

Housing (Amendment) Bill, 1923.

EXPLANATORY MEMORANDA.

THE object of this Bill is to abolish the Housing Board and to make suitable arrangements to wind up the business of the Housing Board Office.

The Government has decided that no more houses shall be built; and it is proposed, as soon as possible, to close the office. Before that can be done there are numerous transactions which need to be settled, sales not yet completed, disputes not settled, vacant lands to be disposed of, and so on. For dealing with these matters the Minister does not need a Housing Board, considering that he can bring matters to finality much more quickly by direct Ministerial administration. Hence the proposal to abolish the Board and transfer to the Minister the powers given in the Act to the Board.

To enable the Minister to close transactions quickly certain new powers are needed—power to sell superfluous lands, power to grant leases, power to agree to cancellation of sales, power to make concessions, to remit amounts due, and to extend time for payment, and so on.

There are numerous actions which the Housing Board has taken, not covered by existing Act. Some were submitted for Minister's approval before being done, while others were not. These are, submitted for validation (vide clause 5).

The Minister proposes, as part of the winding-up of the Housing Board business, to transfer portions of the work to other Departments already doing similar work. Thus he proposes to transfer to the Government Savings Bank the business of collecting the instalments of purchase money on the houses sold. And it may be found desirable to arrange with the Public Trustee to collect the rents of houses not sold, but let at a rental. It may possibly be found desirable to transfer the management of the resumed properties to the Harbour Trust; and so on. The Bill contains provisions giving the necessary power to make these transfers and re-arrangements if, upon investigation, they be decided upon.

Finally, the Bill contains a large number of consequential amendments in the Housing Acts necessary to give effect to the matters thus outlined.

No. , 1923.
