MEMORANDUM

The following information was obtained from the records of the Department of the Interior, Bureau of Land Management, on the subject of the land owned by the United States in the State of California, and is being furnished to you for your information.

The total area of land owned by the United States in California is approximately 100,000,000 acres, of which about 50,000,000 acres are in the public domain. The remaining 50,000,000 acres are either reserved lands or lands held in trust for the benefit of the people of California.

The public domain lands are those lands which have not been reserved for some special purpose, and which are available for sale or disposal to the public. These lands are held in fee simple by the United States, and are subject to the same laws and regulations as other lands owned by the United States.

The reserved lands are those lands which have been set aside for some special purpose, such as national parks, national monuments, and national forests. These lands are held in trust for the benefit of the people of California, and are not available for sale or disposal to the public.

The lands held in trust for the benefit of the people of California are those lands which have been set aside for the benefit of some particular class of people, such as the Indians, the miners, and the homesteaders. These lands are held in trust for the benefit of the people of California, and are not available for sale or disposal to the public.

Very truly yours,
Director
