Acknowledgments

I would like to thank NSW Electoral Commissioner, Mr John Wasson, and the staff of the State Electoral Office for their assistance in providing election results. In particular, I would like to thank Mr Terry Jessop.

The Author

Antony Green is an Election Analyst with ABC-TV, and has worked for the ABC on every state and federal election coverage since 1989. He also writes regularly on electoral matter for the Sydney Morning Herald.

Antony studied at Sydney University, obtaining a Bachelor of Science in mathematics and computing, and a Bachelor of Economics with Honours in politics.

Antony has prepared numerous publications for the Parliamentary Library on election, redistributions and other electoral matters.

Introduction

This paper contains a summary of results for the election of 21 members to the New South Wales Legislative Council. The 2003 election was the first conducted under changes to the electoral system that made it virtually impossible for parties to engage in preference deals.

While the new voting system retained the 'above the line' or group voting option, groups had to nominate full lists of 15 or more candidates to have access to a group voting square. Votes cast using the group voting method only counted as preferences for the selected party, and could not be directed to other parties. Like-minded parties running against each other would therefore split their base vote. Previously, like-minded parties had been able to compete for votes against each other, sure of their ability to swap preferences. At recent elections, several parties have used this tactic to elect MLCs despite receiving quite small totals on the primary count.

A new form of 'above the line' voting was also introduced, allowing voters to order parties above the line, in an analogy with the way candidates can be ordered 'below the line'. Data on ballot papers is not yet available, but from the details provided in the distribution of preferences, it appears that less than ten percent of voters took advantage of this new option.

A consequence of the changes was that only 15 groups nominated in 2003 compared to 80 at the last election. However, every group nominated 15 or more candidate, compared to just three groups in 1999. So while the number of groups fell, producing a much more manageable ballot paper, the number of candidates rose from 264 to 284.

This publication consists of five sections.

Section 1 contains the overall state-wide count and details of the distribution of preferences.

Section 2 lists the Legislative Council results for each electoral district, and also provides a summary of vote by region.

Section 3 provides more detail on the vote for each party by electoral district, with ordered tables of vote received in each electorate.

Section 4 consists of summary tables comparing the vote for selected parties by electorate between the Legislative Assembly and Legislative Council.

Section 5 provides some analysis by electorate of the incidence of 'above the line' voting.

While all calculations and analysis of preference flows are based on the results provided by the NSW Electoral Office, all calculations remain the responsibility of the author.

Main Findings

Two findings are clear from the detailed distribution of preferences in Section 1.

- (1) Preferences played no part in the final outcome. Under the previous operation of group ticket voting, preferences flowed strongly between groups on the ballot paper, as more than 90% of votes had been cast using the group voting option. Under the new system, 80-90% of preferences exhausted between groups. The number of members elected from each group at the 2003 election was determined entirely by the level of primary vote support for each group and was unaffected by the distribution of between group preferences.
- (2) Parties that divided their core support were disadvantaged by the new system. The Shooters Party, Independent Pauline Hanson, One Nation, the Fishing/Horse Riders/4WD ticket, and Australians Against Further Immigration, probably share a similar support base. Together they polled 1.63 quotas. Under the old electoral system, this support could have been accumulated using ticket voting, giving an outside chance of electing two MLCs between the groups. Under the new system, these parties split their vote, no preferences flowed and John Tingle from the Shooters Party was elected with less than half a quota, edging out Pauline Hanson for the final vacancy.

Two candidates, Dal Birrell (Shooters Party) and Andrew Rider (Save Our Suburbs) received no votes. Two others, Steven Ajaj and Norm Chalak of the No Privatisation People's Party received only a single vote. In all, 85 candidates received less than 10 votes, 144 received less than 20 votes, 205 received less than 50 votes, and 228 candidates received less than 100 votes. Only 15 candidates received more than a thousand votes, the fifteen candidates with a group voting square above the line on the ballot paper. If you discount the number of ticket votes for a group, only six candidates received more than a thousand votes. These were Pauline Hanson (IND 12465), Ian Cohen (GRN 9790), Michael Gallacher (LIB 8170), Michael Egan (ALP 8050), Gordon Moyes (CDP 4645), John Tingle (SP 2622) and James Lantry (DEM 1776).

Counts 1-18

After the tally of primary votes and determination of the Quota at Count 1, the next 17 counts distributed the surplus votes of candidates elected at the first count. This process elected 9 Labor members, 7 from the Liberal/National Party group and one Green, as shown below.

Order Elected	Candidate	Party
1	Michael Egan MLC	Labor Party
2	Michael Gallacher MLC	Liberal Party
3	Ian Cohen MLC	Green
4	Carmel Tebbutt MLC	Labor Party
5	Duncan Gay MLC	National Party
6	Michael Costa MLC	Labor Party
7	Greg Pearce MLC	Liberal Party
8	Ian West MLC	Labor Party
9	David Clarke	Liberal Party
10	Tony Kelly MLC	Labor Party
11	Rick Colless MLC	National Party
12	Peter Primrose MLC	Labor Party
13	Catherine Cusack	Liberal Party
14	Tony Burke	Labor Party
15	Robyn Parker	Liberal Party
16	Christine Robertson	Labor Party
17	Kayee Griffin	Labor Party

By Count 18, 1188 votes had leaked out of the Labor ticket as preferences to other parties (0.07%), 1,296 from the Liberal/National Party ticket (0.10%) and 194 votes from the Greens ticket (0.06%). Major beneficiaries had been the Australian Democrats (660 votes), Pauline Hanson (429), One Nation (379), the Shooters Party (294) and the Christian Democrats (281).

Counts 19-269

With no candidate remaining in the count with a quota, the process of excluding candidates with the lowest total votes began. It was Count 87 before the first candidate with 10 votes was excluded and Count 138 before the first candidate with 20 votes was excluded. Count 225 was the first to exclude a candidate with 100 votes. Count 270 was to be the first count to exclude a candidate with a thousand votes. That candidate was Alexandra Rivers, the candidate at the top of the ungrouped column. Effectively, the 251 counts since the election of the last candidate at Count 18 had done nothing more than reduce the contest to the final remaining candidate from each of the 16 columns on the ballot paper. As the totals in the next table show, all these counts had produced remarkably little change to the order of the parties at Count 1. (Calculation of the change in vote columns has included the votes of the 17 quotas set aside for candidates already elected.)

Count 270 excluded Alexandra Rivers (Ungrouped). As there were only 7 candidates in the ungrouped column, and the minimum number of preferences required for a formal vote was 15, the percentage of exhausted preferences was less than at subsequent counts.

With the exclusion of Ernest Wong from Unity (Group I), one of the strongest flows of preferences occurred. With 78.51% of preferences exhausting, 10.81% flowed to the Labor Party. The flow of 824 preferences to the Liberal/National Party ticket against 41 to One Nation produced the only change of group order in the entire count. Gerald Anderson passed Brian Burston, resulting in One Nation being excluded first. The lack of change in party order during the distribution of preferences is in marked contrast to the count in 1995 and 1999.

The overwhelming majority of Brian Burston's preferences exhausted when the final One Nation (Group B) candidate was excluded. Only 536 preferences flowed to the party's founder in Pauline Hanson, while the Shooters Party in the neighbouring column on the ballot paper received 2640. Note that at the end of Count 278, more than a quota of votes had exhausted, ensuring that at least one of the final vacancies would go to a candidate with less than a quota of votes.

Count 279 excluded Gerald Anderson, the final Liberal/National Party candidate (Group A). The Coalition had distributed a how-to-vote card with preferences to the Christian Democrats, but only 9% of preferences flowed this way. John Tingle of the Shooters Party appeared to benefit from the 'donkey' vote with 2.43% of votes numbering the second column on the ballot paper. Again, around 85% of preferences simply exhausted.

Count 281 excluded Pauline Hanson. However, with four vacancies still to be filled and only four candidates remaining in the count, the candidates were simply declared elected in the order of their votes. Hanson's preferences were not distributed.

Summary of Counts 271-280

As explained in the description of the count provided on the preceding pages, the last candidate from each party group was excluded between Counts 271 and 280. As was shown, the consequence of the new group ticket voting system was that the number of preferences flowing between groups fell dramatically. Table 1.4 on the next page summarises the distribution of preferences between Counts 271 and 280. In total, 84.76% of all votes exhausted at this stage of the count, with the best total flow of preferences between parties being just over 5% to the Greens and the Labor Party.

This is a dramatic reversal of previous elections, where the old group ticket voting method resulted in preferences flows of 80-90%. (See NSW Parliamentary Library Research Service Background Papers, "NSW Legislative Council Election 1995" (1996/2) and "NSW Legislative Council Election 1999" (2000/2).)

As predicted, the new voting system clearly favoured parties with the highest surplus to full quota votes after the initial election of over-quota candidates. (See Library Background Paper "Prospects for the 2003 Legislative Council Election" (2003/3)) The order of the parties at Count 270 was the same as when ordered by surplus quota at Count 1. Between Count 271 and Count 280, the only change to order that occurred was that Liberal/National candidate Gerald Anderson passed the total for One Nation's Brian Burston.

Unlike the 1995 and 1999 elections, preferences played almost no part in determining the result of the election. Instead of 80-90% of preferences flowing between parties, 80-90% of votes exhausted. The election of the final vacancies was determined essentially by the number of primary votes received by each party, not by the distribution of preferences.

Note: Change in vote total in the first column includes the quotas for elected candidates.

Table 1.5 below shows that the incidence of ticket voting in 2003 was essentially the same as in 1999. The decline in the number of votes distributed as preferences came about entirely due to the change in the way group ticket votes were implied as votes for candidates on the ballot paper, not because of a change in the way people voted.

Group second preferences are lodged by parties so that if the disqualification of a candidate causes a group to have less than a full list of 15 candidates, a second group can be specified to receive the flow of preferences from the first group. This requirement is a consequence of the constitution requiring 15 preferences for a formal vote.

As no candidate was disqualified in 2001, none of the above flows of preferences were required.
