There's a need for an immediate cessation on the basis of insufficient consideration of the heritage and cultural / community significance values of the bridge by the authorities certifying removal. There's obviously a defined need for a new bridge but this should be additional and separate to the existing bridge. A bypass around Windsor and bridge some distance up or downstream would seem sensible. Windsor's heritage charm has greatly diminished over the last 25 years. Ironically that very charm could form the centre of a cultural and urban revival, significantly increasing the quality of life for residents and adding to the value of the area. Food for thought...

The "replacement bridge" is just a bandaid for our ever increasing traffic problem. Stop encouraging more traffic to pass through Windsor. Build a bypass to disperse traffic over a greater area. Why bottleneck it through our highly sensitive historic area?

Windsor has more traffic passing through than most parts of the Pacific Highway, so why aren't you bypassing Windsor?

Why is someone hell bent on putting this bridge here?
