Commercial harvest of targeted macropod species should continue as per current regulations. Commercial harvest not only provides a sustainable protein source for human consumption but also allows population control of a species which is booming due to out impact on the land. If it wasn't for agricultural land with improved pastures, hay/grain crops and artificial watering points the species population would not be at the number we are currently seeing. I believe the government and processors should work closer together to market such a unique protein throughout the world. There is no other free range organic sustainable lean protein source available in this country yet we choose to ignore it and condemn the industry.
