

Submission
No 512

MOBILE SPEED CAMERA ENFORCEMENT PROGRAMS IN NSW

Name: Mr Mark Vinci

Date Received: 6 July 2021

Would like to know how the allegations that mobile speed camera's that have no signage reduce road fatalities. As if one is to receive said infringement it take 3 weeks for it to be received by the individual or business. Warnings create attention to a dangerous place.

Most accidents that occur are due to drivers lack of vehicle control and fatigue.

More attention should be focused on driver training as the more a person understands on how a vehicle will react in varying conditions will reduce if not eliminate road fatalities.

I am in agreeance in police stopping speeding drivers as this informed that the driver is doing wrong there and then and has a far better result rather than an infringement being sent and received after 3 weeks.

Therefore signage slows drivers down if there are problem areas, and if they don't then an infringement issued...but to work effectively this infringement would need to be delivered within a couple of days otherwise most road services such as services NSW have the registration linked to an email so a notice can be processed essentially instantaneously. This also give the driver the opportunity to correct their behaviour if they are exceeding the roads speed limit.

Streamlining the speed limits on roads needs to be addresses as in many places the speed limits increase and decrease and increase again happen often and many time it is unknown what the speed limits are. Many time these mobile cameras are located in these areas to attempt to trap drivers.