Acknowledgments

I would like to thank the NSW Electoral Commissioner Mr Colin Barry and the staff of his Commission for making results of the 2007 election available by polling place in computer readable format. Most of the secondary tables of two-party preferred results are estimates based on preferences flows, while a small number of booths where there were obvious errors in counting two-candidate preferred counts have been corrected.

The author takes all responsibility for 2-party booth estimates.

Introduction

This publication provides a summary of two-candidate and two-party preferred results by polling place for the 2007 New South Wales Legislative Assembly election. The publication also includes two-candidate preferred results for the four by-elections held on 18 October 2008.

A table of two-candidate preferred results by booth is provided for each of the state's 93 Legislative Assembly districts, as well as for the four by-elections. An additional 21 tables are provided of two-party preferred estimates by booth for those electorates that did not finish as two-party contests between candidates representing the Labor Party and the Liberal-National Party Coalition.

The 2007 Legislative Assembly election saw a significant change to counting procedures. As in the past, an indicative count of preferences was conducted in each polling place on election night between a final pairing of candidates nominated beforehand by the Electoral Commissioner. For the first time, the Electoral Commissioner has published the preference counts by booth and these form the basis of most tables in this publication.

In some cases, an incorrect pairing of final two-candidates was nominated for counting preferences. In these cases estimates of two-candidate count by booth have been calculated. Estimates of two-party preferred vote have also been calculated where the final two-candidates nominated did not represent a two-party contest. In all cases estimates have been calculated by applying the electoral level preference distribution to the first preference votes received by each candidate in a booth. All tables where preference estimates have been used are clearly labelled.

The election night preference counts by booth were not re-counted during the post-election night re-check of primary votes. This means there were discrepancies between the final two-candidate or two-party preferred result for each electorate and the total of the election night booth preference counts. This creates some problems with totals in the tables in this publication.

Each of the tables includes a line labelled "Grand Total" which is the final result after the distribution of all preferences in each seat. The line labelled "Ordinary Votes" has been calculated by totalling the preference count in each booth, while the line labelled "Declaration Votes" is the sum of the preference counts for each of the different categories of declaration vote.

Because of discrepancies in the unaudited polling booth preference counts, the Grand Total will not necessarily equal the sum of the Ordinary Votes and Declaration Votes. In most cases these discrepancies are only minor and do not distract from the usefulness of this publication.

Because of the 2004 redistribution and because of a major review of polling place names and addresses between 2003 and 2007, it has not been possible to provide the swing column included in previous versions of this publication.

Following Page 119, several tables of highest and lowest primary vote, by polling place and by party, have been provided for information purposes. Tables have been ordered by percentage vote and by size of polling place.

Introduction

This publication provides a summary of two-candidate and two-party preferred results by polling place for the 2007 New South Wales Legislative Assembly election. The publication also includes two-candidate preferred results for the four by-elections held on 18 October 2008.

A table of two-candidate preferred results by booth is provided for each of the state's 93 Legislative Assembly districts, as well as for the four by-elections. An additional 21 tables are provided of two-party preferred estimates by booth for those electorates that did not finish as two-party contests between candidates representing the Labor Party and the Liberal-National Party Coalition.

The 2007 Legislative Assembly election saw a significant change to counting procedures. As in the past, an indicative count of preferences was conducted in each polling place on election night between a final pairing of candidates nominated beforehand by the Electoral Commissioner. For the first time, the Electoral Commissioner has published the preference counts by booth and these form the basis of most tables in this publication.

In some cases, an incorrect pairing of final two-candidates was nominated for counting preferences. In these cases estimates of two-candidate count by booth have been calculated. Estimates of two-party preferred vote have also been calculated where the final two-candidates nominated did not represent a two-party contest. In all cases estimates have been calculated by applying the electoral level preference distribution to the first preference votes received by each candidate in a booth. All tables where preference estimates have been used are clearly labelled.

The election night preference counts by booth were not re-counted during the post-election night re-check of primary votes. This means there were discrepancies between the final two-candidate or two-party preferred result for each electorate and the total of the election night booth preference counts. This creates some problems with totals in the tables in this publication.

Each of the tables includes a line labelled "Grand Total" which is the final result after the distribution of all preferences in each seat. The line labelled "Ordinary Votes" has been calculated by totalling the preference count in each booth, while the line labelled "Declaration Votes" is the sum of the preference counts for each of the different categories of declaration vote.

Because of discrepancies in the unaudited polling booth preference counts, the Grand Total will not necessarily equal the sum of the Ordinary Votes and Declaration Votes. In most cases these discrepancies are only minor and do not distract from the usefulness of this publication.

Because of the 2004 redistribution and because of a major review of polling place names and addresses between 2003 and 2007, it has not been possible to provide the swing column included in previous versions of this publication.

Following Page 119, several tables of highest and lowest primary vote, by polling place and by party, have been provided for information purposes. Tables have been ordered by percentage vote and by size of polling place.

Acknowledgments

I would like to thank the NSW Electoral Commissioner Mr Colin Barry and the staff of his Commission for making results of the 2007 election available by polling place in computer readable format. Most of the secondary tables of two-party preferred results are estimates based on preferences flows, while a small number of booths where there were obvious errors in counting two-candidate preferred counts have been corrected.

The author takes all responsibility for 2-party booth estimates.
