INQUIRY INTO KOALA POPULATIONS AND HABITAT IN NEW SOUTH WALES

It is no exaggeration to say that Australian flora and fauna, including the koala, is in distress and under threat, because of human generated activity. Australia is amongst the worst, if not the worst country, for species extinction and habitat loss. We can, and we must, for the sake of natural diversity and preservation for the future, create more habitat and free wildlife areas, as well as the need to regulate for the provision and maintenance by every land owner, of natural habitat. Future generations will look back upon what could have been done and what was not done.
