The way in which Australia treats animals , both for the production of food and destruction of wildlife habitat and 'entertainment' is deplorable and plain evil. The legislation being considered to attempt to silence whistleblowers is another way for government to keep the Australian public in the dark about matters that they / we should be made fully aware of - similarly to the incident a few months ago when journalists were raided by the Federal Police. We are not informed about many risks so as to appease suppliers / manufacturers eg - in the USA when an advertisement is shown for medicines more time is spent on advising about side effects that may be caused by using the product than time spent advertising the particular product.

I am totally against any laws that will curtail the reporting of animal cruelty in any way whatsoever. It is a shameful state that Australia is in and the freedoms of Australians is under threat by Communist type regime laws designed to keep us in the dark!

Eventually these type of laws will come back to bite those - or their children - who made the laws.
