I strongly object to any redefinition of marriage. For centuries most cultures have defined marriage as between one man and one woman. Some cultures have allowed a man to have multiple wives but even this caused friction between wives. Marriage has always been the foundation of the family which is the foundation of all societies. Any change would jeopardise the whole fabric of society. Why do we not learn from history. Most of the great civilisations have crumbled because of moral decay. Are we so superior to previous generations that we can beat this trend?
