

INQUIRY INTO ENROLMENT CAPACITY IN INNER CITY PUBLIC PRIMARY SCHOOLS

I feel that the NSW government is not seeing that there is a massive need for more public primary schools in the City of Sydney. It would seem there will be a huge amount of money, potentially to be wasted, on the re-development of Ultimo Public School which will lead to a unsatisfactory result to all that are involved in the school. Clearly there is already a huge stress on the school, with population growing all the time in the area. There is a better solution to the problem without disturbing the current school operation. Why not build a new school large enough for future needs on the Wattle Street depot site, as well as space for our children to play, and child care and community facilities. This was all promised by the government before the last state election.
