The building should not be taken down and or moved. To maintain the buildings integrity, it needs to stay in its built form.

The reasons for its heritage protection listing is to ensure that we maintain some examples of how we used to build, what property's looked like and how they functioned.

Imagine moving Stone Henge or the Egyptian Pyramids? The world would not allow this to happen and Australia needs to keep some of its older houses and homes. People need to be able to see them and visit them or use them. And by moving the building, then it will no longer have been historically built.

I hope that this building is left where it was originally built for future generations and is protected for ever. Imagine being able to visit a home built 500 years ago, we could learn so much from that but if we don't leave these buildings alone and protected, then we won't have anything physical and genuine to go and see.

We need to leave this property alone.
