I believe in the sanctity of marriage. By that I mean a man and a woman pledging to give their lives and love to one another. Pledging to bring children into a loving family environment, and in turn bringing up their own families in the same way. A lot of what is wrong with Australia today is that we have lost the idea of family unity. People hopping in and out of relationships, producing children willy nilly with no idea of their roots. One woman I know of has six children each to different partners and each child receives totally different parenting from the absent fathers and one little boy receives nothing. How can these children and many more like them grow up with the right idea of what a family should be. Our society has become morally lax - we even have a Prime Minister who doesn't believe in God or marriage what hope is there for our country. Please - do not let our country slip any further down the plughole.
