I wish to submit to the committee an opinion on the use of non-registered motorised vehicles. I think they should have some kind of horn or warning device on them as a lot of people can not hear them approaching. Also some form of instruction in their use would be welcomed as a lot of people who use them have either never driven a motor vehicle or have forgotten road rules. I firmly believe there should be some form of registration so that there is provision for insurance against an accident. Another point of concern is how they are left on the footpaths without regard for pedestrians trying to walk around them or having them take up the whole aisle in a supermarket and not use common courtesy to allow others to get past them.
