There is far too much evidence overseas and in Australia about the affects of captivity on animals and esp for those who are in tiny pools, a fraction of the soze of the car park for patrons. The pools are chlorinated and these animals are performing tricks which are not part of their natural behaviours. We know better and our kids will judge us on what we say is 'acceptable' now.

Animals go through zoocosis on land and water and also depression.

This industry belongs in the past and the workers can transition in other jobs.

Germany and Dubai have invested in state of the art holograms and sell out to pack houses. This is the future, not depressed animals in tanks.
