it has always been fascinating to watch the schizophrenic predilection for marijuana. Here is a drug when a schizo takes it often has negative consequences in line with the fact cannabis precipitates the onset of schizophrenia in people who will become schizophrenic at sometime not that distant from cannabis induced onset.

Anyway evidence too light only in last couple years is the THC is the 'spin out' chemical while cannabinal is 'sedating'. It appears it is the cannabinal the schizos are chasing.

Again medical marijuana would open this interesting pharmaceutical to a range of research worth pursuing.

Are you aware of how much better cannabinal would be for schizo than the current regimen of drugs? A THC free cannabinal laced variety could be developed.
