

INQUIRY INTO PUPPY FARMING IN NEW SOUTH WALES

The term 'farm' gives the wrong impression – these operations are more like factories (in fact they're also known as puppy mills). Dogs are bred intensively with no regard for their wellbeing, while unsold puppies are dumped, returned to the breeding sheds, or even killed.

For those that make it out, the future is often short – taken from their mothers too early and exposed to diseases before their immune systems have developed, many live just weeks. The situation is just as bad for the mothers, forced to give birth to one litter after another until they're either sent to rescues or in many cases, killed.

So why would a government who has the power for change, not take action? Be a leader and make a positive change. One that all would seriously want. Animal abuse should not be about making a profit out of cruelty. DO something about it please. End this now, or we will vote for those that will.
