Under Australia's constitution marriage is a federal issue - a NSW bill would therefore not be relevant. It is a federal issue so that we have uniform laws across Australia. Having different laws across the states would not be unifying for our country but divisive!

Marriage should remain between a man and a woman and a place for children to be raised to responsible adulthood where they can see equally the roles of men and women demonstrated in the home - this cannot happen in a single sex marriage, and will result in further problems in the future when a generation of children are raised without both male and female influence in their daily upbringing
