The use of these vehicles appears to be more apparent because of the fact there is no need for licence insurance you just get one and go. People with dementia failing health and just no reflex action are taking to the streets. There have been many dreadful accidents and something needs to be done. The majority of people who own one of these (in particular) scooters can't get a car licence so hence the scooter. Before more deaths occur and more people are mamed something needs to be done to put in place rules and regulations (especially insurance). I am all for independence but at what price?
