Also the committee should look at the health and wellbeing of the the land holder. The over abundants if macropods and the damage caused is easy to see if you spend time on the land. The commercial harvesting of macropods has been practised for a very long time and is very much needed for control of the species and also reduces environmental impact they have. The industry has tuff rules and regulations in place and also surveys the population of macropods, which will never have them extinct. This is an industry you should be supporting, get out there and get involved to see exactly how it all works, see the numbers of macropod species for what it is, see the devastating impact they actually have on the land. Numbers need to be controlled there is no two ways about it. Get out there and see for yourself.
