Board has done business, and the next month another small Board has come and upset it all, because different members attended the two Boards, and those present at the last meeting were ignorant of the circumstances which influenced the first meeting. In many instances the second decision had to be subsequently reversed.

5473. Mr. Gould.] Do you approve of clergymen being on the Board? I think not. I may say no.

5474. President.] You think it should be composed only of laymen? I think so.

5475. Do you not think that the present system of people giving orders upon the Colonial Secretary for patients, thus enabling people to give charity vicariously, is calculated to diminish the amount of subscriptions? I think so.

5476. Would you do away with that altogether? To the giving of recommendations?

5477. Would you do away with the privilege people have of giving orders, whether they are subscribers or not? I would, for this reason: it would be necessary to establish a proper responsible person to make inquiry into the condition of patients. I am satisfied the institution is abused by persons who should pay, but get in under the Colonial Secretary's order.

5478. Did that come under your notice when you were here? Yes. And since I have returned, I have had persons come to my house, pay a fee for my opinion, and request that I would undertake the case and perform a necessary operation, and come back the next day and say they have got a Colonial Secretary's order to go into the Infirmary. I have had four or five cases of this nature. Some say—"Well, I think I will go into the Infirmary. Will you operate?" I say—"No, I do not attend now, except as a consulting surgeon"; and they will stop out and pay me for attendance.

5479. Mr. Couper.] What check is there upon this;—a responsible person should be appointed to give admission to these people? Yes.

5480. How is it possible for them to find out when these persons have money? There is a difficulty, no doubt, but if you had a responsible person he would do better than a clergyman. For instance, I know one clergyman who boasts of giving away 300 orders in the course of the year; and I mentioned, in a little article on pauperism, two cases, both of them with a considerable sum—more than £100—in their pockets; but if you had a responsible person he could find out a good deal, and he might have the use of a detective. An officer soon gets the knack of finding out, and he would soon ascertain a good deal about it. There is a wide-spread spirit of dependence cropping up. We have much too little of the spirit of independence here.

5481. President.] You think it tends to demoralize the people of the Country? Yes.

5482. Mr. Metcalfe.] If a person applies at the hospital for admission, very sick, would you refuse him until you made inquiries? The inquiries would be made at once, and he would always be taken in in case of doubt.

5483. President.] Do you think it would be a check if patients, instead of being made to pay, were peremptorily discharged? I think in cases of positive deception such a course would be very useful, but I would not use harsh measures; and if it were once known that any man who got in under false pretences were made to pay rather more, and that another were discharged peremptorily, it would soon be checked I think; besides, they do not like an official coming to them and having a string of questions put to them, and the replies taken down.

5484. When you were connected with the institution, did the branch dispensary come under your notice? It was established just as I left.

5485. Did it meet with your approval? I think branch dispensaries should be established. Whether the system is good is another question. In America they have come to the conclusion to establish dispensaries and hospitals under different Boards and different management.

5486. Are you aware that a branch dispensary is more open to imposition than the dispensary at the head establishment? I do not know at all. With respect to the administration and working of the Board, I should like to recommend that the honorary staff should form a medical Board, which should meet every month a few days before the regular Board, that minutes should be kept of their meetings, and they should watch over all strictly professional questions, and make recommendations to the Board. I give that advice from having noticed that it worked well in hospitals I found working smoothly at Home.

a hospital working well, I asked what was the system of management, and I found generally that system was adopted, and it seems to me to be founded on good sense. Under this system the medical officers only suggest, but they suggest in a dignified way which binds them altogether; it is not the suggestion of one officer.

5487. Did you observe, in the course of your inquiries in England, as to the punctuality with which medical men attended the hospitals to which they were attached? I do not think I did, but I think the general feeling is that they attend pretty punctually.

5488. Has it come under your notice that they attend more punctually than here? Yes, they do; but the circumstances are different. Generally speaking, the hospital surgeons are consulting men, who see patients up to 1 o'clock, and then drive down to the hospital and have one or two visits to pay. Here all the staff are general practitioners, and at the time when there is a great deal of sickness about they can only snatch an hour now and then. Still, I take it for granted that any gentleman appointed an honorary medical officer would know and feel that he undertakes a responsibility, and that no institution can go on without regularity, and he should attend punctually.

THURSDAY, 5 JUNE, 1873.

Members Present:—

WILLIAM CHARLES WINDEYER, Esq., PRESIDENT.

SAMUEL GOOLD, Esq.

CHARLES COWPER, JUN., Esq.

MICHAEL METCALFE, Esq.

EYRE G. ELLIS, Esq.

Charles McKay, Esq., M.D., Honorary Surgeon, Sydney Infirmary, called in and examined.

C. McKay,
Esq., M.D.

NOTE.—This witness's evidence was sent to him for revision on the 10th June, and was not returned until the 24th, thus necessitating its being printed apart from the other evidence taken on the same day. It will be found on the 233rd page.

5 June, 1873.

Arthur Renwick, Esq., M.D., Honorary Physician, Sydney Infirmary, called in and examined:—

A. Renwick,
Esq., M.D.

5489. President.] You are one of the honorary staff of the Sydney Infirmary? Yes, I am one of the honorary physicians.

5490. How long have you been so? About eleven or twelve years. I cannot recollect the exact time.

5 June, 1873.

5491. I suppose you were acquainted with the Infirmary as a student? I was not a student in the Sydney Infirmary.

5492. You have been good enough to write a letter to the Commission expressing your views on certain points connected with the Infirmary. Is there anything that you wish to add to that letter [see Appendix K]? The only matter of importance I would wish to add to that letter is in regard to the accommodation. I may state that since I have been connected with the Infirmary I have had to admit patients, and latterly, especially within the last four or five years, I have found that during my week I have often refused as many as I have admitted, on account of the want of accommodation.

5493. Has it come under your notice that there are many persons there who, more beneficially to themselves and more economically to the Government, might be removed to the Liverpool Asylum? I cannot say so of my personal observation, because when I find persons of that class in my wards I discharge them, so that personally I have no knowledge of such cases. Supposing I had a patient who was a fit person to be admitted into the Liverpool Asylum, I should discharge him immediately, and leave the responsibility of his discharge with the managing Board. You comprehend what I mean?

5494. You state in your letter that some of your patients are suffering from complaints which appear to you to have been brought on by the bad condition of the hospital? Yes, by bad ventilation and other little matters connected with the institution. I have no doubt about that at all.

5495. Do you know anything about the drainage of the Infirmary? Yes; it is very bad.

5496. In what respects? The best illustration that I can give is in reference to the new mortuary that was to be constructed. That matter may in many ways bear reference to the remarks which I have made, for it shows the bad constitution of the Board; because this matter has been under their consideration for six months, and if they were a proper managing body, the mortuary would have been constructed long ago. But it illustrates also the matter of drainage. When the plans were shown to me I found that it was impossible, according to those plans, to get a drainage into Macquarie-street—that the plans represented the drainage as being pumped up and then carried into Macquarie-street. That has been altered since. I consider that the present position of the Infirmary is detrimental to the health of the patients, in regard to its drainage—the building is so low, and the drain in Macquarie-street is so high.

5497. Do you know whether the building is drained? Yes, I believe it is; but the cesspools and so on are not in good order. There are always smells about them, but whether that arises from imperfections in the house or not I cannot tell.

5498. You complain also, I see, of the dispensing; the dispenser complains to us that he is overworked. You know the nature of his duties, and that he has to attend to the branch dispensary, and, from what you have seen, do you concur in that? I do decidedly. There is more work there than any two men could satisfactorily accomplish, I am satisfied, from what I have seen at Home and here. I have attended most of the large dispensaries at Home and on the Continent, and have seen the work which is done there, and I am sure that one man cannot accomplish all the work of the dispensary here. A proof of that arises in my mind at present. Some time ago I recommended to the Board that, instead of using oiled silk in the dressing of wounds—the article being very expensive—to use oiled silk-paper, which is done elsewhere. The Board adopted my suggestion, and wanted me to superintend the making of the oiled silk-paper by the dispenser. I could not do that, and the dispenser said that his work was so very heavy that he could not do it, and the matter fell to the ground.

5499. Mr. Metcalfe.] There are two dispensers, are there not? Yes; but if you consider the number of prescriptions that are written every day for all the out-patients and the in-patients, the work is very great.

A. Renwick,
Esq., M.D.

5 June, 1873.

5500. But many of these prescriptions are mere formulæ that can be dispensed without trouble? Oh, very rarely. It was intended to relieve the dispenser some time ago by means of a formula, and there was a pharmacopœia made up, but it contained such a number of errors that it was no use at all; few could prescribe according to it. I never did, because I could never be sure of the doses and so on, and consequently I have always prescribed in full all that I wished given to a patient.

5501. President.] The document you refer to contains a number of formulæ? Yes. I had something to do with Dr. Cox and others in drawing it up, but I was not satisfied with the drawing up of it.

5502. Do you see any plan for simplifying the work of the dispensary? A fresh pharmacopœia could be drawn up, but it would be liable to the same objections again. I do not see how the objections can be obviated.

5503. Do not they have it in London? Yes, they have a pharmacopœia at all hospitals, but the medical men do not always prescribe according to it. There are many prescriptions that a man may have in his own mind that he thinks better than any pharmacopœia. At all events, even if a pharmacopœia could be arranged, it would not be a permanent mode of settling the question.

5504. Are you satisfied or otherwise with the nursing? I cannot say that I am perfectly satisfied, but I am sure that there is a great difference for the better in the nursing and the system of training nurses and so on that we have adopted; but there are a great many failings in the system at present. For instance, I have thought that the nurses are not long enough in the various wards to learn their duties—they are not kept long enough in one position.

5505. How long should they be in one position? I think that my nurses are changed about every three months. A nurse is about three months in a ward, and then she is shifted and another takes her place, and then you have to teach them all over again.

5506. But is not one of the old nurses always left in the ward? No; there is a complete change, as far as my experience goes.

5507. Are you sure of that? Yes, I am sure in my own case.

5508. Are the head nurses changed in this way? No, not the head nurses, but the other two nurses with whom you come in contact.

5509. Mr. Ellis.] And this is done to the inconvenience of the medical men? Certainly to the inconvenience of the medical men—there is no doubt of that.

5510. President.] But if the institution is to be a training school for nurses, is it not necessary that the nurses should be changed from ward to ward in this way? Yes, but that could be effected without such constant changing, and they could go from the medical to the surgical side and back again—that would be only two changes; but now they go through each ward. Say that they commenced on the surgical side, and then went over to the medical side, and then back again, that would be quite enough, and there would be fewer changes. I am however quite sure that the present system of nursing is a great advance upon the old system. The old system was a disgraceful thing altogether.

5511. Mr. Metcalfe.] Irrespective of the frequent removals of the nurses from ward to ward, you consider the present system good? Well, as far as my personal experience goes, it has been good. I have heard other opinions, but I am quite satisfied that if the doctors attend to the nurses and give them proper instructions, they will be carried out, as a rule, well. I have known exceptions to occur, but they will occur in the best managed institutions.

5512. Mr. Gould.] Do you think that it is wise for a doctor to order porter or wine for a period of thirty days for a patient? I can only tell you my own personal experience, and I only order it for seven days, and I order as little as any person. You cannot dispense with the use of these things in medicine, as far as medical science is understood, as yet; there may be something discovered in the future which will take their place, but at present we cannot dispense with these stimulants altogether; but I only order them, when I give them at all, for seven days at a time.

5513. Do you know of any complaints having been made of the patients not getting the stimulants that have been ordered for them? I have heard some patients say that others have taken their little quantum; but independently of that, I think that they all look out for their own share pretty well.

5514. Have you heard any complaints as to the diets—as to the patients not getting their diets properly? I think that in my letter [Appendix K] I said that the out-buildings were disgraceful, and in that I include the kitchen. It often happens that food is badly cooked. A patient has kept his food to show it me. The defect seems to run with regard to certain articles of diet. Just at present it is the mutton that is bad—either bad or else badly cooked. I have had lately to take my patients off mutton and put them on beef. The cooking is very bad indeed.

5515. President.] Do you find that delicacies for patients who are very ill are badly cooked? Very badly at times. I have known patients in the last stages of phthisis—in that state when they require the very best delicacies—I have seen them absolutely refuse the food when it has been brought up to them.

5516. The lady superintendent says that she has no authority over the manager, and that when complaints are made to the manager he does not know whether a thing is ill or well cooked: do you think it would be well to place the cooking under her control? I know that the manager is over the cook. I have made so many complaints about it and he has endeavoured to rectify it, but, as I have said, the manager is no judge of that or of any other hospital matters, and cannot tell whether a diet is sufficient, or well prepared, or not. There should be a medical superintendent, who would cost no more than the manager, and who would be to a certain extent a check upon the medical department.

5517. Mr. Metcalfe.] What could a medical superintendent be got for? I believe the present manager gets £300, and I believe you could get a first class man for £450 or £500. It would be a saving to the institution, and it would be a credit to the institution. In most parts of England and on the Continent they have medical superintendents in the hospitals.

5518. Would you put the cooking under him? Decidedly. They do so at Home. Take the case of Glasgow—in the hospital there they have a medical superintendent under whom are clinical surgeons and physicians. Of course at Home the hospitals are very differently constituted to our institution here; there you have medical officers of standing who are well paid for their services—if not directly, yet by fees; you have students constantly visiting the place, and the institution is open to a continual observation by the public, so that abuses such as creep in here can never creep in there. Here, on the other hand, matters are quite different. We have honorary medical officers who come from day to day, or three or four times a week; we have resident medical officers, and we have a Board or committee which meets once or twice a week.

week. Really the institution is in the hands of the manager, and consequently I hold that a responsible medical man, with responsible officers under him, would be more likely to conduct matters better than they are conducted under the present arrangement. The manager now does not reside on the premises, and the lady superintendent is the only responsible head of the establishment who does.

A. Renwick
Esq., M.D.,

5 June, 1873.

5519. Mr. Ellis.] I understand you to say that you would place the whole management of the institution in the hands of a resident medical officer? Yes.

5520. Would you place the department of the lady superintendent under him? Her duties would in some respects be subordinate to his, but she would hold an independent position.

5521. She would be supreme? In her own department.

5522. But the manager would be the head of the department? And responsible to the Board.

5523. For everything? Yes, for everything, financial and otherwise.

5524. Mr. Gould.] Is that the plan generally adopted in England and on the Continent? Yes. It has not been adopted in all institutions, because many of them have peculiar developments. Some of them are very old, and still adhere to old systems. For example, the Hôtel Dieu at Paris is a very old institution, and again there is the Edinburgh Hospital, another very old institution; and their management is as different as it can possibly be. Under this system which I advocate, you will have the medical departments all centred in one person, and the medical officers all endeavouring to keep up the credit and character of the institution, because no hospital will ever succeed unless it has a good staff attached to it, to attend to the honorary medical duties. I was going on to say that, although these institutions are so different to each other, ultimately it comes to the same point, that you have in each, one person who is responsible to a Board, which is not very large—responsible either to the subscribers or to the Government (in France it is always the Government; in England it is frequently a local body, such as the Municipal Council).

5525. Mr. Ellis.] Would you reduce the Board of Management? Most decidedly. I have no doubt on that point. Boards are all too large.

5526. Do you think that five would be a sufficient number of members to form the Board? Yes, quite sufficient.

5527. You think a Board of five would work as well as the present Board? I have no doubt of it.

5528. And do you think that the Government should have representatives on the Board? Yes, and for these reasons: I should expect that the Government would appoint men of experience and intelligence, and they would not be likely to be changed frequently, and they would keep things together, when changes took place of the other members of the Board, who might be continually changing and bringing in the novelties.

5529. Would you make the decision of the Board final in all cases, without any appeals to public meetings of the subscribers? That is a point to which I have not given any attention, but it is an important point in connection with the representation of the hospital.

5530. If any wrong is done, the subscribers have always the power of correction in their own hands? Yes.

5531. And they could correct the errors of the Board by turning out those members who did not act rightly, when the time came for their re-election? Yes.

5532. Until that time came, would you give the power to the Board? I do not see the harm of doing so, but I do not like to give a decided opinion.

5533. President.] Suppose there were difficulties in the way of getting such a medical man as you describe and giving him the supreme authority, how do you think it would be if there were a paid secretary acting under a smaller Board than the present, and responsible to it for the out-door management and purchase of stores and matters of that sort—if there were, under him, the house steward responsible to him—and if then, the internal management of the wards and their discipline, and the whole of the nursing, were placed in the hands of the head of the nursing staff, whoever she might be, making her directly responsible to the Board for her portion of the management? I think that would become defective in course of time. It might answer for a time, but would soon become defective.

5534. Are you aware that Miss Nightingale recommends that system? I am aware of it, but notwithstanding that the theory sounds well, I am not aware that it answers so well in practice.

5535. Do you know whether it has been tried anywhere? I cannot say. I am sure I cannot recollect any place where it has been tried.

5536. Then you cannot say that it has failed? The plan now adopted here is not very different from that system.

5537. Are you aware that the lady superintendent here cannot get the simplest things done without reference to the manager? I was not aware of that.

5538. Do you know that an erysipelas case came in—a woman—and that the lady superintendent could not get a tent put up for her because the manager was out, and that the patient did not get the tent for twenty-four hours? I have heard references made to these particulars, but not exactly in the same way. I have heard that the tent could not be got.

5539. If it is a fact that the male servants are not under the lady superintendent's control in these matters, in which the orders must come through her—for instance, if ice is required to be applied to a patient's head, and the nurse goes and tells a man to fetch the ice, and he declines to go because the order must come from the manager—is that sort of thing in accordance with Miss Nightingale's system? No, it is quite different, as far as that goes.

5540. Is that a good system? It is a very bad system; but supposing that the lady superintendent were allowed to order these tents and so on, and the general management were under her control, then the system would be very much like the Nightingale system, and it would not work satisfactorily.

5541. Why? Because interests would clash. If you clothed the lady superintendent with that authority, her duties would still clash with those of the house surgeons and physicians. I have no doubt of that.

5542. How will they clash, if it is a part of the system that the lady superintendent and her nurses, as far as the doctoring of the patients is concerned, have to obey the orders of the medical men? The house surgeons?

5543. The medical men, whoever they may be, with regard to the treatment of the sick? Supposing a man came in, and the medical man ordered him to have ice applied, and the lady superintendent, in her nursing experience, did not think that ice was necessary—

5544. But she could not have an opinion? But allow me to say that people do have opinions of that kind, and I am satisfied that in working the system you would find it so—you would find that the authorities would

A. Renwick,
Esq., M.D.

5 June, 1873.

would clash. I have not the slightest doubt of it. Either you make a distinction between the medical department and the nursing department—and really, speaking generally, medicine and nursing are the same thing—and you are giving two authorities power to regulate these matters.

5546. Mr. Gould.] Are you aware of any clashing of authority having existed between Miss Osburn and the medical men? Yes, I have heard of it.

5547. Has it occurred in your own case? I cannot say that I recollect at this moment anything of the kind. I have no doubt that I have had instances of it, but I cannot bring any particular cases in point. Yes, now I do remember one case, though the particulars have almost escaped my memory. It happened two or three years ago, and I merely mention the matter to illustrate the point. A patient of mine was insane, and was very troublesome in the ward, and the nurses and Miss Osburn spoke to me about this patient—it was a girl—being removed to the Lunatic Asylum. I objected to that, because I thought that the case was curable, and it turned out afterwards that I was right. I was, however, perfectly astonished to receive a note from Mr. Stephen, the honorary secretary, stating that he was going out of town, and the fact that Miss Osburn had taken him to see this patient of mine; and he went on to say how disagreeable it was that this patient should be kept there. I went up to see the patient, and found, as the note said, that they had been to see her, and that Dr. Alleyne had been called in to see the patient also. This was done without informing me, or letting me know that any steps were to be taken. I took no notice of the matter in any way, but in other hands that might have been rather an unpleasant circumstance.

5548. President.] Did you speak to Miss Osburn on the subject? Yes; I told her, in matters of that kind, she should not take action without consulting me.

5549. Did I not understand you to say that she spoke to you in the first instance? Yes; but I mean as to consulting the honorary secretary.

5550. But whatever the management may be, do you not think that the head of the nursing staff has a right to complain of anything that is wrong? She has a right to complain to me.

5551. What, if she is responsible for the state and order of the wards? She is not responsible for the medical treatment.

5552. But if she is responsible for the state of the wards, and anything tends to create disorder in them, can she not complain to the governing body? Yes, as much as she likes; but I have treated other patients who have been worse than this girl—more troublesome, and there has been no complaint. In this case it was an unusual mode of treatment, no doubt. I merely mention the case to show that interests may clash.

5553. Mr. Ellis.] Had you been absent from the institution when you received this note? I saw the patient that morning, and the morning before, and the morning before that; in fact, I saw her every day from the time of her admission.

5554. You say that Dr. Alleyne was taken in to see her—Is there not a sort of rule of medical etiquette, that one medical officer must not interfere with the patients of another? Yes. Dr. Alleyne did not interfere; he simply saw the patient, and walked away without saying anything. Miss Osburn and I are very good friends, and I only mention this case to show that clashing will occur, even under this mode of governing a hospital.

5555. President.] But surely you would not deprive her of the power of complaining to the Board? Decidedly not.

5556. Then was it not an interference on the part of the Board, and not Miss Osburn, who interfered in an irregular way? It was an interference on the part of the Board with my medical duties. Miss Osburn was fully aware of the irregularity of the proceeding, and such a thing has never occurred since.

5557. Mr. Metcalfe.] Did Miss Osburn ever justify her conduct to you? Well, she said that the patient had caused more annoyance in the afternoon, and that the nurses complained about it. There was some correspondence about the matter.

5558. Mr. Ellis.] Did Miss Osburn mention the matter to you before these proceedings took place? She said that the girl was very troublesome, and I said that she was, but that she would be better in a day or two, and things turned out as I wished them to do. That case is the only one which strikes me now.

5559. Your cause of complaint was that Miss Osburn did not complain to you in the first instance about the matter? Yes; instead of her speaking to another medical man, who felt annoyed at being spoken to about it.

5560. Mr. Cowper.] Who was the medical man? Dr. Alleyne.

5561. I thought the honorary secretary spoke to him? Not at all; he was brought in to see the patient by Miss Osburn.

5562. Nothing was said to you afterwards? Nothing at all. I do not relate these particulars as against Miss Osburn, but merely to illustrate the point that there may be clashing even under the system to which reference has been made.

5563. Would there not be clashing if a resident medical officer had the management of the hospital? He would be in a superior position.

5564. Would he give way to the honorary medical staff? He would not see them at all, or see them very seldom.

5565. President.] Do you say that Miss Nightingale is wrong in this statement—"In dealing with this question, I may state at once, that to turn any number of trained nurses into an infirmary to act under the superintendence or instructions of any master, or matron, or medical officer, would be a sheer waste of good money. This is not matter of opinion, but of fact and experience"? I agree with that perfectly.

5566. Is not what you have recommended in entire opposition to that? If so, I do not see what you are referring to.

5567. I will read it again: "In dealing with this question, I may state at once that to turn any number of trained nurses into any infirmary to act under the superintendence or instructions of any master, or matron, or medical officer, would be sheer waste of good money. This is not a matter of opinion, but of fact and experience"? Excuse me, that does not contradict what I have said. I agree with that. I would put the trained nurses under the matron or lady superintendent, or whatever she may be. I do not say that my system is the best,—only that it is the best that I have seen working in other places.

5568. Mr. Cowper.] This system would make the lady superintendent the head of the institution, and you would make a medical man the head? No, I would make the lady superintendent head of the nursing staff.
5569. And responsible to the medical man? Yes.
5570. President.] That is not what Miss Nightingale says? That is what I say.
5571. Miss Nightingale wishes the nursing staff to be under a female head? I agree with that, but I would make that female head responsible to the medical superintendent.
5572. Not to the Board? No; I would make the medical superintendent responsible to the Board.
5573. Mr. Cowper.] You spoke in anything but approving terms of the way in which delicacies are brought up for people suffering from phthisis, or patients in their last moments: do you approve of the system that now exists of giving the patients these delicacies in tin dishes which are almost rusty? No, I do not approve of any such thing. I do not think that tin rust is good for a dying patient at all. The oxide of tin is very deleterious; we only use it externally.
5574. I suppose that delf could be got just as cheaply? Yes, just as cheaply. When I speak of these defects, and these cases occurring, I must say that, as a rule, I am on the whole satisfied with the nursing at present; it is very well conducted. Of course the best system ever adopted will have its faults and failings, because you can never bring matters up to what is theoretically perfect.
5575. Have you noticed anything else, in regard to the cooking, that is objectionable? In the material supplied to the patients?
5576. No, the way in which they are attended? The way in which the food is administered?
5577. The kind of food that is given to them? I have not noticed anything.
5578. You seem to have taken some interest in hospitals: can you not make some suggestions for the improvement of the cooking in the Infirmary? I have seen a great many hospitals, but there are so many improvements starting up every day. Any person who looks into the publications which are continually issuing from the Mother Country will see that there are fresh improvements every day, and a cheap and good apparatus may be easily got for this Infirmary.
5579. Mr. Goold.] Have you ever, during your experience in the Sydney Infirmary, had any complaints from the patients as to the cruelty and unkindness of the nurses? Yes. On one or two occasions, I have, as I considered it my duty to do, investigated these complaints on the spot; and I must say that in all cases—in all cases, for I cannot remember that there was any exception—there has either been some delusion on the part of the patient, or some ill feeling which has led to the fabrication of the complaint. I have never found that the nurses were really cruel to the patients. Patients have represented it to me, and I have examined into the matter, and I found that the nurses were not to blame. It is an unfortunate thing that patients will sometimes combine together to misrepresent the conduct of the nurses.
5580. President.] They object to the discipline? Yes, very many of them do; many of them leave on account of the discipline.
5581. Though discipline is necessary? Yes, perfectly necessary. Let me give an instance connected with the tobacco question, and the patients admitted under my care. The patients are sometimes great smokers of tobacco, and rather than give it up they will break through the rules, and even leave the place, though it is explained to them that they are under medical treatment.
5582. Do you think that violations of the rule with regard to smoking should be treated lightly? I do not think they should be treated so severely as they sometimes are. The remedy is expulsion—that is too severe.
5583. Do you not think that, while the rule is in force, it should be carried out? Well, I am an offender myself, for I have been told perhaps of a man smoking—not seen him—and I have warned him not to do it. The next day perhaps I smell that he has been smoking, and then I discharge him at once; but if you were to discharge all the patients who smoke, you would have no patients left.
5584. Mr. Ellis.] You think it is reasonable that, if a patient persisted in violating the rules of the institution, some person should be authorized to discharge him? Yes; I discharge them myself when they repeatedly offend. I look to the spirit of the rule.
5585. President.] Do you think that any one should permit the rule to be habitually violated? No, not even repeatedly.
5586. Do you think that allowing some patients to wear their own clothes, whilst others are not allowed to wear them, is a thing calculated to produce a feeling of injustice among the patients? I think it would, from my experience of that institution and others. There should be uniformity.
5587. And the rule should be enforced? I think so.
5588. Do you think that any medical man should allow violations of such a rule? That is a matter for the Board to decide. As far as my knowledge goes, I think that a patient who is sick enough to be in the hospital, would not care what dress he had on.
5589. Have you seen any necessity for allowing patients to wear their own clothes? None whatever.
5590. And if the patient is extra cold, do you think it is necessary that he should wear his own clothes? He can have extra clothing supplied by the institution—whatever he likes. I have often ordered it.
5591. Then if this rule is violated, it is violated without any necessity? I think so, as far as my experience goes.
5592. Mr. Ellis.] Were there male or female nurses in the hospitals in which you studied? Both; females all through in some, and male and female in others.
5593. Which do you prefer? I prefer the female nursing.
5594. For both male and female patients? Yes.
5595. You think that it is an improvement on the old system? I have no doubt of it.
5596. Had you any experience of the system of nursing that prevailed here before Miss Osburn arrived? Yes.
5597. Did you approve of the old system, or do you think the present system is better? There is no comparison whatever. The former system was a system of torture more than anything else.
5598. Mr. Goold.] How do you account for the existence of such numbers of bugs in the place? I think that, in the first place, the building is very old, and has not been properly repaired at any time. As far as I can see, and I have had some experience in building, and I speak with some authority on the subject, the evil might be put right, but nothing has ever been done to put it right.
5599. How often has the place been whitewashed in your time? When I first went there I had different wards to those which I have now, so that I cannot speak with authority on that point, but I think it has been whitewashed every second year or so.

A. Renwick,
Esq., M.D.

5 June, 1873.

- A. Renwick, Esq., M.D. 5600. How often should it be whitewashed? At least twice a year.
 5601. We are told that in the Hyde Park Barracks, just above, there are no bugs at all to be found, and that is as old a building as the Infirmary? I fully believe it. One building is of brick and the other of rubble stone, and that makes a great difference.
 5 June, 1873. 5602. President.] You say that you prefer the nursing by female nurses? Yes.
 5603. You are aware that there are certain officers called "head nurses"? Yes.
 5604. Their title was formerly "sister," and they tell us that that title gave them influence over the patients and in the discipline of the wards? Yes.
 5605. Do you see any objection to the use of this term "sister," as a designation of these head nurses? No, I see no harm whatever in it, and I know that it did give them authority over the patients. It was a kind of title that indicated rank, and in the English mind that always carries weight.

Frederick Milford, Esq., M.D., called in and examined:—

- F. Milford, Esq., M.D. 5606. President.] You are not in any way connected with the Sydney Infirmary? No, not at present; I have been.
 5 June, 1873. 5607. Are you in any way connected, as a medical man, with St. Vincent's Hospital? Yes, I have been Honorary Surgeon to that institution for thirteen years.
 5608. Have you made any comparison as to the relative cost of patients in the Sydney Infirmary and in St. Vincent's Hospital? Yes.
 5609. Would you tell us—perhaps it would suit you best to do it in your own way—the result of your inquiries? Last year I examined the annual report of the Sydney Infirmary and Dispensary, and the annual report of St. Vincent's Hospital, and from that examination I wrote a paragraph which appears in the 9th number of the 2nd volume of the New South Wales Medical Gazette. In reading that paragraph it will be seen that the cost of each bed in the Infirmary was £46 4s. 5d. per year, and the cost of St. Vincent's Hospital was £19 per bed. I give in the book for you to see.
 5610. Mr. Cowper.] Can you explain the reason of that difference? Yes, I think so; in the meantime I will explain what the cost was in 1872; this that I have just given was in 1871.
 5611. What was it? I have made up the account from the 23th annual report of the Sydney Infirmary, and the 15th annual report of St. Vincent's Hospital. I find that the cost of the Infirmary was about £44 14s. per bed, and the cost of St. Vincent's Hospital was about £21 per bed.
 5612. President.] How do you account for this great difference? I account for it partially by the fact of the nursing staff being paid in the Infirmary and not paid in St. Vincent's Hospital. In addition to that, there is no house surgeon or house physician at St. Vincent's. This is a great want, and tends to make the hospital not so valuable as it otherwise would be.
 5613. Then if the institution were made more perfect, it would cost more? Yes.
 5614. What number of patients were attended in St. Vincent's Hospital in 1872? 356 in that year.
 5615. Do you know whether with an increased number of patients in the hospital the cost per bed becomes increased? I do not think there is any reason why that should be. There is one other point that I should mention, and that is, that the Sisters of Charity at St. Vincent's Hospital, who receive no payment, dispense their own medicines.
 5616. They have no dispenser? No; they are quite as competent as any dispenser to make up the medicines.
 5617. Are they trained to do it? Yes. They were originally trained by Mr. Sloper, in the year 1857, for twelve months, and they soon became quite proficient.
 5618. Mr. Ellis.] You are satisfied with the way in which they dispense the medicines? Yes, it cannot be improved upon.
 5619. Mr. Cowper.] Do you consider that the nursing at St. Vincent's Hospital is better than the nursing at the Infirmary? I have no opportunity of judging. It is very much better than it was when I was a pupil there.
 5620. There is male attendance in St. Vincent's Hospital? Yes, there is a wardman in the male ward.
 5621. President.] And the present system of nursing there is better than it used to be in the Infirmary? Yes.
 5622. What time were you connected with the Infirmary? As a student, between 1849 and 1852, and I had then great opportunities of judging of what was going on. I was there every day from 9 o'clock in the morning until 4 in the evening on those occasions.
 5623. Mr. Ellis.] Were there bugs in the Infirmary in those days? There were.
 5624. Plenty of them? So much so that several efforts were made whilst I was there to get rid of them, and they found that it was quite impossible. I have seen the splints taken off men whose legs had been fractured, after they had been on a fortnight, and the padding was full of bugs of all sizes, from the large ones nearly as big as my thumb-nail to the small ones that almost require a microscope to see them.
 5625. That was in 1849? Yes.
 5626. And the efforts made to get rid of them were quite ineffectual? Yes; and the rats were very bad at that time too.
 5627. President.] This Commission has been appointed to inquire into the condition of the Public Charities of the Colony, and particularly with regard to the Infirmary and the Orphan Schools: can you make any suggestion to the Commission which will be of use in relation to the subject of inquiry; if so, we shall be happy to hear it? I would say that, from my experience in Sydney, the hospital accommodation here at present is not sufficient for the population by a considerable amount. I have known men lose their lives—numbers of men, I should say at least a score, who have lost their lives—from not being able to get into a hospital where they could be properly attended to. Had they been put into a hospital at an early stage of their diseases they would probably now be alive and well, and their families would not be thrown upon the public for support.
 5628. Then you think that every means should be taken to pass patients through the Infirmary as quickly as possible? Well, I would not turn a patient out until he was cured.
 5629. But would you let him remain in a day longer after he was cured? No, I would not; but I do not think that there are sufficient beds in the Infirmary for the sick people of the capital. I think that there should should be at least 100 beds more. Five years ago I thought so, and I, after careful consideration, think that now at least 200 more beds are wanted to provide for the wants of the sick poor.

5630. Mr. Ellis.] What is the superficial area allowed for each bed in St. Vincent's Hospital? I think about 1,300 cubic feet.

5631. The superficial area I wish to know? About 84 feet. The wards, which are capable of containing forty beds, have only twenty-two or twenty-three in them.*

F. Milford,
Esq., M.D.

5 June, 1873.

Frederic H. QuaiFFE, Esq., M.D., Honorary Physician, Sydney Infirmary, called in and examined:—

5632. President.] I believe that you are one of the honorary staff of the Sydney Infirmary? Yes.

5633. How long have you been so? About two years and a quarter—a little more than two years—not two years and a half.

F. H. QuaiFFE,
Esq., M.D.

5 June, 1873.

5634. This Commission has been appointed to inquire into the condition of the Public Charities of the Colony, more particularly the Sydney Infirmary, in order to find out what is to be done in order to bring it more into accord with the modern principles of hospital management: we shall be glad to hear what information you have to offer, or any suggestions you wish to make as to matters you would like to see remedied? Well, of course, there are a great many things we have noticed in the course of our work that we see are wrong, but it is not always easy to see precisely how to remedy them. I think that there are many things about the general management of the institution which require correcting. I think, for instance, that there is a sort of opposition between the committee and the medical staff which is not at all desirable; and I do not think that the committee sufficiently value the recommendations of the medical staff. I think that the medical staff want a little more power in the management.

5635. The honorary medical staff? Yes.

5636. In what way have the committee disregarded the suggestions of the medical staff? Several suggestions made by them have never been heard of afterwards—nothing has ever been said about them. I know some things were spoken of at a meeting of the staff held shortly after my appointment—some things about the cooking—and we never heard a word more about them, and the things as to which the suggestions were made go on to this day. They might seem perhaps to be trivial things—matters connected with the drugs and the cooking, but they were of some importance to the patients. They are, for instance, in the practice—I am speaking now supposing the practice has not been altered—they have been in the habit, instead of broiling chops and steaks on the gridiron, simply frying them; and we look upon that as an important matter. We look upon all frying as bad, especially for sick people. That matter was brought forward and spoken about, and a recommendation was sent in to the committee about it. We never heard any more of it—never got any notice in writing as to what became of it, and I am sure that the committee came to no conclusion about it.

5637. Are there any other matters which you brought forward? There has been an arbitrary sort of feeling among the committee. Some time ago we found that they interfered with our method of ordering extras for the patients. We have certain things to order, perhaps every Monday, and we go round and find that the wines have to be ordered afresh; and on some occasions we were content with signing these orders, leaving the nurses to fill them up. We did not sign blank forms, but they were filled up and brought to us and we signed them, and we supposed that our signatures would be enough.

5638. Who wrote these orders out? Sometimes the nurses wrote them out. These were not new orders, they were continuations of old orders, and they were brought to us for approval, so that if we wanted to make any alteration we could do so. The committee complained about this, and it was said that the nurses put things down on these cards for themselves, and that we signed them without consideration; and it was said that some of the doctors signed them before they were filled up. However that might be, the committee distinctly refused to allow us to merely sign these things, but said that they must be written by us and by the resident medical staff, as well as signed. We have the power of signing these orders for so many days, and the resident medical staff for only one day, so that if the resident medical officers signed them, their tickets would be out the next day. The committee would not allow us to merely sign these things. They said—"No, you must write every word of that"; and some of us represented that we thought our signatures should be sufficient for them. This may be a little thing, but I mention it to show that there is a sort of arbitrary spirit—an arbitrary way—with the medical men, which I think should not exist. The condition of the building also is very bad.

5639. There is ample evidence of that? Yes.

5640. Mr. Metcalfe.] Do you find the nursing satisfactory? Well, the nursing is sometimes very good and sometimes very indifferent. There is one practice in connection with it which may not have been mentioned—that is, the practice of suddenly, and without any warning to us, changing the nurses. It is generally done about every three months. They may have a good reason for it, but sometimes it is very awkward. I have gone up to a patient and asked the nurse how the patient has been during the night, and the nurse has said—"Oh, I am only on duty here to-day." I ask—"Where is the nurse that was here?" and she will say—"Oh, she has gone to such a ward." There is a change all round every three months, and consequently we are brought into contact with new nurses very often. That is objectionable, and I think if the change is made at all it should be made at longer intervals than that.

5641. Is it not necessary, if the staff is to be trained, that the nurses should pass through all the wards? I do not think so, unless from surgical wards to medical wards, but they put them from one medical ward to another, which is no change.

5642. Should they not be changed from male to female wards? Yes, but not every three months.

5643. President.] Is that not done in St. Thomas's Hospital? I do not know.

5644. You do not know whether it is done oftener here than there? I am not in a position to state. The nursing staff is under the control of the lady superintendent, who has the management of all the nursing, and I do not think it is advisable that the nurses should be changed from ward to ward so often; I do not say that the change should not take place at all.

* NOTE (on revision):—The male and female wards at St. Vincent's Hospital measure 91 ft. 3 in. in length and 21 ft. 2 in. in breadth; the male ward is 16 ft. in height; the female, 15 ft. 8 in. This gives a superficial area of space of about 84 ft. to each patient in either ward, or about 1,340 cubic ft. of space to each patient in the male ward, and about 1,312 in the female, i.e., allowing the wards to contain, as they at present do, twenty-three patients each.

- F. H. Quaiffe, Esq., M.D. 5645. How often do you think the nurses might be changed? About once in six months or so.
5646. Mr. Metcalfe.] A patient is not supposed to be in the hospital for three months? I am not speaking as regards any particular patient; but it affects us.
- 5 June, 1873. 5647. But you said you came to see a patient and found that the nurse was changed? Yes. It happened in that particular instance, but that happens every three months. You see that no nurse is left in the ward who has been in there before.
5648. Are you sure of that? No day nurses, at any rate.
5649. Mr. Cowper.] Do you mean to say that the day nurse should be able to tell you the condition a patient has been in during the night? She should know it—it is her duty to know it.
5650. Where is the night nurse? She should be in bed.
5651. But when the day nurse came on duty, could not the night nurse tell her what the patient's condition had been? Yes, but there are things that the day nurse knows about the patient—things that have occurred the afternoon before. We get from her facts as to the afternoon before, and when she is taken suddenly away the inconvenience is very great. I have frequently had that brought under my notice in severe cases. In a slight case it does not matter; but when a nurse is taking particular notice for you of a case, of course when she goes away the record falls to the ground. I think that once in six months would be quite often enough for such a change.
5652. Would not that depend on the length of time that it takes a nurse to go through the whole hospital? Yes, but it is not necessary for her to go through the whole hospital.
5653. Mr. Ellis.] Have you ever spoken to the lady superintendent about the matter? No, I have not spoken to her. I regarded it as a rule of the hospital.
5654. Mr. Gould.] What was the rule in the hospitals you have been in? Well, the nurses were never changed in that way. The nurse that was in a certain ward in the hospital in Glasgow in 1863, was there when I left in 1867.
5655. President.] Have they the Nightingale system of training? I am not acquainted with the Nightingale system,—as a system.
5656. Are you acquainted with Miss Nightingale's writings on the subject? No, I have never read them, though I have had some general information on the subject; but I may safely say that it was not the Nightingale system. These nurses were there permanently, and were only changed for misconduct.
5657. There was no training school there? They had under-nurses in the larger wards, who were shifted about more. The nurse I am speaking of, though only a nurse, was still a responsible party.
5658. Was there any system of probationers there? I do not think there was. Still, the main duty of an Infirmary is to look after itself and not to train nurses, after all.
5659. Still, the Legislature have thought fit to make it a training school? But notwithstanding that, they have no right to damage the institution. I have no objection to the nurses being changed, but I think that three months is an unreasonably short interval—too short altogether.
5660. When was the last change made? I forget when. There has not been one made very lately.
5661. Has there been one since Christmas? Yes, there has been one since Christmas.
5662. Has there been one within the last three months? I do not think so. I will not say that I have actually noticed the period to be three months, but that has been stated to me when I have been asking about it.
5663. Is there any other matter you can think of: on the whole you are satisfied with the nursing? Yes, on the whole I think that the nursing is pretty well conducted. I think that perhaps the nurses want a little more direct looking after than they get; that is to say, that somebody should be there to see that certain things are done. For instance, sometimes, not often, the medicines are neglected. I have known patients not to get their medicines for twenty-four hours after they were ordered, and then when the matter was investigated, it turned out to be nobody's fault.
5664. What was the longest delay that occurred in patients getting medicines after they were ordered? The longest delay was twenty-two hours. The patient complained to me, and the nurse said that the bottles were taken out into the hall, where certain boys are supposed to come and get them, and take them down to the dispensary; and it is said that these boys either smash the bottles, or do not take them; and the nurses do not look properly after the matter.
5665. Was there not a complaint that these boys did not take the bottles down, or carried them to wrong wards? Yes, they seemed to do so, but the nurses should look after them.
5666. But if there is a rule that the nurses shall not go down to the dispensary? The nurse is most decidedly responsible for not giving the medicine to the patient, and if she does not get it, it is her duty to make a complaint. I am not supposed to go to one or the other. If she does not get the medicine she should make a complaint. On the whole, I think that the nursing is pretty good; I have no special complaint against it but this one.
5667. Mr. Ellis.] Are you in favour of male or female nurses? For general wards I am in favour of female nurses.
5668. Mr. Metcalfe.] Do you think that the management here compares favourably with that of the hospitals in Scotland, altogether, as regards diet, nursing, and everything? Well, I cannot say that I think it does. I think that the Glasgow Infirmary is much better managed than the Sydney Infirmary.
5669. In what respect? In every respect. The sum total of the management is better.
5670. In what respect is the management here defective? I think that there is a want of concentration about the management. We have no one head to go to—the committee delegate their powers in some respects to the manager, and in some respects to the lady superintendent. I think that there should be one head to refer to in all cases.
5671. Do you think the lady superintendent or the manager should be the head? I cannot give an opinion on that point. I have been used to see a medical man at the head of institutions of this kind, and I do not see any objection to it—some people do. I think that a medical man at the head of an institution of this kind could look into matters better than a lay man could do.
5672. Mr. Ellis.] How was it in the Glasgow Infirmary? There was a medical man there, and the matron was under him distinctly.
5673. Was she under him in the performance of her special duties, or liable to be interfered with by him? She was quite under him.

* NOTE (on revision): I do not remember this question or its answer. My opinion is very decided that the manager should be the head. I think the question was between a lay manager and a medical one.

5674. Mr. Metcalfe.] Was there a Board there? Yes. The matron was responsible to the resident medical superintendent I believe. F. H. Quaiffe,
Esq., M.D.

5675. Mr. Goold.] Have you ever heard here of any complaints of unkindness or cruelty on the part of the nurses? Well, I have had complaints, but I do not think that I have ever had a complaint that was really substantiated. 5 June, 1873.

5676. You have investigated them when they were made? Yes, as far as I possibly could, and, I have almost always found that the patient was in fault and not the nurse, except in the case I have spoken of about the medicine; but as to unkindness, I cannot say that the nurses are unkind. As a rule, I think that they are quite the contrary.

Henry Norman McLaurin, Esq., M.D., Honorary Physician, Sydney Infirmary, called in and examined:—

5677. President.] This Commission has been appointed to inquire into the Public Charities of the Colony, more particularly the Sydney Infirmary, and to make suggestions that may tend to improve their condition and bring the Infirmary into accordance with the principles of modern hospital management. Are there any suggestions you would wish to make: we have had a great deal of evidence on many points, and if there is any matter that has struck your attention, we shall be glad to hear of it? The beds in the wards are too crowded; the area space is defective.

5678. Have you calculated it? I have not calculated it, but in one ward I believe there are 1,200 cubic feet per bed. Now, what I object to is that though the space appears to be good, from the height of the walls, yet the floor space is not sufficient, and the beds are too crowded.

5679. What would be a proper area? I think that you should have beds double their distance from each other in the ward that I refer to.

5680. Which ward is that? K.

5681. What is the number of feet you would allow? I should scarcely like to say, without calculation.

5682. In K ward you would reduce the number of beds by one-half? Yes; or one-third. The walls in that ward are very damp, and the corner furthest from the door and nearest to the Nightingale wing is very damp. If you go in you will see that it is damp. The drainage is decidedly bad. There is a drain at the corner of the south wing, near to the male building, from which there is often an unpleasant smell; and besides that, at the other end of the south wing there is a hole in the ground which is full of stagnant water, which drains into it from the Mint. I believe that it drains in there from the steam-engine which is used for crushing quartz in the Mint. It is a pool of stagnant water, which you can see for yourselves. I think it would be as well to have provision made for the ventilation of the sewers and the main drains outside. I have not gone into the matter however. The ventilation of the south wing is bad, because it is too close to the dead wall between it and the Mint. There is a narrow passage between the two, which is always an objectionable thing in a hospital.

5683. How would you remedy that? There are several ways by which it might be done. The best would be to take the wall down altogether; you might take it down and put a railing up.

5684. Then the wall does not support any building? No, it is merely a dividing wall between the Infirmary and the Mint. Then, I believe that they intend to build a dead-house close to the end of the south wing, which will make the ventilation still worse, as it will interfere with it still more.

5685. Where would you put the dead-house? In the place where it is now.

5686. And do you not think that, considering the prevailing north-east winds, a dead-house in the position of the present one would still more obstruct the ventilation? No, there would be nothing of that kind; a few trees could be planted round it.

5687. But do not the prevailing winds come from that direction? Yes.

5688. And would not the erection of the dead-house there, and the planting of trees about the dead-house, tend to block the wind out? No; because it would be at a distance from the hospital. The most objectionable thing is the presence of stagnant air, and if you crowd buildings together in this way you produce a series of wells of stagnant air. I am only giving my own opinion, and I think it is the proper one, but there is a good deal no doubt to be said on both sides. I think the nurses might get the wards in order a little earlier in the morning. I sometimes see dirty dishes about at 10 o'clock in the morning, and that should not be the case. The sanitary condition of the hospital is not good. I had a patient who died of erysipelas; she took erysipelas when she was convalescent from typhoid fever. That is a serious case in a hospital, and shows that there must be something bad about the draining or ventilation. There could not be a more serious accusation brought against a ward than a statement of fact of that kind. Then the lift is not in good order.

5689. Mr. Ellis.] What is that? The lift which is used in the south wing to convey things from the lower to the upper floor. It has not been in order for months. Then the system of diets is very expensive.

5690. In what way? I think that a system of diets might be arranged to provide patients with proper food at much less expense. The present dietary scale is too complicated.

5691. In what way—what articles are improperly supplied to the patients? Suppose a patient comes in and requires what is called "fever diet," or "low diet," you can put him on No. 4 or No. 5. That means that he is to get milk and bread, and you must supply all the other articles that he requires out of your own head at the time, and you give a great number of extras. That is a very expensive way of building up a man's diet; and, though it looks right in theory, still, in the practical working of a hospital it is very expensive. You find that the patient likes this thing and the other thing.

5692. Then it is the fault of the medical staff if these diets are made expensive? Yes, but we are human beings; we are not exempt from failings; and for a benevolent institution it would be best to arrange the diets in the most economical way. Then the cooking is not good.

5693. Mr. Goold.] What is the practice at Home with regard to the diets? At Home you have diets suitable to the condition of the patient in every case. When I was in Edinburgh we had certain scales, and you put the patient on to No. 1, or No. 2, or No. 3, or 4, or 5, according to the circumstances of the case, and it was seldom you added any extra to the diet which the patient had to take; unless it was some peculiar case, there were no extras ordered. That was the custom, and I think it was the most economical one.

H. N.
McLaurin,
Esq., M.D.

5 June, 1873.

5694. And when you stated the diet, the nurses would know exactly what to give? Yes. Then the cooking is not good, and it may be improved. There is a general want of unity in the management. There should, in my opinion, be a person in the position of a house governor, to have a seat at the Board, and reside on the premises, and have the general management of the hospital.

5695. Would you reduce the Board? Yes, I would reduce the Board of Management, and I would have a person there and call him a house governor. I would not have a medical man in the position, I would have a house governor—a person who would speak with authority, and a person who would be in command of the hospital, as it were.

5696. But would he not be in subjection to the other members of the Board? How in subjection?

5697. He must be under some one? Yes, but he would have a much better position than the present manager, who cannot speak at all in the Board unless he is asked to do so.

5698. Would you make the lady superintendent subject to this house governor? Yes, I would make every one subject to him.

5699. President.] Would there not be a danger of his carrying out his own ideas in preference to those of the Board? No, I think not. The difficulty now is, that if you have to make a complaint you do not know to whom to make it. Look at Guy's Hospital. The treasurer of Guy's Hospital is a man of standing, who has a seat at the Board and the entire management of the institution.

5700. He is the treasurer? Yes.

5701. You object to a medical man being in the position? Well, I think you will get a better man; and my reasons for thinking so are, that if you have a medical man, you will either get a young man looking for a practice, or a man of some standing, who would be likely to take advantage of his medical knowledge to throw difficulties in the way of the honorary surgeons and physicians carrying out their duties. This a non-medical man could not do. That is my reason for preferring a non-medical man.

5702. Then you would have to pay a medical officer a very large salary? I would not undertake to find a man to perform the duties under £1,000 year, and that is a pretty heavy figure.

5703. And no man of ability would take the position under that rate, I suppose? No, he could do better in private practice; besides, I do not think the manager should be a medical man; the duties are not medical in their character; he has simply to conduct order and discipline among the servants, and see that the regulations of the Board are carried out. I think that the Board should interfere as little as possible in the working of the matter, but should make good rules, and leave those rules to be carried out by efficient officers. They should not interfere in the way that they do here.

5704. Mr. Ellis.] You think that these sub-committees they have here are more a nuisance than otherwise? I think they are a clumsy way of attaining an end. I would rather have one man at the head. Have a house governor, give him strict instructions as to what he is to do, and let him do it—let the servants be under his authority—let his powers be clearly defined—and let him be responsible to the Board for everything that has to be done.

5705. In placing the lady superintendent under a manager of that kind, would you give him the right to interfere with the discharge of her special duties; would you allow him to go into the wards and say "You are not doing this properly"—or would you define her duties, and then place her under the manager? I would not expect a judicious man to interfere in that way; it would be like going into the kitchen to tell a man how to cook a potato; he would be there simply to see that people did their duty.

5706. Let her perform her duties without his interference? Yes, let her perform her duties, and if there was a complaint against her he would be the man to investigate it and take action. There would not be much difficulty. It would be unreasonable for him to go into the wards and tell the nurses how to make a poultice.

5707. The difficulty that occurs to me is this—that if the lady superintendent has not the power of dismissing and engaging nurses, she may have incompetent persons forced upon her? I would not give her the absolute power of doing that; but I would say that if a nurse is guilty of misconduct, let her be brought before the proper authority and let that discharge her.

5709. Have you read Miss Nightingale's writings? Yes, some of them. I have served in a good many hospitals conducted on this principle.

5710. Have you heard that Miss Nightingale recommends that the lady superintendent should be directly responsible to the Board? I think it is injudicious.

5711. She says that the plan you recommend has always proved a failure? In my experience it has not, and I give you as an instance the infirmary department of Greenwich Hospital.

5712. Is that managed under the Nightingale system? No; I speak of the system which I recommend.

5713. That is a military hospital? It was.

5714. Conducted on the old-fashioned system? Yes; there was complete subordination.

5715. Mr. Gould.] Do you know of any hospital in which the Nightingale system is carried out in its entirety? I heard that it was carried out in King's College Hospital, and I am told that it was not a success there.

5716. What is the general opinion among the medical profession, as far as you know? Of an independent matron?

5717. Well, yes—that is practically the system—I refer to it generally? The system of having an independent matron is looked upon as very objectionable.

5718. Mr. Ellis.] Why so? Because it leads to a divided authority—a clashing of authority.

5719. Mr. Metcalfe.] We have a sample of a divided authority here? Yes, decidedly; it is very objectionable I think. Of course I may be biased in my opinions from my military service, but wherever I have served I have seen the system which I recommend working exceedingly well.

George Fortescue, Esq., M.B., Honorary Surgeon, Sydney Infirmary, called in and examined :—

G. Fortescue,
Esq., M.B.

5720. President.] You are one of the honorary staff of the Sydney Infirmary? Yes; I have been one of the honorary surgeons for two years.

5721. This Commission has been appointed to inquire into the working and management of the Public Charities of the Colony; and—more particularly, with regard to the Infirmary—to direct attention to the introduction of improvements which will bring it more in accordance with the principles of modern hospital management. We shall be glad to hear any suggestions you may have to make with regard to any defects you may have seen in the Infirmary? The first thing that strikes one is the total inadequacy of the hospital buildings for the purposes of a hospital; they have done good service no doubt, but they are utterly behind the time.

5722. Are you acquainted with the plans which the Board have adopted for the purpose of altering and improving the building? Yes; I have seen them. It seems to me very much like an attempt to mend a garment which is quite worn out.

5723. Then do you think that the front buildings should be pulled down altogether? I am decidedly of that opinion. We want also, as I dare say you have heard, certainly a couple of hundred more beds.

5724. In that hospital or in Sydney? In Sydney; I should say a couple of hundred more beds, with the necessity of adding 100 more shortly. The increase in the number of applications is something enormous.

5725. Do you say this, bearing in mind the proposed erection of the Prince Alfred Hospital? That will give some relief, but we do not look forward to its accommodating many patients.

5726. Do you know how many beds it will contain? I thought less than 100. Of course there is no room on the present site of the Infirmary to build a hospital of 300 beds.

5727. Do you think it would be advisable to block up the present site more than it is blocked up? Certainly not. We accommodate more patients now than we should, and the space per bed is much too small.

5728. Have you calculated what it is? It varies from 500 to 1,600 cubic feet—1,600 is the maximum.

5729. What should it be in this climate? Certainly not less than 2,000 cubic feet. At Home 2,000 feet is the right allowance; but some modern hospitals have 2,400 feet, which is the rate, I believe, of my old hospital of King's College. I think that anybody who treats diseases in this hospital must be conscious of two things—the salubrity of the climate, and the bad influences of the hospital itself. That is to say, the patients get well up to a certain point rapidly, but convalescence is very tedious. There are certain forms of eye disease that never get well in this hospital, that is to say, in the old part of it.

5730. Do you not think the evils are to be got rid of by renewing the internal surface of the walls? No. The hospital was excellent for the time in which it was built, yet it has many fatal defects; for instance, the wards would be tolerably healthy were the main building broken into three, with passages between, and with the air circulating round each building; as it is, you get such a mixture of miasms and disease particles carrying contagion.

5731. But is not the system of corridors a bad one? Yes, quite so. There must, however, be passages connecting the pavilions. The modern system is to put each ward as much as possible by itself—as much as possible in the position of a separate building.

5732. Supposing that the Legislature refuses to pull down the present building, do you approve of the plans for its alteration? No; I think that they are very inadequate indeed.

5733. In what respects? They do not get rid of these objections.

5734. But can you get rid of them? I think not. There is one thing,—you cannot build a modern hospital of the requisite capacity on that site. There is only one place here where you can build a modern hospital.

5735. Where is that? The Barracks. There you might at once put your patients into as good a place as they are in now, and build your pavilions. I would recommend that. All authorities are against building a general hospital in the midst of a city.

5736. Mr. Metcalfe.] You can hardly call the Infirmary in the city; it is open to the Domain? Yes; but we have the city influences after all.

5737. You think that the money to be expended in building a new hospital should be spent on another site? Yes, I think so. I think the Government should face the difficulty of building a proper hospital. This is not a hospital for New South Wales merely, or for Australia, but for the whole of Polynesia—for all the Colonies.

5738. Mr. Gould.] Do you think the hospital should be built on the other site you mentioned? Yes, I think very strongly about that. We certainly require a smaller hospital for accidents close to the shipping, and there is a site for that—a better site than the Infirmary. This, however, is not so urgent a necessity.

5739. Where is that? The Observatory. I have been speaking to Mr. Russell, and he says that the Observatory will have to be moved. That is the spot for a small hospital, an accident hospital, of 100 beds. This is getting to be a large place. We must look to the future. I have confidence in the immense future of Sydney, and we should provide proper hospital accommodation.

5740. Mr. Ellis.] Have you examined the Barracks at Paddington, with a view to its being possibly converted into a hospital? You understand me; I do not wish to convert the present building into a hospital; but supposing you got the place, you could put the patients into wards there as good as they are in now. As the place now stands, we could accommodate all the patients in the Infirmary there I think: but that should not cause delay—we should at once build the new hospital.

5741. President.] Do you think that the site at the Observatory is as good as the site of the Infirmary? I think so; and besides, I think that the Infirmary site would be so valuable for other purposes. And with regard to the present site, I am confident that there is no room to accommodate an additional number of patients with beds there.

5742. What is the next matter to which you wish to draw attention? That matter above all I wanted to speak to you about. I may say that I first went into the place taking rather the opposite view, but I have since come to the conclusion that you cannot have any sufficient interest, any decent morale, any careful management, or anything to be proud of, in a building like the present, not only from a sanitary point of view, but from the general management point of view. You cannot be proud of it.

5743. Is there anything else? There is one little matter, with regard to the management on the surgical side, that I should like to mention. The present system seems to me to be a bad one. The surgeons admit by weeks in rotation, but do not have any definite number of beds assigned to them. I have not, nor has any one of the surgeons, any definite number of beds under control; and the consequence is that it actually comes to this,—that instead of sending them out as soon as possible, there is a great temptation—a temptation not to be resisted—of keeping patients in until the surgeon gets others to supply their places. In that way the progress of patients through the Infirmary is delayed.

5744. You have observed this tendency? Oh yes, it is notorious.

5745. Mr. Ellis.] You would remedy it by limiting the number of beds under the control of each surgeon? Yes, I would remedy it in that way. The medical men have a much more sensible plan, which is the plan in London, of having each certain wards, or a certain number of beds each. It is so in London: so many beds to Sir William Ferguson, so many to each of the other gentlemen, and so on. They had each his fixed number of beds; and the house surgeons had a larger responsibility for admitting cases. I would wish here to increase the responsibility of the house surgeon for admitting patients, and I do so as far as I can. The house surgeon constantly takes in patients for me personally; and that is the result of my old association with the London hospitals, where the house surgeon is generally an advanced student just through. I was house surgeon myself at King's, and where he is allowed to admit.

5746. But the impression is that the honorary medical men wish to retain this power of admission? I do not personally.

5747. You see no objection to its being vested in the house surgeon? No; on the contrary, it is desirable, if a certain number of beds are given to us and we fill them up in the order of vacancy.

5748. But it has been suggested to us that if the house surgeon became more intimate with some medical men than others, he would give them all the best cases? We must trust to him, that is all, and make it hot for him if he does anything of that kind.

5749. Have you observed that patients are unnecessarily detained in the hospital, thus excluding patients who ought to be admitted? That is the unfortunate thing.

5750. Are you conscious of having done this yourself? Well, I am not a considerable offender, I think, but what is one to do? I found my beds the other day reduced almost to nothing by the persistent course pursued by others of retaining patients until they could admit others for themselves. Of course, a man who wishes to act fairly is at a great disadvantage, because he sends his patients out as fast as he can, and thus fills up everybody else's beds as a matter of course.

5751. There has been a case mentioned to us of a man named Graham, with whom it is said you had something to do—a man who was kept in the hospital after he should have been discharged? Yes, I can tell you about the case; it was simply a mistake. The house surgeon—believing that I gave him instructions to send the man out, and believing so wrongly—discharged him. I, coming round the next day and seeing the man, saw that he was not fit to go out, and the man moreover had no home to go to, and I did not think that it was right he should go out so soon. I just remember that fact.

5752. Perhaps the impression is that this was a case detained in abuse of the system you have mentioned? No, it was not. I remember the case. It was a discharge by a mistake of the resident surgeon, who thought that I had given instructions to have the man sent out, which I corrected the next day. The man was not well enough to go out. That happened to be the case in Graham's matter; but it might happen that you might think a man well enough one day to be discharged, and the next day find some alteration to necessitate his being kept in.

5753. But still of the existence of this abuse you are convinced? Yes, I am quite satisfied about it.

5754. A witness has complained to us that some of the patients are allowed to read novels on a Sunday—What is your opinion as to that? I am indifferent as to these matters myself. I think that a good novel will do a man much more good than a bad homily. There is one other point which I should like to mention; it has just occurred to me. There is very great difficulty and delay, when I have recommended apparatus for patients, in getting what they require. There is an immense amount of red tape about the matter. There is one case of a man who wanted some apparatus, and who was kept in the hospital for three months waiting for it. There is such a round-about way of doing things. A requisition has to be sent by the medical man to the house surgeon, and the house surgeon sends it to the manager, and then it goes to the Board and back again, and there is great delay. I think that the hospital suffers by men being kept in who might be discharged more early.

5755. Have you found many cases kept in the hospital who, equally beneficially to themselves and more economically to the Government, might be treated in the Liverpool Asylum? Yes, there are cases which would do better there. Granulated eyes here require the greatest attention—in fact, they never do get well in the old part of the Infirmary. I do not, however, wish to convey the idea that an affection frequently so dangerous to vision as granular lids, and so common here, should be treated out of a hospital, or without the greatest available care, experience, and surgical skill. This hospital is well called an Infirmary. It rather corresponds with what are called the "Workhouse Infirmaries" at Home, where a good many of these chronic cases go to. Of course, in no hospital at Home do they admit cases of bad legs, ulcers, and things of that sort. They go to the Workhouse Infirmary at Home.

5756. Are you satisfied with the nursing here, upon the whole? Yes, upon the whole I am satisfied; I think it is very good. I may say, however, that I have been struck by a certain want of discipline in the wards.

5757. Mr. Goold.] From what does that arise? I do not know whether it arises from the difficulty of dealing with violations of the rules or not, but it is a fact that the patients seem to be much less under control here than are men in the English hospitals. I fancy that the nurses are not quite able to keep them under control. We have a few very good nurses, and in their wards the discipline is perfect; but there are some who are not able to assert order. I have found that occasionally rather marked. I believe myself that a lady superintendent is a necessary accompaniment of this nursing by women, and a woman of superior education and social position should have the charge or supervision of each ward.

5758. They would have more moral power? Yes.

5759. Mr. Ellis.] Do you like the term "sister" as applied to these head nurses? Well, I am prejudiced by old associations. I should always call the lady in charge of a ward the "sister," and the others "nurses."

5760. President.] The head nurses tell us that they find that the term "sister" gives them more authority? Yes, I was always of opinion that the head nurses should be called "sisters." I belong to the hospital at Home

Home which introduced this system. The nursing there was admirably done; a Miss Jones, at the head of a community, the Protestant sisterhood of St. John's House, contracted to nurse the hospital with trained nurses, and the sisters of the institution did the supervision.

5761. Mr. Goold.] They were unpaid? They were sisters of St. John's House—ladies with a religious craze, most of them, I think.

5762. Can you inform us what St. John's House was? a Protestant house—a religious house.

5763. President.] These sisters were not bound by vows, were they? Yes, they were bound by vows, I think. I think, however, that Miss Jones did not get on very well in the hospital; the result was that there was a kind of imperium in imperio. Miss Jones was a very nice person, but she liked to have her own way, and there was a small contention always going on between the medical officers, the committee, and Miss Jones. It ended in the contract with Miss Jones being annulled, and the hospital being nursed by a matron of less pretensions than Miss Jones, under the manager and the committee.

5764. Was the manager a medical man? No, he was not.

5765. Would you approve of a medical man as manager of a hospital? No, I do not think so; I think a business man would be better.

5766. Mr. Metcalfe.] But we have got a business man here now? Have you?

5767. Mr. Blackstone, the manager? Is he?—A business man—well, I mean an active business man; that is my ideal of what a manager should be. I have no grounds, however, for thinking unfavourably of Mr. Blackstone's performance of his duties as manager. I do not know what his powers may be, or whether he has any powers at all, or represents simply the worth or the deficiencies of the committee.

5768. Mr. Goold.] Then at King's College Hospital this system of nursing has ceased? Yes.

5769. And it was Miss Nightingale's system? I do not know. I rather think that Miss Jones had the priority of Miss Nightingale. She was the originator of the thing.

5770. President.] Then the system has not ceased at King's College—you mean to say that Miss Jones has ceased to carry it on? Yes; it is now administered by a matron who has much less authority than Miss Jones had. The imperium in imperio has been got rid of.

5771. Mr. Goold.] Judging from a note which appears in this pamphlet of Miss Nightingale's, I think that these unpaid ladies who are called "sisters" are an essential part of Miss Nightingale's system? I do not think it has been represented as an essential part, but to my mind it is a very important part.

5772. What I mean is, that you will not get educated persons to come forward here and take these positions which educated persons do take at Home without pay? You will not get them here; but consider, among the millions at Home you can frequently find these persons. There are a good many reasons which induce ladies to devote themselves to it, and the system gives you first of all women of position, of means, and of leisure, women who have had some disappointment perhaps, or have some turn in the direction of nursing. It gives you what you will want, and what you cannot get out here.

5773. President.] You cannot get people here without pay, but can you not get people here by paying them? These are not paid.

5774. But Mr. Goold means to convey that you cannot get such people here even by paying for them? Oh yes, you could.

5775. Mr. Ellis.] Do you approve of that? Yes, if it is not overdone. I think that it is necessary to the proper carrying out of the system.

5776. President.] Then you see no objection to the system of having a lady superintendent at the head of a body of educated women? I see clearly that if we have a matron, she must not have too much authority. She is a woman.

5777. Mr. Goold.] What do you think should be her duties? To look after the nurses and the nursing.

5778. Would that be the position which Miss Osburn occupies? Yes, exactly the same.

5779. President.] Miss Nightingale's system consisted of a gradation of nurses—an organized system? An organization of trained nurses, superintended by ladies called "sisters." It worked very well with us. I think it was the individual, Miss Jones, who gave the trouble.

5780. When this system was introduced, I believe there was a good deal of objection, on the part of old gentlemen of the medical profession, against it? I suppose there was, but I was not aware of it. It was very nice; everything was capitally arranged.

5781. Mr. Ellis.] Are you in favour of the system which prevails at present of giving separate wards to the honorary medical officers? No, I am not.

5782. Do you think that the beds should be distributed throughout the various wards? Yes.

5783. And that each medical officer should have a certain number of beds? Yes. I think that the plan on the medical side is bad as regards the medical men having separate wards, but not at all as regards their each having a definite number of beds. It saves the medical man going about, certainly, if he has all his patients in one ward, but I think the medical officers should circulate all over the place.

5784. President.] Do you not think that it would tend to keep the nurses up to their work? Yes, of course.

5785. With regard to the discipline of which you were speaking just now,—if the rule exists that patients should not wear their own clothes —? It should exist decidedly.

5786. Is it not undesirable that such a rule should be violated? Yes, most undesirable.

5787. And if a medical man constantly violates this rule, while other medical men enforce it, does that not impair the discipline? Yes; it is a gross violation of the rules, in my opinion.

5788. Have you seen any reason why people should be allowed to wear their own clothes in the hospital? No; and there are many reasons why they should wear the hospital clothes. They should feel that they belong to the hospital when they come into it—that they are not private patients. Their clothes should be taken away from them, and that is done in all well-regulated hospitals.

5789. And if it is a rule that smoking should not be allowed? Yes, but it is a most difficult thing to manage.

5790. Should the systematic violation of the rule be allowed? No, certainly not; but you see the visiting surgeon has so few opportunities of seeing these things.

5791. But if it is reported to him, should he not discharge the patient? Yes. There is one great cause of the want of discipline in the hospital, and that is the fact that if a patient is discharged for misconduct by one surgeon, the chances are that if he likes he can be admitted by some other one.

5792. Would you prevent that by rule? Of course; it is a great disadvantage. We have no way of punishing patients. I have tried to make a stand on that matter.

- G. Fortescue, Esq., M.B.
5 June, 1873.
5793. Have you ever found any reasons for performing operations on a Sunday? Yes, many reasons.
5794. What are they? We have comparatively more leisure for certain operations, and are free from the worry of visitors. There are certain operations also that the leisure gives us the opportunity of doing, when otherwise we might have to keep the patient a week without doing it. There are certain operations too, in which a crowd of visitors will heap up the chances against the patient, and I consider it my duty to perform such an operation when I am not liable to such influences.
5795. And should you not prevent persons being present beyond those who ought necessarily to be present? You cannot keep them out. We cannot do eye operations safely in the midst of a crowd. I shall never do it again.
5796. You do perform operations on a Sunday? Yes; I think that there are five or six operations against me. I do them sometimes.
5797. Does that not impose extra labour on the nurses, and keep them from going to church? We never keep people from church. That has been something added to the complaint. There is nobody kept from church except the patient, who could not attend in any case, and the wardsman (whom I never found at church) lends a hand. There are always also, or ought to be, nurses on duty in the neighbouring wards.
5798. You do this because you find that it is necessary? Because I find it necessary; and imitating the example of many more eminent men than myself, who frequently do their small operations on Sunday.
5799. Are the medical men here less punctual in their attendance at the hospital than they are in London? Yes, but there they are clinical teachers, and have students whom they bring through the hospitals; but even there they are not too punctual, as I know by experience.
5800. But would you not find the place thrown into confusion if there were much unpunctuality? I do not think that there would be much damage done in that way. Of course punctuality is desirable; but then the medical officers here are general practitioners, some of them very busy. The question comes in this way,—they have all kinds of summonses to urgent cases, and they have to go to them, and they go with perfect satisfaction, because they know that there are two qualified men in the Infirmary to attend to the patients. If they were asked why they did not give up the attendance at the Infirmary, they would say that perhaps they might as well; and then the question arises as to whether you will have your patients attended by men who are young in practice, and who have not gained the confidence of the public outside.
5801. But cannot the honorary medical officers attend at stated hours? No, I do not think that it is possible.
5802. Might it not be the rule, with a few exceptions? But the exceptions would be the rule. It is impossible for them to be there at any regular stated hour. I have been asked to attend at 11; and, as consultations usually keep me at home till nearly 12 o'clock, it would cost me several hundreds a year to do that. You may rely upon it that the honorary medical officers will attend the Infirmary whenever they can.
5803. Mr. Ellis.] I believe that the best check upon the irregularity would be the adoption of the system you suggested—that is, to have the beds distributed throughout the hospital, because then any great neglect would be manifest to everybody? I do not think that there is any special neglect. I am there four times a week, and if there is an urgent case I am there sometimes twice a day; but if you ask me what time I am there, I am afraid the answer will not be satisfactory, for if I am not there in the morning I go in the afternoon.
5804. President.] Do you think that the medical officers should be appointed permanently? They should not. They should be elected for three years, and should be eligible for re-election for another three years, and then should be ineligible for a year. They should not be eligible for re-election for more than three years. In that way you would get the best men. There is one matter I want to allude to, and that is the inadequacy of the hospital for the treatment of eye cases. We want a ward for that. The ward we have is something dreadful, with a cubic average of 500 feet. It is a very painful subject with me,—that matter of the eye cases in the hospital. Granular eyes never do get well in the hospital—never entirely recover, in the old part of it. You will find it very difficult to get general practitioners to be punctual as to their hours of attendance, though they will come on the proper days. If we were simply surgeons or pure physicians it would be different, but we are summoned to all kinds of cases; and depend upon it, the man who is punctual in his attendance at the hospital has not much to do.
5805. Are you acquainted with this treatise of Miss Nightingale's on hospital management? [See Appendix A.] I have read it some time ago.
5806. Do you agree with this: "Vest the charge of financial matters and general supervision and the whole administration of the infirmary in the board or committee, i.e., in the officer who is responsible to that board or committee. Vest the whole responsibility for nursing, internal management, for discipline, and training (if there be a training school) of nurses in the one female head of the nursing staff, whatever she is called. The necessity of this again, is not matter of opinion, but of fact and experience. I will enter a little more fully into this, viz., the relation which the nursing establishment ought to bear to the government of the hospital. The matron or nursing superintendent must be held responsible for her own efficiency, and the efficiency of all her nurses and servants. As regards the medical officers, she must be responsible that their orders about the treatment of the sick are strictly carried out. To the governing body of the hospital she shall be held responsible for the conduct, discipline, and duties of her nurses, for the discipline of her sick wards, for their cleanliness, for the care and cleanliness of sick, for proper ventilation and warming of wards, for the administration of diets and medicines, of enemas, &c., the performance of minor dressings, and the like, for the care of linen and bedding, &c., and probably of patients' clothing. The duties which each grade has to perform should be laid down by regulation, and all that the medical department or the governing body of the hospital has a right to require is that the regulation duties shall be faithfully performed. Any remissness or neglect of duty is a breach of discipline, as well as drunkenness or other bad conduct, and can only be dealt with to any good purpose by report to the superintendent of nurses of the infirmary. I may perhaps again point out that the superintendent should herself be responsible to the constituted hospital authorities, and that all her nurses and servants should, in the performance of these duties, be responsible to the superintendent only. No good ever comes of the constituted authorities placing themselves in the office which they have sanctioned her occupying. No good ever comes of any one interfering between the head of the nursing establishment and her nurses. It is fatal to discipline. All complaints on any subject should be made directly to the superintendent, and not not to any nurse or servant. She should be made responsible, too, for her results, and not for her methods. Of course, if she does not exercise the authority entrusted to her with judgment and discretion, it is then the legitimate province of the governing body to interfere and to remove her." Do you approve of these principles? Yes. I think that must be taken with a little reservation with regard to the medical men.

G. Fortescue,
Esq., M.B.

5 June, 1873.

Are we to go to head quarters if we want any special alteration?—that has always been a serious difficulty. 5807. Of course the medical men are supposed to give their orders to the nurses, and the lady superintendent must see that those orders are carried out? But suppose she has a different opinion. That was the case with Miss Jones. The medical staff would give directions, and Miss Jones would be opposed to the carrying out of those directions.

5808. Mr. Ellis.] This lady says here further on: "It is the duty of the medical officer to give what orders in regard to the sick he thinks fit to the nurses; and it is unquestionably the duty of the nurses to obey or to see his orders carried out. Simplicity of rules, placing the nurses in all matters regarding management of sick absolutely under the orders of the medical men, and in all disciplinary matters absolutely under the female superintendent (matron) to whom the medical officers should report all cases of neglect, is very important?" That is quite sufficient. I think I agree with every word of that, after all. Let the lady superintendent be responsible for the training and management of the nurses, and for the domestic arrangements of the nurses, and the cleanliness of the patients, linen, and so on; but the nurses are directly responsible for carrying out the instructions of the medical officers.

5809. They are bound to obey them? Yes, of course. The lady superintendent will herself give the complaints of nurses against patients to the medical officers, or the nurses will do that.

5810. Her object then would be to get the patient discharged? Quite so.

5811. They do that now—if a nurse complains of a patient, she complains to you? Yes.

5812. That is a system which you approve of? Yes, I think so.

5813. Then, on the whole, you agree with the principles here laid down? Yes, I must agree with that. I see nothing to cavil at there. I imagine that the difficulty in carrying out the system must be in the individual characters of the superintendents on some occasions. There is nothing in the system against the proper working of it.

5814. Mr. Ellis.] Which do you prefer, male or female nurses? Female nurses.

5815. Even for the men's wards? Yes, I am altogether prejudiced in favour of that arrangement.

5816. You think it would be false delicacy to imagine that a woman cannot nurse a sick man? Yes. That is the office of woman. At King's we had women even in the syphilitic wards, but I do not like that. I am bound to say that the discipline in the ward here which is nursed by a man is very good. I have been struck by that—that the general discipline of the ward is the best in the hospital.

5817. Mr. Metcalfe.] Then you think well of the nursing staff here? Yes, I think it is very good.

5818. As good as the material you have to work with will permit? As good as the appliances will allow of—with this rushing about the stair-cases, no lifts to lift things up with quietly. There is no such skurry, in a well regulated hospital, of nurses and boys, and no such mixing together of patients of different wards at meal-times in the passages between the wards.

5819. President.] We are informed that the nurses used to have a constant supply of things in the wards, such as tow and linseed-meal, and so on, to save the nurses running about after them? It is destructive of all discipline, that running about, you know.

5821. Mr. Metcalfe.] But so it is here—the meals come up, and the nurses carve? Yes, but still there is great confusion. The meat is cut up, and the patients come out for it, because the appliances are not good enough. If you could only get the Government to face the question and give us another site—they will have to face it in a short time, for this hospital is an absolute disgrace to the people here.

5822. Mr. Ellis.] You think the best thing to do is for the Government to resume the site and give us the Barracks? Yes; here is a place which is very unsuitable for a hospital such as is urgently required, but let that pass. We want 200 additional beds at once, and a prospective 100 more very soon, as the progress of the place goes on so fast, and there is no room on that site where the Infirmary now stands for a modern hospital of 400 or 500 beds. It already holds more than it should do, according to the calculation given of the cubic space.

FRIDAY, 6 JUNE, 1873.

Members Present:—

WILLIAM CHARLES WINDEYER, Esq., PRESIDENT.

SAMUEL GOOLD, Esq.

EYRE G. ELLIS, Esq.

MICHAEL METCALFE, Esq.

CHAS. COWPER, JUN., Esq.

Joseph George Raphael, Esq., member of the Board, Sydney Infirmary, called in and examined at his own request:—

5823. President.] You are one of the committee of the Sydney Infirmary? Yes, I am one of the directors. J. G. Raphael,

Esq.

5824. How long have you been so? I think for the last six or seven years.

5825. We understand that you wish to make some communication to us: we shall be happy to hear any statement which you have to make? I have little to state here which I have not stated in the House. I think that the institution is wrongly conducted altogether. First of all, I think that we should do away with the honorary medical staff, with the exception that we should give them the benefit of visiting the Infirmary; and the time has arrived when you should have a paid physician and a paid surgeon, one to be the principal superintendent and physician, and the other should be the paid surgeon and assistant superintendent.

5 June, 1873.

5826. Is there anything else that you wish to state? I have seen so many abuses from the first time that I became a director, to the current time, that I am convinced, as a Public Charity the institution does not answer

J. G. Raphael, Esq., answer its purposes. When I first became a director, I had cause to find fault with the way in which the food was served to the patients, to which I called the attention of many of the directors, among whom were the Rev. Canon Stephen, Mr. Coveny, Mr. Stephen the barrister, and many other gentlemen in the same way, because I felt and found that there was a large waste, and that the food was not suitable for hospital purposes.

6 June, 1873.

5827. How long ago was this? It was when I first became a director. I have come here as early as half-past 5 in the morning, to watch the meat coming in, since which time I have found that peculiar things have grown up from the want of a proper supervision. I was one among others for the purpose of securing the services from England—a deputation of us waited upon Mr. Parkes—for the purpose of getting out the lady superintendent and nursing staff, which I am very sorry to say has not answered its purposes. We have gone to an enormous expense in building a wing—an enormous expense,—and the superfluities and extravagancies there, I believe, are equal to one-third of what the patients cost. I have seen food, since this has been established, suitable for any respectable tradesman's table, put into the tub to be carted away for hog-food; and this has been growing up for years. I believe the cost of the Nightingale wing to be equal to one-fourth of the rest of the expenditure; and if this is to be considered in the cause of charity, I am sorry that I have unfortunately been one to add so largely to an expenditure which never was contemplated; and considering the very large sum which the trustees of this institution have in hand, I consider that the building has been allowed to get into a ruinous and scandalous state, which should have been prevented. On one occasion I offered to have that patch in front of the building repaired at my own cost; for I got so ashamed of gentlemen coming from the neighbouring Colonies,—of their attention being called to it,—that I thought it beneath the dignity of the Colony not to attend to it, and yet it has been continued to the present time. I shall not revert to the dead-house, for I understand that has been remedied, but it has been one of those evils and disgraces which are a disgrace to civilization; and all these things have been allowed to accumulate on account of the want of a proper supervision by the Government, who have been the largest contributors. While Mr. Manning was secretary, we went into a revision of what the cost of the patients was, and there is no doubt that the Government were then compelled to contribute to the full amount of the cost for every patient that they sent in. Well, gentlemen, an abuse was created out of that, for instead of private subscribers giving orders, everybody is sent to the Government, and the consequence is that subscribers' orders have been refused,—my own included. Now, gentlemen, there is a very important feature in this, and I trust you will weigh it and consider it when I have passed away from you—that is, that in a charitable institution like this, the medical gentlemen should have nothing to do with the admissions. Patients should be admitted by the directory, some members of which might meet once or twice a week for that purpose, and the result would be that there would be much more fair play for the unfortunate creatures who seek admission here than there is now. If this is a charitable institution, you should only know that the worst cases are admitted. It has occurred since I have been a director, and living as I do opposite to the Colonial Secretary's Office, that Mr. Halloran has sent persons over to me for recommendations; not that such persons were not proper persons, or to save himself trouble, for Mr. Halloran is a very kind, warm-hearted man, but because it was necessary to do so; and I may have figured in that way of signing recommendations more than I was entitled to, like that eminent and glorious old gentleman Dr. Lang. In consequence of many patients being kept here needlessly, many other deserving objects of charity are kept out. I am happy to assert that I supported Captain Onslow in moving for this inquiry, believing as I do that an immense deal of good will result therefrom. As to the internal management of the institution, I believe that in consequence of a difference of opinion between the manager and the lady superintendent, the institution is not conducted as it should be. The lady superintendent has aimed far above whatever was contemplated when she was sent for. The understanding was, when she was sent for, that she was to be wholly and solely manageress over her nurses, and nothing beyond it; and she was not to be housekeeper, or have charge of the house business. Her duties were expected to be confined to the superintendence of the nursing staff for hospital purposes, and nothing beyond it. From the negligence of the Board, she has had other duties cast upon her. She has had the purchasing of stores, clothing, &c.; and has even been allowed to purchase on her own account, and sell clothing to her nursing staff, which surely never could have been contemplated.

5828. Do you mean by selling on her own account that she sold at a profit? All I know is, that she purchased stuff and sold it to the nurses; and I moved a resolution, which was carried, that whatever stuff she had on hands, we should take from her and pay her the cost, and let it pass to the stock of the institution.

5829. What do you mean by her selling on her own account? I mean that she sold goods to the nurses. I would be sorry to impute anything to her further than I would to my own mother or sister. I mean to be guarded in what I say. I do not know what she did do, further than I know she did wrong.

5830. What was the wrong? The wrong was that she should never have bought stock and gone begging to her subordinates as a saleswoman, thus leading them to the inference that they would be doing her a favour by buying these things from her.

5831. Mr. Gould.] Whom do you mean by saleswoman? Miss Osburn herself.

5832. President.] What were these goods? They were for dress purposes, and calico for under-clothing purposes.

5833. Mr. Ellis.] Did she account for the money which she received for these goods? The matter was not known for some time. We did not know it for a long time, until a squabble arose. Did Mr. Driver give you a statement that I handed over to him?

5834. President.] No? No! I gave Driver a printed statement to lay before this Commission, because you would have learned a great deal from that.

5835. Mr. Ellis.] We shall have it by-and-by, I suppose? I name it here that you may inquire into it. I gave it to Driver for you. It was a printed report. I stated at a public meeting that I wished I had chopped my finger off before I signed that statement, because I felt that I was a coward in hiding things which I should not have done.*

5836. What report do you mean? A printed report on the nurses who were imported into this Country.

5837. Did you give that in to Mr. Driver? Yes.

* NOTE.—The report here referred to was signed by Messrs. Alfred H. Stephen, Chairman, W. M. Alderson, J. G. Raphael, M. J. Dwyer, John Alger, John R. Street, R. Lewers, M. H. Stephen, and J. E. Manning. It was printed by order of the Legislative Assembly, in November, 1870, and laid on the Table of the House.

5838. Is that report entered upon the minutes of the Board? When this inquiry was instituted I gave J. G. Raphael, the papers to Mr. Driver, the printed copy and the report, and amongst the signatures to it is my own name. I hope that you will ask Mr. Driver for it. Esq.

5839. In what year was it made? I think it was some three or four years ago. It was some time ago, 6 June, 1873.

when a dispute arose between the lady superintendent and her nurses, when she was crushing them out of the institution. I would be mild in saying a word against the lady superintendent, but she has been so supported here, she was taken up by the Country and made a goddess of here, and I believe that was her first fall in life. In that report you will find it stated how these nurses have been scattered about. One of them was married; one is, I think, in the Prince Alfred Hospital in Melbourne; and the third one, Mrs. Blundell, is in the Benevolent Asylum. She is matron there; and that is one witness I would like called. There are other witnesses—Dr. Bedford, junior, Dr. Markey, and Dr. Schuette. You should have these gentlemen. You will learn more from them than I can give you. I have no hesitation in saying, that if anything in my life has ever given me pain in seeing how badly an institution has been conducted, it is this institution, and I have to hope that the result of your inquiries will be for the benefit of the true spirit of charity and humanity. The amount of extravagance in this institution has been something very culpable. We have had our attention called to the greatest excesses in wines, spirits, and other matters, until the Board have literally shrunk from it. Without hesitation, I state that an enormous expenditure has taken place here, which should not have occurred, considering the little benefit derived from it. I must again state that I have found there are many occasions when, from the lady superintendent being upheld in a position that was never intended for her, she is continually coming into contact with the officers of the institution. Some of them she has caused to be dismissed, because they did not call her Lady Superior.

5840. President.] Who was that? There was a man—I cannot recollect his name.

5841. What office did he hold? I cannot say.

5842. Were you a director at the time? I was, and I fought against it at the time. There was another man hounded out of the place, because he would not bow his head to Miss Osburn. The manager can tell you that.

5843. I want to identify the man? If Mr. Blackstone is called he could give you the name at once, because I moved that the man should not be discharged.

5844. Mr. Goold.] Would his name not appear on the minutes? No doubt it would. It should do. The man was discharged afterwards.

5845. President.] But more men than one have been discharged? But this was a peculiar case. Mr. Russell could tell you the man's name, no doubt.

[Mr. H. D. Russell called in.]

Mr. Raphael: Mr. Russell, do you remember the name of that man who was discharged a short time ago—a wardsman—discharged for some impertinence to a nurse? It was Whitney.

That was the man? Patrick Whitney.

[Mr. Russell withdrew.]

5846. President.] That is the case you refer to? Yes. The chief evidence against this man was that he was not sufficiently respectful to one of the nurses and Miss Osburn, and there was no rest given to the Board until he was dismissed. We have had it here that one of the nurses has been impertinent to ministers of religion, and yet they have been upheld by the Board.

5847. Have these matters been gone into by the Board? Yes. The Rev. Canon Smith has complained here of similar matters.

5848. Did the Board inquire into them? Well, unfortunately Mr. Metcalfe may come here, and I come one day, and we perhaps have no time to come to the next meeting.

5849. Mr. Ellis.] But you have some members who come regularly? No, not all.

5850. Mr. Josephson comes to every meeting? Oh, he is only a new chum; Mr. Metcalfe, now, is an old chum here.

5851. But Mr. Josephson, it appears, knows more about the institution than any of the directors or anyone else? He has so much conceit, that he thinks he could gobble up all the directors in one bunch.

5852. He would not do that from the value he sets upon them—they would certainly not be his article of diet? Well, I believe that if this establishment were conducted on the principle I state, with a medical superintendent and an assistant superintendent, the expenses could be kept down one-third, and the efficiency of the place doubled. These should be undoubtedly well-paid officers, and I conscientiously believe that the expenses would be considerably less, and we should be able, financially, to spare more for the relief of the sick and suffering. I would further state that I think that the Government would be very wise indeed if they took back this plot of ground and gave the institution some available piece of ground for a receiving-house, and take the hospital out of town. Have here a receiving-house for accidents and casualties, and take the hospital out of town. Of course, in the present state of the Colony, the building is unsuitable on the one hand, and not the description of building on the other. From the present dilapidated state that the building has been allowed to fall into, the repairs would cost nearly half the amount of a new building; and since we find that in the modern improvements of hospitals they should be built in sections instead of large portions, an enormous benefit would be the result; but I should beg specially to state that there should be central in the city a proper receiving-house for accidents and casualties, which would more than compensate the Government if they resumed this ground. Firstly, the drainage is bad in this part; secondly, you have a very bad water supply; thirdly, you have not the sanatory comfort here that you should possess, and that should be possessed by a public hospital; and fourthly, I hope that the time has arrived when the citizens of Sydney will endeavour to raise an edifice in every way suitable for hospital purposes, worthy of the Colony and the city itself; at the same time seeking to comfort the afflicted and the unfortunate, and give them all the resources which are so badly wanted. I shall conclude my remarks by stating that I do not think this "sister" nursing has answered its purposes, inasmuch as we have not turned out any trained nurses from the institution since it has been established, in any way corresponding with the very large amount of expenditure incurred for that purpose.

5853. Mr. Metcalfe.] You were a director long before Miss Osburn arrived here? Oh yes.

5854. Did you prefer the then system to the present? Well, I believe I made a mistake. I believe that the former nursing surpassed the present. I will state openly that I believe I made a very great mistake. I believe that Mrs. Ghost's management of the institution far excelled Miss Osburn's, although I was that prejudiced at the time that I was one of the warmest supporters for the sending out here of the new staff. But I am not ashamed to say that I have made a mistake, and I would rather admit it than die with the sin on my soul. I thought that everything was so bad then that I thought the best thing to do was

was to send Home for nurses ; and there is no doubt of it, if the thing had been carried out in the way it should have been—if these sisters had remained here instead of being dispersed and driven away, the place would have been better than it was ; but in consequence of disagreements they became separated ; and, I am sorry to admit, I have been sorry for it ever since.

5855. Mr. Ellis.] Did you consider that the nurses who came out from England were thoroughly competent? Yes. It was a pleasure to go through the wards when they were here.

5856. Then if medical gentlemen say that they were incompetent, and that Miss Osburn was incompetent, and showed her incompetency by selecting such incompetent nurses, would you believe that? That man is prejudiced, whoever he is.

5857. Who should you think it was? I should say Dr. McKay was one, or Dr. Roberts. Miss Osburn did not select these people at all ; they were sent out here.

5858. Dr. McKay said that they were not competent? Oh well, he was my doctor once, and he nearly killed me ; I would not have him again on any account.

5859. He has brought you to a fine old age, at any rate? No, he has not.

5860. Mr. Goold.] You say that these nurses were efficient? I believe that Mrs. Blundell was one of the instructors of Miss Osburn.

5861. Mr. Cowper.] Have you not found through life that pupils are sometimes more competent than teachers, after the pupils have been taught? No, not in this case, because she is the best nurse they had.

5862. President.] Do you not know that that is a part of the Nightingale system—that the lady superintendent may probably be trained by a nurse who is afterwards under her? No. I am sure of one thing—that Miss Osburn is too clever for me. She should have been a barrister ; she is the best letter-writer I have ever seen in my life.

5863. Do you know that that is part of the Nightingale system—that a lady superintendent may probably be trained by one of the nurses over whom she is afterwards superintendent? I believe that there has been a good deal of religious prejudice since Miss Osburn has been here, throughout the place, and it is not my place, though I am a Hebrew, to agree with it. There has been a good deal of religious prejudice since she has been here, and there never was before. She had emissaries of her own—two spies—and they have caused more mischief than any one else throughout this place. You will find that in the evidence.

5864. Do you mean to say that Miss Osburn leans to any particular sect? I do.

5865. Who are they? I cannot say that ; it is not my business.

5866. You mean to say that the nurses are chosen more from the Roman Catholics than from the Protestants? I do.

5867. Do you know how many nurses out of the thirty who are here are Roman Catholics? I do not ; I cannot say.

5868. Mr. Cowper.] Who are the Parkers—what are they? Both Roman Catholics.

5869. What are they? One is the housekeeper, and one assistant. I believe that one of the Parkers is here still in the institution, and one has left. I believe that the two Parkers were the cause of driving away the women that the Country sent for : the women went away from the annoyance that they received.

5870. President.] Do you mean to say that there are an undue number of Roman Catholics employed here? There is no use going back.

5871. But you have made a charge that the lady superintendent unduly favours one particular denomination? I believe so.

5872. Then her conduct in that way will be shown by the state of the institution? I believe that she shows some patients more attention than she shows to others—that she has not taken the position she should have done, independent of all parties.

5873. You say that she has neglected the patients? I have had complaints, and have brought the matter up how neglected some of the patients are, and yet Miss Osburn says that she cannot look after all.

5874. What is the charge you have made? I have had the patients tell me that they felt themselves neglected.

5875. By whom? By the nurses—the attendance ; and when they went to Miss Osburn they could not get satisfaction.

5876. By whom were they neglected? It is three years ago now. I think if you go back you will find Mr. Smith's evidence in print. You will find that his evidence will assist you. And there was the evidence of another clergyman in print, where that gentleman complained that he was improperly treated by the nurses, who instead of helping him did the very reverse.

5877. Mr. Goold.] What minister was it? He was a Presbyterian minister. I cannot tell you his name. I gave Mr. Driver the report, for the guidance of the Commission ; I gave him the printed report, and the written report we made on it. I gave it to him for the use of the Commission, and you have a right to demand it from him. I would rather not answer questions until you get it, because I can refer better to that, and then I may be able to afford you some more information.

5878. Mr. Cowper.] But if this report is handed in we shall get information from that? Yes.

5879. Mr. Ellis.] Who signed the report besides you? Several of them.

5880. Was that the long report that was brought up in reference to the burning of the Bibles? Yes, that was part of it.

5881. That is the only matter you refer to? The Bibles was the least of the matter.

5882. But the result of that report was that you entirely acquitted Miss Osburn of all blame? Yes. I said just now I wish I had chopped my finger off before I signed it : if ever I have had a sin on my soul it was that.

5883. Mr. Goold.] You do not approve of that report now? No, I do not. I did not approve of it at any time, but because I feared that the institution might suffer, I felt it was better to yield to the majority than hold out on my own private views, and the words I now use I have used at a public meeting in Castlereagh-street.

5884. You say that wines and spirits are used in a very extravagant way : have any instances come under your notice? Immensely so. I know that the medical gentlemen have signed orders for a month together for the patients to get wines and spirits for a month, while in a private house the thing would not be tolerated.

5885. Do they give them enough to make the patients drunk? Yes, half a pint of brandy a day for a sick patient.

5886. Do you know the name of the patient to whom that was given? Mr. Blackstone can give it you.

5887. Do you know the name of the doctor? You can find out from some of the reports. We have had it happen repeatedly. They write out prescriptions for a month together.

5888. Mr. Metcalfe.] Was it more than one doctor who did that? Yes.
 5889. Who wrote out prescriptions for thirty days? Yes. You will see Mr. Russell can give you the information. They did it until at last it became so glaring to the committee that they stopped them. Of course we could not prevent a doctor prescribing as much as he liked. The doctor will say—"If my patient dies under me, who will take the responsibility?"—I would not. But we have complained of the large amount of spirits consumed, as I am sure Mr. Metcalfe will bear me out. If we had stopped them, in fact, the responsibility would have fallen upon us if any accident had occurred. If I had the impertinence to say that the doctors' orders should not be carried out and the patient died, I might have been tried for manslaughter, because I have no right to put my judgment against theirs. If you will call in Mr. Russell he can give you the information.

J. G. Raphael,
 Esq.
 6 June, 1873.

[Mr. H. D. Russell called in.]

Mr. Raphael.] Mr. Russell, can you inform us, within the last twelve months, of the spirits issued, the large amounts of spirits issued to patients—can you tell me the names of the doctors who have ordered wines and spirits for one month—large amounts of spirits? Yes.

5890. President.] Who made the complaints about this?

Mr. Raphael.] The house committee.

Mr. Russell.] I think I remember Dr. McKay's name being mentioned as having done it, but I cannot remember any other. I remember his name, because something was said about his signing a ticket for 365 days' supply.

5891. President.] For what? For spirit to be supplied to a patient.

5892. Mr. Ellis.] Can you produce minutes of these cases? Yes.

Do so.

Mr. Raphael.] Charge your memory with the other matter. The house committee have complained of the large supply of wines and spirits to the patients, and we have invited the honorary gentlemen to be present when we have opposed this issue? Well, I cannot say I remember as to that. A good deal has been said in the committee, but it has been of a personal character, and I have not recorded it.

But you know that these cases have occurred in the house committee, as to the large issue of wines and spirits to special patients? Such cases have been mentioned, but these particular cases have not been gone into; a great deal has been said about it, but no cases have been mentioned.

Can you remind me of one case where a large amount of brandy was supplied to a patient, and the ticket signed from month to month; when it seemed to us plain that this should be stopped? I believe I can find that ticket.

It was the occasion on which half-a-pint of brandy a day was ordered? I will try to find it.

And also the case of that man who had a long continuance of it? Yes.

[Mr. Russell withdrew.]

5893. Mr. Couper.] When the brandy was ordered for 365 days, there were different orders? I do not know. I do not know whether the man died here or not, but he must have been a man in lucky circumstances if he could be as well treated outside as he was treated here.

5894. Mr. Gould.] You have said that the food has been carted away from here: what do you imply? I went through the kitchen, and found in the casks that are kept to be carted away with refuse for pig-food, splendid ribs of beef, excellent shoulders of mutton, which had not been consumed, and were thrown away to go for hogs' food. I brought the matter under the notice of the Board, and Miss Osburn said that she found that there was excessive waste, and that in consequence of some holidays or other, this good and wholesome food was sent away.

5895. Who was to blame for that? The blame rests upon the directors themselves, in not having a proper supervision over the expenditure. I take my measure of the blame as well as any other. The blame is with the directors not taking proper care to see into the expenditure. I do not charge Miss Osburn with it alone, but as the lady managing her own establishment she should take charge of these matters.

5896. Mr. Metcalfe.] I remember your bringing in a shoulder of mutton one morning? Yes. I do not blame Miss Osburn; she is the lady superintendent, and should be compelled in her position to have proper officers under her, and then this waste could not occur.

5897. Mr. Gould.] You say that Miss Osburn has usurped more authority than she was ever intended to have: in what way? When she was sent for, she was sent for to be lady superintendent of the nursing staff, with any other duties which were applicable to the position. She never was intended to be a housekeeper. Since then she has gone and made private purchases, and she was never intended to do that. The manager was intended to do that, under the supervision of the directory, as it is done out at the Randwick Institution.

5898. Mr. Ellis.] Did she make these purchases with the authority of the Board? I do not know what authority she had—all I know is that the Board had no right to give her the authority; she should never have had it. I know that in public institutions the more you keep the officers away from purchases the better.

5899. You were a member of the Board? I was.

5900. Did the other members of the Board approve of it? They did—some of them—she had permission to make purchases from some of them.

[Mr. Russell returned, and handed in a ticket on which was written a medical man's order for the supply of spirits to a patient for 365 days.

Mr. Gould: Was that ordered all at one time? Mr. Russell: Yes. I think the gentleman was a little tiffed at the time he wrote out the order.

[Mr. Russell withdrew.]

5901. Mr. Gould.] The last question I put to you, Mr. Raphael, was in reference to the lady superintendent having usurped more authority than she was intended to have? Yes.

5902. You said that the directors should admit the patients: how would you manage that? As it is done in England. There are certain days of the week when a couple of the directors might attend for an hour, and they might take the cases, and if there is room, and they are suitable cases, admit them. At present, it is a well known fact that certain medical men keep out certain patients and take in others.

5903. Where is such a system pursued as you recommend? At the Infirmary in Aldersgate-street.

5904. That is a Dispensary? A Dispensary and Infirmary. This was called so once; now it is called all the names you please, Dispensary, and Infirmary, and all else. I would recommend, gentlemen, that after you

J. G. Raphael, Esq., you have got a physician or surgeon as medical superintendent, you should have a person like Mr. Blackstone to be secretary or under-manager, to look after the stores and persons in charge of the stores; because in a large institution like this the medical superintendent would have his duties to perform, and the assistant surgeon would have his, and with a reliable man the institution could be worked under his supervision.

6 June, 1873.

5905. Have you observed the state of the wards, as to the existence of the vermin? Yes, repeatedly; and have often suggested improvements, which will be found on the records in the books.

5906. Do you think that the state of the wards, as it is represented by one of the witnesses, was known generally to the committee—do you think the committee were aware of the existence of the thing? They have known that the wards were not what they should be.

5907. Did the Board know it from Miss Osburn? Never, till the Board brought it under her notice.

5908. President.] How long ago? About two months ago.

5909. She never brought it under their notice before that? They never knew it before that.

5910. Mr. Goold.] Could it have been reported to the Board without your knowledge? It might have been.

5911. President.] Is it a fact that when the sub-committee brought up their report about the vermin, you said you did not believe it? That the vermin were there?

5912. Did you say that you did not believe the report that the vermin were there? That I can easily explain.

5913. Will you answer the question? Mr. Pearce's report stated that the whole of the walls were intersected with vermin. That could not be the case. Wherever there was a sound wall no vermin could come through.

5914. You thought that the report was wrong? I thought that they had reported in excess of the facts.

5915. And you think so still? I am sure so.

5916. Mr. Goold.] This is what Mr. Pearce says:—"You could see them almost everywhere, large numbers in the walls, under the window-sills, and in the empty nail-holes where patients had put in nails to hang up their clothes. The empty nail-holes were full, and if you moved a small piece of plaster, there you found them packed together." It was on that that I differed with him, and I differ still, and I would do so at the point of the bayonet.

5917. You think that the report was exaggerated? I would not be so great an enemy as to say that I would verify that statement.

5918. The evidence we have is that this has been brought before the Board by Miss Osburn frequently? It never was, as far as my knowledge is concerned, I think.

5919. President.] Then all you have to say is, that you did not hear of it? I did not.

5920. Have you not stated that things may have taken place at the Board when you were away? Certainly, but when we are away we generally hear of what takes place.

5921. If Mr. Stephen has said that Miss Osburn has reported this matter to the Board several times, do you think that is unfounded? I do not think that he would tell an untruth; but this I will say, that when I have gone through the wards none of the nurses have ever pointed it out to me. I have pointed out to Mr. Blackstone where rats came through and worried the patients.

5922. Mr. Ellis.] What reply did he make to you? He said it would be immediately attended to.

5923. Which it never was? Yes, everything was done; but the building being rotten underneath made it easier for the rats to get in through the place. But I most unhesitatingly say that though Mr. Pearce's statement is there I would not believe it.

5924. Mr. Goold.] Mr. Paxton confirms it too? It is not so—it is not right to say "myriads" of them.

5925. He says "colonies" of them? I give up then, but I do not believe. I most unhesitatingly state, all the years I have been a director—never have I heard the patients complain that the vermin were of the frightful and filthy nature that they have said. During Dr. Houston's time I was continuously a visitor here, while he was the sole superintending manager of the place.

5926. Mr. Ellis.] Mr. Paxton says:—"It was overrun with bugs—the institution—from top to bottom"? That is easily done. There may be six overrunning the building from top to bottom.

5927. Then you do not think that his statement is correct? Oh, I do not say that.

5928. I mean the report that was brought up? I believe that the report was exaggerated.

5929. Did you ever hear of there being bugs in the institution during the many years that you have been on the Board? Yes, I have, and endeavoured to recommend their destruction.

5930. Was there anything done towards destroying them? Yes, the walls cemented and the floors cleaned.

5931. President.] But before the last cleaning? I am speaking of years ago. Wherever the plaster was broken I have always recommended that the places should be stopped and pointed. In Mrs. Ghost's time she was continually having the place cleaned to keep the vermin down, which, I am sorry to say, has never been done since Miss Osburn has been here.

5932. Mr. Goold.] Miss Osburn says:—"I particularly mention one circumstance—because the attention of the public has been called to the matter—about the cleaning of the hospital. I brought that before the committee many times—so often that one gentleman told me they were quite tired of being bothered about these vermin"? Well, she is a lady, and I wont say a word.

5933. She says she has often brought the matter before the committee and the directors? I assure the Commission that I never in my life heard her do so, and had I done so I would be foremost in the ranks to insist on the destruction of the vermin.

5934. President.] Has any whitewashing ever been done? I do not know.

5935. Here I find a minute in the minute-book of the institution—"Miss Osburn reported having given nurse Norton a few days leave of absence; also applied to have the walls of the building whitewashed"? Yes, and she had it done.

5936. This was referred to the building committee? It was done, lime whitewashed, as was recommended. If you put on whitewash it only encourages vermin. I wish to be as cautious as possible. I do not wish to say anything against Miss Osburn, but I say that Miss Osburn's duties have been far different to what they were intended, for her duties were confined to her nurses, and if she kept to them she would benefit the Country and the institution.

5937. Do you mean to say that Miss Osburn has never applied to the committee to do anything to the walls? I do not say so.

5938. You told me just now that she had never applied? Never to my knowledge.

5939. Well, is this correct—I find a minute of the 9th October, 1871—"The lady superintendent said that J. G. Raphael, the nurses had washed the walls with gas-water to get rid of the vermin"? Yes, that gas-water was a recommendation from myself. J. G. Raphael,
Esq.

5940. But you see there that she must have applied about the walls? Yes, and it was carried out. I had forgotten that. 6 June, 1873.

5941. But you said that she never did apply? I referred to the walls. There is nothing to show that she spoke of the breakages in the walls.

5942. You say that she made no application about the walls—the minute I have read is about the walls, and I see afterwards that the "lady superintendent reported that the walls had been washed with gas-water with a satisfactory result"—that is another matter which you have forgotten? Yes, that is the same thing.

5943. Then your statement that nothing was done by her to the walls is incorrect? But you misunderstand me. When Mr. Pearce's statement came under notice, immediate instructions were given to correct the evil.

5944. Mr. Gould.] Mr. Pearce refers to all parts of the building? Yes.

5945. President.] Do you mean to contradict that statement—you informed me that it was not true? I do not believe that the rats went round the men's legs, nor do I believe it still. Again, with regard to the bugs, I was aware, I still state, that there were means recommended for their destruction by the nurses, as far as in their power laid; but if I was to be shot this moment, nothing would cram it down my throat that they were to the enormous extent that has been stated, and I have been here on Sabbaths as well as other days.

5946. Mr. Cowper.] It has been said that if you put your hand on the bedsteads the dirt of the bugs would come off on your hands? I do not believe it.

5947. Mr. Gould.] Do you mean to say that you have not seen bugs there? No, I do not say that, but it would take a good deal of gas-water to make me swallow all that is said.

5948. Mr. Ellis.] Were you one of the directors who voted the money to remedy this evil? Yes.

5950. President.] Do you think that the manager is a more suitable person to purchase calico and things of that sort than the lady superintendent? I think that the members of the Board are the proper persons to do that.

5951. Do you think that they are the proper persons to do it? Yes, of course they should do it. If they want the honor of the position let them do the work.

5952. Mr. Ellis.] Has Miss Osburn ever been disrespectful to the Board? Never.

5953. Has she ever refused to carry out the orders that the Board have given her, or is it the fault of the Board that no orders have been given her? The fault is the Board's. I am not going to blame Miss Osburn at all.

5954. But one gentleman says that she treats the house committee "like so many dogs"? That is not a gentleman who says that. I would be sorry to say a similar thing. I do not know who it is that has said it, but I would be sorry to make such a blackguard of myself as to use such an expression.

5955. President.] There is no foundation for such an expression? I think that the language is uncalled for, and no gentleman could have used it.

5956. With regard to Whitney, who you say was dismissed because he was not courteous enough to the lady superintendent,—was there no other charge against him but that? I think that she never rested until she got rid of him.

5957. Was there no other charge against him—you say that he was not servile enough—was there no other charge against him? I believe that Miss Osburn preferred a charge of drunkenness against him, which was never substantiated.

5958. Was not her evidence supported by that of one of the other nurses? To my soul's saving I believe not.

5959. Was not the charge substantiated by the evidence of some one else? It was brought before me, and I did not believe it.

5960. Did not another person give such evidence? It was of such a nature that I did not believe it.

5961. I ask you did any other person give such evidence before the committee? Yes, there was a person, but she gave evidence in such a way that if you had been there as a barrister you would have turned her inside out.

5962. I ask you was there a person called who gave such evidence? Yes, there was, and she made statements that I did not believe.

5963. Miss Osburn called that witness? A witness that I did not believe. If I had been a juryman in a Court of Justice I would have done something else—I would have had proceedings taken against that witness.

5964. Mr. Metcalfe.] Do you think a man of his class should be allowed to be impertinent to the nurses? I believe that man was not impertinent, and because he was not sufficiently humiliating to Miss Osburn he was to be hounded out of the institution.

5965. President.] Did he not put his hand on one of the nurses? Well, that was her statement.

5966. Did she not say so? I asked her whether she would make that statement on her oath, and she wavered—she would not answer. You know you must take these things with caution. You might say that I slapped you on the face some time when we were alone together, and I might say I did not, and where is the evidence to come from?—This woman made statements about this man which I did not believe.

5967. The result was, that the Board thought that the charge against the man was proved? Somebody who was here carried it. All I know is, as far as my memory serves me, I did not believe the evidence, and on my soul's safety I think that the man was innocent. I am convinced in my own mind that the man was a very ill-used man, whatever the Board may have done.

5968. Mr. Cowper.] Can you believe that there is a man in the institution who for thirteen years was hardly ever sober until Miss Osburn interfered and complained of his conduct? I must say that I do not believe it, and it cannot be true—it is impossible that it can be true.

- J. G. Raphael, Esq. 5969. Mr. Ellis.] With regard to the present Board of Management, would you approve of reducing it in number? I think not—there are some excellent good men and charitable men on it.
- 6 June, 1873. 5970. We are told that some of them have got such a propensity for talking that they do not do much business? I have not seen such.
5971. That is a complaint that has been made? I have not seen that. We have our little differences, but I have endeavoured in coming here to do good, without wasting time, and our time is valuable.
5972. And you would not be in favour of reducing the number of the Board of Management? I do not care about the Board of Management. It is the house committee, and there are seldom more than six or seven of them attend the meetings. We have met here as small as four for months to do the business.
5973. You stated that the drainage was bad? Yes.
5974. Why? In consequence of the low ground. Your fall of water must go from back to front, and all the soakage is injurious to this building as a hospital. From the Domain side being the flat land it is, and the bad land, of course the whole soakage is this way, and it must percolate through rock, or otherwise through the main building itself.
5975. President.] Why? It must go somewhere.
5976. Do you not think it goes naturally down towards the Gardens? No, I am sure it does not. If you give a little attention to it, you will see that the fall of the water passing through the Gardens, the earth passing through the pipes must choke it. I guarantee they are full of clay and earth—half these mains.
5977. You said just now that the expenses of the Nightingale wing were one-quarter of the expenses of the whole establishment? Yes.
5978. What did you include in that? The whole of the supplies—the salaries I do not include. They would not be far short of that either.
5979. Mr. Goold.] Did you make any calculation? I did some time ago, but I did not get the matter remedied, on account of the continual new admissions for training, causing so many to be brought in; because it was understood we were to train nurses for other hospitals and private families, so that any respectable female might be able to get a trained nurse, which now we have got; and we have been compelled, in positive humanity, to allow nurses to go away, to save life. It certainly has been a failure, as far as my own anticipations are concerned. I thought that we should train nurses to go to different parts of the country, to be beyond price, but it has been a failure.
5980. President.] You think that it has turned out no nurses at all? I do not say that; but it has not turned out the number which it should have done, considering its cost to the Country.
5981. Mr. Ellis.] Do I understand you that one-fourth of the expenses for supplies is for the supplies consumed in the Nightingale wing? Yes.
5982. Do you mean to say that thirty-four nurses consume one-fourth as much as 1,800 patients? But the 1,800 are not all here together.
5983. But there is an average of 224 always here? I think that the supplies consumed by the thirty-four nurses has been one-fourth as much as the supplies consumed by the 200 patients.
5984. With reference to the food which was carted away, do you believe that it was carted away for the purpose of defrauding the institution? Certainly not, but from gross extravagance.
5985. You propose to do away entirely with the honorary medical staff? I think that the honorary medical staff should have the right of going into the institution for the purpose of improving themselves.
5986. To go in there on sufferance? Yes, but that we should have a head physician and a head surgeon, well and properly paid, on whom the responsibility of managing the institution should be laid.
5987. You would hand the management of the institution over to a permanent resident medical staff? Yes; and such students as may come to the Infirmary for the purpose of studying medicine.
5988. Is that the practice in any other Country? I believe in the Mother Country there are hospitals under that system. And there is our University where there are students to study medicine, and, with the assistance of the honorary medical staff, I think this would be the greatest blessing that could be conferred on the community.
5989. There is another matter on which I should like to have some specific information, and that is as to Miss Osburn selling clothes on her own account? That has been done away with.
5990. Do you mean to say that she kept a shop and made a profit? I cannot say that. She bought goods to supply the nurses.
5991. Did she do this out of the money of the institution? No.
5992. Did she buy the goods with her own money? I do not know. I believe she did.
5993. Mr. Couper.] Did she not do it in order that the nurses might all wear the same? I do not know what she did it for. All I know is that she did have these things and did sell them to the nurses, and that complaints were made that such was the case.
5994. Mr. Goold.] To the Board of directors? To myself, as a director.
5995. By whom? By some persons who purchased things from her.
5996. In what shape was the complaint made? That they were compelled, on coming here, to purchase their dress from Miss Osburn, and that they paid more than they should pay. I told the committee that I thought it was wrong, and there was a resolution passed, and then Miss Osburn discontinued it.
5997. President.] Did she make any explanation? The matter was gone into in a kind and liberal spirit, and she has never done it since. There was no charge brought against Miss Osburn, but merely a resolution passed that the practice should be discontinued.
5998. Mr. Ellis.] Are you prepared to suggest any alteration in the management of the institution? You should have a medical head and an assistant medical head, and an assistant surgeon.
5999. And then do away with the Board of Management? No; these gentlemen should have charge of the hospital arrangements.
6000. Under the Board of Management? Under the Board of Management; and the Board should admit all patients, and not the medical gentlemen at all.
6001. Mr. Goold.] How can non-professional men, as the directors are, be capable of knowing who are fit? For the simple reason that it is your day to-morrow, and you send to the house physician or house surgeon, and ask whether this is a fit case to admit, and he returns an answer and says it is not an admissible case, and then you don't admit it. You see he can know nothing more as to who the parties are, and if the case is an admissible one he must admit it.

6002. Mr. Cowper.] How would you do in cases of accident? They must come in at all times. All accidents come everywhere. J. G. Raphael,
Esq.
6003. Mr. Ellis.] Will you explain to us why it is that you say that the nursing staff has not answered? Well, to the best of my judgment it has been a perfect failure. 6 June, 1873.
6004. Why so? Because those who are most suitable for nurses have not stopped long enough in the institution to acquire a knowledge of their professional duties.
6005. Mr. Metcalfe.] Don't you think that there are several very able nurses in the institution now? That is a large question. I should like to have an examination of the nurses before answering that question. I don't know the nurses here now. I have not paid much attention to the place lately.
6006. Mr. Ellis.] Oh, well, I can assure you that your place has been very actively supplied, at any rate? I don't believe that the patients have been as well cared for by the nursing staff as they were by the original sisters that came out.
6007. Have any of the patients complained to you to that effect? It is a long time ago since I have had any complaints.
6008. Why do you think that the present nurses do not do their duty? From the statements of my brother directors, who say that there are myriads of bugs in the place.
6009. But you said just now you did not believe that? But from the mere statement being made, there must be something wrong, and if that is so the nurses are grossly to blame.
6010. But suppose they were not able to clean the wards, they are not to blame? Of course not.
6011. And if millions of bugs were in the wards they were not to blame? Of course not.
6012. Then that is your only specific ground of complaint against them? I have not any, because I have not given the same amount of time to the place I used to.
6013. But when you did do so, were you satisfied with the kindness and consideration with which the patients were treated? I must go back to the former remark,—that since the English nurses left, I do not believe the patients have been well cared for.
6014. But can you say in what way the patients have been neglected? Oh, the nurses are flighty in their manner to the patients.
6015. Did you ever see them flying about the patients? Not exactly flying about.
6016. Have you ever seen anything flighty in their manner? I have seen what I do not like to say anything about.
6017. Tell us what it is—we want to find out the truth? I have found the floors not clean, and the bed-clothes not clean, as I should like them to be; but as I felt I was powerless to have these things remedied, I kept them to myself. When I became a director, I became somewhat obnoxious on account of the strict supervision which I exercised over the place—and then I had the supervision of Mr. Coveny, and Mr. Stephen, the barrister, and others. I have been here morning after morning to see the meat come in.
6018. Mr. Goold.] Were you satisfied with what you saw? I was not. It was in consequence of not being satisfied that I came here and searched into these things, and they became largely improved afterwards.
6019. You say that you visited the wards, and found the floors dirty, and the bed-curtains, and so on: did you bring these matters before the committee? Yes, I have brought them before the committee; and in consequence of the jumbled way in which things were done, it was thought that I did it with a bad feeling, and I did not want to be a sort of bugbear in the place, always finding fault.
6020. Mr. Ellis.] You say that you wish to preserve the present Board of Management? I did not say that I wished to preserve the present Board; but I think that the Board should consist of gentlemen who are independent, and who will give their services to the institution.
6021. President.] That might be the case if there was a Board of two, or a Board of twenty-seven—you said that you approved of the present number of the Board? I must take issue with your Chairman, who seems to think that the members of the Board should not look after the purchase of calico and other things. There may be some on the Board who would be glad to do it, because they would know that the money saved would go to feed people.
6022. Mr. Ellis.] One gentleman, a member of the Board, says that this is "the most rascally governed institution in the world?" I cannot join issue with him.
6023. And that the fault lies with the house committee—do you believe that? I cannot say that; I should be sorry to say that.
6024. President.] You said something just now to the effect that the lady superintendent favoured Roman Catholics: will you tell us in what way she does so? That you will find in the report I have alluded to before.
6025. Well, but I want your evidence on the subject? My evidence—well, she was charged with showing a preference to the Parkers in preference to those who came with her, and engaging them in mortifying these persons—in fact, it was the ultimate cause of their leaving the institution.
6026. And upon that you found this charge? Yes.
6027. Do you see anything of that sort going on now? How can I know?—I should be sorry to say an ill-natured word of her.
6028. Mr. Ellis.] As you rely a good deal on that report, would you like it appended to your evidence? I should—that you may all have the benefit of it.
6029. I recollect reading it at the time, and all the witnesses were against the view which you now put; and I understand that you, at the time, assented to it? Yes. I gave it to Mr. Driver with the sole understanding that it was to be your paper. I did not give it to him for any private purpose, but that you might obtain evidence to assist you in this inquiry.
6030. Mr. Goold.] Have you any knowledge of the way in which the stores are kept and delivered out? I used formerly to notice the management of the stores, and matters came under our notice to cause an investigation into the conduct of the dispensers; we found that the stores were not cared for in the manner in which they should have been, and we had to remove the dispenser. The present storekeeper has been an efficient one; but as to the working of it, not being on the house committee, I cannot tell you.
6031. Do you know whether any stock is ever taken? I believe that last year an inquiry of that sort was asked for, but I cannot tell you what has been done. I understood at the commencement of this year the whole stock was to be taken, so as to guide the committee as to what medical stores they should send Home for; but whether it has been done or not I cannot say. It was in contemplation—in fact, I believe believe Josephson moved last year that the entire stock should be taken of everything in the institution, consisting of apparel, clothing, and everything else; and it was to be alphabetically arranged, that the directors might see where to economize.

J. G. Raphael,
Esq.

6032. Have you any knowledge as to how the books are kept? None. I do not believe it would come under our auspices to interfere with that matter. I think that is a matter which is in the charge of the treasurer and the secretary and the manager.

6033. President.] But do you not think that, as a commercial man, you might look into matters of that sort? Not in an institution of this kind. Could I tell whether they had too much jalap, or salts, or cayenne pepper?

6034. Could you not tell whether the books were properly kept? There are two secretaries and a treasurer, and I should not like to do it.

6035. Do not the house committee do it? I do not think so.

6036. Mr. Ellis.] Do you expect the secretaries to go through the books? Yes.

6037. President.] Do you think it is more the duty of the committee to go and buy calico than to see how their own books are kept? I think so. I should have been sorry to put such a discomplement on to the treasurer and secretaries as to supervise their acts. It would have been a piece of presumption to do so.

6038. Mr. Ellis.] Then do you think that two honorary secretaries are expected to do all the work of the institution? No. There must be a paid manager, and they must rely on him.

6039. But do you not think that the accounts should be so kept that any director can refer to the books and see at once how things stand? You are at all times able to see the books.

6040. I have looked through the books, and all that I can say is that we did not arrive at any balance? Then I must fall back upon saying that—

6041. As a family man, you have experience of the loss on meat by boiling? Yes.

6042. Do you think if the patients require 100 pounds of meat, it is necessary to get 200 pounds from the butcher? No.

6043. Are you aware that that is the case here—that for every 100 pounds of meat required for the patients the manager orders 200 pounds? I should say that that would be an excess.

6044. Should you think that that was an extravagance? I should.

6045. Well, that is done regularly, and done to this day? Many years ago, and the records can be found, that it was one of the very matters which I brought up in the committee, that the legs of beef must weigh fourteen pounds. You will notice now in the papers, when we advertise for tenders, that the legs of beef must weigh fourteen pounds—and if they are not up to that weight, the butcher must make up the quantity. We did that because there were miserable shins of beef brought in here and they charged us 1s. 6d. for them, and Mr. Playfair brought in shins of beef weighing fourteen or fifteen pounds, and only charged us 1s. each for them; but I saw that, and it was remedied.

6046. President.] Do you think that it is right that no stock should be taken for five years? I hear that it was taken last year.

6047. In what way? I am not sure in what way it was taken. There was an application to send Home for some medicines, and I asked what stock was in existence; and I was led to infer that they had all the particulars, and that the goods had to be sent for to make up the annual supply.

6048. If there is a stock-taking, should it not be an effectual check on the house steward—should not the stock be taken by him in conjunction with some one else? I believe that this matter has arisen out of the house surgeon.

6049. Do you not think that the stock should be taken by the house steward in conjunction with somebody else? This matter was before us last year, when it was understood that the house surgeon was to have charge of the medical stock, and the manager of the general stock, and the lady superintendent of the linen stock, but in consequence of the conglomerated way of managing things it was not done; no one could do it; the manager could not, and the house surgeon could not, and the lady superintendent could not, and hence I believe the great benefit to result from this inquiry. There is no one will rejoice more to see the benefit resulting from this inquiry, and my earnest prayer to my Jehovah is that it will all end properly.

Ebenezer Dwyer, gate-keeper, Sydney Infirmary, called in and examined:—

E. Dwyer.
6 June, 1873.

6050. Mr. Ellis.] How long have you been employed in this institution? Thirteen years and four months.

6051. In what capacity? I took the place of gate-keeper some time ago. I was a wardsman here first for nine months.

6052. President.] What were you before you took the position of wardsman? I was in Sydney.

6053. What were you? Nothing. I came from England. I was on the Midland Counties Railway for eleven years and three-quarters before I came out here.

6054. Is it a fact that, in consequence of surgical cases being taken in here on Sundays, you have never been able to enjoy a single Sunday to yourself during thirteen years? I have never had a Sunday to myself.

6055. Have you ever any opportunity of going to your church? No, I have not. I cannot leave my work, but I have to stop to take in accidents.

6056. Are you obliged to be here all day on Sunday? I am.

6057. What have you to do when an accident is taken in? I have to take it in, then to fetch the doctor as soon as I can.

6058. Do you carry the patients in? I cannot often find a man to assist me.

6059. How old are you? Sixty-five.

6060. Mr. Ellis.] Is there no one to relieve you and allow you to go to church? I have never had any relief—not a day.

6061. Have you complained of it? When I first came, the messenger was to take part of the duty, but he refused to come, and so I gave way to it.

6062. Then you are not kept here on Sundays because of the surgical operations being performed on Sundays, but because you are obliged to be on the gate all day? Certainly. Of course I have to attend to all accidents that come in, and all business.

6063. Have you ever wanted to go to church? I was brought up regularly to a church.

6064. President] Do you not go to church? I go of an evening. I go to St. James's, but I was brought up under the Independents, and I generally go to hear Mr. Graham, in Pitt-street.
6065. Are you able to carry in patients? I am as strong as ever I was. I cannot carry a patient with a broken leg very well, because you must have some one to support the broken limb.
6066. Do you keep a book showing who leaves the institution? No.
6067. You keep no book of that kind? No, only a book to show the doctors' time.
6068. No other book? The doctors' book and the dispensary doctor's book, and the pass-book for the servants of the institution. That shows when they go out, and the time when they come in, and the doctors the same—that is, the honorary doctors and the surgeons.
6069. A book showing what time they visit the institution? Yes.
6070. Whom do you keep a record of in the servants' pass-book? I generally take that up to the lady superintendent every month, and then I get all the bandages that the doctors want to use for the week, and I take up the paper and the pass-books, and they go over to Mr. Blackstone. I have got fourteen doctors and four students continually applying for things.
6071. Do you reside on the premises? Yes, I always have done.
6072. What wages do you receive? £5 a month.
6073. Do you find yourself? We have rations.
6074. Mr. Metcalfe.] Are you a single man? No, I have a wife.
6075. Does she receive any wages? No.
6076. You get rations for her? Yes.
6077. What are your rations? Bread; and meat every second day. I think that is three pounds of meat and a loaf.
6078. That is six pounds of meat each? Yes. I am not sure of the amount of sugar and coffee and tea, because the missus always draws that.
6079. When you say a loaf—do you mean a small loaf, like those the patients get, or a full-sized loaf? A full-sized loaf.
6080. Every day of the week? Yes, except Sundays.
6081. Do you have any wine, or beer, or spirits allowed you? No, never had a single glass of anything since I have been on the premises.
6082. Are you a teetotaler? No. I generally have a glass of beer every night myself.

E. Dwyer.
6 June, 1873.

Mr. John Blackstone, Manager, Sydney Infirmary, called in and further examined:—

6083. President.] Do you keep any book showing the times at which persons connected with the establishment leave the place? Only the servants.
6084. Would you bring in that book? Dwyer has it. I will send for it.
6085. Do you not keep the book yourself? There is a book ordered to be kept by the committee, and that is kept down there at the gate.
6086. Did you never keep that book yourself? Never.
6087. Where is the book that you showed to Mr. Paxton and Mr. Pearce when they came here to look through the place? That is the book down there at the gate.
6088. Did you show them any entries in that book? I do not recollect showing them any entries in it.
6089. Did you show them any entries in any book? No, I do not think so.
6090. If they have stated that you showed them a book in which Miss Osburn's name appeared as leaving the institution on certain days—is that statement correct? I have never kept the book.
6091. Just answer my question—if they have said you showed them entries in a book about Miss Osburn's leaving the place—is that correct? There was no book ever kept.
6092. What book did you show them when they came here? I do not recollect that I showed them any book.
6093. Do you mean to say that you did not show them any book? I have no recollection of it.
6094. Do you remember the occasion of Mr. Paxton and Mr. Pearce coming here about the vermin? Yes, about three months ago.
6095. You remember their coming? Yes; they were appointed a sub-committee when they came.
6096. Miss Osburn was away then? Yes.
6097. Did you tell them so? Yes.
6098. Did they ask you when she went away? Yes, I think so.
6099. What reply did you make to them? That she had gone away in the morning.
6100. What morning? That morning—oh no, I believe I cannot recollect rightly the day when they came; but I can refer to my diary and see when Miss Osburn went away, and I think that she returned on the morning they came.
6101. She returned on the Thursday—when did you tell them she had gone? She was away from the Monday or Tuesday.
6102. Out of the place altogether on those days? She was away all night.
6103. You tell us she was away from the Monday or Tuesday? How could they have come on the Thursday?
6104. Did you not say that she was away on the Monday or Tuesday? She was away, and reported that she had got leave of absence from Mr. Stephen.
6105. You knew that she was at Mrs. Dumaresq's, did you not? I did not know where she was.
6106. What did you tell Mr. Paxton and Mr. Pearce? I must have told them, and referred to my diary, when she was absent.
6107. Will you produce that diary? Yes. Have you any idea of the date?
6108. You know when the sub-committee was appointed—it was in March last? Yes, in March.
6109. Did you show them any book? Yes, that diary. [Diary produced.]
6110. Is that a private book? No, it belongs to the institution, but it is private so far that I keep my own little matters in it. Will you allow me to look through it, and I will find where she went away?

Mr. J.
Blackstone.
6 June, 1873.

6111.

Mr. J.
Blackstone.
6 June, 1873.

6111. Do you record the absences of other persons in this book? Yes, I keep a record of when Mr. Russell goes away, and when the dispensers go away.
6112. Are you bound to keep it, under any rule? No.
6113. Did you point out to the directors that Miss Osburn had been away a week? No. I recollect her being away. She had not asked for permission to go, and Mr. Stephen reported that she had asked his permission to go.
6114. You say that you did not tell the directors that Miss Osburn was constantly away? No.
6115. Did you make any statement about her being away? On that occasion she had been away nearly a whole week.
6116. Is that the occasion to which you refer? Yes. She went away on the Monday evening and the Tuesday evening, and she used to come back and stop for two or three hours in the day-time, and go away again every night.
6117. At what time did she come back in the morning? I think the directors had been in the wards about half an hour when she came back.
6118. And at what time did she go away? About 4 o'clock in the afternoon.
6119. Is that two or three hours—what time were the directors here? It is hard for me to say whether it was between 10 and 11 or later.
6120. Then if she came in at 10 and went away at 4, that is what you mean by two or three hours? I cannot say.
6121. Is that the entry (referring to entry in diary) which you showed to the directors? I suppose it is.
6122. What does it say? Miss Osburn left at 5 p.m. on Tuesday, and returned the next day at 9:30 a.m.; left again at 5 p.m., and returned at 9:30 a.m. on Thursday, and left again at 5 p.m. Miss Osburn left at 5 p.m. on Friday again, and returned at 12 on Saturday. You will find there, entries of the absences of Mr. Russell and the dispensers; whenever they are absent I make a note of it; but there is no book kept, except down there at the gate; that Mr. Paxton or Mr. Pearce moved should be kept for every one to sign, from the manager downwards.
6123. That proposal was never carried out? No; they asked me how long Miss Osburn had been absent from the place.
6124. Did you see her come back? I saw her come into the building.
6125. Did she speak to you? No.
6126. Did you tell her that these gentlemen had been asking for her? No.
6127. Though you knew that they had asked for her? They asked me; they had been half an hour or a quarter of an hour in the building when she came in, and I do not know how she came in that morning.
6128. You did not say to her that they had inquired for her? No; but she was told, for she went into the wards to them.
6129. You produced, the other day, some sheets of note-paper with regard to the wine account of the Nightingale wing? The Nightingale wing?
6130. Yes—is this the “ledger” to which you referred in your evidence, given a few days back? No; that is only a memorandum of the stock.
6131. Where then is the “ledger” to which you referred? It is the “ledger” I keep to check the accounts, instead of going to the journal and ledger of the institution.
6132. Is not this what you produced as a ledger the other day (referring to memoranda on loose sheets of note-paper)? No, I did not produce anything; I was not called in.
6133. Is there any ledger containing the wine and spirits account? Yes.
6134. Where is it? In the office.
6135. Produce it, please? It is only a record of what is received from the merchants.
6136. Is there any record of the consumption? Yes.
6137. Where is it? On these pieces of paper.
6138. Where is the record of yesterday's consumption? I have no record of it; Mr. Jones has that.
6139. Whose writing is that (referring to memoranda on note-paper)? Mine.
6140. Is this not all made up at one time? No, I should hope not; I will swear it is not.
6141. How is it made up? When the house-steward draws anything, I enter it down there.
6142. Show us the last entry? Three bottles of gin. “June 3rd, Mr. Jones, three bottles of gin.” The entries get mixed up like that.
6143. And these few loose sheets of note-paper, kept unpagged and not tied in any way, are the only record you keep of the wines and spirits which you issue to Mr. Jones? I do not issue them—at least I issue them to Mr. Jones, and he issues them to the patients, and he is answerable for the consumption.
6144. In whose custody are the wines and spirits? In Mr. Jones'.
6145. Mr. Metcalfe.] You do not keep any account of the wines and spirits issued to the patients? But if I order a case of gin there are fifteen bottles in a case, and I enter it in that book as received on a certain day, and when Mr. Jones comes and says “I want three bottles of gin,” I enter that; and when it is used and he comes and says “We want a case of gin,” I refer to this memorandum, and I say “Well, you have used fifteen bottles.”
6146. Suppose any one came to take stock, what books would he refer to? Mr. Jones'.
6147. Mr. Jones' books? Yes, and the ledger of the institution.
6148. President.] Is there any account of the wine which you personally draw? Yes.
6149. Where? In our ledger.
6150. Bring it to us, please? The allowance of wine is stopped now. The ledger is no good without the journal. Shall I bring the journal too?
6151. Bring the book in which that account is shown? [Ledger produced.] There it is. There are all the accounts which I have to make up monthly, checked by me from that book. I never could do it from the monthly accounts.
6152. Has any wine been drawn out in the month of May? There is wine entered in May.
6153. What does this account on page 172 represent? The wine allowed to the resident officers.
6155. The bottles returned? Yes.
6156. What is shown upon the right-hand page? The quantity of wine received from Lindeman.
6157. The credit is on the right-hand side? Yes.

Mr. J.
Blackstone.

6158. I see entered here £4 16s. ? That is six dozen of wine.
6159. When did you receive the last wine from Lindeman ? On the 16th May.
6160. How do you account for the fact that it is not entered up on the credit side of this ledger ? It is not entered up, because it is not paid for yet ; this is a book to check the accounts as they come in. This book is not kept for the benefit of the institution ; it is for my own benefit. 6 June, 1873.
6161. What account is kept on the left-hand side of the page ? I am supposed to keep that for my own satisfaction.
6162. I asked you whether you kept any book that would show a record of this wine, and you produced this book ? Yes ; but I told you that I had a journal, and you said you did not want it.
6163. Is there any book kept by you which shows the quantity of wine which comes into the place, and the quantity consumed ? No more than that.
6164. Answer my question—Is there any book which contains this wine account ? No, except that.
6165. Do you not keep this book officially ? No.
6166. What is your object in keeping this book ? To check the monthly accounts.
6167. What account—Lindeman's account ? Lindeman does not send in his account monthly.
6168. What accounts then ? The potato account and other accounts.
6169. But with regard to the wine ? You asked what accounts.
6170. Is this book kept with regard to Lindeman's account ? Yes, I refer to that book to see whether he has charged more than he should do.
6171. Is his account for April paid yet ? No.
6172. Did you not tell us that the account for May was not entered up, because it was not paid ? There have been no accounts paid this year—none of Lindeman's accounts.
6173. Then why are some accounts entered up and others not ? Because I have not had time to enter them up.
6174. Did you not give, as a reason for the item for May not being filled up, that the account had not been paid ? I do not know. I said the whole account.
6175. Do you mean to say that you did not give that explanation as to the item for May not being filled up ? I do not think so. It was the whole account that I meant.
6176. I ask you again what is shown on the left-hand side of this account ? The empty bottles.
6177. What empty bottles ? Why those that are returned.
6178. What is the meaning of these three entries being made for January, February, and March, and the account blank as to the rest ? Because Lindeman takes the bottles away, and allows 8d. a dozen for them.
6179. But what does this show ? It is only intended for my own satisfaction.
6180. Then it is unintelligible to any one but yourself ? Well, if you will allow me to show you —
6181. Do you not say that it is unintelligible as an account book, on your own showing ? No, because it shows the bills coming in.
6182. Will you show me what you mean by the entry 1st June, and then a blank ? Six dozen bottles.
6183. Why is that not shown ? It will be shown when the account is paid.
6184. Is there any record kept anywhere, by any one, showing the wine issued to you ? No, I do not think there is. We do not draw our quantity, and have not done so this year. You will find, if you turn over a leaf or two, that all the accounts, when they are paid, are scored off, and it is just merely for me to enter up my journal. I cannot keep a check against all the accounts without this.
6185. Mr. Goold.] Is this account transferred to any other book ? No, the monthly accounts in the journal of the institution.
6186. The monthly accounts from this book ? No ; those that are passed by the finance committee.
6187. I wanted to know whether the accounts were put into any other book ? No, not until they are paid.
6188. Mr. Ellis.] This book is your own private book ? Yes.
6189. Is it so much your own that you could destroy it if you liked ? It is only done for my own satisfaction.
6190. You could destroy it if you liked ? I think so. It is not part of the property of the institution.
6191. President.] Did you buy it with your own money ? No, it was bought by the institution. I have kept these books ever since I have been here. I had it as a memorandum for my own guidance.
6192. Mr. Goold.] This book is paid for out of the funds of the institution ? Yes.
6193. Is there any book which shows the amount of wine allowed to each officer ? It is in the other book, that each officer should have a pint of wine a day.
6194. Should that not appear in the regular books of the institution ? It is shown in the wines and spirits account of the institution.
6195. But you say that this account here is not transferred to any other book of the institution ? Because when the account comes in I refer to this one—I call it a "private ledger." Lindeman sends so many dozen of wine in, and when the house steward tells me that he takes out so many bottles, I add up the memoranda, and the accounts balance, and I know what accounts have to come in and what have been paid.
6196. Mr. Metcalfe.] Have you not an account for empty bottles, and do you not deduct them from the wine account before it is paid ? Yes.
6197. President.] Does the wine come in bottles ? Yes.
6198. Mr. Goold.] Where does the cheque appear that is given in payment for this wine ? In that book, and in my ledger and journal of the institution.
6199. But this account must be transferred, to square the accounts ? The accounts are brought in every month to the finance committee, and I have to sign them as correct, and I cannot sign them as correct unless I have this book before me to know what wine I have.
6200. President.] Do you consider this bundle of note-paper an official record ? If the committee called upon me to produce it, I should do so.
6201. Is there any account showing how any quantity of wine has gone up to a given time ? The officers do not get the wine in bulk—it is only the patients.
6202. What quantity do you get in at a time ? Six dozen.
6203. How long does that last ? About thirty days.
6204. At the end of fifteen days is there any account showing how the wine has gone out ? No more than that memorandum.

- Mr. J. Blackstone.
6 June, 1873.
6205. Which memorandum contains no account of any wine issued to you? No more than the institution's ledger and journal.
6206. Is there in that book any record of the wine issued to you? Yes.
6207. Where is it? The journal is in my office.
6208. Get it, please? [Journal produced.] This is it.
6209. Mr. Metcalfe.] These are the books which Mr. Russell keeps? The books that he writes up.
6210. The accounts, I suppose, are kept under the heading of the merchants you have accounts with? No; the wines and spirits account is under the head of "wines and spirits."
6211. What page is it on? 92.
6212. President.] This is the ledger, and these are the amounts paid from time to time each year. Yes.
6213. Well then, you have not shown us yet, by reference to these books, where any record is kept of the wines consumed? I told you there have been no accounts paid at all this year to Lindeman.
6214. Mr. Metcalfe.] What does "cash" mean here? A cheque.
6215. Where is the account with the merchant? There is none at all.
6216. Mr. Ellis.] Does this book show how the wines are disbursed? No, the journal does.
6217. Suppose that you want to balance an account at the end of the year? That has never been done.
6218. President.] It does not appear now from the journal that it shows how this wine was distributed? ———.
6219. Mr. Metcalfe.] No, it simply shows that they have paid certain cheques for wine? This book is produced every month to the finance committee, and they ask, for instance, what was the consumption of meat last month; and it is referred back in this manner, for instance, "April, meat account, £70 4s." May is not entered up yet. They would see what was the amount of meat last month, and would check the consumption in that way. They would do the same with regard to the milk, and the same way with regard to the bread, and so on.
6220. President.] You know of those boxes near the doors of the wards, in which the refuse is put? Yes.
6221. Were they ordered on the recommendation of the committee? Miss Osburn asked for them, I believe.
6222. Asked the committee to get them? I believe so.
6223. And the committee approved of their being ordered by her? She sent to the carpenter, and had them made.
6224. And reported afterwards that they had been made? She reported that she had received them, and they were paid for, but there was something said about the price of them.
6225. Is this the minute of the house committee of the 10th February, 1873—"The lady superintendent reported that she had received some dust-boxes, for the use of the wards, from Corben and Nichol": is that correct? It is, I believe.
6226. Have you any doubt about its being correct? No, not when it is signed by the chairman, as that is.
6227. You have no doubt that the obtaining of these boxes was authorized by the committee, and that they were afterwards obtained? I believe so.
6228. And if anybody has said that these boxes were obtained without authority, and that nobody knew anything about it, is that correct? I am not answerable for what people say. I do not know. I believe if Miss Osburn produced her report, you will find that she has asked for them, and then that she has reported that she has received them; and then when Corben & Nichol's account comes in I know it.
6229. But if it has been said that they were ordered without any authority, and that the committee knew nothing about them until after they came in, that is not correct? I would not say so.
6230. Have you any belief on the subject? I believe that Miss Osburn asked for them. I was told so, and I was bound to believe it.
6231. Mr. Ellis.] There is no stock account in the ledger? No.
6232. When the stock is taken, the account is not made up to show the value of what remains as compared with what has been consumed? No, it is merely an inventory of what we have. When I first came here, we had an inventory of every bedstead, and everything on the premises.
6233. Could you lay your hand conveniently on the last stock account? I think so.
6234. Will you do so? Yes. [Inventory produced.]
6235. What is this? The inventory of the dispensary.
6236. But I wish to see the general stock account? There is no general stock account.
6237. Is there not an annual stock account? There is one relating to the dispensary. You see there the estimated value of the drugs and fittings, &c., of the branch dispensary, and also the value of the drugs in the store.
6238. There has never been anything made out to show how much there was on hand at the end of the year, after deducting what has been consumed? No, these are merely inventories of all the things which are in the store.
6239. That is an inventory of what remains in the store? Yes.
6240. It does not show the values of the articles as compared with the quantity got in? No; there has never, to my knowledge, been any valuation of the stock or furniture of the building; there never was more than an inventory of the goods on the premises.

Nurse Ann Brannigan called in and examined:—

- Nurse A. Brannigan.
6 June, 1873.
6241. President.] I believe you are one of the nurses of the institution? Yes.
6242. How long have you been here? Five years and eleven months.
6243. Were you trained here entirely? Yes.
6244. Who engaged you for the institution? Mrs. Cole, who was matron then.
6245. That was before the lady superintendent came? Yes.
6246. You live in the Nightingale wing: what do you receive? Thirty-six pounds.
6247. As far as you are aware from what you see, are the nursing staff—that is, the lady superintendent, the sisters, and yourselves—all working pleasantly together? Yes.
6248. Are you aware of any quarrelling going on, or anything of that sort? No, sir. In the old sisters' time there were disputes among themselves and some nurses who have left, but at present I know of nothing—not for a long time past.
- 6249.

6249. Mr. Metcalfe.] Who are they that left? Those who came out with the lady superintendent.
6250. Mr. Goold.] Why did they leave—was it on account of quarrelling and disputes? No, I think that their time was up that they engaged for.
6251. And one got married? Yes.
6252. President.] Have you ever noticed irregularities in the diets coming up? I have, sir.
6253. In what way? Somethings are short, and I have had to go for such a thing as bread. They would not have sufficient in the kitchen, and you have to go to the store for it. I have had to go myself on some occasions.
6254. Have you ever found diets sent up for patients who had left, or more than were required for the ward? Yes, some few things, such as chops, more than were wanted.
6255. Sometimes members of the committee are in the habit of coming round into the wards? Yes.
6256. Have they ever spoken to you about your work? Yes, one of them not long ago interfered with me.
6257. Interfered with you? I should say so.
6258. You felt it was an interference? Yes.
6259. What was the matter? He asked the patients had they any complaints, and came to one rather disagreeable patient, who told him that he was left for some hours without a poultice; and instead of asking me whether it was the case, he brought me to the patient and said—"This man says so-and-so." I wanted to explain the matter, but he spoke about his power, and said he would act friendly to me; if I would promise him to look after that patient, he would not use his power,—before all the other patients. I think if a gentleman like that went round every week the nurses might clear out.
6260. You think it calculated to destroy the influence of the nurses with the patients? Oh yes. I spoke to the patient afterwards and told him that he should not complain in that way, but he seemed more insolent than before, and told me that Mr. Paxton would be there all the week to see to him.
6261. Who was the director? Mr. Paxton.
6262. And you think that in a matter of that sort they should ask for an explanation from you, or speak to a sister or the lady superintendent about it? I was in charge of the ward myself, but he did not ask me whether I was or not.
6263. What were the facts of the case—how far was anything amiss? The man got the same poultices that day that he usually got, but he used to ask for one at any time.
6264. Is there a stated number? No. We gave him one any time he asked for it. He got one usually at 10 o'clock. I was going round with the house physician, and took off his poultice, and I said—"I shall see you get another presently," just as I put it on. The only reason I wished him to have another was that I thought he required it, that it might get a little cold and become uncomfortable; and so the house physician passed on, and I finished going round with him. It was our cleaning-up morning, and the patient did not remind me of it. He got a poultice in the evening and make no remark to me, and the next day Mr. Paxton came, and I heard nothing of his being disagreeable until he told Mr. Paxton.
6265. And he had seen you before during the day? Yes, and never asked for it.
6266. Then it comes to this: that intending to give it him, in going through the ward you had a press of business and did not give it to him? Yes; the other doctors came in, and my attention was taken from him by other duties, and there was a little delay. Had he asked me at any time I would have given it him.
6267. Was he troublesome? He was. I do not say so on account of the work that I had with him, but his loud talking; and he was very impertinent and quarrelsome.
6268. The omission arose from press of work? Yes.
6269. You know the rule about patients being obliged to wear the hospital clothing? Yes.
6270. Is this rule ever violated? On the female side I believe it is.
6271. Have you been in those wards? Yes.
6272. Do you think that some doctors allowing some of the patients to violate the rule in this way, while others enforce the rule, makes patients more difficult to manage? I think it does, especially when they think the doctor will not send them out nor have them reported for disobedience in any way.
6273. Have you seen cases of the kind reported? I have not seen it.
6274. Do you know what plan the doctors have of filling the beds when their turn comes for a week—you know how they admit? Well, on the surgical side they have a habit of keeping the patients for their week. I have always noticed it (I have been a good deal on the surgical side), they have not a fixed number of beds there.
6275. They keep them in to have an opportunity of having the beds when the week comes round? Yes, I suppose so. They like to take in in their own week.
6276. Mr. Metcalfe.] If a patient requires clothing warmer than usual, can she have it? Yes, I think so.
6277. You never had patients inquire for it and be refused? I never had.
6278. President.] I understand there are supplies of clothing if required? That is always kept in small rooms near the ward, and there is sufficient.
6279. As long as you have known the building have there been bugs here? Yes, great quantities.
6280. Ever since you have known it? Yes; I never knew the wards without them.
6281. Mr. Metcalfe.] Have they been worse since you first came? Better since the cleaning, but very bad previous.
6282. President.] They are behind the plaster, and under the window-sills and places like that? Yes.
6283. Were efforts made to keep them down? Yes, constantly. Numbers 12 and 3 are, I think, the worst wards.
6284. Mr. Metcalfe.] Have you observed them on the bed-clothes and bedsteads? Yes, on the bedsteads I have, when I have been on night duty; I have seen them running over patients.
6285. But in the day-time? Yes, sometimes in the day-time.
6286. Do patients complain of it? Yes, they have complained.
6287. President.] Are the beds cleaned? Yes; although they do not give time to clean a bed, so you must take a convalescent bed and clean that.
6288. Mr. Metcalfe.] But have you not a spare bed? No. You can take a convalescent bed and clean that—that is the only way. There are no spare beds. They discharge a patient to-day, and there is one ready to go into the bed at once.

- Nurse
A. Brannigan. 6289. Are there no spare beds you can put a mattress upon? There were some got the other day, but before that they were made up on the floor.
- 6 June, 1873. 6290. Mr. Ellis.] Is there any truth in the statement made to us that the nurses are too much addicted to dancing and "flirting with one another"? Well, really I don't know; it is such a curious thing to say. I have not known it ever, at all events in the wards.
6291. Have you ever known them to dance in the sight of a dying patient? No.
6292. You have not? Never.
6293. Are you sure that has not happened? I am sure, as far as I know; to my knowledge it has not.
6294. You never saw anything of that kind? Never.
6295. President.] Do you know whether the attention of the committee was called to these bugs? Yes, repeatedly.
6296. Mr. Metcalfe.] That would be done through Miss Osburn, of course? Yes.

Annie Parker, housekeeper at the Sydney Infirmary, called in and examined:—

- A. Parker. 6297. President.] What position do you occupy in the institution? Housekeeper in the Nightingale wing.
- 6 June, 1873. 6298. How long have you been in the institution? Four years and nine months.
6299. How long have you been housekeeper? About three years.
6300. Of course you live in the Nightingale wing: what pay do you get? £40 a year now.
6301. Mr. Ellis.] When was your salary raised? About six months ago, in December.
6302. President.] What was it before that? £30. I engaged on the understanding that after my apprenticeship I was to get £45. The lady superintendent engaged me in that way if I would be trained by her; after that I was to get £45, but I never received it. That was the salary the housekeeper had when I first came.
6303. There was a housekeeper when you first came? Yes.
6304. What are your duties? I look after everything in the Nightingale wing. When the nurses are in the Nightingale wing, I see that they behave properly and keep their rooms as they should; I see that the rooms are done. I look after the crockery and all stores for the house, and the linen.
6305. You give out the linen? Yes. All the linen, on being returned from the wash, is brought to me to the linen store; I count it and give it out to the wards; also I give the nurses of the wards the linen to be made up.
6306. There is work done in the wards then? Yes, by the nurses and female patients.
6307. You give out that work? Yes.
6308. You receive it back again? Yes; and see that it is properly done when it is returned. I look after the washing of the Nightingale wing too.
6309. How many dozen of washing are there every week altogether? I cannot say altogether.
6310. Give us round numbers? I should say about 2,000 pieces altogether from the wards.
6311. Mr. Metcalfe.] That is, bandages and all together? Well, the bandages only go from the man at the gate from accident cases. The nurses wash their bandages in the wards.
6312. President.] Do you go over all this? Yes; I count it all over before I send it to the wards.
6313. You see that they get back the proper number? Yes.
6314. Mr. Metcalfe.] You get it regularly? Yes. When going to the steam laundry it was not regular. It is now.
6315. You can tell now if the pieces are short? Yes.
6316. I remember you could not tell that? Yes, we could tell if the pieces were kept back.
6317. Sometimes it was said there were a great many pieces short, and you could not get them? I did not count the clothes then. I do now.
6318. President.] You mean that you attend to the housekeeping wants of the Nightingale wing, get the nurses' meals ready, and so on? Well, I give out the things to the cook, and see that they are cooked properly, and see that the nurses' table is kept neatly.
6319. Is your time fully occupied? Yes, always. I fill up my time by sewing or machining in the linen room—the patients' clothes.
6320. Mr. Metcalfe.] Mrs. Dowling is washerwoman now? Yes.
6321. It is well done? Yes, very well.
6322. President.] If it has been represented to us that you have nothing to do, and that you are simply a lady's maid to the lady superintendent—is that true? No. I have nothing to do with her, no more than I have with the nurses. I see that her meals come up in proper order. There is no one to be a lady's maid. The housemaid does the rooms in the morning—that is, the lady's and nurses.
6323. As far as you see, do all of you, the whole nursing staff, get on comfortably together? Yes, certainly. I have never heard anything different.
6324. If it has been represented to us that Miss Osburn is constantly away from the institution for days together, as far as you have seen is that correct? No. She was away about three years ago for three weeks, and since then she has been in the Hunter River District visiting hospitals, and she went to Mudgee with Nurse Ross, to the hospital. That is all I can remember.
6325. On the occasion of her being away for three weeks, was it from ill health? Yes; that was the reason she was away.
6326. Mr. Ellis.] She goes out occasionally? Yes, to town, for anything that is wanted.
6327. Or to spend the evening with a friend? Yes, she may do that. The nurses all go out every second evening.
6328. Do you remember her being away for several days together? No. She was away a little time ago for four evenings. She was four nights away.
6329. President.] But here during the day? Yes.
6330. Simply slept out of the place? Yes.

MONDAY, 9 JUNE, 1873.

Members Present:—

WILLIAM CHARLES WINDEYER, Esq., PRESIDENT.

EYRE G. ELLIS, Esq.
MICHAEL METCALFE, Esq.SAMUEL GOOLD, Esq.
CHARLES COWPER, JUN., Esq.

Alfred Roberts, Esq., called in and further examined:—

Mr. Roberts: I do not know, gentlemen, how far your inquiries extend—whether they extend to an examination as to the best form of structure for a hospital—whether it is intended to improve the present Infirmary or to rebuild it.

A. Roberts,
Esq.

6331. Mr. Cowper.] In the letter of instructions to the Commission, it is stated:—"Mr. Parkes considers 9 that the terms of your appointment are sufficiently wide to enable you to direct your inquiry to any matter within the general scope and objects of a Public Charity, although the matter itself may not be expressly named in your Commission. It is particularly desired that defects of management in every instance should be clearly pointed out, with the view to improvement; and any recommendations arising from the special knowledge acquired by you in the course of your inquiry will be carefully considered by the Government. In the case of the Sydney Infirmary, it appears to Mr. Parkes that it will be desirable to keep in view the principles of modern hospital management which have been of late years accepted by those who have devoted their attention most beneficially to this object in England. The object of the Government is to place this, the principal hospital of the Colony, under the most improved system of management." Well, I think the object of our inquiry is more with reference to the management of the Infirmary, but it may be well if you could in some general remarks give us an idea as to the best mode of construction, as you have paid particular attention to the subject, and most probably have some valuable information to give us? My information has tended more in the direction of rendering a new hospital as perfect as possible, and it would be difficult to give you information upon particular points, without taking each separately.

9 June, 1873.

6332. I think it will not be out of place for us to take it in that way, in reference to a new hospital solely, for I fancy that the Commission are generally of opinion that to place that old building in a proper state of repair is out of the question? I was going to say that the additional experience I have gained tends to confirm the opinion which I originally formed, that good and well constructed as that old hospital was for the time in which it was built—in fact the form of the building is fair now—the state of the walls is such as to render it a difficult building to keep free from hospital disease, and such also as to render the current expenses greater than they would be if it were entirely rebuilt. The first point I would wish to mention is that I have arrived at the conclusion that a hospital should never be more than two stories high, but that the arguments in favour of two stories over one story, in my opinion, are such as to enable me to recommend two stories in preference to one.

6333. President.] Do you mean two stories above the ground floor, or only one? Two tiers of wards.

6334. The ground floor and the first floor? Yes; I recommend two stories, on account of the economy of management. Perhaps it is not necessary for me to say what size the wards should be, but general wards, I consider, in this climate, should have 10 feet of wall space to each bed, with from 12 to 18 feet of vacant space at the far end of the ward.

6335. What is the object of that? That is where the doors to the lavatories and water-closets should be; and I join with that a recommendation to have a large bay window at the end of the ward, when possible. The space should be utilized, by having a sitting-table, where the patients who could sit up should sit. It is a cheerful position, and to some extent freed from the business of the ward.

6336. Do you contemplate the closet doors opening into the wards? Not the closet door, but each pavilion should have a ward turret at each corner of one end. The wards should be 27 feet wide, and from 14 to 15 feet high, and the ventilation should be carried out by means of opposite windows extending to within a few inches of the ceiling, and to within 3 feet or 3 feet 6 inches of the floor.

6337. Do you contemplate the windows being placed exactly opposite to each other? Yes.

6338. Because some gentlemen have suggested here that they should not be opposite to each other—that each window should be opposite to a blank space in the wall? No, they should be opposite to each other. I should recommend that the windows be supplemented by ventilators of well-made perforated bricks placed along the entire length of the side walls, and within a few inches of the ceiling, just above the windows. The apertures in these bricks should not be large. There should be two holes in each brick—that would be enough—and they should be large enough to allow of a stick being thrust through them. The effect of these bricks would be to allow of a constant stream of fresh air to circulate in the upper part of the ward, in such a direction that it would not blow upon the patients. In this climate, I am further inclined to recommend the insertion of a similar brick under each bed, in the wall, about 9 inches from the floor, but these last should be provided with shutters on the outside.

6339. Mr. Metcalfe.] You would have them under each bed? Yes, under the head of each bed. I think I mentioned the bay window at the end of the ward. The best form of window is the ordinary sash. I have seen an immense variety of windows, and the best form is, I think, the up and down sash; but I would have the window divided into thirds, the upper third being hung upon central side pivots, the lower two-thirds forming the main window; the latter should be formed of two sashes. I am sorry to say that I cannot recommend you any very good form of ward wall-facing. The Kean cement in many instances, I found, had become discoloured, and in other places it had cracked in corners and had chipped; but, on the whole, it affords the best wall-facing. The next best is the common plaster, the lower portion painted and the upper portion lime-washed. The next best facing is the common plaster, lime-washed and scraped once in six months. In deciding upon wall-facing it is desirable to calculate the increased primary cost of formation, and balance against this the annual diminished expenditure for keeping in repair, and comparative means afforded of efficient working. If you have an impenetrable surface, such as Keene's cement, you will keep your wards going for a longer consecutive number of months than if you have plaster lime-washed. If you have plaster lime-washed, and you wish to have them in the highest state of health, you must turn the wards out once in six months to be scrubbed and washed. If the walls are faced with Keene's cement, they may run on for certainly two years, with an occasional washing down, which will not require the emptying of the wards.

A. Roberts, Esq.
9 June, 1873.

6340. Washed down with water? Yes. I may mention, as bearing upon this point, that they have found in the new wards at Guy's Hospital the Keene's cement had become discoloured, and I was talking to Dr. Steel about it, and he said that they would have ultimately to paint the wards. It would form a capital surface to take paint, but it was an unsatisfactory termination to the expense of the Keene's cement.

6341. What is the reason of the discolouration? I do not know. The whole of the St. Thomas's wards were so much discoloured that they had to wash them over with water colour, but this also became discoloured, so that they have had to wash the colour off again; in that case I think it is from the salt in the mortar. There is a great variety of materials used for the floors of wards; but I would recommend in this climate that they should be well laid hard-wood floors. They are perhaps the best, taking all things into consideration, but they should be laid more in the style and finish of what is called "marqueterie." They should be so well laid that no moisture can enter the joints; and be cross planed. The German system of waxing is very good, but hardly to be recommended here on account of the labour. The Germans have found the labour so considerable in some cases that they have discontinued it, and painted the floors of their wards. This has also been done in some of the London Hospitals recently. For the floors of corridors, the best and most economical material which I have seen is the 12-inch Staffordshire tiles, made of strong clay. They are used all over England for railway platforms, and I have seen them in several hospital corridors, especially in Liverpool; and I have an estimate of the prices, which I will furnish to you. (See Appendix L.) With regard to the ward turrets for lavatories and water-closets, the best forms of these that I have seen were at the new Southern Hospital at Liverpool, and at the Herbert Hospital. Those of the Herbert Hospital, I think, will form the best model. From the ward there should be a narrow passage, ventilated by windows on each side, and that should have a door opening into the turret. The passage should only be about 4 feet long.

6342. President.] Would you have double doors? One spring door, opening from the ward into the passage, and another spring door opening from the passage into the turret chamber.

6343. You do not contemplate putting the water-closets and the lavatory in the same turret? No; the lavatory should open from one corner and the water-closets and place for the bed-pans and slop-basins, &c., should open from the other, and there should be urinals also in the latter. There is a very elaborate report on the Herbert Hospital, which I shall be happy to lay before you, and they give in it drawings of some of their turrets; but on going over the hospital, I found that one form of turret chamber worked better than the others, and curiously enough that was not the one published in the report. I got a young friend of mine to take a drawing of it, as well as of the operating-theatre, and there it is. This will, perhaps, give you a better idea of what a turret chamber should be. These other plans are plans of the Southern Hospital at Liverpool. This is a remarkably well arranged hospital. I was so much struck with the admirable way in which the details were worked out, that I searched out the architect, and finding that he was an enthusiast in these matters, I asked him to give me drawings of one or two things; and he said he would not only do that, but would place the plans of the whole hospital at my disposal. At my request, he instructed a clerk to make out these plans, and I paid the clerk for his time. It was a generous thing to do, as these plans were of course the result of his own labour and skill. This will give you an idea of the space required for the administrative service of the hospital. I thought there was a little surplus of that; but this hospital is in the middle of Liverpool.

6344. Mr. Ellis.] What is the meaning of "female private rooms," marked on the plan? These are for special cases.

6345. For paying patients? I do not think so, but I cannot give that information positively.

6346. President.] How many beds do you say that this hospital will hold? I do not remember.

6347. About how many do you think? I think between 200 and 300 beds.

6348. What is the cost per bed? I can tell you by referring to my notes, but I cannot tell you now. I was much pleased with this hospital, and there was one point well developed in it, which also impressed me in visiting lunatic asylums and hospitals in England. I was struck with the number of little matters that they were able to get perfect on the spot, and the important bearing which a number of such small matters had upon the material efficiency of the establishment. For instance, an architect travels about England, and sees a great variety of hospitals and lunatic asylums, and he selects the best items in each, and makes use of them in designing a new building. It appeared to me that the perfection of a lunatic asylum and a hospital depended a good deal on the way in which these were combined together. I therefore found out one of the best architects of lunatic asylums and the best builder of hospitals, and I suggested to them whether they were willing to undertake a share of the work with the architect here, and build a hospital somewhat in this way—that they should give their advice as to the best form of building, and that they should purchase the most recent improvements of all such things as it might be desirable to purchase in England, and send them out, and that the architect here should superintend the work here. The builder of lunatic asylums suggested that they should be paid at the ordinary percentage, divided among the two equally. It was suggested by the hospital architect to whom I applied, that the percentage paid to each should be regulated by the amount of work done by each man, but he thought also that the committee should not pay more than the usual percentage between the two.

6349. Mr. Metcalfe.] That would be 5 per cent.? Yes, 5 per cent. I would specially recommend that all the machinery and fittings of the lavatories and water-closets should be of the best quality, the most simple construction, and as strong as possible. I consider that the best forms of the ordinary handle closetpan, are upon the whole the most satisfactory. They are old-fashioned, but the very best of them are certainly the best for hospital use. Minton's cheapest tiles form the best facing for lavatory walls up to 7 feet high, and I can give you the estimates for the supply of them at per yard. (See Appendix L.)

6350. Mr. Metcalfe.] What should the floors be? Tesselated pavement. That you can get in the Colony, but at greater cost than Minton's. In regard to the baths, undoubtedly the best hospital bath I have seen is one that has been utilized in this Liverpool Southern Hospital, and in all hospitals and asylums at Home,—a glazed fire-clay bath—(Finch's patent fire-clay bath.) I was so impressed with its excellence that I ordered two to be sent out; they are rather expensive, but they are undoubtedly the best I have seen, as well as the cheapest in the end. They are made of one piece of fire-clay, and glazed inside. The next best kind of bath is the enamelled copper bath; these are more costly, and some institutions have taken them up and replaced them with the others.

6351. You mean that they have replaced them with the fire-clay baths? Yes.

A. Roberts,
Esq.
9 June, 1873.

6352. Which are composed of one piece of clay? Yes, all in one piece.

6354. President.] Is there no danger of their being broken by some one falling against them? Not the slightest.

6355. Mr. Metcalfe.] What is the price? They will deliver them for £7 10s. or £7 15s. They make also the taps and fittings very plain, but very good, and they will cost half as much more. They are now in very general use. They are used at the public baths, where you get a bath for two-pence, and where they have immense wear and tear. I put one of them in the Exhibition, and the Commission can see it now at Messrs. Street & Norton's office; there are a couple there. It was impossible not to be impressed by the evident anxiety with which means have been adopted to provide in the English hospitals against the fearful calamity of fire. I found, I think without exception, that the principal hospitals had water laid on in pipes of 3 inches in diameter, and on each landing there was a large tap provided with leather hose; and the key of the tap was always kept in a box with a glass front, to be broken in a case of emergency. The admirable order in which these things were kept was the best proof of the importance attached to them. They get water there night and day. I regret to observe that a large country hospital has been burnt down since I left—a large country hospital—and these sort of accidents make a great impression at Home. I was struck as much with the improvements in the laundries as with anything else. Almost all the hospitals, excepting those which are in the heart of London, have their steam laundries, of which there are many kinds. One of the best was at the London Hospital. I think, all things considered, it was the best. It is worked by very few hands. I shall be happy to give you the name of the maker if you wish to have it. The clothes are always dried in a hot-air chamber. Besides the laundry, or rather as a part of it, there is sometimes a sort of scullery, where the foul clothes are rough-washed. The process of steam-washing, as I saw it, is:—The clothes are scalded and rinsed, and then they go into a large centrifugal wheel, which revolves rapidly from left to right for ten minutes, and then from right to left for ten minutes. Then they are boiled for ten minutes, and then they go into the drying room. They are put on horses, and the horses are run into the chamber, where a current of hot air is supplied by a furnace. The ends of the horses close up the entrances to the chamber.

6356. Mr. Metcalfe.] The clothes are not dried in the open air? No.

6357. Mr. Cowper.] Has not the washing of the clothes upon the spot an injurious effect upon the inmates of the institution? No; but I think it is an undesirable thing that the laundry should be near the wards; in erecting a new hospital, the laundry should be removed as far as possible from the wards. The engine-house and kitchen, and so on, should undoubtedly be placed as far as possible from the wards. You would not put the engine on the same floor as the patients.

6358. Not under the building? Certainly not. It should be as far as possible removed from the building.

6359. I thought I saw that washing on the premises was objected to, on the ground that it was not healthy for the patients? It should be built in such a way that the steam cannot make its way into the wards.

6360. Mr. Gould.] Should not the clothes be exposed to the open air? In these cases they are not, but I should in this climate avail myself of the fine weather to give them a blow.

6361. Mr. Metcalfe.] At the Asylum of Destitute Children at Randwick, the clothes are all dried in the room where they are washed? Surely not. There must be an apparatus such as I have described to you. The clothes would not dry in the same room in which they are washed. Another thing that I found great improvements in were the kitchens. What I saw induces me strongly to recommend the adoption here of the best improvements in the laundries and kitchens, and the use of the steam-engine. They have a steam-engine now in every hospital of any size. There is scarcely any old-fashioned hospital in London that has not got its steam-engine and lifts; and of course if it is necessary to save labour there, where labour is comparatively cheap, it is much more necessary here. In respect to the cooking, the most economical form of cooking apparatus that I saw was one of Leoni's, made for cooking by gas. It is done by an oven, which is dug out of the floor of the kitchen, so that the meat is put down under the floor, the trap-door is shut down, and the cooks walk about doing their work. When the time comes for serving up, the trap-door is lifted up, and the meat is taken out. If the Commission please, I will read the report of the house governor of the London Hospital on this mode of cooking. I wrote to him and asked him to give it me.

"On the 5th October, 1869, I was instructed to inquire as to the best method of cooking by gas, in order to replace the nearly worn-out roasting ovens, the flues of which were moreover as productive of smoke as the flues of steam-boiler furnaces, while steam coal could not be used in them. On the 7th of the following December, as the result of inquiries made, it was decided to try two small ovens, one for roasting and the other for baking, fitted on Leoni's principle. Subsequently, the large gas-roaster was erected, together with the large baking-ovens and the boiling and grilling range. The working of the entire apparatus has now been reduced to a comparative certainty as to convenience and general results. About six months ago, moreover, I made a series of experiments with an apparatus put together by Ashling, in order to test the value of the system of boiling known as Warren's system, in which the effect is produced by the external aid of hot water. We found, however, that it was possible to produce much better results by substituting steam for water, and I then fixed to the whole of our meat boiling on this principle. The results are even more surprising than those developed by the new mode of roasting. Although this plan had been in operation only three months at the end of last year, I proposed to add the results of those three months' work to those of the twelve months' gas-roasting, in the statement which I now subjoin.

In the year 1871 the saving of waste was, in cooked meat, as under:—

Roast beef...	2,264
" mutton	5,369
Boiled " (three months only)	287
Total of cooked meat saved in reduced waste ...	7,920 lbs.

equivalent to 11,822 lbs. of raw meat, worth, at the average contract prices of 1871, no less than £363 1s. 11d. If the new boiling apparatus had been in use throughout the year, the total saving would have been £420. No repairs have yet been required, and none of any consequence appear likely to be necessary, so that it seems to me we may claim a permanent saving in our kitchen arrangements of (say) £400 per annum, or the interest of at least £12,000. There is a very great saving also in the use of gas instead of coals, as the cooking power for the roasting of meat in our large roaster; but as the other gas-cooking arrangements, with open ovens, boiling and grilling ranges, do not appear to be economical in this respect, I claim no corresponding saving, but set the one part of the system against the other; merely remarking,—first, that a very large increase of coal furnace arrangements would have been necessary to enable us to meet the wants of the greatly increased number of patients, which now appears permanent, and which has accrued since we first decided to introduce the new methods of cooking; and secondly, that by the aid of these new methods we could, without further enlargements, meet the necessities of a very much larger number of patients than is now in the house, or is ever likely to be attained."

The

A. Roberts,
Esq.

9 June, 1873.

The system of boiling is very simple. The whole thing could be made at a cost—if you had a steam-boiler—of from £8 to £10 with the greatest ease. It requires merely a simple jacketed boiler. If you will allow me, I will put in evidence a calculation of the cost of all these things. Having placed it at the disposal of the Prince Alfred Hospital committee, I shall be happy to place it at the disposal of any other hospital committee when they come to deal with these items. You asked me the other day about dispensaries. Here is a pamphlet with the rules adopted by the Charitable Society's Council, if any gentleman would like to look at them. (Pamphlet produced.)

6362. President.] Then this finishes the observations which you had to make to us as to the structure of a hospital? I think so.

6363. Did you happen to see the plans which were prepared by Mr. Mansfield for the improvement of the Infirmary? No, I have not seen them—not studied them.

6364. You have expressed your opinion to the effect that nothing can be done with the old front building? Yes.

6365. Are you still of that opinion? I am. I may put my opinion, I think, in this way,—that the additional cost of rebuilding the front of the present Infirmary would be more than made up for by the additional economy in the subsequent working of the hospital—that is to say, that the money saved in the subsequent working of the hospital would represent the interest of a larger sum than would represent the difference between the cost of building and the cost of remodelling the hospital.

6366. Mr. Metcalfe.] You advocate pulling down the Infirmary and rebuilding it? I do, on the supposition that it would be retained as a hospital for acute cases—a central hospital.

6367. Mr. Cowper.] Is it not the opinion of some authorities that no building should be used for a lengthened period as a hospital, particularly a building constructed as that is? If a hospital has once proved itself to be infected by that quality which we call “hospitalism,” which gives rise to such diseases as erysipelas, no doubt those authorities recommend its removal. If the building were a new one, they would set to work to find out the cause of its being so infected.

6368. I see in this book of Captain Galton's it is said that buildings for the reception of sick people become impregnated with organic impurities, and should be pulled down and rebuilt periodically on a fresh site? Yes.

6369. Considering the present condition of the Sydney Infirmary, and the rotten state of the wood-work, I should think it would be hardly possible to render it healthy? I found my opinion as to the state of the Infirmary upon evils which I know to exist. For full forty years after the erection of the building the entire space under the floor of the lower wards was quite closed up without ventilation, and for the last ten years the sewer has passed under the wards, so that there was a pent-up atmosphere, with the sewer—the main drainage of the hospital—running through it for many years; and I think that that has given rise to an unhealthy state of things; and that is one reason why the building should be pulled down.

6370. President.] Has that state of things been remedied? The ventilation has been improved, and I think the sewer has been taken round the end of the building; but I am not sure. It is a law of hospital architecture that no drain should pass under the floors.

6371. What is your opinion as to the sanitary state of the Infirmary with reference to hospitalism? I was conversing with one of the house surgeons since my return, and he told me that latterly there had not been a single case of wound in the hospital which had not been attacked with erysipelas. I don't know how long a period he was speaking of.

6372. Mr. Metcalfe.] One of the present house surgeons told you this? Yes; and they all acknowledge the present state of the wards to be very bad.

6373. President.] What do you advise as to the construction of ceilings? The best kind of ceiling is what is called “Dennett's arch.” It consists of brick broken up to the size of nuts—walnuts—and mixed with a kind of Portland cement. Iron beams are laid across from wall to wall, and a shallow arch of this cement thrown from beam to beam. That is fireproof, sound-proof, and non-absorbent.

6374. Then it presents a series of small arches? Yes. At St. Thomas's they have put a small flat ceiling underneath. I do not think the arches would be prejudicial if you had the tops of the windows curved to correspond.

6375. What is the depth of one of these curves? Very slight indeed. I have a pamphlet on them; though the plan is somewhat expensive, it is considered the best.

6376. What is the width between each girder? I should think about 10 to 12 feet; that is a rough guess.

6377. Mr. Metcalfe.] Do not these girders obstruct the free passage of the air along the ceiling? No, they do not, because they do not extend any distance below the ceiling—not an inch; and then the iron may be bevelled.

6378. President.] Supposing that the present Infirmary is not pulled down and we have to deal with the present state of the building, what do you say should be done for the renovation of the walls;—do you think that this would answer:—“I would recommend that the whole of the walls and ceilings be stripped of the plaster, and that the walls be freely coated with cement, finished with a surface of plaster or of Keene's cement—the latter giving a polished and smooth surface, nearly impervious to gases, and non-absorbent.” “In dealing with the walls, I propose to remove all the internal wooden fittings of the windows, as linings, architraves, &c., and to plaster the jambs and sills of the openings, thereby getting rid of a great number of corners and chinks, which form nests for vermin. For the ceilings I would recommend the use of zinc lining, laid upon thin pine boards, and secured by strips of cedar at the edges, screwed up to the wooden lining, and arranged so as to divide the ceilings into panels. These wooden slips to be bedded in putty before they are screwed up tight, so as to leave no crevice to harbour insects. The whole to be painted with white zinc paint.”—Do you approve of that? Everything there seems to be good, except the ceiling, and on that I can give no opinion. I can only say that I saw workhouses, new and old, and asylums and hospitals, and I did not see it tried anywhere. I have no experience in the matter—nothing to go upon.

6379. Mr. Metcalfe.] What is your opinion of the present military Barracks as the site of a hospital? I think very highly of them, so much so that I made a recommendation to the Government some time ago to utilize them as a hospital for chronic cases.

6380. They would make a large hospital for that purpose? It would not hold as many beds as you suppose, but it would be a very desirable thing to have it.

6381. President.] Supposing that you pulled down the present front building of the Infirmary, what accommodation accommodation would you give in the building which you propose should be erected there? I would not increase the size of the hospital—it should hold not more than 150 beds.

6382. You would erect a building to contain 150 beds? Not exceeding that. I would limit it to the number of beds necessary for a receiving hospital for acute cases.

6383. Have you made any estimate as to what the probable cost of such a building would be? I have often thought of the cost of putting up such a building there.

6384. Supposing you pulled down the present front building, what would it cost to erect such a building as you would put up there, on the same site? You would require to amalgamate in that front building a great deal of the administration of the hospital. Those corner buildings would come down, and the front building would come down, and you would require to erect dispensary, residence for the officers, residence for all, except the nursing staff.

6385. What do you think that would cost? The estimate that we got for it was £30,000, I think,—£28,000 or £30,000.

6386. Did that include a new dead-house, and all the offices that the place is now deficient in? It included everything necessary for rendering the hospital perfect, so that it would not require anything further for years to come.

6387. Mr. Gould.] Was that the estimate laid before the Select Committee of the Assembly? I think so.

6388. Mr. Cowper.] Do you not think that, in any improvement of the present building, some provision should be made for lifts to carry up the patients' meals and save labour, as well as keep the food warm? Yes, certainly. There are three or four matters of that kind which I have not mentioned. One is as to lifts, which are undoubtedly useful. Lifts economize labour very much, and in a Country like this, where labour is so high, they must be of even greater benefit than at Home. The next things I should have mentioned are "linen-shoots." I found them in many hospitals, and in some I found them thrown out of use, while in others they were very useful, and in others again they were hardly working satisfactorily. Upon the whole, with an intelligent organization, they are desirable; but they should be made of well-made glazed earthenware pipes, and they should be carried up above the roof, so that there is good ventilation. The next point is as to the dust-shoots. I do not recommend them. I found they required elaborate construction; and the only place where they were working satisfactorily was in the London Hospital, and that, I think, was owing entirely to the extreme intelligence of the resident governor, who is very clever and active.

6389. Do you not think that if anything is done to renew the present building at the Infirmary, the ground occupied by the premises should be trenched on an extensive scale? I should think, considering the deodorizing power of earth and air, a good trenching would be of service. I think also the ground should be scientifically drained, but I should not be prepared to recommend the removal of the soil; I would turn it up and expose it to the air. In putting up a new hospital, it would be one of the principal duties of the architect to arrange for all these things; and further than that, the ground should be drained. Certain portions of it are very spongy in wet weather, and I should recommend the whole of the grounds to be laid out as a landscape garden, and a ha-ha ditch cut on the Domain side, with a low wall in the bottom and an iron fence on top of the wall. That would admit of an uninterrupted view over the green from the hospital across the Domain, although I would have on the top of the bank of the ha-ha ditch a strong iron wire fence, so that patients would not be allowed to get near the wall—not within (say) about 12 feet of it.

6390. President.] Would not the effect be as good if there were double dwarf walls and iron railings, the object being not to prevent a free current of air, or exclude the out-look? The object I had in view was not to interrupt the view—to offer the inducement of the premises being open to public inspection, as an incentive to the people of the place to keep the grounds in nice order. The front part of the grounds is now kept in good order because people can see into it; and my idea is that the people should be able to see into the back premises as well.

6391. Then you see no object to be gained by keeping the premises private? Not in the least from eye view; but people should of course be prevented from communicating with the patients.

6392. Mr. Metcalfe.] The patients should be prevented from communicating with their friends outside? Yes.

6393. Mr. Gould.] After having visited so many hospitals in Europe, what is your view as to the construction of the Nightingale wing;—do you approve of that style of building? For what?

6394. From reading that book of Captain Galton's, it seems to me that the Nightingale wing is constructed in a form which is contrary to the approved style of hospital architecture? But the Nightingale wing was built for the accommodation of the nurses, not for a hospital.

6395. Yes, I am aware of that; but do you object to that form of building? There is no objection to it for the purposes for which it is employed, but it would be very undesirable for a hospital building.

6396. There appears to be a great deal of lost room? I do not think there is much lost room, but the angles would be undesirable in hospital walls.

6397. Supposing that there is no objection on the part of the Government to the removal of the hospital to the Victoria Barracks, would you recommend the abandonment of the present site altogether? I would not. I think that the Victoria Barracks are rather far away from the shipping and the main streets, for the reception of acute cases. Then, the site in Macquarie-street is undoubtedly superior as a hospital site. The air comes fresh from the ocean, and blows straight through the present hospital uninterrupted and pure. The building stands exactly on the summit of a hill, the ground begins to recede again from Macquarie-street, and the view is extremely pleasant. I attach considerable importance to the charming view from the verandah. I have had patients excessively weak, and by carrying their bedsteads out upon the verandah, they could lie, when too weak to talk, and watch a boat crossing the harbour. I believe that such a view has a good effect on the patients, if it is properly utilized.

6398. Mr. Metcalfe.] You think that there should be two hospitals—that the Prince Alfred Hospital should not be amalgamated with any other: supposing that the Government were to resume that land in Macquarie-street and build a new hospital, it would not be desirable to join the money they granted for that purpose to the Prince Alfred Hospital Fund; you would rather have the two hospitals? I think that if the present site can be retained for hospital purposes it is desirable, and would always be desirable to have a hospital there of limited size, and limited also to such cases as those to which I have referred.

6399. Acute cases and accident cases? Yes.

6400. Mr. Cowper.] Do you not think it is desirable to have a temporary building to be used as a hospital for for people suffering from typhus fever and other diseases which are not received into our institution? No general hospital should be used for the purposes of an epidemic. It is impossible to build a modern hospital to meet the ordinary requirements of an epidemic; but in ordinary cases of fever, if the wards of a general hospital are properly conducted, it is more satisfactory to place such cases in the general wards than to have special wards for them.

6401. I am referring more to the erection of huts. I notice in this address of Captain Galton's that temporary huts are built for persons suffering from contagious diseases: we have nothing of the kind here? There have been cases sometimes, which appeared to be trying ones, turned away from the Infirmary, but I think we have had little demand for the admission of these cases.

6402. I have known of a case of a girl suffering from fever who could not get any one to take her in, and I believe that the Rev. Mr. Moreton had to take her in and nurse her? I remember that case; it all came to nothing.

6403. Mr. Metcalfe.] Could you not accommodate such people in some way? I would not mix them up with the patients of a general hospital. It is desirable to have temporary accommodation for such people. If you will permit me, I will add to my remarks upon that point, that it is rather a dangerous thing to multiply Institutions and Charities. I think the people here have come to lean a great deal too much upon the efforts of other people—whether upon the Government or anybody else. They get rid of their servants, and one person and the other, by sending them to some Charity. I think there will always be trying cases to be dealt with.

6404. But would it not be possible to have some system under which a person who needed medical aid which was not within their reach could get it? Yes; but in all our hospitals there should be means taken in the administrative department to extract as much as possible in the way of payment from everybody. I believe that there are very many patients in the hospital here who could pay, at any rate, something towards the expenses of the institution.

6405. Mr. Metcalfe.] Are you aware that the Government give indiscriminate orders to everybody who asks for them? Yes; but the admission of patients ought to depend on the urgency of the cases entirely.

6406. Mr. Goold.] In your evidence given before the Select Committee of the Legislative Assembly—question 357, you say: "I should like to see in Sydney a central hospital which anybody from the country could take as a model for a district hospital, of course on a smaller scale. For instance, a gentleman from Toowoomba, Director of the hospital in that place, which at the present time is being rebuilt, visited me, and I took him round the hospital; but although he was able to gain a great many hints from the south wing, still the institution generally is not what I should desire to hold up as an example to our country friends. I should like to see a hospital that we could utilize in that way; because I think the condition of the country hospitals is something perfectly frightful, and I hope this question will ere long be taken up." In what way do you consider that should be done? The country hospitals are all—I think all—used both as hospitals and benevolent asylums, and the consequence is that the hospital works down to the level of the asylum. That is a rule of human nature. You go into the hospital wards, and you find in them a considerable number of benevolent cases—old people who are spending their last years there—a few surgical cases, and perhaps a very bad medical case or so. The consequence of this sort of admixture is that the committee of the hospital take no interest in the place, because they get a lot of old people there who should be in a benevolent asylum—the medical officers take no interest in it—and the cases of course do very badly. I have visited a great many hospitals here; I have never lost an opportunity of going out of my way to find one; and in the country, I find that the hospital wards are generally badly ventilated, filthily dirty, very often the plaster is down, or the plaster mouldy from the rain coming in, the cases are mixed together—medical cases and surgical cases together—and such bad smells in the wards that sometimes, as a surgeon, I was quite grieved. This will always be the case when the hospitals are made benevolent asylums, as they are in many cases.

6407. President.] Have you any of these hospitals in view? The last hospital I visited was at Bathurst.

6408. Have you any others in view? The hospital at Maitland is a fairly good one, but I have another in my view which is very bad.

6409. Windsor? Windsor is a bad one—Parramatta is a bad one. The hospital at Parramatta possesses all the characteristics I have spoken of. I went into the wards ten months or so before I went Home, and I had to come out, the stench was so abominable. There the same kind of thing that I have been speaking of goes on. There were two patients in a ward—one had a bad ulcer, and the other was a benevolent case—and both emitting a nauseous stench. I nearly broke my leg there in a hole in the floor of the verandah. I saw other hospitals of the same kind when I drove over to Queensland. I saw several, but I should not like to mention names. The Goulburn hospital is another of the same kind. I remember finding mildewed walls in the Goulburn hospital. These hospitals are in some of the largest towns in the country. The hospital at Goulburn was rather better than the worst of those that I have described.

6410. Mr. Goold.] Do you know the Orange hospital at all? I do not. You will never get good hospital management as long as you have the two institutions in one—the hospital and the benevolent asylum. It is contrary to human nature. If you had servants and masters living together, the masters would degenerate in their habits.

6411. Mr. Wearne.] It is not what we wish, but what we can do—we cannot have these asylums separate from the hospital, on account of the expense. They may be separate in one building, but they can only have one committee for the two? They can send the people down to other institutions. They must have some system of organized relief. You cannot go on as you are.

6412. President.] Would you have the benevolent cases sent down to some metropolitan depôt? I should not like to go into the subject without consideration. It requires a good deal of consideration as to whether there should be asylums in the districts or not. At present, if an honest and worthy but very old and weak man wants a loaf of bread he cannot get a penny, and the Magistrate advises him as soon as he leaves his office to come and beg of him in view of a policeman. The man does so, and the policeman picks him up, and he goes to prison, unless he is ill, and then he is sent to the hospital. If he has got a stinking ulcer of the leg, then perhaps he will be sent to the hospital. I went into a prison up the country once, and I saw a lunatic there. I said—"Who is this man?" And they said—"He is a lunatic." "Well, but who is that?" "Oh, that is a pauper." "And who is that?" "That is a prisoner who is taking care of the lunatic." So that the poor lunatic case was with the prisoners and paupers.

6413. Do you think that lunatic cases should be kept in the Infirmary? Not if they are confirmed lunatics.

6414. Do you mean when there is no chance of their recovery, or when they are mere lunatics for the time being? I am not speaking of symptomatic delirium.

6415. But supposing that the insanity is not of that character, but that there was some hope of the patient's recovery and the patient was very noisy and troublesome, do you think that such a case should be kept in the hospital? I think that there should be an isolated ward to put such cases into, but as soon as the disease is proved to be confirmed lunacy, the patient should be removed to a lunatic asylum.

6416. Mr. Cowper.] What would you do if a person were merely suffering from delirium, but was still, in your opinion, likely to recover—a person of whose case you were satisfied it would only be a question of a day or two—would you retain that patient in the ward, to the discomfort of the other patients? In a small Infirmary you have no alternative, but I should certainly arrange in a new Infirmary for a few wards in which to place such patients.

6417. Mr. Goold.] Do you think that the condition of these country hospitals should be inquired into by this Commission? I am very strongly of opinion that it should be.

6418. Have you ever visited the hospitals in Victoria? I have not.

6419. Have you read the Report of a Commission which sat there, and which recommended that the country hospitals should be made benevolent asylums, as they cost the State too much? I have not, but I cannot conceive that such a principle can be a sound one. I can easily understand that the expense to the State might be very great, and that it was desirable to reduce it, but that seems to me a reason for reducing the number of hospitals by one half, and reducing the number of benevolent asylums by one half; but not for making the institutions half and half benevolent asylums and hospitals. I think if this Commission feels it a duty to visit some of the country hospitals, they will very soon see and understand what I mean.

6420. President.] Perhaps you will now address yourself to the administrative arrangements of a hospital as they should be? I am quite at your disposal.

6421. I think you said that you had some observations to make with regard to the administration? I think I said that that was a subject which came next in order.

6422. Mr. Cowper.] What would you propose as a desirable change in the management of the Sydney Infirmary? I should recommend that the Board of directors be reduced to a number not exceeding seven, and I think that five would be better. I think that the subscribers should be represented in proportion to the amount of their total subscriptions. I am not drawing a line between individual legacies and the general subscribers and the Government.

6423. President.] Do you think it desirable that the Board should be entirely composed of laymen? I do. I do not think that it is desirable to have clergymen on the Board.

6424. But you would of course give them every opportunity of ministering in the hospital? The fullest.

6425. And you think that their functions should be confined to that? I do.

6426. Mr. Goold.] Do you think the principle is good that any one should be excluded on account of their profession from being eligible for a seat at the Board? I speak from a pretty lengthened experience, and practically the result I have arrived at is such as I have just expressed.

6427. President.] Besides, if the Board is to be so small, it would be impossible to allow clergymen seats upon it, without creating a great deal of jealousy among some denominations who could not be represented on the Board unless it was composed entirely of clerics? The arguments against clergymen having seats on the Board are very numerous, but clearly if you admit one denomination you must admit another, and that would lead to there being a great number of representatives of the different bodies, and would bring about a very uncomfortable feeling. I think that the charity of a hospital should be of the very broadest possible kind. We have nothing to do with the religion of the patients. Our sole object should be to get them well as soon as possible; and in the event of their being seriously ill, their clerical advisers should be called in.

6428. Do you think that it is advisable for the authorities of the Infirmary to prescribe the reading of certain books on Sundays? I think that the authorities should not know what the religion of a patient is. The medical man does not know what the patient's religion is.

6429. It is his business to cure him? Yes.

6430. And can it in any way help to cure him if he is ordered to read certain books, and prohibited from reading certain others? I think that "Pickwick," does a man good sometimes. It is best for a man to read his Bible, but I would leave a man to read what books he liked. It would never enter my head to advise him as to that.

6431. What do you recommend as to the authorities in the hospital under this small Board? I think that the medical staff should form a medical Board to advise the directors upon purely medical questions; and I think that they should meet with the same regularity as the Board of directors do; and that they should advise the latter upon all purely professional subjects of administration.

6432. You think that they should be as a body in constant communication with the Board of directors? Yes.

6433. Mr. Wearne.] Do you approve of a ward being set apart for each medical man as is done now? It is almost impossible in a hospital of the size of the Infirmary to accomplish that, because you must have a certain amount of classification, but where it can be done it tends much to the harmony of the institution.

6434. Mr. Ellis.] At present nearly every doctor has a ward or a portion of a ward, and it has been suggested that it would be better if each doctor had a certain number of beds in various wards—the beds to be filled up indifferently according as the patients came in;—because they say that at present the doctors keep their beds filled up until their own turn for admission of patients comes round, when they discharge the patients and fill their beds up with others? I think I see what you mean, and it does appear to me that it may be a desirable thing to give to each surgeon and physician his proportionate number of beds; but I think that it is desirable to keep those beds all in one spot. There are four surgeons; and in the accident ward, for instance, it would be better for each of the four to keep a corner of the ward for himself, rather than have his cases all over the wards. And there is this disadvantage of mixing the beds—that one doctor will perhaps economize, while another will not—one will give a better diet than the other; and if the beds attended by these two doctors were close together, that would probably lead to some grumbling. That is one reason why it is desirable that the doctors should have separate wards. They work better in that way.

6435. The great objection now is, that in the surgical wards, a surgeon has every patient that comes in during his week of admission, so that some surgeons have one or two patients, and others a dozen? That is an evil, but you will find evils connected with the other system too, and it is difficult to attain to what you want. How do you propose to admit the patients?

6436. Mr. Wearne.] Should the admissions be by the honorary staff or by the resident staff—should the honorary staff meet together and each gentleman state what case should be admitted, or should the resident staff admit the patients? The present system has always been to admit week and week about.

6437. Each honorary medical officer admits during his week? Yes. Well, it is an extremely difficult thing to say how it would work, and I cannot tell you. When I was at the Infirmary I had no difficulty in this matter. Sometimes one had a few more patients and sometimes another, but they were always pretty well balanced—sometimes on one side, and sometimes on the other. I have heard that the difficulty which you have mentioned does exist now. I do not know how it has come about, and I am afraid that allowing the resident physicians and surgeons to admit may lead to other disagreeables.

6438. President.] What disagreeables do you anticipate? I can conceive it possible that a house surgeon might favour one or two surgeons.

6439. But would not the other surgeons bowl him out? I do not see how the thing could be worked practically. It would be an uncomfortable thing for me to find that during one week I had a large proportion of ulcerated legs to treat, and that my colleague had got four or five stone cases.

6440. Mr. Ellis.] Would not your interests be consulted by getting the cases as they came in? I do not see how that could be done.

6441. President.] Supposing that there are twenty beds in a ward divided among four surgeons—five beds to each—? I think that if each surgeon and physician is to have the same number of beds, it would perhaps be better to leave the admissions to the resident medical officer, because he is a paid and a specially responsible officer, and no doubt the eyes of the whole staff would be upon him, and it might work well; but I can conceive that if a particular condition of things existed, means might be found of producing disagreeable results like the one you have mentioned has arisen. In all the years that I was in the hospital I never discovered the abuse that has been referred to; I do not know anything about it; it is quite out of my experience.

6442. Mr. Metcalfe.] Could not the patients be taken in rotation, the first to A, and the next to B, and so on—in that way there could be no favouritism in the distribution of the patients? Yes; but suppose that there are three or four beds vacant every morning, who is to say which patient went out exactly first; then it makes a wonderful difference as to who gets a case of an ulcerated leg—about the most uninteresting thing you can possibly treat—and who gets a good case for operation.

6443. Mr. Wearne.] But if the resident medical officer has particular friends among the honorary staff, would not any partiality of that kind be detected at once, if it were shown? I do not say that any partiality is shown, or would be shown, but I think that a spirit of harmony among the staff is, perhaps, of more importance than anything else.

6444. But there is no harmony now? I do not know.

6445. We want to have the best system that can be devised, and we want to have your views as to the admission of these patients—at present the system does not work well? Sometimes there is a difficulty in getting good resident men. At present, I believe that they are very good men; but sometimes there has been a very great difficulty in obtaining them; and that was the reason why I said that the patients should not be admitted by the resident medical staff. But, on the whole, perhaps that system might be made to work well—patients are admitted by the resident officers of the London hospitals.

6446. Who should discharge the patients? The honorary staff only.

6447. Acting in council or singly? Each patient has only to do with the honorary medical man who attends him, and has nothing to do with anybody else, and nobody else has anything to do with him.

6448. Mr. Goold.] We have it in evidence that such cases as this occur with the honorary medical staff:—“We had a case of two patients who were ready to go out”—says one of the witnesses—“as soon as the doctor got anybody to fill up the two beds, he would have discharged the two patients; but it so happened that no patients suitable to be put into that ward applied for admittance during his week, so that the doctor said to the nurse in charge of the ward—‘We must keep these patients until my week comes round again.’” The medical man failed to discharge those patients until his week for admission of patients came round again? I think that was wrong.

6449. President.] If each doctor admitted for the others, and the beds were allotted to each, would not this difficulty be got over? Possibly it might.

6450. And do you think that your brother medical men might give you all the ulcerated legs, and keep all the interesting cases for himself? If there were two cases, and one was a case of stone, I should certainly take the case of stone.

6451. But, at present, under this system of allowing each surgeon to admit his own cases, one surgeon has ten or twelve beds, while another has none? I see no reason why the beds should not be equally divided in the surgical wards.

6452. Mr. Metcalfe.] Why should not the same system be adopted there as is adopted in the medical wards? —

6453. President.] What else would you recommend with regard to the officers—who would you place at the head of the institution? There are different modes of managing hospitals, and I have been sorely puzzled to say which is the best. There are two ways of managing a hospital of the present size of the Sydney Infirmary,—either by having a responsible manager—call him what you will—or by making the chief medical officer an administrator.

6454. Mr. Ellis.] The chief medical officer? Yes. As a general rule, I consider that medical men are not good business men, but occasionally such men may be found, and that would perhaps be the cheapest form of management.

6455. Mr. Cowper.] For what salary could we get such a man? Say £500 a year.

6456. A good man? Yes, I should think so.

6457. Mr. Ellis.] £500 a year and residence? Yes; with appropriate residence and board.

6458. Mr. Goold.] Would you give him the entire control of the institution? Yes; you must have a head.

6459. Mr. Metcalfe.] The control over everything—the nursing staff as well as everything else? Undoubtedly. He must not interfere with the nursing staff—there the lady superintendent must be supreme; but in all matters of correspondence with the Board, and all matters should come through the head of the establishment. There must be a head, or there never can be proper harmonious working.

6460. Mr. Ellis.] The difficulty is that there are two heads here? Yes, that is the difficulty.
6461. How do you think that they should be made to work in harmony? Well, you must have people who are disposed to work in harmony.
6462. But where people will not do that, must you have coercion? No, you must change the people. I conceive that no Board of Directors has any right to retain in office inefficient officers. It was perfectly wonderful to me to see how easily and harmoniously the best institutions in London were worked. "There must be nothing to do"—you say—"What is going on"? Nothing seems to be going on, and it is simply because the machine is working so well.
6463. There there is subordination from first to last—it is like a regiment? Yes.
6464. How would you secure that here if you had an independent nursing staff, and a manager over all? I do not see any difficulty at all if the officers take their proper positions. It is only when conflicting separate authorities arise that troubles spring up.
6465. What position would you give to the lady superintendent? Exactly what, as I conceive, her position is—lady superintendent of the nursing staff.
6466. Mr. Couper.] Would you propose that the lady superintendent should have the management of the kitchen and the cooking? No.
6467. Under whom would you place it? Under the house steward.
6468. Mr. Metcalfe.] Then that would be another head? No, not another head. The steward should be responsible to the manager, and the manager to the Board.
6469. Suppose a sister requires some particular delicacy cooked for a patient, how is she to get it? There is no difficulty at all; if on the diet-card, it comes from the kitchen. If there is arrowroot wanted, or any little thing of that kind, the sister should be able to supply it. There should be a small fireplace, which should be fitted with a gas stove burner, because you do not want to keep the stove always going; and there any kind of little thing could be warmed up for the patients. The sister should be supplied with a certain quantity of eggs and beef-tea, arrowroot, and milk, according to the requirements of the ward, of the use of which she should render an account. Any one can understand what a comfort it is to the patients to have little things in that way when they feel that they can take them.
6470. Mr. Ellis.] Suppose that the food goes up badly cooked, to whom should complaint be made? The sister should report it to the lady superintendent, and the lady superintendent to the manager, if the error is serious or continued.
6471. President.] But suppose that the manager says that he does not know anything about cooking, or says, when a thing is complained of as being badly cooked, that it is done capitally? But the manager is responsible for everything that is done in the place; it would be no use his telling the Board that he knew nothing about cooking—he would be held responsible for those under him.
6472. Mr. Ellis.] Suppose there was a dispute about the washing, would that be referred to the manager in the same way? Not for ordinary shortcomings. That is more directly a department of nursing. If the washing were done badly after the remonstrances and warnings of the lady superintendent, she would make her formal complaint in writing to the manager; and if the laundry-woman was engaged outside the premises, he would deal with her by reporting the lady superintendent's complaint to the Board, and conveying to her the decision of the Board.
6473. Every case of complaint then should be referred to the manager? Yes, the manager being the representative of the Board on the spot.
6474. Suppose that a nurse was dissatisfied with the lady superintendent, or the lady superintendent was dissatisfied with a nurse, what would you do? I think that the lady superintendent should be supreme in her department, but I do not think that she should have either the engaging or discharging of the nurses or the sisters; still, I think that her recommendation, if she is a proper officer, should be equal to the fact for the Board. The Board should act upon her recommendation. I think that is the system all through the government, that the recommendation of a chief officer carries with it so much influence that it is not disputed. In fact, it would be impossible to dispute the lady superintendent's recommendation for discharge or engagement; but I would not have her able summarily to dismiss them. I do not think that it is desirable, nor do I think that the lady superintendent would seek for such a power. If a nurse were discharged summarily, it might look like warmth of temper on the part of the lady superintendent, and I think too that a discharge by the Board might have a better moral effect upon the person discharged.
6475. Would you allow of any appeal being made to the manager? No; I think that the manager is merely the official through whom things should pass.
6476. Would you allow the lady superintendent to communicate with the Board? Through the manager.
6477. In fact, she would be, relatively to the manager, a subordinate officer of the institution? Undoubtedly.
6478. Under co-ordinate jurisdiction? Yes.
6479. Mr. Gould.] Is that the system in the hospitals you have visited? I have found a great variety of systems.
6480. You spoke of the resident governor of the London Hospital—he would, I presume, occupy a similar position to the one which you have described? Quite so, only higher. In the London Hospital they have 630 beds, worked at high pressure, and the manager has been made a director—a resident director—having proved himself, by long service, to be a superior man. He is immeasurably over the nursing department—they approach him with the greatest respect, and will not trouble him about any trifles. The nursing staff, however, does not aim at so high a position in this hospital as the Nightingale system; it is good nevertheless, practical, unostentatious, and hardworking.
6481. Mr. Couper.] Is he a medical man? No.
6482. President.] What salary does he get? £500 a year, and £200 in lieu of washing and board; £700 a year altogether.
6483. And residence? Yes, and residence besides.
6484. Mr. Ellis.] Do you prefer male or female nurses in a hospital? Undoubtedly I prefer females.
6485. Even for the male wards? Yes, for the male wards; but that necessitates the employment of a certain number of male porters for carrying heavy weights, and carrying patients, &c.
6486. I suppose that you would have men in the male lock wards? It is immaterial.
6487. Do you not think that a little decency might make it desirable to have male attendants in the male lock wards? When I say that it is immaterial, I mean that I have found male lock wards, nursed by women, working very well.

- A. Roberts, Esq.
9 June, 1873.
6488. Can you mention in what hospital you saw that? Yes, at Guy's, and I know that I have met with it elsewhere.
6489. You have found women nursing in the male lock wards? Yes, I think that upon the whole I should desire them.
6490. Are you familiar with the present nursing system of the Sydney Infirmary? Yes, I was familiar with it for a very long time. I was instrumental in getting the nurses out here, and I corresponded with Miss Nightingale on the subject.
6491. Are you satisfied with them now? I think there has been an immense improvement in the nursing.
6493. Are you satisfied with the nursing as it is now carried on in the Infirmary? I have put together here a few general ideas upon nursing, which I will read.
6494. My question has reference rather to the personnel of the present nursing staff than to anything else? May I give you this first—what I have put down here. I have endeavoured to examine the practical nursing department of every hospital I have visited, and I have also enjoyed the advantage of discussing the subject with Miss Nightingale, Mr. Bonham Carter, and Mrs. Wardropper, the matron of St. Thomas's Hospital, as well as numerous ladies superintending the nursing of some of the largest continental hospitals. Some of the conclusions at which I have arrived are as follows:—"The leading features of a good nursing staff are strict obedience, not only to the letter but to the spirit of all directions given by the physicians and surgeons, adopting the principle that effective nursing is an important part of medical treatment. The predominant feeling of a good nurse should be an eager desire for the recovery of her patients, by means of the treatment prescribed. This principle should eminently influence the lady superintendent, who should also possess an orderly and methodical character of mind, an instinctive love of cleanliness, with a conciliating and tranquil manner. It is an advantage, but not an essential, that she should be conversant with the leading features of human anatomy, that she may be competent to explain certain points to the sisters and nurses. It is essential that she should be a good practical nurse,—not only that she may be quick to detect errors, but apt also and ready to show how they are to be remedied. There is probably nothing more incompatible with the quiet efficiency so characteristic of good nursing than an instinctive grasping for power on the part of a lady superintendent, who should be content with the full development of her special and womanly duties. These offer a field for doing good the extent of which is known only by those who devote themselves to it with steady zeal and singleness of purpose. Upon the other hand, full confidence should be placed in her, and she should be left to manage her department without unnecessary interference. Every member of a nursing staff should be prepared, if necessary, to perform extra duty at an emergency, but as a general rule they require and should have ample rest and recreation. The characteristics of a well nursed hospital are,—a perfect cleanliness in every part, crevice, corner, and cupboard; the contentment and cheerfulness of the patients, and their confidence in the medical officers and nurses, the absence of hospital diseases and bed-sores, the tidiness of the wards and offices, and the contentment and happiness of the nurses. The attainment of all these points is, I know, often achieved, but I believe only so when the lady superintendent possesses a considerable amount of tact and management, with a cheerful and firm confidence in the above-mentioned guiding principles, and a calm, conciliating, womanly disposition. It is almost unnecessary to add that nursing should be conducted upon the broadest spirit of charity, and should know of no difference in the religious views of patients. The object of medical treatment, of which nursing is a part, is to save human life and relieve human suffering." That partly answers the question perhaps.
6495. I will now repeat my question, and ask whether you are satisfied with the present nursing staff of the Sydney Infirmary? I think that the present nursing has done a very great deal of good, but I think there has been some inconvenience occasioned from the collisions between the two officers,—the manager and the lady superintendent; and from the Board not understanding the exact relative positions which it is desirable that they should occupy.
6496. Mr. Metcalfe.] You mean the manager and the lady superintendent? Yes.
6497. Mr. Ellis.] Do you consider that the lady superintendent is competent to perform the duties which she has undertaken? I do; though I doubt if her character of mind is quite suited to the calling.
6498. Is she competent to teach those under her—to train nurses, in fact? As to her personal qualifications as a practical nurse I know nothing; but the lady superintendent is a very clever, active-minded person, well conversant with the duties of a lady superintendent, and most anxious to do her duty—of that I feel sure.
6499. President.] If it has been represented to us that she takes no interest in the institution and does not apply herself to her duties, and that she is so habitually away from the place that her absences amount to gross neglect;—is that a correct representation? I should say that it certainly is not.
6500. Mr. Ellis.] There is considerable difference of opinion amongst some of the gentlemen who have favoured us with their evidence. One medical gentleman states that his reason for considering Miss Osburn incompetent was that she brought out incompetent nurses with her? Indeed.
6501. President.] Do you know whether Miss Osburn had anything to do with the choice of those nurses who came out with her? I think I should not gather any such conclusion from that evidence. The general selection was I believe not in Miss Osburn's hands, or the final decision; but she was allowed a voice, no doubt—that was all, I believe. In the main, the sisters were selected for Miss Osburn.
6502. Were you connected with the Infirmary at the time that the term "sister" was changed to that of "head nurse"? I had just left.
6503. These ladies tell us that they find that the title "head nurse" does not give them so much authority in the wards as that of "sister," and that the tendency now is to call them simply "nurses," and to put them on the same footing with the nurses under them;—do you think that the change of name was a desirable one? I think not. I do not care about a name, but I think that it is desirable to call the head nurse of the ward "sister." The sisters are intended on the whole to be a better class of persons, and if you call them nurses they get confused with the ordinary nurses, who besides being an inferior grade may also have been there but a very short time; and in the next place, the patients themselves attach a degree of importance to the title. It is most desirable that a hospital ward should be absolutely quiet, and that can only be attained by the general discipline of the ward being maintained by moral tone. That can only be done done where the lady of the house, as it were, receives officially the respect due to her position; and I believe a proper "title" to be an important feature of this respect.

6504. Mr. Goold.] But do you think that any real practical good arises from the use of the title "sister"? Yes, all the good I have spoken of is practical good.

6505. Do you not think that there is a good deal of sentimentalism about the use of the name? Not the slightest.

6506. Do you think that the name indicates the duties which they have to perform? It indicates the position. If it does not give the position, it indicates it. If you will tell me of any other term that can be suggested better I will take it, but I object to the term "nurse," because you cannot call one "upper nurse" and the other "under nurse."

6507. Mr. Metcalfe.] Are they called "sisters" in the hospitals in England? Oh yes.

6508. Mr. Goold.] How long has that been the practice? As long as I can recollect. At Guy's Hospital, when I was there, they were called "sisters."

6509. How long is that ago? Thirty-three years. I recollect that forty years ago there were sisters to every ward in Guy's, and at St. Thomas's too. I think that I know why the term became objected to here. I think that Miss Osburn made a mistake in taking the title of lady superior, and I strongly advised her to withdraw it. I believed that she meant nothing by it, and that she was quite disposed to nurse her patients in a broad spirit of charity; but I think that she had fallen into the idea that, in establishing in these Colonies a nursing system of which Sydney was to be the head quarters, she ought to be the lady superior. I told her I thought it would prove a mistake, and so it did. If it had not been for her innocent assumption of the title of lady superior, we should never have had any trouble about the matter.

6510. Mr. Ellis.] What title do you approve of? Lady superintendent or matron—I do not think it matters which. Mrs. Wardropper is matron of the whole of the Nightingale training school, and she is called the "matron." She is the lady superintendent who is most looked up to in England, and Miss Osburn here used to refer to her for advice.

6511. Was it this lady who selected the nurses which Miss Osburn brought out? Yes. The Chief Secretary sent Home to Miss Nightingale stating that we wanted a head and five sisters to train nurses out here. Miss Nightingale referred my minute to Mrs. Wardropper.

6512. Mr. Goold.] Are you aware whether Miss Osburn is a member of the religious house that is spoken of in Miss Nightingale's memo.—"the sisterhood of St. John's House"—a Protestant religious house? I have reason to believe that she was not when she left England. Whether she has since become a member or not I cannot say.

6513. You said that you could not from your own knowledge say whether Miss Osburn had any practical knowledge of nursing? No, I could not say.

6514. Do you think her capable of instructing nurses? Yes, I do.

6515. Has she given instruction to any since she has been here—has she trained any nurses? She has had a very large number trained under her; but it is not the duty of the lady superintendent to do the nurse-training, so to speak.

6516. I think in the notes which you read to us you said that a lady superintendent should be a practical nurse? Yes. I said it was essential that she should be a good practical nurse, not only quick to detect errors but able to show how they are to be remedied. I do not think that it is the duty of the lady superintendent to be teaching the nurses, but I think that it is decidedly her duty, when she is going through the wards, if she sees anything wrong, and the sister is not there, to call up the nurse and show her what is wrong, and tell her in what way to remedy it, just as the mistress of a house would tell her servant how to remedy anything that was wrong.

6517. But in order to do that she must have the practical knowledge herself? Undoubtedly.

6518. The point I wanted to ascertain was as to whether she was competent to instruct and had a knowledge of nursing? Yes, I know Miss Nightingale considered her competent.

6519. Mr. Metcalfe.] One medical gentleman said that Miss Osburn was incompetent—that she could not use a certain instrument—could not use a speculum, or apply leeches to the neck of the womb? I feel confident that Miss Osburn can do it. She is too intelligent not to be able to do that.

6520. Suppose a nurse was instructed to do this kind of work and she could not do it, would she not apply to Miss Osburn? No, to the sister of the ward. Miss Osburn is the lady superintendent. The sister is the head of the ward, and the most experienced person there, and she would have to show the nurse how to do a thing if the nurse did not know how to do it, and make her do a thing if she failed to do it from carelessness.

6521. But supposing the sister cannot do it? No ward has any right to possess a sister who cannot.

6522. Mr. Goold.] Who is supposed to instruct a lady who goes in to be trained? It is very clear. The lady superintendent ascertains if she is a suitable person to be taken in as a sister probationer.

6523. Will you explain that? Ascertains whether she is sufficiently educated, and whether she has such a taste for nursing as will enable her to remain satisfied with that occupation, and whether she is healthy and strong, and has good spirits and disposition. Her next duty would be to take her in; and I fancy that Miss Osburn's system is to let her go for a day or two into the linen room, so that she may get accustomed to the place. Then she would probably be sent to one of the wards under the charge of a sister, to learn her duties. She would not be trusted to do anything for the first week, but would go about with the nurse until she got accustomed to the mode of handling patients and the mode of making up a bed, and so on. The sister would instruct her in the details of the work; and though a sister, and treated as a sister, out of the wards, she would rank only as nurse in doing the work of the ward.

6524. Then the sister would instruct? Yes.

6525. Then supposing all the sisters were to leave, who would instruct then? There could not be such a state of things. They could not be without sisters.

6526. You misunderstand me. Supposing all the sisters were to leave, and new ones were to go in, who would then instruct—that is the point? The senior nurses would be selected to take charge of the wards, and they would be given the temporary status of sisters, and the probationers would be put under them. Some of the experienced nurses are quite as capable of teaching the duties of a nurse as are the sisters. There are some sisters there who are not so good as some of the experienced nurses; but then they are placed in the position of sisters, and supposed to possess the necessary tact and education for organizing the discipline of a ward.

6527. What I want to know is whether Miss Osburn is competent to instruct? Pardon me; I thought your question was—"Who would instruct?"

6528.

- A. Roberts, Esq.
9 June, 1873.
6528. Yes, but my first question was to ascertain whether Miss Osburn was competent to instruct? I can only give you Miss Nightingale's reply to that, which is that Miss Osburn is full of energy, clever as a nurse, and has worked for at least twelve months as a nurse in large wards. I have no doubt Miss Osburn has excellent reasons for not doing any nursing. I have never seen her do any. She has considered it her duty to work the staff, and so I cannot speak of her practical knowledge of nursing from anything that I have seen. I have never seen her dress a wound, and I have never had her to assist me in doing it.
6529. Mr. Ellis.] You do not consider it part of her duty to do that? I do not; although I should very decidedly consider it part of her duty to do it if there were no sister in the ward, and anything was going wrong.
6530. President.] If I understand you properly, the probationer sisters may come to be sisters over the very nurses who have taught them? Undoubtedly.
6531. Then it is nothing against Miss Osburn to say that one of the sisters who came out from England actually taught Miss Osburn as a probationer? Not at all.
6532. Then, in point of fact the system as it exists in England is this—that persons of superior intelligence and education are chosen from the first to be sisters, and they do not commence first as nurses and get promoted afterwards to be sisters? That is the Nightingale system. There are various systems. It would only confuse you to take you into the multitude of systems. At St. Thomas's Hospital all the sisters reside in their wards—in rooms like those provided here in the south wing.
6533. Mr. Goold.] Is it true that as a rule the Nightingale system has failed in England? Certainly not. It has been upon the whole a success. You will find medical men in London and in the country who will object to it, and that has arisen from the fact that there are some lady superintendents who have taken too much upon themselves; instead of considering themselves the head of the nursing staff entirely, they have been a little bitten with the advance of woman's education, &c. I think too it is partly owing to another reason. The position of lady superintendent has generally been filled up from extremely active-minded ladies, who are rather apt to tread upon the toes of the medical men and grasp for power. I am satisfied that the system is not to be blamed for these things, and it is not the case with the nursing conducted under the Nightingale fund. I was particularly charmed with the way in which the nurses spoke of their patients, with regard to the treatment, and the success of the treatment. A nurse should be anxious for the patient's recovery by means of the treatment, and unless they carry it out in singleness of purpose and with zeal they do not get on so comfortably; and at Saint Thomas's that system is carried out completely. The Nightingale fund has many more applications for nurses than they can supply. They are constantly receiving applications to nurse additional institutions, and that must be taken as a proof of the success of the system.
6534. President.] You approve of the Nightingale system? I do, when faithfully carried out.
6535. Do you know of any better system in force in England? I do not. I know of similar institutions working very harmoniously and nicely, and I cannot give you a better instance of the spirit which should pervade a well nursed hospital than to mention what I saw at the Samaritan Free Hospital. There is a matron there, an intelligent nice person, a sort of superior housekeeper, possessing the greatest enthusiasm in her hospital, and running about in the morning performing the active duties of the place. The sisters are all very fond of her. I spent an hour or two in conversation with her. I knew that Mr. Wells' cases got on very well, and I said to her—"You have no house surgeon resident on the premises; how do you manage?" She said—"We manage to get on very well." I said—"What do you do, supposing anything occurs in the night?" "Well," she said, "I have to send for the nearest surgeon. If anything happens, I send one of the nurses, and call up the day nurse to take her place." "But," I said, "suppose all the nurses are engaged?" "Why then," she said, "I just trot out myself." That sort of spirit I thought was nice, and it is that which makes the thing so successful. A nurse in this hospital is given a case of ovarian tumour, and if she considers it necessary she sits up for four nights running with that patient after the operation, and she will not give up her case for an hour to another nurse on any account.
6536. Mr. Goold.] Do you know whether the Nightingale system is in force in King's College? No; I think that is nursed by St. John's.
6537. But was not St. John's under a Miss Jones? It is nursed by nurses wearing a costume like those of St. John's; and the University College Hospital is nursed by a High Church nursing establishment, which also sends nurses about a good deal nursing the poor.
6538. Mr. Cowper.] Do I understand you to say that you have not heard of any instance in which Miss Nightingale's system of nursing has turned out a failure? I think not.
6539. Or anything approaching it? I have heard differences of opinion expressed about great varieties of nursing. For instance, at Guy's it is natural enough that they should be wedded to their own system, and do not think so well of others, &c. I do not take any notice of such remarks; and I know of no instance in which the Nightingale system has turned out a failure. I am sure that it is making way to the utmost of its capabilities.
6540. Mr. Metcalfe.] In how many hospitals in London does the Nightingale system prevail? I do not think that the system pure and simple prevails in any hospital but St. Thomas's; but there are similar systems in many.
6541. President.] But the system of there being two grades of nurses, and a lady superintendent or matron at their head—that prevails? Yes, that prevails more or less in all hospitals. The Nightingale system has done a great deal to improve and methodize the system of nursing, and most of the nursing is carried on upon a mode similar to the Nightingale system itself. One Board of directors will not have uniforms, and another will, and so on; even in the workhouse asylums now, they get nurses from the Nightingale fund. They were lately requested to undertake and did undertake to nurse one of the large new hospitals for the reception of the sick of a large union district.
6542. Then the adoption of the system is on the increase? Yes.
6543. Mr. Goold.] In the instructions which Miss Nightingale has given we find this:—"Neither the medical officer nor any other male head should ever have power to punish for disobedience. His duty should end with reporting the case to the female head who, as already stated, is responsible to the governing authority of the hospital?" That is very much what I recommended, you see.
6544. Pardon me, it is just the opposite of what you recommended? It is what I meant to say.
6545. You said that the lady superintendent should be under the manager? Not subordinate. I said that the manager should represent the Board in the institution, and that all official communications should be made through him; but that the lady superintendent should be supreme in her own department, and if she she desired to discharge a sister or a nurse she should report that to the Board, through the manager—(because I do not recommend an honorary secretary)—she would report that through the manager, and the Board would, as I think, take their officer's suggestion and discharge that nurse or sister.

6546. Mr. Cowper.] Would communications be addressed to the Board or to the manager? To the manager.

6547. President.] Do you approve of the members of the Board interfering between the lady superintendent and her nurses? Surely in such case the Board would give instructions that such members should not be admitted to the wards again. I think that if such things are allowed it is utterly impossible for any institution to go on in an orderly way.

6548. Is it not subversive of discipline for a person to go into the wards and scold the sisters? Both theoretically and practically it is.

6549. Have you seen it? I have seen it in the Infirmary, and I have seen the results.

6550. You said that the directors did not seem to understand the position that they should hold with respect to the lady superintendent? I intended to say they did not understand the relative positions of the officers.

6551. Mr. Goold.] You stated as one of the causes of the unpleasant state of things in the Infirmary that the directors did not understand the relative positions of the two officers? It is one of the great drawbacks of so large a number of directors, that gentlemen who have never been on the Board of a hospital before, where so much special knowledge is required, must be there some time to understand the position of the manager and the lady superintendent, and so on. Since I saw you last I have met one of the most intelligent of the recent medical officers, and I said to him yesterday—"How many incurable and confirmed chronic cases do you think there are on an average in the wards of the Infirmary? I gave fifty as a low estimate." He said—"That is very low. It is nearer eighty." Then upon that I have made a calculation. Probable number of cases unfit to be retained in the hospital (say) fifty (he says eighty); the annual cost is £50 per bed per annum—the total annual cost £2,500. The actual cost of keeping these people at Liverpool would be £13 per bed annually, or an annual total of £650. The total cost of building wards at Liverpool for the accommodation of these cases, if additional accommodation were required, would be £50 a bed, say £2,500; and the total cost of building wards for these cases as part of a general hospital would be £200 each bed, or a total of £10,000. I should strongly recommend the classification of cases. It would be desirable to retain this hospital for acute cases, and have a hospital (say) at Homebush, for chronic cases; that hospital could be supported easily at from £20 to £25 a bed per annum.

6552. Mr. Goold.] Would that be in addition to the Prince Alfred Hospital? Yes; but that would be relieving Liverpool a good deal; and there you have the same system of a hospital and a benevolent asylum mixed, and there the inmates cost less than £12 a bed per annum.

6553. President.] Allusion has been made to some observations of Miss Nightingale's with reference to hospital management;—do you approve of this:—"The matron or nursing superintendent must be held responsible for her own efficiency, and the efficiency of all her nurses and servants. As regards the medical officers, she must be responsible that their orders about the treatment of the sick are strictly carried out. To the governing body of the hospital she shall be held responsible for the conduct, discipline, and duties of her nurses, for the discipline of her sick wards, for their cleanliness, for the care and cleanliness of sick, for proper ventilation and warming of wards, for the administration of diets and medicines, of enemata, &c., the performance of minor dressings, and the like, for the care of linen and bedding, &c., and probably of patients' clothing. The duties which each grade has to perform should be laid down by regulation, and all that the medical department or the governing body of the hospital has a right to require is that the regulation duties shall be faithfully performed. Any remissness or neglect of duty is a breach of discipline, as well as drunkenness or other bad conduct, and can only be dealt with to any good purpose by report to the Superintendent of Nurses of the Infirmary. I may perhaps again point out that the superintendent should herself be responsible to the constituted hospital authorities, and that all her nurses and servants should, in the performance of these duties, be responsible to the superintendent only. No good ever comes of the constituted authorities placing themselves in the office which they have sanctioned her occupying. No good ever comes of any one interfering between the head of the nursing establishment and her nurses; it is fatal to discipline. All complaints on any subject should be made directly to the superintendent, and not to any nurse or servant. She should be made responsible, too, for her results and not for her methods. Of course, if she does not exercise the authority entrusted to her with judgment and discretion, it is then the legitimate province of the governing body to interfere and to remove her. It is necessary to dwell strongly on this point, because there has been not unfrequently a disposition shown to make the nursing establishment responsible on the side of discipline to the medical officer, or the governor of a hospital. Any attempt to introduce such a system would be merely to try anew and fail anew in an attempt which has frequently been made. In disciplinary matters a woman only can understand a woman. It is the duty of the medical officer to give what orders, in regard to the sick, he thinks fit to the nurses; and it is unquestionably the duty of the nurses to obey or to see his orders carried out. Simplicity of rules, placing the nurses in all matters regarding management of sick absolutely under the orders of the medical men, and in all disciplinary matters absolutely under the female superintendent (matron), to whom the medical officers should report all cases of neglect, is very important. At the outset there must be a clear and recorded definition of the limits of these two classes of jurisdiction?" That seems to me to give the nursing staff the entire control of the patients—the last few lines.

6554. No, I do not think so. "Simplicity of rules, placing the nurses in all matters regarding management of sick absolutely under the orders of the medical men, and in all disciplinary matters absolutely under the female superintendent, to whom the medical officers should report all cases of neglect, is very important."—Do you agree in these general principles? Yes.

6555. Mr. Cowper.] We have been informed by a person taking a prominent part in the management of the Infirmary, that when a person applies for the position of nurse, Miss Osburn should summon her nursing staff and say—"Examine this woman, and see if she is up to her business." I wish to learn if this is possible—whether it is possible to know whether an applicant is fit for the position until she has had some weeks' experience? It is impossible. The most that could be done at a first interview by the most intelligent lady superintendent would be to use her experience and common sense to ascertain if the applicant was fairly suitable for her; and then the applicant might come on trial for a few days to learn the ways of the place, and then they might be sent into the wards to learn their duties. But I imagine that the lady superintendent sometimes hardly sends a person into the wards, or perhaps she just sends them.

- them into the wards and then finds out that they will not do. I have heard of ladies going to Miss Osburn, and I have said perhaps of one of them, "I am sure she will not do"; and Miss Osburn has said, "I know she won't, but she is anxious to have a try to be a nurse." That is not to be objected to; and if the person can succeed, well and good. It would be utterly impossible to hand these applicants over to subordinates.
6556. It would be impossible for the nursing staff to say whether an applicant was up to her business or not? Certainly. You can only tell whether she is likely to be able to learn; you cannot tell more than that.
6557. Mr. Ellis.] In answer to a question put by Mr. Goold, the same gentleman said he would have all the medical officers examine every applicant: "One might be biased, two might be biased, but with the whole lot it would be impossible." Would that be desirable? No.
6558. President.] Is it not absurd? Yes.
6559. Mr. Cowper.] What is your opinion of the Flagstaff Hill, and the site at Pyrmont, as sites for hospitals? I think that they are both good. I turned my attention to both, for they were two sites I thought of for the Prince Alfred Hospital.
6560. President.] Supposing that the present hospital is not pulled down, is it not absolutely desirable that these wards should in turn be cleared out from time to time? Yes; I think that the main object of a hospital—that of curing the largest number of sick people—would be best attained in that way.
6561. And that all clamour made as to refusing people on this ground should be resisted steadily in order to get that done? No doubt; and if you wish the hospital to take a position among other hospitals you must limit the number of beds. First ascertain what each ward should contain, and limit the number of beds to that; and there must be no outcry about this poor patient and that poor patient. I must add to that, that I would always have two or three beds vacant to admit urgent cases, and I would consider the hospital full with at least two beds vacant to take in urgent cases.
6562. I understand you to say that the present Infirmary is overcrowded? I do not know how it is now. After a very long struggle, we succeeded in establishing a fixed number of beds in each ward, and we hung up in the Board-room the number of beds that each ward was to carry, and the cubic feet of space.
6563. Mr. Cowper.] Do you not think that it would be a good arrangement for the Government to send patients who cannot be admitted into the Infirmary to St. Vincent's Hospital? I think it would be better, as the Government has to find the money, to draft off the chronic cases to Liverpool, where they can be maintained so much cheaper. I do not see why cases should be kept in the Infirmary at £50 which could be kept in the Liverpool Asylum at less than £13.
6564. President.] It appears that some of these Asylums decline to take these people in unless they are broken down by old age; but suppose a man is absolutely broken down from disease, is it not the duty of the Government to take care of him in one of the Asylums as well as if he were very old? Yes, undoubtedly.

Mrs. Eliza Blundell called in and examined:—

- Mrs. E. Blundell.
11 June, 1873.
6565. President.] I believe you are the matron of the Benevolent Asylum? Yes.
6566. You were at one time in this Institution? Yes.
6568. And when you were here you were one of the sisters who originally came out from England with Miss Osburn? Yes.
6569. This Commission has been appointed to inquire into the Public Charities of the Colony, such as the Randwick Asylum, the Infirmary, the Benevolent Asylum, and others, and we understand that you have some evidence to give to us respecting the Sydney Infirmary? I have none. I do not know anything about the Infirmary now. I have not been here for two years and a half at least.
6570. Then, about the present state of the Infirmary you know nothing? I know nothing about it. I have not spent one half-hour in the house since I left it. I have only called in here to see a sick person.
6571. Is there anything that you wish to state or that you think we should know with reference to the state of the Infirmary when you were here? Not particularly. I do not know that I can state anything.
6572. Anything that may tend to the better management of the institution, or things of that sort? I do not think the place was very well managed when I was a sister here. It might have been better managed. That is my opinion, if you ask for my opinion. It was very differently managed from our own hospital at Home, where we came from.
6573. Which hospital was that? St. Thomas's.
6574. What was your reason for leaving the Infirmary? I had no particular reason for leaving. I did not wish to leave, but I received a letter of dismissal from the Colonial Secretary, saying that my services were no longer required. I received one letter, and then again I received a second. I did not leave of my own accord. I was summoned before a sub-committee, of which Mr. Alfred Roberts, the Rev. Canon Stephen, and Mr. Manning were members, and they asked the sisters whether they would like to remain in the Infirmary or go home to England, or whether they thought of doing anything for themselves in the Colony. I said that I had no objection to remaining, but that I would like to be treated differently than I had been; and after that I received a letter saying that my services would be no longer required, and of course at the expiration of my time I left.
6575. Mr. Cowper.] Was that not a circular letter sent to the lady superintendent and to the other sisters as well as to you? I think it was.
6576. Mr. Wearne.] How long were you engaged for? For three years, including the time spent on the voyage out here.

6577. President.] In what respects did it appear to you that the place was mismanaged? We had such frequent changes, Mr. Windeyer, changes of wards, and changes of patients and so on, so that at times it was impossible to attend to them properly.

Mrs. E.
Blundell.

11 June, 1873.

6578. How often were the nurses changed from one ward to another? Once in three months, and even oftener. I have been changed, and my nurses under me, more frequently even than that; and I was responsible for them—responsible for their nursing to the lady superintendent.

6579. To carry out the training of a nursing and training staff, is it not necessary for the nurses to be changed from time to time? The probationers should be, but not the nurses.

6580. Do you know what the practice in the Infirmary is at present? No, I do not know anything about it at present.

6581. Mr. Gould.] I understand you to say that the nurses were moved frequently—more frequently than was desirable, from ward to ward? Yes, much more so.

6582. Mr. Cupper.] What do you call more frequently than was desirable; how often? Once in three months—once in six weeks; they were only in a ward three days occasionally.

6583. President.] The whole of them? Not the whole—I cannot say the whole.

6584. How often did it happen that they were moved once in three days? That has occurred several times.

6585. How many times? Three or four times.

6586. Under what circumstances? I cannot tell, any more than that it was the will or caprice of the lady superintendent.

6587. Do you think it was done capriciously by her? I think so, on one or two occasions.

6588. Can you give us any instances of that? I cannot remember exactly, but it has been done, and very serious consequences have arisen from it. Perhaps I may have felt grieved about it at the time.

6589. Is there anything else you wish to mention? No, nothing else. Any questions asked me I can answer, but I have nothing further to say.

6590. You were speaking of the mismanagement just now;—have you nothing more to say about that? At the time when I was here there was a good deal of mismanagement. We were short of linen and blankets, and so on—terribly so at times.

6591. What sort of linen? Bedding, and clothing, and bandages.

6592. In what state was the hospital when you came here in respect to these matters,—was it clean? It was not clean; there were a good many bugs about, and the patients were rather verminous when I came here—not quite so bad as I expected from the accounts we had of them in England, but still they were quite bad enough.

6593. Where were they—in the walls? In the bedsteads.

6594. Did you see where they came from? I never observed many in the walls.

6595. Is there nothing else you wish to mention? About the hospital?

6596. Generally? No, I think not.

6597. Mr. Wearne.] You arrived here with Miss Osburn? Yes.

6598. How many sisters came out with you? There were five sisters and Miss Osburn—six altogether.

6599. You remained here until December, 1870? Yes.

6600. Was that the end of your engagement? Yes, the 2nd December, 1870.

6601. Were the whole of you five sisters instructed at Home;—had you undergone an examination there? What kind of an examination?

6602. To fit you for the positions you came here to occupy? Oh yes.

6603. Perhaps you will explain to the Commission what examination you had to pass to fit you for the position which you came to occupy—what was the examination? It was in this way: we went to St. Thomas's to be trained before coming here. Well, there are sisters in the wards there the same as there are here, and they keep a book in which they note down all we do; they give us (say) "good," "bad," "indifferent,"—all the various marks for the various duties which we are called on to perform. Well, the sister's book goes to the matron, who holds the same position as the lady superintendent, and then it goes to the Nightingale Committee, who pay for our training. At the end of twelve months the medical superintendent, the first resident physician who has charge of the hospital, gives us a number of questions to answer, and if they are not satisfactorily answered we have to answer them again; and he also examines us verbally, and asks us questions about nursing; and he instructs us. We are told that we can at all times ask him any questions when he is passing through the ward.

6604. Miss Osburn was with you in St. Thomas's Hospital? Yes; she was a probationer in St. Thomas's.

6605. You all occupied the same position? Yes, although it was understood that Miss Osburn was coming here, and that we were to look up to her.

6606. You were all probationers? Yes, all trained at the expense of the Nightingale Committee, and under the surveillance of the people who were appointed by the Nightingale Committee.

6607. You all passed the same examination? Yes.

6608. Mr. Ellis.] Did you all pass at the same time? No.

6609. Mr. Wearne.] Did you pass before Miss Osburn passed, or afterwards? Some time before; I had answered my questions nearly twelve months before her; Sister Mary passed many years before her; Sister Annie nearly the same time as Miss Osburn; and Sister Haldane and Sister Bessie about the same time as I did.

6610. After you went there, how long was Miss Osburn in St. Thomas's? About twelve months.

6611. And Sister Mary—was she there? She went to Netley Hospital under Mrs. Shaw Stewart, and was there for many years, and for some reason she left Netley and came back to St. Thomas's again. She was an old nurse there when I first went there.

6612. She came from St. Thomas's out here? Yes, we all came from there.

6613. President.] What were you in St. Thomas's? I was a ward nurse.

6614. Was Miss Osburn a probationer? She had been doing sister's duty; I had done that too, but only ranked as a ward nurse.

6615. Who engaged you to come out here? The engagement was made through Mr. Henry Bonham Carter, the secretary to the Nightingale Committee.

6616. And you engaged for three years? Yes.

6617. At what salary? £50 the first year, £60 the second, and £70 the third, and to have £70 if we renewed the engagement.

6618. But if you left at the end of the three years? If we left, and desired to go Home, the Government were

- Mrs. E. Blundell.
- 11 June, 1873.
- were to give us half the passage money; and if we decided to remain in the Colony and take other engagements, we did so on our own account.
6619. Did all the sisters remain here for the three years? No; one left to marry.
6620. And the others received a circular letter, wishing to know whether they would remain any longer in the Infirmary or not? No, we received no letter from the Colonial Secretary asking us whether we wished to remain any longer or not, but the sub-committee asked us that.
6621. Was this not a circular sent to all the sisters and to Miss Osburn? I do not know. It came to me through Miss Osburn.
6622. And then three of the sisters left? Yes, and one had left previously.
6623. Did not each of you receive this letter? I cannot say whether Sister Mary did; I know that the other two did.
6624. And then you were called in before the sub-committee, and asked whether you wished to remain or not? No, before that.
6625. What was the nature of this letter that you received from the Colonial Secretary? Shall I give it to you?—I have it with me. There are two letters. It seems that Sister Haldane had resigned, and she considered that she had no right to receive a letter of dismissal; and Mr. M. H. Stephen, who saw the letters, considered that they were discourteously worded, and that we deserved something more polite, and so on; and so we received a second letter from the Colonial Secretary's Office. They are both to the same purpose. This one is dated 2nd December, 1870. "In accordance with the terms of the agreement subsisting between the Government and yourself as nurse in the Sydney Infirmary, I am directed to inform you that it is not intended to renew that agreement on its termination three months from this date." That is the first letter. This is the second.
6626. Are they both dated the same? Yes; 2nd December, 1870. "In accordance with the terms of the agreement subsisting between the Government and yourself, I am directed to inform you that your services as nurse in the Sydney Infirmary will be dispensed with from this date." That is dated 2nd December, 6627. Mr. Couper.] What was the name that you went by in the Infirmary? I was called Sister Eliza.
6628. Mr. Wearne.] Were you all brought in before this sub-committee together? No, separately.
6629. And what questions were put to you—what was the substance of them—what did the sub-committee wish to know from you? Mr. Stephen asked me what I intended doing—whether I wished to remain on as a sister or head nurse—whether I wished to return to England, or whether I wished to do something for myself in the Colony. I said that I wished to remain on, but wished to be more kindly treated than I had been.
6630. What answer did Mr. Stephen make to that? He said that he thought I was mistaken—that I had mistaken kindness for something different. With that I left the room. I would not stop to have any more conversation after that.
6631. And after that you received the letter from the Colonial Secretary's Office? Yes.
6632. How long after? I cannot be quite sure as to the date.
6633. About how long: was it more than a month after? Yes, more than a month or six weeks after.
6634. At any rate, it was not received a few days after? No.
6635. And the other sisters,—were they all brought in before the sub-committee? Yes.
6636. And did all three of them receive the same letter? Sister Annie did, and Sister Haldane and myself.
6637. Did you remain for three months after seeing the committee? Yes, I did.
6638. And after receiving this notice of the 2nd December? Yes, I did.
6639. Whilst you were here how were the probationers admitted—who admitted them? Well, I think that they applied to Miss Osburn, and she chose them—she selected them.
6640. And when they were admitted, whose charge were they placed under? The sisters'.
6641. How many wards had each sister to look after? Three generally; sometimes two, and sometimes three; generally three.
6642. And would there be nurses and probationers under the sisters? Yes.
6643. How many for each ward? When we first came, there was a nurse for each ward, and also a probationer, to be trained under the nurse.
6644. And after you were here for some time? Then matters were a little different. I have had sometimes a probationer for a nurse, and sometimes the nurse was without a probationer, so that we did not go on quite as well as we began.
6645. Whose duty is it to train the probationers? The sisters'.
6646. The sisters? Of course the probationers had to assist in doing the work, but I considered it was my duty, because we came out to do that. We had also to teach the nurses at first, for they did not know much. They were like the probationers, though, having been here some time, they were considered as the nursing staff.
6647. What were Miss Osburn's duties whilst you were here? She superintended the house, and she also gave lectures to the nurses on anatomy and physiology.
6648. She did give them lectures? Yes.
6649. To all the probationers did she give them? Yes, in a class, once or twice a week.
6650. But the sisters had to instruct the probationers in the practical details of nursing? Yes.
6651. Did Miss Osburn ever interfere with the sisters in the details of their management? Yes, I think she did, too much.
6652. How? She did not like the probationers to be too hardly trained.
6653. She would interfere with your management of the probationers—your system of training them? Yes.
6654. You said just now that the sisters were moved from ward to ward? Yes.
6655. And you think that Miss Osburn in that way interfered with you more than she should have done? I think so. We would not have the same nurses, or the same patients, or the same doctors.
6656. In St. Thomas's Hospital were the sisters moved in this way? The sisters were never changed when I was there—never; as a rule they were not. Of course, sometimes, in a case of emergency, sisters were changed, but not otherwise.
6657. A witness we have had has complained that Miss Osburn never does anything to any of the patients—that she never handles them—Do you think it is her duty to do so? No, I do not think it is the duty of the lady superintendent to handle patients.

Mrs. E.
Blundell.
11 June, 1873.

6658. So that is not her duty? That is not her duty.
6659. Then the lady superintendent should superintend the sisters, and the sisters should have the probationers under control? Yes.
6660. And was this system of instruction continued on here in the Infirmary? Yes.
6661. You had probationers under you? Yes, I had. I continued as I began.
6662. And Sister Anne, and Sister Bessie, and Sister Haldane, had probationers under them? Yes.
6663. All the same? Yes.
6664. So that the sisters had the entire control of the details of the nursing and the instruction? Yes.
6665. Did Miss Osburn continue to lecture them? Yes.
6666. Did you ever know of any instances in which a probationer was put as a nurse before she was competent to be a nurse, or was removed by the lady superintendent? Yes, that was frequently done.
6667. And you felt that you had to complain of that? Yes, the sisters had to complain of it.
6668. There was partiality shown, in fact? Yes.
6669. President.] Does it follow that, because a nurse was changed, there was partiality shown? No, I cannot say that; but at the same time, if a probationer was not up to her work, it would not be desirable to make a nurse of her, and give her a nurse's responsibility and a nurse's pay.
6670. Mr. Wearne.] You should know best whether a probationer is competent to be a nurse? Yes, I think so. The sisters were always consulted at Home; and this book, which they sent in once a month, told you what the probationers were worth.
6671. Did you keep a book of that kind here? No, we were not asked to do so.
6672. You think that the sisters should keep a book? Yes, it keeps the probationers up to their work.
6673. At what age were the probationers admitted at Home? From twenty-five to thirty.
6674. President.] What age were you when you were admitted? I was under twenty-five.
6675. How long were you in St. Thomas's Hospital? About two years.
6676. Mr. Wearne.] What age were the probationers admitted at, here? Very young; some of them were under sixteen years of age.
6677. Do you think it is wise to admit them so young as that? No, I think it is very unwise.
6678. Why were they admitted so young as that? I cannot say.
6679. Do you think that they could not get others of the proper age? I saw plenty of applicants come here who were over twenty-five.
6680. And they were refused? Yes.
6681. President.] Did you examine any of these people yourself? No, I did not.
6682. Then you do not know what their qualifications were? No; but I thought many of them would make good nurses, by the look of them.
6683. Mr. Wearne.] Were the probationers admitted on an examination, or were they admitted simply by Miss Osburn's will? By Miss Osburn's will.
6684. At Home, at St. Thomas's Hospital, who admitted them? The lady superintendent.
6685. Did they undergo any examination? No; in my case I was recommended by Mr. Henry Bonham Carter to Mrs. Wardropper and Miss Nightingale, and the only examination which I underwent was a medical examination.
6686. But what is the usual practice? They generally apply by letter. An application is made for a probationer, by some friend, to enter St. Thomas's Hospital. Supposing there is a family of daughters, and there is some friend of theirs connected with the Nightingale Fund,—they apply for the admission of one of the girls as a probationer. If she wishes to be trained, her friend applies to Mr. Bonham Carter, or to Mrs. Wardropper, and then if the medical certificate is satisfactory she comes in for a month, and then at the end of that time, if the probationer chooses to stay, and the resident medical officer, who is the medical superintendent, approves of her, she is kept on.
6687. Then she must be approved of by these officers? Yes.
6688. President.] What officers? The resident medical officer.
6689. After a month's probation? Yes.
6690. Mr. Wearne.] Do you know of any instances in which they have been admitted under twenty-four years of age? No, not under twenty-four.
6691. President.] Do you mean to say that Miss Osburn was not under that age when she was admitted? I do not know Miss Osburn's age.
6692. Mr. Wearne.] But was there a rule to that effect, that no one should be admitted under that age? There was.
6693. How long did you serve as a probationer? Twelve months.
6694. And then you had to undergo an examination? Yes.
6695. Do the probationers here remain for twelve months before they are made nurses? Yes.
6696. Did they pass an examination? No.
6697. Did you complain that they were made nurses without passing that examination which they should pass? Yes. I think I have made a mistake. You asked if a probationer here was made a nurse before the twelve months were expired, and I thought you were speaking of St. Thomas's.
6698. I was speaking of the hospital here? Occasionally at St. Thomas's, if a woman was very sharp and clever, and there was a great want of a nurse, she was made an extra nurse, without undergoing any extra examination.
6699. How long must she be there before she becomes a head nurse? That depends on the progress she makes. She does not go under any examination.
6700. Who then will be able to say that she is fitted for the position? The sister and the medical man, and the matron or superintendent of the hospital; she is about a good deal, and she will also see whether the person is fit.
6701. Whilst you were a sister had you any difficulty with the servants of the hospital, the yardsman and the bathman? Immense difficulty.
6702. You could not get them to do things? No.
6703. President.] What did that arise from? I do not know. Sometimes they were away on business, and at other times they were away everywhere but where they should be. I had great difficulty with the house people.
6704. Mr. Wearne.] What is the practice at Home; are the servants under the control of the nurses? No; under the control of the house steward.

Mrs. E.
Blundell.

11 June, 1873.

6705. Then supposing that the same difficulties occurred there as have occurred here? I should have gone first to the house steward. I should not presume to give any man an order. I should go first to the steward's office, he would give the order, and if the order was not obeyed I would go a second time to the steward.

6706. Not to the manager, but to the steward? The steward was the house manager.

6707. What did you do here? I sometimes spoke to the lady here and sometimes to Mr. Blackstone, and I think that Mr. Blackstone tried to make them do the work, but he was rather short of hands at times.

6708. Did Mr. Blackstone ever refuse to send a man to do anything when you asked him? No, he never refused.

6709. And would you put him in the same position as the house steward of St. Thomas's? Yes, he holds the same position here.

6710. And you think that you should go to the house steward first, and not give the order directly to the man? Yes, certainly.

6711. You think that the reason why some things were not done was that they were short of men? Yes. When we first came, there was only one man to do all the bathing and attend to all the clothes of the male and female patients, and to go on messages, and to do the bathing and shaving. There was only one man to do all these things, and the dead-house man.

6712. Was not the difficulty obviated afterwards—you had more men? Not for a very long time after—in fact, never. There were wardsmen at first, but of course they were the same as the nurses. They had each a particular ward to attend to and the cleaning of the wards.

6713. You think that there should be more men? Yes, there should be. There used to be in this institution a great difficulty in getting the accidents lifted out; it had to be done by convalescent patients, who were not trained to do it, and were sometimes not sufficiently careful.

6714. Do you think we should have wardsmen in this Infirmary? I think that sisters are best to nurse, but you require men for the wards, to barber the men and to lift patients in and out; and there are many things in the male wards which women cannot do. There should be a certain number of men on duty that could be called when they were wanted. It is not a proper thing for women to shift a man with a fractured thigh, or with concussion of the spine, and it is not quite right that they should have to do it.

6715. How many men should there be on the establishment, with the sisters there as they are now, for the Infirmary to be conducted as it should be? In St. Thomas's there were always four porters to be called, when wanted, and there were no more patients there than there are in the Sydney Infirmary, because they had sold the old hospital to the Eastern Counties Railway Company, and they were obliged to reduce the number of beds, because the only place they could get as a temporary hospital was not large enough; but they did not discharge the servants.

6716. You think that it is necessary to have four men here? Yes; or say three.

6717. When you first came, there were women scrubbers to scrub the floors? Yes.

6718. You had them here for some time? Yes, there were helpers here.

6719. They were afterwards dismissed? Yes.

6720. And do you think that there should be these helpers here now and less probationers? Yes.

6721. President.] Would you get rid of the probationers then? No.

6722. But you were asked whether you should not have helpers at the expense of the probationers—have less probationers and more helpers? Yes, I would have less probationers, but I would not get rid of them altogether. You could not expect a probationer to scrub—she comes to nurse, and not to scrub.

6723. Would it not be better to have the probationers and the scrubbers as well? That depends on the funds of the institution. If they have funds, of course they can do it. If there are many probationers about the wards, the nursing should be very first-rate.

6724. Mr. Wearne.] How many of the nurses who came out from England with Miss Osburn are here now? Only one—Sister Mary Barker.

6725. Are there any nurses here who were under you? Yes, one or two. Mrs. Bland was under me. She is a sister or head nurse now.

6726. Do you know anything of the other two head nurses who are here now? I have a slight knowledge of Miss Moule, but not of any one else. Mrs. Bland was under me for three months. She had three months' training under me.

6727. You cannot say whether the other two are competent to fill the positions that they hold? I cannot say.

6728. Whilst you were here, had you any complaint as to the quality of the food served to the patients, or the cooking—was the food properly cooked? Yes, as a rule, the food was very well cooked when I was here. Of course there were times when it was not quite right. I sometimes spoke to Miss Osburn about it, or to Mr. Blackstone if he was passing through the wards.

6729. But, on the whole, the food was well cooked? Yes.

6730. And the sago and arrowroot—did the nurses prepare those things? When I first came, those things were cooked in the kitchen I think, but I would not be sure about that. I used to make a great deal for the patients, but I would not be sure as to whether or not these things were cooked in the kitchen. Beef-tea was prepared in the kitchen.

6731. You said that there were vermin in the bedsteads? Yes.

6732. But not so much as you expected? Not quite so much.

6733. Did you keep the vermin down? No, not quite.

6734. Did you keep them down at all? Well, yes, in my own particular wards, I did.

6735. Do you think it is possible that they could be kept down? Yes, I think it is possible.

6736. Mr. Ellis.] Were you not in all the wards? Yes, they were all mine in turn.

6737. President.] And the wards were particularly clean while you were in them? Oh no, but I tried hard to keep them clean.

6738. You found these vermin a very great nuisance? Yes; but every house in the Colony requires to be constantly worked at to keep it clean.

6739. Mr. Wearne.] Do you think that the increase of the vermin in the hospital is in consequence of having no scrubbers here? It is from the bedsteads not being scrubbed as often as they should be.

6740. It is not the duty of the probationers to scrub them? No.

6741. And in consequence of the want of scrubbers, you think that the bedsteads are not scrubbed as often as they should be? No; it is not the probationers' duty to scrub the beds.

6742. Mr. Metcalfe.] What reason have you for supposing that the beds are not cleaned now? I do not say that they are not cleaned, but if they were allowed to go for two months they would be full of vermin. I have known splints cleaned, scoured, and scalded, and put on a patient, and when they were taken off they would be full of vermin. I took to turping my splints, and that prevented the vermin breeding.

Mrs. E. Blundell.

11 June, 1873.

6743. Then you have no reason to suppose that the beds are not cleaned now? No; I do not know anything about the Infirmary now.

6744. Mr. Wearne.] Do you think that Miss Osburn is a proper person to be at the head of an establishment like this—in her treatment of the nurses under her, and in her general bearing? May I decline to answer that question, Mr. Wearne, please?

6745. Mr. Driver.] How long were you in St. Thomas's Hospital? Rather more than two years.

6746. Do you happen to know how long Miss Osburn was there? I think rather more than twelve months—about fifteen months.

6747. Did you hear that she had passed a very satisfactory examination there? I did not hear anything of the kind.

6748. Did you never hear it spoken of? Never.

6749. Were you on friendly terms with her? Yes.

6750. And continued so up to the time of your leaving here? Yes, on pretty friendly terms.

6751. You say that when you came here you found the place short of linen? Yes.

6752. Whose fault was that? I suppose that it was the fault of the committee; at least, I always went on the supposition that the committee did not want to get more things until after Miss Osburn came out, in order that she might make what arrangements she thought best.

6753. Did Miss Osburn complain of this? I knew little of Miss Osburn's actions; I never inquired into them.

6754. Did you receive a sufficient stock of linen for your patients? Well, after a time there was an improvement, but not sufficient to keep the patients clean; our patients never were thoroughly clean, as far as their shirts and bed linen was concerned.

6755. Did you report this to Miss Osburn? She knew of it quite well.

6756. But did the sisters report it to her? Yes, they complained that there was a shortness of linen, and small squabbles used to occur.

6757. I suppose she gave out all that she had to give? I think that she did.

6758. Have you any reason to suppose otherwise? I have no reason to think otherwise, but the stock was not large enough.

6759. What was your title in St. Thomas's Hospital? I was called Mrs. Blundell, or Nurse Blundell.

6760. Were there sisters there? Yes. If I had stayed longer there I should have had a ward given to me, and would have been called "sister"—"Sister George"—or "Sister Queen"—or whatever the ward was called.

6761. Is it customary in England to call the head nurses "sisters?" Yes, the head nurses are always called "sisters."

6762. The head nurses? Yes.

6763. Can you give any reasons for its being done? Yes; at St. Thomas's, St. Bartholomew's, Guy's—

6764. Can you give any reason why it is done? I think that it originated from St. Thomas's and St. Bartholomew's. They had been endowed by King Edward the Sixth, and the head nurses have always been called "sisters" since his time.

6765. President.] Then it is not a new-fangled thing brought up by Miss Nightingale? No, it is not a new-fangled thing. The hospital authorities have always considered it an appropriate title.

6766. Mr. Wearne.] Were all the sisters who came out from England English women? No, there were two Scotch women.

6767. And you say it is the practice at Home to style the nurses "sisters"? Yes, in all the London hospitals the head nurses are called "sisters."

6768. You mean in all the principal hospitals in London? Yes.

6769. The title is not an innovation of modern times at all? No; but the sisters do not take their own names. They take the name of the ward—"Henry"—"James"—"William"—and so on. Perhaps in some of the hospitals some person has given a ward to be called after them; and the sister of the ward takes that name, and the nurse also.

6770. A lady taking the title would feel herself honored by the preferment? I cannot say.

6771. Can you state as far as your own experience is concerned? I did not feel it any honor, but it was a great convenience.

6772. In what way? It was better to be called "Nurse Queen," or "Under-nurse Queen," or "Head-nurse Queen," than Mrs. So-and-so.

6773. President.] It was better to be addressed by an abstract name than by your own name? Yes.

6774. Patients knowing your real name, and inclined to be rude, might sing it out to you rudely? Yes, it is better to have some other name.

6775. Do you not think that the title "sister" gives more authority? I do not know that, but I think there is a kindly feeling existing between patients and the "sister" generally, and it is not inappropriate in that way.

6776. I think that you said that, in answer to the Rev. Canon Stephen, you said that you required to be more kindly treated? More considerably treated.

6777. Can you give the Commission any acts of unkindness? I do not think it is necessary for me to go into questions of that kind; because our comforts, or our being made uncomfortable, does not consist in great things, but in small things that occur every hour of the day. We have had little differences. I have run out of the place. I said to the committee that I did not care about going, but I should have gone for all that at the end of my time.

6778. Mr. Wearne.] One of your annoyances was the frequent changing of the nurses? Yes, that was a very great inconvenience.

6779. And at Home they are called by the names of their wards, to show that they are never moved? Yes.

6780. Mr. Driver.] Can you inform the Commission of any act of incivility or unkindness on the part of any one in the Infirmary? I could give many little things.

6781. Will you give us one? I had rather not say anything personal.

6782. Whose unkindness do you complain of? I was often treated so.

6783. By whom? By Miss Osburn and her servants.

- Mrs. E. Blundell. 6784. Did you complain to her of the conduct of her servants? Yes, I have frequently complained to her.
6785. Were your complaints listened to? No.
6786. Not on any occasion? No.
- 11 June, 1873. 6787. Can you name any particular complaint that you made to her? Yes—this—that I asked for sheets for an amputation case, and it was really a very bad case. The patient had an excessive discharge of pus from the stump, and was supposed to have frequent changes of linen. A man with such frequent discharges required to be changed frequently, and after using one sheet until it was quite saturated, I went down to the linen store and asked for more sheets, and was very uncivilly treated, being refused the necessary sheets. I did not complain of it, but I continued to go on with the dirty linen, and I think I lost the respect and esteem of one of the medical officers; but I would not complain—I went on disobeying his orders.
6788. Mr. Wearne.] Did you get the linen? I did not.
6789. Was it Ann Parker who refused to give it you? It was her sister, Eliza.
6790. Mr. Driver.] Did you complain of it? I did complain.
6791. To whom? To Miss Osburn.
6792. What did she say? She made no answer.
6793. Of what did you complain? Of the tone and manner of the refusal to supply me.
6794. What did the person you asked the linen of say to you? "Can't have it," I think; or "You won't have it." On another occasion Doctor McKay sent me for some oiled silk; I went for it, and she refused to give it to me.
6795. Who refused to give it you? The same Parker. I returned without it, and Doctor McKay insisted upon having it, and then the lady superintendent came herself with the oiled silk and cut it herself. That is a thing that would not be done to any sister in a London hospital; that implied that I was not honest enough to take a piece of oiled silk into the ward, whereas perhaps I would have £2 worth of it in my own room, but on this particular occasion I was run out of my own private supply.
6796. Bought with your own money? I have spent a good deal of my own money in buying things that were required for the patients.
6797. Why did you think that Miss Osburn implied that you were not honest? I should have had a supply in my own wards.
6798. Was there a sufficient supply in the establishment at the time? Yes, there was.
6799. You did not see Miss Osburn yourself when you went for the oiled silk? Not until she brought the silk up into the ward and cut it.
6800. President.] You think she should not have cut it? That was implying that I was dishonest.
6801. Is that what you complain of? I complain of the whole principle of the thing—to keep a medical man there who gives his services for nothing, wasting his time. Besides, it implied that I was not to be trusted to take a sheet up into the wards. I could not appropriate it with a hundred eyes upon me.
6802. Mr. Driver.] Did any one charge you with dishonesty? No one charged me; but imagine a sister without a sheet, or a piece of oiled silk, and then the lady superintendent rushing up with the oiled silk and cutting it.
6803. Was that wrong? It would not be tolerated in England.
6804. What would not be tolerated? The lady superintendent doing my duty as she did on that one occasion.
6805. Was it unusual for her to go into the ward? No, but that was unusual; I would not permit that to be done a second time.
6806. Has it ever been done since? No.
6807. Was it not done from a desire on the lady superintendent's part to see what was going on? I think it was not.
6808. Was there anything in Miss Osburn's demeanour to lead you to think that it was done from a different motive? Yes, I felt that there was not a kindly feeling about the matter at all. You asked me whether I was kindly treated, and I say I think I was in that instance very badly treated indeed.
6809. Is there any other instance of unkindness that you can give? There are hundreds of instances.
6810. Is there anything in Miss Osburn's conduct or demeanour which appears to you to render her unfit for her present position? Having declined to answer Mr. Wearne's question, I must decline to answer that one.
6811. How are the probationers admitted in England? They apply by letter to Mrs. Wardropper, or to the secretary of the Nightingale committee.
6812. I suppose that Miss Nightingale is one of the best judges of a nurse in England? I suppose if she were working in the hospital she would be, but she has not done so for many years; she is confined to her bed.
6813. But she has been very busily engaged in nursing? Yes, in the Crimea. I know all about her.
6814. Well, would she not be able to judge of a person's qualifications as a nurse? Yes.
6815. President.] Is she not in constant communication with Mr. Bonham Carter, and Mrs. Wardropper, and the committee of the Nightingale Fund? Yes.
6816. Mr. Driver.] And the persons wishing to become nurses are admitted upon application to the persons you have named? Yes, after a month's trial.
6817. Do you not find it more difficult to procure suitable persons for nurses in Sydney than in London? No, I think that there are very good nurses here.
6818. And you think that efficient persons are as readily procured here as in London? Yes, more readily.
6819. And that they are as well trained? Yes. I know of many excellent young people who would like to come to the Sydney Infirmary, and I know of many who have been and left it in disgust, and who make good nurses elsewhere.
6820. Left it in disgust at not being able to obtain employment? No; left it in disgust at the whole affair.
6821. Disgust at what? At the whole institution and its management.
6822. Miss Osburn would be the proper person to apply to for admission? I think so.
6823. Do you consider her a suitable person to receive candidates? I must decline to answer the question.
6824. The question is as to whether she is not able to look over a testimonial and see whether the applicant is a fit person or not—is anything more to be done than that? I must decline to answer the question.
- 6825.

6825. Mr. Wearne.] I suppose that a great many persons have been refused who were quite suitable? Yes.

6826. The fact is that they have been refused? Yes.

6827. Mr. Driver.] Miss Osburn is a highly educated lady, is she not? Oh yes, I think she is a highly educated person.

6828. A person who would be capable of forming an opinion as to the fitness of persons presenting themselves for employment here as nurses or probationers? I must decline to answer that question.

6829. What, whether she is able to form an opinion as to a person's qualifications? I must decline to answer that question.

Then I must decline to ask you any more questions.

6830. Mr. Wearne.] You say that you have expended money of your own upon the patients? Yes, in my own wards.

6831. Has that money ever been refunded to you? No.

6832. Why did you expend it? Because I would not be made to look so small as I was about the piece of oiled silk.

6833. Since that time then you have spent your own money in procuring things for the wards? Even before that, I did so.

6834. Mr. Cowper.] Do you not know, Mrs. Blundell, that it was intended by the Government that nurses should be trained in this institution? Yes, I knew that before I came out.

6835. Do you think it is possible to train them and make them efficient nurses without moving them from one ward to another? Probationers.

6836. Do you not object to the probationers being changed? I objected to the sisters and the ward nurses being changed, but not to the probationers—the probationers must be changed.

6837. Then it is your opinion that the sisters and other nurses should never be shifted? I will not say never; but let us say that they might be changed once a year, and then I think a nurse should be allowed to choose her own ward.

6838. President.] Suppose that all the nurses chose the same ward? They never do.

6839. But supposing they did? Well, supposing they did, they would have to draw lots for it.

6840. Mr. Cowper.] How many nurses should there be to look after forty patients: you said you would reduce the number? I did not say that.

6841. You said you would put on scrubbers instead? Somebody must keep the place clean.

6842. How many nurses could look after forty patients? Two day-nurses and one night-nurse, and one scrubber; the sister could have more than forty patients.

6843. Do you not think that three wards are as much as any sister can manage properly? Yes, quite as much.

6844. Do you approve of male or female nurses, as a rule? I like women, sir.

6845. You do not approve of wardsmen being employed in the surgical wards? No; but there should be a wardsmen at hand to call when he is wanted—for instance, a barber and a porter. These men should be always at hand, and should have a certain amount of knowledge to enable them to assist the surgeons.

6846. What are the duties you would call upon them to perform? Bathing the patients, barbering them, lifting them in and out of their beds; and what we call the hall-work—attending to the gas, and carrying things backwards and forwards.

6847. You think, as regards the dressing of wounds, and attending to the patients when they are in their beds, there is nothing but what can be done by a nurse without hurting her feelings? That depends on the individual; nothing would hurt my feelings in attending upon either a sick man or a sick woman.

6848. Would you consider it the duty of the nurses to clean cobwebs from the windows and from round the tops of the walls? No.

6849. Whose duty would it be? The scrubbers'; all housemaids take down cobwebs.

6850. But supposing that there are not scrubbers? Then it is the nurses' duty.

6851. You see no objection to the nurses standing up on ladders, among a lot of men who are lying about in their beds, to sweep down these cobwebs? I think that they might do it.

6852. Did they ever do it in this institution? I myself have swept cobwebs down and whitewashed the walls.

6853. As a rule? No, not as a rule, but I have done it.

6854. With reference to the reception of applications from persons desirous of becoming nurses, we have been told by a gentleman who considers himself an authority upon the matter, or, at any rate, who takes a great interest in the management of the institution, that Miss Osburn should call up her nursing staff, hand the applicant over to them, and that they should examine her and see whether she is up to the business: could that be done? Oh no.

6855. You do not think it possible? In answering a question put by Mr. Wearne, I said that the sisters should keep a book in which they should note down the progress made by probationers. Miss Osburn is supposed to choose her own probationers, and she hands them over to the sisters, and then at the end of a month the sisters can report whether a probationer, as we call it, "frames to be a good nurse."

6856. I wish to know whether it is possible for any nurse, or staff of nurses, to examine a woman off-hand and see whether she is up to her business? Oh no; it takes a month in our hospital at Home, which is supposed to be the hospital of hospitals. The matron there goes by the sister's report, and of course she has no one else's information but the sister's, to act upon.

6857. Is it not the fact that many probationers, who at first are quite afraid to touch a patient, turn out well after a while? No.

6858. Is that not possible? It is possible, but it is not a general thing.

6859. Have you not known instances of it? I have not known instances of it. If a woman does not come with her mind made up for the work, it is no use her coming; if she has not a love for it when she comes.

6860. She might have a love for it, and yet not understand how to handle a patient? Oh dear no, of course not; not at once.

6861. Her delicacy may make her timid at first; it requires practice to handle a patient properly, does it not? Yes, it does require practice.

6862. You say that you were satisfied with the cooking when you were there? Yes, it was pretty good, but there were times when it was not quite right.

6863. In your time was it the practice to give patients little delicacies in tin dishes with the brightness of the tin worn off? Tin dishes were used, but then plates were substituted for them.

6864.

Mrs. E.
Blundell.

11 June, 1873.

- Mrs. E. Blundell.
 11 June, 1873.
6864. You saw no objection to the use of these tin dishes? I do not like to give sick people things out of tin dishes. If they get rusty, the rust is not good for them.
6865. Did you notice whether the patients got their food warm? I never had any difficulty in getting anything from the kitchen.
6866. Hot? Yes, and if things were not hot we had gas stoves to warm them up.
6867. They were very small gas stoves? Yes; you can see them up-stairs now.
6868. Were they not moved away? They were there in my time, and we found them a very great convenience.
6869. Mr. Goold.] I should like to ask Mrs. Blundell as to her opinion, though I do not know that she will be disposed to give it, as to the general demeanour and bearing of Miss Osburn towards those under her—whether that has had anything to do with causing the state of things which has arisen in the Infirmary? Well, perhaps so; it requires a great amount of confidence between the nurses and the lady superintendent generally for the well working of the hospital.
6870. And that feeling has not existed here between the nursing staff and the lady superintendent, taking all that you have stated? It has not existed in my own case, and I know of many other cases in which it has not.
6871. And that you think is one of the causes of the state of things that has arisen? Yes, that is one of the causes, perhaps.
6872. President.] In the same way perhaps there may be a want of confidence on her part towards you? Perhaps so.
6873. Mr. Goold.] I judge from what you have said here that the hospital has not been conducted in the way in which it should have been conducted, taking St. Thomas's Hospital as an example? No, it has not.
6874. I should have liked to have your opinion with regard to the fitness of Miss Osburn with regard to the position that she occupies—it is important that we should know that—but of course if you decline to give it we cannot have it? I should not like to give an opinion upon that.
6875. President.] If you think her entirely unfit, why can you not say so? I should not like to say it.
6876. Do you think that she is fit? I had rather not answer.
6877. Mr. Ellis.] It is not easy to keep harmony in a hospital full of ladies? I do not know. I adored my superintendent before I came here.
6878. Mr. Driver.] Can you suggest any improvement in the management of the Infirmary? I should not like to do so. There are others who are older and wiser than I am to do that.
6879. You think that there is room for great improvement? Oh yes.
6880. Mr. Wearne.] Under whom is the linen at St. Thomas's Hospital? The matron, who is assisted in this department by a person called Sister Extra.
6881. Then it is not under the charge of the lady superintendent? Yes, it is under the matron; it is entirely under her control.
6882. Do you mean, by the matron, the lady superintendent? Yes, it is the same person; the only superintendent we know there, is the head resident medical officer, the chief physician.
6883. In your time (I do not care whether you answer this or not)—did you purchase your clothing from the lady superintendent, or from any person in the establishment? I did not. The nurses did. My clothes were sent with me from England.
6884. What the nurses provided for themselves they had to purchase from Miss Osburn? I have heard so.
6885. Mr. Driver.] Do you know of a single instance of it within your own knowledge? Yes, I know of instances of the nurses having bought clothes. One of them said she had not got her measure.
6886. Did she say so in the presence of Miss Osburn? I think so, because I remember Miss Osburn speaking of it publicly before all the nurses—there was a roll-call.
6887. Was not the whole thing satisfactorily explained? I cannot answer that question.
6888. Do you not know as a matter of fact that the whole thing was satisfactorily explained? I do not know. I know that the young person left in consequence—left and married.
6889. Mr. Wearne.] Is it the custom at Home for the matron to purchase these things? No.
6890. Mr. Driver.] This young person has bettered her position then? I have no doubt that she is much happier now than she was in the Infirmary.
6891. Mr. Wearne.] Then the nurses at Home do not purchase their clothing from the matron? In the wards it is usual to wear uniform, and that stuff we purchased from the matron; we took it from the hospital. It was not usual to wear uniform out of doors.
6892. Was the clothing purchased from the matron or the hospital? It came through the matron—we got it much cheaper in that way than by going to the shop.
6893. That only refers to one dress? Only one kind of dress, and we had only two a year.
6894. I refer to the clothing which the nurses wear outside? That we never bought.
6895. You do not know of any instance of the matron having supplied the nurses with that clothing? I do not know of an instance of her having done so, except in the case of the dress worn inside the wards.
6896. President.] The object is to ensure uniformity of dress? Yes.
6897. And is not that Miss Osburn's object here? Yes, of course it was the object here.
6898. You do not mean to say that Miss Osburn sold to these nurses anything but the uniform of the place? Their underclothing I think—calico and things of that sort.
6899. Do you know that she did? I do not know, but I have heard so.
6900. Mr. Wearne.] That she has sold them other things besides the dress? I have heard so.
6901. Mr. Driver.] Do you think that she has sold them at a profit? I cannot say.
6902. Mr. Goold.] You say that there is great room for improvement in the Infirmary: can you say in what way? They have taken away the people who used to clean; and if you had these people to come back again and clean, the hospital might be cleaner. For instance, the shortness of linen I attribute to the washing being sent out of the place, to where it does not come back from for a week.
6903. President.] Whose fault is that? The fault lies with the committee. As I before said, we were short of linen, and our patients were dirty, for we did not get our returns as we should have done.
6904. I see that one of the things you have charged the lady superintendent with is partiality for Roman Catholics? Yes, I think that she was partial to them.
6905. You stated that before, did you not? Yes; I was asked questions before the committee about it.
6906. There were several witnesses examined by that committee? Yes.

6907. And the result was that a report was drawn up stating that this allegation against Miss Osburn was untrue? I think so, as near as I can remember.

6908. Speaking of dissensions among the nursing staff,—are you not aware that a number of the nurses said that they were in no way dissatisfied? I have never read that evidence.

6909. Are you not aware that it was so? I am aware that some people said that they were satisfied.

6910. Mr. Wearne.] How many different tables are there to be set in the Nightingale wing? At present two; formerly there were three. The scrubbers used to dine at 12, the nurses and probationers at half-past 1, and the sisters at half-past 2; but there are no scrubbers now.

6911. Was there the same arrangement at St. Thomas's? Yes, except that our helpers there, went out. There were only two tables there. The helpers came into the house in the morning, and left in the evening.

6912. President.] The sisters had one table? Yes. The sisters used to carve for the nurses in turn. The probationers had a table for themselves.

6913. Mr. Wearne.] So that the arrangements here are the same as the arrangements were at St. Thomas's? Yes.

6914. Was the arrangement pretty satisfactory here? Yes, pretty satisfactory. People could not all be away from the wards at the same time.

6915. This Ann Parker,—was she a nurse or probationer? Eliza Parker was in the linen room, and Ann Parker was Miss Osburn's lady's maid.

6916. They had nothing to do with the nursing? No.

6917. Eliza has left, and Ann is still here, is she not? Yes; Eliza is married.

6918. Mr. Goold.] When did Miss Osburn discontinue giving those lectures you spoke of? Some time before I left the Infirmary.

6919. What was her reason for discontinuing them? I do not know. I know that Dr. Roberts came and gave a lecture, and then Miss Osburn did not lecture any more after that.

6920. Is it not an important part of her duty to do that? No.

6921. What action does the lady superintendent take in instructing those under her? It is no part of her duty to give instructions in the wards.

6922. I understood you to say in your former evidence that it was her duty to give lectures and to instruct? No, it is not her duty to give lectures.

6923. Mr. Ellis.] The sisters are presumed to be instructed when they are placed in charge of the wards? Yes, they are supposed to be fully qualified.

6924. And competent to instruct the probationers under them? Yes.

6925. Mr. Goold.] When you were in the Infirmary, had you any difficulty with the honorary staff—did you find that some doctors wished to retain patients longer in the wards than was necessary? No; on the contrary, I found that in my time the surgeons and physicians had frequently to send patients out before they were quite well, in order to make empty beds.

6926. We have it in evidence that some of the honorary surgeons are prone to retain patients in the hospital, in order to keep the beds full until their own week of admission comes round? I cannot remember it, but I know that they have often sent patients out of the hospital before they were well, in order that urgent cases might be taken in. Of course we can quite understand, if a surgeon has an interesting case to take in that he wishes to operate upon, he will try and secure that case.

6927. Mr. Couper.] Did you find that Dr. M'Kay frequently allowed patients to violate the rules of the institution? Oh no, most certainly not.

6928. Have you never known him to break the rules? I have known him break rules, but not purposely.

6929. You never heard him give an order for a patient to wear her own clothes? No; I never heard him do things of that kind.

6930. Mr. Ellis.] Supposing that he has stated—as his reason for believing that Miss Osburn was incompetent—that she had brought out none but incompetent nurses with her, what would you say to that? I should not say anything.

6931. Mr. Driver.] You would not like to endorse that statement? No, certainly not.

James Markey, Esq., M.D., called in and examined:—

6932. President.] You were at one time house surgeon in the Sydney Infirmary? Yes.

6933. How long ago is it since you were here? About nine months ago.

6934. How long were you here? About two years and five months.

6935. I suppose you know that the object of this Commission is to inquire into the Sydney Infirmary, among other Charities of the Colony, and take suggestions for their improvement: we shall be glad if you can give us information on any special points that you can think of, and upon that we can examine you? I should like to speak about the out-door department; I belong to that now.

6936. You are out-door surgeon? Yes. In the first place, I consider the dispensary at Regent-street is not conducted in the manner it ought to be—it is quite inadequate—it is not large enough; the number of patients we get there is too great; there's not light enough, and there are no servants.

6937. Have you any help in the way of servants there? No help whatever; persons come in there drunk, kicking up a row, and there is no one to put them out.

6938. How many patients have you to see on an average? Last month I saw 222 patients.

6939. From what you have seen, is the charity of the place abused, from people obtaining medical assistance at the branch dispensary who do not come within the scope of a charitable institution? Yes, decidedly.

6940. On what do you found this belief? From my own knowledge. For instance, I saw a patient for another doctor who did not attend—Dr. Becke; I saw his patient for him, and afterwards the patient asked me to attend him as a private patient; these people are often very well able to pay.

6941. In what way would you propose to check these abuses? I see no way of doing it, except to have some way of inspecting the place, and ascertaining the position of the people who attended.

6942. Are you aware that in some of the London hospitals the abuse of charity is so great that in St. George's the subscribers have agreed to forego their right to give out-door relief? I do not know. I have been so long away from Home that I do not know.

- J. Markey, Esq., M.D.
 11 June, 1873.
6943. You think that officers should be appointed to inquire into the position of the patients? I do. I think it would do an immense deal of good.
6944. How would it answer to make everybody who obtained relief to pay some small sum monthly? That would not answer; you would never get the money from them; they would promise it, but they would never give it.
6945. Are you aware of the efforts made in London by a charitable organization or society for the establishment of provident dispensaries, the leading principle of which was to make everybody pay something, however small, for the aid that they got? No.
6946. From their reports it would appear that they have very much checked this abuse, that there is no difficulty in getting people to contribute small sums of (say) a shilling a month, and that that tends to keep down the abuse? I have no doubt it would answer to make people pay if you had some one to look them up and make them pay.
6947. But why could not they pay in advance? They would not do it; but they would promise, and never pay. If you had a person to look after them they might be made to pay. We cannot refuse to attend these people who bring orders, which throw the onus of refusing them upon us. When I was house surgeon here there were people who came in with plenty of money.
6948. Is there anything else you wish to observe about the out-door dispensary? No; the only thing is that the place is too small, and I think twice a week would be quite often enough for people to go there. There is nothing really the matter with one half of them.
6949. Would it be advisable to keep up this dispensary? I think so, as a convenience to the people; it is too far for some of the people to come to the Infirmary.
6950. The dispenser complains to us that he is over-worked, that his duties here combined with those at the branch dispensary throw too much upon him, and that he never can get the medicines made up as quickly as he should do; and the doctors agree with him? I think that he has too much work. Last month I had 222 patients, and that for one is too many. I have had seventeen a day, and that is a good deal for a man to make up prescriptions for in the time allowed, and I know what his work here is, having been here so long.
6951. You think that he requires another assistant? I think so.
6952. Did you observe in your time that there were delays in sending up medicines to the wards? At times there were.
6953. Do you think that the system of employing a little boy to carry medicines to the wards is calculated to secure regularity? I think they should have an older boy.
6954. Did you find there were irregularities in sending up the diets when you were here? I heard complaints sometimes.
6955. Did you ever examine into it, or are you simply aware of the fact? No, I am aware there were irregularities? I have spoken to the manager when patients made complaints about their diet.
6956. And you don't know the reason of them? No, except that such things will happen sometimes.
6957. Were you satisfied or otherwise with the nursing when you were here? No, at first I was not, but I was, during the latter part of the time.
6958. What was the cause of your dissatisfaction at first? I made some complaints of neglect at first.
6959. Then did the nursing staff improve as you got on? Yes, they got on very well.
6960. How was the nursing when you left? Very good indeed.
6961. To what do you attribute the neglect you complained of in the first instance? The want of proper care—to the working of the system in the first instance. I do not know exactly what it was. I made complaints about a man being neglected, and the neglect went on for some time, and then it got better.
6962. And then you had nothing to complain of? Nothing.
6963. It was very good indeed? Very good.
6964. Did the lady superintendent, when you were here, appear to take an interest in her duties? I did not see much of her during the time that I was here. We very seldom met.
6965. You mean that your duties did not bring you into contact with her? No, they did not bring me into contact with her.
6966. Are you not in a position to give an opinion on that point? No; at one time I wrote to her about some complaints, and she referred it to the committee.*
6967. She referred the matter to the committee? Yes; and then I wrote to the committee, and then it went on for some time, and at last they told me I had better drop the matter.
6968. That is the matter you were speaking of? Yes.
6969. Mr. Metcalfe.] The average number of patients you have at the branch dispensary is eight a day? Yes.
6970. And you say there was nothing serious the matter with a good many of them? Yes; you will have dyspeptic old women coming, who will have medicine.
6971. Is that a reason for abolishing the dispensary? There are certain people who will have medicines.
6972. And it is more convenient for these people to go to the west end of the town? Yes.
6973. You say there is not enough room for the patients you have at the branch dispensary? There is but one room in which to see patients—one waiting-room; they may come in drunk, and they are often very impertinent; and one cannot be squabbling with old women there.
6974. President.] But are you obliged to give medicines to people who go there drunk—is there no rule about that? Yes we are not bound to prescribe for them when drunk or abusive. We have no one to put them out. Sometimes I have sent them out, and then we have to bear a lot of abuse from them. There is no one there to put them out.
6975. But you do not supply them with medicines? No; and then they go out and abuse us.
6976. Are you aware of subscribers issuing orders in excess of the number which they are allowed to issue by the rules of the institution? I am not aware.
6977. Mr. Metcalfe.] If there were some one at the branch dispensary to assist you, you could get on comfortably? Yes; as it is, patients rush in at improper times, and there is no one to look after them—they come in as they like.

* NOTE (on revision):—This is a mistake. I did not write to Miss Osburn; I wrote to the committee, making complaints about the nursing; the committee referred the matter to Miss Osburn; her letter was sent to me; my reply was sent to her; and this went on for some time.

6978. Some of these people do not want medicine—a walk to the hospital here would do them more good? Yes, many of them, a walk would do them more good than the medicine. J. Markey, Esq., M.D.
6979. Mr. Gould.] Would you do away with the system of giving orders—abolish the system of giving out-door orders? I think you could not do that, because people outside cannot judge whether people are ill or not. 11 June, 1873.
6980. Mr. Wearne.] You said that you were house surgeon here for two years and five months? Yes.
6981. And you left about nine months since? Yes, on the 5th September last.
6982. Miss Osburn was here when you came? Yes.
6983. She was here about two years before you came? I do not know.
6984. Have you had any experience in any other hospitals before you came to this one? No, except that I was resident pupil in a hospital at Home.
6985. Many years ago? About six years ago, at the Eccles-street Hospital, Dublin; nine years ago, in London.
6986. How long were you there? Six months.
6987. Then your experience of hospitals has been almost confined to this Infirmary? Yes, I may say so.
6988. Have you studied the subject of hospital management at all? Not particularly. I have been in the Melbourne Hospital.
6989. As to the management of this Infirmary—do you consider that the duty whilst you were here—the duties of the manager and of the lady superintendent—were sufficiently defined—that each officer did his own work;—speaking from your own experience while you were here, do you think that the management has been satisfactory? No; * I heard a good deal of grumbling about it—about the work not being defined; there was a clashing of duties.
6990. In what sense do you think that the manager's and lady superintendent's duties clashed, the one with the other? I do not know exactly what their duties are. I merely heard grumbling about relative duties. I cannot say that their duties clashed, as I do not know their duties.
6991. No matter what they are—what should they be—what, in your opinion, should be the duty of the manager? I should say to manage all the accounts and give orders for the patients' diets, and give orders for many things which are wanted for the house.
6992. Anything else? In fact, to have the general superintendence, and report upon everything.
6993. You think that he should have the control of everything—that everything on the place should be under his control? Yes, everything in his department, except the nursing staff.
6994. I want to know whether, from your experience here, you think that the manager should have the full control of everything, or whether you think he should have nothing to do with the nursing staff at all? He should have nothing whatever to do with the nursing staff.
6995. What else should he have nothing to do with—under whom should the porters be? I should say that all the men should be under the manager.
6996. Then how can you define his authority, when you have a wardsman, and say that the manager must have nothing to do with the nursing staff? I mean the female nursing staff.
6997. Whilst you were here did you observe that there was any interference with the duties of the manager on the part of any person, the lady superintendent, or any person under her; did you ever have occasion whilst you were here to report anything to the committee? Yes.
6998. What did you have cause to report? Once about the patients being neglected.
6999. By whom? By the nurse.
7000. A patient who had been admitted? Yes.
7001. Neglected by the nurse? Yes.
7002. To whom did you complain? To the committee.
7003. Did you speak to Miss Osburn about it? Yes.†
7004. What was the nature of the case? A man had met with many fractures; they were all on the upper and lower extremities of his body; it was an accident case.
7005. How long was he neglected? For a week.‡
7006. How could he be neglected for a week? He was not attended to according to my instructions.
7007. In what sense? He was not kept clean enough; and, in the second place, when this man came in everything was locked up, and I could not get anything for him—bandages and things of that sort.§
7008. In whose care were they? In charge of the sister of the ward. I referred to the committee about this man, and said he had been neglected and did not get clean sheets when he should have got them, and he had bed-sores.
7009. What answer did you get from the committee? It went on for about six weeks, and then they told me that I had better drop the matter.
7010. Did they give no reason for that? It was referred to Miss Osburn for her report, and she reported, and her report was referred to me, and then I was told to drop it.
7011. Mr. Ellis.] What became of the patient? He got well; and went out. He is walking about now, but he has got a stiff joint.
7012. Mr. Wearne.] That was a charge against the nurse for not attending to her duty—that she had the linen locked up, and would not provide it for the patient? Yes; and she gave me impertinence too, one day, and I reported that to the committee.||
7013. Can you mention anything else which you have seen done which is not right? No, nothing specially, except that.
7014. What do you think of the nurses here;—are they competent to fulfil their duties—the probationers, under nurses, and head nurses? The head nurses are, but a great many of the probationers when I came here were too young.
7015. What were their ages? There were some as young as sixteen years—one was.

* NOTE (on revision):—The management on the whole has been satisfactory.

† NOTE (on revision):—No, I sent her word by one of the nurses, as well as I can recollect.

‡ NOTE (on revision):—I cannot say positively for a week, as it is now some time ago.

§ NOTE (on revision):—I have made a mistake about the bandages being locked up. It was not the case with this patient. Bandages and appliances were locked up in another case when they were required.

|| NOTE (on revision):—I forgot to mention that Miss Osburn refused to send a nurse to attend a man in the tent when requested by me to do so.

- J. Markey,
Esq., M.D.
11 June, 1873.
7016. What age do you think that they should be? I should say that a woman in that position should be over twenty-four.
7017. In no case ought they to be as young as sixteen? Certainly not.
7018. Should you think twenty was quite young enough? Quite. They see things that they should not see, and hear things they should not hear.
7019. Mr. Goold.] Do you know of more than one case in which the nurse was no more than sixteen? There was only one, and I think she was about sixteen.
7020. President.] She appeared to be about sixteen? Yes, she appeared to be about sixteen.
7021. Mr. Wearne.] How many nurses were there under twenty? Very few.
7022. Were there many under twenty-five? Yes, a good many. I dare say the oldest nurse in the house was about thirty—not much more.
7023. And you think that none of them should be under that age? No, they should not be.
7024. Could we get them of that age? I think so, if you pay them well. You get a woman of that age, and she wants to make a profession of it, but a young woman comes in and gets married.
7025. President.] You would leave the nursing then to the old maids and the widows? Yes, I think that would be the best way.
7026. Mr. Driver.] Would you not prefer to be nursed by a young woman? Yes, I think so.
7027. And would not the patients have a similar choice, don't you think? Yes, perhaps, if the nurses were good-looking.
7028. Mr. Wearne.] How often did you go through the wards? Sometimes ten times a day.
7029. On an average? From eight to ten times.
7030. You went whether the honorary staff were there or not? Yes.
7031. Do you think that the nursing staff is not what they should be; you complained of their age? Not now; I did; some of them were too young, but during the latter part of my time here everything went on very well.
7032. I am speaking of your time;—you thought that the nursing staff was what it should be? Yes.
7033. You have no complaints? No complaints.
7034. You think that the head nurses are competent? They are perfectly competent.
7035. Have you noticed Miss Osburn in passing through the wards; have you noticed her conduct to the nurses and those under her; have you paid attention to it; have you noticed that, as lady superintendent over those nurses, her manner, her demeanour, was as it should be as a lady superintendent? On one occasion I saw a little temper; that's all.
7036. Considering the responsible position that she holds, do you think that she conducts herself as she should do? That I cannot say; I can only speak of what I have seen.
7037. You have not given that matter sufficient attention? I have not.
7038. Do you think the manager competent to perform his duties as manager—to control everything. Have we a proper manager here, from your experience; has he sufficient control of himself to have his orders obeyed? I think so.
7039. Can you, from your experience here, give us any suggestions now which would assist us in our recommendations to make this hospital as perfect as possible? In the first place you want the hospital a great deal larger.
7040. Mr. Goold.] Would you approve of this hospital being removed? I think it would be a pity to do that until you got another one. By the way, there is one thing I should like to mention: I went down to the Melbourne Hospital, and saw that there they have got wooden houses which they can take down at convenience. They can put them up whenever they like, and take them down very easily.
7041. Mr. Wearne.] Tents are used here? Yes. They are very inconvenient, and the wet gets into the tents, and the patients are very cold there sometimes.
7042. Mr. Metcalfe.] Of what size are the wooden houses? They have six beds in some of them.
7043. Mr. Goold.] How long do they leave them standing after they are erected? A great deal depends on the epidemic. I have seen here several cases of erysipelas break out—I have seen as many as five cases at one time here.
7044. President.] Does that not show that the wards here are not in a sound state? Oh, no.
7045. Does it not show that the walls are infected with "hospitalism"—poisons emanating from the patients? That may be. I may carry infection in my hands or clothes from one house to another.
7046. But do you see any reason why this infection should break out? It is generally put down to overcrowding and bad ventilation, but we may carry the infection about with us after it comes in. I do not approve of the tents here—they are too cold in wet weather and winter time, and they are inconvenient for the nurses and for every one else.
7047. Mr. Wearne.] Who should have the power to discharge patients when they are cured—the honorary staff or the resident staff? The honorary staff; and yet when I was here I discharged them whenever I thought proper. If there was an urgent case to come in, and there was a patient fit to go out, I discharged him.
7048. Yet you think that the honorary staff should discharge them? Yes, with exceptions, because they are responsible for the treatment.
7049. From your experience who would you recommend to have the discharging of the patients? The honorary staff.
7050. President.] Who should admit the patients? The honorary staff.
7051. Mr. Wearne.] And yet you say that you discharge them? If I see an urgent case to come in.
7052. Then your action is contrary to your advice? Yes. The honorary may say, "I take in this man, and you discharge him"; it takes the patient out of his hands altogether.
7053. Have you known instances of patients being kept in the wards waiting for the medical man's turn to admit patients to come round again. It is said the honorary medical men will not allow these patients to be discharged until their turns come round? I cannot say.
7054. Have you seen patients in the hospital longer than they should be? Yes, very often there are patients there who might be discharged.
7055. For what reason were they kept in? That I do not know.
7056. If it has been stated that the doctors keep them in for the reason I have stated? It is hard to accuse a man of anything of that sort.
7057. It has been asserted here? I have no reason to think that it is true.

J. Markey,
Esq., M.D.

11 June, 1873.

7058. Do you think that a consultation of the honorary staff as to the discharge of patients would be an advantage? I think so.
7059. You think that you should have a consultation of the medical staff, rather than allow one of the honorary staff to discharge? I think that the best plan would be to have a monthly consultation.
7060. Monthly? I think that would be often enough, and then, of course, each medical man could discharge when he liked as well.
7061. You think that they should be discharged at any time, and once a month on consultation? Yes, once a month.
7062. You have seen the way in which the beds are arranged—where one doctor has a ward; do you approve of that? Yes.
7063. Can you give us anything to help us in our deliberations—to assist us with reference to the management of this institution as it is now? No, nothing, except that the manager should have charge of all the male servants, and Miss Osburn charge of all the female servants, and let their duties be properly defined.
7064. Mr. Ellis.] Would you have a professional or a non-professional man as manager? It does not matter what you have so that he manages the books properly.
7065. Mr. Wearne.] You think that it is enough to have a resident surgeon—it is quite sufficient, that is to say, to have one surgeon—you do not need the manager to be a surgeon, and to have a house surgeon as well? Yes. I do not think the manager should have anything to do with the surgeons at all.
7066. Mr. Ellis.] But would you place the establishment under the control of a medical officer? That would not please the public; they would prefer having a number of medical men.
7067. Mr. Wearne.] That is not the question. If we were going to appoint a manager, should he be a medical man or not? He should be as the manager here is now—not a medical man.
7068. Mr. Gould.] You would not approve of one individual having charge of the whole establishment, and having all things under his control? No, I do not think that would ever do at all. I would approve of one person having charge of everything, with the exception of the female nursing staff.
7069. Are you aware that that is the practice in most of the London hospitals? I have heard so, but after I passed my examination I came out here.
7070. Do you know what the practice is in Melbourne? They have a manager and a matron.
7071. Is the matron altogether independent of the manager? I think so.
7072. What do you think of the present Board of management—do you think that it is too large, or would you continue it as it is? The Board of directors?
7073. Yes. Would you advocate a reduction in the number of the directors? I think so. There is no occasion to have so many.
7074. Mr. Ellis.] You think that a good Board of five or seven would work better? Yes, far better. I know that it takes them a long time to come to a conclusion on any subject.
7075. Mr. Driver.] Who was the nurse that declined to attend to your orders or hints on the occasion you have referred to? It was nurse Barker; she was called Sister Mary Barker.
7076. Was the matter inquired into? Yes; I reported it to the committee.
7077. You do not know what decision was come to? No, I never heard.
7078. Can you suggest anything to the Commission for the improvement of the management? Yes. I should say that the resident medical officers should make a monthly report and have that properly investigated.
7079. To whom should they report? To the committee. The resident medical officers should make a weekly report to the committee, not a monthly report.
7080. Do you know anything of the composition of the present committee? Yes, I know some of them.
7081. Are you in the habit of attending meetings? No.
7082. You know of nothing outrageously wrong in the management of the institution? No, that was the only thing I had to complain of, and during the latter part of my time here everything went on satisfactorily.
7083. Mr. Wearne.] Everything? Yes; of course there were some little matters, as there will be in all institutions.
7084. Mr. Cowper.] Whom would you put the cooking under? Under the lady superintendent; she would know more about it.
7085. Mr. Ellis.] Do you think it would be desirable to give to each honorary surgeon and honorary physician a certain number of beds, instead of adhering to the practice which now prevails, as we are told? That would be a very hard question to answer.
7086. We are told that every patient admitted by a surgeon belongs to him? Yes.
7087. And that the effect of that is that some surgeons have as many as ten or twelve surgical cases, while others have only two or three? That may depend on the way in which the cases come in. For instance, they get a run on surgical cases in one man's week; he might get a run of accidents, and they might be serious accidents; and another surgeon may have accidents which are not serious, and then his beds will empty quickly.
7088. But we are told that the doctors are anxious to distribute sore legs amongst other medical men? That is a common thing.
7089. But the moment there is an interesting case the surgeon wishes to retain it for himself? You will find that to the end of time.
7090. Instead of giving some of the doctors wards would it not be better to distribute their beds throughout the building? It would not answer to have surgical and medical cases mixed up.
7091. But would it not be as well to do it on the medical and surgical sides? It is done at present on the surgical side.
7092. Dr. Alleyne says that each doctor should have a certain number of beds? That would be hard to do, because one surgeon might have more patients in his week than another.
7093. But if the number of beds was fixed for each, each honorary medical officer could have that fixed number and no more to attend to? It would be all the same in the end.
7094. Mr. Wearne.] Is not the abuse complained of caused by having these patients admitted by the honorary staff?
7095. President.] What objection is there to allowing the resident surgeon to admit patients? The honorary staff may grumble and say that the resident officer has admitted patients they do not want.

- J. Markey, Esq., M.D.
11 June, 1873.
7096. What earthly right have they to say that, if the patient is a poor patient and a fit case to take in? They like to see their own cases and take them in.
7097. But does it not appear to you that a hospital is not to be kept up to suit the predilections of certain gentlemen, but for the benefit of the poor? Most decidedly.
7098. Then why should not this duty of admission devolve upon the resident medical officers? You would have no end of differences between the resident medical men and the honoraries.
7099. Do I understand then that physicians turn men away because they think they are not interesting cases? I do not mean that exactly, but they like to see their own cases and to admit them.
7100. Mr. Wearne.] Is not the abuse we have referred to one that ought to be got over? Yes; I would always admit a man if I thought that he was ill.
7101. But still you advise us to act contrary to what you do yourself? I think if you allowed the resident staff to take in patients it would make this all right. If the honoraries are agreeable to allow the residents to admit all patients, that would make things right, not otherwise.
7102. You say that as a matter of fact you did admit, and yet you advise us to act in a contrary way? I simply gave you that advice, because the honorary staff may say, "Why did you take in so-and-so?" and that might cause disagreements amongst them.
7103. Mr. Ellis.] But would it not be the duty of the resident officers to follow the simple rule of "first come, first served"? That never does. We might have six patients come and only four beds vacant. Some men might come in who are dangerously ill. First come, first served, would not answer; the man who is most ill should be taken in first; if not, he may die in the street.
7104. But you might have some spare beds? That is impossible; the place is too small.
7105. President.] Was it in your experience that there were a number of cases in here—chronic cases—which might very well have been kept in the Liverpool Asylum? Most decidedly.
7106. How many such patients were there? To my knowledge, there were many here who spent their time either here or in Darlinghurst.
7107. Mr. Ellis.] Do you think it would be better for all the patients belonging to all the doctors to be put indiscriminately into the same wards, instead of giving a portion of a ward to one doctor? No; I think that would make confusion.
7108. President.] When you said that patients were either here or in Darlinghurst, did you mean Darlinghurst Gaol? Yes.
7109. Mr. Wearne.] Did you say many of them were of that class? Yes, a great many of them. I have seen them frequently at the Police Courts.
7110. Did these patients come in under Colonial Secretary's orders? They generally came in under some clergyman's order. The greatest ruffians always get in on clergyman's orders. They go to clergymen, tell them a pitiable story, and generally succeed in getting an order.

Nurse Margaret Caulfield called in and examined:—

- Nurse M. Caulfield.
11 June, 1873.
7111. President.] How long have you been here? One year and six months.
7112. This Commission has been appointed by the Government to inquire into the state of the Infirmary. If you have any statement or complaint to make against anybody, you are free to do so? I have not any complaints against any one at all.
7113. Mr. Metcalfe.] Does everybody treat you kindly? Yes.
7114. From the highest to the lowest? Yes.
7115. Mr. Driver.] Have you been snubbed in any way by any one since you have been here—by any one of the heads of the department? No sir, I have not.
7116. Or made little of, or anything of that kind? No, not in the least.
7117. President.] Are you all getting on comfortably here? Yes, very comfortably, sir.
7118. Mr. Goold.] Has that been the case all along? Yes.
7119. Mr. Driver.] Do you know of any single instance since you came here, in which the treatment has been other than you have stated? No, sir; it has been much the same.

Nurse Emily Marks called in and examined:—

- Nurse E. Marks.
11 June, 1873.
7120. President.] How long have you been here? One year and a half.
7121. This Commission has been appointed by the Government to inquire into the state of the Infirmary. If there is anything you wish to tell us, or if there is any complaint to make about anybody, you are free to make it? I have no complaints to make.
7122. Mr. Metcalfe.] You have been well treated since you have been here? Yes.
7123. And been comfortable? Yes.
7124. Mr. Goold.] What age are you? Twenty-two.
7125. Mr. Driver.] You have been treated kindly by all persons here? Yes.
7126. Have you at any time required information or instruction at the hands of the lady superintendent? Yes, sometimes. Whenever I have, she has given it me.
7127. Have you always found her ready to afford any information or instruction? Yes, whenever I have asked her.
7128. President.] Do you get information from her? Yes.

Nurse Jessie Johnson called in and examined:—

- Nurse J. Johnson.
11 June, 1873.
7129. President.] How long have you been here? Two years and six months.
7130. This Commission has been appointed by the Government to inquire into the state of the Sydney Infirmary. Have you any complaint to make about anything or anybody? I have no complaint to make, sir.
7131. Mr. Metcalfe.] You are quite comfortable here, and kindly treated? Yes.
7132. Mr. Goold.] What position do you occupy? Nurse.

Nurse

Nurse Harriet Jupp called in and examined :—

7133. President.] How long have you been here? One year and a half.
 7134. Mr. Gould.] What age are you? Twenty-two.
 7135. President.] This Commission has been appointed by the Government to inquire into the state of the Sydney Infirmary. If there is anything you know, and you think we should know of, or if there is any complaint you have to make about anybody, whatever their position in the Infirmary, you are free to make it without fear? No, I have no complaint to make.
 7136. Mr. Metcalfe.] You have always been treated kindly? Yes.
 7137. By every one? Yes.
 7138. Mr. Driver.] Do you know of any nurses having been treated unkindly by any one since you have been here? No, I never heard of it.
 7139. Mr. Metcalfe.] Do you agree well together? Yes.
 7140. Mr. Driver.] And the lady superintendent has treated you kindly? Very kindly indeed.
 7141. Have you found her ready to impart information when you desire it? Yes.

Nurse
H. Jupp.

11 June, 1873.

Nurse Selina Ann Davis called in and examined :—

7142. President.] How long have you been here? Two years and a half.
 7143. This Commission has been appointed by the Government to inquire into the state of the Infirmary. If you wish to make any statement to us, or any complaint about anything in the institution, or about anybody, you are at liberty to do so? No sir.
 7144. Mr. Driver.] Are you satisfied with your situation here? Yes; I am that satisfied, I intend to stay to fulfil the three years.
 7145. You have never been treated unkindly by any one? No.

Nurse
S. A. Davis.

11 June, 1873.

Nurse Emily Tookey called in and examined :—

7146. President.] How long have you been here? Two years and five months.
 7147. This Commission has been appointed to inquire into the state of the Sydney Infirmary. If you wish to state anything you think we should know, or to make any complaint about anybody, you are free to make it? I have no complaint. I have been very comfortable since I have been here.
 7148. Mr. Metcalfe.] And kindly treated? Yes.
 7149. Mr. Driver.] Do you know of any case of nurses being unkindly treated by anybody in authority? No, I never heard of one.
 7150. You yourself have not known a complaint? No.

Nurse
E. Tookey.

11 June, 1873.

Nurse Ann Traviss called in and examined :—

7151. President.] How long have you been here? Two years last April.
 7152. This Commission has been appointed by the Government to inquire into the state of the Infirmary. If you have any statement or complaint to make, you are at liberty to do so? I have not anything, sir.
 7153. Mr. Metcalfe.] Have you been kindly treated since you have been here? Yes, very kindly.
 7154. Everything goes smoothly and right? Yes.
 7155. Mr. Driver.] You have had nothing to complain of? Nothing.
 7156. And none of your superior officers have treated you unkindly? No. Miss Osburn has treated me very kindly.
 7157. You are perfectly contented with the position? Yes.

Nurse
A. Traviss.

11 June, 1873.

Nurse Mary Ann Rafters called in and examined :—

7158. President.] How long have you been here? Three years in August.
 7159. This Commission has been appointed to inquire into the state of the Infirmary. If you wish to make any statement or complaint, you are at liberty to do so? I have no complaints to make.
 7160. Then you have nothing to say to the Commission? Not any complaint to make.
 7161. Mr. Driver.] Have you been treated unkindly at all? No.

Nurse
M. A. Rafters.

11 June, 1873.

Nurse Caroline Rucker called in and examined :—

7162. President.] How long have you been here? Two years and two months.
 7163. This is a Commission which has been appointed by the Government, to inquire into the Sydney Infirmary. If you wish to give any evidence, or make any complaints about anybody in the institution, you are quite free to do so? I have been kindly treated—exceedingly so, but for one thing: I understood when I came, that the lady superintendent was to give us instruction, but she has not. There were lessons given formerly, twice a week.
 7164. You had heard of it? Yes.
 7165. You came in with that understanding? Yes, that there was instruction given to the nurses in general.
 7166. Mr. Ellis.] Are you aware why that instruction was done away with? I am not.
 7167. Did you ever inquire? I did not.
 7168. Did you ask Miss Osburn? I did not. I have no doubt that she had some good reason.

Nurse
C. Rucker.

11 June, 1873.

- Nurse
C. Rucker.]
11 June, 1873.
7169. Mr. Driver.] Do you think it would be beneficial? Yes, it would be a great benefit to us, and it would help us in our work. It would make me remain here, whereas now I wish to give it up. I would continue in the work, but wish it to be under her instruction; but at present some of the work is rather lowering.
7170. Mr. Metcalfe.] It is more the work of a servant? Well, not quite, but I feel it hard sometimes.
7171. Mr. Goold.] Have you received any instruction? Not from the lady.
7172. From a sister? Yes; if we have a case and point it out to the lady, and she will give us any instruction we require.
7173. I understand you have applied to her in this way? Yes.
7174. Mr. Driver.] And she is always ready to do so? Yes, with the greatest pleasure.
7175. She treats you with kindness? With the greatest kindness.
7176. Do you think it is desirable to give these lectures? Yes; it would keep the staff up, and I am sure all the nurses would be willing to attend.
7177. Mr. Goold.] And do you think any have been deterred from coming by these lectures having ceased? Not any that I know of.
7178. Mr. Driver.] And you yourself would be more likely to continue? Yes.
7179. President.] You have nothing else to say? No.

Nurse Marion Fairburn called in and examined:—

- Nurse
M. Fairburn.]
11 June, 1873.
7180. President.] How long have you been here? Two years.
7181. This Commission has been appointed by the Government to inquire into the state of the Infirmary. If you wish to state anything to us that you think we should know about the place, or have any complaint to make of any one, you are at liberty to do so? I have no complaint to make about anybody or against the treatment at all.
7182. Mr. Metcalfe.] Are you quite comfortable? Yes, very comfortable indeed.
7183. And you think everything goes on smoothly? Yes.
7184. President.] You are going on comfortably amongst yourselves? Yes.
7185. Mr. Driver.] How have you been treated by the heads of the institution generally? Generally, very well.
7186. You have no fault to find? Neither with the lady or anybody placed under her.
7187. You are treated with consideration? Yes, with consideration.
7188. Mr. Goold.] What instruction do you get? The lady superintendent gives us instruction at any time we have a case in the wards we do not understand; she will explain all about it to us, and is willing to tell us anything that we wish to know.
7189. Mr. Driver.] Have you, on applying to the lady superintendent, found her ready to impart instruction? At all times ready, and she is willing always to give us advice. She will ask us if we understand things, and if we do not, she will tell us, and take great pains to explain to us.

Nurse Mary Jane Telford called in and examined:—

- Nurse
M. J. Telford.]
11 June, 1873.
7190. President.] How long have you been here? One year and ten months.
7191. Mr. Goold.] How old are you? Twenty-one next October.
7192. President.] This Commission has been appointed by the Government to inquire into the state of the Sydney Infirmary. If you have any statement or complaint which you wish to make, you are at liberty to do so? I have no complaint to make against any one.
7193. Mr. Metcalfe.] You are kindly treated by everybody? Yes.

Nurse Mary Kerr called in and examined:—

- Nurse
M. Kerr.]
11 June, 1873.
7194. President.] You are one of the nurses in this institution? Yes.
7195. How long have you been here? Five years next December.
7196. This Commission has been appointed by the Government to inquire into the state of the Infirmary. If you wish to make any statement, to speak about anything, or to make any complaint about anybody, you are at liberty to do so? The only thing I have to complain of is the bathman refusing to bath patients.
7197. Is there anything else you would like to speak about? No, only the diets.
7198. Of course a great many matters such as this we have had evidence about, and we will not trouble you to go into that matter; but is there anything else, any personal complaint as to your own treatment? No, I have no complaints; I have always been treated well; but the bathman is very troublesome. That is the man Guss. When I have gone and told him that the lady superintendent wished him to go for a clergyman for a dying patient, he has refused to go.

Nurse Mary Gordon called in and examined:—

- Nurse
M. Gordon.]
11 June, 1873.
7199. President.] How long have you been here? Three years and nine months.
7200. This Commission has been appointed to inquire into the state of the Infirmary. If there is any statement you wish to make against anybody in the institution, you are at liberty to do it? I do not wish to make any statement; but if you ask any question, I am willing to answer it. My position is no better here than when I first came.
7201. You came as a probationer? Yes.
7202. You are now a nurse? Yes; but I have still just the same duties to discharge as when I came.
7203. What salary do you receive? £30 a year.
7204. What did you commence with? £20.
7205. As a probationer? Yes.
7206. It was raised to £30? Yes.
7207. What are the other nurses getting? I do not know.

7208. Do not you know from one another? We don't ask one another.

7209. Is that the complaint you wish to make? I am in my fourth year now, and when I came here I understood that every year I was to get a rise.

7210. For how long? As long as I stayed.

7211. Then if you stayed ten years, you would get £100 a year? Well, I don't think I should get to £100 a year.

7212. How far do you think you would go? I have been here nearly four years, and I am entitled to a third rise.

7213. You are entitled to £40 a year? ———

7214. Is that what you think you are entitled to? I think I am now entitled to £36 a year.

7215. What do you think you should get next? £40. The head nurses are receiving that.

7216. But you are not a head nurse? I am not in that position.

7217. Mr. Driver.] Do you discharge the duties of head nurse? I have done so sometimes.

7218. Mr. Gould.] Do you think you should be in that position from the time you have been here? Yes, I think that I should be in that position from the time I have been here.

7219. Mr. Driver.] Have vacancies occurred which induce you to think you should have been placed there? Yes; there have been vacancies, and none of us have been promoted.

7220. Mr. Gould.] How have they been filled up? By new probationers.

7221. Mr. Cowper.] Have you seen any nurse in your position promoted without being made a sister or a head nurse? No, I have not.

7222. The other nurses in your position are treated in the same way as you are? Yes, in the same way.

7223. You don't think any one in your position has been favoured more than yourself? I do not think so.

7224. Mr. Driver.] You have no unkindness to complain of? No.

7225. President.] There is nothing else you would like to state? Nothing else.

Nurse
M. Gordon.

11 June, 1873.

Nurse Sarah Gibson called in and examined:—

7226. President.] How long have you been here? Two years and seven months.

7227. This Commission has been appointed by the Government to inquire into the state of the Infirmary. If you wish to make any complaint about anything, you are at liberty to do so? No, I have no complaint to make.

7228. Mr. Metcalfe.] You are very comfortable here, and everything goes on rightly, as you believe? Yes.

7229. Mr. Driver.] You have not been unkindly treated or domineered over? I have been kindly treated—very kindly.

Nurse
S. Gibson.

11 June, 1873.

Miss Osburn, Lady-Superintendent of the Sydney Infirmary, called in and further examined:—

7230. President.] We wish to ask you one question. From the pay-sheet before us, we appear to have had in all the nurses of the establishment, except Mary Ann Hart and Phœbe Stead? Yes.

7231. Are they in Sydney? They are not in the institution. Nurse Hart is in Sydney; at least I believe so.

7232. Is she away on leave? Yes.

7233. Where is Phœbe Stead? She is going to England with a friend. She wishes to return to her parents, who are aged people. She is hoping to go with some friends of Mrs. James Laidley.

7234. She has left the establishment? Yes.

7235. Then we have seen all the nurses now, both head and under nurses? Yes; all except the probationers.

Miss Osburn.

11 June, 1873.

Charles McKay, Esq., M.D., Honorary Surgeon, Sydney Infirmary, called in and examined:—

[NOTE.—This evidence was taken on Thursday, 5th June; but, owing to the witness retaining the manuscript sent to him for revision, it could not be printed with the other evidence taken on that day.]

7236. President.] You are one of the honorary staff of the Sydney Infirmary? I am.

7237. How long have you been so? I think between eleven and twelve years. I got the clerk of the hospital to look up the date, and he says—"Dr. McKay was temporarily elected as honorary surgeon of the Sydney Infirmary, in the room of Dr. Robertson, resigned, 12 May, 1862." I attended before that, and I have held the position ever since.

7238. You have been attending the Infirmary more or less ever since that time? Yes, I have attended constantly, excepting once or twice when I was sick for a week.

7239. Are you acquainted with the present mode by which patients are admitted into the Infirmary, turn and turn about for a week each? Yes, that is the way in which the surgeons admit; I do not know how the physicians do. The physicians used to have a ward each, and take in patients as the beds were empty; but the surgeons have beds mixed up amongst each other, and in a small hospital I think that is the best plan.

7240. Why? Because it gives us an opportunity of taking in necessitous cases. If I had a ward to myself I might have six or seven beds empty; and another gentleman may have his beds all full, so we have to take week and week about, and the beds are never empty.

7241. But why could not a doctor admit patients to empty beds, no matter whether the beds were his own or not? I am trying to explain that if the surgeons had each a ward they could not do so rightly.

7242. Why not? I gave you the reason. One ward would have six or seven beds empty, and another might be overcrowded.

7243. Why should it be so? Say that I have No. 1 ward, and that no one but myself can send patients into it. Seven or eight of my patients might be discharged this week, and no one could fill the beds up. The plan we have now of letting the surgeons fill up the empty beds in his week is a much better plan.

7244. Why should there be this over-crowding on the surgeons' side more than on the medical side? I do not know. I do not go into the medical side, except when I am called there in consultation. I do not know what system they have there.

7245. No such difficulty appears to arise on the medical side, where the doctors have each a ward, or so many beds each? I do not know that it is so.

7246. I am informing you that it is? Yes.

7247. Is there anything to lead you to suppose that the surgeons would have more difficulty in carrying out that system than the medical men? I do not think so. If the surgeons had separate wards, then each surgeon would have to attend daily to admit patients.

7248. Why? Because of the want of knowledge as to where the empty beds were.

7249. Why could they not be informed where the empty beds were? Yes; but suppose that Dr. McLaurin had no empty beds, and Dr. Alleyne had seven or eight empty beds, then Dr. McLaurin could not send patients into Dr. Alleyne's ward.

7250. Why not? That depends on the direction of the directors, or the arrangement among the physicians.

7251. What is to prevent him doing it? I do not know of anything but the compact between themselves. There was an order in the house that there was never to be an empty bed in the hospital. If a bed was empty on the medical side it was to be filled up at once; if no medical case offered, by a surgical case.

7252. You approve of the present rule then, because it gives each doctor power to admit his own patients in his own week? Yes.

7253. And gives him the choice of cases? No, I do not think he has any choice of cases. Of course he can only take in certain cases. He is forbidden to admit chronic cases, and cases of persons who are not likely to recover.

7254. But can he not keep patients in longer than is necessary, in order to retain beds until his week for admitting cases comes round? I do not think that any of the surgeons have ever done so. I do not think the surgeons do so.

7255. Do you know of any instances of its having been done? I know that patients are sometimes kept in longer than is necessary, but we have no means of redressing the evil; we cannot get them into the Liverpool Asylum. There is one instance at present of a boy who has been in the hospital for fourteen months. He was discharged long ago, when I was doing duty for Dr. Jones, and he will be there any length of time, for there is no place to send him to.

7256. You are not aware of any such thing having happened as I spoke of just now? As what?

7257. As patients being kept in so that their beds may be emptied when the week for the surgeon to admit patients comes round? I do not think so.

7258. Are you sure that it has never happened? I could not tell you. If I was on my oath, I could not say.

7259. I think it is fair to tell you, in order that you may have an opportunity of denying or explaining the matter, that it has been stated that this has occasionally happened, and in some instances in your own case? Tell me the case, that I may know of it.

7260. You deny having done such a thing for yourself? Purposely. I have often recommended patients to stay in a few days longer than is perhaps absolutely necessary, when I think that their staying in may be of benefit to them. The other day I recommended a patient to stay in a little longer, but she would not stay.

7261. Has it ever occurred that patients have been pointed out to you as being fit to go out, and you have declined to send them out until your week came round? The sister of the ward has sometimes said to me that a patient was fit to be discharged, but I was not to be dictated to by a nurse. They very often think that patients are fit to be discharged when they are not. There was a letter written to the Board the other day by a girl from New Zealand, who came in with an ulceration of the neck of the womb. She was in a short time, and she was well, and she said she was quite unfit to be examined. She would not allow the nurse to examine her, and I had to examine her.

7262. In the course of your experience, I dare say you have found that these people sometimes make unfounded charges against people? Of course they do.

7263. These charges should be inquired into? Yes, they should. Sometimes they make statements that are astonishing.

7264. Do you remember the case of Mrs. Ross? I do not know.

7265. Did you ever, outside the hospital, attend a patient of that name? I had a patient, I think, of that name. I took in a patient last week who had been a patient of Dr. Jones's. She came from up the country. Yes, I remember Mrs. Ross now. She was a patient of mine outside the hospital, and I recommended her to go in.

7266. How long did you attend her outside the hospital? She came down from Cooma, I think, and I attended her for a very short time. Her husband died in the Infirmary some time ago, but he was not a patient of mine.

7267. You remember Mrs. Ross being in the hospital? Yes.

7268. And she was there under Dr. Jones? Yes, either Jones or Fortescue.

7269. And you had patients in the ward in which she was? Yes; I always asked her as I passed how she was getting on.

7270. She says that she was in the hospital for the purpose of getting some opinion as to whether she should be operated upon? I recommended her to go in to be operated upon. It was a most serious operation, and a woman who was not in good circumstances would hardly be able to live through an operation like that, unless she had a good deal of medical aid. It would require several surgeons or medical men to be present.

7271. Do you remember how it was that Dr. Jones did not see the patient for some time after she went in? I do not know.

7272. Did she complain to you that she was neglected? Not that she was neglected, but that Dr. Jones had not seen her.

7273. Do you remember whether Dr. Jones was ill at the time? I do not know.

7274. It was a case, I suppose, in which an opinion had simply to be pronounced as to whether the woman should be operated upon or not? Yes, it was a capital operation. The chances were that she might have died under the operation, and it would require a Medical Board to give an opinion upon the case. There is no prudent medical man who would operate in such a case on his own opinion without support. I have another case now of the same kind.

C. McKay,
Esq., M.D.

7275. Then she did not complain of any neglect, but only said that she had not seen a medical man? Not that I am aware of.

5 June, 1873.

7276. What is your opinion as to the present healthiness of the hospital, as to whether it requires anything in the way of drainage? I think that the back yard should be properly drained, and a portion of the soil removed, to facilitate the stagnant water going away. After a day's rain now, if you want to go from the old house to the new, you will have to pick your steps.

7277. From the back of the old building to the south wing? Yes.

7278. Is there any other suggestion you can make for its improvement? The improvement of the hospital?

7279. Yes? I have recommended the directors to throw down that old kitchen and build a kitchen, bath-house, and operating-room altogether, where the old bath-room and operating-room are now, putting the kitchen on the top. I do not know whether you know where the old operating-room is; it is just above the men's bath-room. I think if that old place were extended out a bit towards the old kitchen, with a good operating-room on top of it, and the cook-house on top of that, it would take a great many bad smells from the place, and get rid of that old kitchen and useless laundry there.

7280. Is there anything else you can think of that requires improvement? I do not think that the dead-house is in the proper place; it should be in the south-east corner.

7281. Is there anything else? I think that the apothecaries—or one of them, at any rate—should reside on the premises.

7282. The dispensers you mean? Yes.

7283. Have you observed at times that there are irregularities in the sending up of medicines into the wards? Yes, I very often have to complain of them.

7284. Do you think that the mode of sending them up by boys is a bad one? I do not think it is the fault of the boys, but of the dispensers, and they put the blame on the nurses; and when I have sometimes gone into the dispensary to wash my hands I have found it in a very dirty state.

7285. Mr. Couper.] Do you not think it is objectionable to have the bed-cards sent out of the wards? You cannot help it. They have introduced the system of writing the prescriptions on a slip of paper, which is placed on a board that hangs at the head of a man's bed, and the boys come up and take those boards down.

7286. How could the sending of the cards out of the wards be avoided? You would require to have a clinical clerk and a proper reporting book, and you would require to alter the hours of attendance of the medical men there, or else get a clinical clerk for each of them.

7287. President.] Do you not think that it is undesirable to send the cards down to the house steward in order that he should make up the diets? I do not think that it can be done otherwise, unless you had a separate board for the diet and the prescription; then one could go to the dispenser and the other to the house steward. The difficulty might be easily remedied, because there is a place for the diets at the bottom, and the prescriptions and diets are on the same paper; but if you had one for each, there would be a great improvement.

7288. Mr. Ellis.] Could not the doctors write their prescriptions in the usual way, and let them be sent down to the dispensary? What do you mean?

7289. Can they not write out their prescriptions, as they do usually in cases outside the hospital, and send them to the dispensers, to let them know what to supply? Yes, but the prescriptions would be lost in that way. Now they cannot be lost, because they are nailed on to a board with brass nails. The only mode would be to get a clinical clerk to report cases and put down the prescriptions, and then have a card for the dispenser and another for the house steward; or the book might be sent down to the dispenser.

7290. Mr. Metcalfe.] Have you had an opportunity of judging as to whether these dispensers have been over-worked? I do not think that they are, and for this reason,—that about eight years ago there was only one dispenser there, who did all the work.

7291. But has not the number of patients who are attended to at the dispensary very much increased? I dare say that it has.

7292. President.] Has not a branch dispensary been established since then? Yes.

7293. And one of the dispensers goes out every day to the branch dispensary, while the other remains to do the hospital work? Yes, but a man in a properly organized hospital can dispense a good deal of medicine in a few hours.

7294. Mr. Metcalfe.] What is your opinion as to the nursing of the hospital? I am told by patients who have been in there, that there is a good deal of coercion and cruelty used.

7295. President.] Have you seen it yourself? I have not, but I was called upon to speak to a woman the other day who was said to have given some insolence to Miss Osburn, and I inquired into the matter. [This was the woman that I advised to stay in a little longer.] When I asked what was the matter, why she had made such a disturbance, the woman said she did not make any row, and she was not insolent; that she only said that the night nurse was washing a child who occupied one of the cots, and the child was cross, and the nurse put her under the cold water tap for punishment, and that she thought it was her duty, as a mother, to interfere; and Miss Osburn scolded the woman for interfering.

7296. Mr. Goold.] When did that take place? A fortnight or three weeks ago.

7297. President.] What was the age of the child? I do not know. It was not my patient, but Dr. Bedford's. I told the woman not to interfere again in a case of the kind, but to report it to the medical man.

7298. Mr. Ellis.] Was it to wash the child or to punish it, that the nurse put it under the tap? To punish it because it was crying.

7299. Mr. Goold.] Is the patient who spoke to you about the matter in the Infirmary now? No; she went out the day before yesterday.

7300. Is the child there? Yes, I believe so. It is Dr. Bedford's patient.

7301. President.] You said there was a good deal of cruelty: can you mention any other instances? A woman of the name of Alice Brown told me that she was glad to get out, that she was bullied, and made to scrub when she had no right to.

7302. Under the rules, are not the patients bound to assist in cleaning, when they are able to do so? I think that they should.

7303. Is there not a rule that says that they shall? Yes.

7304.

- C. McKay, Esq., M.D.
5 June, 1873.
7304. What ward was this woman in? In A ward.
7305. What ward was it? The female lock ward.
7306. Mr. Ellis.] Are there any other instances? Yes, I have had several instances.
7307. What were they? I had a housemaid who lived with me for several years—she was a most respectable girl—and she went into the hospital with a disease of the chest. This was in the olden times, when Mrs. Ghost was there. She said that some of the patients were treated most cruelly.
7308. That was in Mrs. Ghost's time? Yes.
7309. How were they treated cruelly? I really cannot tell you—it is so long ago.
7310. Do you know of any other instances of cruelty or coercion in recent times? I cannot remember.
7311. Mr. Metcalfe.] What was that child doing in the lock ward? She was not in the lock ward, she was in No. 9 ward—the ward where the cots are.
7312. President.] Was the woman in the lock ward suffering from venereal disease? Yes, venereal warts.
7313. They are not women whose word is to be generally relied on, are they? I do not know.
7314. Are you satisfied with the nursing? It is pretty fair; but I do not think that it does so well that it should cost so much money. I do not think that Miss Osburn is fit to be there.
7315. In what respect? I have asked the trained nurses who came from England if they could examine a woman—examine the uterus and apply leeches to it—and not one of them could do it until I taught them.
7316. Did you ask them soon after they came here whether they could do that in order to find out their qualifications? Yes. There is only one trained nurse in the surgical department in the south wing.
7317. Mr. Ellis.] Now? Yes, and there always has been but one trained nurse.
7318. President.] Do you know whether the nurses who came out from England were trained by Miss Osburn or sent out by Miss Nightingale? They were sent here, I believe, by Miss Nightingale.
7319. Then how does the responsibility of their not knowing these things rest on Miss Osburn? She should have taught them.
7320. But you say you found this out when they first came here? Not directly, but as they came into my wards.
7321. Do you know that the duty of training nurses rests upon the sisters, and not upon the lady superintendent? It is the sisters that I am speaking of.
7322. Are you acquainted with the Nightingale system of nursing? No.
7323. Then you do not know what, under that system, are the duties of sisters and lady superintendents? No; but I expect them to be able to apply leeches to a woman's uterus. I have some of Miss Nightingale's books, but have not read them. There is one of those sisters now the matron of the Prince Alfred Hospital, in Melbourne. I showed her, and taught her, and the other one too, who is now matron of the asylum down in George-street.
7324. Then, if they came here as trained nurses from England, they must have been improper people to send out? I should say so. If I had the selection of nurses, I would not take them if they could not do that.
7325. Did you teach them all this? Yes, I taught them.
7326. All these nurses who came out? Yes, all but one who was married.
7327. What did you teach them? To introduce the speculum, and to apply leeches to the neck of the womb.
7328. Did you teach them all that? Yes.
7329. Did you teach Sister Mary, who is there now? Yes.
7330. Mr. Ellis.] These are all delicate operations, are they not, and not of frequent occurrence? Yes, they are of very frequent occurrence.
7331. Do you think that Miss Osburn does not know how to do this? No, I do not think so.
7332. Why? She would teach these nurses.
7333. President.] Do you know that the committee discouraged Miss Osburn in giving lectures, and prevented her giving them? I never knew that she gave lectures.
7334. Then you are not aware that she has tried to teach them? I do not know that she teaches them anything more than how to make a bed.
7335. Are you aware that there is a rule against patients wearing their own clothes in the wards? I am aware that it is the fact that they do wear their own clothes.
7336. Is there not a rule to the effect that patients shall wear the clothes provided by the hospital? I think that they can wear warm clothing.
7337. Is there not a general rule that the patients shall not wear their own clothes? No, I have not thought it necessary —
7338. I ask you whether there is not a rule that patients shall not wear their own clothes? If it is necessary, I ask permission for them to wear their clothes.
