I believe the current HSC system for language courses is unfair for certain Asian background students. Education opportunity should be given equally to every student regardless of their/their parents' background. However, the current HSC system has unfair conditions for certain Asian background students (as far as I am aware, Japanese, Chinese, Indonesian, Korean). Why are there specific conditions for Asian background students when they want to study their background languages? How come the same conditions don't apply to other background students? This is just unfair. Australian education needs to be fair and supports decisions students make. It should never discourage any students not to study what they want to study.
