The Australian public has a right to be completely aware of what goes on behind slaughterhouse and farm house walls. In fact, the entire animal agriculture industry should be transparent because we should have the right to know exactly where our food comes from. If there is nothing to hide then it shouldn't be a problem that animal activists are revealing the truth. In 2019, people should be given the correct information they need to make an informed and moral choice for themselves, and the ag-gag laws prevent this from happening and also place extremely unfair consequences on animal rights activists. It doesn't seem very logical to have a much much higher fine in place for a animal activist then then person actually conducting the cruelty. In fact, to an outsider or more forward thinking country, it's seems barbaric. It's 2019, act responsibly Australia, let people decide for themselves and ditch the ag-gag laws now.
