To whom it may concern,

As a travelling sales person in regional NSW the speed limits have long been very irritating. A lot of roads in regional NSW need to be 110km/h and a lot of roads that are 110km/h should be 120km/h or higher.

I often drive more than 1000km per day on a 'reasonable' roads where I believe it would be quite safe to be driving much much faster during daylight hours, traffic is light and roads are straight and mostly flat and well signposted.

I believe fatigue is the biggest factor when driving at 100km/h, If the speed limit was 120km/h I would be often off the road and at my home one hour earlier.

It should also be noted vehicles are much safer than even just 10 years ago.
