12980. Could these people not have obtained what is called a special license? That I could not say. I know that there was a public-house within a mile of the place to which I refer.

Mr. J. C.
M. D. Weale.
22 Nov., 1886.

Mr. J. Cook.
22 Nov., 1886.

- Mr. J. Cook. 12983. I suppose then that they follow the railway? Yes. Between Ben Lomond and Duudee there are five licensed houses, and there was no road except that made by the contractor.
- 22 Nov., 1886. 12984. Are you a total abstainer? I do not know the taste of liquor.
12985. Are you able to say of your own knowledge that the multiplication of these means of getting drink does a great deal of harm to the workmen? I consider that the shanties to which I have referred are one of the greatest curses to the country.
12986. Are the navvies as a rule a drinking class? The majority of them drink. There are a large body who do not, and some place money in my hands to take to the bank for them. These men, however, are the exception.
12987. As a rule they are given to drinking? Yes.
12988. Do you think they drink most of their money? Yes.
12989. Then the proprietors of these shanties make rapid fortunes? They do.
12990. I suppose some of them also keep stores? Yes, some keep a few articles, such as tobacco and tea.
12991. They take out no licenses? No.
12992. And has no information been lodged by those persons who have to pay £30 for a license permitting them to conduct this traffic? I know of only three cases of prosecution. In the one case to which I have already referred the house was twice fined £30. On another occasion, in which a prosecution took place, the fine was paid.
12993. Is the sale at these places very open? Yes. The men could leave their work at any time and go into a shanty, and get whatever they want.
12994. At any time of the day or night? Yes.
12995. Does this give rise to any trouble with the contractors? No. I believe that a certain number of contractors are in favour of the traffic.
12996. Have they an interest in it? No; but it has the effect of keeping the men in such a position that they have no means to go away. There are, therefore, always plenty of men to do the work.
12997. You think that the contractors have no pecuniary interest in the shanties? Not that I am aware of. I heard of one contractor having a pecuniary interest in one of these places, but I cannot speak of the case from my own knowledge.
12998. I suppose the men are kept in a chronic state of poverty or drunkenness? Yes.
12999. Have any representations been made to the Government about this matter? I do not think so.
13000. Mr. Hutchison.] I suppose that many of the men who encourage this traffic are sub-contractors? They do encourage it, of course, but the contractors themselves could put a stop to it if they so desired.
13001. President.] Is it a part of the system of contractors? Of course it is to their benefit.
13002. For how many years did you see this state of things going on? For about 2½ years.
13003. Have you reason to believe that it still goes on in connection with Government works? Yes.
13004. But is there the same reason, the same motive, for keeping the men there? Well, I do not care to refer to any cases except those which have come under my own observation, so that I cannot very well answer that question.
13005. What is the quality of the liquor which you have been told is sold at these shanties? I can only speak of it from the condition in which I see the men when they have had about three days drinking. They are completely pulled to pieces, and are quite unfit to do any work. I have known men to be paid £24 for a month's work, and on the third day after pay-day they would not have a 6d. of that money left. They would be in such a condition that work would be out of the question for at least a week afterwards.
13006. What did they drink on these occasions? Chiefly rum and Old Tom.
13007. Would that drink be procured from Queensland? No. The men used to go openly in carts and fetch it from Glen Innes.
13008. Then it is supplied from Sydney? I suppose so.
13009. Were any of these shanties ever in such a position as to be a sort of necessary substitute for a public-house? No.
13010. That is to say there could always have been a licensed public-house instead of one of these places? Oh, yes.
13011. I suppose the houses would not have been in a position to afford the accommodation required by the Act? Perhaps not.
13012. I suppose the shanties to which you have referred move on with the railways? Yes. As soon as one large cutting is finished they will move on to the next cutting and follow the work right up.
13013. Do you consider that this practice is a very demoralising one? Yes, I am positive of it.
13014. Do you think it deteriorates the men? Yes.
13015. Is the debauchery confined to mere drinking? There is drinking, gambling, and of course all kinds of foul language on Sundays and week days alike.
13016. There is no prostitution? No, nothing of that kind is carried on.
13017. Do any temperance advocates or clergymen or any people of that kind travel along with the general caravan? No. A clergyman would come every alternate Sunday, but he would go only to the respectable portion of the camp.
13018. Suppose the shanties had been suppressed by the law, do you think that a better class of licensed houses would have taken their place and would have been an advantage? I do not think that they would have been a greater advantage except perhaps as regards the quality of the grog.
13019. But would there not have been more variety in the drink; would there not have been beer for instance? Yes.
13021. Do you think that the navvies, who are given to drinking, would have been more soberly inclined in the absence of these shanties? I am positive of it.
13022. You think they would not have travelled from 4 to 6 miles to go to a public-house? No, the majority would not have done so.
13023. You think they would have kept their wages? I think so.

13025. I suppose that in every one of these camps there would be a certain number of total abstainers? Yes. Mr. J. Cook.
22 Nov. 1886.
13026. It is curious that they abstained from setting the law in motion, is it not? I, myself, on several occasions, drew the attention of the police to the matter with the results I have mentioned, but I was looked upon by some as one who was interfering unnecessarily and doing a thing which I had no business to do.
13027. Have you seen many navvies frequently in a state of intoxication? Yes; not only navvies but Government officials, inspectors of works. I have seen them made so drunk that they have had to be carried on men's shoulders away into the bush.
13028. I suppose they went to the public-houses of their own accord? Yes.
13029. Had these men to pass Government work? Yes.
13030. And I suppose that that work would frequently be of a very delicate kind, requiring a man to have all his wits about him? Yes.
13032. Have you known of any men who have died of excessive drinking at these works? I do not think so. We have had some cases of heavy sickness but no deaths.
13033. Are these scenes of debauchery to be found on Sundays as well as on a week day? I think they are worse on Sunday than they are on any other day, especially at the public-houses. The public-houses keep open on Sunday as well as on any other day. I have known the police to be on the premises at the time.
13034. If you had possessed authority you could have provided means for suppressing these places? Yes.
13035. But they existed with the connivance and concurrence of the contractors and gangers? Yes.
13036. Were many of the persons engaged on this railway who were in the habit of drinking young men? They averaged about 30 years.
13037. How long have you been in the Colony? 31 years.
13038. As an old colonist have you noticed whether there has been a growth of intemperance among young people? I have. I speak from my own experience. At St. Peters, twenty-five years ago, the young men of that village would not think of entering a public-house. There were no less than thirty-two connected with the Sunday School there, and the youngest of these was 16 years of age. They would never think of going into a public-house until the bagatelle tables were introduced. They afterwards became an attraction.
13039. There is a large amount of brickmaking going on at St. Peters? There is.
13040. I suppose you think that publicans should not be allowed to supply drink to young men until they have attained their majority? I do.
13041. I suppose you are not in favour of permitting young women to be employed as barmaids? No.
13042. I presume you are in favour of allowing the people of any given locality to say whether public-houses shall or shall not exist there? I am.
13043. Mr. Hutchison.] Do you think that the publicans are in the habit of supplying the shanties with grog? Yes; I have evidence of it. In travelling over from my camp to Glen Innes on one occasion I picked up an open note. The writer begged a certain publican at Glen Innes to forward a certain quantity of grog as soon as he could for use in one of these shanties.
13044. Have you any suggestion to make with regard to any amendments of the law, or as to any matters upon which you have not been examined? Well, I wish to make one important suggestion in the interests of the navvies themselves. I think it would be the means of keeping many of them from spending large sums of money upon drink, and would induce them to adopt saving habits. I would suggest that a person in connection with the Savings' Bank should go round with the pay-cart on pay-day to the navvies in a camp, and take from them the surplus of their money when they had made provision for their month's stores. I think that a great deal of drinking would be prevented by that means.
13045. But are there no post-offices at these camps? There are seldom any. We have to go 7 or 8 miles frequently for a post-office. I may say that on one pay-day I have had as much as £90 given me by various navvies to put into the bank.

[Mr. Hutchison, a member of the Commission, here stated, in support of the witness's suggestion, that it had been reported to him on behalf of the navvies employed on the Illawarra line that results similar to those mentioned by the witness followed from the absence of either an official post-office or any person travelling with the pay-cart acting on behalf of the Savings' Bank, and that the establishment of such a system as that suggested by the witness was urgently requested.]

Present:—

A. OLIVER, Esq., M.A., PRESIDENT,	A. HUTCHISON, Esq.,
T. COLLS, Esq., J.P.,	J. ROSEBY, Esq., J.P.,
G. WITHERS, Esq., J.P.

THE PRESIDENT IN THE CHAIR.

James Powell, Esq., Collector of Customs, re-called and further examined:—

13046. President.] I think you are able to throw light upon some difficulties which we have had in being able to trace the inferior spirits imported into this country. We cannot trace them from the reports of the analysts, but I understand that you are able to tell us something which we have not known before in connection with the importation of low-class spirits? I have sent to the Commission samples of an obscured spirit entered as brandy, which by hydrometer test would show an average strength of about proof, but which upon distillation discloses a strength of about 18 to 19 overproof. It appears to me, from what I can gather from the reports which I have had, that this is a very inferior spirit, so coloured and altered by added ingredients that the strength becomes obscured, and the Revenue suffers proportionately. I may say that it was objected that white spirit was very much imported into this country for purposes of adulteration. When that spirit was so imported it paid revenue according to strength, but from experience gained by the importations represented by these samples, any inferior spirit might be dealt with in London or elsewhere and imported into this country in the same manner that white spirit could.

could have been imported and used for adulteration. This spirit may be dealt with in London, and may be called by any name the exporters give it. One of the best guarantees the public have had in this Colony in purchasing spirits from bond has been hitherto the supposition that they were buying a pure spirit, but as the Customs' practice in England allows any alteration, comparatively speaking, to be made in spirits for exportation only, that guarantee becomes of very little value, as the samples before you will show.

13047. Have you had anything but spirits representing brandy of the obscured class you are now describing, or have you had obscured gin and obscured whisky? You can only have obscured unsweetened spirit.

13048. Then how is it imported? It is imported as brandy.

13049. Are the samples before us sold as far as you know as brandy? Yes.

13050. Will it pay the importers of this spirit to eliminate the obscuring matter and to prepare it so as to enable them to sell it as whisky, or is it simply available as brandy? I should say that this spirit would be available as a good mixing spirit. It would sell well to publicans in the country; it has all the desired intoxicating properties, and could be well used for mixing purposes, and for adulteration.

13051. But still it will be termed brandy? Yes.

13052. It could not be turned into whisky? That, I think, could not be done, it would not pay.

13053. I presume that this is a novelty in the import trade here? I am not prepared to say that. My attention was somewhat drawn to the subject by my previous examination before this Commission, and I felt when these samples were brought under my notice that it would be the duty of the Government to endeavour to stop any injurious effects arising from the importation of liquor of that description at the very threshold rather than allow the spirit to go into consumption and attempt to deal with it afterwards. I think that the Government would lose considerably in revenue in the first place, and I also feel that a serious injury would be inflicted upon the consumer. If it goes into consumption at all I intend to make it do so at the highest rate of duty.

13054. Mr. Colls.] Are these importations made in large quantities? No.

13055. Mr. Hutchison.] Do you know whether it is an English or a Continental preparation? I do not know but it could at any time be made abroad, vatted, and shipped from the docks of London. They allow white spirits to be imported into London to be got up, and to be exported here as brandy.

13056. You think that this practice now prevails because of the attention which you have bestowed upon the importation of white spirit? Yes, as the result of a stricter examination of imported spirit.

13057. This is a substitute for that spirit? Yes.

13058. President.] Have you reasons to believe that this kind of, obscured spirit will continue to be largely imported? I have.

13059. Do you remember my asking you on the occasion of your last examination whether you thought that the Government of the Colony ought to be empowered, if it has not now the power, to prevent inferior spirits from coming into consumption by stopping them in the warehouses by means of an analyst's certificate. Here are specimens of liquor which I think are in point; could anyone complain of Parliament for preventing such spirits as these from going into consumption without a certificate? I do not think it would pay anyone to import this inferior spirit if due checks were imposed.

13060. But suppose there were a check of the kind I have named? If I had the power to increase the duty I think that would be the best possible check.

13061. Have you had these small samples submitted to analysis? Yes.

13062. Have you any reason to believe from the reports of the analyst that the colouring matter contains anything noxious? No, I have not.

13063. What is your opinion of the spirit itself? It is so disguised that I can form no opinion.

13064. You believe it is a very raw sort? Yes.

13065. And your belief is that it is made out of the commonest of materials which can produce an alcohol from fermentation? That I could quite believe.

13066. Is it not a necessary result that it would be a most baneful drink for human beings? I should think so.

[Witness read an extract relative to the English practice with regard to testing spirits for obscuration. Vide, Ham's Year Book and Diary—(Customs)—page 337.]

13067. You have said that you have reason to apprehend a considerable increase in the importation of this kind of spirits. Do you think the importation is increasing at the present time? I think it will increase.

13068. Do you think that much of this spirit is in consumption now? No, I do not.

13069. Then perhaps it is like the essences which you were good enough to send us, and is intended to be a test? Quite so. I think these importations will increase unless checks are imposed.

Mr. Charles Edward Gordon called in, sworn, and examined:—

Mr.
C. E. Gordon.
24 Nov., 1886.

13070. President.] You hold a position in Her Majesty's Customs? Yes, I am the principal gauger.

13071. You are aware of certain samples having been sent to this Commission,—samples of what I believe is called obscured spirit? Yes.

13072. What can you say in connection with your duty in regard to spirits of that kind. So far as you are aware has much of this kind of spirit been introduced into the Colony? Not very much I think. It is only recently that I have been taking particular notice of it.

13073. Do you think that you or the gaugers have passed much of this kind of spirit? Well hitherto we have always used the hydrometer test.

13074. But a good deal of the spirit might have been passed in notwithstanding the hydrometer test? Yes.

Mr.
C. E. Gordon.
24 Nov., 1886.

13076. I understand from the Collector of Customs that the difference between the hydrometer test and the test which is the approved criterion of strength of this kind of spirit has been obtained by means of a distillate? Some tests have been obtained by a distillate, others have not. Usually chemists do not distil, they use a shorter process. They take the specific gravity of the liquor and evaporate it down to a syrup. They then make that syrup up to its original bulk with distilled water, of course always at a temperature of 60°. They then take its specific gravity, and using the last specific gravity as a divisor, divide the original specific gravity by it. The result gives the specific gravity of the spirit which was in the liquor. It is a very simple process, and is absolutely correct.

13077. Did you apply that process to some of the spirit contained in these bottles? Yes, to a part of the same shipment.

13078. Are you able to tell us anything about the constituents of that liquor? No, except that I may say that judging from the experiments I have been making this morning there is a large quantity of fusel oil in it—a very large quantity.

13079. But you have been accustomed to find a quantity of fusel oil in the ordinary low spirits? Yes, I can tell pretty well, but my duty is simply to ascertain the strength and not the chemical constituents of the spirits. I distilled a sample of this spirit this morning, and when I had finished, there was a thick white compact scum all over the top of the distillate,—a sort of fat.

13080. That would appear to represent a rather large proportion of fusel oil? It certainly does represent a very large proportion.

13081. I believe that anything which can produce starch will produce fusel oil? No. I think there is a little misapprehension upon that point. All spirit, no matter from what source it is obtained, contains fusel oil.

13082. Could you produce fusel oil if you had nothing but grapes given you? I think I could produce the fatty substance which we call fusel oil. Years ago I was an inspector of distilleries, and in the discharge of my duties I obtained a large amount of experience in these matters.

13083. Mr. Hutchison.] Have you made an approximate estimate of the quantity of fusel oil in these samples? No, because the quantities of spirit which we have dealt with have been so small.

13084. Then if you have found fusel oil it would indicate the existence of a large percentage in the spirit? There is a large percentage so far as appearances go.

13085. President.] Have you any reason to believe that spirit with a large proportion of fusel oil is pernicious? I should certainly think it was, although I cannot speak from experience.

13086. Are you a total abstainer? Pretty nearly. The lower the class of spirit the more fusel oil will be found in it.

13087. Are the samples produced the worst specimens you have had to deal with? I believe they are the worst I have tested, but I have no doubt that before long we shall have some still worse samples to deal with. Some of this class of spirit has been imported before, but I have not tested it.

13088. Is it imported for drink or mechanical purposes? For drink.

13089. Mr. Colls.] Have you a large shipment of the samples produced? Ten quarter-casks.

13091. I suppose these spirits were analysed by Mr. Hamlet for a lot of things? I think he was merely requested to ascertain the amount of spirit, but he mentions at the end of his report that the liquor contained a lot of burnt and free sugar. The only object of this admixture is to deceive the hydrometer. When it comes into consumption the liquor will of course stand more water, and will still keep the same intoxicating power.

13092. Mr. Hutchison.] Then the importer gets the better of the Revenue by about 20 per cent.? Yes.

13093. I understand that your duties are connected entirely with the bulk liquors? Yes.

13094. Mr. Roseby.] I suppose you profess from your scientific knowledge to be able to tell a good from a bad spirit? Well, I have had a great deal of experience in connection with imported liquor.

13095. You consider the samples produced a very bad spirit? I consider it a very low spirit, but I have seen a great deal worse in the bush.

13096. You would consider it unfit for human consumption? No, I could not say that.

13097. Mr. Colls.] Were the bad spirits in the country to which you refer sold at public-houses? Yes; I have seen the tobacco taken out of the casks myself.

FRIDAY, 26 NOVEMBER, 1886.

Present:—

A. OLIVER, Esq., M.A., PRESIDENT,	A. HUTCHISON, Esq.,
T. COLLS, Esq., J.P.,	J. ROSEBY, Esq., J.P.,
G. WITHERS, Esq., J.P.

THE PRESIDENT IN THE CHAIR.

Inspector Anderson recalled and further examined:—

13099. President.] I believe it is a fact that a number of the women who are in the habit of being confined in Darlinghurst Gaol for drunkenness are prostitutes? Yes.

13100. You know that for a fact? I am certain of it.

13101. Do you think they constitute a large number of the female habitual drunkards? There are a very large number of them, but I would not venture upon stating the number accurately.

13102. Is it not a fact that when a woman becomes a drunkard she is generally unsexed in every other way? That is quite true.

13103. Would it not be fair to say that a female habitual drunkard is also a woman of abandoned character? Yes.

13104. Was it not a fact that in that infamous case of the woman Phillips, which happened a few years ago, the victim was young, that is to say, that she was not more than 40? She was about that age.

13105. And she had thirty or forty convictions against her for various things? Yes.

Inspector
Anderson.
26 Nov., 1886.

Inspector
Anderson.
26 Nov., 1886.

13106. Would it not be fair to take her as a fair specimen of the habitual female drunkard who is confined in Darlinghurst Gaol? I think she is a fair specimen of a large number.
13107. In Darlinghurst Gaol I suppose there are no wards for women who are diseased? I know nothing about that.
13108. If a woman has venereal disease when she goes to Darlinghurst Gaol, I suppose the probabilities are that she will come out with that disease at the end of her seven days? Yes.
13109. I understand that your impression is, that the effect of the present system of treating drunkards causes disease to be disseminated among the young larrikins of the city and suburbs? I am certain of it.
13110. Suppose a woman goes out of gaol, and wants to get drunk again, she perhaps takes this means of getting the money. She then gets drunk or partially drunk, and the rest follows. Those are the stages I suppose? It is so in many cases.
13111. Do you think that this sort of thing obtains to any considerable extent? I do.
13112. The proof of this would be, that a number of larrikins ought to be affected with venereal disease? Yes.
13113. And is that not a fact? I could produce no proofs, except the reports which reach me. I have heard that a great many young lads are affected by the disease, and that in many cases the disease has never been eradicated from their system. These young men are not confined to the lower classes.
13114. Do you consider that this kind of prostitute becomes the means of disseminating disease among what are called the upper classes? I understand that some of the upper class have become diseased by contact with these women.
13115. What steps do these young men take to get cured; do they go into hospital? They are treated generally by chemists who have a reputation for dealing with that class of disease.
13116. Would not such women as those to whom we are referring be placed in a reformatory anywhere else? I think it is a great pity that there is not some kind of reformatory for this class of women. That is why I regretted that the Workhouse Act of Sir James Martin's Government did not come into operation. Had that been in operation the Woolloomooloo case and the former Waterloo case would never have occurred.
13118. Why difficult? Because I do not think the chemists who treat them for this disease would like to confess doing it.
13120. Do you think that you take up one-tenth of them? I do not suppose we do.
13121. You know that the police, as a rule, use the greatest lenity with regard to the drunkard. If by any means he can be got home or passed on to some friends, that is done, so that a large number of drunkards escape. Moreover a large number are bailed, and escape coming before the Magistrate in that way. A number get fined time after time and pay the fine; therefore the number of drunkards in Darlinghurst Gaol is in no sense an accurate index of the number of habitual drunkards in the Colony? No.
13123. For the year 1885 there were 3,899 convictions of males, and 1,970 convictions of females. These first and subsequent convictions were for drunkenness. If we reduce the figures to individual numbers we find that the number of males stands at 2,473, and the number of females at 762. Now according to that we have got 3,235 males and females convicted for drunkenness for the year 1885. If you deduct 1852 males and 390 females, representing first convictions, from that number you will have the whole number of prisoners reconvicted. That would leave about 1,000 drunkards, male and female, in the gaol, counting those to be drunkards who have been more than once convicted. Upon the basis of these figures do you think there are 5,000 habitual drunkards in the city and suburbs? * I do not think from my own observation that there would be so many. I think the number of drunkards which do not fall into the hands of the police would be about double the number of those who do fall into the hands of the police. There would be a number of persons who frequently get into such a state of intoxication that they would be unable to take care of themselves, and who yet would not be taken up by the police.
13125. Well that would make the number three times as great as those who are convicted? At a rough guess I should say that two-thirds of those who are brought up before the magistrates pay the fine.
13126. Having admitted that two thirds of those brought before the magistrates pay the fine, and seeing from these figures that 1,000 reconvicted drunkards find their way into gaol, you must see that you would raise the number of habitual drunkards to 3,000? I was under the impression that the number of habitual drunkards in Darlinghurst Gaol was about 500.
13127. I am giving you the number of reconvicted drunkards. The 522 drunkards were men and women who had been convicted three or more times? Well, I know that in the Central Police division in 1885 there were 165 habitual drunkards, and not more than half that number went to gaol. I may say that in my division there has been a large decrease in drunkenness. The particular class of women whose influence is so bad I have endeavoured to keep in gaol as much as possible, there being no reformatory or other place for them to go to. I am referring now to the vagrant kind of women who disseminate disease. I may mention that in 1875 I had 3,287 apprehensions of male drunkards, charged with being drunk, and drunk and disorderly, and 1833 apprehensions of females. Last year the apprehensions numbered 2,624 males and 503 females.

* NOTE.—See Return showing convictions and reconvictions in Appendix.

13128. In asking you a previous question I deducted 1852 male drunkards and 390 female drunkards from the total number. Those represented convictions for first offences. If you add these together you will get a total of 2,242 in addition to the numbers which I have already given you as passing through the hands of the police? I should be only speculating if I were to give you any answer with reference to the number of drunkards. My division contains chiefly a non-resident population, and I have less opportunity of forming a judgment as to the number of habitual drunkards who do not come into the hands of the police, than some of the other officers of the force would have.

Inspector
Anderson.
26 Nov., 1886.

13129. But I think you may accept the figures of the Governor of Darlinghurst Gaol as being correct? Then I honestly believe that there will be two-thirds beyond that number who do not come into the hands of the police.

13130. Mr. Hutchison.] Are you familiar with any place of amusement from which I can get at any moment into an adjoining place and find myself in an upper bar? I believe there is a place next to the Gaiety Theatre. I should not be surprised if there is something of the kind taking place there. Since I gave my last evidence before the Commission I opposed the renewal of the license. I found that there were eight barmaids employed there, but the license was granted.

13131. I am informed that a gentleman going to the Opera House can walk from the circle, and by lifting a sort of screen can find himself in a place in which he can order any amount of drink. This place contains quite a number of rooms which could be occupied by men and women in perfect seclusion? That is at the corner of York and King streets, but there are houses ten times worse than that.

13132. Do you think there is such a state of things existing as I have just described? I have never heard of it.

13133. There is no approach to the place from the outside? There was a connection I believe, but it was shut off four years ago. I think that a refusal to renew one of these licenses would have a far better effect than the infliction of a hundred fines.

13135. Although the Magistrate, if he visited the place, would himself admit that there were too many houses, he never exercises his discretion in the direction of refusing a renewal of any of the licenses? No; I think myself that they have a discretionary power in their hands, but they say that they have none. Now with reference to the class of unfortunate women to which the woman Phillips belonged, I may say that I have thirty-five in my division, and that there are fifty-six in No. 2 division, making ninety-one altogether; twenty-five of these women are over 40 years of age. Those women are frequently drunk, and lying about the streets and parks, a great many of them suffering from venereal disease. Eighteen months ago, when I was going down a lane leading from York to Clarence-street, I saw a number of youths at the far end of the lane. As I approached they scampered off down into Clarence-street. I found there an unfortunate woman lying in a position which clearly indicated what had been going on. She was perfectly helpless, and the whole of her clothes were over her head.

13136. What would be the age of the youths? They appeared to me to be quite young lads, but I was not within 80 or 100 yards of them, and I suppose there were more than a dozen. About a month or six weeks ago I saw two men taking a drunken woman down Druitt-street towards the wharves, and there were seven or eight young fellows following behind them. The moment they saw me they let the woman drop in the street and scampered away.

13138. What proportion of these women are diseased do you consider? I should not like to give any definite figures, but I believe that fully a third of them are diseased. Walking in the street one day I met another woman whom I noticed to be lame. It occurred to me that she was diseased. I spoke to her and she confirmed my suspicion. She told me that she had escaped from Queensland in order to avoid the operation of the Contagious Diseases Act. I said, "You surely do not mean to say that you go with men when you are in that condition." She replied, "I have been with seven men-of-war's men to-night. I would have more if I could get them." That was between 11 and 12 o'clock at night. I promised to get her into the hospital, and she promised to come and see me on the following morning, but did not come. This woman was not more than 22 or 23 years of age. Captains of ships have often spoken to me of the large number of sailors leaving this port who are affected with venereal disease, caught from the class of women whose names I have in this list. If these women could be got off the streets it would be one of the most beneficial reforms which could possibly be effected in this community. Several of the women themselves have told me that they wished that there was some place in which they could be detained. They say that when they come out of gaol they get sufficient to have a drink, and then they are perfectly helpless again.

13139. Mr. Hutchison.] Without drink playing an important part such a state of things as this could not exist? The women are brought to this condition in consequence of drink.

13140. President.] But are there no such persons as sober prostitutes? They may be sober for a time, but they eventually take to drink.

13141. Mr. Hutchison.] I suppose the girls when they are first seduced are made drunk? No; I do not think so. In the majority of cases they take to drink afterwards.

13142. Mr. Colls.] Has it ever been brought under your notice that youngsters sent on board the "Vernon," or girls sent to the Reformatory at Bilcra, have been diseased? I have often heard of very young persons suffering from venereal disease.

13143. Would you be surprised to hear that what I have just mentioned is the case? Not in the least.

Anderson.
26 Nov., 1886.

13144. Do you think the disease is contracted from the class of women you have been describing, when they are in a state of drunkenness? Yes; about the same time as the case which occurred at the Market Wharf I found a girl, not 15 years of age, nursing her own child in a brothel. She was sent to Bilceta, and was charged on the books with being a child under the age of 16, found living with common prostitutes—a child with her own child. I have heard of a great number of boys and girls under 12 years of age having venereal disease. I am far better able to give you the number of these unfortunate children than I am to give you the number of habitual drunkards. The parents themselves have told me the painful stories.

13145. Mr. Withers.] How would these women conduct themselves towards boys when they were sober;—would they offer any inducement to the boys? No; they do so I think only when drunk.

13146. You do not think they set to work to maliciously destroy the constitutions, or perhaps the lives, of the boys? No; and I do not think that the whole of these women are diseased, but I firmly believe that a great proportion of them are.

13147. Mr. Colls.] Since you last gave evidence before this Commission have you given the hotel-keepers any notice with reference to the up-stair bars? I told the whole of them in my division. I sent word to them by direction of Mr. Marsh, that if they did not do away with the up-stair bars I should oppose the renewal of their licenses. Two stopped these bars as requested, but the rest would not do so, and I brought them up on summons, but my objections were not entertained. After the first case had failed I withdrew the rest. The Magistrates said that they had no authority under the Act to restrict the number of bars. I objected that there were more barmaids employed in these places than there was any legitimate work for. I know that a number of young men contract habits of drunkenness from being admitted into these places. Half a dozen of them will go into one of these bars and each will consider himself bound to "shout" for the others. The consequence is that when they come out of the place they are pretty well reeling with drink.

Mr. William More called in, sworn, and examined:—

Mr.
W. More.
26 Nov., 1886.

13148. President.] You are a stonemason? Yes.

13149. Have you been long following that trade in this Colony? About 13 years.

13150. Are you a moderate drinker? Yes.

13151. Do you belong to any Union? To none, but the Trades' Union.

13152. You have been asked to attend here by the Trades and Labour Council? Yes.

13153. In giving evidence upon this subject can you give expression to the views of more than one society? I see no reason why I should confine myself entirely to the masons. I am acquainted with a number of other men who are members of other Unions, and who share the views of my colleagues upon the drink question.

13154. We have been told by some witnesses that the closing of public-houses on a Sunday gives rise to a larger amount of drunkenness than existed under the old law, when the houses were opened a limited period on that day? Yes; my experience brings me to the conclusion that that is quite true.

13156. Do you think that the alteration of the law has led to more drunkenness among the men you now represent? Yes, I think so. I believe there is more drinking on Sunday now among the men with whom I am in the habit of associating than there was when the public-houses were opened on Sunday.

13157. How do you account for it? There are various ways of getting drink. I am aware that the law closes the houses and imposes fines for offences, but I suppose that in this as in almost every other law there are loop holes.

13158. Do you think that people drink more when it is illegal to drink than they would drink if it were legal? I do not think that the illegality of the drinking has much to do with it. I do not think the men desire to drink on Sunday simply because their doing so is prohibited by the law, but I have been told of cases in which publicans have served some of their customers with a 2-gallon jar of ale on Saturday night. You will see, therefore, that there is likely to be a great deal of drinking on Sunday. If a man knew that he could get a glass of beer on Sunday he would not take such a large quantity of beer into his house on Saturday night. The presence of this quantity of beer in the house is also an inducement to the wife to drink, and perhaps to some of the children. Some persons make it a practice to give children drink when they are very young; and perhaps the existence of this quantity of beer in any considerable number of houses would lead to an increase of that practice. In that way a great deal of injury might be done.

13159. Are these cases within your own knowledge, or are they cases of speculation? I am telling you hearsay.

13160. You have not found any friends of yours indulging in this habit? Not to the extent of getting in a 2-gallon jar, but I have known them to take home a quart or half a gallon.

13161. Why do these men take home this quantity of liquor on Saturday night, when they are perfectly aware that drink can be obtained in about two-thirds of the houses on Sunday without any trouble? There is a certain amount of risk about it.

13162. Do you think that deters them? I think so.

13163. We have evidence that there are many public-houses which are pretty full during Sunday? I have not much doubt about that myself. But many persons consider that if they were found in a public-house a penalty would be attached to their being there. Then again, they do not like the exposure. That would act as a deterrent in many cases; it certainly would weigh with me, although I have not been in a public-house or tasted a glass of intoxicating liquor for a long time.

13164. Yet you believe that the closing of public-houses on Sunday has increased drunkenness? I am inclined to think that it has, but that of course is only my opinion. Of course I have taken no evidence, nor have I obtained any statistics on the subject.

13165. Do you notice many men in your own trade unable to work on Monday morning? Yes; I have often noticed that Monday is a bad day.

13166. Is that because the public-houses are closed on Sunday, and because men have been drinking themselves stupid at home or in public-houses? Yes, partly, and that they get drunk although they are closed.

13167. In many cases the public-houses are not really closed? Yes.

13168. Do you not think that you have not very strong grounds for holding your opinion that there is more more drunkenness in consequence of the closing of public-houses on Sunday? I do not say that the closing of public-houses is the direct and sole cause of it. I do not think that a man will drink more simply because he is prohibited from drinking.

13169. But still you think there is more drunkenness? I can only give you my opinion. I believe that there is at any rate quite as much as there used to be.

13170. Would you like to see the public-houses open on Sunday as before? Speaking for myself, I am indifferent on that point. I do not care what is done.

13171. Do you not think that the opening of public-houses on Sunday would be a great incentive to drunkenness? It seems to be so at first sight, but from my knowledge of different cases, and of the persons who are in the habit of getting drunk, I do not think that the opening of the houses really would be an incentive. A man has the same opportunity of getting drunk on any other holiday—on Saturday afternoon for instance. I do not believe that the men drink more on Saturday afternoon than they would drink on any other holiday. I do not think that seeing the public-houses open makes much difference to the majority of men. Knowing that I was about to be examined by the Commission I made some inquiries among the men in the Union with reference to the question of opening the houses on Sunday. One of these men told me that he thought it would be much better to have the houses open. The reason he gave me was, that if men went into a public-house on Sunday they did not know when they would have an opportunity of getting into another house, and therefore took three or four glasses of drink in rapid succession; whereas, if the houses had been open, they would have taken only one glass as on any other day.

13172. Suppose that the closing of the houses was effective would not that get rid of the trouble? If you could contrive to do so I should, speaking for myself, be in favor of that course.

13174. Where do you live? 20, Riley-street.

13175. Have you not more public-houses there than are needed? I think there are too many. I would certainly do away with a good many of them, if by so doing I could reduce the consumption and sale.

13176. Are the houses in that neighbourhood badly or well conducted? They are conducted well enough. I could not make any complaint in that direction.

13177. But you do not go into them very much? I have not been into a public-house in Riley-street for the past five or six months.

13178. You would like to see the public-houses reduced in number? Well, I think if public-houses are to be open at all there might as well be a dozen as one. I will endeavor to explain my views upon this point: Supposing there are ten houses in a locality and you close five, that will not have the effect of reducing drunkenness, if that is your object. I think the only result will be to increase the business of the other five houses. They will grow more opulent in consequence of their increased business, and I do not see why the other five licensees should be deprived of their livelihood.

13179. But do you not think that as you increase the number of public-houses you increase the incentives to drink? To a certain extent that is so, but I do not believe that the multiplication of public-houses is at the root of the evil.

13180. Are you a local optionist? Yes.

13181. Then I suppose it is a part of your creed that the number of public-houses should be under the control of the people? Yes.

13182. And that might be in favor of leaving them alone, of reducing them, or of annihilating them? It might be.

13183. Would your idea be to reduce them? That would depend upon the circumstances and conditions of the locality. There are various things to take into consideration. Perhaps it would be advisable to annihilate the public-houses altogether in one locality, whereas it would not be advisable to do so in another.

13184. Suppose you had a local option vote in the Fitzroy ward, would you consider that the public-houses in that ward would be best treated by being destroyed altogether, or by being reduced to a certain number, or by being left as they are? I am not prepared to answer that question off-hand. It is a very difficult locality to deal with. I do not think I would vote for the annihilation of the houses in that locality. If, however, I were living in such a suburb as Petersham, where there are few, if any, public-houses, and it were proposed to erect a public-house, I should certainly vote against its coming. I do not think it would bring any good results.

13185. I suppose that in your experience you have seen sad results from drink among your own class? Yes.

13186. Do you think that there is any hope of reforming habitual drunkards if they are taken at a certain stage. Suppose, for instance, they were sent to a retreat? I should think there would be hope of reform in some cases.

Mr. John Ware called in, sworn, and examined:—

13187. President.] You are an elected representative of the Stonemasons' Society? Yes.

13188. That is a Union? Yes, but not affiliated with the Trades and Labour Council.

13189. How many men are there in your Society? There are 400 members.

13190. As a total abstainer how many do you represent out of that number? I should think about twenty out of every 100, or eighty out of 400.

13191. Are the masons as a rule an intemperate class? No.

13192. Is their occupation such as to make them a thirsty class? Yes, I think it is.

13193. Are they from their occupation induced to be more intemperate than men engaged in other trades? Yes, I think so.

13194. I suppose there is a large percentage of moderate drinkers in your Society? Yes, about 40 per cent., perhaps more than that.

13195. Have you a local option vote? Yes.

13196. Have you ever voted? Yes.

13197. Are you contented with local option under the present law? Yes.

13198. Would you not extend it to renewals. Would you like to get rid of public-houses? Not without compensation.

13199. But with compensation you would like to reduce the number? Yes.

Mr. J. Ware.

26 Nov., 1886.

26 Nov., 1886.

- Mr. J. Ware. 13200. I suppose you think that the number of public-houses is in excess of the requirements of the inhabitants? Yes.
- 26 Nov., 1886. 13201. And that they ought at all events to be reduced? Yes.
13202. Have you considered this question much? Not much, but I have frequently heard opinions expressed by moderate drinkers in our Society. Many of them seem to think that the licensed victuallers should receive twelve months' notice.
13203. Not money compensation? Some are in favour of money compensation, and some are in favour of notice to quit.
13204. That is to say, you would give them notice to get ready to quit in case the vote should determine that they were to go? Yes. I have heard many argue that money compensation should be given in consideration of the money which is given for the goodwill. Others say that the goodwills have no value at all. I myself think that the purchase of the goodwill entitles a publican to some compensation.
13205. Have you noticed much distress and ruin among the stonemasons through intemperance? Yes, I am acquainted with a number of instances. I have known young men to break up completely before they reach their prime.
13206. I suppose many of these men would never get into the hands of the police? No.
13207. How long have you been at the trade? Seventeen or eighteen years.
13208. I suppose you have heard that drunkenness is supposed to have increased lately on Sunday in consequence of the closing of the public-houses on that day? Yes, I have heard that stated, but I do not think it is the case in regard to the stonemasons, although it may be perfectly true in regard to other sections of the community.
13209. Why would the increase not apply to the stonemasons? Well, I think that they are going to technological colleges, and they are being educated up to a better standard. They are more moral. I think that has a great deal to do with their not drinking. I think that perhaps the fact of the men taking home drink on Saturday night, and of their being able to get additional drink on Sunday, is responsible for a great deal of intoxication.
13210. But suppose the houses were closed rigidly? I still think that drunkenness, generally, would increase. In Newtown, where I live, there is a brewery, which has just been started there, and they retail beer out in 2-gallon jars. They have plenty to call for it on Saturday afternoon. Of course the beer will not keep after Sunday. The head of the family, certainly, will not drink the whole of the 2 gallons, and I think that the wives and elder children often get into the habit of taking liquor in this way.
13211. Is this a matter of speculation, or have you yourself known these things to happen? I am now giving you conjecture.
13212. But do you think it is fair to make up your mind upon a question of this kind on a mere conjecture? Perhaps not.
13213. As a practical man would you, in the interests of temperance, like to go back to the Sunday-opening of the public-houses? I honestly hold the opinion that that would be better than the present system.
13214. Then, you think that there was less drunkenness five years ago, in proportion to the population, than there is at the present time? I could not say. I have not seen statistics, but I know lately that I have seen more drunken men on Sunday morning than I used to see six or seven years ago.
13215. Can you tell us of the case of any man, whom you have known, to take to habits of drinking since the public-houses have been closed on Sunday, and who was not a drunkard before that alteration? Yes, I have a brother-in-law who, unfortunately, affords you an instance.
13216. Do you trace his intemperance to the closing of the public-houses on Sunday? I do. He will go to the public-house at 10 o'clock on Sunday morning—he cannot get in before. He comes home for dinner at 2 o'clock, and he will go back to the public-house again. He will come home drunk for tea, and will return again to the public-house in the evening, coming home at all hours of the night. I do not know up to what hour the houses keep open at night on Sunday, but I know that sometimes he comes home very late.
13217. Was this man a moderate drinker before the change in the law? Yes.
13218. And you attribute his falling into habits of drink on Sunday to the present system? I do, partly.
13219. With reference to local option, do you think that the roll of voters should be extended so as to include the electoral voters? Yes, I do.
13220. You have seen men come to their ruin through drink, who, you think, might have been reclaimed? I have seen plenty of men reclaimed.
13221. Do you think that a retreat or an establishment for inebriates would be an improvement upon the present system of sending drunkards to gaol? I do.
13222. You think that the gaol does not reclaim any one? I could not say that. In some cases it might put the fear of the law into persons.
13223. But you think that a retreat might reform them? Yes.
13224. Would you have this retreat a sort of workhouse? Yes.
13225. Would you make the inmates work? I should like to see them do something.
13226. And you would have them detained there until they were thoroughly cured? Yes.
13227. But what provision would you make meanwhile for the wife and family of the man who might be detained? They would not be relieved if the man was put into gaol.
13228. But there are a class of drunkards who, although they may be drunk for three or four days of the week, are nevertheless able to support their families? That is a difficulty, but I think it might be overcome, and I should like to see an attempt made to do so. I am sure that it would be better for the community at large that the drunkards should be put into a reformatory instead of being put to gaol.
13229. You think that an able-bodied man is worth so much to the country? Yes.
13230. And that as a drunkard he is worth nothing? Quite so.
13231. Then it might not be wrong for the State to spend some money in his reformation? No.
13232. Suppose the State contributed £30 in the course of a year, do you consider that an able-bodied man would be worth more than that? Yes. I know a bootmaker who is an habitual drunkard, and who earns £3 a week. He gives his wife £1 and drinks the rest. He is quite young and would be able to work in such an Institution as you have described. I daresay he would be able with the proceeds of his work to support his family. If he continues in his present condition the time will inevitably come when he will be unable to earn more than 5s. a week.

13233. Mr. Roseby.] You believe the people should have absolute control over the drink traffic? Yes.
13234. Do you think that publicans should be permitted to employ barmaids? No.
12235. You believe that the drink traffic itself is a dangerous one? Yes.
13236. You think the character of the publicans should be well known before licenses are granted to them? Yes.
13237. Do you think "shouting" is carried on among men of your class as much as it used to be? Yes, quite as much as before the Anti-shouting Society was started. I do not think that society is in existence at the present time.
13238. I suppose a great number of masons like other mechanics, are making their own homes through the agency of building societies? Yes, but trade is very dull now.
13239. Do you think that this practice tends to make the men better citizens, and to make them more temperate? Decidedly.
13240. As to the different classes of hotels, supposing it were determined to reduce the number, which class of houses would you take away? The lower class decidedly. I think that such houses as the "Oxford" are far less dangerous. I do not think for instance that they sell much adulterated drink.
13241. Are you aware whether any supervision is exercised over the drinking habits of apprentices in your trade? We have no bound apprentices in our trade, but often when the apprentices are bound they are allowed to do pretty well as they like. They are sometimes bound in the monumental yards, but even there no supervision is exercised over them after working hours are over.
13242. Do you think that any proportion of these young men are acquiring a taste for liquor? I should not be surprised.
13243. Does your answer apply to the other lads throughout the building trade? Yes.

Mr. J. Ware.
26 Nov., 1886.

Present:—

A. OLIVER, Esq., M.A., PRESIDENT, | G. WITHERS, Esq., J.P.,
J. ROSEBY, Esq., J.P.

THE PRESIDENT IN THE CHAIR.

Peter G. Ballingall, Esq., called in, sworn, and examined:—

13244. President.] You are a citizen of the United States, I believe? Yes.
13245. And have been in the Legislature of Iowa? Yes.
13246. And you are now on a visit to these colonies returning via Europe to the States? Yes.
13247. I believe you have had considerable experience of the working of prohibitory legislation in the State of Iowa? Yes, I have had a good deal of experience of the law there.
13248. Will you shortly describe that experience or state how it has been derived? As in most other places there are two parties in Iowa, the Moralists, as they are called, or Prohibitionists on the one side, and the Antiprohibitionists or Liberals on the other side. The contest between these two parties has been going on in our State for about thirty years altogether, but it is only within the last eight years that it has become part of the politics of the country, the Republicans advocating prohibition, and the Democrats favouring in a general way local laws.
13249. I suppose they took the other side? Yes.
13250. The Democrats would go in for licensing? Yes. Six years ago the prohibition law was carried in the State of Iowa by a majority of 30,000. Exception was taken however to the mode in which this decision was arrived at, and the question having been raised in the courts Judge Hayes, who has since been elected a member of Congress, decided that the law was illegal, and his decision was sustained by the Supreme Court. In consequence of this the republican party threw their judges overboard.
13251. Was this prohibitory law copied from the Maine liquor law? Largely.
13252. Is there any fundamental difference between it and the Maine liquor law? I think the penalties are more severe.
13253. But in effect it prohibits the manufacture and the sale in the State of Iowa of intoxicating liquor of any kind? Except for transportation. Liquor may be manufactured in Iowa, but it must not be consumed within the limits of the State. The liquor can be sent to an adjoining country, but it cannot be consumed at home.
13254. Is it not a fact that you can also manufacture liquor for what are called mechanical, medicinal, and sacramental purposes? Yes, you can manufacture alcohol, but you cannot manufacture malt for any of these purposes. Malt must go out of the State.
13255. Malt is not in use for medicinal or mechanical purposes, and they do not use it for the sacrament? No.
13256. But I understand that you can make any quantity of alcohol or malt liquor in the State of Iowa, provided you export it? Yes, and wine too.
13257. You are quite sure that the prohibitory law does not apply to liquor manufactured in Iowa for exportation? Yes.
13258. And you take a great deal of trouble to see that once exported it is not brought back again? Yes, it cannot be brought back. Last year the law was altered so as to prevent railway companies from bringing in the liquor.
13259. How long has this prohibitory legislation been in force in Iowa? The prohibitory law has been in force as long as thirty years. Permits were granted for the manufacture of liquor, which however could not be sold within the State. Wine and beer could be sold. Five years ago however a law was passed, which took effect on the 4th of July, 1884, prohibiting the sale also of wine and beer.
13260. Then practically all intoxicating liquors are now under prohibition? Yes.
13261. Have you been in Iowa since July, 1884? Yes.
13262. I suppose you have spent the greater portion of your life there? Yes.
13263. During the currency of these prohibitory laws? Yes.
13264. Do you consider that they have been a success; have they been more complied with or more evaded? More evaded in the large towns. People evade the State law when they will not evade the national law, because under the latter the license fee for the sale of liquor is 25 dollars, which is too small a sum to go to gaol for.

P. G.
Ballingall,
Esq.

13265.

P. G.
Ballingall,
Esq.
21 Jan., 1887.

13265. Then I understand that there is a national law in existence in Iowa, and a State law,—the licensing law? There is no licensing; the Government do not license; that has been decided by the Supreme Court. The Government say, "If you use cigars or liquors you must pay revenue." You need not use them, and if the State forbids the use of them our law will not protect you against the State; but our law says, "If you do have them you must have our revenue stamps."

13266. Then as a matter of fact licensing is a matter of State legislation? Yes.

13267. There is no such thing as a national license to sell anywhere? No, but when you do sell you must pay the national revenue.

13268. If you manage to break the State law the national Government says, "You must pay us?" Yes, you must pay before you commence. Every keg of beer has a stamp upon it, 25 cents being paid for every 8 gallons. So long as the beer remains in the brewery the revenue belongs to the National Government, but the moment it is stamped it becomes the property of the individual. The prohibitionists can then take the beer and destroy it, but if it is in the brewery and has not been stamped they cannot destroy it without incurring the displeasure of the United States, and the same with regard to the whisky manufactured in the State. The moment it is barrelled and taken out of bond it must be stamped.

13269. Are there no hotels and saloons in Iowa? There are not supposed to be any. Our State hotels never sell liquor. The licensed victualler is not an hotelkeeper. They call them saloon-keepers and druggists.

13270. Then the druggist is the same as our hotelkeeper? Nearly so. He must keep drugs as well.

13271. And I suppose he sells more liquor than drugs? In small towns that is the case.

13272. Is it not a fact that you can get a permit as a matter of course? Yes.

13273. And without any medical examination? Yes; you simply pay for the liquor. According to the present law however every druggist has to be a practical chemist, and a graduate of some college, with a diploma. He also has to give a bond for the proper conduct of his business, and to keep a book, in which he must enter the different sales of liquor. For instance, he makes an entry that on such and such a day A. B. was supplied with a pint of gin. If upon examination of this book it is found that A. B. has received in the course of the month an excessive quantity of gin, the druggist is called to account. He gets over this difficulty, however, by inserting fictitious names.

13274. Then as a matter of fact I suppose this thing is a farce? It is a farce. The Government is robbed of one and a half million dollars every year, and it is a farce. I have a newspaper in my hand, published in a town of Iowa, containing 12,000 inhabitants, in which it is recorded that five drunkards were arrested, and there were probably many more who were not arrested.

13275. Have you taken much notice of the drinking habits of the people of Sydney and Melbourne? Yes; a good deal.

13276. You have seen that drunkenness is rather extensive? No; not for the number of public-houses. You have a hotel at every corner in this city, and you cannot make a mistake.

13277. They would be druggists' shops I suppose in some places in the States? Yes, in some places. The last law however has reduced the number of druggists. In the States the saloon is the same as the public-house bar in these colonies. They keep ice, and make all kinds of drinks. The druggist keeps soda, and manufactures drinks with different names, according to the spirit used. These drinks, containing principally whisky and brandy, make a man drunk very quickly. The soda, being charged with gas, drives the whisky to the head, and the man gets drunk very rapidly.

13278. Then do you think that in the prohibition towns of Iowa there is about the usual average of drunkenness? In the very small towns—towns of about 200 inhabitants—there is not, because everybody knows everybody; but people go from these very small towns into larger ones, and they indulge in crazy drunken sponges, lasting for two or three days. For instance, if your town of Newtown were a strong prohibition town, but the adjoining district was conducted on more liberal liquor lines, the people of Newtown would visit (say) Marrickville, and indulge in excessive drinking. In some of the towns in Iowa the law is not enforced because the authorities are not in favour of rigorous suppression. It is the law there for instance that the pathway shall not be obstructed by empty boxes, and sometimes if a person complains to a policeman that a number of boxes are lying in the street, and points them out, the policeman will reply, "I do not see any boxes; if you see them go and make a complaint." It is the same with regard to the liquor law. Wherever people are strongly in favour of prohibition the law is tolerably well enforced, but where there are Germans, Norwegians, Swedes, and a large number of Irish, or foreigners of any description, the law is not rigidly enforced.

13279. Then the people who drink in Iowa are the naturalised subjects? Not at all. What I mean is that there is more drinking generally in a large town where there is a considerable foreign element in the population, and where the law is consequently not enforced, than there is in a small town where the people are acquainted with each other. The penalty for the first offence against the Act is £20, for the next £50, and for the third £100, and after that six months imprisonment. But the law is evaded in this way: The saloon keeper takes out a license in the name of his bar-tender; and when he loses the license he inserts the name of another bar-tender, and so on. In Iowa we make the building responsible, and call it a nuisance after the license has been frequently lost.

13280. What do you do with the nuisance? Abate it.

13281. Pull it down? No; lock it up.

13282. Then as a matter of fact you are in a state of embroglio. No one can say that prohibitory legislation in Iowa is a success or a failure. That has to be proved. You say it is a sham? Yes.

13283. Nobody can say it is a success? No, nor a failure either.

13284. You have a lot of law cases pending? Yes, a very great many; the State is full of them.

13285. It appears that if the mayor of a town is liberal he looks up to the sky, and does not see any evasions of the law? He says to the prohibitionist (John Smith) who goes to make a complaint about the sale of liquor, "You find the evidence," and places John Smith in the position of prosecutor. This John Smith does not care about it, and he asks the mayor to instruct the police to move in the matter, but the mayor says that the police know nothing about the matter, while at the same time he might himself have been one of those who were drinking in the back room on Sunday.

13286. Then as a matter of fact it is a toss up whether you have the law enforced or left a dead letter? Yes. If the mayor is a prohibitionist the police will enforce the law, but if he is not they will not. It is the same in other respects. Laws are enforced only to the extent to which they are in sympathy with the public sentiment. In the counties lying to the east of the Iowa State the law is not strictly enforced. In large towns it is not attempted to be enforced, and some towns have given licenses in opposition to the law.

P. G.
Ballingall,
Esq.

21 Jan., 1887.

aw. A town says, "We want revenue," and for 600 dollars a year a city will grant licenses to sell all liquors not prohibited by law. This means, and is distinctly so understood, that as far as the city is concerned it will not bother you, and the mayor instructs the police that if a man does not keep a noisy house he is not to be interfered with, but the State constabulary are liable to step in. If however the town is not a prohibition town the State official, who owes his election to the public, will not interfere.

13287. Then I gather from your remarks that the prohibitory law in Iowa is above the level of the heads of the people as a rule? I think so. I think that next session Iowa will pass a strong licensing law, limiting the number of houses, and having only one saloon to every 5,000 people. Now they have one to every 50.

13288. I suppose you know the other States in the Union pretty well? Yes, I have been in every State in the Union.

13289. In how many States does prohibitory legislation prevail? It prevails in Kansas, Maine, and Iowa. These are the only States in which direct prohibition exists. Then there is Vermont in the East, and Georgia and Alabama in the South. These are local option States, but in Georgia is almost prohibitive. The vote of one-third can stop the sale of liquor; but if liquor is sold the man must pay 1,000 dollars to the State, and such other amount to the municipality as the majority may fix, but in no case to be less than 500 dollars.

13290. Then a man must pay 1,500 dollars before he can sell liquor at all? Yes.

13291. You have given us the names of six States;—now in what States does the licensing system prevail? In all the rest. Some are very low and some are very high. Every State has different rules about closing on the Sabbath. In some Sabbath closing is rigidly enforced, as is the case in Sydney. In New York they are trying to get the Sabbath closing law.

13292. Then apparently in more than three-fourths of the States the licensing system prevails? Yes; out of thirty-nine States there are only three in which prohibition exists—namely, Maine, Kansas, and Iowa. In Alabama the prohibition is limited, and a gentleman can drink his wine at an hotel table.

13293. I have seen it stated that Texas is a prohibition State? No, it is a local option State—district local option.

13294. In some cases this is the same as prohibition? Yes. Our party are Democrats. In our last platform we included local option. We are not prohibitionists, but we accepted the principle of local option, on the ground that there being in the State a great many colleges and schools, and the American saloon being really a haunt of vice, it would be in the interests of the people that this principle of local option should be adopted. I believe the best means of furthering the cause of temperance is to control the people without subjecting them to tyrannical laws. There are great numbers of people who have been accustomed to drink moderately all their lives, and to whom forced abstinence would be a hardship, and there are in our country a large number of Germans who are accustomed to the use of malt liquor, and who require the use of this drink. If you tell these people that they are not to have liquor they only desire it the more. I think a good deal can be done in the direction of diminishing drunkenness by the delivery of lectures, such as those by Father Matthew, and by the use of moral suasion. It would also be advisable to insist upon the sale of good liquor, and to fix a high license fee.

13295. Would this be true of America, that in no case have they been able to exclude drink by legislation? No place has ever done it yet, and never can. Man exercises too much ingenuity to be prevented by law from taking drink, and the object of legislation is frustrated by the amount of perjury which is brought into play, and which under these prohibitory laws is becoming only too common.

13296. Has the Canadian local option law had any trial in the United States, or did the Canadians get it from America? No, they got it from local preachers from the Methodist Church—principally the Western Methodists, the Congregationalists, and Baptists. These people took a very active part in promoting the liquor laws. A great many misleading statements are made with regard to the Maine liquor law, and I read one the other day in a speech made by Sir William Fox, in New Zealand, to the effect that if the liquor traffic were stopped in one year it would pay the whole of the revenue. In dealing with statistics on the subject of the Maine liquor law it should be remembered that for various reasons they are not absolutely reliable. For instance, a minister will make a great deal of capital out of one drunken husband and a destitute family. He will rouse the sympathies of a great many people, who, though not in favour of prohibition, are induced to say they will not vote against it. Then there are a large number of people who do not take sufficient interest in the question to vote, and numerous others holding no strong views on the question are influenced by ladies who hold church meetings, and use their influence in other ways. People will say, "I do not want the liquor shops; I can get enough for my family, and as they are of no benefit to me I shall vote for prohibition." On the other hand the saloon-keepers have no one to advocate drunkenness. Nobody will go on the stump and preach intemperance. The result is that the contest is one-sided, and the prohibitionists carry the day. I should advise the people of this colony, who have not gone so far in the direction of prohibition as we have, to look into the matter very carefully, and see if they cannot diminish drunkenness without absolutely suppressing the sale of liquor. You can dam a river and utilise it, but you cannot stop it. Do not be guided by people who are hot-headed and only one-sided in this question. I agree that there is a great amount of drunkenness which ought to be stopped; but the question should be argued out with reason, and it should be remembered that where there is one drunkard there are perhaps ninety-nine others who are able to live in happy homes in consequence of the employment given through various branches of the drink traffic. If one man out of a hundred becomes a drunkard, is that a reason why the ninety-nine should suffer? I know that the moralists say that there is no balance-sheet, and that nothing can compensate for a soul damned or a life lost; but if the matter is looked into it will be seen that there is a business balance-sheet. In our town twenty-two saloons have been closed. This means the throwing out of employment of the persons engaged in carrying on those business establishments, and every avenue of trade is affected; the butcher, the baker, the preacher, the lawyer, and the doctor, all feel the effects. Another result is depression in the value of property, for so many more houses being empty must necessarily lower the rents.

13297. Have you known a city or town that has been absolutely impoverished by adopting the abolition law? Yes.

13298. I mean absolutely impoverished? No, that could not be; there is too much recuperative power in American townships.

13299. Then they do not go back in America? They may stand still, but they do not go back much.

P. G.
Ballingall,
Esq.

21 Jan., 1887.

Some mining townships may go back, but permanent towns hardly ever do. Maine has gone back more than any other State in the Union. According to statistics the population of Maine has not increased in the last twenty-five years.

13300. In what condition is Kansas; is she considered a flourishing State? Yes, very.

13302. What is the cause of that? The advocates of prohibition will tell you that the town is improved, and that now the Sunday is peaceable and quiet, and that altogether the town is a better place of residence, but the business of the town is entirely gone.

13303. Does anybody say that this is the consequence of the Prohibition Act? Yes.

13304. But is it found that, by banishing the saloons and the liquor traffic entirely from a given area, the effect is to gather on the outskirts of that district an excessive amount of intemperance? Davenport is in Iowa, and Rock Isle is in Illinois. The former town has the best hotels, and all the business, but the hotel-keepers found that on the Sabbath the commercial travellers, ministers of the gospel, and others prefer to stay in Rock Isle, because they could get more "brandy in their mince pies." The result was that the hotel-keepers in Davenport had to petition the Mayor for permission to sell so as to get even with the Rock Isle people, so that Davenport is now a freetrade town. Liquor is sold not only on week days but also on Sundays. Judge Hayes was elected from that district, and was the first judge who claimed that the prohibitory law was unconstitutional.

13305. In America the Republicans are prohibitionists? In Iowa, not in the States generally. It is just the reverse in the South. The Democrats are prohibitionists in the South. In Georgia and Alabama the Democrats are prohibitionists, but in Iowa and Kansas they call themselves anti-prohibitionists.

13306. And in the other States? There are three parties in Maine. The prohibitionists are a party by themselves. They are talking of running a President for the United States.

13307. Then the liquor question is a very strong element in politics in America? The strongest. It seems perfectly ridiculous to think of it, and it has a very demoralising effect upon politics. It is disgusting to think that a candidate has to go so low as to mix with the people with whom this question brings him into contact.

13308. It seems to me that in the present stage of its liquor legislation, America is hardly the country to look to as a guide in this matter. Apparently the drunkard can appeal to one State, the prohibitionist can appeal to another State, the anti-prohibitionist can appeal to a State, and the licensing man can appeal to a State? Yes. The temperament of the people differs in various parts of America. A Southerner is quite different from a Northerner. A man who can live in Maine cannot live in New Orleans, and there is the Western man between the two. In the South the negro works two days out of the seven, and gets drunk during the other five days. In such a state of things legislation is absolutely necessary. Out in the West the people may get drunk, but there is always a sufficient number of sober men to carry on the work. I think this Commission would do a very good thing if it could ensure that the liquor sold would be pure, and that it would be sold under proper control, and under a system of licenses the proceeds of which would be sufficient to pay for the loss that might be sustained in a business way. The liquor traffic should be so controlled that the evil effects produced should be at least partially recompensed by the money received, a portion of the money received being devoted to the support of unfortunate sufferers from the traffic. There should only be enough revenue obtained from liquor to bear the expense of the confirmed drunkards. I do not believe in putting drunkards in gaol; I think it is brutal. I am of opinion, from personal investigation into the subject, that a great deal of the insanity attributed to drunkenness is the result of other causes, including, amongst the principal causes, that of religious mania. It is also a fact that the men committing the most serious class of crimes are, as a rule, sober men.

13309. Then you would propose to have a State asylum for confirmed drunkards? Yes.

13310. And you would devote the license fees to that purpose? Only a part of them. If John Smith got drunk, instead of sending him to gaol next morning I would talk to him in a reasonable way, give him a cup of coffee and some refreshment, and perhaps send him to work for three or four days until he was sufficiently recovered to go back to his family.

13311. Has the inebriate asylum principle been tried in any of your States;—have you any asylums to which the magistrate can send a confirmed drunkard? No; there are places to which the relatives of a drunkard may have him sent. Two of the man's relatives and a doctor may have him taken to the asylum in the event of its being proved that he has got into a condition in which he is unable to look after his business and the affairs of his family. A guardian is appointed who gives a bond as a security in regard to the property. I think it would be a good thing to start a reformatory system for drunkards in New South Wales. I do not think the cost would be more than a quarter of the revenue derived from the licenses as the institution would be self supporting, for the men would be obliged to work.

13313. We have had a great many of the working classes here, and they would all prefer some such system as we are discussing, but there is this difficulty: Suppose a man gets drunk three times a month, and suppose that he works four or five days a week and earns 30s., which is sufficient to keep himself and his family, consisting of his wife and three or four children. This man will say, "I can support my household now, and at all events keep them out of the streets, but when I am put away who is going to look after my wife and children?" What would you propose in such a case? I would propose to take care of the man's wife and children in a reasonable way. This man getting 30s. a week would probably spend 20s. on drink, leaving his family only 10s. Well the State would contribute this amount for the support of the wife and children, and it would still have the man's labour.

13314. Would you make the man work? Certainly. If he was a stonemason I should employ him on some public work, some public building. I should not treat him as a slave, or even as a prisoner, but I should take him in hand with the object of curing a vicious appetite, which I am convinced in many cases could be done in a comparatively short time. This appears to me to be a more civilised method of dealing with drunkards than the prison plan, the effect of which is to brutalise instead of reform the drunkard.

13315. Mr. Withers.] Would you fix the minimum time during which the drunkard would be detained? No; I should leave that to be dealt with by the authorities, according to the circumstances of each particular particular case. At present a drunkard is perhaps ordered to pay a fine of £1 and costs or else to go to gaol. If the £1 be paid is it not obviously unwise to take it from him and thus deprive his wife and family of the money? The result is the further impoverishment of his wife and children.

13316. President.] Suppose a man who is taken up for drunkenness under your system makes a promise of reformation which he does not intend to fulfil, and that when he goes out he gets drunk again. Well he is taken back again, but as he is a man who cannot keep his word would you give him three months to make sure that he has forgotten the taste of liquor? Yes, I would give him three months.

13317. You think that this method would be beneficial to the drunkards themselves, and a deterrent to others? Yes, without being any loss to the colony.

13319. You do not then regard drunkenness as a great crime? No, it is a great weakness, and the craving for drink is sometimes the result of causes over which the drunkard himself has no control. For instance, I am aware of a case in which it transpired that a boy taken up for drunkenness was the son of a woman, who before his birth was seized with a longing for some whisky, which however she was unable to gratify. As soon as this boy reached the age of 10 or 12 years he evinced a craving for liquor, and became a violent drunkard. I may say that both his mother and his father were strong prohibitionists, and highly respectable people. If the mother had been able to obtain the whisky for which she longed the boy would not have been a drunkard.

13320. Mr. Roseby.] Is the operation of prohibition in the States increasing or diminishing; have they in any case where prohibition has been adopted reverted to licenses? I cannot think of any place where that occurred.

13321. Is it your impression that the operation of prohibition is increasing or diminishing in the States? I think that among the populace generally it is decreasing, but on a popular vote it might not appear so. I think that in the smaller towns the popular vote would still go for prohibition, but in the large cities, where there is a gain to be got from the traffic the result would be the other way. In Iowa all the cities voted against prohibition and the country towns for it.

13322. Have you known a single case where prohibition having been brought into operation the people reverted to the licensing system? Yes, I know of several such cases. In Boston they had prohibition for several years, and they have now gone back to local option.

13323. Is the local option principle extending in its influence in the States? I am told that it is in the south, but I do not know. It is not the case in Iowa.

13324. Prohibition or local option is becoming an important factor in politics in America? Yes.

13325. Have you much knowledge of Canada? I have been there, but I am not acquainted with the liquor law.

13326. Have you heard of the Scott Act? Yes. That Act exists in Pennsylvania and Ohio. In the latter State again the liquor question fluctuates very much, the result being that now they have in reality no law at all. One section holds to the Scott Act, and one goes against it. Some pay licenses and some do not. Some say that the law is constitutional and some say it is unconstitutional.

13327. I suppose you believe that all legislation should have in view the morality of the people generally? Yes, but no legislation has a right to go back to the feudal times. People holding a particular view have no right to imagine that their opinion is infallible. In these civilised times it should be recognised that there are two sides even to the liquor question. The authors of the Inquisition in Spain no doubt thought when they tortured and murdered the people that religion was a proper thing to be enforced, and no doubt also many people of the present day in all goodness of heart believe that their stringent mode of putting down intemperance is the only cure for the evil. I do not agree with them.

13328. But local option is giving to the people what they want themselves, it is not a case of a few ecclesiastics tyrannising over the many. The principle of the Acts in operation in the States and in Canada is that of allowing the people themselves to say whether they will have this traffic or not? It was the same in the times to which I refer, the matter was decided by a majority. If out of 100, fifty voted for a thing and forty-nine against it, the one man controlled the result. Now in this age no one section of the people has a right to say to all the others what is good for them. They may mean well, but they should grant to others the right of thinking for themselves. Suppose the prohibitionists of this city were allowed to have their way, and at once close the 800 public-houses in Sydney, what would be the result?

13329. The world would still go round I presume? Yes, and so the world went round after the Inquisition.

13330. But are not the liquor saloons in America regarded as the public-houses are here by the most intelligent people as lying at the root of almost all the misery, poverty, and crime which exists in the country? I suppose that could be answered by my saying shortly yes. I quite agree that such places have an influence in making people bad, and that all their surroundings are from many points of view very undesirable. I am not willing to increase the number of these houses. The direction of my views is in favour of controlling them.

13331. Do you not consider that 800 public-houses in a city like Sydney are far too many for the legitimate wants of the community? Coming as I do from Iowa, the public-houses in Sydney certainly seem very numerous, and I notice besides that in many cases there are three or four bars in each hotel.

13332. Do you believe in the principle of the people having a voice as to whether these houses should be allowed to exist? Do you think it is a proper power to put in the hands of the people? I think that the people have a right to say what is wanted; but those who decide should be the people, and not only a few of them. Another possible danger from extreme legislation is this, that by largely reducing the number of houses the effect may be to really increase instead of diminish the desire for drink among the people, it being a well recognized fact that when people think they cannot get a particular thing their desire for it is greater than if it were easily within their reach. I think that, for instance, with its 800 public-houses, there is a smaller quantity of liquor consumed in Sydney than there is in some places with the same population but containing only 200 saloons.

13333. Is it not a fact that where prohibition exists drunkenness is rarely seen? No. I happen to have with me two Iowa newspapers, one representing the democratic side of the question and the other the republican, and it will be seen that in both of them a number of drunkards were dealt with by the court.

TUESDAY, 25 JANUARY, 1887.

Present:—

ALEX. OLIVER, Esq., M.A., PRESIDENT.

Edward James Howes Knapp called in, and having made a solemn declaration, was examined:—

E. J. H.
Knapp, Esq.
25 Jan., 1887.

13335. President.] I believe you are honorary secretary to the Local Option League? Yes.
13336. And have been since October, 1884? Yes; since the Rev. F. B. Boyce resigned.
13337. Is the Local Option League the principal organisation in this colony advocating local prohibition or permissive prohibition, or is there any other? It is the only political organisation in the colony for this purpose; it is not a teetotal society.
13338. Is it a fact that all the temperance societies, or a very large number of them are affiliated to the Local Option League? Yes; they are all affiliated, with the exception of the Roman Catholic Temperance Society.
13339. And they all work in concert with the League? Yes.
13340. Is the Local Option League the guiding head? In political matters it is.
13341. Tell us what you mean by "political matters"? We are a political organisation, and we have in our ranks those who are total abstainers, and those who are not. We do not profess to be a total abstinence society or a temperance society, but merely a political-organisation for the purpose of pressing home this question of local option upon the Parliament, and to endeavour to give to the people the right of controlling the liquor traffic.
13342. Then the work of the Local Option League is political, as distinct from moral or social? Quite so.
13343. What number of people do you consider that the Local Option League and its affiliated societies represent? Close upon 60,000.
13344. Males, or males and females? Males and females.
13345. Then you think that the desire of 60,000 adults of this colony is represented by the Local Option League? Yes.
13346. That is to say, so far as the political object is concerned, namely, to obtain the power of Parliament to control the liquor traffic? Yes; by the people.
13348. Then you represent (say) about one-fourth of the voting power of the colony, which, I suppose, is rather over 240,000? No, I cannot say that, because females are included in the 60,000 as well as males.
13349. Have you any idea whether the males or the females predominate? I do not myself belong to any of these temperance organisations, except the Church of England Temperance Society, but from what I can gather I think there is a slight excess of females over males; but I cannot speak positively.
13350. I suppose you have also considered what proportion the local optionists of the colony having voting power bear to the aggregate electors, because from your figures it would appear to be about one-eighth or one-ninth? Yes; but I do not think that I can answer that question for this reason, that as I said before there are many outside these organisations who are in sympathy with us.
13351. What form of local option is advocated by the League; what is the extent of prohibition aimed at? At present we ask for the right of the people to be extended to the case of renewals in addition to removals and new houses. We also desire the extension of the franchise from the municipal to the Parliamentary roll of voters. These are the principles we are advocating at present. It being understood that the right of the people should extend to local prohibition, and that local option be by direct personal voting.
13352. That is a somewhat attenuated form of prohibition; you do not propose then to prohibit the sale or manufacture of liquor? We want to give the people the right to say whether they will have the public-houses or not.
13353. That does not apply to the sale or manufacture, and is nothing like the American prohibition? No; we have not gone as far as that.
13354. You stop far behind the system of Maine and Iowa? Certainly; at present.
13355. In other words your local option would not touch distilleries? No, not at present. It only refers to public-houses. We have not arrived at the Maine law.
13356. Is what you ask for now merely an instalment of what you look forward to in the future, or is it your final platform? I cannot take it upon myself to deviate from the platform as at present laid down by our constitution. What may come in afterwards I know not, but I give you now what is our present platform.
13357. You are asking for something similar to Sir Wilfred Lawson's Permissive Bill? Yes.
13358. I think that was confined to public-houses? I think it was.
13359. I do not think it prohibited manufacture and sale? I think not.
13360. Then as a matter of fact the spirit merchants and brewers would not be touched by your local option except through the public-houses? Exactly.
13361. The clubs might consume as much liquor as they liked as far as your present local option prevention would go? According to the present platform they might.
13362. The private consumer in his house might consume similarly? Yes.
13363. You only touch the classes who are content to get their supplies of liquor from the public-house? At present that is all our Constitution touches.

13364. And I presume that nothing in your Constitution says that you aim at anything else? No.

13365. That is to say, you are satisfied with the public-houses as first victims? Yes; as the League is at present constituted, but if I may be permitted to speak individually I am not satisfied with that myself. I would advocate that New South Wales should have an Act similar to that of Queensland, which leads up to prohibition.

E. J. H.
Knapp, Esq.
25 Jan., 1887.

13366. You read the Queensland Act as prohibiting the sale everywhere? Yes, if the people desire it.

13367. And you think clubs would be included? That is my impression. One feature of the Queensland Act is the absolute closing of public-houses on Sunday. I am in favour of this prohibition for two reasons. In the first place in order that the sale on the Sabbath should be stopped, and in the next place I think it is extremely selfish on the part of drinking people that they should compel barmen and barmaids to attend in the bars to supply their wants in this respect. If the bars are open for an hour or two hours on Sunday the result is to completely spoil the day of rest as far as the barmen and barmaids are concerned. I think it is very selfish on the part of people who drink that they cannot forego their glass of beer and give these poor people a holiday on Sunday who are compelled to work from 6 a.m. to 11 p.m., a legal day of seventeen hours on other days. Let any of the eight-hour men take a turn for this time and see how they will like it.

13368. I suppose you know no more about the operation of the Queensland Act than I can know? I do not. I know that in one or two places they have gone in for prohibition and have not succeeded.

13369. You mean absolute prohibition, No. 1? Yes, I am speaking of No. 1. Why the Queensland Act so much commends itself to me is: Not only have the people the right of prohibition if they require it, but as the people become educated up to the Act they may make use of it if they like. The community will never adopt prohibition until they are ripe for it; it is on the Statute Book, and when they feel disposed they can go in for it. It cannot be forced upon them. A great deal has been pressed into one Act, and the Legislature has been saved much trouble. By-and-by as the people become educated in this matter of prohibition the Act will be in existence and they can avail themselves of it. They are not compelled to take it until they are ripe for it. Though I am a total abstainer this is a feature in the Queensland system which has made me enamoured of the local option adopted there.

13370. Have you been a total abstainer from your birth, or are you one from conviction? I am one from conviction.

13371. You were not always a total abstainer? No, I have been a total abstainer for thirty-six years.

13372. Do you consider that the time is ripe for asking the Legislature for direct powers of local option? Undoubtedly I do. As proof of that I may state that we presented to the last Parliament in two petitions 30,000 signatures of people in favour of extending the principle of local option to renewals, and also in favour of the adoption of the Parliamentary franchise.

13373. Practically, what you are seeking is to extend local option to renewals, and to enlarge the voters' list? Yes.

13374. For that purpose then you consider that the time is now ripe? In proof of this I may refer to the petitions in the archives of Parliament, already alluded to, as having over 30,000 signatures, and I may say that no one was allowed to sign who was under the age of 16, that being the limit of the age of persons to whom the publicans are allowed to sell drink.

13375. Cannot you conceive a system of regulating the liquor traffic that would reduce it within reasonable dimensions of wrong-doing—because the vice must always in some way attach to the public-house,—without going to the extent of absolute prohibition, for the disallowing of renewals must mean prohibition? I take it in that light, that in point of fact it is prohibition.

13376. Cannot you conceive then a system of regulation or control bringing the liquor traffic into satisfactory conditions without absolute prohibition? As a total abstainer, I say no.

13377. But do you not think you ought to place yourself in a different aspect. As a total abstainer you may very properly say no, but as the secretary of a Local Option League, or as a citizen generally, remembering that the majority of your fellow citizens are not total abstainers you may not be able to say no? Exactly. That is a question that I am not competent to answer from my standpoint. As a total abstainer I do not believe that we can regulate the liquor traffic, but I believe we can control it. There is a wide difference between regulating and controlling.

13378. But I look upon your control as equivalent to prohibition. If the objects of the Local Option League are compassed, surely it means prohibition, does it not? In my reading it does.

13379. It aims at that? Exactly.

13380. It could not be attained at one jump, but that is the ultimate object? Yes, I have no hesitation in saying that I believe that that is the ultimate object of the League.

13381. Do you consider that a proper regulation of the liquor traffic is impracticable—that the liquor traffic is a thing you must prohibit and not regulate? Yes, that is exactly my opinion.

13382. And does the League mean that? I believe it does. Its object is to place the right of prohibition in the hands of the people.

13383. The League being a political organisation, and having, therefore, all political instincts, must be taken to know what that means. It would be called by many the tyranny of the majority, and might mean that in a given area 900 people would compel 800 to abstain from taking even a glass of mild lager beer? I am quite aware of that, but then we are in a democratic country.

13384. You admit, then, that that may be a necessary result of local option, that the vote might be taken in a given area, and, that being a negative vote, it might have the effect of 900 people forbidding 800 the use of any liquor whatever? Quite so.

13385. To be purchased, I mean? Yes.

13386. I am referring now to your own platform, the sale in public-houses? Yes.

13387. Do you consider that the Legislature seeing that this would be the result would pass such a law. It is, you see, the tyrannical deposition of a minority? I answer that question in this way: It is a democratic principle that the majority should rule the minority, and as this principle obtains in other matters political so it must obtain in this matter. The right of the minority must give way to the right of the majority, in the same way as a public right overrides that of an individual.

13388. Do you consider that a principle of democracy? I do.

13389. Do you not know that the rights of the minority are most jealously guarded in our Legislative Assembly, and what great regard Parliament and its rules have for minorities? I am aware of that.

13390. I mean voting minorities? Yes.

13391.

- E. J. H. Knapp, Esq.
25 Jan., 1887.
13391. And how very objectionable anything that seems like brute force is? Yes. We do not advocate brute force, but only that the people shall have the right of saying whether there shall be any public-houses or not.
13392. Have you ever considered the system of a statutory number which exists in Victoria? No.
13393. Has this ever been considered by the Local Option League as a possible plank in their platform—as an alternative in fact? Not up to the present time.
13394. Do not you consider that there is an expediency in having an alternative? Certainly.
13395. Apart from the platform of the Local Option League, which has been already described, do you consider that it would be judicious to present to Parliament any alternative in case you cannot get the prohibition you want? Undoubtedly; half a loaf is better than no bread.
13396. You consider then that a reduction of public-houses to a statutory number would be an improvement on the present Act? Unquestionably I do.
13397. Is it not a fact that though the number of public-houses may be reduced, the facilities for the sale of drink, and the attractions held out, may be increased? I am in favour of a reduction in the number for this among other reasons. I have been told by working men themselves that in many instances they could get past two or three public-houses, but that when they have to pass twenty-five or thirty on their way home from their work, they find it sometimes impossible to resist the temptation.
13398. You are aware that under the system of a statutory number it may happen that instead of ten or twelve small houses one large public-house, like a London gin-palace, may be brought into existence, which would do greater mischief than ten or a dozen small houses, and that in this way the incentives to drink would be increased? I still think the fewer houses a man has to pass the less temptation will there be for him to drink. I will give a case in point: I was walking down William-street about six months ago and saw a very decently-attired woman passing along the corner of Palmer and William streets. Now for the last thirty years of my life I have made the subject of drink and its effects a special study, and, without egotism, I may say that I regard myself in this respect almost in the light of a medical man. I happened to look at this woman's countenance, and it struck me that she was in the habit of drinking, and I watched her without being observed. I saw her give a furtive glance at the side door of a public-house, and, after she had gone a few yards past the door, she stopped for a moment, and then turned suddenly round and went into the side entrance of the hotel. Now I argue that if the public-house had not been there she would not have been tempted to go in.

MONDAY, 7 FEBRUARY, 1887.

Present:—

A. OLIVER, Esq., M.A., PRESIDENT,
S. H. HYAM, Esq., J.P.,

J. DAVIES, Esq., C.M.G., J.P.,
J. ROSEBY, Esq., J.P.

THE PRESIDENT IN THE CHAIR.

E. J. H. Knapp, Esq., recalled, and further examined:—

- E. J. H. Knapp, Esq.
7 Feb., 1887.
13399. President.] Have you made any particular study of the drink bill of the colony? I have.
13400. What do you reckon it at? Mr. Boyce and myself have made it out. By mistake I have brought the wrong return. The amount of the drink bill for 1884 was £4,229,578, and for 1885 it would be somewhere close to £5,000,000.
13401. I may tell you that Mr. Boyce, who was evidently very well up in the matter, rather astonished the Commission by pointing out that although the consumption of liquor, and especially of spirits, had decreased during the year 1885 compared with 1884, yet the amount of the drink bill had increased. He promised to explain this, and he did so in a letter. The explanation lies as a matter of fact, particularly in the estimates which he makes of the consumption of Colonial beer. He increases the price of that very largely indeed—1s. per gallon. The result of that is, that whereas in his first estimate he estimated the consumption of Colonial beer at 14,542,319 gallons, which at 2s. per gallon represented £1,454,232, in his second estimate he increased the consumption by nearly 200,000 gallons, and raised the price to 3s. per gallon, making the amount £2,205,275. We all know that the drink bill is large enough, and you see that there is no good purpose to be served in making it ridiculously large; and therefore this jump from 2s. to 3s. per gallon is one which ought to be explained. Can you throw any light on it? In this way: In Sydney beer is sold at 3d. a glass, and in some parts of the colony at 6d. and in other parts at 1s.
13402. You are a sensible enough man to see what the comment of the public on this will be. Finding that the consumption has decreased, the local optionists increased the price by 50 per cent. That sort of thing would be damaging, and I don't want damaging things to appear? We reckon that heretofore we have not charged enough for Colonial beer for the reason which I have stated: that 3d. is not the ruling price of the article all over the colony.
13403. You are content with that explanation of the increase on the estimate? Yes. We are prepared to take the onus. I know that in my travels in the western part of the country I have seen men pay 1s. for a glass of Colonial beer.
13404. You know that the estimate is a mere guess? An approximation.
13405. Mr. Davies.] In what way did you make the calculation as to the consumption of Colonial beer? Mr. Boyce and myself inquired from persons mixed up in the trade—from persons employed in the breweries. We went to those whom we thought would give us reliable information.
13406. Did you get the information from the manufacturers? No, but from men employed in the breweries.
13407. What is your estimate of the quantity of Colonial beer consumed? About 15,000,000 gallons.
13408. Are you aware that in his place in Parliament Mr. Toohy repudiated the idea of such a large quantity as that being consumed? That is the first I have ever heard of it.
13409. Have you any occasion to doubt the information which you received as to the quantity? I have not.
13410. Do you favour the imposition of an excise duty on Colonial beer? Unquestionably I do.
13411. As a source of revenue as well as a means of collecting reliable statistics? Yes, for both purposes. I think that considering the present state of the finances we might well impose an excise duty of 3d. per gallon on beer.

13412. Mr. Roseby.] Have you compared the proportionate quantity of liquor consumed in other countries with that consumed here? In 1884 the average here was £4 11s. 10d. per head, in Great Britain £3 10s. 3d., and in the United States £1 13s. 3d.

E. J. H.
Knapp, Esq.
7 Feb., 1887.

13413. So that the consumption of liquor here is three times that in America? Yes.

13414. So that if restrictive laws are required in other countries in view of such an enormous consumption such a law is specially needed here? I have no doubt about that.

13415. Do you think that that forms a strong argument for putting this traffic in the hands of the people themselves? I think that it is a powerful argument.

13416. You are specially identified with the local option movement? Yes, as hon. secretary of the League.

13417. Is the principle gaining ground in Great Britain and America? Undoubtedly as well as here.

13418. Have branches of your League been established throughout the colony? Yes. We have temperance lodges to the number of 600 affiliated with us. The only temperance society which is not affiliated with us is the Roman Catholic Society. Cardinal Moran gave me his reasons why he could not join us, but at the same time he said that he would work hard on parallel lines with the League; he advocates the closing of public-houses on Saturday afternoon as well as on the Sabbath.

13419. Have any petitions from the people been presented to Parliament in favour of local option? Two petitions bearing 30,000 signatures were presented to the last Parliament.

13420. Has the League made this a test question with all persons who seek to represent the people in Parliament? It has.

13421. At the last election did you receive communication from members who were returned? Yes, and the result was that there were sixty men returned in favour of the principle of local option. As far as the present elections have gone thirty members have been returned, nineteen of them are in favour of extending the principle to the renewals of licenses and also giving the franchise to Parliamentary voters. Nine are against that principle and that extension, and two are doubtful.

13422. Mr. Davies.] What are the views of Sir Henry Parkes? He is a member of the League and fully endorses its principles. He is in favour of extending the franchise to Parliamentary voters.

13423. Mr. Roseby.] This test question is to be put to all who are candidates for Parliament during this election? Yes.

13424. What is the form of the question that is put by the League? The question is this: "Are you in favour of the extension of the principle of local option to all publicans' licenses, and of extending the franchise to Parliamentary voters?"

13425. Mr. Davies.] That is to apply local option to renewals? Yes, to all licenses.

13426. M. Hyam.] I have often heard the question asked, "Do you believe in local option?" Well, I believe in local option; but then I have heard the further question asked, "Do you believe in full local option?" "Local option" applies to the measure of limited local option which we now possess; but "full" local option means the extension of the principle to the renewals.

13427. Would it not be better for the League to describe themselves as full local optionists, so that people might the more easily understand it? Perhaps so, but we speak of the measure of local option that we possess now as being limited local option. It is astonishing to find that so many people do not understand what local option means. The ignorance that one finds on the subject is lamentable.

13428. Some men have said that they were "full" local optionists; yet they were on the licensed victuallers' ticket;—how do you account for that? I cannot explain that peculiarity.

13430. Have they sent out a number of circulars lately? Yes, something like 300,000 last year.

13431. Those were manifestos stating their principles? Yes. We find that people confuse "local option" and "full local option," and we thought it would simplify the matter to speak of one as "limited" and the other as local option.

13432. Does the League simply fight for the principle apart from all other considerations? Yes; we fight for the principle of local option pure and simple.

13433. That is for the right of the people when exercising their Parliamentary franchise to say whether they will have public-houses or not? That is it in a nutshell.

13434. You do not wish to dictate to Parliament as to what should be done with regard to compensation? No, by no means. We merely ask them to give the people the right of local option. We mention no side issues at all.

13435. The manifesto in the public press puts that issue simply and solely before the public, does it not? Yes.

13437. You are wedded to local prohibition to the exclusion of what we might call local restraint or the reduction of the number of the houses? No; we want the reduction if the people want it.

13439. I understand that, then, the status quo would be maintained. Then, I ask, why have you not an alternative? It is clear that in both Victoria and Queensland they have had before them the necessity for an alternative? My answer is that we have not got it.

13440. But personally you are in favour of it? Yes.

13442. Then as a matter of fact you can say that a good many prominent members of the League hold the same opinion as yourself? Yes.

13443. If local option were on the Statute book I suppose there can be no doubt about one thing, viz., that the interests of the liquor manufacturers would be marshalled against it, in a way probably that we have never seen. It would perhaps mean the extinction of their means of living? It would—as in America.

E. J. H.
Knapp, Esq.
7 Feb., 1887.

13444. You might therefore expect a powerful opposition? I anticipate it.

13445. And an opposition with large means at their disposal to frustrate your plans? Yes, I know that we must be prepared to have a very heavy fight.

13446. Do you not think that this result might in many cases happen: that while the central wards in a municipality might carry prohibition by refusing the renewals, those in the outskirts might vote against prohibition, owing to the sort of organization I have referred to? Yes.

13447. Then might it not happen that although the central district would have no public-houses in the outskirts, they would exist in larger numbers or on a mammoth scale like the United States saloons? Yes.

13448. You might then have drinking people brought from the other wards of the city to the outskirts, and thereby have in those localities an immense congestion of drunkenness; and would it not follow that the brewers and spirit merchants would buy up the houses and have a vast monopoly? Quite so.

13449. Have you considered that and the probable consequences? It is an actual consequence. We have only to go to South Australia, to the town of Moonta, to see it. There are drinking shops on the outskirts of Moonta, but the town itself is much more sober and prosperous than it was when there were drink shops there. If a man has been in the habit of drinking all his life he cannot break it off in a day, and some will go miles to get liquor.

13450. Then you say that what I have described might occur and probably would; but you say on the other hand that there would be a general amelioration of the habits of the people as a whole? Yes.

13451. Simply by the reduction of the number of the public-houses? Yes. I think the population of Moonta is 5,000, and they have one policeman there, and he would have nothing to do but for the public-houses in the adjoining township.

13452. Imagine that Cook, Fitzroy, and the Wards about here were the subject of prohibition, and that public-houses existed in large numbers along the wharfs; do you think the citizens of Sydney generally would be improved by that state of things? We have it in evidence that every drinking man will have his drink on Sunday, and frequently he drinks three times as much liquor as he would in half the time on a week day; don't you think drunkenness would be intensified if these people had to go to the public-houses in the outskirts of the city for their liquor? No, because it is proved that Sunday-closing has reduced the amount of Sunday drunkenness. I have no doubt that the people who are fond of drink would go to any trouble to get it. The returns show a large reduction in Sunday drunkenness.

13454. Mr. Cyril Weale, in a paper of November last, published a statement under the heading of "Recantation extraordinary"; I think you replied a few days afterwards that you had put yourself in communication with General Dow to ascertain whether it was true or not? I have not received his answer yet; I am anxiously awaiting it. General Neal Dow is a punctual correspondent, and I don't think his letter can be very far away.

13455. Mr. Weale says that in the Portland Argus, in the beginning of October, there was a letter signed by General Dow which looked as if it absolutely discouraged the result of the Maine Liquor Law; that is the same object as what you are aiming at? Had I known that you were going to refer to this matter I would have brought with me a copy of the letter to show that the extract made by Mr. Weale was given with the view to mislead the public.

13456. Do you think it is an honest extract. Do these words really occur? The words do occur in General Dow's letter, but you must take them with the context.

13457. Would the context take away from the seriousness of this statement:—"For many years we have applied to Republican Legislatures for such additions to the law as experience has shown to be necessary, but we have been absolutely refused, or have been put off by insufficient and insignificant measures. The consequence is that the value of the liquor traffic has not been at all reduced within the last twenty years. In every city in Maine under Republican rule, except in Portland, the law has been and is absolutely ignored, and the authorities refuse to take any measure whatever for the extinction of the low grog-shops which infest them, and inflict great suffering upon large numbers of people?" A few days after that was published here I posted a letter to the General and merely asked him to reply to Mr. Weale. I have no doubt that we shall have his reply in the course of a few days. I shall send it to you immediately I receive it. I think it will clear up the matter.

13458. It must have struck you as an extraordinary thing when you read the extract? Unquestionably; I was astonished and I immediately wrote to the General for an explanation.

13459. In the North American Review a few months before, there was an article on prohibition by the General himself? On the 12th November last he wrote a long letter in which, speaking of the benefits of prohibition to Maine, he said that from one of the poorest it had become one of the richest States in America. Until I hear from General Dow I refuse to believe the complexion which Mr. Weale has put on his statement.

13460. And what is your opinion of inebriate asylums? I believe if we had a law similar to that in force in America, England, and South Australia, it would go a long way to cure the disease of drunkenness. In my mind it is not only a disease but a crime against society, and the only way to cure these people is to put them under restraint and treat them more as lunatics than as criminals. I have been told that they are cured in America to the extent of 70 or 80 per cent.

13461. In voluntary asylums? Yes. I think we ought to go farther. I think the moment it is known that a man or woman is an inebriate the State should step in as it now does in the case of a lunatic, and put the person in an asylum in order to cure the disease.

13462. We reckon there is a floating population of 5,000 drunkards in the city and suburbs of Sydney. The record of an average specimen of the street drunkard shows that he has been in gaol perhaps from ten to twenty or even thirty times in a year; how do you think these poor creatures should be treated by the State? We must cure them by means of inebriate asylums. We must take a man volens volens when he is known to be an habitual drunkard, and treat him not as a criminal but as a lunatic. I think you stand a very good chance of curing the disease if you lock up the drunkard in an asylum where he cannot get access to these stimulants.

13464. You are in favour of closing public-houses on Sunday? Yes, absolutely.

13465. Do you know that the Sunday closing clause of the present law is flagrantly violated? Yes, because it is defective.

E. J. H.
Knapp, Esq.
7 Feb., 1887.

13466. How would you make it effective? By assimilating it to the English law. I would throw the onus on the landlord. I would not punish the man who goes into a house during prohibited hours to get a drink. I would the landlord of the house.

13468. Would you permit publicans to employ young girls as barmaids? By no means, and the sooner we get rid of that system the better.

13469. You think it has a demoralising tendency? I am certain of it, and I will give you a case in point. I cannot speak absolutely, but the inference is undeniable: It is a well-known fact that many of the private bars are let to women who are known prostitutes. When I returned from the Braidwood district some six years ago, I took an office in Pitt-street, adjoining the "City Bank Hotel," at the corner of Pitt and Rowe streets. This office, which had originally been a picture gallery room, had what architects call clerestory windows. On one occasion when I was working at the drafting table, a lot of water came down through the skylight and injured the plan on the table. I immediately went into this hotel, and found there was a private bar upstairs. I saw a great many more barmaids than the necessities of the business required. To one of the women behind the bar I said, "I wish you would not allow your servant to slush the deck of this place above my office, because some of the water has come through the skylight and damaged my plan." She said, "We have nothing to do with it. We are only Mr. So-and-so's barmaids." I think the man who kept the public-house was a Mr. Campion. When I went out to the back of this place to speak to the man, he said that he had nothing to do with it, that his master told him to clean the place, and that he was doing it. As I went along I saw a number of small rooms partitioned off, in each of which I saw a bed, a chair, a table, and a looking glass. Coming back I noticed these girls; they looked rather fast women. When I went down I said to my men, "I say, boys, I do not think that place is particularly respectable." "Oh," said one of the men, "Did you not know, sir? It is a regular whore-shop." "How do you know?" I said. "Oh," he said, "you can see young fellows going into those side rooms with girls at all hours of the day." My office was down stairs, and we could see through the clerestory windows. Well, at about 11 o'clock one of the men said to me, "Now look," and I looked and saw young fellows going into these side rooms with young women. They had their arms round the women's waists, and as they went into the rooms they shut the doors; the rest can be imagined. Now this was going on day after day. As soon as I became aware of this I went to my landlord and said, "I am going to leave this place; there seems to be nothing better than a brothel upstairs," and I paid the man a month's rent and left. The woman who was supposed to be this man's head bar-woman was a known prostitute who went by the name of Nelly Ryan; in fact the place was nothing better than an assignation-shop.

13471. How many persons signed the petition? I do not remember.

13471½. At the instance of yourself and those associated with you was any step taken in Parliament to bring in a law to prohibit the employment of girls in public-house bars? Not beyond petitioning that a law should be passed.

13472. Something was done in the Upper House by the Hon. Mr. Webb? Yes. A Bill was brought in and it was lost by a majority of one.

13473. Do you think that publicans should be permitted to supply young people with drink? Certainly not. It is illegal now to supply anyone under 16 years of age with drink. When standing outside the "International Hotel" between 11 and 12 o'clock one day, I saw a little girl without a shoe to her foot or a hat on her head, and clothed in a dirty filthy night-dress, coming out of the bar of the hotel with a pot of beer in her hand. She was only about 6 or 7 years of age. I looked about to see if I could see a policeman, who, however, was as usual conspicuous by his absence.

13474. You would refuse to supply children with drink under any circumstances whatever? Yes.

13475. Would you allow them to take it away to be consumed by their parents or other people, and would you raise the age at which a young person could be supplied with drink to be consumed by himself? No, and I think the age of 16 is too young. It is a very critical time of life, and young persons at that age should not be permitted to drink in public-houses.

13476. How long have you been in the colony? I am a native.

13477. Have you noticed that there has been any increase in the drinking habits of the young people of late years, as compared with former years? Undoubtedly. When I was a lad it was quite the exception to see a native-born Australian drunk.

13478. Do you think that these up-stair bars, presided over by women, have a disastrous effect upon our young men? There can be no doubt whatever about it. Every public-house should have only one bar, and that should be open to the public. Let every one see what is going on. These private bars are a curse, and the publicans who want to keep within the four corners of the Act complain of them themselves.

13479. If liquor is supplied, it should be done as openly and publicly as possible? Yes.

13481. You are opposed to the existence of more than one bar? Yes; I think there should not be more than one bar in each house.

13483. Mr. Roseby.] You are a surveyor, I believe? Yes; I have travelled throughout the length and breadth of the land, and I have seen more of the drink traffic than I hope anybody else will ever see.

13484. Bad as some of these public-houses in the city are, do you think there are worse houses in remote parts

E. J. H.
Knapp, Esq.
7 Feb., 1887.

parts of the colony? I do not think that the town houses are as bad as some of the places I have seen in the interior. In the city we have police supervision, and what you see done in some of the wayside public-houses, where they "lamb down" their "sheep," and turn them out "dry weaners," as they call them, would not be tolerated in the city. I have seen drunken orgies in the bush of a kind such as I would not pollute your ears by describing, and that not 35 miles from where we are sitting.

13485. President.] This happened some time ago, I presume? Not so very long ago.

13486. Mr. Roseby.] Have you been on the Railways when works have been in progress? I have not. I am speaking of the scenes which I have witnessed near the shearing sheds in the interior.

13487. President.] But now that shearers generally come down to Sydney, or take the train to Melbourne, do you not think that the drinking is transferred to the cities? Doubtless, but it goes on within the four walls of a house; it does not take place in the public gaze.

13488. Have you ever considered the question of the quality of the liquor sold? No; I am not in a position to give an opinion on that subject.

13489. I suppose whether the liquor is good or bad it is still objectionable to the Local Option League? To a teetotaler it would be.

13490. But I am speaking of the League as an organization? No, not to the League, because there are men on the League who are moderate drinkers. Some of our Vice-presidents are such.

13491. Then the quality of the liquor is not a question with which you deal? No; it is only a question of degree. Whether the liquor be good or bad, if a man takes too much of it it will make him drunk.

13492. But a reasonable person would also be much affected by this consideration, that immature liquor, which makes people drunk and poisons them in the process, must be worse than good liquor? No doubt. It is just the same with regard to articles of food, where you have good, bad, and indifferent.

13493. I suppose you have seen a good many of the prohibition laws and also of the local option laws? Yes; I have seen a large number of them.

13494. You notice that in the American laws there is always a proviso or saving clause in favour of the drug-store;—I suppose you are well aware that the trouble of the Maine liquor law lies in the drug exception? Yes.

13495. And that the law is evaded by the issue of bogus medical certificates? Yes.

13496. Has the League ever considered whether it is possible to get rid of the disgrace—for it is a disgrace—that so much evasion should be practised by means of this exception? No; I do not think they have gone into that question. There is no Act of Parliament so perfect but some people will drive a coach and four through it if they are inclined to do so.

13497. That is quite true, but at the same time it does not do to go to the Legislature and ask it to pass a law which is full of holes? Just so; but when this Maine liquor law has been a universal benefit to the whole State by reducing the drunkenness that was rife there at one time and raising it from one of the poorest to one of the richest States in America, I do not think we should quibble about the little holes that are to be found in it.

13498. But if the hole is a big one, and the law merely substitutes drug stores for public-houses, what is the good of it? But drinking is not so extensive as under the open bar system. We have proof positive that the Act has been beneficial to the State of Maine; it is now a plank in the Constitution, and cannot be removed. I desire to supplement the evidence I gave on a particular point at the last sitting of the Commission. Mr. President then spoke about the tyranny of 900 compelling 800 to give up their glass of beer, and I said that the democratic principle that the majority must rule should apply to this as to every other question. Now, I will show you where there is a tyranny of a minority, and not of a majority. I took the trouble to go to the Town Hall this morning, and from the Council Clerk and Treasurer I obtained these remarkable figures:—In the city of Sydney there are 20,000 houses. The inhabitants at the end of the year 1885 numbered 134,413. The number of ratepayers is 7,963; this represents the actual number of those entitled to the local option vote. Therefore, assuming that these 7,963 local option votes were exercised by the ratepayers in favour of local option, you have the fact that they tyrannise over 130,413 people who might be against local option. There is another point I desire to mention. Though I am secretary to the Local Option League, until last year I had not a local option vote. I lived in a house that belonged to the widow of a publican, and as soon as I took up the question of local option the agent transferred the local option vote to his own name, and shut me out from giving a vote at all. Although I did not pay the rate directly I did so practically in the rent. Now it is not the house that is affected by the drink traffic, but the people in the locality; and if every landlord had done the same under the existing Act the whole of the local option votes would have been in the pockets of the owners of the houses. True, they could not have more than four local option votes each, though they might own 200 houses each; but at the same time they had the power of disenfranchising their tenants, as was done in my case.

13499. Your explanation touches the question of enlarging the voters' roll? Yes, we want it enlarged on the basis of the Parliamentary franchise.

13499½. Of the 130,000 inhabitants about one in four may be put down as an adult, making the number of adults 40,000 in round numbers. Your case is that 7,963 rule the larger number of 40,000? Exactly; so that there you see there is the tyranny of a minority over a majority. The 32,000 have nothing whatever to say on the question. I should like to read to the Commission the following extract from the New York Tribune of October 25, 1886. It is headed, "Prohibition and Prosperity in Georgia":—

THE rule of prohibition is now legally complete in this city. Although under the Local Option law all bar-rooms were closed at the beginning of July last, there were still some eight or nine wholesale licenses in force, the validity of which could not be impaired. These allowed the sale of liquors in quantities of not less than 1 quart. It therefore became the custom of thirsty Georgians to "pool their issues" in groups of four or five, purchase a quart of whiskey in the name of one, and divide it up. One by one these licenses expired, and when, a few weeks ago, there were only three still extant, these latter became enormously valuable. The holder of one of them, Mr. Thorn, sold over $1,000 worth of liquor the day before it expired, and made under it a net profit of more than $10,000 since the 1st July. One of the remaining two had been purchased by the Kimball House. It expired on October 9, and on that day, as well as on each of a dozen days preceding, it brought in a revenue of about $2,500, the demand for liquor being constant up to the last moment, midnight. Then only one license remained (T. C. Mason's). His sales of liquor were more than $2,000 daily, and kept increasing as the license neared its time of expiration. That date was October 26. But yesterday a decision of the Supreme Court came down, like the wolf on the fold, and the last quart license was cancelled, and the last liquor saloon in the city closed. There is not even beer to drink now. For the past fortnight a local brewery has been delivering bottled beer to customers at their residences, doing this under a City Council ordinance. But the Mayor on Monday vetoed that ordinance and stopped the beer business. There cannot, therefore, now be sold legally in this city any liquor, including beer, in any quantity, except under prescription at drug stores and at family wine stores.

But

E. J. H. Knapp, Esq.

But will Atlanta's tipplers go without their toddy? The opponents of temperance say they will not; they will get it from out of town. Several former keepers of bar-rooms here have already opened business in other towns and cities, and every mail brings a host of invitations for their old customers to patronise them there. That these invitations will be to any considerable extent accepted is altogether improbable. There are not many men in Atlanta who will or can travel 25 miles to get their morning bitters. They can order liquor sent by express, in quantity, of course, if they pay for it in advance. It cannot be delivered to them C. O. D. Probably a few wealthy men will do this. But as it has so often been justly pointed out, not many men will ever take much trouble to seek intemperance. They drink because the open temptation is daily before them. Remove the convenient opportunity and they will forsake the habit. So there is a general belief that a great majority of former patrons of bar-rooms will henceforth perforce be abstainers. As for illicit selling of grog there seems little likelihood that it will be attempted.

The anti-Prohibitionists have from time to time pictured in lurid style the industrial ruin that was engulfing Atlanta because of the closing of the bar-rooms. They have told of more millions of capital being removed from Atlanta than ever were invested here. They have represented whole blocks of stores as standing empty, and the grass growing in the principal streets. It is hardly necessary to say that all such talk is nonsense or falsehood. The only industry that has been driven out of the city is the rum industry. The capital that has come in with temperance amounts to more than has gone out with drunkenness. Every day brings to the Manufacturers' Association letters from capitalists throughout the country who propose to locate industrial establishments here. The agents of some glass-blowers will visit Atlanta next week to secure a site for large glass works. A firm at Rome, N. Y., has sent here a consignment of agricultural implements, and will start a factory here if the co-operation of Georgia capital can be secured. A stock company is also being formed for the manufacture of chairs and other furniture. Since July 1 an extensive spice mill has been established in a building in Pryor-street, formerly occupied by liquor dealers, and is doing a prosperous business. This is a new industry in Atlanta.

It is of interest to observe the disposition that has been made of the rooms and buildings formerly occupied by liquor-dealers. A careful canvas of the city shows that at least seventy such places have been vacated since July 1. Many of these are large and pretentious establishments on the principal streets and corners. But the departure of their old proprietors has by no means left them desolate or given Atlanta a deserted appearance. Of the seventy noticed this week, only seventeen remain vacant, and they are mostly in undesirable locations. Just seventeen more have been converted into grocery stores, and are paying well. Ten are restaurants, seven are meat markets, three only are family wine stores, and two are barber shops. The remainder are divided among a great variety of industries, one each being devoted to drugs, dry-goods, billiards, furniture, shoes, storage, spice-mills, flour, tobacco, tailoring, hats, clothing, confectionery, and auction-rooms. Many of these have been considerably enlarged by the new proprietors, and all bear an air of more wholesome prosperity than in the old days. Real estate agents say that negotiations are being made for most of the places that are still vacant, and that they will probably all be occupied by the beginning of next year.

I received the following from a private source in Atlanta:—

Here are four facts which the enemies of prohibition cannot deny, and which they cannot explain on any other hypothesis than that the business of the city is increasing, and that the expenses have become less, or that the valuation of taxable property is increasing:—

1. The secretary of the Atlanta Chamber of Commerce reports retail business of all kinds has increased from 10 to 25 per cent. over that of last year.
2. The president of the same body (who strongly opposed the adoption of prohibition) admits that the bank reports show a corresponding increase.
3. There are eight railroads tributary to Atlanta. Their freight business for July and August (the law went into effect July 1st, 1886) shows an increase ranging from 20 to 100 per cent. over those of the corresponding months of last year.
4. The tax rate of the city was lowered a few weeks ago 25 per cent.—that is, from 40 to 30 cents on each 100 dols. of valuation.

In Massachusetts two years ago out of a total of 348 towns, 333 voted for no licenses, the balance (10) being in favor of licenses.

THE PRESIDENT IN THE CHAIR.

Mr. Charles B. Hayes called in, sworn, and examined:—

13500. President.] You are a visitor from Canada? Yes, but I anticipate residing here.
13501. Have you been here long? I arrived last Thursday.
13502. Have you been a resident of Canada for any length of time? I was born there.
13503. In what part of the Dominion? In the province of Ontario.
13504. Is your knowledge of Canada chiefly of the towns, or generally of the whole country? I have resided in the principal city as well as in one or two smaller places. Ontario is a province of which Toronto is the capital.
13505. Has your attention been directed much to the licensing laws of the Dominion? I know that there has been considerable agitation on the subject during the last seven or eight years. Twelve or fourteen months ago at Guelph, the city in which I was residing, they took a vote as to the advisableness of adopting what is known as the Scott Act.
13506. Are the licensing laws passed by the Dominion or by the provinces? They are really governed by the provinces, although the Scott Act is a Dominion Act. There has been considerable controversy as to who really governed the licensing system, the Dominion or the provinces.
13507. When was the Scott Act passed? In 1878.
13508. Is it a prohibitory Act? Yes.
13509. On the election or choice of the municipalities? Yes; it embodies the principle of local option.
13510. Will you describe the main features of the Act? It prohibits absolutely the traffic in intoxicating liquors in any way except by licensed chemists.
13511. Is it similar to the Maine Liquor Law? It possesses some of the features of that law, but the difference between the constitution is so great that you can hardly compare them. As far as its prohibitory powers are concerned it is similar to the Maine law.
13512. The Maine Liquor Law comes into operation without the vote of any municipality, whereas under the Scott Act a vote has to be taken in the municipality before it can be applied? Yes, that is its characteristic.
13513. You say that it prohibits the sale or manufacture of intoxicating liquors in the district by which it has been accepted? It prohibits the sale of liquors to parties resident in the municipality, but it allows the manufacture and sale of liquors to persons outside of the municipality. 13514.

Mr. C. B. Hayes.
16 April, 1886.

Mr.
C. B. Hayes.
16 April, 1886.

13514. Has the Act been adopted in a large part of the Dominion? The Act provides that after it has been in operation for three years a vote may be taken as to whether it shall be repealed, and in four or five instances such votes have been taken.

13515. What has been the result? In only one instance I think was it decided to discontinue the Act; in other cases the majority of votes have been in favour of its continuance.

13516. Are Toronto, Ottawa, and other large cities municipalities? They are considered to be municipalities.

13517. Has the Act been accepted in Toronto and Ottawa? They have not taken a vote on it yet.

13518. But they are entitled to do so? Most decidedly.

13519. What machinery brings on the vote? The temperance organizations usually set the wheels moving; they apply to the proper authorities for a blank form for signatures. They must get a majority of the voters—I do not know whether it is two-thirds or three-fourths—to sign the document, which is a request for the Government to appoint a day on which a vote shall be taken on the adoption of the Act.

13520. Who are the voters? Ratepayers. The petition prays for the adoption of the Scott Act. When they secure the requisite number of signatures they apply to the Government to name a day when a vote shall be taken as to the advisableness or otherwise of adopting the Act. If a simple majority of the voters say that they wish the Act adopted, they get it.

13521. Suppose the petition were signed by two-thirds of a population of 5,000, and then when a vote were taken only seventy persons recorded their votes, would a majority of those votes be sufficient to bring the Act into force? Yes, the majority of votes cast, however few.

13522. You tell me that in the large towns this form of local option has not been adopted? The city in which I have been living, Guelph, was the first to adopt it, and since then one or two other cities have adopted it. St. Thomas's has, I know, but I am not sure about St. Catherine's.

13523. Have the county municipalities adopted it? Yes, much more extensively.

13524. Are the Canadians a sober race? I hardly know how to compare them with your people, but I fancy they are somewhat similar.

13525. Suppose you went into a town in any of the provinces, large or small, say the seat of Government—Ottawa—would you see many drunken people there in the course of the day? There are evidences of intemperance, such as you would find in San Francisco—or in any other American city.

13527. Is there a heavy penalty for sly grog selling? For the first two offences there is the option of a fine, but for the third offence the punishment is imprisonment, without the option of a fine.

13528. What is usually the amount of the fine? I do not know positively, but I believe that for the first offence it is $50, for the second double that amount, and for the third, imprisonment. I know one or two instances in which the terms of imprisonment has been six months; I think that that is about the medium.

13529. Is the Act enforced? My observation leads me to think that it has not been enforced. To show you that I am not prejudiced against the Act I may tell you that I voted in favour of its adoption in my municipality, and in the face of this I am forced to believe that the system of local option, as given by the Scott Act, is very hard to enforce—it is necessarily a hard law to enforce.

13530. Have you been in the State of Maine? No.

13531. Have you any knowledge of the States on your border? Not sufficient to be able to speak about them.

13532. You say that you are disappointed with the operation of the Scott Act? I am forced to be; I am sorry that I am disappointed with it.

13533. I suppose that in principle you are what we would call a local optionist? I am not; we adopt local option because we cannot get anything else.

13535. So that a man living on the confines of a district where the law is applied has not far to go to be able to get as much liquor as he likes? That is the objection which is taken to the law by temperance people.

13536. Has any attempt ever been made to pass prohibitory legislation in the Dominion? Bills have been introduced in Parliament, but they have never become Government measures and have not been adopted.

13537. Are you speaking of all the provinces now? Yes.

13538. I understand you to say that in none of the provinces has any attempt to pass a prohibitory Act been successful—apart from the Scott Act? There has been no other prohibitive legislation. I may explain that there has been what you might call a fight going on between the two political parties as to who has control of the licensing system. At the last general Dominion elections the leader of the Conservative party said that in his opinion the Dominion should control it and not the provinces, and he threatened to, and did, pass an Act which placed the control of the system in the hands of the Dominion. The provinces at once questioned his right to do so. The Premier of Ontario took the case to the Privy Council, and the decision was given in favour of the provinces that this legislation should be provincial. There seems to be an inconsistency in this matter. It has been decided that the Dominion Parliament has the right to prohibit, but not to govern the traffic; it has the power, as a whole, to pass a prohibitory Act to cover all the provinces, but the control of the traffic must be in the hands of the provinces.

13539. Then there is the political difficulty in the Scott legislation that even in places where it had been applied it cannot be enforced, because on the other side of the road, so to speak, a man can get any quantity of liquor, though actually he may be residing in a prohibited district? Yes, he has only to walk across the road to get as much liquor as he wants. My experience leads me to think that to be able to enforce satisfactorily any prohibitory Act you must have the sympathy of not only a majority but of almost the entire community. We have had there a great deal of discussion on the subject by American orators—advocates of temperance and intemperance—since the different municipalities have considered the advisability of adopting the Act. It seems to be the only conclusion an unprejudiced man can arrive at.

13542. Are the people much divided on this subject? Oh yes.

13543. Is it a burning question? So much so that it was thought by a good many it would become a Government question. I thought last session it would become a dividing line, but the excitement has now subsided to a certain extent.

Mr.
C. B. Hayes.
16 April, 1886.

13544. Are the people still exercised in their minds over the question? Not so much as they were a year ago.

13545. Are they waiting to see the effect of the Scott Act? No, it is rather the fear that temperance men have of the result of taking a vote in other municipalities.

13546. Is the temperance organization very strong? Yes; there are Sons of Temperance, Good Templars, and similar organizations.

13547. Allied with the United States organizations? Yes. There is a Society which has recognized the importance of temperance; it is of a mutual insurance nature, and it only admits members who are total abstainers; it is growing very fast in Canada.

13548. I presume that where there is no prohibitory legislation there is regulative legislation? Yes, for the licensing of houses to sell liquor.

13550. On the local option principle? Yes; the Commissioners, who are three representative men, have power to grant licenses.

13551. I suppose they have the discretion of granting as many or as few as they like: can they refuse to grant a license at all—I suppose they are a licensing authority? Yes.

13552. If they choose to fix the number at none, clearly they can refuse to license any house at all? It would be very impracticable; they do not do it anyhow.

13554. Were there not strong regulations under the Act as to the number of licenses in given areas? Oh no; the only liquor sold was supposed to be sold for medicinal purposes, or for some manufacturing purpose.

13555. But there are restrictions under the Act in regard to districts where prohibition does not prevail? There is no restrictive clause in the Act. The provinces grant a license, subject to restrictions.

13556. In connection with some parts of the territory does not absolute prohibition prevail, as, for instance, in the north-west? Yes.

13557. By Imperial enactment? Yes.

13558. For the sake of the Indians? Yes.

13559. What is the population of Toronto? From 100,000 to 105,000.

13560. It is not passed there? No; but it is in my native town, 48 miles from Toronto, containing a population of 11,000.

13561. When you speak of the municipality of Guelph being under prohibition you mean the City of Guelph? Yes.

13562. Is there as much drunkenness now—are the people more sober than formerly? I think there is less drunkenness.

13563. And only one out of three attempts to repeal the Act was successful? I am not positive, but that is about the proportion.

13564. Do you know the Parliamentary history of this Act—are you aware that a Commission composed of men of all shades of opinion was sent to the United States to inquire into the liquor traffic? No.

13565. Do you remember whether the Bill was carried by the vote, or whether it was merely agreed to? No objection was made, no vote was taken, and the Bill passed without becoming a Government question. I may state that the Secretary of the Dominion Alliance—perhaps as high an authority on the working of the Act as is to be found in Canada—told me that the Act originated among the temperance people, who went to Ottawa and petitioned the Government to pass an Act for the prohibition of the traffic. The Act was the direct result of the prayer.

13566. President.] It is easy under this Act to enforce prohibitory legislation in the country, but it is almost impossible to do so in the towns? That is a fair view to take of its effect. Those who live in country districts are a loyal people, but you will find that the people in the towns are ready to violate the law.

13567. The rural population consists chiefly of lumberers and those who raise wheat and maize? Yes.

13568. Lumberers are generally supposed to be a most temperate people;—is that your experience? No, just the opposite.

13569. There are camps where there is plenty of liquor? Yes, they drink it in large quantities, and as soon as you get into their midst you know it. They are French Canadians as a rule.

13570. Instead of very temperate they are the reverse? We consider them a very rough class and intemperate too.

13571. Are they intemperate when they are engaged in the felling and squaring of timber? There is no question that they would be if they were let. They are closely watched, but all the same they take large quantities of liquor into their camps. Only a few weeks before I left Canada I heard how liquor was smuggled into these districts, and what enormous prices were paid for it. It shows there is a great demand for it or it would not be done.

13572. Then I understand you to say that there would be no difficulty in enforcing prohibitory legislation in rural districts, because of the temperate habits of the people? Yes, they are very temperate.

13573. But you make an exception in the case of the lumberers? I do.

13574. But as to the class that we should call here farmers—those who are engaged in raising grain;—you say that they are a temperate class? Yes, as a rule.

13575. Have you any asylums for reclaiming drunkards in the Dominion? There are private ones; there is one in the town where I lived.

13576. Not a public one? No; there are public lunatic asylums.

13577. But do you know of any asylums such as there are in the United States into which drunkards can be put compulsorily and kept for a year or so? I do not know of any public inebriate asylum.

13578. But you know of private asylums? Yes, there is one in the town where I lived.

13579. How large is your town? It contains between 10,000 and 11,000 inhabitants.

13580. Has the asylum there many inmates? I fancy there are about forty or fifty—they are people of the better class.

13581. I suppose they have to pay pretty highly? Yes.

13582.

- Mr. C. B. Hayes.
16 April, 1886.
13582. Is the treatment successful—does it reclaim the drunkards? Yes, but the asylum is not entirely for inebriates—it is for people addicted to opium as well.
13583. Then do your people take opium as well as drink? There are some unfortunately who do.
13584. But whatever may be the form of intemperance, is the treatment successful in reclaiming the victims? Yes; some who have been inmates there have told me that after coming out they have felt no desire to return to their old habits. I may say that I was frequently called to attend at the asylum.
13585. Mr. Abigail.] Are you a medical practitioner? I am a dentist.
13586. President.] You have only been in the Colony a few weeks? I arrived here last Thursday.
13587. Then you have not had an opportunity of observing the habits of our people? I have seen enough hotels.
13588. Do you think that there is a large amount of intemperance here compared with what you have seen in your own country? We have not such a large number of hotels—nothing approaching to the number you have here.
13589. And I suppose you infer that where there is a large number of hotels there is a corresponding amount of intemperance? That is natural.
13590. In the town that you have left, and where the Scott Act is now in force, are there any means of obtaining liquor clandestinely—is the licensed chemist able to sell any liquor he chooses? Only on the prescription of a physician.
13591. And before a person can be served with liquor must he present a prescription? Yes, every time.
13592. Are any fraudulent practices resorted to with regard to prescriptions? In Guelph the Act was adopted some fourteen months ago; but as there must be a period of five clear months between the passing of the Act and the expiration of the licenses then in force, it had not come into force prior to the granting of the last licenses; it will not come into force until the first of next month.
13593. But you have seen the operation of a similar law in other places? Yes.
13594. But in spite of the prohibition, can people get all the liquor they want by clandestine means? They do not get it through the connivance of the physicians—I have never heard it said that any of them were guilty of giving orders for liquor except for medicinal purposes—but they do get it from low shops.
13595. I suppose in violation of the law; but they must take some precautions, I presume, to be quite sure of the people to whom they serve liquor—some pass-word or something of that kind—some free-masonry? Yes, it is done with great care.
13596. Do you still see drunken men in the street where this law is in force? Yes.
13597. Then they must get the liquor somewhere, and you infer that they get it in those low shops? It is not right to infer that, because they may go to a neighbouring municipality and buy liquor to keep at home.
13598. Then there is no penalty against having liquor in your house? It can be brought in in large quantities and put into a cellar, but it must not be sold.
13599. What class of people do that, the lower class or the better class? It must be the better class who bring in quantities of liquor to keep in their cellars; the lower class get it from the “dives”—cellars where liquor is sold. To get to those places you have to go through long dark passages, and you must have a friend with you who knows the signal.
13600. Do you think then that, in spite of the prohibitory law, as much liquor is consumed as if there were no such law? No, I do not think so.
13601. Then you think the law is effective to a certain extent? Yes.
13602. But you admit that it is not thoroughly effective? It is not all we wish it.
13603. You say that you think it is above the sentiments of the people? I said that it required the sympathy of almost the entire community, or at any rate of a large majority, before it could be enforced.
13604. Then do you think it is premature in Canada—I mean by premature that it is above the moral powers of the people, above their powers of endurance—do you think that? I scarcely know how to answer that. It is a very hard law to enforce, but there is no difficulty in getting a majority of the voters to carry the Act in every municipality, though there is a good deal of grumbling about it when it is enforced.
13605. But one of the objections seems to be of a kind that can be easily removed as the Act becomes more generally adopted—I mean the objection that its ineffectiveness is chiefly caused by the facilities for getting liquor by crossing a street or road and going into another municipality? That will exist so long as there is local option.
13606. Do you think there is any possibility of the Act being made general by a Dominion law which will prohibit the sale of liquor entirely? No, I do not think so—in fact I am sure it will not be so.
13607. On the other hand, do you think the law may be relaxed? There has been some talk of that, but my own conviction is, and I have never taken a strong party side, but have tried to study the question and judge intelligently, that the high license system has proved the best; that is, the granting of licenses to a few men of the best repute.
13608. That is a kind of legislation which is enforced in some of the States. I think there are some States where a license costs as much as 2,000 dollars. Do you think that by raising the cost of the privilege granted to the publican better results are obtained? I do. Of course they do not give the publicans the privilege of selling liquor indiscriminately; it can only be sold during certain hours, from 7 in the morning until 11 at night, with the exception of Saturday, when the bars must be closed entirely at 7 o'clock. There is also a heavy penalty attached to selling on Sundays and to selling to minors.
13609. Is the Sabbath prohibition effective? Yes, you may say that it is effective, though there are some publicans who sell on the Sabbath. One good provision in the Act is that which requires all bars to be on the street, and to have a large window which must never be curtained or painted, so that the Inspector can at all times see into the bar. Before that provision was passed the publicans used to shut up their bars so closely during prohibited hours that it was impossible to tell whether any liquor was sold or not.
13610. What province are you speaking of now? Ontario.
13611. Do you know Quebec well? I have been through it.
13612. I presume it is a sort of seaport town somewhat resembling Sydney, where there are a large number of sailors? I have not been in the city of Quebec.
13613. Mr. Hyam.] What is the extent of the municipalities that you have spoken of? The municipality in which I have been residing is perhaps 20 miles long by 15 in breadth.

13614. Is that the extent of the municipality of Guelph? No; I was speaking of the municipalities from which our members are elected. The vote upon the Scott Act is taken in the municipalities exclusive of the cities within their boundaries, and a separate vote is taken in the cities. The town of Guelph in which I live has lately become a city; it is in the municipality of South Wellington. The Act was adopted both in the city and in the municipality.

13615. Are there any breweries in the places of which you have spoken, and where the Scott Act is in force? Yes, there are two.

13616. And distilleries? No.

13617. Are the beer and spirits brewed and distilled in those places allowed to go into consumption in the places where the Scott Act is in force? I forget what the provisions of the Act are in that respect; I am inclined to think that the liquor can be bought in certain quantities.

13618. For drinking? I am not sure about that; that looks like an inconsistency; I do not think it can, but I am not certain about that.

13619. Can it be sold in a neighbouring municipality? Yes.

13621. Notwithstanding the prohibitory law? Yes, in quantities over a certain amount.

13623. Then, as a matter of fact, the law can in no way interfere with private drinking? No.

13624. Persons can drink as much as they like privately? Yes; they cannot obtain less than a certain quantity.

13625. But they can obtain as much as they please above that quantity? Yes.

13626. Mr. Abigail.] In reference to your city, you said you could not tell whether the benefits of the Scott Act were generally discernible: can you state whether the public expenditure upon police gaols and paupers is the same under the prohibitive law as before the prohibition took place? As far as the city in which I resided is concerned I have explained that the Act does not come in force there until May next.

13628. You say that people can obtain drink for private consumption to an almost unlimited extent: have you observed whether that takes place to as great an extent as it does in Sydney, where drink can be obtained without any let or hindrance? It is notorious that there is a lot of liquor brought into the municipality next to that in which I have been living, by private citizens, who keep it in their cellars.

13629. And does prohibition exist? Yes; the Scott Act is in force there.

13630. A considerable number of contests have taken place with reference to the Scott Act in different counties? Yes.

13631. Can you say whether the people have endorsed the Scott Act by large majorities? There have been no small majorities. I think it has only been defeated in four or five instances.

13632. You cannot speak with reference to prohibition in the counties other than those to which you have referred? No.

13633. Mr. Hutchison.] You say that one municipality is divided from another by a street, and that one side of a street might adopt prohibition while the other side reject it; drinking, therefore, might be going on quite close to the municipality which had adopted prohibition? We call all the streets throughout the country roads, but they take advantage of the Act to bring the drink right up to the dividing line. Our country districts are more thickly populated than yours. In our case the farmers in almost every instance live within sight of one another. At one corner of four cross roads you may see an hotel; but at another corner the Scott Act may be in force.

13634. But the population of the two districts may be far removed from the corner? Of course the greater part of it would be. I may say that I have frequently thought—and I am sure I utter the opinions of many others—that the Scott Act has the effect of removing the temptation to drink from the young. There was a great evil arising from this temptation—boys would have drink given them by disreputable men—but they cannot obtain it under the Scott Act.

13635. In the prohibited districts men can obtain drink only with very great difficulty? With very great difficulty.

13636. And the medical men do not give false certificates? They are too respectable to stoop to anything of that description; of course it happens occasionally.

13637. Have the authorities made any complaint of loss of revenue in consequence of the passing of the Scott Act? The only revenue they could lose would be from licenses; they could not lose any from duty.

13638. Do you think that the complaint is of a serious character, or that it is merely a matter of sentiment? There is not much complaint of that nature.

13639. Is there any indifference as to the voting; is the vote cast commensurate with the population? Larger than the vote-cast in Parliamentary elections; there is no indolence in the matter of voting. The vote is usually very largely in favour of the Scott Act. The sympathies of the people tend towards prohibition; it seems to be hard to get an Act which can be enforced, and the Government are afraid to give prohibition.

13640. They prefer to allow the people to adopt prohibition if they think fit? That is the principle.

13641. Mr. Roseby.] Are we to understand that the Scott Act has grown in public favour? Yes.

13642. You believe that the whole of the people, and especially the young, are benefited by its adoption;—is that so? Yes, I believe that it has a beneficial tendency.

13643. We have had great complaints here of drinking among the young;—do you think that the great facilities for obtaining drink are the cause of it? I believe that the greatest harm is done by opening bars to young boys from 12 to 17 years of age. It is said by some persons in Canada that the effect of there being no liquor obtainable at bars is an incentive to persons to obtain liquor in quantities, and

- Mr. C. B. Hayes. and to go to a secluded spot and drink it; my own impression is that compelling the bars to close has a good result. That is one of the reasons why I favour the adoption of the Act.
13614. Where licenses are obtained the law regulating the sale is very restrictive? Yes.
13615. And the bars are absolutely closed on Sundays? Yes.
13616. Do you think that the law is generally complied with? It is occasionally violated—not often.
13617. What are the penalties? I think 50 dollars for a first infringement; the sum is increased in the case of a second offence, and for a third offence the license is taken away.
13618. Do you think there is much secret drinking when the doors are closed? The fact that the publicans are compelled to place the bar next to the street, and to have no connection with the house except by way of the hall, helps to prevent secret drinking when the doors are closed. I am acquainted with hotel-keepers who have told me that the annoyance connected with selling liquor on Sunday is more than the profit is worth.
13619. You think that the morality of the people is promoted by the Scott Act, and that there is less crime and drunkenness where the prohibitive law is in force? I think things would be still better if they would enforce and carry out the letter of the law.
13620. President.] What authority administers the Scott Act? Strange to say, although it is a Dominion Act, it is left to the provinces to enforce it.
13621. Who administered it in your town? Our city Magistrate; there is a liquor inspector who makes the complaint, and the ordinary Magistrate adjudicates.
13622. Mr. Hyam.] You say that although it is a Dominion Act the local authorities enforce it? Yes.

MONDAY, 3 MAY, 1886.

Present:—

A. OLIVER, Esq., M.A., PRESIDENT,	A. HUTCHISON, Esq.,
T. COLLS, Esq., J.P.,	J. ROSEBY, Esq., J.P.,
F. ABIGAIL, Esq., J.P., M.P.,	J. DAVIES, Esq., C.M.G., J.P., M.P.,
G. WITHERS, Esq., J.P.

THE PRESIDENT IN THE CHAIR.

Mr. Charles B. Hayes and Mr. John H. Moore called in, sworn, and examined conjointly:—

- Mr. C. B. Hayes and Mr. J. H. Moore. 13653. Mr. Hutchison.] You remember, Mr. Hayes, that when you appeared before us last I said that I believed that the Scott Act carried with it very restrictive measures as well as the local option provisions—I find that I was in error, and that there is a subsequent Act to the Scott Act, viz., the Canadian Temperance Act, in addition to which there is the Duncan Act? Mr. Hayes: The Canadian Temperance Act was introduced by Sir John Macdonald, the Premier. It really meant that the regulation of the liquor business in Canada should rest with the Dominion, and not with the respective provinces. The provinces questioned the right of the Dominion Parliament to legislate on the matter, and the Privy Council, when appealed to, decided against the Dominion. There seems to be some inconsistency in the decision, as, while the Privy Council held that the Dominion Parliament had a right to pass a prohibitory law they had no right to legislate so as to govern the traffic.
13654. As I understand it, the province of New Brunswick appealed as to the right to prohibit in Frederickton, and the Privy Council in 1882 conceded them the right, but the regulation which they proposed coeval with the prohibition was not allowed, therefore the Canadian Temperance Act was introduced in 1883 to regulate the trade, and it is now in force? No, just preceding the last Dominion election there was considerable illfeeling existing between the Premier of the Province of Ontario and the Premier of the Dominion—the first being a reformer and the latter a Conservative. The Premier of the Dominion believed the Premier of the Province used his power of control over the traffic to further his own interests. He said at a meeting that if he were returned he would take the power out of the hands of the “little tyrant,” as he called the Premier of the Province. This started the agitation, the reformers holding that under the Constitution of the Dominion the Premier had no right to propose such legislation. The Act which was passed is known as the Canadian Temperance Act.
13655. It is rather for regulation than prohibition? Yes.
13656. Do you remember what the restrictions are? They are very similar in effect to those contained in the Provincial laws.
13657. Is the system like this: The Licensing Magistrates, or the Boards, which are appointed by the Government, the Governor, and the municipal powers are allowed to issue one license for the first 500 inhabitants, and one for every thousand afterwards. That is the maximum allowed, but they can cut that number down if they chose? Mr. Moore: I think that there is a limit according to population, and the Boards have the power to reduce the number.
13658. They can do so without enforcing absolute prohibition? Suppose the maximum is ten hotels, and there are ten in the township, if one is reported against as not being properly conducted, or not being in accordance with the Act, the Board have the power to strike it off.
13659. Without requiring to make up the number? Yes, the hotels are different from those here. They have to have accommodation for horses, and so many bedrooms, containing a certain amount of air space. If an inspector reports a house as not meeting these requirements it can be struck off.
13660. President.] Suppose the Scott Act came into force in a municipality by virtue of the local option vote, that would be for a period of how many years? Mr. Hayes: Until repealed. Another vote can be taken after three years.
13661. The Act is effective until repealed by a contrary vote? Yes.
13662. That legislation, I presume, would be overridden by the Canadian Temperance Act, in the event of a majority of the population changing their minds and saying that they preferred regulation to total prohibition? Mr. Moore: No; that cannot be done within the three years.
13663. By what means do they relieve themselves from the operation of the Act? Simply by repealing it by a majority vote.
13664. The first thing is to repeal the Scott Act within the municipality; then, I suppose, without any further step step being taken, the Canadian Temperance Act comes into force? Mr. Hayes: They come under the operation of their Provincial Act. The Canadian Temperance Act was declared to be ultra vires. 13665. Mr. Hutchison.] There seems to be some misunderstanding. I have been distinctly informed by the Hon. Mr. Foster, a member of the Dominion Parliament, that the question submitted to the Privy Council was whether the Dominion had power to compel Fredericton to become prohibitive—it was prohibition that they were seeking to put in force—this was appealed against, and the Privy Council sustained the right to prohibit? During the last few years two questions have been submitted to the Privy Council. The first question related to the Scott Act, and the last to the powers of the Dominion Parliament as to regulation of the liquor traffic. As I said before, the decision of the Privy Council in the first case was in favour of the Dominion having the right to prohibit; but, on the appeal with respect to the Canadian Temperance Act, it was decided that the Dominion had no power of regulation. I am satisfied that the Canadian Temperance Act was declared to be ultra vires. I know that in Ontario we have not been under the operation of that Act.

Mr.
C. B. Hayes
and Mr.
J. H. Moore.
3 May, 1886.

13666. President.] What Act have you been under? Crooks' Act—a Provincial Act.

13667. What is the Duncan Act? It is a Dominion Act, and is prohibitory.

13669. Mr. Hutchison.] My impression is that the Canadian Temperance Act of 1883 is the most recent legislation on the subject—that it was intended to meet the entire case—that it was acting well, and that it had not been appealed against. I gathered this from information which I received from the Hon. Mr. Foster, and from an address delivered in London, in 1885, by Sir Leonard Tilley? The latter gentleman is a high authority—he is the Finance Minister. I see now how the misunderstanding has arisen between us as to the actual facts. The decision of the Privy Council was given during the last six or eight months, and Mr. Hutchison's information must be of a date prior to that.

13670. When did you leave Canada? Early in March last.

13671. I was not aware that the decision was given so recently. Of course that explains the whole thing. Are you aware whether the Act provided for the shutting up of public-houses on the occasion of Parliamentary or municipal elections? It probably did.

13672. Is it not the rule all over Canada? Mr. Moore: Yes.

13673. Is it not a fact that in Canada the public-houses are closed at 7 o'clock on Saturday nights? Yes.

13674. And they are not opened again until 7 o'clock on Monday mornings? Yes, seven.

13675. Are the Dominion elections all held on one day? Yes.

13676. Mr. Roseby.] Do you remember the condition of things on election days prior to the passing of the law providing for the closing of public-houses on those days? Mr. Hayes: As long as I can remember that has been the practice. Mr. Moore: I can distinctly remember elections prior to the passing of the Act. The change has been so marked that it would be impossible to repeal the law.

13677. The beneficial tendency of closing the public-houses on polling-days has been so marked that no one would have the temerity to attempt to repeal it? Mr. Moore: No; repeal of it has never even been hinted at—the whole country is united as to the closing of hotels on polling-days.

13678. Has the closing of the public-houses at 7 o'clock on Saturday night had a beneficial effect? There is no grumbling about it—the people have not asked to have it repealed. Some years ago some petitions were sent in against it, but not much notice was taken of them.

13679. The public sentiment strongly supports the closing of all licensed houses from 7 on Saturday night to 7 on Monday morning? Yes, and our publicans take their recreation the same as other people.

13680. There is no general attempt to violate the law by selling on the sly? There is no attempt on the part of the general public. Of course there is more or less underhand drinking behind the scenes, but it amounts to nothing in comparison with what the drinking would be if the houses were open.

13681. Do you think that the law is broken to any great extent? No. I may explain that the issue on which this provision was made was that it would protect the working-men, who received their wages on Saturday evening; it was passed so that they could not get into the hotels to spend their money.

13682. In your opinion it has had a very beneficial tendency? No doubt of it.

13683. I suppose that as the law is so generally observed you do not see people rolling about the streets in a state of intoxication on Sundays? For years before I left Guelph, the city in which I lived, I do not remember seeing more than one drunkard on any day of the week. We have a population of 12,000, and there are only four policemen.

13684. Is the Scott Act in force there? It came into force on the 1st of this month.

13685. How many public-houses were there before you had prohibition? Eighteen, I think.

13688. Then it is not manhood suffrage but municipal suffrage;—are women entitled to vote? Yes, the vote is extended to women now.

13689. Mr. Hutchison.] Are not the voters the same as the voters for Members of Parliament? Yes, and the franchise has been extended during the last few years to certain persons' sons and also to women.

13690. Every one who is on the roll for Parliamentary elections can vote on the Scott Act? Certainly—all ratepayers.

13691. President.] And women are included? Certainly.

13692. Minors, I presume, cannot vote? No.

13693. Mr. Roseby.] The prohibition of the sale of liquor has not caused hotels for public accommodation to be dispensed with? No; a man may keep a temperance house.

13694. Refreshments and beds and stabling and all that kind of accommodation can be obtained equally

Mr.
C. B. Hayes
and Mr.
J. H. Moore.
3 May, 1886.

- as well, although the bars have been closed? Yes. I was in Haltan, the neighbouring county to ours, when the Scott Act had been in force two years, and I had no difficulty in obtaining accommodation.
13695. You can get quite as comfortable accommodation now that the bars have been dispensed with as you could when the bars were in existence? Certainly.
13696. So that the closing of the bars has not caused any inconvenience to the travelling public? The accommodation of course is provided by private houses. They are not licensed, and the owners cannot be compelled to furnish accommodation.
13697. But as a matter of fact they do furnish it for their own benefit? Yes, certainly, they do.
13698. Do you think that the operation of the Scott Act has had a beneficial tendency? That is my opinion.
13699. Has it been the means of lessening drunkenness, crime, and other evils? There is no doubt that it has the effect of lessening drunkenness, and I think it is a benefit to the country.
13700. And the public sentiment in Canada seems to be growing in its favour? Yes. In the county where I live you can see the turn-over which has occurred in a few years. I voted against the old Act, and so did hundreds of others, because we thought it would ruin the business of our city, and the business men voted unitedly against it; but they have since seen the wisdom of it and have voted for the Scott Act, which is a much more stringent one.
13701. I ask you as a man of the world and a man of experience, do you believe in the principle of allowing the people themselves to have a voice in the matter of opening or closing public-houses? I do.
13702. In other words, you believe in the principle of local option? I do not know what you mean by local option unless it is that which we have in Canada; I believe in that.
13703. Although at one time you opposed it and voted against it? Yes.
13704. Have you been long in this city? I have only been here a few days this time, but I was here before.
13706. But you have had greater experience in Victoria than in this Colony? Yes.
13707. And you have noticed the large number of public-houses we have here as compared with the number you have in Canada? Oh my, yes. I know you have more in the cities, and in the country towns there are fully five times as many as in country towns in Canada. In the little town of Nagambie I counted as many as fourteen public-houses, places such as our people would not license on any account.
13708. That town is in Victoria? Yes, on the Goulburn River.
13709. Our inquiry is limited to this Colony? I have noticed the same state of things at Wagga Wagga; that is in your Colony, I think.
13710. Is there any restriction upon the employment of females in bars in Canada? I do not think that there is any restriction, but few females are employed. It is not the custom of the country to employ females to serve in bars—only barmen are employed.
13711. Did you ever observe whether hotels in Canada have more than one bar—have they bars up-stairs, and in different parts of the premises? I cannot call to mind any. Mr. Hayes: They are only allowed to have one bar. At the time of the Exhibition, I think, temporary license were granted for an additional room.
13712. President.] Does the Scott Act prohibit the supply of liquor to inmates of a house? Mr. Moore: Yes, it cannot be kept on the premises at all.
13713. Then it is total prohibition? Yes.
13714. Mr. Hutchison.] You said, Mr. Hayes, that you thought a manufacturer in a prohibited district could sell liquor within that district, have you reconsidered that question, or can your friend assist you? Mr. Hayes: I think I said that to the best of my memory a resident in a prohibited district could go outside his district to buy liquor, and that he could take it to his own residence for his own consumption.
13715. But liquor is manufactured in prohibited districts? Yes.
13716. And can the manufacturers sell it to any one in the district? No, I don't think they can.
13717. President.] Can they dispose of it in any way within the district—can they give it away? They can use it themselves; I do not suppose they would be likely to give it away.
13718. But there is such a thing as exchange: what we want to know is what are the loopholes for evading the Act, if there are any? The Scott Act is so strict that it would not be worth any man's while to try and evade it.
13719. Mr. Abigail.] The liquor cannot be exchanged for other things? No, they cannot barter it at all; that would be the same thing as selling it.
13720. Mr. Hutchison.] I suppose that as a matter of fact there is an excise officer at the factories, and he must see what is sent away? There is an excise officer in the district, and he attends the factories regularly.
13721. Mr. Withers.] You said, in answer to the President, that minors cannot vote under the Scott Act? Mr. Moore: Yes, I know no person under 21 years of age can vote. I have been a scrutineer, and therefore I know.
13722. Have you considered the question of applying local option to renewals? [Mr. Hutchison: That is local option; local option in Canada means prohibition—it is not limited local option such as we have. When a local option vote is taken it is taken on the question of license or no license;—is not that so?] Yes.
13723. Mr. Withers.] But I presume there were some public-houses in existence when the Scott Act became law? Certainly.
13724. How were they dealt with? They have time to dispose of their premises, if they don't want to keep a temperance house?

13725. Mr. Hutchison.] Is it not the case that if the vote is taken ninety days before the 1st of May, it takes effect on that date, but if the vote is not taken within ninety days of the 1st of May it does not take effect until the 1st of May following? Mr. Hayes: The licenses are granted under the provincial Act on the 1st of May, and there must be at least five clear months from the adoption of the Scott Act until the 1st of May. If there is not that interval, a year must be added to the time which does intervene.

13726. Mr. Withers.] Do not large numbers of families throughout America live in hotels? Mr. Moore: That is more the custom in the United States than in Canada.

13727. I suppose that to a gentleman coming from Canada our public-houses have more the appearance of drinking-saloons than houses of accommodation? Yes, in the majority of cases, especially in the country, the accommodation is miserable compared with ours. There is nothing in the Colonies I have noticed more, and it has been more frequently spoken of in conversations I have had with my countrymen whom I met here than anything else in connection with the Colonies. Our hotels would be a credit to any country.

13729. Have you remarked that young people here are much given to intemperate habits? All classes. I may say that I never saw a woman go up to a bar for her beer until I came here.

13730. Have you seen that often in this country? Often in the country districts. Not to a large extent, but it will come under your notice.

13731. Have you observed that young girl and boys here are greatly addicted to drink? Yes.

13733. Then selling liquor is not so profitable a calling in Canada as it is here? It is profitable in a way. The hotels are limited to a certain number, and the publicans can consequently furnish first-class accommodation, and the bars are not frequented by low persons.

13734. And the publicans are as much respected as other business men? Certainly, they are very fine fellows some of them. The generality of our hotelkeepers are good staple men. About the only restriction placed upon them is that they cannot be elected to the Municipal Council. I was once boarding at a public-house, the owner of which was a candidate for election as an alderman of the city, and he put his brother's initials in front of his name on the house, and as it were sold out to him.

13735. Do you know whether they are eligible for appointment to the Commission of the Peace? No. Mr. Hayes: There is one restriction, and that is that they must not permit gambling in their houses. You can hardly get an opportunity to play whist or euchre in an hotel, to say nothing of sitting down to gamble. A conviction for allowing gambling means the loss of the license. It is optional on the part of the Magistrates to inflict the penalty for a first offence, but it is compulsory for a second offence; but they make a practice, for the sake of example, of showing no leniency.

13736. President.] What are the hours during which public-houses are open in places where the Scott Act is not in force? Mr. Moore: From 7 to 7 on Saturdays, and 7 to 11 on other days.

13737. Mr. Withers.] When you were last before us, Mr. Hayes, you said something about the bars having to be kept open to public view, and the windows not being allowed to be screened? Mr. Hayes: The reason for inserting that provision in the Act was that the publican used to close up the front of his bar during prohibited hours, and let his friends in by a back door to have a high time. The publicans were consequently required to keep the bar-window clear, so that the inspector could see in from the street. Some bars are not in the front street, but they are in such a position that the inspector can see in from a back lane or other place.

13739. Mr. Hutchison.] Simply that the interior of the bar may be inspected if necessary? Yes.

13741. And I think you said that a person could go to a distillery and obtain a gallon of spirits? I said that a person in the district where prohibition was enforced could go to a distillery in the adjoining municipality where prohibition was not enforced.

13742. Does not the liquor go into bond, and are there no excisemen? Mr. Moore: There is no duty between the counties—liquor may pass free anywhere within the country.

13743. President.] From one province to another? Yes; the liquor is inspected and the duty paid on the premises, and after that the manufacturer can sell it.

13744. Suppose I am living in Ontario and I buy liquor in Quebec, can I get it into Ontario duty free? Yes, there is no tariff between the provinces; the tariff applies only to goods coming from outside the country.

13745. But you have excise duties? Yes.

13746. Mr. Colls.] What liquor is chiefly in demand? Lager-beer, that is universally drunk. Mr. Hayes: One bad effect of the Act is that it has a tendency to check the consumption of lager-beer, and to encourage the consumption of spirituous liquors.

13747. Mr. Hutchison.] In what way? It is of less bulk, and therefore more portable.

13748. And is it your impression that the opponents of the Scott Act are so persistently determined to have drink that they will change the kind of liquor in order to obtain it? Yes; as I said the other day, and I speak as a disinterested person—prohibition is impracticable; liquor will be had—that is my honest conviction—and prohibitory laws have a tendency to increase the consumption of spirituous liquors, and to decrease the consumption of fermented ales and beers.

13749. President.] Is that your opinion, Mr. Moore? Mr. Moore: No, I hold different views.

13750. Well, it may be convenient for you to express your views now? My views are about the opposite of those of Mr. Hayes.

13751. Mr. Hutchison.] Am I not right in saying that the whole of Canada is working in the direction of local option, and that intelligently and from conviction? I think so; I think the Act has been adopted in nineteen counties since I came here.

Mr.
C. B. Hayes
and Mr.
J. H. Moore.
3 May, 1886.

- Mr. C. B. Hayes and Mr. J. H. Moore.
3 May, 1886.
13752. Up to the end of last year had not the vote been taken in as many as eighty places? Mr. Hayes: Not so many as that, I think.
13753. President.] Do you know what proportion the population subject to the Scott Act bears to the entire population;—is it one-fifth? Mr. Moore: I have very little idea of what has been done outside Ontario.
13754. Has the Scott Act been adopted in the eastern provinces? In some places.
13755. In Newfoundland? I do not know; that is not within the Confederation.
13756. In Prince Edward's Island—that is within the confederation? I cannot say; I cannot speak about the eastern country at all.
13757. I asked your friend the other day whether the lumberers of Canada were a sober people, as I understood they were, but he says they are not? I do not think they are.
13758. Mr. Colls.] Are there such licenses as wine and beer licenses in Canada? Mr. Hayes: No.
13759. President.] There is only one sort of license? Yes; there is a grocer's license; but I presume you are referring to retail licenses—there is only one kind of them.
13760. Mr. Colls.] What is the smallest quantity of liquor a grocer can sell? A single bottle.
13761. Is any gambling allowed? Mr. Hayes: That is a very serious offence; nothing beyond billiards is allowed in connection with hotels; billiards are not prohibited by any provincial Act; the majority of municipalities will not allow a billiard-room to be connected with an hotel at all.
13762. Mr. Davies.] I understand, Mr. Hayes, from your evidence, the Scott Act is a prohibitory Act? Yes.
13763. And is brought into operation by the vote of the people in provinces? In electoral districts.
13764. Is the vote taken on the rolls which you use in the election of your members? Yes.
13765. Can females vote? The franchise has been extended to them, and it is just taking effect.
13766. Can they vote in the election of your Members of Parliament? Yes, but there are certain qualifications.
13767. The Scott Act provides for three years' prohibition without any possibility of repeal? Yes.
13768. At the expiration of that time a new vote may be taken? Yes, asking for the repeal of the Act.
13769. Mr. Hutchison.] And providing no steps are taken for a fresh vote, the prohibition remains in force until a vote is taken? Yes.
13770. The provision may be in force for ever if it is not repealed by the vote of the people? Yes.
13771. Mr. Davies.] What is the average population in your municipalities? From 10,000 to 50,000.
13772. And the proportion of votes in favour of the Scott Act in the larger municipalities? In country places the vote has always been largely in favour of prohibition; and whenever it has been carried in cities such as we reside in the majority has been a very slim one. Mr. Moore: They have had majorities all the way from 25 to 1,500 votes.
13773. Only so slender a majority as twenty-five in some cases? Mr. Moore: I cannot instance a case, but it has often happened. Mr. Hayes: I think it was carried in St. Thomas by twenty-five votes last fall—October or November.
13774. Is there much illicit drinking in prohibited cities? Mr. Hayes: My impression is that there is some, but the law is tolerably well observed; it has a good effect; no doubt there is some illicit drinking.
13775. In cases where the vote is carried by a bare majority, do the people in opposition to prohibition acquiesce in the decision of the majority and endeavour to obey the law? I distinctly say you cannot enforce it in cases where you only have a small majority. It is a very usual thing to hear inflammatory speeches in regard to the Scott Act being beneficial in some town or other, but I can recollect a town of 4,000 or 5,000 inhabitants where the Act was a failure, and in place of six or eight reputable houses there were twenty unlicensed houses selling whisky. The consensus of opinion is that it is difficult to enforce the vote unless you have a large majority.
13776. There is a great deal of friction in the cities and municipalities? Yes.
13777. And drink can be purchased by the people of a municipality just outside its boundaries? Yes.
13778. Does much drunkenness arise from people living in prohibited cities or municipalities procuring drink from unprohibited ones? It is well enough known that it is done. Mr. Moore: But a man has generally got to go from 1 to 50 miles for the drink.
13779. I understand one municipality is simply divided from another by streets? Mr. Hayes: Yes. Mr. Moore: But the people who live in the centre of a county have to go about 30 or 40 miles to get into an unprohibited district.
13780. What is the area of your city? Mr. Hayes: Probably 2 miles square. Mr. Moore: Approximately they are from 2 to 3 miles square.
13781. It is a prohibited city? Mr. Hayes: Yes.
13782. Surrounding it, I presume, there are other towns and villages? Yes; all these places are included in the radius of the Scott Act.
13783. A separate vote for the counties? Yes.
13784. Have they carried it? Yes, all round the city for miles.
13786. You take the vote under the Scott Act in the city and counties on the same day? Mr. Hayes: Oh no; the Government selects the day for each electoral district.
13787. In what way do you give the notice? They petition the Government to take a vote, and the petition must bear the signatures of three-fourths or two-thirds, I am not sure which, of the voters in the constituency. The Government then appoint a day when the vote shall be taken.
13788. A municipality must not contain a city? If it contains a city a separate vote must be taken there.
- 13790.

13790. If three-fourths of the voters sign the petition, how comes it that there is only a bare majority at the poll? We, as British subjects, all admit the justice of the majority ruling. The Government say experience has taught them how easy it is for any body of enthusiasts, where only a bare majority of signatures is required, to get enough petitions in order to get a question submitted to the people, and, in the end, to find themselves defeated. If they demand a large majority they are very apt to find a majority at least who will support the Act when the vote is taken.
13791. What is the qualification of a voter? Mr. Moore: I cannot tell you just now. I have the qualifications in my valise.
13792. President.] Is it freehold or leasehold? Mr. Hayes: Freehold, leasehold, and a farmer's son.
13793. Mr. Davies.] It is not manhood suffrage? No.
13794. How do you punish the illicit sale of liquor in prohibited districts? Mr. Moore: First fine, $50; second fine, $100; and for third offence, three months in gaol.
13795. Mr. Hutchison.] And the confiscation of all liquor found in the place? Mr. Hayes: Always.
13796. President.] Do you fine the person who drinks the liquor as well as the publican who sells it. Mr. Hayes: No. Mr. Moore: They hold that a man cannot get the liquor unless it was there for him.
13797. Mr. Davies.] How much is the license in regulated districts? Mr. Hayes: The municipality fixes it. Mr. Moore: I think the Government license is $100 and the municipality license 75 or 80 dollars. If the license fee is (say) $175, the Government get $100 and the municipality $75, and proportionately if the fee is larger.
13798. Are the police maintained by the municipalities or by the Government? Mr. Moore: By the municipality.
13799. How would you compare the drunkenness in districts where prohibition is in force with districts that are regulated? Mr. Moore: I cannot say. In our own city it would be very hard to draw a comparison at any time; it is a very temperate place, and you very seldom see a drunken man there.
13800. Is there much drunkenness in places where licenses are granted? I never saw any great extent of drunkenness. Mr. Hayes: If an inebriated man were to walk down a street of Guelph he would provoke as much attention as a stray horse in the streets here.
13801. President.] Would he be arrested for mere drunkenness? Mr. Moore: No. Mr. Hayes: If a man goes quietly to his home without sitting down or making himself disagreeable they allow him to go, but if he is the least bit unpleasant at all to the community he is taken to gaol. Mr. Moore: There is a good deal of regular drinking by men who take so much every day of their lives.
13802. Do they take much liquor to their homes? Mr. Moore: If a man wishes to have liquor he has it, but on the whole they are very temperate people.
13803. Mr. Davies: Can you buy liquor in a prohibited district? Mr. Hayes: No.
13804. All drink has to be purchased outside the municipality or city in regulated districts? Certainly.
13805. There is no prohibition against a man getting it in this way and giving it to his guests? Certainly not.
13806. President.] I presume that in a place so sober as Canada there is no such thing as an inebriate asylum? Mr. Moore: I am not aware of there being any in Canada.
13807. In places where the traffic is regulated—not prohibited—is the liquor inspected with a view to ascertain whether it is adulterated? Oh yes.
13808. I suppose inspectors are able to take samples from the hotels for the purposes of analysis? Yes.
13809. And if liquor is found to be adulterated I presume a heavy fine is inflicted on the publican? I do not know what the fine is in regard to that.
13810. As there has been a reluctant minority in many of these cases where the Scott Act has been brought into force—no doubt brought up to drinking habits and customs—is it not a fact that though outside traffic in liquor has been restrained to a very large extent, perhaps wholly, yet private consumption of liquor goes on at a correspondingly increased rate? In the city is it not a fact that everybody gets his whole supply of liquors and gives them to his friends? Mr. Moore: Yes, privately, but very few in my experience. Mr. Hayes: There are very few indeed; people of the better class in that country are not much given to the habit of drinking. There has been a wonderful reformation during the last ten years; and, in my circle of acquaintances in Guelph, for the last nine years, I do not know of but one person who ever set a decanter on the table during the evening. We often meet for enjoyment such as whist parties, and I only know of one or perhaps two in my circle of acquaintances setting either fermented or spirituous liquor on the table.
13811. Canada is a country as cold as Scotland? Yes.
13812. And it is not the practice to put the decanters on the table after a whist party? Mr. Moore: That does not follow at all; it is done in very few places.
13813. Then there is a voluntary abstention from the use as well as the abuse of liquor? Mr. Hayes: There is a voluntary abstention on the part of the majority. I believe you asked whether there was a graceful acceptance of the Act; I may say there is a dogged resistance offered by an element which seems determined to baffle those who have been instrumental in bringing it into force, and in every way possible to show spite and spleen.
13814. What class of men are they? The lower class of publicans and their friends, and occasionally men of the better class.
13815. Are these persons of Canadian birth? Of course some are. Mr. Moore: They are mixed, just as they are here, some old country people and some Canadians.
13816. There has been large immigration from the United Kingdom to Canada? Mr. Hayes: Yes.
13817. Do these people sacrifice their old habits and fall in readily with your laws? Mr. Moore: They seem to do so voluntarily. The liquor traffic or the use of liquor is very small there in comparison with the old country.
13818. Canada, I believe, for years past has been passing through stages of depression? There was depression from 1873 to 1878, but since then it has been pretty bright.
13819. You are not depressed now? Mr. Hayes: To a certain extent.
13820. Is the passage of prohibitory legislation easier during a period of depression than otherwise, because if so, our condition may soon be a favourable one for that purpose. We are often told that the consumption of liquor is greater in flourishing countries? Mr. Hayes: I take it there is voluntary abstention from the use of intoxicating liquor; liquor is drunk in great moderation, and altogether the Scott Act is a benefit.

C. B. Hayes
and Mr.
J. H. Moore.

Mr.
C. B. Hayes
and Mr.
J. H. Moore.
3 May, 1886.

13821. Do you attribute voluntary abstention in any way to the current of legislation, or is legislation the effect of the general sentiment—which is cause and which effect? Legislation is the effect.

13822. The Canadians are naturally a sober people? Mr. Hayes: Yes. Mr. Moore: We discuss all matters on the platform. The temperance people and the liquor people speak the same night. We hear both sides of a question discussed on one night, and consequently the people form their own opinions. The leaning is towards temperance.

13823. I suppose as a class the Canadian population is a well educated one? Mr. Moore: The school system is a grand one. Mr. Moore: A great change has been taking place with regard to social drinking—drinking in private houses. It has been the custom to call on friends on New Year's Day. Perhaps if I went out I should call on my friends and on my friends' friends, and at every house intoxicating liquors would be laid out on the table. There has been a great decrease in that kind of thing.

13824. This would be in winter-time, and we are told that in a very cold climate the use of alcohol is very much larger in winter than it is in summer; but I understand you to say that the consumption does not vary with the seasons? Mr. Hayes: My own impression is that you will live longer without strong liquor than with it. Exhaustion will come on quite as slowly without liquor as with it.

13825. The question here is not as to legislating for a naturally sober people, but for a people who are the reverse of what you have described the Canadians to be—the question is whether we shall introduce prohibitive or restrictive legislation? Mr. Moore: It will be a serious matter here; it will take years to bring the people here into the state of the people of Canada; the opposition will be tremendous.

13826. Mr. Roseby: I would ask whether you find that the abolition of the habit of drinking does away with the social enjoyment of the people? Mr. Hayes: My contention is that, as a young man, I have enjoyed myself as well and as fully as anybody, and I have always abstained from the use of liquor almost entirely.

FIRST APPENDIX.

A.

EXTRACT from a RETURN to an ORDER of the Honorable the Legislative Assembly, dated 18th June, 1884.

No. 1.

The Inspector-General of Police to The Principal Under Secretary.

Sir,

Police Department, Inspector-General's Office, Sydney, 10 June, 1884.

I have the honor to transmit, for the information of the Colonial Secretary, a report addressed to me by Inspectors Anderson and Waters and Sub-Inspector Atwill, through the Superintendent of the Metropolitan Police, respecting the difficulties encountered in enforcing the provisions of the Licensing Act in Sydney. Probably Mr. Stuart may see fit to refer the same to the Minister of Justice for his consideration.

Letters are constantly reaching me from unfortunate persons, complaining of the flagrant disregard of the law by many publicans, and the very injurious results to wives and families who suffer ill-treatment and destitution in consequence of husbands and fathers wasting their wages in Sunday drinking, and also thereby unfit themselves for their week-day labour.

Respectable citizens frequently complain of the drunkenness and disorder which prevail in the neighbourhood of such ill-conducted public-houses, especially on Sundays, and which the Police, from the extent of their beats, are unable at all times to repress.

I see no hope, under existing circumstances, of the Police being able to apply any effectual remedy to the evasion of the law complained of.

I have, &amp;c.,

EDMUND FOSBERY,

Inspector-General of Police.

[Enclosure.]

Inspectors Anderson and Waters and Sub-Inspector Atwill to Mr. Superintendent Read.

Sir,

No. 1 Police Station, Sydney, 9 June, 1884.

We have the honor to report, for your information, that, in consequence of the systematic manner in which some of the publicans in the Metropolitan District have violated the law for some time past by supplying persons with liquor on Sundays, and finding it impossible to get convictions against them on account of the extraordinary precaution that they take in watching the Police, we lodged objections to the renewals of the licenses of some of these publicans who had systematically broken the law on Sundays.

A number of the applications for renewals to which objections were made came on for hearing at the Water Police Court on the 5th instant, and we regret to say that the Magistrates granted a renewal of all the licenses to which we objected on the ground of Sunday trading. In one case the publican had only held his license about two months, and evidence was given that he had been convicted of suffering gaming for stakes on his licensed premises, and that there was a case for Sunday selling pending against him. It was also proved that every Sunday there were a great many persons, some of them of the vagrant class, going in and out of the house; and on one occasion two men of that class were found on the premises considerably under the influence of liquor; and on the same date a man was seen making water out of a window on to the street.

In other two cases it was proved that a continuous stream of persons were going in and out of the houses all day on Sundays, but the arrangements for watching the Police were so complete that it was impossible to get a case against the publicans.

In all these cases renewals were granted, the Chairman (Mr. Addison) remarking that the Bench could not take notice of the "surmises of the Police." When one witness was giving evidence as to the number of persons that he had seen going out of and into a public-house on Sunday, the Chairman said, "How do you know that they were not going to see the publican or some of his lodgers?"

In the other cases to which objections were lodged for Sunday trading the Magistrates were told that similar and even stronger evidence could be given, but the renewals in each case were immediately granted.

The law-breaking publicans are jubilant at the great victory they achieved, and last Sunday some of them had all their scouts out, and appeared to be doing a roaring trade.

We may state that for some time past we have had more complaints from the law-abiding hotel-keepers against the publicans who systematically violate the law on Sundays than from any other class in the community.

About nine months ago the then Chairman of the Licensing Court (Mr. Dillon) stated on the Bench that publicans who kept a watch on the Police and systematically broke the law would be refused a renewal of their licenses.

We have always understood that the cardinal object of the present Licensing Act was the complete suppression of the Sunday traffic in intoxicating drink, and our utmost energies have been directed to obtain that object.

By the 19th section of the Licensing Act we are strictly enjoined to use all due vigilance to enforce compliance with the provisions of the Act, and we solemnly declare that we have done so; but the action of the Magistrates on Thursday last will neutralise our best efforts, and eventually render the Act, as far as Sunday selling is concerned, a dead letter.

The latter part of the 36th section of the Act provides that any objection whatsoever, not being of a frivolous or vexatious nature, may be taken to the renewal of publicans' licenses, so that the Magistrates must have considered our objections either frivolous or vexatious. We can only say that similar objections were sustained by the Magistrates who administered the repealed Act.

We have, &amp;c.,

ROBERT ANDERSON, Inspector.

GEO. WATERS, Inspector.

ALEXANDER ATWILL, Sub-Inspector.

No. 2.

The Stipendiary Magistrates, Water Police Court, to The Under Secretary of Justice.

Sir,

Water Police Office, Sydney, 1 July, 1884.

We have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your communication of the 24th June last, requesting that the information asked for with reference to the endorsed Order of the Legislative Assembly may be forwarded as early as convenient.

It is unnecessary for us to refer at length to the communications of the Inspector-General and Inspectors of Police with regard to the matter in question, viz., the action of the Licensing Court held at the Water Police Office on the 5th ultimo; but we will briefly state the grounds upon which we failed to sustain the objections raised by the Police authorities to the renewal of certain publicans' licenses.

The evidence in all these cases went mainly to show that an evasion of the provisions of the Act as to Sunday trading was suspected by the Police from the fact of their seeing persons enter certain public-houses during prohibited hours; but the system of watching the Police was stated to be so well arranged that on their entering nothing was seen to indicate that such was the case, and no offence under the Act could be proved. This was the substance of all the evidence offered, and with every desire on our part to carry out the provisions of the Act in its integrity, we certainly thought that we would be straining its powers and provisions by acting on what was after all only a suspicion, however well founded. We thought, and still think, that some direct breach of the Act, or one of the objections specifically laid down, should have been reasonably proved to exist, and did not consider that the power to entertain other objections extended to such as those raised, unless fairly substantiated, which we were of opinion could not be held to have been done in the cases mentioned. We may add that the non-official member of the Court, the Hon. John Macintosh, fully endorsed our views in this matter.

In conclusion, we respectfully submit, for the consideration of the Honorable the Minister of Justice, that the tone of the letter of the Police Inspectors is not such as should be permitted in relation to the action of the Bench; and we certainly deprecate such comments as have been made therein upon our proceedings as highly disrespectful.

We have, &c.,

G. W. F. ADDISON, S.M., Chairman.
WHITTINGDALE JOHNSON, S.M.

No. 3.

Minute of Minister of Justice.

It is of course for the Court to be satisfied that there is sufficient evidence to support any objections taken to a license before they decide against its issue or renewal. To me it appears that the employment about their premises by licensees of "scouts" on a Sunday, when the sale of liquors by licensed publicans is prohibited, and the continuous entrance and exit into and out of such premises at the same time of persons who are not lodgers or travellers, form strong grounds for presuming that the law is being evaded, and might be deemed sufficient to throw the onus of proof that there was no infringement of the law upon the licensee. It must, on the other hand, be conceded that the Court cannot act upon mere surmises or suspicion, and the quantity and quality of the evidence given in support of any objection is for their consideration; but it is obvious that the well-laid plans of publicans who carry on Sunday trading are such as to render it impossible in most, if not in all, such cases to adduce testimony of actual selling, and they may thus, as they seem to have already done successfully, avoid conviction for breaches of the Licensing Act about which little moral doubt can exist, unless the Court regards such evidence as is above alluded to sufficient to establish a prima facie case against the alleged offender.

Whilst, however, giving expression to these views, I do not desire them to be taken as any direction to the Bench as to the light in which they should regard the evidence which it is reported was adduced before it; for I have no desire to unduly interfere with their judicial discretion, which should be carefully guarded from such interference.

I do not think that there was, and the Inspector-General, in an interview with me upon the subject matter of the Police reports and before the Licensing Court was communicated with, disclaimed any intention to speak disrespectfully of the Court in the reports of the Police. These reports appear to have been made by the officers concerned in their own justification, and merely to show the efforts they had made to secure a compliance with the Licensing Acts and the result of their action. Any intention by the officers of the Police to make improper criticisms upon the conduct or decisions of the Court I should strongly censure and deprecate.

Sir,

Police Department, Inspector-General's Office, Sydney, 11 November, 1886.

With reference to your letter dated the 28th ultimo, requesting, on behalf of Mr. Oliver, returns from each Police district in the Colony of the number of habitual drunkards brought up before the magistrates during the year 1885, I have now the honor to forward as complete a return as can be supplied by the Police for the Metropolitan district; but as regards the country districts, it will, I think, be necessary that a circular be sent to the various Benches of Magistrates for the information required.

I have, &c.,

EDMUND FOSBERY,

Inspector-General of Police.

The Secretary, Intoxicating Drink Inquiry Commission, 127, Macquarie-street.

METROPOLITAN DISTRICT.

Number.	Remarks.

Melbourne, 9th September, 1881.

J. K. WATERS,
Inspector of Liquors, &c.

In order to test the above analyses made by Mr. J. K. Waters, the following samples were analysed by Mr. Watt:—

ANALYSIS of Spirit.

3	Whisky, 5·9 u.p.	Alcohol 46 % = 94·15 proof spirit. Appears to have been gin converted into whiskey. Contained tannin and small quantity of sugar; no metals or mineral acids.
4	Dark brandy, 3·1 o.p.	Alcohol 51 % = 103·14 proof spirit. Contained tannin and burnt sugar; no metals, mineral acids, tobacco, or picrotoxia.

7	Rum, 28·5 o.p.	Alcohol 66 % = 128·5 proof spirit. Much burnt sugar; no metals, mineral acids, tobacco, or picrotoxia.
8	Pale brandy, 13·2 u.p.	Alcohol 42 % = 86 proof spirit. Contained sugar and tannin; possessed a disagreeable odour, and appears to have been made up from spirit obtained from Colonial wine; slight trace of copper; no other metal; no mineral acids.
9	Whisky, 9·2 o.p.	Alcohol 54·5 % = 108 proof spirit. Contained fusel-oil; no metals or mineral acids.
10	Whisky, 8·4 o.p.	Alcohol 54 % = 108 proof spirit. No metals or mineral acids.
11	Whisky, 2·2 o.p.	Alcohol 50·5 % = 102 proof spirit. Contains fusel-oil; no metals or mineral acids.

No.	Description.	Analysis.
14	Pale brandy, 30.5 u.p.	Alcohol 33 % = 69.5 proof spirit. Contained tannin and burnt sugar, bad odour, traces of zinc and copper. Apparently made from Colonial wine.

18	Rum, 27.6 u.p.	Alcohol 34.5 % = 72.4 proof spirit. Contained decoction of prunes; strongly acid (acetic and fixed organic acids); no mineral acids, tobacco, or picrotoxia; slight trace of copper.
19	Rum, 7.7 u.p.	Alcohol 45 % = 92.33 proof spirit. No metals or mineral acids; no tobacco or picrotoxia; acetic acid.

22	Dark brandy, 29.6 u.p.	Alcohol 33.5 % = 70.4 proof spirit. No mineral acids or metals; contained less burnt sugar than most samples, probably owing to its dilution, much water having been added; no tobacco or picrotoxia.
23	Pale brandy, 19.9 u.p.	Alcohol 38.5 % = 80.12 proof spirit. No mineral acids or metals.

MEMORANDUM of Proposed Alteration in Licensing Act and Treatment of Habitual Drunkards.

1. Houses to be divided into two classes—hotels and public-houses. The former to pay a license fee of (say) £100, and to have special privileges as to hours of closing and arrangement of bars. The accommodation to be in accordance with that now prescribed for conditional licenses. Bars to be allowed in any portion of the building, and houses to be open from 6 a.m. to 12 p.m. or 1 a.m. Indeed I do not see why such houses should not be open for travellers by rail or steamboat at all hours of the day and night. Public-houses of the ordinary class to be restricted to the present hours, and to be allowed only one bar on the ground floor.

2. All public-houses to be open for an hour or so on Sunday afternoon for sale on or to be taken from the premises. It appears to me to be useless to enforce the present law (as on Good Friday) that liquors are not to be drunk on the premises, as it is evaded by being drunk on the footpath in the immediate vicinity, a practice more disorderly and causing greater publicity than if consumed in the house.

3. All persons found on the premises in prohibited hours to be deemed guilty of an infraction of the Act, unless shown to be bona fide lodgers, travellers, or members of the family, servants, &c., the licensee also to be liable for Sunday selling, and the onus of proof to lie with the defendants in all cases.

4. Inspection of liquors to be extended to wholesale dealers, and, if possible, the manufacture of spurious brandy, whiskey, &c., from white spirit, to be prohibited.

5. Houses to be disqualified if persistently occupied by licensees who break the law.

6. Persons convicted for drunkenness six times in three months to be deemed rogues and vagabonds, and dealt with under the Vagrant Act, or sent to a reformatory for a period of twelve months. A large proportion of the offenders fined for drunkenness are habitual offenders, and reappear week after week in the police courts, thus unnecessarily, and in a misleading way, swelling the criminal statistics of the Colony. Casual offenders, for the first time at least, should be released from the lockups on payment of a fine of (say) 10s., without being subjected to the indignity of being herded with common felons in a dock, or the publicity of a fine in court, which may be of ruinous consequences to a man in a respectable position, for what may be a mere indiscretion or the result of physical weakness. I am not prepared to say that under these circumstances they should not be unconditionally released.

WHITTINGDALE JOHNSON, S.M.

PROCEDURE.

- All licenses to terminate on same day, fee to be paid proportionately.
- Transfers:—Application should be lodged some days (say seven) previous to hearing. (No provision at present.)
- Provision should be made for continuing license while premises are being repaired or rebuilt. Sec. 45 does not meet the case.
- Provision to allow widow to carry on license longer than three months, if administration not granted within that time. (See sec. 15.)
- Removal of packet licenses to vessels of same class:—(No provision at present.)
- Removal of Colonial wine licenses:—(No provision at present.)

7. Booth or stand license should be for one booth only :—(Act not very clear about it ; sec. 28.)
8. As to change of sign :—(No provision at present.)
9. Removals :—The Court at which applications are to be heard should be determined :—(No mention in present Act.)
10. Reduction fee for transfer of Colonial wine license :—(Sec. 43.)
11. Spirit merchants selling less than 2 gallons :—(No penalty fixed at present.) (Brewer, £50.)
12. Publication of Regulations under sec. 75 of the Act.
13. Urinals required.

DRUNKARDS.

First and infrequent offenders are degraded after arrest by being escorted through public streets—placed in dock with criminals of worst character to be dealt with.

Suggestions :—That all first offenders should be brought before magistrate privately and discharged, except first offenders on bail, to be fined 5s., or till rising of Court. Offenders for second or third offences to be tried publicly, and fined or imprisoned as at present. After three previous convictions offenders to be dealt with as vagrants, and imprisoned without the option of a fine. Old offenders of confirmed drunken habits to be sent to an inebriate asylum, and there detained for one or more years, but may be discharged during the term if so recommended by superintendent and two medical officers ; every such inebriate, if capable, to perform work of some description towards cost of his living.

SUGGESTIONS.

First-class hotels to pay a fee of £50, and £10 for every extra bar ; to keep open till 12 o'clock.

Other public-houses to pay, as at present, £30 fee, excepting those in vicinity of theatres, which should be allowed to remain open till 11.30 p.m. on payment of £10 extra fee.

SUNDAY.

Public-houses to be open from 1 to 3 p.m., to do away, as far as possible, with present system of secret and illegal selling. No barmaids.

Imperial measure of liquor to be delivered (sec. 55).

F.

Sir, Department of Prisons, N.S.W., Comptroller-General's Office, Sydney, 14 July, 1886.

In reference to the evidence I gave before the Commission as to the cost of keeping and guarding drunkards in Darlinghurst Gaol, I have now the honor, as desired by the Commission, to forward the same information respecting the other gaols in the Metropolitan Police district, completing the information sought :—

In Parramatta Gaol the daily cost of maintenance is 1½d. each, and the expense of guarding about 1s. a day, the average daily number being 6½.

In Berrima—maintenance, 4½d. ; guarding, about 1s. 5d. ; average number, 10 in the year.

In Wollongong—maintenance, 3½d. ; guarding, 1s. 4d. ; average number, 6 monthly.

In Windsor—maintenance, 4½d. ; guarding, about £5 per annum ; average, 3½ per month.

I have, &c.,

HAROLD MACLEAN,

Comptroller-General.

The Secretary of the Intoxicating Drink Commission, Sydney.

[To Evidence of J. C. Read, Esq.]

G.

H.M. Gaol, Sydney, 21 June, 1886.

THE undersigned prisoners beg respectfully to submit, for the information of the Governor of Darlinghurst Gaol, the following statement in expression of their opinion, based upon a very lengthened experience, having reference to the question of intoxicating liquor as an incentive to crime :—

That it is an inevitable fact that in all receiving gaols there is 93 per cent. of prisoners undergoing sentences caused either directly or indirectly by intoxicating drinks.

That where the most serious and revolting of crimes have been committed, with but very few exceptions, the cause can be attributed to intoxicating drink.

That they know nearly all prisoners personally, and can speak emphatically upon the subject, and aver that intoxicating drink has been the cause and ruin of most of them.

Out of 567 male prisoners in Darlinghurst Gaol there are 40 prisoners serving sentences which are not the effect of intoxicating drink.

That 527 prisoners can trace their ruin, directly or indirectly, to intoxicating drink—that is, 93* per cent., or 13 out of every 14, are in gaol through the effect of intoxicating liquor.

JAMES JAMIESON, twenty years roads

BENJAMIN JONES, seven years roads.

JOHN O'BRIEN, five years roads.

JOHN WILLIAMS, two years hard labour.

* According to computation this would be nearly correct.—J.C.R.

G 1.

Sydney Gaol, 21 June, 1886.

BEING requested by you to give the opinions which we may have formed during our long periods of service in this gaol as to the various causes which conduce to bring such large numbers of people to undergo discipline in this establishment, we without hesitation state that, in our opinion, fully 80 per cent. of the whole number of cases may be traced, directly or indirectly, to the effects of indulgence in alcoholic liquors. We have no doubt that even in all the large numbers of people who are convicted simply of stealing, larceny, embezzlement, wife desertion, obscene language, indecency, and similar crimes, that if the crimes could be traced to their original source it would be found that in the case of fully 90 per cent. the cause would be found to originate in intemperance.

We remain, &c.,

M. COONAN, Senior Warder.

SAMUEL ADAIR, "

HENRY ELLORY, "

JAMES BOYDEN, First-class Warder.

PATR. FIELAN, "

ALBERT SEYMOUR, "

To J. C. Read, Esq., Governor, Sydney Gaol.

G 2.

Darlinghurst Gaol, 21 June, 1886.

Sir, The Chief Warder states, from his police and gaol experience of over 30 years, he believes that 90 per cent. of the gaol population is brought there directly or indirectly through intemperance.

Seeing that there are 50 per cent. convicted directly for drunkenness, then there are the following offences invariably arising from the same cause, viz. :—Maintenance cases, assaults of all kinds, indecent language, indecent behaviour, indecent exposure, damaging property, convictions for vagrancy, attempted suicides, petty larcenies, false pretences, unlawful woundings, manslaughter, and sometimes murder. All cases of murder in the camps of the aborigines, or nearly so, are caused through drink ; though the drunkenness is lost sight of in the graver charges.

The Chief Warder further states that all prisoners' letters coming through his hands enables him to judge pretty accurately how they become inmates of the gaol, as he so frequently reads prayers from their wives and families to give up drink and drunken associates for the future, and live an honest life.

JOHN LOVELL,

Chief Warder.

The Governor of Darlinghurst Gaol.

REPORT on the Rev. F. B. Boyce's Drink Bill.

IN framing his Drink Bill for 1885, Mr. Boyce has inclined to the unconscious bias referred to by Mr. Herbert Spencer. The Bill is made with a heavy list against the use of intoxicating drink, and as a favourable argument for non-consumers. There is also the disposition to magnify for our edification the ultra weakness for strong drinks of the people of this Colony, as above all others. Thus we are told that the Drink Bill of the United States was for 1884, £1 13s. 6d.; for the United Kingdom, £3 7s. 10d.; and New South Wales figures for 1885 the extreme sum of £5 11s. 8½d. per head of the population.

As an evidence that bias has much to do with the making of Drink Bills as with other questions, we may quote Dr. Lees, who in 1857 calculated the expense of the use of liquors in Great Britain, at 120 millions a year, the cost of the liquor being put at 60 millions, and the remainder of the amount made up by allowing for the crime and pauperism caused by drinking, the loss of time in drinking, and, through disease induced by drinking, the waste of life consequent upon it, and many minor items.

Mr. Boyce gives us a Drink Bill for 1885, against the United Kingdom, amounting to £123,000,000, at retail cost to the consumer. Taking the figures quoted from Dr. Lees (a vaunted authority) for 1857, which gave the cost of liquor then consumed at 60 millions, it is made to appear that in thirty years the consumption of drink in Great Britain doubled, and on the principle adopted by Dr. Lees, the Drink Bill produced by Mr. Boyce should be £246,000,000.

This goes to prove that the facts are made to build up deductions; the data not being established weakens our trust in the conclusions.

Mr. Boyce gives the following particulars of Drink Bills:—

The United States, 1884 ... ..	1	13	6	per head.
New Zealand, 1885 ... ..	3	0	0	"
The United Kingdom, 1885 ... ..	3	7	10	"
Victoria, 1885 ... ..	4	19	11	"
New South Wales, 1885 ... ..	5	11	8½	"

The questions follow: How are these results obtained? What were the rates of duty imposed, and to what extent do they differ?

Looking over the figures given by Mr. Boyce, we are tempted to ask why so great a difference appears in the retail cost of home made wine as between Great Britain and New South Wales. The Home-made wines of England are put down as 15 millions of gallons, at 4s. per gallon. What these wines are made from is very doubtful, but the statement of quantity and value when placed against Mr. Boyce's account for New South Wales, in which he debits us with the consumption of 417,250 gallons, at 10s. per gallon, suggests a mistake somewhere. Is it to be supposed that Great Britain manufactures more wine than the country imports. Why is it that the retail cost of spirit is put down at 20s. and 24s. retail, per gallon, in Great Britain, and at 35s. in New South Wales? And again, why is it that Home-brewed beer is charged 2s. per gallon for Great Britain, and 3s. for the Colony.

It is a very easy matter to take from the Statistical Register the estimated produce of a year's vintage, and to deduct therefrom the export of Colonial wine for the year, proclaiming the balance as consumed. Also, it would be very cheering to producers, if they could look forward to the sale of their wines retail, all round at 10s. per gallon.

Mr. Boyce has pitched his Drink Bill too high. The first item shows the unreliability of his conclusion. Spirits—1,213,205 gallons. This is taken from the Revenue returns, and represents the duty on proof gallons. It is assumed that this is consumed at 35s. per gallon. The item, rum alone, figures in the Customs returns for 341,342 gallons proof; this before it reaches the consumer, is of course, considerably reduced in strength. It may be urged that the case put by Mr. Boyce is strengthened, because the quantity would be increased by addition. This is so beyond doubt, but it proves that the actual consumption is not ascertainable, except as shown by the Revenue returns, and that the only approximately reliable estimate must be based on such returns.

Mr. Boyce has quoted extreme counter prices supplied from the North by friends in Maitland, Newcastle, and Singleton. South from Goulburn, and West from Orange. He has not sufficiently taken into account the very large supply direct from merchants to consumers in Sydney and the principal centres of population. The steady development of the railway system is breaking down prices to a great extent, and is also enabling persons remote from Sydney to obtain their wine supplies from undoubted sources. The chances of price at a road-side inn cannot be taken as an index of prices for the Colony, nor can the chance glass of liquor taken in a doubtful hostelry be taken as a sample of the liquor generally supplied by respectable houses in the country or town.

In

In attempting to arrive at some reasonable conclusion on the beer question we are out of the realm of fact. We have no reliable statistics, and only a general impression, founded on common report, that the Colony of New South Wales is less a beer drinking Colony than Victoria. The carriage of beer to the interior of the country has formed an important item as against the more potent alcohols which can be conveyed in a less bulk. Again, beer does not stand a long journey, and especially under a hot sun.

The experience of Victoria is told by Mr. Hayter in his Year Book, 1884-5: "The beer made in Victoria during 1884-5, amounted to 14,400,749 gallons, and the quantity imported, after deducting exports, was 931,379 gallons. These numbers give a total consumption of 15,332,128 gallons, or an average of 16 gallons per head.

Taking the figures, furnished by Mr. Boyce, we find for this Colony:—

	Gallons.
Beer, imported (Customs Receipts) ... ..	2,099,557
„ Colonial (not verified) ... ..	14,701,838
Total ... ..	16,801,395

This, roughly, with our present population, gives a consumption for New South Wales of nearly 17 gallons per head.

In Victoria, during 1885, seventy-four breweries employed 956 hands, and produced 14,400,749 gallons of beer.

In New South Wales, during 1885, seventy breweries employed 805 hands, and we have no official record of the quantity of beer produced. The estimate furnished by Mr. Boyce is 14,701,838 gallons.

A nearer estimate may be obtained even on the basis of the figures supplied to Mr. Boyce as representing the consumption of Colonial-made beer:—

	Gallons.	Gallons.
Estimated Colonial (Mr. Boyce) ... ..	..	14,701,838
Beer, in wood (Imported) ... ..	654,646
„ in bottle „ ... ..	1,444,911
	2,099,557
Less export ... ..	70,000
	2,029,557
		2,029,557
Estimate of Colonial beer consumed for 1885 ... ..		12,672,281

Generally the prices in the Drink Bill are too high, and this is especially the case with Colonial beer. The retail price per gallon is about 2s. per gallon in Sydney. In nearly all the towns of any importance throughout the Colony a brewery is found, and in some instances more than one. Many of the country breweries have special reputation for their produce; and in their immediate localities the prices are not those quoted by Mr. Boyce for the whole Colony.

The Drink Bill should be reduced on the item of Colonial beer; and the other items (especially Colonial wine) are, we think, over-estimated. Whatever may be the correct Drink Bill against the consumers of alcoholic beverages in New South Wales, it should not be forgotten that these liquors contributed £847,151 to the revenue for 1885.

Dear Sir,

In reply to your enquiries as to the probable cost per head in an asylum for inebriates if established in this Colony, I beg to point out that this must depend very greatly on

1st. The number of inmates, since the staff officers required would serve almost as well for 200 as for 50, the only addition required for the former number being a certain extra number of warders.

2nd. The position chosen for the Institution and the provision in the shape of fences, &c., to prevent escape. If an island is selected the number of warders will of course be less than on the main land, and if the fences are difficult to climb the number required will be less than if the grounds are open and easily left.

3rd. The accessibility or otherwise to contractors for provisions, &c. If near a large town, so that there will be competition for the supply, and no large cost in delivery, the cost under this head will be decidedly less than if in an inaccessible situation.

With corrections and allowances under the above heads my estimate is as follows:—

For provisions, medical comforts, fuel, light, forage, &c. ....	14	0	0
For stores, including clothing and bedding .....	4	0	0
For salaries of officers and warders.....	3	0	0
For incidental expenses.....	1	0	0

This estimate is for the indigent or pauper class, who, I suppose, will be supported entirely by the Government, and is a liberal one, especially for provisions, medical comforts, &c. It must be remembered that inebriate patients will require a liberal dietary.

I have made no allowance for the labour of the inmates, but presume a large part of this will be employed on the farm in raising vegetables and farm produce for consumption, and in keeping the buildings clean and in good repair. Some perhaps in erecting new buildings, as required. With reference to the character of the buildings I do not think they need be expensive, and can see no real objection to weatherboard or thin brick.

I am, &c.,
F. NORTON MANNING.

THE samples of Flask Brandy marked Nos. 1 and 2, received 4th January, 1887, from The Intoxicating Drink Inquiry Commission, have been examined with the following results:—

No. 1. Bisquit Dubouche & Co., contained 45½ per cent. of alcohol, equivalent to 6½ degrees under proof.

No. 2. L. Dorville, Cognac, contained 46½ per cent. of alcohol, equivalent to 4½ degrees under proof.

Both samples were carefully examined for the poisonous substances enumerated in Sec. 89 of the Licensing Act (45 Vic., No. 14), and with the exception of heavy traces of lead none were found.

These French flasks hold 150 cubic centimetres of liquor, and the amount of lead is estimated at half a grain of acetate. The capsules were very much corroded

No. 3. From C. W. Roberts' "Crown and Anchor Hotel," contained 45½ per cent. of alcohol, equivalent to 7 degrees under proof.

No. 4. From George Flint, "Oxford Vaults Hotel," contained 46½ per cent. of alcohol, equivalent to 4 degrees under proof.

Extract

Extract.—The amount of extract derived from malt, or malt substitutes, and hops, varied from 6.55 per cent. to 8.14 per cent.

Ash.—The quantity of ash which was left after burning off the above extracts, were in all of the beers about the same as may usually to be found in good Lager beers, varying only between the limits of 0.18 and 0.26 per cent.

Acidity.—The amount of acid calculated as acetic acid was in all of the samples less than that found in English beers, amounting on the average to 0.01 per cent.

Carbonic Acid.—All the beers were fully charged with carbonic acid gas, a special feature in export Lager beer, and one that gives the beer the pleasant pungent flavour peculiar to bottled beers.

Lactic Acid.—The beers were free from lactic acid at the moment of uncorking, but when left to stand with the cork removed, the beer became flat with development of lactic acid and acetic acid.

Metallic Impurities, Additions, and Adulterations.—All the samples were remarkably free from such.

Microscopic examination.—A microscopic examination was made of each beer to discover in the dregs of the bottle ferment organisms, starch cells (if any), artificial bitters, &c.

The result was, in almost every case, to show that the beers had been brewed with low yeast in the usual manner of lager beer fermentation, in many cases fragments of hop flowers were found, indicating the origin of the bitter principle employed in their manufacture.

In each of the beers a secondary fermentation had taken place while in bottle, and thus had produced a fairly large amount of carbonic acid gas, which adds very much to the character of the beer.

One result of this is the increased percentage of alcohol.

All the Lager beers that have come under my notice in Australia have a somewhat higher percentage of alcohol than the Lager beer commonly consumed in Germany.

GENERAL CONCLUSIONS.

From the chemical analysis and microscopical examination of the residues of the beers, I am of opinion that all the sixteen samples submitted are genuine wholesome drinks, remarkably free from noxious additions and adulterations.

All the beers, however, do not appear to have been brewed wholly from malt and hops. The Pilsener and Frydenlund beers are made from other materials, probably rice.

The bitter principle varies very much. In the Vienna beer, Drehers, it is at its maximum, ranging in others to a mere trace or flavour.

In the extracts were found albuminous substances, glucose, and glycerine, but as these are normally present in all good beers, the fact calls for no further remark.

W. M. Hamlet, Esq., to The President of the Intoxicating Drink Commission.

Sir,

Government Laboratory, Sydney, 20 July, 1886.

For the information of the Intoxicating Drink Inquiry Commission, I have now the honor to state that I have made analysis of the nine samples of essences (No. 1 and six others marked and labelled as per accompanying label) with the following results:—

No. 1.—Essence Irish Whiskey:—
Water
Ethylic Alcohol
Amylic Alcohol
Amylic Acetate
Iso-butylic Acetate
Valeric Acid
Gum
Resin
A saponifiable Oil
No Metals or Alkaloids

No. 2.—Essence Rum:—
Water
Ethylic Alcohol
Formic Acid
Valeric Acid traces Iso-butylic Ether
Gum and Resin
Caramel
Tannin traces
No Metals or Alkaloids

No. 3.—Essence Port Wine:—
Water
Ethylic Alcohol
Essence Peach Kernels
Essence of Prunes
Acetic Ether
Colouring matter
No Metals or Alkaloids

No. 4.—Essence Sherry:—
Water
Ethylic Alcohol
Amylic Acetate
Acetic Ether
Oil of Winter-green (?)
No Metals or Alkaloids

No. 5.—Essence Gin:—
Water
Ethylic Alcohol
Juniper Oil
Resin
Camphoric Acid
Camphoric Ether
No Metals or Alkaloids

No. 6.—Essence Hot Tom:—
Water
Ethylic Alcohol
Oil of Cloves
Capsicine
Colouring Matter

No. 7.—Essence Hot Tom Bitters.
Water
Ethylic Alcohol
Oil of Cloves
Capsicine
Quassia
Colouring Matter

No. 8.—Angostura Bitters.

No. 9.—Essence Ginger Ale.

These are what they profess to be, the one a harmless bitter and the other made from genuine ginger, flavoured with Oil of Cloves and Oil of Rosemary.

The general composition of these liquids is, first, a strong ethylic alcohol, varying from 40 to 50 per cent. probably good rectified spirit, a suitable colouring matter, together with two or more essential oils, alcohols or extracts, so as to produce the desired flavour.

By following the directions given on the label, the actual amount of essence in a liquor so treated would be from 1 to 3 parts in a thousand. Judging from the amount of fusel oil in any one of them, a liquor so compounded could not, in my opinion, be rendered more injurious than it was before the essence was added. That is say that the use of these essences secundum artem in the mixing or blending of spirits is not, in my opinion, injurious to health.

There are two specific uses for these essences, first, by taking a given volume of white or silent spirit and adding the requisite quantity of essence an artificial spirituous liquor may be compounded; second, given a low class brandy, an inferior whiskey, or a cheap rum, these liquors might be considerably improved by the addition of the proper essence and colouring matter. A cheap or damaged "Port" wine, by the judicious admixture of the essence and skilful manipulation could be made to pass muster amongst publicans easily enough. For instance, a badly made colonial wine (red) could, by essence and by fortifying with brandy, be made into as good a Port wine as that usually met with.

In addition to those analyses, I have made up artificial or spurious liquors both with and without the aid of the essences. Starting with plain white spirit alone, I have manufactured gin, whiskey, and brandy, samples of which I now send to the Commission for inspection.

However, in actual practice I do not think that liquors are manufactured from white, silent, or plain spirit in this country. It would be too perilous an undertaking, as I found that with some of the essences admixture alone was insufficient, and that distillation was necessary.

I believe the use of the essences is confined almost entirely to the so-called improvement of poor liquors. The spirit importer or merchant usually makes use of the essences upon liquids already known, as brandy, whiskey, rum, &c., and not for their manufacture from silent spirit.

I have, &c.,

PAGE 211.—“It seems to be the bane of all countries, and claims its victims in every civilized nation, and under every form of government. It is the common enemy of mankind, the destroyer of domestic happiness, the co-partner of every crime, from petit larceny to murder. It is the father of poverty, the creator of debauchery, and the principal working tool of the devil. No man is bold enough to defend it, and yet it is tolerated by all classes of society. It finds its way alike to the house of the rich and the house of the poor. It is a boon companion at the festive board of the aristocrat, and the poorly provided table of the cottager. It has caused more heartaches, produced more tears, engendered more sorrows, starved more babies, and led to more insanity than any other agent in existence, if not more than all others combined. We are strongly inclined to the opinion that directly or remotely it is more potent in producing these results than all other causes.

“We have thus briefly considered this last, as it is the most prolific, among the causes that have given us so large a number of persons deprived of their reason; who crowd the wards of our asylums till there is scarce sleeping room or breathing space for the numbers they contain, to say nothing of the accumulation that must take place ere additional accommodation can be provided for their reception.

“It is beyond doubt that insanity receives the greater number of its victims from among persons addicted to the use of alcoholic drinks. The nature of intoxication may be curious to determine, for if it be true that, under one form or another, it is always the alcohol absorbed which acts upon the cerebral functions, it is no less true that certain preparations into which it enters in a highly concentrated degree give a more rapid progress to the disease, and a peculiarly serious character. A remarkable fact, and one which our personal researches have presented in all statistical tables, is that it is not in wine countries that delirium tremens is most frequent. It is in the large towns, in cities where industry is most developed and most active, where there is the greatest agglomeration of population, that delirium tremens is most common.”

I believe, with Dr. Wilkins, that drunkenness is one of the most fruitful causes, both of insanity and pauperism.

M.

The Rev. F. B. Boyce to The President Intoxicating Drink Inquiry Commission.

Sir,

St. Paul's Parsonage, Redfern, 28 September, 1886.

As understood when examined by the Commission, I have carefully revised the figures relative to the amount spent in intoxicating drinks in this Colony, and beg to submit the conclusions.

The difference existing between the figures of the Chief Inspector of Distilleries and those from the Custom-house, whereby about 75,619 gallons of spirits manufactured in the Colony were unaccounted for is explained mainly by the former speaking of proof and the latter of liquid gallons. Both Mr. Barney and Mr. Powell agree in this explanation. Mr. Barney further says:—In the quantity of spirit made in 1885, I have of course included the brandy made in the Colony; this, however, does not go into consumption as spirit, but is used on the vineyards for the fortification of wine. (See Distillation Act, section 19, and 20 Vic. 13, No. 27.) This spirit cannot be included in Custom-house returns as matters are at present arranged.

I now find the quantities of spirits, &c., consumed and their cost for 1884 and 1885 to be as follows:—

	1884.	£
Spirits, 1,250,455 gallons, at 35s. ....		2,188,296
Wines, still, 163,752 gallons, at 20s. ....		163,752
"    sparkling, 24,318 gallons, at 40s. ....		48,636
"    Colonial, 560,447 gallons, at 10s. ....		280,223
Beer, imported, in wood, 581,360 gallons, at 5s. ....		145,340
"    "    in bottle, 1,031,333 gallons, at 7s. ....		360,966
"    Colonial, 13,040,644 gallons, at 3s. ....		1,956,096
		£5,143,309

As the population on 31st December, 1884, was 921,123, the amount spent was £5 11s. 8d. per head, or 5d. per head more than the preceding year, calculated in the same way.

	1885.	£
Spirits, 1,213,205 gallons, at 35s. ....		2,123,108

"    Colonial, 14,701,838 gallons, at 3s. ....		2,205,275

As the population on 31st December, 1885, was 990,573, the amount spent was £5 11s. 8½d. per head, an unimportant difference from the preceding year. A decrease appears in the consumption of spirits and Colonial wine, but an increase on other drinks.

The quantities given are partly from the Custom-house Returns, and these include only spirits, wines, and beers, on which duty has been paid (perfumed spirits excepted). The remainder, which covers Colonial wines and beers, are from the returns of the Chief Inspector of Distilleries, with the exports deducted. The figures can be relied on as accurate in every respect.

In arriving at the approximate total of the amount spent the difficulty has been in determining the prices charged. After fully considering the matter, I have concluded that I formerly estimated the Colonial beer and English beer in wood at 1s. per gallon less than the average price. This makes a difference at once of over three-quarters of a million. I have written to friends in Goulburn, Orange, and Maitland; I am told that in the south and west all drinks are 6d., while as to the north, Mr. A. S. Browne, J.P., says:—"Ale and porter per glass, from Newcastle to Singleton, is 3d. and 6d. per pint; from Singleton to the borders of Queensland, 6d. per glass and 1s. per pint." It will be readily seen that I have not charged the full retail prices for the liquors, as some allowance has to be made for some supplied to private families direct from the spirit merchants and brewers, the cost of which to the consumer would be less. I believe the total amount to be fairly approximate to that actually spent by the people.

Referring to other parts, the drink bill of the United States in 1884 was about £1 13s. 6d. per head; in 1885, in the United Kingdom, it was:—

Spirits, 34,544,573 gallons, at 20s. and 24s. ....	36,131,590
Beer, 975,644,568 gallons, at 1s. 6d. ....	73,173,343
Wines, 13,848,748 gallons, at 18s. ....	12,463,873
"    British, 15,000,000 gallons, at 2s. ....	1,500,000
	£123,268,806

or £3 7s. 10d. per head. The consumption of spirits is about one-fourth less per head than here, and the consumption of beer about one-third more per head. The tendency here appears to be in the English direction, viz., to drink less spirits and more beer.

In Victoria last year, the consumption per head was less on each item, except Colonial wine, than here, and the drink bill was estimated at £4 19s. 11d. per head.

In New Zealand last year, the consumption was less per head than here on each item, and the cost reckoned at £3 per head.

Hoping these figures will be of some use to the Commission,—

I am, &c.,
F. B. BOYCE.

J. Vale, Esq., to The President Intoxicating Drink Inquiry Commission.

Dear Sir,

Temperance Hall, Russell-street, Melbourne, 6 December, 1886.

When I had the honor of appearing before your Commission, I promised to send you some Government returns, showing the proportion of drunkenness to the population, &c. I requested the Hon. Alfred Deakin, Chief Secretary, to send you all the Government papers published on the Licensing Question, and he promised to direct the Government Printer to do this, so that I have no doubt that these papers have been now some little time in your possession. It is, perhaps, not too late for me to supplement those with a few facts which may be of service to you.

The population of the city of Melbourne is given at 65,859. In this district 1,011 arrests were made during the month of January, 1886, of which 418 were "drunk and disorderly"; 718 arrests were made during June, of which 344 were "drunk and disorderly." This shows the number for the hottest and coldest month. 10,524 arrests were made during the year ending November 2nd, 1886, and, calculating upon the basis of the figures given for January and June, the figures for the year would be:—

"Drunks".....	4,736
Other offences.....	5,788
Total.....	10,524

The following calculation is based upon the figures given by Mr. Hayter in his report upon Friendly Societies:—

“Total abstinence and longevity.—During the seven years ending 1882 the mortality of all the benefit societies in Victoria averaged  $12\frac{1}{2}$  per 1,000 members yearly, while during the same period the deaths amongst the Rechabites and Sons of Temperance averaged only  $7\frac{1}{2}$  per 1,000. Taking this average, if all the people in Victoria were total abstainers there would be about 4,400 deaths less every year.”

The following statement speaks for itself:—

“From the 1st of January, 1884, to the third week of April (less than four months) Dr. Youl, Melbourne City Coroner, held 132 inquests, nearly all of which he said were due to drink.”

I will be able to send you further information later on.

Your obedient servant,
JOHN VALE.

Extract from Mr. Vale's Letter dated 21st January, 1887, referring to Question No. 12135.

“We have a law which provides that an inebriate may apply to be committed to a retreat before a County Court Judge, or friends or relations may apply upon his or her behalf; and that upon the production of a medical certificate showing need for treatment, the Judge may commit such person for any period not exceeding twelve months. Upon application, a Supreme Court Judge may order the person to be discharged, or the superintendent of the retreat or other chief officer, may discharge a patient at any time. I had not known a case of a person being committed to a retreat in Victoria, while I had known cases of persons going of their own free will and leaving when they pleased: hence the mistake into which I fell.”

O.

E. J. H. Knapp, Esq., to The Secretary, Intoxicating Drink Inquiry Commission.

Sir,

Temperance Hall, Pitt-street, Sydney, 12 February, 1887.

As I promised the President of the Intoxicating Drink Inquiry Commission I would send him a copy of a letter I was daily expecting from General Neal Dow, of Portland, Maine, U.S., the father of the Maine liquor law, in answer to the ‘Recantation Extraordinary’ letter of the General Secretary of the Amalgamated Licensed Victuallers’ Association of New South Wales, I have much pleasure in transmitting the original (for perusal and return), and a reprint for retention.

At the same time I take the liberty of sending you a reprint clipped from the Daily Telegraph of 13th March last, of correspondence between the General and myself, touching some allegations made by C. H. Reid, Esq., M.L.A., about the Maine law.

I have, &c.,
EDWARD J. H. KNAPP,
Honorary Secretary.

RECANTATION EXTRAORDINARY.

To the Editor of the Daily Telegraph.

Sir,—The general secretary of the Amalgamated Licensed Victuallers’ Association of New South Wales, in your file of November 25 last, published a letter under the above heading seeking to prove that General Neal Dow had said that the Maine Law was a failure. Immediately I read the letter referred to I clipped it from your paper and sent it off to the General. To-day on my return from the country I found a prompt reply from the grand old man. I send you a copy, and respectfully ask you to insert it in your next issue. Comment from me is needless.—Yours, &c.,

EDWARD J. H. KNAPP,
Hon. Sec. Local Option League.

Wentworth Court, February 11, 1887.

Portland, December 31, 1886.

Edward J. H. Knapp, Esq., Hon. Secretary, N.S.W. Local Option League,—

Dear Sir,—Your note of November 25 is just received. It contains a newspaper slip, having a letter of the general secretary of the Amalgamated Licensed Victuallers’ Association of New South Wales to the editor of the Daily Telegraph, in which he says:—“In the beginning of last month General Dow addressed to the Portland Argus a letter bearing his signature, in which the following most extraordinary passage occurs:—‘For many years we have applied to Republican Legislatures for such additions to the law as experience has shown to be necessary, but we have been absolutely refused, or have been put off by insufficient measures. The consequence is that the value (volume?) of the liquor traffic has not been reduced within the last twenty years.’”

The secretary holds this to be an admission on my part that the Maine Law has at last become a failure. It is nothing of the sort. More than twenty years ago the liquor traffic in Maine had been reduced to at least one-twentieth of its former proportions. It may truthfully be said that at this time without prohibition it would be fifty times larger than than it is. It is our earnest purpose to expel from the State the small fraction of it which yet lingers among us. Twenty years ago and more the volume of the traffic was as small as it is to-day, and remains at that point because of certain deficiencies in the law, which for more than twenty years we have in vain petitioned to have supplied. With a few amendments to the law, we could in six months drive every vestige of the liquor traffic out of the State.

The Legislature will meet next month, and the prospect is that we shall succeed in our application.

The liquor traffic now is in the hands of the lowest of the people, to whom drastic remedies must be applied. The law was never stronger than now in the opinion of the State.

My letter in the Argus was in no way inconsistent with all that I had said and written before.

Very truly yours,
NEAL DOW.

Amendments in the Licensing Act suggested by Judge McFarland.

Dear Sir,

Sydney, 12 August, 1886.

I regret to find I must be in Braidwood to-morrow in discharge of my duties. It will therefore be out of my power to attend as a witness before the "Intoxicating Drink Inquiry Commission," pursuant to your summons, and as I hoped to do.

But the purport of my evidence (if examined) would have been to urge, at least to recommend, that in the country districts, the granting of licenses, as well their cancellation, &c., should rest solely with the various police magistrates, or other heads of each Board. In other words, my experience is, that a great number of licenses are granted that never would be granted, and that a large amount of drunkenness prevails that would not be tolerated, if the assistant members of the various Boards (who are frequently engaged in trade) were dispensed with, and the entire responsibility cast upon the police magistrates, or other heads, who are free from the influences to which the supplementary members are subject. I know of one case in which a spirit merchant is a member of a licensing board, and of a considerable number of instances in which persons who are by no means disinterested, are now found upon such boards. The result is, that wretched houses (in which there is no comfortable or even decent accommodation for travellers), and notoriously rowdy, or otherwise improper character, have been licensed, in the southern district—and are retained in their licenses.

I also venture to suggest, for consideration by the Commission, whether it might not be desirable to allow an appeal to Quarter Sessions against either the granting or refusal of a license, at the instance of any person conceiving himself injured or unjustly dealt with by the decision of any licensing (police) magistrate, or considering that there is no occasion for a licensed house in any particular place.

I believe that a well kept hotel is a great benefit to everyone frequenting it; and that a badly kept one is a curse to the community.

Having had now about twenty years experience as a pretty constant traveller throughout various parts of the Colony, the preceding statement of my views on the subject may, perhaps, be deemed of some value, and be accepted by the Commission in lieu of the parole evidence I am prevented from giving by the necessity of my duties in Braidwood to-morrow.

I am, &c.,

ALFRED MCFARLAND,

Letter from the Licensed Victuallers at Junee Junction re Clubs.

To the President of the Licensed Victuallers' Association, Sydney.

Sir,

Junee Junction, 31 March, 1886.

We desire to point out to your association the evil, which is daily becoming greater, by allowing clubs exempt from license fee and police supervision. Recently a working man's club was formed in Junee Junction, and beer and grog is dispensed after the manner in which general merchandise would be in a co-operative store; or in plain words is nothing more or less than a co-operative shanty, for the members of it talk of dividing all profits, arising out of the concern, at specified periods. This club was formed by several men in the employ of the loco. branch of the Railway Department on account of the publicans of the place refusing to lower the existing retail price of beer. The first meeting for the inauguration of the club was held in the local locomotive engine sheds, where it was resolved to boycott all the publicans who refused to lower the price of beer. The publicans did not yield, and a subsequent meeting was held in one of the public halls of the place, where it was determined to start a working men's club, the inducement offered to join being—cheap beer, the privilege of either drinking it on the premises or taking it away in any quantity and using it wherever a member may choose, a sort of retail and wholesale co-operative style like; and in addition, all profits arising out of the concern were to be equally divided among the members. The fee for membership was fixed at £1, paid as follows:—10s. within one month after promise, the balance in calls if required. Now, we submit, if clubs are allowed all this scope, and can be formed in this easy manner, what is to prevent a party of individuals from starting a shanty, under the name of club, and carrying on an illicit trade in malt and spirituous liquors with impunity, thus defrauding the country of the usual £30 annual license fee, and indiscriminately infringing upon the rights of licensed victuallers who are placed under so many obligations for dispensing liquors? What if institutions like these spring up all over the country, where will the licensed victuallers be, and furthermore, what will make up for the decrease in revenue occasioned by the decrease in license fees consequent upon the increase of these clubs formed for the mere purpose of retailing wines, beer, and spirits without a license? The restrictive laws in regard to the liquor traffic will become a dead letter, and instead of us having well regulated hotels throughout the country where the wayfarer may demand and obtain comfortable accommodation as he seeks it, we will have co-operative beer saloons, gambling dens, and brothels, run under the name of clubs, and the legitimate calling of the licensed victualler gone.

We consider that clubs allowed to be formed in the slack manner in which they are, is an infringement upon our rights, an injustice of which we have every right to complain of, and earnestly enter our protest against its continuance. We believe that the club started in Junee is the first one of its kind started in the Colony, and is an example of how the club principle may be applied to the illicit sale of liquor. It is rumoured that similar clubs are to be started in Albury, Cootamundra, Narrandera, and Goulburn; and there is no doubt that after the success which has attended the promoters of the Junee Club, that their institution will become general throughout New South Wales. We would, therefore, suggest that united action should be taken by the licensed victuallers of the Colony to nip in the bud an evil and an encroachment upon our rights; and strive to get an amendment in the Licensing Act which would abolish the right of dispensing beer or grog in clubs, or at least place such obligations upon them so as to put them on a fair footing with us, or us with them.

Trusting you will well consider the foregoing, discern the evils we have pointed out, and take the initiative towards stamping them out,—

Mr. T. Stone to The President of the Intoxicating Drink Commission.

Sir,

Granville, 21 May, 1886.

Seeing by the papers that you invite any persons to give their experiences in connection with the Drink Traffic, and having been connected with hotel-keeping, &c., for most of my life, I would like to say a few words on such.

I have heard it remarked by many, especially young men, when at the bars, that it is not for the love of the liquor that they frequent public houses, but for the fun pertaining to it, as they would have no relish for it alone, and then many take the milder drinks for a time till custom with others inclines them to take stronger; and I can say that after a habit is once formed of drinking the colonial made beer it will increase, and in most cases, people will become so addicted to it that I have heard many say they wish they had never tasted it. There is something so peculiar in its make, that besides being, I am afraid not thoroughly wholesome, it is made so, that the more a person takes the more he or she seems inclined to take. I suppose it is the glucose, &c., it is composed of. I am sure that if a light pure ale or beer was made, and if sold at the same price as the other, giving, I may say, about half the quantity, it would minimise the sale of the other stuff wonderfully and have a great effect on society, as many would not drink the vile stuff called beer, if they had the choice of a lighter and purer kind; certainly some old hands would go for the quantity. It would surprise those who are not aware, the immense quantity of this so-called beer that is sold. I know dozens here who have it so regular that it is looked on as a necessary. Spirits, are as a rule, being little cared for among the working men. Many will say they cannot drink the beer alone, will have syrup put with it, or ginger-beer. Of course, it cannot be expected that the brewers can make a good article to retail at 3d. per pint. I am confident that if a light beer could be introduced, also the selling of pure colonial wine in houses, it would have a good effect; as if now you wish for a glass of wine you get a drop of such inferior sour stuff that you will not want a repetition.

In most of the houses the spirits are very fair, except rum, which in most places is adulterated very badly; but there are houses in this district, where all the spirits are nearly poison. I as an occasional visitor to such have found so, as being a very moderate taker I can tell the article at once, and I have at times gone into houses here to have a liquor—houses that I have not known—and have been compelled to leave the stuff in the glass after tasting it. That I consider one of the curses to those unfortunates who do not have a knowledge of the injury they do themselves.

As I do not think that drink at all pure (taken by those who it agrees with, in moderate quantities) has any bad effect whatever, in fact with many constitutions it is beneficial, especially people at hard work, but the vile adulteration is the curse, I sincerely trust something will yet be done by Government to remedy this. It seems so strange to me that other tradesmen, selling injurious stuff, are punished—why could not these publicans be exposed and punished? I am aware it is hard to get at them, but it could be done; not by sending a stylish person for the liquor, as he would get a better article, for fear of exposure. It may be said they cannot afford to sell a nobbler of pure liquor for 3d., well let them give less quantity, few will grumble; but it would pay, as there are cheaper brands of liquor sold, which are good, if not the highest class.

As to Sunday selling, I think a few hours a day should be allowed; it would do away with so many taking such large quantities in on the previous night, and drinking more than they would do if they got it as they required it. And the law should be more strict in regard to serving boys, who frequently take drink in company with the men, especially of a Saturday night, when they have their money to spend.

I hope you will pardon me in the rather rough way I have said a few words on the matter, and sincerely hoping some good may come of your inquiry,

I am, &amp;c.,

THOS. STONE.

Mr. F. W. Morris to The President of the Intoxicating Drink Commission.

Sir,

Worondi, Denman, 25 May, 1886.

In reading your communication to the Sydney Morning Herald on the progress of the Commission under your charge, it struck me that perhaps a few hints from the country might be of service during your inquiries.

Within the last few years drunkenness has increased greatly, though there are fewer public houses, and those that are licensed, are not, I believe, doing much.

Most of those showing a tendency towards drink about here are youths just verging on manhood, and I believe the laxity of the law relative to the sale of colonial wine is to blame to a great extent for the shameful scenes to be seen on most Sundays in the bush.

Great numbers of small selectors of a few years standing have small vineyards of a few acres in extent, they make about 1,000 gallons of wine, and as the law now stands, can without a license, sell not less than two gallons; but the fact is they retail it out as they please, and in what quantities they please as long as it lasts.

This is their mode of doing so. A number go there and drink all day, and if a policeman comes or a question is asked, one of the company is ready to swear he has purchased two gallons and that all the rest are drinking at his expense. I know several small farms (kept by Germans) in this locality where this system is carried on in defiance of all the vigilance of the police, and where most disgraceful scenes are enacted every Sunday.

Now my remedy would be to add a clause to the Wine Licensing Act, prohibiting the drinking of wine on the premises; then those youths would have to carry it home and come under the eyes of their parents.

Apologising for thus troubling you,

I am, &amp;c.,

FRED. WM. MORRIS.

The Government Analyst to The President of the Intoxicating Drink Commission.

Sir,

Government Laboratory, Sydney, 27 July, 1887.

In compliance with your request made to the medical adviser, I have the honor to give you the substance of my investigation and analyses of some Sydney-brewed beers now undergoing examination.

Six samples of beer taken from the leading breweries of Sydney have been analysed. The results prove that no other bitter principle exists in the beer than that derived from the hop plant—Humulus Cypulus.

Each of the samples of beer have been examined for the ingredients enumerated in section 80 of the Licensing Act, with entirely negative results.

The nature and character of the alcohol in the beers has received my close attention. With this object in view the alcoholic distillate has been submitted to the process known as fractional distillation, that is to say, the volatile alcohols have been more or less separated from each other in the order of their boiling points. In this way iso-butylic and amylic alcohols were detected. These compounds are present in the complex liquid called fousel or fusel oil and give a character to the beer different from that of malt liquors properly fermented at a low temperature [not above 70 degrees Fahrenheit.]

Knowing the injurious properties of fousel oil I am of opinion that its effect when introduced into the blood is more or less that of a poison.

The Collector of Customs to The Secretary of the Intoxicating Drink Commission.

Sir,

Custom House, Sydney, 2 August, 1887.

In reply to your letter of the 29th ultimo, I beg to inform you that the Brewers' returns, furnished under the provisions of the "Beer Duty Act of 1887," are not yet complete.

An approximate estimate, based on the returns received, shows for the year ending June, 1887, about 10,000,000 gallons of beer brewed.

I am unable to form an estimate of the beer brewed during the previous years.

I have, &c.,

EXTRACTS from a Parliamentary Paper re Local Option, ordered to be printed, July 9th, 1884.

Reports from Country Police Districts, dated 31st August, 1883.

District.	Locality.	Remarks.
		As to working of the Local Option clauses.	As to the working of the Act generally.
Western—contd.	Blayney .....	The vote was favourable to the granting of new licenses.
"	Molong .....	The vote was in favour of an increase.
"	Forbes .....	Has worked well; there have been no applications for new licenses.	There have been 47 prosecutions, of which 34 resulted in convictions.
"	Mudgee .....	The vote was in favour of an increase.
"	Gulgong and Cudgegong.	The vote was in the negative, and has worked well, although very little interest taken in it.
"	Dubbo and Coonamble.	The vote was in favour of new licenses.	The Act has been beneficial to the public, and has been as far as possible enforced by the police; there have been 26 prosecutions and only 4 dismissals; the Act is now generally observed by the publicans.
"	Bourke .....	Local option not in operation.	Act enforced as far as possible; a great number of convictions have been obtained.
Southern	Cooma .....	The principle appears to work well, and to give general satisfaction.	Act strictly enforced, as shown by only 3 persons being locked up on a Sunday since January 1st; 7 prosecutions resulting in 5 convictions have taken place; no doubt the bush public-houses evade the law as they are under no supervision, and are encouraged to do so by the public and even J's.P.
"	Goulburn .....	Two wards voted in the affirmative and one in the negative. The principle appears to work well and gives general satisfaction.	Act strictly enforced; drunkenness greatly decreased, as shown by only 29 persons being arrested for drunkenness on Sundays in six months ending June 30th, 1883, as against 50 for the previous six months. Act works well.
"	Young .....	The principle appears to work well, and has given satisfaction up to the present.	Act strictly enforced; the police are watched by the publicans and other precautions taken.
"	Crookwell .....	The principle of local option approved in this district and has worked satisfactorily.	Act strictly enforced; great improvement noticeable; no drinking on Sundays or during prohibited hours. Three renewals refused.
"	Yass .....	"	Act strictly enforced and works well; some evasions no doubt occur, but the precautions taken by the publicans make it impossible to obtain evidence on which to convict.
"	Burrowa .....	"	Act strictly enforced.
"	Cootamundra .....	"	Act strictly enforced; some convictions have been obtained.
"	Temora .....	"	Act strictly enforced; publicans take advantage of the occasional absence of the police and watch them. The good that has resulted under the Act is incalculable.
"	Braidwood .....	"	Act strictly enforced; generally held by the publicans and their friends that it is too much so.
"	Queanbeyan .....	"	Act strictly enforced and observed; no cases against publicans; not a single arrest for drunkenness on a Sunday.
"	Bombala .....	"	Act strictly enforced and gives general satisfaction in the district; houses well conducted; no convictions.
"	Bega .....	"	Act enforced as far as possible; some evasions, but police unable to obtain evidence owing to precautions taken and their being so well known; publicans able to obtain any number of witnesses against the police.
"	Eden .....	"	Act strictly enforced; several prosecutions and convictions; two convictions obtained at Pambula.
North-eastern	West Maitland, East Maitland, and Morpeth.	The vote was against new licenses; little interest however taken in application for new licenses.	Majority of publicans observe the law; several convictions obtained for Sunday selling, but great difficulty experienced in obtaining legal evidence; the publicans are very careful whom they serve and take all sorts of precautions in evading the Act.
"	Singleton .....	The vote was against new licenses; no application for new licenses made since.	Act strictly enforced; several convictions have been obtained; most satisfactory results of the workings of the Act, shown by the fact that at the late Agricultural Show there were only two cases of drunkenness noticeable.
"	Muswellbrook .....	The vote was against new licenses; considerable interest taken.
"	Newcastle, Lambton, Wallsend, Hamilton, Wickham, Waratah.	The vote was against new licenses, but very little interest was taken.	Very great difficulty experienced in obtaining evidence without the assistance of spies; several convictions have however been obtained, and the publicans severely dealt with.
"	Plattsburg .....	The vote was in favour of new licenses by a majority of seven, nearly half the voters going to the poll.
"	Kempsey .....	No vote taken .....	Act strictly observed and enforced; few cases of Sunday selling and supplying aborigines, but no legal proofs obtainable.

EXTRACTS from "Whisky Frauds." (Published in Dublin, April, 1876.)

IRISH WHISKY.

ON the 19th of April, 1875, in the debate in the House of Commons on the Adulteration of Food and Drugs Bill, Mr. O'Sullivan moved an amendment which was intended to prevent the sale of a compound known as "silent whisky." The honourable gentleman said that he had persuaded one of his friends to taste this compound, and that the friend compared it to "a torchlight procession going down his throat." He added that genuine Irish whisky was worth 6s. per gallon, and complained not only that those who made it were undersold by means of adulteration with rubbish worth only 2s. 8d., but also that the Government encouraged this practice, which was injurious to the health and sanity of the people. In the Government stores there were sometimes large quantities of so-called Dublin whisky, which contained only a very infinitesimal percentage of the genuine article, or even none at all. The Government gave the same permit for the sending out of that poisonous and deleterious stuff as for genuine whisky, and thus the purchaser and the consumer were deceived and defrauded. Mr. Brooks followed on the same side ; but the Chancellor of the Exchequer said that the matter lay a little outside of the Bill then under consideration, and invited Mr. O'Sullivan to discuss it privately with him on another occasion, so as to come to a settlement. The amendment was therefore withdrawn ; but the evil of which Mr. O'Sullivan complained has not been diminished, and will probably be brought before Parliament as an independent question early in the ensuing Session. There may, perhaps, be some doubt as to the necessity of any legislation with regard to it ; but there can be no doubt that the facts of the case are important to all consumers of whisky, and that they ought to be known and understood by the public. Of late years, down to a very recent period, on account of the high quality of the whisky made by the Dublin distillers, and of the virtues which were ascribed to it, the demand for this spirit increased enormously, and to a great extent it displaced others in the estimation of the public. But the increased demand has led in its turn to the manufacture, by dealers, on an immense scale, of a mixture which is sold as Irish, or even as Dublin, whisky, but which has nothing in common, save its name and a basis of alcohol, with the true whisky, of which it is an imitation, and on the reputation and qualities of which its sale is founded. The result has been that many persons who have ignorantly bought the artificial compound under the belief that it was genuine Irish whisky, in the original sense of the term, have been disappointed in its flavour and properties ; and hence, during the last year or two, the sale of all varieties of whisky has undergone a diminution in favour of other spirits, on account of the discredit which has been attached to the name by those imitations of whisky to which Mr. O'Sullivan referred.

A very large number of vegetable substances can be made to yield ardent spirit by distillation ; and this ardent spirit, when it is prepared by any of the simple stills which were formerly in exclusive use, contains not only alcohol, the common basis of all spirit, mingled with more or less water, but also an admixture of other ingredients, mostly oils, acids, ethers, or analogous compounds, which are soluble in the diluted alcohol, and which are in every case more or less characteristic of the source from which the distillate is obtained. The alcohol and the water are invariably present, but the other ingredients constitute the flavouring matter by which any one kind of spirit is distinguished from other kinds, and by virtue of which it possesses its special properties, be they beneficial or injurious. Thus, spirit so distilled from the grape contains the ænantlic ether, or essential oil of wine ; spirit so distilled from corn contains fusel oil ; and spirit so distilled from molasses, or beetroot, or potatoes, contains substances proper to its raw material ; inasmuch that an experienced person would have no difficulty in declaring, by smell or taste, the source from which any sample of recent spirit had been obtained. At the beginning and at the close of distillation the flavouring matters come over in larger quantities than at other times ; so that the first and last parts are more strongly flavoured, or, in technical language, are "coarser" than the rest, and are received in separate vessels, that they may not impart their character of coarseness to the bulk. It is obvious that the management of this part of the process of distillation, on which the quality of the product greatly depends, must be managed with much skill and care ; and some portions of the proceeds are submitted to redistillation before they are thought fit to be set aside for use.

The

The crude, or new spirit, as it comes from an old-fashioned still, is never fit for human consumption. In some instances the essential oils brought over with the distillate are so noxious in their character, or so excessive in quantity, or so unpleasant in flavour, that it is necessary to remove them by rectification, which is a process of redistillation, after admixture with substances calculated to fix and retain the oils. In other instances the oils, although unpleasant at first, undergo oxidation or other chemical changes in course of time, and pass into new compounds of an agreeable character. This process, which occurs but slowly under ordinary conditions, is capable of being accelerated by an elevated temperature and by free exposure to air, so that, in the West Indies, it has been a common practice to render new rum drinkable by allowing it to percolate through a sort of filter made of green bushes. But in the case of spirits, as in the analogous case of wine, the best results are obtained by allowing the maturing process to proceed in bulk, and at its natural rate; and hence, among those who are consumers of alcohol, many kinds of old spirits have come to be highly and deservedly esteemed.

Among these, as far as the British Islands are concerned, a prominent place has long been held by Irish, and especially by Dublin, whisky. This spirit, when genuine, is prepared in old-fashioned stills called "pot" stills, by the distillation of a mash made partly from malted and partly from unmalted barley. The process of distillation is so managed as to bring over a product of the proper fineness, loaded with only so much essential oil as will undergo the desired changes within a reasonable time; and the new spirit is then stored in old sherry casks, from which it derives some additional flavour, and also its well-known yellowish tint (all distilled spirits being originally colourless), and it is kept in bond generally for about three years. By the end of that time the fusel oil which it once contained has undergone conversion into other compounds, and the result, the real Dublin whisky, is a spirit singularly free from any tendency to produce acidity, and flavoured, in a manner highly esteemed by connoisseurs, by the products of the gradual and spontaneous decomposition of its fusel oil, which, although itself noxious, is ultimately replaced by essences of a harmless character. From whisky made and treated as prescribed the bulk of the fusel oil generally disappears in about twelve months, although the spirit continues to undergo beneficial changes for a much longer period of time. Genuine or original Scotch whisky differs from Irish in being distilled from a barley mash only, without malt;* and in Ireland a certain quantity of whisky has been distilled from a malt mash alone.

The Irish manufacture, notwithstanding the existence of a few provincial stills, was for a long period vested almost exclusively in the hands of the four great distilling firms in Dublin, namely, Messrs. John Jameson & Son, Messrs. William Jameson & Co., Sir John Power & Son, and Messrs. George Roe & Co. These firms held a position analogous to that of the great brewers in London and Dublin; and, partly because they had established reputations at stake, partly on account of their command of the grain market and of the necessary knowledge and skill in manufacture, they turned out products which had points of difference as among themselves, but which were always of genuine character and of superior quality, so that they placed Dublin whisky in high estimation as a spirit for ordinary domestic use, and also as a form of alcohol especially suited to dyspeptics and other invalids. The market which was thus created became so large that some of the dealers or middlemen who intervened between the producers and the consumers, began to cast about for fresh sources of supply from which they might themselves derive a larger share of the profits of the trade than had hitherto fallen to them. In this quest they were guided by a well-known precedent, and they seem to have neglected none of the lessons which it taught.

The Dutch followers of King William III had introduced into England the practice of drinking "Hollands"; and the demand for this spirit led, in no long time, to the manufacture of a cheap imitation of it, which was called "Geneva," and ultimately "gin." As soon as the trade in gin was well established it gave rise to a competition in price, which could only be maintained by a competition in adulteration, and dealers vied with one another in producing a liquid at a minimum of price, and possessing a maximum of fiery and intoxicating properties. Cayenne pepper, turpentine, cocculus indicus, and a variety of other drugs, were either used or supposed to be used, until at length the name of "blue ruin" became a synonym for gin, and the phrase "gin-drinker" became a synonym for degradation. It is well known that the poisons which are added to diluted alcohol, to conceal its weakness and to render it intoxicating, produce a drunkenness of a more hurtful and a more hopeless kind than that which is produced by alcohol itself. Gin fell into disrepute among the respectable classes of society, and it is probable that the trade in spurious imitations of it to some extent shared in the decline.

In the year 1860 an Act of Parliament gave permission to mix, or, as it is euphemistically called, to "blend" spirits in bond; and this permission led to a new era in the whisky trade. Previously, a cask of whisky purchased from a distiller could not be tampered with until the purchaser had paid the duty and had carried his property away; and the large amount of capital which would have been locked up in duty prevented dealers from attempting adulteration on an extensive scale. Since 1860, however, the dealer has been able to work his will with spirit in the Government warehouses in Ireland, and his mixture, whatever its nature or ingredients, has been sent out as Irish or Dublin Whisky. Some five-and-thirty years earlier a Mr. Coffy had invented and patented a still which may be worked in such a manner as to bring over only a very small quantity of fusel oil and analogous substances, or in such a manner as to bring over none at all, the product being then pure diluted alcohol, like the "rectified spirit of wine" which is sold by druggists, and is called "silent" spirit in the trade, presumably because it tells no tales with regard to the materials from which it is derived.

Spoiled barley and a variety of refuse of other kinds soon found their way into the patent stills, and the resulting mixture of alcohol and water, which required no keeping, and which was obtained more cheaply than a "pot" still spirit of equal strength, was used to adulterate and cheapen the latter. If we take Mr. O'Sullivan's figures and suppose that a dealer bought genuine whisky at 6s. per gallon and mixed with it an equal quantity of silent spirit at 2s. 8d., his result would cost him only 4s. 4d. per gallon, and would enable him to undersell the pot still distillers. His spirit would be equal to theirs in alcoholic strength, and would only differ from it by being diluted as regards flavour. If a "coarse" pot still whisky, imperfectly matured or of imperfect manufacture, were selected for dilution, a still larger proportion of the silent spirit might be added without entire loss of the original or natural flavour, and a still cheaper mixture might be obtained; while, as water is in most places inexpensive, and as the public have no ready means of estimating alcoholic strength, a still further saving would follow simple dilution with the pure element, corrected when necessary by the use of drugs to give an artificial pungency upon the palate. These simple methods, however, soon ceased to be all-sufficing, and the competition between dealers in point of price led to a continual increase in the quantity of silent spirit employed (this ingredient being in the first place largely imported from Scotland) and in many cases to the absolute omission of genuine Irish whisky from the compound. Taking, as an example, a "blend" made in the Dublin Custom-house in December, 1875, it contained 1,162 gallons of silent spirit imported from Glasgow, two quantities of silent spirit, respectively of 2,120 gallons and of 2,989 gallons, imported from different houses in Edinburgh, 1,623 gallons of silent spirit from Cameron Bridge, and 298 gallons of silent spirit manufactured at Derry. In the whole 8,192 gallons there was nothing but silent spirit, not one drop of anything which could properly be called whisky, and very little that was even of Irish manufacture. Yet the whole quantity was exported from the Dublin Custom-house as "Dublin whisky"; and it is manifest that the only inducement to bring over hundreds of thousands of gallons of Scotch silent spirit to Dublin, and to mix them there, is that they may go out to the world not as Scotch spirit but as Irish. Another "blend," less flagrantly dishonest, made in the same place and at about the same time, contained in 6,703 gallons 786 gallons of genuine Dublin whisky. The rest was made up of 3,512 gallons of (presumably coarse) provincial Irish whisky, and of 2,405 gallons of "silent spirit." This mixture, also, was officially declared to be "Dublin whisky." In some instances, moreover, Scotch silent spirit has merely been landed on the Dublin Quay and reshipped as whisky immediately afterwards.

Among the dealers who have carried on these practices, and who have in many cases extensively advertised their products, there are some who have called in the aid of analytical chemists, and have laid great stress on the absence of fusel oil in what they sell. They do this quite justly, and they might truly affirm that silent spirit is far more pure, in the chemical sense, than genuine whisky. But they lose sight, or they wish the public to lose sight, of two chief elements in the question. It is quite certain that genuine whisky, when it is new, contains fusel oil and that fusel oil is deleterious to man. But genuine whisky, when it is no longer new, ceases to contain fusel oil; and its peculiar flavour, which is not deleterious, is a product of the decomposition of fusel oil, and is itself an evidence that this oil, which was once there has ceased to exist. On the other hand, the silent spirit, which is pure in the chemical sense, is undrinkable in its pure state, because, although it is hot in the mouth, it is in other respects tasteless. In order to render it marketable it must be doctored into some resemblance to the flavour of genuine Irish whisky, and its eventual qualities will depend upon the ingredients which are employed for this purpose. Who can pretend to say what these ingredients are, or what may be their effects, seeing that each dealer may work by his own recipe and may have special secrets of his own? Considering that the ordinary basis of the manufacture is silent spirit of known value, it may be presumed that variations of price are mainly due to variations in the cost of flavouring matter, or to variations in the time which different kinds of flavouring matter require before the mixture is ready to be sent out. Among the ingredients which are not kept secret, preparations called called "prune wine," and "essence of sherry" may be mentioned, and it is supposed that the thousands of butts of a vile compound called Hamburg sherry, worth £8 or £9 a butt, which annually pass through the English Customs on their way to Ireland, are not consumed in that country, but are fortified with silent spirit and returned to England under the name of Irish whisky. We do not pretend to express any opinion on the merits of the various manufactures to which we have referred, but the opinion of the public is distinctly adverse to them. Under the impression which they have produced upon consumers the whisky trade has been declining, relatively to the trade in the varieties of spirits which are sold under other names. The importation of silent spirit from Scotland into Ireland has also declined, but this is because some of the dealers, who at first carried on business by means of an office with two rooms, aided by the facilities which were afforded them to use the bonded warehouses as mixing rooms, have found it prudent to render themselves veritable distillers by setting up, often somewhere in Ireland, patent stills, or even one or two pot stills, of their own. Silent spirit is also made in England in larger quantities than formerly, so that the Scotch manufacturers have no longer the command of the market.

Notwithstanding the reply of the Chancellor of the Exchequer to Mr. O'Sullivan's motion, it seems manifest that a sound Adulteration Act, although it might not prohibit the proceedings which we have described, would prevent the public from being deceived by them. If there are consumers who like to drink silent spirit variously flavoured we see no reason why they should not be indulged. Our view goes no further than that such artificial compounds, however delectable in themselves, ought not to be sold under the name of whisky but under a name or names which should truly express their nature. Whisky is a perfectly definite liquid, with characters of its own, and those who desire to purchase whisky should be protected against fraudulent imitations of it, even if these were actually more wholesome than the genuine article. We all admit that the interference of legislation with trade is undesirable, and that it should at best be regarded as a necessary evil. Notwithstanding, this laxity must stop somewhere, and it may as well stop short of encouraging misrepresentation and deceit. In the meantime it seems likely that a purchaser might obtain some security by demanding the whisky of a particular distiller, and by stipulating that it should be of a certain age, and that it should be unmixed.

WHISKY, GENUINE OR SPURIOUS.

An article on Irish Whisky, which has lately appeared in the Times, has called public attention to the manner in which some of the spirit that is sold under this name is manufactured, and has incidentally opened a question of some importance to the members of the medical profession, by whom, as is well known, "whisky" has of late years been largely recommended as one of the best forms in which alcohol can be either administered as a stimulant or consumed for domestic use. Genuine whisky, it appears, is a spirit distilled either from a mixture of malt and barley or from malt alone, the former being the Irish, the latter the Scotch, method of manufacture, although in the Times' article, by an obvious slip of the pen the Scotch spirit was said to be distilled from "barley" alone. In either case the distillation is conducted in an old-fashioned "pot" still, a thing precisely like a huge retort, and furnished with the well-known spiral worm for the condensation of the products. In the case of Scotch whisky it is believed that the smoke of the peat fire which is employed imparts something of its flavour to the spirit; and both in the Irish and Scotch varieties the pot still sends over, along with ethylic alcohol and water, a number of other substances derived from the barley or the malt, which determine the flavour and, in great measure, the other properties of the result; and which serve, indeed, by their presence, to differentiate whisky from spirit of other kinds. The difference between genuine Scotch and genuine Irish whisky is somewhat analogous to the difference between Bordeaux wine and Burgundy; and the spirit, like the wine, is unfit for use until it has been matured by keeping. For this purpose it is stored in wooden casks; and some of the Dublin distillers use old sherry casks for this purpose, thus imparting to their spirit a certain yellowish or brownish colour, and some vinous flavour. Other distillers use clean casks; but in either case the effect of time is to break up and remove the amylic alcohol, or fusel oil, by spontaneous decomposition, and to produce a number of fragrant ethers in its stead. The fusel oil disappears from genuine whisky in about a year, but a spirit originally of high quality will continue to improve in wood until it is ten years old. After that time it should be bottled, and may then be kept indefinitely for future use.

The production of whisky, in this, the original and only proper sense of the word, requires not only large capital and much skill, but also the use of the finest malt or barley which can be obtained; and the spirit, which is necessarily of a certain value in the first instance, has that value enhanced by the process of keeping. The manufacture of Irish whisky was almost monopolised a few years ago by four great distilling firms in Dublin; but the products of these firms were supplied to the public by the intervention of middlemen, who had no stills, and had never made a drop of whisky in their lives, but who issued advertisements and placards, and who thus became known as whisky people, and kept the actual makers in the background. In process of time these middlemen saw their way to make larger profits by diluting new or coarse genuine whisky with rectified spirit; and more recently, emboldened by success, they have sold vast quantities of spirit which contains no whisky at all, but is simply a medicinal tincture, composed of rectified spirit, and of various flavouring substances known only to themselves. The rectified spirit is made by what is called a patent still, which brings over only ethylic alcohol and water from the fermented liquor supplied to it; and this fermented liquor may be made from damaged grain, rotten potatoes, refuse molasses, or any other waste which contains a sufficiency of glucose or of starch. The rectified spirit thus procured is called "silent spirit" in the trade, because it brings over no flavour, and so tells no tales about the sources from which it is procured. Being made from refuse, it is much cheaper than whisky, and it is chemically pure, or nearly so. When made into a tincture it is ready for immediate consumption, and it is then sold under the name of whisky, often with some grand distinctive title, and at a low price. It is obvious that a physician who prescribes whisky may be seriously deceived, if his patient receives instead of it a tincture which does indeed contain alcohol, but which is indebted for its flavour to prune juice, creosote, Hamburg "sherry," and "Xeres," besides a variety of abominations which are known only to the dealers who use, and to the druggists who manufacture and supply, them.

In the presence of such a state of things it is to be hoped that the manufacturers of genuine whisky will see their way to come to the rescue of those who wish to recommend or to consume their manufacture, and that they will organise some system of supply in which the public may feel confidence. Chemistry is of little use in the matter, because the organic compounds, both in whisky and in the spurious imitations, are very unstable and difficult of isolation; and also because many professed analysts have so let themselves out for hire, as the agents of trade puffery, that they have brought doubt and discredit even upon those whose hands are clean. The palate and the nose, however, furnish tests which are valuable. Genuine whisky, diluted with twice or thrice its bulk of cold water, gives off a subtle and delicate perfume, which is highly characteristic; and like genuine wine, imparts both to smell and taste the impression of unity or oneness. Imitation whisky, similarly treated, gives off five or six coarse nasty smells, which struggle with each other for pre-eminence, until that of rectified spirit finally gains the day; and it tastes like what it is, a discordant mixture of ill-assorted flavours. Price also is, to some extent, a criterion. Genuine five-year old whisky (and it should not be drunk at an earlier period), of 10 under proof, can hardly be sold by a retail dealer at less than 23s. a gallon, or 4s. a bottle; while large quantities of the imitation are sold at 17s. 6d. a gallon, or even at less. Some little confusion has been introduced into the question by the circumstance that much of the silent spirit that was first used in the manufacture of sham whisky was made in Scotland, and was sent to Ireland to be exported from thence as Irish. In this way Scotch silent spirit became confounded with Scotch whisky, and the bad qualities conferred upon the former by the flavouring ingredients which were added to it were sometimes unjustly attributed to the latter. We feel, however, that the profession will now be sufficiently informed of the facts to be able, with the exercise of due caution, to secure the use of genuine whisky for those who seem to them to require it; and the information which we have thought it right to give seems to be the more called for, since some of our medical contemporaries, probably in absolute ignorance of the merits of the question, have printed more than one glowing eulogium upon this and that variety of medicated silent spirit, which afterwards, by some strange coincidence, has often been freely advertised in their columns.

The Government Analyst to The President Intoxicating Drink Inquiry Commission.

Sir,

Government Laboratory, Sydney, 29 August, 1887.

Herewith I have the pleasure of handing you the particulars of the various noxious ingredients mentioned in section 89 of the Licensing Act.

I never knew why "darnel seeds" should be included, as they are harmless. There is a variety called the "drunken darnel," but owing to the seeds shivering when touched and not to any intoxicating property.

I am, &amp;c.,

PART II.—LICENSING DISTRICTS AND CONDITIONS OF OBTAINING LICENSES.

15. For the purposes of this Act, Victoria shall be divided into licensing districts.

Each licensing district shall consist of one division of an electoral district as described in "The Electoral Act Amendment Act 1876" or in any Act amending or repealing the same or constituting new electoral districts or divisions thereof.

Licensing districts. No. 548.

Every licensing district shall be proclaimed by the Governor in Council, and the same shall be notified in the Government Gazette together with the name by which it shall be known.

16. The number of victuallers licensed in any one licensing district shall not except as hereinafter provided exceed one for each full two hundred and fifty of the first one thousand inhabitants, and a further one for each subsequent full five hundred inhabitants of each licensing district ; and the total number so calculated is hereinafter called the statutory number for such licensing district.

Statutory number of victuallers licenses.

17. If at the commencement of this Act there be a greater number of victualler's licenses than the statutory number in any licensing district created under the provisions of this Act, the persons holding such victualler's licenses shall not be prejudicially affected thereby, but their number may be reduced in the manner hereinafter provided.

Existing licenses not affected by statutory number.

18. After the commencement of this Act, except in the case of the application for the license of a new house which shall contain not less than thirty bedrooms of the dimensions hereinafter specified and shall be otherwise in conformity with the provisions of this Act and shall in every other respect comply with the requirements hereinafter specified, and also except in the cases hereinafter specifically authorized, no new victualler's license shall be granted in any licensing district until the number of victualler's licenses therein is reduced to a number below the statutory number of licensed victuallers for such licensing district nor unless the electors on the electoral rolls for the division of any electoral district forming the licensing district shall have determined in the manner hereinafter provided that the number of victualler's licenses in such licensing district may be increased to a given number not exceeding the statutory number.

No new victuallers' license granted until number reduced

19. The number of inhabitants in each and every year of any licensing district shall for the purposes of determining the statutory number for such licensing district be taken to be five times the number of ratepayers then on the roll of rate-paying electors for the electoral division forming such licensing district in the month of June then last past, and such one of the clerks of the licensing court for such licensing district as may be directed by the chairman of the licensing court shall in each and every year cause a notice to be inserted in the Government Gazette stating the number of inhabitants in the licensing district as determined on the above basis by the licensing court.

Number of inhabitants how determined.

20. The licensing court for any licensing district may grant in excess of the statutory number and may from time to time renew on the conditions hereinafter mentioned road-side victuallers' licenses to any persons who are in the opinion of the court fit and proper persons, and who keep houses within such licensing district which in the opinion of the court contain sufficient accommodation for the probable requirements of the public travelling in that locality ; such houses shall be situated in mountainous districts not within ten miles of any village or township, and at least ten miles distant from the nearest licensed victualler's house which at the time of the issue or renewal of such license affords accommodation to the public.

Railway refreshment room license for each railway station.

21. The licensing court for any licensing district may grant a railway refreshment room license to any fit and proper person who is the lessee of any railway refreshment rooms within such licensing district, but after the expiration of any lease now existing of any railway refreshment rooms within the city of Melbourne or within a distance of twenty miles thereof no license shall be granted or renewed to any person for such railway refreshment rooms. Any person who is the lessee of refreshment rooms at more than one railway station shall obtain a separate license in respect of each of such railway stations from the licensing court of the licensing district within which such railway refreshment rooms are situated.

Petition for determination by poll of electors as to number of victuallers' licenses.

22. When after the commencement of this Act the number of victuallers' licenses in any licensing district is in excess of the statutory number not including those authorized in excess of such statutory number by this Act, or when such number of victuallers' licenses is below the statutory number, one-fifth of the number of the persons whose names for the time being are on the rolls of electors for the electoral division forming such licensing district may petition the Governor in Council to cause a poll to be taken to determine whether or not the number of such victuallers' licenses in such licensing district shall be decreased to any number below the number then existing but not below the statutory number or to determine whether or not the number of such victuallers' licenses in such licensing district shall be increased to any number above the number then existing but not above the statutory number.

Governor in Council may direct a poll to be taken.

23. The Governor in Council may upon the receipt of any such petition or petitions by an Order in Council direct the returning officer for the electoral division forming such licensing district to take a poll of the electors upon a day to be fixed in the said Order in Council.

Regulations as to mode of conducting poll.

24. A poll of the electors shall be taken by ballot in accordance with regulations to be made by the Governor in Council prescribing the mode in which such poll shall be taken and the form in which the ballot-papers shall be framed; such poll shall be taken in the month of March in any year.

Licenses in excess of number fixed by determination of electors not to be renewed.

25. If the determination of the electors of any licensing district at any poll taken as aforesaid in any year be that the number of victuallers' licenses shall be reduced to the statutory number, or if it be that the number of such victuallers' licenses in such licensing district shall be reduced to a number below the existing number of such licenses but above the statutory number, then the licensing court shall before the tenth day of the month of June next ensuing determine as hereinafter provided which of such licensed premises shall be deprived of a license and at the next annual sitting of the licensing court for such licensing district the total number of such victuallers' licenses shall be reduced by the number required to carry out the determination arrived at, the owners and occupiers of the respective licensed premises the licenses for which are not to be renewed shall be served with a notice to that effect by the clerk of the licensing court nominated for the place at which the licensing court sits nearest to such licensed premises before the end of the month of June in such year, and such owners and occupiers shall be entitled to compensation to be determined as hereinafter provided, and where the occupier is not the owner of any such licensed premises the lease or agreement under which such occupier holds the same shall if he so elect be deemed to be annulled. Provided that no person shall be deprived of his license in pursuance of any such determination unless and until he has received the compensation due to him in respect thereof.

Mode in which the determination of the electors is to be arrived at.

26. If there be not a majority of the votes recorded in favour of reducing such victuallers' licenses to some particular number which is less than the existing number and not below the statutory number, the votes (if any) given for the statutory number and those given for such other several greater numbers next in arithmetical progression to the statutory number which will make a majority of the votes recorded shall be added together and the highest of such several greater numbers shall be the determination of the electors. Provided that at any election one-third of the whole of the number of the electors on the roll shall record their votes in order to constitute a poll.

Licenses may be increased to number determined on.

27. If the determination of the electors of any licensing district at any poll taken as aforesaid be that the number of victuallers' licenses shall be increased to the statutory number, or if it be that the number of such victuallers' licenses in such licensing districts shall be increased to a number above the existing number of such licenses but below the statutory number, then whilst such determination continues in force the total number of such victuallers' licenses may be increased by the number required to carry out the determination arrived at.

Mode in which the determination of the electors is to be arrived at.

28. 116. In the event of any variance between the information and evidence adduced in support thereof, the Justices or Magistrate or other officer may amend or alter such information, and may substitute for the offence charged therein, any other offence against the provisions of the said "Temperance Act of 1864," or of this Act ; but if it appears that the defendant has been materially misled by such variance, the said Justices or Magistrate or other officers shall thereupon adjourn the hearing of the case to some further day, unless the defendant waives such adjournment.

117. No conviction or warrant enforcing the same or other process or proceeding under either of the said Acts shall be held insufficient or invalid by reason of any variance between the information or conviction, or by reason of any other defect in form or substance, provided it can be understood from such conviction, warrant, process or proceeding that the same was made for an offence against some provision of such Act, within the jurisdiction of the Justices or Magistrate or other officer who made or signed the same, and provided there is evidence to prove such offence, and no greater penalty is imposed than is authorized by such Act.

Passing of money need not be proved.

120. In proving the sale or barter or other unlawful disposal of liquor for the purpose of any proceeding relative to any offence under the said "Temperance Act of 1864," or under this Act, it shall not be necessary to show that any money actually passed, or any liquor was actually consumed, if the Justices, Magistrate or other officer or Court hearing the case, is or are satisfied that a transaction in the nature of a sale or barter or other unlawful disposal actually took place.

What evidence shall be necessary for a conviction.

121. In any prosecution under the said Temperance Act or under this Act, for the sale or barter or other unlawful disposal of intoxicating liquor, it shall not be necessary that any witness should depose directly to the precise description of the liquor sold or bartered or the precise consideration therefor, or to the fact of the sale or other disposal having taken place with his participation or to his own personal and certain knowledge, but the Justices or Magistrate or other officer trying the case, so soon as it appears to them or to him that the circumstances in evidence sufficiently establish the infraction of law complained of, shall put the defendant on his defence, and in default of his rebuttal of such evidence, shall convict him accordingly.

Proceedings upon information for second or subsequent offence. Subsequent offences to be enquired into, and then previous convictions.

122. The proceedings upon any information for committing an offence against any of the provisions of this Act, in case of a previous conviction or convictions being charged, shall be as follows:—

Proof of previous convictions.

1. The Justices or Magistrate or other officer shall, in the first instance, inquire concerning such subsequent offence only, and if the accused be found guilty thereof, he shall then, and not before, be asked whether he was so previously convicted, as alleged in the information, and if he answers that he was so previously convicted, he may be sentenced accordingly; but if he denies that he was previously convicted, or stands mute of malice, or does not answer directly to such question, the Justices or Police Magistrate or other officer shall then inquire concerning such previous conviction or convictions.

Conviction may be for first offence only. Conviction for several offences on same day. Amendment for second conviction in event of first being set aside.

2. The number of such previous convictions shall be provable by the production of a certificate under the hand of the convicting Justices or Magistrate, or officer, or of the Clerk of the Peace, without proof of his signature or official character, or by other satisfactory evidence;

3. A conviction may in any case be had as for a first offence, notwithstanding that there may have been a prior conviction or convictions for the same or any other offence;

4. Convictions for several offences may be made under this Act, although such offences may have been committed on the same day; but the increased penalty or punishment hereinbefore imposed shall only be recoverable in the case of offences committed on different days, and after information laid for a first offence;

5. In the event of any conviction for any second or subsequent offence becoming void or defective, after the making thereof, by reason of any previous conviction being set aside, quashed, or otherwise rendered void, the Justices or Magistrate or other officer, by whom such second or subsequent conviction was made, may by summons under his or their hand require the person convicted to appear at a time and place to be named in such summons, and may thereupon, upon proof of the due service of such summons, if such person fails to appear, or on his appearance, amend such second or subsequent conviction, and adjudge such penalty or punishment as might have been adjudged had such previous conviction never existed, and such amended conviction shall thereupon be held valid to all intents and purposes as if it had been made in the first instance;

What shall be deemed a conviction for a second or subsequent offence.

6. In case any person who has been convicted of a contravention of any provision of the second part of this Act is afterwards convicted of an offence against such provision or against any other provision of the said part, such conviction shall be deemed a conviction for a second offence within the meaning of section one hundred of this Act, and may be dealt with and punished accordingly, although the two convictions may be for acts of different descriptions; and in case any such person is afterwards again convicted of a contravention of any provision of the said part whether similar or not to the previous offences, such conviction shall in like manner be deemed a conviction for a third offence, within the meaning of section one hundred of this Act, and may be dealt with and punished accordingly.

123. On the trial of any proceeding, matter or question under any of the Acts in the one hundred and twelfth section of this Act mentioned or under this Act, the person opposing or defending or the wife or husband of such person opposing or defending shall be competent and compellable to give evidence in any such proceeding, matter or question.

ADDENDA.

42 VICTORIA, CHAP. 50.

An Act to remove doubts as to the true intent and meaning of certain provisions of "The Canada Temperance Act, 1878," and to make certain amendments thereto in so far as the said Act relates to Manitoba. [Assented to 15th May, 1879.]

WHEREAS it is provided by "The Canada Temperance Act, 1878," that as to every municipality within the limits of the late Province of Canada, in which a by-law passed and approved, or adopted and passed under the authority and for the enforcement of "The Temperance Act of 1864," is at the time of the passing of the said "The Canada Temperance Act, 1878," (a) in force, or (b) only not in force for want of delivery of a copy thereof to the proper officer, or (c) suspended as to its operation until the expiration of the then existing licenses, the sections one, two, three, four, five, six, seven, eight, nine and ten of the said "The Temperance Act of 1864" shall be repealed from and after the day next following the day on which such by-law is repealed, under the provisions of the said last-named Act or of the said "The Canada Temperance Act, 1878;"

And whereas it is provided by the Act last mentioned if proceedings to repeal such by-law be taken under the provisions of "The Canada Temperance Act of 1878," such by-law shall become and be repealed upon from and after the day of the publication of the proper Order in Council in that behalf in the Canada Gazette;

And whereas, if proceedings to repeal such by-law be taken under the provisions of the said "The Temperance Act of 1864," doubts have arisen whether, having reference to the eighth section of the said Act, such by-law becomes repealed immediately upon the passing of the repealing by-law with the necessary approval of the electors, or whether the repeal of such by-law is suspended in the Province of Quebec (formerly Lower Canada) until the first day of May, and in the Province of Ontario (formerly Upper Canada) until the first day of March next after the passing of the repealing by-law;

And whereas it is expedient to remove such doubts, and to assimilate the effect of the proceedings to repeal, whether taken under "The Canada Temperance Act, 1878," or "The Temperance Act of 1864;" Therefore Her Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate and House of Commons of Canada, enacts as follows:—

1. The true intent and meaning of the third section of "The Canada Temperance Act, 1878," was and is, that sections one, two, three, four, five, six, seven, eight, nine and ten of "The Temperance Act of 1864," become repealed as to every municipality referred to in the preamble of this Act, upon, from and after the day next following the day on which the repealing by-law above referred to, passed under the provisions of "The Temperance Act of 1864," has been duly passed according to such provisions, and the repeal of such sections is not suspended till the first day of May or the first day of March next after the passing of such repealing by-law.

Sections 2, 3, and 4 relate to Manitoba.

AMENDMENTS MADE DURING SESSION OF 1884.

An Act to amend "The Canada Temperance Act, 1878." [Assented to 21st April, 1884.]

WHEREAS it is expedient to amend the Act forty-first Victoria chapter sixteen, intitled "An Act respecting the traffic in Intoxicating Liquors," as hereinafter set forth; Therefore Her Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate and House of Commons of Canada, enacts as follows:—

1. Section ninety-six of the Act above cited is hereby amended by adding thereto the following words:—

"And if in any county or city there are no licenses in force when the petition mentioned in the first part of this Act is adopted, then the second part of this Act shall become and be in force and take effect in such county or city after the expiration of thirty days from the day of the date of an Order in Council to that effect, published in the Canada Gazette."

2. If any Order in Council has been published in the Canada Gazette declaring that the second part of "The Canada Temperance Act, 1878," shall be in force and take effect in any county or city upon, from and after the day on which the annual or semi-annual licenses for the sale of spirituous liquors then in force in such county or city will expire; and if, in fact, there were at the date of such publication no such licenses then in force in such county or city, then the second part of "The Canada Temperance Act, 1878," shall be deemed to have been in force and taken effect in such county or city at the expiration of thirty days from the date of such Order in Council.

3. Nothing herein shall be construed so as to:

(a) Affect any existing legal right or remedy in respect of any prosecution heretofore brought under the second part of "The Canada Temperance Act, 1878;"

(b) Authorize the bringing hereafter of any prosecution for any offence committed against the second part of the said Act prior to the passing of this Act;

(c) Affect any cause of action now existing, or any suit, action, prosecution, or proceeding now pending.

Said commissioner shall reside and have his place of business in this State and hold his office during the pleasure of the governor and council, and until another is appointed in his stead. He shall not sell to municipal officers of this State any intoxicating or fermented liquors except such as have been tested by a competent assayer and found to be pure. He shall not take of said officers, for such liquors sold to them, more than seven per cent. above the cost thereof at the place where they were by him purchased. He shall, before entering upon the duties of his office, give a bond to the treasurer of State, in the penal sum of not less than ten thousand dollars, for the benefit of such towns as may be injured by a breach of the conditions, for the faithful performance of his duties and compliance with such regulations and conditions as the governor and council prescribe. In case of his resignation, removal from office, or death, and the appointment of a successor, the stock of liquors remaining on hand at the time of his resignation, removal or death, shall be taken at cost by the new commissioner, and he shall, before entering upon his office, pay for the same in cash, or settle therefor to the satisfaction of his predecessor or his legal representatives.

Sec. 17. If a municipal officer buys any intoxicating liquors to be sold according to law, of any other persons except those specified in the preceding section, or if he or any person in his employment, or by his direction, sells or offers for sale any such liquors that have been decreed to be forfeited, or causes any intoxicating, or malt liquors which he or they keep for sale, to be adulterated, by mixing with the same any coloring matter, drug or ingredient, or mixes the same with other liquors of a different kind or quality, or with water, or sells or exposes for sale such liquor so adulterated, knowing it to be such, such offender forfeits to the town to which he belongs, not less than twenty nor more than one hundred dollars, to be recovered by indictment.

Sec. 18. Said commissioner shall keep a record of the names of the towns to which liquors are sold, and of the persons buying for said towns, the kind and quantity of liquor sold to each, and the price paid for the same, and shall make report thereof to the governor and council annually in December, to the last day of the preceding month, to be by them laid before the legislature. And said commissioner shall, under oath, on the first days of March, June, September, and December, furnish a printed statement of all liquors purchased by him, enumerating the different kinds, and the quantity of each kind, the prices paid, and the terms of payment; also, the names of the parties of whom the liquors were purchased, and their place of business and date of purchase, which statement shall be sent by mail at the end of each quarter to each town that purchases at his establishment.

Sec. 19. Agents of towns authorized to sell intoxicating liquors shall keep a record in a suitable book of the amount of intoxicating liquors purchased by them, specifying the kind and quantity of each, the price paid, and of whom purchased; and they shall also keep a record of the kind and quantity of liquors sold by them, the date of sale and the price, the name of the purchaser, and the price for which it was sold; specifying in case such sale is made to the municipal officers of any other town, the name of such town, which record shall be open to inspection. And if such agent fails to keep such record, he forfeits to his town for every such offence not less than ten nor more than twenty dollars, to be recovered on complaint or indictment. Whoever knowingly misrepresents to said agent the purposes for which he purchases such liquors forfeits to his town twenty dollars, to be recovered on complaint or indictment.

Sec. 20. No contract made under this chapter shall pledge the credit of the State for the payment of any sum to said commissioner, or for the payment of any liquors purchased by him.

Vacancies occurring during the year shall be filled in the same manner as original appointments are made. No such agent shall have any interest in such liquors or in the profits of the sale thereof. He may sell intoxicating liquors to such municipal officers, to be by them disposed of in accordance with this chapter.

Sec. 22. Such agent shall receive a certificate from the Board by which he is appointed, authorizing him as the agent of such town or city to sell intoxicating liquors for medicinal, mechanical, and manufacturing purposes only; but it shall not be delivered to such agent until he has executed and delivered to said Board a bond, with two sufficient sureties, in the sum of six hundred dollars, in substance as follows:—

“Know all men, that we, ———, as principal, and ——— and ——— as sureties, are held and stand firmly bound to the inhabitants of the town of ——— (or city as the case may be) “in the sum of six hundred dollars, to be paid to them, to which payment we bind ourselves, our heirs, executors, and administrators, firmly by these presents.”

The condition of this obligation is such, that whereas the above bounden ——— has been duly appointed an agent for said town (or city) “to sell intoxicating liquors for medicinal, mechanical and manufacturing purposes and no other, until the ——— day of ———, 18——, unless removed from said agency: now if said ——— shall in all respects conform to the provisions of law relating to the business for which he is appointed, and to such regulations as are or shall be from time to time established by the Board making the appointment, then this obligation shall be void; otherwise shall remain in full force.”

No person authorized as aforesaid to sell intoxicating liquors, shall sell the same to any minor without the written direction of his parent, master or guardian, to any Indian, soldier, drunkard, intoxicated person, or to any person described in section four of chapter sixty-seven as being liable to guardianship, knowing either of them to be of the condition herein prescribed; nor to any intemperate person, of whose habits he has been notified by his relatives, or by the aldermen selectmen or assessors, of any city, town or plantation. And proof of notice so given by said officers, or by their authority, is conclusive of the fact of the intemperate habits of such person, in any prosecution or suit under this chapter; and notice so given by the relatives of such person is presumptive evidence of such habits.

For the second offence he may be fined not exceeding twenty dollars, or imprisoned not more than ninety days. The owner, lessee, or person renting or leasing any building or premises, having knowledge that intoxicating liquors are sold therein, are liable, severally or jointly with the person selling or giving intoxicating liquors as aforesaid. any judgment or sentence before such magistrate, the penal sum in every recognizance shall be two hundred dollars. No recognizance before such magistrate shall be in a sum less than two hundred dollars; nor in the supreme judicial or superior court in less than five hundred dollars.

Sec. 52. Every trial justice, recorder, clerk, and judge of a municipal or police court, and every county attorney, having knowledge of a previous conviction of any person accused of violating this chapter, in preparing complaints, warrants, or indictments, shall allege such previous conviction thereon; and, after such indictment is entered in court, no county attorney shall dismiss or fail to prosecute it except by special order of said court. If any trial justice, recorder, clerk, or judge of a municipal or police court, or county attorney, neglects or refuses to allege such previous conviction, or if any county attorney fails so to prosecute, he forfeits one hundred dollars in each case, to be recovered in an action of debt, to be brought by the Attorney-General in behalf of the State.

Sec. 53. When a person has been convicted in the supreme judicial or superior court of a violation of this chapter, the county attorney shall have him sentenced at the same term, unless for reasons satisfactory to the court, the case is continued for sentence one term, but no longer.

Sec. 54. In appeals, the proceedings shall be the same in the appellate court as they would be in the court of the magistrate, and shall be conducted in said appellate court by the attorney for the State. The jury shall find specially under the direction of the Court on all facts necessary to determine the adjudication thereof; and if a claimant or other respondent fails to appear for trial in the appellate court, the judgment of the court below, if against him, shall be affirmed. No portion of the penalty of any recognizance taken under so much of this chapter as relates to intoxicating liquors shall be remitted by any court in any suit thereon, nor shall a surety in any such recognizance be discharged from his liability therein by a surrender of his principal in court after he has been defaulted upon his recognizance unless the principal has been actually sentenced upon the indictment or complaint on which the recognizance was taken. The appeals of claimants provided for in section forty-two shall be entered as all other appeals in criminal cases, and be subject to the requirements of law appertaining to them.

Sec. 55. Custom-house certificates of importation, and proofs of marks on the casks and packages corresponding thereto shall not, in proceedings under this chapter, be received as evidence that the identical liquors contained in said casks and packages were actually imported in said casks and packages.

Sec. 56. No action shall be maintained upon any claim or demand, promissory note, or other security contracted or given for intoxicating liquors sold in violation of this chapter, or for any such liquors purchased out of the State with intention to sell the same or any part thereof in violation thereof; but this section shall not extend to negotiable paper in the hands of a holder for a valuable consideration and without notice of the illegality of the contract.

Sec. 57. Whenever an unlawful sale is alleged, and a delivery proved, it is not necessary to prove a payment, but such delivery is sufficient evidence of sale. A partner in business is liable for the unlawful keeping or selling of his co-partner, done in the co-partnership business, or by any other person, in any shop, store, or other place of business of such co-partnership, with his knowledge or assent. A principal and his agent, clerk, and servant, may all be included in the same complaint and process. The mayor or aldermen, selectmen or assessors, may cause a suit to be commenced on any bond or recognizance given under this chapter in which his city, town or plantation is interested, and the same shall be prosecuted to final judgment unless paid in full with costs. The mayor and aldermen, selectmen, assessors and constables, in every city, town and plantation, shall make complaint and prosecute all violations of this chapter, and promptly enforce the laws against drinking houses. If a municipal officer, after being furnished with a written notice of a violation of this chapter, signed by two persons competent to be witnesses in civil suits, and containing the names and residences of the witnesses to prove such offence, willfully neglects or refuses to institute proceedings therefor, he shall be fined not less than twenty nor more than fifty dollars, to be recovered by indictment. The oath required of any such officer to the complaint may be, in substance, that from a written notice signed by two persons competent to be witnesses in civil suits, he believes the complaint signed by him to be true. If an execution or other final process, issued in any civil or criminal suit instituted under this chapter, is placed in the hands of any proper officer to be by him executed, and he unreasonably neglects or refuses so to do, an action may be commenced against him by any voter in the county, and prosecuted to final judgment, which shall be for the full amount of the judgment and interest on such execution; and if it is a process that requires him to take and commit an offender to prison, the damages shall not be less than fifty nor more than five hundred dollars. Selectmen of towns herein mentioned include assessors of plantations, and the word town includes plantations. In suits, complaints, indictments, or other proceedings for a violation of any provision of this chapter relating to intoxicating liquors, other than for the first offence, it is not requisite to set forth particularly the record of a former conviction, but it is sufficient to allege briefly that such person has been convicted of a violation of any particular provision, or as a common seller, as the case may be, and such allegation in any criminal process, legally amendable in any stage of the proceedings before final judgment, may be amended, without terms, and as a matter of right. Any process, civil or criminal, legally amendable, may, in any stage of the proceedings, be amended in any matter of form, without costs, on motion at any time before final judgment.

Sec. 58. No person engaged in the unlawful traffic in intoxicating liquors is competent to sit as a juror in any case arising under this chapter; and when information is communicated to the court that a member of any panel is engaged in such traffic, or that he is believed to be so engaged, the court shall inquire of the jurymen of whom such belief is entertained, and no answer which he makes shall be used against him in any case arising under this chapter; but if he answers falsely, he shall be incapable of serving on any jury; but he may decline to answer, in which case he shall be discharged by the court from all further attendance as a jurymen.

Sec. 59. The offences described in this chapter fall within section fourteen of chapter one hundred and thirty-one, and no such offence is barred by any period of time less than six years after the commission thereof. No portion of time during which the offender is not usually and publicly a resident in this State shall be a part of said six years.

Sec. 60. Sheriffs and their deputies shall diligently and faithfully inquire into all violations of law within their respective counties, and institute proceedings against violations or supposed violations of law, and particularly the laws against the illegal sale of intoxicating liquors, and the keeping of drinking-houses and tipping shops, gambling houses or places, and houses of ill-fame, either by promptly entering a complaint before a magistrate and executing the warrants issued thereon, or by furnishing the county attorney promptly and without delay with the names of alleged offenders and of the witnesses. For services under this section, sheriffs, and their deputies acting under their directions, shall receive the same per diem compensation as for attendance on the supreme judicial court, and the same fees for travel as for the service of warrants in criminal cases, together with such necessary incidental expenses as are just and proper; bills for which shall be audited by the county commissioners, and paid from the county treasury. But said commissioners shall not allow any per diem compensation to said sheriffs or their deputies for any day for which said sheriffs or their deputies are entitled to fees or compensation for attendance at or service in any court.

Sec. 61. County attorneys shall cause to be summoned promptly before the grand jury, all witnesses whose names have been furnished them by any sheriff or his deputies, as provided in the preceding section, and shall faithfully direct inquiries before that body into violations of law, prosecute persons indicted, and secure the prompt sentence of convicts. Whenever the governor is, after investigation and hearing of the parties, satisfied that any county attorney has wilfully refused or neglected to discharge the duties imposed upon him by this section, he shall remove him from office, and fill his place by appointment. Sec.

Sec. 62. Upon petition and representation of thirty or more well known tax-payers in any county, that chapters seventeen and twenty-seven are not faithfully enforced by county or local officers, the governor and council shall inquire into such representations, and if, in their judgment, they are well founded, the governor, with the advice and consent of council, shall appoint two or more constables for such county, who shall diligently enforce said chapters, and for this purpose such constables shall have like powers and duties as sheriffs and deputies. For such services such constables shall receive the same compensation as sheriffs and deputies.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.
NEW SOUTH WALES.

LOCAL OPTION.

(RESULT OF VOTE TAKEN IN METROPOLITAN SUBURBAN MUNICIPALITIES, IN FEBRUARY, 1888.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be printed, 19 June, 1888.

Sir,

Woolloomooloo Station, 17 May, 1888.

I do myself the honor to forward herewith a comparative return showing the result of the Local Option Vote taken in the Suburban Municipalities within the Metropolitan Licensing District during the Aldermanic elections in February last.

When the vote was taken in February, 1885, there were on the Municipal Lists 33,617 voters; this year there were 50,356, showing an increase in three years of 16,739.

Only 10,239 voted under division A and 10,048 under division B, which result, omitting fractions, is about 20 per cent., or 2 per cent. less than when the vote was taken last time.

As on previous occasions, where no contested election took place, little or no interest seems to have been exhibited. In Coogee Ward, Randwick, no vote was recorded, and in Double Bay Ward, Woollahra, only one vote.

The Council Clerk of the Borough of Victoria informs me that 130 voters positively declined to exercise their privilege; and at Darlington 28 voters did not record any vote.

Out of 85 elections 21 were carried in the affirmative, and 63 in the negative in Division A, and 32 affirmative and 52 negative in Division B, excluding one election in which no vote was taken.

The number of voters on the Municipal Lists has been kindly supplied me by the several Council Clerks; and the number of public-houses in each Ward by the officers of Police in charge of Divisions.

The number of public-houses in the Metropolitan District in July, 1881 (before the present Acts were passed), was 851; since then, according to my reports to the Licensing Bench, the numbers have each year been as follows:—

April, 1882	...	...	...	...	...	...	848
" 1883	...	...	...	...	...	...	824
" 1884	...	...	...	...	...	...	822
" 1885	...	...	...	...	...	...	820
" 1886	...	...	...	...	...	...	824
" 1887	...	...	...	...	...	...	843
" 1888	...	...	...	...	...	...	851

It will be seen that since 1885 the number of public-houses has each year been slightly increased, caused principally by licenses having been granted for large residential hotels of from 30 to 100 rooms each.

The Licensing Bench have in almost every case refused licenses for houses that did not overcome the local option vote (even where the vote was in the affirmative), by containing not less than 30 rooms.

It was officially stated in Parliament, by the Honorable Postmaster-General, that from 1880 to 1887 the population of the city and suburbs increased 58 per cent.; and it follows that although that increase has taken place there is no increase in the number of licenses in eight years.

In the Suburban Municipalities, in 1885, there were 298 hotels; this year there are 330, leaving a balance of 521 for the city and places not yet incorporated.

The Metropolitan Licensing District has lately been extended, to include the parishes of Sutherland and Wattamolla. In the increased area there are four hotels which were formerly included in the Liverpool District.

I have, &amp;c.,

W. E. LENTHALL, Inspector,
District Inspector, Metropolitan Licensing District.

The Superintendent of Police, Sydney.

Forwarded to the Acting Inspector-General.—R. ANDERSON, Inspector, 18/5/88. Submitted for the Colonial Secretary's information, and for transmission to the Minister of Justice.—G. READ, Acting I.G.P. The Principal Under Secretary, B.C., 28 May, 1888. The Minister of Justice.—H.P., 1/6/88. The Under Secretary of Justice, B.C., 1/6/88.—C.W.

LOCAL OPTION.

(PETITION IN FAVOUR OF FULL—CHARLES BRIGHT, CHAIRMAN OF BAPTIST UNION OF NEW SOUTH WALES.)

Received by the Legislative Assembly, 29 September, 1887.

---

To the Honorable the Legislative Assembly, in Parliament assembled.

The Petition of the Baptist Union of New South Wales,—

HUMBLY SHOWETH:—

That, in the opinion of your Petitioners, the traffic in intoxicating liquors is productive of a frightful amount of vice, crime, and poverty, the sorrow and cost of which fall with terrible pressure upon the inhabitants of the Colony.

That those who have to bear the burden of suffering and loss ought to possess the legal power of saying whether this traffic shall or shall not be permitted.

They therefore pray your Honorable House that in any Licensing Law Amendment Bill passed into law there be conceded the people a full veto power as to the granting of new licenses, or the renewal of old ones.

And your Petitioners will ever pray.

LIQUOR TRAFFIC (LOCAL VETO) BILL.
(PETITION IN FAVOUR OF—ALEXANDER GOW, CHAIRMAN OF LOCAL OPTION LEAGUE.)

Received by the Legislative Assembly, 17 April, 1888.

To the Honorable the Legislative Assembly of New South Wales.

The Petition of the Local Option League of New South Wales,—

HUMBLY SHOWETH:—

That your Petitioners represent a very large and important portion of the people of New South Wales, who consider,—

First.—That the Liquor Traffic is the most fruitful cause to the community of poverty, lunacy, immorality, crime, and premature death.

Second.—That the said Liquor Traffic entails heavy taxation on the whole nation, which but for it would be unnecessary.

Third.—That the said traffic is an enemy to national progress, national prosperity, and social and moral development.

Fourth.—That it is in harmony with the constitutional democracy of New South Wales that the people on whom are entailed the evils and burdens resulting from the Liquor Traffic should have absolute power over it.

Fifth.—That such power, wherever granted by law, has led to the happiest results.

Your Petitioners therefore pray that you will adopt the Bill now before your Honorable House intituled the "Liquor Traffic (Local Veto) New South Wales Act, 1888," introduced by Alexander Hutchison, Esq., the principle of which has been already affirmed by a large majority in your Honorable House.

And your Petitioners will ever pray.

For and on behalf of the Local Option League of New South Wales,—

ALEX. GOW,
Chairman, Local Option League.

(PETITION AGAINST—WOMEN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION.)

Received by the Legislative Assembly, 27 September, 1887.

---

To the Honorable the Legislative Assembly of New South Wales, in Parliament assembled.
The Petition of the Women's Prayer Union and other residents of New South Wales,—

HUMBLY SHOWETH:—

- 1. That your Petitioners regard with deep and earnest concern the fact that in this Colony so many females are employed in public-houses as barmaids.
- 2. That experience has demonstrated very clearly that the employment of females in that capacity has a most baneful influence upon the morals of many of them, for the scenes and language that frequently characterise the public-house bar are such that no respectable girl or woman should be permitted to witness or hear.
- 3. That in this Colony there are so many honorable and suitable domestic vocations in which females may engage, that the prevention of this class of employment (proved to be so disastrous) would not cause any serious difficulty.

We would therefore implore your Honorable House to so amend the existing licensing law, that the employment of females at the bars of public-houses may be absolutely prohibited, thus conferring an incalculable benefit upon a class of our community whose happiness and virtue is now imperilled, and be the means of rescuing many from untold misery, degradation, and ruin.

And your Petitioners, as in duty bound, will ever pray.
