SPEAKER—continued:—
RULINGS OF:—
Motion made (Mr. Thompson) that House dissent from, and negatived, 309.
That the House ought not to adopt a Report of a Select Committee of a previous Parliament, 51.
That Resolution—that Ballot-papers, Young, be examined by Clerk, at the Table, and result reported by Speaker to the House—cannot be put, 94.
That a motion referring to Ministerial advice to the Governor to dissolve Parliament, submitted by Sir Henry Parkes, was not entitled to be regarded as Privilege , 110.
That an amendment cannot be proposed in Committee of Ways and Means which would increase the burdens of the people without the direct or indirect sanction of the Crown, 249.
That one Member cannot move the second reading of a Bill for another, with the only exception of one responsible Minister for another Minister, 257.
That the Title of the Barristers Bill did not correspond with the Order of Leave, and the Clauses of the Bill were not covered by the Title, 257.
That an amendment submitted in Committee on Payment of Members, and rejected as out of order, was not identical with any proposition already disposed of by the Committee, 265.
That it should be left for the decision of the House whether a motion in reference to Ballot Papers, Electoral District of Young, be put, 278.
That an honorable member is not in order in quoting from a speech made in a previous debate of the present session,—motion made (Mr. Thompson) to dissent from the ruling of the Chair, and negatived, 309.
That the Committee of the Whole (Customs Duties Bill) was properly sitting.—The House, through that Committee being in continuous sitting, and that it was not proper nor incumbent on him to interrupt the still existent sitting by taking the Chair at 4 o'clock p.m., 380.
That, a clause of the Customs Duties Bill referring to Schedule A being under consideration, the items of that Schedule could not be discussed in anticipation, nor until the Schedule itself was under consideration, 380.
Upholds opinion of Chairman, that words proposed to be inserted in clause 4 of the Stamp Duties Act Amendment Bill (No. 3) were properly before the Committee, as not imposing a tax or duty but being rather of the nature of a penalty, 457.
That the Regulation of Factories and Workshops Bill having been brought in by an unofficial Member, and proceeded with by such Member as a Responsible Minister without being accepted as a Government measure, was rather a matter of constitutional propriety than of Order, 502.
Upholds the opinion of the Chairman as to the inadmissibility, on the ground of inconsistency, of a proposed amendment to clause 6 of the Income Tax Bill, 511(?)
That the 1st and 3rd Sessional Orders do not come into operation in cases where the House is already sitting at 4 o'clock p.m., and engaged in the despatch of Business, but have reference only to fresh meetings of the House, and not to sittings extending over twenty-four hours, and that it was therefore not right for him to call on the business for the new day, and thus begin a fresh sitting, 533.
Upholds the opinion of the Chairman that a question (Centennial Exhibition) already decided by the House, during the present Session, cannot be submitted as an amendment upon a resolution before the Committee of the Whole, 567.
That the Chairman had taken the usual and proper course in proposing the question in Committee of Supply without the Minister in charge moving the resolution, 593.
That it is incompetent for an Honorable Member, who had already spoken to the main question, to propose an amendment, 593.

I beg to assure you, gentlemen, that, in the faithful discharge of my duties, it will be my constant and anxious desire to promote the welfare and prosperity of this Colony, and to strengthen the loyal attachment to Her Majesty's Throne and Person which so notably pervades all classes of the people of New South Wales.

NEW SOUTH WALES.

MINISTERIAL ADVICE TO THE GOVERNOR.

(CORRESPONDENCE RESPECTING RESIGNATION OF THE MINISTRY.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be printed, 18 February, 1886.

Memorandum for His Excellency the Right Honorable Lord Carrington,
P.C., K.C.M.G., &c.

My Lord,

Colonial Secretary's Office, 17 February, 1886.

Ministers have, during a long Cabinet meeting this forenoon, anxiously considered the Parliamentary position—the Assembly having last night carried the following Resolution:—

“That the policy of the Government is unsatisfactory to this House.”

Your Excellency is already aware that the present Government took office at a period of financial difficulty, unequalled by anything of the kind that had ever before occurred in the history of the Colony.

You are also aware that, when you sought my aid in the formation of a new Government, I was impelled alone by what appeared to me to be my imperative duty, under the then unfortunate circumstances, to give your Excellency my best services. Amid surroundings of the most disheartening kind, I submitted to your Lordship a Ministry which met your approval.

Up to the resolution of last night, your Government in the aggregate, and individually, had conducted the public business apparently to the satisfaction of the Country and of the Parliament.

The division last night placed the Government in a minority of eight; but, in the majority, there were honorable gentlemen more opposed to each other than they were to the Government.

The House, so far as I could understand, assumed this position:—

Ministerial supporters in the division	44
Pairs	6
Absent	7
									57
Those who opposed us in the division were...	52
Pairs	6
									64
Of that 64, I consider the regular Opposition led by Sir Patrick Jennings, K.C.M.G., including himself, was	47
Supposed supporters of Sir Henry Parkes, including himself	7
Supposed supporters of Mr. Garvan, including himself	6

This, to my colleagues and me, appears to be the true state of parties in the Assembly, and that being so, the possibility of anything like satisfactory financial legislation from the present Parliament is scarcely to be expected, while the time in every interest for the rectification of our financial position is very limited, and therefore the question requires prompt action.

We, therefore, with much reluctance, and feeling convinced that the Country is with us, believe it to be our duty to advise your Excellency to dissolve Parliament, and give the constituencies, while there is yet time without great inconvenience, an opportunity to decide the general question of finance, and also as to the rectitude of our general policy.

Your Excellency's faithful servant,
JOHN ROBERTSON.

His Excellency the Governor to The Colonial Secretary.

My dear Sir John Robertson,

Government House, 18 February, 1886.

I have to acknowledge the receipt of your memorandum of yesterday's date.

While recognizing, from your point of view, that there is nothing unconstitutional in your asking for a dissolution, at the same time I feel myself unable to act on your advice, for the following reasons:—

The present Parliament was opened on 18th November, 1885, and a resolution adverse to Mr. Dibbs' Government was carried. The Ministers resigned December 17th, 1885. Your Ministry assumed office on 22nd December, 1885, and on 16th February, 1886, an adverse vote was carried against you.

These two votes following each other so rapidly, and both of them so soon after Parliament met, indicate no doubt a difficulty of forming from the present Assembly a Government capable of carrying on public business; but I cannot at present arrive at the conclusion that there are not materials in the Assembly for the formation of a Government stronger than either of those which I have mentioned.

I therefore think that an opportunity should be offered for the formation of a new Administration.

For that purpose, I must be permitted to decline the adoption of your recommendation to dissolve.

I assume that there will be no difficulty on your part of asking the House to vote the Supplies of the ensuing month, for the public convenience.

I cannot allow this opportunity to pass without expressing my acknowledgment for the courteous consideration which you and your Ministry have extended to me personally during our official intercourse, and which has made the official transaction of business so pleasant and so easy.

I beg to subscribe myself,

My dear Sir John Robertson,

Most faithfully yours,

CARRINGTON.

The Colonial Secretary to His Excellency the Governor.

My dear Lord Carrington,

18 February, 1886.

I do myself the honor to tender the resignation of my colleagues and myself as your Excellency's Ministers.

Permit me at the same time to convey to your Excellency my own and my colleagues' best thanks for the great kindness and consideration which you have extended to us during the whole course of our services.

My Lord,

I am, with the greatest respect and regard,

Your faithful servant,

JOHN ROBERTSON.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.

NEW SOUTH WALES.

TITLE "HONORABLE" WITHIN THE COLONY OF NEW SOUTH WALES.

(DESPATCHES IN REFERENCE TO.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be printed, 8 June, 1886.

RETURN to an Address of the Honorable the Legislative Assembly of New South Wales, adopted on 21 May, 1886, praying that His Excellency will be pleased to cause to be laid upon the Table of this House,—

- (1.) A copy of the Despatch of the Duke of Newcastle, dated 28th December, 1863, and also copies of all subsequent despatches relating to the use of the term 'Honorable' within the Colony of New South Wales.
(2.) A copy of all Despatches from the Secretary of State for the Colonies, notifying that permission had been given to use the term 'Honorable' to any persons within the Colony of New South Wales.

(Mr. Trickett, for Mr. Abbott.)

Mr. H. Labouchere to His Excellency the Governor, Sir W. Denison.

(No. 128.)

Sir,

Downing-street, 30 October, 1856.

I have received and laid before the Queen your Despatch No. 87, of the 28th May, requesting Her Majesty's approval of the distinction of "Honorable," which, in a Gazette notice (whereof you transmit a copy) you had provisionally conferred upon the President of the Legislative Council, and on the Speaker of the Legislative Assembly.

You also request that the same title may be given to the Members of the Legislative Council.

In reply I am commanded to inform you that I have submitted both these applications to Her Majesty, who has been graciously pleased to assent thereto, and I am commanded accordingly to signify to you Her Majesty's pleasure, that all the Members of the Legislative Council, and the Speaker of the House of Assembly, should be entitled to the titular designation of "Honorable" and should be so described in the several Acts and Instruments which may be issued under your authority.

I have, &c.,

H. LABOUCHERE.

The Secretary of State for the Colonies to His Excellency the Governor, Sir John Young.

Sir,

Downing-street, 28 December, 1863.

I transmit to you, for your information, copies of a correspondence with the Governor of South Australia, relative to the question of allowing Members of the Executive and Legislative Councils to retain the title of "Honorable" after they have ceased to be Councillors.

You will collect from that correspondence the conditions under which I shall be prepared to recommend to Her Majesty, that Executive Councillors shall receive permission to retain the title of "Honorable" in South Australia after ceasing to be Members of the Council. I shall be ready to adopt the same course in respect to the Colony under your Government.

I have, &c.,

NEWCASTLE.

His Excellency the Governor, Sir D. Daly, to The Duke of Newcastle.

My Lord Duke,

Government House, Adelaide, 25 April, 1863.

I have been applied to by the Members of my Council upon the subject of the prefix of "Honorable," which, by Her Majesty's permission, is attached to their names during their occupancy of seats in the Executive and Legislative Councils, a distinction which they are desirous of retaining after they shall have ceased to hold office.

2. They are aware of that privilege having been conceded in Canada and other Colonies, and I would respectfully submit that the same rule might be adopted here with advantage, if it should be allowed retrospective effect, in which case some Colonists of much worth and respectability would be included, and would enjoy a well merited distinction, together with those who may hereafter cease to hold office.

3. I cannot discover from the record of Ministerial Correspondence of this Colony that any instructions have been received by any of my predecessors in relation to this subject, which after due consideration I venture to your Grace's favourable notice.

I have, &c.,

D. DALY,
Governor.

The Duke of Newcastle to His Excellency the Governor, Sir D. Daly.

Sir,

Downing-street, 6 August, 1863.

I have received your despatch, marked "Separate," of the 25th April last, in which you state that you have been applied to by the Members of your Council, upon the subject of the prefix of "Honorable," which you assume to be, by Her Majesty's permission, attached to their names during their occupancy of their seats in the Executive and Legislative Councils—a distinction which they are desirous of retaining after they shall have ceased to hold office.

In reply, I would point out that the retention of that title by an ex-Member of a Legislative Council is without precedent, so far as I am aware, and would be wholly incongruous, especially in cases where the Council is elective. The case of Executive Councillors stands on different grounds. I consider nothing as unimportant which tends to attract the leading Colonists to the public service of the Colony, and therefore, so long as this title is an object of ambition to such persons, it would be very desirable that it should remain a reward of political eminence; but it would soon cease to be an object of desire if it was conferred promiscuously on all persons whom chance might for a time have introduced into any Colonial Ministry.

Under these circumstances it has appeared to me that the right to retain this title, after quitting office, should be given with a certain reserve, and only on the recommendation of the Governor, and that, in order to relieve a Governor as far as possible from the difficulty of exercising a discretion in his recommendations, it should be understood that, as a general rule, Her Majesty would not be advised to sanction the retention of the title unless the retiring Councillor had either been for three years Member of a Colonial Government, or for one year at the head of it. But before announcing this decision I am desirous of learning whether there are any local reasons which would render its execution difficult or invidious?

I have, &c.,

NEWCASTLE.

His Excellency the Governor, Sir D. Daly, to The Duke of Newcastle.

My Lord Duke,

Government House, Adelaide, 21 October, 1863.

I have the honor to acknowledge your Grace's despatch of the 6th August, marked "Separate," on the subject of the prefix of "Honorable" being retained by Members of the Executive and Legislative Councils, after having ceased to hold office.

I have carefully considered your Grace's decision in reference to this subject, and I see much reason to believe that it is an improvement upon the suggestion which, at the request of my late Council, I ventured to submit to your Grace.

After consultation with some of my late and present advisers, who concur with me in thinking that the proposed restriction upon the retention of the title of "Honorable" in certain cases will operate favourably in many respects, I feel justified in assuring your Grace that there are no local reasons which would render its execution difficult or invidious, although the number that are at present qualified is very limited, I think the principle will be generally approved.

I shall be glad to receive your Grace's instructions in reference to this matter, in such a shape as I may, if necessary, make public, prior to submitting any names to your Grace for the honor in question.

I have, &c.,

D. DALY,
Governor.

The Duke of Newcastle to His Excellency the Governor, Sir D. Daly.

Sir,

Downing-street, 28 December, 1863.

I have received your despatch, marked "Separate," of the 21st of October last, on the subject of the retention of the title of "Honorable" by Members of the Executive and Legislative Councils in South Australia, after they shall have ceased to hold those offices.

As regards Executive Councillors, I shall now be prepared to submit to the Queen the names of such persons as you may from time to time consider it desirable to propose as eligible for the retention of that title after having ceased to hold the office of Executive Councillor under the conditions stated in my previous despatch, "Separate," of the 6th of August last.

In the meantime you are at liberty to give the publicity which you suggest to this arrangement.

I have, &c.,

NEWCASTLE.

The Secretary of State for the Colonies to His Excellency the Governor,
Sir John Young.

(Separate.)
Sir,

Downing-street, 27 April, 1865.

I have received your despatch No. 11 of the 13th February last, in which you represent the position which has at different times been held by Mr. James Martin in the Government of New South Wales, and recommend that he should receive Her Majesty's permission to retain the title of "Honorable" within the Colony, he having ceased to hold the position of an Executive Councillor, and I have to acquaint you that Her Majesty has been pleased to sanction a compliance with that recommendation.

I have, &c.,
EDWARD CARDWELL.

The Secretary of State for the Colonies to His Excellency the Governor,
the Earl of Belmore.

(Separate.)

My Lord,

Downing-street, 1 January, 1868.

My attention has been directed to a despatch, which was addressed to my predecessor by Sir John Young, on the 3rd August, 1865 (No. 67).

In that Despatch Sir J. Young enclosed a copy of the Government Gazette, containing the notification of the first permission granted by Her Majesty to a late Executive Councillor, to retain the title of "Honorable" within the Colony of New South Wales, in the terms of the Duke of Newcastle's Despatch of the 28th December, 1863; and it was pointed out, at the same time, that no position of precedence had been assigned to such gentlemen as might from time to time receive that honor.

As a question may possibly still be raised on that point, I have to signify to you Her Majesty's pleasure that Members of the Executive Council, who may be permitted to retain the title of "Honorable" within New South Wales, should take precedence according to the date, in the order of the first appointment of each to the Executive Council after the existing Executive Councillors. This decision is in accordance with the provision of the 6th section of the Royal Instructions, and with a decision which was long since formed in the case of Canada, and agrees also with the suggestion of Sir John Young.

I have, &c.,
BUCKINGHAM & CHANDOS.

The Secretary of State for the Colonies to His Excellency the Governor,
the Earl of Belmore.

My Lord,

Downing-street, 18 January, 1868.

I have received your predecessor's despatch, No. 92, of the 18th October, 1867, submitting the name of Mr. Geoffrey Eagar, with the recommendation that he should be permitted to retain the title of "Honorable," after he had ceased to be an Executive Councillor, Mr. Eagar, having then completed three years as a Member of the Executive Council of New South Wales, and having been, during that period, a Member of the Government. I have also received Sir John Young's despatch, No. 93, of the 13th October, preferring a similar request on behalf of Mr. John Bowie Wilson.

In reply, I have to acquaint you that there appears to me to exist generally strong objections to the consideration of such applications on behalf of Executive Councillors, while still in possession of office, as Members of Government. If you should bring these recommendations again under my notice, after these gentlemen should have respectively ceased to hold office, I shall be happy to consider them.

I have, &c.,
BUCKINGHAM & CHANDOS.

The Secretary of State for the Colonies to His Excellency the Governor,
the Earl of Belmore.

(Separate.)

My Lord,

Downing-street, 3 March, 1869.

I have received your Lordship's despatch, No. 166, of the 31st December last, in which you recommend that the names of Mr. Geoffrey Eagar and Mr. John Bowie Wilson may be submitted to the Queen for permission to retain the title of "Honorable," now that they have ceased to be Executive Councillors, both those gentlemen having, as previously reported, served as Executive Councillors during a period of three years; and I have to acquaint you that Her Majesty has been graciously pleased to authorize a compliance with that recommendation.

I have, &c.,
GRANVILLE.

The Secretary of State for the Colonies to His Excellency the Governor,
Lord A. Loftus.

(General.)

My Lord,

Downing-street, 27 September, 1879.

I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of Sir A. Case of the Appellant.

IN THE PRIVY COUNCIL.

On Appeal from the Supreme Court of New South Wales.

Between The Honorable EDMUND BARTON (Defendant), Appellant; and ADOLPHUS GEORGE TAYLOR (Plaintiff), Respondent.

1. This is an Appeal from a judgment of the Supreme Court of New South Wales, of the 9th of December, 1884, ordering judgment to be entered for the Respondent on his demurrers to the pleas pleaded by the Appellant in an action of trespass to the person, brought by the Respondent, who at the time of the alleged trespass was a Member of the Legislative Assembly of New South Wales, against the Appellant, who was then the Speaker.

2. The question to be determined in this Appeal is whether the Legislative Assembly of the Colony has power to order the removal of a Member who, having persistently and wilfully obstructed the business of a Committee of the Whole House, and been therefor by a resolution of the Legislative Assembly suspended from the service of the House, has entered the Chamber where the Legislative Assembly is sitting for the despatch of business after the termination of the sitting at which such resolution was passed, but within a period less than a week from the time of the passing of such resolution.

3. The 35th section of Schedule (1) of the Imperial Act, 18 & 19 Victoria, chapter 54 (such Schedule being commonly known in the Colony and being hereinafter referred to as "The Constitution Act"), is as follows:—

"The said Legislative Council and Assembly, in the first Session of each respectively and from time to time afterwards as there may be occasion, shall prepare and adopt such Standing Rules and Orders as shall appear to the said Council and Assembly respectively best adapted for the orderly conduct of such Council and Assembly respectively, and for the manner in which such Council and Assembly shall be presided over in case of the absence of the President or the Speaker, and for the mode in which such Council and Assembly shall confer, correspond, and communicate with each other relative to Votes or Bills passed by or pending in such Council and Assembly respectively, and for the manner in which notices of Bills, resolutions, and other business intended to be submitted to such Council and Assembly respectively at any Session thereof may be published for general information, and for the proper passing, entitling, and numbering of the Bills to be introduced into and passed by the said Council and Assembly, and for the proper presentation of the same to the Governor for the time being for Her Majesty's assent, all of which Rules and Orders shall by such Council and Assembly respectively be laid before the Governor, and being by him approved shall become binding and of force."

4. In pursuance of the power conferred upon it by the said 35th section, the Legislative Assembly prepared and adopted certain Standing Rules or Orders for the orderly conduct of such Assembly, which were by such Assembly laid before the Governor, and were by him approved. The first of such Standing Orders is as follows:—

"In all cases not specially provided for hereinafter, or by Sessional or other Orders, resort shall be had to the rules, forms, and usages of the Imperial Parliament, which shall be followed so far as the same can be applied to the proceedings of this House."

5. Before and at the time when the said Standing Rule and Order was so approved, it was one of the rules or usages of the Imperial Parliament for either House of Parliament to suspend from the service of the House for such period as it should name, or without naming any period of suspension, until it should give directions in the matter, any Member persistently and wilfully obstructing the business of the House.

6. After the said Standing Orders had been so approved by the Governor, but before the obstruction of business for which the Respondent was suspended from the service of the House, a Rule of the Imperial Parliament was made, and was a usage in force at the time of the alleged trespass hereinafter mentioned, which Rule is as follows, that is to say :—

“That whenever any Member shall have been named by the Speaker, or by the Chairman of a Committee of the Whole House, immediately after the commission of the offence of disregarding the authority of the Chair, or of abusing the Rules of the House by persistently and wilfully obstructing the business of the House or otherwise, then if the offence has been committed by such Member in the House, the Speaker shall forthwith put the questions on a motion being made, no amendment, adjournment, or debate being allowed, ‘That such Member be suspended from the service of the House,’ and if the offence has been committed in a Committee of the Whole House, the Chairman shall, on a motion being made, put the same question in a similar way, and if the motion is carried, shall forthwith suspend the proceedings of the Committee and report the circumstances to the House, and the Speaker shall thereupon put the same question without amendment, adjournment, or debate, as if the offence had been committed in the House itself. If any Member be suspended under this Order his suspension on the first occasion shall continue for one week, on the second occasion for a fortnight, and on the third or any subsequent occasion for a month : Provided always that suspension from the service of the House shall not exempt the Member so suspended from serving on any Committee for the consideration of a Private Bill to which he may have been appointed before his suspension : Provided also that not more than one Member shall be named at the same time, unless several Members present together have jointly disregarded the authority of the Chair : Provided always that nothing in this resolution shall be taken to deprive the House of the power of proceeding against any Member according to ancient usages.”

7. The Respondent, on the 23rd day of April, 1884, when the Legislative Assembly was sitting in a Committee of the Whole House, persistently and wilfully obstructed the business of the said Committee, whereupon the said Committee, having considered the conduct of the Respondent, passed the following resolution relating to him :—“That Mr. Adolphus George Taylor, having been named by the Chairman as having persistently and wilfully obstructed the business of the Committee, be suspended from the service of the House.” This resolution was reported by the Chairman of the said Committee, and thereupon the said Assembly passed the following resolution relating to the Respondent :—“That Mr. A. G. Taylor be suspended from the service of the House.” Within a period of one week after the passing of the last-mentioned resolution, the Respondent entered the Legislative Assembly Chamber while the Assembly was sitting for the despatch of business and claimed the right to sit and serve as a Member, whereupon the Appellant, as Speaker, requested him to withdraw, and upon his refusal, directed the Sergeant-at-Arms to remove the Respondent from the Chamber, which he accordingly did.

8. The trespasses alleged in the declaration in the action were the removal of the Respondent from the Chamber and preventing him entering it.

9. The Appellant pleaded three pleas to the declarations. The first plea was Not Guilty. The second and third pleas each set forth the resolutions hereinbefore set forth, and alleged that while the suspension still remained in force, the Respondent entered the Chamber; that the Appellant, as Speaker, requested him to withdraw, and upon his refusal directed the Sergeant-at-Arms to remove him. The difference between the second and third pleas is, that the latter sets forth the Standing Order of the Legislative Assembly and the Standing Rule or Standing Order of the Imperial Parliament hereinbefore set out, and alleges that the entry by the Respondent into the Chamber took place within a period of one week from the passing of the last of the two resolutions, while the second plea does not set forth either of such Standing Rules or Orders.

10. The Respondent demurred to the second plea on the ground that the said resolution of the Legislative Assembly was no justification for the alleged trespasses, and to the third plea on the grounds that the Standing Order of the Legislative Assembly had not such a prospective operation as to adopt the Imperial Standing Order, and that if it had such a prospective operation it was ultra vires.

11. The Appellant joined in demurrer, and the Supreme Court gave judgment for the Respondent on the demurrers.

12. The Chief Justice, who stated the Reasons for the Judgment, dealt first with the third plea, and said that the Standing Order of the Legislative Assembly must be held to apply only to such Rules and usages of the Imperial Parliament as were in force at the time when such Standing Order was approved by the Governor, and that if it had in terms applied to Rules and usages of the Imperial Parliament which were not then in force, but came into force afterwards, it would have been ultra vires, because a Standing Rule or Order of the Imperial Parliament which came into force after the passing of the Standing Order of the Legislative Assembly would not have been approved by the Governor, which approval was, by the 35th section of the Constitution Act, essential to its validity.

As regards the second plea, the Chief Justice said :—“In this plea a right is set up in the Assembly to suspend a Member for some time, definite or indefinite, quite apart from the question of obstructive conduct actually existing. It is impossible to distinguish this alleged right to suspend from a right to punish or coerce, even after the obstruction is over and is no longer apprehended, and that is precisely a right which the Privy Council has declared that Colonial Assemblies do not possess. If the plea had alleged that the plaintiff had obstructed the proceedings of the House, and that, having for such obstructions been removed, he returned to the Chamber without the permission of the House during that same sitting, the case would have been different and the justification would have been complete. He may be expelled if sufficient grounds exist to warrant the House in taking that extreme course, and of such sufficiency the House itself must of necessity be the sole judge; but, in the absence of any resolution formally expelling a Member, he cannot be ‘suspended,’ although he may be removed to enable the business of any given sitting to go on, and he may for that purpose be kept excluded during that sitting which he has so interrupted and obstructed.”

13. The Appellant humbly submits that the judgment of the Supreme Court should be reversed, for the following (among other)

Reasons—

1. Because the true interpretation of the Standing Order of the Legislative Assembly is that it adopted (so far as they can be applied) the Rules and usages of the Imperial Parliament for the time being in force, and not merely those which were in force at the time when the Standing Order was approved by the Governor, and there is nothing in the 35th section of the Constitution Act which makes the Standing Order so interpreted ultra vires.
2. Because at the time when the said Standing Order was so approved, it was a Rule and usage of the Imperial Parliament that either House might suspend for such period as it deemed proper any Member persistently and wilfully obstructing the business of the House, and such Rule and usage being one which could be applied to the proceedings of the Legislative Assembly was one to which the Assembly had, by virtue of the said Standing Order, a right to resort.
3. Because the Legislative Assembly has power, for proper cause, to suspend a Member from the service of the House without naming a period at which the suspension is to terminate, and the Member so suspended has no right to enter the Chamber until either the period during which, according to the practice of the Assembly, the suspension of a Member is to last, has terminated, or the House has given him permission to enter, and the Respondent entered the Chamber before the period during which his suspension lasted had terminated, and without having received permission to enter.

Case for the Respondent.

1. The above action, in which the said Respondent was Plaintiff, and the said Appellant was Defendant, was brought by the Respondent (a member of the Legislative Assembly of New South Wales) to recover damages against the Appellant (Speaker of the said Legislative Assembly) for having assaulted the Respondent on the 22nd and 23rd April, 1884, by causing him to be expelled out of the Legislative Assembly Chamber and hindered from remaining in and attending and being present at meetings of the Legislative Assembly held on the above dates, such assaults operating to the damage, detriment, and loss of the Respondent.

2. The declaration in the said action was delivered on 26th August, 1884, and is set out on pages 1-2 of the record of proceedings. Record, p. 1-2,
No. 1.

3. On 5th September, 1884, the Appellant pleaded—

(1.) Not guilty.

(2.) Justification of the alleged trespass of 23rd April, 1884, by reason of the Legislative Assembly having, on a date prior to the alleged trespass, passed the following resolution relating to the Respondent, that is to say—"That Mr. A. G. Taylor be suspended from the service of the House."

(3.) Justification of the alleged trespass of 23rd April, 1884, by reason of the Legislative Assembly's Standing Order, No. 1, adopting and comprehending a rule of the Imperial Parliament, authorising the suspension by the House, for seven days, fourteen days, or a month, of any member persistently and wilfully obstructing the business of the House, the said rule forbidding any amendment, adjournment, or debate to be made on the motion for suspension, which said course (this plea further alleges) was adopted with regard to the Respondent.

The said pleas are set out on pages 2-4 of the said record. Record, p. 2-4
No. 2.

4. On 17th September, 1884, the Respondent joined issue on the Appellant's first plea, and demurred to the second and third pleas as being bad in substance, and containing no justification for the trespass alleged in Respondent's declaration.

The said Joinder of Issue and Demurrers are set out on page 5 of the said record. Record, p. 5,
No. 3.

5. On 19th September, 1884, the Appellant joined in demurrer, which said Joinder in Demurrer is set out on page 6 of the said record. Record, p. 6,
No. 4.

6. The said demurrer came on for argument in the Supreme Court of New South Wales, on 13th November, 1884, before Chief Justice Martin, Judge Windéyer, and Judge Innes, Judges of the said Supreme Court (the Respondent being heard in person and the Appellant being heard by counsel); and on 9th December, 1884, the Chief Justice, on behalf of the Court, delivered the judgment of the Court, ordering that judgment be entered for the Respondent on Respondent's demurrers to the Appellant's pleas.

The said order of the Supreme Court is set out on page 6 of the said record, and the reasons of the learned Judges who composed the said Court, are set out on pages 7-14 thereof. Record, p. 6,
No. 5-8.
Record, p. 7-14,
No. 7.

7. A Petition for leave to appeal to Her Majesty in Council from the said judgment of the Supreme Court was presented by the Appellant on 23rd December, 1884, together with an affidavit, in support thereof, which Petition and affidavit are respectively set forth on pages 14-15 of the said record. Record, p. 14-15,
No. 8-9.

On 16th January, 1885, Judge Innes, one of the Judges of the said Supreme Court, ordered that the Appellant should have leave to appeal to Her Majesty in Council from the said judgment of the Supreme Court of the 9th December, 1884.

On 9th February, 1885, it was ordered by the said Supreme Court that the above rule granting leave to appeal should be confirmed. The Record, p. 16-17,

Nos. 10-11.

The said Order granting leave to appeal and the said Rule confirming Order granting leave to appeal are set out on pages 16-17 of the said record.

8. The Respondent submits that so much of the said judgment as orders judgment to be entered for the Respondent on the Respondent's demurrer to Appellant's third plea should be sustained, for the following Reasons:—

- I. Because the first Standing Order of the Legislative Assembly of New South Wales (referred to and quoted in Appellant's third plea) did adopt, and had legal power to adopt, only such rules, forms, and usages of the Imperial Parliament as were in force in the Imperial Parliament at the time the said first Standing Order came into force.
- II. Because the said first Standing Order could not refer to or adopt the Rule of the Imperial Parliament (referred to and quoted in the Appellant's third plea), for the following reasons:—
 - (a) The said Rule of the Imperial Parliament came into force in the Imperial Parliament subsequent to the adoption of the Legislative Assembly of New South Wales of the first Standing Order.
 - (b) The 35th and 57th sections of the New South Wales Constitution Act require the assent of the Governor of the day to precede the adoption of any Rule or Order as a Standing Order of the Legislative Assembly of New South Wales.
 - (c) Such assent—to be intelligent and within the meaning of the said 35th and 57th sections—could not lawfully be given to non-existent Rules, whose character and construction the Governor of the day could not anticipate, and was therefore unable to judge of the propriety of assenting to their application.
 - (d) The Governor could not (without risk of usurping the statutory prerogative of his successors) give a prospective, and necessarily unintelligent, assent to Rules not in existence at the time his assent was sought but to be hereafter made by the Imperial Parliament, and liable to first come into operation during the Administration of the Government of the Colony by his successors.
 - (e) The said first Standing Order can have no such continuing capacity or ambulatory force as to refer to and comprehend Rules of the Imperial Parliament passed subsequent to the adoption of the said first Standing Order, because this would destroy the discretionary power of supervision vested in successive Governors of the Colony by the said 35th and 57th sections.
- III. Because the adoption of the said Imperial Rule as a Standing Order of the Legislative Assembly of New South Wales had not been assented to by "the Officer administering the Government of the Colony" when the Appellant is alleged in Respondent's declaration to have committed the trespass complained of by the Respondent; nor had the Legislative Assembly of New South Wales consented to adopt the said Imperial Rule.
- IV. Because the operation of the said Imperial Rule amounts to an amendment of the Constitution Act, which can only be made by Statute, concurrently assented to by the Legislative Assembly, the Legislative Council, and the Governor of the Colony.

9. The Respondent further submits that so much of the said judgment as orders judgment to be entered for the Respondent on the Respondent's demurrer to Appellant's second plea should be sustained, for the following

Reasons—

- I. Because the Appellant refused to allow the Respondent to be heard in his own defence, or to show cause why the Assembly should not assent to the resolution—"That Mr. A. G. Taylor be suspended from the service of the House."
- II. Because the Appellant refused to allow the resolution "That Mr. A. G. Taylor be suspended from the service of the House" to be debated by any Member of the House, or to be made the subject of amendment or adjournment by any Member of the House.
- III. Because the Legislative Assembly of New South Wales has no power (either statutory or inherent) to suspend any of its Members from the service of the House for an undefined term, for the following reasons:—
 - (a) Such a power is inconsistent with the 35th section of the Constitution Act, which requires the formulation and prior publication of Rules and methods of procedure "for the orderly conduct of the said Assembly."
 - (b) Such a power, when exercised without prior formulation in a Standing Order, deprives the Governor of the Colony of the discretionary authority given him in the 35th section to negative such Rules and methods of procedure "for the orderly conduct of the said Assembly" as appear to him to be ill adapted for that purpose.
 - (c) Suspension from the service of the House for an undefined term (being variously and capriciously terminable by three days, three weeks, three years, &c.) breaks the statutory continuity of representation constructively conceded to Members of the Legislative Assembly in the following Acts of Parliament:—The Constitution Act, the Electoral Act of New South Wales, and the Triennial Parliaments Act of New South Wales.
 - (d) The Legislative Assembly, in the exercise of any power of internal discipline over its Members, cannot (either upon a debate denying resolution or otherwise) infringe the statutory right of its Members to take part in the proceedings of the House, when an unlawful obstruction to the business of the House is alleged to be apprehended from their presence.

10. The Respondent further submits that the said judgment of the Supreme Court of New South Wales was right, for the above and the following

Reasons—

- I. The Appellant in none of his pleas affirms that on the date of the alleged trespass the presence of the Respondent in the Legislative Assembly Chambers was a hindrance or obstruction to the the proceedings of the said Legislative Assembly, or that the orderly conduct or dignity of the Assembly required Respondent's removal from the Assembly on 23rd April, 1884, or that any hindrance or interruption to business was apprehended from Respondent's presence on that date.

- II. The contemporaneous character of Appellant's second and third pleas show that the method of procedure in submitting the resolution "That Mr. A. G. Taylor be suspended from the service of the House" was characterized by a disallowance of "amendment, adjournment, or debate" upon the said resolution; and the Appellant, in thus unlawfully stifling debate, deprived the said resolution of any validity it might otherwise have had.
- III. Neither of the Appellant's pleas demurred to by Respondent allege that the Respondent at any time disregarded the authority of the Chair, or persistently and wilfully obstructed the business of the House, or abused any of the Rules of the House, or that any obstruction to the proceedings of the House was apprehended from his presence, or that the orderly conduct of the business of the House required either his removal or suspension for a term defined or undefined; the said pleas demurred to by Respondent alleging merely in that regard that, in the opinion of the Chairman of Committees, Respondent had persistently and wilfully obstructed the business of the Committee.
- IV. The Appellant, in wrongly ruling that the Rule of the Imperial Parliament (quoted in the third plea) was adopted by Standing Order No. 1, unlawfully influenced the Assembly to pass the resolution for Respondent's suspension, and to pass it "without amendment, adjournment, or debate."

Respondent, in person.

Proceedings in the Supreme Court referred to in the foregoing Case.

IN THE SUPREME COURT OF NEW SOUTH WALES.

No. 2,183, 1884.

Between Adolphus George Taylor, Plaintiff, and the Honorable Edmund Barton, Speaker of the Legislative Assembly, Defendant.

DEMURRER BOOK.

Adolphus George Taylor, in person, sues Edmund Barton, Speaker of the Legislative Assembly of New South Wales, for that, at Sydney, in the Colony aforesaid, on the twenty-second day of April, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and eighty-four, the said Edmund Barton assaulted the said Adolphus George Taylor, he, the said Adolphus George Taylor, being at the time a Member of the Legislative Assembly of New South Wales, and one of the three Members returned by the Electoral District of Mudgee, in the Colony aforesaid, under and by virtue of the Act forty-four Victoria, number thirteen, and being then in the Legislative Assembly Chamber, and about to consult, treat, deliberate, and give his vote, and then pushed, shoved, and expelled, or caused to be pushed, shoved, and expelled the said Adolphus George Taylor out of the said Legislative Assembly Chamber, and hindered and prevented him, the said Adolphus George Taylor, from remaining in and attending and being present at the said meeting. And afterwards, to wit, on the twenty-third day of April, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and eighty-four, prevented the said Adolphus George Taylor from entering and remaining in the said Chamber as aforesaid, whereby the said Adolphus George Taylor was totally hindered, prevented, and excluded from remaining in and attending and being present at the said meeting of the Legislative Assembly; and at a subsequent meeting of the Legislative Assembly, to wit, on the twenty-third day of April, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and eighty-four, both held in the Legislative Assembly Chamber aforesaid, to the damage, detriment, and loss of the said Adolphus George Taylor.

2. The said Adolphus George Taylor also sues the said Edmund Barton, for that the said Edmund Barton, on the days and dates aforesaid, and at the place aforesaid, assaulted the said Adolphus George Taylor, and kept him for a long time from entering the said Legislative Assembly, whereby he has suffered pain of mind, and in his good name and reputation has been otherwise greatly injured. ADOLPHUS GEORGE TAYLOR,
Plaintiff, in person.

PLEAS.

The fifth day of September, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and eighty-four.

1. The Defendant, by John Williams, his Attorney, says that he is not guilty.

2. And for a second plea, the Defendant, as to so much of the Declaration as complains of a trespass alleged to have been committed upon the twenty-third day of April, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and eighty-four, says, that before the alleged trespass, the said Legislative Assembly had been sitting in a Committee of the Whole House, for and in the dispatch of the business of Parliament, that is to say, for the purpose of considering the Supply to be granted to Her Majesty, and the Plaintiff, as such Member of the said Legislative Assembly, was then and there present; and the said Committee of the Whole House having considered certain conduct of the Plaintiff, then committed before the said Committee, passed a certain resolution relating to the Plaintiff and to the said conduct, which said resolution was in the words following, that is to say:—

“That Mr. Adolphus George Taylor, having been named by the Chairman as having persistently and wilfully obstructed the business of the Committee, be suspended from the service of the House.”

And the Defendant says that the said conduct of the Plaintiff, and the said resolution, were immediately reported to and brought under the notice of the said Assembly by the Chairman of the said Committee; and thereupon the said Assembly, in Parliament assembled, passed a resolution relating to the Plaintiff and to the premises, in the words following, that is to say:—

“That Mr. A. G. Taylor be suspended from the service of the House.”

And afterwards, during the same Session of Parliament, and while the said suspension still remained in force, the Plaintiff entered the said Legislative Assembly Chamber while the said Assembly was sitting for the dispatch of the business of Parliament, at the said meeting in the first count mentioned, and claimed the right to sit and serve as such Member; and thereupon the Defendant, as such Speaker as aforesaid, requested the Plaintiff to withdraw from the said Chamber, which the Plaintiff then refused to do; whereupon the Defendant, acting under the authority of the said resolutions and in order to enforce the same, directed the Sergeant-at-Arms of the said Assembly to remove the Plaintiff from the said Chamber; and the said Sergeant-at-Arms then gently laid his hand upon the Plaintiff and removed him from the said Chamber, using no more force than was necessary in that behalf, which is the alleged trespass.

3. And for a third plea, the Defendant, as to so much of the Declaration as complains of a trespass alleged to have been committed upon the twenty-third day of April, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and eighty-four, says that before and at the time of the alleged trespass, one of the Standing Orders of the said Legislative Assembly, being the first of the said Orders regulating the practice and conduct of business of the said Assembly, was in the words following, that is to say:—

“In all cases not specially provided for hereinafter or by Sessional or other Orders, resort shall be had to the Rules, forms, and usages of the Imperial Parliament, which shall be followed so far as the same can be applied to the proceedings of this House.”

And after the passing of the said Order, and while the same was in force, and before the alleged trespass, a certain Rule of the Imperial Parliament, within the meaning of the said Order, was passed, and came into force as a Rule of the said Imperial Parliament, and continued to be in force at the time of the alleged trespass, which Rule is in the words following, that is to say:—

“That whenever any Member shall have been named by the Speaker, or by the Chairman of a Committee of the Whole House, immediately after the commission of the offence of disregarding the authority of the Chair, or of abusing the Rules of the House, by persistently and wilfully obstructing the business of the House or otherwise, then, if the offence has been committed by such Member in the House, the Speaker shall forthwith put the questions on a motion being made, no amendment, adjournment, or debate being allowed, ‘That such Member be suspended from the service of the House’; and if the offence has been committed in a Committee of the Whole House, the Chairman shall, on a motion being made, put the same question in a similar way, and if the motion is carried, shall forthwith suspend the proceedings of the Committee and report the circumstance to the House, and the Speaker shall thereupon put the same question without amendment, adjournment, or debate, as if the offence had been committed in the House itself. If any Member be suspended under this Order, his suspension on the first occasion shall continue for one week, on the second occasion for a fortnight, and on the third or any subsequent occasion for a month: Provided always that suspension from the service of the House shall not exempt the Member so suspended from serving on any Committee for the consideration of a Private Bill, to which he may have been appointed before his suspension: Provided also that not more than one Member shall be named at the same time, unless several Members present together have jointly disregarded the authority of the Chair: Provided always that nothing in this resolution shall be taken to deprive the House of the power of proceeding against any Member according to ancient usages.”

And the Defendant says that after the passing and coming into force of the said Rule of the said Imperial Parliament, the Plaintiff being present at a sitting of a Committee of the Whole of the said Assembly then engaged in the business of Parliament, that is to say, for the purpose of considering the Supply to be granted to Her Majesty, and being such Member of the said Assembly as aforesaid, committed the offence of abusing the Rules of the said Assembly, by persistently and wilfully obstructing the business of the said Assembly and of the said Committee, and immediately after the commission of the said offence the Plaintiff was named by the Chairman of the said Committee within the meaning of the said Rule, and forthwith a motion was duly made and was put by the said Chairman and carried by the said Committee, which motion so carried related to the Plaintiff and to the said offence, and was in the words following, that is to say:—

“That Mr. Adolphus George Taylor, having been named by the Chairman as having persistently and wilfully obstructed the business of the Committee, be suspended from the service of the House.”

And upon the carrying of the said motion the said Chairman forthwith suspended the proceedings of the said Committee, and reported the said offence, and the carrying of the said motion to the said Assembly in Parliament assembled, and thereupon the Defendant, as such Speaker as aforesaid, in accordance with the said Rule, put the following question to the said Assembly,—“That Mr. A. G. Taylor be suspended from the service of this House,” and the said question was carried in the affirmative and passed. And the Defendant says that the case so arising upon the said offence of the Plaintiff hereinbefore mentioned was a case not specially provided for in or by any of the other Standing Orders or Sessional or other Orders of the said Assembly within the meaning of the said first Standing Order; and the Defendant further says that within a period of one week after the passing of the said last-mentioned resolution, and during the same Session of Parliament, and while the said suspension still remained in force, the Plaintiff entered the said Legislative Assembly Chamber, while the said Assembly was sitting for the dispatch of the business of the Parliament at the said meeting in the first count mentioned, and claimed the right to sit and serve as such Member, and thereupon the Defendant as such Speaker as aforesaid requested the Plaintiff to withdraw from the said Chamber; which the Plaintiff then refused to do, whereupon the Defendant,

Defendant, acting under the authority of the said resolutions, and in order to enforce the same, directed the Sergeant-at-Arms of the said Assembly to remove the Plaintiff from the said Chamber; and the said Sergeant-at-Arms then gently laid his hand upon the Plaintiff and removed him from the said Chamber, using no more force than was necessary in that behalf, which is the alleged trespass.

JOINDER OF ISSUE AND DEMURRER.

Wednesday, the 17th day of September, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and eighty-four.

The Plaintiff, in person, joins issue on the Defendant's first plea herein. And the Plaintiff, in person, says, that as to the second plea herein pleaded the said plea is bad in substance.

On the argument of this demurrer, it will be contended that the said second plea is bad in substance, on the following amongst other grounds:—

1. That the Legislative Assembly acted unlawfully in passing the said resolution in the Defendant's second plea mentioned, and that the Defendant was not justified in carrying out the said resolution.
2. That the adoption of the said resolution in the said second plea mentioned by the said Legislative Assembly is no justification for the Defendant for the assault set out in the Plaintiff's declaration.

And the Plaintiff, in person, says that, as to the third plea herein pleaded, the said plea is bad in substance.

On the argument of this demurrer it will be contended that the said third plea is bad in substance, on the following amongst other grounds:—

1. That Standing Order No. 1 of the Legislative Assembly, in the Defendant's third plea mentioned, has not such a prospective operation as to adopt the Imperial Standing Orders in the Defendant's third plea mentioned, and that if the said Standing Order has such prospective operation, it is ultra vires with the Constitution Act.
2. That the said Imperial Standing Orders in the Defendant's said third plea mentioned and referred to are not adopted by the said Standing Order No. 1, and are not in force in this Colony.

A. G. TAYLOR,
Plaintiff, in person, Sydney.

JOINDER IN DEMURRER.

The nineteenth day of September, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and eighty-four.
The Defendant says that his second and third pleas are, and each of them is good in substance.

The Judgment of the Supreme Court.

The Chief Justice delivered the following Judgment of the Court:—

This is an action brought by a Member of the Legislative Assembly against the Speaker (1) for expelling him from the Chamber of that body during its sittings, on the 22nd of April last, and

(2) For preventing him from entering such Chamber on the 23rd of April, and being present at a meeting of the Assembly then being held.

To this declaration, so far as relates to the prevention of the Plaintiff from entering the Chamber on the 23rd of April, the Defendant has pleaded two pleas. In the first of these pleas it is alleged that the Plaintiff being present at a sitting in Committee of the whole House, and the Committee having considered certain conduct of his committed before it, the Committee passed a resolution relating to the Plaintiff and his conduct, to the effect that—

“Having

"Having been named by the Chairman as having persistently and wilfully obstructed the business of the Committee, he be suspended from the service of the House."

The plea then goes on to state that the Plaintiff's conduct and the said resolution were immediately reported to the House, which thereupon passed a resolution in reference to the Plaintiff and the premises, to the effect that the Plaintiff "be suspended from the service of the House."

The plea then further alleges that afterwards, and "while the suspension still remained in force," the Plaintiff entered the Chamber while the Assembly was sitting, and claimed the right to sit and serve as a Member, and being requested by the Speaker to withdraw he refused to do so, whereupon the Defendant, "acting under the authority of the said resolutions," directed the Sergeant-at-Arms to remove the Plaintiff from the Chamber, which was done with no unnecessary force.

In the second of these pleas it is alleged that at the time of the trespass complained of it was one of the Standing Orders of the Assembly that in all cases not specially provided for "resort shall be had to the Rules, forms, and usages of the Imperial Parliament, which shall be followed so far as the same can be applied to the proceedings of this House."

The plea then alleges that after the passing of this Order, and before the alleged trespass, the Imperial Parliament passed a Rule, which was in force at the time of the trespass, to the effect that—

"Whenever any Member shall have been named by the Speaker, or by the Chairman of a Committee of the Whole House, immediately after the commission of the offence of disregarding the authority of the Chair, or abusing the Rules of the House by persistently and wilfully obstructing the business of the House or otherwise,"

then he may be "suspended from the service of the House"; that such suspension "on the first occasion shall continue for one week, on the second occasion for a fortnight, and on the third or any subsequent occasion for a month."

The plea then goes on to allege that the Plaintiff "committed the offence of abusing the Rules of the said Assembly, by persistently and wilfully obstructing the business of the Assembly."

Whereupon the two resolutions set out in the former plea were adopted—the one in Committee and the other in the House itself.

It is then alleged that the case was not specially provided for, and that the Plaintiff entering the Chamber within a week after the passing of the resolution suspending him, and while the suspension remained in force was, on his refusal to withdraw, removed from the Chamber by the Sergeant-at-Arms, by the Defendant's orders.

Both these pleas were demurred to, the latter chiefly on the ground—

- (1.) That the Standing Order adopting the Rules of the Imperial Parliament had reference only to the Rules then existing, and not to future Rules; and
- (2.) On the further ground that it was not competent to the Legislative Assembly to pass a Standing Order adopting beforehand any Rule, form, or usage which the Imperial Parliament might subsequently adopt.

By the 35th section of Schedule 1 to the Act of Parliament 18 and 19 Vict., c 54, power was given to the Legislative Assembly in its first Session, and "from time to time afterwards," to prepare and adopt such Standing Rules and Orders as should appear best adapted for the purposes there enumerated, all of which "Rules and Orders shall be laid before the Governor, and being by him approved, shall become binding and of force." It was contended that under the express terms of this section, every Standing Order made by the Assembly, before it can become "binding and of force," must be laid before the Governor and be approved by him, and that it thence necessarily follows that Rules made by the Imperial Parliament after he had given his assent to the Standing Order authorizing resort to be had to the Rules of that Parliament, not having been laid before him, and not having been approved by him, can have no validity. We are clearly of that opinion. To hold otherwise would be yielding to the Imperial Parliament the power, in cases for which any local orders have not expressly provided, to prescribe Rules sanctioned neither by the Assembly nor the Governor. But this authority cannot be thus conceded without a direct violation of the 35th section already mentioned. By that section the Standing Orders of the Assembly must be adopted by the Assembly itself, and the Governor must approve them, to give them validity. This adoption cannot take place till the Rules are in existence to adopt, and the Governor's approval cannot be held to have been given to Rules not laid before him for his sanction. The Governor might undoubtedly approve as he did in globo of the adoption of such existing Imperial Parliamentary Rules and Orders as it was competent for the Assembly itself to pass, because of them he must be taken to have had cognizance; but of Rules and Orders not then made he could know nothing, and therefore could form no judgment of the propriety of applying them. If, therefore, the Standing Orders set out in the second plea to the removal of the Plaintiff on the 23rd of April, in terms professes to adopt Rules of the Imperial Parliament to be made thereafter, it is ultra vires and of no effect. But independently of this, and also of the question whether the Assembly itself has any power to pass such an Order, we are of opinion that the Order in question does not in terms apply to such future Rules of the Imperial Parliament, inasmuch as the direction to resort to the Rules, forms, and usages of the Imperial Parliament must be held to apply only to such Rules, forms, and usages as it was competent for the Assembly, with the Governor's approval, to assent to, as it must be intended that in framing the Rule in question, that only which could be lawfully done was the thing intended.

It follows from this, in our opinion, that this second plea is no answer to the declaration, as it is based upon Rules which had no validity so far as concerned the Legislative Assembly.

We come now to the first plea to the same trespass of the 23rd of April, which seeks to justify the action of the Defendant without reference to any special Rule, but apparently on the inherent right of the Assembly, as a legislative body, to exclude the Plaintiff as one of its Members in the manner complained of. The power of legislative bodies in the Colonies of the Empire to deal with obstructions and contempts has, on several occasions, formed the subject of discussion in the Privy Council, and the decisions of that tribunal have not at all times been consistent with each other. The Privy Council being, so far as the Colonies are concerned, their Court of Final Appeal in the same way as the House of Lords is the Court of Final Appeal from the Common Law Courts of the United Kingdom, it might reasonably be expected that its Judgments should on all occasions be uniform on any given question, no matter how often it might be submitted for decision. That this has not always been so we see by a reference to the cases of Beaumont v. Barrett, 1 Moore's P. C. A. 59, determined in 1836, and Keilly v. Carson, 4 Moore's P. C. A. 63, decided decided in 1842. In the former of those cases that able and experienced Judge Baron Parke, in delivering the opinion of the Privy Council, said (p. 76) :—

“It would appear, I think, to be inherent in every Assembly that possess a supreme legislative authority to have the power of punishing contempts, and not merely such as are a direct obstruction to its due course of proceedings, but such also as have a tendency, indirectly, to produce such an obstruction, in the same way as Courts of Record may not only remove or punish persons who actually are interrupting their functions, but may also repress those who indirectly impede the administration of justice by disparaging and weakening their authority.”

His Lordship then cited a passage from Lord Ellenborough's Judgment in Burdett v. Abbott, and said (p. 78) :—

“Now if we apply that principle to this legislative body, which appears to possess supreme legislative authority over the whole of the island and its dependencies, we must in like manner say that they have incidentally the power, not only of punishing direct impediments to their proceedings, but indirect obstructions such as are caused by libels reflecting on their conduct and tending to bring their authority into contempt, and that independently of any precedent for its exercise.”

In 1821 the power of the House of Representatives in the United States to bring before it and punish a person, not a Member, for a contempt, was upheld by the Supreme Court, then presided over by Chief Justice Marshall, who had Mr. Justice Storey as one of his associates. On that occasion the Judgment of the Court was delivered by Mr. Justice Johnson. The case is Anderson v. Dunn, reported in 6 Wheaton, 204. The language of this Judgment is slightly rhetorical; but it is, as might be expected from the eminence of the tribunal, a well-reasoned deliverance. At the outset the Court says that the pleadings had narrowed down the merits to the simple inquiry “whether the House of Representatives can take cognizance of contempts committed against themselves under any circumstances?”

In discussing this question, the Court made the following observations, which obviously have a wide and general application :—

“But if there is one maxim which necessarily rides over all others in the practical application of government, it is that the public functionaries must be left at liberty to exercise the powers which the people have entrusted to them. The interests and dignity of those who created them require the exertion of the powers indispensable to the ends of their creation.

That a deliberate Assembly, clothed with the majesty of the people, and charged with the care of all that is dear to them, composed of the most distinguished citizens, selected and drawn together from every quarter of a great nation, whose deliberations are required by public opinion to be conducted under the eyes of the public, and whose decisions must be clothed with all that sanctity which unlimited confidence in their wisdom and purity can inspire; that such an Assembly should not possess the power to suppress rudeness or repel insult is a supposition too wild to be suggested.

But it is argued that the inference, if any, arising under the constitution is against the exercise of the powers here asserted by the House of Representatives; that the express grant of power to punish their Members respectively and to expel them, by the application of a familiar maxim, raises an implication against the power to punish any other than their own Members. This argument proves too much, for its direct application would lead to the annihilation of almost every power of Congress.”

In reply to the suggestion that on this same foundation of necessity might be raised a superstructure of implied powers in the executive and every other department and even Ministerial officer of the Government, it would be sufficient to observe that neither analogy nor precedent would support the assertion of such powers in any other than a legislative or judicial body.

Even corruption anywhere else would not contaminate the sources of political life. In the retirement of the Cabinet it is not expected that the Executive can be approached by indignity or insult, nor can it ever be “necessary to the Executive or any other department to hold a public deliberative assembly. These are not arguments; they are visions which mar the enjoyment of actual blessings with the attack or feints of the harpies of imagination.” Thus it appears that those two high tribunals, the Supreme Court of the United States in 1821 and the Privy Council in 1836, held that a legislative body having supreme legislative authority had, from the necessity of the case, power to punish a person, not a Member, for a contempt committed elsewhere than in the presence of the legislative body itself. In Keilley v. Carson, however, the soundness of this view was called in question, six years after the decision of Beaumont v. Barrett.

This case was twice argued before the Privy Council, and no less than eleven Judges sat to hear it, including in their number the most eminent lawyers of that time. Baron Parke delivered the Judgment then, as he did on the previous case of Beaumont v. Barrett. “The whole question,” says his Lordship (p. 88), “then, is reduced to this—whether, by law, the power of committing for a contempt, not in the presence of the assembly, is incidental to every local legislature. The statute law on this subject being silent, the common law is to govern it; and what is the common law depends upon principle and precedent. Their Lordships see no reason to think that in the principle of the common law any other powers are given than such as are necessary to the existence of such a body and the proper exercise of the functions which it is intended to execute. These powers are granted by the very act of its establishment, an act which, on both sides it is admitted, it was competent for the Crown to perform. This is the principle which governs all legal incidents. ‘Quando lex aliquid concedit, concedere videtur et illud, sine quo res ipsa esse non potest.’ In conformity to this principle, we feel no doubt that such an assembly has the right of protecting itself from all impediments to the due course of its proceedings. To the full extent of every measure which it may be really necessary to adopt to secure the free exercise of their legislative functions, they are justified in acting by the principles of the common law; but the power of punishing any one for past misconduct, as a contempt of its authority, and adjudicating upon the fact of such contempt and the measure of punishment, as a judicial body irresponsible to the party accused, whatever the real facts may be, is of a very different character, and by no means essentially necessary for the exercise of its functions by a local legislature, whether representative or not. All these functions may be well performed without this extraordinary power, and with the aid of the ordinary tribunals to investigate and punish contemptuous insults and interruptions.” Their Lordships, having thus decided in clear opposition to the Judgment of Beaumont v. Barrett, go on to say, in express terms (p. 91), that they “do not consider that case as one by which they ought to be bound in deciding the present question." It will be observed that, in the case of Keilley v. Carson, the point decided was as to the power of a Colonial Assembly to punish for contempts committed by strangers not in its presence. "The question," their Lordships say (p. 84), "whether the House of Assembly could commit, by way of punishment, for a contempt on the face of it, does not arise in this case."

In Fenton v. Hampton, 11 Moore's, P.C.A. 347, decided in 1858, the same point arose as in Keilley v. Carson, and the Privy Council (p. 397) thought they were bound by that case, the greater authority of which, as compared with Beaumont v. Barrett, "it was quite unnecessary to enlarge upon." The right of a Colonial Assembly to punish for a contempt committed in its presence remained undetermined till 1866, when it arose for express decision in the case of Doyle v. Falconer, L.R. 1 P.C.A. 328. There a Member of the House of Assembly of Dominica, being called to order by the Speaker, said: "Who the devil are you to call me to order?" "You are a disgrace to the House." The Member refusing to apologize when called upon, and using further insulting language to the Speaker, as that he was "expelled the House for robbery," he was thereupon "committed to the common goal during the pleasure of the House." The Member so imprisoned brought his action, and a plea setting forth the facts having been overruled on demurrer, he recovered damages for the imprisonment. The Defendants appealed to the Privy Council against the decision overriding the demurrer.

In giving Judgment, their Lordships said that one of the questions to be decided was whether the House of Assembly had authority "to commit and punish for contempts committed, and for interruptions and obstructions given to the business of the said House of Assembly by its Members or others in its presence, and during its sittings."

The point thus specially raised, and not up to that time determined, is at length decided as follows:—"Is," say their Lordships (p. 340), "the power to punish and commit for contempts committed in its presence, one necessary to the existence of such a body as the Assembly of Dominica, and the proper exercise of the functions which it is intended to execute? It is necessary to distinguish between a power to punish for a contempt, which is a judicial power, and a power to remove any obstruction offered to the deliberations or proper action of a legislative body during its sittings, which last power is necessary for self-preservation. If a Member of a Colonial House of Assembly is guilty of disorderly conduct in the House whilst sitting, he may be removed or excluded for a time, or even expelled; but there is a great difference between such powers and the judicial power of inflicting a penal sentence for the offence. The right to remove for self-security is one thing, the right to inflict punishment is another. The former is, in their Lordships' judgment, all that is warranted by the legal maxim that has been cited, but the latter is not its legitimate consequence. To the question, therefore, on which this case depends, their Lordships must answer in the negative. If the good sense and conduct of the Members of Colonial Legislature prove, as in the present case, insufficient to secure order and decency in debate, the law would sustain the use of that degree of force which might be necessary to remove the person offending from the place of meeting, and to keep him excluded. The same rule would apply, a fortiori, to obstructions caused by a person not a Member. And whenever the violation of order amounts to a breach of the peace or other legal offence, recourse may be had to the ordinary tribunals." In the paragraph of the Judgment here cited, we have it authoritatively decided how far by the common law the power of a Colonial Assembly extends in dealing with contempt and interruptions to their proceedings. They cannot in any case punish—they can only remove the offender; and, if a Member, they have the power to exclude him for a time, or even, as their Lordships hold, to expel him; in which last case, however, the constituency might at once proceed to a new election, which they could not do in the case of a suspension. In the case of a stranger who has no right without permission to be present, they may exclude him altogether; but in the case of a Member who, not having been formally expelled, has a right to be present, while not obstructing the proceedings, they can exclude him as long only as the necessity exists for his exclusion by reason of such obstruction. The duration of such exclusion must be determined on each separate occasion when the necessity for it arises. It would be absurd to limit it to the mere time occupied in the offending Member's removal, so as to admit of his return to the Chamber immediately afterwards.

It would be equally absurd to hold that he might be indefinitely excluded. The only reasonable view to take of this power of exclusion is to limit it to the actual sitting during which the necessity for its exercise arose. When a Member, while the House is sitting, insults the Speaker, as in the Dominica case, and persists in so insulting him, his removal is obviously a proper and necessary thing to enable the business to proceed, and there can be no right in the Member so misconducting himself and so removed to come back immediately after on making a promise to discontinue his obstructive conduct. The House cannot reasonably be expected on such a promise being given to allow the offender to return, with the possibility of the same misconduct being repeated, and the like order for exclusion being again rendered necessary. Such a proceeding would partake too much of the character of burlesque to be laid down as the rule in such cases.

If the House, having removed one of its Members for obstructing its proceedings, thinks fit, on being satisfied that there is no further likelihood of his continuing his misconduct, to re-admit him immediately after, they will of course do so, but during that sitting they need not further concern themselves about his re-admission. At the next or any subsequent sitting the excluded Member must, if he has not been formally expelled, have the right to resume his place in Parliament, unless he is then again guilty of obstructive conduct, or presents himself in a condition such as to render his presence itself an obstruction. The right to exclude "for a time," which the Privy Council has declared to be the law, cannot in reason be extended beyond the sitting when its exercise is called for. It is a right to be exercised for one sitting only, for the plain reason that, until the contrary appears, a longer exclusion is unnecessary. In the present case the plea alleges the Plaintiff's "suspension from the service of the House" by a resolution of the Assembly, and it then goes on to say:—"That afterwards during the same Session of Parliament, and while the said suspension still remained in force, the Plaintiff entered the said Legislative Assembly Chamber, while the said Assembly was sitting for the despatch of the business of Parliament, at the said meeting in the said first count mentioned, and claimed the right to sit and serve as such Member; and thereupon the Defendant, as such Speaker as aforesaid, requested the Plaintiff to withdraw from the said Chamber, which the Plaintiff then refused to do; whereupon the Defendant, acting under the authority of the said resolutions, and in order to enforce the same, directed the Sergeant-at-Arms of the said Assembly to remove the Plaintiff from the said Chamber."

There is no statement, in this plea, of any time having been fixed by the House for the continuance of the Plaintiff's suspension; but that some time or other was in the contemplation of the House must be inferred inferred from the allegation that the Plaintiff entered the Chamber, "while the said suspension still remained in force." In this plea a right is therefore set up in the Assembly to suspend a Member for some time, definite or indefinite, quite apart from the question of obstructive conduct actually existing. It is impossible to distinguish this alleged right to suspend from a right to punish or coerce, even after the obstruction is over and is no longer apprehended, and that is precisely a right which the Privy Council has declared that Colonial Assemblies do not possess. If the plea had alleged that the Plaintiff had obstructed the proceedings of the House, and that having for such obstruction been removed he returned to the Chamber without the permission of the House during that same sitting, the case would have been different, and the justification would have been complete. But it cannot be held that a Member of the Legislative Assembly can be "suspended" at its pleasure for misconduct of any kind. He may be expelled if sufficient grounds exist to warrant the House in taking that extreme course, and of such sufficiency the House itself must of necessity be the sole judge. But in the absence of any resolution formally expelling a Member, he cannot be "suspended," although he may be removed to enable the business of any given sitting to go on, and he may for that purpose be kept excluded during that sitting which he has so interrupted and obstructed. From what we have already said, it will be gathered that in our opinion the Assembly has neither the power to adopt from the Imperial Parliament nor to pass of its own authority any Standing Order giving itself the power to punish an obstructing Member or remove him from the Chamber for any period longer than the sitting during which the obstruction occurred. Whether the Assembly ought to possess the powers claimed is a question for the consideration of the Legislature. This Court can only declare the law as it finds it laid down by authority which they must respect; and in obedience to that law we must on these Demurrers give Judgment for the Plaintiff.

The Shorthand Writer's Notes of the Arguments before the Privy Council.

In the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, Whitehall, Westminster, Saturday, 20th February, 1886.

Present :—

LORD SELBORNE,
LORD BLACKBURN,
LORD MONKSWELL,
LORD HOBHOUSE,
SIR RICHARD COUCH.

The Honorable Edmund Barton, Appellant, and Adolphus George Taylor, Respondent, on appeal from the Supreme Court of New South Wales.

The Solicitor-General (Sir Horace Davey, Q.C.), Mr. J. Rigby, Q.C., and Mr. J. Dennistoun Wood, appeared for the Appellant, instructed by Messrs. Mackrell, Maton, and Godlee. Mr. Adolphus George Taylor, the Respondent, appeared in person.

The Solicitor-General: My Lords, this is an appeal from a Judgment of the Supreme Court of New South Wales, given on the 9th December, 1884, ordering Judgment to be entered for the Respondent, the Plaintiff in the action, on his demurrers to the pleas pleaded by the Appellant.

The action, my Lords, was brought by the Respondent against the Appellant for a trespass to the person. The Respondent was a Member of the Legislative Assembly of New South Wales, and the Appellant was the Speaker of that Assembly, and the alleged trespass consisted in the removal of the Respondent from the Chamber of the Legislative Assembly by the Sergeant-of-Arms at the House, acting under an Order of the Speaker, the Speaker acting in pursuance of a Resolution of the House of Assembly itself.

My Lords, the whole of the case is contained in the declaration in the action and in the pleas. As it came on on demurrer, of course we cannot look at anything beyond that; but I will first mention to your Lordships, in order to put you in possession of the basis of my argument, that the 35th section of the Imperial Act of 18 and 19 Victoria, chapter 45, which is known as the Constitution Act of the Colony, is as follows:—It is set out in paragraph 3 of the Appellant's case—"The said Legislative Council and Assembly in the first Session of each respectively and from time to time afterwards as there may be occasion shall prepare and adopt such Standing Rules and Orders as shall appear to the said Council and Assembly respectively best adapted for the ordinary conduct of such Council and Assembly respectively and for the manner in which such Council and Assembly shall be presided over in case of the President or the Speaker and for the mode in which such Council and Assembly shall confer correspond and communicate with each other relative to votes or Bills passed by or pending in such Council and Assembly respectively and for the manner in which notices of bills resolutions and other business intended to be submitted to such Council and Assembly respectively at any Session thereof may be published for general information and for the proper passing entitling and numbering of the Bills to be introduced into and passed by the said Council and Assembly and for the proper presentation of the same to the Governor for the time being for Her Majesty's Assent all of which Rules and Orders shall by such Council and Assembly respectively be laid before the Governor and being by him approved shall become binding and of force."

Then, my Lords, the case states that "In pursuance of the power conferred on it by the said 35th section, the Legislative Assembly prepared and adopted certain Standing Rules or Orders for the orderly conduct of such Assembly, which were by such Assembly laid before the Governor, and were by him approved." The first of such Standing Orders is as follows:—"In all cases not specifically provided for hereinafter, or by Sessional or other Orders, resort shall be had to the Rules, forms, and usages of the Imperial Parliament, which shall be followed so far as the same can be applied to the proceedings of this House."

Now, my Lords, with your Lordships' permission I will come at once to the declaration and the pleas which are at the first page of the record of the proceedings. The declaration was in the following terms:—"Adolphus George Taylor, in person, sues Edmund Barton, Speaker of the Legislative Assembly of New South Wales, for that at Sydney, in the Colony aforesaid, on the 22nd day of April, in the year of our Lord 1884, the said Edmund Barton assaulted the said Adolphus George Taylor, he the said Adolphus George Taylor

Taylor being at the time a Member of the Legislative Assembly of New South Wales, and one of the three Members returned by the Electoral District of Mudgee, in the Colony aforesaid, under and by virtue of the Act 44 Victoria number 13, and being then in the Legislative Assembly Chamber, and about to consult, treat, deliberate, and give his vote in a meeting of the Members then and there assembled to consult, treat, deliberate, and vote, and then pushed, shoved, and expelled, or caused to be pushed, shoved, and expelled the said Adolphus George Taylor out of the said Legislative Assembly Chamber, and hindered and prevented him the said Adolphus George Taylor from remaining in and attending and being present at the said meeting. And afterwards, to wit, on the 23rd day of April in the year of our Lord 1884 prevented the said Adolphus George Taylor from entering and remaining in the said Chamber as aforesaid, whereby the said Adolphus George Taylor was totally hindered, prevented, and excluded from remaining in and attending and being present at the said meeting of the Legislative Assembly, and at a subsequent meeting of the Legislative Assembly, to wit, on the 23rd day of April, in the year of our Lord 1884, both held in the Legislative Assembly Chamber aforesaid, to the damage, detriment, and loss of the said Adolphus George Taylor."

Now, my Lords, the pleas were these—The first plea was "not guilty," and the question for your Lordships' decision turns on the second and third pleas.

"And for a second plea, the Defendant, as to so much of the declarations as complains of a trespass alleged to have been committed upon the 23rd day of April, in the year of our Lord 1884, says, that before the alleged trespass the said Legislative Assembly had been sitting in a Committee of the Whole House, for and in the despatch of the business of Parliament, that is to say, for the purpose of considering the Supply to be granted to Her Majesty, and the Plaintiff, as such Member of the said Legislative Assembly, was then and there present; and the said Committee of the Whole House having considered certain conduct of the Plaintiff, then committed before the said Committee, passed a certain resolution relating to the Plaintiff and to the said conduct, which said resolution was in the words following, that is to say:—'That Mr. Adolphus George Taylor, having been named by the Chairman as having persistently and wilfully obstructed the business of the Committee, be suspended from the service of the House.' And the Defendant says that the said conduct of the plaintiff and the said resolution were immediately reported to and brought under the notice of the said Assembly by the Chairman of the said Committee, and thereupon the said Assembly, in Parliament assembled, passed a resolution relating to the Plaintiff and to the premises, in the words following, that is to say:—'That Mr. A. G. Taylor be suspended from the service of the House.' And afterwards, during the same Session of Parliament, and while the said suspension remained in force"—I ask your Lordships' attention to these words—"The Plaintiff entered the said Legislative Assembly Chamber while the said Assembly was sitting for the despatch of the business of Parliament, at the said meeting in the first count mentioned, and claimed the right to sit and serve as such Member; and thereupon the Defendant, as such Speaker as aforesaid, requested the Plaintiff to withdraw from the said Chamber, which the Plaintiff then refused to do, whereupon, the Defendant, acting under the authority of the said resolutions and in order to enforce the same, directed the Sergeant-at-Arms of the said Assembly to remove the Plaintiff from the said Chamber; and the said Sergeant-at-Arms then gently laid his hand upon the Plaintiff and removed him from the said Chamber, using no more force than was necessary in that behalf, which is the alleged trespass."

Therefore your Lordships see that the plea raises the question as to the validity of that resolution, quite apart from any allegation that it was in accordance with the usage and practice of the Imperial House of Parliament.

Lord Selborne: You have directed our attention to the words "and while the said suspension still remained in force." Must we not take it that there was no other resolution passed except that which is pleaded?

The Solicitor-General: Yes, my Lord. On that plea your Lordships have the resolution that he was suspended from the service of the House, without saying during what period.

Lord Selborne: And without saying on what date that resolution was passed?

The Solicitor-General: That is so, my Lord.

Lord Selborne: We cannot here assume in your favour that the resolution was passed on the same 23rd of April on which the alleged trespass was committed, can we?

The Solicitor-General: No, my Lords; but my contention will be that the resolution is a resolution that Mr. Taylor be suspended from the service of the House during the pleasure of the House, or until further order.

Lord Selborne: That is not pleaded, but of course that is one of the points we shall have to consider.

The Solicitor-General: The plea alleged that the said suspension still remained in force, and on the demurrer to that plea the facts are stated.

Lord Blackburn: And if it is an allegation of fact, would not it be essential to make the plea good that there should be something more than this? That is one point.

The Solicitor-General: I do not know that that particular point is raised in the Judgment. The point raised by the Judgment on this plea is this—that the true effect of that resolution, and the only effect which it was competent to the House to give it, was that he be suspended from the service of the House during that particular sitting.

Lord Selborne: That occurred to me. As I understand the construction of the resolution, it assumes the resolution to be ultra vires, in the absence of any time being mentioned.

The Solicitor-General: That may be a question which your Lordships will have to consider. My contention will be that no time being named during which the suspension was to remain in force, it was a suspension during the pleasure of the House or until further order.

Lord Hobhouse: This plea is pleaded only to the assault of the 23rd of April?

The Solicitor-General: Yes, my Lord.

Lord Hobhouse: Why is that?

Lord Monkswell: The alleged trespass was committed on the 22nd of April, and also when the Respondent came again the next day, the 23rd of April, that is stated in the Declaration.

The Solicitor-General: I cannot quite understand why the plea was put in this form, but it comes before your Lordship on a demurrer to this plea, leaving the rest of the action of course to be determined at the trial of the action under the plea of "Not guilty." But this plea applies only to the terms under which on the 23rd of April the Respondent Taylor was removed.

Lord Hobhouse: When he was expelled?

The

The Solicitor-General : No, not exactly expelled my Lord ; that is to say, he was removed by the Sergeant-at-Arms, acting under the authority of the Speaker, as being at the time validly suspended from the service of the House.

Lord Blackburn : I suppose you hardly dispute that, unless there is an authority to justify it, the Sergeant-at-Arms removing the plaintiff from the House, committing no more damage than possible, would be an assault ?

The Solicitor-General : This plea in fact raises a justification—it justifies removing the Respondent from the service of the House ; by these pleas, as far as I can see, the Speaker was properly sued subject to the justification, and the only question on this plea is justification.

Lord Selborne : The question which one of their Lordships asked just now seems to be an important one. The Declaration alleges two assaults, one on the 22nd of April and the other on the 23rd of April, and the plea seems to be directed entirely to the assault of the 23rd of April ?

The Solicitor-General : That is so ; the defence to the assault on the 22nd could only be a defence on the merits and governed by the plea of “ not guilty.”

Lord Monkswell : Do I understand the judgment to proceed on the second expulsion ?

The Solicitor-General : Yes, that is the only demurrer to the plea. Neither the Respondent nor we can go beyond this justification as to the assault of the 23rd of April ?

Lord Blackburn : I do not know exactly how it is, but I suppose the plea must be said to confine it to so much of the Declaration as applies to the alleged trespass ; the others were left to be covered by the plea of “ not guilty,” I suppose ?

The Solicitor-General : Yes, my Lord.

Now the third plea raises a different point, that is this—“And for a third plea, the Defendant, as to so much of the Declaration as complains of a trespass alleged to have been committed upon the 23rd day of April, in the year of our Lord 1884, says that before and at the time of the alleged trespass, one of the Standing Orders of the said Legislative Assembly, being the first of the said Orders regulating the practice and conduct of business of the said Assembly, was in the words following, that is to say—‘ In all cases not specially provided for hereinafter or by Sessional or other Orders, resort shall be had to the Rules, forms, and usages of the Imperial Parliament, which shall be followed so far as the same can be applied to the proceedings of this House.’ And after passing of the said Order, and while the same was in force, and before the alleged trespass, a certain Rule of the Imperial Parliament within the meaning of the said Order, was passed and came into force as a Rule of the said Imperial Parliament, and continued to be in force at the time of the alleged trespass, which Rule is in the words following, that is to say—‘ That whenever any Member shall have been named by the Speaker or by the Chairman of a Committee of the Whole House, immediately after the commission of the offence of disregarding the authority of the Chair, or of abusing the Rules of the House, by persistently and wilfully obstructing the business of the House or otherwise, then, if the offence has been committed by such Member in the House, the Speaker shall forthwith put the question on a motion being made, no amendment, adjournment, or debate being allowed—‘ That such Member be suspended from the service of the House’ ; and if the offence has been committed in a Committee of the Whole House, the Chairman shall, on a motion being made, put the same question in a similar way, and if the motion is carried shall forthwith suspend the proceedings of the Committee and report the circumstance to the House ; and the Speaker shall thereupon put the same question without amendment, adjournment, or debate, as if the offence had been committed in the House itself. If any Member be suspended under this Order, his suspension on the first occasion shall continue for one week, on the second occasion for a fortnight, and on the third or any subsequent occasion, for a month : Provided always that suspension from the service of the House shall not exempt the Member so suspended from serving on any Committee for the consideration of a private Bill, to which he may have been appointed before his suspension : Provided also that not more than one Member shall be named at the same time, unless several Members present together have jointly disregarded the authority of the Chair : Provided always that nothing in this resolution shall deprive the House of the power of proceeding against any Member according to ancient usages. And the defendant says that after the passing and coming into force of the said Rule of the said Imperial Parliament, the Plaintiff being present at a sitting of the Committee of the Whole of the said Assembly then engaged in the business of Parliament, that is to say, for the purpose of considering the Supply to be granted to Her Majesty, and being such a Member of the said Assembly as aforesaid, committed the offence of abusing the Rules of the said Assembly by persistently and wilfully obstructing the business of the said Assembly and of the said Committee, and immediately after the commission of the said offence the Plaintiff was named by the Chairman of the said Committee, within the meaning of the said Rule, and forthwith a motion was duly made, and was put by the said Chairman and carried by the said Committee, which motion so carried related to the Plaintiff and to the said offence, and was in the words following, that is to say—‘ That Adolphus George Taylor having been named by the Chairman as having persistently and wilfully obstructed the business of the Committee, be suspended from the service of the House’ ; and upon the carrying of the said motion the said Chairman forthwith suspended the proceedings of the said Committee, and reported the said offence, and the carrying of the said motion to the said Assembly in Parliament assembled ; and thereupon the Defendant, as such Speaker as aforesaid, in accordance with the said rule, put the following question to the said Assembly :—‘ That Mr. A. G. Taylor be suspended from the service of this House’ ; and the said question was carried in the affirmative, and passed ; and the Defendant says that the case so arising upon the said offence of the Plaintiff hereinbefore mentioned was a case not specially provided for in or by any of the other Standing Orders or Sessional or other Orders of the said Assembly within the meaning of the said first Standing Order ; and the Defendant further says that within a period of one week after the passing of the said last-mentioned resolution, and during the same Session of Parliament, and while the said suspension still remained in force, the Plaintiff entered the said Legislative Assembly Chamber while the said Assembly was sitting for the despatch of the business of the Parliament at the said meeting in the first count mentioned, and claimed the right to sit and serve as such Member ; and thereupon the Defendant as such Speaker as aforesaid requested the Plaintiff to withdraw from the said Chamber, which the Plaintiff then refused to do ; whereupon the Defendant, acting under the authority of the said resolutions, and in order to enforce the same, directed the Sergeant-at-Arms of the said Assembly to remove the Plaintiff from the said Chamber, using no more force than was necessary in that behalf, which is the alleged trespass.”

Then

Then the Plaintiff in person joins issue on the Defendant's first plea of "not guilty," and as to the second plea he pleads that it is bad in substance. "On the assignment of this demurrer it will be contended that the said second plea is bad in substance, on the following amongst other grounds:—(1) That the Legislative Assembly acted unlawfully in passing the said resolution in the Defendant's second plea mentioned, and that the Defendant was not justified in carrying out the said resolution." That raises the question whether the resolution was or was not ultra vires. "(2ndly) That the adoption of the said resolution in the said second plea mentioned by the Legislative Assembly is no justification for the Defendant for the assault set out in the Plaintiff's declaration. And the Plaintiff in person says that, as to the third plea herein pleaded, the said plea is bad in substance. On the argument of this demurrer it will be contended that the said third plea is bad in substance, on the following amongst other grounds:—(1) That Standing Order No. 1 of the Legislative Assembly in the Defendant's third plea mentioned has not such a prospective operation as to adopt the Imperial Standing Orders in the Defendant's third plea mentioned, and that if the Standing Order has such prospective operation it is ultra vires with the Constitution Act. (2) That the Imperial Standing Orders in the defendant's said third plea mentioned and referred to are not adopted by the said Standing Order No. 1, and are not in force in this Colony."

Now, my Lords, the third plea raises this question: The rule of the Imperial Parliament upon which the House and the Speaker, acting under the resolution of the House, purported to act and did act was passed after the date of the Standing Order of the Legislative Assembly. Two questions are raised as to that: Whether, according to the true construction of the first Standing Order to which your Lordships' attention has been directed, it intended to adopt the rules, forms, and usages of the Imperial Parliament for the time being when the question arose, or whether it should, according to its true construction, be held to mean only the Rules, forms, and usages of the Imperial Parliament in existence at the date when the Standing Order was adopted by the Legislative Assembly and approved by the Government.

The second question is this: Supposing that the construction be that which we contend for, namely, that it adopts the Rules, forms, and usages of the Imperial Parliament for the time being, and resort has to be had to the Rules, forms, and usages of the Imperial Parliament which are in existence at the date when the resolution was added to them, whether that was within the powers conferred on a Legislative Assembly by the 35th section of the first Schedule of the Constitution Act.

Now, with your Lordships' permission, I will argue the third plea first.

Lord Selborne: You seriously contend that the subsequent General Orders of the Imperial Parliament both could be and were introduced by that?

The Solicitor-General: That is my contention, my Lord. It does not appear to be a sound contention to your Lordships.

Lord Selborne: It cannot possibly have been foreseen that the Imperial Parliament would ever pass these subsequent resolutions?

The Solicitor-General: No; but it may have been the intention of the Legislative Assembly (they having confidence in the wisdom, discretion, and judgment of the Imperial Parliament) to assimilate their procedure to the procedure which was in vogue or adopted by the Imperial Parliament for the time being, and say: "We cannot foresee many cases which may arise, and we do not intend to provide for every case which may arise in our own Standing Orders; and if there be any case which is not foreseen, and as to which no express Standing Order has been passed by us, then we will follow the practice for the time being adopted and in use by the Imperial Parliament." One does not see at first sight anything inconsistent with good sense in the first place in such a resolution as to such a Standing Order.

Lord Blackburn: Something will depend upon the proper construction of the Imperial Statute under which this Legislative Assembly have its powers. I think that since the Newfoundland case—I forget the name of it for the moment—it has been considered that the Legislative Assembly of the Colony is not a House of Commons having prescriptive rights, but such powers as are created?

The Solicitor-General: It has such powers as are inherent.

Lord Selborne: It may be important to consider whether on the true construction of the Statute the Legislative Assembly has created powers, or whether it has powers of an ancient Parliament.

The Solicitor-General: These powers seem to me to arise on the second point—whether, if the construction of the Standing Order be such as the Appellant contends for, it is an order that was or was not within the powers conferred by the 35th section.

Lord Selborne: If the Order is capable of a construction which will make it intra vires and not ultra vires, that construction is to be preferred.

The Solicitor-General: No doubt the two questions have some bearing on each other.

Lord Selborne: The question of construction and authority have some bearing on each other.

The Solicitor-General: I do not at all dissent from that. Now, my Lords, in the first place one must have regard to what was the purpose and intent of this Standing Order, and the nature of the Assembly by which it was adopted. Of course, the Legislative Assembly of New South Wales is supreme and sovereign within its competence. The ambit of its jurisdiction may be confined to within that ambit, and has been held in more than one case before your Lordship's Board, a Legislative Assembly is a sovereign Legislative Assembly.

Lord Monkswell: It has plenary powers.

The Solicitor-General: Yes, as to Standing Orders and laying down rules for its own guidance and its own jurisdiction; and I venture to submit that a Standing Order of this kind is to be construed not like a special plea, but it is to be construed literally, so as to effectuate what may be assumed to be the intention of the sovereign Legislature which adopts these as its Standing Orders.

Now, your Lordships will observe that there are no words which in terms confine it to the Rules, forms, and usages of the Imperial Parliament then in use, and the object was to adopt an elastic code of procedure which was to meet special cases as they arose, and which were not specially provided for by the Standing Orders, that is to say by Sessional or other Orders. Extraordinary cases and special cases arise in the Imperial Parliament, and have to be dealt with by Standing Orders or by rulings of the Speaker in the Imperial Parliament. In the same way it was contemplated, and it may be conceived to have been contemplated, that special cases would or might arise in the Colonial Parliament; and the Colonial Legislature determined that, if and whenever these special cases which were not specially provided for did arise, resort should should be had to the mode in which they are dealt with by the Imperial Parliament. If that be not the construction, then if any special cases arise which had not at the date of this Standing Order been provided for by the precedent then in force at the date of the Standing Order of the Imperial Parliament, there would be no procedure applicable to the case.

My Lords, let me take another construction which appears to me to be of some weight. I suppose that if the ruling of the Speaker in the Imperial Parliament could be cited in any particular case which arose in the Imperial Parliament as the ruling of the Speaker in this Colonial Parliament which has adapted and adopted as part of the Rules of the House the forms and usages of the Imperial Parliament, the Speaker of the Imperial Parliament gives his decision on any case which arises before him as to what he supposes to be the law of Parliament at that time, and as it is not usual to give the grounds or the reasons upon which his ruling is given, supposing the ruling of the Speaker of the Imperial Parliament were quoted in support of the ruling of the Speaker of the Colonial Parliament, you would have in each case to embark on an almost impossible inquiry to ascertain whether and how far the ruling of the Speaker of the Imperial Parliament had been based on the Rules, forms, and usages existing at the date of the Standing Order or on some which had been subsequently passed. It is difficult to conceive how such an inquiry could be satisfactorily taken, and it is also difficult to conceive, if the Rules, forms, and usages of the Imperial Parliament in construing this Standing Order, be held to be the Rules, forms, and usages in existence at the date of the Standing Order, how the Standing Order should be properly worked. Of course the authoritative evidence of what was the usage of the Imperial Parliament would be found in the ruling of the Speaker of the Imperial Parliament, and then, if the contention on the other side which has been upheld by the Judges be correct, you would have to inquire whether the ruling was based on some usage which was in existence at the date of the Standing Order, or on some usage which had been subsequently adopted. It might be partly one and it might be partly the other, and the difficulty of working a system of that kind would be almost insuperable.

Lord Selborne: It only arises in cases of a specially peculiar kind, because obviously a general provision is made for ordinary cases.

The Solicitor-General: Special cases have of course to be foreseen and met with; new forms of disorderly conduct arise or may arise from time to time. Such things are not unknown in the Imperial Parliament, and possibly are not unknown in the Colonial Legislature. They have to be dealt with by the ruling of the Speaker at the time. I will take this case—I can only put it hypothetically—Suppose that a Member of the Legislative Assembly of New South Wales was, in the opinion of the Committee, and afterwards of the Whole House, guilty of wilfully obstructing a debate on the Estimates from 8 o'clock in the evening until 6 o'clock the next morning, how are you to deal with a case of that kind? The Chairman of the Committee and the Speaker would first see whether it was dealt with by the Standing Orders, and finding it was not specially dealt with by the Standing Orders, he would have to resort to the Rules, forms, and usages of the Imperial Parliament; but still it is possible he might refer to some ruling of a Speaker of the Imperial Parliament—say, Sir Henry Brand—and then it would be a difficult and an almost impossible inquiry which would have to be embarked on, namely, whether and how far the ruling of the Speaker was based on a usage in existence at the date of the Standing Order, or on some rule which had been subsequently adopted. It might be partly one and partly the other, and if one looks at the matter with which they were dealing and at the purpose for which the rule was passed, I venture to submit to your Lordships that the construction which we contend for would be more apt and more fitted to carry out the intentions of the persons and the Assembly which passed this Standing Order rather than that which gave it a narrower construction, and confined it to the Rules, forms, and usages in existence at the time.

My Lords, I quite feel that this is not capable of any great expansion of argument. It is a question of the meaning of these words, having regard to the subject matter and to the purpose for which these Standing Orders were passed, namely, for the purpose of regulating and of preserving order, and regulating the proceedings in the Assembly. The intention and purpose would be, I submit, more in accordance with the wider construction than with the narrower, although I quite admit that the Standing Order does not touch the Rules, forms, and usages of the time being; but, on the other hand, it does not in terms confine it to the Rules, forms, and usages of the Imperial Parliament actually in existence at the date of the Standing Order.

Lord Selborne: Your construction of course would go very much beyond the case contended for, namely, disturbance by obstruction; it would apply to the whole conduct of the business.

The Solicitor-General: So far as I know, that would be regulated by the Standing Orders.

Lord Selborne: Take as an illustration the system of a Grand Committee. That would be brought in, I suppose, unless there were something in the Standing Orders inconsistent with it?

The Solicitor-General: Yes, I suppose that would be so.

Lord Selborne: Many things might be dealt with by Standing Orders with regard to the conduct of Parliamentary business in this country which are very unsuitable, it may be, to the circumstances of a Colony.

The Solicitor-General: The answer to that argument, with respect, seems to me to be this, that if there was a new form and usage adopted by the Imperial Parliament which was, in the opinion of the Assembly, unsuitable to their proceedings, it would be perfectly competent to them to pass a new Standing Order, that so much of the new Rules of the Imperial Parliament as they considered to be unsuitable should not form part of their code of procedure.

Lord Selborne: They, and the Governor?

The Solicitor-General: Yes, my Lord, they, with the consent of the Governor. Now, my Lords, I quite agree that my argument would be, as Lord Selborne has suggested, subject of course always to these words, "so far as the same can be applied to the proceedings of this House." Now, my Lords, it is suggested that if this Standing Order bears the construction which I put on it, it is beyond the powers which were confided to the Assembly, with the consent of the Governor, by the Act. It is not, as I understand it, denied that if it be confined to the Rules, forms, and usages of the Imperial Parliament in existence at the date of the Standing Order, that there would be nothing beyond the powers of the Assembly, with the consent of the Governor, in adopting those Rules, forms, and usages in globo, without enumeration; and indeed such an argument could not be impressed on your Lordships, because that point was decided in the case of Dill v. Murphy. In the case of Dill v. Murphy this particular question did not arise.

Lord Blackburn: Where is Dill and Murphy reported?

The

The Solicitor-General: In 1 Moore's Reports, New Series, page 487. There the Legislative Assembly was empowered to define the privileges, immunities, and powers to be held, enjoyed, and exercised by the Council and Assembly; and it was provided that no such privileges, immunities, or powers should exceed those then held and enjoyed by the Commons House of Parliament, or the Members thereof. Then it was enacted that the Legislative Council and Legislative Assembly of Victoria respectively and the Committees and Members thereof respectively, should hold, enjoy, and exercise such and the like privileges, immunities, and powers as at the time of the passing of the Imperial Act 18th and 19th Victoria, chapter 55, were held, enjoyed, and exercised by the Commons House of Parliament of Great Britain and Ireland, and by the Committee, as far as the same are not inconsistent with the Constitution Act; so that this very question as to the prospective character could not arise in that case, because they were in terms confined to the privileges, immunities, and powers enjoyed at the time of the passing of the Act.

Lord Selborne: Which was an Act of Parliament under which power was given to it similar to this case.

The Solicitor-General: That is so, my Lord. It was provided that no such privileges should exceed those then held and enjoyed. The words were, "No such powers shall exceed those now enjoyed by the Commons House of Parliament."

Now, my Lords, Lord Cranworth, in delivering the judgment of the House, says this:—"In this case no principle similar to the former cases is involved. The question solely turns upon the true construction and interpretation of the word 'define,' used in the 35th section of the Colonial Act. There can be little doubt on this ground. The attempt of the appellant to interpretate and give it the meaning of 'enumerate' is absurd and plainly untenable. The word 'define,' in the opinion of their Lordships, is equivalent to the word 'declare.' It has been also urged that when the Colonial Legislature was required to define its privileges, it was bound to specify one by one the privileges it decided upon claiming, but it would be impossible, and could not be intended, that it was to go by an exhaustive process through the whole series of Parliamentary immunities and privileges. The Colonial Parliament have clearly defined the privileges claimed and could not have done so in any way more convenient. But it has been said, that it was not to the benefit of the colonists if they were thereby forced to refer to the law of a foreign country in order to ascertain the law under which they were placed. This use of the term 'foreign,' as applied to England, was, to say the least, a very extraordinary one. It is, no doubt, true that the lex et consuetudo Parliamenti did not apply as part of the Common Law, in the Colony of Victoria; but certainly in no sense could the law regarding the British Parliament be called 'Foreign Law' in the Colony, or England be said to stand to it in the relation of a foreign country." So that the only question is whether, if the Standing Order bears the larger construction which I have asked your Lordships to put upon it, that would be inconsistent with, or anything beyond the powers which, by section 35 of the first Schedule of the Constitution Act, are vested in the Council and Assembly respectively with the consent of the Governor.

Now, of course it is important to observe that the Council and Assembly within the ambit of their jurisdiction are sovereign, and can make enactments in such form as they think fit; and if it lie within the ambit of their jurisdiction to make Rules, Orders, and Standing Orders for their own procedure which are adapted for the orderly conduct of such Council and Assembly respectively, there is nothing whatever which would prevent them if they thought fit to legislate in that manner; to say that the procedure of the Legislative Assembly shall, subject to any special alteration by the Assembly itself, be the same as that of the Commons House of Parliament of Great Britain for the time being. There would be nothing beyond their jurisdiction in doing that, and that is all I contend that they have done. It may be of course that opinions would differ as to whether that would be wise or politic, or whether it would be expedient to do so; but on the question of jurisdiction, I apprehend the Legislature, being sovereign and having the supreme power of enacting, subject to the consent of the Governor, its own procedure, it would be perfectly competent for them, if they thought fit, to make that enactment.

Lord Blackburn: In what sense are you using the terms "supreme" and "Legislature," that it is an Act of the Legislature duly assented by the Crown which gives jurisdiction as an Act of Parliament?

The Solicitor-General: Yes.

Lord Selborne: This is not legislation clearly.

Lord Blackburn: I cannot help thinking that there is a fallacy in that line of argument.

The Solicitor-General: I may not have expressed myself with perfect accuracy; but what I mean is this, that the Legislative Council and the Legislative Assembly respectively are made by this section of the Act of Parliament the Judges, subject to the consent of the Governor, of the Standing Rules and Orders, which, in their opinion, will be best adapted for the orderly conduct of such Council and Assembly, and that it would be competent for them to enact in one sentence that their procedure shall be the same as the procedure of the Imperial Parliament for the time being, subject to any alteration which may from time to time be made by the Standing Orders of the House.

Lord Selborne: You cannot go the length of saying that it was possible that Standing Orders of the British House of Commons, not then in question, could have appeared to them to be best adapted for the orderly conduct of their own business.

The Solicitor-General: When put in that way, of course it would not be so, but it might very well appear to them, trusting to the wisdom and experience of the Imperial House of Parliament, to say, "instead of enacting a long code of procedure, we will follow the procedure which the Imperial Parliament may from time to time adopt." They might trust to the wisdom of the Imperial House of Parliament, and say, "we will adopt the procedure of the House of Commons for the time being."

Lord Selborne: In order to test that, let me for a moment suppose that they had gone over all the existing known Standing Rules and Orders of the House, and had embodied them in their own Rules and Orders, and had provided that all such Rules and Orders as shall be hereafter adopted by the British House of Commons shall be applicable here—would that mean a due exercise of judicial power?

The Solicitor-General: I think so.

Lord Selborne: Would it be adopting the Standing Orders which appear to them best adapted for the proper conduct of their own Assembly?

The Solicitor-General: Yes.

Lord Selborne: How could that be so, when they did not know what they were?

The Solicitor-General: Because, as to the Rules and Orders for the time being of the House of Commons,

Commons, it might appear to them, trusting to the wisdom and experience of the Imperial Parliament, that such Rules and Orders of the Imperial Parliament, if from time to time adopted, subject to any alteration which the Colonial Legislature might make, would be best adapted for the orderly conduct of the Assembly.

Lord Blackburn: That seems to delegate the authority given to them. The authority given to the Legislative Council and Assembly was from the first Session, and from time to time afterwards as there might be occasion.

The Solicitor-General: That question of delegation has been dealt with in several cases which have recently come before your Lordships' Board, in some of which I had the honor of appearing as counsel; and it has always been held that if a Legislative Assembly, or in one case it was the Indian Council, I think, came within the ambit of its jurisdiction, which has been determined by the Imperial Statute, it is sovereign; and although, for instance, it may enact that such taxes, as it was in one case, and such Custom duties should be paid as the Comptroller of Customs should from time to time fix—that that was not a delegation of their authority.

Lord Blackburn: I am not using the word "delegation" as non potest delegari at all; I am putting it as a question of construction of the Act.

The Solicitor-General: Yes.

Lord Selborne: The cases your have mentioned, if I am not mistaken, were all cases of actual legislation?

The Solicitor-General: Yes, my Lord, actual legislation.

Lord Selborne: No doubt a legislative body, within the sphere of its legislative authority, may confer large powers upon those whom they trust; but does it contemplate anything of that kind? Here you have the legislation, which is the legislation of the Imperial Parliament, and in the other case, the question is whether this legislation of the Imperial Parliament does not require that the particular Rules and Orders adopted by the Assembly should be such as in their judgment are best adopted for the orderly conduct of their own business.

The Solicitor-General: They might exercise their own judgment by saying—"We have such confidence in the Imperial Parliament that we adopt their Rules, forms, and usages for the time being, subject to any alteration which we may make by our own Standing Orders."

Lord Blackburn: Your argument goes further. That they not only adopt such as they have already made, but they go on and say "we will adopt such as they may hereafter make."

The Solicitor-General: Yes, such Rules, forms, and usages for the time being. An illustration and a very able observation has been furnished to me from the Speaker, the Appellant, but I own that it appears to me to be rather idem per idem. Supposing the Colonial Act of Parliament enacted that the practice of the Supreme Court of the Colony should be that followed in the Court of Queen's Bench in England, it is said that when any question arose, you would have to look at what was the practice of the Court of Queen's Bench in England for the time being. But as I said, I own that the illustration seems to me rather idem per idem.

Lord Selborne: This observation occurs to me,—that the practice of the Court of Queen's Bench might have been altered by the Parliament, and in such case you would require that you should not only look to such alterations of practice as were in curiam curie, but to things which might happen to be no guidance whatever.

The Solicitor-General: I do not think it affects the argument much. Those are the questions which arise upon the third plea. The second plea raises a very different point indeed, and one which is perhaps of more general interest and importance.

Now, my Lords, there are two questions which arise on the second plea—first, what was the true construction of the resolution, and secondly, whether the resolution was within the competence of the House.

Now, my Lords, there is nothing in the plea to show that the removal of this gentleman from the House under the orders of the Speaker was not in the same sitting of the Committee in which the resolution was passed.

Lord Selborne: If that were necessary, would not it be necessary for you to aver it?

The Solicitor-General: We have averred "that while the said suspension still remained in force," and that I presume being the said suspension according to the true construction. The averment is this, "and afterwards, during the same Session of Parliament, while the said suspension still remained in force, the Plaintiff entered the said Legislative Assembly Chamber while the said Assembly was sitting for the dispatch of the business."

Lord Selborne: It would be very unsatisfactory if the fact is known to be that it was not at the same sitting. It would be very unsatisfactory that we should decide upon this on the supposition that that means that it was.

The Solicitor-General: Then, my Lord, I will not press that. If I understand the facts—I am not sure that I understand the facts correctly—the second alleged assault was, I think, at a subsequent sitting.

The second question raises the point as to what the meaning of the resolution is—whether it means that he be suspended from the service of the House during that particular sitting, or whether it means, rather, that he be suspended from the service of the House during the pleasure of the House or until further order, durante bene placito. My first point is that there being no time mentioned, it means that he be suspended from the service of the House during pleasure.

Lord Blackburn: Supposing it does mean that, would not there be an independent question arising on the third plea, namely, would that be within the competence of the Assembly? The Assembly has undoubtedly the power of regulating its proceedings, but has an Assembly a right—I do not say it has not—to say that because a man misbehaves himself to-day, he shall be prevented from coming at all until their pleasure?

The Solicitor-General: This second point, supposing it has the meaning that it was in their competence that they might resort to it, falls I think within the decisions relating to Legislative Assemblies which have been given by this Board. Your Lordships will find that the members of this Board have drawn a marked distinction between exclusion either for a time or expulsion for the maintenance of order, and a commitment to gaol or imprisonment by way of punishment. Your Lordships' Board have held that it is not competent, at any rate without express powers given to a Legislative Assembly, to imprison a Member, but that it is competent for them—it is inherent in every Legislative Assembly, for the purpose of maintaining its own order and the orderly conduct of its business within the Chamber—either to exclude for a time certain, or during pleasure, or even to expel.

Lord Monkswell: Assume that the Member might be expelled.

The Solicitor-General: Then there would be a new election. It seems to me, my Lords, that the learned Chief Justice in the Court below has rather mistaken the effect of the authorities of your Lordships' Board, and has not drawn so clear a distinction as I submit the authorities to which he refers do draw between exclusion from the House for the purpose of maintaining order, and commitment or imprisonment by way of punishment.

Lord Monkswell: He appears to think that there would be power of expulsion, as I understand.

Lord Selborne: What reason is there to doubt that there would be power to commit into the custody of the Sergeant-at-Arms? In the case of Dill v. Murphy, that was the very thing that was done.

The Solicitor-General: There is a case in which Mr. Baron Park gave judgment.

Lord Selborne: Many things have happened since that case.

The Solicitor-General: Yes, my Lord, that is so.

Lord Selborne: You mean the case of Beaumont v. Barrett. I do not think you could refer to them as an authority.

The Solicitor-General: There was a subsequent case, in which judgment was also delivered by Mr. Baron Park, of Keilley v. Carson, in which he withdrew a dictum that he had given.

Lord Selborne: I take it those cases decide that there would be power in the House of Commons to commit to custody a refractory Member? Sir Francis Burdett was sent to the Tower, and we know very well that we commit to the custody of the Sergeant-at-Arms any Member who is guilty of misbehaviour. I think this case of Dill v. Murphy is expressly in point, because as far as this is concerned there is no difference between Victoria and New South Wales.

The Solicitor-General: The authorities which are referred to in the judgments of the learned Judges in the Court below are treated as authorities binding on them, as no doubt they are. They seem to think that if these authorities did not apply to this case, then cadet questio. If there is power to commit to prison, a fortiori there is power of exclusion from the House. But I was assuming the possibility that your Lordships might think that the case of Keilley v. Carson is a concluded case. There is a subsequent case of Doyle against Falconer, which was also before your Lordships' Board, which decided that a Colonial Legislature had not the power of commitment for contempt.

Lord Selborne: Is not there a fallacy in the expression "a Colonial Legislature." All Colonial Legislatures have not the same constitution.

The Solicitor-General: That is quite true my Lord. If it were necessary for me to argue that this Colonial Legislature had power to commit for contempt, I should rely on these words—"adopting the forms, Rules, and usages of the Imperial Parliament." That is not necessary for me to argue, because the cases which are referred to in the judgment of the learned Chief Justice, even if they are applicable to this case, which is a close question, only go as far as this, that a Colonial Legislature has not the inherent power of committing to prison for contempt; but in saying that, all the cases seem to me to lay down at the same time that there is a wide difference between imprisoning a man for contempt by way of punishment and merely excluding him for a time—suspending him from the service of the House during a limited time, or during the pleasure of the House, by way of preserving the order of the House. The second answer given would be this—that according to the usages of the Imperial House of Commons which were in question when the date of the Standing Order was passed (and I shall with your Lordships' permission read Sir Erskine May's book as an authority on that point), the British House of Commons undoubtedly could exercise the power of suspending from the sitting of the House either until the Member should give satisfaction to the House, or during a limited time, or during pleasure.

Lord Selborne: Have you any example of the exercise of that power in terms like these, which are absolutely indifferent, and which neither (say) during pleasure, nor a limited time, nor until he has given satisfaction.

The Solicitor-General: No, my Lord. If your Lordships will permit me, I will read from the last edition of Sir Erskine May's work. I apologize for reading a text-book, but it is a text-book of so much authority. With your Lordships' permission I will read from the last edition—the 9th edition, of 1883,—of Sir Erskine May's Parliamentary Practice, page 64. He says:—"A temporary disability, however, has been sometimes created by the suspension of Members from the service of the House. On the 27th April, 1641, Mr. Gervaise Hollis, a Member, was suspended the House during the Session. On the 6th November, 1643, Sir Norton Knatchbull was suspended the House during the pleasure of the House. On the 26th January, 1648, Mr. Frye was suspended from sitting in the House and executing his duty there, as a Member, until he shall give satisfaction to the House. On the 3rd July, 1661, Mr. Love, not having received the sacrament of the Lord's Supper, was suspended until he shall communicate. On the 10th November, 1669, Sir George Carteret was suspended the House." That seems to have been an indefinite suspension.

Lord Blackburn: These all seem to be before the Revolution at all events.

The Solicitor-General: Yes, my Lord, 1669 was the last.

Lord Blackburn: There is no doubt that in those times the House of Commons did various things that I think would hardly be done now. They ordered persons to be whipped, and various other things.

The Solicitor-General: Then the learned author continues with regard to the case of Sir John Prettiman.

Lord Blackburn: The case of Sir George Carteret as it is quoted by Sir Erskine May is a general suspension?

The Solicitor-General: Yes, my Lord.

Lord Selborne: Does it appear how it was interpreted or acted upon?

The Solicitor-General: No, my Lord.

Lord Blackburn: Does it at all appear what he had done?

The Solicitor-General: No, my Lord. I have not had an opportunity of searching the Commons Journals. The reference is 9 Commons Journals, page 130. Then the learned author continues:—"On the 8th of April, 1670, Sir John Prettiman was suspended his sitting in the House, and from all privileges as a member, until he shall produce Robert Haynes, who had falsely claimed privilege as his servant." It seems rather hard on Sir John Prettiman if Haynes was not his servant.

Lord Blackburn: It does not extend the exercise of a power which I should say appears necessarily inherent to the regulation of debates and proceedings.

The Solicitor-General: The learned author continues:—"And on the 9th of March, 1692, Mr. Cullingford was suspended from the benefit of the privileges of the House until he shall attend in his place." That was a suspension from the benefit of the privileges of the House for the purpose of making him come. Then he says:—"The temporary suspension of a Member from the service of the House is a modified form of punishment by which the rights of electors are no more infringed than if the House exercised its unquestionable power of imprisonment. For nearly two centuries, however, the House appears to have preferred the latter punishment, no case of suspension having occurred since 1692. But on the 25th July, 1877, it was laid down from the Chair (that was Sir Henry Brand) that any Member guilty of a contempt would be liable to such punishment, whether by censure, by suspension from the service of the House, or by commitment, as the House may adjudge." That is the only passage in Sir Erskine May's book which bears on the suspension.

Lord Selborne: At all events that is some evidence that it must be regarded as being one of the privileges of the House to suspend, but what the effect of the formal suspension is those cases do not seem to show.

The Solicitor-General: No, my Lord, they do not prima facie; the meaning would be that he be suspended from the service of the House generally, without a limit of time, which would be during pleasure.

Lord Selborne: Is that quite so? If there is no expressly limited time, would it not be a reasonable construction that it means as much as is necessary and no more?

The Solicitor-General: I really put my argument interrogatively; why should it be assumed that in the opinion of the House that passed this resolution, suspension from the service of the House during that particular debate or that particular sitting was all that was necessary?

Lord Selborne: The word is "suspension." Suspension implies something that is temporary and not permanent, and it cannot be less than that sitting, otherwise it would be no suspension at all; but why should it be more?

The Solicitor-General: Because it is not confined to that sitting, and if it be not confined in terms to that sitting, the natural and prima facie construction of it would be, during pleasure; he is to be suspended from the service of the House until the House otherwise orders.

Lord Selborne: The effect of that might be that he might never be able to come there during the present sitting.

The Solicitor-General: He might be able to submit himself.

Lord Selborne: How do you mean?

The Solicitor-General: Submit himself to the authority of the House.

Lord Selborne: Suppose the House did not think fit to do it?

The Solicitor-General: It must be credited with acting reasonably.

Lord Selborne: You are entitled to say that.

The Solicitor-General: But if it be within their competence, as I submit it is, to suspend either from the service of the House, or until the House shall otherwise order, which is the same thing, the prima facie construction of it I submit would be, during the pleasure of the House, or until the House shall otherwise order, which would come to the same thing.

Lord Hobhouse: It is something short of expulsion.

The Solicitor-General: Yes.

Lord Hobhouse: Suspension, I take it, is temporary expulsion.

The Solicitor-General: Temporary exclusion from the Chamber.

Lord Hobhouse: It would be a question of duration, as to whether the suspension should not be removed.

The Solicitor-General: The object being to check, not to punish. The object being to preserve order, and to check disorderly conduct in the debates of the House, or in the Committee of the Whole House, the House might well think that the disorderly conduct had been of such a character that it could only be met by excluding the gentleman from the service of the House until he gave an engagement not to repeat such conduct. I am only putting an hypothetical case. I am not for a moment suggesting it occurred in this case or anything like that; but suppose a Member came into the House in a state of intoxication and disturbed the proceedings of the House, surely it would be perfectly proper for the House to exclude him from the service of the House during their pleasure, or until he gave an engagement not to interfere with the decency of the House.

Lord Blackburn: You are putting an hypothetical case?

The Solicitor-General: A purely hypothetical case, my Lord. I am not suggesting it in this case for a moment.

Lord Blackburn: I should be inclined to think that any Assembly—not merely the House of Parliament or the Legislative Assembly, if a man came in drunk and disturbed them, might cause him to be removed until he became sober. Of course there is no doubt that the House of Commons have very great and excessive powers.

Lord Hobhouse: In defining "suspension," is not suspension until the House orders him to be sent for? You do not send a man to prison for a fortnight for contempt of a Court of Justice.

The Solicitor-General: He is imprisoned until he applies to be let out, and he is then let out on the payment of costs and submitting to the Court which has imprisoned him for contempt. For instance, a public servant, as sometimes happens, is suspended from his employment during pleasure, or until the authority which suspends him otherwise orders. I will take the case which Lord Hobhouse put. Supposing a man is committed for contempt, he is not committed for any particular period but he is committed until he becomes submissive, which might be until the next day, and on making a submission and on payment of such costs as the Court awards, it is usual to let him out.

Now my Lords I will refer your Lordships to the case of Keilley v. Carson, which is reported in 4 Moore's Reports, Privy Council cases, page 63.

Lord Blackburn: If I remember rightly, the question raised there was the power to commit for a contempt to the House committed by a person not a Member and not before the House. The

The Solicitor-General: Yes, my Lord, all that I read it for as showing that Lord Wensleydale, when delivering the judgment of the Board (the case was twice argued, the second time being argued before a large number of learned Lords), although he retracted some dicta which he had himself expressed in delivering the judgment of the Board in Beaumont v. Barrett, carefully guarded himself from infringing in any way the right of a Legislative Assembly to protect its own order; Lord Wensleydale, in judgment, at page 88, says this:—The whole question then is reduced to this,—whether by law, the power of committing for a contempt, not in the presence of the Assembly, is incident to every local Legislature. The Statute Law on this subject being silent, the common law is to govern it; and what the Common Law depends upon principle and precedent.” That was a contempt not in the presence of the Assembly in disturbance of the order of the Assembly, but contempt committed outside the House. Then Lord Wensleydale continues:—“Their Lordships see no reason to think that, in the principle of the Common Law, any other powers are given them than such as are necessary to the existence of such a body and the proper exercise of the functions which it is intended to execute. These powers are granted by the very act of its establishment, an act which on both sides it is admitted it was competent for the Crown to perform. This is the principle which governs all legal incidents. Quando lex aliquid concedit concedere videtur et illud sine quo res ipsa esse non potest. In conformity to this principle, we feel no doubt that such an Assembly has the right of protecting itself from all impediments to the due course of its proceeding. To the full extent of every measure which it may be really necessary to adopt to secure the free exercise of their legislative functions, they are justified in acting by the principle of the Common Law; but the power of punishing any one for past misconduct as a contempt of its authority, and adjudicating upon the fact of such contempt and the measure of punishment as a judicial body, irresponsible to the party accused, whatever the real facts may be, is of a very different character, and by no means essentially necessary for the exercise of its functions by a local Legislature, whether representative or not, performed without this extraordinary power and with the aid of the ordinary tribunals to investigate and punish contemptuous insults and interruptions. These powers certainly do not exist in corporate or other bodies assembled with authority to make by-laws for the government of particular trades, the united numbers of individuals. The functions of a Colonial Legislature are of a higher character, and it is engaged in more important objects; but still there is no reason why it should possess the power in question. It is said however that this power belongs to the House of Commons, in England; and this, it is contended, affords an authority for holding that it belongs as a legal incident by the Common Law to an Assembly with analogous functions. But the reason why the House of Commons has this power is not because it is a representative body with legislative functions, but by virtue of ancient usage and prescription, the lex et consuetudo Parliamenti, which forms a part of the Common Law of the land, and according to which the High Court of Parliament before its division, and the Houses of Lords and Commons since, are invested with many peculiar privileges, that of punishment for contempt being one. And besides, this argument from analogy would prove too much, since it would be equally available in favour of the assumption by the Council of the island of the power of commitment exercised by the House of Lords, as well as in support of the right of impeachment by the Assembly—a claim for which there is not any colour of foundation.”

Lord Monkswell: Do I understand the Legislature of a Colony to be a Court, as the House of Commons is? The House of Commons is a Court.

The Solicitor-General: It is, strictly speaking a Court, and it has for many purposes the attributes of a Superior Court, as for example, its judgments cannot be reviewed.

Lord Monkswell: The House of Commons is a Superior Court; I only asked whether the Legislative Assembly is also a Court.

The Solicitor-General: I should not like to answer that question. I say it is a Court in this sense, that its decisions on matters of fact, as for instance, whether the misconduct was such as to justify the sentence.

Lord Monkswell: Is it a Court for the purpose of determining its own privileges, as the House of Commons is? I only ask for information; I do not give any opinion about it.

The Solicitor-General: I frankly say, my Lord, that I have not considered the question from that point of view. I should say there might be some difficulty about that, as far as that depends on the Common Law of England. The question on that of course would be, whether the adoption of this Standing Order in this form did confer on the Legislative Assembly all these privileges.

Lord Monkswell: I understand the House of Commons is a Court having every incident of a Court for committing for contempt. I do not know whether that applies or not to Colonial Assemblies such as this.

The Solicitor-General: I desire to say that I do not consider it necessary for my argument to argue that, and I never like to argue a proposition which is larger than is necessary for the decision of the case. I do not think it necessary for the decision of this case to contend that the Legislature of New South Wales could imprison a man for a contempt committed outside its walls. Whether it might or might not do so for aggravated misconduct within its walls is a question which your Lordships have to decide when it arises.

Lord Monkswell: If it has that power, it would carry some weight with your argument.

Lord Blackburn: Has it not been decided that the Dominican Assembly had not that power?

The Solicitor-General: Yes, my Lord, that the Dominican Assembly had not that power. I am going to refer to the case presently, namely, the case of Doyle v. Falconer.

Lord Selborne: It is a question of the construction of the Imperial Act, but as to other instances it may be different.

Lord Blackburn: That question of the Act of Parliament does not arise.

The Solicitor-General: I do not wish the success of my argument to depend upon your Lordships taking any particular view of that question, because my contention is that, as Lord Wensleydale points out in the passage I have read, the principle which governs all legal incidents is the maxim “Quando lex aliquid concedit concedere videtur et illud sine quo res ipsa esse non potest.” Then his Lordship continues: “In conformity to this principle, we feel no doubt that such an Assembly has the right of protecting itself from all impediments to the due course of its proceeding. To the full extent of every measure which it may be really necessary to adopt to secure the free exercise of their legislative functions, they are justified in acting by the principle of the Common Law.” Then his Lordship distinguishes the power of punishing for contempt by imprisonment from the powers for the purpose of protecting itself from all impositions.

Lord Selborne: It would be reasonable to suppose, would it not, that they might have suspended him or advised him to leave the Chamber and not return within that sitting; but is it quite clear from the particulars particulars of the judgment that they might suspend him during pleasure—until he should have obtained a vote to be re-admitted.

The Solicitor-General: If the Legislative Assembly were of opinion that for the purpose of securing the free exercise of the legislative functions it was necessary to do so.

Lord Blackburn: Is it not carrying it very far (I am aware of the very great powers of the House of Commons with regard to its privileges), to say that when every Legislative Assembly thought it was necessary for their purposes to exercise that power that they could exercise it—must it not be a matter of fact whether or not it was necessary?

The Solicitor-General: If a Legislative Assembly has power, it must be an incident of that power that it is to be the judge of the necessity for its exercise, provided the subject forms a question of malice.

Lord Blackburn: I have not made myself intelligible. I do not doubt that at all; but supposing, as I am inclined to think it is—a Legislative Assembly or other Assembly which is deliberating must have a right in the event of a man disturbing its proceedings to stop him from doing so, and probably to send him out on that occasion, because I think that would come within its province, and might be such a right, as was laid down by Lord Wensleydale, as would be essential for the management of its proceedings; but I doubt excessively whether it would follow that this Member having disturbed it on this occasion might be kept out of the House during pleasure. If the Assembly thought or believed that that would be necessary, that would hardly make it so.

The Solicitor-General: I submit it would. If it be competent for the plaintiff to traverse the fact that he was obstructing the Assembly—and there might be an issue of fact whether he was or was not disturbing the Assembly—it must be equally competent for him to do so though he was only suspended from the service of the House during a sitting.

“Nor can the power be said to be incident to the Legislative Assembly by analogy to the English Courts of Record which possess it. This Assembly is no Court of Record, nor has it any judicial functions whatever; and it is to be remarked, that all those bodies which possess the power of adjudication upon, and punishing in a summary manner, contempts of their authority, have judicial functions, and exercise this as incident to those which they possess, except only the House of Commons, whose authority in this respect rests upon ancient usage.”

Lord Monkswell: Is it correct to say that they have no judicial functions—could not they determine judicially whether a man was elected a Member or not? that would be a judicial function.

The Solicitor-General: I do not know, my Lord.

Lord Monkswell: I suppose it has the power of determining whether a Member is elected. If so, that would be some judicial function.

The Solicitor-General: Then Lord Wensleydale goes on to say—“their Lordships, therefore, are of opinion that the principle of the Common Law—that things necessary pass as incident—does not give the power contended for by the respondents as an incident to and included in the grant of a subordinate Legislature. It was, however, agreed that in other Colonies the Legislative Assemblies exercise the power of committing for breach of privilege without objection, and that the usage in this respect was good evidence that such power was an incident attached by the Common Law, though not on the ground of necessity. And no doubt this argument would have had much weight if there had been many Legislatures situate precisely as this is, and the usage to exercise the power of committal for breach of privilege had been frequent, and the acquiescence in its exercise long and universal, and that usage could have been explained only on the ground that the power was a legal incident. But no such usage has been proved, and the constitution and practice of different Colonies, and the prerogative of the Crown with reference to that, differ so much that there is very little analogy between them, and no inference can be safely deduced from the law as understood in one to guide us with respect to another. In some, the very exercise of the power with the sanction of the tribunals, and the acquiescence of the public for a long period of time, may raise a presumption that the power has been duly communicated by law. But in this case we have the simple question to decide, without any usage, any acquiescence, or any sanction of the Courts of Law, except in the very case in which we are now called upon to affirm or reverse the judgment of the Court below. It remains to be considered how the question stands on express authority; and unless there be that satisfactory authority expressly in favour of the power, we must hold that the Common Law does not confer it. There is no decision of a Court of Justice nor other authority in favour of the right, except that of the case of Beaumont v. Barrett, decided by the Judicial Committee, the members present being Lord Brougham, Mr. Justice Bosanquet, Mr. Justice Erskine, and myself. Their Lordships do not consider that case as one by which they ought to be bound in deciding the present question. The opinion of their Lordships, delivered by myself, immediately after the argument was closed, though it clearly expressed that the power was incidental to every Legislative Assembly, was not the only ground on which that judgment was rested, and therefore was in some degree extra-judicial—but besides, it was stated to be and was founded entirely on the dictum of Lord Ellenborough, in Burditt v. Abbott, which dictum we all think cannot be taken as an authority for the abstract proposition that every legislative body has the power of committing for contempt. The observation was made by his Lordship with reference to the peculiar powers of Parliament, and ought not, we all think, to be extended any further.” I think, my Lords, in the Court below the learned Chief Justice has rather pushed Lord Wensleydale’s judgment, in retracting the opinion which he pronounced in Beaumont v. Barrett, beyond its largest sense. All that had been said in Beaumont v. Barrett was that every Legislative Assembly had, as I am inclined to think it has, inherent powers for the purpose of imprisoning for contempt. It seems to me a different thing from that of excluding a person from the service of the House for the purpose of preserving the order of the House. In this passage which I have read, your Lordships see that Lord Wensleydale carefully guarded himself from in any manner suggesting that an Assembly would not have all those powers which were necessary, and I submit reasonably necessary, for the purpose of preserving its own order. Then Lord Wensleydale concludes his judgment with these words:—“We all, therefore, think that the opinion expressed by myself in the case of Beaumont v. Barrett ought not to affect our decision in the present case; and there being no other authority on the subject, we decide, according to the principle of the Common Law, that the House of Assembly have not the power contended for. They are a local Legislature, with every power reasonably necessary for the proper exercise of their functions and duties, but they have not what they have erroneously supposed themselves to possess, the same exclusive privileges which the ancient law of England has annexed to the House of Parliament.”

Lord

Lord Selborne : In Keilley v. Carson and many other cases like that, there is no question whether it was given by an Act of the Imperial Legislature expressly?

The Solicitor-General : No, my Lord.

Lord Selborne : But merely the question of what was incident to an Assembly for the discharge of its business?

The Solicitor-General : Yes.

Lord Selborne : By the principles of Common Law.

The Solicitor-General : All that Lord Wensleydale held was that the Legislature of Newfoundland—it was in that case—had not the power of commitment which the ancient Law of England attached to the House of Parliament in this country.

Lord Selborne : In this case the Imperial Act authorized the adoption and practice down to that time of the House of Commons, and if to suspend was part of their practice, then it authorized the adoption and practice which is alleged.

The Solicitor-General : Yes, my Lord.

Lord Selborne : Therefore the case of Keilley v. Carson would be quite beside the mark?

The Solicitor-General : That is my contention. The other case cited against me was that of Doyle v. Falconer, which is reported in Law Reports, I; Privy Council Appeals, page 328.

In answer to Lord Monkswell's question, my learned friend Mr. Wood says that the Electoral Act of the Colony, which is a Colonial Act, the 44 Victoria, No. 13, part 4, provides for Committees of Election and Qualification, and it defines their mode of punishment, and their duties and functions, so that they had the powers to which your Lordship referred by express statutory enactment.

Lord Monkswell : That is, as far as it goes, judicial functions?

The Solicitor-General : Yes, they have them by express statutory enactment.

Now, my Lords, the marginal note in the case of Doyle v. Falconer is this,—“The Legislative Assembly of Dominica does not possess the power of punishing a contempt, though committed in its presence and by one of its Members.” Your Lordship goes one step further than the case of Keilley v. Carson. In that case, the contempt was committed outside the House. In this case the contempt was committed in the House itself, and very insulting language was used by the Member towards the Speaker. Such authority does not belong to a Colonial House of Assembly by analogy to the lex et consuetudo Parliamenti, which is inherent in the two Houses of Parliament in the United Kingdom, or to a Court of Justice, which is a Court of Record, a Colonial House of Assembly having no judicial functions. Where, therefore, a Member of the Lower House of Assembly of Dominica, who had been taken into custody by the Serjeant-at-arms, and committed to the common gaol, by virtue of the Speaker's warrants for a contempt committed in the face of the Assembly, brought an action for trespass and false imprisonment, and obtained damages, it was held by the Judicial Committee (affirming the judgment of the Court of Common Pleas of the Island) on demurrer to pleas of justification, that the House of Assembly had no such power to commit and punish as had been assumed, and that the Speaker and Members were liable.”

Lord Blackburn : The power they had assumed was not merely to turn him out of the House, but to commit him to the gaol.

The Solicitor-General : Yes, my Lord, to the common gaol, by the Speaker's warrant. “The cases of Keilley v. Carson and Fenton v. Hampton decide conclusively that Legislative Assemblies in the British Colonies have, in the absence of express grant, no power to adjudicate upon or punish for contempt when committed beyond their walls.” The judgment of their Lordships was delivered by Sir Jas. Colville, and he describes what the state of the facts was. The contempt consisted in respondent, while addressing the House, having been called to order by the Speaker, having then addressed the Speaker with the words, “You are a disgrace to this House.”

On page 338 his Lordship says this, “The questions upon which the sufficiency of the jurisdiction thus pleaded depend are—First, does the House of Assembly possess the authority which the pleas allege did always of right belong to it and to Legislative Assemblies in other parts of the dominions of Her Majesty, namely, an authority to commit and punish for contempts committed, and for interruptions and obstructions given to the business of the said House of Assembly, by its Members or others, in its presence and during its sittings? Secondly, assuming the existence of this alleged authority to be established, were the warrants issued in virtue of it sufficient in law?” The first question, affecting as it does the privileges of the Legislative Assemblies in many of the dependencies of the Crown, is one of importance. When it first arose before this Committee, in the case of Beaumont v. Barrett, the learned Judge then sitting decided broadly that the power of punishing contempts is inherent in every Assembly that possesses a supreme legislative authority, whether they are such as are a direct obstruction to its due course of proceeding, or such as have a tendency indirectly to produce such obstruction; and therefore that the Legislative Assembly of Jamaica had the power of imprisoning for a contempt by the publication of a libel. Again, in America, the Supreme Court of the United States, a tribunal whose judgments are entitled to the highest respect, held, in the case of Anderson v. Dunn, that the House of Representatives had by necessary implication a general power of punishing and committing for contempts, notwithstanding that the lex scripta, ‘The Constitution of the United States,’ had expressly conferred upon it a power limited to the punishment of contempts when committed by its own Members.” I think that clause is referred to by the Lord Chief Justice in his judgment in this case: “It is admitted, however, that the case of Keilley v. Carson, which overruled that of Beaumont v. Barrett, and has been followed by that of Fenton v. Hampton, must here be taken to have decided conclusively that the Legislative Assemblies in the British Colonies have, in the absence of express grant, no power to adjudicate upon or punish for contempts committed beyond their walls. The case is one which, having regard to the constitution of the Committee before which it was argued for the second time, their Lordships must accept as an authority of singular weight. And if the elaborate judgment which was then pronounced has in terms left open the question which is raised in the present case, it has stated principles which go far to afford the means of determining that question. The privileges of the House of Commons, that of punishing for contempt being one, belong to it by virtue of the lex et consuetudo Parliamenti, which is a law peculiar to and inherent in the two Houses of Parliament of the United Kingdom. It cannot, therefore, be inferred from the possession of certain powers by the House of Commons, by virtue of that ancient usage and prescription, that the like powers belong to Legislative Assemblies of comparatively recent creation in the dependencies of the Crown. Again, there is no resemblance between a Colonial
House

House of Assembly, being a body which has no judicial functions, and a Court of Justice, being a Court of Record. There is therefore no ground for saying that the power of punishing for contempt, because it is admitted to be inherent in the one, must be taken by analogy to be inherent in the other. If, then, the power assumed by the House of Assembly cannot be maintained by analogy to the privileges of the House of Commons, or the powers of a Court of Record, is there any other legal foundation upon which it may be rested? It has not, as both sides admit, been expressly granted. The learned counsel for the Appellants invoked the principles of the common law; and as it must be conceded that the Common Law sanctions the exercise of the prerogative by which the Assembly has been created, the principle of the Common Law which is embodied in the maxim, 'Quando lex aliquid concedit, concedere videtur et illud sine quo res ipsa esse non potest,' applies to the body so created. The question, therefore, is reduced to this, "Is the power to punish and commit for contempts committed in its presence one necessary to the existence of such a body as the Assembly of Dominica and the proper exercise of the functions which it is intended to execute?" This is the passage to which I refer your Lordships: "It is necessary to distinguish between a power to punish for a contempt, which is a judicial power, and a power to remove any obstruction offered to the deliberations or proper action of a legislative body during its sitting, which last power is necessary for self-preservation. If a Member of a Colonial House of Assembly is guilty of disorderly conduct in the House whilst sitting, he may be removed or excluded for a time, or even expelled; but there is a great difference between such powers and the judicial power of inflicting a penal sentence for the offence. The right to remove for self-security is one thing, the right to inflict punishment is another. The former is, in their Lordships' judgment, all that is warranted by the legal maxim that has been cited, but the latter is not its legitimate consequence. To the question, therefore, on which this case depends their Lordships must answer in the negative. If the good sense and conduct of members of Colonial Legislatures prove, as in the present case, insufficient to order and decency of debate, the law would sanction the use of that degree of force which might be necessary to remove the person offending from the place of meeting and to keep him excluded. The same rule would apply a fortiori to obstructions caused by any person not a Member. And whenever the violation of order amounts to a breach of the peace, or other legal offence, recourse may be had to the ordinary tribunals." Then Sir Jas. Colville discusses another argument which was used for maintaining the right to commit for contempt, which I need not trouble your Lordships with. There I rely on the distinction which Sir Jas. Colville puts in the passage which I have just read, that the right to remove for self-security is one thing, the right to inflict punishment is another, and that the former right is included in the Latin maxim which Lord Wensleydale referred to and which Sir Jas. Colville applies.

Lord Monkswell: He speaks here of excluding and keeping excluded; he does not say for what time.

The Solicitor-General: His Lordship evidently thought—at least I should think so—it meant no longer than necessary.

Lord Blackburn: I think you may correctly say that the judgment of the Privy Council in that case does not negative the power, if a Member of the Colonial Assembly misconducts himself while sitting, that he may be excluded for a time.

The Solicitor-General: Or even expelled.

Lord Blackburn: Or expelled. I think Sir Jas. Colville, in giving the judgment of the Court on that occasion, negatives the power to exclude for a time, but was it at all necessary for him to decide that they had power to exclude for a time?

The Solicitor-General: No, my Lord; that is quite true. All that their Lordships had to decide was whether the Dominican Assembly had the power to commit one of its Members, through the Speaker, to the common gaol; that is what they had to decide; but then the argument which had been pressed on their Lordships was that such a right was inherent in the right of every Assembly to protect the decency and order of its own debates; and his Lordship points out that all that was necessary for protecting the order and decency of the debate was exclusion. Of course it may be said that it was nothing more than a dictum, but at any rate it is a dictum which the Court then stated.

Lord Blackburn: The question is not raised here whether the Legislature could have properly excluded for the time whilst the debate was going on. If a man misconducts himself, the order would be given to exclude him for an uncertain time.

The Solicitor-General: That is so.

Lord Blackburn: That is the real question.

Lord Hobhouse: I should think to exclude means as long as necessary, and therefore an Assembly is judge of its own power. An adjournment for an hour would entitle him to appear again.

The Solicitor-General: If it be once admitted—and I suppose it would not be denied—that the Legislature has power to exclude one of its Members from its walls for disorderly conduct, I should conceive that that being based on the maxim that the Assembly has power to do so—the maxim which is referred to—the consequence here is that if the Assembly has power to do whatever is necessary for its own protection and its own self-security (which are the words which Sir Jas. Colville uses) for the maintenance of its own order, if the Assembly bona fide came to the conclusion that, in order to secure its own order, it was necessary to exclude the Member from its walls and from the Chamber during pleasure, or until he undertook not to repeat the conduct, or for a definite time, say a week, then I should conceive it would be within the powers of the Legislative Assembly.

Lord Monkswell: I suppose you say the Assembly is the judge of the length of time which would be necessary?

The Solicitor-General: Yes, my Lord, that it must be inherent in the power of the Assembly to judge of what is necessary for the purpose of maintaining its own order; and it seems to be admitted by the learned Judges in the Court below certainly that they might expel.

Lord Selborne: At first sight it seemed a strong argument and pretty clear, but on reflection it is not quite so clear, because the effect of his exclusion would be that the constituency would have an opportunity of returning another Member if their own unfortunate constituency was deprived of the services of the Member as long as it lasts.

The Solicitor-General: That is quite true, but that argument would apply only to the removal of the particular Member.

Lord Selborne: The principle of necessity is to be reasonably interpreted; and to me it certainly seems prima facie that, in that view, it would extend at all events to the present sitting; but whether it would extend extend further seems rather an important question. I think—I am not sure—that this case depends on the principle of necessity, because you have an Imperial Act which gives certain powers, and which have to be exercised.

The Solicitor-General: That is a separate point, my Lord. The present sitting would depend on whether it was inherent to the existence and the proper conduct of legislative business by the Legislative Assembly that it should have the power of suspension.

Lord Monkswell: The argument on the other side, as I understand it, is that there is no tertium quid; it would be either suspension for the sitting or expulsion; you cannot do anything intermediate between the two.

The Solicitor-General: I own that I do not quite see the logic of that. If you once admit that you may suspend during a sitting, I really do not see, if the Legislative Assembly is of opinion that it is necessary for the maintenance of its own order, why it should not suspend a Member until he gives satisfactory assurances that he will not repeat the conduct. Let me take the case, for example, of repeated offences in which a Member may have been called to order from time to time by the Speaker, and he repeatedly continues the disorderly interruptions or obstructive conduct, whatever it may be. The Assembly is always loath to proceed to extreme measures, and it might pass it over; but if the conduct is repeated again the following night, and it may be a third night, is not the Assembly perfectly justified, supposing it is necessary for its own protection, to say, "We will suspend you from the sitting," or "We will suspend you from the services of the House until you give assurances that such conduct shall not be proceeded with"?

Lord Hobhouse: A Member might be suspended for repeated offences with good cause?

The Solicitor-General: Yes, certainly, they might suspend him.

Lord Hobhouse: And that seems as if you might keep him out until he reflects upon his conduct. I suppose no Court of Law could inquire into the question whether it was a wrong suspension, or inquire into the question of whether suspension at all is reasonable.

The Solicitor-General: Certainly not; the power of the House to decide for itself must be the same in each instance.

Lord Blackburn: Is that quite a sound argument—might not it very well be that the House, for the purpose of regulating its own proceedings, might for the time and moment decide that, if the disturbance was made, it was necessary to remove the member from the present debate, without it at all following that the House could suspend him for a week, and that no Court of law would say otherwise than that the decision of that House is correct? It does not at all follow that the decision of the House would be correct, supposing it was a decision that it was necessary to suspend him for a week.

Lord Monkswell: It seems to me that it might be put in this way—can we undertake to say that the suspension should be for one sitting only, is all that is necessary; and, therefore, the re-election of a Member might have to take place.

The Solicitor-General: Suppose they found the man came every day and obstructed the proceedings for a fortnight or three weeks?

Lord Selborne: There is no difficulty in suspending him at once.

Lord Monkswell: Each time?

Lord Hobhouse: It involves a fresh disturbance on each sitting.

Lord Monkswell: It would be a great interference with the business of the House if every day they had to consider whether a man be suspended or not, and as that might go on for a whole session, it seems to me, as at present advised, that if he was suspended for once, that is all that could be necessary.

Lord Blackburn: Suppose special orders had been made, which are made the subject of the third plea, and the justification of that is that it would be intolerably inconvenient to be doing it from day to day; is that a reason why the House should have power to suspend? I do not give any opinion as to whether it is or not, but I do not think it quite logically or necessarily follows that, on saying the House is to be the sole and conclusive judge, whether or not you should suspend him at this moment, that they should be conclusive judges as to whether he should be expelled or excluded during the pleasure of the House.

The Solicitor-General: Upon that I should say this—if you once say it is inherent in the authority of every Legislative Assembly, for the purpose of self-security, to suspend one of its Members from the service of the House, either for that sitting or the Session, or any other limited period, or during the pleasure of the House—if you once say that, I think it must, for the proper exercise of that power, be inherent in them also to decide, in the absence of malice, of course, whether the occasion arose for it. If it is maliciously exercised, that of course would not be so, but in the absence of malice, one does not quite see how the power could be properly exercised if, on every occasion when it was exercised, it was competent for the Member to challenge the conduct of the House in a Court of law before a Jury: it would be an intolerable challenge.

Lord Monkswell: There might be several Members who pursued the same tactics. If so, that makes it more difficult still.

The Solicitor-General: It might. With regard to the arguments which were suggested as to infringing the rights of the constituents, I desire to say this: It has been said—I think it was said in the Court below—and Lord Blackburn suggested it for my consideration—that expulsion does not interfere with the rights of the constituents, because the constituents may immediately insist on re-election, and if they think fit they may re-elect the same gentleman or some other person. But that, I venture to think, is not really a very strong argument, because if it is admitted that you may suspend during an important sitting, the rights of the constituents may be most materially interfered with, because that very debate might be a debate on a question on which, if there has been some warmth of feeling, it probably would be a question on which the constituents and the present Member might have a very strong feeling and might take a very strong interest in. If he is suspended, and you prevent him being present and expressing his opinion at the debate or voting, you may be interfering with the rights of the constituents.

Lord Selborne: Their representative, in that case, has brought that on them; and out of consideration of the rights of the constituents, it goes no further than that, if they thought the particular Member might disturb the meeting, the rights of the constituents would not be interfered with, except as far as the necessity for preserving order requires.

The Solicitor-General: Yes. Now let me make this further observation: If it be conceded that you may suspend during the particular sitting, and the Member comes back at the next sitting of the House—say on the following day—and he repeats the obstructive and disorderly conduct, and he is again suspended for that sitting, sitting, he returns night after night and is suspended for each sitting; therefore, theoretically, it is quite possible, in such a case as that, that the effect might be that the Member might be suspended either for every sitting for the remainder of that Parliament, or, at any rate, for the Session of Parliament, the only difference being, that an express resolution had to be taken on every evening. If that be so, why may not a legislative body, if the Legislative Assembly are of opinion, acting bonâ fide, that the conduct of the Member is such as to lead to reasonable apprehension that the obstruction will be repeated, protect itself by suspending him during pleasure, instead of passing a separate resolution every night, which would have the effect of suspending him, it may be, during the remainder of the Session.

Lord Blackburn: Suppose this case: That a man comes at every fresh meeting of the House, and has proceeded so far as to show that his presence is incompatible with the performance of the business of the House on that particular meeting, does it not follow from that that the House could reasonably resolve that his absence during their pleasure or for a certain time would be compatible to the transaction of business? It would look like a claim to do what the House has done here, and, according to the nature of the offence, it regulates its proceedings.

The Solicitor-General: Some people would not regard it as a punishment, I think, to be excluded from sitting until the adjournment at a very late hour.

Lord Hobhouse: We do not know what the offence was.

The Solicitor-General: Supposing the offence consists in disorderly conduct upon that occasion, and obstructing the course of business, and a threat to continue the disorderly conduct whenever the question under debate or the Bill under debate came before the House; has not the House a right to protect itself?

Lord Monkswell: You adopt an arbitrary limit when suspending him during the sittings, because it might be only right to suspend him during the discussion of a particular question.

The Solicitor-General: That may be so.

Lord Monkswell: Could we go beyond that and say he may be suspended during the sittings? Is not that a somewhat arbitrary line? Is there any particular magic in the word "sittings?"

Lord Hobhouse: It might be reasonable to put a limit on it.

The Solicitor-General: Certainly.

Lord Selborne: And it might also be very reasonable not to put a limit on the question who is to judge of that.

The Solicitor-General: Disorderly conduct is not traversed in this case, and I do not think it necessary to trouble your Lordship with cases upon it.

Now, my Lords, I will refer your Lordships to the case of Bradlaugh v. Gossett, which is a decision on the powers of the House of Commons, and may be, perhaps, distinguished on that ground.

Lord Hobhouse: Where is Bradlaugh v. Gossett reported?

The Solicitor-General: In 12, Law Reports, Queen's Bench Division, page 271. That was an action brought by Mr. Bradlaugh against the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House, for excluding him, and the Sergeant-at-Arms justified it by a resolution of the House of Commons, that Mr. Bradlaugh be excluded from the precincts of the House:—"That the Sergeant-at-Arms do exclude Mr. Bradlaugh from the House, until he shall engage not further to disturb the proceedings of the House"; and it was held that they could not inquire.

Now, my Lords, I will read one passage from the Lord Chief Justice's judgment. He refers to the facts pleaded, and says:—"These statements raise the question whether, on the assumption that the resolution of the House of Commons forbade a Member of the House within the walls of the House itself to do something which, by the law of the land, he had a right to do, such a resolution is one which the House of Commons has a right to pass, and whether, if it has not, this Court can inquire into the right and allow an action to be maintained by a Member of the House against the officer of the House itself, with the execution of its order." It is fair to observe that this was an action against the Sergeant-at-Arms and not against the Speaker. "The Plaintiff argued his own case, and argued it with abundant learning and ability; but he admitted that, with all his research, he had not found a single precedent for his action, and that he had found many distinct and weighty dicta of great Judges in former days, to the effect that no such action could be maintained; nor, wide as is the range of topics more or less connected with the point at issue, and numerous as are the authorities collected and commented on in leading cases on the subject, does it seem to me that the questions really to be decided are more than elementary, and such as must be decided mainly on principle. In this, as in so many matters of practical concern, difficulties are created by the laying down of principles in terms so wide and general that, although logic may justify them, the sense and feeling of men imposes upon them, in fact, limitations which are said, not altogether untruly, to be sometimes inconsistent with the principle they are supposed to admit. For example, it seems to be conceded that a resolution of the House of Commons only (and what is true of one House of Parliament is true of the other) cannot change the law of the land; Sir John Patteson and Sir John Coleridge—the former especially—put this point with great force, in their judgments in Stockdale v. Hansard; and yet, if the House of Commons is, as for certain purposes and in relation to certain persons it certainly is, and is on all hands admitted to be, the absolute judge of its own privileges, it is obvious that it can, at least for those purposes and in relation to those persons, practically change or practically supersede the law; again, there can be no doubt that in an action between party and party, brought in a Court of law, if the legality of a resolution of the House of Commons arises incidentally, and it becomes necessary to determine whether it be legal or no for the purpose of doing justice between the parties to the action,—in such a case the Courts must entertain and must determine that question. Lord Ellenborough expressly says so in Burdett v. Abbott and Bayley, and seems to assume it at page 161. All the four Judges who gave judgment in Stockdale v. Hansard assert this in the strongest terms. That case indeed was an illustration of this necessity. The Attorney-General, Sir John Campbell, could undoubtedly have succeeded à nisi prius upon the facts of the case, without raising the question of privilege upon which the arguments and judgments were delivered; but, for reasons perfectly well understood at the time, he forced Lord Denman (who tried the cause) to give the ruling which he was determined to question. It is perhaps not to be regretted that he did so, when the arguments and the judgments which were the result are remembered; but I see no answer to the statements of the Judges, at p.p. 193 and 243, that when a question is raised before the Court the Court must give judgment on it according to its notions of the law, and not according to a resolution of either House of Parliament. Cases may be put—cases have been put—in which, did they ever arise, it would be the plain duty of the Court, at all hazards, hazards, to declare a resolution illegal and no protection to those who acted under it. Such cases might by possibility occasion unseemly conflicts between the Courts and the Houses; but while I do not deny that as a matter of reasoning such things might happen, it is consoling to reflect that they have scarce ever happened in the long centuries of our history, and that in the present state of things it is but barely possible that they should ever happen again. Alongside however of these propositions, for the soundness of which I should be prepared most earnestly to contend, there is another proposition equally true, equally well established, which seems to me decisive of the case before us: what is said or done within the walls of Parliament cannot be inquired into in a Court of law. On this point all the Judges in the two great cases, which exhaust the learning on the subject, Burdett v. Abbott, and Stockdale v. Hansard, are agreed and are emphatic. The jurisdiction of the Houses over their own Members, their right to impose discipline within their walls, is absolute and exclusive; to use the words of Lord Ellenborough, "they would sink into utter contempt and insufficiency without it." Whether in all cases and under all circumstances the Houses are the sole judges of their own privileges, in the sense that a resolution of either House on the subject has the same effect for a Court of law as an Act of Parliament, is a question which it is not now necessary to determine. No doubt to allow any review of Parliamentary privilege by a Court of law may lead, has led, to very grave complications, and might, in many supposable cases, end in the privileges of the Commons being determined by the Lords; but to hold the resolutions of either House absolutely beyond inquiry in a Court of law, may land us in conclusions not free from grave complications too. It is enough for me to say that it seems to me that, in theory, the question is extremely hard to solve; in practice it is not very important, and at any rate does not now arise.

Now, my Lords, there was also a case which your Lordships may perhaps remember of Howard v. Gossett, which was also an action against the Sergeant-at-Arms, in which the Court of Exchequer differed from the Court of Queen's Bench. It is reported in the 10 Adolphus and Ellis, Queen's Bench Reports, New Series, page 359. The majority of the Court of Queen's Bench held that they could inquire into the fact upon which the resolution of the House was founded, but that was overruled in the Court of Exchequer Chamber: they thought that it was incident to the power of the House of Commons to commit a Member, and in that case that it should be the sole judge.

Lord Blackburn: Was Mr. Howard a Member?

The Solicitor-General: No, he was not, my Lord.

Lord Blackburn: I do not think that arose.

The Solicitor-General: The technical way in which it arose was this, that the warrant did not set out the cause of the committal, and they held that in the case of an Inferior Court that would be fatal.

Lord Monkswell: They considered that the warrant should be construed as a warrant of the Superior Court?

The Solicitor-General: Yes.

Lord Monkswell: And not criticised as a warrant of a Magistrate, for example?

The Solicitor-General: Yes, that it was enough to state that it was the Speaker's warrant.

Lord Monkswell: That was the fact in that case?

The Solicitor-General: Yes, that was the technical form which it took.

Lord Blackburn: That depended on the Speaker's power, did it not; I am speaking from memory on the power of the House of Commons to commit Mr Howard for contempt?

The Solicitor-General: Yes.

Lord Blackburn: It did not at all arise on the question we are now considering, namely, the inherent power of any Legislative Assembly to regulate the management of a debate and keep out Members?

The Solicitor-General: No, the only question was whether a Court of law could inquire into the grounds upon which the power of the Legislative Assembly was exercised. Assuming that they had the power, whether it is competent for the person against whom it is exercised, to call in question, by means of an action, the propriety of the exercise of it.

Now, my Lords, I will refer your Lordships to the judgment of the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of New South Wales, at page 8 of the Record, line 13. His Lordship there says—"By the 35th section of Schedule 1 to the Act of Parliament 18 and 19 Vic. c. 54, power was given to the Legislative Assembly, in its first Session, and from time to time afterwards, to prepare and adopt such Standing Rules and Orders as should appear best adapted for the purposes there enumerated, all of which Rules and Orders shall be laid before the Governor, and being by him approved, shall become binding and of force." It was contended that, under the express terms of this section, every Standing Order made by the Assembly, before it can become binding and of force, must be laid before the Governor and be approved by him, and that it thence necessarily follows that Rules made by the Imperial Parliament, after he had given his assent to the Standing Order authorizing resort to be had to the Rules of that Parliament not having been laid before him and not having been approved by him, can have no validity.

Lord Selborne: The learned Judge means the House of Commons?

The Solicitor-General: Yes, my Lord. Then his Lordship continues. "We are clearly of that opinion; to hold otherwise would be yielding to the Imperial Parliament the power, in cases for which any local orders have not expressly provided, to prescribe Rules sanctioned neither by the Assembly nor the Governor. But this authority cannot be thus conceded without a direct violation of the 35th section already mentioned. By that section the Standing Orders of the Assembly must be adopted by the Assembly itself, and the Governor must approve them to give them validity. This adoption cannot take place till the Rules are in existence to adopt, and the Governor's approval cannot be held to have been given to Rules not laid before him for his sanction; the Governor might undoubtedly approve as he did in globo of the adoption of such existing Imperial Parliamentary Rules and Orders as it was competent for the Assembly itself to pass, because of them he must be taken to have had cognizance; but of Rules and Orders not then made he could know nothing, and therefore could form no judgment of the propriety of applying them." But you have formed a judgment as to the propriety of adopting whatever the British House of Commons might adopt. Then his Lordship says: "If therefore the Standing Orders set out in the second plea—his Lordship means the third plea, but it is the second plea demurred to—If therefore the Standing Orders set out in the second plea to the removal of the Plaintiff on the 23rd of April in terms professes to adopt Rules of the Imperial Parliament to be made hereafter, it is ultra vires and of no effect. But independently of this, and also of the question whether the Assembly itself has any power to pass such an Order, Order, we are of opinion that the Order in question does not in terms apply to such future Rules of the Imperial Parliament, inasmuch as the direction to resort to the Rules, forms, and usages of the Imperial Parliament must be held to apply only to such Rules, forms, and usages as it was competent for the Assembly with the Governor's approval to assent to, as it must be intended, that in framing the Rule in question, that only which could be lawfully done was the thing intended. It follows from this, in our opinion, that this second plea is no answer to the Declaration, as it is based upon Rules which had no validity so far as concerned the Legislative Assembly. We come now to the first plea, to the same trespass of the 23rd April, which seeks to justify the action of the Defendant with reference to any special Rules, but apparently on the inherent right of the Assembly as a legislative body, to exclude the Plaintiff as one of its Members in the manner complained of. The power of legislative bodies in the Colonies of the Empire to deal with obstructions and contempts has, on several occasions, formed the subject of discussion in the Privy Council, and the decisions of that tribunal have not at all times been consistent with each other. The Privy Council being, so far as the Colonies are concerned, their Court of official appeal from the Common Law Courts of the United Kingdom, it might reasonably be expected that its judgments should, on all occasions, be uniform on any given question, no matter how often it might be submitted for decision."

Now, my Lords, I need not read the next paragraph, I think, but his Lordship points out the difference between the judgment in the case of Beaumont and Barrett and the subsequent cases, and taking up the reading, my Lord, at line 36 on the same page, namely, page 9, it runs thus—"In 1821 the power of the House of Representatives in the United States to bring before it and punish a person not a Member, for a contempt, was upheld by the Supreme Court, then presided over by Chief Justice Marshall, who had Mr. Justice Storey as one of his associates. On that occasion the judgment of the Court was delivered by Mr. Justice Johnson. The case is, Anderson v. Dunn, reported in 6 Wheaton, 204. The language of this judgment is slightly rhetorical, but it is, as might be expected from the eminence of the tribunal, a well-reasoned deliverance. At the outset the Court says that the pleadings had narrowed down the merits to the simple inquiry whether the House of Representatives can take cognizance of contempt committed against themselves under any circumstances. In discussing the question the Court made the following observations, which obviously have a wide and general application. But if there is one maxim which necessarily rides over all others in the practical application of Government, it is that the public functionaries must be left at liberty to exercise the powers which the people have entrusted to them. The interests and dignity of those who created them require the exertion of the powers indisputable to the ends of their creation. That a deliberate Assembly, clothed with the majesty of the people and charged with the care of all that is dear to them, composed of the most distinguished citizens selected and drawn together from every quarter of a great nation, whose deliberations are required by public opinion to be conducted under the eyes of the public, and whose decisions must be clothed with all that sanctity which unlimited confidence in their wisdom and purity can inspire;—that such an Assembly should not possess the power to suppress rudeness or repel insult, is a supposition too wild to be suggested. But it is argued that the inference (if any) arising under the constitution, is against the exercise of the powers here asserted by the House of Representatives, that the express grant of power to punish their Members respectively, and to expel them by the application of a familiar maxim, raises an implication against the power to punish any other than their own Members. This argument proves too much; for its direct application would lead to the annihilation of almost every power of Congress. In reply to the suggestion that on this same foundation of necessity might be raised a superstructure of implied powers in the Executive and every other Department and even Ministerial Officer of the Government, it would be sufficient to observe that neither analogy nor precedent would support the assertion of such powers in any other than a legislative or judicial body."

Lord Blackburn: Is that last paragraph part of the Act?

The Solicitor-General: I do not know, my Lord.

Lord Blackburn: I half suspect it is part of the Act.

The Solicitor-General: I read it as being part of the Chief Justice's Judgment; at any rate it is adopted by the learned Chief Justice. Then it goes on at line 28—"Even corruption anywhere else would not contaminate the sources of political life. In the retirement of the Cabinet, it is not expected that the Executive can be approached by indignity or insult, nor can it be necessary to the Executive or any other Department to hold a public deliberative Assembly. These are not arguments; they are visions which mar the enjoyment of actual blessings with the attack or feints of the harpies of imagination."

Lord Blackburn: That must be all United States, I think.

The Solicitor-General: I think so, my Lord. Then it continues—"Thus it appears that those two high tribunals—the Supreme Court of the United States in 1821, and the Privy Council in 1836—held that a legislative body having supreme legislative authority had, from the necessity of the case, power to punish a person not a Member for a contempt committed elsewhere than in the presence of the legislative body itself. In Keilley v. Carson, however, the soundness of this view was called in question, six years after the decision of Beaumont v. Barrett," and then the Chief Justice quoted a part of Lord Wensleydale's Judgment, which I think I have already read to your Lordship. On page 11, line 21, his Lordship says—"Their Lordships having thus decided in clear opposition to the Judgment of Beaumont v. Barrett, go on to say in express terms (p. 91) that they 'do not consider that case as one by which they ought to be bound in deciding the present question.' It will be observed that in the case of Keilley v. Carson the point decided was as to the power of a Colonial Assembly to punish for contempts committed by strangers not in its presence. The question, their Lordships say (p. 81) 'whether the House of Assembly could commit by way of punishment for a contempt on the face of it does not arise in this case.' In Fenton v. Hampton, 11 Moore's Privy Council Appeals, page 347, decided in 1858, the same point arose as in Keilley v. Carson, and the Privy Council (p. 397) thought they were bound by that case, the greater authority of which, as compared with Beaumont v. Barrett, it was quite unnecessary to enlarge upon. The right of a Colonial Assembly to punish for a contempt committed in its presence remained undetermined till 1866, when it arose for express decision in the case of Doyle v. Falconer, Law Reports, 1 Privy Council Appeals, page 328." Then his Lordship refers to the facts of that case, and afterwards quotes from the Judgment which I have read to your Lordships.

Lord Blackburn: Was that subsequent to this case of Doyle v. Falconer?

The Solicitor-General: The date of Dill v. Murphy was the 2nd February, 1864, and the date of Doyle v. Falconer is November 8, 1866.

Lord Blackburn: It was subsequent?

The

The Solicitor-General: Now, my Lords, at line 26, page 12, the learned Judge says—"In the paragraph of the Judgment here cited we have it authoritatively decided how far by the Common Law the power of a Colonial Assembly extends in dealing with contempt and interruptions to their proceedings. They cannot in any case punish, they can only remove the offender, and, if a Member, they have the power to exclude him for a time, or, even as their Lordships hold, to expel him, in which last case however the constituency might at once proceed to a new election, which they could not do in the case of a suspension. In the case of a stranger, who has no right without permission to be present, they may exclude him altogether; but in the case of a Member, who, not having been formally expelled, has a right to be present while not obstructing the proceedings, they can exclude him as long only as the necessity exists for his exclusion by reason of such obstruction. The duration of such exclusion must be determined on each separate occasion when the necessity for it arises. It would be absurd to limit it to the mere time occupied in the offending Member's removal, so as to admit of his return to the Chamber immediately afterwards." That passage of the learned Judge's Judgment seems to me to concede the whole point which I desire to mention, that the duration of such exclusion must be determined on each separate occasion when the necessity for it arises, with the addition which I should contend for if necessary, that the necessity must be determined by the Assembly itself acting bona fide. Then his Lordship says—"It would be equally absurd to hold that he might be indefinitely excluded. The only reasonable view to take of this power of exclusion is to limit it to the actual sitting during which the necessity for its exercise arose." With great respect to the Chief Justice, one does not see why it is quite absurd. If it be indefinite exclusion, it means during pleasure or until further order, or until the Member shall make submission and undertake not to interrupt the proceedings of the House again. Then his Lordship continued—"When a Member while the House is sitting insults the Speaker, as in the Dominica case, and persists in so insulting him, his removal is obviously a proper and necessary thing to enable the business to proceed, and there can be no right in the Member so misconducting himself and so removed, to come back immediately after on making a promise to discontinue his obstructive conduct. The House cannot reasonably be expected, on such a promise being given, to allow the offender to return with the possibility of the same misconduct being repeated, and the like order for exclusion being again rendered necessary. Such a proceeding would partake too much of the character of burlesque to be laid down as the rule in such cases. If the House, having removed one of its Members for obstructing its proceedings thinks fit, on being satisfied that there is no further likelihood of his continuing his misconduct, to re-admit him immediately after, they will of course do so, but during that sitting they need not further concern themselves about his re-admission. At the next or any subsequent sitting the excluded Member must, if he has not been formally expelled, have the right to resume his place in Parliament, unless he is then again guilty of obstructive conduct, or presents himself in a condition such as to render his presence itself an obstruction. The right to exclude for a time, which the Privy Council has declared to be the law, cannot in reason be extended beyond the sitting when its exercise is called for. It is a right to be exercised for one sitting only, for the plain reason that until the contrary appears a longer exclusion is unnecessary."

Well, my Lords, perhaps that might be a contempt, subject to this that the Legislative Assembly itself is to be the Judge whether a longer exclusion is or is not necessary for the purpose of maintaining its order.

Then his Lordship says—"In the present case the plea alleges the Plaintiff's suspension from the service of the House by a Resolution of the Assembly." And then it goes on to say—"That afterwards, during the same Session of Parliament, and while the said suspension still remained in force, the Plaintiff entered the said Legislative Assembly Chamber, while the said Assembly was sitting for the despatch of the business of Parliament at the said meeting in the first count mentioned, and claimed the right to sit and serve as such Member; and thereupon the Defendant, as such Speaker as aforesaid, requested the Plaintiff to withdraw from the said Chamber, which the Plaintiff then refused to do; whereupon the Defendant, acting under the authority of the said Resolutions, and in order to enforce the same, directed the Sergeant-at-Arms of the said Assembly to remove the Plaintiff from the said Chamber."

That, your Lordships will remember, is the second plea.

Then his Lordship says—"There is no statement in this plea of any time having been fixed by the House for the continuance of the Plaintiff's suspension; but that some time or other was in the contemplation of the House must be inferred from the allegation that the Plaintiff entered the Chamber 'while the said suspension still remained in force.' In this plea a right is therefore set up in the Assembly to suspend a Member for some time definite or indefinite, quite apart from the question of obstructive conduct actually existing. It is impossible to distinguish this alleged right to suspend from a right to punish or coerce even, and is no longer apprehended, and that is precisely a right which the Privy Council has declared that Colonial Assemblies do not possess. If the plea had alleged that the Plaintiff had obstructed the proceedings of the House, and that having for such obstruction been removed, he returned to the Chamber without the permission of the House during that same sitting the case would have been different, and the justification would have been complete. But it cannot be held that a Member of the Legislative Assembly can be "suspended" at its pleasure for misconduct of any kind: he may be expelled if sufficient grounds exist to warrant the House in taking that extreme course, and of such sufficiency the House itself must of necessity be the sole judge."

I confess I do not follow logically the grounds on which you could maintain the right of exclusion, because if a Member's conduct has been such as to render him unfit to be a Member of the Assembly by reason of his obstructive and disorderly conduct then you may expel him, and say he is unfit to be a Member for the time. I should submit humbly that, subject to the question as to the rights of the constituents, which would involve the proposition that you may suspend him for a time until he gives guarantees to the satisfaction of the Assembly that the conduct which is complained of will not be repeated in that case; then I admit it may be necessary for the protection of the House itself that he be expelled; but I venture to submit that cases may arise in which it may be necessary for the House, without going to the extreme length of expulsion, to suspend him from the service of the House until he has made his submission.

Then his Lordship goes on to say—"But in the absence of any resolution formally expelling a Member he cannot be 'suspended,' although he may be removed to enable the business of any given sitting to go on, and he may for that purpose be kept excluded during that sitting which he has so interrupted and obstructed. From what we have already said it will be gathered that, in our opinion, the Assembly has neither the power to adopt from the Imperial Parliament nor to pass of its own authority any Standing Order giving itself the power to punish an obstructing Member, or remove him from the Chamber for any period longer than the sitting during which the obstruction occurred."

Lord

Lord Blackburn : His Lordship uses the words " of its own authority." I suppose the change means a considered resolution of the House ?

The Solicitor-General : It means a Standing Order as in expressed terms passed under the 35th section of the Act.

Lord Blackburn : Passed under the 35th section, and may from time to time to the Governor seem fit.

Lord Selborne : This point has occurred to me. I should like to know under what conditions we are hearing this case. I see that the only averment in the plea of any Rule, form, or usage of the House of Commons is that contained in the 3rd plea, which plea has subsequently made Orders as to the obstruction, and there is no averment in the second plea that there is any Rule, Order, or usage of the House of Commons. Let me, in connection with that, also call your attention to what I did not in the first instance observe, but which may deserve attention, and that is, that the Standing Order upon which reliance is placed as adopting the practice of the House of Commons is not expressed in those terms, but in these words—"Resort shall be had to the Rules, forms, and usages of the Imperial Parliament." What does that mean ?

The Solicitor-General : I do not know what it means, my Lord.

Lord Selborne : In the one case, what was really meant may have been the House of Commons, but it does not say so. In strict construction, it either means something which is in existence, or the Rules of both Houses of the Imperial Parliament ?

The Solicitor-General : It has been treated by the learned Chief Justice as meaning the House of Commons, and I have no doubt that was the meaning.

Lord Monkswell : Does he state that he appears to call it the Imperial Parliament ?

The Solicitor-General : At line 22, p. 8, the learned Judge refers to the Imperial Parliament.

Lord Blackburn : If you look at the Act, which was an Act of the Imperial Parliament, 35th section, you find it does not merely regulate the Council and the Assembly, but it also regulates the way in which Bills should be introduced from the one Assembly to the other, and the sending of messages from one House to the other, and for that purpose it would be necessary to have the Lords and Commons as in England.

Lord Blackburn : The second plea states the Rule of the House as being the Rule of the Imperial Parliament, if we take that.

Lord Selborne : I am afraid we could not take judicial notice of that, because, if in a reasonable way we can arrive at a conclusion that it does mean the subject matter of the House of Commons, it is very desirable to do so.

Lord Blackburn : The 35th section is that they shall make Standing Orders for the Legislative Council and Assembly also.

The Solicitor-General : The Legislative Council corresponds with the House of Lords here.

Lord Blackburn : It says that the Colonial House of Lords and Commons shall, respectively, from time to time, make Standing Orders, and those are not merely to regulate the conduct of the Colonial House of Commons and the Colonial House of Lords, but it is also as to how communications shall pass with regard to each other, relative to Votes, Bills, and various things ; and I think you will find that they say, in such matters as are left unnoticed, we will apply to the Rules of the Imperial Parliament, which means the Rules of the Lords and Commons respectively, as to each.

Lord Selborne : It is very desirable that we should not put a construction on it, if it does not arise.

The Solicitor-General : If I understand the point, I am afraid that will not do—they are not to adopt it, if I may say so, because it is a Standing Order of the Legislative Assembly alone, and not a Standing Order of the Council.

Lord Selborne : There are other observations which occur to me, namely, that there seems to be no plea of any Rule, form, or usage of the House of Commons applicable to this matter, except the third plea and the resolution subsequently made.

The Solicitor-General : That is so.

Sir Richard Couch : The second plea seems to be entirely relied on.

The Solicitor-General : That is why I considered the second plea as raising the question as to which I addressed myself, namely, the exercise of an inherent power.

Lord Selborne : It seems to me that there arises an important question, namely, whether taking the more limited construction of the resolutions passed, applicable to the existing rules, whether there was or not any Rule which was decisive as to this ; if it is not pleaded that there was, I suppose on this demurrer we cannot enter into it.

The Solicitor-General : Unless your Lordships could take the pleas as a whole, I might say there is another construction which is suggested of the resolution, which I have submitted to your Lordship.

Lord Blackburn : Taking the second plea, and the second plea alone, supposing the third plea was out of the question, I suppose we might take judicial notice to some extent that the House of Commons in this country, and the Assembly under this Act, have the inherent power to manage and regulate their debates and proceedings, and as such would have power, when a person disturbed them, to remove him ; but whether there is power to say they shall suspend him generally from the House is a question which one would require to have argued. I do not at present express any opinion on it.

Lord Selborne : I think Sir Erskine May refers to it in his book.

Lord Blackburn : Sir Erskine May says quite enough to show you the powers of the House of Commons could be exercised.

The Solicitor-General : There is a ruling of Sir Henry Brand, on page 70 of the book. The ruling was this—it is put in inverted commas, therefore I suppose it is the exact words—"That any Member guilty of contempt shall be liable to such punishment, whether censure or suspension from the House, or by commitment, as the House may adjudge." That is a ruling of the 25th July, 1877.

Lord Monkswell : The Chief Justice, at the end of his Judgment, goes rather further. He says not only had they no power to exercise, but they had no power "to adopt from the Imperial Parliament nor to pass of its own authority any Standing Order giving itself the power to punish an obstructing Member or remove him from the Chamber for any period longer than the sitting during which the obstruction occurs."

The Solicitor-General : As I understand, if an express Standing Order to that effect was passed, it would be ultra vires.

Lord

Lord Blackburn : If the law was to that effect it would be, but it seems quite impossible under the 35th section of this Act, if they passed Standing Orders, that it could affect others which were passed afterwards in the House of Commons, those which were confirmed by the Governor. It seems impossible to do it.

The Solicitor-General : I understand the Chief Justice to mean that if such an order had been expressly passed, it would have been ultra vires.

Sir Richard Couch : That is going too far.

Lord Blackburn : He does not give his reasons for it.

The Solicitor-General : I am quite sensible of the omission in the statement of the plea to which Lord Selborne was good enough to call my attention, and I have argued the question therefore on the inherent power of a Legislative Assembly to suspend, either during pleasure, or for a limited time for the protection of its own order and decency of debate, and I do not propose to say anything more about that. The practice of the House of Commons may be at least useful for the purpose, as some illustration of that inherent power, as showing that the mother of all the Colonial Parliaments has herself that power, and has exercised that power as something inherent in her constitution. Of course the latin maxim, Lex et consuetudo Parliamenti, is not necessarily part of the Common Law of New South Wales, but it is some illustration of the question, upon which I have the authority of your Lordships' Board, as to the nature of the power which is considered necessary for a Legislative Assembly to possess for the purpose of its own protection.

Now, my Lords, there is another construction which has been suggested of the resolution, which I will state to your Lordships, though I am quite conscious of the answer that may be given to it, and it is this, that you must read the resolution as being what it was in fact, having regard to the business before the House, and the resolutions of the House, that what was intended was to pass a resolution in accordance with the Standing Order of the House of Commons, which did not require the time to be mentioned, the effect of which would be, in the first case, suspension for a week; and if your Lordships could import into the construction of this plea, and of the resolution relied on in the plea, the knowledge that it was passed with a view to the Standing Order of the House of Commons, it might be construed as to suspension for a week.

Lord Selborne : If the Standing Order of the House of Commons is virtually a Standing Order of the Legislative Assembly, of course that is a very easy process; if it was not, I do not see how it is to be done,—it would be only for the purpose of interpretation.

The Solicitor-General : I am quite conscious of the defect in the proposition, my Lord. It is stated that the Rules of the House of Commons were on the table of the House; I should think the suspension would be either during a sitting or debate.

Lord Selborne : The words are—"from the service of the House." If it were only during a debate, I should have thought that would be required to be expressed.

The Solicitor-General : There is no principle or reason for the suspension to be limited in any way to the sitting rather than the debate, or for the remainder of the sitting rather than for the Session of Parliament.

Lord Blackburn : I suppose if the obstruction took place in Committee, and the Committee passed a resolution immediately afterwards, evidently they are acting on the supposition that they are correct?

The Solicitor-General : There is no doubt about that.

Lord Blackburn : And immediately afterwards the House assembles, and then orders Mr. Taylor to be suspended from the service of the House without defining what time?

Lord Selborne : It cannot mean the Committee, because Committee, as far as the particular thing is concerned, is at an end.

Lord Blackburn : The Committee has reported to the House, I suppose, the spirit of the thing?

The Solicitor-General : Of course; it is always difficult to argue demurrer to pleas, as one has to pretend not to know things which everybody knows. Of course it was intended to pass a resolution to act on the Standing Order of the House of Commons.

Lord Selborne : The House continues without adjournment to the end of the sitting; at the end of the sitting it adjourns, whether it goes beyond that is fairly an arguable question?

The Solicitor-General : I think, my Lords, I have said all that I can usefully say to your Lordships on the case. [Adjourned for a short time.]

Mr. Dennistoun Wood : May it please your Lordships, I hope not to detain you very long, both because my learned friend the Solicitor-General has laid the matter so fully before your Lordships, and because I did not at all anticipate that I should have been called upon to address the Committee, my belief being that Mr. Rigby would have been present.

I shall follow the course pursued by the learned Solicitor-General in dealing first with the plea which sets out the Standing Orders of the House of Commons, which, as the Appellants contend, have been adopted by the Legislative Assembly of New South Wales. The question of course is, in the first place, whether the Standing Order made by the Legislative Assembly adopted all the usages of the Imperial Parliament; whether, as I submit, that expression must be read, "the usages of the House of Commons which were in existence at the time this Standing Order was framed"; or whether it adopted prospectively all such usages of the Imperial Parliament as might be applicable to the condition of the Colony.

I would call attention, in the first place, to the fact that this very Order contemplates something in the future; it refers, in the first place, to "hereinafter"—that is, to other regulations of the Standing Order.

Lord Blackburn : Where is the word "hereinafter" introduced?

Mr. Dennistoun Wood : "In all cases not specially provided for hereinafter."

Lord Blackburn : That means in this document.

Mr. Dennistoun Wood : That is what I meant to say. I do not read "hereinafter" as "hereafter." It is "in this document"—that is, in the other clauses of this writing, on which this is the first clause; but it goes on to say "or by Sessional or other Orders;" that is, Orders which are to be made in future.

Lord Selborne : That would be true; but that would not be sensible though, if the words that follow have reference only to the existing Rules of the Imperial Parliament.

Mr. Dennistoun Wood : It shows that the Legislative Assembly was contemplating cases which might arise in future, as well as those which existed at the time.

Lord Selborne : What it was to do itself in the future it did contemplate, no doubt.

Mr. Dennistoun Wood : There is a looking forward to the future—cases may arise in the future.

The

The question, then, is, "When those cases do arise, what shall be our guide in those circumstances?" I submit, the point to be regarded is not the time of the passing of this Order of which the 1st clause is set out here, but the cases which may arise from time to time. In the year 1888, we will say, a Sessional Order is made. Then it may be suggested that this Sessional Order meets a case which arises in that year. It appears it does not meet it, and then the Legislative Assembly would inquire what are the usages, there being nothing applicable in the Orders set out here, nor in the Orders which have been made since. We then inquire, "What are the usages of the Imperial Parliament at this time?"

Lord Blackburn: At which time?

Mr. Dennistoun Wood: At the time at which the necessity for applying them occurs. It may be said, "Why did not they expressly say so?" but that is an argument which may be used on a great many occasions. An Act of Parliament is repealed by implication, and it would be much better and simpler to repeal it expressly; but still if the intention is sufficiently clear, the Act of Parliament would be held to have been repealed by implication, although it is considered, and properly so, a slovenly mode of legislation. I do not deny that this may be a rather slovenly way of making a Standing Order; but still if, looking at this Order on the whole, your Lordships can see it did contemplate that that peculiar case might arise from time to time, then I say, at all events, it assists us a little in saying that probably the standard for determining those difficulties which may arise from time to time was not the usage of the House of Commons at the time this Standing Order was made, but the usages which were in existence at the time the case arose, when it became necessary to look for a guide to govern the case. Lord Selborne made reference to the words at the end of this Standing Order, "So far as the same can be applied to the proceedings of this House." If I rightly understood his Lordship, he was of opinion that that meant that if they could be applied, whether they were suitable or not, they must be applied. These words, so far as the same could be applied, were very probably suggested by the words of the Act 9th George the Fourth, cap. 83, which provided that all laws and statutes in force within the Realm of England at the time of the passing of this Act shall be applied in the administration of justice to the Courts of New South Wales and Van Diemens Land, so far as the same can be applied within the said Colonies. I do not know that there has been any decision on the point, but it has always been the understanding in the Colony that those words, so far as the same can be applied, do not mean that they are to be applied if there was a possibility of applying them, but that they are to be applied merely if they are suitable to the circumstances of the Colony, so far as they reasonably can be applied. I submit these words, so far as the same can be applied, do not necessarily import every Standing Order of the House of Commons which by any possibility could be applied, but they adopt only such usages as may reasonably be applied. Now the case has been put of Grand Committees. It is said,— "Are they to be applied to the Legislative Assembly of New South Wales?" Well, of course I submit that if the Legislative Assembly of New South Wales thought it desirable that there should be Grand Committees they could appoint them, and that the usages of the House of Commons as to Grand Committees would then apply to those Grand Committees appointed by the Legislature of New South Wales, but that they would not be forced on the Legislature of New South Wales. The Grand Committees would not exist unless the Legislative Assembly appointed two or three or as many Grand Committees as might be necessary. It would be necessary for the Legislative Assembly to create those Grand Committees; but if it thought that it was a proper thing to be done, then, if it chose to appoint Grand Committees, all the usages of the House of Commons applicable to Grand Committees would apply to these Grand Committees so appointed by the Legislative Assembly of the Colony.

The only other remark I wish to make on this branch of the case is this. It may be that even if these Standing Orders of the House of Commons have not been adopted expressly by these words of this first Standing Order of the Assembly of New South Wales, yet they might have been adopted impliedly, for instance: the Assembly might create a practice, and it might be always understood that the period of suspension in the Assembly would be the same as the period of suspension in the House of Commons, under similar circumstances; this would be by the practice of the Assembly of New South Wales.

Lord Blackburn: That is not the plea.

Mr. Dennistoun Wood: No doubt there is that difficulty, that it is not expressly averred that they had by their course of practice adopted impliedly these Standing Orders of the House of Commons.

Lord Blackburn: It is not only not expressly avowed, but the whole form of the plea. I am speaking of the third plea, seems to be inconsistent with it.

Lord Selborne: And it is not easy to see how they could be adopted by implication, because the Governor's consent is necessary.

Mr. Dennistoun Wood: It might be an interpretation of the order which they passed. The order of suspension does not state any express period of suspension; it may have been a matter always understood, that if no express period was mentioned, then the period would be such as would correspond with the period under like circumstances in the House of Commons; in this way it would be something which would enable the Supreme Court to ascertain what was the meaning, under the circumstances, to be put upon this resolution of suspension passed by the Legislative Assembly.

I will not trouble your Lordships with any further remarks on that plea; and passing to the next one, I would then submit that even if the resolutions are not to be considered to have the power of suspending for a week, in analogy to the effect of similar restrictions passed in the House of Commons, yet at all events they must amount to a suspension during pleasure, that is to say, until the Legislative Assembly had in some way signified its pleasure that the Member suspended should resume his part in fulfilling the legislative duties. It seems to have been admitted by the Court, and it does not seem to have been denied by the Respondent, that suspension is not merely during the discussion of the actual matter before the House at the time the suspension took place; it is said it must be during the sitting, but it seems difficult to see why it should be during the sitting.

Lord Selborne: There is an adjournment at the end of the sitting, is not there?

Mr. Dennistoun Wood: Yes.

Lord Selborne: That draws a line surely.

Mr. Dennistoun Wood: We will say a Member is suspended for wilfully obstructing the proceedings of the House on the discussion of the Estimate; the Estimates contain many items; a Member debates at reasonable length one item in the Estimate; he is reported as wilfully obstructing the proceedings and he is suspended. It would be as the Chief Justice says a burlesque if, as soon as that item had been voted, he were allowed to return to the House, when he immediately might commence the same course of obstructing proceedings with regard to the next item; he might continue from time to time, and be suspended from time to time; therefore, it is said, the suspension must necessarily be longer than after the termination of the business which was in hand at the time the suspension took place. Supposing the House sits at 4 o'clock, and as sometimes happens sits till 12 at noon of the day following. If he is suspended shortly after 4 o'clock, and cannot take part in the proceedings from 5 o'clock to 12 the next day, and the House resumes its sittings on the next day at 4 o'clock in the afternoon, it is quite clear that the suspension from the commencement of this long sitting until the termination of that sitting is for a longer period than the suspension from the termination of that sitting to the commencement of the next sitting. It is impossible to say that the suspension during a sitting is necessarily for a shorter time than the suspension extending over more than one sitting. It may or may not be the case according to circumstances. Supposing at the next sitting of the House the Estimates are still under discussion. If the Member, as the Solicitor-General puts it, resumes his obstructive proceedings, he may then be suspended, it is said, until the next day. Then the items of the Estimates are considered day after day. It is all really one business, although the discussion is no doubt broken by the necessary adjournment which the requirements of the Members necessitate, but still the business is all one business, it is the discussion of the Estimates, and it is all one piece of business. From the inability of human beings to sit for ever, there must be an adjournment, but why is it to be said that if there is an adjournment for 4 or 6 hours the Member is entitled to resume his seat and to perform his functions when the House meets again after the adjournment, while it is admitted that he may be excluded from voting on those Estimates for a longer period than the interval between the conclusion of one sitting and the commencement of the next?

Then, my Lords, I submit that after all the question which is before your Lordships is as put, I understood, by Lord Monkswell: can your Lordship say that a suspension for a longer period than a sitting is, on the face of it, something unnecessary? Your Lordships are not asked, as I take it, to decide whether this was a suspension for a reasonable time or not. I submit that the other side must make out that this suspension was on the face of it an unreasonable suspension, that is, a suspension for an unreasonable period. I call in aid the previous argument I have used to show that this cannot be determined judicially. As a matter of fact it may be so, or as a matter of fact it may not be so; but there is nothing on the face of these pleadings to show that this suspension was a suspension for an unreasonable period. There is nothing I submit to show, and your Lordships, I submit, cannot decide as a matter of law, however the fact may vary in different cases, that a suspension for a longer time than the sitting during which the suspension took place, is necessarily an unreasonable suspension, and therefore void.

I submit that if the Assembly has the power of deciding whether a Member's conduct has been such as to give it the right of suspending him,—if that is necessarily a matter for the decision of the Assembly, I submit it is equally a matter for the decision of the Assembly whether it is necessary to suspend him during the discussion of the particular matter which was on hand at the time the suspension took place, or during the whole of the sitting, or during a longer period than the sitting, or even during pleasure. I submit that all these are things which are for the Assembly itself to judge. It may decide them rightly or wrongly as a matter of fact; but being the Judge in these matters, its decision, I submit, cannot be called in question. It is in fact, I submit, very much the same matter as arose before your Lordships some years ago in the case of the Colonial Bank of Australasia v. Willan, where all the authorities bearing on this matter were considered—that is, the right of a body who has the power of deciding to decide wrong—the power given to a body to decide necessarily implies that it has the power to decide wrong. Your Lordships there considered all the authorities. That case is reported in Law Report, 5 Privy Council.

Lord Selborne: It was not decided that they had the power to decide wrong, but that their decision had an effect in law.

Lord Blackburn: If acting within their own jurisdiction in deciding nobody except the Court of Appeal could say that they are wrong. That is rather the proposition, is it not?

Mr. Dennistoun Wood: Yes, that is a more accurate statement of it. In that case I think there was no appeal; but the Supreme Court quashed the decision, on the ground that the decision was manifestly wrong. Your Lordships said that the decision of the Warder sitting as a Judge being the appointed Judge in this matter, whether right or wrong, could not be impeached. I need not trouble your Lordships with reading the judgment in extenso, but I would merely refer to pages 442 and 443. In order to determine the first, it is necessary to have a clear apprehension of what is meant by the term "want of jurisdiction." There must of course be certain conditions on which the right of every Tribunal of limited jurisdiction to exercise that jurisdiction depends. But those conditions may be founded either on the character and constitution of the Tribunal, or upon the nature of the subject matter of the inquiry, or upon certain proceedings which have been made essential preliminaries to the inquiry, or upon facts, or a fact to be adjudicated upon in the course of the inquiry. It is obvious that conditions of the last differ materially from those of the three other classes. Objections founded on the personal incompetency of the Judge, or on the nature of the subject matter, or on the absence of some essential preliminary, must obviously, in most cases, depend upon matters which, whether apparent on the face of the proceedings or brought before the Superior Court by affidavit, are extrinsic to the adjudication impeached. I submit that none of the three cases put there apply in the present. There is no question as to the competency of the Tribunal nor as to the nature of the subject matter. It is a subject matter with which they have a right to deal. Then, as to essential preliminaries, no Act prescribes that a Member is to have a particular form of notice, or that his case is to be adjudicated upon in a particular way. The only objection here is that as a matter of fact they have decided wrongly—that he should be suspended for a longer period than he ought to have been suspended. "But an objection that the Judge has erroneously found a fact which though essential to the validity of his order he was competent to try, assumes that, having general jurisdiction over the subject matter, he properly entered upon the inquiry, but miscarried in the course of it. The Superior Court cannot quash an adjudication upon such an objection without assuming the functions of a Court of Appeal, and the power to re-try a question which the Judge was competent to decide. Accordingly, the authorities, of which Reg. v. Bolton and Reg. v. St. Olave may be taken as examples, establish that an adjudication by a Judge, having jurisdiction over the subject matter, is, if no defects appear on the face of it, to be taken as conclusive of the facts stated therein, and that the Court of Queen's Bench will not, on certiorari, quash such an adjudication on the ground that any such fact, however essential, has been erroneously found." Before I sit down, I would make one remark with regard to the language of the Court. Of course, it must be taken secundum subjectum materiam. Your Lordships on that occasion were dealing, of course, with an appeal from a Court, and the language throughout refers to a Court, and to judicial proceedings, and so on; but the same principle applies to proceedings which are not before a Court. The case of Reg. v. St. Olaves was not an adjudication by a Court, but by the Westminster Board of Works. I merely make this observation in order to meet anything which may be said to the effect that your Lordships then were speaking of the decision of a Court. One of the very cases referred to was not an adjudication by a Court, but by a Board of Works; and if an adjudication by a Board of Works cannot be interfered with because the body which made that adjudication had power to make it, I submit a fortiori an adjudication by the Legislative Assembly of New South Wales ought not to be upset because your Lordships may say that there is no evidence before you that a suspension until the termination of the sitting would not have been amply sufficient for the purpose.

Lord Selborne: Their Lordships do not think it necessary to call upon you, Mr. Taylor, as to the third plea; but upon the second plea they wish to hear you.

Mr. Taylor: I will trouble your Lordships with a few remarks upon the subject. I appear here as Respondent in person in affirmation of the judgment of the Court below; I must tell your Lordships that my appearance in person is caused by the res angusta domi; and I must appeal to that consideration which the Court always extends to suitors who are not lawyers by profession. I come a long and weary way to lay the facts before your Lordships, because I think there are incidents, both as to law and facts, which it is necessary your Lordships should hear, before deciding this Appeal upon an ex parte application.

Lord Selborne: As to facts, we cannot go beyond the Pleadings.

Mr. Taylor: Exactly. But I wish to show that there are certain facts there which might be wrongly interpreted. I wish, for the basis of my argument, to refer to the facts; and I will keep within the Record, because I know that anything beyond the Record—anything that is not pleaded—is not before your Lordships.

In the first place, I am a Member of the Legislative Assembly, and was so at the date of the alleged trespass. The Appellant is and was the Speaker of the said Legislative Assembly. On a certain date I made a speech in opposition to the military estimates of the then Government. That is admitted in the Pleadings.

Lord Selborne: I am afraid that is not on the Record. We must take it that they pronounced you to be guilty of obstruction.

Mr. Taylor: The Pleadings show that I was making a speech in opposition to a Vote of Supply.

Lord Blackburn: I do not much doubt that it was as you say, making a speech against the Estimates.

Mr. Taylor: Yes. After speaking for a certain time the Chairman of Committees ruled that I was repeating my arguments, and accused me of talking against time, and he thereupon, and this is what I wish to draw their Lordships' attention to, acting under the specific authority of the Standing Order, included in the third plea, put the question to the Committee that I be suspended from the proceedings of the House. Now I do not doubt for a moment that the Legislative Assembly has an inherent right to suspend, and that is what this second plea has to determine; but what I say is this, that its power of suspension must in every case be determined by the probable duration of the circumstances occasioning the suspension; and I say further, that they have no inherent power, and no Assembly in the world has the inherent power, to suspend its Members without debate, that is to say, to refuse a right to the person upon whom they intend to pass sentence of suspension, being heard in his own defence, or to refuse the right to every Member of the House to move a motion of amendment or of adjournment, or to discuss the motion.

Lord Selborne: We cannot, on this Record, assume anything one way or the other on those points.

Mr. Taylor: The learned Counsel asked your Lordships to assume by the third plea that the intention of the second plea was seven days' suspension.

Lord Selborne: Relieving you from the argument on the third plea, you may take it we also relieve you from arguing that part. I think I may venture to say their Lordships will not construe the order of suspension with reference to the matter of the third plea.

Mr. Taylor: Very well, my Lords. The first thing I should like to draw your attention to in reference to the judgment is a manifest error into which the Court below fell, and into which your Lordships also seem to fall. The Chief Justice said—"This is an action brought by a Member of the Legislative Assembly against the Speaker (1) for expelling him from the Chamber of that body, during its sittings, on the 22nd of April last." That is not the allegation at all. The averments are not for the expulsion from the Chamber, which really took place on the 18th, but for removing him from the Chamber on his attempt to enter on two subsequent occasions. I desire particularly to draw your Lordships' attention to that. The Court below was wrong in drawing that inference, that this was an action for expelling me from the Chamber of that body during the sitting on the 22nd of April last, because no action is brought for that. I certainly think I can appeal to your Lordships, the House having acted under the Standing Order, having claimed to do so, and show your Lordships that there were these circumstances of not allowing the debate.

Lord Selborne: We cannot go into that; there is nothing about it in the Record.

Mr. Taylor: Then I take the exception upon other grounds, and that is, that the inherent right of the Legislative Assembly depends on the legal maxim "Quando lex aliquid concedit concedere videtur et illud sine quo res ipsa esse non potest." and that is, whatever is necessary to prevent the Legislation of the House from being rendered inoperative the House has a right to do. The inherent power of the House must be decided simply by the question of necessity, and I ask your Lordships what necessity there is to suspend a Member from the service of the House for an indefinite period. I put this as a matter of fact. Supposing that two years after the Legislative Assembly passed this resolution I claim to enter the House. I produce the writ which I received from my constituents. They derive their power from the Electoral Act, which is itself a legislative offshoot of the Constitution Act, an Imperial Act of Parliament. That is my authority to enter the House, but I am to be met then with the reply—"Some two years ago you were repeating your arguments, and you were, in the opinion of the Chairman of Committees, talking against time, and therefore you were suspended from the service of the House. It is true that the House has no apprehension of disturbance from you, and never had since that time, but nevertheless the House, having so suspended you, you are suspended from that day to this." I draw your Lordship's attention to the fact that the House took no steps to reinstate. I put that hypothetically. Supposing the House leaves the matter for three years, is that within the inherent power of the House. I say the internal discipline and inherent power must be bounded simply by the question of necessity; that is to say, this kind of resolution would be good—that such and such a Member, having obstructed the proceedings of the House, be suspended from the service of the House until he engage not further to offend. That is bounded by the necessity of the case, by the probable duration of the circumstances which caused the suspension. If a Member enters the House drunk, the House has an inherent power, under the legal maxim to which I have referred, to suspend him until he becomes sober. There the proportion is as to the restraint, and the circumstances occasioning the restraint. On the other hand, if a Member of Parliament becomes, unfortunately, insane, the House may keep him out until he becomes sane. There again there is a connection, there the restraint is in proportion to the duration of the circumstances causing the restraint. In the same manner, if a Member insults the Speaker, which it is not pretended was done in this case, he might be suspended until he offers reparation to the Speaker, until he regrets what he has done. If he is incessantly interrupting the House, then a resolution might be put, and would be legal, to the effect that having been repeatedly checked for conduct of that description, he be suspended until he promises to behave better. There is a definite term there. But where is the definite term here? It is simply indefinite suspension. It simply means that a Member may be suspended at the caprice of the House. Of course it is open to argument to say the House having done may undo it, but your Lordships know enough of the world and of Parliament to know that there is a very great deal of difference between a resolution being passed and getting a resolution rescinded,—there are all sorts of forms and obstacles in the way. It would be a matter within the province of the Government whether they brought a resolution on to rescind it or not, and in that way a Member might be suspended at pleasure. Your Lordships hold of course that I cannot deal with the question of debate. I say also that this power of indefinite suspension which is claimed is inconsistent with the 35th section of the Constitution Act; because, if that section was not included in the Constitution Act, then, under the legal maxim that I have quoted, the House would have power of its own accord to frame rules for its internal guidance and government; but there being special statutory provision as to how those rules are to be made, to govern the orderly conduct of the House, then I say the House is strictly bound by those rules. If your Lordships look at the 35th section, you will see that one of the conditions upon which the House is to have the control of its good order and government is that the House shall pass rules, and that they shall be assented to by the Governor. That means, in other words, that there is to be a prior formulation and a prior publicity of rules regulating the good order and government of the House. Now if the House on a sudden emergency of this description could do this act, could do what is unprecedented in law, then I say that is utterly inconsistent with the 35th section of the Constitution Act. And the object of that, your Lordships can see, is this:—It is admitted that the lex et consuetudo Parliamenti does not pass over to the Common Law of New South Wales—the Constitution Act has limited this power. Will your Lordships ask why that Constitution Act was limited? It was simply that this being then a young Colony, and a Colony which had to make its name, an institution was given to it as free as possible, but still not with all the powers and privileges of the House of Commons. An Englishman residing there might say “How do I know if I enter that House of Parliament but what, if I say anything that is not popular—anything that the majority of the Members do not like—the Members will deal unceremoniously with me; how do I know that I shall receive fair play?” The answer to that is this: The safety-valve is in the 35th section of the Act, which permits the Assembly to make such rules as they like for the internal discipline of its Members; but specifically lays down the law that there is to be another party, and that party is to be the Representative of Her Gracious Majesty. The Representative of Her Majesty is to watch over the administration of Parliamentary affairs, so far that he has the power of vetoing rules which are ill adapted to the ordinary conduct of the Assembly. The 35th section of the Constitution Act very clearly lays down the rule that there is to be prior formulation of rules, and that the Governor is to give his assent. Well, if the House can then do as it likes in a case of this sort, and suspend a Member beyond a time which is governed by reason and by the probable duration of the circumstances causing the suspension, then it is inconsistent with this 35th section of the Constitution Act.

Lord Selborne: It is your proposition that under that section, so far as regards the ordinary conduct of the business, no unwritten power can be exercised.

Mr. Taylor: No, I do not contend that. I contend that the unwritten power must be governed wholly by the doctrine of necessity. If you go beyond the doctrine of necessity at all, then it is necessary to have a prior formulation of the rules and the Governor's assent, or the opportunity of vetoing rules which are ill adapted. In the judgment of the Court below there is this quotation—“The point thus specially raised, and not up to that time determined, is at length decided as follows:—Is,” say their Lordships (p. 340), and this is in the Dominica case, “the power to punish and commit for contempts committed in its presence one necessary to the existence of such a body as the Assembly of Dominica and the proper exercise of the functions which it is intended to execute?” I put the same question. I say—Is the power to suspend a Member indefinitely for three days, three weeks, or three years—according as the House may itself, in some good humour, afterwards agree to rescind its resolution or to take the case in hand—one necessary to the existence of the body? If it is unnecessary to the existence of the body, then it does not come under the powers of the legal maxim I have referred to, and therefore it cannot be claimed by this unwritten law, and it is inconsistent with the 35th section of the Constitution Act. The judgment there was:—If a Member of a Colonial House of Assembly is guilty of disorderly conduct in the House whilst sitting he may be removed or excluded for a time, or even expelled. I submit that the meaning of “exclusion for a time” is the time governed by the probable duration of the offence, or, to put it perhaps in more logical terms, I say, that under this unwritten law the Legislative Assembly of New South Wales has no right to go beyond the probable duration and reasonable duration of the offence.

Lord Selborne: The offence is past.

Mr. Taylor: If they were to admit him again; for instance, if he is discussing a military estimate and he shows unreasonable opposition to it—such opposition to it that the House deem it to be obstruction, then they cannot keep him out beyond the discussion of that military estimate.

Lord Monkswell: That particular estimate.

Mr. Taylor: That particular estimate.

Lord Monkswell: So that if he is discussing an item in the Estimates you say they cannot keep him out longer than the discussion of that particular item?

Mr. Taylor: Not unless his conduct shows that he is inclined to carry out that obstruction to every item.

Lord Monkswell: Upon each item a question would arise.

Lord Selborne: Your proposition probably really means this, that the implied power cannot be extended beyond a time reasonable with reference to the occasion for its exercise. Mr.

Mr. Taylor : Yes, of course, if on each item he may renew his obstruction, he is very simply dealt with. If he offends once he is put out ; if he offends again he is put out again ; if he offends a third time, then the Chamber is within its unwritten power in passing a resolution that he be suspended until he pledges himself to behave better. If he does so pledge himself and does not behave better, then the House can expel him. What I do say is this, that if a Member is obstructing a particular item, and the plea here is simply that the Chairman of Committees declared that it was obstruction and that the Committee of the House assented by a majority—but I say that if a Member is so talking against time, perhaps from some conscientious objection to a vote, that is no reason why he can be kept out of the House for three years. That is what your Lordships have to decide.

Lord Selborne : It is three days in this case, according to your statement of the time. We cannot travel out of the record. I think you said the resolution was passed on the 18th, and the last of those offences was when ?

Mr. Taylor : On the 23rd, that is five days. I am referring to the Parliament Act which limits the duration of Parliament to three years.

Lord Selborne : You submit that on the same principle the suspension might be continued during the whole Parliament ?

Mr. Taylor : Yes, and for three days, three weeks, or three years, according to the caprice of Parliament. That simply means a lading out of punishment ; it is varying it at the caprice of the House. I feel that I should not be doing justice to myself if I did not draw your Lordships' attention to the fact that reliance was not on this inherent power. I wish to keep within the record as much as possible, but the learned Counsel who opened the case, asked for the consideration of the two pleas in one, as showing what really was the intention of the House. I think I am equally entitled with him to say the intention of the House was to obey the Standing Orders of the House of Commons.

Lord Selborne : You would hardly contend that if it was lawful without them that would make it unlawful, would you,—that a mistake on that point would make it unlawful if it would have been lawful without that mistake ?

Mr. Taylor : No, I will put this as a suppositious case. The Speaker rules that a Member has been talking against time, that the House itself has no power to deal with him except the power it derives from the House of Commons from a Standing Order recently passed, and the Speaker says the course on that occasion is that no debate is to be allowed. The question simply will be put, the majority of the Members vote for suspension, and the suspension lasts for a week.

Lord Blackburn : You are assuming that if there is obstruction to a debate at an earlier time, then that there is no power in the House to stop the Member, that they must suffer him to go on for ever. That I cannot agree with.

Mr. Taylor : No, I do not submit that.

Lord Blackburn : I cannot agree in that at all. There is a difficulty I see in construing this plea, because they do not seem to have acted on the notion of saying that the House might have been moved that he was delaying and obstructing, and that he be removed and kept out ; that does not seem to be what was done. But surely there would be an inherent power, if the fact was that you were obstructing the debate, to silence you ?

Mr. Taylor : Unquestionably ; I do not deny that in the slightest. But what I say is this: supposing I am talking against time, and that is the opinion of the Chairman of Committees, and he puts a resolution to suspend me from the services of the House, the House has an inherent power to stop me, to forbid me debating (because presumably that is the offence for which they require this restraint), but has it any power to stop any other Members debating ?

Lord Selborne : There is nothing of that in the Record.

Mr. Taylor : I quite see the difficulty, which I anticipated before—you are bound by the writing here. In the Court below admission was made of the facts as they occurred. I raised that point, but the Judges in their Judgment were silent on it. Then it would lead to the case having to go to trial, if your Lordships were against me on the further point that the Appellant pleads that the House and the Committee considered the conduct of the Respondent. Then is that the consideration ?

Lord Blackburn : I think the pleas in question are not traversed at all. The trial of fact would be solely and exclusively on the plea of not guilty.

Mr. Taylor : Yes ; your Lordships hold then that the pleas not having been traversed, it is too late to traverse them ?

Lord Selborne : We cannot go into any facts which do not appear on the plea, as for instance that some Member offered to speak and was not permitted to do so.

Mr. Taylor : I will not press that point ; that is a point for subsequent determination. One further remark I will make with reference to it, and that is, if the Assembly possesses this power of suspension there can scarcely be a greater power. It is held that the powers and privileges of the House of Commons do not pass over with the Common Law. Then how can they possibly claim this as an inherent power ? Your Lordships I think understand the argument without my proceeding further. I say it is as to the necessity ; whatever is requisite for the good ordering and government of the House, the House may do, but they must in every case be bounded by the probable duration or probable repetition of the circumstances. That is the main argument upon which I contend that this House does not possess this inherent power. And I say if, on returning to the Colony, I presented myself to the House and asked leave to sit, and presented a Commission from the electors derived from authority under the Constitution Act, would it be a sufficient answer to me to say :—"Two or three years ago the House passed a resolution suspending you, because you were talking too long on a certain subject" ? If a Member offends in such a manner as to make his conduct the subject of prosecution in a Court of Law, there the House of course has its remedy, but I think your Lordships know and will give every attention to my plea that the House is simply bound by the doctrine of necessity. I shall not trouble your Lordships any further upon this subject. I regret that the neglect to admit the facts, or that the case has been considered, causes the case to be presented to your Lordships in a somewhat different manner from that in which it would have been if the full facts were known. That is a matter for after consideration, and I leave the matter to your Lordships. I simply point this out, that above the inherent right of the House there is also the inherent right of the humblest and poorest of its Members. In a Court of Law it is a minority that deserves to have its rights respected ; a majority is strong enough to take care of itself. The inherent claim of the House is in this case a mere mechanical action. My claim, as the humblest and poorest Member of the House, is to conscientious freedom of action. I leave the case in your Lordships' hands.

The Solicitor-General: My Lords, if I were to trouble you at any length in reply, I should be doing what the Respondent tells us he was accused of doing in Sydney, of repeating his arguments more than once. The Respondent admits, and fairly admits, that there is an implied power in the Legislative Assembly, for its own security, to exercise a right of suspension during such time as may be necessary for the particular circumstances of the case. But, my Lords, if that be admitted, who is to be the judge of what the necessity of the case requires? Now I can conceive that circumstances might arise in one case which would render it perfectly reasonable, and just, and right, and in that sense necessary, that the House should suspend, as the Respondent has put it, until the Member suspended should have made his submission to the House, either by way of apology or undertaking, not to renew the conduct complained of or otherwise. If that be admitted—and the Respondent practically and fairly admitted, and did not dispute that there might be such an implied and inherent power—what is the difference between that and a power to suspend during pleasure? I am arguing against the Respondent in person—although I think your Lordships will agree he shows a complete understanding of the case in his argument—and of course I do not want to press any admission at the Bar unfairly, but I understand the Respondent desires to raise the question, or has raised the question in his argument, as to what the construction is.

Lord Selborne: It is very true the Respondent has not gone much, if at all, into that; but at the same time we feel that, when a gentleman argues for himself, to a certain extent he puts the Court in the position of being bound to consider what arguments might have been offered as well as those which have been.

The Solicitor-General: The Respondent's objection to the resolution is that it is, as he very strongly put it, an indefinite suspension which may last for days, or weeks, or months, or, he suggested, even for years.

Lord Selborne: He says, taking it to be indefinite, it was ultra vires.

The Solicitor-General: My answer to that is this: In the first place I should doubt whether the Respondent was quite accurate in saying that it might last for years, because if this were an Order of the House of Commons it is familiar to everybody with any knowledge of Parliamentary practice that it would expire with the Session. Only the Standing Orders last beyond the Session; every other Order is a Sessional Order which expires with the Session, and if the Rules, usages, and customs of the House of Commons be adopted by the Colonial Legislature then this Order would expire with the Session, and when the Session came to an end the Order of Suspension would come to an end.

Lord Selborne: That seems to be the view of those who have drawn the plea, because the words are—"and afterwards during the same Session of Parliament."

The Solicitor-General: If it be admitted, as the Respondent does admit, that a resolution of the Legislative Assembly, suspending a Member for misconduct until he should undertake not to renew it or make reparation for the misconduct is legal, how does that differ in principle from an indefinite suspension or suspension during pleasure? It is only a difference of terms. You must, of course, assume that the Legislative Assembly will behave reasonably, and the object of the suspension being to secure order and decency in the conduct of its proceedings, the suspension will not last longer than is necessary for securing that purpose. At any rate, it is not averred; there is nothing in this plea from which it can be inferred, that the suspension during pleasure, or for an indefinite period, was longer than was necessary, in the opinion of the House, for the offence which was committed. Now, my Lords, it being admitted that there is an inherent power to suspend during such time as may be necessary for securing the House against a repetition of the offence, who, I ask, is to judge of that necessity? I venture to submit to your Lordships, as I submitted in my opening, that the effect of any other answer than to say that the Legislative Assembly itself, acting bond fide, must be the judge, would be to introduce confusion into their proceedings, and that no other answer can be given; nor did I understand the Respondent to suggest that any other answer could be given. On this Record all you have is this, that the House did suspend this gentleman from the service of the House for an indefinite period, in respect of what the House considered to be disorderly conduct.

Lord Blackburn: I do not exactly understand what is meant by being suspended from the service of the House.

The Solicitor-General: It is a Parliamentary expression. In Sir Erskine May's book that is the expression used. There are a good many expressions well known in Parliament which when you are asked to define them exactly it is difficult to do so. Your Lordships know the story of the Speaker being asked what would happen if somebody was named.

Lord Selborne: Now we know.

Lord Blackburn: It does not merely mean excusing him from performing them, but also hindering him when he wishes to exercise them.

The Solicitor-General: I do not think I can usefully occupy your Lordships' time any longer. The Argument for the Appellant seems to me to be summed up in these three propositions,—firstly, that the proper construction of the resolution is, that it was intended to suspend the Member during the pleasure of the House, or until further order; secondly, that it is an inherent or implied power in Parliament in a Legislative Assembly to exercise the power of suspending a Member for the purpose of ensuring order, such suspension being for such period or on such terms as may be necessary for the purpose of securing order; and thirdly, that the House itself must be the only judge of what is necessary for that purpose. The Respondent raised a point, which may be a point of considerable interest at some time hereafter, that is to say, that the resolution was passed without debate, and that Members were excluded from speaking. Of course, if that be the fact, that may or may not form an important consideration at the trial when the truth of the plea is gone into.

Lord Blackburn: The truth of the plea will not be important—it is only "not guilty."

The Solicitor-General: I presume the Court below would allow that. I will put it "if ever," and not "whenever," the truth of the plea has to be discussed at the trial. That may or may not be a very important consideration. On the present record there is no averment in the second plea from which your Lordships can infer that the resolution was passed either with or without debate, or under what circumstances it was passed, other than that there was a resolution, in the first instance, of the Committee, afterwards reported to the House, followed by a resolution of the House itself; and there is nothing whatever, if the resolution was within their jurisdiction and within their competence—I mean if the subject matter of the resolution was within their competence—from which you can infer that there was any objection to the manner of passing it.

Lord Selborne: Their Lordships will consider the advice they will give Her Majesty.

Judgment of the Lords of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council on the Appeal of Barton v. Taylor from the Supreme Court of New South Wales. Delivered 6th March, 1886.

Present:—

LORD SELBORNE,
LORD BLACKBURN,
LORD MONKSWELL,
LORD HORHOUSE,
SIR RICHARD COUCH.

This appeal comes before their Lordships in such a way—on demurrer to pleadings—as to cause them some embarrassment. It is evident, when the second and third pleas are both looked at together that, by passing the resolution of suspension against the Respondent, the Legislative Assembly of New South Wales meant to act upon the Standing Order of the British House of Commons, which is set forth in the third plea, and is therein described as “a Rule of the Imperial Parliament,” and which was assumed to be applicable, under its own Standing Orders, to the New South Wales Assembly. If that assumption had been correct, the suspension would have been good in law for the definite period of a single week. Their Lordships, however, are of opinion that the Standing Order of the British House of Commons set forth in the third plea was not, in April, 1884, by adoption or otherwise, a Rule of procedure applicable to the Legislative Assembly of New South Wales. Assuming, but not deciding, that under the 35th section of the Constitution Act it might have been competent to the Legislative Assembly and Governor to prepare and adopt a Standing Rule or Order declaring that all Rules and Orders of the British House of Commons, whether then in existence or to be at any time afterwards made, for the orderly conduct of its business, should be adopted and followed by the Legislative Assembly, their Lordships are of opinion that the Standing Order set forth in the third plea cannot properly be so construed. The words, “resort shall be had to the Rules, forms, and usages of the Imperial Parliament”—taking the expression “Imperial Parliament” to be distributive, and to refer, when the proceeding is one of the Legislative Assembly, to the British House of Commons—naturally signify the then existing and known Rules, forms, and usages of the House of Commons. In the absence of words of prospect or futurity, and of any context indicative of an intention so improbable as that of adopting by anticipation all future changes in the procedure or practice of the House of Commons, their Lordships think it would be unreasonable so to construe the Standing Order. They think, therefore, that the third plea is bad, and that the demurrer to it was rightly allowed. In the second plea their Lordships find no averment, either of any Standing Order of the Legislative Assembly itself, or of any Rule, form, or usage of the Imperial Parliament, authorizing or justifying the trespass complained of by the plaintiff. The intention of that plea seems to have been to justify the trespass on the ground of an inherent power in every Colonial Legislative Assembly to protect itself against obstruction, interruption, or disturbance of its proceedings by the misconduct of any of its Members in the course of those proceedings. The nature, grounds, and limits of that power—which undoubtedly exists—have been several times considered at this Board, especially in the cases of “Keilly v. Carson” (4 Moore P.C., 63), and “Doyle v. Falconer” (1 L.R., P.C., 329). It results from those authorities that no powers of that kind are incident to or inherent in a Colonial Legislative Assembly, without express grant, except “such as are necessary to the existence of such a body, and the proper exercise of the functions which it is intended to execute.” (4 Moore, P.C., 88.) Whatever, in a reasonable sense, is necessary for these purposes is impliedly granted whenever any such legislative body is established by competent authority. For these purposes protective and self-defensive powers only, and not punitive, are necessary. If the question is to be elucidated by analogy, that analogy is rather to be derived from other assemblies (not legislative), whose incidental powers of self-protection are implied by the common law (although of inferior importance and dignity to bodies constituted for purposes of public legislation) than from the British Parliament, which has its own peculiar law and custom, or from Courts of Record, which have also their special authorities and privileges recognized by law. “If a Member of a Colonial House of Assembly is guilty of disorderly conduct in the House while sitting, he may be removed or excluded for a time, or even expelled. . . . The right to remove for self-security is one thing, the right to inflict punishment is another. . . . If the good sense and conduct of the Members of Colonial Legislatures prove insufficient to secure order and decency of debate, the law would sanction the use of that degree of force which might be necessary to remove the person excluded from the place of meeting and to keep him excluded.” (1 L.R., P.C. 340.) These words were used by Sir James Colville, when delivering the judgment of this tribunal in “Doyle v. Falconer,” and their Lordships adopt them. It does not, however, appear to be a just inference from the expressions “excluded for a time” and “to keep him excluded” that a power to exclude a Member and to keep him excluded for a length of time unlimited, or limited only by the discretion of the Assembly, was considered in “Doyle v. Falconer,” or ought, on sound principles, to be now held by their Lordships to be necessary to the existence of such a body or to the proper exercise of its functions. The principle on which the implied power is given confines it within the limits of what is required by the assumed necessity. That necessity appears to their Lordships to extend as far as the whole duration of the particular meeting or sitting of the Assembly in the course of which the offence may have been committed. It seems to be reasonably necessary that some substantial interval should be interposed between the suspensory resolution and the resumption of his place in the Assembly by the offender, in order to give opportunity for the subsidence of heat and passion, and for reflection on his own conduct by the person suspended; nor would anything less be generally sufficient for the vindication of the authority and dignity of the Assembly. The sitting or meeting as a whole has a practical unity. It commences with the usual forms of opening, when the Speaker takes the Chair; it is terminated by the adjournment of the House. It has its proper rota of business (such as, in our House of Commons, the notices and orders of the day); a separate record of the whole business done at each such sitting or meeting (including the suspension of a Member, if that should take place) is entered upon the Journals. The service of Members in attendance at each such sitting or meeting is continuous, and at each adjournment that service is interrupted, not to be renewed until after an interval of some hours, days, or weeks, or even months, as the case may be. The power, therefore, of suspending a Member guilty of obstruction or disorderly conduct during the continuance of any current sitting is, in their Lordships' judgment, reasonably necessary for the proper exercise of the functions of any Legislative Assembly of this kind, and it may very well be that the same doctrine of reasonable necessity would authorize a suspension until submission or apology by the offending Member, which, if he were refractory, might cause it to be prolonged, not by the arbitrary discretion of the Assembly, but by his own wilful default, for some further time. The facts pleaded in this case do not raise the question whether that would be ultra vires or not. If these are the limits of the inherent or implied power, reasonably deducible from the principle of general necessity, they have the advantage of drawing a simple practical line between defensive and punitive action on the part of the Assembly. A power of unconditional suspension, for an indefinite time or for a definite time, depending only on the irresponsible discretion of the Assembly itself, is more than the necessity of self-defence seems to require, and is dangerously liable, in possible cases, to excess or abuse. It is true that confidence may generally be placed in such bodies, and there may be cases, as in such very important Colonies as this of New South Wales, in which there may be preponderating reasons for intrusting them with much larger powers than those which ought to be implied from the mere necessity of the case. But their Lordships are at present considering only those powers which ought to be implied on the principle of necessity, and which must be implied in favour of every Legislative Assembly of any British possession, however small and however far removed from effective public criticism. Powers to suspend toties quoties, sitting after sitting, in case of repeated offences—and, it may be, till submission or apology—and also to expel for aggravated or persistent misconduct, appear to be sufficient to meet even the extreme case of a Member whose conduct is habitually obstructive or disorderly. To argue that expulsion is the great power and suspension the less, and that the greater must include all degrees of the less, seems to their Lordships fallacious. The rights of constituents ought not, in a question of this kind, to be left out of sight. Those rights would be much more seriously interfered with by an unnecessarily prolonged suspension than by expulsion, after which a new election would immediately be held. The same considerations have also led their Lordships to the conclusion that even if a power of unconditional suspension during the pleasure of the Assembly did exist, a suspensory resolution not expressed, or interpreted by any Standing Order, to be conditional on something to be done by the person suspended or to be during pleasure, or for a definite time, ought not to be held operative beyond the end of the current sitting. The resolution pleaded in this case was "That Mr. A. G. Taylor be suspended from the service of the House." If more was meant than to suspend him for the rest of the then current service, their Lordships think that it ought to have been distinctly so expressed. "Suspension" must be temporary; the words "suspended from the service of the House" may be satisfied by referring them to the attendance of the Member in the House during that particular sitting. So much as this is necessary to make the suspension effective, more is not. The case is not that of the suspension of a public officer ab officio by a competent judicial or executive authority having jurisdiction over the officer or over the tenure of his office, and acting in pœnam, not for self-defence only. Nor is it like that of a commitment, where the gaoler or public officer who receives a prisoner into his custody under a legal warrant is bound to detain him until he has authority for his release. Even, therefore, if the second plea had set forth the Standing Order of the Legislative Assembly adopting the Rules, forms, and usages of the British House of Commons, and had contained an averment which was admitted by the demurrer to be true that, at the time when that Standing Order was made, the British House of Commons had and exercised the power of unconditional suspension for an indefinite or unlimited period of time, their Lordships would have agreed with the Court below so far as to hold that the suspension pleaded in this plea was not to be construed as operative beyond the sitting during which the resolution was passed. The second plea contains an averment that the trespass of the 23rd April, alleged in the declaration, took place after the suspensory resolution had been passed, "during the same Session of Parliament, and while the said suspension remained in force." The argument at their Lordships' bar was conducted upon the assumption or concession that this ought to be understood as equivalent to a statement that the alleged trespass took place during a sitting of the Assembly subsequent to that at which the suspensory resolution was passed; in which view the averment that the suspension remained in force is one not of fact, but of law. It is therefore unnecessary to consider whether, in the absence of such a concession on the Appellant's part, their Lordships would have been justified in so construing this averment. Their Lordships entertain no doubt of the validity of the Standing Order of the Legislative Assembly, adopting, so far as applicable to its proceedings, the Rules, forms, and usages which were in force in the British House of Commons at the time when that Standing Order was passed and assented to by the Governor of New South Wales. They think it proper to add that they cannot agree with the opinion which seems to have been expressed by the Court below, that the powers conferred upon the Legislative Assembly by the Constitution Act do not enable the Assembly "to adopt from the Imperial Parliament, or to pass by its own authority, any Standing Order giving itself the power to punish an obstructing Member or remove him from the Chamber for any period longer than the sitting during which the obstruction occurred." This, of course, could not be done by the Assembly alone, without the assent of the Governor; but their Lordships are of opinion that it might be done with the Governor's assent, and that the express powers given by the Constitution Act are not limited by the principles of common law applicable to those inherent powers which must be implied without express grant, from mere necessity, according to the maxim—Quando lex aliquid concedit, concedere videtur et illud, sine quo res ipsa esse non potest. Their Lordships' affirmance of the judgment appealed from is founded on the view not that this could have been done but that it was not done, and that nothing appears on the record which can give the resolution suspending the Respondent a larger operation than that which the Court below had ascribed to it. Their Lordships will humbly advise Her Majesty to affirm the Judgment appealed from, and to dismiss this appeal, with costs.

“ To His Excellency Sir Alfred Stephen, Knight, G.C.M.G., G.C.B., &c., Lieutenant-Governor of the Colony of New South Wales, and Vice-Admiral of the same.

“ The humble Petition of James Archibald Mackinnon, of Young, in the Colony of New South Wales, Esquire,— “ Showeth:—

“ 1. That at the last General Election of Members to serve in the Legislative Assembly of the said Colony, Gerald Spring, William John Watson, and your Petitioner were severally candidates to be elected as Members of the said Assembly for the Electoral District of Young.

“ 2. That at the nomination for the said Election each of them, the said Gerald Spring, William John Watson, and your Petitioner, were duly nominated and proposed as such Members, and the Returning Officer then called for a show of hands separately in favour of each candidate, and upon the same taking place declared the show of hands to be in favour of the said Gerald Spring and J. A. Mackinnon, whereupon a poll was demanded on behalf of William John Watson, which was afterwards taken.

“ 3. That before, and at the time of the said nomination, and from thence, your Petitioner was, and is, a person duly qualified by law to be elected a Member of the said Legislative Assembly.

“ 4. That the Returning Officer, on the day of the declaration of the poll for the said Electoral District declared the numbers of votes polled for the respective candidates to be as follows:—

“ For the said Gerald Spring—one thousand two hundred and seventy votes,

“ For the said William John Watson—one thousand and eleven votes,

“ And for your Petitioner—one thousand and nine votes.

“ and thereupon declared the said Gerald Spring and William John Watson to be duly elected as Members of the said Assembly for the said Electoral District, and the said Returning Officer afterwards endorsed on the writ for the said election the names of the said Gerald Spring and William John Watson as the persons so elected, and returned the said writ to His Excellency Lord Augustus William Frederick Spencer Loftus, then Governor of the said Colony.

" 8. That the said John Little did supply to the electors who voted on the said election at Bendick Morrell, ballot-papers initialled by himself, and upon which he also inserted the number in figures corresponding with the electoral number on the said Electoral Roll for the said Electoral District of Young, of the person voting as aforesaid, whereby it could be at once ascertained how any elector voting at Bendick Morrell had voted, and by which means the secrecy, privacy, and efficacy of the said ballot was entirely destroyed.

" 9. That at each of several of the polling places in the said electorate, votes were declared informal which were not informal, and which should have been counted in favour of your petitioner, and against the said William John Watson.

" 10. That your Petitioner, pursuant to the said Electoral Act of 1880, has caused the sum of one hundred pounds to be paid into the Commercial Banking Company of Sydney to the credit of the Speaker of the Legislative Assembly, in relation to this Petition, and the Bank Deposit Receipt for such payment is hereto annexed.

" Your Petitioner, therefore, humbly prays that this Petition may be dealt with according to law, and that the return of the said William John Watson as a Member of the said Legislative Assembly for the said Electoral District may be declared null and void, for the reasons aforesaid; that it may be declared and determined that the ballot-papers, so marked or numbered as hereinbefore mentioned, shall be declared informal, null, and void; that a scrutiny of all ballot-papers should be made by the Committee of Elections and Qualifications; that, for the reasons aforesaid, it may be declared that the said William John Watson was not lawfully elected and is not such Member of the said Legislative Assembly for the said Electoral District; that it may be declared and determined that your Petitioner was duly elected at the said Election to serve and be a Member of the said Legislative Assembly for the said Electoral District of Young, and is entitled to take his seat accordingly in the said Assembly; and that such further or other order and determination may be made in the premises as may be just.

WEDNESDAY, 17 FEBRUARY, 1886.

Present:—

Mr. Henry Clarke, Dr. Renwick, Mr. Septimus Stephen,		Mr. Sutherland, Mr. Garvan, Mr. Reid.
--	--	---

Arthur Renwick, Esq., M.D., in the Chair.

Mr. H. E. Cohen appeared as Counsel on behalf of the sitting Member; Mr. B. R. Wise appeared on behalf of the Petitioner.

Otho Orde Dangar, Esq., having been sworn, was examined:—

6. Chairman.] You are the petitioner in this case? I am.
7. The petition you have lodged with the Committee represents that, at the last general election for the electoral district of the Macleay, you and Mr. Robert Burdett Smith were candidates? It does.
8. And that at the nomination you were duly nominated with Mr. Smith? Yes.
9. That during the course of the election certain circumstances occurred which led you to lodge this petition, such circumstances being the holding out by Mr. Smith of promises and expectations of profit, advancement, and enrichment, to electors, or to some of their family or kindred, friends or dependents of the electors, to influence their votes—is that one of the charges you make? That is the first charge.
10. Also, treating electors for the said electoral district, and supplying them with drink whilst at such election—that charge is included in your petition; and that whilst the electors were engaged in coming to or going from such election the electors were supplied with drink at the expense and by the authority of Mr. Smith, with a view to influence the votes of such electors? That also is part of my petition.
11. Another charge is keeping open and allowing to be kept open, at his own expense and by his authority, and with a view to influence the votes of electors of the said electoral district at the said election, certain public-houses and places of entertainment—that is in your petition? Yes.
12. The charges you have made are in very general terms; I suppose you have witnesses to support the charges? I have.
13. Mr. Wise.] Take first of all this paragraph—"holding out to electors for the said electoral district at the said election promises and expectations of profit"—state to the Committee the evidence you received to support this charge? In the first place, my personal knowledge of the promises consists of my knowledge of promises made at Bont Harbour, on the Bellinger River.
14. Mr. Cohen.] At what date? On the Wednesday previous to the polling.

O. O. Dangar,
Esq.

17 Feb., 1886.

(Objection raised by Mr. Cohen that "at the said election" means the day of election only, and no other meaning could be ascribed to it. Mr. Wise heard in answer to objection, which the Committee overruled.)

15.

- O. O. Dangar, Esq.
17 Feb., 1886.
15. Mr. Wise.] On what date was this? On Wednesday, the 14th October. On that day I was present at a meeting of Mr. Smith's, at Boat Harbour, held in the public street. Mr. Smith was standing on the verandah of an hotel, and I was within two yards of him. I heard him make this statement: "Gentlemen, if you elect Mr. Dangar, you get into existence another Parliamentary land agent who will charge you five, ten, and twenty guinea fees for doing your land business; but if you elect me I give you my promise that I will do all your land business without fee or reward; I will get your cancelled selections put right." He referred to some other matters connected with selections, and said he would get them all remedied and not charge them one farthing. Immediately Mr. Smith made these promises to the electors there were loud cheers from a considerable number of those assembled, and loud clapping of hands. I was present also at the nomination at Kempsey, when there were between 500 and 600 persons present. Mr. Smith there reiterated the same promises in almost the same words—"if you return me, gentlemen, as your Member, I will do all your land business without fee or reward"; and he drew the same comparison as to Mr. Dangar charging five, ten, and twenty guinea fees. There, too, the announcement was received with cheers and a great deal of clapping of hands from a very large number of electors.
16. Had that distinction between your line of conduct and Mr. Smith's line of conduct a material influence on the election?— (Objected to by Mr. Cohen.)
17. Mr. Wise.] Now, with reference to the second charge—"treating electors of the said electoral district and supplying them with drink whilst at such election"? What I know of my own knowledge is that at Boat Harbour I saw Mr. Smith whispering to his chairman, Mr. Matthews, who immediately said —
(Mr. Cohen objected that, unless this treating took place on the day of election, the evidence was not admissible. Mr. Wise answered the objection, which was overruled by the Committee.)
18. Mr. Wise.] You say that at the Boat Harbour meeting you observed Mr. Smith say something to his chairman, Mr. Matthews? I observed Mr. Smith whisper to his chairman, Mr. Matthews, who then said, "Oh, yes, gentlemen, you are all invited to drink Mr. Smith's health."
19. Mr. Reid.] Did you hear anything said by Mr. Smith to Mr. Matthews? I heard no words from Mr. Smith.
20. Mr. Cohen.] You only heard what Matthews said: "Oh, yes, gentlemen, you are all invited to drink Mr. Smith's health," which was received with cheers, and there was a rush for the bar.
21. What you now state you know of your own knowledge? Yes.
22. The Macleay district is largely inhabited by free-selectors, is it not? It is, and the Bellinger also is settled almost entirely by free-selectors. On the Macleay the number of free-selectors is quite one-third of the whole population. I think I should be safe in saying one-half are interested in selections in one way or the other. I was going to add, in reference to open houses, that I myself observed that Cooper's Hotel at Fredericktown was open for the supply of drinks to electors.
23. Mr. Wise.] On the day of polling? Yes; I was there and saw a number of selectors taken in by the landlord, Mr. Cooper, and they were supplied with liquor, not paying for it. The same occurred at Hay's hotel, Smithtown.
24. Mr. Cohen.] I believe you are carrying on business on the Macleay, at Kempsey? Yes.
25. What is your particular business? Auctioneer, land and estate agent, valuator, and insurance agent.
26. I presume that in your land agency business you attend to business for selectors and any other class of land business brought to you? Yes.
27. In reference to the comparison Mr. Smith drew between his line of conduct and yours—the manner in which you acted and that in which he would act if returned to Parliament—did not this take place:—Mr. Smith pointed out that he had represented the district for about sixteen years, and never asked fee or reward, and that what he had done he would continue to do in the future, whether for friend or foe, but that in no case would he interfere where there were individual conflicting interests? There was a reference to conflicting interests, but he said he had always done the land business without charging them, and he would continue to do so. That is in addition to what I have already stated.
28. Of course, as land agent, you have charged fees, and would charge them still? Yes, I have always charged fees, but not five, ten, fifteen-guinea fees, as was said by Mr. Smith; that was entirely suggestive on Mr. Smith's part.
29. If you had been returned to Parliament and came to Sydney you could not tell what fees you would then charge? I should consider that I ought not to charge any fees at all.
30. Do you know Charles Sutherland? I do.
31. Do you remember receiving a telegram from Mr. Smith, in which he said that you had been sending to the newspapers certain defamatory statements, and intimating that you would be made to answer for them in Sydney? Yes.
32. Was it after the receipt of that telegram that you set yourself in motion to prepare and present this petition? If I were to answer that question without explanation I should be misleading the Committee.
33. You can say whether it was so or not, and explain after? It was after, but I had, before returning thanks to the electors, made the statement that I should proceed against Mr. Smith for bribery and corruption, and Mr. Smith retorted by saying, "I understand there is to be a petition against me for bribery and corruption, but the petitioner would have to deposit £100 with the Speaker, and I dare say I shall be prepared if that takes place." That was when Mr. Smith returned thanks.
34. Can you say what period of time elapsed between the declaration of the poll and the day when you got this telegram? From memory I could not.
35. Could you say about what period? I think my solicitor has the telegram; it was a matter of about ten days. It was sent from Albury or Wagga Wagga. It was about ten days or a fortnight.
36. Did you say to Mr. Sutherland that you had no intention of taking any action with respect to the petition until you got this telegram mentioning an action, but then you thought you should rake up evidence to support the charges? I do not say it did not take place, but I positively assert that before returning thanks I said that I would upset the election, on grounds of bribery and corruption.
37. That was on the day you were returning thanks? It was on the polling day that I made the announcement publicly that Mr. Smith obtained the seat by bribery and corruption, and that I would do my best to unseat him. I gleaned some evidence, and took down particulars up to that time.
38. You will not deny that you told Mr. Sutherland what I have just suggested? I do not recollect. In conversation with Mr. Sutherland I may or may not have done so, because Mr. Sutherland and I are apt to have confidential conversations, and it may be that I made use of these words.

39. You do not say you did not? I will not say I did not.
40. You said you would not take action to petition until you received the telegram from Mr. Smith threatening you with an action, and then you raked up evidence in support of your charges? I have no recollection of such a conversation.
41. Then at Boat Harbour you overheard Mr. Smith whispering to Mr. Matthews, but you did not hear anything? I did not hear the words.
42. Mr. Reid.] Who was the chairman at Boat Harbour? Mr. Matthews. He said—"You are all invited to drink Mr. Smith's health."
43. Mr. Cohen.] In carrying on business as land agent, do you practise before the Board at Kempsey? I have done so.
44. Only at Kempsey? Only at Kempsey.
45. Do you remember the cancellation or forfeiture of the selection of Panton? I do.
46. That selection was open to conditional purchase afterwards? Yes.
47. Were there a large number of applicants for it? Rather more than 400.
48. Did you act in that matter for any number of applicants? I drew applications for a good number.
49. What number? Sixty or eighty.
50. Not for 200 to 300? I am sure not for 100.
51. Did you act as agent for sixty or eighty? I merely drew up their applications, and at the Land Office saw that they were rightly dealt with.
52. And charged a fee for each? Yes, but some were not paid.
53. A twenty-guinea fee? No, never more than half a guinea.
54. Did you manage it all in one day? I had three clerks during the three days that the applications were being prepared. I was not devoted to the matter all that time.

O. O. Dangar,
Esq.
17 Feb., 1886.

Mr. George David Hilder, having been sworn, was examined:—

55. Mr. Wise.] You were present at the nomination for the last election for the Macleay, and heard Mr. Smith make a speech on that occasion? Yes.
56. Will you tell the Committee the substance of that speech, so far as it indicated any promise to electors or the future conduct of Mr. Smith? With reference to Mr. Smith, he said—"If you elect Mr. Dangar he will charge five, ten, twenty, or fifty guineas for land business, but I will do it free."
57. How was this received by the electors? It was received by a number of the people present with cheers.
58. Chairman.] What is your occupation? I am the manager of a newspaper.
59. Mr. Wise.] Did you hear anything said about taking cases before the Land Court? He said he would take them up for any of the electors and would charge no fee.
60. You were secretary for Mr. Dangar's committee? Yes.
61. Mr. Cohen.] Of what newspaper are you manager? Of the Macleay Argus.
62. Have you any proprietary interest in that paper? No.
63. Do you write for the paper? No.
64. You never wrote any leaders for it? No.
65. Have you suggested any leaders for it or any policy? Yes.
66. Have you any voice in the control of the paper? No, except in the management.
67. Is this what Mr. Smith said—"That for a period of about sixteen years he had represented the Macleay electorate and always attended to the wants of the electors without fee or reward, and that he would continue to do so still, whether for friends or foes, but he would not interfere with any matters in which there were conflicting individual interests"? No.
68. That you will swear? Yes.
69. Where were you at the time? In the crowd.
70. Taking notes? No, we had a reporter on the hustings.
71. Suppose Mr. Dangar said before the Committee something of this kind I have suggested, who would be right, he or you? Mr. Dangar has not stated it to me.
72. Mr. Smith said he had served the electorate for about sixteen years, and not asked any fee or reward from the electors for anything he had done, and would continue to do so for friends or foes, but he would not interfere in matters in which there were conflicting individual interests? He did not say it at this time to my recollection.
73. Will you swear absolutely that he did not—yes or no?—
74. Why do you hesitate? I do not recollect it.
75. Will you swear that he did not? Yes, I will swear.
76. Then why did you hesitate? To think.
77. Because you were in doubt? I could not recollect at the moment. He did not say it.
78. Mr. Smith spoke about three hours? No, about two hours.
79. Was not the newspaper always antagonistic to Mr. Smith? No, not at that time. The first issue was on the Saturday evening, the nomination being on the previous Friday.
80. Has it been antagonistic since? It has been antagonistic since.
81. Has Mr. Dangar an interest in this paper? No.
82. Does he write for it? No.
83. Nor interfere in its management? No.
84. Has he ever offered suggestions for it? No.
85. Mr. Wise.] Did you ever hear him say anything about saving electors from ruin? I have no recollection of his saying from ruin. There was about half an hour of the nomination that I was absent.

Mr. G. D.
Hilder.
17 Feb., 1886.

THURSDAY, 18 FEBRUARY, 1886.

Present:—

Mr. Henry Clarke,
Mr. Reid,
Dr. Renwick,

Mr. Garvan,
Mr. Purves,
Mr. Septimus Stephen.

Arthur Renwick, Esq., M.D., in the Chair.

Mr. B. R. Wise appeared as Counsel for the Petitioner; Mr. H. E. Cohen appeared as Counsel for the sitting Member.

Mr. Alfred Rudder called in, sworn, and examined:—

Mr.
A. Rudder.
18 Feb., 1886.

86. Mr. Wise.] What are you by occupation? I am an Agent.
87. Do you remember hearing Mr. Smith speak at Boat Harbour during the late election for the Macleay? I do.
88. It was on the Wednesday before the polling-day, I think? Yes, I think it was; I am not quite sure as to the day.
89. He only spoke once there? Only once.
90. Do you remember his making use of any statements with regard to land agency? Yes.
91. What were they? The words Mr. Smith made use of were these, "If you return this man (referring to Mr. Dangar) you will return a land agent, and he will charge you from four to five guineas; if you return me, gentlemen, I will do all your work for nothing."
92. And this was received with applause by the crowd? Yes.
93. Mr. Cohen.] Did not Mr. Smith in effect say this: "I have been elected to represent this district for the last sixteen years, and I have always done my work as your representative without fee or reward, and I will continue to do so in the future, whether for friend or foe"? I did not hear Mr. Smith make use of those statements.
94. Will you swear he did not? I will not swear he did not, but I did not hear him; he might have said it in a very low tone of voice.
95. Do you remember whether, when Mr. Smith referred to Mr. Dangar being a land agent, and to certain charges made by land agents for transacting land business, he did not refer to the practice of land agents generally? No, I never heard him allude to it at all.
96. Will you follow me in what I am reading now, and see whether you recollect any portion of this as having been said by Mr. Smith:—"During sixteen years that I have represented the Macleay I defy any elector, whether friend or foe, to say that I made any charge for my services for attending to any grievance he had";—do you remember that? No, I could not say I do recollect it.
97. Will you swear Mr. Smith did not say what I have suggested? No, I am not prepared to say.
98. Will you swear that what Mr. Smith said was not this: "If you put your cases into the hands of a land agent he will charge you ten, twenty, or fifty pounds, but I have never charged you that, and as I have done in the past I will do in the future"? No, I did not hear Mr. Smith say as he did in the past he would do in the future.
99. Will you swear Mr. Smith did not say what I have read? No, I will not; but if he did I did not hear him.
100. Did not Mr. Smith say this also: "I have never abused my Parliamentary position in this respect, and I never will"? Certainly I did not hear it.
101. Mr. Wise.] But I understand you to say he did say the things I have mentioned, referring to Mr. Dangar? Yes.
102. And you were there all the time? Yes, all the time.
103. Mr. Cohen.] Were you not away for a moment? No.
104. Was it general talk in the electorate at the time, about land agents charging £50 for their work? I heard nothing about it.

Mr. Thomas Waters called in, sworn, and examined:—

Mr.
T. Waters.
18 Feb., 1886.

105. Mr. Wise.] You are a free selector residing at Hickey's Creek, in the Macleay District? Yes.
106. Do you remember a public meeting being held at your house by Mr. Smith on 17th October last? Yes.
107. Previous to that meeting do you remember Mr. Smith being at your house? Yes.
108. In which room? In the front room.
109. Who was present? Myself, Mr. Smith, Mr. Charles Sutherland—but Mr. Sutherland was not present all the while—my son, Thomas Henry Waters.
110. Was a brother-in-law of yours there? Yes.
111. By what name? Richard Sillitoe. There were more present; my wife was present most of the time.
112. Did you hear Mr. Smith say anything to Mr. Sillitoe? Yes.
113. What was it? There was a difficulty about his land, and I heard Mr. Smith distinctly say to him, "If you will vote for me, or support me"—I believe it was—"If you will give me your vote"—"I will see that your land is made all right for you."
114. Previous to Mr. Smith saying that had Sillitoe said anything about his vote? I think it was an understood thing that Mr. Sillitoe intended to vote for Mr. Dangar, and as good as said so.
115. What did Mr. Sillitoe say in reply to Mr. Smith? He began talking about the land, and got quite excited over it, and Mr. Smith held out his hand to him and asked him to shake hands over it to make it a bargain.
116. He used those words? He used those words, "Make it a bargain."
117. What did Sillitoe do? He did not take any notice.
118. Did Mr. Smith make any remark? He did. He said, "Your friend here is hard to please." Sillitoe said, "On the contrary, I think I am easy to please."
119. After this I believe you presided at Mr. Smith's meeting at your place? Yes.
120. Did you hear Mr. Smith say anything in the course of his speech with reference to land agency and doing business for the people of the district? Yes.

121. What? There were local wants that were promised. For instance, a school and teacher's residence that we were in urgent need of, and are still; and Mr. Smith said if we would return him as our representative he would see that we obtained them; and he would have the road extended 5 miles further up the creek and the teacher's residence erected; and that if we returned Mr. Dangar as our Member he would charge us for anything in connection with our land, whereas if he was returned, if he was entrusted with it, he would do it for nothing, as he had often done before.

122. Chairman.] Do you remember Mr. Smith's exact words? Yes.

123. Quote them as nearly as you can? Mr. Smith said, "If I am returned, or if you will return me, as your Member, I will get this work done (that is, the teacher's residence erected) within three months, and the road carried 5 miles further up, and I will attend to all your land business." He said if Mr. Dangar was returned he (Mr. Dangar) would make a charge, but "if I am returned I will do it for nothing for you."

124. Mr. Cohen.] Have you had any conversation with anybody at all as to the evidence you were to give here to-day? I cannot say I have; no, I don't think so; possibly I might have, but I don't recollect it.

125. Have you made any statements to anybody? I made an affidavit.

126. Were you in communication with Mr. Dangar? Not until after my affidavit was made.

127. Is your son here? Yes.

128. Have you spoken to him about the evidence you were going to give? I have not in any way influenced him at all.

129. Have you spoken to your son about the evidence he is to give? We may have talked about the matter.

130. Can you not say yes or no? I cannot say for certain.

131. He lives with you, and has travelled from the Macleay with you? Yes.

132. Can you not say whether you told your son what evidence you were going to give here to-day? No, not one word; the only thing I told my son was to speak the truth.

133. Was it necessary to tell him to speak the truth? I said, "Perhaps you may be asked questions to bother you, but whatever you know speak the truth."

134. Mr. Wise.] He is a young lad? Yes, fourteen years old.

135. Mr. Cohen.] You say Mr. Sutherland was not present at part of the conversation that took place in your house? He was in and out of the house at different times.

136. He was not present the whole time? No, he was not.

137. How long did the conversation last? I really could not tell you.

138. Can you say what particular part of the conversation Mr. Sutherland was present at? It was the latter part of the conversation that he was absent from.

139. This was on the Saturday previous to the polling? Yes, the 17th October.

140. During the first part of the conversation Mr. Sutherland was there? Yes.

141. Was this what took place, that you said to Mr. Sillitoe, "I will write to Mr. Smith about your land," and Mr. Smith said, "If you write to me I will take it into consideration?" Mr. Smith said, "You ask your friend Waters here to write, and I will pay it every attention."

142. Is Sillitoe here? I do not know; I do not think so.

143. Mr. Wise.] Did Mr. Smith ask you to write after you had made this promise or before? I forget; I know that when Mr. Smith was offering to do this for Sillitoe, Mr. Sutherland passed the remark, "It is of no use bothering Mr. Smith now," or, "it is no use your bothering yourself now, the best way will be to write;" and then Mr. Smith suggested to write to him.

144. You say you do not know whether that was before or after Mr. Smith held out his hand and said, "Make it a bargain"? I cannot recollect.

145. You made an affidavit; is this the affidavit (holding up a document)? I do not know; I have not seen it.

146. Did you give this statement unwillingly? I did.

147. Did you make any request that it should not be used unless it was imperatively necessary? I did, because I did not want to have anything to do with it.

148. Mr. Reid.] Are political meetings held at your place? No.

149. Was not this a political meeting? I do not know what you call it; Mr. Smith addressed the electors there.

150. At your house? Yes, I think it said in the paper that a meeting was to be held at Waters'—I will not say for certain—and that Mr. Smith would address the electors.

151. Mr. Wise.] There is a post-office at your place, is there not? Yes, there is a receiving place; it is the centre of the population.

Master Thomas Henry Waters called in, sworn, and examined:—

152. Mr. Wise.] You live with your father and mother at Hickey's Creek? Yes.

153. Do you remember the last election for the Macleay? Yes.

154. Do you remember on the Saturday before the polling-day Mr. Smith coming to your father's house? Yes.

155. I want you to tell these gentlemen all the conversation that passed between Mr. Smith, your father, and Mr. Sillitoe, that you remember? Mr. Smith was at Hickey's Creek, and my father told Mr. Sillitoe that as Mr. Smith was there it was a good chance of seeing about his land.

156. Mr. Reid.] Was Mr. Smith present at this time? Yes.

157. Chairman.] When your father said that to Mr. Sillitoe? Yes. Mr. Smith and Mr. Sillitoe began talking about the land, and after a while Mr. Smith, holding out his hand to Mr. Sillitoe, said, "Let us shake hands on it, and let it be a bargain. You vote for me, or you support me, and I will see that your land is rightified."

158. Do you mean made right;—say exactly what you mean? Made right.

159. Mr. Wise.] Although you may not be quite clear those were the exact words, you are quite certain they were to that effect? Yes, to that effect. Sillitoe refused to shake hands with Mr. Smith, and turned his head away. Sillitoe was condemning the Land Act, and also those who formed the Land Act.

Master
T. H. Waters.
18 Feb., 1886.

- Master
T. H. Waters.
18 Feb., 1886.
160. Do you remember what he said? He said that if he had his way all the men who formed this Land Act should be kicked out.
161. What did Mr. Smith say to that? I do not remember.
162. Do you remember anything else? Then Mr. Smith turned to my father, and said, "Your friend here is a very hard man to please." Mr. Sillitoe replied, "I think I am a very easy man to please." That is all the conversation I recollect at present.
163. Who else was present? Myself and Mr. Smith and my father; my mother was present too.
164. You are the eldest boy? Yes.
165. You have no sister or brother older than yourself? No.
166. Your mother is at home? Yes, she was when I left.
167. Do you go to school? Yes.
168. And you read the newspapers, I believe? Sometimes; I do not read much of them.
169. You know there was some dispute about Mr. Smith's election? Yes.
170. Do you remember what Mr. Smith said at the meeting? Outside he said if he was returned he would have the road extended 5 miles higher up the creek, and also within three months he would have a teacher's residence at Hickey's Creek.
171. Mr. Reid.] He was making a speech at this time when he said those two things? Yes.
172. How long was he speaking about the time when he said these things? I do not know.
173. About? About an hour; I am not sure.
174. He said a good many other things besides? Yes.
175. Have you been asked before whether you remembered those things? Yes, I have been asked before.
176. Do you remember Mr. Smith saying anything about land agency? No, I do not recollect that.
177. Mr. Cohen.] How old are you? I will be fifteen on the 3rd of next July.
178. When were you first asked to remember the conversation which took place? I do not know when it was.
179. Can you say about what time? No.
180. Was it a week ago, or ten days ago? I cannot say.
181. Was it more than a week ago? I have been asked several times.
182. Who asked you first? The first time was when Mr. Dangar was there.
183. How long ago was that;—can you say whether it was within one or two weeks ago? More than a week.
184. A fortnight ago? More than a fortnight ago.
185. Was it a month ago;—you cannot remember? No.
186. Was it Mr. Dangar who applied to you to know what you remembered;—do you forget whether Mr. Dangar asked you if you remembered this conversation? He asked me if I knew anything about it.
187. Did your father ask you too? My father has asked me did I recollect.

 707. Do you remember if Mr. Smith said anything with reference to land agents? He did.
 708. What was it? I heard Mr. Smith, in the course of his speech, say to the electors, "If you return Mr. Dangar he will put a sign over his door—'Land Agent, &c.'—and if you take the business connected with your selections"—I believe these were the terms he used—"to him, he will charge £5, £10, £15, or £20, while if you return me, and bring the business connected with your selections to me with regard to forfeitures, &c., I will do it for nothing"—free, I believe, was the term he used. Those, as far as my memory carries me, were the words he used.
 709. Mr. Cohen.] Is this, in substance, what Mr. Smith said: That he had been their representative for sixteen or seventeen years; that he had never abused his position as a Member of Parliament, but he would in the future, as he had done in the past, attend to their business without charge, whether for friend or foe, so long as individual interests did not conflict? He may have used those words in the course of his speech, but, I believe, not in reference to the particular item of that speech that I have mentioned.
 710. Will you say he did not make use of these observations with reference to land business amongst other things? I could not undertake to detach the land business from these words you have spoken.
 711. Do you remember whether, preceding Mr. Smith's reference to Mr. Dangar, as you have detailed it, he was interrupted by a voice from the crowd, saying, "What about the £50?" and whether, taking up that interruption, he did not say what he did about the land business? I could not say.

Robert Burdett Smith, Esquire, M.P., sworn and examined:—

- R. B. Smith, Esq., M.P. 712. Mr. Cohen.] You are the sitting Member for the Electoral District of the Macleay? I am.
 19 Feb., 1896. 713. You have represented that electorate for sixteen or seventeen years? Nearly sixteen years; I took my seat in 1870; I may say I have continuously represented the electorate, having been returned no fewer than seven times.
 714. You made a canvass of the district during the last election? I made a very brief canvass, having been previously returned seven times—twice unopposed—and by overwhelming majorities.
 715. Will you kindly tell the Committee what you said at Boat Harbour on the 14th October with reference to land agency business? It was my meeting at Boat Harbour, and Mr. Dangar, after I had commenced speaking, attended the meeting and stood near me, 4 or 5 yards off. I was interrupted several times by some of Mr. Dangar's friends, particularly people of the name of Bennett. I was interrupted very loudly several times by Mr. Dangar, and some reference was made to land agents. I thereupon stated that during the many years I had represented the district I had never abused my position as a representative of the people by taking fee or reward, and that in cases of selection, where the interests of individual parties did not conflict, if any selectors came to me with any grievance, I was one of the first to see the Minister and have their grievances remedied; and then I pointed out, in the course of many interruptions during my speech, that there were some Members of Parliament who unfortunately practised in the capacity of land agents, but that if they elected me I would continue to act in the future as I had done in the past—that, whether for friend or foe, any services I could render them, so long as interests did not conflict, I should always be happy to do so.
 716. Did you say this: "If you elect Mr. Dangar he will follow the business of Parliamentary Land Agent and will charge you five or ten guineas as fees?" I never said that. 717.

717. Did you make any allusion to Mr. Dangar? I did not make any allusion to Mr. Dangar. I may mention that previous to this, about a month or six weeks, an agitation had been going on in the district with regard to selections the forfeiture of which had been reversed, and at indignation meetings with regard to these forfeitures speeches had been made and resolutions had been passed, and during the course of these meetings reference had been made to the fact of land agents charging £50; in the course of my speech I referred to these objectionable practices of land agents acting in such a way, and said some of them charge 10, 20, 30, and some of them £50.
718. Coming to the nomination-day, with reference to similar interruptions on behalf of the petitioner, what did you say on the nomination-day? In the course of my speech on the nomination-day there was a little interruption; of course Mr. Dangar had his partisans there, and they seemed to be more noisy than mine at any time. Some one cried out, "What about the £50?" so I thereupon replied, "I know nothing about £50; I never abuse my position as a Parliamentary representative by taking anything for any services I might render or had rendered in connection with their land, so that interests did not conflict," and then I went on in the course of a long speech to refer to the objectionable practices of land agents.
719. Something has been said about your having whispered to the chairman;—was there anything in that whisper? There was a good deal of interruption; Mr. Dangar interrupted me several times, and I had forgotten where I had left off; I turned round and said, "What did I say last?"—that was the whisper, and the chairman told me where I left off; in fact I had lost the thread of my argument.
720. Coming to the matter of Sillitoe's selection—you had a public meeting at Waters', at Hickey's Creek? Yes; I am told it is 27 miles from Kempsey.
721. With reference to the conversation that took place with regard to Sillitoe's selection? Mr. Charles Sutherland was present the whole of the time, and Mr. Waters; Mr. Sutherland brought Sillitoe into the room.
722. Who else was present? I only saw Waters there; Mrs. Waters was in and out attending to her children; I did not see the boy there.
723. Will you tell the Committee what conversation took place with regard to Sillitoe's selection? Waters said, "This is Mr. Sillitoe"—he called him Dick; I thought he was a foreigner from his manner; however, he began to speak about the Land Bill and the framers of the Land Bill; he said they ought to be exterminated; and he spoke with great feeling against the squatters, and gave expression to some very crude ideas and views with regard to the Land Bill. Mr. Sutherland was sitting next to me, and I said, "This seems a very queer card, and very eccentric," and I began to chaff him.
724. Chairman.] Did you say anything to Sillitoe? Mr. Waters said to Sillitoe, "By-the-by, Dick, you may as well speak to Mr. Smith while he is here about that selection of yours." He said, "No, I do not care about speaking to anybody; I have written to the Lands Office and cannot get an answer to my letters." "Oh," said Waters, "I have no doubt if you ask Mr. Smith he will see to it for you when he goes to Sydney; shall I write to Mr. Smith for you about this selection?" I then said, "If you write to me about the selection I will see what is the cause of the delay."
725. Was there anything of this kind: Did you say to him, "Sillitoe, if you will give me your vote I will see that your land is made all right"? I swear solemnly I never said anything of the kind.
726. Did you hold out your hand and ask Sillitoe to make it a bargain? I never did anything of the kind; I never thought of such a thing; I never could have done such a thing; it is a pure fabrication.
727. Did you say, referring to Sillitoe, "Our friend here is hard to please"? No; I simply said, as we were going out to the meeting, "I suppose we part friends"; and I said "Good-bye," and he would not take my hand.
728. Mr. Cohen.] You did promise to see after the road and the teacher's residence? Yes; and I have attended to them.
729. As matters of public interest? Yes.
730. In no shape or form did you ask Sillitoe to vote for you or to support you, and you would see his selection was made right? Certainly not.
731. With regard to John Kean;—you heard his evidence when he said you promised him an appointment;—did you promise him an appointment? Certainly not; I never dreamt of such a thing; it is pure invention.
732. You did not say to him, "Vote for me and I will get you a good billet when I go to Sydney"? I never said anything of the kind; I never dreamt of such a thing.
733. Did you invite him to go over to Masterton's to get a drink? Certainly not; I never knew of such a thing at Masterton's; I never sanctioned any such thing; I am the last man in the world to sanction any proceedings of the kind as suggested by him.
734. Did you ask him to try and get all his friends to vote for you? I said nothing of the kind; I looked upon him as a recognized supporter of mine; I was told by some people that he was on my committee.
735. Did you ask Kean after dinner, and before the polling closed, whether he had given his vote? No, I did not; I have evidence to show that after dinner I never went near the polling-place.
736. After the election was over and you had come to Sydney, did you receive a letter from Kean, asking you to get him a situation? Yes.
737. What did you do with that letter? I spoke to the Comptroller-General of Prisons; I did not mention Kean's name particularly; but I asked if there were any vacancies.
738. Did his letter contain an application for an appointment at Trial Bay? Yes; that was the first time I ever had any communication with him to my knowledge with regard to a situation.
739. After you got that letter did you see the Comptroller about the matter? Yes, I saw him, and he said he would only take the best men.
740. At that time had you ascertained anything about Kean's character? Yes; a certain circumstance came to my mind about this man's character.
741. Was that the fact of his discharge from the Police Force? Yes.
742. Before you wrote the letter to Kean in reply were you aware of his discharge from the Police Force? Yes; I did not write the letter in reply myself or I should not have couched it in those terms.
743. You made no reference to his previous discharge from the Police Force? No; I was going to explain to him that in consequence of his dismissal from the Police Force I could not get an appointment for him, but I said to my clerk, who wrote the letter, "We will not hurt his feelings by mentioning it."

- R. B. Smith, Esq., M.P.
19 Feb., 1886.
744. With regard to M'Maugh's license;—did you promise M'Maugh that if he would support you you would endeavour to procure his license for him? Most certainly not.
745. When you first drove up to M'Maugh's did he tell you he was a supporter of yours? Yes, he said he would vote for me, but he did not wish Mr. Dangar to know.
746. You are certain of that? Yes.
747. Tell us what you did as to getting the license for him? He took me upstairs, and Mr. Cochrane then spoke to me about the license.
748. When you arrived there was Mr. Cochrane with you? Yes, and Mr. Charles Sutherland.
749. Did you and Mr. Cochrane accompany M'Maugh through his place? Yes; we went up stairs, and he showed me all the rooms.
750. What did you say to him about getting his license? I said that in my opinion the license should be granted in the public interest and that I could not understand why the license had not been granted.
751. What did he say to that? He said something about my speaking to Mr. Sutherland on the way home; I said, "In the public interest the license ought to be granted, and I will have a conversation about it with Mr. Sutherland"; he is the Licensing Magistrate.
752. You in no way said that if he would support you you would endeavour to get his license? Certainly not; there was no necessity for me to promise anything of the kind; I had too much support in the electorate to make it requisite.
753. With regard to the luncheon at M'Maugh's;—had you travelled a good distance before luncheon? Yes; I was told I had travelled nearly 40 miles.
754. You drove up to M'Maugh's accompanied by whom? Mr. Sutherland and others.
755. Were any of your personal friends there? Yes, several, but not a large number as mentioned by Mr. M'Maugh.
756. Was luncheon on the table when you arrived there? Yes. I knew nothing about the luncheon; we went in and somebody said there was luncheon inside; I know I was very hungry at the time and was very glad to get it; it was a splendid spread.
757. How many sat down to table? About seven.
758. After luncheon who paid for it? I paid for the lunch in the presence of Mr. Cochrane.
759. What had you to drink? Ginger-ale—only temperance drinks.
760. Did you take any grog or spirits to M'Maugh's that day? No.
761. You knew nothing at all about it? No; I was very much surprised to see grog there; I did not invite the people to drink there or anything of the kind. There was a flag flying, and I took it for granted this man was my supporter.
762. When you returned from Sydney you got a letter from Mr. M'Maugh about his license? Yes.
763. And you answered it? Yes; I stated that I had spoken to the authorities in the public interest—I think the words used were "solely in the public interest."
764. Did you ever pay for any drink supplied at M'Phillips' house? No, M'Phillips is mistaken; I had travelled all that morning from Smithtown in the rain and wet, and the way I said it was this: There was only one friend by me at the time, and I said, "Will you take any refreshment?" but I did not ask anyone else; that is how he has made the mistake.
765. That was on the Monday previous to the polling? Yes.
766. Those were the only drinks you paid for, the drink you had and the drink for your friend? I do not remember whether I paid, but I called for these simply for my friends and myself; certainly not more than three that came with me; and as for Mr. Cochrane's order I knew nothing at all of it; I never authorized it; and until it was stated by M'Phillips here just now, I never knew he gave any order.
767. Did you call at M'Phillips' again on Saturday, 17th October? Yes, and I called for some ginger ale or something for my friends who were travelling with me.
768. Did you authorize the keeping open of public-houses in any way whatever? I never dreamt of any such thing; I have a strong objection to it; no suggestion was made to me to do it.
769. Did you authorize "Cooper's Hotel" at Fredericktown to be kept open? I never heard of such a thing till Mr. Dangar mentioned it here in his evidence.
770. I ask you in general terms, did you during the election make any promises or hold out any expectations of profit to any of the electors or any of their friends? No, I had no occasion to do it. I visited the district in May last; the Committee may smile at it, but I had no fewer than sixteen banquets given me, and no fewer than 1,000 persons sat down at these banquets to do me honor. Whatever friends I had with me at Frederickton were recognized supporters and old friends. Mr. Kerrigan, formerly Inspector of Police, invited me to his table; I paid for no drinks; the gentlemen who were present were all old recognized supporters of mine who had supported me for years; and never in the course of my canvass did I do one single act to influence a vote.
771. Mr. Wise.] Do you think you have a right to treat your recognized supporters? I do not understand the word "treat;" I did not treat any one; I simply interchanged hospitalities.
772. At M'Phillips' who paid for the drinks? I do not know who paid for them.
773. I mean on the first occasion—on the Monday—when you whispered to your friend and called for drinks for him and yourself? I do not know who paid; I certainly gave no order to M'Phillips for general drinks.
774. On the next occasion, when you went with your other friends, you paid yourself? Yes.
775. On the first occasion how many people were drinking? Really I do not know; I was in the private parlour.
776. How many came into the private parlour? It could not hold more than thirty.
777. Were drinks served out to all of them? I could not say; I went out on the verandah and so many people came to speak to me about different things.
778. Although on that occasion you called for the drinks you did not pay for them? I did not call for the drinks.
779. You called for drinks for yourself and three friends? Yes.
780. Did you pay for them? I cannot say.
781. When you were on the verandah did you send anybody in to have a drink? No.
782. You swear that? Yes.
783. Do you know a man named Bale, a bullock-driver? No.

R. B.
Smith, Esq.,
M.P.
19 Feb., 1886.

784. Did you ask him to go in to have a drink? I do not know such a person.
785. About these statements you are reported to have made—you have heard the evidence given by the witnesses;—is your recollection of what took place so accurate as to enable you to swear that they are mistaken in the words they have attributed to you? I believe they are mistaken.
786. You have heard a good many of them make the same statements? I never intended to imply it in that sense.
787. Are you prepared to swear these witnesses were mistaken? I believe they were mistaken.
788. Will you swear it against the sworn testimony you have heard given? I will say I believe them to be mistaken.
789. Did you, at the nomination, use these words, or anything like them: "It has been said I have received £50 for my services, but I assure you I have not received a farthing, although land agents are in the habit of charging large fees in similar cases"? Probably I did.
790. Did you then go on to say, after an interval—"I am always willing to take the cases of any free selectors in the district without fee or reward"? I do not think I used the word "cases"; I believe I never used the word "cases," because I do not consider them as cases.
791. Will you swear, in the face of the sworn testimony that you did use the word "cases," that you did not use it? I conscientiously believe that I never said a word about "cases."
792. But you will not swear one way or the other, yes or no, about the use of the word "cases"? I believe I never said the word; I think I can safely swear I never said the word.
793. Will you swear you did not use the word "cases"? I believe I did not.
794. I want yes or no—"I am always willing to take the case of any free selector and obtain his rights without fee or reward." Will you swear you did not use the word "case" in that connection? I could not have used it in that connection.
795. That is not an answer; you know it is not. If you will not swear and cannot swear, say no? I never meant to imply —
796. That is not an answer to my question. If you cannot swear you did not use the word there the matter stands. Will you swear, yes or no? I used the word matter.
797. Will you swear you did not use the word "case"? In the course of a long speech the word "case" may have been used.
798. In the connection I have used it in—the "case" of any free selector? I cannot swear; I do not believe I did.
799. Did you say this: "You all know Mr. Dangar, my opponent is a land agent, and if you send him in to Parliament as your representative he will open a land agency business in Sydney, and paint over his door in large letters 'Land Agent,' and thereby drive a lucrative business at your expense;"—did you say that? No, not in the way you put it; not in those exact words I did not.
800. What correction would you make? I was interrupted, taunted once, and I said he was a land agent in Kempsey, and in all probability, or it was possible, he might act in the same capacity in Sydney, just in these terms.
801. Immediately after saying that do you go on to say: "Not so with me; I will do as I have done hitherto, perform all this agency business for any person in the electorate without fee or reward"? No; not following in that way.
802. In your examination-in-chief by Mr. Cohen you said you did not allude to Mr. Dangar? You have drawn my attention to the circumstance, but I never said he would charge fees or anything of that sort? I said he was a land agent and he may do so; I was pointing out the objection to the practice of returning land agents.
803. Did you say you would act before the Land Board? I never said a word about the Land Board.
804. Did you say you would take the case of any elector and do your best to satisfy him with reference to any cases that might come before the Land Board? Certainly not; I said I would interfere only in cases where there were no conflicting interests.
805. Mr. Reid.] Did you ever appear before the Land Board in the district? No, never at any time.
806. Mr. Wise.] Have you ever appeared at the Land Court here? Never.
807. At Boat Harbour did you say you would take cases of free selectors before the Land Court for nothing? Never; I never dreamt of such a thing.
808. Did you ever say that at Hickey's Creek? I never said that at Hickey's Creek; I could not have said it, because I would not interfere in cases of that kind; it was to be understood that it was only in matters that were before the Minister.
809. In reference to Sillitoe, I understood you to say that Waters first called your attention to Sillitoe and spoke about his selection? Yes.
810. At any time during that interview did you take Sillitoe's hand? No.
811. Will you swear that? I never took his hand; I offered my hand to him, just saying, "Good-bye; we will part friends."
812. Did he refuse to take it? Yes; he refused to shake hands with me.
813. Did you not offer him your hand after saying this: "Now, vote for me, and I will see that your land is made right; let that be a bargain"? No; I never said anything of the kind.
814. Then these witnesses who have been called on the matter are mistaken? They are mistaken; certainly they are mistaken.
815. Will you allow me to recall the conversation. Waters spoke to you with reference to his brother-in-law's selection? Yes.
816. You then asked Sillitoe who he was going to vote for;—is that correct? No.
817. You did not ask him? No.
818. Had you asked Sillitoe who he was going to vote for before he began to speak about the Land Act? No; I said nothing about voting, because I saw he was such a peculiar kind of man.
819. Nothing about voting was said? No.
820. Did you tell Sillitoe you voted against the Land Act? I may have said that.
821. Was that said with a view to getting his vote? Certainly not.
822. You swear that? I swear it.
823. Did you say to him, "Never mind all that; give me your support; or, if you vote for me I will see your land is made right"? No; I never dreamt of such a thing; is it at all likely that, as a representative for 16 years I should have said anything of the kind?

- R. B. Smith,
Esq., M.P.
19 Feb., 1886.
824. Did you see Mrs. Waters there? Yes; she was in and out attending to her children.
825. Was Mr. Sutherland there? Yes, all the time.
826. Was there any other child there besides the lad who was called as a witness here? No; I never saw any other child; I do not remember seeing the lad there.
827. Did you not see the lad sitting on a box near the door? No.
828. You have heard the evidence of these four witnesses—Kean, Porter, Donald, and FitzOsborne? Yes.
829. Who swear that you said to Kean, "If you will vote for me I will get you a billet"? Yes.
830. Is your recollection so accurate that you are prepared to swear these four witnesses have invented that statement? I am; I believe it is a pure invention.
831. You wrote a letter to Kean with reference to an appointment? Yes.
832. You knew Kean to be, in your opinion, not a respectable character? Yes; I knew he had been dismissed from the Police Force.
833. Did you supply your counsel with that intimation and with questions to put to Kean? Yes, when I knew he was coming here.
834. And yet you said nothing about this in your letter to him? I said to my clerk, "The audacity of this man making such an application."
835. You knew of this at the time you wrote that letter? Yes.
836. When you knew this why did you recommend this man to the Comptroller-General? I never recommended him.
837. Why did you say in that letter, knowing all this, why did you say you would do something for him later? I never meant in the Government service.
838. If you look at the letter you will see that it is so? It was my clerk that wrote it from an outline I gave him, and I do not think I saw it.
839. Do I understand you to say that did not refer to any Government office? Not to any Government office.
840. Still you saw the Comptroller-General in reference to him? Not in reference to him.
841. Did you see the Comptroller-General after receiving a letter from Kean? Yes, I did on other matters.
842. And you say you never mentioned Kean's name to him? I never mentioned his name; I wanted to see the Comptroller about the prisoners being sent down to Trial Bay, and about some other appointments.
843. What other appointments? Dr. Casement's and others.
844. Without reference at all to Mr. Kean? Without reference at all to Mr. Kean.
845. Did not Kean remind you of your promise when he wrote his letter? He did not; I have searched my office all through for the letter, and I should be only too glad to find it; it must have been destroyed when I was burning some other papers.
846. Did Mr. Kean see you at any time with reference to the expenditure of £5 on the polling-day? No, never.
847. Did you see Mr. Kean at any time that day—did you have any conversation with him at all? I think I saw him in the morning for a minute about 10 o'clock, and I thought he was voting for me; I was told he was on my committee.
848. I understood you to say that when you saw Kean no one was with him? Not a soul.
849. Did you see Mr. Donald at any time that day? Not that I remember.
850. Or Mr. FitzOsborne? Not that I remember.
851. Or Mr. Porter? Not that I remember.
852. Then these five men must have entered into a conspiracy? I believe so; that is my conviction.

MONDAY, 22 FEBRUARY, 1886.

Present:—

Mr. Henry Clarke,	Mr. Garvan,
Mr. Reid,	Dr. Renwick,
Mr. Sutherland,	Mr. Purves.
Arthur Renwick, Esq., M.D., in the Chair.

Mr. H. E. Cohen appeared as Counsel on behalf of the Sitting Member; Mr. B. R. Wise appeared on behalf of the Petitioners.

Robert Burdett Smith, Esq., M.P., called in and further examined:—

- R. B. Smith,
Esq., M.P.
22 Feb., 1886.
853. Mr. Wise.] Will you swear that during the course of your canvass you never invited electors other than personal friends to drink? I think not; I regarded them all as my personal friends.
854. The whole electorate? I wish to explain that in May I was banqueted and feted throughout the whole length and breadth of the electorate; no fewer than a thousand persons did me honor throughout the electorate. All the persons whom I invited to partake of drink were present at some banquet or other.
855. Used you to make it a point during your canvass to invite to drink any electors you came across? Certainly not.
856. Will you swear that you did not know, and do not know, that during the course of the elections electors other than personal friends of yours were being supplied with drink? I certainly never knew such a thing; I never would, under any circumstances, have sanctioned it.
857. Do you remember on the first day that you landed, going to "Simmons' Hotel"? I remember calling there as we were passing in buggies.
858. Did you tell Simmons to supply drink there to any and that you would bear the expense? Most distinctly not.
859. You swear that? I swear it most positively.
860. Who paid Simmons' account? I know nothing of Simmons' account; I never got it.
861. Did you have drinks there? Yes, Mr. Forsyth, a magistrate of the territory, who drove me in his buggy, and myself had drinks there.
862. You swear that those were all the drinks you ordered there? Yes, that I remember. It was Sunday, and it was raining at the time, 863,

863. At Smithtown was there any drinking at your expense? I arrived there at night and stayed there; I could not get beyond; I tried to get as far as Kempsey. The Returning Officer, Mr. Russell, and Mr. Forsyth, were with me. We stayed at Smithtown all night, and had tea and some refreshment there.
864. Besides the refreshments for your party did you invite other electors whom you saw in and about the hotel or the street to come in and have a drink, or did you tell the landlord to give them drink? I invited some of my personal friends—old supporters.
865. Do you consider all your supporters personal friends? No; I have a great number of personal friends in the electorate, people whom I have known for sixteen years and more. I am speaking of personal friends. I was on the Macleay as a boy and there are a large number of people there now who knew me then. These people and their sons I consider personal friends as well as those who have supported me during the last sixteen years.
866. That applies to nearly the whole electorate? Yes, judging from the support which I have always received.
867. So that you say that drink was supplied to all your personal friends? I say nothing of the sort.
868. Did you have a meeting at Frederickton? Yes, at the School of Arts.
869. Did you go to Cooper's hotel immediately after the meeting? I think we did; I really forget whether we did or not.
870. Did you go to Cooper's hotel and order drinks for every one standing by? No; I think not.
871. Will you swear it? I swear that I did not; I simply ordered drinks for some of my particular friends—members of my committee; not the general public; I at once say that it was not done with a view to influence any votes.
872. After leaving Cooper's hotel where did you go? To my hotel to attend another meeting.
873. Did you not go to Sullivan's hotel? I do not remember.
874. Will you swear that you did not? I was invited over there; I think I did; I am not certain about it.
875. At Sullivan's hotel did you again order drinks for those whom you call your personal friends? I have no recollection.
876. Will you swear that you did not? I think not.
877. Will you swear that you did not? My belief is that I did not; that is my firm conviction.
878. You heard Byrnes' evidence on that point? Yes.
879. And you put your belief against his sworn testimony on that point? I think that I may safely do that.
880. Have you paid any bills for drinks supplied at hotels? I have not paid any bills at all.
881. Have you authorized your committee to pay any bills? I never authorized my committee to do so; on the contrary, I gave them direct instructions not to allow drinking to go on in any hotel or other place throughout the electorate.
882. As far as you know the bills have not been paid yet? Yes.
883. You ordered drinks without knowing who would pay for them? Whatever drinks I ordered I paid for; they were simply an interchange of hospitality.
884. Mr. Cohen.] Whatever drinks you ordered you paid for at the time? Yes.
885. Mr. Wise.] I think that you said that you did not know whether Cooper's and Sullivan's accounts were ever paid? I do not know what you mean by accounts.
886. What amount did you pay at each of those places? I do not think more than 2s. or 3s. at Cooper's.
887. Then not more than 2s. or 3s. worth of liquor was consumed by your orders at Cooper's? By my authority.
888. What amount at Sullivan's? Not beyond a few shillings.
889. Were there not about 60 people drinking at each of those hotels? Certainly not at my expense, or by my authority.
890. Did you authorize any drinks to be supplied at Tilbrook's "Commercial Hotel," Kempsey? No; I was invited there by Mr. Cochrane.
891. Did you have any conversation with Tilbrook with reference to his vote? Certainly not; he had been a client of mine; I spoke to him in a casual sort of way.
892. Did you on Tuesday before the polling go to Tilbrook and call for drinks for all hands who came in? I did not.
893. Did Tilbrook say, "You may call for what drinks you like, but I am going to vote for Dangar"? He never said anything of the kind.
894. Have you paid Tilbrook anything for drinks? I never paid him a shilling.
895. Who paid for the drinks at his place? I do not know; I was invited there by Mr. Cochrane; I was told by Mr. Cochrane that he had paid for the drinks; at any rate I knew nothing about them.
896. At McNeill's hotel did you order or authorize drinks to be supplied there? No; Mr. Cochrane invited me to go in there; he said that it would look rather shabby to pass the door; I understood that he had an interest in the place; I think that 2s. or 3s. worth of drinks were called for by Mr. Cochrane.
897. You paid for them? I did not; I think that Mr. Cochrane did.
898. At the "West Kempsey Hotel" did you authorize the landlord to supply drinks to those who voted for you to the extent of £5? Certainly not.
899. You swear that? Positively.
900. Did you leave £5 with him for that purpose? Not one shilling with any hotel-keeper throughout the electorate.
901. Did you meet any more of your personal friends at the "Gladstone Hotel"? I did.
902. Did your personal friends have drinks there? Yes.
903. How many of them? I don't know.
904. How many personal friends did you supply drinks to throughout the election? I can't tell; it is an absurd question to ask.
905. A thousand? Certainly not.
906. Five hundred? No; not 200; I may say that there were 300 gentlemen on my committee.
907. Do you know a man named Seecombe? Yes.
908. Did you see him at Gladstone? I do not remember seeing him there.
909. He is a farmer? Yes.
910. How did you become acquainted with him? I have known him for sometime.
911. You had some business about a forfeited selection to do with him? No; about twelve months ago he wrote to me about a selection,

R. B. Smith,
Esq., M.P.
22 Feb., 1886.

- E. B. Smith,
Esq., M.P.
22 Feb., 1886.
912. Did you have any conversation with him during the election about that forfeited selection? Not anything at all.
913. Not during the time you were canvassing? No.
914. Did you ever tell him that you would put his selection right? I never told any human being during the contest that I would put his selection right.
915. On polling-day did you tell him? Certainly not; you call him and ask him if I did; he is in town; he was at my office this morning.
916. Were these the words you used to him: "Daugar says that you deserve to lose your selection; but I say you shall have it"? Nothing of the kind.
917. Do you remember stopping at the "Fernmount Hotel"? Yes.
918. Who is the landlord? I forget; I think his name is Hynes, or something like that.
919. Did you tell him to let electors have drink at your expense? Certainly not.
920. Did you authorise any of your committee to do so? Certainly not; I tell you once and for all that I never authorised any member of my committee to do anything like that.
921. Will you swear that you do not know that at the "Fernmount Hotel" and other hotels, electors tendered money for drinks had across the bar, but it was refused to be accepted? It is the first time that I have heard anything of the kind suggested.
922. At the "Raleigh Hotel" did you order any drinks to be supplied? After the meeting was over I asked a few of my old friends—the chairman of the meeting and others—to have a little refreshment, and they were supplied to the extent of a few shillings.
923. How many of them? I do not know.
924. Thirty or forty? I think not.
925. Will you swear that thirty or forty were not supplied with liquor immediately after the meeting? I did not pay for them.
926. Did not the people at the meeting follow you into the hotel, and did you not pay when the bill was tendered to you? I have no recollection of paying any bill at all. I was in such a great hurry that I think I left the bill unpaid.
927. Has not that bill been forwarded to your committee? I know nothing at all about it.
928. You did not pay it? I did not. I and some of my friends had luncheon there.
929. Did you hold a meeting at the "West Kempsey Hotel" after the nomination? Yes.
930. In the same way as you did at the "Raleigh Hotel," did you not take the chairman and some of your friends into the hotel immediately after the meeting? Yes, the chairman and one or two others—personal friends, who had been old supporters of mine, and whose support nothing in the world would alienate from me.
931. Were there thirty or forty of them? Certainly not; I do not think that I invited more than half-a-dozen to have a drink.
932. Did not a large number of people drink at your expense? I am not aware of it.
933. What did you pay? I did not pay a shilling.
934. Who paid? I do not know.
935. Has the bill been tendered to you? No; if anything further than I have stated was done it was done without my authority.
936. Is it not a fact that on that occasion a large number of people remained at the hotel after 11 o'clock drinking? I know nothing about it.
937. Did not Mr. Chas. Sutherland call your attention to it? No; he never called my attention to it.
938. Did not Mr. Chas. Sutherland tell you that as Licensing Magistrate he was bound to call your attention to it? He never said anything of the kind. I should like to explain that immediately on the conclusion of my speech I went to the Rev. Mr. Gonde, Presbyterian clergyman, who was waiting up stairs for me. Whatever took place down stairs I know nothing about. I was with Mr. Gonde and several magistrates of the district for at least an hour, and the only refreshment about which I know anything was that which we had up stairs.
939. Will you swear that you do not know that you will have to pay for all those drinks? I don't know anything about it. I may say that it is repugnant to my nature to allow drinking to go on anywhere.
940. Did you know a man named Frank M'Mahony? He came to me some time ago and asked me to endeavour to get some appointment for him.
941. What appointment was it? He came to me with a letter of introduction from some Magistrate; it was a situation on the railway that he wanted.
942. During the time of your canvass did you come across him? I saw some men working on the road; Mr. Sutherland was with me; I was driving; we passed a camp, and I did not know who the man was.
943. Do you remember a conversation? I am certain that there was nothing—simply something about the election. The man and I passed the day.
944. Did you speak about this situation? Certainly not.
945. You swear that? Certainly; I never said anything of the kind. Mr. Sutherland was in the buggy with me.
946. You swear that he never mentioned it? I swear it.
947. Did you say anything to the effect that upon certain conditions you would get the situation he wanted? I swear solemnly that nothing of the kind took place. It is a pure concoction—a pure fabrication—and they will find it out before long. I will have them up for conspiracy.
948. Is Mr. Sutherland here to-day? He is here.
949. Is he summoned as a witness by you? He is.
950. Have you been having conversation with him and with other witnesses? I have been speaking with them from time to time. That is only natural.
951. I have a reason for asking this question, Mr. Smith; Have you had any conversation with Mr. Sutherland, or with any of the other witnesses, as to the evidence to be given here to-day? Of course I have had conversation with them—before I instructed my friend Mr. Slattery to act as my solicitor.
952. Did you press Mr. Sutherland to tax his memory as to a certain event? I never asked him to tax his memory at all.
953. Did he then reply to you, "No, I will not; I will speak the truth if it unseats ten Smiths." Will you swear that he did not say that? I will swear it. I never asked him to tax his memory. 954.

954. Will you swear that he did not make use of the expression which I have named? I swear that he never did—not in that way.
955. Leaving your question apart for the moment, did Mr. Sutherland not say to you—I do not ask what it was in answer to—did he not make use of these words, “No, I will not; I will speak the truth if it unseats ten Smiths?” He did—words to that effect. I think that what he said was this: “That he would rather give his own statement before the Committee.”
956. If it unseated ten Smiths? I think he made use of that expression—something to that effect.
957. To what question of yours was that an answer? It was only generally as to what he knew about this matter. I knew nothing of this pure concoction and fabrication about Waters's evidence.
958. Had you been speaking to him about Waters's evidence when he made this reply? I think it was in reply to that that he said he would make his own statement before the Committee. I refrained from speaking to him on the subject; I sent him to my solicitor, Mr. Slattery, and to Mr. Cohen, the barrister.
959. Mr. Cohen: With whom were you during the whole of the morning of the polling-day? I was with Mr. Small, the Governor of the Trial Bay Gaol, and with Captain Portana, of the “Queen of the South.” They were with me from a little before 10 o'clock and up to 1 o'clock; they were with me all the morning; and if I may be permitted to say it, I did no act throughout this election other than that of a gentleman.
960. Mr. Purves: As to paying the expenses of the election;—did you pay them yourself? I did not.
961. You handed to the committee a certain sum to be expended on your behalf? I left my chairman a certain sum; I knew nothing more about it.
962. Mr. Wise: Do you know as a matter of fact that there are several hotel bills which your committee have not yet paid? I declare that I know nothing about it.

R. B. Smith,
Esq., M.P.
22 Feb., 1886.

Mr. James William Hayes called in and examined:—

963. Mr. Cohen: Do you keep an hotel at Smithtown, in the Macleay district? Yes.
964. What is the name of it? The “Shamrock Hotel.”
965. Were you keeping it at the last general election? Yes.
966. Was your house an open house—that is, a house opened with drinks free to the electors on the polling-day? Of course I had my house open.
967. Was it an open house—that is, was no money taken? Yes; I sold drinks.
968. You do not understand me. Had you authority from anyone to keep your house open and supply drinks free? Free drinks—no, none whatever.
969. In that sense your house was not an open house on that day? No.
970. Mr. Wise: Did you supply drinks to anyone free without authority? No.
971. Not at any time during the election? No.
972. Do you remember Mr. Smith holding a meeting at your place? Yes.
973. After the meeting were there drinks supplied? Not at Mr. Smith's expense.
974. I am not asking you that. Were there any drinks supplied at all after the meeting? Yes; I served drinks.
975. How many? I could not say.
976. Thirty or forty? I could not say.
977. How many were present at the meeting? A good many.
978. All present at the meeting had drinks afterwards? I could not say.
979. They usually do, do they not? Not always.
980. How many drinks were consumed that evening; what was the value? I could not tell you.
981. What was the amount at your place of the drinks consumed after the meeting? There were no drinks consumed after the meeting.
982. Do you know that Mr. Smith has said that drinks were consumed after the meeting? Mr. Smith is making a mistake then. There were no drinks at Mr. Smith's expense.
983. What value of drinks did you hand over the bar that evening—£4 or £5 worth? I could not say.
984. Will you swear it was not. Do you not know, as a matter of fact, that the amount was £4 or £5? It was not.
985. Was it over £3? I did not count the cash.
986. Will you not swear that it was, roughly, over £3—I do not wish you to fix the amount to half-a-sovereign? I do not remember counting the cash.
987. Who paid for the drinks supplied that evening? Each one paid for his own.
988. All through the place? Yes.
989. Have you rendered an account to Mr. Smith's committee? Yes.
990. For how much? £5.
991. It is not paid yet? It is.
992. Who paid it? I could not tell you.
993. Was it paid by cheque? I received no money at all.
994. Then who did receive it? It was paid to my agent in Kempsey.
995. Who is he? A man with whom I was doing business.
996. Is that the way in which you always have bills paid? No, it is not; I was doing business through this man; I owed him an account.
997. Why was this bill paid differently from the way in which your bills are usually paid? Because I owed him the money.
998. You owed your agent the money? Yes.
999. Who did you tell to pay the money to your agent? I told the man himself to get the money.
1000. Who from? I did not tell him anyone in particular.
1001. What did you say to him then? I said that I had an account against Mr. Smith and I wished him to get it for me.
1002. And he did get it? Yes.
1003. What is the name of the agent you mention? Mr. Wilson.
1004. Mr. Purves: What was the account which you rendered to Mr. Smith's committee for? Board and lodging and the hire of a buggy.

Mr.
J. W. Hayes,
22 Feb., 1886.

Board
1005.

- Mr.
J. W. Hayes.
22 Feb., 1886.
1005. Were there any drinks in it? No.
1006. Just an ordinary hotel account? Yes.
1007. Who was the board and lodging for? Mr. Smith and two or three other gentlemen.
1008. Friends of his? Yes; when he arrived from Sydney he stayed at my place on his way to Kempsey. I drove him in the buggy.
1009. What are the names of the gentlemen? Mr. Panton, Mr. Forsyth —
1010. Mr. Cohen.] Is that Mr. Panton the Returning Officer? Yes.
1011. Mr. Wise.] And these were the only two gentlemen? Yes, on that occasion; on other occasions he stayed with me.
1012. More than one occasion? Yes.
1013. And this bill was to cover all the occasions? Yes.
1014. How often did he stay with you? Twice.
1015. Did not Mr. Forsyth drive Mr. Smith in his own buggy? He drove him as far as my place and returned home.
1016. Where did you drive him to? From my place to Kempsey.
1017. What is the distance? 12 miles.

Mr. William Small, called in and examined:—

- Mr.
W. Small.
22 Feb., 1886.
1018. Mr. Cohen.] I believe that you are Superintendent of the Trial Bay Prison? I am.
1019. You were lately gaoler at Berrima? Yes.
1020. How long have you been in the Public Service? Twenty-four years.
1021. Were you at West Kempsey on the polling-day at the last general election? Yes.
1022. Did you see Mr. Smith that morning? I did.
1023. Were you with him during any portion of that morning? From somewhere near 10 o'clock to very close handy 1.
1024. Were you in his company all that time? I was talking to him most of the time; I was never out of his sight.
1025. Do you know a man named Kean? Since I have been here I have seen him.
1026. During that morning, at any time, did you see him talking to Mr. Smith or Mr. Smith to him? I did not.
1027. Do you think that it is probable or possible that they might have had a conversation without you seeing or hearing it? I scarcely think it possible.
1028. Can you tell us the longest distance that Mr. Smith was away from you at any time during the morning? I do not think further than the length of this room at any time.
1029. Did you see Mr. Smith in conversation with Kean at any time? I did not.
1030. Mr. Reid.] Or with several persons of whom Kean was one? I did not.
1031. Did you see him near Mr. Smith at any time when there were others present? I never saw him there to my knowledge; I am considered a good judge of faces; I never forget a face once I see it; I have no recollection of seeing him in Kempsey.
1032. At this particular time? At any time.
1033. Mr. Wise.] You think that if he was in Kempsey that day you would remember having seen him? I do.
1034. I mean in Kemp-street—you think that you would remember it if you had seen him there? I think so.
1035. Mr. Purves.] You did not know him previously? I did not.
1036. Mr. Wise.] Do you know Fitz-Seabon by sight? I may know him by sight, but I do not know him by name.
1037. Do you know David Donald by sight? I would not know him by name.
1038. Or a man called Porter? I think that I have seen him here; most of the witnesses here I saw there on that day.
1039. Have you seen a man named Fitz-Seabon here? I have not been told the names of the witnesses here except a few of them.
1040. How many people were there in the street that morning? There must have been a couple hundred.
1041. And how many people did Mr. Smith speak to in your company? Most of the time when I went up to him first he was standing alone.
1042. What time was that? Somewhere near 10 o'clock.
1043. And where was he standing? Nearly opposite the polling-place.
1044. Where did you go? We were conversing together for some time when a Primitive Methodist clergyman came up and spoke to Mr. Smith.
1045. How long for? A few minutes. They went away about the width of the room from me.
1046. Did that happen frequently during the day? Only on that occasion.
1047. How many people did Mr. Smith talk to while he was with you? He seemed to me to be almost alone, except when I was with him.
1048. Was he not shaking hands with everyone and asking how they were going to vote? I did not see anything of the sort.
1049. The street was pretty well crowded? Not crowded; it is a wideish street; there were a good few there.
1050. Dr. Renwick.] Can you recall to your memory between 11 and 12 o'clock? I feel certain that I was with Mr. Smith nearly the whole of that time and up to 1 o'clock.
1051. If four persons were standing there and Mr. Smith put his hand on the shoulder of one of them, and asked him to vote for him, you must have noticed it? Certainly I would. He put out his hand to the Primitive Methodist minister and said, "Let us be friends, although I know you are opposed to me."
1052. Three hours is a considerable period. You only heard him speak to the Primitive Wesleyan all the time? He may have spoken to others; he may have spoken to a dozen for aught I know, but I have no recollection of these men at all. I do not think he conversed with anyone without my being in hearing.
1053. Mr. Cohen.] Within hearing or within sight? Almost within hearing I think I may say.
1054. You have a good memory of faces? I do not think anyone has a better. 1055.

1055. Mr. Purves.] Do you mean to say that Mr. Smith did nothing on that morning from 10 o'clock to 1 o'clock that you were not thoroughly conversant with? I could not say that, but when this person was pointed out to me on the verandah—I saw him on the verandah below here—I never saw him in my life before to my knowledge.

*Mr.
22 Feb., 1886.

1056. That is all you can say? That is all I can say.

1057. If another person were there at the time you would not undertake to say that he was upon the ground? No.

1058. Then how can you single out this particular man? I do not say that he was not there. But I say that it is scarcely possible that he could have been speaking to Mr. Smith without my knowledge.

1059. Do you remember the faces of all that he was speaking to that day? I could not say that he was speaking, but if any of the faces which were there that day were brought before me again I should know them.

1060. A great number of strangers were there? They were nearly all strangers to me.

1061. Mr. Wise.] That was your first visit to Kempsey? It was.

1062. Do you know that there were 500 or 600 votes recorded at that one polling-place in the day? I should imagine that there would be.

1063. Mr. Cohen.] You might not recall to your mind now every face you saw that day, but if any person were presented here now you could say if you saw him? Of course I could; I was in company with Mr. Smith, and those who came around him and spoke to him I should know again.

1064. Chairman.] Suppose it were given in evidence that this man Kean you have recognized in company with others had a conversation with Mr. Smith extending over a minute or two about his voting, about getting a billet, about an invitation to drink, and putting his hand upon the shoulder, it must all have been recognized by you if it took place between 11 and 1 o'clock? I think it is impossible for such a thing to have been done without my noticing it.

1065. Mr. Reid.] Do you remember anything like the scene described by the Chairman? Nothing of the sort. Mr. Smith coming from Sydney, and I knowing Mr. Smith he never asked me to drink.

1066. Mr. Wise.] Take that moment when you were talking to the Primitive Wesleyan, who was Mr. Smith talking to then? I do not think to any one; he stepped on one side.

1067. Could you swear that he was not talking to anybody during that time? I would not swear; certainly not. I told the Primitive Methodist that I was a Methodist, and that I thought that he was out of place in dragging men up to the poll as he was doing.

1068. Mr. Reid.] Where were you then? Opposite the polling place.

1069. How far from "Morston's Hotel"? As far as from here to the other side of the road.

1070. How far away did Mr. Smith go from you? About the length of this room.

Captain Spencer Postans called in, sworn, and examined:—

1071. Mr. Cohen.] You are the captain of the "Coraki"? Yes.

Capt. Postans.

1072. Were you in Kempsey upon the polling-day of the last general election? Yes.

1073. Were you with Mr. Smith? I was speaking to him several times, and I was in sight of him all the morning.

22 Feb., 1886.

1074. From what time? From 10 o'clock until dinner-time.

1075. Do you know a man of the name of Kean who is here as a witness? Yes.

1076. Did you know him before the polling-day? Yes.

1077. During that morning did you see him talking to Mr. Smith? Certainly I did not.

1078. Do you think it is probable that he could have talked to Mr. Smith without your hearing or seeing him? I think that, being about on the ground the whole morning, I should have seen him.

1079. Could you be certain one way or the other? Kean is a man I know very well, and if he had spoken I should have remembered it.

1080. Chairman.] You know the last witness? Yes.

1081. Did you see him in company with Mr. Smith about the hours mentioned on the polling-day—between 11 and 1 o'clock? Yes; I certainly did see them speaking together during the morning.

1082. They were not always together? Mr. Smith was speaking to friends as they met, shaking hands with them as they passed.

Mr. Henry Porter called in, sworn, and examined:—

1083. Mr. Cohen.] Where do you reside? West Kempsey.

H. Porter.

1084. Do you know the witness Macdonald? Yes.

1085. Did you hear him say anything about coming down here? Yes.

22 Feb., 1886.

1086. On board the "Belmore"? Yes.

1087. Before you met the "Coraki"? Yes.

1088. What did he say? He said to a man named Long and myself that he saw this chance of getting away from the Macleay; he availed himself of it. He said, "I owe certain persons in Kempsey some money, and when I saw this chance of getting away from Kempsey with the passage and expenses paid I took it. All that they could do would be to summons me, get a verdict, and take my clothes if they could find me." These are the words I heard him use.

1089. Chairman.] Did he say anything about what evidence he was going to give in this inquiry? He did not say anything about that.

1090. And you did not speak to him about it? No.

Chas. Sutherland, Esq., J.P., called in and examined:—

1091. Mr. Cohen.] I believe you are a Magistrate of the territory? Yes.

C. Sutherland, Esq., J.P.

1092. For how many years have you been in that position? Some three years.

1093. And you are a member of the Local Licensing Bench at Kempsey? Yes.

1094. During the last election did you accompany Mr. Smith upon his canvass? Yes.

1095. 22 Feb., 1886.

- C. Sutherland, Esq., J.P., 22 Feb., 1886.
1095. Were you with him during the whole canvass? Yes; right through the district.
1096. At all his meetings—at Boatharbour, Kempsey, Smithtown, and other places? I was at every meeting he addressed.
1097. You were at the last meeting at West Kempsey? Yes.
1098. Did you hear Mr. Smith deliver the whole of his speeches? Yes.
1099. Confining our attention to the speeches at Boatharbour and upon nomination-day did you hear Mr. Smith make any reference to land agency or land business? I did at the nomination.
1100. Did you hear him do so at Boatharbour? I do not think I did.
1101. Did you hear him at all there? I did.
1102. You do not recollect his saying anything about land agents at Boatharbour? No.
1103. Were you away from the meeting for any portion of the time? I was not.
1104. Will you tell us as nearly as possible what you heard Mr. Smith say upon nomination-day as to the land-agency business? I remember Mr. Smith speaking about his actions as to his position as our representative, and stating that he never made any charge for all the assistance he gave to the electors. Some person from the crowd sung out, "What about Mr. Pantou's £50?" Mr. Smith said in reply that he knew nothing of £50 in connection with Mr. Pantou's transaction, and that whatever assistance he had given to Mr. Pantou he had given it without fee or reward. He said that he had done the same to any other elector who asked him for assistance. He said, "It is the practice for land agents to charge from £10 to £50;" but that he had never charged a man a shilling in his life.
1105. Did you hear him say anything in reference to his intentions in the future? He said that he would do the same in the future as in the past, and after the election he said he would treat all friends and foes alike—that he would serve one as well as the other.
1106. Are you quite sure about that? I am.
1107. At any of the meetings did you see Mr. Smith treat the electors generally to drinks? I did not.
1108. Or pay for them? I did not see him pay 1s. during the whole time I was with him.
1109. Did you hear him authorize anyone to supply drinks to the electors? I did not.
1110. You were one of his personal friends and supporters? I was.
1111. Did you at any time have any refreshment with Mr. Smith? I did.
1112. And you were travelling with him? I was—all round.
1113. I believe you are a Good Templar? I am.
1114. And have been so for many years? Yes.
1115. Were you at Skillian Flat, at the house kept by George M'Maugh? I was.
1116. Did you travel with Mr. Smith to M'Maugh's? Yes.
1117. Before you got there did Mr. Smith say anything to you about a license for M'Maugh's house? Yes. When we were approaching the house Mr. Smith said, "What place is this; it was not here when I was here before?" I said that it was a house erected by Mr. Cochrane, and that a license had been applied for. I told him that there were two refusals, one for a wine license and one for a public-house. Mr. Smith said to me, "It is surprising that you would refuse a license for a house situated like this—a good distance from Kempsey." I said that the evidence was against it, and that the Bench were unanimous against the establishment of the house.
1118. That was the decision of the Bench upon the evidence? Upon the evidence.
1119. That was before you got to M'Maugh's? Just as we were coming in sight of the house; we did not call in that time.
1120. That was when you were passing in the morning and going up? Yes.
1121. Where were you going? To Hickey's Creek.
1122. You returned in the afternoon? About 3 o'clock.
1123. When you got to M'Maugh's in the afternoon did you hear any conversation between Mr. Smith and Mr. M'Maugh as to his license? I heard the word "license" mentioned, and that was all that I heard between them. I was in the lobby. Perhaps I may be allowed to explain that Mrs. M'Maugh came to me at first, and said that she wanted to see Mr. Smith particularly about some business. I told Mr. Smith that Mrs. M'Maugh wished to see him. I saw them come together, and I heard the word "license" mentioned. Being a Licensing Magistrate I did not wish to hear the conversation. I went away and did not hear what took place.
1124. You remained there for luncheon? Yes; we had lunch there.
1125. How many sat down to luncheon? About eight, I think. I did not count them at the time.
1126. You travelled that day about 40 miles? Over 40 miles; it is 27 miles going to Hickey's Creek, and of course the same distance back.
1127. Do you remember any drink being had there that day? I had a glass of ginger-ale myself. Mr. M'Maugh keeps summer drinks.
1128. Did anyone else have drinks at the same time? There were several different parties standing there.
1129. Who paid for the drinks? I offered to pay for them myself, and M'Maugh said he would not charge me for a summer drink like that. He said "I have known you a long time; you have assisted us in travelling stock." I said, "You are very foolish; I do not expect to get anything for nothing." But he said that he would not take money from me. I suppose there were about 9d. or 1s. worth of drinks; I offered him the money for it. M'Maugh is in the habit of stopping at my place going up and down with cattle.
1130. It was a sort of mutual courtesy? I understood that he felt himself under an obligation.
1131. Were you invited into luncheon do you remember? Yes.
1132. Who invited you? Mr. M'Maugh.
1133. Luncheon was on the table when you were there? Yes; in the back room.
1134. Did you order it when you passed by in the morning? We did not stop there in the morning.
1135. It was a cold luncheon? Yes.
1136. And a good one too? Yes; I was agreeably surprised. At the time I was very hungry.
1137. Did you see someone pay for this luncheon? I did not.
1138. Do you think £1 too much to pay for the luncheon? I am sure that it could not be got up for £1. I do not think it could be prepared for that.
1139. Mr. Reid.] Including the summer drinks? No; there were no summer drinks—there was something stronger than summer drinks upon the table.
1140. Mr. Cohen.] Do you know a man named Waters, a free selector? Yes, I know him. 1141.

1141. Where is he? At Hickey's Creek; about 27 miles from Kempsey.
1142. Were you present when a conversation took place with a man of the name of Sillitoe? Yes, I was.
1143. Can you say whether you were present during the whole conversation? I was there during the whole time.
1144. Will you tell us as nearly as possible what took place in the conversation you heard between Mr. Smith and Sillitoe? I remember distinctly.
1145. Tell us as nearly as you can recollect in your own words? I remember that there was Mr. Sillitoe, Mr. Smith, Mr. Waters, and myself. Sometimes Mrs. Waters was in and sometimes out of the room. Someone said, "Now then here is a good chance to ask Mr. Smith to assist you about the selection of yours." Dick, in reply, said, "No; I shall not ask Mr. Smith to do anything of the sort. I have written two letters to Sydney, and I got no answer; besides, Mr. Smith is a squatter; I do not expect any sympathy from squatters." He added, "The whole Land Bill is against the interests of the free selectors; the squatters are determined to crush us poor devils." He said, "I would not ask Mr. Smith to do anything for me." Mr. Smith commenced to explain to Sillitoe that he was a selector's friend, and drew his attention to the fencing clause. He said to Sillitoe,—“I did all that lay in my power to get the time extended to three years for the erection of your fences.” He added,—“It would be impossible for you to get up yours in six months.” Sillitoe seemed to be distant and cool with Mr. Smith, and at this stage Mr. Smith whispered to me,—“This is a peculiar card.” He said,—“We will have some fun with him while the electors are gathering.” Mr. Smith then went on in a jocular way with Sillitoe. After we had been sitting silent for a while, Sillitoe seemed to warm up in a moment. He said,—“It might be as well if you will try and do what you could for me about the selection.” He said,—“I have a family, and it will be to their interest to get the land.” Mr. Smith said,—“If you get Walters to write me a letter, I will do all that I can for you.” At this time we were leaving, and Mr. Smith put out his hand and said,—“I suppose we are friends,” and it ended there.
1146. Did you hear anything to this effect, that Mr. Smith said to Sillitoe,—“If you vote for me I will do what I can to get your selection?” The word “vote” was never used.
1147. Do you know Thomas Henry, a lad about fifteen years of age, who has been called as a witness? Yes.
1148. During this conversation between Mr. Smith and Sillitoe did you see him present? I did not.
1149. Could you undertake to say that he was not present? Yes, unless he was under the table. I did not see him there.
1150. He was not in the room? No. I have no recollection of his being in the room. I am satisfied that he was not in the room.
1151. Did you see him sitting on a box at the door? No. I never moved off the sofa.
1152. Did you hear anything of this kind said by Mr. Smith,—“Now, let us be friends; is it not a bargain between us;” or, “It is a bargain between us?” No. I heard nothing of the kind.
1153. Did you hear the word “bargain” mentioned? No, and it could not have been mentioned without my hearing it.
1154. Were you at the West Kempsey meeting? Yes.
1155. Do you remember when that meeting was held? It was on the Saturday night, I believe, after the nomination.
1156. Did you see Mr. Smith leave the meeting immediately the meeting closed? Yes.
1157. Do you know where he went? Yes. He went up to the best parlour upstairs.
1158. Did anyone accompany him? Yes, the Rev. Mr. Gowdie.
1159. Did you on that occasion hear Mr. Smith order any drink? No, I did not.
1160. At the Boatharbour meeting did you hear Mr. Smith say anything with regard to giving drink at that meeting? I heard him object to it.
1161. You heard him object to drink being supplied at the Boatharbour meeting? Yes.
1162. Did you hear Mr. Smith in his nomination speech make use of the words “Land Court”? No, I did not.
1163. Do you remember having a conversation with Mr. Dangar in reference to the petition before you came from Kempsey? Yes.
1164. Will you tell the Committee what that conversation was? I was in Mr. Dangar's office one morning when the matter of the petition came up, and I said I was very sorry that he had taken action in the matter, and that I thought that if ever he had had a chance of being he had lost it by doing so. He said: Mr. Sutherland, I had no thought of doing so till I was threatened with an action by Mr. Smith. As soon as I was I went about and got evidence. I will not swear whether he said he got or raked up evidence to defend myself.
1165. You are quite certain about that? Yes, perfectly certain.
1166. He was aware then that Mr. Smith had threatened him with an action? Yes, he said that Mr. Smith had threatened him with an action.
1167. On the polling-day were you with Mr. Smith at all? A good part of the day I was.
1168. During that day did you or did you not see Mr. Smith supply persons with drink or order drink for them? I did not see him in or near a public-house myself.
1169. Had you or had you not any authority from Mr. Smith to supply drink? No, I never had in all my life.
1170. Drink of any kind? Drink of any kind, or refreshments of any kind.
1171. Do you know a man named Keane, who has been called as a witness? Yes.
1172. How long have you known him or of him? (Question objected to.)
1173. You having been at all Mr. Smith's meetings did you hear him hold out any promise or expectation of profit or advancement to any of the electors or to their families or friends in order to influence their votes? I did not.
1174. At any meeting? No.
1175. Did you see Mr. Smith treat any of the electors or supply them with drink in order to influence their votes? I did not.
1176. Are you aware of his having kept open or allowed to be kept open at his own expense and with his authority public-houses and places of entertainment with a view of influencing the votes of the electors? No, I am not aware of a single instance. I know that on the contrary it was not Mr. Smith's wish that any such thing should be done.

- C. Sutherland, Esq., J.P.
22 Feb., 1886.
1177. Mr. Purves.] You know that it is Mr. Smith's practice to object to it? Yes, he told me on the road that he objected to the system altogether.
1178. Are you a member of his committee? Yes.
1179. Do you know what accounts were presented to the committee? No, I never saw one of the accounts, because I was away.
1180. The Chairman.] Were you with Mr. Smith on the polling-day between 11 and 12 o'clock at Kempsey, near the Court-house? I believe I was.
1181. Did you see him meet a man named Keane and have some conversation with him? No, I did not.
1182. You did not see him enter into conversation with Kean at all? No; I did not see Kean on that day.
1183. You are quite sure that at Hickey's Creek Mr. Smith did not say these words, "Sillitoe, if you will vote for me I will see that your land is all right; it is a bargain; shake hands"? Never a word, and I was present the whole time.
1184. Mr. Wise.] Did you or the committee go out of that room first, or Mr. Smith? We went altogether.
1185. Where was Sillitoe? We went out and he was at the end of the table to our left.
1186. Mr. Purves.] Did you ever hear Mr. Smith say at any of his meetings that if Mr. Dangar was returned he would charge them for their land business, but that if he was returned he would do it for nothing? No, I never did.
1187. The Chairman.] Were you at Greenhill's with Mr. Smith? Yes.
1188. You were with him when some liquors were talked over at the bar? No, I was not in the bar. I had a pair of horses outside in a buggy, and I went out to look after them.
1189. You did not hear Mr. Smith say to the landlord, "Bring in the bill; I will settle it"? No, I did not.
1190. Did you see Mr. Smith pay M'Phillips for certain drinks on the Saturday before the nomination? No, I did not.
1191. M'Phillips swore that you were present and saw Mr. Smith pay him? I was no nearer than the middle of the room. I sat in the buggy all the time.
1192. Mr. Purves.] You never saw Mr. Smith pay for any drink? I never saw Mr. Smith pay for anything.
1193. Therefore, if he said that Mr. Smith did so, you must have been away at the time? I never saw it. I did not say that he might not have done it.
1194. Mr. Wise.] Are you prepared to swear that Mr. Smith, neither on the nomination-day nor in his speech on any other occasion, referred to Mr. Dangar as a land agent who would charge? No, I do not believe that Mr. Smith did.
1195. Do you know a shorthand-writer named George Lane? Yes.
1196. Do you regard him as a reliable man? I do not. I know on the contrary that his reports of our meetings are very misleading. They cannot be relied upon. I have complained to Mr. Lane of the reports of my own speeches, and he said, "Of course I am not responsible; the matter is hushed up."
1197. Will you swear that on the nomination-day Mr. Smith did not say this: "I am always willing to take the case of any free-selector in the electorate and to obtain his rights without fee or reward"? Yes, he did use words to that effect.
1198. Did you hear him say this: "You all know Mr. O. O. Dangar, my opponent; he is a land agent, and if you send him into Parliament as your representative he will open a land agency business in Sydney and will paint over his door in large letters the words "land agent," and thereby derive a lucrative business at your expense by charging £5, £10, £20, or £50, as the case may be; not so with me, I will do as I have hitherto done, perform all this agency business for any person in the electorate without fee or reward"? No, I did not hear him say that, I do not believe that he made any comparison between himself and Mr. Dangar.
1199. Did you hear him say this: "I will take the case of any elector and do my best for him in satisfying his claims without fee or reward"? He did, he said he was in the habit of doing it and always would do it, and he said, "I can call upon my own officers, they will bear me out in the statement I make."
1200. Did you see any drinking going on? No, the reverse. I never saw the people so sober and well conducted at an election time, and I have been there more than twenty-nine years. The general complaint of the publicans was that there was very little grog selling.
1201. Mr. Reid.] I suppose that Mr. Dangar divides the honors with Mr. Smith in that respect. They were both very temperate? Yes.
1202. Mr. Wise.] You were the chairman of the committee? No, I was away.
1203. Have you been away ever since the poll was declared? No.
1204. Is there any reason why you have not seen the bills that were delivered to the committee? —
1205. Have you purposely refrained from informing yourself what bills were sent in? No, I did not.
1206. Have you attended any committee meetings since? Every meeting that I was aware of; I live 12 miles distant; and sometimes the meetings are over before I hear of them.
1207. You have seen no bills for drink? No.
1208. Mr. Purves.] Have you heard Mr. Smith refer to Mr. Dangar as a land agent? No, I have not.
1209. Do you think he could have done so without you hearing it? No.
1210. So that any evidence that he did do so you would not regard as truthful? I would not really.
1211. Mr. Wise.] Do you remember returning with Mr. Smith from Hickey's Creek, when you met a man named M'Karney? Yes.
1212. Did you hear Mr. Smith have any conversation with M'Karney? Just a word or two.
1213. Tell us what it was? M'Karney said—"You need not fear, you will go in with an overwhelming majority"; and Mr. Smith said—"I have no fear of that."
1214. Did Mr. Smith mention anything about a forfeited selection? No; I did not hear it.
1215. Anything about a situation on the railways? No; I am satisfied that no such thing was mentioned.
1216. Not at any time? Not that I ever heard of.
1217. Mr. Cohen.] Do you remember having a conversation with Mr. Smith since you have been in Sydney? I objected to speak to Mr. Smith about the case.
1218. Did you make any observations about telling the truth, no matter what happened? Yes; I said that that I came for the purpose of telling the truth, and that if 500 members lost their seats, or even if Mr. C. Sutherland, Smith lost his head, I should tell the truth. Esq., J.P.

1219. Have you been taxed to give evidence in any particular way? No. Mr. Smith was speaking about a certain circumstance, and I said that I objected to be in the room when Mr. Smith was speaking about it; I objected in Mr. Cohen's presence. 22 Feb., 1886.

1220. Mr. Wise.] What was the circumstance? About that affair of Waters's.

1221. You declined to hear him speak about it? Yes.

1222. Mr. Reid.] Did you see any box at the door, either inside or outside? I believe there was a little form outside.

1223. Any box? I could not say exactly.

1224. Did you see this youngster about the room at all? No; I saw him about where Mr. Dangar's party were standing. He may have come there; I do not say he was not outside.

1225. Are you shortsighted? Yes, without my glasses, but I can see very well with them.

1226. Mr. Cohen.] When you said you would tell the truth, no matter if 500 Members lost their seats, it was at my chambers in consultation, was it not? Yes.

1227. Mr. Wise.] And on no other occasion? I told Mr. Slattery that I did not want to hear Mr. Smith make any statement.

1228. Did you tell Mr. Slattery this before or after you left the chambers? Before.

F. Goulburn Panton, Esq., called in and examined:—

1229. Mr. Cohen.] You are a Magistrate, and Chairman of the Licensing Bench at West Kempsey? Yes. F. G. Panton, Esq., J.P.

1230. How long have you been on the Bench? About thirty-three years.

1231. I believe you are the Returning Officer for the district of the Macleay? I am.

1232. Did you preside at the nomination meeting last election? Yes.

1233. Did you hear Mr. Smith make a speech? Yes.

1234. Did you hear him make any reference to the land agency business? I had not been paying attention to what was said by the candidates, but my attention was drawn to some remarks made by Mr. Smith. He said that if any of the selectors were at any time aggrieved he would see them righted, provided that they did not clash with third parties. He explained afterwards what he meant. He said that so long as they did not clash with third parties he would take up their cases and see them righted, but if the selectors disagreed amongst themselves he would have nothing to do with their cases.

1235. Do you remember anything being said about the charges? No, I do not remember it.

1236. Do you remember anything at all being said about the charges that he would make or that any one else would make? I heard Mr. Smith say that he would do it without fee or reward, as he had hitherto done.

Mr. Alexander Cochrane called in and examined:—

1237. Mr. Cohen.] I believe you are a grazier and landed proprietor in the Macleay district? Yes.

1238. How long have you been residing there? Thirty-six years.

1239. Were you on Mr. Smith's committee for the last general election? Yes.

1240. Were you present at any of his meetings? Yes.

1241. When he addressed the electors? Yes.

1242. Were you present at M'Phillips's, at Greenhills? Yes.

1243. At the meeting held there by Mr. Smith? Yes, when he addressed the electors.

1244. On what day? I think it was on the Monday.

1245. Was that the Monday before the nomination or after the nomination? Before the nomination.

1246. That would be on the 12th of October? Yes.

1247. On that occasion were any drinks called for at M'Phillips's? Yes.

1248. By whom? By myself and others.

1249. Do you know who paid for them? I presume that each and all paid for the drinks they called for.

1250. Did you see Mr. Smith pay for any? No, none.

1251. Did you hear him order any? I did not.

1252. Can you name any person specially who was there on that occasion and had drinks with you? There was Mr. Sutherland, but I did not hear him call for any, and there was Mr. Egan.

1253. But whatever drinks were called for were paid for by those who called for them? Yes; I did not pay for mine at the time, because I generally keep an account there. I called for the account some time ago, and they promised to send it; I do not know why it has not been sent.

1254. Was it your own account? Yes.

1255. Your own private account? My own private account.

1256. Did you accompany Mr. Smith to Mr. M'Maugh's place? I did not.

1257. Where you there when he was there? I was there when he arrived.

1258. On what day were you at M'Maugh's? I think it was on a Saturday.

1259. On the Saturday between the nomination and the polling day? I think so.

1260. On that occasion did you go through the house with Mr. Smith? Yes.

1261. Did anybody take you through? Mr. M'Maugh.

1262. Did you hear any conversation with reference to a license between Mr. Smith and Mr. M'Maugh? Yes, I did.

1263. Where did that conversation take place—in what part of the house? We went upstairs and looked at the premises, and Mr. M'Maugh said it was too bad that they would not grant him a license. Mr. Smith replied that he thought it was very hard, and that he could not understand why it was not granted for a house which would be such a convenience to the public, or something to that effect; I could not positively state the exact words. I also remarked that it was very hard. We came downstairs then, and went and dined; there was a luncheon laid for us.

1264. Were you with Mr. Smith and Mr. M'Maugh from the time you started to go upstairs until you sat down to luncheon? Yes,

- Mr. A. Cochrane.
22 Feb., 1886.
1265. Did you hear anything said about voting during the conversation? Not a word.
1266. Did you hear anything to this effect; that if Mr. M'Maugh would vote for Mr. Smith, Mr. Smith would do what he could to get him a license? Nothing of the kind was said, or else I should have heard it. I should not have thought it necessary for Mr. Smith to say anything of the sort, because he was under the impression that M'Maugh was a supporter of his.
1267. Mr. Wise.] Because he was a supporter you do not think that was said? I do not think it was necessary.
1268. Mr. Cohen.] Did Mr. M'Maugh tell you whether he was supporting Mr. Smith? Yes, he told me that he was a supporter of Mr. Smith, but he did not wish it to be known, because Mr. Dangar had acted towards him as a friend in dealing with cattle.
1269. Do you know a man named Kean? Yes.
1270. Were you in Kempsey on the polling-day? Yes.
1271. Do you remember speaking to Kean on that day? Yes.
1272. Did you meet him in the street, and tell him to go over to Masterton's hotel where drinks were supplied, and say that he could get some? No, nothing of the sort.
1273. At Masterton's hotel did you tell him to serve any drinks? No. I may mention that the place was crowded with people, and there was a number of friends of mine who wanted to have a drink. We went to the bar, but could not get near it. I spoke to the proprietor, Masterton, and asked him if we could not be supplied in another apartment, and he said that they were so busy the servants were all engaged. I said to him, "Can't you engage Kean?" And he said to Kean, "Will you lend us a hand?" Kean said, "Yes;" and we went into another room, taking with us a bottle of brandy and some lemonade and gingerbeer. I took the bottles myself and served my friends, while Kean drew the corks, and looked after what was left. Afterwards we came back and had another drink. There were a number of people there.
1274. Mr. Wise.] Were they all personal friends of Mr. Smith? I presume so; not all of them. I did not know any person who was positive he would vote for Mr. Smith.
1275. Did you say this to Kean at Masterton's Hotel—"You are one of Smith's men; come in and have a drink?" No, I never did anything of the sort. I knew he was one of Mr. Smith's men, because he professed to be so; he was one of the committee.
1276. Did you say this to him at Masterton's:—"Will you serve out drinks for those who will vote for Smith, and drink his health?" Nothing of the sort. I never put it in that way at all.
1277. What did you say to him? I merely asked him to look out in case anything should be stolen from the room in which we were, because there was such a crowd of people there. I told Masterton that I would see that things were all right.
1278. Were you with Mr. Smith on that morning? No, I was not; I did not see him much about at all.
1279. Did you take any drink with you at M'Maugh's? Yes.
1280. Did you take it in your buggy? Yes.
1281. Is the place your own? Yes.
1282. And is M'Maugh's house yours? Yes, he has leased it from me; that is, a portion of it.
1283. In other words, the house he occupies is built on a portion of your property? Yes.
1284. Was Mr. Smith aware of your having this drink? No, he knew nothing about it.
1285. How far did you travel that day? About 10 miles.
1286. Will you say whether you ever had authority from Mr. Smith to expend money in treating the electors on his account? No. I never did.
1287. Or to charge it to him in any way? No, I had no authority. I did it on my own responsibility, and would do it again. I respect Mr. Smith; I have known him ever since he was a boy, and therefore I considered myself justified in doing everything in my power to have him re-elected, knowing that he had done so much for our district.
1288. Were you about the electorate much during the canvass? I was.
1289. As far as you could see, was there anything in the shape of undue drinking? No, it was very soberly conducted. I think there was only one man who could be said to be drunk, and he was capable of conducting himself; whose friend he was I could not say.
1290. I suppose you sometimes see a drunken man in the Macleay district, though it may not be polling-day? Just so—plenty.
1291. Mr. Sutherland.] Have you seen men excited at election times who never tasted spirituous liquors? Yes, I believe there were many men drunk at that time who never touched intoxicating liquors.
1292. Mr. Cohen.] Do you remember being at Burns's Hotel? Yes.
1293. Was that the day after you were at M'Maugh's? I think that was the second day after Mr. Smith arrived; it must have been on a Tuesday.
1294. Whereabouts is Burns's Hotel? It is situated in Central Kempsey.
1295. Were any drinks called for there? Yes, I called for drinks there; it was the first time I had seen Mr. Smith.
1296. Who paid for the drinks? I did.
1297. How many were drinking there? I could not exactly tell you; there may have been seven or eight; four or five shillings were spent.
1298. Did you pay for them out of your own pocket? Yes.
1299. Was it intended as a charge against Mr. Smith? No.
1300. Or his committee? No; I had no authority to do anything either from Mr. Smith or any of his committee. I was aware, if you will understand me, that there was a suspicion that they were trying to grab Mr. Smith for doing such a thing.
1301. Mr. Wise.] That is why you paid for everything yourself? Yes, as far as I called.
1302. To throw suspicion off Mr. Smith? Yes.
1303. Mr. Cohen.] Were those persons to whom drink was supplied at your expense personal friends of Mr. Smith? Yes, they were principally friends—at least I presume so.
1304. From there did you go to Tilbrook's hotel? Yes.
1305. Tilbrook is an old servant of yours? Yes.
1306. Were drinks called for there? I called for drinks there and paid for them also.
1307. Out of your own money? Yes.
1308. As your own private disbursement? Yes, my own individually.
- 1309.

1309. Did you call for drinks for many persons? There were not many there.
1310. How many do you think? About five or six.
1311. Did you go to Neild's hotel? Yes, we called in at Neild's as we passed. I think Mr. Smith was going to the Joint Stock Bank, when Mr. Neild came out and shook hands with him, and we went inside and chatted. I paid for drinks, but you must understand that I was not the only one who did pay. Many others shouted besides me. Mr. Kerrigan, for one, shouted. He shouted at Burns's.
1312. How many persons altogether do you think participated in those shouts? I could not tell you that, because each and all were ready to shout.
1313. But how many were in your party? There might have been three. Do you mean at Tilbrook's?
1314. Say Burns's first? There might have been three shouts.
1315. But how many persons altogether partook of the shouts? At Burns's there were about eight; I think I paid 4s. or 4s. 6d.
1316. How many partook of the drinks at Tilbrook's? I think about five.
1317. And how many at Neild's? I think there were about the same number at Neild's.
1318. Did you hear Mr. Smith deliver a speech at Boatharbour on nomination-day? No.
1319. Did you hear him address the electors on nomination-day? Yes.
1320. Did he make any reference to land-agency business in that speech? Yes.
1321. Will you tell us as nearly as you can recollect what he said? He was addressing the electors upon the land question, which appeared to be a question which created much dissatisfaction. Some one in the crowd called out "What about Panton's £50?" and Mr. Smith raised his hand and struck it on the board and said, "I have never charged one single farthing for any free selector, poor or rich; and I can assure you that as I have done in the past I will do in the future." That is as near as I can remember what he said. I never heard him say anything that would be detrimental to Mr. Dangar as a land agent, or anybody else.
1322. Did you hear Mr. Smith refer by name to Mr. Dangar in that speech? I heard him speak of Mr. Dangar, but not in reference to the question of which you are speaking, that is, the land.
1323. Had you any authority whatever from Mr. Smith at any time during the election to treat the electors, or to keep open public-houses? Never in my life. As long as I have known him I never had any authority to do anything of the sort.
1324. Did you at any time hear him make any promise to the electors that he would give them or their friends any situations or advance any business for them if they voted for him? Nothing of the sort; never in my life.
1325. Mr. Wise.] You are an old friend of Mr. Smith? Yes.
1326. You are a little hard of hearing, are you not? Yes; but I am not hard of hearing as long as you speak out.
1327. Mr. Cohen.] I suppose Mr. Smith and Mr. M'Maugh did not speak in as low a tone about the license as Mr. Wise did just now? I rather think not. We are more accustomed to wooden houses in country parts, and we do not hear so well as within brick walls.
1328. Mr. Wise.] And you spent the money out of your own pocket as a friend of Mr. Smith? Yes.
1329. And you say that you would do it again in order to get him elected? Yes; I have done nothing to be ashamed of.
1330. Did it help him to get elected? I do not say that it did. I feel excited on an occasion like that, that is all; I have done nothing that is wrong.
1331. I understood you to say that you would do it again in order to get him elected? Nothing of the sort; I said that what I had done I would do again.
1332. In order to get him elected? I did not say that it would be done expressly for that purpose.
1333. You were chairman of his committee were you not? No; I have been chairman at one or two of his meetings.
1334. Who was the president or chairman of his committee? I think it was Mr. Hill.
1335. Have you seen any accounts sent in to the committee since the election from hotel-keepers? No, I have not.
1336. Will you swear that none have been sent in? I cannot swear that; I have not seen any.

Frederick Thomas Matthews, Esq., J.P., called in, sworn, and examined:—

1337. Mr. Cohen.] You reside in the Macleay district? Yes, on the Bellinger River.
1338. Were you the chairman for Mr. Smith at his meeting at Boatharbour during the last general election? I was.
1339. What night was it? I do not remember the date; it was a few days before the election.
1340. Mr. Dangar was at that meeting, was he not? Yes.
1341. Do you remember in the course of Mr. Smith's speech there being an interruption? Yes; there were several.
1342. Do you remember Mr. Smith's whispering to you at all? Yes, I do.
1343. How often did he whisper? I only remember his whispering once.
1344. What did he say then? He said—"What was I saying? Where did I leave off?"
1345. Had he been interrupted just previously? Yes.
1346. Do you remember anything being said about drinks at the close of the meeting? No; nothing was said to me by Mr. Smith.
1347. Did you say anything to him at the close of the meeting about drinks? Not to him; certainly not.
1348. To whom then? I invited a number of friends and we had some drinks together; I do not know how many there were.
1349. Can you give us any idea how many? Well, I should think those that drank with me were about ten or fifteen.
1350. Can you say whether or not they were personal friends and supporters of Mr. Smith who were drinking with you? I could not say; some of them were and some were not; one I know was not.
1351. Was Mr. Smith aware that you were supplying those drinks? Certainly not.
1352. Did he authorize you in any way to supply them? No.
1353. Then you did it on your own responsibility? Yes; in a friendly way.

Mr.
A. Cochrane.

Matthews,
Esq., J.P.

1354. At that meeting did you hear Mr. Smith make any reference to land-agency business? Yes, he did.
1355. Will you tell us, as nearly as you can, what he said? He alluded in the course of his speech to his services to the Macleay electorate, and to the individuals comprising that electorate. He said that he had represented the district some sixteen years, and that in every case where any individual considered that he had suffered any wrong at the hands of the Government of the colony, provided no private interests clashed, he had advocated his cause without fee or reward. He alluded specially to the Land Act, stating that where any individual selector had a grievance against the Crown, he had done all in his power to aid them, without ever accepting any fee for his services, and that, if returned, he would do so again. He said "You are aware that land agents often charge £15 or £20 for their services, but I have never made any charge."
1356. That is, in substance, what he said? Yes.
1357. Did you hear him make any allusion to Mr. Dangar by name? Yes; when he spoke of land agents making those charges, he said, "You know, gentlemen, that Mr. Dangar is a land agent." There was some allusion made to some transactions of Mr. Dangar's in connection, I think, with the land business at Kempsey. I don't remember exactly what was said, but I know that something of the kind was said.
1358. That was when Mr. Smith said that he would do the work for nothing? It was after Mr. Smith alluded to the charges made by land agents for the transaction of business.
1359. At the conclusion of the meeting, did you not say, "Gentlemen, you are invited to drink Mr. Smith's health"? I may have asked them to drink Mr. Smith's health.
1360. Did you not say that from your position on the platform? Certainly not.
1361. Was it not just as you got off the box—just as you left the chair—that you said, "Gentlemen, you are invited to drink Mr. Smith's health"? I don't think so; I think that when I mentioned it it was after the drinks were on the table.
1362. Who paid for them? I did.
1363. Have you rendered an account to the committee? I have received no payment.
1364. Have you rendered an account to the committee for that money? An account has been rendered to the committee.
1365. Have you rendered an account to Mr. Smith's committee for that money? There was a general account.
1366. That is not an answer to my question? Yes; I have rendered an account to the committee.
1367. Mr. Purves.] What was that account for? For expenses in connection with the election.
1368. What was the nature of those expenses? Rent of rooms at one or two meetings; refreshments.
1369. For whom? For Mr. Smith's committee, and, I suppose, electors generally.
1370. Mr. Cohen.] This was without authority from Mr. Smith? I received no authority from Mr. Smith whatever in anything that I have done in connection with the expenditure of money. Mr. Smith knows nothing whatever about it, as far as I am aware.
1371. Mr. Purves.] When you paid for the drinks did you expect to get the money refunded? No; it was a matter between the committee.
1372. How was it then, that you sent an account to the committee after you paid for these things? I made up an account of what I spent.
1373. When you spent it, did you expect to get it back from the committee? I have no reason to expect anything of the kind.
1374. Why did you send in the account? We made up the expenses of what it cost in the district. I have not received a penny from anybody.
1375. What was in your mind at the time when you spent the money? As a committee we share the expenses.
1376. You expected to get the money back from the committee? I was one of the committee.
1377. Did you get any money from Mr. Smith? I have never received a penny from anybody.
1378. And the accounts are still unpaid? My account is still unpaid.
1379. Have the committee paid any accounts at all? Not that I am aware of.
1380. Mr. Wise.] How much is your account? I cannot say exactly; somewhere about £10, which I spent during the election.
1381. Are there not several hotelkeepers' accounts unpaid? There are no accounts at Boat Harbour unpaid.
1382. Have not hotelkeepers' accounts been rendered to Mr. Smith of your knowledge? I swear that to my knowledge no hotelkeepers' accounts have been rendered to Mr. Smith's committee.
1383. Have any other members of the committee rendered accounts to the committee;—has Mr. Cochrane? Not to my knowledge.
1384. Will you swear it? Not to my knowledge.
1385. Mr. Garvin.] You were a member of the local committee? I may say that, as one of the committee, the Boat Harbour portion of the electorate was left in my hands, and any expenses connected with it I have paid myself independently of the committee altogether; I knew about what those expenses were.
1386. Mr. Wise.] Are the expenses of the Bellinger committee kept separate from those of the other committee? I cannot tell you anything at all about the expenses of the Bellinger committee. I do not think that the committee ever had a meeting since the election; I have not been present at one. I know nothing about anything, but at Boat Harbour meetings of the committee were held before the election, and I, as one of them, was entrusted to look after Mr. Smith's interests at Boat Harbour.
1387. Have you paid an account at Boat Harbour to Mr. Black, an hotelkeeper? Yes.
1388. How much? I cannot say.
1389. £9? I do not think it was as much as that; I cannot say positively. There were several expenses—bill-posting and the like—and I know that my account was £10 altogether.
1390. Was Mr. Black's £9 included in your account of £10? In the amount of money that I paid away. I do not think it was £9.
1391. Mr. Cohen.] £10 was all the expenditure at Boat Harbour? I will not swear to that point; I am certain it was not £12.
1392. I thought I understood you to say that your account was sent in to the committee so that the committee might share;—what does that mean? The intention of the committee was to share the expenses of the election; but it has not been done.

Mr.

Mr. George Lane, called in and examined :—

1392. Mr. Wise.] You are a shorthand-writer? Yes.
 1393. Do you remember the nomination of candidates for the Macleay, at Kempsey, on Friday, the 16th October? Yes.
 1394. Did you take down a certain speech delivered by Mr. Smith? Yes.
 1395. At what distance from Mr. Smith were you seated when you took down his speech? About 6 yards.
 1396. Have you made and have you brought with you extract copies from your shorthand notes of Mr. Smith's speech? Yes.
 1397. Will you hand them to the Chairman?
 1398. Chairman.] What system of shorthand do you write? Gurney's.
 1399. Mr. Wise.] Have you made extracts? Yes.
 1400. Are they in your handwriting? Yes.
 1401. Chairman.] He had better read it from his shorthand notes. Witness: I am unable to find the speech at present, but if the Committee leave it till after luncheon I shall be able to do so.

Mr. G. Lane.

22 Feb., 1886

Mr. John Long called in, sworn, and examined :—

1402. Mr. Cohen.] You reside in the Kempsey district? Yes.
 1403. Do you know a man named Donald who has been examined as a witness? Yes.
 1404. Did he travel down with you in the steamer "Belmore" from Kempsey to Coraki? Yes.
 1405. What did he say to you coming down? I said, "Are you coming to Sydney?" he said, "Yes; I am going down on this case of Dangar's; I owe a lot of money down here, and it was a good throw in for me to get away from the river."
 1406. Do you know Burns who has been called here as a witness? Yes.
 1407. Did he say anything to you about coming down, or in connection with the election? Yes. I went to his place and asked him if I could put some of Mr. Smith's bills there. He said, "Where is he going to stop?" I said that had not been arranged, and he said, "If he does not stop here I will tear the bills down and chuck them overboard."
 1408. Mr. Reid.] Is this a floating hotel? No; it is just a saying he has.
 1409. Was Mr. Porter on board? Yes.
 1410. Did he overhear what took place between you and Donald? Yes, on board the "Belmore."
 1411. Mr. Wise.] Are you a teetotaler? Yes; I belonged to the same lodge as Mr. Dangar did; I was marshal while he was in the chair.
 1412. Whereabouts on the "Belmore" did the conversation take place? On the top.
 1413. Did you have any temperance drinks during the election? No; I do not go into public-houses.
 1414. You will remember that you are on your oath, and you will swear that you had no temperance drinks? Yes.
 1415. Mr. Purves.] You mean to say that you had none at the expense of anybody? Yes; I don't make it a practice to go into public-houses.
 1416. Mr. Cohen.] This took place before you got to Frederickton? Yes.

Mr. J. Long.

FRANCIS ABIGAIL, ESQ., IN THE CHAIR.

Mr. John Williamson appeared as Solicitor for Mr. Melville.

Mr. Joseph Ross called in and examined:—

1. Chairman.] What business do you follow? Glass bottle manufacturer.
2. Where? At Camperdown.
3. You are aware of the object of this Committee? Yes.
4. I want you to state to the Committee in your own terms what took place between you and Mr. Melville in reference to this land transaction? I may not be able to give you all the particulars quite right, but as far as I can call them to mind I will do so. The first of it was that I asked Mr. Mitchell to see to it for me. I am supposing now that you know what it was about.
5. The Government resumed a piece of land from you at Newtown? Yes; they sent the papers out to me about the ground, requesting to know what I valued it at. I went to Hardie & Gorman, the auctioneers I bought it from, and they sent a man out and valued it at £300. Then I went and saw the Bank Manager who was interested in the affair of the land, and I also went and saw Mr. French, who had a piece of ground adjoining mine; and from what they said, and what I thought myself, I saw that £300 was not sufficient. So, with the advice of the Bank Manager, I sent in my claim for £400.
6. Did you get any information from the Department? No. After a little time, nothing having been settled, I asked Mr. Joseph Mitchell, the Member for Newtown, if he would try and get the thing put forward for me, and he said he would do what he could.
7. Did Mr. Mitchell make a report to you on the subject? No, I never heard anything more about it from him.
8. Did you make any offer to Mr. Mitchell about it? No. It stood over for some time, and I was becoming a little pressed for money, owing to the smoke nuisance case that was going on against me in the Police Court, and I thought that if I got the £400 from the Government it would put me through; so I went to Mr. Melville to see if he would try and push the thing through for me, and he undertook to do it.
9. When you spoke to Mr. Melville the first time and he undertook to do it, was there any question of money? No, it was at the third or fourth interview I had with him, as well as I can remember, at his

23 Sept., 1885.

Mr. J. Ross. own house, that anything was said about money. I had met him several times and asked him if anything had been done, and seeing I could not get the money I pressed upon Mr. Melville to try and get me the £400, and then he said he would require something to get the thing put through.

23 Sept., 1886.

10. Some money? Yes. I asked him what it would take, and he said about £25, and I consented to give that amount.

11. Did he at that stage say he would charge you £25 for his services? No; as well as I can remember the words, he said it would require £25, and I agreed to give it. I then had to go and consult Mr. Bruford, the Bank Manager, on the matter, and if I mistake not, it was in his room I drew out the cheque and signed it.

12. Is that the cheque (handing cheque to witness—Appendix A 1)? Yes, that is it.

13. When did you give that to Mr. Melville? At the Mayor's room in the Town Hall at Newtown. I went upstairs with it direct out of the Bank.

14. Has the Bank made any disclosure to you how that cheque was paid? No; I never asked how it was paid.

15. It has been charged to your account? Yes.

16. What transpired when you gave Mr. Melville this cheque? Mr. Melville made a remark to the effect that he would rather have had cash than a cheque. Time passed on, and then I had some more transactions with Hardie & Gorman and Norton & Smith, and then, as I had turned the ground over by this time to Hardie & Gorman to re-sell again, Norton & Smith were now pressing for the money to come into their hands, and I referred them to Mr. Melville, and they sent me to Mr. Melville two or three or it might be four times, and so the thing went on, until I took a lump sum from Hardie & Gorman and made over the land to them.

17. Did you accompany Mr. Melville to the Works Office at any time? Yes. I do not know whether that was before the cheque was given or afterwards; however, we went up in a lift to the second or third story, and Mr. Melville saw some of the officials, while I stopped outside.

18. Did Mr. Melville tell you to stop outside? Yes.

19. Did you make that declaration (handing a document to witness—Appendix A 2)? Yes.

20. Is that your signature at the foot of it? Yes.

21. Do you still adhere to the statements contained in that declaration? Yes.

22. Did you at any other time give Mr. Melville other cheques? Yes, but it had nothing to do with this case; it had to do with the smoke nuisance case.

23. In connection with this land you gave no other but that cheque? No.

24. Nor any money? No, not that I am aware of—I cannot remember any.

25. When you made that declaration, did you make it under any threat or intimidation? No, I was as unconcerned then as I am now—I was not bothering any more about it. I was rather taken when Mr. McElhone and the other two came to me about it; I was not thinking about it at all.

26. Did you sign the declaration under any threat? No; they put the question straight to me, and I was not going to bamboozle out of it.

27. Are you aware of any conspiracy in this affair? No, not as far as I am concerned.

28. Did I at any time directly or indirectly have any communication with you on the subject? No.

29. Mr. McElhone visited you? Yes.

30. Who was present? Mr. Beale and Mr. Sparkes.

31. Had you a personal knowledge of both these gentlemen? Yes.

32. What is their general character? As far as I know they are very respectable industrious men, and well-behaved. I know they interested themselves with me in the smoke nuisance case in particular.

33. Did Mr. McElhone use any undue influence with you to induce you to sign that declaration? No; I would not have submitted to it.

34. Did Mr. Luscombe ever call upon you and converse with you about this matter? Yes, Mr. Melville and Mr. Luscombe.

35. When? About three or four weeks ago.

36. Will you state what took place? I could not well, for I was very busy at the time, and I just went into my room and sat down with them for a matter of about a quarter of an hour.

37. They spoke to you about this question? Yes; Mr. McElhone, Mr. Beale, and the others whose names have been mentioned, were all brought into it.

38. You discussed the question in detail? Yes.

39. Was that the only time Mr. Luscombe saw you? He saw me other two times, but not with Mr. Melville; he has seen me three times altogether.

40. And spoken about this matter? Yes, and other things.

41. Did he give you any warning? Not directly, but indirectly, to be cautious and so forth in speaking of the others.

42. In speaking of Mr. Beale and Mr. Sparkes? Yes.

43. Did he speak disparagingly of them? Yes.

44. Can you give us any information in any way as to the substance of what Mr. Luscombe said to you? I do not know that I could; I have not bothered my head about it until this morning; I was busily engaged in my own work before I came here, and I asked my son to remind me of somewhere about the time this thing occurred, and he went through the books and papers.

45. Did Mr. Luscombe tell you Mr. Beale and Mr. Sparkes were particular friends of Mr. Melville's? (Mr. Williamson objected to the question.)

46. Was anybody present but Mr. Luscombe and Mr. Melville? No.

47. And you cannot state the terms of the conversation that took place? I know this much, that it was to wean my mind away by showing what they had done and what they would do.

48. Who? Mr. Beale, Mr. Sparkes, and Mr. McElhone. I could see there was bitter envy and hatred on both sides.

49. They were advising you to be careful of the other parties? Yes; this occurred on both sides.

50. Was that the line adopted on the three occasions that you saw Mr. Luscombe? When Mr. Luscombe came to me, it was on business about the Protection and Political Reform Association and so forth; and then we got on to this other question.

51. Was the name of any Government officer given to you as that of a party who would share in the division

- division of any money paid by you? I would not be positive of that; I could not, if I was to get the world for it, recall the name; but I have a faint recollection that the name of one person was mentioned.
52. As one that would share in the division of the money? As helping to get the thing through—to get the £400 for the land. Mr. J. Ross,
20 Sept., 1865.
53. You stated in your declaration that Mr. Melville told you that he could not get through unless he had some money to push it on with, or words to that effect, leading you to believe he had to pay part of the money to others to help him? Yes, that was on my mind clearly at the time.
54. And this clerk whose name was mentioned was one of the parties? Yes, but that was only once mentioned.
55. When you consulted Mr. Melville about this matter, did you consult him as a Member of Parliament? (Mr. Williamson objected to the question, and while the objection was being discussed the witness proceeded.) I may say I had not the slightest idea for him to use his influence as a Member of Parliament; but knowing him every day in the town and all round about, and his being so much about the Government offices, and that he had a knowledge of the run of things, I went to him on that understanding, the same as I went to Mr. Mitchell.
56. Would you have gone to him if he had been simply a private citizen? No, I do not think I would; I could have got men outside that would have done it for a great deal less than that.
57. Mr. Melville did not come and offer his services as an agent to you? No; I went to him.
58. You do not know what transpired in Mr. Mitchell's case? No; I never asked him any more about it.
59. Mr. Griffiths.] You went to Mr. Melville yourself? Yes.
60. Previously to his having any communication, direct or indirect, with you in this matter? Yes.
61. What induced you to go to him? Simply because I knew he was a great deal about the Government offices and know the run of things; and he knew all about the land and about the neighbourhood, and was well conversant with the whole affair.
62. Did you go to him because you knew he was in the habit of taking that class of agency business? No, I never knew he had done anything of the kind before.
63. Mr. Chapman.] Had Mr. Melville ever done any agency business for you before? No.
64. Did he do anything in connection with the smoke nuisance case? Yes; I gave Mr. Melville £5 for his trouble in coming away from his business; the others did not get anything.
65. Did he do any good for you in the smoke nuisance affair for which you paid him £5? I could not say; it was all submitted to the Jury; I do not think any good was done in the Police Court at all, but a great deal of harm.
66. Dr. Ross.] You say it was the Lands Department you went to with Mr. Melville? Yes, I think so.
67. Was it not the Works Department? That I am not certain of.
68. Or was it the Railway Department? I am not certain.
69. Was there any name mentioned in that Department of any person Mr. Melville had to see? Not then; that was in his own room.
70. Can you give the Committee any idea what Department you went to? It was the new building with the dome on top.
71. Was any name mentioned? No, not at the building.*
72. Was any clerk's name mentioned, or any person in that office? Mr. Melville said who he was going to see.
73. Mentioned the clerk's name? Yes. There was a gentleman passed by at the time, and Mr. Melville hurriedly went in and saw him, away from me.
74. Mr. Teeco.] Did the Commissioner of Railways resume this land? Yes, and had it fenced in and everything before I got any money for it.
75. It is now vested in the Commissioner? Yes.
76. I suppose you received the usual notice that he had resumed it? Yes.
77. Did you request him to resume the land? No. There had been a good deal of talk about it—about taking the whole lot; if I am not mistaken, the people of Newtown had sent in a request to the Government to do so, on account of the station being too small; they requested the Commissioner to take up the whole lot and use it for a market and so on; but all that fell through, until I got the papers specifying the amount of land the Government would resume.
78. When you received that notice from the Commissioner I think you said you consulted Hardie & Gorman? Yes.
79. Did you consult them as agents to value the land? Yes, I had bought the whole lot, of which the Government resumed a portion from them, and had to pay them for it.
80. You said they valued it at £300? Yes, the portion the Government resumed.
81. And you were dissatisfied about it? Yes.
82. Then you consulted Mr. Melville about it? I do not know that I did much until I put the thing before him to see if he could get it completed; but I consulted the Bank Manager and Mr. French.
83. And they advised you that it was worth £400? Yes.
84. What was the value you ultimately realized for it? I did not realize anything at all.
85. The parties who did realize? That I could not tell, for after I got a lump sum from Norton & Smith and Hardie & Gorman I did not bether any more about it; I was mortified at it; I lost £700 by it.
86. You do not know the amount the Commissioner ultimately paid for this land? No; I was never looking for more than £400.
87. Do you know Mr. James Byrnes? No.
88. Do you know Mr. Thomson? No.
89. Was it either of these gentlemen whose name was mentioned to you by Mr. Melville? I do not remember; I think the name of Mr. Byrnes was mentioned as having something to do with it.
90. Mr. Luscombe.] Do you remember my calling upon you in connection with any other business besides this? You came to me about the Protection and Political Reform League—about money matters in connection with it.
91. Do you remember telling me the first time I called that you could not then say, but if I called at a future time you would give a subscription? Yes.
92. And I called upon you three times, and the third time you gave me a subscription? Yes.
93. Did you ever hear me run down Mr. Beale or Mr. Sparkes? Yes, their names were certainly disparagingly spoken of; when we were speaking about them several things were mentioned that they had done.

- Mr. J. Ross. 94. Did you not say that Mr. McElhone or some of the opposite side had told you that Mr. Melville had received £80 besides the £25 you gave him? They said I ought to have received £80. They told me 10 per cent. was added for forced sale, which came to over £40.
- 23 Sept., 1885. 95. Did they lead you to believe that Mr. Melville had received that? No, they could not do that, because Mr. Melville did not get the money.
96. Did they say that Mr. Melville received this money? No, they conveyed to my mind that I ought to have got that much more—not that he got it.
97. Did these men speak in a way to intimate that Mr. Melville had received this money? No, they could not force that on to me when I knew he had nothing to do with getting the money.
98. In all my transactions with you, so far as I am concerned, it was in connection with the Protection and Political Reform League? Yes.
99. Did Mr. Melville ever come to you and offer his services to do anything for you? No, I always sought out Mr. Melville.
100. How much money had you paid on account of this land? £1,400 in round figures; I paid £1,000 at first, and then two years' interest, £174 9s. a year; that brought it up to close upon £1,400.
101. And for this land the Government paid you £400? No, they only took the corner portion of it; it was the pick of the land—the high land.
102. Did the Bank not receive this money from the Government? No, the Bank had nothing to do with it; the Manager only stood by me in purchasing the land; and after that I gave the order to Norton & Smith and Hardie & Gorman.
103. Then the money paid by the Government did not come into your hands? No, but I got it indirectly from Hardie & Gorman, what I did get.
104. Mr. Hammond.] What amount did you get for the land? I got it in dribbles; as I was pushed for money I would go to Hardie & Gorman or Norton & Smith, and they would give me £50 or £75. I bought the land with the intention of enlarging my business, as my ground was too small; there were several new patents I had bought from Elliott Brothers and other persons, and I went in for this piece of ground to make room for them; Hardie & Gorman had it for sale; I paid down 25 per cent., and had six years to pay the other 75 per cent., leaving £3,000 to be paid at 6 per cent. interest. Then the smoke nuisance case came up, which lasted nine months, and cost me a great deal of money and got me involved in my business; so I went to Hardie & Gorman and asked them to take the land off my hands. During this time this piece of land had been taken by the Government, and I went to Hardie & Gorman and asked them to sell the whole piece again, or take it off my hands; they sent a surveyor and cut it up into allotments and sold several portions, and gave me £50, and £75, and so on, as these small sales were going on.
105. Mr. Griffiths.] Hardie & Gorman must have rendered an account to you? Yes; that was how it came about that after a portion was sold, cut up into small allotments, Norton & Smith came down upon me on behalf of the parties to whom the ground belonged, on behalf of the Trustees, saying they would not allow it to be cut up in these small allotments, and that before doing so I must pay the balance of the purchase money, £2,900, and then I might do as I liked.
106. Chairman.] You gave them full authority to receive this money from the Government for the piece resumed? Yes; I could do nothing else, situated as I was.
107. Mr. Griffiths.] Owing to complicated business transactions with Hardie & Gorman, you authorized them to receive the money from the Government? Yes.
108. Have you had an account from them? No.
109. Dr. Ross.] You have stated that you received a lump sum? Yes.
110. How much? About £250 or £300; or in all about £700 or £800.
111. Chairman.] Did you arrange with these people to give up all your right, title, and interest in this land for that sum? Yes.
112. Mr. Hammond.] Did you pay this £25 cheque before the completion of the sale by Hardie & Gorman? Yes.
113. Were any other parties paid any commission through Hardie & Gorman or Norton & Smith? Not another person had anything to do with it, only what Hardie & Gorman got for valuing the land—five guineas, I think.
114. Would you have gone to Mr. Melville if he had been a private citizen or an ex-Member of Parliament? Understanding that he had the same practical experience of business in the Government offices, I would, or to any other person who I thought had the run around; I knew he was well able to go about it.
115. In respect to this land, you do not know whether you are a creditor or a debtor? I am done with it entirely.
116. And you are not aware what amount of money was received for it? Not from the Government; I received £700 or £800 from Hardie & Gorman for what I paid £1,400 for.
117. I am speaking of the £400 paid by the Government? I know nothing about it; I do not know whether they have got it yet or not.
118. You signed a conveyance? Yes, for the whole lot; Norton & Smith acted as lawyers both for Hardie & Gorman and myself.
119. Mr. Williamson.] Is your memory good or bad? My memory is exceedingly good, but it is crowded up with so much; I only want a little thing to touch it with a small spring as it were.
120. Do you recollect getting any notice from the Railway Department of their resuming this land? Yes, I got the papers, and filled them up.
121. What value did you put in those papers to be referred to the Department? £400.
122. At the time that you made this declaration—this is your declaration? Yes; I have a copy of it in my pocket.
123. Will you show me the copy? [Witness produced a document—Appendix A 3.] That was written by Mr. McElhone himself.
124. And was this a copy of it? Yes.
125. Who copied it? I am not sure whether it was Mr. McElhone or my son.
126. Did you go direct to the Magistrate and make that declaration? No; there must have been some fortnight or three weeks about the matter.
127. Elapsed? Yes; as I have already said I was quite unconcerned about it; I would not neglect my business.

128. Did this document lie in your hands from the date it was drawn up to the day you declared it? Mr. J. Ross.
No; if I mistake not, it went away and came back again.
129. Who took it away? If I recollect right, Mr. McElhone and Mr. Beale and Mr. Sparkes took it 23 Sept., 1885.
away that same night.
130. They took it from you and kept it how long? I could not exactly tell you.
131. About how many days? I could not tell you.
132. But some considerable time elapsed from the drawing to the making of the declaration? It might have been a day or two, or it might have been a week.
133. Are you sure it was not more than six days? I do not think it was.
134. Was it five days? I cannot call it to mind.
135. You cannot say how long it was? No, because I was quite unconcerned about it.
136. In your examination you said you were "taken"—what do you mean by taken? Because it was such an unseasonable hour.
137. You were taken by surprise? Yes.
138. Was that the first time they called upon you? Yes; on a Saturday night between 7 and 8 o'clock; they had been there in the afternoon, but I was not in.
139. How long after that interview was this document drawn up? I could not tell you within seven or eight days—whether it was the week following or the week after that I cannot say; it was on a Monday or Tuesday night, if I remember.
140. Are you sure it was not more than a week or a fortnight? No, it was not more than that.
141. Do I understand you to say that from the first interview to the second a week or a fortnight elapsed? Between eight and ten days.
142. Then after the expiration of eight or ten days this document was drawn up? Yes.
143. And then five or six days elapsed before this other document was made? No, they were both made at one time in my office.
144. After it was made it was taken away? Yes.
145. This draft, you say, was made a fortnight after the first interview? It would be somewhere about ten days. They wanted the cheque, and I sought for the butt on that Saturday night; then it struck me it was not in my cheque-book, and I had to go to the Bank where it was drawn; they took the cheque away, and it was after that the papers were drawn up.
146. How long was that? It was on a Monday or Tuesday night in the week following the next, which means ten days.
147. Had you any interview with either of the three before these documents were made? Yes; Mr. Beale came once or twice to see about the cheque, and then he sent his boy round, and I went up with the boy and got the cheque; then after that Mr. McElhone came the second time, and then the papers were drawn up.
148. Who put the questions to you? Mr. McElhone and Mr. Beale principally.
149. Was your memory clear as to the facts at that time? Yes, as clear as it is now.
150. Will you look at the writing in this cheque—is not that yours? Yes, I think it is, both signature and filling up.
151. Did you not say the Bank Manager wrote it and you signed it? I said I thought so.
152. So that your memory deceives you? No, I was not deceived at all; I know I went out of the Bank Manager's room with it.
153. As to the filling up of the cheque your memory deceived you? Yes.
154. You put in a claim for £400? Yes.
155. Did you receive, directly or indirectly, that £400 with interest? It would be included in my account with Hardie & Gorman; I assigned over the whole of the land to Hardie & Gorman for a lump sum.
156. Then you say you have received it indirectly? I cannot say that, for I do not know whether they have got it to-day or not.
157. You have never applied to Hardie & Gorman or Norton & Smith for an account? No, because, as I say, I handed it all over to them.
158. Chairman.] In fact, you sold your right, title, and interest? Yes.
159. Mr. Williamson.] What had you paid for that land? I paid £1,000 deposit, and two years' interest on £3,000—in all close upon £1,400.
160. And from unforeseen circumstances you could not complete that contract? No.
161. In fact, your creditors were pressing you at the time? No, there were no creditors pressing me.
162. Had you got any legal letters from any of them? Not that I am aware of.
163. Had you none from myself? Not that I am aware of.
164. You know at the time that Mr. Melville had been or was a member of the Newtown Municipal Council? Yes.
165. He had a knowledge of the locality? Yes, particularly of the land I had hold of, because the Newtown Council were making applications to the Government to bear part of expense of making a drain through my land whilst the two new streets were being made.
166. Did you or did you not employ Mr. Melville for his knowledge of local matters at Newtown, or did you employ him as a Member of Parliament? For his knowledge of local matters and governmental matters combined.
167. But not as a Member of Parliament? I have already said that.
168. Have you got a Bank-book? Yes.
169. Let me see it? I have not brought any Bank-book with me.
170. Did you not get notice to do so? No.
171. Can you say what date you gave that cheque on? Only from the cheque itself; I could not tell you the month if I did not see it.
172. Will you look at the cheque and say what is the date? November 8, 1883.
173. Do you see any perforated figures upon it? Yes, at the bottom, "102"; that would be the date it was paid into the Bank.
174. Are you in the habit of putting different dates on your cheques than the real one? No, not as a rule.
175. Have you not done so? Not that I am aware of; I know it is done frequently.
176. Only from the perforation you know the date of presentation? Yes, as I have already said, I have not spent ten minutes over this case from the beginning to the end of it.

- Mr. J. Ross. 177. Chairman.] Do you know to whose account the cheque was paid—it is a crossed cheque? I would have to apply to the Bank to learn that.
- 23 Sept., 1885. 178. Mr. Griffiths.] What is the date of that cheque, and the year? November 8, 1883.
179. Mr. Williamson.] Since this inquiry began, have you seen Mr. McElhone, Mr. Beale, or Mr. Sparkes? I have seen Mr. Beale once or twice on the road or street; he stopped me, and we had a word or two about it.
180. Have you seen Mr. Sparkes? I saw him one Saturday night at a meeting; I just said to him he had better not talk about it any more; this was about something that had been said about a note that had been sent that my son had been tampered with about the case. I was annoyed at it, and I told him my son had nothing to do with it.
181. You did not like the charge against your son? Decidedly I did not. Mr. Sparkes was not justified in doing it; he ought not to have done it without referring to me.
182. You have never had any misunderstanding with Mr. Melville? No.
183. Have you seen Mr. McElhone since this matter was mentioned in the House? Not until I was coming here just now; he led me up to this room—that is all. I did not have ten words with Mr. Sparkes on the matter; that was all that passed on that Saturday night.
184. How many times have you seen Mr. Beale? About three times.
185. What has been your conversation with him about the matter? He was putting questions to me—he asked whether I had seen or heard any more. Mr. Melville has asked me the same questions about the same number of times.
186. Since the inquiry began? No; Mr. Beale has seen me three times since the question came up in the House, in the street, and has asked me if I had seen this or heard that, and so forth; and I told him I was not concerning myself much about the matter.
187. Could you say what questions he asked you? He asked me if I had seen what cropped up in the House, but there was nothing in it.
188. Are you sure you only saw Mr. Sparkes once? Only once, on the Saturday night; until then I had not seen him since he was with Mr. McElhone.
189. Did Mr. Beale make any charge against your son? He said he had given a note about the date, or something of that kind, or he had seen Mr. Melville, or Mr. Melville had seen him, and that he had played fast and loose; that was all. I was totally ignorant of the whole affair. I did not know the date, and I had to get my son to remind me. I did not know Mr. Beale or Mr. Melville was having any correspondence with him.
190. You would have to rely upon your son for particulars of the case? Yes; he does the clerkship, and all these things are kept before him in the office.
191. Chairman.] I want to ask you a distinct and clear question—Has either Mr. McElhone, Mr. Sparkes, or Mr. Beale endeavoured to induce you to give any evidence before this Committee other than that disclosed in the documents? (Mr. Williamson objected to the question.)
192. Have either of the gentlemen involved in this case endeavoured to influence you? I do not think they have attempted to move me from the truth in reference to this matter; they never said anything that had any tendency to do so; I had not seen Mr. McElhone at all until I saw him at the door to-day; Mr. McElhone moved on before me right up the stairs; he did not say one word to me other than to show me up to the room.
193. Mr. Griffiths.] Does your recollection enable you to answer me clearly and definitely—why did you pay Mr. Melville the cheque before the matter was settled? Because he asked me to do so.
194. Is it a usual thing for you to pay your agents their commission before the service rendered is finished? I do not have much business of that kind.
195. You paid him this money in advance for services he was to render to you? Yes, in getting me the £400.
196. Did he make any arrangement with you to return you the money if you did not get the £400. No.
197. He was to do his best to get you the money; but whether he got it or not he was to have the £25? There was no doubt about getting the money; all that was wanted was to push the thing through.
198. You paid the £25 so that might expedite your getting the money? Yes.
199. Will you explain what you mean by expedite? That he was to get it as quick as he could.
200. How? By his going backwards and forwards to the parties who had the case in hand; he knew the parties to go to, and what office to go to.
201. What was the impression on your mind as to who was to get the £25? He was to get the £25, and some clerk in the office was to help him get the thing pushed through.
202. You paid him the £25 before he did the business? Yes; he had been once or twice about it, so far as his own statement to me was concerned.
203. You paid him in advance, and you understood that he alone was not to reap the whole benefit of that £25? I understood there was another party standing in with him, and it could not be got without this other party was interested in the £25.
204. Have you any reason to believe that any other party did get any part of this £25? No, I cannot tell that.
205. Then all you know is that you paid the £25, and you do not know anything more of what became of the £25, except that Mr. Melville received it? That is all.
206. Mr. Williamson.] That £25 you paid Mr. Melville as your agent? Decidedly; he might employ whom he liked, and do what he liked with it after that.
207. Dr. Ross.] Do you know what you did with this cheque? I gave it into the hands of Mr. Melville.
208. Personally? Yes.
209. You did not draw the money out of the Bank? No.
210. Did you draw this cheque at home or at the Bank? It was drawn in the Bank Manager's office; in fact I could not have given it at that time without the Bank Manager's consent.
211. Was it before you went with Mr. Melville to the Department, or after, that you gave him this cheque? I could not tell whether it was before or after.
212. You said in your evidence that Mr. Melville said it would cost £25? Yes, the words "grease the wheels" were used, and of course I understood what that meant.
213. Had you been at the Works' Department before that was said? I could not tell you.
214. Has any person tried to intimidate you with regard to that declaration you produced to day? No, not in the least.

215. Have you done it of your own freewill? Yes; Mr. McElhone drafted it first, and I am not sure whether my son did or not make the second copy. Mr. J. Ross.
23 Sept., 1885.
216. Do you know your son's handwriting—will you look at the declaration and say whether it is in your son's handwriting or Mr. McElhone's, or is it your own? No, it is not mine; it is very much like my son's writing.
217. Mr. Williamson.] The declaration is yours? Yes, I signed it.
218. Who dictated this draft? I did myself.
219. Whose alteration is that there? That is the same handwriting.
220. Will you say that you ever made use of the words that are struck out? These are the identical words that Mr. Melville used in his own room—"greasing the wheels"—I made objections to them at the time.
221. Are not the words "greasing the wheels" the only words Mr. Melville used? No, they were not the only words.
222. Did he say anything about paying any clerk? He did, mentioning the clerk's name.
223. Why did you put the words—"push the thing through"—instead of the words Mr. Melville used? I do not know, except that I thought they would answer the purpose better than the words "greasing the wheels."
224. If a clerk's name was mentioned why do you not name him? I cannot recollect the name.
225. Do you wish to make these gentlemen believe that your memory is clear—that you can recollect that the word clerk was made use of, and you have forgotten the name? It is so.
226. Is your memory defective in dates? Yes, I do not carry dates very well.
227. Is it not also defective as to places? No.
228. You can recollect that you gave the cheque at the Town Hall? Yes.
229. But you do not recollect the date you gave the cheque? No, I could not tell you the month.
230. Then as to names and dates your memory is defective? Yes.
231. Mr. Luscombe.] Had the Government resumed this land before you gave Mr. Melville the cheque? Yes.
232. Was the price to be paid for the land mentioned by the Government? That I would not be certain about.
233. Was the Government ever asked for a price? When they notified that they had resumed the land they asked me to name a price.
234. Did they pay the price you sent in? I do not know.
235. Mr. Williamson.] Did you ever sign any deed for the transference of this property to the Government? I think I did that at Norton & Smith's.
236. Did you sign a receipt? For them to get the money, I think I did.
237. You recollect writing your name to a deed? Yes, I think it was at Norton & Smith's office, along with Mr. Norton.
238. Will you say whether you noticed the receipt for the money that was to be paid or not? It might have been there, but I did not take notice of it.
239. Was the deed read to you? I should think it would be, but I could not recall it.
240. Do you recollect any money being mentioned in the deed? No.
241. Do you know whom you signed it before? I have signed so many papers; if my memory serves me right, it was signed before Mr. Norton and one of his clerks.
242. Did you read the deed over yourself? No, I do not think I did.
243. Did you see any figures showing any amount of money? I began to look it over, but I was more concerned about the trouble I was in and the money I was to get from Norton & Smith; it was close upon 12 o'clock, and I wanted the money before 12.
244. You were perfectly satisfied when you signed it? No, I cannot say that, because I was never satisfied.
245. Did you make any demur when you signed the deed? No, I do not think I did.
246. Was the price paid by the Government satisfactory to you or not? Yes, I was perfectly satisfied, so far as the money the Government was to give was concerned.
247. Will you swear you did not give that cheque to Mr. Melville in February, 1883? I have nothing to go by, only the date of the cheque.
248. You cannot recollect whether you gave it in February or not? No.
249. Chairman.] You said, in reference to the words "greasing the wheels," that you understood what was meant; perhaps you will define what you understood by it? That there were others interested in getting the money.
250. Mr. Williamson.] But nothing was said about that? No.

John McElhone, Esq., M.L.A., called in and examined:—

251. Chairman.] You know the purpose for which this Committee is sitting? Yes. J. McElhone, Esq., M.L.A.
23 Sept., 1885.
252. We want you to give us, in your own terms, what you know about the matter? During the time the action which I brought against the Evening News for slander was going on, a gentleman told me that Mr. Sparkes wanted to see me. I saw Mr. Sparkes and he gave me some information, and I made an appointment to call with him at Mr. Ross's house.
253. And you went? Yes, I called at Alderman Fowler's and he showed me where Mr. Sparkes lived. I called at Ross's with Sparkes; Ross was not at home. I again called about 8 p.m. same evening with Sparkes and Beale, and saw Mr. Ross.
254. Do you know the date? It was on a Saturday afternoon. I then made another appointment to meet Mr. Sparkes at the Newtown Bridge at half-past 7 in the evening.
255. The same evening? The same evening. Mr. Sparkes introduced me to Mr. Beale, who was with him, and I went with the two of them to Mr. Ross's house. They introduced me to Mr. Ross as Mr. McElhone. Mr. Ross said he knew what I came for. I then said to Mr. Ross—"Mr. Sparkes and Mr. Beale have given me certain information about a sum of money that you have given to Mr. Melville; have you any objection to state to me what you have previously told Mr. Sparkes and Mr. Beale, as I intend to have the matter brought before Parliament, and to have a Select Committee to inquire into it." He said

J. McElhonn,
Esq., M.L.A.
23 Sept., 1885.

said he had no objection whatever, and he was quite prepared to give evidence before the Select Committee as to what he had told them. Mr. Ross then made a statement, and I wrote down the substance of it with a coloured pencil. Mr. Ross stated to me that he owned some land at the Newtown Railway Station, part of which had been resumed by the Government for railway purposes, and that Hardie & Gorman valued this land at £300; he said he valued it at £400, and he claimed that amount from the Government; that he told Mr. Melville with regard to Hardie & Gorman's valuation, and that Mr. Melville was to get £25 from him if he succeeded in getting the £400 at which he valued it. He told me also that, prior to being paid this money by the Government, Mr. Melville had come to him and told him that he wanted £25 off him, and that he wanted this money as he had to use part of it to tip some clerks to get the thing through for him—he wanted it in cash at first. Mr. Ross told me that he gave Mr. Melville a cheque for the money, £25, on the Bank of Australasia, I think. He said that the Manager of the Branch Bank at Newtown knew all about it—he had told him what took place. He stated also that he went with Mr. Melville to the office, and that Mr. Melville went into the office and left Mr. Ross standing outside. I forgot to say that Mr. Ross said he could not think of the name of the clerk who Mr. Melville said was going to receive a portion of this money, but he thought he would be able to think of the name and would let me know. That was all that transpired at the time. There was some general conversation about some other matters, and about some other money he had given Mr. Melville for other services. I then left his place and walked down the Newtown Road with Mr. Sparkes and Mr. Beale, and there I saw Mr. Melville standing on the kerbstone. On the Monday morning, I think, I went down to the Valuator's office and told him what had been stated to me by Mr. Ross, without mentioning his name, and asked him if he would show me the papers connected with the valuation that had been made, as a Member of Parliament had said he was to use part of the money to tip some one in the office; Mr. Byrnes then showed me the valuation.

256. Who valued it—did he say? I could not say. I saw by that paper that it was valued, including 10 per cent. for forced resumption, at £448 16s.—I think that was the amount. I then afterwards went into the Works Office to get the names of the different clerks that had anything to do with it, for the purpose of submitting them to Mr. Ross, to see if he could think of any of them as the one named to get a portion of this money. I gave these names either to Mr. Sparkes or Mr. Beale, I am not sure which, for the purpose of giving them to Mr. Ross to see if he could pick out which name it was that Mr. Melville had mentioned. I then arranged with Beale by letter to make an appointment with Mr. Ross to meet me to get a sworn declaration in this matter. I went to Mr. Ross's house according to appointment; I think Mr. Beale was there; I took a blank form with me, and Mr. Ross supplied me with a sheet of foolscap paper, like this, white, with blue lines on it, on which I wrote out what he said.

257. Is that the document? I think that is it—I believe that is the document.

258. You wrote that out? I wrote that out at Mr. Ross's dictation. Mr. Ross then called in his son, who wrote out the sworn declaration, and at his request certain words were left out.

259. Is that the declaration you refer to? I believe it is.

260. That is not in your handwriting? No, this is in my handwriting.

261. But the declaration sworn to is not? No, it was written out by Mr. Ross's son; he was there in the office part of the time; the old gentleman called him in to look up the butts of the cheque-books to see what was the date of the cheque, but as it could not be found he said he thought he had got the form at the Bank on which the cheque was filled up. At his father's request the son copied this out, and it was read over to him.

262. There is an erasure in the document written on the white paper—can you explain how that erasure took place? Mr. Ross said it would not look well to have the words "grease the wheels" in this declaration, that it would be better to leave them out, but that when he got before the Committee he would swear to the truth of the matter as to what took place. I then made an appointment with Mr. Ross to sign the declaration before a Justice of the Peace.

263. Did you name any Justice of the Peace? There were several named; Mr. John Harris was named, and I fancy you were named.

264. Was there any special arrangement to go to Mr. M'Coy? I think so. I thought it better to say nothing about the matter till the thing was signed, for fear Mr. Melville or his friends would use some undue influence on Mr. Ross to get him to back out of it. We had an appointment at Mr. M'Coy's at 11 o'clock, but Mr. Ross did not come, and I left this with Mr. M'Coy to get it signed.

265. Did you meet Mr. Ross at any subsequent time? No, I do not believe I have seen him since, until to-day. I believe I was at Mr. Ross's house on three different occasions; the first time on a Saturday afternoon, when I went with Mr. Sparkes to see him, and he was not in; the second time when I went with Sparkes the same night at half-past 7; and the third time when I went with the blank form of declaration. He said, besides that, that he would tell the facts to the Committee. I may say that as soon as I got this declaration signed I told a number of Members of Parliament what had taken place; the very next morning I met Mr. William Clarke, and told him I intended to have a Select Committee moved for to inquire into the matter.

266. Have you any knowledge of a conspiracy in connection with this case? None whatever. I may say that, with the exception that I met Mr. Sparkes one day—I think it was last week, when he was talking to Mr. Hammond, and I walked over and said a few words, and the Honorable George Thornton came up—I do not think I have seen him since. I saw him and Mr. Beale on the evening when Mr. Melville spoke to me on the verandah. I then told them what had taken place—that Mr. Melville wanted to have a private conversation with me.

267. Mr. Luscombe.] If Mr. Ross had stated here to-day—I do not say that he has—that you told him that Mr. Melville had received £40 or £80 from the Government in excess of the amount claimed by Mr. Ross and had pocketed it himself, would that be untrue? It would be untrue; I say it is untrue.

268. If Mr. Ross has stated here that you told him—which induced him to sign this affidavit—that Mr. Melville had some £40 or £80 in excess, would that be true? It would not be true. I pointed out to Mr. Ross that if he had not made any claim, the valuation was £448 16s., made up by the 10 per cent. for forced sale, and that he could have got £48, besides saving the £25 he paid to Mr. Melville.

269. Was any inducement held out to Mr. Ross to get him to sign this declaration? No; I swear positively there was no inducement whatever held out to Mr. Ross to sign it.

270. Were you not induced to take up this case against Mr. Melville in consequence of some action taken by

by him against you? If Mr. Melville had taken no action against me at all I would have felt bound as a Member of Parliament to have taken this matter up when it was brought to my notice. I would have brought the charge against any Member of the House, independent of any action taken by Mr. Melville or any one else. As to the charge against me, I have treated the whole thing with contempt. I would have made the charge against any man in the House if this statement had been made to me—that he wanted money to bribe some Government officer.

J. McElhone,
Esq., M.L.A.
23 Sept., 1885.

271. From whom did you get information that I had been interviewing Mr. Ross with a view to intimidate him? I decline to answer that question.

272. Did you get it direct from Mr. Ross? No; I have not seen Mr. Ross from the day I left him at his house till I saw him here to-day. I got information that you had been there; in fact I got it from your own speech as reported in the Herald, when you made your statement in the House that you had been to Mr. Ross's. The first I knew of it was in the Sydney Morning Herald. Mr. Chairman,—May I be allowed to say something with regard to some statements made by Mr. Melville in Parliament?—I swear positively that the statement made here by Mr. Melville—— (Mr. Williamson objected.)

273. Chairman.] You desire now to make some reference to the Parliamentary Hansard report of Mr. Melville's remarks? Yes, I desire to say that what Mr. Melville stated here is false from beginning to end—utterly untrue. He said, as reported in Hansard—"Mr. McElhone was not present on the first day Parliament met, but on the following afternoon I observed him in his place. He afterwards went upstairs; I followed him, and I said—'I am given to understand that you have a charge against me, and that it is to the effect that I sold land to the Government for a client who is said to have received £400, while I received £200.' I also said—'I saw you last Saturday night in the company of two persons who, if they had their way, would, for the religious opinions you hold, cut your throat; they imagine, however, that they are going to make a tool of you. Will you allow me to tell you the exact facts of the case?' I then told the Honorable Member the facts which I will presently mention to the House; when I concluded, Mr. McElhone said—'There is nothing in the damned thing; I saw Ross myself on Saturday night.'" I say that every word of that is false from beginning to end.

274. Did you meet Mr. Melville upon the verandah? I did; he came to me while I was standing outside talking to some Members.

275. Did he refer to the case of Mr. Ross? He said—"I want to speak to you privately."

276. Did he ask you whether you had stated that he got £600 for this land, of which Mr. Ross was to get £400, and Mr. Melville £200? No, it is utterly untrue. He said—"I want to speak to you privately"; I said—"There is nothing private between you and me—what is it you want?"; I said—"Out with it." Mr. Melville waited for a moment or two till the bell rang and the other Members went down stairs, and then he said—"You have been told I am going to move your expulsion from Parliament"; I said—"I have never heard anything of the sort, and I am holding my seat since I came back from England, to allow you to move it if you think fit"; he said—"It is untrue; I do not mean to take any steps in the matter"; I said—"You can do as you like."

277. Did you say to him—"There is nothing in the damned thing?" I have stated exactly what took place. He then said—"I saw you in bad company the other night"; I said—"I am not in the habit of keeping bad company—whom do you mean?" he said "I saw you with Sparkes and Beale; they are two bigoted Orangemen who would eat a Roman Catholic"; I said—"They have not eaten me."

278. What took place between you and Mr. Melville as referring to this particular question? Nothing more than what I have related.

279. Mr. Hammond.] Did it appear that Mr. Melville had done some agency business for Mr. Ross before this case? It had nothing to do with this case; he received £5 for speaking at different meetings on Mr. Ross's behalf, with respect to a smoke nuisance case.

280. Had Mr. Melville been agent for Mr. Ross in any other matters? He got the sum of £5 out of him for going round to different meetings speaking for him.

281. Mr. Williamson.] When you first met Mr. Ross, the whole of this matter was settled between the Government and Mr. Ross? Long before, I believe.

282. You have seen the papers? After I saw Mr. Ross.

283. The first time? I think it was on the Monday morning after seeing him that I went to the office and saw the papers.

284. Did you see a paper there—a formal application for compensation from the Government for this land? I do not think I did.

285. Was there any claim made by Mr. Ross? I could not say there was. All I asked for was for Mr. Byrnes to show me what the Government valuation was for this land of Ross's that had been resumed. I think that was the only document I saw; it was all I asked for.

286. Did Mr. Ross tell you what he got—did he tell you he received £400? Yes, his own valuation.

287. Did he tell you he got any interest? He told me he got the £400 that he claimed.

288. Did he appear to have any doubt on his mind at the time about the £400? I think not.

289. Did he appear to have any doubt upon his mind at that time about the £400? I think not; he claimed £400, and got £400.

290. Did he say whom he got it from? From the Railway Department, I suppose.

291. At your interview with Mr. Ross with regard to this matter you drew up this document; that is a sheet of letter-paper—common letter-paper? Yes.

292. That is not foolscap? No.

293. There are no blue lines upon it? Yes, there are blue lines upon it—it is ruled paper.

294. You drew that—that is your writing? Yes.

295. Did you take that document away with you? I do not think I did; I do not believe I have ever seen it from that day till now. That is the rough draft, written as Mr. Ross dictated; and it is altered as Mr. Ross wished it.

296. When was this document made (referring to the declaration)? At the second interview I had with Mr. Ross.

297. Was it engrossed at that time? Yes, before we left the room, by Mr. Ross's son, and I got it afterwards signed.

298. And the alteration was made by you? Yes.

299. That is your handwriting? Yes, I believe it is.

300.

- J. McElhene,
Esq., M.L.A.
23 Sept., 1885.
300. How long had you the declaration in your possession? As I have already stated, I think it was given to me next day, and I took it to Mr. Proctor to ask him to move for a Select Committee.
301. Why did you not move in it yourself? I thought I would be a witness, and that it would be better for some other Member to move in the matter. I declined to do it myself, because I thought it would come better from somebody else.
302. You declined to move in the matter yourself? No, I never declined—
303. Chairman.] Your reason for not moving in the matter yourself was that you would be a witness? Yes; and for the same reason that you gave when I asked you to take the matter up—that personal motives might be imputed.
304. Mr. Williamson.] How long had you this document before you showed it to Mr. Proctor? I do not think I had it for forty-eight hours.
305. Can you say how long it was before this was drawn and that was engrossed? It was done instantly; Mr. Ross's son was there, and he sat down and wrote it while we were in the room; the second time I saw Mr. Ross.
306. How many times did you see Mr. Ross? Only twice, I think; I called three times, but did not see him the first time.
307. Did you go from Mr. Sparkes's house in a cab? I did not go in a cab; I had my own buggy, I think.
308. Did Sparkes accompany you? Yes.
309. On that occasion did you go to Mr. Ross? I went to Mr. Ross's house, and he was not at home; then I made an appointment with Mr. Sparkes to be at the Newtown Bridge at half-past 7, and I met him there, and went to Mr. Ross's with him.
310. Did you ever go to Mr. Ross's in a cab? I do not believe I went in a cab on any occasion; I am not in the habit of wasting my money on cabs.
311. What did you go in on the night this was made? I believe I went in the tram.
312. This, you say, was engrossed off that? As soon as this was finished, Mr. Ross's son was called in and he made the copy of the declaration on the blank form.
313. How long after this was written was it declared? I am not quite sure of the date when it was declared. I think it would be done on the Monday; it was within a day or two afterwards; Mr. Ross made an appointment to meet me at Mr. M'Coy's.
314. How long do you think it was from the day you saw Mr. Ross till the declaration was signed and made? Within two or three days at the outside.
315. Are you sure of that? To the best of my belief it was within two or three days after. It might have been the next day, but I do not think it extended beyond two or three days.
316. Did you ever go to Mr. Ross with Mr. Beale alone? Yes; I rather think Beale was the only one that was there when this was done.
317. Did you and Sparkes and Beale ever go together to see Mr. Ross? I met Sparkes by appointment at the Newtown Bridge, and Sparkes introduced me to Mr. Beale; that was on the Saturday night, the first time I saw Mr. Ross.
318. You had an interview with Mr. Ross, in the presence of Sparkes and Beale, on that Saturday night? Yes.
319. And you and Mr. Beale had an interview with Mr. Ross on another occasion? Yes; I have already stated that I wrote to Mr. Beale about this matter, when I thought it necessary to get a sworn declaration; and an appointment was made by Beale, I believe, to meet me on the particular occasion when that was written out.
320. Did you on any occasion tell Mr. Ross he had lost £80 through Mr. Melville? No, I showed Mr. Ross that the Government valuation, with 10 per cent. added for forced sale, came to £48 16s. more than the £400 he claimed, and that, with the £25 he had paid to Mr. Melville, came to £73 16s.; that he would have got that much more if he had left the matter in the hands of the Government.
321. You told Mr. Ross he had lost that amount through employing Mr. Melville? He could not have lost it—he never had it; I told Mr. Ross that if he had left the matter in the hands of the Government officials he would have saved that amount.
322. Chairman.] Did you, as an inducement to Mr. Ross to sign that declaration, tell him he had lost this amount? Certainly not; I showed Mr. Ross that if he had left the matter in the hands of the Government officials he would have got £48 16s. more, and would have saved the £25 he paid Mr. Melville.
323. Mr. Williamson.] Before the declaration was made you went into these figures and showed Mr. Ross he had lost that amount of money? What I said was that the Government had valued the land at £48 16s. more than Mr. Ross claimed, and that through employing Mr. Melville he had lost that amount; that if he had left the matter in the hands of the officials he would have got so much more.
324. Do you know what he got? £400.
325. Do you know that he received a penny? I do not know; Mr. Melville may have got it all for what I know.
326. Chairman.] Did Mr. Melville tell you anything on the verandah as to what had been received? Yes, he said to me—"I know all about it; it was Ross's affair you went about, but there is nothing in it"; I said—"Perhaps not"; he said—"Poor old fellow, he bought some land from Hardie & Gorman, and was in difficulties and could not pay for it, and he came to me to get this money from the Government for him."
327. Did he say how much he had received? He did not say a word about how much he had received at all.
328. Mr. Williamson.] Did he tell you Hardie & Gorman were pressing him? No, Mr. Ross did not; Mr. Melville told me.
329. Did he tell you any other person was pressing him? No.
330. Did Mr. Ross appear surprised when you came to him? He said he knew what I had come for; I asked if he had any objection to tell me what he had told Mr. Sparkes and Mr. Beale.
331. Had you then any knowledge of what the land had been valued at? No, I found out afterwards.
332. Did you on the first occasion when you went to Mr. Ross tell him he had lost £70? No, I knew nothing about it then.
333. Did he make this statement the first time, without your telling him that he had lost the £70? Yes, decidedly.
334. At what meeting was it you told he had lost this £70? Afterwards, when I went to get the declaration signed. I did not say he had lost it; I said the Government valuation was £48 16s., and he would have got £48 16s. more than he did if he had left the matter in the hands of the officials. 335.

335. On the first occasion did he make the statement in that declaration without your telling him anything about the loss he had sustained? Yes, voluntarily; that was on the Saturday night, the first time I saw him. J. McElhone,
Esq., M.L.A.
23 Sept., 1885.
336. Who asked the questions leading to the substance of this declaration? I wrote it from his dictation.
337. You did not ask him any questions at all? Very likely I might have done so.
338. Did you ask him any questions at all? I believe that was an entirely voluntary statement of Mr. Ross's.
339. Chairman.] Did you prompt him in any part of it? I do not think so; I might have said a word or two if anything was not put grammatically or something of that sort, but the statement was made by Mr. Ross voluntarily.
340. Mr. Williamson.] Is your memory very good? As a rule it is.
341. Can you tell us what time elapsed between your first interview with Mr. Ross and the completion of this declaration? The first interview was on a Saturday night; on the Monday I went down to Mr. Byrnes the Valuer's office; I wrote to Mr. Beale on the Monday night; he would get my letter on the Tuesday; it might be the end of the week when the declaration was written; it might be less; it might be four days.
342. Five days at the outside? I could not say; it might have been the following Saturday.
343. Can you tell the date of the interview between you and Mr. Melville on the balcony? I thought it was the evening Parliament met, but Mr. Melville said it was the evening after; he may be correct.
344. Was this declaration made when he spoke to you about it? I rather think not; I do not think I had the declaration then.
345. How long afterwards was the declaration made? I could hardly tell you, but I did not lose any time in it; if I had had the declaration at the time very likely I would have told Mr. Melville about it, but I was not going to tell Mr. Melville what I had heard until I got it.
346. You say it was only about six days? It might have been five or six days, or it might have been on the next Saturday night.
347. The declaration is dated the 6th day of May, 1885: will you look at the date of the meeting of the House? It seems to have been the 17th March.
348. How do you account for the discrepancy? I am speaking from memory about the dates.
349. You admit you have mistaken the dates? It looks as if I had made a mistake about the dates.
350. Then your memory is doubtful as to dates? Very likely; it seems so there.
351. If your memory has deceived you in one thing, do you think you are sure of others? I am positive I saw Mr. Ross on a Saturday night; I do not know the date; I am positive as to the fact of having made an appointment and getting that done; I am sure of the facts about the two occasions I went there.
352. Chairman.] Had I taken any part in this transaction up to the time I moved in Parliament? None whatever; I called at your business place the day before Parliament met, and you were out; I went again in the afternoon and asked you to take the matter up; the objection you stated was that you did not wish to do so because it might be put down as something personal.
353. Mr. Williamson.] Did Mr. Proctor promise you to bring it on? He promised me he would; he told me afterwards he thought I did not want to go on with it.
354. Mr. Griffiths.] Was there any other draft declaration drawn out? There was a document drawn on paper on the Saturday night when I saw Mr. Ross, but there was no other draft of that drawn.
355. No draft declaration previously to this? None whatever; when I saw Mr. Ross on the first occasion I made a memorandum with a coloured pencil.
356. Mr. Williamson.] You took your instructions? I took no instructions at all—I simply wrote it down. Afterwards, on the second occasion, I wrote that document now before you, and Ross's son copied it out from that; I was under the impression that I had torn it up.
357. You gave Mr. Ross the names of the clerks in the office? No; I sent the list to Mr. Beale, and he showed it to Ross.
358. And he could not recollect the name of the one mentioned by Mr. Melville? No.

Mr. James Henry Beale called in and examined:—

359. Chairman.] What are you by profession? Builder and contractor. Mr. J. H.
Beale.
23 Sept., 1885.
360. Do you hold any public position? I am an Alderman for Darlington.
361. You know the purpose of this Committee? Yes.
362. We want you, in your own way, to tell the Committee what knowledge you have of the matter? It was talked of all about Newtown at the time of the election—about Mr. Melville receiving £25 from Mr. Ross—and one evening Mr. and Mrs. Sparkes and my wife and me had been down at Mr. Sparkes', spending the evening; coming home Mr. Sparkes and his wife walked part of the way with us, and we saw Mr. Ross standing at his front gate; we entered into conversation, and he told us he had given Mr. Melville £25 for getting his land business put through.
363. Did you ask him for the information? No; we were talking about the elections, and in the course of conversation he told us he had given Mr. Melville this money.
364. Did he say whether he paid him as an agent? He said that Mr. Mitchell had tried to do something in the matter, and he could not; and then he stated that he went to Mr. Melville, and Mr. Melville asked for £25 to push the matter through.
365. Did you get a list of clerks' names from Mr. McElhone? Yes.
366. Have you got that list? I have; and I have the first declaration that Mr. Ross made, in the presence of Mr. McElhone, Mr. Sparkes, and myself; I have them in my desk at home.

Mr. George Hudson Sparkes called in and examined:—

367. Chairman.] What position do you hold? Storekeeper for Montefiore, Joseph & Co. Mr.
G. H. Sparkes.
23 Sept., 1885.
368. How long have you been there? Ten years.
369. Do you hold any public position? I am Alderman for Camperdown, and Trustee of the Public Park at Camperdown.
370. You know the purpose of this Committee? Yes.

- Mr. G. H. Sparkes. 371. To inquire into a transaction between Mr. Melville and Mr. Ross: we want you to tell us in your own terms what you know about this transaction? Shortly after the municipal elections for Newtown in February, I was in company with Mr. Beale, Mrs. Beale, and my own wife; after spending the evening at my house we were going part of the way home with Mr. and Mrs. Beale, and we saw Mr. Ross leaning over his fence in Australia-street; conversation ensued between us about the municipal elections; Mr. Ross then stated that he was not sorry to see Mr. Melville turned out of the Newtown Council; that anything he ever did for him he always got paid for, mentioning at the same time an amount of £5 which Mr. Ross had given him on one occasion when Mr. Melville appeared as a witness in a case against him at the Police Court about a smoke nuisance. He said also he had given Mr. Melville £25 for using his influence to get some land resumed or the money from the Government; and at the same time stated he asked for it especially, so as to give some of the money to one of the clerks in the office to put the thing through. I did not think anything of it for some time after, till Mr. McElhone came to me and asked me about the matter, and I stated exactly to Mr. McElhone, in answer to his inquiries, what Mr. Ross stated to me, as already stated. We went to Mr. Ross's, but Mr. Ross was not at home. We also went to Mr. Fowler's, and Mr. McElhone asked him what he thought of Mr. Ross, would he speak the truth, and Mr. Fowler stated in the presence of the two of us, that if Mr. Ross said anything we could depend upon its truth. We did not see Mr. Ross that afternoon, but we made an appointment for Mr. McElhone to come out again that evening, which he did, and we went with Mr. Beale to Mr. Ross's. Mr. Ross again asserted the same words that he had told us on a previous occasion about giving Mr. Melville £25. Mr. Ross stated that he had given Mr. Melville £25, and at the same time his son went up to a shelf to get down some old cheque butts, but he could not find the butt for the cheque to Mr. Melville; Mr. Ross then said—"I believe I drew that cheque in the Bank, and that accounts for your not being able to find the butt." At that time Mr. Ross said Mr. Melville asked for the money, and at the same time he requested cash to be paid, as he wanted to pay some of the clerks in the office to shove the thing through. I have had no conversation with Mr. Ross from that time up to last Saturday evening, when I had occasion to see Mr. Ross with reference to hiring the Temperance Hall at Newtown.
372. Did Mr. Ross make this statement to you in company with the others freely? Freely and uncalled for he made the statement.
373. Were you present when the declaration was written out? No.
374. How many times have you been to Mr. Ross about this particular business with Mr. McElhone? Twice, I believe.
375. Dr. Ross.] Were there any clerks' names mentioned in reference to this affair? There was a clerk's name mentioned.
376. Could you give the name? I could not from memory; there was some person's name mentioned in conjunction with the other.
377. Did you infer that Mr. Melville was to get the £25, or that it was to go to the clerk? I have not the slightest idea that Mr. Melville had any intention of paying any clerk in the office, but it was simply a side wind to get the money from Mr. Ross.
378. Were you present at any time when Mr. McElhone was in company with Mr. Ross when any declaration was made? No, I was not.
379. Mr. Williamson.] Your memory appears very good—you have given a clear and detailed statement of what took place, only omitting the clerk's name: now is your memory good or bad? I reckon I have got as good a memory as any one.
380. Why do you omit the name of the clerk? I cannot say the name; there was so many different names, I might not have got the correct one.
381. Was there only one name mentioned? There might have been more than one; there was some clerk's name mentioned, but what clerk I cannot say.
382. You admit that on that occasion there was a clerk's name mentioned? Yes.
383. Did you go to Mr. McElhone, or did Mr. McElhone come to you? Mr. McElhone came to me.
384. Do you know what time elapsed from the time you saw Mr. McElhone first till the declaration was made? I believe it must have been about a fortnight or three weeks.
385. Are you quite sure of that? I could not be sure.
386. Then let us know as near as possible? I could not say.
387. You know a declaration was made? I have heard of a declaration being made.
388. Will you look at the date? May, 1885.
389. Will you swear to the time? I will not swear to any time; I was not present when the declaration was made.
390. Did you ever see that document (the draft of the declaration)? No.
391. Did you ever hear about that? I have heard of a declaration being made, but I was not present.
392. Was it you that gave Mr. McElhone the information? I gave Mr. McElhone the information.
393. All that you have stated to the Chairman? Yes.
394. Was that true or false? It was true as far as Mr. Ross told me.
395. Are you not in the habit of making fabrications? No, I am not in the habit of making fabrications.
396. Were you ever in New Zealand? I was.
397. What position did you occupy there? I refuse to answer the question; it has no bearing on the matter before the Committee. I will answer any question affecting the matter I am called here for, and I ask the Committee if I am not justified in refusing.
398. Were you a policeman there? I object to answer the question; I object to answer any questions except questions affecting the matter before the Committee.
399. Were you a policeman there? I object to answer.
400. Have you not preferred other charges on a former occasion, and informed the Chairman of the same, and they have fallen through? I object to answer.
401. Chairman.] I should like you to answer that question? I made no charges that have fallen through.
402. Mr. Williamson.] Do you know a person named Gentz, in one of the public institutions—did you ever make any charge against him? No, I never made a charge against him.
403. Were you ever charged in New Zealand with committing a heinous offence with a Minister? Never; I repudiate it with scorn.
404. Did Mr. McElhone ever come to your house in a cab? He came in a buggy.
405. Did Mr. McElhone and Mr. Beale ever come to your house in a cab? Never, to my knowledge.

406. Was Mr. Beale there before Mr. McElhone? Mr. Beale and Mr. McElhone were never there together.
407. Did you ever meet by appointment? On the Saturday evening I met Mr. McElhone according to appointment, after we had failed to see Mr. Ross in the afternoon.
408. Were you at Mr. Ross's house when Mr. McElhone went into figures? He went into figures about the price of the ground.
409. Did he show to Mr. Ross any loss that he had sustained through Mr. Melville? Not that I am aware of.
410. Not at any time? Not at any time.
411. Chairman.] How long have you been in New South Wales? About fourteen and a half years; ten years of that time I have been with Messrs. Montefiore, Joseph, & Co. as head storekeeper, looking after the whole stock of that firm, and with thousands of pounds worth of stock under my charge given out every week. I was for over two years a member of the New South Wales police force, and for two years I was employed by John Frazer & Co.
412. When you left the police force, how did you leave it? I received my discharge from the late Captain McLerie, who said that he regretted that I had left the force, and two years afterwards I was re-appointed to go to Newcastle, but having a home here my wife objected to go, and I resigned again.
413. Was any charge preferred against you? No.
414. Have you ever made any statements or charges against anybody to me? Not that I am aware of.
415. Dr. Ross.] How long have you known Mr. Melville? I think it must be ever since I came to the Colony.
416. Have you been on friendly terms with him? Yes, until the late election, when there was a difference of opinion between Mr. Melville and me. Personally I have no objection to him, but politically I have strong feelings in opposition to him.
417. How long have you known Mr. Ross? Since I came to Camperdown—about twelve years.
418. Have you been always on good terms with him? Yes, and with every one.
419. Mr. Williamson.] Did you ever publish any document or pamphlet against Mr. Melville? I object to answer that question.

Mr.
G. H. Sparkes.
23 Sept., 1885.

Mr. Thomas Ross called in and examined:—

420. Chairman.] You are the son of Mr. Ross, a glass-blower, at Camperdown? Yes.
421. Do you remember writing that (the declaration)? Yes, that is my writing.
422. Who was present? Mr. Sparkes, Mr. Beale, Mr. McElhone, and my father.
423. Were you present when the substance of this was given to anybody? Yes.
424. Who gave the substance of it? My father.
425. Did you hear anybody advance reasons why he should give it? What they should put in, do you mean?
426. No; any reasons why he should make the statement at all? That he should give the affidavit to clear up something about £80 which he could have got more than he did.
427. Who said that? Mr. McElhone.
428. Was that the first time the declaration was made? No, this was the second time—when Mr. McElhone told father about the £80, and the second time he said that if he got this he would have the £80 cleared up.
429. Were you present at all the interviews that took place between your father and Mr. McElhone? Yes, excepting when the declaration was signed.
430. They all took place at your father's place? Yes.
431. Look at that copy; there is an erasure there; did you hear anything said about that? Money to grease the wheels.
432. Did you hear your father say that? No, he would not sign that; he said—"No, I do not think I said that"; push the thing through, that was more like what he said—he said something to that effect.
433. You do not think your father said that: did he admit that that was the first term he used, but that the other would look better? No, he said he did not think that he said that, but that to push the thing through, or words to that effect, was what Mr. Melville said.
434. How many times have you seen Mr. Melville to speak to him about this particular business? I do not think I have seen him at all.
435. You were present at Mr. Beale's house when Mr. Beale wrote a letter in reply to an inquiry? Yes.
436. When was that? Last Monday week.
437. How long after Mr. Beale wrote that letter did you see Mr. Melville? I saw Mr. Melville on the Saturday night.
438. You saw him to give him information that Mr. Beale had written this letter? No, I did not.
439. You are positive about that? I am.
440. Is it not a fact that in the presence of your father and Mr. Beale you admitted it? No such thing: I do not deny that I ever spoke of it, but I never told any one to go and tell Mr. Melville.
441. The question is, whether immediately or shortly after Mr. Beale wrote that letter to me you did not go to Mr. Melville and tell him he had written that letter? I did not.
442. And you did not admit that to Mr. Beale and your father? No; Mr. Beale said I had gone against my own flesh and blood, and father said I had opened my mouth too wide; Mr. Beale said I went straight and told Mr. Melville, and I told Mr. Beale I did not.
443. You say on oath you did not tell Mr. Melville that Mr. Beale was writing that letter to me? I did not.
444. Mr. Griffiths.] Do you know anything about a cheque your father gave to Mr. Melville? Yes, for £25.
445. Do you keep your father's books? Yes.
446. Is that entered in the books? No, that was a private transaction. If it had been given out of our book it would have been stated on the butt what it was given for. I heard of it immediately afterwards.
447. Did you enter it in the book? No.
448. What is the meaning of these perforated figures on the cheque? I do not know anything about that.
449. Some question has arisen about the date of the cheque—do you know what is the date it bears? That is November 8, 1883. That is my father's handwriting right through.

Mr. T. Ross.
23 Sept., 1885.

- Mr. T. Ross. 450. Chairman.] You said the cheque was a private transaction, and did not appear in your father's books?
Yes.
- 28 Sept., 1885. 451. No entry whatever has been made about it? No.
452. Dr. Ross.] When you copied this declaration did you read it to your father? Yes.
453. After you read it did your father make the declaration? I do not recollect about that; I believe I read it to him.
454. Did he say the declaration was perfectly true? When I gave him that after I wrote it he was going to town; I read it as I wrote it; I do not remember him saying anything about it.
455. Have you had any conversation with any one relative to this matter? Yes, both with Mr. Melville and Mr. Beale.
456. When had you any conversation with Mr. Melville? I saw him last Saturday three weeks.
457. Where? At his place.
458. You went over there? Yes, I went over to get a coffin.
459. What conversation had you then? He said this matter was coming on before a Select Committee, and I would have to appear. I told him I knew all about that.
460. What conversation had you with Mr. Beale? I have had conversation with him when he has been speaking to father.
461. Mr. Luscombe.] Did Mr. McElhone hold out any inducement to your father to sign that declaration? He said he would get it cleared up; he said he should have got £80 more than he did get—that Mr. Melville either got it or should have got it.
462. Mr. Williamson.] Can you tell me how many interviews were held between Mr. McElhone, Mr. Beale, Mr. Sparkes, and your father, on this matter? I think Mr. Sparkes was there twice, but I can positively swear he was there on the second occasion, after Mr. Melville was defeated; I could not state exactly how many times Mr. Beale has been there; Mr. McElhone was there twice or three times.
463. Were all these parties present at the same time when that declaration was made? When it was signed I was not there.
464. Were you there, and were they all present when it was written out? I believe so; I will not swear exactly to Mr. Sparkes being there.
465. Were they all present when the draft was made? Yes.
466. Who dictated that? Mr. McElhone.
467. Mr. McElhone dictated all that is contained there? Yes, he wrote it himself.
468. At the time that was drawn up, was it then he spoke about the £80? Yes; when Mr. McElhone came out, it was the first words he said when father came into the office; he said—"Besides giving Mr. Melville £25, you could have got another £80"; and then the conversation about the £25 was repeated. Mr. McElhone said—"If I get the affidavit, we can get this cleared up and get the £80."
469. Then it was an inducement, the getting of the £80 cleared up, that your father made that declaration? I do not know that that was the inducement—that was a spur, as I took it.
470. Did Mr. McElhone go into figures at all? I do not recollect—I will not swear to it.
471. Have any of the parties been to see you since the declaration? Yes, Mr. Beale has been round on several occasions.
472. Has Mr. Sparkes ever said anything about a stronger declaration? Mr. Beale said that was not exactly the the thing; if it was all in it would be stronger.
473. Do you know what the first statement contained? No, I do not. It was Mr. Beale or Mr. McElhone wrote that.
474. Did you see Mr. McElhone when he first came? Yes.
475. Was your father present then, on the first occasion? Yes.
476. Are you sure of that? He may have come on another occasion, but on the Saturday night when I was looking up the butts he was there.
477. Previous to that, had you seen Mr. McElhone in the afternoon? I do not recollect.
478. How long was it that the whole affair took place, from the time you saw Mr. McElhone first and your father went away to make that declaration? I do not know; it was just about the time when Mr. Melville was defeated for Kingston Ward.
479. About how long do you think it occupied—the whole affair? About a fortnight.
480. Have you any doubt upon your mind? I would not positively say that.
481. Was it more than a week? Yes.
482. More than a fortnight? I would not say.
483. Have you seen Mr. Beale since the inquiry was instituted—within the last week or two? Yes.
484. Did he ask you any questions? Yes, he came about the same questions Mr. Abigail has asked me.
485. Did any person tell you not to appear here? No.
486. What did Mr. Beale say about your coming here? Mr. Beale did not say anything about coming here.
487. Did your father say anything? My father said two of us could not be away from the works at the same time.
488. Chairman.] You have stated just now that it was a mistake,* the signing of that declaration on your father's part: do you think your father would swear to a document of that kind if it was not correct? No, I do not think he would—decidedly not.
489. You think, when he signed that document, he signed what he believed to be true? Certainly.
490. You say Mr. McElhone dictated all that? No, I did not mean that; Mr. McElhone wrote it, and father and Mr. McElhone dictated it.
491. Your father gave the words, and Mr. McElhone wrote it down? Yes, my father was speaking at the time.
492. Your father was speaking about the facts, and Mr. McElhone wrote them down? Yes.
493. You do not believe your father would swear to anything that was not true? Oh no.
494. Your father's reputation is good in the district? Yes, his word is as good as his oath.
495. Dr. Ross.] Did you ever hear the name of any clerk in any of the Departments mentioned that any of the money was to go to? No, not that the money was to go to; my father has tried to think of the names of the people Mr. Melville would have to see to push the thing through. 496.

* Note (as revision) :—I did not state it was a mistake.

496. Mr. Williamson.] You never heard of any persons to whom money would have to go? No.
497. Did you ever hear the names of any parties Mr. Melville would have to bribe? No.
498. Chairman.] Did you ever hear your father say that Mr. Melville had intimated that to him? No.
499. Has your father often spoken to you about this transaction? Yes, almost every one that would come round would speak about it.
500. Have you heard anything said of a conspiracy against Mr. Melville? No.
501. Do you know anything discreditable either of Mr. Sparkes or Mr. Beale—what is their general character in the district? A very good character, as far as I can understand.
502. Mr. Luscombe.] So far as your knowledge is concerned, Mr. Melville has only been paid for services rendered to your father? Yes.
503. Mr. Williamson.] Did you ever hear that Mr. Melville was paid for his services in the smoke case? No; we paid our witnesses, but I do not think we offered Mr. Melville anything.
504. You keep your father's books? Yes; I had everything to do with the smoke case.
505. And you would have known if Mr. Melville had been paid? Yes, I think so.
506. If your father has stated that he paid a cheque of £5 to Mr. Melville, would that be untrue? Certainly not, if he has stated so.
507. Would not that appear in the books? Yes, if it appeared as payment for the smoke case.
508. Did you ever give Mr. Melville money in connection with the smoke case? No. I have given Mr. Melville money.
509. Was it for services rendered to your father? No, not in the smoke case.
510. Mr. Luscombe.] Did you ever hear that your father paid Mr. Melville £5 in the smoke case? No.
511. Chairman.] You are not aware that such an amount was given? No.
512. And yet you keep your father's books? Yes.
513. Was it given? Not to my knowledge.
514. Mr. Griffiths.] Every penny that was paid was entered in the smoke accounts? Yes, so far as I know.
515. And you can produce the books containing the smoke accounts? Yes.

Mr. T. Ross.
23 Sept., 1885.

FRIDAY, 25 SEPTEMBER, 1885.

Present:—

Mr. GRIFFITHS,
Mr. CHAPMAN,

MR. HAMMOND.

Dr. ROSS,
Mr. LUSCOMBE,

FRANCIS ABIGAIL, Esq., IN THE CHAIR.

Mr. John Williamson appeared as Solicitor for Mr. Melville.

Mr. James Henry Beale called in and further examined:—

516. Chairman.] You were requested by the Committee to produce some papers or documents on the last occasion—have you them with you? I have some, but I have mislaid some.
517. What do you now produce? This is a document (Appendix B 1) which Mr. McElhone jotted down from information given to him by Mr. Ross at the first interview with him.
518. Did Mr. Ross dictate that, or did Mr. McElhone suggest it? Mr. Ross dictated this to Mr. McElhone; it is a rough sketch of the conversation.
519. Mr. Chapman.] Mr. Ross mentioned what occurred, and Mr. McElhone wrote it down? Yes; and then he read it over to Mr. Ross, and put down the names of those who were present: Joseph Ross, Thomas Ross, Mr. Beale, Mr. Sparkes, and Mr. McElhone. That was on the 14th March, 1885.
520. Chairman.] On that occasion did any conversation take place as to what loss Mr. Ross had sustained? (Mr. Williamson objected)
521. Mr. Williamson.] Could you detail to the Committee what conversation took place at that time? It will be necessary to tell how I came to go there. I met Mr. Sparkes, and he told me Mr. McElhone had been out in the afternoon to see him in reference to the report of Mr. Melville having received £25; he told me he had an appointment with Mr. McElhone in the evening, and asked me if I would accompany him to Mr. Ross's; I said I would; we met Mr. McElhone and went to Mr. Ross's; when we went in Mr. Ross said he knew what we had come about, and he then said he was prepared to make a statement of what had happened; Mr. Ross told Mr. McElhone he had seen Mr. Mitchell in reference to the matter, but he afterwards saw Mr. Melville, and Mr. Melville told him that he would want £25, as he would have to grease the wheels to get the thing through. They spoke in reference to the amount he should have received, and Mr. McElhone told Mr. Ross that the matter would have to be inquired into elsewhere; Mr. Ross said if that was so he would state all that he had stated and more. That is all that happened on that occasion.
522. Chairman.] Did you meet again at Mr. Ross's? Yes.
523. Who was present on the second occasion? Mr. McElhone, Mr. Ross, young Ross, and myself.
524. What took place on that occasion? On that occasion Mr. McElhone informed Mr. Ross what he had come about, and he asked him if he would state to him the particulars and give them to him in writing; he said he would; then Mr. Ross told his son to sit down and write out what he told him; he did so, stating, as I have before said, that he had given Mr. Melville £25 in order to push this matter through, and that Mr. Melville had stated to him that he wanted this money to grease the wheels and to push the matter through. In the course of this, while young Ross was writing this, if I recollect right, Mr. Ross corrected it and said it would not look well to put in the words about greasing the wheels.
525. Do you know if that is the document—the declaration that was written on that occasion—the declaration I place in your hands? Yes, I believe it was.
526. You believe the declaration is the document that was written then? Yes, I believe it is.
527. Who wrote it? Tom Ross—young Ross.
528. Was that dictated in your presence? Yes.
529. By whom? By Mr. Ross.
530. To whom? To his son as he wrote.

Mr.
J. H. Beale.
25 Sept., 1885.

- Mr. J. H. Beale. 25 Sept., 1885.
531. You produce now another document? Yes.
532. What is that? This (Appendix B 2) is a memorandum that Mr. McElhone gave me stating the amount of the valuation of the land, £448, including 10 per cent. for forced sale, but he only claimed and got £400; Mr. McElhone gave me that, and he said—"You can show that to Mr. Ross, but whatever you do, do not lead him to believe that by any action he may take he will get this money that he is short." So I went round and showed it to Mr. Ross.
533. Have you any doubt about that? None at all—not the slightest doubt.
534. Did you on any occasion lead Mr. Ross to believe he would receive any more money? No. Mr. McElhone impressed that upon me. "Tell him," he said, "not to be under the impression that any action he may take now will cause him to get any more than what he has had."
535. You received a letter from me asking for the date of these occurrences? Yes.
536. And you wrote a reply? I did.
537. Did you convey the information to Mr. Melville that you had written that reply? No, I was not clear as to the dates, so, not being very well, I sent my little boy to ask if Mr. Ross would give me the dates; he came back and said Mr. Ross was not at home; so I said—"Go round and ask Tom to come round." He came round, and I asked him for the dates, and in his presence I wrote down the dates I forwarded to you.
538. Did you convey to any body else the fact that you had written me that letter? No, not to anybody living—not even to one of my own family.
539. Has young Ross admitted that he conveyed the information? (Mr. Williamson objected.)
540. Mr. Griffiths.] The question can be put in a different form. Have you any knowledge of anybody else conveying this information—had you had any conversation with anybody else about this matter?—
541. Chairman.] Have you any knowledge as to who conveyed the information to Mr. Melville, that you had written that letter? Yes.
542. Will you state it? Young Ross conveyed it.
543. How do you arrive at that conclusion? There was no one else that knew of the matter. I went round to see Mr. Ross, to tell him what had transpired.
544. After you had written that letter? Yes. After that I had a conversation with Mr. Melville on the Thursday, and Mr. Melville told me that all the time he had some one on the track who knew all that we were doing. So I went round to Mr. Ross and told him I wanted Tom. I told him what had transpired. I said I had sent round to him for the dates, and he said he never knew a word of it. "No," I said, "you were not in, but I sent round for Tom, and he gave them to me." Mr. Ross then taxed Tom with having told Mr. Melville, and Tom said he had not seen Mr. Melville since Saturday night, but he said he had borrowed a coffin from Mr. Melville, and I said—"That is since Saturday night." Then his father said—"Now you have told him, Tom; do not deny it." His father said—"It is no use your denying it." I said—"There is not another living soul knew of it," and I said, "Tom, you are the chap that told of it," and Tom did not deny it. I was round near the glass-works to see a plasterer that works for me yesterday, and I saw young Ross at the door, and spoke to him in reference to the matter. He said—"Did you say that I told you that I told Mr. Melville?" I said—"No, Tom, I did not tell them anything about it." I do not think I mentioned his name to the Committee. But I said—"Tom, you know you were guilty, and you did not deny it." "Well," he said, "that is a different thing to saying I told you I told Mr. Melville." I said—"Yes, it is a different affair altogether."
545. Is that all that transpired? I believe so.
546. Mr. Griffiths.] What do you mean by borrowing a coffin? From what I can make out, there is a band some of Mr. Melville's apprentices and young Ross were connected with, and they were going to have some dramatic performance, for which young Ross came to Mr. Melville and borrowed this coffin.
547. For stage purposes? Something in that way.
548. Mr. Luscombe.] When young Ross borrowed the coffin from Mr. Melville did he call himself personally? Yes, he told me so.
549. Young Ross told you that he borrowed it personally from Mr. Melville? Yes.
550. Did Mr. McElhone, at the time he spoke to you about the £400 which the Government paid for this land, convey to you that Mr. Melville had paid any of the clerks in the Government Departments any money? Yes.
551. Mr. McElhone did? No, Mr. McElhone said he had made inquiries, and Mr. Ross stated that he could not think of the clerk's name that Mr. Melville mentioned to him; so Mr. McElhone gave me a list of names to show him.
552. Chairman.] Have you that list? No, I have mislaid it. Mr. McElhone gave me the list and said—"You can submit that to Mr. Ross and ask him if it was either of those names"; so I saw Mr. Ross in the course of a day or two, and showed him the list of names, but he said he could not think of the name; he could not say whether it was one of those names or whether it was not.
553. You cannot produce this paper with the names on it? No, I have mislaid it.
554. Mr. Griffiths.] Are you positive you got the list from Mr. McElhone? Yes.
555. Chairman.] How many names were there? Five or six; there were the names of those who had to do with the valuation and the other part of the work connected with the land, stating what each man had to do.
556. Mr. Williamson.] You were well aware of all the facts of the case previously? All the facts of the case when I was examined previously, yes, just as well as I am now.
557. Did you on that occasion make use of any of the information you have given on this occasion? No, I was not asked.
558. Were you not asked by the Chairman to detail or explain or inform the Committee all you knew about it? I may have been.
559. Did you on that occasion disclose all you knew? No, I stated the case as far as it came to my mind.
560. My question is, did you disclose all you knew? No, I was not asked for it; I have been asked for it to-day.
561. Did any person stop you? No.
562. Were you not invited by the Chairman to bring all the papers you have to-day, in regard to this case? Yes.
563. Did you not give the Chairman to understand that you had a declaration—another declaration? No, that is a mistake; not another declaration; if I said declaration it was a mistake.
564. Rough copy of a declaration? Yes, I believe I said so.
565. And also a paper with five or six names of clerks upon it? Yes.
566. What has become of that? It is mislaid.

Mr.
J. H. Beale,
25 Sept., 1885.

567. Who mislaid it—did you mislay it yourself? I expect I did; nobody else did it.
568. Look at that document—that is the original declaration in this matter. Yes.
569. Give me the date of it? May, 1885.
570. You have stated here to-day that that was written down from the facts stated by Mr. Ross? Yes.
571. That is true? Yes.
572. Will you swear it was not copied from that? Yes, as I said just now, this is what he did write; I remarked that as soon as I saw the paper.
573. Have you not stated that Mr. Ross dictated this, and it was written from his dictation? This is a copy from this.
574. Have you not stated to the Committee that Mr. Ross dictated this document and young Mr. Ross wrote it from his dictation? He dictated these words, and then it was written off on to this.
575. Were you present when that declaration was written? Yes, I was present when it was written, but there is another one of that sort yet.
576. There is no other declaration; is that the document you speak of? There is another paper that Tom Ross wrote on one of their bill-heads; there is a statement there about the wheels being greased; that was revised, and then it was written off on this.
577. Were there three documents in existence? There were four, I think: one I brought to-day, one that Mr. McElhone wrote out, one that Tom Ross wrote out, and his father revised before writing it out to go before a Justice of the Peace to make the declaration.
578. Mr. Chapman.] Out of the four one was adopted? Yes.
579. Mr. Williamson.] Is this the one (showing the witness a paper folded); do you see the writing on that—do you see that document there? Yes, but what is inside of it? let me see it and I will tell you which it is.
580. I will not allow you to see it, sir. Will you swear that this is the document that Tom Ross wrote? I will not swear to a thing I am not allowed to see.
581. Is that the document written by Tom Ross? I do not know unless I see the inside; I might be able to tell you then.
582. Had you a fourth document? This is the fourth; this is the last; this is the document Tom Ross wrote out to be sworn before a Justice of the Peace.
583. Is there any other document? In the way of declaration, not that I am aware of.
584. When was that document written? I am not certain as to the date.
585. Was it night or day? I am not certain whether it was evening or day; I think it was about half-past 6 o'clock.
586. You do not know? No.
587. I ask you again, keeping to the signed declaration, was that document dictated by Thomas Ross's father to him, and written as he dictated? Yes, and corrected.
588. That document there? This was written off another one.
589. Was that document written from verbal dictation, or off another document? This is a revised document; I told you there were four documents; that is the first one, the one I brought to-day.
590. Who wrote the document that that was revised from or copied from? Young Ross.
591. Are you sure of that? Yes.
592. Read that now (the paper previously shown to witness folded)? Yes, I do not know whether it was copied from this.
593. Will you swear that is Mr. McElhone's writing? No.
594. Will you swear it is Tom Ross's writing? No; neither will I swear this was copied from this.*
595. Have you seen Mr. McElhone since this inquiry began? No.
596. Have you seen any other person on this subject since this inquiry began? I do not know what you mean by any other person, because it is the talk of the city. If you mention any particular person I will tell you.
597. Have you seen anybody? Who do you mean by anybody?—State something definitely and I will answer you.
598. Chairman.] Have you seen Mr. Melville? Mr. Melville came outside the door to me after the last occasion, and he said—"You spoke the truth; you are a better man than I thought you were." I have not seen Mr. McElhone, if that is what you want to know; I have not seen Mr. Ross; I have not seen Mr. Abigail; I told you I saw Tom Ross yesterday as I was going round for the plasterer who is working for me.
599. Mr. Williamson.] What did you speak to Tom Ross about since Friday last—did you tell Tom Ross anything about sinking the ship, or anything like that? No, I never mentioned such a word to him or to anybody else.
600. Was anything said to any person in your presence to the effect that Tom Ross had spoiled the whole affair? No.
601. Nor that he had opened his mouth too wide? When I spoke to his father in his presence he said to his son those words, as near as I can recollect.
602. Chairman.] Was that since the inquiry began? No, not since the inquiry began.
603. Mr. Williamson.] Since the matter was before the House? Yes, since it was mentioned in the House by Mr. Melville. Since this inquiry I have not seen anybody; I have seen no one since I left here on Wednesday; I have seen no one to speak to, only young Ross yesterday morning, and I gave you the conversation.
604. Since it has been before the House what was your conversation with Tom Ross and his father? I think I told you in the first place I went round and told him I wanted to see him and to see Tom.
605. About opening his mouth too wide? I taxed Tom in the presence of his father with having taken information to Mr. Melville, and Tom said he had not seen him, and I said—"Tom, it is no use denying it; there is not another living soul but you knows anything about it."
606. Did Mr. Ross say anything to his son about opening his mouth too wide? I believe he said—"Tom, as straight as a telegraph wire it was you who conveyed the news," and Tom did not deny it; his father said—"As it happens there is no harm done, but be careful."†

* ADDED (on revision):—The declaration was copied from one dictated by Mr. Ross in my presence.

† ADDED (on revision):—I said—"Not that it matters, but you should not allow Melville or any one to get your father's business out of you, so be careful in future."

- Mr. J. H. Beale.
25 Sept., 1885.
607. Chairman.] The father charged him—not you? The father charged him; he said—“As straight as a telegraph wire it was you who did it.”
608. Mr. Hammond.] Who used the remark, “going against his own flesh and blood”? I recollect something of the remark; I believe I said—“It is strange when you cannot trust your own flesh and blood.” I made that remark, and I must say I thought it was rather strange for this young man to divulge his father’s secrets. As far as I am concerned I have made no secret of it.
609. Mr. Williamson.] The signed declaration, was that written on the day it was signed or not? I do not know.
610. You were there when it was made? No; I think it was drawn out for Mr. Ross to make the declaration himself.
611. Did you go to Mr. M’Coy with Mr. McElhone to get that declaration made by Mr. Ross? I saw Mr. McElhone at Mr. M’Coy’s place of business; I met Mr. McElhone and others there, and we were speaking of electioneering matters and other things.
612. Was it written there that day? No, I think it was written the evening before.
613. Dr. Ross.] In reality you cannot positively say when it was written? Not as to the date of it.
614. Did you not see it written? Yes, it was copied off on the evening before I saw Mr. McElhone at Mr. M’Coy’s shop in the morning.
615. Have you ever seen it before to-day? Yes, I believe I did.
616. When was the last time you saw it before you saw it here? At Mr. Ross’s place.
617. When was that? I would not say anything as to dates—I am not certain about dates.
618. You are quite positive you have seen that declaration before you saw it here? Yes.
619. Mr. McElhone was present when it was made? Mr. Ross told me that he went to Mr. M’Coy’s shop, and Mr. M’Coy was not in, and then he went to the Town Hall and got him to sign it there.
620. Chairman.] Were you present when he signed it? No, I was not.
621. Mr. Lascombe.] Can you get the document with the names of the clerks given to you by Mr. McElhone? I will try to find it.
622. Can you tell the names? There were two or three names that were very familiar to me, because it occurred to me at the time that they were related to Members of Parliament. I know Byrnes was one name; he is the Valuator, I believe. The paper, I believe, stated that the business was transacted in the Railway Department, and what each man had to do with the case. Mr. McElhone’s suggestion was, that I should take the list to Mr. Ross, to see if he could identify any of the names.
623. Chairman.] Did he do so? No, he said he could not think of the name.*†

Mr. William Charles Hadley Lippman called in and examined:—

- Mr. W. C. H. Lippman.
25 Sept., 1885.
624. Chairman.] What position do you hold? Yesterday I was acting for the Manager at Newtown; to-day I am the Manager at Kogarah.
625. In what Bank? Bank of Australasia.
626. Do you know anything of that cheque (handing cheque to witness) having passed through the Bank? Yes, I recognize this cheque.
627. Can you tell us when that cheque was presented and paid? By the perforation it represents the 10th of the second month of 1883.
628. What is the date of that cheque? It might be taken for anything—“Fr.” or “Nr.” If this cheque came before me, if I was in charge of the Bank, I should take it for the month it was paid in.
629. February? Yes.
630. Do you ever have cheques presented that have been floating for eight months? Yes, occasionally, but it is rather a rare case.
631. Mr. Griffiths.] You have said that cheque was paid on 10/2/83; how do you arrive at 1883; might it have been 1884? I happen to be acquainted with the drawer’s figures, and I can judge by that.
632. You are sure it was paid on the 10th of the second month of 1883? Yes.
633. You are sure by other circumstances that it was paid in February, 1883, not 1884? Yes, I am sure by other circumstances.
634. On 10/2/83 that cheque was paid? Yes.
635. There is nothing on the back of the cheque to show in what manner it was paid? Yes, there is.
636. Was cash paid for it? No, it was paid in to somebody’s account.
637. Somebody who kept an account at your Bank; it does not seem to have gone through any other Bank? It was not exactly somebody—it was an organization or body; it did not go to any personal account.
638. Whose account? The Newtown Borough Council.
639. They kept their account with you? Yes.
640. Dr. Ross.] Did you ever see Mr. Ross at the Bank during Mr. Bruford’s management? Yes, I dare say I saw him three or four times a week.
641. Are you aware whether Mr. Bruford ever drew a cheque in respect to this matter? No.
642. Is the handwriting that of any officer of the Bank? No, I take it to be the writing of Mr. Joseph Ross.
643. Mr. Hammond.] Will your books prove when that cheque passed through your Bank? Yes.
644. Was it 1883 or 1884? 1883.

Mr. Jesse Cowley called in and examined:—

- Mr. J. Cowley.
25 Sept., 1885.
645. Chairman.] What position do you hold? Council Clerk of Newtown.
646. Do you know anything about that cheque? I cannot tell you anything about it from looking at it. 647.

* ADDED (on revision):—And he had not seen the men in the office, as Melville left him outside when he went to the office with him.

† I may here state that part of my evidence has been omitted, wherein I stated that Mr. Melville had threatened me for the action I had taken in this matter; and as a witness under threat I protest against this omission, and if persisted in I shall appeal to the Press.—J. H. BEALE.

Mr.
J. Cowley.
25 Sept., 1885.

647. Did Mr. Melville ask you to cash that cheque? Yes, I believe he did; I am not sure whether this is the cheque or not; I only know that Mr. Melville did get a cheque from Mr. Ross; at least he said so to me; he brought it to me and asked me to cash it.
648. Was the amount as represented there? Yes, £25. In my banking account I find it was paid in in February; I only had it in my possession one night; the Bank has shown me the slip since, and it is dated February, either the 10th or 11th February.
649. Mr. Hammond.] 1883? Yes, 1883; it does not stand so in my book, but the slip shows that.
650. Chairman.] Did you cash more than one cheque for Mr. Melville? Only one cheque for £25.
651. Did Mr. Melville make any special request as to how the cash was to be given him? No; he simply said—"Mr. Ross has given me that cheque, and I have got all that land matter settled." We were trying to get the Government to resume the whole of that land. He said—"They refuse to take the whole of the land; they have only got a piece of it."
652. He said Mr. Ross had given him this £25, and he had got the land matter settled? Yes. He was Mayor of Newtown, and we had been corresponding with the Government about Trafalgar-terrace, the frontage of this land, for over twelve months.
653. Did Mr. Melville give you any intimation of his intention as to the disposal of that money? No. To the best of my recollection I said—"How will you take it—in notes?" he said, "Yes"; and I gave him notes—all one pound notes.
654. Did you go to the Bank and get the cash? No, I had the money in the cash-box, and I paid the cheque in to the account of the Council.
655. He spoke to you openly as to his having got this cheque from Mr. Ross for services rendered? He did not say services rendered, but I knew what Mr. Ross wanted him for. We were going to sue Ross for rates at the time.
656. You understood that the land matter had been finally settled, and that Mr. Melville got this cheque for finally settling the matter? I do not know that he said finally.
657. Mr. Chapman.] If I understood you right, he said—"Here is a cheque for £25 I have got from Mr. Ross; I have got that land matter settled"? Yes; I understood it was for his agency in the matter.
658. Did he hand you this cheque in his capacity as Mayor? No. I saw Mr. Ross and the Mayor about a quarter of an hour previously in the Mayor's room, and when Mr. Melville came down he gave me this cheque, but did not take the cash till the next morning.
659. Dr. Ross.] As a business transaction, how did it come about that he gave you the cheque? I do not know what Mr. Melville's motive was in giving me the cheque.
660. Did it strike you as strange? No, I do it very often; after the Bank is closed people come to me and get money from me for cheques.
661. Was any portion of this money taken off the cheque for rates? No.
662. How long was it from the time you received the cheque until you gave Mr. Melville the cash? The next morning.
663. What time did you receive the cheque? Between 3 and 4 o'clock; he could have had the money then if he liked, because I had it in the box.
664. No portion of that money was taken off for any purpose? No.
665. Mr. Luscombe.] As far as I can understand, you simply changed the cheque for him as a friend? Yes.
666. You received this cheque on one day and paid it into the Bank the next day? Yes, I am pretty well sure of it.
667. It was not two or three days? No; I know it was paid into the Bank the next morning.
668. Mr. Hammond.] Is it not the custom of the Bank to refuse to cash a crossed cheque? Yes, as a rule; sometimes I have crossed a cheque myself in mistake for a contractor, and have gone over and got the money for the man.
669. A crossed cheque must be paid in to an account? Yes.
670. Is it not the fact that many persons who have no Bank accounts get others who have to cash cheques for them? Yes, I have often done it for people I know.
671. Mr. Griffiths.] Was it a new cheque when you cashed it? I could not remember that.
672. You saw Mr. Ross and Mr. Melville in conversation shortly before? Yes, about a quarter of an hour or twenty minutes.
673. Have you reason to believe that this cheque was given at that interview? I can only come to that conclusion because it was given to me that afternoon.
674. Mr. Williamson.] When Mr. Ross and Mr. Melville were coming downstairs together, did you not see the cheque in Mr. Melville's hand? I could not say whether he had it in his hand or not; he came straight downstairs, when Mr. Ross went out, and gave me the cheque.
675. Did he tell you what Mr. Ross had given it him for? He did not say what he had given it him for; he said—"Will you cash this cheque for me? that land matter is settled now."
676. Can you say in what position the cheque was in Mr. Melville's hands? It was not folded—it was open.
677. Have you had any experience of Mr. Ross's handwriting? I have seen it two or three times. This looks very much like it.
678. Were these holes in the cheque when you got it? I could not say; I just saw that it was Mr. Ross's cheque, and that is all.
679. But you are quite sure Mr. Melville said something about the land matter being settled? Yes, I am quite sure of that.
680. Was the word "resumption" used? No, I do not recollect that.
681. Chairman.] Do you know if Mr. Melville had at that time a banking account? I could not say.
682. Did he ever ask you to cash a cheque before that? No.
683. Ever since? Never since that I know of.
684. You say you had a good deal of correspondence with the Government about the proposed resumption of a portion of Trafalgar-terrace? Yes.
685. That was on behalf of the Council? Yes.
686. Did you receive any remuneration for what you did, except salary as Clerk of the Council? No.
687. Mr. Williamson.] You knew that Mr. Ross and the Government were in communication about the resumption? I knew that the land belonged to Mr. Ross, and that the Government were going to resume it.

WEDNESDAY,

WEDNESDAY, 30 SEPTEMBER, 1885.

Present:—

Mr. GRIFFITHS,
Mr. ROSS,Mr. LUSCOMBE,
Mr. MELVILLE,

Mr. DE SALIS.

FRANCIS ABIGAIL, Esq., IN THE CHAIR.

Mr. John Williamson appeared as Solicitor for Mr. Melville.

Mr. Michael Ambrose O'Brien sworn and examined:—

- Mr. M. A. O'Brien.
30 Sept., 1885.
688. Chairman.] What position do you hold? That of clerk.
689. In what Department? The Record Branch of the Railways Department.
690. Have you anything to do with the resumption of land by the Government? I have the recording of claims, and the forwarding of them to the Land Valuer and to the other branches in which they are being dealt with.
691. Have you any knowledge of a claim made by Mr. Ross, of Australia-street, Camperdown? Yes.
692. What do you know about it—tell the Committee? I received the claim on the 1st March, 1883.
693. Is that the first intimation you had of it? Yes, of that claim of £400. I received the claim for the purpose of having it recorded in the Department. The amount was £400. The claim was forwarded to the Land Valuer for valuation on the 9th March, 1883. The valuation of the Land Valuer was £448 16s. The area taken was 9½ perches. The Land Valuer's valuation was placed in a schedule and forwarded to the Executive Council on 15th March for approval. The Executive Council approved of the valuation on the 22nd May, 1883. After this the offer of £400 was made to Mr. Ross, on the 1st June, 1883.
694. On the 1st June a letter was sent direct to Mr. Ross offering him £400 for the land? —
695. Can you say that it went direct to Mr. Ross? I believe it was forwarded direct to him. I cannot say from memory whether it was addressed to him or served personally on the 21st June, 1883. Messrs. Norton & Smith forwarded an abstract of title, which is tantamount to an acceptance by Mr. Ross of the amount offered. Instructions for the preparation of a conveyance were sent to the Crown Solicitor on the 23rd August, 1883. The Crown Solicitor forwarded to the Commissioner the transfer for his signature, and the plan to be placed there, on the 8th October, 1883. These are the dates of the letters as I received them and entered them in the book. The transfer was returned to the Crown Solicitor with the plan and the Commissioner's signature on the 31st October, 1883, and the Crown Solicitor certified to the payment of the money on the 17th December, 1883.
696. Were you seen in reference to this matter by any person outside the Government officials? No.
697. Then you know nothing about the transaction except what is disclosed by the papers? No, except that on the day before the meeting of Parliament this session the Chief Clerk directed me to give Mr. Melville information as to the date of payment.
698. What transpired? I gave him the date of the claims and of the payment. My duties in connection with the claims are in forwarding the papers from one branch to another.
699. You could not facilitate the matter in any way? No.
700. Mr. Griffiths.] The Land Valuer's valuation was £448 16s. Od., including 10 per cent. for forced sale? Yes, I believe so.
701. You never saw Mr. Melville before the meeting of Parliament in this matter? No.
702. He never was at the office to your knowledge? People would go to the Commissioner, Secretary, or Chief Clerk to know about papers.
703. That was not done by Mr. Melville to your knowledge? No.
704. Any other person in the office has access to these books? Yes, any person in the room has access to them.
705. Information from them could be obtained during your temporary absence? Yes; or it could be obtained from the Land Valuator.
706. He has similar records? Yes, as to the state of the valuations, and as to how the valuation is computed.
707. If a person wished to expedite the settlement of a purchase such as this, would you be the person to see? No; I could only say where the papers were, whether in the office of the Land Valuator, the Executive Council, or of the Crown Solicitor.
708. You have held this position for some time? About five years.
709. Dr. Ross.] Did this claim percolate in the usual way through the offices, or was it assisted in its progress by Mr. Melville's application? No, it went through the usual course.
710. You spoke in reference to the original claim: can you tell me what that claim amounted to—you said Mr. Ross put in a claim, what was it? It was for £400.
711. No other claim was put in for £300? No; there were four claims altogether—one from a man named Vale, another by a man named French, one by a man named Crane, and one by Ross, for lauds adjoining taken for the same purpose. These four claims were received at the same time and dealt with about the same time.
712. Mr. Griffiths.] These parties received payment about the same time? I think the others received payment before Ross, which would go to show that there was no indecent haste in bringing Ross's claim to a settlement.
713. Dr. Ross.] Who valued this claim? Mr. Byrnes, the Government Valuator.
714. Did any other person value it at a lesser sum? No; I think that is the only valuation that has been made.
715. Mr. Teeco.] I understood you to say that the claim was sent to the Government Valuator on the 9th March, and returned on the 15th? Yes.
716. Could you produce the whole papers in the transaction? Yes; as soon as I received it on the 15th, it passed through the Public Works Office on its way to the Executive Council.
717. Mr. Luscombe.] You say the Valuator valued the land at £448 16s., and that £400 was accepted and paid? Yes.
718. Was any other sum paid to any other person? Certainly not.

719. Then to whom was the £400 paid? On the certificate of the Crown Solicitor it was paid to Messrs. Norton & Smith, solicitors for Ross.
720. You are sure that the £400 was the only amount paid? Yes; except the costs of the solicitors for preparing the abstract of title.
721. Mr. Williamson.] Do you produce the Crown Solicitor's certificate? No.
722. Do you occupy the same rooms or apartments as Mr. Byrnes who has the conduct of the business? No.
723. Could not any person go there for information to one of your brother clerks, and you not be aware of the outside individual inquirer? Yes, certainly.
724. Have you been offered by any person any fee or reward to expedite the work? No.
725. Either directly or indirectly? No; it would not be in my power to expedite it.
726. Sometimes delays occur between your office and other Departments? Yes.
727. Have you not known a delay of two months? Yes.
728. And more? And more.
729. Do you know from practical experience that, in order to keep things moving, your Department must be often reminded? Yes.
730. You are aware of your own knowledge that persons visit them to ascertain where delay arises, and that by their going these persons expedite the business? I am not sure on that point; very often the delay occurs on the part of the claimant or the claimant's solicitor.
731. Sometimes does it not occur for want of valuation—for want of attention by the Crown Solicitor, owing to the pressure of other business? Yes.
732. No one can certify for the Crown Solicitor? One of his clerks has certified on his behalf.
733. Can you state one case? Not from memory. I know Mr. Stafford does sometimes certify for the Crown Solicitor. I had occasion myself to draw attention to the matter.
734. You cannot say that Mr. Stafford certified in this case? No.
735. Does not delay often occur from not having plans and other documents annexed to the conveyance? Yes, sometimes there is delay of that kind, owing to claims being dealt with in the order in which they are received.
736. Did Mr. McElhono never see you on this subject? No.
737. Chairman.] Did any one else see you except Mr. Melville? No.
738. Mr. Williamson.] In speaking of the certificate of the Crown Solicitor, was it for £400 or for £448 16s.? It was for £400.
739. Is it not the practice, in cases of resumption, for your Department to send to the claimant a statement of the value as estimated? No; they first serve him with notice and furnish him at the same time with a form upon which to make his claim.
740. Then the Valuator goes out and forms his valuation? Yes.
741. Does the claimant get any notice of that? No, not until there is a formal approval by the Executive Council.
742. Did Mr. Ross get any notice after the valuation that the amount was £448 16s.? No.
743. Chairman.] Can you say of your own knowledge that no influence was used to push this matter through? There was none to my knowledge. In cases where delays have occurred, and where the claimant wanted to expedite payment, they have sometimes waited on the Secretary or Commissioner, and the reason of the delay is asked for.
744. That is the general mode? Yes; the paper would be forwarded to the Land Valuator, and a letter to the Crown Solicitor to ascertain the causes of the delay; but that has not been done in this case, or in either of the three cases of claims made at the same time.

Mr. Henry Gorman sworn and examined:—

745. Chairman.] You are a land auctioneer? I am.
746. Can you tell us whether you valued a piece of land at Newtown for Mr. Ross, resumed by the Government in 1883? Yes, I did, for £300.
747. Did Mr. Ross pay you for that valuation? It is charged in his account.
748. When you made that valuation, did you consider £300 a fair price for it in the then state of the market? Yes.
749. Mr. Griffiths.] Does that include the 10 per cent. for forced resumption? The £300 was all the amount he was to receive.
750. Then that sum included the 10 per cent? Yes.
751. Do you know the area of the land? I forget it just now; it was a portion of allotments resumed by the Government for railway purposes.
752. Chairman.] You had the Government notice? Yes.
753. Dr. Ross.] Do you think that if the land was valued at £400 it would be an exorbitant price? No, I should not say that positively—it is a difficult thing to determine; in that position I estimated the land at the value I have stated.
754. At the time you thought it was honestly worth £300 or more? Yes.
755. Mr. Teeco.] I suppose you are frequently in the habit of making valuations of land resumed for railway purposes? Almost daily. I do not value for the Government but for private individuals.
756. Does the Commissioner generally have to pay more than the value you adjudge? No.
757. Mr. Luscombe.] Can you tell us the date of your valuation? In the early part of 1883—February I should think.
758. Was that Mr. Ross's interest or the interest of all persons in that particular piece of land? It was the value of that particular piece of land.
759. Irrespective of who was the owner? Yes.
760. Mr. Williamson.] You settled up the proceeds from that land with Mr. Ross? Yes, so far as I am aware.
761. You gave Mr. Ross all the information he desired? Yes, I never heard to the contrary; I suppose therefore that he was pleased.

Mr.
H. Gorman.
30 Sept., 1885.

Mr.
H. Gorman,
30 Sept., 1885.

762. Did you furnish him with an account? Yes.
763. You have no doubt of that in your mind? Certainly not.
764. Knowing as you do the land in question, do you think £400 was the value, or more than the value, taking into consideration the injury the resumption did to other parts of the land? I valued it at £300, taking all things into consideration.
765. Did the resumption of that land take off a right-of-way from any portion of the other allotments? It took away a portion of the frontage. I should not wonder if others valued the land at £100 more than I did.
766. Did you ever personally see Mr. Ross about the time of settlement? Yes, he used to come to the office every week, being anxious to have the thing settled.
767. You always gave him the information he desired as to the sale of this property? I have no doubt if he wanted information and asked for it that it was given.
768. Was there to be more than one payment? Yes, lots of payments; bills were flung about and I took them up at his request. I offered to do this because I knew he was a needy man.
769. You had to do his business? I do not know.
770. It is not your business to take up his bills? I may make it part of my business.
771. Can you say of your own knowledge what was the date of the final cheque received by Mr. Ross? It was at the end of 1883 or beginning of 1884.
772. What month? I could not positively say; he had a running account. I believe I settled up with him, as far as I can remember, in October, 1883. I was the mortgagee.
773. Would it not be to your advantage to value the land as high as possible for your security? Yes, but I was content to value it fairly. The mortgage did not stand in my name, but in the name of my solicitors.
774. Chairman.] When you are called in by private individuals to value land, I suppose you do full justice to the individual? Unquestionably.

Ninian Melville, Esq., M.P., sworn and examined:—

N. Melville,
Esq., M.P.,
30 Sept., 1885.

775. Mr. Williamson.] You are a Member of the Parliament of New South Wales? I am.
776. Will you please inform the Committee, as briefly as you can, of your connection with this case; and first I would ask you how Mr. Ross came to employ you in this matter? He came to me in the latter part of 1882, as far as my memory serves me now—it would be October or November, 1882, or thereabouts. He told me that he had purchased a number of allotments near the railway, Newtown, and that the Government were about to resume some of that land. He was desirous of knowing whether the Government would take any portion of it, all of it, or none of it, as he wished to dispose of the remainder, and could not do so until the Government had decided what they would do; that he was unable himself to go about the various offices to get the matter completed; that he had asked Mr. Mitchell to see to it for him, but from the way in which he was then financially situated it was necessary for him that it should be completed speedily. I gave Mr. Ross to understand that as it was a matter in no way affecting my own constituents, and not in any way affecting my action or what I was to do in Parliament, that being a business matter in which he was monetarily interested—I should expect to be recompensed for my time.
777. Did he say anything of his financial position at that time? At that time and on all occasions when he saw me.
778. What words did he make use of? On more than one occasion he gave me to understand, and what he told me I knew from others, that his overdraft and everything at the Bank was stopped.
779. What took place? I, as a matter of business in his interest, interviewed the Heads of the Departments, called their attention to the fact, that the Municipal Council of Newtown, several Members of Parliament, as mentioned in debates, were of opinion that it was impossible for the railway goods traffic to be carried on for want of siding accommodation, and that in the interests of the general public, as well as in the interests of Mr. Ross, it was desirable as speedily as possible to decide on the portion of land they were going to resume.
780. Did the Municipal Council take any steps in the matter with regard to that? The steps taken by the Council were these: There is a street immediately alongside the railway, which part of the land faces, known as Trafalgar-terrace. I and my predecessors, as Mayors of the Borough (I was Mayor then) and the Council, in consequence of several discussions, were willing to have given the Government the whole of that street upon their giving another street which was further west, as far as my memory serves me. We complained repeatedly to the Government that the wood and other materials were being thrown on this street, and ought to be taken away. Of my own knowledge I knew at one time that the Department had almost decided on removing the Station-master's house, which had cost nearly £1,000 or thereabouts. About the end of January, Mr. Ross, as also the Council, received an official intimation that the Government, through their officers, had resumed a certain portion of land, making offers to the Council (I can produce the letter) to kerb and gutter, or to divert Trafalgar-terrace, leaving the new Trafalgar-terrace finished with kerbing, guttering, and so forth; to which terms the Council acceded, and allowed the Government to take a portion of the street that intervened between this street and the land they were resuming. On or about the 8th February, Mr. Ross came to me at my office in the Town Hall, Newtown, and, after a conversation with regard to this matter—I may here say that I saw Mr. Ross every day, sometimes twice a day in this matter—and after some remarks as to what he considered a fair value for the land taken from him, and the probabilities as to the length of time it would take to complete the whole matter from the resumption, he gave me a cheque for £25. I having a short time previously reminded him that I had undertaken this absolutely as an agent, and that whatever remuneration he was going to give me for the time I had lost, and any time which I might lose, I should be glad if he would give me the cost. This was on the 8th February, 1883.
781. And at no other time? No.
782. Did you receive that cheque for any other purpose than as an agent for expediting his business? Certainly not.
783. Have you been in the habit of acting for persons? Yes.
784. Have you any agency in existence now? Yes, at Wallsend, where it is known that Mr. Thomas Fryar

- Fryar receives for me any matters that may be left with him, or notifications that need to be attended to. I have mentioned to other persons that I have done this sort of business.
785. With regard to the cheque, what fixed the particulars of that affair in your mind—was there anything particular going at that time? Yes; being Mayor of Newtown, I was busy making arrangements for the elections of aldermen on the following Saturday.
786. That occurred about this date? It occurred at that time—the elections were on the 10th, and the nominations on the Tuesday prior to that day.
787. What did you do with the cheque? Without putting it in my pocket I came downstairs, and was about to come to the Assembly, when I thought it best to give it to Mr. Cowley, the Council Clerk.
788. Was Mr. Cowley in the habit of cashing cheques for you? It was a frequent occurrence for him to cash money cheques and others for me.
789. Did you ever receive a cheque and make use of the words “for the purpose of greasing the wheels”? No, certainly not; it is a phrase I am not in the habit of using in any circumstances.
790. Did you at any time offer to pay any Government official directly or indirectly in this matter? No; not at any time during the whole course of my life, and I say so without the slightest reservation.
791. Did you ever promise to give anything in any way for the purpose of getting the assistance of the public servants? At no time and under no circumstance have I ever given or offered or promised them anything.
792. Did you use your endeavours for the expediting of this business, by making inquiries and the like? I certainly did; I not only made inquiries, but made the Heads of Departments who had to deal with the matter acquainted with the financial condition of Mr. Ross, and the necessity for a speedy completion of the business.
793. Who were the Heads of the various Departments you saw? Mr. Byrnes was chiefly the one.
794. He is the Head of the Department? Yes.
795. He is the principal? Yes.
796. Did you see any other person? Yes; I think I spoke to the Minister for Works about the necessity of its being completed.
797. And you believe that by your perseverance you got the matter expedited? I have reason to believe that up to a certain time I did; I ceased to act at a certain time.
798. Did you receive moneys for this matter? Certainly not.
799. Had you anything to do with receiving the amount when the matter was settled? No. It occurred in this way—some time previous (I cannot distinctly say how long, as this is three years ago) Mr. Ross came to me and said “Messrs. Norton & Smith, solicitors, want to see you;” I said “What about, Mr. Ross?” he said “That land business;” I then said “What do they want to see me for?” he said “They want to get the money;” I said “The money comes to you, does it not?” he said “I have got—and suffered with the whole affair, and I have transferred all my interest, and they have to get the money.” I replied “If that is the case, let them go and attend to their own business.”
800. As far as you individually know, you are not aware who received the money? I do not know who received the money. I made Mr. Ross aware before that of the fact that there was generally an allowance of 10 per cent. on forced sales, to which he was entitled, which would make £440. The £8 16s. must be made up in law expenses or something of that kind.
801. Are there any other circumstances you recollect in connection with this matter—the name of Thomas Ross has been mentioned? That was the last I heard of it for some time.
802. Was there any matter before Thomas Ross's matter came on the board? Yes; on the opening of Parliament on the 8th March, from information I received I became aware that Mr. McElhone, Mr. Beale, and Mr. Sparkes had been to Mr. Ross on the previous Saturday night, and had procured a statement from him that I had sold to the Government a piece of land. It purported to be a statement from him that I had sold to the Government a piece of land for £600, he receiving £400, and that I kept the other £200. I saw them in company on the previous Saturday night on the Newtown Road. The following day (Wednesday) I observed Mr. McElhone enter the Assembly; he then went to the back balcony near the smoking-room, and I followed him up.
803. That was the day on which the House met? The day after. I then told him the facts of the case as I have told them to-day, remarking to him that now he had both sides if he chose he could go on.
804. What was the result? He said—“I saw Old Ross on Saturday night, and he told me about the same that you have, and there is nothing in the damned thing.” I heard no more of it till the afternoon of the 5th or 6th May, I fancy it was the 6th, Mr. Luscombe called into my shop, and, after some conversation about matters affecting constituencies, he said to me—“I am going to Ross for a subscription to the Protection League.” I walked down the road with him, my residence lying that way, but instead of going home I continued the conversation, and walked with him to Ross's. The conversation lasted some time (Ross being at home) about various matters. Mr. Luscombe having spoken about the League, I said—“Mr. Ross, have you seen anything of these people (those recently referred to, Sparkes and Beale)?” He replied, “Yes, they were here last night.”
805. Where did this conversation take place? In his own house. Before that he said this—“I thought that is what you had come here about.” He then said—“Yes, they were here last night, and drew up a declaration;” I said—“Do you remember what is in the declaration?” he said—“No, but they wanted me to put in the words ‘greasing the wheels,’ but I would not do it.” He said—“I have just come back from signing it; I had an appointment with them this morning, and would not go at the appointed time, but went when I knew they would not be there, because I am tired of being bothered by them.”
806. This took place before the matter was brought forward in the Assembly? Yes; on the day that the declaration was signed.
807. Chairman.] Do you remember the date? I think it was the 6th May.
808. Mr. Williamson.] What other information did you receive? I received information that Mr. Beale had been several times at Ross's for a cheque, and Mr. Ross himself told me that he had got the cheque out of the Bank, and had given it to Beale's boy.
809. Is that the cheque which has been before the Select Committee? Yes, it is the only cheque I have received in the matter. Many persons met me in and about the city and told me that a serious charge of corruption was to be brought against me in the Assembly. A short time before the opening of the Session I received information that a copy of that declaration was in existence. Coming down Australia-street

- street one night (I suppose a fortnight or three weeks before Parliament opened this Session) I met Mr. Thomas Ross casually—not by appointment—and then, for the first time, a conversation took place between him and myself with reference to this matter.
810. Did you receive any further information before that? Yes; I had received information as to the existence of the copy of the declaration and the other matters mentioned.
811. But not from Thomas Ross? No. A conversation ensued with reference to the case in consequence of a paragraph which had appeared in the Bulletin newspaper.
812. Was your attention called to that paragraph? Yes, at a banquet I was attending. I purchased the paper next day, and found what I was told was correct. I then asked Thomas Ross if that was the substance of the declaration, or if he had seen the declaration.
813. Chairman.] What was contained in that paragraph? The paragraph purported to be a statement of the charge to be made against a Member of the Assembly when the House met.
814. Without mentioning any names? No names were mentioned, but there was a statement made in it which corresponded with the statement which I mentioned to Mr. McElhone.
815. Mr. Williamson.] What next took place? Thomas Ross told me that that was really what the declaration contained. He said the night they came there to get the declaration he was not in the room; that Mr. McElhone wrote it, and wanted his father to say the money was to "grease the wheels"; and that he had copied the declaration which was signed, and that "greasing the wheels" was not in the declaration so signed.
816. What next? The next time I saw Thomas Ross was in consequence of his having gone to my place of business on the Newtown Road, a new shop for the business of undertaking. He wanted the loan of a trimmed coffin for some farce they were performing. I was not at the shop when he called, and my young man refused to give him the coffin, thinking it sacrilege to use it for that purpose.
817. Did you see him afterwards? Yes. I had sent the coffin down. He came up after the performance to thank me for having lent it. He then told me that when Messrs. McElhone, Beale, and Sparkes were present and the declaration was drawn up, his father was told by Mr. McElhone that either by my stupidity, blundering, or something else, his father had lost £80, but if he signed this declaration it would tell where the £80 had gone.
818. Was this before the present inquiry? Yes, before the inquiry. About six weeks before Parliament met Mr. Ross and others opened a service in the Temperance Hall, Newtown, and a temperance lecturer came there. Mr. Ross came and invited me to take the Chair, as well as to subscribe to the funds. I wish also to say that I have never on any occasion when I have seen him (and I have seen him four times at the outside from March till now) in any way endeavoured, either myself or through any other person, to induce him to make any statement other than that which he is supposed to have made.
819. Have you asked any other person to do so? No.
820. Have you any doubt about the cheque? No doubt; there is but one.
821. Have you assisted Ross in business matters? Yes.
822. How many times? It would be hard for me to say. I assisted him by private and public business, as Mayor of Newtown when he was prosecuted through the Camperdown Council for an alleged nuisance by his glass-works. I attended the Police Court for several days until I was called in to give evidence, and when he was committed I attended the Supreme Court also to give evidence.
823. Have you received from Mr. Thomas Ross any information about his opening his mouth too wide since this inquiry has been in existence? No.
824. You are quite sure of that? Yes. I may mention that Thomas Ross told me before the inquiry that Mr. Beale came round to the works, and said they had not made the declaration strong enough.
825. But no conversation ensued between you about his opening his mouth too much? No.
826. He never told you that? No.
827. Have you any claim upon the balance of £48? No claim whatever upon it, nor upon the £400 either.
828. Chairman.] You have stated that it was a frequent thing for you to change cheques with Mr. Cowley? Yes.
829. Could you say how many? No.
830. You had a banking account at that time? Yes.
831. And if Mr. Cowley said you never exchanged cheques with him before it is not correct? He is making a mistake.
832. Can you explain that you, having a banking account, did not pass this cheque into your account? I have been trying to remember. The only solution I can give is this: I was coming into town, and turning on my heel I gave Mr. Cowley this cheque, and told him where I got it from, and said he would give me the money when I came back.
833. When did you receive the cash for the cheque? On the Saturday or Friday following—I do not remember which.
834. Mr. Fryar, you say, acted as your agent at Wallsend: does he receive moneys for you? I am prepared to give you any information in reference to the subject of this inquiry, but not on my private business.
835. You refuse to answer this question? I do not refuse.
836. You say in your examination-in-chief that Mr. Fryar acted as your agent, and received and sent business for you—he sent it to you to transact. Was that business transacted by you as an agent for which you received payment? Certainly.
837. And you will not say whether Mr. Fryar received the money for you or how you were paid. Do you collect the money for this Wallsend agency? Whatever moneys I receive for agency business I have received direct myself.
838. You said you were told that Beale had said £600 was to be received for the land, and that only £100 was received, and that you had £200? I said I was told that Mr. McElhone had been told that I had sold a piece of ground for £600, Ross receiving £400 and I receiving £200.
839. And you refuse to say who gave you that information? I do.
840. You produce a copy of the declaration? No; Mr. Ross produced it.
841. You visited both Mr. Byrnes and the Minister in the interests of this case to push it on? I certainly did.

N. Melville,
Esq., M.P.

30 Sept., 1885.

842. Mr. Griffiths.] Do you openly act as an agent in Newtown? No, not actually in Newtown, but it is a well-known fact that throughout my constituency, and even beyond, I have agencies. I had a matter from Hay years ago, and the person was going to Newcastle to look for me. I have had some business from other places. It was generally known that I had a land agency in my own constituency. It would perhaps not be true to say it is well known in Newtown; there I have a chair manufactory, and am also in business as an undertaker. But it is more generally known in my own constituency. My friends know I did such business. I found it the rule when I entered Parliament, and I think it is pretty general now.

843. Dr. Ross.] You say you have a banking account? Yes.

844. With regard to this £25 cheque, you gave it to the Council Clerk, and from him received the cash? I did.

845. Did you pay it away? I have endeavoured to remember what I did with the money, and I cannot positively tell you now. Whatever object I had in view in cashing it I cannot now say; it might have been to pay the money to the men, whom I always pay in cash. My pay-sheet was then larger than usual. But whatever my intention was—having gone in the meantime and attended to something else—I had changed my intention on the following Friday. What I actually did with the money, as a human being before my Maker, I say I cannot now tell.

846. You admit that you pay by cash? I pay my men by cash.

847. Other transactions by cheque? Yes.

848. You have heard Mr. Gorman's evidence to-day—that he put the valuation on the land at £300? Yes.

849. I think a notification was sent to Mr. Ross offering him £400 for the land? I think it would be correct in this way—Mr. Ross sent in a claim for £400.

850. Was not the land valued at £300? No. Before the claim was sent in he had consulted with his Bank Manager, who came to the conclusion that £400 would be a fair value. My advice to him was to send in to the Government a claim that was reasonable, as in this way the business would be facilitated in passing through the offices. He sent in a claim for £400, and by the fairness of the claim it was expedited.

851. Were your efforts in this case not to expedite it, but to increase the value from £300 to £400? Certainly not; I was not then aware that Mr. Gorman had made any valuation.

852. Your visits were not for the purpose of getting £100 more? No; to get the matter settled on what they had agreed on.

853. You heard the evidence of Mr. O'Brien as to the percolation of the business through the Departments—that it went through the usual routine; then you could not expedite it in any way? The dates prove conclusively that there was no undue facility; the four sets of claims were put through together in January. I do not say the Department put extra speed on, but the business was kept in its course without delay until it was completed.

854. The Minister and Mr. Byrnes were the parties you interviewed? They were the persons.

855. Any other persons? If my memory serves me correctly, I think I spoke to Mr. Goodchap about it.

856. Who did you see when you left Mr. Ross in the lobby? A clerk in the Works Department.

857. Will you give his name? I cannot.

858. Mr. Griffiths.] What date was this? I cannot give you the date; it was long after the cheque, about the time it was necessary for Mr. Ross to sign the transfer. I told Mr. Ross that the papers would be ready for him to sign the transfer, and that if he met me at Mr. Byrnes's office he would see when it was necessary to sign the papers; I went upstairs to see if Mr. Byrnes was in, and a young man said he was not in; I said to Mr. Ross, you will have to come another day, as Mr. Byrnes was not in; this is all that took place; I do not know a clerk in the Department by name who had to do with this matter; neither in that Department nor in any other Government Department have I ever offered, in person or otherwise, or under any circumstances, anything to officers or Heads of Departments.

859. You heard Mr. Beale's evidence—that on a certain day, and in a certain place, you said you would straighten him—is that true or false? I do not give a simple negative or simple affirmative answer to that.

860. What is your account of the affair? I was standing talking to Senior-constable Mulqueeny in a lane off Deni-on-street, and Mr. Beale was passing about 90 feet from the place where we were talking, when he called out, "Are you talking about me?" and "What is that you say about me?" with that crossing the green and coming over to me; the constable walked away, and as he did so Beale bade me good-day; he then began a conversation; I said this to him—"When this matter is settled it is my intention, if the evidence will bear it out, to straighten up those who have conspired to injure my character."

861. You stated that on a certain Saturday Mr. McElhone, Mr. Beale, and Mr. Sparkes went to Ross's: is it not a fact that you obtained this information from the younger Ross? No.

862. Could you obtain the information from any other source, none others being present? I know others who were present the night to which you refer—the Saturday night Mr. McElhone himself told me what then took place.

863. Mr. Luscombe.] When Ross first spoke to you about the land, did he promise to pay you for your services? Certainly; he said he would pay me for any time I lost. There was no sum stipulated at that time, either for the value of the land or for the time I lost in the negotiation.

864. Did Mr. Ross consent to pay you for any time you might devote to this business? He said he would.

865. Did he ever give you £5 to appear at Courts or public meetings? No.

866. Did he pay you any sum? No.

867. Do you regard this work of going to the Minister and to Mr. Byrnes as occupying part and parcel of the time for which you considered yourself paid? I consider that I was paid for the time I lost in seeing persons in the public offices.

868. I think I stated to you that I was going to Ross's about my Protection League as you walked down with me: do you recollect my speaking disparagingly of Beale or Sparkes? No.

869. Can you tell the Committee whether I appeared to be acquainted with the matter? In this conversation you appeared to have no knowledge of it.

870. In the presence of Ross, did I say anything disparagingly of these persons? Certainly not. The principal thing you said—and you said very little—was this, "Mr. Ross, this appears to have been a business transaction altogether"; and he said, "Yes, I could not do the business myself, and got Mr. Melville to do it."

- N. Melville,
Esq., M.P.
30 Sept., 1885.
871. Did I not tell him at that time that it was the first I had heard of the matter? Yes.
872. Chairman.] What is your knowledge of Mr. Ross's character? Mr. Ross's character at the present time and while he remains adherent to the principles he has adopted is good; but Mr. Ross unfortunately at various times has been the victim of causes that take hold of many people. As a rule I should think him excitable and inclined to be an erratic individual.
873. Untruthful? In business transactions I have found him truthful.
874. Honorable in business? Nothing else.
875. You have known him a long time—how many years? I should say fifteen years, but at various periods of that time I have known him to be utterly unreliable, so much so that you could not trust to anything he was doing.
876. Dr. Ross.] How often had you occasion to go to the Department? At least once a week.
877. For how many weeks? It began some time in November, 1882, and I ceased to have anything to do with it about July or August, 1883.
878. You had occasion to go almost every week? Yes; Ross would come every morning and ask if I was going to see what was being done.
879. Mr. Williamson.] You have heard Ross state that his mind was weak upon some matters? I know he is not to be relied upon in some matters.

MR. DE SALIS.

Mr. George Berner sworn and examined:—

- Mr.
G. Berner.
1 Oct., 1885.
880. Chairman.] What position do you hold in the Public Service? I am at present the Acting Secretary.
881. That is next to Mr. Goodchap? Yes.
882. Have you anything to do with matters of land resumption for railway purposes? They all pass through my hands.
883. Have you any knowledge of the case of Mr. Ross, of Newtown, passing through your hands? I have. I may qualify that answer by saying that I know it among hundreds of others.
884. Do you know how much Mr. Ross claimed for the land? £400. I have the papers here.
885. What was the date of the resumption? I do not remember date of resumption, but he sent in claim on 21st February, 1883.
886. He then sent in a claim for £400? Yes.
887. Was his claim granted? Yes. Mr. Byrnes, the land valuer, valued it at £448 16s.
888. What date was that? The 9th March of the same year.
889. Was Mr. Ross then informed of that fact? No, because it is not our rule when the valuation is in excess of what a party claims, as in this case.
890. Did you not at any time inform him of the fact? Yes; on the 1st June Mr. Ross was informed, but it had previously to go before the Executive Council.
891. When was the money paid? The money was paid on the 21st December, or the day after that date.
892. To whom? It was placed to the credit of Messrs. Norton & Co., in the Bank of Australia.
893. Is there anything to show that Mr. Ross authorized them to receive the money? No.
894. I want you to tax your memory and tell the Committee, if you can, if anybody waited upon you and asked you to push this thing through? That I do not remember. I do remember the name of Ross being mentioned, but I think it was some time after.
895. You cannot remember any one seeing you and asking you to push the matter through? I would not be certain that Mr. Melville did not. I saw him on many subjects, but it strikes me that this was after the matter was over.
896. He is a frequent visitor: did he inquire as to the state of the transfer in this particular case? I remember Mr. Melville asking me what was the amount of the award.
897. You cannot remember any other conversation? He asked me when the money was paid. The first interview was with Mr. Vernon, and when he called again Mr. Vernon was ill and I told him that the papers were with the land valuator, and that I would tell him when I got them.
898. Did he at any time say in your hearing anything about payment for services if the business was pushed? No; the first of that I heard was in the papers.
899. Are there any other clerks in the office who would have to do with these cases? Yes; Mr. O'Brien. The money was paid two months after the other three claims which came in about the same time.
900. Those other three claims were for allotments adjoining? Yes; almost part and parcel of the same property—a continuation of the block. Whatever caused the delay I do not know, because we pay on the certificate of the Crown Solicitor. On referring to my notes I see the order to pay the other claims is dated October, and this was paid on the 10th December, so I presume that the time between those dates has been taken up in getting the title complete.
901. Did Mr. Mitchell ever see you about this case? No.
902. Or Mr. Ross himself? I do not know Mr. Ross, and therefore cannot say. Many people who are strangers call and ask questions, and if it is such a question like that Mr. Melville would ask, I request them to go to Mr. O'Brien, but he will not give the information without such an intimation from me. He would then say when the money was paid.
903. Nor would he state the amount of the valuation? We do not tell that until the money is paid.
904. Mr. Teecs.] When you were inquiring about the three other claims for adjoining land, did you make inquiry as to whether there were conflicting interests or whether the money was paid direct to the claimants? No, I did not take any notice of the matter until it was brought up in the House. I may say that when Mr. Vernon called me into his room and asked me for Mr. Ross's land claim, I said we had no claim of that name; Mr. Melville said, "Oh, yes we have." I sent down to know if it was Dr. Ross, of Molong, who

who was meant, and thinking it was so I sent to Mr. O'Brien to send down Dr. Ross's papers. Mr. O'Brien telephoned that Dr. Ross had no claim. Then Mr. Melville said—"This is Mr. Ross, of Newtown"; and up to then I did not know that he had a claim.

Mr.
G. Berner.
1 Oct., 1885.

905. That is since the claim has been settled? Yes, when I had the papers. I told Mr. Melville the date of the notice paper.

906. Mr. Williamson.] Did you ever hear of any delay with regard to the title? No, I cannot say that I did; it may be so.

907. Can you tell me from the documents you have at what time the case came to your hands. The routine would be this, would it not:—The notice would go out from Mr. Byrnes' department, the next step would be taken by the Crown Solicitor? No; it comes back from Mr. Byrnes with his valuation, addressed to me.

908. Then it leaves you and goes to the Crown Solicitor? No, it has to be approved by the Commissioner to be submitted to the Executive Council.

909. Then when they have approved of it? It comes back to me, and I send it to the land valuer with a schedule, and make the offer to Mr. Ross.

910. When did Mr. Ross's claim come in? His acceptance came through Messrs. Norton & Co. on the 19th June. The sending in of the abstract of title is regarded as the acceptance.

911. That must emanate from the Crown Solicitor? Mr. Byrnes sends a printed notice to Mr. Ross offering the £400; then we make out the instructions for plan and description.

912. And he sends in his title? Yes.

913. It has to be approved by the Crown Solicitor? Yes.

914. And approved by the Executive Council? No.

915. The title must be approved? By the Crown Solicitor.

916. Then the certificate comes back to you? Yes.

917. Then from you to any other department? From me to Mr. Byrnes for a plan.

918. Then does it come back to you? Yes.

919. Then you again approve of it? No; merely return it to the Crown Solicitor.

920. Then he returns it? Finally certifying that the money is to be paid.

921. It was payable to the solicitors, not mentioning Mr. Ross? Yes; to Messrs. Norton & Co.

922. You are not aware who went to the Crown Solicitor or to Mr. Byrnes, but only speak of your own department? Only for myself.

923. And the parties in other offices could not say who saw you? No. The chances are that any one who knows the business would go direct to the Crown Solicitor.

924. Is there any other part of the routine where there may be delay—does it not go to Mr. Iredale? He is superior to Mr. O'Brien.

925. Before it goes to the Treasury has it not to pass through his hands? That would occupy only ten minutes.

926. Not two or three days? No; he simply puts it in Mr. O'Brien's tray.

927. Chairman.] He makes no memorandum? No.

928. Mr. Williamson.] But simply passes it on? That is all.

STATUTORY DECLARATION.

I, JOSEPH ROSS, of Australia-street, Camperdown, in the Colony of New South Wales, do hereby solemnly and sincerely declare as follows:—That on or about the year 1883 the Government resumed a portion of land at Newtown Railway Station belonging to me, for railway purposes. That Hardie & Gorman, of Pitt-street, Sydney, valued the said land at £300 sterling. That I valued the said land at £400 sterling, and sent in my claim to the Railway Department for £400.

I also declare that I agreed with Ninian Melville, M.L.A., to pay him the sum of £25 sterling if he obtained the £400 for the said land for me from the Railway Department.

That on the 8th November, 1883, prior to being paid for the land, I gave Mr. N. Melville a cheque for £25 on the Bank of Australasia, Newtown, for which cheque the money was paid.

He (Mr. Melville) asked me to pay him in cash. Mr. Melville told me that he could not get it through unless he had some money to push the thing on, or words to that effect, leading me to believe he had to use part of the money to pay others to help him. After Mr. Melville received the cheque I went with him to the Railway Department; he told me he had to see some of the officials to get it pushed on. He left me out on the lobby whilst he went in to see the officials.

And I make this solemn declaration conscientiously believing the same to be true, and by virtue of the provisions of an Act made and passed in the ninth year of the reign of Her present Majesty, intituled "An Act for the more effectual abolition of Oaths and Affirmations taken and made in various Departments of the Government of New South Wales, and to substitute Declarations in lieu thereof, and for the suppression of voluntary and extra-judicial Oaths and Affidavits."

JOSEPH ROSS.

Subscribed and declared at Sydney, this 6th day of May, 1885,

DECLARATION.

I, JOSEPH ROSS, of Australia-street, Camperdown, declare that, in or about the year 1883, the Government resumed a portion of land at Newtown Railway Station for railway purposes. That Hardie & Gorman valued the said land at £300 sterling. That I valued the said land at £400 sterling, and sent in my claim to the Railway Department for £400.

I also declare that I agreed with Ninian Melville, M.L.A., to pay him the sum of £25 sterling if he obtained the £400 for the said land for me.

That on the 8th of November, 1883, prior to being paid for the land, I gave Mr. N. Melville a cheque for £25 on the Bank of Australasia, Newtown, for which money was paid. He (Mr. Melville) asked me to pay him in cash. Mr. Melville told me that he could not get it through unless he had some money to push the thing through, or words to that effect, leading me to believe he had to use part of the money to pay to others to help him.

After Mr. Melville received the cheque I went with him to the Railway Department, as he told me he had to see some of the officials to get it pushed on; he left me out in the lobby at the office whilst he went in to see one of the officials.

B 1.

March 14, 1885.

Mr. Ross says that Melville told him it would take some money to pay some of the clerks—mentioning clerk's name—in connection with getting Mr. Ross his money in connection with the Government resuming some of Mr. Ross's land at Newtown Railway Station, and Mr. Ross paid him by cheque £25; he wanted cash. Hardie & Gorman valued it at £300, and if he (Melville) got him £400 he was to get £25. The Manager of the Bank of Australasia, Newtown (Mr. Bruford), now in Victoria, knew of it, as Mr. Ross told him what he was giving Melville the cheque for.

Melville said the clerks who would have to put it through would have to be paid. J. Ross, Ross his son, Beale, Sparkes, and McElhone present.

B 2.

Jos. Ross received for land at Newtown £408, and 10 per cent. for forced sale = £448 16s., but he only claimed and got £400 paid. Dated 9th March, '83, and paid 20th December, '83.

PRIVILEGE—MR. BARBOUR, M.P.

REPORT.

THE SELECT COMMITTEE of the Legislative Assembly appointed on the 22nd June, 1886,—“with power to send for persons and papers, to inquire into and report upon the circumstances connected with the avoidance and re-selection of Robert Barbour’s conditional purchase in the parish of Couridjah, county of Camden,”—have agreed to the following Report:—

YOUR Committee, having examined the witnesses named in the List*, whose evidence * See list, page 8. will be found appended hereto, find:—

1. That, on the 6th day of September, 1883, Robert Barbour, Esquire, one of the Members of the Legislative Assembly for The Murray, made, at Camden, a conditional purchase of 100 acres of land, situated in the Parish of Couridjah, County of Camden; and on the 6th day of December, 1883, he made an additional conditional purchase to the same of 160 acres, situate in the same county and parish; and on the 16th day of July, 1884, he made a further additional conditional purchase of 380 acres, in the same county and parish, being a total area of 640 acres.

2. That the survey of the original C.P. was made on 23rd October, 1883, but the plan was not approved of or accepted until 13th October, 1884, more than twelve months after it was conditionally purchased, and nearly twelve months after it was actually surveyed.

3. That, on the 31st October, 1885, the Local Land Board held an inquiry as to the fulfilment of the conditions in respect of the original conditional purchase by the said Robert Barbour, and the Board reported that “the required conditions of residence had not been fulfilled on this portion, but further reference was recommended as to fulfilment on additional conditional purchases 83/22 of 160 acres and 84/16 of 380 acres.” This report was submitted by the Under Secretary on the 15th February, 1886, in the following words:—“May await the receipt of first declarations as to the additional conditional purchases.” This was approved of by Mr. Spring, the then Minister for Lands, on the 17th of the same month.

4. It would appear that, without waiting for the receipt of the declarations on the additional conditional purchases, as suggested by the Board, and as approved of by Mr. Spring, Mr. F. H. Wilson, an officer of the Lands Department, re-submitted the papers to Mr. Copeland, on 30th March, 1886, with the following minute:—“Resubmitted, no improvements on original conditional purchase, 83/13. Selector not residing. Board report condition of residence not fulfilled. For forfeiture,” which minute was approved of by Mr. Copeland, on the 31st March, 1886.

5. The decisions of both Ministers were conveyed to Mr. Barbour in due course. Upon the receipt by Mr. Barbour of the letter notifying the intention to forfeit the land he protested, and claimed a refund of the deposit paid by him upon the land, on the ground that the original conditional purchase of 100 acres had not been surveyed within twelve months, but it does not appear by the evidence that Mr. Barbour abandoned the land up to the time of his protest.

6. The claim of Mr. Barbour for a refund was made on the 24th April, 1886, and on the 30th April, 1886, Mr. Copeland wrote a minute, as follows:—“As this land will, of course, be reselected, the State will suffer no loss by the abandonment, but Mr. Barbour should pay the cost of the survey, £37 6s. 9d. The refund may be made, less this amount.”

7. That the conditional purchase of the said Robert Barbour having been declared void, a portion of the same, 510 acres, was, on the 27th May, 1886, applied for in the name of William Shoobridge, by his agent, the said Robert Barbour, as an additional conditional purchase to a portion already held by the said William Shoobridge.

8. The evidence was to the effect that Mr. Barbour acted as the agent of William Shoobridge in accordance with the law; and that Mr. Barbour lent Shoobridge the money, £51, necessary to take up the land. There is no evidence to show that there was an unlawful agreement entered into by the said Robert Barbour and William Shoobridge, whilst the positive evidence of both of them was that no such agreement was entered into.

9. Your Committee, in reporting the above facts to your Honorable House, would desire to call attention to what appears to them to be a scandalous delay in the Survey Department in accepting the plan and survey of the original conditional purchase of Robert Barbour.

Chairman submitted Draft Report, which was read a first time, as follows:—

THE SELECT COMMITTEE of the Legislative Assembly appointed on the 22nd June, 1886,—“with power to send for persons and papers, to inquire into and report upon the circumstances connected with the avoidance and re-selection of Robert Barbour's conditional purchase in the parish of Couridjah, county of Camden,” have agreed to the following Report:—

See list, page 8. Your Committee, having examined the witnesses named in the list, whose evidence will be found appended hereto, find:—

1. That, on the 6th day of September, 1883, Robert Barbour, Esquire, one of the Members of the Legislative Assembly for The Murray, made, at Camden, a conditional purchase of 100 acres of land, situated in the parish of Couridjah, county of Camden; and on the 6th day of December, 1883, he made an additional conditional purchase to the same of 160 acres, situate in the same county and parish; and on the 16th day of July, 1884, he made a further additional conditional purchase of 380 acres, in the same county and parish, being a total area of 640 acres.

2. That the survey of the original C.P. was made on 23rd October, 1883, but the plan was not approved of or accepted until 13th October, 1884, more than twelve months after it was conditionally purchased, and nearly twelve months after it was actually surveyed.

3. That, on the 31st October, 1885, the Local Land Board held an inquiry as to the fulfilment of the conditions in respect of the original conditional purchase by the said Robert Barbour, and the Board reported that "the required conditions of residence had not been fulfilled on this portion, but further reference was recommended as to fulfilment on additional conditional purchases 83/22 of 160 acres and 84/16 of 380 acres." This report was submitted by the Under Secretary on the 15th February, 1886, in the following words:—"May await the receipt of first declarations as to the additional conditional purchases." This was approved of by Mr. Spring, the then Minister for Lands, on the 17th of the same month.

4. It would appear that, without waiting for the receipt of the declarations on the additional conditional purchases, as suggested by the Board, and as approved of by Mr. Spring, Mr. F. H. Wilson, an officer of the Lands Department, resubmitted the papers to Mr. Copeland, on 30th March, 1886, with the following minute:—"Resubmitted, no improvements on original conditional purchase 83/18. Selector not residing. Board report condition of residence not fulfilled. For forfeiture," which minute was approved of by Mr. Copeland, on the 31st March, 1886.

5. The decisions of both Ministers were conveyed to Mr. Barbour in due course. Upon the receipt by Mr. Barbour of the letter notifying the intention to forfeit the land he protested, and claimed a refund of the deposit paid by him upon the land, on the ground that the original conditional purchase of 100 acres had not been surveyed within twelve months.

6. The claim of Mr. Barbour for a refund was made on the 24th April, 1886, and on the 30th April, 1886, Mr. Copeland wrote a minute, as follows:—"As this land will, of course, be reselected, the State will suffer no loss by the abandonment, but Mr. Barbour should pay the cost of the survey, £37 6s. 9d. The refund may be made, less this amount."

7. That the conditional purchase of the said Robert Barbour having been declared void, a portion of the same, 540 acres, was, on the 27th May, 1886, applied for in the name of William Shoobridge, by his agent, the said Robert Barbour, as an additional conditional purchase to a portion already held by the said William Shoobridge.

8. The evidence was to the effect that Mr. Barbour acted as the agent of William Shoobridge in accordance with the law; and that Mr. Barbour lent Shoobridge the money, £54, necessary to take up the land. There was no unlawful agreement entered into by the said Robert Barbour and William Shoobridge, nor is there any evidence to show that Mr. Barbour attempted to enter into any unlawful agreement in reference to the same.

9. Your Committee, in reporting the above facts to your Honorable House, would desire to call attention to what appears to them to be a scandalous delay in the Survey Department in accepting the plan and survey of the original conditional purchase of Robert Barbour.

10. Your Committee are of opinion that there is nothing in the evidence taken which reflects in any way upon the said Robert Barbour, Esq., M.P.

MINUTES OF EVIDENCE

TAKEN BEFORE

THE SELECT COMMITTEE

ON

PRIVILEGE—MR. BARBOUR, M.P.

30 JUNE, 1886.

Present:—

MR. ABBOTT,	MR. SPRING,
MR. ABIGAIL,	MR. BURDEKIN,
MR. HENRY CLARKE,	MR. COPELAND.

J. P. ABBOTT, Esq., IN THE CHAIR.

Robert Barbour, Esq., M.P., appeared in person.

Chas. Nicholson Jewel Oliver called in, sworn, and examined:—

1. Chairman.] You are the Under Secretary for Lands? Yes.
2. Do you produce any papers in connection with conditional purchases made by Mr. Robert Barbour, in the parish of Couridjah, county of Camden? Yes.
3. Have you the application? No; but I produce a copy.
4. Can you give me the date of that application? 6th September, 1883.
5. What was the area? 100 acres.
6. This selection was made by the Mr. Robert Barbour who is the Member for The Murray? I believe so.
7. Were any additional selections to that selection made by him at any time? Yes.
8. When? An additional selection of 160 acres was made on the 6th December, 1883.
9. Is that all? A further additional selection was made on the 24th July, 1884.
10. Of what area? 380 acres.
11. When were these selections surveyed? I cannot give the exact date. I have not the original plans with me; but I will send for them.
12. I want to know when they were surveyed, not when the plans were accepted? The survey of the original selection was made on the 24th October, 1883.
13. When was that survey accepted? I have not the original plans here, and therefore I cannot speak definitely as to the date; but from my knowledge of the case I can say that the surveys were not accepted within twelve months of the date of application.
14. When was the first additional selection measured? On the 4th June, 1884.
15. And the 380 acres, when was that measured? On the 25th October, 1884.
16. Are all the reports by the same surveyor? Yes; by Mr. Liddell.
17. Do these reports show Mr. Barbour to have been a resident selector at the date the surveys were made? In reference to the original conditional purchase the surveyor reports:—"Applicant is non-resident, and has made no improvements on this portion. The land is thickly timbered with gum and ironbark. All lengths and bearings are given as they exist."
18. What does the next report state? "There are no improvements on this portion; applicant is non-resident. The soil is poor and sandy; the formation is sandstone. The timber is gum and stringy-bark."
19. And the next report? "There are no improvements on this portion. The formation is sandstone; the soil is poor; and the timber is stringy-bark and blood-wood. All corners were formed, and all lengths and bearings exist as shown. This portion exceeds the 80-chain limit, but other Crown land was not available, and the boundaries have been kept as near the limit as possible."

C. N. J. Oliver,
Esq.
30 June, 1886.

- C. N. J. Oliver,
Esq.
30 June, 1886.
20. Was a refund made? Yes.
21. On what date was it approved? On the 30th April, 1886, and the vouchers issued from the Department of Lands on the 10th May, 1886.
22. Why was the refund made? Who asked for it? I should mention that the whole of the deposit was not refunded. The refund was made less £37 6s. 9d., the cost of survey.
23. What led to the refund? Was there an application from Mr. Barbour? He wrote a letter to the Department, dated 24th April, 1886, to this effect:—"As this conditional purchase was not surveyed within one year (the time allowed by law), I have abandoned it, and request that you refund to me the amount paid as a deposit thereon, and the additional conditional purchases also." That letter was addressed to the Minister for Lands.
24. The Department recognises the date of survey as being when the plan is accepted by the Surveyor-General, or a person authorized by him? Yes. That is a provision of the Crown Lands Act.
25. Is it the invariable practice to make these refunds? Yes.
26. Where the land is not measured within twelve months? Yes.
27. Mr. Spring.] Is that refund made irrespective of the fulfilment of the condition of residence? The officials of the Department read the Act to mean that this refund is contingent upon the condition of residence having been fulfilled.
28. Mr. Henry Clarke.] Was the Department aware that that condition had not been fulfilled? To the extent disclosed by these papers.
29. Chairman.] That is by the three reports you have read? Yes. We had also the evidence given by Temporary Inspector J. B. Brown before the Local Land Board.
30. That evidence was given before the date of the refund? Yes; that is, before Mr. Copeland's minute.
31. Is there no report by an Inspector? There is a report by the Inspector to whom I have referred, made prior to his giving the evidence. In that report he states, "No residence; no improvements."
32. Mr. Copeland.] The Land Board held an inquiry into this case, did it not? Yes.
33. On what date? On the 31st October, 1885.
34. Had the Board the Inspector's report before them? Yes.
35. And what was the finding of the Board? "The required condition of residence has not been fulfilled on this portion; but further reference is recommended as to fulfilment on additional conditional purchases 83-22 of 160 acres and 84-16 of 380 acres."
36. What did you take to be the purport of that report? Should you consider it a recommendation for forfeiture, or a recommendation that the land should not be forfeited? The recommendation was to the effect that the forfeiture, which had apparently been incurred, should be suspended until declarations had been received in connection with the two additional conditional purchases.
37. Was not the report rather to this effect: That the determination should be held over until the declarations as to the additional conditional purchases were made, rather than that a forfeiture which had been incurred should be suspended? There is no mention of forfeiture. I was about to give my own construction of this report. I think it is a report upon which the Minister would be perfectly justified in forfeiting the land. The Board does not say that the land is to be forfeited, or that it should not be forfeited. They report the non-fulfilment of the conditions of residence. And there being some additional conditional purchases upon which possibly the conditions which were applicable to the original might have been fulfilled they say that the case should await a further report in reference to these additional conditional purchases.
38. Chairman.] That would be until the declarations were due? Yes.
39. Mr. Copeland.] Was any other departmental submission made to the Minister? The first submission was made to Mr. Spring, and it was to this effect: "May await the receipt of first declarations as to the additional conditional purchases." That was dated 15th February, 1886, and the submission was made by Mr. Wilson, on my behalf. It was approved by Mr. Spring on the 17th of the same month.
40. Chairman.] At the date of that submission, as a matter of fact, no declarations were made as to the fulfilment of the conditions by Mr. Barbour? No.
41. Mr. Copeland.] Was the case afterwards reconsidered by the Department? The case was resubmitted on the 30th March, 1886. "Resubmitted. No improvements on original conditional purchase, S3-13. Selector not residing. Board report condition of residence not fulfilled. For forfeiture." That submission was made to me by Mr. Wilson, whose initials are "P.H.W." I initialled the submission and placed it before the Minister of Lands, Mr. Copeland, and that submission was approved on the 31st of the same month.
42. The forfeiture was approved of? Yes.
43. After his approval of the forfeiture, when would the forfeiture take effect? Thirty days after notification in the Government Gazette, and that notification is not made until the forfeiture is confirmed by the Governor-in-Council.
44. Had the case been submitted to the Governor-in-Council? No; the case had not been submitted to the Governor-in-Council for approval.
45. Then, although my minute of the 31st March gave ministerial approval to the forfeiture, the forfeiture as a matter of fact had not taken place? No.
46. There was no further action by the Department? No; the case was waiting for an Executive minute.
47. Therefore it was open for reconsideration? Certainly.
48. And it is the custom in the Department for Ministers to reconsider and sometimes to reverse forfeitures? Yes, on representations being made.
49. Will you tell me what action was taken on the first minute of Mr. Spring to the effect that the land was not to be forfeited? A letter was addressed to Mr. Barbour, dated 4th March, 1886, stating, among other things, that the Minister for Lands did not see any necessity to interfere further at present.
50. That is, he saw no necessity at that time to forfeit? Yes.
51. Mr. Spring.] And the communication was sent in consequence of the approval of the Minister that the case should await the declarations in the other cases? Yes.
52. Mr. Copeland.] Was any further action taken by the Department after the sending of that letter to Mr. Barbour before the case was resubmitted to me? No.
53. The case was not sent back to the Board? It was not referred back to the Board.
54. Subsequently to my decision of forfeiture on the 31st March, another letter was sent to Mr. Barbour, I believe, informing him of my decision? Yes, on the 13th April, 1886.

C. N. J. Olivet;
Esq.
30 June, 1886.

55. And my decision is dated 31st March? Yes.
56. The Department forwarded a letter to Mr. Barbour, informing him of that decision, on the 13th April? Yes.
57. Will you read the tenor of that letter? "With regard to conditional purchase of 100 acres applied for by you, at Camdon, on the 6th September, 1883, under the 13th section of the Crown Lands Alienation Act of 1861, which was the subject of inquiry before the Local Land Board, at Camden, on the 31st October, 1885, I am directed to inform you that, notwithstanding the report of the Board referred to, the Minister for Lands has decided that that purchase, together with two additional purchases, shall be brought forward for forfeiture at as early a date as practicable. Signed P. H. Wilson, for the Under Secretary." That was addressed to Robert Barbour, Esq., M.P., Legislative Assembly.
58. That letter was sent to him in consequence of my minute of 31st March? Yes.
59. Is there any other minute on the copy letter? Yes. There is a minute signed "H.C.," dated 15th April, 1886, to this effect:—"Let me have these papers." The papers were submitted on the 17th April.
60. What is the date of the next correspondence? 24th April, apparently.
61. Will you read the letter? Yes. It is dated Abbotsford, Ashfield, 24th April, 1886:—"Dear sir, C.P. 83-13, of 6th September, and two A.C.P.'s, making in all 640 acres. As this conditional purchase was not surveyed within one year, the time allowed by law, I have abandoned it, and I request that you refund to me the amount paid as a deposit thereon, and the A.C.P.'s also." The letter is signed Robert Barbour, and it was addressed to the Minister for Lands.
62. What action was taken on that letter? Upon that letter Mr. Copeland wrote the following minute:—"As this land will of course be resold to the State will suffer no loss by the abandonment, but Mr. Barbour should pay the cost of survey, £37 6s. 9d. The refund may be made less this amount." This is signed "H.C.," and is dated 30/4/86.
63. What is the date of the letter on which that minute was written? 24th April.
64. Chairman.] At the date Mr. Barbour wrote that letter he had an intimation that the land would be sent on for forfeiture? Yes.
65. What was the date of that intimation? 18th April, 1886.
66. At the time Mr. Barbour wrote the letter of 24th April, 1886, he had received an intimation from the Department, dated 13th April, 1886, that the land would be sent on for forfeiture? Yes.
67. Up to that time, had he made any application to abandon the land? I think not. There is nothing in the papers to show that he had.
68. Mr. Spring.] At the time that the submission was made to Mr. Copeland that the land should be sent for forfeiture, had the declarations been received in reference to the A.C.P.'s, or had a report been received from an Inspector upon them? No such report had been received that I am aware of.
69. And were the declarations due on these A.C.P.'s before Mr. Copeland's decision? They were not.
70. Then, as far as the Department was aware, the conditions might have been performed on one or both of the A.C.P.'s? So far as the Department was officially aware.
71. Chairman.] Perhaps as you now have before you the original plans you can tell us when the surveys were accepted—for instance, was the survey accepted upon the first conditional purchase of 100 acres on the 24th October, 1883? I cannot say when the plan of the original selection was accepted, but the plan of the first additional selection of 160 acres was accepted on the 28th January, 1885. Both plans of the additional selections appear to have been accepted on the same date.
72. Can you tell the reason of the delay between the date of survey and the acceptance of the plans? The selections were surveyed in June, 1884, and the plans were not accepted until January, 1885.
73. Can you account for that delay, or is it a chronic delay in the Surrey Department for which you cannot account? It is a delay I cannot explain. There are frequently delays in accepting plans arising from a variety of causes. There may be some slight error in chainage for instance, or something of that description. I produce copies of the papers to which I have referred, and also plans showing the selections.
74. Do you produce all the papers in connection with the selection made by W. Shoobridge? No.
75. Can you obtain those papers for us? Yes; they are at the present time in the Board Office.
76. Will you send for them and let us have them? I will.
77. Mr. Barbour.] In Parliament the other night Mr. Abigail had a large number of documents which he said had been obtained from the Department of Lands. From these copies he gave the date of the acceptance of the survey of the original selection by the Surveyor-General. How is it that he obtained the date from these papers and that the date cannot now be found? I am at a loss to understand how Mr. Abigail obtained the copies to which you refer. I daresay that if I had time to examine these papers critically I might tell you whether that date is upon them or not.
78. How do you think Mr. Abigail came by complete copies of all the papers? I have not the slightest idea.
79. Then your impression is that they were surreptitiously obtained? Undoubtedly. Copies of documents can only be obtained upon my authority, or the authority of the Minister for Lands.
80. You have referred to a letter which was written in consequence of the minute of Mr. Spring. The letter is dated 4th March, and I was informed in it that no further action would be taken by the Department in the case till a further opportunity had been given for declarations. Referring to that letter of 4th March, I should like to ask you what was the cause of the next action which was taken by the Department. I refer to the resubmission of the papers. What was the cause of that? I can only give you such information as I have been able to obtain on the subject. I cannot give you information of my own personal knowledge. I think I had occasion to refer to Mr. Wilson on the subject, and he told me that some inquiries were made as to this conditional purchase by some persons whom he does not now remember, and that on going through the papers to get the information to satisfy those inquiries he read carefully the evidence which had been previously taken, and considered that the case was one for forfeiture, and therefore he brought it forward with a view to that action being taken. That is the explanation which I have from Mr. Wilson. I may explain, so as to make myself perfectly understood in this matter, that Mr. Wilson has my authority to place before me cases which we call formal. Those are cases as to which there can be no doubt as to the action which is to be taken. So as to some extent reduce my labour, these papers were placed before me by Mr. Wilson as a formal case in reference to the forfeiture, in which there could be no possible doubt. And it was in that way submitted by me to the Minister.
81. That action was taken by him notwithstanding that his opinion was contrary to that of the Board, and notwithstanding my having been previously advised that no further action would be taken? Certainly.

C. N. J. Oliver, Esq.,
30 June, 1886. Certainly; but that is not the interpretation which I should place upon the action. The interpretation which I should place upon it would be such as I have just stated—that in referring to the case Mr. Wilson found that it was one for forfeiture, and that he resubmitted it to me.

82. As a formal matter? Yes.

83. Without the matter being looked into by anyone else, and upon his own opinion, that opinion being contrary to the decision of the Board? No.

84. That is, contrary to the recommendation of the Board? No. I would not say that, and I do not think it is fair for you to endeavour to put answers into my mouth.

85. I think you said a little time ago that the meaning of the recommendation of the Board was that matters were to remain in statu quo until something further had occurred? Yes.

86. Notwithstanding that I was advised to that effect, the papers were again submitted to the Minister before waiting for any further action by the Land Board? As I have described, it would appear that Mr. Wilson had occasion to go through these papers, and he having previously submitted the case to the Minister as a formal case, and the papers having been dealt with as a formal case, he considered, as I assume, that the case had been improperly submitted in the first instance, and he endeavoured to remedy what he considered a defect, taking what was in his judgment the proper action in the matter. In his judgment he thought the case should be laid before me as a formal case, and he acted accordingly. The case went before the Minister, Mr. Copeland, in exactly the same way as it went before Mr. Copeland's predecessor, Mr. Spring.

87. And the resubmission by Mr. Wilson to the Minister was a complete reversal of what had been previously approved of by the Minister's predecessor? Yes, I should think it would be a complete reversal.

88. And although it was a complete reversal it was submitted as a formal matter without any explanation? As I have before explained.

89. You say that on the 13th April a letter was sent to me. I received that letter. Are you aware that I brought it to the Minister, and left it with the Minister that he might look into the case? I am not aware that you did so.

90. Did you not find it in the office? I brought two letters, one dated 4th March, and the second dated 13th April, and I asked the Minister to make inquiries and afford an explanation. I am not aware that you asked the Minister to explain the case. I can only answer your question from the information which the papers disclose. No doubt you handed this letter to Mr. Copeland. It bears a minute.

91. If that letter were issued by the Department, and brought back by me to the Department, would you consider it a private matter, or was it a proceeding which was perfectly public? If you saw the Minister at the Department of Lands I should consider it an official interview.

92. You sent a telegram to the Land Agent to make inquiries with respect to Mr. Barbour's conditional purchases? Yes; Mr. Aarons made an inquiry as to whether Mr. Barbour's forfeited conditional purchase had been reselected. I said I was not in a position to answer the question, as the selections, if made, would be taken up at the Land Office of the district. He was anxious to know if the reselections had been made; and I said to him, "I will let you know later on in the day; I will send a telegram to the Land Agent"; and I did so.

93. Who is Mr. Aarons? The proprietor of the "Exchange Hotel."

94. Is he the gentleman who subsequently selected the land by Volunteer Land Order? I believe so; and his application was refused, on the ground that the land was within a population boundary.

95. Are you aware that he, nevertheless, reselected? I understand so; but I have not yet seen the application.

96. Is the refund of the deposit made in consequence of the provision of an Act of Parliament, or in consequence of some interpretation which the Department of Lands places upon the law? All Acts of Parliament must be interpreted.

97. Is the 12th section of the Act of 1873 the section under which the refund was made? Yes.

98. Mr. Spring.] Is there any date upon the letter to Mr. Barbour which was handed back to Mr. Copeland, or any memorandum showing the date of its receipt by the Minister? Yes; it was on the 15th April, two days after it was written. It was then handed back to Mr. Copeland—at least, I judge so, from the fact that Mr. Copeland wrote a memorandum upon it of that date, asking to see the papers. The papers were sent into Mr. Copeland two days afterwards.

99. Chairman.] Will you be good enough to produce all the papers in connection with the reselection of the selections? Yes.

1 JULY, 1886.

MR. ABBOTT,
MR. DAY,
MR. FOSTER,

MR. ABIGAIL,
MR. BURDEKIN,
MR. JAMES HENRY YOUNG,

MR. COPELAND.

J. P. ABBOTT, Esq., IN THE CHAIR.

Mr. John McLaughlin appeared for Robert Barbour, Esq., M.P.

Francis Henry Wilson called in and examined:—

Mr. F. H. Wilson.
1 July, 1886. 100. Chairman.] What is your position? I am Registrar of the Lands Department.

101. You produce a copy of the papers in reference to the conditional purchases of Mr. Barbour in the parish of Couridjah, in the county of Camden? Yes.

102. And of all the papers in connection with the reselection of those conditional purchases? Yes.

103. It was pointed out to the Committee yesterday that Mr. Spring made a minute that action in reference to Mr. Barbour's conditional purchase should await the receipt of declarations, in accordance with the recommendation of the Land Board. Do you remember that? Mr. Spring gave a decision that the case should await the receipt of the first declaration as to the additional conditional purchases.

104. That was on what date? On the 17th February, 1886.

105. You resubmitted the papers? Yes, on the 30th March, 1886.
106. That was before any declarations had been made? Yes.
107. Can you give us your reason for this action? I submitted the papers as to the original conditional purchase the recommendation of the Board concerning which had not been submitted to the Minister.
108. But were not the Board dealing with the original selection? Yes.
109. The recommendation then, that action should wait, was only as regards the additional conditional purchases? Yes. The Board recommended that further reference should be made as to fulfilment of conditions upon the additional conditional purchases; and the Minister decided that the case should await the receipt of the first declaration as to the additional conditional purchases. I submitted that there were no improvements upon the original selection; that the selector was not residing; and that the Board reported the condition of residence not fulfilled.
110. The condition of residence might have been fulfilled on the additional conditional purchases? It might have been fulfilled; but the Inspector's report said that it was not.
111. Why did you not carry out the recommendation of the Board approved by the Minister? It appeared to me that the case should be submitted again.
112. It was done without reference to further inquiry? I read the report of the Inspector, who said:—"I have found no signs of any improvement; I did not see the purchaser; I was told that there had been a humpy, but I did not see it; I was sure there was no building on the land, or I should have seen it."
113. That applied to the original; but the conditions could have been fulfilled on the additional? They could have been.
114. Was not that the object of the Board in recommending that action should wait pending the receipt of declarations? I do not know what their object was.
115. You resubmitted the case in consequence of the report of the Inspector? Yes.
116. Who was the Inspector? Inspector Brown. The date of the report is 7th October, 1885.
117. As a matter of fact there is no evidence in any of the papers showing residence or fulfilment of conditions? No.
118. Are there any letters from Mr. Barbour stating that the conditions have been fulfilled? Not that I know of.
119. Mr. Day.] Had you any report at the time to which you refer as to residence upon the additional conditional purchases? I had only the report of Inspector Brown, the effect of which I have read.
120. Chairman.] You had received no report at that time as to residence on the additional conditional purchases? No.
121. Did any report come in as to the residence on the additional conditional purchases previous to Mr. Copeland dealing with the case? No; there was only that one report.
122. Have you any report now as to residence on the additional conditional purchases? I have a report dated 15th March, 1886, to the effect that there are no improvements on any of the land. Inspector reports that Mr. Barbour was not resident there on the 12th March, 1886.
123. What Inspector is that? Inspector O'Hara.
124. Can you tell us the date of the acceptance of the survey? Yes; the portion 32—that is the original selection—was approved on the 13th October, 1884.
125. Mr. Burdekin.] What was the date of selection? 6th September, 1883. Portion 114, part of A. C. P. 83-22, was approved on the 28th January, 1885.
126. What was the date of that selection? The 6th September, 1883. Portions 2-1 and 2-11 were measured portions at the date of selection.
127. Chairman.] Then there would be no approval of the plan? No; the date of survey is 1863. Portion 41 of 380 acres was approved of 28th January, 1885.
128. Mr. Burdekin.] What was the date of that selection? 24th July, 1884.
129. Mr. McLaughlin.] At whose instance did you resubmit the case, instead of waiting for the declarations? Two gentlemen came to see me; I do not know who they were. They asked whether the land which had been held by Mr. Barbour was open to selection. I sent for the papers, and on reading them through I saw that Mr. Barbour had not resided according to the Inspector's report. Therefore I re-submitted the case for forfeiture.
130. Without waiting for the proper declarations? Yes. I may mention that the gentlemen who came to the office were strangers to me.
131. When did this forfeiture take place? It has never taken place. The Minister has approved the forfeiture, but it has never taken place.
132. When was it declared void? It was declared void by the Minister on the 30th April, 1886.
133. Was the land surveyed within twelve months after the original selection? The original selection was applied for on 6th September, 1883. It was measured on 24th October, 1883, and the plan was approved on the 13th October, 1884.
134. That approval was after the expiration of the year from the date of selection? Yes.
135. You are aware that if the original selection falls through the additional selections fall with it? Yes.
136. Are you aware that the selection was made under the 12th section of the Act 39 Victoria No. 13? Yes.

Mr.
F. H. Wilson.
1 July, 1886.

Joseph Davenport called in and examined:—

137. Mr. Abigail.] What is your avocation? I am a boot and shoe manufacturer.
138. Do you remember meeting Mr. Barbour at Bondi? Yes.
139. On what day? On the 25th May of the present year.
140. I wish you to relate to the Committee what transpired when you met Mr. Barbour at Bondi; did you meet him by appointment made by yourself? No; on the 25th May, I was going out in the buggy; I was standing on the footpath; another young fellow was beside me; turning round, I saw Mr. Barbour coming down the road; I waited for him; he was about 10 or 15 yards away; he said, "I have caught you at last."
141. Chairman.] Where was that? That was in front of my own place at Bondi, on the main road. I was about to step into the buggy. Mr. Barbour said, "I have caught you at last"; he added, "I want you a minute." There was another young man standing by—Henry Nicholson. Mr. Barbour called me on

Mr. J.
Davenport.

Mr. J.
Dayenport.
1 July, 1886.

on one side, and he said, rubbing his hands, "There is a little bother, you see, in the office about that land of mine at the Picton Lakes, and I want you to attach it to yours." He said, "I will give you £10." He spoke rather loudly, and he placed an emphasis on the £10. He then said, "That is all I want you for," and we shook hands after a minute or two and he went up the road.

142. Did you consent to the proposal? I said I could not do it under any circumstances. I would not do anything like that for all I am worth.

143. And you then parted? We then parted. Mr. Barbour said, "That is all I wanted you for."

144. Did you make any communication to any other person at once? I did; I went a few paces away and called to my daughter, who was standing on the verandah.

145. Did you make any communication to Henry Nicholson when Mr. Barbour was there? No.

146. What action did you take to obtain information with reference to this land? I saw one of the Inspectors some time in March, I think, Mr. O'Hara. He was at my place, and he asked me whether I could give him any information with reference to this land. He said, "You are a neighbour, and perhaps you would not like to do so." After that I went to Camden to select 80 acres next my own place. I put in my application, and I put down eight sovereigns. Mr. Barbour was there, and he put down his cheque.

147. Did that 80 acres which you wanted to select form part of the land which was taken up by Mr. Barbour? It was a part of the land which I thought had been thrown up when he came to ask me to select for him. I thought to myself, "There is a chance for me now that the selection is void." I went in the ordinary way to the Land Agent. I could not get any information connected with the matter, and when I saw Mr. Barbour on the 25th May, I thought to myself that it was all right. I felt sure that he had the clue. Therefore I went off to Camden at once, and we both met together there on the 27th May. There being two of us applying for the land there was a ballot.

148. Chairman.] Do I understand that Mr. Barbour was an applicant for the same 80 acres? I think he wanted the whole lot, some 700 or 800 acres altogether. Mr. Barbour put down a cheque and the papers. I do not know how much the cheque was for. I could see a 5, but I could not see any other figure. I suppose it must have been for about £50. I did not like to look closely to see what the other figure was. We balloted, and, to my surprise, when Mr. Martin took the papers out there was the name of Shooobridge on the ticket. I was rather taken aback at seeing this name, because I knew that Shooobridge was not in a position to select.

149. Did you know the circumstances of Shooobridge? I have known him for fifteen years. I allowed him to stop on my own place for five years. He is a poor old fellow, and has next to no means. He stayed at my place for a long time. I did not charge him a farthing. I allowed him to remain out of charity.

150. Chairman.] Then he is not well off? I have seen some misery and want in this country, but I never saw such a desolate place as that in which he is now living.

151. You know this selection well? Yes; I have been over it hundreds of times. I have known the neighbourhood for fifteen years.

152. During the time the selections were in Mr. Barbour's hands, was much timber cut and taken away? I have seen Barbour's bullocks drawing the stuff off, and I have seen men cutting the timber down. That was about this time two years ago.

153. It was during the time Mr. Barbour held the land as a selection? Yes.

154. Was there much timber on it? There was some time ago.

155. When he took it up first? Yes.

156. Was it good timber? Yes; it is all gone round about now right up to the ranges. There is nothing now to make even a scantling.

157. Have you any idea of the value of the timber standing at the date of the selection? Not the slightest.

158. Mr. Day.] What did you understand Mr. Barbour to convey to you when he said, "You will attach it to yours"? I understood him as offering me £10 to take it up for him in my own name. He could not select it without somebody like me. I was there, and had the place next to the land. I understood that the selection was to be taken up as an addition to mine.

159. Chairman.] At the date of the conversation on the 25th May, 1886, was the balance of the purchase money on your conditional purchase paid up? Yes.

160. Had you a grant? No; I bought the land some fifteen years ago from a man named Pierce.

161. But had the Crown grant been issued? I have had the deeds now some three or four years.

162. Were you living upon the land at the time? I go up sometimes. My family are living at Bondi, but I go up to the land almost every week.

163. Did Mr. Barbour know that your family were living at Bondi? I did not know that he did until he came into the office one day and asked my clerk where I lived.

164. He went to your residence on the 25th May? Yes; and he had been there three times previously, but did not find me.

165. You say that Mr. Barbour said to you, "I want you to attach this land to yours, as there is a bother in the office about it"? Yes.

166. Are those the exact words, and is that the whole of the conversation he had with you? That is the whole of it.

167. We ought to have the whole of the conversation, and the exact words? So far as I can judge these are the exact words, "I want you to attach this land to yours. I will give you £10."

168. Is that all he said then? That was all he said then. I said I would not do such a thing under any circumstances. After a moment Mr. Barbour said, "That is all I wanted you for," and then he went.

169. How long were you talking? Not more than five minutes.

170. Mr. Day.] Did Mr. Barbour say anything to you about reconveying this portion of land back to him again? He did not say anything about it. I told him I could not take up the land under any circumstances.

171. Mr. Copeland.] I understand that you were residing on this piece of freehold land of yours? I have a place on it. I go up almost every week, and stop two or three days. Sometimes I stop all the week. I occasionally take up my daughters, and we stay a week or so at a time.

172. Since you obtained the land, have you taken up any additional conditional purchase? None at all.

173. At present you hold only the freehold? Only this piece:

Mr. J.
Davenport.

1 July, 1886.

174. How did you apply for this selection? Did you apply for it as an original conditional purchase, or as an additional conditional purchase? As an additional conditional purchase, I think.

175. You applied for 80 acres? Yes.

176. I suppose you are aware that if your application had succeeded you would have had to reside continuously on your freehold land? No, I was not aware of that.

177. Did Mr. Barbour offer to make any terms with you about fulfilling the conditions? None at all. I have mentioned the whole of the conversation I had with him.

178. Did he say anything to the effect that if you did apply for the land as an additional conditional purchase it would be necessary for you to reside for a period of five years? He did not mention it. We did not have a single word on the subject.

179. Did he offer to make any terms, or offer to give you any money, if you would ultimately transfer the land to him again? No.

180. He simply offered to give you £10 if you would select this land in your name and attach it to your other selection? Yes.

181. Did Mr. Barbour say it was for him? Yes.

182. Did he explain to you how you could select it for him? No. He said, "I want you to attach this ground for me to your land; I will give you £10."

183. Did he explain to you how you could do such a thing? No; that was all the conversation we had on the matter until we met at the Lands Office.

184. Did Henry Nicholson hear any of the conversation? No; Mr. Barbour took me on one side. We were standing on the pathway in front of our gate. Nicholson was waiting for me to get into the buggy. Mr. Barbour said, "I want a word with you." Then he drew me aside. When I first heard the word "office" I did not know to what office he referred.

185. You have been waiting until this land of Mr. Barbour's was forfeited? Yes. I heard some time previously from Mr. O'Hara that it had been forfeited. Mr. Hammond went into the office to try to get some information.

186. How long was it after you heard from Mr. O'Hara about the land being forfeited that you attempted to reselect it? About three months. I think it was in March that Mr. O'Hara came to me. He came with another gentleman from Picton on horseback. He said he had been looking over the land.

187. I suppose you regard the land as valuable land? I did not, because if I had thought anything of its value I should have taken it some years ago. It is beside my place, and has been open to me for fifteen years. If I had thought it valuable I should have taken it up before.

188. You have had a chance of taking it up before? I had the chance for fifteen years.

189. But you thought it was not worth your while to take it up? Now I am retired, so to speak, and I spend a good deal of time up there, and I thought that if I had a chance of getting this 240 acres I would take it up.

190. On what date did you leave Sydney to take up the land? On Wednesday the 26th. I went to Campbelltown and took the tram to Camden. I was there at 10 o'clock in the morning and met Mr. Barbour. That was on the 27th May.

191. On what date did he talk to you on the subject? That was on the 25th May.

192. And you left Sydney the next day to take up the land on your own account? Yes.

193. Chairman.] A licensed surveyor speaks of the land as being of sandstone, with poor soil and stringybark blood-wood timber. Is that so? Yes, it is.

194. Mr. McLaughlin.] Would not the falling of the timber improve the land? I do not think it would, unless the roots were taken up.

195. Are you aware that ringbarking improves land? Yes; but when you cut the timber down, in two years you will find a perfect bush springing up round the roots, giving more trouble than the tree itself.

196. But the same observation would apply to ringbarking? No; I do not think it springs up in the case of ringbarking, that is as far as I have seen. I have had some trees cut down, and the suckers have sprung up very thickly.

197. You did not attempt to take up the land until Mr. Barbour had worked on it and had felled the timber? No.

198. Suppose Mr. Barbour suggested to you that you should take up the land, and that he would afterwards purchase it from you at a profit of £10. Is there anything in such a proposal as that which would have the effect of shocking you? Mr. Barbour did not suggest anything of the kind, and it touched my dignity when he offered me £10 to be a dummy to rob the public of the public money.

199. In what way would the public be injured by your taking up the land and selling it to Mr. Barbour any more than if you took up the land and retained it yourself? I did not want to take up all the land Mr. Barbour took up. I wanted only 80 acres. I think Mr. Barbour applied for the whole of the land.

200. What difference would there be to the public in the two cases that you should be so indignant at such a proposal as that which I have suggested? It is quite possible that I might have resided upon the 80 acres which I wanted to take up.

201. Did you propose in your application to purchase that you should reside upon the land? I did not know that I would have to reside on this piece. I was going to build on my own place, and I thought that I could take up this additional piece, and that the conditions of residence would be satisfied by my living on my own piece.

202. Would you explain to the Committee how the public would be affected by your taking up land without residing on it, instead of by your taking it up and afterwards selling it to Mr. Barbour? My impression is that any man who has a lot of ground with a dummy on it is robbing the public.

203. That is the only explanation you can give? That is what I thought of the matter. I thought it was a case of dummying, and I did not desire to be a party to it.

204. Who was this Mr. Hammond who was working for you to try to get this land? He was endeavouring to get some information for me. He is Mr. Hammond, the Member for Canterbury in the Legislative Assembly. Mr. Hammond came up to have a look at my place.

205. When was that? It was in the hot weather, about three months ago. Mr. Barbour went up by the same train. We went all over the ground. I was talking to him about what Mr. O'Hara had said. He offered to get any information which could be obtained with reference to the forfeiture. We saw an officer of the Department in a room which I think was numbered 5.

- Mr. J. Davenport.
1 July, 1886.
206. Did Mr. Hammond go with you in your interest? Yes. The officer smiled and chuckled up his head, as much as to say that he knew all about the matter, and that he would try to get the information if he could. He smiled, as much as to say, "There is something in this." I did not know that the selection had been voided until Mr. Barbour came to me on the 25th May. Then I thought that he had obtained a clue, and I went to Campbelltown on the following night.
207. Did you then complain to Mr. Abigail? I did not.
208. When did you tell Mr. Abigail? I told Mr. Abigail after I had heard the whole string of the evidence which you will hear.
209. Have you been working up the case against Mr. Barbour for Mr. Abigail? I have assisted him, no doubt.
210. Were you the first to speak to Mr. Abigail about it? I think I was.
211. When did you tell him about the matter? I should think it would be a fortnight ago now.
212. You have had several conversations with Mr. Hammond about the matter? Not recently. I spoke to Mr. Hammond three months ago, to see whether he could ascertain for me whether the land had been forfeited.
213. Did you ask him whether he could get you the land? No; I only wanted to know if it had been forfeited. I could get the land without Mr. Hammond's assistance, but I did not care very much whether I had the land or not.
214. Did you not say, in the presence of Shoobridge, that you would spend £200 if you could get this land? I never said a sentence to Shoobridge about spending a farthing on the land. If he says so he tells a falsehood.
215. You have no desire to have the selection cancelled so that you may select it or get it? I do not say so. I should not mind getting the land.
216. You said just now you did not care whether you had the land or not. Do you or do you not want it? I do.
217. Is it not because you want the land that you are setting Mr. Abigail in motion? I swear it is not.
218. Your desire for the land has nothing to do with this agitation against Mr. Barbour? It has not.
219. Did Mr. Abigail tell you to see any other people? No. I saw all the other people before Mr. Abigail knew anything about the matter. I had the whole chain of evidence before I mentioned the matter to Mr. Abigail.
220. Mr. Abigail.] Was anything said at all when this £10 was offered to you about your keeping the land and selling it to Mr. Barbour? Not a sentence.
221. You have no doubt about that? No.
222. What was the straight remark put to you by Mr. Barbour about this £10? He offered me £10 to take up the land for him—that was what I believe he meant.
223. But he said "for him"? He said "for me."
224. Chairman.] Did Mr. Barbour say, "I want you to attach this land to yours for me"? Yes; he said "for me," and he said, "I will give you £10."
225. Mr. Abigail.] Are you in the habit of trafficking in land? I never bought any land in my life, with the exception of the land which I own there and my own property here.

William Shoobridge called in and examined:—

- Mr. W. Shoobridge.
1 July, 1886.
226. Chairman.] Where do you reside? At Redbank Siding, near Picton Lakes.
227. How do you get your living? I have a small contract under the Government for drawing sand and coal and so forth; when I have time on my hands I draw timber.
228. How long have you had the contract? I have had it for years; I could not exactly say how long, but I have had it for several years.
229. How much money do you make out of the contract—do you make £100 a year? My son might earn 19s. a day, and I might earn 18s.
230. What do you pay your son? I pay him £1 a week and rations, to drive a horse and dray.
231. Mr. W. J. Foster.] How many days are you employed in the year in that way? I have been working now about a fortnight drawing sand and coal, and I have a month's more work drawing sand.
232. Chairman.] Is your employment continuous? I cut wood to fill up the time.
233. Have you had continuous employment at this rate for the last few years? Yes; I am never idle; I am always at work.
234. Mr. Copeland.] Are the teams your own? I have one horse and dray. I hire another horse and dray. About four months ago I had four horses, but two were hired.
235. Chairman.] Do you save much money in the course of the year? I do save some. I have a large family to keep. There are two or three girls at home. The boy, of course, keeps himself by his own labour.
236. At the end of the year, have you much money saved as the result of your year's work, or do you spend all that you earn? I do not exactly spend all that I earn.
237. Have you a Savings Bank account? No.
238. You have no money in the bank? No.
239. And you find, with your big family, that you live up to your income? We live as well as we can.
240. You have not much money saved at the end of the year? Not a great deal. I save all I can.
241. What do you do with your savings? I do not drink or waste them. I keep them for any particular use that I may have.
242. Do you bank your money, or do you keep it in the house? I do not bank it. I have a large family.
243. How much had you saved from your earnings on the 27th May of this year—about £50? No.
244. About £20? I might have had £20.
245. Mr. Abigail.] Do you remember Wednesday, the 26th May—do you remember meeting Mr. Barbour? Yes.
246. Where did you meet him? Up at the Tanks.
247. At Mrs. Eldridge's? He went there for dinner. I was waiting there for some coal to come.
248. Did you dine with Mr. Barbour? No.
249. Had Mr. Barbour any dinner? Yes, I think he had.

Mr. W.
Shoobridge.
1 July, 1886.

250. Did you come from there together? No; I do not know that we did, but we met afterwards.
251. Where? At the tanks.
252. How long afterwards? Half an hour afterwards.
253. Where did you go then? I went away to Picton.
254. With Mr. Barbour? Yes.
255. When you arrived at Picton, where did you go? We went to sign the papers to get this land.
256. Did you go to Creamer's Hotel? Yes.
257. You had some refreshments there? Yes, but a very small quantity.
258. Where did you go from that place? We went to Mr. Coll, the Magistrate, where the papers were signed.
259. What papers? The papers as to this land.
260. Did you know what the papers contained? Yes; here is a receipt for the money. I spoke to Mr. Barbour six months before this. I said I should like to have the land, and I would save up money on purpose to get it from him.
261. Where did you receive this receipt? It was sent up to me just after I got the land. You will see the date.
262. Who gave it to you? Mr. Barbour himself.
263. When was that? I could not say exactly.
264. When did you see Mr. Barbour last. I am not much of a scholar, and I do not put down dates of that kind.
265. Was it last Sunday? Yes, I believe it was.
266. What took place on that occasion? I do not know that anything particular took place.
267. Had you a conversation about this transaction? Will you tell us exactly what took place? There was no conversation further than that about the papers.
268. Mr. Barbour handed you a receipt. Did any conversation take place about this case? Nothing in particular.
269. Tell us exactly what took place, whether it was particular or not? There is nothing to say—nothing I know of except that he handed me the receipt.
270. Did he give you this receipt last Sunday? I think it was on Sunday.
271. Where did he give it to you? At my own place.
272. You cannot remember what conversation took place—he just came up and handed you this receipt and walked away? He handed me the receipt, and there was nothing particular that I can remember.
273. Did he speak to you about the case? Nothing at all about the case? I do not remember what he said. He simply came and gave me the papers.
274. Did he then walk away immediately and say nothing? He did not say anything particular. I do not know exactly what he said. I would answer the question if I could recall anything that was said.
275. You want the Committee to understand that you cannot remember any of the conversation which took place between you and Mr. Barbour on Sunday last? I do not believe anything was said about the case.
276. When did you meet Mr. Barbour to arrange about taking up the land? The first part of it was about six months before he gave up the land. I wanted to buy a part of it, and I said I would save up money for it, and then of course he gave me a sort of encouragement that I might. When I saw him at Eldridge's afterwards he said the land was at liberty—that he had thrown it up. Of course I said I would like to take it up very much—that is, a part running down from the Dry Lagoon to the house. He said it would be better to take the whole of the land, and he said, "I will lend you money to do so."
277. You have a distinct recollection that that took place on the 27th May? Yes.
278. Now say what took place on Sunday last? Nothing took place in particular.
279. What were the terms upon which the money was to be lent? The terms were that I was to pay as I could. There was no interest or anything—I was to pay the money as soon as I could.
280. Have you repeated that statement to any other person? I might have done.
281. Have you made any different statement to any other person? Not that I know of.
282. You are not sure that you have not? I do not believe I have.
283. Did you not on the 29th May tell Mrs. Eldridge that you had taken up this land for Mr. Barbour, and that he had consented to let your son fence it all in? I did not.
284. You swear that? I swear it. My son has got plenty of fencing of his own to manage. There was no fencing to do. He is putting up a 2-rail fence with a paling on it to make a large orchard.
285. Did not Mrs. Eldridge tell you to be very careful what you were saying, and that you were running a risk? I was running no risk. She certainly did tell me to be careful; but I merely said in her place that I had been down with Mr. Barbour and had made a declaration for the land. That was all I said.
286. But she did say you were to be careful? Yes.
287. Careful of what? Careful of what I said.
288. You said you did not tell her that you had taken up the land for Mr. Barbour? Of course I could not say that I took up the land for Mr. Barbour when I was not taking it up for him. She said I ought not to be talking. What I was talking about did not concern the matter at all. I got Mr. Barbour to go down as an agent and take up the land for me.
289. When you agreed about the lending of the £54, what was the arrangement? It was that I should repay it as I could. I said I would pay it as quickly as I could; but there was no further arrangement.
290. Where did you make the arrangement? I made the arrangement at the time Mr. Barbour went down to take up the land for me.
291. Where was this agreed to? I think it was settled at Mrs. Eldridge's.
292. Chairman.] Where were you when it was arranged that you should pay the money when you could? That part of the arrangement was made at Mr. Creamer's.
293. The arrangement was made when you went to have refreshments? That was when the £54 was first spoken of. The arrangement was that Mr. Barbour should go down to Camden to take up the land for me. He said he would advance the money.
294. I thought you said you met him at your own place? I met him at Picton. The arrangement was made for him to go to Camden. He said I could pay the money as I liked.
295. And he first told you that at Picton? Yes.

Mr. W.
Shoobridge.
1 July, 1886.

296. What did he say before you went to Picton? He said in the morning that he was going down to Camden, and that he would take up the land for me.

297. And you went with him to sign the declaration? Yes.

TUESDAY, 6 JULY, 1886.

Present:—

MR. ABIGAIL,
MR. ABBOTT,
MR. BURDEKIN,

MR. COPELAND,
MR. HENRY CLARKE,
MR. JAMES HENRY YOUNG.

JOSEPH PALMER ABBOTT, Esq., IN THE CHAIR.

Mr. Barbour, M.P., present in the room.

Mr. McLaughlin appeared as Solicitor for Mr. Barbour.

Mr. William Shoobridge called in and further examined:—

Mr. W.
Shoobridge.
6 July, 1886.

298. Mr. Abigail.] When we adjourned I was asking you about a conversation you had with Mrs. Eldridge, and you told us she had told you to be careful—can you tell us what she meant by that? It might be that what she meant was to be careful not to say too much for fear anybody alongside might come down and take up the ground.

299. How did you first learn that these lands were open for reselection? First of all Mr. Creighton took up 80 acres, and a man of the name of Knox took up 40 acres; then there was another gentleman I saw down on the road; he came over to me and asked me where those 100 acres went to, and I told him just over the rise beyond me; I heard that he had taken it up on two Volunteer land orders—the 100 acres—and that was more valuable than any of it on account of it being close to the railway.

300. Did any of the three persons you have mentioned tell you the land had been abandoned, and was open to reselection? The man that had the Volunteer orders to take up the 100 acres said so.

301. What was his name? I do not know his name; but he took up the 100 acres of ground with two Volunteer orders.

302. How did you learn the names of the parties you have just mentioned—Creighton and this other person? Because they are neighbours, and they told me so.

303. They told you the land had been abandoned? Yes; and they took it up about a fortnight before my land was taken up.

304. Is not the 100 acres you refer to included in your selection? No.

305. How many acres did you apply for? There was more than what I was going to take up, but Mr. Barbour told me I might as well take the whole of it up on account of the surveying—that I would not have to pay for the surveying if I took up the whole of it.

306. When did he tell you that? Before I took it up.

307. When you were at the Land Office? No; I was not at the Land Office.

308. When you were at Picton? Yes.

309. Was that the first time he told you about taking it up? Yes, that was the first time. He had to go away to take it up.

310. Did not Mr. Barbour make the first communication to you about reselecting this land? Yes.

311. When you were at Picton, did you sign a paper that Mr. Barbour presented to you? Yes.

312. Do you know what was on that paper—written on it? It was read to me.

313. What did it contain? My head will not allow me to remember it all; I am too old; I could not think of it.

314. Was the paper written out in your presence? Yes.

315. Who by? Mr. Cole was there.

316. Was the paper written out in Mr. Cole's presence? No; I cannot say that.

317. Who wrote it out? I cannot say who wrote it.

318. You did not see anybody write the paper? No.

319. Who presented it to you to put your mark to it? I put no mark to it; I wrote my name.

320. How many acres did you apply for? I wanted about 200 acres, but he said it was better for me to take the whole of it up.

321. Who said? Mr. Barbour; he was my agent. He said it would be better for me to take the whole of it up, because there would be no occasion for any surveying if I took the whole lot of it up.

322. How many acres did the whole lot consist of? 540, I think.

323. Have you applied for any more? No.

324. You have not applied for any more? No, not since.

325. You are quite sure of that? Yes.

326. You tell the Committee you are certain you did not apply for any more land? No, of course I have not; only this (handing a paper to the Chairman).

327. Have you applied for a lease? No, I have not.

328. Are you aware that there is a notice at present in the Land Office at Camden in your name applying for a lease of 700 acres? —

329. Chairman.] Do you know whether a conditional lease has been applied for for 700 acres in respect of the 540 acres? I do not know.

330. Mr. Abigail.] You have not empowered anybody to apply for that in your name? No.

331. Did you understand the conditions of residence and fencing under the land laws of 1884 when you applied for the 540 acres? Yes; I know the improvements according to what is specified in the Act.

332. Who paid your fare to Picton, and your expenses while you were there? No one.

333. Did you pay all your own expenses? Yes.

334. You are quite sure you paid at the hotel for your own expenses? Yes.

335. When Mr. Barbour offered to lend you this money, was there any conversation as to the rate of interest? No, not particularly of interest, but of course I will pay him.

336. What was the arrangement? I made no particular arrangement.

Mr. W.
Shoobridge.

6 July, 1856.

337. He lent you the money unconditionally? On condition that I would pay him what was fair for it. I do not wish any man to give me money without payment.
338. Was anything said about what was fair? I did not say anything about what was fair or what was not. I told him I would pay him what was fair.
339. You cannot recollect what the terms and conditions were? No; my head is bad, and I cannot recollect it; it is no use my saying I can.
340. You remember Mr. Barbour coming to you on Sunday? No, it was not on Sunday; I made a mistake; it was late on Saturday night, and he gave me the receipt.
341. Where? At my house.
342. That is where? On the selection where I live.
343. I want to ask you again to relate what he said when he gave you the receipt? He said, "Here is the receipt," and that he could not come sooner on account of having some business to do—that he was going up to Mrs. Eldridge's to stop there that night, and he was frightened he would get bushed, as it was very late.
344. He did not say anything about this case being brought before Parliament? No; I knew nothing about it being brought before Parliament at that time.
345. You have lately bought a fresh horse and cart, have you not? No, I have not; we have hired one, and I suppose because we have hired it somebody will want to say we bought it.
346. Mr. Young.] Was Mr. Barbour the first person who mentioned to you that this land was open to be taken up? He said it was; but these other men took up their land before Mr. Barbour spoke of it.
347. Can you remember in what terms Mr. Barbour told you that? He said he would take it up for me; that he would pay the money down. I said that at that time I had not got the money, but still I wanted a part of the land; and then he said he would pay the remainder, and it was better for me to take the whole up on account of the surveying; and so I took up the whole of it.
348. What did he say about repaying the money at that time? I was to pay it as soon as I could in instalments.
349. Were you to pay any interest? There was no word said about interest just then. You know I could not expect money without interest.
350. He did not say anything about interest? No.
351. I think you said you only wanted 200 acres yourself? I was going to take up 200 acres, but he said I had better take the whole up on account of the surveying.
352. Mr. Foster.] The whole amount was 540 acres? Yes.
353. Mr. Copeland.] Did Mr. Barbour explain to you anything about the survey-fee—how you would save money by taking up the whole of it? He said it would not have to be surveyed again—if I took the whole of it I would gain by it.
354. Did he say you would not have to pay the subdivision fee if you took up the whole of it? That was it.
355. Do you know anything about the new Land Act—have you ever read it? I know the land must be fenced in within two years, I believe; but whether or no I will get a book of it, and I will fence it in—the whole of it.
356. Do you know the difference between a conditional purchase and a conditional lease? I do not know much about it.
357. All that you know is that you did take up the land, but you do not know anything about the forms or the title? I know I will have to do the improvements, and they will be done.
358. When you signed that authority to Mr. Barbour to take up a conditional lease, I suppose you merely understood you were signing an authority to take up the land in some form? I knew it would have to be taken up properly, or otherwise I would not get it.
359. When you were asked the question a little while ago whether you authorized anyone to apply for a conditional lease, you said no; but it appears from the documents that you did give an authority—I suppose you did not understand that that was an authority for a lease in contra-distinction to a purchase? I know what you mean now; you mean the leasehold land; I was not aware what you meant. Yes, I gave him authority to take up the lease, the pre-emptive right.
360. A conditional lease it is called now? I did not understand what you meant.
361. Mr. Foster.] I understood you to say that Creighton and Knox took up part of this land? Knox took up a part of it, 40 acres.
362. Was that part of this same land? I could not exactly say, but I believe it was; he told me he was going to take it up; in fact I know it was Mr. Barbour's land; and the 100 acres was Mr. Barbour's; I know that because I was on it myself when this other man took it up on the Volunteer order.
363. Did you not tell us just now that you were advised to take up the whole in order that you might save the expense of measurement? Yes. Knox and Creighton took theirs up about a fortnight before that.
364. Mr. McLaughlin.] Do you remember Mr. Barbour telling you you would save the survey fee by taking up the whole, and any portion you did not want he could sell for you? Yes, he did say that; but I will not sell before my time is up.
365. He said any portion you did not want he could sell for you? Yes, if I had not got the means to keep it afterwards.
366. Did you not apply to him several times whilst he was living there to purchase a portion of this land? Yes; I saw him one day and asked him whether he could sell any of it, and he did not say whether he would or could sell it; but afterwards he came to me and told me it was all open.
367. Before he told you it was all open, you knew Knox had taken up a portion of the land formerly held by him? Yes.
368. And you knew Creighton had done the same? Yes.
369. You knew from that that it was all open? Yes, I knew it was all open.
370. And I suppose it was pretty well known to everybody else in the neighbourhood? Yes, all round.
371. That the land was there for anybody who required it? Yes.
372. And when Mr. Barbour offered to lend you money you availed yourself of his advice? Yes.
373. You have a grown-up son living with you? Yes.
374. What is his age? About twenty-four.

- Mr. Shoobridge.
6 July, 1886.
375. Does he live and work on your selection? He works for me when I want him, and when I do not want him he goes on his own account.
376. Do you owe any money on your own selection? No; that is my own.
377. Nobody has a mortgage or claim upon it? No.
378. And you paid for that out of your earnings? Yes.
379. Did you not, on other former occasions, borrow money from Mr. Barbour, and contract debts by getting goods from him on credit? Yes; I believe I owe him a trifle, but I do not know.
380. Were you not in his debt and afterwards paid him? Yes; I bought timber from him, and bought things out of his store.
381. On credit,—and did you afterwards pay him all right? I do not know whether I paid him all or not; if I did not I have the bill of it at home.
382. He never had to find fault with you as to how you paid him? No, I do not think he did.
383. Some imputation has been made that you would not be able to pay this money back to Mr. Barbour—is that correct or not? I can pay it.
384. You swear you intend to pay it back? I will pay it back.
385. And you tell the Committee that the arrangement was that you should pay it? I will pay it, of course.
386. You told the Committee that you can earn 19s. a day, and your son 18s. a day—so that you make between £4 and £5 a week, you and your son—is that correct? Yes; that is when we are working at the contract.
387. What have you got there? (Witness produced vouchers showing £100 earned during the last two years by wood-cutting alone, during his spare time and when not engaged in other contracts; and vouchers for various other earnings. Also, a letter from the Commissioner for Railways, dated 15th January last, accepting witness's tender for carting coal to pumping engine at the Picton Lakes during 1886, at the rate of 5s. per ton; and another acceptance of a tender, dated 4th January last, to deliver at Picton Lakes Railway Station sand required during 1886, at the rate of 7s per ton.)
388. What period do these vouchers embrace? About two years.
389. Have you sureties for these tenders? No; we do not have any sureties.
390. These tenders were accepted without any sureties being required? Yes; they know very well I will do it.
391. These other account sales show moneys you have earned independent of the Government altogether? Yes; the Government have nothing to do with them.
392. You have no doubt whatever about your ability to repay Mr. Barbour this money? Yes; I will repay him; there is no fear.
393. When you stated that you did not authorize anybody to apply for a conditional lease you did not understand the nature of Mr. Abigail's question? No.
394. But now you state that you signed a general authority for Mr. Barbour to act for you? Yes.
395. Mr. Abigail.] Did you ever borrow any money from Mr. Barbour before this time? No.
396. Do you remember the date when Mr. Barbour told you it would be better for you to take the whole of the land up? No, I do not; my head is bad, and I cannot recollect hardly anything for no time. You know I am old.
397. You say you and your son can earn from £4 to £5 a week? Yes.
398. How many weeks in the year do you earn that? That is when I am working on the coal and sand contract I can earn that.
399. How often? I have as much as I can do for three months now.
400. How often are you paid? I generally get my money about every two months.
401. Who makes up your account? The Government themselves.
402. Who does your writing for you? There is no writing required. There are no accounts wanting; because the Government keep them themselves.
403. Mr. Young.] Can you tell me how much wood you sold during the last year or the last six months? No, I could not tell you that.
404. You cannot tell how much you have done in the last six months? No.
405. You stated you earned £4 or £5 a week—is that actual earnings? Yes.
406. What does it cost you to keep your horses out of that? There is one horse runs out in the bush; that does not take so much as the other.
407. What is the net money you earn—that is to say, supposing you earn £5 a week, how much does it cost you to feed your horses out of that? I do not know; I never took that much notice.

Mrs. Elizabeth Eldridge called in and examined:—

- Mrs. E. Eldridge.
6 July, 1886.
408. Chairman.] Where do you reside? At Picton Lakes.
409. Your husband keeps an hotel there? No; he is the station engine-driver.
410. You keep an accommodation house? Yes.
411. Mr. Abigail.] You know Mr. Shoobridge? Yes.
412. Do you remember having a conversation with him—? (Mr. McLaughlin objected to evidence of conversation held behind Mr. Barbour's back. Witness withdrew. Committee deliberated. Witness recalled.)
413. Mr. Abigail.] Do you remember about the 28th or 29th May having a conversation with Mr. Shoobridge? Yes, on a Thursday morning.
414. Could you tell us now what he said on that occasion? He came in about 9 o'clock in the morning. I asked him to have a cup of tea, and he said he would. I said was there anything the matter with his work, as he seemed rather excited, and he said, "No; but I may as well tell you the news; you will soon see I am a great landowner." He said, "He has gone down to take up the land," and I said, "Who do you mean?" and he said, "Old Barbour; I may as well tell you, because it will soon be known, that I am a great landowner." He said he and Mr. Barbour went to Picton to Mr. Creamer's, and had a nobbler of schnapps, and then they went to Mr. Cole's. He said they signed the papers there, and they went back again and had another nobbler of gin-and-water hot, and that he spent the rest of the evening in Picton; and he said, "Here I am again this morning." I told him to be careful, that he should not talk of gentlemen like that—"Old Barbour" and "Old Davenport"—and then he went to his work.
415. Why did you tell him to be careful? I told him to be careful not to speak of gentlemen in that way.

416. Did he say anything more about the land or about money? Nothing at all; he never mentioned money at all.
417. You know something of Mr. Shoobridge's condition financially? Yes.
418. Is it a good one? Yes.
419. Has he plenty of money? I have always known him to be a respectable old man, and have never known him to be in want of money. He always had money coming to him from the Government for what he did.
420. Chairman.] He has a son working with him? Yes.
421. Are they both industrious? Yes, steady working people.
422. Have you anything to do with their accounts? No, except when he delivers sand or coal, to send the account to the station-master at Picton.
423. Mr. Foster.] Have you any idea about what it comes to in the year? He gets about four trucks every two months; sometimes two.
424. Does he draw the whole of it? Yes.
425. How many tons does a truck contain? That depends upon the size. He draws it all through the works if an engine wants sand or coal. He does all the drawing generally. He is rather an obliging old man.
426. Mr. McLaughlin.] An honest old man that always pays his way? Yes.
427. If you could afford to do it, would you have any objection to trust him? Not the least.
428. You would be perfectly confident he would repay you? Yes.
429. He is an industrious, hard-working, honest man? Yes. I have known him for nineteen years; he is very foolish in his ways sometimes—talks foolish.

Mrs.
E. Eldridge.
6 July, 1886.

Mr. Charles Arthur Dunn called in and examined:—

430. Chairman.] What is your business? Contractor.
431. Where do you live? At Randwick.
432. Mr. Abigail.] You have voluntarily come here as a witness in this case? Yes.
433. You know Mr. Barbour? I do.
434. Were you engaged by him? Yes, at his saw-mills at Redbank.
435. In what year? In the early part of 1884 to the middle of the year.
436. In what capacity were you engaged? As manager of the saw-mill.
437. Can you tell the Committee whether any timber was taken off his selections while you were there? Timber was taken off all around there.
438. By whose authority? By Mr. Barbour's authority.
439. There was timber cut from those selections by Mr. Barbour's authority? Yes.
440. What was it cut into? Building timber and what would make sleepers and boards.
441. Was it supplied to the Government? Some of it went up to Goulburn, I believe for the Goulburn Town Council.
442. How long were you there? Six months, I think. While I was there all the timber that was worth cutting round about there, including Mr. Barbour's 100 acres—all the timber that was fit for the saw-mill—was cut out.
443. Mr. McLaughlin.] Had you the entire management of this? No, I had not the entire management.
444. I thought you called yourself the manager? Yes. Mr. Barbour used to come up every week.
445. With that exception, you were manager? There was a foreman there besides me.
446. He was under you? He did not receive any instructions from me.
447. He was under you? He was supposed to be.
448. Were you a shareholder? No; I was engaged and paid a salary—or was to have been paid a salary.
449. Were you to have a share in the profits? If there had been any.
450. Did you get any profits? No, I did not get any profits, and I did not get any salary.
451. There were no profits? No.
452. Mr. Young.] Was any statement rendered to you or by you as to the profits or want of profits? I do not think there was ever any statement made out.
453. Was it part of your business to make up the profit and loss? No.
454. Did any money pass through your hands? No, except in the store; the money that was received from the timber Mr. Barbour had.
455. As a matter of fact you do not know whether there were any profits or not? No; I do not think there were any.
456. Mr. Abigail.] Did your salary depend upon the profits when you made the arrangement? No.
457. You did not receive any salary? No.

Mr.
C. A. Dunn.
6 July, 1886.

Mr. William Williams called in and examined:—

458. Mr. McLaughlin.] What are you? An auctioneer and commission agent at the present time.
459. Do you remember Mr. Barbour having a saw-mill in the Camden district about two years ago? Yes, at a place called Redbank, 4 miles from Picton.
460. Were you foreman for him? Yes.
461. Do you know the selections he held there? Yes.
462. What was the class of timber on these selections? On the selection between Shoobridge's and Davenport's the timber was of no use to the saw-mill.
463. Where did you get the timber from for the saw-mill? From a place called the Lagoon Ranges, and from Wild-horse Camp.
464. Off these selections altogether? Yes. I tried the timber on the selections, but it would not suit the saw-mill, and I shifted the men further out.
465. Do you know Mr. Dunn, the manager or foreman? Yes.
466. Would he know anything about the bush where the timber came from? I should think not.
467. Was he working foreman? He was more of a storekeeper, I thought.
468. You were the bush foreman, and it was your duty to get the timber? Yes.
469. You would know more about the quality and class of timber than Mr. Dunn would? Yes; I had more experience.

Mr.
W. Williams.
6 July, 1886.

Mr.
W. Williams.
6 July, 1886.

470. Mr. Abigail.] Do we understand you to say you did not cut or order timber to be cut off the selections? I fell two or three trees on the selections to try the timber, but had to leave them, and I shifted the men further over to the ranges.
471. You did not take any timber off the selections? No; I do not think I took a log off.
472. How long were you there? Four or five months.
473. How long was the mill there—did you leave the mill working? There was no mill working when I left.
474. And up to that time only a few trees had been cut on the selection? That is all to my knowledge.
475. Could it have been cut before you went there? No; I have no reason to think so. All the timber that was any good had been taken off ten or twelve years ago.
476. You saw no traces of recent cutting? No, only what I cut myself—only two or three trees that I felled to try the timber. There was no good timber on it at that time. I used to do nothing else but ride about and find timber suitable for the mill.
477. Did you commence with the commencement of the mill? No; it was working a little before I went there.
478. How long? I could not say exactly; not long.
479. How long was the mill there—eighteen months or two years? I could not say.
480. You were there only six months? Hardly six months.
481. You do not know what took place before you went there? I was over the country years before; I rode over it years before I ever thought of working for Mr. Barbour. I was a kind of forest ranger, being in the mounted troopers at the time; and I was looking after the timber, and taking up anyone for cutting timber without a license; therefore I had knowledge of what the timber was.
482. Chairman.] Do you know the different selections Mr. Barbour had—100 acres, 300 acres, and 380 acres—did you know them separately or only as one block? Only the one block, between Shoobridge's and Mr. Davenport's.
483. Did you know that as far back as December, 1883? No, I did not.
484. When were you in the Police Force there? It is seven years since I left.
485. Were you stationed there then? Yes.
486. Then you must have known this land before 1883? You must bear in mind—
487. I want to know if you knew this land, afterwards Barbour's selections, in 1883? I knew the whole of it.
488. Was it timbered then? No; the timber had all been picked out years before that.
489. Is this true—this is a report by the surveyor who surveyed it, dated 6th December, 1883: "The land is timbered with gum and ironbark"—is that true? I do not think it is.
490. That refers to the 100 acres. On the 3rd December, 1884, the same surveyor writes of the 380 acres: "The soil is poor, and timbered with stringybark and bloodwood"; then in November, 1884, the same surveyor writes: "The timber is gum and stringybark"; so that, according to the surveyor, there are gum, stringybark, and bloodwood—are not all these timbers good for saw-mill purposes? No.
491. Which is bad? The bloodwood is unsound, and the gum was white-gum that will not stand cutting; the sheets of bark had been taken off the stringybark years before, and the trees left standing.
492. It was dead? It was dead and useless.
493. It is never worked up? No.
494. Mr. Foster.] Was the saw-mill on this ground? The saw-mill was close to the railway siding—very close to the Government reserve.
495. You knew this ground was taken up by Mr. Barbour? Yes.
496. Did it strike you as curious to take up ground on which there was no timber for a saw-mill? I did not know what he took it up for.
497. How far were these ranges where you got the timber away from the saw-mill? From 4 to 6 miles further on; the nearest timber I got was at the Lagoon Ranges, and then we went to Wild-horse Camp.
498. You know all that country very well? Yes.
499. Mr. Clarke.] Was any timber taken for firewood and sent to market? Not to my knowledge; the dead timber could have been cut up to suit this market; in fact, some comes from that district now to Sydney.
500. Mr. Young.] Are the ranges from which you took this timber Government land? Yes.
501. Did you obtain licenses? Yes, for all the men we employed, and had licenses for the carriers as well.

Robert Barbour, Esq., M.P., examined:—

R. Barbour,
Esq., M.P.
6 July, 1886.

502. Mr. McLaughlin.] You are a Member of the Legislative Assembly? Yes.
503. And have been for many years? It is eight or nine years since I came to the House; I was two years out.
504. You selected some land in the district of Picton in 1883? I did.
505. How many acres? At first 100 acres; then I took up additional conditionals to make it up to 640 acres.
506. You had a saw-mill close by? Yes.
507. Did you reside in the district? Yes, at first, till the saw-mill was removed.
508. When was the saw-mill removed? About eighteen months ago.
509. What was the nature of the country you took up—was it very valuable land? No; sandy ranges, stony ground; something like the land on the North Shore and Middle Harbour.
510. How far was it away from your saw-mill? The nearest point of the land I selected was within half a mile of the saw-mill.
511. Where was the store? At the saw-mill.
512. Reports were sent in by the inspector against the continuance of the selection, and it was ultimately voided? Yes; that was two years after.
513. You abandoned it, I believe, some time this year? Yes, on the 14th April I gave notice of abandonment.
514. Was that selection surveyed—when was the measurement confirmed? About five or six weeks after the year was up.
515. In virtue of the provision of the law, you claimed and obtained a refund from the Department? Yes.

516. Less the cost of survey? Yes, less £37 6s. 9d., retained for cost of survey.

517. You heard Mr. Davenport give his evidence? Yes.

518. Will you explain what took place between yourself and Mr. Davenport? I am an agent for the purchase and sale of land; I have known Mr. Davenport's selection for some years, and have been repeatedly on it; about three months ago we travelled together to Picton Lakes; he was travelling in a second-class carriage, and I went in beside him. We talked about land purchase and sale, and the money profits that had been made of it, and he said he had lost many chances of making money on account of his partner's being averse to him going into land speculation. We then spoke of irrigation, and I promised to get him a copy of the Royal Commission's Report. About two weeks after that I called upon him at his office in Barrack-street with this copy; he was not there, and I left my card; they told me I would find him at his residence at Bondi. A day or two after that I was at Bondi, and I called, but he was not in, and I left the book with his daughter.

R. Barbour,
Esq., M.P.
16 July, 1886.

519. The report of the Royal Commission? Yes, with my compliments. A few days after that again I met him in the main street of Bondi; he was then with a friend, and they had a buggy; I said I wanted to say a few words to him, and he came to one side with me; I said my selections had been cancelled, what would he say to take them up as an addition to his selection; the land could be easily subdivided and sold, and we could make a good profit out of it; I said that if the land were subdivided some of the lots facing the water might bring £10 an acre; he said, "Oh, I don't care about it," and I said good morning, and he went away, and I went away on my own road. We did not go into the particulars of the matter at all.

520. If Mr. Davenport had taken that up as an addition to his selection, would there have been anything in the land law to prevent him cutting it up and selling it immediately? Nothing. His selection was an old selection of 1866.

521. Chairman.] What was the value of the improvements? Several hundred pounds.

522. Mr. McLaughlin.] There were no conditions to fulfil? They were all fulfilled; he had paid his balance, got his deeds, and he could do with his land as he liked; and he could add to it to make it up to 640 acres, and sell it the next moment.

523. Chairman.] What was the value of the improvements on his original selection? I should estimate them at from three to four or five hundred pounds; he had cut out all the timber and cleared and grubbed it, planted several hundred lemon and orange trees, built a house of four or five rooms on the top of the hill, and a gardener's house at the bottom of the hill with three or four apartments; he has also a stable and a great deal of fencing—it is subdivided into a good number of paddocks; and I should estimate the improvements in round numbers as being equal to about £400.

524. This land is in the Eastern Division, and can be made up to 640 acres without residence? Yes.

525. Mr. McLaughlin.] And without further improvements? And without further improvements.

526. And he might sell the next day? Yes, the next moment; so far as the fulfilling of the law was concerned there were no restrictions.

527. Now we come to Shoobridge's evidence? About 30th April this year—

528. Can you tell me the date of the interview with Mr. Davenport? I have no reason to doubt but what Mr. Davenport has put the proper date upon it. He said the 26th.

529. Chairman.] What were you doing at Bondi at that time—did you go purposely to see Mr. Davenport? Yes, that was one of the businesses that took me there. This was more than three weeks after the land had been voided. The Minister made the voidance about the 30th April. The land was then open for selection by anybody who chose to take it up. On the 14th April the Chairman of the Land Board was advised by the Department that the land was open for selection; that was a fortnight before the 30th. The first selection made of a portion of my forfeited selection was on the 13th May; that was 40 acres by Knox; the next was on the 19th; that was the selection by Aaron, made in virtue of two Volunteer land certificates; the date of this was the 2nd of June—the second selection. Somebody told him it was no good, as it was within a population area, and subsequently he put it in a second time, on the 2nd of June, but his first selection was on the 19th of May, nearly three weeks after it was voided. On the 20th May, a farmer up there named Christopher Creighton took up 80 acres of my forfeited selection; and on the 26th May I was at Mittagong, and coming back stopped at Picton Lakes for dinner.

530. Mr. Abigail.] You said the 26th May was the time you saw Mr. Davenport—it could not have been the same date? Then it must have been on the 25th I saw Mr. Davenport.

FRIDAY, 16 JULY, 1886.

Present:—

MR. ABBOTT,	MR. COPELAND,
MR. ABIGAIL,	MR. DAY,
MR. HENRY CLARKE,	MR. FOSTER.

MR. JAMES HENRY YOUNG.

JOSEPH PALMER ABBOTT, Esq., IN THE CHAIR.

Mr. McLaughlin appeared as Solicitor for Mr. Barbour.

Robert Barbour, Esq., M.P., further examined:—

531. Mr. McLaughlin.] When we adjourned you said that it was on the 25th of May that you saw Mr. Davenport? Yes.

532. Will you tell the Committee what took place when you came in contact with Mr. Shoobridge? As I have stated, I had stopped at Picton Lakes for dinner. After dinner I went down to the Railway-station to take the train; I had to wait some time, and I met Shoobridge there; he was carting coal. I told him that the land he wanted to buy from me was forfeited or cancelled, and he could take it up if he liked; he said that he would like to get it, but he had not got the money, would I lend him the money. I said, "I don't know; what is it you want?" And he said he wanted the two pieces of 40 acres with a frontage to the water, and some of the flat near the dry lagoon. I sat down and took my pencil out, and went into figures, and I said, "I suppose you want somewhere about from 100 to 200 acres;" and he said he supposed it would be about that. I said, "If you take 200 acres, that will want £20 deposit." I said it was already surveyed, and it would be cheaper for him to take the whole, as that would save the expense of survey.

R. Barbour,
Esq., M.P.
16 July, 1886.

- R. Barbour,
Esq., M.P.
16 July, 1886.
533. Chairman.] In case of a subdivision? In case of a subdivision—and he said would I sell the remainder for him, that he did not want. I said I could easily do that; I did not think there would be any difficulty in selling it. I figured out the matter, and I said 200 acres would be £20 deposit, which he would have to pay, but if he took it all, and I sold for him the remaining 300 acres—about 300 acres, or not so much as that, because 80 acres were not taken into account that Creighton had purchased—it would be about 260 acres, I think, that would remain, and I saw that even at 10s. an acre profit that would come to £180, and I thought that in that case I would be quite safe in advancing the deposit, and I agreed to do so.
534. Mr. McLaughlin.] Had Mr. Shoobridge applied to you previous to this to purchase this land from you? Yes, he had applied to me several times, but the last time was about six months before that.
535. To purchase a portion of your selection? Yes; the portion on the flat that he now said he wanted.
536. He then wanted to purchase to enlarge his own holding? Yes; his own holding is on the hill; there is no water at all on it, and he took his water from the piece of land that I had. I permitted him to take the water—that was the only water within a reasonable distance—and he wanted the land principally on account of the water, and partly on account of the flat, which he could cultivate to grow fodder for his horses. He said if I would sell it to him he would give me a good profit on it.
537. How long had you known Shoobridge? Between three and four years.
538. Had you discovered anything in his character to prevent you from trusting him as an honest straightforward man, who would repay you any money you would lend? Nothing.
539. Did you not in fact form the opinion that he was a thoroughly honest, honorable, hardworking man, such as you heard Mrs. Eldridge describe him to be? Yes.
540. The reverse of a dishonest man? Yes.
541. And you did agree then to advance this deposit for him? Yes; and he asked me, as he was not very well acquainted with such matters, to act for him. He said, "You are likely to have an opponent in Mr. Davenport—Mr. Davenport wants these two pieces"; and he said, "I would like you to carry the business through for me." I said he would have to give me an authority, signed before a magistrate, and he said he would do so; and he went to Picton for the purpose.
542. You obtained an authority from him—a general authority? Yes, to act for him in this matter.
543. To make an additional selection, as you thought best, in his interest? Yes.
544. It is among the papers that have been produced before the Committee? Yes; I saw it the other day.
545. You attended at Camden to make the selection? Yes.
546. And you there met Mr. Davenport? Yes.
547. When the office opened you both lodged applications? Yes.
548. The result, I presume, was a ballot? Yes; the Land Agent said that as there were two applications for the same piece of land there would have to be a ballot, and he got out his box and cards, and drew the cards himself, and said Shoobridge was successful.
549. Did Mr. Davenport object to your acting as agent for Shoobridge, or make one single demur? No.
550. Did you hear anything further of the matter till it was brought up in Parliament? Nothing whatever.
551. You heard no complaint from Mr. Davenport or anyone else? No; he went back with me in the train, and we talked friendly enough, as usual.
552. In reference to your obtaining a refund of your deposit, will you explain to the Committee what knowledge you have of the working of the Land Acts—how long have you been familiar with the working of the Land Acts? Since 1873.
553. Do you know the practice adopted by the various Ministers for Lands? Yes.
554. What has been the practice in reference to refunding deposits, where the land has not been measured or surveyed according to the 12th section of the Act, 39 Victoria No. 13? If the land is not surveyed within twelve months the conditional purchaser is entitled to get back his deposit, and if he applied for it he has always got it back in all cases that ever I knew of.
555. That has been the invariable practice with all Ministers for Lands, to the best of your knowledge? Yes.
556. Was it the practice to regard the measurement as complete on the day the selection was confirmed, or when the survey took place? The matter was never complete until approved of by the Surveyor-General.
557. According to the 13th section of the Act mentioned? Yes. Up to that time he has the power, and he often exercises it, of ordering a fresh survey.
558. We have been told by Mr. Wilson that your selection was dated 6th September, 1883, that the land was measured on the 24th October, 1883, and the plan of that measurement was approved of on 13th October, 1884? Yes, that is the fact.
559. Was it in consequence of your right under the 13th section of 39 Victoria No. 13 that you applied for a return of your deposit? Yes.
560. Is there one iota of truth in the statement that you attempted to obtain a refund of your deposit in consequence of your being a Member of Parliament? Not in the slightest. I called as any member of the public would be entitled to do. I saw Mr. Copeland; he sent for the Under Secretary, and I demanded my deposit. Mr. Copeland looked up the Act, and said he did not know whether he could give it to me. I said, "You cannot refuse it; it has always been paid to others, and why should not I get it?" He said he would think over the matter; and a day or two after, when I made inquiry, he said he would have to keep back the survey fees. I demurred to that, and said he was not entitled to do it; that it had never been done before, and I thought he should not do it now. He said that was the only way in which he could entertain it. Some time after that I got the refund, less the £37 6s. 9d. for survey fees.
561. Chairman.] I presume, in making the application for this land, you were acting as agent for Shoobridge under the provisions of the 25th section of the present Crown Lands Act? Yes; under the one that refers to A.C.P.'s—that application for A.C.P. may be made by an agent with an authority, and application for an original C.P. must be made in person.
562. Before that application was made, had you entered into any contract or lease, or agreed to become the purchaser, lessee, or licensee of the land applied for for your own benefit? No.
563. Or for the benefit of any person other than Shoobridge? No.

564. There was no agreement between you and Shoobridge by which you could at any time become the owner of this land, or have any interest in it? None whatever; the whole of the transaction was at his request; I said I would sell for him what he did not require.
565. You did not promise to buy for him? No.
566. The amount of money advanced by you was £54? Yes.
567. Do you know of many cases in the Lands Office where the money has been refunded where there has not been a survey within twelve months? I have known a great many cases which have gone through my hands of selectors applying, and I have known them to be got through other sources.
568. Mr. Abigail.] Referring to these refunds, have they been obtained where the selectors have not fulfilled the condition of residence? I have never had any case where they were not refunded.
569. Then, if Mr. Oliver says the officials of the Department read the Act to mean that this refund is contingent upon the condition of residence having been fulfilled, do you think he is correct? I have never heard of any cases where the refund has been refused.
570. Can you give us any cases where the selectors have not fulfilled the conditions of residence—never resided upon their land—and yet got a refund? I cannot give you any cases. I took up this land on the 6th September, 1883; within three months I built a hut, and I slept on the land; and I continued residing on the land, generally from the Saturday till the Monday morning, until I sold my saw-mill.
571. Chairman.] How long was that? It would be about nine or ten months.
572. After the three months? After the three months. I had then intended to build a house for my family, and I got plans prepared, but private matters prevented me carrying it out; after that I was only occasionally on the land until I applied for a refund of my deposit. I have heard allusion made to a report by the surveyor; when the surveyor was on the land it was only about six weeks after the selection was made—it was after that six weeks that I built the hut and resided in it.
573. Mr. Abigail.] But you did not within the first three months? I did; I am telling you I did; my first evidence was that I took it up on the 6th September; within three months I built a hut and slept on the land; then I continued to reside as I have described; the surveyor was on the land before the time I was required to occupy it, and that accounts for his report.
574. Is there anybody in the district that could certify to your residing on the land? Several. The woman you brought here could have told you; she knows that at one time my blankets were stolen, and I had to go to her and borrow blankets, and I took them to her the next day.
575. You have heard it stated, and you know from the surveyor's report that he states there is no evidence of residence? I am now explaining how that came about. The first surveyor did state that, and I tell you how it was—that he was on the ground before the three months were up.
576. Did you receive a notice from the Land Board summoning you to attend—informing you they were going to inquire into your non-residence? Yes; when I came back from the General Elections last October or November, I got a letter in which they intimated to me that an inquiry was to be held, and that occurred during the time I was away down at the Murray.
577. Did you make any communication to the Land Board that you did not receive it in time to attend? I did; and the clerk-in-charge looked up the report, and he said they had not dealt with the case, and I would receive further intimation; he said the Board were not satisfied, and they postponed the final determination, and I should get another intimation when I could attend, and could give what evidence I wanted to give.
578. Did you make that communication in writing to the Land Board? No.
579. You made no written communication to the Board about not receiving their notice? No; I made a personal application.
580. To whom? I went to the Metropolitan Land Board Office in Sydney; I saw the clerk-in-charge there; I asked him what was done in that case, showing him the letter; I said I had just come back from the elections, and I could not attend on that account—I was on the Murray 600 or 700 miles away—what could I do; he turned up the papers, and he said the Board had postponed the final determination of the case, and I would get further notice, when I could attend and adduce whatever evidence I had to give.
581. And you received no further notice? I did receive further notice.
582. What was the purport of it? The next notice was an official letter from the Lands Office, stating that, under the direction of the Minister of Lands, upon the report of the Board, the case would be postponed until the declarations were received, when it would be further dealt with. A few weeks after I got a second letter stating that it would be brought up for forfeiture as early as possible. I took both letters to Mr. Copland, who was Minister of Lands at the time; I said, "What does this mean; here is one letter telling me nothing will be done until further issue, and here is another telling me it is going for forfeiture as early as possible—which do you intend to act upon?" He said, "I will send for the papers and look into it and let you know; I do not remember the case exactly; I think it must have been brought to me as a formal matter, as I remember no representation by the Department to me about this." He said he would give me an answer in a few days.
583. What date was it you say you took up the first selection? 6th September, 1883.
584. Are you aware that on the 6th December, 1883, the surveyor reports, "Non-residence; no improvements whatever upon the land." That is four months after? Three months, I think.
585. Three months after you took it up? If he was there on the 6th December he would have found me there.
586. His report is dated 6th December, but he speaks of "the portion measured by me on the 24th October"—one month after you selected? Rather more.
587. Then this would be six weeks after you selected? Yes.
588. The surveyor reports that you had made no improvements up to that date? Quite right; it was after that, and before the three months had expired, that I built the hut.
589. When did you commence? I think it was one or two days before the expiry of the three months.
590. I suppose you did that on purpose to bring yourself within the provisions of the law? Yes; I knew that if I was later I would be too late.
591. You built a hut—what was the value of it? About £8 or £10.
592. You are also aware that another surveyor again reported that there were no improvements? That was a long while after; and I am also aware that he reports that there was a humpy.
593. That he was told there had been a humpy, but he saw no signs nor evidence of it. It was on the 25th you saw Mr. Davenport? I think so, as near as possible. Mr. Davenport says the 25th, and I have no reason to think he gave a wrong date.

R. Barbour,
Esq., M.P.
16 July, 1886.

594. On the 26th, after making that proposition to Mr. Davenport, which he declined, you met Mr. Shoobridge and entered into the arrangement with him? Yes.

595. You were with Shoobridge a considerable time about this arrangement? Not very long at that time; he made arrangements to meet me at Redbank. I had to go to Redbank, and he made an arrangement to meet me there, and he would tell me whether he would go to Mr. Broomfield—I think that was the name—a mile or two distant, or whether he would go to Picton. I told him I would sleep in Picton that night, and I thought it might be as well to get it done there. We met before that. He came to the station, and we walked then from there down to Picton.

596. That was the following day after you had seen Mr. Davenport? Yes. The day I saw Mr. Davenport I went up to Mittagong that night by the mail-train.

597. You have no doubt you told Mr. Shoobridge you could sell the balance of the land? No doubt.

598. Do you know that Mr. Shoobridge has stated that he could not, or would not, tell the Committee anything that transpired on that occasion? I heard him give positive evidence of what did transpire at this table.

599. I asked him the question (289): "When you agreed about the lending of the £54, what was the arrangement?" and he replied: "It was that I should repay it as quickly as I could, but there was no further arrangement?" That was about the payment of the money—no further arrangement about the payment of the money.

600. After this matter was brought before Parliament, you went up the following Saturday night and saw Mr. Shoobridge, did you not? Yes.

601. You took him up the receipt? I did.

602. What conversation took place then about the matter being brought up in Parliament, or referred to in Parliament? I said I have brought you up your receipt; I could not get up last Saturday as I had to go to the Hawkesbury River; you may hear of this matter having been talked of in Parliament, and they may send for you to attend a Select Committee of the House. He said, "Oh, I knew all about it; here is a paper which has been sent to me"—and he brought out the Telegraph, which had two or three columns about the case. I said, "If they send for you you will have to go; they will pay your expenses, and all you have to do is to tell the truth." He then said would I have a cup of tea. I said, "No; I must go, it is getting very dark, because I have 2 or 3 miles to go, and I wish your son would go down and show me the road." He said, "Yes, but you must not go till you get a cup of tea; my girls will get you a cup of tea." I said, "Well, be as quick as possible." I got the cup of tea, and his son came in, put on his coat, and went with me till he got me on to a part of the road that I knew, and I said, "You can go back now."

603. Did you make that journey on purpose to take him the receipt and tell him this? Yes; that is, the journey from the railway station to where his house is. It was on Saturday night, and I stayed in the neighbourhood till Monday morning; I went on to Mittagong after that, and remained till Monday.

604. You are aware that Shoobridge says nothing particular took place? That is his interpretation of it; I am telling you what took place, and you can put your own interpretation on it.

605. I asked Shoobridge (question 273): "Did he speak to you about the case—nothing at all about the case?" and his reply is: "I do not remember what he said; he simply came and gave me the papers." Is that true, after what you have just said? You bothered him a bit; I heard him say there was nothing particular said. You bothered him by asking him tremendous questions, and he said nothing particular was said; he said his head was wrong, or something of that kind.

606. In reply to question 275, he says, again: "I do not believe anything was said about the case," but you admit you told him? I am telling you the fact.

607. You state you did tell him he would hear something about this case? Yes; and he said he had heard all about it already, and showed me the paper.

608. Then what he said here cannot be correct? I know nothing of that; he will answer for himself; I do not see anything incompatible with the statement I make.

609. You stated you made some memoranda at the time—did Shoobridge sign any paper in reference to the payment of the money, or anything? I did not state that I made any memoranda; I said I sat down and went into figures; I wanted to see how much money he wanted, and whether I would be right in entertaining his proposal; I found that all he wanted for himself was about £20 deposit on the 200 acres.

610. Did he sign any document for this money? No.

611. You lent it him without any signature, receipt, or anything whatever? I did.

612. You had never lent him any money before on any other occasion? Not as a loan; we had had dealings.

613. No loan? No loan. It amounted to a good many pounds.

614. As to the timber on the land—is it a fact that you entered into a contract to supply the Government with timber from this land? It is not a fact. You are asking whether I entered into a contract to supply the Government with timber from this land; I did not enter into any contract of that sort.

615. Nor yet with the Goulburn Council? Not to supply timber from that land. I started a saw-mill; that saw-mill produced timber, and that timber was sold by me—part to the Government, part to a contractor at Goulburn, and part to a contractor at Picton; but I never entered into any contract to cut the timber from that land; in point of fact none of it was cut there; they would not have taken it; it was too bad.

616. Mr. Foster.] How long did you say you continued the condition of residence? About nine months.

617. After that you did not do so? After that I continued, but not constantly, only occasionally; I was not there continuously; I was only there occasionally after that.

618. Twelve months after that you applied for your second conditional purchase? I forget the date; I think it was.

619. Why was it you gave up your claim to this land and abandoned it, if you had fulfilled your condition of residence, and had a right to the land? Because I had not, after the nine months; I felt in my own mind that I had not sufficiently fulfilled the conditions to warrant me in making the declaration when the time came round; before that came round I felt satisfied it would be better for me to abandon it.

620. Mr. McLaughlin.] You had not made any improvements? No; the hut was the only improvement I had made; I had intended to make it a family home.

621. But the saw-mill did not pay sufficiently well? No.

622. Mr. H. Clarke.] I think you said that you did not feel yourself justified in making the declaration as to residence on the land, that that was one of the reasons why you gave it up? Yes; towards the latter end I felt that when the time came round for making the declaration, which would be about a year after, I could not make it, and I then abandoned the land.

623. Has it been usual, when the conditions of residence have not been fulfilled, for the money to be returned to the selector? Latterly I know the Department made a regulation that on applications for refund being made they would require to be satisfied that the selector had performed the condition of residence during the twelve months. I had a discussion upon that with the Minister, and I held that it was not necessary. I know it was a rule of the Department, but it was not necessary under the Act; the Act is imperative that if the measurement is not done within the twelve months the refund must be made.

624. Do you consider that you were entitled to a refund of the deposit whether you fulfilled the conditions or not? I do; the law is most imperative.

625. Mr. Day.] Had you any arrangement with Mr. Shoobridge for him to transfer this land to you again? None whatever.

626. This was simply a loan, then? Simply a loan.

627. The land was taken up for him, and for his benefit? Yes; and I was to sell for him what he did not require, and he was to pay me the difference, if there was any difference.

628. Supposing Shoobridge came to the conclusion, a few weeks after the additional conditional purchase was made, to sell to somebody, there was nothing in the law to prevent him doing so? Nothing in the law or in our arrangement.

629. Then Mr. Shoobridge could have sold this land to me or anybody else without consulting you? Yes.

630. All you required from him was to pay you your money back again? Yes.

631. Would you have had any claim against Shoobridge if he had sold the land to anybody else? No legal claim at all.

632. Would you have had any claim to the purchase money—any legal claim? None whatever.

633. Then in point of fact all the claim you had on Shoobridge was to get your money back? Yes.

634. Mr. McLaughlin.] The Government receipt shows the amount? Yes; the Land Agent's receipt said, "William Shoobridge, per R. Barbour."

635. That was quite sufficient acknowledgment? Yes.

636. Mr. Day.] Would you have had any claim at all against Shoobridge if he had sold this land and put the money in his own pocket—would you have had any claim against him as against the land? No.

637. Mr. J. H. Young.] Do I understand that there was no term at which you expected this money to be repaid? None whatever; he was to pay me as soon as possible; he had a contract, and he expected soon to get £20.

638. And he was to pay you interest? Yes, he was to pay interest; there was no arrangement about it; it was not fixed. I will charge him 10 per cent., and charge him for my time that I acted for him as agent.

639. But without any distinct acknowledgment to that effect? No.

640. Then you consider yourself in this position, that you are entitled to charge him what you like for time and interest? I must charge him a reasonable amount.

641. You said your arrangement was that you were to sell for him? Whatever portion of the land he did not require. The arrangement was in these words: He said, "Well, if I take the lot, do you think you could sell what portion I do not require?" and I said, "Yes, no doubt I could sell it at a good profit." He said then would I sell it; and I said, "Yes, I will be very glad to sell whatever you do not want."

642. With reference to your residing upon the selection and fulfilling the conditions, you said that within two days of the expiration of the three months you commenced to build a humpy? A hut.

643. Will you tell us how much you resided there directly after you built the hut? Almost every week, from Saturday to Monday.

644. Your family, of course, did not reside there? No.

645. Not at any time? Not at any time.

646. Was it then ever your bona fide residence at my time? I considered it so.

647. You had a letter stating that the land would be sent on for forfeiture? Yes.

648. I do not know the date of that letter, but did you, almost immediately after the receipt of that letter, hand it back to the Minister, and see him on the subject? Yes; I showed him both letters.

649. At the Lands Office, I presume? I was at the Lands Office, but whether it was here or at the Lands Office I cannot say.

650. I wish you would try and remember where you handed that letter to the Minister—was it at the Lands Office or at the Parliament House? I think it was at the Parliament House that I showed him both letters; I gave him the two letters.

651. What conversation took place upon that occasion? I said, "Here are two letters I have received from your Department—one letter says nothing will be done until there has been a further investigation." I thought by that everything was arranged, but here to-day I have received this, altering the arrangement altogether; what does it mean. He said, "I do not know anything about it; but give me the letters, and I will call for the papers in the morning; I do not remember anything about it personally; I will call for the papers and let you know." I said, "Do not take that first letter away; I want to hold that as evidence."

652. Did you see him afterwards at his own office? Yes.

653. How soon afterwards? Within two or three days.

654. And you have given us the purport of what took place then? Yes.

655. I think you said he called in the Under Secretary? No; that was later, when I went about the deposit. The first time I called to get the answer, he said, "I do not know, but I think you are too late; I think they are gone for forfeiture." I said, "Surely you cannot blow hot and cold in that way"; and he said, "I will get the papers and see."

656. That was the first time you saw him at the Lands Office? Yes.

657. Immediately after that you saw him at the Lands Office again? Yes; immediately after that I sent in the letter claiming the deposit, and then I called again to press for the deposit, and at that time the Under Secretary was called in, and the conversation took place that I have described.

658. Mr. Copeland.] I believe you are pretty well posted up in the Lands Act—in all the Lands Acts? Yes, I think I am.

659. You have acted as land agent for other people? Yes.

660. That is, as adviser for them under the Lands Acts? Yes.

R. Barbour,
Esq., M.P.

16 July, 1886.

- R. Barbour, Esq., M.P.
16 July, 1886.
661. Can you say whether it would not have been competent for you, instead of finding the money for Shoobridge, to have purchased the land, the A.C.P., from Shoobridge, and taken up the additional conditional purchase yourself in virtue of the original C.P.? Of course there would have been nothing to prevent me doing that.
662. Had you done so, you could have made the whole of it freehold, and sold the land immediately—virtually the next day, if you chose? Yes, if he had had the necessary improvements on his land. Mr. Davenport had all the improvements on, but this man had not.
663. During the time you were supposed to be doing this residence on the land, were you a Member of Parliament? Yes.
664. And I suppose, being a Member of Parliament, it was necessary for you to spend the most of your time in Sydney? Yes; I was a very constant attendant in the House, and was always from Monday till Friday in town.
665. I believe that it is a fact that during this time you paid your usual attention to your Parliamentary duties? Yes, punctual attention.
666. You were in Parliament nearly every day? Yes.
667. And I presume your Parliamentary duties necessitated your presence in Sydney at that time? Yes.
668. Do you know any other Members of Parliament who had taken up selections which required residence? Yes.
669. You have referred to my refusing to grant you the full amount of refund—that is, to my deduction of the cost of survey? Yes.
670. Do you remember my stating what the reason why I refused to grant you the full refund and deducted the cost of survey was? You said it had cost the Government money to survey the land, and you did not think you could give it back without deducting the cost of survey. I said, "Well, if you do deduct it, it is more than anybody else has ever done in your position before."

Francis Abigail, Esq., M.P., a member of the Committee, examined in his place:—

- F. Abigail, Esq., M.P.
16 July, 1886.
671. Mr. MoLaughlin.] You are one of the Members for West Sydney? Yes.
672. You moved for this Committee? Yes.
673. Do you remember stating in Parliament that Mr. Barbour took Mr. Shoobridge and gave him two or three noggins of gin, then brought him across to a Magistrate, and got him to make his mark on a paper of which he did not know the contents? I stated that from information supplied to me; I spoke from information conveyed to me at that time by my informant.
674. Was it not Mr. Davenport that so informed you? It was.
675. Did you hear Mr. Oliver examined here? I did not; I was not present; I was only present for a very few moments, but Mr. Oliver was not then under examination.
676. Can you state who furnished you with copies of the report of the surveyor who surveyed Mr. Barbour's selection? I could do so, but I decline.
677. Do you also decline to say who furnished you with copies of the whole of the proceedings in reference to this case? I did not have the whole of the proceedings in reference to this case.
678. Copies you had? I do not admit that I had copies of any proceedings.
679. I mean the documents you read in the Assembly? I decline to say who supplied me with the documents I read in the Assembly.
680. Do you decline to say whether they were supplied to you at the instance of Mr. Davenport? Mr. Davenport gave me a good deal of information—most of the information.
681. Do you decline to say whether these documents were supplied to you at the instance of Mr. Davenport? I decline to say.
682. Do you decline to say whether you received them from Mr. Davenport or from an officer in the Lands Department? I have already answered the question.
683. Do you decline to say whether you received them from an officer in the Lands Department? I decline to say from whom I received them.
684. Do you decline to give the Committee any information in respect to these reports and papers—as to how you became possessed of these reports and papers? I do, except to say that Mr. Davenport supplied me with most of the information I received.
685. Did you not move for this Committee in the interest of Mr. Davenport, so as to secure this land for Mr. Davenport? No; I moved for this Committee in the interest of the public, believing a wrong to have been done.
686. Were you aware of the fact that Mr. Davenport was anxious to obtain this land? I do say positively I was not aware that he was anxious to obtain the land.
687. You knew he was an applicant for it? I did.
688. Do you know how these copies were obtained that were handed to you? I do not.
689. Did you know whether they were correct copies at the time? I did not know anything about them; I do not know now whether they were correct copies or not.
690. But you are now satisfied that one of the statements Mr. Davenport made to you is incorrect? I certainly am not.
691. Are you not satisfied that Shoobridge wrote his name, and did not make his mark? Yes.
692. And so far Mr. Davenport misinformed you? —

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.
NEW SOUTH WALES.

PRIVILEGE—SEAT OF MR. CRAMSIE, A MEMBER FOR BALRANALD.
(SUPPLY OF FORAGE TO GOVERNMENT RABBIT CAMPS, BY CRAMSIE, BOWDEN, & CO.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be printed, 18 February, 1886.

RETURN to an Order made by the Honorable the Legislative Assembly of New South Wales, dated the 9th February, 1886, That there be laid upon the Table of this House,—

“All papers connected with the supply, by Cramsie, Bowden, & Co., of forage and plant to the Government Rabbit Camps in the Balranald District.”

(Mr. Neild.)

The Under Secretary for Mines to Superintending Rabbit Inspector Crommelin.

Sir, Department of Mines, Rabbit Branch, Sydney, 19 March, 1885.

I have to request you to immediately reply to my B.C. of the 6th instant, asking you to give an explanation of letter received from Mr. Boynton, Beehive Store, Balranald, copy of which was sent you.

I have, &c.,

T. H. MYRING,

(For Under Secretary).

Replied to on the 15th.—J.O.W.C., B.C., 31/3/85. The Under Secretary for Mines. Attach papers.—T.H.M. Herewith. Inform Mr. Boynton of the action ordered by the Minister.—T.H.M., 20/4/85. Done; copy of each circular sent to Mr. Boynton.—H.U.H., 22/4/85. Put away, 25/1/86.

Mr. T. H. Boynton to The Under Secretary for Mines.

Sir,

Balranald, 22 March, 1885.

I have the honor to acknowledge receipt of your letter of the 19th, in reply to mine of the 24th ultimo. I now enclose a copy of telegram I received from a storekeeper in Euston, who, knowing that the Minister for Mines was in Balranald on that date, desired me to present it to him. I did not do so, preferring that the matter should be brought before the Department in writing. I cannot state that I endorse the idea of tenders being called; what I desire is that those, viz., the overseers who are to spend the money of the Government, and also of the men employed, should not be trammelled by prejudice, but should gain quotations from the storekeepers, and then on price and quality decide.

I have, &c.,

T. H. BOYNTON.

Submitted. Mr. Boynton's proposition that inspectors and overseers should compare prices and quality of goods before purchasing is but fair to storekeepers as well as to the Department. In one or two cases recently accounts have been received from country stores in which charges have been made far in excess of prices current in the respective townships, and it has been necessary to return these accounts to the claimants for reduction of excess charges. If my proposal to visit the camps be entertained, I will fully instruct overseers on all such matters as these.—T.H.M., 25/3/85. The Under Secretary.

Submitted.—H.W., 30/3/85. Appd.—J. P. ABBOTT.—30/3/85. Prepare circulars to inspectors and overseers.—T.H.M., 11/4/85. Circulars 29 and 30 sent to inspectors and overseers.—H.U.H., 17/4/85.

Telegram from Mr. P. M'Monnies to Mr. Boynton.

14/3/85.

SUPERINTENDENT Crommelin compelled Government rabbit overseers to trade with one stated store. Reason, cheaper. This has never been tested. I suggest tenders should be called for.

Superintending Rabbit Inspector Crommelin to T. H. Myring, Esq.

Sir,

Balranald, 15 March, 1885.

In reply to your B.C. letter of the 6th instant, asking me for an explanation in reference to a charge made against me by Mr. T. H. Boynton, of this town, in which he states that I interdicted the Government camps from dealing with him, and have also used insulting language to him, I have the honor to inform you that the charges have no foundation whatever, and I deny them. To support my statement as to interdicting the Government camps, I beg to enclose herewith a letter from each overseer in my division. In reference to the charge of insulting language, I can only say that I have not even spoken to him for the last six months, neither have I before that used any insulting language.

I have, &c.,

JAMES C. W. CROMMELIN,

Supt. Rabbit Inspector.

Submitted. Perhaps a copy of Mr. Crommelin's letter and copies of the overseers' statements might be furnished Mr. Boynton.—T.H.M., 20/3/85. The Under Secretary.

Inform Mr. Boynton that Mr. Crommelin denies the charge, and that every overseer does the same, except Mr. Brown, who does not allege that he got instructions not to deal with him.—J. P. AMOTT, 21/3/85. Inform.—T.H.M. Informed, 26/3/85.—W.P.

Mr. T. H. Boynton to The Minister for Mines.

Sir,

Bee-hive Store, Balranald, 24 February, 1885.

I regret to have to bring before your notice the action of Mr. C. W. Crommelin, in respect to his endeavours to restrict my business with the various members of the Government rabbit camps. The ill feeling on the part of Mr. Crommelin arose from an account owing by Mr. Clarke, overseer of one of the camps, for dogs' meat supplied by the Co-operative Butchering Company, which Company was really myself. On the recommendation of Mr. Crommelin, Clarke refused to pay. I asked him repeatedly for the money, but he refused. I stated that my servants had no interest to serve in charging him improperly; and such being the case, I brought the matter to Court, and gained a verdict with all costs and expenses. Since that time, the ill feeling displayed on the part of Mr. Crommelin has been intense. Not resting with using insulting language to me, he has interdicted all the various camps from dealing with me. Mr. Brown, overseer of No. 11 camp, was the only one who came and placed the matter before me, and named what had passed with Mr. Crommelin and himself. I am not aware how far a Government officer can assert his authority, but I cannot think the Government of New South Wales would countenance anything so unjust. Your kind investigation will be esteemed.

I have, &c.,

T. H. BOYNTON.

Mr. Crommelin, for explanation.—T.H.M., for U.S., B.C., 6/3/85. Explanation of letters (7) herewith.—J. C. W. CROMMELIN, B.C., 15/3/85. T. H. Myring, Esq.

Mr. S. Brown to Superintending Rabbit Inspector Crommelin.

Sir,

Balranald, 14 March, 1885.

Your letter of 11th inst., relative to Mr. T. H. Boynton's complaint, and reference to me in connection therewith, did not reach me until yesterday afternoon.

In reply, I have the honor to state that you did not "interdict" me in so many words from dealing with Mr. Boynton, but you informed me of his having summoned Mr. Overseer Clarke, and spoke of him generally in a way that would have the effect of preventing a timid overseer (naturally anxious to stand well with the Chief Superintending Inspector) from dealing with Mr. Boynton. I may add that Mr. Boynton made use of my name without my knowledge, but that when he subsequently mentioned the matter to me I did not object.

I understand from our conversation of last night that there is to be to-day something in the nature of a general inquiry by the Hon. the Minister for Mines. I would esteem it a favour if you would mention my explanation of having been at the Paika Creek Inn upon a certain occasion, and your comment thereon, as the question involved simply is whether overseers have any time which they may call their own.

I have, &c.,

S. BROWN,

Overseer, No. 11 Camp.

Mr. Overseer Thomas to Superintending Rabbit Inspector Crommelin.

Sir,

Government Rabbit Camp, No. 2,

Paika, 14 March, 1885.

I have the honor to inform you, in answer to the charges brought against you by T. H. Boynton, merchant, Balranald, that, as regards myself, they are entirely false, and that you have never influenced me in any way from getting rations where I please.

I gave Mr. T. H. Boynton my ration order for the months of January and February, and my reason for withdrawing was, that at the expiration of the month I had occasion to pay one of the Government men off, and as the amount of the men's wages had not been placed to my credit at the time, I gave him an order on Mr. Boynton for the amount, with a letter stating the case, and asking him to pay the order, and that when the amount of the order was placed to my credit, I would refund the money to him.

him. He refused to pay the order, and told the man he saw nothing in it, thereby putting me to great inconvenience. I wrote to Mr. T. H. Boynton, telling him I had been obliged by other storekeepers in a similar matter, and that I should give my ration orders for the future to those storekeepers who saw something in retaining the custom of an overseer who spent and caused to be spent a matter of from £20 to £25 per month.

I have, &c.,

F. J. THOMAS,

Overseer, No. 2.

Mr. M. Smith to Superintending Rabbit Inspector Crommelin.

Government Rabbit Camp, No. 6,
Balranald, 9 March, 1885.

Sir,

I have the honor to inform you that Mr. Boynton's name was never mentioned by you to me in reference to buying stores, and if Mr. Boynton states that you interdicted me from buying stores from him it is a gross falsehood.

I have, &c.,

MATTHEW SMITH.

Mr. S. H. Taylor to Superintending Rabbit Inspector Crommelin.

No. 1 Government Rabbit Party, Windomal Canally, N. Balranald, 14 March, 1885.

In reply to yours, respecting pressure put upon myself with respect to buying rations, all I can say—"It is false."

If you remember, on my arrival at Balranald, February 4th, 1884, tenders were put in by storekeepers at that township for supply of rations.

Mr. Inspector Dwyer and yourself referred to Sydney vs rations, and the reply was Taylor and Thomas can arrange about this matter, having had the same to do in South Australia.

I have, &c.,

SAMUEL H. TAYLOR.

Mr. Overseer Clarke to Superintending Rabbit Inspector Crommelin.

No. 5 Government Rabbit Party, Balranald, 11 March, 1885.

In reference to Mr. Boynton's letter, charging you with having used your influence among the different rabbit overseers, as regards purchase of ration stores, allow me to state that in no way whatever have I acted upon any but my own opinion in the matter.

Mr. Boynton makes a gross error in insinuating that I have been biased in the matter by any statement from you. It is also a well-known fact among the overseers that the procuring of rations rests entirely with themselves. As in this case the whole cause of complaint rests indirectly on my shoulders, allow me to give a plain statement of facts. In my position as Government Overseer an account for dogs' meat was presented to me by the Co-operative Butchering Company, which was, in my opinion, exorbitant, and as such I represented it to Mr. Boynton. He told me he would speak to Mr. Levy, the other member of the firm, and see if he would agree to the account being amended. Some three weeks afterwards Mr. Boynton informed me that Mr. Levy would not agree to any reduction in the account. I then, by instructions from Mr. Superintendent Crommelin, demanded a detailed account, which the Co-operative Butchering Company were unable to give. This being the case I refused to advise payment of the bill, and was sued. On reporting the matter to Mr. Rabbit Inspector Dwyer, who authorized the procuring of the dogs' meat, he instructed me to defend the case, which I did, with the result that it was given in favour of the plaintiff with costs. This is all I know about the matter; but as to having been in any way biased by you as regards purchase of stores is an absurd statement, and as such I give it a complete denial.

I have, &c.,

A. J. CLARKE,

Rabbit Overseer.

Mr. Overseer Torrens to Superintending Rabbit Inspector Crommelin.

No. 12 Government Rabbit Party, Balranald, 11 March, 1885.

If Mr. Boynton or anybody else has given you to understand that I have been obeying orders from you as regards the particular establishment at which I purchase my stores, I beg to give it a complete denial. The purchase of stores being outside routine Government service, I went where it pleased me to do; and, as far as Mr. Boynton is concerned, have, beyond a few words on social matters, had no conversation with him whatever. The idea of having been interdicted by you from patronizing Mr. Boynton's store is absurd, his name not having been mentioned to me in connection with business at all.

A. R. TORRENS,

Overseer, No. 12 Government Rabbit Party.

I never heard you mention Mr. Boynton's name to me on any subject, or the name of any of the business people in Balranald.

Overseer of No. 13 Rabbit Camp.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.
NEW SOUTH WALES.

PARLIAMENTARY HANSARD.

(REPORT FROM GOVERNMENT PRINTER ON COST OF DAILY ISSUE.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be printed, 29 June, 1886.

RETURN (in part) to an Order of the Legislative Assembly, dated 9th June, 1886,
That there be laid upon the Table of this House,—

“ A Report from the Government Printer, and also from the Chief Parliamentary Reporter, as to the cost of establishing and maintaining a daily issue of Parliamentary Hansard, similar, or otherwise, to that in use in Queensland.”

(Mr. Hammond.)

PARLIAMENTARY HANSARD.

The Government Printer to The Under Secretary for Finance and Trade.

Government Printing Office, Sydney, 23 June, 1886.

With reference to the Resolution passed by the Legislative Assembly, on the motion of Mr. Hammond, on the 9th instant, for a report on the subject of the Parliamentary Hansard, I do myself the honor to submit the following statement:—

With regard to the Queensland Hansard I have ascertained the following particulars—

1. That the total annual cost of producing it is £7,328.
2. That newspapers are supplied at the rate of 3s. 3d. per 100 copies; subscribers, 6s. per 100 copies; occasional purchasers, 1d. per copy; newspapers for single copies, double the sessional rates; book Hansard, three volumes, £3 2s. 6d.

In considering the question as to whether the Queensland plan could be adopted here, it must be borne in mind, that the number of members of the New South Wales Parliament is very much larger than that of Queensland; that the duration of their Sessions is as a rule not so long as ours, while the sittings are invariably shorter.

Furthermore, the number of newspapers, and the extent of their circulation, is, in the aggregate, much greater in this Colony than in Queensland.

Having regard to these circumstances, it seems to me that it would be almost practically impossible to adopt the Queensland system; for although it might be said that the whole of the newspapers would not accept copies of the Hansard, for issue as supplements, yet provision would have to be made on the basis of the possibility of their doing so.

To make such provision would necessitate the purchase of rapid printing machines, such as are used on newspapers, the cost of which cannot be accurately estimated; but it would be very large. Nor is it possible to arrive even at an approximation of the cost that would be involved in maintaining the additional staff that would be required to print the Hansard at the early hour at which the morning newspapers are issued.

The plan which I now submit, and on which I have framed the estimate hereunder, is,—that a proof issue, printed in foolscap folio size, (marked "Proof") should be distributed each morning with the proof Votes. It would, of course, be necessary that the Reporters' notes should be legibly transcribed, and the "copy" forwarded to this Office in small "takes" as the debates proceed; and it would much facilitate the work, if the reading of the proofs for the daily issue, could be entrusted wholly to the staff of this office. If this plan were adopted, the following would be the estimated cost, calculated on the basis of the present weekly Hansard, viz.:—

Daily Cost {	for first 1,000 copies	£17 7 0
	for every additional 1,000 copies	3 7 0

There would doubtless be a considerable sale of proof copies at 1d. per copy, and the introduction of the system, as above indicated, would not involve much, if any, preliminary outlay, as the appliances of the Office are already, for the present time, ample and suitable.

As there is a great variation in the amount of sessional business, the above estimate is necessarily only approximate; that it is however above, rather than below the mark, will be gathered from the fact that I have reckoned on each day's debates filling twenty pages of foolscap folio size.

As a matter of course the proof issue would be followed by bound volumes of the debates, duly revised and edited for permanent record. The cost of these would, of course, depend on the quantity of matter, and the amount of correction required by the Reporting Staff; but, on the whole, I am of opinion that the printing of the Hansard, dealt with in the way above indicated, would not be more costly than that of the present weekly Hansard.

The system in operation in the United States, namely—to lay on the Table of the Senate, at the commencement of each sitting, the printed report of the debate of previous sitting, appears to me to be in every way suited to the circumstances of this Colony; and unless the issue of Hansard in the morning is regarded as a sine qua non, that system would, I think, be much preferable to any other.

For the sake of convenience, I append extracts from the Report on the subject of Hansard, furnished by me on the 30th July, 1878. There are some points in this Report, which I consider worthy of consideration at the present time, especially the one relating to the training and employment of Cadets.

THOS. RICHARDS,
Government Printer.

[Extracts from Report on Hansard, dated 30 July, 1878.]

The Government Printer to The Under Secretary for Finance and Trade.

Sir,

Government Printing Office, Sydney, 30 July, 1878.

With reference to my recent visit to Queensland for the purpose of inquiring into and reporting on the organization and working of the Hansard or Report of the Debates of Parliament in that Colony, I do myself the honor to inform you that, through the courtesy of Mr. Senior, the Principal Shorthand Writer, and of Mr. Beal, the Government Printer, I had ample opportunities afforded me of seeing in detail the operations of both branches of the service of reporting and printing.

The Queensland Hansard is divided into two parts, the one a weekly issue for the Legislative Council, the other a daily issue for the Legislative Assembly. The report is not verbatim, but it is a very substantial one, and all important speeches made in Committee are given at considerable length. Assuming Assuming that if a Hansard be started here it will be a daily one, and will embrace the debates of both Houses of Parliament, I shall confine my remarks chiefly to what relates to a daily issue.

The annual cost of the Queensland Hansard, according to the figures supplied to me, is as follows:—

Reporting Legislative Council	£500
" " Assembly	2,918
Printing	1,700
Total	£5,118

Connected with the reporting staff there is a corps of cadets in training, who receive a small fee for each attendance in the gallery.

The printing is done in the Government Printing Office at night, by a staff told off for the purpose, and special machinery adapted for rapid work is employed.

The quantity of matter issued daily is not supposed to exceed eight pages demy folio, which is equal to twenty columns of the Sydney Morning Herald, set in brier type; and to ensure this limitation, there is a tacit understanding in the Assembly, which is generally adhered to, that the sittings are not to continue later than 10 o'clock on business nights. If such an understanding could be arrived at in our House of Assembly, the Hansard would be worth all it could cost on that ground alone.

In order to ensure a popular distribution of the Hansard an arrangement has been made with several newspaper proprietors to supply them with copies for issue as supplements to their papers. The charge for these copies is fixed at a low rate, so that, although there is a considerable return from the sale of the reports, it is doubtful whether any profit accrues on the transaction. It is more probable there is a slight pecuniary loss than a profit; but this is regarded with indifference, the primary object being to secure the widest possible circulation for the reports amongst the people. I gathered from conversations with Members of Parliament and other influential people in Queensland that the Hansard there is generally looked upon with great satisfaction, and that it has the reputation of being most admirably managed both by the reporting staff and the Government Printer's Department.

With regard to the establishment of a Hansard in this Colony, I do not think, in view of the foregoing facts, that any better principle could be adopted here than that which obtains in Queensland. Our different circumstances will, however, probably necessitate other arrangements in some of the details.

In the first place it would not, in my opinion, be desirable to make any distinction between the debates of the Legislative Council and those of the Legislative Assembly. The Hansard, in whatever shape it may be published, should be—as its name is understood to indicate—a complete report of the debates of Parliament.

Secondly, as it has not been necessary hitherto to employ for ordinary Government printing the costly rapid machines required for newspapers, it would not be possible at present to adopt the Queensland practice of furnishing newspaper proprietors with copies for distribution as supplements; nor, in my opinion, would it ever be desirable to follow such a course. But there is another means by which the same end might be attained, and that is, to furnish the newspapers every evening with slips of Hansard as fast as it is set up; for which accommodation—as it would enable them to dispense almost entirely with a Parliamentary reporting staff, and as a matter of principle—a moderate charge should, I think, be made.

The greater number of Members of Parliament that there are in this Colony, as compared with Queensland, and the more numerous and later sittings, as well as the greater length of the Sessions, will make the cost of a Hansard proportionately heavier in this Colony.

With regard to the cadets, I consider it very desirable that a number (six or more) should be employed and trained by the Government, with the object not only of using them to assist and recruit the Hansard staff, but also of importing them into other official positions. There can be no doubt that the services of a shorthand writer would be invaluable in most of the principal Government Offices. I would propose to article these cadets for three years, with salary (say): 1st year, £25; 2nd year, £30; 3rd year, £75; and with promise of employment ultimately on Hansard or in some other branch of the Public Service, on condition of their rendering themselves thoroughly efficient.

My estimate of the cost of Hansard is as follows:—

If published weekly	£4,850
If published daily (1,000 copies)	£6,350
and in subsequent book form 400 copies, and binding 200 copies of the latter.

In the Sydney Morning Herald the reports of the debates of Parliament last Session (1877-8) average five and a half columns daily. My estimate for Hansard is based on an average of thirty columns of the Herald set in brier type daily (i.e., four days a week)—a quantity of matter which I think may be regarded as the maximum; and should the quantity be greater or less, the cost of printing would of course be increased or diminished proportionately.

I would propose to issue the Hansard to Members of Parliament, to the principal Government Departments, and to subscribers, every morning, concurrently with the Proof Votes, and to reserve the unissued balance for casual sale—and I anticipate there would be a fair demand for them. A good sale for a daily Hansard might, I think, be reckoned upon, but little or none for a weekly one.

It would not be desirable, with the present appliances of the Office, to undertake to print more than 1,000 copies per day; but if it should be found that there is an increasing demand, there would be little or no difficulty in meeting it. Under any circumstances, however, it would be necessary eventually to expend about £1,500 in the purchase of type and machinery on account of Hansard, in order to avoid interfering with the ordinary work of the Department, which is always on the increase.

The only obstacle that seems to stand in the way of starting a daily Hansard in the manner suggested, at the commencement of next Session, is that of obtaining an adequate and competent staff of reporters; but there would be no difficulty on that score probably in starting a weekly issue then—if it should be thought advisable to make a beginning in that way—as there seems to be a sufficient number of competent reporters available for the purpose at present.

But whether the Hansard be started next Session or not, I would strongly recommend to the attention of the Government the system of cadets before mentioned. Besides being a proper first step towards the initiation of a Hansard, its introduction would, I am sure, be a great benefit to the Service, and especially to Ministers, who, being hampered with excessively heavy and various duties, require frequently to commit their views to paper in the most expeditious manner possible. I found the system of drafting by shorthand at work in many large commercial houses in London, and feel confident, from what I observed, that before long it will entirely supersede the present cumbrous, expensive, and dilatory system of drafting by longhand. In the principal departments of Governments especially it must soon find a place; and the appointment of a first-class shorthand writer, in connection with some one of our public departments, would be the necessary prelude to the official adoption of the system in this Colony.

I have, &c.,
THOS. RICHARDS,
Government Printer.

PARLIAMENTARY HANSARD.

(REPORT FROM PRINCIPAL SHORTHAND WRITER ON COST OF DAILY ISSUE.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be printed, 15 September, 1886, a.m.

RETURN (final) to an Order of the Legislative Assembly, dated 9th June, 1886,
That there be laid upon the Table of this House,—

“ A Report from the Government Printer, and also from the Chief “ Parliamentary Reporter, as to the cost of establishing and maintaining “ a daily issue of Parliamentary Hansard, similar, or otherwise, to that
“ in use in Queensland.”

(Mr. Hammond.)

The Principal Shorthand Writer to The Clerk of the Parliaments.

Legislative Assembly Offices, Sydney, 11 June, 1886.

Sir,

Parliamentary Debates—Daily reports of.

In attention to your memorandum of date June 4th, requesting me to furnish a report on the question of the publication of a daily issue of the debates in Parliament, for the information of the Honorable the President of the Legislative Council and the Honorable the Speaker of the Legislative Assembly, I beg to request that you will be so good as to submit the following observations for their consideration:—

The Parliaments of the United Kingdom, the Dominion of Canada, and the British Dependencies of Australasia make provision for the publication of an official record of their debates; that of Queensland is published daily, that of New Zealand bi-weekly, others weekly.

The debates of the Queensland Parliament have been published by the Government of that Colony since the year 1869. The Queensland Hansard had its origin in the distrust of the Queensland Parliament of the Brisbane press. The earlier records are full of the complaints of the alleged partiality of the conductors of the leading newspaper, and of the inaccuracy and insufficiency of their Parliamentary reports. On the 22nd December, 1870, the Legislative Assembly resolved,—

“ That, having in view the partiality and unreliable reports of the Parliamentary debates appearing in the newspapers, this House is of opinion that steps should be taken to secure, for the information of the public, an authentic weekly publication of the reports of such debates.”

On the 19th July, 1872, the following resolutions were proposed in the same body:—

“ 1. That, in the opinion of this House, it is highly desirable that the public should be supplied with a full and fair account of the proceedings of Parliament.

“ 2. That, in the absence of a fairly conducted journal, it has become necessary to take steps to provide a correct report of Parliamentary debates.”

The first resolution was agreed to; the second, withdrawn.

896—

[905 copies—Approximate Cost of Printing (labour and material), £5 ls. 6d.]

When

When the daily publication of the debates was determined upon in 1874, it was confined to the reports of the Assembly, leaving the reports of the Council to be published at the end of the week. A Select Committee of the Council, appointed to consider and report upon the "feasibility of issuing a more frequent or earlier publication of Hansard in connection with the proceedings of this House," reported on the 18th September, 1879, that—

"Your Committee are unanimously of opinion, more especially as affecting the current Session, that the proceedings of your honorable House, by medium of the daily press or otherwise, have not been nor are sufficiently made known to the public. Thus business of very grave import received your very earnest attention; bills more or less affecting all colonists—affecting our trade, industries, and institutions—have been largely discussed in their several stages, as well as amended in Committee, without the public outside receiving timely or hardly any information thereon, or being afforded a fair opportunity of legitimately, and it may be most usefully to your honorable House, expressing concurrence therewith or dissent therefrom."

I do not assume that ground for complaint by honorable members exists in regard to the newspapers of New South Wales on the score of partiality; but I think I am warranted in believing that a similar desire to promote the political education of the people, and to secure that full and accurate information concerning the business before Parliament should be quickly and widely promulgated, is the object proposed to be obtained by the earlier publication of the official record of the debates. Other uses of Hansard appear to be provided for by the weekly publication: thus, for example, the debates furnish material for the constitutional and political history of the Colony; the record which they contain of the rulings of Mr. President and Mr. Speaker, and of the circumstances on which they are based, forms an authoritative exposition of the law and custom of Parliament; they facilitate the preparation of measures for submission to Parliament, and the consideration of them where (as is the case with most large questions of policy) subjects are pending from session to session and from Parliament to Parliament; and they afford to honorable members the means of vindicating their conduct in cases where it may have been misrepresented, or where their votes and speeches may have been omitted or misunderstood by the Press. Since Mr. President and Mr. Speaker, on the 17th December, 1885, arranged for the publication of the debates at noon on Saturdays, and for their distribution through the Post-office, the reports have been placed in the hands of honorable members four days earlier than under the former routine; and they are delivered at the Schools of Arts and newspaper offices of all important towns in the Colony on the Monday following publication. They have thus been rendered available to honorable members who desire to inform themselves of the progress made in current legislation (more particularly of the amendments made in Bills in Committee), and to prepare for the business of the ensuing week; they are much more than formerly available for the use of journalists, and to the heads of the public Departments, whose duty it may be to give effect to the promises of Ministers (sometimes numerous on motions of adjournment) in regard to public works, the administration of justice, &c. The practice which obtains, of allowing an honorable member to obtain an early proof of the report of his speech for publication in the Press, might perhaps be extended, so as to apply to the whole of the debate in which it occurs. I do not see how it is possible by means of present appliances to go beyond this. I have good reason to believe that the New South Wales Parliamentary debates are now produced with greater promptness and regularity than that which obtains with regard to any other similar publication (Queensland alone excepted); and, in my judgment, the arrangements made for securing the accuracy of the reports and for preserving the independence of the record are superior to those which exist elsewhere.

If my inference, stated at the beginning of the last paragraph, be justified by the facts with regard to the weekly issue of the debates, it becomes important to consider how a wider circulation of a daily report is to be obtained. In this connection, as it appears to me, the co-operation of the Press is essential to success; for without it the reports would obtain very little additional circulation. It would, in fact, correspond somewhat with the circulation of the Government Gazette which is hung out at public pounds, police offices, and police stations. When the Reform Bill of 1831 was being discussed in the House of Commons, or when Sir John Robertson's Land Bills were before the Legislature here, Parliamentary debates, as a separate publication, would no doubt have been in great demand, as perhaps they would be in Great Britain while the Government of Ireland Bill is being debated at the present time. But in the progress of society many great public questions have become settled; and the telegraph now lays all civilized communities under tribute for news. Reports of Parliamentary debates do not always form the most important incidents in the day's news, and would not of themselves hold public attention. Judging from the experience of other Colonies as well as this, the demand for the debates as a separate publication would be so small as to be inappreciable.

The agencies for daily distribution (unless where the Post-office was available) would involve additional expenditure upon the public funds. In Queensland, Parliament was able to force Hansard into circulation despite the opposition of the Courier; but the position here is not similar, for the wealthy and enterprising journals, which publish a daily report of the debates in Parliament, are, by means of railroads and steamships, in touch of a population twenty-four times more numerous than the population of Brisbane in 1874. Their arrangements for reporting the debates are doubtless dictated by their views of the wishes of their subscribers, the pecuniary interests of the proprietors, and their perceptions of what may be due to the public interests involved. In presenting to their readers the history of the day, they no doubt seek to give to each event its due proportion; but room must be found for advertisements, for social and legal intelligence, foreign news, accounts of startling fires, shipwrecks, colliery explosions, earthquakes, &c. These demands upon their space vary from hour to hour, and they cannot always be anticipated. I have seen it suggested that Government should supply to the morning newspapers proofs of the official reports from the Government Printing Office, leaving it to the conductors of the press to reproduce the report in their own type. It is not my duty to inquire whether the press would be content to receive reports in this way, but I feel very confident that if it suited their purposes to do so, there would not be more extended Parliamentary reports than there are at the present time. I do not believe that the managers of the press would be willing to mortgage their space for what they might regard as the prosaic matter of a Parliamentary debate, more particularly if they considered that the subject had been "thrashed out," however important to the country the issues involved might be. Unless the dearth of other intelligence left plenty of space on their hands, they would give the division and leave out the speeches.

speeches. If, therefore, Parliament were to determine to supply proof slips of the official reports of the debates, I do not believe that the newspapers would accept them as a gift, if coupled with the condition that they must print them. To accept them on that condition would be to abandon to a very large extent the control of their important enterprises. If they accepted the reports at all, they would exercise their discretion in "cutting them down" to such proportions as suited their space, and in presenting them in such a form as they might judge to be most attractive to their readers. This abridgement would have to be done under circumstances of the greatest hurry, because the proofs from the Government Printing Office could not be supplied to the newspaper printer until at least one or two hours later than he could obtain the exact kind of report he wanted by the employment of his own staff. Inasmuch as it would be the duty of the official staff to write out their report in the order of debate with the fulness demanded by the intrinsic importance of the subject, and as it would be impossible for them to accommodate their duty to the varying requirements of different newspapers, I should fear there would be a state of chronic contention between the Government Printer and the Government reporters on the one hand, and the newspaper printers and the literary staffs on the other. The latter would sometimes be clamouring for details of an occurrence at midnight out of which to make a sensational article, while the former would be employed upon a part of the record which related to events two hours earlier, the report of which would not be a marketable commodity. Considerations such as these lead me to conclude that this method of publication would altogether fail to accomplish what is desired, and would be speedily disappointing.

The plan adopted in Brisbane is open to less objection; and, inasmuch as it has answered there, there may be some reason to expect that it might be successful here, so long as the Government gave the press the reports for (say) the cost of the paper upon which they were printed. The principal difficulty which occurs to me in connection with this form of distribution is based chiefly upon mechanical considerations. Morning newspapers "go to press" very early, (say) 3 o'clock, and it would therefore be necessary that the debates should be completed, put into type, corrected, printed, folded, and delivered in the newspaper offices at an hour which would enable the publishers to incorporate them as supplements. This would involve the purchase of rapid printing and folding machines, and the employment of an adequate staff of compositors and machinists. It does not concern me, nor is it necessary to inquire what the circulation of the Sydney morning papers is; but, for the sake of illustrating my meaning, I will assume that that of the Sydney Morning Herald is 25,000 copies, and that of the Daily Telegraph, the same. It is obvious that the machining and folding appliances would have to be equal to the production of 50,000 copies at an hour when they could be received. If one paper only took the report, these appliances would be reduced by one half. If there were any demand for the reports from the afternoon city newspapers, or from the conductors of the country press, that could easily be satisfied by the same appliances after the requirements of the morning papers had been met. If the number of copies required to be printed and folded could be ascertained, there would be no difficulty in stating within a few pounds the cost of the machines required. The circulation to be provided for would vary with that of the papers which took the Debates Supplement. If a number of the Debates were co-incident in time of publication with the intelligence of a wreck upon the coast, such as that of the Ly-ee-Moon, the demand for the daily newspapers would probably be increased by from 20,000 to 30,000 copies, and the Debates Supplement might also obtain that additional publicity, unless the newspapers should choose to confine it to the regular subscribers, and not include it in the copies for casual sale. Inasmuch, however, as the newspapers treat with their agents pretty much upon the same principle as manufacturing firms treat with wholesale houses, I incline to the opinion that the machinery to be provided ought to be adequate to supply the maximum, and not simply the ordinary demand. As to the circulation of the Queensland Hansard, I cannot perhaps do better than present the information in the form in which I find it recorded in the evidence given by Mr. J. C. Beal before a Parliamentary Committee on the 30th July, 1879:—

"By the Chairman.] Mr. Beal, you attend here as Government Printer? I do.

"The object of this Committee is to obtain information from you especially, as to the possibility of issuing a daily Hansard in connection with the Legislative Council. I may ask you the following questions:—What is the number of the daily Hansard of the Assembly printed now? 4,320 copies.

"By Mr. Hart.] Daily? Daily.

"By the Chairman.] Does your Department get payment for the circulation of any quantity of this paper? It does; to the extent for the present Session of £200 1s. That is the amount of revenue that we have received up to to-day.

"How far does that go towards paying the cost of the issue of Hansard? A very small way.

"State as clearly as you can, please, so that we can understand? When the Hansard was introduced, which I think you will remember, I gave a sliding scale of prices for from four pages up to eight pages demy folio; but that scale has never been carried out, in consequence of newspaper proprietors waiting upon the Colonial Secretary, who agreed to let them have a maximum quantity for the minimum price.

"When was that? The Session before last. The Session of 1877-8.

"And consequently you issued the Hansard to those newspapers upon the terms agreed to by the Government? Exactly so.

"Do you gain or lose by it? Lose by it, of course, as they get it now.

"Explain, if you please? The minimum price was for four pages—that was the least quantity—at 3s. 3d per hundred copies. Now they get seven or eight, as much sometimes as ten pages, for the same price. In other words, it scarcely pays for the paper.

"What papers avail themselves of this subsidy? The Courier, the Toowoomba Chronicle, the Darling Downs Gazette, the Rockhampton Morning Bulletin, the Rockhampton Morning Argus, the Cairns Advertiser, and the Port Douglas Gazette. The two last go in for very small numbers.

"Do they take a stipulated number of each issue? Yes.

"State the number, each, please? It is scarcely fair, I think, to put that in evidence.

"Yes; you will have to give it too? I am prepared to give it if the Committee wish:—The Courier, 1,725; Toowoomba Chronicle, 675; Darling Downs Gazette, 450; Rockhampton Bulletin, 600; Rockhampton Argus, 300; Cairns Advertiser, 40; Port Douglas Gazette, 70."

The

The hour to which reports of the Debates could be published on the following morning depends chiefly on two considerations, namely, (1) the money which Parliament would appropriate for the service, and (2) the hour at which the newspapers would require the supplements. With the present staff of reporters (6), when only one House is sitting, I fix the length of first turns at five minutes, to bring all quickly into work; but with two Houses sitting, it becomes expedient to fix the time for note-taking at twenty minutes and 30 minutes. I have often had only two reporters to record the debates of one House, extending over from six to eight hours; and if they were occupied in relieving each other every five minutes, three or four hours of transcription-time would be lost, and the risk of errors greatly increased. The length of time required to transcribe varies from time to time according to the clearness of the speaker, the rate at which he speaks, and the extent to which he repeats himself. In many cases, it takes the most expert writers six hours to transcribe one hour's notes. With an adequate staff of reporters taking turns towards the close of the sitting of two minutes' duration, and a staff of compositors sufficient for the purpose, the daily report might be completed to within about an hour of the time fixed by the newspapers for the delivery of the supplements in their offices. It would, however, be a costly performance; and if the circulation of both the Herald and the Telegraph had to be provided for simultaneously, time would have to be allowed for stereotyping the forms before the machining could commence. A newspaper printer who expects a division at four o'clock in the morning can, if he thinks proper, keep his form open to receive it, and the report can be manipulated to suit his exact space; but not so the debates. The report which Parliament would expect from an official staff would have to be more than a mere skeleton of the proceedings, or a bare enumeration of the names of honorable members who might address the House. The importance of a speech does not depend upon the hour at which it is delivered, and I have frequently known speeches of great public importance delivered as late as five o'clock in the morning. To show what can be done, I may mention the system which obtains in the Times office. The reports are read, by means of a telephone, from the gallery at Parliament House into the ears of the compositors stationed at composing machines in Printing Office Square. The manager of the Times informs me that the machines set the type at a speed which frequently exceeds a column of the Times type, or 230 lines of "minion," per hour,—that is about half as fast again as a rapid penman could write. In a letter written on the 20th January, 1885, Mr. McDonald states:—

"I have been more than twelve years perfecting our system of machine composing, and having succeeded, I hope to retain it as a distinctive feature of this office for my time at least. What it has cost so much time and effort to build up here could not be done easily elsewhere, and especially at such a distance, even with our best assistance."

The question, however, has to be dealt with not on the ground of what is possible—and it is conceivable that, given the requisite subdivision of labour and the Times composing machines, a speech may be put in type ten minutes after it is delivered,—but of what is practicable under existing circumstances. Judging of the question as a matter of probability, I should say that midnight would be the latest hour at which an honorable member could expect to see a report of his speech printed on the following morning, although I have myself furnished reports as late as four o'clock in the morning, which have been published in less than an hour afterwards. The Government Printer has, I am aware, devoted considerable attention to the question of publishing a daily Hansard, and I may perhaps be permitted to cite his opinion on this point. In one of his reports, that written after his return from Queensland, to which Colony he went in 1878 for the purpose of inquiring into and reporting upon the organization and working of the Hansard, Mr. Richards says:—

"The quantity of matter issued daily is not supposed to exceed eight pages demy folio, which is equal to twenty columns of the Sydney Morning Herald set in 'brevier'* type; and to insure this limitation there is a tacit understanding in the Assembly,† which is generally adhered to, that the sittings are not to continue later than 10 o'clock upon business nights. If such an understanding could be arrived at in our House of Assembly, the Hansard would be worth all it could cost on that ground alone."

The next point to which it occurs to me to invite attention is the additional staff required and the consequent cost. In this connection I may quote—not because I think the conditions of Parliamentary reporting in Brisbane and Sydney are strictly analogous, but because I think the information will be expected of me—from a letter which Mr. D. E. F. Jones, Shorthand Writer to the Queensland Parliament, wrote, in response to my inquiry, on the 7th December, 1885:—

- "(1.) Our staff consists at present of Chief Shorthand Writer, £600; Shorthand Writers—one at £150, one at £100, seven at £300, making an expenditure of £3,550. If pressure of business renders it necessary, one sessional reporter at £9 per week, (say) two months, £72; four cadets for dictation purposes—one at £2 a week, and three at £1 a week, (say) for a session of five months, £100; messengers—one for day, one for night, (say) for five months, at 10s. per week each, £28; the total expenditure would be £3,750.
- "(2.) A separate staff is not appointed to report the Council, but I generally detail two good men to that chamber until the close of the Session.
- "(3.) In your Colony, where the Parliament sits very late, the salaries ought to be higher than the scale I have given.
- "(4.) With regard to the £300-a-year men, four were formerly cadets who have worked their way to the permanent staff, and the other three are under annual engagement."

Circumstances in which the two Colonies differ are these:—

- (a.) The number of members is not so great at Brisbane as at Sydney.
- (b.) The Brisbane Friday sittings are chiefly occupied with formal business.
- (c.) The length of the Sessions is not so great.
- (d.) The length of the reports is not so great.

On all these points time does not permit me to state exact facts; but if I had opportunity to make the investigation, I should be very much surprised if the result did not show that the Parliament of New South Wales sat at least twice as long as that of Queensland, and that the length of the official report in this Colony was from two to three times as long. The

* The type in which the Herald prints its Parliamentary reports is I believe "minion," i.e., a size smaller.—C.R.

† In 1878 the Council reports were not published daily.—C.R.

The numerical strength of the Australasian Parliaments is shown by the following figures:—

New South Wales—Assembly, 122; Council, 57: total, 179.

New Zealand—Assembly, 95; Council, 47: total, 142.

Victoria—Assembly, 86; Council, 42: total, 128.

Queensland—Assembly, 58; Council, 33: total, 91.

South Australia—Assembly, 52; Council, 24: total, 76.

Tasmania—Assembly, 33; Council, 16: total, 49.

The length of debates is determined by many considerations, of which the number of available speakers is only one, and perhaps not a particularly important one, where gentlemen acknowledge the discipline of strict party obligation; but the quorum of members composing the New South Wales Parliament not having been increased with the increase of its members' roll, a "no House," which in some sessions often happened twice a week, is a thing of rare occurrence, and "counts out" have become much less frequent. In Melbourne, Parliament almost invariably rises at an hour which enables honorable members to go home by the suburban trains; but the greater facilities for getting home at any hour available to honorable gentlemen in Sydney enable them to protract their deliberations regardless of ordinary railway and tramway time-tables. My knowledge of the composition of other Australian Parliaments, derived from personal observation, is so limited as to be of no value; but five members of my staff have had experience in the galleries of the Victorian, New Zealand, Queensland, and South Australian Legislatures, and they inform me that the proportion of very rapid speakers is greater in the Legislative Assembly at Sydney than in any similar body in these Colonies. I can readily understand that it should be so as far as the comparison with Queensland is concerned. The members of that body are largely drawn from the pastoral and mercantile classes, whose homes and occupations are in the country, and who are unwilling to devote much more than three months to legislative business; while here they consist more largely of professional gentlemen resident in Sydney, whose more liberal education has probably inclined them to the study of political questions, and given them greater fluency in the expression of their views.

These considerations lead me to conclude that the Queensland Hansard is, so far as the number and cost of the staff are concerned, no criterion as to what would be required here. Perhaps Hansard's Debates would supply the means of arriving at a more accurate estimate. These are compiled chiefly from the reports of the Times; but Mr. Hansard has also a staff of his own to continue the reporting to a later hour than it may suit the Times to report. Chambers' Encyclopædia, vol. viii, article "Reporting," says:—

"The Times Parliamentary Corps are sixteen in number, who are equally divided between the two Houses. When one House rises, the entire corps is available for duty in the other so long as it sits. It thus happens that one of a series of reporters is constantly in the gallery of the Lords and another in the Commons. Like sentinels, they cannot leave their places until they are relieved by a colleague; but this relief takes place with unvarying regularity every quarter of an hour. When both Houses are sitting, each reporter has thus an hour and three quarters for the work of transcribing his shorthand notes for the printer—a sufficiently short interval when it is remembered that a moderate speaker will fill three-quarters of a column, and a rapid speaker not infrequently a column in a quarter of an hour."

Mr. James Grant, in his work on the "Newspaper Press," vol. ii, page 171, states:—

"In my notice of the Times I mentioned the number of gentlemen in the Gallery two sessions ago, but added that I was not at the moment of writing—which was at the beginning of last session—quite certain of the precise number then. I am now able to state that until the close of the session it was sixteen reporters in the strict sense of the word, with two summary writers and a superintendent of the corps; this would make nineteen in all. As, therefore, the Times has sixteen gentlemen attending to the debates in Parliament, exclusive of summary writers and a chief of the staff, and as at least three of this number have ten guineas each, its weekly expenditure for reporting the proceedings in the Legislature must be above rather than under 100 guineas."

Again, at page 172 Mr. Grant writes:—

"Next to the Times the Standard has the most numerous staff; that journal has thirteen reporters and a summary writer. The Morning Advertiser has nine reporters and a summary writer. The reporting staff of the Daily News consists of eight gentlemen and a summary writer; and the Morning Post has a reporting staff of seven with a summary writer. But it is due to the latter two journals to mention that on occasions of double debates—that is debates in both Houses on the same night, or of prolonged debates upon important questions in either House—they employ other competent shorthand writers, so that their reports may, as a rule, bear comparison so far as essentials are concerned with those of other morning papers which can boast of larger staffs."

If it should be urged that the international interest and importance of debates in the House of Commons transcends that which attaches to debates in the Parliament of New South Wales, it would, I respectfully submit, be my duty to believe that legislation having reference to the tariff, settlement upon the land, local government, etc., are as important to the public of this Colony as any of the topics discussed in the House of Commons are to the people of the United Kingdom; and to direct the reporting of the debates on that basis until I should be otherwise instructed.

I have thought it expedient to make the quotation made in the last preceding paragraph, because I am unwilling to assume that an opinion based upon my own individual experience would suffice to assist Mr. President and Mr. Speaker in the matter. As you are aware, my duties are confined to taking check-notes in the Assembly at night, revising the reports as they come from the printer during the day, exercising supervision as to the apportionment of duty, and giving directions where necessary as to how it shall be carried out. My labour, therefore, counts for nothing in the length of the reports. You are also aware that the Debates Staff is now charged with the duty of reporting Royal Commissions (one of which has been sitting for some time two afternoons during the week), Government Boards of Inquiry, and (in conjunction with the Shorthand Writer of the Legislative Council) Select Committees. I am able, from personal observation, to state that the Parliamentary Staff of the Sydney Morning Herald in actual attendance is rarely allowed to fall below eight reporters, irrespective of summary and leader writers.

writers. It will, I hope, be seen that my staff of six is not excessive, more particularly if it be borne in mind that the debates reports (making allowance for the difference in type) are three times longer than those of the most extended newspaper report. I do not mention this under any idea that it implies superiority on our part, for the explanation is simply this:—The telephone never brings us the welcome message from the printer to “cut it down;” we work continuously through the night until the adjournment of the House; and we more than make up for our numerical inferiority by working whatever number of hours may be necessary during the next day. It is sometimes necessary, for months together, that we should work fourteen and sixteen hours a day, and, on exceptional occasions, not of infrequent occurrence, as long as forty hours out of the forty-eight. More willing service could not be rendered whenever necessary; but, as far as the reporting of the debates is concerned, it is absolutely impossible that more can be done than is done at present. As far as Friday night is concerned, we produce a daily report now; and as far as Tuesday night is concerned, the copy is supplied to the printer in time to allow him to issue the reports with the revised Votes and Business Paper in the afternoon. As a matter of fact, the bulk of the proofs of Tuesday’s debates do not reach me before 6 o’clock on Wednesday night; but I have no doubt that if it were deemed expedient that the reports of Tuesday’s debates should be issued to honorable members before the proofs have been read by the staff (each correcting his own work) and by myself, the Government Printer, would, if desired, have pleasure in having it ready by 4 o’clock on Wednesday. That, however, is a change which I presume would involve expense and probably much inconvenience in the printing office, and I do not recommend it.

I assume in the absence of any intimation to the contrary, that the present official report is satisfactory in regard to length; that neither extension nor abridgement is desired, but simply that the same amount of work should be done in shorter time. If a daily publication were determined upon, the only alteration which I should suggest would be the recording of petitions presented and of questions asked upon notice, which have hitherto been omitted because it has not been thought desirable to duplicate the records, as contained in the “Votes” and “Minutes.”

The experiment tried and eventually given up in Queensland, of issuing the Council debates weekly, has no consideration other than that of economy to recommend it, and appears to me to be quite inadmissible as the basis of any estimate I could make on the subject. I suppose that one of the principal reasons which may be urged in favour of a daily publication is that the debates of the Council do not obtain that prominence in the press reports which would seem to be necessary in the public interest. Questions which have been frequently debated in the Assembly lose the freshness and charm of novelty—a characteristic which greatly enhances the value of intelligence to the conductor of a newspaper; and sufficient importance does not always appear to be attached to the fact that the voice of the Council is equally potential with that of the Assembly in shaping legislative enactments. As a matter of fact, however, debates of the greatest public importance have occurred in the Council upon subjects which have been almost entirely overlooked in the Assembly, as for instance those upon the Inscribed Stock Bill, while others (those upon the proposed amendment of the Divorce Law are the most recent example) precede discussion in the Lower House.

As the idea of a weekly publication of the Council debates is in conflict with every reason founded upon utility and the public interest, so also the assumption that because the Council sometimes adjourns at 7 o’clock no appreciable additional expense would be necessary is based upon misconception. The reporting staff should be equal to any demand which can reasonably be expected to be made upon it, or otherwise it will fail when it is most important that it should succeed. For the reasons I have tried to indicate, I estimate that in order to produce a report of the debates in both Houses of Parliament closing at not later than midnight, to be published upon the following morning in time to allow of its being distributed by the press, it would require an addition to the present staff of seven reporters.

In consideration of their services being confined solely to the reporting of the debates, and to their having absolute freedom to employ their time as they might think best during the recess, I suggest that the remuneration to be offered should be £350 per annum, or £2,450 for all. This, having regard to the amount of work to be done, and to the fact that they would have no opportunity of supplementing their income by the reporting of Royal Commissions, is proportionately less than is paid by Queensland and New Zealand, where the experiment has been tried upon lines of severe economy. In New Zealand, the salary of the ordinary members of the staff is £300 per annum, and the duration of the sessions is from fourteen to twenty weeks. The reporter has also a chance of sometimes doubling his income from Government shorthand-writing work in the recess, and a greater probability of employment upon the press in towns, owing to the more equal distribution of the population in those places as compared with its enormous concentration in one or two centres in New South Wales. The lowest salary paid to the Hansard reporters in Victoria (where the work is confined exclusively to Debates reporting) is £450. The salary of £450 here has been refused by five reporters on the Australian press, the ground alleged in some cases being that they could earn more with less labour.

It will be seen that in Queensland they make provision for one sessional reporter at £9 pounds a week; and in an estimate submitted to the Government for the publication of a daily report, I notice that it includes six reporters at £8 8s. per week. In Queensland, this kind of fugitive service has been almost given up, and I know that neither the late nor the present Principal Shorthand Writer thought it a good plan that they should have to search throughout the colonies at the beginning of each session for an almost new staff of reporters. If Mr. President and Mr. Speaker should be favourable to this plan, I ask leave to submit further information showing how it has worked elsewhere. Meanwhile, I will merely say that I am not aware of the existence of a class of vagrant reporters who would answer the purpose; and that newspaper proprietors who employ Parliamentary reporters do not discharge them at the end of the session. I know that some find great difficulty in getting the kind of service they require, even upon the system of annual engagements; and until the Legislatures of the different colonies agree to begin and end at different times there is little likelihood of there being called into existence a class of literary tramps, moving from colony to colony to reap the harvests of Parliamentary eloquence, coming to maturity at different, but, by preconcerted arrangement, specified seasons.

As to cadets, the system was introduced into Brisbane in 1875, and the regulations framed by the Premier of the Queensland Government and the Speaker of the Queensland Parliament provided that the class should not exceed twelve pupils (Reg. 1); that the fee for tuition should be ten guineas per annum (Reg. 2); that admission to the class should depend upon an examination in English composition, &c.,

(Reg. 4)

(Reg. 4); that whenever the Principal Shorthand Writer should report that pupils were competent to assist the staff in transcribing notes, the Speaker might select two or more as assistants, at a salary not to exceed for the first year £100 (Reg. 10). I may quote Mr. W. Senior, the late Principal Shorthand Writer, who was engaged by the Queensland Government to initiate and conduct their daily Hansard, and who in his letter to me of date 27th April, 1880, states:—

“After the class had been in existence for two years, a Board of Examiners were appointed by the Premier and Speaker, and the cadets were subjected to a test examination, both documents and impromptu addresses being taken down by them. Those who could write correctly at the rate of from eighty to ninety words per minute were adjudged to have met all the requirements of Regulation 10, and five of the best youths were then employed as assistants to the Hansard staff; one, whose proficiency in shorthand was considerably in advance of the rest, having a salary of £100 a year, in consideration of his assumption of the functions of—if I may so call it—monitor of the class; the remainder receiving £50 per annum. They were of considerable assistance to the staff last year in transcribing from dictation. I had hoped to have seen the cadets doing gallery work during the forthcoming Session, but I fancy I expected too much; and although I shall make the trial I have not much hope of success. But by next year the majority of the youths at any rate should be fit to take their turns in the gallery.”

It would thus appear that it takes from five to six years to train a youth for gallery work under conditions most favourable to success.

Mr. D. F. T. Jones, Mr. Senior's successor, in his letter to me of 7th December, 1885, writes:—

“The reporter may dictate off a portion of his notes to one of the cadets, who takes it down in shorthand and transcribes it. As these cadets are sometimes careless, many of the shorthand writers, unless very much pressed, prefer to transcribe their own notes. When the cadets are not engaged in dictation, they sit in one of the galleries to practice.”

The Government Printer, in the report from which I have already quoted, states:—

“With regard to the cadets, I consider it very desirable that a number, six or more, should be employed, and that they should be trained by the Government, with the object of using them not only to assist and recruit the Hansard staff, but also of importing them into other official positions. There can be no doubt that the services of a shorthand writer would be invaluable in most of the principal Government offices. I would propose to article these cadets for three years, with a salary (say) for the first year of £25; second year, £50; third year, £75; and with promise of employment ultimately on Hansard or in some other branch of the public service, on condition of their rendering themselves thoroughly efficient.

“But whether Hansard be started next session or not, I would strongly recommend to the Government the system of cadets before mentioned. Besides being the proper first step towards the initiation of a Hansard, its introduction would I am sure be of great benefit to the Service, and especially to Ministers, who, being hampered with excessively heavy and various duties, require frequently to commit their views to paper in the most expeditious manner possible.”

It will, I think, be apparent that the cadet system employed at Brisbane is not immediately available here, and would require three years for its development according to the Government Printer's estimate, and six years according to the experiment made upon the first batch at Brisbane. But it should be remembered that skill in shorthand writing is only part—the mechanical part—of the equipment of a good reporter. Shorthand writing is no doubt essential to debates work, but a man may be the best shorthand writer in the world and yet be incompetent. A good reporter must, as far as the subject under discussion is concerned, be pretty well on a level in intelligence with his speaker; he must be able to put himself at once in sympathy with him and be quick to perceive the drift of his thoughts, whether they are or are not clearly expressed; and he must be able to concentrate and sustain his attention upon his work. If the reporter have not this aptitude, the probability is that instead of the style of a speech being preserved, the argument being developed in just proportions, and in very nearly the exact words of the speaker, the reporter will, in the case of many speeches delivered without premeditation, become hopelessly bewildered by redundant verbiage and involved parentheses. The speeches of the late Mr. Wm. Forster were nearly always incomprehensible by a mechanical stenographer; and where his speeches were reported at length, it was no uncommon thing to find nearly a column of philosophic, ingenious, and original reasoning, in which every new phase of the subject which suggested itself to a highly critical mind was analyzed with an amount of candour which made it almost impossible to force the final deductions, and then this would be followed by a most lame and impotent conclusion—mere scraps of sentences, for which the most that could be said was that they had been “taken down.” If it could be assumed that all the cadets would become good reporters, it would still be necessary that they should be paid a salary which would enable them to present a respectable appearance in the precincts of Parliament, and as they grew into manhood to establish homes for themselves; and if the amount appropriated were not sufficient, they would take their labour to a market where the price was higher. As a matter of fact, however, there might be expected to be a large percentage of cadets who would fail, and who, having acquired a sort of lien upon Governmental employment, would feel aggrieved if they were not admitted into the Civil Service. They could not be quartered upon the “Debates” staff, for an inefficient reporter would be worse than useless. I recognize, however, that there is a good deal to be said in favour of the cadet system; but I have hesitated to incur the responsibility of recommending it.

The daily report would have to be sent to press pretty much as the reports furnished to the newspapers now are, for any revision which could be exercised before publication would be necessarily superficial and incomplete. The very brief reports of debates at a late hour published in the Press admit of almost perfect accuracy (excepting, of course, errors of the printer), but the length of the official report would, I presume, be governed solely by the importance of the subject, and regardless of the time of night or of the convenience of the reporter and the printer. The work would have to be done at high-pressure speed, and I fear that if casual reporters were engaged upon it, the result might be far from satisfactory. One inefficient reporter would destroy the prestige attaching to the work of all the rest; and to such service I attribute the fact that in Queensland and New Zealand the business of Parliament has been so frequently interrupted by honorable members rising in their places to correct errors in the official report. With the best assistance—and I could not hope to obtain more skilful, intelligent, and conscientious service than that rendered by the present staff—errors will occur; for, although an honorable member says exactly what he means, it is not always easy to distinguish his voice from that of, it may be, twenty other gentlemen engaged in conversation at the same time. So much consideration, however, has been extended to the "Debates" staff, that I anticipate honorable members would be patient of errors and indulgent in criticism until such time as opportunity was afforded to bring the new staff up to the present standard of efficiency. In Brisbane, Mr. Jones informs me:—

"Members are allowed to revise the daily report. Each morning a cadet is told off to cut out the speeches from galley-slips provided for the purpose, and these are enclosed in a printed envelope to the members delivering them, with the understanding that the corrected proofs must be returned to me in the course of the evening. It is part of my duty to take care that the privilege is not abused, and I have never found any attempt to make more than a necessary correction."

Other points which occur to me relate to aspects of the question which it does not fall within my province to consider; and yet I am tempted to anticipate the indulgence of Mr. President and Mr. Speaker, to enable me to suggest for their consideration a method of accomplishing the object aimed at, not only without increasing, but, as it appears to me, really diminishing present expenditures. It is, if my memory does not deceive me, a method which I heard suggested by Sir John Robertson in the course of a debate in the Legislative Assembly many years ago, namely, that reports of the debates in Parliament and the Government Gazette should be published together. The matter in the Government Gazette printed on thick paper and in small pages appears rather bulky, but it could be divided among the four daily publications of the "Debates," so that to a very great extent the expenses of paper, machining, and publication incidental to one issue would suffice for two. The Government, it will be seen by reference to the Treasurer's estimates, spends £15,000 per annum upon advertising. All Government advertisements now probably appear in the Government Gazette; but if not, they could be inserted. Inasmuch as Parliament does not sit all the year round, it would, under the plan I am considering, be admissible that when the Parliament was not in session the Gazette should take its ordinary course; and it would perhaps be expedient to reserve a portion of the advertising vote, say £5,000, for expenditure during the intervals which occur between one session of Parliament and another. If it were not expedient to amalgamate the Gazette and the "Debates," it might still be admissible to include the advertisements with the "Debates." The State would, if this plan were admissible, do its own advertising as well as its own reporting.

— It seems to me, however, that the key of the position is held by the conductors of the daily press, who, as the result of large expenditure and great enterprise continued through many years, have enlisted the interests of all classes of the community in their undertakings. The services which they render to Parliamentary and Civil Government by the publication of intelligence is one of the grounds for the privilege or subsidy which they enjoy in the use of the railways and the post-office for the carriage of their newspapers free of charge. The disposition which they have shown to disseminate intelligence relating to the business of Parliament and of Government may, perhaps, warrant the expectation that it would suit their business interests to distribute, as a supplement to their own journals, the official publication contemplated; but, inasmuch as the newspapers command practically all the avenues of appeal to the public, I would suggest that it becomes a necessary and an antecedent part of the inquiry to ascertain if one or more of the newspapers published in Sydney would accept and circulate the report.

ELECTRIC LIGHTING OF PARLIAMENTARY BUILDINGS.
(REPORT OF MESSRS. DALGARNO AND HAMMAND.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be printed, 29 June, 1886.

I DIRECTED Messrs. Dalgarno and Hammand, two scientific officers of this department, to test and report on the Electric Lighting at the Parliament Buildings, and it will be seen from the reports attached that there is not the slightest cause for uneasiness as regards the chances of fire from the leads, or apparatus in use.

The conductors, cables, and leads more than comply with the rules laid down in the Board of Trade Regulations, and are perfectly safe and reliable. The lights during last week have been running sometimes as much as fourteen hours out of the twenty-four, without the slightest hitch, and they have now been in use for nearly three years without any serious mishap, which should be quite sufficient to satisfy Hon. Members of the satisfactory nature of the work, and its perfect safety from danger of any kind.

Metcalf was suspended for his refusal to carry out certain instructions given him by the Superintendent of Telegraphs and not for his refusal to certify vouchers, as stated.

REPORT upon the Electric Light installation at the Houses of Parliament, Sydney.

The Superintendent of Telegraphs, Sydney,—

Sir,

We have the honor to report that, in accordance with your directions, we this day completed an examination of the Electric Light installation at the Houses of Parliament.

We first directed our attention to the manner in which the leads and branches had been laid down and found that there are three of these running, respectively, to the Council, the dining-room, and the Assembly. We traced all of these leads and branches from the dynamo at the engine-house to their terminations, and found them to be well and carefully laid down, the current and return wires being well separated, the safety plugs at the various junctions in good order, the joints, with one exception, properly covered, and the switches perfect.

Having assured ourselves upon each of these points, we proceeded to test the electrical condition of the wires, and found the resistance (by bridge) of the Council lead, including its sixty-six lamps, to be 5.7 ohms—that of the dining-room with sixty-five lamps 3.5, whilst the resistance of the Assembly lead, with 134 lamps, was shown to be 2.1, and the insulation upon each of the leads practically perfect. These results speak well for the quality of wire employed in this installation and show that all the joints are electrically good.

We found that the greatest current necessary on any of the leads is 19.6 Amperes; to carry this current with safety it is laid down on the scale handed to us for our guidance, and framed in compliance with the Board of Trade regulations on this subject, that no smaller diameter than a No. 11 wire, Birmingham wire gauge, should be used. The wire used in this case is No. 10; and as this is larger than No. 11 in the proportion of .134 to .120 of an inch, it may be regarded as fully capable of doing with safety all that is required of it. In view of the results of our examination, and bearing in mind the fact that the installation has worked most satisfactorily for many months, we are of opinion that it has been carried out, both as regards its mechanical and electrical conditions, in such a manner as to secure the greatest possible safety from fire or other serious accident.

ELECTRIC LIGHTING OF PARLIAMENTARY BUILDINGS.

(LETTER FROM MR. SPEAKER AND MEMORANDUM FROM MR. E. C. CRACKNELL.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be printed, 6 July, 1886.

The Speaker to The Postmaster-General.

Dear Mr. Suttor,

6 July, 1886.

I find that the fire which broke out in my room towards the end of last year was not caused by any negligence of the contractor for electric lighting, Mr. Kingsbury. The circuits in various parts of the building were being tested on the day before the commencement of a new session. The engine-driver inadvertently turned on the dynamo-machines on a circuit on which the contractor's men were engaged, and without any notice to them. At this time the wires were crossed, for it had not come to their turn to be properly fixed, and no immediate use of them was at the moment expected. The accident thus arising was not attributable to defective insulation of any wire intended to be left in use, or to any defective workmanship in any completed work. One of the men had of course made a mistake, but as the circuits in my room had then not yet been tested, no opportunity had occurred for the detection or rectification of any error. The Superintendent of Electric Telegraphs made, with members of his staff, a careful inspection on Thursday, and Mr. Cracknell informs me that the leads are now in perfect order, and that the occurrence which I have mentioned arose solely from the mistake made in the engine-house.

I write you this note because I am anxious that anything which has been said by me may not injuriously affect the contractor, who, on the facts which I have stated, does not appear to be to blame.

Yours faithfully,

EDMUND BARTON.

1 July, 1886.

I HAVE, to-day, personally examined the electric light arrangements at the Parliament Houses, and, as a result of that examination, I can only confirm my previously expressed opinion that the work, in all its details, has been carried out with a due regard to safety from fire or other accident.

In order to test the wires most crucially, I held two of the leads together whilst the full current was passing through them, and found that there was no heating whatever, and therefore no danger from fire.

The fire referred to by the Hon. the Speaker was caused by the current being accidentally turned on to the wire at a time when the workmen were fixing them, and before the safety plugs were inserted, which prevent a current of too great a strength entering the leads connecting the lamps in that part of the building.

I have not requested Metcalfe to pass vouchers for work imperfectly done, I simply handed him a voucher to compare, with a view to ascertain that no articles were charged for which had already been paid. These vouchers, after considerable delay, were returned to me without remark, except some pencil memo. which is not at all clear. Metcalfe was not asked to certify to the vouchers nor would his certificate be accepted by the Auditor-General.

The work at the Parliament Houses is not of inferior quality, and the insulation is all that is required.

E. C. CRACKNELL.

(a) Data of the late General Sir Peter Scratchley's Commission.

Brisbane, 1st February, 1886.

H. H. ROMILLY,
Acting Special Commissioner.

CERTIFICATE OF AUDIT.

I HEREBY certify that I have examined the accounts of the Protectorate of New Guinea, for the period between the 20th November, 1884, and the 31st January, 1886, amounting on the credit side to £15,048 8s. 6d., and on the debit side to £15,171 13s. 4d., as rendered by the Acting Special Commissioner; and find—

1. That all sums received have been duly brought to account; and that the several payments made have been correctly computed.
2. That, assuming the population of the several Australian Colonies, as ascertained at the census of 1881, to be the basis of assessment (vide Memorandum by the Honorable the Premier of Victoria, dated 4th June, 1885), Queensland has over-contributed for the year 1884-5 the sum of £336 16s. 3d., and Fiji £27, whilst Tasmania has paid £30 6s. 2d. short of the proper amount, and Western Australia owes £161 16s. 9d., having contributed nothing.
3. That the "Fixed Salaries" paid have been either settled or approved by the Secretary of State.
4. That the "Temporary or Provisional Salaries," and the personal allowance for "House rent" (at the rate of £500 per annum up to the date of embarkation on board the "Governor Blackall,") appear to have been determined by the late Special Commissioner.
5. That no cash-book or accounts were kept by the late Special Commissioner, the books now in use having been compiled with some difficulty in this office, at the request of Mr. Romilly, with the assistance of Mr. G. Seymour Fort, Private Secretary to the late Special Commissioner.
6. That vouchers in support of expenditure have not, as a rule, been prepared, or receipts obtained at the time of payment; but that, during the process of audit, they have, with few exceptions, been procured and certified by Mr. Fort, on behalf of the late Special Commissioner.

7. That, on the whole, I have every reason to believe that the several sums expended have reached the hands of the persons entitled to receive the same.
8. That advances—amounting in the aggregate to £1,525—have been made to the Assistant Deputy Commissioner, at Port Moresby, to enable him to make payments in New Guinea on Public Account. From the banking records it appears that one-half of this sum has been expended; the necessary vouchers in support of the expenditure, however, have not yet reached the Acting Special Commissioner.

In auditing the accounts of the late Special Commissioner I have not considered myself called upon to express any opinion as to the manner in which the funds subscribed for the purpose of the New Guinea Protectorate have been expended. I deem it my duty, however, in view of the undue responsibility which has been thrown upon me on the present occasion, to point out the necessity for the employment by the Special Commissioner of an officer conversant with the mode of public accounting, in order that the financial transactions of the Protectorate may be regularly and systematically recorded.

At the instance of the late Special Commissioner full directions for keeping and auditing the Public Cash and Store Accounts of the New Guinea Government were prepared by me, and supplied to General Scratchley for the use and guidance of his officers. These regulations, which have in the past been entirely ignored, will, I believe, if strictly adhered to, prevent any future complications in connection with the accounts.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.
NEW SOUTH WALES.

ADMINISTRATION OF BRITISH NEW GUINEA.
(FURTHER CORRESPONDENCE AND PAPERS RESPECTING.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be printed, 6 May, 1886.

No. 1.

The Agent-General, London, to The Honorable the Colonial Secretary, Sydney.

Sir,

5, Westminster Chambers, Westminster, S.W., 1 January, 1886.

I have the honor to inform you that on the 17th ultimo, by invitation of the Secretary of State for the Colonies, the Agents-General met him to consult as to the future administration of New Guinea, and the steps to be taken consequent upon the death of Sir Peter Scratchley, the late Special Commissioner.

Colonel Stanley submitted a draft despatch which he proposed to send to the Governors of the several Australian Colonies and New Zealand, with regard to the future administration and financial arrangements of New Guinea; and he invited the Agents-General to express their opinions on the proposals contained therein, at the same time remarking that he was aware that they had no authority or power to commit their Governments in any way to the approval of his proposals. The Agents-General, in reply, stated, that in discussing the matter, as the Secretary of State for the Colonies had invited them to do, they could of course only express their individual opinions, which might or might not be approved by their several Governments. Colonel Stanley admitted that he quite understood this; but he desired to have the benefit of their experience and knowledge of the views of their Governments in regard to this and all other matters of Australian interest.

The proposal which Colonel Stanley desired the Agents-General to consider was as follows:—

Before the Imperial Government took measures to extend Her Majesty's sovereignty over what is now the Protectorate, it became desirable that an understanding should be arrived at respecting the funds necessary to provide for the maintenance of a proper and effective system of administration; for it could scarcely be anticipated that a Public Revenue would for some years be obtainable sufficient to meet the necessary expenditure; and having regard to the fact that the Colonies had urged that this country should bear a portion of such expenditure, Her Majesty's Government, under the altered circumstances consequent upon the German occupation of a portion of New Guinea, have recognized the justice of this country bearing a portion of the cost; and, taking all things into consideration, Her Majesty's Government had decided to offer an immediate contribution of some (£18,000) eighteen thousand pounds to purchase a steamer necessary for the service, leaving it to the Colonies to decide whether the administration should not be conducted on a scale for which their (£15,000) fifteen thousand pounds would suffice, in addition to any revenue which might be received. The late General Scratchley estimated the expenditure would not be less than (£20,000) twenty thousand pounds a year.

It was considered that the proposal of the Imperial Government to pay (£18,000) eighteen thousand pounds for the purchase of a steamer would represent a contribution of say (£3,600) three thousand six hundred pounds per annum from Imperial funds for five years, and would obviate the necessity of taking an annual vote in the House of Commons, and would also avoid the inconvenience of a double audit, which a payment of money from Imperial funds would render necessary.

It was further considered that the contributing Colonies should have some control over the expenditure, to effect which it might be possible, either by creating a Council of Advice, as has been before suggested, in which each Colony should be represented, or, what perhaps might be more effective, by the Colonies agreeing that one of their number should become responsible for the provision of the Colonial contribution, as well as for the supervision of the expenditure and audit of the accounts.

As soon as the Protectorate became part of the British Dominions, an Administrator of the Government would be appointed, with the powers usually conferred upon Governors of Crown Colonies, and the English Common Law and Statutes of general application would prevail, subject to such modifications as might be introduced by local legislation, for which the necessary authority would be delegated by Her Majesty to the Administrator and two or more persons, under the powers granted by the Acts 6 and 7 Victoria, cap. 13, and 23 and 24 Victoria, cap. 121. Should any further measures be required in the future, the Imperial Parliament might, at any time, by virtue of its paramount authority, grant to the inhabitants such an extension of legislative powers as their social and political development might render necessary.

Under these conditions, you will notice the proposal is to annex and establish complete jurisdiction over New Guinea and the islands adjacent thereto included in the Protectorate.

After a lengthened conversation, in which it was submitted that the proposal made by the Secretary of State was not likely to be acceptable to the Colonial Governments, and that the providing of a steam-vessel at a cost of £18,000 would not be considered as an adequate contribution from Imperial funds, it was decided that we should adjourn and meet again. In the interim, the Agents-General met together, and after consultation it was agreed to suggest at our next meeting with Colonel Stanley, that if the Imperial Government would submit a proposal to the Colonial Governments by which the Colony of Queensland should undertake on behalf of all the Colonies, under such Imperial supervision as may be deemed constitutional and sufficient, the administration of British New Guinea; and that in consideration of an advance, without interest, of (£100,000) one hundred thousand pounds by the Imperial Government, and such contributions as the other Colonies may agree to pay to the Queensland Treasury, such proposal might possibly be entertained. Colonel Stanley appeared favourable impressed with the suggestion, and the result of our second conference with him led to the preparation by him of the following confidential memorandum, which he read to us, viz. :—

“The late and present Government have consented to contribute to the cost of administering New Guinea, and to proclaim the Queen's sovereignty.”

In the telegram of August 14th, Colonel Stanley required, as a condition of declaring sovereignty, that the Colonies should secure permanently £15,000 a year, and offered as the Imperial contribution a ship, value £18,000.

It appears that the Colonies cannot accept this £18,000, with no further payments secured, as an adequate contribution from Imperial funds. Nor would the Colonies be disposed to provide the £15,000 per annum, if merely for the establishment of a Crown Colony, in the control of which they would have no voice; and more particularly if they would not be enabled to promote the occupation and settlement of the country to such extent (consistent with that due protection of native interests which the Imperial Government must ensure) as they may think desirable.

There will, moreover, be much delay and difficulty in settling in each separate Parliament the details of the Colonial contribution, and securing it permanently by enactment. It has therefore been suggested that it would be reasonable and convenient to all parties concerned that the Colony of Queensland, being close to New Guinea, should undertake, on behalf of all the Colonies, and under such Imperial supervision as may be deemed constitutional and sufficient, the administration of British New Guinea; and that in consideration of an advance, without interest, of £100,000 by the Imperial Government, and such contributions as the other Colonies have declared themselves or may be willing to pay to the Queensland Treasury, the Government of Queensland to assume all future financial responsibility in connection with British New Guinea, and direct, through the Governor of Queensland and his responsible advisers, the settlement and administration of the territory. It might be found convenient to arrange that the Colonial Government should, from time to time, as funds were required, draw upon Her Majesty's Government for sums not exceeding, in the whole, £100,000, as a considerable time would elapse before the whole amount would be required.

The £100,000 thus advanced without interest might, as in the case of the grant of the same amount for the purpose of establishing an Administration in Fiji, be repayable when a revenue is raised in New Guinea, by such instalments as Her Majesty's Government might from time to time think it reasonable to request; the Imperial Government not interfering as to the mode of expending the £100,000, or as to the mode of collecting or expending any revenue raised locally, except to such extent as may be necessary for securing the fair treatment of the natives, for which Parliament holds Her Majesty's Government responsible. Colonel Stanley pointed out that there would be considerable difficulty in obtaining from the Imperial Parliament a vote for a loan, unless it contained at least the heads of expenditure for which such advances were contemplated; and it would be of advantage if, for some years at all events, an annual statement of expenditure under the loan could be rendered to the Colonial Office; possibly (though not necessarily) for the information of the House of Commons.

The Administration and Legislature of New Guinea, in accordance with the principle of joint Imperial and Colonial responsibility, to be constituted as follows :—

It is not proposed at present to annex New Guinea to Queensland as an integral part of the Colony; it must therefore be regarded as an independent Settlement, so far as its legal position is concerned. The Law Officers are of opinion that it must be held to have been acquired by settlement, not by cession or conquest. It follows that the power of legislation must be exercised under 6 and 7 Vict. cap. 13, that is to say, by the Queen, by Order in Council, or by three or more persons within the Settlement to whom the Queen shall have delegated this power by Commission under the Great Seal.

It is proposed that the power of legislation should be so delegated to the Special Commissioner, Government Resident, or whatever may be fixed as his title, and to two or more persons, including perhaps Queensland officials, in the event of their being present in New Guinea, for the legislative body cannot sit outside the settlement.

The Special Commissioner would be appointed by the Queen's Commission, in which he would be directed to exercise his powers of administration and legislation, subject to the instructions of the Governor of Queensland; and the Governor would be directed by despatch to consult his Executive Council upon all New Guinea matters, and not to act without their advice, unless in very exceptional cases.

It should be clearly understood that these proposals are quite tentative, and although Colonel Stanley has been good enough to confidentially consult with the Agents-General, the proposals, whenever matured, will be submitted to the Governors of the respective Colonies to be considered by their constitutional advisers.

At

At our last meeting, on the 21st December, Colonel Stanley intimated that he would not submit to the Queen any permanent appointment until the future arrangements for the administration of New Guinea had been decided upon, but that he proposed to appoint Mr. John Douglas to act as Special Commissioner ad interim; and he stated that the question generally of administration and finance would have to be submitted to the Cabinet, from whom, at the present time, it would be difficult to obtain a collective opinion.

I should mention that during the period when the Conferences were proceeding the Agent-General for South Australia received a telegram from his Government stating that they did not intend after June next to contribute towards the administration of New Guinea.

I should wish you to understand that any opinions I may have expressed regarding this important question I have taken care to inform the Secretary of State that they are my individual opinions only, and that I had neither instructions nor authority from you to advise in this matter.

You will probably learn from Queensland that Federal Council will be asked make proposals for confiding to her administration New Guinea. We believe this will be done. Please communicate New Zealand.

Sir,

Chief Secretary's Office, Adelaide, 19 March, 1886.

I have the honor to acknowledge receipt of your letter, dated 25th ultimo, transmitting copy of a telegram received from your Agent-General in London with reference to proposals being made to the Federal Council of Australasia for confiding to Queensland the administration of New Guinea.

Telegram from Premier, Queensland, to Premier, New South Wales.

30 March, 1886.

I HAVE to-day posted to you memorandum respecting future administration of New Guinea, to which I beg your early attention.

No. 10.

The Colonial Secretary, Queensland, to The Colonial Secretary, New South Wales.

Sir,

Colonial Secretary's Office, Brisbane, 30 March, 1886.

I have the honor to enclose for the consideration of your Government a memorandum, in which my colleagues concur, upon the question of the future administration of the affairs of British New Guinea.

In the event of the proposals now made commending themselves to the Governments of the other Colonies, with or without modification, it will be necessary to submit the scheme for the consideration of Her Majesty's Government, when, if it meets with their approval also, the sanction of the Legislature of this Colony must be sought for the permanent Appropriation Act which forms an essential part of the proposal.

Having regard to the time that has already elapsed, and to the extreme desirability of bringing the question of the future administration of the territory to some definite issue without further delay, I venture to ask from you the favour of a reply at your earliest convenience, in order that the necessary preliminary negotiations may be completed in time to enable the Government of this Colony to deal with the matter during the ensuing session of Parliament.

In order to facilitate future negotiations and to enable them to be conducted, if necessary, by telegraph, I propose to send a copy of the memorandum to the Agent-General for Queensland in London.

I have addressed a similar communication to the Governments of each of the other Australasian Colonies.

I have, &c.,

S. W. GRIFFITHS.

[[Enclosure to No. 10.]

Colonial Secretary's Office, Brisbane, 30 March, 1886.

MEMORANDUM.

THERE can be no doubt that the present position of affairs with reference to the British Protectorate in New Guinea is eminently unsatisfactory; and, having regard to the time that has elapsed since the proclamation of the Protectorate, and to the action already taken by the German Government with respect to the German territory in that island, some definite proposal seems to be called for on the part of the Australasian Colonies.

2. Lord Derby's despatch of the 9th May, 1884, after referring to the Resolutions adopted by the Sydney Convention of 1883, proceeded to state that Her Majesty's Government were disposed to think that there should be a High Commissioner or a Deputy Commissioner, with large powers of independent action, stationed in or near the eastern coasts of New Guinea, and that he should be furnished with a steamship and with a staff sufficient to enable him to exercise protection in the name of the Queen over those shores; that the cost of this arrangement could not be accurately estimated; but that if one or more Colonies would secure to Her Majesty's Government the payment of the sum of £15,000 during the year ending June, 1885, they would be prepared to take immediate steps for establishing the High Commissioner's jurisdiction. Very shortly after the receipt of this despatch the required guarantee was given by all the Colonies, and the Legislature of Queensland passed an Act making permanent appropriation of the proportion to be borne by that Colony.

3. On the 15th of October, 1885, Lord Augustus Loftus was informed by telegram that Her Majesty's Government had decided to assume the Protectorate over a portion of the southern shores of New Guinea and some of the adjacent islands; and shortly afterwards Commodore Erskine was instructed to take, and did take, the necessary steps to give effect to this decision.

In a circular despatch of the same date, Lord Derby stated that he hoped very shortly to address to the Governors of the Colonies a further communication in regard to the measures which would have to be taken to render the Protectorate effective.

4. On the 31st of October, 1885, a further telegram was despatched to Lord Augustus Loftus, stating that Her Majesty had approved of the appointment of the late General Sir Peter Scratchley as Special Commissioner for the Protectorate; that Her Majesty's Government thought it desirable that the contributing Colonies should appoint members of a Council of Advice in Australia to assist him; that the Admiralty recommended the purchase of a steamer in England for the Commissioner, at an estimated cost of £16,000 or £18,000; and that the £15,000 guarantee would apparently have to be considerably increased; and the Colonies were asked to say whether they would agree to be represented in the proposed Council, and whether they would double their contribution for the purposes indicated.

5. The Colonies, however, deferred any definite expression of opinion upon these proposals until the receipt of further information as to the intentions of Her Majesty's Government.

6. Up to this time it had, I believe, been understood by all the Colonies that the undertaking "to defray in proportion to population such share of the cost of giving effect to the Resolutions of the Convention as Her Majesty's Government, having regard to the relative importance of Imperial and Colonial interests, might deem fair and reasonable," had been accepted in the same sense in which it was offered, and that Her Majesty's Government would, upon the guarantee of the Colonies to make such payment as might be asked, undertake to do all that was necessary to give effect to the action determined upon.

It was therefore, I think, a source of some surprise when, upon receipt of the Circular Despatch of 19th November, 1885, announcing General Scratchley's appointment, and transmitting his instructions, it was discovered incidentally that the Colonies were expected to defray the whole cost of the Protectorate. No information, however, was given on the important subject of the future administration of its government.

7. The Colonies were subsequently informed of an extension of the boundaries of the Protectorate, and of Her Majesty's intention to annex the territory included in it to the British Empire; and on the 14th of August, 1885, Colonel Stanley telegraphed to the Governors of the Colonies as follows:—

"Her Majesty's Government willing to proclaim Queen's sovereignty and to contribute to cost of New Guinea if Colonies agree to following arrangement: Colonies to contribute £15,000 per annum, and provide any further expenditure they may approve. Imperial contribution, will be the gift of suitable ship, costing, delivered at New Guinea, not less than £18,000. This offer made in full confidence that your Government will as soon as possible obtain from Legislature Act to secure permanently annual proportion. On proclamation of sovereignty Scratchley would have full legislative powers and control over all nationalities."

No further information has up to the present time been afforded as to the manner in which it is proposed that the Government of the territory should be administered.

8. With the exception of Queensland, which has already passed an Act for the permanent appropriation of its contribution, none of the Colonies have taken action upon the invitation to do so. The Colony of South Australia has formally withdrawn from the joint guarantee, and I infer that, under existing circumstances, and in the absence of any more definite and satisfactory proposals from Her Majesty's Government, the other Colonies are not likely to take the action suggested, especially as the telegram which I have just quoted appears to indicate that, with the exception of the first cost of a ship, the Colonies are expected to bear the whole expense of government, but are to have no voice in its administration. In the absence, however, of a formal and binding guarantee, Her Majesty's Government do not appear disposed to advise Her Majesty to assume sovereignty over the Protectorate.

It is clear, nevertheless, that until the territory is annexed to the British Dominions no provision can be made for the maintenance of law and order, or indeed for any real government.

9. If the existing state of things in Australasia admitted of the establishment of a Joint Council of Advice such as that suggested in Lord Derby's telegram of the 31st of October, 1884, I should be much disposed to advise the constitution of such a Council, and the appointment of an Administrator of British New Guinea, with instructions to be guided by the advice of the Council. I apprehend, however, that this scheme is, for the present at least, not practicable, and may be left out of consideration. The annexation of British New Guinea to Queensland is also, I apprehend, out of the question. Nor, for many reasons, do I think it desirable.

10. Her Majesty's Law Advisers in Great Britain have, I understand, formally advised that the territory when annexed must be taken to have been acquired by settlement, and not by conquest or cession, and that the provisions of the Imperial Acts 6 and 7 Vic., c. 13, and 23 and 24 Vic., c. 121, by which it is provided that in Colonies acquired by settlement powers of legislation may be exercised by the Queen by Order in Council, or by three or more persons within the Colony to whom the Queen has delegated such powers, are consequently applicable.

11. The essential elements of the position appear then to be these: It is necessary that the territory should be annexed to the British Empire, but Her Majesty will not be advised to assume sovereignty until the Colonies, or some of them, undertake to bear the whole cost of administration, except perhaps some small initial contribution. On the other hand, the Colonies are unwilling to give such an undertaking without a clear understanding as to the future government of the territory, or unless they have a substantial control over the expenditure of the money contributed by them. And such control cannot at present be exercised by them collectively.

12. These considerations seem to point to the conclusion that under existing circumstances one of the Colonies should, on behalf of all, undertake to provide the necessary funds for defraying the expenses of administration, and should be entrusted with the necessary authority to supervise the expenditure and see that the administration is conducted on principles which meet with their general approval.

13. With respect to the probable cost of government, I have reason to believe that a considerable revenue might even now be raised in British New Guinea from import duties, licenses to cut timber, and other similar sources, and that, at any rate, after the first year or two, a sum much less than £15,000 would have to be annually contributed by the guaranteeing Colonies. The expenses of administration need not, I think, be heavy. The untimely and lamented death of Sir Peter Scratchley has deprived us of the advantage of his experience, and of the information gained by him on his visit to the various parts of the Protectorate: but further consideration has led me to the conclusion that the maintenance of a costly steamer, upon which, under his proposals of 1st April, 1885, a very large proportion of the annual contribution of £15,000 would have been expended, is not necessary: and that a good sailing schooner, with a small steamer stationed at or near Torres Straits (which might be also used for the purposes of the Queensland Government at Thursday Island, that Government bearing part of the expense), would be sufficient for immediate requirements. I doubt, also, whether the salary of £2,500 for the Administrator is not excessive. Reductions in these items would leave, with the anticipated revenue, which should be chiefly collected through the Custom House, a considerable margin for the payment of a judicial officer and one or two resident magistrates and other officials. The burden that the Colonies would be called upon to undertake would therefore be light; and would, probably, continually diminish, until in a few years the settlement became self-supporting. It is not improbable, however, that Her Majesty's Government might be willing to make some substantial contribution towards the initial expenses.

14. I apprehend that if one of the Colonies is to be entrusted with the primary responsibility of providing the necessary funds and the function of supervising their expenditure, the choice would naturally fall upon Queensland, which, from its geographical position, is most conveniently situated for the purpose.

15. The question would then arise how far should the administration of British New Guinea be subject to the direction of the Government of Queensland? The same objections which would be held to render it inexpedient to annex the territory to Queensland would probably also be deemed to extend to exclude a complete dependence upon the Government of this Colony. And it is likely that Her Majesty's Government would stipulate for the establishment and maintenance of proper safeguards for the protection of the interests of the native races. In my judgment such a stipulation would be both satisfactory and desirable. Some general rules might also be laid down as to the prohibition of the purchase of land except from the Government, and of trade with the natives in arms, ammunition, explosives, and intoxicants. I have reason to believe that the German Government have agreed to enforce the latter prohibition in their territory in New Guinea.

16. I therefore suggest the following conditions as a basis for the administration of British New Guinea in the immediate future :—

- (1.) That the Colony of Queensland should undertake by a permanent Appropriation Act to defray the cost of the administration of the Government to an extent not exceeding £15,000 per annum for a term of (say) five years, subject to the following conditions.
- (2.) That the other Colonies should undertake (by similar permanent Appropriation Acts, if practicable, or by resolutions of their respective Parliaments) to repay to Queensland, for the same or such shorter period as may be agreed upon, a proportionate part of the amount which Queensland is called upon to pay under her undertaking; each Colony contributing either a fixed proportion of the total of £15,000 or an amount proportionate to its population as estimated on the 31st December preceding the year of contribution (except in the case of Fiji, whose contributions should be on the basis previously agreed upon) and Queensland herself bearing a proportionate share. (If desired, however, I do not think that Queensland would object to bear a somewhat larger share of the cost than would be payable on the basis of her population. But it should be remembered that the general supervision proposed would entail, indirectly, considerable expense).
- (3.) That the Imperial Government should make a reasonable contribution (by way of loan or otherwise) to cost of the necessary Government buildings, &c.
- (4.) That for any expenditure of money by Queensland beyond its agreed proportion, Queensland should have a first charge on the Surplus Revenue of the new Colony.
- (5.) That upon the proposed guarantee being given by Queensland, Her Majesty should assume Sovereignty over the Protectorate.
- (6.) That an Administrator of the Government should be appointed, with that title, at a salary to be determined by agreement between Her Majesty's Government and the Government of Queensland, to whom with two or more other persons should be delegated legislative powers under the Acts above cited.
- (7.) That no purchase of land should be allowed to be made by private persons, except from the Government or purchasers from it.
- (8.) That no deportation of natives should be allowed either from one part of the Colony to another, or to places beyond the Colony, except under Ordinances sanctioned by Her Majesty's Imperial Government.
- (9.) That trading with the natives in arms, ammunition, explosives, and intoxicants should be prohibited, except under Ordinances passed with the like sanction.
- (10.) That the foregoing three Articles should be made part of the Constitution of the Colony, preferably by Orders in Council made contemporaneously with the assumption of Sovereignty, or else by Ordinances to be passed immediately afterwards, under instructions from Her Majesty's Imperial Government; and that standing instructions should be given to the Governor of Queensland and to the Administrator of British New Guinea to observe the conditions of these Articles.
- (11.) That an estimate of probable revenue and proposed expenditure for each year should be submitted by the Administrator to the Governor of Queensland for approval, before being submitted to the Legislative Council of British New Guinea.
- (12.) That all accounts of receipts and expenditure should be audited by officers of the Queensland Government.
- (13.) That the Administrator, in the exercise of his legislative and administrative functions, should (subject, of course, to Her Majesty's power of disallowance of proposed laws) be subject to the instructions of the Governor of Queensland.
- (14.) That the Governor of Queensland should be directed to consult his Executive Council upon all matters relating to British New Guinea, within the limits of his instructions.
- (15.) That the Government of Queensland should consult the Governments of the other contributing Colonies in all matters other than those of ordinary administration, and report to them all action taken.

17. I infer from the address delivered to the Agents-General by Colonel Stanley, on his resignation of the office of Secretary of State for the Colonies, and I have otherwise reason to believe, that a scheme substantially to the foregoing effect would have met with his approval; and I shall be glad if it should, with such modifications as may suggest themselves upon further consideration, commend itself to the Colonies generally, and should prove a practical solution of the present difficulty.

Sir, Colonial Secretary's Office, Wellington, 10 April, 1886.
I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 25th February last, asking to be favoured with the views of the New Zealand Government upon the subject of confiding New Guinea to the administration of Queensland.

In reply, I have to inform you that this Government is of opinion that the administration of New Guinea should be confided to Queensland.

The Special Commissioner for British New Guinea to The Premier of New South Wales.

My dear Sir Patrick, Brisbane, 23 April, 1886.
I send you a copy of my letter to the Queensland Government on the subject of New Guinea, which I hope will be disposed of when you have talked over the matter with Griffith and Gillies.

I am quite sure that you ought to unite with them in some proposition to be made to the Imperial Government.

I am, &c.,

JOHN DOUGLAS.

[Enclosure to No. 12.]

New Guinea.

Sir,

Queensland Club, Brisbane, 21 April, 1886.
Admiral Tryon has invited Mr. Griffith to meet Mr. Gillies and Sir Patrick Jennings at Sydney, on the 26th inst., in order to discuss a project of Naval Defence for the United Colonies of Australasia. This meeting will also afford an opportunity for the further discussion of the New Guinea question; and it appears to be most desirable that some decision on it should be arrived at which will admit of the whole case being submitted to Her Majesty's Government.

2. I had the honor of addressing Sir Anthony Musgrave in a memorandum on this subject, bearing date the 24th of March. Since then, Mr. Griffith, on the part of the Government of Queensland, has submitted a memorandum to the Australasian Governments which has summarized the whole position in a manner so explicit that it may be readily grasped in all its bearings.

3. I am anxious, however, to direct the attention of your Excellency to one or two points in connection with Mr. Griffith's memorandum and my own, which ought I think to be further discussed before a final decision is arrived at.

4. With that suggestion which is contained in the 12th paragraph of Mr. Griffith's memorandum I cordially agree.

It seems to be most expedient that one of the Australian Colonies should, on behalf of all of them, become responsible for the whole amount required to meet the expenses of Administration in British New Guinea, and it appears to be most fitting that Queensland should be the Colony so responsible. I cannot, however, come to the conclusion that Mr. Griffith has arrived at when he assumes that much less than £15,000 will suffice for the annual contributions to be supplied by the Australasian Governments, if a real attempt is to be made to apply an efficient Administration. I have been enabled, it is true, by the considerate assistance of your Government, to make provisional arrangements for the service of the Protectorate, by the chartering of the schooner "Clara"; and the small steamer which is likely to be stationed in Torres Straits on the Thursday Island establishment will do something to secure supervision in the western portion of the Protectorate; but the coast line of British New Guinea cannot be estimated at less than 1,000 miles, without including the outlying islands of the Trobriand, Woodlark, D'Entrecasteaux and Louisiade groups. It seems to me to be essential, for the purposes of any efficient supervision over this area, that a steam-vessel should be at the disposal of the Special Commissioner or the future Administrator. Her Majesty's ships of war, no doubt, patrol the coast at certain times, and it is possible that this service will be ultimately undertaken by these ships of war, which may be maintained at the cost of the Australian States; but I cannot come to the conclusion that the services of a steam-vessel at the disposal of the Commissioner can be dispensed with, and I cannot therefore regard the expenditure as unnecessary.

5. Nor do I think that the salary of the future Administrator, which has been named at £2,500 per annum, is excessive, if he is to be placed on a par in position with the other Australian Governors. His responsibilities will be great. He ought to be a man of experience, versed in affairs. The demands made upon his judgment will certainly not be less than any made upon Her Majesty's Representatives in Australia, and he will have to perform his duties with the certainty of having to incur considerable risks. If it were intended to station a Police Magistrate, or a Resident, on some point on the coast at Bampton Island, Port Moresby, or East Cape, then I think that a salary of £1,000 a year might suffice, but I do not understand that this is what is contemplated.

6. So far, then, from the amount of the £15,000 a year which has been spoken of being more than sufficient for the contemplated purposes, I cannot myself regard it as sufficient, if Sovereignty is to be proclaimed.

In the Estimates framed by the late Special Commissioner, no provision was made for the Administration of Justice, for the cost of the survey of land—a most essential and primary condition for settlement; nor has any suitable provision been made for the payment of a Health Officer or a Medical Superintendent.

7. At the lowest estimate of probable expenditure on the lines contemplated, I cannot name a sum less than £20,000 per annum as required for the essentials of a well-ordered Government in British New Guinea for the first five years. Nor can I venture to anticipate that the revenue, either from dues collected or from land sold, would in the first few years meet the expenditure.

8. It is, nevertheless, most essential that, when sovereignty is proclaimed, some stability and continuity should be attached to the Administration. For this reason, I regard it as most desirable that the Governments of Australasia, acting in combination with Her Majesty's Government, should advance a specific sum, to be expended over a series of years (say five), on an estimate of annual expenditure not exceeding £20,000, the capital sum thus advanced to be secured on the revenues of New Guinea when collected. I regard such an advance as one made on ample security, and in dealing with this matter in the Australian Parliaments it should be treated strictly as an advance covering a liability. I take the liberty of pressing upon Your Excellency's attention the utter futility of causing the future administration of New Guinea to be made dependent on sums of money to be annually voted by half a dozen Parliaments.

9. It seems certainly to be most necessary that the conditions on which the Constitution of the new Province is to be founded should be specified in the organic instrument under which Her Majesty may be advised to confer jurisdiction; and in this respect I have nothing to add to Mr. Griffith's remarks. These principles, however, having been agreed on, and stamped on the Constitution, I cannot think that there would be much advantage in a detailed control in administration exercised by the Government of Queensland, unless, indeed, it should be proposed to effect a territorial incorporation. This, I apprehend, is not contemplated, and Mr. Griffith has said that, in his opinion, it would not be desirable.

10. It is essential, as Sir Peter Scratchley has remarked in one of his later memoranda, that British New Guinea should become part of the Anglo-Australian political system. For this reason the principles of its Constitution should be in accord with those laid down by the associated Colonies or States of Australasia. Its future legislation, subject as it must be to Her Majesty's assent, might also be submitted for the sanction of the Federal Council, when fully constituted. But I cannot bring myself to think that the Estimates of Expenditure should be subject to the annual adjustment of the Queensland Executive, or indeed of any combination of Australasian Executives. Such subjection might, and probably would, paralyse the action of the New Guinea Executive. At the same time, it must be admitted that the Queensland Executive might be of the greatest use as the exponent of the Federal Council. It might also materially assist in the Administration of Justice, and in the auditing of accounts, so as to secure an expenditure in accordance with the Scheduled Estimates. For the first few years this would be necessary, and I am confident that the Government of Queensland may be depended on to give the aid which in these respects the infant states of New Guinea will so much require. I wish, however, earnestly to draw the attention of Your Excellency's Government to the fact that financial stability and continuity are of the utmost importance. A Scheduled Estimate should be agreed on. The money thus advanced should be applicable, in that form, for a period of not less than five years, and the whole amount thus advanced should be secured on the future revenues of British New Guinea.

Sir Peter Scratchley, I observe, expressed an opinion that it seemed to be doubtful if the country could be made self-supporting. I owe every respect to General Scratchley's conclusions. I am bound to say, however, that I entertain a different opinion. I assume that European settlement will go on hand in hand with the gradual attraction of the native races to industrial pursuits. Land will be acquired by the Government from the natives, and will be sold. I have seen at Thursday Island how a revenue grows up, under conditions not very different from those which prevail in New Guinea. I have some confidence, therefore, in concluding that, under judicious management, a revenue may be obtained for all the essential purposes of government. But I readily admit that, for the first few years, there must be some expenditure in advance, and I have already stated what I think the minimum of that expenditure should be.

11. Allow me, in conclusion, to draw Your Excellency's attention once more to the meeting of the Prime Ministers of New South Wales, Victoria, and Queensland, which, it is expected, will shortly take place in Sydney.

It is, of course, exceedingly desirable that there should be concerted action on the part of the Australian Governments on this question. They are in honor bound to maintain Her Majesty's Government in the future Government of New Guinea, and I regret extremely to observe that the province of South Australia has, for the present, notified a discontinuance of payments on account. From communications, however, which I have had with Lord Carrington's Government in New South Wales, and with Sir Henry Loch's Government in Victoria, I feel confident that no defection need be feared from them, and I anticipate their hearty co-operation with Your Excellency's Government.

12. I assume, for the moment, that the three Colonies I have named would be willing, each of them on behalf of the whole Australian Group, to guarantee an advance of £25,000, being at the rate of £5,000 a year each for five years. This would amount to a capital sum of £75,000. On such a sum of money being guaranteed, I cannot doubt that Her Majesty's Government would accept its share of responsibility, and would probably be willing to guarantee a similar amount, by way of advance, to be secured in like manner on the accruing revenue. This would provide the Government of New Guinea with the means, and not more than the sufficient means, for an efficient start in life. I assume that a steam vessel must be obtained, and that a small sailing vessel, with several whaleboats, will be required for the use of the New Guinea Government. Houses also will have to be built for the agents—natives and European—which it will be necessary to domicile on the coast. It may be desirable also to erect some small jetties. Having regard, therefore, to such outlay as this on capital account, as well as to the annual expenditure, I do not regard an amount of £150,000, expended over five years, as by any means excessive for the purposes of establishing a rudimentary form of government having effect over the wide area which has been added to Her Majesty's Dominions.

13. I will presume to add that it becomes a duty incumbent on Her Majesty's subjects in Australia to devise the means for giving effect to a project of government which is of most momentous importance to hundreds of thousands of human beings, of whom as yet we know so little.

14. I confidently anticipate, therefore, that the hearty interest which has hitherto been shown by Your Excellency's Government in this matter will be shortly followed up by some definite propositions, to be submitted to Her Majesty's Government; and I shall deem it a favour if your Excellency will inform me of the nature of the propositions when an understanding has been arrived at.

I have the honor to be, Sir,

Your most obedient, humble servant,

JOHN DOUGLAS,

Her Majesty's Special Commissioner for British New Guinea.

His Excellency Sir Arthur Palmer, K.C.M.G., &c., &c., &c.

Colonial Secretary's Office, Brisbane, 30 April, 1886.

I HAVE drawn up the following memorandum, as embodying the conclusions at which we arrived on Wednesday. I believe it is accurate. I shall be very glad if you can convey your assent to it before Monday, that I may finally transmit it, through the Governor, to the Secretary of State, before leaving for the Gulf. Draft proposal for the future administration of British New Guinea, agreed to by the Governments of the Colonies of New South Wales, Queensland, and Victoria, at Sydney, on the twenty-fifth of April, 1886:—

- One.—The Colony of Queensland to undertake, by a permanent Appropriation Act, to defray the cost of the administration of the Government of British New Guinea, to an extent not exceeding fifteen thousand pounds per annum, for the term of five years, subject to the following conditions.
- Two.—The Colonies of New South Wales and Victoria to undertake, by similar permanent Appropriation Acts, to bear equally with Queensland any amount which the latter Colony may be called upon to pay under article one, so that each Colony shall be liable for one-third of the whole expenditure, to an extent not exceeding five thousand pounds.
- Three.—Any contribution made by the Governments of any of the other Australasian Colonies to be applied in reduction of the amount which the Colonies may be called upon to pay under articles one and two.
- Four.—Any revenue raised by the Government of New Guinea to be similarly applied in reduction of the amount which the Colonies may be called upon to pay, under articles one and two, unless in the event of a larger annual expenditure than fifteen thousand pounds being agreed to, as provided in article six, in which case the excess is to be provided from the revenue.
- Five.—The Imperial Government to make a reasonable contribution by way of loan, or otherwise, towards the cost of the necessary Government buildings, &c.
- Six.—Upon the proposed guarantee being given by Queensland, Her Majesty to assume Sovereignty over the Protectorate.
- Seven.—An Administrator of the Government to be appointed, with that title, to whom, with two or more other persons, legislative powers are to be delegated under the Imperial Acts six and seven Victoria c. 13, and 23 and 24 Victoria c. 121.
- Eight.—The Colonies recognizing the necessity for a small Civil List, propose the following as probably sufficient for the first initiation of the Government:—Administrator, fifteen hundred pounds; Private Secretary, three hundred pounds; Judicial Officer, ten hundred pounds; Secretary to Government, five hundred pounds.
- Nine.—No purchase of land to be allowed to be made by private persons, except from the Government, or purchasers from it.
- Ten.—No deportation of natives to be allowed either from one part of the Colony to another, or to places beyond the Colony, except under Ordinances reserved for Her Majesty's assent, and assented to by Her Majesty.
- Eleven.—Trading with the natives in arms, ammunition, explosives, and intoxicants, to be prohibited, except under ordinances reserved and assented to in like manner.
- Twelve.—No differential duties to be imposed in favour of any of the guaranteeing Colonies, or any other colony or country.
- Thirteen.—The foregoing four articles to be made part of the constitution of the Colony, preferably by Orders in Council, made contemporaneously with the assumption of Sovereignty, or else by Ordinances to be passed. Immediately afterwards, under instructions to the Administrator from Her Majesty's Imperial Government, standing instructions to be given to the Governor of Queensland, and to the Administrator of British New Guinea, to observe the conditions of the Articles.
- Fourteen.—An appeal to lie to the Supreme Court of Queensland, at Brisbane, in all civil cases involving an amount of over one hundred pounds, and in all criminal cases involving a punishment greater than three months' imprisonment.
- Fifteen.—An estimate of revenue and expenditure to be submitted by the Administrator to the Governor of Queensland, and approved by him before the passing of any Appropriation Ordinances.
- Sixteen.—Any appropriation beyond the amount of fifteen thousand pounds for any one year to be agreed to by each of the three guaranteeing Colonies.
- Seventeen.—All accounts of receipts and expenditure to be audited by officers of the Queensland Government.
- Eighteen.—The Administrator, in the exercise of his legislative and administrative functions, to be subject to the instructions of the Governor of Queensland, subject, of course, to Her Majesty's power of disallowance of proposed laws.
- Nineteen.—The Governor of Queensland to be directed to consult his Executive Council upon all matters relating to British New Guinea.
- Twenty.—The Government of Queensland to consult the Governments of the other contributing Colonies in all matters other than those of ordinary administration, and to report to them all action taken.

No. 17.

Telegram from Premier, Victoria, to Premier, New South Wales.

4 May, 1886.

HAVE received your telegram of third, expressing concurrence in Griffiths' draft memorandum respecting administration of New Guinea. I had, however, already addressed telegrams to Griffith, suggesting following alteration, namely:—In paragraph four—the article referred to as number six should be number sixteen, paragraph five. Instead of towards the cost of the necessary Government buildings, &c., insert, to cover the cost of efficiently starting the new Government, and of the necessary Government buildings, &c. Explicit reference should be made at end of paragraph five to suggest advance of one hundred thousand pounds by Imperial Government. Paragraph fourteen—this should be made part of the Constitution. Paragraph fifteen—add at end the following:—The Governor having power to strike out any item of proposed expenditure. Paragraph eighteen—instead of subject to the instructions of the Governor, insert, subject to general instructions by the Governor. After paragraph twenty add new paragraph twenty-one, as follows:—An annual report to be furnished by the Administrator to the Governor of Queensland of the proceedings of his Government, Legislative and Administrative; and copies of such report, together with any memoranda which the Governor of Queensland may think fit to attach, to be forwarded to the Secretary of State, and to each of the contributing Colonies.

Submitted.—R.S., 4/5/86.

(PETITION FROM JOHN YOUNG, MAYOR, ON BEHALF OF THE CITIZENS OF SYDNEY.)

Received by the Legislative Assembly, 8 April, 1886.

To the Honorable the Speaker and the Members of the Legislative Assembly of New South Wales.

The humble Petition of the Citizens of Sydney, in Public Meeting assembled,—

HUMBLY SHOWETH :—

1. That the people of Great Britain and of these Colonies have for many years been connected with the Islands of the New Hebrides, both by successful missionary labours, and by important trading and commercial interests.

2. That the inhabitants of the New Hebrides have repeatedly taken steps to make their wishes known in favour of British connection, and are ready to gratefully accept the protection of the British flag.

3. That the thirty fertile islands which mainly form the New Hebrides group are everywhere capable of sustaining an industrious population, and of producing articles of commerce, which are largely taken in exchange for British and Colonial products.

4. That the native populations of the New Hebrides are in many parts professing Christians, and are peaceably disposed towards British settlement.

5. That, in the progress of Australia, the connection of the New Hebrides, by commercial and political ties, would materially add to the prosperity of these Colonies.

6. That the acquisition of the New Hebrides by any foreign Power would not prove otherwise than injurious to the highest interests of the Empire in the Pacific, and would in a special manner be fraught with trouble and disaster to Australia.

7. That the possibility of the New Hebrides becoming, in the vicissitudes and exigencies of European nations, a receptacle for foreign convicts, against which no provisions of present compromise can afford inviolable security, is viewed by this Meeting, in common with their fellow-colonists throughout Australasia, with the utmost uneasiness and alarm.

Your Petitioners therefore humbly pray your Honorable House to take the foregoing premises into your most favourable consideration, and to cause such representations to be made to Her Majesty's Imperial Government as may tend to avert the disastrous occurrence which they contemplate, from a national point of view, with so much concern, apprehension, and alarm.

That, in view of the fact that negotiations are now proceeding in London and Paris, which in the next three or four days may result in the cession of the islands to France, and a crisis having now arrived, your Petitioners respectfully desire to impress upon your Honorable House the great necessity of taking immediate steps to make the views of the Colonists known to the English Government.

And your Petitioners, as in duty bound, will ever pray.

JOHN YOUNG, Mayor of Sydney,
Chairman of Public Meeting.

To the Honorable the Speaker and the Members of the Legislative Assembly of New South Wales, in Parliament assembled.

The Petition of the undersigned inhabitants of Balmain,—

HUMBLY SHOWETH:—

That at a very large and influential meeting held in the Town Hall, Balmain, on Monday, the 12th instant, the following resolutions were unanimously carried, viz.:—1. "That in view of the long connection of the British people with the New Hebrides, and the growing interests of civilization and commerce in those islands, this meeting regards their surrender to a foreign flag, contrary to the wishes of the inhabitants, as an act of injustice to them, and one fraught with serious troubles to Australia." 2nd. "That this meeting believes that every effort should be made by the Government of this Colony, in conjunction with the other Australian Governments, to secure the New Hebrides, either as a British Colony or under a British Protectorate." 3rd. "That a Petition embodying the Resolutions passed at this meeting, and signed by the Chairman on behalf of the inhabitants of Balmain, be presented to the Legislative Assembly.

(PETITION FROM D. CASSIN, MAYOR OF MUDGEE, ON BEHALF OF THE RESIDENTS.)

Received by the Legislative Assembly, 21 April, 1886.

To the Members of the Legislative Assembly of New South Wales, in Parliament assembled.

Your Petitioners, the residents of Mudgee and surrounding district, humbly sheweth, that at a public meeting, convened by the Mayor (Mr. D. Cassin,) and held at the local Town Hall on the evening of the 13th instant, an opinion was unanimously expressed denunciatory of the proposed annexation of the New Hebrides Islands by the Government of France, for reasons set forth in the following resolution, which was unanimously carried at the meeting:—"That in view of the long standing connection of the British people with the New Hebrides in commercial and other affairs, and of the expressed desire of the inhabitants thereof to be under a British Protectorate, this meeting regards the cession of those islands to France as unjust, and further regards it in view of the uses to which neighbouring islands have been put by the French, as likely to be fraught with serious trouble and injury to Australians."

Your Petitioners therefore humbly pray that Parliament will consider the above resolution in connection with any action it may take in the matter.

And your Petitioners will ever pray.

NORFOLK ISLAND.

(DESPATCH RESPECTING THE PRESENT SYSTEM OF ADMINISTRATION.)

Presented to Parliament by Command.

The Secretary of State for the Colonies to His Excellency the Governor.

(N.S.W.—No. 108.)

My Lord,

Downing-street, 13 November, 1885.

I have received Lord A. Loftus' despatches, No. 7 and No. 8, of 29th July last, with their enclosures, respecting the present system of administration at Norfolk Island.

I have read those papers with much interest, and fear that it is impossible to avoid the conclusion that under the present system the condition of the islanders is likely to deteriorate. Moreover, the difficulty of governing them will no doubt increase, unless some means can be devised of introducing new settlers into the island, and of inducing and enabling some of the natives to emigrate.

The success of any such reforms would be greatly assisted if the Government of New South Wales should be willing to take an active part in arranging and furthering a practical scheme, and if the Colonial Government should be willing to test the productive capabilities of Norfolk Island; and I request that you will ascertain whether the Government of New South Wales would be disposed to entertain the suggestion that the Colony might undertake the control and administration of the island.

I may add, with reference to the last paragraph of the first of the despatches under acknowledgment, that the acceptance of Mr. Wilkinson's offer of his further gratuitous services for six months, if the offer should be made, would appear desirable.

I have, &c.,

FRED. STANLEY.

Colonial Secretary. For the opinion of the Government.—CARRINGTON, 30/12/85. For Cabinet. Cabinet approves, subject to confirmation of Parliament.—JOHN ROBERTSON. His Excellency.

The Humble Petition of the Mayor and Aldermen of the Municipal District of Leichhardt, in the Colony of New South Wales,—

RESPECTFULLY SHOWETH:—

1. That the Municipal District of Leichhardt is at this date divided between the two Parliamentary Electorates of Balmain and the Glebe respectively, the portion to the west of White's Creek being in the Electoral District of Balmain, and the portion to the east of the said creek being in the Electoral District of the Glebe.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.

NEW SOUTH WALES.

NEW SOUTH WALES ARTILLERY.

(CORRESPONDENCE RESPECTING THE PROMOTION OF LIEUTENANT HENRY PARK AIREY TO RANK OF CAPTAIN.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be printed, 24 February, 1886.

Minute of His Excellency the Governor.

Government House, 20 January, 1886.

1. A Court of Inquiry was ordered by His Excellency Lord Augustus Loftus, G.C.B., 19/10/85, to examine certain charges brought against Lieutenant H. P. Airey, N.S.W.A., by Lieutenant-Colonel Spalding, N.S.W.A.

2. Lieutenant-Colonel Spalding, 28/7/85, states:—"Lieutenant Airey, I regret to say, is not a good Field Battery Officer; when on active service he displayed a want of zeal and energy in carrying out the duties of his position."

The promotion of Lieutenant Airey in consequence of this report was delayed, though he had passed his examination, qualifying for the rank Captain, in July, 1877.

3. I have carefully considered the evidence laid before the Court, by which it appears that when Lieutenant Airey recovered from sea-sickness

He exercised the horses;

He attended to the shoeing;

He seemed willing cheerfully to undertake the duty of other officers in addition to his own.

All N.C. Officers and men called as witnesses, testified to his zeal and energy.

He served under fire as galloper, and was favourably spoken of by General Freemantle, and he volunteered for active service in Afghanistan.

5. I am of opinion,—

(1.) That the charges of want of zeal and energy brought against Lieutenant Airey by Lieutenant-Colonel Spalding have not been made out.

(2.) According to military law, any charges brought against Lieutenant Airey which have been previously disposed of cannot again be preferred against him, nor should they in any way be brought into this inquiry.

(3.) In my opinion Lieutenant Airey is entitled to the rank of Captain, vice Mackenzie transferred, and his Commission should bear the date of 29th March, 1885.

CARRINGTON.

The Colonial Secretary to His Excellency the Governor.

Colonial Secretary's Office, Sydney, 9 February, 1886.

Memo. for His Excellency Lord Carrington, P.C., G.C.M.G. (as Commander-in-Chief.)

Your Excellency,

I have read your views on the Spalding-Airey case, and concur with you that Lieutenant Airey ought to be promoted to the position of Captain, to take effect from the 29th March, 1885.

With regard to paragraph 5 of your Lordship's Minute of 29th ultimo, while agreeing that "according to military law any charges brought against Lieutenant Airey by Colonel Spalding which have been previously disposed of cannot again be preferred against him," I would say that it is surely only fair it should be recorded of Colonel Spalding that he cannot be held responsible for the institution of this Court of Inquiry, he having in the first place preferred no complaint as to Lieutenant Airey's conduct whilst under his command, except under the direct compulsion of his superior officer, Colonel Roberts.

JOHN ROBERTSON.

I have shown the above to His Excellency.

Prepare minute for Governor and Executive Council. The promotion from the 29th March last.
Minute herewith, 9 February. JOHN ROBERTSON.

Minute Paper for the Executive Council.

I am directed by the Colonial Secretary to inform you that His Excellency the Governor, with the advice of the Executive Council, has been pleased to appoint Lieutenant Henry Park Airey of the New South Wales Artillery to be a Captain in that Force; and to transmit to you herewith the Commission that has been prepared in his favour accordingly.

2. I am desired to add that the appointment, which is to take effect from the 29th March last, has been duly notified in the Government Gazette of the present date.

I have, &c.,

CRITCHETT WALKER,

By His Excellency the Right Honorable Charles Robert, Baron Carrington, a Member of Her Majesty's Most Honourable Privy Council, Knight Grand Cross of the Most Distinguished Order of Saint Michael and Saint George, Governor and Commander-in-Chief of the Colony of New South Wales and its Dependencies.

To Lieutenant Henry Park Airey, of the New South Wales Artillery.

Know you, that I, Charles Robert, Baron Carrington, the Governor and Commander-in-Chief aforesaid, do, by virtue of the power and authority in me vested by the Act of Parliament passed in the thirty-first year of Her present Majesty's reign, and intituled "An Act to regulate the Volunteer Force," and with the advice of the Executive Council of the said Colony, hereby appoint you the said Lieutenant Henry Park Airey to be a Captain in the New South Wales Artillery, to bear date from the 29th March, 1885.

Given under my hand and seal, at Government House, Sydney, in New South Wales aforesaid, this ninth day of February, in the forty-ninth year of Her Majesty's reign, and in the year of Our Lord one thousand eight hundred and eighty-six.

(PETITION OF.)

Received by the Legislative Assembly, 11 December, 1885.

The Petition of Daniel Behan, late a Sergeant in the New South Wales Artillery, to the Honorable the Legislative Assembly,—

HUMBLY SHOWETH :—

That your Petitioner was discharged from the New South Wales Artillery on the 25th day of April last, he having then served 7 years and 272 days.

That his certificate of discharge stated that he was discharged in consequence of his misconduct, whereas during his whole service no charge of misconduct had ever been made against him, much less proved.

That in consequence of his said discharge your Petitioner has been deprived of certain allowances, and has been injured in his reputation, and he therefore prays that your Honorable House will cause inquiry to be made regarding this his complaint, and that you will advise his Excellency the Governor and Commander-in-Chief accordingly.

And your Petitioner will ever pray.

The Officer Commanding Artillery to The Major-General Commanding.

Sir, Artillery Brigade Office, Dawes Barracks, Sydney, 1 July, 1886.

I have the honor to report for information of proper authorities that from telegrams, and a letter received during the last three or four days, complaints have been made by the sergeant-in-charge at Newcastle of the extraordinary conduct of Mr. Bushby, of the Colonial Architect's Department.

843—

In

In the letter referred to, dated 28th ultimo, and forwarded yesterday, it appears that Mr. Bushby introduced a party of visitors into the fort, and that they were not, as is the rule, accompanied by any responsible person; that they, against all rules, smoked and dropped matches in the fort. Considering the large amount of ammunition stored there this is a most dangerous practice. A telegram next day stated:—“Mr. Bushby proceeded to the fort, and threatened to turn the military out of barracks, and endeavoured to remove the keys, eventually using improper language to the sergeant-in-charge.”

Again, yesterday, a report was made that Mr. Bushby removed the keys of the barracks, as well as those of the torpedo station, which are in charge of the New South Wales Artillery, quartered there, without any authority.

This conduct on the part of an officer belonging to another department is so extraordinary, and without any warrant, that I consider it my duty to report the same.

I have, &c.,

CHARLES F. ROBERTS,
Colonel Commanding Artillery Forces.

Sergeant Cullen to Lieutenant-Colonel Airey.

Sir,

Newcastle, 28 June, 1886.

I beg most respectfully to report for your information that a gentleman named Mr. Bushby, who holds the position of foreman of works in the Colonial Architect's Department, gave permission to several ladies and gentlemen to view the fort this afternoon. The said ladies and gentlemen had no authority from any officer, and were not accompanied by Mr. Bushby. As I did not know the party, and I had strict orders to allow nobody into the forts without an order, I asked for their pass. They replied that Mr. Bushby had given them permission. I told them they could not pass without a proper order, and that Mr. Bushby had no authority to give them permission. One of the gentlemen then abused me, and made an insulting remark re soldiers, and said I was exceeding my duty, &c. I then requested them to leave. Mr. Bushby then returned with these ladies and gentlemen, and showed them round the fort without any permission.

I wish to state that it will be impossible for me to carry out my orders, or be responsible for the fort, &c., unless permission is given me to detain persons overruling my orders, and placing them in custody.

I also wish to state that it is dangerous to smoke and throw matches about the grass.

I have, &c.,

W. CULLEN,
Sergeant.

Lieutenant-Colonel Airey to The Colonel Commanding Artillery Forces.

30 June, /86.

Report from non commissioned officer in charge of Newcastle herewith. Mr. Bushby's conduct, as reported in this letter, seems extraordinary, and should, I think, be enquired into. I have issued an order in the meantime to be placed on the gate, that all persons visiting the fort must be accompanied by an artilleryman, who will be detailed by the sergeant in charge.—G.A., Lt.-Col. Comdg. N. & B.I. Dist.

The Colonel Commanding Artillery Forces to The Assistant Adjutant-General.

I saw the Colonial Architect on a similar matter yesterday afternoon, having received a telegram forwarded to me by Lieutenant-Colonel Airey. I instructed Lieutenant-Colonel Airey, after the interview with the Colonial Architect, to direct Sergeant Cullen, in charge of fort at Newcastle, to report the case to police authorities, as the telegram complained that Mr. Bushby had used abusive and profane language towards Cullen, and had threatened to turn the military out of barracks. The barracks have been handed over to New South Wales Artillery since early this month.

Sergeant Cullen to Lieutenant-Colonel Airey.

Sir,

Newcastle, 30 June, 1886.

I again most respectfully wish to report for your information, that during my absence from my room this afternoon Mr. Bushby entered it, took every key away with him, and locked the door. I had to break a pane of glass to get through the window and undo the lock; he also locked the pantry where the men's rations are kept. There is a quantity of beds, &c., in some of those rooms he has locked; also turned off the gas. I had to purchase candles to-night. He gave me all the keys last week, and I gave him a receipt for them. I caught him coming in the gate, trying to put the keys of the torpedo station, &c., back unknown to me. I had him arrested, and handed him over to the police for stealing the keys, but the police Inspector refused to take him in charge yesterday when I handed him (Mr. Bushby) over to him. I can never carry out your orders, or do my duty if Mr. Bushby is allowed to do what he likes about the place. I also wish to state that this Mr. Bushby was very troublesome to others, even sentries on the gate, before I came to Newcastle.

I have, &c.,

W. CULLEN, Sergeant.

Do not interfere with Mr. Bushby so long as he confines himself to his own departmental work. As he has handed over the keys of the barracks he can have no business in there unless some alterations or additions are being carried out.

Report re disturbance at Fort Newcastle.

Sir,

Victoria Barracks, 5 July, 1886.

I beg to report that having taken the evidence of Sergeant Cullen and men stationed at the Fort, Newcastle, and, from what I can gather, it would appear that about 4 p.m. on 29th June, 1886, two gentlemen and three ladies came into the fort, and were asked if they had any permission to go over the works. One of the gentlemen answered that they had Mr. Bushby's authority, and on being informed that they must get authority from the non-commissioned officer in charge, they told the sergeant he was exceeding his duty, and had no right to interfere with them as Mr. Bushby had given them permission.

They were then told to remain outside the fort. One of the gentlemen then stated he was the editor of a local paper, and that he would make it hot for them all. This gentleman admitted before Superintendent Thorpe that he did not give his name or say who he was till then, and, from his subsequent conduct, would appear to have ignored the sergeant's authority or right to interfere with him in any way.

I understand Sergeant Cullen is accused of using improper language at this time. This he emphatically denies, and it is corroborated by Acting-Bombardier Smith, the Master Gunner, Corporal Cornwell, Gunners Willis, Phillips, and Prior.

On the 30th June, 1886, Mr. Bushby came into the fort to Sergeant Cullen, who was at work in the general store, and asked him why he insulted his friends, and told him he was a cur and a bloody thing, and that he would take all the keys and turn them out of the barracks; he also caught Sergeant Cullen by the throat, who ordered the men to detain Mr. Bushby till he could procure a constable. Mr. Bushby then called upon the men working near the fort to come to his assistance with their picks and shovels. Mr. Bushby was then detained in the guard-room and handed over on arrival to the police. Sergeant Cullen, fearing that Mr. Bushby would interfere with the keys, had them all collected and placed in the office. While he was away Mr. Bushby came in, took all the keys, including those belonging to torpedo works, away, locking the office-door after him. Sergeant Cullen gave him in charge for stealing the keys, but the police did not see their way to detain Mr. Bushby.

A portion of these keys were taken over by me on my last visit and the remainder were to be handed to Sergeant Cullen as soon as labelled. Mr. Bushby handed over all the keys of the barracks to Sergeant Cullen on the 18th June, as per accompanying voucher, taking the sergeant's receipt for them, which he admits having received, but has since for some reason torn up. Serious inconvenience was occasioned by Mr. Bushby's action, as the gas throughout the barrack rooms was cut off till my visit on 3rd instant.

With a view of preventing any misconception of divided authority, on suggestion of Mr. Colley the whole of the keys were again officially handed over to me, and I have given a receipt for them. I have issued instructions that Mr. Bushby is to be allowed access to the fort (which seems never to have been denied him under certain restrictions) for purpose of completing his work.

I

I have also had a notice put up that visitors, on application to the non-commissioned officer in charge, will be taken round the fort by an artilleryman; this I consider necessary for safety of magazines (which are full of powder), also ordnance and stores.

I have, &c.,
GEO. J. AIREY,
Lieutenant-Colonel Commanding Newcastle District N.S.W. Artillery.

The Editor Newcastle Daily News to Lieutenant-Colonel Roberts.

Sir,

Newcastle, 5 July, 1886.

It has come to my knowledge that Sergeant Cullen and five men have been instructed to proceed to Sydney for the purpose of giving evidence in the matter of insulting conduct on the part of Sergeant Cullen to visitors on last Monday, and it is said that had insulted the sergeant, which I most positively deny, and that the men alluded to are to support the sergeant's assertion. I can assure you there were no persons within hearing when I spoke, or rather remonstrated with Cullen on his insulting conduct, and this could be fully borne out by four ladies who were at the gate. It appears to me that this investigation is to be one of ex parte statements, which I need not point out to you would be most unfair. I may here point out to you that I have written to a Member of the Legislative Assembly requesting him to ask that all papers in connection with this affair may be laid on the table of the House, so that the public may be made conversant with the whole affair.

Statement of Mr. Frogley.

Mr. Frogley, contractor, states: A little over a fortnight ago I put all the keys in Dawes' barracks, officers' quarters, &c.; I heard Mr. Bushby say to Sergeant Cullen, "As I expect to be leaving here in a few days give me a receipt for the keys"; I saw Sergeant Cullen give Mr. Bushby a receipt for the keys on Wednesday, 30th June; I saw Mr. Bushby coming in the gate of the forts with a lot of keys in his hand; he handed the said keys to Sergeant Cullen, and he said, "They are all the keys I have written authority to give you"; I saw him (Mr. Bushby) tear Sergeant Cullen's receipt up; I also heard Mr. Bushby say, when he had torn up the receipt, "That the receipt was no good, as he (Mr. Bushby) had no authority to hand over the keys."

Statement

Statement of Sergeant Walker.

Re Cullen—Bushby.

ABOUT June, 1885, Captain Murray N.S.W.A., made arrangements whereby our men were permitted to use the water-closets in connection with the barracks at the forts, Newcastle; this was done with Mr. Bushby's knowledge, who informed Captain Murray and myself that the closets were fit for use. Shortly after this Mr. Bushby rose an altercation about the closets and threatened to lock them up, giving as his reasons to do so that they were not kept clean. This was altogether uncalled for, as I myself paid special attention to the cleanliness of the water-closets, &c. On another occasion Mr. Bushby had some concrete in the guard-room, which, by some means or other, became damaged, and Mr. Bushby was very cross over it, and seemed to blame our men for causing the damage. Why he wished to do so I could not understand as at this time he was permitted to use the guard-room "that is," when not actually in use by the Artillery and his own men, together with those of the contractor were allowed to keep their dinners, tools, &c., in the guard-room; and they had as many "if not more" opportunities of damaging the concrete than our men, who, I believe to have, and are actually innocent. Again, in December Mr. Bushby lodged a complaint against some of our men, whom he accused of throwing stones on his house. This was duly inquired into by Captain Murray, and as Mr. Bushby failed to produce evidence to establish his cause the men of course received the benefit of it.

On all three occasions I noticed Mr. Bushby to show a hasty temper, otherwise I have found his conduct straightforward.

THOS. WALKER,
Sergeant, N.S.W.A.

Statement of Bombardier Hoare.

I WAS stationed at Newcastle during the erection of the new Barracks, about the middle of October last year; I was acting as gate-orderly. Mr. Bushby came up to me and accused me of committing a nuisance in the new w.-c's, which were not then completed; I denied having ever used them. Mr. Bushby then said he would sooner have anyone strike him than tell him a lie; he then reported the matter to Sergeant Walker, who ordered Gunner Joyce and myself to clean the w.-c's out; whilst we were doing so I exchanged a few words with Mr. Bushby, after which he told me to come down on the beach and that he would take it out of me.

Sergeant Cullen.
Mr. Bushby.

With reference to dispute between the persons named in the margin, I do myself the honor to report that recently—I did not note the date—I had an application from Sergeant Cullen for a police officer to remove a person from the fort who was behaving in a disorderly manner. I accordingly sent one of my men who shortly returned accompanied by Sergeant Cullen and Mr. Bushby. I questioned both and from the statements made I had no hesitation in informing Mr. Bushby that from his own showing Sergeant Cullen acted as I should have done under the circumstances, assuming that I had received the same instructions which he alleged he had received from his Commanding Officer. Mr. Bushby's subsequent actions with regard to the keys I can offer no opinion; he asserted a right to them which I cannot contradict.

OUTRAGEOUS CONDUCT.

We have met in our time with military and naval officers who have always proved that they are possessed of the attributes attaching to the qualification of a gentleman. Non-commissioned officers also we have occasionally had business with, and although they may have been less refined than their superiors, intercourse with them has always been pleasurable from the fact that they possess in a remarkable degree the virtue of civility, which costs them no money. Whatever the practice may be in Australia, the garrisons and dockyards of England are always open to inspection, and why not indeed? Any person presenting himself at a dockyard gate is not challenged when he is in the company of the captain superintendent, still more, in the absence of that official or the admiral superintendent, a visitor has only to produce a ticket from either of these officials to pass him on to a free and independent inspection of the yard, its factory machinery, its ships in dock, and indeed every detail in which he feels interested. He is even allowed to measure the bore of a gun, and if so inclined indulge in more searching details without interference from any scowling official. And properly so, for no person of unknown character would receive a free pass of inspection from any admiral or captain superintendent. But alas! we are drifting into other ways on this side of the hemisphere, and it remains to be seen whether those in authority are prepared to resent an outrage committed yesterday on a highly respectable professional gentleman connected with Government. From what we can gather, it appears that on Monday two gentlemen, accompanied by three ladies, repaired to the Newcastle fort, by appointment, in order to meet Mr. Bushby, the Government Civil Engineer, with a view to inspecting the works. Perhaps a more innocent quintette it would be impossible to conceive, and upon venturing beyond "official" lines of demarcation, awaiting the arrival of the resident engineer for fortifications, a shocking-looking personage emerged from his quarters, and, upon inquiring the nature of their business and receiving a reply, commanded them to "keep outside there until Bushby arrived." The tone of his command, addressed as it was to the ladies, somewhat alarmed them, and upon being remonstrated with by one of the gentlemen present, who stated that he might hear more about his conduct, the sergeant, who is supported from the public rates, in no way reciprocated the polite language addressed to him. Here, one would imagine, sufficient grounds are furnished for a severe reprimand, if not the loss of a stripe from the arm of such an ill-mannered man. Mr. Bushby arrived, and the visitors were conducted around the fort, but subsequently they communicated to him the conduct of this man dressed in a little brief authority, so yesterday the Government engineer repaired to the fort to get some explanation for such outrageous conduct. We know not exactly what transpired between the military man and the Government engineer, but this we do know that Mr. Bushby is a gentleman of good manners and refinement, who would not approach even a sergeant in other than becoming language. Still Mr. Bushby had not been long in altercation with the man in authority before the irate sergeant gave him in charge of a guard, and requested his removal to the lock-up. Mr. Bushby was not only subjected to this indignity, but marched down under guard to Inspector Thorpe who, of course, declined to interfere. We declare such a proceeding to be unprovoked and outrageous, and trust no time may be lost in bringing the matter under the attention of Sir P. Jennings, who holds the position of Minister for War, so that he may be enabled to order an impartial inquiry here and deal with this ill-demeanoured man in any way he may deem fit. This should be done in justice to so excellent an official as Mr. Bushby, who leaves here shortly to superintend the erection of the forts at Lady Macquarie's Chair in Sydney.

OUTRAGEOUS CONDUCT—MUCH ADO ABOUT NOTHING—HOW SOME PEOPLE TRY TO RIDE THE HIGH HORSE.

Our junior morning contemporary of this morning has a long whine about some "outrageous conduct" to which it is alleged certain residents were subjected to at the fortifications this week. It is alleged that a certain party of ladies and gentlemen who were anxious to visit our local defence work, had been promised the privilege by a Government official; that while waiting for the official in question they were refused admittance and spoken to roughly; and that when subsequently the said official offered remonstrance, he also was treated discourteously and even arrested and marched down in charge of a guard to the police station, but that the police declined to take him into arrest, and the article seemed upon the face of it to be wanting, and the sergeant whose conduct was so severely dealt with, being known to us as ever courteous and gentlemanly, disposed us to make inquiries upon the subject, with the result that matters were found to wear an altogether different complexion to that placed before the readers of our contemporary. On Monday it seems three ladies and two gentlemen wandered past the gate into the enclosure. There they were were asked the usual question, if they had an order for admittance, and they said "No." The sergeant was communicated with. He quietly asked who gave them permission to come in, and were loftily informed that the official referred to had. "Well," said the sergeant, "you had better wait till he comes." The party went outside, and some unpleasant talk ensued. Then as one of the gentlemen said he was the editor of a certain paper, this information came rather late. Had it been mentioned before, the sergeant, ever courteous to Pressmen (and we have always found his superiors equally so) the party would have been taken round on the non-commissioned officer's own responsibility. Then up came the official alluded to, pompously defying the sergeant's authority and asserting his right, by reason of his connection with a certain department, to go where he liked. This was naturally resented. Yesterday, however, the official once more made his appearance, demanded to know why his friends had been turned out the day before, and furthermore coolly insisted he had even a right to the keys of the barracks, and could turn the men out if he liked. Of course he got the keys! Nothing more likely! Some unpleasant words ensued, and the official even wanted to call up some men to turn the common soldier out, and altogether behaved in anything but a cool manner, even making some nasty assertions about the conduct of the barracks, affecting the morality of the men. The sergeant sent for a policeman. The latter could not see his way to interfere, but at his suggestion the sergeant and the official walked down to the police-station together, and saw Inspector Thorpe. Mr. Thorpe bears out the statement that the man was not marched down in charge of a guard as stated. These are the plain facts of the case, and anyone who knows the least about military duties must hold with the sergeant's action. The fort is not to be looked upon in the light of a pleasure garden. The authorities have to see that disreputable or suspicious characters do not loiter about, and any citizen of known respectability may at any time, through the proper channel and in the proper way, and simply too, receive permission to inspect the premises. There is a standing order to this effect:—

"Any person visiting the fort must be accompanied by one of the artillerymen, who have instructions to show people round on application to the senior non-commissioned officer."

Can anything, with a due regard to public interests, be fairer than that? Hundreds yearly visit the place, and have not had occasion heretofore to complain of discourtesy, and had the usual and proper course been taken by the visitors concerned in this case, no unpleasantness would have resulted. The Artilleryman who first accosted the party is spoken of as "a shocking looking person," and the sergeant as an "ill-demeanoured man." There is contemptible advice to the military authorities to take a stripe off the sergeant—cripple his prospects in life, and interfere with his very bread and butter. Better for the News to have left the subject alone—it cannot come out of this with clean hands.

A CONTRADICTION.

To the Editor of the Evening Call.

Sir,

As one of the visitors insulted by the sergeant of the forts (who was informed, at my request, by one of his men I asked at the gate to tell the sergeant who I was, and of our wish to view the forts), I must request you will, in justice to the grossly insulted ladies of the party, contradict your very coloured statement in yesterday's issue; and feel sorry your information gained, after trouble taken by you, was of so untruthful a character as to cause your contradiction of fact as published by Daily News of the morning.

Yours, &c.,

JOHN RIGG.

[We insert this letter as sent, but it would have been more satisfactory had our correspondent stated in what respects the report published in these columns was untruthful. The truth, on whichever side it may be, will soon be known. Meanwhile we have no reason to doubt the accuracy of the information supplied to us.—ED. E.C.]

WHO HOLDS THE FORT?—OFFICIAL INQUIRY—THE SERGEANT'S ACTION APPROVED.

THIS morning Colonel Airey arrived from Sydney for the purpose of inquiring into the circumstances connected with the seizure of the keys of the fortification at Newcastle, as reported in the Call. Colonel Airey made careful inquiry into the circumstances under which a party of visitors had been delayed at the gate, they not having the usual order or pass for admission into the military enclosure. He also had an interview with Mr. Bushby, Government engineer of the fortifications, as to his reasons for taking away the keys of the fort, by way of asserting his authority to control the place. The result of these inquiries is that Mr. Bushby has given up the keys, which have been returned to the sergeant in charge of the fort. Colonel Airey has also ordered that no visitors shall be allowed, in future, to enter the fort without permission from the sergeant in charge. Whether official censure has been dealt out on either side we are unable to state definitely.

MILITARY COURTESY.

A FEW days ago we directed attention to gross misbehaviour on the part of a certain petty officer of artillery, who was addressed by respectable citizens, in the most polite terms, upon passing the official line. It will be remembered that he turned them aside; in fact ordered them "outside the gates" in the most abrupt and insulting manner. The ladies and gentlemen who formed this party were about as harmless a lot as it would be possible to find; still they were forbidden from entering the citadel by a man in military uniform, uniform, who conducted himself more after the spirit of a bulldog, with a little less manners than that rough and savage quadruped. We had no desire to pursue the petty officer in his want of bad manners, but it appears that his conduct was brought under the notice of military officials in Sydney, and, as a matter of course, an investigation ensued. Those who are now interested in eliciting the fact as to who was right or which side was wrong, have vainly endeavoured to know the outcome of a recent inquiry held in Sydney, and, strange to say, although the Honorable G. A. Lloyd has sought the production of papers bearing upon this inquiry in the Assembly, he can get no satisfaction. No papers produced,—all is silent; and official responses to communications emanating from persons interested in a ventilation of the truth, one side or the other, are couched in contemptuous language, not warranted, in our opinion, even on the part of a full-blown Colonel. Nevertheless, having made a charge, we abide events, feeling assured that official silence on the other side can only be construed as guilt. Mr. Lloyd may fail in eliciting testimony bearing upon the late inquiry; still he is entitled at least to have the papers placed on the table. But in the belief that there is an attempt to evade publicity as to the outcome of the behaviour of some of these artillerymen, no evasion at publicity shall be adopted on our part.

We have already committed ourselves to charging them with misbehaviour at the garrison, and challenge the authorities to a denial. They may consider their men most exemplary in their way, and above suspicion; but it is our duty to show that the conduct of affairs at the garrison for some time past has been of a nature certainly disgraceful, but perhaps excusable in the life of a soldier. Still, so far as we can gather, matters have been conducted in a manner which could scarcely be tolerated in the most uncivilised country. It has been stated repeatedly that the Newcastle Daily News is far too outspoken, but it has never yet been shown that there are reasonable grounds for taking exception to its sentiments. Is it true, as alleged by residents in the neighbourhood, that black gins have been admitted to the Newcastle fortification, and also white women of tender years for a purpose which may be conjectured? If not, then residents in that locality are speaking falsely. Why Mr. Lloyd's influence fails to elicit a production of the papers bearing upon the recent grievance is not easily understood. Surely the commands of Government should overrule either military or naval authorities when papers are demanded, which are public property in every sense of the word. Our only object in desiring the production of these papers is to convince the public that the attitude assumed by us at the outset of this unpleasantness was more than justified. When that is done with, and the authorities desire further information bearing upon the moral conduct of their troops, we shall be forthcoming with abundant evidence to support us.

The supineness of the Government in this matter appears to be very suspicious, and it is hoped that, for the welfare of the community, Mr. Lloyd will persevere in demanding the production of "these papers." Otherwise there is something to hide, and the sooner the investigation is made public the better.

MILITARY CORRESPONDENCE.

(CONDUCT OF.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be printed, 24 August, 1886.

Laid before the Executive Council on the 20th July, 1886.

Minute Paper.

Subject—Conduct of Military Correspondence.

Colonial Secretary's Office, Sydney, 2 June, 1886.

THE application of Captain Baynes, of the New South Wales Permanent Artillery, for six months' leave of absence, which has been sent to His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief, by the Major-General commanding the Military Forces without coming through this Department, I think calls for some comment at my hands, and has certainly raised a question as to who is properly responsible to Parliament for the performance of this officer's duties during his absence. The mode of conducting the correspondence regarding the Military and Volunteer Forces of the Colony has for some time appeared to me unsatisfactory, and I deem it advisable, with a view to a more correct and official way of dealing with it in future, that some regular plan should be laid down for the conduct of the military business by which the responsibility of each authority would be properly defined, and the official relations between this Department and Government House finally determined upon.

2. It has been the practice for some years for the Brigade Office to transmit all correspondence relating to the Volunteers direct to this Department (which has always been charged with and responsible for the expenditure of the Military Vote), but all matters relating to the Permanent Artillery, discipline, courts-martial, &c., have been sent direct to His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief, who has dealt with them hitherto as he thought fit. This, I think it will be admitted, is a divided authority, and one which has already led to great difficulties, and caused considerable confusion and friction.

3. It has been pointed out by my predecessors that the Military Department should be dealt with and treated in a precisely similar manner in its relation to the Crown and the Minister as any other department under the State, in which I fully concur, and I take this opportunity of recommending that in order to prevent confusion and irregularity hereafter arising that the whole Military Department be placed under the control of the Colonial Secretary as Minister for Defence, and that instructions be given to the Major-General commanding the Forces to address all correspondence direct to the Minister who is responsible for its proper conduct, except such matters as relate purely to discipline, which should be transmitted under sealed cover, addressed to His Excellency through this Department. I shall be glad to have the views of my honorable colleague the Premier upon the subject, and would like this Minute to be submitted for the full consideration of the Cabinet.

Minute by His Excellency the Governor.

Will the Colonial Secretary kindly request the Attorney-General to be good enough to say whether this is in accordance with the rules of Parliament?

CARRINGTON, 8/7/86.

Minute by the Colonial Secretary.

If the Attorney-General will mark upon this minute "That he concurs in the recommendations of the Colonial Secretary" His Excellency will be satisfied.

G.R.D., 8/7/86.

Opinion of Attorney-General on Minute by Colonial Secretary in reference to future mode of conducting Military Correspondence.

THERE are no rules of Parliament governing or controlling this matter, but so far as the Act 34 Vic. No. 19 is concerned it seems to me that the opinions expressed by Lord Augustus Loftus and the then Colonial Secretary (Sir Henry Parkes) on the 17th March, 1881, in connection with the papers "Subaltern Officers of Permanent Artillery Force" are not in any way opposed to the procedure suggested to be adopted. I see therefore no objection to the Minute of Mr. Secretary Dibbs being carried into effect.

Minute Paper for the Executive Council.

Colonial Secretary's Office, Sydney, 9 July, 1886.

Conduct of Military Correspondence.

As some inconvenience has arisen through the mode in which the correspondence relating to Military matters has hitherto been conducted, I recommend in accordance with the enclosed minute that with a view to a more effectual and regular manner of conducting the Military business, and in order to prevent the possibility of friction hereafter arising, that the whole Military Department be placed under the control of the Colonial Secretary as Minister of Defence, and that all correspondence be addressed to that Minister, who is alone responsible to Parliament for the expenditure of the Military Vote.

I further recommend that all matters relating purely to discipline should be addressed to His Excellency the Governor, but should be sent under sealed cover through this Department.

GEORGE R. DIBBS.

Minute No. 32, 20 July, 1886.

His Excellency the Governor lays before the Council a minute paper by the Honorable the Colonial Secretary on the subject of the conduct of "Military Correspondence," with a view to a more effectual and regular manner of conducting the Military business, and in order to prevent the possibility of friction hereafter arising.

The Honorable the Colonial Secretary therefore recommends that the whole Military Department be placed under the control of the Colonial Secretary, as Minister of Defence, and that all correspondence be addressed to that Minister, who is alone responsible to Parliament for the expenditure of the Military Vote.

The Honorable the Colonial Secretary also recommends that all matters purely relating to discipline should be addressed to His Excellency the Governor, but should be sent under sealed cover through the Colonial Secretary's Department.

The Council having maturely deliberated are of opinion that the course recommended by the Colonial Secretary for the future conduct of military correspondence should be approved, and accordingly advise that effect be given thereto.

VOLUNTEER INFANTRY.

Major-General Richardson to The Principal Under Secretary.

Sir,

16 February, 1886.

I have the honor to forward herewith an appeal from Sergeant Board, of the 2nd Regiment, Volunteer Infantry, against the action of his Commanding Officer, Lieut.-Colonel Goodlet, in refusing to recommend him for a commission as Lieutenant in that corps, and complaining of Lieut.-Colonel Goodlet's declining to give sufficient reason for his doing so.

It will be noted that on the 27th of July, 1883, the matter was practically dealt with by me in memo. of that date, to the effect that the Officer commanding was not bound to furnish reasons to those under his command for any action he might see fit to take in the interests of the Service, and that the responsibility of filling up the establishment of his corps rested with him, and at his own discretion.

Subsequent correspondence is merely a continuance of the complaint, with a request that the whole matter may be referred, as required by paragraph 74 of the Volunteer Regulations, for the decision of higher authority.

I beg to submit that the action of Lieut.-Colonel Goodlet is in strict accordance with the proper administration of command; and it will moreover be seen that the tone of Sergeant Board's letters, and persistence in a line of conduct which I have already had occasion to adversely remark upon, point to the correctness of the view entertained by Lieut.-Colonel Goodlet, and consequently the justice of his action in declining to recommend him for a commission.

I have, &c.,

JOHN S. RICHARDSON,

Major-General Commanding.

Submitted, 2/3/86. Approved.—G.R.D., 8/3/86. The Major-General Commanding, B.C.,
8 March, /86. The Officer commanding 2nd Regiment. Sergeant Board may be informed.—J.S.R.,
M.-G., 9/3/86. Sergeant Board has been informed.—By order, C. G. NORRIS, Major.

[Enclosure No. 1.]

Sergeant Board to The Officer Commanding No. 4 Co., 2nd Regt., Vol. Infantry.

Sir,

Surveyor-General's Office, Sydney, 4 August, 1882.

It having come to my knowledge that Mr. Gough has written officially to the Brigade Office, notifying his intention of resigning the commission he at present holds in the 2nd Regiment, V.I., I have the honor to apply to be promoted to the appointment such resignation will render vacant.

I have fulfilled the conditions required by the 24th and 25th clauses of the Volunteer Regulations, and been an efficient member of the new organization since its formation, my aim and object being from the beginning the obtaining a commission.

I beg to request that you will be pleased to forward this my application for appointment through the proper channel to the officer commanding the 2nd Regiment, and remain

Yours, &c.,

A. S. BOARD,

Sergeant Board to The Officer Commanding No. 4 Co., 2nd Regt., Vol. Infantry.

Sir,

Surveyor-General's Office, Sydney, 1 November, 1882.

Mr. Gough having sent in his resignation I beg to draw attention to my letter of the 4th August last, wherein I make application for the vacancy caused thereby.

[Enclosure No. 3.]

Sergeant Board to The Officer Commanding No. 4 Co., 2nd Regt., Vol. Infantry.

Sir,

Surveyor-General's Office, Sydney, 7 July, 1883.

In the Government Gazette of yesterday the 6th inst. appears the appointment of Mr. Mason to the Lieutenancy in the 2nd Regiment that I had hoped and that I considered I had just reason to expect to fill myself; and in order that I may judge of the advisability of further remaining a member of the 2nd Regiment I have the honor hereby to respectfully request to be informed the reasons why the appointment was given to one who had not passed the military examination and who was not a member of the Volunteer Force, in preference to myself, who have been a member of the 2nd Regiment since its formation under the new organization (being a non-commissioned officer for the last four years), and having passed the qualifying examination for commission?

I have, &c.,

A. S. BOARD,

Sergt., No. 4 Co., 2nd Regt., V.I.

(For transmission to higher authorities.)

Forwarded to the Adjutant, 2nd Regt., V.I.—W. F. LONGFIELD, Capt., 9/7/83.

It has been pointed out by me to Sergeant Board that the above letter is not a proper letter to be forwarded to the Officer commanding the Regiment, being couched in insubordinate terms, but he persists in his desire to have it forwarded to higher authority.—W. F. LONGFIELD, Capt., 12/7/83.

Memo. for Sergt. Board.

I SHOULD like to see you respecting your letter of 7th inst., before forwarding same to the Officer commanding the Regiment. Please call and see me to-morrow.

W. F. LONGFIELD,
Capt., 11/7/83.

[Enclosure No. 5.]

Sergeant Board to The Officer Commanding No. 4 Co., 2nd Regt., Vol. Infantry.

Sir,

Surveyor-General's Office, Sydney, 12 July, 1883.

I have been informed to-day that my letter of the 7th instant is liable to be read as wanting in respect, and that the terms used are dictatorial, or rather question the right of the Officer commanding the Regiment to recommend for appointment whomsoever he pleased.

I write this in the endeavour to correct any such erroneous impression that might occur, and to state in explanation that what I wrote about the advisability of longer remaining a member of the regiment was not meant as a threat, as I am informed it may be taken, but that naturally enough my pride would not allow me to remain for ever amongst the rank and file when I am qualified to hold a commission, and see in other corps gentlemen appointed, whose intelligence and social positions are not superior to mine. My letter was simply meant as a request that I might be informed the reasons why I was passed over, and on what grounds the Officer commanding the Regiment based his preference for Mr. Mason.

My letter was intended in all respect, and I should be sorry were it read as otherwise.

I have, &c.,

A. S. BOARD,
Sergt., No. 4 Co., 2nd Regt., V.I.

(To accompany my letter of the 7th instant.)

Forwarded to the Adjutant 2nd Regt., V.I.—W. F. LONGFIELD, Capt., 13/7/83.

The Acting Adjutant will inform Captain Longfield that I do not feel called upon to state the reasons that led me to recommend Mr. Mason in preference to Sergeant Board, further than it was for the general good of the regiment.—J.H.G., Lt.-Col., 2nd Regt., V.I., 17/7/83. Forwarded for Captain Longfield's information.—H. F. CHILCOTT, Lieut., Acting-Adjt., 2nd Regt., V.I., 18/7/83. Sergeant Board has been duly informed.—W. F. LONGFIELD, Capt., 23/7/83.

[Enclosure No. 6.]

Sergeant Board to The Officer Commanding No. 4 Co., 2nd Regt., Vol. Infantry.

APPEAL in accordance with clause 74 of the Regulations against the decision of the Officer Commanding the 2nd Regiment, Volunteer Infantry, to decline to furnish reasons re the late appointment.

Sir,

Monday, 23 July, 1883.

I am not able to forward the original letters in this case, they no doubt being retained as official documents, but herewith are copies of all the correspondence in which I have taken part.

That marked No. 1, dated 4/8/82, is a copy of my original application for appointment on becoming aware of its being Lieutenant Gough's intention to resign. No. 2, dated 1/11/82, is a copy of the letter I wrote on that gentleman actually resigning, drawing attention to my first. No. 3, dated the 7th instant, is a copy of the request made by me to be informed of the reasons why I was passed over, on the notice of the appointment of Mr. Mason appearing in the Government Gazette. No. 4, dated the 11th instant, is a memo. from the officer commanding the company to which I belong, directing me to call on him the next day, his reasons for wishing to see me being that my letter of the 7th might be regarded as insolent, and lead to my suspension from military duty, and to allow me the option of withdrawing it, which latter I preferred not to do, as I failed to see that by it I had compromised myself by overstepping the bounds of subordination, but to write instead the original of No. 5, dated the 12th instant, in explanation, which letter was to accompany that of the 7th to the Officer commanding 2nd Regiment, that there might be no possible doubt as to my intentions being respectful.

It will be seen on reference to No. 5 that the reason assigned by the Officer commanding the 2nd Regiment for his preferring to recommend Mr. Mason to myself is that it was "for the general good of the regiment." I respectfully submit that such a reply to my application is an insufficient one. I accepted it for granted when Mr. Mason's appointment was gazetted that the officer commanding the regiment thought it would be for the good of the regiment or he would not have recommended that gentleman; but surely I might be made aware of why it was for the good of the regiment, and on what grounds the officer commanding the regiment based his preference.

If it be that Mr. Mason held a commission elsewhere, that would mean practically a bar to the advancement of natives of the Colony; myself, for instance. The supply of gentlemen who may have held commissions elsewhere might be unlimited, while it is not at all likely that Colonials should have been commissioned officers in any service than that of their own Government. And it will be seen at once that if the preference be given to those who may have already held commissions, there would be no encouragement to any who might be endeavouring to make themselves efficient with a view to promotion in the Service. And so far as the good of the regiment is concerned I can say that I have done my utmost on all occasions to be a credit to my corps. When I first joined in 1878 I attended recruit drill with the utmost regularity, so that I should learn my drill as speedily and as well as possible, and with such success that I was soon promoted to be a corporal and shortly after that to be a serjeant.

My ambition not allowing me to stop at that, I offered myself a candidate for examination for commission in 1880, which examination I passed.

Nothing remaining to be done as far as making myself proficient in drill was concerned, I turned my attention more particularly to rifle-shooting, and with such marked results that I won the Battalion badge for two years in succession; and for the past four years I believe I have made a higher average at musketry than any other member of the Force for the same four years.

I have never committed any military offence deemed worthy the infliction of a penalty; and if once or twice it has been thought necessary that attention should be drawn to shortcomings on my part the occasions have been few and the causes trifling.

I beg respectfully to point out that I do not follow military duty as a profession, but simply from a desire to serve my country; and so can hardly be expected to be as faultless in every detail as one whose sole profession and occupation it is, and whose time might be exclusively taken up by it. I devote as much time to the Service as I am required to do, as evidence the fact that I have missed but two or three drills during the whole time I have been a Volunteer, and have attended with regularity any course of special instruction that may have been ordered.

If the appointment of Mr. Mason is asserted to be for the good of the regiment, on the ground that that gentleman will prove a better officer than I, I most respectfully beg leave to state that in my opinion such an assertion cannot be borne out by evidence, neither he nor I having held a commission in the Colony.

As a private I was a private, as a non-commissioned officer I am a non-commissioned officer, the very system of military discipline, quite rightly, precluding familiarity between the officers and the men. I for one should be as careful as possible not to thrust myself forward into such a position as to render myself liable to be ordered to mind my place. I am young, energetic, and intelligent, and fail to see that I would not make a good officer, and command respect as such. At any rate I would guarantee that at no time would it be necessary to bring into effect clauses 20 and 21 of the Regulations on my account.

I occupy a respectable position in society, my profession, that of a draftsman in the Surveyor-General's Office, being an honourable one.

My father, the late William George Board, was a gentleman, and served as a Volunteer. His father, Mr. Gregory Board, is well known and highly respected in Sydney. My mother's father, the late Mr. John Ducker, J.P., of Richmond, was also a well known and highly respected gentleman. My wife's father, Mr. James Vickery, J.P., and his brother, Mr. Ebenezer Vickery, J.P., both of Waverley, are also well known gentlemen. Two uncles of mine are in the Ministry, one being President of the New South Wales Wesleyan Conference. The late Major Fahey, of the Volunteer Artillery, was an uncle of mine, while two other uncles of the same name as myself, as also a brother and two cousins of mine, are in different departments of the Civil Service in Sydney. The objections, then, can hardly be on the score of respectability.

My character is to a certain extent at stake unless I can clear up the stigma that will naturally attach to me through my rejection. Many of my friends know that I qualified for a commission, and wonder that I did not get it.

I believe that it is an understood rule that should a vacancy for a subaltern occur, and a member of the corps be eligible, he should be promoted to the position; but if no member of the corps happened to be eligible, then some one should be chosen from outside the corps. How hard then must it be for one who has made himself as efficient as possible, and given the country five years of his services, should quietly be passed over without even being told the reason. Whatever the causes were that militated against my application for appointment being favourably entertained, I should be made acquainted with them in order that I might guard against their prejudicing me in the future, otherwise I have no guarantee that some one else will not be preferred to me should another vacancy occur. The being a member of a Volunteer Corps is not at all incompatible with being a gentleman, and as such I claim a little more consideration than has been extended to me on this occasion.

Apologising for the length at which I have written,

I have, &c.,

A. S. BOARD,

Sergt., No. 4 Co., 2nd Regt., V.I.

(For transmission through the Officer Commanding 2nd Regt., V.I., to higher authority, in accordance with clauses 74 and 76 of Regulations.)

Forwarded to the Adjutant 2nd Regt., V.I.—W. F. LONGFIELD, Captain, 23/7/83.

[Enclosure No. 6a.]

Memorandum from Lieutenant-Colonel Christie to The Officer Commanding 2nd Regt., N.S.W. V.I.

Brigade Office, Sydney, 27 July, 1883.

THE Commandant has had under consideration the appeal addressed to him by Sergeant Board, of the 2nd Regiment, N.S.W. V.I., involving a protest against the action of his Commanding Officer, Lieutenant-Colonel Goodlet, in refusing to furnish him with the reasons why he (Lieutenant-Colonel Goodlet) has declined or failed to recommend Sergeant Board for a commission.

It appears to the Commandant that in such a case a Commanding Officer is not bound to furnish his reasons to those under his command; and indeed in the interests of the service it would as a rule be better that they should not be given. The responsibility of filling up the establishment of his corps resting with Lieutenant-Colonel Goodlet, that officer—while acting within the same—must be left to carry out his duty in such a case as this at his own discretion, more especially seeing the responsible and delicate nature of a task such as that of the selection of officers.

By Command,

W. B. B. CHRISTIE,

Lieutenant-Colonel Commanding.

Forwarded to Capt. Longfield, who will please inform Sergt. Board.—By order, H. F. CHILCOTT, Lieut., Acting Adjt. 2nd Regt., V.I., 30/7/83. Sergt. Board has been informed as directed.—W. F. LONGFIELD, Captain Commanding No. 4 Co., 2nd Regt., V.I., 31/7/83.

[Enclosure No. 7.]

Sergeant Board to The Officer Commanding No. 4 Company, 2nd Regt., Vol. Infantry.

Sir,

Harbour View, Botany-street, Waverley, 24 March, 1884.

I respectfully beg permission to place in writing an explanation of the case for which I was censured by memo. of the Adjutant last Saturday.

Some time before the issue of the valise equipment, the non-commissioned officers of the regiment were warned to attend on certain nights at the Victoria Barracks, to be instructed in fitting them up. For four

four or five nights I attended the instruction, and then on demonstrating to the Instructor that I thoroughly understood adjusting the valise he said there would be no occasion for me to attend again.

A few nights after that I was assisting to pay the Company at the Regimental Office, and the Officer commanding the Company reminded me of an order that had appeared, making it imperative for the non-commissioned officers to attend on two nights for instruction in the adjustment of the valise equipment, and I said that I had received a certificate of competency, and that the second order to attend must apply to those who had failed to attend the first course of instruction, the attendance of some of the others not being remarkable for frequency. He then said, "Oh! that's all right; I suppose there really is no need for you to attend again."

I can name some who never attended at all; and there were some who attended once or twice, and yet, because they put in an appearance on one or other or both of the nights mentioned in the second order, were not censured at all.

And I also beg to state that I am sorry that I should have read the order as not applying to me, and that if I had known it did I should as usual have been the first there, as no non-commissioned officer of the regiment is or has been more regular and punctual in attendance at any course of special instruction that may have been ordered during the past five or six years than I have. I don't think I have missed three times during the whole period, nor have I missed a greater number of drills than that.

And I hope I may be pardoned for taking this opportunity of explaining the only other occasion that I am aware of having my name mentioned in the defaulter's book, which occasion was for not doing a part of my duty that no doubt I should have done, but that I never had done nor had been desired to do during the whole time I was a non-commissioned officer (about four years), and that consequently I did not know was required to be done by me, viz., the taking of the company order book to the Regimental Office after parade. Previous to the occasion referred to, I had always left the book at the barracks, and the staff sergeants had taken it to the office, but for some reason or other on that particular occasion it was not taken.

I have, &c.,

Sergt., No. 4 Co., 2nd Regt., V.I.

Forwarded to the Adjutant, 2nd Regiment, V.I.—W. F. LONGFIELD, Capt., 26/3/84.

[Enclosure No. 8.]

Sergeant Board to The Officer Commanding No. 4 Co., 2nd Regt., Vol. Infantry.

Sir,

Surveyor-General's Department, Sydney, 17 April, 1884.

Carelessness in the execution of my duty as a non-commissioned officer being, as far as I can possibly find out, the principal cause of a former application of mine for promotion not being favourably entertained, I trust that since that date my increased efforts to give every satisfaction have met with the approval of the Officer commanding the regiment, and that he will be pleased on this application to recommend me for appointment to the Lieutenancy that will be rendered vacant by the death of Major Phillips.

I have passed the necessary qualifying examination for commission, and have held the position of Sergeant for four or five years past.

I have, &c.,

A. S. BOARD,

Sergt., No. 4 Co., 2nd Regt., V.I.

Forwarded to the Adjutant, 2nd Regiment, Volunteer Infantry.—W. F. LONGFIELD, Captain, 22/4/84.
Officer commanding No. 4 Co.—There is no vacancy for a Lieutenant at present existing in this regiment, nor is there likely to be one for some time.—By order, C. BARTLETT, Captain, Adjutant, 1st Regiment, Volunteer Infantry, 24/4/84.

Forwarded to Sergeant Board.—W. F. LONGFIELD, Captain, 25/4/84.

Resubmitted at request of Sergeant Board.—W. F. LONGFIELD, Captain, 28/10/84.

Sergeant Board to The Officer Commanding No. 4 Co., 2nd Regt., Vol. Infantry.

Sir,

Surveyor-General's Office, Sydney, 28 October, 1884.

It having been notified by Brigade Order that Lieutenant Burnett has passed the examination for Captain, he will no doubt shortly be promoted to the Captaincy made vacant by the decease of Major Phillips.

I have the honor, therefore, to again submit this application for the favourable consideration of the Officer commanding 2nd Regiment, Volunteer Infantry.

I have, &c.,

A. S. BOARD,

Sergt., No. 4 Co., 2nd Regt., V.I.

[Enclosure No. 9.]

Sergeant Board to The Officer Commanding No. 4 Co., 2nd Regt., Vol. Infantry.

Sir,

Survey Office, Sydney, 23 November, 1885.

I have the honor hereby to apply to be promoted to one of the Lieutenancies rendered vacant by the promotions of Captains Chisholm and Longfield.

I have passed the necessary qualifying military examination.

I have, &c.,

A. S. BOARD,

Sergt., No. 4 Co., 2nd Regt., V.I.

Forwarded to the Adjutant 2nd Regiment, Volunteer Infantry.—W. F. LONGFIELD, Major, 25/11/85.

[Enclosure No. 10.]

Sergeant Board to The Officer Commanding No. 4 Co., 2nd Regt., Vol. Infantry.

Sir, Harbour View, Botany-street, Waverley, 29 January, 1886.

I beg hereby to protest against the hardship I have for some time laboured under.

I have been a non-commissioned officer of the 2nd Regiment for about eight years, and some time ago passed the military examination qualifying for a commission, and although several vacancies have occurred since, and each time I have made application for the position, I have not been appointed.

I have asked the Officer commanding the regiment to favour me with the reasons why it is not thought expedient to recommend me for promotion, and have been told that it would not be for the good of the regiment, that officer declining to give any further information whatever.

I also wrote respectfully requesting that the Officer commanding the regiment would let me know the reasons for my non-recommendation, and was informed that he did not feel called upon to furnish reasons; and, on that letter being forwarded to higher authority, the Brigade Officer endorsed the decision. So that now I stand in the unfortunate position of having been found guilty and sentenced on a charge that I have never even been charged with.

I do not know now whether the objection is on the score of military inability or from a social point of view. If the former, I believe I could at a moment's notice pass the examination again, either practically or theoretically; if the latter, my private life will bear the closest scrutiny. It might possibly be that I am rather short, or that I am not a member of the Order of Masons. If for none of the reasons quoted, then am I at a loss to know why I have not been recommended. Even in the Permanent Artillery, when it was proposed to pass over a certain officer, the reasons for such a course were stated. Surely they might be in my case.

I am aware that I might have the papers asked to be laid on the Table of the House, but that course I believe should be the last resorted to. I therefore have the honor to request that this be forwarded through the proper channel to the Honorable the Minister for War, as the next higher step to the authorities I have already submitted my case to (vide my letter of 23rd July, /83).

I have, &c.,

A. S. BOARD,

Serg., No. 4 Co., 2nd Regt., V.I.

Squad Drill.

2. The caution, right hand salute, by numbers, will be given. The men, if being drilled with intervals, will be turned to the right; on the word one they will raise the right arm in line with the shoulder, the hand open, fingers touching, thumb an inch above the right eye, palm to the front, at the same time glancing the eyes slightly to the left. (2)
3. In slow and quick time the pace is 30 inches, except in stepping out, when it is 33 inches, and in stepping short, when it is 21 inches. In double time the length of pace is 33 inches; the side or closing step is 12 inches; in stepping back the pace is 30 inches. When in forming fours the rear rank step back, they will take a pace to the rear of 18 inches; when a man takes a pace to the rear and one to the right or left, as in covering a man, the pace will be 24 inches. (4)
4. The number of paces per minute in slow time is 75, in quick time 116, and in double time 165. (2)
5. The position of a soldier in marching should as nearly as possible be as described below: The body and shoulders should be exactly square to the front, the toes turned out at an angle of 45 degrees, the arms hanging easily from the shoulders, the thumb to the front and close to the fore finger, the hand lightly touching the thigh just behind the seam of the trousers, the hips rather drawn in, and the breast advanced but without constraint, the body slightly inclining forward, the head erect but not thrown back, the chin drawn in, and the eyes looking straight to the front. (3)
6. Changing feet is performed by bringing the ball of the rear foot up to the heel of the advanced foot, and immediately taking another pace forward with that foot; in fact two paces are taken in succession with one foot. (1½)

9. In forming fours at the halt, on the word fours the rear rank will step back a pace of 18 inches. On the word deep, the left files will take a pace of 24 inches to the rear with the left feet, and a pace of 24 inches to the right with the right feet. On the word front, they will take a side pace to the left with the left feet, and one pace to the front with the right feet, the rear rank then closing to their original distance. To form fours right: On the word fours, the rear rank will step back as before; on the word right, the whole will turn to the right, and the left files take a pace to the right with the right feet and one to the left with the left. On the word front, the whole will turn to the front and proceed as in fronting from the deep. To form fours left: On the words fours, the rear rank step back as before, and on the word left the whole turn to the left, the left files taking a pace to the left with the left feet, and one to the rear with the right; on the front being given the whole will front, and then proceed as before. (5)
10. If it is desired to break off three files from the left of a squad marching to the front in two ranks, the words of command will be: "Three files on the left, right turn, left wheel." The files thus broken off will follow in rear of the left of the squad. (2) Total, 27.

A. S. BOARD,

Company

Company Drill.

1. A company is first sized in single rank, the tallest men being on the flanks; or a company is sized in single rank, the tallest men on the right, the shortest on the left. The right-hand man will then be ordered to take three paces to the front, the next man will place himself three paces in front of the left, the next in rear of the right, the next in rear of the left, the next on the left of the front rank man on the right, the next on the right of the front rank man on the left and so on, the whole will then close on the centre. (3)
3. On the word open order, Officers recover swords and place themselves one pace from the front rank, the Captain in front of the second file from the right, the right guide in front of the centre file, and the left in front of the second file from the left; at the same time the supernumerary rank and rear rank flank men take two paces to the rear, the latter turning to the right, and the right marker takes a side pace of 24 inches to his left into the place vacated by the right-hand man of the rear rank. On the word march, the Officers take two paces to their front, look to the right, and dress; the right marker steps up into the place vacated by his guide; the rear rank take two paces to the rear, the flank men fronting and raising the disengaged arm from the elbow. The sergeant on the right dresses the rear rank and gives the word eyes front; the supernumerary rank take up their dressing by the right; and on the word steady, the Officers carry swords and look to their front. (4)
6. A company will invariably extend for attack from the right, to four paces interval. In extending for skirmishing the extension may either be from the right, left, centre, or any named file to six paces interval. (1)
7. On the words from the right, four paces extend, the right file will stand at ease, the remainder will shoulder arms, turn to the left, and step off in quick time unless ordered to double, the front rank maintaining the direction and the rear rank regulating the intervals. Each file as it reaches its proper distance will halt, front, order, and stand at ease. The guides will be four paces in rear of their sections. (2)
8. The rear rank move up in line with their front rank men, and the whole lie or kneel down. (1)
9. The right and left files of fours close inwards, and the whole fix swords. (2)
10. Fix swords, open order, march: The inspecting Officer then passes down the ranks to see the clothing appointments, &c., clean and in good order. Unfix swords, for inspection, port arms: He then passes down the ranks again to see the breech of the rifle is clean and the block moves easily. Close order, march, examine arms: The rear rank then take a pace of 10 inches to the right front, the whole making a slight turn to the right and bringing their rifles down to the position of the charge. He again passes along the ranks to see the barrel of the rifle clean and free from dust, &c.; each file as the Officer reaches the second file from them, easing springs, ordering arms, and standing at ease; the rear rank resuming their proper distance. (4) Total, 24½.

A. S. BOARD, 29/4/80.

Guards and Outposts.

1. In relieving guard, the new guard is marched up in front of the old guard (who are ordered to turn out on their approach, falling in at the shoulder in open order. If commanded by a non-commissioned officer, he will be on the right of the front rank). They will shoulder arms at ten paces from the old guard, and halt at six paces. They will then be ordered to shoulder arms and take open order. As soon as the word eyes front has been given they will pay compliments, thus:—"Old guard—present arms"; "new guard—present arms"; "old guard—shoulder arms"; "new guard—shoulder arms"; "old guard—order arms—stand at ease"; "new guard—order arms—stand at ease." The commander of the old guard will then hand over his report to the commander of the new guard. The new guard will be numbered off from the left to right, if the old guard has numbered from right to left, and vice versa. The relief will then be marched off, a corporal of the old guard accompanying it. When the relieved sentries have been brought in the words of command will be given as follows:—"Old guard—attention"; "new guard—attention"; "old guard—shoulder arms"; "new guard—shoulder arms"; "old guard—fours, right, left wheel, quick march"; they will come to the trail when at ten paces from the new guard. The new guard will present arms as the old guard march off, and then be ordered to shoulder, take close order, form fours to the right, left wheel, and, when arriving at the place where the left flank of the old guard originally rested, to wheel again to the left, and take up the position occupied by the old guard, halting and fronting by order. The orders will then be read to the men, who will then be turned to the right, and dismissed. The orders will also be read to the sentries who are already posted when they are brought in. (9)

2. Reliefs of four men or less will be marched in line; reliefs of more than four men, in fours or files. If in line, the corporal will be on the right, and if in fours or files on the proper front of the front rank man of the left flank, file, or section of fours. They will march at the slope, if in dull, thick weather or on a dark night with swords fixed, and if on a clear night or in fine clear weather without. (2)
3. The corporal of the old guard will take command of the relief marching out, and will be on the right of the relief, the corporal of the new guard being on the left. In returning the corporal of the new guard will take command, and be on the right.
- N.B.—Supposing a sergeant of the old guard accompanied the corporal of the new, the latter would still take command coming back, thus forming the only case in which a non-commissioned officer has authority over his senior.
4. Either at the shoulder, slope, sling, or trail, and they are permitted to support arms or stand at ease when at the halt. In marching at the slope, sentries do not necessarily bring their rifles to a perpendicular position when turning about at the end of their walk. (3)
5. After dark, on the approach of any person, the sentry, if not already fixed, will fix swords, come to the port (or, if in a place where a sudden rush might be made on him, to the charge), and in a loud, clear voice will challenge thus:—"Halt! Who comes there?" If the answer be satisfactory he will remain at the port or charge until the person has passed. If posted near the guard-room door or tent, he will, on the approach of a body of troops, or when he has received for an answer to his challenge, "grand" or "visiting rounds," order the guard to turn out. (2)
6. The intention of a rear guard is to cover the main body from any sudden attack in the rear, or to prevent the enemy from stealing round the flanks. The prevention of straggling is also an important part of the duties of a rear guard. (5)
7. Picquet sentries are generally required to be double. (1)
8. The nature of the country, the strength of the body to be covered, the distance they are from the main body, &c.; and it is important that the men on such duty be as fresh as circumstances will allow; to effect this a larger force will not generally be employed on outpost duty than is absolutely necessary. Every height from which a good view of the surrounding country might be obtained should be occupied by sentries, unless at too great a distance from the front, when they might be visited by patrols during the day, consisting of a subaltern's party, a sergeant and twelve, or a corporal and six, as the case may be. These patrols should be preceded by scouts. Sentries should have a clear view of the surrounding country, and be able to see the sentry on the right and left if necessary; they should also know the direct road to the picquet in their rear. If it is impossible, from the nature of the country, for the sentry to see the sentry on his right and left, the ground between should be frequently traversed by patrols. Although any person approaching might be better seen against the clear background from a low position, it must not be lost sight of by sentries that sound ascends, they must not, therefore, give up the advantage which would be gained by occupying a height, and thus being able to hear much better the approach of troops. (3)
9. By night, the sentries must either be increased in numbers or closed in towards the picquets, as, if they were far apart, the enemy would have greater chances of stealing in between them, or of surprising them without the sentries on their right or left being aware of the fact. In the day-time, with mixed forces, cavalry is generally employed to guard the front, supported by infantry, but at night the cavalry should be withdrawn in rear of the infantry. (1)
10. Picquets are numbered off from the right by the Officer in charge, and in marching to the position they are to occupy will be preceded by scouts to guard against surprise. On reaching the ground the picquet is to occupy, it will be halted, and sentries placed in front and on either flank. The officer in command of the picquet will then proceed to place his sentries. (5) Total, 31.

A. S. BOARD, 30/4/80.

Rifle Exercises.

1. Soldiers marching at the slope, with unfixed swords, will come to the order on being halted; if they are marching with fixed swords, they will remain at the slope, unless ordered to shoulder or order. (3)
2. On the word pile being given, the rear rank will step back a pace of 9 inches, and the front rank draw back the right foot ready to turn about on the word arms being given, the front rank will turn about and the whole will place the butt of the rifle in front of the right foot, with the guard to the right. The rear rank men of the right files will then incline the barrels of their rifles towards each other, and cross rods; the front rank man, right file, will then seize hold of the barrels of both rifles with the left hand and incline them from him, placing the rod of his rifle to the right of the rods and the left of the barrels; the rear rank man of the left file will then place the rod of his rifle between that of his front rank man, and the whole will stand at attention. If required to stand clear, on the word stand-clear they will all take a short pace to the rear and turn to the directing flank; and on the word break off being given, they will take a side pace outwards by ranks. If required to unpile, the word stand-to will be given, when they will fall in as they were before breaking off, &c. (5½)
3. On the word dismiss, the men will take a side place outwards by ranks at the same time bringing their rifles to the port. Previous to this, however, the men, if in line, will be ordered to turn to the right, they will then move off the parade ground in a quiet and orderly manner, carrying their rifles at the shoulder. (2)
4. The order will be, "Prepare for cavalry." The second and fourth ranks will then take a pace of 10 inches to the right front. (It is presumed the men have their swords fixed) the flank fours will turn outwards; the two front ranks will then kneel down as in the firing exercise, except that the weight of the body will not be rested on the right heel. The butt of the rifle will then be placed on the ground, inside the right knee, with the guard to the left, the right hand firmly grasping it at the small of the butt, the left hand firmly grasping it between the bands, the muzzle of the rifle elevated to about the height of a horse's chest, the left fore-arm resting about 6 inches behind the left knee. The third and fourth ranks will turn on both heels to the position of the ready in firing exercise, the right foot turned to the right and the left to the front. They will press the right hand, holding the small of the butt, firmly against the hollow of the thigh, just above the right hip. The whole will then fire as ordered. The Officers and sergeants will be formed in rear of the square, the latter with their swords fixed. (5)

5. The manual exercise at reviews is performed in line, at open order, the Officers will be in rear of the line, the right markers taking the right guides places. The senior Major will give the words of command as follows: Present arms (they have shouldered before taking open order), shoulder arms, support arms, shoulder arms, order arms, fix swords, shoulder arms, port arms, charge swords, shoulder arms, order arms, unfix swords; they will then be ordered to take close order. For firing exercise, the order will be: Fire a volley at, say 500 yards, ready (front rank sinking on the right knee, unless the order be given both ranks standing or both ranks kneeling), present; or (say) three volleys independent firing, ready, present. If firing a feu-de-joie with artillery, seven rounds will be fired between each volley, the men taking the time from the right to come to the ready. If firing a feu-de-joie without artillery, they will come to the ready as soon as the band begins to play. The feu-de-joie is fired with the ranks in line at open order. During the manual exercise sergeants will stand at the shoulder, and during the firing at the order. (4)
6. The Captain (or examining Officer) will give the word fix swords, open order, march, and then pass along the ranks to see the swords, &c., are clean and bright; the men will then be directed to unfix swords. The order will then be: For inspection, port arms, the men coming to the port and turning the barrel of the rifle outwards, at the same time working the lever backwards and forwards so that the examining Officer may see the block is clean and works easily, and the breech free from dirt, the men grasping the small of the butt with the right hand after he has passed the second file from them. The next order will be: Close order, march, the men, remaining at the port, will then take close order. Examine arms, the men will then turn on both heels, the right foot pointing to the right, and the left foot to the front (the rear rank having taken a pace of 10 inches to their right front), the men will then bring the rifle to the ready position, muzzle pointing upwards so that the Officer may easily look down the barrel to see that it is clean and free from rust, the men dropping the right arms to the full extent along the right side, and supporting the weight of the rifle with the left. Each man of the front rank will ease springs when the Officer has passed the second file from him, his rear rank man taking the time from him and performing the motions at the same time, both coming to the order at the same time and standing at ease, the rear rank resuming their proper distance. (4)
7. On the word present arms, raise the rifle slightly by bending the right elbow, at the same time place the left arm across the body in line with the right elbow, and grasp the rifle with the left hand between the bands, at the same time slipping the fore-finger and thumb of the right hand round the trigger guard, and the remaining fingers behind the hammer, pointing downwards. On the word two, raise the rifle perpendicularly with the left hand in front of the body, barrel to the right, right hand firmly grasping the small of the butt, at the same time resting the wrist of the left hand on the trigger guard, fingers pointing upwards, thumb between stock and barrel, left arm close to the butt, right arm and butt close to the body, the thumb of the left hand being in line with the mouth. On the word three, drop the rifle to the full extent of the arms in front of the body, sling to the front, at the same time lightly grasping the rifle in front of the projection in front of the breech with the left hand, fingers pointing downwards, and drawback the right foot about 6 inches, but without bending either knee. In coming to the shoulder, by numbers, on the word shoulder arms, bring the rifle smartly to the right shoulder, at the same time placing the fore-finger and thumb of the right hand round the trigger guard, and the remaining fingers behind the hammer, as already described, and bringing up the right foot in line with the left. On the word two, drop the left hand smartly to the side. (2½)
8. In standing at the order, the soldier will place the butt of the rifle on the ground, its toe in line with his right toe, the right elbow slightly bent, the right hand lightly grasping the rifle between the bands, the thumb to be pressed to the side, the left arm to remain steady, both knees straight, eyes looking straight to the front. (2½)
9. An individual soldier, when passing or addressing an Officer, will do so at the shoulder, the left arm being brought across the body in line with the right elbow, the fingers resting on the sling. (2)
10. Water is not to be used in any case in cleaning any part of the rifle, neither should any but animal oils be used on the rifle; ragoon and neatsfoot being considered the best. When the fouling in a rifle is very obstinate, either of the above oils may be mixed with equal parts of spirits of turpentine. Salad and kerosene oils are especially forbidden to be used. (3) Total, 33½.

4. Any volunteer who may be discharged from the Volunteer Force, shall be required to deliver up to the Officer commanding his corps, within a reasonable time, such arms, &c., as may have been issued to him, in good condition, fair wear and tear excepted. And if any volunteer fails to do so, steps may be taken under the Volunteer Act for the recovery of the same. Any volunteer failing to produce for inspection such arms, &c., as may be required, within three months from that date, shall in addition to the value of such arms, &c., be liable to a fine not exceeding five pounds, or to a term of imprisonment not exceeding one month. (1)
5. The arrest mentioned in the Volunteer Act is held to mean a suspension from all duties while such arrest is in force, and also from participation in rifle shooting, &c., or any duties under arms. (2)
6. Meetings are not to be held by corps for the purpose of inquiring into the conduct of an Officer, or any other purpose in uniform, unless by the authority of the Commanding Officer, who will be personally responsible for such meeting. (3)

8. Captains of companies are subordinate to the Officer Commanding. (0)
9. It is part of the duty of a Captain to bring to the notice of the Commanding Officer any men who require to be discharged under the Regulations (Vide Standing Orders). Any volunteer who absents himself for a period of three months from preliminary training, or detached days of training, or so absents himself from continuous training, or for any day or days during such continuous training, shall be discharged. Exception, however, being allowed when, in the opinion of the Officer Commanding Volunteer Force, such exceptional circumstances may exist as to warrant a relaxation of such penalty. Any volunteer who fails to give a proper attention to his duties, or fails to come up to the requirements of the Regulations shall be discharged. (3)
10. Officers Commanding Corps shall have power to grant leave of absence to Officers up to one month, and volunteers up to three months. Applications for leave for longer periods are to be made to Officer Commanding Volunteer Force. (3)
11. The Governor shall have power to call out for actual military service, when required, all volunteers enrolled in the Volunteer Force, who, when so called out, shall be subject to the Imperial Act and Regulations of Her Majesty's Service and to the Mutiny Act, for the punishment for desertions and the better payment of troops, &c., &c. Examining surgeons shall use their judgment and experience in determining whether recruits desiring enrolment in the Volunteer Force possess the physical capacity necessary to enable them to undergo the fatigues and hardships attendant on volunteer service; the principal points to be attended to are—
- 1st. That the recruit is of healthy aspect, and does not present the appearance of feeble or impaired constitution from existing or previous diseases.
 - 2nd. That he is intelligent.
 - 3rd. That his eyesight is good, or at least sufficiently good to enable him with the right eye to clearly distinguish objects at not less than 300 yards.

A volunteer shall be entitled to classify as an efficient on the 1st of January of any year, provided during the previous year subsequent to being passed into the ranks he has attended the proportion of at least one drill per month (including annual inspection) for the remaining part of such year, and has attended with his corps such continuous training as may have been ordered for the remaining part of such year. An Officer or volunteer can, under no circumstance whatever, as noted in par. 110 of Regulations, be entitled to classify as an efficient on the 1st of January of any year, unless during the previous year he has fulfilled the requirement hereunder specified:—
- (a). Six days attendance at continuous training at Easter or other convenient time, and at such place as the Governor may appoint.
 - (b). Sixteen attendances (including annual inspection) out of twenty ordered on detached days for drill, training, exercise, or instruction, in any part of the district to which his corps belongs, as the Officer Commanding Volunteer Force may appoint.

- No Officer is to absent himself from inspection without previously obtaining the approval of the Officer Commanding Volunteer Force.
- Any Officer or volunteer desiring leave of absence from continuous training for special reasons must apply to the Officer Commanding Volunteer Force, through the Officer commanding his corps, stating reasons for such application. If such reasons are not satisfactory, leave will be refused. In the case of sickness, a medical certificate must be transmitted within one week. Absence under the above circumstances will not prejudice the efficiency of individuals, provided they have otherwise attended the total amount of drill, training, &c., required for the efficiency.*

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.

NEW SOUTH WALES.

WIMBLEDON RIFLE MATCHES.

(SELECTION OF TEAM FOR—CORRESPONDENCE.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be printed, 4 May, 1886.

The Principal Under Secretary to The Secretary to the N.S.W. Rifle Association.

Sir,

Colonial Secretary's Office, Sydney, 30 April, 1886.

I am directed to request that you will be so good as to furnish me at your earliest convenience, for the information of the Colonial Secretary, with the names of the proposed Rifle Team for the Wimbledon Rifle Matches, also the terms upon which the selection was made. I am at the same time desired to point out that it has been represented to the Government that the best shots have not been selected, and that the assistance granted for sending the Team to England was given upon the understanding that the best men were to be sent.

I have, &c.,

CRITCHETT WALKER,
Principal Under Secretary.

The Secretary to the N.S.W. Rifle Association to The Principal Under Secretary.

Sir,

New South Wales Rifle Association, Sydney, 1 May, 1886.

In reply to your letter of yesterday's date, regarding the proposed Team to Wimbledon, I have the honor to state that the names of the chosen representatives are as follows:—

1. Captain Blackshaw, Goulburn.
2. Lieutenant Stack, 2nd Regiment, Volunteer Infantry.
3. Lieutenant Honey, Kiama.
4. Lieutenant Cork, Ulladulla.
5. Lieutenant Keating, Naval Artillery Volunteers.

The above-named gentlemen were selected by my Council at a special meeting held on the 21st ultimo, being the day following that on which I received your intimation that the sum of £1,000 would be granted for the purpose of sending five men to England.

My Council was unanimous in deciding to select the men without any competition, for the following reasons, viz:—

- 1st. Because the time was so limited, as the Easter Encampment commenced the next day but one after the meeting, and it would be impossible to have the selection practices until after the close thereof, which would only leave about a week from the selection of the Team to the date of the departure of the Team for England.
- 2nd. It was evident to all members of the Council that a large proportion of the names sent in as desirous of competing for selection had no claim to be considered first-class shots, and allowing them to compete for selection would have entailed a large and useless expenditure of ammunition.
- 3rd. The Council was of opinion that selecting men who had so often and so recently proved themselves first-class shots, was preferable to having hurried practices which would not be likely to produce the best results.

The five gentlemen selected have proved themselves during many years to be amongst the very best shots in the Colony, as the following statement will prove:—

Captain Blackshaw has represented New South Wales in six out of the last ten Intercolonial Matches, and was third scorer in order of merit in the Intercolonial Match fired in Melbourne in 1885, which was won by this Colony, with the largest aggregate score made in any of these matches; further, I may say he has been for a very long period (twelve to fifteen years) the best and most reliable shot in the Goulburn District, and has repeatedly been

Lieutenant

Lieutenant Stack has also represented the Colony in six out of the last ten Intercolonial Matches, and was top scorer, with the magnificent score of 194 points out of a possible 225 in the last of these contests. Lieutenant Stack is perhaps the oldest Volunteer in the Team, and has always been above the average, and has during the last two or three years developed a knowledge and skill in rifle-shooting, especially in team matches, which in a case of this kind will be of infinite value.

Lieutenant Honey represented this Colony in three out of the last ten Intercolonial contests (being top scorer in 1878), and would doubtless have been in many more of these contests but that the Kiama Corps, to which he belongs, was virtually non-existent for about four years; he was fourth scorer in order of merit in the last Intercolonial Match; he is, without exception, the best shot in Kiama, which district has been famous for rifle-shooting since the formation of the Company, over fifteen years ago.

Lieutenant Cork has represented the Colony in seven out of the last ten Intercolonial Matches, and was second scorer in order of merit in the last of these contests; he has been for years the best shot in his district, and may be called the father of rifle-shooting in Ulladulla, a place which is famous for the sport.

Lieutenant Keating has represented the Colony in four out of the last ten Intercolonial Matches, and was sixth scorer in order of merit in the last of these contests; he has for years past been considered one of the very best shots in Sydney, and is the only Volunteer in New South Wales who has twice won the Silver Medal of the National Rifle Association of England (competed for annually at the matches of this Association), and entitling the holder to compete for H.R.H. the Prince of Wales's prize at Wimbledon.

The two last-named have year after year been selected to represent Australia in the International Match fired annually at the Prize Meetings of this Association. Captain Blackshaw and Lieutenant Honey have frequently been in the English Team, and Lieutenant Stack in the Irish.

It will be seen that my Council, in selecting the gentlemen named, has been guided by their public shooting, especially the more recent, as they all shot in the last International Match (the selection test for same having been of a more severe character), in which they were 1st, 2nd, 3rd, 4th, and 5th in order of merit. Moreover, they were all winners of prizes in those matches of the Victorian Rifle Association fired at the same Meeting as the Intercolonial Match before referred to, which were open to them; the five competitors chosen having won £49 out of £70 won by the representatives of this Colony then in Victoria.

My Council, in making the selection of the five members to represent this Colony, were actuated solely by the desire to obtain the services of men who had proved themselves to be qualified in all respects to take part in an important contest such as that will be for the "Kolapore Cup," in which the United Australian Team will take part. It would be most undesirable in a contest of this nature to have young or inexperienced shots, who would be likely to lose their heads and break down during the excitement incident to such a contest; whilst experience has proved that the veteran shots selected by my Council are not likely to be more excited than if practising on their own Range. I may add that, in a letter received this day from the Secretary of the Victorian Rifle Association, the following passage occurs:—"My Council are delighted at the success of your efforts in procuring funds; and if you are able to send Captain Blackshaw, Lieutenants Honey, Cork, Keating, and Stack, you will be represented by a splendid quintette." It will thus be seen that the Council of the V.R.A., which body is equally interested with us in this Team, thoroughly approves of our selection; and I am informed by Commander Lewington, of the Naval Brigade, one of my Council, who has just returned from a visit to Melbourne, and who was present at a meeting of the Council of the V.R.A. on Wednesday evening last, that almost every member of that body expressed a regret that they had not adopted the same plan as my Council in selecting their representatives. They have decided to have a series of selection practices; "but the members reserve to themselves the right of making the final selection upon their estimate of the capabilities of the various riflemen available. Relying upon the promise contained in your letter of the 17th ultimo, I, under instructions from my Council, asked the Secretary of the Victorian Rifle Association to secure passages for our representatives by the "Chimborazo," and this has been done, and the passage-money paid by the V.R.A. This Association is therefore responsible, and under any circumstances must refund the amount so paid.

I trust this explanation will satisfy the Honorable the Colonial Secretary that the riflemen selected by my Council are those who will do credit to the Colony, and that my Council is solely desirous of having New South Wales well and worthily represented at the great gathering of riflemen in the Old Country, and that the selection has been made without fear or favour, and entirely apart from any unfair or unworthy motives.

I have, &c.,

W. FOSKETT,

Secretary.

Minute by the Colonial Secretary.

AFTER perusal of this explanation, I am satisfied with the selection made by the Rifle Association.

G.R.D., 3/5/86.

The Principal Under Secretary to The Secretary to the N.S.W. Rifle Association.

Sir,

Colonial Secretary's Office, Sydney, 8 May, 1886.

In acknowledging the receipt of your letter of the present date, I am directed to inform you that, under the explanation therein afforded, the Colonial Secretary is satisfied with the selection made by the Rifle Association of riflemen to represent this Colony in the Team to be sent to Wimbledon.

I have, &c.,

CRITCHETT WALKER,

Principal Under-Secretary.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.

NEW SOUTH WALES.

SERVICES OF MAJOR PARROTT, C.E., IN THE SOUDAN.

(CORRESPONDENCE.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be printed, 8 June, 1886.

RETURN to an Address of the Honorable the Legislative Assembly of New South Wales, adopted on 4th May, 1886, praying that His Excellency will be pleased to cause to be laid upon the Table of this House,—

“(1.) Copy of a letter written by Captain (now Major) Parrott, C.E., applying for permission to serve in the Soudan.

“(2.) Copies of despatches and letters from the Secretary of State for War, the Secretary of State for the Colonies, the Agent-General, His Excellency Lord Carrington, and all memoranda on such despatches having reference to the hydrological and geological reports furnished to the British Government by Major Parrott, C.E., late Engineer Officer to the Soudan Contingent.”

(Mr. Neild.)

Captain Parrott to Colonel Richardson.

Sir,

Sydney, 9 February, 1885.

I had intended, on the return of Major Rowe from his leave, to apply for leave of absence for myself to visit England.

I see by the telegrams from Egypt that Khartoum has been taken by the Mahdi, and that General Gordon has been made a prisoner. Under those circumstances, affairs in the Soudan have been so complicated as possibly to render it necessary to send additional forces to the assistance of Sir Garnet Wolseley. It is possible a Contingent will be sent from India to operate from the shores of the Red Sea, by Suakim and Berber.

In the event of your being favourable to the granting of twelve months leave of absence, I should be glad to devote a portion of the time in active service in Egypt, with the Indian or any other Contingent operating from the Red Sea.

With this object in view, I would respectfully ask that (if the proposal meets with your approval), you would secure for me a recommendation from our Government to be temporarily attached to any of the forces likely to be employed in the recovery of Khartoum and the pacification of the Soudan. My object in making this request is that I may have an opportunity of gaining knowledge and experience in active service, that may be of use in enhancing the value of the instruction which it is my duty to impart to the corps to which I have the honor to belong.

I have, &c.,
T. S. PARROTT.

Captain Parrott to The Minister for Mines.

Sir,

58, Sydney Arcade, Sydney, 20 July, 1885.

During my absence from the Colony on service with the late Contingent, my services were lent to the Royal Engineers, to carry out certain geological investigations in the mountains lying to the west of Suakim, on the Berber Caravan Route. I was engaged on this work up to the day of our embarkation, when I saw Colonel Edwards, Commanding Royal Engineers, who requested me to complete my plans, sections, and reports, on arrival in Sydney, and forward them to him as early as possible. This work will occupy me about a month, and will necessitate the employment of a skilful geological draftsman.

If you can assist me by lending me the services of such a draftsman I shall be much obliged.

I have, &c.,

T. S. PARROTT.

I shall be glad if the Hon. the Colonial Secretary will deal with this matter. Perhaps Colonel Richardson could give him some information.—J. P. ABBOTT, 20/7/85. The Principal Under Secretary, B.C., 20/7/85.—H.W., U.S.

This work of Captain Parrott's should be completed for the benefit of the Imperial Government. The Surveyor-General may be asked if he can provide a draftsman. I understand that it will take four or five weeks. If one cannot be spared, Mr. Parrott may be authorized to employ some one outside the Department. I would rather it were done by some one in the Service.—A.S., 27/7/85. The Under Secretary for Lands, B.C., 28 July /85.—J.B. for P.U.S. Surveyor-General.—C.O., 3/8/85. Very urgent.

Mr. Ellis,—Who are skilful geological draftsmen in this office, and what are they employed in?—M.A., 3 August. Very urgent.

The Surveyor-General,—Geological maps are prepared by draftsmen in the Department of Mines. Mr. Temporary Draftsman Vale is the only compiling draftsman in this office efficient for this class of work, but I cannot recommend that he be taken off the present important work of construction of maps for the London Exhibition, and which, I think, will take him to the end of the year.

Mr. Morris, Lithographic Draftsman, is next for the required work; but the Surveyor-General being aware of the importance of pushing on maps for the public, I cannot recommend him; and I have no other officers' names to give, owing to the office staff being so reduced on account of distribution of officers to Local Land Offices, and others for work of subdivision of runs, &c. I submit that, if the Department of Mines cannot supply a draftsman, that Mr. Parrott, as per minute of the Colonial Secretary, procure a draftsman from outside for the work, unless that an ordinary compiling draftsman will do.—J. W. ELLIS, 3 August /85.

Another draftsman may be named and sent to Captain Parrott, who will perhaps be good enough to let me know how far his services will be available; after which I must try and arrange for the compilation of the work. Possibly the Department of Mines could spare assistance, the work being special to it.—M.A., 5 Aug. /85. Urgent.

Mr. Ellis,—Captain Parrott has shown me his sketches and notes. Only a portion can be done by Mr. Nyberg, who will proceed with the plans, the drafting of which I think then will take three weeks' work. The bulk of the work is composed of highly artistic sketches of landscape, which it appears to me likely to occupy more time than contemplated. I have seen work by some of the lithographers which leads me to believe that the sketches could be reproduced in this office, and perhaps nowhere else in Sydney; the names of Messrs. Minchen and Kennedy have been suggested. I should like Mr. Willis to see the sketches, and report probable time required, &c., and if he considers outside assistance could be obtained.—M.A., 6 August. Mr. Willis.—W.B., 6 August, /85.

The Surveyor-General,—I have seen Mr. Parrott, who brought some of the sketches to show me; and after the whole matter was explained by him, I find that it would take about four or five weeks for one draftsman to compile and draw the plans and sections, and about four weeks for another to enlarge and colour the landscapes required. Under these circumstances I could not recommend that the drawings be done in this branch, as we have so much pressing work on hand. But, however, Mr. Parrott has since taken the matter into his own hands, and is having the plans and sections drawn by Mr. Alexander, of the firm of James & Co., lithographers, &c., Macquarie-place, and is arranging, I believe, with Mr. Fletcher Watson, artist, of Bond-street, as to the landscapes. There will therefore be no need for any draftsman in this office to be employed on this work.—JAMES A. WILLIS, 26 Aug., 1885.

The work is of such an artistic character that it is better in the hands of Mr. Fletcher Watson, under the supervision of Major Parrott. Any assistance required which comes within the scope of this office will however be rendered cheerfully.—M. ADAMS, 28 Aug. Under Secretary for Lands.

The Principal Under Secretary.—C.O., B.C., 7/9/85. Returned.—C.S.O., 9 Sept., '85. Major Parrott might be informed accordingly, 17/9/85. Major Parrott, 21 Sept., 1885.

The Agent-General to The Colonial Secretary.

Sir,

5, Westminster Chambers, Westminster, S.W., 21 August, 1885.

I have the honor to forward herein copy of a communication addressed to me by the Secretary of State for the Colonies, with its enclosure from the War Office, asking for a copy of the geological report prepared by Captain Parrott, of the New South Wales Contingent, on the country round Suakim.

I shall be much obliged if a copy of this report can be obtained from Captain Parrott, and transmitted to me, for presentation to the Intelligence Department of the War Office.

I have, &c.,

SAUL SAMUEL.

The Major-General commanding Military Forces.—A.S. The Agent-General may be written to, saying that this will be done as soon as Captain Parrott's notes shall have been printed.—A.S. Major Parrott's report and drawings are now complete, and may be forwarded to Agent-General.—C.W., 3/11/85. Agent-General.—3 Nov. 85. Account of Major Parrott of £87 18s. 10d., for services, forwarded to Treasury for payment from Australian Military Contingent Act Vote, on 6 Nov., 1885. Treasury, 21 Nov., 1885.

[Enclosures.]

Mr. J. Bramston to The Agent-General.

Sir, Colonial Office, Downing-street, 15 August, 1885.
I am directed by the Secretary of State for the Colonies to transmit to you a copy of a letter from the War Office, requesting to be supplied with a copy of a geological report, by Captain Parrott, on the country round Suakim.
Colonel Stanley would be glad to learn whether you are able to furnish him with such a copy, and, if not, he would be obliged if you would endeavour to procure one from the Colonial Government of New South Wales.

I am, &c.,
JOHN BRAMSTON.

War Office to Colonial Office.

Sir, War Office, 6 August, 1885.
I am directed by the Secretary of State for War to acquaint you, for the information of the Secretary of State for India in Council, that it has been ascertained that Captain Parrott, of the New South Wales Engineers, who was lately serving in the Eastern Soudan, has prepared a geological report of Suakim and the surrounding country.
This report would be of considerable value to the Intelligence Department of the War Office, and Mr. Secretary Smith would therefore request that, if possible, a copy may be obtained from Captain Parrott.

I have, &c.,
RALPH THOMPSON.

The Principal Under Secretary to Major Parrott.

Sir, Colonial Secretary's Office, Sydney, 21 September, 1885.
Referring to your letter of the 20th July last, addressed to the Secretary for Mines, I am desired by the Colonial Secretary to inform you that any assistance that you may require in completing the work upon which you are engaged for the Imperial Government will be rendered by the Surveyor-General's Department.

I have, &c.,
CRITCHETT WALKER,
Principal Under Secretary.

Major Parrott to The Principal Under Secretary.

Sir, St. Leonard's, 29 September, 1885.
May I request that the enclosed geological report to Colonel Edwards, R.E., C.B., may be printed and forwarded with the sections and drawings hereafter to be supplied by me to the Agent-General, in accordance to the Colonial Secretary's wish.

I beg to ask that after two copies have been printed—one to be given to myself, and the other to be sent home—the type may be at once distributed.

I have, &c.,
T. S. PARROTT.

NEW SOUTH WALES.

NAVAL DEFENCE OF AUSTRALASIA.

(CORRESPONDENCE RELATING TO.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be printed, 24 February, 1886.

His Excellency the Right Honorable Lord Carrington, P.C., G.C.M.G., &c., to The Honorable the Premier.

THE Governor begs to inform the Honorable the Premier that he has received a communication from the Secretary of State for the Colonies, expressing a desire that some common course of action should be arrived at between the Imperial and Colonial Governments, for the Naval Defence of Australasia and Australasian Waters, and with the view of securing that union and harmony of purpose upon which the permanent maintenance of a reliable national force so greatly depends. His Excellency Admiral Tryon, Commander-in-Chief on this station, has been authorized to discuss a scheme for the attainment of this important end with the respective Governments of those Colonies.

To enable a full consideration of questions connected with the Naval Forces in Australasian Waters, the Secretary of State suggests that the Governors should endeavour to arrange a meeting of the Premiers, and should, likewise acting on behalf of Her Majesty's Government, collectively meet and confer with the Premiers of the several Colonies, for the purpose of considering the matter. Admiral Tryon would be present at the Conference as the authorized representative of Her Majesty's Naval Departments, and it is to be hoped that the meeting would result in the ventilation of the general question of Naval Defence and in an advantageous interchange of ideas on the subject, as between the Imperial and Colonial Governments.

The Governor will be glad if effect can be given to the desire of Her Majesty's Government, that a Conference should take place on this subject, and it would of course remain with each Government, when in possession of all the facts, whether they would be prepared to make any recommendations to their respective Parliaments, with whom the final decision must necessarily rest.

Memo. from The Hon. the Premier to His Excellency the Right Honorable Lord Carrington, P.C., G.C.M.G., &c.

My Lord,

Having reference to the paper without date which some considerable time since you did me the honor to forward to me, and in which I was informed that the Right Honorable the Secretary of State for the Colonies had authorized Admiral Tryon, the Naval Commander-in-Chief on this Station, to discuss a scheme with the respective Governments of these Colonies for the Naval Defence of Australasian Waters, I had hoped that the two communications which I had made to your Excellency about the time of the receipt of that now under reply, had been considered by your Lordship, sufficient from me on the subject until the arrival of the Admiral in Port Jackson. However it seems that I was mistaken. I feel that I need only say now, however, that in my opinion a consultation of Ministers of each Colony with the Admiral would be likely to bring about beneficial results.

The suggestion of the Secretary of State, that the Governors should arrange a meeting of Premiers, and should likewise, acting on behalf of Her Majesty's Government, collectively meet and confer with the Premiers of the several Colonies for the purpose of considering the matter of Naval Defence with Admiral Tryon, I am sure would result in a terrible waste of time and energy, and be a complete failure. To say nothing of the unconstitutionality of the Premiers as such assuming any such position on behalf of their respective Colonies.

As a rule nothing of value has come from Intercolonial Conferences, and the difficulty of inducing anything of the kind in the future is more hopeless than ever, from the fact that a minority of Australasian Colonists is now irritating the rest by posing before the world as the "Federal Council of Australasia."

It appears to me that good would result if the Secretary of State would invite each Colony to pay its proportion according to population of the cost of half of the Naval Services of Her Majesty in Australasian Waters, on some such basis as is roughly stated hereunder :—

1. That England should provide and control a thoroughly good and efficient Sea Service for the protection of the outer waters and coasts of Australasia, the Colonies for the most part protecting their own inner waters.
2. That inasmuch as the floating commerce in these seas belongs to the old and the new lands in about equal proportions, the burden of cost should be divided equally between the Mother Country and the Colonies.
3. That each Colony should be invited to appropriate its quota under legislation, fixing the appropriation for ten years certain.
4. That the subsidy should be an annual one for efficient protection, and that at the end of the ten years (or other period fixed) the ships, &c., &c., should be the property of the Empire.

[Re Melbourne Conference.]

WE are of opinion that no good can be accomplished by the proposed conference of Governors and Premiers, and think that the proper course to pursue would be for each Colony, on the invitation of the Imperial Government, to express its preparedness for the payment of its proportionate share of the cost of the naval defence of Australasia, leaving to the Imperial Government the responsibility of advising the most effectual scheme of naval defence. Our objections to conference is based upon the fact that it would be held without parliamentary sanction or authority, and that, therefore, the representatives of the Colonies could not commit themselves to any final course of action, and that the determinations of the conference would have to be submitted to the various Legislatures for approval or condemnation that nothing would be gained by holding the conference but, on the contrary, time would be lost. In a few days I shall send you confidentially a copy of a memorandum embodying our views on the question, as also a copy of a memorandum addressed to the Governor by my predecessor. These documents will put you in full possession of the way in which we regard the situation.

Memorandum for His Excellency the Right Honorable Lord Carrington, P.C., G.C.M.G., &c., as to the Joint Naval Defence of Australasia.

REFERRING to the various interviews with His Excellency on the subject of the communication from the Secretary of State for the Colonies, expressing a desire that a common course of action should be arrived at between the Imperial and Colonial Governments for the naval defence of Australasia, and suggesting the arrangement of a meeting of the Governors and Premiers of the several Colonies, for the purpose of considering the matter with His Excellency Admiral Tryon, I beg to state for the information of His Excellency, that I have to-day submitted the whole question for the consideration of the Cabinet, with the following result—the Cabinet is unable to perceive in what way the Government would be authorized in sending the Premier as the representative of the Colony to the conference proposed in the absence of any legislative authority which, as His Excellency knows, does not exist for this purpose. It seems to the Cabinet that the presence of the Premier at such conference would be an unconstitutional proceeding and would expose his Government to censure. And even if, for the purpose of discussion, such a representation of the country were made, the Premier would be quite unable in the absence of any parliamentary sanction to commit the Colony to any course whatever. Under these circumstances nothing would be gained by a proceeding which is certainly irregular, and which, in provoking severe criticism, would rather injure than promote the object which the conference desires to effect. The Cabinet is also of opinion that this attempted united action of the Colonies might be fairly regarded so far as those Colonies which have passed adopting Acts for the formation of a Federal Council are concerned as an interference with the functions of that body. Substantially, the Cabinet agrees with the views expressed to His Excellency by Sir John Robertson in a memorandum, which he transmitted in answer to the notification of the receipt by His Excellency of the communication from the Secretary of State for the Colonies. While submitting this view, the Cabinet desires to assure His Excellency of its readiness to invite the Legislature to make immediate provision for defraying a proportionate part of the cost of the naval defence of these Australasian waters. On receiving, as Sir John Robertson points out, an invitation from the Secretary of State for the payment of its fair proportion, the Government would lose no time in submitting the matter to Parliament, and obtaining the necessary authority for this purpose. And at the same time it feels that the adoption of this irregular unparliamentary course would have the effect of delay instead of facilitating the settlement of this important question.

"Thanks for your invitation, but I am much occupied preparing for ensuing session that it is quite impossible for me to accept it."

From the Governor of Tasmania, Hobart, on 19 April, 1886:—

"I have been requested by the Premier to send you the following telegram:—Ministers consider Premier's attendance at Conference unnecessary, as you are already acquainted with and can state their views re defence."

From the Governor of New Zealand, Auckland, on the 14th April, 1886:—

"Mr. Stout much regrets nearness of parliamentary session prevents his accepting your kind invitation."

And further, on the 22nd April, 1886:—

"I shall despatch to you by steamer leaving Auckland for Sydney, 22nd April, memorandum from my Ministers respecting increased naval defences."

Correspondence with His Excellency the Governor of Victoria, his Ministers concurring, and the Admiral assenting.

(A copy of this correspondence was sent to the Governor of each Colony).

The Governor to Rear Admiral Tryon, C.B.

Sir,

Government House, Melbourne, 21 March, 1885.

At the Conference which was held at Government House on Wednesday, the 18th instant, at which your Excellency was good enough to be present, the questions relating to the defences of the Port Phillip Heads and other approaches to Melbourne, were discussed and considered; but there was an important question connected with the defence of this and the other Australian Colonies, upon which I purposely did not touch, leaving it for separate consideration and discussion by itself. I refer to the assistance which this Colony, and the trade of this Colony, may expect to receive from the Imperial Navy in the event of war occurring between England and one of the Great European Powers.

The area included within your Excellency's command is very extensive, and the numerical strength of your squadron is not large for the duties which, under such an eventuality as war, they would be called upon to perform, while the requirements of the more distant parts of your command might further reduce the strength of the squadron in the immediate vicinity of Australia, and, moreover, the first line of defence may lead to the concentration of your squadron at some distance from the shores of these Colonies. Under these circumstances, I should be extremely obliged for your Excellency's views upon the general question, that I may submit the same to my Ministers for consideration. The principal points to which I would venture to draw your Excellency's attention are:—

1. The importance of having a certain number of vessels which could not be withdrawn from Australian waters.
2. That these vessels should be the best of their several classes.
3. That the officers and men should be acquainted with and well drilled in the knowledge of the most modern gunnery and torpedo practice.
4. That during war, while placed under the command of the Senior Naval Officer on the station, their first duty should be the protection of the Australian Colonies.

Your Excellency will also, perhaps, favour me with your views with respect to the number of vessels that, in your opinion, would suffice for this special service.

In seeking for your Excellency's advice on this important subject, I trust it may not be understood as intended to lessen in any way the Imperial responsibility for the external defence of these Colonies, or for the protection of the commercial trade of the Empire in Australasian waters, in connection with which Imperial and Colonial interests are both so closely and largely concerned; but that anything done in the direction I have indicated should be in addition to, and not in exchange for, any protection now provided for these purposes by Her Majesty's squadron in these seas.

I have, &c.,

HENRY B. LOCH

Rear-Admiral Tryon, C.B., to The Governor.

Sir,

H.M.S. "Nelson," at Melbourne, 27 March, 1885.

In reply to your Excellency's letter received on the 24th instant, a copy of which I attach, I beg to forward a reply in the form of a memorandum.

I have, &c.,

G. TRYON,

Rear-Admiral and Commander-in-Chief.

[Enclosure

[Enclosure in Rear Admiral Tryon's letter to the Governor of Victoria, dated 7th March, 1885.]

MEMORANDUM.

CONSIDERATIONS of defence naturally involve an estimate of what they are to be prepared against.

History is apt to repeat itself; squadrons and fleets have escaped the most vigilant Admirals, and the most skilful strategists failed in days of old so to order our fleets as to prevent this. Since those days, the composition of the navies of the world has greatly altered, and at this time it is far easier for an Admiral to avoid notice and conceal destination.

It is possible that an attack may be delivered by a small squadron of ironclads of a type that does not entitle them to a place in the first rank—they would be very formidable if employed to attack our Colonies; and still more possibly a hostile squadron might contain vessels of the fast partially-armoured class that are now much in fashion, and the construction of them is on the increase. It is well to consider what such a squadron could do, supposing it had arrived off our coast, having avoided detection, the Admiral in command, deceived by false reports, gone to New Zealand, with the telegraphs cut.

If there is a determination to resist such a squadron, even should it force a channel or the line of defence, unless it is accompanied by a considerable land force, cannot do much against a large population, if there is a resolute determination to resist at all costs.

It could effect a certain amount of harm by bombardment, but to such towns as Melbourne and Sydney the injury would not be very great, even if the fleet expended all its ammunition. The more lasting effect would be the destruction of trade, and with it the recuperative power of the country, for years. If in lieu of resistance there was hesitation, followed by a decision to yield—a condition I hardly can contemplate—trade and commerce will be equally destroyed, and if there is one thing more certain than another it is, that demands, if yielded to, would have a more disastrous effect on the welfare of the country than ever could be produced by the heaviest bombardment.

History is replete with instances of the successful resistances that can be improvised by large towns against even a very considerable force.

The destruction of trade and commerce, and, with it, the infliction of long and lasting injury, could be also effected by an enemy who sent fast cruisers off our ports to capture our vessels.

To render an attack from the first named futile, and, if possible, to render the task so improbable of success that no one would contemplate the undertaking, a local defence is called into existence; but while it is not very costly to protect our homes with the aid of local forces, they do not, and they could not help to drive off cruisers such as could prey upon us. We must therefore provide the means whereby they may be captured, if possible; if not, at all events, driven off our own coasts.

It seems to me that if our local defences are in a satisfactory condition a heavy squadron would have no mission in these waters. The cost would be great, the maintenance difficult, and in time it would be overtaken.

From the above it appears that two forces are required, each with its special mission, but each aiding the other. The duty of the first is to defy attack, and to welcome the coming friend, and to afford him a safe harbour; the latter to chase and capture the enemy on the wide sea, or, if driven home by superior force, to join in the defence. It appears to me that the local defence forces—I include in this term the naval and military force, the forts, mines, and torpedoes, in fact everything—at Melbourne are designed to comply with one condition viz., to furnish local defence.

Each harbour has special conditions attached to it. Some may be defended by forts and mines only; in some cases torpedo boats must be added, and in other cases, such as occur at Port Phillip, where there is a wide entrance to an inland sea, a defence is created by covering the entrance with gun fire, the channels by mines; the forts and mines aided by a flotilla and by torpedo boats, so that if a vessel should perchance burst through all, and, though shattered, still be able to punish an undefended town, she would be tackled by a naval force.

Although it probably will not be questioned that a regularly trained force is a more perfect force in itself than any militia or volunteer force, still there is a reasoning to which weight must be attached in favour of leaving by far the greater portion of local defence in the hands of local corps.

Local corps can be formed on a system which withdraws those who join them but little from those occupations which increase the wealth of the country. Local corps are subject to the keenest local criticism—to a criticism that is perfectly well understood by them, but which would probably ruin a more regular force. The system of local corps tends to identify the population with the defence. It is less likely to languish. It gives experience to many in the supply and in the use of warlike stores. It does not continuously separate the men from their wives and families. It habituates the people to feel that possibly some day they may be required to make personal sacrifices. It gives a sense of security. It tends to allay panic. It accustoms the Government of the country to study the questions involved, and the responsibility that belongs to it on this subject is kept perpetually before their eyes.

Under such a system more men are trained to arms than under a system based on a permanent long-service force.

The essential to do justice to local corps is a nucleus of trained men and experts.

But if we are to have efficient vessels to capture cruisers they must have thoroughly efficient crews, trained and inured to the sea, and well practised in their vessels. This is a totally different thing to the other.

To keep the crews of such ships efficient, they must be changed from time to time. There are no means of drafting them from ship to ship out here at this time, or of sending them to undergo a course of training in the new methods, or new implements of war, or to keep them acquainted with what they have to meet.

I see no way, in 1885, of securing efficiency save by making such vessels bona fide men-of-war, on the same footing in every respect as all Her Majesty's ships in commission.

I do not understand that your Excellency desires me to draw up a scheme for consideration that does not also pay some regard to the financial aspect of the case, but rather to formulate a scheme which, if adopted, would in my opinion give a substantial addition to our Naval Forces in these waters, and be specially suited for the service required of them.

If

If the reasoning contained in what I have already written is accepted as right, and assuming that the local defence is satisfactory, it follows that what are wanted in the first place are cruiser catchers.

In Parliament, in London, lately, it was announced that ten additional vessels of what are termed "Scout" class should be added to the navy; these vessels admirably adapted for the service for which they are designed, would, in my opinion, not have sufficient gun power, but a design might be got out giving them 6-inch breech-loading guns, in lieu of 5-inch; these guns at moderate ranges penetrate ordinary iron-clads.

The legend of the ship should run thus:—

16½ knots; 1,600 miles full speed; 7,000 miles half speed, 10 knots; six 6-in. B. L. Guns on sponsons as in "Scout" class.

This enables two guns to be fired ahead, two astern, or three on either broadside, with shields to protect the crews against machine guns.

A light hog-back fore-castle and poop. This seems to be advantageous, as the seas that run at the entrances of these harbours are often heavy and the "Rip" inconvenient, besides they would give cover for machine guns, of which there should be an ample supply; also two electric lights, four fixed torpedo tubes each side. Quite a light rig, with four and aft sails—in fact, as a whole, a "Scout" enlarged to carry the guns named.

Six such vessels would be a substantial and material additional protection to our trade and commerce; and, besides being cruiser catchers, are well adapted to join in the defence of any port; moreover, even if far more powerful vessels appeared in these waters, they would have their mission, which would not be confined to defensive operations. They would be a most welcome addition to Her Majesty's squadron that is usually employed on this station.

I may here point out that, if all the Colonies concurred in any arrangement for their protection, economy and efficiency would be greatly increased. For instance, if, instead of each Colony ordering its own vessels, or each Colony ordering guns or rifles, without concert, an agreement could be come to on such subjects, stores would be interchangeable, and in time of need one would be able to aid the other. If there is no agreement on such points, after action, on refitting, we should have to send to each Colony for stores belonging to her ships.

It must be remembered that these Colonies cannot be attacked simultaneously, though they might be consecutively if the enemy was successful in his first efforts.

Should it be decided by the Colonies to move on the following lines, viz.—to create a force suited to these waters and to the special requirements of their case, with the view to increase the Australian squadron—to bring the matter within range for decision, I put forward a series of propositions on my own responsibility, but with an earnest feeling that some such force is much required; and while I personally recommend for consideration each proposition, I quite recognize that it is necessary to convince those responsible for recommending expenditure, as well as the colonists at large, and it is not possible within the limits of such a paper as this to enter fully into all the details involved. It may be recalled that in the reign of Henry IV. the country was much perplexed about the navy, then in its infancy. Matters had not gone well with it either as to expenditure or as to the force produced. It was decided to entrust it to merchants, viz., to provide a navy by contract. The system did not last long, for reasons I need not enter into, but the precedent conveys an idea.

Should it be decided that the highest interests would be best served if the Colonies defrayed the expense while the Admiralty supplied men and maintained the vessels, it being clearly understood that the vessels so provided were to be a force, both as to personnel and matériel, additional to the fleet of the Empire as voted by the Parliament in London, then the following are some of the points that would present themselves for decision:—

- (i.) The arrangement to last, say, for ten years, but to terminate only after three years' notice.
- (ii.) The Admiralty to furnish the ships, which would be built either by contract or in the dock-yards. The ships to be equipped, manned, and despatched as are all other of Her Majesty's ships, the sole reserve being a limitation as to their employment.
- (iii.) The class of ship, the design, and estimate to be approved by the Colonial Government and by the Admiralty.
- (iv.) The armaments to be approved by the Colonial Government.
- (v.) Repairs to be effected, as far as they can be, within the Colony.
- (vi.) Repairs to be effected in the same manner and with the same authority as is the practice with Her Majesty's ships.
- (vii.) The Admiralty to re-commission the ships from time to time, precisely as Her Majesty's ships on the station. Officers and crews are not to be kept too long on the station.
- (viii.) The officers and men to be on the same footing in every respect as the officers and men in Her Majesty's ships. In fact, the ships to be in every sense Her Majesty's ships in commission, and placed under the Commander-in-Chief on the Australian station.
- (ix.) At no time will these vessels be removed without the waters of Australasia without the sanction of the Governments of the Colonies.
- (x.) During a time of peace, the officers and others of such ships as are not in active commission could be well employed to instruct the Reserve Forces and Volunteers. A special arrangement on this subject would be necessary.
- (xi.) Nothing in the above regulations prevents any Colony possessing itself of other vessels for other purposes. Such vessels will fly, as now, the Colonial Flag, and this applies to all vessels the property of Colonial Governments when they are not placed under the Naval Commander-in-Chief. When under the Commander-in-Chief they would fly the White Ensign, and be like other ships of the squadron.
- (xii.) The entire cost of matériel, of maintenance, and of personnel, including the ultimate liability of Her Majesty's Government on account of deferred pay for officers and men for the periods they serve in such ships to be borne by the Colony.

That there is a distinct call for every endeavour that can tend to protect our commerce cannot be questioned. More sea-going tonnage enters one port within these Colonies annually than entered the Thames at the time when Her Majesty came to the throne within the same period. There

There is no Colony that does not possess statistics that clearly demonstrate how small a percentage would be called for out of the profits of that trade to afford a reasonable amount of protection ; and a first step in this direction would be taken if we provided ourselves with cruiser catchers, and to the cruisers I should desire to add torpedo boats capable of going from port to port. They would be especially valuable to cover a long stretch of one coast. The possession of such boats, kept always at the end of a telegraph wire, would effectually prevent an enemy anchoring near our shores.

I recommend the adoption of a dropping arrangement, which could be fitted in a few hours to local small steam-boats, such as we have on board H.M.S. "Nelson" for Whitehead torpedoes. It is inexpensive in construction and maintenance, and enables us to largely supplement more regular torpedo boats for harbour defence, in a ready and effectual way. There should be torpedo stations on shore, a small pier where the boats could rest in safety, and two air-compressing engines in different positions within the Heads, and two skilled hands at each station.

I have dwelt specially on the defence of our principal ports (I have previously written on the defence of Newcastle and Sydney), because I feel that, if the principal temptations to attack are removed, and the largest prizes are shielded, it would not be worth while for an enemy to detach important squadrons for the purpose of destroying less important places ; and thus the whole of the Colonies and every place would receive benefit, inasmuch as they would not be liable to be devastated by an overwhelming force.

Cruisers and unarmoured ships can do little against a comparatively very small defence ; and it will be noticed that, while I have recommended the adoption of cruiser catchers, I have not been unmindful of the long stretches of these shores where the efforts of the enemy would be best defeated by another class of boat.

It may not be out of place here to mention, seeing that success engenders success, that, if all united to pay the losses suffered at any spot on our shores owing to the resistance the inhabitants made, either to the demands of any enemy or to an actual attack, it could not do otherwise than provoke that unity of action and of feeling that goes so far as to assure success.

I am aware that this report may be held not to go so far as is contemplated in Your Excellency's letter to which it is a reply ; but I need hardly do more than mention to Your Excellency that a navy cannot be created in a day, and that is hardly the time to consider what force would be sufficient to give security against this or that force ; that a great deal can be done if all pull together to meet present emergency ; and the foundation of a force might well be laid that would grow with the growth of our Colonies.

Proposed—

SEA-GOING COLONIAL FLEET,

- if all joined, including New Zealand,
- Six Cruiser Catchers.
- Eight torpedo boats, sea-going, say of 150 tons.
- The above to be furnished, manned, and maintained by the Admiralty at the cost of the Colonies.
- (A portion of this force only to remain in commission during a time of peace.)

LOCAL DEFENCES,

- to be officered and manned by Local Forces :
 - viz., Harbour Defence Vessels, and Whitehead Torpedo Boats, small class generally speaking.
 - Batteries and Mines to be entrusted to Local Corps.
- That Local Corps should have a good nucleus of highly-trained men is an essential condition.
- The Whitehead system to enter largely into the system of defence, and dropping gear to be provided in readiness to be fitted to local boats to supplement the regular torpedo boats.

No. 3.

Correspondence between the Hon. W. B. Dalley, Acting-Colonial Secretary of New Wales, and the Admiral, on proposed agreement as to losses. Circular letter from Mr. Dalley to the Colonies, and replies received by him.

(Circular.)

Sir,

Colonial Secretary's Office, 6 May, 1885.

I have the honor to submit for your consideration a matter which seems to be one upon which a prompt and unanimous determination on the part of all the Australian Colonies is extremely desirable. The attention of this Government has been directed to the necessity of endeavouring, in the presence of impending war and possible injury to some portion or portions of Australasia, to provide for united effort—in the first place in averting or diminishing disaster, and in the second in dividing as far as possible the losses which it may entail. In a seaboard of such a length as that which, in order to give complete and universal security would have to be guarded by a much larger force in numbers and power than any which either the Imperial or Colonial Governments can furnish, it is impossible to guarantee by any expenditure of means or by any exercise of vigilance, absolute freedom from injury. But the power to inflict serious disaster may be most effectually weakened by an united determination to resist under any circumstances any concessions which may be demanded by an enemy ; and by an absolute denial of all coal and supplies. It has been pointed out by the Admiral Commander-in-Chief of this Station, in an admirable paper, which in the form of a letter addressed to me, is appended to this circular communication, that these demands are likely to be made in places that have no defensive works, and the inhabitants of which might be consequently exposed to the severest injury. As heroic resistance under such circumstances would be the most effectual service that could be rendered to the entire group of Colonies, it is submitted that it ought to be undertaken, under the amplest united guarantee of all the Colonies, that the places so resisting should be reimbursed to the full extent of all sacrifices made and all injuries sustained under such circumstances. The general defence would be most effectively served by such an arrangement, and all considerations of justice and a right appreciation of our common liabilities and perils, and our duty in sharing them and mutually helping and supporting each other, tend to establish the necessity of such an undertaking. With the view of bringing about an immediate arrangement, this Government undertakes, if the Governments of the other Australian Colonies concur in the course proposed, to pay its full proportionate share of of all injuries inflicted upon any portion of any one or more of the Australian Colonies which may be occasioned by the resistance of such places to the requisitions of an enemy, by refusal to furnish supplies, by the destruction of coals and vessels carrying them so as to prevent their falling into the hands of an enemy, and by participating in the expense which may be involved in providing for the widows and orphans of those defenders of the Colonies whose lives may be lost in sustaining such resistance. The Government of this country has diminished as far as is in its power the possibility of the cruisers of an enemy obtaining coal at any of the mines upon this coast; but no kind of provision can control the situation effectually unless on the basis of a common guaranteed indemnification against loss by those prepared for an immediate sacrifice in the interests of the entire Colonies. It has been pointed out that an enemy could easily seize vessels coal-laden between ports, and bring them into safe and unprotected harbours, of which there are several on this coast both north and south of Sydney, and there coal with impunity. No more certain and effectual prevention of this could be adopted than a general order on the part of all owners and agents of vessels coal-laden to destroy them rather than permit an enemy to seize their coal, with the conviction that the entire cost of the sacrifice would be borne by the Colonies. And nothing would more thoroughly operate as a deterrent to the invasion of these shores than the knowledge of the existence of such a universal agreement to resist all organizations and to share all perils. The whole question is so broadly and fully treated in the letter attached to this paper that it is unnecessary to state the case submitted at greater length. I now anxiously invite your early consideration of this proposal for united action, and, on the part of this Government, shall be prepared to co-operate with you to the fullest extent, accepting any modifications which may be suggested, provided that the object which it is proposed to attain shall be substantially effected. A copy of this letter has been addressed to all the Australian Governments.

I have, &c.,

WILLIAM BEDE DALLEY.

My dear Mr. Dalley,

H.M.S. "Nelson," Sydney, 4 May, 1885.

The great centres of wealth, of trade and commerce—Brisbane, Sydney, Melbourne, Adelaide—are 1,400 miles apart. They all are more or less protected by defensive forces and works. Nor must we forget Hobart and Tasmania with its attachments to us.

It can be shown—

1. That while possibly one of these great centres might be attacked, all cannot be attacked at the same time.
2. That the maintenance of a foreign fleet far from its own shores and depôts is a most costly and difficult task.
3. That it is the habit of some foreign nations to make war support war, by relying largely on requisitions made on the inhabitants of the country with which they are at war.
4. That a squadron consisting of a few cruisers might expect to sustain themselves by their captures, and by requisitions made on places not provided with regular defensive works, unless measures are taken beforehand to defeat them in their object.
5. That there are many such places on our long seaboard of 7,500 miles.
6. That the defence of such places is in the hands of local corps and riflemen.
7. That such corps can offer a certain and effectual defence and possibly will capture the boats sent from any ordinary naval force or squadron.
8. That history is replete with instances when a few resolute men have resisted successfully very considerable bodies of men landed from ships, particularly when rifle-pits and trenches have been made and the position studied beforehand.
9. That an enemy has before now attempted to obtain supplies and a compliance with his demands by a threatened attack.
10. That resistance may cause a destruction of property, and a stern refusal to yield may cause an enemy to endeavour to frighten the inhabitants into yielding, and into supplying his needs.
11. That even if he does fire his guns, only temporary inconvenience to the inhabitants should befall them.
12. That the slightest concession to demands will sure to be followed by increased demands and a lot far worse than paragraph 11.
13. Remembering that if all supplies are refused, either by force or by the destruction of coal and other stores necessary for the maintenance of ships, his power to molest other places and other Colonies is limited.
14. That if he expends his ammunition on one place, he has all the less for the next place.
15. That if the system of absolutely securing the denial of all coal and supplies to an enemy is attained, he cannot fail to be greatly hindered.
16. That demands are likely to be made on places that have no defensive works—it is at such places we may rely on the brave hearts of our men and on the courage of our women, which has never failed in the hour of need. They would in their defence suffer (to their honor) in their property and persons for the public weal as much as for their own good.
17. That it is most advisable to bring this home to all.

Therefore, with the view to give force to that great existing national unity which goes so far to command success, I venture to suggest to you whether it would not only be proper, but wise and reasonable, for every Colony to agree that in every case, whether a house, a village, or town suffers from an enemy because his demands are bravely refused, that the loss incurred will be made good out of the general revenue of these Colonies.

With the view only to propose a system, the sum required might be contributed by each Colony according to its population.

The squadron under my command, I trust, may be able to do much, but the sea is wide, the coming nights long and dark, and the ships cannot be everywhere; but the proposal, if assented to, would very greatly assist the Navy in the performance of the task allotted to it, and I shall be proud for one to be permitted to share in the cost of the proposal, whether the contribution is based on income or as otherwise decided.

I am, &c.,

G. TRYON.

My

My dear Admiral,

Colonial Secretary's Office, Sydney, 4 May, 1885.

I thank you, on behalf of the Government and people of this Colony, for this latest proof of your sympathy with our efforts to organize an effective defence of this Country, and for the valuable advice which on this, as on all matters in connection therewith, you have so generously furnished to the Government. I shall take the earliest opportunity of inviting the attention of the Governments of all the Australian Colonies to this important subject, with the view of securing that unanimity of heroic action which you have so ably counselled. This I shall endeavour to accomplish by a circular communication to the Heads of the Governments of all the Colonies, to which I propose to attach the letter which you have done me the honor to address to me. By a careful perusal of your letter, I feel sure that the course of action proposed will commend itself to the patriotism and sagacity of the Australian Governments, and that the object which you desire to attain will be effectually accomplished.

I have, &c.,

WILLIAM BEDE DALLEY.

Telegram from Premier, Victoria, to Colonial Secretary, New South Wales.

Melbourne, 6 May, 1885.

I THOROUGHLY agree with the suggestions made by the Admiral which you refer to in your telegram of to-day, and which he mentioned to me in conversation. I have no doubt that this Colony would join heartily in joint responsibility in such a matter,—indeed the whole matter of defence seems to demand federal action, but Lord Derby himself says, in speaking of a system of coastal defence for the Australian Colonies, that federation pre-supposes some federal authority.

Telegram from Colonial Secretary, Queensland, to Colonial Secretary, New South Wales.

Brisbane, 6 May, 1885.

CONFIDENTIAL. I am disposed to concur in the proposal. I have already arranged, with respect to coal stored at Thursday Island in this Colony, for its destruction rather than allow it to fall into an enemy's hands, and we have guards posted there for the purpose. We have also undertaken to indemnify owners, but I agree that the Colonies should unite in undertaking the burden.

The Colonial Secretary, Queensland, to The Colonial Secretary, New South Wales.

Sir,

Colonial Secretary's Office, Brisbane, 18 May, 1885.

I have the honor to acknowledge your letter of 6th May, forwarding a letter from Admiral Tryon on the subject of proposed common action on the part of the Australasian Governments for the indemnification of persons who, in case of war or invasion, may make a sacrifice of their property for the purpose of preventing aid to an invading force by sea or land.

I entirely concur in the proposal, that in the event of any such loss being sustained by any town or individual, in consequence of refusing such aid, the loss should be borne by the Colonies collectively, in proportion to population.

It would, I think, be very desirable that an arrangement to this effect should be embodied in a formal agreement, which should be submitted for ratification to the several Legislatures. On this matter, however, as in the cognate and equally important one of General Naval Defences, I anticipate some difficulty in arriving at unanimity until some form of federal action is initiated.

I shall be glad to be informed of the opinions of the other Governments on this subject, and beg to suggest that copies of the replies from each of them should be transmitted for the information of the others.

I have, &c.,

S. W. GRIFFITH.

The Chief Secretary, South Australia, to The Colonial Secretary, New South Wales.

Sir,

Chief Secretary's Office, Adelaide, 20 May, 1885.

I have the honor to acknowledge receipt of your circular letter, bearing date the 6th instant, suggesting the desirability of united action being taken by the Australian Colonies in the event of war, for averting or diminishing disaster, and dividing, as far as possible, any losses which might be entailed through an attack upon all or any of the Colonies.

In reply, I have to inform you that this Government approve of the suggestion, and would be prepared, if necessary, to act in concert with the other Colonies in contributing towards these and the other matters accruing out of war adverted to, the contributions of the several Colonies being based upon their respective populations.

I have, &c.,

JOHN COLTON.

The Premier, Tasmania, to The Colonial Secretary, New South Wales.

Sir,

Premier's Office, Hobart, 22 May, 1885.

I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 6th instant, bringing under consideration the advantages which would accrue to the Colonies of Australasia as a whole, if, in the event of war, they were united in the determination to resist, under any circumstances, any concessions which may be demanded by an enemy, under the joint guarantee of all the Colonies that the places so resisting should be reimbursed to the full extent of all sacrifices made and all injuries sustained. You also forward copy of a letter from Admiral Tryon on the same subject, advocating the desirability of the adoption of such a system.

In reply, I desire to express my general concurrence in the proposed unification of the Colonies for the objects in view. The details of the scheme, however, would require very careful consideration, and such consideration would, in my opinion, fitly devolve upon a Federal Council.

I have, &c.,

ADYE DOUGLAS.

Telegram

Referred to in your telegram of 6th and mine of 7th May, 1885.

Telegram from Premier, New Zealand, to Colonial Secretary, New South Wales.

Wellington, 23 May, 1885.

I HAVE to apologize for the delay in answering Mr. Dalley's telegram of the 6th instant. We are favourably disposed to your proposal, but we think the condition of resistance should not be included. We may be sure that whenever resistance is feasible or expedient it will be displayed in all the Colonies, and in every part, to the full extent courage and patriotism would justify. We think it would be better the Colonies should agree to joint liability for all damages caused by the enemy on the basis of a population contribution. Will you consider this modification, and state also how you would propose the assent of the several Parliaments should be given.

The Colonial Secretary, Western Australia, to The Colonial Secretary,
New South Wales.

Sir,

Colonial Secretary's Office, Perth, 11 June, 1885.

I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 11th ultimo, and, in reply, am directed by His Excellency, Administrator Onslow, to inform you that it will be laid before the Legislative Council of this Colony at its approaching Session.

I have, &c.,

MALCOLM FRASER

The Colonial Secretary, Western Australia, to The Colonial Secretary,
New South Wales.

Sir,

Colonial Secretary's Office, Perth 15 August, 1885.

In further continuation of my letter, No. 71-6, of the 11th June last, I have now the honor, by direction of His Excellency Governor Sir Frederick Broome, to inform you that this Government is prepared to agree to the proposals contained in your circular of the 6th May last, respecting an indemnification arrangement for war losses, on the understanding that the arrangement shall be adhered to by all the Australian Colonies, and that any contribution under it shall be reckoned on the basis of population.

Will you be good enough to inform this Government so soon as possible what decision has been, or is likely to be, come to by the other Colonies in this matter.

I have, &c.,

MALCOLM FRASER.

Minute by the Acting Colonial Secretary, New South Wales, on the subject of the Military and Naval Defences of the Colony.

At the earliest period after the departure of our Contingent to assist the Imperial Forces in Egypt, I desire to bring under the notice of my colleagues the necessity of making additional and permanent provision for our defences. I have had several interviews with Colonel Roberts, who, during the absence of Colonel Richardson, discharges the duties of Commandant, and I have instructed him to keep up the strength of the Permanent Artillery to at least two hundred men. I have also called for returns of the strength of our defence from the various regiments of Volunteers, which number about 2,800 men. I propose at once to supply the place, by the appointment of some highly qualified Imperial officer (if such a person can be found), of Adjutant Norris, who has left as Major in the Soudan Contingent. I have also had interviews with Captain Hixson, in command of the Naval Brigade, and I propose making immediate arrangements by means of which the members of that Force will be enabled to have unlimited facilities for drilling with the big guns. I have also seen the Officer in Charge of the Naval Artillery Force, and have made arrangements with him by means of which the efficiency of that Force will be materially increased, and it will be available at any time as a powerful arm of defence. The particulars of these arrangements I shall communicate to my colleagues verbally, but my immediate object is to draw attention to what is absolutely essential, as it seems to me, in the way of providing for our Naval Defences. As my colleagues are aware, I have more than once expressed the idea, which I believe is generally shared by them all, that the more we identify ourselves with the Imperial Government for the purpose of securing perfect Naval Defences, the more efficient will be the Service and the more perfect will be its administration. We have in the Colonies no department which can exercise an efficient supervision and control over military and naval expenditures and service, and it does not seem to me that any object will be attained by the creation of such a Department. I think, consequently, that when we have the opportunity of availing ourselves of Imperial assistance in matters for the regulation of which our own means are insufficient, we should adopt a course which will give us the least inconvenience and secure for us the highest advantage. With this object I would submit to the Cabinet the following proposal for its consideration; and I may remark that I have prepared myself for this submission by interviews with the Admiral in Command of this Station, and have availed myself of much valuable information which he has communicated to me. I have also endeavoured to ascertain whether the proposal which I now make to my colleagues is a practicable one, in the sense of its being deemed acceptable by the Imperial Government; and I think I am justified in saying that in its main features it will probably not be deemed unacceptable to the Imperial Naval Authorities. My proposal is to this effect:—That instead of building or procuring vessels ourselves, to be manned and governed by local authorities, we should endeavour to make an arrangement with the Imperial Government of the following kind. That we should endeavour to procure two ships of war, to be built and equipped by the Admiralty; the type and design of such vessels to be determined by the Admiralty and the Government of the Colony. The armament to be approved by the Government, and the expense of building, equipping, and arming to be borne by the Colony. The arrangement with the Admiralty should not be for a less period than ten years, and, in my judgment, it would be more desirable to extend it to a period of fifteen years. The ships to be equipped, officered, and manned by the Admiralty, and the Officers to be secured precisely the same advantages as to rank, time of service, and promotion, as if they were serving in Her Majesty's Majesty's ships in Commission. The entire cost of personnel to be borne by the Colony, including actual and deferred pay; the repairs of the vessels to be effected, as far as possible, within the Colony itself, with the distinct understanding that such repairs would be effected in the same way as if done in England. The ships to be under the orders of the Naval Commander-in-Chief of the Station, and, in the event of his absence, of the Senior Naval Officer who might occupy his place. Whether the vessels should be taken out of the waters of the Colony in time of peace, without the assent of the Governor and that of the Naval Commander-in-Chief, is a point about which I have not made up my mind, and which, I think, is one for discussion in the Cabinet; but in time of war the vessels should be placed in command of the Chief Naval Officer of the Station, to be employed within Australian waters, and not to be moved outside the waters of the Colony without the sanction of the Governor. The immediate advantages of this proposal would be the procurement of the most highly qualified officers and men under the best system of discipline and management, and without involving the Country in the creation and maintenance of what would be an ineffective Department for the regulation of the Service. During times of peace the first duties of the officers and crews of these ships would be to instruct the Reserves, so that these vessels would become "Naval Schools" of the highest character for the education of that portion of our youth which aspires to serve the Country as its defenders. There would be nothing to prevent the Colony possessing other vessels if it were deemed essential, flying the flag of the Colony, which vessels might be put, by the authority of the Governor, at any time, under the control of the Naval Commanding Officer. But it should be distinctly understood by the Admiralty that the Force which I venture to suggest we should obtain would be in addition to that provided by the Imperial Government for our defence in the annual vote for Her Majesty's Navy. I now come to the class of vessels which, after careful consideration, and, as I have already said, after long interviews with those most capable of advising, I would recommend to the Cabinet. I would suggest the procurement of two of the kinds of vessels known as, I am informed, "Improved Scouts," which vessels should carry four 6-inch breech-loading guns, two ahead and two astern, with six torpedo tubes, and having at least the minimum speed of 16 knots. These vessels can be got at about £80,000 each. It would be necessary that one of them should be in commission; the other one would have a crew of one-third, and could be used as a "training ship," and could be fully manned at any time from the Reserves. These vessels fully manned would require about 160 men each; but as one only would be in commission, the number of men required would be a little over 200. In addition to these vessels, four first-class torpedo boats, to supplement local defence and to be employed wherever necessary, would be required. These torpedo boats could be obtained for a little less than £20,000 each. In the opinion of those whose advice, under these circumstances, is the most valuable, we should have as effectually provided for our defence by the adoption of this arrangement as we are capable of doing. We should have secured the best class of vessels, more closely identified ourselves with the Imperial Navy, and, I feel sure, should attain the object we have in view, at very much less cost to the Country than if we acted independently of the Naval Authorities, and procured vessels to be manned in the Colonies and directed by the Government. If the Cabinet is disposed to take this view, I think immediate steps ought to be taken to ascertain whether the Admiralty would be disposed to give their assent to such proposals as I have indicated; and, in the event of a satisfactory answer being obtained, I think immediate steps ought to be taken to carry out this policy. There is another point on which I would like to take the opinion of the Cabinet, and that is, whether, in such a matter as this, we should not intimate to neighbouring Colonies what we propose to do; for there can be no question that if a similar course to that which I suggest were adopted by the other Australian Colonies, we should have made provision for so formidable a Force which, under critical circumstances, could be collected and directed under one head, and thus diminish alarm concerning foreign aggression.

Memorandum by The Premier, New Zealand, on Naval Defence.

Memorandum for His Excellency the Governor.

MINISTERS have the honor to represent to His Excellency that, as an immediate prospect of war seems at an end, now is a convenient time for considering dispassionately the subject of the future naval defence of the Colony.

His Excellency is aware that, during the time that war seemed imminent, they felt it their duty to strongly recommend to the Admiral commanding on the Station the claim of the Colony to the presence of at least one ship of war on the coast. The Admiral, however, although he assured His Excellency that the defence of New Zealand was regarded by him as of the utmost importance, stated that he was unable to comply with their request. Bearing in mind the infrequency of visits of Her Majesty's ships to New Zealand during the last few years, Ministers cannot regard this state of things as satisfactory; and consider that the present affords a favourable opportunity for arriving at an understanding on the subject.

It has been publicly stated that the Admiral has made official proposals to the Government of some of the Australian Colonies concerning the organization of a Colonial Navy. His not informing this Colony of the nature of his proposal may possibly have arisen from a belief that New Zealand requires distinct treatment. Ministers are inclined to concur in this view. Years ago the Colony was given to understand that, when the fleet in this part of the world became an Admiral's Command, a section of it, under the charge of a senior naval officer, would be assigned to New Zealand.

Ministers are strongly of opinion that such a course would at once be more satisfactory and economical, for the eastern islands of the Pacific could be dealt with advantageously and cheaply by the same section of the Command, and they desire to move His Excellency to consult with the Admiral and the Admiralty on the subject. Ministers would be willing to recommend Parliament to favourably consider arrangements by which the Colony would contribute equitably to the cost of its naval defence. They have already, as your Excellency is aware, proposed to arrange for one vessel; but they feel that if the Colony provided for the maintenance of a vessel of war it should be in connection with a section of the fleet on the Station told off to specially attend to New Zealand and the islands.

Ministers rely that His Excellency will exonerate them from any desire to evade the responsibilities properly belonging to the Colony as a part of the Empire. They do not consider that, unless in very grave emergency, they should act without the approbation of Parliament. His Excellency is aware that it was their intention, when Parliament met, to recommend to its approval their offering a force of one thousand well-trained men to the Imperial Government in the event of war with Russia for service in any part of the world. They are of opinion that such a proposal would have been considered by the Parliament of this Colony with enthusiastic loyalty. Ministers refer to this intention as showing that during the late period of anxiety they did not take a narrow view of the responsibilities of the Colony to the Empire, whilst attending to the immediate and urgent requirements of the Colony's own defence.

(Proposed contribution by New Zealand towards providing cruisers.)

Extracts from letters and memoranda from New Zealand.

- (a.) On the 6th May, 1885, a proposal was made through Sir F. Dillon Bell, the Agent-General in London, to the Secretary of State for the Colonies, and by him transmitted to the Admiralty on the 13th May, 1885, for New Zealand to pay interest on the cost of an armoured cruiser of the "Esmeralda" type, to be stationed in New Zealand, and to pay two-thirds of the cost of her maintenance.

Extract from a memorandum from Ministers, New Zealand to His Excellency the Governor.

August 14, 1885.

- (b.) "Ministers consider that they are doing their duty in the matter of local defences, by offering to pay a certain amount for one or two cruisers of the "Esmeralda" type, and by providing shore batteries at the chief ports. They do not, however, mean to imply by doing so that these should form the only defences of New Zealand, but regard them as aids to the Australian Squadron; and consider that by these measures (which must, to a great extent, ensure to the benefit of all the Australian Colonies), and by contributing towards the expenses of New Guinea, they have given proof of the readiness of New Zealand to co-operate with the other Colonies in matters that are for the benefit of all."

Memorandum by the Hon. Robert Stout, Premier, New Zealand, on Naval Defence.

[Confidential.]

Memorandum for His Excellency the Governor.

MINISTERS had the honor, on the 25th May, to forward to His Excellency a memorandum relating to the naval defence of New Zealand.

Ministers have read the correspondence between His Excellency the Governor of Victoria and His Excellency Rear-Admiral Tryon, C.B., referring to the naval defence of the Australian Colonies, which, at the request of the Admiral, was shown to them by your Excellency. It would appear that this correspondence was begun by His Excellency the Governor of Victoria drawing the attention of the Admiral to certain points relating to the naval defence of the Colony of Victoria. The points to which His Excellency especially drew attention were—

1. The importance of having a certain number of vessels which could not be withdrawn from Australian waters;
2. That these vessels should be the best of their several classes;
3. That the officers and men should be acquainted with and well drilled in the knowledge of modern gunnery and torpedo practice;
4. That during war, while placed under the command of the senior naval officer on the station, their first duty should be for the protection of the Australian Colonies.

His Excellency the Governor of Victoria also requested the Admiral's opinion on the "extent and character of the naval defence which it may be advisable to provide for the external security" of the Colony of Victoria and the other Australasian Colonies. He also asked the Admiral's views on certain questions of defences of parts of Victoria.

In the memorandum which the Admiral has furnished as a reply to the questions put to him, the question of defence may be classed under four heads:—

1. A land defence, including trained men and batteries;
2. A local sea defence, including harbour-defence vessels, Whitehead torpedo boats, batteries, mines, &c.;
3. A sea-going colonial fleet, consisting of six "cruiser-catchers" or "Scouts" and eight torpedo boats, sea-going, say of 150 tons; and
4. The aid from the Imperial navy.

So far as appears from the memorandum, the position that New Zealand is to occupy in the scheme of defence is only incidentally alluded to.

While there are many observations in the memorandum that are of service to New Zealand in dealing with the question of local defence, Ministers are of opinion that the exact position that New Zealand should take in providing for local naval defence is not defined, and they feel that it would be impossible, from the memorandum, to submit any proposals to Parliament to deal with the subject.

Ministers at once admit that, from an Imperial point of view, the defences of New Zealand and Australia may be considered as bound up together. They are of opinion, however, that New Zealand is so exceptionally exceptionally situated, being so distant from Australia that no system of naval defence would be complete which did not make New Zealand the head-quarters of a section of the Australasian fleet. This was pointed out in the previous memorandum of the Ministers, and they do not require to urge it further.

As to the sea-going colonial fleet, to consist of six cruiser-catchers and eight torpedo-boats, Ministers have no information as to how these are to be located, nor how worked. A torpedo-boat of 150 tons, stationed in any of the Australian ports, could be of no service to New Zealand, save, perhaps, in attacking vessels that might, if not attacked, proceed to this Colony. As to the "cruiser-catchers," these, no doubt, would be of some service to New Zealand, wherever located, as they would be cruising in the Pacific on the look-out for enemy's ships.

His Excellency is aware that Ministers submitted a proposition to the Admiralty, bearing date the 28th March last, for the location of a cruiser of the "Esmeralda" type on the shores of New Zealand, but as yet they have not had the Admiralty's decision on their proposal.

That proposal fits in with the views expressed by the Admiral. Ministers foresaw the advantages, so ably described by the Admiral, of having the ship manned and under the control of the Admiralty. The ship being at the disposition, as far as concerns movements from one part of the coast to another and to the Eastern Pacific Islands, of the Governor-in-Council during times of peace, does not affect the general question; nor is there any divergence of principle, in the proposal of how payment is to be made, between Ministers' proposals and those of the Admiral. Ministers thought it better that the Colony should not purchase the vessel, but merely pay interest on the cost, as the type of suitable vessels changes so often, and the Colony could not always be buying new vessels, whilst the Admiralty can find employment for vessels that are not quite up to the most modern requirements. Ministers also proposed that some portion of the annual cost of the vessel should be borne by the Imperial Government; but, again, that is a matter of detail; and substantially it may be taken that, so far as concerns New Zealand being willing to maintain a vessel under the condition of Imperial management, Ministers have already shown themselves favourable to the proposal.

But the Admiral himself designs that each colonial vessel should be an adjunct to Her Majesty's vessels on the station; their use, in fact, he specially shows, is as an adjunct. Ministers therefore hope that the Admiral will see that the distance from Australia makes the request previously referred to reasonable—that a portion of the fleet, under a senior naval officer, should have its head-quarters at New Zealand, to serve that Colony and the Eastern Islands. The Admiral's representations to that effect would greatly promote the scheme described in his correspondence with Sir Henry Loch.

Ministers venture to point out that it has been authoritatively stated that cruisers being able to steam at full speed only up to 16½ knots would be of little service in attacking some of the vessels that are now constructed and afloat. This, however, is a matter on which the Admiralty are better able to express an opinion than Ministers.

What Ministers would desire would be a full statement of (1) what is requisite for the naval defence of the Colony; (2) to what extent we may look for Imperial aid; (3) how and what arrangement could be made between the Imperial Government, the Australian Colonies, and New Zealand; (4) if cruisers are granted, in what manner they are generally to be located and controlled both in times of peace and war. They would feel much obliged if they could obtain further information concerning these points.

There is one point in the correspondence which has already received the attention of Ministers, namely, that referring to all the Colonies uniting to pay losses sustained at any spot owing to the resistance of the inhabitants. Ministers received a communication from the Hon. W. B. Dalley, Colonial Secretary of New South Wales, on that subject, as follows:—

"I have received a letter from the Admiral, Commander-in-Chief of this station, in which he points out that one of the most effectual means of defence would be an united determination on the part of all the Australian Colonies to resist all concessions to an enemy, and refuse under any circumstances all supplies of coal. As demands might and probably would be made in places comparatively unprotected, he suggests that there should be an united indemnification of such places from loss by injuries inflicted upon them in consequence of their refusal to obey requisitions; that owners and agents of coal-laden vessels should agree to order their destruction rather than permit their falling into the hands of an enemy. All losses to be made good by the united Governments. His letter, my reply, and a minute which I have based upon it, expressing our entire agreement in his suggestion, and our preparedness to bear our proportionate share of any such expenditure, are too long to forward you by telegram. I shall send them by mail. Meanwhile I should like to know how you view the proposal. The very fact of our agreement to stand by each other against any concessions would, it is conceived, be a heavy discouragement to an enemy operating so far from his base under such hopeless circumstances."

And to this a reply was sent as follows by the Premier:—

"I have to apologize for the delay in answering Mr. Dalley's telegram of the 6th instant. We are favourably disposed to your proposal, but we think the condition of resistance should not be included. We may be sure that whenever resistance is feasible or expedient it will be displayed in all the Colonies, and in every part, to the full extent courage and patriotism would justify. We think it would be better the Colonies should agree to joint liability for all damages caused by the enemy on the basis of a population contribution. Will you consider this modification, and state also how you would propose the assent of the several Parliaments should be given?"

Ministers have not had as yet any reply to this communication, but they are willing, on the lines mentioned by them in their telegram, to recommend Parliament to enter into an arrangement with the other Colonies of Australasia.

In conclusion, Ministers would add that they feel obliged to the Admiral for forwarding his very able memorandum on the subject of defences for their perusal and consideration, and they hope that without delay the further information they require may be communicated to them so that they may be able to submit some definite proposals to Parliament.

ROBERT STOUT.

(Memorandum by the Hon. S. W. Griffith, Premier of Queensland, on Naval Defence of the Colonies.)

Colonial Secretary's Office, Brisbane, 1st June, 1885.

MEMORANDUM.

Recent events have impressed upon the Governments of all the Australasian Colonies the importance of making adequate provision for naval as well as land defence, and have, I think, indicated with tolerable clearness the defects inherent in the systems at present adopted. Each of the Colonies has made such preparations as it could for defending its coasts—some have provided gun-boats, torpedo-boats, and other floating defences, and all have done their best with regard to their land defences. But so far as regards dealing with a hostile squadron in Australian waters, we have at present to rely entirely upon such ships as the Imperial Government are able to detach for this station. And it is manifest that the ships at present on the station are insufficient both in number and quality to afford such offensive and defensive force as a community of over 3,000,000 persons, with wealth far beyond that possessed by a similar number in most other parts of the world, ought to have at its command.

I use the word "community" because although for many purposes the several Colonies are and are likely to remain separate, yet from many points of view we are one, and certainly to this extent—that the effect of a hostile attack, or of the presence of an enemy's fleet in our waters, would indisputably be felt by all alike.

Whatever views may be entertained in the abstract as to the duty of the Mother Country to maintain a Naval Force on the Australian Station sufficiently strong to destroy any hostile squadron that could reasonably be expected to attack us, and to protect the merchant shipping in Australian waters, there is, I think, every reason to suppose that until the Colonies take the matter to some extent in their own hands, that degree of security will not be attained which we should like to feel, and which with our geographical position and wealth, we are alike entitled to expect and bound to insist upon. No nation of a population and importance equal to that of Australasia has secured or can hope to be able to secure immunity from attack without some substantial sacrifice of money for defence purposes, which may be regarded as expended by way of insurance. And while I maintain that it is in accordance both with the duty of the Imperial Government and with the interests of the Empire, of which Australasia is an integral part, that the Admiralty should maintain a powerful detachment of the Imperial Navy in the Australian Seas, I submit that it is our duty, and should be our pride as self-governing countries, to establish and maintain side by side with an auxiliary squadron specially adapted for the peculiar duties required on this Station. The question of expense I do not propose to deal with; but assume that if the desirableness of the end in view be admitted, the same spirit which has lately been displayed in the several Colonies, and most notably in New South Wales, would willingly inspire the Legislatures to make all reasonable provision necessary for the purpose.

How, then, can the work be done? It cannot be done satisfactorily by the Colonies individually. Supposing, for example, that each of the larger Colonies maintained at its own expense, and as its own property, a fast and powerful cruiser under the orders of the Admiral commanding the Station, the sense of individual proprietorship would be so strong that, in the event of war, a feeling would arise not altogether rational, I admit, but I think too strong to be neglected, that that ship should be specially available for the defence of the Colony which owned it. Yet it is manifest that the best course to be adopted for the defence of any one Colony might be to concentrate all available force at a distance from it. The decision of such questions must be left to some independent, competent, and trusted authority, who would naturally be the Admiral commanding the Station.

Another grave objection to separate action would be the greater difficulty of securing a constant succession of officers and men. This is, I suppose, admitted by everyone to be an object of the greatest practical importance, from many points of view, upon which it is unnecessary to enlarge. In the case of united action this difficulty would be diminished, and might be entirely overcome by satisfactory arrangements which could not be so readily made in the case of separate action.

If, then, individual action would not satisfactorily secure the desired result, the other alternative is combined action on the part of all the Colonies. I can see no difficulty in the conclusion of an agreement for this purpose amongst the Australasian Colonies if the several Governments apply themselves to the matter with a desire to arrive at a satisfactory conclusion, and I think that the suggestions contained in Admiral Tryon's Confidential Memorandum of 27th March, addressed to Sir Henry Loch, the Governor of Victoria, form an admirable basis for such an agreement.

I therefore submit the following proposals for consideration:—

1. That a fleet of six fast cruisers be raised and maintained at the joint expense of the Australasian Colonies in proportion to their population. If New Zealand declines to join, the number to be reduced to four.
2. The ships to be built at the joint expense of the Colonies in the same proportions—the type and armament being agreed to by the Admiralty and the Colonial Governments.
3. The ships to be employed solely for the defence of the Australasian coasts and protection of British interests in Australasian waters, unless with the joint consent of all the Australasian Governments.
4. The ships to be commissioned and re-commissioned in all respects as other ships in Her Majesty's Navy, of which they would form an integral part, to fly the White Ensign (with a distinguishing badge or flag to be devised for the purpose), and to be under the command of the Admiral commanding the Australian Station.
5. A sufficient number of sea-going torpedo boats to be provided on the same conditions.
6. A due regard to be paid to the admission of Australian boys as cadets on the ships of the Australian Fleet. This should be the subject of express stipulation with the Imperial Government.
7. An Australian Arsenal and Dockyard to be established and maintained at the like joint expense. Having regard to the natural advantages of the Harbour of Port Jackson and its nearness to the best supplies of coal, I suggest that the Arsenal should be established in that harbour.

8. A Permanent Appropriation Act to be passed in each Colony providing the necessary funds to give effect to these proposals—the Act to be in force for ten years, except by the mutual consent of all the Governments, or of all but two, and, in that case, until after one year's notice to the dissenting Governments.
9. A Commission consisting of three members, each being a member of a Government of one of the Colonies, to be appointed to represent the several Colonies, and supervise the expenditure in conjunction with the Admiral.
10. In time of profound and assured peace one or more of the ships to be put out of commission or employed on other services to be agreed to.

In these proposals I have, as will be observed, followed to a large extent Admiral Tryon's suggestions, and I have taken this opportunity and adopted this mode of bringing the matter under notice, because it seems evident that no satisfactory action can be taken until some concrete proposal, open to assent or dissent, and to discussion, is put forward, and because it appears to me of urgent importance that the opinions of the several Colonies should be known on the subject as soon as possible, so that if by any unhappy mischance common action should be found impracticable the Colonies may, nevertheless, individually adopt the best measures that are open to them for the protection as well of the general interests of Australasia as of their own.

It may perhaps be expedient to hold a Conference of representatives of the several Governments to discuss the subject before a scheme is definitely adopted.

(A Minute by Hon. Sir A. Stuart, Premier, New South Wales.)

Naval Defences of the Colonies.

Colonial Secretary's Office, Sydney, 3 June, 1885.

If there is one lesson more than another which recent events have taught us, it is that we should be in a better state of preparation with regard to the defence of the whole of the Australasian Colonies, and have some recognized principles as to how far they are to be dependent upon themselves, and how far the work is to be left in the hands of the Imperial Government.

When I was lately in New Zealand I had some communication with the Premier of that Colony upon this subject, copy of which is appended hereto; and, since my return, I have had the advantage of perusing the able minute by Admiral Tryon, and of conferring with that distinguished officer upon the subject.

I entirely concur in the views set forth by him, that each Colony should undertake its own harbour defence, obtaining from England such officers as may be deemed necessary either to superintend the works, or to give practical instruction to Volunteers or others to whom the work may be entrusted. This local defence would include torpedo boats, and, where necessary, one or more gunboats or floating batteries for their protection.

With regard to the sea-going defence, the more I think of it the more I feel convinced that the wisest and most efficient policy would be to leave it entirely in the hands and under the sole control of the Imperial Government.

The objections arising from the risk of a dual control are so great as to impair the efficiency of any squadron. The Admiral on whose shoulders the direct responsibility would rest might deem it absolutely essential that at a particular juncture the whole Force should be at his disposal; and although the local authorities would probably be much influenced by the Admiral's expressed desire, yet if they were in any way to run counter to it by declining to permit certain vessels to go out of their own jurisdiction, disastrous consequences might ensue which it would be difficult to remedy.

It appears to me, therefore, that the wisest course for these Colonies to pursue is to come to some definite understanding with the Imperial Government, as to the extent of the Imperial Naval Force which ought to be maintained in these waters, even in time of peace, or to what extent it should be increased in time of war, and offer that, in whatever degree such force shall, in its annual expenditure, exceed the force heretofore maintained, such additional expense shall be defrayed by the Colonies in proportion to their population; such payment being of course made directly to the Imperial Exchequer, thus maintaining the force under the direct payment of the Imperial authorities.

If this course be adopted, it would be a matter for consideration whether the sum stated by Lord Derby be taken as the basis of the expenditure, or whether some deduction should be made therefrom, by reason of the inclusion therein of the cost of the small fleet service chiefly maintained for the purpose of regulating and controlling the Island traffic connected with the labour question. I merely mention this as an item to be considered, but I believe that the principle involved in the main question will be held to be of much more importance than the mere saving which may be effected by the exclusion of the cost of those vessels. When, in my telegram to the Premier of New Zealand, I spoke of doubling or trebling the present squadron, I did not mean that there should be an addition made to these small vessels, nor that the number of each class of other ships was necessarily to be doubled or trebled, but rather that the additional expenditure to be borne by the Colonies should be expended in sending to the Australian Station additional vessels of the most approved class and construction.

The only point which I would urge in addition is, that the Colonies thus contributing should be allowed a certain number of nominations for cadetships in the Imperial Navy,—not with the view of their being necessarily employed in the vessels of the Australian Squadron, but rather with the view of letting the Colonies feel that the Navy is essentially an Imperial Navy, by a gradual infiltration into its ranks of Officers of colonial extraction, who had complied with the requisite tests imposed upon applicants from the Mother-country.

Personally I would hope that such an arrangement might be carried on for all time; but as the relations between the Mother-country and the Colonies, especially in the question of federation, may undergo gradual changes in the course of years, it would be prudent to place a limit upon any arrangement now made, with the view of bringing it under periodical review. This limit, however, should not be less than ten years, which I am glad to see is the shortest period suggested in Rear Admiral Tryon's memorandum of 27th March.

In

In estimating the additional cost which is to be borne by the Colonies, I feel confident that the Colonies would wish that there should be taken into consideration the present values of deferred payments, pensions, or retiring allowances which the Imperial Government may be liable for to the officers and crews of such vessels at any deferred period, even although they may not have to pay them during the time of service of such vessels on the Australian Station.

I notice that the New Zealand Premier considers that some provision should be made for more frequent visits of ships of Her Majesty's Navy than has hitherto been the case. Although it may be difficult to lay down any precise times for such visits or their duration, yet the suggestion is one that is well worthy of consideration by the Imperial authorities,—not only with regard to New Zealand, but other places, for it would be an unwise policy to allow a feeling to grow up in any of the Colonies that they were less worthy of receiving visits from ships of Her Majesty's Navy than from those of other nations.

I would urge specially for the consideration of the Colonies, that the advantage of having an increase to the Imperial Squadron, in its fullest sense, instead of having in any degree a Colonial Navy, would be that we would have the benefit of officers and men specially trained for the work, with an experience gathered in all parts of the world, and of every improvement which naval science and skill can command both in ships and in other armament.

Whatever decision is arrived at as to the amount of contribution to be paid by the various Colonies should be embodied in Statutes, and not left subject to annual votes.

WE have offered to pay interest on construction of one or two ironclads, "Emeralda's" class, and two-thirds maintenance, but Imperial Government has not yet replied. I will be glad to learn your views.

Telegram from Premier of New South Wales to Premier, New Zealand.

Waiwera, 16 April, 1885.

My views are, that separate Colonial Navies or even a combined Colonial Navy, which seems to be Victoria's idea, or fragmentary Imperial Navies designed for defence of individual Colonies, which seems to be indicated by your offer, never can be very efficient; for in event of war the enemy has to be looked for on the high seas, where she will be trying to cripple our commerce, rather than be waited for in ports, which she will only attack if she finds her path over the seas unmolested. It seems essential, therefore, that the entire seagoing naval force be placed under one control, and thus, while vulnerable points be carefully watched, the main fleet be directed towards the enemy's rendezvous or cruising-ground. The best way of attaining this would be by the Colonies unitedly inviting Imperial Government to double, or even, if necessary, treble Australian squadron as promptly as possible, the Colonies defraying the annual additional expenditure involved. Lord Derby stated, in one of his despatches, that the squadron at present cost, I think (but I am without any papers to refer to), one hundred and seventy thousand annually. Duplication of squadron would mean about sixty pounds per thousand population, being less than cost of establishing anything like an efficient local Navy. We would also have the advantage of periodical changes of officers, skilled in every new development of warlike inventions and practices. Each Colony would have its own harbour defences, torpedo launches, and gun-boats, to protect the same; but unity of action by the fleet would, I think, be best secured by the plan suggested.

THANKS for telegram. I shall submit same to Cabinet, and afterwards reply. I think there is a good deal to be said for your suggestions.

Wellington, 3 May, 1885.

CABINET considered your suggestion. We cannot without consulting Parliament come to any decision that would bind the Colony. Would you put your suggestion into formal shape, so that we can submit to Parliament. At present we do not know Imperial views. We may add that we believe no proposal would be satisfactory to our Parliament which did not provide for the presence of one or more of the men-of-war constantly or frequently on our coast. During the past five years we have only had fourteen visits from English men-of-war, whilst we have had a larger number from foreign war vessels.

Circular letter from the Admiral to all Governors as to Colonial Naval Defence.

My Lord,

H.M.S. "Nelson," Auckland, 24 December, 1885.

I am directed by the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty to enter into direct communication with your Excellency, with the view of obtaining a consideration of questions connected with the naval forces on this important station.

2. Your Excellency is aware that many communications have passed on this subject of late years between the several Colonies and Secretary of State for the Colonies, and the Admiralty; and now my Lords inform me that they consider it to be a preferable course to instruct me, being on the spot, with the duty of representing them in this matter, with the view to assist in obtaining a practical solution of this much discussed question.

3. The instructions seem to me to virtually place my services much at the disposal of these great Colonies for the above-named purpose.

4. I feel I need hardly tell your Excellency, for I trust I have already assured you, that I shall be very proud if I find I am able to assist in obtaining a solution to such an important subject, which has for an object the giving to these great Colonies a more perfect defence, and with it that sense of security which is the handmaid of increasing prosperity.

5.

5. I gather from previous letters and minutes, written by high authorities within these Colonies, the desire, so far as it has been expressed, tends in the direction—

- (a) That the purely local naval defence force, which has already been created with so much spirit in several Colonies at their own instance, shall remain much on the footing that has been already established.
- (b) That any sea-going vessels that may be provided, equipped and maintained at the cost of the Colonies, should be manned by the Admiralty, and be placed in every respect on the same status as are Her Majesty's vessels at present belonging to this station, including the condition that the officers and men should be changed from time to time, so as to secure, both as to officers and men, that the instruction given in naval establishments at home, and also that the experience gained in the world at large, as now obtained from H.M. fleet, may be enjoyed by all.
- (c) That the vessels provided at the cost of the Colonies should be retained within the limits of the Australasian seas.
- (d) That no reduction of the forces now on the station shall take place consequent on the addition of any force made at the cost of the Colonies.
- (e) That the entire cost of these vessels will be borne by the Colonies.
- (f) That an increased number of cadetships shall be given to the Colonies.
- (g) That during a time of peace, these vessels should be employed in the same way as are other vessels of war on this station.
- (h) That any arrangement made shall be for a period of years—ten has been suggested.

6. I am authorized by my Lords to say that they are prepared to enter cordially into any such scheme.

7. After some such scheme as that indicated has been arranged, the question that will next arise for consideration will be:—The nature and number of vessels which should be provided, and the cost of construction, of manning, and of maintenance.

In the opinion of the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty, the most suitable vessels for the proposed service are vessels of the "Archer" class, and also fast sea-going torpedo vessels.

The "Archer" is a vessel of 1,630 tons displacement, will steam 17 knots, and be armed with six 6-inch B.L.R. guns, and would also carry torpedoes.

Ten of these vessels have been already ordered for the Navy.

The recently designed fast torpedo boats have a displacement of 430 tons, steam 19 knots, and will be armed with three tubes for Whitehead torpedoes, with one 3-inch B.L.R. gun, four quick-firing and three Por., and two machine guns.

As to the number to be provided, this is naturally a matter that is dependent in a great measure on the funds that are disposable for the purpose; but, in their Lordships' opinion, five "Archers" and two sea-going torpedo vessels in a time of war would, with the squadron on the station, give a very fair offensive and defensive protection.

As to cost:—

The cost of an "Archer" complete is approximately £105,230; of a torpedo vessel, £53,300. In each case the cost of armament, ammunition, and torpedoes is included. * See foot-note for revised estimate.

Cost of maintenance, provisions, wages, &c.—This will depend on the classes of vessels decided on, and on the numbers that will be kept completely manned. The cost may be gauged through that of H.M.S. "Miranda", a vessel at present serving on this station.

The cost of the "Miranda", with a crew of 139 officers and men, on account of provisions, wages, and ultimate liability for pension or deferred pay to men is, I estimate, £12,180 per annum. To this must be added cost of coal and stores, say £1,400. There will also be a further charge on account of docking and incidental expenses, which would not be considerable.

The cost of an "Archer" under the above heading of expenses would exceed that of a "Miranda"; that of a torpedo vessel would be very much less.

The exchange of crews every three years of five "Archers" and two torpedo vessels would incur an annual charge of £3,300. But as probably only some of the "Archer" class vessels need be kept in commission, and the torpedo vessels would probably be kept with reduced crews and be held in reserve, in such case the cost of maintenance would be greatly decreased.

8. Their Lordships contemplate that the several Colonies will continue to arrange for local defence, and that after joint consideration and decision as to any sea-going vessels of war they may desire to add to the squadron on the station, that such vessels should not be subject to any divided responsibility as to their movements within the Australasian waters; but that they, in common with the squadron on the station—of which, indeed, they would form a part—should be solely and entirely under one responsible head; and I am not aware that this view differs from those which I have been led to believe prevail within the Colonies with those who have previously considered and written on the subject. Should it not be the desire of the Colonies to renew any arrangement now made, at the end of the named period (ten years) it would come to an end, and the vessels would become the property of the Colonies.

9. I shall be glad to place my services at the disposal of your Excellency and of your Government, in the hope of being able to assist in arriving at a practical result to a question of so much importance to the Colonies and to the Nation; and I shall be glad to enter into any arrangement to meet your Excellency, or any members of your Government, at some central place, at such a time as may be most convenient and your Excellency may be able to arrange, and to give any information in my power.

10. I have had the honor to address similar communications to their Excellencies the Governors of New Zealand, Queensland, South Australia, Tasmania, Victoria, and Western Australia.

I have the honor to be, my Lord,

Your Excellency's most obedient servant,

G. TRYON,

Rear-Admiral and Commander-in-Chief.

Copy of telegram received the 25th April, 1886.—From Admiralty, London, to Admiral Tryon, Sydney.

REVISED ESTIMATE:—Original Cost: Archer, £106,486; Torpedo-catcher, £46,729. Annual Maintenance: Archer, £25,456; Torpedo-catcher, £11,029. Details by mail thirtieth.

Memorandum by Honorable Adye Douglas, Premier, Tasmania.—Views on Naval Defences.

Premier's Office, Hobart, 1st March, 1886.

Memorandum for His Excellency the Governor.

THE Premier has the honor to return herewith the communication which Rear-Admiral Tryon addressed to your Excellency on the 24th December last, in common with the Governors of the other Australasian Colonies, on the subject of the Naval Defences of these seas.

Your Excellency's advisers have given this important matter their careful consideration. Those portions of the despatch referred to which appear to call for special mention are the sub-sections A., B., C., D., E., F., G., and H. of paragraph 5.

Sub-section A.—Ministers concur in Admiral Tryon's suggestion that the Local Naval Defence Force shall remain on the same footing as at present.

B.—Ministers are of the opinion that any sea-going vessels that may be provided, equipped, or maintained at the cost of the Colonies should be officered and manned by the Admiralty, this being apparently the only satisfactory way of dealing with a Colonial Naval Force.

C.—Ministers consider that any vessels provided at the cost of the Colonies should be retained within the limits of the Australasian seas.

D.—Ministers concur in the terms of this sub-section, that no reduction of Her Majesty's Naval Forces now on this station shall take place consequent on the addition of any Force made at the cost of the Colonies.

E.—With reference to the entire cost of the vessels of which the Australasian Fleet would be composed being borne by the Colonies, Ministers cannot concur. It is their opinion that the Colonies generally would prefer that the original cost of ships and their equipment should be defrayed by the Imperial Government; that each Colony should pay its fair share, in proportion to population, of the interest on this outlay, together with an amount sufficient to cover a sinking fund, which would pay for replacing such vessels and for other necessary expenditure.

This method would enable the Imperial Government to give to the Colonies the most modern and effective description of vessels and armament, while, at the same time, the Colonies would furnish the ways and means for so doing.

F., G., and H.—Ministers fully concur in the terms of these sub-sections, as to an increased number of cadetships for the Colonies, the employment of vessels during times of peace, and the term of years for which an arrangement of this nature should be made.

As the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty are prepared to enter into such a scheme, it appears to Ministers that the difference of opinion which they express with regard to sub-section E need not prevent a satisfactory arrangement being arrived at, beneficial alike to the Mother Country and the Colonies.

As to the nature of the Defences, and the class of vessels to be employed for the Colonial service, your Ministers are of opinion that these are matters which, like the question of command, must be left to the Imperial Naval authorities to determine.

Having expressed our views on the points suggested, the question arises as to the expense of the maintenance of this Defence Force, and in considering this it is necessary to take into consideration the cost of Defences for Thursday Island and King George's Sound.

Assuming that the Colonies have to pay according to population, the proportion to be borne by this Colony will be about £7,000 a year.

Already the Local Defences cost about £20,000 a year, and this sum must be annually increased, although probably not to any considerable amount, in completing the fortifications, &c., &c. Your Excellency's advisers doubt very much if Parliament would sanction so large an outlay; but if the other Australasian Colonies concur in the proposals, Ministers will be prepared to consider the question of bringing the subject practically before Parliament.

Letter from His Excellency the Governor of Western Australia to The Admiral.—Views on Colonial Naval Defence.

Sir. Government Cottage, Rottneet Island, 24th February, 1886.

I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your Excellency's letter of the 24th of December last, respecting the arrangements to be made for the more complete naval defence of the Australasian Colonies.

2. I exceedingly regret that my duties in Western Australia will not permit me to absent myself from my post for the purpose of attending the conference on this important subject, arranged, as I understand, to be held shortly in Melbourne.

3. I am therefore under the necessity of offering in writing the remarks which this Government has to make on the scheme of naval defence indicated in your Excellency's letter.

4. I cannot think that any more suitable arrangements could be decided on than those which are suggested. It is only on one point that I would venture to offer some observations.

5. It is proposed that the sea-going vessels (five "Archers" and two Torpedo vessels) shall be built and equipped at the cost of the several Colonies, and shall be jointly owned by the Colonies.

6. It has suggested itself to me that it might be a better and simpler arrangement for the Imperial Government to provide the special addition to the station squadron, considered from time to time to be necessary, the Colonies merely paying to the Imperial Government an annual subsidy to cover the extra charge involved.

7. An analogous course to this has been followed when military forces have been stationed in a colony for Colonial purposes. Why should it not be adopted in respect of a naval force similarly stationed?

8. The annual sum charged by the Imperial Government should, of course, cover interest on the capital outlay, as well as depreciation, in addition to the charges mentioned in your Excellency's letter.

9. There appears to me to be a certain disadvantage and difficulty in half-a-dozen Colonies becoming the joint owners of a number of war vessels, under an arrangement with the Imperial Government, for a limited term of years, as to the manning and administration of the vessels.

10. It might be desirable to alter the type of one or more of the ships, and in this, and other contingencies which can be easily imagined, the fact that the Colonial vessels could not be removed from these waters without the consent of six or seven Governments, might hamper the arrangements.

11. If the five "Archers" mentioned in your Excellency's letter would not require to be kept in commission in time of peace, and if peace should be of long duration, some of the vessels might be laid up until they deteriorated or became obsolete, without ever having been used.

12. Since their foundation a century ago, these Colonies have not been disturbed by an enemy. It is quite possible that the proposed Colonial sea-going vessels may see no active service until, owing to the progress of science or other causes, they are of no use for active service.

13. Bearing these, and other contingencies in mind, would it not be better for the Mother Country to strengthen the Australian Squadron now and from time to time as might be agreed upon for the security of this part of the Empire, the Colonies making such money-payment to the Imperial Government as would cover the cost of the additional vessels.

14. In other words, as before stated, why should not the system heretofore pursued when military protection was required by the Colonies be adopted now that naval protection is required?

15. From the figures given by your Excellency, I roughly gather that the scheme indicated in your letter would entail on the Colonies a first cost of about £635,000. The annual charge would appear to be, on the war footing, somewhere about £115,000; on the peace footing, somewhere about £75,000.

16. Supposing that, under the arrangement I suggest, an annual subsidy of £180,000 in war time, and £90,000 in peace time, were paid by the Colonies to the Imperial Government. Would not the Imperial Government, for such consideration, be justified in raising the Australian Squadron to the extra strength indicated by your Excellency, and would not the arrangement be more elastic and leave greater freedom of action on both sides?

17. It is presumed that any payment required to be made by the different Colonies would be apportioned on the basis of population.

18. Each contributing Colony would, of course, desire to see Her Majesty's ships in its waters as frequently as possible. To avoid future difficulties, perhaps some understanding or arrangement on this head would be expedient.

19. I could not finally pledge this Government to any payment without the previous approval of the Legislature.

20. It is possible that a doubt may arise whether the limited means and lesser wealth of Western Australia render it necessary that this Colony should pay for naval protection extra to that afforded by the present Imperial Squadron. I myself, however, would always be in favour of Western Australia entering into partnership with the greater Colonies of the Continent in any scheme of the kind now proposed, so far as our means will allow.

21. Requesting your Excellency to lay this letter before the Conference on Naval Defence.

From His Excellency the Governor of New Zealand to Admiral Tryon, enclosing a memorandum by Ministers on Naval Defence; also a note as to the nature of the reply sent.

(Received on the second day of the meeting, 27th April, 1886.)

Sir,

Government House, Auckland, 19 April, 1886.

With reference to your letter of the 24th of December last, relating to Naval Defences, and to the meeting that took place at Government House during your recent visit to New Zealand, when you discussed the question with myself and some of my Ministers, I have the honor to forward herewith copies of a memorandum which I have just received from my Ministers on the subject.

I shall feel obliged if you will communicate to me any observations which you may desire to offer on the proposals contained therein.

I have &c.,

WM. F. DRUMMOND JERVOIS.

Memorandum for His Excellency.

MINISTERS have the honor to lay before His Excellency the conclusions at which they have arrived upon the subject of naval defences, after considering the various papers placed before them, including the précis of what took place at the interview which they had with the Governor and the Admiral.

2. During the time when war with Russia seemed imminent, they suggested that a first-class cruiser of the "Esmeralda" type should be specially stationed in New Zealand waters, to form part of the squadron under Rear-Admiral Tryon, but her disposition in New Zealand waters to be controlled by the Governor with the advice of his Ministers, as it would be especially desirable for her to be available for coast surveys, and for the training of Colonial forces on shore. With regard to the cost, the Government proposed to pay annually 3½ per cent. on the original cost, and also for all repairs while stationed in the Colony; further, that the Colony would also pay two-thirds of the total expense of the crew and maintenance of the ship.

3. The Admiralty has, through the Admiral, in that officer's letter of the 24th December, 1885, made what may be termed counter-proposals; and they may be shortly stated as follows:—

(a) That the purely local naval defence force which has already been created with so much spirit in several Colonies at their own instance, shall remain much on the footing that has been already established.

(b) That any sea-going vessels that may be provided, equipped, and maintained at the cost of the Colonies should be manned by the Admiralty, and be placed in every respect on the same footing as are Her Majesty's vessels at present belonging to the station, &c.

- (c) That the vessels provided at the cost of the Colonies should be retained within the limits of the Australasian seas.
- (d) That no reduction of the forces now on the Station shall take place consequent on the addition of any force made at the cost of the Colonies.
- (e) That the entire cost of these vessels will be borne by the Colonies.
- (f) That an increased number of cadetships shall be given to the Colonies.
- (g) That during a time of peace these vessels should be employed in the same way as are other vessels of war on the Station.
- (h) That any arrangement made shall be for a period of years—ten has been suggested.

That it is contemplated the several Colonies will still continue to arrange for local defence, and that any sea-going vessels of war it might be desired to add to the squadron on the station should not be subject to any divided responsibility as to their movements within Australasian waters, but they should form part of the squadron, and be solely and entirely under one responsible head.

4. The main points of difference between the suggestions formerly made by Ministers and those submitted by the Admiral are—

- (1) Whether New Zealand is to join the other Colonies in providing what may be termed an Australasian fleet, or whether New Zealand is herself to make arrangements with the Admiralty independently of the other Australian Colonies.
- (2) Whether the ships are to be deemed to belong to the Colonies, or whether the Colonies are merely to pay a certain amount for interest and sinking fund, the Admiralty, if need be, changing the vessels.

5. Ministers think that these proposals, though apparently divergent, may easily be reconciled. They are of opinion that the circumstances of New Zealand, and its distance from Australia, make the question of its naval defence distinct from that of the defence of the Australian Continent; and they believe that it is, therefore, expedient that the arrangement to be made should be a direct one between the Colony and the Mother-country.

6. Ministers consider that the Colony would be willing to contribute an annual payment to the Imperial Exchequer, say, of £20,000, to be expended in strengthening the naval defence of New Zealand.

7. In time of war the extra ships would, of course, be at the absolute discretion of the Admiral, to be placed in such a position as the authorities consider most suitable for the defence of the shipping and ports. Ministers recognize the force of the observation of Admiral Tryon that the best defence of New Zealand might, in time of war, be far distant from her shores.

8. In time of peace, however, Ministers consider that some port in this Colony should be the established head-quarters of at least two vessels of the fleet. The fine harbours in New Zealand, and its proximity to the Fijian and other groups of Pacific Islands, make it specially suitable for the purpose. They also feel that hitherto less attention has been paid to New Zealand by Imperial war-vessels than by those of foreign nations; and they may refer to a previous memorandum (No. 29), of the 8th May, 1885, to bear them out in this assertion.

9. If the Imperial Government agree to the conditions Ministers have indicated, they will be willing to recommend Parliament to make the provision they have named, for say, ten years. In fixing the sum they have been guided by the belief that, with a small contribution from Fiji, it will be sufficient to maintain two vessels of the class the Admiral recommends. And they have limited the time to ten years, as by that time the circumstances may have so changed as to make a review of the arrangement necessary.

10. Ministers would, in conclusion, point out that the Colony has been put to considerable expense in defending its harbours. It will still maintain its own defence works, harbour torpedoes, and artillery corps, and various volunteer companies, in a state of efficiency. It, however, looks to the Imperial Government for the aid proposed for naval defence.

Wellington, 27th March, 1886.

ROBERT STOUT.

NOTE.—I have written to New Zealand to point out the erroneous impression entertained in paragraph 9.

I have sent the telegram of 25th April, which shows the prime cost, and also the cost of maintaining an "Archer" and a torpedo-catcher, a matter on which they previously were not fully acquainted.

I have also pointed out, while the sum named is not nearly sufficient to provide the vessels they suppose it would, it would go a long way towards paying the share that would fall to New Zealand, if all the Colonies in Australasian waters joined and agreed to create a naval force, out of funds provided by each Colony according to its population.

I have also pointed out that united action on the part of all the Colonies is not probable, if it is stipulated that during peace two vessels should always remain in any particular waters, but that the spirit of the wishes of the Ministers would be fully met by an assurance that the ports of New Zealand would be frequently visited either by single ships, or at intervals by several ships cruising together as a squadron, an arrangement which is in accord with my existing orders, but which is rarely done owing to the numerous calls made for vessels to visit distant islands.

A Précis of the discussion on Colonial Naval Defences (at Government House, Wellington), by His Excellency the Governor of New Zealand, the Ministers, and the Admiral.

WITH reference to the Meeting held at Government House, called by His Excellency the Governor of New Zealand, and attended by the Premier, Mr. Ballance, Mr. Tole, and Mr. Buckley—the Admiral also being present.

The object of the meeting was to discuss the subject of the Admiral's letter on the subject of the war vessels to be provided at the cost of the Colonies.

That

That letter (24 December, 1885) was read. The opinion expressed by the Ministers was generally favourable to the proposal, but the whole question involved was reserved till the Cabinet could meet as a whole in February, when it would be formally discussed and a formal reply made.

The opinion was also expressed that, in lieu of having to pay a share in the prime cost of the vessels, and in the event of the agreement terminating in ten years, that she could become possessed of her share in the vessels, New Zealand would much prefer to pay an interest on the sum sufficient to recoup the Home Treasury the interest that (1) would have to be paid if the Government at Home raised the money, as well as (2) to form a sinking fund. In such case, should the agreement not be continued over a specified time, the ships would be the absolute property of the Admiralty without restriction.

The Admiral explained this question was one beyond his instructions, and necessarily would have to be referred Home. His instructions contemplated that the Colonies would pay for the cost of construction, and eventually, at the termination of the agreement, become possessed of the vessels.

It being remarked that the ships, when they became old-fashioned, or when new designs were proved to be so superior that ships now built had to be replaced, that the Colonies would have no need or use for obsolete vessels, and that they should be allowed to return the old, and new vessels should be substituted. The Admiral remarked that was precisely one of the great difficulties that presented themselves to the Admiralty at Home,—what to do with old-fashioned yet by no means worn-out vessels, and the Admiralty were not at all likely to increase their difficulty in this respect by agreeing to withdraw old ships and to substitute new designs. In fact it would be like a man who, having bought a new pair of shoes and contracted for their repairs, considered that the shoemaker should give him a new pair when those first ordered got worn out of shape or out of fashion.

He also showed that, though finality as to designs was not attainable, still very fast vessels of limited size were not likely to be unmarketable or without value for many years to come; and that as to torpedo boats, there might be great improvements, still the total destruction by a vessel by a single blow was a termination of an existence and of a danger, the power to effect which might be increased, but hardly could the consummation be exceeded, and there was no reason to suppose these vessels would not lend themselves to improvements.

It was explained, chiefly by the Premier, this was by no means the intention—what ran in his mind was that an estimate of cost should be obtained as to the provision of the force suggested—that the cost of maintenance and an annual interest on the prime cost of material, viz., of the ship complete, which interest should also be sufficient to form a sinking fund, and that the property in the ships should always be with the Admiralty.

In this case the restriction as to the employ of the ships in these seas would remain so long as the agreement lasted, and when it terminated the Admiralty would be under no restriction whatever, and the sinking fund would virtually be for the purpose of covering deterioration in the value of the property.

It will be gathered from the above that a conversation of a general character took place with the view to elucidate the questions involved.

Among other points, it was shown that if New Zealand contributed to an augmentation of the fleet, she would, at all events in a time of peace, expect to be frequently visited by the squadron, or that vessels should be stationed in New Zealand waters—that those who paid for them might see the result.

Memorandum on Colonial Naval Defence, by Admiral Tryon.

H.M.S. "Nelson," Sydney, 24 April, 1886.

Memorandum presented at Meeting.

WHEN questions that affect the Navy, and especially when how to increase its effective action in seas remote from the mother country, are under consideration, it is necessary to pass in review the existing strategic conditions, which cannot be disregarded, for they force our hands.

It will be found, however, that some Colonies and some places of special importance will require special treatment, and that they call into existence a naval force that does not primarily enter into or belong to the system on which for strategic reasons the main fleet of the country moves.

Europe, the great mother of wars, the chief market of the world, the chief arbiter for peace, with its overflowing population seeking where to go, and for new outlets, is a nest of armed naval and military forces.

The very propinquity of huge armies to each other, the existence of the telegraph and its effect in hastening and, perhaps, too often, in precipitating decision, render sudden wars more probable than even heretofore. While all preach and express a hope for peace, yet all prepare lest war should come; it is not possible to adopt a greatly different course, or to pose contented, unarmed, in our ever-increasing, envy-provoking, condition.

We must take the world as we find it, and show, while we wish for peace, we are determined to hold our own.

The action taken by the Colonies in the erection of batteries, and in the creation of considerable forces of all kinds, shows that they accept the condition that war is possible.

They recognise that when war once breaks out no one can foresee the consequences. There is no escape from it. There is no land so distant as to be free from its direful influences or from its effects. If this was true, as history tells us it was, in days gone by, how much more is it the case now, when distances are bridged and prevailing winds and other obstacles are overcome by modern war appliances.

Still, as a general strategic principle, the chief focus of war (Europe) having been pointed out, it is clear, however much we as a nation may be scattered over the wide world, our main fleet—the main naval strength of the nation—must remain near the focus, and, if possible, prevent the immediate effects of war being felt beyond the seas adjacent to that focus, wherever it may be. In fact the more extended and the more scattered the interests to be defended, the more desirable is it to circumscribe the field and the immediate consequences of war.

Supposing an opposite course was adopted, and we scattered our naval forces so as to try to be everywhere we should be weak at all points, and an enemy whose total force was much inferior to our own would be able to take the initiative, and to appear in superior strength and numbers at any point he might select. We may be pretty confident he would not select a point for attack that was strong and far distant from his own base.

As a general principle we come to this in each case of war. Wherever your enemy is you must get as near him as possible if you would frustrate his designs, and the further you are from him the less likely you are to meet him, and the less able you are to hinder him.

If the above is accepted it will follow that any force that is localised, viz., one whose action is limited designedly for special purposes and to special seas, while it may be of the greatest value and its existence, but a sequence to the general principles above sketched, it does not fall into place side by side with the main force, but is rather an adjunct to it and a very important and necessary adjunct, as I shall now endeavour to show, for on my so doing depends whether, from a wide and national point of view, we are right in localising a naval sea-going force at all.

However superior our force may be, however skilled may be the strategic arrangement, however vigilant our Admirals, history may repeat itself. An enemy may escape touch, he may escape notice, and it may be some time before his destination is known and his designs penetrated.

We may feel confident he will be quickly followed, but his power for mischief, for a time at all events, would be great, and the difficulties attending a pursuing squadron are great compared to those experienced by one that is carrying into effect a well-devised pre-arranged scheme. This condition must not be overlooked.

The power to avoid notice is much greater in 1886 than it was at the early part of this century. Winds, currents, and tides, no longer restrict the movements of a fleet. Vessels 1000 miles away on a Monday, are with you on a Friday. Blockades in the present day are not reliable, and the days of convoys, pure and simple, are gone.

While, therefore, we must admit that it is possible for a force to avoid those who try to prevent its attaining the open ocean, and that it may seek distant seas and places, and for a time, if not otherwise prevented, create much havoc, and, while we must also admit that the further from the focus a position is, the less advantageous it is as a station for a naval force on general national strategic grounds, for it depends on its ever even seeing an enemy, to his coming to it of his own accord, and to his having escaped the notice of others; and, besides, should the enemy go elsewhere in strength, the further off the position occupied is, the less likely is a force occupying it to be able to act in combination and in concert with its friends. Still we also must admit that places of great wealth and importance, if not protected, provoke such enterprise on the part of an enemy as we are now particularly considering how best to frustrate.

I think it will be admitted, however far from the focus of war the positions may be, that when they are of the importance and value, and when they possess the population of these Colonies, there is good reason for removing a temptation to direct an attack on them from the Council Chamber of those who may be plotting against us, and to do so, by providing a force that would be able to play an important part, whether the enemy came in strength or whether he sought to molest us by the action of swift cruisers.

With the development of great Colonies the necessity for their defence year by year has become more and more apparent. New and important interests spring into existence in rapid series. Places that were of little importance, or that were even quite unknown to the world a few years ago, have now a very special value and importance attached to them.

It is impossible to expect the taxpayer at home to bear the whole cost of the defence of such great interests as exist in the Colonies, scattered as they are in distant seas, and multiplying as they are with each cycle.

Batteries and local defences alone extend their influence but a short distance. They cannot be indefinitely increased, even if it was wise to try to do so. The action of vessels of war at sea would tend to deny these waters as a cruising ground to our foes, and would do much to practically cover places that are not defended by forts or local forces.

Without vessels of war we should be liable to be shut up in our own homes—the Colonies would be isolated from the rest of the world.

The taxpayer at home pays approximately thirteen millions for the navy. He pays about thirty millions for the army and navy together. He pays it as an insurance for our existence as a nation.

Should the Colonies decide to increase the Squadron on the Station, when it is effected our position would be:—We should know that while the main forces of the country were striving to defeat the machinations of an enemy, if their efforts were not successful in limiting the area of mischief we should be well able, at all events for a time, to take care of ourselves, and when our own pursuing fleet arrived we should be able to unite hand in hand with it for one common object.

To facilitate the advent of our Squadron, armed depôts are maintained on the great lines of trade and commerce we have Squadrons of greater or less strength in every sea, which, with the armed places above referred to, impede the movements of an enemy, while they greatly assist our friends.

How best to create a Naval sea-going force localised to the Australasian seas is now approaching consideration.

If vessels of war are to be added, at the cost of the Colonies, to the existing Squadron, it is necessary to secure harmonious action, and working with the main fleet of the country, if full effect is to be obtained from such an additional force.

This can only be secured when the discipline, instruction and practice is similar; without harmony in these respects there is a serious source of weakness. There should be no question as to responsibility, or as to the relative position of officers. There should be a flow of promotion. Neither Officers or Men should be kept too long on any station. An acquaintance with modern appliances and implements of war must be maintained, and they should have a knowledge of the condition of those against whom they may have to act in war.

The use of mechanical appliances for so many purposes on board modern ships of war, and the increasing delicacy of those appliances and weapons call for highly trained crews.

To secure the strength that is due to training when it exists throughout a whole force, those portions of it to which special duties are relegated, and which, in point of numbers, are relatively small, must adopt themselves to the system that prevails with the majority. The total strength of the personnel of Her Majesty's fleet is, including reserves, approximately 102,000.

Practically

Practically all seamen in H.M. fleet are entered as boys, and are trained, before going to sea, in special vessels. They enter for twelve years, and subsequently can renew their engagements for ten more, and then become entitled to a pension. It is not practical to propose that men of the same rank and position, performing the same duty, and serving in the same ship, should receive widely different rates of pay, or be entered on widely different conditions.

There are ports that require a considerable amount of Naval Force for their defences—Melbourne for instance—Port Phillip cannot be denied to an enemy by batteries and mine fields alone. There a local Naval Force of very considerable strength is already called into existence.

Some ports only require a few torpedo boats. Queensland possesses gun vessels well suited for service off her coral girt shores. South Australia has a vessel of another type altogether that is specially well adapted for the service she was designed to render; and of the efficiency and reliability of these forces I am glad to hear personal testimony.

It is not proposed to make any change in what has been so far well done with reference to such local forces.

The immediate subject for consideration refers to sea-going vessels of war. Are these Colonies desirous to provide them for the defence of these seas? And in such case how best to give effect to their desire? And I venture to say it is difficult to conceive a more important subject.

These Colonies have no frontiers save those imposed by nature. Should an enemy ever appear he must come from over the sea.

It will be noted that the types of ships recommended are essentially sea-going vessels, that are formidable whatever may be the nature of the opposing force. They are also well adapted to play a prominent part, if needs be, in a local defence; yet they are not of a class that could be readily sent out to distant seas from home at an hour of need; a task that would be well performed by the new fast armoured ships, or by the protected vessels that form a part of Her Majesty's Navy, and which are designed for protracted distant service at sea, and with which these proposed vessels are admirably adapted to co-operate.

I may mention that the subject of the defence given by the Navy to Colonies and commerce, and of the maintenance of armed depots throughout the world has recently been prominently before the Parliament in London, and as a result to a special debate £3,100,000 was voted in December, 1884, for an increase to the Navy, and a large additional vote was granted for defensive works abroad.

The direction of the view taken is sufficiently shown by observing the type of vessel ordered, which is given under the estimate upon which the calculation of £3,100,000 was made:—One armour-plated ship, five belted cruisers, ten "scouts," two rams, and thirty torpedo boats.

A reference to the summary of Naval Estimates for the years from 1881 to 1885 will show the growth of naval expenditure:—1881-82, £10,945,919; 1882-83, £12,110,426; 1883-84, £10,899,500; 1884-85, £11,507,970; 1885-86, £15,186,500.

In 1882-83 there was a vote of credit of £1,276,525, and in 1885-86 an estimated vote of credit of £2,800,000, which sums are included in the above. Equally interesting are the tables of figures which show the total actual and estimated expenditure on ship-building and ordnance between 1875 and 1886, which show that the sums varied from £3,772,601 in 1875-76 to an estimate of £6,102,652 for 1885-86.

There is no desire whatever, I am assured, to avoid any of the responsibilities due to the maintenance of the Empire, growing as they do grow with its ever increasing population and wealth, particularly in these great Colonies. I am authorized to say there is a full determination to continue to bear the task.

While we as a nation grow with amazing strides, an ever increasing naval protection is required. Other nations also grow, but in no instance has another nation such a wide-world task; in no instance is the task that falls to their navy appreciably increased with the growing wealth and population of their country, when compared to the case of the British Empire.

This memorandum is written on my own responsibility. It is but a sequiter to the memoranda and papers which have been written by the Premiers and by others on the same subject within these Colonies. It is what it professes to be, a simple statement of the views of a sailor occupying the position I do, from a national aspect, with Australasia in the foreground.

I now will briefly review matters as they are.

Ports, Arsenals, and Coaling Stations are held on the lines of trade and commerce, on the maintenance of which, it is unquestionable, the whole Empire is deeply interested.

Sufficient ships to perform the duty of police of the seas, and to maintain British interests, are suitably stationed all over the world. In the heart of Europe the Mediterranean Fleet is maintained; at Home, ships are kept ready for service, to be sent any where at very short notice. The Channel Fleet, while available for any service, is an invaluable fleet for training officers and men.

The above sketch gives an outline of the policy which is considered to be the very best yet devised for securing that the naval force of the nation will be at the right place at the right time.

The fleets of other nations are watched; and any augmentation of force that is observed is readily met, when necessary, by counterbalancing measures. Should any hostile fleet leave Europe, we may rest assured it will be followed; and lest such a case should occur, protected Coaling Stations, Naval Establishments abroad and Colonial Defences, Militia and Volunteer Forces, have their cause for existence.

We must recall that when the fleets of England were far greater than those of France and Spain combined, yet in the great actions fought in the early part of this century, our force was inferior to those opposed to us. At this time the power to concentrate is far greater than it was in those days. It is clear the strength of the fleet must not be frittered away, as it would if the component parts were scattered.

At home it has often and often been proposed to build ships specially suited for the defence of the Mersey, the Clyde, the Thames, and other ports. The answer has always been on the same line.

If Parliament will place more money at the disposal of the Admiralty they will be able show it will be best and wisest to spend it on vessels suited for the general service of the country.

An increase to Her Majesty's fleet voted in London would take that direction. It would be spent in construction, in armaments, and excepting as regards the very important instance of torpedo boats for the purpose of adding to the strength of the fleet that could be employed anywhere in the interests of the nation.

There is no difference of opinion as to the necessity for protecting the most distant parts of the empire. The question is, how is this best effected? It cannot be better done than by destroying an enemy before he has time or opportunity to act to our disadvantage, but it is certainly wise to take every precaution lest, as in days gone by, a squadron should escape notice and suddenly appear off a distant shore.

What the Admiralty could do besides what it does now would be to give the advantage attached to a force that is organised on one system; also it could arrange to supply officers and men trained to modern ships and modern appliances. It can give homogeneity to the whole force of the nation, and it could do this at a cost far less than would be entailed by any other plan that has yet been devised. But the Admiralty could only be expected to advise expenditure of the sums voted annually in London for naval purposes in the direction it was convinced was for the best, from a general point of view.

The force out here at this time, is much greater than it was but a very few years back. This testifies to the appreciation of the ever growing importance of the position; but the rapid progress that is being made in all directions, is creating demands that require very serious consideration.

That the Colonies have done much themselves, all will admit. We must also bear in mind that the progress made in ship-building and in marine engineering, is rapidly bringing Australia closer to Europe in point of time, and the safety due to distance is not what it was ten years ago, yet the strategic conditions referred to in this paper are not greatly altered.

The importance of the question was so recognised in 1884, that Parliament in London did not wait, but decided to make a very appreciable addition to our naval forces, and the large proportion of that expenditure as I have shown, is devoted to vessels specially suited for the protection of Colonies and commerce. The country did not wait to talk—it gave a vote, an increase over the estimate for the purpose.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.

NEW SOUTH WALES.

JOINT NAVAL DEFENCE OF AUSTRALASIA.

(MEMORANDUM BY THE HONORABLE THE PREMIER FOR HIS EXCELLENCY THE RIGHT HONORABLE LORD CARRINGTON, P.C., G.C.M.G., &c., &c.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be printed, 20 May, 1886.

Memorandum for His Excellency the Right Honorable Lord Carrington, P.C., G.C.M.G., &c., as to the Joint Naval Defence of Australasia.

REFERRING to the recent personal communications to His Excellency the Governor on the subject of the meeting between His Excellency, Admiral Tryon, the Hon. S. W. Griffith, the Hon. Duncan Gillies, and myself, which took place on the 26th and 27th April, on board H.M.S. "Nelson," with the view of securing a common course of action between the Imperial and Colonial Governments for the naval defence of the Australasian Colonies, it is now my duty to submit to His Excellency a statement of the results of that meeting.

2. As the Prime Ministers of Victoria and Queensland accepted the invitation of the Admiral to visit him at this place, it seemed to me my duty, at as early a period as possible, to put before the meeting the views entertained by His Excellency's Advisers on the important question which the meeting was called upon to discuss. I did this in the following memorandum, which I have prepared for the purpose (as it affirms) of defining our own opinions on the subject, and preventing misunderstanding.

"Memorandum read by Sir Patrick Jennings, at Meeting of His Excellency, Admiral Tryon, and the Premiers of Victoria, Queensland, and New South Wales, on board H.M.S. 'Nelson,' on the 26th and 27th April, 1886.

"I HAVE thought it desirable to commit to writing the views of the Government of this country on the very important question which is the subject of our present interview. I do this, first of all, for the purpose of more clearly defining our opinions on the subject, and preventing as far as possible any possibility of misunderstanding; and secondly, with the object of furnishing a basis for the discussion which will take place. We have for some time here inclined to the view that, in proportion to our identifying ourselves, for the purpose of securing perfect naval defence, with the Imperial Government, we shall secure a more efficient service and a more perfect administration than we ourselves could establish by any independent course of action in the Colony. More than twelve months ago it was determined by the Government then in existence to ascertain whether proposals for availing ourselves of Imperial assistance, by procuring and maintaining two or more ships of war, to be equipped and manned by the Imperial Government at our own cost, would be favourably entertained. It was ascertained that any practicable proposals of this kind would be received and examined with favourable consideration by the Imperial Government. The result of much consideration on the question by that Government was a recommendation to the following effect:—That two vessels of war, the type and design of which were to be determined conjointly by the Admiralty and the Government of the Colony, were to be built and equipped by the Admiralty, that the armament was to be approved by the Government, and that the entire expense of building, equipping, arming, and maintaining was to be borne by the Colony. It was further considered that the arrangement with the Admiralty in connection with this service should extend over a period of from ten (10) to fifteen (15) years, the ships being equipped, officered, and manned by the Admiralty. The crews were to be secured in the same advantages as to rank, periods of service and promotion, as if those crews were serving in Her Majesty's ships in Commission. The entire cost of personnel was to be borne by the Colony, including actual and deferred pay. The control of the ships was to be in the hands of the Naval Commander-in-Chief of the Station. There was a further proposal that in time of war the vessels were to be employed within Australian waters, and not to be moved outside the waters of the Colony without the sanction of the Government of the Colony. And it was to be distinctly understood that the force provided for in this way should be in addition to that provided by the Imperial Government for our defence in the annual vote for Her Majesty's Navy. There was then a recommendation of the class of vessels which it was deemed most desirable to procure for this service. I have thought it well to refer to this matter with the view of considering the acceptableness of such proposals in this country. While regarding with approval many of the matters to which I have adverted, and while impressed with the conviction that they would be generally found agreeable to our Legislature, I am personally more disposed towards the adoption of a different scheme. It will be perceived that the scheme to which I have referred was an individual one for this country, as no interchange of opinions had then taken place between the various Colonial Governments on the subject. I am much more disposed myself towards a general arrangement between the leading Australasian Colonies and the Imperial Government; and I may say, on behalf of the Government of this country, that we are quite prepared to do all in our power to bring about a co-operation, not only between ourselves and the Imperial Government, but between ourselves and the other Australasian Colonies. I shall very briefly put before this meeting my proposal. It is based, first of all, on the very valuable paper which the Admiral has furnished to the various Australasian Governments, dated at Auckland, the 24th December of last year; and secondly, on a very grave consideration of the question in Cabinet. I shall be prepared to submit for the approval of Parliament the following scheme:—

"1. That a sufficient naval defence force be raised and equipped and manned by the Imperial Government for the defence of Australasia.

"2. That the cost of the equipment and maintenance of this force shall be borne by the Australasian Colonies in proportion to their population.

"3. That this force shall generally be retained within Australasian waters.

"4. That the arrangement for this force shall be for a period of ten (10) years, and that, if it is contemplated to abandon or alter the arrangement at the expiration of that period, notice of such abandonment or alteration shall be given at the termination of the seventh year of such arrangement, so that three (3) years' notice may be afforded to the Admiralty of such intention.

"5. That the liability of each Colony towards this expenditure shall be estimated on the basis of population.

"6. That the Imperial Government shall build and furnish the vessels, the Colonies providing a fund to recoup the expenditure of construction and allowance for depreciation, (say) 5 per cent. on capital account, and paying the total annual cost of maintenance, salaries, and deferred pay.

"7. That the ships are to be equipped, officered, and manned by the Admiralty, and the officers and crews to be secured the same advantages as to rank, time of service, and promotion as if they were serving in Her Majesty's ships in commission.

"8. That this force shall be absolutely in addition to that provided by the Imperial Government as to Australasian defence in the annual vote for Her Majesty's Navy.

"9. That the recommendations of the Admiral, contained in his circular dated 24th December, 1885, as to the number of vessels, their tonnage, displacement, rate of speed and armament, be adopted. According to that memo. the Colonies would have to provide for the construction of the class of ships known as 'Archers' a sum of £526,150; for the torpedo vessels, £106,600; making a total in all £632,750; and they would have to pay for the maintenance, provisions, wages, &c., cost of coal and stores, £142,653 per annum. This, irrespective of charges on account of docking and incidental expenses, which it is understood would not be considerable, is, as far as the means at our disposal will permit, a carefully prepared estimate of expenditure.

"10. I shall not go into a consideration of the class of vessels suggested by His Excellency the Naval Commander-in-Chief, and which have been quite recently, as a valuable means of defence, adopted on the part of the Imperial Government. This adoption has taken place, partly from the necessity of protecting the Imperial Government herself, and, secondly, from the obligation of the Empire to protect her Colonies. It seems to me that any distribution of any of her forces is a sign of weakness, and she will best preserve her supremacy by being enabled, as far as possible, to concentrate for purposes of defence her whole powers upon a single point, which might be far outside the waters of Australasia.

"11. Under all these circumstances, I venture to suggest to the meeting the proposal that we should endeavour to confine our consideration of these questions within the limits which I have endeavoured to lay down.

"12. I wish it to be distinctly understood that, if it is found impossible or undesirable to agree in the main with the proposals of the Imperial Government and this country, we shall be happy, as far as is possible, to communicate and to co-operate with those who are as deeply interested in the settlement of this question as we ourselves.

"13. I have thought it necessary to make these observations with the view of showing as generally as possible what I think might be received with favour on the part of the people of this country, and with the further object of eliciting that discussion which I trust will eventuate in a general agreement on the part of the leading Australasian Colonies as to the means of Imperial Naval Defence."

3. I shall now very briefly submit to His Excellency the proposal which, after much discussion and previous consultation with my colleagues, I feel myself justified in transmitting through His Excellency to the Imperial Government as to the course of action which I shall be prepared to submit for the approval of Parliament in connection with this matter. Of course the submission of the proposal to Parliament will depend upon how that proposal is received by the Imperial Government; for until its determination is conveyed to His Excellency it will be impossible to ask the assent of Parliament to a scheme which might or might not be sanctioned by the Imperial authorities.

4. On all grounds it was conceived that the equipment and manning of the defence force should be undertaken by the Imperial Government, and the entire cost of the equipment and annual maintenance of the force should be borne by the Australasian Colonies in proportion to their population.

5. It was also determined that it would be inexpedient for the Colonies themselves to purchase and pay for the vessels to be employed in the defence, and that the more desirable course to pursue would be that the Imperial Government should provide the necessary vessels, and that the Colonies should undertake to pay an annual contribution which would cover interest on the cost of the vessels provided, and a sufficient allowance for depreciation—not to exceed altogether (say) 5 per cent. on capital account. This, I may point out, was a suggestion made by the Government of this country, and was the subject of much discussion.

6. I am not in a position to inform His Excellency that the view of this Government, as far as this particular portion of the matter is concerned, will be definitely adopted by the other Colonies; but I think that on this subject there will be no difficulty in substantial agreement, though the form of the contribution may be different from that suggested.

7. It will be seen, therefore, that this arrangement would cast upon the Colonies the responsibility of providing for the entire annual cost of maintenance, salaries, and deferred pay.

8. It was deemed necessary, in order to secure the same state of efficiency as exists in every other part of Her Majesty's Navy, that the ships should be officered and manned by the Admiralty, in order to secure to the officers and crews the same advantages of promotion, rank, and service as they would enjoy if serving in any other part of the world.

9. In the statement which I made at the meeting, and which I have copied into this minute for His Excellency's information, I have stated the sum which the Colonies would have to provide, according to the recommendations of the Admiral contained in his circular of 24th December, 1885.

10. By a revised estimate, submitted by the Admiral, the original cost of the annual maintenance would be altered. The details of this were not in possession of the meeting, and will not be received here for some time, but substantially there will be a difference in the class of ships known as "Archers," on the five ships, in all £6,280 in excess of that estimate, and on the torpedo vessels of £13,142 less than that estimate.

11. As it is desirable that in a memorandum of this kind, which practically embodies the terms of the contract upon which the Government is prepared to enter with the Imperial Government on this subject, to state with as much accuracy as is obtainable, the estimated cost to be incurred by the Colonies, I now proceed to furnish to His Excellency a statement of the figures drawn up at the meeting.

The entire cost of the annual maintenance would be	£149,338
The exchange of crews necessary to keep the ships in the highest state of efficiency would involve an annual charge of	3,300
		£152,638
An allowance of (say) 5 per cent. on the capital cost of construction and to provide for depreciation, &c.	31,295
Making in all	£183,933

I would wish His Excellency distinctly to understand that these figures are not to be considered as absolutely fixed, but are the nearest approach to an accurate statement of the anticipated liabilities of the Colonies, by means of the contemplated arrangement which can under the circumstances be obtained.

12. This sum of £183,933 would maintain the entire naval force on a war footing; but if it was deemed expedient during times of peace to have only three vessels of the "Archer" class in commission, a reduction on this expenditure would be effected by the sum of (say) £30,570, leaving the entire probable annual cost at the sum of £153,363.

13. Assuming the entire population of the Australasian Colonies to be 3,300,000, and the entire population of this Colony to be one million, the proportion of this expenditure on a peace footing to be borne by this Colony would amount to about £50,000. In other words, while the cost of this increased naval defence for this Colony would be only (say) 1s. per annum per head of the population of this country, the cost of the annual maintenance of the Imperial Navy to the British taxpayer is estimated to be about 7s. 6d. per head.

14. It was distinctly understood that this arrangement was to be entirely one in addition to the ordinary defence provided for the Australasian Colonies by the Imperial Government; in other words, that it was not to occasion in any way any diminution of the defence provided for in the annual vote for Her Majesty's Navy.

15. With regard to that portion of the statement made by me to the meeting, as to the exclusive employment within Australasian waters, in time of war, of the vessels obtained by the Colonies, it was deemed desirable that their use and employment should be absolutely in the hands of the Naval Commander-in-Chief of the station; for it was pointed out that great injury might be inflicted upon the commerce of the Colonies by vessels operating outside Australasian waters, and that such vessels might harass our commerce if the force provided by the Colonies were limited in its operations in any way whatever. In the last memorandum on "Colonial Naval Defences," by the Admiral, presented to the meeting, and dated the 24th April, the following paragraphs seem to me to justify the inexpediency of limiting the movements of the force in any manner whatever:—

"As a general principle, we come to this in each case of war:—Wherever your enemy is, you must get as near him as possible if you would frustrate his designs; and the further you are from him the less likely you are to meet him, and the less able you are to hinder him.

"If the above is accepted, it will follow that any force that is localized, viz., one whose action is limited designedly for special purposes and to special seas, while it may be of the greatest value and its existence but a sequence to the general principles above sketched, it does not fall into place side by side with the main force, but is rather an adjunct to it, and a very important and necessary adjunct, as I shall now endeavour to show; for on my so doing depends whether, from a wide and national point of view, we are right in localizing a naval sea-going force at all."

16. I think I have now sufficiently informed His Excellency of the views entertained by this Government, and of the support which it feels itself entitled to expect at the hands of the other Australasian Colonies whose opinions have been expressed on this subject.

17. The early submission of the whole of the papers in connection with this matter to the Imperial Government, with an expression of their substantial agreement with the course proposed to be taken, would enable His Excellency's Advisers to take, without delay, the opinion of Parliament on a question so momentous, and with the main features of which there appears, happily, to exist a general agreement between the leading Colonies of Australasia. I may be permitted, on the part of His Excellency's Government, to express to His Excellency the very deep sense of obligation under which I feel the whole of the Australasian Colonies have been placed, by the untiring exertions of His Excellency the Admiral to place before them the fullest particulars which he could furnish, both as to the means of effecting the defence of the Colonies and in bringing about a common understanding on a subject of such deep and universal interest.

Premier.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.
NEW SOUTH WALES.

DEFENCE OF ALBANY AND THURSDAY ISLAND.

(CORRESPONDENCE RESPECTING.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be printed, 7 July, 1886.

No. 1.

The Colonial Secretary of Western Australia to The Colonial Secretary of New South Wales.

Sir,

Colonial Secretary's Office, Perth, 27 May, 1885.

I am directed by His Excellency Administrator Onslow to draw the attention of your Government to the condition, in the event of war, of the Port of Albany, King George's Sound, in this Colony.

2. As you may be aware, Albany has become of late a somewhat large coaling station for steamers, and has been found a great convenience to those passing to and from the ports of the Eastern Colonies.

3. King George's Sound being absolutely undefended, the coal stored there afloat and on shore would in time of war be likely to fall an easy prey to an enemy, and if once seized it would enable him to strike a very heavy blow at the commerce of all the Eastern Colonies.

4. It is quite impossible for this Colony alone to undertake the fortification of the place. There has been a body of Volunteers enrolled on the spot, but more than this our limited means will not allow.

5. Shortly to describe what is at this date thought necessary to do for the protection of the inner port, called Princess Royal Harbour (see Chart herewith), it is proposed to erect a small battery on a commanding position at Point King, in which are to be mounted three or four heavy guns, also to provide the necessary gun detachments. It is also considered requisite to place a double line of torpedo defence between Point King and Point Possession, and to obtain one or two launches capable of being converted into torpedo boats.

6. The question is, whether your Government, jointly with other Colonies whose steamers may use the Sound as a coaling station, will assist us?

I have, &c.,

MALCOLM FRASER.

In acknowledging the receipt of your letter of the 27th ultimo, drawing the attention of this Government to the condition, in event of war, of Albany, King George's Sound, I have the honor to inform you that your communication has been forwarded through His Excellency the Governor to Admiral Tryon, who no doubt is alive to the importance of the protection of Albany.

The Premier of Tasmania to The Colonial Secretary, New South Wales.

Sir,

Premier's Office, Hobart, 13 June, 1885.

I have the honor to inform you that I am in receipt of a letter from the Government of Western Australia with reference to the defence, in the event of war, of the coaling station at the Port of Albany, King George's Sound.

Surmising that a similar communication has been addressed to you, I have to request that you will be good enough to favour me with an expression of the views of your Government on this question.

As the vessels using this station for coaling purposes belong almost exclusively to companies of purely British constitution, and therefore, as the Colonial interests at stake in connection with its maintenance are comparatively unimportant, this Government consider that the other Australian Colonies should not be asked to contribute towards the large expenditure which would be incurred in carrying out the proposed scheme of defence, a work which should, more equitably, be undertaken by the Imperial Government.

I have, &c.,

ADYE DOUGLAS.

Submitted. See letter from Wn. Australia herewith, Colonial Secretary's minute thereon, letter of Admiral Tryon, and minute by H. E. the Governor. 24 June, /85.

Minute of His Excellency the Governor.

From the important observations contained in the annexed letter from Admiral Tryon, it appears that the two extreme points of the Australian coast are practically without means of resisting an invasion.

From their geographical and strategical position they are points which equally interest all the Australian Colonies, and therefore they should all unite in any expenditure required to secure their safety. Might not the present offer an auspicious moment for the Colonial Governments interested to combine for placing these two points in safety from an enemy? A.L.—17/6/85.

No. 5.

Admiral Tryon to His Excellency the Governor.

My Lord,

H.M.S. "Nelson," at Sydney, 17 June, 1885.

Your Excellency has been good enough to refer to me a letter from the Colonial Secretary, Western Australia, to the Honorable the Colonial Secretary, New South Wales, in which co-operation is sought for creating a defence for Albany.

2. This opens out the very important question of the protection of the outlying ports, especially when they are coaling ports, and inseparably connected with the question are Albany on the west and Thursday Island at the north.

3. At the early part of this year I was at Albany, and was much struck with the importance of the harbour. It is not large, yet it is convenient, and capable of extension and improvement. It is situated near the extreme west point of the south coast of Australia.

4. The bulk of the external steam trade of the Colonies pass it. The port cannot fail to become of great importance, both in a military and commercial sense; and these remarks apply with force also to Thursday Island in the north extremity of this country.

5. At the time to which I refer the coal stowed in those ports, for the convenience of vessels that otherwise would pass them, was in a condition that simply invited an enemy to come and help himself, and that at our very threshold in both directions, so that he would arrive at our doors with full bunkers, and therefore with a full capacity for mischief.

6. If occupied by an enemy, such places are so defensible that it would cost much to expel him.

7. At Albany there is a sparse population in a scattered township on the shores of the harbour. Its defence is in the hands of seventy volunteer riflemen.

8. As to Thursday Island, I am informed twenty to thirty steamers pass each month; the population is 300, chiefly composed of native races from the islands east and west.

9. Ports at the extremities of these coasts, and of their respective Colonies, obtain far less protection from cruising squadrons than do central ports. The importance of these ports has only sprung into existence of quite recent years. The external trade of Queensland, New South Wales, Victoria, and South Australia passes close to them, and they should not only be ports of supply, but ports of refuge and defence.

10. The value of these ports in both a military and commercial sense will certainly increase with the growth of Australia. I need hardly add that recently they have been the subject of many telegrams, and many letters have passed; and something has been effected with the view to make such arrangements as were practicable in the best interest of the nation.

11. Albany can readily and at no great cost be protected sufficiently for the hour. As years roll on, more and more doubtless will be done.

12. The position at Thursday Island, and of the islands in its immediate neighbourhood in the Torres Straits, are sure to command attention, and its great geographical and strategical importance will force itself into consideration.

13. There are no other positions of equal importance from the above points of view, as well as from a general point of view, in the whole of the Australian littoral.

I have, &c.,

G. TRYON,

Rear Admiral and Commander-in-Chief.

NEW SOUTH WALES.

CIVIL SERVICE ACT, 1884.

(REPORT OF BOARD FOR 1885.)

 Presented to Parliament, pursuant to Act 48 Vic. No. 24, sec. 62.

FIRST REPORT

OF THE

CIVIL SERVICE BOARD OF NEW SOUTH WALES,

For the Year 1885.

To His Excellency the Right Honourable CHARLES ROBERT, BARON CARRINGTON, a Member of Her Majesty's Most Honourable Privy Council, Knight Grand Cross of the Most Distinguished Order of Saint Michael and Saint George, Governor and Commander-in-Chief of the Colony of New South Wales and its Dependencies ;

YOUR LORDSHIP,

We have the honour to submit to your EXCELLENCY in COUNCIL, our first Annual Report, in terms of the 62nd section of the "Civil Service Act, 1884."

2. The Act came into operation on the first of January, 1885. The first Members appointed to the Board were,—JOHN WILLIAMS, Esq., Crown Solicitor ; the Hon. GEOFFREY EAGAR, Under Secretary for Finance and Trade ; ARCHIBALD COLQUHOUN FRASER, Esq., Clerk of the Peace ; CHARLES AUGUSTUS GOODCHAP, Esq., Commissioner for Railways ; and WILLIAM GILMOUR MURRAY, Esq., Merchant ; all of Sydney. Mr. EAGAR was elected Chairman of the Board for the current year.

3. The first duty of the Board was to prepare for publication in the Gazette, a List containing the names, alphabetically arranged, of all the Officers in each Division and Class of the Public Service, and of all other persons employed, such List to be called the Civil Service List for the year.

4. In the performance of this and other duties, some unavoidable difficulties were experienced. Up to the date of the passing of the present Act there had been no antecedent legislation to regulate the Public Service. A system of Superannuation had indeed been provided by the Act of 1864, unaccompanied however by powers of regulation, but after a trial of eight years it failed in its object, and was repealed.

5. The Board were thus called upon to administer the provisions of an Act of Parliament, which established for the first time a defined legal relationship between the Government and the Public Servant, and which provided for a Superannuation Account upon a new and, as it was considered, an improved basis.

6. The first right which grew out of the new legislation was, the right which secured to the Civil Servants their classification under the 3rd section of the Act, based upon the salaries which had been fixed by the Appropriation Act of 1884.

7. Here then the difficulties of the Board commenced; for, from the initiation of Responsible Government no uniform system had prevailed in relation to the appointment, promotion, and remuneration of the Public Servants. Hence arose numerous anomalies, which the Estimates of 1884 (to which the Board were confined), embodied and perpetuated. These are disclosed by the appeals under clause 17 of the Act. These appeals (which will be again referred to) show conclusively that there is a large number of Civil Servants holding responsible and laborious positions who, compared with others in the Service, are insufficiently remunerated. The Act, as they are advised, gives no power to the Board to deal with these cases, which undoubtedly are entitled to favourable consideration.

8. The next difficulty presenting itself to the Board was, the determination of the class of Public Servants who might be supposed to be entitled to the benefit of the annual increments under Clause 4 of the Act. In this matter the Board were necessarily guided by the definitions attached to the terms "Civil Service" and "Officer" in the interpretation clause. From these definitions it might be assumed that every person holding "a permanent salaried office" was so entitled; but, in a question largely affecting the Public Revenue, they sought to interpret this portion of the Act with an endeavour to arrive at a right understanding of the object of the Legislature in authorizing the increments. They bore in mind the fact that Parliament had uniformly and constantly insisted upon a proper economy in the administration of the Public Departments. Consistently with that economy, it could not reasonably be supposed that the persons then composing the Public Service (exclusive of the employés in the Railway and the Police, and those coming under Clause 8 of the Act) were each and every of them entitled to draw, year after year, as an addition to his salary, a sum of £20, or £25, or £30 per annum as the case might be. In Clause 7 of the Act the Board found, as they considered, a fair solution of the difficulty. In that clause it is provided that "nothing herein contained shall interfere with the Rules and and Regulations made by the Commissioner for Railways as to the mode of admission, examination, promotion, classification, and salaries under which persons employed in the Railway Service are engaged, and agree to serve." The latter part of the clause authorizes the withdrawal from the operation of the Act (except Parts V and VI), of other classes of the Public Servants, who may be placed under Rules and Regulations of a similar kind.

9. Acting on this view, the Board recommended that portions of the following Departments should be placed under similar rules and regulations to those in force in the Railway Department—namely, the Government Printing Office, the Post and Telegraph Offices, the Mines Department, the Harbours and Rivers Department, and the Marine Board Department. In all these cases there had already been Rules and Regulations existing, either as a printed code, or as an unwritten code, sanctioned by custom and precedent, but now brought into conformity with the terms of the Act. These Rules and Regulations (which will be found in the Appendix) provide for a gradual rise in the various classes from a minimum to a maximum salary in each class, as recommended by the Head of the Department and approved by the Government; and while, in the opinion of the Board, no injustice is done to individuals, a saving is effected in the public expenditure.

10. Governed by the preceding considerations, the Board prepared and issued the "Civil Service List of 1885," with the following classification of the Public Servants coming within the operation of the Act:—

GENERAL DIVISION	Class 1	28
			„ 2	41
			„ 3	116
			„ 4	345
			„ 5	718
			„ 6	460
			Probationary	17

PROFESSIONAL DIVISION	Class 1	13
			„ 2	39
			„ 3	89
			—		142
TEMPORARY EMPLOYES	1,115

SECTION 7	3,214
„ 8 (Salaries)	1,539
„ 8 (Wages)	446

						11,371

11. It was not supposed by the Board that this classification, made to the best of their judgment, under circumstances of difficulty, would meet with the approval of the whole Service. Under Clause 17 of the Act, 1,249 appeals were made against those decisions. These appeals were of the following nature, namely :—

1. From Officers claiming higher classification by reason of length of service, nature of duties, or special circumstances.
2. From Officers claiming rank in the First Class, General Division, as “Heads of Departments.”
3. From Officers claiming that they should be raised from the Third to the Second Class, because their Head is a First Class Officer, and they allege that under the Act they will not be eligible for promotion to his position in case of a vacancy, as a Second Class Officer from another Department could be placed over them.
4. From Officers styled “temporary,” who claim to rank as “permanent.”
5. From Officers claiming position in the Professional Division as “Engineers,” “Surveyors,” and “Architects,”—though designated in the Estimates as “Draftsmen.”
6. From School Inspectors and Examiners, claiming to be classed as Professional Officers.
7. From Masters of Dredges, making the same claim.
8. From Officers claiming higher classification by reason of their fees and allowances being understated.
9. From persons in Departments brought or to be brought under Rules and Regulations, objecting to the position assigned to them under Clause 7 of the Act.
10. From Postmasters, who state that they were Clerks, and as such would have been entitled to classification and continuous annual increment, but that having been promoted from Clerk to Postmaster, they now find themselves limited as to maximum range of salary.
11. From School Attendance Officers, who are now under Educational Division, claiming classification in the General Division.
12. From Officers appealing against their being placed in Section 8.

12. During the receipt of these appeals—which followed the publication of the Classified List on the 31st March, 1885—the Board, at a Special Meeting of the 8th June, fully discussed and considered the nature and extent of their power to deal with appeals under Clause 17 of the Act. There was a division of opinion on the subject (see Appendix), but the Board finally decided that appeals could be entertained only upon the following grounds :—(1.) The correction of clerical errors, as for instance, where the class assigned is not in accordance with the rate of salary. (2.) Where the full amount of emoluments has not been furnished to the Board in the original return, or where emoluments have been omitted therefrom. (3.) Where the names of Officers or other persons have been omitted in the original return. (4.) Where cause can be shown for transfer from the “General” to the “Professional” Division. On these grounds, which the then Attorney-General, the Hon. W. B. DALLEY, advised to be in accordance with the Act, the cases of appeal were dealt with by the Board, with the result that one hundred and ninety-nine were admitted, and the rest disallowed. A Schedule of the appeals appears in the Appendix.

13. Among other functions imposed upon the Board, is that which involves an inquiry into the nature and extent of the duties performed in each Department of the Public Service, and an expression of their opinion whether the number of persons employed is more than the exigencies of the Service require. It must be obvious that an inquiry of this laborious and comprehensive nature could not at this early stage of the constitution of the Board be performed, within the limited time at their disposal, so efficiently and completely as to satisfy the full requirements requirements of the Act. But to this end they obtained returns from each Department, which, however, do not furnish sufficient information to enable the Board to report whether the number of persons employed is, or is not, in excess of the daily increasing exigencies of the Public Service. They would invite attention to what they understand to be the fact, that in the neighbouring Colony of Victoria, antecedent to their "Public Service Act" coming into operation, the Commissioners appointed thereunder spent over a twelvemonth in making those preliminary personal inquiries into the state and condition of each public Department (so necessary to just conclusions), which it is entirely out of the power of the Board as at present constituted to accomplish.

14. During the year, the Board held fifty-eight meetings for the despatch of business. At those meetings, in addition to the preparation of the Civil Service List, and the disposal of 1,249 appeals, they dealt with 160 cases of appointment and promotion in the Service, referred to them under clause 27 of the Act, by Heads of Departments. In a few cases the Board were unable to concur in the recommendations laid before them; in the majority of cases they agreed with those recommendations. In the few cases objected to, the views of the Board prevailed, so that on the whole they believe that the appointments and promotions of the year, of which they have had cognizance, have been made in conformity with the spirit and intention of the Act.

15. A Schedule of the names of persons admitted into the Service on "special grounds," in terms of the 28th section of the Act, will be found in the Appendix.

16. MR. WILLIAM GILMOUR MURRAY, who had rendered valuable services at the Board, resigned his office on the 16th of December, in contemplation of a visit to Europe—his resignation to take effect from the end of the year.

THE SUPERANNUATION ACCOUNT.

17. The Superannuation allowance provided for by the Act rests upon a self-supporting basis, aided, for the first five years of its existence, by an endowment from the State of £100,000, payable in annual instalments of £20,000, which endowment, together with the provision of £3,500 per annum already made by the Constitution Act, may be taken as the price at which the State has bought out the pension rights of its servants, both those now existing and for all time to come. This endowment is supplemented by an annual deduction of 4 per cent. from the salaries of Officers, and others who are invited by Clause 57 of the Act to come in as contributors. Already 352 persons have availed themselves of their privilege under that clause. The account for the year (which appears in the Appendix) presents a most favourable aspect. The capital, it will be seen, consists of three items—(1) £20,000, State endowment for the year; (2) £3,500, representing the annual provision for pension claims under the Constitution Act; (3) 4 per cent. deductions from salaries of Officers and others for the year, £50,494 0s. 2d.; total, £73,994 0s. 2d., which, with £1,806 15s. 1d. fines and interest added, make up the sum of £75,800 15s. 3d. The Expenditure of the year shows that against item No. 2, £2,535 18s. 5d. has been paid for pension claims under the Constitution Act, leaving a surplus of £964 4s. 7d. to carry forward—while the accrued interest on the year's receipts has more than sufficed to meet the gratuities and and allowances granted under the Act, amounting respectively to £1,415 13s. 4d. for the former and £244 2s. 11d. for the latter. Thus the Superannuation Account will commence the year 1886—the second year of its operation—with a capital sum of £71,605 0s. 7d., bearing interest at the rate of 4 per centum per annum,—a result with which those interested should have every reason to be satisfied.

18. In July last, Sir ALEXANDER STUART, the then Colonial Secretary, addressed a minute to the Board, inviting them, as the result of their experience, to point out what might be considered defects in the Act, and to make suggestions for their amendment. Sir ALEXANDER'S minute with the Board's reply will be found in the Appendix. After a year's close attention to the operation of the Act, the Board do not hesitate to say that, with the abolition of classification and the annual increments provided by the Act, or a modification of the system in such a way as to be mainly applicable to the junior members of the Service, and with a reasonable compromise in regard to the number of years of back payment for purposes of superannuation allowance, the Act, with some other minor amendments as suggested in the Minute of 9th September, 1885, could be satisfactorily administered, and with advantage to the Service and to the Country.

Given under our hands at Sydney, the twenty-second day of March, 1886.

APPENDIX III.

Minute of Sir Alexander Stuart on the subject of amending the Act, and the Board's suggested amendments.

Colonial Secretary's Office, Sydney.

Civil Service Act.

UNDERSTANDING that the Civil Service Board, in the exercise of the very arduous duties which have fallen to their lot, in the preparation of the First Official List, have experienced considerable difficulty in the classification of certain portions of the Employés of the Government, I take the earliest opportunity since my return of asking the Board to let me have their Report, stating as concisely as possible what these difficulties are, in order that I may see whether any of them presented themselves to me in the framing of the Act, and also whether it is necessary to take any steps in the next Session of Parliament to apply for a remedy. I will also be glad to be furnished with any views or suggestions which the Board may have to make upon that subject.

A.S.

11 May, 1885.

The Chairman, Civil Service Board, to The Principal Under Secretary.

Sir,

I have the honor, in reply to the Colonial Secretary's minute of 11th May, 1885, to forward to you the enclosed memorandum embodying resolutions finally passed at a meeting of the Civil Service Board, held on Wednesday, September 9th inst., suggesting certain amendments in the Civil Service Act 1884.

It was also decided to submit for Sir Alexander Stuart's consideration, as an appendix to the above memorandum, copies of the following papers, viz. :—

1. A resolution of the Board passed at their meeting of June 8th, 1885.
2. A rejected amendment moved on that day, by A. C. Fraser, Esq., and seconded by C. A. Goodchap, Esq., together with a statement of the reasons of the minority for bringing forward the said amendment.
- 3.

3. The case submitted to the Honorable the Attorney-General, in reference to the powers of the Board in dealing with appeals under the provisions of the 17th section of the Civil Service Act.
4. The opinion of the Honorable the Attorney-General thereon.
5. The minute of the Honorable the Colonial Secretary, of 24th August, 1885, on the same subject.

I have, &c.,

G. EAGAR,

Chairman of the Civil Service Board.

[Enclosures.]

Memorandum in reply to the Minute of the Honorable the Colonial Secretary, of date 11 May, 1885.

THE Civil Service Board having had the minute of the Honorable the Colonial Secretary, of date 11th May, 1885, under consideration, beg to invite his attention to the following matters, which in their opinion require to be dealt with, by amendment of the Civil Service Act, at the earliest possible date.

1. Section 55 of the Act provides for a deduction of 4 per cent. on the total salary received by any officer during his term of service, prior to the passing of the Act; and for an actuarial computation of the annual deduction from his superannuation allowance, which should be made as the equivalent of such 4 per cent. deduction.

The Civil Service Board are of opinion that this provision of the Act is inequitable in its operation, and that it entails consequences which were probably not foreseen by the Legislature.

A pension being of the nature of an annuity, for which the officer pays towards the Superannuation Account a certain consideration in the form of the 4 per cent. deduction from annual salary, should, like all other annuities (other things being equal), be larger in amount in proportion to the greater age and less expectancy of life of the recipient, instead of as, under this section, smaller.

Thus, an officer of sixty years of age retiring after a service of twenty years, whose aggregate salary amounts to £10,000, and whose present annual salary is £600, will be entitled to £200 a year as pension, but will owe to the Account £400. The annuity value of such an officer's life being 9½ years, will make the annual deduction from pension £43 4s. 10d., or £200 less £43 4s. 10d. equals £156 15s. 2d. net; while a man of seventy years of age, of like service and salary, would have an annuity value of life of only 6½ years, and, consequently, the deduction from pension in his case would be £64 per annum, thereby reducing his pension of £200 to £136. It will thus be seen that an officer who retires at the earliest statutory age of sixty years, according to actuarial calculations, will receive £20 15s. 2d. per annum more than the man who remains in the Service to the age of seventy years; or, to take a wider view, the officer at sixty years of age may be expected to live fifteen years, and to draw fifteen years' pension, which, at £156 15s. 2d. equals £2,351 7s. 6d.; while the officer at seventy would not draw more than ten years' pension at £136, or in all £1,360—or about £1,000 less than the officer retiring at sixty years of age.

In other words, a man at seventy years of age must show nearly twenty-four years' service to entitle him to the same annual pension as the man aged sixty would receive for twenty years' service.

The Board are further of opinion that the deductions from the pensions of old officers reduce the amount so seriously as to act as a deterrent to their retirement from service, because the older and probably the less efficient an officer is, the less likely is he voluntarily to relinquish his position while the pension he would receive bears so small a ratio to the salary he enjoys; and thus one inducement to the younger officers of the Service to subscribe to the Superannuation Account is withheld, viz., the prospect of earlier promotion by reason of the retirement of the senior officers.

For these reasons, the Board suggest that the deduction of 4 per cent. on back salary should be eliminated from the Act; or if this be not considered desirable, then that the deduction should be limited to ten years of service.

2. The Board would also draw attention to a want of harmony between the 16th, 48th, 52nd, and 53rd sections.

In the 16th section it provides "that, in making classification, it shall be competent for the Board to value and include, as if it were salary, the annual value of any official residence, or any allowance which any officer may receive for house-rent, fees, or otherwise, except for forage, or travelling expenses, or equipment."

The

The 48th says "that superannuation allowance shall be computed on the annual amount of salary or emoluments * * * * received by an officer during the three years preceding his retirement"; while the 53rd section provides for a deduction of 4 per cent. from salary only; so that an officer whose salary is £300 per annum, and whose rent and other allowances are valued at £150, would be granted classification and allowed a pension computed on £450, while contributing to the Account on the salary of £300 only. The Account would thus lose the 4 per cent. on £150 each year.

The officer with salary and allowances as above would pay £12 to the Account, while an officer in receipt of salary of £450 would pay £18.

A slight verbal amendment would remedy this defect, by the insertion of the words "and allowances" after the word "salary" in the last line of the 52nd section, and by the insertion of the words "and allowances" after "salaries" in the fifth line of the 53rd section.

3. The Board desire also to invite the attention of the Honorable the Colonial Secretary to the propriety of abolishing the distinction between the General and Professional Divisions of the Service, such distinction being in the opinion of the Board inexpedient, and tending to create dissatisfaction.

4. The attention of the Colonial Secretary is invited to the last part of the 27th section, providing that "the salary of any officer who shall be promoted to fill a vacancy in the same class shall not by reason of such promotion be increased, but shall remain subject to the ordinary rate of increment in the class."

This provision, it is pointed out, in many instances must act inequitably, and it is recommended that the section be amended so as to admit of some increase being granted within the maximum of the class, upon the recommendation of the Board and the approval of the Minister.

As an illustration of the unfairness of the provision as it stands, the Board would adduce the case of (say) the Police Magistrate of a comparatively unimportant country district who is transferred to a similar position in one of the large towns, in which his duties and responsibilities would be of course very greatly increased.

This officer, in the event of his belonging to the same class as the officer whom he may succeed, does not obtain the higher salary paid to his predecessor, and in fact gains no increase whatever by reason of his promotion. The power of recommendation of some increase should, the Board think, be extended so as to cover cases of the kind quoted.

5. The Board also recommend that the system of indiscriminate annual increments to the several classes of officers in the Public Service, as defined and set forth in clause 4 of the "Civil Service Act," should be modified, and that the right to the increment in each individual case should be made to depend upon length of service, merit, capacity, and good behaviour, certified to by the Head of the Department, and subject, in case of refusal, to appeal to the Board,—or in such other way to accomplish the desired object as the wisdom of Parliament may devise.

This probably would require the repeal of clause 6 of the Act, which repeal is considered desirable.

6. The Board suggest that the "interpretation clause," under the word "Officer," be amended by the addition of the following words:—"Teachers under the Educational Division, and all permanent salaried officials brought under Rules and Regulations, shall be deemed to be Officers for the purposes of Parts V and VI."

7. That clause 40 may be so amended that leave of absence on full pay may be granted for twelve months to any officer of thirty years' service.

8. That Part V and the administration of the Superannuation Account be placed under the control of the Board.

9. That the words "necessitous circumstances" be omitted from clause 51, and that in the case of the death of any officer not in receipt of a gratuity or pension his widow or children shall be entitled to a return of the premiums paid by him to the Account not exceeding the amount of six months' salary.

10. That clause 60 be amended to read as follows:—

"60. Nothing herein contained shall be taken to prevent the Governor from recommending Parliament to provide independently of the Superannuation Account for any addition to any retiring allowance or gratuity in consideration of any special services rendered by any officer."

11. That clause 18 be amended by the omission of the words "and shall rank in the 4th class."

THE Board have consented to forward a copy of a resolution which was moved by A. C. Fraser, Esq., and seconded by C. A. Goodchap, Esq., but rejected by a majority of the Board; together with a copy of the written reasons furnished by the mover and seconder in support of the resolution. No. 1.

Extract from Minutes of a Meeting of the Civil Service Board held on 8th June, 1885.

John Williams, Esq., moved the following resolution:—"That appeals under clause 17 must be considered upon the following grounds only, viz. :—

- "1st. The correction of clerical errors, as for instance, where the class assigned is not in accordance with the rate of salary.
- "2nd. Where the full amount of emolument has not been furnished to the Board in the original return, or where emoluments have been omitted therefrom.
- "3rd. Where the names of officers or other persons have been omitted in the original returns.
- "4th. Where cause can be shown for transfer from the General to the Professional Division."

Whereupon A. C. Fraser, Esq., moved as an amendment—"That the Board shall consider the appeal of any officer which sets forth his ground of dissatisfaction on account of the inadequate remuneration received by him for services performed."

The amendment was put to the meeting and lost on the following division, by the casting vote of the Chairman :—

No. 2.

Reasons submitted to the Civil Service Board in support of their amendment, by A. C. Fraser, Esq., and C. A. Goodchap, Esq.

A MAJORITY of the Civil Service Board are of opinion that the 17th section of the Civil Service Act gives that body no power to entertain any appeal by an officer against his classification which is based on the ground that the duties pertaining to his office entitle him to a higher status and larger remuneration than have been assigned to him; in fact, the majority of the Board are of opinion that they can only make a recommendation in those cases where the appeals are based on allegations of error on the part of the Board in classifying according to salary or the value of emoluments.

Assuming that this reading of the section is correct (two members of the Board dissenting from that view), it is urged by the minority that the power alluded to is one which should be conferred on the Board, and that the Act should be amended accordingly.

It may have been that some officers whose position in the classification was determined by the salary appropriated for their offices for the year 1884 were in the performance of duties, the nature and responsibilities of which would otherwise entitle them to higher classification and emolument, and it must be admitted that in the progress of time the duties and responsibilities of many officers will of necessity largely increase. In both these instances, such officers would have, under the present interpretation of the Act, no relief, but would be in the same position as other officers whose duties and responsibilities did not equitably entitle them to the same classification, or would not increase to such an extent as to justify their promotion to a higher position. In fact, as the Act is now being administered, there are no means whereby an officer whose classification is unduly low, or whose emoluments are inadequate to the duties of his office, can be raised in the scale of classification or be awarded a higher rate of pay. This, it need hardly be pointed out, is a very undesirable state of affairs. It is difficult to believe that such was the intention of the Legislature when passing the Act, and it was most assuredly never contemplated by the Civil Servants when they petitioned Parliament for the Bill. One of the chief purposes for which it was generally understood the Bill was introduced was to provide a remedy for the anomalies and cases of injustice then existing in the Civil Service (certainly not to perpetuate them); and the consent of the Civil Servants to the fixing of their positions according to the salaries of 1884, as an ultimate measure of relief, would, it is believed, have been withheld had they not not relied upon the privilege indicated in the 17th section, of appealing to the Board against any injustice that might occur in individual cases through such an indiscriminate mode of classification. They reasonably anticipated that, under that section, the Board would on appeal inquire into the merits of every such case and report thereon to the Government, who would confirm or otherwise any recommendation made,—Parliament of course having the opportunity of becoming acquainted with the result, as provided for under the same section.

APPENDIX IV.

Opinion of the Attorney-General (Hon. W. B. DALLEY) on case submitted.

No. 3.

Case submitted by the Civil Service Board to the Honorable the Attorney-General.

THE Civil Service Act, 1884.—In the matter of appeals as to classification. The third section of the Act declares the classification shall be made by officers in the Service at the time of the passing of the Act being assigned a position in one of the divisions or classes mentioned in that section, in which the several classes are based upon the annual salaries fixed by the Appropriation Act of 1884.

An appeal from the classification made by the Board is provided by section seventeco, which declares that any officer dissatisfied with the position assigned to him in such classification may forward to the Board an appeal setting forth the grounds of his dissatisfaction; and if the Board shall thereupon recommend that such officer be changed from one division to the other, or be raised from one class to another, the Governor may adopt or decline such recommendation.

It is understood that several appeals are being made as though the officers appealing are entitled, from length of service, from the description of work done by them, or for other reasons irrespective of the amount of salary appearing in the Appropriation Act of 1884, to be placed in a different classification than that assigned by the Board, and the Board therefore request to be advised,—

1st. Whether the classification which has been made by the Board, based upon the annual salary fixed by the Appropriation Act of 1884, with the value of house-rent and fees added as provided in section 16, can be appealed against upon any ground other than that the officer appealing is in receipt of a higher salary, &c., than that in respect of which the Board have fixed his classification.

2nd. Whether upon such appeal the Board are entitled to take into consideration the length of service, the description of work performed, or the manner in which his services have been rendered by the officer appealing, or, in other words, has the Board power to deal with appeals, excepting for the purpose of rectifying errors in division and classification arising from imperfect information afforded to the Board or otherwise?

3rd. Will the recommendation of the Board (under section 17) upon appeal to raise an officer from a lower to a higher class, if adopted by the Governor, carry with it the right on the part of the appellant to receive in virtue of such recommendation a higher salary than that provided for him by the Appropriation Act of 1884?

No. 4.

Opinion of the Honorable the Attorney-General.

BY the 3rd section (Part I, classification) the assignment of the position of officers (with the exception of probationers or the cadet or junior class) is founded upon the annual salaries fixed by the Appropriation Act of 1884. By section 17 it is provided that officers dissatisfied with their assigned positions may appeal to the Board, and that the Board may recommend a change from one division to another, or a raising from one class to another. I presume the question upon which my opinion is asked is this: is the appeal limited as to its grounds to whether the appellant is in receipt of a higher salary than that in respect of which the Board has fixed the classification.

I am inclined to think that it is so, and that the functions of the Board were expressly, and it may be advisedly, limited to a correction of errors in classification, subject to modification by the provisions of section 16, the terms of which still expressly limit exercise of Board's discretion to the emoluments received.

I think to invest the Board with the functions of determining classification by virtue of the reasons suggested as grounds of appeal would be to give them powers to materially, and it might be dangerously, interfere with the regulation of the Public Service, which powers can only be properly exercised by the Executive.

With regard to the question as to whether, on the adoption of the recommendation of the Board by the Government, the salary of the appellant would be increased, I think that the increase would be limited to the minimum amount of the class to which he might be advanced, on the sum being voted by Parliament. (See section 11.)

APPENDIX V.

APPENDIX V.

Minute of the Honorable the Colonial Secretary of 24th August, 1885.

No. 5.

Colonial Secretary's Office, Sydney.

Civil Service Board—Powers of appeal under section 17.

The case submitted to Mr. Dalley seems to me to embrace all that can be said in this matter as regards the construction of the Act; but I can say, with regard to the intention of the Government, that it was never intended that the Civil Service Board should have the power of deciding whether the salaries paid were sufficient or insufficient for the services performed. I doubt whether Parliament would have allowed such, even if we had intended to ask for the power. I had no doubt that one of the effects of the Act would be to bring to light many glaring inconsistencies, owing to the mode in which appointments had previously and for so many years been made; and that it was quite possible that eventually some steps might have to be taken with regard to them; but I purposely did not enumber the Bill with any provisions to this effect, because, amongst other reasons, if the Board had been empowered within even strict limits to raise salaries which they deemed insufficient, it would also have been necessary to invest it with power to reduce salaries which were in excess of the value of the services performed.

I do not think that it would be beyond the due administration of the Board to attach to its report a schedule of those who consider themselves by their appeals to be underpaid. Such a course would at least bring the matter under the notice of Parliament, and form the foundation upon which some steps might be taken; but I am quite clear that the Act neither does confer, nor was intended to confer, the power of rectification upon the Civil Service Board.

I may mention that I have been applied to in several cases by the Heads of Departments to sanction the formation of a new office, with a higher salary than that enjoyed by some officer in the Department, accompanied by a recommendation that such officer be appointed to the new office, and that, being a new office under clause 28, the Minister could confirm the appointment. To all these I have returned the answer that, as they appear to me to be an attempt to procure a higher salary than that intended by the Act, for performing the same services under a new name, I could be no party thereto.

Rules and Regulations of the Post and Telegraph Department.

[Supplement to Government Gazette, 29 June, 1885.]

General Post Office, Sydney, 24th June, 1885.

HIS Excellency the Governor, with the advice of the Executive Council, has approved of the following Rules for the guidance of officials in the General Post Office, and also in Country and Branch Post Offices, so far as they can be made applicable.

JAMES NORTON.

Access to Post Office—Official Declaration.

1. Every official on entering the service of the Post Office must, before performing any official duty, make a declaration before a Magistrate in the form prescribed by the Postage Act, which must be obtained from the Head Office. No person who has not subscribed the declaration required by the Postage Act shall have access to the Post Office, unless accompanied by a responsible officer.

Private addresses of officials.

2. Every official in the Mail Branch must have his place of abode properly registered in the Superintendent's Office, and any change in his residence must be notified in writing immediately after it takes place.

Attention to instructions.

3. Officials must attend strictly to the orders of their superior officers, and use all diligence in the faithful and efficient performance of their duties.

Learning duties.

4. Every person appointed to the Mail Branch must make himself acquainted with the postage rates and the names and addresses of the private box-holders. Every facility must be offered for the attainment of this very necessary knowledge, and officers in charge of divisions should take every opportunity of instructing those under them in all matters appertaining to Mail Branch duties.

Punctual attendance of officials.

5. Every official must attend the office punctually at the hours appointed, and immediately write his name legibly in the attendance book, with the exact time of his arrival. He must not quit the office during business hours without first obtaining permission from the officer in charge of the Branch in which he is employed.

Hours of attendance.

6. Every officer is expected to work at least seven hours a day; and the stampers, sorters, letter-carriers, messengers, and others, whose duties are of a less responsible as well as a more mechanical nature, are required to work eight hours a day; but all persons must understand that the nature of the Postal Service is such as to render it necessary in the public interest that the employes do duty at times for even longer periods than specified above.

Absence of officials.

7. If any official should, on account of illness, be unable to attend, he must send a written notice, so that the officer in charge of the Department may be apprised of it before the duties commence. He must at the same time send the key of his drawer. Should his illness be so severe as to necessitate his his absence from duty for a longer period than twenty-four hours, it will be necessary for him to furnish a medical certificate stating the nature of his complaint, which certificate will be required to be renewed from time to time in the event of his illness proving to be of prolonged duration. Stampers, sorters, letter-carriers, mail-drivers, mail-boys, messengers, and window-cleaners, when absent through illness, must at once communicate with the medical officer of the Department.

8. Any application from an officer in reference to his duties or pay, or any communication he may desire to make relating to official matters, must be addressed to the Secretary, and forwarded through the officer in charge of the Branch or Post Office, as the case may be, in which the applicant is employed, and if he be dissatisfied with the result, he may appeal to the Postmaster-General. Officers are strictly forbidden to make any such application or other communication through the public, or in any way, except in the manner just described; and should an irregular application be received, the officer in whose behalf it is made will be subject to a censure, or other punishment proportionate to the extent of his participation in the violation of the rule. Officers are absolutely forbidden to communicate with the Press either directly or indirectly on matters relating to the Postal or Telegraphic Services, and any breach of this rule will be visited with instant dismissal.

As to how communications from any officer should be made. Communications through the Press strictly forbidden.

9. In all cases of exchange, between officers of the Post Office and officers of any other Department, the parties will respectively occupy the lowest rank on the list of officers enjoying the same salary.

As regards officers exchanging situations.

10. When documents are referred to any officer for inquiry or report, the same must be promptly dealt with and returned to the officer in charge.

Official papers to be promptly dealt with.

11. It must be perfectly understood that any postage stamps, money, or other articles found in the office must be immediately given up to the officer in charge of the sorting; any letters found open or torn are likewise to be taken to him; and anything suspicious or irregular in regard to the fastening or seal of a mail-bag must be at once brought under his notice. Every other error or irregularity coming under the observation of any official must be reported in the proper form, as soon as possible after it is observed, and any omission to report so will be considered and dealt with as a neglect of duty.

Articles found to be handed to proper officers.—Irregularities to be reported.

12. Should any official have reason to suspect, or should it come to his knowledge, that any one in the Post Office is dishonest, he should at once make a confidential report on the subject.

Suspected dishonesty to be reported.

13. Officials are not permitted to take or open letters addressed to themselves whilst the sorting of letters, &c., is in progress.

Officials not to take or open letters addressed to themselves whilst sorting is in progress.—(Gambling and betting forbidden.)

14. Gambling or betting of any description is strictly forbidden in the General Post Office, and no postal official will be allowed to bet or gamble with any other postal official either in or outside of the General Post Office. Any violation of this rule shall be met by instant dismissal of the offenders, and any official failing to report any infringement of this regulation which may come under his notice will be severely punished.

15. Any official desirous of retiring from the service must give timely notice, in order that arrangements may be made for the performance of his duties; and should he leave the department before his resignation is accepted he will incur dismissal.

Resignation of officials.

16. Impressions of the date stamp of the office must at the time the stamps are changed be initialled by the official appointed to that duty before any letters are stamped, and he must be careful to see that the whole of the receivers are cleared, and all the letters, &c., in the office are stamped before such change is made. This rule must be strictly adhered to.

Date stamp impressions.

17. Stampers, country postmasters, and others entrusted with the duty of stamping letters must always keep their date and other stamps clean and in proper order.*

Date stamps, &c., to be kept clean.

18. The office seal must only be used for sealing mail-bags and official communications; and on no account must it be used for private communications. Persons not performing any duty in connection with the stamping must never be allowed to have possession, even for a moment, of the stamps and seals, which, when not in use, must be kept secured.

Use and care of office seal and date stamp.

19. All officials receiving mails should carefully examine the seals and fastenings of the bags, in order to ascertain if they have been tampered with.

Fastenings and seals of bags to be examined.—Examination of mail-bags.

20. All mail-bags, after the contents have been taken therefrom, should be thoroughly examined, and must be turned inside out, to make sure that nothing has been left in them.

21. The postmaster or receiving officer must, on opening a bag, look for the "Registered Mail Slip," which the despatching officer encloses in a bag when a registered mail is forwarded; and should this slip be found in the bag and not the registered mail, the receiving officer must at once report the circumstance, calling in, if possible, another person to verify the fact. The mail-bag must also be carefully kept for examination until the matter is cleared up. The lists on which registered letters are entered should also be examined and checked, and if any registered letter be missing, a similar course should be pursued to that which is necessary in the case of a missing registered mail. Unless this is done, the postmaster or receiving officer who is guilty of such neglect will be held liable for the loss. It is of paramount importance that the receiving postmaster should at once return, duly acknowledged, the registry list which may accompany the mail, and the despatching postmaster should carefully watch for the return to him of such registry list, failing which, he should at once report the circumstance.

Contents of mail to be examined.—Course to be pursued in event of a registered mail or letter being missing.

22. The official in charge of the sorting, whether of inward or outward mails, must take care that all the pigeon-holes are examined before delivery commences or the mails are despatched.

Sorting divisions to be examined.

23. Letters found misplaced or mis-sorted, and thereby delayed, must in all cases be endorsed by the officer finding them, so that the delay may be properly accounted for.

Letters found mis-sorted to be endorsed by officer finding them.

24. Every official who despatches or opens a bag containing registered letters must completely satisfy himself as to the agreement between the entries on the bill or list and the registered letters to which the entries refer, so as to be able, if required, to make affidavit on the subject.

Registered letters and list thereof.

25. When letters that contain coin, or are otherwise liable to be officially registered, are posted after the closing of the registry office, they will be detained until the office is again opened, even though such detention may cause them to miss a mail. When letters are discovered to contain coin, whether registered or otherwise, they must be at once marked on the face with the word "Coin" in red ink; and Letters containing coin to be registered.

* Warm water and soap, or kerosene oil, applied with a brush daily, or from time to time, according as the stamps are more or less used, will effect this purpose, and cause the stamps to give clear and perfect impressions. The best mode of placing the ink on the pad is to thin it, first with a little oil, until it has been brought to a proper consistency, then to spread it evenly upon the leather pad, after which, a piece of cloth or flannel should be stretched tightly over the pad, when, every time the pad is struck with the stamp, the ink will ooze through, and a sufficient quantity, and no more, will adhere to the stamp.

and in all lists, &c., upon which they may subsequently be entered a similar note in the margin must be made, taking care that they are checked with the lists immediately before the final closing of the mail.

Delivery of registered letters by clerks.

26. Any official upon delivering a registered letter must obtain a receipt or an order for the same, signed by the person to whom such letter is addressed; in the event, however, of the letter being addressed to a house of business, a receipt may be taken from a clerk or person known to be permanently connected with such establishment.

Care to be taken of registered letters.

27. Especial care must be exercised in the treatment of registered letters, packets, and newspapers, so that they can at any time be traced to each person through whose hands they have passed.

When registered letter, &c., is lost.

28. Should a registered letter, packet, or newspaper be at any time missing, and the person in the employment of the Post Office who last signed for it be unable satisfactorily to account for the same, he will be held liable for the loss.

No deviation to be made in the ordinary delivery of letters.

29. No official other than the officer in charge may deliver any letter, &c., at the office before the general despatch or out of the usual course of delivery, nor may he take any letter, &c., from the public to be included in any mail which has already closed. Any deviation from this rule will be visited severely.

Re-posted letters, &c.

30. When letters, &c., which have passed through the post are re-posted without the original address being changed, they must be marked and endorsed by the official first noticing them.

Letters posted not to be returned to sender.

31. A letter once posted cannot be given up again without the consent in writing of the person to whom it is addressed, or by order of the Governor. No request, however urgent, will justify a departure from this rule.

Husband and wife's correspondence.

32. A letter addressed to a husband cannot be delivered to his wife, nor can a letter addressed to a wife be delivered to her husband without the consent in writing of the person named in the address, or the direction of the Governor. This regulation, however, is only intended to prevent the delivery to the husband of letters for the wife, or vice versa, when there is any objection on either side for the delivery of letters addressed to the one to the other; and when no such objection is known to exist, letters can be delivered to either party without the formality of a written order.

Re-direction of letters to be promptly attended to.

33. All letters to be re-addressed in accordance with registered instructions must be so re-addressed within 12 (twelve) hours after the general delivery next after the arrival of any mail.

Letters with stamps unobliterated, or bearing insufficient postage.

34. Every official must be especially careful not to deliver letters, the postage stamps upon which have not been properly obliterated, and any letters, &c., found to be underpaid should be properly weighed and charged.

Postage collections to be promptly paid.

35. Every official must, without fail, pay or cause to be paid daily to the proper officer all postage collected by him—any detention of money will render the offender liable to immediate dismissal.

Unnecessary expenditure incurred may be charged to official.

36. When an unnecessary expense, whether to the Department or to the public, is caused by the fault of any official, the Postmaster-General will, if he think fit, direct such expense to be paid by the official concerned.

Treatment of unstamped letters for public Departments.

37. Any letters posted from any Public Department unstamped, must be sent to the Dead Letter Office to be stamped and forwarded. Application for the proper amount to be made to the Department from or for which the letters were addressed.

Information as to letters, &c., not to be given to persons unconnected with the Department.

38. No information must be given respecting letters which pass through a Post Office, except to the persons to whom they are addressed. No official must make public any official communication which he may receive, unless he should be directed to do so; nor must he make known information which he may obtain by means of his office, of the private affairs of any person; information, however, may be given as to the address of any person, unless there is reason to suppose that such a course would be disapproved of by the person whose address is sought.

Loss of keys.

39. The alleged loss of a key of a letter-receiver or safe should be at once reported, and steps taken to change the lock.

Attempted deception as to place of posting.

40. If a letter or packet be forwarded under cover to any postmaster with a request that he will re-post it at his office, the letter or packet on being re-posted should be endorsed with the words, "Posted at —, under cover to postmaster of —," the first blank being filled up with the name of the office where the letter was first posted, and the second blank with the name of the office at which it is re-posted.

Book packets may be kept back when there is an unusual influx of letters.

41. When, owing to a great and unusual influx of letters, books, &c., the transmission or delivery of the letters would be delayed if the whole mail were dealt with without distinction, book packets may be kept back till the next despatch or delivery.

Relating to letter-carriers' uniforms and appearance.

42. Letter-carriers to wear winter uniforms from the 24th May to 8th November, and summer uniforms from the 9th November to 23rd May. In wet weather waterproof clothing must be worn. Letter-carriers must, when in uniform, always wear the coat buttoned up, and they must have no pockets except a small one in the coat for cash. When on duty every letter-carrier must appear in his official costume, and be at all times neat and clean in his person and clothing, and must not loiter, smoke, or carry private parcels. Should the uniform be unduly worn, or abused or lost, it may be renewed at the cost of the officer at fault.

Letter-carrier must not perform another's duty without sanction. Regular delivery to be made by letter-carrier.

43. Should a letter-carrier at any time deliver the letters of another letter-carrier, in order that the latter may be absent without leave, both will be liable to dismissal.

Speedy delivery of letters, &c.

44. A letter-carrier must not deliver any letter, &c., at the office before the general despatch of letter-carriers, nor may he deliver any letters, &c., in the street. All must be delivered in their regular course, and at the houses to which they are addressed, and letters must not be put under the doors, even if the request that this be done be made by the owners. Any infringement of this rule will render him liable to dismissal.

Delivered letters not to be taken back.

45. Every letter-carrier must use all possible diligence in getting the letters, &c., for his beat properly sorted before the time appointed for the general despatch; he must lose no time in getting to his district; and when on his delivery (which must be performed in the order laid down for his guidance), he must exert himself to ensure its early completion; and should it be shown that he has loitered upon his beat or otherwise broken this rule, he will be fined a day's pay for the first offence, or may be more severely dealt with.

Undelivered letters.

46. A letter-carrier must not take back a letter, &c., which has been opened or tampered with, unless it has been improperly addressed or delivered in error.

47. All letters, &c., which cannot be delivered must be given back to the officer in charge of the division by the letter-carrier immediately upon his return to the office, and the non-delivery in each case explained. No letter, however, must be finally returned to the office until every possible inquiry for its owner owner has failed. No excuse can be taken for the detention of a letter addressed to any one whose name appears in the Sydney Directory, provided such person is to be found at the address given.

48. A letter-carrier must not take to his own house any undelivered letters, &c. Any breach of this regulation will be severely dealt with.

49. Should a letter-carrier have occasion to re-direct letters, &c., from his own to another beat, he must (having first signed his initials to the re-direction) bring them back to the office on his return thereto; and should he have any letter given to him, supposed to be for any party on his beat but which he does not succeed in delivering, he must not fail to endorse it as not known and return it immediately.

50. Immediately upon his return to the office, each letter-carrier must enter in his Daily Statement Book the time of completion of his delivery.

51. Every letter-carrier, on delivering a registered letter, must require the receipt to be signed by the person addressed; when this is not practicable, it must be signed by some responsible person known to the letter-carrier to be permanently connected with the house; or, when the letter is directed to a place of business, by a clerk or other person known by the letter-carrier to belong to the establishment.

52. No letter-carrier or messenger is permitted to take letters from the public to be registered.

53. Letter-carriers and messengers are prohibited from distributing any letters, newspapers, &c., except such as have passed through a Post Office.

54. Letter-carriers are not allowed to receive any payment, beyond the postage, for the delivery or collection of any letter, &c. This prohibition does not, however, extend to Christmas gratuities; but letter-carriers will not be allowed to importune persons even for these.

55. Officials are not to ride on any Post Office carriage, except when authorised to do so; and it must be reported by the driver when any case occurs of an unauthorised person so doing, whether he is in the Post Office service or not.

56. Mail-cart drivers, mounted letter-carriers, and mail-boys are forbidden to drive or ride furiously, and mail-boys are forbidden to ride in company.

57. The attention of all persons connected with the Post Office Department is called to the penalties incurred under the Postal Acts for wilful breach of the provisions thereof, or of these rules. Postmasters, clerks, letter-carriers, sorters, and others employed by the Post Office Department, will be liable to fines not exceeding the undermentioned amounts for irregularities committed by them:—

	s.	d.
For every mis-sent letter and packet	1	0
" " newspaper	0	6
" omission to report a mis-sent letter, packet, or newspaper	2	6
" mis-sent registered letter	2	0
" omission to enter a registered letter, &c., or revenue remittance on bill	2	0
" other irregularity not defined	10	0

58. Every official should obtain access to a copy of each edition of the Postal Guide, which he must consider as a book of instructions for himself as well as one of reference for the public.

59. These rules are not intended to supersede the "General Rules and Regulations" issued for the conduct and "guidance of Postmaster and others," but to supplement them. And wherever the word "Postmaster" occurs in those rules it must be held to refer also to any official employed in the Mail Branch when applicable.

60. Ignorance of the foregoing rules or of the postal laws cannot be accepted in extenuation of any breach or neglect of duty; and every official must procure a copy of the postal laws and make himself thoroughly acquainted with the provisions thereof, and also with the working of the Department generally.
