Introduction

This publication provides estimated two-candidate preferred counts for every polling place at the 2003 Legislative Assembly election. It repeats the format used for similar publications on the last three state elections. As a redistribution has not taken place since 1999, it has been possible to again include a swing column in most tables.

In the electorates of Albury, Bligh, Coffs Harbour, Dubbo, Keira, Manly, Marrickville, Northern Tablelands, Port Jackson, Port Macquarie, Tamworth, Willoughby and Wollongong, the final two candidates in the contest did not represent the Labor Party and the Coalition. Additional tables have been provided for these electorates showing two-party preferred estimates for the contest between Labor and the Coalition. These can be found on pages 94-106. It has not been possible to include swing columns in the two-party preferred tables.

Beginning on page 107 are a series of tables showing the highest primary percentage votes achieved by parties in booths across the state. The lowest booth percentage votes recorded by the three major parties are shown on pages 118-120.

How estimates were calculated

It is important to remember that the tables in this book are of two-candidate and two-party preferred estimates. While the State Electoral Office performs an indicative throw of preferences on election night, these are not available, and are also not audited against the final distribution of preferences for the electorate.

Estimates for polling places have been calculated by applying the distribution of preferences at the electorate level to the primary votes in each polling place. Candidates were eliminated in the same order using the electorate level flows of preferences.

This process is best explained by example. Consider the electorate of Lachlan. The four candidates recorded the following votes, and preferences were distributed as follows.

Lachlan	Votes	First Distribution			Second Distribution
		Votes	% of Prefs	New Total	Votes	% of Prefs	New Total
Armstrong (NAT)	26961	281	16.57	27242	588	31.66	27830
Constable (ONP)	1791	66	3.89	1857
Pollard (ALP)	10374	595	35.08	10969	284	15.29	11253
McKinnon (GRN)	1696
Exhausted		754	44.46	754	985	53.04	1739

These preference flows were applied to each individual polling place, as in the following example for the Junee booth. Note that while in Junee, the Green candidate outpolled One Nation, the candidates are still excluded in the same order as for the electorate as a whole.

Junee Booth	Votes	First Distribution		Second Distribution
		Votes	New Total	Votes	New Total
Armstrong (NAT)	1227	25	1252	23	1275
Constable (ONP)	69	6	75
Pollard (ALP)	799	52	851	12	863
McKinnon (GRN)	149
Exhausted	..	66	66	40	106

In calculating the two-candidate preferred estimates, minor rounding errors can occur. This means that the total of the two-candidate preferred results by booths may not equal the actual results for the electorate as a whole. To avoid confusion, in all the tables, the figures in the "Grand Total" line are the actual results for the electorate, not the total calculated by summing the booths. In most electorates, rounding errors cause the sum of the booths to differ slightly from the actual result, an error in most cases of just a handful of votes.

The "Exhausted" column is also an estimated figure, and represents the difference between the total of the two-candidate or two-party preferred votes, and the primary votes. Again, the "Grand Total" is the electorate result, and not the sum of the booths.

Swing Column

Note that in every table, the swing is to or from the candidate in the FIRST column of the table. In two-party contests, this is always the Labor candidate. Where the Labor candidate was not one of the final two-candidates in an electorate, the first column is for the winning candidate. So a '+' value in the swing column is a swing to the candidate in the first column, a '-' value a swing away from the candidate in the first column.

The swing is measured against the estimate count in the same booth in 1999. (See NSW Legislative Assembly Elections 1999: Two-Candidate Preferred Results by Polling Place, NSW Parliamentary Library Research Service, Background Paper No 6/99).

Where a booth did not exist in 1999, no swing is shown. In several seats, there was a different combination of final candidates at the two elections. Footnotes are included for these electorates explaining the meaning of the swing. In the electorates of Port Macquarie and Tamworth, no sensible swing figure could be calculated.

It should be remembered that the swing is calculated based on estimates of preferences in both 1999 and 2003. It may be that at either election, the proportion of preferences flowing to the final two candidates varied from booth to booth. Given the swing is calculated from two estimates, it should be viewed as indicative of the swing rather than an exact measure.

Tables of highest and lowest primary votes

These tables are ordered first by the percentage vote, and then by the size of the booth.
