I think marriage equality should finally be legalised in NSW because everyone, no matter what your sexual preference is, deserves to marry the one they love.

There are many people who have been in long committed same sex relationships who wish to marry, and I think no one should have the right to deny anyone that.

Love is love no matter the genders of the couple, if marriage equality is legalised in NSW, it will help fight discrimination, and we will also be the forefront of equality in Australia, encouraging other states to do the same. I have been in a committed same sex relationship for a few years now, and I would love to marry the love of my life and celebrate that with friends and family. The current marriage act is outdated and inappropriate for todays society, imagine if you couldn't marry the one you loved because the government doesn't allow it.... how would you feel?
