INQUIRY INTO 'ENERGY FROM WASTE' TECHNOLOGY

Name: Mr Stephen Borg

Date received: 24 May 2017

I find it offensive that Western Sydney seems to be the place that all the undesirable projects like tips, prisons, airports, toxic waste dumps, and now this waste incinerator to produce energy, are located.

Apart from the health risks, what about property values?

Will the government have an independent body monitor the property values and will they compensate for a value depression if proven to be a result of the nearby waste/energy plant?. Along with the two 103 metre towers which obviously will be an eye sore, what's in it for the local residents?. Are they offering anything in return?

Nothing. Just possible health issues and a financial burden on our property values.
