REPORT.

Sydney, 13 February, 1879.

To His Excellency SIR HERCULES ROBINSON, G.C.M.G., Governor-in-Chief, &c., &c.,—

Sir,

In returning our Commission to your Excellency, agreeably to the decision of the Executive Council, we do ourselves the honor to transmit so much of the evidence taken by us respecting the administration of the Lands and Survey Departments as up to the present time has been printed.

Immediately after the appointment of the Commission we made application for returns relative to the works of alienation and survey to serve as bases for the general enquiry contemplated.

As these returns have only recently been completed we are necessarily unable to deal fully with the important subjects involved, and such views and impressions respecting the same as we have received while engaged in other branches of investigation, we do not feel justified in embodying in this memorandum.

Shortly after our first meeting our attention was particularly directed by the Department of Lands to the relations existing between the Under Secretary and the Chief Commissioner of Conditional Sales, and to a difference which had arisen between the Under Secretary and the Deputy Surveyor General.

Acting upon the representation made to us that it was the desire of the Honorable Secretary for Lands that we should give precedence to the investigation of these matters, we proceeded to take evidence upon the questions contained in the papers referred to us.

On the 10th of January we were informed by the Department that the Government desired to have a Progress Report as early as might be convenient, and we replied that the Report asked for would be forwarded with the least possible delay.

We used all diligence to complete our inquiry, and but for the application of the Under Secretary for Lands to be re-examined on the matters specially referred to us, we should have been prepared to consider our Progress Report on the 24th of the same month.

As, however, the capacity and conduct of the Under Secretary had been impugned, we deemed it our duty to allow that officer the fullest opportunity for explanation.

Under these circumstances we were unable to close the examination before the 7th of February instant.

While engaged in the preparation of the Report, it became necessary that we should refer to papers respecting the conduct of certain Inspectors and Commissioners of Conditional Purchases referred to in the evidence, and on the 11th instant we renewed the application for certain papers which we had made to the Department on the 17th of December last year.

On

On the following day the President was informed that the Commission had received the serious consideration of the Government, and that it had been decided to terminate the enquiry. "As the above decision," the Under Secretary went on to say, "has now been formally ratified by the Executive Council, I am desired by Mr. Secretary Hoskins to request you to close the enquiry not later than Monday, the 17th instant."

The Department had been officially made aware that we were engaged in the preparation of our Report, and this action on the part of your Excellency's advisers appears to us as proof of a desire on their part to obstruct the expression of our opinions on the matters investigated.

In view of the fact that the Executive Council have thus terminated the enquiry, and so withdrawn our functions as a Commission, we doubt the propriety of entering fully and specifically into the various questions which have been brought under our notice, as further evidence might in some cases be necessary to assist our conclusions.

If, however, this difficulty did not exist, we should still find it impossible, consistently with a proper sense of the responsibility which must attach to our recommendations, to complete our Report by the time named, for the reason that we have not yet received from the Government Printer copies of the evidence taken at the last nine sittings of the Commission; and moreover, we could not in the time consider carefully all the important matters contained in the returns for which we had applied in the first stage of our proceedings, as also in the voluminous papers submitted to us since.

Under these circumstances, we confine the expression of our opinions to the narrow limits of a recommendation, that your Excellency's advisers should consider attentively the condition of the Lands Department. Owing to causes, the outcome of the Land law, influences from one side or the other are brought to bear on the Minister for Lands almost hourly from the day he assumes office; and, as the printed evidence herewith abundantly testifies, he is, subject to such influences, at all times liable to decide questions from imperfect information and under the representations of one-sided views.

This tendency to mal-administration is aggravated by the fact that all disputed cases within the colony are referred to the Minister, and as the evidence before the Commission stated that of conditional purchases "three-fourths of the whole, or at least a large proportion, involved matters of dispute." Whether this statement is fully confirmed or not by further evidence, still it is sufficiently clear that the due consideration of cases so numerous as they must be is quite beyond the capacity of any Minister.

Consequently that happens which abundant testimony proves, namely, that such doubtful cases are either hastily decided under one-sided influences, or they are indefinitely shelved.

The Departmental deficiencies to which we would wish to direct your Excellency's attention may be readily seen in the want of harmony existing between the different branches—namely, that immediately under the supervision of the Under Secretary, called the "Ministerial Branch," the branch of Conditional Sales, and the Survey Department.

The

The relative positions and duties of these divisions of the Public Service, though they should be working to one common end, are neither accurately defined nor are they in accord.

The Conditional Sales and Ministerial Branch are shown in the evidence not to work in unison as members of a common service, but as rival establishments, ignoring and thwarting each other.

As one cause of this incongruity we would request your Excellency's attention to a document of which a copy will be found in appendix "A" of the printed evidence herewith.

This minute professes to divide the authority of the head of the Department, with a view to putting an end to a state of things then existing between Mr. Stephen and Mr. Moriarty, but the ambiguity of its expression has caused numerous collisions and misconceptions between the branches in question, to the injury of the interests concerned and with no little prejudice to the credit of the Public Service.

With reference to matters involving the personal culpability of officers, judging from the oral evidence delivered and the correspondence placed before us, we state deliberately that in our opinion it would be an extravagant fiction to apply such terms as discipline or system to the Department. The relations shown to exist between the Under Secretary for Lands and the Commissioner for Conditional Sales are discreditable. These officers, though prominent by position and for that reason bound to maintain the character and efficiency of the Public Service by influence and example, appear to be mainly instigated in all cases where duty brings them in contact by the strongest feelings of mutual distrust and antagonism.

Further, we recognise, and point to the evidence for corroboration—as the origin and cause of much public evil and official scandal—in the conduct of the Under Secretary the utter want of a due appreciation of the responsibilities of his position and the absence of all qualities essential for intelligent, vigorous, and upright administration; and in the conduct of the Commissioner of Conditional Sales an impatience of discipline, intemperance of language and manner, and a paramount spirit of self-seeking, shown in repeated cases in disregard both of the character of the service and the rights and feelings of other officers.

The intolerance of control might perhaps have been anticipated from his appointment to a subordinate position in a Department where he had previously been the head.

We would wish further to point out to your Excellency that the internal economy of the Department is exceedingly defective, more especially in reference to the record and supervision of current business.

As things are, cases may be shelved and may remain without being dealt with for years, till some pressure from outside the Department brings the matter for the first time to the knowledge of the functionary who is directly responsible to the public.

In our own experience during our investigating we found it at times difficult to procure papers referred to by witnesses, as the evidence discloses.

With reference to the inefficiency admitted to exist in the general Staff of the Lands Department, it is stated in evidence that many appointments have been made under political interest of persons possessing no special qualification, and that such employés are left as permanent "legacies" to the Department.

We

We would respectfully suggest that this matter requires special scrutiny.

For the reasons already stated, we are precluded from entering at length upon the consideration of the facts and principles of administration involved in the cases cited by the Deputy Surveyor General, in obedience to the direction of the Minister, that he should withdraw or substantiate the statement which he made upon one of them on the 30th of July, 1878, namely, that "The Under Secretary, on all possible occasions, especially where he takes a personal interest, endeavours directly and indirectly to prevent any expression of opinion by the officers of the Survey Department. I must therefore refer to the Secretary for Lands whether it is his desire that they should not report on the merits of cases as well as the facts, and submit to his experience whether it would be to the advantage of the public that they should be gagged as desired; and that—as to the charge itself and proof—I have not charged the Under Secretary with having a personal interest, but with taking a personal interest, by which I intended to say, that when he is acquainted with an applicant or an applicant influences him, he acts as special pleader for him, and is unwilling to have such special pleading sifted through the Survey Office." We think, however, that we should fail in the discharge of the important duty which your Excellency has cast upon us were we not to express our opinion that the papers, submitted with obvious reluctance by the Deputy Surveyor General, abundantly justify his remonstrance. In many of these cases the proper Departmental action required was perfectly plain; but we consider that the Under Secretary has exhibited a singular want of discernment; that he has usurped functions which can only be rightly exercised by the Minister responsible to Parliament; and that he has shown an undue preference to the interests of particular persons, which must go far to cloud the action of the Department with the most injurious suspicions. It is important that the decisions of the Minister for Lands on conflicting claims should be based on full and accurate information; but the division of authority which exists in the Department, and the strong personal feelings which have been allowed to sway the action of the officers principally concerned in the administration of the law have often obliged the Minister to act upon partial information, and have deprived him of the assistance which he is entitled to receive from officers whose long experience may be supposed to have given them special aptitude in dealing with intricate details and conflicting interests.

We have not been permitted to see the papers for which we asked, relating to the conduct of Commissioners and Inspectors of Conditional Purchases, but we have reason to believe that some of the persons appointed to the position of Inspectors were men of dissipated life and manners, so much so that they have not hesitated to insult and hinder the Commissioners by drunkenness and misbehaviour in their courts. Offences of this nature appear to have been repeatedly condoned or suffered to pass with merely nominal punishment.

We cannot divest ourselves of the impression which we derive from the evidence of the Under Secretary, that a former Minister for Lands was himself responsible for the toleration of these scandals, nor are we able to approve the action of the Under Secretary in failing either to forward the complaints of the Commissioner in the case of one Inspector to that officer's more immediate superior in the Department, or to formally submit them to the Minister. We deem it unnecessary to remark upon the effect which must be produced by such flagrant misconduct on the part of trusted officers of the Government in small and scattered settlements of the country to which they are sent as the impartial representatives of the Government, or to point out how fatally mischievous their influence must be in producing widespread distrust in the integrity of the administration of the Land laws of the Colony.

It is with considerable regret that we find ourselves unable to deal satisfactorily with the delays in the Survey Department. These may occur from insufficient power or from imperfect organisation.

The Under Secretary has brought under our notice cases which have, he states, been delayed for periods of four and six years, and he has submitted a Return showing that out of 6,160 improvement purchase applications under reference to the Survey Department on the 22nd of October last, 1,202 received in the year 1875. A minute by the Chief Commissioner of Conditional Sales, dated 7th February instant, shows that 4,690 conditional purchase returns have been submitted by him from the years 1872 to 1877 inclusive, and remained to be dealt with on that date either by the surveyors or the draftsmen under the control of the Surveyor General, fifteen of these having been sent as far back as the years 1872 and 1873.

We have not been able to examine the Surveyor General upon these and other matters, but we think there can be little doubt that the long delays which have occurred (whatever their cause) have been most prejudicial to the public and the Department.

Work in the Deeds Branch also appears to be eighteen months in arrear, but for all that, instances are on record in which purchasers at auction have obtained their deeds while the lands conveyed have been in the occupation of Conditional purchasers whose claims have been allowed to remain in the Department undealt with.

We think that the letter which we received yesterday from the Department of Lands makes it incumbent upon us to withdraw at the earliest possible moment from the position to which we had been called by your Excellency, and therefore we abstain from particular reference to numerous other matters which have been brought under our notice by oral evidence and official papers—matters which, under other circumstances, we should deem of sufficient importance to demand special mention at our hands.

We have instructed our Secretary to withhold the despatch of this memorandum until Monday, the 17th instant, or such earlier date as may enable him to append the evidence which is now in the hands of the Government Printer.

We have the honor to be,

Your Excellency's obedient humble servants,

R. P. ABBOTT.

GEORGE RANKEN.

The Under Secretary for Lands to The Minister for Lands, relative to the Progress Report of the late Lands and Survey Departments Commission.

Sir,

Department of Lands, Sydney, 26 February, 1879.

Having been afforded the opportunity of perusing the "Progress Report" furnished by the late Lands and Survey Departments Commission, I trust that I may be allowed to take the earliest possible opportunity of submitting my observations with reference to it.

The serious nature of the Report, as affecting myself and my official reputation, together with other matters to which I shall have to allude, will, I think, prove the justice of my request.

Should I in any way in my remarks appear to impugn the mode of procedure adopted by the late Commissioners, or their impartiality, I shall regret it. They must remember, however, that both my character and capacity have been questioned; and that they (the Commissioners) are the first who have ever cast a slur upon either, during my long term of public service, now twenty-five years.

In the first place, I would invite attention to paragraph 7 of the Report, in which the Commissioners state that "but for the application of the Under Secretary to be examined they would have been prepared to go on with their Report on the 24th January."

The plain deduction from this statement is, that, although they had been receiving all kinds of evidence against me, I should not have had an opportunity of refuting that evidence but for my special application.

This inference is strengthened by the fact that upon the only occasion on which I addressed Mr. Abbott (the President) personally (or rather unofficially) on the subject of the inquiry, I informed him of my intention to ask for a re-examination, and his reply distinctly was, "If you really mean that, you had better apply soon."

In paragraph 8 the Commissioners say that they deemed it their duty to allow me "the fullest opportunity for explanation as to the matter in which my capacity and conduct had been impugned."

With regard to this last statement I would observe that if they consider my re-examination as having given that "fullest opportunity," it has been of but little service to me, as the evidence given on such re-examination, and which was sent to the Government Printing Office some days before the receipt of the Commissioners' Report, has never been printed, or at any rate has not been forwarded to the Government, and not a single portion of it is even alluded to by them.

In two or more cases, in addition to my oral evidence, I forwarded to the Commission papers and documentary evidence which amply and clearly vindicate me from the charges brought against me. With regard to these, also, the Commissioners are absolutely silent, although they expressed their wish to see the papers, and they were sent up in full time for their perusal and consideration. I hope that I may be permitted to express my regret that these documents were not allowed by the Commissioners to be printed with their Report.

I respectfully submit, however, that if the Commissioners did not see fit to wait for the printing of my last evidence, which there was nothing whatever (in the letter of instructions as to the closing of the inquiry) to prevent their doing, it would only have been in accordance with a spirit of fairness to have made some reference in their Report to the cases I have just alluded to, in which I claim to have entirely refuted the accusations made against me, especially as these were so prominently placed before them.

As the matter now stands their Report where relating to my conduct is based alone upon evidence antagonistic to me.

Passing over the next few paragraphs of the Report, which relate to general more than personal matters, I wish to invite attention to the statement of the Commissioners, in par. 16, with regard to Conditional Purchases,—that “three-fourths of the whole, or at least a large proportion, involved matters of dispute.”

This appears to have arisen from a mis-conception arising out of my evidence. I corrected, however, the impression which the Commissioners appear to have derived from it at a later period of my examination (see my reply to question 828, page 34), a fact which I conclude they lost sight of when framing their Report.

If it were correct that three-fourths of the conditional purchases made, or any approach to that number, involved matters of dispute, then (as observed by the Commissioners), no one Minister, with the business of all the other branches to attend to, could possibly cope with them.

I would also point out an error in paragraph 18, not of very much importance, but which, as it will evidently cause a misconception as to the constitution of the Department, and the nature and extent of my duties, I should like to rectify.

The Commissioners allude to the “Ministerial Branch” as being under the supervision of the Under Secretary, as distinguished from the “Conditional Sales Branch.”

The “Ministerial” Branch is only one out of the six branches of the Department under my immediate control, and is so designated in consequence of the business relating to it being (more than any other) of a nature that can be at once dealt with, on submission to the Minister, without reference to the Survey, or any other Branch. This was clearly shown by the evidence which I gave during the earlier part of my examination.

With reference to the relations existing between myself and the Chief Commissioner for Conditional Sales, and which (see par. 23) are designated as “discreditable,” I can only state that I am in no way responsible for them, as I think can be testified by any of the officers of the service who are acquainted with the cause of those relations, and can thus trace them back to their true origin.

Should any action of mine, by word or deed, have on any occasion tended to aggravate for the moment those relations, I can assert truly that it was the result of feelings of provocation and irritation, such as cannot, I think, be realized by any one who has not been obliged to endure a position, similar to that in which I have been placed in this Department, through Mr. Moriarty’s line of conduct towards me, with little interruption, ever since his reappointment to it.

In fact, as far as I could see, after repeated remonstrances (unavailing as far as any practical result was concerned) the only remedy would have been for me to surrender, my functions as Under Secretary, or allow them to be improperly interfered with, neither of which courses could I consent to adopt, whether in justice to myself, or the office which I hold.

I now come to the severe strictures which the Commissioners have thought necessary to pass upon me, in paragraph 24 of their Report, as to the alleged want of appreciation on my part of the responsibilities of my position; and also "the absence of all qualities essential for intelligent, vigorous, and upright administration."

It is difficult for me to tell on what grounds the Commissioners have arrived at this conclusion. I must simply therefore content myself by placing against their opinions the written testimony I have in my possession, of different Ministers for Lands, and others who have held high office there, with whom I have daily and constantly for years been brought into close official communication upon all matters connected with the business and administration of the Department. (See copies of letters hereto appended.)

I think that I am not over-confident, or showing any disrespect to the Commissioners, in saying that the evidence in my favor of men who have presided over the Department in a Ministerial capacity, and thus obtained a large and practical knowledge of its working, is superior in value to that of two gentlemen who never were a day in the Department, and whose opinions are therefore necessarily based upon evidence, the greater part of which has been obtained from two officers both of whom are unquestionably, at present (I regret to say), inimical to me.

Neither can I help remarking that the Commissioners, in their sweeping condemnation, do not appear to have in any way taken into account, or made allowance for, the difficulties which were made apparent to them in the administration and supervision of an immense department like that of the Lands, scattered as it is for want of sufficient accommodation, nor for the absence for years past, as pointed out by me, of any assistance in the way of a chief clerk, or in other respects, which I have frequently represented as necessary for effectual and proper supervision, as also for preventing some of the delays, which the public complain of, in the transaction of business.

Mr. Thomson, the only official member of the Commission (whose retirement at an early stage of the proceedings reduced its numbers to two) who, from his matured experience of the working of Ministerial Departments, entitles him, I presume, to speak with authority as to the functions and responsibilities of an Under Secretary, where in fact they begin and where they end, states in his letter of 9th December last (respecting his resignation) as follows, viz.:—"I also had a strong impression at the time, which may, however, have been formed without just cause, that my colleagues were inclined to hold Mr. Stephen responsible for far more than his share of the alleged delays and mismanagement of the Lands Department."

The proceedings of the Commission, and the numerous questions put to me upon all sorts of matters of clerical detail, as to the working of the different branches of the Department, appear to me to justify in a great measure the impression which Mr. Thomson derived during the short time he acted as a member of the Commission.

In paragraph 8 of the Report (already referred to) the Commissioners refer to the fact that my "capacity" had been impugned, as well as my conduct.

The chief, if not the only, evidence given against me in this respect, is that of the Chief Commissioner of Conditional Sales, Mr. A. O. Moriarty, and has reference more particularly to my management of the business of the "Lease" Branch.

I must ask permission therefore to call attention to, and to analyze some of this evidence, on which alone the Commissioners appear to have based their Report.

Mr.

Mr. Moriarty, as will be seen by the evidence, endeavoured some time ago by a Minute addressed to the Minister for Lands (to the terms of which I will not now advert) without transmission to me in the proper official manner, and without my previous knowledge; to take this business from my control.

As I am now on my defence, and not in the position of an accuser, I shall not say one word in condemnation of Mr. Moriarty, more than is absolutely necessary for correcting one or two of his statements, as also for defending myself against and refuting his imputations.

I would in the first place invite attention to page 81 of the printed evidence (reply to question No. 1815). Mr. Moriarty here states, in reference to this Lease business, that "up to that moment the whole treatment of the question had been in my (Mr. Moriarty's) hands"; and again "that it was to be brought under the personal control of the Under Secretary, who had not the same interest in the question," &c.

I was astonished at reading this statement, and am at a loss to account for it.

Mr. Moriarty had certainly dealt with the work, as chief clerk, in the same way as he then dealt with the business of other branches of the department. But for years past, both before he re-joined the department and since, as is known to every officer in the department concerned, the business has been under my supervision as Under Secretary, and I was responsible for it. This is moreover evident from the minute dated 20th December, 1876, respecting the departmental arrangements at that time approved of. See Appendix A1 to the Evidence, par. 1, which is as follows, viz. :—

"That the Under Secretary retains the supervision and immediate control of the Roads and Ministerial, Miscellaneous, Record, Auction, Lease, and Deeds Branches."

I think that this is conclusive proof of the inaccuracy of Mr. Moriarty's statement in evidence that this business was then for the first time to be brought under my control.

I would now refer to the reply to question 1820, in which Mr. Moriarty makes the following reflection on my management of the Lease business.

He says, "The Auditor General is in constant broils with the department about it now."

The fact is, that the correspondence which has lately been taking place between the Auditor General and this department, and to which Mr. Moriarty alludes, consisted chiefly of what are termed "Query Papers," matters of detail and account in connexion with the lease rent vouchers of the Crown Lands Agents, which had certainly, but as I am assured by the Officer-in-Charge, unavoidably, been for a time in arrear.

It was hardly ingenuous, I think, on the part of Mr. Moriarty, to endeavour to substantiate his statement (and, I might say, throw dust in the eyes of the Commissioners), by introducing a matter with which the Under Secretary, personally, has little if anything to do, and which has not the most remote connection with the policy or administration of the law as regards the leasing of land. I am sure Mr. Moriarty cannot say that such matters as those above referred to have ever formed any special study of his—or that they ever entered his mind in relation to the principles of legislation, either past or present (as to the granting of leases), at the time he was contending, on account of the interest he took in the subject, that he should take the charge of the Lease Branch out of my hands.

I do not attach very much importance to this particular statement of Mr. Moriarty's, but I have noticed it, as one illustration of the sort of evidence against which I have had to contend throughout the inquiry.

The next statement made against me by Mr. Moriarty amounts to a direct charge of incapacity, and I shall have, therefore, to deal with it rather at length, in order that the matter may be made perfectly clear. At page 81 of the evidence (see reply to question No. 1821), Mr. Moriarty stated as follows, viz.: "I said just now that I do not believe that the Under Secretary has even now a competent knowledge of the business. He has had a reference made to the Crown Law Officers upon a point which I believe is known to every clerk in the office, and which is made as plain in the Act as any Act can make it. The point was as to whether lands held under pre-emptive lease are open to be sold by auction. The law says that it shall. The universal practice has been to assume that it shall, and yet the Under Secretary referred it to decision."

The object of the above statement requires no explanation. It is a plain attempt to damage my official character, and to hold me up before the Commission and the public as perfectly ignorant of the duties of my office.

I will now state the facts, which are beyond all dispute:

The case quoted was that of Thomas Skilling, who disputed the legal right of the Minister to send lands held under pre-lease to auction.

On the 28th November, 1876, a letter was addressed by me to Skilling, from which the following is an extract:—

"I am to add that Crown lands under pre-emptive lease if applied for in conformity with the Regulations can be brought to sale by auction."—Signed, W. W. STEPHEN.

This letter (as will be seen) was written more than four months previously to the reference which Mr. Moriarty alleges was, through my ignorance of the law and practice as to the sale by auction of leased lands, made to the Attorney General.

And now as to the truth with respect to the reference to the Attorney General, and the origin of it.

Skilling questioned the correctness of the law and the practice of the Department, as laid down in my letter above referred to, and consulted his agent, Mr. Fitzpatrick, on the subject. A letter was then sent in to the Minister, on the 11th April, 1877, by Skilling, embodying his views in this matter.

This letter (which in reality was written for Skilling by Mr. Fitzpatrick) was sent or taken direct to Mr. Driver, then Minister for Lands, who, without my even having seen the letter, or spoken to him on the subject, minuted it as follows:—"I wish to have the opinion of the Attorney General upon this." In fact, it was arranged between Mr. Driver and Mr. Fitzpatrick that such reference should be made, in order to satisfy Skilling, and not from any doubt by either of them as to the correctness of the practice of the department.

The papers in the case, which I enclose for the perusal of the Minister, should he desire, fully corroborate the facts as stated by me. Mr. Driver's minute it will be seen is dated the 11th April, without any previous memo. or recommendation of mine, thus evidently showing that the letter had never, at that time, been in my hands.

If, however, further testimony be wanted, I would invite perusal of the accompanying letter from Mr. Fitzpatrick, to whom, as he was acquainted with the facts facts of the case, I determined to write, as soon as I became aware of Mr. Moriarty's unfounded accusation. I give his reply in full :

My dear Stephen,

24 February, 1879.

My recollection of Mr. Skilling's case is as follows :—

1. Mr. S. wished me, as his agent, to protest against the legality of selling Crown lands at auction whilst they were still held under lease.

2. I declined to do so, believing the practice of the Government to be perfectly legal and being unwilling to state to the Department any opinion from myself, which I did not conscientiously hold.

3. Mr. Skilling told me that he had taken legal opinions in Melbourne and begged of me to have the matter referred to the Attorney General. I therefore drafted a letter for his signature, conveying his views (not mine), and took the letter personally to Mr. Driver. I assured Mr. Driver that, although I had no doubt of the legality of the course followed by the Department, yet, so far as I knew, that course was not based on any legal advice. I begged of him under these circumstances to let the case go to the Attorney General. Mr. Driver consented, and minuted the paper accordingly, so that the reference for legal opinion was ordered over your head so to speak, and entirely without reference to you. I then handed Mr. Skilling's letter to you explaining how the reference came to be ordered, and requesting you to expedite the matter as Mr. S. was staying in Sydney in the hope of an early decision. In answer to the question at the close of your note, I can only say that I have always flattered myself that my opinion of your perfect fitness for your present office had contributed to your appointment, and that years of official intercourse since then have not given me cause to alter that opinion.

Yours, &c.,

MICHL. FITZPATRICK.

W. W. Stephen, Esq.

I hardly know whether, after the above clear refutation of this charge made against me by Mr. Moriarty, it is necessary for me to pursue his evidence any further. It will be seen however from the facts I have disclosed, what difficulties I have to contend with, and in what sort of a position I am placed. Here, I have a high officer of my own department, of recognized ability, not only bringing that ability to bear against me, but also making a statement, injurious to my reputation as a public officer—which I happen only by chance to have had the opportunity of refuting—and which, at the same time, I have above demonstrated, most indisputably, to be inconsistent with the truth.

There are some mis-statements, I regret to say, in other portions of Mr. Moriarty's evidence, and to which I shall not allude further than by saying that I give them an unqualified denial.

It is evidently impossible for me within the limits of this paper, or within the time in which I shall have to complete it, to combat the various points taken against me, in the voluminous passages of Mr. Moriarty's evidence (some of it, at the best, hearsay), as to my action in other matters (quoted by him) both previously and subsequently to the evidence to which I have more particularly called attention, many of those passages relating to matters of old date, which naturally I had forgotten.

To some of these no reference whatever was made by the Commissioners (so far as I remember) when I was being re-examined—notably the case referred to by Mr. Moriarty, in his replies to questions 1591 to 1597 inclusive. Even now, after seeing those replies for the first time, it is not clear to what particular case he refers, though I have some general recollection of a case of the kind. I can only say that with regard to that case (or any others) I am prepared for the fullest inquiry should the Government desire it. I certainly should not like any conclusion to be arrived at, on the one-sided evidence taken by the Commissioners.

Mr. Moriarty's repeated protestations to the Commissioners of his reluctance to say anything against me in my absence, are strangely inconsistent with the fact of his having, only a day or two later, volunteered statements so damaging to my reputation reputation and position in the Service, and which I have proved to be so utterly without foundation.

The papers in Skilling's case I may mention are those which (with the exception of Mr. Fitzpatrick's letter) I referred to in a previous part of this letter as having been sent to the Commissioners for their perusal.

I also forwarded with the papers an explanatory minute or précis, clearly showing the facts of the case, and what an injustice had been done to me by Mr. Moriarty in making the statements he did.

I also sent them (as agreed upon) the papers in another matter, in which my capacity had in a similar way, but not perhaps to the same extent, been impugned, viz., as to the renewal of auction leases (see reply to question 1822, page 82, of evidence), and which fully explained and justified my action.

I am sorry, however, that notwithstanding the serious way in which these statements affected me, no notice whatever is taken by the Commissioners in their Report of the documentary evidence so submitted to them,—especially as they did not wait for the evidence taken at my re-examination.

The next part of the Commissioners' Report has reference to the statements made by the Deputy Surveyor General, Mr. Fitzgerald, and the cases adduced by him in substantiation of his charge, that when I take a personal interest in any matter, or, as he explains it, when he (the Under Secretary) is acquainted with an applicant, or an applicant influences "him, he acts as special pleader for him, and is unwilling to have such special pleading sifted through the Survey Office." Mr. Fitzgerald also in his evidence accuses me of suppressing papers.

The opinion expressed by the Commissioners with respect to the above charges, and which I may observe is based simply, to use their own words, "on the papers submitted with obvious reluctance by the Deputy Surveyor General," is as follows, viz. :—

"In many of these cases the proper Departmental action required was perfectly plain; but we consider that the Under Secretary has exhibited a singular want of discernment; that he has usurped functions which can only be rightly exercised by the Minister responsible to Parliament; and that he has shown an undue preference to the interests of particular persons, which must go far to cloud the action of the Department with the most injurious suspicions."

In the face of an indictment so serious as this, and so wholly unexpected by me, I must ask the Minister to be allowed to enter into and explain the facts of a few of the cases adduced by Mr. Fitzgerald in support of his charge.

My last evidence, I may here state, has only now been obtained by me, with the sanction of the Minister, from the Government Printer.

As, however, the reference to some ten cases was dealt with by me, in every instance (excepting, I think, in one case) off-hand, and without any previous intimation of my being interrogated with regard to them, while Mr. Fitzgerald had had several weeks to collect his evidence, I may not, as might have been expected, have met them on all points, but with a fair opportunity I am quite sure that I am able to do so.

I will take the first two or three cases or charges, in the order in which they were placed by Mr. Fitzgerald himself, before the Commission.

The first is "James A. Brown's application for lease of islands near Lord Howe's Island."

It

It was out of this case that Mr. Fitzgerald's charge, as hereinbefore specified, arose. When demanding that the Deputy Surveyor General should retract or prove that charge, I was naturally under the impression that the investigation would be before a Board composed (chiefly at any rate) of trusted officers of the service acquainted with the working of the Land Law and Ministerial Departments, when I should have the opportunity of calling witnesses, according to the mode in which I thought inquiries of this sort were usually conducted.

The late Minister for Lands having determined, however, to remit the whole matter to the late Royal Commission, there was no alternative.

To return to the charge under review, I will at the very outset prove a most uncalled for insinuation on the part of Mr. Fitzgerald against me.

The first three or four pages of his evidence are devoted to an endeavour to prove that I had been guilty of keeping back papers, and at his instance two clerks of the Lands Department were called to confirm that misrepresentation. (See pages 91, 92, 93, and 94 of the evidence.)

By question 1938, put by the President to Mr. Fitzgerald, it would appear that the Commissioners were being led to the same conclusion. Mr. Abbott pointed out the circumstance of the papers having been sent up to the Commissioners by direction of the Minister on the 31st October, and then of the papers being sent up by a letter of the same date, stating that they were sent at their request.

Mr. Abbott then asked Mr. Fitzgerald, "Can you understand that?" and his reply was "No, except that it put the papers out of my way."

The explanation of this is easily given. The papers relative to the personal matter between the Deputy Surveyor General and myself, which were all separate memoranda, were kept distinct from the papers relating to the actual issue of the lease, which had been sent to the Occupation Branch for action and from which I afterwards obtained them. The former papers were minuted by Mr. Farnell on the 31st October to be referred to the Commission for enquiry, and I wrote underneath his minute, "Forwarded accordingly, 31st October," and sent them off at once.

The other papers were sent to the Commissioners as a separate batch, at their own special request, as will be seen by reference to page 31 of the evidence. As this request happened to be made on the 30th October, the fact of my letter being sent on the 31st, the same day on which the others were forwarded by direction of the Minister, under what is called "Blank Cover," only shows my desire that the Commissioners should have all the papers required as promptly as possible.

It is self-evident, therefore, that Messrs. Patterson and Newman, the clerks above referred to, could not possibly have seen the papers in my room subsequently to the 31st October, as would be implied from their evidence. The fact is that they were probably seen (or part of them) just previously to the 31st October, and those gentlemen, as they have themselves since informed me, thought that they were still there when Mr. Fitzgerald asked for them, because they did not appear as marked off to the Commission, at the "Record" Branch. (See their evidence, pages 92, 93, 94.)

For this there was no necessity as the papers first above referred to were not officially registered at all, and the others belonged to the Records of the Occupation of Lands Branch.

The

The absurdity, therefore, if not the animus, of this ready insinuation of Mr. Fitzgerald's that I had sent the papers to the Commission to get them "out of his way," is apparent. He had only to ask for them (which he did eventually) and obtain them. He no doubt was anxious to commence preparing his charges, and because he received erroneous information from certain clerks—not from me—he attributes to me the suppression of the papers, when all the time they had been sent to the Commissioners, some at their own request, as already shown, and the others by the direction of the Minister.

After the above refutation of the charge with which the Deputy Surveyor General commences his lengthy evidence, I shall take no notice of other similar statements which he has, I perceive, made on other occasions during his examination, and which are equally unfounded.

With respect to the actual granting of the lease, I have no time here (especially in view of the cases I wish yet to deal with if possible) to go through the five pages in which Mr. Fitzgerald has tried to twist some matters as to detail and date—which it seems he could not explain satisfactorily himself—into an undue preference for the applicant, Brown.

The whole of the proceedings were plain and straightforward. Mr. Fitzgerald alleges, although he says he cannot prove it, that Mr. Fisher's application was not before the Minister at the time Brown's was.

I cannot assert positively that it was so at that exact time, but I have every reason for believing so. Mr. Fitzgerald is, however, well aware that it is the province of the Record Clerk to see that all papers relating to the same case are placed together ("carried on," as we call it) and not that of the Under Secretary, who rarely, except in urgent or special cases, sees the papers until they have been registered at "Records," whence they are supposed to be sent up to me, with full information as to former papers, and (if any) their whereabouts.

With regard, however, to these applications, they were submitted to me at different times, within three or four days of each other, and with no notation on either to show that there was any other correspondence bearing on the subject. Any officer in the Department can prove how literally impossible it is, in view of the enormous number of papers daily brought into my room from all parts of the Department, to prevent papers not properly connected from remaining for a short time separate from each other, or perhaps even from being submitted apart from each other.

I have simply mentioned all this in order to explain how easily the non-submission of Mr. Fisher's application is accounted for, supposing Mr. Fitzgerald's presumption (that Mr. Fisher's application had not been submitted with the other) to be correct.

My own strong impression is, however, that both applications were submitted together. The fact of a previous application is specially referred to in the Governor's minute, on Mr. Brown's application, which was referred to the Survey Office; and I have a very distinct recollection of speaking to Mr. Farnell as to the relative claims of the two parties. There is not the slightest doubt whatever as to Mr. Fisher's having been submitted before the matter was finally decided.

My view of the case was this: Mr. Fisher asked only for a protective permission (as it were) to occupy the Islands; whilst Mr. Brown actually applied under the Regulations to take out a lease at once, and paid £50 into the Treasury as the first year's rent, offering to pay a higher sum if the Government did not consider that sufficient.

I contend still that a man who applied in the mode prescribed by law, and who paid his money, and was willing to take all risk, was in every respect entitled to precedence over a person who wanted a protective order for an indefinite period, until he ascertained whether or not the speculation would be a profitable one.

After all it was a question for the Minister to determine, and he decided, after full information, in accordance with my views.

There are other matters introduced by Mr. Fitzgerald in his evidence on this case, to which I will shortly allude.

He seems to make a great point of my having chosen to submit the case direct to the Minister, instead of going through the routine of sending it out of the Department, to be brought back again by the head of a branch office. (See page 96 of evidence.)

It is easy to explain the reason which actuated me. The papers had all come to me as Under Secretary. The case was altogether one out of the ordinary run of special leases. I also saw Mr. Harriott, who had then recently assumed charge of the Occupation Branch, and told him that to save delay I would submit the matter myself, and then send it on to him to be dealt with as usual.

Mr. Brown informed me, that he had engaged a party to go to the Islands, and that every day's delay in the settlement of the matter was an additional expense to him. Having ready access therefore to the Minister, and knowing how long such a case might otherwise have to wait, I took the course to which Mr. Fitzgerald appears to object. The above are the simple facts.

I have now concluded my explanation as to this case, the first of the ten or twelve which the Deputy Surveyor General has succeeded in collecting, out of the many thousands on which I have acted during my tenure of office, and I leave it to the Minister to say whether there is anything in it to justify the charge supported by the Commissioners of being unduly swayed by personal influence.

The fact is that there had existed at this time, and long before it, an unpleasant feeling on the part of the Deputy Surveyor General as to his right to correct and otherwise interfere with the action or minutes of the Under Secretary, who, on his part had more than once had occasion to complain, and had complained, of undue delays and detention of papers in the Survey Office. Mr. Fitzgerald appeared indisposed to carry out my action in any case without reference to him, while he took offence at even the smallest apparent interference with any one in his Department. I had in two instances where (as in Brown's case) the matter was urgent offended in that way, and Mr. Fitzgerald shows his sense of the alleged irregularity by unwarrantably imputing it to undue influence, not indeed (as he says), to my "having" an interest in any such case, but to my "taking" an interest in it.

I do not believe that there are any gentlemen in the service, excepting Mr. Fitzgerald, and perhaps Mr. Moriarty, who would attribute improper motives to me in the discharge of my duty, however much they might differ with my judgment. But Mr. Fitzgerald repeatedly insinuates, in a way not to be mistaken, that the supposed "interest" was evinced most notably in cases where certain agents (Mr. Wilson and Mr. Raymond) were employed; so that his real charge amounts to one of distinct impropriety, although he shrinks from directly making it.

Mr. Fitzgerald's next, and apparently chief charge—as he makes direct reference to it as one in which I took a "personal" interest, and acted as a "special pleader" for my friends—is the case of "Messrs. J. T. and H. C. White." (See page 99.) For a refutation of the different statements made against me in this case I might refer simply to my own evidence,—(see pages 130 and 131)—but as I gave that evidence immediately after the papers being placed in my hands by the Commissioners (the first time I had seen them for months), I must ask permission to refer to it in this paper somewhat fully.

The application of the Messrs. White was to purchase, in virtue of intended improvements under the 31st clause of the Lands Amendment Act of 1875, in accordance with which the applicant is bound to make improvements to the extent of £1 per acre, within twelve months from the date of application, or forfeit 25 per cent. of the purchase money.

I will take the statements or charges made by Mr. Fitzgerald, so far as I have to refer to them, in the order in which he has made them:—

1st. He states that applicants "failed to make the declaration within the prescribed time." Certainly the declaration was not made within the prescribed time; but the improvements were declared to have been made within the time. In such cases the Minister decided that the actual non-receipt of the declaration within the twelve months should not entail forfeiture, the transmission of such declaration not being required by the Act, but being only a matter of regulation, of which in the majority of instances applicants appear to have had no knowledge.

2nd. Mr. Fitzgerald goes on to say, "And an officer of the Survey Department sent it (the land) on to auction."

My reply to this is, that the officer in question, who was in fact one of the draftsmen, without any authority from the Ministerial Department, or even reference (as would appear from the notation on the paper) to the head of his own office, sent for auction sale at the minimum upset price of £1 per acre, land containing improvements to the sworn value of £320—improvements which were made by the Messrs. White, with the tacit consent of the Department.

They were in fact compelled to improve, in the absence of any intimation that their application was invalid, or forfeit the 25 per cent. of their deposit. I contend still, as I have always done, that this action on the part of the Survey Office was improper as well as unauthorized.

3rd. Mr. Fitzgerald alleges, with reference to the sending on of the land to auction, that such has been "the practice of the Department with reference to all forfeited cases, under whatever clause the application may have been made since the passing of the Act of 1875." This implies that the Messrs. White's was a forfeited case. This I deny. There was no "forfeiture." The application was cancelled or declared void—not for any breach of the law, but because the land applied for did not come within a block of 5 miles square, as held to be required in terms of the Act, and the whole of the purchase money (which had to be paid down at the time of application) was refunded. I shall be obliged to allude again to this matter, in reply to another charge of the Deputy Surveyor General's.

4th. Mr. Fitzgerald, after quoting at length my minute in Mr. James White's protest against the attempted sale of the land with all his improvements (which minute was approved by the Minister) goes on to say : " I saw the Under Secretary for Lands misled the Minister by a mis-statement," and that the declaration had not been sent in " two months previously to the application being reported illegal," as represented by me. This error on my part (which it certainly was) is plainly of the same clerical nature, and just as unintentional, as the error which Mr. Fitzgerald made throughout his evidence, although he had all the papers before him, in referring to the application of " Mrs." White instead of the Messrs., and had just about as much to do with the real question at issue.

I can easily account for the oversight. I knew in my own mind, and from Mr. White's letter, that the improvements had been put up within the year; and, wishing to see the date on which the declaration was received, I looked hurriedly at the registration stamp and date at the top of the document. I read it 27th April, which would make it just two months previously to the selection being reported by the Survey Office as invalid, i.e., 26th June. I shall be glad if the Minister would himself look at the stamp, and see how easily it might be taken by anyone for the abbreviation for April instead of August.

Such is my explanation of this gross deception, which Mr. Fitzgerald charges me with having attempted to practice on the Minister. By everyone who knows me, or by anyone who does not intuitively suspect untruthfulness on the part of others, I feel sure that my explanation will be accepted.

It is surprising, however, that Mr. Fitzgerald, in his anxiety to prove his imputation against me, has not perceived that the question of the date of receipt of the declaration had nothing whatever to do with the question then for decision, and that the only possible reason there could have been for my attempting (under the improper influences he charges me with) to deceive the Minister on such a point, would be in a case where there was a question as to allowing the declaration to be received.

In Mr. White's case this was a matter passed and done with. The application had been voided, and the purchase money had been refunded.

The real question to be decided was that submitted by me, viz., whether, at the mere will of an officer of the Survey Department, the land with all Mr. White's improvements was, under the circumstances, to be put up to auction. The view which I took of this matter, as formally approved of by the Minister, was, I assert just and right.

5th. Mr. Fitzgerald states, " Again, the Under Secretary misleads the Minister by telling him it is not a case of forfeiture, when it is."

I have stated briefly before, that this was not a case of forfeiture; but as the Deputy Surveyor General here for the second time charges me with misleading the Minister on this point, I will show that he has, whether in ignorance or designedly, stated what is quite contrary to fact.

Forfeiture is the result of a breach of, or non-compliance with the law, by the applicant, through which he forfeits 25 per cent. of the purchase money, and the land is moreover liable to be sold at auction. There was no breach of the law in this case whatever; the improvements were effected within the prescribed time, and there was no forfeiture of 25 per cent. On the contrary, the application was distinctly tinently declared void on the report of the Deputy Surveyor General himself that it was invalid, as not coming within a block of 5 miles square leasehold, and therefore the whole of the purchase money was returned. This distinction, both as regards the law of the case, and the results to the applicant, must I think be clear to anyone.

I must express my astonishment at Mr. Fitzgerald venturing to accuse me of misleading the late Minister on this point. Were I to follow Mr. Fitzgerald's example, in throwing out unworthy suspicions, I should say that he had succeeded effectually in misleading the Commissioners, who in their turn would appear entirely to have adopted his evidence, without any reference to mine.

6th. Mr. Fitzgerald states "the Under Secretary for Lands has withdrawn the land without his (i.e., the Minister's) authority?"—Certainly, I did. I did so (in anticipation of the approval of the Minister) in the interest of the Department; which I saw was about to be led into an act of injustice which would afterwards reflect discredit on it. Mr. White's letter was submitted to me by the head of the Auction Branch, in the usual course, recommending that the land should be withdrawn; and I approved of that course. That action, which (as in other cases) is questioned by Mr. Fitzgerald, I was in virtue of my Commission as Under Secretary justified in taking. I am responsible to the Minister alone; and he, after consideration of my minute, and discussing the matter, concurred in the propriety of my action.

7th. Mr. Fitzgerald, by way of completing his charge, and to show the Commissioners that I endeavoured to prevent my action from being "sifted through the Survey Office," states: "Papers were then put away without being sent to the Survey Office." In denying this statement, I have simply to refer the Minister to the papers on which Mr. Farnell's decision was given, and which papers are noted to the Surveyor General in my own handwriting. I added also the words "To be returned," with a view (after the decision had been noted in the Survey Office for future guidance) to the case being re-submitted for final disposal.

There are some other statements in Mr. Fitzgerald's evidence, which convey a wrong impression, as to the practice of sending in lands for auction by the Survey Office, but time presses, and I will not further allude to them here. He suggests (2,143), that my views of the Messrs. White's case were derived from personal interviews with Mr. White, and that I "may have taken" the dates and facts from that gentleman. As to this, it is sufficient for me to refer to the correspondence already alluded to, among which that gentleman's representations will be found.

The last case which I shall notice, is that relating to the management of the Church and School estate, and the discontinuance for a time of Mr. Fitzgerald's salary of £100 a year for the supervision of the professional part of the business. (See pages 110 to 112 of his evidence, and pages 147, 148, and 149 of mine.) The papers in this matter were brought before the Commission with the object of showing them that I had retarded the settlement of the question, to Mr. Fitzgerald's personal loss; and that I had, in this case also, suppressed two or three of the papers.

The only one which I believe was taken away from the others was my own application for an allowance. This I had the permission of the Minister to withdraw, and there was nothing whatever written on it. The fact of my application was well known, as it was alluded to in the other papers. I will however

however show such a serious mis-statement by Mr. Fitzgerald, as to my having kept back from him the decision respecting his own salary, that it will be conceived to be quite possible he may have made many mistakes of a similar kind as to the other papers. Among the papers handed to me by the Commissioners, there was a minute by Mr. Fitzgerald as follows:—"During this long correspondence, seriously affecting my position, not only as regards future payments but the propriety of my ever having received any, no reference of these papers has ever been made to me." This minute is dated the 6th of July, 1876. I would also refer to his reply to question 2337, in which he says—"But I resigned when the papers were sent to me for the first time, on the 6th July, 1876."

These statements surprised me; but on looking through the correspondence handed to me by the Commissioners, which I had not seen for months previously, I saw a minute in my own writing, which had been (no doubt unintentionally) displaced, and which ran as follows:—"The enclosed decision should be seen by the officers named, &c.,"—the first of these officers being the Deputy Surveyor General.

This minute is specially marked "Deputy Surveyor General" by Mr. Moriarty, who was at that time Chief Clerk, and is dated the 6th March, 1876, that is to say, within a week after the Governor's decision had been received by me, and four months previously to the date on which Mr. Fitzgerald states that the paper was sent to him for the first time.

It is strange that this remarkable refutation of Mr. Fitzgerald's charge is not in any way noticed by the Commissioners. The President, who seemed rather taken by surprise on my handing to him the minute just alluded to, threw out the suggestion that after all Mr. Fitzgerald might not have seen it. It is not for me to say whether he did or not. The charge palpably is, that I had purposely prevented his seeing the decision. There could have been no other object in his bringing up the matter against me.

I am unwilling to say anything which may seem to reflect either on the Commissioners, or on Mr. Fitzgerald; but there are portions of his evidence, which so strangely contrast with an "obvious reluctance" to injure me, and so strikingly exhibit the mode in which his charges have been sustained by the Commissioners, that I feel it impossible not to ask special attention to what follows. It will be observed, that throughout the inquiry the questions put are almost invariably leading questions, and finally, as paragraphs 2531 to 2551 show, Mr. Fitzgerald was allowed to hand in several written ones to be put to the Surveyor General, which the Commissioners put accordingly in the terms suggested. In answer to question 2561, Mr. Adams (the Surveyor General) said that Mr. Fitzgerald never attributed to me "more than exceptional good nature." The Commissioner then took the matter up thus:—2562. "Than exceptional dealing with the business of Mr. Stephen's friends? Yes." 2563. "And with pressing on such cases—with having things done under these circumstances that would not be done otherwise than in the ordinary course of procedure? It was with giving precedence to his friends' business. The only misunderstanding I ever had with the Under Secretary on business resulted from what I considered his giving precedence to his friends' cases." 2564.—"In point of fact, allowing himself to be made use of? If you like to put it so." 2565.—"Is not that the mildest way to put it? I suppose it amounts to that."

All this, it must be remembered, in my absence, and without opportunity given for cross-examination or reply. How could anyone so dealt with hope for a calm and unprejudiced decision? Mr. Fitzgerald, supposed to be an unwilling witness, although the charge which he was called to support was his own, volunteered before the inquiry began, and although in the course of what is called his evidence on it, he volunteered another charge still more audacious. In answer to questions 2426 to 2430, he expresses the "belief" that I was capable of destroying or concealing official papers, in order to keep back the truth.

Of the two cases referred to by the Surveyor General in answer to Mr. Fitzgerald's invitation, my explanation will be found under number 2581 of the Minutes. It is surely discreditable that so grave a charge as Mr. Fitzgerald's should have arisen out of such matters. Some time before October, 1874, it seems, I wrote direct to a surveyor, believing him to have acted as an appraiser in a pending case, to send me the papers; and to another surveyor I sent a telegram, at the request of Edward Allen, on behalf of Mr. N. P. Bayley, to ask him before going into another district to measure some land for that gentleman. On Mr. Adams's remonstrance (at, as I believe, Mr. Fitzgerald's instigation), I freely admitted the irregularity, and undertook that it should not be repeated. There, one would naturally suppose the matter would have ended. But the papers it now turns out were carefully put by, and after the lapse of nearly five years they have been raked up for use in aid of the Deputy Surveyor General's recent attack on my conduct.

There is yet one more part of the Commissioners' Report that I must allude to before bringing my remarks to a close.

I wish emphatically to protest against the statement made by them (in par. 33) that my evidence tended to show that a "former Minister for Lands was himself responsible" for the toleration of cases of drunkenness and misbehaviour on the part of some of the Conditional Purchase Inspectors. There is nothing, I assert, in my evidence to justify such an impression. The papers, if referred to, will prove the contrary to be the case.

The Commissioners also refer to my action in failing to submit the "complaints" forwarded on the above head, as if there had been several complaints received by me and not submitted. There was only one such case, and the cause of its detention was explained to the then Minister (Mr. Garrett), who called upon Mr. Wild (the inspector complained of) to furnish an explanation at once, and eventually directed him to be reprimanded, and to hold himself in readiness to remove to some other district.

I beg to apologise for the great length to which this paper has extended, but it was unavoidable to enable me to grapple even in part with the allegations in the Commissioners' Report.

In conclusion, I have to thank the Minister for the opportunity he has afforded me to explain and defend my conduct, which has been so virulently and so unfairly assailed. I am confident that whenever the inquiry is renewed I shall be able, in any other case that may be taken up, to present an equally successful refutation.

Letters referred to by the Under Secretary.

Copy of letter from Mr. M. Fitzpatrick, M.P.

Lands Department, 17 October, 1863.

I HAVE much pleasure in certifying that Mr. W. W. Stephen has been under my immediate supervision, formerly in the Colonial Secretary's office, and subsequently in this department for some ten years, that during the whole of that time his conduct has been unexceptionable in every respect. I may add that he has evinced considerable ability in the discharge of his duties, and that I consider him capable of satisfactorily discharging the duties of the office, which I understand he now seeks, namely, Clerk of the Executive Council.

MICHAEL FITZPATRICK.

Copy of letter from Sir John Robertson.

1866.

My dear Mr. Stephen,
I have your note of yesterday's date, informing me that you are thinking of making application for the * * * * * and asking me for a note stating my opinion of yourself, and of your ability for that office; or for a memorandum in general terms, without reference to any particular office. I prefer taking the latter course, because I do not know what may be the claims of any other gentleman for the present vacancy, and certainly not in consequence of any doubt of mine as to your ability to fill that or almost any other non-professional office in connection with the Government of the Colony. During many years, while I was Secretary, you served in the Lands Department, and I had ample opportunity of observing, not only your ability for duties of difficulty, but also the very praiseworthy zeal and industry with which you carried them out.

I may add that I should regret for your own sake, and for that of the department, your leaving it, because in the event of Mr. Fitzpatrick or Mr. Moriarty being promoted, or otherwise removed from it, your claim to high office there, I think, could not be disputed.

Yours, &c.,

JOHN ROBERTSON.

Extract of letter from Mr. J. Bowie Wilson.

Mr. Dear Mr. Stephen,

Sydney, 15 May, 1872.

I cannot retire from the office of Minister for Lands without expressing to you my entire satisfaction at the able and zealous manner you have discharged the onerous duties of Under Secretary during my tenure of office. Your labours having been so greatly increased by duties properly belonging to the office of Chief Clerk being cast upon you,—that office having been vacant since the lamented death of Mr. Armitage. Your gentlemanly conduct and courteous demeanour have, I assure you, been fully appreciated by me. * * * *

Yours, &c.,

J. BOWIE WILSON.

Copy of letter from Mr. Garrett.

Dear Mr. Stephen,

Sydney, 2 February, 1877.

In severing my connection with the Lands Department as political chief, allow me to take this mode of expressing to yourself as the Administrative head of the department, and to the heads of Branches under you, and other officers, my sincere sense of the many obligations I feel under to you, one and all, for the ever ready and willing and valuable assistance rendered to me while I occupied the position of Minister, without which the most capable and experienced Minister would have failed in the discharge of the duties of his office. With the expression of sincere regard, and best wishes to yourself and the numerous staff of officers under you, allow me to remain,

My dear Mr. Stephen,

Yours ever truly,

THOS. GARRETT.

LANDS AND SURVEY DEPARTMENTS COMMISSION.

MINUTES OF EVIDENCE.

WEDNESDAY, 23 OCTOBER, 1878.

Present:—

MR. ABBOTT, | MR. RANKEN,
MR. THOMSON.

R. P. ABBOTT, ESQ., PRESIDENT, IN THE CHAIR.

William Wilberforce Stephen, Esq., was called in and examined:—

1. President.] You are Under Secretary for Lands? Yes.
2. How long have you held that office? Six or seven years. I am not quite sure as to the exact date of my appointment, not having thought of referring to it.
3. You were previously in the Government service? Yes.
4. In the Lands Department? Yes. I may say I have been in the Government service nearly all my life. I entered the service before the introduction of Responsible Government; and I was in the Colonial Secretary's Department, through which all the branches of the Government business used at that time to be conducted. Upon the creation of the Lands Department, or shortly afterwards, I was transferred to it.
5. You are the permanent head of the department? Yes, under the Minister.
6. And as such responsible for its management? Yes; subject to Ministerial control and direction.
7. Do you mean the management of the whole Ministerial Department, as distinguished from the Surveyor General's Department? Yes, as distinguished from the Surveyor General's Department; and I may state that during the last two years, through the enormous amount of work in the different branches of the Lands Department the Conditional Sales Branch has been placed under separate supervision, and as regards all its details of business is under Mr. Moriarty, who has the designation of Chief Commissioner. I have here a minute showing the terms under which that arrangement was made. It was not to disturb the constitution of the department as a whole, of which it was specifically stated I was to be the recognized head.
8. What is that agreement of which you speak? It is a memorandum submitted by me to the Minister for carrying out certain views which had been expressed in conversations with Mr. Garrett on the subject of departmental arrangements. It was thought that this would meet the difficulty caused by the greatly increased correspondence and work, and this is the basis on which the alteration was made. This minute is dated the 22nd of December, 1876, and there is attached to it a minute by Mr. Garrett, then Minister for Lands.
9. That has reference to what department? Solely to the placing of the Conditional Sales Branch under Mr. Moriarty. It was intended to relieve me of all papers and duties connected with that branch, which from that time were to be submitted to the Minister by the officer in charge, the business being transacted on the same basis as that of the "Occupation Branch," the chief officer of which submits his work to the Minister direct.
10. Could you supply a copy of this? Yes. (Vide Appendix A 1.)
11. Perhaps you will permit me to call your attention to paragraph 4, which is in these terms: "That the Under Secretary, while abstaining from active interference with the Conditional Purchase business or staff, should be recognized, as at present, as the official head of the whole department, and that the separation of duties, as above indicated, shall not be held in any way to alter the constitution of the department as a whole, nor disturb the present relative position and seniority of any of the officers of the respective branches, which should remain entirely as at present; and that on this understanding all matters of a ministerial or financial nature, appointments, promotions, &c., to whichever branch appertaining, should be submitted to the Minister through the Under Secretary, in accordance with the usual official practice." Was that the origin of the present arrangement under which the business is carried on? Yes; this was approved of by the Cabinet.
12. Was that originally your own suggestion? It was the result of conference between Mr. Garrett and myself. Mr. Moriarty also wrote a minute, a great deal of which I had inserted, in his own words, in the minute eventually approved; it was, in fact, a mutual agreement.
13. Is the system of conducting business at present based on that? Yes.
14. And in accordance with it? Yes.
15. Mr. Thomson.] Is it carried out in its entirety. Does the business of the Conditional Purchase Branch pass through your office, as implied by that document? This document does not imply that. It states that all papers or matters relating to conditional sales are to be submitted by the Chief Commissioner to the Minister; but that all other matters of a departmental nature are to be dealt with and submitted through me.
16. He submits the papers in relation to his branch in the same way as you submit your papers relating to the department generally? Yes.

W. W.
Stephen, Esq.
23 Oct., 1873.

W. W. Stephen, Esq. 17. President.] He controls the business as between the department and the public? Yes; that is as regards the conditional sales business.

28 Oct., 1878. 18. And you have reserved to you the right to control the persons employed? Yes. The rule laid down by the Minister—there having been a little controversy on the subject—was, that Mr. Moriarty should have the option of making recommendations for appointments in his own branch, but that all such recommendations should be submitted to the Minister through me. As a matter of fact, I seldom if ever interfere with them.

19. Mr. Ranken.] You mentioned the Occupation Branch. Is that also in a similar position. Have you the supervision of the department generally, and does the officer of the Occupation Branch carry out all the details? The Occupation Branch is now transferred to the Department of Mines, but before that transfer Mr. Herriott occupied exactly the same position with regard to the Occupation of Lands as Mr. Moriarty does with regard to conditional sales.

20. President.] Was the arrangement as regards the Occupation Branch of recent date? No; it has been in force for years—long before the arrangement with reference to the conditional sales. I have with me a printed statement showing the different branches into which the whole department is divided and the business transacted in the different branches.

21. Mr. Ranken.] The notification in respect to departmental arrangements, stated on the 14th of October, leaves all the correspondence respecting the various matters therein mentioned in your hands? Yes; there was a notice published in April last when I was away, which did not clearly state what the classification of the business was; but I left it alone, until the recent new administrative arrangements—transferring certain work to the Mining Department—took place, and then I had to prepare the notice of the 14th of October as the former did not apply. The general heads of the work I have to supervise are briefly though more fully stated in the notice of the 14th of October.

22. President.] Do you find that the arrangement of which you have just spoken answers well in the interests of the department? I have nothing to say against it, because I believe it is simply impossible for one person to perform all the business.

23. You now think it an improvement? I think it an improvement upon the old system if properly carried out. I should like to be able to do all the work myself, but I cannot.

24. Mr. Ranken.] Is that mainly from the increase of the work? From the great increase in the general business and correspondence, and also from the increased work caused by some of the provisions of the "Lands Act Amendment Act of 1875."

25. President.] Do you not think that in all cases divided authority is not desirable? From my experience I think it is decidedly objectionable.

26. Then how can the arrangement answer well? I understood you to refer to the constitution of the department generally. What I mean is this: It would be far better that the whole of the work of the department, excepting of course matters of routine, should pass through my hands if that were possible; but various Ministers have admitted the impossibility of one person attending to it. Therefore I considered it at the time the best arrangement that could be made. There must be a divided authority under that arrangement as regards the details of office work.

27. Do you think that no arrangement is possible by which you could get such assistance as would enable you still to keep the control of the whole business of the department in your hands? I think that if the heads of branches were entrusted with more authority than they have at present they would relieve me of hundreds of cases which are sent to me, as I think unnecessarily.

28. Mr. Thomson.] Would the appointment of an officer under you enable you to still retain the authority in your own hands, the officer being required to submit all special cases to you? Possibly there is a great deal of work besides mere details in the Conditional Purchase Branch, and in all others which might be performed by such an officer; and there is also an immense amount of work which must be submitted to me as well as to the Minister.

29. You do not now see any plan by which the whole of the responsibility and authority can be retained in your hands, provided you had other and better assistance? Certainly not, unless the heads of branches were invested with far larger powers than clerks in charge of branches are supposed to possess.

30. Do you think that would have the effect? I think it would to some extent.

31. Has any such plan as that ever been suggested? No. I cannot at the present moment call to mind that any such suggestion has been formally submitted.

32. Do you think it would be possible to do it? Yes, with judicious management and all the officers of the department pulling well together. As far as the detail work is concerned, I believe the present arrangement works well.

33. Do you not hold the heads of branches under you responsible for the proper management of their respective branches? Yes, as regards the duties they perform.

34. Many of them perform a great number of duties which, under other circumstances, would devolve on you? Many of them perform work which I never see at all, that is, matters of detail, and certain classes of letters also they generally sign, where the action to be taken is so palpable, and so in accordance with precedent, that they do not think it worth while to submit them. In those cases I hold them responsible; but the number of cases which are submitted are beyond conception, unless you were to be in the office and see them.

35. President.] Are there any written rules with reference to the management of the business of the department? Do you mean for the conduct of the business of each branch?

36. For the business of any branch, or for the office generally? No; there are no written regulations.

37. Are there any regulations with regard to the hours of attendance? There is an understood rule; I believe there was a regulation made years ago, but I do not know that I can refer to it. I can only say that the office hours are supposed to be from 9 till 4.

38. Mr. Thomson.] You do not know whether the hours were fixed by minute of the Executive Council? I am certain almost that there was no Executive Council minute. But there was a departmental order, I think, issued some years ago; I believe it was by Dr. Wilson.

39. During your tenure of office? Before I was Under Secretary. It is the generally understood rule throughout all departments. I do not think there has been any special regulation, other than the order I have just referred to, for the Lands Department.

40. President.] Are any means taken for the observance of that rule? Heads of branches have had instructions instructions from me to report anybody who was late, and to call upon them for an explanation. There are general instructions, that any clerk coming after a certain hour is to be reported. No time-book is kept.

W. W.
Stephens, Esq.
28 Oct., 1878.

41. Are any means taken to enforce that regulation as to the time of arrival in the department, and the remaining there during office-hours? The heads of branches have instructions to see that their clerks are regular in their attendance, and they are to report any breach.

42. Are those instructions general or understood? I believe I have written one or two memoranda.

43. Mr. Thomson.] Has there been any circular or memorandum for all to sign? I have written different memoranda to different heads of branches at various times; but no special instructions applicable to all. There have been repeated instructions in a general way.

44. President.] Have there been any complaints from the heads of branches to you? Yes.

45. And how have they been dealt with? On two or three occasions, where the offence has been repeated two or three times, I have reported the offender to the Minister, and that has generally resulted in a memorandum of censure. In one case, a short time ago, where late attendance was reported, I recommended that a day's pay should be stopped, but the clerk explained that he was ill, and I did not enforce it. I cannot call to mind just now that any punishment has been inflicted for any ordinary late attendance,—that is, where clerks come at a quarter to 10 or 10 o'clock instead of 9. Where there have been repeated absences for days and days together that is a different thing. That does not happen once in twelve months.

46. But you say there is no time-book kept? No.

47. Have time-books never been kept in the department? Not for years past.

48. Mr. Thomson.] Were they ever kept? Yes; ten or twelve years ago.

49. Before you were Under Secretary? Yes; when the department was much smaller.

50. President.] Can you say why it was discontinued? No; it fell into disuse. I do not know who ordered it; Mr. Fitzpatrick or the Minister.

51. Can you give any opinion as to the effect of its use? It is so long since it was used that I cannot say. No doubt it would be obnoxious to many; grown up men do not like to put up with it. They think it rather derogatory to them as men; but I have always said that if they did not behave like men, or appreciate the confidence placed in them as regards their attendance, they should put up with the consequences. Mr. Baker, when Minister for Lands, gave instructions to have a time-book prepared; but when the next Minister came into office he said he did not care about it.

52. Do you think it would lead to an improved state of things? It would have the effect of bringing late attendance more prominently into notice. As a general rule, or with few exceptions, the clerks are tolerably regular.

53. With regard to absence from the office during office-hours, do clerks absent themselves from the office of their own accord, or must they ask leave? If they want to go out for half-an-hour or an hour they get leave from the head of the branch. If they desire leave for any time beyond that, they submit a memo., through the head of the branch to me. Any application for leave for more than two days I submit to the Minister for Lands, and sometimes when he is inaccessible I approve of the application for him.

54. Do you hold the heads of branches bound to report any breach of that rule to you? Yes.

55. And have you had many reports of that kind? Not very many.

56. What power of punishment have the heads of branches, or have you, for offences of that nature—for late attendance, or unauthorised absence from office? There is no power of punishment given, none at all, except where a case is specially submitted to the Minister, no punishment, as such, can be inflicted except by the Minister.

57. No punishment of any kind? No, unless a reprimand can be called punishment.

58. Mr. Ranken.] Has there been any such thing as dismissal? There would be dismissal in the case of repeated neglect.

59. President.] Has there ever been a case of frequent or habitual absence? We have had a clerk lately who was suspended for being absent most of the time I was away at Deniliquin, some four months ago. He left without reporting himself. I reported him to the Minister, and the Minister suspended him. He was called upon to show cause why he should not be dismissed. He submitted a representation which was accepted in some degree as satisfactory, but his salary was reduced by his being placed in the next lower grade.

60. What was the complaint against him? He was away without leave, and for a month hardly came near the office at all.

61. Is he now in the Government service? Since the occasion above referred to he was reported for some neglect in the transmission of moneys to the Treasury, and he was suspended for that. The report of the Inspector of Accounts for the Treasury exonerated him from any dishonesty, but showed that he was guilty of gross neglect. The Minister, upon consideration of the matter, decided that he should not be allowed to remain in the Lands Department, but gave him the opportunity of effecting an exchange into some other department within a reasonable time, and failing that he was to leave. He has left the department. He ceased to draw salary on the 30th of last month.

62. That was for repeated absence and for irregularity in his accounts? For repeated absence; not irregularity in his accounts, for he did not keep accounts. Postage stamps, however, or small sums of money were I believe left lying in his drawer, instead of being transmitted to the Treasury. He does not appear to have used them.

63. They ought to have been represented by accounts? Yes, they ought to have been entered into a money book and sent up to the Treasury.

64. Mr. Thomson.] Are you referring to the record clerk? I am.

65. Was there any charge of drunkenness against him? No.

66. Is it not a fact that he was given to intemperance, and that that was the cause of his repeated absence? I cannot say, from anything I have heard officially. I may have heard private conversations out of the office, but I do not know whether I ought to mention anything of that sort.

67. He has been dismissed the service? He has not been formally dismissed the service, but I think that at next Executive Council he will be, or called upon to show cause why he should not be. We wrote to tell him, that as far as we knew he had made no arrangement for an exchange, or even any attempt to exchange, and that his connection with the department would cease on the 30th of September.

- W. W. Stephen, Esq. 28 Oct., 1878.
68. President.] How long is it since he was suspended? I think about two months and a-half ago.
69. How long before that was it that these complaints were made against him? He was suspended twice. The first time for absence from office, and then he was reinstated, but disgraced. Some time afterwards a report was made that some money had not been sent to the Treasury. He said that he had sent it to some other branch of the department, and had not received it back. He was suspended again for that. Reference was made to the Inspector of Accounts. Now he is out of the department, and the probability is that he will be dismissed.
70. Were these two complaints the only complaints you had to make against him? No. I have complained two or three times about his absence from the office when I have sent for him and found that he was not in.
71. Mr. Thomson.] Do you think that an officer who is unworthy to hold an office in the Lands Department should be permitted to hold an office in another department, even if he could obtain it by exchange? The head of the department into which he would be transferred would know what his character and conduct were from what the Minister had decided with regard to him.
72. He would not tell that himself; and it would not be learnt unless it came from some other source? No; an attempt was made to get him into the Department of Mines, but they would not avail themselves there of his services. I believe also that he tried to exchange into the Audit Office, but I do not know that officially.
73. President.] You say that he was record clerk? Yes.
74. His duties were of a responsible nature? Yes; he was the custodian of public documents, and had the sub-heads of branches under him. For example, there is a separate register for each of the branches into which the departmental work is divided, and he was the clerk in charge of the whole.
75. Upon the good management of that branch the good management of the whole department would depend? It is the mainspring of the department as regards all information required about official documents. If the public write about any particular subject we have to go to the "Records" to know where the papers are.
76. Any defect there would be felt throughout the whole machinery of the office? Yes. Instead of having one large room it has often occurred to me that it would be better if each branch were to keep its own records, and if possible in its own rooms. There is now one large record room, in which all the records of the department (excepting those relating to Conditional Sales) are kept.
77. Mr. Ranken.] You would distribute them? Yes; attach them to the branch to which the business related.
78. President.] How long is it since you had cause to find fault with the manner in which the clerk of records performed his duty? For some time past—I used to look upon him once as a good officer.
79. How long ago is that? I cannot say that I have looked upon him as a good officer for the last eighteen months or two years. I have sent for him when I have wanted papers, and found that he has not been in the office. He never committed any flagrant breach of discipline. He was never so very irregular until the last occasion, which led to his suspension, that I thought it necessary to submit his conduct to the Minister.
80. You have found fault with him? Yes, and remonstrated with him.
81. And still there was no action taken? Yes, but there was always some excuse. At one time his brother-officers thought well of him.
82. In whose hands is the power of suspension—have you the power of suspension? I do not consider that I have any power, except in an extreme case where the Minister may be absent. If the Minister for Lands were absent I should perhaps suspend temporarily, but seek confirmation of my action directly from some other Minister.
83. You do not consider that any one has the power but the Minister? No.
84. And there is no other known method of punishment? No; a system of fines has been spoken of amongst us—that is between myself and the heads of branches.
85. But nothing has been done to introduce it? No.
86. Mr. Thomson.] Did you ever ascertain from inquiry of the law officers of the Crown whether it would be legal to inflict fines? I do not think that there has been any reference to the Crown Law Officers upon the subject. It was done in our department some years ago. To disgrace a man is most effectually to fine him. That is approved by the Minister and Executive Council, as in the case of the record clerk.
87. President.] In Sydney the initiative of all business with reference to country lands is almost altogether by letter? Altogether I may say, nearly. In fact we could not well act on verbal representations.
88. Your communications from your own officers and the public are nearly always by letter in the first instance? Yes.
89. I suppose the correspondence is very considerable? Tremendous.
90. Have you any idea of the number of letters you receive? I have prepared a statement showing the number of letters received during the first nine months of this year and for the corresponding period of last year. That shows that the total number of letters which pass through my hands is at the rate of about 42,000 per annum. (Vide Appendix A 2.) I may mention also that I have brought the returns for which I was asked by the Secretary, showing the difference between the permanent and the temporary staff. (Vide Appendix A 3.)
91. Mr. Thomson.] Is that independent of the correspondence in the Conditional Sales Branch? Yes; it is the correspondence of which I have the actual control, the letters which are registered in the General Records Branch; but I have also applications in virtue of improvements or intended improvements and applications for leases which are registered in the particular branch to which the business relates, so that the actual correspondence of the department is greater than is shown in the return handed in just now.
92. Mr. Ranken.] Does that return show an increase in the number of letters for the first nine months of 1878 as compared with the like period for 1877? Yes; but there is a small decrease in alienation caused by the stoppage lately of selections after auction.
93. What do the Ministerial letters relate to? As distinguished from the other branches into which the department is divided, all applications for appointments, returns for Parliament, applications for the temporary use of public reserves, grants of money for various purposes, gold-fields reserves, proclamations in regard to which are specially placed under the Land Act.

94. Mr. Thomson.] Is not that now transferred to the Mining Department? No; it is a duty purposely left with the Minister for Lands. It is placed under him by the provisions of the Mining Act. W. W. Stephen, Esq.
95. You have some system of records in some of the branches? Yes; supposing the original document is an application for a pre-emptive lease or an improvement purchase, instead of sending it to the General Record Room, it is entered in the branch to which the business relates. 23 Oct., 1878:
96. In place of sending letters to the Record Branch you think it would be better to send more to the branches? Yes, that is being done now; it is more convenient, and we can deal with them more expeditiously.
97. Mr. Ranken.] These letters are the letters received? Yes; I hoped to have had a return of the number of letters despatched as well—they form a very considerable item of the daily work of the department.
98. Mr. Thomson.] You propose that each of the various branches ought to keep its own records; if that were done, would not the main record office be thrown into confusion; would you not lose the run of papers for the office prior to the change? I think it could be arranged without confusion, by providing that on and after a certain date each branch should keep the records of all the business belonging to it.
99. But many of the papers coming in after that date might be the continuation of others which were in the office before it? There would be a difficulty in that way, but I think it could be got over. The papers would gradually become connected together.
100. President.] Time would work them off? I think so.
101. What paper is that which you are about to hand in? It is a return showing the number of improvement purchase applications received during the year 1878 to the 22nd of October, and the same information for the like period of the previous year. (Vide Appendix A 4.) I have another return showing the number of leases and lease applications which are also kept separate from the General Records Branch. (Vide Appendix A 5.)
102. Mr. Thomson.] So that you have a division of registration now? Yes, but it is very slight.
103. President.] With regard to the letters received, what arrangements are there for the opening of them? Sometime ago I used to open them myself, but I found it took too long to do it. It took often a good hour. They are now opened by the head record clerk, who has generally another clerk standing by him to sort them as they are opened, distributing them amongst the different branches. They are classified according to the business, and they are then handed in to the record clerk of the particular branch to which they belong. He appends the particulars of previous papers about the same matter, and they are then sent to the heads of branches respectively who have to deal with them. Some are sent to me, and the others to heads of the different branches.
104. The record clerk is the gentleman you spoke of a while ago? Yes.
105. How long has that arrangement lasted? About two or three years.
106. I suppose there are 130 to 150 letters a day? Sometimes more than that.
107. On an average, how long do you suppose it would take daily to open those letters and ascertain the pith of them? As a general rule, all letters coming to the department are opened and registered by about half-past 11 or 12 o'clock. They have to be stamped with the record stamp of the department, and each letter has a distinguishing number affixed to it. This is absolutely necessary in such a large department.
108. That is done in the record-room? Yes; but the day's correspondence does not leave the record-room until about 12, except in cases of a special or urgent nature. Occasionally, it is despatched sooner.
109. But it would not take the record clerk and his assistant all the time from 9 till 12 to open them? I think so, that is to enter them in the registers, mark them off, stamp them, and obtain former papers.
110. I mean the mere opening of them? That would take about three quarters of an hour.
111. You have to deal with all these matters ultimately, and do you not think it would be better if you always opened them? I think it would be better.
112. Would it not be safer? It would.
113. Is it not absolutely necessary? I do not think that; I have never found anything wrong from not opening them.
114. Mr. Thomson.] Suppose you did open them. Could you ascertain the contents of them from opening them? I could tell pretty quickly to what branch a letter should be sent, and I could tell exactly which letters were urgent, and ought to be dealt with, and go to the Minister at once.
115. President.] In the case of any matters of an urgent nature who would deal with them? If I opened the letters.
116. No. As the letters are opened now, who would deal with those which required to be dealt with at once? The head of the branch. There are various degrees of importance. A matter of urgency would come to me at once. I should write upon the papers stating the nature of the case, and recommending or suggesting what the Minister should do, or I should see him about them, with the view of obtaining his decision.
117. But it would be in the judgment of the record clerk to say what were urgent and what not? Yes; he has instructions.
118. In what way are matters, which are not supposed to be urgent, brought under your notice. Do you wait for further applications from out of doors? How do you mean?
119. How are the subjects of these letters brought before you,—in what course? The record clerk will open a letter, and he will find that it relates to an application for a reserve, or the revocation of a reserve, an application to purchase in virtue of improvements, an application for the appointment of trustees, and so forth, and he sends the letter to the head of the particular branch which has charge of the business to which the letter relates. If the head of the branch looked upon it as an ordinary case he would write his minute upon it, and recommending perhaps the action to be taken from the nature of the case, and the former papers. The case is then submitted to me. If the head of the branch thinks I ought to deal with it without any memo. from him because of the importance of the matter, or any speciality connected with it, he would bring it to me, leaving me to submit it to the Minister, with my own minute.
120. Mr. Thomson.] Then all letters go to the heads of branches? Yes. The ordinary run of correspondence comes to me from the heads of the branches.
121. They are new to you till then? I have no means of knowing of them till then. 122.

- W. W. Stephen, Esq.
23 Oct., 1878.
122. And you are responsible for dealing with them? Yes; I recommend certain action for the Minister. He cannot go through every particular case. He holds me responsible to him; and to a great extent I hold the heads of branches responsible to me.
123. President.] Letters are not sent by you to the branches? That used to be the practice, but it caused much delay.
124. Mr. Thomson.] Who marks these papers off to the heads of the branches? The record clerks, and my rule is that they shall reach the head of the branch the day they are noted.
125. Have you a stamp for each branch? Yes.
126. And you stamp each document with a printed stamp? Yes.
127. The document on the table is marked with the "Ministerial stamp?" Yes; that is, the stamp of the Ministerial Branch of the Department.
128. If you were to mark it off afterwards to a particular branch have you a smaller stamp? No.
129. Then papers may go down to various branches and there is nothing to show what branches they have been to? The record clerk is responsible.
130. But there is nothing on the document itself to show it? It is entered in pencil in the general register book. It is pencilled in the general column for remarks—to say, Mr. Edwards, Mr. Rich, or whoever it may be.
131. Is not that an imperfect method—the pencilling may be rubbed out? Papers fluctuate so between the different branches that you must have pencil notes. Papers will be sent to the head of a branch, and be back to records next day, in transit to the Survey Department, or elsewhere.
132. You have no means of fixing that a document was sent to a particular officer on a particular day? No.
133. The officer might hold it over for a week or a fortnight, and say he only got it to-day? Yes.
134. President.] All this marking and sending to different branches is done without you in the first instance? I have no knowledge of it in the first instance.
135. It is quite possible for a matter of business to be in the office for some days without your knowing anything at all about it? It is quite possible under the present system. If inquiry were made about a matter I should refer to the record clerk. He would inform me that the letter had been received on such a day and referred, say to the Survey Department, on such a day. We should then send to the Survey Department for it.
136. Mr. Thomson.] That complaint would go the very same round that the first letter had gone, and you would have no knowledge of it until it came to you from the head of the branch? No; they are very often submitted to me.
137. President.] You said that a matter of new business might be somewhere in the office before you had any knowledge of it at all. Would not the delay in bringing it to your notice depend very much on the state of business in the branches through which it passed? Decidedly.
138. And is it not a fact that business in most of the branches is in arrears? Not very much now.
139. Although you are the responsible head you might have a matter in your office for sometime without you knowing anything about it? Yes, but not any important matter.
140. Is not that a very bad system? I cannot say it is a good one.
141. And inquiries made about delayed business must take the same course as the original letters? Yes, in the generality of cases.
142. Mr. Ranken.] I understood you to say that these letters go the same round in the Survey Department? A large proportion of our cases are matters for the Survey Department to take preliminary action on, and they are referred straight from the heads of branches to the Surveyor General, or rather to the head of the particular branch of the Survey Department, which deals with the particular class of business so referred relates. When papers go to the Survey Department they stop there until their action is completed, and until they come back I never see anything of them.
143. President.] They may be there for any length of time without the matter having come before your notice at all? Yes; they have to go, and it saves time to send them direct.
144. Mr. Ranken.] Does the Survey Department carry on correspondence direct on the same subject with the public? No, they do not. A portion of the clerical staff of the Survey Department used to do that some years ago but it was found not to work well. When Mr. Fitzpatrick was Under Secretary, a memo. for the amalgamation of these clerical branches was drawn up and approved, and as the result of the change then made the whole of the correspondence with the public is carried on through me by the department of the Minister. The Surveyor General corresponds only with and directs his own officers. I have a paper showing why that was done and when. It was by an Executive Council minute of January, 1867, and the present arrangement has therefore been in force over ten years.
145. Do you treat the Surveyor General's Department in the same way as the Conditional Sales Branch, —as a branch of the Lands Department? It is a branch in effect under separate control. We call it the Surveyor General's Department or office. I have to treat the business that comes from there on my own responsibility. If I do not agree with any recommendation which may be submitted by the Survey Office I make my own, giving my reasons.
146. You are the head of the department? Yes; but I am not supposed to correspond with or direct in any way the surveyors. Once I communicated with a surveyor, wishing to get a piece of land surveyed quickly, and forgot (as I intended) to tell the Surveyor General, who was at the time away from the office. The Surveyor General and his Deputy rather took umbrage at this, and the Surveyor General said that he could not control the movements of his own officers if I telegraphed instructions to them. I think in this perhaps he was right. I acted however in that instance under special circumstances, which I explained.
147. He holds virtually the same relation to his officers that you do to the subordinate branches of your department? Yes.
148. President.] But the head of the Occupation Branch communicates direct to the Minister and the public? Yes.
149. But the Surveyor General does not? All communications with regard to his officers, appointments, promotions, and so forth, are submitted through me, as Ministerial matters. The documents submitted in 1867 (which I just now alluded to), affirmed the desirability of the Lands Department conducting the administrative and clerical work, and the Survey Department dealing with the professional work. In the minute minute written by the late Surveyor General on the 27th of December, 1866, he addresses the Under Secretary for Lands as follows:—"Referring to your letter of the 28th of November last, respecting the amalgamation of the clerical branch of the Survey with the Lands Office, with a view I am informed, under an altered system of management, of promoting its efficiency and facilitating the despatch of public business, I fully concur in the desirableness of such an arrangement, as I have long felt that the Survey Department was encumbered with the discharge of duties not properly belonging to it, to the unavoidable neglect of work more especially appertaining to the branch."

W. W.
Stephen, Esq.
23. Oct., 1878.

150. I understood you to say that you thought the plan of having the letters opened by anyone but yourself did not answer well, as you did not know of letters being in the office? I could not possibly recollect the contents of 150 letters. The only advantage in my opening them would be that I could myself pick out which were urgent at once.

151. You could do that on your own judgment? Yes, but I should not think of dealing with them until I had had them registered in the Record Room.

152. Could you not give special instructions? I do not think it would save much time, because the Record Branch has instructions already. I should have to open the letter, send it down to the Record Branch, and get it back again. If the record clerk is an intelligent man and carries out his instructions properly, it is better that he should open the letters and register them than that they should be lying on my table until I could open them. The post-bag comes in at a quarter past 9 o'clock, and directly the letters are in the office the clerk is supposed to open them. They might be in the office sometimes an hour before I could commence even to open them.

153. The importance or non-importance of a matter is left not merely to the record clerk but to the branch to which he refers it? The head of the branch is equally responsible.

154. But it is only on their judgment that you are made aware whether a matter is important or not? Yes. I know sometimes that papers, reports, &c., are coming in to the department. I may expect some report from the Crown Solicitor, for example, on some particular matter, and I send a memorandum beforehand to the record clerk, or tell him myself that immediately such a letter comes in he is to submit it to me.

155. Do you not think that you could devise some plan under which, by additional assistance, you could acquire a more intimate knowledge of the correspondence from the beginning? I might possibly. However, eventually, it must come before me.

156. But sometimes it travels long distances all through the Surveyor General's Department? Sometimes it has to be sent a hundred miles or further into the country to some surveyor, and after it comes back to the Survey Department it remains there until they deal with it.

157. No matter how urgent it may be? Yes.

158. Mr. Thomson.] Supposing you did make yourself acquainted with the letters which came to the office, you would not deal with a letter until you had referred it to the officer who had special charge of the business? Except under very urgent circumstances.

159. Suppose you were to receive letters that some special business had not been attended to, I presume you would take some special action? If I received such letters I should send them to the head of the branch, and make special inquiries myself, also.

160. You would ask for an explanation? Yes; in nearly all cases I may state we send out an acknowledgment of having received the letter, and informing the writer that it will receive due attention.

161. President.] I cannot understand how these complaints would reach you any sooner than the original letters. Would not the complaints be sent after the papers? I have had cases in which the complaints were sent after the other papers into the Survey Office, and there they have stopped.

162. And if the letters were opened by yourself you would see what were complaints, and would attend to them at once? Yes.

163. Mr. Thomson.] But still the papers must go to the branch which they concern? Yes.

164. President.] What is the practice in other department—do not the Under Secretaries open all letters? I believe they do; but where they get ten letters in the day I get fifty. I have a statement here showing that the staff of our department is more than nearly all other Ministerial departments put together. I have also a statement which I drew up representing the difficulties which have arisen, and in which I recommended the appointment of a chief clerk. The Minister wrote a minute upon it, stating that he considered it an important matter relative to the efficient working of the department, and that he would bring it under the notice of his colleagues at the earliest possible period. It has been decided, however, not to appoint one.

165. What was the date of that minute? 17th July last. The duties of such an officer as I proposed would be to exercise a general superintendence over the whole of the branches and correspondence. At present the heads of branches are nearly as much interrupted as I am. If a chief clerk were appointed he would superintend the whole of the office, and go through the different rooms. It is impossible that I can go round about all day. Each Ministerial department, except the Lands Department, has a chief clerk.

166. If you had a chief clerk he would relieve you? Yes, to a great extent. As I have said here: "Irrespectively altogether of the Conditional Sales Branch, the business of which has for the last year or two been conducted under the immediate supervision of the Chief Commissioner of Conditional Sales, is actually greater by one-third than the four Ministerial Departments of the Colonial Secretary, Justice, Mines, and Works. If each of these departments, therefore, has a chief clerk, surely this department ought to have one, especially when it is borne in mind how scattered about, and how difficult consequently of supervision the different branches are."

167. Mr. Thomson.] Is not the head of each branch equal to a chief clerk in position? Not exactly. I have taken that point into consideration as well. He is chief clerk of his own branch.

168. Instead of one chief clerk you have half a dozen? Each head of a branch has enough to do with his own work. The powers and functions of a regularly appointed and recognized chief clerk would be far more extensive.

169. Mr. Ranken.] Does that statement include the correspondence about conditional sales? I left that open purposely, for after consideration.

170. Did you not mention the number? I said "irrespectively of conditional sales." I wrote to the Minister trying to get him to make the appointment. I wrote as follows,—“Assuming it to be admitted that such an appointment is required, I will point out as briefly as I can the duties which should devolve upon

W. W.
Stephen, Esq.

upon such an officer. I propose that he should exercise a supervision of the different branches of the department, with a view (while not interfering with the system of direct reference from branch heads to the Under Secretary) of directing generally as to the classes of cases requiring submission so as to relieve the Under Secretary of the immense mass of papers with which he is at present unnecessarily inundated, and that he should take means to enforce punctuality of attendance of officers and prevent accumulation of arrears. He should also be a reference in any special matters, and otherwise act for the Under Secretary when deputed to do so, and it will be his duty to carry out any minor arrangements which from time to time may be approved or found necessary for the better administration of the affairs of the department."

171. Will you leave that document with the Commission? Yes. (Vide Appendix A 6.)

172. Since when has this great accumulation of correspondence commenced? It has greatly increased since the passing of the Land law of 1861.

173. From the natural working of the Act? From the working of the Land law in all its various provisions and details.

174. You do not think it arises from the repeated delays and the confusion which is said to exist? I really think not.

175. Are not letters and applications respecting the alienation of land repeatedly made on the same subject? Not very often. The "Alienation Branch" correspondence refers chiefly to auction sales and selections. What we call the "Miscellaneous Branch" is in my opinion the heaviest in the department. It embraces a greater variety of cases.

176. What matters are referred to it? All correspondence about reserves for water supply and other public purposes under the 4th section of the Alienation Act, the dedication of lands for religious and other public purposes specified under the 5th section, which when once dedicated you cannot resume except by Act of Parliament. Reserves made under the 4th section can be revoked at any time by authority of the Executive Council. Correspondence respecting purchases in virtue of improvements and intended improvements is also dealt with in this branch, and numerous other matters.

177. Does it deal with auction sales? No; those come under "Alienation." Correspondence about the appointment of trustees, the reclamation of land, rescission of reservations of water frontage, the erection of wharfs and jetties, and so on, also comes under the Miscellaneous Branch. I do not think that return I have handed in (vide Appendix A 3) gives any real idea to the public or to anyone outside the department of the amount of work to be done. You can hardly obtain a proper idea of it without spending a day or two in the department itself.

178. Is the work of each room defined? Yes; and it is left to the head of each branch to carry out. I am pretty well acquainted with the working details of each branch, notwithstanding what our friend the reporter from the Herald recently wrote. The work is sent to me from the head of each branch. As I get a chance to look at it I do so, initialling or writing on the papers, and taking them in to the Minister. But sometimes I am days before I can get them in to the Minister. I am constantly interrupted by the public, and so is the Minister. I have known the Minister begin a memorandum at 10 o'clock in the morning and not be able to conclude it before 3 through the incessant interruptions.

179. That very fact must retard public business? It is one of the chief causes of it. I have made suggestions, and notices have been issued begging the public to keep away from the office except between the hours of 11 o'clock and 3. If that could be carried out it would be a great help to the Minister. In Victoria, where the work is not half so great as it is here, the Minister only sees people three days a-week. Here he is interviewed all day.

180. I think you have admitted that there is a certain deficiency in delay caused by the transmission of papers from one department to another—from the Lands to the Survey Department? There is a delay, but I do not see how it is to be avoided.

181. Does not the crowding of the office arise from the fact that people go there because their papers are not dealt with? In many instances it does.

182. Could you not give us any suggestion for an improved system in this respect? In regard to the transmission of papers?

183. To obviate the general delays which arise out of the working of the system. I believe there has been a report from an officer who went to Melbourne and inquired into the administration of the Lands and Survey Departments there. Do you not think that decentralisation would be a good thing? The Deputy Surveyor General went down to Melbourne and went through the department there, but I have never seen any report from him. I remember a suggestion about carrying a new system of road districts, in which he referred to some system in force in Victoria, but I never saw a report on it. The roads business is now however under the Mining Department.

184. I think the report referred to the whole Survey Department? I do not recollect seeing it.

185. President. I think there is a report from the Surveyor General, and another from the Deputy Surveyor General? I have only seen one from the Deputy about roads.

186. Mr. Ranken. Have you any knowledge of the Queensland system? No, I have not.

187. It is very much a local system, the head office being little more than a court of appeal. I want your opinion as to whether a movement in that direction would not facilitate work? I have never had time in the great pressure of daily business to give much attention to the matter, I am so busy the whole day at the office. The work of the head office might perhaps be relieved a great deal by local Boards for each district.

188. In Queensland the whole work of alienation and survey is done by a surveyor and commissioner? If applications for conditional purchases were addressed to a surveyor or commissioner in the country and dealt with there in its preliminary stages it might remove some of the work from the head department; but at the same time it would not do for the head department to be in ignorance of what was going on in the different districts.

189. A duplicate of all the work that is done is transmitted weekly or monthly to the head office so that with full information of all that goes on they are able to put in the necessary check when required? The settlement of minor matters might be left to that Board, but I think that the local office would have a great deal to contend against, and that people would not be satisfied short of an appeal to the Minister.

190. The local staff could get the routine work done before such a case went to the head office? I think something might be done in that way to relieve the head office. There is a great deal of delay. If local land agents could have their maps kept properly up, they ought to be able to at once tell applicants for conditional purchase whether they could have the land applied for or not.

W. W.
Stephen, Esq.
23 Oct., 1878.

191. You think a move in that direction might be beneficial? I have not gone into all the details. The matter is new to me. It would take some years' time to bring about any such change where we have worked on the one system so long.

192. You have superior officers in the Lands Department to take charge of such a system? Perhaps so. And vidæ voce evidence given in the district on disputed cases would no doubt be of great advantage? I have been used to the present system all my life. I still think if it were more vigorously and effectively carried out it would not work so badly. You cannot act on cases without referring them to the Minister, and the Minister's time is so taken up that sometimes I cannot get near him for a whole day. I was in favour myself of establishing an inquiry office the same as exists in Victoria, but the present Ministers would not have it. Former Ministers were going to adopt it. Cases of this kind occur: A person comes and sees the Minister about some matter. The Minister sends to the head of the branch for the papers, but when the papers come he cannot know what the case is about without having perused them. There are hundreds of cases on which people trouble the Minister, but which might be settled without parties going to the Minister at all, and thus his time is wasted. They could get the information they wanted from the Inquiry Office in an hour, or in the course of the day. At present they rush to the Minister, who cannot be supposed to know what their business is about, or to give an opinion or decision, without having first seen the papers to which it relates.

193. Mr. Thomson.] I think you said you had no check upon the attendance of an officer? None beyond what I have stated—that the heads of branches are supposed to report.

194. Do you allow your officers to go out for lunch? Yes.

195. Is there any fixed time for the lunch-hour? No; there is a generally understood rule that half-an-hour or three-quarters of an hour may be taken.

196. Is that in excess of the regulation time? It is the understood regulation.

197. Are you aware whether the time was fixed by the Executive Council or the Minister? If so, it must have been done before my time, or I may have forgotten it.

198. Have you ever heard that your officers exceed their time? Sometimes it has been represented to me that they do.

199. Has it been represented to you that they have been seen down town at all hours of the day? I have heard so.

200. Did you ever make any inquiries to see if there were any truth in such statements? I have inquired and spoken to the officers, and they have said not. They have admitted that they have occasionally exceeded the allotted half-hour.

201. Do you not hold the heads of branches responsible for the attendance of the clerks in their branch? I think they ought to be responsible. I have spoken once or twice to the heads of branches for not keeping them more to the time.

202. Is there any rule in force with regard to leave of absence? Our general rule is that they can get three weeks in every twelve months. Some take it and some do not.

203. Could you furnish the Commission with a statement showing who had got leave of absence during the last three years, and the period of absence in each case? I will try. I do not know that there is any special record. As a rule they do not take more than three weeks. Some get a month.

204. You must have some record for leave of absence? I think there is. We do not keep records where they are away for a day. I am not quite certain whether there is a register kept of annual leaves. There must be applications, and they ought to be in the office.

205. If not in the general records they will be in each branch? Yes.

206. When a clerk is absent on the plea of sickness is he bound to produce a medical certificate? That is the rule. Two days are allowed, but for anything beyond that he is called upon to produce a medical certificate. I have had two or three cases in which a man has written to say that he hoped I would not put him to that expense on the ground that his illness was one that he could cure himself. Where I have conscientiously believed the representation to be bond fide I have not insisted on the certificate.

207. Is it not a fact that a good number of your officers are frequently absent without any plea? I do not think the number is greater than in any other department.

208. Have you any means of ascertaining that readily? I do not know how I could.

209. Is there no record in the office? As to their staying away?

210. Yes; on the plea of sickness? I do not think so.

211. In a large department like yours, if a number of officers absent themselves on the plea of sickness, you are aware that that must be a great loss of time to the office, and must create confusion and arrears? Yes; but I do not honestly think that that is carried on to any great extent.

212. Before the next time you come to be examined would you try to ascertain if there is any means of giving this information, also information in regard to leave of absence? Yes; every man who is absent for a day is reported to me. I call upon him for an explanation; if more than a day or two, I call upon him for a medical certificate.

213. You hold the head of a branch responsible for all the clerks under him? Yes.

214. And yourself responsible to the Minister for the management generally? Yes.

215. Do the heads of the branches make reports to you weekly or monthly as to the state of the business in their branch? No.

216. Do you not think that such an arrangement as that would conduce to the good management of the department. The number of cases in hand?

217. The state of the work generally? Have you printed forms of questions which the officers can answer, from which you could see whether the work was being performed or was accumulating as arrears? Some statement of that kind used to be furnished in Mr. Fitzpatrick's time, showing the number of cases in hand, and the oldest date, and how long the head of the branch had had the paper. That is not done now.

218. If you were to resuscitate that would it not bring these arrears into notice, and if you thought any branch was not doing its work satisfactorily you could report it to the Minister? I have no doubt that would be an advantageous arrangement.

219. When overtime work was in operation a short time back did you satisfy yourself from personal inquiry that it was absolutely necessary, or were you relying on the reports from the branches? The head of the branch would certify as to the number of hours and the rate.

220. I ask whether the work was necessary or not—whether you ascertained that before overtime was permitted? The heads of branches submitted very strong reports on the subject, and I submitted a recommendation to the Minister which was approved.

- W. W. Stephen, Esq.
23 Oct., 1878.
221. How long has the system of overtime payments lasted? I think about eighteen months. I had a return prepared a short time ago showing the different amounts.
222. But that was not a nominal return? I think it was prepared with the names of the officers.
223. What were the rates paid to the heads of branches? 4s. an hour and the others 3s. an hour.
224. Are you aware whether these are the rates paid for overtime in other departments? I do not believe that the heads of branches have been allowed 4s. in other departments.
225. Do you not consider that excessive? I think 3s. an hour is a fair thing all round. I do not see why the heads of branches should get 1s. an hour more. They all work the same.
226. It is reported that they did nothing at all? I cannot say; I did not stop in and watch them.
227. A boy who was receiving say £100 a-year would be paid at the same rate as the rest, and so double his salary in half a year? —
228. Was it fair that a boy should be paid at the same rate as a man who was in the receipt of a salary of £500 a year? It does not seem fair, but his work overtime might be as valuable.
229. Should not the juniors be paid in proportion to their salaries? I recommended six months ago that there should be a graduated scale according to the salary, and that no rate should be less than 1s. 6d. an hour.
230. Is there at present, or has there been of late years, any insubordination in the department? You mean the department generally?
231. Yes. Has there been anything like insubordination during the last three years? There has been some approach to it in one or two instances. There has been a case which I dare say is generally known, in which a junior officer was assaulted by a superior officer, but I do not know whether that can be designated as insubordination.
232. Are you aware of any case of incompetency amongst your officers? There are some of the clerks which do not come up to the standard of efficiency which ought to be maintained in the Lands Department.
233. Have you no means of removing them, or of suggesting their removal, to make your staff more efficient? No; men I have recommended myself have turned out well, I am happy to say; but the Minister is beset, and pestered every day almost for appointments, without reference to the qualifications of the applicants; by political * influence the Minister of the day makes a lot of appointments, then he goes out. You cannot dismiss these men unless they are downright incompetent; but they are left as a legacy to me to carry out the duties devolving on the department, and for which I am held responsible.
234. Do these inefficient clerks not create a large amount of arrears which has led to the charge of inefficiency? I do not think there is a sufficient number of them now to make any very great difference as regards arrears.
235. How many temporary clerks have you? In reply to the President's request I have brought a statement on the subject. (See Appendix A 2.) That portion of the return which relates to the Survey Office does not include the field officers—simply the office hands.
236. President.] This is only a return of the number of officers? And their names.
237. It does not include the whole of the information asked for? No; the Surveyor General says it is not possible to give the whole of the information asked for—that is as to cases undisposed of in his office on 30th June.

FRIDAY, 25 OCTOBER, 1878.

Present:—

MR. ABBOTT. | MR. THOMSON.
MR. RANKEN.

R. P. ABBOTT, ESQ., PRESIDENT, IN THE CHAIR.

William Wilberforce Stephen, Esq., was called in and further examined:—

- W. W. Stephen, Esq.
25 Oct., 1878.
238. President.] I think the last subject on which you were examined, when before the Commission on Wednesday, had reference to correspondence? I think so.
239. Can you tell us when the letter, which was written to the department, asking for certain cases and names of officers, reached you? I cannot say from memory; and I have not brought the letter with me.
240. How did you first become aware of its having been written? It came to me direct, before registration, with the rest of the letters, and I sent it down at once to be attended to.
241. The same day? The same day I received it.
242. That was the day on which it was written? I think, if my memory serves me, I did not get it until a day or two after it was dated. As far as my memory serves me, two of the letters I received from the Secretary to the Commission went to the Records direct. The others came to me at once; they were laid on my table, and I opened them in the ordinary way.
243. I understood that this particular letter was delivered at the office on Monday morning, and that on Thursday morning you had not heard of it? I cannot recollect. I think I did not receive the first letter until a day or two after it was written. It might possibly have been detained at the Records.
244. It was a letter of sufficient importance to be looked after promptly? Directly I got it I attended to it.
245. With regard to the person into whose hands it came first, ought he to have sent it to you? Certainly, I have told the record clerk to submit all urgent letters to me at once. If I had known you were going to question me on the subject I would have obtained all necessary information.
246. Have you any special branch or office with which you personally deal—that is to say, any branch under your own control, without reference to the head of any other branch? I cannot say that I personally deal with one branch more than another. There is a class of correspondence which may be termed "Ministerial," which is dealt with more directly by me, or by the Minister—correspondence, for instance, that has not to be referred to the Survey Department, or elsewhere. I think it will be found that the time taken in dealing with that class of correspondence is not so great.
247. Under whose control or management is the "Improvement Purchase" Branch? It is included in what we call the "Miscellaneous" Branch. Mr. Lindsay Thompson is at the head of that branch.

* NOTE (on revision):—I prefer to say outside influence.—W.W.S.

W. W.
25 Oct., 1878.

248. What is the ordinary routine of your daily business or work? It would be almost impossible for me to state verbally all the duties I have to perform. All the cases that have to be reported on relating to improvement purchases, applications for reserves, and, in fact, everything that comes to the office out of an ordinary nature has to come to me. I have to look through the minutes; write précès very often of cases myself; sometimes, if I do not approve of the memorandums or recommendations of the Survey Department, I make other recommendations to the Minister. I am responsible to the Minister for these recommendations. I have every day dozens of letters to sign, and have to see people, as well as the Minister and clerks.

249. There is no rule as to how your work begins, or as to what is dealt with first? No; I have to take the work as it comes, and deal with the most urgent business first.

250. Whichever you are pressed about first? Whichever I think to be of an urgent nature; I pick out the most urgent business as quickly as I can. I often deal with matters without reference to the Minister; but of course there is very much that I have to refer to him. Then, again, my time is often taken up by cases submitted to me by the heads of the various branches; I have either to agree or disagree with their recommendations; I have to write minutes and recommendations for the Minister—recommending in fact the action I think it is desirable to take in any particular case; I state the law of the case to the Minister, and point out the clauses of the Acts which may bear upon the cases submitted, and so on.

251. With regard to those matters which you lay before the Minister for his approval or decision, how are they brought to you—by the heads of the respective branches? They are either brought to me or sent up. A very large proportion come direct from the Survey Office and from the Records to me. I may state that until a short time ago everything used to be sent to me direct from the Records Branch, but they came to me in such numbers every day that I was unable to deal with all of them, and sometimes have to put them by without even looking at them. It was afterwards arranged that they should be sent from the Records to the heads of the respective branches first—that is, that they should come back to me in the same way they went.

252. Are there any other officers of the department who have direct communication with the Minister besides yourself? Occasionally other officers have direct communication with the Minister. For instance, Mr. Farnell, from his experience in the office, knows the heads of the branches, and when he wants information relating to any particular branch, he will send for the head of that branch. If he wanted information relating to a lease he would send for the head of the Leasing Branch, on his own motion, instead of sending to me. If he sent for me, he knows that I should in most cases have to send for the head of the branch. But by sending for the head of the branch himself direct, a great deal of time is often saved.

253. Is there no officer of the department in direct communication with the Minister, of his own motion, or in his own recognised right, besides yourself? No, the Chief Commissioner of Conditional Purchases and the Deputy Surveyor General go to the Minister direct, on business connected with their respective departments. All the persons who have a recognised right of communication with the Minister, besides myself, direct, are the Surveyor General, the Deputy Surveyor General, and the Chief Commissioner. The others do not usually go unless the Minister sends for them.

254. I think you said the other day that the Miscellaneous Branch was looked upon as the most important branch of the department? I look upon it as such. I do not say exactly that the work is more important, but it is more complicated—there is a greater variety of subjects dealt with.

255. There is more responsibility on the head of that department? Yes, there is more responsibility on the head for the reasons just stated, more actual work, a greater amount of correspondence, and a greater variety of cases dealt with.

256. Who is at the head of that branch? Mr. Lindsay Thompson.

257. Do you recollect how many clerks are employed in the Miscellaneous Branch? There are ten on the permanent staff, and about seven or eight on the temporary staff.

258. A return before the Commission gives the number on the temporary staff as five? Yes, I think there are two short just at present.

259. Would it be possible for you to say what are the particular matters dealt with in that branch? There are two clerks, say, who have to deal with purchases under the 31st clause of the Act—purchases by virtue of intended improvements; then there are two clerks who take a certain division of the colony, and attend to all work connected with appraisements of lands, and general correspondence in connection with sales and improvements. The other clerks take other districts of the colony. Their work relates to applications, registering, writing correspondence, and preparing cases for the appraiser, and so on,—work which in all its details it would take a long time to explain. Then there are the appointments of trustees, the dedication of commons, the proclaiming of reserves, the revocation of reserves, the dedication of lands for schools and churches, and for different public objects mentioned in the 5th clause of the Alienation Act. All these matters involve a large amount of work.

260. How long has Mr. Thompson been at the head of the Miscellaneous Branch? I think for about 6 or 7 years.

261. How is he set in motion with regard to the particular matters—how do they first reach him—that is, particular matters coming within his jurisdiction or management? He takes the initiatory action himself. The letters are first received at the "Records," excepting the applications themselves, which are entered in the registers of his branch. I handed in a return the last day the Commission sat, showing the number that were entered in the register of the branch and the number that went to the Record Branch. With regard to other correspondence it goes direct to him from Records and he gives it to the clerks, according to the class of cases to which each letter belongs; or he may refer some to me for decision, or to be sent to the Minister, as the case may be.

262. Then you know nothing about those matters coming within his province until they have passed through his hands? No; the great difficulty I have to contend with is the delay when I have to forward letters to the Surveyor General's office; there is perhaps unavoidable delay, but I sometimes do not see them again for months afterwards. The public outside do not understand the delay that takes place between the Surveyor General's Department and the Lands Department. A person may write to the Lands Office complaining of not receiving information about his application for land or other matters, when the reason he does not get it is owing perhaps to the papers being in the Survey Department, waiting for surveys to be made, or plans charted, or other action appertaining to that department, so that

- W. W. Stephen, Esq.

- that I never have a chance of answering people until I get the cases back from the Survey Department. I refer of course to matters belonging to or having first to be dealt with by the Survey Department.
263. And the action on the part of the Survey Department may involve a large amount of time? Yes. I remember two or three particular cases which I especially brought under the notice of the Minister. I showed him how we were subjected to complaints on account of delay in the Survey Office. The Minister agreed with me, and referred the matter to the Surveyor General, and asked if some arrangements could not possibly be made for obviating such delays; but nothing has been done.
264. The delays in the Survey Office are caused by the cases having to be referred to the surveyors in the country? Undoubtedly; but I maintain there is an unnecessary detention in the Survey Department when the papers come back from the surveyors. Take for instance the case of a man who applies for a selection in virtue of improvements. When the papers are returned from the surveyor in the country, in nine cases out of ten you can tell from his report whether the applicant can have the land or not; and by giving the applicant a simple answer to that effect, months of delay might be saved. But instead of the papers coming to me, they are (being directed to the Surveyor General) kept in the Survey Office until the plans are charted, and all that time the applicant is kept without an answer. If the papers came to me at once I could immediately communicate with the applicant, and the papers could then be sent to the Survey Office for the charting. And that office often keeps the papers to write memoranda, which it need not write at all—to make recommendations, which I maintain it is only within the Ministerial province to make. It is needless to delay a case five or six or eight weeks, if not more, merely to write a memorandum that the application cannot be granted.
265. They keep papers six or eight weeks to enable them to make recommendations which it is not in their province to make? It is not in their province to make them, excepting in particular cases, when advice of a professional character is required.
266. Besides the delays in the Survey Office there are delays caused by referring matters to the district surveyor or licensed surveyor in the country—the licensed surveyor may keep these matters back until they are dealt with, which may take months or even years? Yes.
267. I suppose you have known cases that have been in hands of the Surveyor General for more than a year, waiting survey? Yes. I have brought the papers relating to two or three cases with me. They are forcible illustrations of what I am saying. I have written a short précis of each case, giving dates, and what was done. The first is a case in which a man named James Godwin applied for land in virtue of improvements on a gold-field; the application was made under the "Crown Lands Alienation Act of 1861"; it is dated September 22nd, 1875. The report of the gold-fields warden upon it was received in July, 1876. It was not then received back from the surveyor into the Survey Office until February, 1878, after the lapse of a period of one year and eight months from the time the papers were sent to the Survey Office. On the 4th March, 1878, a letter was received, complaining about the delay in the case, from the applicant, and the Survey Department was put in motion to search for former papers which still remained with them. Instead of the papers coming back to me in February, which they might have done, they remain in the Survey Department, and it is only in August, 1878, that I get them back. I did not know the case was in the Survey Office until Mr. Beyers called attention to the delay that had taken place in dealing with it. (Vide Appendix A 7.)
268. Did you see the application before it went to the Survey Office? No; I had no personal knowledge of it. The application was received in the Lands Department on 22nd September, 1875; it was sent to the Survey Office, and it was August, 1878, before it was received back in the Lands Department.
269. Having been in all the intermediate time in the Survey Department—between the officers of that department or under their control? Under their control, with the exception of the time it was in the hands of the gold-fields warden.
270. When did that application first come under your own personal knowledge? The first time I had any personal knowledge of it, I recollect, it was through Mr. Beyers, the Member of Parliament, coming to complain of it, that led me to ask for the papers, and get them from the Survey Department. On or about the 8th of August, Mr. Beyers having complained again, I had an inquiry made, and found that further action was stopped through the loss of a plan.
271. Then you heard of the application for the first time when complaints were made of its not having been dealt with? Yes; the whole action of the Lands Department is impeded by the time it takes to get papers back from the surveyor in the field, and from the Survey Department.
272. You attribute the delay in the business of the Lands Department to the detention of papers by the Survey Department—in the field and in the office? Yes, it cannot be otherwise.
273. What is the other case you referred to? It is the case of the Messrs. Landale, who applied for a portion of land by virtue of improvements in 1876; it went direct from our office to the Survey Department; that was in September, 1876; the report of the surveyor was not received until the 8th September, 1877, that is nearly a year after the application was sent to the Survey Department; it then remained in the Survey Department for the charting of plans, and so on, and was not returned to the Lands Department until the 5th August, 1878. The Commission will thus see that under such a system of action it has taken just two years to reply to an application for a portion of land situated within two days journey of Sydney. Complaints have so frequently been made against the Lands Department of delay, that I brought the matter under the notice of the Minister, with the view of showing him how the delays really occurred. I mention the matter now, not with the view of in any way making complaints against the Survey Department, but because I think it is only fair to the Lands Department to deny most emphatically the statement that has gone forth, that professional action is delayed by Ministerial action. Quite the contrary is the case; the Ministerial department cannot act until it gets the papers back from the Survey Department. (Vide Appendix A 8.)
274. When did the case you have just referred to first come under your notice? In August, 1878.
275. How was it then brought under your notice? It was submitted to me in the ordinary way. After the application was returned to the Survey Department it was kept there for the charting of the plan; that plan was charted in June, 1878; it was then kept in the Survey Department from June till August, in order that it might have a recommendation written on it—"It is recommended," and so on—an action that I could have and ought to have taken myself.
276. It was delayed unnecessarily in the Survey Department in order that a minute might be written, which you think it was more properly your duty to write? Yes.

W. W.
Stephens, Esq.
25 Oct., 1878.

277. Was there no special complaint with reference to that case? No; I took it from a batch of cases laying before me; I did not select it particularly. I suggested that, to obviate delay of this kind, directly the survey report was received it should be sent on to the Ministerial department first; we could inform the applicant of the result; and it could then be forwarded back to the Survey Department for the plan to be charted.

278. Have you any other case you wish to refer to? No, I only thought it necessary to bring these two cases. Oh, I find I have another one, a worse one; but it is, I believe, an extreme case.

279. I think we had better have it? This was a case in which some applications were made for improvement allotments on a gold-field. Two of them were made in September, 1872, six years ago; the other four were received about four years ago—they are applications by William Macarthur for the purchase of improvement allotments within a gold-field. Two of them were made in November, 1872; the others in 1874; they are returned to the department finally by the surveyor in November 1877; in January, 1878, there is a memo. written in the Survey Office, to the effect that the portions of land applied for are included within the temporary Common of Young. If the papers had come to me at once through the ordinary course, in January, 1878, that is, as soon as returned, I could have informed the applicant that he could not have the lands, unless he could prove they were applied for before the reservation of the Common was made. Instead of that, they are kept in the Survey Department in order that a minute may be written on them—"It is recommended that the owner of the improvements on the land be informed that he cannot have the land," and so on, a course of action purely for the Lands Department to take. (Vide Appendix A 9.)

280. Was the Survey Department in a position to have written that minute in January last? There is nothing to show it to the contrary; so far as appears by the papers they were in a position to write the minute in January last, the plan being noted as examined and charted in November, 1877. I declined to take the action which the Survey Department recommended, because four years, and in two of the cases six years, had elapsed since the applications were received. I said that I could not agree to the recommendation after the extraordinary delay that had taken place. I took another course. I wrote to the land agent of the district in which the land is situated for the necessary information. I may say that this is an extreme case which I have just referred to.

281. You wrote to the land agent? Yes.

282. And how has the case been dealt with? I do not know just now whether the report has been received yet.

283. Mr. Ranken. Did you notice that all these old outstanding matters came to you in August last? This last case came to me in September.

284. August and September? Yes, two of the cases came to me in August.

285. Did it not occur to you that that was remarkable? It does seem extraordinary. I took the cases up promiscuously; it did not strike me at the time that they all came to me in the same month. One is dated February, and did not come to me until August. I did not notice the singularity before.

286. President. Up to August last you had no means of knowing anything of the position of these cases—they first came under your notice then? Yes. These ordinary applications are passed on to the Survey Department to be dealt with without writing to the applicants at all.

287. They first came under your personal supervision in August? Yes, because there was no Ministerial action to be taken with respect to them; they were sent on to the Survey Department in the ordinary routine without my knowing anything about them.

288. You said you could undertake to supply the Commission with a memorandum giving some of your own minutes on these cases—a précis of each case in fact? Yes; there are précès attached to the cases I have brought with me, to which I have referred. I should like it to be understood that I feel rather nettled about these matters, but I am not saying anything with the view of casting any reflection upon or making any complaint whatever against the Survey Department. I know what a great dearth of surveyors there is, and that the department has many difficulties to contend with. But it is said that the Lands Department is to blame for all the delay that takes place, and I have felt bound therefore to put cases before the Commission to show that it is not.

289. Do you think any blame attaches to the Department of Lands for the responsibility of these cases for not looking after them—has there been no means of reaching these cases so that the department which is responsible for delay could have the matter brought under its notice? I cannot think that our department is responsible for what is out of our hands altogether, and being dealt with by the Survey Department.

290. Then who is responsible to the public? The Lands Department is looked upon as responsible; and that department is dependent upon the movements of the Survey Department in regard to a great proportion of its correspondence.

291. It is left to the Survey Department although that department is not responsible to the public? It is not responsible to the public; all cases are submitted through me, and I have to communicate with the public.

292. In cases like those you have mentioned is there no action taken by the Lands Department to follow them up, or complain if they are not being dealt with? If they go to the Survey Department?

293. Yes; are they left there for an indefinite term? Yes; the Surveyor General is supposed to keep his surveyors in check. After these papers go to the Surveyor General he is supposed to remind his surveyors when the work is in arrear. We do not correspond with the surveyors at all. When the papers leave our department we lose control of them until they are returned.

294. And the Survey Department is not responsible to the public? I should suppose there is a regulation in the Survey Department against surveyors keeping work in hand beyond a certain time.

295. But you say you feel no responsibility from the time the papers go to the Survey Department? Not until they come back.

296. And you have no duty which involves your looking after these cases? Not cases that go to the Survey Department. When they return from the Survey Department of course my responsibility commences.

297. If a case is delayed six or seven years? I should know nothing of it unless a complaint is made. In one case I have referred to no complaint has been made notwithstanding the delay. I do not know what has become of the applicant.

298. The case in which Mr. Beyers moved? Yes. That case is a most striking illustration of the system I complain of.

W. W.
Stephen, Esq.
26 Oct., 1878.

299. Is it not a fact that there are a great many such cases of delay—delays varying from a month or two to six or seven years? The statement which I have handed to the Commission shows the number of cases relating to improvement purchases waiting action on the part of the Survey Department.
300. This return shows there are 6,160 cases in the Survey Office? Yes.
301. This return refers to the Improvement Branch? The same branch in which the cases to which I have referred are dealt with. Before an answer can be given to applicants we have to wait the return of these cases from the Survey Office.
302. Is the Lands Department powerless to interfere? I cannot interfere with the Surveyor General. He has the control of his own officers.
303. And the Lands Department is powerless? Yes, under the existing system.
304. And has no means of expediting business? Unless we bring cases of complaint under the notice of the Minister, who would set the Survey Department in motion.
305. That of course involves further correspondence? Yes, further correspondence and delay. I have drawn up suggestions for preventing this delay, but Mr. Farnell thought that as this Commission was about to begin operations the matter had better stand over.
306. Is it a fact that the business in other branches of the department with which the Survey Department deals is in the same state of arrear? The same practice applies throughout.
307. The same amount of delay? The same defects permeate the whole system of the Survey Department as regards its connection with the Lands.
308. And your department has no power to insist upon the completion of business? None; I cannot instruct the surveyor to expedite his work; it must be done by the Surveyor General.
309. The Survey Department is not directly responsible to the public? No.
310. You spoke the other day of the large amount of correspondence which your department has to deal with;—would not these innumerable delays and constant complaints double the correspondence? There is no doubt it increases it very considerably. There are not so many complaints, however, as you would think, considering the number of delays there are. In one of the cases I have referred to the applicant has made no complaint, although six or seven years have elapsed since he sent in his application.
311. Mr. Thomson. Is it not possible, in regard to that case, that the man may be occupying the land without paying anything for it? Yes; but he must be in "authorised occupation" to entitle him to apply for the purchase; he may be paying his miners' fee or business license.
312. President. Does not this delay, more than anything else, account for not only the increase of correspondence but for the personal interviews between yourself and the Minister when complaints are made? To a great extent it must. I say I do not think there is really much to complain about with regard to correspondence that has not to go out of the office—that which we can submit to the Minister when we get a chance.
313. But a far larger proportion must go out of the office? Conditional purchase applications and all other applications for sale must go out of the office.
314. And you have no power to expedite business? No, not that belonging to the Survey Office.
315. A delay of business is caused by persons seeking interviews with yourself and with the Minister? Yes.
316. Did you bring any other cases besides those you have referred to to show the delay that takes place? No; I just put these cases in my box, on the supposition that they might be required as samples of the general run of cases in which there is delay.
317. Have you noticed lately any increased activity in the office, or in any one or more portions of it, within the last few months? I cannot say that I have. In one or two of our branches I know that there are hardly any arrears at all. I was asking about it yesterday, and there are really very few arrears in the Correspondence Branch, except in some cases which I am myself responsible for, and with which I have not had time to deal. I have a number of cases in my hands which I have not been able to submit to the Minister, simply because I have found it utterly impossible with my other duties.
318. And you attribute your inability to deal with those cases, I understand, to interruptions caused by people calling to have interviews with you, and your endeavours to see the Minister? I have to see the Minister; to see people wanting information; to see clerks who come up to ask about certain cases; sign letters; write précès in many cases; and all these things take up a great deal of my time.
319. Are not the minutes and précès that you write, generally about those cases in which there has been so much delay? No, I could show you many cases I have to prepare for the Minister, showing him the way in which I think they should be dealt with. I sometimes have to write minutes showing how the law applies in particular cases. I am pretty well up in the different clauses of the Lands Acts, and write memoranda for the use of the Minister. There are large numbers of cases which come up from the Survey Office, relating to dedications and reserves, and matters of that kind, containing recommendations which I can see at a glance are right; but sometimes cases happen, and have happened within the past two or three months, in which I have pointed out to the Minister a different mode of action to that recommended by the Survey Department, and the Minister has approved of my recommendation. I often think that that looks like doing work twice over. It is harder to go against a recommendation made by an officer than to make one yourself. The Minister says that he holds me responsible, and I do not therefore like to pass anything which I do not think is quite right.
320. You are held responsible for the conduct of business? Yes, my signature appears to the letters and they look to me.
321. You said, I think, that you had no other cases of a similar nature to those you have referred to with you? No, but I can get you others if desired.
322. If you would choose some you would be in a better position to pick out cases which would give us information than we are? I am under the impression myself that the cases I have laid before the Commission, and the statement I have written on each, showing exactly what they are, apply more or less to the general run of cases. If there are any others of a better or worse character I could bring them. There is no doubt there are delays. The return I have placed before the Commission refers to one class of cases, I.P.'s., (i.e., improvement purchases) as we call them.
323. Do you not think that these delays, which are very reasonably complained of, increase the work of the department very considerably, and occupy the time of the department? Certainly, and I find it very hard to overtake arrears when they once begin.
324. Is it not a fact that generally when a case is delayed at all it is left until some stir is made about it by the individual who is interested? I think there is a general tendency to get rid of the current business.

business. If there are several cases of not very old date, three or four days perhaps, there is a disposition to get rid of those, before cases of an older date, unless some land agent, or some one interested, comes to complain, and routs the cases out.

W. W.
Stephen, Esq.
25 Oct., 1878.

325. And so it goes on to years as well as months? I do not think there are any such cases in our office.

326. The cases you have referred to? Those cases came to me on the 4th of August, and they were dealt with on the 9th.

327. But there are cases delayed which ought to be acted upon much sooner? Undoubtedly, for the reasons which I have pointed out.

328. And land agents exist in consequence of those delays? I cannot say that exactly. There is no doubt that agents get business expedited much more than it would be if left to the ordinary routine of the department. Of course they see the Minister, and they know the offices so well from experience.

329. They hunt up things that are allowed to rest whilst current work is being looked after? Yes.

330. So that in point of fact the agents exist almost because of the inability of the department to cope with the business? To some extent that is true, and that is one reason why I proposed a short time ago the establishment of an inquiry office. It would not suit the land agents, perhaps, because they no doubt derive their power, or rather the persons who employ them think they derive additional power, through their being able to see the Minister, or me, or other chief officers of the department; whereas the ordinary run of applicants, who have to trust to their own writing, have to rely upon the attention that can be given them in the ordinary routine of business.

331. From your experience of the system pursued by land agents, what is your opinion with reference to it; do you think it desirable they should have the position you describe? I think —. Well I was going to say they are a necessary evil.

332. You look upon them as an evil? I can scarcely say that. They are, certainly, at times great interruption to me personally; but I must say they expedite the work of their clients, and get their business pushed through in perhaps half the time it would take if those clients had only themselves to trust to. And this may easily be accounted for, from the fact that there are numbers of persons of all classes, who are unacquainted with the working of the Land laws, or with the proper mode of applying for or representing what they require. They naturally, therefore, place their business in the hands of those who thoroughly understand it and are at hand to watch it through the different stages which it has to pass.

333. Then you look upon them as an assistance to the department? Yes, in regard to the cases they take in hand.

334. They do work which the department ought to do? They take up cases that hang fire, and which do not get dealt with, because, it may be, of the difficulty of bringing them before the Minister, or for other reasons.

335. Mr. Thomson.] Is that fair to the general public—that because people do not employ a land agent their business is to be delayed? No; I say that those who can afford to pay a land agent are better off than those who cannot afford it.

336. Mr. Ranken.] Still it relieves the office of an accumulation of papers? It relieves the department in a particular way.

337. President.] In point of fact, what is the superior position of the land agent—has he a more ready means of access to the Minister or to you than any other person would have? I think that any other person has the same means of access.

338. Then how is the land agent's position superior? When he goes to see the Minister about one case he can also deal with others. A land agent has so many cases to attend to. Besides, he has this advantage: he knows most of the people in the office, and knows the branches to which the papers would be referred, and he will go and ferret the papers out—worry, as it were, until he gets them.

339. What do you mean by ferreting out—that he is allowed to search? No; but he will get the register number of the particular paper he wants, and take it to the branch, where it is likely to be found, say, for instance, the charting branch, and he will say to the chief, "Such and such a paper was sent to you; get it for me." If the clerk does not give it him then, the land agent will call again next day, and he will at last get it, much quicker than if it had gone through the ordinary routine of the office.

340. Then that must interfere very much with the officers of the department in the performance of their duties? I think it does—that is, their current work.

341. And prevents their doing their legitimate work? It occupies their time; it occupies the time of the heads of the branches. It would not be so bad, I think, if a rule were made to keep open the office for certain hours to the general public.

342. Do you think anything could be done to prevent this interruption to business by persons outside? So long as the system is recognized in the department I do not see how it could.

343. You said something about an inquiry office? I think an inquiry office would be a great boon both to the Minister and myself, as well as to the heads of the various branches. People come and ask the Minister all sorts of questions—questions that could be referred elsewhere.

344. What would you propose? One man to superintend the inquiry office, and one or two clerks or assistants. A memorandum of what I recommend has been printed and laid on the table of the Assembly.

345. That contains your ideas on the subject? Yes; my idea is, that there should be a large room with a large counter in it, and two or three clerks always in attendance to get information which persons come about—at once, if possible; but that in all cases requiring to be referred to the Minister, arrangements should be made to lay the cases before the Minister beforehand. At present the Minister is often kept waiting whilst the papers in any particular case are being looked for; and when they are found he has perhaps to look through them. In this way much of his time is wasted.

346. Would the plan you speak of prevent personal applications to other officers of the department? Yes; it would prevent unnecessary interruption of the Minister, and it would prevent land agents going at all times to the different branches. We have tried to start a counter once or twice, but the size of the rooms will not allow of it.

347. Mr. Thomson.] Do the land agents go to any branch without your permission? Yes, they do go.

348. So that you really do not know what interruption is going on in the different branches? I do not know, but I am assured by the heads of the branches that they are interrupted sometimes half-a-day by the land agents and the general public.

W. W.
Stephen, Esq.
25 Oct., 1878.

349. Mr. Ranken.] In regard to the inquiry office, do you think there is any probability of the clerks employed in it having any superior mode of access to information, or the means of getting information—would it not be just the old routine—would they not have to ferret all through the place, and would it not end in the public wanting access to the branches after all? No I do not think it would.

350. Would not the effect of establishing an inquiry office such as you propose practically be to exclude the public from the branches? It was not meant to exclude the public altogether, but to prevent people from interrupting the heads of the branches, when they might obtain the information they required without such interruption.

351. Is there any probability of their getting the information they asked for? Yes, I had in my mind with respect to the inquiry office two intelligent clerks who are quick, and who know every branch in the department, and who have a peculiar aptitude for that business.

352. Suppose such a case as Godwin's, to which you have referred—would an inquirer have any means of getting an answer at all about such an improvement purchase? The clerks would be able to find out where the papers were. When that case was brought under my notice I at once sent one of the clerks to get the papers from the Survey Office. They were in the Survey Office waiting for the plan to be charted, and for months and years the applicant did not know what action was being taken in regard to his application.

353. If the clerks appointed to the inquiry office had authority to inquire for papers they could procure them? Yes, they would have instructions, and the different departments would also have instructions to give these clerks information directly they asked for it. That was my idea. Of course it would be only an experiment at first; but I think it would work well.

354. As to land agents—on the whole do you think public business would be facilitated if they were excluded from the branches? Decidedly, except with regard to the particular work with which the land agents are entrusted.

355. Is not the business they take there an important part of the public business? I do not think it is more important than other business; it is more important to their own constituents.

356. It forms a very large portion of the business of the department? I would not say a very large portion; it is a large portion. The business conducted without any reference to land agents is far in excess of that conducted through land agents.

357. Then you think there would be a balance of advantage in favour of the public by excluding land agents from the branches? I think there would be with the exception before stated.

358. Mr. Thomson.] The business would be conducted in a fairer manner to the public generally? Yes.

359. Business would not be taken out of its proper course; it would have to stand its proper time? It would have to stand its proper time. There is an advantage to people living at a distance from Sydney in employing an agent; an agent having a personal interview with the Minister when a reserve, for instance, was wanted; could point out many things in favour of a client which perhaps an officer of the department would fail, or not be in a position, to point out.

360. That goes to prove that those who cannot afford to employ a land agent are liable to suffer? Exactly.

361. You think that a properly organized inquiry office would be a good substitute—that it would do all the work of the land agents itself? Yes; the Minister and the heads of the various branches are constantly interrupted about cases respecting which a clerk could give the desired information. But at the same time there are many cases in which personal interviews are really necessary.

362. President.] Is it not, after all, the fault of the department that there is so much delay. All these interruptions you speak of, by land agents and others, is it not all attributable to the delay in the department generally? No; I think it is attributable, to a great extent, to the immense amount of business in the department—the inability of the department to cope with it in a way that it would be dealt with in a smaller department.

363. If the business were not hopelessly in arrear there would be no necessity for land agents; for instance, in this return you have given us, there are 6,160 cases in arrear—that is, work that might legitimately be taken up by land agents? Yes.

364. If you have all these arrears in one branch does not that show that the work of other branches is in arrear, and ought to be dealt with by land agents? Yes; land agents do certainly expedite the work of the branches.

365. And they take a large majority of the cases? No, not a large majority.

366. When you have more than 6,000 cases in arrear in one branch? That has extended over some years. I do not say that all those cases are in the Survey Department; but they are waiting certain action by that department.

367. They are in arrear? They are in arrear.

368. If you found a land agent dealing with any one of those 6,000 cases, would you not say it would be a good thing for his client? Yes; so long, however, as a case is in the field, an agent could not forward it much; but as soon as it comes back to the department he could forward it.

369. If the business were not in arrear in this way there would be no necessity for land agents? You would still have land agents, but there would not be the same necessity for them.

370. If it were possible for you to keep up with the business, would it not do away with land agents? Yes; the department does require them now; or, rather, they expedite the business by their inquiries.

371. Suppose the case of a private institution, say a bank, in which the business had naturally increased by the advance of the Colony, you would never allow outside people to come in to facilitate the business of the bank; nor would such a thing be thought of in a merchant's office? I do not think any parallel can be drawn between a bank or a merchant's office and a public institution like the Lands Department.

372. The banks have branches all over the country, and hundreds of employes in every direction? You can hardly compare the institutions. In the Lands Department there are so many details to be dealt with; so many references outside the department itself to be made.

373. Taking the cases you have referred to as specimens of the work in the Lands Department, do you think the banks would be complimented by having any comparison made? I do not suppose any one would be allowed in a bank to facilitate work; I do not suppose outside people would prove any help to a bank.

W. W.
Stephen, Esq.
25 Oct., 1878.

374. It ought not to be necessary as regards the Lands Department, so far as you say—could any private institution exist under similar circumstances? I do not think myself you can fairly draw any comparison between the business of a bank and the business of the Lands Department.

375. Or a merchant's office? Or a merchant's office either.

376. You think the Lands Department stands alone? Yes; there is no comparing it with any other institution, or with any other Government department; there are more difficulties connected with it.

377. Is there no arrangement under which you have reports made to you, or to any one in the department, in regard to business in arrear, from time to time? No; there used to be. There used to be monthly returns made out showing the number of cases in arrear, and the number of months each case had been in hand. It fell into disuse after a few years. It has not been in use since I have held the position of Under Secretary.

378. Do you not think that since the business increased so much, such returns are all the more necessary? Yes.

379. Because it is shown that no one knows what is in arrear until complaint is made from outside? The returns would show if returns were prepared.

380. I suppose an account might be kept from day to day in each branch, and reports made from week to week, or from month to month, or for any period—if it were done in that way it would not take so long? It is not done. I think if an increased superintendence were exercised over all the branches, by a regular superintendent, or chief clerk, such as they have in other departments, who would ascertain all the cases in arrear, how long they have been in arrear, and who would have power to fine for unnecessary arrear, it would prove beneficial.

381. Has that ever been attempted? Never, so far as I can recollect. It is a very hard thing to institute a thing of that sort. Then again, as I have said, I am responsible for the work of a large department and I have no voice in the appointment of the clerks who do that work. Every person who passes the Civil Service examination, brings his certificate, and seems to think he has a claim to appointment because he has passed the examination, although he may be unfit for the work required of him.

382. Yes, but you would not appoint him because of his opinions? That is only one of the evils.

383. That would not have any influence with you? I have nothing to do with it; it is a matter for the Minister. I think the Legislative Assembly made a mistake when it passed a resolution that a man must pass the Civil Service examination before appointment in the Civil Service. I would rather judge of the ability of a clerk from three months' trial; it would be easier to form a correct opinion of a man from actual trial as to his abilities to write letters, and his general aptitude for business, than from the Civil Service examination.

384. But they are not appointed indiscriminately to any vacancy? The fact of their having passed an examination adds weight to their importunity before a Minister.

385. But whenever the person appointed is found to be unfit for the work it is very easy to get rid of him; he would not be retained in the office if you said he was unfit for his duties? It is not very easy to prove incompetency in a large department. You cannot keep your eye upon every one. A man may be idle and careless; but if he can just do the work well enough not to draw particular attention to him, or to disqualify him, it is hard to justify his dismissal or removal.

386. In the case of incapacity, would not the head of the branch report to you? He should do so.

387. And if he did, you could deal with the matter? But I do not see the work of one-half the clerks. There is an immense amount of work performed daily which does not come directly under my notice.

388. Mr. Thomson. Has not the work of the Lands Department been reduced very much since the formation of the Mining Department? It was reduced at the first blush of the thing, when there was a great run of mining work on the Lands Department; but since then I do not think there has been any reduction worth speaking of.

389. You then got rid of the whole of the gold mining business? Yes.

390. A large staff is now necessary for the management of the Gold Mining Department? I have nothing to do with the Mining Department. I think there were about five clerks transferred from our department to the Mining Department. I am not certain; but there were some questions asked in the Assembly some time ago, and the answers furnished by me would show the number transferred.

391. In removing those five clerks from the Lands Department do you think that the work they did was also removed? Yes.

392. So that it did not relieve the work of the department generally? It did not relieve the work of the department generally, because the clerks went with the work that was removed.

393. But it relieved you to some extent? Yes; there was daily routine work in connection with applications for gold mining leases, and so on.

394. There has recently been a re-arrangement of the department by which the Occupation Branch and Stock Branch has gone over to the Mining Department;—will not that be a relief to yourself personally as Under Secretary? In the case of the Occupation Branch not more than a hundred cases a month were conducted by the chief officer through the Minister; I never had to look at a case or sign a letter in connexion with that branch. It is no relief to me; it is a relief to the Minister, but not to me.

395. And with respect to the Stock Branch? It is a peculiar sort of work, work of a particular character and Mr. Bruce, with very few exceptions, deals with it.

396. Had he communication direct with the Minister? In special cases he had to see the Minister; the Minister used to send for him; but he used frequently to come to me; I used to write the minutes on some of his cases.

397. On the whole you do not think there was any relief to the Lands Department by the formation of the Mining Department, and the removal of the Stock and Occupation Branches to it? I should say the relief is merely nominal; it is far more relief to the Minister than it is to me, as before explained.

398. Referring back again to the practice respecting the registration of leases in your department—or rather the opening of leases—do you know what the practice is in other departments, whether the Under Secretaries open the letters, or whether the duty is performed by their clerks? I think they are opened by the Under Secretaries.

399. In the case now of letters complaining of delay in the transaction of business, or inattention to previous letters, have you ever given instructions to your record clerk to bring these cases under notice specially? Not very lately; I have given verbal instructions, but no written instructions.

W. W.
Stephen, Esq.

25 Oct., 1878.

400. Suppose you did give instructions that all complaining letters should be first brought under your notice, and that you dealt with those specially, and asked why previous letters had not been attended to, would not that conduce to the expedition of business? I think it would.
401. You could depute some person to attend to that particular duty? Yes, I think that would be a good arrangement. It is done more now than it used to be.
402. Do you answer all letters that come to the office, on whatever business they may be—that is the official acknowledgment sent to the writer? In cases where the matter can be dealt with at once, no formal acknowledgment is sent; but where there must necessarily be some delay in dealing with a letter, we acknowledge its receipt by sending a small printed form, stating that the communication will be attended to as soon as possible.
403. That necessary steps will be taken to deal with the business required? Yes, they are sent out by the heads of the branches; they are supposed to be sent out the day the letter is received.
404. You say that some letters are signed by the heads of the branches—that is, only in regard to a particular class of cases? Ordinary cases.
405. Not cases of importance? I sign every letter of importance.
406. That is if a complaint about delay was made, or if half-a-dozen complaints had been previously made, the head of the branch would write a letter explaining the cause of delay and bring it under your notice? All cases of that sort would be submitted to me.
407. So that you would come to know the cause of delay by having the delay brought under your notice? Yes.
408. If the head of a branch is allowed to explain the cause of delay without your knowledge, he might excuse himself in a way you would not approve of? I do not think that takes place; I am not aware that it does.
409. It might exist? It could be traced, because no letter goes out of the office that is not entered; and if any letter was sent explaining the cause of delay in a way not justified by facts, I should know of it.
410. I think you said that you signed all letters of importance that went out of the office? Yes, and a great many that are not of importance. I sign nearly all the manuscript letters, and some of the printed ones.
411. Before signing these letters, is it possible for you to make yourself acquainted with them, the nature of the reply they contain? In a large number of instances I am obliged to take the authority or rely on initials of the head of the branch.
412. You have so many to sign, it is impossible for you to read them over before you sign them? I can generally tell the nature of the letters at a glance.
413. There are some that are brought before you specially? Not many.
414. Most of them are of a formal character? More of a formal character. Letters of a formal character I can tell at once, from my long experience in the office.
415. Your blank-covered references are nearly as numerous as your ordinary letters? We make use of blank-covered references as often as we can, but never with the public; it is a very easy way of communicating with the heads of the departments, and land agents (I mean Crown lands agents), and other officers in the interior.
416. Is the Ministerial Department responsible for delays in the Surveyor General's Department? No; I say decidedly not. Once a case leaves the Lands Department we are not responsible for it until it comes back again, because the Surveyor General has control of his own officers.
417. But suppose a case of great delay should arise, is the Surveyor General ever called upon to explain that delay by yourself or by the Minister? The Minister would ask him to explain the cause of any great delay.
418. Does that occur often, because you stated that there are a great many cases of delay in the Surveyor General's office? It does not happen once in six months. It is left to the Surveyor General to manage his own department.
419. But when a delay of three or four years occurs in business, do you not consider it the duty of the Ministerial Department to ascertain the cause of that delay? Decidedly; that is what I did in regard to the cases I have brought under the notice of the Commission to-day.
420. There are many cases which require to be explained in some way? A great many.
421. Is the explanation of the Surveyor General considered satisfactory? I cannot call to mind a case where he has made any explanation,—that is, I cannot recollect the nature of any explanation.
422. He has not been allowed to escape? If the Minister calls upon him to explain he is bound to do it; he is an officer under the Minister.
423. Then it would be your duty to see that an explanation was furnished? Yes, if the Minister ordered it.
424. And if it were not sent in due course you would remind him? Yes, I should point out to the Minister that the Surveyor General had not furnished the explanation, and see that he was reminded.
425. I think you said that the business of your own department was not much in arrear? I say it is not much in arrear.
426. That the arrears arise principally in the office of the Surveyor General? The large bulk of them.
427. In regard to the large number of complaints made to the Ministerial department of these delays, have any steps been taken to bring the Surveyor General to book, so to speak? No.
428. If the delay occurs in his department is there no means of applying a remedy? There is the means of getting the Minister to call upon him. These particular cases I have alluded to have been specially referred to the Minister. It has not been the habit to do so as a general rule. The Surveyor General's department takes its own course in regard to its own work.
429. In the case in which Mr. Beyers interested himself, were the papers called for before Mr. Beyers lodged his complaint? No.
430. You were not aware of the case until Mr. Beyers complained personally? Mr. Beyers addressed a note to me complaining that the delays in the department were too bad; that roused me, and I sent to the Survey Department for the papers.
431. Is there no officer in your department whose duty it is to see that documents sent out of it are properly recorded? They are noted in the Record Branch as having been sent.
432. Is it not the duty of that record clerk to see that explanations or replies are returned to blank-covered references in something like reasonable time? It is his duty.
433. And he does not perform it? I gave him instructions twelve months ago to see that if any blank-covered references were not replied to in a certain time, the officer whose duty it was to reply to them should be reminded.

MONDAY, 28 OCTOBER, 1878.

Present :—

MR. ABBOTT, | MR. RANKEN,
MR. THOMSON.

R. P. ABBOTT, ESQ., PRESIDENT, IN THE CHAIR.

William Wilberforce Stephen was called in and further examined :—

434. Mr. Ranken.] Has there ever been any systematic control exercised by you, as the permanent head of the Lands Department, over the action of the Survey Department in reference to the cases forwarded to that department? No. W. W. Stephen, Esq.

28 Oct., 1878.

435. Was there never any such control exercised? Not to my recollection.

436. Not in Mr. Fitzpatrick's time? Not to my recollection. I was not in such a position at that time that I should have a knowledge of it; there may have been, but I do not think there was.

437. Has it been the custom to revise the records periodically, and to call upon the Surveyor General for an explanation of arrears? By the Lands?

438. Yes? No; that has been left to the Surveyor General himself.

439. Then is there no fixed rule at all about the return of the papers,—no rule or understanding? Not in regard to the return of the papers from the Survey Office to the Lands Office. They have instructions in their own department.

440. But there is no understanding with the Lands? ———

441. It is left in their own discretion entirely? It is in their own discretion, unless they are set in motion by any complaint, in which case we search up the particulars, state that the matter rests with the Survey Department, and the Minister will probably instruct the Surveyor General to expedite the report or the reply.

442. Has the work of the Lands Department increased since 1863, and has there been any effort to make the business work smoothly as between the Survey branch and your office? I have brought under the notice of the Minister two or three matters, the papers in regard to which I have already laid before the Commission; he decided that a special consultation might be had with the Surveyor General, with a view to reduce the delays in the class of cases to which I referred, but nothing has been done.

443. Does the Conditional Sales Branch correspond direct with the Survey Office without reference to your office? Yes.

444. You know nothing of what passes between them? No.

445. Does the Conditional Sales Branch correspond with the public in the same way without your intervention? Yes; that was part of the new arrangement when the Conditional Sales was made a separate branch.

446. In your office you know nothing of these matters? Not unless they come to me afterwards from the Survey Office in a dispute between a conditional purchaser and an auction purchaser, or a purchaser in virtue of improvements. It often happens that claims clash, and then the cases are sent to me.

447. Does the same want of harmony which seems to exist with reference to the Survey Department also exist with reference to the Conditional Sales Branch. Is there the same clashing of business? There is no clashing of business. The Conditional Purchase Branch have no control over the Surveyor General's movements in regard to cases or papers which have been referred to him.

448. Your department cannot follow the course of papers, and cannot get them back without special intervention by the Minister? No; and the Conditional Purchase Branch is in the same position.

449. As to the improvement purchases, you mentioned just now that they and the conditional purchases came into collision;—how does that occur? In this way: A person applies to make a conditional purchase of land, and a representation comes down to the department from the lessee of the run, or some other person in his behalf, that the land is improved; then the question arises as to which application shall stand—whether the land was barred from conditional purchase on account of improvements, or if there is an application from the lessee of the land to purchase in virtue of improvements. The question is whether his application shall stand as against the conditional purchase. We often get a memorandum from the Survey Office that a particular auction sale must be cancelled because the land has been previously, conditionally purchased, or otherwise, by somebody else. Then we receive occasionally an application that land advertised for sale may go on for sale, notwithstanding a supposed previous purchase, the object being to prevent the withdrawal of the land from sale, and the loss of two or three months before it could again be advertised.

450. The same land is often applied for under two sections of the Act? Yes; the applications often clash with each other.

451. Does one part of that correspondence come to you and the other go to the Conditional Sales Branch? Exactly. When it is known that the applications clash, and when these papers do come together, the rule is that they shall be submitted to me first.

452. Does not the record always show that the same land is applied for? No, it cannot; there are different branches for different classes of business in the Lands and Survey Offices respectively.

453. You may be dealing with the same portion of land at the same time that Mr. Moriarty is dealing with it? It may be so.

454. Is it the case that two applications have been granted in regard to the same land—that grants for the same piece of land have been issued to two different applicants? No; I do not think that grants have actually been issued.

455. Is it the case that both applications have been accepted? I know one case, notably, the case of Sir John O'Shanassy, in which he had the deed of grant issued to him for an auction selection—that is, for a lot that had passed auction, and had then been selected at the upset price. That same lot had also been conditionally purchased; and for some time afterwards the conditional purchaser was in occupation, carrying out the conditions of the conditional purchase clause, while Sir John O'Shanassy had all the time a deed of grant for the land as an auction selection.

456. If there was a general record kept, would not such a piece of confusion as that be averted, that is if the papers came together at once? If the papers could come together at once.

457. Would they not do so in one general record office? No, because we are dependent for this information

W. W.
Stephen, Esq.
28 Oct., 1878.

information chiefly on the Survey Office, which prepares the schedules for sale, and has control of the maps and plans. It is only when the land is measured that it can be identified, but it even then often happens that while land is under advertisement for sale by auction a person makes a conditional purchase of it or portion of it. This application goes to the Survey Office for report, and we receive a memorandum, sometimes at the last moment, stating that such a lot should be withdrawn from auction sale advertised for such a day, the land having been previously purchased by somebody else. I have a case in my box here, strange to say, which bears upon this particular case.

458. We should like to see it? It is a matter which I shall have to deal with myself immediately. I brought this case to produce in reference to a general question which arose about the mode of submitting correspondence, a matter which the Minister has directed shall be referred to the Commission. In this case the lots G and H were advertised for sale at Urana on the 25th of October, that is of this month—portions 153 and 154. This paper I refer to is a memorandum from the Surveyor General, saying that the lots should be withdrawn from auction sale, having been conditionally purchased by John Goldsmith. Well, on or about the 22nd of October, three days before the auction sale, I get this declaration forwarded to me by Alexander Wilson, of Coree, through his agent. It is a solemn declaration that these lands conditionally purchased on the 10th of October, a fortnight before the sale, were improved to the extent of £200; that he had not previously seen the land; and that any subdivision of it would destroy the value of the selection. I submitted that to the Minister at once. There were also applications from the conditional purchaser himself in the Conditional Purchase Branch, asking that his deposit should be refunded. I had not time to refer to these, but I took the case to the Minister on the information I had, and he decided that the sale was to go on, that is, to comply with the request of the conditional purchasers, cancel their conditional purchases, and let the land go on for sale by auction. The sale would have gone on, but the Deputy Surveyor General—following a course to which I object—found out about these sales going on, and he took a plan to the Minister showing, without reference to me, that on the 10th of last April there were no improvements upon the land at all. The object, of course, was to make out that this free selector was a dummy of Wilson's, acting in the interest of the lessee of the run; that he had selected it to prevent anybody else from selecting it. On that representation the Minister decided that the sale should not go on, that the land should be withdrawn from sale pending an inquiry whether the land was improved on the 10th of October, the day of selection, or not. That is the action I have to take in this matter.

459. President.] What was the name of the selector? John Goldsmith.

460. Mr. Ranken.] Then there are two conflicting statements in these papers? This is the memo. of withdrawal from sale from the Surveyor General; but there is also this declaration in the meantime received by me. I submitted it to the Minister, who decided that the sale was to go on, but that decision, as I have just explained, was subsequently cancelled on the action or at the instance of the Deputy Surveyor General. In this case I have not the slightest doubt from my knowledge of the matter, that the declarations will prove to be correct. I have here another case, in which William Goldsmith is the selector, which is precisely similar. I was going to say that in this case we should have known nothing about this lot that was going on for auction being identical with the conditional purchase of Goldsmith, unless we had received this memo. from the Surveyor General's office. It is possible the land agent ought to have known, but that would not matter.

461. I was just going to ask you whether the land agent could not do anything from the knowledge which he might have of the matter? No; because the land office is open on any Thursday before the day of sale. Mr. Wilson has since written in with regard to this very case, saying that he is willing to make a statutory declaration, that the declarations of the selectors are true, and that they knew nothing of the improvements when they made their selections. His complaint is that after waiting so many months he will have to wait again.

462. Is that Mr. Wilson, of Wilson Brothers? No; Mr. Alexander Wilson, of Coree. I knew there were applications in the Conditional Purchase Branch, but if I had waited to get them it might have been too late. The sale might have been over. My object was that the sale might go on if there was no actual necessity to withdraw the land from sale.

463. You had no information from the Conditional Sales Branch as to this? None whatever. The first information was from the Survey Department. We receive plenty of this sort of memoranda a few days before the day of sale.

464. Is there much correspondence, or does much confusion arise from the method in which reserves are made? There is a great deal of correspondence, but I do not know that there is much confusion in these matters. Any application made by the lessee or by a surveyor to have certain lands reserved are decided on by the Minister.

465. Are these reserves generally made by the direct action of the Minister, or by the recommendation of a surveyor or other officer who is aware of the facts of the case? Generally on the recommendation of an officer who is aware of the facts of the case. Frequently a person outside the Department recommends that a reserve should be made.

466. Is that recommendation adopted without the report of the surveyor? No, not without inquiry. Very often when a surveyor is going about the country in the execution of his duty he recommends that certain reserves should be made in the public interests. The Surveyor General submits them through me for approval, and if the Minister approves of them they are submitted by him to the Executive Council.

467. Have you had correspondence with the Conditional Sales Branch in consequence of selectors on reserves? Not exactly with the Conditional Sales Branch. There is frequent clashing of papers. If a conditional purchase is found to be on a reserve it is reported by the Survey Department to the Conditional Sales Branch, and they take the necessary action for refunding the conditional purchaser's deposit and cancelling the selection.

468. Are these reserves in such a form that they can be identified by a person who desires to acquire land. Can a land agent point them out with reasonable accuracy. Are they marked on the ground? No, that is one of the great difficulties we have to contend with.

469. There is no probability of a selector finding it out? No; I have known hundreds of cases where a free selector makes an application which is passed by the land agent. The free selector is obliged to reside on his land within a certain time, and after eighteen months or two years' residence he is told that he is on a reserve.

470. What is the cause of the delay? We have to wait for the Survey Department. If the land agent passes

W. W.
Stephen, Esq.
28 Oct., 1878.

- passes the application, it goes to the Surveyor General to determine what surveyor shall measure the land, or to ascertain whether the land is on a reserve or not, or for some other reasons unavailable.
471. These selections on reserves cause a great deal of departmental work? A great deal.
472. Which might be avoided if the land agent were informed of their position, and if the reserves were marked on the ground? Yes; or if the parish maps were kept up to date.
473. If the corner trees or other natural boundaries were properly marked the difficulty would be obviated? Partly, perhaps; but mistakes would happen sometimes, as reserves are not legally surveyed, only geographically defined by certain known points.
474. Have you heard that at times selections on reserves have been made intentionally with a view to get them cancelled through political influence? I cannot recollect. It is some two years since conditional purchases came immediately under my control. I have had, however, a good deal to do with them, and I believe that something of that sort used to go on. I believe that selections would be sometimes made, knowingly, upon a reserve.
475. Selections upon travelling stock reserves? Yes; or reserves for water supply, &c. I think it used to be carried on in the earlier part of the working of the Lands Acts, if I recollect aright.
476. In that case would the land agent have any power to refuse or suspend action in the matter from his own knowledge? If the land agent has reason to suspect that an application is within a reserve, but is not certain of it, his instructions are to accept the application, and report the fact immediately to the department. If the land contains improvements he is supposed to warn the applicant that the land is improved.
477. He has no power to do anything but warn him? Yes; I think that is about all.
478. He accepts it as a preliminary application? Yes.
479. Are you brought into correspondence with other branches with regard to pre-leases? The pre-lease branch is one of those which I have to control.
480. But as to the Survey Office? Applications for pre-leases are always referred to the Survey Department to see whether the lands adjoining the conditional purchases, or the grants of land in virtue of which the pre-leases are claimed, are actually available.
481. Is it the case that when large quantities of land on a run become purchased the pre-lease portion is under your supervision, and the leased portion remains under the Occupation Branch. Where there are intersected lots running all through, do the pre-leases remain with you? Yes; and the others remain with the Occupation Branch.
482. Does not that cause confusion? I do not think it does very much. We know that all the annual leases, pre-leases, and auction leases come under us. They absorb sometimes a great deal of the runs under five years tenure. It may create trouble in this way, in that it often causes re-appraisements of runs.
483. Is the Occupation Branch under the Lands Department now? No, it has been transferred to the Mining Department.
484. What is the meaning of that arrangement? It is an administrative arrangement, determined upon by the Minister. It is attributed to different causes. Some say it is to relieve the Minister for Lands; others say it is to give the Mining Department more to do. I would like to hand in for the information of the Commission a minute which I drew up some time ago on the subject of the transfer of this and other branches to the Mining Department, and the recommendations in which are substantially those which have been adopted by the Government. (Vide Appendix A 10.)
485. Is it supposed that there is any connection between mining and pastoral occupation? The two things may seem rather incongruous. There is, however, occupation for mining and occupation for pastoral purposes. It is occupation, but in a different sense of the word, and I think that idea may have had something to do with it.
486. Was it part of the same theory which was followed in separating the Conditional Sales Branch and the Survey Department—was the object to relieve the Lands Department from pressure of work? Do you mean the separation of the Conditional Sales Branch?
487. I mean the putting of it under a separate head, and the working of the Survey Department separate from the Department of Lands. I suppose that is part of the same system? Yes, part of the same system.
488. Has the proposed relief followed from these separations or partial separations? As regards the Conditional Sales Branch it has relieved me from the mass of papers which used to come through me to the Minister.
489. Has it accelerated the public business of the Colony? I think it must have done so. It certainly ought to have, because there are two persons now to manipulate papers, and submit them to the Minister, where before there was only one.
490. But practically you think that the general tendency of this separation has rather been to establish rival departments, whose officers appear to think they have an interest in ignoring instead of in supporting each other? I maintain that something of that sort has happened in this case.
491. You think that has been the result to a certain extent? I do not think it should have been so, or that it need have been so. It is traceable to circumstances which perhaps I cannot or would rather not explain.
492. Is it not a fact that a large portion of the correspondence and crowding of the office by the public arises from the delays produced by the different branches in retarding and jostling each other? I do not think that exactly. I do not think there is any inclination exhibited, as far as the clerks are concerned, to jostle each other in the performance of their duties. It is not in a very large proportion of cases that my work clashes with the work of the Chief Commissioner of Conditional Sales.
493. With regard to the Survey Office—I understand that you have admitted that that has been the result to a certain extent of your dealings with that office? I do not quite understand your question.
494. We were speaking of the fact that the tendency of the separation of these departments has been in your opinion to create rival establishments, whose interest appears to have been to work separately rather than in harmony? I have had to point that out with regard to the Survey Department. There ought to be no clashing because I contend the duties of the Survey Office are quite distinct from the duties of the Ministerial Department. If the Survey Department adhered distinctly to their own duties, and passed on the papers to me as soon as they were ready, a great deal of delay might be avoided.
495. These duties have not been defined, have they? I do not think they have been properly defined, except

W. W.
Stephen, Esq.
28 Oct., 1878.

except in regard to the amalgamation of the clerical branches of which I spoke some time ago. The object of that was to leave the Survey Department free to attend to their own duties, obtaining reports from the surveyors, drafting, and controlling their own officers.

496. With regard to the Survey Office, do existing arrangements retard public business? The three cases I submitted the last time I was examined illustrated what I mean. After the professional work has been done the papers are kept there for a long time to suggest action for the Ministerial Department to take, instead of being sent on to the Lands Office at once. If they had been referred to me as soon as the charting was done, we could have taken action upon them at once. They are kept waiting until a lot of memoranda are written recommending that such and such action should be taken which have to come to me on their way to the Minister after all.

497. You have not got similar difficulties to encounter with the Conditional Sales Branch have you? I have great difficulties to contend with with regard to that branch as regards cases upon which I have made recommendations and obtained the decision of the Minister upon matters relating to my own division of the work, but which have to go to the Conditional Sales Branch for subsequent action. That action has been interfered with two or three times, I may say many times, by the Chief Commissioner of Conditional Sales, who has attempted to get my recommendations reversed. That is where the Auction Purchase and the Conditional Purchase Branches clash with each other. When papers have come to me I have taken certain action in regard to them which the Chief Commissioner has thought to be wrong; but I maintain that any action which may be taken to vary or reverse my recommendations should be referred to me in the first instance.

498. Then does not this clashing between the two branches retard business? It does in some cases. It creates a lot of correspondence, and a want of harmony which is very undesirable in the department. I have a very particular case which happened when Mr. Driver was Minister, and which shows what I have to complain of.

499. Do you not think that the public business would be expedited if every branch of the Lands and Survey Departments were focused under one permanent responsible head? I think that would be hard to do, and for this reason: I could not control the professional work, not being a professional man. The charting of plans must rest with the Surveyor General.

500. But as far as the administration of the law is concerned how would it work? The administration of the law?

501. Yes? I think it should be under the Minister and a permanent responsible head. As far as I am concerned, I wish I had never consented to its being done in any other way.

502. The principal difficulties which you have described appear to have arisen from the separation of the departments? Yes; from the very arrangement which I thought would have expedited business; and I say still—although it may appear inconsistent—that the division of labour would facilitate the business of the department greatly if the arrangement had been properly adhered to, and carried out in the spirit in which it was approved by the Minister.

503. But its tendency has been to form several rival establishments? To ignore me as the head of the department, in cases which I ought to deal with. Ministers come in who naturally do not know the course of official etiquette and business, and that is sometimes taken advantage of. My position has been one of considerable difficulty, and I do not think that any other Under Secretary would like to change with me.

504. Do you not think that the increase of work which has taken place would be better met by the separation of districts than by the separation of branches of the department? Do you mean for all classes of work?

505. Yes; both administrative and survey? I have not paid much attention to that.

506. Suppose the work could be done on the spot, would not the confusion and delay of which you speak be stopped at once? If all these conditional, improvement, and auction purchases could be dealt with in the district in which they arise, would it not stop much of the muddle which arises now? I dare say it might; but I think if the present system were vigorously carried out, if the delays of the Survey Department could be got over, if the Survey Department had sufficient surveyors to carry out the work, and if the work were handed in without delay to the Ministerial Branch, the delays would be decreased by 50 or 100 per cent.

507. But would not the work be better done under an effective district system, such as they have in the other colonies? I have not had much opportunity of knowing. What would apply in Victoria and Queensland might not work well in this Colony, where the present system has so long existed. It would involve a complete revolution of the existing system, and would, I am certain, take years to effect the change were it even desirable.

508. Do you not think it would be desirable, if it could be done, that all detail and routine work should be carried out by the local authorities, and that the central department should become merely a Court of appeal, record, and supervision. Would not that be infinitely superior to having the central department crowded with detail? The head of the department would have to be aware of every application that was made.

509. Suppose that the work was done in duplicate, and that one copy was sent to the head office? That would be really doubling the work.

510. Would it not be simplifying the work? I think that about three-fourths of the cases that were dealt with in the different districts would eventually have to be referred to the central land office. A great deal of preliminary delay might be averted with regard to all conditional purchase applications up to the date of survey; but when it came to questions of dispute and interpretation of the law, the cases would have to be referred to the head office.

511. Do three-fourths of the cases which come under the land law involve dispute? As far as I can see three-fourths require reference to the responsible or political head of the department or the Under Secretary.

512. To what do you impute that unfortunate result? I think that the present land law opens the door to so many disputes.

513. That is the policy of the Act with which we have got nothing to do? Under a different Act the difficulties might be decreased. I do not think they will under the present.

514. Three-fourths of the cases need to be referred to yourself or to the Minister? I may be beyond the mark.

mark. I am speaking generally. I am talking of the number of cases which come to me, and upon which I have to decide as to which of them shall be submitted to the Minister. There are numbers of cases which might be settled by myself without reference to the Minister.

W. W.
Stephen, Esq.
28 Oct., 1878.

515. You believe that three-fourths of the cases would eventually have to be referred to head quarters? The law requires that the forfeiture of a conditional purchase and numerous other matters where even there is no dispute should be recommended by the Minister to the Executive Council, and no Minister would act in a matter of that kind without first ascertaining that there were good grounds for his recommendation.

516. Would not a certain number of cases be plain sailing? A great number would.

517. Do you still think that with regard to three-fourths of the cases, questions of dispute would arise which would have to be referred to head quarters? I am only speaking generally. I know that in the conditional purchase cases which come more immediately under my notice, there seems to be nearly always some dispute or hitch.

518. In most of them? I will not say most of them; three-fourths may be too large a proportion. I am alluding to the proportion of cases in the whole department.

519. In a considerable number that is the case? In a very considerable number.

520. Mr. Thomson. Before you became Under Secretary you were at the head of the Conditional Sales Branch? Yes.

521. What time was that? For some three years immediately previous to my appointment.

522. Can you tell the date of your appointment? I was appointed Under Secretary on the 1st of October, 1870.

523. For three years before that you were at the head of the Conditional Sales Branch? For some three years.

524. I suppose you had a pretty good knowledge of the working of that branch? Yes.

525. Are you aware that the business has increased very much since you were there? Yes, considerably.

526. When was Mr. Moriarty appointed head of that branch? On the 11th of August, 1875; that is as Chief Commissioner of Conditional Sales, but as a matter of fact he has not been formally appointed by the Executive Council, even now, to that particular position.

527. Did he perform the duties of the head of that particular branch before that date? No; before that he was chief clerk. He used to superintend the office generally.

528. Then he really occupies the position which you think should now be restored—that of chief clerk to the whole of the department? Yes.

529. Was it by your recommendation that he received his appointment as Chief Commissioner of Conditional Sales? It was after conversation with Mr. Garrett who one day said that he thought something must be done to relieve me. He thought this would relieve me and expedite the business of the Department. That led to his appointment. I drew up the minute.

530. Did you not represent to Mr. Garrett that it would be necessary to fill up his place with another officer? I did not think it would be necessary.

531. You thought you would be able to perform the whole business of the Under Secretary's office without the assistance of a chief clerk? I did. I looked at it very much as a question of expense, and I suggested, in order to get over this difficulty, that the salary of chief clerk should be merged in that of Chief Commissioner, so that we might obtain greater efficiency without much increase of expense. I thus gave up the chief clerk.

532. Since then you have found reason to change your views, and you now think that a chief clerk is really necessary? I think so.

533. What has caused you to think so? Because the work has increased, and because of the impossibility of supervising, personally, the work of the whole office.

534. Do you ever look into the different rooms to see that the work is being properly carried on by the heads of branches? Very seldom.

535. Have you not the time? I have not the time; I occasionally do it, but very seldom. I hardly think it business appertaining to the Under Secretary.

536. You consider that the head of each branch is really responsible for the working of his particular branch? That was my object.

537. Although you are responsible for the working of the office generally you would not hold yourself responsible for anything going wrong or for any delay occurring in any particular branch? I am afraid I should be held responsible.

538. Would you not in your turn hold the head of the branch responsible? Yes.

539. And if you could show the Minister that he was the guilty party, the Minister would be satisfied with your explanation? Decidedly.

540. I suppose you are willing to admit that the complaints about delay and want of attention to business on the part of your department are justified—that the persons who make these complaints have grounds for making them? I admit that there are grounds for complaints in a great many cases—in others there are not; but the delays are not in the Lands Department always.

541. Can you specify any particular way in which these complaints arise—I don't want any special case, but a statement of the cause of them in a general way? How do the delays arise?

542. Yes. What is the nature of the delay for instance—is it inattention to letters? I think not. There are delays for reasons already explained.

543. I am referring to your particular department, not to the delays which arise in the Surveyor General's Department. Are there no delays and inattention to business on the part of your officers which cause the letters of complaint? In some instances there may be.

544. Do you think that these delays are caused by the carelessness or irregularity in attendance of your officers? To a very small extent they may be.

545. You have said that you do not consider it to be your particular duty to see that every officer of the department is at his post daily? I do not consider that part of my duty.

546. The head of each branch ought to see to that? Yes.

547. If every man were at his post at the proper time, might not the work go on much more smoothly? I cannot say that the difference in the hours of attendance would make much difference in the complaints. Late attendance does not amount to more than half or a quarter of an hour.

548. In a large department like yours half an hour late each day would make a great deal of lost time in the course of the week? The corresponding clerks are most regular in their attendance.

549.

W. W.
Stephen, Esq.
28 Oct., 1878.

549. It has been stated that some come at half-past 9, 10, 11, and half-past 11;—do you think that that is the case? No; but I do not time them.
550. Do you think that that is a libel? I do. They may come at half-past 9 o'clock sometimes, or even 10; but if any body will come to the Lands Department any day at a quarter to 10 o'clock or earlier they will find all there but about a dozen; the majority are there at a quarter past 9.
551. Is not the time 9 o'clock? Yes; but a certain grace is allowed to those who live a long distance—a quarter of an hour or so.
552. Do the head officers report those who are late? Their instructions are to do so; I cannot say of course whether they always do.
553. Have you any remembrance of cases reported from time to time? Any particular individual?
554. The heads of branches reporting particular individuals who are late in their attendance or absent from the office during the day? Very few.
555. Have you taken any steps to bring these officers to a sense of their duty. Have you reported them to the Minister? I cannot say that I have reported them all. I have, when I thought the case was sufficiently glaring. I have for some time thought of making or recommending a regulation on the subject, but I have not decided on recommending whether the punishment should be by fine or otherwise.
556. You have been thinking of it? Yes; that some regulation should be framed for punishing those who are noted for late attendance, or reported for it.
557. Do you allow officers to leave the office without permission? If they want half an hour they are supposed to get leave from the head of the Branch; if more than half an hour they have to submit a memo. through the head of the Branch to me.
558. Are you aware that complaints have been made that officers of the Lands Department have been seen down the town at all hours of the day in the caf  . Are you aware that such a case as that has been dealt with by the Minister? No; the Minister mentioned that certain cases had been reported to him recently, but he did not mention the names.
559. You took no steps to ascertain if there were any truth in the report? I did not take any action officially. I meant to do so, but it went out of my head; besides it is hard to act on private information.
560. You are aware that the department gets a bad name in consequence of these reports? There are complaints I have no doubt about it, but a great many of them are unfounded. I have proved some of them to be unfounded. A person in our department was reported to be always away in a billiard-room, but he has not played three games of billiards in his life. He is a gentleman against whom some other person is always making complaints. The Minister has lately written a minute arising out of one of these complaints, saying, that he completely exonerated the officer, but that the rule which required that officers should not go out for refreshments, with the exception of the half hour for lunch, or for some other special reason, ought to be revived.
561. Do you think that the want of proper accommodation would in any way account for the alleged unsatisfactory condition of your department? It has a great deal to do with it.
562. In what way? When papers are wanted references from one branch of the Lands and Survey Office to another become necessary. Where the work is in arrears you must have personal references; the clerks must go out.
563. When an officer has to go out he may stay out longer than he ought to do? It is quite possible that time is wasted in that way. I do not think there could be any effective supervision of that sort in the present state of office accommodation.
564. I think you told us the other day that most of your business hinged upon the correspondence, and the way in which it was duly recorded? To a great extent numbers of registers have to be kept, notations have to be made, irrespective of the general record registers, and there is a variety of other work to be done—a great deal of detail which never comes before me or the head of a branch, but which is necessary in the working of a large department. It can only be explained by going through all the books, and the different branches.
565. Have you had any complaints from any of the other departments as to the work not being attended to? Yes.
566. Which department? The department which chiefly complains at present is the Audit Office, with regard to lease rent vouchers, papers known as lease refunds, and so on. That is forming the subject of a rather lengthy correspondence with the Audit Office at the present moment.
567. Have you made any inquiries as to whether those complaints are well founded? Yes.
568. Is it your opinion that they are well founded or groundless? There has been a great deal of delay, but it was partly unavoidable.
569. What branch was referred to? The Lease Branch. It is a matter, however, more of detail than land administration.
570. Who is at the head of it? Mr. Charles Brown.
571. Will this be referred to the Commission? The Minister has written a minute, stating that he considers it may be desirable to refer it to the Commission.
572. You would not hold yourself responsible for these delays, as Under Secretary? I cannot possibly myself superintend all these things, i.e., land agents' receipt vouchers, questions as to whether such and such rents have been paid, &c., &c.
573. They simply pass through your hands as the medium of communication? Yes.
574. If there is any blame it will fall chiefly on the head of the branch? Yes; he admits that there have been delays, but he has explained the cause of them, and taken steps, by the completion of registers, to avoid future delays.
575. Some of the officers are allowed to sign letters for you? Yes.
576. Will you tell us who they are? There are certain classes of ordinary or formal letters which the heads of branches are allowed to sign.
577. But there are some which use a stamp with your name on it? I have a signature stamp in my room.
578. Other officers cannot use it? Only one uses it.
579. Other officers are allowed to write for the Under Secretary? All ordinary and formal letters which do not require any approval from the head of the department.
580. Do the heads of the branches do that? Yes, all of them.
581. Does the head of the Auction Branch, for instance? Yes.
582. Is he authorized to write letters for you? He signs a great many for you.

583. Does he ever sign letters authorizing the refund of money? He has authority to sign for the Under Secretary; but if I recollect aright that only applies to the time when I happen to be absent.
584. Are you quite clear on that point? No, not without referring to the terms of the authority.
585. Supposing he was authorized to sign for the refund of money, do you not think it is rather dangerous power to place in the hands of any officer of the department? I think it is, perhaps, a bad plan, and should be avoided. Mr. Blackman, I know, signs all refund vouchers.
586. If Mr. Edwards signs them, what would be the nature of the refund? The refund of money in an auction sale, which it was found necessary to cancel, on account of a conditional purchase having been made previously, or on account of money paid on excess of area.
587. Supposing he authorised the refund of money which had been paid for some auction purchase, what check would you have that the grant for the land would not also be issued? Every precaution is taken in the notation of the register. The sale is marked cancelled. The sale list could not possibly go on to the Deeds Branch for the preparation of the grant. If a refund is made, the entry of the sale in the book and the sale list are noted, that the sale has been cancelled.
588. Supposing there was any collusion between the head of the branch and the person who had purchased the land, he would not only get his grant but have his money returned? It would be possible by collusion.
589. Is not the power of authorising the refund of money a dangerous power to place in the hands of any officer but yourself? Suppose I did sign the refund voucher, I should have to look at every single case and see myself that the cancellation had been made, and that the sale list did not go into the Deeds Branch.
590. Could you not require the initials of some officer on the papers to show that the deed had not been issued for the particular refund of money? That idea has not occurred to me.
591. Some time ago the Governor refused to sign the deeds? Yes, I am aware of that.
592. On what ground? I cannot say exactly. His minute and the whole of the correspondence on the subject was laid on the table of the House of Assembly.
593. It was on the ground, I believe, that it would be possible, if you had not an honest officer at the head of the Deeds Branch, for collusion to take place; that the money might be refunded and the deed passed? Yes.
594. Did he not suggest some check? We have additional checks now. Before each deed is issued it has to be initialled by Mr. Thurlow, and also by the chief professional description writer to the Survey Office. The deeds are also now countersigned by the Minister.
595. Do you think that that is a sufficient check? I really do not know any other that could be taken. I did propose myself, as a further check, that the head of each branch should certify that each purchase was complete, but that was not carried out.
596. Would not the signature of the Auditor General be a more perfect check; would he not whether the refund had been made, and if so, could he not stop the issue of the deed? That was one of the proposals made.
597. Did he object to it? I think he said it would create a great deal of delay, and there is delay enough already. The Auditor General's initials would only have to be affixed upon the statement of some officer of our department.
598. But the Auditor General certifies to all refunds, and that being the case he could tell you if a refund had been made, and so be a thorough check upon the issue of the grant? Exactly; that is as to refunds only.
599. Are the letters and papers brought to you at any particular hour of the day, or do they come at random? The papers that are submitted?
600. Yes; that you have to deal with? No.
601. Not at any particular hour of the day? They are brought as they are thought to be most urgent. They come at all hours of the day.
602. What time have you for arranging matters? I take them as I find myself able.
603. Have you any large number of cases that you have not submitted to the Minister? I have at present a good many that I have not been able to look at.
604. The delay is on your part, not because the Minister has not time? No; I have papers waiting for him, papers which I have looked through, but there are a great many other papers I have not been able to look into or write my minutes upon.
605. Are the letters which are sent to you for dispatch usually signed and sent away the same day as they are sent up? A day's delay sometimes intervenes—sometimes two.
606. The fact is you seem to have more work to do than you can really get through? I may say that is the case. Things are, however, a little better now. I have lost a little of the work, not much, by the transfer of the Roads and Stock Branches to the Department of Mines.
607. Would the appointment of an assistant Under Secretary relieve you very much and benefit the public? I do not know. I think the appointment of a chief clerk, with powers such as might be conferred upon an assistant Under Secretary, would be better if his duties were so defined that there could be no clashing.
608. The duties would be much the same under another name? The duties of such an officer would be to prepare papers for me to enable me to submit them to the Minister, to deal with many matters now submitted to me, and exercise a general supervision over the office and the clerks.
609. You receive a good deal of money in the Lands Department during the year—money that comes in letters? Yes.
610. People make mistakes, and send such letters to the Lands Department instead of to the Treasury? Yes.
611. Who deals with these letters? The record clerk, who opens them.
612. Are they now opened in the presence of two officers? Yes; Mr. Patterson opens them, and another officer stands by.
613. Does he initial the books in which they are entered? Yes, and the money is taken up to the Treasury.
614. And the officer at the Treasury initials the statement? Yes.
615. The money is never retained? No.
616. That is only a recent arrangement? No; it has been in force some time.

- W. W. Stephen, Esq.
28 Oct., 1878.
617. Is your accountant one of these check officers? The instruction was that he should generally attend when possible, and stand by while the letters were being opened.
618. He makes the record? Yes. I am not quite certain that the rule is being carried out now, but I believe it is.
619. Are any of your officers under security—those who handle money, for instance? No.
620. Do you not think it necessary since you had a recent case almost of malversation? I think it would be a right thing.
621. They have never been looked upon as public accountants within the meaning of the Audit Act? I believe that is the reason.
622. How many land agents are in the habit of doing business with the Lands Department;—do you know? I must leave out Members of Parliament now, because they are not supposed to be land agents. Do you call a firm one?
623. Yes, call a firm one? I can recollect only about seven.
624. These are town land agents? About seven habitués, so to speak, of the Lands Department.
625. Have you any country land agents? I know there are such, but they do their business by letter. It would be hard to define who are land agents, and who are not.
626. Are the town land agents very pertinacious in their applications? Do you mean in making inquiries?
627. In their inquiries, and their determination to have the business pushed through? Yes; quite properly so too, I think.
628. Have you had any complaints from the heads of branches about the obstruction to business in consequence of land agents having the run of the office? I cannot call any of them to mind. Sometimes when I have asked the head of a branch about a particular matter, he has said that Mr. So-and-so has come in, and that a large portion of his time has been taken up with land agents.
629. Could not their business be equally well done by correspondence, so as to avoid the interruption to business through the day? I think not. In many cases you can do more by a personal interview than by writing two or three letters. When the land agent is on the spot he can see the paper, and points may arise and be settled in conversation which it would take a long time to deal with by correspondence.
630. Are you not then giving the cases of land agents precedence of all others? I have always said so. It follows as a matter of course.
631. Can it be right that because these people are more pertinacious than others that their cases, which may be comparatively young, should be dealt with while the older cases are left in abeyance, there being no one to push them forward. Would not that be the result? It is no doubt very often the case; but the land agents come and ask about cases, and the sooner the information is got the sooner the decision of the Minister can be obtained.
632. Might this not be one of the great causes of the complaint which has been made throughout the country? I do not think it has arrived at that stage at present. I do not think that it is any great cause of complaint.
633. You get a great number of letters complaining of delay? We do.
634. You think that none of this arises from their business being kept back while the business of land agents is being pushed forward? I do not think so. It may be so in some cases, but I do not think the delays are attributable to that. In fact I have only recently seen one complaint of that nature, and it was against myself. A certain person wrote to the department—I will not say who it was—complaining that a case was delayed, and that if it had been the case of a rich man, who could afford to employ a land agent to hunt me up, it would have been dealt with. It happened to be a case which I was trying to push forward. Mr. Farnell said, "Let the matter be expedited." I never replied to the letter to which I refer.
635. You were in favour of having an Inquiry Office? Yes; it would save the Minister from much interruption.
636. Do matters of interruption to the Minister arise from the visits of land agents? Yes, and the outside public generally, Members of Parliament and others. If persons have cases in their hands they will see the Minister whether there has been any delay or not.
637. Would the establishment of an inquiry office relieve the Minister of Lands from interruption? Yes, if properly carried out in the way I proposed.
638. An officer at the head of the Inquiry Office could, you think, institute such inquiries in the office as would prevent the delays which now occur by persons coming to the office? I think it would not only relieve the Minister, but expedite the business.
639. Would not the officer at the head of the Inquiry Office be besieged as you and the Minister are? There would be a limit. If that were found to be the case, an extra clerk or two could be put on. An intelligent officer would relieve the Minister and myself from very much interruption. I have seen the Minister interrupted every 10 minutes in the day.
640. These inquiries at the office you would establish could not be replied to at the time? If the information could not be got at once, the applicant could be directed to call again in an hour's time, the next day, or whenever it would be ready.
641. That office would be established to deal with personal inquiries? Yes.
642. Not inquiries by letter? No.
643. They would be dealt with in the usual manner? Yes.
644. Has the resolution of the Legislative Assembly, that Members of Parliament who were land agents were not to have access to the department in their capacity of land agents, been carried out? Yes; I do not think there is one.
645. How do they do their business? By letter.
646. There is no objection to that? We have never raised any objection.
647. The resolution did not prohibit that? No; not as far as I recollect. Some of them have partners or clerks, and they come.
648. There is no objection to clerks coming? We cannot object to them. There were questions asked the other day as to whether the rule had been carried out in relation to Mr. Brown. The Minister replied that Mr. Brown did not come as a land agent at all, but that he interviewed him in the same way as any other person. The correspondence is carried on by his clerk.
649. Which is much the same thing, I suppose? Well, I suppose it amounts to the same thing.
650. Are any of your officers permitted to work after hours for fees paid by the public? Yes, sometimes, but not very often.

W. W.
Stephen, Esq.
28 Oct., 1878.

651. Is that done with the sanction of the Minister? Yes; it was an arrangement made by him. It is the custom of solicitors and others to apply for copies of correspondence to assist them in some case before the Court. The Minister has authorized that these copies may be made after office hours when the public business will not be interfered with.
652. Might that not lead to the taking of fees or bribes in other cases? I do not think it would.
653. Might persons who are in the habit of getting that work done be tempted to bribe clerks to do the work for them during the day? The head of the room would certainly see if such work were being done, and if a clerk were disposed to do such a thing he would not escape detection for more than a quarter of an hour, certainly not for more than an hour.
654. Do you allow officers to work after office hours? If they like, and many of them do.
655. That is upon the ordinary business of the office? Yes; without receiving extra pay. Several of them, I am glad to say, do it.
656. Is there not a rule that officers shall not remain after office hours? It has fallen into disuse.
657. It has never been withdrawn? It has not been formally withdrawn. The rule was framed when there was a great rush for mineral leases, and when there was a suspicion that some of the clerks gave information which they ought not to give.
658. Have you any suspicion that any of the officers who have been allowed to work overtime have wasted their time during the day in order to make overtime work in the evening? No such instance has come to my knowledge. I have heard it talked of outside the office, but I have never seen anything of it myself, nor has it been reported to me.
659. Do you not think that the high rate of remuneration paid for overtime would be an inducement to do that? It might be if persons were dishonestly disposed.
660. Is overtime-work stopped now? Yes.
661. Do you think the work has got into arrears in consequence of that? The overtime was authorised for certain specific work which has now been completed.
662. How is the work kept up? We are not authorizing any overtime. They have got to do it.
663. Do you consider your department in a good working state at the present time? Tolerably good.
664. There are no arrears of any extent? Not in the department itself, that is, not in cases in which it is possible to act, with the exception of those cases which I have in arrear myself—a number of cases from the different branches, which I have not had time to go through.
665. That arises from your having to submit to interviews by the public? Yes; if I had a week to myself I could get them worked off.
666. Do you take work home? I have often done so, especially during the last year.
667. To what branch was this overtime confined? To the Conditional Purchase Branch chiefly. I know that from the vouchers for payment passing through me; and the Miscellaneous Branch.
668. Any other? In the Auction Branch there was overtime to get up the Statistical Register.
669. Is not the preparation of the Statistical Register an annual work? Yes.
670. Why then should that create overtime this year? Because the statistical clerks told me that during the last few years it was impossible to prepare it during the office hours. They have the collating work the whole year; and overtime was allowed for it.
671. You are aware that there has been a great falling off in the land sales at auction during the last nine months? Yes.
672. Would not that reduce the work of that particular branch very considerably? I do not think it is perceptible at present. It only makes the difference of a few sale lists and final reports.
673. In addition to the reduction of auction sales, has there not also been a great reduction in the selections after auction? Yes.
674. These have been withdrawn entirely? Yes, for a time.
675. That being the case, how is it that this Auction Sales Branch should have been so overburdened with work this year as to require overtime? It was chiefly for the preparation of the Statistical Register and the compilation of one or two returns which only clerks used to the work could do. There are numbers of returns ordered by Parliament which only clerks used to that kind of work can compile. It must be done by people who know the run of the books.
676. All the arrears in that branch have been brought up now? Yes.
677. Did you employ any extra hands in order to assist in this work? No; there are two clerks less there than the actual number voted on the Estimates.
678. In the Auction and Statistical Branch you have three permanent and seven temporary clerks? But there are five voted on the Estimates for the permanent staff.
679. Are you continuing to employ these seven additional as well as the three permanent hands? Yes, they are all employed. Two of them ought to be on the permanent staff.
680. They are all required? Yes; and are all good workers.
681. It is reported that there is some disagreement between you and Mr. Moriarty;—is there any truth in that report? Yes.
682. Does this disagreement which seems to exist between you interfere with the business of the department? I think it must interfere with it to some extent, because action taken by me as Under Secretary has frequently been questioned by Mr. Moriarty, because he thinks it interferes with his own duties, or with the course he would have taken with regard to his own duties.
683. Had it been arranged that all his work was to pass through your hands would that disagreement have arisen; or has it not arisen from the fact that Mr. Moriarty has personal interviews with the Minister? Partly perhaps; but I am afraid the disagreement traces further back than that. When he was chief clerk, and in fact generally he has adopted a style in regard to me which I do not think would be tolerated in any other department.
684. Does it not set a bad example to the department generally? Yes; I have submitted that view of the case myself.
685. Is there no way of getting this misunderstanding healed so as to bring the department into proper working order;—is there no representation you could make to the Minister that would stop it? As far back as 1874, when Mr. Moriarty was chief clerk, I represented the matter to the Minister, and recommended that Mr. Moriarty should be requested to confine himself to his own duties, and that I should be recognised and upheld in my position as the head of the administrative department. The Minister wrote a minute to that effect, but the interference has somehow been going on at intervals ever since. I have papers on the subject which the Minister has directed to be referred to this Commission.

686. How does he come to interfere with your particular duties if he has direct communication with the Minister? I could get cases explaining that.

687. Is the matter too involved, too complicated, for you to tell us in your own words? No, I can explain it in one way. To show the unfortunate state of affairs which exists, I will mention a case which occurred when Mr. Driver was Minister for Lands. An auction sale had been approved, and a conditional purchaser who had selected land finding that he did not want it, applied that the conditional purchase should be cancelled, and a telegram was sent to the land agent in order that the sale might go on. Application was afterwards made to me by letter in addition to a telegram which had been received from the conditional purchaser. The Minister, Mr. Garrett, was away at the time, and I approved on his behalf, as I often have to do acting on my responsibility, that the request should be complied with stating that as both parties were willing that the auction sale should go on the sale might take place, and that if any dispute should arise between them, or the conditional purchaser subsequently object, the auction sale should be cancelled. The sale took place. Mr. Moriarty went shortly afterwards to Mr. Driver, who had in the meantime succeeded Mr. Garrett, and without any reference to me, represented that what I had done was wrong. He represented that I could not cancel a conditional purchase which was placed under his branch, but that the dealing with auction sales rested with me. I had decided that the conditional purchase should be cancelled, and Mr. Moriarty wrote a minute, which he submitted to the Minister, that I had done wrong. The Minister coincided with him, and wrote a minute censuring me for what I had done, stating that he considered the whole proceeding irregular and illegal, and that he could not understand how, in the absence of the approval of the Ministerial head of the department, the land was sold.

688. President.] Do you identify that case? It was the case of Ellen Morris, land conditionally selected at Urana, in August, 1876.

689. Mr. Thomson.] Was not the land which was conditionally purchased legally disposed of? Yes; it was legally disposed of.

690. To the conditional purchaser? Yes.

691. So that Mr. Moriarty was in fact right? I will not say that, because at that time I had precedents for the course taken. I had known Mr. Farnell when in office before allow it, and I had done it myself. This decision of Mr. Driver went through the office, and I knew nothing about it.

692. In your absence? Without my knowing anything about it it was promulgated through the office. My recommendations, as head of the department, were upset on the suggestion of a subordinate officer behind my back, and for several days afterwards I knew nothing about it. Afterwards I wrote a very strong minute. It was the first reprimand I had ever had. I justified what I had done when I had no Minister to appeal to, and moreover the matter was submitted immediately before the time of sale. The Minister approved of my representations, cancelled his minute of censure, and initialled it as cancelled, as you see here. (Paper produced.) I refer to the case to show that an officer to whom I have a right to look for assistance, when he sees what he thinks is a mistake he takes it to the Minister without reference to me, and by his representations, unknown to me, succeeds in obtaining a memo. of censure written upon it.

693. How was it that this document, with the Minister's censure upon it, did not come to you? It came to me by accident. After Mr. Moriarty obtained it from the Minister the next action would be to send it to his branch to get the conditional purchase cancellation revoked. When it came to me it had got among some papers by accident, although eventually it would have come to me. I point that case out as an illustration of the difficulties I have to contend with.

694. Is this only a typical case? That is a case I have brought with me to show how the matter is worked. A case of the same sort occurred the other day. Being in the Minister's room, I happened to hear what was said, and I asked Mr. Farnell to let me have the papers, and he did so.

695. These disagreements must produce scandal? Scandal and discredit too. I have frequently pointed out in my minutes the bad effect it must have upon the department, and the Minister has upheld me.

696. Have you ever suggested any remedy? I cannot see what remedy there is, unless by the removal of one or other of us.* Unless my position as head of the department is clearly defined and recognized, the questioning of my action and authority in this way must produce scandal and interference with good discipline; interference of this sort is intolerable.

697. Are not the duties of the officers defined by printed regulations? No.

698. Nothing of that kind has ever existed? No.

699. If you had such a regulation printed, would not every officer know what his responsibility was? It might be done in the case of the head officers, but not of the clerks.

700. A regulation defining the class of duties so as to prevent any liability to collision? The arrangement approved of by the Cabinet, and which I submitted, ought to be sufficient if only adhered to properly. I have frequently tried to make arrangements which would lead to getting the work done with more harmony.

701. Do you think the present permanent staff too small to cope with the permanent business? Yes.

702. But the permanent staff and the temporary staff together are not? No; as far as I am concerned I think they would be sufficient.

703. Your present permanent and temporary staff are quite sufficient for the ordinary business? Yes; the temporary staff, or most of them, are to all intents and purposes so permanent that they ought to be put on to the permanent staff.

[Witness handed in a statement showing the number of letters despatched from the various branches of the Under Secretary's Department, irrespectively of the Conditional Sales Branch, during 1877 and the first nine months of 1878. (Vide Appendix A 11.)].

WEDNESDAY,

* NOTE (on revision):—The remedy, I should say, rests with the head of the department after my representation of matters to him. There would not be much difficulty however if Mr. Moriarty were made to confine himself to the position and the duties assigned to him.

WEDNESDAY, 30 OCTOBER, 1878.

Present:—

MR. ABBOTT, | MR. RANKEN,
MR. THOMSON.

R. P. ABBOTT, Esq., PRESIDENT, IN THE CHAIR.

W. W. Stephen, Esq., was called in and further examined:—

704. Mr. Thomson.] Could you tell us if you consider that the staff which Mr. Moriarty has in the Conditional Sales Branch is sufficient for the business now to be transacted there? I should judge that it is not sufficient from the terms of an application he sent in to the Minister the day before yesterday, and which I believe has this day been forwarded to me for submission to the Minister. I believe he is applying for twenty or twenty-two more clerks.

W. W.
Stephen, Esq.
30 Oct., 1878.

705. Is it part of your duty to make a recommendation to the Minister with reference to that application? Yes.

706. Then you would have to consider whether you thought Mr. Moriarty's staff too small for the present work? Yes, but I am obliged to rely to a great extent upon his representations, he being the head of that branch, and with the idea that he would not ask for greater assistance than he actually requires.

707. Then you would support the application? I cannot say; it has not come before me yet.

708. Does it not strike you that twenty or twenty-two more clerks is an enormous number to ask for at one time. Can the work of the branch have increased to such an extent as to require this extra staff? It is possible that it may have done so.

709. All at once? It must be remembered that until lately there was a number of clerks working overtime? The overtime has been discontinued, and I suppose this is a set-off against the stoppage of overtime. Mr. Blackman's recommendation contains, I am told, a variety of reasons as to why the extra assistance is applied for.

710. Mr. Blackman's? Mr. Blackman is the clerk in charge. He has submitted the matter to the Chief Commissioner of Conditional Sales, and he has recommended it.

711. Was it not represented, when overtime was required, that the work could not be done by strangers, only by the officials themselves? I believe that was part of the reason adduced in favour of overtime work.

712. You are not aware what can have changed the views of Mr. Moriarty that strangers brought into the department can now do this work? It has been stated by Mr. Moriarty and Mr. Blackman for some time past that the staff was not sufficient to enable them to cope with the work, or to prevent it from falling into arrears.

713. Mr. Moriarty has fifty-four clerks now? I think so.

714. This would bring it up to seventy-six? There was one appointed yesterday, and another will be appointed, or recommended for appointment, to-day or to-morrow.

715. He is getting extra clerical assistance piecemeal? There have been many appointments made in that branch during the last few months.

716. Are you aware of any increase in the work to cause this increase in the number of clerks? I cannot say that I can prove it. Mr. Blackman has, however, frequently made representations to me that he intended to apply for assistance, and I suppose the application which has been sent in now is what he referred to.

717. Suppose that this application is complied with by the Minister, have you room in the office for all these clerks? Four new rooms have been taken for the Conditional Purchase Branch during the last few weeks.

718. In the new building? No, rented rooms in Bridge-street.

719. You have got rid of the work connected with the roads and bridges? Yes.

720. That has been transferred to the Department of Mines? Yes, about a month or six weeks ago.

721. Has that transfer relieved your department in any way? I calculate that it relieves the Minister and myself of about 3,000 cases a year—between two and three thousand.

722. Do you consider that a great relief on the whole? I do not. The difference is small in comparison with the other work.

723. Is that relief counteracted by increased work in other branches? Yes, much more than counteracted.

724. Were the clerks that attended to the business transferred to the Mining Department with the business? Two have been transferred at present. The record clerk of the Roads Branch has been retained with us for greater convenience. The Roads business was for the most part more professional than clerical. The recommendations which used to come from the Survey Department used to be passed on to the Minister, and three-fourths of them were approved by him without any necessity for his looking into them at all.

725. The staff remains in your branch? No; the two clerks who conducted the correspondence have been transferred to the Department of Mines. One clerk of the Roads Branch remains in our building, but he is under the control of the Department of Mines.

726. You have no control over this gentleman? No.

727. Are there any professional gentlemen connected with that branch? Yes; in the Survey Office, appertaining to Roads.

728. Have they not been transferred to the offices of the Department of Mines? No; the Surveyor General said that could not possibly be arranged.

729. Is not that a very awkward arrangement for the Minister for Mines? I do not know. Nearly the whole of the Roads correspondence, when it was sent in to the Lands Department, used to be referred to the Surveyor General at once. Now that work is sent to the Under Secretary for Mines, and he refers to the Surveyor General. There is a daily transmission and return of documents between the two departments. If there are cases which require special investigation Mr. Suttor goes over to the Department of Lands.

730. That is, the Minister for Mines has to wait upon the staff in place of the staff waiting upon him? In these cases of a professional nature, in which he wishes to see the Minister or Deputy Surveyor General, he goes to the Lands Department, but he very seldom now finds a necessity to do that.

731.

W. W.
Stephen, Esq.
30 Oct., 1878.

731. Referring to the disagreement which exists between yourself and Mr. Moriarty, will you be so good as to tell us whether you are on bad terms with any other officer of the department? There has been a slight difference between the Deputy Surveyor General and myself lately, but nothing of such serious importance as the difference between Mr. Moriarty and myself, which is now of long standing.

732. Do you think that that difference is productive of any delay in the transaction of business between the Survey Office and your department? This difference with the Deputy Surveyor, if it can be called one, has arisen lately. It arose out of his questioning my authority or power to take certain action. I can explain it briefly: There was an application made for the return of a Volunteer land order certificate, upon which a person had taken up 50 acres of land. This person said that the land selected was not where he required it, and that it trespassed upon another man's run. He asked to have the certificate returned, as the land was useless to him. The case was brought to me by Mr. J. B. Watt, his agent, and upon the representation which the agent made to me, and as the matter was one of urgency, I wrote "Approved," under the circumstances explained to me. The consequence was that the selection was cancelled, and the certificate returned to Mr. Watt. The case went to the Survey Department for the return of the instruction to survey the land which was not required. The Deputy Surveyor General said that he could not recall the instructions to the surveyor unless he had the authority of the Minister, and returned me the paper. I contend that, acting for the Minister in virtue of the position I hold, and being the person responsible to him, there are cases in which I am at my discretion empowered to act, and that was one of them. I have written one or two memoranda on that subject, but I have not submitted the case to the Minister.

733. The Minister is not aware of the disagreement between you and Mr. Fitzgerald? I have not made him aware of this case; there is another one of the same character.

734. Are these disagreements of such a nature that they should be continued or lead to any bad feeling between you and the officers? I think it is a bad thing for the department generally.

735. I ask you if you consider them of such a nature that they should be continued—such a nature that the Minister's decision should not end the matter? The matter should be settled, or we shall be always disputing on the same point.

736. It is a matter of notoriety in the office that these disputes exist between Mr. Moriarty and yourself, and between you and Mr. Fitzgerald? Yes.

737. It is well known? I do not think that it is well known as regards Mr. Fitzgerald, but I suppose it is by some of the officials.

738. Do you think that it affects the conduct of the other officers of the department towards their respective heads who are concerned in the disputes or disagreements? I don't know that exactly, but the general effect must be bad.

739. Injurious to the management of the department? To the discipline and good government of the department if it were to last.

740. Can you not suggest some way in which it can be remedied. Could not a case be submitted in such a way to the Minister that he would be able to give a decision that would be satisfactory to all parties? The last case which arose out of something more serious is before the Minister now. There have been two or three memoranda between us, and the Minister was to refer the matter to the Commission. The Deputy Surveyor General has returned the papers, and states that he does not feel called upon to reply to papers of mine, written subsequent to the last decision of the Minister; but the last decision has not been replied to yet by him. I saw Mr. Farnell yesterday in reference to the case, and according to what he says upon the matter the result will be.

741. The two differences remain in abeyance at present? At present.

742. Reverting again to the extra clerical assistance in the Conditional Purchase Branch, do you not think that the work now in arrear could be brought up by the officers in the department working extra hours without extra pay? There are clerks in this branch who work till 5 o'clock now. I have seen them there myself.

743. With fifty-four clerks in the branch, working two hours a day extra, would they not soon bring up the whole of the arrears, or do you consider that there would be any great hardship in that? I do not think it would be a great hardship. This particular business has very much increased since it was in my hands, by the operation of the new Land Act of 1875, and I am bound to believe that the representations made as to the increased work are true.

744. But I understand that these are arrears in consequence of the stoppage of overtime? They may be partly owing to overtime being stopped, but, irrespective of that, Mr. Moriarty and Mr. Blackman have represented for some time that they required a larger staff.

745. Are you not aware that in other departments, when pressure of work requires it, the clerks stop in to work it off? I believe it is done in other departments, but I think the clerks are paid overtime. Several of the officers in the other branches of the Lands Department work overtime also without being paid.

746. Do you not think that an order to work overtime until the arrears were brought up would have the effect of inducing the clerks to work harder during the day than they do at present—to do a fair day's work? I cannot accuse them of not doing a fair day's work as it is. You are talking of the clerks in the Conditional Purchase Branch?

747. Quite so? I am not in their rooms. I do not see them once in six months. Mr. Blackman told me the other day that they were all good workers. I asked him how he could distribute the work amongst so many. He said he had work to distribute to thirty more clerks, if he only had the clerks to do it.

748. You are aware that it was reported that time was wasted in the department to obtain this overtime work? I have heard that stated; but I do not believe it. There may be dishonest clerks who would do such a thing; but I do not believe it is a fair statement generally.

749. Do you not think that the payment of 3s. and 4s. an hour was an inducement for clerks to shirk work in order to obtain payment for arrears? It might be so with dishonest clerks who do not take any interest in their work.

750. You are a member of the Tender Board? Yes.

751. Does that occupy much of your time? No.

752. How often does it meet? On the first Tuesday in every month.

753. Your time is not occupied very much by that? No.

754. It does not withdraw you much from the department? About half an hour or an hour on the Tuesday of meeting.

755. President.] You have sent us a letter with some papers bearing on a case between you and Mr. Moriarty, by the direction of the Minister for Lands? Yes. W. W. Stephen, Esq.
30 Oct., 1878.
756. How is it that the other papers asked for by the Commission the other day have not been sent since the last meeting? Which papers?
757. The papers bearing on the same matter between you and Mr. Moriarty? How is it that all the papers embodying the dispute between you and Mr. Moriarty have not been sent? I intended to have forwarded them by separate letter to day, but had not time. Two or three of them will have to be copied. I can send them the first thing in the morning. They want a little arrangement and sorting, as they have got mixed up together.
758. I should like to have all the papers from the beginning of this disagreement between you? They shall be supplied.
759. It would be desirable also that we should have the papers in this matter between you and Mr. Fitzgerald also? Very well.
760. The Secretary will be responsible for the safe keeping of any papers sent from your Department by letter to this Commission? Yes.

FRIDAY, 1 NOVEMBER, 1878.

Present:—

MR. ABBOTT, | MR. RANKEN,
MR. THOMSON.

R. P. ABBOTT, ESQ., PRESIDENT, IN THE CHAIR.

William Wilberforce Stephen, Esq., was called in and further examined:—

761. President.] Since last meeting, Mr. Stephen, the Commission have received some papers marked "Ministerial," sent to us by the direction of the Minister for Lands. I do not know how you identify them. Is it by the numbers at the head of them, or how? Will you identify them? Would there be any other better way? I think that is the best way. That is the record number. Observe that some of them are copies; the rest are original. I had not time to get them all prepared. (Papers marked "Ministerial," 78-5,280.) W. W. Stephen, Esq.
1 Nov., 1878.
762. Copies and originals, the whole matter is there? The whole matter to which those particular papers relate.
763. And I find that on one of these documents there is a minute written by the Minister for Lands which says:—"The matters referred to in these papers are, in my opinion, fit subjects for inquiry by the Commission, and ought in due course to be brought before it. Until the Commission reports to me on the matters and subject referred to, I will not entertain any correspondence such as is contained in these papers." Can you inform the Commission, Mr. Stephen, what the meaning of that minute is. Does the Minister expect the Commission to report specially to him on these matters? I think he had some idea of that sort in his head. He thought that these matters might be looked upon as special, but he has not written anything to that effect to me.
764. That minute might lead to that conclusion; and you think that that was his intention? I believe it was. The statement just alluded to by you, that he would not entertain any further correspondence, I can explain to mean that he would not be troubled with any more minutes on the subject. I wrote a memorandum, and Mr. Moriarty replied. This might again provoke a reply from me. He stated that he would not deal with the matter any further. He meant he would not have any more minutes from us on the subject, but would refer it to the Commission.
765. Then you do not think it likely he intended that that matter is to stand over and remain until the Commission has quite finished its labours on the whole question presented by these papers? My impression is, that he thought that all these and similar minutes—minutes of a similar character—should receive special attention. That is my idea, but I cannot say so for certain.
766. Otherwise, if that were not his intention, he must have had the idea that this state of things might exist for an unlimited time? Yes; exactly.
767. The state of affairs as shown by these papers between you and Mr. Moriarty you admit is very bad? Very bad, indeed. Worse than bad I should call it.
768. In fact with this feeling that exists, and the uncertainty as to the position of you and himself as heads of the department, business cannot be carried on satisfactorily? No, I think not. I wish to say, however, that there is no uncertainty as to my own position, although Mr. Moriarty fails often to recognize it.
769. How long has this state of things existed? I may say with little intermission, ever since he rejoined the department in 1874.
770. Commencing immediately after was it? Yes.
771. What position did he take in the department in 1874? He accepted the chief clerkship in the room of the late Mr. Armytage.
772. Can you state from memory how long it was after he took that position these squabbles took place? Within a very short time after he rejoined the department. If my memory is right, within six weeks after.
773. And what was the origin of it? The origin of it is disclosed in the papers which I have sent in at the request of the Commission.
774. Is this the case? No, I have arranged the different cases, according to chronological order.
775. Is it referred to here? It is referred to fully by me in one of my minutes.
776. It is referred to; and I think you said the same state of things has existed from that time to the present? It was referred to by me to show that the Minister had given certain instructions, that Mr. Moriarty should keep his proper position, and not interfere with me; and that after the lapse of four years the same state of things was going on.
777. And you quote from that minute of Mr. Farnell, written in 1874? I quote from that.
778. I forget whether you gave me an answer to the question as to what was the origin of it, and the reason put forward by Mr. Moriarty for his commencement of this controversy? I stated that the origin is shown in these papers, but I can state it from memory. It was this: Mr. Farnell informed me one day that Sir Henry Parkes, then Colonial Secretary, had noticed certain letters signed "A. O. Moriarty," without stating stating his designation "chief clerk," or writing "For Under Secretary," but signed on his own responsibility, I being away at the time for a few days. I told Mr. Farnell, in reply to his inquiry, what the usual practice was, and then he wrote that minute, which you will see with these papers, stating that the Colonial Secretary had called his attention to it, and laying down the rule which should be adopted for the future.

779. By that minute to which you refer in these papers? No, that is the first minute. The origin of the whole thing I may explain. Then came Mr. Moriarty's reply in reference to this, and it was in that reply, within four or six weeks after his rejoining the department as chief clerk, that he reflected on my delay in signing correspondence; what he said was, "delays so unparalleled in the Public Service, and so prejudicial to the public interest." He made that as a charge against me in reply to Mr. Farnell's memorandum. That called forth my answer, and in reference to that answer Mr. Farnell wrote the minute of February, 1874, to which I refer in these papers, stating that he would not allow the chief clerk to address the language towards me which he had, and he hoped to hear nothing more of such matters in the future. That, I think you will find, is the general tenor of the minute.

780. Then in the first instance the subject was not introduced by you; you had nothing to do with it? Nothing whatever.

781. Because of something that was done by Mr. Moriarty in your absence that the Secretary of Lands found fault with, that brought from Mr. Moriarty an accusation? Yes, this rejoinder in which he accuses me of unparalleled delays in signing correspondence.

782. And was that his excuse? I remember his words were, "I had signed them in his absence." He stated that he did not wish to sign on the responsibility of the Under Secretary. He must have known, however, the rule, that in my absence all the documents are signed "For the Under Secretary"; he said he thought it was undesirable to do so in the Under Secretary's absence, because that in his presence such "unparalleled delays" took place. These alleged delays, I may observe, were fully explained to the Minister.

783. Was there any reason from anything that had taken place between you and Mr. Moriarty previously for this ill-feeling—was there any personal ill-feeling? Previously to that nothing whatever. I was never more astonished in my life.

784. You were on good terms? Yes, he had stated his wish to assist me, and I had done everything in my power, I can honestly state, to work with him; and I did everything in my power, I can conscientiously say, to prevent his feeling in any way the change in our relative positions to what they had been formerly.

785. You had previously been in the same department? Yes, and of course I felt the difficulties in the way, and I did everything in my power to smooth them over. I was almost foolishly sensitive in my endeavours not to make him feel the difference in our positions.

786. From that time, in 1874, up to the present time, has that feeling of antagonism always been active? I am afraid it has been; it lay dormant for some time; we had a sort of reconciliation, but it did not last very long. I could not put up with his style of behaviour towards me.

787. Have you in point of fact almost invariably been brought in contact with one another; almost invariably quarrelling, that is to say, officially? I will not say always; very often. Our relative duties from the nature of the department, and the nature of the duties, often clash, and on these occasions he takes often a course which I thought was hostile; he wished to reverse what I did.

788. You say that was generally the case? Very often the case.

789. Concerning your actions with regard to the same matter? On matters which affected his branch, as opposed to or distinct from mine; as between our relative positions and duties.

790. Have you forwarded to the Commission, Mr. Stephen, all papers you have which show anything between you and Mr. Moriarty? I have forwarded I think all the most important disputes. I have a drawer where there is an endless variety of small memoranda, but I never thought of placing them together. I have never gone through them.

791. Did you not think that in a matter of such obvious importance it would be desirable that the Commission, judging in the matter, should have all the information possible, and be able to judge from the smallest things, or have an opportunity of judging? You can understand that I never anticipated any inquiry of this sort, or any reason why I should produce these papers.

792. I am only speaking of what you have? I have them, but they are scraps; they are not coherent. There may be memorandum on some matter, and perhaps I have lost another with regard to the same subject.

793. But did you not think that, having in view the accusations with regard to the papers mislaid and kept back, that appear on these papers, it would be desirable that you should send everything? Well, it might be, but the papers sent to the Commission are complete, I think. The others have not any reference to them.

794. Because there are some very serious charges? But with regard to any charges, or papers he speaks of, the memoranda I have kept, and they are there.

795. Mr. Thomson.] Have you all the papers in cases you submitted to the Minister? Yes, I think all these have been sent by the Minister that passed backwards and forwards between us. The other memoranda were not.

796. President.] You did not think it necessary to produce them? I did not think they would throw any more light than is shown in these documents. If I find any I will send them.

797. You did not consider it necessary to produce all you have in view of these charges? I think not. I think if these documents do not show what is the truth the other documents will not.

798. And are not all minutes passing between you and Mr. Moriarty looked on as official documents likely to show at any point the state of things? Well, these memoranda which I speak of have been sent to the Commission—relate to official matters, and the disputes arising therefrom. But the others were not all disputes or controversies between ourselves. There were matters also which I did not show to the Minister. I felt it to be impossible to be always troubling the Minister on these occasions, unless I thought it necessary for the good government or discipline of the office, and where I considered I could not put up with the style of memoranda which Mr. Moriarty addressed to me, or the language in which his minutes were couched, whether addressed to me, or to the Minister, of me.

799. There have been many such cases not mentioned in these papers you have put before us? Yes, there are several. I did come across a few the other day. I was thinking whether it would be necessary to send them to the Commission, but I did not think the Commission would require them, especially as they are not complete.

800. Do you know whether Mr. Moriarty has any of these memoranda or minutes that have passed between you and him? I dare say he has.
801. You do not know? I am under the impression that he has kept three or four, but I am not certain.
802. Have they any bearing on any of these cases you have sent to us? Not that I am aware of; I do not think it is possible. You see this state of affairs has been extending over a period of three or four years, and with all my other numerous duties I could not say whether there were any other memoranda bearing upon these questions. But these papers which I have produced you will see are written at intervals.
803. Will they not show more the result of what has taken place between these cases. More what led up to the position—these scraps and memoranda? I do not think they would. I can produce them if you think necessary. I have hardly looked at them.
804. Did you not think the matter of sufficient importance, not only for the Commission but for yourself? Well, I think, perhaps, it is a pity that I did not keep them more regularly. They would, perhaps, show the Commission more fully what a perpetual state of unseemly wrangling there has been induced by Mr. Moriarty's line of conduct, and they would also show that he has provoked it, as I stated before.
805. Mr. Thomson. Mr. Stephen might be requested to look over them and produce all those of most importance.
806. President. I should think they are all essential, are they not? I hardly think that in the state they are in they would be very intelligible to the Commission. I believe that these documents you have afforded ample material upon which the Commission can form a conclusion. There are five different cases.
807. You will understand that you have the opportunity of sending them if you wish or think them necessary;—of course you are the best judge of that? Exactly.
808. What was the nature of the terms existing between you and Mr. Moriarty at the time of making the arrangements for the sole control of the Conditional Purchase Department? We were on speaking terms, but I cannot say we were on very amicable terms. There always seemed to be a latent disposition to differ.
809. Mr. Thomson. On your part, or on his part? I say on his part, decidedly. He will say on mine, no doubt.
810. President. Have you never formed any idea as to what was at the bottom of it? Well, if I am obliged to state my opinion, I did not believe so for a long time—I struggled against the belief—the belief that was put into my head by many people who knew him better than I did,—which was, that he could not brook seeing me at the head of the department after being there himself. He looked on everything with a distorted vision. His insulting minutes, without any provocation on my part whatever, and his making charges against me to the Minister, showed me pretty conclusively at that time that his professions of help and good feeling were not quite sincere.
811. Have those professions of good feeling ever been followed up, in point of fact, by his actions? I should say certainly not. His actions have belied his words, most decidedly.
812. What was the date of his appointment as Chief Commissioner of Conditional Purchases? It was to that date I referred when asking as to the terms between you and him—the time of his appointment as Chief Commissioner? At that particular time, when the arrangement was first mooted and spoken of, we were upon speaking terms. It was about the time Mr. Garrett went to Melbourne—a day or so before he went to Melbourne, in the Christmas holidays. Mr. Moriarty was acting in fact, if I remember rightly, as Chief Commissioner before the arrangement was formally approved by the Cabinet.
813. Was that while he was known as chief clerk? I think before the arrangement was officially approved he had commenced performing his new duties, but I will not be certain.
814. But the commencement of these new duties made a change in his position;—they relieved him from my control with regard to the actual business relating to conditional purchases; but otherwise it was expressly enacted that the department in all other respects was to remain as a whole. The arrangement set forth was not to alter the constitution of the department in any way. The minute submitted about the departmental arrangement shows that Mr. Moriarty's appointment as Conditional Purchase Commissioner was on the 11th August, 1875, the year the Lands Act Amendment Act came into operation.
815. Now is it not a fact that every kind of application for land under our laws is liable to clash with the Conditional Purchase Branch? Nearly all; the auction sales, the auction selections, and the improvement purchases.
816. What can there be that will not clash in rival claims? I will tell you;—special alienations under the 9th, 10th, and 11th clauses of the Alienation Act of 1861.
817. There can be no such thing as conditional purchase in these cases? No; therefore they cannot clash.
818. With regard to all lands open to conditional purchase is there not a liability of clashing with the conditional purchases by all the other applications that can be made for land? Yes, there is a liability; not that the clashing occurs very often.
819. But they were rival or opposing claims? Yes.
820. The conditional purchases would be at the bottom of the whole, and more likely to be clashed with than any other? All sales of 40 acres and over. There are frequently sales made under 40 acres, and they cannot clash, being under the minimum area of a conditional purchase.
821. Applications under any other portion of the law would be liable to clash with the conditional purchase branch? Yes.
822. And thus all these things are liable to bring you into contact with Mr. Moriarty? Yes. As a matter of fact it is not so very often they do clash.
823. But in all cases of dispute is it not almost invariably the case that there is a conditional purchase on one side? Yes, almost always.
824. You do not find auction sales and improvement purchases clash? They might, but it is not the same sort of thing.
825. When you find a holder of land making application for an improvement purchase it would be on his own run? Of course.
826. Then you will not find auction sales on his run with which another man would be connected? No, very seldom; very exceptionally. All lands open to selection after auction you are aware are open to conditional purchase.
827. And that is what I want to know. And all applications for land under our land law are liable to bring bring you into collision with Mr. Moriarty in his position? Yes, excepting those I have just referred to. 828. And I think you said the other day there were disputes in reference to nearly three-fourths of the applications? No, I do not think I said that. If I said so I conveyed a wrong impression. I certainly did not mean to say there were disputes that involved rival claims as between conditional purchasers and other classes of purchasers in so large a proportion of cases, but I said they were of a nature in which the public would only take the Minister's decision, and that in a large number of cases the Minister's approval was necessary under the law before they could obtain the land.

829. That is your recollection of your answer? That is my recollection of it and what I meant.

830. Well now, in view of the position that you and Mr. Moriarty held towards one another at that time, did you not think that ordinary foresight ought to have taught you that a division of your legitimate authority with him could only lead to extended contention? My idea was that it would separate us to such an extent that would render such collision improbable. When he was chief clerk the papers came from him to me, and it sometimes happened that he as chief clerk would question my decisions and minutes. I did not anticipate this question of clashing. It did not present itself then with the force that it did afterwards. And I say still, if Mr. Moriarty would adhere to his instructions there should be no such contentions, that these cases of clashing should come to me first, and I should deal with them as I thought fit; either refer them to him, or deal with them myself, no great difficulty would arise. It often depends upon a question of priority—who is first; or whether the land conditionally purchased contains improvements or not. Questions that refer to improvement purchases come under me, and conditional purchases come under him. I think the most legitimate way of settling such questions is that the head of the department should take the responsibility and deal with them any way he thinks proper.

831. And at the time of his appointment you knew that these questions must arise? Yes, there is a minute which I have submitted, setting out the difficulties, and proposing the arrangement which I have alluded to, and approved by Mr. Farnell with the view of meeting such cases. Mr. Moriarty tried to upset it, and I would not have it. He tried to upset it without submitting his memorandum to me.

832. If he, as chief clerk, and in a subordinate position as far as its relation to you was concerned, if he then set up his authority as opposed to yours, what chance would there be of his not taking the same course;—can you have any reason to expect that he would be content to deal with you in any other way when he was in a better and more onerous position, than he did when he was chief clerk, and there could be no mistake as to his being under you? No, I might have thought that the tendency would be to take a different course, and to question my authority whenever he had an opportunity.

833. You had a right to expect that it would lead to disorganization? I thought he would adhere to the rules laid down by the department, and he has not done so. In a large department like that where the Under Secretary takes action upon the business coming under his control, when these papers are sent in the ordinary course of action to Mr. Moriarty, and he takes these papers to the Minister without any reference to me whatever, and endeavours to obtain a decision antagonistic to mine, it is quite evident, and stands to reason that the department must get into confusion. This has occurred on one or two occasions.

834. That is in his present position, since he has been Chief Commissioner? Yes; I do not remember that it occurred when he was chief clerk, because his position was more definite, and subordinate to me in everything.

835. But I understood you to say he even then questioned your decisions? He wrote a few memoranda, which I thought out of place.

836. And still you were a party to the arrangement putting him in his present position? Yes, I was a party to the arrangement. It was, however, at the wish of the Minister that it was done. He said he must have something of the kind done to relieve me from the whole of the work, and that was what we agreed to.

837. Is it a fact that the officers of the department take part with you or Mr. Moriarty according to what they may think of their treatment by either? I cannot say that.

838. Have you ever had any evidence of a feeling of that kind existing between your own legitimate department and that which Mr. Moriarty claims as his—any antagonism between the subordinates as well as the chiefs? I do not think there is; I cannot say; I never noticed it.

839. Mr. Thomson. You have never received anything from Mr. Blackman as antagonistic to yourself in consequence of Mr. Moriarty's antagonism? I remember on one occasion, shortly after this arrangement, that there seemed to be some doubt as to the particular position the clerks were in, irrespective of their duties in the Conditional Purchase Branch. I remember speaking to Mr. Blackman one day. He said, "I do not think I can take your instructions." It was on some matter of departmental instruction. He said, "I consider myself by the new arrangement under the control of Mr. Moriarty." He did not say it offensively at all. But on one occasion when there was some trifling dispute Mr. Moriarty said to Mr. Blackman, "Please you will take your instructions from me, and not from the Under Secretary." That was in my presence. That was the only occasion, and the point was afterwards settled.

840. President. In point of fact, as shown by this minute of Mr. Farnell, there was a dead-lock between you and Mr. Moriarty? Yes, we must call it a dead-lock. It is not such a dead-lock as that the business of the department does not go on. I submit my case, and he submits his.

841. So far as cases are concerned where your views and his would clash, where he says he has a right to submit the case first? I am submitting them all at the present time. There is an instruction to the Surveyor General to do so. Nearly all cases where this clashing does occur are cases remitted from the Survey Department. They address all cases to the Under Secretary for Lands, except those which relate solely to conditional purchases, where the correspondence shows there can be no clashing.

842. Where there is no necessity for your interfering? No, no necessity.

843. Do you think the business of the department can be carried on satisfactorily whilst you and Mr. Moriarty hold you present positions towards one another; and of course there are these delays, disagreements, and differences of opinion on all these questions to be settled? I hardly see how the business of the department can be considered on a satisfactory footing as long as these dissensions last.

844. Do you think it possible that the business can be carried on satisfactorily, you and he holding your your present positions, and holding the same position towards one another? It cannot be carried on satisfactorily in regard to the cases in which our duties clash. Otherwise there is no contention, and the duties of the office go on without any disagreement.

845. When you consider that the great majority of these applications for land are with the Conditional Purchase Branch the chances that there will not be collision are very small? The cases of clashing I do not consider more than about 15 or 20 per cent., cases of actual clashing. W. W. Stephen, Esq.

846. Mr. Ranken.] But if there are 7,000 cases each month, it would be a very considerable number? Of 1 Nov., 1878.

847. President.] We are told there are 7,000 applications every month? Yes.

848. And I should think 700 disputes between you and Mr. Moriarty every month would keep you very busy? It does not follow that there are disputes in every case between Mr. Moriarty and myself where the different classes of purchase clash with each other.

849. You have reason to expect them? Yes, I have reason to expect them.

850. And it would keep you busy all the time? Yes, very often.

851. Mr. Thomson.] You do not mean to say that this clashing means quarrelling. It simply means that some of the cases you have to deal with have also to be dealt with by Mr. Moriarty? Yes; but it keeps up a perpetual state of bad feeling. If I might give you a case in point. If there has been a conditional purchase made, for instance, and that land is by some error perhaps in the Survey Department, which often happens, advertised for sale by auction, and within a day or two of the auction sale, the conditional purchaser finds out that it is advertised for sale by auction, it is sometimes stated that he will relinquish his claim to this land. He will write to us, saying that the land is improved, that he will take back his deposit, and the land may go on to auction. In that case the question requiring first and prompt settlement is whether the land is to go on to auction, or to be kept back. This makes all the difference to the man who is waiting for it, because if it is withdrawn there is some three months more delay. There is all the Gazetting, and the time required to elapse by law after Gazetting. In a case of that sort I say they should come to me first; the matter of the conditional purchase can be settled afterwards. In some cases I have recommended that the auction sale should proceed, and that there were sufficient grounds for the conditional purchase to be declared void. After the sale by auction has taken place, the papers go to the Chief Commissioner for him to cancel the conditional purchase. He then goes to the Secretary for Lands and states, perhaps, that the course taken at my instance is not legal or right at all; he will endeavour to obtain a decision from the Minister, reversing mine. That is a case in point, in which the matter ought to be settled promptly and quickly, and the decision should stand.

852. Chairman.] But up to the last moment all lands advertised for auction sale are open to selection? Yes, but I refer now to lands actually selected, but at the same time about to be sold by auction, or advertised for auction sale.

853. But is it not a fact that that is looked upon as one of the best dummy plans? It often is, there is no doubt about it.

854. People who desire to have auction sales have land selected by their servants, and when it gets close to the time for auction have it abandoned? There can be no doubt that that phase of dummyism is often carried on. But at the same time, with regard to the case which I submitted to you the other day (Goldsmith's conditional purchase), in that case if I had not taken it to the Minister, it would have been too late. I submitted to him whether the sale might go on. There were letters from the conditional purchaser himself in the Conditional Purchase Branch three days. They might not have been submitted till the auction sale was over. If I waited for the papers to come up from the Conditional Purchase Branch, it would have been too late to decide the question. In this case, the Deputy Surveyor General, or Mr. Moriarty, I do not know which, took the papers to the Minister, and he reversed his decision. He said it was evident that they were dummies, and Wilson was determined to get the land. The conditional purchaser made declaration that the land was improved, and they would take their money back. There was no objection to that, unless you had reason to believe that these men were dummies. Mr. Fitzgerald took that objection, because up to the 10th April there were no improvements shown on the plan. I did not recommend the land to be sold at auction, but I told the Minister I thought it might be fairly. These cases are being referred for the value of the improvements; and I am as certain as I am sitting here that the Goldsmiths, instead of being dummies, are simply "black-mailers," settling on the land to induce Wilson to buy them out; but finding that there were improvements, and that they could not on that account hold their selections, they thought it was no use being out of their money, and they would get their money back. The sale by auction has been withdrawn, and the matter is now being investigated.

855. In cases such as you have referred to, cases of black-mailing, would you consider it a proper thing to return their deposit? They would either have to reside or they should forfeit their deposit.

856. These cases of this kind are of frequent and common occurrence; cases between what you consider your legitimate province and what Mr. Moriarty considers his? Yes.

857. Do you think it would be possible, under any circumstances, to get any person who would be able to fill the position Mr. Moriarty holds, with the powers he has to deal with these cases; do you think it possible for any man to hold that position without being brought into collision with the Under Secretary, no matter whoever he might be? I think it all depends upon the man who holds that position.

858. Do you not think it is a division of the authority that the Under Secretary ought to have in his own hands? It amounts to that.

859. Do you think that desirable? No.

860. Do you think it possible for anyone to hold that position without leading to the same results, more or less? I feel certain that if any other head of a branch had the same powers the whole thing would go on satisfactorily.

861. Mr. Ranken.] Is it not a fact that your knowledge of these cases of collision comes not from the Conditional Purchase Branch but from the Survey Branch; that a portion of land may be dealt with in the two branches without your becoming aware of it subsequently from the Survey Branch; that Mr. Moriarty may have in his province dealt with some piece of land without you knowing of it from the Survey? As a matter of fact the Survey Department would point out the collision or clashing of cases, because that is information obtainable in their office.

862. In that case collision might occur by some one most amicably disposed towards you? Yes, to any person. I allude, of course, to collision of cases, not personal collision.

863. There might? In one case the conditional purchase would be upheld by Mr. Moriarty's action, and the auction upheld by my decision or action.

864. President.] They are adverse decisions? Yes, but they do not happen very often.

865. It could not happen if you had the control of the Conditional Purchase Branch as well as your own? No, it would not happen. 866.

W. W.
Stephen, Esq.
1 Nov., 1878.

866. Then do you not think it desirable? Certainly.
867. You said you as often hear from people outside and you are set in motion as often as in any other way with regard to cases likely to refer to their interests? Very often it is brought under notice by the action of the department.
868. And all these cases may be done without your knowing anything about it? They might.
869. And decisions given contrary to what you believe they ought to be? Yes, but through the disregard only of instructions as to the way of submitting the cases.
870. And you are still the responsible head of the department? The chief objection is in the fact of recommendations made by me and approved by the Minister being attempted to be reversed by a man in a subordinate branch because he differs from me, and that upon matters in my own particular province to deal with.
871. If all these matters have to go to the Minister for Lands for his decision, he who has to deal with the public in his political duties as well, and he can give decisions in all these cases, there is no reason to suppose you can not deal with the whole of these cases and take them to the Minister as well as Mr. Moriarty? Decidedly; but the question is the time it would take to deal with all the cases properly before submitting them.
872. And if he can do the duty which you both bring to him there is no reason to suppose he could not do it if you brought the whole of it to him? No, if I had the time.*
873. You say that this state of things is an hindrance to the public business. Can it be remedied? Of course; there is one most effectual remedy.
874. And what do you think is the remedy, because there must be some way out of the difficulty? Well, I should be very sorry myself to propose any arrangement which would affect Mr. Moriarty, but I think if he will not carry out his duties, and will rebel against every instruction given to him in these matters that his position ought to be altered, or he should be transferred to some other department. The Minister gives a decision, and two or three months afterwards Mr. Moriarty comes in and states his case, and the Minister, pressed with business, and upon statements which I am not present to refute, gives another decision upsetting mine without seeing the real effect of it, either as regards my position before the whole department, or the effect upon the work itself. For instance, in one of these cases whereupon my recommendation the land has gone on to auction, it follows that the action which must necessarily ensue is the cancellation of the conditional purchase. But when these papers are forwarded to Mr. Moriarty he says—"I will not do that, the Under Secretary is wrong." He will take the papers to the Minister, as before stated, and work in an adverse way to me. That must be radically wrong.
875. Is it not unsafe to the Minister, he being responsible for proper decisions? Certainly; it places him in a false position.
876. If there are two decisions one must be wrong? Then he would hold us responsible.
877. Which would he hold responsible? That is the question. The ground would have to be gone over again, and we should each have to tell our reasons for our own action.
878. Can the Minister protect himself against mistakes of this kind in any other way than by going through all the papers which you bring him? No.
879. There is no way he could protect himself except by going through all the papers that you and Mr. Moriarty put before him? No, except by relying on my précis of the case or recommendation.
880. Doing the work that you and Mr. Moriarty ought to be responsible for? Exactly.
881. This state of things arose from the fact of you and Mr. Moriarty being, as it were, opposed to one another, and exercising divided authority? Yes, on these matters, from his personal antagonism, I am afraid I do not think I have ever sought to reverse his action on office matters in which he is concerned without letting him know. I think he does not hold the same position which I do.
882. Any man in his position, looking upon it as his right, would do it without thinking it necessary to let you know. There might not necessarily be anything wrong in that, as far as he was concerned? Not at all, if it actually were his right to do so; but it is not, so far as regards matters I have to deal with.
883. Then whoever was in the same position, the same state of things might arise? It might, but I do not think it would if anybody else were there. We would mutually consult each other.
884. Would it not be as well that all the cases should be placed before you, as that the Chief Commissioner should consult with you? That was my proposition, that in all such cases I should submit them, and my decision should be upheld.
885. The remedy you suggest, the only remedy you can think of is the removal of Mr. Moriarty? Yes. I should not like to suggest my own removal, but one or the other should be removed. I would not say it if he was obliged to keep his position. It has a bad effect on the department and on the discipline of it, because these discussions get known through the department.†
886. Of course they do. You view is that one or other of you must leave the department?‡ That is my view. I say, if things go on as they do at present I think it for the public interest that one of us should leave the department; but I wish to state that it should not be so, that Mr. Moriarty should be made to adhere to the rules, and if he will not the Minister should suspend him.
887. That would be rather worse for him that his removal to another sphere of action? Considerably worse. I am certain that if Mr. Moriarty was transferred to another department, and another person qualified were placed in charge of the Conditional Purchases, it would be better. But I do not think from my experience I would, as far as I am concerned, consent to another Chief Commissioner of Conditional Purchases. Except there are two or three people in the department under me with whom it would work well perhaps.

* NOTE (on revision):—There is, however, a vast difference between giving decisions on cases, the facts of which are clearly before the Minister, and preparing the same cases for his decisions. The Minister will often in one hour write "approved" on cases which it has taken days to get submitted in proper shape. Of course there are numerous cases as well which he has to carefully consider.

† NOTE (on revision):—I do not think that I have stated this, nor do I think that any such remedy should emanate from or be proposed by me. My duty is to represent the matters I complain of to the Minister, which I have done repeatedly. No such remedy as that referred to should be necessary in my opinion if Mr. Moriarty were compelled to keep within his own position, as distinctly laid down, and to adhere to the instructions which the Minister has given (as will be seen) more than once, for Mr. Moriarty's guidance, as regards his relations with me.

‡ NOTE (on revision):—That would be my idea; if Mr. Moriarty will not alter his present line of conduct I certainly do not think that I should suffer, or the department either. If he will insist upon disregarding all official rules in his dealings with me, as well as all instructions, I conclude that the Minister would eventually suspend him.

888. In looking at these papers, referred to by number, I see there is the copy of a memorandum bearing Mr. Moriarty's initials, in which he says, speaking of some arrangement he states as having been made, "This arrangement which was arrived at by agreement was set aside by instructions from the Under Secretary, to the effect that all such cases were to be referred direct to him and not to me." This has obvious relation to the instructions in depriving the Minister of the information afforded by reference to these branch surveys, and the assistance of the officers in this class of cases—namely, disputed ones in which such information and assistance is likely to be of most value, was pointed out by me in certain memoranda, which were referred by Mr. Secretary Driver to the Under Secretary, and shared the fate of similar documents? Yes, I have explained all that in my last minute, and I can state the circumstances also from memory. Mr. Moriarty alleged in that minute that, by the arrangement arrived at by mutual agreement, and set aside by instructions from the Under Secretary, &c., &c. I deny that most distinctly, and I have proved it. It was not likely that I would make any arrangement without a word having passed between us. Again it states, set aside by instructions from the Under Secretary. I produced to Mr. Farnell the official document registered and approved by Mr. Driver. That is the only formal arrangement ever made. Mr. Farnell then said he had been misled by Mr. Moriarty's statements, and that he was upsetting the arrangement made by Mr. Driver. Mr. Moriarty tried to make out that I was trying to upset the formal and recognised instructions by my own motion. I showed that the only arrangement was the one approved of by the Minister, and I stated in a memorandum the reason for making that arrangement. I cannot see how Mr. Moriarty should have forgotten it.

W. W.
Stephen, Esq.
1 Nov., 1878.

889. That was when he stated it was done on your instructions, when it would have been setting aside the Minister's decision? Exactly. Again, that was an arrangement affecting my work far more than his. Surely the natural routine was to submit it, through me, to the Minister. As I have stated in my memorandum very strongly, Mr. Moriarty submitted that minute to the Minister without these officially recorded papers, with Mr. Driver's approval on them. Mr. Farnell never saw these papers until I referred to this minute, and I produced them. Mr. Farnell said, "I was under the impression that I was restoring the arrangement of Mr. Driver; but on perusing the papers I find it is not so, and I see no reason for departing from the practice."

890. Where were these papers which you say Mr. Moriarty did not produce to Mr. Farnell? In the proper place—in the official records office.

891. And available to Mr. Moriarty? And available to Mr. Moriarty.

892. And was, in point of fact, the statement made by Mr. Moriarty, as to your action in the matter, incorrect? Certainly, most incorrect.

893. And he had the means in his own power to ascertain the facts? Certainly. He submitted his suggestion to Mr. Farnell, and Mr. Farnell approved of it, not knowing of this approval of Mr. Driver, as he stated.

894. That is another effect of his having access to the Minister? Certainly. In that case I have no doubt his object was to obtain a reversal, partly as an annoyance to me. Before the minute came back to me it was promulgated through the Survey Department without my seeing it.

895. You say he did it intentionally, with the idea of bringing you into contempt in the department? I will not quite say that. It looks very like it however. That was the effect of it, and I think he must have known of it. I would not say he had that express object.

896. If he had not that object in view, what was his object? He placed it on the ground of the public interest. He may have thought it the best plan, but there was a proper way to go to work. He says, "in order that the Minister may have the most experienced advice." The inference was that he was the only person who could give it to him.

897. Can you tell us what was meant by this expression of Mr. Moriarty, "shared the fate of similar documents"? I suppose he thought I had destroyed it, but there it is.

898. Was that what you took to be the meaning of it? Yes, that I had suppressed or destroyed it. It was in my box for weeks. Shortly before Mr. Driver went away he said, "Here is this paper." I said, "What am I to do with it?" He said, "Do what you like with it." Mr. Moriarty endeavoured to get Mr. Driver to reverse his decision given in favour of my proposals.

899. That is the meaning you attach to those words of Mr. Moriarty? Yes.

900. You stated that he intended to infer that you had either destroyed or suppressed it? He hinted the same thing several times.

901. In fact, as I understand it, the position which Mr. Moriarty assumes to you is, that he is to have the decision as to the necessity of papers going to you? Exactly. He takes that high ground in his minutes and writings as if he was the head officer and not me. There is a style about his minutes which is altogether irritating, and I do not believe any other Under Secretary would stand it, or that the Minister would ask him to stand it.

902. Do you concur with Mr. Moriarty in this opinion expressed in these papers—his statement made in this minute of his:—"Various instances have occurred in which the service of the public has been damaged by this defective routine"? No, decidedly not. Mr. Farnell suggested that I should propose some modification. I proposed a slight modification, and I think improvement. But I would not do it, after that.

903. You have not made any such suggestion, and the matter remains as put by Mr. Farnell's minute? No, I have not. The suggestion I was going to make was, that when these papers were sent to me, and I found that a conditional purchase was more affected than any other class of purchases, I should send them to Mr. Moriarty.

904. And that you were to have the decision? Yes.

905. Do you think that would have facilitated business? I think it would. No doubt in some cases the papers have been detained by me for two or three days, but not when the auction sale is going to take place. When that is the case I act upon the case at once. The interests of the auction purchaser ought, I think, to be regarded as much as those of the conditional purchaser. The law was made for both.

906. You think the plan you were going to suggest would be an improvement? Yes.

907. And you have not made that suggestion? No, I have not. The matter is too recent.

908. And that because of the state of things between you and Mr. Moriarty? Exactly, to a great extent.

909. And because of these disputes or quarrels between you and Mr. Moriarty, you have not made them? No, I have not made them. If there had been any minute written after that second minute of Mr.

W. W. Stephen, Esq. Mr. Farnell's, where he stated I should suggest some modification, I intended to have done it at once; but Mr. Moriarty went back with a further minute. I really think that these documents are worthy of attentive perusal; it would show exactly in what state matters are.

1 Nov., 1878.

910. I see in a minute of yours for the Minister for Lands, in speaking of Mr. Moriarty's action, you speak of his statements as being so opposed to facts, which it is strange if Mr. Moriarty has forgotten? Exactly. It is strange that he should have omitted the real facts in his statement to the Minister as he did, which is proved by these very papers, which I have shown from records to be based on facts. I have stated nothing there which I cannot prove.

911. And the papers within Mr. Moriarty's reach would have contradicted the view which he placed before the Minister? Yes, if he had chosen to refer to them. Perhaps it did not suit his purpose to refer to them. You see the position that placed me in. Mr. Driver approved of an arrangement on my recommendation formally, and of a second one. Mr. Moriarty tried by that other minute, submitted to the Minister direct without any reference to me, to obtain a reversal of mine. Mr. Driver declined to do it, and handed the paper back to me. Time passes over, and Mr. Moriarty tries the same process with Mr. Farnell, and was very nearly succeeding. And that placed me in a false position before the department. The whole of these minutes are noted throughout the whole of the Survey Department. The result is that they say, "Here is the Under Secretary's recommendation upset by Mr. Moriarty." I was just in time, however, to stop it.

912. In point of fact the decision on this one point passed through the whole department two or three times? Yes; and there is an extraordinary thing. You will see the minute is dated the 10th, whereas the Minister's decision is dated the 11th. But I am told it was a mistake, and I do not disbelieve it for one moment. Indeed I did not mean to refer to it.

913. But the statement of this one matter was notified to the Survey Office on two occasions, passed through the whole office, noted from one clerk to another, and all because of these opposing views of you and Mr. Moriarty? Yes. One day the Minister's decision "approved" is noted. The next day they have to notify the cancellation of it. Of course the effect must be bad to see a decision going through the department, and the next day another decision reversing it.

914. And of course there must be a great waste of time all through the department? Of course, a great waste of time.

915. And I think in that way would tend to bring one or the other, or some part of the management, into contempt? Yes, it must be. There was never anything of that sort occurred before Mr. Moriarty came into the office in his present position. We all worked harmoniously; there was no dispute.

916. But before he came into the office there were complaints of delay? I do not think there were any more than there are now.

917. 1874 was the height of the mining business? That was exceptional. When I was Under Secretary, and Mr. Blackman had charge of the Conditional Purchases, and Mr. Moriarty was away, the department went on swimmingly. Mr. Blackman took the work, and did what I told him.

918. Then may we understand you that things went on better and more work was done in Mr. Moriarty's absence than in his presence? Yes; there was no wrangling—all pulled together.

919. Did you not ever consider it your duty to represent this state of things, and ask for some action on the part of the political head of the department? I have done so. There are memoranda of mine appealing to the Minister to protect me, and give such distinct instructions as would confine Mr. Moriarty to his proper sphere of duty. I put it on the ground of the unseemly wrangling. In one memorandum he accused me of "official indecency" in having some document registered. It lay on his table for some time, and nothing was done. At last it was taken back.

920. And this state of things has existed since 1874, and during the tenure of office of several Ministers; and did you ever stand on the offensive and say it could not go on, and suggest any remedy? The day before Mr. Garrett went to Melbourne, the day we had that serious altercation when he threatened to kick me downstairs, and I think he only escaped suspension because of Mr. Garrett going away, and the Christmas holidays coming on—all these papers were submitted to Mr. Stuart and to Sir John Robertson, but he was never suspended. It all ended in nothing, and there was a little calm until the next discussion arose. Mr. Moriarty looks at matters in a personal light only, simply because I will not submit to his interfering with my functions. He gives out, as I know for a fact, that he only acts on the defensive.

921. Then the result of that, so far as the Minister was concerned, was, that Mr. Farnell had a minute on the 12th October reversing the decision obtained from him by Mr. Moriarty? Yes; then he partially reversed it again on Mr. Moriarty's representation. He told me Mr. Moriarty went there, and he had not all the papers before him, and he said it placed him in a wrong position too.

922. Well, then, these three decisions of the Minister were probably—one on the 10th, one on the 12th, and one on the 15th—all coursing through the Survey Office at the same time in different portions of the office? Of course it was so. I ascertained by accident that the decision had been promulgated through the Survey Department, and I called Mr. Farnell's attention to the fact.

923. In point of fact you believe these three decisions might have been going through different parts of the Survey Department at the same time? They might have been. It could hardly have been, because all the three minutes were written on the same paper, as it happens. That minute of the Deputy Surveyor General was written separate, and then the Minister's minute was sent to me by Moriarty. He did not tell me he had promulgated it in the Survey Department.

924. But he had? He had, because the Deputy Surveyor General could not have seen it unless he had done so.

925. In Mr. Moriarty's minute of the 14th October he says—"In so many instances the Under Secretary has failed to see the matter in any other than a personal light." Has he ever made any accusation of that kind before, that you thought more of your own personal position than you did of the public interest? That is the effect of what he says. In my memorandum, however, I showed that Mr. Moriarty accuses me of taking it in a personal light because I produced official records to show that he made misrepresentations on an official matter, and I had to bring the Minister papers to show that he had done so.

WEDNESDAY,

WEDNESDAY, 4 DECEMBER, 1878.

Present:—

MR. ABBOTT,

MR. RANKEN.

R. P. ABBOTT, ESQ., PRESIDENT, IN THE CHAIR.

W. W. Stephen, Esq., was called in and further examined:—

926. President.] You recollect that the Commission applied to the Lands Department for some returns showing the cases undisposed of on the 30th of June last, and the cases disposed of during the quarter ending the 30th of September;—what has been done towards getting them? I had inquiry made about them both in the Lands and Survey Departments, and I am informed that the information cannot be furnished in the shape in which it is required. A letter to that effect was to have been sent to you this morning. One or two of the other returns are ready. W. W. Stephen, Esq.
4 Dec., 1878.

927. Can you tell us why this return cannot be furnished? There is only one which cannot be furnished—that which asks for a statement showing the dates upon which papers were forwarded to the Survey Department and returned to Lands. The Survey Department cannot give the information from their records, and the record clerk in our department informs me that as soon as the papers are returned the pencil notations are erased.

928. Is it a fact that the notations showing when papers are forwarded from one part of the department to another are written in pencil? Yes; because the papers are constantly being transmitted from one branch to another. There would not be room for a permanent record of all the intermediate stages through which they passed.

929. Is there no record on the papers themselves, or elsewhere, showing the position of any set of papers at any particular time? Not on the papers themselves.

930. Or in any book? No; only the notation in pencil.

931. When papers are mislaid what means have you of tracing them? The record register will always show where a particular paper is at the time.

932. How is the record register kept? It is kept in the general record room.

933. Does that show from time to time where papers are? Yes; but not from the original transmission from our office to the Survey Office and their final return to the Lands. Papers may go to half-a-dozen or more different branches, but there is no record in ink on each occasion.

934. Papers may be for years in the Survey Department and there is nothing to show where they are during the whole time? Exactly.

935. You cannot tell when the papers are sent? We can only judge from the date of their receipt, and we know that within a day or two they are sent to the Survey Department.

936. The notations are rubbed out? If I had the record register here I could explain it to you much more clearly than by viva voce evidence.

[The Register of the Miscellaneous Branch No. 4, 1878, was sent for and produced.]

937. Does not that book show that a great deal of the information asked for could be supplied? No; this only shows the final action taken which is written in ink. If a paper is sent out of the department the notation is in ink.

938. Excepting pencil memoranda, you have nothing to show your dealing with papers as between your department and the Survey Office? No.

939. If a paper were sent to the Survey Office and remained there for months, or years, you would have nothing but the pencil notation to start you in the search? No, not until it came back.

940. Does not the Surveyor General's register show when the papers leave that office? They keep their record on the same system as ours.

941. If papers are lost? The pencil notation shows the last stage.

942. That is, if it lasts long enough? Yes.

943. Have you seen the register they keep in the Survey Department? No, I have not. Papers have to go through so many stages that it is impossible to keep a register big enough to show each stage.

944. In so large a department, having so much correspondence, is there not a strong reason why you should have some check to enable you to fix responsibility without trusting to pencil marks merely? However many letters there are, if a person will give us the date of a letter and who it is from, we can tell from this book where it stands, and whether it has been disposed of up to the present time.

945. Are these pencil marks rubbed out periodically, or as the papers are returned? When the paper comes back into the record office from the Survey Office or one of the branches, the pencil notation is rubbed out, and if it is sent to any one else, it is entered to the officer to whom it is sent.

946. Mr. Ranken.] The final entry is not dated? No, the papers will always show what is done.

947. President.] Suppose the clerk receiving the papers back were to omit to rub out the notation, how then would the responsibility for the papers be fixed? I think that is hardly ever likely to happen. It is the duty of the clerk to mark the paper as put away. If a wrong notation were allowed to remain in the book the fact would speak for itself. If a paper were marked, say to Mr. Lewis, and it were found not to be with him, then the neglect would be on the part of the record clerk. A mistake of that sort very rarely happens—not once in six months.

948. Where there are a great many people and much confusion, the clerk to whom the papers are returned may neglect to rub out the pencil entry, and in such a case as that would not the person to whom they were previously marked be still held responsible, in case the papers disappeared. Would not the entry be prima facie evidence against him? Yes.

949. Nothing would save him from blame, no matter how innocent he might be? No.

950. Do you think that is a desirable state of things in a department such as the Lands? From my experience I do not think a mistake of that sort happens once in 5,000 cases. We cannot guard against mistakes absolutely.

951. Is it not a fact that papers have frequently been lost? Papers have frequently been mislaid.

952. Would not that account for the difficulty in tracing them? The truth is that the Minister frequently sends for papers in a hurry, and there is no time to note them. It is expected that the papers will be sent back the same day or the next; and in cases of that sort mistakes may occur.

953.

W. W.
Stephen, Esq.
4 Dec., 1878.

953. Cases might arise under this system where it would be impossible to trace the papers or account for the loss of them in such a way as to make any one properly responsible? If so, it would be through carelessness on the part of the clerks entrusted with the duty of dealing with them.

954. Where the pencil marks are rubbed out, and there has been a delay in dealing with the papers, it is impossible to say who is in fault? No.

955. The Survey Department may blame the Lands, and the Lands the Survey, and there is no means of determining which is in fault? Yes; unless we take each other's registers as correct.

956. But if the pencil marks are rubbed out there is no means of fixing the blame upon the right person? No.

957. As in the case of Macarthur, which was referred to the other day? We can tell there to a certain extent from the dates of the minutes upon the papers.

958. If the papers are lost? As a general rule the papers bear out the facts stated in the registers.

959. Those papers were several years in the Survey Department? Yes.

960. And had you anything to show where they were all that time? Nothing, except the pencil memorandum which would last until they were returned.

961. As soon as the papers were returned from the Survey Office the pencil marks would be rubbed out. If then the question of blame arose from the delay you could not tell who was in fault? Excepting where the dates on the papers indicated it. The Survey Office memos. are dated, and they would show on the face of them that the papers could not have come back.

962. Would it not have been better to have given us all the information which could have been collected from the registers than to say that no information could be given? We might have given it in part.

963. Do you think that a great proportion of cases sent from your department to the Survey Department after the 30th of June were still there when we wrote? You asked for a return of papers from the Survey Department to the Lands Department since the 30th of June. The return of the papers would show that the action to be taken upon them was complete, and therefore both pencil notations would be rubbed out.

964. And there would be no record at all? After they are returned from the Survey Department they come through me to the Minister for decision, and to the Executive Council perhaps. They would be marked to the Executive Council for approval. These registers show the present state of each case, and nothing more. You could not have a book big enough to show each intermediate stage of action from the receipt of the paper until it was finally disposed of.

965. Could not a sufficient number of books be kept to enable that to be done? The register will show where the papers are at the time they are inquired for. In some cases they may go through ten different stages before they are finally completed, and in the Conditional Purchase Branch they may go from thirty to forty.

966. It is hopeless, then, our thinking of getting the information we sought to obtain from this return we asked for? It might be possible to compile a return showing some information on the subject, but it would be rather difficult to cull it from the registers.

967. Will you inquire if that information can be given, or any portion of it? Yes.

968. Has anything been done towards getting the other returns we asked for? Yes.

969. Is there any probability of our being able to get them soon? Yes.

970. Do you know anything about the conditional purchase and improvement returns? There are two returns ready. I should have sent them before, but I wanted to complete them.

971. The improvement purchase return as well? We are not modifying that return, but preparing it in full.

972. All these returns are being prepared? As far as possible.

973. And we may hope to have them soon? Yes.

974. We have asked the Auditor General for some information, and we do not know when or how we are to get it. Would it be better to correspond with the Auditor General direct, or through your department? It would, perhaps, be better to communicate through me.

975. In one of your answers (913) you direct attention to the fact that Mr. Moriarty's minute was dated the 10th of October, 1878, and the Minister's decision was dated the 11th October, 1878. What is there extraordinary in that? The Minister's decision was dated the 11th October, and Mr. Rutter's minute promulgating that was dated the 10th October, the day before. It is a mistake in the dates, that is all.

976. There is nothing in your answer about Mr. Rutter? No; Mr. Rutter is one of the draftsmen who acts for the Deputy Surveyor General. I think it was simply a clerical error.

977. Then you referred to Mr. Rutter's minute, not to Mr. Moriarty's minute? I meant the Survey Office minute which purported to promulgate the Minister's decision, dated the day afterwards. It was explained by Mr. Fitzgerald as a mistake in dates.

978. When did the fact of this decision having been promulgated in the Survey Office first come to your knowledge, and how? I heard of it. Here is Mr. Moriarty's minute:—"I would further ask before definitely resorting again to a routine." I inferred from that that instructions had been given to go against the routine resorted to by myself. I inquired, and found from Mr. Rutter that that was the case. On the 17th of October I understood that instructions had actually been issued for altering the routine by or for the Chief Commissioner of Conditional Sales.

979. Mr. Moriarty's action was on the 10th. How did the decision of the 11th come to your knowledge;—you dealt with it on the 12th? Mr. Moriarty obtained the decision from the Minister and sent it to me, and I then wrote this minute.

980. But before Mr. Moriarty sent this minute to you he sent it to the Survey Office? It was that that I complained of. He sent me the decision without telling me that it had been promulgated through the Survey Office. It was promulgated simultaneously, if not before.

981. Referring to a minute of yours, dated the 1st of June, 1877, when Mr. Driver was in office, you say that nothing but utter confusion must be the result of allowing one portion of the department to reverse the decisions of another. Does this state of things, existing when you were last examined here, bear out what you foretold in that minute? Do you mean the state of things I complain of?

982. The state of things spoken of by you as likely to be brought about if the plan suggested by Mr. Moriarty to Mr. Driver were allowed to be carried out? Yes.

983. The course of events has proved that you were right in your opinion with reference to that? Yes. What I meant by utter confusion was this:—I referred to a particular case where, on my recommendation, an

an auction sale had been allowed to take place. A month or two afterwards Mr. Moriarty obtained a decision that the conditional purchase should stand. I was not made aware of the decision at the time. There are two different branches of the department, having two different registers, one showing the auction sale as valid, and the other the conditional purchase as valid.

W. W.
Stephen, Esq.
4 Dec. 1878.

984. Both decisions, having reference to the same land? Yes; and that is what I meant by "utter confusion."

985. It was then that you suggested that in cases which clashed the papers should be first sent to you for examination? Yes.

986. Mr. Driver approved of that plan? Yes.

987. And ordered that it should be carried out? Yes.

988. Was that the arrangement with reference to which Mr. Moriarty wrote a minute on the 10th of October, and which Mr. Farnell reversed? Yes; Mr. Moriarty wanted to reverse that practice.

989. Mr. Farnell did give a decision on the 11th, reversing it? Yes.

990. In another minute of yours, dated 16th October, dealing with this case, speaking of Mr. Moriarty, you say, "He leaves it, purposely perhaps, a matter of doubt whether he intends his offensive allusion to apply to me personally, or to any other officers of the department, or to people outside of it." To what do you refer there? I referred to a remark in which Mr. Moriarty said that the door was left open for abuse and even jobbery, and also to some other remarks.

991. To remarks contained in these papers? Yes; and perhaps to others which I may have had running in my mind, where he said that Ministers ought to have the most experienced advice, implying as much as that I knew nothing about the matter. The remark to which I refer was this:—"These cases, involving general conflicting interests, are precisely those in which the Minister should have the fullest information, and the most experienced advice."

992. You took that as intended to imply that Mr. Moriarty had the information, and you had not? I took it as very uncomplimentary.

993. You seem to have no doubt that those allusions of his are directed to you. Do you recollect that there was anything else at the time which would lead others to suppose that Mr. Moriarty referred to any other officer, or to any of the public outside the department? I cannot say.

994. This was written in October? No doubt I wrote under a sense of provocation, and under the feeling that all through those papers there was a current of offensiveness. There is some other paper, in which he refers to some action I took in Mr. Driver's time about a lot of deposits being refunded to dummy selectors, implying that I had recommended wrong action.

995. Have we any such minute as that? You will find it among the papers I have sent in.

996. In another part of that minute you say that "matters have arrived at a climax which justifies me in distinctly declining in future to take any further notice of Mr. Moriarty's minutes." Have you acted on that decision of yours in dealing with Mr. Moriarty since that time? I do not think there has been a single minute between us since that was written. Mr. Farnell said that he would entertain no further correspondence upon the subject.

997. That expression was only intended to refer to matters between you and him on that subject? Yes; I wanted to obtain a final decision from the Minister.

998. But you only referred to this difference between you and Mr. Moriarty? When I wrote that I only referred to that particular matter.

999. You also quote a minute written by Mr. Farnell in February, 1874, in which he says that he would not allow Mr. Moriarty to adopt this style of language and make reflections he was in the habit of doing with respect to the head of the department; and you invite attention to his conduct towards you, saying that the instructions of the Minister were systematically disregarded and set at naught? That minute is given in full in the papers handed in and marked 1874.

1000. Has that mode of procedure on the part of Mr. Moriarty been continued since the writing of that minute in the year 1874? Yes; at intervals, more especially in the time of Mr. Driver.

1001. More than since Mr. Farnell has been in office? More during the first three months of Mr. Driver's tenure of office. It was then that I had reason to complain more particularly of Mr. Moriarty taking cases to Mr. Driver behind my back.

1002. When you say in your minute that reference to the Commission "might lead to the investigation of certain other questions, minutes," &c., not yet decided between the Chief Commissioner and myself, and other matters which may possibly prove of more importance, as regards the good government and administration of the department, than his daring insinuations about corrupt influences and even jobbery;—can you say what are the questions and matters you refer to? I referred to one or two of those cases which have since been submitted to the Commission—which Mr. Farnell said that he would look at and deal with, but which he did not decide. The remaining part was provoked by what Mr. Moriarty stated in his minute about leaving open the door to jobbery and corruption.

1003. These matters which you consider of importance for the consideration of the Commission would be matters of business connected with the department? I referred to the general effect of these squabbles upon the department; to the action of Mr. Moriarty in constantly questioning my authority and submitting cases to the Minister, in which he attempted to upset my recommendations and the decisions upon them; to the bad effect of our relative positions, as illustrated by these papers.

1004. Mr. Moriarty in that minute of the 20th June, 1877, reminds the Minister of a proposed refund of £1,500, the deposit on twenty-three dummy selections, which he says was authorized at the Under Secretary's instance without reference to the papers, and to some other cases of the same kind which he says he had to take the responsibility of submitting for reconsideration, and that there were others in which he had hesitated to take that course and which he had allowed to pass, having no reason for assuming that the considerations seeming to point to a different result had not been duly weighed. Can you explain anything about the proposed refund of £1,500? I have some slight recollection of the case. He called Mr. Driver's attention to it. I sent to Mr. Moriarty recently to ask him to let me see the papers, and Mr. Blackman, who asked for them, told me that Mr. Moriarty said he would let me have them, but as he has never sent them to me I cannot say anything more about it. I have not had an opportunity of refreshing my memory on the subject.

1005. You do not recollect the names of the twenty-three selectors? No; I recollect that Mr. C. B. Fisher had something to do with the case in one way or another.

1006. Who is Mr. Fisher? He is a racing man in Victoria, brother of Mr. Hurtle Fisher.

- W. W. Stephen, Esq. 1007. He is a squatter? Yes.
1008. Can you recollect how he was interested in the case? I cannot.
1009. Did he seek the refund? I cannot recollect. I only remember that he had something to do with the auction purchase. I recollect that he was interested some way or other in the matter, and that his agents were Messrs. Hoskins and Blomfield. I recollect Mr. Blomfield speaking to me about it.
1010. You cannot say whether Mr. Fisher sought the refund? I cannot say that. The selectors were the persons to whom the refund was to go. Mr. Moriarty speaks of them as dummy selectors.
1011. Do you know anything of the other cases to which Mr. Moriarty refers? I do not know what he refers to, I am sure. I recollect that case because he spoke to Mr. Driver specially about it. I was in the room at the time; and I saw the decision of Mr. Driver, which was that the purchase should be forfeited instead of cancelled; otherwise I should have forgotten all about it.
1012. Could we obtain those papers? Yes; I could get them by asking for them; but as to the other cases to which Mr. Moriarty refers I cannot tell what they are without referring to him. If you wrote to me for them, I could ask Mr. Moriarty for them.
1013. At the end of this minute Mr. Moriarty writes: "I should be wanting in self respect did I not further protest against the unseemly course which the Under Secretary persists in taking of circulating in his department matters relating to the business of this branch, and of keeping me to the last in ignorance of his having done so." Can you explain what Mr. Moriarty refers to? The matter he refers to was one affecting the whole administration of the department. It had no reference to him or myself individually, but to the mode of action in the department generally; and, following the usual practice, I had the paper marked Ministerial. Mr. Moriarty talks about me having this registered—about the indecency of it.
1014. Unseemly is the word? Unseemly; but he does not refer to matters in which he was reprimanded, suspended, and called upon to apologize to me, and in which I did not have the documents registered as official documents. I did not have them registered for reasons which he does not seem to appreciate.
1015. You say Mr. Moriarty was suspended? Yes, but I did not have that registered; I purposely refrained from having it registered, and I think before he remarks about registering papers connected with the departmental business he ought to have recollected that.
1016. Did Mr. Moriarty expect you to inform him of everything you did in connection with the department whether he was specially interested or no? That was what it amounted to.
1017. Did he ever say as much to you? No; I think his own action is quite contrary to the position he takes up, for he has promulgated matters through the Survey Department without letting me know.
1018. Does it not seem almost an absurdity that he should expect you, the head of his department, to give him information of every step you take in the management of the office? I think so.
1019. Would not every other officer at the head of every other branch have the same right? Quite so; his remark is quite uncalled for.
1020. In one of your minutes, written in October, you accuse Mr. Moriarty of causing waste of time by his mode of action? Yes.
1021. Does that refer simply to the waste of his own time or of the time of other officers of the department? I meant the waste of his own time in writing these minutes, and the waste of my time in having to reply to them. Days of official time must have been wasted.
1022. Mr. Moriarty speaks of some memo. having been in your possession for fifteen months? It may be that one which you will find among the papers marked 1877.
1023. This appears to be unregistered. He would not ask you for that would he? I think so.
1024. What is that? A minute of the Chief Commissioner of Conditional Sales, requesting Mr. Driver to transfer to his control the Pre-emptive and Auction Lease Branch.
1025. He says: "I would first beg of the Minister to be pleased to direct that my memoranda on this subject, which the Under Secretary has had in his possession for fifteen months, be attached to the other papers?" That minute was handed to me by Mr. Driver to do as I liked with it.
1026. Was that in your possession all the time? It was in Mr. Driver's box for three or four months, and when returned to me was kept by me as not having any connection with any other paper. It was an appeal or protest against action I recommended.
1027. It began and ended with itself? Yes.
1028. There was no necessity that it should be put with other papers;—there was no reason during these fifteen months why it should be produced to anybody? No; Mr. Driver handed it back to me when he went out of office.

MONDAY, 9 DECEMBER, 1878.

Present:—

MR. ABBOTT, | MR. RANKEN.

R. P. ABBOTT, Esq., PRESIDENT, IN THE CHAIR.

W. W. Stephen, Esq., was called in and further examined:—

- W. W. Stephen, Esq. 1029. President. Have you seen this return (marked A) furnished by your department on the 6th instant? Yes.
1030. Was that sent in as an answer to the request contained in the letter from the Commissioners on the 24th October? Yes.
- 9 Dec., 1878. 1031. Is that all the information we are likely to get on the points referred to? Your letter asked for a return of the cases undisposed of on the 30th of September. Some time elapsed before the return was put in hand in the different branches, and when Mr. Thomson resigned things were left in abeyance. There is nothing to show that there were any cases undisposed of on the 30th September. All the cases were acted upon. There were no such arrears as your letter supposed in those branches.
1032. Do these six branches represent all the department? Yes, excepting the Conditional Sales Branch.
1033. Mr. Ranken. In which branch are the improvement purchases dealt with? In Mr. Lindsay Thompson's.

1034.

W. W.
Stephen, Esq.
9 Dec., 1878.

1034. President.] The work is kept up in all these departments? Our work is all kept up.
1035. That return shows it? I should not call it kept up to date. These are the replies furnished to me by the heads of the different branches.
1036. Do not the books in each branch show how the cases stand, or have been disposed of on any particular day? No; there are many different stages; the papers going backwards and forwards constantly.
1037. If an improvement purchase application goes to Mr. Thompson on a particular date, he takes what action may be necessary upon it, and then sends it on; would he not have a record to show what he had done in the matter? There is nothing to show the cases which were undisposed of on the 30th September. If I were requested to state what cases were undisposed of to-day, I could immediately go and get the information.
1038. According to that return there were no arrears on the 30th of September? The return is applicable to the date on which that letter was written, the 6th December. The papers go through so many stages that if all were noted the papers would be covered with notations.
1039. By disposed of do you mean that the papers have been sent on to the Survey Department? No; cases in which a decision has been given and acted upon. I have received a minute from Mr. Stack, explaining that his notations only referred to the Charting Branch of the Survey Department. He said he was a little flurried when he saw the Commissioners on Friday. His register does not deal with cases in the Roads or Reserve Branch. He gave me an explanatory memorandum, which he wanted me to send up.
1040. There are several other branches of the Survey Department dealing directly with the Lands Department? Yes.
1041. Do you know whether they also keep registers as the Charting Branch does? I do not know, but I think they do.
1042. Mr. Ranken.] Is Mr. Stack engaged in making out the return that you asked for? He is engaged in preparing some return you asked for.
1043. President.] Are you aware that Mr. Stack said that he would have no difficulty in preparing the return we asked for, as far as his own branch was concerned? The memorandum which he handed to me this morning was to the effect that he could not give it; that he must have misled you or that you must have misunderstood him. That is what I understood. I do not know anything of his book, and I never saw it.
1044. What Mr. Stack said he could give from his book was a return showing the date upon which each case was received from the Lands Office, and the date when it was returned. He was quite clear upon that? I do not know as to that.
1045. Do you not think, in view of the safety of the papers, that it would be a good thing if somebody had to preserve a record of them at the various stages? I think it would.
1046. I suppose you will send us Mr. Stack's memorandum? Yes.
1047. We can get no more of the information for which we asked than is shown in this return A? Having received your letter to day, we shall for the future be able to tell the dates of transmission. Mr. Stack's book, as I understand it, shows the register number, and the dates when he received the papers and sent them back to the Lands Department.
1048. Is not Mr. Stack's book a safeguard to the Survey Office? Yes; I should like to state that all these matters are matters of detail which I cannot be expected to know. The clerks in the different branches or at the heads of branches have to attend to them. They do not come within the range of my personal duties at all.
1049. As between this Commission and the Department when we ask for a return, of whom can we ask but you? Quite so; but you are asking me as to the system of notation.
1050. As involving the question of responsibility for the safety of papers, do you not think the system of the office ought to be known to the Under Secretary? I know that if a paper be asked for, we can, in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred, tell where it is; but as to the dates of transmission of papers to the Survey Office and return, our system has not been so complete as to show. It shows only when the cases have been disposed of.
1051. As a matter of fact, have not papers in your department frequently been lost? I would not say frequently. I think it is wonderful that so many papers are forthcoming when asked for, considering the enormous number of papers which pass through the office every year, and the way in which the different branches are scattered about.
1052. Mr. Ranken.] On the 23rd of October we applied for three sets of returns—the first with respect to conditional purchases from the 1st of January to the 30th June; the second with respect to the fulfilment of the conditions of residence; and the third, with regard to improvement purchases. With respect to the first two we had a conversation with Mr. Moriarty, in which we agreed to take the returns in a condensed form—that is, instead of the whole six months we arranged to take the first land office day in each month. These returns have not been furnished? I have not received them from Mr. Moriarty.
1053. As to the improvement purchase return? I believe they are all but ready; but it takes a wonderful lot of searching to get the particulars in detail from all the registers.
1054. Is there not a separate register for each land office? For the conditional purchases.
1055. Not for the improvement purchases? No; we take them in categorical order.
1056. Without reference to locality? Yes.
1057. We are right in applying to you as the permanent head of the department for that information? Yes; I refer the application to the Chief Commissioner of Conditional Sales, who submits the returns to me as soon as they are ready. I have requested that all communications from the Commission be dealt with as expeditiously as possible; and I can ask that the preparation of the return be expedited.
1058. President.] With reference to Macarthur's improvement purchase case, you said, I think, that you could supply a précis which would show all the facts? Yes.
1059. Many of the letters in that case appear to be in the nature of formal applications? Yes.
1060. In your minute submitting the case to the Minister you say, "I now submit this case as another instance, in addition to others recently submitted, to show the real causes of complaint made against the Lands Department";—what were the other cases referred to—have you sent them to us? The cases referred to are described in the appendices to my previous examination—cases in which Landale Brothers and a Mr. Godwin were interested, and which I had previously submitted to the Minister.
1061. With reference to the minute of 24th January, 1874, written by Mr. Farnell, was that minute written whilst you were absent in Melbourne, or on your return? It was written upon my return from Mulgoa, where I had been for a few days.
1062. Not at Melbourne? No, I was at Melbourne two years ago; but when this minute was written I had been three days at Mulgoa.

W. W. Stephen, Esq. 1063. It was during that short absence that Mr. Moriarty took the course of signing documents without using your name? Yes.

9 Dec., 1878. 1064. That minute contains these words: "The Colonial Secretary has personally called my attention to the fact that certain documents bearing the initials and signature of the Chief Clerk that should have borne the initials and signature of the Under Secretary"; and then Mr. Farnell goes on to direct that in your absence all correspondence ordinarily signed by you should be signed by the next officer in official rank for you, and so on. Has that been the practice which has always prevailed? It is the practice universally recognised in all the Ministerial Departments.

1065. In every department of the Government? It is the understood rule of the Service.

1066. Can you now say, or did you understand at the time, what Mr. Moriarty's reason was for departing from that obviously proper course? I cannot say. I can only conjecture. I recollect distinctly a remark he once made upon the subject, but I do not know whether you wish me to give it in evidence.

1067. I think so? When a dispute arose about it, Mr. Moriarty said, "I never signed for anybody in my life, and I never will if I can help it." I have a distinct recollection of his saying that.

1068. In his minute he says: "In the absence of the Under Secretary, and acting on my own responsibility, I did not think it would be regular or proper to assume to act on the responsibility of the Under Secretary by signing as for him?" I never could understand that part of his minute. It seemed to me that he was taking more responsibility by signing for himself, and against what he must have known to be the rule of the Service.

1069. It was hardly reconcilable with the verbal statement which he made to you? No.

1070. In this minute Mr. Moriarty proceeds to say: "Personally I should very much prefer not signing at all, and have only done so with the object of avoiding injurious delays, the more undesirable in the Under Secretary's absence than even when he is present—the delays in the signature of correspondence are so unparalleled and prejudicial to the Public Service." Was it not clearly his duty in your absence to deal with and sign these papers? Yes. When I am away a short time the general rule is that all important letters should wait until I return, but letters which ought to be sent away at once ought to be taken to him and he should sign them "for the Under Secretary." As a matter of fact I never complained of that at all. I did not know it. It was Mr. Farnell who drew my attention to it, the Colonial Secretary having drawn his attention to it.

1071. Up to that time was there any reason for Mr. Moriarty giving these strong opinions in reference to you,—anything personal between you, or anything which in the performance of his duty required it? Nothing.

1072. How long before that was it that he joined the Public Service? I think it was only about two or three months. He rejoined the department as chief clerk in November, 1873, and this statement was made in January, 1874.

1073. Referring to these remarks about the unparalleled delays in the signature of correspondence, had there ever been any question between you on that point before? No.

1074. Mr. Moriarty had not said anything about it previously? Nothing.

1075. Nor had you spoken of it? No.

1076. This minute written by him, and his action in signing these documents, was the commencement of the feeling which has existed between you since? The very commencement.

1077. In your minute on this same subject, written on the 2nd of February following, you refer to something you had told him three months before? Upon the matter being brought under my notice, I said that as this particular duty appeared irksome to him I would sign everything myself if possible, but that no letters ought ever to leave the office which were not either signed by me as Under Secretary, or "for the Under Secretary."

1078. On what occasion did you tell him that? I have a distinct recollection that within a fortnight or ten days of Mr. Moriarty joining the office, the subject arose between Mr. Blackman and myself. I think he did sign two or three letters "A. O. Moriarty," and I spoke to Mr. Blackman about it. He was rather annoyed at that, and said "If you have got anything of that sort to say I wish you would say it to me and not to Mr. Blackman." I am speaking from memory.

1079. Did you at that time tell him you would sign as much as possible? Yes; I said "If you do not like signing for me I will try and sign everything myself; but everything that goes out of the office ought to be either signed by me or by you for the Under Secretary."

1080. You said that out of consideration to his feelings? It really was that. I did everything on his joining the office to smooth over little difficulties which I knew that he would feel.

1081. Feel because of his having been there before in a superior position? Yes; that was really my motive in the matter.

1082. In your minute, dealing with that of Mr. Moriarty's, you say that you are responsible only to the Minister with reference to these charges? Yes.

1083. Why then did you think it necessary to point out for Mr. Moriarty's information that the business had increased, and refer to the fact of your not having a stamp for signature as he had? I do not think there was any occasion for me to do it, but I thought at the time that I should like to state the matter fully.

1084. Would it not have been better if you had been more decided in putting things on their proper footing at the commencement? It may have been a mistake on my part, but it arose from the fact that I did not wish to make Mr. Moriarty feel the altered position in which he came back.

1085. You say:—"I would however wish, in case Mr. Moriarty has forgotten it, to observe that the number of letters now received as well as written in this department is infinitely and in an unprecedented degree in excess of what they ever were in the time of either of my predecessors; and that the work in every branch of the office has increased in proportion. Mr. Moriarty had also his signature stamped, which I have not as yet, and which certainly saved more than one half of the time taken up in signing by hand as I have to do." Was Mr. Moriarty ever Under Secretary? Yes, before me.

1086. Mr. Ranken.] I thought his position was Chief Commissioner of Crown Lands? He was Chief Commissioner, and when the vacancy occurred in the office of Under Secretary by the resignation of Mr. Fitzpatrick he was appointed Under Secretary, with the idea that he could do the other duties as well. It was from that office of Under Secretary that he was removed, and I succeeded him.

1087. You succeeded him? Yes; I was in the place which he once occupied, and when he came back and found me as Under Secretary I feared that he would feel the difference.

1088. Your action was out of consideration to him? Yes; I did every thing I could to prevent him from feeling the altered position between us.

1089. President.] I have been under the impression that Mr. Moriarty was only your senior in some other branch of the department? No; when Mr. Fitzpatrick resigned, Mr. Moriarty succeeded to the position of Under Secretary.

1090. And he was Under Secretary when he was removed from the Government service? Yes; and I succeeded him.

1091. Did you press for any further action in this matter between you and Mr. Moriarty? No; I obtained Mr. Farnell's decision, which is dated February, 1874. I did not have the paper registered as an official document, but I fortunately kept it.

1092. You did not register the papers because you wished to spare Mr. Moriarty? Yes.

1093. You allude to the style and language in which the minutes are written by Mr. Moriarty, and you regret that you are obliged to allude to them; and you further say in your minute that they are such as no other head of a department would be expected to submit to, and that you can only conclude that Mr. Moriarty considers that your former official relations with each other entitled him to make an exception in your case; that it was one of the unpleasant results which you anticipated from his appointment to his then present position in the department, notwithstanding the earnest endeavours you had made to avoid it. Is that passage in your minute explained by what you have just said about your relative positions? Yes.

1094. Do you recollect whether there was anything prompting this latter part—"one of the unpleasant results which I anticipated from his appointment to his present position in this department"? I meant that I did my best to avoid, not his appointment, but the unpleasant results which I thought would arise from it.

1095. Beyond this minute by Mr. Farnell, of the 12th of February, 1874, in which he repeats what he said in his first minute upon the subject, nothing was done? No, the matter dropped for a time.

1096. There was an end to these complaints as far as you were concerned? Yes.

1097. Mr. Farnell said:—"I have to observe that it is not Mr. Moriarty's province to take the Under Secretary to task for any delays which may have appeared to him avoidable, and of the reason of which he may not be aware; neither can I permit the chief clerk to address the official head of the department in the tone or language in which portions of his memoranda above referred to are written, and to which the Under Secretary has justly and naturally taken such strong objection." When Mr. Farnell wrote that Mr. Moriarty was chief clerk? Yes.

1098. And in a position in which he would be much less likely to act in this way than in the position which he now holds? Yes.

1099. Were you consulted about the re-appointment of Mr. Moriarty to the Government service? I cannot say that I was. I had two or three conversations with Mr. Farnell about it, and I was pressed by Mr. Moriarty's friends outside the office not to object.

1100. And you did not object? I did not.

1101. Mr. Ranken.] That was previous to November, 1873? Yes, before he rejoined the service. Mr. Farnell two or three times expressed to me his objections to appointing Mr. Moriarty, and he told me that he did not think that he should appoint him; but he did eventually consent to do it. Some of Mr. Moriarty's friends outside the office told me that they would be glad to see him back in the department again, and they said they thought he would be a help to me. Sir George Innes notably was one who asked me not to oppose Mr. Moriarty's re-appointment.

1102. The endeavours of which you speak to avoid unpleasantness were simply prompted by your desire that he should not feel his position in the office irksome? Yes.

1103. This, you say, was the first commencement in writing of this unpleasantness between you and Mr. Moriarty? The first writing on the subject.

1104. Since that date has Mr. Moriarty's demeanour in matters of that kind altered towards you? No; it altered just for a time. But another dispute occurred a short time afterwards, and there were other disputes and memoranda which I have not brought forward.

1105. In some of these papers I have seen the statement that hundreds of memoranda had passed between you? There were a great many, I know. I have a drawer full of the memoranda which I referred to as objectionable and unwarrantable to me as the head of the department.

1106. When was it that the first move was made towards putting Mr. Moriarty in his present position? I think it was about the time Mr. Garrett went to Melbourne—about Christmas, 1876. After conversation between Mr. Garrett and myself, it was arranged that I should draw up a minute for approval. I think he actually performed the duties a few months before his formal appointment, but, to the best of my memory, it was in 1876 that the formal approval was given. I see that my minute, upon which the arrangement was based, was dated 20 December, 1876, and this date in the Blue Book of August, 1875, must be a misprint.

1107. Mr. Ranken.] Can he have performed the duties since August, 1875, a period of fifteen months? No; that could not have been. The date given in the Blue Book must be an error.

1108. President.] You made no objection to his appointment as chief clerk? No.

1109. And from the date of that appointment, or soon afterwards, to the time when he was appointed Chief Commissioner of Conditional Sales, there were a great many occasions when you were brought into collision with him—an unpleasantness arose between you? Yes; both before and since.

1110. But notwithstanding that, you were a consenting party to his being made Chief Commissioner? I cannot say I was a consenting party. I had not the opportunity of refusing; and if I had opposed it, it would not have been any use. I did not volunteer any opposition to his appointment.

1111. You did not put forward the probability that difficulties would arise from the course of conduct which Mr. Moriarty had pursued towards you previously? No. I had had some doubts; but from one or two conversations I had with him and from what he said his course of conduct would be, those doubts were overcome.

1112. That is to say he made you understand that if he got the superior position there would be less danger of collision? No; I am speaking of the time when he was appointed chief clerk.

1113. As to his appointment as Chief Commissioner? With regard to that I was a consenting party.

1114. Notwithstanding his conduct to which you so much objected? Yes; I thought that the separation

W. W. Stephen, Esq. of duties, and the giving of Mr. Moriarty a higher office than chief clerk would satisfy him, and that he would then keep clear of any disagreement or opposition to my authority in the department.
 9 Dec., 1878. 1115. But you knew at the time that the position he was getting would almost certainly lead to collision between you in regard to the duties you each had to perform? I did not anticipate that there would be such a large number of cases in which our relative duties would be brought into conflict. The idea did occur to me, but I did not think that there would be so many cases in which he could or would have the opportunity of seeking to reverse what I had done.

1116. You did not call attention to his previous conduct whilst chief clerk towards you? No; I did not. I thought that when he got rid of the feeling of immediate subordination to me he would leave me alone.

1117. But from that day until this the change which you looked for has not come? No.

1118. In fact things have got worse? Worse if anything, I think.

1119. There have been stronger cases and greater reasons for your believing that Mr. Moriarty is not in the place he ought to hold with regard to yourself? I do not quite understand you.

1120. You have stronger reasons now for believing that Mr. Moriarty does not hold the position he ought to hold with regard to yourself? Yes.

1121. This minute marked A, attached to the papers of 1876, was written by Mr. Moriarty? That was when Mr. Stuart was in office.

1122. These papers involve a charge which ended in a Cabinet minute I think? Yes.

1123. This memorandum of suggestions by Mr. Moriarty was written after his appointment as Chief Commissioner or before it? Before.

1124. Under what circumstances was that written? It was written on an unofficial memo. which is not here, and when I was on tolerably good terms with Mr. Moriarty, I asked him to make some suggestions in connection with the proposed changes, I think at the instance of Mr. Garrett, and this is the memorandum of suggestions marked A which I received from him early in November, 1876. The minute marked B is the minute which I wrote with regard to these suggestions.

1125. I desire to ascertain the origin of these suggestions marked A? They were written in reply to a reference I made to him.

1126. That reference is not with the papers? No.

1127. You asked him for suggestions? Yes; with a view to a mutual agreement on the subject.

1128. In introducing the subject of this minute, Mr. Moriarty states, that with a view of relieving the Under Secretary of a portion of the labour and responsibility pressing upon him under present arrangements, and of simplifying and facilitating the despatch of business? Yes.

1129. He goes on to suggest that, "the administration of the Department of Lands, in subordination to the responsible Minister, be divided, and certain matters committed wholly to another officer, who should in connection therewith occupy the same position as the Under Secretary in relation to the Minister and the departments and officers concerned, and be the recognized medium of communication with the public." Was it understood at that time when Mr. Moriarty made that suggestion, that he was to be the officer appointed? It is evident that he regarded himself as the officer who was to be appointed.

1130. Had anything been said about it? I think something must have been said. He wrote that minute under the full knowledge and impression that he was to be the officer. There may be something further on in the minute which shows what his impressions were.

1131. Did you fall in with that suggestion, that he should occupy the same position with regard to the department and its officers as the Under Secretary? Not entirely. There is a memo. of mine showing the points on which I differed from him.

1132. His first proposition was that he was to occupy the same position as yourself with regard to the business taken over. You did not object to that? No; not as regards the details of the business, and communicating the decisions of the Minister to the public.

1133. Did you ask Mr. Moriarty for any suggestion about what should remain with you. He says here, "The Ministerial, Miscellaneous, Record, Auction, and Deeds Branches remaining as at present, under the personal control of the Under Secretary." Was it not with reference to the transfer of the Conditional Branch only that you asked for suggestions? Yes.

1134. Not with reference to what you should keep? No; but as a matter of fact that would leave all the other branches as named by him.

1135. His third suggestion was that the separation should embrace the Conditional Sale and Lease Branches, and all business connected with them. What part of this work was then being performed by Mr. Moriarty, as chief clerk? As chief clerk, his duties then were to supervise generally all the work before it came to me.

1136. Does he not say in some of his minutes that he actually at that time, as chief clerk, had charge of the Conditional Purchase Branch? He had charge of it; but not more particularly than any other. Each head of the branch used to submit the papers to me through him; some he could deal with himself, and others he would submit to me.

1137. His third suggestion is in these terms, "The Under Secretary, while abstaining from active interference with the business or staff of the separated branches, should, as at present, be recognized as the official head of the whole department, ranking next in it to the Minister"? Yes.

1138. "And that in the event of his absence or death, his duties should, as of course, and pending the appointment of a successor, devolve upon the officer above indicated, as next in seniority"? Yes.

1139. Did not that strike you as very like arranging the whole department and your position in it? It was a memo. of suggestions, and that particular suggestion I need not say was not adopted.

1140. Providing for the future in the event of your death? Yes.

1141. The officer referred to in that suggestion, and those which precede it, was Mr. Moriarty himself? I have no doubt of it.

1142. There cannot be any doubt of it? No; from what took place before, and led up to it.

1143. In speaking of the officer above indicated, he must have referred to his suggestion that he should have an equal position to yours in regard to the business transferred? Yes.

1144. Is the memorandum you sent to Mr. Moriarty, asking for these suggestions, in existence? I think not. If it is, it was a short memo., an unofficial memo., asking him to submit suggestions that would effect the desired object.

1145. Which was the separation of this branch? Yes.

1146.

W. W.
Stephen, Esq.
9 Dec., 1878.

1146. Did you then consider that this proposition of Mr. Moriarty's as to his own position actually had anything to do, or was necessarily a part of this arrangement for the separation of the branch—this arrangement by him of your relative positions, of the position he was to take in the event of your death—did you think that was necessarily a part of the suggestions you asked him for? No, it struck me as quite the contrary, especially the making arrangements as to who should succeed me.

1147. Arrangements in his own favour? Yes.

1148. Your memorandum did not call for that? No, that suggestion was voluntarily given on his part; was unasked for, and beyond the question, as far as the Minister and I had considered it.

1149. Was there no remark made about the position taken up by him at the time? There was, but not in writing. I underlined that particular portion of his minute, and pointed it out to Mr. Garrett, whose remark was, "I am not going to have anything of that sort in the arrangement," or words to that effect. In fact he spoke more strongly than that.

1150. Was nothing said to Mr. Moriarty by you or Mr. Garrett? Mr. Garrett may have spoken without my knowing it. I left the suggestion out in drawing up my final memo. for approval. I did not refer to it in any way whatever.

1151. In point of fact, you wanted hints as to how the separation of the branch could best be done? Yes, hints for our mutual convenience.

1152. It was a matter for your arrangements not his? Yes.

1153. You were responsible for carrying it out? Yes.

1155. When he was appointed chief clerk did he at once take seniority in the department as if he had arrived at that position by gradations from lower positions? He succeeded in all respects to the position which was held by the former chief clerk, Mr. Armytage. For eighteen months the office was vacant, but we rubbed along, and the salary continuing to be voted Mr. Moriarty was eventually appointed.

1156. Was there any special reason why he should have been brought into the department over the heads of officers already there? There is no doubt that Mr. Moriarty's ability and previous experience in land matters pointed to him as a good man. That and pressure brought to bear upon the Minister to appoint him led to his being brought again into the department.

1157. Pressure in what way? From his friends. They saw that the place was vacant. They thought it was one that would suit him, and he would suit, and as the vacancy had not been filled up, they pressed the Minister to appoint him. It was an appointment worth having—£600 a year straight away.

1158. Mr. Ranken.] Was there any actual necessity for the appointment at the time? I do not think there was the same necessity then as now. The work was not so heavy then.

1159. President.] Can you tell me what this meant:—"So long as it may not be found advisable to separate the financial and record business, the whole of such business be carried on as at present, in the Ministerial and Record branches." Had there been any question about changing those? No.

1160. Did it strike you that this minute meant anything more than what you asked for? That was another suggestion beyond the matter referred to him.

1161. Had the possibility of this change in these branches been spoken of previously? No.

1162. And there was no reason, as far as you knew, for this being mentioned by Mr. Moriarty? No. The Record Branch of the Conditional Purchase business has since been separated. It was done lately for the sake of convenience.

1163. Do you take it that Mr. Moriarty refers here only to the financial and record business of the Conditional Purchase Branch, or to the record and financial business generally? I suppose he meant the payment of salaries, expenses of the office, and so forth, and that instead of separate cheques being drawn by him, those arrangements should remain the same. As a matter of fact, moneys are placed to my credit for the payment of the salaries.

1164. Did it not occur to you that this hinted at the possibility of its being desirable to make a still further change? I thought it was a strange suggestion at the time.

1165. The second part of the fifth suggestion is this: "The officers in charge being understood to give due heed to the requirements of the separated branches and of the officers concerned therein without special reference to the Under Secretary?" He meant by that that the two branches should work together. For instance, if a record paper were wanted from the Conditional Purchase Branch, they should give it without special order from me.

1166. Does it not look like placing those two particular branches under his own orders? As regards all the conditional purchase officers and work, it does.

1167. You take that as having reference to the ordinary business in those branches, and the delivering of papers from the Conditional Purchase Branch to the Under Secretary? There is a separate register in each branch. Where the business clashes, the Conditional Purchase Branch should be able to get papers from the other record clerk without any special authority from the head of the department. He was never asked about the separation of the financial business.

1168. Suggestion No. 6 provides only for arrangements as affecting Mr. Moriarty's position, his title, and his salary. To give effect to the foregoing propositions as affecting myself, it would be proper that my present separate positions of chief clerk and Commissioner should be amalgamated by the authority of the Executive Council. The latter would be the more appropriate designation for the joint office under the proposed arrangement; and as there are several other Commissioners, the style should, I presume, be Chief Commissioner. There would not, perhaps, be any sensible increase in the amount of duty performed by me, but the responsibility would be materially increased; and it will not, I presume, be thought unreasonable that in recognition of it that an addition to the salary to the extent of £100 per annum should be provided for in the Supplementary Estimates for the present year, say from the 1st November, and in the Estimates for 1877." At that time Mr. Moriarty's position was that of chief clerk? Yes.

1169. What was his salary then? He got £600 a year; and he also received £100 a year as Commissioner of Conditional Sales for the county of Cumberland. I think that he meant that his salary, which was then £700, should be made equivalent to mine, £800.

- W. W. Stephen, Esq. 1170. He suggests that the separate positions of the chief clerk and Commissioner should be amalgamated? Yes.
9 Dec., 1878.
1171. What are the duties of the Commissioner for the county of Cumberland? They are not very arduous. There is occasionally a selection dispute which calls for inquiry.
1172. What did Mr. Moriarty mean when he said there would be no sensible increase in the amount of his duty? As chief clerk he had the superintendence of the office generally.
1173. Had he charge of the Conditional Purchase Branch more especially? I think he meant that he would be relieved of having anything to do with the remaining branches of the department, and that therefore there would be no increase to his duties, possibly a decrease, but that his responsibility would be greatly increased, because he would be more individually responsible for the action suggested. He would submit his recommendation to the Minister direct instead of through me.
1174. Upon that he asked for an increase of £100 a year, making his salary equal to yours? Yes.
1175. Was that one of the suggestions you approved of? I did not approve or disapprove.
1176. Was it ever given? No; it was not.
1177. Since Mr. Moriarty's appointment as Chief Commissioner has there been any chief clerk? No.
1178. How are the duties performed, or are they performed at all? To enable that arrangement to be carried out, I was willing to give up the chief clerk. I said that if the salary of the chief clerk were applied to this office, there would be no difficulty raised, in Parliament, because the arrangement would not occasion any extra expenditure. Since then I have found that a chief clerk was necessary for the general supervision of the office, to see to the attendance of clerks, discipline, and minor matters.
1179. What induced you to say you would do without a chief clerk? I did not anticipate that the work would have increased so largely as it has done, and I thought that the head of each branch might act in that capacity.
1180. What made you so desirous that the arrangement should be carried out? I thought it would put an end to the unpleasantness which had existed between us, and facilitate the business.
1181. Did it strike you that there was any impropriety in Mr. Moriarty's suggestion that his salary should be equal to yours? I did not see the propriety of his getting £800 a year for doing only half of what I used to do, but I never made any objection to it. I should be glad for Mr. Moriarty to get £800 a year as long as they do not take any off mine.
1182. Do you consider that the arrangement has relieved you of work or responsibility? It has not done so much as I thought it would. I have many duties which a chief clerk ought to take off my hands.
1183. I think you told us that the Conditional Purchase Branch only was transferred, not the Lease Branch? I objected to the Lease Branch being transferred. I saw no reason for it.
1184. When Mr. Moriarty became Chief Commissioner he gave up all the duties of chief clerk? Yes; so that they really all came upon me.
1185. I see from a note attached to this paper that Mr. Moriarty speaks of a memorandum about the re-organization of the department submitted by him in another shape;—do you recollect what that was? I recollect memoranda on two or three different occasions. He was always talking about the reorganization of the department? I do not recollect any special memorandum. I do not think he refers to one specially.
1186. His words are: "As to which I have stated my views in another shape"? I do not know what he refers to there.
1187. Mr. Ranken.] That minute relates to December, 1876, so that there was a gap of about three years between the two appointments? Yes, nearly. I know that on two or three occasions he spoke of some reorganization of the department.
1188. President.] Mr. Garrett was Minister when these suggestions were made? Yes.
1189. And he carried them out by that minute in which you concurred? Yes.
1190. Mr. Ranken.] Do you remember on what terms you were on with Mr. Moriarty in the interval of about three years from 1874 to December, 1876,—from the time that Mr. Moriarty signed the official correspondence in his own name instead of for the Under Secretary until he was appointed Chief Commissioner? We were not on good terms.
1191. But no event of importance occurred; there was nothing very marked? No, except that for two or three months there was a sort of lull when we used to speak to each other.
1192. There was nothing prominent in the way of correspondence? During the two or three years there must have been some angry memoranda. I have no doubt I could lay my hand on a few if it be thought of any consequence. There was nothing which I considered of sufficient importance to lead me to seek the Minister's protection upon as I had to do in the other cases submitted.

WEDNESDAY, 11 DECEMBER, 1878.

Present:—

MR. ABBOTT,

MR. RANKEN.

R. P. ABBOTT, ESQ., PRESIDENT, IN THE CHAIR.

W. W. Stephen, Esq., was called in and further examined:—

- W. W. Stephen, Esq. 1193. President.] The suggestions made by Mr. Moriarty respecting the Conditional Sales Branch were recommended by you in substance? Yes.
11 Dec., 1878.
1194. With one or two exceptions? One or two important exceptions.
1195. And they resulted in the arrangement which was made while Mr. Garrett was in office? Yes. I think I have said before that Mr. Garrett knew that I was going to submit them, and he rather wished that I should recommend them. I spoke to him before submitting them formally.
1196. One of the points upon which you differed from Mr. Moriarty was as to the transfer of the Lease Branch? That was one.
1197. That was the principal one? I do not know as to that.
1198. The other points on which you differed had no reference to the business? No.
1199. They were rather personal to Mr. Moriarty? Yes.

1200.

1200. And in the minute you wrote on the 21st November I think you stated as much? Yes.

1201. You appear to have written that memorandum for Mr. Moriarty's information? Yes; previous to the submission of the papers.

1202. You sent it to him to let him see how far you agreed with him, and how far you differed from him? Exactly.

1203. Before submitting the final minute for the approval of Mr. Garrett did you write anything to Mr. Moriarty which is not before us? Not that I recollect.

1204. On that minute which you sent to Mr. Moriarty this memorandum appears:—"As the only question remaining to be decided as between the Under Secretary's views and those submitted by me has reference to the Lease business, which does not involve the general arrangement and can be subsequently discussed more at length and settled on its merits, the papers are submitted with reference to the general measure which is urgent." How did that come to be written on your minute by Mr. Moriarty? As you suggested just now I wrote my minute for his information, and Mr. Moriarty wrote that upon it to show that the only question upon which there was any difference between us was that about the Lease Branch. I did not admit that, because there were one or two other points upon which I dissented from Mr. Moriarty's suggestions, but that was the only one affecting the general question. After that I submitted my final minute, of which I have forwarded a copy to the Minister for his approval.

1205. Was this memorandum, which you sent to Mr. Moriarty for his information, returned to you, and was it after that that he obtained it, and wrote this upon it? No; that minute of mine was sent to him; and, instead of returning it to me, Mr. Moriarty must have taken it to the Minister himself without reference to me. I think I have pointed that out in the papers submitted to you.

1206. Was that memorandum on your minute written for your eyes only, do you think? My minute ought to have been sent back to me, but I believe Mr. Moriarty submitted it to the Minister.

1207. Is not Mr. Moriarty's minute written as if it related to a question between you and him, a question that was to be decided by the Minister, and submitted to the Minister by Mr. Moriarty? Yes.

1208. Is that the only occasion on which Mr. Moriarty made any condition as to allowing this arrangement about the Conditional Purchase Branch to be carried out? I think so.

1209. Is there anything else which you can recollect which showed that Mr. Moriarty insisted on the transfer of the Lease Branch before the arrangement was carried out, or that he insisted upon having the question of the Lease Branch left open for future settlement? I do not think there is anything else.

1210. Is there anything else in these papers? No; I speak of the documentary evidence on the point; I cannot of course say whether anything else passed between Mr. Moriarty and the Minister about it.

1211. Do you not think that that memorandum was conceived by Mr. Moriarty as a matter of arrangement and concession between you and him rather than in the nature of suggestions to you as the head of the department, as you intended that they should be—that in fact the matter was expressed as a question in dispute between you and him to be finally settled by the Minister? Yes.

1212. Your minute for carrying out the arrangement was submitted to the Minister, and approved on the 20th of December, 1876? Yes.

1213. From the date of your memorandum to Mr. Moriarty on the 21st November to the 20th December, when that minute was submitted, was there any communication between you and Mr. Moriarty on this subject? Nothing, except that memo. by Mr. Moriarty on the 4th December, written on my minute, about which you were just now speaking. I will not say for certain whether I saw that minute by Mr. Moriarty before I submitted my final minute on the 20th of December. As I believe I have already stated in my previous examination, I sent a short unofficial memo. to Mr. Moriarty to obtain his views previous to submitting the matter to the Minister, and I sent my minute upon his suggestions to him for his information. That last minute of mine was, I believe, submitted by Mr. Moriarty without reference to me. I sent my minute to him in a private envelope, and he took it to the Minister as though it were an official document, when in fact it was at that time perfectly unofficial.

1214. You had had Mr. Moriarty's suggestions and you did not think it necessary to submit them? Yes; his minute was a memorandum of suggestions to me in accordance with my request.

1215. When you discovered that your minute had been submitted by Mr. Moriarty, what did you do? I said that I would withdraw it, and submit my own minute for approval.

1216. You treated the suggestions as between Mr. Moriarty and yourself? Yes.

1217. As information which you had sought from your subordinate? Yes. I kept them to show that I did not suppress them as he hinted that I did.

1218. You explained that charge of suppressing documents in your minute to Mr. Stuart? Yes.

1219. After the submission and confirmation of your minute of the 20th December, did Mr. Moriarty come to you again that day or the next? After the 20th December?

1220. Yes. I gather from the papers that there is some reference to Mr. Moriarty going into your office shortly after he became aware of the approval of the Minister? I think he did.

1221. It would be between the 20th and the 22nd that Mr. Moriarty went into your office, and that a disturbance took place? Yes.

1222. You have stated in one of your minutes that there was some one in your inner room who might have heard you? Yes; I remember Mr. Moriarty coming to my room on that occasion.

1223. Do you recollect what took place? I think I have stated that in my minute. It so happened that the door of the inner room of my office was slightly open, and the two gentlemen who were there waiting for me must have heard what took place, and I can appeal to them to verify my statement.

1224. What is that statement? A statement in which I refer to Mr. Moriarty's demeanour and tone of voice.

1225. You speak of him as having used certain language? The time when the two gentlemen were in my room was the time when only the language referred to in page 4 of these papers was used.

1226. Do you recollect what brought that about? What?

1227. The language of which Mr. Moriarty complains? I was provoked by his offensive demeanour and style of talking to me.

1228. Do you recollect what the subject was on which he spoke to you first? On the subject of these new arrangements.

1229. Not with regard to the Lease Branch particularly? That might have been included in it; I dare say it was, but I am not sure.

1230. You say that it was within a few minutes of that arrangement that he went to you? It was a very short time afterwards. I think it was the same day, but I cannot say for certain.

W. W.
Stephen, Esq.
11 Dec., 1878.

- W. W. Stephen, Esq. 1231. This paper, marked C, dated December 22, 1876, written by Mr. Moriarty, is the paper which he stated subsequently to Mr. Stuart that he read to you on the occasion that you complained of his threats to you?
- 11 Dec., 1878. 1232. Do you recollect the occasion when Mr. Moriarty went into your room and read some document which you considered to be offensive? I remember perfectly that he read from some minute. He read it very fast, and I could not catch the tenor of it, except that it was offensive.
1233. Did you see it afterwards? I do not know that I did. He read to me some minute which he said he intended to submit.
1234. But whether this is that minute or not you do not know? My impression is that it is not.
1235. Why do you suppose that? Because the language is not so strong.
1236. I think you speak afterwards of this minute as the one that was read? It may be that it was. I am not certain. My memory of it is that it was not written on the same size paper as that—that it was a rough minute written on letter-paper, not foolscap.
1237. Do you now recollect what this document is about? I think it chiefly appertains to the lease work.
1238. This is what I take to be the document which was read on the 22nd December, and to which Mr. Moriarty refers when writing to Mr. Stuart. He said there was nothing in it to give offence or to call forth heat? That is a matter of opinion.
1239. This minute was submitted within two days after the making of the arrangement embodied in the minute of 20th December, and it is dated December 22? Is there any notation on it as to when it was submitted?
1240. No. It is marked "Copy." This may purport to be a copy of the minute which, as I recollect, was written on smaller paper. I cannot say whether that was submitted to me before it was submitted to the Minister. I fancy he took it to the Minister direct.
1241. If he took it to the Minister would it not necessarily have been marked? Not necessarily.
1242. In this he speaks of an amendment of the law having been suggested by him, and he says that he had taken the greatest interest in the success of it which had surprised expectations, and that he believed such an interest was necessary to secure its ultimate success, of which he had every confidence. He adds "Without even implying anything to the disadvantage of the Under Secretary it is palpable that this business has not engaged in any degree his interest or attention." Do you not consider that offensive? I consider it decidedly offensive as being addressed to me or used of me as the head of the department.
1243. This is said to be the document which he read to you in your office? I do not remember anything so offensive as I consider that to be.
1244. He goes on to say: "No instructions or suggestions of any consequence, if any at all, have ever emanated from him with respect to it. It is not too much to say that he does not realize its present state and bearing, and that he is not familiar with the present law if he is with the former regarding it." Do you consider that offensive? I consider that decidedly offensive.
1245. Do you think it likely to excite heat or anger? Yes. As to the change of the law to which he refers I really believe that at a meeting of the heads of branches with the Minister, one of the fundamental changes in the leasing law was made by myself. There is nothing to show it in writing, and I do not wish to cavil about it. One of the chief changes was to put leaseholders in earlier possession. He wanted to take the Lease Branch. I saw no reason for it, and I am quite prepared at any time to show that there is no reason for it. As to my knowledge of the lease work, I have stated there that I had no doubt I could submit many cases which I had had to deal with, and which would show that I was not so ignorant of the lease business as Mr. Moriarty would make out.
1246. Is it a fact that that business has not engaged your interest or attention? As a matter of fact it has engaged much of my attention. It is a branch of business which, as a general rule, does not require that many cases should be submitted to the Minister; but difficult cases sometimes arise, and it so happened that about that particular time several such cases did occur. With regard to that passage, I stated verbally to the Minister that I was quite willing to leave it to his knowledge of the facts to decide as to my alleged ignorance or otherwise.
1247. Before you became Under Secretary you had to deal with that particular branch of the business of your department? Yes.
1248. You had that branch under your charge? Yes; it was then attached to the Conditional Sales Branch.
1249. And you were for some years in charge of that? Yes; but there is no reason why it should be attached to that branch. The leasing work is under the Occupation Act, and the conditional purchase work under the Alienation Act.
1250. Compared with the number of conditional purchases, there are not many leases? Not such a large proportion as one would think. The lease business comprises auction leases, leases in virtue of freeholds, leases in virtue of conditional purchases; and I cannot see, therefore, that there is any valid reason why the whole of them should be placed under Mr. Moriarty, because he has charge of the Conditional Purchase Branch.
1251. Would the division as suggested by Mr. Moriarty relieve you of the bulk of the most troublesome work, and then leave you as great an extent of work as there is in any other Ministerial Department? He must, I think, refer to the conditional purchase and lease work combined.
1252. That has been the division which Mr. Moriarty has been fighting for himself, and he says you would then be left with as much work as any other Ministerial Department? About as much, I think.
1253. In point of fact, if that arrangement had been carried out you and he would have been equal in position and salary, Mr. Moriarty having the most troublesome work? I do not know about salary.
1254. If his suggestion as to salary had been carried out? Yes; I should not say he would have the most troublesome work.
1255. He says so here? Yes; but that is a matter of opinion.
1256. The arrangement suggested would have put you upon an equality as to salary and position, and Mr. Moriarty would have had the most troublesome work? It is an immense business no doubt.
1257. In that case there would virtually have been two Under Secretaries? It would amount very much to that, except that, as head of the whole department, I should still retain the control of the financial business, should have to deal with all applications for promotion, and the general organization of the department.
- 1258.

1258. But is it not a fact that Mr. Moriarty asserts his right to deal with all the appointments connected with his branch of the department? That is not in accord with the spirit in which the minute was approved by the Cabinet.

W. W.
Stephen, Esq.
11 Dec., 1878.

1259. Did he not assert that it was. Did he not insist upon having a position equal with yours in every respect with regard to his particular branch of the department, and does he not now insist upon it? His views have been twice overruled by two different Ministers, and I do not think he insists on it at present.

1260. He has done so very recently? Yes, I think very recently.

1261. When Mr. Moriarty stated in this minute: "I trust that my views, which have no selfish aim, and if accepted will only enlarge my usefulness, may be considered sufficiently well founded to outweigh any opposition based merely on personal and imaginary grounds of the Under Secretary's position and its claims as opposed to the benefit of the service,"—did he point to any facts upon which these papers give us information? I really do not know what he alluded to.

1262. All this is contained in that document which he is supposed to have read to you on that day? He always used to write in that style—in what I may call a rather high flown style—as to what would be the benefits accruing to the department if he were to do so and so to carry out his own views.

1263. In the last paragraph of that minute he says, "With every willingness when convinced or overruled to lay aside my own views in deference to others, I must add that I do not see the utility of my undertaking the new business without the charge of that part of my present work which really in my opinion requires my services." Was that the only objection he made to you before or after the confirmation of the arrangement by the Minister under which he was to take charge of the Conditional Purchase Branch without the Lease Branch? I think that was the first time he raised these points.

1264. Do you know of any other occasion on which he said he would not take charge of one without the other? I do not recollect anything else but what appears in those written documents, beyond a general impression that he stated to me that he did not care about the position, or words to that effect.

1265. But these papers speak of his having refused to do it in another minute? I hardly think he ever seriously entertained any idea of refusing the position, because it was so decidedly to his advantage.

1266. Such refusal would hardly have been consistent with that minute of his desiring that the matter should go on, and leaving the question of the Lease Branch for future consideration? No.

1267. How did the disturbance commence of which you complained to Mr. Stuart on the 28th of December, 1876? That is, the date of my complaint to Mr. Stuart?

1268. Yes; how did it begin? I do not think I could now state it as fully, as much in detail, as I have done in that minute which was written when the matters were fresh in my mind. My minute to Mr. Stuart brought about an extraordinary counter charge from Mr. Moriarty. I made a charge against Mr. Moriarty, which I either took or sent to Mr. Stuart. Mr. Moriarty knew that I had made this charge, but before he got Mr. Stuart's minute on my letter he made a sort of counter charge to anticipate mine.

1269. Your letter and Mr. Moriarty's were both in Mr. Stuart's hands together? Yes; he made his charge against me as if in ignorance of the fact that I had already made a charge against him. Our minutes both begin in the same way.

1270. Were they substantially separate charges, or was one an answer to the other? Yes; he made his charge as if he were the first person to bring the complaint whereas I was.

1271. You say that he went into your room, and referring to a note in his hand, said, "I suppose you are aware of what Mr. Garrett has written to me?" Do you know what that note was? I cannot say exactly what it was, but I think it was some memo. from Mr. Garrett informing Mr. Moriarty that he had given his approval to the proposed arrangement.

1272. And Mr. Moriarty then began to read the document he talked about submitting? Yes.

1273. You told him he might do as he liked. Was there anyone present when he said he would show up your incapacity as well as your idleness? Not at that time. Before lunch there was. It was after lunch he came in and the thing was renewed.

1274. It was after he had spoken of your incapacity and idleness that you told him you thought it was impertinence of a strong kind? I did.

1275. Before you said that or anything of the kind he had read this minute to you which you felt to be very offensive although you only caught the general effect of it? Yes.

1276. It culminated in his saying that he would kick you down stairs? He said, "If you say that I will kick you down stairs."

1277. That was when you told him it was damned impertinence? Yes.

1278. In that complaint to Mr. Stuart you say that it was not the first, second, or third time that disagreement and discussion had been provoked by Mr. Moriarty, as prejudicial to the conduct of public business, and subversive of official discipline;—did those remarks refer to these cases which you have put before us? Yes, partly, and partly to matters which are not before you.

1279. To anything which you can recollect the particulars of now? No.

1280. You say that for reasons which you are sure the Minister would understand if he deemed it necessary that you should explain them you had submitted so far to Mr. Moriarty's conduct towards you. Do you recollect what those reasons were, or were they private reasons as existing between you and him? I referred to reasons partly of a personal nature—partly arising out of his former position in the office.

1281. Personal consideration? Exactly; that is what I referred to there.

1282. This letter of Mr. Moriarty's, dated the 3rd of January, was you think placed in the hands of Mr. Stuart before he dealt with your letter? I think so.

1283. Your complaint was dated the 28th of December? Yes; Mr. Moriarty's complaint was sent to Mr. Stuart as Acting Minister for Lands, was lodged with him before my complaint was returned to me for explanation.

1284. In this minute of the 3rd of January, Mr. Moriarty says: "I find myself under the necessity of representing the arbitrary and intolerable line of conduct pursued towards me on a recent occasion by the Under Secretary, the disingenuous treatment of an official statement prepared by me, and after perusal by him submitted to the Minister but ultimately withdrawn again, and in some of its leading features suppressed; and, finally, the grossly insulting and abusive language addressed to me without provocation by the Under Secretary, in disregard of the obligations of his official position and mine, and with the inevitable result of provoking a scandal not less to be deplored in the interests of the department than of the Under Secretary and myself." Do you think these expressions justified by what had taken place between you? No, they were not.

W. W. Stephen, Esq. 1285. Had any language to justify that ever been used by you to him? No; there was nothing beyond that which I stated in my memo. previously submitted to Mr. Stuart.

1286. He speaks of some documents to which he has adverted, and he says he believes they are still in the 11 Dec., 1878. Under Secretary's possession—documents framed in anticipation of a redistribution of office business. Were there any other documents to which he could allude than those which have been submitted to us? No.

1287. To what then does he refer? I think to that memorandum of suggestions.

1288. What now is your opinion with regard to those suggestions, and the mode in which Mr. Moriarty submitted them to you; what do you think was the object he had in view. Were the papers written by him with the intention of assisting you in your position, do you suppose, or were they written simply to enable Mr. Moriarty to take up a position without reference to you? Nominally, speaking from the tenor of his remarks, they were prepared to relieve me and to expedite the business of the department. I cannot say how far other considerations entered into his mind when he wrote the minute, except from subsequent results.

1289. What does he mean by accusing you in this minute to Mr. Stuart of using part of his memo. and suppressing the remainder, and of thus obtaining a decision by stealth, an authoritative decision adverse to his views? I think I have pretty clearly demolished that statement in my minute giving the explanation I was called upon to make by Mr. Stuart. I have shown that I did not suppress anything at all, that I submitted everything to the Minister, that what I left out was with the concurrence of the Minister; and further, that instead of obtaining a decision by stealth, or suppressing any portion of his recommendations, I used his very words, so that he could not cavil in any way at anything I had done; that is to say, on those points upon which the Minister approved of his recommendations I adopted his very words.

1290. You think, then, that all these accusations made by Mr. Moriarty have reference to his memorandum of suggestions, and to the fact of your not placing them in Mr. Garrett's hands? They have.

1291. To the suggestions written by him for your private assistance? Yes.

1292. Because you did not submit to Mr. Garrett what was not intended for him these accusations follow? That is how I take it. I do not see how any other inference could be derived from what he states, because these are the only documents to which he could refer. There were no other documents relating to the subject of the new arrangements.

1293. To what did you refer, when as Mr. Moriarty states you said to him, "You are now showing yourself in your true colours, as I always expected you would." Do you recollect saying that? Yes.

1294. What brought that about? I meant that while he had made a sort of show of friendly feeling towards me, and a show of assisting me in the department—when he came out suddenly with these words "I will show up your idleness," in addition to writing those offensive remarks about the lease work, I meant when I said, "You are now showing yourself in your true colours," that he was exhibiting to me the feelings which he had really entertained towards me in his innermost heart all along.

1295. He said that he used no words which might not have formed part of a private and confidential conversation between you at the time? I stated afterwards I think that I objected to private and confidential conversations of that sort.

1296. Were there any other expressions which justified him in saying that your language was blasphemous and ungentlemanly? I only used language which I believed nine gentlemen out of ten would have used under similar provocation. I made use of the word "damn," and I think that was a pardonable expression under the circumstances.

1297. Mr. Moriarty, in that minute which he submitted to Mr. Stuart, speaks of your former very different relative positions as an additional reason why you should not use terms towards him which a gentleman would hardly address to his groom and which a carpenter would probably resent by a thrashing. Had he ever spoken to you on that subject of your previous relative positions since he rejoined the Department? No.

1298. He had never reproached you? No; I do not think he ever mentioned the subject. I do not see how he could have any ground of complaint, because I did everything I could to ensure his not feeling in any way our former relative positions.

1299. After his threats do you recollect going to Mr. Moriarty's room and asking him to sign some minute or memorandum of the proceeding which you had drawn up? I have some recollection of it, because it was such an unusual course for me to take. I was very much annoyed at the time, and I went to his door and asked him if he would agree to a minute I had written upon it.

1300. Was that a statement of the occurrence? I think it was. I drew up something, and I wanted to submit the matter at once. He made some remark and I made some reply which he took exception to.

1301. Was what he took exception to this: "There is no having you; you would wriggle out of everything"? I made some curt reply which I do not recollect, I dare say it might be to that effect. It was a reply which I regretted making directly afterwards, but I do not know what it was exactly.

1302. Do you remember what the memorandum was? I do not know whether I left it with him or tore it up. I cannot remember.

1303. He speaks of having proposed some mode of settling the difficulty which you declined;—do you recollect what that was? No.

1304. A mode commonly resorted to among gentlemen? I remember his making some suggestion which I declined.

1305. A suggestion of a pacific nature I hope? It was something about choosing a friend or arbitrator; but that was not until after I had reported him.

1306. He also says that he has no feeling of animosity towards you, and that he can hardly understand your jealousy of an arrangement infinitely to your advantage as well as for the public benefit. Jealousy of what? That is best known to himself. He said once, "I do not want to go to the Minister, treading on your toes." His memoranda in all matters have been written as if he were still my superior officer, and as if he thought I were jealous of his abilities and so on.

1307. He does not refer to the fact that he acted independently of you? At that time he was only chief clerk.

1308. Another expression of his is: "And a great pity that his slumbering suspicions, the offspring of jealousy, fostered by the ill-will of others." What does that mean? I cannot understand that. If there were

W. W.
Stephen, Esq.

11 Dec., 1878.

were any room for a feeling of jealousy it ought to be the other way, because I have the premier position.
1309. What did he refer to when he spoke of the ill-will of others? I suppose he had some idea that my friends instilled into my mind suspicions against his honesty of purpose.

1310. But there had been no question of that kind ever mooted between you? None whatever.

1311. I suppose it was after he saw the minute of Mr. Stuart on your complaint that he wrote this second paper? Yes; he wrote the second time in reply to Mr. Stuart's memorandum asking him if he had any observations to offer.

1312. Mr. Stuart wrote this memo. on your complaint:—"It is with extreme regret that I find such differences existing between two high officers in the service. Before deciding on the matter in dispute I require this to be submitted to Mr. Moriarty, that I may have his statement thereon?" Yes.

1313. On his own reply, Mr. Moriarty wrote this minute:—"By direction of the Honorable the Treasurer, submitted to the Under Secretary?" He endeavoured to send it direct instead of through the proper channel.

1314. In this last minute he complains that documents three years old had been forwarded by you to show that disagreements and dissensions had been previously provoked by him, and he says that they are not perfect, or otherwise they would have shown on which side was the provocation and which the forbearance. Are these the documents about the suppression of which he had previously complained? I imagine that he must refer there to the documents in 1874, the first occasion of dissension between us.

1315. Mr. Ranken.] To the case in which he signed official documents in his own name instead of for the Under Secretary? I think they were the only documents he could refer to—the only documents at all approaching three years old.

1316. President.] He says they were not perfect? They were as perfect as I could make them.

1317. He says that he might almost state that there were hundreds of petulant memoranda usually marked non-official addressed to him by the Under Secretary? If I have not kept them I am very sorry for it.

1318. He says that by your desire they were returned to you with one or two exceptions, one of which he was drawn to exhibit to the Premier soon after his advent to office? I suppose, then, he has got it. I know there was some minute he made a great deal of; I think it was something in connection with Mr. McElhone.

1319. Did you never hear anything of his complaints about it? The Minister said that Mr. Moriarty had brought something over to the Cabinet.

1320. What Cabinet? Those are the words the Minister used to me.

1321. You do not know what the subject of that minute was? I do not recollect, except that it was something in connection with what Mr. McElhone had written, or I had written in reference to Mr. McElhone.

1322. You are not sure whether it was a minute of Mr. McElhone's or your own? I do not remember.

1323. Mr. Moriarty finishes this minute of his by saying, "I shall content myself by explicitly denying having on any one occasion provoked or commenced any such discussion or disagreement. As already stated it is contrary to my wish and endeavour, as well as to the Under Secretary's first expressed intention, that valuable time should be wasted over the official discussion of such a matter now." Is it a fact that Mr. Moriarty never commenced or provoked any such discussion? I say no. My opinion is quite the reverse, and I think it is borne out by that minute of his, written in 1874, in which he himself went out of his way to charge me with unnecessary and prejudicial delays, and that other minute of his to the Minister for Lands, in which, without any provocation whatever, he volunteered a charge against me.

1324. Mr. Ranken.] Was that when he was called to task for signing his own name? Yes; when no provocation took place.

1325. Mr. Parkes drew attention to it? Yes; that statement was volunteered by him, and under all the circumstances it struck me with surprise that he could have written it.

1326. President.] At the time the papers were referred to Mr. Stuart, did you at the time consider from Mr. Moriarty's papers that he accused you of want of straightforwardness and integrity? I think he used the words themselves.

1327. You considered that he used words having that meaning? Yes; he used the word "suppression," and "obtaining a decision by stealth," and other offensive terms which I cannot now recollect.

1328. How soon after the occurrence was it that you reported Mr. Moriarty to Mr. Stuart? It was just before the Christmas holidays that the difference occurred. There were two or three days holiday beginning from Boxing Day, and I reported Mr. Moriarty the first opportunity I had after the holidays were over. Mr. Moriarty, I remember, met me on the stairs, and he said, "If you are going to report me about this, I shall not go out of town." He said he was going out of town for two or three days for the holidays. I said, "I do not intend to take any notice of it," or words to that effect; but on further consideration I thought the matter more serious, not only as regarded myself, but the discipline of the department, and I therefore made up my mind that I ought to report him. I told Mr. Garrett the next day. I did not see Mr. Moriarty, but I let him know directly he came back, and I told him that I was going to report him before I did so.

1329. Was that what he meant when he supposed that the ill-will of your friends towards him led you to change your mind? What he meant by the ill-will of my friends towards him was, I think, a reference to Mr. Pretious. Mr. Pretious and he were great enemies, and I used to side with Mr. Pretious. I did not speak to Mr. Moriarty, but I did to Mr. Pretious, and I fancy therefore Mr. Pretious was supposed to be one of those who fostered my ill-will against him.

1330. In Mr. Stuart's minute for the Cabinet this passage occurs:—"I consider that it would be subversive of all order and discipline in an important department if documents affecting the essential working and arrangement of the department should be permitted to pass by the Under Secretary; and therefore I consider that Mr. Moriarty in the first place was to blame, knowing, as he does, the whole of official routine and order." Was there any complaint made by you of Mr. Moriarty to Mr. Stuart on that score? I think that my minute referred to his submitting documents to the Minister without reference to me.

1331. Was that part of your complaint? I think that I pointed out that that had been done.

1332. Is it not inevitable in your relative positions now even that that course so strongly condemned by Mr. Stuart must be followed, and that documents will be submitted to the Minister, passing you by? No.

1333.

- W. W. Stephen, Esq.
11 Dec., 1878.
1333. As things exist now it does happen and will happen? It happens only as regards the particular working of the Conditional Purchase Branch; but in matters affecting the administration of the department it ought not to happen.
1334. What Mr. Moriarty says is part of the work of the Conditional Purchase Branch you say is not, and he insists on his right to submit things to the Minister which you say he ought not to submit? The right is conferred upon him by Cabinet minute to submit conditional purchase cases.
1335. As to other matters, such as the appointment of officers? It was settled that that business should go through me.
1336. Since that was settled has the rule been broken through? He keeps breaking through it; I have had illustrations of it during the last few weeks.
1337. It is inevitable that that will happen? It ought not to happen; it is not inevitable if he carries out the instructions of the Minister.
1338. He will do it? He certainly will do it as long as he is in a position to do it, where there is anything like an excuse for doing it. I say it should not be inevitable under the rules laid down, but that he passes over those rules occasionally.
1339. Holding the position he does towards you at the present moment it is inevitable? He has the power to do it.
1340. In consequence of that minute of Mr. Stuart's he was directed to make an apology to you? Yes.
1341. This is the apology? That is it—what is called an apology. He kept that minute over for three or four days, until the day before the Robertson Ministry went out of office. I think you will find that Mr. Stuart's minute was dated on the 8th and Mr. Moriarty's apology on the 15th. I saw that Mr. Moriarty was waiting for the new Ministry to come in, and I therefore moved in the matter to have it settled one way or the other before the Ministry went out.
1342. When did you send the minute to Mr. Moriarty? On the 8th or 9th, within an hour or two after I got it.
1343. After you then referred the matter to Mr. Moriarty he kept the papers? Yes; the Ministry had either resigned or were about to do so. When I received no answer I either wrote to Mr. Baker or saw him. I pointed out to him that the matter had been delayed long enough, and that I ought to have the apology demanded or have the matter settled. That letter from Mr. Moriarty to Sir John Robertson was the result. I was never satisfied with it, but it was no use objecting as the Ministers were going out of office.
1344. This letter was addressed to Sir John Robertson? Yes.
1345. Mr. Moriarty wrote:—"If it had not been for my desire to avoid further discussion of a matter which has already proceeded to an undesirable length, I should have felt bound to ask attention to one or two matters in the documents placed before the Cabinet which are new to me, and I think the subject of a slight misapprehension; but I am very anxious to act up to the spirit of conciliation in which the Cabinet have dealt with the matter lately at issue between Mr. Stephen and myself, and I have been personally most unwilling to occupy an attitude of hostility to Mr. Stephen himself or any member of the family of his respected father. I therefore unconditionally accept the decision of the Cabinet; and desire to place in your hands my expression of regret to have in any way given Mr. Stephen or the Government occasion for inconvenience or annoyance."
1346. Was that the only apology? That was the result of that correspondence.
1347. You accepted that? I grumbled at it certainly; but I did accept it.
1348. In view of all these papers and that more serious disturbance which has been referred to, does it not occur to you that instead of asserting your authority with reference to Mr. Moriarty you have been constantly on the defensive against him? Yes.
1349. From first to last? Yes; generally speaking.
1350. Instead of taking on yourself the authority of the position you held, you have been actually defending yourself against Mr. Moriarty? Yes; I have never written or said a word against him except in defence of my official position.
1351. That is almost ever since he rejoined the department? Commencing immediately afterwards.
1352. Would you permit such a state of things to exist between you and any other officer of your department? No.
1353. Could it exist? No.
1354. Why then did you permit it in Mr. Moriarty's case all along, involving as it has done a great waste of time and serious injury to the department? What could I do more than report it to the Minister?
1355. There you have a case in point, and what was the result of it? —
1356. You do not think there was any other course open to you? No; I reported the matter fully and strongly; but, if I must say so, I confess I do not think my position has been upheld as it ought to have been by Ministers professing to uphold me.
1357. Mr. Ranken. Does not Mr. Stuart's memorandum back you up very strongly? It does to a certain extent; and I think that that matter would have had more serious results but for the delay of the holidays, the Minister going to Melbourne and not coming back, and Mr. Stuart's attention being taken up by other matters. A matter of that sort ought to be dealt with promptly—nipped in the bud. At any other time I believe I should have had an apology of a more satisfactory nature than that given as Ministers were going out of office.
1358. Mr. Moriarty saw the minute to the Cabinet? Yes; he saw all the papers.
1359. The question could hardly have been put very strongly to him than the way in which Mr. Stuart did put it? I am not objecting to Mr. Stuart's minute.
1360. President. Mr. Stuart says: "I regret that the Under Secretary had not acted with greater dignity and assert his right to order Mr. Moriarty to do or leave undone certain things"? I have reported Mr. Moriarty and remonstrated with him.

FRIDAY, 13 DECEMBER, 1878.

Present:—

MR. ABBOTT,

MR. RANKEN.

R. P. ABBOTT, ESQ., PRESIDENT, IN THE CHAIR.

W. W. Stephen, Esquire, was called in and further examined:—

1362. President.] Will you look at that minute of 9th June, 1877 (Ministerial 2290)? These were the papers which Mr. Farnell had on his table for some time past, and said that he would deal with.

W. W.
Stephen, Esq.
13 Dec., 1878.

1363. What induced you to write that minute? The appointment of Mr. Tindale, on the recommendation of Mr. Moriarty, without any submission of the matter to me whatever. It was also occasioned by his action in regard to the two cases of Messrs. Keele and Lord, Inspectors of Conditional Purchases. They were reported for some dereliction of duty, and the papers, although registered in the Ministerial Branch, which is especially placed under my control, were dealt with in every way by Mr. Moriarty, without reference to me. He dealt with them as a conditional sales matter instead of as a Ministerial matter.

1364. It was, in fact, a question as to the appointment or dismissal of officers? Yes.

1365. Can you say what action the Minister took with reference to that? It is here. I requested the Minister to direct that the rules of the service should be strictly carried out in this matter.

1366. Who then was Minister? Mr. Driver. The result of it was that the Minister wrote this decision. That the request of the Under Secretary for Lands that the rules of the service, as alluded to by him, should in future in all cases be carried out, and must be complied with; and that the above decision applies to a previous minute of 20th December last, and must be taken as final.

1367. What minute was that? I believe it was the minute to which I have particularly referred, as embodying the new Departmental arrangements in 1874.

1368. Mr. Moriarty wrote a minute on the 12th of June, in which he says:—"In the enclosed minute the Under Secretary has placed before the Minister so much of the case as suited his immediate purpose."

Was that written in reply to your minute of the 9th? Yes.

1369. Is that after the date of Mr. Driver's decision? Yes.

1370. In that minute Mr. Moriarty was actually insisting on his right to deal with all officers connected with the Conditional Purchase Branch without your knowing anything about it? He insisted on it, but the Minister still overruled him.

1371. He insisted on it after the Minister's decision? Exactly.

1372. In that minute, speaking of you, he says:—"He ought to have known that I am not a person fitted for a part in such a farce as would be enacted"? Yes, I see that.

1373. What do you take that to mean? It is hard to say what he means.

1374. What do you take his meaning to be? I really cannot say, unless he meant it to be implied that it was a farce to carry out the ordinary rules of the service—the same rules as are carried out in every other department.

1375. In another part of that minute he speaks of the indelicacy with which you have aggravated the matter? Yes.

1376. Was all the indelicacy of that matter contained in that minute—that is, the indelicacy of sending the minute to be registered and perused by the clerks? I know nothing about its being perused by the clerks. It was a registered paper, affecting the general transaction of business in the department. I sent it to be registered as a Ministerial decision.

1377. Was it sent to be registered by you in the usual way? Yes; as containing the Minister's decision. If it had been lost, I could not have traced it unless it were registered; but having a record number attached to it, the record clerk could then be held responsible for it, or for showing where it had gone. I wrote a further memo. in reply to that.

1378. That minute and decision were sent in to be registered in the usual way without being sent to Mr. Moriarty? Yes.

1379. Was there any reason why it should be sent to Mr. Moriarty? Not the slightest reason. In matters affecting Mr. Moriarty personally I did not have the papers registered.

1380. Are these the papers referred to in that minute of the 31st January of this year? This is a minute which I submitted to Mr. Farnell, in which I drew attention to a repetition of what I complained of there.

1381. The first minute was yours? Yes.

1382. In that you refer to this case? Yes; as giving the decision of a previous Minister; and I think that the enclosed decision of Mr. Driver, the only one ever written on the subject, is sufficiently clear proof of what I said. I submitted it, not only as being contrary to the usual discipline of the department but as showing the great inconvenience caused by submitting applications for employment, respecting salaries, and so on, without reference to me,—I who am responsible for these matters knowing nothing about them in such a case as that.

1383. Was the course which you insisted on the course which was pursued with respect to the appointments in the department of the Surveyor General? Yes; although that department is of a distinctly professional character, all the Surveyor General's recommendations of appointments and promotions come through me to the Minister.

1384. That was the course which you wished Mr. Moriarty to adopt? I desired it; and it was the course which it was decided that Mr. Moriarty should adopt. If that course were necessary in the case of the Surveyor General it was ten times more necessary in relation to appointments in my own office.

1385. Did Mr. Moriarty submit this minute of his, or send it to you? He submitted it to Mr. Driver direct without reference to me at all. After keeping it for some time Mr. Driver handed it back to him.

1386. The end of that was that you appealed to the Minister to uphold his decision, and not let it be interfered with again? Yes.

1387. You wrote this minute of the 31st of January, 1878, with reference to a case similar to the appointment of Mr. Tindale? Yes.

1388. Mr. Farnell was the Minister then? Yes; he wrote that decision on my minute on the 31st of January, 1878, the same day.

1389. What is that decision? "It is quite evident to me that matters of this kind should be dealt with by the Under Secretary. I must carry out my promise to Mr. Phillips, and therefore revoke my approval of Mr. Olliver." I sent that to Mr. Moriarty to be acted upon, and he must have again taken it to the Minister

Minister and got this subsequent decision. "What I mean is that the Commissioner shall recommend within his own decision, and that the recommendation should come through the Under Secretary to the Minister on the same footing as the Surveyor General." In reference to that particular decision, I feel it due to myself to submit this copy of a memo. on this very subject in regard to a case which only took place yesterday—a case in which Mr. Moriarty submitted an application to the Minister direct without reference to me. It refers to the case of the appointment of Mr. Biggs, in which Mr. Moriarty again ignores that instruction of the Minister, that all such cases should be submitted through me. My minutes, and that of Mr. Moriarty in reply, are as follows:—

Urgent.

Will the Chief Commissioner be good enough to say whether there was any valid reason for submitting Mr. St. John A. Biggs' application for employment in this department direct to the Minister instead of through me, in accordance with the express instructions of the Minister and recognized rule. Mr. Farnell states that he has no recollection of asking for the application. On the last occasion of this kind the Chief Commissioner explained that the direct submission was unavoidable. Does any such reason exist in the present case?

I have some fifty or sixty applications of long prior date to Mr. Biggs', with more than one of which the Minister I know would have liked to comply.—W.W.S., 12 December, 1878.

The paper appears to have been taken or given to Mr. Blackman, but I am not aware who submitted it.—W.W.S., 12 December.

I showed the paper, which I asked for and obtained from records, to the Minister, who saw fit (certainly at my personal request) to appoint Mr. Biggs, and sent the paper to the Under Secretary, as falling within his province to carry out. I render this explanation as a matter of courtesy, not admitting the Under Secretary's right to question my conversations with the Minister, or my recommendations on matters within my own province. In this instance I required capable and experienced assistance. The Under Secretary already holds instructions to submit my recommendations on the same footing as the Surveyor General's, so that if I had submitted a formal recommendation (which I did not) the case could not admit of question between it and the fifty or sixty others referred to.

I think these small questions are better avoided in the present aspect of affairs, and I certainly have no time for them.—A.O.M., 12/12/78.*

1390. Will you look at this decision by Mr. Farnell, and tell me how it was communicated to Mr. Moriarty? I submitted my minute to the Minister, who gave that decision which I sent to Mr. Moriarty.

1391. Mr. Moriarty complains that you did not send it to him. He says, "the proceedings are aggravated by the indecency of the Under Secretary publishing it through the department before sending it to me"? I did not see any necessity to send it to him except in the usual course.

1392. That is you followed the practice which you always insisted ought to be carried out? Yes.

1393. Mr. Moriarty says here that you wished him to occupy a position different to that of every head of a department in the Colony? He is not head of a department.

1394. A position which he says, "I certainly cannot accept." Was not that written by Mr. Moriarty after the decisions of Mr. Driver and Mr. Farnell on the same point, although upon different cases? Yes, exactly the same point—the appointment of officers.

1395. One decision was given in June, 1877, and the other in January, 1878? Yes.

1396. This case you say arose out of Mr. Moriarty obtaining the appointment of Mr. Olliver to his branch? Yes.

1397. Did you obtain Mr. Farnell's confirmation to the appointment of Mr. Phillips in ignorance of the fact that Mr. Olliver had been appointed? No; it was on a written promise that Mr. Phillips should receive the first vacancy, and I contended that through Mr. Moriarty submitting that without informing me it placed the Minister in the position of appearing to break his promise.

1398. You knew nothing about Mr. Olliver having been appointed until after it was done? No.

1399. Nothing about the application until it was complied with? No; it was submitted to the Minister direct and approved. Mr. Farnell's approval was dated 28th January, 1878, and it was sent to me on the following day.

1400. What was the object of sending it to you? To carry out Mr. Moriarty's instructions, and prepare the letter informing the Treasury.

1401. In point of fact Mr. Olliver was appointed without your knowledge? Yes.

1402. And until you received Mr. Moriarty's minute forwarding the appointment you knew nothing about it? No. The course pursued was in reality making me the subordinate officer—carrying out his recommendations instead of carrying out my own.

1403. The last paragraph of Mr. Moriarty's minute is this:—"Mr. Olliver is at work, and has given up his position in the Audit Office. There is no doubt ample room for Mr. Phillips on the Under Secretary's staff"? Yes.

1404. What does he mean by that, that there is no doubt ample room for Mr. Phillips in your department? He means that there was plenty of work in those branches immediately under my supervision for extra clerks, and that Mr. Phillips could get a place under me; but that was not a matter for him to deal with at all.

1405. It is merely suggesting an easy way out of the difficulty? Yes.

1406. Because Mr. Farnell could not carry out his promise? The promise was carried out a short time afterwards.

1407. The next time, as it appears from these papers, we have this thing forced on again is in a minute written on the 5th of April, 1877, when Mr. Moriarty submits to the Minister the necessity of reconsidering so much of the arrangement for the division of the department as removed from his supervision the branches relating to auctions and pre-emptive leases. How had Mr. Moriarty the supervision of that before? He had no supervision of that beyond what is implied in the fact that he was chief clerk.

1408. He had no more supervision over it than he had over any other part of the business of the office? No; just the same.

1409. You still have charge of this lease business? Yes.

1410. It is one of those branches in which, according to the return sent to us from your office, there were no arrears on the 30th September? I think so.

1411. In the minute written by Mr. Moriarty on the 5th of April, 1877, there is a repetition of statements urged by him in his minute of the 22nd December, 1876? Yes; a repetition, word for word.

1412. These statements were contained in the minute which led up to the censure of Mr. Moriarty by the Cabinet acting on Mr. Stuart's minute, and to his apology to you? Yes.

1413. And was really the origin of that disturbance of which you were compelled to complain when Mr. Stuart was Acting Minister for Lands? Yes.

NOTE (on revision):—I wish to add that I sent a brief rejoinder to Mr. Moriarty's minute, which, however, he did not return to me.—W.W.S.

1414. The statement is a repetition of that which appeared in the minute which he said was in no way offensive? Yes; I never noticed that the statements were identical before. They are word for word the same.

W. W.
Stephen, Esq.
13 Dec., 1878.

1415. In your minute upon that you again appealed to the Minister for judgment as to your capacity, as you had done previously? Yes. I should like to state that the Chief Commissioner advances as a ground for removing the Lease Branch from my supervision that the lease business is quite unconnected with any other branch of the department, excepting the Conditional Sales Branch. But it is connected with that branch only in one particular. The Lease Branch deals with leases sold by auction, and with leases in virtue of land held under fee simple, which have no connection with the Conditional Sales Branch.

1416. In that minute Mr. Moriarty stated that he appealed to Mr. Brown. Is Mr. Brown the head of the Lease Branch? Yes.

1417. And Mr. Moriarty asks his opinion in support of the position he takes up himself? Yes.

1418. Is that in accordance with official rule that a subordinate should ask the opinion of a junior as to the propriety of an arrangement to which the head of the department objects? I think Mr. Moriarty says that he did it before the proposed separation was determined on.

1419. Under these circumstances were not Mr. Moriarty's suggestions asked for by you; and if you wished to have suggestions from any other subordinate in the department could you not have asked for them yourself? Yes.

1420. Was not this proceeding on the part of Mr. Moriarty seeking a report from a subordinate to assist him to carry out his views against the head of the department? I do not think anything of that report really. Mr. Brown is a very good officer, and I intended to have referred the matter to him lately. I think that after eighteen months experience his views may have been modified.

1421. Mr. Brown was obliged to give his views to his superior, Mr. Moriarty? I do not object to Mr. Brown giving them to him. Mr. Brown had been under him as chief clerk.

1422. There is no blame attaching to Mr. Brown? I do not think so.

1423. When Mr. Moriarty again brought that paper, which he had submitted to Mr. Driver, before Mr. Farnell in August last, he states that at the time he submitted that last minute to Mr. Driver you requested a week's time to reply to his memorandum, promising that the papers should be re-submitted to the Minister within such a time. What is your recollection of the circumstances? I recollect that there was some conversation to that effect, but I cannot say the time.

1424. Did you make any promise to him with reference to it? I made no promise to re-submit at any time. I believe I stated I would, but upon looking at the memorandum I determined to take no notice of it. It was very offensive. I could prove the grounds upon which the proposed removal was sought fallacious. I left it over, and told Mr. Driver that I had done so before he left office, and I think Mr. Driver gave me back the papers.

1425. This memorandum re-submitting these papers went direct from Mr. Moriarty to Mr. Farnell? Yes, in the same way as the others.

1426. In that he says:—"I presume this note is intended to make light of the matter, but I submit that neither the personal nor the official position of the Under Secretary warrants his affecting to treat with contempt the representations of an officer whose experience is certainly not inferior to his own, and whose views in the particular matter under question have been adopted by the Government and the Legislature." He finishes by saying that he denies the right of the Under Secretary to suppress it. Had he previously accused you of suppressing this? No; that minute to Mr. Farnell was the first renewal of it.

1427. This minute submitted by Mr. Moriarty to Mr. Farnell direct? Yes.

1428. You were directed to submit the minute referred to by Mr. Moriarty to the Minister? Yes.

1429. I do not see any decision on this? I first wrote a rather lengthy minute, in which I referred to Mr. Moriarty's unprovoked observations about my personal and official position. I stated that under the circumstances he might leave that alone. However, upon reflection I tore that up, and wrote this short minute instead:—"The minute referred to, which was left with me by Mr. Secretary Driver, has been shown to the Minister, who has not thought fit to make the alteration proposed. Possibly the matter may be brought before the Commissioners, when I shall be quite prepared to meet any of Mr. Moriarty's offensive and uncalled for remarks."

1430. There has been no decision since that of Mr. Farnell on that question between you and Mr. Moriarty? No.

1431. Either as to appointments or as to the Lease Branch there has been no decision adverse to the position upon which you insisted in reference to these matters? No; I think, however, there have been one or two decisions reaffirming that position, but none adverse to it.

1432. What position does Mr. Edwards occupy in the department? He is clerk in charge of the Auction Sales Branch, and the branch in which the land statistics are kept.

1433. Do you recollect anything which occurred between him and Mr. Moriarty not long since? There was a conflict between Mr. Moriarty and his brother, Mr. John Edwards, of the Miscellaneous Branch, who was at that time clerk in charge of one of the rooms of the Miscellaneous Branch.

1434. When did that occur? At the beginning of this year; in February, 1878.

1435. Can you tell us what it was. Mr. Edwards' complaint is here in full.

1436. It was reported to you? Yes; officially by Mr. Edwards, who stated that there was some question about extra accommodation being wanted for the clerks of the Conditional Purchase Branch; that Mr. Moriarty, with one of his clerks, went to Mr. Edwards' room and asked certain questions as to how many gentlemen were employed there? Mr. Edwards gave the information required, and Mr. Moriarty then replied that he saw a way of making room; that he would dismiss some of the numerous idlers employed there, alluding to the gentlemen working under Mr. Edwards.

1437. Had he any control over Mr. Edwards? No.

1438. Had he anything whatever to do with him? No, he had not. Mr. Edwards said that he scarcely understood what Mr. Moriarty meant; and Mr. Moriarty said, "Well I would commence with your room and dismiss four or five of the idlers employed in it." In this room, I may mention, there happened to be some clerks as good as any there are in the department. Mr. Edwards thought that Mr. Moriarty's tone and language were uncalled for and offensive to him, when Mr. Moriarty rushed up to him and asked him if he accused him of using offensive language, and Mr. Edwards said that if he used these terms he certainly must say so. Then Mr. Moriarty, without any warning, drew back, closed his fist, and struck Mr. Edwards a violent blow in the face. After that a short struggle ensued, and Mr. Moriarty went away.

- W. W. Stephen, Esq.
13 Dec., 1878.
1439. That took place in Mr. Edwards' room where Mr. Moriarty had no authority? Yes.
1440. His business did not take him there? He had no official right there.
1441. How was that matter disposed of? Mr. Moriarty was suspended, and called upon for an explanation. The papers came to me from the Cabinet two or three days after the affair happened. Then Mr. Moriarty made his explanation, and the result was that Mr. Farnell stated that if Mr. Edwards had refrained from taking the case into Court, and had looked solely to the head of his department for protection, it would have been his duty to have taken very serious notice of the matter; but that as Mr. Moriarty had been brought to the Police Office and fined, he was willing to dismiss the matter, with an expression of his deep regret that Mr. Moriarty should have so far forgotten himself as to commit what he must regard as an unprovoked assault upon a junior officer. And Mr. Farnell added, "The suspension may now be removed."
1442. Did you come into collision with Mr. Moriarty at all in this matter? I did eventually.
1443. In what way? The same day that I received the Minister's decision—I did not have the papers officially registered—I sent it to Mr. Moriarty for his information, with a request that he would be good enough to return it after perusal.
1444. The regular course would have been that you should have had it registered? Yes.
1445. You did not pursue that course which he had himself adopted but which he objected to your pursuing? I did not register it out of consideration to him. After a day or two Mr. Edwards, who had been assaulted, desires to see the decision, and as the person who had made the complaint he was entitled to see it. When Mr. Moriarty did not send it back to me I sent for it again two or three times, and not obtaining it I made a report to the Minister. That report the Minister referred to Mr. Moriarty. In that report I say: Notwithstanding the consideration I have shown him in not having it officially registered he wrote one of the strongest and most offensive minutes I have received from him. These papers were submitted by me to Mr. Farnell who said that he would look into the matter and deal with it, but after several weeks the papers were returned to me, no decision having been arrived at.
1446. You did not press your views with regard to Mr. Moriarty's minute? I pressed them strongly. They were referred to Mr. Moriarty who in reply wrote this minute.
1447. Mr. Ranken.] What was the date? February, 1878. His first made an explanation of the delay which was not quite borne out by the facts I think, but he excused himself on the ground that he was entitled to keep the paper long enough to copy it at least, and he said that he had not yet done or had time to do, not caring to take such documents out of the office.
1448. President.] What part of the minute do you object to specially? The part I chiefly complain of is this: "I have had some experience of official life, but I will undertake to say that in no other country or colony would the arbitrary and insulting line of conduct which the Under Secretary adopts towards me be tolerated." That is the part I chiefly object to. In reference to this statement I remarked, before submitting it to the Minister: "If this statement were not so untrue I cannot apply to it any other term, it would be simply absurd. I am willing to leave it to any Minister who has known me, or to the department generally, to say whether I am capable of arbitrary or insulting conduct to anyone." That was the end of that.
1449. You desired to offer some observations in regard to the case of Ellen Morris. There are the papers. What is the case, and how has it been dealt with? It was an application that a conditional purchase made by Ellen Morris might be declared void, as she was desirous of withdrawing it, and requesting that land might go to auction.
1450. Land which had been previously advertised for sale by auction? Yes, there were two lots but one conditional purchase. The application was from Mr. R. P. Raymond. Mr. William Edwards, the clerk in charge of the Auction Branch, who submits these things, recommended that these portions might perhaps go on for sale pending inquiry.
1451. What is the date of the letter? The 5th February, 1877. On the next day Mr. Edwards recommended: "These portions may perhaps go on for sale pending inquiry. The conditional purchase can be easily sustained if the facts are not as stated." The application stated that the party who selected these lots was desirous of withdrawing from the purchase. The Minister being absent I wrote on it: "Under statement in enclosed telegram now received the sale may go on and this conditional purchase be declared void." The telegram referred to was a telegram in support of the statement of Ellen Morris.
1452. When was that telegram sent? On the same day. The auction sale was on the 7th. The letter was received on the 5th, the telegram on the 6th, and my minute was written on the morning of the sale.
1453. The effect of that telegram was to ask that the sale might go on? Yes.
1454. Where was the sale to take place? At Urana, the head office of the district. Then the papers went in the usual course to the Chief Commissioner of Conditional Sales for the conditional purchase to be declared void in accordance with my minute.
1455. Was the land sold at auction? It was. Then the papers went on for the cancellation of the conditional purchase.
1456. After the sale? Yes. Mr. Moriarty submitted this minute to Mr. Driver, who had only been in office a short time. He submitted it without my seeing it, and he did not mention to me that he was going to point out what ought to have been done, or that I had made a mistake.
1457. Had he any means of knowing about the case before that? It was sent on to him at once.
1458. On what date? It would go the day after our action was taken.
1459. That would be the 8th? Yes.
1460. What is the date of his minute? He marks it as having been received by him on the 20th; but it was marked to him by us on the 8th. That was the day we sent it away. Why he did not get it until the 20th I cannot say.
1461. Would it not go direct? It must go through the Record Branch.
1462. It took twelve days to reach him? It may have been with Mr. Blackman or one of the clerks down stairs before it was submitted to Mr. Moriarty specially. Mr. Moriarty took this to Mr. Driver, and stated: "I am sorry to be under the necessity of pointing out that this proposed cancellation of a conditional purchase on the very eve of an auction, and for the purpose of allowing such auction to proceed is not only objectionable but plainly illegal. It is not open to a conditional purchaser to withdraw his selection, except on the ground of non-survey, which is not the case here." Then he goes on to say that it was not only irregular, but illegal, not having the sanction or presumed sanction of the Minister, and had not been referred to his branch, and therefore the auction sale could not be sustained.

1463. As far as you know, the reference from your department to Mr. Moriarty's branch being on the 8th, he ought to have got it on the 8th? Yes.

W. W.
Stephen, Esq.
13 Dec., 1878.

1464. Did Mr. Moriarty know at the time you wrote that minute that the Minister was then or had been absent on the day of your action? I think he must have known it. Upon that minute—without my being called upon to explain my action in any way, and as I must presume, under Mr. Moriarty's representations, because I could not tell what he added verbally to the Minister—Mr. Driver wrote: "The sale of these lots should not have been permitted. The whole proceedings have been irregular and illegal, and I cannot understand how in the absence of the Ministerial head of the department, the lands after being conditionally purchased were sold." I knew nothing about this for some days, and if I recollect rightly, it came to me by accident. Then I wrote upon it this minute: "I had to act in this matter upon my own responsibility for the Minister, there being at the time no Minister to appeal to, and the case being submitted about half an hour before the sale. I adopted a course which had on two or three occasions been sanctioned by previous Ministers, expressly guarding myself by stipulating that the sale would only hold good subject to the consent of the conditional purchaser, who had, in fact, already stated her willingness to give up the land." Then I proceeded to say: "Had I been afforded the opportunity of explaining my course of action, I feel confident that the Minister would not have written a minute amounting to a reprimand, and I trust, as this is an official record, that he will consent to withdraw or cancel the minute so far as it reflects upon my action as head of the department." To that Mr. Driver wrote: "Approved—see above," and he scratched out nearly the whole of his minute as you see here. I have not informed Mr. Moriarty of that. The telegram referred to in my minute by some means got detached from the papers, and, in submitting the case to Mr. Driver, it seems to me that he was trying to make out that to oblige Mr. Wilson and Mr. Raymond I had been stating something which was not the case, by referring to a telegram that did not exist. I arrive at that conclusion from this memo. which was addressed to Mr. Moriarty from the Telegraph Office, Sydney. "The station-master at Urana says there was no message from Ellen Morris, Urana, to the Under Secretary for Lands, on or about the 7th of February." As a matter of fact the telegram came from Jerilderie, which is a station in the land office district of Urana. That memo. was pinned on to the papers as submitted, and although there were no remarks in writing it appears to me to have been submitted to Mr. Diver, to show that I had never received the telegram of which I wrote in my minute. On seeing that memo. pinned on to the papers I referred to the Superintendent.

1465. To Mr. Cracknell? Yes; and I asked him how that came to be sent to Mr. Moriarty. The reply I got was: "The telegram from Jerilderie is correct, but there was no telegram from Urana on the same subject." I sent up to Jerilderie for a copy of the telegram and I received this certified copy. Mr. Moriarty's action shows me that he had wished it to be inferred I had stated what was untrue to oblige my friends.

1466. Your inference is that Mr. Moriarty, not seeing the telegram, doubted your statement and sent to the Telegraph Office and asked if there was any telegram for the Under Secretary from Urana? Yes; and when they said there was not, he pinned it on to the papers and submitted them.

1467. To represent that what you said was not true? I cannot draw any other inference than that.

1468. Was any other inference possible? I do not see that there was. I have not shown Mr. Moriarty these papers since Mr. Driver cancelled his decision.

1469. Have you kept them in your possession always? Yes.

1470. Are they registered? Yes, but I have kept them specially.

1471. You say that the course you pursued in that case was similar to the course which had been pursued in other similar cases? Yes; I can produce precedents where conditional purchases have been cancelled on similar grounds of application specially approved by the Minister. They were special cases.

1472. On what ground was that done—that after selection there could be no auction sale until the selection was cancelled or forfeited? Yes.

1473. Under what regulation are cancellations or forfeitures made? There is no special regulation declaring conditional purchases void.

1474. Mr. Ranken.] The applicant may withdraw? There is a special rule about the applicant withdrawing on the ground of non-survey within twelve months.

1475. President.] Mr. Moriarty says that is the only case in which that could be done? He is wrong. Strictly speaking it may be illegal; but in regard to conditional purchases the Minister has almost unlimited power, and frequent opportunities of action not expressly provided for by Act or regulation.

1476. Mr. Ranken.] As a matter of fact the application is often withdrawn, and the money returned? Yes; for non-survey within twelve months.

1477. President.] There are no regulations which state when forfeiture shall be complete, or cancellation effective? Forfeiture is made by the Governor and Executive Council, after inquiry, and upon proof of breach of conditions. A selection is cancelled or declared void from being illegal ab initio.

1478. No matter how many cases have been decided in this way do you not think the practice is a bad one? Yes.

1479. Do you not think that it opens the door to what is known as dummying? I think it is a bad thing, as a rule.

1480. Is it not one of the most certain ways of preserving land for auction to get it taken up by dummy selectors, who withdraw at the last moment? It is one of the plans pursued.

1481. And you allow that this practice would open the door to it? Yes, if carried out generally; but it is not so effectual a means of dummying as getting selections cancelled for non-survey within twelve months.

1482. But that is part of the law? Yes. Thousands of pounds have been refunded on account of non-survey within twelve months. Mr. Farnell decided some time ago that before an applicant could have his money returned he should prove that he had resided on the land. For a long time this decision was not acted upon, and there have been thousands of pounds refunded for non-survey during twelve months. That has been the most effectual method of dummying which has existed, for in nine cases out of ten the land is not surveyed within twelve months. Any dummy could pay his deposit, watch the time when the surveyor was coming, and send in an application for the refund of the deposit without his having resided at all. By that means the land would be shut out from free selection.

1483. That springs from a defect in the law? It is owing to Mr. Farnell's decision not having been carried out. For years these refunds were made without inquiry.

1484. Is there any regulation giving the Minister power to insist on residence? The point was raised two

W. W. Stephen, Esq. two or three times when Mr. Fitzpatrick was Under Secretary. I wrote a minute upon it, and Mr. Farnell wrote another. Eventually it was decided, upon the opinion of the Crown Law Officers, that residence could be insisted upon. One part of the Act provides that a selector is entitled to claim a refund of his money for non-survey of the land within twelve months, and another that the conditional purchaser must reside within one month.

13 Dec., 1878.

1485. Having placed himself in a wrong position by not residing, the man could not claim rights as if he were in a right position? Yes; and yet according to the mode of action which has been pursued, thousands of pounds have been refunded without any attempt to compel proof of residence.

1486. Was the decision of Mr. Farnell to which you refer given during his tenure of office as a member of the Parkes Administration? I think it was.

1487. He decided that point then? Yes.

1488. Has there been any action in the department contrary to that decision since? The Conditional Sales Branch went over to Mr. Moriarty, and for two years it was found that the refunds were made without any attempt to carry out the decision. A short time back Mr. Farnell held that his original decision must be carried out.

1489. When did that come under your knowledge? Only a short time back. I did not know what they were doing, and I am not blaming Mr. Moriarty.

1490. That is another of the evils of separation? Yes. I do not blame Mr. Moriarty.

1491. Having had the interpretation of the law is he not open to blame for dealing with applications for refund in that way? The point of law I suppose never came under his notice. The Minister's decision was only given about a month before he went out of office.

1492. Mr. Moriarty was chief clerk then? Yes.

1493. Would he not be likely to know of such a decision as that? I think so. I am not quite certain whether he was chief clerk at the time, but I think he was.

1494. Is there any means by which a stranger coming into an office can ascertain what decisions, such as that, have been given, or must he trust to chance? Supposing for example that on taking up this business Mr. Moriarty knew nothing about the decisions which have been given on certain points, is there any means by which he can ascertain them? Yes.

1495. Is there a record kept of decisions on doubtful points? There is supposed to be a book of precedents kept.

1496. Who keeps it? I cannot say. I have not seen it for some time.

1497. Where ought it to be? In the Conditional Sales Branch.

1498. Such a book would almost be necessary in every branch having to deal with the disposal of land? We have a book in which we keep special decisions of that kind.

1499. Is it kept up? I think so; it is kept by the heads of the branches in which the particular business is transacted.

1500. In dealing with this case of Ellen Morris did you rely more upon precedent than upon your own interpretation of the law? I relied partly on precedent. I was very much hurried at the time. Mr. Garrett was away, and I knew that Sir John Robertson was busy, and it was therefore that I acted in this matter on my own responsibility, taking care to state that if there were any objections on the part of the conditional purchaser the auction sale should be cancelled.

1501. If a stranger bought the land how could you cancel the sale? Auction sales frequently are cancelled on the ground that the land has been conditionally purchased.

1502. And that without any fault on the part of the purchaser? Yes; through mistakes on the part of the surveyor.

1503. Do the purchasers quietly submit to that? Yes.

1504. Do you not consider that the auction purchaser who fulfils all the conditions of sale is entitled to the land he buys? Yes; to the land the Government has contracted to sell.

1505. And that the Government have no right to cancel the sale? Yes; and if I mistake not we have a decision from the Crown Law officers that they are entitled to compensation.

1506. Do not these transactions show that there is a straining of the law on the part of the Government to meet particular cases? I think there is sometimes. Sometimes cases of great hardship occur, whether as regards selector, improver, or squatter; and if the law can be stretched without breaking it, it is at times made very elastic by the Minister.

1507. Where there is a chance of injury to people who have rights which ought to be recognized, do you not think it very wrong to ask them to give up their legitimate claims, and to use the power of Government to influence them? The question often is, which would be the most injured party, the man who has been allowed to conditionally purchase, and who, perhaps, has entered upon residence, or the man who has purchased at auction.

1508. Has not the first purchaser the prior right? Yes.

1509. If a conditional purchase is made you cannot affect the title? Yes.

1510. If you sell that land afterwards by auction, would it be honest to bully or frighten that man to give up the right which he has acquired in virtue of his conditional purchase without compensation? I cannot say.

1511. As between individuals, would it be legitimate or honest? I should think not, without compensation.

1512. Mr. Ranken.] Upon a general view of this case of Ellen Morris, does it not appear that Mr. Moriarty's view is sound legally, that is apart from his action with regard to you? Strictly speaking, under the law the conditional purchase stood.

1513. President.] And you had no right to sell that land? Yes; but I had seen the same sort of thing done before, and, being very much pressed for time, I acted in a hurry.

1514. You admit that Mr. Moriarty was right as far as the legal view of the case went? I admit that it was a question of doubtful legality.

1515. Mr. Ranken.] You do not object to his position? No; but I say he ought to have pointed out my mistake to me, and not have gone to Mr. Driver behind my back to obtain a reprimand without allowing me to see the case; and then I most decidedly object to his extraordinary course in sending up to the Telegraph Office to ascertain whether a telegram had been sent or not. I do not think that my action was perfectly legal, but no harm has been done under it, and besides it was a course sanctioned by precedent or I certainly should not have authorized it.

1516. President.] That would hardly be a safe way to administer the law? No; but I look upon the case as one in which no injustice could be done to individuals as both parties consented.

1517. Mr. Ranken.] But to act in that way would be opening the door to doubtful practices? Yes.

1518. President.] Would it not be very easy for any person interested in this auction sale to send a telegram in the name of Ellen Morris—you had nothing to prove that that telegram was from Ellen Morris? It may be so; I never look out for deceit of that kind.

1519. Although the application comes from the enemies' camp, as it were, from the person actually wanting the land? It came from the conditional purchaser.

1520. The letter had been delivered to you by Mr. Raymond? The telegram came direct to me, and followed the letter sent asking to withdraw the application.

1521. Does not the prompt action taken in that particular case show the great use of land agents? I do not know about that. Any case specially urgent is submitted immediately. If I had referred that to the Conditional Sales Branch the sale would very likely have been over before the case had been dealt with.

1522. If that telegram had come to the department direct it would have been handed over to Mr. Moriarty at once? No; I think it would have come to me. It was addressed to the Under Secretary. I should have dealt with it myself or sent it to Mr. Moriarty. It referred to an auction sale about to take place, and the action to be taken first was that which related to the Auction Branch.

1523. Mr. Ranken.] Mr. Raymond's letter was dated the 5th, you dealt with the case on the 7th, while it did not reach the Conditional Sales Branch until the 20th. It was acted upon by me on the morning of the sale, my telegram being sent to let the sale go on. The papers were sent to the Conditional Sales Branch on the 8th. That minute by Mr. Driver was the only minute which had been written against me during my service of twenty-five years; and when I pointed out all the facts to Mr. Driver he cancelled it. That reprimand was going about the department for a long time without my knowing anything about it.

1524. President.] Are there any other papers or matters you would like us to refer to? I think you have dealt with nearly all now.

1525. If you think it necessary to make any other statement, or to hand in further papers which will give us additional information, we shall be happy to receive them? There must have been other memoranda of which I have taken no particular note.

WEDNESDAY, 18 DECEMBER, 1878.

Present:—

MR. ABBOTT,

MR. RANKEN.

R. P. ABBOTT, ESQ., PRESIDENT, IN THE CHAIR.

A. O. Moriarty, Esquire, was called in and examined:—

1526. Mr. Ranken.] You are aware that the Secretary for Lands has caused to be laid before the Commission some papers which were brought before him in October last, and which relate to matters in dispute between the Under Secretary and yourself, so that they might inquire into and report upon them. The Commissioners desire to obtain all the information they can in regard to them. You will observe that the papers extend over a period of four or five years, but you are probably familiar with their contents? Yes; these papers which you hand to me (78-5,280, Ministerial) are not original papers at all.

1527. Those are the papers relating to matters which took place in October last? I understood from the Minister, in fact I suggested to the Minister, that the particular question referred to in these papers should be remitted to this Commission. I am also aware, in fact I myself have urged, that certain other matters should also be remitted to this Commission—these matters being, so far as I have been concerned in them, purely official matters. I have not raised, and it is not my intention to raise, any issue with Mr. Stephen as Under Secretary as regards our personal relations. If any such questions have been raised here they have not been raised by me.

1528. These are all official matters regarding the transaction of official business? These papers (78-5,280, Ministerial) relate to a question of office routine which I have for some time been pressing on the Government. The matter is to some extent already overlaid by personal questions; but I beg to state that it is not any wish of mine to enter into any personal matters whatever; but at the same time I am here to be examined.

1529. One set of papers appears to be connected with another, and I do not see how we can limit the inquiry to a mere question of routine? I have very strong reasons for not wishing to take any initiative in any course which may seem to impugn the Under Secretary's discretion, wisdom, or conduct in any way—reasons which are personal to myself, and purely apart from my official position. I therefore feel that if any such questions are forced upon me by the Commission or otherwise, I must meet them; but I do not seek them.

1530. It appears to me that we cannot limit the inquiry, except within the scope of these papers? This correspondence commenced last year in a memorandum addressed by me to Mr. Secretary Driver, in June, 1877. I think no question of personal disagreement is to be found here. The Under Secretary, acting on his own views—no doubt in his opinion correct views—had directed that all cases in which the action of the branches under his immediate control and the division under my control are concerned, should go direct from the Survey Department to him, and be submitted by him to the Minister, and a decision arrived at without any reference whatever to me, or to the registers, or the clerks, or to the information under my control. I objected to that arrangement at first, as detailed in this memorandum, and I found that some striking cases occurred which illustrated my views that such a routine would lead to public inconvenience. Under these circumstances I wrote this minute. I wish to make a marked distinction between matters of public business and private matters.

1531. It appears to the Commission that the relations of officials to each other in the Public Service must affect the conduct of public business? Of course; I am in the hands of the Commission, and any questions you may ask shall be answered to the best of my ability.

1532. President.] Hitherto we have taken in evidence any statements the witness thought fit to make? Sometime about the close of 1876, I think it was, after several matters had arisen which led to the re-organization of the department being made the subject of frequent conversation between the Minister, the Under Secretary, and myself —

1533. Mr. Ranken.] I may tell you that Mr. Stephen has been examined fully upon all the relations between you for the last four or five years, and we have thought it only right that you should have an opportunity of giving evidence on the same points? There, the Commission will see, how my hands are tied.

W. W.
Stephen, Esq.
13 Dec., 1878.

A. O.
Moriarty, Esq.
18 Dec., 1878.

A. O. Moriarty, Esq. tied. As I have stated already, I particularly wished to avoid making any charges against Mr. Stephen. I will not willingly attack him; but at the same time if Mr. Stephen has been examined upon our personal relations, I think I ought to know how far I am expected to go.

18 Dec., 1878.

1534. President.] Mr. Stephen has told us fully the position which you occupied one towards the other, of every way in which you can come into contact with one another. We cannot do more to inform you than that? Then it comes to this, that I have a series of charges made against me, charges of which I am ignorant.

1535. President.] Our examination has been based upon these papers? I do not know what is before you.

1536. Would it not be well that you should take these papers with which to refresh your memory. There is no desire on our part to press your examination to-day, if you desire time to examine the papers. The only information we can give you is the information contained in these papers—the papers upon which we have hitherto proceeded? That is not evidence, I suppose, as against me.

1537. Mr. Ranken.] These papers will convey the whole thing to you? Perhaps the Commission will allow me to say that up to some time in the beginning of last year there had been frequent disagreements, misunderstandings, and explanations between Mr. Stephen and myself. These matters terminated, as I understood, in a quarrel which I very much regret, which came under the consideration of the Cabinet, and was decided by the Cabinet in February, 1877. I do not know of any pending matter between Mr. Stephen and myself of earlier date than January, 1877. I have not heard of any matter.

1538. President.] We have examined Mr. Stephen fully on all the facts as they appear there, and as to what we thought was their effect.

1539. Mr. Ranken.] And these matters all appear to run one into the other? It comes to this, that matters of public business on which I have a right to speak are confused, and overlaid, and mixed up with miserable petty squabbles in such a manner that it is impossible to get away from them; I could not get out of them if every difference between Mr. Stephen and myself is to become, without end, order, or understanding as to what the issues are, the subject of maundering talk there will be no end to it.

1540. The inquiry is no doubt very wide, but it seems to us that these matters in dispute between you have never been ended, and I do not see how we can come to any conclusion upon them unless we go through the whole of them? I have no personal issue with the Under Secretary open at an earlier date than January, 1877, about when all matters between us were arranged by the personal intervention of the then Premier on the basis of a mutual expression of regret, apology, and withdrawal of all personal offence. I suppose some of these papers contain the matter to which I allude. This matter relating to pre-emptive auction leases, for example, is, I consider, a pending matter of public business as to which our views differ, and which I was quite prepared to ask the Commission to take up. This minute of the Secretary for Lands, calling attention to the irregularity of the chief clerk in signing letters on his own responsibility in the year 1874, is, as I understand it, a question which was settled at that time. I bowed to the decision then arrived at, although I thought it was wrong. That matter is nearly five years old, and if I am asked to go into this question of signing letters I think it is rather late in the day.

1541. This is one of the papers sent to the Commission to form the basis of enquiry to enable us to judge of the facts? If the Commission will be pleased to take these cases separately, in their proper order, and deal with each on its merits, it may perhaps obviate confusion. Anything I have done has been done on public grounds.

1542. We can take the papers separately? This case contains a Cabinet decision of the 8th February, 1877, and I submit has been decided. If Cabinet decisions do not decide matters I do not know where decisions are to be obtained. If the Commissioners desire to take these matters up, and give me an opportunity to read the papers, I cannot object; but I cannot help feeling regret that matters of pressing public concern should be overlaid, encumbered, and made little of as compared with these old personal matters. This matter was settled on the 8th of February, 1877.

1543. The gist of this particular inquiry now is not so much the working of the law as the relations which exist between Mr. Stephen and yourself? These papers, as I take it, relate to a personal matter which was dealt with and decided in this way: The Under Secretary made charges against me; I had made charges against him. His charges were referred to me, and mine to him. We each wrote our views on the subject, and I suppose there the matter ended as far as we were concerned. The matter remained in the hands of the Cabinet for a long time, until the Cabinet were going out of office. It was then that Sir John Robertson sent for me, and told me that they wished the matter settled before they went out of office. Speaking to me as a personal friend, and not as a Minister, he asked me to write anything I chose in the shape of an expression of personal regret to Mr. Stephen, and to leave it with him, saying that he would undertake to get a similar expression from Mr. Stephen. It will be apparent to any one who reads the papers that I lost my temper. I lost my temper, having been spoken to by the Under Secretary about what he was pleased to call my "damned impudence." I said if such language were used to me again I should kick the man who used it down stairs. I wrote Sir John Robertson a brief expression of regret, and he assured me that before it went further he would require Mr. Stephen to do the same with regard to me. Mr. Stephen's minute was altered, and I made the alteration of it a subject of complaint. As regards this matter I have now no further concern in it; but I shall be glad to answer any questions the Commissioners desire to ask. As regards this other matter—the routine of business as between conflicting conditional purchase applications, and applications to purchase in any other form—I make no personal complaint against the Under Secretary, but I do impugn the accuracy of his views upon the subject. These papers, I may mention, are not complete. I have some further papers by me on the subject. I have come prepared to be examined on questions of great public importance, and I am surprised to find that I am expected to answer matters of personal concernment between the Under Secretary and myself.

1544. President.] That is in consequence of these papers on this subject having been specially referred to us? With regard to these papers, October, 1878, they are not complete. They do not contain a series of rebukes to me by the Under Secretary, and a demand by me for my minute of June, 1877, to be produced. The Minister ordered that it should be sent to me for my perusal, and there was a minute by the Under Secretary contending that my minute of June, 1877, was not a public but a private document. Then I do not understand why some of these papers should be originals while others are merely copies. I do not understand why a matter so important as this should be sent to the Commission, some of the papers being the original documents while others are only copies.

1545. If you make that an objection [I suppose the originals can be produced? I do not make it an objection; but I think that in a case so important as this is the originals should have been sent.

A. O.
Moriarty, Esq.

1546. Do you think that the papers of which copies have been sent, are papers required in the department for purpose of official guidance? No. The first paper is a memo. of mine, dated 10th October, 1878. That is not here. There is a minute by the Minister dated 11th October; that is not here.

18 Dec., 1878.

1547. Mr. Ranken.] You think it would be more satisfactory if we had the originals? Yes, all the first part are sent in in copies.

1548. Could the originals be readily procured if we send a message for them? Yes.

1549. We will send for them, and meanwhile go on with the other papers? These papers are docketed: "Minutes respecting complaint of Under Secretary for Lands of improper conduct on the part of Mr. Moriarty, Chief Commissioner of Conditional Sales. See Under Secretary's memo. of the 5th February, 1878, and previous papers." There are two matters mixed up in these papers. One has reference to the appointment of a clerk, and the other has reference to a minute of Mr. Secretary Driver, in which an instruction was given to me as to routine, which was returned by me on the same day to the Minister with what was practically a complaint against the Under Secretary, and which I have not seen since the date of it on the 12th June, 1877. I merely wish to observe that there are two totally distinct matters involved in these papers docketed D. Paper E has reference to my refusal to return to the Under Secretary when demanded some papers with regard to my own suspension from office, and which is dated the 4th April, 1878, since which date the Minister has not given any instruction with regard to it. The Minister expressed to me an opinion of the Under Secretary's action in this matter as "paltry." Having seen these papers, I may say that the matters which they involved are not what I anticipated, but with one exception, B, I am prepared if the Commission desire to deal with them.

1550. In what position were you in in 1874? I was then chief clerk of the office.

1551. Do you remember the circumstances which gave rise to this memorandum by Mr. Farnell? I remember the Under Secretary being absent, and that the letters came to me to be signed. I signed them with my own name, as the Under Secretary had been accustomed to sign his correspondence ordinarily, not adding to my signature either my own official designation or anything to show that I was signing under the official responsibility of another officer.

1552. That was a deviation from the etiquette of the office? I think not. According to my views that was the correct course to take; and I believe that is the course taken in the large departments at Home; but whether it was regular or irregular I was prepared to accept and act upon instructions in the matter, but I took exception to the Under Secretary taking certain letters which were in the office not despatched, and ordering one of the clerks without my knowledge to make a certain addendum to my signature. I contended that he had no right to alter my signature—that he had a right to cancel or proscribe my action, but that he had no right to meddle with my signature.

1553. What had been the previous practice with regard to the chief clerk? The practice in many cases is for the officer signing a document to append his official designation after his signature; and where that is the case any other officer signing for him would write "for" before the official designation of the officer for whom he signed.

1554. The chief clerk would write "for the Under Secretary"? Yes; where it was the practice of the Under Secretary to append his official designation to his signature. In 1874 the routine was that nothing but the name of the officer should be appended to the letter. I appended my signature to the letters in the same way as the Under Secretary had been in the habit of doing, not assuming to write in his name or vary his authority, but to convey the instructions of the responsible Minister.

1555. I believe Mr. Parkes drew attention to the matter? I think not. I think the Minister's attention was drawn to it by Mr. Goodman in the Colonial Secretary's Office.

1556. Mr. Farnell, in this minute, says:—"The Colonial Secretary has personally called my attention to the fact that certain documents bear the initials and signature of the chief clerk that should have borne the initials and signature of the Under Secretary"? Yes, I see that is so, but I believe it was Mr. Goodman who called the Colonial Secretary's attention to it. I consider that that matter was terminated by an instruction to me which I accepted and acted upon.

1557. In your memo. you say you would attend to the Minister's wish in the matter, but you went on to say:—"Personally, I should very much prefer not signing at all, and have only done so with the object of avoiding injurious delays—the more undesirable in the Under Secretary's absence that even when he is present the delays in the signature of correspondence are so unparalleled and prejudicial to the Public Service." Why did you use this opportunity to bring a direct charge against the permanent head of your department? Am I to justify or explain my having put these observations there now? When I put them there I thought the case so grave that it was my duty to call attention to it while the matter was under discussion.

1558. As chief clerk in the Lands Office, did you consider it proper to pass a censure upon the head of the department? Not quite, but I felt that I was justified by circumstances in calling the Minister's attention to a matter pending official decision.

1559. That was a general charge? It was a particular charge at the date it was made.

1560. Is there a particular charge mentioned there. Your minute is dated the 27th of June, 1874, and it contains these words:—"Injurious delays—the more undesirable in the Under Secretary's absence that even when he is present the delays in the signature of correspondence are so unparalleled and prejudicial to the Public Service"? That referred to a matter then pending, and then admitting of instant inquiry.

1561. Was Mr. Stephen absent at that time? Not at that time.

1562. You say "even if present"? I say "when he is present." I say that if I had been capable of writing such a minute as that in Mr. Stephen's absence I should be worthy of something more than a reprimand. This minute was written to Mr. Stephen.

1563. Was the tone of that memo. such as you would consider proper if addressed to you by a subordinate in your own branch? Under like circumstances I think it would have been so.

1564. Would you detail the circumstances? I am expected to take up a matter nearly five years old. This is one of these matters which I considered to have been definitely dealt with at the time.

1565. As it appears there it is very like a subordinate cautioning his superior as to his duty; but your explanation may set the thing in a different light altogether? I would simply observe that it was the action of a subordinate truly; but of a subordinate who was chief clerk in a large department, appointed at a comparatively high salary, and holding a position next in seniority to the Under Secretary himself, and and it had reference to a matter in regard to which I had been transacting the Under Secretary's business. It was not the action of a subordinate merely, but of a subordinate who was next in authority to the Under Secretary.

1566. But was so grave a remark as that justified by any specific statements? It was made at a time when the circumstances could be thoroughly tested. As bearing upon this I think I have other papers by me which I think will illustrate it.

1567. Mr. Stephen mentions another paper which is not amongst these papers but which he believes is in your possession—a paper of the 7th, which was last in your hands. Would that throw more light on this matter? There is no reference in Mr. Farnell's minute to any other letter of mine.

1568. Mr. Stephen in his memo. of the 10th says:—"I would remark that one of the two minutes which the chief clerk specially requests, in his memo. of the 7th instant, to be submitted and to the terms and language of which I took chief exception, had already with my reply to it been destroyed by Mr. Moriarty. It is rather surprising therefore that he should make a request which he had himself rendered it impossible for me to fulfil?" I do not remember anything about that. I may have torn up some paper which I thought withdrawn. I remember writing a private note to the Under Secretary with regard to our relations.

1569. That probably was the memo. of the 7th, alluded to by Mr. Stephen, and which Mr. Farnell also mentions as the other memorandum separately submitted? No; I do not think that can be it. The Under Secretary says I destroyed it. I have no recollection of doing so. If I did destroy any document I have no doubt it was consequent upon something else.

1570. Were not all these memoranda public documents? Certainly.

1571. Recorded? They were not recorded. At this interval of time I have no recollection of any particular documents referred to. If I have destroyed anything it must have been some mere scrap of paper, some remark which I did not consider as official, or which was part of something which was withdrawn.

1572. Is there anything further you would wish to say about that? Only this, that upon receiving the Minister's last minutes, in which he was rather severe upon me, I waited upon him and pointed his attention to circumstances which were apparently misconceived by him, and he then told me he had not read the minutes.

1573. Who—the Under Secretary? The Minister told me that he had not read the minutes.

1574. Who was the Minister? Mr. Farnell. The Under Secretary and I had been personal friends as boys, lads, and men, and the Under Secretary's father was a very dear and old friend of mine. That was the first difference between us, and I felt considerable soreness about it, and regretted to be at issue with him at all. I wrote him a private note, which I have no doubt he has still, but which he never answered.

1575. That can hardly be the document mentioned here? No; I wrote to the Under Secretary a private note, begging that these differences between us might not be proceeded with, making some observation such as this, that he could easily do me a great deal of harm if they were proceeded with, and that I might be forced into doing him harm. I asked that all differences might be terminated. I wrote what was intended to be a free hearty request for a termination of the matter. That I regarded as the end of this business, and I have heard nothing more about it since. I did that after having seen the Minister, and after the Minister told me that he had not read these papers. I do not wish to say anything more about these papers of the beginning of 1874, which I am now asked to explain, without having seen a single paper connected with the matter since.

1576. The papers came to us as representing the relations between you? Quite so. I think it is very unfortunate that matters of public importance now pending should be mixed up with these old dead and buried squabbles.

1577. Do they not involve a question of routine? Not at present, because two years ago I was put in a position independent of the Under Secretary. For the last two years by the action of the Government I have been made the official organ of the Minister for Lands and of the Government with regard to the business placed under me, so that our relations are not such as would be affected by these papers.

1578. Does not the Under Secretary remain permanent head of the whole department? Quite so, in the same sense that the Principal Under Secretary is the head of the Department of the Police, or the Under Secretary to the Treasury is the head of the Department of Customs.

1579. The routine work of the conditional sales is in your hands? Entirely.

1580. But any matter beyond mere routine passes on to the Under Secretary? No, excuse me, it does not.

1581. Would you state what is your position with regard to the business? At the latter end of 1876 it was agreed between the Minister for Lands, the Under Secretary, and myself, that it was necessary to make some new arrangement with regard to the executive management of the department. At Mr. Garrett's request I put on paper a series of suggestions, which I gave to the Under Secretary. I submitted them to him, I being then in the subordinate position of chief clerk. The Under Secretary had some conversation with Mr. Garrett about them, but nothing whatever was being done. At last the Minister requested me to obtain them for him. I went from the Minister's room to the Under Secretary and obtained them; and I saw nothing more about it for sometime, but on the 20th December, 1876, a minute was written by the Under Secretary in which he took up as if by his own initiative the same subject, embodying to a large extent my suggestions, but leaving out some matters which I thought of great importance. However, this minute provides that:—

1. That the Under Secretary retains the supervision and immediate control of the Roads and Ministerial, Miscellaneous, Record, Auction, Lease, and Deeds Branches, the duties appertaining to which are shown by the enclosed printed statement.

2. That the conduct of the conditional purchase business—Correspondence, &c. (which has attained the dimensions of a department in itself almost)—be delegated in like manner to the chief clerk, who should submit all papers to the Minister, carry out his decisions without reference to the Under Secretary, and be the recognized medium of communication with the public and officers concerned in all matters connected with the business so entrusted to him.

3. That as part of, and to give effect to, the above propositions, the designation of the chief clerk (who is already a Commissioner) should be changed to that of "Chief Commissioner of Conditional Sales," or such other as the Minister may see fit to recommend, and that the salary of chief clerk should merge in that to be granted to him as such Commissioner.

4. That the Under Secretary, whilst abstaining from active interference with the conditional purchase business or staff, should be recognized, as at present, as the official head of the whole department,* and that the separation of duties as above indicated shall not be held in any way to alter the constitution of the department as a whole, nor disturb the present relative position and seniority of any of the officers of the respective branches, which should remain exactly as at present,—and that on this understanding all matters of a ministerial or financial nature, appointments, promotions, &c., to whichever branch appertaining, should be submitted to the Minister, through the Under Secretary, in accordance with the usual official practice.

* These words "shall be recognized as the official head of the whole department" were in my original minute.

A. O.
Moriarty, Esq.
18 Dec., 1878.

1582. What is meant by the term ministerial there—matters in dispute which require special reference to the Minister? No; the word ministerial is one which in the Lands Department has a special meaning, because in no other department probably is there a special branch called the Ministerial Branch. Ordinarily, the word would be understood in the sense you assume. This minute, you will observe, provides that, in the same manner as the Under Secretary, I should submit all papers to the Minister, and carry out his decisions without referring to the Under Secretary.

1583. I had in my mind cases in which improvement purchases and conditional purchases clash;—are not cases of that kind cases in which the head of the administrative department must be referred to? No doubt; but I imagine you do not suppose they are not to come at all to the department in which one interest is entirely dealt with. That is a question as to which I have sought reference to the Commission.

1584. I should assume that the obvious way to deal with questions of that sort would be by conference and mutual understanding? Quite so. I am confining myself to the bearing of present relations between the Under Secretary and myself. I have not been for some years chief clerk in the office, or the personal subordinate of the Under Secretary, for with regard to my own business I am in direct communication with the Minister, and communicate directly his instructions to the public.

1585. You said, I think, that Mr. Stephen's memorandum, embodying your suggestions, submitted them in a mutilated state? What I said was that he submitted a memorandum, taking the initiative to himself, in which he embodied certain of my suggestions and left others out which I thought very material.

1586. I hold in my hand a minute written by you, in which you say "the only question remaining to be decided as between the Under Secretary's views and those submitted by me has reference to the lease business, which does not involve the general arrangement, and can be subsequently discussed more at length and settled on its merits. The papers are submitted with reference to the general measure which is urgent"? There was one important matter in it besides that, and that was my relation with regard to the other officers of the department. The Under Secretary ranks next to the Minister; and I suggested that in the event of his absence or death his duties should as of course, and pending the appointment of a successor, devolve upon the officer indicated as next in seniority. That was my position while I was chief clerk; and I wrote that so that I might not be placed at a disadvantage in consequence of the change, because I was giving up an office of some importance in the department to take one which was unsettled as regarded the future, and I therefore thought it important that I should be protected. I thought that was of consequence, and that was omitted by the Under Secretary.

1587. Your memorandum of suggestions appears to have been submitted by you without reference to the Under Secretary? I got those papers from the Under Secretary at the Minister's request. Those words which you have referred to were written by me, I think on my way to the Minister's room, and at the Minister's request, and really with a view to a compromise. One of the subjects which I complained of in this matter was that this minute of mine had been suppressed by the Under Secretary—that it never saw the light—that the Cabinet were left to come to a decision on the subject without having seen my views. I thought that I had been hardly treated in the matter.

1588. This minute of yours was withdrawn by Mr. Stephen? The course taken, as I was informed by Mr. Garrett, was this:—It was submitted to the Minister by Mr. Stephen, and handed by the Minister to Mr. Stephen with instructions to carry it out. What was done next was that a new minute was written by the Under Secretary without reference to mine, my suggestions not having been referred to in any way. What I complained of was that the Cabinet were invited to come to a decision on a partial knowledge of the views of the officers concerned in the department, and I was told of it last. That matter is one, and the matter of 1874 is another; but I refer to these departmental arrangements in this place merely as showing that my relations to Mr. Stephen, as chief clerk to the Under Secretary, do not necessarily illustrate our relations now, he being the Under Secretary and I being in charge of an important division of the department, taking my instructions direct from the Minister, and communicating them to the public without reference to the Under Secretary.

1589. Referring to the same matter, I find there is a minute of yours, dated the 22nd December, 1876, in which in re-opening that question of the lease business you seem to reflect upon Mr. Stephen. You say: "Without even implying anything to the disadvantage of the Under Secretary, it is palpable that this business has not engaged in any degree his interest or attention. No instructions or suggestions of any significance, if any at all, has ever emanated from him with respect to it; it is not too much to say that he does not realize its present state or bearings, and is not familiar with the present if he is with the former law regarding it." Can you give us any reason for making that comment? I shall be very happy to go into that matter if the Commission will allow me when it comes in order.

1590. This is the next case in order? Before coming to that I wish to supplement this case by some official minutes, dated March, 1875, which have not been referred to the Commission, and which bear upon the relations of the Under Secretary and myself, in such a way as to show that they should be sent; and, with the permission of the Commission, I should like to read them.

1591. We shall be glad to hear them? An instruction was given by the Under Secretary to take a particular course which I thought was in itself illegal. The course which the department was ordered to take had not the sanction of the Minister, and I did not believe that if the Minister were cognizant of the circumstances he would give the instructions. I therefore wrote a minute, calling attention to certain considerations which I supposed had not presented themselves to the Under Secretary, and I urged him not to take the course in question until he should have consulted the Minister. The Under Secretary did not submit my minute to the Minister, but he did submit the papers to the Minister for his approval, and he then wrote me a minute of reprimand which I have here. It is to this effect: "I have signed the enclosed letter, written at the chief clerk's instance. I did not submit officially the memo. which he refers to. I was quite aware of the points raised in it. It was no use asking the Minister, who is busy enough, to peruse a lengthy statement, when I could explain to him in a dozen words, as I did, and as Dr. Wilson did, the bearing of it upon the case under reference. As Mr. Moriarty states in a memo. of his written sometime back, I have a right to do as I please with any minute written by him for consideration as an almost invariable rule—I submit or peruse them with a deference due to Mr. M's. ability and judgment. But it sometimes happens that his minutes aim simply at proving that action directed by me is wrong and having it altered. Irrespectively of the circumstance that I do not care or choose to have my decisions officially cavilled at in the way they are, I venture to express my belief that in conditional purchase and all other matters coming under the Alienation Act, I have had from the various positions I have occupied in this department more experience than the chief clerk has, and I do not feel inclined to admit that my treatment or judgment in such cases is at fault. Possibly also there may be 'another person' of the same opinion. Be that as it may, I am responsible to the Minister, and am prepared to justify any action I take or desire to be taken. I trust therefore that Mr. M. will now abstain from officially commenting, as in this case, upon any course I may adopt with regard to papers sent up by him or others in the office.—W.W.S., 3 March. To be returned." This is my reply; and I produce the case as illustrative of our relations. I wrote: "I do not think the Under Secretary will find any authority to endorse the view that he is warranted in withholding or destroying public official documents, written under the full sense of the responsibility thereby incurred by his subordinate officers on matters for the Ministers decision, merely because they dissent from or go to question his own views. This case aptly illustrates the position. I urged upon the Under Secretary that he was taking an illegal course for the benefit of a dummy selector, and I did so with the sole object of preventing the error from going further and before the Minister had ratified it. On full reflection I do not believe the Minister had he had the opportunity of reading my minute would have ratified that course: and, entertaining the views that I do, I conceive that I should have signally failed in my own duty, if I had allowed my apprehension of displeasing the Under Secretary to prevent me from giving expression to those views, leaving it to the Responsible Minister to deal with them as he might think fitting; and with me if I either transgressed my own proper province or took up an untenable position in the matter. I am afraid all this difficulty arises from the Under Secretary failing to discriminate between the cause of my taking certain action and the aim that he imputes to me. I give him every credit for the mature experience and the sound judgment that he claims. I do not pretend to compete with him in either, nor do I see why any such comparison need arise; but if, as sometimes happens, I see what he does not appear to me to see, and think him from haste or whatever other cause to be leading the Minister or the department into error for want of something being pointed out, it becomes my duty to point this out; and if I failed to do so, I should fail in my duty to him, to the Minister, and the public. This is a very different thing from aiming at proving him in the wrong. Such aims, if I entertained them, would be best served by letting him remain in the wrong. I feel, however, and I must beg the Under Secretary to understand, that with every desire to recognise and fulfil the duty due to him as my official superior, the duty which we both owe to the Government and the public must always with me have the paramount claim.—A.O.M., 8/3/75."

1592. Do you know what was the result of that case? My opinion was verified by the result, and I will mention what the case was. A selection had been taken up on a run by the son of the lessee acting as agent for the selector. It was reported by the surveyor, or in some other way, that the selector was not resident. The Minister for Lands directed that the selection should be forfeited and it was forfeited by the authority of the Governor and Executive Council. The instruction given by the Under Secretary was that the land agent was not to take other applications for the same land. I submitted to him, with all respect, that the Minister for Lands could give no such instructions by law, that it was open to the Executive Council to reverse their forfeiture if they thought fit; but that under the law, the selection having been forfeited, it was open to any person else to make an application for the land. I considered that the department in ordering the land agent not to receive any application for this particular land were in effect ordering him to commit a misdemeanour.

1593. Ordering him to violate the law? Yes. My minute on the subject never reached the Minister; and I thought the Under Secretary was wrong in keeping it from the Minister.

1594. President.] Have you the names of the parties to that case? I forget just now that of the selector.

1595. Mr. Ranken.] The case can be identified? Yes.

1596. President.] You do not recollect the names? Not that of the selector; but I can trace it. I know the others. I stated my reasons for believing that it was a dummy selection; that it was taken up by the son of the lessee of the run as the agent for the selector; that the selector was reported non-resident—that the son of the lessee pointed out the boundaries to the surveyor—that the correspondence about the case was signed by the son of the lessee as the selector's agent; and finally, that the request that the land agent should be instructed not to receive any other applications for the land came from the agent of the lessee.

1597. Mr. Ranken.] Were you led to form your opinion from the complexion of the whole affair? The character of the case was apparent to me on looking at the facts. My attention was first attracted by the circumstance that I had on other occasions urged that this course of instructing the land agent not to receive applications was illegal; and ultimately, at my instance, an instruction was made by the Secretary for Lands definitely forbidding the course that applications were not to be taken for forfeited selections. I did not seek to prove that the Under Secretary was wrong, but I did seek to keep the department right.

1598. Referring again to the papers of 10th October, 1878, are the papers which I now hand to you the originals? Yes; I presume these papers are the same. Mr. Farnell's minute is dated 15th October on my own minute.

1599. You have finished with regard to the other matter? Yes; but I confine myself entirely to that which seems to arise out of what is brought before me here. I do not wish to make complaints against the Under Secretary.

1600. The first paper in this case purports to be a minute written by you on the 10th of October, 1878? Yes.

1601. You were then in your present position as Chief Commissioner of Conditional Sales? Yes.

1602. I suppose that when you mentioned that certain matters were settled you referred to the documents you have and to some agreement with Mr. Stephen. Was there any record of that agreement? There is no record of an agreement.

1603. This is the general arrangement come to on the 20th December, 1876? Precisely.

1604. And the purport of this minute is that that arrangement had been set aside by Mr. Stephen? Quite so.

1605. You referred to what took place in June, 1877? Prior to that, I think. As to this I wrote: "This arrangement which had been arrived at by agreement was, however, set aside by an instruction from the Under Secretary to the effect that all such cases were to be referred direct to him, and not at all to me." As to this the Under Secretary charges me with misrepresentation, with having misled the Minister.

What

A. O.
Moriarty, Esq.
18 Dec., 1878.

What I called an agreement was subsequent to the dispute which had been settled by the Cabinet, and to which you have already referred, and at a time when the Under Secretary and I were not on speaking terms; in fact we have not been since. I may explain that the papers come direct to me or to the Under Secretary, according to arrangement, for submission to the Minister; but it occurred to somebody, not to me (the Deputy Surveyor General, I think, or to one of the leading draftsmen), to raise the question as to how these cases were to be dealt with in which the business of both branches of the department was involved, and a suggestion was made—not by me, but by the Deputy Surveyor General or one of the leading draftsmen—that the papers should go from the Survey Office, to one division of the Lands Office or the other, according as the action to be taken had to be first taken in one or the other. The suggestion was personally made as I was told, for I was not present, agreed to by the Under Secretary, and acted upon for some time. Then the Under Secretary took this matter up, and brought it before Mr. Driver. Mr. Driver's concurrence in his minute was written on the 4th June; but although the Under Secretary circulated that decision through the department, he omitted to inform me of it. I never saw the minute until after Mr. Driver's concurrence had been given. Not in fact, I believe, until a week or two ago.

1606. You appear to say there that the whole arrangement was set aside by the Under Secretary, and in that connection I wish to draw your attention to Mr. Driver's signature? Yes; I am explaining that I did not see it. I thought that a minute of mine, dated June, 1877, would prove that I had not seen it. When I saw the Under Secretary's complaint that I had misled the Minister I was quite surprised. I had a distinct impression that the Under Secretary alone had given the instruction. I was certain that I had not seen any instruction. I was anxious to see the paper, and I wrote this minute of June, 1877, on the subject, in which I complained of the matter.

1607. That minute of yours appears to have been written a week or two after the approval of Mr. Driver? Yes; and I complained that I was not informed of it. I said, "I now learn indirectly, for, as in other cases, the proper course of first informing me of matters first concerning me has, it would appear advisedly, been departed from, that a minute has been placed before the Minister by Mr. Stephen and endorsed with his approval, in which the foregoing arrangement has been upset and a new one directed to be followed, under which all such cases are to be submitted to the Under Secretary, to whichever branch the recommendation or question may primarily relate. It would have been my duty to have submitted some of the many reasons against this alteration had I been allowed the opportunity."

1608. Was not the minute promulgated through the department? Yes; but it was never sent to me, nor was any officer under my instructions informed of it.

1609. It was at cross purposes? It was more than cross purposes. I do not make it a matter of complaint now; but it goes to show how much force there was in the allegation that I had misled the Minister as to papers I had never seen.

1610. Must not the Public Service work at a great disadvantage where the superior officers are not in full accord? I think so, but I think also that it is necessary that there should be two willing to agree; and as the remark has been made I may say this, that I have been strictly on my guard not in any instance to allow my personal relations with the Under Secretary to interfere with or delay business.

1611. This minute of Mr. Driver was promulgated through the department without being brought to your knowledge or to the knowledge of any of the officers under you? Without my knowing anything about it.

1612. When you stated that the old arrangement had been disturbed by Mr. Stephens' authority you were not aware that the Minister had authorized the change? I see that in June, 1877, I was made aware of it indirectly.

1613. It came to your knowledge then? I was not aware of it when I recently called Mr. Farnell's attention to the same subject.

1614. In your letter of more recent date you seem to have forgotten that? When I wrote recently I must have forgotten it. In June, 1877, I spoke of having learnt indirectly. I should not have used that expression if I had seen the paper. I see that the paper is noted—"Approved.—R.D., 4 June, 1877"; that it then went to the Record Branch for notation of the decision; that it went to the officer who deals with the Conditional Sales Register, but who was in no way under my control. He was under the record clerk. The transfer of his business to me was a much later matter. He saw it, but I did not see it. It was then noted to the Surveyor General. The Deputy Surveyor General returned it when noted, and it has remained with the Under Secretary ever since. I never saw this paper at all. It first concerned me, and I ought to have seen it.

1615. What particular change did it make in the routine? This: that cases in which conditional purchases came into conflict with other claims were brought under the Minister's notice without reference to any of the officers of the Conditional Purchase Branch, without reference to any of the information which the conditional sales registered showed, and they were therefore brought before the Minister in an incomplete state.

1616. Does not Mr. Stephen pass these papers on to you? No; ordinarily the course would be that after the decision was given it would be sent to me to be carried out.

1617. Would you, as the head of the Conditional Sales Branch, not be heard? No.

1618. Neither before nor after the Under Secretary? Neither, ordinarily.

1619. But before the final decision? I was not heard; and, therefore, it was that I complained; and cases occurred which would not have occurred if the papers had been referred to me. There was one remarkable case in which a nefarious job was almost perpetrated. It went to this length, that the Under Secretary recommended the Minister to approve of the payment of over £1,600 of deposits to dummy selectors, in a case which had been carefully manipulated by the agents of the parties concerned. That case I referred to in my minute of June 20, 1877. This routine has the effect of making the Minister give a decision on imperfect information, and without the advice of the officers who are dealing with an important part of the case, and it leaves the door open to jobbery. The Under Secretary in one of these minutes complains of me for having thrown out this imputation of jobbery; and I therefore take the first opportunity of saying that I have not charged the Under Secretary with jobbery. I should be very sorry to do it; but I do say that the routine is a routine which leaves the door open for jobbery to be perpetrated.

1620. In dummifying, such as the case you referred to? It leaves the door open for the breach of the law.

1621. You do not impute jobbery to any officer of the department? No.

A. O.
Moriarty, Esq.
18 Dec., 1878.

1622. It encourages people outside the department to tamper with the Act? People out of the department are very well informed of the loop-holes of the Act.

1623. The proposed refund of £1,500 to dummy selectors was a case in point? Yes; in that case I think a large area of land was measured for auction near Moama. In that case Mr. Fisher was concerned. Mr. Fisher, I believe, would be quite incapable of doing anything which he thought was not right; but in that case some agent or other person in his interest made twenty-three applications to select the same land, the land selected being so cunningly described that it was difficult to identify it as the same land which was to be put up for sale by auction. The auction sale took place, and the land was sold to Mr. Fisher. While the application for the deeds was being pressed on the one hand, the agent for the selectors was pressing for the refund of their money. They said, "You have sold our land, pay us back our money."

The case came on to me with instructions from Mr. Driver to issue the refund vouchers.

1624. Are these copies of the papers? They appear to be. Mr. Stephen, in his minute on the case of 23rd May, 1877, stated: "The deeds of grant having been issued for the auction purchases, and the lands having, it is stated, been since transferred to other parties, the application now made had better be complied with. There can be no blame attached to any branch of this department in the sale of the land, seeing that in the Charting Branch of the Survey Office the lands were passed on for auction seven or eight months after the conditional purchases were made, shewing thereby how vague the descriptions were. It is fortunate that the conditional purchasers have not insisted upon their claims, but have consented to take back their money, otherwise great inconvenience and necessity for compensation might have arisen. Auction sales to stand." On the 25th May, 1877, Mr. Stephen wrote these minutes: "At the time these sales took place there was no draftsman attached to the Moama office, or the errors might not (very likely) have happened. I think that this illustrates the necessity of giving effect to the recommendation contained in my report last year, after inspection of the land offices at Albury, Hay, &c., that all the land offices of importance should have periodically, at short intervals, the services of a draftsman." And, "When necessary action has been taken in Conditional Sales Branch, please return to me." On the 28th May I wrote this minute, "Let me see the C. P. papers and those herein referred to as to the withdrawal of the application." On the 30th May Mr. Driver wrote this minute: "To be inquired into by Commissioner before anything further is done."

1625. The papers do not show the final result? It is not shown in this case. It was a clear case of attempted jobbery, and very nearly consummated jobbery. The selections were ultimately, after inquiry, forfeited, and the money is now in the Treasury. This is not the only case of the kind; abundant cases of this kind might be obtained.

1626. We should be glad to obtain the particulars of other cases of the same kind? —

1627. President. If we could get any other cases of the same kind it is important that they should come before the Commission? The case I refer to is illustrative of this fact, but there is more than that in the case; for I submit that an officer in my position would hesitate to ask the Minister to reconsider his decision, because to do that is to assume that he has not fully considered the matter. Nothing but an extreme case would justify an officer in taking it back to the Minister; and unless cases can be shown to be palpably and unwarrantably wrong, I do not feel that I ought to take them back to the Minister; but I submit that I ought to be allowed to deal with the cases before the Minister gives his decision upon them. When inquiry came to be made by me into these cases the papers showed me, from the mere names of the parties, that all the strings were being pulled by one man, and the real character of the case could easily have been disclosed if the papers had come to me before the decision of the Minister was given; but the action of the department was such that the Under Secretary writes to the parties to tell them that they will get their money back, while I have to write and tell them that the selections have been forfeited. I found that the party who had taken up all the selections telegraphed to the Sydney agents to get the deposits returned at one time; and at another to wait awhile until pressure was used to get the deeds.

1628. That case seems to show the necessity for submitting the matter to the head of the Conditional Sales Branch? Quite so; that is my contention.

1629. In a case the converse of that if the papers came to you were you in the habit of submitting them to Mr. Stephen? No; to the Minister.

1630. Was not that the same sort of irregularity? No; because the routine was this: that the papers were sent to that division of the department in which the leading action had to be taken upon them. If the case was one which simply affected the validity of a conditional purchase, it would come to me. My recent suggestion which led to this question being referred to the Commission proposed what I thought a golden way out of the difficulty. With a view to conciliate the Under Secretary I suggested that all cases in which conditional purchase matters were concerned should be referred to me, and that I should submit them to the Under Secretary, who would submit them to the Minister.

1631. The gist of your suggestion is that all these cases of dispute should go to the head of the department? That they should come to me first, and go from me to the Under Secretary for submission to the Minister.

1632. While the Under Secretary's view is that they should go to him first? That in practice they should go to him first, be decided, and then come on to me. This suggestion, made to Mr. Driver, and which Mr. Driver approved, was that all cases of the nature alluded to should be sent to the Under Secretary in the first instance, who, after examination of the papers, was to refer them to me, and then to act in conjunction with me, or to take action himself, as the requirements of the case might indicate. Although that was approved by Mr. Driver, in practice it has come to this, that the cases are not referred to me at all.

1633. Action is taken without consultation with the Conditional Sales Branch? In all cases the routine is that they shall go to the Under Secretary. They are submitted by him to the Minister, and when it is necessary that action should be taken, they are sent on to me. I think I ought, perhaps, to refer to a recent occurrence which illustrates the same thing. The case is one in which some land had been selected after auction, or sold at auction when it had been previously conditionally purchased. First, it was conditionally purchased and then sold at auction, or it was selected afterwards by the lessee of the run. The case had been decided by Mr. Secretary Garrett, who ordered the sale at auction to be cancelled, on the ground that the land was not then Government land but private land. The agent of the lessee, misled as to the circumstances, no doubt, pressed for the issue of the deed of the auction grant. The case was submitted by Mr. Farnell to the Under Secretary, and Mr. Farnell gave instructions to issue the deed to the purchaser at auction.

A. O.
Moriarty, Esq.
18 Dec., 1878.

1634. Was not that an unusual course? The application of the lessee was submitted by the Under Secretary to the Minister, who approved, and gave instructions for the issue of the deed without reference to me. The case came before me in this way. The selector's agent came to me and said, "I think I have a right to ask you to interfere in this case; I showed you that my client was the conditional purchaser of this land, and it has been decided by the Minister to be a good purchase." I asked for the papers, and found that the facts were as represented, and I therefore submitted the matter to the Minister in this form:—"There can be no doubt that the recent decision herein has been arrived at upon a misunderstanding of the facts which could not have been the case had the representation of Messrs. Wilson and Ranken been referred to this or the Charting Branch, as it should have been prior to submission. The purchase at auction of portions 35 and 36, made on the 27th of September, 1875, was cancelled, because the land had previously, namely, on the 22nd of April, 1875, been conditionally purchased by Francis Patey, a minor, whose conditional purchase still stands good, and not with any reference to a subsequent conditional purchase. It is a fortunate circumstance that the activity of the selector's agent has prevented the issue of the deeds of these cancelled purchases, which should not of course be proceeded with. The balance of the auction purchases should be refunded." Mr. Farnell approved of that, and on his approval the issue of these deeds was stopped. That case shows that action taken by one side of the department without reference to the other, may be injurious, as the action of the Minister is likely to be based on insufficient information.

1635. President. What case was that? Between Francis Patey (a minor) and I think Mr. Blackwood. As regards this matter, my contention is that our routine leads to possible inconvenience to the public from decisions given upon imperfect information, without the advice of responsible officers as to one side, and as I have already said leaves the door open to jobbery. The suggestion that I made, really with a view to remove objections, was that the cases should come to me so that I might give advice and submit them to the Under Secretary, in order that he might submit them to the Minister in a way which gave every guarantee that his decisions should be safe and final.

1636. Mr. Ranken. In your memo. of 10th October you say: "The obvious result of this instruction in depriving the Minister of the information afforded by the records of this branch of the service and the assistance of the officers in the class of cases, namely, disputed ones, in which such information and assistance is likely to be of most value, was pointed out by me in certain memoranda which were referred by Mr. Secretary Driver to the Under Secretary, but shared the fate of similar documents." Will you explain the meaning of this latter passage? I refer to this memorandum of mine on an important official subject, dated the 20th June, 1877, which was referred by the Minister, Mr. Driver, to the Under Secretary in my presence.

1637. It is in existence? But it has never been dealt with from that day to this.

1638. Your memorandum as to the reconstruction of the arrangement? It was never dealt with at all.

1639. That was submitted to Mr. Driver for his decision? Yes; and by him referred to the Under Secretary.

1640. And no action was taken on it? No further action was taken on it.

1641. You did not imply that the papers were made away with? No; I have not said that, but they were not dealt with.

FRIDAY, 20 DECEMBER, 1878.

Present:—

MR. ABBOTT, | MR. RANKEN.

R. P. ABBOTT, ESQ., PRESIDENT, IN THE CHAIR.

A. O. Moriarty, Esq., was called in and further examined:—

1642. Mr. Ranken. I think the last time you were examined we had under consideration these papers of the 10th of October, the originals of which have been obtained from the Lands Department, and we were referring to the arrangement under which your functions as Chief Commissioner for Conditional Sales were defined? If the Commissioners will pardon me for reverting to the case which came upon me almost by surprise—the complaint made by Mr. Stephen against me on some remarks of mine in 1874, to one of those matters which I said were old matters,—I believe the papers were once in my custody since 1874. I believe, although I am not quite certain, that they were attached to another correspondence which is here in reference to some charges and counter charges between Mr. Stephen and myself dealt with by the Cabinet in 1877. I think I saw these papers on that date but I will not be certain. If however I did see them I certainly did not read them over then because the matters I had to deal with then did not make them of much consequence. If I had them in my possession in 1877 I certainly did not read them, and with that exception I have not seen them since 1874. In speaking of them the other day I really had a very faint notion of what they were about.

A. O.
Moriarty, Esq.
20 Dec., 1878.

1643. The papers of 1874? Yes; I confess I was struck and startled by something which was made to appear on those papers, and which apparently has attracted the notice of the Commissioners. I refer to the statement to the effect that I had destroyed some papers. I have not destroyed papers. It is not my habit to do so, and I am well aware of the gravity of such a proceeding. I do, however, remember tearing up some paper of my own which I considered as withdrawn.

1644. You did not consider it essential to the matter? My recollection is not prompted by even now seeing these papers. My recollection is that some complaint or cause of complaint arose and that I wrote something about it. The thing was withdrawn, settled, at an end. Something led to the same matter being pursued, and in the interval I did tear up something—some hasty writing of my own which I thought had perhaps be better destroyed than not. I believe I did tear up some memorandum of my own, but I tore it up believing that it was no longer official.

A. O.
Moriarty, Esq.
20 Dec., 1878.

1645. Do you think that that was the paper to which Mr. Stephen alludes as your memo. of the 7th? I suppose that would be it. I did not destroy any memorandum or paper that had not come back to my possession as entirely mine and which had ceased in any sense to be official. At the time I believed the matter to have been fully withdrawn and at an end. I believed the correspondence to have terminated before that date. The paper which I tore up contained nothing but some memorandum of my own; what it was I do not now remember—perhaps it was something intemperate; I daresay it was; but, whatever the paper contained, the matter had been the subject of a private note from me to Mr. Stephen, and was for the time at an end. As I see this destroying of documents has now been made a charge against me, I feel bound to show, as I can, that the Under Secretary did not hesitate to make such charges against me on slender grounds. I have in my hand a paper that grieved me very much at the time, a reprimand, of March, 1875, for having taken an official paper out of the office and destroyed it. I do not know if the Under Secretary has made this also the subject of a charge against me. This is rather a severe reprimand, as the Commissioners will see, and I can hardly be supposed to have any vanity in now referring to it. This copy which I have in my hand was made at the time by Mr. Oliver, who is still employed in the office: "23rd February. Will the chief clerk please return to me my memo. as to the necessity of all letters being initialled. I mean the one having reference to his suggestion that letters written by the head of a branch need not be initialled at all." My reply was:—"The memo. referred to by the Under Secretary is on a torn slip of paper pinned on to a manuscript letter, and not such as are usually preserved. Its contents, so far as they required to be acted upon, were communicated to the gentlemen to whose work they related. I should then have torn it up, but found that there were other notes on the paper, not intended to be acted upon, but referring to me personally. With reference to these I handed the slip of paper to another person, who I suppose has referred to the circumstance, and thus led to the present inquiry.—A.O.M., 23/2/75." I do not now remember what these notes were, but they strongly reflected upon me personally. They were written on this scrap of paper that I speak of, and the pen was drawn through them, but not so as to obliterate them.

1646. Were these offensive remarks legible? Perfectly.

1647. They were written by the Under Secretary? Yes, and referred to me. The course which I took with regard to that paper was this:—I took it to the Premier and I said to him, "I do not want to make any complaint against Mr. Stephen, but you will see from this paper the way in which he thinks he is at liberty to write to me. I am willing to retire. Will you give me a country Police Magistracy, and let me retire from this position, which has become intolerable to me by reason of this *petty tyranny?" I left the paper with Sir John Robertson, and I heard no more about it. Some days afterwards I got this minute from the Under Secretary:—"I have not had the time nor much inclination to allude to the very unusual, to use a mild word, course taken recently by the chief clerk in taking away out of the office and handing to another person—afterwards on inquiry admitted to be the Premier—a minute of mine which was in its character official. I only wish to say that Mr. Robertson, although I had a long conversation with him the day before I asked to have my minute back, never alluded to it, neither had I any idea of his having it until Mr. M. said so. Possibly if actuated by the same spirit, I were to hand to the same person certain minutes of the chief clerk's, now in my possession, more especially one reflecting, in rather strong language, on the course pursued by the Government, of which the said person was a member, on a certain occasion, they might do him more harm than my minute is ever likely to do me in the eyes of Mr. Robertson, who, no doubt, appreciates the object of handing it to him." (The obvious implication was with reference to my dismissal from office.) "If I do, however, or if I submit the present matter to the Minister for Lands—the proper person to submit any complaint to—I will promise Mr. M. that it will not be done behind his back, and that the opportunity of explaining will not be afforded to him only by accident. I want this back, please." I wrote this answer:—"In the enclosed memo. the Under Secretary is pleased to intimate his disapproval of my having 'taken out of the office and handed to another person a minute' of his. It was stated, in reply to a person's inquiry, that the minute was a torn scrap of paper, which ordinarily would have been torn up when attended to, and which I should have torn up but that I found upon it some reflections on me, written by the Under Secretary and erased by him, but of a character which I did not feel inclined to pass without notice. It may relieve the Under Secretary's mind if I now inform him that upon showing this paper to the Premier I made no reflection upon him, and no attempt to damage him such as he gives me credit for. He knows best whether, if I had so inclined, I should have been without justification. But I do not know why the matter should have been brought up a second time on a separate paper, unless for the purpose of the menace within conveyed as to some minute of mine, which the Under Secretary states to be in his possession and likely to do me harm if submitted. I can only say as to that that I have not the least objection to his showing any minute of mine to anybody he pleases, and without in the least knowing what he refers to, as it is not in my habit to collect literature of this description. I may add for his information that I am prepared deliberately to repeat, under any circumstances, anything that I may have written at any time. At the same time I am not conscious of ever having written anything reflecting on Mr. Robertson, and I am quite sure the Under Secretary does not possess any minute of mine that does so." I produce this merely for the purpose of showing that the charge of making away with papers is one which the Under Secretary has not hesitated to make on very slender grounds.

1648. This paper, to which you refer, you left with the Premier? Yes.

1649. Is it in existence now? I do not suppose it is. The attention of the Commissioners has obviously been directed to the course taken by me in commenting upon the delays in the signature of correspondence. The Commissioners may conclude that that was a rash if not an insubordinate course. I will at once admit it was a course likely to lead to some consequences. I of course knew when I was making these remarks I was making a commentary which, at the very least, exposed me to the risk of reprimand.

1650. You allude to these words in your minute of the 27th of January, 1874: "Personally I should very much prefer not signing at all, and have only done so with the object of avoiding injurious delays—the more undesirable in the Under Secretary's absence than even when he is present; the delays in the signature of correspondence are so unparalleled and prejudicial to the Public Service"? Yes; and as I say

* NOTE (on revision):—I explained that I had not made such a complaint. Although using these words now, I did not use them on the occasion referred to.—A.O.M.

say I must have been aware in writing them that I was incurring the risk of severe reprimand at the least, but I was also taking a course which exposed me to instant dismissal if I could not verify my statement. I leave it to the Commission to consider what must have been the state of affairs which seemed to me to warrant me in thus risking my children's bread.

1651. Had you the proof to bring forward? Unquestionably I had.

1652. Can it be produced now? Five years afterwards. I can tell it; but I would have infinitely preferred not to have to reflect upon the Under Secretary.

1653. I think it is desirable you should state the circumstances which led you to make that remark? I have not the least hesitation in stating the circumstances which seemed to me to call for that remark, but I will not state them in the Under Secretary's absence. I will state them in his presence.

1654. President.] Would it not be very unseemly to go into matters of that kind when you were both present? I cannot help that. The whole thing is unseemly.

1655. I do not know what you wish us to understand by that remark. Do you intend it to refer to the action of the Commission? I do not.

1656. The only object that we can have is to obtain information upon a matter which we think important. We desire to have your explanation as fully as we can get it, but it would be more than unseemly if we were to try and get at the facts under present circumstances with you and Mr. Stephen both present at the same time? With every respect to the Commission, and with the strongest wish to give effect to their views, I cannot but think that my own course is a clear one, and that I ought not to say anything to the prejudice of another man in his absence.

1657. Do you decline to tell us the foundation you had for that minute? I will do so in Mr. Stephen's presence if you desire it. To explain what I mean by the use of the word unseemly, will you permit me to say that I have not understood from the Minister for Lands, nor have I seen any paper which gave me to understand that my conduct in the Department of Lands—excepting as it may form part of the question affecting the general organisation of the department—has been referred to this Commission for inquiry, or that my personal relations with Mr. Stephen have been so referred. I do understand that on two public matters which seemed to me of great importance,—as to which I have stated my views temperately and with hardly any personal allusion to Mr. Stephen, and upon which Mr. Stephen has replied not by attempting to answer my arguments but by dragging in the side issues of our personal relations in commenting upon the papers which are here—I understand that these public matters have been referred to the Commission. I say that Mr. Stephens' remarks are not replies to my arguments on these questions, but are the nature of a personal attack upon myself. As I understand it, the reference made to this Commission on these points was a reference which I requested the Minister to make—not as to personal issues which with great respect I think unimportant, but with respect to public matters which are of the greatest importance. The Minister approved of my suggestion that the attention of the Commission might be invited to these matters. As to this question of routine, there is a suggestion of mine, dated the 14th of October, begging that the matter might be further considered, suggesting that it was worthy of further inquiry, and possibly of reference to the Commission appointed to inquire into departmental matters. I may be wrong, of course, but my understanding with regard to this matter—an understanding which I derived from conversation with the Minister—certainly was that he desired substantially what I proposed, when I begged that these matters of public concern might be further inquired into.

1658. Mr. Ranken.] Are the Commissioners to understand that you are averse to answering any questions with regard to your personal relations with the Under Secretary, which seem to us to be inextricably blended with departmental matters, the want of harmony between two such high officers being a main cause of the evils which exist? It is not for me to comment upon the views of the Commission, but it seems to me very like putting the cart before the horse. I have a great deal which I can tell the Commission as to the general state of the department.

1659. President.] We consider that the course we are taking is a necessary and proper one, and I do not think it seemly that we should submit to dictation from anyone, as to what we shall do or not do, what we shall take first or last? As regards my personal action, relations, or position, I am entirely in the hands of the Commission, and shall answer any questions you may put to me; but I think I am justified in objecting to be pressed to make charges against another gentleman in his absence.

1660. We have no wish to inquire into your personal conduct or relations any more than as affecting the management of the department and the interests of the public. We have no desire to obtain information as to the relative positions of yourself and Mr. Stephen, or the terms upon which you are at the present moment, excepting in so far as they regard the public interest. We conceive that in this view of the matter it is within the scope of our duty to ask some questions on these points, but it must rest with you whether you give us the information or not? The department is a very large one, and there are a great many people in it who are quite as well informed as I am in matters affecting the Under Secretary.

1661. Your position justifies us in seeking information from you on this and every other point, and we feel that it would not be right to seek information from subordinate officers which, we have no doubt, you can give us with more force and greater authority? Perhaps a few words more may show the Commission my position more clearly. The Under Secretary, as a matter of fact, has not hesitated for a long time past to attribute to me an intention or desire to supplant him; and if the Commission would suppose for a moment—what I do not assume—but suppose for the sake of argument that I possessed some information which if given to this Commission would be likely to be damaging to him, how could I expect him or any body else to think that I gave it for any other purpose than to damage him? He declares that I am animated by a strong desire to drive him from his position. How can I then be accepted as an impartial witness? I should not have the smallest hesitation in discussing any question affecting Mr. Stephen in his presence, but I do not think I ought to discuss his conduct in his absence.

1662. We only want information as affecting his public position, and that information we think we are entitled to have from any officer, no matter whom it affects. We presume there would be no hesitation on your part to give us information respecting the conduct or capacity of any other officer, and if we cannot get information from you where are we to look for it? —

1663. Mr. Ranken.] We are in possession of a considerable amount of evidence already, and without attributing blame to any one we perceive that a considerable amount of scandal has arisen from these disagreements, and it is to the interest of all that these matters should be cleared up and settled. The papers show that a Minister writes one minute upon the representations of one officer, and a few days after

A. O.
Moriarty, Esq.

A. O. Moriarty, Esq. after another cancelling it on the representations of another, and that these contradictory minutes are circulated through the department. That must lead to scandal and inefficiency in the Public Service, and we are entitled to inquire who is to blame? I am entirely in the hands of the Commission; I have nothing to conceal.

20 Dec., 1878.

1664. President.] We will take all the responsibility of asking for all the information you can give us on these subjects? Perhaps I have said too much in this case which took place in 1874. I made some remarks which perhaps I was not justified in making, and I was reprimanded.

1665. The point of difficulty seems to be now more as to the grounds on which these remarks were made? Although I think my lips are sealed for reasons which I need not describe, the lips of other gentlemen in the department are not sealed. There are several other gentlemen now in the department who were in it in 1874.

1666. The only names mentioned in these papers are yours and Mr. Stephen's? —

1667. Mr. Ranken.] Having written the accusation you need have no hesitation in justifying it now? I do not think I could put the matter in more pointed words than I have done here. I said that when the Under Secretary was present the delays in the signature of the correspondence were so unparalleled as to be prejudicial to the Public Service. In explanation of that I may say this much—that the correspondence referred to here was completed correspondence, communications or instructions to officers of the department and the public which had been dealt with by the department and which merely required the Under Secretary's signature to enable them to be despatched.

1668. The records of the office may be produced? No; there would be no record to show the interval which elapsed between the date of the preparation of a letter and the date of its signature. Letters bear the date upon which they are despatched. I can only add, what I have declared from the first, that I am not here to proffer charges against the Under Secretary. I have no disposition to do it, and I do not feel that I can be expected to make any reflection upon him, or charge against him in his absence; I feel that to justify this statement made in 1874 would be now to bring a charge against him in his absence, and while I should not hesitate to say what I mean by these statements in his presence, I should not do it in his absence.

1669. It is the very essence of Mr. Stephen's complaint that you have made charges without substantiating them.

1670. President.] We are quite prepared to take the responsibility of obtaining the information. It is disagreeable to you to give it, and if we saw any other way of getting it we would not trouble you to answer questions on these points. If that were true at that time, and it appeared to any one who was responsible in the matter that the same state of things existed now, it is obvious that it would go a long way in accounting for the delays and disorganisation which have been alleged to exist, and into which this Commission has been appointed to inquire? I do not think I am amenable to the charge of insinuating charges and not substantiating them. I state my perfect readiness to say what I have to say in Mr. Stephen's presence without reserve, but I think it would not be fair to do so in his absence. I will answer any specific question.

1671. What were the circumstances upon which you based your statement? That is a general question. I think the words explain themselves. I said just now that it was obvious that when I wrote that paper in 1874 I must have known that if I were not then prepared to prove my statement I should deserve and probably have received prompt dismissal, and justly so. I have repeatedly pressed upon the Commission my unwillingness to make any charges at all, and I do not think I could be expected now, after the lapse of nearly five years to prove something which if proved at all could be best proved when the statement was made, and which from the very nature of the case cannot be proved at all now. The routine of the department was then fresh in the memory of the officers concerned, and it could have been shown in five minutes whether the statement was justified or not. After five years that is palpably impossible.

1672. Was the proof ever brought forward? It was never asked for.

1673. Is there any Ministerial minute condemning those remarks? There was for making the statement at all, but I was never asked to prove it.

1674. If the Minister had held it susceptible of proof would it not have been inquired into? I do not know what the Minister's thoughts may have been. I was never asked to prove it. I was reprimanded for making the observation; but I think you will see that there is nothing in the minute which left it open for me to say anything further.

1675. Departmental matters, as far as they have come before us, are completely mixed up with disputes between you and Mr. Stephen? My allegation is that the Under Secretary has only met my views, arguments, and recommendations in matters of public business (which if they reflect upon him at all do so very mildly and inferentially)—by references to private squabbles. I do not see that there is any reply at all to my arguments and suggestion and views, but there is a dragging in of side issues about old disputes in no way bearing upon the subject. In fact there is in this an attempt to evade the questions which have to be discussed and settled, by confusing the whole thing with a fog of side issues. This remark has been made to me within the last hour and a half by a gentleman who knows the case as well as I do, and who is in no way at issue with the Under Secretary now. His words were—"side issues, as usual."

1676. Do you refer to the business before the Commission? There are two questions on which I have made recommendations to the Minister concerning the routine of business in the office. These matters can be dealt with without the smallest reference to the Under Secretary. The first is as to the routine to be followed in regard to these conflicting applications, and the second is to show the Commission good grounds for believing that my recommendations —

1677. Do you consider it beyond the functions of the Commission to inquire into these personal matters? No; but I believe that these are not the main matters referred to this Commission.

1678. President.] We contend we have a right to decide that question; and we cannot allow any witness to dictate to us as to the course we ought to pursue. If you can go no further in the direction we desire there is no use in saying more about it. We tell you that these papers have been before us; that we consider them worthy of grave consideration, and we have taken a good deal of evidence about them. We ask you to tell us what you know as to the foundation for certain statements we find in these papers, and if you can do no more than tell us what is our duty we think there is no use in trying to pursue the subject further.

1679. Mr. Ranken.] We have reason to believe that the disputes referred to in these papers have been the cause of much confusion and scandal in the Public Service.

1680. President.] We desire to give you the fullest opportunity of stating your views, but we do not think think it would be becoming to allow you to dictate as to what course our examination shall take. Witness: I fear I have been very unfortunate in my manner of expressing myself, for nothing was further from my intention than any desire to dictate to the Commission. I am entirely in the hands of the Commission, and ready to answer all their questions. I have wished to point out difficulties which exist in the way of answering certain questions. I pointed out the difficulty I felt in regard to this matter of 1874, and I thought I was entitled to do so. I only decline inquiry which would lead me to say anything in antagonism to Mr. Stephen, except it be with the full knowledge that Mr. Stephen will hear and know what I say. If the Commission make him acquainted with what I may have said I shall be free.

A. O.
Moriarty, Esq.

1681. I do not think that any responsibility need rest upon the shoulders of any witness whoever he may be, however high his position? I am afraid that in my desire to avoid producing a particular result I am producing another result which is even more undesirable. I am afraid that I am producing in the minds of the Commission an impression that I have some personal reasons for refusing to go into this matter, or some idea that I consider my views are more important than theirs. If the Commission will insist on all that is past, on my stating something more definite, I will do it.

1682. We take the responsibility of asking for the most definite information we can get. We have nothing to do with persons? But I have a great deal to do with persons.

1683. However our mode of procedure may ultimately affect persons we cannot be influenced by that, by what may or may not happen at the end of our examination. Our business is simply to elicit the facts? I am in the hands of the Commission. I will answer any question you like to put to me.

1684. Mr. Ranken. My question is: What were the grounds upon which you based the accusation which you have there preferred against Mr. Stephen—of delay in the signature of letters? Those circumstances obviously were that letters from the department, letters which had been prepared for signature, replies to correspondence, instructions to officers, business which had been completed and only awaited the Under Secretary's signature were delayed. Such letters were not signed habitually for periods so great as to warrant me in then calling the delays which occurred as unparalleled. I spoke of matters which were then passing daily through my own hands to the Under Secretary, and which came back to me after some interval from him, I referred to the then current daily routine, and I said that the delays which occurred in the Under Secretary affixing his mere signature to letters which had been prepared, were injurious, unparalleled, and prejudicial to the Public Service. In repeating that statement now, after this long interval, I do not say that the delays there complained of existed at a later date. Partly as the result of that statement, perhaps, a better state of things came about for a long time. The reference to this question had one good result at any rate, in that it stimulated increased activity.

1685. Was this delay in the Under Secretary's office habitual? The delay in the affixing of his signature was a personal thing, habitual to the Under Secretary himself—a personal matter, not a delay in his office. Pressed letters had been written so long before the Under Secretary signed them that they had to be written over again before impressions could be taken in the transfer book.

1686. Were these circumstances known to other gentlemen in the department? They were; to all the heads of the branches, who can say if they remember it now.

1687. President. Are the same gentlemen in the office now? Most of them are. There are Mr. Blackman, the chief officer of my own branch; Mr. Lindsay Thompson, Mr. William Edwards, and Mr. Charles Brown were, I think then, as now, the heads of branches.

1688. That was while you were chief clerk? Yes; I should think these gentlemen could give you information on this point if they remember anything about it. I do not profess to remember much, but my recollection has to do with the business which passed through my hands. The letters passed through my hands, and the heads of branches would each have their special correspondence. I recollect that my attention was called to the fact that the letters were so long written that they could not get them transferred into the transfer book.

1689. Mr. Ranken. Then the delays must have extended over some days? Weeks; that observation, such as it is, is drawn from me.

1690. Quite so. You are entirely exonerated. In your memorandum of the 10th of October you refer to the original arrangement under which your functions as Commissioner were detailed. Does it not appear strange to you that the very point where you and the Under Secretary so frequently came into collision—that is as to the dealing with matters in which the two branches of the department were concerned—was never specially considered—that that arrangement provided no means to prevent clashing in the dealing with conditional purchases and improvement purchases? If that matter were not embraced in the arrangement it was an oversight, no doubt.

1691. Will you look at your memorandum of suggestions? I see that at the close of this minute of mine there is a nota bene which explains that it is partial only. I state here that—"The foregoing suggestions are submitted not in the nature of recommendations for a reorganisation of the department (as to which I have stated my views in another shape), but as a re-arrangement of certain portions of the existing machinery, to relieve the increasing strain to which they are now subject."

1692. You will find another note of yours at the end of Mr. Stephen's letter which comes next? The subject is not referred to there.

1693. The official document which gave effect to your suggestions was issued on the 20th December, 1876. Is it not strange that it makes no special provision to guard against these cases of clashing? Quite so. I may state that I have refreshed my memory this morning by asking some officers of the Survey Department as to the routine which was established with regard to these cases. They verified my own recollection that for a considerable time this routine naturally suggested itself, and as the leading action required to be taken belonged to the Conditional Purchase Branch, or any other branch, the draftsmen of the Survey Department were instructed to send the papers to that branch of the department primarily concerned. That routine existed for a considerable time, and no difficulty arose under it. It was set aside without my being directly informed at all.

1694. How did the papers in which conflicting interests occurred reach you? From the Survey Department.

1695. They sent you those papers which appeared to them to relate more especially to the business of the Conditional Sales Branch? Quite so.

1696. What course did you take with them? I submitted them to the Minister.

1697. Cases in which an improvement purchase was involved? This would happen. We will suppose that

A. O.
Moriarty, Esq.
20 Dec., 1878.

that an auction sale took place on a certain day. An auction sale in itself is a completed transaction—that is, assuming that the land sold is available; but if a conditional purchase were made on a date prior to the auction sale, the whole thing would depend on the validity of the conditional purchase. If the conditional purchase were a good one, then it would follow that the auction sale could not stand, and there could be no clashing.

1698. Would the papers not be sent on to the Auction Branch to be noted as to the action necessary to be taken there? Undoubtedly.

1699. The arrangement of 1876 required that everything ministerial should remain under the personal control of the Under Secretary. Your interpretation as to what is ministerial appears to differ from that of Mr. Stephen's? As I take it, the term ministerial has in itself really no definite meaning as applied to the Public Service generally; but in the Lands Department it has a special meaning as applied to the functions of a particular branch.

1700. Does not "ministerial" mean "administrative"? Of course; and in that sense would include the decision of the Minister on all questions—conditional purchase or otherwise.

1701. Is not that the very function which Mr. Stephen claims is vested in his hands subject to the Minister? No, because in his own minute, which was approved by the Cabinet, he suggested that I should be the official organ of the department as between the Minister and the public in all matters relating to conditional sales. I never heard that the Under Secretary questioned the propriety of my submitting conditional purchase cases to the Minister. Mr. Stephen's recommendation, endorsed by the Cabinet provided on this point: "That the conduct of the conditional purchase business, correspondence, &c. (which has attained the dimensions of a department in itself almost), be delegated in like manner to the chief clerk, who should submit all papers to the Minister, carry out his decisions without reference to the Under Secretary, and be the recognized medium with the public and officers concerned in all matters connected with the business so entrusted to him."

1702. Under that impression you submitted on the 10th of October last this minute to the Minister to put things on a right footing? Quite so.

1703. And Mr. Farnell seems to have adopted your suggestion? Yes.

1704. Are you aware of the Under Secretary's minute attached? I have seen it.

1705. If you will refer to these papers you will find a letter signed by Mr. Rutter. It would appear that you promulgated the change? A statement to that effect has been made on this minute by the Under Secretary; but there is no foundation whatever in fact for that statement. I have not assumed to instruct the Survey Department in regard to any matter in which the Under Secretary is concerned.

1706. Was that letter of the 10th October written by your desire? No.

1707. That letter of the 10th October is in these words:—"The Deputy Surveyor General has directed me to inform you that it has lately been decided by the Secretary for Lands that cases in which conditional purchases conflict with other classes of applications shall be addressed to the Chief Commissioner of Conditional Sales. This of course is the opposite to a direction received some months ago when similar cases were addressed to the Under Secretary for Lands." From whom would Mr. Rutter receive that instruction? From the Deputy Surveyor General I suppose.

1708. How would the Deputy Surveyor General learn the will of the Minister on a matter of that kind? I believe he happened to be in the Minister's room when the Minister gave the instruction. The Under Secretary has assumed that I was instrumental in some way or other in promulgating this instruction, but that impression was a false one. I did not in any way—directly or indirectly.

1709. The letter promulgating the decision was dated the day before the decision was given? I know nothing about that. The fact is that neither directly nor indirectly had I any hand in issuing the instruction to the Survey Department. The original papers are here, and will show what were the facts as to any question of dates. I fancy that this date, 10th of October, attached to Mr. Rutter's letter, must have been a clerical error. The notations of the officers in the Survey Department show that the instruction went through the department from the 12th to the 16th of October. The earliest initial is dated the 12th and the latest the 16th. I fancy that Mr. Rutter's date of the 10th October was a clerical error; but I had nothing whatever to do with it.

1710. The Minister cancelled your recommendation and substituted an order to be drawn up by Mr. Stephen? Yes. He decided to refer the matter to the Commission.

1711. That was also promulgated through the department in the same way? Under the Under Secretary's instructions.

1712. Do you not think that that implies considerable laxity, want of method and discipline in the Service, when two such contradictory minutes can be circulated almost at the same time? I think it is a very unfortunate thing. My action was confined to urging upon the Minister certain views which I thought it would be wise that he should know of. In making these suggestions of the 10th October I honestly thought that I was making a suggestion deferential to the Under Secretary, a suggestion which would obviate his opposition. My words are: "I now beg to offer a suggestion which may remove the difficulty and the causes to which it is probably attributable. I suggest that all cases in which conditional purchases conflict in any way with other applications or interests be referred direct to me by the Survey Department, and that I should submit them when necessary to the Minister (through the Under Secretary), so that the decision may be arrived at with every safeguard for its accuracy and finality." It is a new suggestion that this class of cases should come direct to me, and that I should submit them through the Under Secretary. I do not seek to supersede the Under Secretary in any way.

1713. You qualify that, I think, by using the words "when necessary"? Yes, when necessary. Many cases do not require submission.

1714. You assume to determine the cases in which it would be necessary to submit to the Minister? No; because another step may have intervened. It may have become necessary to make some reference or to get some information. The suggestion I think plainly expresses what I intended, that the action of the Minister, where the Minister's action was involved, should be invoked by me through the Under Secretary—that I should take all my action subordinately to the Under Secretary, or in concert with him.

1715. Would that be sufficient to prevent clashing? I thought so, and I made the suggestion for that purpose. I do not know that there is anything in my minute which could be considered as reflecting upon the Under Secretary, excepting perhaps a very mild complaint which I made about a minute of mine fifteen months old having received no attention whatever. I do not think the Commission, as men of business, business, will admit that that minute was a paper which should have been thrown aside as of no account; still less that it was a document of such a character as could be considered a private one—as the private property of the Under Secretary.

A. O.
Moriarty, Esq.

20 Dec., 1878.

1716. You state here that the Minister has given his decision only by a note of approval;—is not that the usual method? Quite so; but I meant to say that he had not gone into the matter further than by writing the word “approved.” This minute was addressed to the Minister who had just given the decision, and it calls his attention to the circumstance. It complains, the Commission will observe, that even that approval I had never been allowed to see. I was left in complete ignorance of it. This arrangement, made in June, 1877, was never officially communicated to me. I was not told of it for several days afterwards, when I heard of it from one of the draftsmen in the Survey Office.

1717. That required that all cases in which there was a clashing of interests should go direct to the Under Secretary and not to you? Yes, it upset the routine which had existed for months, and the alteration was made without my knowledge.

1718. But in practice did not the Under Secretary submit all conditional purchase cases to you? No, not a single case. It has been a leading subject of complaint with me that I do not see these cases. The Minister is led into giving a decision which may turn out to be wrong because the proper branch of the department has not been consulted.

1719. Do any bad consequences follow? Dummy selections succeed. This has happened. This morning I referred to two officers of the Survey Department, and asked them to charge their recollections as well as they could and to say whether my impression was correct, that on several occasions they had brought to me cases and said, “Have you seen this decision?” I have answered, “No, I have not.” They have asked, “Do you think it is right?” and I have answered, “No, I think it is wrong.”

1720. Were these cases in which conditional purchases were concerned? Yes, in which they were proposed to be cancelled; and in some cases they had gone the length of the refund order being issued from the department without my ever having seen the case. And these were cases in which if I had had any such ground as in the larger case to which I have referred I should have gone to the Minister and have told him that I thought he had been unadvisedly led into giving a decision which was wrong, but nothing but an extreme case would justify me in taking that course.

1721. Have such cases happened more than once? Yes; more than once. I have used the word “jobbery”; and I think that in the case to which reference has been made that was a job perpetrated through the, I do not doubt, unwitting agency of the Under Secretary. He was pressed by the parties to make the particular recommendation which he made, and which would have had that gross result, had not the case come to me before it was too late. Other cases have gone the length of being completed in my own division of the office—cases which I do not think would have been completed if they had been sent to me. When the Minister has given an order, the clerks of course act upon it, and in that way my own branch of the office becomes involved in some cases which I think are wrong, and in which I think the decisions would not have been given if they had been submitted to me at an earlier stage; cases in which I think the Minister has been led by unwise representations, in incomplete or incorrect information, to come to wrong conclusions, and in which the decisions have sometimes even been carried out without my knowledge.

1722. If this later suggestion of yours had been the rule, or the earlier routine had been followed, such cases could not have occurred? No. In this minute of June, 1877, it was said that the routine led to no inconvenience. That was, I think, unquestioned. That statement was true, or it was not true. If true, it was worthy of attention. If not true, there was an immediate opportunity of questioning its accuracy, and its accuracy was not questioned. The arrangement was a convenient and business-like one, it led to dispatch in business, and, as far as I am aware, was not attended by any erroneous action. That is what I stated in this minute of June, 1877. Before leaving this minute, and the putting away of it in June, 1877, I think, something occurred which, I think, I must state to the Commission. The minute was given to Mr. Driver, and certain other minutes on other subjects were given to him. I repeatedly requested Mr. Driver to come to a decision, one way or the other. I said that I should accept his decision, whatever it might be, but that I thought I had a right to ask him for a decision on these points. I repeatedly requested him to get the papers brought before him, and he said that he would. The last time this happened, Mr. Driver sent for the Under Secretary, and asked him why these papers were not brought before him. The Under Secretary replied that he wished to write something in answer to what I had written, but had not time to do it. Mr. Driver asked him what time he would require, and he said about a week. Mr. Driver then specifically instructed the Under Secretary to bring them before him at the end of the week. They were not brought before him at that time. Mr. Driver became ill, and so they remained undealt with.

1723. Is that the paper you allude to as having been fifteen months undealt with? Yes. That particular form of jobbery referred to there in a case in which Mr. Fisher was interested, is a common one, well known to the officers of the department. In 1873 I was sent by Mr. Farnell to investigate some supposed cases of the kind at Deniliquin. In one case I found that a squatter had selected land in very large areas, which was just about to be sold by auction, to prevent other persons from selecting the land before it could be sold. The land had been measured and was under proclamation for sale, and was open to selection, but having been selected, later selections of the same land could not be made. The lessee, who is the moving cause, does not appear in the transaction, but his agent, professing to act as the agent for the selectors, asks, under one pretence or another, for the cancellation of the selections, and the return of the money. This was allowed in the cases of which I speak at Deniliquin.

1724. In Mr. Fisher's case, by your action, the forfeiture was enforced? Yes. In another case, which occurred at Deniliquin, the auction sale was allowed to go on when the office had not authorized it to go on. It was no doubt intended to allow it, but the instruction was not sent. Mr. Fitzpatrick, who was the business agent of the lessee, had received information of that intention, and he telegraphed to his principal. I found afterwards that all the deposit payments had been made by the station holder's agent himself.

1725. There was a case of a selection by Ellen Morris, in which similar action seems to have been taken, and in which there seems to have been some difference of opinion between you and the Under Secretary? I do not remember the case at all.

1726. Here are the papers. Will you look at them? I see there is a minute of mine in this case. I have not seen it since it was written. I see that in this case Mr. Raymond acts as the agent for the selector, and he applies that the land may go on to auction, as the selector was desirous of withdrawing from the purchase. This is just a case in point.

A. O. Moriarty, Esq.
20 Dec., 1878.

1727. Is the presumption that she was a dummy? I do not say that; but this case illustrates the inconvenience of which I have complained. This letter was received and registered on the 7th of February, 1877, and is dated on the 5th.

1728. Was that request for cancellation complied with without reference to you? Yes. This letter, I see, is dated the 5th of February, 1877. The standing rule of the department is that before any action is taken on papers they shall be registered. This letter is registered as received on the 7th of February, 1877, but I see that between the date of the letter and the date of its registration in the office there is a memorandum by Mr. Edwards, the head of the Auction Branch, to this effect:—"These portions may, perhaps, go on for sale pending inquiry. The conditional purchase can be easily sustained if the facts are not as stated." Then there is this memo. by the Under Secretary:—"Under statement in enclosed telegram, now received, the sale may go on, and the C.P. declared void."

1729. The matter had not come to your knowledge at this stage? No. On the Under Secretary's minute a telegram was sent to the agent to sell the land on the 7th February, 1877, the day on which the auction sale was to take place. That instruction was given; but I do not hesitate to say that except upon the authority of the responsible Minister such an instruction ought not to have been given, for on the face of it was a sale by auction of land previously conditionally purchased as if the land had been Crown land. The Under Secretary refers to an enclosed telegram received in Sydney on the 6th of February:—"Letter sent asking to withdraw my application for 103 and 104 Coree South, and allow it to be sold." There was such a telegram apparently. This is a copy of it. I was not made aware of this case until the 20th of March, on which date I see there is a note of mine, in which I urged that the course taken could not be taken; that it was illegal, the land having been private land at the date of the auction sale. The Under Secretary says there was no Minister to appeal to, and that the case was submitted half an hour before the sale. A thing submitted in such a way as that has, as it seems to me, a fishy appearance. I see that Mr. Driver's remark upon the papers is that "the sale of these lots should not have been permitted;" and he has added something further, which, upon the Under Secretary's representations he has subsequently erased. This case is of a kind which has occurred on more than one occasion. A similar case occurred last week or the week before.

1730. You think that forfeiture should have taken place in that case? I do not know that; but while the land was private land it ought not to have been sold at auction. No interest would be damaged by withholding the auction sale for a sufficient time to allow of inquiry.

1731. No inquiry was made? There was no inquiry made.

1732. I think there is some special action which you are said to have taken about the telegram there, at which Mr. Stephen appears to have been aggrieved? When this paper came to me I found that it contained a reference by the Under Secretary to an enclosed telegram, as giving grounds for the course taken. When I was dealing with the papers I saw there was no such telegram. I asked for it in the office; but not being able to get it I sent up to the telegraph office for it. I see that there is a copy of it here, and I suppose it was obtained from the office by my action. The action which the Under Secretary seems to have been aggrieved at was my obtaining the telegram and completing the correspondence. No, I see I am mistaken. On looking further into the papers that the copy of the telegram was obtained by the Under Secretary. I see that the memo. sent to me was that there was no message from Ellen Morris, Urana, to the Under Secretary for Lands on or about the 7th of February. At this date the great bulk of the correspondence was addressed to the Under Secretary, and my business was often addressed to him. The bulk of the business that I dealt with would at that time be addressed to him. In sending for this telegram I was sending for correspondence proper to my own business.

1733. You could not get a copy in the office? When the papers came to me I saw that there was a reference to a telegram which was not with the papers. I asked for it, or told some one to get it from the telegraph office. The reply was that there was no such telegram from Urana; but subsequently Mr. Stephen appears to have got this copy from Jerilderie, and that would account for it not having been supplied in the first instance. In asking for this telegram it never occurred to me that I was questioning anyone's authority.

1734. It was the only course open for you to ascertain the position of the matter. Is that the ground you take? I have never seen these reflections by the Under Secretary before. I dealt with the case on the 30th of March, 1877.

1735. Was not the case decided before it came to you? Action was taken by the Under Secretary, and I drew the attention of the Minister to the fact that that action was irregular. My minute is dated the 20th March, and the copy of the telegram bears the Sydney stamp of the 22nd March, but the Under Secretary's memorandum is dated the 23rd of April. I have not seen this memorandum before.

1736. Was the auction sale complete before your action? The auction sale took place on the 7th of February, the day the telegram was received, but the papers were not received by me until the 20th of March. I complain that this action should have been taken without reference to the papers, or the information in the Conditional Sales Branch. Similar action has occurred within the last few weeks again.

1737. This case in the face of it is equally objectionable as that of Mr. Fisher's? I will not say that.

1738. It is analogous in nature? I only know that the application of Ellen Morris to withdraw her selection is in a handwriting which is very like the handwriting of the lessee of the run, whose handwriting I know. I will not say it is a case of dummy selection, but it looks like an arrangement. There is a minute by the Survey Department that there is no ground for the cancellation of this selection. I pointed out that it was illegal.

1739. Is it not the case that non-survey is the only ground for cancellation? Yes, generally, but there may be other grounds. The land may not be all available, but that ground is special, and nothing but a special ground will warrant cancellation.

1740. The law and custom is that cancellation only follows non-survey within twelve months? Yes.

1741. Forfeiture is the necessary result of any irregular action on the part of the lessee? Quite so; if it be ascertained that the conditions are not carried out.

1742. In such cases selections are forfeited? Yes. Half a million acres have been recovered by forfeiture in this way since January last, so that you will see that it is an important thing that action in these matters should be regular.

1743. Were those irregular applications of the same kind? They were for various breaches of the conditions.

1744. President.] With reference to the case of Ellen Morris, you say that some similar cases have occurred, or cases under similar circumstances. Do you recollect the name of the parties so that we may be able to identify them? Here is a similar case—register number 42,430. I do not say that these are all dummy cases. I do not think the gentlemen concerned would be capable of dummyming as the law now stands, but I believe that where they found a selector who was willing to move off from their run, they would be glad to buy him out, and get the land put up to auction.

1745. Looked on in that light you think they would consider that legitimate? Perhaps they would. I bring this case to show that action is taken without reference to me—that the land is put up to auction, and that thereby the rights of parties are settled finally without reference to me or to the Survey Department.

1746. Have you any other case? Within the last few weeks the Minister had a case about which he spoke to me, but it has not reached me yet—a case, as the Minister told me, in which a Volunteer land order was made part of a measured portion, the order for 50 acres being made applicable to 59 acres. The Under Secretary recommended the Minister to cancel the conditional purchase and uphold the Volunteer land order. The Minister told me that he had declined to do that. The Minister himself discovered what should have been pointed out to him by the office that this Volunteer land order for 50 out of 59 acres was in itself an illegal application, throwing 9 acres out of measurement which could not be covered by any other legal application.

WEDNESDAY, 8 JANUARY, 1879.

Present:—

MR. ABBOTT,

MR. RANKEN.

R. P. ABBOTT, Esq., PRESIDENT, IN THE CHAIR.

A. O. Moriarty, Esq., was called in and further examined:—

1747. President.] When you were last examined you left some papers with the Commission, the record number of the conditional sales department being 42,430? Yes; I think I referred to them as having an immediate bearing upon the question of dealing with cases upon partial information. In this case the Under Secretary proposed to the Minister that these conditional purchases should be cancelled in order that the land might go on to auction sale. That suggestion was made without reference to me or to the Conditional Sales Division of the department—without reference to the conditional purchase papers or to the applications the purchasers had made, which were in my custody at the time, and which were subsequently asked for when the Minister had declined to act upon that recommendation.

1748. Mr. Ranken.] Is not the case similar to that of Ellen Morris? It is very similar, I think. There are some remarks of mine here, in which I point out that action had been taken without reference to me or to the papers. The Under Secretary's minute is to this effect:—"Will the Chief Commissioner of Conditional Sales oblige me (as bearing on the case) with the two letters of the Goldsmith's asking for a refund of deposits now in the Conditional Purchase Branch? See further papers, telegram, &c., herewith, not that I intend to press the matter further, but the Minister wishes to see them." I think that shows pretty plainly that the Minister had not seen them.

1749. President.] Whose minute is that? The Under Secretary's, of date 23rd October. I think it will be seen from the other papers in this case which are before the Commission that the action taken was prior to that. I wrote this note on the Under Secretary's minute:—"Two letters herewith, received 19th instant. There are, I understand, other papers than the enclosed relating to the matter which I have not seen, but in which the cancellation of the conditional purchase (without reference to the applications, to the enclosed papers, or to this division) was proposed. If the case has been imperfectly dealt with, it is to be attributed to that irregular action." There is this further minute of the Under Secretary, which goes into the merits of the matter:—"The enclosed applications show the lots to be those advertised for sale. If the matters, however, had been referred to the Conditional Purchase Branch first the sale would have been over before the submission of the papers. Yet Mr. M. wanted all cases to go to him first." Then there is this remark of mine: "This is an entire mistake. There was abundant time for the matter to be referred to me and dealt with on its merits." The sale would not have gone on because the Survey Department knew perfectly well that the lots were conditionally purchased, and could not be sold. I do not think there is any reason to suspect collusion in this instance between the selector and the lessee, as to the taking up of the land; but I think there is abundant evidence of an arrangement having been come to between the conditional purchasers and the lessee before this application was made.

1750. Was it an application for forfeiture? No, for the refund of the money.

1751. Because of the intended sale? Yes. The land being conditionally purchased before the auction sale, nobody else could get it. Immediately before the sale the conditional purchasers wanted to cancel their applications, so that they could get their money back, and the inference also is, that they would get a bonus from the lessee to clear out. The land would thus go to auction and be sold to the lessee at £1 an acre. By an abuse of the law these selectors would be able to levy upon the lessee to the extent of the bonus they might obtain from him.

1752. Mr. Ranken.] The case looks more like one of blackmailing than of dummyming? Quite so. I think that is what it was. I do not think the lessee is a man who would be capable of collusion for the purpose of dummyming. With regard to the case of Ellen Morris, as I have, I think, already informed the Commission, I am quite in the dark as to what supposed reference to my position or action the case of Ellen Morris has. I have not seen it since I submitted it to the Minister about eighteen months ago, until I saw it here the other day.

1753. It was before you here the other day? Yes; but I had not seen it until I saw it then. I suppose I am considered to have done something wrong with reference to Ellen Morris's case, but what it is I really do not know.

1754. I fancy it was with regard to your making inquiry about the telegram? That is a sort of thing which could have been explained in a word. The inquiry was just this: There was a telegram referred to in the papers as showing the reasons for a certain course; but when the papers came to me the telegram was not with them, and I simply asked for it. Without the telegram it would have been impossible to know what the reasons were. As I believe I said the other day, that case is important. It comes up, not produced by me, as one of those similar cases referred to in my note to the Minister about the evils of action based upon imperfect information. Again I say, before I proceed to give evidence, while I consider myself bound to answer the Commissioners' questions, and while I personally have nothing to conceal from the Commission, yet I do feel that I am in an utterly false position in being asked any questions or in answering any questions of a nature calculated to reflect upon the Under Secretary in that gentleman's absence. I simply desire in advance to repeat my objection to that course, and request, before I am asked any question about Mr. Stephen, Mr. Stephen may have an opportunity of being present.

1755. The papers I have now before me, and about which I wish to ask a few questions, begin in November, 1876, and end in the February following. They begin with your suggestions as to remodelling the work of the department. On receiving Mr. Stephen's minute attached to your memorandum, it appears that you submitted the same to the Minister with your own remarks upon it, without referring it again to the Under Secretary? I think I have already explained that.

1756. The matter has been incidentally alluded to? I am prepared to go through with it. My memorandum of suggestions embodies the result of several conversations with the Minister, the Under Secretary, and myself, and contains what, as I understood, was agreed upon. This I handed to the Under Secretary. I understood from the Minister some time afterwards that he had given the Under Secretary instructions to carry it out; but it was not being carried out. Nothing was being done about it. There was some interval.

1757. You will find the dates of the papers there? No; there is no date in this.

1758. That is your original memorandum of suggestions? Yes.

1759. You will find Mr. Stephen's memorandum attached to that; then a memorandum of your own, written two days afterwards? This memorandum of suggestions is not dated, but I see that it refers to something being done, say from the 1st of November, and must therefore have been written prior to that date. I remember that it was referred to between myself and the Minister then as a matter which had been lying over for some time unattended to.

1760. That was the paper you submitted to the Minister? No, to the Under Secretary; the paper which contains all the arrangements agreed to. There is a later memorandum by the Under Secretary in which he takes exception to certain things proposed in regard to the lease business, and to this I see there is an addendum written by me which was not submitted to the Under Secretary.

1761. You submitted that to the Minister? It is my impression now—not having thought much about it since—my distinct impression that I got those papers from the Under Secretary at the Minister's request, and that in conversation with the Minister it came out that there was only this lease business in issue between us. At the suggestion of the Minister I wrote this memorandum which was an abandonment for the time of my own proposition, leaving the matter to be dealt with ultimately on its merits. There is no fresh suggestion made; merely a withdrawal of that part of my suggestion to which the Under Secretary took objection. I cannot speak distinctly about a matter which is two years and a half old, but I believe I wrote this at the Minister's suggestion with a view to the general arrangement being then and there carried out. What I wrote was, "As the only question remaining to be decided as between the Under Secretary's views and those submitted by me has reference to the lease business, which does not involve the general arrangement and can be subsequently discussed more at length and settled on its merits, the papers are submitted with reference to the general measure which is urgent."

1762. That you submitted to the Minister? Yes, at the Minister's personal request, and I have no doubt I wrote this under his instruction.

1763. There is also a minute written by Mr. Stuart when he was acting for the Minister for Lands, in which he comments upon the impropriety of official documents passing by the Under Secretary? Mr. Stuart referred to this particular thing no doubt, but if the Commissioners will pardon me for a moment, they will see that he refers to this with a number of other things. The Commissioners will see that at the end of these papers there is a note of mine, which was written in the Premier's office, Sir John Robertson's office, in the following March, and under circumstances which I think I have already explained to the Commission. The Minister expressed a wish that I should write something which would lead to the matter being arranged by mutual apologies and concessions. On the spur of the moment I sat down and wrote this:—"My dear sir,—If it had not been for my desire to avoid further discussion of a matter which has already proceeded to an undesirable length, I should have felt bound to ask attention to one or two matters in the documents placed before the Cabinet which are new to me, and I think the subject of a slight misapprehension." These subjects were those which led me to hesitate to take action. One of them was this statement, that in matters affecting the department I passed by the Under Secretary. I did not do it. You will see that my essential representations are contained in the minute which I submitted to the Under Secretary himself. At the same time I do not hesitate to say that in such a matter as this I should have felt it perfectly open to me to submit in this non-official form any suggestions bearing upon the new position which it was proposed should be conferred upon myself.

1764. Without reference to the Under Secretary? Without reference to anybody. I should have been justified in submitting them as my own views. The case under consideration was the creation of a new division of the department, separate from the Under Secretary's position, placing considerably more than half of the duties which attached to his position under me. It would have been a proper, regular, and delicate course at the same time for any Minister to ask my views non-officially, as they were here written and given to the Minister. At the same time I did not take the course of making my suggestions direct to the Minister.

1765. That does not appear to have been Mr. Stuart's view? Mr. Stuart was obviously under the impression that I had submitted the whole of this thing to the Minister; but I did not do so, and it is to that I refer in my letter. In Mr. Stuart's minute I was reprimanded for doing that which I did not do; for my essential suggestions are contained, not in this addendum but in the memorandum which I submitted to the Under Secretary. No man of sense would talk of that addendum as an essential suggestion.

1766. Mr. Stuart's opinion is that everything should be submitted through the permanent head of the department to the Minister? That may be Mr. Stuart's views, but it is open to anybody else to hold other views. It is only a common sense view to say that the Minister may have in an unofficial, confidential form, the views of the man to whom he is going to entrust the carrying out of an important routine. I have known the same thing to be done a dozen times over.

A. O.
Moriarty, Esq.,
8 Jan., 1879.

1767. Was not the Under Secretary more concerned in this change than the officer of the new department? I think not; the Under Secretary had no responsibility under it.
1768. He remained the head of the department? He did; but substantially this part of the business was arranged by mutual consent, and was ultimately embodied in his own memorandum. This memorandum of suggestions which I drew up never went before the Cabinet. The Cabinet accepted his suggestions, he being only partly concerned in the arrangement, and my complaint was that he suppressed this paper, and kept it from the knowledge of the Cabinet.
1769. You maintain substantially that your course was correct? My course was essentially correct. Mr. Stuart was under a misapprehension in supposing that I handed these suggestions to the Minister. I did not do so. He could never have made the assumption he did if he had been made aware that this minute was submitted, not to the Minister but to the Under Secretary. But at the same time I say that it would be perfectly correct on the part of the officer concerned to hand confidential statements of this kind to the Minister under the circumstances here disclosed.
1770. Do you think that the matter should have gone into maturity without the Under Secretary being consulted? Nothing of the sort. There was no maturing of it without the Under Secretary. My views involved a wider change in organization than this. In my suggestions I stated that they were not submitted as recommendations for the reorganization of the department, but as embodying matters which had been discussed between the Minister, the Under Secretary, and myself, put on paper by me, and handed by me to the Under Secretary.
1771. The words which Mr. Stuart uses are quite decisive as to what the discipline should be? Mr. Stuart's views are quite clearly put, but they are as clearly put upon a misapprehension of the facts to which he was referred. There is a second misapprehension in this minute of Mr. Stuart's, which is the other matter to which I refer in my note to Sir John Robertson, and that is this:—"I consider also that his remarks in criticism of Mr. Stephen's capacity and application were quite uncalled for, and are, under the circumstances, unjustifiable." There are a great many remarks of mine here in this paper, which is a lengthy one, but there is not a single word in that paper remarking upon the Under Secretary's application or capacity; not a single remark except this: The Under Secretary himself reported that in an altercation we had—it was an altercation I am sorry to say—I had told him that his idleness and incapacity had broken up the department. The Under Secretary made that a complaint against me. I did not, in my reply, go into extraneous matters to justify that I was really sorry that I had been provoked into making the remark. That expression fell from me in a private conversation, following some insulting remarks of the Under Secretary about my "damned impudence."
1772. Is there anything in writing making a deliberate charge of incompetence and carelessness? Not a word; but that was Mr. Stuart's second misapprehension.
1773. Your memorandum of the 22nd December contains something which I should like your opinion about. In that memorandum, reopening the question of the lease business, you say, "without even implying anything to the disadvantage of the Under Secretary it is palpable that this business has not engaged in any degree his interest or attention. No instruction or suggestion of any significance (if any at all) has ever emanated from him with respect to it; it is not too much to say that he does not realize its present state or bearings, and is not familiar with the present, if he is with the former, law regarding it." Do you not think that that is a direct charge of indifference, ignorance, and neglect? I did not intend it to be regarded in that light. The words are very clear.
1774. You say he does not realize and is not familiar with the bearings of the question? I think this paper will be found to be a copy.
1775. Is it not in your handwriting? Yes; but it was never submitted in this form; I see it is marked "copy." This is a paper which I personally communicated to the Under Secretary.
1776. It comes to us as a paper which you read to him in his office? Yes; its proper order is as an appendix to one of these later papers. It was never submitted.
1777. I cannot see the distinction. Is it not in your handwriting, and was it not read to the Under Secretary? I do not repudiate the question in any way; but I have been misled in referring to it, or rather you have.
1778. It was in connection with the same subject? Yes; in fact it was the origin of the misunderstanding.
1779. It was written two days after the arrangement? It was written when I became aware of the fact that the Cabinet had, at the Under Secretary's instance, without being aware of the more comprehensive suggestions made by me, dealt with the measure in a way which I thought inconvenient; and this memorandum was written for the purpose of being read to the Minister at an interview which was to have taken place, urging that that particular question should be reconsidered; but there is not a word in it which I am not prepared to substantiate.
1780. I think it substantiates the charge of your having accused the Under Secretary of incompetence, neglect, and ignorance? Not so; you will observe that it took place on the very occasion that I used the words "idleness" and "incapacity."
1781. It is a document which was deliberately drawn up? Deliberately drawn up; when I say "deliberately" I should explain that it was drawn up instantly I became aware of the action which had been taken, and as embodying objections to it; but it was communicated to the Under Secretary at the same moment that the other words were communicated to him.
1782. Probably the charge implied in these words provoked the irritation which led to this result? I do not think so.
1783. There is a further remark towards the end of the document in which it appears that you implied that the Under Secretary might oppose your suggestions on selfish or personal grounds? There is this remark: "I trust that my views, which have no selfish aim, and if accepted will only enlarge my usefulness, may be considered sufficiently well founded to outweigh any opposition based merely on personal and imaginary grounds of the Under Secretary's position and its claims, as opposed to the benefit of the service." What I meant to say and what was the fact was this: the Under Secretary had given no reason in opposition to my views, but simply his word, his will—he did not choose to do it.
1784. Was he bound to give any reasons? I think he was in a matter so important to both of us and to the service.
1785. Was it his duty to discuss the business? In my position, taking over more than half his duties, I was entitled to discuss it. This particular business had been just recently the subject of legislation; a few months previously, perhaps twelve months, that legislation took place, and was the adoption of my suggestions.

A. O. 1786. To what do you refer? The lease business.

Moriarty, Esq. 1787. Under the Act of 1875? Yes.

8 Jan., 1879. 1788. That introduced a new arrangement with regard to the lease business? By that Act the Legislature adopted and carried into practice suggestions of mine which had been submitted during previous years to various administrations, the principle of which will be found in the Land Bill, which was introduced by Mr. Wilson in Sir James Martin's administration five or six years before; and it had been embodied in regulations drawn up by me as to which I will produce the written concurrence of Mr. Forster, now Agent General. I had taken very great interest in the subject, and ultimately clauses were passed by the Parliament as I drew them; and I drew all the regulations embodying them. I did not act in the matter as a mere official but as something more. I took a deep interest in it as a public question, and my views were ultimately accepted by the Government and the Legislature. I had drawn up the regulations and worked them up to a certain date.

1789. As chief clerk? As chief clerk; and as chief clerk I took a very active share in the general administration of the department, and I paid particular attention to this business, more so than to any other within the scope of departmental administration, and I felt that I was in a position to urge upon the Government that the charge of this business should not be taken out of my hands. It had very nearly been brought into successful operation, and was then at a critical point at which it might become a failure or an accomplished success. Up to that point it had been a singular success. The result had been a jump in the revenue of some £17,000 within the twelve months, and the correspondence relating to the business had been nearly stationary.

1790. That was from the different positions in which the leaseholds were placed? From the facilities which were introduced into the new system for giving effect to the intentions of the Legislature with regard to these leases. The thing was at a critical stage; and I felt unwilling to take the new business unless I was continued in unquestioned charge of it. The Under Secretary did not take a deep interest in this business, although he has been managing it for eighteen months. I say the Under Secretary is not well informed as to a great deal of this business.

1791. Was not the matter practically decided by Mr. Garrett? No, it was not. I have a note by me, which I can show the Commission, in which Mr. Garrett told me to bring forward the matter again.

1792. President. Have you it with you? No; if the Commission will allow me, I will produce Mr. Garrett's note, in which he intimates to me that the matter should be considered settled for the present—that he had been under the impression that I had been indifferent to this matter—and that he concurred in my view, that it should be attached to my division. I will show Mr. Forster's note, in which he approved of these changes, and only abstained from carrying them out owing to some technical objections raised by the Surveyor General, subsequently overruled; and I can produce the original Bill. The law of 1861 provided that conditional and other purchasers should have a preferential right to lease adjacent lands, but it omitted to state what the new leases were to be; it omitted to give the new comer the right to prescribe what the new leases should be; and it omitted to give the Minister the power to prescribe it. There was great litigation and loss in consequence, several cases having come before the Courts, and in practice the state of the law led to great evils. A new and undefined lease, created in the midst of the old, inevitably caused misunderstanding. Litigious persons would attempt to gain, not the three times but twenty-seven times what they had a right to take up in any direction, and the result was to introduce a sort of commonage or debatable land. My suggestion was that the pre-emptive right attaching to the new purchase should always have a specific relation to the boundaries of the purchase.

1793. You considered that your position justified your hints? My position and the facts justified the statements I made.

1794. When you submit these papers we can go further into this matter. But there are some further accusations brought by you against Mr. Stephen which I think ought to be explained. You use terms which seem extreme. You speak of a measure, the leading features of which were suppressed? This was the paper referred to, and there was not a word about it in the minute which the Under Secretary caused to be submitted to the Cabinet.

1795. But your own memorandum waives that? As to the lease business, but not as to other matters.

1796. The leading feature of the arrangement was the separation of the Conditional Sales Branch? Yes; but there was also reference to what my position should be in taking up this new business, and there is not a word about that in the minute submitted to the Cabinet.

1797. In your memorandum of 23rd January, 1877, you state that Mr. Stephen had obtained by stealth an authoritative decision adverse to your views. How do you justify the use of that expression? I do not recollect that I have used that term. If I have, I refer to the fact that this particular paper was kept back while the official correspondence was put before the Government by the Under Secretary. It had been kept back by the Under Secretary, although it was an official paper sent by me to him, and officially ordered to be carried out.

1798. Is not that a different view from Mr. Stuart's in regard to the etiquette of the department? I might reply to that, that the Minister who dealt with the matter took a totally different view; but as to the question of etiquette, I repeat that I submitted my memorandum of suggestions to the Under Secretary in the first instance. Subsequently I obtained them from him at the instance of the Minister, when this memorandum was added.

1799. Do you think that the term "obtained by stealth" is a proper official term to be used by one officer to another? I confess I think the putting by of this paper was an extreme act on the part of the Under Secretary.

1800. Mr. Stephen having in his own discretion adopted such portion of your suggestions as he thought fit, put aside the rest? I think the correct course for Mr. Stephen to have taken would have been to inform the Cabinet that I took certain views, to have appended this paper, whether he agreed to it or not, to his own suggestions, and then the Cabinet would have had an opportunity of deciding on the question in full knowledge of the views of all the officers concerned. I do not think he had a right to deal with this paper in the way he has dealt with it. If I had acted in a similar manner I should have felt that any person whose paper I had put aside would have been justified in using this expression.

1801. Mr. Garrett's memorandum which you will produce will justify your action? It will show the Commission that in officially opening the matter I acted upon good grounds. I do not think, however, that express permission by the Minister was necessary, for I hold that it was competent for me, as an official, to open any official question coming within my province. If the Commission have done with this business

Moriarty, Esq.

I have done with it, with one exception. I have already mentioned that this note of mine was written in the Premier's room, and that he told me I could write anything I pleased. I wrote this letter of 15th March, 1877, at his table, not at his dictation, in which I see that I guard myself by referring to one or two points in which I thought Mr. Stuart was in error; but on getting afterwards, by the Minister's desire, Mr. Stephen's retraction, I found an essential word obliterated, obviously at a different time—an alteration I did not like. His letter expressed regret that his irritation should have induced him to rejoin in the "objectionable" manner he did; but at a subsequent time Mr. Stephen has drawn his pen through the word "objectionable." It looks very like a withdrawal of the apology to me.

1802. The word is obliterated? Yes, by a different pen and with different ink, obviously at a different time. I took exception personally to that, but I was told—the Government were going out of office on that day—that Mr. Stephen had had authority to do it.

1803. You wrote an apology in regard to the personal dispute between yourself and Mr. Stephen? I wrote what was intended to be a grievous expression of regret, in the hope of terminating the matter, and upon the assurance of the Premier that it should terminate the matter.

1804. Was it meant to end any disputes which existed between you and Mr. Stephen? Entirely; and I wrote it under the assurance of the Premier that it should terminate any disputes with Mr. Stephen. I have had no personal disputes with Mr. Stephen since the date of that letter. I have differed from him in matters of duty, but I have had, to my recollection, no personal disputes with Mr. Stephen since then.

1805. Since January, 1877? Since March, 1877. I supposed, in fact, that all personal disputes between Mr. Stephen and myself were ended by this correspondence, which I have not since seen until I saw it here. I know that it has been in the Under Secretary's possession, and that it has been shown to other parties.

1806. It has not been recorded? No; but it has been shown to third parties; in fact Mr. Stephen has shown it, among other people, to a reporter of the Herald.

1807. But he did not record it as an official document? No; but the Under Secretary felt himself warranted in treating it as a Cabinet decision, and showing it to persons representing the outside public. The department is not aware of this matter, as the papers are not recorded.

1808. The usual course would be to record them? Yes.

1809. Was it not from a sense of delicacy that they were not recorded? Possibly; delicacy to himself not to me. I am quite certain that there was no sense of delicacy to me which was the cause of their not being recorded, as I shall have an opportunity to show the Commission in another matter.

1810. In the following April you renewed the question of the lease business in a minute to Mr. Driver. Are you aware that there is a repetition almost word for word of the reflections contained in your minute of the 22nd January? I am aware that my minute contained a statement of simple facts; I have not seen it since.

1811. You will find the same sentence almost word for word there? [Papers handed to witness.] I do not quite see what it is that you refer to.

1812. Your statement that the lease business had never engaged Mr. Stephen's interest or attention, and so on? Quite so; it is a moderate statement of the case.

1813. It contains the same gratuitous reflections on Mr. Stephen's want of capacity? It mentions that Mr. Stephen had not considered that question in the same way that I had done; in the same way I might say that Mr. Stephen had not considered the higher mathematics.

1814. Do you not think that in your position that was unwarrantable? No; I pointed out that circumstances had given me a familiarity with the question, and that I had taken a deep interest in it.

1815. Your remarks refer, not to yourself but to Mr. Stephen? I have not finished my remarks; I was pointing out that up to that moment the whole treatment of the question had been in my hands, and that it should remain so. Then came the per contra. It was to be brought under the personal control of the Under Secretary who had not taken the same interest in the question that I had, who did not understand it in the same way that I did; I said that in the same way as I might have said had I been a mathematician, to this Commission, that with great respect they did not understand the differential calculus.

1816. Could anything be more offensive to the head of the department than to tell him he did not understand his duty? It had not been his duty.

1817. Did you ever meet with such criticism or remarks while you were Under Secretary, as you have applied to Mr. Stephen? Assuredly not; nor did I ever give occasion for them. I should expect to meet them under like circumstances.

1818. You would not have tolerated such remarks? I would have entertained them, and tolerated them, and come to an issue upon them. With regard to this particular issue I do not know what Mr. Stephen's views are, excepting that he will not go into the matter, although different ministers have told him to do it. Mr. Driver requested him to deal with the matter within a week. He has not done so to this day.

1819. You do not use the words "idleness" and "incapacity," but do you not imply the same idea in this correspondence? Certainly not. In no single instance have I done so. In this instance I urged upon the Government that this particular thing had been my nursling, my bantling, and I urged them to leave it with me. I had nothing to gain by it.

1820. Would the control of that business give you additional position? Certainly not. It gave me an opportunity of carrying out ideas which I had worked hard for. I saw that it was on the eve of being spoiled, and I believe it is being spoiled now. The Auditor General is in constant broils with the department about it now.

1821. That would not justify you in holding Mr. Stephen up to contempt? Certainly not. I did not hold him up to contempt, any more than I should hold him up to contempt if I were to say that he was ignorant of the differential calculus. I said just now that I do not believe that the Under Secretary has even now a competent knowledge of the business. He has had a reference made to the Crown Law Officers upon a point which I believe is known to every clerk in the office, and which is made as plain in the Act itself as any Act can make it. The point was as to whether lands held under pre-emptive leases are open to be sold by auction. The law says it shall; the universal practice has been to assume that it shall, and yet the Under Secretary referred it for decision. In another case he obtained an opinion from Mr. Garrett directly in the teeth of the opinion of the Attorney General and the law.

1822. President. Can you tell us what the matters were? One was with reference to whether pre-emptive leases are open to sale by auction. The other was as to whether lands leased by auction, which are

A. O.
Moriarty, Esq.
8 Jan., 1879.

are not selected on, can be taken from the auction lessee on renewal with a view to satisfy the claim of a new purchaser outside the lease. Auction leases like other leases are renewable from year to year. Where a purchase is made within a section the lease of that is not renewable, but the lease of the rest is. The practice has been to hold the renewal of untouched leases as unquestioned. That is the law, and there is a provision for the reduction of the rent upon the sections which are broken. The Under Secretary induced Mr. Garrett in a particular case to refuse to renew an auction lease—to give somebody else a pre-emptive lease of a section, out of which there had been no purchase. That was in the teeth of the general practice. The Under Secretary has not had the opportunity of taking such an interest in this business as to make himself familiar with its principles or its details.

1823. Mr. Ranken.] That is the lease business? Yes. I thought at the time that the thing would not be a success if I were not allowed to nurse it a little longer. I strongly urged that it should be left with me; and my anticipations that it would not be a success if not left with me are I think in course of realization now. The Commission will see that at the date of this correspondence the views of the officer in charge of that branch were strongly in accord with my own.

1824. He was your subordinate? He was subordinate to the Under Secretary and myself. Mr. Brown's views on this matter are plainly stated.

1825. Was he competent to form an opinion on that matter? I think very competent. He is still in charge of the business. The Commission can examine him if they think fit. As I have been rather severely handled in connection with this matter I think I must say a little more. The Commission will find, if they see fit to inquire into this matter, that it has been no uncommon thing for cases of this sort to be allowed to accumulate and lie by for twelve months at a time without any attention being paid to them at all.

1826. Are you prepared to substantiate the statement? I have no doubt that I could.

1827. If such a statement is made it ought to be substantiated? I have been told so by the parties concerned. I have not inquired into it, but I have no doubt it is true, and I accept the responsibility of substantiating it. I tell the Commission how to substantiate it; and that is, by reference to the officer who has charge of the work.

1828. Which officer? Mr. Brown. I may be right, or I may be wrong.

1829. Have you any wish to say anything further about this lease business? I have some returns which, if the Commission will permit me, I will call attention to when I am again examined.

1830. President.] We shall be happy to consider anything which you think worth producing to us? Since I was last examined there has been a change of Government, and my time has been so completely occupied with the ordinary current work of the office that I have had no opportunity to consider what I would say to-day.

1831. Mr. Ranken.] Then there is this matter of Mr. Edwards, a rather deplorable matter, in which you make a complaint against Mr. Stephen? I think that paper is docketed misconduct on my part. As the Commission will have seen from these papers the Cabinet suspended me for having been fined for an assault on Mr. Edwards under some provocation which it is not necessary to go into. The matter formed the subject of inquiry at the Police Office, and I was fined 20s. The Cabinet suspended me on the day of the occurrence. On the following morning I saw the Minister, who told me to write an explanation of my suspension, and he said that he would deal with it instantly. I wrote it, and the Minister did deal with it instantly. The Minister gave to the Under Secretary before 2 o'clock that day his minute releasing me from suspension; he gave it to the Under Secretary in order that the Under Secretary might communicate it to me. Although I remained in my office until 6 o'clock that day, the Under Secretary did not communicate it to me.

1832. How long was it detained? From before lunch-time one day until the following morning. It was an instruction from the Minister to release me from suspension, which the Minister had promised to send in this way in order that my mind might be relieved from anxiety; but the Under Secretary kept me in suspense until the following morning, and before the paper had been two hours in my possession he sent to me for it by his messenger. I replied that I had not quite done with it. The Under Secretary sent another message, stating that he required it at once. My reply was that I still had not quite finished with it. The Under Secretary then, although we had not spoken for a considerable time, walked into my room and demanded that I should give him this paper instantly. I replied that it would be returned as soon as I had done with it. It was returned within four hours. During the four hours I was in the Minister's room, when the Under Secretary came in and made this formal complaint of my having detained this paper.

1833. Was it in reference to that that you commented upon his arbitrary and insulting conduct? I said his action was most arbitrary. That was not the only thing. I spoke of his conduct in making remarks to other persons in my hearing, and referring to me. For example, on that day, he called out at my open door some insulting observations plainly intended for me to hear. I do not remember what they were now, but I called the attention of the Minister to them as insulting.

1834. They applied to you? Yes; I thought his conduct in demanding the return of these papers instantly was arbitrary, and that his conduct in talking at me across my open door was certainly insulting. I have a great respect for the institution of Under Secretary. I have held the position myself more than once, have been largely concerned in organising departments, and have some information therefore as to what is due to the position; but I cannot imagine any one in such a position, excepting Mr. Stephen, considering himself justified in acting in this way. I cannot conceive that the Under Secretary to the Treasury would treat the Collector of Customs as Mr. Stephen has treated me, or that Mr. Maxwell Allan would treat the Inspector General of Police or the Comptroller General of Prisons in such a way. If Mr. Under-Secretary Allan ordered either of those officers to give up documents in the way that Mr. Stephen ordered me, I think he would receive a much more direct and emphatic reply than I gave. I gave a courteous reply. I did not say that I wanted to copy it; I said that I had not it by me, and that as soon as I had completed what I was about I would send it to him. As I have said, the Under Secretary came into the Minister's room while I was there, and complained of this detention for four hours. Mr. Farnell's observation to me was that the complaint was a paltry one.

1835. Your words are—arbitrary and insulting line of conduct? I think his action in demanding the return of the paper was arbitrary; and that his conduct in going into the room of a gentleman who did not speak to him, and who was not a subordinate in regard to his immediate duties, was most arbitrary; and I think that his references to me in my hearing were most insulting. I must ask the Commission to allow allow me to call further attention to it. I did not intend to do so but I think I am driven to do it by being asked to justify the use of words such as these. I will show the Commission that on other occasions the Under Secretary's conduct to me has been most arbitrary and insulting, and that I have made it the subject of an official complaint to the Government.

A. O.
Moriarty, Esq.
8 Jan., 1879.

1836. Is that on record? It is not on record. I have recorded it, but I will explain to the Commission why it has not remained on record.

1837. In February, 1878, there seems to have been some collision or misunderstanding as to certain appointments. The names of Mr. Tindall, Mr. Keele, and Mr. Lord are mentioned as gentlemen applying for appointment; and there seems to have been some irregularity as to the way in which their applications were dealt with? I do not remember the details, and I have nothing by me to which I can refer.

1838. President.] If you prefer it we will leave this matter over until you can bring the papers with you? There has been a misunderstanding, and I am sorry to say it still exists. In taking over the new conditional purchase business I took over certain officers who were employed upon it. The Under Secretary was prevented by his own minute from interfering with the conditional purchase business or staff. There are certain officers who compose purely the conditional purchase staff.

1839. The appointments rested with the Under Secretary? It rests with the Under Secretary to carry out the Minister's instructions with regard to appointments, but I believe the Under Secretary labours under some misapprehension as to what his duties are in that regard. The Under Secretary apparently is under the impression that the Minister should not appoint anybody without consulting him. My idea is that the Under Secretary has no claim to be consulted as a right; and that no official has a right to make formal recommendations for appointments. Patronage is a privilege which pertains entirely to the Minister. As a general rule not even the Under Secretary is entitled to recommend new appointments. But there are exceptions to all rules, and in the case of this Mr. Olivier, who had been employed in the Audit Office on conditional purchase work, I thought it advisable that his services should be secured, and I do not think there was any indelicacy in my personally stating to the Minister that he was a person whose qualifications were such as to render it desirable that he should be employed. If I have to make a recommendation in regard to which action is necessary by the Under Secretary as the vehicle of communication with the Treasury or other departments, or in any other way, it would be a proper act of delicacy to write to the Under Secretary in the first instance, but I do not recognise that I am forbidden to speak to the Minister, or that the Minister is forbidden to exercise his right of patronage. That right is personal to the Minister, and is not an official matter. I have on a variety of occasions stated my opinions of the qualifications of particular applicants, and the Minister has of his own authority made the appointments then and there.

1840. Is that the case here? I think so. I do not assume the right to make recommendations. I have only written on the papers in such cases at the direction of the Minister, for him to endorse the appointment.

1841. Do not these papers show that Mr. Olivier was appointed and in the office before Mr. Stephen was aware of it? There is no application by Mr. Olivier or any recommendation of him by me. One of my assistants misconducted himself in some way, and I brought his conduct under the notice of the Minister. He had absented himself for a considerable time and I requested that another appointment should be made; and by an understanding with the Minister I wrote what was a recommendation of Mr. Olivier's appointment.

1842. Should not that have gone formally through the Under Secretary? It would have been more regular perhaps; but I have been placed in this position that I could not be certain that my recommendation would be submitted by the Under Secretary to the Minister since cases have occurred in which my recommendations have been ignored.

1843. Did you think it would be postponed? I thought it likely that it might not be effective at all. I have no doubt this recommendation was written by understanding with the Minister on the instant. The Minister's note is written on the same day as mine; and I have no doubt my memo. was written on the instant by understanding with the Minister.

1844. Then Mr. Olivier's appointment was cancelled in consequence of a promise made to some other clerk? No, it was not cancelled. Mr. Farnell was told that he had made a promise to some one else, and he then wrote this minute: "It is quite evident to me that matters of this kind should be dealt with by the Under Secretary. I must carry out my promise to Mr. Phillips, and therefore revoke my approval of Mr. Olivier." He did not [do that, however, for on the day following he wrote this further minute: "Referring to the latter part of Mr. Stephen's memo. and my own memo., what I mean is that the Commissioner shall recommend within his own division, and that the recommendations should come through the Under Secretary to the Minister, on the same footing as the Surveyor General."

1845. Is that the routine of the Survey Department? Yes; but there is this difference that the Surveyor General does not submit cases at all to the Minister. The submission of cases brings us into conversation and sometimes, in an emergency, action might be taken on the spot, without waiting for the ordinary red tape. I wish, however, to explain the reason for this remark "on the same footing as the Surveyor General." The Under Secretary has, on a variety of occasions, ignored my right to any voice in the recommendation of or control of any subordinate officers. This was the subject of an understanding between Mr. Stephen and myself, and I am sorry to say that he very soon ignored it. That understanding was to stop all question,—I won't say dispute, certainly not on my part—as to whether these matters of intra-departmental control would not come within the general rule of business which I had to submit to the Minister without reference to the Under Secretary. Mr. Stephen one day, in conversation with Mr. Blackman, threw out a suggestion which Mr. Blackman brought to me, and it was to this effect: Whether I was willing to submit all these cases to the Under Secretary for the Minister's sanction, on the understanding that he would submit them in the same way as he did similar cases sent to him by the Surveyor General. I asked Mr. Blackman, "Do I understand you as bringing that suggestion from the Under Secretary to me?" He replied, "Wait a minute." Mr. Blackman went back to the Under Secretary, and on his return replied that that was the deliberate suggestion of the Under Secretary. I accepted that proposal and I am prepared to act upon it, and I have acted upon it. But the Under Secretary ignores it. I shall have to call the attention of the Commission to the fact that the Under Secretary will interfere with my subordinates, entertain their applications for leave of absence, and recommend their applications for increases of pay without my knowing anything at all about it. I had to complain to the Premier that one of my assistants had been called away from his duty without my knowing anything at all about it.

A. O.
Moriarty, Esq.
8 Jan., 1879.

1846. President.] Some question has arisen lately with regard to promotions, showing a state of things rather more than interfering with your officers. I refer to promotions in one branch of the office in regard to which your subordinates complain that justice has not been done to them? The understanding about that was, I think, quite distinct. It was pointed out in my own memorandum of suggestions, and I think the understanding was embodied in the Under Secretary's minute under which we are acting that the department should remain as a whole, and that the status of the several officers was not to be interfered with by the division of duties, which placed the conditional sales business exclusively in my charge.

1847. The question to which I refer has arisen within the last few weeks? A number of young gentlemen who are serving in my division of the office, and who are senior on the grades to those upon whom a vacancy has been conferred, have been ignored. They came to me in a body, and I advised them to put their case in writing and I would submit it, which I did. As it happened, the vacancy was in the Under Secretary's division of the department. In my note to him I said that without claiming any right to a particular vacancy the understanding was that the claims of officers senior on the grade were to be considered first, and that to that particular office my subordinates were eligible for promotion.

1848. You considered that by remaining in your office they should not lose their right to promotion? I do not think the Under Secretary could have been aware that the seniors in the grade were on my side of the office. I think he acted under the impression that the officers he recommended were the seniors on the grade.

1849. The officers in your division of the department protested? Yes; a deputation saw the Minister, who at their instance stopped the matter, pending inquiry. It is quite certain that under the arrangement for the division of the department the promotions were to go on as before, in the same way as they would in a military service.

1850. Would there be any difficulty in the way of the production of these papers; are they within your department or custody? They are not within my official custody. I think I saw them on the Minister's table. I believe they are in the Under Secretary's custody. Mr. Farnell told me that he had referred them to the Commission, or that he would do so.

1851. I suppose that to obtain them we ought to make formal application, or could you suggest any other course? I suppose they are with the Under Secretary. With regard to this question of Mr. Olivier's appointment, I see here that there is a minute of mine. I mention that I wrote a minute, but had not sent it out of my custody. I intended to revise it. Some one of these minutes written by me was not sent on by me. I intended to have made some alteration in it. I have not seen any of these papers for some time, and I do not identify it at this moment. But there is some one minute of mine which contains some strong expressions, perhaps some intemperate reflections, I think, in connection with this case of Mr. Ollivier's. But I never sent that minute to anybody. Having written it, I meant to alter it.

1852. You meant to withdraw it? I did not mean to issue it. It was taken by the Under Secretary's directions off my table before half-past 9 o'clock on the following morning. I think that was a rather arbitrary thing for him to do.

1853. It was on the original papers? Yes.

1854. You meant to remodel it? I did, and not to put it forward as it appears here, I won't say by stealth, taken off my private writing-table in the office from the papers in my personal charge, and taken without my personal knowledge or concurrence. I mention it as illustrating two things. First, it is possible there is something in it which I should now probably regret. I think it entirely unwarranted and unwarrantable. I undertake to produce my memorandum or remonstrance to the Under Secretary against his interfering with my papers before half-past 9 o'clock in the morning. The Commission will see that, however great my disinclination to say anything detrimental to the Under Secretary in his absence, I am driven into a corner, and am fighting with a shadow, which, for aught I can tell, may be a cloud or a windmill. He appears to have been very free in his communications with regard to me to the Commission. I do not know that I have anything to reply to excepting what I have seen here. All I can say is that I am prepared to reply to anything if I know what it is. But on the other hand I am placed in the difficult position of having to refer to matters without knowing what is important and what not.

1855. President.] The papers put into your hands represent the matter laid before the Commission.

FRIDAY, 10 JANUARY, 1879.

Present:—

MR. ABBOTT, | MR. RANKEN.

R. P. ABBOTT, ESQ., PRESIDENT, IN THE CHAIR.

A. O. Moriarty, Esq., was called in and further examined:—

A. O.
Moriarty, Esq.
10 Jan., 1879.

1856. Mr. Ranken.] There were some documents you were going to put forward, Mr. Moriarty? I think the last time I had the honor of appearing before the Commission I mentioned that the present system of pre-emptive leases was one that I had taken a great interest in for a number of years, in which I felt that I occupied as it were a personal position, entitling me to assert my views with some confidence. I think I mentioned that I thought I could refer to papers showing that very many years ago that which is now the law had been by me urged upon the Government. Looking over my papers since I found that memorandum, which is in fact the very original draft, written in 1867 or 1868.

1857. In suggestion of what? In suggestion of the modification which became the law in 1875. These are some very rough notes which I have found, which will be found to be almost word for word repeated in the regulations which are now in force.

1858. What is the date? It has no date, but it must have been written at the end of 1869 or the beginning of 1870.

1859. Then can you put that in as matter for the Board? It is hardly in a shape, but I will, with the permission of the Board, put in a document which recognizes it. This is a document which, although unofficial, unofficial, is entirely upon an official subject, and I have no doubt the writer, if I had the opportunity of referring to him, would authorize me to make any use of it. It is a document from Mr. William Forster, the present Agent General, dated the 5th August; that must have been 1869, because he retired from the Government in the early part of 1870. It is to this effect:—"My dear Moriarty,—I have submitted your draft regulations having reference to grazing rights of conditional purchases to Adams, who seems to be so strongly impressed with the technical difficulties in the way of carrying such regulations into effect that I am afraid I shall have to forego what I thought, and still think, would have beneficial effects upon the operation of the law under which pre-leases are acquired. I intend, however, to have a talk with Robertson on the subject. Yours sincerely,—WILLIAM FORSTER."

1860. By "Adams" he means the Surveyor General? Yes.

1861. And the reference to memoranda? That refers to the memoranda which I had written. The principles embodied in these draft regulations had been accepted in a draft Land Bill framed by another Government some years previously, at my suggestion. I shall be in a position, if necessary, to show the Board that the Land Bill of 1867-68 contains almost word for word the words of this draft, and that the same words appeared originally in the Land Bill of 1875 as introduced into Parliament. They were not in the Act as passed, because the subject was misunderstood and seemed likely to be misunderstood. But words appear in the Act as passed which were drafted by me in substitution of these.

1862. And of which the original words appeared in the draft? They were words taking the power by regulation to do these things which were previously proposed to be done in the Act itself, and the words of the regulation issued under that Act, all of which I framed, carry that suggestion out. Having taken a very great interest in this question I have ever since I was chief clerk in the Lands Department, having the whole of the business passing through my hands, given very great attention to the question, and I think up to that time, as I stated, with great success, as shown by these figures:—The lease rent for the year 1873 was £30,516, exclusive of pastoral leases; for the year 1874 it was £33,020; for 1875 it was £35,787; and in 1876 it went up to £48,871. It made that jump in consequence of the increased facilities for the acquisition of these rights. In 1877 it was £51,875, so that from 1875, before the system came into force, in two years the amount of the revenue from pre-leases went up from £35,000 to £51,000 in round numbers.

1863. That is between 1875 and 1877? Yes, in two years it has gone up from £35,000 to £51,000, showing that the system, as regards revenue, had a marked result. As regards correspondence these are the figures. I am afraid I have not the particulars here, but I have examined it, and I am right in stating that while there was a small advance it was very trifling. The increased correspondence in these two years was very trifling. It is my impression there was hardly any additional work at all. I assert as a fact that hardly a dozen cases of dispute came under the cognizance of the office during that period, and I had charge of the business. If there were any, the regulations admitted of their being so promptly settled that they left no difficulty.

1864. That is the period between the passing of the Act and the introduction of the regulations? No, the regulations were made upon the passing of the Act. I had charge of that business.

1865. In consequence of your being chief clerk? Precisely so. I think I have shown I had some ground for taking an interest personally, and I hope not a selfish interest. By taking it I gained nothing except the opportunity of having more trouble in carrying into complete effect a vital change in the law, which I was largely instrumental in bringing about, and which embodied my own conceptions. When I became aware that the arrangement under which I was to take certain duties—additional duties—finding that this was not part of what I had suggested, I instantly saw the Minister. I had supposed that it would form part of that.

1866. You refer to the correspondence of December, 1876? I took exception to this as far as I could. I declined to take the proposed position without those duties, in which I took the greatest interest, because I foresaw that this conditional purchase business was as troublesome as a man could be concerned with. It has been encumbered with the grossest abuses for so many years that to manage it satisfactorily would require a great deal more power than I saw my way to acquiring, and machinery I saw no likelihood of being provided.

1867. What abuses do you refer to particularly? I refer to dummieing in its various forms.

1868. The disregard of declarations? Yes; whereas the law provides certain conditions, the land was in the bulk of cases obtained without those conditions. In the year 1878 about half-a-million acres have been recovered by forfeiture from persons who took it up about 1875, under the law, without any intention of carrying the conditions out, or with the intention of evading them. I saw that the conditional purchase business would require more authority.

1869. And was this leasehold business intimately connected with it? It had always been connected with it. For example, sometime in 1870 the leasehold business was conducted in the Conditional Purchase Branch, and was under the charge of the officer who had charge of that branch. I found that in taking charge of the office as chief clerk, in 1873, that the Lease Branch was in conjunction with the Conditional Purchase Branch. Finding that the officer in charge of the sub-branch was an efficient officer, I thought it would be more convenient, and I suggested to the Under Secretary, and to the Minister, I think, that the Lease Branch should be made a separate branch. It was so, and it has remained so up to the present. It is so now, to this moment. As I pointed out, the great bulk of the applications are from conditional purchasers; not one can be dealt with without reference to the conditional purchase register, which is in my custody.

1870. Are there not a large number of leases connected with the original free grants? Yes, but those are matters which are mere routine, and only require re-adjustment as they are affected by conditional purchases, and new claims under the new applications.

1871. Do they not arise out of auction purchases and improvement purchases? Out of auction purchases and improvement purchases in part.

1872. What proportion of them? The great trouble is in connection with conditional purchases; not perhaps in amount of revenue, although that is very considerable.

1873. Then was that from the increased area, or from what cause? The increased facilities for obtaining leases. The former practice had been that the applications had to be made to the Minister for Lands, but were not dealt with until the conditional purchase was measured, and the application was allowed to remain undealt with for years. The result was that the adjacent land was in the leasehold of another party, and the conditional purchaser did not dare let his cow graze outside. But by the change made under under the law of 1875 it was settled by law what his boundary should be in relation to the boundary of the leaseholder; by application to the land agent he became entitled to take possession of his land; he was aware, and the squatter and the neighbouring selectors were aware, what his land was. The result was a cessation of complaints that people could not get possession of pre-leases, and a great diminution of trouble in the office in connection with it. I was going to observe, on becoming aware it was proposed to take this away from me, I saw the Minister and urged that it should not be done. The Minister made an appointment for 2 o'clock the same day, proposing to see me and the Under Secretary together on the subject. It was about 1 o'clock when I saw the Minister and this appointment was made, and between that time and half-past 1 or a quarter to 2 I wrote a memorandum giving certain reasons, which was that deliberate statement, in writing, which was the subject of conversation at my last examination.

1874. Mr. Driver was Minister then? No, Mr. Garrett. I merely mention this to give the real routine of the occurrences. About a quarter to 2 the Minister came in and the Under Secretary followed him into his room; my appointment was for 2 o'clock, and I did not feel warranted in asking to see him before 2. At 2 o'clock the Minister went out, and I got a note from him which I have here. It is headed, "Private," and I am not warranted in doing more than mentioning that I received such a communication to the effect that as the matter was settled it had better remain as it was for the present. It was on receipt of that note that I went to the Under Secretary's room.

1875. Chairman.] I think that is as much as you have told us before on the papers before us? I do not think so.

1876. Mr. Ranken.] Then had you any other communication with Mr. Garrett? Yes; I saw Mr. Garrett afterwards; I wrote him a note, and I have his reply to that note. It is also headed "Private," but it is entirely official in its contents, not confidential. If the Commission will look at it, without asking me to put it in evidence, I think they will see that I am warranted in saying that this paper will bear out my statement that in re-opening the question officially I acted upon the suggestion of the responsible Minister.

1877. What is the date? I think the 22nd January, on the same day, I think. Mr. Garrett very soon afterwards went out of office. In February, a few days afterwards, when Mr. Driver came into office, I wrote the first of a series of memoranda which have been produced by the Under Secretary, which begins, I think, by referring to the circumstance that I wrote at the former Minister's suggestion.

1878. I think the date was the 5th April? That was the first opportunity I had of taking the matter up from the time of the previous Minister. I think the Commission will see that the administration of the whole of the Government had been undergoing changes. In the meantime the department was engaged very fully, and I put questions by which would bear putting by until the proper time came to raise them. The first of these memoranda was addressed to Mr. Secretary Driver, and he took with respect to it the course which Mr. Garrett had intimated his intention of doing—referring it to the Under Secretary for report. He has never made that report. He has no right to act so. He has entirely mistaken his position and mine in acting so. As I said to the responsible Minister, if my views should be decided by him to be erroneous, I should have nothing more to say; if they are right, the Minister should have the opportunity of deciding that they are right, and if so I should have the opportunity of carrying them out. It should not be in the Under Secretary's power to put documents aside like that.

1879. You contend that both Ministers had agreed to consider your suggestion? Both Ministers, and one directed the Under Secretary to reply to my suggestion. I do not know what the Under Secretary's views are, but I have heard that he entertains views opposed to mine, and therefore is not likely to agree to any change proposed by me. This was one of two official subjects which I had expected to have to deal with before this Commission; the other I need not refer to.

1880. Chairman.] I think there were certain papers you were desirous of having in? Two matters only.

1881. Mr. Ranken.] The appointment of these clerks? I do not know I have anything to say to that.

1882. I think you had some papers in reference to these appointments that you wished to refer to? The Commission will remember, in reference to the appointment of a clerk named Olivier, a certain memorandum of mine I mentioned when I last had the honor of appearing before this Commission had been taken without my authority from my room. The paper I refer to is dated in February, 1878. In a minute which is here the Under Secretary had complained to the Minister that I had recommended a particular appointment otherwise than to him. With regard to that I would merely observe that in the case of every Minister in office from the time of my taking charge of the new business it had been my practice in emergencies to make the recommendation of a particular officer, when his employment was to be in my own division entirely. In the case of this Mr. Olivier, an officer had misconducted himself, I reported it to the Minister, thinking it concerned myself alone, and the Minister's instruction was, "Mr. Moriarty may carry out his recommendation in this matter," which I did. Subsequently, on the same paper, I wrote another, recommending that Mr. Olivier be appointed at the same salary as that of Mr. Burns. The Minister approved of it, and it was because of my sending it straight to the Minister instead of sending it to him, that the Under Secretary has made a long complaint, in consequence of which the following minute was written by the Minister:—"It is quite evident to me that matters of this kind should be dealt with by the Under Secretary. I must carry out my promise to Mr. Phillips, and therefore revoke my appointment of Mr. Olivier." On the following day I saw the Minister, and pointed out that there were other vacancies, which admitted of both Mr. Phillips and Mr. Olivier being provided for. The burden of the complaint was that Mr. Olivier's appointment had prevented the Minister from carrying out his promise to another person; but I showed that there was an opportunity of appointing Mr. Phillips as well as Mr. Olivier. The result was that Mr. Phillips was appointed, and Mr. Olivier's appointment was not revoked.

1883. Still, strictly speaking, I suppose the matter should have gone to Mr. Stephen? I do not know that. I had the duty of submitting to the Minister all matters relating to my own business, and taking his instructions. The removal and appointment of a clerk I consider a very small part of that business.

1884. Were not these appointments expressly excluded? In an emergency one does not hesitate to set a small routine aside. I thought it of no consequence, and I should not have made any difficulty about it, but the Minister, on the matter being explained to him, made the following addition to his minute:—"Referring to the latter part of Mr. Stephen's minute, and my minute of yesterday, what I mean is that the Commissioner should recommend within his own division, and that the recommendation should go through."

through the Under Secretary, on the same footing as the Surveyor General." I had received the paper from the Under Secretary, and I returned it with these remarks (and that is the paper which was not with the correspondence, and has remained with me. It was separated by the Under Secretary and sent back to me) :—"The explanatory addition which the Minister has made places the within matter on the footing at one time suggested by the Under Secretary himself, and to which I have always been willing to adhere." I think there is nothing offensive in that. It was returned with these remarks :—"I sent for the papers this morning, Mr. Moriarty being late, and have only at present to observe that I shall prove to the Minister by written documents, how utterly unreliable the Commissioner's statements are. The very course he recommends to be the correct one has been ignored, as I never saw his recommendation until after the approval of the Minister. The other papers have been kept by me, as I shall have something to say with respect to them." That is on the 2nd of February I wrote this :—"The Under Secretary can be in no such need of papers as to send into my room and throw my papers into confusion before half-past 9 this morning. I had not done with those he has taken, and shall not discuss the matter further with him in its present stage." Mr. Stephen writes :—"Mr. Moriarty has evidently mistaken the latter part of my minute. I had not the slightest intention of allowing him to discuss the matter further with me. It is the Minister to whom the case, with other papers, will be re-submitted, and who no doubt will have little trouble in discovering the side on which the indecency, if not worse quality, lies." This, no doubt, refers to these words which I did not intend to forward. I intended to alter them.

1885. Then you wished to amend that in some way? I did mean to alter it. I did mean to strike out this word "indecency."

1886. You did not dispatch it? It was taken off my table without my authority. I mentioned in my last evidence, I think, that the Under Secretary shortly before this had sent a proposal through Mr. Blackman, the chief clerk, that the course which the Minister indicates in his last minute should be taken, and I had intimated to him my readiness to agree with that view. But in a few hours the Under Secretary saw fit to ignore it, in a case in which one of the commissioners of conditional purchases—who took their instructions from me entirely—made a report that one of the inspectors of conditional purchases—also entirely under my direction—had appeared before one of his courts in a state of intoxication. I heard of this from the Minister, who gave me certain instructions about it. I had not seen the papers, and I applied to the Under Secretary for them, and after some discussion he sent them to me, and made this curious remark about the understanding with Mr. Blackman, "I hardly think the suggestion made in conversation with Mr. Blackman can be looked upon as an understanding in the light of the decision of the Minister a few weeks ago." I was not on speaking terms with the Under Secretary, I am sorry to say, and on getting a message from him whether I would accept this course, I asked the gentleman who brought it whether I was to understand that as a suggestion from the Under Secretary. He went back and asked him, and came back and said he did mean it as a suggestion for our joint observance. I said I would observe it. The date of this memorandum of Mr. Farnell is February, 1878. I regarded it as settled entirely. There are other earlier papers attached to these, with regard to the cases of Mr. Keele and Mr. Lord, and some others, which really involved the same thing. There was a long complaint of the Under Secretary to Mr. Driver of my having directly called attention of the Minister to the neglect of duty of certain officers under my control.

1887. You alluded to the charge against inspectors of conditional purchases. Is that on record? It is on record; the officer was dismissed. With the Under Secretary's complaint I received a minute ineffectively censuring me for doing my duty, and stating that the decision must be taken as final. On receipt of that minute I instantly saw the Minister, and called his attention to this memorandum, pointing out that if this were to be the ultimate decision it would place me in the position that I should have to carry on a branch of the service with officers over whom I had no control, as whenever they misconducted themselves they would not be accountable to me. This minute appears upon another matter. The Commission will remember certain of these papers have not been recorded in the department. I observed that it was not from any delicacy to me that they were not recorded. These papers were immediately recorded and published through the department before I saw them at all. I think I ought at least to have seen a paper referring to myself before the clerks in the office saw them. I took this paper to Mr. Secretary Driver when I received it, and respectfully requested him to reconsider it. I stated to Mr. Driver that if that became his deliberate view, that if I was to direct the duties of these officers and not deal with complaints of misconduct against them, the position would be so inconsistent I should decline to hold it. I told him it amounted to practically superseding me, and I stated that I could not hold a position which seemed likely to become devoid of usefulness, and I would not encumber the office by taking part in what would be a solemn farce. I left the paper with Mr. Driver, and he promised to reconsider it. He retained it until he left office, and the Under Secretary retained it since; I never saw it until in the possession of this Board. This paper in which Mr. Driver directed me that I was not to deal with complaints of the officers under my charge is involved in the same subject as this matter of Mr. Olivier. The Under Secretary contended that to whichever division the officer might be attached matters affecting his conduct should be dealt with by him, without reference to me, that being his right. This of course would lead to great inconvenience in a number of ways. It had led to this inconvenience in one case. I had been pressing an inspector of conditional purchases to report upon some urgent cases, and I had been making an arrangement of duties between him and another to allow of him performing what he had in his hands. I could get no answers to my letters to this gentleman. At last, on the 2nd July, 1877, I ascertained that he had been on leave of absence for a considerable period.

1888. An inspector? Yes, an inspector who took his instructions from me. He had obtained leave of absence, and an extension of his leave. I then first became aware of his having leave of absence at all. I had made a complaint of this to the Minister. I had some reason to believe that there had been some misunderstanding, so I put it aside, and made no question about it. But the thing is not terminated, I am sorry to say. Within the last two or three months another inspector of conditional purchases applies—in October, 1878—for leave of absence. His letter comes into the Under Secretary's Record Branch on the 1st November, 1878, and remained with him till the 19th December, 1878, and then the Under Secretary submits it to the Minister for approval, who, probably without being aware where it came from, approves. The officer was informed, and then for the first time the paper was sent to me for information. I was left in entire ignorance of this officer's wish to leave.

1889. And being entirely under your orders? He being entirely under my orders, and instructions entirely

A. O. Moriarty, Esq. entirely drawn up by me, wholly in my branch, the sphere of his duties entirely arranged by me, and supposed to act in concert with the Commissioner of the district, who also would settle in concert with me the times for holding Courts of Inquiry.

10 Jan., 1879.

1890. Requiring the inspector's attendance? Yes; and this is not the only case. Within the last few days I find another gentleman has been allowed leave of absence—Mr. Evans, the cricketer. I certainly was aware, indeed the parties who wanted to get him down asked me if I would make any objection, and I said, "No." By that accident I am aware he has got leave, but to this moment I have never been officially informed.

1891. The matter has been arranged in the Under Secretary's office without reference to you? Without any reference to me whatever. I spoke to Sir John Robertson about it, and he then told me he had given leave. I said it ought to have been sent through me. He said of course it should, and at his suggestion I submitted the following minute: "Mr. Evans, a conditional purchase inspector, has I understand been allowed leave of absence, and without raising any question as to this I desire to submit that as this gentleman is a subordinate officer of mine his application should have been made through me." Sir John Robertson wrote a note on this that, "Unquestionably it should have been." If I had been aware of it I should have made every arrangement. In one case I had been threatening him with suspension for neglect of duty while he was on leave of absence without my knowledge by the authority of the Department of Lands. I am sorry to say that the matter does not end here. The Commission will observe that the Minister's instruction that I should recommend in matters within my division is dated the 1st February, 1878. On the 13th March, 1878, Mr. Evans makes this communication to me: "I beg permission to charge the accompanying application for expenses. Not having been travelling, it is impossible to make application otherwise." This is upon our register, but the first I saw of it was about ten days afterwards, with a communication from the Under Secretary to this effect: "This seems a special case which ought to be certified by Mr. Blackman or some gentleman of the conditional purchase department." I made this note on it: "The circumstances are special, and the application should have been submitted to me for recommendation. Recommended;" and I addressed it to the Under Secretary. He returned it to me with this: "Not the slightest necessity for any recommendation from the Commissioner. Being a money matter I sent it to him for information." I took this to the Minister with a note to this effect: "I do not think the Minister will approve of the Under Secretary's views, which are contrary to his instructions that I should recommend." And he wrote: "I think Mr. Moriarty's view is the correct one." Some months afterwards it came to this: The way in which these inspectors are remunerated is this—so much for each selection they inspect, and so much for travelling allowance. It is only known to me and the officers under me whether these inspectors are employed in travelling on the days set forth in their vouchers or do the duty. We only can check them, and we only know whether they made the reports which they charge for. Yet all these things were dealt with by the Under Secretary without reference to me.

1892. Then the Under Secretary would have no check upon them. Not the slightest. At last the Minister had to write again: "In the case of certain expenses in connection with the conditional sales division they should in all cases be approved by the Commissioner before being submitted to me if it is necessary to submit them." Many things are submitted which do not need to be submitted at all. Some of these matters which I have produced.

1893. Speaking of Mr. Evans, are these cricket matches supposed to be sufficient excuse for leave of absence? I have taken objection once or twice. On one occasion Mr. Farnell made the remark that he seemed to be more employed as a cricketer than as an inspector. There is another matter about which I had written a memo. that went no further. I saw the Minister about it, but after his explanation, at his suggestion, I withdrew the memorandum. It is as to the first appointment to positions. A vacancy recently occurred in my division of the office, in reference to which I was anxious to secure the services of a gentleman who I thought would be a very useful clerk. I thought it necessary to make special application, because people have sometimes been appointed with hardly any qualification whatever. My division has been at times flooded, I might almost say, with people of very little use.

1894. What leads to such appointments? Well, of course Ministers are obliged to consider the recommendations of their supporters, and it is not for me to criticise them, although unqualified people have got in so often that I have felt it necessary to urge the Minister to let me have some well qualified men when some position was vacant that required good men. With regard to a recent vacancy, I suggested to the Minister the name of a gentleman. I made no official recommendation, and I could not conceive that I was treading on anybody's corns, or could give offence to anybody. To my surprise, a few days afterwards, I was told that his appointment was cancelled. I thought it was a good opportunity of coming to an understanding as to what the routine of these matters should be. On the 13th of last March I wrote this minute:—"As regards the recent appointment of Mr. Biggs to the temporary staff of the division, I desire respectfully to state that on the Minister's approval of the appointment I communicated unofficially with that gentleman in Melbourne, whither he had recently gone to fill a temporary engagement that he will probably have relinquished on receipt of my note. I trust, under the circumstances, the appointment will not be cancelled, and that no question of routine of application will subject him and myself to the serious inconvenience—an inconvenience and annoyance that would result from such a course. At the same time I submit that a perfectly correct routine has been followed; his application was regularly made, and it is quite regular for me to ask and obtain it. If I had felt it proper to make a formal application, no doubt it would have been to the Under Secretary, whose business it would have been under present instructions merely to submit it. But I did not think it either proper or necessary to make such a recommendation, which would moreover inevitably have led to delay, recognizing the well-known rule (known at heart to everybody but the Under Secretary for Lands apparently) that the patronage of the service is not a matter of official routine but appertains personally to the position of a responsible Minister. It is perfectly regular for me to mention in conversation the qualifications of any individual, especially having regard to the present requirements of the service in this division, and perfectly regular for the Minister if he saw fit, as he did, in making the appointment then and there. The paper then went direct to the Under Secretary from the Minister in the regular course. It is almost humiliating in the present state of business in the department, which calls for the undivided attention of every responsible officer, that valuable time should be consumed in the discussion of questions so plain and yet so insignificant." I saw Mr. Farnell and submitted the matter to him. He told me that although the Under Secretary had been pestering him to cancel this appointment, he had declined to do do it, although I had been informed that it had been done. I quite feel that I am making more of these personal matters than the circumstances justify, but I do not think I need apologise to the Commission for that.

A. O.
Moriarty, Esq.
10 Jan., 1879.

1895. Chairman.] We desire to have everything that will bear upon this matter? I confine myself entirely to matters which directly arise out of these issues, which I learn from the Commission have been brought under their notice by the Under Secretary himself.

1896. We did not say the Under Secretary? I do not think I have said a word which would affect the Under Secretary except as in connection with these matters.

1897. Mr. Ranken.] What you have still to bring before us relates to the same subjects? I have done with the matter of appointments.

1898. President.] Before you go into any fresh matter I should like to see those papers with regard to the inspector's cases, if there is no reason why they should not be left with us? There is another case referring to this matter of dealing with the conduct of my officers without reference to me. In 1877 I was despatched by the Minister for Lands to the Yanco Creek with the Deputy Surveyor General, on a special commission. On the very morning of my departure I had a visit from Mr. King, one of the Commissioners, who asked me what had been done in connection with his complaint against the inspector of his district. A very gross case it was of having appeared before his Court in a state of intoxication, and ridiculed the proceedings of the Court and answered the Commissioner with impertinence, turning the proceedings into a very gross farce. I had never heard of it, and I said, "I never heard of such a complaint from you." He said, "I reported in April last." I found it had been sent to the Under Secretary and had been untouched from April until August, although all this while I might have been held responsible by the Government, and should have been held responsible by the Parliament and out of doors for this misconduct. His report embodied this charge, and I was not allowed to see it; no action whatever had been taken upon it, a delay for which I should have been held accountable. This officer was removed to another district, and he would have been dismissed but for the delay. The only thing I believe that prevented his dismissal was the circumstance that when dealt with the occurrence was one of very old date. In November he was brought to account for having been drunk in the previous April. It was too late to dismiss him then.

1899. This is another officer and another offence? Another officer and another district. The conduct of the same officer has been brought under notice lately, and he has escaped dismissal by resigning. He should have been dismissed in April, 1877. There is another matter I feel I have a right to refer to bearing upon the suppression or destruction of papers. I have already brought before the notice of the Commission a memorandum in which Mr. Stephen alleges the right to do as he pleases with the papers addressed to him by his subordinate officers. I think he has no such right, and had no such right. I think no man has a right to destroy official papers.

1900. Mr. Ranken.] Do you refer to the paper that was removed from your table? No, I call attention to another case in which he exercised a right to do as he pleased with documents written by subordinate officers. This is a case in which some minutes were destroyed by mutual concurrence of the officers concerned, with which I have no concern as far as that goes. I do not think that course ought to have been taken myself, but it was taken by the concurrence of the officers concerned. The case I think ought to have rested as it was, but the Under Secretary and the Surveyor General concurred. I have something to say, however, with reference to a minute of mine, not simply as bearing upon the destruction of papers, but the subordinate officers being allowed to deal with special cases without reference to me as chief clerk in the department. It was to this effect:—"I do not know how such errors can now be corrected, the deed having been issued to the auction purchaser. Such errors as these are always liable to occur, if the routine of the department, which is devised to prevent error, is set aside at the solicitation of individuals. I have always objected to this, and should have done so in the present instance had the enclosed memo. been submitted, as it should have been, through me. The case will be one, I suppose, of conversation." On this the Under Secretary wrote:—"This paper has been with me previously, and I wrote a minute separate, pointing out the undesirableness of a junior officer in the Survey Office being instructed that he was only to take directions from or act under the authority of the Minister for Lands, or the possibility of such an inference being drawn by Mr. Lane from the Surveyor General's memo. Mr. Adams has put the matter right, and my memo. and his reply have been by mutual consent torn up. This paper has not been registered and will be torn up also when I have prepared from it a separate report on the facts for submission. I think the Under Secretary has no right to tear my papers up. I think he exceeded any authority which the usages of the Public Service permit to any official."

1901. The paper you wrote was torn up? Well, both of them, I suppose.

1902. Chairman.] You said you would tell us the case? The case will be found by these particulars: "Alienation, 7,575." In one of the minutes the use by me of such expressions as "arbitrary and insulting conduct" was made the subject of question. I complained in that minute of the Under Secretary having on some one occasion alluded obviously to me in my hearing, in a way the reverse of polite or respectful. Another case occurred which I felt bound to make instantly official. It was this:—On one morning I was sitting at my desk engaged in my business when I overheard, it was impossible to do otherwise, my door being open, I overheard the Under Secretary call out to Mr. Olivier, a junior officer, something plainly importing that Mr. McElhone had been put up by me to move in Parliament for some papers in Mr. Pretious's case. I naturally felt very indignant at this, but I also felt unwilling to injure Mr. Pretious, who had shortly previously been dismissed, and towards whom at that time I should have been very unwilling to take an ungenerous course. I felt rather inclined to relieve his mind of the contrary impression, and for that reason I begged Mr. Olivier to convey to the Under Secretary that he was entirely mistaken in supposing that I was instrumental in causing reference to this case in Parliament. I thought that was enough, but shortly afterwards Mr. Blackman came into my room from the Under Secretary, and said Mr. Stephen asked him to ask me whether I had not been at the bottom of Mr. McElhone's attack upon Mr. Pretious. I said it is a very singular question; I know how I feel inclined to answer it, but I will not, and beg him to feel assured he was entirely mistaken. In a few minutes afterwards the messenger brought into my room a written memorandum, not marked private or unofficial, in which he alluded to this matter, to the effect that whether I was instrumental in this or not my conduct to him had been such that he must be excused for entertaining the idea; that I would do well to see that the papers were not brought before Parliament, as they would contain some unpleasant allusions to my removal from office some time before. So this gentleman made a most wanton, indelicate, and indecent reference to my dismissal from office some years before, under circumstances with which he was perfectly cognizant, and proposed that I should use some influence to prevent these papers being brought before Parliament, as papers relating to my dismissal would be attached to them.

1903. Mr. Ranken.] Is that paper in existence? I had that paper registered, and I sent it to the Minister, accompanied by a note from Mr. McElhone. I said to him, "I beg to inquire whether I have directly or indirectly induced you to take any action adverse to Mr. Pretious in Parliament." He said, "Certainly not; the only thing you said was to ask me not." That day I received a letter from him, in which he declared that on no occasion had we had any conversation on the subject but once, and then I had actually requested him not to persecute Mr. Pretious any more. I submitted it to the Minister, who was about to bring it under the consideration of the Cabinet, but a few days afterwards I got this minute:—"Amongst the papers which the Minister has had before him for a short time past, I notice a purely unofficial memorandum of mine, minuted from a private conversation. The Minister will remember my speaking to him about it, and showing him the way in which it was written and addressed by me, plainly intimating its unofficial character. Yet this has been registered. I will not trouble the Minister with any observations but simply state my intention, acting upon my own responsibility of having the register of the document as well as the document itself cancelled.—W.W.S." Mr. Farnell writes: "I approve of the register being cancelled." I naturally supposing as I did that this meant the withdrawal of the document, but this was by no means the Under Secretary's impression. He wrote a further minute: "The Minister's decision applies to the paper itself, as well as to the register of it." But that was not all. That is dated on the 21st March. On the same day there is a memorandum from the Under Secretary, addressed to one of my assistant officers, who works entirely under me (Mr. Harper): "Will you let me see the conditional purchase register book?" Mr. Harper not having arrived at the office when I sent for him, the next in charge brought it—(all this took place within the first few minutes after the office being open, before the usual hour of attendance)—"I sent for the next in charge, who brought up the book, when the register was duly cancelled in accordance with the authority given me by the Minister. The Commissioner can hardly feel surprised by the course I have taken, for the registration of a paper which was an unofficial, if not a private document, was altogether unwarranted and improper." After addressing to me one of the grossest insults which it is possible for one man to address to another, imputing to me the meanest motives, and suggesting conduct equally mean, that paper is to be withheld, and he assumes the authority to cancel all the records of the minute containing this insult, and contends that it arises out of private correspondence, and was actually addressed to me personally, when we had not been upon speaking terms for a year previously, and he dared not have addressed such a communication to me privately. No man dare. The papers about my dismissal from office were accordingly, a short time afterwards, attached to Mr. Pretious' case and reproduced for the amusement of the curious, at a time when no one would take the trouble to look at them, and when it could produce no impression but that Mr. Pretious and I were rowing in the same boat. In no particular was there anything in common but the fact that Mr. Thomson, the inspector of accounts, had, in reporting, recommended that I should be required to give security, without being aware that I was under the security of a thousand pounds, which Mr. Pretious was not. In no other particular was there the smallest reference to anything in the cases that were in common. Yet these papers are republished purely for the purpose of annoying me eight years after their date.

1904. This was in a paper addressed to you, and which you recorded? Yes, I submitted to the Minister that if there was no foundation for the imputations that it contained, I should be protected; if there was, I should be dismissed. With regard to my dismissal from office many years ago, I should have no objection to these papers being published. They were originally published at my request, and laid before Parliament. It was the Member for the district in which I lived who moved for them. So far from wishing to suppress them I had, from first to last, sought a candid examination of these papers.

1905. Is that minute written by Mr. Stephen in existence now? I suppose not. In these papers the Under Secretary intimated his intention of destroying it.

1906. Chairman.] You have no copy of it? No, I have no copy of it. I can write a copy from memory, I believe, it made so strong an impression upon me.

1907. You have given us the substance of it in your evidence? Very nearly word for word.

1908. Who is responsible for the publishing of that correspondence in reference to your own case? It was attached to the papers in Mr. Pretious' case.

1909. Who is responsible for publishing it if it were unnecessary? I suppose the Under Secretary is responsible. At any rate he threatened me that it should be done.

1910. You took it as a threat? Yes.

1911. And it was done? Yes; when I was appointed to the Lands Department in 1873 I was appointed chief clerk. Another gentleman in the office (Mr. Blackman) had almost had a promise from the Government of the office, and my going in stopped his promotion and getting a considerable increase of salary, and stopped every other man in the office getting a step, so that I came into the department with every man under me entitled to consider himself aggrieved by my coming there. But in only one or two instances have I ever had a difference of opinion with any of the juniors. Every man seemed gratified with my being there, and all co-operated cheerfully. On one or two occasions I had to come to an issue with my subordinates, and one was dismissed for misconduct. But the general good-feeling was most creditable, with two exceptions, Mr. Stephen and Mr. Pretious, who had both been subordinates of mine, and both of whom I had previously served. The two men of all others that I should have expected co-operation from were the two who worked together against me, as a former Minister for Lands expressed it. In Mr. Pretious' case it commenced by his writing on some suggestions of mine remarks of so very gross character that I took them at once to the Minister and requested he would use his authority to have this paper withdrawn, which he did. He ordered Mr. Pretious to withdraw it. That was the commencement of a system of bickering against me, in which Mr. Pretious was supported by the Under Secretary; and from that time up to the time when I had to take a very decided step with regard to it, as I stated in the correspondence of January, 1878, there were almost some hundred of irritating memoranda addressed to me by the Under Secretary, marked "unofficial," on official subjects. I have made suggestions to the Under Secretary from time to time which I think he would have done well to entertain. I stated to the Under Secretary once, in conversation, that I was prepared to take the odium and responsibility of indicating to him officially a number of the employes of the department, some of them in high positions, who were not satisfactorily conducting their duties, but I made this condition, that it should should be entertained: I would not expose myself to the unpopularity of pointing out certain officers if my recommendations were to be shelved. He said I had better not, and I did not. I have had a great deal of experience in public offices. I was appointed Chief Commissioner of Crown Lands in 1860 under an arrangement which was personally unsatisfactory to the then Under Secretary, Mr. Fitzpatrick, and arrangements had been discussed under which this office was proposed to be attached to Mr. Fitzpatrick's own office. I took it under circumstances likely to lead to difficulties in my official relations with Mr. Fitzpatrick, but up to 1870, when he retired, on no single occasion had we differed. We had differences of opinion in reference to official business, but our personal relations were undisturbed. I have never been in collision with any other officer than Mr. Stephen. At this moment there is no other officer but Mr. Stephen whom I have had any difficulties in getting on with. I should have no difficulty in getting on with him if his eyes were sufficiently open to the responsibility of our positions in the department. I believe on the other hand that it is before this Commission that he has come in collision with another officer—the Deputy Surveyor General. I can say I have no other difficulty, and I believe the Deputy Surveyor General has no other difficulty.

A. O.
Moriarty, Esq.
10 Jan., 1879.

1912. Mr. Ranken.] Did you not say that some part of these personal difficulties arose from the system itself;—would not the best friends come into collision in consequence of the system? The system is unsatisfactory, and I have urged amendments of it in several regards.

1913. You will go into that question? If you please. The fact is my own official position is an illustration of the fact that the duties supposed to devolve upon the Under Secretary have considerably outgrown the Under Secretary. Considerably more than half the duties of the Lands Office proper are dealt with by me in consultation with the Minister for Lands, and the Survey Department, without any reference to the Under Secretary at all. There is no real responsibility, as the business never passes through the Under Secretary's hands. Of course there is a nominal control, but it is not real; and then the business of the department has outgrown the organization, and the organization itself is to some extent effete—worn out.

1914. Has a letter written to you by the Commission, asking for the appointment of Commissioners up to the 7th December, reached you? No, I am not aware. I will make inquiries and see. (Looking at press copy of letter.) No, I have never seen this paper.

1915. All these papers you refer to will be included in this if you furnish it? The fourth paragraph will include it.

1916. That letter ought to go to you, I suppose? I think it ought to have come to me.

1917. I suppose any further communication we make in reference to this must take the same course to the Under Secretary? The Commission have seen fit to lay down that rule, I think. It was, I thought, within my proper line of duty to give the information, which I sent direct to the Secretary in the first instance, and which was returned to me.

MONDAY, 13 JANUARY, 1879.

Present:—

MR. ABBOTT,

MR. RANKEN.

R. P. ABBOTT, ESQ., PRESIDENT, IN THE CHAIR.

R. D. Fitzgerald, Esq., was called in and examined:—

1918. President.] You are Deputy Surveyor General? Yes.

1919. You are aware that this Commission has been appointed to inquire into the organization and administration of the Departments of Lands and Survey? Yes.

1920. Are you aware that some special matters have been referred to the Commission for inquiry—some special matters with which your name is connected? Yes.

1921. One of them is the case of an application for the lease of land on some islands near Lord Howe's Island? Yes.

1922. I suppose you have seen these papers? I have seen them, but I was anxious to get them since I knew that a reference was made to the Commission. The Minister gave me a direct order to get them, but I was unable to get them, and I never got a satisfactory reason why I could not get them.

1923. You never made any application to the Commission for them? I did not know they were with the Commission. I wanted to see Mr. Fisher's application, also Mr. Brown's.

1924. Here are the papers. Will you look at them? I wished to have an opportunity of looking into them, because the dates of some of the papers might be important. I was told by the clerks that the papers were with the Under Secretary, and that I could not have them.

1925. How long is it since you were told that? I have asked for them every week since the Commission sat. I have always been told that they were in the Under Secretary's drawer, and that I could not have them.

1926. Who gave you that information? Mr. Patterson, the head of the Record Branch, and Mr. Newman, who gets papers out of the Under Secretary's room when they are required in other departments.

1927. Do you say they have told you that every week? Yes; I made a point of asking.

1928. And these gentlemen told you that they were in the Under Secretary's room? Yes, and that I could not get them in consequence.

1929. You say you got an order from the Secretary for Lands to procure them? Yes, when I could not get them otherwise.

1930. What did you do with that? I gave it to Mr. Patterson.

1931. Do you remember when? Some short time after the Commission was appointed.

1932. And you have frequently asked for the papers since? Yes.

1933. And you were told that Mr. Stephen had them in his drawer? I was told that Mr. Stephen had them in his drawer, and that I could not get them.

1934. Here is the letter forwarding these papers. Do you see the date of it? Yes, the 31st of October.

1935. We have had those papers since that date, but we have not received any request in any shape, to send them to you, nor have we heard in any way that you desired to see them? I wanted to see them specially.

1936.

R. D.
Fitzgerald,
Esq.
13 Jan., 1879.

- R. D. Fitzgerald, Esq.
13 Jan., 1879.
1936. There is no urgent necessity why we should proceed with this matter to-day as we intended. We can leave them in your hands for a day or two? The point on which I want to satisfy myself is, as to whether the intimation to Mr. Fisher that he could not get the lease, because it was granted to Mr. Brown, was given before the Minister granted the lease, and that, I think, can be easily ascertained from the papers.
1937. There is no date to the minute before you, is there? There is a figure 3.
1938. Does not the letter forwarding these papers appear to be written under a mistake, inasmuch as it says they were forwarded at the request of the Commission, while the minutes written on the papers by Mr. Farnell and Mr. Stephen imply that they were forwarded at the instance of the Minister. Both minutes are written on the same date, the 31st October, and Mr. Stephen's letter, forwarding the papers to us was also written on the same date, that letter indicating that they were forwarded at our request. Can you understand that? No; except that it put the papers out of my way.
1939. If you take these papers to-day would you be prepared to go on with the examination on Wednesday? I think so.
1940. The case of J. B. Watts has also been referred to us? I do not know what it refers to.
1941. Here are the papers? I know this case quite well, and I am ready to give you any information on that case.
1942. These papers of Mr. Brown's I see were recorded? Yes, in the Occupation Branch originally.
1943. They would be recorded in Mr. Patterson's branch? Yes; he told me that they were with the Under Secretary.
1944. And the proper person to get them out of the Under Secretary's room was Mr. Newman? Yes. I have applied to each of them, and they have always told me they were in the Under Secretary's room and that I would not get them.

Edward Patterson, Esq., was called in and examined:—

- E. Patterson, Esq.
13 Jan., 1879.
1945. President.] You are the clerk in charge of records in the Lands Department? Yes.
1946. Do you recollect having any papers in connection with an application for a lease of some islands near Lord Howe's Island? Yes, I do.
1947. Do you recollect Mr. Fitzgerald making any application to you for these papers? Yes.
1948. When? I suppose, so far as my memory will serve me, about six weeks ago; but I could not say to a week or so.
1949. Has he asked you for them more than once? Yes, two or three times—three, I think.
1950. When was the last occasion; was that six weeks ago? About five weeks since, I suppose. When he asked me for them the first time, I suppose it was about six weeks ago.
1951. And since then he has asked you again? Yes.
1952. Two or three times do you say? Two or three times.
1953. What did you tell him? I told him the papers were with the Under Secretary.
1954. Was that the reply you gave him on all these occasions? Yes.
1955. Did Mr. Fitzgerald give you any order from the Minister for these papers? Yes; an order which I gave to Mr. Newman.
1956. How long ago was that? About five weeks ago, the third time.
1957. Did you tell Mr. Newman that Mr. Fitzgerald wanted them? I told him, and I handed to him the Minister for Lands' memo.
1958. You handed that to Mr. Newman? Yes; and I told him that the papers were with the Under Secretary.
1959. What is Mr. Newman's position? He keeps all the Under Secretary's papers, and sorts them out.
1960. Has he access to the whole of them? Yes.
1961. Always? Yes.
1962. He knows what papers are in Mr. Stephen's possession? He told me that these papers were with the Under Secretary.
1963. When you gave him this order? Yes.
1964. That they were still with the Under Secretary? Yes.
1965. Do you recollect how long ago it is since you saw these papers? I really do not know. I think they came into our office in the month of June. It is about seven months ago.
1966. Since the time when you first saw them? Yes.
1967. Do you recollect at what stage they had arrived when you saw them last—were there any minutes by Mr. Fitzgerald upon them? That I do not know because the papers did not come through my hands.
1968. Were you aware that these papers were sent to this Commission on the 31st of October last? No; I had no idea of it.
1969. Is it since the 31st of October that Mr. Fitzgerald has asked you for them? Yes.
1970. And since you told Mr. Newman that he wanted them? Yes.
1971. You did not know until now that the Commission had the papers? No, I did not.
1972. Mr. Ranken.] In ordinary cases would not the papers pass through your hands before they were sent anywhere? Yes. I entered them in the month of June, and then I think they went over to the Crown Lands, and from that office I believe they were sent over to the Under Secretary as far as I can remember.
1973. Your books show the transmission of the papers from one office to the other? Yes.
1974. And it would have been in accordance with the usual routine for you to have entered them when they came to the Commission? Yes.
1975. Those papers stand now with the Under Secretary upon your books? I believe so; but I could not say for certain. I know they were with the Under Secretary because Mr. Newman told me so.
1976. President.] Since you handed that order to Mr. Newman you have heard nothing more about them? Mr. Fitzgerald has two or three times reminded me with a laugh that those papers have never been received from the Under Secretary.
1977. Since he asked you? Yes.
1978. He told you that he had never received them? Yes; about a month ago, on the steamer, when coming to the office, he laughed, and said to me, "I have never received them."
1979. That was after you had received the order? Yes; some weeks or more; it was more than a week.

Thomas

Thomas E. L. Newman, Esq., was called in and examined :—

1980. President.] What is your position in the Lands Department? I assist the Under Secretary; examine accounts, deal with advertising, and issue orders for the insertion of advertisements in the local papers. T. E. L.
Newman, Esq.

13 Jan., 1879.

1981. You have access to the Under Secretary's room? Yes.

1982. And have charge of his papers? Yes.

1983. He refers to you if he wishes to find papers? Yes.

1984. And you know generally all the papers which are in his office? Yes.

1985. Do you recollect some papers referring to an application of Mr. J. A. Brown, for the lease of some island near Lord Howe's Island? Yes.

1986. Do you recollect whether on any occasion Mr. Fitzgerald made application to you for these papers? Yes; he did.

1987. When was that? About two months ago, I think.

1988. Was that the first occasion? I think it was.

1989. What did you say to him, or what information did you give him about them? I think I said the papers were with the Under Secretary, waiting action.

1990. Did he only ask you for them on that occasion? I think that was all.

1991. Have you heard anything from Mr. Patterson since? Yes; he gave me some memo. of the Surveyor General.

1992. Of the Surveyor General? Of the Deputy Surveyor General.

1993. What was that? Asking for the papers.

1994. Did not Mr. Patterson give you an order from the Minister for Lands, authorizing the Deputy Surveyor General to get the papers? I do not think it was a written memorandum; I think it was verbal.

1995. What was the written document to which you refer? Just asking for the papers.

1996. From Mr. Fitzgerald? From Mr. Fitzgerald, asking for the papers, and Mr. Patterson came to me to ask me to get them.

1997. You do not recollect having seen an order from the Minister about them? No.

1998. Mr. Patterson informs us that he gave it to you? The order which he gave me might have been initialled by the Minister; if that had been the case Mr. Fitzgerald would have had the papers.

1999. You think that in that case Mr. Fitzgerald would have got the papers? Yes.

2000. It was an order from the Minister which Mr. Patterson says he gave you? The order might have been initialled. I could not say now whether it was or not.

2001. You say that if he had had an order from the Minister he would have got the papers; was the fact of his not having such an order the reason why he did not get them? No; when Mr. Fitzgerald asks for papers he always gets them; he gets them as a rule unless they are under action.

2002. Did you tell the Under Secretary that you had been asked for these particular papers? I did.

2003. How long ago? About two months ago.

2004. What did the Under Secretary say? He said he could not spare the papers, as he had not quite finished the action on them.

2005. Is there anything which would refresh your memory as to the time when you applied to Mr. Stephen for them;—did you speak to him more than once about them? I think only once.

2006. Had you sufficient authority to hand these papers over to Mr. Fitzgerald yourself? Not until the Under Secretary had given me permission to do so. The instruction I received from the Under Secretary was that no papers are to leave his room unless he sees them.

2007. You told the Under Secretary that Mr. Fitzgerald desired to get the papers? Yes.

2008. And he told you that he had not finished with them? That the action was not complete.

2009. When was that;—do you recollect? About the same time—about two months ago.

2010. At what stage had these papers arrived at when you saw them last? I think Mr. Brown had had permission to go to these islands.

2011. Did you know that these papers had been referred to this Commission? No.

2012. Did you know that these papers had been in our possession since the 31st of October last? No, I did not.

2013. When did you first ascertain that we had these papers? I did not know you had them.

2014. Not until I told you? No.

2015. Then you were in error in supposing that they were in Mr. Stephen's room? Certainly.

2016. When you first spoke to Mr. Fitzgerald? Yes.*

2017. Can you say whether the occasion on which you spoke to Mr. Stephen about the papers was subsequent to the 31st of October or not? I could not say.

2018. But until to-day you did not know that we had the papers? I did not.

2019. You knew nothing more about it than that they had come to Mr. Stephen's room? I saw them in the Under Secretary's room. They were there; but according to the dates you speak of now they could not have been there on that day.

2020. On the day that Mr. Fitzgerald asked you for them? They could not have been there at that time.

2021. Not at the time that Mr. Fitzgerald first asked you for them? No.†

2022. In the ordinary course of business what is your plan with regard to transmitting these papers from one department to another? I pick out all the decisions that are ready for the Minister, and put them into a pigeon-hole which I have marked. The Under Secretary takes them to the Minister and gets them approved. The Minister sends them out by a messenger, and they are put on a side table. I then sort them and take them to the heads of the different branches.

2023. Have you no record of them? No; the head of the branch marks them off in a book.

2024. Do you stand by and see that done? No.

2025. You have nothing to show how you part with them? I have no record. The only record is, that when the papers are submitted to the Under Secretary they are marked off in the branch they belong to; and when they are returned they are remarked and distributed in the room.

2026.

*NOTE (on revision) :—When Mr. Fitzgerald asked me for the papers they were with the Under Secretary.

†NOTE (on revision) :—Yes.

- T. E. L. Newman, Esq.
13 Jan., 1879.
2026. You have nothing to show that you have parted with them? No.
2027. If they were lost you would have no means of showing that the blame did not rest with you? No.
2028. You have no recollection of having disposed of these papers in any way? No.
2029. In the regular course of business, in what way would they have been dealt with in coming to this Commission? They were in Mr. Stephen's room, for example—what course would they be sent in coming to this Commission? They ought to be sent to Mr. Patterson, the head of the Record Branch, as having been sent to the Commission.
2030. Any other course would not be the usual course? No.
2031. So that if these papers never turned up again, there is no one in your office who would know anything about them? No; but the person who had the last notation would be responsible.
2032. Still if they were in the Under Secretary's room, and sent away here out of the usual course, there is nothing to show that the Commission had them; and if they were lost, they would be held to be lost from the Under Secretary's room? Yes; I suppose they still stand in the record book as being there.
2033. Would not the responsibility rest on your shoulders, you having charge of the papers? Yes; I have no book.
2034. Would not that be the result of this want of system? Yes.
2035. If these papers had been lost, there was nothing to show they had passed the Under Secretary's room? Nothing.
2036. And you are in charge of the papers there? Yes.
2037. Mr. Ranken.] As I understand you, you first received a verbal application from Mr. Fitzgerald for the papers? Yes.
2038. Then, subsequently, this order or memorandum? There was a memorandum.
2039. Did you refer to Mr. Stephen in both cases? I think I did.
2040. And what answer did you get? That the action was not complete.

WEDNESDAY, 15 JANUARY, 1879.

Present:—

MR. ABBOTT, | MR. RANKEN.

R. P. ABBOTT, ESQ., PRESIDENT, IN THE CHAIR.

R. D. Fitzgerald, Esq., called in for examination:—

- R. D. Fitzgerald, Esq.
15 Jan., 1879.
2041. Mr. Fitzgerald said: If the Commission has no objection, I should wish the Under Secretary for Lands to be present at my examination. I have a special issue to bring before the Commission, which amounts to a charge against the Under Secretary, and I am desirous that he should be present.
2042. The President said: In regard to a similar request that was made to the Commission, the Commission decided that it was undesirable to grant it. The business of the Commission is to make inquiry into the state of the Lands Department generally, and not to investigate charges against particular individuals, except in so far as their position affects the management of the Department. Any information you can give us with regard to any matter of business in the Lands and Survey Departments, we shall be glad to receive.
The examination of Mr. Fitzgerald then proceeded:—
2043. President.] Do you wish to state anything further to the Commission? I wish to state that I have never had any quarrel with the Under Secretary, nor was there ever any misunderstanding between us prior to his sending the letter to Mr. Harriott. I have no desire to bring any charge against the Under Secretary or go further with one than to prove, if required, my statements on the letter referred to, which statements I believed would have been dealt with by the Minister. I have neither taken any notes nor kept any record of the cases which I intend to submit, and can therefore only produce such cases as I have sufficient recollection of to procure.
2044. I think the last minute written by you on these papers which you have laid before the Commission is dated the 31st October? I said I was ready to go on then.
2045. The minute says, "as verbally stated to the Secretary for Lands when I returned him these papers on the 25th instant, I am prepared to furnish proofs of my statements when required";—to which papers do you refer in that minute? I think there are only two papers, because the applications for lease were not with the papers you have. There was only Mr. Harriott's letter, and that is the paper to which my minute of the 31st October referred to particularly.
2047. With regard to the first part of it, which speaks of Mr. Stephen's personal interest, is that one of the matters upon which you say you are prepared to give information? Yes.
2048. Will you have the goodness to explain that to us? I have further explained it in the last part of the next minute I wrote; on the reply of the Under Secretary where it is not quoted by the Under Secretary exactly as I gave it.
2049. In the next minute you wrote you explain thus, "As to the charge itself and proofs, I have not charged the Under Secretary with having a personal interest, but with taking a personal interest?" Yes, he quotes me as having said he had a personal interest.

2050.

R. D.
Fitzgerald,
Esq.
15 Jan., 1879.

2050. Then the minute goes on: "By which I intended to say that when he is acquainted with an applicant, or an applicant influences him, he acts as special pleader for him, and is unwilling to have such special pleading sifted through the Survey Office;"—can you tell us what cases or circumstances led you to form that opinion? I have some of the cases with me; perhaps it will be better for me first to give the Commission particulars with reference to the very case referred to by the minute.

2051. If you please you will tell us how it came to you and how you came to deal with it? An application was made to the Governor by Mr. Fisher, of Hobart Town, for the right to take guano off an island near to Lord Howe's Island, and, if necessary, "the lease or any protection of that kind"; Mr. Fisher claimed to have discovered that there was guano on the island.

2052. What is the date of that application? The 7th May, 1878.

2053. In the usual course I suppose the application went from the Governor to the Lands Department? I may state that on the 13th May, 1878, a Mr. Brown, of Sydney, made an application to the Governor similar to that which Mr. Fisher had made. On Mr. Brown's application the Governor raised the question as to whether the island was a part of the territory of New South Wales. If it were a part of New South Wales it would be dealt with as ordinary Crown land belonging to the Colony, and would not come under the Governor's special jurisdiction. I had to answer the question. I said the island was in New South Wales, and I then made some suggestion as to the preservation of the native plants on the island in case it were leased to anybody. After that Mr. Brown—I think I may say by coming to the office, and understanding that a special lease was the form under which to apply—made an application for a special lease on the 13th May, 1878. Both applications went to the Under Secretary. Cases respecting special leases are not dealt with by the Under Secretary, but by Mr. Harriott. With regard to the two leases or applications for leases spoken of, the Under Secretary dealt with them. He submitted Mr. Brown's case to the Minister for Lands with this recommendation: "Special lease may perhaps be approved at rental approved, subject to the conditions imposed by the Surveyor General."

2054. That was Mr. Stephen's minute? That was Mr. Stephen's minute, and the Minister approved of it.

2055. And it was submitted to the Minister without going through the ordinary course? Yes, without going to Mr. Harriott. Mr. Fisher's application does not appear to have been submitted at all, nor was any reference made to it so far as the Minister was concerned, but this minute was written on it by the Under Secretary: "A special lease has been granted of this small island to Mr. Brown, who made definite application for the same and tendered £50 as the yearly rental. This application was sent to the chief officer of the Occupation Branch yesterday."

2056. Is there any date to that minute? The figure is very indistinct, but I think it is "8."

2057. The day after the right was granted? The day after he got the approval of Brown's application—the sending of the minute which granted Brown's application and refused Fisher's. The upshot of it is that Mr. Fisher has not been informed of what was done up to this day—that he was not to get the lease, and that Brown holds the lease.

2058. You say Mr. Brown has got the lease? Yes; I may add that Mr. Peel Raymond is acting for Mr. Brown.

2059. Was it Mr. Raymond who wrote the first application for Mr. Brown? I think he did.

2060. I see on the first application paper Mr. Raymond's name in print, and it is also signed by him? Yes, he acted as Mr. Brown's agent from the first.

2061. Did you remark that the 13th May, the date of Mr. Brown's first application, sent in by Mr. Raymond, is the day on which the papers in Fisher's case were sent on to the Under Secretary for Lands? I did not.

2062. That is how I understand the minute; perhaps you will have the goodness to explain? Probably it was the day, but the papers were not registered in the office until the 15th.

2063. Whose minute is that dated the 18th? I do not know; I suppose it is the minute of some one in the Colonial Secretary's office.

2064. That is, the same date referring the minute to the Secretary for Lands is the same date on which Brown's application comes in? I see it is.

2065. Who registered it? Mr. Paterson would be the proper officer. The Governor in his minute on Brown's application mentions that a similar application has been made by some one from Hobart Town.

2066. That is the letter of the 31st? Yes, that was the minute that brought it to the office, the one on which I wrote the minute about the plants. Mr. Harriott drew attention to the fact of Fisher's claim having been ignored, and the Minister withdrew his decision that gave it to Brown, but it was afterwards granted to Brown.

2067. In the first instance, in pursuance of the action taken by the Under Secretary, the Minister granted Brown's application, and afterwards withdrew it in consequence of a representation made by Mr. Harriott? Yes, the Minister said there should be a reference to the Survey Office.

2068. And in consequence of that it was referred to you? It was referred to me a second time by Mr. Harriott. I said I thought that Fisher had a claim if he would give equal rent, and accept equal conditions to Brown. Indeed, I think I said he had a preference.

2069. The Governor says in his minute: "I presume these islands are the same as those applied for a few days ago by some person from Hobart Town; if found not to be part of Howe Island, the application may be returned to me;" so that the Governor appears to have recollected Mr. Fisher's application as well as Mr. Harriott? Yes.

2070. Then, as I understand it, the first application of Brown's, dated 13th May, was done away with altogether, and an application made afterwards for a special lease? Yes.

2071. And that stood as it were on a fresh footing? Yes.

2072. Still no notice was taken at all of Mr. Fisher's application? So far as I know there was not. I might point out that the reason given on Mr. Fisher's application to Mr. Harriott, for writing the letter of refusal—for that is the meaning of it—embodies a point which the minute of the Minister on Brown's case does not embody.

2073. What is that point? That the one application was more regular than the other. But the Minister appears to have had no notice of Fisher's application when he approved of the lease to Brown.

2074. There is nothing in the papers in Fisher's case to show that they were ever submitted? I should decidedly say they were not submitted.

2075. So far as appears by the papers nothing was known by the Minister of Fisher's application? I think not; at the same time there is a minute on Fisher's papers to the effect that preference has been given to Brown's application on certain grounds.

R. D.
Fitzgerald,
Esq.

15 Jan., 1879.

2076. But so far as Fisher was concerned there was no objection taken to his application on that ground; he knew nothing of it; he has had no communication about it? He has had no communication up to the present time.

2077. His application was in point of fact ignored in dealing with Brown's, although both applications were for the same island? Yes.

2079. Chairman.] Fisher's first application is dated 7th May; that is referred to the Under Secretary on the 13th May, and on that same day the application by Mr. Brown is sent in by Mr. Raymond? Yes.

2080. Then on the 31st May an application for a special lease is made, and the date of dealing with that, as it appears on the letter, is the 7th June; it is dealt with by a minute of the Under Secretary's, in which he says:—"Special lease may perhaps be approved at the rental offered, subject to the conditions proposed by the Surveyor General"? The condition proposed by me was a general condition, to be observed by anyone to whom the island might be let.

2081. That is as to the plants? As to the plants.

2082. Mr. Ranken.] It was a standing rule in regard to such leases? I said that by whomsoever the island might be leased that condition should be observed.

2083. Chairman.] That it be made "an absolute condition that plants, especially tree-ferns and palms, should not be removed from the island without special permission"; and on the same day on which that minute was received Mr. Farnell approved of Mr. Stephen's recommendation without its having gone through the usual course of being submitted to Mr. Harriott? Yes; Mr. Harriott always submits such cases to the Minister himself.

2084. What are his duties in reference to such cases; does he make recommendations? There is a general direction from the Minister that applications for special leases should be sent to the Surveyor General for report. Mr. Harriott sends them to the Surveyor General for report; when he obtains that report he then makes his own report upon it, and submits it to the Minister. He acts in these cases as the Under Secretary does in other cases, and as the Chief Commissioner, Mr. Moriarty, does for conditional purchases.

2085. And in this particular case none of the ordinary steps were taken before the final approval by the Minister was given? They were not.

2086. The next minute in the order following is one by Mr. W. W. Stephen, sending the papers on to the chief officer of the Occupation Branch—that was after the approval given by the Minister? Yes, he sent them then to Mr. Harriott.

2087. The matter having been decided, what was the object of sending the case to Mr. Harriott? That he might communicate with the parties. That he might tell Fisher his application was rejected, and Brown that his application was accepted, and carry out otherwise what would have been done if the applications had first gone to him.

2088. Mr. Harriott in his minute refers to the fact that Mr. Fisher made application prior to Brown's? He does.

2089. And upon that the Minister writes, on the 11th June, "No report has been received from the Surveyor General as to the special lease; the application should not be considered before receiving a report upon it from the Surveyor General?" There is a general order that there should be a report from the Surveyor General on all such applications; and in regard to the applications of Fisher and Brown, that general order was passed over. My general report was taken as if it were a special report.

2090. That is the general report which you first wrote? Yes; on the two cases combined.

2091. Then your next action was to write this minute: "I am of opinion that, subject to conditions for the non-removal of native plants, referred to in my previous report, there is no objection to the granting of a lease of Roach Island, an island to the north of Howe Island, containing about 35 acres; and if Mr. Fisher is prepared to take up a special lease on terms equal to, or at a better rental, to what is offered by Mr. Brown, his claim, as prior to that of Brown's, should be given the preference?" Yes, that is my minute. It is that minute the Under Secretary took exception to, and in regard to which he wrote to Mr. Harriott, suggesting that reports on the merits of cases should not be received from the Survey Office, but that they should deal with it themselves.

2092. Your minute is dated June 15th? Yes. Mr. Stephen's letter went with the papers which the Under Secretary sent to Mr. Harriott, and Mr. Harriott sent the papers to me.

2093. It is a minute of the 26th June, 1878? I may say here, as I have stated subsequently in that minute of mine, that the Under Secretary, when action arose upon it, came into my room and said to me that Mr. Harriott had no business to send this letter to me, because it was never intended that I should see it.

2094. He told you himself that it was not intended that you should see it? He told me himself that I should not have seen it.

2095. The paper contains a stamp;—can you tell the Commission where it got that stamp? It was stamped in the Occupation Branch.

2096. There is nothing on the document to show that anything was done with it to make it a public document before it went to the Occupation Branch? It was a letter from Mr. Stephens to Mr. Harriott.

2097. And the number at the head of it? That connects it with the case.

2098. That makes a public document of it? It connects it with the case; it may have been sent to Mr. Harriott with an intention of its being kept private, but Mr. Harriott sent it to me.

2099. In point of fact it was an official document, and was not in the nature of a private communication? Yes.

2100. In that minute of Mr. Stephen it says, "In reference to the minute of the Deputy Surveyor General of the 15th instant, I would observe that the granting of the lease has already been approved of by the Minister for Lands (see decision on my memo. of 7th instant); report required from Survey Department as to area, &c., which having been furnished with accompanying charts sent in by Brown, the applicant," and so on; but this portion of the minute seems to be the most pertinent: "The questions as to Fisher's claim to be considered in the matter, in the present stage, the rent to be paid, &c., are such as come within the province of the Lands Department to deal with, and as to which any recommendations or suggestions should, I think, emanate from the head of the administrative department which has the supervision supervision of this particular class of business. As this case happens to have come through my hands I must say I think Fisher has no legal status whatever; but Mr. Brown has duly complied in his application with the requirements of the law." That minute is addressed to the chief officer of the Occupation of Lands? Yes; Mr. Harriott made a reply to that.

R. D.
Fitzgerald,
Esq.

15 Jan., 1879.

2101. Is this Mr. Harriott's minute: "A reference to the Surveyor General is necessary, under instructions from the Minister, of all applications for leases, for his consideration and report; how far this report is intended to affect other questions than those relating to the circumstances of land applied for does not appear in any suggestion or expression of opinion as to conditions, supervision, amount of rent, claim to lease, or other course of policy to be pursued that the Surveyor General may be at the trouble to offer, would seem the more entitled to due consideration if they are beyond the actual requirements of his report"? Then there is another minute upon that by the Under Secretary to Mr. Harriott.

2102. Another minute by Mr. Stephen, "I am not quite sure that I rightly understand the tenor of the above memo. by Mr. Harriott, or whether he thinks it desirable to press the matter further at present. The terms 'for consideration and report' can only be intended to apply to such matters as come within the province of the Survey Department to deal with; and in my opinion the recommendations on the particular points referred to in my minute are not only beyond the requirements of the Deputy Surveyor General's report, but unnecessary, and beyond his legitimate functions as relating to matters solely of a Ministerial nature, and in which the Chief Officer and the Under Secretary are the recognized advisers or medium of communication with the Minister"? Mr. Harriott sent that minute to me, and I considered it tantamount to desiring to shut us out altogether.

2103. The minute then goes on,—"According to the particular class of business in hand, irrespectively of this it should be remembered that we are held responsible in such matters, not the officers of the Survey Department; and it is only right and just therefore that we should be left to deal with them"? The Minister himself sent the case to me for report, and he directed that the Surveyor General should carry out the directions that all such cases should be reported upon by him. Of course I do not report upon any cases that I do not get from the Lands.

2104. The minute winds up by saying: "It would I am sure promote both harmony, and moreover expedition in business, were each branch of the service to confine itself to its own duties." Then comes your minute. Was it after he wrote this minute that the papers were sent to you by Mr. Harriott? Mr. Harriott sent it to me as being the next step.

2105. And then you wrote the minute you first spoke of? Quite so.

2106. Mr. Farnell, on the 2nd of August, wrote a minute confirming the view you had taken with reference to it, as to the propriety of making any recommendations you thought necessary? Yes; perhaps it would be well to read the Minister's minute.

2107. Mr. Farnell's minute reads thus: "There are certain cases and matters which must of necessity be referred to the Surveyor General's department; and in regard to any case or matter that is so referred, I think it desirable that the officers of that department should not only report on the professional aspect of the case, but also on the merits of the case. I cannot see any objection to the officers of the Survey Department expressing their opinion upon any case which may come under their cognizance; indeed I think it would in many cases conduce to their elucidation. However, no evil can arise from having the fullest information in every case"? In consequence of that minute the Under Secretary wrote the second letter or minute.

2108. Mr. Stephen, in his minute of the 5th August, states that the case has not been fully placed before the Minister, that the particular points to which he referred as pertaining to his department to deal with, being entirely ministerial in their bearing, cannot be clearly understood without all the previous papers; it had in fact been placed before Mr. Farnell from a one-sided point of view. "In the second place," the minute goes on, "while fully recognizing the principle of opinion given, that there are certain cases and matters requiring reference to the Survey Office, and which it may be desirable to have the views of the Surveyor General or his officers, I think it would be well, and save future trouble, besides being a matter of fairness to myself, that I should have the opportunity afforded me of bringing under notice numerous cases in which I can show that minutes are written and action denoted by the Survey Department in matters having no possible connection with their duties, and that the public business of this department is unnecessarily delayed thereby." Can you, Mr. Fitzgerald, give us any information as to the facts stated by Mr. Stephen? I had, perhaps, better read the rest of Mr. Stephen's minute—answers being given by me to his statements:—"It is really almost absurd the way in which the papers belonging to the Lands Department to deal with are sent to the Survey Office for some local or other information, and are returned sometime afterwards, having been kept merely for some suggestions or quasi instructions as to what action the ministerial department should take, being neither called for nor required. A far more weighty reason to my mind, why the papers should not be promulgated is the fact that into a general question as to the relative duties of the Land and Survey officers the Deputy Surveyor General has thought fit to import a charge against me, the serious nature of which I feel confident the Minister, in dealing with the first paragraph of Mr. Fitzgerald's memo., has overlooked; and if the decision be promulgated, that charge, unquestioned and unchallenged, must appear with the paper. I feel sure that the Minister will never, on consideration, allow an officer holding the position which I have the honor to occupy, in relation to himself, to be placed in such a light before the department. The charge is unprovoked, and one which, if true in its literal sense, would render me unfit for my office. It is the first time during my official career—a longer one than the Deputy Surveyor General's—that any officer has presumed to impute improper motives to me; and if the Minister does not desire him to withdraw it, as I trust he will under the circumstances, I must ask to be allowed to call upon him to prove, to the satisfaction of the Minister, either that I have had a personal interest in any case, or have ever attempted to prevent or suppress any information necessary to deal with any case whatever."

2110. What is the date of Mr. Farnell's minute? August 23rd, 1878.

2111. That follows Mr. Stephen's minute, and is upon that minute? Yes; and it reads thus:—"I think it much to be regretted that statements such as occur in the foregoing Surveyor General's memo. should be made by one officer against another. Refer, however, to the Deputy Surveyor General for any remarks he may be pleased to make."

R. D.
Fitzgerald,
Esq.
15 Jan., 1879.

2112. What is the date of your minute which follows upon that? The 30th August. It reads thus:—
“Before going into the various matters contained in the minute of the Under Secretary of the 5th August, I must, in reply to that of the Minister of the 23rd August, beg to express my regret at having to make the statements referred to, and to assure him that nothing but necessity in the interests of the office and the public would have compelled me to do so. (For convenience I must take the liberty of numbering the statements made by the Under Secretary.) First statement: That the case referred to has been placed before the Minister without all the papers and from a one-sided point of view. My minute was written upon the only paper I received from Mr. Harriott; but had the Under Secretary considered that a re-perusal of them by the Minister would have benefited his case they were probably available, being either with himself or with Mr. Harriott. Second statement: That action denoted by the Survey Department having no possible connection with their duties, has delayed the business of the department. I deny that any action of mine has ever delayed the business of the department, and challenge the Under Secretary to produce a single case in which I have, as would be implied by the word “denote,” arrogated to myself the right to direct or dictate to him any course of action. (As to the cases mentioned in the margin as having been shown to the Surveyor General as they are not with the papers I can say nothing about them.) Third statement: That it is really almost absurd the way in which papers belonging to the Lands Department are sent to the Survey Office. I suppose I am not answerable for this absurdity if it exists; but, and as regards the intimation expressed in the margin of stopping the practice of sending papers to the Survey Office in future, I only hope that it may not be the cause of errors and injustice. Fourth statement: That the Minister in his decision has overlooked the charge contained in my minute. This I suppose requires no answer from me. Fifth statement: Being only regarding the action of the Minister, requires no reply. Sixth, seventh, and eighth statements: That the charge is unprovoked, and that I should be required to withdraw it, or the Under Secretary be permitted to call upon me to prove it. As to being unprovoked my minute is written on a letter sent by the Under Secretary to Mr. Harriott, urging him to take steps to cut off the Survey Department, and restrict them to mere statements of facts; and the Under Secretary himself admits that it was not intended that I should ever see such letter. To meet action like this it becomes a necessity to appeal to the Minister as to the charge itself and proofs. I have not charged the Under Secretary with “having a personal interest,” but with “taking a personal interest.” By which I intended to say that when he is acquainted with an applicant, or an applicant influences him, he acts as a special pleader for him, and is unwilling to have such special pleading sifted through the Survey Office. This I am prepared to prove should the Minister, who is himself as well acquainted with the fact as I am, desire it. Being fully satisfied with the decision of the Minister, I must decline being drawn any further into the discussion of side issues, but, in defence of the office, must request that the present correspondence be not suppressed.

2113. One portion of your minute refers to Mr. Stephen's third statement, as to preventing, in future, papers being sent to the Survey Office;—what did you take that to refer to? He said he would not allow papers in future to come to us if he could help it.

2114. But did you take that as referring to papers relating to similar cases to the one you have spoken of? I think he says there is a great deal of delay caused by sending the papers to the Survey Office, and he will take care in future to prevent them coming to us.

2115. You take that to refer to papers generally? Yes.

2116. And you apprehend that errors and injustice will arise? Yes; they have arisen since.

2117. In cases since Mr. Stephen made the remarks he did? Yes.

2118. Has that idea of Mr. Stephens about stopping papers from going to the Survey Office been carried out by him? Yes, as far as he could.

2119. Can you tell us of any case where it has worked injury to individuals? I can show you cases in which it has eventuated in absurdities.

2120. Do you recollect any case? Yes; I can give you a case. The Council of Education is in the habit of sending applications for school sites; and since that decision of the Under Secretary's, upon an order of his I believe, it has been the habit to write to the Board of Education to say that its application would be received, pending any objection that might arise on survey; and the Minister has approved of that. The result has in some cases been one or two month's delay in the papers coming to the Survey Office. The Council of Education wrote to us that it would be obliged if we would send them a letter to the effect that their applications were unobjectionable. What the Council of Education wanted to know was whether the site applied for was available or not. In many cases sites have been granted on Church and School lands, which could not be so granted, and causes such action, say two months delay, in reference to that class of cases. Similar delays and incongruities have arisen in regard to cases from the Mining Department. When the Mining Department have asked for reserves they have taken them to the Minister and had them approved of, and it has sometimes afterwards turned out that the land had been previously granted to somebody, was to be granted by special Bill, or that it was Church and School land, or otherwise alienated land. Of course they were not in a position to know it.

2121. That could only be done by the Survey Office? Yes; the applications were approved on receipt to facilitate business.

2122. By whom? They were submitted by the Under Secretary to the Minister, but he has given an order that that practice should be discontinued.

2123. This objectionable practice arose out of a desire to prevent the papers going to the Survey Office? Yes.

2124. And the consequence was a delay of business? Certainly.

2125. And probable injury to the parties concerned? It may have eventuated in that, but I do not recollect a case at present.

2126. You believe the change was made because of the correspondence between your department and that of the Under Secretary? Yes.

2127. And in following up the threat, as in point of fact it was made by the Under Secretary? Yes.

2128. But you say there are other cases similar to those you have mentioned? Yes, that is the practice that prevails at present.

2129. And it leads to delay? I believe it leads to delay.

2130. Can you give the Commission specific cases? Yes, I will bear it in mind when I next come before the Commission.

2131. When was the order made by the Minister in reference to the arrangement that had been made by Mr.

Mr. Stephen? I dare say I can get you the date. It was made at two different times—once upon the letter from the Council of Education, and again in regard to some cases from the Mining Department, in regard to which it was shown that the Minister had approved of things which he could not grant.

2132. Who was the Minister? I think it was Mr. Farnell; I am not quite sure. It was either Mr. Farnell or Mr. Hoskins.

2133. You showed the Minister the absurdity of the decisions he had arrived at on the representations of the Under Secretary? Yes. The cases were first submitted by the Under Secretary to the Minister for his approval.

2134. Without going through the usual course of being submitted to the Survey Department? Yes.

2135. And you believe that was in following up the statement made by Mr. Stephen? I know it was.

2136. As to this question of Mr. Stephen taking a personal interest and acting as special pleader for his friends, have you any case which would prove that? The cases I have brought with me relate principally to that point.

2137. Will you tell us what they are, and how the proof of your statement can be deduced from them? I will take the papers as they come. The first relate to a case of Mrs. White, for whom Mr. James White acts. He made an application for land under the 31st clause of the Act, which relates to prospective improvements. The application is dated 15th April, 1876. He made the application by right of prospective improvements, but failed to make the declaration within the prescribed time; and an officer in the Survey Department sent it on to auction. That has been the practice with reference to all forfeited cases, under whatever clause the application may have been made, since the passing of the Act of 1875. Mr. White remonstrated against the land being sent to auction. The Under Secretary wrote upon it to the Minister to this effect:—"I certainly think that some different course should be adopted than that taken in this and, I suppose, other similar cases"—I may mention that this minute is dated 19th April, 1878. It goes on—"before sending on land for auction sale, and that they should be submitted to this department for decision instead of being dealt with in the off-hand way this has been by the draughtsman in the Survey Office. The facts are briefly these: Mrs. White applied in April, 1876, under the 31st clause, for 320 acres of land. It was not until June, 1877, that the Survey Department reported that the application was invalid, the cancellation being approved by the Minister in September following. But within the prescribed time, and two months previously to the application being reported illegal, Mrs. White sent in the required declaration as to the completion of the improvements. Then in a little more than two months after, Mrs. White was informed as to the refusal of her application; the land is directed by an officer of the Survey Department to go on to auction, improvements and all, and it is advertised accordingly, and at £1 an acre. Mrs. White is not bound to purchase under the 2nd clause, after being allowed to retain it for over fifteen months under the 31st clause; neither is it a case of forfeiture for non-compliance with the conditions; neither again, if it was, is there any provision in the 31st clause or the regulations for sending the land on to auction as in the case of conditional and other purchases. The action taken certainly appears to me arbitrary, as it was also without proper authority. And I have, in anticipation of the approval of the Minister, and acting in his behalf, had the lot withdrawn from sale pending a decision upon Mr. White's protest. Approved.—J.F." I saw the Under Secretary misled the Minister by a mis-statement. The declaration was not made within the prescribed time (15th April, 1876, and the 15th April, 1877). But four months after it (24th August, 1877), not two months previously to the application being reported illegal (26th June, 1877), but two months after (24th August, 1877), and the land was directed to go on to sale (11th January, 1878), not a little more than two months after the applicant was informed (3rd October, 1877), but more than three (from 3rd October, 1877, to 11th January, 1878), and in fact was not sent to auction for seven months after the applicant had been informed by the Lands, and ten months (from 3rd October, 1877, to 15th May, 1878), after recommendation by Survey Office, from the 26th January, 1877, to the 15th May, 1878. Again the Under Secretary misleads the Minister by telling him it is not a case of forfeiture when it is, and that the law does not provide for the sending of such land to auction when there is no necessity for such provision. The Under Secretary then censures the Survey Office, and informed the Minister that the Under Secretary has withdrawn the land without his authority. Papers were then put away without being sent to the Survey Office.

2138. I understood you to say that the practice under which the land was dealt with had been in force from 1875—that is, for three years before Mr. Stephen's minute was written? Yes.

2139. Was it not a part of Mr. Stephen's duty, as the head of the department, to know what was the practice in so important a case as that? All such cases are sent on to Lands. We do not send them to auction, but send them on to Lands for auction.

2140. They ought to go through his hands? They go through his office through the Auction Branch.

2141. Would they go to auction without his seeing them? I cannot say.

2142. There is no necessity for their being sent to him or to the Minister? We send a recommendation that the applicant should be informed that his right is forfeited, and the Lands inform him. The Lands must have forwarded any number of such letters to applicants informing them their rights are forfeited and that the land is going to auction.

2144. Mr. Ranken.] Where is the land situated? At Nerrigulla, on the Bando Plains, in the county of Pottinger.

2145. President.] What I want to know particularly is this: the papers are sent on from the Survey Department to the Lands Department, and must necessarily be dealt with by the Lands Department before the land can be sold? Yes.

2146. But the land cannot be put up to auction without the Minister's approval? No.

2147. Mr. Ranken.] I suppose this matter was exceptionally dealt with by the Under Secretary? Yes, I do not know of any other case decided like that.

2148. President.] Did Mr. White get the land? It was withdrawn from sale. The principal thing I want to show in this matter is the absurd mis-statements as to dates in Mr. Stephen's minute.

2149. Mr. Ranken.] The usual course was arrested? Yes, he had it withdrawn, but he wrote a minute to the Minister supporting its withdrawal.

R. D.
Fitzgerald,

2150. President.] Have you any other case? I have another case in which the Under Secretary with-draws from sale, under that special approval, as though it were general and had been obtained upon a correct statement of facts, and directs that such cases are not to be sent to the Survey Office, although that office always sends on all lands to auction, including the measurements of land forfeited or refused on illegal claims. The other case I refer to is an application also by Mr. White, a similar application to the other under the 31st clause. In regard to it the Under Secretary says in a minute, "May be with-drawn from sale according to the conditions of papers 30-32; the land should not have been advertised at all; and all cases as to lands of this sort going on to auction are to be submitted to the Ministerial Branch, and not dealt with by the Survey Department." There is no decision of the Minister's in that case, that forfeited purchases are not to go for sale.

2151. Mr. Ranken.] Previous to that it was the constant rule that surveyed portions of land should go to auction? Yes, if that is not done, the person applying for it gets it without paying for it.

2153. Although it is made to appear by his minute that it was a new practice? His minute says, "Mr. White may perhaps be informed, if the land is improved to the extent of £1 per acre, that it is open to him to apply for it under the second clause." Then if Mr. White does not take action upon it the land goes to auction. Parties always get a chance by being informed.

2154. Will you pass on to another case? This is a note from Mr. Henry Dangar to Mr. Stephen:—"Sir,—As I understand that you are the officer to apply to in the following case, I shall be glad if you will give it your early attention. About four weeks since, I took up under a Volunteer land order about 50 acres of land situated about 1½ mile on the Sydney side of the Weatherboard Platform, on the Great Western Railway. I sent the order with my application to the land agent at Hartley, and received his receipt. I believe the land was properly available as Government land open to selection; but at the time of applying for it I was but imperfectly acquainted with the means of access to it. I have since discovered that, owing to natural obstacles, it will be impossible for me to make any use of it. I therefore beg to apply for permission to amend my application, by taking up another portion of land nearer to the Weather-board Platform in lieu of the land applied for." Upon this the Under Secretary writes this minute: "Yes, a similar application by Mr. Copeland has been approved." Mr. Copeland's application was not at all similar. There was no land for Mr. Copeland, and his application had of course to be cancelled, and he afterwards took up land elsewhere. I say on that,—the Under Secretary permits Mr. Dangar, without the authority of the Minister, to alter the land selected by him, and quotes an inapplicable precedent, the land applied for by Mr. Dangar being accessible, available, and even measured for him. My own opinion is that the Under Secretary has no right to act in that way for the Minister.

2155. That is another case in which the Under Secretary was influenced in the way you suggest? I think so.

2156. Have you any other case? I have another case, that of Mr. N. P. Bayley, who selected under twelve Volunteer land orders. The selections were made on a gold field, and they have been made good on an exempted gold field so far as the cancellation of parts of the gold-field could make them, under special advocacy of the Under Secretary. The Under Secretary advocated an illegal application by Mr. Bayly on an exempted gold-field, though the land had been legally conditionally purchased, and refers to the Volunteer land orders, as though it was made on the gold-field in ignorance of the illegality of the proceeding, and should therefore, on the promise of Mr. Garrett, be made good. The Volunteer land orders, in respect to which a promise is said to have been made, were used in 1873, and Mr. Bayly informed of the illegality of the application in 1874, whereas the Volunteer land order in question was not used until 1877. The Minister rejects the advice of the Under Secretary, as will be seen by his minute of the 22nd July, 1878. The Under Secretary inculcates the office as having given information to a conditional purchaser without any apparent grounds for such charge. See the answer of the Chief Commissioner of Crown Lands on such purchase, and memo. of mine (afterwards read). The proposition was that a portion of the gold-field should be undone to make good the Volunteer land order of Mr. Bayley's upon it, notwithstanding that the land was conditionally purchased under the 14th clause, and the Minister says in regard to this—"It is obvious that a Volunteer land order selection cannot be made within a gold-field. There does not appear to be any special circumstance connected with the Volunteer land order selection that would warrant the revocation of any portion of the gold-field, so as to permit the land order selection to be made. There is also a conflicting claim by a conditional purchaser, which claim appears to me to be both valid and legal, because the Volunteer land order selection is bad ab initio. The conditional purchase having been legally made I do not think the Minister can legally revoke the gold-field to allow of a land order selection being made. The correct course is to act according to law. In this case the Volunteer land order selection is void, and ought to be declared such."

2157. Mr. Ranken.] That is Mr. Farnell's minute? Yes; that is upon a very long argument of the Under Secretary's that Mr. Bayly's claim should be upheld against the conditional purchaser's.

2158. President.] I should like you to point out the minute of Mr. Stephen's, in which he inculcates the Survey Office, and the reply to that? This is it:—"If the strict letter of the law is carried out in this case the selection under the Volunteer land order should be declared void. But there are features in connection with this matter which I feel it right to bring under the notice of the Minister. The decision of Mr. Farnell to revoke a portion of the Gulgong gold-field was purposely given in accordance with a promise virtually made to Mr. Bayley some time ago." There is really nothing to prove that such a promise was ever made, and a letter to that effect was written to him, as I shall show the Commissioners by and by, on a paper on which the Minister decided directly the opposite, and directing the case to go to the Survey Office for report.

2159. A letter was sent to Mr. Bayley? Yes, a letter was sent to him telling him that his Volunteer land orders on a gold-field would be made good.

2160. And that letter was sent by the authority of the Under Secretary? By the authority of the Under Secretary.

2161. The Minister deciding contrary? The letter appears to have been written prior to the Minister's decision being given. The Minister directed that the matter should go to the Survey Office. Mr. Bayly quotes this letter on all the Volunteer land order selections he has made on gold-fields from time to time.

2162. Can you say whether the Minister knew of that letter having been written by the Under Secretary? No, there is nothing to show it.

2163. And no steps were taken to withdraw it? It is constantly quoted in arguments in favour of Mr. Bayly.

2164. Mr. Ranken.] Has the Minister ever decided in favour of such action? No.

2165. President.] The case you say is quoted by Mr. Stephen, although it was decided by him? Quoted by Mr. Bayley. I am not quite sure whether it has been quoted by Mr. Stephen. This is the minute on which the letter was written to Mr. Bayly:—"Under the recommendation of Mr. Warden Johnson the portion of the Gulgong Gold-field herein described may be revoked. This will enable the selections made by Mr. Bayly under the Volunteer orders to stand, and prevent the necessity for any special legislation as proposed in the first instance by that Minister"—I do not know who the Minister is—"with a view to amend the error committed in passing these selections." Upon that this letter was written to Mr. Bayly:—"With reference to my interview with you a few days since, on the subject of certain selections made by you in virtue of several Volunteer land orders, I am directed to apprise you that under the report of Mr. Warden Johnson the Minister for Lands has approved of that portion of the Gulgong Gold Field reserve which embraces the land applied for by you being revoked, with a view to the selections referred to being allowed to stand. I am to observe that the local land agent has been apprised of the fact. P.S.—I am to add that all other selections made by you in virtue of Volunteer land orders, and situated on the same gold field, will also be accepted."

R. D.
Fitzgerald,
Esq.

15 Jan., 1879.

2166. What is the date of that letter? September 16, 1874.

2167. And the minute? The Minister's minute is: "In order to deal satisfactorily with this matter the report of the District Surveyor had better be obtained." That is dated 29th September, 1874.

2168. So that in point of fact it was finally dealt with, so far as Mr. Bayley was concerned, before the Minister had anything to do with it? Yes.

2169. Are the boundaries of these gold fields accurately defined? Yes.

2170. There was no question of that kind? No. Holders of Volunteer land orders are not allowed to select on gold fields; and Mr. Bayly is the only person I know of who got such selections made good.

2171. And they were being continually undone to allow Mr. Bayly's selections to be made good? Yes, in regard to applications made long subsequent to the promise said to have been made by Mr. Garrett. There is nothing in the papers of any promise.

2172. But Mr. Bayley sometime afterwards uses the promise which he says was made, as a precedent for a similar course of action being taken? Yes. Copies of the letters are sent in with several of the applications.

2173. There is nothing in the papers to show the time at which the promise was made? No; the Under Secretary now and then refers to it, to Mr. Bayly having got the promise, but there is nothing else in the papers.

2174. Is the name of the Minister said to have made the promise given? Yes; Mr. Garrett's name is mentioned as having made the promise. I will read the minute:—"If the strict letter of the law is carried out in this case the selections under the Volunteer land order should be declared void; but there are features in connection with this matter which I feel it right to bring under the notice of the Minister. The decision of Mr. Farnell, to make a portion of the Gulgong Gold Field, was purposely in accordance with a promise virtually made to Mr. Bayly some time ago, to get rid of a mere technical objection pointed out in 77-1820 al., and which prevented his taking up the land until it was rendered open to conditional purchase under the 13th section, instead of the 14th, of the "Crown Lands Alienation Act of 1861," and of course the cancellation of his selection in favour of a conditional purchaser who has taken up the land in the meantime will deprive Mr. Bayly of all the benefit which the Minister proposed to give him. In the former cases, in which the same course was taken to protect Mr. Bayly from the effect of the error he had fallen into, he was allowed to remain in undisturbed possession until his selections had been rendered strictly legal by the revocation of small portion of the gold field which embraced the land taken up. There is nothing new or against precedent in this. In all those cases of conditional purchase and other classes of sale, which for various reasons were illegally made, and were afterwards legalized by special Act of Parliament, the purchasers were all allowed to hold possession against all comers, and were specially told they could do so until the said Act was passed. The same action is also being taken, I believe, as regards cases now waiting legalization in the same way. If therefore the propriety of this course has been recognized in cases where an Act of Parliament was required, surely the same concession should be granted in a case where only a formal notice in the Gazette is necessary to remedy the difficulty, and when the express object of such notice was to confirm the rights of the applicant. Otherwise it seems to me that the department will not be consistent in its action, and will be open to a charge of condoning illegalities in some cases of a certain class and not in others. Another point I have to call attention to is that Davis's conditional purchase was not made until after the Minister had made approval of Bayly's Volunteer land order selection being sustained, the gold field being for that purpose revoked." Mr. Farnell did that under a previous recommendation of the Under Secretary's.

2175. Mr. Farnell did that before? Yes. Then the minute goes on, "and as incidentally to this, although not bearing on the merits of the case itself, I would remind the Minister of what I pointed out to him sometime ago for his advice, that certain questions asked in the Assembly were so framed as to render it almost palpable that all particulars with regard to Mr. Bayley's matters had been given by some person in this or the Survey Department, and the fact that the Minister's decision above referred to was given on the 5th April, and that on the very next land office day, before any official communication could have been or was made as to the same, the land was conditionally purchased at Mudgee as against Mr. Bayly, is very strong evidence that the official decisions of the Minister are communicated to persons interested outside the department to the prejudice of one side or the other almost as soon as they are given." I may mention, with reference to that conditional purchase that a previous conditional purchase was made on the same land by an agent, and it was that same agent who then selected by this new application against Mr. Bayly.

2176. Who was the agent? Mr. Heawell. That is the same person who acted for a previous conditional purchaser who applied for the same land, so that the agent was acquainted with the circumstances and put in his application for the land and remonstrated against Mr. Bayly's having it. He says, "being the land applied for by N. P. Bayly on the 5th September, 1877, under a Volunteer land order, and which is voided, being situated within a proclaimed gold field, and only open to selection under the 14th section of the Crown Lands Act." There is nothing there to show anything beyond the fact that the agent was well acquainted with the law.

R. D.
Fitzgerald,
Esq.
15 Jan., 1879.

2177. He states what actually is fact? Yes.

2178. The minute you have just read is that the one which inculpated the Survey Office? Yes.

2179. You infer from that that the information was supposed by Mr. Stephen to have been given either by the Conditional Purchase Branch or Survey Office? He says either by the Conditional Purchase Branch or the Survey Office, and that it is the habit to give the Ministers' decisions as soon as they are known.

2180. A habit of the Survey Office or the Conditional Purchase Branch? Yes, the minute was sent to the Surveyor General.

2181. Was Mr. Stephen's minute sent to the Survey Office for any remarks whatever before the decision of the Minister was arrived at? The Under Secretary sent it under cover to the Surveyor General to inform his department of the reprimand the Minister had given it,—“It is evident that information was communicated, that the Minister's decision was communicated without the authority of the department. It is highly improper to make decisions known in a private or unofficial manner. Decisions should be made known only in an official way. This is not the first time that private communications of decisions have been brought under my notice; and I regard this as being highly irregular and subversive to the upright working of the department. Should any case in future be brought under my notice, I will suspend the offender, and recommend him for dismissal.”

2182. Whose is that minute? Mr. Farnell's; it is dated September 22, 1878. It came to the chief draughtsman, and I wrote to the Surveyor General: “The chief draughtsman having in accordance with your direction shown me these papers, I would point out before the order (an order of the Surveyor General's), which I feel too be inapplicable to the Survey Department has been circulated, that it has at all times been the rule in the Survey Office that discretion should be used in letting the public see reports for decision of the Minister. But as regards Ministerial decisions, which are alone under consideration in this case, I cannot see how they can be shown to the public by officers of the Survey Department until received from the Lands, when they are of course past the stage at which any improper action can be taken upon them. The decision referred to in favour of Mr. Bayly's Volunteer land order was made on the 5th April. The land was conditionally purchased on the 11th April; the papers came to the Survey Office on the 23rd April.”

2183. There is a reply also by Mr. Moriarty? Yes; upon my minute the Surveyor General did not think the order could apply to the Survey Office.

2184. It was not circulated? No, it was not circulated.

2185. With regard to the minute that Mr. Farnell wrote on the 29th September, after the letter that was written to Mr. Bayly, what year was that in? In 1874. I think the Volunteer land orders referred to were not issued at time. Certainly they were not put in until 1877. Some of the Volunteer orders were used on a subsequent date to the Minister's decision, which referred only to the past.

2186. I think it was the same month, September, 1874, in which the letter was written to Mr. Bayly that Mr. Farnell's minute is dated? Yes, it was on the 16th September, 1874, that the letter to Mr. Bayly was written, and on the 29th September that Mr. Farnell's minute was written to send to the district surveyor.

2187. It was after that date that Mr. Garrett's decision was quoted? Very likely. This is a letter from Mr. N. P. Bayly,—“Mr. N. P. Bayly wishes to withdraw the following application, dated March 10, 1875, under a Volunteer certificate:—50 acres, county of Philip, parish of Arthur, as appears by the plan attached, and to have the Volunteer certificate returned, which certificate is now in my possession, as he has made substantial improvements to the value of upwards of £80 on the same land, and therefore intends to apply for 80 acres in virtue of improvements.” This minute was then appended to the letter: “Volunteer certificate was returned to him.” Mr. Stephen, on 19 May, 1877, says, “I see no objection to a compliance with this application, and it may be approved.” That is to say, the Volunteer land order may be handed back to Mr. Bayly, because he has improved the land he held under it.

2188. He had a title under the Volunteer land order, and was allowed to give that up because he made another right under the land order? Yes.

2189. Mr. Ranken.] So that he could make use of the land order twice? Use it again.

2190. President.] Would it be possible to find out whether it was used afterwards? He got it back for the purpose of using it. I hold that such a thing as that requires the Minister's decision, and that it would not be done except for a friend.

2191. Have you any other case? Yes, I have the papers connected with another case of Mr. Bayly's. The Under Secretary permits a change of land selected under a Volunteer land order without authority, and quotes as a precedent Mr. Dangar's case, which is only an authority given by the Under Secretary himself; he also gives direction for the cancellation of part of a gold-field for the new application; and he says, “This may be approved as being in spirit a similar case to Mr. Dangar's. Inform.” The application when it comes to us should be declared void, as the parish of Birgledie, in which the land is described as situated, is in the Gulgong Gold-field, the northerly extension, proclaimed on 1st September, 1871. One of the clerks says, “So much of the Gulgong Gold-fields as is comprised within Bayly's selection having been revoked, it will not be necessary to declare this selection void; it may be transmitted to survey for measurement, as in other similar cases.”

2192. Mr. Ranken.] Whose was the first memorandum? Mr. Stephen's.

2193. President.] Do you know what case of Dangar's was referred to? That which I have referred to.

2194. In point of fact Mr. Stephen quotes as a precedent a decision of his own, which was made, as I understand, without authority—there was no opportunity of this being an accident? There was no opportunity of this being an accident.

2195. He quotes his own unauthorised decision as an authority for a similar course being taken again? And the first decision was based on a case wholly different. The case that he first quoted was a case where there was no land; of course where there is no land the applicant gets back his Volunteer land order. But the land was vacant, and was measured for Mr. Dangar.

2196. In Mr. Dangar's case the only reason he asked for a change was because he was sorry for his bargain? That is all.

FRIDAY, 17 JANUARY, 1879.

Present:—

MR. ABBOTT,

MR. RANKEN.

R. P. ABBOTT, ESQ., PRESIDENT, IN THE CHAIR.

R. D. Fitzgerald, Esq., was called in and examined:—

2197. Witness.] When I was last examined, you desired me to bring with me to day some papers to which reference was made. I now produce them. They are—Copeland's case: recommendation from the Mining Department, and dedications, to which a paper from the Council of Education has to be added. I have written to Mr. Lindsay Thompson for that, and the gentleman who is acting for him sends me this reply: "Mr. Thompson is away from the office to-day, but he left instructions with me to procure the paper. Search has been made in this Branch and at the Records, but without avail." Before you proceed to examine me further, I should like, if it be not out of order, to draw your attention to the minute written by Mr. Farnell, in the case of J. A. Brown's application for a lease near Lord Howe's Island—a minute to which you referred when I was last examined. It has occurred to me that that minute may be made much of, and therefore I wish to say a word in explanation about it. The minute first written by Mr. Farnell was in these terms: "The Deputy Surveyor General for any remarks that he may please to make.—J.S.F., 23/8/78." Mr. Farnell afterwards wrote the words which you see above, namely, "I think it is much to be regretted that statements such as occur in the Deputy Surveyor General's memo. should be made by one officer against another; refer, however, to." These words were afterwards written above the original minute, as you will see; and I believe that Mr. Farnell will tell you, if you care to ask him, that the words I have last quoted were written at the request of the Under Secretary; and I may say that Mr. Farnell told me personally, that what he meant by that minute was that he was sorry that it should be necessary for me to bring the matter forward.

R. D.
Fitzgerald,
Esq.

17 Jan., 1879.

2198. President.] He was sorry that it should be necessary? Yes, he regretted that I should be obliged to make such statements. I understood you to say when I was here the other day that you were only trying issues at present, and not examining into the department generally.

2199. You have not quite understood us. We said we were inquiring, in the first instance, into these papers which have been specially referred to us? Well, in this case I have, at any rate, two issues to prove: one is that the Under Secretary desires to prevent the Survey Office from reporting upon the merits of cases, and the other is that he specially pleads in certain cases. Now if you think at any stage of the inquiry that I have proved those two points, I should wish that my examination be discontinued, for I have no desire to produce a number of cases which may be detrimental to the Under Secretary, for my object is simply to prove that I was right, and not to make statements to the prejudice of Mr. Stephen.

2200. We shall receive any information which you can give us on the management of the department by the Under Secretary, or the conduct of the business generally.

2201. Mr. Ranken.] I also think that the matters have such an important bearing upon public interests that we are entitled to have all the information we can obtain.

2202. President.] The questions with which we are concerned go beyond any differences which may have occurred between you and Mr. Stephen, and the evidence you give us may have a wider application than that. Witness: Then I must go on with these cases. First, I will refer to Mr. Copeland's case, which you wanted information about. You will remember that this was referred to in Mr. Dangar's case, having been quoted by the Under Secretary as a precedent for allowing Mr. Dangar to get back his Volunteer land order. If I quote a passage out of this letter it will be sufficient to show that the case was not a precedent at all.

2203. Whose letter is that? The letter from Mr. Copeland.

2204. What is the date of it? The 7th March, 1876. In the first part of his letter he gives his reasons for thinking that the land was available, and then he goes on to say, "But I now find that nearly the whole of this land applied for by me in the middle of November last had already been applied for by other persons in the previous April, and in consequence the surveyor has only been able to survey one block in accordance with my application." There were three Volunteer land orders. For one land was available, and the other two for which no land was available were returned to Mr. Copeland.

2205. Returned because the land was not available? The land had been conditionally purchased before he applied for it. The next case to which reference was made was this application from the Mining Department to have a reserve made. You will see that it is marked "for approval," and under that Mr. Farnell has written "approved."

2207. That occurred in October last year? Yes; it arose from that direction in Brown's case.

2208. For what reserve did the Mining Department apply? For a mining reserve.

2209. Is there anything to show that these words "for approval" were written by Mr. Rich? The words are in Mr. Rich's handwriting, and Mr. Stephen initials the reference to the Minister. That was approved by Mr. Farnell; but afterwards Mr. Farnell wrote another minute upon my representing the case to him.

2210. What was the objection to it? You will see there that Mr. Farnell states: "This approval is revoked, because the reserve recommended embraces land that I previously decided should be included in a special Bill. This case shows the impropriety of dealing with these cases without reference to the Surveyor General. In future all cases of this kind should be referred to the Surveyor General before being submitted for approval."

2211. That minute was written by Mr. Farnell on the 19th of December, 1878? Yes.

2212. And it was in consequence of representations made by you to him? Yes; I showed him that it was land which he had directed should be included in a special Bill.

2213. How did these papers come to you? They were sent to me for the necessary descriptions to be prepared by description writer.

2214. Until then you had no opportunity of saying a word? It was subsequent to the approval by the Minister that the paper was sent to us for description for the Gazette notice of the reserve.

2215. Since Mr. Farnell wrote that minute, has it been acted upon in all cases? The case which I hold in in my hand was, I believe, subsequent to that, but I cannot say whether Mr. Rich had seen the decision. This case I took to Mr. Hoskins, and he directed that the practice should not be continued. He sent for the Under Secretary, and directed him verbally. This is a recommendation for a large mining reserve to be thrown open to conditional purchase. We already had a report from the district surveyor to show that it was very necessary to make a reserve against conditional purchase around the town of Bingera. Bingera happened to be without a population area, because the population came to it after the last census. 2216. This appears to be another recommendation from the Department of Mines, and is dated the 20th December, 1878? Yes.

2217. Submitted for approval in the same way; and after it was approved, sent on to you for description? Yes; although we were actually making a reserve against conditional purchase at that place and time.

2218. Has that approval been reversed? Virtually it has, because Mr. Hoskins has given it to me to act upon.

2219. And at the same time instructed the Under Secretary to discontinue the practice of submitting cases in this way? Yes; I have here another case in which a reserve was made for mining; but the land was Church and School land and could not be made a reserve.

2220. This also is a recommendation from the Department of Mines, dated the 5th December? Yes; and approved by Mr. Farnell on the 11th.

2221. It was then sent on to you for description in the same way? Yes; but the land is not available, because it is Church and School land.

2222. The case, I see, was minuted by Mr. Farnell to the Surveyor General for report, on the 19th of December? Yes; if the recommendation had been carried out we should have been making a reserve of land which could not be reserved. With regard to the other matter which was referred to, I have asked for the letter from the Council of Education; but the clerk, who is acting for Mr. Thompson to-day, says that search has been made for it, and it cannot be found.

2223. What was the cause? It was a communication from the Department of Justice, &c., enclosing a letter from the Council of Education, stating that the conditional approvals of grants of public school sites were of no use. That was the note which the draughtsman took of the contents of that letter; but I cannot produce the letter as I promised for the reason I give.

2224. Had that letter reference to any particular case? The custom arose from the time of that memorandum to which you were referring of approving of these applications in this way. I have brought one case with me. It was submitted in this form: "This application is submitted for approval, subject to any objection which may be found to exist at the time of measurement." That was communicated to the applicants, and they said that was no use. This is one of the cases in which an application was made for a Roman Catholic Church, and it was found that the whole of the land had been sold, so that there was a delay from the 8th of September to the 17th October, when it came to us. That delay was unnecessary; and in other cases longer delays have occurred.

2225. In matters relating to the public departments as well as to private individuals? These are all dedications.

2226. But if the same course is pursued in regard to applications for the lease or purchase of land upon which the opinion of the Surveyor General should be obtained, delay is as likely to occur in the case of private individuals as of the public departments? Yes; I was thinking whether these particular cases affected any private persons; and at the moment I could not recollect any particular case; but there are cases in which it will affect individuals. Since the order of the Under Secretary, to which we have been referring, applications under the second clause in right of improvements have been acted upon in the Lands Office on the warden's reports, and they have not sent them to us.

2227. On the warden's reports, without reference to the Surveyor General's office? Yes; and the consequence is that if the land has been surveyed we remain in ignorance of what has been done in the case.

2228. You cannot tell whether the land is available afterwards? We cannot tell what has happened. There is this liability of hardship to individuals: The Minister gave a direction requiring a stricter reading of the law with reference to 2-acre improvement purchases on gold-fields; and he directed that it should not be referable to a date prior to the date of his minute, which was written on the 13th December, 1877. I believe they are not taking that into consideration. I do not know whether they are or not; if they are not they are doing the people interested an injury.

2229. What is the difference between the Minister's interpretation and the practice previously? The practice previously was to allow applicants to take up several lots in virtue of improvements on gold-fields, but the practice now is to allow them to take up only one, and not to allow such a thing as a fence round a paddock to be considered as an improvement. The Minister decided that the right should be exercised in virtue of legitimate improvements only; and he made his decision applicable to the future, not retrospective. If they are dealing with it retrospectively, and I think it likely they are, then they are doing the applicants an injury.

2230. But properly these matters should come through your department? Yes.

2231. And you would know the practice to be followed in regard to them? Yes; I do not consider that the Lands Office are in a position to deal with them without plans and without previous knowledge.

2232. That mode of dealing with these cases is likely to lead to disputes? Yes; in fact I do not know who deals with them now.

2233. You do not know who deals with them? No; but I believe they are cancelled if the report of the warden is against them, whether that report is correct or not.

2234. Without reference to the Survey Office? Without reference to the Survey Office.

2235. The warden is in no way responsible to the Lands Department? Quite so. He is not responsible, but at the same time his reports ought to come to us. An applicant to purchase in right of improvements has no right to apply unless he is in legal occupation. The warden has a right to state whether he is or not. He may state that it is prejudicial to mining interests that the application should be granted. On any report of the warden which is unfavourable they are, I believe, now cancelling the applications. One ground for cancellation would be that an applicant was making several improvements. That would be a good ground now that he is entitled to purchase in virtue of only one, but not in regard to improvements made before the Minister's decision. I think it is very probable that they are refusing those applications, and if the Minister's decision be not adhered to, injustice would be done to the parties concerned.

R. D.
Fitzgerald,
Esq.

17 Jan., 1879.

2237. He does not apply to the local surveyor for information? No; our surveyors have applied to him for information, but the warden does not apply to them.

2238. Could they not tell him whether the land was available? That question is not referred to the warden; the point referred to him is whether the applicant is in legal occupation, and whether the Mining Department have any objection to the sale.

2239. But the information of which the warden is deficient is such that a surveyor might supply? No, I do not think so. The maps in the office would have to be referred to.

2240. President.] The warden is asked for information to assist the Lands Department? Yes.

2241. And the Surveyor General gives an authoritative report when it is referred to him, with all the information which can be obtained? It is not the local surveyor's report that is so missed in these cases, as the reference to our own maps and the knowledge in the office of the state of the case.

2242. Do you deal with these cases without referring them to the district surveyor? If an application were on the face of it, a good one, we would send it to them for survey.

2243. That, as far as you know, is not now being done? No; not in such cases as have been referred to as probably improperly dealt with.

2244. The papers in which the Council of Education's letter was written was an application for some land at Mulwala? No; that was an application for some land for a Roman Catholic church. I do not think the Council of Education's letter had reference to any particular case, but was directed against the practice adopted in dealing with their applications. They ask for a particular piece of land, and when their application comes to the Lands Department they are told they can have it if there is no objection. The only effect of that is to keep the application back for at least a month.

2245. The Council of Education objected that their applications were no further forward? That was what they remarked. I have here a recent case in which Mr. Hoskins gave a decision. Mr. Jenkins made a conditional purchase, and it was forfeited. It came within a travelling stock reserve. The measurement was made, and the land had gone on for auction sale, but was withdrawn. Mr. Jenkins selected it as after auction, notwithstanding that withdrawal. A mistake having arisen owing to the subdivision of the district, the land agent was not aware of the withdrawal. At that stage of the case Mr. Edwards wrote this minute—

2246. Who is Mr. Edwards? Lands auction clerk. He wrote this minute:—"Refer in the first instance to the Surveyor General as to whether the travelling stock reserve should be interfered with." It was the practice to re-establish occasional selections after auction when it was found that the grounds of the original withdrawal had ceased to exist, and the selection remained strongly supported. In the Survey Office I looked upon that as an illegal course, and I wrote this minute on the papers on the 4th of March, 1878, in reply to the minute of Mr. Edwards of the 13th April:—"(1.) The question submitted to this office by memo. dated the 13th ultimo would not appear to affect the merits of the case, and should only have been raised with the ultimate view of having the land again offered at auction sale. Either the selection now under consideration is a legal one and must be maintained, or it is illegal and must be cancelled. (2.) The law provides, under the 25th section of the 'Crown Lands Alienation Act of 1861,' that certain lands having been 'put up for sale by public auction and not sold shall be open for sale' (selection), and also 'that the Minister may withdraw any such lands from selection.' Again, the 6th section provides that 'after any land shall have been temporarily reserved from sale the same shall not be sold or otherwise disposed of until such reservation shall be revoked.' (3.) The ground taken by applicants' agents in support of the application is that the land was withdrawn just before the division of the Wagga Wagga district, and through this cause the land agent at Narandera (in which district the land is now situate) was unaware of such withdrawal. These grounds it is submitted are not sufficient to warrant the acceptance of an application which is illegal if the withdrawal were otherwise correctly made. Apart from the 'withdrawal' the land having been reserved from sale under the 4th section of the Act of 1861 is not in view of the provisions of the 6th section previously referred to, open to sale by selection or otherwise.' (4.) As regards the manner in which the withdrawal from selection takes place it is questionable whether such withdrawals are legal. In the first place the withdrawals are not made by the 'Minister,' nor yet by any one deputed by him, nor are they in any way notified to the public.' (5.) From the manner in which some cases have been referred to this branch, as to the correctness of the grounds on which the withdrawal have been recommended, the impression appears to prevail that if the grounds of the withdrawal were incorrect, or were subsequently removed, the withdrawal could be cancelled. Such an impression is, I would submit, erroneous, as although the law gives the Minister the power to withdraw land from selection, it gives no power to annul a withdrawal when once it has taken place.' (6.) If the case immediately under consideration is considered one of hardship it might be met by special enactment, but while dealing with that case the question raised in the 4th paragraph of this memorandum should also be dealt with."

2247. What is the number of that case? 1865 Alienation of 1878. I direct your attention to the withdrawal. There are the draftsman's initials, and the signature of the chief draftsman, but they are merely to a recommendation that it should be withdrawn. The withdrawal itself is not signed by anybody; that is, the word "withdrawn" is not. I do not know who wrote that word, and there is nothing to show that any authority was given for writing it. I pointed out in my memorandum that that was a careless system, a bad system.

2248. In point of fact there is nothing to show that the paper was finally dealt with at all? There is nothing to show that the land agent was informed.

2249. Nor who withdrew it? No; nor by what authority; and if such a withdrawal came before a court it would not be looked upon as any withdrawal at all. It does not appear that the Minister has approved of it, or anybody authorized by him.

2250. You do not know whose writing that is? I do not.

2251. In point of fact the withdrawal is still unfinished? I considered it so, and pointed that out. The Under Secretary wrote upon my memorandum as follows:—"There can be no doubt in my opinion but that in the particular case now submitted the auction selection is invalid. The lot was withdrawn from selection in the usual way, being part of a travelling stock reserve, on the 7th May, 1877." That is the withdrawal the Under Secretary speaks of; "and the application to select was not made until the 29th August, 1877. And although it is a hard case for Mr. Jenkins, under the circumstances represented by Messrs. Phillips and Keighran, I hardly see how the fact of the land agent being ignorant of the withdrawal can be held to be a ground for sustaining the selection. If it is intended to bring in a special

Bill, perhaps the case might be included in it, as suggested by the Surveyor General, or possibly a clause in the new Land Bill might give the Government discretionary power to deal with such cases generally. With regard to the question raised by the Surveyor General, in paragraph 4 of his minute, as to the legality of the mode in which withdrawal takes place, on account of its not being made by the Minister, nor by any one deputed by him, I would observe that I have authority as Under Secretary to sign for the Minister (his name in fact) official documents, notices, &c., where the action taken is regular, or what the law plainly requires, and as they are generally required for the Gazette, and have to be signed at a minute's notice, the great delay and inconvenience which would result, were the practice otherwise, must be apparent. Acting on the above authority, I pass all withdrawals as soon as the necessity for the same has been notified to me by the Survey Department. If, however, this course is deemed illegal or insufficient the sooner of course it is rectified by a regulation or formal notice (perhaps deputing the Under Secretary to sign) the better. I quite concur with the Deputy Surveyor General as to the expediency of notifying withdrawals to the public, as well as to the land agents, and cannot quite understand why this course was never adopted. This does not, however, involve any question of legality, as the Act (section 25) does not provide any particular mode of withdrawal, but simply "that the Minister may withdraw, &c., &c." Upon that Mr. Farnell says:—"The auction system is undoubtedly invalid. In reference to the withdrawal of lands from sale by auction or otherwise, it is sufficient if the Under Secretary or any other officer authorized by the Minister notifies their withdrawal, and the withdrawal should be notified in the Gazette. I have given instruction for the withdrawal of all lands from auction selection." He also added:—"Jenkins' case will be considered in preparing special legalizing Bill." Then the Under Secretary notes the papers to the Surveyor General, and I wrote this minute on the case on the 29th of August:—"In view of the minute of the Secretary for Lands, dated 12th April, 1878, it is submitted that there do not appear to be any sufficient grounds for including in the Validating Bill shortly to be submitted to Parliament the case of F. Jenkins contained in these papers. F. Jenkins' purchase was found to be illegal, and was cancelled two months after date of application, and there is nothing to show that any exceptional hardship (unless the loss of improvement alleged to have been made on the land between the date of purchase and its voiding) has fallen upon applicant. It may be pointed out that in the minute of the 4th March, 1878, no suggestion was made to include this case in the special Bill. The last paragraph of that minute merely suggested that if the case was considered one of hardship it might be met by special enactment, and not by a cancellation of the withdrawal, as would appear was contemplated by the memo. of 13 February, '78, in 78-329 aln." You will see that I pass over the matter of the method of signing withdrawals. I did not consider that it had been what I should call fairly put to the Minister by the Under Secretary; but so long as the thing was done rightly that did not matter. I did not submit to the Minister that the Under Secretary should not sign; but I submitted that the withdrawal was not signed at all. The Under Secretary deals with it as if I questioned his right to sign, when in fact he has not signed at all, notwithstanding that he writes to the Minister as if he had signed. Upon my minute of the 29th August the Under Secretary says: "It will be seen that the decision that this case was to be considered in preparing a special Bill was given by the Secretary for Lands with all the facts of the case clearly put before him. Mr. Secretary Hoskins will perhaps now decide whether it shall be so included, or whether, under the circumstances, the land might be again offered to auction after withdrawal from the reserve. The whole question, I may observe, is one purely of departmental administration, and for the Ministerial department therefore to deal with, and I do not see how the matter has come to be again brought up by the Survey Office, unless it was the fault of the Auction Branch in not submitting it to me (as the proper person to deal with it) for final decision." With regard to Mr. Stephen's observation, that the decision that the case was to be considered in preparing a special bill, was given by the late Minister for Lands, I may direct your attention to the fact that my minute was written on the 29th of August, 1878, and that it was not brought before Mr. Farnell at all.

2253. The 30th December, 1878? Yes, and there is this postscript added by Mr. Stephen: "I notice, since writing the above, that the papers were sent by me to the Survey Department, for information as to the points raised in the minute of 4th March, 1878, not with any view of re-submitting the decision of the Minister upon a purely Ministerial question." Mr. Hoskins sent the papers to me with this note upon them: "I wish the Deputy Surveyor General would please state how much of the travelling stock reserve has been absorbed by this portion." I wrote in reply 245 acres. That is an answer to his question. Then I go on to say: "The Secretary for Lands having referred to me for information, has given me an opportunity of seeing a minute of the Under Secretary to which I must object, and on which I would request a decision of the Minister. I would wish to know, for my guidance in future cases, whether, acting as I do for the Surveyor General, I am solely to answer queries of the Under Secretary (of Mr. Edwards, as in this case), or other clerks; and am not to express an opinion on the merits of a case, or to point out any practice that appears to me illegal or objectionable. And whether when a construction, not intended by me, is put in the Lands Department on a minute of mine, I am not to point out what was intended, and to prevent action being taken, as upon my recommendation when such is not the case. If it be the desire of the Minister that I should not express any opinion, or make any suggestions on papers that may be sent to me, I would suggest that such directions may be given to me through the Surveyor General, and I shall then in future make no recommendations, as matters of pure survey will be reported upon by the Surveyor General." I wrote that on the 10th of January instant; and upon that Mr. Hoskins wrote: "I am of opinion that it is desirable that the Deputy Surveyor General should, acting as he does for the Surveyor General, give his opinion on cases submitted to him, because from his great experience in such matters as well as his technical knowledge, his opinion ought to have great weight in enabling the Minister to arrive at a correct decision upon the very complicated matters which are frequently submitted to him, and being in most cases a non-professional man, the advice given by the Department of the Surveyor General must of necessity be of great value and assistance to the Minister. I am also of opinion that when land is withdrawn from sale, the authority to withdraw should be always given in writing by a minute signed or initialled by the Under Secretary, to be kept in the department as a record." The Minister then says that he wishes to know if 100 acres could be measured for Jenkins without injuring the reserve; and the Under Secretary writes this minute, which I hand to you. I do not care about burdening the evidence, but if you think it is of any weight it can be added to what I have said.

2254. Does this minute of Mr. Stephen finish up this matter? It does.

2255. The minute dated on the 11th of the present month? Yes.

2256. It seems to me very like an assertion by the Under Secretary of the position he took up at first? Yes, very nearly, I think; and if there should happen to be a change of Government the next Minister will find the question arising again.

R. D.
Fitzgerald,
Esq.

17 Jan., 1879.

2257. In point of fact, notwithstanding the decisions by Mr. Farnell and Mr. Hoskins, the Under Secretary appears to still hold to the position he originally took up in regard to this question? I think so.

2258. Perhaps you will read it? "In forwarding the above decision for the information of the Deputy Surveyor General, I would simply repeat what I have said to the Minister, that any complaint I ever made had no reference to matters (as the Deputy Surveyor General must know) in which 'experience and technical knowledge' is required, as stated by Mr. Hoskins. I shall have the opportunity of showing to the Minister, beyond dispute, the justice of my complaint as to matters in which the time of the draftsmen are taken up in writing minutes of no possible use to the department."

2259. That you take to be an assertion of the position he took up in Brown's case? I think that both the first minute to Mr. Hoskins and this are assertions of the same thing. It is for you to judge whether I have raised any issue in that matter that I should not have raised. The Under Secretary objects to my line of conduct, and it is upon this line of conduct that the issue is raised. I will now pass on to another case. A Mr. Smith on one occasion came to me and stated his desire to obtain land on the mountains near Penrith. He said that he proposed to apply for a special lease for a quarry. I asked him where the land for a quarry was situated, and he told me. I told him that I thought he could not possibly expect to obtain a special lease for a quarry for Penrith on the top of a mountain, as there was plenty of stone much nearer at the bottom of the mountain. It was evident that the object stated as that for which the lease was required was not the real object. He then said that he would try in some other way, and he left me. In a day or two afterwards he applied through Mr. Pretious as officer in charge of Crown lands for a lease for the cultivation of silk.

2260. What is the date of Mr. Smith's application through Mr. Pretious? June 12, 1874. Some land was measured for auction on the mountains in 1875, and Mr. Smith claimed this land or some of it as being in his lease, and under these circumstances I wrote this minute: "It is recommended that rather than make any attempt at a survey—(there were great difficulties about the description of Mr. Smith's lease)—steps should be taken for its cancellation both on the grounds of inconsistent description and want of bona-fides as to the purpose for which the lease was obtained. That inconsistencies in a description should be taken advantage of by the Government for the cancellation of a lease is not a course that could be generally recommended; but where a lease has been granted to the public detriment and upon false grounds, such inconsistencies should I think be made the most of in the public interests. If this suggestion be adopted, so much of the land claimed by Mr. Smith, as is deemed necessary for public recreation should I think be dedicated for that purpose; and the remainder if any be subdivided in small lots and sold at public auction." The land was at Springwood. Mr. Garrett wrote this minute:—"This lease was granted by my predecessor, for that reason, inasmuch as the honor of the Crown has been thereby pledged,—and there is no proof before me of the want of bona-fides on the part of the lessee, I cannot see my way clear to take the very unusual course of cancelling the lease he holds. By a recent communication handed to me by the lessee, and which I handed on Monday last to the Deputy Surveyor General, with a sketch, it appears Smith is willing to accept his area exclusive of the portions sold to Reading. Under these circumstances the survey, as I have already directed, should be proceeded with, and the bona-fides of the lessee remain to be exhibited by his action when he is put into possession of his land within properly defined boundaries." That survey of the lease enabled the case to go on with hardly any reference to the Survey Office. It was referred to the Survey Office, but it was referred with just an urgent note to a draftsman to prepare the schedule, and he prepared it without submitting it to me. Being surveyed as a lease, it did not require any survey afterwards, and so it went on. It was only by accident that I found it was actually before the Executive Council for sale to Mr. Smith; and as Mr. Garrett had directed that the merits of the case should be brought forward at some stage, and as I did not believe at all in the bona-fides of the case, I thought it my duty to go to Mr. Farnell, and point out to him that the land in right of this lease was on the point of being sold. Mr. Farnell on that recommendation of mine withdrew the papers from the Executive Council, and desired me to report upon them. I wanted some information for the report, and consequently had to lend the papers to Mr. Thompson. I frequently asked for the papers from Mr. Thompson in order to make my report, and he told me from time to time that he could not give them to me.

2261. You refer to Mr. Lindsay Thompson? Yes; at length he told me that the papers were with the Under Secretary, and that he would not let me have them. I then went to the Under Secretary and asked him for them. He told me that the Minister had no right to give them to me, and he said that he would not give them. He said that it was only ministerial action that was required, and that I had no right to get the papers. I told the Minister what the Under Secretary said, as I now tell you, and Mr. Farnell directed that I should get the papers to report upon, and I did report upon them.

2262. What was the date of that direction? The Under Secretary wrote on the 15th July, 1878. The Under Secretary says: "The enclosed papers were withdrawn from the Executive Council for further consideration before final confirmation of the sale to Mr. T. Smith, in virtue of improvements. It will be seen that the granting of the special lease to Smith was originally approved by the present Minister for Lands, and that the application to purchase was directed to go on by Mr. Garrett. The Deputy Surveyor General having recently inspected the land and the improvements, the Minister has desired me to refer the papers to him for any observations he may have to make with regard to the same before deciding what course should be pursued." I wrote this: "I have no hesitation in recommending that the sale should not be carried out. It is obvious that there are no bona-fides in the case. Within a few days Mr. Smith altered his intention of applying for a lease from me for a quarry to one for the culture of silk. Mr. Smith has held the lease at a rent of £1 for nearly five years, and the only progress made in that time towards the production of silk is the erection of some fencing and the recent planting of a few apple trees and mulberry cuttings which I have no doubt would be found to be no bar to the immediate subdivision of the land into villa sites for sale, should it be granted to Mr. Smith. The so-called improvements I consider to be of no value, and that set upon the land to be grossly under estimated, being only 1s. above the lowest upset price per acre of ordinary country land. Judiciously subdivided it would fetch from £20 to £30 per acre."

2263. And the valuation was what? £1 6s., the upset price being 25s. There is then a long minute by the

R. D.
Fitzgerald,
Esq.
17 Jan., 1879.

the Under Secretary upon which the sale was finally carried out. That minute goes in great part to show that steps had gone too far for the Government to draw back. But I need not go further with that case than I have done for I have brought out the points I wanted, and those are,—first, the unwillingness of the Under Secretary that I or the Survey Department should give any opinion on such cases; and second, the evil which arises from cases being brought under submission to the Minister without all the facts. I have no hesitation in saying that if Mr. Farnell had known in time what I knew he would have cancelled the lease, and the sale would certainly not have been carried out. In consequence of the way in which this case has been carried through I estimate that there has been a loss to the Crown of £2,000.

2264. What is the area? 100 acres, and it is worth from £20 to £30 an acre if judiciously subdivided.

2265. And it was sold for 26s. per acre? The deed has not yet been issued, but it is being pressed for daily, and has all but issued.

2266. And you attribute the loss to what? To the way in which the case has been carried through the office, without the Minister at any time having an opportunity of knowing the nature of the case.

2267. This particular case was carried through, notwithstanding you brought it under the notice of the Minister, and he decided that it should be inquired into at some future time? Yes.

2268. And it is virtually an abuse of the intention of the Act? I think so. Mr. Smith has not a caterpillar in the world; he does not own a caterpillar; and if he did, I am sure he is not going to feed them on the suckers of apple-trees. I may pass on to another case: It is a case in which the Under Secretary saw the Minister for Lands and informed him that there was a number of free-selectors who had inadvertently selected land on portions that were measured for the lessee of the run, and that in consequence they would be deprived of all pre-emptive right. Upon those representations the Minister decided that the refund of their money should be granted as requested. To show that I state the reasons correctly, I will quote this memorandum written by the Under Secretary. His representations appear to have been made verbally to the Minister, and there is no other record:—"It has been represented that the conditional purchasers, whose applications are enclosed, as also W. Badham and Robert Simpson, who previously selected lots 13 and 14, have selected, by mistake, in the midst of surveyed blocks, for sale on the 26th instant, which will debar them from obtaining their pre-leases. They desire to select elsewhere, and are willing, it is alleged, to make written statements on applications to that effect to the land agent. The Minister for Lands has approved of this, and a telegram should be at once sent to the land agent as follows:—'With reference to conditional purchases made on 26th June and 11th September by (specify names), it is represented that they have been made in error in midst of surveyed blocks for sale on 26th instant. Minister approves of their being cancelled, and fresh selections being made, if the applicants state in writing their concurrence. The lots can then go on for auction sale as advertised.'"

2269. Mr. Ranken.] How can we identify that case? That minute was written by the Under Secretary on the 24th September, and was on paper 73-15997—"alienation." All the applications are here.

2270. President.] Will you tell us what they are? They are conditional purchase applications by Charles Goverd, John Blackwood, Frank McKenzie, John Smith, Robert Simpson, and William Badham; and they were all made by D. Aitken, who is the superintendent for the Deniliquin Run.

2271. And this land was on the Deniliquin Run? It was.

2272. Who is the lessee? The Messrs. Landale. I may here point out that they applied for the lots as measured portions, and that their agent in Sydney was Mr. Raymond. Under all the circumstances I do not think that the Under Secretary could possibly be ignorant of the fact that they were dummies, and that the money was being returned to the Messrs. Landale. This was the first case of the same kind which the Under Secretary submitted to Mr. Farnell in the same way.

2273. For the same lessees? No; in one case the lessees were Messrs. Shanahan and Jennings. It was upon the second set of applications being submitted to the Minister that he thought there was something wrong, and he wrote a minute which I will read to you.

2274. Do I understand you to say that Mr. Aitken was the agent for the Messrs. Landale, and that he was also the agent for the selectors in making their applications? Yes.

2275. Mr. Ranken.] The applications appear to be signed by D. Aitken, as the agent for the applicants? Yes.

2276. President.] They took up land which had been surveyed? Yes.

2277. They had no claim for compensation in any way? No.

2278. They simply looked to get the refund of their deposits? Yes; when the auction sale was imminent they applied for the refund of the money used in making the applications, under which applications the land was covered by false conditional purchases up to the day of sale. If, as I suppose, the men were dummies for their employers, and if their names were used with their knowledge, the lessees would get back all the money again. Mr. Raymond wrote:—"Seven men who selected measured portions of land advertised for sale on the 26th instant at Deniliquin, being lots noted in the margin, assert that they did so by gross mistake, the land being unsuitable for the purpose intended, and being in the centre of a surveyed block they cannot obtain any pre-lease land. They desire now to relinquish these selections and take up others elsewhere on the deposit paid, and are willing to make written statement to the land agent to the above effect. I am therefore to ask that a telegram may be sent to the land agent, instructing him that these men are to be allowed to make other conditional purchases, and that he is to submit the lots to auction as advertised." That letter was not put before the Minister.

2279. Was any decision arrived at in the case without the Minister having seen it? Yes; the Minister directed the refund.

2280. Is there anything to show that Mr. Aitken was connected with Messrs. Landale? No; but I believe that he is the Superintendent of Deniliquin Station.

2281. They asked to be allowed to select again, and to use these deposits in taking up fresh selections? Yes.

2282. Is there anything very unusual in that—has it not been done before? Never before to my knowledge. Money is never returned to conditional purchasers unless there are legal grounds for it.

2283. Have you heard of Fisher's case? I have, but I do not think I ever officially dealt with it. There is a second case in which this was done in these papers.

2284. Have you given us the decision of the Minister in the case already referred to? It never came before the Minister except as a conversation with the Under Secretary.

2285. Is there any record to show that the Minister sanctioned the refund? I do not think there is. If I read Mr. Farnell's minute on a subsequent paper you will see exactly how the matter stands. Mr.

Farnell

R. D.
Fitzgerald,
Esq.
17 Jan., 1879.

Farnell wrote this on a minute by the Chief Commissioner, in which he goes thoroughly into the case:—
“With the facts of this case now before me, I must say that I concur generally with this report, and had I known these facts at the time that application was made to withdraw the selections, and had I known the parties who were principals and agent in this transaction, namely, Messrs. Landale and Raymond, I would most certainly not have assented to the withdrawal of the selections. It must be borne in mind that I dealt with this matter solely upon a verbal statement of the case, and as coming from the selectors themselves. It is now obvious from the facts disclosed that the selections were taken up by the respective selectors ostensibly for themselves, but in reality for the Messrs. Landale; and that the department was misled and deceived by the selectors or their agent, in order that the land selected might be offered at auction, and that the Messrs. Landale might be afforded an opportunity of bidding for it.” Here is a similar case, in which Messrs. Shanahan and Jennings’ names occur. With respect to it Mr. Farnell wrote this minute: “The same remarks apply to a considerable extent to this case. When Mr. Fitzpatrick called upon me, I believe he stated that several lots of land applied to be brought to auction sale, and which had been measured on Mr. Jennings’ application, had been selected, and that the selectors were desirous of withdrawing their selections, they having selected them in error. I think I then said, ‘the thing has been done already,’ being at that time under the impression that it was the same case. The following day my suspicions were aroused; and upon further inquiry I found that we had been imposed upon, but too late to take action to prevent the sale by auction going on.”

2286. That you say was Mr. Farnell’s minute? Yes; in one of the cases, I think, he made the conditional purchasers adhere to their bargain; but it was too late in the other. The land had already been sold by auction.

2287. To what do you attribute that improper administration of the law? I attribute it to the agent being Mr. Raymond, and to the influence which he has over the Under Secretary, which influence induced the Under Secretary to put that case to the Minister, leaving him in ignorance of the fact that Mr. Raymond and the Messrs. Landale were parties to it; and that it was not, as the Minister supposed it to be, a bonâ fide application to the Minister in the interest solely of some poor selectors who had made a mistake.

2288. The Under Secretary obtained that decision from the Minister without informing him fully of the facts? He obtained it contrary to the facts.

2289. By misleading him? The Minister was decidedly misled. The Under Secretary had plenty of information to show what were the facts. The fact that the applications were for portions as measured, must show that Mr. Raymond’s statement could not be true—I mean the statement that they took up the land in ignorance that it was measured. Then, again, by looking at the applications he could have seen that they were all made out under the agency of one person, who, I believe, is the superintendent of the run. With all these circumstances combined, it was impossible that the Under Secretary could not but know that he was getting money back for the Messrs. Landale.

2290. If he had looked at the applications he would have seen that Mr. Raymond’s statement was not correct? He would have seen that it was not true. It was a most unusual thing to go before the Minister with a verbal statement of that kind, in place of producing the papers and letting the Minister see with whom he was dealing. The Minister believed, as he said in his minute, that the application came from the poor selectors themselves.

2291. Is there anything to show when the auction sale took place? The whole thing is gone into in the report of the Commissioner, which you will find among the papers.

2292. Mr. Moriarty’s minute deals fully with the whole matter? Yes.

2293. Is there anything to show when Landale’s land was sold at auction? I think so.

2294. Was the same reason put forward in the other case as in Landale’s case? The same reasons; so much so that Mr. Farnell thought at first that he was dealing with the same case.

2295. The applications show that the selections were for measured portions, the numbers of the lots being given? Yes. The Under Secretary says in his letter from Mr. Fitzpatrick: “Conditional purchases to be at once cancelled, and necessary notation made in register, &c. Deeds to issue now to Messrs. Shanahan and Jennings.” And the Minister also writes in this paper, “There appears to me to be no other legal course than to allow the auction sales to stand in both Jennings’ and Landale’s purchases.” There are several other important memoranda in this paper by Mr. Farnell. In one place he says:—“I was under the impression that we were dealing with bonâ fide selectors who desired to withdraw their selections; but subsequent facts have shown that they were acting in the matter in order to allow Messrs. Landale and Jennings an opportunity of bidding for the land at auction. At this interview I was not aware that there were two sets of cases, but thought that it was one and the same case. I cannot hold myself responsible for conversations at personal interviews.” These are Mr. Farnell’s notes, written on a letter of Mr. Fitzpatrick’s, in the interest of Shanahan and Jennings. In another place the Minister says, “No representation was made to me by that gentleman or his agent, neither did I know that they had anything to do with the matter until after the transaction was complete.”

2296. Whom does he refer to there? Mr. Jennings. He saw nobody in these transactions.

2297. Mr. Farnell did not? No.

2298. Then, as I understand it, the auction sales were allowed to stand? Yes.

2299. Was the refund made in both cases? I believe in each case the land was sold and the refund made.

Witness: I have no desire to proceed further with these cases, if the Commissioners think I have made good my position; but before I have done with this matter I wish that the Surveyor General may be called, and that I may be allowed to ask him a few questions.

President: That would be a very inconvenient course of procedure, and I am afraid we cannot allow it?

Witness: Then I request that the Surveyor General may be called, and that you will put certain questions to him which if there be no objection the shorthand-writer can now take down.

President: We see no objection to that.

Witness: I shall be glad if you will ask Mr. Adams these questions:—

“Did the Under Secretary write to some of your surveyors in cases in which friends of his were interested?”

In the event of that question being answered in the affirmative, I request that you will ask further:—

“Did you require him to apologise for having done so?”

“Did he apologise?”

“Did

Present:—

MR. ABBOTT,

MR. RANKEN.

R. P. ABBOTT, ESQ., PRESIDENT, IN THE CHAIR.

R. D. Fitzgerald, Esq., was called in and further examined:—

R. D.
Fitzgerald,
Esq.
20 Jan., 1879.

*Witness:—*When I was last examined there was a paper from the Council of Education which I could not produce. Search had been made for it, and it could not be found. To-day I learn that it is with the Under Secretary, and he declines to give it me. He says that it is a Ministerial paper, and that if you want it you must ask for it.

2300. What do you say was the paper? A letter from the Council of Education, in which they said the method of dealing with their cases by granting their applications conditionally was useless.

2301. Is the Under Secretary aware that you wish to produce the paper to the Commission? Yes, I told Mr. Thompson. To-day, when Mr. Thompson was in the Under Secretary's room, I sent a messenger in to him for it. While I waited outside I heard the Under Secretary say, "It is a Ministerial paper, and I will not entrust it to him. If the Commission want it they must ask for it, and I will put it in writing if he likes."

2302. Did he send you that answer by the messenger? Yes.

2303. And Mr. Thompson was there at the time? He may have gone downstairs, but I think he was in the room.

2304. Mr. Ranken. Did you apply at the Records Branch for the papers? I applied to Mr. Thompson, who has charge of the Miscellaneous Branch.

2305. President. And when you were here last you wrote for it? Yes. They could not find it then, but Mr. Thompson has told me since that it had been found in one of the pigeon-holes, and that how it got there they could not tell. He took it to the Under Secretary, and he told me that it was with the Under Secretary. I asked him to get it for me, and I waited at the office to-day until I thought I should be late. While waiting I heard the Under Secretary say that he would not give it to me; that it was a Ministerial paper, and he would keep it; that if the Commission wanted it they could send for it; and that he would put it in writing if I liked. The messenger was going to give me the message, but as I had heard what Mr. Stephen had said I said it was not necessary for him to tell me as I had heard the Under Secretary. [Written application was here made by the President to the Minister for Lands for the papers.] When the Mining Department was established in 1875 it was proposed that an increase should be made to my salary for the new appointment of chief mining surveyor. It was then determined that I should not receive that increase of salary on the ground that it would be a cumulative one. I mentioned to Mr. Farnell that I thought it was hardly fair that my duties should be increased without any increase of salary, and mentioned to him that I had had charge of the Church and School estate for five years without any salary. Mr. Farnell then said that I ought to apply for a salary. I am inclined to think that Mr. Abbott was present at the time. However that may be, the Minister for Lands directed me to apply for a salary for the work I did in connection with the Church and School Estate. I did apply, and I got a salary of £100 a year. Some time after that, when Mr. Garrett was Minister, Mr. Pretious applied for a salary out of the Church and School estate. I was not aware until some considerable time afterwards that he was in receipt of a salary from the estate. I did not think he ought to have received it, because he did nothing for it, except to send a few instructions to the Crown bailiffs, and to issue I think about thirty timber licenses; but as the matter was never referred to me, and was done without my knowledge, I did not think it was my province to interfere. The fact was never communicated to me in any way. Shortly after that the Under Secretary also applied for a salary from the Church and School estate.

2306. This was after a salary had been granted to you? Yes.

2307. And to Mr. Pretious? Yes; the Governor refused Mr. Stephen's application, and he added that he did not think that any officer who was in receipt of a salary voted by Parliament should receive any addition to that salary without Parliament being made aware of it. He also asked for a report relative to the future management of the estate. The Under Secretary maintained his right to be paid a salary from the Church and School estate, and he sent in some two or three cases on which he had written minutes, and also a further recommendation from the Minister in support of his claim.

2308. A recommendation of his own application? Yes; the Governor still declined to give him any salary. I may here mention that during the five or six years that I had charge of the estate I do not think the Under Secretary made a dozen suggestions or took action in a dozen cases, more than to simply submit my minutes to the Minister, and to sign the letters which were written by the two clerks in the office on those minutes; as I mentioned, Mr. Garrett wrote a further recommendation in support of the Under Secretary's claim. Subsequently Mr. Garrett withdrew his recommendation, and upon that the Governor wrote:—"I entirely concur in the view now taken by the Minister for Lands upon this subject. The Minister will be good enough to suggest what he would consider a reasonable notice of withdrawal to be given to the three officers named in the last paragraph. Perhaps three months would be sufficient." A re-adjustment of the Church and School estate was gone into, and the Minister wrote thus:—"Refer to the Deputy Surveyor General for any remarks which he may wish to make upon the proposed re-arrangements, and also as to the recent change as it affects himself." Until this time I knew nothing at all about this correspondence. My salary had been stopped without my knowledge, and I had not received any notice whatever. I then wrote this upon that paper:—"During this long correspondence (seriously affecting affecting my position not only as regards future payment but the propriety of my ever having received any) no reference of these papers has ever been made to me, though in charge of the Church and School estate, and no notice has been given me of the intention to discontinue my salary. Under such circumstances no course appears to be open to me but to resign my connection with the estate, and I have accordingly now the honor of resigning all control into the hands of the Minister for Lands. Mr. Brownrigg, the draftsman to the estate, then took the case to the Minister, who became aware that he required my services; and he issued an order that I should resume the duties.

R. D.
Fitzgerald,
Esq.
20 Jan., 1879.

2309. Mr. Garrett issued an order? Yes; and he added that he would make inquiry into the whole case immediately. No action was taken, however, although the Surveyor General wrote twice at least, and I wrote once, drawing attention to the matter, and requesting a decision. And no report was given to the Governor, as he had required, until Mr. Farnell came into office, when I brought the matter before him.

2310. What date was that? That would be in 1878. Mr. Farnell made a recommendation to the Governor, who approved of the old system being re-established, and he gave me, the ranger, and the two clerks in the Lands Department a salary. I may mention that during the period the Lands Office clerks received a salary as usual, although they were in exactly the same category as myself, having salaries voted by Parliament.

2311. They received their salary without interruption? Yes; when it was decided that I was to receive pay I saw the Under Secretary, and he said that I had better withdraw a minute of mine, which I will read to you:—"As the Under Secretary objects to the control and direction of the clerks connected with the Lands Department being given to me as regards Church and School work, I would recommend that schedule B (which I only recommended in order not to deprive the clerks referred to of their pay) be set aside, and schedule C be adopted, on which there is a saving of £130, and which provides for clerical assistance outside the Lands Department, or that the charge of the estate be given to some one else other than myself." He suggested that I should withdraw this minute, and I said, "I cannot do it; I would not consent to withdraw any paper I have once written. This paper was written for the Governor, and submitted to the Governor, and I could not possibly think of withdrawing it." The Under Secretary said, "It never was submitted to the Governor." I said, "How is that—do you mean to say that that minute never was submitted to the Governor?" He said, "No, it was not. Mr. Farnell thought it was an inconvenient minute, and he directed me not to submit it."

2312. Were the other papers submitted without reference to that—the papers which were written after that? Yes. I took the first opportunity of asking Mr. Farnell if he had given instructions that my minute should be withdrawn from the papers when they were sent to the Governor, and he said that he never gave any such instructions at any time. From these papers you will observe that the original application by the Under Secretary for salary has been withdrawn or taken away, and the Under Secretary says that it was with the permission of Mr. Garrett.

2313. Did Mr. Stephen acknowledge that he withdrew it? Yes. Mr. Garrett's minute is also gone, and the Governor's minute, which was I believe written on Mr. Garrett's, is not there. The Under Secretary says that that minute never existed, but I have a perfect recollection of it, and so has Mr. Brownrigg. You will notice from the wording of my resignation that it is based on such a minute, or otherwise it is based upon nothing. The Minister's direction, absolute direction, that I should resume charge is gone, and my reply to it is also gone.

2314. You have seen the Minister's direction? Yes; it was on that that I wrote. The Minister for Lands directed me to resume charge; and I said that I would as he had directed me to do so, but that I hoped there would be an investigation into the case as soon as possible. All those papers are gone. I also said that I would take no salary till the Governor had decided the case.

2315. When did these papers come last into your possession? For the Commission.

2316. How long was it before that you had seen them when you remember that these missing documents were with them? I cannot say. I saw them from time to time.

2317. When you got these papers to bring here, was that the first time you knew that these documents were missing? No; I knew they were gone before that.

2318. Were you aware of that from your own inspection of the documents? Yes.

2319. They had been in your hands previously? Yes. I found they were gone. After the Under Secretary wanted me to withdraw a minute from them, I looked as to how much remained. I found that all these papers were gone. The Under Secretary stated that, as far as his own application was concerned, he had withdrawn it with the Minister's permission.

2320. And you found that everything having reference to that or consequent upon it was gone? Yes, and the Governor's remarks on Mr. Stephen's application, written on Mr. Garrett's original recommendation, were gone.

2321. Did you speak to Mr. Stephen, or to any one else about the loss of these papers? I think I pointed it out to Mr. Brownrigg.

2322. You made no complaint to Mr. Stephen? No; I told him, and he said he took his own application by permission.

2323. Mr. Ranken.] If the papers are in existence they ought to be with these papers? Yes.

2324. President.] Do you still hold the same position with regard to the Church and School estate? I do.

2325. What are your duties in connection with it? I have the management of the estate altogether. I make all recommendations as to what rates shall be adopted, what land shall go on, what land shall be kept back, terms of leases, &c. The whole administration of the estate rests with me, through the draftsman, Mr. Brownrigg.

2326. What had Mr. Stephen to do with it? He submitted my recommendations to the Minister. There are a few cases in which he acted, but they are, I think, almost entirely such cases as I can show you a sample of in the case of Mr. Bowman, which I have here—cases where some one wished him to act.

2327. If you had complete control, what necessity was there for Mr. Stephen to act? He lies between me and the Minister in all transactions; but he has done nothing else than submit the cases, except in a very few instances. He has put one of those instances in these papers, in which he made remarks on suggestions of mine.

2328. What were the duties for which Mr. Pretious was paid? He issued a few instructions to the Crown bailiff to turn trespassers off the estate. They had to go through him, as the Crown bailiff was under him.

2329. And for carrying out your directions he required payment? Yes.

2330.

R. D.
Fitzgerald,
Esq.
20 Jan., 1879.

2330. Mr. Ranken.] He received £100 a year? Yes.

2331. President.] Which was all you got? Yes; all these proposals about re-arrangement were carried on without my knowledge.

2332. Although [the whole management of the estate was vested in your hands? Yes; and I was a year and a half without any pay in consequence.

2333. Mr. Ranken.] You did the duties during that year and a half? Yes.

2334. President.] In fact the management remained continuously in your hands? Yes, with the exception of a short time between my resignation and the direction of Mr. Garrett that I should resume charge. I have here Mr. Garrett's minute, in which he concurs with the Governor in discontinuing payment.

2335. What is the date of it? The 24th December, 1875. It is as follows:—"Memo.: Allowance to the Under Secretary for Lands in connection with the Church and School lands." With reference to the application for the above extra allowance forwarded to the Governor, endorsed with my approval, upon further consideration I desire to withdraw the same. I am induced to take this course by reason of the consideration which has struck me since the approval referred to was given that these lands are (excepting that they are not open to conditional purchase, and the money received from them is not conveyed to the Consolidated Revenue Fund) dealt with in the same way as ordinary Crown lands. Therefore, officers of the Crown Lands Department are not entitled to claim payment for services rendered in connection with them as special services, or services rendered outside their ordinary or proper sphere of duty, and for which their respective salaries are allowed to them. This reason might, I may suggest, guide the action of the Governor as trustee of the funds derived from these lands with reference to the allowances made to other officers of the Lands Department. Should His Excellency take this view I might be allowed further to suggest that reasonable notice should be given to the officers drawing such allowances of the intention to withdraw them." That was the minute upon which His Excellency's concurrence was written, and, as I mentioned before, I found that my salary was discontinued, but I never got any notice of the intention to withdraw it.

2336. It was withdrawn, and you were not informed? Yes.

2337. You continued to do the duty for eighteen months? But I resigned when the papers were sent to me for the first time on the 6th of July, 1876.

2338. That was the first time you heard of this action? Yes.

2339. Who were the two clerks of whom you spoke as having been paid? Mr. Edwards and Mr. Brown.

2340. They have received their salaries all along? They have.

2341. During the time you were not paid? Yes; they were never included by the Under Secretary in his minutes.

2342. Mr. Ranken.] The duties were done by you as formerly? Yes.

2343. President.] So that you had all the responsibility without pay? Yes.

2344. Did not the same objection to paying them a salary exist in their case as in yours, inasmuch as they were in the receipt of a salary voted by Parliament? Exactly the same.

2345. They have acted under your instructions with regard to these Church and School lands? They act as officers of the Under Secretary, but they act upon my minutes. The suggestion that I made in that schedule was that we should have one clerk for the Church and School lands estate, and so do the thing from beginning to end. I believe that arrangement would have saved a great deal of time, and it would have saved £130 a year.

2346. Did you make that suggestion officially? Yes; that was the suggestion to which I have referred as having been taken out of the papers.

2347. Mr. Ranken.] When did Mr. Pretious's remuneration cease? When mine did. He received notice, and the ranger received notice, but I did not.

2348. President.] That was immediately after the application of the Under Secretary? Yes.

2349. You then suggested that there should be one clerk appointed specially to perform these duties, and it has disappeared? No; it has not disappeared, but that was the recommendation which the Under Secretary wanted me to withdraw, and which he told me had never gone to the Governor. It was an alternative view of managing the estate, but it did not go to the Governor at all.

2350. You thought it would have saved £130 a year? Yes, and that it would have been very much better than the present system.

2351. It would place one clerk under your control? One clerk and one draftsman. The public would be instantly informed with regard to their business, instead of the delay which results from the work going into the general business of the office.

2352. That plan was suggested by you to the Governor, as trustee of the estate, and it never reached him? Yes, and it never reached him. I have brought with me some Church and School lands cases, which I may refer to. The first is a case in which Mr. Alexander Bowman made an application to have a road sold to him, as an unnecessary road, under the 10th clause of the Act.

2353. President.] What is the date of that application? December 11, 1876. It was recommended that the application be refused on this minute: "It is considered that the provisions of the 10th section do not properly apply to the roads herein applied for. It is therefore recommended that the application be not entertained."

2354. Whose minute is that? Mine.

2355. Where was this road? It was a road running down to the Hunter River, between purchased land belonging to Mr. Bowman. Mr. Bowman wrote into the office remonstrating against this refusal; and the Under Secretary then wrote this minute upon his letter: "The application of Mr. Bowman has been dealt with so far as under the 10th clause, which appears to be a mistake, as the land is Church and School. Mr. Bowman states that he has become the owner of all the allotments to which the two roads he applies for were intended to afford access, and I see no objection to the land embraced by them being put up to auction to give him the opportunity of securing it. As bearing upon the latter question, see enclosed opinion of the Crown Solicitor, of December 8th, 1873." That was not submitted to the Minister, but it was sent to Mr. Edwards to send on to auction, which is quite an unusual course to take, especially with Church and School lands. Mr. Brownrigg happened to see the papers in Mr. Edwards' room. He drew attention to the matter, and it was stopped by this note: "Action in this case has been delayed, pending decision as to the management of the Church and School estate. It is now recommended, in accordance with the Crown Law Officer's opinion, that Mr. Bowman's application be not entertained. Part of one of the roads applied for affords access to portion 15, sold to Mr. W. B. Christian." 2356.

R. D.
Fitzgerald,
Esq.
20 Jan., 1879.

2356. Whose memorandum is that? Mine to the Minister. The Under Secretary in his minute says that the application by Mr. Bowman was dealt with under the 10th clause of the Act by mistake, when, on the contrary, the 10th clause was said not to apply to it. It was dealt with under an opinion of the Crown Law Officers that we could not sell roads which had been dedicated in a subdivision of the Church and School estate; it being a private estate, the 10th clause of the Act consequently did not apply to it.

2357. Mr. Ranken.] The roads were surveyed on the estate? Yes; and they were dedicated. The Church and School lands are not Crown lands, and therefore the Crown Lands Act does not apply. The Crown Solicitor said it was possible that such roads might be sold by the consent of all the parties who had bought under the plan, but then even in that case he was doubtful of the legality of the course.

2358. It appears that Mr. Bowman has not bought all the land? No. Another point to which I refer in this minute, to which I wish to draw attention, is that the Under Secretary quotes, as supporting his action, the very opinion of the Crown Law Officers, which says that it could not be done.

2359. President.] Is that opinion with the papers? Yes. Then no reference was made to the Minister but the papers were sent direct to Mr. Edwards, and it would have been sent on to sale by Mr. Edwards without my knowledge—although I have charge of the estate—if it had not been that the draftsman to the estate saw the papers in Mr. Edwards's office.

2360. And all that action was based on an opinion which was contrary to the view which Mr. Stephen wished it to establish? Directly contrary.

2361. Is that opinion there? Yes. We submitted a case for the opinion of the Crown Law Officers. That case was submitted in the following memorandum:—"It is recommended that the following be submitted to the Crown Law Officers for their opinion thereon:—Firstly: Whether the Crown can sell any roads shown in a plan of subdivision of Church and School estate, the allotments of which have been bought at auction in accordance with such plan publicly exhibited? Secondly: Whether the consent of purchasers of allotments in the subdivision must be obtained to the alienation of such road or roads? Thirdly: Whether it is necessary to obtain the consent of all the purchasers of allotments in the subdivision?" The Crown Law Officer replied:—"I have the honor to return minute paper No. 3004, and, in reply to the questions thereby submitted, to state—First: That the Crown has no legal right to sell any roads shown on a plan of subdivision of the Church and School estates, the allotments in which have been bought at auction in accordance with such plan publicly exhibited. The effect of selling by a plan showing a subdivision of the roads separating the allotments is to give to the buyers of such allotments a right-of-way over the roads so shown. This right is clearly one of the inducements to persons to purchase the lands so offered for sale. Second: It follows, therefore, that the consent of purchasers of allotments in the subdivision must be obtained to the alienation or closing of such road or roads, and that it is necessary to obtain the consent of all the purchasers of allotments in the subdivision. Strictly speaking, the fee-simple of the land over which the roads pass may be sold; but as such sale will not bar the right of the purchasers of the allotments at sales upon the subdivision to use the land shown in the plan as roads, a sale of the land so shown as roads would not pass any beneficial interest to the purchaser; and it may therefore be considered that practically such lands cannot be sold." It will be seen that the case for opinion was noted by the department of the Under Secretary to the Crown Solicitor, and that when the Crown Solicitor's opinion was received it was noted to the Surveyor General, and that may be taken as an illustration of the amount and kind of action taken by the Under Secretary in regard to Church and School lands cases, excepting where, as in this case of Mr. Bowman's, he takes extraordinary action, and extremely incorrect action from beginning to end, based on an opinion which is at variance to it. On the Crown Solicitor's opinion I wrote this minute: "This is understood to be an opinion to the effect that roads forming part of the Crown subdivision of Church and School estate cannot be alienated, and action will be taken consistent with this opinion if approved of by the Honorable the Minister for Lands." I wrote that because this opinion was sent to me direct without its having been shown to the Minister, and I wanted the Minister's approval of the Crown Solicitor's opinion and action upon it.

2362. Who sent to you? It came back to me through Mr. Rich. I required that the Minister should have seen it and agreed to it before I took action upon it. The Minister wrote: "Approved;" and then Mr. Rich noted it: "Surveyor General." That was all the action they had to take in the case.

2363. All these opinions are actually taken for the guidance of the Minister? Yes. Mr. Bowman wrote to the department again on the 11th July, 1878, and upon his letter the Under Secretary wrote: "Mr. Bowman disputes the statement that the road or one of the roads applied for by him affords access to portion 15, and as this is the ground upon which his application was recommended for refusal, he suggests that the matter may be further considered." Now it was not based upon any such reason but upon the illegality of the sale of roads in the Church and School estate at all. And at the same time it may be pointed out that this statement is not correct. This is Mr. Bowman's original application in which the road is shown, and I think it is plain that it shows access to portion 15 as applied for; but in the tracing sent in at the later date he leaves so much of the road as shows—includes access to 15 out.

2364. Both these tracings are Mr. Bowman's? Yes; Mr. Christian still retains his right to object to the sale. I point your attention to these plans to show that there is a further error in Mr. Stephen's last statement. He says distinctly that he never applied for portion of the road giving access to Mr. Christian's lot 15, but there is the original tracing showing that he did apply for it.

2365. Mr. Ranken.] The roads he applied for are marked red? Yes; we did not go into the merits of the application at all, because it was clear that we could not sell the land. However, on Mr. Stephen's last minute, which I have read, the Minister approved of the matter being reconsidered, and nothing further has been done in it.

2366. It remains in abeyance now? It does. I drew attention to this last minute as it re-opens the case, but still upon false grounds.

2367. The opinion which the Under Secretary cites in support of his view goes directly against his interpretation? Yes. He says: "See enclosed opinion of Crown Solicitor," and that opinion is against him. I have here another Church and School lands case. A sale of leases in the Church and School lands estate was about to take place at Gloucester, when some of the tenants waited upon Sir John Robertson, and he wrote this minute on their application: "The application appears reasonable, and is only intended to relate to land now under maize or potatoes. The matter must have immediate attention. I am under the impression that His Excellency the Governor should be asked to assent to the condition. Have an official official letter written intimating that the lease will be sold during January, 1877." This was a condition giving them permission to remove crops after the sale of the leases.

2368. President.] How were they in possession? They were the outgoing tenants. Mr. Brownrigg saw these papers in Mr. Brown's room, Mr. Brown being one of the clerks I have referred to.

2369. Mr. Brown is in charge of the Lease Branch? Yes. The Under Secretary had written this note on the paper: "Mr. Brown, speak to me. Perhaps the best plan will be to withdraw the lots altogether for a time." Mr. Brown spoke to me about this and told me that in place of carrying out the Minister's decision, that special conditions should be put into the sale, the sale was going to be stopped altogether. I got the paper and went to the Under Secretary. I asked him if he really meant to withdraw the sale, although Sir John Robertson had directed that it should go on, only with special conditions. He said he did mean to do it. I said, "That will be a loss of £500 to the estate." He said, "The estate is rich enough; it can afford the loss of £500; what do I care?" I said, "Do you seriously intend to withdraw that sale?" And he said, "Yes."

2370. Mr. Ranken.] When was that? About the 11th January.

2371. President.] Was Sir John Robertson then Minister? I think he was acting as Minister for Lands at that time. I continued to remonstrate with Mr. Stephen, asking him not to withdraw it; but he said he would withdraw it, and so I had no other course open to me but to go to Sir John Robertson. I did go to him, and explained the case to him; and in a subsequent minute Sir John Robertson adopted my view of the case on my representation, and he directed that the sale should go on in accordance with his own minute, and he added:—"This paper should in the first place, I think, have come through the Under Secretary." As that was not very definite and no very great imputation on me in the matter, and as my object was gained by having the correct course taken, I took no further notice of it. The sale went on, and it proved exactly the truth of what I had said, that the estate would have lost £500 if it had not gone on. The difference between the rent the tenants would have paid for the six months would have amounted exactly to £500. We got over £1,000, and the rent before was £500.

2372. That was saved by your breaking through the departmental rule? Yes; and even more than that would have been lost to the estate, because one of the reasons why I pressed that the sale should go on was that there was a drought at the time, and there was good grass and water on this land at that time so that it had an exceptional value. By deferring the sale, rain would have fallen before the time it would take place, and we should have got less in consequence.

2373. Mr. Ranken.] How was the question of the outgoing tenants' crops disposed of? It was sold with conditions as the Minister had directed. The Under Secretary's direction was in contradiction to that of the Minister.

2374. President.] Can you account for the action of the Under Secretary in that matter? I cannot account for it unless somebody saw him.

2375. You do not know that any person connected with it saw him? I believe some of them waited upon him, but I do not wish to say more about it. I know they were in the office and saw the Minister, and had the Minister's decision explained to them by Mr. Brownrigg. He explained to them the Minister's decision, and it was only by accident that he saw the minute of the Under Secretary in Mr. Brown's room. His seeing them prevented the sale from being withdrawn.

2376. You cannot explain any motives for the Under Secretary's action in the matter? I do not know what his motives were. When I brought the matter before him, and pointed out that his intended action would result in a loss of £500 to the estate, he still told me that he would withdraw the sale. But for that there would have been no necessity for me to have gone to Sir John Robertson.

2377. You cannot understand what his reasons were? He may have promised somebody that he would withdraw the sale, but I cannot say.

2378. Withdrawing the sale would have been equivalent to the remission of so much rent to them? They would have continued in possession at the low rent. The rent was doubled by the sale.

2379. The lease had not terminated? It would have terminated before the day of sale; and if the sale had not taken place they would have had the lease for another six months at the low rent, the difference between the old and the new rental being £500. This land was exceptionally valuable, and I knew there would be great competition for it, because persons were sending their stock from other parts of the country to this place on the Barrington. The next case I have here is that of a Volunteer order selection, made by the New Zealand and Australian Land Co. (limited), through R. Garland, their agent. The surveyor made this report: "Herewith is returned an application as above. The land applied for is described as having its depth extending from the Downfall Creek in a westerly direction. The creek at this point runs nearly east and west, and therefore the depth of the portion should extend in a south direction. The Company's resident superintendent objects to the land being surveyed in any way but that applied for, and requested me to stay the survey in order to give him an opportunity of endeavouring to get the application cancelled. I understand that Mr. R. P. Raymond will communicate with the Under Secretary for Lands on this matter. Enclosed is a letter I have received from the applicants' superintendent."

2380. Who wrote that letter? Mr. Macpherson, the licensed surveyor. My minute upon it was this: "It is submitted whether application made under Volunteer land orders are to be declared void for errors of description, such as that reported by the surveyor, or survey be made in accordance with the regulations, and as far as possible in accordance with the description. The cancellation for such reasons would have the effect of enabling the holder of a Volunteer land order to bar land for a period to suit his own objects, and to put it into his power to adopt the same course with the same Volunteer land order from time to time." Upon that the Under Secretary wrote: "I see no reason why, in a case like this, the Volunteer land order selection should not be cancelled as requested. I do not think a general rule can be applied." To have measured the land proposed to be taken up under the Volunteer order in the way desired would have had this effect, that it would have alienated to the applicant the land on both sides of the creek along its length. The surveyor, however, said that he could not do that, and that he could only measure the land according to the regulations, which gives a proportionate amount of frontage to each block. In this case they wanted all frontage. When they required the application to be returned, I submitted that they should be compelled to take the land under the Volunteer order in the same way as regards measurement, as they would have to take it under conditional purchase. Although I gave a reason why the land should be measured according to the regulations, or for the non-cancelling of the Volunteer order, namely, that the order should not be made a means of blocking other land from settlement, ment, the Under Secretary still wrote that he saw no reason why that Volunteer land order selection should not be cancelled. The Minister said, "The land should be measured in accordance with the description, provided that the measurement can be made in conformity with the practice and regulations of the Survey Department."

R. D.
Fitzgerald,
Esq.

20 Jan., 1879.

2381. How was that dealt with finally? The surveyor has been instructed to measure it.

2382. In accordance with your views? Yes; in accordance with the regulations.

2383. Is that a case of recent date? It is minuted 23/4/78.

2384. The effect of the Minister's decision was to over-rule Mr. Stephen's views in that particular case? Yes.

2385. With regard to Mr. Bowman's case, to which you have referred, did you produce it as showing that Mr. Bowman was dealt with as a friend, or had he an agent? He was dealt with as a friend, and special pleading was gone into for him, precedents being quoted which were not applicable, and statements made which were not correct. In order to get that land to auction at Mr. Bowman's desire, I have made this note upon: "Mis. 77-4238, Mr. Bowman's application to purchase unnecessary roads was on my recommendation, with the approval of the Minister for Lands, disallowed in accordance with the opinion of the Crown Solicitor. The Under Secretary, against this decision, and without Ministerial approval, directs the roads to be sent on for auction sale, stating that my action had by mistake been taken under the 10th clause, though inapplicable to Church and School lands. Such was not the case, and he then quotes the very opinion of the Crown Law Officer as authorizing his action, though it is in direct opposition. Mr. Brownrigg, draughtsman to the Church and School estate, happened to see the papers in the Lands Auction Branch and stopped the sale, when the case was again brought before the Minister by the Under Secretary on another mis-statement, though the direction of the Church and School Lands Estate is not in his charge." Passing on to another matter, I have here a letter by Mr. R. Peel Raymond, as the agent of a conditional purchaser, which I may read. It is dated 23 February, 1878, and is as follows:—"I have the honor to inform you that I find that my selection of 640 acres in the parish of Paika, county Cairn, on Paika Run, made by me on the 19th of April, 1877, is illegal, and cannot be held by me in consequence of improvements erected by the lessee worth over forty pounds sterling (£40) prior to date of my selection. I now beg that you will sanction the refund of my deposit, and have my selection notified forfeited in the Gazette, in order to allow me to select elsewhere.—EDWARD SHEARN. R. Peel Raymond, agent." Mr. Loxton, the surveyor, reported:—"The only improvement on the land consisted of a part of a tank being formed by the lessees of the run, on which about £20 had been expended at the date of inspection." I will read the lessee's letter:—"I have the honor to address you in reference to my application under the 31st clause of the 'Lands Act Amendment Act of 1875' as described in the margin. The land in question was selected by one Edward Shearn, as per margin, after I had expended over £20 in the construction of a tank, this being a portion of my intended outlay to fully improve the portion, a contract for which I had entered into under shelter of my 31st clause application. At the date of his selection there was over £30 worth of posts and rails on the ground, which were to be erected thereon without delay. When I explained the case to Shearn he immediately consented to withdraw his application, and apply for a refund of his conditional purchase deposit, and after satisfying himself that I had a prior claim to the land he addressed you, requesting cancellation of his selection and refund of his deposit by letter dated about the 25th of February, 1878. By your notice, dated 29 September, 1877, my 31st clause application was disallowed, owing to the land not being within 5 miles square of Crown lands. At that date the portion was fully improved, and I accordingly applied under clause 2, as per margin, for 640 acres in virtue of improvements. I now beg to request, on behalf of Edward Shearn, that you will sanction the cancellation of this selection and refund of deposit £160, in terms of his letter to you, to admit of my application under clause 2 being approved of, and allowed to be gazetted as open to purchase by me.

2386. Mr. Ranken.] Who is the lessee? Peter Macpherson. The Under Secretary says:—"There appears to be no reason why, under the circumstances stated, the application of Mr. Macpherson under the 2nd clause should not be allowed to go on on its merits of course. The selector himself has applied for the refund of his deposit on the ground that the land is improved. A similar course has been taken in other cases of the same nature." That was approved by the Minister. In my opinion there was no ground for cancellation whatever. The land was not improved beyond £20 upon the statement of the surveyor and the lessee himself; and either this man was a dummy taking charge of the land for the lessee, or he was a conditional purchaser who may have been misled as to his rights.

2387. President.] Misled in the interests of the lessee? Yes.

2388. Mr. Ranken.] There is a mention of £30 worth of fencing material? That is not an improvement. It could be removed and used elsewhere. The Under Secretary obtained the refund of a deposit of £160 for a conditional purchase on application of his agent, Mr. Raymond, on the ground that the land was improved to the value of £40 at date of application, and the letter of the lessee stating that they were worth £20 (corroborated as to value by the surveyor), but that he had been refused (on 5 miles square reason) permission to purchase under the 31st clause. The conditional purchaser would appear to be from such facts either a dummy, a bought off selector, or one misled as to his rights. I have here a case in which Mr. Raymond acted for Mr. Officer.

2389. Agent for whom? Mr. William Officer. Mr. Officer had measurements made for him about ten years ago under his pre-emptive right, and he completed the purchase of several of them; but one, about 400 acres, he failed to complete the purchase of, and the right lapsed. He subsequently took up the land as an after auction selection, and in 1874, nine years after the right had ceased to exist, he applied to revive it, and he applied it to land conditionally purchased by himself since, and thus escape from the conditions of the purchase. (See papers Ministerial, 74/5,697.) He tried to convert one of his pre-emptive purchases into an improvement purchase, and thus renew a right which he had already acted on. Both proposals were specially supported by the Under Secretary, and the first referred to obtained.

2390. In what way was that application specially supported by Mr. Stephen? In arguing for claims which were untenable, and which in my opinion should never have been granted. Mr. Stephen's minutes are long, and here is the Minister's decision.

2391. Who was the Minister? Mr. Garrett. He wrote:—"Under the circumstances of this case, which cannot possibly occur again, and with the express direction that it should not form a precedent, I decline to disturb my former decision." He allowed Mr. Officer to obtain a defunct right.

2392. Mr. Ranken.] A right which had been utilised? It had expired. Mr. Officer did not purchase when

R. D.
Fitzgerald,
Esq.

when he might have purchased, and he fell back upon that to get rid of his conditions as a conditional purchaser. As it may be too late to go into this case to-day—I would like to have one or two more questions put to the Surveyor General other than those I gave the other day, when he comes to be examined. I would like you to ask him whether I did not suggest to him as a friend of the Under Secretary to point out to Mr. Stephen the seriousness of the evidence that I should be compelled to give, and to try and persuade the Under Secretary not to press the matter to an issue. Whether I did not show him one or two of the cases in order that he might be in a position to speak to the Under Secretary. Whether when he informed me that the Under Secretary required to see the papers I did not tell him that he could have the papers, and could show them to the Under Secretary, but that he must retain them in his own keeping. I may also state that I saw the Minister for Lands, and pressed upon him to try and prevent the case from going on.

2393. What Minister was that? Mr. Farnell.

2394. That was before these papers were referred to us? Yes.

2395. Did this conversation between you and the Surveyor General take place before the papers came to us? I think so; before the case was put into your hands. My object was to point out that I had no desire to press the case against the Under Secretary, and it is only in self defence that I feel compelled to bring forward these proofs.

2396. Do you not think that information such as that in your possession ought to be given to the Commission? Certainly, if required.

2397. Although we might not be in possession of the facts leading up to it? At the time I speak of the matters were with the Minister.

2398. Mr. Ranken.] Is it not for the public interest that this information should not be suppressed? I consider them so serious that I would not have produced them to the detriment of Mr. Stephen if I could possibly have helped it. This is a minute which I wrote when I thought the case would fall into abeyance, and I bring it forward to show that I was acting in a friendly spirit:—"It is not from any drawing back or admitted inability that Mr. Fitzgerald has not brought forward any evidence he may have in proof of statements made by him on papers, Occ. 78/2,516, but because he has not been required to do so." I intended to take this to the Minister, and ask him to sign it as a protection to myself for not going forward with the case; and you will see in the reading of it that I have refrained from saying what the merits were, or saying anything disagreeable. I intended to ask the Minister to sign that minute as a protection to me, but then the case came to you.

2399. At whose suggestion did it come to us? The Minister's own suggestion. There was some considerable period between the date of Mr. Harriott's letter and the date of placing it in your hands, and it was during that interval that I intended to protect myself by getting the signature of the Minister to this minute.

WEDNESDAY, 22 JANUARY, 1879.

Present:—

MR. ABBOTT,

MR. RANKEN.

R. P. ABBOTT, ESQ., PRESIDENT, IN THE CHAIR.

Mr. R. D. Fitzgerald recalled and examined:—

R. D.
Fitzgerald,
Esq.
22 Jan., 1879.

2400. President.] Have you any papers you wish to lay before the Commission? I have a letter written by the Commission to the Minister for Lands, requesting that certain papers might be sent to the Commission. One is a letter of the Council of Education, dated January 20, 1879.

2401. On that, I understand, the Under Secretary for Lands has written a minute, which has been forwarded to you? Yes. Mr. Gerrard was in the room at the time I received them.

2402. Who is Mr. Gerrard? He is one of the draftsmen in charge of the road work. 'On receipt of the letter I sent for the messenger, who had gone to the Under Secretary's room for the papers. I asked the messenger what the Under Secretary had said to him. He said that Mr. Stephen said the paper was a Ministerial one, and that he would not give it up to the Deputy Surveyor General—that the Commission, if they wanted it, must write for it; and that he added that if I wanted that in writing he would give it me. I then asked the messenger if the Under Secretary said anything about writing a minute upon the papers, and the messenger replied, "No, sir, not one word about that." I may add that I heard the whole conversation myself, and not one word about writing the minute was in it.

2403. Nothing at all said about the minute? Nothing; what he did say was what the messenger said. The messenger's name is Shepherd.

2404. In this minute or letter of the 20th I see Mr. Stephen says, "I said I could not give them up until I had written a memo. which I wished to have endorsed upon them"? He said nothing of the kind, not until after the messenger left, at all events. He may have said it to Mr. Thompson after the messenger left; but those words were not included in the message to me. In fact an inconsistency would be plainly involved, because the reason assigned for not giving them up was that they were Ministerial papers.*

2405. What is the practice of the department with regard to getting papers;—have you not a right, as Deputy Surveyor General, to ask for and receive any papers you desire to have, no matter from what branch? I have always been in the habit of asking for papers, and getting any papers I required.

2406. Without any question? I think there have been some objections raised by the Under Secretary recently.

2407. But not previously? Not previously.

2408. The rule has always been that you could get the papers you desired? Yes.

2409. Mr. Ranken.] These papers would pass through the records in the usual way—that is, they would be entered by the record clerk? In this case I was myself asking Mr. Thompson and the Under Secretary for them. They were actually with Mr. Stephen, and it was to him I applied.

2410. According to the routine of the department the papers would be entered by the record clerk? Yes; if I got them from the Under Secretary, and he took proper precautions, he would have it noted in the records.

2411.

* NOTE (on revision):—I would point out the fact that no such minute has been written.

R. D.
Fitzgerald,
Esq.
22 Jan., 1879.

2411. President.] The papers you refer to are those before the Commission? Yes. In sending the papers to the Commission the Under Secretary has appended this minute:—"They have, it appears, been detained somewhere." According to "Record" they were with Mr. Lindsay Thompson; Mr. Thompson found them in a pigeon-hole in his own room.

2412. In the papers there is something said about there being something mysterious connected with their reappearance? The papers, as shown by the records, were with Mr. Thompson. If I had had the papers in the first instance I should have brought them.

2413. Whose is the first memorandum? I think it is Mr. Thompson's.

2414. What is the effect of it? Mr. Stephen wrote, "Where was the paper found?—full explanation wanted;" and the answer is: "In Mr. Donovan's pigeon-hole, this morning." It most certainly was not there, or in the Miscellaneous Branch, before that, as it had been repeatedly searched for, and was so well known both to Mr. Donovan and myself that it would have been noticed immediately if it had been in that branch.

2415. There is another minute upon it [pointing to minute];—whose is that? Mr. Donovan's: "The paper was with cases coming to me"; that is from Donovan, too, I suppose. "A careful search was made at Records on Friday and Saturday last, but without success, and the papers have not been seen since until now."

2416. Whose minute is that which you last read? I do not know.

2417. Are there any initials attached? "E.P." I think they are.

2418. Mr. Ranken.] But the statement made to you was not that the paper was lost, but that you could not have it? Yes, but when I first wanted them they could not be found.

2419. But I see another minute on the inside of the memo. you have just read? Yes, by the Under Secretary: "This paper was required by the Deputy Surveyor General, and I believe by the Commission, but could not be found, though strict search was made for it; to-day it has turned up most mysteriously."

2420. And as I understand it, your reference to these papers in your evidence was to show the opinion of the Council of Education on the delay by the department with matters referred to them? Their opinion upon the new system that had originated on that minute of the Under Secretary's, to which the Commission drew my attention, as to stopping papers coming to the Survey Office, and the Lands Department acting upon them themselves. I had better perhaps read the letter which was received from the Under Secretary of Justice and Public Instruction. It reads thus:—"Sir,—Referring to your letter of the 17th ultimo (78/9021, 78/9024, 78/9437, 78/10272, 78/1129—'Miscellaneous'), I am directed by the Minister of Justice and Public Instruction to forward for the information of the Secretary for Lands the accompanying communication received from the Council of Education having reference to an absolute grant of land at places mentioned in the margin." The letter here referred to reads as follows:—"I am directed by the Council of Education to acknowledge receipt of your letter dated 22nd instant, and numbered from 78/9614 to 78/9619 inclusive, notifying that the Minister for Lands has approved of the appropriation for Public School purposes certain portions of land at Fern Hill, Rowan, Waterview, Bargo West, Eatonsville, and Gobang respectively, subject however to any objections that may be found to exist at the time of survey." The Secretary to the Council of Education's letter then continues:—"In reply I am to state for the information of the Minister of Justice and Public Instruction that, as pointed out in my letter of the 16th instant (78/19151), referring to the cases of Major's Plains, Perricoota, and Inglewood Forest, land granted conditionally upon any objections that may be found hereafter is of no use to the Council in view of the provisions of section 23 of the Public Schools Act—cannot build thereon without an absolute grant. The Council would therefore be glad if the Minister would have the goodness to obtain such a grant as early as possible in each of the cases brought under notice; the usual formal approval of appropriation without any proviso would be sufficient." They did not need any communication of the kind at all, for they could not use the land with a proviso.

2421. Is there any minute by the Under Secretary upon that? There is a minute to this effect: "It has been the practice for some time past to approve of applications for Public School sites, subject to any objections which may be found to exist at the time of measurement; the Council now states that such conditional approvals are of no use to it, as by section 23 of the Public Schools Act, buildings cannot be erected without an absolute grant."

2422. Whose minute is that? I do not know. I see there is another minute to this effect: "Submitted; pending a report from the Surveyor General it would not be safe to give unconditional approval."

2423. Whose minute is that? Mr. Lindsay Thompson's, I think. They sent the paper to me, and I "observed" it on the 10th of January. This "observed" by me is, I should remark, after the Minister's decision. The Under Secretary says, "I concur; the only thing that can be done is to endeavour to obtain more expeditious action in the Survey Department"; and the Minister says: "I concur; it appears to me these applications must be dealt with by the Surveyor General's Department as to more certainty of site, and they should be dealt with as expeditiously as possible." It was then that I wrote "observed" on the paper.

2424. I think you have said that the course of action objected to by the Council of Education was led up to by Mr. Stephen's determination on Brown's case? It originated in that case altogether. The previous practice was to send the papers to the Survey Department for report. As the Minister said they must come to the Survey Department for the future, I simply wrote upon the paper in question "observed." I may state that it was Mr. Payton, one of the draftsmen, who ascertained for me that the papers were with Mr. Thompson, and afterwards it was found in Mr. Donovan's room, and Mr. Donovan is one of Mr. Thompson's clerks.

2425. And it was not there the day previous? I should say that the simple solution of the whole thing is that one of the clerks found it where it ought to be. I think, as the Under Secretary implies in his minute that I acted improperly in bringing papers to the Commission, I should be permitted to say something in explanation.

2426. If you wish to do so? I was called upon to prove issues before this Commission; the Under Secretary himself demanded that I should prove them. To prove them it was absolutely necessary that I should have the papers on which those issues were based; and I obtained these papers at Records, with the intention of producing them at the Board, as I have done. I do not see that there was any other course open to me to pursue. If I had applied to the Under Secretary for these papers the Commission would never have seen them.

2427. What is your reason for saying that? My opinion is that you never would have received them.

2428.

R. D.
Fitzgerald,
Esq.
22 Jan., 1879.

2428. That the Under Secretary would not have given them to you? That the papers would never have been found if I had not looked at Records for them myself, independently of the Under Secretary.

2429. The papers would never have been found? The Under Secretary, knowing for what purpose the papers were required, the papers would never have been found. I think the obstacles thrown in the way of getting the few papers that have been got from Records through the Under Secretary are quite sufficient to prove the truth of what I say. I could not have depended upon these papers being found, or found in a perfect state, if I had not obtained them myself from Records, and there was nothing unusual in my doing so.

2430. In point of fact they would have been made away with? In point of fact they would never have been forthcoming, or some part of them would never have been forthcoming. That is my belief. It is only a matter of belief, of course.

2431. Have you anything further to bring before the Commission? When last before the Commission the case of Mr. Officer was referred to. I have brought a letter received from Mr. Officer regarding the case referred to, and which reads as follows:—"Deniliquin, July 3, 1874. Sir,—In 1866, portion 4 of the 640 acres on which my head station stands, was taken up by me as pre-emptive purchase. I have since found out what a mistake I made, and that if I had taken it up as an improvement purchase I should still have been able to get the 640 acres on another part of the run. Mr. Lucas has surveyed two portions of 320 acres each, November 7th and 5th, which have been selected by me and one of my children; and I should feel much obliged if you would permit me to have my pre-emptive purchase subdivided into two portions of 320 acres each, for which there are ample improvements, and allow me to take them up under the 8th clause on surrendering my deed. The cost of subdivision I am willing to pay, and to have my pre-emptive purchase divided into two selections. I would then pay the appraised value of the same, including my head station, requesting a refund of the 5s. per acre paid on the two selections, which I ask to be granted to me as a pre-emptive purchase. I have the honour, &c.—W. OFFICER." The Under Secretary wrote upon that, "There does not appear to me to be any legal objection to a compliance with Mr. Officer's request, neither does it involve any loss on the part of the Government, but in point of revenue is an advantage. If allowed, applicant must pay all expenses attendant upon the subdivision, surrender the deed of grant, &c., especially as the request is rather an unusual one." Upon that Mr. Farnell wrote:—"To comply with the applicant's request would be to establish an inconvenient precedent, and I think the prudent course is to refuse the request." I have a letter from Mr. Raymond, who acted for Mr. Officer.

2433. President] That is to say, under the new law he wanted to have all the advantages of the old law? He had already obtained a portion of land in right of pre-emption; but he could have applied, he says, under another clause, and retained his pre-emptive right for some other place. He did not do so, and his pre-emption was satisfied by the measurement of the land. He now wishes to surrender that deed, and go back to an application under the 8th clause, and revive his pre-emptive right, which he had exhausted in the purchase of the land, and apply that to a conditional purchase.

2434. Under the law of 1861? Yes.

2435. Mr. Ranken] If he held a pre-emptive right on each block of his station, he would spot the whole of his station? He could renew his whole pre-emptive right.

2436. President] What was the extent of pre-emptive right to which each squatter was entitled? 1 mile to every 16,000 acres. He had several pre-emptive applications at the time; several portions of land were measured for him, and one, at least, he forfeited.

2437. You mentioned just now that you had a letter from Mr. Raymond? Yes; Mr. Raymond, who acted for Mr. Officer, wrote as follows: "With reference to an application sent in by Mr. William Officer for an exchange of one of his pre-emptive purchases, taken up by mistake, so as to include his homestead improvements, which should have been applied for under the 8th clause of the Act, I have the honor, at his request, to send you an extract from a letter I have lately received from him on the subject, and hope that his representations will carry due weight. I have the honor to be," &c. This is the extract referred to by Mr. Raymond: "Perhaps the fact that the head station portion was measured as a pre-emptive purchase, contrary to my instructions, may have some influence with Mr. Farnell, and induce him to allow my present application. I was away from home when Mr. Roland, the surveyor, measured these portions of pre-emptive purchase. But previous to survey I had left instructions with my overseer what parts of the run were to be measured as pre-emptive purchases, and the portion on which the head station stands was certainly not one of the places I indicated. From some cause or other Roland would not measure them in the places I had pointed out. I think he did one, and then pulled the pegs up, and my overseer, not knowing any better, allowed him to measure one of the sections on which the head station stands. I knew at the time that a great mistake had been made, but in those days it did not matter so much as it does now; but I know this very well, that if I had been on the station at the time, the land would not have been measured as it was. There was no reason, as I could learn, why Roland measured the head station as a pre-emptive purchase, as of course there was plenty of country elsewhere; and if I remember right, the place I had instructed to have measured, was the Billabong. I hope you will be able to make out a good case for me. I think you will agree with me that as a fair matter of right I am entitled to have the purchase I ask. It is a pity I did not think of giving you these particulars before, but I trust they will yet be of service."

2438. Mr. Ranken] To whom is that letter addressed? To Mr. Raymond. I have a minute of Mr. Moriarty's, which reads thus: "That the papers relating to the pre-emptive purchase of the head station are now enclosed, and it does not appear that any mistake was made in the measurement of the land applied for; but even had there been, the land having been measured over seven years ago and paid for, and the deed granted over six years ago, it is obviously now out of the question to revise the measurement. The proposal to surrender the deed, with a view to the land being re-granted, that is applied for under the improvement clause, which it was not, and to exercise now the right of pre-emption in another place, would be, I must submit, equally out of the question, even if it would not require, as there can be but little doubt that it would, an Act of Parliament to legalise it." On that the Under Secretary writes, "Submitted for decision." Then upon that Mr. Farnell writes: "Approved; former decision to stand."

Mr.

R. D.
Fitzgerald,
Esq.
22 Jan., 1879.

Mr. Raymond then wrote this letter: "Sydney, 21st December, 1874. Sir,—Adverting to my letter addressed to the Crown Lands Office in reference to the claim of Mr. W. Officer for 444 acres of pre-emptive land, to which he considers himself entitled, over the quantity measured for him in accordance with the regulations as to the proportionate area of pre-emptive right land to the total area of his Zara run; also to my application on his behalf for the exchange of one pre-emptive right measured for him, including the head station improvements, for two selections taken up by two of his children close to the head station, and which he explains was refused by the honorable the Minister for Lands, I have now the honor to request that the two selections referred to may be cancelled, and the 444 acres measured as pre-emptive right land in lieu thereof, the balance of land in the two selections being measured and put up to auction sale. To avoid any question on the score of expense, Mr. Officer is willing to pay the survey fees necessary; and as I submit no other steps could be taken, it being at the same time a pecuniary advantage to the Government, I trust the honorable the Minister will see fit to approve of this application, and that steps may be taken to carry the same out without delay.—R. P. RAYMOND." Upon this the Under Secretary wrote as follows: "This case was withdrawn from consideration in order to obtain further particulars. It appears on reference to the Survey Office that Mr. Officer,"—I may here mention that the gentleman who dealt with pre-emptive rights in the Survey Office was Mr. Finch. He wrote a full minute of all the particulars and the objections which Mr. Moriarty subsequently raised, and the report was sent to the Under Secretary. That is the information which the Under Secretary refers to in that part of the minute I have just read. That report is not here.

2439. That is Mr. Finch's report? Yes; a report in which the objections infrequently raised in Mr. Moriarty's minute were stated is not with the papers. But this is Mr. Stephen's minute: "This case was withdrawn from consideration in order to obtain further particulars. It appears from reference to the Survey Office, that Mr. Officer failed for some reason to complete the purchase of 420 acres (Mr. Raymond states 444 acres), to which he was entitled under pre-emptive right, and that his claim to that portion has now lapsed. He now requests that the two conditional purchase applications enclosed, of 320 acres each, made in the names of his sons, may be cancelled with a view to the area above referred to being now allowed to him as pre-emptive purchase; he also requests that the remainder of the land embraced by such conditional purchase may be brought to auction sale on payment by him of the cost of remeasurement." The Minister, Mr. Garrett, approves. Then Mr. Moriarty wrote as follows: "The papers in this matter not having passed into his office since the date of receipt of Mr. Raymond's letter, except on the 12th February, when they were sent to me by mistake of the Under Secretary instead of to the Minister, and immediately returned to him—there has been until now no opportunity afforded to the subordinate officers of submitting the case in a complete state to the Under Secretary for the Minister's decision.* This has led to the facts being imperfectly known and to the documents being in an incomplete state when submitted—in particular the enclosed recent correspondence with Mr. Officer and Mr. Raymond in the same matter. Miscellaneous, 74/5,696, and Miscellaneous, 74/7,956, were not submitted, neither was the date of the forfeiture of the pre-emptive purchase early in 1868 shown, nor the fact that the land was therefore withdrawn from the lease of the Zara Run, offered to sale at Deniliquin after remeasurement into two portions of 210 acres each, and ultimately, that is on the 12th August, 1873, selected after auction by Mr. William Officer." Perhaps I may explain this:—The first application was to have a pre-emptive purchase, and to allow Mr. Officer to use his "pre" right again; the second suggestion was that a measurement in another place for him should be made in right of a pre-emption which he forfeited and did not pay for, but selected the land after auction, and that he should apply his renewed right to the same conditional purchase that he proposed to apply the pre-emptive right which he would recover if a measurement had been made under the 8th clause.

2440. Mr. Ranken.] Then the pre-emptive right had lapsed? The second pre-emptive right at least had lapsed.

2441. How did it lapse? He did not pay up. He took the land after it had been offered at auction, and by that means escaped the forfeit. He should have paid 25 per cent. forfeit. But taking it after it had been offered at auction he did not pay that forfeit, and at the same time got the very land that was measured for him. Mr. Moriarty's letter which I have just been reading from goes on to say:—"I think it will be apparent that these facts alter the whole complexion of the matter. It might perhaps have been possible to comply with the request of Mr. Raymond as to the pre-emptive purchase had the land been still available by the remission of the forfeiture that occurred in 1868 and cancelling the second reservation from lease, though I hardly think this would have been recommended or authorised had the matter been known, but it is now obvious that the object is that which was before attempted and refused to be sustained by the late Minister, namely, to use again now for other land the pre-emptive right already used in 1865 for the land forfeited in 1868; in other words to exercise again now a right which, even if it had not been satisfied already, expired over nine years ago with the lease under the orders in Council which were repealed in 1861. In the face of the foregoing it seems almost superfluous to advert to the minor difficulty, that the land conditionally selected appears to have been open to conditional purchase, and that therefore no grounds exist for the cancellation of the selections. Of course the minors can neither transfer nor surrender?" That is Mr. Moriarty's letter.

2442. President.] What is the date of that letter? 15/4/75.

2443. Mr. Ranken.] I suppose, on the rights under the Orders in Council being cancelled in 1861, all rights accruing would subsist until the leases expired; that would be in 1869;—would it not? He says the lease expired in 1861. I think Mr. Moriarty means that Mr. Officer had forfeited his right by non-purchase. The rights could not be renewed under an Act that had ceased to operate. The Under Secretary then wrote as follows:—"I had a perfect recollection of the existence of the previous papers now submitted, and I cannot understand why, after having repeatedly endeavoured to obtain them, they are only at this stage of the case brought under notice." There is a note of Mr. Moriarty's here, in which he says they were never asked for. Mr. Stephen's minute continues:—"It will be perceived, however, that Mr. Officer's former application was quite of a different nature to that now made by him; it was to be allowed to surrender the deeds of grant of land obtained by him under pre-emptive purchase with a view to its being taken up under the 8th clause, and to take the area, the purchase of which he failed to complete, out of the two conditional purchases made by him and one of his sons. The circumstances set forth forth in his letter of the 28th August seem to justify to some extent this concession; but the late Minister decided that it would establish an inconvenient precedent, and therefore refused it. The present application is only for the concession last referred to—that is, in respect to the two conditional purchases, the cancellation of which for the objects specified has been approved by the Minister; and I still do not see that there is any legal objection to this decision being carried out. The withdrawal from lease of the particular portion of which Mr. Officer failed to complete the purchase for the reasons stated—no reasons have ever been given, I may mention—“was the natural or usual result of such failure; but the fact of the same having been taken up by selection after auction seems to me to be beside the question, as it was a different mode of sale, open to any one who wished to take advantage of it. The question is simply now, therefore, whether, notwithstanding the time that has elapsed, Mr. Officer will be allowed to give up the conditional purchases which are on the Zara run to enable him to obtain out of them, or, rather, to make up the full area to which he was entitled under pre-emptive purchase at the date of application—an application which, by the purchase, now stands approved by the Minister. I admit that even in this shape a compliance with the request would be undesirable if it could be established as a precedent (the reason given by the late Minister for his refusal of the application as previously submitted), but of this there is no likelihood as this class of cases has run out, and the 7th clause of the Crown Lands Alienation Act is now virtually a dead letter.” I may mention that that clause had no more run out in any other case than in this case; and if it were known that such a right existed, every other applicant who had forfeited was equally entitled to take up land at that date, nine years after.

2444. No matter how many years previously he had forfeited? No. The Minister says, “Under the special circumstances of this case, the like of which cannot possibly occur again, and with the express direction that it should not form a precedent, I decline to disturb my former decision.” That is Mr. Garrett’s minute.

2445. What is the date of it? 21/4/75.

2446. That was after Mr. Moriarty had called attention to the fact that the selectors were minors? It was Mr. Garrett’s decision upon the Under Secretary’s reply to Mr. Moriarty’s minute.

2447. I should like to ask you a question or two with regard to Landale’s case, to which you referred when last before the Commission: With reference to the cases of Mr. Landale and Mr. Jennings, the plan suggested by the papers now before the Commission was to have lands advertised for sale by auction as the first step? Yes.

2448. Then to have them selected by agents of their own? Yes.

2449. Then immediately before the day of sale to have the selections abandoned, and forfeited immediately before the day fixed for auction sale? I do not think you use the word “forfeited” aright.

2450. The word “withdrawal” I think is used; immediately before the day fixed for auction sale the selections would be withdrawn by the applicants, and cancelled by the department? Yes.

2451. The object would be to ensure success, and the plan was to keep the selections alive as long as possible, and to keep the fact of their withdrawal secret for fear other people would select? To cover the land measured by conditional purchase up to the day of sale, or as near it as possible, and then to have the money returned for those conditional purchases on some false grounds.

2452. Mr. Ranken.] Those who tendered fictitious purchases? They were real purchases; but, I do not think any one could doubt the object on looking at the papers.

2453. President.] Will you be able to tell us, in looking at the papers, the day the sale by auction of Mr. Landale’s lots was advertised for? The 26th September, 1873.

2454. That is the date of Mr. Raymond’s first letter—that is, his first application? That was the 24th September.

2455. That is the application for the withdrawal or cancellation of the conditional purchases? Yes.

2456. Is Mr. Stephen’s minute with that? Yes, it is the same day, the 24th September.

2457. Is there anything either on the minute or letter to show that either one or the other was ever submitted to the Minister? They were not submitted to the Minister; the Minister says himself that he saw no papers, nor anybody but the Under Secretary in the matter.

2458. Then he had nothing to guide him in coming to a decision with regard to the case, except what the Under Secretary told him? Nothing.

2459. I think you said that no one but the Under Secretary saw him on the subject? No, the Minister says so in his minute.

2460. His minute dealing with the matter bears the same date as Mr. Raymond’s application? The same date.

2461. And that was in 1873? The 24th September, 1873.

2462. What was the action taken, or the next step, with regard to that application of Mr. Raymond’s;—was it dealt with immediately? I can only speak from recollection. I do not know whether there is anything in the papers that directly shows it. My impression is that the Minister tried to stop the sale and re-establish the conditional purchases.

2463. But what action was taken by the Under Secretary on Mr. Raymond’s letter;—did he not write a minute? The minute he wrote was the result of a conversation with the Minister.

2464. Written after the conversation? I think it was, because he speaks of the Minister’s approval. He says the Minister approves of their being cancelled; that is the minute of the 24th.

2465. But there is no memorandum of any kind of Mr. Farnell’s on any of the papers previous to the sale by auction? No; the Under Secretary, in his minute of the 24th, refers to a verbal decision of the Minister on his submitting the case to him.

2466. In point of fact it was an imaginary case that was submitted to the Minister, without giving the names of any parties—the names of the agent or the lessee? So the Minister states.

2467. I think Mr. Moriarty was at Deniliquin at or about that time? Yes.

2468. And he was asked for a report? Yes.

2469. I do not think you have spoken of his report? I simply stated that it was on Mr. Moriarty’s report of the facts that the Minister wrote the minute which I have read to the Commission. I did not read Mr. Moriarty’s report, because it embodies the facts which I have given you.

2470. I think you have read Mr. Farnell’s minute on Mr. Moriarty’s report? Yes.

2471. Did not Mr. Landale write some explanation of the matter? Yes, there is a letter from Mr. Landale.

2472.

R. D.
Fitzgerald,
Esq.

22 Jan., 1879.

2472. Will you just look at that letter, and tell us what he said in explanation of the matter? He says they were genuine selectors, and were induced to throw up their selections upon representations of his to them.

2473. Does he make any statement with regard to any misrepresentations? Yes; he says they have been misrepresented as being dummies of his, and as being men who have had no existence. He says they had existence, and were not dummies.

2474. Mr. Ranken.] What is the date of that letter? 10th November, 1873.

2475. President.] Does he make reference to the fact of Mr. Moriarty being in the neighbourhood? Yes; he says, "We do ourselves the honor of addressing you on a subject that may be brought under your notice by Mr. Moriarty, who has returned from the district, namely, the cancelling of the selections of Robert Simpson and John Blackwood," and so on.

2476. Mr. Ranken.] He represents them to be real selectors? Yes.

2477. President.] Did you see the withdrawals of the selections? Yes.

2478. Will you please to refer to them? Yes, I have them here.

2479. Do you not think there is a great similarity in the handwriting of the withdrawals and Landale's letter? Yes, they are the same writing; but that would not disagree with Mr. Landale's letter, because he says he had induced them to withdraw.

2480. Nor with the view taken of the position of affairs by yourself? No.

2481. In reading through these papers did you notice that the applications of, I think, four or five of the conditional purchasers, were stated in the applications to be those of minors? I did not notice it.

2482. Has it been the practice in the Lands Department to acknowledge the acts of minors alienating or giving up their rights to land? I think not; the minute which I read, of Mr. Moriarty's, on the case of Mr. Officer's points distinctly to its not being so; he there distinctly shows the Minister that they cannot part with their selections.

2483. Do you know whether that practice is allowed now in the department;—whether the acts of minors are recognized? No, I think not; they have not the power to transfer.

2484. And never had? No; they do not ask for any alienation, they asked for cancellation. A minor's application could be cancelled.

2485. Does not the law as it stands now give minors or any other conditional purchasers an absolute title so long as they fulfil the conditions? Certainly.

2486. Having so far fulfilled the conditions the minor is the owner of the land? Certainly.

2487. Would any act of a minor affect his title? They did not claim cancellation on the ground of any act or non-act of theirs, but on the grounds that the adjoining lands would be bought by the squatter.

2488. But their reasons might not be recognised except in so far as they justified them in withdrawing— withdrawing by them would be giving up their rights to the land? I do not think the Minister has any power to cancel them.

2489. It would be illegal? Yes. I think the Minister has no right to cancel a conditional purchase except on legal grounds.

2490. The cancellation of these conditional purchases did not affect the interests of these infants? I do not think it affected their rights even if it were true. A person not having the power to take a pre-emptive right cannot in any sense cancel his conditional purchase.

2491. I think there is a long letter of Mr. Farnell's to Mr. Fitzpatrick, which you have not yet read to us? I only brought forward Mr. Landale's case. I may mention that the only connection I had with these cases, the only way which I knew of their existence, was through Mr. Farnell sending for me to show him the plan of the measurements, and I then learnt that the grounds put forward for cancellation were that the applicants did not know they were measured although they applied for them as measured portions. That was the only way in which I knew of the existence of the cases.

2492. Mr. Jennings' case was decided on the same ground as Mr. Landale's, except that there was no authority given to the land agent to sell—he sold, as I understand it, because of the withdrawal, which was said to be sufficient? Shall I read the minute?

2493. Please? This is Mr. Farnell's minute:—"I had no written documents before me when dealing with this matter in the first instance; but I was verbally informed, as on an urgent case, that certain selectors named Blackwood, Gerrard, Smith, McLeod, and Mackenzie, had selected land that had been measured for auction sale, and that as the land adjoining had also been measured for auction sale, they would, in the event of the adjoining land being sold, be deprived of their pre-emptive leases, and that in such case their selections would be valueless to them. I upon these grounds consented to their withdrawing their selections in order that they might be able to select land in such places where they might be able to secure to themselves their grazing right, being assured that a selection in that part of the country was absolutely valueless without such. I at the time thought I was furthering the interests of these selectors, they being persons in poor circumstances, and that to refuse to allow them to change their selections would be almost ruin to them. The land agent was instructed that if the selectors were to make applications in writing to withdraw their selections he was to receive them. They respectively made application in writing to be allowed to withdraw their applications, and the withdrawal was permitted, the land having been advertised at auction sale prior to the selections having been made. Then upon their withdrawal these lots, together with others, were offered at auction, and Messrs. Landale became the purchasers. I know that Mr. Fitzpatrick had no interview with me, and I cannot recall to my memory several of the matters referred to by me, because it is not possible I can remember conversations that take place with the numerous persons that call upon me day by day and myself. But I think I was under the impression at that time that it was a matter already dealt with, and I believe I said that the thing had already been done. However, several lots referred to by Mr. Fitzpatrick were offered at auction on the day notified, and Mr. Jennings became the purchaser of them. I may say in passing that the land agent did not receive instructions in reference to these lots. Subsequent to the sale by auction I received certain information, not officially, that the selections were not bonâ fide, and that the lands purchased by Mr. Jennings had been selected by the Murrys, and that there were no persons in the district of the name of Murray. This was the first time I heard of the Murrys selections; and I subsequently ascertained that the Murrys had taken up nine selections, and that they had applied respectively to the land agent to be allowed to withdraw the selections, which was allowed. I had a strong impression that the selections were not bonâ fide, and that deception had been practised on the department.

R. D.
Fitzgerald,
Esq.
22 Jan., 1879.

I accordingly gave instructions that the selectors should be held to their respective selections and that the sale by auction should be annulled. It appears that a Mr. Freeman from Victoria with a number of employes intended to select certain portions and that the Murrays had selected the lots he required, and that the said lots he selected were subsequently offered at auction, and the latter protested against the said sale. Subsequently a letter was received from Mr. Freeman withdrawing his opposition to the completion of the purchase by Mr. Jennings. In so far it appears that no private person has suffered in the transaction, Mr. Freeman being the only person who was desirous of selecting; but as it appears to me his intention was obviously to make a number of dummy selections on the selected portions. I think myself a deceit has been practised in this matter in order that the selected lots might be offered at auction. In reference to a remark made by Mr. Fitzpatrick, I may state that neither Mr. Landale nor his agent made any representation to me. The representations made were those of the selectors; and until a recent period I did not know either Mr. Jennings or Mr. Landale in the matter. The selectors at their own request have been allowed to withdraw their selections respectively, and they have been cancelled. Had I the power I should certainly hold them to their respective selections, but not having the power I must revert to the auction sale. The sale of the selected lots, together with other lots, took place in accordance with the Gazette notice, and were purchased by Mr. Landale and Mr. Jennings. I am of opinion—such opinion being in concurrence with the Crown Law Officer, that the Government are legally bound to complete the purchase of the lands in question, and as sold at auction sale. I agree with Mr. Fitzpatrick that the public interests have not suffered, but I must say that the sale of the lots in question was brought about in a manner not at all creditable or satisfactory. I am of opinion that in every case in future where parties apply to withdraw their selections, it should not under any circumstances be allowed."

2494. That is Mr. Farnell's minute? Yes; I never saw it before.

2495. And that is written on a letter of Mr. Fitzpatrick's? Yes. There is another minute, I see, with no date: "There appears to me to be no other legal course than to allow the auction sales to stand in both Jennings' and Landale's purchases." I read that before; I did not go into Jennings' case at all.

2496. But does it not appear to you to be rather worse than Landale's—in this way, that it was carried through because of Landale's case, and with no apparent authority than the case of Landale's? Yes, it followed suit of Landale's.

2497. There does not appear with the papers any application either by an agent, by Jennings, or by the selectors themselves, with reference to these Murray selections, asking to be allowed to withdraw? I do not think there is.

2498. But Mr. Fitzpatrick writes to protest against the cancellation of the auction purchases? Yes.

2499. At the time Mr. Farnell had decided to cancel them? It went through on the precedent of the Landale case.

2500. Can you say whether that same course has been pursued in any other case within your knowledge? Not that I know of; I do not think it has been done since.

2501. A case has been referred to, having reference to an application by Mr. Watt, and a letter written by Messrs. Wilson and Ranken on the 7th July, 1878, which letter reads thus: "On behalf of the hon. J. B. Watt, lessee of the Goonal Run, in the Gwydir District, we beg to state that having, on the 8th August, 1877, inadvertently taken up 50 acres partly on Meroe; the neighbouring run, we respectfully request that you will be pleased to cancel the selection, and return the certificate; No. of certificate, 2571; registered No., 77-104; issued to Private Isaac Downe; the land selected is thus described: 50 acres, county Benaba, parish of Meroe, on the north side of the Big River, on west side of and fronting Curraganda Road, being nearly opposite to the south-west corner of portion No. 13 of 50 acres." The letter is numbered "49-55, Alienation." That letter is dated the 8th July; there is a minute of the same date, signed by the Under Secretary, as follows:—"Approved under the circumstances explained,"—and then there are some other minutes, bringing the matter at last up to you? Yes; and there is also a minute to Mr. Rutter, who is the draughtsman in charge of the issue of Volunteer land orders, to withdraw it, and Mr. Rutter brought it to me in consequence—a minute to withdraw the instructions from the surveyor.

2502. With a view to return the land order? Yes, and with a view to withdraw the instructions to the surveyor to survey. I thought it was palpably objectionable. In the first place I did not think the Under Secretary had the right to return a Volunteer land order, after it had once been applied, without the approval of the Minister; and in the second place, I thought the grounds for the withdrawal were not satisfactory, it being very evident that a bad precedent might arise out of it—in this way: If A has a Volunteer land order, and B has a Volunteer land order, and A exercises his order over B's run, and B exercises his order over A's run, they can both get them back and apply them again. I therefore went to the Minister, Mr. Farnell, and asked him whether he had given instructions or authority to the Under Secretary to return Volunteer land orders, because if he had done so it only remained for him to withdraw the instructions from the surveyor, and he said, "Certainly not." I then asked him whether I should withdraw the instructions from the surveyor, and he said, "Certainly not." I declined to withdraw the instructions from the surveyor without the approval of the Minister. That is the whole case.

2503. And you wrote a minute upon that? Yes, as follows:—"I cannot return instructions to survey, by right of the Volunteer land order, without the authority of the Secretary for Lands." I did that with the Secretary for Lands' knowledge. I ascertained his opinion before I did it. But I may mention that the surveyor was in some way made acquainted with the fact of the Under Secretary's decision, and he returned the Volunteer land order, and it was then used again elsewhere.

2504. Mr. Ranken.] Then action was taken? It was taken because Mr. Christie was actually informed.

2505. President.] Have you the surveyor's minute? Yes.

2506. What is the date of it? 31st July, 1878. I wrote to the surveyor, Mr. Christie, to know how it was that he returned the Volunteer land order without instructions to do so; and he replied that Mr. Watt informed him that he had been allowed to withdraw his selection, and he returned the paper; and the Volunteer order was issued again.

2507. Mr. Ranken.] That was clearly against the opinion of the Minister? The opinion which the Minister expressed to me.

2508. And in violation of the rule of the department? I can hardly say a rule. The Under Secretary, I suppose, claims the right to do it; I think he ought not to do it.

2509. Is it not the rule that the district surveyors shall take their instructions from you. They receive their instructions from me.

2510. President.] There is a minute signed by Mr. Christy on the back of the application, dated 31st July, 1878, which reads thus: "This application is now returned to head quarters, Mr. Watt having informed me that the department has allowed the application to be withdrawn, and has been returned the certificate, in consequence of the land having been erroneously described"? "Yes, the error was that the land described was in another run."

R. D.
Fitzgerald,
Esq.
22 Jan., 1879.

2511. Where was Mr. Christie at that time? At Warialda.

2512. Then, on the first application by Messrs. Wilson and Ranken, on the 8th August, he writes on the 31st from Warialda, returning the papers? Yes, without instructions from the Survey Office.

2513. There is another minute, I see, as follows: "Declared void, certificate of the 9/7/78 returned to J. B. Watt, and land agent informed? That action would be in the Lands Office. The papers coming back from the surveyor would pass through the Lands. These papers did pass through the Lands, and they retained the Volunteer land order and sent it back to Mr. Watt."

2514. Mr. Christie's minute, which states that the Volunteer land order had been returned to Mr. Watt, is dated 9th July; Mr. Watt must therefore have got the order on the very next day? It appears so.

2515. Then, in point of fact, Mr. Watt had his Volunteer land order back before the papers reached you? Yes.

2516. The matter had been completed by giving him back the order before the papers reached you? Yes, the Volunteer land order did not come to the Survey Office.

2517. There is a minute by Mr. Stephen in reference to that—will you please read it? "The return of the instructions by the surveyor is of course a matter of no concern to this department; it was only referred to as the action which would naturally follow the cancellation of the Volunteer land order selection. The real purport of the Deputy Surveyor General's memo. is evidently that the action taken is incorrect, or perhaps unauthorized. I can only state as to the first, that Dr. Wilson, in leaving his letter with me, personally explained to me the facts, and that they appeared to me to be sufficient for a compliance with his request. I did not think it necessary to write them down; but in consequence of the unexpected action now taken, I have since asked him to repeat his statements in writing, which he has done. I beg also to submit that in taking the above course in a matter resting with the Ministerial department, I acted as I do in many like cases as head of this department, and therefore for the Minister, and I trust that the Minister will uphold my authority to deal with those cases. It is rather an unusual thing for an officer of another department to call in question the action of the head of the Minister's department on matters coming within the province of the latter to deal with. The necessary action in the case should be completed, I think." He further writes: "If there were any conflicting interests, either existing or anticipated, or any other objection appeared to the Survey department, and the same had been submitted, it would be a different matter. Nothing, however, of the sort is urged. The object, therefore, of the Deputy Surveyor General's minute can hardly be mistaken." I simply declined to withdraw the instructions given to the surveyor.

2518. Your minute on these papers is dated 26th July, 1878;—was that immediately after the conversation with Mr. Farnell? Yes, I think it was the same day.

2519. At the time you had the conversation with Mr. Farnell and obtained his opinion on the matter, and subsequently when you wrote the minute, there was nothing you could do, the Volunteer land order having been returned—in fact the thing had been done before Mr. Farnell had a chance of giving an opinion upon it? So it appears.

2520. With regard to Mr. Wilson's reasons referred to by Mr. Stephen—they were given verbally first, and then in a letter. The letter is as follows:—"I had been assured by Mr. W. Watt, brother of the Hon. J. B. Watt, that the selections had been inadvertently made on his neighbours's run through the manager of the station not being aware of the true position of the run boundary, and to prevent disagreeableness on the part of the lessee of the neighbouring run it was requested that the selection be cancelled, an act of grace by which no one could possibly be injured, and which no reasonable person would possibly object to." Although no inconvenience might arise to any one it might be a great convenience to the holder of the land order? Yes.

2521. Mr. Ranken.] And as a matter of public policy there is an objection? I think it a bad precedent, because I think these Volunteer land orders are used in every way they possibly can be used in an unsatisfactory way to defeat the intended action of the Land Act; and therefore I think it is quite possible—I do not say Mr. Watt did so—that one run-holder may use his Volunteer land orders over another's run, and vice versa, and by that means change them about.

2522. And use them several times? Yes; and on any grounds that could be put forward the Under Secretary is not the authority to return a Volunteer land order after it has been used without the Minister's authority, or unless the Minister agrees with him.

2523. Chairman.] At the time referred to neither you nor the Minister knew that the Volunteer land order had been returned? No; for, like that case of Mr. Landale's, once it became known that such a thing could be done, although in the first instance it might have been done innocently enough, it would then be done improperly, I mean as to the precedent of Landale's, which was followed by Shanahan and Jennings.

2524. I think I understood you to say you have no other matters to bring before the Commission? No.

2525. In the questions which you desire to be put to the Surveyor General you speak of letters written by the Under Secretary to the surveyors, controlling their action? Yes.

2526. Do you know of any case in which a telegram had been sent to a surveyor in the Mudgee district? I do not remember one.

2527. Giving him instructions with regard to the survey of lands for a gentleman in that neighbourhood? I do not remember; I think the Surveyor General will be able to tell you. I think there was some difference of opinion between the Under Secretary and the Surveyor General with regard to some cases of Mr. Bayly's.

2528. That is the same N. P. Bayly who had so many cases of which we have been speaking? I know there were others, and I think it was probably a case of Bayly's on which they originated. But it happened at least twice with the Surveyor General, because the Under Secretary apologised to the Surveyor General twice for doing it.

2529. You do not recollect the circumstances yourself? No, I think it was on Bayly's cases.

FRIDAY,

FRIDAY, 24 JANUARY, 1879.

Present:—

MR. ABBOTT, | MR. RANKEN.

R. P. ABBOTT, ESQ., PRESIDENT, IN THE CHAIR.

Philip Francis Adams, Esq., Surveyor General, was called in and examined:—

P. F. Adams, Esq. 2530. President. You are aware that the Deputy Surveyor General has been examined by the Commission? Yes.

24 Jan., 1879. 2531. In the course of Mr. Fitzgerald's examination he desired that we should put certain questions to you with reference to matters upon which he was examined, and those questions I now propose to put to you as he desired? Very good.

2532. The first question is: Did the Under Secretary write to some of your surveyors in cases in which friends of his were interested? He wrote to my surveyors, and that I objected to.

2533. Can you tell us the name of the person whose business was the subject of Mr. Stephen's letter? Mr. Bayly.

2534. Mr. N. P. Bayly, of Mudgee? Yes.

2535. Did you require the Under Secretary to apologise for having done so? Not exactly to apologise; but he made the necessary amende which was due to me. I can hardly call it an apology.

2536. The next question is: Did the Under Secretary apologise? I do not know that it could be called an apology. Well, perhaps you may call it an apology. We will say he did apologise. You will please bear in mind that I did not ask him for an apology; but he replied to my representations in a satisfactory way. I did not ask Mr. Stephen to apologise, and therefore I do not wish that word to appear if you can help it.

2537. I use the word because I find it in the question which Mr. Fitzgerald desired we should put to you. You can, of course, state the matter in any way you please? Mr. Stephen made an explanation to me which I considered satisfactory. He made the necessary amende, and satisfied me that he would not do what I objected to again.

2538. After that did Mr. Stephen again write to your surveyors? I think he did on one occasion, but he did not do it in the same spirit which he wrote on the first occasion, and I took no notice of it more than just to remind him that he had done it. Mr. Stephen immediately said, "I am sorry; I did not think of it," or something of that sort, and I adopted that explanation directly.

2539. Do you recollect the name of the person on whose business he wrote the second time? I do not recollect. I think the surveyor was Mr. Deering, but I am not sure.

2540. You do not recollect the name of the person whose land Mr. Deering was surveying? No; I do not.

2541. Mr. Fitzgerald's next question is:—Did the Under Secretary again apologise on your threatening to bring the matter before the Minister? No; he did not apologise, because I did not request him to do so; but in calling him to account for it the second time I told him to recollect what had been said before, and he admitted that he was wrong, and that it should not have been done. I believe his action on the second occasion was merely an oversight.

2542. Mr. Fitzgerald's next question is:—Did you keep those papers as a protection? I have the papers, I believe; I think I put them by; but I have not seen them for years.

2543. You put them by as a protection? I kept them for that purpose. I never destroy papers, especially papers of that character.

2544. Mr. Fitzgerald's next question is:—Did you at any time send for any of the draughtsmen and tell them that in any case where Mr. Stephen, the Under Secretary, took an interest they were to be particularly careful as they would be led into difficulties? That refers to the case in which I brought him to account. The second case I think nothing of, but on the first occasion I was very much annoyed by the action which the Under Secretary had taken, and I sent for the draftsman who was in charge of the branch at the time—a junior, I believe he was.

2545. Do you recollect what his name was? No, I do not; but my impression is that he was a young man, a junior acting for his senior, because subsequently to that I made inquiries from the senior and he could not recollect anything which had occurred. That confirms my impression that it was one of the juniors who was acting at the time. I pointed out to him that if, as I expressed it, he saw anything being pushed with improper haste from the Lands Department, without the Minister's direct orders, he was not to take the responsibility of acting himself, but he was to let me know. I was very much annoyed at the time, in consequence of the action the Under Secretary had taken, and I said that which I should not have written, and would not have said had I known that the matter was to have been brought up in this way. But at the same time what I have said I cannot deny.

2546. And what you have just repeated is the effect of what you have said? Yes.

2547. The next question is whether Mr. Fitzgerald did not suggest to you, as a friend of the Under Secretary, that you should point out to him the seriousness of the evidence he (Mr. Fitzgerald) would be compelled to give; and to try and persuade the Under Secretary not to press the matter to an issue? To what period do you refer?

2548. The question appears to have reference to the matters referred to this Commission by the Minister for Lands, to an assertion made by the Deputy Surveyor General in regard to the Under Secretary which he was called upon to substantiate. The question is whether Mr. Fitzgerald did not suggest to you, as a friend of the Under Secretary, to point out to him the seriousness of the evidence he would be compelled to give, and to try and persuade the Under Secretary not to press the matter to an issue? Mr. Fitzgerald certainly did tell me of the importance, of the serious character of the complaint that he was making, and I told the Under Secretary that I considered it a very serious thing. The Under Secretary was perfectly aware of the serious character of it, and I wished if possible to prevent it from coming to such an issue as it has come to; but at no time did I ever expect that it would have gone beyond the Minister.

2549. Mr. Fitzgerald's next question was whether he did not show you one or two of the cases, in order that you might be in a position to state the matter to the Under Secretary? Mr. Fitzgerald did so.

2550. Do you recollect what cases they were? One was a case in regard to the leasing of a guano island, near Lord Howe's Island. I do not now recollect what the other case was; but he did show me another.

2551. The next question is whether, when you informed him that the Under Secretary required to obtain the the papers, Mr. Fitzgerald did not tell you that you could have the papers and show them to the Under Secretary, but that you must retain them in your keeping? Yes; decidedly.

2552. How long ago is that? That occurred after the Minister for Lands had decided to send the case to this Commission, but the precise time I could not say.

2553. Do you desire to say anything further about the matter? No; except perhaps this, that in the conversations I had with the Under Secretary as to the charges made by Mr. Fitzgerald, he appeared to consider that he had not done anything which he ought not to have done. He justified himself to his own satisfaction throughout as never having done anything that he might not have done.

2554. Mr. Stephen considered that he had not gone beyond his authority,—that he had not exceeded his functions? No; that he had not gone beyond his province in any way.

2555. Nor that he had not gone out of his usual course? I could not say as to that. Whatever may have been the result of his action, my opinion is that he never for a moment considered that he was doing anything wrong.

2556. You do not think that Mr. Stephen thought that he was doing anything wrong? I do not think he did.

2557. Have you formed any opinion on the subject yourself? Yes; that he acted very foolishly.

2558. In this particular case that you know of? In any case in which he allowed himself to be led into giving precedence to anyone. That is a thing I have been very careful not to do.

2559. Mr. Ranken.] Do you refer to Lord Howe's Island case, or to other matters? To the case in which Mr. Fitzgerald objects to his action and charges him with favouritism.

2560. President.] With taking an interest in the cases of his friends, and in this case acting as a special pleader? Precisely. In this case—although I cannot in any way defend the Under Secretary—I do not believe that he did anything dishonorable in his own opinion; that he did not do anything with an evil or improper intention; that he did not act with any corrupt intention.

2561. I do not know that Mr. Fitzgerald ever suggested any corrupt action? Mr. Fitzgerald certainly never suggested anything of that sort to me, and I do not believe that he ever attributed anything more to the Under Secretary than exceptional good nature.

2562. Than exceptional dealing with the business of Mr. Stephen's friends? Yes.

2563. And with pressing on such cases; with having things done under these circumstances that would not be done otherwise than in the ordinary course of procedure? It was with giving precedence to his friends' business. The only misunderstanding I ever had with the Under Secretary on business resulted from what I considered this giving precedence to his friends' cases.

2564. In point of fact, allowing himself to be made use of? If you like to put it so.

2565. Is not that the mildest way to put it? I suppose it amounts to that.

2566. Do you recollect what was the nature of Mr. Stephen's interference in Mr. Bayly's case? The surveyor in question, Mr. John Mann, made a complaint to me. I cannot exactly give you the particulars. You would get the information better from him.

2567. Made a complaint to what effect? I cannot now exactly recollect what the effect of the complaint was; but he felt very seriously on the subject.

2568. Was it in writing, or was it verbal? Verbal.

2569. Was it because of the Under Secretary's interference that Mr. Mann felt sore, or was it because of any consequences to himself? Mr. Mann complained of the unpleasant position in which he found himself on a certain occasion where instructions had been suddenly transferred or taken away from him. I cannot remember the exact cause of the complaint.

2570. Was it in that way that it first came to your knowledge? No. I cannot precisely say whether Mr. Mann came to me direct or some time afterwards; but it came to my knowledge very nearly about the same time that Mr. Mann made the complaint.

2571. Was that immediately after Mr. Stephen's communication to him? It was after Mr. Stephen communicated with him.

2572. Can you say, speaking from memory, what direction it was that Mr. Stephen gave? No.

2573. Do you believe that the purport of it was to go on with Mr. Bayly's work, to pay special attention to it; or what was the effect of it? I should not like to risk an answer, simply because the fact occurred so long ago, and I might mislead you.

2574. You say you have the papers in both these cases. Would there be any difficulty in producing them to the Commission? In both cases?

2575. Yes; the other being Mr. Deering's case? I do not think I could find the papers in that case. The paper that I referred to as having put away, I could find that.

2576. Mr. Ranken.] Does that embrace the correspondence with the surveyor? I do not think so. As far as I recollect, the only paper I kept was the non-official paper. I do not know where the official papers in the case are. I suppose they at Records, or Mr. Fitzgerald may have them.

2577. President.] I understood from Mr. Fitzgerald that he thought you had them? I do not think so. It is not at all likely that I should have recorded papers in the place where I keep semi-official documents. I am certain almost that I have no recorded papers put away. But in this case the important paper for me was not an official paper, and I know I put it away.

2578. Would the paper you have give us sufficient information to enable a search for the official papers connected with the case? I think so.

2579. Will you try and obtain the paper? Yes; if you will suspend the examination for a few minutes I can go and get it. (Witness fetched the paper from his office.)

2580. You produce the paper referring to the case of Mr. Bayly, in which Mr. Stephen interfered? Yes.

2581. Will you be good enough to state the contents of it? Yes; the Under Secretary wrote this minute on the 7th of October, 1874, in reference to papers registered under the head, "Alienation," and numbered 74/12,075. He says, "The enclosed papers were borrowed by me a few days ago from the Surveyor General. I much regret that my telegram to Mr. District-Surveyor Bolton, of 15th April last, requesting that he would instruct Mr. L.-S. Mann to measure at once certain lands applied for, Mr. N. P. Bayly has been the cause of some misunderstanding as well as inconvenience. I am unable to call to mind the exact circumstances under which this telegram was sent by me direct to the district surveyor instead of referring the matter in the usual course to the Surveyor General. My belief is that Mr. Adams happened to be away at the time, and that, under the impression that Mr. Mann was in the locality, and willing to expedite the survey for Mr. Bayly, I sent the telegram off, and forgot, in the press

- P. F. Adams, Esq.

- press of business, to communicate what I had done to the Survey Department. If this action on my part bears the semblance of a wish to interfere with the officers under the supervision and control of the Surveyor General, I can only accept my regret for it, and feel sure that he will accept my assurance that the mistake, which I freely admit I have made, was simply the result of precipitate action, arising out of a natural desire to oblige a friend who represented to me through his agent that the early sale of the land was of great importance to him. Of course I need not say that such a mistake is not likely to happen again." My reply to that was, I find, as follows:—"I can only accept this explanation on the understanding that the Under Secretary for Lands gives me his assurance that he will refrain in future from interference with my officers, unless by the direct authority of the Minister. Since remonstrating with him, previously, another instance of interference has come under my notice—(74-6,961, Miscellaneous)—in which case my surveyor, Mr. Anderson, has been telegraphed to to return papers in an arbitration case, and my chief draftsman requested to issue them to another surveyor. The Under Secretary having the records of both departments under his control, has the power of directing action without any knowledge, and I am at a loss to know to what extent the interference complained of may have obtained. I am, however, determined to stop it, and unless I receive the necessary assurance, I shall bring the matter under the notice of the honorable the Minister for Lands.—P.F.A., 8th October." In reply to that Mr. Stephen wrote next day as follows: "I willingly give the Surveyor General my assurance that no instructions will in future be issued by me to his officers, unless by the express authority of the Minister.—W.W.S." Below that again, on the same day, Mr. Stephen also added this memorandum: "The further case alluded to by the Surveyor General, I have a distinct recollection of. The papers were not before me, and I was under the impression that the usual steps for appraisal had been initiated, and that it was in Mr. L.-S. Anderson's capacity, as appraiser, the telegram was being sent. I now find it was not so. The request to the chief draftsman I certainly never saw. It appears to have been sent irregularly to him, direct from the Miscellaneous Branch." I think I have said that Mr. Bayly's was the first case. On the perusal of these minutes, however, I find that it was not the first case. It appears the first case was that numbered 74-6,961, Miscellaneous Branch, in which Mr. Licensed-Surveyor Anderson had been referred to. Having read over the papers now, the first time for many years, if any discrepancies in my previous evidence occur they have arisen from defect of memory.
2582. There was another case, in which Mr. Deering's name occurred? Yes.
2583. Do you recollect the date of that? No, I could not trust my memory as to when that occurred.
2584. Nor as to the circumstances? Nor as to the circumstances.
2585. Do you recollect whether anything of a similar nature has occurred since? Nothing of any importance that I can recollect.
2586. Your position in the department necessarily prevents you from coming into collision with the Under Secretary? Certainly. Either he or I must step very much out of our line to interfere with each other.
2587. How is it with Mr. Fitzgerald? Everything that Mr. Fitzgerald writes goes to the Under Secretary, who can please himself whether he refers it back or not. He has command of the papers.
2588. Although the papers involve professional questions the Under Secretary can still deal with them? Yes. The professional matter in most cases is simply routine work, and does not affect the administrative character of the questions at issue.
2589. Mr. Ranken.] Has he to determine what lands are to be sold, and what not? That, I take it, is an administrative question.
2590. Is that a question on which collision is likely to occur? Not so much as upon the administration of the land law.
2591. President.] Do you consider that it comes within Mr. Fitzgerald's province to give his opinion upon points of the land law? Most decidedly.
2593. How long has Mr. Fitzgerald occupied his present appointment? The date of his present appointment was January 1, 1873.
2594. You have been in the department since 1858? Yes.
2595. Mr. Ranken.] Was Mr. Fitzgerald in the department previous to his appointment as Deputy Surveyor General? Yes; the date of his first appointment was 1856. He is one year my senior. My appointment was in 1857, and my first appointment to the salaried staff was in 1857.
2596. President.] During all that time you have necessarily been in almost daily communication with Mr. Fitzgerald, more especially since you have been Surveyor General? Yes.
2597. Do you think, judging from his acts, that Mr. Fitzgerald's inclinations lead him to interfere where he did not consider his duty? I do not; on the contrary, Mr. Fitzgerald is a man who minds his own business as well as any man could do.
2598. Mr. Ranken.] You consider that it is clearly within Mr. Fitzgerald's regular duty to make such suggestions as he thinks fit upon the administration of the Land law as it comes before him in the cases which pass through his hands? Certainly I do.
2599. President.] And his opinion on such subjects you would consider valuable? Very valuable.
2600. On all points connected with the administration of the Land law? Yes; I will say the most valuable in the department. I have the very highest opinion of Mr. Fitzgerald as an administrator.
2601. His experience and knowledge of the working of the law is great? Yes.
2602. You think that if Mr. Fitzgerald gave an opinion in that department the following of it would be to the interest of the public? Certainly; and in accordance with my desire as head of the department.
2603. You would attach as much importance to Mr. Fitzgerald's opinion as to that of any man in the Lands and Survey Departments? Quite as much.
2604. There is a case here into which we have been inquiring. It has reference to a Volunteer land order, which was tendered by Mr. J. B. Watt, and afterwards application was made that it should be returned for reasons stated in these papers. The application for the return of the order is dated 8th July, 1878, and on the 31st of July there is a memorandum signed by W. H. Christie, who, I presume, is one of your surveyors? He is a licensed surveyor.

2605. He states here—this application is now returned to head-quarters, Mr. Watt having informed me that the department has allowed the application to be withdrawn, and has returned the certificate in consequence of the land having been erroneously described? I do not recollect the case.
2606. Here also is the application upon which you will see a minute by Mr. Fitzgerald? Yes.
2607. Was it regular that Mr. Licensed-Surveyor Christie should send the papers back for the reasons stated there? It was not strictly regular; but if he derived his information from a trustworthy source I should not complain of him for taking that course, because unless the paper was returned on good grounds it would not be received.
2608. But it was not regular? It was not strictly regular to do it, except upon the authority of the office.
2609. Mr. Ranken.] In this case he took Mr. Watt's letter as a sufficient warrant for his action? My confidence in Mr. Christie is such as leads me to believe that he would never return an application except on good grounds.
2610. President.] If the Under Secretary had made the representation to Mr. Christie that Mr. Watt is supposed to have made, would you not have found fault with him for setting your surveyor in motion? Certainly.
2611. But not with your surveyor for acting on it? No, if Mr. Stephen did it with Ministerial authority, the Minister's authority overrides my instructions and everything else.
2612. Do you see this notation on the papers—"Declared void 9/7/78. Returned to Mr. J. B. Watt, and land agent informed"? Yes.
2613. The instructions for the survey of the land taken up under that Volunteer order, do you think that the return of that certificate was a matter upon which Mr. Fitzgerald might properly express an opinion as to the propriety of the action taken? Do you mean to ask if I would uphold Mr. Fitzgerald in criticising the action taken upon that paper?
2614. Yes? Certainly I would.
2615. The Under Secretary had directed the return of the land order, but Mr. Fitzgerald declined to withdraw the instructions to survey unless upon the authority of the Minister? If Mr. Fitzgerald saw that an error had been committed, or that an irregularity had taken place, he did right to draw attention to it.
2616. It came within the legitimate scope of his duties to do that? I think so; but I may add that I do not think his duties have ever been thoroughly defined; or, if they have, I do not recollect it.
2617. You use your own judgment? We interpret our own duty, and use our own judgment in the public interest. We act on precedents, and Ministerial authority where specially necessary.
2618. In the absence of precedent you act upon your own judgment? Yes, or obtain Ministerial authority if circumstances appear to render that course desirable.
2619. Mr. Ranken.] Do you think that Mr. Fitzgerald had good grounds for making this remark: "I cannot direct the return of the instructions"? Certainly I do.
2620. It does not strike you as having been done from mere caprice or from a spirit of opposition to Mr. Stephen? No.
2621. President.] You think that Mr. Fitzgerald had a right to suggest that the return of the certificate should have been made by the Minister and not by the Under Secretary? As I read Mr. Fitzgerald's minute, he considered that something irregular had been done which he would not be a party to without the Minister's authority.
2622. The application for the return of the land order was dated the 8th of July, but the matter does not come under Mr. Fitzgerald's notice until the 26th of July? That is rather quick.
2623. The certificate, it appears, was returned to Mr. Watt on the 9th, the day after the date of the application, and when the papers reached Mr. Fitzgerald on the 26th the whole business was in point of fact complete. Do you consider that a proper way in dealing with the matter? —
2624. The land order was returned the day after it was applied for;—was not that prompt action as compared with the usual routine? It was very prompt indeed.
2625. It was a promptness not usual? Very unusual; it was unusually quick.
2626. What is your opinion of the quickness of it as compared with other cases? I cannot account for the extraordinary haste in which the case was dealt with.
2627. Mr. Ranken.] Is it your opinion that the action taken in this case might produce a crop of abuses? I am hardly in a position to answer such an important question as that. It is out of my province.
2628. President.] Have you not thought about the propriety or otherwise of returning these land orders and stopping surveys without reference to the Minister? I would not allow a Volunteer land order to be returned, if I knew it, without strong ground shown, any more than I would think of allowing a conditional purchaser to change his selection without strong reasons. My opinion is that Volunteer land orders and conditional purchases are very similar under the law. No case, however, has come under my particular province, and I therefore feel some difficulty about giving you a direct answer.
2629. Having in view the present state of arrears in the business of the department, does it not strike you as extraordinary that this matter should be dealt with pretty well on the very day it was received? Yes; it is unusual haste.
2630. And the course you think would be objectionable? If it has had undue preference. I do not say that it has, but the dates lead to the supposition that it has.
2631. The reason the return of this order was asked for was the fact that the description included land comprised in two runs. If two run-holders were provided with Volunteer land orders, and if the course of allowing them to be returned as was done here, would they not be able to peacock their runs? Certainly.
2632. Mr. Ranken.] To pick out all the frontages? Yes.
2633. President.] In view of the precedent afforded by this case, would it not be very difficult to prevent such a course from being pursued? I do not think this case would be likely to become a precedent. Such a case of returning a Volunteer order might be allowed under exceptional circumstances, but this is not a case which could possibly pass into a precedent.
2634. Why not? As it appears to me it is an irregular case.
2635. Can you say whether Mr. Stephen had the power to act for the Minister in returning a Volunteer land order? He might assume that power, but I think it would be most injudicious if he did.
2636. You do not think he has the power to do so? I doubt it very much, but it entirely depends upon what his instructions from the Minister are. The Minister may delegate very large powers to him.
2637. This case does not appear to have been submitted to the Minister at all? Indeed.

TUESDAY, 28 JANUARY, 1879.

Present:—

MR. ABBOTT,

MR. RANKEN.

R. P. ABBOTT, ESQ., PRESIDENT, IN THE CHAIR.

W. W. Stephen, Esq., was called in and examined:—

- W. W. Stephen, Esq. 2638. President.] You have applied to be further examined, and we desire now to give you the opportunity of supplementing the evidence you have already given as you desire? I cannot but be aware from letters which I have seen written, and what I have heard, that there have been statements made to the Commission about me which are not at all complimentary, and I thought I should in all fairness have an opportunity of being heard in regard to them. I believe some cases have been brought before the Commission, but, with one or two exceptions, I do not know what they are.
2639. We have every desire to give you an opportunity of stating your view of the matter? There were one or two papers I should like to have brought with me bearing upon the relations which exist between me and the Deputy Surveyor General, but as I did not expect to be called to-day, having read your summons to attend as for to-morrow, I have not brought them, and in fact up to the present moment I have been too busy to look them out. I may mention that there was a matter laid before the Commission—a copy of an application by Mr. Biggs for employment—and there was a further memo. which I wished to put with the correspondence, but I could not do so because it was kept by Mr. Moriarty, to whom I sent it.
2640. We have had certain cases put before us, and the papers are now in our possession. If you desire it you can have an opportunity of looking into these papers before you give any further evidence? I am quite prepared to answer any questions now if I can only see the papers.
2641. Before going into these papers I may remind you that it was at your own request we summoned you to-day, under the impression that you desired to give further evidence? I should have been glad to have given further evidence, but I have not been able to collect the papers I wanted to refer to, but I thought I might be asked some questions with regard to the matters which have recently been brought before you.
2642. You yourself asked to be examined again, and I took it for granted that you would have come prepared with the additional evidence you desired to give? The chief object I had in making the application was to be in a position to give my version in the matters brought before you by the Deputy Surveyor General.
2643. The first case I put into your hands is that of a Volunteer land order selection by Mr. N. P. Bayly, registered 77/1,820 alienation? I remember this case.
2644. The point in that case was the application of a Volunteer land order to a proclaimed gold-field? Yes. The question is simply this: I saw Mr. Fitzgerald's minute originally, and I am aware that he wishes to make out that it is a case which I specially advocated. I certainly went into the case very carefully and very fully, because I wished to see what I considered justice done to Mr. Bayly. There was first the technical difficulty, that he selected the land under the fourteenth section, and the selection was passed by the Survey Department as by everyone else, until Mr. Farnell raised the point that the Volunteer Act required that the land should be taken up under the 13th section. It was that technical difficulty which deprived Mr. Bayly from getting the land, notwithstanding that all the conditions of the 13th section are similar to those of the 14th. I regarded the objection as a technical one, and knowing that the Survey Department were against my views in the matter I wrote this special minute. I see no harm in it, and should probably do the same thing again if I had the same case to-morrow.
2645. You saw nothing contrary to the law in the matter? I state in my memo.: "If the strict letter of the law is carried out in this case, the selection under the Volunteer land order should be declared void, but there are features in connection with this matter which I feel it right to bring under the notice of the Minister." Everything I did was plain and straightforward, and is committed to paper. I mention that simply because I am aware there was a paper by Mr. Fitzgerald to the effect that I specially advocated the cases of some persons—cases where I took a personal interest. What I did is shown by the papers, and is to be seen by the Survey Department, or anybody else who likes to read them.
2646. Is there any minute on these papers by Mr. Fitzgerald? No; but the papers went to him as a matter of course. I know that they went to him, because I wrote: "Cancel the Volunteer land order selection as directed; then send to Surveyor General for promulgation of the decision of the Minister." I do not see what the Survey Department or the Deputy Surveyor General has got to do with my action.
2647. Mr. Ranken.] Did the Minister overrule your recommendation? I do not know that I made a distinct recommendation. I pointed out that conditional purchasers had taken up land illegally, and had been allowed to remain in occupation for years, until the necessary legal action could be taken to remedy the defect; and I stated that if that had been done in the case of conditional purchasers, where an Act of Parliament was required, the same principle of action might be applied to cases like Mr. Bayly's, where it only required a legal notice to remedy the defect. Mr. Garrett had told Mr. Bayly that all these Volunteer order selections were to stand, and I knew that Mr. Edward Allan, who is Mr. Bayly's agent and a relative, knew all about it also; and I did take up the case specially, as I often do.
2648. The difficulty was about taking up land under a Volunteer order on a gold-field? The Volunteer Act states that land open for selection under the 13th section were open to be taken up under Volunteer land orders; and I am certain that this matter of land being within a gold-field was never thought of. I considered that Mr. Bayly had a fair claim to consideration, but I was overruled. This is one of the cases which Mr. Fitzgerald says I specially pleaded for my friends, and I say his assertion is perfectly untrue on the face of it.
2649. President.] Did Mr. Bayly finally get the land? No; Mr. Farnell decided that the conditional purchase of Mr. Dives, which conflicted with Mr. Bayly's Volunteer order selection, must stand because Mr. Dives's application was legal, while Mr. Bayly's Volunteer land order selection was not legal, on the technical ground I have stated. Mr. Bayly had a great many Volunteer order selections. He got some, but he did not get others.
2650. Mr. Ranken.] There is some reference to a promise given by Mr. Garrett in regard to the partial cancellation of this gold-field reserve, as far as these Volunteer order selections were concerned;—do you know anything of it? There was some such promise. 2651.

2651. Was it in writing? I cannot say; but if I recollect rightly, it was contained in a postscript to an official letter written by me to Mr. Bayly.

W. W.
Stephen, Esq.
28 Jan., 1879.

2652. Did that amount to an admission of the full right of Mr. Bayly to use these Volunteer land orders in future on that reserve? I should not say for the future.

2653. It was meant to confirm something which had taken place? Yes; Mr. Bayly had taken up a lot of Volunteer order selections.

2654. Could that letter be produced? Yes; I will send for a copy of it now. Mr. Garrett told Mr. Bayly, as far as I can recollect, in my presence, that the point was so very technical that it should not apply in any case, or that he would make them all right for him, or some words to that effect. There was another ground why Mr. Bayly's purchases should stand, because the Minister had approved of action being taken to admit of Mr. Bayly's selection standing before the conditional purchase was made. I think it had reference to selections made antecedent to the date of that selection, not that the Minister would condone every subsequent irregularity, although I think Mr. Bayly thought the thing was such a trifling matter that it would be allowed.

2655. Will you now look at these papers which have reference to another Volunteer land order selection made by Mr. Bayly, and are registered 76-10,455 Miscellaneous? This, as far as I can recollect, seems to me to be about the same sort of case.

2656. Are you aware what Mr. Bayly's object was in making these small purchases all over this gold-field reserve? I suppose he wanted to secure as much land as he could, in the same way as other improvers on gold-fields, who, in virtue of miners' rights and improvements, purchase as many 2-acre lots as they can.

2657. Did it never occur to you to inquire whether it was not to thwart conditional purchase? No.

2658. Were these selections made on Mr. Bayly's run? I think it was on his run.

2659. It would not be within a pastoral lease? I think it was.

2660. A yearly holding? I think it was within land held on a five years' lease. It was on a part of the Gulgong Gold-field reserve.

2661. Does a proclaimed gold-field ever form portion of a pastoral lease? Yes, it often does. There is some regulation to the effect that so much of the pastoral lease may be suspended as may be required for use by the miners.

2662. President.] Do you see any decision by the Minister on these papers? I see a request by me to the Surveyor General that to save delay the papers might go at once to the surveyor for measurement, instead of incurring the delay of returning them to the department after notation in the books at Mudgee and then again sending them to the surveyor. To which the Surveyor General said there was no objection, except that Volunteer land orders are not dated, or selection made at the local office. I see there is here the minute of the Executive Council revoking the reserve to admit of the selections standing—the course which I proposed to take in the other case—revoking so much as would exclude the 50-acre portions applied for. There is Mr. Garrett's approval to a minute of mine; and it was sent directly afterwards to the Surveyor General. Mr. Garrett's minute is dated the 17th October, 1876, and I marked it to the Surveyor General next day.

2663. Mr. Ranken.] That is not an approval of what had been done? It is an approval of a memo. of mine.

2664. President.] What was your memo? My memo. was: "Mr. Bayly's Volunteer land orders were located at a time when applications used (erroneously as it afterwards appeared) to be received for lands within gold-fields, open only to conditional purchase under the fourteenth clause. As Mr. Bayly had, after his applications were passed, commenced to improve the portions taken up by him, it was arranged as above stated, that a sufficient area of the Gulgong gold-field northerly extension should, if possible, be revoked. This does not, however, appear to have been done, although from Mr. Rutter's memo., on enclosed paper, I was under the impression that it had. Submitted that the above course should be now taken with as little further delay as possible." That was approved by the Minister, and sent by me to the Surveyor General the next day.

2665. Has the Minister written any minute himself? No; he has written "approved," which signifies general concurrence with the minute of the Under Secretary.

2666. Mr. Ranken.] It did not occur to you that Mr. Bayly's applications were made for any other purpose than to consolidate his property—that they were made for the purpose of spoiling the country for conditional purchases? I simply thought that he was taking as much advantage as the law allowed him. If he chose to buy Volunteer land orders he was entitled to get the same advantage out of them as other people. I thought he was getting a good deal.

2667. In violation of the 13th clause? That point was not raised until numbers of previous applications had been passed.

2668. As there had been former abuses did you consider that further encroachments in the law should be condoned? Not condoned; that they should be legalized by revoking the proclamation creating the reserve, which has been done. It had been done in dozens of other cases, and I saw no particular objection in my recommending that it should be done for Mr. Bayly.

2669. President.] Do you see any minute among the papers directing that any letter should be written to Mr. Bayly on the subject? No, I cannot say that I do; but if you write a minute and it is approved by the Minister, the natural consequence is that the parties concerned are written to and informed of the decision. Here is a minute of mine, upon which Mr. Bayly was written to, approved by Mr. Farnell.

2670. What is the date of that? The 16th of September, I think; and here I see is a copy of the letter to which I referred, and which I sent for a little while ago. I see there is a copy with the papers.

2671. This is the letter you spoke of in referring to the other papers? Yes, it bears date the 16th of September, 1874.

2672. Whom was it written to? To Mr. N. P. Bayly. It is in these words: "With reference to my interview with you a few days since, on the subject of certain selections made by you in virtue of several Volunteer land orders, I am directed to apprise you that under the report of Mr. Warden Johnston the Minister for Lands has approved of that portion of the Gulgong gold-field reserve which embraced the land applied for by you being revoked with a view to the selections referred to being allowed to stand. (2.) I am to add, that the local Crown Lands Agent has been apprised to the foregoing effect." Then there is this postscript: "P.S.—I am to add that all other selections made by you in virtue of Volunteer land orders, situated within the said gold-field, will also be accepted." That is the postscript I alluded to; and Mr. Bayly has made a great point of it. I have frequently referred to it.

- W. W. Stephen, Esq.
28 Jan., 1879.
2673. Mr. Bayly has based subsequent applications on that? I think he did; I cannot be certain.
2674. You have yourself referred to it in other cases? I do not know that I have referred to it for subsequent action.
2675. You have referred to it as a precedent? Yes; as a precedent in one sort of way. Some of the selections taken up were re-taken up, the first applications having been illegal at the time they were made.
2676. Had anything been done to make them legal in the meantime? They were made legal after the revocation of the gold-fields reserve.
2677. Mr. Ranken.] The conditional acceptance of all future selections seems to have been provided for in that postscript, whether they were in the resumed portion of the reserve or not? —
2678. President.] What was the date of the decision of the Minister in consequence of which this letter was written? I do not know. The papers in the other cases appear to have got mixed up. There may have been no written decision; but I distinctly recollect Mr. Garrett telling Mr. Bayly what I have stated in my presence.
2679. Mr. Ranken.] Is there any tracing which would show the way in which these Volunteer selections were used on the reserve? No; I have nothing to do with tracings. Here is a description, and the proclamation revoking different portions of the reserve.
2680. You have no idea of the relative positions of the land? No; I have nothing to do with that at all. I only deal with the administrative part of the question.
2681. President.] If you will turn to the Blue Book, you will see that at the time that letter was written, in September, 1874, Mr. Garrett had never been a Minister of the Crown? No.
2682. Then his dealing with the case must have been subsequent to that? I cannot recollect the name of the Minister; I thought it was Mr. Garrett.
2683. What was the decision upon which that letter was written? I cannot find it in these papers. It does not appear to be here.
2684. There is no decision authorizing the writing of that letter? The letter must have been written to carry out the decision; but I cannot find the decision here. Here is a minute of mine on the subject: "Under the recommendation of Mr. Warden Johnson, the portion of the Gulgong Gold-field Reserve, herein described, may be revoked. This will enable the selections made by Mr. Bayly, under Volunteer orders to stand, and prevent any necessity for special legislation as proposed in the first instance by the Minister, with a view to remedy the error committed in passing these selections."
2685. What is the date of that? 16th September, 1874. Upon that there is this minute by Mr. Farnell, "In order to deal satisfactorily with this matter, the report of the district surveyor had better be obtained." The report of the district surveyor was obtained, and he says here: "As there are now no diggers working in the locality, and having in view the large amount of contiguous land that has been alienated by auction, I cannot see any objection to the revocation of the land referred to." I cannot find the exact minute upon which that letter was written. There is no doubt it was written by authority, because all the previous action shows that it was authorised. These papers in coming to the Commission have not passed through me. They have been brought here without reference to me at all. The Commission never applied to me for them. They were asked for and obtained by Mr. Fitzgerald, at Records, without my authority.
2686. The Commission have not applied for the papers to anybody? These papers were taken away from Records by Mr. Fitzgerald, without asking me for them. You agreed at the first day of meeting that any papers required by the Commission should be obtained from me by letter; but instead of that the Deputy Surveyor, without any reference to me, got the papers from Records and brought them here.
2687. Do you think that the Commission have in any way departed from any arrangement made with you? I am not complaining of the action of the Commission at all.
2688. You do not consider that there is any breach of arrangement on the part of the Commission? I say there has been a breach of etiquette and custom on the part of Mr. Fitzgerald; and you accepted them from him instead of from me.
2689. Would you expect us to refuse to receive any papers from the Deputy Surveyor General which he considered important; would you have us refuse such information? I say it is a piece of great impertinence on Mr. Fitzgerald's part. It is a most cowardly proceeding on the part of a brother officer.
2690. Mr. Fitzgerald has been called upon by you to substantiate certain statements made by him with reference to you? Yes; but he might have let me know what he was bringing, and not have brought these old cases without letting me know.
2691. There is no difficulty on the part of the Commission about your having the papers, if you wish to examine them more closely. They are quite at your disposal? No; I am quite content to take them as I find them.
2692. The next papers to which we ask your attention are registered 78-7,444 Alienation—papers in which Mr. White is concerned? I think I know this case very well, by the look of it. I do not see anything particular in it myself.
2693. What is the case? It is an application on the part of Mr. James White by Messrs. J. F. and H. White, under the 31st clause, in virtue of intended improvements. It was made on the 2nd of October, 1875, and he made his declaration, saying that the improvements had been effected under the regulations as to the 31st clause.
2694. Of the Act of 1875? Yes.
2695. How was that case dealt with? In a very irregular way, I consider, by the Survey Department, for this reason, for it took the Survey Department from October 2, 1875, until the 19th of January, 1877, to say that the 5-mile square test did not apply. Mr. White made his declaration after the land had been improved, and upon his declaration there is this recommendation, signed by R.G.P. for the Surveyor General:—"Applicant having improved the land to the extent of £1 per acre, might he not be informed that he can apply for it under 2nd clause?" Mr. White was informed of that in November, 1877, and in three months after that, because he did not take advantage of this option of purchasing under the second clause, a draftsman in the Survey Office, without any reference to me or to the Minister, sends on the land for sale by auction. On the 29th of June, 1878, Mr. White wrote in to the department to say that he saw the land was advertised for sale by auction, which he had applied for under the 31st clause, and upon which he had made improvements to the full extent required. Mr. White represented that it was unfair that the land with his improvements should be put up for auction sale because he was not compelled to buy. It took fifteen or eighteen months for the Survey Department to find out that the 5-mile square test test did not apply. On Mr. White's letter I wrote:—"May be withdrawn from sale according to decision upon papers, 78/3,032. The land should not have been advertised for sale at all, and all cases as to lands of this sort going on to auction are to be submitted to the Ministerial Branch, and not dealt with by the Survey Department." I wrote that according to Ministerial precedent, and this is the case to which Mr. White referred as being exactly similar. The law says that conditional purchases shall go on to auction sale when forfeited, but there is nothing about selections under the 31st clause going on to auction. After a man has improved the land it would be very unfair that the improvements should be bought over his head. I wrote a minute on the subject, and Mr. Farnell agreed with me. He said that land ought not to be sent on for auction sale. Mr. White put the case very fairly in the letter which he wrote on the 15th of April, 1878, upon which I wrote this minute:—"I certainly think that some different course should be adopted than that taken in this and I suppose other similar cases before sending on land for auction sale, and that they should be submitted to this department for decision instead of being dealt with in the off-hand way that this has been by the draftsmen in the Survey Office. The facts are briefly these:—Mr. White applied for in April, 1876, under the 31st clause, for 320 acres. It was not until June, 1877, that the Survey Department reported the application to be invalid, the cancellation being approved by the Minister in September following. But within the prescribed time and two months previously to the application being reported illegal, Mr. White sent in the required declaration as to the completion of the improvements. Then, in a little more than two months, after Mr. White was informed of the refusal of his application, the land is directed by an officer of the Survey Department to go on for auction, improvements and all; and it is advertised accordingly, and at £1 per acre. Mr. White is not bound to purchase under the 2nd clause after being allowed to retain on for over fifteen months under the 31st clause. Neither is it a case of forfeiture for non-compliance with conditions; neither again, if it was, is there any provision in the 31st clause or the regulations for sending the land on to auction, as in the case of conditional and other purchases, &c. The action taken certainly appears to me arbitrary, as it was also without proper authority, and I have, in anticipation of the approval of the Minister, and acting on his behalf, had the lot withdrawn from sale, pending decision on Mr. White's protest. Mr. Farnell approved of that. If that is a case which has been brought against me I am quite prepared to leave it to any man to say which action was right. Here is a draftsman in the Survey Department sending on land for auction sale on his own authority, without any sanction of the law or the Minister, land which has been improved by Mr. White to the extent of £320, but which is still only offered at £1 per acre. I think it is a very good thing that I stand in the position I do, or the injustice which would have been perpetrated in the department would be a perfect scandal. If that action had not been arrested, Mr. White would, in all probability, have brought an action against the department in the Supreme Court.

W. W.
Stephen, Esq.
28 Jan., 1879.

2696. Has Mr. White got the land? It has been withdrawn from auction sale.

2697. Mr. Ranken.] As improved land it cannot be selected? No, it cannot. It took the Survey Department sixteen months to apply the 5 miles square test. If the papers had been returned to me at once action could have been taken upon them, and would have been if they had not been detained by the Survey Department to write minutes upon them.

2698. President.] Is it not the practice of the Survey Department to send land on to auction? Where it is provided in the law.

2699. Without any special action on the part of the Minister? Yes; but in this case it was perfectly unauthorized,—a case in which land which had been improved to the extent of £320 was sent on for auction at the upset price of £1 per acre. Mr. Farnell said that I was certainly right in the objection which I took, and that he wondered at its being done. I wish to repeat, as emphatically as I can, that if I had not taken that action in preventing that land from going on to auction sale, it would have been a lasting disgrace to the department.

2700. Mr. Ranken.] The licensed surveyor says that the improvements were worth about £53? That was at the date of his report on the 30th September, 1876. Mr. White's declaration was made after the expiration of the time.

2701. President.] Is there not a decision in the department by some Minister to the effect that unless land taken up under the 31st clause be improved within twelve months, there is no option but that it must be forfeited? There is a regulation to that effect, but the fact of the declaration not having been received until after twelve months, does not cause forfeiture. Mr. Farnell often allowed the declarations to be received after the prescribed time; but suppose the land is forfeited that does not make the case any better, for there is nothing to authorize it being sent on to auction.

2702. But it takes away from the improver all his rights? I believe there is a decision to that effect—that the fact of the improvements not being there within twelve months ensures the forfeiture of the 25 per cent. deposit. But the fact that the declaration is not received within twelve months does not involve forfeiture.

2703. Mr. Ranken.] The only statement which I can see here is the surveyor's report that the improvements were not worth more than £53 altogether? But Mr. White's declaration was dated some months after the surveyor's report, which was in September, 1876.

2704. What is the date of Mr. White's declaration? August, 1877.

2705. Does Mr. White say the time within which the improvements had been made? Yes; he solemnly declared that they were completed within twelve months from the date of application. Many people do not know when the declarations have to be sent in. There was nothing in the Act requiring them to be sent in. This declaration states that the improvements were duly made within twelve months of the date of application.

2706. Was there not some decision as to the necessity of having the improvements completed? Yes; it was of rather late date. As Under Secretary, I may mention that I hold a commission to do things for the Minister, and I consider the things which I do in his name I am entitled to do. I take these cases in hand, and I say that Mr. White was right. If that land had been sold at auction we should never have heard the end of it. It is for the Minister to say what land is to go on to auction, not the Survey Department.

2707. Was this the first case of the kind? I believe so; the first case which came under my notice. There is another which followed this as a precedent.

2708. Both Mr. White's cases? Yes.

2709. Applications made at different times? Yes; I refer to the Minister's decision given in the other case.

2710.

- W. W. Stephen, Esq.
28 Jan., 1879.
2710. Is there any minute upon this case, 78-7,444? Yes; this: "May be withdrawn from sale. According to decision upon papers 78-3,032 the land should not have been advertised at all; and all cases as to lands of this sort going on to auction are to be submitted to the Ministerial Branch, and not dealt with by the Survey Department."
2711. Is there any minute by you to the effect that similar papers are not to be sent on to the Survey Department? Yes, this minute embodying the Minister's decision.
2712. That is your minute? Yes; in accordance with the Minister's decision on my minute in which I suggested it.
2713. You say there is nothing in the law which makes it imperative that the declaration as to improvements under the 31st clause should be made within twelve months? I think there is a regulation, but there is nothing in the Act about it.
2714. But the regulation is within the scope of the Act? It ought to be. Mr. Farnell has held contrary opinions two or three times.
2715. In point of fact that regulation, the eleventh, is in force now? Yes. That regulation is clear enough, that within one year from the date of application the applicant will be required to make and transmit a statement as to his improvements, verified by statutory declaration; and so with regard to conditional purchases, a similar declaration is required as to the improvements within three years and three months, but the absence of those declarations has been condoned over and over again.
2716. Will you find the date upon which the selection was reported by the Surveyor General's Department as illegal? June, 1877.
2717. What is the date of Mr. White's declaration? August, 1877.
2718. Two months after the Survey Department has declared it void? Yes; that is what I have stated in my memo. The application of Mr. White is dated April, 1876; therefore it took from April, 1876, to June, 1877, for the Survey Department to say that the 5 miles square test did not apply. As Mr. White very justly states, that had the application been refused within a reasonable time, the lessee would not have made the improvements, but he was allowed to go on and make the necessary improvements.
2719. Although he had not taken the steps to put him in a position to enable him to ask for them? The improvements were actually effected within the twelve months before the Surveyor General reported that the application was illegal.
2720. But the declaration was not made until after the twelve months? It was not known that the declaration was needed. There were several other cases in which it was not known to be needed.
2721. The recommendation of the Survey Office was made in June, 1877, and the land was not sent on for auction until May, 1878? It was ordered to go on for auction on the 11th of January, 1878, and in April it was advertised for sale in May. That is much quicker than lands usually go on.
2722. Was there no communication sent to Mr. White between June, 1877, and the date on which the auction sale was first advertised? The applicants are always told.
2723. In that case was Mr. White informed? I think he was, because he draws attention to the sale. There is generally a printed slip sent out to this effect:—"The land originally purchased by you will be offered at auction." Whether he got that or not I could not tell, but he got to know of the fact.
2724. You approved of the land being withdrawn from sale in anticipation of the approval of the Minister? Yes; I have frequently to act for the Minister.
2725. And he approved of your action? Yes.
2726. The next question to which we ask your attention is contained in these papers registered 77-2,029 alienation? Yes. I do not see anything in this case one way or the other.
2727. It is a case in which a change of land taken up under a Volunteer order is asked for? Yes.
2728. Have you got your minute deciding that case? Yes. I say:—"This case appears to have been re-submitted to the Minister on the ground that the decision disposes of only one point, and that there is yet another difficulty at present in the way, namely, that the travelling stock route embraces the land applied for. I conclude that the recommendation of the surveyor as to the revocation of a portion of the reserve taking in the land applied for may be approved also, and the case be now allowed to go on." That was marked approved, and it went on to the surveyor for auction.
2729. Is that the only minute you have written in this case? There is the first minute, submitting the case—77-2,029 alienation: "In reference to the memo. of the Deputy Surveyor General of 21st ultimo, I would invite his attention to the decision which has now been given upon 78-1,820 alienation, which disposes of the question alluded to by him. The Mining Department will be duly apprised of the above decision." I have some recollection of Mr. Farnell keeping this case on his table. He said there seemed to be another question connected with it, and then I wrote the memo. I have just read. My first memo. is dated the 5th April and the second the 13th of June.
2730. Was that a decision of your own without the authority of the Minister? There is no decision at all there. I say, I conclude that the recommendation of the surveyor may be approved. I do not see how that is going away from the Minister's decision.
2731. How was the question disposed of? There does not appear to have been anything done with it. I do not know how that got to the Surveyor General; but when he wants the papers he can get them. I do not see that any action has been taken on that. The surveyor does recommend the travelling stock reserve to be revoked in part in his memo., and I concluded that the Minister's approval was meant to embrace the two points. There were six or seven sets of papers connected with Mr. Bayly's cases, and I have sometimes been puzzled to know which was which.
2732. What minute is this? It is a minute by Mr. Fitzgerald on the 15th of May, 1876:—"This application should be declared void, as the parish of Bogledie, in which this land is described as situate, is within the Gulgong Gold-field, northerly extension, proclaimed on the 1st of September, 1871." Then there follows this: "So much of the Gulgong Gold-field as was comprised within Mr. Bayly's selections having been revoked it will not be necessary to declare this selection void; it may be transmitted to the surveyor for measurement as in other cases." To which I wrote this reply, "Yes, as in other similar cases." I can hardly call to mind the facts of that case.
2733. You say there was a great many of Mr. Bayly's cases? Yes; and they all hinged pretty much on the same question. In connection with a great many of his cases there was some dispute between the Mining Department and our Department as to whether land in a gold-field should be put up to auction.
2734. This application had reference to the Gulgong Gold-field apparently? Yes. 2735.

2735. Mr. Ranken.] But it also included portion of a travelling stock reserve? Yes, and the surveyor recommended that the travelling stock reserve was not required, and might be revoked.

2736. President.] As you are aware, we have been asked by the Minister to send in a Progress Report? Yes.

2737. And we have asked for some returns which we think necessary for that report. One consists of papers respecting a collision between your division of the department and Mr. Moriarty's in reference to promotions, and the other relates to the appointment of conditional purchase inspectors and Commissioners and to their removal from office? I am waiting for the latter return, which is in course of preparation; but with regard to the former I submitted the application of the Commissioners to Mr. Hoskins, who stated that he did not see that the question of increases and promotions was a matter coming within the scope of the Commissioner's inquiry at all.

2738. Was Mr. Hoskins made aware of the question which also arose on the papers as between your department and Mr. Moriarty's? Yes; Mr. Hoskins has asked me my reasons for not recommending certain promotions, and as your letter shows that the matter has been brought before the Commission, it was my intention to refer to Mr. Hoskins again.

2739. The Minister does not absolutely refuse to send them? I asked him whether I should send them or not, and he wrote "No."

2740. Mr. Ranken.] I suppose the Minister understands that we are not interested in the question of promotions, but of collision between the branches? I understand the question, and I should like much if I could get the Minister's permission to submit the papers.

2741. President.] With regard to the other return? I wonder it is not ready.

2742. Is it in hand? Yes; I gave it out at once.

WEDNESDAY, 29 JANUARY, 1879.

Present:—

MR. ABBOTT,

MR. RANKEN.

R. P. ABBOTT, ESQ., PRESIDENT, IN THE CHAIR.

Mr. W. W. Stephen called in and further examined:—

2743. Chairman.] I think yesterday we were last speaking about this case of Mr. White? No, that was not the last case. You had put that away—we had got to Baylis's case.

W. W.
Stephen, Esq.
29 Jan., 1879.

2744. There are just one or two more questions about that case. In your minute of the 19th April, 1878, there is one paragraph, "Within the prescribed time, and two months previously to the application being reported illegal, Mr. White sent in the required declaration as to the completion of the improvements." The date of the application was on the 15th April, 1876. The declaration ought to have been in before the 15th April, 1877, should it not (shows papers to witness)? There is some mistake there. Might I look at the papers in Mr. White's case. Of course I ought to have had more time to look into these things. That seems to me a mistake on the face of it. I believed I looked at that (pointing to writing on the papers); it looks like "April."

2745. The declaration should properly have been made before the 15th April, 1877, and actually it was not made until the 28th August, was it? It is one of those cases in which the improvements were there. I mean to say that within the prescribed time, twelve months from the date of application, it is quite possible that the improvements were there.

2746. Not that the declaration was within the prescribed time. There is another discrepancy. "The declaration was made two months before the selection was declared illegal," it says. It is just the contrary; it is two months afterwards? I took that as April. I looked at that writing; I did not look at this thing at all. It looks like "Al." to me, as much as "Aug." Of course it is a mistake. The application was reported illegal in June, 1877. That is two months before instead of two months after. It is very likely a mistake. My minute is dated the 19th April.

2747. In what year? The same year, 1878. That may be a mistake; perhaps it is, but it does not affect the principle of the case in the slightest degree.

2748. There is another point or two in reference to this case. It has been stated that the Messrs. White did apply for the land under the 2nd clause. They would be in the same condition as if the application under the 31st clause had been approved. They would be in the same position if they had applied for it under the 2nd clause, as if the application under the 31st clause had been held good? It is simply this: In the case of applying under the 31st clause they have to pay the whole of the money down; therefore, till the application is declared illegal, they are out of the interest of their money; it is in the Treasury, to the credit of the public revenue. In an application under the 31st clause, when it is declared illegal, they are told, "Your application to purchase by virtue of intended improvements is illegal, but you can purchase under the 2nd clause, because the improvements are there, on your run." Mr. White was told he could do that; but he said he did not see the force of that, and did not see that he was compelled to buy under the 2nd clause. Therefore the land went on to auction in January, 1878. That is the date it was sent on to auction. That is the date of the instructions to go on to sale, the 11th January, 1878. Signed, "R.G.S.B."

2749. When was it to be sold? It was simply sent on to sale, and the schedule was prepared and advertised to be sold in May. As I have stated before, this is the case:—It was not a forfeited purchase, it was cancelled, simply on account of the 5 miles square test.

2750. You held there was not any forfeiture incurred for want of the declaration? No; even if there had been there was no right for a draftsman to do this. The act of sending on for sale is for the Minister to determine; but here is a draftsman from the Survey Office sends land to auction sale without the lessee having a word to say at all.

2751. And if the sale had taken place in May, 1878, that would have been thirteen months after the time when the improvements should be made, and the declaration made in respect to them? Yes.

- W. W. Stephen, Esq. 2752. But the declaration was not made until four months after the time in which it ought to have been made? No, most of them have not been.
- 29 Jan., 1879. 2753. You say you did not think Mr. White was bound to take up the land under the 2nd clause, being in possession? Exactly. I think there was a great deal in this statement of Mr. White's letter:—"The lessees are aware they might have applied under the 2nd clause, but they did not believe it was incumbent to do so under penalty of the forfeiture of their land, and they failed to see the justice of such a proceeding."
2754. What was the position for which they contended—that they were to remain in possession for an indefinite period? No; his objection was that after his improvements had been made with the approval of the department, that his land was to be sent up to auction at £1 per acre with all the improvements upon it. As he said, if anybody chose to oppose him he would have to pay for his own improvements erected at his own cost.
2755. Would there be any other way of disposing of this land, except under the 2nd clause, or by auction? No; he could free-select if he had chosen.
2756. When it was improved he could not select, could he? If they were his own improvements. It has always been so held. That point has been often raised. It has been held that a man can select his own improvements, but nobody else's.
2757. And is that ruling acted upon? I believe it has; it used to be the rule.
2758. In this case of Mr. White's he could not be forced to take it under the 2nd clause, and it would not be fair to put it up by auction, and he actually remains in possession? As long as the improvements are there it is barred from free selection.
2759. And he could not be interfered with in any way? The Government advertise the land, and add the value of the improvements at the upset price. If anybody else purchases it he has to pay the full value; if the person buys it himself the value of the improvements is remitted to him.
2760. Is not that the course pursued in all cases of improved land by the Government; are not the improvements always paid for when it is anything over £40? No; that is quite a recent regulation introduced by Mr. Garrett to prevent dummyism. Squatters used to get men to select for them, and put up improvements meaning to forfeit, and get the land put up by auction at the upset price, which it paid them to do. Then a regulation was made during the last few years that the value of the improvements at the date of forfeiture is to be added to the upset price, so that if the lessee wanted to buy them he would have to pay for them. That is the only rule I know of.
2761. Was that rule established within the last two or three years only? Yes, with regard to improvements, and to prevent dummyism, if the lessee put up improvements without residence, that they should pay for them twice over.
2762. That is only the discovery of the last two or three years? I think about three years.
2763. Has anything been done towards dealing with this particular case? No, it seems to me to stand in abeyance. It would rest with the Survey Branch whether it should go on to auction or not. Mr. White was informed of that decision, approved of by Mr. Farnell. It went to the Survey Branch on the 20th May, 1878. There it has been ever since, and no further action recommended; it rests with them.
2764. Did you not find fault with their bringing the case to auction previously. I understood you to find fault with them for not consulting you? Most decidedly I found fault with their sending it on without submitting it to the Minister. His was a cancelled not a forfeited case. It was not forfeited, it was only cancelled because it was illegal on account of the 5 miles square test not applying; and there was nothing in the law to prescribe that this purchase should go on to sale. There was evidence in the department to show that the land was improved to the extent of £320. What I complained of was that a draftsman of the Survey Department marked it to the head of the drafting branch to go on to auction at the minimum upset price of £1 per acre.
2765. What course should they take now to move in the matter, as it stands at this moment? I sent it to the Survey Office. They simply put on it, "Put away with records." Of course I never saw it since till I saw it here yesterday.
2766. What course should be taken with it now? I cannot say.
2767. Is it not a matter with which you are authorised to deal? If it came to me I should think what to do with it. It is a rather novel case. It is put away in the Record Branch.
2768. Without you or any one having authority to deal with it? If the Surveyor General thought any further action was necessary he would have submitted it to me.
2769. It might have remained there for an indefinite time, and left Mr. White in possession? Yes, unless the improvements deteriorated, which would put it in the power of anybody to free select. It was the first case of the sort that happened, and that was the reason why I went particularly into it. I thought the Survey Department was acting wrongly, and I pointed it out.
2770. And the effect of the whole dealing was to leave it in Mr. White's possession, as if his first application had been successful? The effect of this decision is that he is not in legal possession at all; but I do not see that anybody can take it from him.
2771. A good holding title? Yes.
2772. Mr. Ranken.] Without paying for it? He offered to pay for it, and put down the money in full; but it took the Surveyor General sixteen months to tell him his application was illegal.
2773. Chairman.] Where is the money that he paid? That was authorised to be refunded to him eighteen months after he paid it.
2774. Mr. Ranken.] Most of these 31st clause cases were left for a year? Most of them.
2775. Chairman.] Did Mr. White get the money back? I imagine he did. Here is the authority of the Treasurer to pay it back to him. I just wanted to point out one thing here. This report on Mr. White's application went to the Charting Branch in November, 1876.
2776. Is that from your department? No, that is a memo. from the Survey Office. It went in October, 1876, to the Survey Department. It was not recommended for refusal till June, 1877, although I believe that when the plan was there they ought to have found whether the 5 mile square test applied within a month; but instead of that they keep it all this time. If we had got it back in six months there would not have been all these complaints caused by this delay.
2777. If Mr. White has got the money and refuses to take up the land under the 2nd clause, he is in possession of the land, and acts as owner of it without any consideration at all to the Government? I suppose he is.
- 2778.

2778. And but for these papers being stirred up under present circumstances it might stay there for any time? I do not know. Mr. White, I believe, is willing to purchase under the 2nd clause.

2779. Do you not think Mr. White might very fairly be told that before he makes his application he ought to know whether he is entitled or not? If it takes the Survey Department 16 months how could an outsider find out? The law had not been interpreted then, and an outsider could not find it out.

2780. Mr. White ought to have known it himself that he had no right to do it, and that he should not have been allowed to set up these rights in opposition to the proposal that he should take it under the 2nd clause. Should he not, on finding out that he was wrong on the first application, have been compelled to put himself in a proper position? That was not the question you asked me. You said he ought to have known it. I say if the Survey Department took 16 months to find it out he could not be expected to know it. But it is no reason why he should remain in possession and not take advantage of the 2nd clause.

2781. Because actually and strictly it was his fault? In this particular case there is nothing to show that he ever was informed that he could apply under the 2nd clause. There is simply the notice that it was going up to auction. I am aware that he might have applied under the 2nd clause. Sometimes they are told that it is open to them to apply under the 2nd clause. It does not appear from these papers that he was told.

2782. Mr. Ranken.] Would not the 2nd clause put him in precisely the same position as the 31st? Except that the land might have been appraised at 30s. an acre. He took it up at £1 per acre. He might have to buy it at £2 an acre. Appraisers have appraised land at 25s. an acre, and more. Under the 31st clause he would have got it at £1 an acre; under the 2nd clause he has to submit to appraisal, and after being out of his money for sixteen months he says it is not fair to put him to the risk of an appraisal that might put on 30s. an acre. He says it is a hard case, and he reasons the thing on what grounds such a course has been adopted. I submitted a minute, and it was approved by the Minister, yet it is put away with the records. The record clerk is not supposed to take any action.

2783. President.] He simply held the papers until he is asked for them? Yes.

2784. Then I suppose the proper course for the Survey Office would have been to send it back to you? I should think so; so that they might know what action was to be taken? I think they ought to have recommended it.

2785. Then he gets it for nothing? He has no holding. It went to the Survey Office for their information.

2786. Mr. Ranken.] The next case is referred to in the Parliamentary report:—"Mr. Bennett asked the Secretary for Lands, pursuant to notice—(1.) Did Mr. H. C. Dangar take up 50 acres of land in the county of Cook by virtue of a Volunteer land order? (2.) Was he afterwards allowed to abandon this ground and take up another portion by virtue of the same land order; if so, by whose authority, and under what clause of the Land Act? Mr. Farnell answered,—(1.) Yes. (2.) He was allowed to abandon his Volunteer land order selection on the 10th March, 1876, and take up another portion, under the authority of the Under Secretary for Lands." The 29th December, 1875, was the date of the original application. I may state to you it is represented to the Commission that in approving of the alteration requested you cited Mr. Copeland's case as a precedent, and it is also stated that Mr. Copeland's case bore no reference to the matter, that being land most of which was purchased by other people, while the only objection to Mr. Dangar's original application was that it appeared to him to be an unsuitable one. Is that so? Here are the papers (showing them to the witness.) I will put aside Copeland's case. I will bring half a dozen others. The principle is the same, authorising the change of a selection on a Volunteer land order. It is done over and over again in the matter of conditional purchases; I think I may say over and over again it is submitted to me with this: "May the request be complied with?" I write, "Yes, a similar application of Mr. Copeland had been approved." I recollect that it had been approved. I suppose it will be admitted that in the thousands of papers that I have to deal with there might have been a slight difference in the two cases.

2787. It is said that nine-tenths of the land in Copeland's case was purchased, but in Dangar's case it appeared simply that it did not suit Mr. Dangar;—is that so? It says:—"From natural obstacles it would be impossible for me to make any use of it, and therefore apply to take up another portion of land near the Weatherboard platform." I knew at the time I wrote that a similar application had been approved allowing Mr. Copeland to change his selection. It is possible I did not refer to the particular papers.

2788. Was Mr. Copeland's selection previous? Mr. Copeland's is dated the 7th March, 1876. Mr. Garrett's minute is on the 10th March, 1876. My minute is a few days later. Mr. Dangar's application is dated January, 1876. Unwin's is the 19th February, 1876.

2789. Do you consider that sufficiently analogous to take the former as a precedent? I cannot say that, but in this matter of Copeland's, Mr. Copeland was with the Minister personally before the formal decision was given. I knew that it had been done, and that the effect was the same, to allow him to change the selection—to allow him to make the selection elsewhere.

2790. In dealing with Mr. Dangar, you considered Mr. Copeland's case as a precedent? I suppose I did. It has been done several times on less grounds than in Mr. Copeland's case.

2791. You did not enter into the merits of the case? I thought it quite justifiable under the circumstances stated by Mr. Dangar, that the land was inaccessible.

2792. Was the land surveyed? No; here the survey comes in months afterwards; no, it was not surveyed, it could not have been surveyed at the time.

2793. You had no official report as to its being inaccessible, or incapable of being surveyed? No. There are two or three more cases I have done in the same way. I believe there is a case before the Commission now which I approved of in the same way.

2794. Was it a Volunteer land order case? Yes; I thought there was a fair ground given. I do not believe Mr. Dangar has the grant now, and I do not believe it matters if he has it or not. I authorized it, and I considered I was perfectly justified in authorizing it. I did the same thing as in Dangar's case for Mr. Watt; that is a similar case to Mr. Dangar's exactly.

2795. You did not expect any abuse to arise from it? Certainly not, and I do not believe any abuse did arise. In Mr. Dangar's case I am as positive as I can be that there was no application to thwart a conditional purchaser; he simply made a mistake, and he made an application that he might change it. They paid a pretty high price for the Volunteer land orders then.

2796. President.] But did you not think that Volunteer land orders might be used to block selection? I did; but of course, as Under Secretary, I used my discretion. In certain cases I am positive there was not the slightest idea of that.

2797.

W. W.
Stephen, Esq.
29 Jan., 1879.

W. W. Stephen, Esq. 2797. I did not speak of this case particularly. You agree with me that it might be done? Yes, it might be done in the same way as by persons applying by improvements. Volunteer land orders might be used to thwart the conditional purchaser.

29 Jan., 1879. 2798. What use of Volunteer land orders would be the most effectual way? I do not think you will find many cases in which it has been done.

2799. Mr. Ranken.] In this particular locality I do not suppose there would be any chance, but if it was allowed, might not men exclude others who wanted it? I think it might in some cases; I think I have a return of all the cases in which Volunteer selections have been changed; I do not think there would be a dozen of them altogether. The matter was submitted to me, and I approved of it for the Minister. If I had thought it necessary to submit it to the Minister I should have done so; I am sure the Minister would not have objected. It is impossible to submit every case to the Minister; but I am responsible to the Minister only; I am not responsible to the Survey Department.

2800. President.] But is it not a bad precedent? I think indiscriminately allowing it would be a bad precedent; I can recollect five or six cases where I have refused it.

2801. Is it not the fact, that in dealing with the land law, you have to establish precedents? Very often; there are so many different cases under the land law. The points may be similar in some respects and different in others. You must, in the numerous cases, discriminate between them.

2802. Mr. Ranken.] You think these cases ought to be sifted on their merits? If there is anything on the face of them that would lead to doubt, they certainly ought to; in this case I am perfectly satisfied there was no intention to thwart the conditional purchaser or any one else.

2803. Do you wish to make any further statement in regard to this case? I have only one thing to state; that approval was given by me in 1876; if there was any complaint to make against me, surely it might have been complained of before April, 1878; but when I went away to Melbourne, on business, eight months ago, I found that this question was asked, evidently aimed at me. It seems to me there are people always ready to give information to Members of Parliament. It was when my back was turned at the office. A person here wrote to me about it. I said, "Let them ask what they like." I spoke to Mr. Farnell about it afterwards, and he made no objection in any way. I approved of that in 1876, and in April, 1878, when my back is turned, I find this question, certainly put into Mr. Bennett's hands by some person in the Survey Department, when I am away, and have no opportunity to make my answer, and had not the power to explain to the Minister why I did it; I recollected this case directly Mr. Ranken said Mr. Bennett asked the question; I recollect that it was brought under my notice when I was in Melbourne.

2804. There is a case of a Mr. Smith, who is represented as having made various attempts in the first place to get a special lease, originally for a quarry, and afterwards for a silk-growing farm, on the Blue Mountains, and it is represented that he has been allowed to purchase the land under the improvement clause. Are you aware of the circumstances? I know this case well. May I be permitted to ask if it has been submitted as against me or not?

2805. Chairman.] It has been submitted as proving what is stated by the Deputy Surveyor General.

Witness.] That is what I want to know.

2806. Mr. Ranken.] It is represented, shortly, that, owing to the way in which the case has been dealt with, action has been arrested too late to stop a job that costs the country £2,000;—is that so? I know this is Mr. Fitzgerald's pet case, which he brought up to the Minister. All I can say is that the action in this case has been as straightforward and as honest as any action could have been. The original application was approved of by Mr. Garrett, as a special lease, which did not come through me at all.

2807. Chairman.] Was it for a quarry? I do not know; it did not come through me. It was approved by Mr. Garrett as a special lease. Then, in accordance with many other precedents, the land was applied for under the improvement clause. Mr. Garrett was the Minister of the day, and approved of it being put under the second clause. It went on to appraisal. The Government appraiser appraised it, as far as I can recollect, a good deal beyond the upset price any way.

2808. Mr. Ranken.] Mr. Marshall Bayley, who appraised it at £250, was it not? Yes; as honest a man as any in the country. The acreage was 100 acres. He took stock of the improvements, and put that value on it.

2809. I think there is a condition attached to the Ministerial minute that sanctioned the lease, "provided inquiry as to the bonâ-fides of the matter should be instituted before the improvement purchase is entertained";—but that seems never to have been entered into, does it? There are other papers. I should like to have the opportunity of standing on this case alone. I heard it characterized before the Minister for Lands, by Mr. Moriarty, as "a job." I do not know where he meant the job lay. However, Mr. Bayley, the Government appraiser, appraised the land considerably over the upset price; I think it was double. The appraisers did not agree, and an umpire was called in, and he fixed it at £100. Mr. Bayley has stated what the improvements are. He stated that about 50 acres of the land were simply worthless.

2810. It has been represented to the Commission that this same land is being cut up into villa sites? But what have we to do with that?—why did not the Survey Department, on submitting the matter to appraisal, point this out—not now, when it is all over? There is a minute of the Survey Department in January, 1878. I want to be particular about this case, as I am on my trial as it were.

2811. Chairman.] It would be well for you to give us your views of the case as it goes on? I think it would take a very good memory.

2812. Mr. Ranken.] I have stated shortly to you what the result of the information laid before the Commission tends to;—it began with a stone quarry, and now it is being cut up, is it not? The special lease is managed by the Occupation Branch. That I have nothing to do with. When it comes under the 2nd clause, then it comes to the Lands Office,—it is alienation. The Minister approved of it; I had nothing to do with it. If there was any objection to the value of the land, why was it not pointed out to them? It is only after all the formalities required by the Land Act are complied with that Mr. Fitzgerald writes the letter here. I had a long talk with Mr. Farnell about it. I told him that Mr. Smith had got to windward of the Government. He said, "You must submit the case to the Crown Law officers." Here is the case as submitted and approved by Mr. Farnell. It went to the Crown Law officers, and they stated that there was no help for it; if the law was defective the proper course was to amend the law; but the Minister having approved it, it having gone to appraisal, and the appraisal having been according to law, there was nothing for it but to sell. I showed it to Mr. Fitzgerald, and he took it to Mr. Farnell, and said it was a job, and there ought to be a special Bill to authorize the sale.

2813. Who first authorized Mr. Smith to make this application under the improvement clause? It is provided by law. Any person holding any land under any lease may apply. He applied for it according to law. W. W. Stephen, Esq.

2814. President.] After Mr. Smith applied for the purchase of the ground, did not the Minister inquire as to the bonâ-fides of the application? Yes, Mr. Bayley made an appraisalment. Of course I cannot recollect everything. The Deputy Surveyor General has had all these papers in his hands, and has written these minutes on them. Suppose there was such a decision it would be for the Surveyor General's department to carry it out. 29 Jan., 1879.

2815. Do you mean the instructions as to bonâ-fides? Yes, I think so.

2816. Mr. Ranken.] If that condition was put in writing would it not be the duty of some officer of the Government to see that it was put in force when the lessee was in possession? There is a paragraph here by the Minister upon a minute submitted by Mr. Moriarty and the Deputy Surveyor General. In this case Mr. Garrett states:—"This lease was granted by my predecessor. For that reason, and inasmuch as the honor of the Crown has been pledged thereby, as there is no proof before me of the want of bonâ-fides on the part of the lessee, I cannot see my way clear to take the very unusual course of cancelling the lease he holds. By a recent communication, handed to me by the lessee, and which I handed on Monday last to the Deputy Surveyor General with a sketch, it appears Mr. Smith is willing to accept his area exclusive of the portion sold to Reading. Under these circumstances the survey, as I have already directed, should proceed, and the bonâ-fides remain to be exhibited by his action when he is put in possession of his land with properly defined boundaries.

2817. President.] The Minister complained there that the bonâ-fides had not been inquired into,—did he not? He says:—"And the bonâ-fides remain to be exhibited, upon which let him be put into possession of this land, with properly-defined boundaries." You spoke about a quarry. There is sericulture combined with it.

2818. Mr. Ranken.] I think the quarry was the first stage, and afterwards it was combined with sericulture? Yes, and I think Mr. Smith has got the better of the Government.

2819. President.] Would it not have been the duty of some officer to see if the application for the special lease for silk-growing was bonâ-fide on the part of Mr. Smith? Would it not be somebody's duty to form an opinion on that point? I do not know how these things are managed.

2820. Mr. Ranken.] Who is the officer to see that the bonâ-fides is proved? Mr. Smith was very nearly losing it, I know that. Mr. Farnell and myself both saw from the representations as to the value of the land that he was getting a good bargain.

2821. President.] But that was not done till after the arbitration? Of course not. It was submitted to the Surveyor General to go on to appraisalment as we always did in the way prescribed by law.

2822. And after arbitration you could not interfere with the title? That is exactly the view taken by the Attorney General.

2823. Could not action in the matter have been taken previously by some one connected with the department to prevent the Government from losing money. It was so manifestly absurd on the face of it to take up land on the mountains to grow mulberries. You might as well take it for a fishing-ground? I do not know.

2824. Mr. Ranken.] Did you decline to hand the papers to Mr. Fitzgerald when he wanted to sift it? No, decidedly not. I do not recollect him asking, and he could have had them at any time.

2825. It has been represented that you detained the papers till the possibility of interference was past. Did you? I can only say it was perfectly untrue, and I wonder at the Deputy Surveyor General saying it. I am perfectly amazed that he could have said so. I should be very glad to be examined on these papers fully.

2826. Perhaps it would be better for you to take the papers? If you think so. Up to a certain time I had nothing to do with the papers at all. I simply carried out the law under instructions. As to favouring Mr. Smith, it was rather the reverse. I should like to see Mr. Farnell examined on that point. What about John Campbell's case at the wharf?—Mr. Bayly valued it at £5,000, and Mr. Campbell appointed a co-appraiser. Mr. Campbell's own appraiser valued it at £375, but an umpire was called in, and he put it down at £100, and he went and got it for £100. We referred that to the Attorney General, Mr. Foster, and he gave the same reply. That is a far worse case than this.

2827. Chairman.] Who has the choosing of the umpire? They choose him between them.

2828. Do you not think that the wrong in this case originated in allowing a lease for sericulture in the mountains? It might have done so.

2829. Is it not manifestly absurd on the face of it? I believe there are mulberry trees there now, but that is a matter I have nothing whatever to do with; I do not know anything about it.

2830. Mr. Ranken.] Do you know about his applying for a quarry, and then changing it to mulberries? I do not see where that is on the papers.

2831. Chairman.] Would not such an application carry suspicion with it, and put the department on their guard? I do not know. There is a petition from a lot of people in the different departments, protesting against this,—people who had got land in the mountains, and were in an awful state, because it would depreciate their land.

2832. Mr. Ranken.] There is a petition there, signed by half-a-dozen names;—is that it (shows it)? Well, I thought Mr. Eagar's name was down, but I do not suppose any Government officers would put their names to it. There is a reference to the Crown Solicitor. I cannot conceive why these papers are submitted as my having anything to do with it. I cannot understand the Deputy Surveyor General trying to make out that I have anything to do with this matter. I am perfectly amazed at seeing it before the Commission. Everything there is as straightforward as possible.

2833. Chairman.] Did you not imagine that any one might conceive that you, as head of the department, believing that to be a wrong transaction, would step in and prevent it? Yes, if I saw anything wrong.

2834. Mr. Ranken.] Would not one think it was obvious that Mr. Smith has abused the law to further his own object? If so, Mr. John Campbell has. I tried all I could to stop that sale at the time, thinking that the Government were not getting a fair price. I was much more interested in that case than this. It is hardly to be supposed that I should help Mr. Smith. When the matter came to me it was in such a position that I had to act upon it.

2835. Chairman.] The Occupation Branch granted the lease you say? The Minister approved of its going on. It is submitted by the Survey Office, and it has to go on to appraisalment. I could not say anything against it. 2836.

W. W.
Stephen, Esq.
29 Jan., 1879.

2836. Mr. Ranken.] The statement made against you by the Deputy Surveyor General is, that he lent the papers to Mr. Thompson, who lent the papers to you, and that you absolutely refused to return them to him. Is that so? If that can be shown in any way from the papers here I will give in, otherwise I cannot. I have some recollection of Mr. Fitzgerald wanting the papers when I had them under reference to the Minister, but I sent them to him with a memo., and said I believed the Surveyor General would like to look at the papers before personally approving; and then he came to Mr. Farnell, when I was in the room, and said, "This is a regular job that should be stopped by Act of Parliament." This perfectly amazed me, that he should bring this up against me. There is something more than strange in it.

2837. If you want to take the papers, or make any statement, you can;—do you know all that is represented in the matter? The only thing I should take the papers for would be to submit a précis of the case, and show everything that has been done from the beginning to the end.

2838. Chairman.] Do you not think it worth while? I am quite content to leave everything of this sort to anybody who has known me for the last twenty-five years. The only feeling I have is one of regret that Mr. Fitzgerald should bring anything of this sort against me, of which Mr. Farnell knows everything from beginning to end. I was most anxious to stop it myself.

2839. It was too late then, when it had been settled by arbitration? So it seems, from the Attorney General's opinion. If I am to be responsible for everything, no one man can do it—it would take ten men.

2840. You have heard what is stated. You say you could write a précis setting out your view of the case. Do you not think it worth while? I do not think it is worth while. It is such a dastardly thing to bring against me, with which I had nothing to do at all, beyond seeing the decision of the Minister carried out. I think it is almost an insult.

2841. And you do not think it worth while showing that in the evidence? As far as I am concerned I do not think there is the slightest occasion to do it. The charge is almost monstrous, to submit such a case against me. I am certainly astonished at its being submitted at all. If there are no cases in the department worse than that I have nothing to fear.

2842. Mr. Ranken.] I think it is desirable to have a statement. It appears from this that the Survey Department was prevented from stopping a job? There is my word against Mr. Fitzgerald's. I say it is false, and he says it is true. There is nothing kept back by me. The papers were sent to me afterwards. I am not responsible to the Deputy Surveyor General. I am responsible to the Minister alone.

2843. On public grounds it does seem that Mr. Smith has set the law at defiance—does it not? If there is a fault I think the Survey and Occupation Branches are to blame. It is their place, if there is any objection, to point it out. It is a strange thing that only now the value of the land is brought under notice. I have nothing to do with the value of the land. I have simply to advise the Minister. I have nothing to do with either the value of the land or improvements. It is not in my province at all.

2844. Chairman.] You understand we want the facts, and we can arrive at the facts on your statement and Mr. Fitzgerald's, as shown by the papers? If I had refused the papers it could not have interfered with dealing with the case.

2845. I did not refer to refusing the papers, I referred to the general position of this case on the papers? I think it would be more fair to ask the Ministers, Mr. Farnell or Mr. Garrett, not make it between Mr. Fitzgerald and me. He submits a case, and the papers are put before me at a moment's notice. I should think that Mr. Farnell or Mr. Garrett ought to be examined. My work is administrative.

2846. Mr. Ranken.] The weakness of the matter is this, that this bonâ-fides that was to be scrutinised seems to have dropped out of sight. No officer of the Government has looked into the matter at all, and when the Survey Department attempted to take it up, according to their statement they are thwarted? I can only characterise that by one particular word, which I will not do here. If that case has been brought up against me it is as cowardly an attempt to do a person harm as ever existed. However I shall bring it before the Government when you have done with it. People who know the routine of the department, and know what my duties are, as compared with the Survey Department—but I will not let it stop.

2847. Then you do not wish to go further into it now. The papers are at your disposal? I am so disgusted I do not care whether I take them or not. I am quite willing to leave it in the hands of the Commission. Here are some cases out of thousands. I could show cases where I have gone in favour, not of Mr. White, or Mr. Smith, or Mr. Dangar, but in favour of people I thought were being persecuted. Anybody who knows me will give me credit for the same thing.

2848. Chairman.] In looking through the papers just now did you notice any recommendation from the Survey Office that the lease should be cancelled? I do not know. It would not have gone through me at all.

2849. Does the Survey Department deal directly with the Occupation Branch? Yes, at Mr. Fitzgerald's own request, I believe. I want to call your attention to this memo.: In this case the applicant has applied to purchase 100 acres at Emu Plains, in virtue of improvements, and Mr. Secretary Garrett directed the application to go on for value of the improvements, said by the applicant to be worth £150. The land is measured, and it would probably save a double reference to issue instructions to appraise the land provided it was found that the improvements were worth at least £100. There is a statement of Mr. Bayly's that the improvements are more than £100. I have nothing to do with anything preliminary to that.

2850. Mr. Ranken.] Was not that the stage when the bonâ-fides should be looked into? I do not know; I have nothing to do with it. It is no use giving evidence upon that; it does not come within my province.

2851. Chairman.] It was no part of your province to inquire whether the lease should be cancelled or not? No.

2852. It is in the power of the Minister to cancel leases obtained by fraud? Upon the breach of any condition attached to the lease forfeiture should ensue. I believe if there is a breach of any of these conditions attached to the lease, forfeiture should ensue. There is a minute which appeared on the 21st October, 1876, by Mr. Garrett.

2853. Mr. Ranken.] If the Survey Department represented on any occasion that they had reason to believe that fraud was being perpetrated, would you not consider it your business to arrest the departmental arrangements? Yes, if it was done in time. Why did not the Survey Department submit it then? It is their business to report as to the value of the land, and its adaptability to survey.

2854. Chairman.] The Survey Office having surveyed the land for lease, there would be no necessity for referring it back to them at all on application to purchase, would there? It comes from them. There is a description for the lease, but the land is not measured until it is purchased. Here is a matter of fact:

The

The lease was granted previous to 1876. Well, here is a letter from the surveyor, forwarding the plan in October, 1876, of the portion applied for to purchase, by Mr. Thomas Smith, under the Crown Lands Alienation Act. That goes to the Minister, and is never seen by me; it is submitted by the Surveyor General. Mr. Garrett's minute is: "Expedite the dealing with this case, which has been delayed some time already. Mr. Smith has expressed his willingness to take up the land as measured in satisfaction of his claim, which might be done."

W. W.
Stephen, Esq.
29 Jan., 1879.

2855. It is stated to us that the lessee was put in possession by surveyed boundaries originally; is that so? Yes; there was something about Reading's claim. But there is a letter, and the Minister's minute to the Surveyor General, which I have just referred to. If there was anything objectionable in the land, why was not the objection reported then? That is the Minister's own minute, by which I am bound to act, and the Surveyor General too. If there was anything wrong, why did he not point it out?

2856. What is the date of the first application for the lease? The application for the lease is not here; but here is a memo., showing pretty well that the lease was not measured when applied for.

2857. That is a full description, is it not? That is not a definite description. That is not a description that you could prepare a deed grant from. If it was measured, what was the use of that plan in December, 1876.

2858. But there is a starting point, and the four boundary-lines? That is a matter for the Survey Department; I have nothing to do with that. What is the use of the plan?

2859. Might they not have a description without a plan? You could not have a description under which this deed could be issued. Here are all the papers. As a matter of fact the deed is not issued yet.

2860. It is stated to us that he was put in possession by surveyed boundaries? I cannot say anything about that.

2861. And that the survey has enabled the case to be pressed through without reference to the Surveyor General, and the fact of the reconsideration of the bonâ fides was never brought before the Minister until too late? That I have nothing to do with at all.

2862. Although the Survey Department recommended that the lease should be cancelled? There are all Mr. Garrett's minutes here. There is not a single memo. of mine of any sort. There is a plan, of October, 1876, under the Alienation Act. Mr. Garrett decides that it is to go on at once, and be expedited. It goes to the Surveyor General. I would ask, why does it take him from then till within the last few months?

2863. It is stated to us that they recommended that the lease be cancelled? I know nothing about that at all. If it was so, why did they not point it out then?

2864. Whose duty was it to see that the lease should be cancelled? The officer in charge of the Occupation Branch.

2865. And who is he? I cannot say. I think it must have been Mr. Pretious at that time. All matters of special leases were placed specially in his control.

2866. Mr. Ranken.] Did it not take the form of an improvement application without any scrutiny at all? It went to the Survey Department, and was sent on to appraisement in the usual way, so that there could be no doubt about the improvements being of the required value, and the appraiser said that it was of the required value. He valued the improvements on the land. Why did not the Survey Department point out the value of the land then?

2867. It is stated to us that they did, and recommended the cancellation of the lease? Well, the Minister decided against it, without reference to me at all. I knew nothing about this case till it came to the stage when it properly belonged to me.

2868. Was that before it was referred to arbitration? Of course.

2869. Could you not then have taken action? If I had gone through all the papers I could.

2870. Do you recollect at the time Mr. Fitzgerald looked for the papers? It was after the thing had been approved by the Executive Council.

2871. Do you recollect that he was at that time asked by the Minister for a report on the case? Yes, and here it is. He got all the papers.

2872. At the time he asked for the papers it was in consequence of being asked to report? No; the papers were withdrawn for inquiry. Here is my own minute,—“The Deputy Surveyor General having recently inspected the land and improvements the Minister has desired me to refer the papers to him for any observations he may have to make, before deciding what course is to be pursued.” And then it was referred to the Attorney General. At the time Mr. Fitzgerald asked for the papers they were with me, having been withdrawn to make this inquiry. I see the lease is stated here to be for silk culture; I do not see anything about quarrying. Here is a letter of approval, signed by Mr. Pretious. Here is a letter from Mr. Pretious, authorizing the lease by direction of the Minister, and requesting that the land be surveyed. Here is a letter from the officer in charge, referring to Sergeant Healey for a report as to whether there are any objections to granting Mr. Smith's application. Mr. Healey reports that there is no objection to Thomas Smith leasing the land in question.

2873. That does not refer to the improvement purchase? Certainly not.

2874. President.] Has not the application on its face the proof of the absence of bonâ fides? There is the approval of the lease by Mr. Farnell—“As this appears for a new industry.” There is his approval. It was not my place to recommend the upsetting of the Minister's approval. I wish with reference to this case to quote this as to the special care I took as far as I had to do with it. Mr. Bayly was specially directed to value the improvements. “I made a minute examination of the property, and was fully convinced from my own observation, and from proofs that I gleaned, that the requisite improvements had been made. They consist of the clearing and planting of 10 acres of land, with fencing. The latter I set very little value upon, but the former could not have cost less than £9 or £10 per acre.” That is the Government appraiser's report as to the value of the improvements.

2875. Is that letter from the Government appraiser, Mr. Bayly? Yes, Mr. Marshall Bayly. I propose to put in a copy of a minute of the Under Secretary with respect to a proposal of the Deputy Surveyor General, to compel lessees applying in virtue of improvements to increase the value of those improvements from 20s. to 25s. per acre, on the ground that the Minister had temporarily, as a matter of policy, increased the upset price of land by sale at auction from £1 to 25s. per acre. Minute dated 20th September, 1878.

THURSDAY,

THURSDAY, 30 JANUARY, 1879.

Present:—

MR. ABBOTT,

MR. RANKEN.

R. P. ABBOTT, ESQ., PRESIDENT, IN THE CHAIR.

W. W. Stephen, Esq., re-called, and examined:—

W. W. Stephen, Esq. 2876. Mr. Ranken.] Certain representations have been made to the Commission, Mr. Stephen, respecting the action taken by you in regard to applications from the Council of Education for Public School sites. It is represented that when an application is received in the Lands Department for a site, you inform the Council that it is approved of, subject to any objections that may be found to exist at the time of survey and measurement, and that you take that action without reference to the Survey Department, thus causing a delay and obstruction to business? What is said to cause delay,—the action taken by me?

30 Jan., 1879.

2877. Yes, the action taken by you in not allowing the applications to go to the Survey Department in the first instance? It was simply to avoid delay that I proposed such a course. The Council of Education were frequently writing reminders that no replies were received to their applications, and I thought the best plan would be to acknowledge officially the receipt of their letters at once, instead of waiting until the applications had been submitted to the Survey Department—that it would be better to inform the Council that their applications were approved, subject to any objections that might be found to exist at the time of measurement and survey, and then to send the applications to the Survey Department to be dealt with. That practice might cause a delay of three or four days, but not more. The practice, however, was only in force for a short time, and has now been done away with. The Council of Education pointed out that a provisional authority of that kind was of no use to them; and I submitted to the Minister that the only thing to be done was to endeavour to obtain more expeditious action in the Survey Department; that is, more expeditious action in obtaining the surveyor's report. In that view Mr. Farnell concurred, and so the old practice was reverted to.

2878. The complaint seems to be that you wished to ignore the Survey Department, and keep matters from their hands? My impression is that it is rather the other way; that the Survey Department wishes to ignore me in regard to matters that should specially come within my province. My only desire has been to expedite business. The delays in granting Public School sites are a source of constant complaint from the Council of Education, and my sole object was to hit upon some plan, if I could, to obviate the delays. Only this morning I had to deal with a complaint of the kind. The papers in the case were sent to the Survey Department on the 4th December, and they were not sent to the surveyor until the 16th instant. No further action could be taken by the Lands Department until the surveyor's report was received. The Lands Department is dependent upon the Survey Department. Papers are sometimes kept in that department for months, waiting until plans are charted. And anything I have proposed has been with the view of obviating delay.

2879. The next matter to which I wish to call your attention has reference to mining reserves—the representations made to the Commission being of a somewhat similar character to those in regard to Public School sites. It has been represented to us that you have approved of several applications for mining reserves, without reference to the Survey Department; that in one case it turned out that the land applied for had been dealt with under a special Bill; in another, the land formed part of the Church and School estate; the third case remains in statu quo apparently? My answer to that is very simple. It has been the habit of the Lands Department upon the recommendation of the Minister for Mines to proclaim these gold fields reserves, under the impression that all the necessary steps had been taken before the recommendations were made. In one case I pointed out to the Minister himself that a gold field reserve was simply recommended, and that there were no reasons given for it. The Minister said he thought more information ought to be given. The Minister for Mines, Mr. Suttor, replied that he thought that his having recommended it, the geological surveyor having recommended it to him first, ought to be sufficient for his hon. colleague the Minister for Lands. It went on in that way for some time. But Mr. Fitzgerald the other day pointed out to Mr. Hoskins the very inconvenience you are speaking of. I saw the difficulty myself; and I said that for the future every application would be referred to the Survey Department before it was dealt with by the Ministerial department. I distinctly state that I gave instructions to that effect at once, when I saw the difficulty.

2880. There is another similar case having reference to an application for a Roman Catholic Presbytery at Mulwala; it turned out that the land that was provisionally granted was land that had already been alienated? Yes, that is a similar case to one of the other two you have referred to; the application was approved, subject to any objections that might be found to exist at the time of survey and measurement. When the objections were discovered the applicant was informed of it.

2881. All these cases are of a similar character—the same explanation applies to all? Yes; the provisional approvals were given with the view of giving applicants some acknowledgment that their applications had been received, and would be attended to. Cases were sometimes kept in the Survey Department for months; and as the Lands Department came in for the blame, I thought the best way out of the difficulty was to send an acknowledgment to applicants.

2882. The next case is a more lengthy one; it refers to an application by a Mr. Jenkins for a conditional purchase of land on a travelling stock reserve near Narrandera; the application seems to have been refused in the first instance, and then other steps were taken? Yes, it is a case about which I had a long conversation with Mr. Hoskins and Mr. Fitzgerald the other day. I do not know how the papers got here though. However, they are here. It is a long case, and there are a great many points connected with it. It would take some time to explain, but I shall be happy to answer any questions the Commission may put to me. I do not know what view Mr. Fitzgerald has taken of the case, except from his memo. on one of the papers.

2883. I fancy it is the same thing, your acting without reference to the Survey Department—or, as he puts it, your ignoring the Survey Department? I do nothing without reference to the Survey Department. In any case, where all the necessary information has been got from the Survey Department, the business then lies with the Ministerial Department.

2884. What was done with regard to Mr. Jenkins' application? The Minister gave a decision that, if unobjectionable, so much of the reserve might be cancelled as to embrace Jenkins' improvements. That was the Minister's direction, and it went to the Surveyor General to be acted upon. It has got here instead. I never objected to any action taken by the Survey Department, except when I think it needlessly encroached upon my own. Then of course I resented it. I do not think I ought simply to be Under Secretary in name. I have higher functions to perform.

was

W. W.
Stephen, Esq.
30 Jan., 1879.

2885. On the papers before you there is a minute by Mr. Hoskins, in which he brings forward the necessity of the Deputy Surveyor General advising as to the action to be taken in regard to cases, and commenting upon it? Yes. Mr. Hoskins says there is a category of cases in which the experience of the Deputy Surveyor General would of course be useful. I quite admit it. I never complained, except in regard to cases that were delayed in the Survey Department—where they were delayed for denoting action, which would be more properly noted by the clerical department. I could produce hundreds of such cases. I have pointed that out to Mr. Hoskins.

2886. There is no question affecting the public involved in the case now referred to? Yes, slightly. Mr. Jenkins took up an auction selection of land just as the Wagga Wagga district was divided, and a new land office was opened at Narrandera. The land had been merely withdrawn from auction selection, but Mr. King, the land agent at Narrandera, did not know it, because the new auction selection registers were not completed, and he accepted Mr. Jenkins' application. Sometime afterwards it was found that the selection was on a travelling stock reserve, and I recommended that as it was clearly illegal it should be cancelled, but that if any hardship would be imposed upon Jenkins, who said he had put £100 worth of improvements on the land, the case might be met by a special Bill or some special enactment.

2887. But the Deputy Surveyor General's minute seems to object to its being included in a special Bill? I infer that he meant that. Here is his memo.:—"If the case immediately under consideration is considered one of hardship, it might be met by special enactment." A special enactment I take to mean a special Bill, which is the way in which we legalise all invalid purchases of that sort. He took great objections to that, and said he did not mean it at all. I said I took it to mean that, and that seemed to give great offence. Most people, I should think, would infer that by special enactment was meant a special Bill.

2888. Nothing has been done in the matter? Nothing; at present it is under consideration by the Surveyor General whether the part of the travelling reserve selected may be revoked without detriment to the public interest. I do not know what it has been brought here for.

2889. I fancy it is the old question, of no reference being made to the Survey Department in the first instance? I always refer to the Survey Department. After that department has taken all the action it can the case comes to the Ministerial Department for action; and if everything came on without delay, and smoothly, I do not see that there should be any difficulty at all.

2890. The next case I wish you to refer to is a very long one; in fact, it appears to be two cases dovetailed together—a case of Mr. Landale's and a case of Mr. Jennings—something about conditional purchases. The cases have reference to what are called dummy selections, and it is believed that the persons interested are Messrs. Landale and Jennings. These are the papers. [Papers handed to witness.] As the matter comes before us, it seems that seven men made applications for measured lots at Deniliquin on the 11th September, 1873; their names are given as Charles Goverd, Frank Mackenzie, Donald McLeod, William Badham, Robert Simpson, John Blackwood, and John Smith. They all applied through the one agent, Mr. D. Aitken. You will notice that all the applications are in the same handwriting. On the 24th September, 1873, a letter came from Mr. Peel Raymond asking that the selections might be cancelled and the lots put up to auction. On the same day the Under Secretary's memo. is sent in approving of the application, on the ground that these men would not get their pre-leases if they vacated their selections. On the 9th October a telegram was sent to the land agent at Deniliquin, asking if the persons named were resident in the district. At this stage Jennings's case comes in; on the 18th September nine selections are applied for by brothers of the name of Murray. On the 25th September one of the applicants wrote to the Crown Lands agent at Deniliquin, on behalf of the other applicants, to the effect that the selections were made in error, and desiring permission to select elsewhere. On the 18th November Mr. Moriarty reports on the cases. Then comes a letter from Mr. Fitzpatrick, dated on 20th November, written on behalf of Mr. Jennings, and citing Landale's case, which seems to have been approved of, as a precedent. The result seems to have been that although there was a strong presumption that the men were dummies, acting for these squatting firms, the selections were cancelled and the deposit money returned. It also comes before the Commission that a letter was received from Messrs. Landale, stating that the men were bona fide selectors, with whom no arrangement had been made; and it is in the same handwriting apparently as the original purchase applications, and the applications to withdraw. I think they are all evidently in Mr. Aitken's handwriting, and Mr. Aitken is declared to be the superintendent of the station? Mr. Aitken is, I believe, the overseer of the station, but I do not think he can write like this (holding up a letter).

2891. That is not the letter, there is a foolscap letter amongst the papers before you, said to have been written by Aitken; however, the presumption is that the whole thing was got up by Aitken? I do not know anything of the case; I cannot recollect it. I cannot possibly pretend to recollect every case I deal with, especially a case that occurred so long ago as the present one.

2892. Will you look at this letter (handing witness a letter)? I see it is signed Landale Brothers.

2893. If you compare the handwriting of that letter with the applications, I think you will find they were written by the same person? I should say it was somewhat like Landale's writing.

2894. I should say undoubtedly, whoever wrote the applications also wrote that letter—whether Landale or Aitken. The one hand wrote the whole; the withdrawals are in the same handwriting. But there is another matter in connection with the same cases—several of the persons named appear to have been residents of Melbourne, not persons employed on the station? I cannot pretend to know anything about people in Melbourne. Mr. Moriarty and Mr. Fitzgerald went on a long tour through the district, and may have obtained all this information; but it is impossible for me to recollect all the circumstances of the case; some of the papers are dated 1873, and no one could expect me to answer questions right off, without looking carefully through the case. I see there are some memos. of mine on the papers; and there is also a telegram initialled by me and approved by Mr. Farnell.

2895. It appears by Mr. Farnell's minute that the application should not have been entertained, and that he had none of the papers submitted to him? He said so, apparently, in a long letter; but he must have had the papers before him.

2896. He is said to have assented, on your verbal representation, and to have assumed that Jennings' case

was

W. W. Stephen, Esq. was the same? The application is signed "Landale Brothers." Surely Aitken would never have written a letter signed "Landale Brothers."

2897. Chairman.] Have you got the withdrawals before you? I am all abroad. Here is a minute of mine, dated October, 1873, but I cannot recollect the circumstances to which it refers. There is a copy of a telegram, asking if there were any such persons as the applicants, and telling the agent that the lands would go to auction, the purchases cancelled, and the moneys refunded.

2898. That was sent after you cancelled the selections? Of course, afterwards.

2899. Mr. Ranken.] But judging from the handwriting, the whole thing seems to have been a scheme to set the law at defiance. The application was hurriedly accepted? Which application?

2900. The application for the cancellation of the selections; your assent was given on the same day the application was made? I have frequently done that. A land agent may come to me and state a case, and ask me not to let it go into the rack of records, but attend to it at once; that is why I do it; and that is why I say that land agents are of use in saving time. But as I have said, I am all abroad with these papers; I cannot make head or tail of them at present.

2901. But there is no doubt about the handwriting being the same—you can see it more plainly on the withdrawals—and the point is whether there were not at the time sufficient grounds for believing it was a job? Is Jennings' the same case as Landale's?

2902. It was a similar case of dummyming; it was decided to allow the Murrys to withdraw their applications because the same concession had been made to the men in Landale's employment? I cannot find when the applications to withdraw the selections were sent in, nor when the sale by auction took place.

2903. The lands were sent to auction on the 26th September, 1873; Landale's letter is dated the 24th? We must settle these things at once, or it is too late. If we withdraw land from auction there is three months delay caused. It has to be advertised and re-advertised, and there is a delay of a month or six weeks before it can be sold again, but if dealt with at once there is no such delay. Mr. Landale's letter is dated the 24th September; I suppose it came to me on the 25th. It is impossible for me, sitting alone, to detect every dodge or job; I candidly admit that I am not suspicious of everybody; I do not suspect every one of trying to hoodwink the Government. Mr. Moriarty must recollect all about the cases; but he could only find out there was anything suspicious after long inquiry in the district.

2904. He went to Deniliquin and found out what had been done? He went there to make inquiry into certain matters, and while there he made it his special duty to inquire into this.

2905. Chairman.] Whilst there on other duties he was asked to report on this case? Yes, he went generally to inquire into matters. I see that Mr. Raymond's letter is dated 24th September, 1873; there is a letter asking for the lands to be cancelled, and to go on to auction sale.

2906. That is in Raymond's letter; he makes both applications; he acted for the selectors and also for the lessee? This is the application, and I come back to what I was saying just now, that the application was received on the morning of the 26th of September.

2907. Mr. Ranken.] That is the day of the auction sale? No, it is the 24th September when it was received; it must have been lodged by the look of it. The action was taken, it appears to me, on the morning of the 26th. The application had either to be granted or refused, and it was granted. Nothing more was said or thought of it, and no suspicion or idea of a job was entertained at all until a letter was received sometime afterwards from Mr. Moriarty.

2908. President.] I think you will find that Mr. Moriarty was specially asked to report upon it in November? He may have been, but I do not see anything to show it.

2909. So that the question as to the job must have arisen before that? He is Chief Commissioner of Sales, and would have an opportunity of knowing before I should. He says he received instructions from the Minister to inquire into the case. He may have got them direct upon some representation of his own to the Minister, unknown to me. I knew nothing of it until afterwards. I never saw Mr. Moriarty's letter before.

2910. Is there not a minute by the Minister? Yes, I have seen that, but I do not know where the instructions to Mr. Moriarty are, or how they were given.

2911. Did you notice that Mr. Raymond, in his letter applying for the cancellation of the conditional purchases, also asks that the land shall go on to auction? Yes, I saw that.

2912. Does not that show that he was acting for both parties? It looks as if he was.

2913. Will you look at the reasons he gives for asking for the cancellation? Yes, he says on account of their being in the midst of surveyed blocks.

2914. Then, on reference to the original applications for conditional purchase, you will see they were taken up as surveyed blocks? Yes, though of course I do not examine into these things at all.

2915. The selections they wished to withdraw were taken up as surveyed blocks, and the reason given for asking for their cancellation was that they were amongst surveyed blocks. The facts appearing by the papers and Raymond's letter have led to suspicion? I see.

2916. Mr. Ranken.] It looks as if Mr. Raymond acted for both parties? It is not an unusual thing. An agent acts on behalf of the free-selector, but no doubt his chief constituent is the squatter.

2917. If you refer to the applications for conditional purchase you will find the reasons had no foundation in fact, and that the proper course of dealing with them would have been not cancellation but forfeiture? If they did not reside on the land.

2918. President.] If you will refer to the different applications you will find there is no foundation for the reasons given? I never look at descriptions of conditional purchase applications.

2919. But it is not a question of description but a question of cancelling a conditional purchase, that Mr. Raymond's letter has reference to? Yes.

2920. And it appears by his own letter that he was acting for the lessee as well as for the conditional purchaser, and it also appears by the original applications that there was no foundations for the reasons given? It appears not.

2921. The papers of course were always available to you whenever you wished to have them? Yes.

2922. There were nine conditional purchases of 320 acres each? I do not even know the result of the case.

2923. The result was that the conditional purchases were all cancelled, and the land sold at auction to the lessee? There is a telegram saying the conditional purchases were to be cancelled; I do not know what reply was made to that. There is a bundle of papers here that I have not seen for six years, and I know nothing about them, except the action I took six years ago.

2924. Perhaps you would like to take them away with you to look over? No, I do not want to take them with me. I see that action was taken. It may have been a mistake—it may have been a job—but I do not not know that it was one. I never had any suspicion of the kind at the time, and never dreamt of it. There is no time to look after these things; they come in at the last moment, and one has to say yes or no. The statement is taken in writing, and the thing is done. Here is this case, came on the eve of sale; I could hardly have got the descriptions from the Charting Branch.

W. W.
Stephen, Esq.
30 Jan., 1879.

2925. But the applications themselves? The applications, the conditions, and descriptions.

2926. They simply speak of them as measured lots? The conditional purchase applications contain descriptions.

2927. It refers to measured lots? I do not know where they were at the time—probably with the surveyor.

2928. It involved a large sum of money? I never thought of it in that light. I may have made mistakes. I have made mistakes at times, and this may have been a mistake; I do not know whether it was or not.

2929. Then the case of Jennings followed on that; in fact it was made a precedent for Jennings' case? Yes.

2930. Mr. Ranken.] Mr. Jennings, through his agent, Mr. Fitzpatrick, claimed all the advantages that could be derived from the precedent established by Landale's case, and got them? It is strange these things were not objected to at the time. It is strange that years are allowed to elapse before objections are raised.

2931. Chairman.] I think you will find that objections were made from a good many quarters? After the land sale.

2932. Mr. Ranken.] Yes, letters began to arrive after the land sale? I cannot say.

2933. Chairman.] Some person named Cheriton wanted to purchase? I see that I have acted on the case and I cannot say anything more about it. It is unnecessary for me to state that I never saw any job in the matter. I never had any idea of it, although there may have been an arrangement between the lessee and the free selectors.

2934. It further appears from the original applications that Mr. Aitken, who was Mr. Landale's superintendent, acted as agent for the free selectors—Mr. Moriarty clearly states that in his report? The auction selections, I see, were cancelled. The papers are in such a muddle I would not attempt to answer anything with regard to them.

2935. Chairman.] You do not think it necessary? Well, I do not know what more I can say. There are always people suspecting others of hoodwinking. I am not one of those gentlemen. I had only been in office as Under Secretary a year or two, and it is very likely that I was not then quite so well up to the ropes as I am now. There is nothing in the papers to show that the Murray's got their refunds.

2936. Mr. Ranken.] They got their refunds? There is nothing here to show it.

2937. There is another set of papers? But I am talking about the applications of Smith, M'Leod, Donnelly, and others.

2938. Chairman.] I think you will find that the final action was that the auction sale was allowed, and the conditional purchasers had their applications returned? In those days, in 1873, there was not half the suspicion attached to cases as there has been of late years. In fact you hardly ever heard a case questioned. I have no doubt that dozens of cases of the same sort were passed. I could lay my hand upon a number of exactly similar cases, and nothing has been said about them at all.

2939. If you notice in Jennings' case several of the selectors were minors; still their withdrawals are allowed? That was before the Act of 1875?

2940. Yes, but they had no right before that Act was passed, under any circumstances, to withdraw? But we always allowed them.

2941. Was there not, before the Act of 1875, a regulation sent to land agents that minors were not to be allowed to withdraw? No, they could select but they could not transfer.

2942. That is what I say; they cannot deal with the land afterwards—they cannot part with their selections—they cannot withdraw their selections? That is a different thing from transferring.

2943. Mr. Ranken.] They cannot apply for cancellation? That objection was never taken. The regulation simply prevented a transfer. Minors could select, but it was clear by the law they could not transfer. There never was any regulation or rule to prevent their selections being cancelled and their deposits refunded.

2944. Chairman.] At the same time you would not allow them to transfer you allowed them to cancel? It was done invariably, and I never heard it questioned.

2945. Is it not the same in effect as parting with their interests? I am not lawyer enough to know that.

2946. Do you think it requires you to be a lawyer to be able to administer the law? I only know that it was done; the regulation was framed with the approval of the Minister.

2947. And you would still allow such cancellations to be made? Yes, I would.

2948. The question has been raised? It may have been. I only state what was the practice. The practice has been to allow minors' selections to be cancelled if found in any way to be invalid, or for any other adequate cause.

2949. At the request of the minors? I do not say at their request.

2950. But did you allow it at their request;—has any case of the kind arisen? I believe it has been done. It was always done, and I have never heard an objection taken on the ground of their being minors.

2951. I think I can show a case where objection was taken? It may be so; I cannot say. I dare say I was liable to mistakes; but as a matter of fact I never heard any question of the kind raised.

2952. There is another case about which I wish to ask you a few questions. It has reference to an application by Mr. A. Bowman to purchase unnecessary roads. That case, I think, is of a more recent date. In regard to this case it is said that the Under Secretary for Lands, in opposition to a decision of the Minister, and without Ministerial approval, directed the roads to be sent on for auction sale? I wonder what next is coming. Where is that? (Papers shown to witness.) I simply suggested further reference to the Surveyor General. I suppose there was no harm in that.

2953. The application having been disallowed on representations being made by the Deputy Surveyor General, and in accordance with the opinion of the Crown Solicitor? But I do not see anything to show that the land went on to auction.

2954. Did you not write a minute to the effect that it was to go on to auction? Suppose I did; I suppose the Under Secretary has as much right to send land to auction as a draftsman in the Survey Department.

2955. But that does not alter the fact in this case if it exists as stated? I want to know where it is stated that the land went on to auction. I do not believe it did go on to auction. I find a minute of mine

W. W.
Stephen, Esq.
30 Jan., 1879.

mine to this effect:—"Mr. Bowman disputes the statement that the road (or one of the roads) applied for by him affords access to portion 15, and as this is the ground upon which his application was recommended for refusal he requests that the matter may be further considered." That is the last action taken. Mr. Fitzgerald does not know what he is talking about.

2956. I do not think you looked at the first application made by Mr. Bowman, dated 1st May, 1877? Yes; that is his application to purchase unnecessary roads.

2957. There is a minute of yours which reads thus:—"The application by Bowman has been dealt with so far under the 10th clause which appears to be a mistake, as the land is Church and School. Mr. Bowman states that he has become the owner of all the allotments to which the two roads he applies for were intended to afford access, and I see no objection to the land embraced by them being put up to auction to give him an opportunity of securing it; as bearing upon this latter question see enclosed opinions of the Crown Solicitor of 8th December, 1873." That minute was sent on to the Auction Branch, to Mr. Edwards, and then went to the Charting Branch? The land has not gone on to auction.

2958. Because it was stopped? I want to know which is the superior officer, the Deputy Surveyor General or myself? I submitted the thing and the Minister approved.

2959. The fact is the land was sent on for auction? I recollect it well; I recollect speaking to Mr. Garrett about this, I think. It seems to be a recommendation that as the lands did not come under the 10th clause, they should go on to auction. This is what the Crown Solicitor says in his opinion:—"Strictly speaking the fee simple of the lands through which the roads pass may be sold." I took that to mean that the land could go on to auction, and upon that I wrote the minute, in which I say, "that I saw no objection to the lands embraced by the roads being put up to auction to give Mr. Bowman an opportunity of securing it. It then went to the Survey Office. The Surveyor General pointed out a better reading of the law, and the Minister approved of it. I did not send the land to auction; I simply stated that I saw no objection to its going to auction.

2960. It went to the Auction Branch? To the Charting Branch.

2961. Mr. Edwards' name is written upon it? It would go through his hands to the Auction Branch. It would go to the professional branch of the Survey Department, where the schedules are prepared; and if there is any objection they point it out. I did not send it on.

2962. But it actually did go on—it went to Mr. Edwards, and in the course of the same month it went to Mr. Brownrigg? It is mentioned on the paper, denoting that it has gone to the Charting Branch. Mr. Fitzgerald has the sole management of the Church and School lands at their disposal; and I am not so well up to it as he is. If he points out an objection the Minister upholds it.

2963. All land going to auction would go through the same course? Yes.

2964. And that would be done on the authority of your minute? There is no such authority in Bowman's case.

2965. Is it not a fact that your minute, or the notes written under your minute, had the effect of sending the land to auction sale? It went through the Survey Department in the usual way.

2966. The Auction Branch is not in the Survey Department? The case would go through Edwards to the Charting Department, and would be noted by him as having gone. The Charting Branch prepare the schedules, and if they see any objection they state it. But even if I had stated the land was to go on to auction, I suppose if a draughtsman can send it on the Under Secretary can?

2967. It was only a part of the Crown Solicitor's opinion which you read; the whole paragraph reads as follows:—"Strictly speaking, the fee simple of the lands through which the roads pass may be sold; but as such sale will not bar the right of the purchasers of the allotments at sales upon a sub-division to use the land shown in the plan as roads, a sale of the land so shown as roads would not pass any beneficial interest to the purchaser; and it may therefore be considered that, practically, such lands cannot be sold?" Yes.

2968. Mr. Ranken.] I suppose that that means the lands cannot be sold? I take that to imply that the lands cannot be sold under the 10th clause.

2969. President.] But after reading the whole paragraph, in the Crown Solicitor's opinion, do you not think it is directly at variance with your minute? I do not understand the Crown Solicitor's minute very well; but I infer from it that the land was open to auction.

2970. Will you now refer to the papers in John MacInnes' case? Yes, I see the letter.

2971. Mr. MacInnes' letter is as follows:—"The lease of sections of Church and School lands expired on the 31st December, 1876, and hearing that the land is going on for auction lease sale again, we beg to state that we have growing crops on the land which will not be fit to take off before the end of May; we therefore request that the leases should be sold subject to the removal of the crops. In asking this favour we beg to state that having made this land our homes for the last twenty-one years, and having expended large sums of money in improving the land, we are almost sure of becoming the purchasers of the land now under crop, so that the granting of our request will not interfere with the sale of the leases." The date of that application is the 4th January, 1877. On the 11th January, Mr. Robertson wrote this minute on the letter:—"The Under Secretary for Lands,—This application appears reasonable, and is only intended to relate to land now under maize or potatoes. The matter must have immediate attention. I am under the impression that His Excellency the Governor should be asked to assent to the conditions. Have an official letter intimating that the lease will be sold during January, 1877." Then you wrote on it:—"Mr. Brown spoke to me; perhaps the best plan will be to withdraw the lots altogether for a time?" Yes.

2972. Do you recollect anything taking place between you and the Deputy Surveyor General with reference to this matter? I cannot say that I do.

2973. He protested against the sale because it would result in the loss of about £500 to the Church and School estate? I recollect some conversation took place between us, but I do not recollect what it was.

2974. On your refusing to withdraw the minute you had written? My refusing to withdraw the minute—I said nothing about that.

2975. But it is so? I cannot recollect these petty things. I recollect saying something about it. I have some glimmer in my memory that something was said about it, but I do not recollect what it was. That minute of mine is dated the 11th January. Sir John Robertson's minute is not dated at all. I cannot tell whether my minute was written before his or not. However, the last action is a minute of mine directing the Governor's decision to be carried out, and that was written on the 16th. The Governor says: "The leases in this case may be put up for sale, subject to the right of removal of the growing crops." And I wrote upon that: "Inform Mr. Brown, the land agent."

2976.

W. W.
Stephen, Esq.
30 Jan., 1879.

2976. You do not recollect anything further about the case? No.

2977. Or what induced you to write the minute? Some very good reasons, I have no doubt.

2978. But you do not recollect the reasons? I do not recollect them, unless they were in the interests of the men.

2979. Another case to which we wish to call your attention is that of a Mr. Douglass, who applied for a return of his Volunteer land order because the land could not be measured as he wished. It is said that, contrary to the representations of the Survey Department, more particularly as conveyed by the surveyor's letter, you recommended the return of the Volunteer land order. The land applied for was to be measured along the frontage of a creek? I cannot understand the Surveyor General's minute, to begin with.

2980. It is that you, contrary to the reports from the Survey Department, more especially the surveyor's letter, recommended the return of the Volunteer land order, the description of the land applied for being a portion to be measured along the frontage of a creek. You complied with the application to have the Volunteer land order returned on the grounds that no general rule can apply to the return of a Volunteer land order, and that was refused by the Minister? I cannot see how it could be refused by the Minister. Mr. Farnell's minute is dated previous to mine, the 18th of May.

2981. Is your minute dated? Yes, the 19th, I take it to be. The Deputy Surveyor General wrote this: "It is submitted whether applications made under Volunteer land orders are to be declared void for errors of description." That is the point to be decided, and I say in reply, "I see no reason why, in cases like this, it should not be cancelled as requested. I do not think a general rule can be applied to all cases."

2982. You see Mr. Fitzgerald's minute? I cannot understand what the latter part of it means.

2983. The latter part says that the cancellation for such reasons as are given would have the effect of enabling the holder of a Volunteer land order to bar the land for a period to suit his own objects, and to put it into his power to adopt the same course with the same Volunteer land order from time to time—that is if the holder could ensure its being returned for any excuse he liked to make? Yes, it was always done. It was submitted to me as Under Secretary, and I gave my opinion; I left it to the Minister, of course, to say whether it should go or not.

2984. It was put before the Minister by you? It seems so. I cannot make it out. Mr. Farnell's minute is dated before mine; mine is dated 19th May.

2985. Mr. Farnell's minute is to the effect that the land should be measured in accordance with the description, provided it can be done in conformity with the regulations of the Survey Department? I only submitted my opinion to the Minister, who seems to have overruled my recommendation in some way. I can show that the Minister frequently overruled matters which the Deputy Surveyor General submitted.

2986. Mr. Fitzgerald's minute is dated 18th May, 1877; yours is dated the 19th, and Mr. Farnell's the 25th? I think that is it.

2987. Mr. Fitzgerald's reasons for refusing the application were written on the papers before you dealt with the case? Yes; I think they make a great deal too much of these things altogether.

2988. Mr. Ranken. You saw no error likely to result from it? I do not think so; of course I should not have written that minute if I thought an error was likely to arise. But I think there is too much made about these matters. For the last two or three years I have tried to do the best between the two parties; but some Government officers seem to stretch the law as if it were made for that purpose.

2989. President. Mr. Douglass, in his letter of the 25th January, to the surveyor, objects to the land being measured otherwise than as applied for; it is shown, as I understand the description, that it would take in two sides of a creek along its whole length? That is a question of measurement; I only dealt with the question as to whether applications made under Volunteer land orders could be voided. My minute is purposely framed to leave it open to the Minister to say "yes" or "no"; there is no decision or authority of mine; I simply say I see no reason why it should not be done, and then submit it to the Minister.

2990. Did your minutes go to the Minister advising him on the case? I said that I saw no reason why it should not be done, but there might have been objections.

2991. The next set of papers I wish you to refer to have reference to an application for the cancellation of a selection of Edward Shearn. Mr. Peel, of the Australian Mortgage Land and Finance Company, wrote on behalf of Edward Shearn, the conditional purchaser, asking that a cancellation of his selection may be granted, and a refund of the deposit £160 be made, in order to allow Mr. Macpherson's applications to be approved of? Yes.

2992. It is stated that on the application of Mr. Raymond, who acted as agent for the conditional purchaser, you allowed a refund of £160? I did not allow it, the Minister allowed it.

2993. You advised it? Yes, exactly.

2994. On the ground that the land was improved to the value of £40 at the time the application was made? I did not say so, nor anything of the sort. Did Mr. Fitzgerald state that?

2995. It is put forward as a ground for your complying with the application? Who states that? What was the application?

2996. The application for the refund, I presume? Yes.

2997. The letter is written by Mr. Peel, agent for the Australian Mortgage, Land, and Finance Company, who acts for Mr. Macpherson as well as the conditional purchaser? I see he writes for Mr. Macpherson.

2998. In the last paragraph of his letter he asks for a cancellation of the selection? I see nothing objectionable in that. If he writes for the one, he must ask for the other. There is the man's statement that he wants to give up his selection; and there is the application of the lessee who asks to be allowed to purchase the land under the 2nd clause.

2999. Would not the fact of an agent acting for a conditional purchaser and for a lessee lead to a suspicion that the conditional purchaser and the lessee were playing into each others hands? There is no concealment about it; when I explained Shearn's case to the Minister he immediately concurred.

3000. On the ground that the land had been improved to the extent of £40; at the same time there is a letter from the lessee that there were only improvements to the amount of £20, and that is corroborated by the surveyor? I see no objection whatever in it; if Mr. Farnell had seen any objection I suppose he would not have consented.

3001. You see no objection? No, it is a concession; it is one of those cases which must be dealt with on their merits.

3002. You do not think, upon looking at the papers now, that it has very much the appearance of a case of dummying? Dummying by Shearn, do you mean?

3003.

- W. W. Stephen, Esq.
30 Jan., 1879.
3003. Yes? I do not know.
3004. Not the fact of their having the same agent? They have not the same agent; Mr. Peel writes for the one, and Mr. Peel Raymond writes for the other. I notice that the two things are combined in the one application.
3005. Mr. Raymond signs as Peter Macpherson's agent? He could hardly apply for one without the other. It is plain on the face of it that there is no concealment. He asks that the selection may be cancelled, and that Mr. Macpherson may be allowed to purchase under the 2nd clause.
3006. Do selectors and lessees generally work so happily together, that the fact of one agent acting for the two parties does not raise any suspicion? I do not know that they do. I have seen cases the other way. There appears in this case to be no reason why, under the circumstances, the applications should not be allowed. A similar course has been taken in other cases of the kind.
3007. The Minister approved of the course suggested by you? Yes, you will see his approval on the papers.
3008. Mr. Shearn in his letter says:—"I have the honor to inform you that I find that my selection of 640 acres, in the parish of Paika, county of Cairn, on Paika run, made by me on the 19th April, 1877, is illegal, and cannot be held by me in consequence of improvements erected by the lessee, worth over £40 sterling, prior to the date of my selection. I now beg that you will sanction a refund of my deposit, and have my selection notified forfeited in the Gazette, in order to allow me to re-select elsewhere." Do you not think that the lessee himself saying that there were only £20 worth of improvements, and the surveyor reporting to the same effect, shows it was not a bonâ fide transaction? It did not occur to me at the time.
3009. That letter was written by Mr. Raymond, as the agent? I went on the general supposition that it was a fair concession to make. There is no harm done to anybody.
3010. Except that it was allowing the Act to be improperly administered? It was the Minister who approved, not me. The same thing has been done in many other cases. If I had time I could produce hundreds and hundreds of cases of the same sort. These cases are produced because I happened to know the men. But I could produce hundreds of cases into which I went much more fully, but did not know the men.
3011. You refer to selectors' applications? Yes, I have sometimes fifty or sixty cases of the sort to deal with in one day. It is impossible I can read through them all. I wonder there are so few mistakes made in our office as there are.
3012. In sending land on to auction, where it originates with yourself, what is the mode of procedure? The cases are invariably sent from our department to the Survey Department and Charting Department.
3013. Then to the Auction Branch, of which Mr. Edwards is in charge? I am not sure whether they always go through Mr. Edwards' branch; they generally do.
3014. They are passed on by him as a matter of course? They go on to the Survey Department.
3015. And on the authority of your minute land goes on to auction? I very seldom say, "go on for auction," because the law may prescribe the mode of action. But if an application for land to go to auction is made, I simply send it on to the Survey Department. I take care that everything belonging to the Survey Department goes there.
3016. And they deal with it as a matter of course, as coming from you? Yes.

MONDAY, 3 FEBRUARY, 1879.

Present:—

MR. ABBOTT, | MR. RANKEN.

R. P. ABBOTT, Esq., PRESIDENT, IN THE CHAIR.

W. W. Stephen, Esquire, was called in, and further examined:—

- W. W. Stephen, Esq.
3 Feb., 1879.
3017. President.] When you were last examined we were about to refer to Mr. Officer's cases, the papers in which you took with you? Yes, I have made two or three attempts, but I have not been able to look at the papers. I have nothing in particular to say about the case. I only know that it was a concession recommended by me to the Minister, who approved of it on a full knowledge of all the circumstances, and on the express understanding that it was not to form a precedent. My minute with these papers goes so fully into the case that I do not think it is necessary to say anything about it.
3018. Have you seen sufficient of the papers to recollect the peculiarity of the application? I recollect the case pretty well.
3019. There is more than one application involved. One of Mr. Officer's applications was to give up certain conditional purchases to enable him to complete an area under pre-emptive right? I said that it would be undesirable to grant the application if it were likely to form a precedent, but that was extremely improbable, as it was one of a class of cases which had nearly expired.
3020. Another application was that Mr. Officer might be allowed to give up land already granted to him as part of his pre-emptive right, and to take it up instead as part of an improvement purchase, applying the pre-emptive right to other land elsewhere? I forget as to that. I recollect that one of his applications were granted, and the other refused.
3021. The other application was to allow him to take up a pre-emptive right which had lapsed, and to allow him to apply it to conditional purchases already made by his children? I do not recollect the circumstance about the children at all.
3022. I see here a rather long minute, written by Mr. Moriarty on the 15th April, 1875, which concludes with these words: "In the face of the foregoing it seems almost superfluous to advert to the minor difficulty that the land conditionally selected appears to have been open to conditional purchase, and that therefore no grounds exist for the cancellation of the selections. Of course the minors can neither transfer nor surrender." That is dated on the 15th of April, and your minute recommending the action taken was dated the 20th, and Mr. Garrett's the 21st? Was my minute subsequent to Mr. Moriarty's, or previous?
3023. Subsequent? It is evident on the face of it a special case, and was so approved by Mr. Garrett. I justified the course I recommended then in the eyes of the Minister, and I believe it could be justified now, if required.
- 3024.

3024. Do you think that the facts, as they appear in these papers, are sufficient to justify it? I think so. If any statement were submitted to me in writing I could answer it, but if I were asked to explain the case I should simply refer to that précis. I suppose Mr. Fitzgerald includes this case in the category of those in which he says I have taken an interest in on behalf of my friends or otherwise, to prevent my action from being sifted by the Survey Department; but it so happens that at the time I wrote that minute I had never seen Mr. Officer, and I never met him until a long time afterwards. As to the allegation that I wished to prevent my action from being sifted by the Survey Department, I only think it necessary to say that every case to which reference has been made was marked by me for reference to the Surveyor General, and that all cases go to the Survey Office. Mr. Fitzgerald's statement is therefore incorrect. There is not a single case which he can bring forward to show that I wished to prevent my action from being sifted by the Survey Department. I do not admit that there is any reason why my action should be sifted by the Survey Department, but I state, as a matter of fact, that all these papers were noted by me to the Survey Department.

W. W.
Stephen, Esq.
3 Feb., 1879.

3025. You do not desire to make any further remark with reference to Mr. Officer's case? No.

3026. The next matter to which I desire your attention are these papers, respecting the administration of the Church and School estate;—I believe Mr. Fitzgerald has been for some years in charge of that estate? Yes.

3027. And for some years he did the duty without receiving pay? I forget about that, but I think he did. Then he got £100 a year, which was afterwards discontinued, and then re-assented to again.

3028. He now receives £100 a year? Yes; he receives a good many little extras in that way.

3029. Mr. Pretious, when in charge of the Occupation Branch, applied for pay for duties which he performed in connection with the Church and School lands? Yes.

3030. And then you made a similar application? Yes.

3031. What was the result of those two applications? The question of payment went to the Governor for the first time. My application was refused, and I think the allowance to Mr. Pretious was discontinued. I recollect expressing an opinion that if Mr. Pretious and others were entitled to receive pay, I also was entitled, because all the cases passed through my hands; and I pointed out one or two instances in which I had to make remarks upon cases.

3032. Up to that time, and since, Mr. Fitzgerald was specially responsible for the estate? Yes; there are two clerks under my charge, Mr. Brown and Mr. Edwards, who do the auction and lease work, and they still get £50 a year each.

3033. Do you recollect the Governor's reasons for refusing these applications? I think he wrote something about it, but I am not sure. If he did say anything, it is with these papers. I think he expressed some opinion to the effect that no officer should receive pay without its being voted or submitted to Parliament. I see this minute here by His Excellency: "I entirely concur in the view now taken by the Minister for Lands upon this subject. The Minister will be good enough to suggest what he considers a reasonable notice of withdrawal to be given to the three officers named in the last paragraph. Perhaps three months would be sufficient."

3034. Who were the three officers referred to? The Deputy Surveyor General, the Officer-in-Charge of Crown Lands (Mr. Pretious), and the Ranger for the county of Cumberland.

3035. Do these papers show that all this action was taken without any reference to the Deputy Surveyor General? I cannot say, I am sure. I think myself that the papers went to him often enough. In fact I am almost certain that the matter was referred to him.

3036. The Deputy Surveyor General resigned, did he not? There is a memo. here from him resigning, and Mr. Garrett asked him to resume the duties.

3037. During that time the correspondence was not referred to him? He knew very well what was going on. It was not officially referred to him. The correspondence arose out of my application, and there was not the slightest necessity for referring the matter to him until after the Governor's decision.

3038. Mr. Fitzgerald says it was not referred to him. There was nothing to bring about a reference to him? It arose out of my application. The Governor expressed his opinion on Mr. Garrett's minute—Mr. Garrett's second minute,—and it went on to the Surveyor General.

3039. Mr. Fitzgerald was performing the duty for some time without salary? I think he did for some time.

3040. Can you tell me by looking at the papers the date on which the business was placed on the same footing as previously? I think it was in March, 1878. There were many proposals made from the time that Mr. Garrett was in office until Mr. Farnell came into office; and eventually it was approved that the management of the estate should revert to the former system under Mr. Fitzgerald, who got the £100 a year; the ranger £50 a year; and the agent at the £100 a year, which was never discontinued; nor also was the payment of £50 a year each to the two clerks in the Lands Office.

3041. Do you see any recommendation among the papers as to the sole management of the estate in the Survey Office by the employment of a clerk and draftsman? That was to make a separate establishment. Two or three proposals were submitted. Two were submitted together—one marked A, and the other marked B. The Minister chose that which was finally agreed upon, which was to revert to the former management as least expensive.

3042. Do you recollect that recommendation made by Mr. Fitzgerald to which I refer? I do not know whether it was a recommendation by Mr. Fitzgerald. If I recollect rightly, there was a memo. in Mr. Brownrigg's handwriting. There were two proposals submitted by the Deputy Surveyor General. After the paper had been put by for some time, and other papers had intervened, I submitted this to the Minister: "To avoid the necessity of the Minister perusing the whole of the accompanying minutes (unless he should wish to do so), I may explain that two propositions were under consideration for the management of the Church and School lands business, namely, one to create a small separate establishment distinct from the Lands and Survey Department, and to place the amount on the Estimates; and the other to adhere to the system for some years past in force, namely, the conduct of the business by officers of the Lands and Survey Departments." These proposals are distinguished as A and B. I pointed out that Mr. Fitzgerald had resigned, and that he had since been performing the duties without any remuneration. After a long time it was settled by Mr. Farnell that the matter should revert to its former management, and that the papers should go through me to the Minister, the only difference being that Mr. Fitzgerald was to be paid and I was not.

3043. At the time that it was arranged that Mr. Fitzgerald was to be again paid, do you remember asking him to withdraw his recommendation? Which one?

3044.

W. W.
Stephen, Esq.
3 Feb., 1879.

3044. That the business was to be done wholly in the Survey Office, and that by that means a saving of about £130 a year was to be effected? I never asked him to withdraw anything that I can recollect. I pointed out that Mr. Brownrigg, one of his officers, ought to get an increase of salary, and I asked him if he had any objection to my putting it on the Estimates. That was done, and it was afterwards approved.
3045. You do not recollect saying to him that as he had now got all he could ever expect he should withdraw the recommendation referred to, Mr. Fitzgerald answering that he would not withdraw anything he had written, and certainly not a recommendation which had been written for and submitted to the Governor. Do you recollect also that you then said that the recommendation had never been submitted to the Governor, and that when Mr. Fitzgerald remonstrated, you said that Mr. Farnell had directed you not to send it, as it would be inconvenient—in point of fact, that Mr. Fitzgerald's recommendation did not go on to the Governor at all, and that you asked him to withdraw it? I do not recollect anything of the sort. As a matter of fact Mr. Fitzgerald's recommendation did go on to the Governor. All the papers are here. I took a good deal of pains in stating the matter clearly, and I specially recommended that Mr. Fitzgerald, on account of his experience, should keep charge of the estate. At the time Mr. Farnell spoke to me, Mr. Fitzgerald's recommendation may have been for submission to the Governor, and may have been lying on the Minister's table waiting for Cabinet. Mr. Fitzgerald understands his own duties, but he cannot be aware of these matters. These papers were pending for a long time, and were perpetually shelved. Mr. Fitzgerald frequently asked me when it was going to be settled; and as frequently as he spoke to me I spoke to the Minister.
3046. You do not remember any special conversation on the subject? No; I certainly never asked him to withdraw anything. I may have made some remark to the effect that he had got what he wanted. It did not affect me one way or the other, as I knew that I was not going to get any benefit from it.
3047. Are you aware that Mr. Fitzgerald asked Mr. Farnell about the withdrawal of his minute, and that Mr. Farnell said that he had never given any instructions or directions that you were to keep back that recommendation? I never kept back any recommendation.
3048. Is your application for a salary among these papers? I think it is, I am not sure; but it may be that I kept it back. It was not a registered document. Mr. Garrett took it up to the Governor himself. I have looked through the papers and I do not see it.
3049. Was it upon that application that the Minister's recommendation that you should receive a salary was made? I suppose it was.
3050. And upon that the Governor's minute was written? No; the Governor's approval was written on this minute.
3051. But that was subsequently, the Minister having made one recommendation which was not accepted, and then that which was approved? Yes.
3052. Previously there was a course proposed, which the Governor refused to adopt? On my application the Governor said that no officer ought to draw pay behind the back of Parliament. I had to perform additional duties arising out of the Church and School estate, and when I saw others getting paid for a long time, I thought I had a right to get paid too. Their work came through me, and I had sometimes to write minutes on cases; so I asked to be paid also. Directly I got the Governor's decision I sent it to the officers concerned.
3053. That was the decision given subsequently? Yes.
3054. Not the decision on your application? No.
3055. I do not see that the Governor says anything here about its not being proper to give salaries behind the back of Parliament? I recollect there was a verbal communication from the Governor through Mr. Garrett to me.
3056. Was there not a minute of the Governor's written on your application? No; my application was brought back to me by Mr. Garrett, who told me that I had better withdraw it.
3057. Mr. Garrett would not make a verbal recommendation on your written application? No; I suppose he wrote a minute. When he came back from the Executive Council he said: "The Governor won't have your application. I have got to write something on it." Then Mr. Garrett wrote this separate memo. Mr. Garrett said that as my application had been refused, there was no use in recording it officially. This minute shows that I had made an application, because Mr. Garrett headed it, "Allowance to the Under Secretary."
3058. Your application is not among the papers? I do not see it. I do not know whether I have got it or not. It was refused, and the papers show that.
3059. Do you recollect Mr. Fitzgerald asking you how it was some of the papers were missing? My application had nothing to do with him.
3060. It had the effect of depriving him of his salary? I could not help that. I recollect distinctly saying to Mr. Fitzgerald that my application had done me no good, and that it had temporarily done him harm.
3061. You do not recollect his inquiring for these papers? I recollect his asking about some memo. which was not with the papers,—whether it was my application or not I do not know.
3062. Or the Governor's minute on it? I am almost certain that there was no distinct rejection of my application in the Governor's writing. Mr. Garrett brought my application back, and gave it to me. He said: "It is no use your registering this; having it refused is enough."
3063. Is there anything on the papers which led up to Mr. Fitzgerald's resignation? He says in this minute: "During this long correspondence (seriously affecting my position, not only as regards future payment, but the propriety of my ever having received any) no reference of these papers has ever been made to me, though in charge of the Church and School estate, and no notice has been given me of the intention to discontinue my salary. Under such circumstances no course appears to be open to me but to resign my connection with the estate, and I have accordingly now the honor of resigning all control into the hands of the Honorable the Minister for Lands."
3064. What is the date of that? The 6th of July, 1876. Here is Mr. Garrett's minute, and the Governor's decision upon it, and my minute sending it to the officers concerned, which is about four months before the date on which the Deputy Surveyor says he received no intimation. I only notice this casually. If I had more time to go into the thing I might discover other misstatements. Not in the slightest degree directly or indirectly did I ever think of ignoring the Deputy Surveyor General at all.
3065. Does this reference by you to the Deputy Surveyor General show when the minute reached him? It seems to have reached him on the 7th. It was marked to him on that day.

3066. Does that show that it reached him on that day. That is, the notation to him? I have no doubt he saw it.

3067. But there is nothing on the papers to show that he did? ———

3068. I am afraid that the passing of papers is uncertain? It would hardly be uncertain in a case of that sort—knocking £100 off a man's salary.

3069. Here is another set of papers which have been referred to—his application for the return of a Volunteer land order certificate? I recollect this case very well.

3070. What is the date of the application for the return of the land order? The 8th of July.

3071. When was it dealt with? It is marked, "Approved under the circumstances explained."

3072. That was on the 9th? No; on the same day Dr. Wilson brought it to me himself, and explained the facts. He said it was a thing which had been done before, and I approved of the return of the certificate as for the Minister. I frequently deal with cases in this way. If it had gone to be registered it might not have come back within a week or ten days, and as the paper was complete in itself I dealt with it there and then.

3073. What were the circumstances attending this case which induced you to grant that application. I granted it on Mr. Wilson's personal representations, and the order was returned in the usual way.

3074. When was it returned? On the 9th—the following day. Dr. Wilson was in a hurry for it, and he waited. They wanted to locate the order elsewhere. When agents take cases like that in hand they generally follow them up through the branches, and so get the business done quicker. This matter then went to the surveyor with the suggestion that the instructions for survey should be returned, and the Deputy Surveyor said that he could not order the return of the instructions without the authority of the Secretary for Lands.

3075. What is the date of his memo.? The 26th of July.

3076. And the Volunteer order had been returned on the 9th? Yes.

3077. Did that fact appear on the papers? Yes; it was on that that Mr. Fitzgerald wrote his minute. Then I submitted it to the Minister. I said that no authority from the Minister was needed for the return of instructions for survey—that it was a matter which rested with the Surveyor General, and I said that I could only regard the Deputy Surveyor's minute only as disputing my right to act as I had done. I stated that if any conflicting claim appeared, or any other difficulty had been pointed out, it would have been a different matter, but Mr. Fitzgerald simply refused to direct the return of the instructions. I asked whether I was to act for the Minister or not; and in cases where I so acted whether the Deputy Surveyor General was entitled to refuse to follow up that action.

3078. That is the effect of your minute? Yes, I submitted it to the Minister, and he directed that the case should be sent to the Commission.

3079. What is the date of the last minute you wrote? The 21st of August. I stated: "The real purport of the Deputy Surveyor General's memo. is, evidently, that the action taken is incorrect, or perhaps unauthorized. I can only state as to the first, that Dr. Wilson in leaving this letter with me personally explained to me the facts, and that they appeared to me to be sufficient for a compliance with his request. I did not think it necessary to write them down; but in consequence of the unexpected action now taken, I have since asked him to repeat his statement in writing, which he has done. I beg also to submit that in taking the above course, in a matter resting with the Ministerial Department, I acted, as I do in many like cases, as head of the department, and therefore for the Minister. And I trust that the Minister will uphold my authority to deal with these cases. It is a rather unusual thing for an officer of another department to call into question the action of the head of the Minister's Department on matters coming within the province of the latter to deal with. The necessary action in the case should be completed I think." Then I added: "If there was any conflicting interest, either existing or anticipated, or any other objection apparent to the Survey Department, and the same had been submitted, it would be a different matter. Nothing however of the sort is urged. The object, therefore, of the Deputy Surveyor General's minute can hardly be mistaken." That is my minute to Mr. Farnell, and I think it is very clear.

3080. At the date of the Deputy Surveyor General's minute all that had been asked for had been granted—they had got the order? Yes; but the effect of my request to the Survey Department was to avoid the unnecessary survey of land which was not going to be taken up.

3081. The case had gone beyond the stage where the Deputy Surveyor General's opinions could have any weight: he was too late? Yes; but it was quite open for the Minister if there were any sufficient grounds for it, which I felt certain there were not, to refuse the further application.

3082. Another application? Yes; the further application in virtue of the returned certificate.

3083. But as soon as the certificate was handed back to the agent could he not have sold it to some one else? Yes; I see.

3084. It may have got into the hands of other people who knew nothing about the transaction, and they might have used it in the same way? Yes.

3085. Mr. Ranken.] Would it not hold a certain area for a certain period, and upon its return might it not be used for the same purpose again; and by the constant shifting and changing of Volunteer certificates could not a large quantity of land be kept from the operation of free selection? Yes; I think there is something in that objection; but you must either treat people as honest men in every case, or you must look at all transactions under the supposition that they are trying to cheat the Government. In all my dealings with the public it has not been my custom to look out for dishonesty. At the time that case of Landale's occurred in 1873, before the passing of the Act of 1875, there was none of this looking out for dummyism. There was then a wonderful laxity and openness in dealing with these matters compared to what there has been since.

3086. President.] Do you not look upon the Volunteer land orders as one of the most effective weapons in the hands of dummies? I do not know that I do.

3087. Are they not much used by those who desire to hinder conditional purchase? They can only hinder it to the extent of 50 acres. They are not half such a powerful engine of dummyism as has been—as has existed in the Conditional Sales Branch, where people have been allowed to hold land for twelve or eighteen months without any attempt being made to call upon them to prove residence.

3088. Is that the practice now? No; Mr. Farnell stopped it. I submitted a long minute to him on the subject. It had become so general that thousands of pounds had to be repaid, where persons threw up their land just as it was about to be surveyed.

3089. Mr. Ranken.] Did this practice retard settlement? It was the exception rather than the rule for land to be surveyed within twelve months, and as a man could always tell when a surveyor was about to come upon his land, he would hold until then for nothing, and send in an application for the refund of the deposit just as the land was about to be measured.
3090. President.] With regard to Volunteer land orders, are they not the best means in the hands of the lessees of runs to stop selection where they have reason to expect that it will take place? I do not think it is as good as the other which I have just mentioned. A lessee has to pay at least £50 for his order, while in the other case he would only have to pay 5s. an acre, and then to get it back.
3091. But at the present time? I think that in the hands of clever and unscrupulous lessees they might be used for the purpose you indicate.
3092. Mr. Ranken.] The fact that there are no conditions to land so taken up would make such orders more valuable? Yes.
3093. President.] And if this case were to become a precedent could not the same Volunteer land order be used again? I do not think it would be allowed to happen twice in respect to the same order. The certificate when re-tendered would show that it had been cancelled.
3094. There is nothing to prevent a person who receives it from you from selling it again? No. The delays in dealing with these orders are as great as free selections, and an order cannot last for more than five years under the regulations.
3095. As fast as the owners of the orders got them returned they might use them again? They might, but as a matter of fact I do not think they ever would, or that such orders have been used twice over in one single instance.
3096. If they have not been used twice what is the use of the owners asking to have them returned? Instead of twice, I should say the third time. They have not been returned more than once.
3097. Do you know anything with respect to these papers—minutes and correspondence with respect to a special lease to J. A. Brown, at Lord Howe's Island? Yes; I recollect them; they were tolerably recent. The minute written in these papers was the origin of all the matters which Mr. Fitzgerald has been bringing up.
3098. Perhaps you will explain the circumstances attending that case. What is the date of the first application on behalf of Mr. Brown? The 13th of May, 1878.
3099. How was that dealt with? It was referred to the Governor, because it was supposed to be within islands included in his jurisdiction, but they were found to be within the jurisdiction of the local government.
3100. What is the date of the Governor's minute? It is the same date. The Governor wrote: "If found not to be part of Howe's Island the application may be returned to me."
3101. What was the course of the document after that? It went to the Deputy Surveyor General for report.
3102. On what day? The 23rd of May, 1878. He returned it on the 30th of May, 1878, stating that the islands were part of Lord Howe's Island, and recommending that if a lease or license be granted the tree ferns and palms should not be removed with special permission, as many were peculiar to the island, and if permitted to be exported must soon become extinct.
3103. Mr. Ranken.] The island was held to be a part of New South Wales? Yes; and the Deputy Surveyor General therefore made this special recommendation. Then the day afterwards there came another letter from Mr. Brown adverting to his letter of the 13th, on which there is a report from the Deputy Surveyor General, and in which Mr. Brown tendered the sum of £50 as a fair allowance for the first year's rent, and requesting that if the department disagreed as to the amount being insufficient, the rent should be decided by arbitration.
3104. That letter was written by Mr. Raymond? Yes, as Mr. Brown's agent, and then it went to Mr. Harriott, who says: "I recommend that a lease be granted for Roach Island and the small islets immediately surrounding it at the rent offered. Term, annual. Removal of native plants prohibited, and no right of purchase conferred." The Minister approved of that; and I then submitted that—"Special lease may perhaps be approved at rental offered, subject to the conditions proposed by the Surveyor General." Mr. Harriott wrote a minute, on which the matter was referred back to the Surveyor General.
3105. Is there any reference in that minute of Mr. Harriott's, to Mr. Fisher's claim? Yes: "As an application by Mr. W. Fisher for a protective order from His Excellency the Governor whilst exploring, previous to applying for a lease of an island about a mile northwards from Howe's Island, would seem to be materially affected by the position in which such information might place Mr. J. Brown's application." The paper then again went to the Surveyor General by direction of the Minister, when the Deputy Surveyor General again expressed his opinion that a special lease might be obtained subject to the non-removal of indigenous plants. Mr. Fitzgerald added: "But if Mr. Fisher is prepared to take out a special lease on terms similar to or at a higher rent than that tendered by Mr. Brown, that his claim as prior to Mr. Brown's should be given a preference." That came to me in the usual course for submission to the Minister for Lands. I had been speaking to Mr. Harriott about this matter before. We were talking about how far our relative duties went—his, the Surveyor General's, and mine, and I thought he agreed with me. I pointed out that we had got the report of the Surveyor General as to acreage and terms upon which the lease should be granted, and all the necessary local information, and the only point I considered open was whether Mr. Fisher's application came within the province of the Lands Department. I consider that recommendations ought to emanate from the head of the administrative department. In the minute which I wrote on the 26th of June I said:—"The report required from the Survey Department in the matter was as to area, &c., which having now been furnished as well as the accompanying chart sent in by Mr. Brown (the applicant), showing the islets in question, the acreage of which according to scale will be about 46 acres, the lease will now I conclude go for approval. The question as to Mr. Fisher's claim to be considered in the matter at the present stage, rent to be paid, &c., are such as come within the province of the Lands Department to deal with, and as to which any recommendations or suggestions should, I think, emanate from the head of the administrative division of the department, having the supervision of this particular class of business. As this case happens to have come through my hands, I must say that in my opinion Mr. Fisher has no legal status as against Mr. Brown, who has duly complied in regard to his application with all the requirements of the law." As to who should should get the lease, and what rent should be paid was essentially a Ministerial matter. We do not refer to the Survey Office for opinions on these matters. Mr. Fisher did not apply for a lease at all. He got a sort of protective permission to explore before he applied, and I did not see that that was to take effect over a man who came and made a definite application and paid his money.

W. W.
Stephen, Esq.
3 Feb., 1879.

3106. What were the dates of the application? Mr. Fisher's application was dated the 7th of May; and Mr. Brown's was dated the 13th. "Before applying for a lease," Mr. Fisher wrote, "I propose sending a vessel to further explore and survey the place, and fearing that I might be doing this for other people's benefit, I have humbly to solicit that your Excellency will be pleased to grant a protective order for a short period." I thought it was for the Ministerial Department to decide who should get the lease, and that had to be decided in view of the fact that one applicant only applied for a protective order while he explored, while the other complied with the Regulations and paid his money. All that I did, to give rise to the ill-feeling and antagonism on the part of the Deputy Surveyor General, was to question his right on that particular point. He went out of his way to talk to us about who should get the lease. That was the only point in all the correspondence in which I objected to his dealing with the case.

3107. In your opinion the Deputy Surveyor General was going beyond the scope of his own duties? Yes; upon my saying that and writing this memo. to Mr. Harriott. Mr. Harriott had asked me to send him a memo. stating my views on the subject, and I did so; and it was upon that that Mr. Fitzgerald went out of his way to make remarks about my taking a personal interest in cases where I knew the parties. I know so many people, having lived here all my life, that in every case with which I deal I may be said to take a personal interest. If I cannot state what appears to me to be the truth without being accused of taking a personal interest, it is a hard case.

3108. The Governor wrote this minute on Mr. Fisher's application: "As the small island referred to appears to be part of Howe's Island, and consequently a portion of this colony, this application should, I apprehend, be dealt with by the local Government, and not by me under my general commission for dealing with islands in the South Pacific 'not within the jurisdiction of any Colonial Government.'" That was written on the 10th of May, 1878? Yes; I do not recollect having seen that before. That was sent on from the Colonial Secretary's Office on the 13th of May.

3109. To your office? Yes.

3110. And you wrote a minute on it? Yes; a special lease has been granted of these small islands to Mr. J. Brown who made definite application for the same and tendered £50 as the yearly rental. This application was sent on to the chief officer Occupation yesterday."

3111. What is the date of that? That date is meant for the 8th of June. The paper came to me separately.

3112. Do you remark that this minute was sent on from the Colonial Secretary's Office on the same day that Mr. Brown's application was made to you, namely, on the 13th? I notice it now; but not before. The paper came to me through Mr. Rich, his date being the 16th.

3113. Mr. Brown's application was dealt with, and Mr. Fisher's application was not dealt with for a month? Yes, I suppose so; it seems as if that were so.

3114. Mr. Brown's application was made the same day that this application of Mr. Fisher's was sent to you from the Colonial Secretary's Office? It seems to have been so.

3115. The next case before us are papers which relate to Mr. Bayly, in which there is a telegram from you to the District Surveyor directing special attention to certain matters? Yes.

3116. How was it that that telegram came to be sent? It was a matter perfectly explained to the Surveyor General when I wrote a long minute about it, which he accepted. I think Mr. Edward Allan, or somebody else, said that it was urgently required that the land should be surveyed. He said that Mr. Bolton was on the spot and was going away, and he asked if I could send a telegram to him to get the land surveyed. Surveyor Mann was at that time in the locality near Mudgee. I said, "All right." The Surveyor General was not in at the time. I fully intended to let him know what I had done, but I did not do so, and the Surveyor General was very angry about it, and Mr. Fitzgerald was very angry about it. I wrote a memo. to say that it should not occur again. I sent the telegram to expedite matters, and if I had asked the authority of the Minister for sending that telegram nothing could have been said. Why should this thing, which was settled six years ago, be brought up against me?

3117. Did not the same thing occur in any other case? Never, that I know of.

3118. You do not remember any other cases similar to that? No.

3119. Was there not a considerable correspondence between you and the Surveyor General? No; there was the single memorandum, which I suppose Mr. Adams has got.

3120. You do not recollect any similar case in which you gave instructions to a surveyor? No, I do not. There was one case in which I communicated with a surveyor in his capacity of appraiser, and in that capacity he was my subordinate, as I appoint the appraisers. If any other case has occurred in which I communicated with a surveyor, I cannot recollect it. Some few months ago a case occurred in which I had a doubt as to whether the instructions should go from me or not.

3121. We have heard of other cases? I can only recollect one. I know there was a case in which I had a doubt, but I am not sure that the instructions were sent out. Is it fair to bring up a thing of that sort amicably settled between me and the Surveyor General, in regard to which the Surveyor General has written on these papers:—"The telegram of the Under Secretary arose out of a misapprehension."

3122. That was the case on which you wrote to Mr. Anderson? Yes; I do not see anything so grave about it. I admit I should have told the Surveyor General, and I intended to do so.

3123. What was the effect of the application? That some land for which Mr. Bayly had applied might be measured.

3124. With regard to the papers in Smith's case, which you have returned, do you desire to say anything more? I made three attempts to write a memo. on the case, but could not get time. The only observations I have to make are briefly these:—With regard to all matters connected with the lease, with the survey of the lease, and with the conflicting claim of Mr. Reading to a portion of the land which was afterwards satisfied, I had nothing to do. With regard to a minute which Mr. Ranken pointed out to the effect that Mr. Garrett had given certain directions as to whether the terms of the lease were being complied with, it was the duty of the Survey Department to see to that. The case went to the Surveyor General for that purpose. At that time Mr. Moriarty was acting as chief clerk, and therefore directly the papers came to me they would go to him to be sent in the proper routine to the heads of the branches. Mr. Fitzgerald knows that as well as I do; and I think the officers of the department would all bear out my my statement. When the lease came to me it came in the usual proper form, showing the approval of the Minister for it to go on to appraisalment. With regard to a statement to which Mr. Ranken referred, that Mr. Fitzgerald had been prevented from getting papers which were in my possession by which proper action was prevented, I wish to point out that the first and only time Mr. Fitzgerald asked me for these papers was when every action was taken which could possibly be taken, the appraisalment having been passed by the Executive Council. The papers had been withdrawn by Mr. Budge from the Executive Council for submission to the Premier. When Mr. Fitzgerald asked me for them—I thought he asked in a rather peremptory manner, but of that I took no notice—I said that it was for me to submit the papers to the Minister. I took the papers to the Minister, and they were sent to the Surveyor General for report. My taking these papers to the Minister had nothing whatever to do with the case one way or the other, as all the action in it had been taken. If there had been any particular objection as to the value of the land why was it not stated by the Survey Department? Mr. Fitzgerald must have known at the time he asked for the papers that they were properly in my province to submit them to the Premier. Mr. Farnell directed that they should be sent to the Surveyor General, and I sent them. The Deputy Surveyor General reported that the value of the improvements had been grossly over estimated, and that the land was grossly under valued. Mr. Bayly, whom I believe to be an honorable man, valued the improvements, I think, at £250, which was more than sufficient to cover the purchase; and with regard to the land, he valued it at double the upset price. There is a statement to the effect that 50 acres of the land would not bring 5s. per acre. I see here a sort of semi-official letter in which Mr. Bayly says: "In reference to our conversation this morning as to the extent of the improvements made by Mr. Smith on the 100 acres (portion 94), situate in the parish of Strathdon, county of Cook, I made a minute examination of the property, and am fully convinced from my own observation, and from the particulars I gleaned, that the requisite improvements had been made. They consist of the clearing and planting of about 10 acres of land, together with fencing. The latter I set very little value upon, but the former, I am convinced, from the size and closeness of the surrounding timber, could not have cost less than from £9 to £10 per acre for clearing alone. To this must be added the value of trenching the ground and the trees planted." In another report Mr. Bayly states: "I have the honor to state that in conformity with your instructions I have visited and carefully inspected the land situate in the parish of Strathdon, county of Cook, applied for by Thomas Smith to be purchased in virtue of certain improvements, and found that sufficient improvements have been effected to comply with the Act. In conjunction with Mr. Wright, on the part of applicant, we proceeded to assess the value of the property after appointing an arbitrator. My assessment was £250, and that of Mr. Wright's was £130; not being able to agree we called in the services of Mr. Harris, the arbitrator, who fixed the value at £130."

Stephen, Esq.

3125. Mr. Ranken.] Does it not appear from the whole case that the important condition named by Mr. Garrett as to the bonâ fides of the lessee was never considered, the thing having slipped through from a lease to a purchase? That would be in connection with the lease papers which I do not suppose I ever saw, and which it was no part of my duty to see carried out. Mr. Fitzgerald himself must know that that was no part of my duty. This thing has been characterized as a job and a fraud, and Mr. Fitzgerald has produced these papers to show that I had something to do with it. It is my intention to bring the matter before the Cabinet and push it forward. I intend to ask for a full inquiry into the whole thing by the officers of the department, so that I can produce my witnesses, Mr. Farnell and others, to show what I had to do with it.

3126. President.] There is a question or two I wish to ask you upon the papers in Mr. Bayly's case, registered 10,455/76;—will you have the goodness to look at that letter? Yes.

3127. What is the date of it? 16th September, 1874.

3128. That is a copy of a letter written by you to Mr. Bayly? It seems to be.

3129. Would you mind reading it? "With reference to my interview with you a few days since on the subject of certain selections made by you in virtue of several Volunteer land orders, I am directed to apprise you that under the report of Mr. Warden Johnston, the Minister for Lands has approved of that portion of the Gulgong Gold-field Reserve which embraced the land applied for by you being revoked, with a view to allow the selections referred to being allowed to stand. I am to add that the local Crown Lands agent has been apprised to the foregoing effect." Then there is this postscript: "I am to add that all other selections made by you in virtue of Volunteer land orders situated within the said gold-field will also be accepted."

3130. There is a minute of yours which seems to be intended to bear the same date? Yes; it seems to have reference to this letter.

3131. That letter was written in consequence of that minute? I think so. Mr. Bayly, the Minister, and I were talking about it for a long time in the Minister's room.

3132. That letter was written on that minute of yours? I think so.

3133. Was there any Ministerial action on that minute? No; I do not see any. There is this minute by the Minister which comes afterwards: "In order to deal satisfactorily with this matter, the report of the District Surveyor had better be obtained." After that it was referred to Licensed-Surveyor Anderson.

3134. What was the date of the Minister's minute? The 29th of September.

3135. Is that the only minute written on that by the Minister? It seems to be so.

3136. Then the decision in the case was your own decision? No, it was not. Mr. Farnell frequently gave verbal directions, and I carried them out. I recollect that the minute was written immediately after an interview between Mr. Bayly and Mr. Farnell. There are many cases upon which action has been taken for which I cannot show actual Ministerial responsibility.

3137. There is nothing in writing to show that the case came before Mr. Farnell until the 29th of September? No, I do not notice anything.

3138. This letter, written by your authority to Mr. Bayly, was afterwards quoted by him in other cases as a precedent? Yes, and was written as the result of a long interview we had one morning.

3139. The postscript states that all other selections made by Mr. Bayly of a similar character would be accepted in the same way? Yes.

3140. Mr. Ranken.] Was not that a very wide authority to give? There were only five or six.

3141. President.] When you were here the other day you expressed a desire to see certain memoranda written by Mr. Fitzgerald in respect to the papers he left with us. At that time we had not Mr. Fitzgerald's authority for saying that you could have them, but since then we have referred to him with a desire desire to meet your views as far as possible. Mr. Fitzgerald has consented to these memoranda being seen here by you, but at the same time he reminds us that they were written with a view to refresh his own memory only, as containing the substance of the evidence he intended to give. If you still desire to see them there is no objection to your doing so. Witness: If my evidence on the principal case is complete I do not see that there is much use in my seeing them. I thought that they were charges brought by him against me, and that therefore I had a right to see them without reference to the Deputy Surveyor General. I may as well see them.

WEDNESDAY, 5 FEBRUARY, 1879.

Present:—

MR. ABBOTT, | MR. RANKEN.

R. P. ABBOTT, ESQ., PRESIDENT, IN THE CHAIR.

W. W. Stephen, Esq., was called in and further examined:—

3142. President.] Some reference was made the other day to papers respecting the purchase of land by Messrs. Clarke and Macleay, near Narrandera; and to the purchase of town allotments at Murrumburrah, in virtue of improvements effected under a special lease;—have you brought those papers with you? No, the papers you first referred to are being copied for Parliament, and the papers in the Murrumburrah case are with the Surveyor General, but I can tell you the particulars of these cases.

W. W.
Stephen, Esq.
5 Feb., 1879.

3143. Will you be good enough to do so? There was a sale by auction of certain lands at Narrandera to Messrs. Clarke and Macleay. The original application to have the land put up to auction was made some months ago by Mr. Rowe or Dr. Rowe, of Melbourne; but as the run has been since transferred to Messrs. Clarke and Macleay we look to them as the applicants. The land was duly advertised, and as far as I can recollect, three or four days, or it might be five before the day of sale, Mr. Armstrong, a land agent, wrote in and asked to have five or six lots withdrawn because they contained valuable red gum timber.

3144. Who is Mr. Armstrong? He is a land agent in Sydney. There were two or three letters from him on the subject, and I think there was an application from somebody else which came in only on the morning of the sale. Mr. Farnell approved of the lots being withdrawn from sale, and on the same day that he did so he went out of town. In the evening Mr. John Clarke called upon me and stated that he had heard of this decision of the Minister. He said it was rather hard—after waiting for the land so long, and after its having at length been advertised, and there being no official information in the department as to the existence of valuable timber—that the sale should not go on. I stated that I could not possibly do anything in the matter as the Minister for Lands had instructed that the land should be withdrawn, but I arranged that I would represent the matter to Mr. Leary, who was acting for the Minister for Lands in his absence. Mr. Clarke was in a great way about it, and I thought that both sides ought to be heard, more especially as land had been withdrawn from sale on representations made on behalf of some one. The withdrawal had been made in a hurry and on grounds which were found to be uncalled for. Mr. Leary seemed to concur in my suggestion that the sale should be postponed, which would have all the effect of a withdrawal. Mr. Farnell was expected back the next day, and Mr. Leary said that he would rather not touch it, but that I might come back to him to-morrow if Mr. Farnell had not returned. Mr. Farnell did come back and Mr. Clarke and Mr. Raymond saw the Minister. Mr. Clarke said that if the land was reserved in the public interest he would make no objection; and Mr. Farnell ordered the sale to be postponed. The telegram conveying that order was written immediately and taken up to the telegraph office by a special messenger, and I have the certified copy of the telegram, showing that it was handed in at the Sydney Office at 5 minutes past 11, or nearly one hour before the sale took place, and the telegram was marked very urgent. It appeared afterwards that the telegram was not received at the land office until 10 minutes or a quarter past 12, after the land had been sold. Then came a very indignant letter, charging the Department with corruption and undue influence, from Mr. McElhone, and a letter from Mr. Armstrong, implying that the telegram was kept back on purpose. But I repeat that the papers show that the telegram was sent nearly one hour before the sale; it was marked very urgent, and was lodged at the telegraph office at 5 minutes past 11. It is the only case out of hundreds in which the telegram ever missed. I pointed out that if there were any neglect at all it was on the part of the telegraph office, that I acted in accordance with the views of the Minister in allowing him to hear both sides of the case. Mr. Farnell had said to me once or twice that I must be careful how I withdrew these lands on the "eve of an auction sale."

3145. Mr. Ranken.] Did Messrs. Clarke and Macleay become the purchasers? Yes. Two or three minutes have been written since then. Mr. Farnell seems to be satisfied on the day that the telegram was sent; but since then he wrote a minute censuring Mr. Edwards and the office generally.

3146. President.] Did the telegram actually reach the land agent in time to stop the sale? No; it did not reach him until 10 or 15 minutes past 12 o'clock.

3147. At what time did it reach the telegraph station? About the same time I suppose.

3148. Then the delay occurred at the Sydney telegraph office? Yes; I took special care to get a certified copy and the time the telegram was lodged.

3149. With regard to the lease of town allotments at Murrumburrah, what are the facts of that case? That case is not decided yet. There was a special lease given in connection with the railway station which was recommended by and proved to be of advantage to the railway department. Mr. Pretious applied as agent for the lessees, Messrs. Barbour & Co., who having erected a smithy and stores, desired to buy in right of improvements. I submitted a memo. to the Minister as to whether the application should be complied with wholly or in part, and the Minister referred the matter to the Surveyor General for report as to the advisability of alienating the land.

3150. Do you recollect the area of the land? 5 acres. I pointed out to the Minister that the lease part was given by the Occupation Branch, and that I have nothing to with their action; but when it comes before me as an application to purchase under the 2nd clause of the Alienation Act it is a matter for the Ministerial Department to deal with.

W. W. Stephen, Esq. 3151. The case of Mr. Fisher has been referred to in Mr. Moriarty's evidence, and I think you made some reference to it in your former examination—a case in which, owing to action taken by Mr. Moriarty, there were some £1,600 saved to the revenue? Yes, it was a case of forfeiture of conditional purchases. The lands were put up for sale at auction by the Survey Department, although they stood with the conditional purchasers. Afterwards a recommendation was made that the sale should stand, and that the conditional purchases should be forfeited.

5 Feb., 1879.

3152. You have been examined in regard to the case before? Yes, and copies of the papers have been sent in. On the 23rd of May I wrote this memo., which was approved by Mr. Driver: "The deeds of grant having been issued for the auction purchases and the lands having, it is stated, been since transferred to other parties, the application now made had better be complied with. There can be no blame attached to any branch of this Department in the sale of the land, seeing that in the Charting Branch of the Survey Office the lands were passed in for auction seven or eight months after the conditional purchases were made, showing thereby how vague the descriptions were. It is fortunate the conditional purchasers have not insisted upon their claims but have consented to take back their money, otherwise great inconvenience and necessity for compensation might have arisen. Auction sales to stand."

3153. But the ground put forward was that these conditional purchases were merely dummies playing into the hands of the lessees? That was the ground taken by the Chief Commissioner.

3154. Will you look at the evidence you gave in respect to this matter previously, and tell us if you desire to say anything more about it? For the justification of my action in that matter I rely on my minutes of 23rd and 25th May, which were approved by the Minister. The first I have read; the second is as follows: "At the time these sales took place there was no draughtsman attached to the Moama office, or the errors might not (very likely) have happened. I think that this illustrates the necessity of giving effect to the recommendation made in my report last year, after inspection of the land offices at Albury, Hay, &c., that all the land offices of importance should have periodically, at short intervals, the services of a draftsman." I know that Mr. Moriarty on further investigation thought that these people were dummies, and that instead of the money being refunded the conditional purchase should be forfeited. It is quite probable they were dummies, but at the time I did not take them to be so.

3155. Mr. Ranken.] The ground that Mr. Moriarty takes is, that if the papers had been referred to him the irregularity would have been arrested? I have pointed out that it was too late. The Survey Department had brought these lands to auction sale without me or anybody else knowing anything about it. The land had been sold at auction, the deed had been granted, the property conveyed to somebody else, and it was not therefore possible to stop the thing. At the time my memo. was written the deeds of the auction purchase had been issued.

3156. But Mr. Moriarty is of opinion that the routine adopted on your suggestion opens the door for jobbery, and that if the routine had involved the submission of the papers to him this matter could not have gone on as it had done? It was too late to do anything. The auction purchasers had got their legal title. All the applications, I think, were away with the surveyor at that particular time, and no information had been got about them.

3157. This is what Mr. Moriarty says about the routine:—"Cases occurred which would not have occurred if the papers had been referred to me. There was one remarkable case in which a nefarious job was almost perpetrated. It went to this length, that the Under Secretary recommended the Minister to approve of the payment of over £1,600 of deposits to dummy selectors in a case which had been carefully manipulated by the agents of the parties concerned. That case I referred to in my minute of June 20, 1877. This routine has the effect of making the Minister give a decision on imperfect information, and without the advice of officers who are dealing with an important part of the case, and it leaves the door open to jobbery. The Under Secretary in one of these minutes complains of me for having thrown out this imputation of jobbery, and I therefore take the first opportunity of saying that I have not charged the Under Secretary with jobbery. I should be very sorry to do it, but I do say that the routine is a routine which leaves the door open for jobbery to be perpetrated?" As a general rule, whenever I think it necessary I refer to Mr. Moriarty, but this case I regarded as dealing with auction sales which came under my supervision. These sales were completed, and the case seemed to be so clear, and the way out of the difficulty brought about by the Survey Department seemed so easy, I made my recommendation for the best, and as being the easiest way out of the grave difficulty into which the department had got. It never occurred to me to question the validity of the conditional purchases. If I had had more time for reflection I might have suspected that the parties were playing fast and loose. I do not think that a case of that sort is likely to happen once in a thousand times.

3158. President.] You seldom have cases in which the refund is so large? No. The principle is the same whether the sum is £100 or £1,000. I do not think that since I have been Under Secretary, since 1872, that more than five or six cases of that sort could have happened, or in which there could have been any ground of complaint of that sort.

3160. Were not those cases of Landale's and of Shanahan and Jennings' pretty much on the same footing? I think you have had ferretted up pretty well all the cases which have taken place.

3159. The next point to which I desire to refer you is to the delay in the signature of the correspondence to which Mr. Moriarty refers in his minute of the 27th January, 1874. When asked for the grounds upon which that minute was written, Mr. Moriarty stated to us:—"Those circumstances obviously were that letters from the department, letters which had been prepared for signature, replies to correspondence, instructions to officers, business which had been completed and only awaited the Under Secretary's signature,—such letters were not signed habitually for periods so great as to warrant me in then calling the delays which occurred unparalleled. I spoke of matters which were then passing daily through my own hands to the Under Secretary, and which came back to me after some interval from him. I referred to the then current daily routine, and I said that the delays which occurred in the Under Secretary affixing his mere signature to letters which had been prepared were injurious, unparalleled, and prejudicial to the Public Service. In repeating that statement now, after this long interval, I do not say that the delays there complained of existed at a later date. Partly as the result of that statement, perhaps, a better state of things came about for a long time. The reference to this question had one good result at any rate, in that it stimulated increased activity." Again, Mr. Moriarty says: "The delay in the affixing of his signature was a personal thing habitual to the Under Secretary himself—a personal matter, not a delay in his office. Pressed letters had been written so long before the Under Secretary signed them that they had to be written over again before impressions could be taken in the transfer book." Again, he says: "My attention was called to the fact that the letters were so long written that they could not get them transferred into the transfer book?" When does Mr. Moriarty say that took place? W. W. Stephen, Esq.

be

5 Feb., 1879.

3161. In 1874, about the time that minute was written as to the manner in which he signed the letters? In the first place I wish to say that I am not aware of the constant and repeated delays of which he speaks, and I do not wish to retort with any counter statements as to the delays in Mr. Moriarty's signature of letters when he had far less to do, although I believe I could do so. If these delays had been so great, he might, as he expressed such a great desire to help me when he came back to the department, have pointed them out to me privately or officially, and not have taken advantage of a minute on a different subject to bring them forward when the Minister complained of his acting in an irregular way.

3162. Mr. Moriarty has stated that these delays extended not for days only but over weeks? It might be so; but I do not think it could be. I believe the letters to which he referred were some letters as to which there was some objection by the Minister that he had signed them A. O. Moriarty, instead of for the Under Secretary. I have with me a memo. which I have come across on this subject. My memo. of 7th February, 1874, was: "Letters stated to have been recopied some days ago not yet to hand." Mr. Moriarty's reply, written under, was: "I gave these letters to Mr. Blackman to have recopied. Letters were returned to me by him, which he supposed to have been the copies, and having read over the originals, I did not read them again. These I sent up to the Under Secretary some days since, and they have not been returned. If they have not been recopied it is, I presume, owing to his instructions.—A.O.M., 7/2/1874." My reply to that was: "I can only repeat that they have never been sent to me. There has now been a delay of nearly a fortnight, simply because Mr. M. thought fit to countermand an instruction given by me, solely for the sake (at the time) of avoiding delay as well as annoyance to himself. When are they likely to be submitted, if they have been made? I have the originals, with Mr. M.'s signature erased, and I have never seen any others. He is therefore to blame in this case for that delay which is (as he states) so injurious to the Public Service. Please return this.—W.W.S., 7 Feb." Mr. Moriarty's reply was: "If these papers which Mr. Stephen has are not copies, as I have supposed—not the cancelled originals—they had better, I suppose, be sent down to be copied now. I do not accept any blame in the matter.—A.O.M." I believe there was a delay of a month or five weeks over those letters.

3163. Do you know of any other delays in the signature of correspondence which might be intended to be included in that assertion of Mr. Moriarty? I am not aware of any. There often have been delays in signing letters, but not delays of that character, as far as I can remember. Sometimes I have had my room full of correspondence, and it is quite probable that signed letters may have got under papers for report, and delays may have occurred in that way.

3164. There is a case referred to by Mr. Moriarty, in which you recommended an application to take up 50 acres of land by a Volunteer order, out of a measured portion of 59 acres, thus making the 9 acres unavailable? It could be sold by auction.

3165. There was a conditional purchase application for the land as well as the Volunteer land order, and it is said that you recommended the land order purchase, thus throwing out the 9 acres, which could not be used in any other way? The case is one which it is very difficult to understand without all the papers. Within the last fortnight it has been before Mr. Hoskins, because he acted with Mr. Bloomfield who were agents for one of the parties in the matter. It has also come before Sir John Robertson, and I believe that he says the action recommended by me was right; that the Volunteer order should be upheld; and that the 9 acres should go on to auction. I have known a case in which a lot of 8 acres was sold; and I have lately seen cases in which lots of 11 and 14 acres were recommended for auction by the Surveyor General. I noticed them particularly, because I thought the action was inconsistent with that taken in this case. It was Dight Brothers who applied for the land under the Volunteer order, and I believe that Mr. Dight declares that if the Minister does not carry out his promise he will take the case into the Supreme Court.

3166. The land was given to Dight? No, it was refused, and at the present moment the case is in abeyance. Mr. Dight will not give up the land. The case has been before the Minister lately. I am not in a position to say that it has been decided in favour of Mr. Dight, but the tenor of remarks made by Minister, and the general outlook of the case is to uphold Mr. Dight's claim in accordance with my recommendation. They have had a précis made of the case, and I should certainly like you to see the papers.

3167. We should be glad to have them? I should like you to see them.

3168. Perhaps you will have them sent to us? I will.

3169. As to Goldsmith's case you have given evidence in that? Yes; the appraiser has since approved that I was right; that the parties were not dummies at all; and that the land should go on to auction, as originally recommended by me.

3170. Who was the appraiser? The Government appraiser was Mr. Rebello. I do not say that it was not a safe precaution to take to withdraw the land from auction, but, as a matter of fact, it was not necessary. In that case I recommended that the land should go on to auction, that everything was straight and fair, and the Minister approved of my recommendation. The Deputy Surveyor General, however, heard of the case, and he got the papers and the plan, and he took them to the Minister without referring to me in any way. I have never acted in that way to the Deputy Surveyor General. Mr. Farnell admitted that I was right. He had written his minute under what was said to him by the Deputy Surveyor General, who wanted to make out that there could not be improvements on the land, because the plan did not show it seven months previously.

3171. In reference to the desire of the Chief Commissioner for Conditional Sales to have under his control the Lease Branch, it has been said that Mr. Moriarty desired to have this branch placed under him, because it would give him an opportunity of carrying out ideas for which he had worked hard, which he said were on the eve of being spoiled, and which he believes are being spoiled now. It is also stated that the Auditor General is in constant broils with the department about it now? The only thing that the Auditor General has got to do with is the lease rent vouchers; but that is a matter which Mr. Moriarty has not mentioned in his memo. I never see the vouchers myself, but I am told that the most vexatious and annoying memos. are received from the Auditor General in regard to them. Mr. Rolleston came to me about a month ago, and showed me a way in which the business could be better done, and that was by requiring the land agents to perform their duties better; but at the time Mr. Moriarty wrote his minute these difficulties had not arisen, and they have nothing to do with the broad question of the administration of the lease business.

3172.

W. W.
Stephen, Esq.
5 Feb., 1879.

3172. Are the broils referred to of such a nature as would be led up to by mismanagement of the branch? Not in any way as regards the lease work. It is simply that the land agents apply incorrect information, and the clerk who has charge of the Lease Branch, who is a very good officer, says that the Auditor General is constantly inundating him with queries, which ought to be answered in his own office.

3173. Do you think that the Auditor General is more to blame than your own department? It is quite possible that Mr. Brown is to blame.

3174. Mr. Ranken.] Do the differences arise from incorrect descriptions being sent on to the Lease Branch? No, simply out of matters of revenue. Any complaints which have arisen from the Auditor General relate simply to matters of account.

3175. Not from any confusion as to the identification of the lease? Often from the land agents not giving complete information.

3176. In speaking of you Mr. Moriarty says: "He has had a reference made to the Crown law officers upon a point which I believe is known to every clerk in the office, and which is made as plain in the Act itself as any Act can make it. The point was, as to whether land held under pre-emptive leases are open to be sold by auction. The law says it shall; the universal practice has been to assume that it shall, and yet the Under Secretary referred it for decision. In another case he obtained an opinion from Mr. Garrett directly in the teeth of the opinion of the Attorney General and the law." In reply to the question, "Can you tell us what the matters were?" Mr. Moriarty went on to say: "One was with reference to the question whether pre-emptive leases are open to sale by auction. The other was as to whether lands leased by auction, which are not selected on, can be taken from the auction lessee on renewal with a view to satisfy the claims of a new purchaser outside the lease." Can you explain that to us? With regard to the first question, as to whether land held under pre-emptive lease can be sold by auction, I wish to deny Mr. Moriarty's statement most emphatically.

3177. You took no such opinion? I knew that the land could be sold by auction as well as conditionally purchased, but I believe there was a matter in which a land agent, I think it was Mr. Brown, contested the right of the Government to sell such lands, and he urged the point so strongly that the Minister said, "Well, let it be referred to the Crown Law officers."

3178. President.] Had the case reference to land held under pre-lease? Yes, I believe I could prove my denial by showing you the papers in which it was done. I deny the statement as emphatically as I can deny anything. Mr. Moriarty makes a statement, but he does not bring papers in proof of it; I deny his statement, and I will produce the papers to support my denial. With regard to the other matter it puzzled the Minister and the Crown Law officers. It puzzled Mr. Driver so much that at last he would not look at it.

3179. We should be glad to see both of these cases? I will furnish them.

3180. Mr. Ranken.] Mr. Moriarty further states: "The Under Secretary induced Mr. Garrett, in a particular case, to refuse to renew an auction lease—to give somebody else a pre-emptive lease of a selection, out of which there had been no purchase. That was in the teeth of the general practice"? I do not recollect that.

3181. President.] It has also been stated to the Commission that it has been no uncommon thing for cases to be allowed to accumulate, and lie by for twelve months at a time without any attention being paid to them? If you were to go into Mr. Moriarty's room to-morrow you would find cases eighteen months old. I do not know how he got his information—whether he has been into my room or not. I do not believe it is true, but it has nothing to do with Mr. Moriarty if it is.

3182. Mr. Moriarty has stated: "Mr. Stephen one day in conversation with Mr. Blackman threw out a suggestion which Mr. Blackman brought to me, and it was to this effect:—'Whether I was willing to submit all these cases to the Under Secretary for the Minister's sanction, on the understanding that he would submit them in the same way as he did similar cases sent to him by the Surveyor General.' I asked Mr. Blackman, 'Do I understand you as bringing that suggestion from the Under Secretary to me.' He replied, 'Wait a minute.' Mr. Blackman went back to the Under Secretary, and on his return replied, 'That that was the deliberate suggestion of the Under Secretary.' I accepted that proposal, and I am prepared to act upon it, and have acted upon it; but the Under Secretary ignores it." Do you recollect sending any message by Mr. Blackman to Mr. Moriarty? I agreed that matters should come through me to the Minister, but I did not say anything about the Surveyor General. That is the arrangement now, and has been ever since the division of the department. I am responsible for all the officers, and I pay them. I did not mean to say that I was to be precluded from expressing my opinion on any particular matter where I differed from Mr. Moriarty. It is not one case in a dozen, or I may say in fifty, where I should be likely to interfere, but as head of the department I am entitled to do so. Mr. Moriarty has not followed out the arrangement in regard to salaries and promotions, for he has submitted several cases direct to the Minister without reference to me at all. I may have spoken to Mr. Blackman, but I never meant that anything which I spoke to him—any verbal communication—should form the bases of an arrangement to be carried out between Mr. Moriarty and myself. I recollect speaking to Mr. Blackman.

3183. Mr. Ranken.] Had the conversation reference to cases in which the conditional purchase work and yours was likely to clash, or to the question of salaries and promotions? I think the conversation must have referred not to the administration of the law but to matters personal to the officers—appointments, leave of absence, and so forth.

3184. Mr. Moriarty says here: "The Under Secretary has, on a variety of occasions, ignored my right to any voice in the recommendation of, or control of, any subordinate officers." And again: "The Under Secretary will interfere with my subordinates, entertain their applications for leave of absence, and recommend their applications for increases of pay, without my knowing anything at all about it. I had to complain to the Premier that one of my assistants had been called away from his duty without my knowing anything at all about it"? There was one application, for an officer to be allowed to play in a cricket match, which was granted in a hurry. Sir John Robertson said that it must be done. I intended that it should have been sent to Mr. Moriarty, but Mr. Rich forgot to send it. I agree that Mr. Moriarty, having these officers under him, should have something to say upon their applications for leave. That has been settled by Mr. Hoskins and Mr. Farnell too. When the separation of the conditional purchase business took place it was to relieve me and to make things go smoothly. The Conditional Purchase Branch, by the large number of Commissioners and Inspectors who were appointed in 1876, has become numerically larger than mine, and if Mr. Moriarty were to have full control of all his officers his position and influence in the department would be far greater than mine. I grant that he should have a voice in these matters, but to give him sole control would be to give him more power in the department than I have myself as the head of it. W. W. Stephen, Esq.

5 Feb., 1879.

3185. Does not the arrangement made between you give Mr. Moriarty the right of access to the Minister? The arrangement provided that as regarded promotions, leave of absence, suspensions, and all matters of that sort, should come through me as the head of the whole department, and that Mr. Moriarty should always have the option of making his recommendations on those matters through me. Mr. Moriarty tells his Commissioners and Inspectors where to go and what to do, but it was provided that matters of a Ministerial nature of the character of which I have alluded to should come through me, so that I should know what was going on.

3186. Being responsible for the conduct of his own officers and of his own division of the department, does it not seem more reasonable that he should have a voice in their removal or dismissal? It was never understood that he should.

3187. Mr. Moriarty has stated that during the last few weeks a number of young gentlemen who were serving in his division of the office, and who were senior in the grade to those upon whom a vacancy had been conferred, had been ignored. He says that they came to him in a body, and he advised them to put their case in writing and he would submit it, which he did? Yes. These clerks wrote and signed a letter, but I do not believe they composed it themselves. My action in that matter is explained and justified in the papers, of which I have sent you copies. The Minister has fully upheld my action. Some months, when several vacancies occurred, I recommend that ten out of the sixteen promotions should be given to officers attached to the Conditional Sales Branch, and it was partly through my interest with the Treasury that a technical irregularity was not allowed to interfere with them getting their pay.

3188. In the letter to which you refer do not the clerks who sign it protest against the vacancy being given to others? Yes.

3189. Do you recollect the grounds on which they questioned the propriety of your action—whether they put forward a statement to the effect that they supposed they were placed at a disadvantage because they belonged to the Conditional Sales Branch? Yes. My memorandum fully refutes that, and points out why I made the recommendation I did. It showed that three or four of those who claimed promotion had not the slightest right to it.

3190. Do you not think that any feeling which could prompt representations such as those clerks have made must operate very much to the disadvantage of the department? Yes, I am afraid it has been fostered by people who ought to know better. I believe the persons who signed that letter were led to do so by the representations of a clerk in the office who drew it up.

3191. It shows that an undesirable feeling exists between the officers of the branches under you and Mr. Moriarty, to the extent even of suggesting injustice on your part? Such a feeling never existed before Mr. Moriarty came to the department.

3192. But it does exist now? I think only on the part of a very few indeed.

3193. Do you know the name of the gentleman who drew up that letter? I believe I do.

3194. Has anything been done with reference to him? I have an application for an increase of salary, submitted by Mr. Moriarty, coming before me, and I am going to ask if this is the gentleman who composed the letter which Mr. Farnell designated as highly offensive.

3195. Has nothing been said to the gentleman who, as you suppose, wrote the letter? I do not think the others could have written it. One of them, Mr. Stobo, told me that he regretted that he had ever signed it, and he said that he did not see the offensive purport of it. I honestly believe that the gentlemen whom I recommended were fully entitled to the promotion, and they had been doing work for £200 a year which others were getting £250 and £300 for doing. I should be very glad if you could find time to look at those papers about promotions. They show fully the reasons for my action, and that my action has been upheld by the Minister.

3196. There are other cases which have been referred to to show that your interference with Mr. Moriarty's subordinates was objectionable—the cases of Mr. Keele and Mr. Lord? I can only say generally that I do not admit any interference with his officers which I was not entitled to make.

3197. You are said to have made a long complaint to Mr. Driver of Mr. Moriarty having directly called attention of the Minister to the neglect of duty of certain officers under his control. Do you recollect anything of it? I do not recollect the particular case.

3198. Mr. Moriarty says that he had been pressing an inspector of conditional purchases to report upon some urgent cases, and he had been making an arrangement of duties between him and another to allow of him performing what he had in his hands. Mr. Moriarty says that he could get no answers to his letters to this gentleman, and that at last, on the 2nd of July, 1877, he ascertained that he had been on leave of absence for a considerable period. Do you recollect that case? No.

3199. He says that an inspector obtained leave of absence, and then an extension of his leave before he became aware of it? Any case of that sort must have taken place before there was any definite agreement.

3200. Mr. Moriarty says that another inspector applied for leave of absence in October last, that his letter came to your Record Branch on the 1st of November, and remained with you until the 19th of December, when you submitted it to the Minister for approval, who approved of it—that the officer was informed, and that then for the first time the paper was sent to him? I cannot say anything about that. I believe I know the case from the fact that Mr. Hoskins spoke about it before Mr. Moriarty and myself. If that is as represented, the whole thing is a mistake, and I do not know how it occurred. I recollect that a case was spoken about. It was a mistake somewhere either at Records, or with me, or someone else. It was a mistake, and nothing else. The rule is that Mr. Moriarty is to know of everything that is done, and that when leave of absence is granted Mr. Rich shall send on the papers to Mr. Moriarty to carry it out.

3201. Another matter to which Mr. Moriarty has referred is the case of Mr. Evans. Mr. Moriarty says:—"The Commission will observe that the Minister's instruction that I should recommend in matters within my division is dated the 1st February, 1878. On the 13th of March, 1878, Mr. Evans makes this communication to me:—'I beg permission to charge the accompanying application for expenses. Not having been travelling it is impossible to make application otherwise.' This is upon our register, but the first I saw of it was about ten days afterwards, with a communication from the Under Secretary to this effect:—'This seems a special case, which ought to be certified by Mr. Blackman or some gentleman of the

Conditional

Stephen, Esq.

Conditional Purchase Department.' I made this note on it—"The circumstances are special, and the application should have been submitted to me for recommendation. Recommended.' And I addressed it to the Under Secretary. He returned it to me with this—"Not the slightest necessity for any recommendation from the Commissioner, being a money matter I sent it to him for information." I took this to the Minister with a note to this effect:—"I do not think the Minister will approve of the Under Secretary's views, which was contrary to his instructions that I should recommend. And he wrote: 'I think Mr. Moriarty's view is the correct one.' Some months afterwards it came to this: The way in which these inspectors are remunerated is this: so much for each selection they inspect, and so much for travelling allowance. It is only known to me and the officers under me whether these inspectors are employed in travelling on the day set forth in their vouchers or do the duty. We only can check them; and we only know whether they made the reports which they charge for. Yet all these things were dealt with by the Under Secretary without reference to me." I quite agree that these matters should be referred to Mr. Moriarty, and ever since then they have been. The accounts were initialled by our accountant as the correct rate. When Mr. Moriarty thought they ought to be certified, and could only be certified in his branch by officers who could check them, I at once agreed. I thought he was right, and it has been done ever since.

3202. You said there was not the slightest necessity for any recommendation from the Commissioner when he was the only person who could check the account? I cannot say how that occurred.

3203. The clerks in Mr. Moriarty's branch would be the only persons who could check vouchers of this kind? If I could see the particular voucher I have no doubt I could show that there was some ground for my writing that memo. It was different from the ordinary travelling expenses, and involved a principle which it was for the Minister to determine, and which I thought I ought to submit to him.

3204. But Mr. Moriarty would be the only person who could check accounts of that kind from the inspectors? I sent it to be certified to by the head of the branch as to the fact, and as to the principle involved in the voucher I looked upon it that it was my province to determine that or submit it to the Minister. But these matters are trivial.

3205. Mr. Moriarty says: In 1877 I was despatched by the Minister for Lands to the Yanko Creek with the Deputy Surveyor General on a special mission. On the very morning of my departure I had a visit from Mr. King, one of the Commissioners, who asked me what had been done in connection with his complaint against the inspector of his district. A very gross case it was, of having appeared before his Court in a state of intoxication, and ridiculed the proceedings of the Court, and answered the Commissioner with impertinence, turning the proceedings into a very gross farce. I had never heard of it, and I said: "I never heard of such a complaint from you." He said: "I reported it in April last." I found that it had been sent to the Under Secretary and had been untouched from April until August, although all this while I might have been held responsible by the Government and should have been held responsible by the Parliament and out of doors for this misconduct. His report embodied this charge and I was not allowed to see it, no action whatever had been taken upon it, a delay for which I should have been held accountable. This officer was removed to another district, and he would have been dismissed but for the delay. The only thing, I believe, that prevented his dismissal was the circumstance that when dealt with the occurrence was one of very old date. In November he was brought to account for being drunk in the previous April." Do you recollect that case? As far as I can recollect he was called upon to explain, and he furnished an explanation.

3206. Who was the officer? I cannot recollect if Mr. Moriarty does not.

3207. Who was the inspector of the district where Mr. King was Commissioner? There was some delay, and the whole thing was explained to the Minister.

3208. Mr. Wild was the officer, was he not? Yes.

3209. What became of him? He got into a similar mess afterwards, and was allowed to resign; if he had not resigned in all probability more serious measures would have been taken. His resignation was on the ground of blight.

3210. But for the delay in dealing with the case he would have been dismissed in April, 1877? I happen to know that he would not have been dismissed. The matter was inadvertently delayed, but I happen to know of other circumstances which lead me to that conclusion.

3211. Did you not consider that the charge made by Mr. King was sufficient to warrant dismissal? If proved.

3212. Is it likely that Mr. King would make a charge as to a matter which occurred before his own eyes, on insufficient grounds? He might have been mistaken. Mistakes are often made as to persons being drunk.

3213. Could he make a mistake as to the inspector turning the proceedings of the Court into ridicule? As a matter of fact, I believe that Mr. Wild disproved the charge.

3214. Was there any investigation? Nothing further than a report. Mr. Wild sent in a report, and I think statements from one or two witnesses on his behalf. I am speaking entirely from memory.

3215. Is it not a very gross thing that a man in the position of a Conditional Purchase Inspector, having most responsible duties to perform, should be charged with drunkenness, and nothing should be said or done about it until months afterwards? It was an inadvertence; I know it was delayed; but it was not my fault.

3216. That officer was nearly twelve months in the same position afterwards? Yes; he sent in his explanation, and he was warned and reprimanded. I do not believe the delay had anything to do with it. How can Mr. Moriarty say he would have been dismissed? What right has he to say that? He is not the Minister. I disagree with Mr. Moriarty in thinking that he would have been dismissed.

3217. What are your reasons for saying that? I have no particular reason for saying it.

3218. Mr. Ranken. Mr. Moriarty appears to judge by the gravity of the offence? I do not think he would have been dismissed.

3219. President. You will not say why? I cannot say. I think there would have been too much influence brought to bear in his behalf, and that he would have been given a second trial. There have been worse charges made against officers.

3220. In this same position? I think so; one notorious case, in which, after the first offence, the officer was sent up Riverina way.

3221. A Conditional Purchase Inspector? Yes; he was dismissed upon the repetition of the offence. We have had similar complaints in regard to other officers, and a second trial has been given them. I could mention half-a-dozen cases. I am referring to cases dealt with on my recommendation.

3222. Mr. Ranken.] Punishment followed the second offence? In the case of the second offence they were dismissed; but there are two or three in the Public Service now who have been found guilty of drunkenness more than two or three times, and have been retained. I know that in the case referred to, the Minister had pretty well made up his mind to give the inspector another trial.

3223. President.] Who was the Minister? Mr. Garrett, I think. As a matter of fact I told Mr. Garrett the charge, although the letter was not officially submitted.

3224. And the result was that Mr. Wild was removed into another district? Yes.

3225. Where he conducted himself in the same way? He conducted himself worse there, I believe. Mr. Wild was under a family affliction at the time, and that was a reason why the Minister wished to give him another trial.

3226. Mr. Moriarty further says: "One morning I was sitting at my desk, engaged at my business, when I overheard—it was impossible to do otherwise, my door being open—I overheard the Under Secretary call out to Mr. Olivier, a junior officer, something plainly importing that Mr. McElhone had been put up by me to move in Parliament for some papers in Mr. Pretious's case. I naturally felt very indignant at this, but I also felt unwilling to injure Mr. Pretious, who had shortly previously been dismissed, and towards whom at that time I should have been very unwilling to take an ungenerous course. I felt rather inclined to relieve his mind of the contrary impression, and for that reason I begged Mr. Olivier to convey to the Under Secretary that he was entirely mistaken in supposing that I was instrumental in causing reference to this case in Parliament. I thought that was enough; but shortly afterwards Mr. Blackman came into my room from the Under Secretary, and said Mr. Stephen asked him to ask me whether I had not been at the bottom of Mr. McElhone's attack upon Mr. Pretious. I said it is a very singular question. I know how I feel inclined to answer it, but I will not, and beg him to feel assured he was entirely mistaken. In a few minutes afterwards the messenger brought into my room a written memorandum, not marked private or unofficial, in which he alluded to this matter, to the effect that whether I was instrumental in this or not, my conduct to him had been such that he must be excused for entertaining the idea; that I would do well to see that the papers were not brought before Parliament, as they would contain some unpleasant allusions to my removal from office some time before." Do you recollect that circumstance? I recollect something of that sort. I was suffering great provocation from different things which Mr. Moriarty had said and done. Mr. McElhone had promised me two days before that he would not press the matter, when I said to him: "You do not want those papers about Pretious. He has suffered enough. What is the use of bringing them before Parliament?" The day afterwards I found that Mr. McElhone had again moved for the papers. Mr. McElhone was often in Mr. Moriarty's room. As to sending him a message of that sort, I do not recollect it.

3227. Do you recollect suggesting that Mr. Moriarty should use some influence to prevent the papers being brought before Parliament, because papers relating to his own dismissal would be attached to them? Yes; I recollect something of that sort. It was a private memo., and the Minister stated that Mr. Moriarty had no right to register it. It was marked A. O. Moriarty, Esq., without his official designation. The tenor of the memo. showed that it was meant to be private, and the Minister cancelled the registration.

3228. It contained no wanton, indelicate, or indecent reference to Mr. Moriarty's dismissal from office, some years before? Mr. Moriarty may have taken it so; it was not meant to be so.

3229. Did you mean it as a threat? No; I was anxious that these papers should not be published, and at that particular time I was under great provocation about things which Mr. Moriarty had written and said. I talk loud and impulsively, and Mr. Moriarty may have heard what I said. A person often says things in the warmth of temper and under provocation that he would not say otherwise.

3230. It was by your action that Mr. Moriarty's papers were published with those of Mr. Pretious? That I deny most emphatically. It was quite the contrary. I will bring Mr. Rich to prove, if you like, that I sent up to Mr. Richards, the Government Printer, and asked him not to copy them if he could help it. I sent up a special note to get them withdrawn. They were with the papers, and formed an enclosure sent down from the Treasury. It was because of that that they were published, because the return would not be complete without them. When I sent to Mr. Richards he said it was too late, the papers having gone before Parliament he could not withdraw them. Mr. Moriarty wrote a memo. to the effect that the printing was an act of deliberate malice, but I never answered it.

Present:—

MR. R. P. ABBOTT,

MR. RANKEN.

R. P. ABBOTT, ESQ., PRESIDENT, IN THE CHAIR.

Mr. John F. Mann called in and examined:—

3231. Chairman.] Mr. Mann, you are a licensed surveyor, I believe? I am.

3232. And you have been one for a long time, have you not? Yes, thirty years last March.

3233. And in the Government service? Yes, in the Government service.

3234. You are not in the Government service now, I think? Well, I am still a licensed surveyor, but I am employed by the Government. Still I put the letters "L.S." to my name.

3235. You were one time in charge of the Mudgee district, were you not? Yes, I was.

3236. The Surveyor General informs us you are in a position to give us information with reference to some applications for purchase by auction made by Mr. N. P. Bayly on the gold-field there? Yes, I measured several pieces for Mr. Bayly.

3237. Do you recollect what date that was? The last I think was about 1874, but I had measured previously for Mr. Bayly.

3238. Will you look at that telegram, Mr. Mann, if you please (showing telegram to witness)? Yes; I see.

3239. What is the date of it? April, 1874. The 15th April, 1874. Yes, that has been in my hands before;

W. W.
Stephen, Esq.
5 Feb., 1879.

Mr.
J. F. Mann.

Mr.
J. F. Mann.

before; here is my memorandum. This is my instruction to survey for Mr. Bayly. In all cases the instructions are sent back with the survey to the Surveyor General, with initials and reference to the number of letters. You see this is forwarded to me by Mr. Bolton, the district surveyor, and I say "returned with my letter, number so and so."

3240. Will you tell us what that telegram is, and who it is from? It is a telegram from the Under Secretary for Lands to District-Surveyor Bolton, of Orange—he had moved temporarily to Orange, but was acting for the Mudgee district.

3241. What is the effect of that telegram? "Please instruct Mr. Mann at once to measure land applied for by Bayly, of Mudgee." And then this is the instruction sent forward to Mr. Mann as an urgent reminder, signed by Mr. Bolton, the district surveyor. And then I make my survey, and I make this note, "Returned with my letter, 7,474, 30th May.—J. F. MANN."

3242. At the time you received that telegram I think you were licensed surveyor for the Mudgee district? Yes, I was.

3243. Before you received that telegram, or at the time, where were you camped? I was camped at Havilah, that is Mr. Bayly's station. I believe I was there, but I cannot quite say for certain unless I refer to my diary, which I have not got just at hand, but I believe I was there; at all events I attended at once.

3244. Had you had any communication from Mr. Bayly before receiving this telegram? Yes, I had instructions from the Government to measure certain portions of land for Mr. Bayly.

3245. How many portions? I think I had three or four; it might be two or three portions in hand which I had received instructions to survey in the ordinary course—I think Volunteer orders and improvement purchases. I had proceeded to Havilah to measure these off, and all the applications in the same neighbourhood. I was on my way to Rylstone, 11 miles off, but at the time I had first encamped at Havilah I had not received this telegram.

3246. When you first camped there did you see Mr. Bayly? I did.

3247. Will you tell the Commission what took place? When I first encamped at his place he said, "I suppose you have come to measure all this ground." I told him I had come to measure and fulfil the instructions I had had. He said, "I have applied for a large tract of country." I said, "I know nothing of that, I can only measure what I have been instructed to do. Several applications in the neighbourhood have to be measured, having priority according to their date." I told him they must be measured first. He said, "If I get instructions will you measure for me?" I said, "Yes."

3248. Was there anything said as to who was to give the instructions? He said he was going to Sydney and would consult with the Under Secretary, and get him to arrange the matter.

3249. Did he go to Sydney? He went to Sydney. The next day, or a day or two afterwards, I received this telegram.

3250. Within how long afterwards? This is the date—15th April, 1874. I can hardly tell. I received it some time in April, I believe. This is sent to me by Mr. Bolton, at Orange, on the 20th April. I think I received it on the 27th April.

3251. That was sent after Mr. Bayly said he would have instructions sent to you by the Under Secretary? Yes, shortly afterwards; I think I received it on the 27th April. Here is the date 20th April, and it is dated in Sydney on the 15th.

3252. That was written a few days after Mr. Bayly told you he would have instructions sent to you? Yes, a few days after.

3253. Did he say anything to you about the probability of having instructions sent to you? He seemed certain that he would be able to get instructions issued to me by the Under Secretary. He said he would see the Under Secretary and get instructions issued. I said of course that if instructions came I had no alternative but to act upon them, otherwise he would have to wait his turn.

3254. Then the effect of these instructions was to make you survey for Mr. Bayly without reference to the claims of other people? Yes, without reference to priority at all; it shoved all the other work on one side, and I was to attend to this.

3255. How long after this were you in that district as licensed surveyor? I forget what year it was when I left that district. This was in April, 1874. (Looking at document.) I see it was in September, 1874, when I got instructions for the Hume district on the Murray. Yes, it was in the same year.

3256. Then you must have left between those dates? I must have left some time between April and September. The last instructions I received in 1874 for the Mudgee district were dated the 31st August, 1874; then I see that after September 2 I got instructions for the Hume district. That is the district I went to afterwards, on the Murray River.

3257. You were, in fact, removed from the Mudgee district, were you not? I had an intimation that certain regulations were to be made that would interfere with me, and it was suggested that I should change my district from Mudgee to where there were no gold diggings. It was in consequence of the mining regulations coming into force, which would materially affect me, and I was to have the choice of any vacant district where there were no mining regulations, and I was requested to come to Sydney and make arrangements, which I did.

3258. And you went to the Corowa district, did you not? Yes, 40 miles below Albury.

3259. What was the effect of your going there, so far as your position was concerned? That I lost very considerably by it.

3260. These districts are looked upon as the worst districts for surveyors, are they not? Well, it depends upon circumstances. Some are good; some are bad. Some are very favourable for surveyors.

3261. Was this a good one? Yes, if you have good seasons. But this is a very wet district; so much so that it was given up by my predecessor in consequence of the wet being all over the country. My experience during two years was, that one half the time it was extremely dry, so that you could not get a drink of water, and you could not get a feed for the horses; and when the rains did set in, the country being so level, the water could not get away, and therefore I had to do half my work up to my knees in water.

3262. Mr. Ranken.] That is the country below Albury? Yes, below Albury. 12 miles back from the river.

3263. Chairman.] And the consequence was that you were a severe loser, were you not? I had to send my camp 400 miles overland, and was a loser at the time I left the Mudgee district. I went into it when it it was in a disorganized state, owing to the deaths of my two predecessors, and the work had accumulated. I had just got it into order, and was anticipating doing some good for myself, when this change took place.

3264. And you were finally obliged to give up the Corowa district, were you not? Yes.

3265. And have not been in the Government employment since, have you? I have had no permanent employment since. I have been a very considerable loser by it.

3266. And to what do you attribute the changing of your position from the Mudgee district to any other? The first intimation I received was just as I have said, that it was in consequence of the mining arrangements coming into force. As I was informed, this would put me under the Warden and the Mining Surveyor, and two or three others, and therefore it would be disadvantageous to me. My adjoining surveyor, Mr. Anderson, came and told me that these things were under consideration, and that if I did resign the district he might have the opportunity of applying for it, as the Surveyor General was very anxious to have him in the district, as he had had great experience among the miners, and I might have the opportunity of choosing a district where there were no mining proceedings going on at all. Therefore I came on to Sydney, and had an interview with the Surveyor General, and finally chose the Corowa district and moved there. I moved there as soon as I could make arrangements. As soon as I had worked up all my Mudgee work, and my camp had arrived at Albury, I started and followed them up.

3267. Had you any communication with the Surveyor General with reference to this telegram? The Surveyor General, during this conversation, asked me what I had measured for Mr. Bayly. There were seven large blocks measured on the strength of that telegram on that gold-field. I can tell you the areas if necessary. There was one of 300 acres, one of 291 acres, one of 168 acres, one of 162 acres, one of 228 acres, one of 318 acres, and one of 232 acres, measured at this time for Mr. Bayly, on the strength of this telegram.

3268. And at the same time you say there were other people who had prior claims? Yes, there were.

3269. Did Mr. Adams, the Surveyor General, talk to you about it? He asked me upon whose authority I had made these measurements. I told him I had done so in consequence of a telegram through the district surveyor from the Under Secretary that I was to attend immediately to the work, and consequently I did it. He did not appear to have known of the existence of this telegram previously.

3270. Was that all that took place between you and him in reference to it? Yes, he did not say anything more to the purpose.

3271. Mr. Ranken.] Was that within the Gulgong Gold Field Reserve? No, in the Pipeclay Reserve, under section 14. They allowed conditional selection. You could select, but on that reserve there was the power to resume possession at any time in case gold should be found upon it. It was not specially exempt. I think they are under another clause, where it is altogether a gold field; but where the gold-field becomes rather doubtful you are allowed to make selections under clause 14, which enables a man to select, but he is liable to be called upon by the Government at any time to give it up. I think we were called upon in our instructions to inform them of the position they were in.

3272. But was this land supposed to be open to improvement or Volunteer land order selection? I believe it was; there were measurements made on it on Volunteer land orders. This, of course, went to auction. My letter 7474, 30th May, would give the map of the exact position.

3273. Chairman.] Perhaps you will find it here (showing papers to witness)? Yes, I think I recollect these. I recollect he applied for the two here by improvements, and the improvements came outside his ground. Then this was to go on to auction. This is one of my tracings. This is one of my replies to a lot of memos. This is Mr. Bayly's letter. I recollect this—March 12, 1874. I recollect Mr. Bayly got me to measure some land, and I got him to write this application, which I forwarded to the Surveyor General for his approval. Without the map it is rather difficult to follow this up. The map would show all this.

3274. Each lot, would it show? I think so. They would be all in one lot in two or three maps. The map would show the position of each one of these. I see "instructions by telegram, 15th April." I had to go through all these calculations here. Here is one of these memoranda I used to complain of as utterly unnecessary. I am perfectly correct, but it gives me the trouble to go over it all again.

3275. The effect of it was to make you go all over this again, was it? All over this again.

3276. And that involves some considerable delay, I suppose? I send the papers in on a certain day, and perhaps they get back in three months afterwards, and very likely I have to put off some of my field work or sit up at night to go through these calculations. You have to go all over it a second time to check your work.

3277. And the result was that it was correct within the allowance? Yes, it was within the allowance.

3278. Who was the draftsman who sent this back to you? I do not know who it was.

3279. Has any draftsman the power to send these back to you? Anybody.

3280. However young or inexperienced? It does not matter how young or inexperienced. Here it is again: I am requested to state whether I consulted the Gold Commissioner before measuring this land. There were seven items where they found fault with my work. My reply was: "The Gold Commissioner has not been consulted in this case, the proclamation being under section 14. I was not aware of a reference to that officer being necessary, land having already been alienated in this parish without his having been referred to."

3281. And that answer was found to be sufficient? Yes.

3282. The effect of your answer was to show that you were right at first? Yes; I was right at first.

3283. And this delay was unnecessary? Quite unnecessary.

3284. And brought about by some draftsman whose calculations were wrong? Yes.

3285. What do you attribute it to? There is an immense deal of power put into the hands of these draftsmen, and they like to exercise it. To get these figures would cost me a couple of sheets of foolscap. I had to get the northing and westing, and the latitude and departure, all of which would cover several sheets of paper, before I could get my multipliers.

3286. And the effect was delay to the public business, and doubling your work? The effect was that the public business was delayed, and my work was doubled. It is usual to send in your work once a month, after having gone through it carefully. Three months afterwards, when you are engaged in work somewhere else, you get a page of these memos.

3287. And every draftsman, however young, has the right to send this work back to you? There are several rooms, and the room is generally in charge of one of the elder draftsmen. The work is brought in to someone, anybody, to check it. If he finds it does not close, he takes it to the senior, who makes a memo., and they are sent off by the bundle, sometimes initialled by the Surveyor General, the Deputy Surveyor General, or anybody else.

Mr.
J. F. Mann.
7 Feb., 1879.

- Mr. J. F. Mann
7 Feb., 1879.
3288. They entrust the most inexperienced draftsman in the office with this? Yes.
3289. Are not many of them very young? Some of them are.
3290. Are not a majority of them young and inexperienced? Yes; there are a lot of boys crowded in there. I have had my work found fault with, and a very severe letter written by the Surveyor General. The work has been sent back to me with these memos., finding fault with it, sometimes by the draftsman, saying it was carelessly done; and this has drawn forth the most severe letter from the Surveyor General, without inquiring whether it was the case or not. In going through all this work again, which would take perhaps a week, I would find that with the exception of a few clerical errors, which anybody might make, and anybody might see were clerical errors, he was altogether wrong, and my work was right with the exception of these one or two clerical errors. And this was all on the authority of the draftsman. One of these times my attention was called to something very gross and severe. It was personally inspected by the chief charterer himself, Mr. Tom Lewis, who said: "I do not know what the fellow could have meant by sending such a memo. as that. I cannot find any fault at all."
3291. In that case had you any special trouble? A great deal.
3292. Did it involve any great delay? Very great delay.
3293. To what do you attribute that? To giving power to people who are not competent to judge. These draftsmen, who perhaps have never been in the field in their lives, consider that they are competent to carry on a survey 500 miles in the bush better than a man of experience, and it is left to them.
3294. And these gentlemen who take the responsibility of directing this reference to the surveyor in the field, do they examine the work? I do not know whether they go through it, or whether they call upon a second draftsman to check it and see whether it is right. But I have been in the office when I have heard a draftsman say, "This does not join." They say, "Send him a memo." These returned memo's do not come under the notice of the Surveyor General.
3295. Mr. Ranken.] Would not your work come under the district surveyor? I never sent my work to the district surveyor; Mr. Bolton came down temporarily a few days before I left it. In the Murray District I always sent my work through the district surveyor, and received instructions from him. Before sending down the work to the Surveyor General we would supply the district surveyor with tracings. He might be out in the field, and our work might lie in his office for weeks before he could see it. By sending him tracings we could send our work to the Surveyor General at once.
3296. As a rule the district surveyor does not exercise supervision? He is supposed to do so.
3297. Would not that obviate this delay? It would be impossible for him to be continually inspecting. His practice is to travel about the country, making measurements here and there; testing the work to see if it can be generally relied upon.
3298. President.] They send tracings for him to make up his maps? Yes, he makes it up.
3299. In this particular matter at Mudgee, in which Mr. Bayly was concerned, did you ever hear anything that led you to believe that other persons felt aggrieved at your doing work for Mr. Bayly, and letting other work that had priority remain undone? One gentleman said, "It is a curious thing that Mr. Bayly gets all his work done and I cannot get mine done."
3300. Did you ever hear anything that led you to believe that dealing with Mr. Bayly's work had anything to do with your removal? Subsequently I was under that impression. It struck me afterwards that it might be the case. In fact, the Surveyor General's manner to me afterwards led me to think so.
3301. You thought that this matter of Mr. Bayly's led to your being removed from the Mudgee District to the Murray? Yes, I thought so.
3302. And the Murray you were obliged to leave because it did not pay you? I lost a good deal of money in it.
3303. I suppose from your experience in connection with the Survey Department you have a good knowledge of the management of that department, and at some other time we may get suggestions from you if we give you an opportunity? Yes; I shall be very glad to do so. I met this morning a brother surveyor of very great experience, who told me he had written a strong and very exhaustive letter on the subject, about the dealings of the Survey Department, and in which he referred to the dealings in the field; about the way in which they are snubbed in the office. He was on his way to head quarters. I considered he was writing in such a manner that it might be published.
3304. Is there any reason why you cannot tell me who he is? Mr. Wilbraham Edwards, of Yass.
3305. Is he a licensed surveyor? Upwards of twenty years standing. His health is completely broken down. He is still in the employment of the Government. He is writing this letter, he told me, because he had applied for leave of absence on account of his health, and he wanted medical advice; and that they had refused it, saying that the regulations did not allow of their granting leave of absence to licensed surveyors. So he had written a very strong letter, and had exhausted the subject.
3306. Is Mr. Edwards in Sydney? I saw him this morning, and I do not think he is going out immediately. When I took the Murray River it was half his district I took off his hands. I knew him previously; long before he was a licensed surveyor.

LANDS AND SURVEY DEPARTMENTS COMMISSION.

APPENDIX.

A 1.

Proposed new Departmental Arrangement.

MEMO.—From Under Secretary of Lands Department.

It has been evident for some time past that the business of the various branches of the Lands Department has increased to such an extent as to render some reorganization of the present system of administration, and some division of labour and responsibility an absolute necessity. This is a fact which has been so often admitted that there is no occasion to adduce any statistics or to go into any detail in support of my statement.

The business, which has most notably increased during the last few years, and more especially since the passing of the "Lands Act Amendment Act of 1875," under which new officers and additional and very important duties have been brought into existence, is that connected with the conditional sale of land, and the preparation of the Estimates for 1877 seems a fitting opportunity for submitting for approval the change which it is proposed to make.

Having in view the numerical strength and the aggregate amount of work of the different branches of the department the best arrangement will be as follows:

1. That the Under Secretary retains the supervision and immediate control of the Roads and Ministerial, Miscellaneous, Record, Auction, Lease and Deeds Branches, the duties appertaining to which are shown by the enclosed printed statement.
2. That the conduct of the conditional purchase business—Correspondence, &c.—(which has attained the dimensions of a department in itself almost) be delegated in like manner to the chief clerk, who should submit all papers to the Minister, carry out his decisions without reference to the Under Secretary, and be the recognized medium of communication with the public and officers concerned in all matters connected with the business so entrusted to him.
3. That as part of, and to give effect to, the above propositions, the designation of the chief clerk (who is already a Commissioner) should be changed to that of "Chief Commissioner of Conditional Sales," or such other as the Minister may see fit to recommend, and that the salary of chief clerk should merge in that to be granted to him as such Commissioner.
4. That the Under Secretary, whilst abstaining from active interference with the conditional purchase business or staff, should be recognized, as at present, as the official head of the whole department, and that the separation of duties as above indicated shall not be held in any way to alter the constitution of the department as a whole, nor disturb the present relative position and seniority of any of the officers of the respective branches, which should remain exactly as at present,—and that on this understanding all matters of a ministerial or financial nature, appointments, promotions, &c., to whichever branch appertaining, should be submitted to the Minister, through the Under Secretary, in accordance with the usual official practice.
5. That the registration, &c., of all conditional purchase papers be carried on, as at present, in the separate registers in the General Record Branch, and that they be transmitted to, and returned from, the Conditional Sales Division of the Department direct, and that all requirements of the said division should be attended to by the head of the Record Branch, without special reference to the Under Secretary.

The above are the leading features, and show the principle of the departmental organization proposed to be effected, and which ought not now to be further delayed. For my own part, individually, I may be permitted to say that it is with much reluctance I submit a recommendation which will have the effect of severing my immediate official connection with the conditional purchase business, in which I have always taken great interest from the fact of my having been more particularly identified with it than any other, almost ever since the Lands Acts of 1861 were passed. However, in the interest of the public as well as of the department, I think that under all the circumstances it is the best arrangement which can be devised, and I can only express my sincere hope that my endeavours to carry out the various duties appertaining to conditional purchase matters have met with the approbation of the Minister for Lands as also that of his predecessors.

December 20th, 1876.

W. W. STEPHEN.

Copy Minute of Secretary for Lands.

I concur in the proposed rearrangement, and in doing so, I may state that I have during my connection with the department had every reason to be satisfied with the manner in which Mr. Stephen has discharged that portion of his duty as Under Secretary connected with the Conditional Purchase Branch. No one, in my opinion, could have done more than he has done to cope with the great and continually increasing and important work of the office connected with the Conditional Purchase Branch. I need not therefore state, except to remove or meet any doubt that persons unacquainted with the facts may feel or express,—that this change in the administration of the office is made solely to enable the department more readily to grasp and deal with the rapidly increasing work of the branch referred to, and not because of Mr. Stephen's inability to deal with it in any way whatever.—T.G., December 20th, 1876.

Let this be carefully noted by the different heads of branches, and acted upon in every particular. When noted by each head of branch, returned to me.—W.W.S., 29 December.

Department of Lands, Sydney, 17 July, 1878.

MEMO.—In reference to recent conversations with the Minister for Lands, and in view of the preparation of the Estimates-in-Chief for the year 1879, I beg to submit that it is absolutely necessary, in my opinion, in the interest of the department as well as the public, to provide for the appointment of an officer under the designation of "superintendent" or chief clerk.

Assuming it to be admitted that such an appointment is required, I will point out, as briefly as I can, the duties which should devolve upon such an officer.

I propose that he should exercise a supervision of the different branches of the department with the view (while not interfering with the present system of direct reference from branch heads to the Under Secretary) of directing generally as to the classes of cases requiring submission, so as to relieve the Under Secretary of the immense mass of papers with which at present he is unnecessarily inundated, and that he should take means to enforce punctuality of attendance of officers and prevent accumulation of arrears.

He should also be a reference in any special matters, and otherwise act for the Under Secretary, when deputed to do so, and it will be his duty to carry out any minor arrangements which, from time to time, may be approved or found necessary for the better administration of the affairs of the department.

In submitting the above recommendation, I would assure the Minister that it is made not so much with a view to my own relief individually as from my sense of the impossibility of any one person performing with satisfaction to himself, or the public, the various duties which, under the present system, devolve upon me as Under Secretary.

I would invite his attention to the increasing magnitude of the Lands business, as also (without any desire whatever of enlarging upon the extent of my responsibilities) to the fact that the staff of this department, (which is barely equal to its requirements), irrespectively altogether of the Conditional Sales Division, the business of which has for the last year or two been conducted under the immediate supervision of the Chief Commissioner of Conditional Sales, is actually greater by one-third than the four Ministerial departments of the Colonial Secretary, Justice, Mines, and Works.

If each of these departments, therefore, has a chief clerk, surely this department ought to have one, especially when it is borne in mind how scattered about, and how difficult consequently of supervision the different branches are.

I have not the slightest hesitation in saying that hundreds of matters, and thousands of papers and letters come before me to be personally dealt with, which an officer of intelligence and experience, and invested with the powers properly appertaining to such an appointment as that I have recommended, would be able to dispose of himself.

The effect of creating such an appointment I confidently assert would be the expediting of the public business to an extent which would soon be appreciated (but not practicable under present circumstances) as well as an improvement in the discipline and general administration of the department.

In fact, so strongly do I feel the necessity of some such change as that indicated, that I would urge it to be allowed, if possible to take effect at once, in anticipation of Parliamentary sanction.

Of course it will be understood that this memorandum is only general in its nature. There are many matters of detail which can be more conveniently considered subsequently.

W. W. STEPHEN.

This is an important matter relative to the efficient working of this department. I will bring the matter under the notice of my colleagues for consideration at the earliest possible period.—J.S.F., 17/7/78.

This matter must stand over until the question of the reorganisation of the department is being dealt with. The heads of branches must be responsible for the efficient working of the respective branches under their control.—J.S.F., 28/8/78.

If it is not too late to make any further remarks upon this matter, I would point out that when the department was considerably less than at present, there were heads of branches also, as well as a chief clerk, who exercised a general supervision over the whole. I can only respectfully express my regret at the decision of the Cabinet, having submitted my recommendation after full consideration and many years experience as a means of securing greater efficiency and preventing to a very considerable extent the complaints against the department.—W.W.S., 12 September.

James Godwin's Improvement Purchase.

THIS case is a forcible illustration of the urgent necessity for an alteration in a system which renders possible such* delays and such constant ground for complaint against the department as the papers herewith disclose.

The facts are as follows:—

James Godwin applied for the land herein referred to—stated at the time to be a measured portion No. 6—on the 22nd September, 1875. The application was under the 8th clause of the "Crown Lands Alienation Act of 1861," for a gold fields allotment.

The required report from the Warden was received in this department on the 8th July, 1876, and sent on to the Charting Branch on the 11th of the same month.

According to a notation on that paper (dated 14th September, 1876), it would seem that the Survey Department required some further information as to the No. of the portion, &c., and (from whatever cause) this information was not received until February, 1878,—a period of one year and eight months from the date of the transmission of the papers to the Survey Office.

On the 4th of March, 1878, this letter (dated 28th February) was received from the applicant, complaining of the delay in granting his application, and was at once sent on to the Charting Branch, with reference to previous papers, where it has remained until now, and consequently no answer sent.

On

*There are some cases sent to Charting Branch in May and June, 1876, and February, 1877, reported to me as not having been yet returned to Lands.—W.W.S., 3 Sept., 1878.

On or about the 8th of this month, Mr. Beyers, M.P., having handed me a letter complaining again of the negligence (as is always the case) of the Department of Lands, I had inquiry at once made, and find that all further action has been stopped by the loss of a plan, it being the practice to send a tracing to the appraiser. Surely this is unnecessary in the case of a measured portion, especially when from the various reports, &c., on the papers, it would be impossible to mistake it. If the appraiser had a doubt, his duty is to inquire.

If anything else in the way of notation is required at this stage, it seems to me that if a memo. were taken, or a book kept of particulars of portions applied for, to be noted on such and such a plan, when found, such interminable delays as these could be avoided, without the slightest fear of mistake.

It certainly is unfair to this department that its action should be impeded, and that such discredit should be cast upon it, if it can possibly be avoided; and as the same delay, to a greater or lesser extent (the system being at fault), is not uncommon, I would submit that the special attention of the Surveyor General be called to the matter, so far as his department is concerned.

As regards other causes of delay, such as the transmission of letters, &c., to the Survey Office—reference to licensed surveyors for reports as to improvements, &c., which could be furnished by our salaried appraisers in two or three months, with certainly equal reliability, and at a less cost, &c., &c.—I propose to make certain recommendations when dealing with the general question. I feel confident that the fact of an application of this nature being actually in hand for three years, and still incomplete, will be held sufficient to justify any remedial measures which can possibly be adopted.

W.W.S., 19 Aug.

I concur generally with the Under Secretary. Refer to Surveyor General as to the possibility of avoiding delays such as this case exhibits.—J.S., 23/8/78. Surveyor General, 2 Sept., 1878.

Before sending these papers on to Survey Office send instructions to appraiser without any further delay.—W.W.S., 24 Aug. J. Edwards to appraise—31 Aug., /78. Now to Surveyor General.—31 Aug., /78.

R. and A. Landale's Improvement Purchase.

THE enclosed case, taken out of a batch submitted some days ago, is another of that class in which steps should be taken to reduce as far as possible the delays which are causing such constant complaints against the Lands Department.

The application to purchase, stated to be for "Measured portion No. 10," was made by the Messrs. Landale on the 25th August, 1876, received on 30th of same month, and forwarded to Mr. L. S. Lucas, who transferred it finally to another surveyor, Mr. Finlay, on the 20th September, 1876.

The instructions from the Survey Department were not to measure, but to report only as to ownership and value of improvements.

The plan, being apparently a subdivision of portion 10, was received on the 7th September, 1877, and the case not submitted to this department until the 5th August, 1878.

It will thus be seen that under this system of action it has taken just on two years to reply to an application made for a portion of land within two days journey of head quarters.

It seems, I would point out to the Minister, that the information on which the application has now been refused, was available when the report was furnished, and that therefore applicants could have been informed of the result of their application nearly twelve months ago.

But under the system which has been permitted to obtain in the Survey Office, all Ministerial action, and all applications, &c., are delayed for the charting of a plan, in this case (inclusive of further delay which I shall presently allude to) some eleven months. I submit that in all such cases it is only reasonable and just to this department, to which the public look for satisfaction, that it should have the opportunity of taking its action first, and that the charting of the plan be done afterwards. On this head, and as to the question of delays in measurement, &c., I would suggest a special and early reference to the Surveyor General, whose co-operation with this department in obviating all delays actually avoidable, and so injurious to the department, will, I am sure, be readily afforded.

It will be observed, also, that although the plan is noted as examined and charted on the 24th June, 1878, and ready for transmission to this department, the case was delayed for a still further period of six weeks (until 5th August), simply for a minute to be signed by the Deputy Surveyor General, denoting the Ministerial action to be taken by Lands Department.

No officer acquainted with the business of the department can say that this part of the delay is necessary.

The action to be taken was evident, both according to official rule and general instructions. It is action appertaining to this department essentially, which could have been denoted for approval by any of the clerks in the branch to which the business relates, and as to which no recommendation was either asked for or required.*

I submit, therefore, that in all cases of this character the papers should be sent on to the Department of Lands as soon as the plans are charted. It is unreasonable to make work in this way, to the detriment of the department responsible for the action.

This is no exceptional case. The same system, to a greater or lesser extent, as regards unnecessary delay, prevails in nearly all cases of this kind, which do not come under the class of those on which information or action (beyond charting) is required, excepting by this department, which has quite enough to do in looking after its own delays without those caused by avoidable detention of papers in the Survey Department.—W.W.S., 22 Aug., 1878.

There appears to me to have been unnecessary delay in this case. First, the application is with the surveyor for twelve months, and after the receipt of the surveyor's report, it was nearly twelve months in the Survey Department.

I think it would be well to consult with the Surveyor General in order to see if some remedial measures or action can be adopted to prevent delay in dealing with such cases. Cannot the papers in the case, as suggested by the Under Secretary, be sent to Lands after having been dealt with in the Charting Branch. The information required to enable the case to be dealt with was simply as to whether "a tank was made on a conditional purchase prior to forfeiture," and which information might have been obtained, so far as I can see, before a period of two years had elapsed.—J.S.F., 23/8/78.

Surveyor General, 2 Sept., 1878.

D. MACARTHUR'S APPLICATION.

Applications of D. Macarthur to purchase land under 8th clause (Alienation Act, 1861.)

In this case Mr. Macarthur applied to purchase in virtue of improvements nine portions of land in the parish of Young, county of Montserrat. Two of the applications were made on the 1st November, 1872, and the remainder on the 18th December, 1874. The first-mentioned applications were forwarded by this department to Survey Office, whence they were despatched to the Gold Commissioner for report on 27th November, 1872.

The applications dated 18th December, 1874, it would appear were reported upon by the Commissioner as unobjectionable on the 16th February, 1875 (prior to the date of their receipt in this department). These applications were transmitted to the Survey Office for action on the 16th March following. The applications were then forwarded to the local surveyor for measurement, &c. The surveyor's report was received on the 24th February, 1875, and duly noted to the proper branch of the Survey Office on the 16th March following. The plan is noted to have been examined and charted on the 4th November, 1877, and on the 30th August, 1878, the papers have the action recommended to be taken by the Deputy Surveyor General of a nature purely appertaining to the Ministerial Department, and is in accordance with a Ministerial decision perfectly well known to the clerk dealing with these cases, and whatever reason therefore there may have been for the delay up to November, 1877, there there can surely have been no possible occasion to retain the papers from them up to 30th August, 1878, for the purpose of submitting a recommendation which was as far as this department is concerned quite unnecessary. All the action required from the Survey Department was simply to send on the papers stating that the land was on a Temporary Common, and to have left the Lands Department to take its own action which could have been done immediately.

*There are numerous cases to which these remarks are far more applicable than the present one under reference.—W.W.S.

It is really absolutely necessary in the interests of the department, as I have recently pointed out in other cases, that some immediate steps should be taken to alter a system under which such delays as those herein represented can possibly occur.

Departmental Changes.

Memo. by Under Secretary for Lands.

In reference to the proposal to transfer portion of the business of the Department of Lands to the Mining Department, I beg to submit the following observations for the consideration of the Minister:—

The business of the department in all its branches has increased so steadily, and to such a great extent, more especially during the last three or four years, that there can be no doubt as to the desirability of relieving the Minister, and the officers under him, of some part of it; but how to effect this is a question which appears to me, after consideration of the different modes which seemed to be at first sight feasible, most difficult to determine.

I would in the first place, invite the attention of the Minister, to the enclosed printed statement marked A, showing the different branches (six) into which the department is divided, i.e., exclusive of the Occupation Branch, and the classification of the duties and business devolving upon each. The number of letters received in these branches for the twelve months, from 1st June, 1876, to 1st June, 1877, reached, I find, the large total of 75,080, besides documents not registered at Records Branch; yet, it will be perceived, that the whole of the business is of a nature so distinctly appertaining to Lands, and, necessarily therefore, dealt with under the various provisions of the Land Laws of 1861 and 1875, that any separation, or transfer of the duties, must lead to so some inconvenience and difficulty, and could hardly be made to work in harmony with any business at present devolving upon the Department of Mines.

Irrespective of this, there is another grave difficulty in regard to the Survey Department. With the exception of the Ministerial Branch, which embraces matters incidental to all heads of ministerial departments, each branch has its corresponding one in the Surveyor General's Office, and every class of business is for the most part so closely connected, or interwoven, as it were, with matters of survey, and questions which require to be dealt with in the Charting or Professional Branch, that one cannot well be separated from the other. They must, in fact, although the duties and responsibilities of the two departments are necessarily distinct from each other, either work together, or break down; and I know that the Surveyor General (to whom I have spoken on the subject) and all the chief officers having experience in the working of the department, will bear me out, when I say that I have not exaggerated, in any respect, the nature of the difficulties which exist in the way of carrying out the proposed change, and which I have felt it my duty to lay briefly before the Minister, so far as relates to the branches above more particularly alluded to.

I have not overlooked (in going through the various details of the departmental business) two items which might appear perhaps to come properly within the province of the Department of Mines, viz., "Mining Conditional Purchases," and "Proclamations of Gold Fields Reserves." The number, however, of Mining Purchases is so trifling (not 2 per cent.) that their transfer to Mines would not be felt; and, moreover, besides being specially dealt with throughout under the provisions of the 19th clause of the "Crown Lands Alienation Act of 1861," they can hardly be separated from the Conditional Sales Division of the Lands Department, owing to the difficulties already pointed out. As to "Proclamations of Gold Fields Reserves," they are necessarily almost dealt with by the Lands Department and Surveyor General's Office, the reference to the descriptions and plans being continuous, as the only means of checking and preventing the alienation by conditional sale and otherwise of lands included within such reserves. The necessity for this, I may observe, appears to have been recognized in the fact that the Mining Act (section 10) specially places this duty under the Secretary for Lands.

I will now allude to those branches which whilst under the control of the Minister for Lands, are more of a special nature, and not connected with the administrations of the land laws, and do not involve any questions of survey. These are:—

- (1.) The Stock Branch and other offices under the charge of Mr. Bruce, the Chief Inspector;
- (2.) The Botanic Gardens, Domains, &c.;
- (3.) Oyster Beds;

all of which might, if there was any necessity for it, be transferred without very great inconvenience to the Mines.

The business, however, in connection with the two last named branches is at present inconsiderable, and the object in view being to make such an arrangement as will cause some really perceptible diminution in the labours of the Minister, I do not see that any advantage would be gained by removing these branches from his control.

I now come to a branch which, if the difficulty as regards its intimate connection with the Survey Office could be surmounted, would, in my opinion, be about one of those which could, with the least inconvenience, be grafted on to the Mines Department, and it would at the same time cause some considerable decrease (about 3,000 cases yearly) in the duties now devolving on the Minister for Lands. I allude to the "Roads, Streets, and Bridges Branch," which embraces all business and correspondence relative to the minor roads of the Colony, including the erection of gates under the Public Gates Act. The Deputy Surveyor General, under whose supervision the professional part of this work is conducted, might suggest a system under which such a change might be effected.

The next "division" of the department (and the last) calling for consideration, in view of the contemplated alteration, is that of the "Occupation of Lands," which is divided into three branches, and the business of which is carried on in a separate building under Mr. Pretious, the officer in charge, and includes all matters of "Pastoral Occupation," "Special Leases," "Timber Licenses," "Forests," and "Survey of Runs," the latter duty forming a component part of the establishment. This division requires, from its nature, less direct or frequent reference to the Surveyor General's Office, than any of the others. The correspondence, i.e., letters received, all of course requiring action, and a large proportion of them Ministerial decisions, average about 12,000 per annum, and if it is eventually determined to transfer any of the business to "Mines," I think, if conducted on the same footing, as at present, by officers well acquainted with the work, the removal of it from "Lands" might possibly be effected, and would of course relieve the Minister for Lands, to a very considerable extent. I would feel, however, some hesitation, in specially recommending so fundamental an alteration in the present departmental system, but should my suggestions be deemed worthy of consideration I enclose a paper marked B, illustrative of the change as indicated by me, if it were to be carried out.

W.W.S., 17 June, 1877.

Minute of Surveyor General on Memo. of Under Secretary for Lands, 17th June:

In case it is deemed absolutely necessary to transfer work from the Department of Lands to that of Mines, I think the recommendations of the Under Secretary for Lands will be found to embrace all that can possibly be done.

With reference to the Roads Branch, the success of the transfer will depend upon carrying out my recommendation of dividing the Roads Branch geographically, and placing each division of it under a professional head, who will be responsible to myself or the deputy. This system would be carried out by draftsmen and clerks working together in the same room, and under same supervision; the action would then be speedy, and I could take the responsibility of giving satisfaction to the public.

On no other basis can I hope for any improvement under the change proposed, for it would be impossible to separate the roads from the mass of alienation surveys through which they ramify. It was found difficult enough to separate the mining measurements and to send the whole branch over to the Department of Mines in charge of an Under Secretary thoroughly versed in the subject. With the Roads it would be impossible, and however good an official he may be, he would at first fail to give satisfaction in administering a law admittedly imperfect, and depending entirely upon the skill and tact of the administrator.

I regret that I have to say that I am unable to comply with the request of the Honorable the Secretary for Lands. The engagements I have now to fulfil I find to be as much as my health and strength are equal to, and I feel that I cannot safely undertake, in addition to my present work, the serious and difficult labour involved in the inquiry about to be made.

Sir,

The Treasury, 17 September, 1878.

In acknowledging the receipt of your letter of the 14th instant, informing me that the Minister for Lands desires to know whether I am willing to act as a member of a Board for inquiring into and reporting upon the working and administration of the Lands and Survey Departments, I do myself the honor to state, for his information, that, being engaged at present in the preparation of Estimates of Revenue and Expenditure and other financial papers required by the Treasurer in connection with the Budget Speech, shortly to be made, it will, I fear, be impossible for me to do so until after the delivery of that speech.

If however the meeting of the Board could be delayed till then, or if my services would then be accepted, it would afford me much pleasure to act as a member, and do what lay in my power, in conjunction with the other members of the Board, to carry out the views of the Government with respect to the proposed inquiry.

Referring to the constitution of the Board, as intimated to me in your letter of above date, I venture, with all due respect, to submit for the consideration of the Honorable the Secretary for Lands whether it would not be advisable to add one or two more officers of the Service, as members, in order to counteract the undue preponderance which four non-official members to one official member must necessarily possess. If allowed, I would suggest, as a fair arrangement for all concerned, a Board consisting of three official and four non-official members; or one of two official and three non-official, either of which will give the preponderance to the non-official members, which is doubtless desirable.

Sir,

Blackwall Stores, Sydney, 18 September, 1878.

I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 14th instant, in which you advise me of the Government having decided upon the appointment of a Board for the purpose of inquiring into and reporting upon the working and administration of the Lands and Survey Departments in their respective branches, also as to the delays said to exist in the transaction of the business devolving upon those Departments; and, should such delays, or any inefficiency such as has been alleged, be found to exist, the causes thereof and the proper remedy to be applied—desires to know whether I am willing to act as a member of the said Board.

Looking to the great importance of such an inquiry, it would be quite impossible for me to undertake the duties of such an office at the present time, as I feel quite certain that I should not be able to give satisfaction to the Government nor the public, and must therefore, with great reluctance, decline the honor which the Government wish to confer upon me; I am, however, willing to be examined before the Board upon any matter touching the inquiry contemplated.

In conclusion, I respectfully request that you will be pleased to tender my best thanks to the Government for the confidence they wish to repose in me.

RETURN of Correspondence in reference to the resignation of Mr. James Thomson of his appointment as a Member of the Royal Commission appointed to inquire into and report upon the working of the Lands and Survey Departments.

(No. 1.)

J. Thomson, Esq., to The Under Secretary for Lands.

Sir,

The Treasury, 4 November, 1878.

Referring to my appointment as a member of the Commission recently appointed by His Excellency the Governor "to make inquiry into, and report as to the administration and working of the Lands and Survey Departments in their respective branches," I do myself the honor to request that you will have the goodness to intimate to the Honorable the Secretary for Lands my desire to withdraw from the Commission.

In making this request, which I do with extreme regret, it is right that I should state, for the information of Mr. Farnell, my principal reasons for a request of such an unusual character; they are as follows:—

- 1st. Being the only official member on the Commission, I find my position is reduced to that of a nonentity by the preponderance being altogether on the side of my non-official colleagues, who have, consequently, the business entirely in their own hands.
- 2nd. The examination of the first witness, which has already lasted five days, is being conducted in a manner altogether opposed to my views, as well as to the practice which has hitherto obtained in Royal Commissions in this Colony, and which now obtains in connection with Select Committees of Parliament. The result of the present mode of procedure cannot fail, in my opinion, to unnecessarily and unduly prolong the sittings of the Commission, and thus retard the important and pressing business with which it has been entrusted.
- 3rd. The President monopolizes nearly the whole of the time set apart by the Commission for the examination of witnesses, and has besides assumed a bearing towards myself which, as a Commissioner with co-ordinate powers, I cannot submit to.
- 4th. On the occasion of the first examination he declined to allow me to put a question to the witness which occurred to my mind at the time, and which I believe, if answered, would have had the effect of correcting an erroneous impression that might otherwise have been formed by one of his answers.

5th.

5th. At the sitting of the Commission on Friday last, which was monopolized entirely by the President, who used papers only that day submitted to the Commission, and which I had not perused, he insulted me in the presence of Mr. Ranken, my colleague, the Secretary to the Commission, the short-hand writer, and the witness, Mr. Stephen, by rudely refusing to allow me to interpose a question, notwithstanding that I asked his permission to do so.

These are some of the reasons which induce me to seek to be relieved from a position which, under the present constitution of the Commission, I feel to be worse than useless. Under other circumstances my services might, from my knowledge of official business generally, and my long experience in duties of a somewhat kindred nature, have proved useful to the Government.

I feel confident, however, that when the Honorable the Premier has read this letter he will see that I could not, consistently with the respect due to myself as a Commissioner, and the position I hold in the Public Service, continue the colleague of a gentleman who arrogates powers which have not been conferred upon him by the Commission of His Excellency the Governor. I also feel confident that he will acquit me of any desire to shirk the duties and responsibilities of the position to which he did me the honor to nominate me, or of any intention to embarrass the Government by withdrawing from the Commission at this early stage of its proceedings.

R. P. Abbott, Esq. (President), and G. Ranken, Esq. (Commissioner), to The Secretary for Lands.

Sir,

New Public Works Office, Bridge-street, Sydney, 15 November, 1878.

See No. 1.

We have the honor to return herewith Mr. Thomson's letter of the 4th November, which was transmitted to us yesterday, with an intimation from the Under Secretary to the Department of Lands that you would be glad to receive any observations which the Commission may see fit to make upon the statements contained therein. Mr. Thomson's representations appear to us to be somewhat vague; but it may be convenient that we should reply to his letter categorically, and meet his allegations as specifically as their ambiguity will permit.

1. In his first paragraph, Mr. Thomson states that he is the only official member of the Commission, and implies that his position is, therefore, that of a nonentity. In a conversation which the Commissioners had, with a view to determine the course of their procedure, Mr. Thomson said—"You must remember that I am the only official member of the Commission, and I am bound to see that the officials get fair play;" but we were unwilling at that time to allow its full meaning to the remark; and we are still reluctant to conclude that Mr. Thomson supposed the Commission had been appointed in the interests of the Civil Servants as opposed to those of the public. It never occurred to us to recognize Mr. Thomson as an official, or otherwise than in his capacity as a member of the Commission, having co-ordinate powers with those conferred on us.

2. In his second paragraph Mr. Thomson states that the examination is being conducted in a manner altogether opposed to his views, as well as to the practice which obtains in Royal Commissions and the Select Committees of Parliament. We affirm, however, that the examination has been conducted in a manner identical with that adopted by Select Committees of Parliament and Royal Commissions. The questions of the Commissioners and the answers of the witness have been taken down in short-hand, and, when transcribed, sent to the witness for revision. This method was assented to by Mr. Thomson. We do not therefore understand what he means by the assertion that this course of procedure cannot fail to unduly prolong the sittings of the Commission, unless it be that reference is made to an opinion which Mr. Thomson expressed during the preliminary conference already referred to, to the effect that the witnesses should be required to answer strictly "yes" or "no."

3. The evidence transcribed abundantly disproves the allegation which Mr. Thomson makes in the third paragraph, and shows conclusively that he has fully exercised his power of examination. It never occurred to us to question his right to do so. After the first day's examination Mr. Thomson remarked that the questions put by the President left him nothing to ask, and the President thereupon desired that Mr. Thomson should begin the examination of any witness, and have priority in examining upon any point he pleased; but it was unanimously agreed that it would be neither seemly nor desirable that the examination of a witness by one Commissioner should be interrupted by questions interposed by either of the others.

4. Mr. Thomson is in error when he states in his fourth paragraph that the President declined to allow him to put a question on the first day of examination. The President did not refuse to allow Mr. Thomson to ask any question; and the fact is, that Mr. Thomson asked ninety-five of the 237 questions put to the witness on that day; and that he broke in upon the President's examination not less than twenty times. Mr. Thomson himself admitted the inconvenience of this course, and it was Mr. Thomson's proposal, made before examination of witnesses was entered upon, that the President should take precedence in examining witnesses, and that the other Commissioners should continue the examination in the order of their appointment.

5. The statements contained in Mr. Thomson's fifth paragraph are inaccurate. The facts are these:—The examination of the witness on the 30th October was conducted exclusively by Mr. Thomson, without any interruption by us. The witness then handed in several lengthy papers which the Commissioners did not think it desirable to print; and it was therefore arranged that each Commissioner should read them in turn. The President was requested to read the papers first—a request which he understood to be made by Mr. Thomson as well as by Mr. Ranken. When the witness was further examined on Friday, the 1st of November, that being the following day of sitting, the President asked Mr. Thomson if he desired to continue the examination which he had conducted at the last meeting; and it was only upon Mr. Thomson declining that the President, following the order of examination which had been agreed upon, examined the witness upon the papers submitted (not at that meeting, as Mr. Thomson erroneously avers), but at the previous meeting when he was present. We understood that this was done with the perfect acquiescence of Mr. Thomson, who certainly made not the slightest objection. We are at a loss to understand how Mr. Thomson should have so far forgotten the facts as to allege that the President entirely "monopolized" the sitting, and used papers only that day submitted. Mr. Thomson did interpose a question, and when (at variance with the understanding previously come to) Mr. Thomson requested to again ask a question, the President replied—"Excuse me, Mr. Thomson, I have not yet done with my examination of Mr. Stephen."

We have read Mr. Thomson's letter with much surprise and regret. We are wholly unable to understand what valid reason he can have for the misconception under which he has written it; and until we heard of this communication we were under the impression that perfect harmony subsisted between us.

Mr. Thomson having in his letter of the 4th instant, appealed to me by name, as witness of an alleged "insult" offered him by Mr. Abbott, I wish to state that the matter referred to occurred precisely as stated in the letter herewith from the members of the Commission, and that the words used were exactly as therein set down. See No. 1.

After submitting to interruptions which were decidedly irregular according to the rule adopted by the Commission, Mr. Abbott at length declined to allow the line of inquiry to be interfered with, but his decision to this effect was expressed in the most courteous terms.

Further, I state emphatically that Mr. Thomson's charges preferred against Mr. Abbott of rudeness and arrogance have no foundation whatever in fact.

VICTORIA, by the Grace of God, of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, Queen, Defender of the same, and so forth.

To our trusty and well-beloved ROBERT PALMER ABBOTT and GEORGE RANKEN, both of Sydney, in our Colony of New South Wales, Esquires, greeting:

Know ye that we, reposing great trust and confidence in your ability, zeal, industry, discretion, and integrity, do by these presents authorize and appoint you, as hereinafter mentioned, to make inquiry into and report as to the administration and working of the Lands and Survey Departments in their respective branches; also as to the alleged inefficiency and delays in the transaction of the business of those departments, the causes thereof—should they be found to exist—and the proper remedy to be applied; and also with the view of offering such further suggestions or recommendations as may, after due enquiry into the premises, seem to you desirable. We do by these presents give and grant to you, at any meeting or meetings to which both of you shall have been summoned, full power and authority to call before you all such persons as you may judge necessary, by whom you may be better informed of the truth in the premises, and to require the production of all such books, papers, writings, and all other documents as you may deem expedient, and to visit and inspect the same at the offices or places where the same or any of them may be deposited. And our further will and pleasure is that you, after the completion of the said inquiry, do and shall certify to us, in the office of our Secretary for Lands, under your hands and seals, what you shall find touching the premises. And this Commission shall continue in full force, although the proceedings thereunder shall not be continued, by adjournment from time to time, and you may from time to time, if you shall see fit, without waiting for your full and complete report, certify your several proceedings into our said office as the same shall be respectively perfected. And we hereby command all Government officers, and all other persons whomsoever within our said Colony, that they may be assistant to you and each of you in the execution of these presents. And we appoint you the said Robert Palmer Abbott to be President of this our Commission, and do give you power, at your discretion, to procure such clerical and other assistance as you may deem necessary for enabling you to execute this our Commission.

In testimony whereof we have caused these our Letters to be made patent, and the Great Seal of our Colony to be hereunto affixed.

No. 20.

J. Thomson, Esq., to The Under Secretary for Lands.

Sir,

The Treasury, 9 December, 1878.

Availing myself of the permission of the Honorable the Secretary for Lands, as conveyed to me in your letter of the 27th ultimo, in reply to the observations of my late colleagues, Messrs. Abbott and Ranken, on my letter of the 4th instant, intimating my desire to withdraw from the Lands Commission for the reasons therein given, I do myself the honor to submit, for the information of Mr. Farnell, the following statements with respect to those observations.

2. Before however dealing with these in detail, I desire to say that as my late colleagues have, in their letter of the 15th instant to the Secretary for Lands, not only impugned the accuracy of my statements but actually perverted some of the remarks made by me at one of our meetings, I trust Mr. Farnell will not consider I overstep the bounds of official propriety by endeavouring to clear myself from the imputations, so unfairly, in my estimation, cast upon me by these gentlemen. I trust he will also admit that I am entitled to some forbearance in doing this when I point out to him that it is likely to be inferred from the papers recently submitted to the Legislative Assembly that the acceptance of my resignation by His Excellency the Governor was consequent upon the statements contained in the letters of Messrs. Abbott and Ranken, as the notification of that acceptance is dated the 19th November, that is four days subsequent to the date of their letters to the Minister. With these few preliminary remarks I now proceed to deal with their observations seriatim.

3. In the first paragraph of their joint letter my late colleagues speak of the vagueness and ambiguity of my representations. Now, although this remark is of small moment, it is one nevertheless for which there is no good foundation, as the reasons assigned by me for desiring to withdraw from the Commission are, I think, clearly and definitely stated, and as free from ambiguity as it was possible to make them.

4. In their second paragraph they state "That in a conversation which the Commissioners had with a view to determine the course of their procedure, Mr. Thomson said, 'You must remember that I am the only official member of the Commission, and I am bound to see that the officials get fair play.'" The first part of this statement is, I admit, quite correct, but the latter part is somewhat distorted. In referring to this remark in the manner they have done, it would seem as if my late colleagues intended to convey the impression that it was entirely uncalled for, and therefore altogether out of place. In all fairness however the circumstances which called it forth should also have been given. As this has not been done by these gentlemen, I consider that I have a right, in justice to myself, to state them fully. They are as follows:—

- 1st. The manner in which the examination was conducted during the first two days not being satisfactory to me, and the President having prevented me from interposing a question that I was anxious to put to the witness (which by the way I have since found from a perusal of the evidence occurred at the second sitting and not the first as stated in my previous letter), I took the opportunity of bringing the subject before the Commission at the opening of the third day's proceedings, by stating that I was not satisfied with the preceding day's arrangement, the President having occupied fully an hour and a half of the two hours set apart for examination of witnesses, leaving thereby only half an hour between Mr. Ranken and myself. After what occurred at the previous meeting—that is after having been prevented by the President from interposing questions—I strongly insisted upon the propriety and the right of asking such questions as might occur to my mind during the examination of a witness, but Mr. Abbott as strongly objected to such an arrangement, in which objection he was supported by Mr. Ranken.
- 2nd. I then made, what I considered a very fair proposal, and that was, that I was quite willing to allow the President to take the lead in the examination of witnesses, during which I should abstain from interposing questions, if he would consent to give his colleagues an opportunity of putting questions at the close of his examination on any particular point and before commencing a new subject. To this proposition he also objected, and was again sustained in his objection by Mr. Ranken.

3rd. Mr. Abbott then suggested that we should take turn about in examining witnesses, and, I freely admit, even offered to allow either Mr. Ranken or me to begin first, on the understanding, however, that there was to be no interposing of questions. I reluctantly consented to give this arrangement a trial, there being no alternative, stating, however, my belief that it would not work well, as it could not fail to lead to much waste of time, for the simple reason that questions of a similar character would very likely be asked by each of us, although perhaps the phraseology might be somewhat varied.

4th. It was during the discussion of these matters that I remarked to my colleagues, "that they should remember that being the only official on the Commission it would naturally be expected by those public officers who should be called as witnesses, that I should see that no injustice was done to them." This remark I made in consequence of the determination of my colleagues not to allow me to interpose questions which I might consider necessary to elucidate a point or prevent an erroneous impression being formed from an unguarded answer. With these explanations it will, I think, be seen and acknowledged, that my remark wears an entirely different complexion from that given to it by Messrs. Abbott and Ranken, in their letter to the Premier. I also had a very strong impression at the time, which may, however, have been formed without just cause, that my colleagues were inclined to hold Mr. Stephen responsible for far more than his fair share of the alleged delays and mismanagement of the Lands Department.

5. It was also, if I mistake not, at the same meeting of the Commission that I suggested to my colleagues the propriety of confining the witness to concise and direct answers to our questions, as I considered diffuse statements led away from the point without being attended with any corresponding advantage.

Both the President and Mr. Ranken objected to my suggestion—the former stating that a witness should never be stopped in his evidence—I endeavoured to combat this view, but to no purpose, as both my colleagues were against me. It is, I presume, with regard to this suggestion that they have tried to bring ridicule upon me by stating in the second paragraph of their letter that I expressed an opinion "that the witnesses should be requested to answer strictly 'yes' or 'no'." As such an opinion as that could only emanate from the mind of an insane man, I pass the matter over by simply denying that I ever expressed an opinion so absurd, feeling satisfied that I have not yet arrived at that state of mental imbecility which my colleagues, statement naturally implies.

6. In stating in my letter that the result of the present mode of procedure could not fail in my opinion to unnecessarily and unduly prolong the sittings of the Commission, and thus retard the important and pressing business with which it had been entrusted, I meant precisely what I said, for I found that the only mode of examination which my colleagues would agree to led as, I anticipated, to a waste of time. On the last day I was present, Mr. Abbott commenced the examination of the witness on one of the points I had dealt with on the previous sitting day, thereby ignoring what I had done and elaborating the subject to a painful degree. It was on this day I was rudely, and I again affirm it, notwithstanding Mr. Ranken's certificate to the contrary, refused by the President to interpose a question which I felt impelled to put. Not only was Mr. Abbott's refusal curt, but to me at least his manner was positively offensive. This refusal was rendered all the more obnoxious from the fact that not many minutes previously Mr. Ranken asked his permission to put a question, which he at once granted, and under that permission he (Mr. Ranken) asked several questions. When I asked a similar indulgence, if a right can be so termed, and received a rude refusal, my first impulse was to rise and walk out. On reflection, however, and not wishing to have a scene, I quietly kept my place until 4, the hour of closing and then retired, much annoyed to find that the President had not even the courtesy to leave me a single minute to ask the question I had sought his permission to put.

7. When Mr. Ranken and Mr. Abbott state, as they do in the third paragraph, that it was unanimously agreed that it would be neither seemly nor desirable that the examination of a witness by one Commissioner should be interrupted by questions interposed by either of the others, they state what is not the fact, for while I reluctantly agreed to give the arrangement proposed by the President a trial, I still maintained that it was not only right but even desirable to interpose questions. Holding these views I did, on one or two occasions interpose questions during the examinations conducted by the President, and I think it will be found that Mr. Ranken did the same. When my turn came to examine Mr. Stephen I told him I would be glad if he would let his answers be as direct and concise as possible, as I would endeavour to obtain all the information I wished from his answers to the questions I should put. This seemed to disturb the equanimity of my colleagues, as they thereupon had a private conversation together, and both of them studiously abstained from interposing questions while my examination of the witness lasted. Had they so interposed questions, however, it would have been rather pleasing to me than otherwise; for in listening to an examination conducted by another, an important point may be perceived by the listener, which it would be more advantageous to deal with at the time than postpone to a subsequent occasion when the connection would not be so obvious.

8. When my late colleagues affirm that the examination has been conducted in a manner identical with that adopted by Select Committees of Parliament and Royal Commissions, the questions of the Commissioners and the answers of the witness having been taken down in short-hand, and when transcribed sent to the witness for revision, they forget, seemingly, that very little credit is due to them for that arrangement. Had their views, as expressed at the first meeting of the Commission, been carried out, a very different state of matters would have existed, for the President then proposed, and Mr. Ranken concurred, that the witnesses should be informed that their evidence would be privileged. This proposition was so abhorrent to my nature that I stoutly resisted such an innovation, and would there and then have withdrawn from the Commission had it been carried out. Our excellent secretary (Mr. Robinson), however, came to the rescue by asking permission to state his views with regard to the proposal, as from his experience of both Parliamentary Committees and Commissions he could inform us what was the usual mode of conducting such inquiries. On his representations, more than from any arguments of mine, my colleagues gave way. Then they were next inclined to think that witnesses had no right to have an opportunity of revising their evidence, and they even questioned the propriety of, or necessity for, appending the evidence to our Report. I am, however, glad to say they did not insist upon having their way on these points. But in the face of these facts they have very little right, as I have already said, to take credit credit for the proceedings having been conducted in a manner identical with that of other Commissions and Select Committees of Parliament. This is a matter I never intended to have alluded to, and would not have done so even now, had it not been for the prominence given to it in their letter.

9. Again, when my late colleagues state that "the evidence transcribed abundantly disproves the allegation which Mr. Thomson makes in the third paragraph, and shows conclusively that he has fully exercised his power of examination," they have, I presume, arrived at this conclusion by the number of questions I put, and not by the time occupied by me. The hint I threw out to the witness to give as concise and direct answers as possible enabled me, I have no doubt, to ask in a corresponding period of time nearly three times as many questions as the President did, so that my allegation that the greater part of the time set apart by the Commission for examination of witnesses was monopolised by Mr. Abbott is not disproved by their statement.

10. I now come to the statements contained in the fifth paragraph of my late colleague's joint letter, my comments on which will necessarily be somewhat lengthy, notwithstanding that I have already referred to some of them in a general way. They say that "the examination of the witness on the 30th October was conducted exclusively by Mr. Thomson, without any interruption by us." I have already acknowledged the correctness of the latter part of that statement, but in the former part there is what I can look upon as nothing less than a suppressio veri. True, there was no regular examination of the witness (Mr. Stephen) by anyone but myself, but there was what may be styled an irregular examination of Mr. A. O. Moriarty, of which, however, I make no complaint, as it was, under the circumstances, very necessary. Now, the facts are these, as far as I recollect them: Not having completed my examination of the witness on the 28th October, which I commenced at a quarter to 4 only, I continued it for about half an hour, or at most three quarters on the 30th, stopping intentionally to allow my colleagues to have their share of the time set apart for the examination of witnesses. To my surprise however neither of them availed themselves of the opportunity; but they informed that before I came in it had been proposed, or arranged, to request Mr. Moriarty to come up, and explain why certain information asked for by Mr. Ranken could not be furnished without much trouble and great delay, which the Secretary had ascertained was the case. I may here mention that when this return was first proposed to be called for, I pointed out the very voluminous nature of it, and expressed my belief that it would take a very long time to have it prepared; I even went so far as to say that I was afraid the Commission would, by casting such labour on an already overtasked department, prove a curse rather than a blessing to it. The examination of Mr. Moriarty proved the correctness of my views; for when asked how long it would take to furnish the information, he said about six months; and I believe he was quite within the mark. The result was that in place of a six months return, embracing the transactions of twenty-six conditional land sales all over the Colony, one was agreed to embracing the transactions of only three. The Commission rose early on the 30th in consequence of this interpolated examination. The statement made by my late colleagues that the examination of the 30th was exclusively conducted by me is therefore not strictly true, and appears to have been made with the intention of misleading.

11. They also say in the same paragraph that the papers which I refer to as having been used by the President in the course of his examination on Friday, the 1st November, were not submitted that day, but on the 30th October, the day of the previous meeting. Well, if that were so, it made the impropriety of their use by Mr. Abbott still more objectionable, inasmuch as he had had time to make himself thoroughly acquainted with their contents, while I was entirely ignorant of them, and therefore at a disadvantage as compared with himself during the examination conducted by him, from taking part in which I was excluded by what I have characterized as a rude refusal of the President to allow me to interpose a question.

12. In the last paragraph they say that they have read my letter with much surprise and regret. This may be so; I cannot disprove it; although I doubt the sincerity of the statement, feeling confident that if I had been President, and treated a colleague as Mr. Abbott did me, I would have been quite prepared for such a result, and in fact would have expected nothing else from any man who had a proper respect for himself and the position he filled. Their concluding remark that until they heard of my communication they were under the impression that perfect harmony subsisted between the Commissioners, is scarcely justified by the position of affairs just described by me.

13. Before concluding, I desire to say a few words with respect to Mr. Ranken's special letter to the Secretary for Lands. In that letter he says I appealed to him by name. Now, if I understand the words "appealed to" rightly, then I say I made no appeal to him. I only said the rude refusal of the President took place in the presence of himself and the others I referred to. I should never have thought of asking Mr. Ranken to come forward and verify my statements, because from the first I believed there was an understanding between him and Mr. Abbott as to the conduct of the business, into which I was not allowed to enter, and therefore did not consider him sufficiently unbiassed to induce me to make any special appeal to him. He says also "the matter referred to occurred precisely as stated in the letter herewith from the members of the Commission, and that the words used were exactly as therein set down." I have already denied the correctness of this statement; and I can with confidence appeal to those who have known me officially for upwards of twenty years as to whether I am so unreasonable a mortal as to refuse to accept a reply couched in the comparatively mild terms said to have been used on the occasion, namely, "Excuse me, Mr. Thomson, I have not yet done with my examination of Mr. Stephen." Although even that reply, had it been given, is not so courteous to a colleague as it might have been, still, I would have accepted it willingly, and waited patiently until the President gave me an opportunity to put my question. Now with respect to this alleged answer, it announces a fact of which I was well aware, namely, that he was not done with his examination of Mr. Stephen. Had he been done it is not likely that I should have asked his permission to put the question. In the very next paragraph Mr. Ranken makes a statement which almost goes the length of disproving his former assertion, for he says "After submitting to interruptions, which were decidedly irregular according to the rule adopted by the Commissioners, Mr. Abbott at length declined to allow his line of inquiry to be interfered with." Finding that this was rather a strong admission, and not likely to bear out the previous part of the letter, he has thought it well to qualify it by adding, "But his decision to this effect was expressed in the most courteous terms." My ideas of courtesy and Mr. Ranken's differ widely; and it comes with an ill grace from him to talk of interruptions "decidedly irregular," when not 10 minutes previously to the snubbing I got, he, with the President's permission, put two or three questions to the witness himself.

14. Mr. Ranken concludes by saying "I state emphatically that Mr. Thomson's charges preferred against Mr. Abbott of rudeness and arrogance have no foundation whatever in fact." A reference to my letter will prove however that I preferred no charge of arrogance against Mr. Abbott. I certainly said that Mr. Abbott arrogated powers which had not been conferred upon him by the Commission of His Excellency the Governor; but that cannot, I think, be held as tantamount to preferring a charge of arrogance. It was my opinion at the time, and it is so still, that in presuming to prevent a colleague from interposing questions, was an assumption of powers he did not possess.

15. In conclusion, I desire to express the deep regret which I feel in having to trouble the Premier with these long explanations regarding a matter of such a personal nature, but I felt that I could not remain under the stigma cast upon me by the statements of my late colleagues without at least endeavouring to vindicate my character, and justify the course I adopted in connection with this painful and unpleasant affair. Whether Mr. Farnell approves or disapproves of my action, I am conscious of having done that which I consider right. It will, no doubt, be within your recollection that when I accepted the offer of a seat on the Commission, as originally proposed, I took the liberty of suggesting the appointment of a Board consisting of two official to three non-official members, or one of three official to four non-official, thus giving the preponderance to the latter, which I stated might be desirable. This I did because I was afraid that one official only on the Board would have little say in the management of the business, and consequently his services as a member would be of no material benefit to the Government or the public.

I have, &c.,
JAMES THOMSON.

No. 26.

Minute of The Cabinet.

On taking charge of the Department of Lands I made some inquiries to inform myself of the proceedings of the Board or Commission appointed to inquire into the working of this department on the 7th of September last, and to enable me to see more clearly the scope and objects of the inquiry I caused a communication to be made on the 10th of January to the gentlemen forming the Board or Commission, calling for a Progress Report. This communication was acknowledged on the 14th of January, and the reply stated that the Commissioners would "have pleasure in submitting a Progress Report, as requested, with the least possible delay." Up to the present date no further notice has been taken of my request.

It appears, from the official documents, that, on the recommendation of the late Secretary for Lands, Mr. R. P. Abbott, Mr. James Thomson, and Mr. George Ranken were appointed by the Governor in Council a Board to inquire into and report upon the administration and working of the "Lands" and "Survey" Department in all their branches, and the inquiry was to extend to suggesting the proper remedy for the causes of any inefficiency and delays in the transaction of business which might be found to exist. On the 7th of October the same gentlemen were appointed by the same authority a Commission. Soon afterwards Mr. Thomson resigned, and, on the recommendation of the same Minister, Mr. Abbott and Mr. Ranken, on the 25th of November, were, by the Governor in Council, constituted the Commission to continue the inquiry. The words "Lands" and "Survey" in inverted commas are so used in the first minute paper for the Executive Council, apparently to designate two separate departments, though by the long-recognized administrative arrangements the Department of Lands includes the Survey Office. Both minute papers submitted to the Executive Council are silent on the remuneration of the members of the Board or Commission. I find, however, that on the 30th of October the Commissioners were informed that the Minister would leave to them to propose their own fees, which, with any other expenses that might be incurred, would be paid by the Treasury at such times as they might desire. The Commissioners appear to have declined to act on this suggestion, and on the 4th of November Mr. Farnell fixed their remuneration at three guineas for each sitting for the non-official and one guinea for the official members of the Commission.

It will be seen that though I have been in office now forty-eight days I cannot learn from this body what has been done in the matter of the inquiry in so irregular a manner, as I venture to think, entrusted to them, while at the same time the assistance of high officers in the department is withheld from me to the detriment of the public interest, on the ground that they are summoned to give evidence before these Commissioners. I have not been able to reconcile to my sense of propriety the appointment of a Board or Commission by the ministerial head of a department of Government to inquire into the administration of that department, and to suggest remedies for any inefficiency in its working. The thing appears to me to be contrary to the spirit of ministerial responsibility and altogether unsound. I should have been willing to obtain from the Commissioners some information as to what they have actually been doing before submitting the matter to the Cabinet, if that had been practicable, but as the Commissioners disregard the communication of my wishes made to them nearly a month ago, and as I believe that they never ought to have been appointed, and that their proceedings are really calculated to produce difficulty and embarrassment in the department placed under me, I have arrived at the conclusion that the inquiry ought to be terminated.

ROYAL COMMISSION, LANDS DEPARTMENT.

No. 1.

James Thomson, Esq., to The Under Secretary for Lands.

Sir,

The Treasury, 4 November, 1878.

Referring to my appointment as a member of the Commission recently appointed by His Excellency the Governor "to make inquiry into, and report as to the administration and working of the Lands and Survey Departments in their respective branches," I do myself the honor to request that you will have the goodness to intimate to the Honorable the Secretary for Lands my desire to withdraw from the Commission.

In making this request, which I do with extreme regret, it is right that I should state, for the information of Mr. Farnell, my principal reasons for a request of such an unusual character; they are as follows:—

- 1st. Being the only official member on the Commission, I find my position is reduced to that of a nonentity by the preponderance being altogether on the side of my non-official colleagues, who have, consequently, the business entirely in their own hands.
- 2nd. The examination of the first witness, which has already lasted five days, is being conducted in a manner altogether opposed to my views, as well as to the practice which has hitherto obtained in Royal Commissions in this Colony, and which now obtains in connection with Select Committees of Parliament. The result of the present mode of procedure cannot fail, in my opinion, to unnecessarily and unduly prolong the sittings of the Commission, and thus retard the important and pressing business with which it has been entrusted.
- 3rd. The President monopolizes nearly the whole of the time set apart by the Commission for the examination of witnesses, and has besides assumed a bearing towards myself which, as a Commissioner with co-ordinate powers, I cannot submit to.
- 4th. On the occasion of the first examination he declined to allow me to put a question to the witness which occurred to my mind at the time, and which I believe, if answered, would have had the effect of correcting an erroneous impression that might otherwise have been formed by one of his answers.
- 5th. At the sitting of the Commission on Friday last, which was monopolized entirely by the President, who used papers only that day submitted to the Commission, and which I had not perused, he insulted me in the presence of Mr. Ranken, my colleague, the Secretary to the Commission, the short-hand writer, and the witness, Mr. Stephen, by rudely refusing to allow me to interpose a question, notwithstanding that I asked his permission to do so.

These are some of the reasons which induce me to seek to be relieved from a position which, under the present constitution of the Commission, I feel to be worse than useless. Under other circumstances my services might, from my knowledge of official business generally, and my long experience in duties of a somewhat kindred nature, have proved useful to the Government.

I feel confident, however, that when the Honorable the Premier has read this letter he will see that I could not, consistently with the respect due to myself as a Commissioner, and the position I hold in the Public Service, continue the colleague of a gentleman who arrogates powers which have not been conferred upon him by the Commission of His Excellency the Governor. I also feel confident that he will acquit me of any desire to shirk the duties and responsibilities of the position to which he did me the honor to nominate me, or of any intention to embarrass the Government by withdrawing from the Commission at this early stage of its proceedings.

I have, &c.,
JAMES THOMSON.

Sir,

New Public Works Office, Bridge-street, Sydney, 15 November, 1878.

I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 14th November, forwarding the letter of Mr. James Thomson of 4th November, resigning his appointment as a member of this Commission, and to intimate that Mr. Thomson's letter has this day been returned by the Commissioners to the Honorable the Secretary for Lands.

No. 4.

No. 4.

R. P. Abbott, Esq. (President), and G. Ranken, Esq. (Commissioner), to The Secretary for Lands.

Sir,

New Public Works Office, Bridge-street, Sydney, 15 November, 1878.

We have the honor to return herewith Mr. Thomson's letter of the 4th November, which was transmitted to us yesterday, with an intimation from the Under Secretary to the Department of Lands that you would be glad to receive any observations which the Commission may see fit to make upon the statements contained therein. Mr. Thomson's representations appear to us to be somewhat vague; but it may be convenient that we should reply to his letter categorically, and meet his allegations as specifically as their ambiguity will permit. See No. 1.

1. In his first paragraph, Mr. Thomson states that he is the only official member of the Commission, and implies that his position is, therefore, that of a nonentity. In a conversation which the Commissioners had, with a view to determine the course of their procedure, Mr. Thomson said—"You must remember that I am the only official member of the Commission, and I am bound to see that the officials get fair play;" but we were unwilling at that time to allow its full meaning to the remark; and we are still reluctant to conclude that Mr. Thomson supposed the Commission had been appointed in the interests of the Civil Servants as opposed to those of the public. It never occurred to us to recognize Mr. Thomson as an official, or otherwise than in his capacity as a member of the Commission, having co-ordinate powers with those conferred on us.

2. In his second paragraph Mr. Thomson states that the examination is being conducted in a manner altogether opposed to his views, as well as to the practice which obtains in Royal Commissions and the Select Committees of Parliament. We affirm, however, that the examination has been conducted in a manner identical with that adopted by Select Committees of Parliament and Royal Commissions. The questions of the Commissioners and the answers of the witness have been taken down in short-hand, and, when transcribed, sent to the witness for revision. This method was assented to by Mr. Thomson. We do not therefore understand what he means by the assertion that this course of procedure cannot fail to unduly prolong the sittings of the Commission, unless it be that reference is made to an opinion which Mr. Thomson expressed during the preliminary conference already referred to, to the effect that the witnesses should be required to answer strictly "yes or no."

3. The evidence transcribed abundantly disproves the allegation which Mr. Thomson makes in the third paragraph, and shows conclusively that he has fully exercised his power of examination. It never occurred to us to question his right to do so. After the first day's examination Mr. Thomson remarked that the questions put by the President left him nothing to ask, and the President thereupon desired that Mr. Thomson should begin the examination of any witness, and have priority in examining upon any point he pleased; but it was unanimously agreed that it would be neither seemly nor desirable that the examination of a witness by one Commissioner should be interrupted by questions interposed by either of the others.

4. Mr. Thomson is in error when he states in his fourth paragraph that the President declined to allow him to put a question on the first day of examination. The President did not refuse to allow Mr. Thomson to ask any question; and the fact is, that Mr. Thomson asked ninety-five of the 237 questions put to the witness on that day; and that he broke in upon the President's examination not less than twenty times. Mr. Thomson himself admitted the inconvenience of this course, and it was Mr. Thomson's proposal, made before examination of witnesses was entered upon, that the President should take precedence in examining witnesses, and that the other Commissioners should continue the examination in the order of their appointment.

5. The statements contained in Mr. Thomson's fifth paragraph are inaccurate. The facts are these:—The examination of the witness on the 30th October was conducted exclusively by Mr. Thomson, without any interruption by us. The witness then handed in several lengthy papers which the Commissioners did not think it desirable to print; and it was therefore arranged that each Commissioner should read them in turn. The President was requested to read the papers first—a request which he understood to be made by Mr. Thomson as well as by Mr. Ranken. When the witness was further examined on Friday, the 1st of November, that being the following day of sitting, the President asked Mr. Thomson if he desired to continue the examination which he had conducted at the last meeting; and it was only upon Mr. Thomson declining that the President, following the order of examination which had been agreed upon, examined the witness upon the papers submitted (not at that meeting, as Mr. Thomson erroneously avers), but at the previous meeting when he was present. We understood that this was done with the perfect acquiescence of Mr. Thomson, who certainly made not the slightest objection. We are at a loss to understand how Mr. Thomson should have so far forgotten the facts as to allege that the President entirely "monopolized" the sitting, and used papers only that day submitted. Mr. Thomson did interpose a question, and when (at variance with the understanding previously come to) Mr. Thomson requested to again ask a question, the President replied—"Excuse me, Mr. Thomson, I have not yet done with my examination of Mr. Stephen."

We have read Mr. Thomson's letter with much surprise and regret. We are wholly unable to understand what valid reason he can have for the misconception under which he has written it; and until we heard of this communication we were under the impression that perfect harmony subsisted between us.

We have, &c.,

R. P. ABBOTT, President.

GEORGE RANKEN, Commissioner.

No. 5.

G. Ranken, Esq., to The Secretary for Lands.

Sir,

Sydney, 15 November, 1878.

Mr. Thomson having, in his letter of the 4th instant, appealed to me by name, as witness of an alleged "insult" offered him by Mr. Abbott, I wish to state that the matter referred to occurred precisely as stated in the letter herewith from the members of the Commission, and that the words used were exactly as therein set down. See No. 1.
After

4:

After submitting to interruptions which were decidedly irregular according to the rule adopted by the Commission, Mr. Abbott at length declined to allow his line of inquiry to be interfered with, but his decision to this effect was expressed in the most courteous terms.

Further, I state emphatically that Mr. Thomson's charges preferred against Mr. Abbott of rudeness and arrogance have no foundation whatever in fact.

I have, &c.,
GEORGE RANKEN.

Appendix B.

I have the honor to transmit herewith the *plan of eight portions of land containing 640 acres, numbered 98, 100, 102, 104, 108, 121, 122, and 135, in the parish of Bingagong, county of Urana, applied for by Ellen Harrington under the 13th section of the Crown Lands Alienation Act of 1861, and surveyed by me in accordance with instructions dated 25th December, 1876, transferred by Mr. Licensed Surveyor Orr to me. The applicant is not personally resident on the ground, owing, I am informed by her brother, to temporary ill health. Workmen are camped on portion 98, and are making preparations to fence.

See enclosure B.

An objection by the applicant to the form of the survey is attached. Her objection has reference to the improvement purchase portions Nos. 118, 119, 120, left in virtue of a new and substantial fence recently erected along the boundary of Dunn and Kennedy's selections by Robertson Bros. This fence is placed about 2 links on the western side of the boundary lines, and Miss Harrington is anxious to obtain possession of it. The fence is of exceptional value, consisting of six wires and 600 posts per mile, and I value it at £72 per mile.

I have, &c.,

E. W. TURNER.

Miss Ellen Harrington to Mr. Licensed Surveyor Turner.

Sir,

1 February, 1877.

With respect to my conditional purchase of 640 acres, situated in the county of Urana, parish of Bingagong, not being in accordance with my application made at Urana on the 19th of October, 1876, I therefore object to the survey made by Mr. Surveyor Turner, as it is quite contrary to my application. I will not recognize it on any consideration as legal.

Yours, &c.,

* Appendix C.

I have the honor to transmit herewith, the *plan of four portions of land containing 320 acres, numbered 115, 111, 113, and 116, in the parish of Bingagong, county of Urana, applied for by Joseph Harrington under the 21st section of the Crown Lands Alienation Act of 1861, and surveyed by me in accordance with instructions dated 25th December, 1876, transferred from Mr. Licensed Surveyor Orr to me.

Applicant has a tenement on portion 23, which he states is his original purchase, and not portion 22 as shown on lithograph, 22 being M. A. Kennedy's selection. This tenement is used as a sleeping apartment only. The improvements consist of about a mile of fencing, stated by applicant to have been erected by him, and the hut above mentioned, of the value of—

Mr. J. Harrington to Mr. District Surveyor Bolton.

Dear Sir,

23 February, 1877.

With reference to your letter to Mr. Turner, the Surveyor, your promise to me you have not fulfilled with regard to the survey of the land. Turner has been waiting up to last Tuesday on your letter and received no instructions. Now he has surveyed the land, and allowed 9 chains along the fence, which cuts my land right off from my additional purchases, which causes me to hold my land illegally. At the time Mr. Garrett issued the Circular against Improvements on Crown Lands this fence was not erected. If allowed for improvement it ought to have been cancelled on the late maps before the land was selected. I have lodged a written objection against the whole survey, which I intend to send to head quarters as soon as I receive your advice on the matter. You will greatly oblige,

Yours, truly,

JOSEPH HARRINGTON.

No. 14.

Mr. District Surveyor Bolton to The Surveyor General.

Sir,

District Surveyor's Office, Wagga Wagga, 30 March, 1877.

I beg to forward herewith Mr. L.-S. Turner's letters Nos. 77-12 and 13, and the accompanying plans, and I do myself the honor to draw your attention to mode in which Mr. Turner has measured the conditional purchases the plans represent. I allude to the measurement of the detached part of the conditional purchases in separate portions. This course was perhaps the best to adopt under the circumstances, for it would obviously be unfair to expect a surveyor to measure one of those conditional purchases composed of a number of detached pieces for the fee to be paid for a single portion of a size equal to the aggregate area of such detached portions; again, in event of the conditions failing to be complied with, the portions as measured can be the more readily sold by auction or otherwise. I would therefore recommend that the survey be adopted; and if the conditional purchases are permitted in their present form, that the portions be consolidated at head quarters. With regard to H. M. Taylor's conditional purchase, it is not so objectionable in form as some others. As to Ellen Harrington's conditional purchase, I cannot see that it can be legally held in the form it has assumed by the prior measurements of Volunteer Land Orders. As to Joseph Harrington's additional conditional purchase, he takes exception to it on account of portion 117 being measured in virtue of Messrs. Robertsons' improvements, see my letter No. 77/47. I would further point out that such additional conditional purchase seems to have been taken as adjoining his wife's (Mary A. Harrington, formerly Kennedy) original conditional purchase.

I have, &c.,

C. F. BOLTON,

District Surveyor.

No. 15.

Mr. District Surveyor Bolton to The Surveyor General.

Sir,

District Surveyor's Office, Wagga Wagga, 30 March, 1877.

I do myself the honor to forward herewith Mr. Licensed Surveyor Turner's plans of portions 117, 118, 119 and 120, parish of Bingagong, county of Urana, with his letters Nos. 77-18 and 77-19. The portions alluded to have been measured, on the application of Messrs. Robertson Bros, in virtue of certain fencing erected on the Yanko Reserve, but the applications were lodged subsequently to the land having been conditionally purchased by one Joseph Harrington, under the 21st section of the Crown Lands Alienation Act, and he now protests against the measurements of these portions for the Robertsons, first, because the land was previously applied for by him; and, secondly, because the effect of granting the land to the Robertsons would be to sever the remainder of his additional conditional purchase from his original conditional purchase, and thus invalidate his additional conditional purchase altogether. Independently of these measurements, Harrington's additional conditional purchase has, from force of circumstances, assumed a form which it is questionable whether the law admits of his holding it in. Again, Harrington, at the time he took the additional conditional purchase, was married to M. A. Kennedy, who has a conditional purchase of 320 acres, which, with Harrington's, gave them a holding of 640 acres, without the additional conditional purchase. It is of importance that this matter should be dealt with as early as practicable, so that a conclusion may be come to as to whether Mr. Turner should be paid for the survey, made as it was with a knowledge of the land having been conditionally purchased by Harrington, and in the face of Mr. Garrett's decision with respect to improvements effected on reserves.

I have, &c.,

C. F. BOLTON.

The portions of land herein referred to are improved to the required value by the lessee, and he is entitled to purchase the land in virtue thereof, provided the form of measurement is not objectionable, as the land on both sides of the fence is under lease to applicant.—G.L., 9 May, 1877.

The question is submitted, as to whether the Messrs. Robertson are to be permitted to purchase in right of improvements made within the Yanko Reserve, and also whether the form of measurement made to include sufficient improvement is to be allowed.—R. D. FITZGERALD, for Surveyor General, 9 May, 1877.

No. 16.

Mr. J. Harrington to the Secretary for Lands.

Dear Sir,

9 May, 1877.

I now write to you to obtain the particulars of the disputed survey between Harringtons and Robertson Bros. of Yarrabee. The land is situated in the parish of Bingagong, county of Urana, and is in dispute by a fence erected by Robertsons along the front of my land on the Yanko Reserve, before it was thrown open for selection, as a mere block to prevent me from an additional conditional purchase.

Surveyor

Surveyor Turner surveyed the land. I objected to the survey, and reported it to Mr. Bolton, District Surveyor, of which he sent full particulars to head quarters, Sydney, I have not heard anything about it since. Please let me know what decision you come to about the land, as I am waiting to go on with improvements. The fence was not completed till after it was withdrawn from lease. Please reply at once.

Yours, &c.,

JOSEPH HARRINGTON.

Dear Sir,

Bingagong, Urana, 1 June, 1877.

With reference to the land in dispute between me, J. Harrington and Ellen Harrington, with Robertson Bros., of Yarrabee, I write to know what decision you have come to in the matter, as I am awaiting to go on with improvements.

Honorable dear Sir, I have represented the whole case to you a month ago, and am daily waiting for a reply. The land in dispute is situated on Bingagong, surveyed by Surveyor Turner, in county Urana. The dispute is a wire fence erected along the front of my conditional purchases on the Yanko Reserve, which fence blocks my additional conditional purchase of 320 acres and makes my land perfectly useless.

The fence was erected last July as a mere block to prevent me and others from selecting on the reserve, for which Turner has given the lessee of run a strip of land 9 chains along the fence for an improvement block, which I think is illegal, and which survey I do not acknowledge or recognize, and disputed it with Surveyor Turner and the District Surveyor Bolton, who sent the whole particulars to head quarters, which is now nearly three months and no decision come to about it yet.

I now trust to the Honorable the Minister for Lands.

I have written two letters concerning the land in dispute between me (Harrington) and Robertson Bros. of Yarrabee, in dispute by a fence put up as a mere block to prevent me from getting my land, situated on Bingagong on the Yanko Reserve.

Honorable dear Sir, will you be kind enough to let me know what decision you have come to in the matter, as I am awaiting to go on with improvements and it is keeping me in suspense.

Honorable dear Sir, I am daily waiting a reply.

No. 19.

Miss Ellen Harrington to The Secretary for Lands.

Honorable dear Sir,

20 June, 1877.

It having been reported to the Department of Lands, Conditional Sales Branch, Sydney, on the 30th April, 1877, that I was not resident on my selection of 640 acres made by me at Urana on the 19th day of October, 1876, in County Urana, parish of Bingagong, by Surveyor Turner,—

Honorable dear Sir, I write to inform you that I was resident on my selection at all times that the Act required me, except at the time of survey, when I was on a visit to Wagga Wagga and was laid up with the sandy blight and could not attend without the risk of losing my eye-sight, which was explained to Surveyor Turner by an acting agent on the ground.

Honorable dear Sir, I now inform you that I have made it my continuous bond fide residence ever since the survey, and before it at the time the Land Act required me, and I am living on my land now at the present time, and improving it as the Act requires me to do so.

This evidence I can substantiate by the signatures of two respectable inhabitants of the district residing close by, they now sign their names to the said deposition declaring this evidence to be true and correct.

Honorable dear Sir, by you holding a Court of Inquiry on my selection it would put me to great inconvenience, as the roads are in a bad state and the distance is 80 miles to the District Court. I humbly trust that this evidence will prevent you, Honorable dear Sir, from putting me to this great inconvenience and trouble which Courts of Inquiry cause.

Yours, &c.,

ELLEN HARRINGTON.

Memorandum by The Deputy Surveyor General.

J. & E. Harrington v. Robertson Bros.

See minute on No. 15.

Plan, Appendix P.

JOSEPH Harrington's C.P. (76/199, 21st cl.) and Ellen Harrington's C.P. (76/198, 13th cl.) are submitted with reference to my B. C. of 9th May, herewith. The form of survey adopted for the improvement purchase measurements, portions 117, 118, 119, 120, is objectionable; and as the lessee's improvements cannot be included in portions of 40 acres or upwards, measured according to Regulations, containing containing improvements to the value of £1 per acre,—it is submitted that the improvements for which the portions referred to were measured do not constitute a bar to conditional purchase; and therefore Ellen Harrington and Joseph Harrington are entitled to the land so measured as parts of their respective conditional purchases, which should be measured accordingly.

Explanatory tracing herewith. The form of measurement to be adopted for the C.P.'s., although apparently objectionable, cannot be avoided, on account of the prior alienation of land under Volunteer Land Orders.

31st July, 1877.

ROBERT D. FITZGERALD,
(For Surveyor General.)

The improvements upon portions 117, 118, 119, and 120 bar conditional purchase; therefore J. Harrington's additional conditional purchase must be declared void. As to Ellen Harrington's application, under 13th clause, it is objectionable owing to the form as a whole, but she may retain portions 121, 122. The improvement purchases may stand on their merits, the form being unavoidable. Send refund.—T.G., 6/9/77.

Messrs. Wilson & Ranken to The Secretary for Lands.

Sir,

On behalf of Messrs. A. Robertson & Bros., lessees of Bingagong, Murrumbidgee District, we beg to draw your attention to the fact that Ellen Harrington's conditional purchase, No. 76/198, Urana, besides extending in one direction more than 2 miles, occupies both sides of the main road from Narrandera to Jerilderie, and would respectfully suggest that she should be called on to decide whether she will retain that portion on the north or that on the south side of the road, as it is decidedly illegal her holding both.

Mr. J. Harrington to The Secretary for Lands.

Honorable Sir,

With regard to the wire fence erected by Robertson Bros., of Yarrabee, along the front of my selection, which Surveyor Turner granted, a strip of land along the fence 9 chains wide, which cuts my additional selection right in two, and makes it illegal according to the Act, not being joining, and makes my land perfectly useless to me, as I cannot cross the improvement purchase to go to it without committing a trespass on it.

Honorable dear Sir, I think this to be the greatest piece of injustice ever done to any man since the framing of the Land Act. Will you be kind enough to inform me if my selection will be allowed me in such a ridiculous case as this, or have you the power to grant it. The land I refer to is situated in county Urana, parish of Bingagong, on Yanko Reserve, which you have all the papers connected with in Sydney.

Honorable dear Sir, will you be kind enough to inform me by return of post.

Mr. Inspector Mackenzie to The Chief Commissioner of Conditional Sales.

REPORT by R. J. Mackenzie, Inspector of Conditional Purchases, respecting the selection of Ellen Harrington, made at Urana on 19th October, 1876.

Sir,

Colombo Creek, 10 November, 1877.

I have the honor to report that I visited and inspected the above-described conditional purchase on the 3rd November, 1877, and that I found the selector then non-resident upon her selection.

The land, which consists of box-forest and plain, and comprises 640 acres, is occupied and used by E. Harrington as sheep run; and the selector, who follows the avocation of grazier, had at the time of my visit made the improvements hereunder particularly described, the value of which I estimate at the sums respectively stated, viz. :—

House 20 x 12, weatherboard, in course of erection, nearly complete, say £30.

From the appearance of the land, and the circumstances stated in the following remarks, I am of opinion that the selector has not been continuously resident upon the selection.

From appearance the intention is to form a homestead, the house will be a good building, and the fencing material for a great portion is on the ground ready to be put up. Although I could not see stock except some horses depasturing, from information gathered believe the selector intends keeping sheep on the property.

I have, &c.,

R. MACKENZIE,
Inspector of Conditional Purchases.

No. 31.

Messrs. H. H. Brown & Co. to The Secretary for Lands.

Sir,

21, Exchange Buildings, Pitt-street, Sydney, 11 December, 1877.

We respectfully submit for your consideration the matter of the conditional purchases of Joseph and Ellen Harrington, which cases were brought under the notice of the late Minister (Mr. Garrett), and upon which he acted.

We

We would point out to you that these cases have had the special attention of the whole of the Survey Department, and the Deputy Surveyor General has recommended the disallowance of the improvement purchase applications made by the lessees for portions Nos. 117, 118, 119, and 120, on the grounds that they cannot be included in areas of 40 acres and upwards measured in accordance with the Regulations.

It is moreover evident that this fence was erected for the sole purpose of preventing selection, and does not in any way render more beneficial the occupation and use of the land according to 3rd clause of the amended Act.

We therefore most urgently request that you will cancel the applications under the 2nd clause, and allow our clients their land.

We have, &c.,

H. H. BROWN & CO.

Minute on No. 31.

Minute by the Minister for Lands.

THE Minute of the Deputy Surveyor General of 31st July, 1877, appears to me to be the correct view of the matter in question. I am therefore of opinion that the recommendations contained in the minute herein referred to should be acted upon. The figures, as measured for the improvement purchases, are such as ought not to be allowed under this or any other circumstances of a similar character. They appear to me to be most objectionable. The idea of measuring improvement purchases by lines parallel to a fence, and so embracing the fence, should not be tolerated; and the principle, if carried out to the fullest extent, would be unjustifiable. A great deal might be said as to the impropriety of these kind of measurements, and as to what they might lead to if carried out to their fullest extent; but I have some delicacy in saying anything further, on account of my predecessor (Mr. Garrett) having formed a different opinion. It is sufficient for me to say, that the measurements are not in accord with any known approved survey in the Department—nor are they in accord with the practice, regulations, or law in such cases.

No. 31.

With reference to your letter of the 11th December last, respecting the two conditional purchases of Joseph and Ellen Harrington respectively, I am directed to apprise you that on further consideration of the circumstances of the case, Mr. Secretary Farnell does not consider that the improvements on portions No. 117, 118, 119, and 120 form a bar to conditional purchase. He has therefore approved of the cancellation of J. Harrington's selection being reversed; and as regards Ellen Harrington's purchase, the area of which was reduced from 640 acres to 230 acres, it is to stand for the area applied for.

Not with papers.

2. I am also to inform you that the measurement of these portions will be carried out, as nearly as the law will admit, in accordance with the applications, and as shown on the accompanying tracing.

3. I am to add that the proposed action will be carried out as soon as the parties interested have repaid the amount of deposit money into the Treasury.

With reference to your application for the purchase of portions No. 117, 118, 119, and 120, parish of Bingagong, in right of improvements, which clash with the conditional purchase of Joseph and Ellen Harrington of prior date,—I am directed to apprise you that after full consideration of the circumstances of the case, the Minister for Lands does not consider that the improvements on these portions form a bar to conditional purchase; he has therefore approved of the cancellation of Joseph Harrington's purchase being reversed, and the selection of Ellen Harrington being allowed to stand for the full area applied for, viz., 640 acres, it having been reduced to 230 acres.

2. The measurement of these conditional purchases will be carried out, as nearly as the Law and Regulations will admit, in accordance with the applications.

3. In consequence of this, your improved applications will be declared void as soon as the proposed action is taken with regard to the conditional purchases, which is awaiting the repayment by the selectors of the deposit money into the Treasury.

Mr. J. Harrington made a conditional purchase at Urana, being an addition to his conditional purchase, under 13th clause, of 320 acres, the additional selection comprising the portions Nos. 116, 115, 111, and 113.

This additional selection was declared void by the late Minister for Lands (Mr. Garrett.)

After the selection was declared void, Messrs. Angus Robertson & Bros. selected, under Volunteer Certificates, portions 115, 111, and 113; but J. Harrington still claims these portions, notwithstanding their having been legally selected by Messrs. Angus Robertson and Brothers, and continues to trespass thereon.

We respectfully submit that there can be no doubt as to the illegality of the said additional conditional purchase, not only on account of the peculiarity of its shape, it being intersected by a main road 5 chains wide, but other reasons; and therefore request that Mr. Harrington may be informed that his additional conditional purchase is void, at least as far as these portions are concerned.

Minute of The Secretary for Lands.

WHEN I wrote my minute of the 19th February, 1878, the matter specially considered by me, and to which I gave special attention, was relative to Mr. A. Robertson's improvement purchases being a bar to the conditional purchases of the Harringtons. The question as to whether Harrington's conditional purchases should cross the main road, and embrace the lots intervening the V. L. Order purchases was scarcely considered by me. The matter of the selections crossing the main road, and embracing the alternate lots intervening the V. L. Order purchases, has been specially submitted. Mr. Garrett decided and declared the selections void, on the ground that Robertsons' improvement purchases were a bar to selection. I think it is obvious, for reasons pointed out in my minute (19/2/78) that the decision was not lawful, and I therefore decided that Mr. A. Robertson's purchases were invalid, and therefore were not a bar to selection, so far as the improvement purchases were involved. The question now is, ought the conditional purchase cross the road and embrace the alternate lots as aforesaid. However improper the taking of the V. L. Order selections in the position that they are now in may have been—(I do not think that I would have allowed them)—I am of opinion that it is not legal or proper that Harrington's selections should cross the main road, or that they should embrace the alternate lots intervening the V. L. Order purchases. In accordance with the decision of our Supreme Court, I do not think that the area forming part of the selections on the west side of the road could or would be upheld as being legal.

See minute on No. 31.

A conditional purchase should form a compact lot or portion, and should not be composed of a number of disconnected portions. The matter has been somewhat complicated by previous decisions; but, on the whole, to render substantial justice, and be within the meaning and intent of the law, I think the area comprising the selections situated on the eastern side of the main road should be upheld, and that the area on the western side of the road should be excluded from the whole area of the conditional purchases.

It is said the selections were declared void, and that subsequent to the voidance the alternate portions were taken up by V. L. Orders; but if that voiding was not legal, the portions were not open to selection by V. L. Orders, and the portions are Crown land.

The Chief Commissioner of Conditional Sales to Mr. J. Harrington.

Sir,

Department of Lands, Conditional Sales Division, Sydney, 10 August, 1878.

With reference to my letter of the 26th February last, addressed to your agents, Messrs. H. H. Brown & Co., intimating that Mr. Secretary Farnell had, on reconsideration of the case of your conditional purchase of the 19th October, 1876, decided that in so far as the same was affected by certain measurement measurement made for Messrs. Robertson in virtue of improvements, the cancellation thereof should be revoked, I have now the honor further to inform you that it appears on further examination that the conditional purchase would cross the 5-chain road from Jerilderie to Narrandera, and embrace both sides thereof, which would be contrary to law. The Minister has therefore further decided that your conditional purchase must be confined to the eastern side of the road in question, and that refund should be made to you of the proportion of your deposit money applicable to the land lying on the opposite side of the road.

An order for such refund will be prepared and forwarded to you without delay.

The Secretary of The Farmers' Association, Urana, to George Day, Esq., M.P.

Dear Sir,

Yanko Creek, 16 September, 1878.

See Enclosure.

At a meeting of the "County of Urana Farmers' Association," I was directed to forward you the enclosed address to the Hon. J. S. Farnell, and to request that you will be kind enough to read same and thereby get acquainted with the case. Seal and hand to Mr. Farnell.

It was considered that an apology was necessary for appealing to you on our troubles, but the monstrous injustice about to be perpetrated and the threatened ruin to nearly all the selectors on the Yanko must be our excuse.

I have, &c.,

N. H. WHITELOW,

Hon. Sec. "County of Urana Farmers' Association."

[Enclosure to No. 47.]

Sir,

Yanko Creek, 16 September, 1878.

I am directed, pursuant to a motion passed at a special meeting of the "County of Urana Farmers' Association," to respectfully solicit your consideration of the following facts concerning the disallowance of a portion of Ellen Harrington's conditional purchase, dated 9th October, 1876, situated county of Urana, parish of Bingagong.

The lessees appear to have had the power of influencing the local surveyor and to get their V.L. Orders measured as they wished, in solid blocks, regardless of description; in applications for such purchases the shreds and patches remaining had to be accepted by con. purchaser, who even then had to meet the opposition of the lessee to get what had been allotted to them. In verification of this I would refer you to the manner in which V.L.O's., 76/344, 17th October, 76/383, 17th October, have been surveyed, these blocks being placed in positions not at all identical with that of the land applied for in virtue of said V.L.O's.

At time of application the full complement of Crown Lands was there and available. The track in lieu of which a 5-chain road has since been surveyed need not of a necessity have been placed in its present position, thereby cutting off all Ellen Harrington's frontage to the creek, but might with equal directness and advantage to the public have been surveyed leaving the whole of Ellen Harrington's conditional purchase on the west side of it. The fact of the main Southern Road intersecting purchases of all sorts having frontages to the Murrumbidgee indicate that the usages of the Colony would have to be departed from in order to cancel a conditional purchase because a road of any width runs through it.

Finally, I beg most respectfully to place the following facts before you:—

1st. That at the date of Ellen Harrington's purchase sufficient Crown land was available to have her conditional purchase measured in strict accordance with the Rules and Regulations of the Survey Department.

2nd. Volunteer Land Orders were measured at a distance, and entirely apart from the positions described in the applications, which materially affects the position of E. Harrington's conditional purchase.

3rd. The road need not have been put through the conditional purchase.

4th. There was no road surveyed or proclaimed when the conditional purchase was applied for.

5th. The disallowing Ellen Harrington the full portion of 640 acres would be a precedent that would affect the majority of bond fide selectors on the Yanko Creek.

6th. Should the fact of a 5-chain road intersecting a conditional purchase annul the purchase on one side or the other, then it will bring ruin to the door of every selector having a frontage to the Yanko Creek. A very large majority of the land was measured before purchase, at the sole instance of the Government, and a 5-chain road reserved through the frontage portions on each side of the creek.

We therefore are impelled to consider the matter deserving your reconsideration, and earnestly beg that you may give it the attention its importance appears to require.

I have, &c.,

NORMAN H. WHITELOW,

Hon. Sec. "County of Urana Farmers' Association."

(MR. MORIARTY'S REPORT ON.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be printed, 30 April, 1879.

“conflicting claims of Sir John O'Shanassy to the land by virtue of “improvements.”

(Mr. Barbour.)

CONDITIONAL PURCHASES OF LAYFIELD, GRAY, AND OTHERS.

R. D. Fitzgerald, Esq., A. O. Moriarty, Esq., and J. H. Wood, Esq., to The Under Secretary for Lands.

Sir,

Department of Lands, Sydney, 16 November, 1877.

We have the honor to state, that on completion of the duty entrusted to us by the late Minister for Lands as to the reserves on the Yanko and Colombo Creeks, we proceeded to the land in the vicinity of Moama, applied for by Sir John O'Shanassy in virtue of improvements erected prior to the revocation in October, 1876, of the reserves in that locality, and some of which have been in dispute with certain conditional purchasers.

We made a careful personal inspection of the various classes of improvements which are thickly placed over the country. The majority of them we found to be of comparatively recent date, and of a character admitting of speedy construction; and the case presented to us so many features illustrative of the question referred to us in connection with the reserves previously mentioned (as to the erection of improvements on reserved land for the purpose of defeating selection), that we have thought the present a convenient opportunity for considering that question.

We are warranted in stating that the practice alluded to is of recent development, if not of recent conception. For many years after the original enactment of the present Land Acts, the erection of improvements on reserved lands was held by the Department and known to the parties to be at the risk of the improver, who having full notice that the land was not open for sale could have been under no expectation that a claim to purchase could be maintained. We do not assert that such claims were never entertained, but the cancellation of a reserve for the purpose would certainly have been a rare and exceptional event. But the facility with which, during a later period, reserves were, with scarce a pretence of investigation, obtained (ostensibly for the protection of the public estate, but really for the protection of the runs against invasion by selectors) naturally in time diminished the jealousy with which reserved lands were guarded, and to such an extent that it became almost a matter of course to measure land out of a reserve when applied for in virtue of improvements. It is hardly surprising that in the circumstances, many lessees should have been led to think that the improvement, or quasi improvement of land would not only prevent its being selected on the revocation of the reserves, but enable them to purchase in virtue of the improvements without difficulty.

Certain provisions were made by the Act of 1875 for limiting such sales to fixed improvements and of a character to render more beneficial the use of the land; and these, which were but expressive of the obvious intent of the original Act, aided by a more stringent examination of claims to purchase, have perhaps checked some abuses. But where the improvements satisfy the prescribed conditions, the case rests upon the same footing as under the Act of 1861. We do not hesitate to say that the provisions of that Act, which are in substance embodied in the 2nd clause of the later Act, are sufficient to meet the case.

We would first point out, that the power of sale held by the Government as expressed by the words "may sell," is permissive—not obligatory; that sales must be made in accordance with a general subdivision; and that the law, while prescribing the maximum size of portions, has left the minimum to the discretion of its administrators. Thus, we find it discretionary with the Governor in Council to withhold assent to any sale, and with the Minister charged with the administration of the Crown Lands to make such subdivisions as may suit the public interest, and to limit the size of portions to such areas as may be deemed in any case expedient.

We are alive to the fact that in many instances reserves have included ordinary and necessary station improvements erected at an early date, or from time to time during the tenure of the land, for the utilization or improvement of its natural pasturage or capabilities. In such instances there may further have never been, until the reserves were revoked, the opportunity of securing the immediate land improved. It would be proper to deal liberally with such cases on their merits. But on the other hand, the greater part of the runs have now been occupied for periods ranging to over thirty years. For the last twenty years the run now in question, for example (in addition to the naturally excellent soil and pasturage), has possessed special advantages of situation (recently, by the construction of a railway through its midst, enormously increased) and great value. There has scarcely been a limit to the extent of land that might have been purchased at auction, and there has been abundant space for the erection on freehold land of all necessary station improvements—many such properties (all those, it may be said, in which such difficulties as those under consideration arise) being in fact "runs" no longer, but great freehold estates. And when in such a case the announcement of the intended revocation of a reserve has apparently been the signal for lavish expenditure of means and ingenuity, to place upon the land within a limited time improvements never thought necessary during the previous prolonged occupation, and not to be seen upon the adjacent freehold pastoral areas, the presumption is inevitable that not the use of the land, but the abuse of the law, has been the immediate object of their erection.

Whilst, therefore, we should have been the last to suggest the arbitrary refusal or curtailment of equitable claims to purchase improvements, we feel constrained to represent that certain cases can only properly be dealt with by an exercise of the powers of subdivision and measurement with circumspection, and of the power of sale with caution. Of course, pending measurement, improvements on Crown land will always prevent, to an extent corresponding to their value, such land being selected. And there is much to be said in favour of the operation of the law to this extent, especially in the case of land which has been reserved from sale until surveyed. Any tendency to abuse would probably be at once checked, if it were definitely known that the probable result would be either a refusal to sell land for such improvements, or the measurement of small areas, leaving the adjacent land open to selection.

Consistently

Consistently with the foregoing views, we have now to recommend that the claims of Sir John O'Shanassy to purchase in virtue of certain dams and similar useful improvements not of recent date, specified in the Appendix hereto marked A, be admitted to the extent usually heretofore allowed.

We recommend that the construction specified in Schedule B, not being of a fixed character as contemplated by the Act, be not recognized as conferring any claim to purchase, or as debarring the land from selection ; and we recommend that those specified in Schedule C be measured off from the adjacent land in blocks of (say) 10 acres, and brought to sale by auction on application, without any value being added for improvements which, though of a fixed character, are in our opinion calculated rather to retard the settlement of the land than to render its use and occupation practically more beneficial.

Minutes on No. 2.

Deputy Surveyor General,—

I have to draw your attention to the surveyor's report under column of remarks. It is almost needless to state that applicant's land adjoins a large reserve, No. 620, which contains partly gum and box.—T.H.L., 14 Nov., /74.

Memo. accordingly—J.R., 16/11/74.

Memorandum of Instructions.

Surveyor General's Office, Sydney, 16 November, 1874.

(To be returned with reply.)

Subject.

Mr. Licensed-Surveyor Burdett is requested at his early convenience to report as to whether the timber should be preserved on the land adjacent to Thomas Kerr's conditional purchase of 320 acres, No. 4, parish of Banangalite, county of Townsend.

P.F.A.,

18 Nov., /74.

Reply.

There is no timber fit for use adjacent to T. Kerr's conditional purchase.

The nearest is about 2 miles due south, upon the River Edwards, and I would not recommend that it be preserved on the land, as the red gum is much scattered and matured.

[Urgent.]

Sir,

Deniliquin, 23 July, 1877.

I have the honor to complain to you against the validity of a conditional purchase now standing in the name of Robert Barbour, on account of the non-fulfilment by the original purchaser (Thomas Kerr) of the residence required by the "Crown Lands Alienation Act of 1861."

The conditional purchase in question, which was for 320 acres of land in the parish of Banangalite, was originally taken up by one Thomas Kerr on the 20th November, 1873, under the 13th section of the "Crown Lands Alienation Act of 1861," and is numbered 588 in the books of the Land Agent at Deniliquin; and I have to inform you that the said Thomas Kerr did not reside on his said conditional purchase for over three months after the date thereof. And I further inform you that the said purchase was made by one Robert Barbour, without the knowledge or consent of the said Thomas Kerr.

I also inform you that the said Thomas Kerr, on 19th June, 1875, made an alienation of the said purchased land to one Peter Nestrom; and on the 4th October, 1876, Peter Nestrom again alienated the same land to John P. Burrows, who, on the 29th December, 1876, transferred to Robert Barbour.

I further inform you that Nestrom, during the time the land remained in this name of him, did not reside on the said land, but lived and resided on land distant more than a mile therefrom.

I have deposited £10, as required by the 25th section of the "Lands Act Amendment Act of 1875," the receipt wherefor by the Land Agent, Deniliquin, is annexed hereto, and I accompany this with a Declaration verifying my complaint, as required by the said Act.

Commissioner Rose to The Under Secretary for Lands.

REPORT of an Inquiry held at Deniliquin on the 1st and 7th November, 1877, by A. C. S. Rose, Commissioner for the South-western Division, respecting the conditional purchase of Thomas Kerr, made at Deniliquin on the 20th November, 1873.

Sir,

I have the honor to transmit herewith for the consideration of the Honorable the Minister for Lands, minutes of evidence taken at an inquiry, under the "Lands Act Amendment Act of 1875," held by me in pursuance of the reference notified in the Gazette of the 13th August, 1877, in the matter of the above-described conditional purchase. See No. 10.

The claimant, having been duly served with notice of the time and place of holding the inquiry, was present thereat.

The

The following facts, bearing upon the fulfilment by the selector of the conditions of purchase, were elicited in evidence, viz. :—

The conditional purchaser and his alienee both deposed that they have not habitually resided upon this land.

I have, therefore, to report that I find such conditions not to have been fulfilled, and to recommend that this conditional purchase be forfeited.

I have, &c.,

A. C. S. ROSE,
Commissioner.

MEMO.—An inspection of the improvements is desirable.—A.C.S.R.

Minutes on above.

For forfeiture. It is apparent, on the evidence, that this selection was taken up, occupied, and used in the interest of Mr. Barbour, and that the conditions of selection, though declared to, were not fulfilled.—A.O.M., 11/12/77. E.A.B., 11/12/77. Selector informed by circular, 21 January, 1878.

[Enclosure to No. 11.]

Evidence.

Thomas Kerr, being duly sworn, saith : I am a tank sinker and fencer ; on the 20th of November, 1873, at the Land Office, Deniliquin, an area of 320 acres, situated in the county of Townsend, parish of Banangalite, was taken up in my name, and under the residence condition ; this area was taken up by Mr. Robert Barbour, without my knowledge or sanction ; I did not know that this land had been taken up until I arrived at the Murray, on the 28th of November, 1873 ; I helped to put a tent on this land about the 7th of December, 1873, and when I had done this (which was completed in a few hours) I left, and did not see the selection again till February, 1874 ; I was absent from the place, not on my own business but on Mr. Barbour's ; when I returned I went to live on the area of 320 acres ; I continued to live there until October, 1875 ; I then left the selection, as Mr. Barbour asked me to cancel an agreement we had made about some horses that I was to look after ; I agreed to do so, and I abandoned the selection ; I positively swear that I never at any time alienated or transferred this selection to a man named Peter Nestrom ; the signature now shown to me is mine ; on the 19th June, 1875, I was in the employment of Mr. Barbour ; about this time Mr. Barbour brought home a paper for the purpose of getting it signed ; I was at the saw-mill at Barratta at the time ; Mr. Barbour said to me, "Tom, I've brought you a paper to sign," I said, "What is it?" he said, "Why, one of the papers you signed on the Murray"; I believe he said one of the applications is lost, and I want you to sign this in place of it ; he then handed me a printed paper, and I signed it ; the signature on the paper now shown is mine ; the paper is like that I signed, but I cannot now say whether it is the same ; the signature shown to me on the other paper is mine ; I swear to it ; I am quite sure that it is mine ; I am quite sure that Peter Nestrom did not live on my selection at all during the period from the 17th of June, 1875, to October, 1875 ; I lived there myself with my wife and family ; when I left the selection in October, 1875, the improvements were as follows :—about 2 miles of post and 5-wire fencing, worth £60 per mile, £120 ; a four-roomed weatherboard house with iron roof, £40 ; a dam, £30 ; total £190 ; Mr. Barbour paid for all these improvements ; I did not know that I could stick to this land if I liked ; I positively swear that not a word was ever said to me about transferring this land to Peter Nestrom ; I never knew that this land had been transferred to Peter Nestrom until the last time I was here at the Court of Inquiry ; neither Nestrom himself nor Mr. Barbour ever spoke to me about any transfer of this land ; on looking more carefully at the signature now before me, I am sure it is not mine ; when I first saw it I did not closely examine it ; I am quite sure the other signature is mine ; if I had known the contents of this paper I should have signed it ; the land did not belong to me, and Mr. Barbour was at liberty to do what he liked with it.

Taken and sworn before me, at Deniliquin, this }
the 1st day of November, 1877,—

A. C. S. ROSE,
Commissioner.

THOMAS KERR.

Peter Nestrom, being duly sworn, saith : I am a bona fide selector ; I know an area of 320 acres at Banangalite, taken up in the name of Thomas Kerr ; I was in the employ of Mr. Barbour, of Curnalla, in 1873, when this selection was taken up ; in June, 1875, I was at Barratta ; I lived when there on Fanny Barbour's selection ; this place is about a mile and a half from Kerr's selection ; I stayed there only a few days, and then returned to Curnalla, where I stayed a little better than a week ; I then returned to Barratta, and remained there, on Fanny Barbour's selection, till September, 1876 ; during that time I was engaged fencing and building, and in other ways ; I stayed generally at Fanny Barbour's place—sometimes at other selections ; I did not live on Kerr's selection, but I was there nearly every day ; I had cattle there ; I slept there hardly once a month ; I had a good many meals there ; I signed an alienation of this selection in September, 1876 ; I did not know to whom it was transferred, and I did not care ; I was glad to get rid of this selection ; I wanted to get a selection of my own, and as long as I held the one we are speaking of I could not ; after I signed the alienation I came to Deniliquin for the purpose of selecting land ; this was on the 3rd of October, 1876 ; on the following day I went to the Land Office, and to my surprise found that my name was still in the Land Register, so that I was shut out from selecting ; I had signed the alienation paper quite three weeks previously ; I wrote a sharp letter to Mr. Barbour ; the land had been transferred to me without my knowledge, and I transferred it without knowing or caring to whom it was transferred ; I never slept on Kerr's selection from June to October, 1875 ; I might have had a snack at Kerr's place during that time, from June to October, 1875, but I never lived there during that time ; I was to have grass for thirty head of cattle from Mr. Barbour in addition to my wages, £125 a year ; I did not live on Kerr's selection continuously during the period from June, 1875, to October, 1876, that is fifteen months ; in October, 1876, I transferred the land to somebody, to Burrows as it afterwards turned out.

Taken and sworn before me, at Deniliquin, this }
the 1st day of November, 1877,—

A. C. S. ROSE,
Commissioner.

PETER NESTROM.

Robert Barbour, being duly sworn, saith : The application for a conditional purchase now shown to me is in my writing, and is signed by me for the applicant, Thomas Kerr ; at the time I presented this application to the Crown Land Agent at Deniliquin I had authority from Kerr to take up this land ; he gave me a verbal authority to take up 320 acres for him, and I believe it was at Curnalla this authority was given ; at that time Kerr was in my employment ; I engaged him in Melbourne ; the agreement about the land might have been made in Melbourne ; Kerr's evidence, that this area was taken up without his knowledge or sanction, is untrue ; the agreement about the land was made previous to the 20th November, 1873 ; the agreement was that I was to take up 320 acres for him as a conditional purchase, and that I was to have a lien upon it for the money advanced by me, and that if this money so advanced was not paid by a certain time, I was to have the land ; I cannot now say within what time the money was to be paid ; I believe there is some writing between Kerr and me about this matter, but I cannot positively say ; I believe that there is some writing signed at Curnalla ; some two years afterwards Kerr left my service ; he lived on that selection at the time he left my service ; part of Kerr's statement in the Court about some paper having been lost is true ; but it is certainly untrue that I said to him that one of the applications was lost ; I could not possibly have said this ; the writing in the document now shown to me is mine, that is, the main part of the writing ; I cannot say whether I got Kerr to sign this paper ; I cannot say whether or not I handed this paper to Mr. Broughton ; I cannot say when the date of alienation was inserted ; I can remember nothing about this document ; it bears date 19 June, 1875 ; I presume that it was drawn up then ; I believe that Kerr was living on the selection now under consideration from the 19th June, 1875, to October, 1875 ; I do not know whether the name of Peter Nestrom was in this document when it was signed by Thomas Kerr ; I do not remember ever having told Kerr that this land was to be transferred, or was transferred, to Peter Nestrom ;

Kerr's evidence on this point, now read to me, is untrue; I remember sufficient of the transaction to say that in this matter Kerr does not speak truth; I am prepared to say, and I have said, that I believe it to be untrue; what Nestrom says is no more true than what Kerr says on this point; I have no remembrance of telling Peter Nestrom about the transfer of this land to him; there was an agreement between Nestrom and myself about the duties to be performed by him in my service at Barratta, but it is lost or destroyed; he was to be paid partly by salary, partly by being allowed to run cattle on my property; I cannot say where Nestrom signed the alienation to Burrows, or when he signed it; I think that the notification of alienation in this case was transmitted by letter to Mr. Broughton; I cannot say whether the name of Burrows was in this document when Nestrom signed it; I do not remember ever having mentioned Burrows' name to Nestrom; I remember Nestrom telling me that he wanted to come to Deniliquin to select land; but when he told me this I do not remember; Nestrom wrote to me afterwards, that he could not see the transfer of the selection now in question in the books of the Land Office, that this prevented him from selecting; I think that Nestrom's evidence, that this land was transferred to him and from him without his knowledge, is not true; the declaration of Burrows is written by me and signed by Burrows; I was present with Burrows when he signed this declaration before Mr. Mair, Police Magistrate at Deniliquin.

No. 12.

Robert Barbour, Esq., M.P., to The Secretary for Lands.

Sir,

Parliament House, Sydney, 2 February, 1878.

I have the honor to request that you will delay further departmental action with regard to a report from Mr. Commissioner Rose, Deniliquin, on the conditional purchase named in the margin, until you shall have had an opportunity of going into the case, and then if you think it necessary I shall submit additional evidence which I could not lay before the Commissioner, not being able to attend, as the inquiry took place at the time of the election, while I was 60 miles distant.

The Commissioner reports having taken evidence, but it is a distortion of the facts; the principal witness, Kerr, swore to certain things; and the accompanying agreement under seal, signed, and in the presence of a witness, proves he swore falsely—his whole evidence then must be disbelieved.

The facts plainly told, without a lawyer to distort them, are these:—Kerr was employed by me in a venture of purchasing a mob of horses, for which £1,500 cash was paid; he was a married man, desired a selection for a house, and we agreed that I was to advance money to buy the land, fence in, build houses, and erect a saw-mill, which would come to at least £500, before March; if the horses did well he was to get a share of the profit, and might be able by March to pay the money, and if he paid the money the land was to be his; but he did not pay the money, and after a time I cut connection with him for drunkenness; he resided on the land continuously, night and day, with his family, for nearly two years; it was assigned to Peter Nestrom, who took Kerr's place as my manager, and he was on the ground all day from morning till night, but very often slept about a mile away where his wife was employed as a housekeeper; Nestrom assigned to Burrows, who completed the three years residence, and made the declaration, paying the one year's interest, and Burrows subsequently assigned the land to me.

On the opposite side I make a protest, but I think I have already shown that Kerr's evidence cannot be believed; he is evidently an adverse witness, who has a grudge against me, and the others are all prejudiced.

The papers are all regular, and the purchase has been completed and no irregularity apparent; parole evidence, given nearly four years after, cannot set aside a document under seal; Kerr took possession within the month by erecting his tent as he says; he stayed a few days and went for the horses and his family, and thereafter lived on the ground nearly two years. This is his own evidence.

Yours, &c.,

ROBERT BARBOUR.

Protest alluded to.

PROTEST against inquiry being made by Mr. Commissioner Rose as to a conditional purchase by Thomas Kerr, made at Deniliquin, 20 November, 1873, 320 acres.

The inquiry was instituted by the squatters paying £10 under the Amending Act of 1875, the department declining to do so.

1st. The selection was made under the Land Act of 1861, and was never brought under the Amending Land Act, 1875. Proceedings must go for nothing, as the Act cannot be retrospective.

2nd. The term of three years' residence, of improvement; the declaration, and payment of one year's interest, were all duly completed, and I submit, cannot be disturbed.

3rd. Before such inquiry could proceed and apply, the statutory declaration must be set aside, otherwise an inferior Court would try an issue which belongs to a superior one.

Objections taken by Robert Barbour, who is now the owner of the land by assignment.

Minutes on No. 12.

Inform that the case appears on the proceedings to be complete, but has been for the present delayed pursuant to his request for consideration of his appeal. The inquiry having been, however, one between parties, and on sworn testimony, cannot be reopened, unless he desires another opportunity of bringing forward the evidence in defence, for which the case was deferred by the Commissioner at his application, and would no doubt have been further postponed in the circumstances had application been made to the Commissioner, and cause shown. Request Mr. Barbour to be good enough to state whether his object is to obtain a renewal of the inquiry before the Commissioner.—A.O.M., 12/2/78.

The Minister, at the request of Mr. Barbour, has approved of this case being referred back to the Commissioner to afford him an opportunity of bringing forward evidence in defence, which, owing to the adjourned inquiry having been held at a time when he was engaged in his election as a Member of Parliament, he was unable to do previously.—A.O.M., 23/2/78.

[Enclosure to No. 12.]

Agreement alluded to.

In consideration of the sum of £80 advanced to me by Robert Barbour, of Curnalla, saw-mill owner, to enable me to conditionally purchase portion, parish Banangalite, county of Townsend, containing 320 acres, and in consideration of the further sum of 1s. paid to me at the time of signing this document, and in further consideration of divers other valuable considerations, I, Thomas Kerr, for myself, my heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, do hereby alienate, assign, and make over absolutely unto the said Robert Barbour, his heirs and assigns, the aforesaid portion of land, subject to the reservation hereinafter mentioned. And I, the said Thomas Kerr, for the considerations aforesaid, have executed and signed in Escrow the alienation of the said portion of land on the form prescribed for that purpose by the Land Act, 1861. And further, I, the said Thomas Kerr, do hereby command, bind, and oblige myself that I shall reside on and occupy the said portion of land as my bonâ fide residence for a period of at the least one whole year from the date hereof, and execute all instruments, and do all necessary things to be done for effectually transferring the said portion of land to any person whom the said Robert Barbour may direct (subject nevertheless to the power on my part of making payment to the said Robert Barbour of the sum of five hundred pounds sterling if paid on or before the 1st day of March next ensuing, and thereby to redeem the said portion of land), but should I, the said Thomas Kerr, fail to pay the said Robert Barbour the aforesaid sum of five hundred pounds sterling on or before the aforesaid 1st day of March, 1874, all power to redeem shall cease and determine, but the covenant to reside on and occupy shall remain in full force, and be binding on me.

As witness my hand and seal this first day of December one thousand eight hundred and seventy-three.

Commissioner Rose to The Chief Commissioner of Conditional Purchases.

Sir,

Albury, 27 July, 1878.

In returning the *accompanying papers relating to the case noted in the margin, I do myself the honor to state that Mr. Barbour, at whose request the case was remitted to me for further investigation, failed to appear both on the day agreed upon for the re-hearing and on the day afterwards, appointed by me (the 28th ultimo), for the production of further evidence if he felt disposed to produce any. It appears to me that Mr. Barbour is simply contemptuous in his conduct towards the Court of Inquiry, and deserves no further extension of courtesy.

I am, &c.,

A. C. S. ROSE,
Commissioner.Minutes on No. 18.

As Mr. Barbour did not put in an appearance after the matter had been remitted to the Commissioner at his request, the case must now go on for forfeiture.—J.S.F., 28/8/78.

The circumstances elicited by this inquiry should be brought to the notice of the Honorable the Attorney General, with a view to his considering whether they disclose such a breach of the law to have been committed as to render it advisable that further proceedings should be taken, and in that event, that he may advise as to any such proceeding.—A.O.M., 25/9/78.

I am directed by the Secretary for Lands to forward the enclosed proceedings of an inquiry, held before Mr. Commissioner Rose, at Deniliquin, into the matter of the fulfilment of conditions of the conditional purchase noted in the margin, which has been declared forfeited, and I am to request that you will be so good as to lay the same before the Honorable the Attorney General, with a view to his considering whether the circumstances disclosed in the evidence and accompanying documents show such a breach of the law to have been committed as would render it advisable that further proceedings should be taken, and in that event that he may be pleased to advise as to any such proceedings.

The Crown Solicitor to The Under Secretary for Lands.

Sir,

Crown Solicitor's Office, Sydney, 26 November, 1878.

I have the honor to return herewith the papers relating to the forfeited conditional purchase of Robert Barbour (formerly of Thomas Kerr), and to state that I have submitted same to Mr. Attorney General, a copy of whose advising will be found on the other side.

I have, &c.,

*[Enclosure to No. 20.]*Opinion referred to. In re forfeited conditional purchase of Barbour.

I HAVE carefully examined the documents submitted to me in this matter, and I am unable to find any materials to justify a criminal charge against any of the persons concerned in this transaction; the law having failed to make such an agreement as that entered into by Kerr a criminal act, it is not possible for the Attorney General to do so. That the selection was not initiated or carried out in good faith seems hardly to admit of doubt, but I see no evidence which would support any criminal proceeding.—W.J.F., 22/11/78.

No. 21.

R. Barbour, Esq., M.P., to The Secretary for Lands.

Dear Sir,

Darling Point, Sydney, 1 February, 1879.

I beg leave to submit for your decision a case of some importance that has arisen through Mr. Commissioner Rose putting, as I think, a most unwarrantable interpretation upon the words in the Land Act "continuous residence," and one in which I think the head of the department may justly exercise a discretion. The enclosed statutory declaration has reference to the cases, and I have to request that it be placed along with the other papers. Shortly stated, it is as follows:—Thomas Kerr, at Deniliquin, on November 20th, 1873, selected 320 acres of land, being portion (surveyed) 4, parish of Bananalite, county Townsend. Within three weeks he was on the ground for several days preparing, &c., then he went went for his family, and to bring a mob of horses to graze on the land; he returned to his selection within a month, and continued there for nearly two years; he assigned to Nestrom, and, after Nestrom had been on it for more than a year, he assigned it to Burrows; Burrows completed the conditions, made the requisite declaration, paying one year's interest, also after this it became my property. Anything belonging to Barbour is to Ricketson what a red blanket is to a wild bull, and so Ricketson paid £10 to have an inquiry, and after a lapse of some twelve months—after everything was supposed to be completed, improvements all made, and my servants all discharged, and Ricketson had engaged the most of them, and when the elections were in full contest, and I was preparing to come to Sydney—at this precise juncture, Mr. Ricketson prevailed upon Mr. Rose to hold an inquiry, and he did hold it, although I employed an agent to ask that it be adjourned, but he refused to grant any postponement, and proceeded with the inquiry in my absence.

Ricketson was there, his lawyer was there, his servants were there, and my discharged servants also (one or more were discharged by me for drunkenness), and their animus is conspicuous in their sworn evidence, and in some instances, although not cross-examined, the witnesses contradict themselves. And the Commissioner sums up by expressing his opinion that continuous residence has not been fulfilled, and recommends forfeiture, and so it is gazetted, but no expression of this sort is given in Court; one would imagine when holding an Inquiry Court that he is always for the selector. Now here a matter involving £1,000 value is to be taken from me upon an inquiry made in my absence, and in the absence of others who were parties to it who cannot be found, because the inquiry takes place twelve months after everything was thought to be completed. The man who made the declaration—is he a perjurer, or is an opportunity to be afforded him of proving the case? No. The Commissioner expresses an opinion, not in open Court. I question whether it would be to the same effect had it been expressed openly at the time; but that is the opinion communicated in one week or a month's time to the Minister; and because he, a single individual, thinks so, after all the influences have been at work, I am to be deprived of £1,000. It cannot be because Kerr has not proved residence, although he did it much against his will; but it may be because Nestrom, who was daily there from morning to night, chose to walk a mile and sleep with his wife the greater part of the time, she having engaged to do work and make and save money in addition to what her husband was making; but this was only for a time, and then husband, wife, children, and cattle all live on the selection, and dairy the cattle.

I ask, should suspicions, if not worse, deprive me of my £1,000; and, looking at the policy, should the department favour settlement or banish it.

I have to request that you will reinstate the claimant and reverse the forfeiture, for the following and other reasons:—

1. The sham inquiry is only a mockery and delusion—it is like the appraisalment of runs. Is human nature in one person capable of resisting the influences surrounding him. (Read the attached *letter from a squatter.) The consequences are enormous, the prizes large.
2. The written evidence submitted to you cannot altogether be relied on. It may, by the addition of a word or two, be made to mean very different from what was intended, and, although read over to a witness, he is flurried and may not detect the error. Working men think slowly, and seldom keep pace with evidence read to them. You may have noticed this by their sometimes walking up to ask about something several times before.
3. The lapse of time allowed to take place between the taking of evidence and making the report and recommendation (sometimes a week or a month) and only one person to be acted upon—meditation, consultation, or what?
4. Although the complaints were in the hands of the department before the three years had expired, yet the inquiry does not take place until twelve months thereafter. The law has been completed by the declaration being accepted, and this should bar the inquiry.
5. The Government having received a year's interest acknowledges fulfilment of the conditions, and, as in the late Queensland case, waives the question of forfeiture.

Your early consideration and decision is requested.

Truly yours, &c.,

ROBERT BARBOUR.

[Minute on No. 21.]

I find, upon a careful perusal of the papers in this case, that two of my predecessors, Messrs. Baker and Farnell, approved of the forfeiture of Thomas Kerr's conditional purchase, and I am asked to reverse the decision of those gentlemen. I find that after the first inquiry held by Mr. Rose, at which Mr. Barbour was present, Mr. Farnell consented to a further inquiry being held by the Commissioner, at Mr. Barbour's request, to afford that gentleman a further opportunity to bring forward evidence in defence, but Mr. Barbour failed to appear on that occasion, as he had failed to appear at an adjournment of the original inquiry, also made at his request by the Commissioner. It will thus be seen that Mr. Barbour has had an opportunity, on different occasions, to prove his case in open Court, and having carefully considered that matter, I have failed to see any reason for reversing the decision of my predecessors.—J.H., 11/2/79.

[Enclosure to No. 21.]

Declaration referred to.

I, ROBERT BARBOUR, late of Barratta, near Deniliquin, but now of the City of Sydney, a Member of the Legislative Assembly of New South Wales, in the Colony of New South Wales, do solemnly and sincerely declare:—

That I know Thomas Kerr. He selected 320 acres of land on the Barratta Run aforesaid, on the 20th day of November, 1873. I saw him on the land in the month of January following. He built a four-roomed weatherboard house, and he, with his family, resided on the selection continuously until the latter part of 1875. He had a mob of breeding horses there, and for some part of the time had a saw-mill there, cutting timber for his own use, and he sold the timber to the neighbouring settlers. The land has a frontage to the main road, and, in passing, I used to go in and talk with Kerr on business. This occurred sometimes two or three times in a week. His household contained besides himself, his wife and three children—one a son about ten years of age, who used to work with and assist his father with the improvements. I have seen them working at the house, at the saw-mill, digging out waterholes and dams, ploughing for crop,—one year he had about 10 acres of hay—erecting fencing, &c. His wife and her two daughters were engaged in dairying and keeping poultry. I know the person named Peter Nestrom. He succeeded Kerr in the selection. He came there about May or June, 1875. I was present on the ground when Nestrom took possession from Kerr. It was arranged that Kerr was to be allowed for a short time the use of the dwelling house for his family, and I know that for a long time Kerr remained in the house. Nestrom had cattle and horses, and carried on dairying. He was always to be found there from daylight till dark, and many a time I have been with with him there, arranging business. I know that Nestrom had some difficulty to get Kerr's family out of the dwelling house, and he had to threaten impounding and other proceedings before he went away. Nestrom's wife was, during this time, making money as a housekeeper on an adjoining farm. After Kerr's family left, Nestrom's wife gave up her situation, and when the spring set in with plenty of grass, and the cows to calve, all their interests were transferred to Kerr's selection, and they extended their dairying operations. About July or August, 1876, Nestrom informed me that 320 acres was too small, and the distance—about 25 miles from Deniliquin—too great for selling dairy produce; and if I would get some one to take Kerr's selection off his hands, he knew of 600 acres about 10 miles distant from Deniliquin that he would take at once, and secure the advantage of the spring. I did get a person named Burrows, and the transfer was made. Burrows then went in, and continued till the end of the three years. He made the declaration, and paid the interest. And I make this solemn declaration conscientiously believing the same to be true, and by virtue of the provisions of an Act of the Parliament of New South Wales rendering persons making a false declaration punishable for wilful and corrupt perjury.

Declared at Sydney, in the Colony of New South Wales, }
7th day of October, 1878, before me,—

Sir,

Adverting to your letter of the 1st instant, applying, for the reasons therein set forth, for a reversal of the forfeiture of the conditional purchase noted in the margin, I am directed to inform you that after a careful perusal of all the papers in the case, and in view of the fact of your having failed to appear at the further inquiry held by Mr. Commissioner Rose at your own request, as also at the adjournment of the original inquiry, and thus avail yourself of the opportunities offered to bring forward evidence in support of your case, the Minister for Lands sees no reason to reverse the decisions arrived at by his predecessors, Messrs. No. 10.

Mr. R. Barbour to The Secretary for Lands.

Sir,

Deniliquin, 15 July, 1876.

I have the honor to request that you will review Mr. Commissioner Johnson's reports upon my family's conditional purchases, and that you will order that their holdings be not disturbed.

The following are the names, viz.:—

Catherine I. Barbour ; selected	Deniliquin, 20 November, 1873.
Mary K. Barbour	do.
Margaret W. Barbour	do.
George Pitty Barbour	do.
George Pitty	do.
Josiah Pitty	do.

I have nine children ; I took up selections for them ; the eldest is a girl now seventeen years ; the two next are girls, and the boys are still younger. I have made their selections their bond fide homes, and the children are proud in saying "This is my land." I have been compelled to remove them occasionally from attacks of measles, scarlet fever, and in one case of rheumatic fever ; and my duty as a parent has pressed me to provide for their education. This has caused the eldest girl to be away from home, at college in Melbourne, for the last three-quarters of a year, but she will be back again at the vacation ; and some of the others have also been away at school. I have expended on the selections about £3,000 in fencing, in dams, and in necessary buildings. I have cultivated portions, and stocked the land with horses, cattle, and sheep, and done everything that I could do to make the several portions full, complete, and honestly occupied.

I had the misfortune to select upon the run of the greatest tyrant of all the land-vultures of Riverina, who, because I would not sell out to him, vowed that he would ruin me, compel me to leave my land penniless, and make it an example to all free selectors not to come to Baratta. He has pretty nearly fulfilled his vow. He has persecuted me with four Supreme Court actions, costing me £3,000, and has succeeded in frightening all selectors away, for not one other selector will come to his run of Baratta. Discharged servants of mine have been engaged by him at increased wages, suborned to conjure up evidence to damage me. He takes your Inspectors to his house, gives them a princely entertainment, takes them with him in his buggy all round his kingdom, impresses them with his strong mind and wishes, and the results he wants follow : A buggy drives up, driven by Ricketson ; he brings a gentleman ; the gent jumps out, looks at the hut, looks at the fence, perhaps he sees a dam in the distance, and he guesses, or is supplied with information from the person who drives, but not a question is asked at the poor selector's—his information would not answer the purpose.

If my parental instincts have placed the inquiring minds of my children in positions that would withdraw their little persons for a little time from their own huts, or if I did give them occasionally the opportunity of nestling under their mother's wings, where they could hear the oft-repeated story of the heartless Ricketson, who, when their father was hundreds of miles away, did pull the house down over their heads that he might frighten them, I still must add that I believe that I have, through my family, fulfilled honest settlement.

I have, &c.,

Sir,

I have the honor to report that I visited and inspected the above-described conditional purchase on the 2nd July, 1876, and that I found the selector then not resident upon his selection.

The land, which consists of open plains, and comprises 320 acres, is not occupied and used by Leighton Barbour as a residence; and the selector, who follows the avocation of a , had at the time of my visit made the improvements hereunder particularly described, the value of which I estimate at the sums respectively stated, viz., the portion of the weatherboard cottage mentioned in my report on Robert Barbour's conditional purchase, which I valued at £80; also from the appearance of the land and the circumstances stated in the following remarks, I am of opinion that the selector has not been continuously resident upon the selection; also a tank about 600 yards (cubic), £35, 40 chains five-wire fencing, worth £60 per mile, £30. These were the only improvements on the area at the time of my visit. There can be no doubt the residence conditions in this case have not been attended to.

REPORT by D. Keele, Inspector of Conditional Purchases, respecting the selection of Robert Barbour, junior, made at Deniliquin, on 20 November, 1873.

Sir,

I have the honor to report that I visited and inspected the above-described conditional purchase on the 2nd July, 1876, and that I found the selector then not resident upon his selection.

The land, which consists of open plains, and comprises 320 acres, is not occupied and used by Robert Barbour as a residence; and the selector, who follows the avocation of , had at the time of my visit made the improvements hereunder particularly described, the value of which I estimate at the sums respectively stated, viz., a weatherboard cottage, situated on the boundary-line between this conditional purchase and that of Leighton Barbour, portion 13. From the appearance of the land and the circumstances stated in the following remarks, I am of opinion that the selector has not been continuously resident upon the selection.

This cottage I valued at £80. There was also 40 chains of five-wire fencing on the area, which I value at £60 per mile; also a small tank or excavation of 600 (cubic) yards, worth 1s. per yard—£35. I found a man residing in the hut, who informed me that he was a servant in the employ of Mr. R. Barbour, senior. I should say that the residence conditions have not been observed in this case.

The conditional purchase in question, which was for 320 acres of land, in the parish of Ricketson, being portion 13, was taken up by said Leighton Barbour, who is a minor, on 20th November, 1873, and is numbered *592 in the book of the Land Agent, Deniliquin; and I have to inform you that the said Leighton Barbour did not take up his residence on the said land, so purchased by him as aforesaid, within the period of one month from the date of purchase before-mentioned. I further inform you that for about fifteen months following the date of purchase he resided on a selection made by one Fanny Barbour, distant 4 or 5 miles from his own selection; and that after such fifteen months, up to and until the 11th August, 1876, he lived at Curnella, some 50 miles away, only visiting his own land once or twice, and then only for a day or two on each occasion.

Mr. H. Ricketson to The Secretary for Lands.

[Urgent.]

Sir,

Deniliquin, 23 July, 1877.

I have the honor to complain to you against Fanny Barbour, a minor, on account of her non-fulfilment of the residence required by the "Crown Lands Alienation Act of 1861."

The conditional purchase, which was for *170 acres of land in the parish of Banangalite, was taken up by said Fanny Barbour, who is a minor, on the 20th November, 1873, and is numbered 582 in the book of the Land Agent at Deniliquin.

And I have to inform you that the said Fanny Barbour only resided on her said purchased land for about fifteen months after the date of her selection, after which time she went to reside, as I believe, with her father and mother at Curnella, on the river Murray, distant about 50 miles from the locality of her said purchase. Said Fanny Barbour only came to her selection two or three times during the remainder of the three years from her purchase, the last visit being made on the 19th November, 1876.

I have deposited £10, as required by the 25th section of the "Crown Lands Acts Amendment Act of 1875," the receipt whereof by the Land Agent is annexed; and I accompany it with a declaration verifying this my complaint, as required by the said Act.

I have the honor to request your immediate attention hereto, with a view of your forwarding instructions to Mr. Commissioner Rose in time for the investigation thereof by him at his next Court of Inquiry, to be holden in August of the present year.

I, HENRY RICKETSON, of Baratta, in the Colony of New South Wales, do solemnly and sincerely declare—

1. That I am a settler, and the lessee of the Baratta Run, in the Murrumbidgee District of the Colony of New South Wales.

2. That, on the 20th day of November, in the year one thousand eight hundred and seventy-three, one Fanny Barbour, a minor, conditionally purchased *one hundred and seventy acres in the parish of Banangalite, part of the said Baratta Run, under the 13th section of the "Crown Lands Alienation Act of 1861," and numbered in the Land Agent's book at Deniliquin "582."

No. 26.

Mr. Commissioner Rose to The Under Secretary for Lands.

REPORT of an Inquiry held at Deniliquin on the 3rd September, 1877, by A. C. S. Rose, Commissioner for the South-western Division, respecting the Conditional Purchase of Fanny Barbour, made at Deniliquin, on the 20th November, 1873.

Sir,

I have the honor to transmit herewith for the consideration of the Honorable the Minister for Lands, minutes of evidence taken at any inquiry under the "Lands Acts Amendment Act of 1875," held by me in pursuance of the reference notified in the Gazette of the 10th July, 1877, in the matter of the above-described conditional purchase.

The

See No. 19.

*Qr. 108.

*Qr. 168.

The claimant, a child, having been duly served with notice of the time and place of holding the inquiry, was not present thereat, but was represented by her father.

The following facts bearing upon the fulfilment by the selector of the conditions of purchase were elicited in evidence, viz. :—

The conditional purchaser appears to have resided habitually upon this land from the date of purchase, or within one month thereafter, until the middle of June, 1875, a period of about nineteen months. Her father then took her away, and she did not again reside upon her selection. The reason alleged by her father for moving the child from the selection is—that her mother's health suffered so much from Mr. H. Ricketson's acts of violence that it was necessary to take her from his neighbourhood; and as the child Fanny was very young, it was out of the question to separate her from her mother.

I have therefore to report that I find such conditions not to have been fulfilled, and to recommend that this conditional purchase be forfeited.

It will of course rest with the Honorable the Minister for Lands to determine whether, under the circumstances detailed in Mr. Barbour's evidence, the non-observance of the conditions of residence from June, 1875, to November, 1876, is justifiable.

I have, &c.,

A. C. S. ROSE,
Commissioner.

Minutes on No. 26.

The forfeiture has been incurred under the law by the non-observance of the condition of residence during at least one-half the time required by the terms of purchase. As in other cases, it appears to me that it must take effect, notwithstanding the circumstances adverted to.—A.O.M., 11/12/77. Approved.—J.S.F., 21/1/78.

[Enclosure to No. 26.]

Evidence referred to.

Peter Nestrom, being duly sworn, saith : I am a conditional purchaser at Birganbiral, 9 miles from Deniliquin; in June, 1875, I was at Baratta; I was there on the 10th and 11th of that month; whilst I was there I slept in the house on Fanny Barbour's selection; I then went to Curnella; I staid there a week, and then returned to Baratta; I staid there for about fourteen or fifteen months, on Fanny Barbour's selection; most of the nights during that time I slept on Fanny Barbour's selection; my wife and family, two other parties, and sometimes some of Mr. Barbour's family slept there; from June, 1875, to October, 1876, Fanny Barbour lived there part of the time; she was not there on the 19th of June, 1875; she came there in October, 1875, with her sister Margaret—a girl about fourteen years old; Fanny was between two and three years old; Fanny lived in a house on her own selection for the time she was there; she stayed until towards the end of November, 1875; I drove her from Deniliquin; I cannot fix the date I got her at "Atkinson's Hotel"; I took her and her sister to Curnella, which is about 60 miles from her selection; after November, 1875, she did not come on to her selection again, to my knowledge; I was there till last September—September, 1876—either there or in the neighbourhood; from November, 1875, to October, 1876, I never saw Fanny Barbour on her selection; she could not very well have been there without my knowledge; I was in her hut nearly every night during the period I have mentioned; to the best of my belief the girl Fanny Barbour was not there during that period.

By Mr. R. Barbour, father of conditional purchaser: From the time I went to your daughter Fanny's selection in June, 1875, there was a six-roomed house on the selection; my wife was in charge of that house for Fanny Barbour; her selection contains about 170 acres; I saw your daughter on her selection in May and in June, 1875; for two days and nights she was there, in May; I stayed there, so I know.

By Mr. Gillott, for Mr. Ricketson: From June, 1875, to September, 1876, I was in charge of all Mr. Barbour's selections at Baratta.

PETER NESTROM.

Andrew Barnes, being duly sworn, saith : I know Fanny Barbour's selection on Baratta Run; on the 7th of December, 1873, I went to that selection in the company of John Green and Thomas Kerr; my wife and I were under an engagement to live on Fanny Barbour's selection; we lived at Five-mile Creek, in a house on Fanny Barbour's selection; on the 19th of December, 1873, Mr. Barbour brought Fanny Barbour—then a baby three or four months old, as far as I can recollect—to the selection; I lived there until May, 1875; I left Mr. Barbour's employment on the 24th of May, 1875; I stayed at Fanny Barbour's selection for a fortnight after this; in June or July, 1875, Mr. Barbour's family left the selection; about that time I went to the house on Fanny Barbour's selection; it was uninhabited; a man named Nestrom came there to live shortly after this.

By Mr. Barbour: From 19th December, 1873, to June or July, 1875, Fanny Barbour lived on her selection; she used to sleep regularly on her selection during that time; I am now in Mr. Ricketson's employment as a kangaroo hunter.

A. C. S. ROSE, Commissioner.

A. BARNES.

Thomas Kerr, being duly sworn, saith : I am a contractor for sinking tanks; in November, 1873, I was in Mr. Robert Barbour's employment as manager of horses; on the 7th of December, 1873, I camped on Fanny Barbour's selection at Baratta; I stayed there a week, and then went to Echuca, to fetch up Mr. Barbour's family; I did not return to Baratta until February, 1874; I staid there till June, 1875; in that month I saw Mr. Barbour and all his family, including Fanny Barbour, leave Baratta; I stayed there till October; from June, 1875, to October, 1875, I saw nothing of Fanny Barbour on her selection.

By Mr. Barbour: I was living on my own selection, a mile and a half from your daughter Fanny's selection, at the time I refer to, that is from June, 1875, to October, 1875; from February, 1874, to June, 1875, she was on her selection day and night.

A. C. S. ROSE, Commissioner.

THOMAS KERR.

Isaac Everitt, being duly sworn, saith : I am a publican; in March, 1874, I was employed by Mr. Robert Barbour, and lived on the selection of his daughter Fanny, in March, 1874; I lived about 20 chains from her house; I lived there till June, 1875; Mr. Barbour and all his family left the selection at that time; I staid there for several weeks afterwards; I never saw Fanny Barbour on her selection after she left; I have been there fifty times since up to November, 1876, and I never saw Fanny Barbour on her selection during that time.

By Mr. Barbour: I have been in the house on your daughter Fanny's selection twenty or fifty times during the last twelve months; I have been in her house so many times, and have never seen her there; you, and I had some little disagreement when I left your employment.

William Dodemaide, being duly sworn, saith: I am a labourer; in April, 1876, I was working for Mr. Barbour at Curnella; I left in September, 1876; I then went to Baratta; on the 23rd September, 1876, I arrived at Baratta with my wife and family (about four months); from that time till February, 1877, I lived in a house on Fanny Barbour's selection; George Barbour and Robert Barbour lived there, but Fanny Barbour never lived there during that time; she came on a visit for a few days; she came on the 17th or 18th of November, 1876, a Saturday, with her father, in a buggy; they staid until the following Tuesday, and then left; that was the only time I saw Fanny Barbour on her selection.

By Mr. Barbour: I was never inside your house at Curnella; when I saw Fanny Barbour she was a child, three, four, or five years old; her sisters called her Fanny.

WILLIAM DODEMAIDE.

Henry Ricketson, being duly sworn, saith: I am the lessee of the Baratta Run, on which, on the 20th of November, 1873, Fanny Barbour took up a selection of about 167 or 180 acres—I forget which; a house was built there, and Mr. Barbour and his family lived there till June, 1875; after that time, till November, 1876, I passed this house very often, and I never saw any of the Barbour family there; I never saw Fanny Barbour there during that time; I inquired two or three times of Mr. Nestrom, the manager, and he told me that the family was not there.

By Mr. Barbour: I do not know how many rooms there are in Fanny Barbour's house; I do not think that I was ever inside the house; I did not see what was going on inside the house; I remember moving about 10 feet of this house which stood on my land; all I took off was on my ground; you put one room on my land; I forbade you to build the house, and I remonstrated with you several times whilst the house was going on; I then gave you notice in writing to remove so much of the house as was on my land, or I should move it and take proceedings against you for trespass; you told me that you would move it; you said that you wanted to get your money back from the Government first; I saw your wife at your child's selection; I told her that I was going to move the obstruction; she said that she was aware that I was going to move the obstruction.

By the Commissioner: It was a couple of months or so—it might have been two months or three months—after the selection was taken up that I spoke to Mrs. Barbour; I then set my men to work to cut down the portion of the house on my land; they cut it down; the end of the house was left to fill up the open end of the building when cut; their men put up the end of the house to the end thus left open.

By Mr. Barbour: You had four or five men there; I had four or five men at work cutting the house away; Mrs. Barbour never said that there were none of her men about; she did not cry; there was no child sleeping in the room that was cut away; I told your wife to take the things away; there were some things in the room; the men put up the end just as I told them to do it; the land on which the room stood was the selection of one of my children, since declared forfeited.

Taken and sworn before me, at Deniliquin, this }

3rd day of September, 1877.—

A. C. S. ROSE, Commissioner.

HENRY RICKETSON.

Arthur William Robertson, being duly sworn, saith: I am book-keeper for Mr. Ricketson, at Baratta, and have been since April, 1873; I know an area on the Baratta Run, at Five-mile Point, selected by Fanny Barbour, about 5 miles from the head station at Baratta; in December, 1873, Mr. Barbour and his family came to that selection; they left again in June or July, 1875; from that time to November, 1876, the place was occupied by a man named Nestrom, and after he left by a man named Burrows; whilst Nestrom lived there I was on the adjoining selection once a month or once in a couple of months; I saw none of Barbour's family there at that time or when Burrows was there; these men said that the Barbour family were down at Curnella.

Taken and sworn before me, at Deniliquin, this }

3rd day of September, 1877.—

A. C. S. ROSE, Commissioner.

ARTHUR W. ROBERTSON.

Henry Hillman, being duly sworn, saith: I am a tank-sinker, and in the year 1875, on the 29th January, I was working as a tank-sinker on Baratta for Mr. Barbour; I know an area at Five-mile Point known as Fanny Barbour's selection; I left in June or July, 1875, and from the time I came to the time I left the Barbour family lived on that selection; they left a few days before I left; I believe they went to the Murray; they did not take away any furniture; Mr. Barbour wanted me to take away the furniture, but we could not agree about the price; after I left I very often went to Fanny Barbour's selection for butter; Peter Nestrom lived there over twelve months after Mr. Barbour's family left; during his residence there I was at Fanny Barbour's selection very often, sometimes once a week, sometimes once a month; I used always to go inside the house; none of Mr. Barbour's family was there.

3rd day of September, 1877.—

A. C. S. ROSE, Commissioner.

HENRY HILLMAN.

In reply.

Robert Barbour, senior, being duly sworn, saith: I am the father of Fanny Barbour, for whom, on the 20th November, 1873, I conditionally purchased 166 acres, situated in the parish of Banangulite, about 25 miles westerly from Deniliquin; the selection was taken up under the 13th section of the "Crown Lands Alienation Act of 1861"; I took the child, then about three or four months old, to the selection on the 19th of December, 1873; she never left the selection until June or July, 1875; she then left with her mother; some few months after the selection was occupied, Mr. Ricketson disputed the adjoining selection, which I had taken up for a son of mine at the time I took up the one for my child Fanny; I had built a house partly on his selection, partly on Fanny's; sometime after we had taken possession, Mr. Ricketson claimed my son's selection, as having been previously selected for one of his own children; I would not give up possession until the Lands Department decided whether Mr. Ricketson's son or my son was the legal holder; Mr. Ricketson agreed to let the matter stand until a decision from the Lands Office was arrived at; I was absent from home four or five months after the 20th November, 1873, and when I returned I found that the house I have described had been, as far as the westerly part was concerned, cut right away, and the westerly end was left incompletely closed; Mrs. Barbour was in a state of great excitement, and insisted upon my removing her at once, as she dreaded Mr. Ricketson; I prevailed upon her to remain, and got her to remain until June or July, 1875; in the meantime Mr. Ricketson was continually annoying us by impounding our stock and by a series of Supreme Court actions, which cost me about £3,000; this made such an impression upon my wife that I was obliged to take her away, and the child Fanny, being then only a baby, was obliged to be taken away too; the child on several occasions was taken to the selection, but had shortly afterwards to be brought away, and again put with her mother, for whom the child was constantly craving; in November, 1876, she was there on the selection again.

By Mr. Gillott: I cannot say whether it was or was not the 17th June, 1875, when I took away my family from Fanny Barbour's selection; Fanny staid a few weeks in October and November, 1875; in November, 1876, she staid on her selection a few days—about four days; I took her there with the intention of staying only a few days; during the seventeen months the child was away from her selection she was mostly with her mother, at Curnella, which is about 50 miles from the selection; Mr. Ricketson never impounded sheep from Fanny Barbour's selection; Mr. Ricketson's sheep came on to her selection and took away the sheep on it.

Report of Commissioner for South-Western Division.

REPORT of an inquiry held at Deniliquin on the 4th September, and 1st November, /77, by A. C. S. ROSE, Commissioner for the South-western Division, respecting the conditional purchase of Leighton Barbour, made at Deniliquin on the 20th November, 1873.

Sir,

I have the honor to transmit herewith, for the consideration of the Honorable the Minister for Lands, *minutes of evidence taken at an inquiry under the "Lands Acts Amendment Act of 1875," held by me in pursuance of the reference notified in the †Gazette of the 10th July, 1877, in the matter of the above-described conditional purchase. * Enclosed.
† See No. 19.

The claimant—a child—having been duly served with notice of the time and place of holding the inquiry, was present thereat, but was represented by his father.

The following facts bearing upon the fulfilment by the selector of the conditions of purchase were elicited in evidence, viz:—

The father of the conditional purchaser, Mr. Robert Barbour, deposes that his son was often taken to the area selected for him, and slept and took his meals there at such times, but that in June, 1875, the boy was taken away with his family and remained absent for many months, owing to a fear of violence from Mr. Henry Ricketson. In August, 1876, he returned, and lived with a tutor on his selection.

The evidence of the following witnesses—Andrew Barnes, Henry Hillman, Thomas Kerr, Isaac Everitt, Arthur Wm. Robertson, Peter Nestrom, George Boyd, F. W. Ricketson, H. Ricketson, and Sarah Barnes—shows:—

1. That the land conditionally purchased was not occupied within the time required by the law.
2. That the boy, Leighton Barbour, never used and occupied this land as his residence until August, 1876.

I have therefore to report that I find such conditions not to have been fulfilled, and to recommend that this conditional purchase be forfeited.

I have, &c.,

Commissioner.

[Enclosure to No. 27.]

Evidence alluded to.

Andrew Barnes, being duly sworn, saith: I am a kangaroo hunter; in December, 1873, I was in the employment of Mr. Barbour at Baratta; I lived on a selection known as Fanny Barbour's, at Five-mile Point; my wife and I lived in a tent there; Joseph Petty was in charge; Mr. Barbour came on the 10th December, 1873, accompanied by his wife and family; they came in the evening, just a little before dark, in a waggonette; I turned the horses out over the Baratta Creek; Mr. Barbour and his family, including Leighton Barbour, staid that night at Fanny Barbour's selection; next day Joseph Petty and I got up the horses and brought them to Fanny Barbour's selection; Mr. Barbour and some of his children, including Leighton Barbour, went to look at some of the other selections taken up for his children; he, and the children who went with him, came back about 9 o'clock at night; that night he and the children, including Leighton Barbour, staid at Fanny Barbour's selection; Mrs. Barbour said that Mr. Barbour would not be long away when he went out with the children; they did not take any bedding with them; I lived in a tent until the 25th December, 1873, and then I removed into a room in Fanny Barbour's house; I slept there continuously of a night; my wife and I were engaged at this time as servants to Mr. Barbour; almost every day during this time Leighton Barbour, who was then about 7 years old, slept and took his meals at Fanny Barbour's place; I know Leighton Barbour's selection; it is 5 or 6 miles from Fanny's; there is a building on his selection where Mr. Barbour sheared his sheep; it is on the boundary-line between Leighton Barbour's and Robert Barbour's (junior), selection; I drew the stuff for this place; the timber for this place was brought in five or six months after I went there; before this place was erected a calico tent stood on the boundary-line; I never knew Leighton Barbour to reside or sleep in the tent or in the building I have mentioned; he lived and slept at Fanny Barbour's place; I left Mr. Barbour's service on the 24th of May, 1875; Leighton Barbour was there when I left; in June or July following Leighton and Fanny went away from their selections; I never saw them there again, although I passed their places several times.

By Mr. Barbour: At the end of December I saw a tent on Leighton Barbour's and Robert Barbour's selections; I saw Leighton the next morning after you came back, and I saw him the night you came back; I am in Mr. Ricketson's employment; I was on one occasion at Curnella, and I was at Deniliquin sometimes whilst in your service; I never was away for more than three or four days; you did not want me to leave.

By Mr. Gillott: There was no disagreement; Leighton Barbour never lived on his selection whilst I was in his father's service.

By Mr. Barbour: Leighton and Robert Barbour were absent from Fanny's place two or three days once.

Henry Hillman, being duly sworn, saith: I am a contractor for sinking dams; on the 29th January, 1875, I entered six months the employment of Mr. Robert Barbour, and remained in it till 28th of July, 1875; I was employed in sinking tanks for him; during the time I was there I lived in a hut built on the boundary-line of portions 12 and 13, about 5 miles about north-east from Five-mile Point; the place had been used as a woolshed previous to my going to stay there; three weeks after I began to work on this selection; I lived in this woolshed; it was full of sheep dung, and it was not fit to live in; I and my men lived in this place for five months; after I had lived there for some months a man named Kerr came there with three of Mr. Barbour's sons; they staid three days, and then Mr. Kerr took them away; they brought some bedding with them; Kerr requested me to look after them, and said that Miss Barbour would pay me; all the provisions I saw with them was a bottle of jam; I made their bed in one of the rooms; they all slept together; they were there three or four nights; then they left, and Kerr took away their bedding too; they lived on my provisions; that was the only time strangers came and slept there; these children lived at Fanny Barbour's selection; Mr. Barbour and they left Fanny's place about the time I left his employment; he asked me what I would charge for taking his furniture to Deniliquin, but we could not come to terms; in March, 1876, I saw two of Mr. Barbour's sons on the portions 12 and 13; they were there only for a few days; I have never seen them there since; I have been several times there.

By Mr. Barbour: For two months I was working within three-quarters of a mile of the house, on portions 12 and 13; I was away in Victoria once.

By

By Commissioner: Sometimes there was a married couple and sometimes a single man at the hut I have just spoken of; in September of last year a schoolmaster, who was teaching Mr. Barbour's children, lived there; I was living about a mile and a half off there; I was at the hut sometimes twice a week, sometimes once a month; I used to stay talking with the schoolmaster for a couple of hours at a time; this went on for five or six weeks; he used to teach the children in the day time; the children used to sleep in the hut; there were two of Mr. Barbour's boys taught there; one was ten or eleven, the other eight or nine years old; one of them was Leighton Barbour—one was Robert; the schoolmaster may have been there for three months; I know that for about six weeks the boys were there; this was in September, 1876; I could not have seen the boys in March last at their hut.

HENRY HILLMAN.

Thomas Kerr, being duly sworn, saith: I am a contractor for sinking tanks; on the 24th November, 1873, I entered the employment of Mr. Robert Barbour as manager of his horses; on the 7th of December I went to Baratta and camped on Fanny Barbour's selection; I stayed there five or six days driving the trap about Mr. Barbour's selections; in the middle of the month of December I took the trap to Echuca to bring up Mr. Barbour's family; I went to Curnella and stayed there some time; I returned to Baratta on the 22nd February, 1874, on a Sunday; my family accompanied me; I was in Mr. Barbour's employment till June, 1875, but after leaving his employment I staid at Baratta till October, 1875; I know Leighton Barbour's selection on Baratta; whilst I was at Baratta this boy, then about eight or nine years old, did not reside upon his selection; he lived with the rest of the family at Fanny Barbour's; he lived, took his meals, and slept there; I speak from certain knowledge from my own observation; sometimes he went to his selection; Mr. Barbour left Baratta in June or July, 1875; shortly before this I took the boy Leighton Barbour to his selection; there was a building on this place known to me as the woolshed; a man named Hillman was then living there; I took Leighton and Robert Barbour in a waggonette from Fanny Barbour's selection to their selections; we took some provisions, but no bedding of any description; I left these boys there; Mrs. Barbour told me to take them; she said that she would send out some things to them; after they had staid there three days I fetched them home; I took them to Fanny Barbour's selection; I never knew them to sleep on their selections but on this occasion; when Mr. Barbour left Baratta in June or July, 1875, he took all the family, including Leighton Barbour, with him; I am perfectly sure that from this time to October of the same year none of the Barbour family were at Baratta.

Altogether eight months.

Compare Hillman's evidence.

By Mr. Barbour: The place where I resided at Baratta was a mile and a half from Fanny Barbour's place; I was at Fanny's place sometimes oftener than once a week—sometimes once a fortnight; I knew if anybody went away from that place; I used to inquire after everything of the sort; there was never a day that somebody did not come from your place, and I inquired how things were going on; after Petty left you gave me full charge of the whole place; you were not at home when I took the children out to their selections; I am quite sure that we took no bedding with us that time.

Examined by Mr. Gillott: The children had no beds and no bedding; they slept on chaff bags at Hillman's; the children were supposed to stop there only one day; Mrs. Barbour said they were to stay only one day and night.

By Commissioner: Leighton Barbour may have been a fortnight at his place at a time without me knowing it from my own observation, but I must have heard of it from the people from Mr. Barbour's place if he ever was; I never heard that he was; my knowledge on this point is derived from what people told me.

THOMAS KERR.

Isaac Everitt, being duly sworn, saith: In March, 1874, I went to Baratta to split and fence for Mr. Barbour; for the first fortnight I lived on Fanny Barbour's selection, and then I went about a mile away on the same creek; at the expiration of six, or seven, or eight, or nine weeks I returned and lived with my wife and family on Fanny Barbour's selection; I remained six or seven months there in Mr. Barbour's employment, and for about five months after I left his employment I resided about 20 chains from Fanny Barbour's house; I used to be at Fanny Barbour's house mostly every day; Leighton Barbour lived there and slept there; I have regularly seen him there late at night and early in the morning; he could not very well have been at his own selection during that time without my knowledge; in November, 1874, I sheared some sheep at the hut on Leighton Barbour's selection; I was there a week; I never saw Leighton Barbour at that time; I was also at his selection four or five weeks fencing, and I never saw him there; this was in June or July, 1874.

In all about eleven months.

By Mr. Barbour: I used to split timber for you about a mile and a half from the selection of Fanny Barbour; perhaps in the morning I would go up to your place, perhaps not; I was at this work for six weeks or so; during a good portion of the time I was fencing at Kerr's selection; I went home every night before dark; I did not leave home till after breakfast; I may have gone into Fanny Barbour's house once a month; an odd time or two Leighton Barbour went out to his selection; he lived habitually at your place; every day your children used to play with mine; I have seen them playing every day when I was at home; after I left you I went to work for Mr. Ricketson; the distance from Fanny Barbour's place to Leighton Barbour's is about 4 miles.

I. EVERITT.

Arthur William Robertson, being duly sworn, saith: I am book-keeper to Mr. Ricketson; I have been in this situation since April, 1873; I know Leighton Barbour's selection; it is portion 13, parish of Ricketson; there is a building on it of wood, with an iron roof; I have very frequently been on this selection in accordance with directions from Mr. Ricketson; on the 20th December, 1873, I went there with Mr. Ricketson, and at the southern end of the selection we found a tent, but we saw nobody there; we staid about five minutes; about break of day Mr. Ricketson and I went to this selection again; there was no sign of anybody having been there during the night; we did not stay long; about six weeks or two months after selection the wooden building was erected; I know Leighton Barbour by sight; Hillman, a tank-sinker, used to live in that wooden building; I never saw Leighton Barbour on the selection until August, 1876, when this lad resided there with a schoolmaster.

By Mr. Barbour: I lived at Baratta Station, 8 miles from Leighton Barbour's selection; I was at his selection nearly every other day; I used to hang my horse by his bridle to the fence and go over and look in at the windows; it was not possible for anybody to be in that house at the time of my visits without me seeing them; I am speaking of a time anterior to August 1876; I never saw Leighton Barbour on his selection until then; I remember having given evidence at a Land Court of Inquiry at Deniliquin on the 4th May, 1876; at the time of the holding of this Court I feel sure that the old schoolmaster was not living with your boys, Leighton and Robert, at their selection; I was out there a short time before and did not see them or any of them; from August to the 20th November, 1876, the boy Leighton resided on his selection.

Examined by Mr. Gillott: Leighton and Robert Barbour regularly lived at Fanny Barbour's selection; Fanny Barbour's house is close to the selection of one of Mr. Ricketson's children, and from it I could see what went on at her selection; I have very often seen Leighton Barbour playing about there; I always saw him outside the house when I was there; I went two or three times a week as a rule.

ARTHUR W. ROBERTSON.

Peter Nestrom being duly sworn, saith: I am a conditional purchaser of land; in June, 1875, I was in the employment of Mr. Barbour, at Baratta; I had charge of the various selections held by his family; I stayed on Fanny Barbour's selection; there was a six-roomed house there; when I went first none of Mr. Barbour's family was there; I lived in that house till September, 1876; I know Leighton Barbour; I first saw him at Baratta in May, 1875; he left with the family in June, 1875; my wife and family were at Baratta; in April, 1876, the Barbour family, including Leighton Barbour, returned to Baratta; I know Leighton Barbour's selection; I swear that Leighton Barbour did not live upon his selection from June, 1875, to April, 1876; Mr. Smith, an Inspector of Conditional Purchases, was at Mary Barbour's, and some other selections, in April,

April, 1876; the family was there then; Leighton Barbour staid from April till the 8th or 9th of May, as far as I can recollect; I took the children to their selections; I took Leighton Barbour to his selection the day after he came up; I took him and Robert Barbour to a house built on the dividing-line between their selections; the next day I saw them again; they slept there that night; a tutor staid with them—his name was Beddy; Leighton Barbour left on the 8th or 9th May; the tutor and Robert remained; Leighton lived on his selection at that time, more like a month than a week; during that time he may have slept one or two nights at Fanny Barbour's place; I did not see him again till August, 1876.

George Boyd, being duly sworn, saith: I am a stock-keeper for Mr. Ricketson, at Baratta; I have been there since the beginning of 1873; I was there in December, 1873; Mr. Barbour and his family were there in December, 1873; I know portions 12 and 13, in the parish of Ricketson; I know a red-gum building on portion 12, which was used as a woolshed by Mr. Barbour; the house I speak of was occupied by a man named Hillman, a tank-sinker; between August and September, 1876, I saw on portion 12 a boy of Mr. Barbour's, and some young ladies; the place was unoccupied for a long time before this; Mr. Barbour's family was at Baratta for about a twelve-month, from December, 1873, till early in 1875.

Frederick William Ricketson, being duly sworn, saith: In 1873 I was manager at Baratta Station for my brother, Mr. Henry Ricketson; in November, 1873, Leighton Barbour took up a selection at Baratta; from the 20th of that November to the 20th of December inclusive I kept my eye on that selection; I was there every day during that period; nobody came there; on the evening of the 20th December I inspected that selection, and I again inspected it at 12 o'clock that night; there was a calico tent raised partly on this selection and partly on the adjoining one; no one slept in that tent on the night of the 20th December, 1873; inside the tent, during the month from date of purchase, there was no sign of any one having lived there; it would have been an impossibility for any one to have lived there without my knowledge of it; I was at Baratta for about thirteen months after this time; the calico tent was moved, and a wooden building erected in its place; one day I saw some children at this place, but only once; I never saw them again; the family of Mr. Barbour lived on Fanny Barbour's selection, 4 or 5 miles from the place where the woolshed was.

By Mr. Barbour: The tent was, I believe, a framed structure, covered with calico; ten or twelve days after the 20th of November, 1873, I saw two men on portions 12 and 13, erecting the tent I have mentioned; I cannot say who these men were; I resided at Baratta Station, about 6 miles from these selections; it was about 7 o'clock in the evening of the 20th of December when I visited those selections; I staid in and about the tent till past 12 o'clock that night; I was acting under instructions; perhaps it was half-past 7 o'clock at night when I got to the tent on portions 12 and 13; it was between daylight and dark.

Henry Ricketson, being duly sworn, saith: I am the proprietor of the Baratta Run; I know portions 12 and 13, parish of Ricketson; from the 20th of November to the 20th of December, 1873, I visited those portions several times; I saw that a tent had been raised across the dividing-line between those portions; I saw nobody there during my visits; on the 20th of December I visited this place before sundown, and no one was there; next morning, very early, just a few minutes after sunrise, I again visited this place, and there was no one there; a building of timber was subsequently erected across the dividing-line of portions 12 and 13; none of Mr. Barbour's children lived there; when Mr. Smith, an Inspector of Conditional Purchases, was in the locality, Mr. Barbour's children were sent to their selections; the Barbour family lived together at Fanny Barbour's selection from the time they first came to Baratta to the time they went away in 1875.

By Mr. Barbour: I visited the tent before and after sundown; I did not see my brother there; I saw your children on portions 12 and 13, on 11th August, 1876; a tutor was with them; I saw them when they arrived at these areas.

Dudley Keels, being duly sworn, saith: I know Leighton Barbour's selection on Baratta; I made an official visit of inspection to it in June, 1876; I found thereon a weatherboard cottage, containing four rooms; it was built partly on portion 12, partly on portion 13: it was floored, and there were partitions; the place looked as though it had been occupied; I did not go into the place; the door was closed; on the 2nd of July, 1876, I again visited this place, and saw some man there, no boy; he said that no person but himself was there; I was there a third time, and I saw no one; my report as to non-residence was based on what I heard from various sources; Mr. Barbour told me before my report was dispatched, and after my visits, that his children were away in Melbourne, at school; half of the four-roomed house was on portion 13; I value the whole house at £80; there were about 40 chains of wire-fencing, worth £30; my report speaks of a tank, but this is an error, the tank is on an adjoining selection.

By Mr. Barbour: Mr. Ricketson accompanied me on my second visit; I arrived at Baratta Station the evening before.

For Defence.

Robert Barbour, senior, being duly sworn, saith: I am the father of Leighton Barbour, for whom, on the 20th November, 1873, I took up at the Land Office at Deniliquin an area of 320 acres, situated in the county of Townsend, parish of Ricketson, as a conditional purchase, under the 13th section of the "Crown Lands Alienation Act of 1861"; within three weeks of date of purchase I caused to be erected a canvas tent across the dividing-line between Leighton Barbour's and Robert Barbour's (junior) selections; on the 20th December, 1873, I was on these selections, and took my son Leighton Barbour with me; this was early in the afternoon; I left him there for several hours, until after sunset; his brother Robert and he stopped there together—Robert upon his own selection, Leighton upon his; I took both the lads back that evening to where their mother was—at Fanny Barbour's selection; the boy was at that time about four years of age; I accompanied him on several occasions afterwards, and slept with him in the tent already mentioned; I also took meals with him there; about two months after the 20th of December I caused to be erected there a four-roomed house of wood, across the dividing-line, so as to have two rooms on Robert's and two on Leighton's selection; it was roofed with corrugated iron, and had a verandah and two fire-places and two chimneys; I accompanied Leighton on several occasions to this house, and took meals with him there; during the time that a dam-sinker named Hillman was working for me I know that Leighton Barbour lived at his selection with this man for several days; I saw him there shortly after this—that is, shortly after June, 1875; owing to annoyances caused by Mr. Henry Ricketson, the first of which was the destruction of a closet close to the dividing-line between a selection of Fanny Barbour's and one of William Barbour's, my wife was obliged to leave the selection; Mr. Henry Ricketson, accompanied by his brother Fred, chopped down this erection with an axe, and after they had levelled it with the ground they got into a buggy and drove towards me; I was standing outside Fanny Barbour's house, within 10 chains of the closet that they chopped down; it was early in the morning, and hearing a crashing of timber, I went out and saw them destroying this building; I remonstrated with Mr. Henry Ricketson against him taking the law into his own hands; he said that he had purchased the land on which the closet stood, for his son; I objected that his son was not in occupation of this land, and urged that no steps ought to be taken by either of us by way of asserting a right to the land until the dispute was settled by the Government; this lawless interference with my property disturbed my wife that she was afraid to remain at the selections during my frequent absence from home; I was obliged to be absent about five days in every week on business; the next interference by

Mr.

Nineteen months after L. Barbour's C.P. was made

Mr. Henry Ricketson was the cutting down and destroying one half of the dwelling-house of my daughter Fanny Barbour whilst occupied by my wife and family; a series of annoyances on the part of Mr. Henry Ricketson, followed by which my wife's health was seriously affected; she used often to start in the night in her sleep in great fear; at this time she was enceinte, and in a critical condition; at length I was obliged to remove her from the neighbourhood of Mr. Ricketson's influence; about June, 1875, owing to Mrs. Barbour's earnest entreaties, I removed her to Curnella, on the Murray, and took Leighton and my other children with her; shortly after that she had a miscarriage; previous to this confinement Mrs. Barbour was a strong woman, and had no difficulty in parturition; about the same time Leighton Barbour was attacked by scarlatina, and was unable to move about or to be removed to his selection for a long time; in the beginning of the year 1876—in March or April, Leighton went to his selection accompanied by a tutor, and remained there for some time; I saw him there several times during this visit; he remained there about two months; he said that he began to weary for his mother, and persuaded me to take him to her; Mrs. Barbour was at Curnella at this time; as soon as his home-sickness was over I sent him back to his selection, and he remained there until after 20th of November, 1876; he returned to his selection about the middle of August, 1876.

By Mr. Giltott: On the 20th of December, 1873, I took out to their selections Maggie, Mary, Katie, Robert, George, and Leighton; their selections were all taken up the same day; I had about 7 miles to drive in putting these children upon their selections; afterwards, the same evening, I picked up these children again, and took them away; it was 9 or 10 o'clock that I took Leighton away on the 20th of December, 1873; Robert and Leighton had some rugs with them; they slept that night at Fanny Barbour's; I staid at Baratta two or three days after this; on one of the three nights I accompanied Leighton to his selection, and slept with him there; the other two nights he slept at Fanny Barbour's place; I then went away, and staid away two or three weeks; Fanny Barbour's place was the rendezvous of all my family—that is, my children and my wife used generally to live and sleep there when they were not on their selections; I was at home about two nights in every week, and on one or both such nights I generally took Leighton to his selection, and he staid there during the day-time as well; we staid there twenty or thirty times in eighteen months, and we had meals there twenty or thirty times during that time; sometimes we had a married couple there; sometimes we cooked the food ourselves; I do not know whether Leighton went to his selection while I was away; no medical man attended Leighton during his illness; the usual declaration as to residence was made by me on behalf of Leighton Barbour at the expiration of three years.

ROBERT BARBOUR.

In reply.

Sarah Barnes, being duly sworn, saith: I am the wife of Andrew Barnes; I know Leighton Barbour, the son of Mr. Robert Barbour; on the 4th of December, 1873, I entered the service of Mr. Robert Barbour, and continued in it nineteen months; during that time I was cook and housekeeper; Leighton Barbour lived at the place I was residing at—that is, at his sister's selection, Fanny Barbour's. Leighton Barbour was there always as a rule, slept there, and had his meals there; he was absent sometimes, but very seldom, for a day at a time—not longer; he was away from Fanny Barbour's only once or twice during nineteen months; on the 19th of December, 1873, Mr. Barbour and his family came to Baratta; the following day, about 4 o'clock in the afternoon, Mr. Barbour took several of his children, including Leighton Barbour, away in a waggonette; they returned about 9 o'clock the same night; they took no bedding with them.

SARAH BARNES.

Further adjourned to 20th November, 1877, at Mr. Barbour's request, for the production of evidence on his son's behalf.—A.C.S.R., 1/11/77. No appearance on behalf of conditional purchaser.—A.C.S.R., 20/11/77.

No. 28.

Mr. Commissioner Rose to The Under Secretary for Lands.

REPORT of an Inquiry held at Deniliquin on the 5th and 6th September, 1877, by A. C. S. Rose, Commissioner for the South-western Division, respecting the conditional purchase of Robert Barbour, jun., made at Deniliquin on the 20th November, 1873.

Sir,

I have the honor to transmit herewith, for the consideration of the Honorable the Minister for Lands, minutes of evidence taken at an inquiry under the "Lands Acts Amendment Act of 1875," held by me in pursuance of the reference notified in the Gazette of the 10th July, 1877, in the matter of the above-described conditional purchase.

The claimant (a child) having been duly served with notice of the time and place of holding the inquiry, was not present thereat, but was represented by his father.

The following facts bearing upon the fulfilment by the selector of the conditions of purchase were elicited in evidence, viz., that the conditional purchaser has never used and occupied this land as his bona fide residence.

I have therefore to report that I find such conditions not to have been fulfilled, and to recommend that this conditional purchase be forfeited.

I have, &c.,

A. C. S. ROSE,
Commissioner.

Minutes on No. 28.

For forfeiture.—A.O.M., 11/12/77. Approved.—J.S.F., 14/1/78.

[Enclosure to No. 28.]

Evidence alluded to.

Andrew Barnes, being duly sworn, saith: I am a kangaroo hunter; I was in the employment of Mr. Robert Barbour, senior, in December, 1873; I went to Baratta on the 7th of that month, and lived there eighteen months at Fanny Barbour's house on her selection, excepting during the first three months, when I lived in a tent; my wife lived with me all the time I was at Baratta; I know the selection of Robert Barbour, junior, who was (in December, 1873) a boy eight or nine years old; his father and mother accompanied him, also his brothers and sisters; they came in a four-wheeled waggon, on the 19th of December, 1873, about dusk; that night they staid on Fanny Barbour's selection; the family, including Robert Barbour, staid there all next day till about 4 o'clock in the afternoon, when they all—Mr. Barbour and his children, including Robert Barbour—went off in the waggon towards their selections; they came back about 9 o'clock the same evening; young Robert Barbour and his brothers and sisters stayed at Fanny Barbour's that night; on the 25th of December, 1873, I left the tent and went to live in Fanny Barbour's house; my wife acted as a domestic servant there; I lived with her; I positively swear that Robert Barbour, junior, lived there habitually till the 24th of May, 1875; he dwelt, ate, and slept there regularly; I left Mr. Barbour's employment on the 24th May, 1875, but staid at Fanny Barbour's selection for about a fortnight, and then I went to Morago, an adjoining station; in July, 1875, I went to Fanny Barbour's, and found none of the family there; Robert Barbour, junior's, selection is 4 or 5 miles from Fanny Barbour's selection; this boy never lived on his selection during the time time I was at Baratta; Mr. Barbour, the father, used to come to Baratta sometimes once a week, at other times once a month, whilst I was there; when he came he lived with the family; Mr. Barbour, during the time I was at Baratta, never took the boy Robert away anywhere; I never knew this boy to sleep away from the house.

By Mr. Barbour: When I was living in the tent, I worked outside and not inside the house; when I lived in the house, I was under the same roof as Robert Barbour; occasionally during this time I went away during the day-time to my work; after six or seven months I went to live in a hut about 50 yards from Fanny Barbour's house; I did not usually get up the horses before breakfast; when I was away Robert Barbour might have been absent without my knowing it; occasionally Robert Barbour was driven away by his father, whither I do not know for certain.

By Commissioner: From the 7th of December, 1873, to the 24th May, 1874, I was absent from Fanny Barbour's selection for one whole week; I came into Deniliquin scarcely once a month, and then I returned the same day, excepting on one occasion when I staid away three days; after breakfast every day I went away to work, and did not return until evening about sunset; Robert Barbour was not absent one day in the week whilst I was at Fanny Barbour's place; I saw Robert Barbour regularly nearly every night that I was at Baratta; I saw him as regularly every morning about breakfast time; occasionally he was away, not very often; I visited his selection twenty or thirty times in eighteen months; I visited it I should say once a week during that time; the shearing was done in a house on that selection; that was the only house then on the selection; I never saw anybody but Hillman, the tank-sinker, living there; there was no furniture, and no cooking utensils, and no bedding; the house was built across the dividing-line between Robert and Leighton Barbour's selection.

By Mr. Barbour: I never saw the boys at the hut on their selections.

A. C. S. ROSE, Commissioner.

Isaac Everitt, being duly sworn, saith: I am a publican at Morago; in March, 1874, I went to Baratta to do some fencing for Mr. Barbour; I camped alongside Fanny Barbour's selection on Baratta Creek; Robert Barbour, jun., lived on this selection; at one time of my stay at Baratta I was absent from this selection about seven weeks; I often used to go there once a week, or sometimes twice a week; on these occasions I always saw Robert Barbour there; I returned after the period mentioned, and I went to work to fence in Fanny Barbour's selection; I camped about 25 chains from her house; I used to see my children and Mr. Barbour's playing together; I saw Robert Barbour regularly playing with the other children; I saw him regularly every night and every morning; I know a house built across the dividing-line between Robert and Leighton Barbour's selections; I was on these selections for several weeks at a time once and at other times; I never knew Robert Barbour, jun., to sleep there, but he may have done so; I am quite sure that he never lived there; he lived habitually at Fanny Barbour's place during the time I was at Baratta.

By Mr. Barbour: I used to go away of a morning about 8 or 9 o'clock, and returned home about sunset generally; when I worked, I supped when I came home and went to bed early; the boy may sometimes have gone to his selection without my knowing it; Kerr's place is about a mile and a half from Fanny Barbour's; my children used to tell me about what went on at Fanny Barbour's; this is how I came to know about Robert Barbour's movements; I do not know in any other way.

By Commissioner: I saw Robert Barbour nearly every day at Fanny Barbour's.

Taken and sworn before me, at Deniliquin, this 5th day of September, 1877,—

I. EVERITT.

A. C. S. ROSE, Commissioner.

Thomas Kerr, being duly sworn, saith: In December, 1873, I was in Mr. Robert Barbour's employment; I camped on Fanny Barbour's selection on Baratta Creek; I staid there some days, and then took a waggon to Echuca for Mr. Barbour's family; on the 22nd February, 1874, I returned to Baratta with my own family; I staid in Mr. Barbour's employment until June, 1875; I staid on my selection, distant from Fanny Barbour's a mile and a half, all that time; I know Robert Barbour the younger; he lived on Fanny Barbour's selection during that time; I had charge of Mr. Barbour's horses; I used to ride about amongst the selections for the purpose of keeping the horses on them; I was very often on Fanny Barbour's, and always saw Robert Barbour, junior, there; I know Robert Barbour's selection; on one occasion I drove him from Fanny's selection to his own selection; at that time Mr. Hillman, a tank-sinker, was staying there; the boy, Robert Barbour, was then about ten years old; I left the boys, Robert and Leighton Barbour, with Hillman, and requested him to look after them for a night; this was a message from Mrs. Barbour; I left the boys there for three days, and then brought them back to Fanny Barbour's; Mrs. Barbour, their mother, was then staying there; I never knew Robert Barbour to sleep in that house on his selection on any other occasion; I have often been on his selection, and I never saw the boy Robert there; he lived regularly on the selection of his sister, Fanny Barbour.

By Mr. Barbour: I took the horses down to Curnella in January, 1875; I was driving an engine at a saw-mill at Baratta five or six weeks or more; this was in March, 1874; I believe I was generally at that time driving this engine; I was at your place once a week or so; I afterwards went to plough at my selection; for some weeks I was digging a waterhole.

By Commissioner: I was driving the engine five or six weeks; I was ploughing eight or ten days; I was, at all events, at Robert Barbour's selection once a week all the time I was in Mr. Barbour's employment; at the time I was driving the engine I went out three or four times; nobody but Hillman lived on Robert Barbour's selection all the time I was at Baratta; sometimes I saw this lad every day, at other times every week; I often visited Fanny Barbour's selection, and I always saw Robert Barbour; I never saw any furniture, or anything to cook with, or bedding in his hut.

5th day of September, 1877,—

THOMAS KERR.

A. C. S. ROSE, Commissioner.

Henry Hillman, being duly sworn, saith: I am a contractor for tank sinking; in January, 1875, I went to Baratta to do some work for Mr. Barbour; I know portions 12 and 13, and a house containing four rooms built across the dividing-line between them; I lived in that house about five months; before I went there the house had evidently been used as a wool-shed; when I went there the place presented the appearance of having been used as a shearing-shed; the shearing had been carried on in one room; the other rooms had in them wool-bales—rotten wool-bales; different kinds of timber were lying about; in one room they had pressed the wool, and this room was too dirty for any one to sleep in; the fourth room had strewn over its floor pieces of timber; the shearing season had, of course, been long over when I went there; it took me a whole day, with my men—six men—to clean the place up; we had to cart water a long distance; the chimneys had to be filled with earth before I could light a fire in them; there was no furniture of any kind when I went to the house; once whilst I was living there Mr. Kerr brought three of Mr. Barbour's children—one was Robert, one was Leighton, the other I don't know the name of—to stay with me; as far as I can recollect, Kerr brought with them some blankets and one pillow; all the provisions they brought was one bottle of jam; they staid three days; this was in June, 1875; I went there in the middle of April; I had been there three or four months when these boys came; this was the first time that Robert and Leighton Barbour came to the place during my stay there; they were taken away by Mr. Kerr; I staid six or seven weeks after they left; the boys never came again; when I left the house on portions 12 and 13 I camped about a mile and a half from it; I staid there seven weeks; every Saturday during those weeks I went to the house on portions 12 and 13; I never saw anybody there; no fire was lighted during that time in the house; it was warm weather; there was no firewood there; in September last year I visited the place again and I saw a schoolmaster there, and the boy Robert Barbour and a brother of his, younger than he; for seven weeks after this I visited the house often, and the boys and the schoolmaster were there; in the living room were two buckets, a frying-pan, and some other cooking utensils; there was a fire in the room, and some firewood outside; I used to see Robert Barbour at the Five-mile Point selection, his sister's, whenever I went there.

By Mr. Barbour: During the time I lived in the house on portions 12 and 13 I was absent at Deniliquin only two days.

Taken and sworn before me, at Deniliquin, this
5th day of September, 1877,—

HENRY HILLMAN.

A. C. S. ROSE, Commissioner.

Dudley Keele, being duly sworn, saith: I am Inspector of Conditional Purchases; on the 2nd of July, 1876, I visited a selection of 320 acres, in the county of Townsend, parish of Ricketson, conditionally purchased by Robert Barbour, junior; I have never seen the selector; there was a house on the boundary-line between portions 12 and 13; I saw some man there; a man about thirty years old; there was nobody else there; I asked after the selector, and the reply was, "That he was away at school in Melbourne"; that was the only house on the selection; the improvements were as enumerated in my report.

DUDLEY KEELE.

Frederick Ricketson, being duly sworn, saith: I know a selection of Robert Barbour's, portion 12, county of Townsend, parish of Ricketson; it was taken up on 20th November, 1873; I had instructions to watch that selection from 20th November to 20th December, 1873; I did watch it; nobody came belonging to Mr. Robert Barbour's family; on the 20th December nobody came during the day; I was inside a calico tent there erected across the boundary between 12 and 13; I was there from sunset till midnight and nobody came; I knew the place for over twelve months after that; at that time I managed Baratta Station; I used to go over those selections very often, at least every week; I know a wooden building on those selections; I saw some men shearing sheep at that house once, and at another time I saw some children there; I do not know whose children they were; I have looked into that house over a dozen times during that twelve months, and I have never seen any signs of the place being inhabited; if any children had occupied that house during the period I have mentioned I must have seen them.

By Mr. Barbour: It was twilight when I went to the tent on the 20th of December, 1873; I saw no mattress in that tent; it could not have been there without me having seen it; ten or twelve days after the selection was taken up I saw some men putting up the tent I have mentioned; I have no doubt that they were your men.

F. W. RICKETSON.

Peter Nestrom, being duly sworn, saith: In June, 1875, I was in Mr. Robert Barbour's employment; I lived in a house on Fanny Barbour's selection until September, 1876; I was there nearly continuously during that period; I generally slept there: when I went there Mr. Barbour and his family had moved to the Murray; I did not see Robert Barbour, junior, about Baratta at that time; the first time I saw this boy at Baratta after I went to live there was in April, 1876; his uncle, George Pitty, drove him up, and four other children of Mr. Robert Barbour's; between June, 1875, and April, 1876, the boy Robert Barbour was not on Baratta, I feel sure; if he had been I must have seen him; my duty was to look after Mr. Barbour's various selections at Baratta; I know a four-roomed house built across the line between Leighton Barbour's and Robert Barbour's (junior) selections; I saw that house nearly every day, and I am sure that Robert Barbour never lived in that house during the period from June, 1875, to April, 1876; Mr. Smith, an Inspector of Conditional Purchases, was in the locality of Baratta in April, 1876; at this time Robert Barbour, junior, was brought to his selection, and after having staid there till the latter end of May he was taken away again; previous to Mr. Smith's visit to Baratta I placed Mr. Barbour's children on their various selections; it was early in April that Robert Barbour was put on his selection, and he left at the latter end of May; I acted upon Mr. Barbour's instructions in taking the children to their selections; Mr. Beddy, a tutor, lived with Robert Barbour at that time—during those few weeks—on his selection; I used to take rations out to his selection at that time, and I always found the boy Robert Barbour there.

By Mr. Barbour: Mr. Beddy came to Baratta in April, 1876; I am quite sure that he came in April; he came back again in the following August, but not as tutor—he came as a visitor, and staid about a fortnight.

PETER NESTROM.

Arthur William Robertson, being duly sworn, saith: I am book-keeper to Mr. Henry Ricketson, at Baratta; I have been in this position since April, 1873. I have been often employed during that time in measuring tanks, inspecting station improvements, and in other ways; during the latter end of December, 1873, on the evening of the 20th of that month about sunset, Mr. Henry Ricketson and I went to inspect portion 12, parish of Ricketson, the selection of Robert Barbour, junior; we found a tent placed on the dividing-line between portions 12 and 13, but nobody was there; at break of day Mr. Ricketson and I again visited this tent, and this time again we found no one there, and no sign of any one having been there; the grass was very high inside the tent, and showed no indication of anyone having been inside the place; some months afterwards a four-roomed wooden building was erected on the line between portions 12 and 13; a man named Hillman lived in this place for four or five months; the first time I ever saw Robert Barbour, junior, on his selection was in August, 1876.

By Mr. Barbour: On the morning of the 21st December, 1873, Mr. Ricketson and I visited the tent; we did not dismount from the vehicle in which we drove up, but we saw into the interior of the tent from our seat.

ARTHUR W. ROBERTSON.

Henry Ricketson, being duly sworn, saith: I know the selection of Robert Barbour, junior; it is portion 12, county of Townsend, parish of Ricketson; portion 13 is Leighton Barbour's selection; in December, 1873, I saw a tent on the line between these portions; I instructed my brother Frederick to watch these selections; Mr. Arthur William Robertson and I passed that tent about half-an-hour before sunset, and again after sunset we passed it; we found no one there; no one had been there; the next morning before sunrise, just at daylight, Mr. Robertson and I went again to the tent; we found no signs of anybody having been inside the tent; the grass was high, and was quite upright; if any one had lain in the tent the grass must have been depressed or crushed down; it was not pressed down; some time after this a building of wood was built on the dividing-line between portions 12 and 13; I was close to this building very often; I am about half my time at Baratta, and when there I have visited this place once or twice a week; in August, 1876, I saw Robert Barbour, junior, on his selection; I will not swear that it was this boy, but I believe so; at the time of Mr. Inspector Smith being there I saw the same boy there; I believe, from my own observation, that the boy, Robert Barbour, was on his selection from August, 1876, to November, 1876.

By Mr. Barbour: It was perhaps an hour after sunset that I was at the tent on the 20th December, 1873; I did not see my brother Frederick there at that time.

HENRY RICKETSON.

Robert Barbour, being duly sworn, saith: I am the father of Robert Barbour, junior; on the 20th November, 1873, I took up for this lad a conditional purchase of 320 acres in the parish of Ricketson, county of Townsend; the boy was then 8 years of age; at the beginning of December I caused to be erected a calico tent on the line between this selection and a selection of Leighton Barbour's; on the 19th December, 1873, I arrived at a selection of my daughter, Fanny Barbour, at Five-mile Point; the following day, early in the afternoon, about 2 o'clock, we started for Robert's selection; it was about 3 o'clock when we got to his selection; I left him there with his brother Leighton, and called for him again a few hours afterwards, about 9 or 10 o'clock that night; when I returned I found both the boys there; they came from the inside of the tent; we took some rugs and some provisions with us; I gave one or two of the rugs and some provisions to the boys; about 10 o'clock that night I took away with me the boys and the rugs; I conveyed them to their mother, at Fanny Barbour's selection, and they remained there for the rest of that night; I was at Baratta for two or three days after that, and on one of the nights I slept with Robert at his selection; I have at different times—in all possibly twenty or thirty times—slept with this boy on his selection, and taken meals with him there; the calico tent was only a temporary arrangement; the only thing I left there early in January, 1874, was a large mattress; the other things we took away, as the property would have been exposed to injury or loss there; in going to and coming from this selection we passed Mr. Licensed-Surveyor Burdett's camp, which was about 2-a-mile from this selection; this was within a few weeks of date of occupation by Robert Barbour; Mr. Burdett was about a month there; there was also a stretcher there; this was in the tent; at this time, that is, in February or May, we were erecting a four-roomed house on the selections of Robert and Leighton; in that house I have slept with Robert Barbour, and taken meals with him; owing to a series of annoyances and interferences by Mr. Henry Ricketson, which commenced about March or April, 1874, and continued to June, 1875, my wife's mind and bodily health were so seriously affected that I was compelled to move her and the family for a time from Mr. Ricketson's influence; about June, 1875, I took my wife and family to the Murray, about 60 miles from Baratta; for the following two or three months we had scarlatina and whooping cough in the family; Robert Barbour had a slight attack of scarlatina; after he recovered I sent him to school at Curnella; in April, 1876, he went back to Baratta, accompanied by a tutor named Beddy, and remained there till the end of May; he then went to visit his mother, and returned to his selection in August, where he continued to reside till the 20th of November following.

on

Examined by Mr. Gillott: Within two or three months of Mrs. Barbour's departure from Baratta in June, 1875, she had a miscarriage; in April, or May, or June, 1876, she had a child, now living; I believe that she left for Melbourne in May or June, 1876; a man named Andrew Barnes lived for some time at Fanny Barbour's place at Five-mile Point; his evidence is not true; as a rule I was at Fanny Barbour's place two days out of every seven; I was absent for a longer time occasionally; perhaps once in six weeks I might be absent for a longer time; Mrs. Barnes was a domestic servant in my employment; I believe that the boy Robert lived between his selection and Fanny Barbour's—that is, he was sometimes at the one place, sometimes at the other; I know Henry Hillman; one of the rooms at the house on Robert's selection was used as a shearing-place for 500 sheep; I heard Hillman's evidence, and it was an exaggeration of facts; Robert was at school away from his selection from June, 1875, to April, 1876, except when he was unwell; Beddy was not in my employment when the children Robert and Leighton went to their selections in August, 1876; I believe that our last child but one is now sixteen months old.

Sarah Barnes, being duly sworn, saith: I am the wife of Andrew Barnes; in December, 1873, I was in the employment of Robert Barbour, senior, at Baratta; my husband lived there too at that time; we began service, as far as I remember, on the 4th of December, 1873; I was housekeeper, and my husband was engaged in general work about the place; on the 9th December, 1873, Mr. Barbour brought his wife and family to Baratta; they came to a house on Fanny Barbour's selection at Baratta Creek; Leighton Barbour, Fanny Barbour, Robert Barbour, junior, and other children of Mr. Barbour's were there; they staid in Fanny Barbour's house the night they arrived; in the afternoon of the next day, about 4 o'clock, they went away in a waggone; Mr. Barbour and six children went away together; among the children who went were Robert and Leighton; they all came back about 9 o'clock or a little after 9 that same night; they took nothing in the way of bedding with them; they all staid that night at Fanny Barbour's place; at that time I was living in a hut close by; on the 25th December, 1873, we went to live in Fanny Barbour's house with Mr. Barbour's family, and we continued to live there eight or nine months afterwards; I was housekeeper and cook; I laid the table for all the meals; Robert Barbour, junior, always lived, that is, slept and had his meals at Fanny Barbour's; at the expiration of eight or nine months we, that is, my husband and I, went to live in a one-roomed house, about 50 yards distant from Fanny Barbour's house; I continued to do the same work as before until I left Mr. Barbour's service in June, 1875; Robert Barbour, junior, continued to live at Fanny Barbour's place during that time; he was absent for a day or so once or twice, but never for any longer time.

R. Barbour, Esq., M.P., to The Secretary for Lands.

Dear Sir,

Parliament House, Sydney, 2 February, 1878.

I have the honor to request that you will delay further departmental action with regard to a report from Mr. Commissioner Rose, Deniliquin, on the conditional purchases named in the margin, until you shall have had an opportunity of going through the cases; and if you think it necessary, I shall lay before you additional evidence in further elucidation of the facts.

The inquiry was an ex parte one, as owing to the elections occurring at the time of the adjourned inquiry I could not be present, and I have since been attending to my Parliamentary duties.

The conditional purchasers are my children, all minors. I made the selections for them. I built the family house on the youngest child's selection—the rendezvous, as we called it, while we endeavoured to fulfil the conditions of residence on each of the other selections consistently, and, as I believed, honestly; and I am convinced that had we settled on any other run than that of Henry Ricketson's, the residence would never have been questioned.

From the time we went upon the land, and because I would not sell out to Ricketson, he has kept up a continual persecution; and on one occasion, while I was 200 miles away, he came on to the ground and cut down and destroyed our family house while my wife and children were in it. This and repeated acts of grievous annoyances by Ricketson so affected my wife's health that I had to remove her from Baratta to a place out of Ricketson's reach. After this the children were often away from their selections, on visits to their mother; but they always returned after those visits, and made their selections their home, and except while at school or with their mother they were on their selections.

All these selectors fulfilled the three years' residence, and made the required improvements.

The usual declarations we made, and the interest paid and received by the Land Agent without objection; and the inquiry did not take place until one year after all this had been done. Moreover, although pressed hard by the squatter, the department declined to prosecute the inquiry. The department had before this given letters to each, stating the holdings would not be disturbed. The squatter paid the £10 for the inquiry. I protested to the Commissioner against the inquiry proceeding (see copy protest attached).

All the witnesses examined were examined by Ricketson, and were, all of them, adverse to me, having been in my employment and discharged for drunkenness and misconduct. They vented their revenge, and accepted Ricketson's money to ruin my children, by depriving us of their selections, if possible.

The mode of these examinations by a single individual, who himself writes the evidence, is not such as to elicit truth—the squatter is there, his lawyer is there—the Commissioner might have resided with and received his hospitality previous. Every exertion is made to bias the case in favour of the squatter. The selector is possibly not there, or if there, he feels himself at immense disadvantage, for he cannot cope with the squatter and lawyer; he may fee a lawyer, but the service he gets is of a very indifferent character.

The squatter's influence and power is all pervading, and the insertion of a word or two, or the omission of it, often alters the meaning of a whole sentence, or perhaps the whole evidence.

Yours, &c.,

ROBERT BARBOUR.

Inquiry re Fanny Barbour, Robert Barbour, jun., Leighton Barbour, conditional purchases, Deniliquin, 20th November, 1873.

Deniliquin, 3 September, 1877.

I, ROBERT BARBOUR, father of the abovenamed conditional purchasers, who are all minors of years, do, on their behalf, make the following objections:—

1st. These selections were made under the Land Act of 1861. They were never brought under the amending Land Act of 1875, and as the proceedings for inquiry were brought under the Land Act of 1875, they must go for nothing, as the Act cannot be retrospective.

2nd. The term of three years' residence, of improvements, the declaration and payment of one year's interest, were all duly made, and, I submit, cannot be disturbed otherwise.

3rd. Before such inquiry could proceed, the statutory declaration of residence must be set aside by accusing the declarant of perjury, otherwise an inferior Court would try an issue which belongs to a superior Court.

4th. The delay in instituting this inquiry is another answer to this inquiry proceeding. Surely the dilatoriness of the department should not be allowed to inflict upon selectors uncertainty, distrust, vexation, and large pecuniary loss, and inconvenience, all of which would frustrate the object of the Legislature, which is to encourage settlement.

5th. To compel a selector to prove a three years' continuous residence, after a whole year's obliteration of the facts, and scattering of the witnesses, will be to inflict a very great hardship, for, owing to the migratory nature of the population, it is almost impossible to secure evidence extending over four years.

In these cases several of the witnesses have left the district and gone to Victoria and the Darling District.

[Deniliquin, 3 September, 1877.] Inquiry re Fanny Barbour, conditional purchaser at Deniliquin, 20 November, 1873. PROTEST by Robert Barbour, of Banangalite, near Baratta, grazier, who says: I am father of Fanny Barbour, the subject of this inquiry. She is a minor, now four years of age, and at the date of the selection was an infant in arms.

On her behalf I make the following objections to the further prosecution of this inquiry, viz.:—
1st. This selection was made under the Land Act of 1861, therefore the regulations under the amending Act of 1875 do not apply.

2nd. The term of three years' residence expired on the 20th November, 1876, nearly a year ago. The declaration required by law was made, interest was paid and accepted, and, I submit, this bars all further inquiry.

3rd. Before this inquiry can proceed, I submit that the statutory declaration of residence must be set aside.

4th. If this inquiry proceeds now, the effect will be to accuse the declarant of perjury, and an inferior Court will try an issue which belongs only to a superior Court.

5th. The delay in instituting this inquiry is a sufficient answer. Surely the dilatoriness of the department ought not to be allowed to inflict upon selectors uncertainty, distrust, vexation, and large pecuniary loss and inconvenience.

6th. To compel a selector to prove a three years' continuous residence after a year's obliteration of the facts and scattering of the witnesses will surely inflict a great hardship, for, owing to the migratory nature of the people of a new country, it is almost impossible to procure evidence extending over four years.

7th. In this case several of the witnesses have left the district—some gone to Victoria, others gone to the Darling and to other portions of New South Wales.

PROTEST by Robert Barbour, of Banangalite, near Baratta, grazier, who says:—

1. I am father of Leighton Barbour, the subject of this inquiry. He is a minor, now eight years of age, and at the date of the selection was four years.

2. On his behalf I make the following objections to the further prosecution of this inquiry, viz.:—

3. This selection was made under the Land Act, 1861, and the regulations under the amending Act of 1875, do not apply.

4. The term of three years' residence expired on the 20th November, 1876—nearly one year ago; the declaration required by law was made, interest was paid and accepted, and I submit this bars all inquiry further.

5. Before this inquiry can proceed, I submit that the statutory declaration of residence must be set aside.

6. If this inquiry proceeds now, the effect will be to accuse the declarant of perjury, and an inferior Court will try an issue which belongs only to a superior Court.

7. The delay in instituting this inquiry is in itself a sufficient answer. Surely the dilatoriness of the department ought not to be allowed to inflict upon selectors uncertainty, distrust, vexation, and large pecuniary loss and inconvenience.

8. To compel a selector to prove a three years' continuous residence after one year's obliteration of the facts and scattering of the witnesses will surely inflict a great hardship, for, owing to the migratory nature of the people of a new country, it is almost impossible to procure reliable evidence extending over four years.

9. In this case several of the witnesses have left the district—some gone to Victoria, others to the Darling and to other portions of New South Wales.

HIS Excellency the Governor, with the advice of the Executive Council, directs it to be notified that the undermentioned portions of Crown lands, conditionally purchased under the "Crown Lands Alienation Act of 1861," having, by the non-residence of the purchasers on their original selections, or the conditions of which have not been fulfilled, been abandoned, within the meaning of the said Act, the same are hereby declared forfeited, and such of the said lands as shall not in the meantime be conditionally purchased will be sold accordingly, by auction, on a day or days to be hereafter notified.

Memorandum by Chief Commissioner of Conditional Sales.

Forfeited selections—Fanny, Robert, and Leighton Barbour.

THESE selections having now been declared forfeited, attention is directed to the fact that they are declared to be improved to the extent of £1 per acre, and that consequently there are improvements thereon, valued at £1,000, which are now the property of the public.

Whether it may be thought advisable to sell these by auction with the land (as in other cases) or not, it is obvious that it is desirable that they should be protected in the mean time, and as the land will, under the 19th clause of the Act of 1875 (and) revert to the former lessee, who has been the prosecutor in the recent inquiries, and who can have no claim to the improvements, it is submitted that steps should be taken to prevent their being interfered with, or the question being further complicated by the erection of further improvements by the lessee, with a view to a claim being made to purchase in virtue thereof.

In the circumstances, I respectfully recommend that these portions be now withdrawn from lease, under the 5th clause of the "Crown Lands Occupation Act of 1861."—A.O.M., 21/3/78.

Approved.—J.S.F., 22/3/78.

J. S. FARNELL.

The Executive Council advise that the portions of land herein described be withdrawn from lease, in terms of the 5th clause of the "Crown Lands Occupation Act of 1861."—ALEXANDER C. BUDGE, Clerk of the Council. Minute 78/13.—25/3/78. Confirmed.—1/4/78.

The declaration should be repeated and interest refunded in each case. The £10 having been paid in each case, for inquiry, should be refunded. R. Barbour, Esq., M.P., to The Secretary for Lands.

Sir,

Parliament House, Sydney, 29 March, 1878.

I am informed that Mr. Henry Ricketson has applied for two of my children's selections (gazetted about ten days ago as forfeited, but which forfeiture I protest against as illegal), under the 31st clause; if this be so, I hope you will see the advisability of at once voiding his applications, and again declaring the selections excised from the Crown tenants' lease.

ROBERT BARBOUR.

Minute on above.

Send answer to Mr. Barbour as to what we have done.—J.S.F.

No. 40.

R. Barbour, Esq., M.P., to The Secretary for Lands.

Sir,

Darling Point, Sydney, 3 February, 1879.

I beg leave to submit for your decision the following cases, and to ask you to reverse the forfeitures, and to reinstate the selectors—my own children:—

Fanny Barbour, 176 acres, selected Deniliquin, 20 November, 1873.

Robert Barbour, jun., 320 acres, do. do.

Leighton Barbour, 320 acres, do. do.

all minors, on the Baratta Run, county of Townsend.

All the conditions were fulfilled, the three years had expired, a statutory declaration was made in each case, interest was made and received by the Crown, and notwithstanding all this an inquiry was made about twelve months thereafter by Commissioner Rose, at the instance of Henry Ricketson. The Commissioner reported that in his opinion continuous residence had not been fulfilled, and that the selections should be forfeited, and they were so gazetted. I contend that it never was intended that children of tender years (minors' selections being encouraged by the Government)—that they should not attend school as part of their daily avocations, as necessary as a shepherd to attend his sheep, although necessitating his absence from his home for several months at a time; and as proof of the general feeling in regard to this matter, one residence for all minors is acknowledged sufficient.

I have confidence that my children will not be any worse treated.

Fanny Barbour at the date of selection was an infant some four months old. She arrived on her selection with her mother within one month from date of selection, and was there continuously for one year and six months. Her mother having to leave the bush for the city, to be attended by the family doctor, the child Fanny, scarcely two years, had to be taken with her mother. After an absence of a few months the mother returned to Riverina with her ninth living child, and Fanny with her, but not to Baratta—to another property I have on the Murray, where the sawmills are, about 80 miles distant from Baratta. Mrs. Barbour objected to go to Baratta, as I was often absent on business; and on one of these occasions Ricketson had brought a mob of men and cut down the house we lived in, and this had frightened her; but the child Fanny was sent to her selection in company with her sisters; and if you turn up the surveyor's report you will find that he visited the selection about this time and reports her resident. The child had occasionally to be taken to her mother for a week or two, and brought back again to her selection, but the servants were continually there, and the stock was continually there.

As to the two boys, they fulfilled an honest residence during the whole three years. Some part of the time they were absent attending school, and occasionally during the latter part of the time paying a visit to their mother; but if they were at times away the servants were there—the stock were there—and the work went on the same as if they had been day and night chained to the bed-post.

No doubt Ricketson did all he could by himself, his accommodating servants, and my discharged, drunken, and dissatisfied ones, to pour in negative evidence, and give the Commissioner something to hang his opinion on, but after all it is but his opinion; and from the intimate relationships that exist about Deniliquin, and for other reasons which I have suggested in two other applications, you will, I think, have no difficulty, from duty and policy, to protect settlement.

ROBERT BARBOUR.
