Partially Confidential

As an Australian, I believe that marriage is an institution between one man and one woman. Not between two men, or two women, and certainly not between three or more people.

You the committee of the Legislative Council have a duty, to do the right thing and draw a line in the sand and say, thus far and no further. If gay marriage is approved, then there will be petitions for polygamy, and so on. Australian society has the family unit at its foundation. Allowing gay marriage will be like shaking a fist in the face of God, in defiance of His divine laws. It erodes the family unit. If gay marriage is legalised in Australia, it will cause children to be raised in an unnatural and confusing setting of two parents of the same gender. Who can predict the far reaching consequences of that?

I personally have gay acquaintances, and they are warm and friendly people; no one can tell them how to live their lives nor which decisions to make in life. However, we cannot sanction gay marriage, which is wrong.

In conclusion, the Committee will stand to be judged by future generations through history as the weak link that permitted gay marriage to be legalized.
