Marriage is important to keep some form of stability in a family relationship. Marriage between a man and a woman is not perfect, but is the best chance for children to grow up and make better decisions in their adult life. There are too many issues right now with relationships being coloured by social media, drugs, alcohol abuse, pornography, promiscuity, lack of self-control and basic manners. Where do we stop the "new normal" train? Homosexuals already have the right to marry; i.e., to form an exclusive and lifelong union with a member of the opposite sex. They don't want to. They also have the right to form an exclusive and lifelong union with a member of the same sex, but this is not marriage. What they are really demanding is that the word currently used to describe something they can have but would hate to have, be used to describe the other thing that they can also have but do want. Yet this argument is dressed up as if there is some denial of human rights involved with the pretense that they are not permitted to marry. It's a silly as walkers complaining that they are discriminated against because walking is not called running.
