The resumption of grave sites after 25 years is appalling. As a family historian, the gravesites are a tangible link to our past, and the stones themselves provide details that may not otherwise be available. I find the 25 year period completely distasteful - still within the living memory of the bereaved - and that they should have to pay again and again to ensure that their loved one's remains are safe and memorialised is just a disgrace. People paid for these sites in good faith, never imagining that their loved one would be disturbed again.
