The discovery of archaeologically important structures at the Windsor site, dating from 1st fleet times is astounding! There is precious little from this era that has survived! New early convict and first settlement discoveries, of this size, just do not happen and certainly do not happen in this sort of scale. This is a major discovery, not just a shoe found hidden in a wall or a broken dish or two, but a major discovery from an era that has such limited new offerings to give to this century. This could be "gold" for the NSW and Australian government - stop the bridge through Thompson's square and start investing in historical tourism and preserving out rare early history and the govt could make a motza! Let alone the historical and social value!
