I am a marriage celebrant, and certainly do NOT intend to solemnize any same sex unions.

I do understand the right of homosexuals to be happy, but do not believe that marriage is a prerequisite for being so.

Clearly, just like being born with any physical abnormality, homosexuality is an aberration of nature which no-one has any control over; but changing the definition of marriage to accommodate their unnatural sexual orientation is not going to change that.

It is interesting to note that homosexuals often retaliate against anyone who dares to defend the definition of marriage as being between a man and a woman calling us "bigots"; but do not use such name-calling against themselves for failing to accept that not everyone agrees with their point of view.

I for one respect my homosexual FRIENDS and other like them and hold nothing against them; let alone use any offensive terms to describe them. It would be nice if they would respond in kind.
