I am writing to express my deep concerns regarding the proposed energy to waste incinerator planned for Parkes, NSW. As a young apprentice builder in our community, I am worried not only about my own future but also about the broader implications this project could have on the health of our residents, the agriculture sector, and the overall attractiveness of Parkes as a place to live and work.

One of my primary concerns is the potential impact of airborne emissions from the incinerator. It is essential to prioritize the health and well-being of our community, particularly when it comes to air quality. The long-term effects of emissions can lead to serious health issues, which could disproportionately affect vulnerable populations, including children and the elderly. We need to ensure that any developments in our town do not come at the cost of the health of our residents.

Additionally, the effect on agriculture and our farming future should not be overlooked. Parkes has a vibrant agricultural community that sustains many families and contributes significantly to our local economy. The introduction of an incinerator may lead to concerns about contamination and the quality of produce, which could ultimately harm our farmers and diminish the reputation of our agricultural products.

As I contemplate my career and future prospects here, I fear that the construction of this incinerator may compel my employer to relocate, jeopardizing my position. This could have a ripple effect on our town, making it increasingly challenging to attract healthcare workers, teachers, and families who contribute to a thriving community. If we want Parkes to be a desirable place to live, we need to prioritize initiatives that enhance, not hinder, our quality of life.

I urge you to reconsider the implications of this incinerator project and listen to the voices of the community. It is crucial that we work together to protect our health, our livelihoods, and the future of Parkes.

Thank you for your attention to this important matter.
