I support marriage as it stands today - one man and one woman.

If men can marry men then a whole lot of questions arise.

Can a man marry his own adult son? Or a brother his brother (remember there is no chance of incest - they cannot produce a baby that is deformed) - they are just two adults living a life that they want to live.

That is what this whole debate is all about - Freedom. The homosexual community just want freedom to do as they please. This is a very western ideal. It was what almost every western country was built upon freedom to do what you like - the individual should not be interfered by the state.

But if this is taken to its logical conclusion that any person can do what they want (as long as both parties are free to make the decision) then we will have

- males marrying their male relatives and

- females marrying their male relatives. (zero chance of baby so OK)

- But Hetrosexual marriage will be restricted - men cannot marry thier own daughters, mothers their sons or brothers marry their sister.

So freedom gone crazy will lead to a crazy world where homosexuals can marry anyone they please - no exceptions, while there are many exceptions for hetrosexual marriage as they stand today.

In summary:

- keep MARRIAGE as it is today - one man one woman (not related)

- gay relationships should be called GAYAGE - it is spelt differently to marriage and it is very different to marriage, but it is a seperate legal term but they have the same legal rights as a married couple.
