Suggestions for Gay marriage

I would like to thank Standing Committee on social Issues for giving us a chance to give an opinion for gay marriages 2013.

Firstly I have combination varieties to gay marriage and therefore, I will not discriminate the rights for gay marriage to be legalised and placed under the Government of Australia. Since the Marriage law enforced on 28.06.2004 was when Prime Minister John Howard had to place the marriage as straight marriage and therefore, had no intention to legalise gay marriage as a proposed law enforcement to be set in place.

I have no dilemma with gay friends but when it comes to marriage I think that it does reference that the population of Australia and me let alone Sydney would have some sort of social issues. There are some couples anonymously stated that what about parenting? "Ask the children who are mum and dad, and as to same sex parenting who is who?" Generally speaking who is mum and who is dad. Say for instance you have 2 lesbian parents and decided to have their first child then who will be called mum? Now that is the main dilemma that Australian people ask when most of them are opposing for gay marriage.

Since I have been growing up I knew who are mum and dad, who is aunty and uncle and who is grandmother and grandfather. But on the other hand it will make sense for gay people what decisions to make when having a child, I will not discriminate anything about that because it's their life that they choose and how they will take the challenge.

On the other hand people who have been a heterosexual for all their life is a type of special opportunity for the first time ever in Australia, since the legalisation in USA had stated that Gay marriage would be put into place on later 2012 leaning towards 2013, which make so many people around Australia to legalise it. The Prime Minister Julia Gillard does not accept it and so does opposition leader Tony Abbott.

Now people in the labour party are saying hold on why is Gillard jumping onto the Liberal Party if she was to accept it because she has to be in charge to make it legalised when she said that Tony Abbott a misogynist at the Parliament house? Which makes people in Australia flip out of their chairs when Julia Gillard jumped over to the Liberal Party?

But on my opinion is not to legalise it, but it's over to the Parliament house to what they will have to say to Gay Marriage and the heterosexual people in Australia.
